"4. Stretch the whole body. Keep the heels down as far as possible, then stretch the back muscles, drawing up first on one side, then on the other, finishing the movement by lifting the head and drawing it forward, turning it gently from side to side, still stretching. Then start with the toes and stretch the front muscles, bending the head backward by resting on the elbows and the crown of the head. Spread and stretch the chest. Stretch the arms down at the sides, twisting them at the elbows.

"5. Lie on the left side with knees drawn up. Draw the chest forward and upward, spreading it as much as possible, the right fingers resting against the upper side of the chest.

"Thrust the feet downward and draw up again. Take the same movements on the right side.

"Go to sleep on the right side so that the weight of the stomach may not interfere with the action of the heart. After the food is digested one may turn to the left side, but the most of one's sleep should be taken while lying on the right side; or, some authorities tell us, while lying flat on the stomach, the face turning either way. While lying on the side the trunk should be well straightened, the knees slightly flexed.

"With the first waking thought fill the lungs, continuing to inhale as long as possible, spreading and lifting the ribs and pressing down the diaphragm. Then exhale as completely as possible."

EXERCISES FOR VITAL ORGANS

The following exercises are gleaned from the Physical Training Simplified Series, by Edward B. Warman.

If the heart is weak (with no organic difficulty) the desired strength may be obtained by any form of exercise that causes deep, slow, rhythmic breathing; increase the exercise from time to time as the heart increases in strength. Avoid jerky, spasmodic breathing. The exhalations should be slower than the inhalations, in order not to produce too great dilation of the heart.

To keep the heart, stomach and liver in good condition the muscles of the waist, sides, back and abdomen need to be exercised. Three exercises designated, bowing, bending and twisting are efficacious for this purpose. "So valuable are these three exercises in the obtaining and retaining of health that they should precede and succeed all others; in fact they are of so great importance that they could supersede all others. They care for that portion of the body almost wholly neglected by the average gymnast—the health of the vital organs."

Bowing.—Stand erect. Place hands on hips. Raise the chest muscularly. Draw hips and abdomen back as you bend the body forward slowly and as low as possible. Do not bend the knees. Rise slowly to position and bend the body backward, bending the knees in order to prevent an undue strain. After learning the position of the body, raise the hands high above the head, thereby lifting the chest and abdomen. Swing the extended arms backward over the head, bending the knees slightly, and then swing forward, weight solid upon both feet. Try to touch the floor with the fingers. At first you may not be able to do this. Later the knuckles and even the palms of the hands may be brought to the floor. Take this exercise very carefully and be not in haste to attain these later accomplishments. A washboard movement of the arms while the body is bent forward at the hips will assist in bringing the fingers to the floor. Take this exercise not more than five times a day for the first week, then increase five times each additional week (or as conditions warrant) until you reach fifty times a day. Professor Warman says: "For many years I have not missed taking my fifty bows every morning as soon after arising as convenient, no matter what the conditions or surroundings."

Twisting.—Stand erect, weight firmly on both feet, hands on ribs. Turn as far to the left as possible without moving the feet. Then turn to the right. Turn head and body evenly. This exercise, especially the turning to the right, has been termed the "liver squeezer." It is the simplest, most efficacious, least expensive remedy for a torpid liver that was ever given to the public.

Stair climbing.—Touch only the ball of the foot to the step in passing either up or down, thus avoiding any jarring of the brain. In ascending, incline the body forward but do not bend at the waist. Keep the chest active and thus avoid stooping and interference with the breathing. Keep the mouth shut and do not puff out the remaining breath when reaching the top of the stairs. The mouth should not be opened until the breathing is normal. In descending the stairs the body should be erect. Bend only the knee joint, touch only the ball of the foot; descend lightly, gracefully, noiselessly, yet firmly.

"There is no one exercise that is more healthful or more invigorating than going up and down stairs, provided it is done in the right way and the air in the halls is pure."

STRETCHING EXERCISES

"If one has only a very little time to devote to exercise, it is best to give that time to exercise that will affect the spine . . . The more stretching and bending of the spinal column there is involved in the course of your general exercises the better. . . There are two factors of special importance involved. One is the question of the strength of the muscles and ligaments of the back, the other the condition of the disk-like cartilages between the vertebrae. The deterioration of the spine in old age only means the deterioration of these cartilages, with the loss of their elasticity and supporting power. . . With the flattening down of these cushiony disks there comes about more or less interference with the free course of the spinal nerves. . . All movements involving the bending of the spine have the effect of massaging and stretching these cartilages. . . Of course the cartilages are nourished and built up by the blood the same as all other tissues and to improve the local circulation is to better them in every way. It is only in this way that the backbone can be kept young and strong and the stiffening and flattening of the arteries prevented. . . Exercises that involve the stretching and extension of all the muscles of the body are certain to prove effective in increasing nervous energy."

A series of stretching exercises is given in Physical Culture for November, 1914, by Bernarr Macfadden, from whose writings the preceding extracts are taken. Of these exercises he says: The result of exercise of this nature is of a manifold sort. Entirely aside from bringing into play many muscles that are ordinarily quiescent in the course of one's daily work or one's physical exercises, they exert the limbs in such a fashion as to stretch the tendons, the ligaments and the joints. They aid in the maintenance of that activity is the chief capital of youth and they serve to insure against those changes of the arteries that attend advancing years and inactivity. The effectiveness of these exercises depends absolutely upon one's stretching the limbs and portions of the body involved to the utmost. Some idea of these exercises may be gained from the following suggestions, though they are worth studying from the original.

Initial position for each exercise: Stand erect, (weight over the balls of the feet) arms extended at the sides on a level with the shoulders. Stretch the body as high as possible. Repeat each exercise ten or twelve times.

1. Rise on toes and reach up and back, stretching as far as possible.
2. Rise on toes, reach arms straight in front. Stretch both arms far to one side, then to the other.
3. Raise one arm, lower the other, and stretch. Reverse positions of arms and stretch. Same movement of the arms, bend at the waist, keeping feet firm and stretch far to one side, then to the other.
4. Stand on left foot. Stretch right arm and right leg in front of body as far as possible. Same movement with left leg and arm.
5. Stand on right foot, extend right arm upward and forward, left arm downward and backward, extending left leg parallel with left arm. Take the reverse movement.

"When you feel that you can stretch no further, make an effort to bring into play with each further movement an even greater degree of stretching."

Two movements that partake of the nature of stretching exercises are the following:

"Clasp hands back of hips then bend over backward to bring the hands down as far as possible"—"Extend arms and hands in front of the body, pushing down and out. At the same time press head and neck back firmly. This exercise strengthens and lifts the organs of the pelvis."

WALKING

"If women would indulge more in this form of exercise they would need to consult the beauty specialist less, as it clears the complexion, brightens the eyes, aids digestion, increases the circulation of the blood, deepens the chest and makes the liver active. It also tends to reduce excessive fat on the neck, abdomen and hips. The heavy person will lose weight by walking and it is through the same agency that the thin person gains weight. . . The heavy person's system is overcharged with fat, and vigorous walking eliminates and burns it. On the thin person's system there is an urgent need of a stimulus capable of arousing the digestion and assimilation to increase activity and this agency is found in fast walking. An improved digestion increases the appetite and when more food is assimilated it naturally follows that the weight of the body will increase. Walking then is an exercise that reduces weight in one and increases it in another and brings both to normal conditions. It is not, as many suppose, a leg exercise only, but an excellent one for the heart and lungs also."—William J. Cromie, University of Pennsylvania.

"One must learn to stand correctly before she can walk correctly. It is rare to find man or woman with weight borne upon the balls of the feet." See directions for correct posture in standing in the reading for February.

RELIEF OF PAIN, ETC. BY EXERCISE

"There is scarcely a pain that can not be worked out by twisting and stretching or by exercise in some form." One writer tells that he literally walked away from an attack of rheumatism.

"Stretch every muscle in the body. . . . Nothing will so effectively relieve congestion or contraction as persistent, gentle stretching in every possible direction, if jerky movements are carefully avoided. The more relaxed the position, the better. "Many a severe chill or painful inflammation can positively be greatly relieved, if not cured, in this manner alone. Nervousness will always yield to such treatment if systematically executed, as it is chiefly the result of contraction."—R. H. Krautz, M. D., in Physical Culture.

Neuralgia may be greatly relieved by the above treatment.

An exercise recommended for breaking up a cold is this: When one feels the first symptoms of a cold in head or throat, fill the lungs, then hold the breath while slowly working the diaphragm up and down. Repeat a number of times. This is also of value in relieving constipation. It may be more easily taken while sitting or lying down.

"When sitting where one is chilly a cold may be warded off by working the muscles of the back." The preceding exercise would also be a help.

"Stand erect. Rise on the toes and then on the heels. Rock forward and backward as far as possible without losing the equilibrium. This has a fine effect on the central nervous system and is valuable in nervousness. A relief at any time to the overworked or weary brain."

"With arms outstretched overhead and with head thrown back, raise right leg with knee bent until front of thigh touches abdomen. Raise left leg in the same way. Practice twenty times each. An excellent means for overcoming constipation."

"Stand erect; gently sit down until you almost touch your heels. Then gradually arise to an upright position. This is a very difficult exercise and must be taken very carefully. Take not more than five times at first and gradually increase to fifty. This will not only quickly and surely remove surplus fat from the abdomen, but it will exercise the bowels and the liver and will do much to give one a perfect digestion."

"Stand erect with arms extended from shoulders, palms up. Make the muscles tense and bring fingers to touch the shoulders. Bring the elbows forward till they meet. Then describe a circle with each elbow, up, back and down, turning the head and stretching the neck muscles. Inhale as elbows rise, exhale as they come down. This is excellent for enlarging the chest and for filling out hollows about the neck and shoulders; it will also relieve neuralgia.

"Bathing is always recommended to follow physical exercises,—usually the cold bath in the morning. The editor of Physical Culture says: "Don't make it a hard and fast rule to take baths of extreme temperature unless your own experience has proved to you that your condition demands them. Learn what sort of baths keep you in the best condition and are most agreeable to you and bathe as often and in the manner that you learn is best suited to your case."

Rubbing with dry salt has a tonic effect. A convenient substitute is the salt towel. Soak towel over night in very strong brine and hang to dry without wringing.

Housework and outdoor sports should also be discussed as means of promoting health, but space does not admit of their consideration here.

Rest is the fitting

Letter Department

SCAMMON, KANSAS, January 10, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have been engaged in this glorious work for fourteen years, and have never felt to turn from it. Although I have been tried in many ways, yet I know there is a grand reward awaiting the faithful.

Brother A. C. Martin has been with us the past two weeks. He is an able speaker. Good crowds attended most of the time, considering the weather. On the first Sunday of this month, all enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord during our sacrament meeting. Words of comfort and encouragement were spoken by our faithful brother. Our Sunday school is growing, and we hope to see it continue.

I hope to be one of the many who shall strive onward and upward to gain eternal life. This latter-day work is worth our time and faithful effort in seeking to advance the same. The more one examines it the more he is convinced that it is of God.

May we each and every one strive to live our religion in such a way that we may not bring reproach upon the work, so that when we pass to the great beyond the Master may say, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of your Lord.

In gospel bonds,

MISS MAGGIE C. MARTIN.

ALEXANDER, KANSAS, January 10, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am still interested in this glorious latter-day message. It has proven a blessing to me in many ways. I obeyed the gospel fifteen years ago, February 20, 1900, and have tried since to be at my post of duty whenever and wherever the same was found. Sometimes great waves of disappointment have swept over our branch here, and I have felt downcast. Then I have thought that Satan was working in me this discouragement.

I press on, hoping and praying that I may not be one to be sifted out, and that God may give us grace and his blessed Spirit to sustain us, that our branch may again be continued and blessed as never before. When I think of the missionaries who in days gone by have sacrificed home, money, wife, children and friends, all to introduce the gospel at this place, I pray that each and every Saint may arise and put on the whole armor of God and plant their feet on higher ground.

We have eighteen members in Alexander at present. We spent three months at Fairfield last fall, helping care for my companion's father, and while there saw him baptized, also two sons and one daughter-in-law, and two children, six in all. Father Teeters departed this life two months after his baptism, strong in the faith and ready to go.

Dear Saints, let us shake off the coals from our garments and arise in the strength of the Lord, which is my prayer and wish for all.

Your humble sister,

MRS. EVA TEETERS.

EDMONTON, ALBERTA, January 10, 1915.

Editors Herald: Those who are acquainted with Brother Frank Lambert will be interested to know that he has been called to the Melchisedec priesthood, and that on the night when he was ordained he was chosen president of our branch, Brother J. N. Baldwin having resigned the presidency in his favor. This was on January 4. Brother Lambert preached his initial sermon on January 10, choosing for his text the statement of Christ in Matthew 16, Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. All were pleased with his effort.

Elder A. Fowler took the stand for a time after Brother Lambert concluded, interesting the audience.

We have had great meetings here for some time. Edmonton is likely to be heard from further. The branch is now fully organized, and all are talking of stirring things up. There is lots of room here for work, as there are sixty or seventy thousand people in the city, and only about forty Saints.

Our late branch president, J. N. Baldwin, and family, came here from the United States about three years ago. At that time there was no branch here. Elder J. L. Mortimore was doing missionary work, and my wife and I at that time went to prayer meetings when we would be the only people present besides Brother Mortimore and Brother George Winn, wife and I having just joined the church at that time. Such were the conditions when the branch was organized and Brother J. N. Baldwin was chosen for our first president. He has had a fight of it ever since. In fact, had it not been for his gallant stand we would likely have no branch here to-day. He is still with us along the firing line, acting as presiding priest of the branch, and is still as eager for the fray as ever.

Our progress has been slow but sure, and we hope for greater things with a full set of competent officers.

Editors Herald: My long absence from your columns is not evidence of a lack of interest, nor a failing faith in the message you bear. It has been more than two and a half years since I have written you. Since then I have moved from Dewey County, Oklahoma, to Oklahoma City, endeavoring to make ourselves a home there. The effort, however, overtaxed our financial store and resources, involving us in debt from which we have not yet been made free.

The prospect two years ago in the building line over the country was good, which encouraged me to make an effort with my trowel to liquidate our indebtedness, as the church itself was deeply involved in debt so the Bishop could not assist us.

I am willing to again express conviction that it is a mistake and a failure for a God-ordained and divinely called minister of the gospel to leave the ministry and engage in other labor; no matter if his prospects be as mine were of receiving seven dollars per day.

The hope of getting seven dollars per day is somewhat inviting to one who is in needy circumstances; and especially when no other resources are in sight. My efforts at brick work, however, have been a severe disappointment. For a year and a half at least the building business has been very dull, indeed. These conditions, disappointments, failures, etc., have been very trying, not only for myself and family, but for some of our creditors. But having made every effort which seemed possible, trusting continually in the Lord for guidance and assistance, it seemed that I was doing all I could do. Providence and fate seemingly were playing hide and seek with me, or peekaboo.

But, I have always been of good courage, and of a very hopeful nature. It is very fortunate that God has placed hope within us; otherwise our despondency would overcome us at times. I have always had and do yet have such faith and confidence in divine providence and in the latter-day work that to think of failure was and is almost beyond possibility. One good brother gave me the title, "An incurable optimist." I thanked him for the compliment. We need hope. The good book says, "We are saved by hope."

Hope is a shining jewel given us of God

To cheer us on our pathway while through this life we tread.

It is far better for us to use the bright colors in painting the pictures of life than to dabble our brush in gloomy colors. The people of God are to be tried—tried severely, even as gold is tried seven times by fire. We should not forget these things when the trials come, whether caused by our own folly or mistakes—we can not always tell—or when permitted by divine wisdom to purify our lives we should not rebel and become despondent.

There is no disputing the fact that we are living in perilous times, times of war, oppression and distress. With the brightest optimistic mind possible, we can not fail to observe the dark cloud of distress which is now hanging over the world. But our God has promised relief, safety and victory to Zion and her children. The real live question is, Shall Zion's children continue in faith and hope, trusting in God?

It is rather easy to serve God when all goes well, when we have no financial trials, when our friends and loved ones are true, kind and trustful, when we are in the happy, peaceful environment of the church; yes, that is easy. But financial losses, deserted by friends, despised by neighbors, disowned by relatives, deprived of children and companion—these things come against us like a surging flood, and like the Apostle Peter we cry out, Save Lord, e'er we perish! Human nature is rather boastful, inclined to trust in self, rebellious and forgetful of God.

In the loss by death of President Joseph Smith the church has lost a true, faithful friend and servant. But there is reason to rejoice even in his death. While we miss him and regret his departure, yet we can well rejoice in the noble life and rich heritage he has left the church, and the wise provision made in appointing his successor. No need for confusion now; no stopping or halting in the work. But with love and confidence in the Lord and his chosen servant, appointed now to lead, all can rejoice in hope, faith and assurance for the success of the cause.

Just so soon as my financial affairs can be satisfactorily settled I shall be glad to again take up the mission work, and labor where the Lord has called and the church appointed. In the meantime, I shall endeavor to do what I can in a private way, also in public when opportunity affords. I am very conscious of human weakness, and know the need of divine assistance, but no one should fail to exert his own powers of mind and strength to do what they know to be right, and to refrain from wrongdoing. We are entitled to divine assistance, but we should not deceive ourselves by supposing that God will aid us in any line of selfishness or wrongdoing.

May love, peace, and prosperity abide with Israel.

Hopefully,

R. M. MALONEY.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, January 12, 1915.

Editors Herald: In the queen city of the Ozarks, the land of the big red apple, the Springfield Branch has concluded to shake off the coals from their garments, and arise in the strength of the Lord. The writer has presided over our branch here for fifteen years, and has had many seasons of rejoicing as well as of disappointment. Old in years when the latter-day work found me, I was soon placed in charge. All these years I have tried to do what I believed to be for the best interests of the work. How I have succeeded the Lord only knows.

Looking into the future welfare of the branch, I deemed it best to vacate and advised the branch to choose a younger leader. I am convinced that no mistake was made in the change on January 4 when Brother A. W. Duemler, our long-time presiding priest, was chosen president, and recommended for ordination to the office of elder. Our most worthy young brother Luke Bishop was again chosen teacher, with recommendation for his ordination to the office of priest, and our young brother Emery Nemp was recommended for ordination to the office of teacher. We have a new brother recently located from the West, and he and his good wife are live wires in this great latter-day work. Brother and Sister Thorp are a great help. Brother Thorp was chosen priest.

Last Sunday our newly-elected president occupied the stand and outlined the work that he would try to do in the future, with the help of the Saints and the Giver of all good. That evening our young presiding teacher took the stand and gave us the best talk that it has ever been my good fortune to hear on "What the gospel will do for us if we will only live it." This brother is only seventeen years old. May the Lord inspire others like him.

We feel to thank the Lord for the good stand that has been taken at the beginning of this new year. We trust that the work will be in a better condition at the close of the year than it is now. To this end we will work and pray. Our young Saints are living well, and will be heard from in the future.

We believe that the great upheaval in foreign lands is the beginning of the end, and though thrones may totter and fall, kingdoms become republics, and many run to and fro and cry Peace, Peace, when there will be no peace, we know that the end is not yet, but soon, even at the door. Will we be ready? Will God find faith on the earth as the cry goes forth, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him?" May we all be ready when the roll is called.

Men are running to and fro and knowledge is being increased, but it is not in harmony with the divine plan of the Master of men. One says, "Lo here," and another, "Lo there," but he who spoke as never man spoke said, "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many will come in my name and say I am Christ, and shall deceive many." Surely no prophecy was ever more completely fulfilled, for false teachers and false doctrines are found upon every hand. Be not deceived, for God will not be mocked. Also that which you sow so shall you also reap. And the reaping time is not far distant.

May God inspire our minds so that we will be able to separate the wheat from the chaff, and be able to give an intelligent reason for the hope that is within us. May we move onward and upward until the perfect day, and may the time speedily come when Zion will be redeemed and God's people will have equality established among them is my prayer.

Missionaries and other Saints coming into this city will find our worthy branch president, A. W. Duemler, at 315 West Pacific Street, and our teacher at 2123 Roberson Avenue.

Ever praying for Zion and her children, I am,

Still in the conflict with no compromise,

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, January 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: As the old year passes into history and the new year opens before us, we wonder what it will bring forth. And as the new ideas crowd in upon our minds suggestive of ways and means by which more good might be accomplished, one naturally takes a retrospective view of the work that has been done, and the good that has been accomplished in the past; there are many no doubt, who would be glad if they could have done more. But realizing that past opportunities are gone and we have the present to deal with, we begin to make new resolutions, our hopes are brightened with the prospects of the future, and we begin to move out.

Our church on South Flores Street is undergoing repairs. With the use of brush and paint the appearance of the benches is greatly changed, and with a touch here and there the little church is made to look quite presentable; and seeing the work going on, we conclude there are some New Year's resolutions going into effect.

Our Sunday school has had comparatively good attendance this winter, considering the disagreeable weather. We have just had the election of officers and as Sister Elma Neal was sustained as superintendent, and as she has served so faithfully in the past we feel confident that the school will grow and reach its zenith.

The writer spent the most of last summer in Arkansas, leaving San Antonio on June 12 and returning August 31. I joined my husband at Grannis, Arkansas, and in company with him traveled to several different points.

On July 4, we were at a place called Galena. We had been holding meeting a week there when on the last-named date we were attacked by a mob, the shot falling on the house like rain. One bullet went through the wall and passed just above Brother Harp's head. He was kneeling in prayer. The night previous he had offered the opening prayer while standing. We are led to believe that divine providence caused him to kneel on this particular occasion, and he was thus saved from his enemies. He had been greatly blessed in his efforts in breaking the bread of life to the people, several being near the kingdom. There are a few noble Saints in that neighborhood.

We went from there to Winthrop, Arkansas, making our home while there with Brother and Sister Sharp, whose kind hospitality will ever be remembered. We held a week's meeting there with fine interest. I call to mind one evening when suffering from a severe attack of neuralgia how wonderfully the Lord blessed me through the administration. I was relieved in a few minutes, and was able to attend the services. I am indeed thankful to my heavenly Parent for the strength afforded me, and which enabled me to attend every service that I was in reach of.

In about a month after this incident occurred, we returned to the same place and received the same blessing. My companion was holding a meeting in the town of Winthrop at this time, and the congregation was increasing each evening, and the writer being the only one of our number who played the organ, was of course anxious to do her part, so was administered to again with the same result. I am not relating these experiences to boast, but only to witness that those who have a desire to work will receive the Lord's care in time of need.

Brother Harp was greatly blessed in all of his efforts in Arkansas, but the climate did not agree with him, so he had to return to the sunny South, where he has labored since September 1, what time he was able to labor. At this writing he is at Pearsall, Texas.

Your sister in bonds,

RUTH HARP.

Editors Herald: Now that we do not have any church privileges, the HERALD seems more precious than ever. We are living here, for the present, while the boys are attending the State University. House life is far better than boarding when one has been used to a happy home. We would be so glad if a branch could be built up here so our students could have a church home, for there are many things to lead them astray where there are no gospel influences.

It has been fifteen years since the gospel was brought to me. I was very sad and heartbroken over the loss of my dear companion, and the next day after we laid him in the cold grave, Brother J. D. Stead buried me in the liquid grave that inducted me into the kingdom of God. And from the moment he raised me out of the water to the present, the beautiful light of the gospel has been mine to enjoy, and God's hand has been over me continually to bless.

Yea, many times when my burden seemed heavy, he came to my rescue. When sickness has been in our home he was there to bless and heal through the administration of his elders; and when the pangs of poverty were felt he was there through the ministrations of loving friends to succor in time of need; and the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit has many times confirmed my faith and it has enabled me to know the gospel is true.

This is my first experience of being without the companionship of the Saints since I obeyed, as nearly all that time was spent in Lamoni, where the dear Saints have rejoiced with me in my blessings, and have sympathized in time of trouble. I went there soon after baptism, with my four babies, feeling a great responsibility and an earnest desire to bring them up to be noble men and women.

Oh, the loving friends I found! The many kindnesses, the loving words of courage, the many times they helped in a financial way; many loving deeds, all made me love them and I cherish their memory, and hold those acts more precious than rubies and diamonds. Some of those who were so good have gone to their reward, among them Brother William Anderson, with his fatherly advice and counsel, always tender-hearted and willing to aid the distressed. And Sister Blair, angel of mercy, was there to cheer and comfort.

Such ties of love have been an incentive to me to try to live worthy of God's approbation, and have a good influence over those I come in contact with, that they may enjoy like blessings.

Since my marriage to Elder William Dowker, I have had some of the experiences incident to a missionaries' life, as I was with him in his field two months last summer. I can see there is great need of every Saint living a pure, upright life, and a need of helping our young people to become educated along gospel lines, that they may better defend the truth.

I am thankful for the provisions we have in the church, for the poor: the Children's Home, the college, the homes for the aged, and the Sanitarium, all to help and bless the people of God.

In two of those institutions I have had some varied experiences. I was cook in the Children's Home for a time, and if there are any who are in doubt about the home, let them lay all fears aside and do all in their power to help those who are so bravely carrying on the work. The children had good care, and were seemingly very happy there, with loving counsel and advice given by Father and Mother Robinson.

While there we were all made sad by the unfortunate accident that caused the first death, and left the home without Baby Charles. I will never forget the beautiful gospel talk Brother Robinson gave those children about that lovely country where baby had gone and how they should live in order to meet him. I thought, How good that those children could have such a kind father, for I knew there are many homes that do not have such teachings. Saints let us all help this noble work.

My experiences in the Sanitarium were of a different character. I was a patient for three weeks suffering with nervous prostration brought on by overwork. The kindly administrations of doctors and nurses, and the enforced rest so aided that I was recovered to that extent that I returned in a few weeks and cooked in that nice roomy kitchen for a season. Here I learned that one must have the true spirit of love to assist in the work there, and the many beautiful characteristics I saw in some of those who labored there have been very impressive lessons to me, which I shall never forget.

Since that time I have once more been a patient; this time entering with grave fears for my recovery. Attending physicians said an operation was necessary. If ever I appreciated the gospel in my life it was then. Oh! how good it was to have the administration of the elders and the Spirit's presence to comfort and the assurance that the Lord was with me. This with the promise they would remain during the ordeal drove all fear from my mind. An evidence was then given to me that there is a beyond, and that when our spirits are released from our sick and weary bodies we shall be happy and know our loved ones on the other side. My health is now excellent.

My earnest prayer is that we may all be faithful, and so live that we may enter that rest God has prepared for those who serve them faithfully.

MRS. WILLIAM CASE DOWKER.

RICHMOND, MELBOURNE, January 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Melbourne Herald, of December 12, published the following:

"MORMON LEADER DEAD, SON SUCCEEDS TO POSITION

"(Independent Cable Association) New York, Friday
"Joseph Fielding Smith, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who was known as 'Independence Smith,' has died. Eight years ago he nominated his son to succeed him as chief of the Mormons."

Then followed about a three-inch sketch of the life of Joseph Fielding Smith. We were almost positive, from the cable message, "our" Joseph was dead, but not until two days ago (a month and three days after Brother Joseph died) did we have the facts.

As I am writing this I have before me an 8 by 12 enlarged photo of our departed leader which I brought from home with me, and as I look upon that noble countenance I think he would have been entitled to say, before he died, as did the Apostle Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing."

The first time I met Brother Joseph was a little while after I became a member of the church. I attended a conference at Kirtland some twenty-four years ago, I think. I will relate a little incident that I observed there, which revealed the spirit of companionship, naturalness and humility which actuated him.

As I entered the Kirtland hotel one afternoon, I saw David Dancer laboriously polishing his shoes. Brother Joseph came in a few minutes after I did, and observing that Brother Dancer found it difficult by reason of his great size to stoop over, went up to him and said: "David, give me that brush." There was the prophet of God, the head of the Church of Christ, polishing his brother's shoes! We three were the only ones in the room at the time, so it was not a case of "posing," but a kindly little act, inspired by a kind heart. I had only been in the church a little while, and when I saw that humble act being performed it gave me a very favorable impression of God's servant. How often trivial incidents affect our opinions of others. I don't think it would have been difficult for Brother Joseph to have observed the ordinance of the washing of feet.

After I read the cable in the Melbourne Herald, I thought, Could there be a greater contrast in the lives of two men than in that of "our" Joseph and that of the Utah polygamous leader! As they both face the judgment, what a different record will confront them!

I wrote a letter to the editor of the Herald, and took it up to him. In the letter I said, If Joseph Smith, of Independence, was dead, he should not be confounded with the polygamous head of the Utah organization, with his five wives and some thirty children. I explained how the head of the Reorganization was carrying out the teachings of Joseph Smith, the founder of the church, which were antipolygamous.

It had been difficult to get anything in the papers here in favor of our work, so I thought it would be best if I made a personal visit to the editor, prepared to show him our position. A few weeks previous I had written to the government registrar general, who has charge of issuing licenses to marry, etc., asking him if the state of Victoria issued licenses to the Utah Mormon elders to marry. I kept a copy of the letter. He answered that up to date no licenses had ever been issued to the Utah elders. I took my letter, the answer from the registrar general, and my license to marry, Doctrine and Coverants, etc., and had an interview with the editor. I showed him that the Government of Australia understood the difference between the Utah Church and ours, and issued us licenses to marry, and we had no difficulty in obtaining them. I explained how the Utah Church had taken section 111 from the Doctrine and Covenants and inserted the polygamous affair. I explained how revelations must go through the quorums to stand the test, and that the polygamous "revelation" never could have stood the test, so it never risked it.

He gave me a respectful hearing, then remarked, "Why, I never understood your position before, you have a remarkable system, haven't you? I will publish your letter." And he did.

May the Lord guide the new President as he did Brother Joseph, and may we be found sustaining those whom God has called when they lead in righteousness.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

GREENWOOD, WEST VIRGINIA, January 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD. In reading the last number of the Exponent we note that Sister Mc-Nichols has been required to give up her work. We can sympathize with this sister, as we have been in similar physical condition this winter. We had a nice little Sunday school last summer, but being scattered we hoped to have home class work this winter. My health would not permit me to carry on the work. My heart and soul are in the work of this department.

I spent many dark days and weeks. I felt idle, and had it not been for the letters I received from some of the good Saints, such as Sister Alice Scott, Sister Shinn, and Sister Coltrill, who are ready and willing to lighten the burden of another, I do not know how I could have stood it. I felt almost too weak to pray at times. But by the prayers of the Saints and strong effort, I feel the Lord is leading me on. I would be greatly pleased to hear from any of the Saints.

There is no room for the idler; the Lord has said long ago, The harvest is ripe and laborers few. Dear Saints, let us thrust in our sickles and reap. We can not all preach or teach, but we can all live our religion and warn our neighbors. Let us teach our children carefully and prayerfully, as we would bend the twig of the tree. Do not wait until to-morrow, begin to-day.

The home is the place for example. Some time ago my little boy, now seven years old, was following me down the hill, and said, "Mamma, be careful where you step. Don't step on any briars, for I am stepping right in your tracks, and, you know, I am barefooted." A thought ran through my mind like this: Our children are all barefooted so far as knowledge and understanding of the world's briars and thorns, pleasures and evil inventions are concerned. Let us be careful where we step, that they be not pricked by the briars if they step in our tracks. Let us keep in the straight and narrow way, directed by God's Spirit in all things.

Ever praying for the Lord to guide and direct us all in the continuance of his work, I am,
Your sister,
FLORENCE WILLIAMS.

UNION CENTER, WISCONSIN, January 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am about my Father's business, which is the joy of my life. This is practically a new place. Some brethren were here and baptized a few last summer. There are a few interested. We are holding meetings in the Methodist church. Some members of this church will not listen to their minister any more, being in sympathy with us. We are having fine meetings. So the good work goes on.

I am at home where I am at work for the Master. My way was hedged about the last three years on account of sickness at home, but now my wife is able to go about without crutches and care for herself largely. We are thankful to God for his power that has been manifested in her behalf.

I expect to spend the rest of the conference year in the field. The calls are plentiful for preaching in Wisconsin. I will try to fill as many as possible, the Lord willing. After leaving here I will work my way to our district conference at Porcupine, February 6 and 7. We are looking for a good time. May the work speed on.

Your brother in the one faith,

A. L. WHITEAKER.

Editors Herald: This northern country is clad in a mantle of white, and the air is clear and bracing. The woods resound with the noise of the bushmen, and over all is the bright sunshine.

The branch here is making arrangements for an event which will mark another stage in the progress of the work, namely, the dedication of the church, which is to take place some time in June.

Our missionary, Elder Ribbell, is laboring in the country to the north of us, and is doing a great work. In a conversation with him he said that he had an interest in different places, and requests from strangers to come and stay with them and preach in their homes.

In this place Elder Thompson, our president is devoting his time to the work in all its phases. This part of Ontario has a great future, and if the work gets a firm hold in the country now it will give us an advantage later.

Yours in the gospel,
WILLIAM B. BARTLEMAN.

LAMONI, IOWA, January 18, 1915.

Editors Herald: Thirty-five years ago to-day, the writer was as Paul said in Colossians 1: 13, delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins. It seems to me that that sentence should all be written with large capital letters. Do we, can we comprehend all that is expressed in that wonderful sentence, What wonderful changes have come and gone since that day of my baptism!

In the fall of 1879, I first met our venerable Prophet and leader of the church. The thought came to me when I first saw our beloved Joseph, "A man of God; so humble, so lowly, so meek." Although I was an entire stranger to him, he would stop and talk to one just the same as to another. There was naught in him to lead him to look over or above the least one. But he is gone. He fought a good fight, he finished his course, he kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for him a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give him at that day, and not to him only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. So we will try and not grieve after him.

When I look back to that fall conference in Gallands Grove in 1879, my heart still rejoices to call to mind the noble men of God I met there for the first time. Many of them are gone to their rest, and their works do follow them—such noble men as Brethren Joseph, Alexander, Ells, Lake, Caffall and others, all of whom have gone to their glorified home. I often wonder, Will I be able to meet them there? Many other changes have taken place since that time.

For more than thirty-four years I have been trying in my weak way to sound the gospel trumpet; and what have I accomplished? Eternity only can tell. I hope that it may be said, "He did what he could." I have baptized five hundred and seventy-seven. I have never shirked duty that I know of. But I have been admonished by Brethren Joseph and Alexander and others not to work so hard. Brother Joseph said to me once, "Brother John, you can extend your life ten years if you did not work so hard." I now see that I must slack up some. I am in my seventy-third year, and can not stand the hardships and knocks I could thirty years ago.

I have been at home now about a month. Some one may say, Why is Elder Roth not out in the mission field? Missionaries whose families are supported by the church ought to be out." Superannuated ministers do not need to travel unless they want to, and my family is not, and never was supported by the church. During the thirty-four years that I have been in the ministry, my family never drew a dollar from the church; and, more than that, I have paid much of my own expenses, too. Last year I paid seventy-six dollars out of my pocket for traveling expenses.

Some may think because we are now in the Saints' Home we (wife and I) are a burden to the church. When my wife became so afflicted with rheumatism that she could not do her work any more we broke up housekeeping; and for comfort and the sake of our health, we had to change location. In answer to prayer the good Lord opened a place for us in the Saints' Home. But, just as before, we are not living off the church. I pay the rent for our room monthly, and for our board also. And I am truly thankful to God for so good a home. I am willing to pay for our accommodations so long as we shall live.

I firmly believe that God ordered this home to be builded for his aged Saints. I do hope that all appreciate it as we do. The writer has been called on by Brother Smith to preach here in the home several times this winter, and the good Spirit is always present. We have some good good old people here, and all who have charge of the institution are very considerate of all. Matron, cook, waiters and all are good and kind to us, God bless them.

I have been greatly blessed the last year in preaching. I expect to be out again in a few days. I have thirteen calls now to come and preach, and I can be at only one place at a time. My last series of meetings was at Perry and Boone. There is a good class of Saints at both places, God bless them.

I am still willing to do all in my power for the salvation of souls. I am in the faith.

COFFEYVILLE, KANSAS, January 19, 1915.

Editors Herald: It has been a good many years since I became a member of the church. I am living where I know of no Saints, and have no good opportunity to attend services. This has caused me to grow weak in the faith. A year ago last August I went to visit my mother, Mrs. Mary Hawkins, at Stewartsville, Missouri. During the time I was there the Stewartsville reunion was conducted. I was in poor health at this time. Mother took me to the camp and I was administered to and felt much improved. The doctors thought I would have to have an operation.

After I returned home, my sister Mary was taken from the State hospital at Jamestown, North Dakota, and sent to me at my request. I did not know she was in such a condition as to need care day and night. I did all I could for her, and more than I was able, and took a backset and grew worse. After being with us three weeks my sister was much improved, and thought she was able to return to Dakota to look after her property. Stopping with my mother on her way, she grew worse, and after nine months passed away.

I have improved much in health since last August, and feel like praising my heavenly Father for his goodness.

Your sister,

MRS. DORA BAEGLER.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA, January 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: The wise man said, Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it. The following is a case in point. The writer of the following testimony is the son of Brother W. J. Booker, who was for many years a minister for Christ, but who now has gone to his reward. The testimony, which was written and sent to the Bay Minette conference, is self-explanatory. May it prove profitable to strangers in the flesh, as well as to the personal friends and relatives of the writer.

"SEPTEMBER 27, 1914.

"Saints and Friends: As it has happened that I can't come to conference, I feel it my duty this beautiful Sabbath to send you my testimony. I don't know that I will be able to say much, but as the Saints look over the record and run across my name they wonder, no doubt, where I am and how I am living. And as you have not seen or heard much of me since I left you, no doubt you have said, He is not living as he should, and your thoughts were, no doubt, true to some extent.

"And he also spake unto Lemuel: O that you mightest be like unto this valley, firm and steadfast, and immovable in keeping the commandments of the Lord.' (1 Nephi 1:37.)

"Notice how pleadingly the father talked to the boy that was going astray, and how loving the words were! How often has my father spoken the same words and plead with me; but for the space of thirteen years I wandered down the dark road, without help from the Lord. So far as religion was concerned, all seemed dark to me. Still, when I stopped to think of my condition, I still loved God, even though a sinner. I often thought I was lost, and thought of turning 'round and coming back to the starting point and traveling the other road.

"Two years ago I began to read and pray and to walk back over the road I had so long traveled. I came back over this road with a broken heart, bleeding, and with tears. Now, the more I read and pray the brighter the road becomes, and now I find this promise: 'And now, because of the covenant which ye have made, ye shall be called the children of Christ, his sons, and his daughters.' (Mosiah 3:8.)

"We, as Latter Day Saints, find that those who kept the commandments from the beginning were called the Saints of God, and even here in these last days we are promised that if we keep the commandments we shall be called the children of Christ, and we will know and remember the name when we are called. Now I ask the prayers of all the Saints and children of Christ that I may grow stronger in wisdom and understanding how to serve the Lord more perfectly each day of my life. Your prayers in connection with my prayers will make me stronger. I feel that if I could be with you I could say more as to the change of my condition, and as to what God will do when you put your trust in him. I ask the earnest prayers of the Saints of my branch. Though absent from you, I am ever your brother in Christ.

"Z. B. BOOKER."

Very sincerely,

A. E. WARR.

FAIRVIEW, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: We are still striving to do the Master's will. There are only three families of Saints left here, but we have our Sunday school and preaching services on Sunday, prayer meeting Wednesday evening, Religio Friday evening. We are all striving in the gospel, and although meeting opposition, we are not ashamed to give reason for the hope that is within us.

A few weeks ago Brother George Burt, the one under whose ministrations we came into the church, visited us for a week and preached in our schoolhouse. He was blessed with the Spirit, and the sermons were grand. Many outsiders came every night and much ill feeling was removed. A number seemed to be greatly interested. We wish some one could come again.

Brother Burt also preached in Comins Schoolhouse with fair attendance. Brother Burt and family once lived at Comins, and have often tried to tell the people the gospel story there. At this time they came out, and some who had never heard our brother speak before say they wish he might have remained longer. Others in our community said they could sit all night and listen. So does the Spirit of God work with the children of men.

We have just heard of the death of our beloved President, which brings sadness, yet a degree of gladness also: Sadness at our loss of a noble brother, and gladness that the change will to him be glorious.

May we all strive to gain the reward that awaits those who are faithful to the end.

Your sister,

MARY HOGLE.

SOUTHAMPTON, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: Christ has said that if we do his will we shall know of his doctrine and shall be made free. Paul declares that these things shall be ours if we keep in memory what has been preached, unless we have believed in vain. So we see that there is something for men to do.

We read in Acts 9, how Paul when journeying toward Damascus heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" And he, trembling and astonished, said, "Lord, what wouldest thou have me to do?" He was told to arise and go on to the city, where it would be told him what he must do.

Now, Paul was required to do what he was told, and not what he wanted to do. And are we to be carried to heaven on flowery beds of ease? Other religious persuasions have said, to believe on Christ is to be saved. But Christ said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." Even though we have obeyed the gospel, we are required to go on to perfection.

We must repent of our evil works, have faith toward God and in his ordinances, keeping all his commandments. If we love God and Christ, they have covenanted to love us. And if we truly love them we will do the works that Christ did when upon earth. It is he who said, "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me shall not abide in darkness." If we have not this light of Christ, let us study into his life, that we may find the way. Let us live the life of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, who despite the persecutions of his brethren forgot not God, and gained favor of him as well as of man.

S. A. ROURKE.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri, Second Branch

We present a few items in behalf of the Second Branch; being also second in numbers, we may be able to maintain this part of the title for some time to come, although the other two junior branches about ten and fifteen minutes walk from here are competing with us for the newcomers locating in the south part of the city. The new church located on Enoch Hill can be plainly seen from this church looking south-east.

With an able staff of officers in charge, this branch is still growing in numbers, and we believe spiritually. There has been a good average attendance during the winter months at the different meetings.

Quite a number from this branch attended the convention and stake conference held at the stone church in this city on March 12, 13 and 14, at which a good interest was manifested at the different sessions.

Yours for the welfare of Zion,

817 South Delaware, March 20, 1915. G. W. TOUSLEY.

RELIGIO CONVENTION

Lee Program; others have given different programs that have been well received and proved a help to the locals.

If we can select and elect the right party for general superintendent the coming year—one who can give his entire time to the work—I would expect the next general report to show a temperance superintendent in every Religio district organization, performing an effective work among his locals—and more, instead of being an expense, I have every reason to believe the work will be more than self-supporting.

There is no bigger wide-open door of service for our people, young and old, than that of temperance. In many places the Anti-Saloon League, the Young Men's Christian Association and Women's Christian Temperance Union and other organizations are inviting us. Are we ready? Have we efficient and skilled workers? As we see it, Zion can never be until "King Alcohol" is dethroned. He now sees "the handwriting on the wall." Then, forward, comrades; on to victory!

Sister Alta Young rendered a vocal solo.

Good literature superintendent Harvey Sandy reported the distribution of tracts, 130,273; Ensigns, 6,423; HERALDS, 7,826; Gospel Standards, 6,304; miscellaneous, 17,531; books, 550; Autumn Leaves, 486; subscriptions taken, 178. In the year 1910, in round numbers, 19,000 pieces were distributed; 1911, 21,000; 1912, 43,000; 1913, 103,000; 1914, 169,000.

Normal superintendent L. F. P. Curry reported, which will appear in connection with the reports to the Sunday School Association.

The report of R. W. Farrell, editor of the Senior Quarterly included:

The Religio is to be congratulated in that it has removed the great reproach which hung over it because of neglect of the Doctrine and Covenants. We have studied the entire book and will turn to consider other matter, perhaps, with only one big regret; that is that we had not a whole year to devote to the revelations given through the noble man and prophet who has passed from among us, while we whispered the beautiful German farewell, "Until we meet again." A topical study of the book has met with difficulties because no subject is dealt with thoroughly by the revelations, unless it be the subject of temporalities, or finances.

C. B. Woodstock, reporting, said:

While the lessons are drawn directly from the Book of Mormon text we have gained much help in their preparation from previous Quarterlies and from other publications of the church. We have tried to prepare a Quarterly that would interest the youth up to sixteen or eighteen years of age, but in so doing it has been difficult to make the lessons simple enough to meet the needs of many junior classes in which the age ranges from six to ten. If there is sufficient demand it would seem advisable to have a primary quarterly prepared for the younger of the junior classes. We recommend that at least another year's Quarterlies be prepared following the plan of the present Quarterly.

The lessons committee reported, having agreed:

To continue the study of the Doctrine and Covenants in the senior department in chronological order, finishing the book as rapidly as possible.

To follow the chronological study with topical study, using the other books as collateral text.

To use the Book of Mormon as the basis of study for the juniors.

The revising committee in reporting stated:

The revisions made by the committee have been of a minor character usually, and the data in the lessons can for the most part be depended upon as being correct.

The report of the executive committee included:

The committee on maps for the Society Islands was released, it being understood that the demand had been met for the time being.

J. A. Gunsolley and S. A. Burgess were authorized to represent the executive committee to act with the Board of Publication and historian in the matter of issuing a book on normal, or teacher training, study.

In the matter of field workers, the president was authorized to appoint such at his discretion, the executive officers being recognized as field workers.

It was agreed to allow the legitimate expenses of the temperance superintendent in launching and prosecuting the work of his department.

The committee on merging with the Sunday School Association was in part as follows:

We recommend that steps be taken by the society to confer with the Board of Publication with a view to the issue of all lesson literature, including appointment of editors, appointment of lessons committee, compensation of editors, appointment of committee or committees on revision of lessons, etc., that such work may be done by cooperation with church authorities or under such church supervision as will result in better coordination of departments, with the advantage of elimination of unnecessary machinery, expense, and division of effort. We believe that the work of the Religio and that of the Sunday school organizations would be advanced by such work of cooperation under supervision of the Board of Publication, which acts under direction of General Conference, including general authorities.

As a further step toward coordination and increased efficiency we recommend that appropriations to provide for leading lines of work, such as the translation and publication of the Book of Mormon and other church works into other languages, be submitted to the General Conference for approval; and that so far as possible all leading lines of work undertaken by the Religio be so presented for the approval of the conferences, and all this with the object of consolidating and compacting the work of all departments.

C. B. Woodstock of the Social Purity Board reported, which will appear in connection with the work of the General Conference.

The report of the library commission submitted by Sister Louise Palfrey Sheldon, submitted at this time, will appear in connection with reports of the Sunday school or church.

Standard of excellence recommended by the Lamoni Stake amended and adopted by a vote of 124 to 3, provides as follows:

District fully organized. Conventions at least once each year. Half the locals represented at district conventions. District fully reported to general secretary annually. District represented at General Convention by delegates with credentials. Half the locals with home department active. Half with normal department active. Half with good literature committee active. Half with temperance committee active. Literary work according to plan of Library Commission.

Institute work once or more each year at convention or reunion. Half the locals with active program work. First grade district to qualify on all twelve points; second grade on eight points, including number 4; third grade on five points, including number 4.

The session adjourned to engage in the following conferences, in charge of the parties named: Temperance, B. J. Scott; good literature, J. F. Rudd; relief work, J. A. Becker; district president and Religio administration, H. L. Barto.

7.30 P. M.

With T. J. Elliott in charge, the session was opened by singing number 14. Prayer was offered by Paul M. Hanson.

Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt rendered two beautiful vocal duets composed by Sister McDougal, a blind sister of Australia.

Messrs. Leonard Dickey, A. W. Fleet, Howard White and H. E. Gelatt entertained the convention with a saxophone quartet.

Walter W. Smith addressed the assembly on the theme, "What next?" He said the Religio had for twenty years been ministering to the youth of the church. He suggested that there be an influence thrown around the young so that in years when they have wandered they will again return to the environments of their youth. We all have social instincts, varying, but sure. We must learn to work together, allowing the young to develop in a normal way. In the East we have a junior Religio, composed of children under twelve. We do not have classes. We gather the children in, sing, tell them stories, provide for their social development, interest them in the church, baptize them and later their parents. Hence we need to minister along lines we are not occupying in now. We should enter into the field of social service and provide for our young people who are not cared for along the lines of their need.

W. A. Hougas gave a reading, "The man in the shadow."

The following report by the committee on articles of condolence in memory of President Joseph Smith was adopted by unanimous rising vote.

The young people represented in this General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society express in sincere affection this tribute of appreciation of the far-reaching influence for good exercised in their behalf through the life and work of "Brother Joseph"—President Joseph Smith.

As the President and chief pastor of the church he ever expressed a genial, sympathetic interest in the spirit and efforts of the young people. He understood the life and temper of youth and remembered always and warmly appreciated their purposes and viewpoint. In the midst of burdensome cares, of great responsibilities, he forgot not the gladness of his youth, but learned, according to his oft-declared purpose, to "grow old gracefully." He diffused a spirit of cheerful optimism; his outlook was hopeful, inspirational, forward-looking in which he encouraged all by his genial example to be cheerful in their warfare, that they might, as was he, be joyous in their triumph.

We recognize in the bigness of his nature and good qualities, breadth of intellect, largeness of heart-nature, and universal, sympathetic charity, an expression of those high qualities of true greatness which show out in his character as a worthy representative of the great Master and redeemer whom he served so constantly.

His widely-diffused influence in the expression of noble qualities, his characteristic bigness and goodness of nature, have left a permanent influence in forming the character of the young people that will continue to stimulate the uplift of the generations of the church that shall follow.

We gratefully pay this tribute of loving appreciation of his memory. His life was a stimulus to nobleness of nature, his memory a refreshing and reviving fragrance that will remain with time and continue in eternity.

Number 113 was sung, and J. A. Gunsolley pronounced the benediction.

8 A. M.

With J. A. Gunsolley in charge, number 121 was sung, followed by prayer by A. E. Warr. Minutes were read, corrected and approved.

The Graceland scholarship committee reported, recommending a change in the matter of administering this fund, providing that the president of the college should advise who should receive aid, and that the treasurer of the Religio be the treasurer of the fund.

A committee of three were appointed, J. A. Becker, Edward Rannie and R. S. Salyards, to consider the matter and report.

The following recommended by the resolutions committee was moved:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the convention that the time has come for our Senior Quarterly to have its lessons based on the Book of Mormon.

A substitute that with the year 1916 the study of the Book of Mormon be again taken up in the Senior Quarterly prevailed.

The committee considering Graceland scholarship reported, recommending that aid be placed in the hands of the college treasurer to be expended according to the recurring needs of the student, funds to be repaid to the Religio treasurer, which prevailed.

The Appropriations Committee recommended that all appropriations providing for other than routine work of the society be submitted to General Conference for approval or disapproval, which prevailed.

The following appropriations were made: General purposes $300, library commission $100, normal department $50, good literature $75, temperance department $50, Social Purity Board $50.

The Independence Sanitarium asked for an appropriation of $2,000 with which to purchase an X-ray. The matter was referred to the executive committee, they to confer with committees from the Sunday School Association and church, if appointed.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S ILLNESS

In our issue of April 31 we referred to the illness of President F. M. Smith, stating that he was rapidly recovering. Since that date he has suffered a slight relapse. He seems again well on the way to recover however, report this Monday morning as we go to press seeming to indicate that his condition is decidedly hopeful. His wife, Sister Ruth M. Smith, wires President E. A. Smith, "Doctor says Fred's condition indicates wonderful recovery."

It will be understood of course, that President Smith is still at his temporary home in Worcester, Massachusetts, not having been able thus far to come to the General Conference.

The Saints have ceased not to pray for the speedy and permanent recovery of President Smith, and they are grateful for the Lord's blessings to him.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Carranza forces claim victory over a Villa army north of Mexico City. Fighting continues in the vicinity of Tampico. Martial law is declared in the latter city. Engagements have occurred across the border from Brownsville, Texas, with stray bullets crossing the international line. In many parts of Mexico the people are said to be facing a serious shortage of food supplies.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.—The United States protest against the recent British order in council was on the 5th made public. Speaking "in the sincere spirit of friendship to make its own view and position . . . unmistakably clear," the United States Government claims the right of innocent shipments to "be freely transported to and from the United States through neutral countries to belligerent territory without being subject to the penalties of contraband traffic or blockade, much less to detention, requisition, or confiscation," declares the blockade unprecedented and a distinct invasion of the sovereign rights of neutrals interfered with, and suggests demands for "full reparation" in case of "violation of neutral rights." The German Government has notified the United States of its willingness to pay for the American vessel William P. Fry, sunk by the Prinz Eitel Friederich, and for the cargo also, if it is shown to have been American owned. The German Government, however, justifies the destroying of the American ship and cargo under international law, as laid down in the declaration of London, agreeing to payment only under treaties between the United States and Prussia signed in 1799 and 1828.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Fighting in the Carpathians continues favorable to Russia. Germany is hurrying reinforcements into Hungary to withstand Russian advances. The Germans are also said to be moving soldiers from Belgium to their eastern line in Poland. The French claim gains in the West. Troops of the Union of South Africa have occupied Warmbad, a town in German South Africa. Serbian troops and Bulgarian irregulars have been in conflict on the Serbian side of their border. The British steamers Eston, Lockwood, City of Bremen, Northlands, the British trawlers Gloxiana, Jason, Nellie, Agantha, the French fishing vessel Paraguerette and the Norwegian bark Nor have been destroyed by German submarines, and the Dutch steamer Schie-land by a mine. The Swedish steamer England has been seized by Germany. Smyrna has again been bombarded. The commander of the German raider Prinz Eitel Frederick, on the 7th at Newport News, asked that his ship and crew be interned during the war. The German Government has asked the United States to make investigation into the action of the San Juan forts in preventing the Odendwald from leaving that port. Germany disclaims responsibility for the death of Leon C. Thrasher, lost with the British steamer Falaba, stating that ships and passengers were duly warned not to cross the war zone.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

GREENE CALLED HOME.—Elder U. W. Greene, of the Quorum of Twelve, left the General Conference for his home in Winter Hill, Massachusetts, Sunday, being called by the serious illness of his wife. The prayers of the conference Saints accompanied him on this painful journey, and they continue to pray for the recovery of Sister Greene.

Sunday School Convention

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 2 P. M.

The beautiful weather of the day was even an improvement over that of the day previous, and the twenty-fourth convention of the General Sunday School Association opened under hopeful auspices, with the Saints in fine spirits, and anticipating a profitable season.

Number 100, Zion's Praises was sung, prayer was offered by J. A. Gunsolley, and number 122 was sung.

General Superintendent G. R. Wells and assistant D. J. Krahl were chosen to preside. E. D. Moore, secretary, was chosen secretary to choose assistants. He chose Sister John Midgorden and Vernon Reese. Presidency of convention were authorized to complete the organization. Credentials committee was announced, Jerome Wildermuth, La June Howard, Ruby Baguley, and were approved as previously selected.

The credentials committee reported.

It was moved that the rules be suspended and that W. H. Greenwood, of the British Isles, Brother and Sister J. Charles May and Brother and Sister H. W. Savage, of the South Sea Islands, Peter Muceus, of Norway, Brother and Sister H. N. Hansen of Denmark and Germany be made delegates from their respective fields.

Presidency announced committees on appropriations: G. W. Blair, John Smith, B. J. Scott; resolutions, W. W. Smith, Frank Rudd, T. J. Elliott, C. E. Crumley, M. A. McConley; notification, J. Bronson, D. J. Williams, A. C. Barmore; local deacons to provide ushers; music in charge of May Skinner, H. C. Burgess, Alta Mather, Mabel Carlile.

Superintendent G. R. Wells reported:

If we are to report to you . . . what progress the association is making or how near we are measuring up to the noble object of religious teaching among us, I confess that I am not in a position to report accurately upon it, nor even approximately. The duty of imparting religious instruction rests primarily upon the parents and upon the whole church. The association should not presume to carry the whole load. Considering that the secular schools can give children 27 hours instruction a week, while the Sunday school has but one half hour, we are not the whole thing. We are, indeed, just a "help," an auxiliary. But this should not cool our enthusiasm or lessen our efforts to become a more efficient help. Only God can measure the good that efficient Sunday school officers and teachers may do in assisting to hold to the church our boys and girls. . . .

The work is demanding more time every year and we fear the association will find it increasingly difficult every election to procure efficient workers who are in a financial position to give the necessary time, so much of which is always required for home duties or the earning of daily bread. This applies specially to superintendent, secretary, home department superintendent, and normal superintendent. The success of each is vital to the growth and success of the association. Correspondence is the heaviest part, the work that takes much time when the officers write their own letters could select officers living in the same town, a stenographer could be engaged to take the correspondence of all and release the officers for constructive and administrative work. It would make for efficiency. . . .

The library commission work has suffered from its members having too much to do in other departments. We wish to suggest that it would be well to consider if the church is not making a mistake in asking already overworked officers to take care of the important library interests of the entire membership. We urge that the association shall not contribute to such a case, and that we ask the Religio and conference to also take it to heart. Our representative on the board has labored under discouraging conditions, according to her report to us. . . .

We are nearing the end of the course of study marked out by our lessons committee in July, 1912. Only one quarter remains to be written. Experience has shown that many alterations for the betterment of the course could be made. It took the International Lessons Committee three years to decide on subjects alone, for graded lessons, after the general course had been marked out. Our committee preferred to mark out a distinctly Latter Day Saint course of study on our faith, making it possible to start the little child in on matter adapted to it and graduate as a young lady or gentleman at seventeen or eighteen with a thorough knowledge of the gospel law of salvation, with a character a credit to the church and a blessing to humanity. That is the object of graded lessons with efficient teachers.

What is correct for one child is good also for every other child following it in the Sunday school—hence the wisdom of a settled course of study, with well-selected subjects. This we are endeavoring to obtain, but like all good and enduring things, it can not be built up in two or three years. We are just now to the point where we can revise our course in the light of over two years' experience, improve our subjects, and cut down the inequalities of the course, making each grade to fit smoothly and progressively into the other. This calls for time, experience and educational talent. We have called the editors and lessons committee together at this convention to revise the course. We consider it the most important work so far attempted with our system of graded lessons, so far as its bearing on our apparent progress is concerned. Let us name one good result that should accrue. We should be able to begin to furnish better teachers' helps and more illustrations for the Quarterlies. This can not be done unless we know the subjects far enough ahead to be able to draw, and plan and secure cuts. Opportunity to be deliberate counts for much. Hurried work is seldom satisfactory. And further, the reasonableness and beauty of a well-laid-out course will become more apparent as the workers study the changes made for the better, resulting in more loyal and hearty labor.

One of our most careful and exact workers, Miss Zimmermann, editor of the Primary Quarterly, has resigned because of home duties and personal plans. We regret to lose her valuable service. All of our editors have done well under the strain we have put upon them. . . .

We hereby call attention to the resolution moved in the convention of 1913. "Resolved, That it be the sense of this body that the general superintendent give his entire time to the work and that he be supported from the general fund." This was referred to the Presidency and Twelve. Very logically, they found it impracticable to make an appointment of this kind unless power to nominate the superintendent were given to them. They so informed the Sunday school executive, resulting in a recommendation that the joint council be given that power, which was granted unanimously by the convention of last year.

Sunday school work is church work and for that reason the association can not assume the right to appoint a church officer, claim his whole time, and support his family. That power properly belongs to the church; hence the above-named action, which seemed consistent. . . .

That, we request the joint council to nominate a superintendent who can give his whole time to that work, to be under conference appointment, and drawing his family allowance from church funds; and further, that the association hereby pledges support for such an officer and instructs the treasurer to pay into the church treasury the amount necessary to cover the family allowance, if any; and further, that in this case the superintendent shall render to the Presiding Bishop an account of personal expense, the association to pay sonable and just.

Last year, the convention declared in favor of that kind of merger which is expressed in closer relations between the association and the parent body, the church. As a first step to accomplish this, it was decided to have on the executive of the association, the Exponent, during the year just past, the Twelve to act as "advisory" members. The convention should make that effective this year by writing into the constitution and by-laws a statement of the same. We recommend that the principles be extended also to district and local jurisdiction. . . .

As has been widely circulated through the church papers, the executive suspended the publication of the official organ of the association, the Exponent, during the year just past. Lack of support was the main reason for this step. Up to that time, the editors of Quarterlies had not yet caught up with their work. As half of the matter was written by those editors, the Exponent was invariably late, which also hurt the circulation. Stopping the Exponent helped the editors to catch up with their work.

We believe the class of matter should be carefully studied and selected for such a paper as the Exponent, and for this reason it deserves more time and attention than has been possible in the recent past. We do not hesitate to say the association needs such a help in its work, but we also recognize that we must make it attractive and the matter suitable to teachers and officers before we can expect the necessary support. For this reason, we urge that if the convention directs that publication be resumed, ample time be allowed those in charge for selection of editor and suitable writers and that publication be not commenced until assured of a first-class journal, so far as our resources can be expected to produce it. . . .

We have had in several places some trouble over organized classes. Not because organized classes are not a good thing but for the want of proper understanding of the objects in organizing classes and want of proper supervision by the officers in charge. Our young people catch the spirit of the times, and they need to be guided in this movement.

This and other similar matters only emphasize the need of constant interchange of ideas and experiences and some medium of exchange, bringing about uniformity. To respond to all the calls over one such item as organized classes through the mails entails a big amount of correspondence, which could be written once for all in the officers' and teachers' paper. Many troubles and misunderstandings might thus be forestalled. Samples of constitutions for boys' and girls', men and young ladies' classes printed for the benefit of all. . . .

Although working under a big handicap, we have enjoyed our labors and we close the year's work with gratitude to the Divine Superintendent whose Spirit has often been with us. . . .

GOMER R. WELLS.

The assistant superintendent, D. J. Krahl, in reporting, among other things said:

My activities in the General Sunday School Association have been limited to consultation with my associate officers and matters considered by the executive board, also institute work in the Independence Stake.

From the report of the secretary the following is quoted:

The work of this office has been done in addition to other strenuous duties, but we have given it much time and thought, yet not nearly so much as it deserves. The ordinary routine requires much time and attention, but we have sought to do much more. About eight hundred and fifty personal letters have been written, many of them at considerable length. Copies of all these have been preserved in convenient form for the guidance of those who need it in the future. We had not the advantage of this.

A record of the correspondence with the various districts has been kept in systematic order, together with other information, as a basis for a future record. A new report blank has been created, which gives the information most valuable from the various conventions, and they are filed with the other records.

An aggressive campaign of work on the standard of excellence has been urged and carried on, and the results have been quite gratifying. . . . While the standard of excellence agitation has not borne much visible fruit as indicated in the reports, we think there have been foundations laid for some very effective work this year. The essential enthusiasm must be based on definite work, and the standard very consistently suggests this. Many of the districts have adopted local standards this year, by which they grade the work of the schools. We have encouraged this, believing it will localize the interest and incite friendly competition with those considered as equals. There will surely be a considerable showing of advancement in the grades in the next report.

As an illustration of the need of work along the lines suggested in the standard now in use for districts, we mention that first grade districts must have normal classes in at least half of the schools. This year we have only eighty-seven normal classes reported, while if all the districts were first grade, there would be three hundred and forty-five or more. This applies largely to home classes and cradle rolls.

It has been our aim to make the term association mean more than an annual gathering with just a few if any delegates from a district. It seems there should be more of the work of gathering and disseminating information between districts; a passing along of the best things to those seeking to improve. We have found a need for simple but comprehensive manuals of instruction for the various officers of districts and locals. This should be provided soon. A publication of our own would largely supply this, yet we believe it should be done anyway, to be sure the needs were supplied at the right time. The constant shift of officers requires a constant coaching and instructing. We have been anxious and willing to lend our assistance, but feel that the work has not been extensive enough.

We found the whole reporting system in need of revising and rejuvenation, and have made it over, after properly consulting everyone we thought would have any special interest in it. We think we have in the new standardized report blanks and school supplies a composite result of the demands of the most progressive workers we have. We owe much to our superintendent, who acted as a member of a subcommittee of the executive. We now have a complete set of blanks for all departments that can be filed in a convenient, loose-leaf binder that may be used for records of business and proceedings of all kinds. Those who have seen it in use warmly commend it. All these supplies are listed and described in a new catalogue which the Herald Publishing House kindly allowed us to write for them.

It gives us pleasure to report five new districts. A new district has been organized in South Australia, also in Victoria, Australia. In the statistics, we report the loss of one school in the former district since last report, which is a way of saying they have lost one school since organization. West Virginia has been organized several years, but reports for the first time this year. Eastern Colorado gave up part of her territory and we now have a Western Colorado District. Montana did likewise, and we have an Eastern Montana District. Southern Missouri and Western Maine have reorganized, and we have a promise that Eastern Maine will try to gather forces and begin again. Northwestern Kansas is evidently almost disorganized, but is well taken care of by the home department officials. It is with regret that we print the statistics without all the reports, but we have written fully and often, urging these delinquent districts to report, but all to no avail. England and Germany gave promise of doing well early in the year, but in the gathering of war forces there was much demoralization of Sunday school forces. The reports from Germany are very meager and qualified with the significant words, "to August 1."

The increased interest in cradle roll work seems to justify the creation of an office of superintendent to have general charge of this work. Cradle roll work is not a fad, but a valuable feature to live schools. . . .

There is a steady growth in the demand for all grades of our Quarterlies. The junior grade, being a new one in the graded series, is fast taking its place with the others, seeming to indicate that the schools are seeking to properly grade. . . . For the present quarter, we are printing the following Quarterlies: Beginner, 5,700; Primary, 5,700; Junior, 4,750; Intermediate, 7,200; Senior, 17,200.

As a matter of information and for the records, we report an event of perhaps common knowledge among Sunday school workers. In July of 1914 W. N. Robinson placed his resignation as superintendent in the hands of the First Presidency and asked that provision be made for carrying on the work of the office for the remainder of the year. He gave as reasons for his resignation that serious and unlooked-for business complications had arisen which demanded almost his entire time.

The executive committee met on July 20, 1914, with Elbert A. Smith of the First Presidency and J. W. Rushton of the Twelve, these two acting in advisory capacity, and selecting G. R. Wells to fill out the unexpired term, D. J. Krahl to act as first assistant.

The following resolution was unanimously voted by the executive committee:

"Resolved, That we deeply regret that Brother W. N. Robinson has found it necessary to resign from the office of superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, but at the same time we feel that he is fully justified in the course he has taken, under the circumstances that have arisen in his affairs." . . .

The secretary submitted the following additional report:

Since making up the statistics for our report we have received reports from two districts, namely, Pottawattamie and Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana. The superintendent of the Manchester, England, District, reports informally of the work there, which we submit in separate form, and we have two letters from Sweden, which we present separately.

There are sufficient copies of the printed reports on hand to supply the reasonable needs of those who desire to secure extra copies for taking to the interested workers at home.

The statistical report of the secretary showed a membership of districts 77, schools 690, pupils 35,931, gain 2,869.

The secretary submitted the following letters:

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, March 11, 1915.

Dear Brother E. D. Moore: I wish to report that we are trying to keep a Sunday school going at Helsingborg, Sweden. I am not at that place at present, so can not give details.

We have an enrollment of ten, six of these are children from five to twelve years of age, and two of this number are children of outsiders.

We meet every Sunday at two o'clock and try to instruct the children the best way we know how. Two of the children belong to the church, and there are two more that belong to the church some ways from Helsingborg, coming in through Sunday school work.

I love the work and try to do all I can for its upbuilding.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
Furntorpsgatan 63, Helsingborg. C. A. SWENSON.

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, March 6, 1915.

E. D. Moore, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: We herewith send you a report of the Stockholm Sunday school for the year ending March 1, 1915: Number of sessions, 38; enrollment of main school, 20; enrollment of home department, 7; lessons in home department, 14; the usual officers, 1 teacher, 1 class and one home department teacher.

The school has had a vacation during the summer because nearly all the children were out in different parts of the country on their school colonies. The home class was organized in October, 1914.

Respectfully,
E. M. CARLSON, Superintendent.
JULINE FORS, Secretary, (per O. Okerlind.)

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, March 18, 1915.

Elder E. D. Moore,

Dear Brother: I am sorry that you have been compelled to write me respecting Sunday school returns. I have written to the secretary, who has joined Kitchener's army, and he has promised to obtain a return and forward it in time for the General Sunday School Convention. My assistant superintendent and secretary both enlisted before I found out and I have been left short of men. I have so many duties to attend to that I must give up some so as to properly perform the few. I am about to call the Sunday school people together so as to place my resignation as superintendent before them. . . .

Please give our heartiest greetings to all at your annual convention. May it be a spiritual success.

Three of my Bible class are now out with the troops in Egypt. A brother and nephew are in the Athletic Corps, and my sister is a Red Cross nurse. Terrible conflicts are going on just now, and the crucial part of the whole land campaign is now upon us. There may be an attempt to invade our island yet, so you can see that the people are obsessed with war, almost to the exclusion of everything else. All the factories are to be taken over by the Government to produce ammunition, etc.

In conclusion, I wish to thank you for your letter. If any great change should take place, I will apprise you of the same.

With gospel love, I remain,

Your coworker in Christ,

W. R. ARMSTRONG, Supt. Manchester District.

John Smith, treasurer, reported total receipts $9,506.68, expenditures $7,082.69, leaving a balance of $2,423.99. This report and the accounts of the treasurer were by the auditors, Oscar Anderson, Annie Allen and J. F. Garver reported audited and found correct.

The report, together with that of the auditors was found correct.

The report of the superintendent of home department included the following:

The home department of this great Sunday school organization comes to you with a message of encouragement. When the superintendent was stricken with a serious illness in the very beginning of the year's work, she issued an emergency call to the district superintendents, urging them to vigorously prosecute their work, unaided if necessary. The reported results prove the beauty of system and the real worth and intrinsic value of consecrated workers. And while our department is, in a sense, efficient, it is not sufficient, as the following statistics will show:

Total reported membership for the year .....6,336
Transferred to local schools ..... 642

Present reported membership .....5,694

Five districts failed to elect a home department superintendent. Seven organized districts failed to report. Two hundred and seventy-seven reported schools failed to elect a home department superintendent.

Vision, if you can, the possibilities of the unworked territory: compare it with the accomplishment of the working districts, and think you we should be satisfied? No: Every church member a Sunday school member, is our slogan, and nothing less will satisfy.

Many of the ministry are alive to the fact that the home department paves the way for presentation of the gospel, especially in unorganized territory, and scores of members are secured by them. Hundreds of letters are received from God's servants telling us of isolated and almost forgotten members of the church, having been placed in touch with the "big family," through the home department, and requesting attention be given them. . . .

Aside from this, the financial feature is not to be altogether ignored, six districts alone, requiring more than 1,800 Quarterlies, and $1,700 has been contributed by home department members during the year, according to incomplete reports.

Again we register a wish that a method might be devised relieving the general superintendent of the tremendous bulk of routine correspondence, in order to give time for devising and operating means for the great ingathering so conspicuously possible.

MRS. E. S. MCNICHOLS.

The superintendent of normal department reported, in part:

Despite handicaps, the state superintendents have worked faithfully, and some with much success. Three have been ill for a greater part of the time, and one, Mrs. Annie Reynolds, Los Angeles, California, has been taken by death. Practically every superintendent finds it necessary to engage in other lines of church work, and for that reason it has often been impossible to give teacher training the attention it deserves. But this handicap can be removed only when we have enough workers to go 'round.

A special effort has been made to secure greater enrollments in the courses offered, and we are glad to report that 520 new students have taken up the study.

Three hundred and eighty examinations in all courses have been given; 72 diplomas have been issued. . . .

Our examinations in the State of Missouri numbered approximately one fourth of those taken in normal courses by all denominations in the State. In our church the prejudice against teacher training seems gradually to be dying out, in place of which is a very noticeable desire on the part of the workers for better preparation for service. To what extent the arguments advanced by the supporters of the normal courses have acted in creating this better sentiment it is impossible to say, but through study in this department many have grown into the "study habit" which has led them on to better things. So we feel that not only has something measurable been accomplished, as evidenced by the figures given above, but also something which may not be measured,—the broadening of the minds of students, an effect which may be seen in their development as servants of the church.

We have been supplying requests for the names of good books with a small list that we got up and arranged under classified heads, making typewritten copies. We are at work upon a catalogue of books which it is hoped may be published in the near future. Notice will be given through the church papers when it is ready.

With a view to ascertaining the status of library work in the districts, locals and branches, we sent out about ninety inquiries, calling for reports. Up to the date of this writing, returns are not complete, but reports are coming in every day. A sufficient number have been heard from, however, together with the information gained through correspondence during the year, to obtain a fairly accurate idea of the general condition of the work. Bearing in mind that some exceptions are to be made, that we speak of the general condition, we have to report that very little has been done or is being done in library work. Districts and locals are organized; that is, they have library officers, or library boards, but there is little library activity. In many instances they go on electing these officers and do not know what they are for.

A practice that militates against library work in locals and districts is the changing of members on the boards. The office calls for knowledge and experience which take time to obtain, and changes should not be made so frequently that the benefit of this preparation is lost, and "green" members are kept constantly on the boards. . . .

The district circulating library does not seem to meet with much favor. In a number of instances after the plan has been tried for a while, it is abandoned, and the books are distributed among the local libraries. We believe that the local library is generally preferred to the circulating library, and it seems that where they have the one, they can not support the other, as a rule. . . .

The first matter that claimed our attention this year was that of a library for the Sanitarium. The commission voted an appropriation of $100 for this purpose. A list of professional books were obtained . . . and a bookcase for them was bought, costing in all $74.33. . . . We have left . . . $25.67 which will be used in enlarging the library. . . .

We believe that the mission of our library organization is not primarily to deal with general literature, but with the making of intelligent Latter Day Saints who shall be prepared to creditably represent the latter-day message to the world, and to grapple with the peculiar problems which we as a people have to consider. . . . We enter upon another year with a balance of $120.20. We spent last year $177.20.

The social purity board reported as will appear in connection with the items of the conference.

Unable to arrange a meeting of the executive committee, Superintendent Wells reported for said committee on Sunday school paper:

At a meeting of the Executive in July, 1914, it was decided to discontinue the official organ of the association, the Sunday School Exponent, for the following reasons:

Briefly, it was not supported, there being only 1,090 subscribers on the mailing list, causing a loss of about $200 the twelve months previous. . . .

Your superintendent since that time has endeavored by a call through the HERALD to ascertain what are the wishes of our people regarding a paper. We have received various suggestions but the responses were not numerous enough to enable me to discover a consensus of opinion in favor of any one of them. . . .

Viewing the association as a whole, we have no hesitancy in saying there is a need for a paper—especially in the small and far-off schools and districts. . . . This matter of the Exponent is with you for your action.

G. R. Wells, chairman, reported for the lessons committee:

The editors report that in all the grades lessons are prepared up to October, 1915. In several instances, the lessons of the three years just completed have been, of necessity, a departure from the course originally outlined. The practical work of writing lessons has revealed necessity for changes which could not be anticipated, and the effort has been to meet emergencies while adhering to the course as closely as seemed reasonable.

The work now before the committee is to revise the course, taking advantage of past experience to make the grades fit more smoothly together. In the past two years or more, the editors, working many miles apart and without opportunity to compare work with one another, have attempted to work out their individual courses. They are now called together to confer, with the hope of making progress in the correction of existing imperfections.

It has taken educational experts on other graded courses three years to select subjects alone, and we could hardly expect to perfect a course satisfactory to us upon a first effort.

In January, 1916, the lessons will begin again on the first year of the course. The committee, as a whole, or any of the individual editors will welcome any suggestions made in the interest of the lesson work by teachers or persons of experience; for the work of preparing teaching material upon the great subjects of true religion for the children of the church in arduous and of immense importance. The committee has held two meetings and expects to work during the conference.

Margaret Mather and Ralph Gaylord rendered a piano duet.

S. A. Burgess reported for the Board of Trustees of Graceland College on the matter of appropriation of $500 to aid Graceland and worthy students, requesting a continuation of the appropriation, which was referred to the appropriations committee.

F. G. Pitt, E. H. Fisher and Sister Lucy L. Ressiguie were appointed as a committee to draft articles of respect in memory of the late President Joseph Smith.

Communications from Elbert A. Smith of the First Presidency and from the Quorum of Twelve in acknowledgment of notifications that the convention was in session and prepared to receive any suggestions, and extending the good wishes and cooperation of these quorums were read.

Request of Nauvoo District for some teachers' help to take the place of the Exponent was read.

Request for aid to secure an X-ray for Independence Sanitarium was referred to the executive committee in conjunction with committee from Religio and one from the church, if appointed, final action to be referred to the General Conference.

Request from West Virginia District for district field worker was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

The constitution was amended as per notice appearing in the HERALD as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT BY-LAWS

To amend by-laws for Sunday schools, article II, section 4, page 13, "Home department superintendent," beginning in fourteenth line from top of paragraph by striking out the sentences, "He shall transfer all contributions received promptly to the treasurer of the school, keeping accurate account of the same. He shall receive from the school such supplies as shall be necessary for the proper conduct of the work." And in lieu thereof insert the following: "All necessary supplies shall be ordered through the secretary of the school; but if it is urgent, the superintendent of this department may order them, keeping an accurate account of the same. Once in every three months he shall report to the treasurer of school all receipts and expenditures and transfer balance in hand, if any. Should the department not be self-supporting, the treasurer shall supply the deficiency."

BASIS OF REPRESENTATION

To amend article IV, "Basis of representation," section 1, page 6, by striking out the word ten in third line and substituting in lieu thereof the word twenty-five.

MASS CONVENTION

To amend article X, page 12, "Mass convention," by striking out the number "400" and inserting "1,000," making the article read: "Any district association convention, where the membership is under 1,000 may upon a two thirds of the delegates present, change from delegate to mass convention."

Number 42 was sung, and the assembly was dismissed by D. J. Krahl.

7.30 P. M.

With D. J. Krahl in charge, number 75 was sung. J. A. Tanner offered prayer. Minutes read and approved.

The action of the executive committee in discontinuing the Exponent was by motion approved.

Matter of a Sunday school publication was referred to J. A. Tanner, Anna Salyards, G. R. Wells, M. C. Fisher, and Daniel Macgregor as a committee for consideration and report.

The Ladies Choir of Lamoni, under the leadership of Miss Nora Carter, rendered "At eventide it shall be light."

F. F. Wipper gave a stereopticon address, "The stereopticon in Sunday school work." He referred to the power to educate through the eye, and emphasized the help of the stereopticon machine in this work. Bible scenes, scriptural quotations and suggestive matters were thrown upon the screen to show ways in which the stereopticon may be used in Sunday school and other church work. Where the stereopticon can not be secured, he urged the use of pictures, blackboards, etc.

Nettie Paulson entertained the convention with the piano solo, "Drifting."

Number 19 was sung, John Smith dismissing.

JOINT PROGRAMS

SUNDAY, APRIL 4

7.45 A. M.

A joint prayer service was held in charge of F. A. Smith and M. A. McConley. This was an excellent meeting, occupied largely by the young people.

9.15 A. M.

At this hour all departments of the Lamoni Sunday school except the senior met in regular session in the lower auditorium of the church, in charge of the local officers.

At the same hour in the upper auditorium, G. W. Blair superintendent of the Lamoni school in charge, a meeting devoted to auxiliary work in foreign fields was held. Number 141 was sung, B. J. Scott offered prayer, followed by singing number 189.

Speaking with reference to the work in the Hawaiian Islands, M. A. McConley, late of that mission, said: Because of their position these islands at this time are an important mission, being the center or crossroads of the traffic of the Pacific. They are the key to the Orient for our work. In Hawaii there is a variety of nationalities. At the present time very little work is being done by our church, while at the present time this is a very fruitful field for other churches. We have in Honolulu seven Sunday schools. Bible school classes in private homes have been productive of good work.

At 9.45 the Honolulu people meet for Sunday school. They are aided by teachers of different nationalities. Following this meeting they have preaching in English and Hawaiian. Leaving here at 12 o'clock they go to the other six points in the city where schools are conducted, in turn.

The Sunday school in foreign fields is the hub around which the work of the church revolves. People we are interesting in Honolulu will in time carry the gospel to Japan and China.

H. A. Koehler spoke of the work in Jerusalem: Our school in Jerusalem was composed mostly of Jews. Our experience there taught us that our work will be chiefly to the Jews. We do not hope to do much in the way of converting the Arabs.

We planned first to teach English and then to follow with Bible teaching. We taught the a b c's by sounding the letters, and combined letters by the same method. Words followed, by combining letters, and the use of objects. In two months some could converse in the English language.

A few Arabs came to our school at first. The Arab and the Jew will not affiliate. We had often to stop controversies at the close of school. When a Jew meets an Arab he fairly quails. Killing a Jew is not punished in Jerusalem: A Jew is not allowed on Christian Street, the site of the homes of the Christians.

Certain classes of Jews we could not interest. These have retrograded. The various classes will not affiliate with each other. Each lives in a different part of the city—"as towns without walls."

The Jews whom we can reach are willing to learn, the Arabs are not. Orthodox churches practically buy pupils by tipping them for attending their schools. The Jewish boys liked our method and came to us by dozens, without tipping.

J. Charles May spoke of the work in the South Sea Islands: My time for the past five years has been largely taken up in learning and speaking the Tahitian language. In two months after arrival I preached my first sermon in this language. The experience of Brother Savage was similar, he preached first to the people two weeks later than I. Missionaries of other churches sometimes have been unable after fourteen years to preach in the language. We realize that God has assisted us in this matter.

The majority of the time of my mission I was president of the Island Religio, Brother Savage being superintendent of the Sunday school. We went without experience. We were wonderfully blessed. I had only preached a few sermons in English. For five and a half years I have spoken in no other than the Tahitian tongue.

I have edited our island paper, and the Religio and Sunday school Quarterlies. I wote for these periodicals, set the type and run the press. Sister Charles Lake assisted me very materially in the preparation of the lessons.

We have about twelve hundred members in the island, with about eight hundred members of each Religio and Sunday school. We had about twenty each of Religios and Sunday schools—wherever there is a Religio there is a Sunday school.

The native Saints look at the scriptural side of everything. They were told my name was John Charles May. They said Charles was not scriptural—not found in the Bible. They would not call me Charles, but call me John, which was scriptural.

On leaving for the islands we were told we would return safely to America, but in a time of trouble. This has been fulfilled.

Brother May concluded by singing a Tahitian hymn. The audience was very visibly affected during the rendering of this hymn, following the statement that the same was sung at the memorial services of President Joseph Smith in the islands.

Brother and Sister A. M. Chase, son Charles and daughter Alice sang a quartet.

On evorse of number 73 was sung, and U. W. Greene dismissed the assembly.

10.45 A. M.

Lead by the General Conference choir, directed by H. C. Burgess, number 160 in the Hymnal was sung, A. J. Layland offering prayer. The choir rendered an anthem. J. A. Gunsolley was in charge of the meeting.

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser addressed the audience on the subject, "The Unemployed," emphasizing the need of furnishing for the young of the church employment in church work, such as they will be glad to do, that altogether we may perform the great work of the army of the Lord.

Anna Mae Morgan rendered a solo.

Sister Lucie Howes Sears spoke on the subject, "Sunday school essentials." She suggested the need of getting the whole boy to Sunday school—mind and heart as well as body, by finding the point of contact—what the boy is interested in—between him and the work we wish to present to him. The first essential for Sunday school work is training. The next is graded material—God has graded the pupils, we must grade the lessons.

Number 215 was sung, G. R. Wells dismissing.

2.30 P. M.

With J. A. Gunsolley in charge, number 156 from the Hymnal was sung, J. M. Stubbart offering prayer. The Lamoni Ladies Choir favored the gathering with a selection.

Wardell Christy spoke on the theme "The crisis," calling attention to the fact that character is the greatest essential—the world needs men, the church and God need men.

Paul Craig rendered a vocal solo.

J. W. Rushton addressed the meeting on, "The spiritual side of intellectual development," urging the need of intelligence and education in our religious work.

Number 135 was sung and J. A. Gunsolley dismissed.

At 4 o'clock conferences were held: secretaries, E. D. Moore in charge; librarians, S. A. Burgess; teacher training, Granville Trowbridge; home department, Sister Daniel Macgregor; the organized class, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser.

7.30 P. M.

J. A. Gunsolley was in charge, and number 206 from the Hymnal was sung, J. W. Wight offering prayer. The choir rendered an anthem.

Heman C. Smith spoke on the theme "Inasmuch." He dwelt upon the necessity of teaching the gospel of life in the home and everywhere, raising the question as to whether we had done all we could in this line.

W. H. Greenwood, in charge of the British Isles Mission, spoke of the work there. Only the Manchester District, with seven schools, is at present affiliated with the General Association. In the mission there are thirteen other schools. Improvement classes, history classes and bands of hope do the work of the Religio, though in Manchester there are three locals. There has been opposition to the Sunday school in England. The general associations should do something for the auxiliary work in the British Isles, where organization and organized effort are needed. An official representative would do well in the mission. The work is passing through the trying times incident to the war. Some small schools are depleted of officers entirely, and the district is practically without officers, with the brethren in the service of the country.

Number 228 was sung and J. A. Gunsolley dismissed the meeting.

MONDAY, APRIL 5

8 A. M.

G. R. Wells called the assembly to order and number 9 was sung from Zion's Praises, A. C. Barmore offering prayer. F. F. Wipper gave a chalk talk, "Object lessons," demonstrating the usefulness of the blackboard in displaying statistics and teaching abstract principles.

8.30 A. M.

Conferences were held: Beginner in charge of Eunice Winn Smith, assisted by Callie B. Stebbins; primary, Anna Zimmermann, assisted by Sister J. A. Roberts; junior, Margaret Macgregor, assisted by Nellie Prall; intermediate, Lucie H. Sears; senior, Anna Salyards, assisted by Mable Knipschild; superintendents, G. R. Wells.

10.45 A. M.

With G. R. Wells in charge, number 120, Zion's Praises, was sung, W. W. Smith offering prayer. In the absence of D. J. Krahl, called home, and on suggestion of Superintendent Wells, J. A. Gunsolley was chosen to assist in directing the work of the convention.

Hale W. Smith sang, "God will take care of you." Minutes read and approved.

The constitution was amended as per following, notice having appeared in the HERALD:

ADVISORY MEMBERS AND EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

(A) To amend article III, "Relationship to the church," by adding the following: "To this end, a member of the First Presidency and one from the Quorum of Twelve, indorsed by General Conference, shall be considered as advisory members of the executive council, having voice in the deliberations of that body."

(B) To amend article IV, "Officers and elections," by adding to section 1, the following: "These officers to be known as the executive council of the General Sunday School Association."

(C) On page 5, following "Librarian," under article V, "Duties of officers," insert a new section as follows: "7. Executive Council.—Upon the call of the superintendent, the officers mentioned in article IV shall meet to confer on those matters upon which the superintendent and his assistants need advice and counsel. At all such meetings, the advisory members mentioned in article three shall be invited to attend. This council shall evolve plans and methods for the furtherance of the work under their care; and select editors in the literary department and such workers in other departments as are not otherwise provided for. They shall meet conjointly with the executive committee of Zion's Religio-Literary Society for the selection of such officers or workers as are to act for both organizations, such as normal superintendent, field workers, etc."

(D) To amend article III, "Officers," page 9, district association, by adding to section 1, the following: "These officers to be known as the executive council of the district (or stake) Sunday school association."

(E) On page 11, following district librarian, insert the following new section, under article IV, "Duties of officers": "7. Executive Council.—Upon the call of the superintendent, the officers mentioned in article three, shall meet as often as necessary to counsel on the work under their care and evolve and discuss plans for the furtherance of the work of the district (or stake). The president of the district or stake shall be considered an advisory member of this council and shall be invited to attend its meetings, having voice in its deliberations."

(F) To amend by-laws for Sunday schools, article I, "Officers," by adding the following: "The elective officers of the school shall constitute the executive council thereof."

(G) To amend by-laws for schools, article II, "Duties of officers," by adding a new section as follows: "10. Executive Council.—Upon the call of the superintendent, the officers constituting the executive council shall meet to confer on those matters upon which the superintendent and his assistants need advice and counsel. The president of the branch shall be considered an advisory member of this council and shall be invited to attend its meetings, having voice in the deliberations."

A motion to rescind the action of last convention lodging the nominating of the superintendent with the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve was lost by a vote of 82 to 87.

W. W. Smith, J. A. Tanner, T. W. Chatburn were appointed a committee to wait upon the joint council and receive nominations for superintendent.

2 P. M.

G. R. Wells called the meeting to order by announcing number 110. Daniel Macgregor offered prayer. Minutes approved.

The revising committee reported the work more satisfactory than ordinarily for the reason that matter for lessons had reached them earlier than common. Their associations had been pleasant.

Florence Johnson entertained the convention with a reading, "Letting things go."

The committee on respect in memory of President Joseph Smith reported as follows, and the same was adopted by rising vote.

Whereas, In the departure of our beloved brother, President Joseph Smith, we recognize that one of earth's noble men has passed from our midst, the Sunday school has lost a most loyal friend,—one whose broad-mindedness and great charity we will sorely miss

Therefore, we the General Sunday School Association in convention assembled desire to join with the host of personal friends and fellow laborers in expressing our sorrow and great loss, and to those who mourn for him in the closer relationship of home and family ties, we extend our sympathy, and pray that the consoling influence of God's peace may be theirs to enjoy.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 5, 1915.

An appropriation of $100 was made to apply on the bust fund providing a bust of the late President Joseph Smith.

The report of appropriations committee on appropriation for Graceland College and worthy students was adopted as follows:

We recommend that the sum of $300 be allowed, and . . . that a loan to any one student or family shall not exceed $50 in one school year, and . . . that where loans are made and notes taken . . . made payable to the treasurer of the Sunday School Association that he shall be consulted before the loan is made; and we further recommend that the college furnish an annual report of the disbursements of said appropriations, including whatever balance the college may have on hand from previous appropriations.

Special committee on the matter of a Sunday school paper reported:

Your committee appointed to consider the advisability of reviving the Exponent, suggests that the matter be referred to your executive council requesting them to cooperate with the executive board of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society in an effort to revive the Exponent and make it a joint organ of both societies, the council to have full power to act. If this cooperative plan is found impracticable, the council is instructed to arrange for the publication of the Sunday school department through some of the church publications.

This report was amended by inserting after Zion's Religio-Literary Society the words "and Board of Publication," and adopted.

An appropriation of $50 was made for social purity work.

A motion prevailed providing that "no school in organized territory shall be entitled to representation in General Convention except through the district in which it is located."

The following question and answer was ordered made a part of the record:

Under the basis of representation adopted at this convention, allowing to each district, or school not in district, one delegate for each twenty-five members or fraction over one half, will schools having less than twenty-five or even less than thirteen members have the right to one delegate?

Yes, and we base it on the principle pertaining to branches. Book of Rules, section 181, p. 114.

A resolution that it be the sense of the convention that schools and districts make a consistent effort to use the standardized system of reports and supplies was adopted.

The association was by motion requested to provide pictures for beginner and primary Quarterlies and for beginner and primary teachers' handwork.

J. A. Gunsolley was called to the chair and, following a vocal solo by Sister H. C. Burgess and the singing of number 96, the election of officers was taken up.

As per request of the morning session, the joint council of the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve in report submitted as nominations for superintendent G. R. Wells and Daniel Macgregor. The former received 170 votes, the latter 56, Brother Wells being declared elected.

For first assistant superintendent, Daniel Macgregor, D. J. Krahl, T. J. Elliott were nominated. Daniel Macgregor received 146 votes, D. J. Krahl 49, T. J. Elliott 8. Brother Macgregor was announced the choice.

For second assistant superintendent, as nominated, T. J. Elliott received 116 votes, D. J. Krahl 91, R. D. Weaver 5. Brother Elliott being the choice.

E. D. Moore received the unanimous vote of the convention for secretary.

For home department superintendent, Flo McNichols, nominated, received 104 votes, D. J. Krahl 2, F. F. Wipper 13, Maggie Macgregor 55. Sister McNichols receiving a majority over all others was declared the choice of the convention.

John Smith was unanimously chosen as treasurer.

For librarian, E. H. Fisher, H. O. Smith, Louise Palfrey Sheldon were nominated. E. H. Fisher received 208 votes, H. O. Smith 3, Sister Sheldon 11, the first named being the choice, as announced.

Heman C. Smith was selected to succeed himself as a member of the lessons committee.

Oscar Anderson was selected to succeed himself as one of the auditors.

As the revising committee R. S. Salyards, John Smith and Albert Carmichael were chosen.

R. W. Farrell was chosen to succeed himself as member of the Social Purity Board.

An appropriation of $100 was made for library work.

Number 99 was sung, and Heman C. Smith dismissed the meeting.

7.45 P. M.

G. R. Wells opened the meeting by announcing number 141, Zion's Praises. John Smith offered prayer. Number 83 was sung. The Lamoni Sunday school orchestra favored the assembly with a selection.

GERMANY

Speaking of the work in Germany, H. N. Hansen said: We have four Sunday schools in Germany, two having been recently organized. They have since the war labored under disadvantage, most of the men being away to the front. Out of a membership of one hundred in Germany, seventeen men are engaged in the war. One has been killed, five wounded. We have no literature for Sunday school work in Germany, but the work is doing well under the circumstances.

The Utah people have repeatedly endeavored to start a Sunday school in Hanover, but have not been allowed to do so. When our brethren waited upon the authorities they were told to fear no harm, since they knew the differences between the two churches, and that we would not be hindered in our work. A good many of the children attending our schools are of families not of the church.

The prospects at some places are quite favorable. A year ago prospects were as promising in Germany as I ever saw anywhere.

SCANDINAVIA

Peter Muceus, for fourteen years a missionary in that country, told of the work in Scandinavia: We have no Sunday school in either Scandinavia or Denmark. We had a good school north of Christiania but had to close because we had to give up our hall. We have a lot here, and hope soon to have a church building, the first on the continent. In Sweden we have four schools.

We have no literature for our work other than our mission paper and the Book of Mormon. If we had a textbook outlining a way for studying the Bible and our work it would be a big help to us.

Two verses of number 28 were sung.

SOUTH SEAS

H. W. Savage returned after six years in the South Sea Islands, said of the work there: Our people in the islands are well informed in our work. However, in these islands there are many dialects, and in these we can not labor without literature. We were able only to write in two of these dialects. We were blessed in our efforts to simplify the message to the people. The people receive the word gladly. We need textbooks in this mission for our Sunday school work.

Two verses of number 46 were sung.

PALESTINE

U. W. Greene said with reference to the work in Palestine: Immediately upon our arrival at Jerusalem we started a night school, getting together a few Arab boys. Our equipment was limited. We soon interested a few Jewish boys, and finally had more than we could handle.

When other religious workers saw our success they began to circulate stories against us. By this time we had a small Sunday school and Religio. Some who attended our meetings were threatened that unless they ceased to come to us they would lose their positions.

We were handicapped for want of money and equipment, and could not take advantage of opportunities as they presented themselves. We were asked to open a school in Lebanon, but could not do so. We went into the mountains and ministered personally to the people. Many marvelous instances of healing occurred under our hands. Many had asked baptism at my hands, when the war broke out. I then returned to Jerusalem. We had also brought about conditions in Jerusalem for successful work. Under the advice of the United States consul, however, we prepared to leave.

The superintendency as elected at the afternoon session spoke in turn briefly of their work in and for the society.

Minutes read and approved.

Number 19 was sung and G. R. Wells pronounced the benediction, thus bringing to a close perhaps the most inspirational convention ever held by the association.

General Conference

The Sixty-Second General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was called to order by President Elbert A. Smith, who announced number 158 of the Hymnal, which was sung with feeling. F. A. Smith then offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, it is with peculiar feelings of reverence to thee and a recognition of our own needs of the peculiar circumstances surrounding us at this time, that we come before thee at the General Conference. We have assembled at this time to do business in the interests of thy church, and with the need of reorganization to some extent, feeling, too, that we are somewhat depressed because of the fact that thy servant is not with us, we ask thee in Jesus' name that thou wilt let the influence of thy peace and thy Holy Spirit rest and abide upon this audience. That thou wilt give unto them wisdom; that thou wilt bless them with moderation, and give them the spirit of love and kindness, and of peace through these sessions. And O! Father, we pray that thou wilt exercise thy power and move with the power of thy hand in the interests of thy work at this time. And we petition for thy servant, that he may be speedily recovered and be with us.

And O heavenly Father, we pray that in all the work that is to be done thou wilt bless those who preside, those who shall take part in any part of the work, and may the Spirit of solemnity and of serious earnestness, devotion, and kindness be manifest all the way through. Take away from us every lightness. Plant within our hearts, we pray, the spirit of peace, and of forbearance, and of kindness one toward another, and grant, O gracious God, that the spirit of wisdom above all things may prevail in everything that shall come before us.

We ask now that thou wilt forgive all that is displeasing to thee. Let thy influence and power be freely felt among the delegates, ex-officios, and visitors, and everyone recognizing that thou art still with us, and that thy hand is overruling for good, and that thy power is still blessing thy church. In Christ's name we commend ourselves into thy hands. Amen.

J. A. Tanner read the twenty-third Psalm.

President Elbert A. Smith read the following telegram from President Frederick M. Smith:

WORCESTER, MASSACHUSETTS, April 5, 1915.

ELBERT A. SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Greeting to the Saints in Conference Assembled: I regret keenly my inability to be with you. I am gratified for your prayers and need them yet. I am in the Lord's hands. Let the work of the conference go on. May the Lord's Spirit be present to bless.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

President E. A. Smith addressed the assembly as follows:

It becomes my unhappy lot this morning to stand before you as the sole representative of the First Presidency present. During the year we have met with the loss of our beloved Prophet and leader, President Joseph Smith. Brother Frederick M. Smith and myself were privileged to stand at his bedside during the last moment of his life. It seemed an accident or an impulse that called us back to his side just at the moment so that we could be there; but we felt grateful to divine Providence that we as his associates and counselors could be there at that time.

We took up the work of the Presidency with the concurrence and the kind support of the Twelve and the Seventies (the latter represented by their presidents). We entered upon the work sustained by the thought that each had the implicit confidence and support and affection of the other. And I may say here that when we were reading the "Letter of instruction" and we came to the statement, If there shall exist jealousy or division or rivalry among the two remaining counselors, etc., we turned and smiled at each other, because the only rivalry under heaven we had ever known was the rivalry as to which was to have the privilege to prefer the other in any honor; and the only jealousy that we ever had was for the good name of this church, whose servants it is our ambition to be. But now, because of this seemingly unfortunate and untimely illness of Frederick M. Smith, I am required to call this sixty-second conference to order, and stand before you alone for the Presidency. But while I feel bowed down to the earth, personally, so far as the church is concerned it is no time for doubt, it is no time for wavering. It is a time for courage and devotion and faith.

Some one said since our President died that the church was like a sheep without a shepherd. Have we not learned to say, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want"? and to add, Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I shall fear no evil. I never felt more confident in this work than I do now. It is a time for courage, it is a time for faith and for devotion. We have had trouble. We shall have more trouble; but God will be with us.

The matter before us now is the organization of the conference. Who will you have to preside over this conference?

G. T. Griffiths, president of the Twelve, addressed the chair, was recognized, and said:

Chairman and Beloved Brethren: We have been permitted to come together under peculiar circumstances, and I am reminded to-day of the familiar voice that we have been accustomed to listen to for many, many years in our General Conferences. But that voice is silent to-day. We miss the presence of one who has been in attendance upon the General Conferences for fifty-four years, with the exception of one, that was the conference that was held at Saint Joseph, Missouri, in 1889.

I am now speaking of our late beloved Prophet and President of the Church of Jesus Christ on earth. I formed his acquaintance fifty years ago when but a small boy. It has been my good fortune to be a coworker with him nearly forty years in the Master's service. Twenty-eight years of that time it was as a member of the Quorum of Twelve. So you see that I have been very closely associated with him, and I want to say to you to-day that during those years of association with our beloved Prophet I learned to love him truly, to me and to him as a father and a true friend. I am glad and rejoice exceedingly to-day that I have been so fortunate as to be a colaborer with such an honorable man on earth, a true servant of Jesus Christ, a man like unto Job of old, a man of integrity. The longer I knew him the more I loved him. I have not time to tell all that could be said in relation to our association.

To-day the form that we loved so dearly and admired so much is wrapped in the arms of death, confined in a silent tomb, in the city of the dead, not so very far from here, awaiting the signal that will be given when the dead in Christ shall come forth. I do rejoice to-day that the spirit in that old tabernacle of clay and that will soon pass away to old Mother Earth, because it was earthly, that the heavenly man is to-day mingling with the spirits of the just, the good old prophets, patriarchs and apostles, and all worthy Saints of gone by ages in the paradise of God and his Christ.

And I am reminded now of those beautiful words of the grand apostle given on the Isle of Patmos: "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they shall henceforth rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." And I am confident of the fact that the godly example, the noble deeds and the good acts and the grand work that he performed will follow him and will ever be fresh in our memories.

Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to move that the honorable son of this grand man that has gone to his reward, whom the Lord has designated to succeed him in that holy office as President of the Melchisedec Priesthood and of the church, the Reorganized Church here on earth, and his worthy nephew, Elbert A. Smith, whom we all love and have implicit confidence in, preside over this conference.

Columbus Scott, senior president of the Seven Presidents of Seventy, obtained the floor and said:

I am in full accord with what the mover of the resolution before you has said. I will not take up your time in eulogizing particularly. I was personally acquainted with our former President of the church, and was intimately acquainted to quite an extent for years. I studied the man, but I studied his mission more. I love to study the mission of great men, and all men for the efforts they make for the forward movement at the head, for the battles they fight, and the victories they win through God. When I was a mere lad one time I was transported into the presence of this man and his two brothers, and the great, dominating element in their presence was that of peace, godly peace. When the telegram came announcing the father had passed away peacefully that afternoon at one o'clock, again the evidence of God's security and peace for his church came to your humble servant, assuring him that the Lord was still at the helm.

There's just one thought I would impress upon your minds concerning our former President. If you will look at his revelations, or those given through him, the work that he did, it was constructive, uplifting, without a jar, except the little jars that might have been made, now and then, by those of us who did not always just understand at the moment. It is a wonderful thought to me, this uplifting, up-building and constructive spirit that pervaded his character and his mission. No one can point to an incident where the church has ever suffered on his account. This should speak volumes in the fifty-four years of his faithful service. Being in accord, therefore, with what was presented by the mover of this motion, on behalf of the assembly in the church, I take pleasure in seconding the motion.

G. T. Griffiths stated the motion, which was assented to by unanimous rising vote.

President Elbert A. Smith requested that in the absence of President Frederick M. Smith some one be associated with him or with the Presidency in presiding over the conference. He suggested G. T. Griffiths as a logical man, in consideration of his calling, and added that J. A. Tanner, president of the Quorum of High Priests, or F. A. Smith, presiding evangelist, would either be satisfactory. G. T. Griffiths and F. A. Smith were chosen.

The Presidency were authorized to perfect the organization, determine nature and order of meeting, speakers, etc.

The chair announced as secretaries of the conference R. S. Salyards, with M. H. Siegfried and Zaide H. Salyards as assistants; stenographer Belle James, to choose assistants; Audentia Anderson in charge of the music, to choose assistants and organists; credentials committee Heman C. Smith, C. I. Carpenter, L. G. Holloway; ushers local and visiting deacons; press committee Charles Fry and J. F. Garver; administration committee T. W. Chatburn, M. M. Turpen, John Midgorden, to choose assistants. Order of meetings were announced: Prayer service 9 a. m., preaching 10.45, business 2 p. m., preaching 7.45, except when special meetings might be arranged.

Printed and additional report of credentials committee was approved, subject to correction.

Asked if districts have a right to appoint alternates to have place upon the conference floor in the absence of regulars, the chair stated that they have the right to appoint, but that place in the conference could be had only by action each year until the present rules be changed, if changed.

Ruth Lewis and Eunice Smith were announced as assistant stenographers; H. C. Burgess, Paul N. Craig, F. A. Russell assistant choristers; Edith Yarrington and Gracia Nicholson organists.

Number 104 was sung and G. T. Griffiths pronounced the benediction.

2 P. M.

With President Elbert A. Smith in charge, number 131 was sung. Minutes read and approved. Additional report of credentials committee approved.

Sister M. P. Tilton was announced as assistant chorister, Amy Vredenburg and Nettie Paulson assistant organists.

The church secretary, R. S. Salyards, submitted a report having to do chiefly with clergy rates, routine work of the General Conference, etc. This report included:

The work includes general correspondence with members and nonmembers in furnishing information, keeping of minutes, records, arrangements with passenger associations and local railroads to facilitate issue of clergy credentials and other railroad rates, furnishing information to church and secular press, proofreading, issuing of licenses to general church officers, certificates of appointment, of indorsement, and work connected with membership of general committee. It may be stated in general that increasing requests for information, from private parties and from publishers, indicate an increasing interest in the true latter-day work. . . . The General Conference of 1914 made appointment as follows: Of the Twelve, 12; evangelical ministers, 17; high priests, 38; of the Seventy, 128; of the elders, 115; of the priests, 26; total, 336. To these, 10 new appointments were added, 5 released, and 4 transferred during the year.

Boundary Lines of Missions, Stakes, and Districts.—A record of such boundaries is complete and on file in this office, for the information of all concerned.

The recorder reported:

The books of this office were held open until well into the month of January, when it became necessary to close them in order to have the annual report ready within the time set by the First Presidency. After recording all reports received up to the time of closing the books we find the following facts revealed therein:

Our total last year was 71,702, to which has been added by baptism 2,635; by certificates of transfer 1,619; with a loss by certificates of transfer of 1,534; by expulsion 82, and by death 441, giving us a net gain of 2,197, and a present enrollment of 73,899.

Of the baptisms 2,300 were in the United States, and 335 foreign. Of the present number, 62,427 are in the United States, and 11,472 foreign. The reports further show, 5,064 holding the various orders of the ministry, including the Aaronic priesthood, 280 ordinations, 361 marriages; 29,889 absent from the branches, and 1,451 children blessed.

I regret the necessity of calling attention to the fact that some district clerks are not sending their reports in as promptly as it would seem they should. Up to the closing of the books, no reports had been received during the year from the following districts and branches: London, and Toronto districts, Ontario; London District, England; Society Islands; Northern California District; Idaho, and Kewanee districts, Independence Stake; Central Nebraska, New York, Ohio, Portland, Southwestern Texas, and Utah districts; Jerusalem, Palestine, Dunedin, New Zealand, Bisbee, Arizona, and Eros, Louisiana, branches. Since closing the books, however, reports have been received from London, Toronto, Northern California districts, Independence Stake for 1913. New York, and Southwestern Texas districts, and Bisbee, Arizona, Branch, as well as from a number of other districts which had already reported during the year. The Kewanee District has been changing its system of records and has held the reports with approval of this office.

During the year 28 new branches have been added to the records: Australia: New South Wales District, Anna Bay, 13 members; Canada: Chatham District, Glen Rae 20; Alberta District, Edmonton 24, Innisfree 9, Calgary 11; Germany: Brunswick 21, Hanover 26; Alabama: Florida District, Sunlight 42; Arizona: Unorganized territory, Phoenix 21; Colorado: Eastern District, Holyoke 17; Illinois: Southeastern District, Skillet-Fork 13; Iowa: Des Moines District, Perry 49; Nevada 36; Pottawattamie District, Loveland 21; Kansas: Unorganized territory, Wichita 53; Maine: Western District, Sargentville 19; Michigan: Central District, McIvor 62; Sage 27; Alma 18; Missouri: Saint Louis District, Brentwood 31, Maryland Heights 19; Southern District, Cooter 34, Mill Spring 30; Nebraska: Unorganized territory, Pleasant View 44; Oklahoma: Eastern District, Wagoner 29; Texas: Central District, Houston Heights 22; West Virginia: Pittsburgh District, Glen Easton 8; West Virginia District, Girta 13. The organization of other branches has been reported to us by those officiating, and space has been allotted to them on the books, but no statistical reports received as yet.

Of the 437 branches reporting during the year, 270 show net gains in their enrollment; 142 show net losses, and 25 have had an equal number of gains and losses, so their total numbers stand as last year.

On account of so much territory being unreported, an attempt at comparative statistics would be not only disappointing, but actually misleading, so we leave that for a The reports received have shown much activity, resulting in very satisfactory increases in nearly all the territory cov-future time when the reports may be more nearly up to date. Reports are arriving nearly every day now, which if they could have been sent in early enough to have been recorded, would have no doubt given us the best year yet, so far as report is concerned.

Our department has been affected by the general depression which has been felt everywhere, but we look forward and crease the efficiency and the value of the office to the church. hope for a change in conditions which will enable us to in-

Your fellow servant,

C. I. CARPENTER.

The church historian reported in part as follows:

Not since the eventful year of 1860 has there occurred an event fraught with such grave possibilities to the church as one which happened at Independence, Missouri, in the closing days of 1914.

On December 10, President Joseph Smith passed from earth life into the activities of another existence, and thousands of minds were filled with anticipations of what it would mean to the church, and thousands of hearts were pulsating with anxious solicitude regarding the result, as in poetic language they inquired: "Watchman, what of the night?"

The membership of the church, even those grown gray in service, had never met an emergency like this, for Joseph Smith had presided for fifty-four years. By agreement of the remaining members of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and Presidents of Seventy, representatives of the quorums named by President Smith in his letter of instruction issued a few years ago, arrangements were made for each officer to continue to discharge the functions of his office as before until the Annual Conference of 1915, when a more permanent adjustment would be in order.

Preceding President Smith by only a few months, another veteran left the ranks of the church militant, in the person of Apostle John H. Lake, who departed this life at Kirtland, Ohio, March 6, 1914. He had been a member of the church fifty-four years; a deacon, two years; an elder, eight years; a seventy, two years; served in the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, twenty-nine years; and as an evangelical minister about twelve years. . . .

Under the supervision of the First Presidency and under the direct charge of the Quorum of Twelve and others, the missionary work has prospered though the plans for its prosecution have been seriously interfered with by the recall of Elder Gomer T. Griffiths from Australia on account of critical sickness of his wife, and the return of Elder Ulysses W. Greene from Palestine on account of conditions brought about by the perils of the great European war. . . .

The following periodicals are issued under the auspices of this board (Publication): SAINTS' HERALD, Journal of History, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Hope, Stepping Stones, Religio and Sunday School Quarterlies, from Lamoni, Iowa. Zion's Ensign from Independence, Missouri; the Gospel Standard from Rozelle, Australia, and Sandhedens Banner from Porsgrund, Norway. A large number of books, pamphlets, and tracts are also issued by these publishing houses, especially those at Lamoni and Independence.

The office at Lamoni does a large amount of custom work, and operates an electric light and power plant, furnishing light and power in Lamoni and neighboring towns. It also operates an ice plant, supplying the local market and shipping some to other markets. . . .

These agencies (press and pulpit) occupy about the same attitude towards the church as in past years. Though there are some spiteful and criminating attacks made upon the church, the general tendency upon the part of our opponents is to be more respectful and courteous. With a very few disreputable and dishonorable exceptions, the press comments upon the death of our late President Joseph Smith have been fair and truthful, and some have given glowing tributes to his memory.

These people (Indians) are still active in their efforts, both in demanding proper recognition of the merit and character of many excellent and cultured people among them, and in their efforts to benefit and elevate their race. They are seeking not only the welfare of their own race, but the elevation of humanity, with especial reference to the Government in their native land. The Quarterly Journal of the Society of American Indians is still issued regularly, and in educational, moral, intellectual, and literary sense is of high character.

By action of General Conference the committee to look after this feature (museum, or historical relics) was abolished, and it was made a function of this department. Not much has been done in this line. We have not had the time to classify and catalogue the material, but propose to do so as soon as our plans are matured and opportunity offers.

The General Historian wishes to express appreciation for the excellent efforts of many of the local historians, who without hope of honor or substantial reward, and sometimes keenly sensitive of the lack of proper appreciation and recognition, have shown their love and devotion to the work of preserving an honest record of passing events. Their work will be appreciated in future years and their reward is sure.

The correspondence is growing and through this means we have been enabled to correct many errors and give much information regarding the history of the church. The most important item is perhaps the writing of an eight-thousand word historical article for an Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics to be published in Scotland under the editorial supervision of Doctor Hastings.

The Journal of History continues to be the chief medium of gaining access to the historical world, and getting in touch with the best writers.

The Historian, through the earnest efforts of President Joseph Smith, had opportunity during the year to carry out more fully the divine injunction to "travel many times from place to place, and from church to church, that he may the more easily obtain knowledge—preaching and expounding, writing, copying, selecting, and obtaining all things which shall be for the good of the church, and for the rising generations, that shall grow up on the land of Zion, to possess it from generation to generation, for ever and ever."

In pursuance of this object, several of the larger libraries of the East were visited and much research work done, resulting in the accumulation of much valuable data, the importance of which will appear in due time. In all this work he received the valuable cooperation of his wife.

The experience of the year has impressed more seriously than ever before the wisdom of the divine injunction quoted above; but it can not be successfully prosecuted until provision is made for more assistance in the office.

No further progress has been made in the manuscript for volume five of Church History. While my strength holds out I wish to serve the church in this capacity, or elsewhere, as God and his people may decree.

Respectfully submitted,
HEMAN C. SMITH.

The physician to the church reported, including the following:

Allowing for the concurrences at last General Conference as an exception, my experience as Physician to the church has been unmarked by any unusual feature during the year. I have answered all calls by mail and at office that have been made, to the best of my ability, and the results, so far as I have been able to judge, have been quite encouraging.

I have never yet learned the religious or medical secret by which I can remain conscientious and yet please all people. I do not even know that I have fully pleased God, but I have earnestly—oh, so earnestly, tried to, above all other things, and I welcome his judgment upon the efforts, feeble as it has been.

Believing that there are others who would be more acceptable to the majority of the body than myself, and that I have of late been formally sustained in the office only because of a "revelation" authorized my being placed in it at the first, I have, for this and other reasons, which need not be mentioned, decided to relieve the situation for you by submitting my resignation, which I do hereby.

If God still desires my services as a physician to his people, my dropping the official title of "Church Physician" will not in any wise interfere, for I shall remain as fully his servant and the servant of the people—whether they be in or out of the church—as ever. All will be as welcome as ever, regardless of remuneration. I received no ceremonial ordination to the office, hence I surrender nothing but what your vote conferred, viz, the official title and whatever honor and responsibility attached thereto. I have appreciated these and my thanks are here expressed to all who honestly helped to confer and continue them; but I am convinced that the divine blessing attaches to the work done (if with a pure motive) rather than to the office under which it is done in this case, and that is of first importance to me.

Feeling justified, therefore, in what I here do, I hope to continue to work while I live, in the same or any other sphere divinely opened to me, for Christ and mankind, in such a way that the church and humanity will receive all the good intended by my service through such channels. The church is all it ever has been to me, and did I not think I could serve it and mankind better by this course, I certainly would not pursue it. With love to you all and a prayer for the church's continued well-being, I remain, as ever,

Yours in the covenant,
JOSEPH LUFF.

The Library Commission reported:

In taking up the work we found that no record had been kept by the commission of its transactions or proceedings, other than that which could be obtained by looking up the published reports in the General Conference Minutes. This will explain to future secretaries why the record begins with 1914.

The only printed matter the commission had for distribution was a pamphlet published in 1908. The library board of the Lamoni Stake publishes an excellent, practical leaflet on local and district work which we have been using in connection with the commission's leaflet until we could gain sufficient acquaintance with local conditions to enable us to ascertain if anything else were needed, and if so, what it should be.

We have been supplying requests for the names of good books with a small list that we got up and arranged under classified heads, making typewritten copies. We are at work upon a catalogue of books which it is hoped may be published in the near future. Notice will be given through the church papers when it is ready. . . .

Bearing in mind that some exceptions are to be made, that we speak of the general condition, we have to report that very little has been done or is being done in library work. Districts and locals are organized; that is, they have library officers, or library boards, but there is little library activity. In many instances they go on electing these officers and do not know what they are for.

A practice that militates against library work in locals and districts is the changing of members on the boards. The office calls for knowledge and experience which it takes time to obtain, and changes should not be made so frequently that the benefit of this preparation is lost, and "green" members are kept constantly on the boards. . . .

The district circulating library does not seem to meet with much favor. In a number of instances, after the plan has been tried for a while, it is abandoned, and the books are distributed among the local libraries. We believe that the local library is generally preferred to the circulating library, and it seems that where they have the one, they can not support the other, as a rule. In some cases, where the circumstances suggested such a course, as where we receive inquiries saying, "Everyone has read the books we have, and we wish to dispose of them (perhaps to make room for others); what shall we do with them?" we have advised that a circulating library be started with books that have served their period of usefulness in the local libraries.

In some localities they say they have all they can do to meet local expenses and contribute to the general calls, and there is nothing for library making.

The first matter that claimed our attention this year was that of a library for the Sanitarium. The commission voted an appropriation of one hundred dollars for this purpose. A list of professional books were obtained. . . . and a bookcase for them was bought, costing in all $74.33. The Sanitarium still needs, however, books of a general literary character, good fiction, poetry, biography, travel, etc., for convalescent patients and for the nurses when they wish to rest the mind as well as the body. We have left, of the one hundred dollars appropriated, $25.67, which will be used in enlarging the library, but this small amount will not go far, for before other books can be accommodated, new bookcase sections will have to be purchased.

Believing that no class of literature is more wholesome and helpful for the young than the biography of good and useful men and women, we have encouraged the publication of "Beatrice Witherspoon" by calling the attention of district and local librarians to it. We are informed that it has been decided to publish the book, and we trust that the cause of good literature for the young will be encouraged and the book have the sale that it merits. . . .

We believe that the mission of our library organization is not primarily to deal with general literature, but with the making of intelligent Latter Day Saints who shall be prepared to creditably represent the latter-day message to the world, and to grapple with the peculiar problems which we as a people have to consider. . . .

The object of the commission is to harness the intellectual forces with the spiritual and thus increase the total pulling strength, but money is an important factor in carrying on our work. We enter upon another year with a balance of $120.20. We spent last year $177.20, and the outlook is that we shall need to spend as much the coming year, and more. . . .

Very sincerely,

LOUISE PALFREY SHELDON.

E. A. Blakeslee, treasurer of the Library Commission, reported total receipts $297.40, expenditures $177.20, balance $120.20.

Heman C. Smith, church librarian, reported on books acquired by purchase and donation, with total cost receipts $168.45, expenditures $114.20, balance $54.25.

Reports were submitted by the following ministers in charge: J. A. Gillen, J. W. Rushton, P. M. Hanson, R. C. Russell, J. E. Kelley, W. H. Greenwood, H. N. Hansen, J. F. Curtis, U. W. Greene, W. M. Aylor, Peter Anderson, F. M. Sheehy, J. Charles May.

The Trustees of the Children's Home reported. It was moved that Richard Bullard be elected to succeed himself as one of the trustees. A substitute prevailed referring the nominating to the Order of Bishops.

The report of the Trustees of the Children's Home was in part as follows:

The children of the home of school age have attended school in the public schools of Lamoni.

Since the home was started there have been 33 applications for children. Twelve have been placed in homes, and 3 of these have been returned.

The number of children in the home on this date is 22; 11 girls and 11 boys, ages from 2 years to 17 years.

One of the Articles of Incorporation prohibits the association accumulating a debt or executing a lien of any kind on any property of the association.

The expense of the home is kept up mainly by donations. . . .

The summary report of the treasurer of the Children's Home, as reported by the secretary, showed: Receipts, $4,897.51, less $355.64, on hand January 1, 1914, and expenditures $4,897.51, less $135.24, on hand January 1, 1915, with net assets of $15,056.42, as follows:

Approved by the Board of Trustees, March 18, 1915.

OSCAR ANDERSON, Secretary.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College submitted as their report to the conference the reports of S. A. Burgess, college president and treasurer of the board, to the board, which were extensive and in detail. The first was in part as follows:

We should emphasize that every possible effort is being made to see that Graceland retains satisfactory credits. Application has been made on behalf of the College Preparatory Department to the State Department of Education, and we have no fears but that we shall receive a favorable answer. Our students are readily accepted at the State Universities of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, and elsewhere. The Normal Department will await special credit until such time as we have students specifically designed to graduate.

The new Lamoni High School building was seriously damaged by fire on the morning of November 8. With the consent of the executive committee we extended to them an invitation to use the facilities of the college building, which was accepted. . . .

Owing to Zion's Religio-Literary Society of Lamoni changing their meeting night from Friday to Sunday evening, it was deemed inadvisable to continue either the vesper service or the study hour on Sunday. The president of Lamoni Stake and the president of the college arranged for the young people's prayer meetings to be held jointly at the studio in town for the present, on all except the last Wednesday evening of each month. This went into effect the first of January. Some excellent prayer meetings were held at the college chapel prior to that time. The college students and faculty have taken a great interest in the prayer meetings, since they have been moved to town. The meetings are under the direction of the branch president.

These two elements have affected the opportunity for the real inspirational services at the college, but we are pleased to report as above that the interest has not seriously decreased, as a large part of the attendance at the young people's prayer meetings are the college young people, and there always has been a good attendance at the union prayer meetings once a month in the church.

The chapel services have continued very much on the same plan as previously. After the high school moved to the college the meetings were arranged for jointly between Superintendent Neveln and the president of the college. Slides, fifty to the set, have been secured from the State University of Iowa, to be used in the chapel on four occasions so far.

The attendance at the college has been less than for the previous year. The financial stringency growing out of the war has been one reason. This has also meant that several of the students now attending have had to defer their payments of tuition and in some instances their board, but with the expectation of taking it up before the end of the school year. We have been confronted with the necessity of letting some students come on this plan, or not come at all. Yet the payment is secure finally, and we deemed it better both for the students and for the college, that their attendance should be encouraged now.

If Graceland could be run on a strictly cash basis, it would help it financially to a limited extent. But to do this we would have to close her doors to all except those who can afford to pay their way, and this we are not prepared to do. It means a special effort to accommodate those who are in need of help to secure their school or college work. On this account the Industrial Department has been continued as heretofore, under the direction of Mr. Berve. The aim has been to give the preference to those students the most in need of help. It is quite possible that it costs a little more to do the work with student help than it would to hire outside help. But if we did the latter it would mean that we would either have to carry many more students without payment, or else refuse to them the right to come at all. We are so thoroughly convinced of the advisability of continuing the Industrial Department that it is with serious regret that we can not accommodate all who apply, but only a small part, as we have to give the preference to those who apply first, who are the most worthy and the most in need.

The enrollment for the current year is as follows: Collegiate, 24; Preparatory, 56; Bookkeeping, 19; Stenography, 23; Piano, 41; Vocal, 11; Oratory, 26; special, 8; total, 208; duplicates, 39; net, 169. . . .

Student self-government was initiated the last of April, 1914, and was tried with no marked success to the end of the school year. A number of amendments were suggested, and finally a system was evolved. . . . This system permits of some supervision by the deans, but requires and permits the cooperation of a committee elected by the students who handle the actual administration.

As a general rule there have been but few advanced college students at Graceland of late years. In fact, the past three years there have been no applications for a degree. We are frank to state that we do not believe that the college is at present, or has been, in a shape to give the advanced work successfully. But it is in a position to give the first and second year in a wholly acceptable manner. These two years always differ from the third and fourth years of college and university work, and do not require such elaborate equipment. Two years work in college is required by most professional schools. Two years work must be done in a university, or college before a major is selected. The position of a junior college is well recognized in educational circles. . . .

The college is now placed as a junior college, and we trust as such that its place may be more than justified. We can not help but hope for that day when the church will support and see the need of supplying a full college course, but we consider it preferable at present to attempt no more than we can do justice.

If additional means were secured, we are very decided in our own opinion that such means should be used after meeting the most necessary running expenses, which should be kept to the lowest possible point, in reducing the present indebtedness. We should continue to reduce the debt till it is paid. When this is done, the next problem before us will be to strengthen in every way possible the departments we have already established and secure additional facilities, so far as it can be done without going into debt. Later, and probably after some years, would come the problem of enlarging so as to handle justly a larger amount of work, but this should not be done until there is the need and demand from the church such as to warrant it. . . .

Our present faculty can readily handle at least twice the number of students in preparatory work and the first two years of college that we have at present, and this without additional expense, or at least so slight an additional expense as not to require consideration. We should not consider ourselves justified in urging students to come to Graceland if we did not believe that the work can be given to them as well here as elsewhere. In fact, we know that in many instances it can be better taken care of here than elsewhere. But we do urge an increased attendance, since we consider that such would mean not only additional incentive to the student body, but also almost clear gain to the college financially. . . .

We have under consideration the advisability of recommending a slight increase in our charges for tuition, in order that those receiving the benefit should pay a somewhat larger percentage of cost of their education, though at present they pay nearly one half, while in a large percentage of colleges and universities the amount would often run as low as one third and one sixth of the cost, the balance being met by endowment. . . .

In the Library, N. Ray Carmichael has continued to look after the work very carefully without other assistants. There have been some valuable additions to the Library by way of donation or loans. . . . The additions during the latter half of 1914 were small. The gain in volumes for the year have been 132, from number 8,463 to 8,595, but a total value of a little over $200. . . .

There has been very little change in the indebtedness for July 1, 1914, over July 1, 1913. This is accounted for in the greater part by the support received by the college, and also in the devoted way in which all helped in keeping down expenditures. . . .

For the current college year the receipts have been decidedly less than a year ago. First the Sunday school the previous year donated $500 to help worthy students. J. W. Wight raised $1,800. The Lamoni Branch gave $500 additional. Helen M. Merrit of Red Oak willed the college $500. Mrs. L. A. Schmutz willed the college $292.33. Besides this there has been a falling off in the endowments and College day collections, the greater part of the latter were received by the Presiding Bishop. . . .

It is evident that to have a budget for the college alone will hardly prove fully satisfactory, because, in fairness, its needs should be considered in connection with the needs and necessities of the other various church institutions.

It will be also observed that with $4,500 for the calendar year, the college could meet its annual deficits and even reduce its indebtedness. We are firmly of the opinion that the utmost economy must be practiced until the debt is greatly reduced and finally paid, and when paid should be kept paid. . . .

Very little has been bought during the past year, and only those things which were most necessary. A policy of the most rigorous economy has been followed. There are still some repairs needed for the building, and this must be taken into consideration on account of our policy of depreciation.

The financial report of the college included the following:

It will be noted also, that there is a decrease of present worth as compared with January 1, 1914, of $715.26. This is not surprising, as this is proving to be one of the hardest years of the college. The endowments have fallen off greatly, because many have written that they would pay it into the church, since the church was taking charge of the finances.

The increase of indebtedness as compared with January 1, 1914, is:

Accounts payable, principally in Lamoni .....	$ 2,281 79
Interest on bills payable .....	225 42
Due the church .....	929 14

Total .....	$ 3,436 35
Decreased in bills payable .....	$ 1,560 09

Net increase .....	$ 1,876 26
--------------------	-------------

The amount due the church was at a low point January 1, 1914, having decreased $400.00 from July 1, 1913. Between January 1 and March 1, 1914, the college received $564.00 from the Bishop, of which $64.00 was for tuition of children in the Children's Home. In the same period this year the college received $1,000 to pay on accounts in Lamoni, and in March $1,180 to apply on bills payable.

Of this $3,379.70 was represented by endowments and offerings. This means that in the last twenty-one months the college has received $2,680.00 from the general church. The larger part of this is for the year March 10, 1914, to March 10, 1915.

It will be noted that the present worth has increased $1,969.55 since July 1, 1914. However, it must be remembered that this is the most favorable time of the year to take an inventory, since we have received much of our tuition or had it charged. And on the other hand we have paid but three months' salaries. It may be remarked that in the student ledger account much has been collected on account for this year during the past two months.

BUDGET

The matter of budget must be represented by averages as near as we are able to calculate the expenses and amounts as follows:

For salaries of fifteen instructors and helpers.....	$ 8,400 00
Fuel, and labor at heating plant .....	1,300 00
Insurance .....	130 00
Care of library .....	160 00
Advertising college work and properly presenting the institution .....	200 00

Bookkeeper .....	160 00
Stenographers .....	300 00
Interest for the year .....	1,440 00
Electric light expense, water and expense .....	700 00
Depreciation of real estate, which should be be spent to keep up the building .....	1,000 00
Depreciation of furniture and other personalities .....	600 00

This is made by tuition .....	$ 4,000 00
Offerings and endowments, and gifts and furnishings .....	4,500 00
Hotel, farm and book office .....	750 00

Which is merely another way of saying, that the college should have approximately $9,500 from offerings and endowments and gifts and furnishings and from the general church. We believe it is possible to run inside of these figures, but in safety, we ought not to figure lower for the present. This means that if we receive $4,000 or $5,000 by private donations, that we should have to receive a corresponding amount from the church to keep even. But we hope for the time, that we can gradually reduce our indebtedness.

It will be noted that this is practically the same result as is set forth in the report of the Presiding Bishopric to the General Conference, 1914 (General Conference Minutes, page 1873). We have run it inside of this the past two years by neglecting repairs needed to the buildings.

From January 1 to March 11, 1915, we note that additional accounts were turned in for the previous year amounting to seven hundred and forty-five dollars ($745). We have now gone over our accounts so carefully that we have a complete list. The accounts for the two months total one thousand dollars ($1,000) additional. On this we have paid $1,400, and on interest over $300, and through the help of Bishop Kelley on our bills $1,000. This has, however, meant an increased indebtedness to the Bishop for the church of $2,180.

This means over January 1, 1915:

Increase accounts payable .....	$ 344 00
Increase E. L. Kelley for the church .....	2,180 00

Decrease bills payable .....	$1,000
Decrease interest .....	60

$1,060

Net increase of indebtedness .....	$ 1,464 00
------------------------------------	-------------

It should be noted that in fact, there is a decrease of accounts payable of $400. In addition to this the cash on hand March 11 is $400 more than on January 1, but we have the March salaries to pay on the 15th which means the total indebtedness at this time, March 1, 1915, is:

Accounts payable .....	$ 7,507 85
Bills payable .....	22,737 15
Interest earned to March 1 .....	724 18
E. L. Kelley for the church .....	$ 6,553 23

The Independence Sanitarium trustees reported:

During the year Doctor G. Leonard Harrington has had charge of the medical side of the Sanitarium, and Lester H. Haas the business department. . . . We have tried to keep in as close touch with the working of the institution as possible for men who have other duties to perform. Business manager resigned January 14, 1915, but extended his service till a new manager was obtained. W. H. Callin was selected and since has served the institution as its business manager.

The Society of Patronesses of the Sanitarium have been faithful and diligent workers in behalf of the institution, as their report to the board indicates. Balance on hand March 6, 1914, $2.91; receipts to March 1, 1915, $107.07; total, $109.98. Paid out, $76.51. Present membership, 66.

A summary of the physician's report indicates development in the work under his jurisdiction. "Arrangements have been under way for the establishing of a visiting nurse department in the Sanitarium. . . . It is a known fact that people are taken from the environment that has directly caused their disease to a hospital where they have recovered, then they have returned home—a disease-producing place—to be again made sick. To correct the conditions at home, to teach the people how to keep well, is in our opinion one of the first duties of the Sanitarium."

Report of the superintendent of nurses to Doctor Harrington throws light upon the details of the work in that department, which is a very important part of the work in making the Sanitarium a success.

The business manager's report is quite encouraging along the financial lines. . . .

During the year there were 383 patients admitted, an increase of 70 over the preceding year.

Earnings of the institution, $19,100.19, as compared with $16,750.89 for 1913. The accounts of McDavitt Drug Company, $213.60, and Pendleton and Gentry Drug Company, $294.55 that existed last year and were paid under his administration which would give us a gain of $323.23 instead of loss of $184.92 as per balance sheet. Also the salary of Doctor Messenger of $913.00 which was due him when he was dismissed was paid this year, which would make quite a consideration of salary expenses if deducted from this year and applied on last year's account where it belongs.

The financial statement of the Sanitarium trustees, too extended for this report, showed net assets of $52,572.58, with a loss for the year of $184.92.

The trustees of the United Order of Enoch reported:

This our annual report does not take on the proportion that some had anticipated it would by this time, but the society has grown slowly and we trust that there will not be any necessity for taking back steps, but a steady forward move that will demonstrate its power for good.

During the year we have lost two members by death, Sister Mabel Holdworth and President Joseph Smith. Present membership is 178, a net gain of fifteen during the past year. The treasurer's report indicates what has been done along the financial line, which we submit in its entirety.

Our departments in the Autumn Leaves, HERALD, and Ensign have been creditably maintained by Sisters Louise Palfrey Sheldon, Callie B. Stebbins and Maude Mills, respectively. Herein the auxiliary reaches more than its membership, the excellent quality of the work presented being open to all readers of these publications.

We have enjoyed and appreciated the assistance and support of some of the missionary force this year, and are grateful, indeed, for the general manifestation of increased interest in our work.

Report of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, by its president, included the following:

The society as a whole has about held its own in membership and work. There have been some new organizations, both in locals and districts, and some locals have given up the work. In some localities the membership has increased, while in others it has fallen off some, leaving the present number slightly larger than last year.

The Temperance Department was provided for at last convention and bids fair to become one of the powerful agencies for good. A number of districts and locals have fallen in line with the idea, and report that the indications are favorable and encouraging.

In the matter of field work, not so much has been undertaken in the way of appointing local field workers, for the reason that the general authorities have felt that there were local workers either among the missionaries or the brethren or sisters residing in the various districts and localities that could care for the work of the Religio. I refer to the general authorities of the church, particularly those in charge of missionary work. Hence the matter has been largely left to the local authorities of the Religio to arrange for the special work at the reunions and elsewhere. Just how satisfactory this may be in time can not be told now, but it is hoped that it will prove the wiser thing to do. A number of the general officers of the society have spent more or less time in the field, with varying degrees of success.

The president reports that he spent about three weeks in the North, Michigan and Wisconsin, and seven weeks in the South, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi. His time was divided, however, among the college, Sunday school, and the Religio. This was the first time that any of the general officers of the Religio have made a trip into the South, and the conditions were found to be such that great need is felt by the people of the South for help and instruction in the auxiliary work. They are very ready to receive instruction and suggestions. They are earnest and sincere in their efforts to live the law of the gospel, and to avail themselves of the help of the different departments of church work, but efforts should be made to follow up the work from year to year for some time to come to bring the work up to where it should be, and to where it may be. The thing needed there, as well as elsewhere, is leaders—leaders whose hearts are in the work, who will endure disappointment and discouragements at times, but who will become one of them in their conditions in life and make himself or herself a true friend to those in need. Leaders of this kind can accomplish much good. . . .

We feel quite satisfied in a general way with the work of the year and with present conditions, but one thing is evident, and that is, that if the society is to continue to grow, in fact, if the work of the auxiliaries is to develop and expand to meet the need of changing conditions and the growth and development of the church, it must needs be that there be some one or ones who will make the auxiliary work their business. They will not develop of themselves. The growth of the past has been healthy from infancy to the adolescent period, but now is the time when training and guiding must be more thoroughly and more carefully done.

As evidence of the fact that the growing demands are not being met, let us reflect that in some districts, organizations are being formed independently of the Religio for the purpose of carrying on the literature distribution. And societies for the purpose of looking after the social welfare and the industrial interests, and the amusement feature, in the lives of our young people. All these could be attended to under the auspices of the Religio, did some one or more persons make it their business. But with executive officers in every department who are compelled to hustle for a maintenance of themselves and families under the present high cost of living, there can be but little hope that conditions will be any better.

Respectfully submitted,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

The Social Purity Board reported:

As chairman of the Social Purity Board elected jointly by the conference, the General Sunday School Association, and the General Religio Society, we desire to submit the following brief report of the year's work:

As hitherto, the board has felt to move cautiously into a field in which a world of good may be done by wise and consistent effort, but in which an equal amount of harm may follow hasty, injudicious, and unwise action. Answering what we felt was a general demand from among the people for information and direction, some twenty of the general ministry who have manifested an interest in the purity movement and who gave evidence of a willingness to make special preparation for the needs of purity instruction, were selected in various parts of the mission field, and asked to cooperate with the board. Besides those appointed by the board there doubtless have been many others who have given the subject of purity special attention in their ministerial labors, and all ministers of the gospel are recognized as workers for the causes of purity. Their efforts, also are appreciated, though not included in this report.

The reports of the twenty who were cooperating with the board show about one hundred public lectures, addresses, and sermons in which an aggregate of over six thousand people were reached. Nearly all report that they find their general preaching "seasoned" with best of purity ideas and ideals, that they enjoy a marked degree of the Spirit of God in their purity efforts, and that they feel more and more the need of careful personal preparation if their efforts shall always do the good they desire, and never any harm.

The Saints in general have received the instruction provided in lectures and in the sale of the purity books recommended by the board in a most kindly spirit and in many cases eagerly. We believe the Saints are coming to realize that only as they live on the highest plane of purity of life can they expect to enjoy the fullest measure of the Spirit of God.

One of the first essentials of a pure life is a knowledge of life—pure, true, and undefiled. This should be available to all who are willing to be instructed and who would become the sons and daughters of God. On every hand testimony is borne that the most prolific source of the vices undermining society and sapping the vital forces of humanity is ignorance.

The great educational problem is that of presenting the sacred truths of generation and the responsibility of parenthood together with the serious nature of the vices and excesses that are extant in the world in a plain, comprehensive, and wholly sacred manner to children, youth, and mature young men and women. Obviously, the most logical and effective teachers are our parents of to-day; but in most cases parents feel the sad need of instruction themselves, providing not only the facts, but these in terms which are appropriate to the occasion. To this end we have urged the sale and distribution of the best books to be purchased and the qualification of men of the ministry and others to safely undertake the education of the membership. The efforts of the ministry are enumerated above. The Herald Publishing House reports the sale of a total of 1,200 purity books, recommended by the board, indicating the extent to which our people desire to inform themselves.

The committee on Saints' Homes at Lamoni, Iowa, reported:

Since last reporting, several changes which were almost compulsory have been made while conducting the homes at Lamoni, as have some changes which are regarded as properly economic in their nature.

For a number of years these homes have needed many improvements, most of which have been neglected, because of the absence of money with which to work. Among these improvements are the overhauling and adding to the heating plants, both at Liberty Home and at the Saints' Home; the painting of the main buildings at both homes, and of the out-buildings of the farm. The barn at Liberty Home was in such condition that stock could not be kept in comfort and at a profit. The farm buildings still need very much rearranging and repairing. Fences are needed almost over the entire farm. The brick and cement work at the Saints' Home was in bad condition, and there was a crying need for walks at Liberty Home.

Beginning with the most insistent needs, the committee in the early summer started to make such improvements as it could finance. First, the repairs which were absolutely necessary to the cement and brick work at the Saints' Home were made and some walks were built at Liberty Home. After this the following were accomplished in the order named:

Cream separators were put in at the homes; a fine herd of foundation stock for dairy purposes was purchased and placed on the farm, with the purpose in mind of disposing of the present herd and building up a herd of profitable dairy cattle; the painting of Liberty Home buildings was accomplished; improving the barn at Liberty Home by putting in cement floors and rearranging the interior to some extent was then undertaken; a very small amount of fencing was done where the old fence was entirely useless, and with the repairs and additions to the heating plant at Liberty Home the improvements of the year were completed. This leaves much more for the committee to do the coming year, which should be done in order to make our homes a credit to the church, and also to make them more nearly self-sustaining than they now are.

In order to help put ourselves more upon this self-supporting basis, the committee is at present considering the advisability of putting in a home canning factory, thereby to enable us to preserve fruits and vegetables for the home tables, and this will also insure safety from adulteration and insatiation should there be any such in these lines of trade.

Laundry work at each of the homes is at present a very burdensome piece of work, and the committee is of the opinion that some money should be spent equipping a laundry room to take care of this work in a more economical and satisfactory manner, but it should not be attempted until some other matters are first accomplished.

The spillway from the dam at the Home Pond, as it is known, needs either some extensive repairs or it should be discarded and a new one built, for several reasons, among them being the fact that with the present arrangement there are many acres of the home farm which are made difficult of access. This can be remedied by bridging the spillway, but this would be expensive if the present location for the spillway is retained.

The work of the committee within itself has been very pleasant the entire year, but the junior members felt to a considerable extent the loss of the labor and the counsel of the senior member of the committee, Brother Lorenzo Hayer, who had the misfortune of getting his leg broken and receiving other severe injuries, all while performing his duties as superintendent of the farm.

The main work of the committee, which to them seems to be seeing that the members of the home are made safe and comfortable, has been quite successfully carried out, but can be improved upon when it is possible to give more time and a little more money to the work. We feel secure in saying that the old people residing at the homes are as happy and healthy as any like class of people anywhere, the matrons living devoted lives for the accomplishment of this end.

Sister Alice P. Dancer remains matron at the Saints' Home, and Sister Carrie Goode at Liberty Home.

The committee on General Conference resolutions reported:

The committee appointed to compile General Conference resolutions has completed the work of compilation to date. We are informed that the compilation of resolutions adopted by the conferences of 1914 and 1915 will be published in supplement form by the Herald Office. The last publication includes acts of 1913.

At the conference of 1914 the following action was taken as instructions to this committee:

"To instruct this committee that when they get out the next revision of General Conference Resolutions, it be revised to date by eliminating rescinded motions and matters of that character so as to bring the book up to date."

This action is indefinite, inasmuch as there has been little if any actual rescinding resolutions adopted by the General Conferences. The committee therefore has not felt warranted in attempting to do more than continue the work of compiling the resolutions of General Conference, as authorized by former action.

If the General Conference has further work for the committee we ask that it be made specific by clear instructions.

Respectfully submitted on behalf of the committee,
R. S. SALYARDS, Chairman.

The report was adopted and the committee continued.

The committee on library building reported:

To the Presidency and General Conference: At the General Conference in 1913 this committee reported that considering the general needs of the church in other directions it was not considered advisable to do anything at that time regarding the construction of a library building for the general church library. Since that time the committee has taken no further action in the matter, and as conditions remain much the same, they have nothing further to report.

Respectfully submitted,
ELBERT A. SMITH, for the committee.

The report was approved and the committee discharged.

The committee on monument to the Martyrs submitted the following report:

But little has been accomplished during the year. In August three of the committee viz, George P. Lambert, Frederick A. Smith, and Heman C. Smith, met at Nauvoo, and requested Elbert A. Smith to act as a member of the committee pro tem. He was also made temporary chairman.

The committee decided that on account of high water it would be impracticable to build a retaining wall as before decided upon, but the more feasible plan was to riprap the bank to keep the high waves from cutting into the lot. G. P. Lambert was appointed to oversee this work. But there being no funds available he has not been able to have the work done, but he has been before the city council of Nauvoo asking for donation or special price for rock. He has, however, received no answer from the council. We wish to call the attention of the body to the fact that the waves are lashing the shores furiously in time of high winds, the banks are receding and in time the graves will be endangered unless the banks are protected. There should be something done at once.

A subcommittee, consisting of E. L. Kelley, George P. Lambert and F. A. Smith, visited the light and power company at Keokuk, in November, but found that they had procured all the rights necessary and we could expect no further relief from that source.

Respectfully submitted,
HEMAN C. SMITH, Secretary of Committee.

The report was received and the committee continued. A motion to authorize the committee to take necessary steps to protect the property was deferred until after action on the financial report of the Presiding Bishop.

The committee in charge of old folks' homes, Lamoni, Iowa, reported.

Committee on revision of church history reported no occasion to meet during the year. Report received and committee continued.

Committee on translation reported no meetings held. Report received and committee continued.

Committee on publication of Young People's History reported:

We are pleased to report that volume one of this valuable work has been published during the year and placed on sale. It covers the history of the church to the year 1852, contains four hundred and ten pages, divided into eighty-five chapters, and illustrated with eighty-seven cuts of historic places and persons.

The manuscript for the second volume is now being prepared by the author of volume one, Sister Vida E. Smith, but is not yet ready to present to the committee on revision.

Respectfully submitted,
A. CARMICHAEL, for Board of Publication.
HEMAN C. SMITH, Historian.

The report was approved and the committee continued.

Committee on American archæology submitted an extended report, which was referred back to the committee for further consideration and report.

Bishop Kelley took the floor and began his address. A point of order was raised, the contention being that the matter could be reopened for discussion only on a motion to reconsider. The chair overruled the objection, and his decision was appealed from. Considerable discussion followed, and the chair was sustained.

Bishop Kelley at this juncture waived his privilege to give place for a motion for reconsideration, to be made the special order of 2.15 p. m. the 8th, which motion prevailed.

Question, the chair stated that he would understand that if the motion prevailed the individual service would be the form having the approval and authority of the church, but that he would not understand that any branch would be prohibited from using another form. The previous question was moved and passed, and the motion to grant the petition prevailed.

Committee to consider the petition of Sister Stead was announced as C. J. Hunt, M. H. Siegfried, M. C. Fisher.

The amendment to the substitute was lost. The substitute prevailed.

The list of ex-officio delegates was read.

The following was adopted:

Inasmuch as there is an urgent need for an X-ray apparatus for the Independence Sanitarium, and inasmuch as the Religio and Sunday school have given favorable consideration to the same, each having appointed committees from their respective bodies to act in conjunction with a committee desired to be appointed by the General Conference,

Therefore, be it resolved, That we appoint a committee for the purpose named and request the joint committees to consider the matter and report to this session of conference.

The presidency of the conference was authorized to appoint the committee.

The Presiding Bishopric submitted the following report:

To the Presidency, Officers and Members of Conference;

Greeting: The department of the work of the Bishopric for the year past has met with success, notwithstanding the great changes in the political and financial conditions of the world, and the many special matters of heavy expense arising during the year in maintaining the work in both home and foreign fields.

The general summary and itemized report already submitted for publication and made a part hereof will, we trust, acquaint the Saints with the fact that the church in its financial work to-day stands in a sounder condition than at any time in the past, and that the work of providing both for the ministry and the poor, the children and the aged is upon improved grounds.

To our heavenly Father, the Saints and friends who are helpers in his work, we extend special thanks for the good being accomplished.

Since the outbreak of the war in the countries of the East, additional means has been required to keep the missionaries in the field and to provide suitable places for preaching. This is true of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Germany, also the British Isles Mission and Jerusalem.

However, the missionaries inform us from all of these countries, except the latter, that the opportunities for good, effectual labor are as great as before the breaking out of the war and in places the people even show a greater interest to hear. Bishop May informs us that this is the status in London.

The effort of all Saints then should be renewed in helping to sustain the work in these foreign fields and place the message of "Peace and good will to men," where its immeasurable worth may be viewed and weighed, contrasted with the unchristian doctrine of rapine and war.

It is also important that alongside of this special missionary effort in home and foreign fields that the Saints give earnest, special attention to the reasonable work of redemption and the proper settlement of the Saints without which we shall not be able to overcome notwithstanding the conflict among the nations.

The spirit necessary to success in this divine work of safety and peace is that which inspires the holy desire to be helpers in the Lord's work and which for ever banishes the unholy purposes of making money or gaining wealth by the change, or of at any time getting advantages of a brother or neighbor. On the contrary, the work of redemption must be by a people who fully and faithfully abide in the doctrine set forth by Jesus: "In all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do ye even so to them. This is the law and the prophets."

The Bishopric have placed the work before the Saints and asked them to gather up their means, send their committees, and purchase in a proper way and as directed by our heavenly Father, and of late we have reexamined the articles and noted their completeness. This is the article upon which discussion arose in some of the quorums during the conference of 1902, and the division ended with the revelation to the conference stating:

"In regard to the gathering and the work of the Bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to."

Seven years later reference was again made to the rendition of the temporal law by the Bishopric in language as follows:

"The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the Bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with the other revelations given to the church, which has been before given, the church can not receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and pure in heart."

To those who are desirous of arriving at the correct rendition of the law as applicable to the Saints and the church at the present time we ask that they secure the work entitled, "The Law of Christ and its Fulfillment," and carefully and prayerfully examine the same, beginning with the article under the heading, "Duties and responsibilities of the Saints," page 49, and read: Anything any person, member or elder, may wish to controvert and thus correct or throw more light upon, will be gladly entertained and examined by the Bishopric, who will thus assist in the turning on more light if it is found needful.

In connection with this we will state that the book entitled, "The Law of Christ and its Fulfillment," was prepared by the recommendation of the Order of Bishops and published by order of the General Conference. You can secure them at the Publishing House, at 35 cents and 50 cents per copy, owing to binding.

During the past year the office has also been gathering statistics of the branches and church buildings in various parts of the world, and out of 700 branches, not including Australia and the British Isles, reports are received from all except 44 branches.

The work will be continued until fully accomplished. Valuation placed upon these buildings, $862,232.85; indebtedness, $80,074.28; net by those reporting, $782,158.28.

During the year Bishop Blakeslee, counselor, has been able to increase his help in the work, and from April to September Richard C. Kelley gave valuable assistance in the office. We regretted to lose his services, but his financial work was in such a state that he could not continue without borrowing largely or receiving the help from the church, which he positively refused, with the statement that other young men could not be helped out and he did not believe it right that he should do so. We reported the matter to President Frederick M. Smith at the time, and he commended R. C.'s position with the statement that he was glad he set the example, but that he did not wish him to continue his work in the university longer than the present year.

The bishops of stakes and districts in nearly every part of the world have been anxiously working for the good of the Lord's people. We call especial attention to the complete itemized reports set out herewith. If there should be found omissions or mistakes the same may be reported first to the bishop or agent in whose report such error may be found, and if the party is not fully satisfied with the explanation then it will be proper to apply to this office.

We have not taken up and reported upon the work of our homes, including those of old people as well as children, or the work of the Sanitarium, for the reason that since my return from the West I have not had an opportunity to examine into these so as to fully satisfy myself, neither has Bishop Blakeslee; but this far we are ready to affirm, that good has been accomplished in all of these the present year, and they are moving forward helping in the work of the Master, which is helping his children who are needy, sick and afflicted for the present in this world.

At the last General Conference the Bishopric presented statement of what they considered proper financial work in order to keep the college running as it should do. The total estimate as presented to the last General Conference was $11,000. We have not had the time to take up and make out an additional report of the college for the present year but commend to the Saints the report of the treasurer and president, Prof. S. A. Burgess. The report of the college by him is duly set out in pages 56 and 57 of reports to the General Conference, 1915. Statement is made by Treasurer Burgess that the estimate furnished by the Bishopric last conference was within bounds, that they were able to come within the lines of the estimate. We present the matter of the work of Graceland to to the candid and courteous attention of every brother and sister, neighbor and friend, and bespeak for the college for the ensuing year special help, that the indebtedness may be entirely removed, which we think may be accomplished by a little effort on the part of each and everyone.

Trusting the Lord may bless and direct every institution organized for the good of his work, and that the Saints may grow in grace and knowledge of the truth, we are,

Very truly and respectfully,

Number 110 was sung, and E. L. Kelley pronounced the benediction.

To the General Conference: On April 4, 1915, the Sunday School Association in convention assembled decided to "refer the matter of a Bible normal book to the General Conference." The secretary of that convention overlooked the forwarding of this information to the last conference. We therefore do it now. We regret the loss of a year's time in this matter, for our teachers are in urgent need of a work and authorized by the church, and would prefer such to the book we are now using, temporarily. We therefore respectfully urge that this matter be given early attention.

G. R. WELLS, Superintendent.

E. D. MOORE, Secretary.

The matter was by motion referred to a committee of three, to be appointed.

Hansen, he being absent, was also approved.

"The leg you use must grow very tired," remarked an onlooker to a potter working at his wheel. "No, it's the leg that does nothing that gets tired," was the reply. And it is the people who do most who are least tired in the Lord's work.—Mrs. R. W. Lowe.

Letter Department

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, January 20, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have been greatly blessed in reading the HERALD. I was made sad when I read of the death of our Prophet, but glad that he left a grand life behind him and a son to whom the Saints can look as a man of God. My prayer is that he may lead the church higher, and fill his place like unto his father. I was greatly impressed with the vision of Brother R. C. Evans.

The work in this part is moving along slowly. Some have come into the church lately, one young brother, who some day, if faithful, will hold a priesthood. His father and mother rejoice to see him in the church.

Many brethren are out of work owing to hard times caused by the war. Oh, may the time soon come when the King of kings shall reign and war be no more. The factories are nearly all closed down. If times do not brighten up there will be many who will be needing help soon.

The presiding elder of this branch has gone into the field to work. We have two priests, one teacher, one deacon. They need our prayers. The one who has left his wife and little flock to go into the field also needs our prayers, as does his family.

The first thing I look for when I receive the HERALD is the letter department. I was glad to hear from our sisters in the West.

My prayer is that God will bless the church, from the one who presides to the weakest Saint. Your brother,

W. G. ELLIOTT.

KNOX, INDIANA, January 22, 1915.

Editors Herald: The few Saints here are trying to do their duty and keep God's work on the move as best they can. It is uphill work at times, but occasionally a bright spot appears which gives those faithful to duty a real pleasure. After some effort on the part of the Saints, we secured Brother S. W. L. Scott to hold a short series of meetings here. His arrival one week after being advertised only served to create inquiry on the part of the people as to when he was coming. Many were anxious to hear him. He arrived on Wednesday evening, January 13, and commenced services the same night, with a good-sized audience. The crowd increased as the series continued, while at the same time a big revival was in progress at one of the popular churches.

We have not had such large numbers at our church for many years. The interest was splendid. Those attending were of the thinking class of people, who want to dig below the surface and find the truth. These services were held at just the right time, when the minds of the people were stirred up. Elder Scott gave three lectures on the present war, which were indeed grand. These lectures alone sufficed to show that God is and that the Bible is true. They were well received by the people. Some almost begged Elder Scott to remain longer, but duty called him elsewhere. The meetings were to close January 20, but the audience voted for at least one more service, so the request was granted and the meeting closed the following night, with a promise of another service later on. Some good, intelligent people are investigating our church claims, and we have hopes of their uniting with us in the near future.

We have a small Sunday school and Religio, and about half a dozen Saints meet now on Thursday afternoons for prayer services. We feel that God is rewarding our efforts. It is indeed a struggle at times to keep the work on the move, but our desire is to live humble so that God will recognize our feeble efforts and that there may be an ingathering of the honest in heart at this place.

Many of our young people who have helped have moved away. God moves in a mysterious way, and who knows but that they have been scattered to sow the good seed in other places? At one time when some of our young Saints were leaving, and we thought that we could not possibly get along without them, the president of our branch compared our community to a recruiting station; he said that we made the people ready and then sent them out to other places to work, so it mattered not so much after all where we were just so we did our duty.

In the faith,

BERTHA LOHSE.

FRESOIL, MICHIGAN, January 21, 1915.

Editors Herald: We look over the field of opportunities of the new year and recall the changing conditions of the old. We have learned many good lessons, some of which have caused bitter pain. With the joys and perplexities of the past, we have learned that there is no trial without a way of escape if we put our trust in God. In all of this we have finally discovered blessings in disguise, though the lessons have been hard to learn. As I read the many letters from different writers and the soul-inspiring sermons and other items of interest, I find food for my soul.

While struggling along, doing all circumstances will permit, there are so many calls for help that my heart is grieved. I long to go, but companion and little ones need support, and I must care for them, sparing all the time I can for the gospel work, anxiously praying for the time and opportunity of realizing the desire of my heart for entering the great harvest field of the Lord.

I know that the gospel is true, that its principles are divine, and that no one can assist in the work unless he is humble and full of love. The parting words of our beloved President, "I have loved to learn, and I have learned to love," sink deep into the hearts of every true Saint, and every minister of the restored gospel. We know that he lived great and died great, and that of his life every Saint may be proud.

This, the greatest work ever given mankind, has been restored and promulgated through humble agencies. My earnest prayer is for the noble son of this ancestry. The words of Paul should impress us: "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have here, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which first begun to be spoken by the Lord, and was confined unto us by them that heard him." (Hebrews 2:1-3.)

In gospel bonds,

A. M. BOOMER.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, January 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: The good news the HERALD so often brings to us in this far-away country gives us renewed courage. The work does not progress as we would like to see it. In San Bernardino we have a few faithful ones who are striving to let their light shine. The Lord adds one now and then to the honest in heart, and bids us battle on to subdue error and help others to see the truth.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, with Sister Hott as superintendent. The Religio work is also progressing, under the very energetic efforts of our president, Sister Bessie Bemis. Our pastor, Elder George H. Wixom, gave us a very able sermon last Sunday on "Being prepared," and Sister Johnson, of Chicago, sang a beautiful solo, which was much enjoyed by all.

While we feel deeply the loss of our esteemed President,

Brother Joseph, we have full confidence in his successor, and pledge ourselves to rally to his support with all the ability within us.

May the Saints everywhere be up and doing until we are gathered safely in Zion, is my prayer.

W. O. WHETTESBEE.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, February 10, 1915.

Editors Herald: We wish Brother Peter Anderson and others to know of our efforts since he left us. We have been busy scattering tracts, loaning copies of the Book of Mormon and talking our gospel to clergy as well as laity. We visited a Catholic priest and found him a man who, as he says, open to conviction, but the Lord will have to show him he is wrong.

On Saturday morning, February 6, Elder Newby came to us quite unexpectedly. We all got busy, secured the courthouse and put up notices. The enemy was on the alert and tore these notices down. We were kept busy putting them up again. We occupied the courthouse four evenings with a good attendance. On account of its being so near court session we were allowed the use of the Christian church, which we used three evenings. We gave all the ministers in Glasgow a special invitation. Not one of them came.

The Methodist, Baptist and Christian churches have each in turn had protracted services. We attended nearly every night. I bear my testimony when opportunity is offered. The Baptist minister sought to do us harm by slandering the fair name of our martyred dead among the people with whom he associated. After continuing his meetings for six weeks, he baptized the wife of a Baptist member and the daughter of a Baptist father. The Methodists held services for three weeks. The minister said they made nineteen converts.

Brother Newby had fine liberty in conducting our services. The Spirit was with him in power. The last evening two of the audience, men about forty years old, both heads of families, and who had been attending all of the meetings, were seen with tears coursing down their cheeks after the last service. They asked Brother Newby to go home with them. They told him that they had seen an angel standing back of him in the pulpit and that they were ready for baptism. We trust that brethren Peter Anderson and Newby will be returned to this field.

We wish the General Conference people this year a very spiritual time, and hope that the Lord will bless us with more of his instructions if it is his will. May heavenly blessings attend the work. Your sister in Christ,

CAROLINE SANDIDGE.

IRONTON, OHIO, February 11, 1915.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor to us, bringing cheering letters and articles from all over the world, written by God's people and intended to cheer and comfort. We have a small church here for which we are grateful to our heavenly Father. We have Sunday school each Sunday and sacrament the first Sunday of each month.

Brother Booker was with us for two weeks and preached some very interesting sermons by which we were spiritually strengthened. Two were baptized and others became interested. Thus we are trying to please our Lord and Master in our weak way, and to keep the banner aloft in this part of God's vineyard.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. ANNA GRIFFITH.

April St. Nicholas

An unusual animal story is announced for the April St. Nicholas. Stephen Chalmers has written a life history of "Timothy," a black bear, from the time when, a little rolling mass of black fur, he strays from his mother and is carried home by boys, to the time when he is a full-grown animal, a terror to men. The story is not only a story—it is an analysis of the bear's feelings in captivity, his incomprehension of his troubles, his unwillingness to learn that his captors are not his friends. It is a story that will fascinate little ones, but adults will see in it a plea against unnecessarily depriving an animal of freedom. An article that men will enjoy as well as boys is F. B. Master's description of locomotives, "What every boy—and man—should know about locomotives" will tell of the development of the locomotive in the United States, from the "De Witt Clinton" of 1831 to the "Matt H. Shay" of 1915, and explain in detail the various types of railroad engines in use to-day, showing the why and the wherefore of freight and passenger types. There is a word, too, on electric engines.

April "American Boy"

"The worm's April turning," by Walter Kellogg Towers, featured in the current issue of The American Boy, is a story with many a laugh tucked away in it. The story portrays, what the magazine stands for, clean wholesome, alert, vigorous boyhood. "The leaping quananiche," by George M. Johnson is the unusual story of a boy and a big fish. "The only one who knew," by Don Cameron Shafer, is not only a com-

Your "Traveling Home" to California Expositions

Going to California even the most direct way requires days—not hours—long enough for you to experience either restful homelike satisfaction, or restless discomfort—irritation. Make a careful choice of routes—based on service.

SERVICE is the big individual feature of the Burlington—and travel-wise people know it. The roadbed is smooth, the maximum of safety insured, train equipment the last word in luxury. Berths are like "home beds." The meals are tasty and varied—reasonable in price—and well served. Burlington trains have all the little added features that distinguish modern "limited" travel. And, best of all, Burlington employees are as courteous as they are efficient. They help speed the days—point out and intelligently explain the wonderful country you traverse.

Because of the liberal provisions of the Burlington's Grand Circle Tour, you can stop over at any point. But if you go straight through, you arrive refreshed—because of pleasant days and comfortable nights.

This is the tour de luxe—the Burlington's Grand Circle—through glorious Colorado: Denver, the new Rocky Mountain National (Estes) Park, Colorado Springs, Pikes Peak Region, Royal Gorge by daylight; daylight view of Salt Lake City and Great Salt Lake. Then, Los Angeles, San Diego exposition, and the Panama-Pacific. An Ocean trip by steamer to Portland; the great Pacific Northwest. And homeward bound, via Glacier National Park or Yellowstone Park.

OUR WORK

NUMBER I—A MISSIONARY WORK

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

This language is full of meaning to Latter Day Saints. It suggests in brief outline the work God has committed to the church, and the spirit and motive under which it is to be done. In these few words, forming a firm basis of operation, is gathered up every lawful Christian activity, individual and collective. The devoted Saint finds here if nowhere else his inspiration and his field of labor.

The first and essential work of the church is missionary work. To reclaim the wayward was the mission of Christ, and as an aid in this mission was the church called into existence. Through the church God purposes to send out the gospel cause into all the world; and in the church to open up a way of return for those who will hearken and heed his counsel. Hence the instruction, "Prosecute the missionary work."

In this work of reclaiming for God there are various departments of activity. The proselyting quorums go into the world with uplifted ensign, upon which is inscribed the fact and terms of celestial salvation. The pastoral quorums remain in the places of gathering to welcome and to aid in the development of the converted. That both these departments may be sustained, the order for temporal ministration receives and distributes the offerings of the Saints. That others may have opportunity to assist in special ways, various auxiliaries are provided for their activities, and for the instruction of still others, and the enlistment of their energies, that thus there may be kept up a constant and un failing recruiting contingency for the many fields of lawful operation within the church. All these departments serve but the one and same end—the redemption of souls for celestial glory, which is the mission work of Christ.

To this work of reclamation "all are called," even as God has given to every man abilities to assist, or, "according to the gifts of God unto them." Each member is in a position to serve, unless he is unwilling, or has failed to catch the missionary spirit of the church. And by serving in the talents intrusted to him he may gain other talents, widening his field of usefulness and his powers of comprehension until finally in the ultimate consummation of the purposes of God he may enter into the glory of his divine presence.

To one it is given to go preach; to another it is given to remain and nurture the flock; to others it is given to render a just account in tithes and offerings, that both these may remain in service, that the poor may have relief and means of livelihood, and that those to whom it is given to minister in the affairs of the moneys and properties of the church may have wherewith to set in operation and maintain the varied institutions of temporal Zion. To all it is given to live godly in Christ Jesus and to assist in every way possible, in whatever department of service.

All this is missionary work. For where is the wisdom of converting the world unless an opportunity for development is given under environment conducive to saintly life and development? And how is either possible only through the activities of a godly people, who sense and carry into effectual operation in letter and in spirit "pure religion and undefiled," which is "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world"; or, in other words, unless the people of God engage unreservedly in every constructive work, and in the performance thereof live as becometh the children of God, untouched by the sins and follies of the world.

Who will say then that the obscure Saint who in the performance of his every duty makes possible the effectual ministration of the work of God is not a missionary? And who will say that there is not work for every man? For to each comes the call to occupy as a Saint, which is the greatest of all.

The missionary spirit, the spirit to give, and to labor, and to sacrifice, and to live—this is the need of the church of God to-day. Not that we do not have this spirit within the body, for, thank God, it is at work among us; but it must needs be extended until in every community every Saint is imbued with the consuming desire for souls saved and a Zion redeemed that will carry him forward in consecrated service to the purpose of Christ in the missionary work of his church.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

PRESIDENT SMITH IMPROVES.—The Saints will be pleased to learn of the continued improvement of President Frederick M. Smith. Last word from him, which was dated April 15, was:

My physical condition continues to improve, and with the Lord's help I shall soon be able to give attention to matters demanding my attention.

HONOR CONFERRED.—The following item of interest refers to our Brother Herbert S. Salisbury, at one time president of Graceland College:

Herbert S. Salisbury, of this city, has received notice of his election to membership in the Topsfield Historical Society, with privilege of admission to the Parson Capen House which is the museum of the society. Admission to this famous Massachusetts historical society is not alone a recognition of Mr. Salisbury's merits as a historian, but is partially due to his relationship to so many of its founders, as Mr. Salisbury's ancestors were the most prominent leaders of Topsfield and Essex County, Massachusetts, in the Colonial period and the American Revolution.—Carthage (Illinois) Gazette, February 12, 1915.

PUBLICITY BUREAU HELPS.—The Bureau of Publicity has endeavored to assist missionaries and local officers in securing publicity, arranging for series of meetings, etc. A recent letter to Brother E. D. Moore, member of the Bureau of Publicity, from Brother W. I. Newman, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, makes the following favorable comment on work of the bureau along this line:

Have your very kind letter of the 15th giving suggestions for newspaper articles on our coming church opening. These are fine, and I thank you sincerely for them and your letter. . . . I expect to get out some handbills, and if you have samples of ones that have been successful I wish you would lend me a few; also any suggestions that you can offer in this connection. . . . Your work along this line is sure to be of great benefit to the church through having available experience and data which the amateur may draw on when facing the publicity problem. I wish you every success in your work.

To the First Presidency and General Conference; Greeting: A meeting of the Graceland Extension Institute was held in the lower auditorium, last evening at 7 p. m. The reports from the managing board showed that over forty have been enrolled as fellows, as fellows, and these are selected from every part of the country. There has been a unanimity surprising in the circumstances, shown by those who were requested to assist in the work as fellows. Thirty-seven students have been enrolled, twenty-six of whom are missionaries and most of the others hold the priesthood; they are very widely scattered, from Maine to California. No special effort has been made this year to secure a large enrollment, but it is planned to push the work more earnestly the coming year. So far the principal course is English grammar and rhetoric.

The following action was adopted by the meeting of the Institute: "that the managing board be authorized to provide for such auditing as may be necessary." The Council of Seven Presidents of Seventy reported:

Since March 27 when the Council of the Presidents of the Seventy held their first session we have met in regular sessions thirty times, and have held sixteen sessions with other quorums.

The most pleasant and spiritual experiences in all our sessions have been experienced this year.

All the council have been present, namely, Columbus Scott, James McKiernan, J. F. Mintun, W. E. Peak, T. C. Kelley, J. A. Davis, and A. B. Phillips.

Brother Columbus Scott has resigned both as senior president and a member of the council, both of which resignations have been accepted, which if our action is approved will leave one vacancy in the council, and will make it necessary to choose a senior president, which we may do ere the conference closes, if we have the time. This action when approved will still leave Brother Scott a member of the Second Seventy.

The following words of respect and condolence were adopted by the Council and concurred in by all the Quorums of Seventy:

"RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

"Since it has pleased the All-wise Father to permit the hand of death to remove President Joseph Smith from the council of his brethren on earth to the family in heaven, we the Council of the Presidents of the Seventy, and the several quorums of seventy assembled hereby express our deep sorrow that for a season we are deprived of the comfort of his presence, his cheery voice and his wise counsel.

"He was a living example of patient endurance of physical ills, and manifested great fortitude in endurance of physical of the body that the prayer of faith, the administration of the elder's or the skill of the physicians did not remove.

"While we deeply mourn our loss, yet we humbly bow in submission to the will of Him who said, 'Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.'

"We hereby express great thankfulness that we were granted the privilege of being associated with him as our beloved and honored president for so many years, and were helped by his wise advice, cheered by his good example and led to noble deeds by his brotherly hand.

"In his death the church has lost a wise and noble president, the family a fond father and companion, and the wife a loyal and loving husband.

"He was an earnest and effective worker for temperance and a loyal, patriotic citizen, using his every influence for civic righteousness in city, state and nation.

"We hereby express to the bereaved family our deep sympathy in this the time of their profound sorrow. And while we know that no words of human wisdom can assuage the pignancy of such sorrow, we would, therefore, commend them to the God of all comfort, who has comforted us in like afflictions, and pray that he will abundantly bless with his sustaining grace and support them by his Spirit to endure until he shall call them to join the loved one gone before to receive his reward."

The council have according to the law selected to be ordained to the office of a Seventy the following named elders: Alvin H. Christensen, John A. Dowker, Richard D. Weaver, Hinman W. Savage, John R. Gricé. We ask that these selections be approved, and that their ordinations be provided for.

Respectfully submitted,

J. F. MINTUN.

Secretary of Presidents of Seventy.

The above recommendations for ordination were separately approved, and the ordinations ordered provided for.

It was moved that the action of the Council of Seven Presidents in the matter of the resignation of Columbus Scott be approved.

A substitute was offered to refer this matter back to the Seven Presidents.

After some discussion the previous question was ordered. The substitute was lost, and the original motion prevailed.

The Seven Presidents submitted the following:

The Council of the Presidents of Seventy have adopted the following relative to the service and release of Brother Columbus Scott from our council by accepting his resignation. "Whereas, The resignation of Brother Columbus Scott has been accepted by the Council of Presidents of Seventy; there- and also as a President of Seventy, which resignations have been accepted by the Council of Presidents of Seventy; there- fore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Council of Presidents of Seventy, hereby express to our brother our unreserved appreciation of the associations of the past, by which our love and esteem for him have been enlarged and made enduring, and assure him that our confidence in his integrity, devotion, and consecration to the work of God is supplemented by our earnest desire that the divine blessing shall continue to attend him throughout the course of his future labors." Truly yours,

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary of the Council of the Presidents of the Seventy.

The First Quorum of Seventy reported:

The first seventy have held seven regular sessions and sixteen sessions in joint council with other quorums and councils. . . .

We have lost one by ordination to the office of high priest, Brother A. E. Stone, and one by death, Orlin B. Thomas. The following expression of respect was unanimously adopted by the quorum:

"In the providence of God our beloved brother and collaborer, Orlin B. Thomas, has been removed by the hand of death. By his departure we lose a tried and true soldier of the cross, a devoted and faithful servant of the Master. We feel keenly the loss of our beloved brother's association, and hereby extend our sympathy and condolences to the bereaved family.

"A hero in Israel has fallen at his post of duty with his armor on, and facing the enemy. We feel assured that his passing from this mortal existence was but a call to 'Come up higher,' that he might rest from his labors.

"And a copy be sent to the family." . . .

Smith must be called to such position by a direct and additional revelation, others holding that Elbert A. Smith was, as given in Doctrine and Covenants 129: 5, one of the presidency, properly called by revelation, and to so continue, as nominated, until removed for cause, or released by the Lord.

A substitute was offered to sustain Elbert A. Smith as acting counselor to President Frederick M. Smith in the First Presidency during the coming conference year.

The expression was unanimous in support of Elbert A. Smith as one worthy and who had been expected to occupy in the place under consideration. The only difference was in the matter of procedure.

The previous question was ordered.

The substitute was lost by a vote of 71 to 222. The original motion to indorse the nomination prevailed by a vote of 254 to 43.

The missionary chorus favored the assembly with a selection.

The ordination of President Elbert A. Smith was by motion referred to the same authority and with the same instruction as was that of President Frederick M. Smith, which was to the Quorum of Twelve, to ordain according to the pattern given in Doctrine and Covenants 117: 3.

The committee on resolutions of condolence in honor of the late President Joseph Smith reported:

We, your committee appointed to draft resolutions on the death of President Joseph Smith, present the following:

Whereas, President Joseph Smith, who, for upwards of fifty-four years, was President of the Church of Christ on earth, has, during the past year, been removed from our midst by the hand of death, and

Whereas, during those years of his official life he gave himself to us and for us and for the uplifting of humanity and the dissemination of the principles embodied in the "Angel's Message" and characteristic of the faith committed to the trust of the church in this last dispensation, and

Whereas, in his life among us there was furnished an exhibition in exceptionally high degree, of those virtues and excellence of character for which our religion stands, and

Whereas, his love for mankind and devotion to the church and its well-being, and the self-sacrificing consecration of his powers and life at the shrine where all our best interests are represented, has made his life a part of our own and an inspiration to love and good works and has endeared him and his memory to us imperishably.

Resolved, That we place on the church records this memorial of our gratitude to God for having given him to us and having extended the years of so exemplary a life so long among us; also of our sadness in the loss the church has sustained by the removal of his presence from us.

Resolved, further, That we seek to perpetuate and make effective his mission work among us, by continued emulation of his admirable qualities and in increased devotion to the Christ to whom he ever pointed us, and the interest of the cause with which his name stands so intimately and sacredly associated.

Resolved, further, That we extend our condolence to the immediate family of the deceased, to whom his death means so great a bereavement, and that a copy of this memorial be furnished them by the secretary of the church.

HEMAN C. SMITH.
JOSEPH LUFF.

The report was adopted.

The joint council of the First Presidency and Twelve recommended that James F. Kier of Chicago be ordained to the office of bishop. The recommendation was approved.

The Board of Auditors submitted the following, which was adopted:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 16, 1915.

To the Church in Conference Assembled: An error occurred in the report of the Auditors covering the work with reference to the Presiding Bishop's office, which we beg leave to correct. The statement referred to reads: "The Board has made special report to the Joint Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve with reference to the affairs of the office of the Presiding Bishop, and are of the opinion that the same should rest as they are."

The correction desired would read as follows: "The Board has made special report to the Joint Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve with reference to the affairs of the office of the Presiding Bishop, and are of the opinion that said report should remain with the Council as lodged."

Respectfully submitted,

G. W. BLAIR.
J. F. GARVER.
D. MACGREGOR.

This report was approved and the nomination of Richard J. Lambert was indorsed.

The committee on book of rules reported:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 16, 1915.

To the General Conference Assembled: We, your committee appointed to revise the Rules of Order and Debate, report as follows:

That part which contains the rules of parliamentary procedure has been thoroughly revised, and most of this has been approved unanimously by the committee, but owing to other work we have not had time to complete the examination. We respectfully request that the conference authorize the publication of this work as soon as it has been approved by the committee after completing the examination.

We further recommend that a special committee be appointed by the conference to revise and prepare for separate publication all matters referring to branches and districts, church articles of incorporation, court procedure, rules of representation, church records and any matter referring to the church, to be submitted to the next General Conference for its action thereon. Respectfully submitted,

APRIL 17, 8 A. M.

At this hour T. W. Châtburn spoke, relating personal reminiscences. He was assisted by John Smith.

9 A. M.

With President E. A. Smith in the chair, number 156 was sung, W. A. McDowell offering prayer. Minutes read and approved.

President E. A. Smith made the following statement:

I presume that most of us who have been here this year will cherish this year's conference badges as souvenirs of one of the most peculiar and remarkable conferences that we have ever attended. Certainly to your speaker this badge will be such a souvenir.

Some three or four weeks before the conference began I told my wife that the day was coming when I would be required to stand in the breach alone, that was so far as the Presidency was concerned. I did not know how or when that would come, but I have felt it impending for a year or longer, and I believe that presentiment has been at least partially fulfilled. I want to express my gratitude to Almighty God for the way in which he has come to our rescue, and to my rescue personally at this time. Shortly before the conference I had recovered from illness and was not in good condition for the conference, but God has blessed me in body and I believe has directed me by his Spirit. And so naturally I feel very grateful to him at this time.

I also wish to thank the Saints for the confidence that they have manifested in me personally in divers ways since the conference began. Next to the confidence and favor of God, I prize the confidence and fellowship of the people of God, and I appreciate the confidence they have expressed in me by their action of yesterday. It is a matter of keen regret to me that the matter should have so shaped itself that I could not command the same unanimous vote that was given to Frederick M. Smith, but I have been assured that there is nothing personal in the matter, and I take that assurance for all it purports to stand for, and I shall accept that which has been placed upon me, believing that so long as God set me in the Presidency by revelation, and so long as you care to support me there, instead of asking for additional revelation to stand there, I would feel inclined rather to demand additional revelation before I could consistently lay the burden down.

I also appreciate the support which I have received from the two men who have been associated with me during this conference, Brother Gomer T. Griffiths, and Brother F. A. Smith. It may be that mistakes have been made by your chairmen. It may be that the conference has made mistakes. If so, our record has been made thus far and we must abide by it; but I never saw a time in my recollection when the people of God were so anxious to use their intelligence, and to secure divine direction in their proceedings, and it would seem strange to me under these conditions if God would permit us to make some blunder that might bring great loss to this church. If that should be the case I can not understand it.

Some said that they were afraid to go away for fear they would miss the best part of this conference, and I told them the best part of this conference would be the motion to adjourn. Perhaps that was not correct, we have had some excellent experiences, but our conferences are not to my mind arranged as they should be. The quorums of the church do not have an opportunity to come in contact with the people and enjoy the spiritual opportunities the conferences should afford. The conference is one terrific grind from beginning to end. I have not attended a single preaching meeting since the conference proper began. I have only been to one prayer meeting. I have only attended one lecture of the lecture course. I hope the time will come when we can arrange these matters otherwise and the things that have taken our attention in years gone by may require them no longer.

As I feel now I am very grateful to God, and in remembrance of our experiences at this conference, if I ever become agnostic I believe the angels of God will be justified in preferring in the court on high the charge against me of the base crime of ingratitude.

President E. A. Smith for the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve informally concurring, recommended that M. H. Siegfried be ordained to the office of bishop. The recommendation was approved, and the ordination was ordered provided for.

The Board of Publication reported:

To the General Conference; Greeting: We herewith submit our annual report for the Herald Publishing House and its interest.

During the past year we have changed our business policy with reference to the subscription of the church periodicals. The board, after careful consideration, deemed it advisable to put our subscription list on a cash basis. We believe this will result in a saving to the office. We have had a great many letters commenting favorably on this policy. The general depression in business through the country during the last year has affected the business of the publishing interests of the church to some extent.

The Board of Publication is ready and anxious to move out in compliance with the revelation requesting that tracts in foreign language be furnished. Up to date we have done nothing with reference to getting out a teachers' edition of the Inspired Translation. This matter, if you remember was referred to the Board of Publication with power to act. The board placed the matter in the hands of the president of the board and the business manager. The initial financial cost being so great, as well as the difficulty to get proper help to do this work, has caused us to hesitate in moving forward in this matter.

We feel that the publishing concern of the church should be one of service to the church and to the world. In harmony with this idea we have established several departments to which any of our people could refer for proper information.

The question of efficient advertising is one that should receive careful consideration from the ministry. To aid along this line we have established an information bureau to which all of our ministry may appeal for pointers in this work. This information is furnished without any cost to the ministry. We shall be much pleased to receive from our ministers samples of their advertising matter used, with such information as they can give us as to the results obtained from said advertising. We solicit a close cooperation along this line, believing that a vast amount of good can be accomplished by handling this arm of service in an intelligent way.

Another department which we think will be of great benefit to our people if taken advantage of is that of supplying proper reading material. We are offering our services to all freely in helping them to obtain proper literature on any subject. Many inquiries from parents and others asking for the names of books suitable for their children has shown us the necessity of such a department which has been established, and we are prepared to secure books for those desiring at a minimum cost. We are working in perfect harmony with the Library Commission along these lines.

We take this opportunity to thank those of the ministry and other live workers of the church for their loyal support in past years to the interest of our publishing house.

Very respectfully,
A. CARMICHAEL, Manager.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 16, 1915.

Whereas, in the providence of God, by his unerring hand, he has removed from our midst and association our former brother and friend, President Joseph Smith, and

Whereas, as the prophet of God among men and the leader of his church upon earth in his supervisory administration and contact with all people we have found in all kindness and a life of unselfish devotion he dispensed the pure love of God;

Be it resolved, That we express our deep and sincere sorrow in the breaking of the family tie of this earth relation, keenly sensing therein that there has gone from us a pillar of great strength—a father in very deed and a friend of God.

Be it further resolved, That we extend our fervent sympathy to his loved ones and immediate family, and a copy of these resolutions be sent those thus bereaved.

The appointments were by motion approved.

The name of J. R. Lambert was at his request stricken from the list of evangelical ministers as appointed, Brother Lambert stating that he had informed the appointing authorities that he did not desire an appointment when he was not physically able to perform extensive labor, it being his preference that he be allowed to withdraw.

One verse of "Nearer, my God, to thee" was sung.

Mark H. Siegfried was ordained a bishop under the hands of Elbert A. Smith and Gomer T. Griffiths.

The minutes were read and approved. Formal adjournment was had by motion.

President Elbert A. Smith offered the following benediction:

We look to thee, our heavenly Father, thanking thee for the blessings enjoyed, praying that that which we have done conscientiously and in harmony with our best judgment may result in good to thy church and kingdom.

Commending ourselves to thy care for the year, and invoking thy blessings to rest upon thy ministry as they scatter to their various fields of labor, and their families in their lives of sacrifice, we pray that thy love and favor may be with them. May thy church go forward. May our Brother Frederick M. Smith be soon restored to health of body and mind to take up the work intrusted to him, and carry it forward; and when we again meet in conference may our hearts be light and our minds be inspired and our feet turned forward in the path of righteousness. In Jesus' name, Amen.

SUPPORTING PRESIDENT SMITH

In the conference April 14 the important event of supporting and receiving President Frederick M. Smith as president of the high priesthood and president of the church occurred without a dissenting voice. Under an opportunity open to all, every expression was favorable and in support of the action. The vote was unanimous.

President Elbert A. Smith, formally reporting on the demise of the late President Joseph Smith, and in suggesting that the conference proceed to choose his successor in office, said:

I desire as a member of the First Presidency, to make formal report to you of the loss by death of our senior member, and beloved President and Prophet, Joseph Smith, which occurred on the 10th day of last December, and I suggest that you proceed to designate his successor as president of the high priesthood.

Owing to the unfortunate absence of Frederick M. Smith, because of illness, there are made necessary some slight changes in our procedure. If he should be designated, the ordination may be provided for to take place when circumstances may permit, and in the event that he should be designated, he will have further recommendations to make to this conference.

It has been advised by a council, including the Twelve and Seventy, at the beginning of this conference, that the president of the twelve should preside over the assembly during the choice of the successor. Hence at this juncture I yield the chair to Brother Griffiths, president of the twelve.

Elder G. T. Griffiths, taking the chair, said:

In the opinion of the chairman, this to my mind is a very important occasion. The events about to take place are such that few, if there be any present, have ever witnessed. There may be a few here who were present at the time that Joseph Smith was ordained at Amboy, Illinois. I do not expect to live to see another such event.

In view of what is to happen, I trust that we will all try to put ourselves in the proper attitude before God, that the Holy Spirit may be present to guide us on this occasion, that whatever course we may pursue may be acceptable to our heavenly Father, and that it will have his approval, sanctified by his holy power, to the good of God's great church on earth.

As has been before said, we are about to provide a president over the high and Melchisedec priesthood, a man to be a seer, prophet, and revelator to this church, as president of it.

We will now proceed to provide for that position made vacant by the hand of death, of which you have been made acquainted. We will now entertain motions of nomination.

Elder F. M. Sheehy, of the Quorum of Twelve, in moving that President Frederick M. Smith be accepted as president of the high priesthood and of the church, said:

According to the instructions of the Quorum of Twelve, I have been designated to formally make this motion, following out the Letter of Instruction from the late president governing procedure of this kind, and it affords me a great deal of pleasure and doubtless honor, to have this opportunity of engaging in such an historical event as this, and one that probably few of us will ever have the privilege of witnessing again, at least we hope not in our lifetime.

We are very fortunate on this occasion to be situated so that there need be no uncertainty as to our course. The great principle involved in the statement of our Savior as given in Matthew, "I will build my church," is made eminent in our time. At the beginning of our great latter-day movement provisions were clearly and distinctly made by him for us, whom the pronoun I in Matthew represents—that he would build his church. And long before the Latter Day Saints thought or even had an opportunity to think that there would arise such things as would come along in the history of their church, there were provisions made, in 1830, in the month of September, or a few months after the church organization.

We find the voice of inspiration, as in Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2: "Behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, No one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses; and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and revelations, with power and authority unto his church. And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times by the way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it. But thou shalt not write by way of commandment, but by wisdom; and thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church, for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead."

You will notice I referred to there is the voice of the Spirit. When necessary to make a movement of this kind he will do the work. The following December we have this, Doctrine and Covenants 34: 4: "I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph, and in weakness have I blessed him, and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead."

Following on down the revelations to 1831, Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, we have this: "O, hearken, ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. Add this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

"But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."

These are revelations given to the church in its very early period, making provision for such an event as we find confronting us to-day.

In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18 we have another line of identification:

"And now I say unto you, as pertaining to my boarding house, which I have commanded you to build, for the boarding of strangers, Let it be built unto my name, and let my name be named upon it, and let my servant Joseph and his house have place therein, from generation to generation; for this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed. Therefore, let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house, from generation to generation, for ever, and ever, saith the Lord, and let the name of that house be called the Nauvoo House; and let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone thereof; that he may receive also the counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls."

The latter further continues here in regard to some of the processes, and I call your attention to Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11, the well-known section on priesthood: "Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church."

Instructions were given to us from the late President of the church in the following language: "Assuming the right seemingly conferred in the revelations contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and conforming to the safer principles enunciated in the legendary teachings of the eldership, I, Joseph Smith, the present incumbent to the office of president of the Reorganized Church, definitely designate my eldest living son, Frederick Madison Smith, as the proper person to be chosen by the church as my successor in office, believing as I do that the Spirit of revelation and wisdom has manifested to me that such choice should be made as directed by the Spirit of the great Master-builder. The present incumbent of the office of president of the Reorganized Church states further that he has trust and confidence in that Spirit which called him to the position which he has held for the last half century of time, and more, that such manifestation will be given to the several eldership of the church as will confirm the advice and direction herein given."—SAINTS' HERALD, March 13, 1912; republished March 10, 1915.

And again we find bearing on the question: "I have been importuned to settle the question as to who should be my successor. We have advanced upon the hypothesis of lineal priesthood in this regard, and while I believe in it, I believe it is connected with fitness and propriety, and no son of mine will be entitled to follow me as my successor, unless at the time that he is chosen he is found to be worthy in character. I should not expect it. I now state to you, brethren, under the influence of, to me, the Spirit of God, that should I be overtaken by death before some of the things which are anticipated shall be wrought, you have my successor in your midst. I do not say that he should be chosen; if at the time that this emergency should occur he is found to be worthy let him be chosen, if unworthy let him be rejected and another chosen from the body as the revelation provides. And should he be found unworthy and another of my sons found worthy, let the line descend, as I believe that it ought to; for a man should be called to the office to serve in the church who had proved himself to be worthy of confidence and trust."—General Conference Minutes 1902, p. 541.

The qualifications belonging to that office are found in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42: "The duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church."

Dear brethren, under these instructions, following them as we may, it seems to me the way is clear for us. There is just one man only who will comply and can comply or qualify for this very important office, and as he is presented to us causes me a great deal of pleasure that my confidence is all that is needful for one man to have in another, in the integrity, and character, and ability of Frederick Madison Smith.

I therefore, now nominate; or at least move, that he become by due process of nomination and ordination the president of the high priesthood and President of the church, in which office are found those various gifts necessary for the success and maintenance of that work.

Seconding the motion, J. A. Tanner, president of the Quorum of High Priests, said:

While I rise before you in a parliamentary way to support this motion, I believe I do so with the concurrent opinion and sentiment of the entire church as represented in this body here to-day in General Conference assembled. It is with utmost confidence in God and in his church as an authoritative speaking body amongst men in the earth, and with confidence in his divine appointment, also with confidence in the subject under consideration in this motion, Frederick Madison Smith, that I take pleasure in seconding the motion.

It is not practicable in consideration of time and space for all speeches made in support of President Frederick M. Smith and the motion to be presented here. Among those made were the following:

W. H. GREENWOOD

As a representative of this great latter-day work in Great Britain, I take pleasure in supporting the motion already made before us. And I wish to say for the information of this great body, this motion or resolution that is before us this afternoon is greatly anticipated in Great Britain, and so far as my experience has gone I believe that our Brother Frederick Madison Smith has the entire confidence of the Saints in Great Britain.

It was my pleasure and privilege to meet our late President some twelve years ago in the British Isles, and I can assure you that his visit caused great rejoicing in Great Britain, the uplifting of the Saints and the establishment of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. Not only did they recognize in our late President a prophet, seer, and revelator, but they look forward with great expectation, especially since the death of our late President has been announced, to the coming forth of one whom they regard as a strong man.

Their expressions are rooted in language like unto this: They believe there is a great future before this church, and the man who is to lead this church to victory and to success is the one that is being nominated to succeed the late President Smith this afternoon. We regard our Brother Frederick M. as a man not only strong in character, but virtuous, and a man I believe who has been qualified by experience, especially during the last few years, and not only has he had this experience, but has received the advice and counsel of one who has stood before us for over half a century, giving him the benefit of his experience. And not only do we look upon our brother as a strong man, but we look upon him as the one who shall effect the organization of the church of Jesus Christ in this last day and age in which we live—a man to whom has come knowledge, and the one who has that peculiar faculty not only of gaining knowledge but of applying the same as necessity shall deem it advisable.

I deem it my duty to express these words, because many have been expressed in our mission, and because I know that if this motion prevails this afternoon, it shall cause great rejoicing throughout the mission.

J. R. LAMBERT

I want to speak a word for the benefit of perhaps a few, if any, who may be hesitating about this matter, and have not yet decided whether they should support this motion or not. I think it is very clear that Brother Frederick M. Smith is entitled to this position, if found worthy. It is also clear, so far as I know, that we have nothing that we can present against his worthiness or claim for worthiness to occupy in this position at the present time; and the only way open, it seems to me, is to put this, our brother, on trial, not to sit back idly and watch and say, "We will see what he will do," but to give him a cheerful and strong support in the duties belonging to his office and calling. That is the way and the only way in which we can test his ability and worthiness to serve us as a servant of God in this high office and calling. I am willing to do it the rest of my days, to the extent of my ability. We ought always to rejoice in the success of our brothers and not in their failure. The failure upon the part of my brethren grieves me, their success pleases me, and the better our brother shall acquit himself before God and this people, the more highly I will be pleased. I believe it is the same with you. Therefore we should give him liberal and earnest support in the duties of his office and calling.

JAMES MCKIERNAN

Along with my personal indorsement of Brother Frederick Madison Smith as an ex officio delegate of Nauvoo District, I present to you what was passed in our district conference, that we have full trust and confidence in the qualifications, steadfastness, and faithfulness of Brother Frederick Madison Smith, and should question of his being made First President come up for final action, and all due forms have been observed, that we favor his selection to the presidency of the high priesthood of the church, and more than this from us would be unnecessary for us to state on this occasion.

However, our association with his beloved father for a period of forty-four years has endeared to us his children, and to say that we rejoice to have the opportunity of thus participating in this memorable occasion certainly but faintly expresses the emotions that move us to-day.

J. W. WIGHT

I do not wish to become sentimental nor take up unnecessary time, but for the last twenty years I have been personally acquainted with the brother under consideration, and have carefully noted his career. I am satisfied in my mind that he has approved himself unto God.

I wish to relate an incident of my own experience with him that delineates what I believe to be one of the grandest characteristics that can be noted among men. It was my privilege on the last occasion of my having to go to the Sanitarium to have his company the entire way, and none, had he been a brother in the flesh, or a father, could have possibly been more solicitous for my welfare. And I well remember on arrival at Kansas City and departing from the train, how that though already burdened with baggage, he took hold of the heavy part of mine, literally weighting himself down, and carried that baggage.

I regard this as a characteristic of nobility, of brotherly love, of humility, as a server of men, a laborer together with God, and I can give him my hearty support in approval of the motion before us.

E. L. KELLEY

I have a word to say by reason of the fact that I have been working with President Frederick M. Smith to a greater or less extent for the past ten years. You will want to know how he works, and whether he is competent to perform his labors. I have been pleased in noting his work, the manner of its accomplishment and the carefulness before he passes upon a matter, in that he obtains all the information that it is possible for him to obtain before he arrives at a conclusion. That is commendable in anybody. He first satisfies his own mind that he is right before he speaks. I believe that he will be careful in the work that he does in behalf of this people.

I am willing to move forward in confidence in the support of him from what I have seen, and I believe that he will receive of the divine Spirit in order to help him, without which of course neither he nor anybody else could ever succeed as president. We trust and believe that God will be with him, and that our support will not be in vain. I trust that the Lord will continue to bless him.

F. A. SMITH

As Presiding Patriarch I want to say that I can heartily indorse this motion for the ordination of Brother Frederick M. Smith as the President of the church. I will give to him my support and help so far as I am able to do it so long as he moves in the ways of right. I know that he is a clean, honorable man, that he wants to do the will of God, and if we sustain him and uphold him, God will bless him and he will accomplish the work designed of God for him to do.

ELBERT A. SMITH

Probably there is no man in the assembly who has been more intimately associated with Frederick M. Smith than your speaker, and I can unhesitatingly say that I know of no man in the church more worthy of this position or better qualified. He will have the same unhesitating support that I have given him hitherto.

R. C. EVANS

Mr. Chairman, Brothers and Sisters: It is with profound pleasure and I deem it a duty to speak upon this occasion. As many of you know by the revelations of the Almighty, I was closely associated with Frederick Madison Smith as counselor in the First Presidency under his father. For years we served together in this capacity. I have sat with him not only as presiding officer at the conferences, but in the high councils of the church when cases of grave importance were being heard by us. I have been with him in almost every condition of life, those of pleasure and of hard work, and I have found him to be a careful, fair, honorable, Christian brother—modest and yet firm; sympathetic and yet just; tender and yet true to his convictions of that which is right. When in examination of cases before the High Council I have known him to study deeply in profound silence for a long time before he would pass one word of judgment.

I feel that God has called him to this high and honorable position, and knowing the man as I do, both in boyhood and manhood before he held the priesthood and since, I feel that the church is and should be happy in the selection God has made as his servant and our president in the person of Frederick Madison Smith.

Following the action sustaining President Frederick M. Smith, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, it is with peculiar feelings that we come before thee at this time. While we move in confidence and faith toward thee, we recognize our weakness, and we recognize the weakness of mankind.

We ask thee at this time that thou wilt sanctify by thy divine grace the action that we have taken to-day, and that thou wilt grant that it may not only have thy approval, but that thou wilt let the mantle of power and inspiration of the prophetic calling rest upon him that we have voted to-day to stand at the head of thy church on earth. Thou art aware, O God, of the terrible responsibilities therein, and we pray that in thy loving kindness thou wilt remember thy servant, our Brother Frederick Madison Smith, and wilt thou give unto him strength of mind and necessary courage and determination. Give unto him the physical powers that are necessary that we may be able to assist him at times and to direct the in the fear of God, and in the strength and inspiration of the power that thou alone can give—that he may lead them to better conditions, to better understanding of thy will, and that we may be able to assist him at times and to direct the affairs of the church with those whom thou shalt appoint to labor with him, that thy work may be prospered and receive new impetus and go forward with greater power and increase, to a greater degree than it has ever done before.

Wilt thou grant, O God, to strengthen the faith of thy people, and may this action, this day's work, bring to them renewed courage, and they move out with greater determination to serve thee. And may thy laws be made clear, and thy will be carried out more successfully under the administrations of the new presidency that now comes unto thy church, than, if possible, has been done under those before.

We ask thee therefore, to let thy Spirit with its tender, loving, inspiring influence be with thy people and rest and abide with thy servant. Wilt thou touch him at this time that he may know and feel the impress of the Spirit of God, and that it may be made manifest unto him that thy people have recognized him and sustained him. And wilt thou blessing be with the conference to its close, that it may redound to thy name's honor and glory, and the honor and upbuilding of thy kingdom in earth. In Jesus' name. Amen.

MINISTERIAL REPORTS

The following extracts from reports of ministers in charge made to the General Conference will be of interest to many.

J. A. GILLEN

In many localities there is a decided improvement shown, particularly that of Western Nebraska and Black Hills. . . . With one or two slight exceptions the work in Nebraska is improved. Iowa, with the possible exception of one district, shows the result of good work. . . . Saskatchewan District shows results far beyond any previous years, and the prospect for a harvest in the future is bright indeed. Many new openings effected, and the gospel in this district is being taken into Russian settlements, where it is gladly received. In Alberta, . . . the cooperation of local with general missionary forces has certainly accomplished good in local conditions. Manitoba, or Winnipeg District, must have attention this coming year by way of conference help. . . . Minnesota District is in a very good condition, but needs more help from the general missionary force, as is the case with North and South Dakota. . . .

The pleadings for help are beyond our ability to supply with our present force, but I am glad to say that in this extremity, in many instances, the local help has responded admirably, and the Lord has blessed them in so doing. This thought is ever in my mind: the cooperation of general with local workers, where they are privileged to represent the church in and through efforts with district and branches. Unselfish cooperation, under the impulses of divine power, such as moved the Master to do his Father's will, certainly will conserve the interest of the church throughout.

In conclusion, I see no reason for discouragement. The Lord in the closing days of the year has surely given us enough of his holy and divine power to indicate what the future will offer if we can enter unreservedly into the conflict with full purpose of heart, with no other thought than to espouse the purposes of God, as did our Lord and Master. May the Lord help us to do so.

J. W. RUSHTON

The general condition of this field is encouraging and the statistics are by no means a proper measure of the real work accomplished. The brethren of the missionary corps have labored with zeal and ability and also with unity, making our relations very pleasant and producing results in the work making for solidarity. We are pleased to say that branches have been organized in Illinois, Missouri and Kansas. All of them manifesting virility and spirituality. All the districts have adopted a uniform code of by-laws which makes it much easier and effective in keeping intelligent and systematic supervision over the work. Without exception all have approved of the lifting of the morale of the ministry in prohibiting the use of intoxicating liquor and tobacco. The priesthood meetings of both conferences and reunions are events which are enjoyed by all who take part.

P. M. HANSON

Encouraging results have followed the active labors of the ministry, both local and general. An improvement in the spiritual life and attendance of some of the branches is noted. Generally speaking an encouraging response has been given to spiritual, intelligent leadership. In some parts of the mission a greater demand exists for labors than we can supply. Our missionary force is not large. Owing to literary work and other conditions several of the seventy were localized; but they labored with benefit to the church. The summer schools that were held seemed to prove a point of contact between the church and the world that was worth while. The reunion through the presence of a number of the leading men of the church proved to be of special interest and value to those who attended.

R. C. RUSSELL

The greater number of the missionaries appointed by the authorities have remained in the field and done a splendid work of building up the general condition of the Saints and bringing others into the fold, those who were not privileged to remain at their post during the full time owing to lack of finances served faithfully also while at their appointed labors and ceased not to do all in their power in local work when they retired. In general our association together has been quite pleasant and what little difficulties we met in our pathway have to a goodly degree been overcome, and in most parts of the mission peace prevails. . . . Our reunions and conferences have been marked by the prevailing presence of the Spirit of the Lord, causing a general longing for the grand reunion from which there is to be no parting.

J. E. KELLEY

This newly apportioned mission is in need of laborers, surely. Without any district organization, few branches, and but a small number of widely-scattered Saints. So it is not difficult to see why it is an expensive field, both to live and to labor in. . . . Nevada and New Mexico have had little or no missionary labor this year. . . . Condition of the work: Some members are very zealous, living in a manner that helps. Others are noted as having need of improvement, at once. . . .

Generally, the work is advancing in an encouraging way. At several points we have fine prospects and many friends. Especially at Phoenix, where we are making the headquarters of the mission. The mission has paid more than its apportioned share of the church debt.

The conference should know that my individual labor has been very small during the year, because of bodily conditions. Yet, in caring, so far as I was able, for the duties as one in charge, God has blessed me, abundantly. My heart has been made glad, my soul filled, and my desire for righteousness and willingness to serve have been enlarged. It is with courage and rich hope that I, with the rest of the church, face the future and its work.

W. H. GREENWOOD

The conference year opened with very fair prospects, open air work received a fair amount of attention, and the brethren seemed somewhat encouraged by the hearing that they obtained, and tracts were freely distributed. Our annual conference was truly a feast to all who were fortunate enough to be in attendance, the chief feature of which was the marked progress of our young ministers, which gave the greatest of satisfaction to one and all. Then came the terrible blow to our nation and the work, caused by the war that is still raging throughout Europe. Our work during the past six months has been very much disturbed and in some instances disorganized thereby. . . .

Our branches in some directions have suffered very much; so much so, that I have felt it my duty to assist them under these trying circumstances, seeking to encourage them to use all the available material at their command, and thus keep their organizations intact. Organization is one of the forces that seem to be overlooked in a great measure, therefore special attention is herein demanded.

Speaking generally, and taking into consideration all the circumstances at present existing, i. e., war, the results attendant thereupon, such as the unsettled condition of mind, price of food, increasing rents and taxes, together with the constant appeal for aid for the wounded, refugees, widows and orphans, etc., I think the Saints may be said to be exercising a fair amount of self-control, which bespeaks their faith in God and the work.

Our meetings are of a fair spiritual character, and well attended, all things considered. The progress of the Saints is marked, and better understanding, and enlargement of mind is also noted.

H. N. HANSEN

It has in some respects been a trying year, owing to the sudden outbreak of war, bringing about disturbed conditions, which for a time made it almost impracticable to direct people's attention to anything but the terrible calamity that had so suddenly come upon the inhabitants of the earth. . . .

After about a month of excitement, people's minds seemed to return to almost normal conditions, and we have been able to prosecute our work, preaching the gospel of peace and good will towards man. The mission may be stated to be in good condition. In some places the prospects are brighter and more encouraging, while in others as about in the past. There have, however, been forty or more baptisms during the year and several others are near the door.

Our greatest increase has been in Germany, in which country Brother Kippe has been our only missionary. We have, however, some local brethren in that land who have been doing good work and to whom much credit is due, but some of them have had to respond to their countries' call to arms, thus crippling our force. Notwithstanding the disturbed condition Germany seems now to be the most encouraging part of the field, and if properly looked after will give good returns.

Help is needed both in Germany and Scandinavia and the mission should receive the support of the church. We are gradually being better understood and the distinction between us and the Utah people, in many instances, is being recognized, and I am convinced that a continuous, faithful and steady effort throughout the mission will eventually bring about good results.

J. F. CURTIS

With few exceptions the field is in good condition and most of the laborers have done well. We have baptized ten and four ninths persons to each man in the field. This does not include what has been done by the local force. During the year, seven reunions have been held in this mission with good results and should be continued, as they are of great help, spiritually, not only to the Saints but to many not of the church who attend and hear the gospel of Christ. The conferences of the districts have been well attended and are a great source of strength to the Saints. . . .

The outlook for the future is bright, as we have a noble band of workers that are doing what they can to live their religion and are laboring and sacrificing to spread the angel message. Administrations to the sick, in many instances have brought splendid results, for which we thank our heavenly Father. May we ever be worthy of his blessings.

U. W. GREENE

We were hopeful of having a successful year, for the determined opposition of the German Lutherans was waning and we were slowly making friends who were helpful to us. . . . We also received a supply of books from America and immediately enlarged the school till we had an enrollment of seventy-five, and an average attendance of about sixty. Most of the young men were of the better class who appreciated what we were doing for them and showed it in many ways. A number were learning English so they could talk with us, and we expected to add religious instruction to our curriculum during the year, but the sudden outbreak of the war changed every plan and finally, when martial law was declared, we were forced to close the school work.

In June, responding to an urgent request for school work and religious instruction among the villages of Mount Lebanon, I went to Roum, east of Sidon, and inquired into the situation. The people are friendly, honest, and seemed anxious to learn the gospel message. Brother Solomon Njeam accompanied me and proved of great help. I found him to be highly respected among his old friends and neighbors, and together we went from house to house, telling the story of the restoration of the gospel. At night many of the people would visit my room and listen as we explained the message of God. Among them were several Mohammedans who began to improve their home conditions and frequently said, "No one ever cared about our souls before." The power of God was displayed in healing in numerous instances, some of which caused me to marvel, and to praise the Lord for his goodness.

The sudden outbreak of the war compelled me to leave

there and return to Jerusalem, to save what funds we had in the banks if possible. It is not necessary to relate the trials of the next three months, suffice it to say that we felt it best to withdraw from the field, temporarily at least. Making such arrangements for the care of the Saints as we could, Brother Koehler, wife, and myself left Jerusalem in November and returned to America, arriving in Boston December 10.

During the year there were but three baptized; but in Mount Lebanon many expressed the desire for baptism; but I felt that more instruction was necessary before that step was taken, and that some one should be with them to assist them. I had intended remaining in that section until winter. I am satisfied that school work is necessary in Jerusalem, and that we need industries to assist the people to earn a living there.

Brother Jenkins and wife preferred to remain temporarily, than to endure the horrors of an ocean trip during the winter; they will probably leave there as soon as conference arranges to care for the mission.

W. M. AYLOR

This has been a hard year on us in the South from a financial standpoint. The South depends on cotton and oil to a great extent. Very poor price for these two products this year, and that made times hard. But we built some new churches and repaired several old ones, and I can see quite an improvement in many of the branches in a spiritual way. Altogether we think we have had a good, healthy growth this year. . . .

The excitement over converting the Indians has abated some in our field. I haven't changed my mind on this Indian question from what it was. I don't think we will accomplish much with them yet a while. It is true we can make a special effort among them and do a lot of baptizing, but I don't see much fruits from it. The Indian is like everybody else, he must be born again. I think the time is not far distant when there will be a great work done among them and the Jews. We don't expect to forsake them now, but will give them a reasonable portion of our time. We hope to continue in the conflict and do all the good we can among all nations.

PETER ANDERSON

With the exception of a few places the work in the Rocky Mountain Mission has made a decided advancement the last year. The Saints are developing spiritually and manifest a praiseworthy zeal and a desire to make all reasonable sacrifices for the cause. . . .

As I see it, our opportunities and prospects for a successful prosecution of our work in that field were never better, and I trust that the church shall be able to take advantage of conditions as they now present themselves. My association with the ministry and Saints in the mission have been very pleasant and profitable to me, and, I trust, helpful to them. Hoping and praying for the success of the work generally.

G. T. GRIFFITHS

The mission is in very good condition as a whole, and the prospects for the future are very bright indeed. There are several other young men who have offered their services to the church as general ministers, and thus the Lord is raising up an army of fine young men to carry the work to success. . . . Australia is an enterprising country and there is a demand from the people for the gospel.

J. CHAS. MAY

The mission is in fairly good order and prospects are bright for a continued increase. The return of those of the "pupu" people through the labors of those sent to the islands during the past few years has been of vast importance and the means of bringing about greater activity in all departments. . . . Many new chapels are in course of construction and others are in contemplation. . . . We have learned to love the brethren and sisters of the Islands of the Southern Pacific, and it is with great reluctance that we have turned our faces homeward to the land of Zion. We are consoled, however, by the thought that others will take up the work where we have left off.

F. M. SHEEHY

An average estimate shows progress. We are not even leaning towards discouragement. Upward and onward is our slogan.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: My attention has been so much engaged since my advent to this great land, that I have not been able to write to my brethren and sisters of the British Isles. Not that I have forgotten them, but there have been many points of interest here in the land of Zion, and since the opening of conference our time has been taken up in many ways.

My reception among the brethren is everything that I could have wished for. Indeed I received a right hearty welcome all along the line of my journey.

The Saints of Independence gave me such welcome, it made me feel at home to a very great extent. I herewith tender to them my heartfelt thanks.

My advent at the home of our beloved Brother and Sister Rushton, came as a surprise to them, at 7 a. m., March 17. Still they gave me a royal welcome, which continued for the two weeks of my stay there.

Here at Lamoni the conference has been in session nine days, and we are now looking for the closing session of this great gathering almost any day. The conference has been peaceful, and the services of Sunday school, Religio, and the conference have been very uplifting.

I shall write again shortly, when I have experienced what I shall call the normal conditions of the work in America.

I trust that the day is not far distant when we may be able to return the spirit of good will thus shown.

In bonds,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

News from Branches

Glover, Michigan

Glover Branch is very much alive. We are a happy people, earnest and joyous, working together in unity and living one for another. We receive the blessing and Spirit of God. Our branch is enlarging more and more, a great many are investigating the gospel, which we feel will bring some results soon. Elder S. T. Pendleton, of Beaverton, conducted meetings at Bentley and Glover last September, and thirteen were received into the church, myself included. Our presiding Elder Matthew Umphrey and Elder George E. Burt, of Beaverton, conducted meetings at Moores Junction, three miles north of here. Brother Burt was called home and Elder Umphrey is continuing the meetings.

I receive great peace and comfort through the Holy Spirit. Those who are slow to accept the gospel on account of friends and relatives should not hesitate. I have had my experiences in this line. There were those who thought this gospel to be of Satan, and they were sincere in their belief. I felt that I was alone, and no one seemed to be with me except God. At times I thought he, too, had forgotten me. I imagined I suffered something of what Christ was suffering in the Garden of Gethsemane. I did not know the work was right, but something seemed to urge me on, and I fully decided to go ahead, and on September 7 Brother Walter Wilcox and Sister May Wilcox and myself were baptized. We will never forget the day. It was beautiful. We felt that there was truth in the work or we would not have been blessed as we were. In time we received assurance and evidence enough that we shall never doubt this to be the real church of Christ.

Now that I have obeyed the call others of my family have been persuaded through prayer and the help of God that this church is true, and I hope before long to see them with us in the work.

We want the Saints and others of the district to come to Glover this fall, as district conference will be held here. We can meet those who come by train at Bentley. All will find a hearty welcome.

We ask the prayers of all that we may continue steadfast and come up higher. Pray for our meetings also.

Your sister in the gospel,

STERLING, MICHIGAN.

MRS. BYRDIE CALVIN MAGARGEE.

Norwalk, Connecticut

Though the outlook here has at times been dark and discouraging and many of God's people seemed to have forgotten him, there still remained a few faithful souls who remembered their covenant, stuck to the work, and kept the branch organization alive. The clouds are scattering now, and the bright sunlight of God's favor is again shining upon us. As a branch we are rapidly taking on new life, and we expect to be able to give a good account of ourselves in the very near future.

Since disposing of our former church building several years ago we have been holding our Sunday school and sacrament services at the home of Sister Bertha Buttery, our Sunday school superintendent. Occasionally an elder would drop in and we would have preaching. These visits were not very frequent, however.

The work in this locality was opened up by Elder A. H. Parsons. Since then a number of our elders have labored here, among whom might be mentioned Brethren U. W. Greene, William Anderson, George Robley, A. E. Stone, and A. D. Angus. No doubt there were others, but the writer being practically a newcomer is not very familiar with branch history, so can not name them.

At one time, some few years ago, the work is said to have flourished here, and we are optimistic enough to believe that before many moons it will prosper again.

There are some fifty-four names on our records, but of course, we have not that many active members. Some have gone to their reward, some have moved into other regions, and a few have lost their hold and have joined other churches. But we have enough left to form the nucleus of a thriving branch, and we are glad to report that all seem to have the interests of the work at heart, and those who are able are doing all they can to roll it onward.

In July, 1914, the writer was authorized to look into the matter of building and ascertain what the prospects were. Finding things apparently favorable, a building committee was elected, and through their efforts we are now the proud possessors of our own little chapel, handsome in appearance, conveniently located, and thoroughly up-to-date in all respects. It has been pronounced by competent authorities to be the finest in the district.

Brother Homer Buttery was the builder, and he made our money go farther than we ever thought possible. Considerable labor was also contributed by Brethren Ernest Buttery, Judson Cable, and others. Many friends and well-wishers helped us, some with cash, others with labor. A handsome pulpit was presented by Fred Bedell and Homer Buttery, the former contributing the labor and the latter securing the material. Mr. Bedell spared neither time nor labor in its construction and as a result it is a fine piece of work in both design and construction. Mr. Bedell is not as yet one of us so far as membership is concerned, but we have hopes that he will see that we are on the right road and will want to be one of us. His wife and little ones are active members of our branch and Sunday school.

We are fortunate in that from the beginning we were able to have everything that is essential to our comfort—permanent seats, aisle carpets, pulpit set, toilets, etc. We deeply appreciate God's goodness to us in thus providing for us, and especially so when we realize that it is usually customary to start with the building only, and to add these other comforts at later times.

Our building is worth fifteen hundred dollars and has only a small debt outstanding against it, and even this is held by our own members.

Our opening services were held Sunday, March 12, and, despite the inclement weather, were quite successful. We had with us a number of out-of-town Saints, among whom were Bishop John Zimmermann, Patriarch A. D. Angus, District President Ephraim Squire, and many others. Brother Zimmermann spoke in the afternoon on the financial side of our work. Brother Angus remained with us for a few days, and in his kindly way preached several very good sermons. He possesses the rare ability of getting his points home, not by forcing them, but by good logic and kindness of manner. Despite the fact that in opposition we had what was perhaps the biggest attraction of the year, an industrial fair, we had fair attendance and good interest.

The newspapers also treated us very kindly, giving us a two column article, illustrated with cuts of Frederick M. Smith, and our late President. This is encouraging, for in past years the local papers have not always been favorable to our work.

At our dedication, which we expect will take place soon after the close of General Conference we hope to be able to make another effort to reach the people. We look for a number of Brooklyn Saints to be with us then, including some good musicians. We also hope that some of the missionary force may be traveling this way then, some could stop over for a series of meetings. We need men who are capable of stirring things up, and who could stay as long as the interest warranted.

We have tried to cajole Brother Daniel Macgregor into giving us a visit, but he is a man "under authority," and goes where he is sent. He is about the most capable "stirrer" that we have ever met, and we can not help wishing that the appointing authorities might see fit to send him this way.

We have been very fortunate in having in the person of Elder Ephraim Squire, of Brooklyn, a district president who is thoroughly alive to his responsibilities. Regardless of the long distance which separates our branches, he has met with us at least once a month, and has been a real help to us with kindly advice and encouragement. We have thus been made to feel that our interests are shared by others besides ourselves. And by observing the obstacles which others have to contend with in the performance of their duties, we have been encouraged to put up with our own little inconveniences. We are glad to note that the recent district conference saw fit to sustain Brother Squire for another year.

We are not going to be idle, and we fully expect to have plenty of encouraging news to report in the near future.

W. I. NEWMAN.

Corrections

In my letter of December 24, 1914, I stated that the Sheperdson Lumber and Building Company furnished the lumber and timber for the church until the Saints were able to pay for it. It should have been stated that they furnished all lumber and timber to the close of the year 1913 free.

Book Reviews

SONGS OF THE OUTLANDS.—Henry Herbert Knibbs. Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Street, Boston, Massachusetts. $1.25 net. Mr. Knibbs knows the West. He knows men and horses. All he combined in this book of poems, giving the joy of desert and plain together, with a tang of bitter experience. Mr. Knibbs is likened to Bert Hart in his portrayal of the "diamond in the rough," who has played an important role in subduing the West. The freedom and sublimity of the West is suggested in these lines from "The hills":

"Shall I leave the hills, the high, far hills that shadow the morning plain?

Shall I leave the desert sand and sage that gleams in the winter rain?

Shall I leave the ragged bridle-trail to ride in the city street—

To snatch a song from the printed word,
Or sit at a Master's feet?"

THE RAGGED MESSENGER.—W. R. Maxwell. Dodds Merril Company, Indianapolis, Indiana. $1.35 net. The principal character in The Ragged Messenger believes that the great message once delivered in the Holy Land is repeated to mankind at intervals, and that he is himself one of the appointed messengers in this work. He comforts the afflicted and lowly, mingles with the outcast, is tempted by a sudden access to wealth, which he administers as trustee. A story plot is developed which carries interest without detracting from the main idea. The author in his preface says: "The Ragged Messenger is an attempt to display the contrast between wealth and poverty under conditions of civilization at this time of day." The Churchman in reviewing this book says: "There are few works we know that display so vividly the contrast between wealth and poverty as it affects the social medium in which the Christian message must to-day be delivered."

PAN-AMERICANISM.—Roland G. Usher. The Century Company, New York. $2 net, postage 10c. Mr. Usher, author of "Pan-Germanism" and "The Rise of the American People," is in charge of the department of history at Washington University, and has studied at Paris, Oxford, and Cambridge.

His new book, Pan-Americanism, is graphic and forceful in style, coming close to the American of this particular hour. It is about what is now happening elsewhere, and what may happen to America after the war. The author says in his preface: "I have sought to make as clear as possible within the confines of a brief volume the relation of the United States to the present European situation and to the probable or possible crisis which the end of the war may precipitate. With past history and diplomacy, with strategy and geography, I have dealt where it seemed to me essential to view present factors in their historic relationships; but the major part of the volume has been devoted to the present condition of the United States and of Latin America, with especial attention to Pan-Americanism as a possible solution of American problems. I have not scrupled to examine hypotheses about the future, to compare the probable results of policies, and discuss remote possibilities of war and conquest. The formulation of a national decision in regard to the interests to be furthered and the policies best adapted to that end can result only from an active interchange of opinions between the different sections and interests in the nation and fairly demands argument about past history and present factors. To analyze, to discuss, and to examine has therefore been my province and I have left advocacy and proselytizing for those who will draw conclusions from the body of ascertained facts I have done my best to gather."

BOYHOOD AND LAWLESSNESS. THE NEGLECTED GIRL.—Ruth S. True. Survey Associates, Incorporated, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City. This book deals with the neglected boys and girls of New York City, West Side, discussing causes leading to their lawlessness and remedies for same. In the introduction to the first part, "Boyhood and lawlessness," the author says: "The aim of this study, therefore, is to trace the principal influences which have formed the West Side boy; to consider some of the means which have heretofore been employed to counteract these influences; and to picture him as he is, exemplifying the results of circumstances for which not he but the entire community is responsible." Introducing the latter part, "The neglected girl," the author remarks: "The problem of waywardness among West Side girls can not be solved by long distance methods. Their environment must be made safe and their pleasures recognized and made decent . . . regular school attendance with manual training and flexible course of study; regular hours for sleep, for food, for work, and for play; plenty of nourishing food; fresh air and outdoor life; the social discipline of community life. . . . The same things would help to prevent; they would preserve the West Side girl to society as a daughter and as a mother, as a worker and as a citizen." While dealing with the conditions of New York, West Side, the suggestions of this book would be helpful anywhere. This volume would be valuable to those studying the problems of childhood and youth.

PHILLIS' STORIES OF BIG ANIMALS.—Lenore Elizabeth Mulets. Illustrated by Charles Livingston Bull, Frank Vining Smith, and John Goss. L. C. Page and Company, Boston, Massachusetts. $1.25. This is a book for children. Animals told about are "The wolf family," "The bear family," "The cat family," "The elephant," "The camel," "The beaver," "The bison," "The deer family." The book contains a description of the animals named, their homes and habits. Practical suggestions for study follow each division of the volume, interspersed with adapted stories, fairy tales, legends, and snatches of poetry. Written in conversational style, containing as it does general information with reference to the animals described, this volume of 289 pages commands the attention of all children, and is invaluable as a stimulus to further study.

HENRY ASHTON.—Robert Addison Dague. The Milwaukee-Social Democratic Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. 25 cents. In this little volume the author represents the wreck of the Osceola, off the coast of California, and the experience of several of the rescued passengers and their establishment on the island of Zanland. The author says: "The author and the Reverend B. M. Fay, of the United States, visited the island recently and were astounded and gratified at finding in successful operation a Socialistic government in a fertile and beautiful island inhabited by more than one million of highly intelligent people. In chapter twenty we have described what we saw and heard, confidently believing that many readers will be interested in a description of their institutions and their methods of solving the problems growing out of the relations of capital and labor."

SERVICE

The word service is the watchword of the twentieth century.

The human family is awakening to the fact that they are indeed a family, and such relationship demands service to and for each other.

We desire to be of some service to you in a line in which we are peculiarly fitted—hence our new department.

It's this way:

There is a right and a wrong way of doing things—an effective and an ineffective way. We want to help you do your advertising or announcing in the right way, without cost to you. It is entirely free to our people.

The proposition is to get the most out of what you pay for printing. We want to show you how.

We have recently seen samples of advertising used by some people that were certainly unattractive, and could not command respectful attention. It often happens that your facilities for getting what you want are not good. The place you have your printing done may not be equipped for doing the kind of work you want unless you are able to specify exactly what you want and how it shall be done, and then they may not be able to handle it.

This Is Our Proposition

If you intend to do any advertising in your missionary or branch work, no matter what kind, just send us your copy, and without cost to you, we will promptly advise you, by personal letter, with careful suggestions as to the best way to get the results you want.

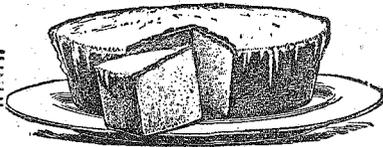

If you intend to advertise in any way to increase your business, send us a copy of the wording you want to use, or give us the idea as clearly and definitely as possible, and we will word it for you in convincing style.

It doesn't matter whether you have your printing done at the Herald Publishing House or not. We will give you the same careful attention whether you do or not. However, if you wish to have us give you the advantage of our extensive equipment and facilities, we will promptly quote you lowest prices delivered to your post office.

We are prepared to do this because we have on our force a brainy young fellow who has a complete course in advertising to his credit and is experienced in this work. He feels the true spirit of a Latter Day Saint and is willing to be at your service. Complicated work will receive the combined attention of the departments concerned.

REMINISCENSES OF THE LATE CONFERENCE

Conference opened with the reading of the Twenty-third Psalm. In the spirit of that sublime Psalm it went forward. There may have been moments of backsliding, but always we came back to that confession of faith, "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want."

During the year death had claimed our aged president, Joseph Smith, and word had come that President Frederick M. Smith was seriously ill. The church could sense the import of those words, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death," but fortunately could add, "I will fear no evil: for thou art with me."

Never during our experience have we attended a conference at which a more serious purpose was manifested, or a greater desire to move intelligently and to secure divine direction. Conditions were such as we had never before confronted; yet the church demonstrated her ability to meet unexpected emergencies and ride over them with even keel.

UNEXPECTED REVERSES

It seemed at times that the powers of darkness perceived their opportunity. Not only was President Frederick M. Smith detained from the entire conference, but at a critical time when their presence was needed, Apostle U. W. Greene was called home by the sickness of his wife and Apostle J. W. Rush-ton was summoned home on account of the death of his wife's father, while two others of the Quorum of Twelve missed several important sessions on account of sickness, and Bishop E. L. Kelley was called away by the death of his father-in-law. But the power of God is greater than the power of the Adversary, and the conference moved steadily forward with unshaken confidence.

SACRAMENT SERVICE FOR THE MINISTRY

On Sunday afternoon the priesthood of all grades met in the lower auditorium of the church for prayer service and to partake of the Lord's Supper.

This meeting was most inspirational. The room was filled almost to overflowing with the ministry of the Melchisedec and Aaronic orders. A great degree of the Spirit was present. The time was all too short for the service, and many expressed a desire that other such meetings might be held in the future.

The ministry were brought closer together, and the observance of that most solemn and impressive sacrament, the Lord's supper, had a very wholesome influence upon the conference. We endeavored to impress upon those present the thought that true greatness is manifested in the ability to meet an emergency; that the ministry could best demonstrate true greatness by meeting the present emergency in a courageous, Christlike spirit; that men should rule their own spirits, and the greater the provocation the more rigorous should be their self-control.

THE MUSICAL FEATURES

On account of secular work, the General Chorister Albert N. Hoxie, discovered that he could not attend the conference. His genial personality was missed, but the work of his department was ably carried on by Sister Audentia Anderson, with the assistance of Brethren Paul N. Craig, Frank A. Russell, Harold Burgess and others.

The oratorio, "Olivet to Calvary," was twice rendered and was greatly appreciated by large audiences. The missionary chorus was popular, as always. The annual serenade about town was another feature appreciated by those so greatly favored as to receive the attention of the strolling night choir. The writer had retired, weary to the point of exhaustion, when presently rhythmic footsteps and happy laughter were heard. A moment later that splendid hymn, a musical coronal to the memory of David H. Smith, swelled upon the breeze, "The Saints shall wear robes as the lilies." It was at once a benediction and an incentive. God bless our singers.

THE LECTURE COURSES

Professors S. A. Burgess and Floyd M. McDowell of Graceland College occupied on alternate mornings on "The history of philosophy" and "The history of education." These eight o'clock morning lectures to the priesthood were so interesting and instructive that the general public clamored for admittance. It is a debatable question whether we would gain or lose by throwing them open to all conference attendants. Primarily they were intended for the priesthood only.

Criticism of these lectures, so far as criticism has reached our ears, is entirely favorable. Probably the mere facts stated by the lecturers may be forgotten to a large extent,—the incentive to personal thought and research is the important thing, the acceleration of mental processes in the craniums of the auditors.

One elder complained that he had never been able to buy books such as are cited by the lecturers, hence could not pursue orderly courses of study, and now feels in a way rebuked by these young men by the very presentation of their high ideals.

It was not the intent of the promoters of these lectures to chide the elders, and it is quite foreign to the spirit of the lecturers to do so. Wherein individual elders are and have been hampered by lack of means to secure books they are blameless. But even after that is granted, by direction and suggestion many may be led to avail themselves of means to efficiency that might otherwise remain unimproved.

Many of the elders spend some time, perhaps days or weeks, sometimes months, in cities where there are good free public libraries. If interested in particular subjects and cognizant of the authors who may profitably be consulted, they can put these libraries to very good use. Again, most of them can secure by purchase or loan at least one or two good books each year, and if working in rural fields can carry these books with them and give them a most thorough study, which will be better than to run hastily through many volumes.

THE COLISEUM MEETINGS

The Lamoni Coliseum had been offered to the Presidency for use during the conference free of charge, excepting for the regular expense of light, heat, janitor services, etc. The total amount of this expense was $91.58. The basement was used as a dining hall, conducted by the local branch, and the auditorium was used for a special series of preaching meetings. One half of the expense was met by the local branch and the other half, together with expense of advertising the special meetings ($21.85), was met by local Saints by subscription (as they had expressed a desire to do that rather than that collections should be taken up). The amount thus raised defrayed the expense mentioned without expense to the conference and left a balance in hand of thirty-six cents. Bishop Evans, who conducted the special preaching services, received no collection or financial remuneration, giving his services freely, equally with others of the ministry, the singers, and others who served the church in various capacities. We have been thus explicit in order that there may be no misunderstandings.

Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, was the attraction at the series of meetings mentioned, occupying from Sunday, April 4, to Sunday, April 18, inclusive. He fully demonstrated his ability to hold the interest of the people, and the success of the meetings was all that had been anticipated. At practically every service the coliseum was crowded to its limit and the comment, particularly among resident Saints and nonmembers, was very favorable and enthusiastic. One object in holding the meetings was to reach nonmembers in this community, and in this considerable success was achieved.

We should have stated that conference having adjourned on Saturday, the Evans' meetings for the closing Sunday were transferred to the brick church, by agreement between Brother Evans and the local branch authorities. The church, including galleries and rostrum, was crowded at all three services. Baptism was administered at the close of the afternoon meeting, and including those baptized during previous days there were sixteen baptisms, of which eleven were performed by Bishop Evans. These baptisms are not cited as an index to the success of the meetings, as it is of course impossible to tell how many of them were the direct result of the meetings, or yet to estimate the good done but not manifested by any outward confession, but on the whole it is evident to the writer that a great deal of good was accomplished.

CHOOSING A PRESIDENT OF THE HIGH PRIESTHOOD

It fell to the lot of this conference to choose a successor to the late lamented President Joseph Smith to occupy as president of the high priesthood and president of the church. In this the Sixty-second General Conference was distinguished from all others since the memorable conference of 1860, at Amboy, Illinois. It fell to the lot of few men to attend both these conferences, but at least one man, Brother Charles E. Blair, of Lamoni, Iowa, had that distinction.

The unanimity of sentiment in the selection of Frederick Madison Smith as the man divinely appointed to fill the position designated was most remarkable and gratifying. There was not one dissenting vote among the delegates and ex-officio members, neither among the nondelegates, all of whom were permitted to vote after the regular vote had been taken. Such an indorsement and expression of confidence should be very cheering to the heart of Brother Fred M., as he is usually called by the Saints.

OUR DAILY HERALD

We undertook the publication of a daily HERALD during the conference with a degree of trepidation.

Yet the importance of this conference warranted such an undertaking, even though it might prove to be a losing proposition financially. About eighteen hundred subscriptions were received.

We feel rather proud of the HERALD that was put forth during the conference, considering all the difficulties encountered. The writer can make this statement without embarrassment, because his time was taken up with other work and the credit belongs almost exclusively to the associate editor, Brother John F. Garver. In felicitating ourselves on this success we do so of course with the full realization that no conference daily will ever meet the desires of the people in the way of revealing fully the spirit of the conference and reporting the thousand and one intimate and personal details that none but a reckless man would attempt to report. Those things must for ever be forfeited by the nonattendant.

THE PARTING

No matter how strenuous the conference may be or how hard the grind, no matter how welcome adjournment may be, the final breaking up brings a feeling of sadness and melancholy. It is a splendid experience to mingle with the ministry from many fields, to stand shoulder to shoulder with them for a fortnight, to confer with them, and when it is over and done, and they shake your hand and say good-by, with honest tears brimming their eyes, it is impossible to resist a feeling of sadness.

But, as at all conferences, the moment of adjournment came (after a long and busy forenoon session), and the visiting delegates and ex officios hied themselves away homeward. The memorable conference of 1915 was over and done, its record written in a book, "spread on the minutes" by our faithful secretary and his assistants. God grant that the record thus conscientiously made may bring the church no loss. And may the blessings of heaven be with those who at the closing of conference scattered to many fields to carry on the work of the church.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

OUR WORK

NUMBER II—REQUIRING AN ARMY

The Lord sometimes speaks of the church as his army, and so it is. God purposes, too, that his army shall become very great. And indeed it must needs become mighty, for there lies before it a mighty struggle.

We have seen that all are required to bear arms in this warfare, that "all are called." And so we sing:

God is marshaling his army
For the rescue of his truth,
He is calling now to battle,
Both the aged and the youth.

It has come to be an axiom of warfare that a volunteer army, fighting for the existence of country and home, is more mighty and more terrible than one drafted and fighting from compulsion. Now God has a volunteer service; one in which the soldier not only voluntarily enlists, but in which he becomes actively engaged only upon his own volition. In this, as in all other points, the army of the Lord differs from the armies of men, for the great cause at stake requires an integrity found only among volunteers who serve from a deep devotion to duty, and who know no fear and hesitate at no obstacle.

So it is that the army of the Lord is unlike armies for worldly empire. Service therein to be effectual must be whole-hearted and cheerfully rendered; to be highly efficient it must be constant. A lessening of activity brings a weakening of devotion, exposing a vulnerable point against which the enemy is ever alert to strike. Hence,

There must be no furlough granted;
Never must the flag be furled.

Again, enlistment in the ranks of God is not for one or three years. It is until the full and complete purposes of the Father are achieved in this world and in the world to come; and it claims of each soldier all the energies of his entire being, for an enlistment for life and of all the capabilities of life is the sentiment of the words:

We have all for life enlisted,
In the army of the Lord.

Finally, every soldier at the post of duty every hour is the slogan of the forces of the Master. In the armies of men others sleep while the sentry stands watch. In the army of God it is not so. The enemy of righteousness is not only in constant attack upon the main army, he is also ever at work with his "snipers" to pick off at unguarded moments individual warriors. He never sleeps. At darkest midnight, in the broad light of day, ever and always he stands alert and terrible. And he never fails to strike the man who lowers his shield. That is why we sing:

There can be no sleeping soldiers,
In the army of the Lord.

If one rests upon his arms or falls asleep he does so at his peril.

God has called his army "For the rescue of his truth." This is the cause we serve, and this is why we must needs be ever ready. We go out against an enemy of long activity, and of the accumulated cunning of the ages, the end of whose every act has been to strangle from the lives of men the truth of God, and to snuff out from the world the light thereof. "The Devil . . . from the beginning . . . abode not in the truth." It was he who persuaded our forefathers to disregard the truth and believe a lie; and from that day forward has the battle been on.

To conserve to this generation the truth of God;

to hold aloft its great light that all may find the way of preparation, the converging lines of restoration culminating in the triumph of latter days; to keep that light strong and unflinching that it be not extinguished as in former dispensations; to hold the citadel of God, and to retake from satanic powers all that may be reclaimed from the wreckage of the past—this is the work of the church of Christ.

Little wonder, then, that God's army must become very great, in devotion, in service, in watchfulness, in purity, in wisdom and divine power. As is the strength of the volunteer, so is the strength of the army, organized for a divine and an eternal purpose. Hence,

Let us keep the camp fires blazing,
Let us send abroad his word:
There are glorious victories coming
For the army of the Lord.

J. F. GARVER.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

DEFRAUDERS IMPRISONED.—Mayor Roberts and fifteen other men convicted of election frauds in Terre Haute, Indiana, have been incarcerated in the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, for terms ranging from one to six years.

ROOSEVELT TRIED.—Theodore Roosevelt is on trial at Syracuse, New York, under charges brought by William Barnes of New York, for libel and fifty thousand dollars damages, growing out of statements by Mr. Roosevelt in criticism of the Republican party machine and Mr. Barnes.

THAW GAINS POINT.—Harry K. Thaw was on the 23d by Supreme Court Justice Hendrick of New York, granted a trial by jury on the question of his sanity. The state's attorneys say they will appeal, asking for a stay of execution granting such trial until the matter it passed upon by a higher court.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—The report that Villa had defeated Obregon seems to be erroneous. Obregon is said now to have been the victor in the recent fighting north of Mexico City. Villa is reported to be fortifying Agua Calientes against Obregon's advance northward, and claims to have checked this advance. The Villa movement in the West is said to be collapsing. With the support of the United States authorities, efforts are being made to induce the several factions of Mexico to agree upon a man whom they can support as president. Peace is thought to be unlikely at this time, however.

REPLY TO GERMANY.—Replying to the recent German note charging the United States with one-sided neutrality, the United States authorities proclaim the policy of the United States to be, as it has been, the upholding of its rights against any and all belligerents, and the enforcement of the laws of neutrality in force at the time the war began. It is claimed that at no time has the United States yielded any right as a neutral to any belligerent. It is urged that an embargo on arms at this time would be a direct violation of neutrality; and it is stated that to consider such a course is out of the question.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Russian advance in the Carpathians seems to have been checked. The Austrians are said to have virtually evacuated Bukowina in Southern Galicia. Fierce fighting is reported in the vicinity of Ypres, Belgium, which point the Germans seem determined to take from the British. A Turkish torpedo boat has been destroyed by British vessels. The British submarine E-15, ran ashore and was blown up in the Dardanelles. Boat communications between England and Holland have been stopped by the British admiralty. Austrian and Italian forces have fired on each other along the international border. Austria is rushing troops to the border. Rumor continues to suggest the entrance of Italy, Greece and Roumania into the war.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

HEARING THE FACTS.—The Norwalk (Connecticut) Hour gave first page prominence and two columns to a write-up of our church, its history, development, reorganization, work and institutions, with a cut of our late President Joseph Smith, and of President Frederick M. Smith, in connection with the announcement of the formal opening on March 7 of our new church building at Norwalk. This most excellent article is one of many which in various communities are setting forth the facts with reference to the latter-day work, and which are helping in securing for our cause an unbiased hearing. Among other things The Norwalk Hour says:

These people . . . should not be confounded with the Mormons of Utah . . . ; between them and the Utah people there exists a world of difference . . . the Reorganized Church holding that such doctrines as polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-God worship, etc., taught by the Utah Church, are abominations in the sight of God. . . . In the light of the foregoing facts, the claim of the local members of the Reorganized Church that they have no sympathy for, nor connection with the sect in Utah, seems reasonable, and it would be an injustice to class them in the same category. They have suffered enough through this misunderstanding, and it is to be hoped that they will no longer be obliged to expend time and effort in denying responsibility for the abominations they hate, but will now be permitted to direct their efforts toward the upbuilding of their work in these parts.

GOD'S HABITATION

In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.—Ephesians 2: 22.

This is one of a variety of figurative forms in which is expressed very beautifully God's regard for his church. The church is truly represented as the habitation of God, and in this divinely environed sanctuary his people find the most delightful rest, safety, and comfort. The land of Canaan, the city of Jerusalem or Zion, the tabernacle and temple, heaven, and the heart of his Saints are all in glowing similitude referred to as the habitation of God; but the most fittingly appropriate is that figure where the church is signified as the dwelling of God, and there he does signally show himself present by his Holy Spirit's power, and thus dwells among them as they venerate, extol and praise his holy name.

Of all love delightfully expressed, the love that God manifests to his church is the greatest. Love is God's constant delight in that which is good (Isaiah 61: 8). The gracious sovereign affection he bears to his covenant people, and that especial benevolence to all mankind is shown repeatedly in the word (Ephesians 2: 4; 1 John 4: 19; 1 John 3: 16). I would not imply he possessed the passion of love as we do; but within his glorious attributes burns that benevolent purpose and great and mighty strength to deliver, bless and save his people. His deep, abiding and unswerving love is shown in his wise designs and plans for the eternal happiness of his Saints. He loves the church with a devotion that is everlasting, immutable and free. He prizes it as his peculiar treasure, and as such he exercises his loving care without cessation. His love is more than a sentiment of gratitude; it is a high and noble expression of love that seeks our happiness and well being, that ennobles, directs, and entices us to ways of holiness.

There are several figurative representations in the word in which God represents his holy people, or church, as the special dwelling in which has been fixed his glorious residence therein. He seems to have chosen the church for his hallowed rest, and over it gleams his watchful eye. His heart and affections are upon it, provided the membership seek his will, and in spiritual chiding he longs for its highest development, that it might become "a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle." The church in royal splendor, in the language of the text, is represented as a building fitly framed and joined, and truly is "an habitation of God through the Spirit."

In the consideration of this structure we will first notice its foundation; second, its materials; third, the union and harmony of its materials; and fourth, its hallowed and glorious purposes of erection. Let us then notice its

DURABLE FOUNDATION

The foundation is the basic part of the building, which supports the other parts. The Lord, through the Prophet Isaiah, in glowing metaphor, says, "Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation" (Isaiah 28: 16). Jesus Christ is that foundation, and the church rests upon him. Truly "the foundation of God standeth sure," and with certainty we herald it as a durable part.

This Christ is the foundation of all the hopes, comfort, and happiness of the people of God. He is the ground work that is reliable, durable, and sure. He is the basis of the covenant of grace made with the church. He is the "sure foundation" on whom his people can rest their hopes, and will never fail them or deceive them. He is the "precious corner stone" that unites and binds the several factors of the structure together. He blends Jews and Gentiles in one common brotherhood. He breaks down the "middle wall," or barriers of race distinction, and unites implacable enemies into a federation of common welfare.

Paul says, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Corinthians, 3: 11).

Peter responsive to the same figure as Isaiah, declares:

Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Upon you therefore which believe he is precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed.—1 Peter 2: 6-8.

This firm, solid, immovable Christ, is truly the "rock of ages" upon which the salvation of the elect depends.

Paul again says, "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone" (Ephesians 2: 20). The foundation of the apostles and prophets is that foundation which they laid by their preaching and doctrine, which was Christ. It is wrong to conclude the apostles and prophets were a part of the foundation, for they were especially employed in building upon this foundation that had already been laid. With one chief corner stone to rest upon, and one spirit to inspire and control them, the apostles and prophets laid their foundation, which was Christ, and thus the church was builded together for an habitation of God.

These apostles and prophets as well as other officers of the church were confessors of the truth, which was Jesus Christ as the one foundation. The foundation of the church is not so much in the witnesses of the truth as it is in the truth itself. The truth which sustained the martyrs and ancient defenders of the faith is within itself immovable. These early apostles and prophets laid the first course upon this foundation, in that generation and were careful to recognize and build only on this one, which united and held together the entire structure. It is therefore, hardly probable that anything so finite and susceptible to mistake as we know these humans were would enter in and become a part of the foundation of the Christian church. True they, through the aid of the Spirit of God were faithful in teaching the fixed pattern and standard of the true doctrine given by Christ and thus were loyal in preaching Christ, but these facts did not constitute them a part of the foundation. This foundation was too deep and broad to admit of anything human.

Paul again assures us, "and that rock was Christ" (1 Corinthians 10:4). Christ himself says, "upon this rock I will build my church," which leads some to believe the rock was the rock of revelation, yet this conclusion is not the whole truth. While Peter had received a revelation conveying knowledge to his mind, yet the facts of that revelation were the most important matter, and that knowledge was the fact that Jesus was the Christ. The rock, Christ, and the revelation that brings the knowledge of that rock, are both necessary.

This rock foundation was truly "elect" and "precious," and furnishes us with a basis for building that is strong as the pillars of heaven, against which not even the "gates of hell" can possibly prevail. On Jesus Christ all the interests of the church rest. He is the central figure. By him is sustained the whole weight of this massive structure, for he upholds all things by the word of his power. He is the ground of hope to guilty man, and the only true foundation of peace, comfort, and wisdom. All the great and precious promises God has made to men are made through him, "for all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen" (2 Corinthians 1:20). Such promises being ratified by his blood, and their accomplishment secured to the heirs of promise, we glory in his holy name, and look upon him as "the desire of all nations." Upon this foundation reposes the church, and we may conclude its strength, immovableness and durability is capable of withstanding any onslaught of opposite forces the enemy of righteousness may perpetrate.

MATERIALS OF THE BUILDING

It is obvious that the apostle as he wrote the text had the temple of Diana at Ephesus in mind, and intended a contrast of it with the church of Christ as the true temple of God. The beauty of the illustration has been admired even by skeptics. The apostle had here taught to lessen in his brethren in that city their admiration of that famous temple, and wean them from the worship of a lifeless image of a heathen idol, contrasting with it the building of the holy church, which is a temple more magnificent and beautiful, not being built upon wooden piles driven deep, but upon a more sure foundation. The building he wished to impress as the most superior was not constructed of inanimate stones, and other lifeless materials, but of living men, whose hearts are purified by faith and are capable of offering up the most acceptable offering in spiritual worship. It was not a temple dedicated to an idol, but to the true and living God, who fills with his blessed Spirit every part of it. God is its great architect. His ministers are "lively stones," and they play no minor part in the structure.

The durability of any building is determined by the kinds of materials used, and the manner of its construction. No house is builded out of one material only. In a frame house there is the lumber, nails, plastering, brick, paint, and so forth, that go to make it complete. In like manner, the building of God has various component factors that are positively necessary.

These materials in their crude and unhewn conditions were at first unfit, being sharp and rough, and were only adapted to the use of the wicked one. Divine love and God's truth, applied by a skilled workman, brought them out of the quarry of nature, and gave them their beautiful shape and symmetry, by chiseling, polishing and fitting each piece for its certain place in the building. Some are apostles, others prophets, still others pastors, teachers, deacons, high priests, sevens, and so forth (1 Corinthians 12:28, Ephesians 4:11).

"He gave some apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." None have the right to publicly teach and administer in the ordinances of the church only those who are called, sent and authorized for the work in the gospel way. Public preaching and administering in the gospel belongs peculiarly to those officials whom God has given this responsibility. As long as the building endures these essential materials must be there to compose it, for in the true and spiritual structure one part is as necessary as the other. It would be just as reasonable to take out the doors, the windows, or tear down a wall of the building after it is completed and then claim you have a complete building, as to take away some of the official paraphernalia of officers, and then claim you have the perfect church. It is a lamentable excuse of modern Christendom to claim one part and argue for a limitation of the other. If one office is continuous, they are all continuous for the same reason. The position is both logical and scriptural that if the church of Jesus Christ exists to-day it must have the same materials (offices) of composition that it anciently possessed. Do away with one part such as apostles and prophets, and with equal propriety you could do away with any or all of the rest. What right has any minister to claim the right of limitation, when the word specifically states all were to be continuous?

We wish to convey by the word church, that it refers to the whole body of God's chosen people, called out by obedience to the gospel, and organized after the pattern ordained of heaven. Or in other words, the church is a congregation of faithful people who have obeyed God, in which the true mind of God is reflected by his Holy Spirit, and in which the sacramental duties are administered, as well as all other duties, in God's own way.

Briefly considered, the term as variously applied refers to that providential moral and evangelical government of Jehovah on earth. Each particular part must be vitalized by spiritual life. Within it there should be none but what are truly converted and have become spiritually enlivened. There must be that living manifestation of honorable life that will make practical the very requirements in good deeds of charity and noble helpfulness. Of these materials there is a great variety, of character and condition, and extent of intellectual and moral worth. The number of these is known only to God, as they are recorded on the records of heaven from every nationality and clime. That record is no doubt a lengthy one, spanning every age of the world.

UNION AND HARMONY OF MATERIALS

In the analysis of this proposition we have such statements as these, "built up in him, established in faith," "builded together," "fitly framed together." showing the process of construction is an important one. Reason, if nothing else, would teach that a building can not be constructed without the combination of materials; so to effect the church there must be the union of certain parts. If the term church signifies a congregation of persons called out from the world and divinely organized and governed according to the order of heaven, it also means that those same persons should be united and associated with each other in one common brotherhood, with righteous desires and objects similar. There must be that bonded sympathy, and willingness to serve. The word is plain:

Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.—Psalms 133: 1.

Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another.—Romans 12: 10.

Let brotherly love continue.—Hebrews 13: 1.

Ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another.—1 Thessalonians 4: 9.

The natural man is a stranger to the household of God, and a foreigner to the city of Zion. He is an exile from the pleasant dwelling of the visible church. Believers are described as being "fellow citizens, with the Saints and of the household of God." They are citizens, for their sentence of exile is canceled, being naturalized by birth (John 3: 5). This process reconciles them to God, for now they are under God's government, and are fellow citizens with the Saints. They have communion with the Holy Spirit, and are united in mutual love. They have reciprocal duties and common rights and privileges. They have common prosperity, and adversity, and common enemies. They have a common history. They seek each other's welfare, and their spiritual intercourse—the communion of Saints.

Divine grace unites men to God, and federates the good and noble together in bonds of holiest alliances. Those who believed on the day of Pentecost "were all with one accord in one place"; and Christ says of the Jews, "how oft would I have gathered you," contemplating a union, or a coming together in one. In this way the safety of all is observed, for separated and in a divided condition they would be feeble and inefficient, while if united they would be as a wall of concrete. In a unified condition the comfort of all is enhanced and the social feelings are sanctified and cherished, to say nothing of the joy and felicity of their bonded relations.

Being "lively stones" of this great structure, there are duties to be discharged, offices to fulfill, for which the Lord has made us responsible. We must be eyes to see, ears to hearken, mouths to plead, hands to labor, feet to walk, shoulders to bear, and in all we are to concern ourselves with the task of being helpers and promoters. In the world, we are in it but not of it, lights of it and the salt of it. We are to be loadstones to draw men out of the world to Christ. What facilities we have we are to use to the glory of God. In doing good we obtain good. Conformity to Christ increases our peace and leads us to bless as we labor.

To serve Christ means, in a secondary sense, to serve one another. The hand and the foot both serve the body as well as each other. So can we, while we serve the church, be concerned in serving each other. In this way the usefulness of all is increased and promoted, and the name of God magnified. The first commandment is predicated on the second; thus in serving Christ the Christian virtues are exercised, God's ennobling graces are cherished, brotherhood feelings excited, and the lofty aspirations and more practical demonstrations of real Christian piety and service are very materially extended. There is holy pleasure and inexpressible delight in doing good. All true, holy men will certify the greatest enjoyment is in dispensing benefits to others. Jesus Christ is the great model in well doing. Angels and God himself are so engaged, and why not we?

"Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence" (Doctrine and Covenants 4: 2).

Thus the church as the building of God unites the holy in love and true felicity, and puts the duty to the brother on a par with the duty to self, and extends in every way the arts of peace, purity and service.

HALLOWED AND GLORIOUS PURPOSE OF ERECTION

This building is a "habitation of God." What a sublime thought to man. God dwells in the highest heavens, yet the heavens can not contain him, for his spirit's presence fills the world, and in this manner he is everywhere by the immensity of his omnipresent Spirit. More especially does he dwell in the midst of his church, and in the lives of his people, as their greatest glory, power and blessedness. His church is his habitation, his palace, and he sanctifies it, and in it he has his glorious high throne of matchless holiness.

Here he holds audience with his subjects, banquets them upon the priceless nectar of his love, and gives around the gifts of his holy grace. He expects the church to be a palace of glorious dwelling. He asks his stewards to keep it clean and well garnished, that it might be a sacred place for the tread of his holy feet. In the administration of his counsels he asks for everything to be in order, for the house of God is a house of order. His officers or ministers (1 Corinthians 12: 28, Ephesians 4: 11) are represented to be "a flame of fire." It is in the corporate precincts of this holy dwelling that he manifests himself as nowhere else in the world.

The church is a spiritual organization, pervaded and made vital and progressive by the presence and operation of the power of God. It is the depository of great religious privileges. God dwells in the church by dwelling in the heart of every true member of it. The church is to grow into a holy temple for God through the Spirit. We must not be content simply to have built on the true foundation, but are supposed to bring the structure to a beauteous and glorious condition. The membership is supposed to grow and make increase, both by the progress of its present members in knowledge and holiness, and by the addition of new members who become fellow workers in the spiritual building.

In this habitation God spreads his table with a sumptuous repast, and the invitation is "Come; for all things are now ready" (Luke 14: 17). How superior this feast! How tastily everything is arranged! With fine, white linen, spotlessly clean, is the table spread, and each invited guest has garments of whiteness. Notice the bounteous provisions of this feast,—wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues and the interpretation of tongues (1 Corinthians 12: 1-10). God has supplied his table with a lavish hand. God is the God of abundance. He never stints in giving. His providence, grace, and all of his great realm of nature teems with plenty; the blessings of the gospel are infinite and inexhaustible, and he supplies us to the extent of our capacity to receive. These blessings of the gospel are not to be found anywhere else; they are capable of meeting man's varied wants, and bring wisdom, learning, dignity, and power. They are the bread and water of life, sweeter than the honeycomb. They are the balm of Gilead, bringing succor and strength.

To get the benefits of this feast we must come in the front way by observing the conditions of the gospel. Many desire the good things from the Lord's table, but like the vagrant, seek a morsel that may be given in charity from the back door. Let all come in as invited guests and sup with the Lord, then they will have his smile and gladsome favor.

The Spirit of God is the efficient agent that effects the mighty change in the lives of the truly penitent, and by which they are sanctified and hallowed in service to God. The Spirit illumines the soul and fits it to be a holy temple of light. It purifies the soul and fits it for the enthronement of the Immaculate Deity. It supplies the soul with all the graces and qualities by which it secures the approval and complacent smiles of the divine countenance. Through the means of the Spirit the membership of the church are so blessed that they individually have this indwelling, and their real growth and material welfare is contingent on its sanctifying power. Equipped with its glorious light, the individual counteracts and overthrows the forces of evil which would overwhelm him. Without that purity and holiness with which the church is beautified, which makes it a fit habitation of God, this power and every vitality and life would flicker away, and it would be left lifeless and inert, without the Spirit of God.

The church is God's habitation through choice. He has fixed his affections upon it, and has chosen it as his residence upon earth. His destined intentions are to make it a "glorious church," far more glorious than at present. He passes by the dwellings of the great and the mansions of the noble and dwells with his persecuted and afflicted Saints.

The church is the habitation of God's great love. It is not possible to measure the depth and the magnitude of his love. How much he loves, no seraph can tell. The amazing gift of his son gives us an inkling of its vast proportions. The suffering in Gethsemane and on Calvary declare and prove its worth to us. Let the history of the many transitions of character and life, from the beggarly elements of sin and degradation to purity and holiness, certify his unchanging regard towards it. God's love passeth knowledge. We can not know it in its sublime heights, in its immense breadth, in its eternal lengths or in its profound depths; but we can know something of it. We may become acquainted with enough of it that we will have joy, peace, and the Holy Ghost. We may know enough to "count all things but loss for the excellency of Jesus Christ our Lord." This love should be the grand leading theme of the Christian ministry. It is the hope of the sinful world. It is the joy and triumph of the sincere believer. It is the glorious song of the redeemed before the throne of God and the Lamb. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing."

The church is the habitation of God's provident care. He watches over this Church of the First Born. His eternal arms encircle it. His angels minister unto it. All his perfection, his goodness, his might, is pledged to support it upon the condition of righteousness on our part. His love is abiding and without change. Upon the stipulation of worthiness of life he will ever sustain us in time of trial, sorrow, and adversity.

This habitation is distinguished for its antiquity. Every saved worthy of ancient time was acquainted with it. For six thousand years it has been God's habitation. It has such vast proportions that it has reached to many lands, ancient, medieval and modern, and it shall ultimately reach from the rivers to the ends of the earth. In the redeemed condition of the world it shall be the joy and glory of the whole earth for ever and for ever.

OUR OPPORTUNITY

In conclusion, let this application be made: Do we constitute a portion of this blessed habitation—the holy sanctuary—the church of living God? If we so claim, does the Spirit of God dwell in us and bear that living testimony, making us witnesses for Christ? It is to be hoped all will reflect with seriousness on the sacredness, purity, and dignity that is associated with a representation of the church of the living God. How truly we should all sense the magnitude of the requirements of the possession of all the Christian graces, and the veneration of life and loveliness of mind with which every member of this church should be endowed. Was there ever a more splendid opportunity than the present? Others have had their chance, our opportunity is the present. Let us improve our time and talent that we may be the chosen of God. With becoming reverence to God, let us make solemn inquiry of ourselves, Are we rendering to the Lord the true tribute of righteousness; and do we show forth the praises of him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light? Shall we offer our bodies, praying in deep humility, and yet in joyous expectancy, that our bodies may be fit temples for God's indwelling Spirit? We know the tender and comforting God will dwell in hearts, washed and made white in the blood of the Son, if we will dedicate our business pursuits and all our labors of head and hand, and the gains of honest industry, to be used in the service of God.

Faith adds its song of abiding trust to the yearnings of an immortal hope. It reveals the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, and if it is not distorted by a lowering shadow will take immortality for granted. With grateful reverence for the material things of life, yet with prophetic eyes, we see beyond the vision of the soul's higher destiny, and with hearts aglow and intellects responsive to the Spirits leadings, we recognize a confidence born of elements we can not always trace, but which are the soul's immediate understanding of its own higher exaltation and glory.

Our thoughts of immortality take a deeper strain of meditation when we think of those who have blessed our lives and gone on before. Life here and in the hereafter is elevated because of them. We do not long for, nor would we be satisfied with an immortality of solitude. We crave the association of those who have blessed us here. We hope the orbit of our love in the futurity may be even more extended than here, and we will yet have a more splendid opportunity than we have had here in our checkered lives, which we are conscious have been wrought with many failures.

The deeper instincts of our humanity call for a better day, and this hope stirs us to an inward prophecy, and to that deep and native anticipation of the soul that there will be an ultimate fulfillment.

We see the forward movement of the church. It constantly moves towards its ultimate triumph. The day is surely coming when God's habitation here, filled with his Spirit, will cease to be militant and become triumphant; and instead of the Spirit only being present, God, himself, will take up his abode, and the tabernacle of God will be with men, and in it will be a shrine of blessed memories where no discordant note of strife will be found, and peace, blessed peace, will be a joy for ever. Here will be a refuge from sin and sorrow, and the tree of life will be here for the healing of the nations. No crepe hangs from the doors of the mansions of glory. No solemnly draped hearses with horses of sable plumes are to be seen on the streets of the New Jerusalem. Nothing that disturbs the soul's deep and holy joy is found in heaven: no bereavements, no disappointments, no separations, no beggar's outstretched bony hand, no sickness, no cringing fear, no besetting doubts. The church militant has become the church triumphant, and God's habitation then is the earth freed from the plague of sin, made glorious beyond anything in beauty in this probation.

May we dedicate ourselves anew. May we offer our souls more fully as lively stones, that through the word of God received in meekness, the indwelling spirit consecrating us as true worshipers, our natures may become divine, and Christ be formed within us, and the likeness of his nature be shown in reflection, that there may be seen transformed lives, unselfish alms, tender sympathies, and eager helpfulness to all men; and we be fitted for that greater and better habitation where God dwells supreme and his great Prince rules as King of kings and Lord of lords.

Milton's words are suggestive:

What in me is dark illumine,
What is low raise and support;
That to the height of this great argument,
I may assert Eternal Providence
And justify the ways of God to men.

WORLD-WEARY PILGRIMS

A MODERN PARABLE

A pilgrim stood between the shores of time and eternity. He was weary. He had arrived at that particular place in life's journey where his soul demanded a satisfying answer to the great questions, What of God? What of life? What is at the end of this path—this strange medley of everything, sometimes seeming to be almost nothing? What is beyond?

There comes a time in every individual heart when these questions burn with more than ordinary intensity. There comes a time when thought swings into unwonted channels, and pries into mysteries awe-inspiring; when unseen fingers ply the deep emotions of the soul, and chords of being respond, as never before, in an effort to crystalize this most exalted concept: What of God?

This challenge to man's perception, this reaching out to discover whether the unknown be unknowable, is a thirst for the crystal water of everlasting life.

This is where our pilgrim of this short story stood. Others whose feet have pressed this path will appreciate the mingling of the emotions which strove in his breast, more than words can portray. We name our subject a pilgrim, not because he is especially homeless, or a deserted wanderer, but in the sense that all men in this world, whether king, prince, or peasant, find soon or late that we are all pilgrims here.

The high tide of broad experience in this world's affairs had favored this man of the world. Fortune had kissed his fondest ambition and filled his heart almost to surfeiting. But now he is weary of it all, and has arrived at the profound condition of desire which comes to every soul, either early or late. Soul salvation and eternal life is now the question. How absorbing a theme. What gravity of thought and honesty of purpose it requires. What a strong guarantee, and how much assurance such a question calls for.

In search of such a religion and such a guarantee, this man seeks to satisfy his awakened hungering for righteousness. And then a most curious spectacle confronts him. The supposed representatives of God in all the world are broken into contradictory factions and parties, and their various instructions as to how to approach him and receive the guarantee of everlasting life so conflict as to utterly destroy their validity. One who has been reared within the small denominational circle of some one sect or party may be content with that peculiar interpretation of God and religion; but to the broader view and keen vision of one who has not in very truth discovered the way, these conflicting representations of God and religion are distracting. So our pilgrim hears great, glowing eulogies of what religion once was, and is informed that such blessed guarantees of confirmation were limited to a remote age, and that we are to survive upon the faith acquired through the reading of those things.

He sees Christianity make a great profession and then fail in its most essential points. He hears great, sounding titles of certain of the Spiritual nobility, and, when in closer touch with some of the same, finds a sickening amount of the sounding brass and tinkling cymbal variety. He looks at things regarded in general as big, and sees them diminish under close scrutiny to comparative littleness. He sees much of the choice product of many religious cults to be bigotry, selfishness, and narrow-minded meanness. He sees a large percentage of certain kinds of religious supporters to be lamentably fanatical, and, quite frequently, almost imbecile in mentality.

Many sane pilgrims have turned away from all religious professions and determined to pursue an independent course and take the consequences. And who shall bring proof that they are not really better off in a moral, independent course than they would be if circumscribed by the bounds of a false and pernicious religion, such as makes up the greater part of the conglomerate lump?

So the pilgrim of this parable turns away from all, heavy-hearted.

But hark! Another voice is heard! It is merely another of the thousands of preachers—but listen to his words: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." Then the pilgrim wonders whether the preacher means that that kind of a guarantee is for mankind now, as it was for those of old. As he listens, this question is answered in the affirmative; and with the preacher's words comes a glow of spiritual light equal in power to the throes of uncertainty which formerly depressed his spirit.

This is but a small beginning to the many beautiful soul-inspiring things which the pilgrim subsequently hears from the lips of that divinely-called and regularly-ordained preacher and his colaborers. The material in those gospel sermons is constructive; and of such material there arises in splendid view this vision: A woman, clothed with the sun, radiant in holy beauty. Her feet gracefully adorning a block of white stone, upon which is this inscription: "Revelation from God to his church." Light is emitted from this stone in such power that no shadow falls about the woman's person. In each of her two hands, extended in presentation, she bears a scroll; upon these are written in letters of fire: "Stick of Judah and Stick of Ephraim."

A golden chain with links from many fields connects the scrolls and falls in resplendent beauty across the woman's breast. Her head is adorned with twelve stars. The darkness of the wilderness lies behind her, and those who envy her glory crouch in the distant, heavy shadows.

In deep contrition and joyous humility the pilgrim exclaims, "It is the bride of my Lord,—the Church of Jesus Christ! Receive me, O, Lord, and make me a Saint!"

So the guarantee is tested. And to the unspeakable joy of many world-weary pilgrims, it is found to be genuine.

PROFITABLE DAIRY STOCK

Uncle Sam,—that is to say, that part of the American population that farms,—keeps three immense herds of dairy cows; each herd contains seven million head and occupies a farm the size of the State of Illinois! One of these herds lacks $50,000,000 annually of paying for its keep. Another of equal size makes a moderate profit of $7.85 per cow, but the third herd of 7,000,000 high producing cows makes the splendid, but not extraordinary, profit of $26.82 per head, or $187,000,000 annually.

This is not a mere guess, but is based upon facts secured by the Department of Dairy Husbandry of the University of Illinois from a large and fair comparison of the individual yearly records of over 1,000 cows in herds, tested by this department, in the different parts of the State.

Investigations were not made to show that there is a difference in the producing power of individual dairy cows, as this has been known for a long time, but were made to show how wide and far-reaching this variation is and something of its meaning to the dairy industry of the United States.

The poorest third of these cows produced an average of 3,654 pounds of milk and 134 pounds butterfat annually, each cow lacking $7.25 of paying for her keep. The middle third average 5,000 pounds of milk and 198 pounds of butterfat annually, returning an average profit of $7.85; and the best third average 6,765 pounds of milk and 278 pounds of butterfat, each cow making an annual profit of $26.82, besides paying market price for all items included in her keep.

As these cows were in commercial dairy herds in four different sections of Illinois, it is justifiable to assume that they are fair representatives of Uncle Sam's cows. According to the last census, the average production of the cows in the United States was 140 pounds butterfat, while the average production of the 1,000 cows tested in Illinois was 203 pounds, therefore, the figures here given do not exaggerate the actual conditions and are conservative.

Using the above figures as a basis for Uncle Sam's herds, the following noteworthy facts are brought out:

Since each of the three herds contains over 7,000,000 cows, or more than 230,000 herds of 30 cows each, it will require 230,000 farms containing 160 acres each (a quarter section being required to successfully handle a herd of 30 cows), together with all the buildings, horses, tools, equipment and labor, necessary for one of the three herds. These farms aggregate 36,800,000 acres, or 57,500 square miles, equal to an immense farm the size of the State of Illinois.—From "Uncle Sam's Three Herds of Dairy Cattle," by Wilber J. Fraser, in the American Review of Reviews for March.

THE ETERNAL HUMAN

President Wilson on Monday inaugurated the first transcontinental telephone service. He talked from Washington with the head of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

A striking event in the history of the telephone. As the President says, it stirs the imagination to think of the human voice finding its way clear across the continent. And when we consider that the inventor of the telephone is still alive the immensity of the advance in so short a time strikes the imagination still more.

What a pity that the rapidity of the material and scientific advance of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries has not been accomplished by correspondingly rapid changes in the mental and moral qualities of man himself!

What a pity that men to-day do not stand on the same secure eminence of admitted superiority, as compared with the men of other days, that science stands on when compared with the science preceding the last century!

Dazzled by the achievements in scientific lines, the world is at times inclined to assume they do. But at the moment of seemingly most secure assumption there comes a world war and men are seen reacting to the same old human and historic stimuli.

Man has progressed, but the progress is slow. His work outruns him. Human nature is the most stable thing in history. Compared with it the mighty empires that have come and gone are merely shifting shadows.—Chicago Herald.

HOW WEATHER MAKES US WORK

The ideal climate is said to be found in many parts of the world, but no one knows exactly what it is. The whole matter depends on our definition of "ideal." If we are looking simply for rest and pleasure, a warm, sunny climate is probably the best. If we want to go fishing, something different is preferable. The most essential fact in the lives of the majority of mankind is work. Therefore the climate which is best for work is ideal from that point of view.

If we take efficiency in the daily work of life as our standard, it is possible to measure what people actually do under different climatic conditions, and thus to form an estimate of the best kind of climate. From the work of about five hundred factory operatives in southern Connecticut and of about eighteen hundred students at West Point and Annapolis, I have prepared curves showing the relative efficiency under different conditions of temperature, humidity, and storminess. These curves, based on investigations among a large number of individuals, agree with similar curves prepared on the basis of a smaller number of people by two Danish psychologists, Lehmann and Pedersen, in Copenhagen. The two sets of data show that the physical activity of the races of western Europe is greatest when the average temperature is about 60 degrees—that is, "on days when the thermometer goes down to perhaps 50 degrees at night and rises to about 65 or 70 degrees by day. Mental activity, on the other hand, is greatest when the average is a little below 40 degrees—that is, on days which may have a frost at night.

Since life consists of both mental and physical activity, and each is essential to success, the most favorable conditions would seem to be those where the temperature never falls far below the most propitious point for mental work, or rises above the optimum for physical work. In other words, if the mean temperature were the only thing to be considered, the best climate would be one where the average in winter is about 40 and the average in summer about 60 degrees. Only a few parts of the world are blessed with such conditions.

The most important of these, both in area and in population, is England. Next comes the northern Pacific coast of the United States, from Oregon to the southern part of British Columbia. Here, unfortunately, the mountains rise close to the sea, and so prevent the favorable conditions from penetrating far inland. A third highly favored area is found in New Zealand, especially the southern island. This, like its two predecessors, is recognized as one of the highly advanced parts of the earth. The fourth and last of the places where the mean temperature is particularly favorable is not generally so recognized. It lies in Patagonia and the corresponding part of Chile between latitudes 45° and 50° S. Few people live here, and we are apt to think of it as of relatively slight value. It differs from the other three regions in having a deficient rainfall except in the western part, which is extremely mountainous.

From what has been said it must not be inferred that the climates of England, the northern Pacific coast of the United States, New Zealand, and Patagonia are necessarily ideal. Mean temperature is by no means the only important condition. In the first place, not only a deficiency of moisture as in a large part of Patagonia, but an excess, as in the mountains of southern Chile or in Ireland, which otherwise is almost as favored as England, may hamper a country. Such conditions produce not only an adverse economic effect by making agriculture difficult, but also a direct effect upon people's capacity for work. A modern degree of dampness—that is, a relative humidity of from 65 per cent in summer to 90 per cent in winter—is favorable, but when the summers are wet or the winters very dry, people do not work so well.—Ellsworth Huntington, in Harper's Magazine for February.

When the tongue of malice and slander tempts you to retaliate; when for an instant you forget yourself so far as to hunger for revenge—be calm. When the gray heron is pursued by its enemy—the eagle—it does not run to escape; it remains calm, takes a dignified stand, and waits quietly, facing the enemy unmoved. With the terrific force with which the eagle makes the attack, the boasted king of birds is often impaled and run through on the quiet, lance-like bill of the heron. No man ever attempted to wrong another without being injured in return—some way, somehow, some time.—William George Jordan.

Letter Department

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, January 26, 1915.

Editors Herald: Developments are coming thicker and faster than I had expected and am ready for, and per consequence there are opportunities that must lay unimproved until a later time, for which I am really sorry. I am utterly unable to cope with the situation with my present equipment.

When I came here to plant the work in Ottawa and also in the province of Quebec, I was almost a stranger, so to speak. I have two Catholic brothers here, and of course it was very natural for them to make inquiries about how long I was going to stay, and what was the nature of my business. The most positive answer I could give them was to let them read my letter of appointment from the General Conference, which I did, and neither of them ventured a reply after their reading. No comment was passed on the reason for my presence in Ottawa. Well, that passed off easier than I thought it would. So I visited with them as though nothing ever had happened to create a gulf between us. But I knew it existed, and I sought to bridge it as best I could.

I have one brother who is a fine French scholar, as well as English Master of Arts. He has been admitted to the bar and practiced as a lawyer for some years. Now just imagine me, graduated from a blacksmith shop, edging up to such a man as that! Well, I did, whether you call it gall or grace, you must be the judge. But after I tell you what happened you will see that human learning is not all that stands for man's highest interest in this world.

I said to my brother, "I have some little tracts I wish to have translated into the French language; what chance would there be to get you to do the work?"

"Well," he says, "I will now ask you a question. If I came to you to get you to translate something that you knew was directly against your religion, would you do it?"

I replied, "Eugene, I am broad enough and liberal enough and free enough to do the work, and if in the translating I discovered that you had more truth than I had, I'd take it, and if I had more truth than you had I'd teach you." And he never answered me a word.

On another occasion he asked me why I did not go to the doctors of theology at the Catholic University and talk to them instead of going to the poor ignorant people to lead them off into my way of thinking. I said to him, "I'll go, but I want you to go with me so you can see for yourself just what they will do, and then you can judge." But he would not do it.

I said to him, "Who keeps these poor people in ignorance but the very men who are fleecing them? I am going to see them anyhow." So I did, and had a long talk with a doctor of philosophy, and before I left him I came to the conclusion that he was better qualified to teach foolosophy than he was to teach theology after the Bible idea. I made him deny his own Bible on the question of priesthood, and he admitted that for the most part they had no authority in the Bible; and when it came to himself he denied the necessity of revelation, and said that there was no such thing now, whereupon I said, You have made a fatal admission, for if there be no revelation then there is not a minister for Christ on the earth. Then he fell back on the infallibility they have created themselves.

These are just a few sideflashes in my wandering around town. I will now tell of what interests me the most of anything I ever met in all my experience since I came into the church, and I have been in it for almost twenty-two years.

I can not help but believe that the good Lord lead me to a family, who about six years ago were fervent Roman Catholics, and were engaged in keeping a boarding house in Quebec. They kept from fourteen to forty boarders. One of these was a perfect model of deportment among the rest, who displayed many unchristian traits of character. The proprietor had his eye on him and casually remarked, "Mr. Martel, how does it come that you are such a good man? We never hear you swear or say a bad word, or do anything that is not right, and yet you never go to church?" He replied that he went to church when he was at his home town in Boston, and that the Bible taught him how to conduct himself, at the same time asking them if they would like to read the Bible. The lady replied, We have the gospel in our prayer book and we read it; to which he said, You do not have it all, and when I go to my home I will bring you one if you would like to read it. They promised to do so provided it was a Catholic Bible. He said he would bring one.

On his return, the lady of the house who is a good reader in the French language, was assigned the role of reader for the entire crowd. They gathered around her, much as a family gathers to hear father or mother instruct their children.

The neighbors began to come to see and hear what was going on, and to listen to the teachings of the New Testament. The priest, hearing what was going on, came to put a stop to the reading—but never a stop. The people began to ask him to explain why they had been taught differently to what the Catholic Bible taught, and he could not answer, and as a result fourteen families, or fifty-four people in all, left the Catholic Church at that time.

The proprietor of the boarding house could not read a word in either English or French. The lady is a good French scholar—a kind, intelligent, reasoning, but determined soul, who is made of the very stuff to constitute a true Latter Day Saint. She is a worker. While he labored under the disadvantage of not being educated he has learned to read, and is now putting forth the right kind of effort to get an education. They did not know a word of English, but now they can speak fairly well. He is a high-spirited man, yet has remarkable control over himself, and is drinking in the gospel like a thirsty man at a fountain. He and his brother are both deacons in the church. He told me last Sunday night coming home from church that they both had severed their connection with the church, so far as ever belonging to it any more is concerned, as well as the lady and another friend.

I can not go into the details of their conversion, it is too long, but some day I'll have them write it up for publication.

I saw them to-day, and the thing they would like to do is to reach the balance of the fifty-four who are now scattered considerably, but could be reached by the mails. And here I am without a solitary line of French reading matter to send to these people, who have suffered many, many trials for the little light they have and enjoy. Besides, they tell me that there are something like fifty thousand of the Roman Catholic Church who have done just as they did, and no doubt would rejoice as they do if they only knew.

Saints, this thing is preying on my mind. I sometimes go to bed, but it is not to sleep, but to toss around and get up and think, and sometimes write the thoughts that come to me. And last Saturday morning, just before getting up, my mind was wrought upon this subject and I thought I'd try and write my thoughts, but no, I could not do it. I lay down again and slept for a little while, when I awoke, then my thoughts came as clear as a crystal, and I reached for paper and pencil and wrote what I here term

MY MENTAL VISION

Lo! I behold a host that stands,
Enslaved in chains of darkest night;
Appealingly they stretch their hands
To God for life and light;

Oh! could I to that host but bring
The message of our Lord and King.

The prayer and tears of honest souls
Who hunger, thirst for righteousness,
As surely as the ages roll,
Must answered be, and blessed;
Wouldst't thou, oh brother, help in part
To bless this host? Then ope thy heart.

Ope not thy heart alone, but tell
To God, in humble, faithful, honest prayer,
"Lord I will ope my purse as well
And consecrate a mite, that there
May come to this great hungering throng
What shepherds heard—the angel's song."

And how can you this message send
To such a host as this?
Attend a moment brother, friend,
My answer is, the printing press;
Its whirring wheels, its mighty voice,
In Christ can make this host rejoice.

The Angel's message we enjoy,
A benediction on our heads,
Would scarce be heard beneath the sky,
And slumberingly lay as dead,
Did not the printing press lay hold
Upon that message, pure as gold.

'Twas thus it came to you, my friend,
It came to me, as well it seems,
Can we not for the self-same end
Employ the self-same means?
And to this mighty host send forth
The message angels brought to earth?

Indeed we can if you will vow
With me to join your heart and mite,
Two million souls are waiting now
To hear the printing press voice;
Brother, reach forth your hand to me
And we'll print the song to make them free.

Here I had to stop, the words would not come any more.
I tried to finish what I felt was lacking, but it was of no use,
I gave up. Sunday evening (the 24th.) my mind was still on the subject when the next verse came.

We'll print it in their native tongue,
Of which the church prints not a line,
No book, nor pamphlet, paper, song;
Not e'en a word in prose or rhyme;
Oh, let the Spirit come to you!
And help to prove my vision true.

Here again I had to stop and did not write any more till Tuesday morning about half-past three. My thoughts were something like the following: Well, the Saints will think that what I want is money, and they do not feel like assisting and what is the use, and the following came, and I put it down on paper:

But first of all, think deep and well,
Look in thy heart and see
If love's the power that moves thy will
To give the mite I ask of thee?
If 'tis not love, in Jesus name,
I pray you will withhold the same.

For, saith the Lord, the word that from My mouth departs mankind to bless
Shall never void to me return,
But will accomplish my behest;
That word, my friend, I'm here to tell
Although opposed by men and hell.

For not with precious stones nor gold,
Nor eloquence that sways the throng,
Will Jesus' holy kingdom roll
O'er all the earth, we've prayed for long;
Drop in thine heart this very hour,
This word, "'Tis by my Spirit's power."

It is not love of gold I crave,
Nor priestly pomp, nor footlight show,
These things are cruel as the grave,
Angels in death by these fell low;
I seek for power as best I can
From him who is the Son of Man.

And should it please my Lord to give
To me his Holy Spirit's power,
I want to use it while I live
To bless mankind each day and hour,
Through simple faith, light, charity
Best gifts to man from Calvary.

Now Saints, the very large proportion of the two million, eight hundred and thirty-three thousand and forty-one Catholics of Canada are French-speaking people, and a very large percentage can not speak English at all. If they are ever reached it must be in the French language. What can I do without French reading matter? What I would like to see is a printing press in operation to publish our literature in the French language. I am just as satisfied as that I am writing these words that the help will be raised up to carry on the work if we could only get it started.

The song birds of hope seem to warble their music in my ears; the atmosphere seems to be charged with an aroma of sweetness, as by the Spirit. My skies of promise are exceedingly clear at times, while occasionally a faint whisper of opposition steals through the stillness, but no weapon formed against this work shall prosper, and the nations of the earth shall bow to it.

Yours for success,
218 Laurier Avenue, W. Ottawa. PHILEMON PEMENT.

Editors Herald: We welcome as good news from a far country the HERALD each week. Many times when undecided on questions of doctrine, the very next week the HERALD will have the information I want. I have thought that if those writing knew how they helped me they would feel encouraged in their work. The many editorials by Elbert A.
Smith are much enjoyed, as are other articles. I remember reading the autobiography of Sister Emma Burton in the Autumn Leaves many years ago, when I was a girl. I enjoyed it much. I admire the humble spirit this sister has manifested, and would enjoy clasping hands with her and telling her of the inspiration I have received from her writings.

We were glad to see the letter from Brother Clyde Ellis, and to learn of his pleasant trip. We trust his association across the water may not only prove pleasant but profitable.
We appreciated his labors, with those of Brother G. W. Mc-Knight, in our branch. Memory of them both will ever be cherished for the work done here. We remember the summer of 1911 when our church building was in need of repair and we only had enough money to pay for the material. These brethren removed their Sunday clothes and attired themselves with old ones, and with hammer and saw, paint and brush, assisted William Fant, one of the carpenters of the town, in the completion of the church. The brethren worked days and held services evenings. We regret that Brother McKnight has had to leave his field of labor owing to poor health, and trust that he may soon enjoy perfect health and be able to resume his duties as usual.

We wish to express thanks to Brother Samuel Stroh for his many words of comfort expressed to us when we were troubled in being called to give up our brother, Charley A. Prettyman.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to Sister Joseph Smith and family in their hour of sorrow. In the death of Brother Joseph we have all lost a friend. We are grateful for his life, and know of no greater legacy that he could have left to his family and the church than the pure life he lived and the assurance he had of the future.

Our town has been roused as it has not been for some time, over the lectures delivered by Brother S. W. L. Scott on the present European war, as seen through the tubes of prophecy. The three evenings, January 20 to 22, our church was filled with attentive listeners. One gentleman after hearing the first lecture said there had never been such a sermon delivered in Knox, and wished he could have it in print. It was the common expression that Brother Scott ought to be here all the time so as to follow up the interest. There are some influential people who are interested, and we are hopeful of an ingathering if the work is followed up.

If the missionary in charge sees this letter, we trust he will be permitted to make us a visit, and if possible locate a missionary here in Knox so he could look after the work here and at Ora, ten miles from here, where we have a church building. We believe there is plenty of work in this community to keep one missionary on the move most of the time.

ALPENA, MICHIGAN, January 29, 1915.

Editors Herald: We purchased our church two years ago last December, and with the kind assistance of a number of branches, Brown City in particular, we have it paid for. The deed is recorded and in the hands of the Bishop. For the first time in the history of the branch here, we have a building of our own in which to worship, for which we are truly thankful. We are going to remodel the building and make some improvements as soon as we have sufficient means on hand to take such a step.

We believe the Saints are trying to come up to the standard, and are enjoying some good meetings. We had a visit from our worthy district vice president, Brother Stokes, which was enjoyed very much. We believe him to be the right man in the right place.

Editors Herald: We are striving in our weak way to get the gospel before the people. I came here a little over a year ago, and since, Brother James Winegar and family and Brother W. P. Hanson moved here from Ellensburg, Washington. We have found three more families here, and now have a branch organized, for which we feel thankful. We have had good meetings this winter. Brethren Davis, T. C. Kelley, G. W. Winegar, and Peter Anderson have had good crowds and good interest. We feel encouraged at the prospect of a good branch here, if we fail not. We ask an interest in the prayers of all that we may be found doing God's will.

We will be pleased to receive a visit from any elders or Saints passing this way. We always have a home for the elders, and have the use of two or three schoolhouses for meetings, when not in use.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, February 1, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Mormon people are making strenuous efforts to gather together a following sufficiently large to care for a church they intend to build in a section of Brooklyn about three miles from our church. Two female representatives have been canvassing certain sections. They visit the same family several times, if permitted, and if they find the parties favorable to their explanations, an elder follows up their work to try to make converts. If they come to a house where the people have known of our organization, they hasten to state that we are bad people, and have apostatized from their church. Of course the subject of polygamy is never entered into, except to say that there has been no polygamy in their church since 1890.

Editors Herald: I was eighty years old the twenty-fifth of January. Forty-three years ago Brother J. C. Foss came into the neighborhood where I lived and commenced preaching in a private house. I went to hear him. He preached on the first principles. I asked him how I was to know that he had authority to preach, and challenged him to perform a miracle. He informed me that the signs were to follow the believer, and promised that if I would do the will of God I would know of the doctrine. I became interested and commenced studying the church books. My wife would not listen, but I kept reading and reading aloud and after a while she became interested in the Book of Mormon.

When I had finished this book she said that she believed it was true. I told her I was going to be baptized and do the best I knew, and if God did not reveal the fact to me that this was his church I would give up the whole matter. When Brother Foss came again I was baptized. We had to cut through four feet of ice. My wife and I think six others followed me into the water.

For a time I had no outward manifestation, but the Spirit was working with me. The Bible seemed to be a new book; passages once a mystery became plain. At this time I was camping in the woods about four miles from home. One day my wife sent for me to come home at once. On reaching there I found our eighteen-months old child very ill. I withdrew from the house and prayed earnestly that the Lord would restore the child, and on returning found it sitting up and looking as bright as ever. The child's grandmother was nursing it. I told her of my confidence that God had restored the child in answer to my prayer. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for sixty years, but she was baptized into the Latter Day Saint Church soon after this blessing.

After this our eight-year-old daughter was ill and was restored by administration under the hands of Brother Foss. At one time I myself, was healed of a lame back under administration of Brethren Foss and Holand. After my ordination to the office of elder my companion was miraculously restored under administration of my hands.

My father and mother were not in the church. I was told by the Spirit that they would join with us. I appointed a meeting at my father's house and he and mother were convinced of the divinity of the work, but procrastinated their obedience. After this my father took ill and the doctor said he could not live. Under administration, however, he grew strong and was baptized. Shortly after this he passed away. Mother was baptized later.

I can say that this is the true gospel of Christ, and that no man who will do his will can say otherwise, but he must work for his testimony. He must pray often in secret. There is nothing like secret prayer. When one can open his heart to God, he will hear and answer and reward openly.

Christ says this gospel must be preached in all the world before his second coming. Are we making sacrifice to carry the gospel? Are we paying our tithes? or are we robbing God by taking his money for that which we do not need?

In gospel bonds,
A. M. KEELER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 3, 1915.

Editors Herald: We had a profitable session all through the Religio convention at Knobnoster, Missouri, January 23 and 24. With the exception of one or two numbers, it was an inspiring time to all. Nearly all day Sunday we had a rather large crowd and a large majority of the congregation were delegates, so the interest taken showed that some one, at least, had an active interest in the Religio work.

All seem to have enjoyed themselves, and so well were visiting ones cared for that we could have no reasons whatever to ask for anything better; we only say that we hope the next convention can be as completely carried out to success as this one was.

We had some splendid talks and advice, and all things went off well. All seemed to work with such harmony that when the time came to wend our way homeward we were loath to go. We hope to meet again when the next one is in session next year, still keeping in memory the good we have learned by attending the one just passed.

The most awe-inspiring and cheering feature, to the mind of the writer, was the vision related by Brother B. J. Scott at the afternoon session on Sunday. This was the last session I attended. The good Spirit that was felt was surely indicative of the heavenly joy that must have been with the one to whom this vision was given.

Oh! the joy, comfort, and satisfaction that comes with that Spirit when one is trying to live a life of usefulness in helping others, and not simply living for themselves alone. There is surely a great need of this kind of work, not only for the young but also for the older ones, so that we may all come closer to our heavenly Father and thereby have right to the crown of celestial glory.

May we all so live, though "we know not the time of his appearing," that we will be ready to meet him when he does appear, and be able to face the great Judge and say, We have done all we could to make others happy and have tried to make their burdens lighter by carrying part of their load. May we all consecrate our lives more fully to this line of usefulness and become more obedient to our heavenly Father, is the wish and desire of

Your humble servant,
A. A. GAYLORD.

Editors Herald: The old historic town of Monterey is situated on beautiful Monterey Bay, noted for its fishing industries, and where you may stand and watch the boats come in large numbers loaded down with all kinds of fish, according to the season.

I shall never forget the first time I went surf fishing, and how happy we were as one after another was landed by the use of hooks and lines with sand fleas for bait, until we had seven weighing on an average of one pound each (perch I believe is the proper name, though they are called there surf fish.)

Small fresh salmon can be bought for forty cents each at the wharves. I paid twenty-five cents for two abalones; they are very rich and fine in flavor. While spending a pleasant day with Sister Montgomery a lad came to the door with a bucketful of mussels for twenty-five cents, which she bought and cooked. They were very large ones and were a great treat, as I often had them when a girl in England.

It is a different kind of fishing I wish to speak of now. Those who are out with the nets are men and women who are working with all their might to show the beauties of the gospel to those who are willing to hear its glad message. Our Brother Hiram Holt occupies mostly in the stand and preaches with much assurance and plainness of speech, which makes us sometimes wonder how anyone who hears such sermons can hesitate to come forth and obey.

Brother and Sister Patterson of Los Angeles came from there at a sacrifice, with no other mission than to work with their might because they felt they were needed. For several months they labored, the brother with saw, plane and hammer on week days, and on Sunday inside the comfortable little house that the few faithful Saints had purchased to hold meetings in. The hospitality, love for each other, and for those who came out to hear, was a reminder to me of the words, By this ye shall know my disciples, because they love one another. I hear Brother and Sister Patterson had to return to Los Angeles. They will be greatly missed, and perhaps Brother Holt feels sad and lonesome, and is hoping for a few more workers.

This is somewhat of a summer resort, and joins Pacific Grove. It has a good climate, and is kept cool by the breezes from the bay.

Hoping time will bring good results, and that a branch may eventually be the outcome, is the wish of,

SISTER TATE.

AMES, IOWA, February 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: The HERALD has brought me many precious messages from which I derive both comfort and benefit. So on this day while many are assembled in sacrament service, giving and hearing testimonies of the truthfulness of the latter-day work and the blessings received, I wish to add my testimony of God's goodness to me.

Something more than a year ago a sister in North Dakota wrote a letter to the HERALD telling how she had been helped. Being in very poor health at the time, as I read I said, "Why can't I have such faith?" I had prayed for bodily strength, but from that day I prayed earnestly for an increase of faith. I grew weaker for a time, but kept holding on. Early in the spring a sister here wrote to Brother Wardell Christy, then in Rhodes, asking for administration. The sister came to my house and we were administered to by Brother Christy. From that time I began to gain, and have gained steadily ever since.

My heart is filled with gratitude to our heavenly Father who is ever ready to hear and answer our call for help if we only come in faith. My desire is to live such a life that when I am called to lay my armor down it may truthfully be said, "She hath done what she could." I am striving to let my life shine. I would like to be with the Lamoni Saints as they meet at this hour. Pray for us who are without the privilege which the church there affords. Some time we hope to live with the Saints, when the Lord sees fit.

Ever praying that the work may prosper and that we may be a strong, united band. A sister in the faith,

CLARA LINSE.

RED LEVEL, ALABAMA, February 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: On December 8, 1914, a debate was held near Red Level between the Stumbling Stones and Latter Day Saints, the speakers being Daniel L. Watson, of Georgiana, Alabama, and Brother F. M. Slover. Good was done. Two schoolhouses were opened for the Latter Day Saints to preach in. Brethren Slover and I. M. Smith preached about two weeks after the debate and had a good audience. The people wish more preaching. Some of the followers of Watson were trustees of the schoolhouse where the debate was held, and they closed the doors and would not allow the Latter Day Saints to preach there longer. The trustees of the other schoolhouses made us welcome. We hope Brother Slover will be able to come here again soon. We believe there will be some baptized. Some are interested in the latter-day work.

Elder Watson, as Brother Slover said in debate, did much thundering but there was little lightning. He had told the people before the debate that the Latter Day Saints and the Utah Mormons were all the same. Brother Slover showed them in plain terms that these were different churches and not the same.

I feel sure that if sufficient work is done there will be some who will come into the church. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that good may be done at these new openings.

Extracts from Letters

Sister Anna Jasper, Los Angeles, California: "California Saints appreciate the work of Brother and Sister W. A. McDowell. They have endeared themselves to the church in many ways. Brother McDowell through his wise counsel and simplicity, his quiet unobtrusiveness, has commanded respect and merit, and the good will of all, both inside and outside the church. He has stood firm for the right and has been tenacious for the enforcement of the church law."

C. M. Foulks, Independence, Missouri: "It is still my bread and meat to know and do our heavenly Father's will. Though my days be few or many, I want to be found my brother's helper and keeper. I am oftentimes blessed with the privilege of reading to and reasoning with those who call, and it does my soul good."

W. J. Cornish, Senlac, Saskatchewan: "The Artland Branch is quite alive, and the work in the district is onward. Brother T. J. Jordan did a good work last winter, as did also others."

Mrs. M. S. Brewster, Kirtland, Ohio: "I take this means of expressing thanks for the many kind messages received following the taking away of our daughter Mary, a few weeks ago. I feel unequal to the task of answering personally each letter. My hope in the gospel is undimmed, and, while this cloud rests heavily upon us, the Spirit of the Lord has been with us, cheering us by night and day. I only ask for grace and strength to so live that when I am called away I may be permitted to calmly fall asleep in Christ, as we know our loved one did."

L. C. Donaldson, Riverton, Iowa: "The weather during March has been bad so I could not get out. I have not been to church this winter. Hope we can hold our branch meetings and Sunday school during the summer. We have some good Saints in Riverton Branch."

C. C. Randle, Columbus, Kansas: "Brothers and sisters, let us strive honestly, earnestly, and faithfully to obtain and retain the Spirit of the Master, and thereby free ourselves of the evils of the world, leaving our vision of spiritual things clean, and thus be lead and guided into all truth. Obedience is better than sacrifice, and he is only truly learned who reduces his learning to practice."

Arthur Galiser, Loyalist, Alberta: "I believe if some elder would come here at a time not too busy so that I could take him around, there could be some good accomplished. We should like to have Brother Daniel Macgregor, of Oyen, Alberta."

News from Missions

Western Australia

This mission has been brought to its present standing mainly by the efforts of local workers. Some of the missionary force have visited here, notably, C. A. Butterworth, J. W. Davis, F. G. Pitt, E. F. Robertson and George Lewis, but no sustained mission effort has hitherto been undertaken.

Prejudice is very strong, owing no doubt to the fact that the Brighamites have been advertising and tracting in the locality of the only church we have in Western Australia, for a long period before its erection; consequently most outsiders thought when the church was being erected that it was for the polygamous Brighamites, and they therefore shun it like a plague. It will take a long time, possibly, to allay this spirit sufficiently to enable us to get a hearing.

We are doing our best by tracting and talking, also by an occasional street service to explain the differences. We are also endeavoring to set the work on a better footing and arouse interest in the Sunday school and Religio, having organized a local on the 8th inst. In order to more effectively prosecute the work in the vicinity of the church, we recommended the erection of an anteroom at the back of the church, wherein we could live and labor. The local brethren responded cheerfully and worked hard until now we are living in the room, and we feel sure that the work will be greatly benefited by the presence of the missionaries in the church building.

News of President Joseph Smith's death filtered through to us about the end of January, and upon reading of his personal arrangements for funeral, etc., we felt that he was indeed a man of God, whose vision was not dimmed by the pomp and show of the world. He will long live in the hearts of the Saints scattered abroad throughout the world, and though many of us have never seen his face in mortal life, his name has been a household word among us and has ever been held in the highest honor.

We feel that he has kept his famous pledge made at the Amboy Conference, even until death, and though the Brighamites have ridiculed that pledge, it were good for them and their institution if they could point to a president of their church who had made and fulfilled such a pledge. We have confidence that Brother Frederick M. Smith will honorably fill his father's place, and that the progress of the Reorganization will be steadily onward to final victory.

Many things appertaining to God's purposes in the earth still and perhaps ever will in mortal life perplex us, but we see nothing that offers us such hope of their final solution as the gospel of latter days, and therefore we must cling to it as a rod of iron, though like Paul of old we now "see through a glass darkly."

My health and that of my young missionary companion is good, and we get on splendidly together. We are hopeful that good may be accomplished here as a result of our visit, and that the church will in the future always maintain a missionary in Western Australia.

As ever yours in bonds,

J. H. N. JONES.

Far West

Far West District joins Independence Stake on the north and Lamoni Stake on the south. There are eighteen branches and a membership of two thousand, with sixteen church buildings, all paid for except two and they will soon be clear. The district was named after the old town of Far West, where a large number of Saints were located after leaving Independence. Far West was the birthplace of our esteemed brother and patriarch, Elder Alexander H. Smith, now deceased. There is a branch here of about sixty members, and a church building on the corner of the eighty-acre townsite of Far West, bearing the same name.

Far West District is in the "regions round about." About thirty-five years ago our late President, Joseph Smith, in company with Alexander McCallum, his son-in-law, drove from Lamoni to Independence with a horse and buggy, a distance of about one hundred and sixty miles, and stopped a few days with Saints at Stewartsville. At that time there were only a few members in Far West District, and only a few, if any, between Lamoni and Stewartsville, a distance of about one hundred miles, or between Stewartsville and Independence. President Smith said: "I expect to see the time when I can leave Lamoni for Independence and take my meals and stop over night with the Saints all along the way." This was true over twenty years ago, especially between Stewartsville and Independence.

Brother W. W. Blair visited us about the same time, and riding over the unimproved land from place to place said the time would soon come when upon this land, the "regions round about" there would be the homes of Saints. At that time there was a small branch known as the Stewartsville Branch. There are now four branches; one in Stewartsville; the German Stewartsville Branch, four miles north, and a little east; the Pleasant Grove Branch, five miles north; and the Dekalb Branch, three miles north and west. For about twenty years these four branches have had a union meeting the first Sunday of each month. They have preaching at 11 a. m., prayer and testimony at 12.30, and preaching at 7.30 p. m., in their respective branches. The union meetings are held at the branches in turn, and are looked forward to with much interest, for they are a spiritual feast for all who hunger and thirst for the heavenly manna.

The Saints of the Far West District are enjoying the promises made in Doctrine and Covenants 102, "they shall find favor and grace in the eyes of the people." One of our brethren upon the streets of Cameron heard one of the business men say, addressing several of the citizens, that for twenty years he had several of the Saints trade with him and had never lost a dollar. That was more than he would say for his church, and he wished that the town and country was full of Latter Day Saints, and for one he welcomed them. If the Saints continue to live in the future as in the last thirty-five years, the church will wield an influence that will be far-reaching for good. I am glad that the Saints who came to the vicinity of Cameron, Stewartsville, and other parts were not only Saints in name, but in deed also; they were men and women of good works, attended to their own business, did not speak disrespectfully of others, but preached the gospel. The good will and favor of the people of to-day is mainly because of the Christian deportment of our pioneers, many of whom have gone to their reward. Only a few are left, and I am glad the children are walking in the footsteps of their fathers, are lively stones in the building, and by their works are holding the good will and respect of good people.

How true the statement of our dear departed Brother Joseph, when he said he expected to live to see the day when the name of Latter Day Saint would be honorable. Surely when we read the high tributes that were paid to our worthy president, we see the fulfillment of the prediction, and I am glad that the high compliments are not confined alone to him, but extended to a large host of our departed ones, and to the living. May we as a church in every land walk in ways of righteousness, so that like a city upon the hill, the light can not be hid.

The redemption of Zion is progressing slowly, but surely. Brother A. H. Smith in speaking of this subject once compared the land of Zion, the "regions round about" to an hourglass, and the Saints to the grains of sand. The grains of sand, one by one, go into the glass, almost unobserved, and in time the glass is full. So shall the Saints gather into the regions round about. The command to gather into the regions round about is in force, and it is possible that it has been treated lightly by members who have sought homes in other parts, thereby manifesting by their works no faith in the commandment to "gather into the regions round about."

At the time the revelation was given (section 117) in 1865, land could be bought for $3 to $10 per acre, unimproved. Ten and fifteen years later, improved farms were bought in Far West District from $15 to $25 per acre; to-day the price is from $75 to $125 for the same land. If the commandment had been obeyed, there would be in the land of Zion to-day some thousands who are outside of the regions, who are no better prepared financially to buy a home, at the present price of land, than they were when the command was given to purchase. With a very few exceptions, those who moved into the region round about bought land, making part payments, and they have been prospered, and to-day have good homes, many of them modern. I have reference mostly to the Saints in Far West District, for I am not prepared to speak for other parts, as Far West has been my home for forty years.

Cameron is located near the center of Far West District, thirty-five miles east of Saint Joseph, fifty-five miles north of Kansas City, sixty-five miles north and west of Independence. The Delaney Branch is four miles north, the Far West ten miles south, the Oak Dale fifteen miles south and east, Stewartsville fifteen miles west.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

Southeastern Mission

Another interesting missionary year has gone into history, and many precious souls have been made glad in hearing the angel's message through the sacrifices of God's people.

I entered my field of labor April 23, after General Conference, stopping at Escatawpa, Mississippi, where we have a nice branch of willing workers. I visited various points in Mississippi until May, when I joined Brother A. E. Warr at Century, Florida, in tent work. Brother Warr is one of our live wires, a young missionary, and one we can all feel proud of. We held forth there twenty-one days, baptized three near there. From there we went to Flomaton, Florida. We spent twenty-one days here and baptized two. I then attended the Alabama reunion at McKenzie, Alabama, which was fine.

After the reunion I went into Mississippi where the gospel of Christ had never been sounded. There I had good interest, baptized five, organized a Sunday school with forty-one members, which is still getting along nicely.

I then entered into tent work with Brother E. C. Shelley, who is another one of our young missionaries we feel proud of. We labored at Repton, Alabama, then back near Flomaton. But because of so much rain and because of close times due to the war panic, we decided to put the tent away until a better season.

At Wallace we baptized eight, Brother Shelley four and myself four. We organized a Sunday school here with thirty-one members. We then attended the Mobile District conference at Bay Minette. From here we went to Mobile and Theodore. I left Brother Shelley and entered north-eastern Mississippi. From there to Dicksonville, Alabama. I attended the Florida reunion which was the best I ever attended.

After this reunion I came with my wife and the dearest baby girl in the world to Flomaton, Alabama. After getting her located with a new supply some of the Saints had given us, I went to Fashee, Alabama. I held forth there three weeks with good interest and attendance. I tried to secure the Methodist church but was denied. The people were willing but those in charge of the church were not. We preached at Brother Joseph Oden's house. He is a merchant and has a large dwelling, but it did not hold near all who came. Again I tried for the church or the schoolhouse, explaining my cause, but was denied.

On Sunday morning I attended their Sunday school. Their lesson being on temperance, I was asked by one of the teachers, with the consent of the superintendent, to teach the adult class. I accepted and gave a talk on organized class work and organization, after which the people voted unanimously for me to preach to them at eleven o'clock in their church. I did so with good liberty and some were interested.

While there I was called by special letter to Range, Alabama, to administer to Miss Della Hall, a nonmember. She expressed her desire to be administered to and confessed her faults. I read the law and proceeded.

Just before I entered the gate into her yard her brother and another man said if they had a Winchester they would make me move. This same brother and another man, who is now dead, once hid by the road a mile from that place with guns to kill Brethren J. T. Booker and G. T. Chute, but their hearts failed them.

I spent the night at S. M. Long's. I dreamed that night I met the Devil face to face and whipped him. I told the people next morning I was going to have trouble that day, but that I would come out victorious. Brother Long and I called during the morning to see the sick woman. I administered to her again, and as I was coming out at the gate her brother, the same one before mentioned, said, "I want this to be the last time you are caught on the inside of that yard." We asked him who we had harmed and what we had done to cause him to say what he had. He pointed to me and said, "That thing is what I am referring to. He is a beautiful thing to claim to raise the dead," etc. I confronted him with the Bible and the Devil was whipped. He could not withstand the truth. The woman is getting well.

I left there on March 4 for DeFuniak, Florida, one garden spot of the south. The city surrounds a beautiful small lake. There is a large Chautauqua conducted here annually. I preached here ten days and baptized two, one young school teacher nineteen years of age, and her mother. I then moved out into the regions round about and found a good many Utah Mormons. They were soon stirred up when I tried to tell them they were wrong. The young lady mentioned was converted by reading the Book of Mormon, left with her by I. M. Smith. She will make a good mark in the work I am sure.

I came to Cottondale, another new place for the gospel, on March 20. I secured the Baptist church and was given a home with a deacon of that church, Mr. J. G. Brennen, and was treated as one of the family. From thirty to seventy-five attended. A Mormon at that place called me a d— liar.

We can not fill half the calls for preaching. I went from here to Steel City, then to Alford, where I secured the Baptist church. I had from one hundred fifty to two hundred out every night at this place. From here I went to Ayoce. I only spent one night at this latter place. I returned to Steel City where I preached to large crowds until April 3. I also visited Red Bay where I was challenged by a Russellite for a debate, which will be attended to later.

While there, the first night I preached, some one put a note in the man's wagon where he would be sure to get it. The note read: "Please inform your preacher to keep his head under the roof after sunset, and take good care not to be outside the gate." (Signed) "Community." The same day three men came and asked the man I was staying with if he did not know that they did not allow a Mormon in the community but a few minutes. I continued my meetings, and as Paul of old, I considered them a set of cowards.

This has been the happiest year I have spent in the mission field, though I have been away from my wife and baby. The hard times have hit the South a severe blow. Many poor people are near starvation. I pray God's blessing on all the Saints, that we may one and all cooperate together and respond this year more liberally to our financial needs. Missionaries' families that sacrifice home and loved ones should be cared for. Especially may God's blessing be on the work, to speed it onward to the end, is my prayer.

Yours in the cause of Zion,

J. A. MILLER.

England

On yesterday, Sunday, March 21, we held our first open-air meeting for the season, at Finsbury Park. The day being fine, there was a large concourse of people present, as will be every Sunday if the weather is fine.

Finsbury Park is only a half-hour walk or a three-cent ride from where we live. Having made the necessary beforehand arrangements with the park board for the distribution of tracts, etc., we were well received by the park keepers, and allotted a place. There were about twelve groups of speakers, each at a distance of about sixty feet from each other. The arrangements are better than any other public park I ever visited in London.

We were twelve in our group to begin with. We had singing, prayer, then singing; the speaking was divided between the writer and Elder John Judd, of Enfield, London. Our subject was, "The unchangeable constitution of the church of Christ," placed on a placard twenty-four by forty-eight inches. On the day before I bought a speaker's second-hand platform, thirty by thirty inches, with a book rest in front (now we have one in two parks).

Quite a few people stand about and listen for a while and move off; others stay and listen attentively. Our members did not lose an opportunity to hand tracts to those who came within reach; the tracts were on faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands and divine authority, all gotten up specially for this mission.

As the writer stood upon the stand speaking, and could see over the heads of the people near the stand, it would seem as if the vision of old father Lehi as related in the Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 2: 41-84, and especially from 61-84, came to view. I could see the people, methought, just he saw them. However, I kept on talking, my voice seeming to ring out so loud that the people of other crowds turned and listened to what we had to say.

I could also feel the presence of some one on the stand with me. At first I thought it was one of my daughter's little boys, who had playfully gotten up on the stand behind me. I turned half around to see, but saw no one. Three or four times I felt the touch on my left side. I said nothing about my experience until after preaching services that evening, or just at retiring time, then it dawned on my mind that there was something said in my patriarchal blessing about experiences of this kind, my part coming to me in the performance of my work in the church.

About thirty years ago I had a similar experience. I was then at Independence, Missouri. Through some unwise action of one of our brethren, there arose a political strife between the citizens of Independence and the Saints. I was somewhat troubled about it. In the darkness of the evening, I knelt down under an apple tree in our garden. There I prayed that the Lord would dispel the cloud that seemed to hang so close over us, as I saw it; that we might not have another such experience as the church had in 1833-34. I felt a hand laid on my shoulder. With it came, "Peace be still, I am here." I thought I could feel myself as light as a feather. The weight and burden of my heart rolled away that instant.

Several months later Brother Henry Kemp came to Independence on a visit. At the Sunday afternoon prayer meeting he arose and spoke in prophecy, in part, The angel who was at first put in charge at Independence is still in charge. It went through me like a flash that that was the one who came to me on the evening before mentioned.

All the "theological" brains in London could not make me believe that angels do not come nowadays.

London apparently does not seem to realize that there is a war going on, except in a very few places. It looks like the fulfillment of the statement of Christ, They shall be eating and drinking until the Son of Man comes; just as it was in the days before the flood.

RODERICK MAY.

Hawaiian Islands

Since Sister Davis has written previously of our experiences incident to coming to this island country, I will confine myself to a narrative of more recent events. When we first arrived here we remained in the city of Honolulu for a period of two months, during which time we had opportunity to become acquainted with the Saints who reside here, and also to get a little insight into the general conditions that have to be met by missionaries who are sent to labor in this field.

It was decided that we go to the Island of Hawaii, so in the middle of October last we sailed from Honolulu to Hilo, the most important city on the "big island." We took up the work of the church there, but the conditions under which we worked were so different from what we had been accustomed to previously that I fear we did not do very well. It is needless to say that we were strangers in a strange land, but we found the people very hospitable and kind, and were accorded a warm friendship by them from the time we landed.

The missionaries who had preceded us there had made a good many friends for the church, which of course made it all the better for us. However, we were rather seriously handicapped owing to the fact that we had to get settled in quarters of our own, and this was difficult owing to a shortage of money with us. However, we rented a house, took possession with a scanty supply of furniture, and did the best we could at housekeeping.

We had no public place in which to hold meetings, so we improvised seats in our main living room, and proceeded to hold Sunday school and two or three preaching services each week. We also had a number of opportunities to preach in other people's houses, so we were able to reach quite a number of people after all, notwithstanding the fact that people here do not like to attend religious services in private houses much better than at home.

We continued in the above way, always on the watch for an opportunity to secure a public place in which to hold services, until in the month of February, when we received word from Brother Waller, who is in charge of the work here, to return to Honolulu for a time, as he was going to California and I would be needed to help with the work in Honolulu during his absence. Accordingly we came, and have been here since.

For myself I have found the work here different in many ways, and have found it difficult to adapt myself to a style of preaching that will be within comprehension of the people here, and besides attempting to establish a household of our own on the means that the church has been able to afford us has proven very difficult and well-nigh impossible. It has also seemed to me that it has been costing the church more to keep me in the field here than my services can possibly be worth, and this has made me worry a great deal.

On New Year's Day Sister Davis was taken sick, and has been sick ever since. Repeated administrations, together with the prayers of the Saints of Honolulu have only secured temporary relief for her thus far, and although at present she is better than she has been during a part of the time since she first became ill, she is far from well, but on the contrary seems quite broken down and can not do work of any kind that requires vigorous exertion, so that she is unable to undertake ordinary household duties.

Brother Waller has returned from the coast, and we would return immediately to Hilo, were it not for the sickness of my wife, but on account of her broken health we are hesitating and debating the question as to the advisability of undertaking the work there again. It has seemed sometimes that the only proper thing to do would be to return home with her, where she could have rest and proper medical treatment, and this may have to be done yet. We earnestly solicit the prayers of the Saints that we may both have health and strength to continue the work here while the church deems it advisable for us to remain.

We have had a serious accident here during the past week. One of a flotilla of four submarines while maneuvering just outside Honolulu Harbor went down and failed to rise (perhaps I should explain that these are American submarines stationed in Honolulu waters). Rescue parties immediately went to the scene and began vigorous efforts to locate the lost craft and rescue the twenty-one men who were entombed in her, but up to the present all efforts have failed, and it is now thought impossible that the men can be alive any longer.

To add to our anxiety, there is a young Latter Day Saint on the mother ship of the flotilla, the Alert, a Brother J. S. Cochran, from Kansas City, and it was rumored among the Saints here that he was in the lost crew, but to our gratification and relief he turned up at Religio last night, safe and sound.

This is the first submarine accident that has been sustained in the United States Navy, and it is deplored that it should happen here. The people of Honolulu have been waiting in breathless excitement during the last four days for word that rescue work was meeting with success, but have met with disappointment only thus far. The boat lies at a depth that is beyond the reach of divers, having gone down in about fifty fathoms of water.

We will be anxious to get the report of the General Conference, and although we will be absent in person, we will be present in imagination at least. We sincerely trust that the Spirit of inspiration may direct in the proceedings of the assembly wherever needed, so that everything will be accomplished in the exact manner that will most please our heavenly Father.

With "aloha nui" (much love) to all.

J. W. DAVIS.

Pastoral

To the Officers and Members of Mission Number 3, Comprising Maritime Provinces, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Massachusetts, Maryland, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, District of Columbia and Ohio: The Sixty-second General Conference will go down in history as a remarkable one in many respects, the effects of which will be far-reaching. It is to be hoped that the present year will surpass all previous years in winning souls to Christ and in building up the kingdom of God. That our mission work may be a great success, I herewith solicit the cooperation of all the local officers as well as the traveling ministry.

The following ministers have been appointed to labor in the above mission, and their fields of labor will be as follows: W. W. Smith and Hale W. Smith, First and Second Branches, respectively, in the city of Philadelphia; E. B. Hull, Brooklyn Branch, New York; T. U. Thomas, Scranton objective point; John Morris, Northeastern Pennsylvania; A. D. Angus, Evangelical Minister, New York and Philadelphia District; John Lentell, New York and Philadelphia District; H. J. Davison, Boston Branch; R. W. Farrell, Massachusetts District, Providence Branch objective point; J. A. Koehler, Massachusetts District, Fall River objective point; F. J. Ebeling, Maine, Jonesport objective point; H. A. Koehler, Western Maine District; William Anderson, Western Maine District; J. F. Sheehy, Eastern Maine District; I. M. Smith, evangelical minister, Maine, Nova Scotia during summer months; W. E. Peak, Pittsburgh District, Pittsburgh objective point; M. E. Thomas, J. E. Bishop, J. D. Carlisle, Rees Jenkins, Pittsburgh District; J. C. McConaughy, Matthew Liston, J. Harding, Western Ohio District, L. E. Hills, Cleveland city through the summer months, Southern Ohio District thereafter; Richard Baldwin, have charge of Temple during summer, Sharon and Youngstown thereafter; L. G. Burdick, Sharon and Youngstown and Pittsburgh districts; William Lewis, evangelical minister, Sharon and Youngstown and Kirtland districts; A. B. Phillips, New York District, in charge; A. E. Stone, New York District; J. A. Halb, C. W. Neville, Kirtland District; Southern Ohio District; H. E. Moler in charge; F. G. Pitt, evangelical minister, C. E. Bozarth, Frank Mills, T. D. Harnish; Bishop J. A. Becker will labor in Ohio State and the Pittsburgh District. He will also look after the Temple during April and May.

We urge everyone of the missionaries to go direct to his field of labor and to get there as soon as possible. None are expected to leave the field without consulting the general minister in charge, unless it be a case of emergency.

We desire to call the attention of all the Saints in the entire mission to the fact that we have three bishops in the mission, namely, John Zimmermann, M. C. Fisher, and J. A. Becker, who will be pleased to receive your tithes and offerings, also many bishop's agents. It will require considerable means to supply the wants of the traveling ministers' families and the poor in the mission. Hence, we sincerely trust that all will put forth their best endeavors to obey the temporal law, which is spiritual.

My mission address is 185 West Eleventh Avenue, Columbus, Ohio. I urge the missionaries and the presidents of branches and districts to be prompt in reporting to the officers in charge. I will try to visit all points in the mission as time and means will permit.

Your brother and coworker in the one faith,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

To those interested in Mission Number 4, comprising Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee, and South Indiana; Greeting: It is with profound gratitude to our heavenly Father for his many blessings vouchsafed to us in the past that we begin another conference year, and with renewed faith and courage for the onward rush of our beloved cause I solicit on behalf of the missionary force your hearty moral, financial and spiritual cooperation, for without such from the local priesthood and membership the missionary force will be badly handicapped, and vice versa. Therefore, as we are laboring to the one great end, the amelioration of our fellow man and his triumphant entry into a happier future home, let us bend every energy in righteousness to thus make humanity better because we are a part of it.

A. V. Closson, high priest, Independence, Missouri, will be in charge of the Virginias, taking the place of Elder H. E. Winegar (who has been appointed to another field), with a view to electing him president of the district at the next election, the reason being that the district requires a president who can devote all of his time traveling in behalf of district work; he will also interest himself as fully as possible in the Religio and Sunday school work. Elder Frederick Moser, Jr., will report to him.

Elder J. W. Metcalf, Independence, Missouri, will be in charge of South Indiana and Central and Eastern Kentucky, and associated with him in the mission will be Elders F. A. Rowe and L. C. Moore. Elder Gratz of Indianapolis, Indiana, will in like manner labor by direction of and report to the assistant minister in charge.

J. R. McLain, high priest, Fulton, Kentucky, will be in charge of the Kentucky and Tennessee District. He will be assisted by S. E. Dickson, J. M. Nunley, J. A. Roberts and C. A. Nolan, who will also report to him.

Elder F. M. Slover, Independence, Missouri, will be in charge of Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi, and will be assisted by Elders Swen Swenson, A. G. Miller, A. E. Warr and E. C. Shelly, all of whom will receive directions from and report to the one in charge.

While the General Conference just past has been one very peculiar in many respects, yet I never attended one from which the missionary went to his post of duty with apparently greater and brighter prospects for a successful year in every respect. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that a brighter era is about to break upon us. May we all do our part in ushering it in.

I would wish all to please observe as closely as possible the following: The missionaries who are also district presidents will travel over your districts as rapidly as you consistently may, regulating and setting in order whatever requires your attention in harmony with your office and in conjunction with the local authorities and the First Presidency, observing the instructions given in Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7, informing the assistant minister in charge wherever his help is required, who in turn will seek counsel of the minister in general charge where necessary.

To avoid injury to the work by the ordination to any office in the priesthood of any person it is desired that consent will first be obtained from the district conference or missionary in general charge.

The General Conference appointee who is not a district president will please forget as far as practicable "The old, old path," that leads from one branch to another, and depending upon the Son of Righteousness to illuminate your path by day and the Star of Bethlehem to lead you by night, launch out as far as your united faith and prayers will unlock the vast Macedonia lying before you, and cease not while an unsaved soul may be reached, and thus rid your garments of the blood of the millions who have never yet heard the bugle notes of the true gospel call. In doing this you will enjoy a peace of mind and spirit that can not be had while following the old beaten branch trail.

A great extent of the mission is new territory, and the missionary will please push out into unorganized fields to the extent of his ability, and let us make every legitimate effort to make and work more new openings, and make more absolutely new converts this year than we have hitherto been able to do. This may be done if we confine our preaching chiefly to the gospel, leaving the abstruse problems incident to the outcome of the European war to those whose foundation is not on the rock revelation.

As the Lord has said that all men, women and children are called to labor for the Lord, let us hand in hand face the foe bravely, and with a prayer of faith in our hearts go forward bearing one another's burdens until we can lay them down at the feet of the General whose soldiers never fight but in the right.

If the readers of this article who may require assistance or who know of any in isolated localities will write the undersigned stating their needs, we will make every reasonable effort to supply the demand. Please write at once.

May the riches of heaven be abundantly showered upon all, is the prayer of Your colaborer for Christ,

R. C. RUSSELL, Minister in General Charge.

May "Century"

Perhaps the most important feature of the May Century is an article called "The ounce of prevention," in which Professor R. M. Johnston, the authority on military history, points out the need for army reorganization in America. The Civil War, he says, would have been prevented had the North possessed an efficient army, a reflection he adapts to the present situation, with its possible perils. He regards the Swiss army as a model and outlines a concrete and feasible plan for us to follow. Just now when so much talk is in the air about the liquor question in England, James Davenport Whelpley's article on "War and drink" is very timely and informative. It shows how despotic Russia has set tolerant England a notable example, and discusses the difficulties that block reform, despite the fact that from thirty to forty per cent of the new army have admittedly been rendered inefficient through drink. Another timely article is Judson C. Welliver's "Poland's story," telling in popular style the history of the unhappiest of all nations and concluding with the opinion that it has been too long divided ever to reunite again. The article is illustrated with many charming photographs. "The Czar and his people" is the subject of the third installment of "Cabbages and kings," in which the Infanta Eulalia of Spain tells her intimate reminiscences of rulers and their courts. She has much to say of the delightful family life of the Czar and his children, and much in praise of the Czar himself. Two articles in criticism of American ways are "The right of a child to two parents," in which Mary Ware Dennett points out how badly children fare between fathers who are out of the house all day and mothers who are scarcely able to rise above their narrowing routine; and "The old woman's money," in which James Stephens, the Irish novelist, charges that American literature aims exclusively at boys and middle-aged women. Other articles dealing with American affairs are N. I. Stone's "Shall the majority rule?" discussing how our electoral system results in defeating the express wishes of the voters, and "Justice for the small man," by David A. Baer, showing how our courts are improving in the matter of cheapness and promptness in small cases. One of the most attractive features of this number is a series of "Etchings of Antwerp," by William A. Sherwood.

May "Cartoons" Magazine

How difficult Uncle Sam is finding it to be everybody's friend and to preserve strict neutrality is shown in a remarkable series of cartoons in the May Cartoons Magazine. The events of the previous month—the hesitation of Italy, the bombardment of the Dardanelles, the fall of Przemysl, the massing of the armies for the spring campaign, and other topics are fully treated in cartoon and comment. A group of interesting Japanese cartoons shows how the Japs themselves regard their "Monroe doctrine" in China. Some of Will Dyson's striking cartoons are reproduced. Mr. Dyson is the Englishman whose work has brought home to King George the realization that the "twilight of the kings" is falling, and has caused attempts on the part of the British Government to suppress such delineations. James Melvin Lee, director of the department of journalism of New York University, contributes the second of his articles on "Wordless Journalism," treating of the cartoons that helped make history during the early period of the republic. "Zim," the veteran cartoonist, has a few pages of "homemade philosophy," illustrated by himself. There is also something of interest concerning the clay caricatures of Mrs. Helena Smith-Dayton, who is immortalizing certain New York types."

Your "Traveling Home" to California Expositions

Going to California even the most direct way requires days—not hours—long enough for you to experience either restful homelike satisfaction, or restless discomfort—irritation. Make a careful choice of routes—based on service.

SERVICE is the big individual feature of the Burlington—and travel-wise people know it. The roadbed is smooth, the maximum of safety insured, train equipment the last word in luxury. Berths are like "home beds." The meals are tasty and varied—reasonable in price—and well served. Burlington trains have all the little added features that distinguish modern "limited" travel. And, best of all, Burlington employees are as courteous as they are efficient. They help speed the days—point out and intelligently explain the wonderful country you traverse.

Because of the liberal provisions of the Burlington's Grand Circle Tour, you can stop over at any point. But if you go straight through, you arrive refreshed—because of pleasant days and comfortable nights.

This is the tour de luxe—the Burlington's Grand Circle—through glorious Colorado: Denver, the new Rocky Mountain National (Estes) Park, Colorado Springs, Pikes Peak Region, Royal Gorge by daylight; daylight view of Salt Lake City and Great Salt Lake. Then, Los Angeles, San Diego exposition, and the Panama-Pacific. An Ocean trip by steamer to Portland; the great Pacific Northwest. And homeward bound, via Glacier National Park or Yellowstone Park.

Come in and get your copy of our California Expositions folder.

Editorial

THE SOLIDARITY, AND PERMANENCY OF THE WORK

Some have felt greatly concerned lest with the passing of our beloved President Joseph Smith the church might fall into disorder division, or decay, or all of these. Happily their fears were groundless. Our faith instead of being weakened has been profoundly strengthened in the permanency and ultimate triumph of the latter-day work.

Our enemies have rejoiced in the hope that with his passing the church might enter into a more or less speedy decline, leading to complete dissolution. How grievously they are to be disappointed.

As indicating that they are on the alert we note that shortly before the late General Conference one of our opponents (a Christian, or "Campbellite," by profession) wrote to us sending one dollar for the SAINTS' HERALD and remarking that he had heard of some sort of conflict about to occur and adding that if "the fracas," as he elegantly termed it, lasted longer than the subscription, he would renew.

We replied that evidently he intended to become a permanent subscriber; our only fight being against the forces of evil, and destined to last until the millennium, at least. But we did not like to take his money with a misunderstanding on his part, so advised him that if it were some sort of internal or internecine squabble between brethren, delectable details of which he desired to secure, he should recall his dollar and subscribe for some (any) good "Christian" publication, as he would get more for his money in that way.

It is an old saying that every human institution is but the lengthened shadow of some man. It is true that human institutions endure in proportion to the wisdom and greatness of their earthly founders.

But the church is not a human institution, though composed of human units. It is of divine origin. It can not be measured by the shadow of any man. It is destined to endure, now in its militant form, presently in its triumphant form and state.

The work moves forward despite the loss of men. It is vital and progressive. It withstands shock and emergency. It has powers, possibilities, resources yet unfolded, probably vastly beyond our present comprehension. We should move forward with the utmost confidence in God and in his work.

And this the church is doing. With absolute candor and truthfulness we assure our readers that never before to our knowledge did there exist a greater degree of good-fellowship and unity among the leading quorums of the church. Never to our knowledge was there less friction, jealousy, or division. On practically all important matters touching the forward movements of the church arising since the death of President Joseph Smith there has been a marked unanimity of sentiment. The two remaining members of the Presidency, the Twelve, Seventies, high priests, order of bishops, and the evangelists have stood shoulder to shoulder.

Never before to our knowledge has there existed a greater degree of unity and good-fellowship, more confidence, courage, and hope among the membership. They have not been disturbed or uneasy, fearing some disaster. With faith and calmness they have continued their work and sustained the quorums.

We are impressed by the solidarity of the work. If schisms are to occur they have not yet revealed themselves to our observation. We have confidence that they will not occur. We are living in tragic and momentous times. By all means we should be united, and more and more united as time passes.

The great wars that are now ravaging Europe and distressing nearly every great nation are in fulfillment, of biblical prophecy. They mark the latter days that precede the second coming of Jesus Christ in glory and power. He would have a people prepared to meet him at his coming. He would have a united people: "If ye are not one ye are not mine."

In view then of all that is in progress in the world and in the church to confirm our faith and arouse our diligence, and sustained by our own strong personal testimony, let us as Saints greatly magnify our high calling. Diligent in service and pure in life, let us work out our own salvation in fear and trembling, and while so doing seek earnestly for the salvation of others. If we will do this, the peace that comes from God will attend us in the midst of a troubled world, and success will crown our efforts.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

OUR WORK

NUMBER III—A COOPERATIVE WORK

If the people of God are to accomplish the work "intrusted to all" it is essential that they labor together. Theirs is not an individual work. It is a collective work. The individual labors for the collective good. Preeminently a work of cooperation, God's work can be accomplished only in cooperative activity. Therefore, his people must labor together.

When unity and brotherly love seem impossible is when men fail to sense the meaning of the language "to the intent that all may labor together," let each man labor "with God." Brother A and Brother B laboring alone can not labor together. But when each labors with God they labor together, without formula and without effort.

Men differ in opinion because they have developed under different environment; in theory, because they have differed in experience; in consecration, because they differ in motive. They do not labor as one because they are not one in mind and in purpose. They can not become one each working in his own way, nor yet in compromise; but as each labors with God, and under the light of that communion becomes possessed of the mind and purpose of God, each becomes one with him, and consequently one with each other, in understanding, in intent, and in effort in the cause of righteousness.

This unity is to be extended into the daily vocations and activities of each life, regardless of station; God has said:

To the intent that [or in order that—EDITORS] all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God.

The man on the farm or in the mill, the mother in her home, the child at school, no less than the minister of the gospel, is each to become a coworker with God. The vocation of every Saint is to be one which rests under the favor of God, the affairs thereof to be conducted in a way that permits God to become and continue a coworker with him. In other words, the end of each man's labor, out of which comes a godly life and that portion due for the sustenance of the church, is to make for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God and the establishing of his righteousness.

As the individual is to be one with God in the work of his vocation, so is he to conform to his will in any lawful diversion, the intent of which is recreative. Nature is not without a playtime. As the lark sings his evening song, and as the lily folds herself in the sleep of winter, so in all God's creation there is diversion and a rest from labor; and thus may the Saint of God seek respite from toil. He should make sure, however, that his pastime recreates again vitality and diverts not from efficiency and constancy to duty. If it is for any other purpose, or if in effect it weakens physically, mentally or spiritually, it prostitutes nature's playtime and leaves the participant without gospel virtue and apart from God.

The diligence of the individual Saint, then, in his vocation and under his calling, together with a wise selection in the matter of his social activities and amusements, brings him to a oneness with God. As one with the Father, he is one with his brother, who also is one with God. And as the united people of God, laboring together with him, there is no work "intrusted to all" which shall not be accomplished.

The work of the church, which is the work of the Saints, is as wide as the world, as deep as sin, and as continuous as eternity. Yet under God it shall be consummated, and there shall be handed up to him a church undefiled, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, a people celestialized and fitted for his holy presence.

To this end is the calling of each Saint of latter days; and this shall be the triumph of the army of the Lord as it labors in unison in the great missionary work of the ages. Truly! a calling and a triumph worthy of a mighty and a consecrated effort.

J. F. GARVER.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

MANY INDICTED.—Eighteen labor leaders, eighty-two contractors or contracting concerns and two alleged trusts were on April 27 indicted by a federal grand jury before Judge Landis at Chicago, on charges of conspiracy to constrain trade, etc.

ENGLAND TAXES LIQUOR.—Announcing that the British Government had concluded that "it was not justified in instituting prohibition until it had tried everything else," David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, introduced in the House of Commons, April 29, a government plan to restrict drinking during the war which passed by a vote of eighty-nine to five, the first divided vote since the outbreak of the war. This provision increases the duties from $3.75 to $7.50 per gallon on spirits; from 93 cents to $4.48 per gallon on sparkling wines; and places a graduating tax, determined by the percentage of liquor, rising from $9.50 to $18.50 per gallon on beers.

WOMEN'S PEACE CONFERENCE.—On April 28 at The Hague, occurred the opening of the International Congress of Women in the interests of peace. Jane Addams of Chicago was unanimously chosen chairwoman. American women are taking an active part in the congress, and the American delegation is the largest foreign delegation in attendance. Resolutions have been adopted opposing the assumption that women can be protected under conditions of modern warfare; pledging women to do all in their power to promote mutual understanding and good will; expressing the conviction that international disputes should be referred to arbitration and conciliation, and urging the governments to come to an agreement to bring pressure to bear on any country resorting to arms instead of referring its case to arbitration and conciliation. The following statement by Doctor Lida Hermann of Germany, in the opening session, to quote Jane Addams, "was greeted with rounds of applause":

Worse than death, yes, worse than hellish, are the defenselessness of the women in this warfare and the violations by the invading soldiers.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Conditions in Poland and the Carpathians are reported unchanged. The Russians claim gains in Persia. Fighting in the vicinity of Ypres, Belgium, continues, with slight gains for the Germans. It is thought that Germany is attempting to extend her lines to Calais, on the French coast. Activity continues along the Meuse and in the Vosges and Champagne regions. The attack on the Dardanelles continues at intervals. Forces have been landed to supplement the attack of the allied fleet, British on the European side, French on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles. The Turks have been engaged by both expeditionary forces. Reports of successes conflict. The Russian Black Sea fleet is in action against the Turkish forts on the Bosphorus. The Swedish steamer Centric and the Norwegian steamer Caprivi have been sunk by German mines; The Norwegian barks Oscar and Eva, flying the Danish flag, and the British steamer Mobile by German submarines; the French cruiser Leon Gambetta by an Austrian submarine in the Adriatic. The United States steamer Cushing, from Philadelphia to Rotterdam, was damaged by bombs dropped from a German aircraft. It is presumed that the bombs were dropped under the impression that a hostile vessel was being attacked. The German converted cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm has been voluntarily interned at Newport News. Following reported massacres and threatened further outrages, the United States Government has appealed to Turkey for protection of American Christians. Persecutions of Christians in Persia are reported. The Italian ambassadors at Paris, London, Vienna, and Berlin, have been summoned to Rome for a conference. Report indicates a possible understanding between Italy and the allies concerning the terms upon which Italy will enter the war if she finally decides to do so.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

HERALD WANTED.—The HERALD Editors desire to secure a copy of the SAINTS' HERALD for March 22, 1905, known as the "Historical Number." Anyone having a copy of this number that they are willing to forward to complete our files, will confer a favor upon us by so doing.

FREDERICK M. SMITH COMING WEST.—By letter from President Frederick M. Smith we learned that he was improving rapidly. He intended at that writing to start West Saturday, May 1, to arrive in Lamoni Monday, proceeding to Independence the following day, to meet with the joint council of Presidency and Twelve, Wednesday, May 5.

MUSICAL SUCCESS.—The Brooklyn Chat for April 3, contains an excellent report of the work of the choir of our Brooklyn, New York, church, in the rendition of the cantata "Olivet to Calvary." Especial mention is made of the work of Brother A. N. Hoxie, jr., director, and that of Srs. Ethel Kinnaman, contralto and Marie Riggs, pianist. In sending the clipping Brother E. B. Hull, pastor of the Brooklyn church, says:

The choir has been doing fine work the past year under the careful management of its leader, Mrs. Ephraim Squire. Brother Hoxie gives us one night a week of his valuable time, which is appreciated by all. Brother Earl Audet at the organ has been a source of strength to the organization. The newspaper article I inclose in this letter was written by Reverend C. W. R. Maul, a Baptist minister of Brooklyn, who writes for the Brooklyn Chat. He is one of our noble defenders, when our work and good name are misrepresented by people who do not know us. All of the honest in heart are not as yet gathered into the kingdom, that is why the fishers and hunters are still active throughout the world. May the Lord bless those with various talents to assist in the Master's work.

FAVORABLE COMMENT.—A brother writes from the East as follows:

If you are a human editor you will be glad to get a criticism from the East (where the "wise men" live, you know). The other day I visited Brother —, and we settled the affairs of the nation, which included the HERALD, and we O. K'd the HERALD. My observation (from my standpoint wholly) is, the editorial is too long, rather make it two or more. However, I do not overlook the fact that you are giving many editorial points under Notes and Comments. Current Events is valuable for the nonnewspaper reader (and all appreciate the department, I am sure). In the country there are lots of Saints who get the papers only once a week. We are interested in the doings of the stakes. In the last HERALD, the "Letter of instruction" is a timely insert. Your proof readers are doing fine work. The HERALD will never be able to get along without the letters. They are a source of great comfort to the Saints in general. (I confess that I often look for the writer's name before I read them—but this is not so with the majority of Saints.) News from Missions and Branches will always interest. I think the Miscellaneous Department can be improved. I don't see the necessity of a half page of names—perhaps the historian may find matter in them for another volume of history. I find people reading the HERALD. In some families it is opened before the letters—and even the dishes stand till the HERALD is skimmed through. It is a happy size and the type is very readable. Wish the printer would wash the ink out of the quotation from John 8: 31, 32 and the one from Jacob 2: 36. (The dirt out of the type.) And—well—this is all. I have not gone through the HERALD as Paine did the Bible, with an ax; but I have gone through it with a critical eye—and have done my worst, or best.

Our Vista

This life is but a little landscape,
 With its streams, its vales and hills;
 Out beyond our farthest vision
 All that's great the distance fills.
 Grasp we may to catch the sparkle
 Of the star just out of sight,
 Though a mightier world than many,
 It gives not for us its light.
 Far beyond our highest fancies,
 In the realms we know exist,
 Mysterious taunt us and they haunt us,
 They invite us, they insist,
 Yet we may make our circle larger—
 Our experience greater yet,
 E'er our life on earth is ended
 And our evening's sun is set.

CHARLES E. CRUMLEY.

Revisiting

The backward path to boyhood days
 Is never very hard to find;
 You trod it quickly when your gaze
 Surveyed old scenes of boyhood land;
 While strangers passed and never guessed
 The growing turmoil in your breast.

That wall you climbed with all your might,
 The while you tore your stocking knees,
 Has shrunk to such a puny height
 You mount upon its crest with ease.
 The tree that was too thick to "shin"
 By some odd means has gotten thin.

This vast expanse you scanned with care,
 Then crossed with frightened, hurrying feet.
 Lest traffic overtake you there,
 Is now a quiet village street.
 Each doorway wide and gate-post high
 Seem smaller to your startled eye.

Old friends that pass look up to smile,
 Who used to greet you smiling down;
 A magic spell, in this brief while,
 Has somehow fallen on the town.
 Yet strange! You seem to be again
 As small a boy as you were then.

That backward path to boyhood days
 Is never closed to them that see;
 It winds by old familiar ways
 And leads you to a mother's knee,
 Where boyhood's gentle king and queen
 Dispel the years that intervene.

But if that path you can not find
 Since they two laid their scepters down,
 Yet other paths there are that wind
 Through valleys to the Mother Town,
 Where many dear remembered things
 Call childhood back on certain wings.
 —Burgess Johnson, in Harper's Magazine for October.

The Passing Day

The glorious sun of early morn
 Tells all the world a day is born.
 In vain we watch, yea, often try
 To note its progress through the sky.
 Its path is long; and we may say,
 "Yet many hours remain this day."
 But, lo, ere we are full aware
 The stars are shining everywhere!

So is this life but short at best,
 Too soon its sun sinks in the west;
 We scarcely note it slowly pass,
 But see beyond through clouded glass.
 At dawn we think till noon quite long,
 But ere we know 'tis quickly gone;
 The zenith passed, it faster goes,
 Till golden ray but faintly shows.

Then let us work while yet 'tis day—
 Spend not our time at idle play;
 For each, alone, must shape his course,
 To end in joy, or in remorse!
 To-day is ours, then let it be
 So spent that joy may come when we Shall hear that blessed call, "Come home,"
 Because we've done the best we've known.

LAMONI, IOWA.

AUSTIN M. DOBSON.

Your Friend

Perhaps no haze of circumstance
 Can justify the thing he did;
 No charity erase a stain
 That can not be forgotten or hid,
 And yet, however he offend,
 Was he not once your friend?

You look with sorrow on the deed,
 You find him pitifully marred.
 His honor seems a broken reed,
 His gallant youth for ever scarred.
 The world can not restore or mend,
 And yet—he was your friend!

You called him once your comrade true,
 As, happy lads, you laughed on life—
 Together playing, working, too,
 You learned the thrill of wholesome strife;
 You swore to serve, leal friend for friend
 Until the story's end.

But that is altered—must be so,
 Since he has failed to meet life's test!
 And yet must he, unbrothered, go
 Where failure, lurks apart, confessed?
 Can nothing help, no love defend
 This man you called your friend?

Ah! Give him now your loyal hand
 To lead him from this utmost hell!
 This burning, baneful, barren land
 Where only friendless failures dwell!
 Give him your hand! Despair shall end
 For him who hath one friend!

OUR MISSION

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 1

BY F. J. EBELING

The success of any movement, be it great or small, is more or less measured by the true conception of the extent of its mission. Much of the inspiration to accomplish the task is due to the size of the undertaking. Had not Columbus been fully cognizant of the immensity of his great mission he might have turned backward instead of urging his crew onward in his immortal work,—“Sail on, sail on, sail on, and on.” Had it not been for the realization of his ponderous task of connecting the two continents by cable, Cyrus Field would have shrunk from further efforts at some of the terrible setbacks he received. It was because of the enormity of the situation in the great European struggle now progressing that such huge preparations were made.

As we turn our attention to spiritual things we can see no less reason for the adequate preparation and conception of our mission.

When we are made to fully realize that upon us is laid the enormous responsibility of redeeming the world, that alone would be a great inspiration to bring into requisition all the resources at our command.

I am fearful at times, that our mission as a church is not fully appreciated. Do we realize that the priesthood we hold, which is the right and power to act in the name of the Lord, has been committed to us, and handed down from the days of Adam! That it is not given to us to glorify or aggrandize ourselves but to bless the race.

On several occasions the Lord told Joseph Smith that a great and marvelous work was about to come forth among men. The character of the work was that of saving souls. A greater work no man can be engaged in. Of this the Lord has said that if we spend our whole life and save but one soul in the kingdom of God, how great will be our reward with that one soul!

One plain and outstanding purpose for this latter-day gospel was the convincing of the Jews of the knowledge of the Son of God, whom their forefathers rejected. Just think! After they have wandered in darkness and ignorance for ages, to us is committed the task of bringing back that peculiar people to God and finally restoring them to their promised land. And when we think that the work among them has only begun, the immensity of our mission must take on a deeper meaning. It certainly requires an abundance of faith in God to move out amid the seeming impossibilities. But this is the mission of the church, and it will be accomplished.

The permanent and everlasting establishment of Zion has ever been the dazzling dream of all the holy prophets since the world began. Mighty empires have risen and fallen amid the rotten timbers of human greed. The course of human destiny has been changed in an effort to establish an ideal government, the underlying principles of which are special privileges to none and equal privileges to all; but to this church is committed the only constitution calculated to develop this divine product.

Through the Prophet Daniel it was decreed that the God of heaven should establish a kingdom which should never be thrown down or given to another people. We believe we are the people to whom this mighty task has been given. Do we fully sense its full significance? And if so, what are we doing in an effort to cooperate with God to consummate the ideal?

To this church has been committed the mighty mission of taking the gospel to every nation, kingdom, tongue and people. When we look about and see the millions who are absolutely ignorant of the true gospel, millions whom even the sunbeams of civilization have not yet reached, together with the seemingly insurmountable opposition of every description which lies in our pathway, it sometimes may take all the faith we can muster to believe we are the people to whom this ponderous task has been committed. But we believe God has decreed it, and in some way and some time it will be done, and well done.

Of all the responsibilities placed upon the Saints, that which is of greater magnitude than any other is the one declared by the Apostle Paul, “Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world.” And when I reflect upon the present conditions of the Saints, and think of their judging the souls of men for eternity, I am fairly dazed in beholding the great distance! But to this duty have we been assigned, and for this duty must we qualify, or fall disgraced and dishonored amid the “wreck of matter and crush of worlds.”

Until we can judge and control ourselves, will we be able to judge and control others? If we can not be intrusted with the little things, how can God intrust us with the true riches?

To these and many other important duties and responsibilities has God called us. In reviewing our mission from this point I can see a deeper meaning in the language of Paul, “We are laborers together with God.” And if it were not for the fact that God is working with us in this great mission the heart might fail and the soul grow faint. But the extent of the task and the mightiness of the God who is back of us gives us ample inspiration to push onward, to the full accomplishment of all things spoken of by the holy prophets since the world began.

In the short articles which are to follow, we shall endeavor to point out ways and means by which our mission is to succeed, using as a bedrock individual preparation and consecration, and the consequent happiness here and hereafter.

IN THE REGIONS ROUND ABOUT

The writer of this article has traveled for twelve years as a missionary in several states of the Central West, and has been a resident in the same country for forty-two years. During that time his opportunity for observing the development of the country and things religious has been as good as that of the average citizen; and no opportunity that would increase a knowledge of conditions as they exist has been permitted to pass by unimproved.

In preparing this article the chief thought is to lay before the reader those things that have affected the membership of the church in their temporal and spiritual affairs, in the hope that it might help some escape the difficulties that have befallen many in their efforts to improve their condition in both spiritual and temporal ways.

HISTORICAL

In June, 1831 (Doctrine and Covenants 52) instruction was given to the elders, and to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon in particular, about Missouri and their journey there, and that a conference would be held there and they would receive instructions what to do. In July, 1831 (Doctrine and Covenants 57) Joseph Smith and others were in Independence, Missouri, at which time the Temple Lot was dedicated; and a revelation was given naming that as the center place for the gathering of the Saints, and giving instructions to purchase all the land west from that point to the west line of Missouri. From that time until July, 1833, the Saints were gathering in and purchasing the land.

The spirit of opposition soon began to manifest itself, and in a short time it assumed the proportions of mob violence. The righteousness of the Saints did not come up to the standard as required by the gospel (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 3; 102: 2) and the Lord permitted them to be driven out. After they were driven out the Lord informed the church that he had not changed concerning Zion, and that in his own due time he would commence again at that place; that there was no other place appointed, and from there Zion would continue to grow, and that stakes would be added as the membership increased (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4). This would be after "many days" of waiting (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 8).

At this time is when we first learn of gathering into the "regions round about" (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9). The spirit of persecution was too great for them to return, so it was the Lord's desire for them to gather in the country near by, and in due time if they were faithful they could go in and occupy the land that had been consecrated for that purpose. Further instruction was given for them not to sell their land, although they should not be permitted to dwell thereon (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 13).

The Saints were not permitted to return, and so long as they remained in Missouri they occupied the counties farther north in the State, and were finally all driven out in the spring of 1839 and found a resting place in western Illinois.

Their sojourn in Illinois continued only about seven years, when the hand of persecution was raised against them again, and in the troubles that ensued the prophet and patriarch were both killed; the scattering and the "dark and cloudy day followed." A few of the faithful ones clung to the faith of their fathers, and the Reorganization was soon brought about. Among the first things that the new organization did was to declare by resolution that there was no place appointed for the Saints to gather to at that time, 1852 (Conference Resolutions, number 7).

It was only a short time until there was a large membership in western Iowa and eastern Nebraska, and the desire to gather to Jackson County, Missouri, was constantly increasing. This is a legitimate desire, and always finds a place in the hearts of God's faithful people. It was not yet the Lord's appointed time; the "many days" had not yet expired. In 1867, and later, when some of our people located near and in Independence, they were given to understand by word and act of some of the people that they were not welcome, and at times it was made very unpleasant for them. Many of the original mobbers and their children still lived there.

In 1873 the Lord spoke to the church and said it was not "expedient" at that time to organize any stakes, and when it was he would command such to be done, and until such time the command was "to gather into the regions round about." It is not necessary to closely define the boundary lines of the "regions round about"; we may feel perfectly safe in applying the term to the great Central West. It was the Lord's will that from that time (1873) we gather into the country designated and buy land until the conditions would be favorable to gather to the center spot, and the country contiguous thereto, which instruction was given in 1901 (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 10), and two stakes were organized.

CONDITIONS NOW

We will try to draw a faithful picture as we see things, covering a period of approximately thirty-five years; and what it is now is a result of what was happening during that time.

First, The numerical strength of those present in the branches is from twenty-five to fifty per cent of the enrollment.

Second, Some of the branches have no meetings only when a missionary comes around to visit them; some have a Sunday school, and occasionally a Religion is found where no regular branch meetings are held.

Third, Some members are indifferent and manifest no interest in the church or its auxiliaries, and in some instances repudiate the faith of the church in which their parents reared them.

Fourth, In some districts where good branches one time existed they have totally disappeared, and not ten per cent have gathered into the stakes; of the balance some have died; some have moved into the West and Canada; some have left the church; some because of indifference have failed to unite with other branches, or to manifest any interest as scattered members.

Fifth, The loss of the young, especially the young men, is a fearful drain on the numerical, financial, and spiritual strength of the church. They do not necessarily go out of the church, but from the church and its influence. Going out into the world of business and getting married and starting homes for themselves takes them away from the old home and from the church and the social opportunities that it afforded them.

We will consider some of the causes that contributed to the above conditions.

First, Many have moved away because they wanted to increase their wealth by buying cheaper land, and to give their children the same opportunity.

Second, Many of the young when they have gained their majority have gone to a newer country, or to the city to start homes of their own.

Third, Some of the older people who are left alone on the farm after the children have gone to make their way in the world sell out and move to some of the larger branches within the confines of the stakes.

Fourth, Some of the young whose homes were in the country or smaller towns have desired to take up professional or mechanical work or a business career and they have moved to the cities.

Fifth, In some instances when the young have married, their companions, not being members of the church, saw no benefit to come to them by remaining in a branch, or when moving to go where there was another branch.

Sixth, Improved farm machinery has reduced the demand for farm labor. All kinds of work requires less men than in the past, and however great the demand may be now, it required more men to do the same work thirty-five years ago. This causes many to change from farm labor to industrial pursuits in the city.

Seventh, The price of land advancing from five dollars per acre in many instances to more than two hundred dollars per acre, with intermediate prices, makes the task almost insurmountable for a young man without capital to get a home, and conditions for a renter are not very favorable, and in some cases are intolerable. These conditions cause the young man on the farm without sufficient capital to go to a new country or to the city and take up a new career.

Eighth, Some have accumulated considerable wealth and they seek the most desirable places where they can have all the comforts, conveniences and pleasures that money can buy, and all things affecting the church's welfare are of secondary importance with them.

Ninth, The opportunities for the education of the young in the country are not so good as in the larger towns or cities, and this oftentimes is the deciding factor with many parents as to where their home will be.

These conditions have affected our people as well as others, and whereas thirty-five years ago our strongest branches were in the country, now they are found in the cities.

Tenth, In the country there is practically one occupation, that of farming, which takes more capital than most young men have, and unless they have parents to give them assistance it is a very difficult proposition to make a start. Human nature asserts itself here as elsewhere—they will not row upstream when it is easy sailing with the current downstream. The young seek an education in the colleges and universities and enter the professions or business and the mechanical and industrial world. There is no capital in money required, and if they are faithful, efficient, industrious, honest, and economical, their opportunities for success are very flattering, and they have all the advantages that come to our modern civilization in the way of education, social conditions, and religious opportunities.

Eleventh, Some have moved in the past, and do now, from force of habit. They can always see the traditional pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, and when they get there it is gone, and they are soon looking for another "will-o-the-wisp" to chase. Advice is rejected as an interference with their personal liberty, and the school of experience teaches them nothing.

All these things above referred to have been the potent factors in weakening or killing out some of the branches of the Central West. Had there been a greater unity of understanding in reference to the law of gathering into the "regions round about," a clearer vision of its importance, and a systematic method in practice to help our people obtain homes, we would now be much stronger numerically, spiritually, and financially, and we would have had a surplus in people and money to build up the stakes, and a strong body left to keep up the work in the "regions round about."

THE FUTURE

What will we do in the future to help retrieve some of our past mistakes? Our spiritual and temporal welfare is largely in our own hands; the time to build up the stakes is here, or else God would never have given command to organize them. Shall we continue to talk, talk, talk, and not be doers of the work that has been assigned to us? What seems to the writer as essential to do to carry out the purposes designed in the law is about as follows:

First, The church is a religious democracy, when we are considering the carrying out of the law. All the business done is by the common consent of the people as expressed in their assemblies. A democracy depends on the intelligence and loyalty of its people. No autocrat can successfully carry on the affairs of the church, neither can a group of autocrats do the work. The church is also a cooperative democracy. Its members must unite their intelligence, energies and wealth to accomplish its purpose. To work well and successfully it is necessary for us to come to a reasonable degree of unity in the understanding of the law and the methods of carrying it out. We can never consent for one man to manage the affairs of the church; we must come to such unity that we will all act as one man in harmony with the law of God under competent and faithful leaders.

Second, The law provides that we should buy land to help our people get homes in the country, town, and city, and to establish colonies where our people can gather in groups and derive the benefits of cooperation, in temporal, educational, and religious affairs (Doctrine and Covenants 128:1-9).

Third, There are at present two corporations, one at Independence, Missouri, and one at Lamoni, Iowa, known as the Order of Enoch. Their purposes are identical,—to help the poor, to help our people get homes, to help in educational matters and any proper benevolent work, and in legitimate business matters. These societies should have the loyal support of the membership of the church; they are one of the "helps" provided for in the law, and have been organized by command of God (Doctrine and Covenants 128:3). One need for two corporations is that there is considerable difference in the law of the two states in regard to such corporations, and it is necessary for us to faithfully keep the law of the land (Doctrine and Covenants 128:7).

Fourth, The poor have always had the sympathy and love of our heavenly Father and of good people. The law given through Moses made special provisions for the protection of the poor (Deuteronomy 15:7-11). In the time of the good King Benjamin he told the Nephites no excuses would be acceptable for neglecting the poor (Mosiah 2:30, 31). This church had only been organized ten months when a commandment was given making provisions to help the poor (Doctrine and Covenants 42:8). They were not to be left until they were facing death by starvation; the command was that the Bishop should search after the poor (Doctrine and Covenants 83:23). Widows and orphans were to be cared for, not simply by doling out charity or alms to them, but by helping them secure homes (Doctrine and Covenants 82:2). The Lord condemned the Saints in 1834 because they had neglected the poor; and permitted them to be driven out of Jackson County as a chastisement for their sins (Doctrine and Covenants 102:2). The wise man said, "The poor is hated even of his own neighbor" (Proverbs 14:20).

Some among those who have abundance, or sufficient of this world's material comforts speak of the poor as lazy, shiftless, indolent, aimless, wasteful, extravagant and in other harsh and reproachful terms. Every word of it may be true with reference to some poor; are there not a great many other people guilty of the same sins? Many such would have had nothing had not some one given it to them, or had they not exacted it from the poor. The poor among us deserve our sincere sympathy and love; instead of hurling harsh invectives at them we should be seeking under the law of Christ with patience, love, and kindness to redeem them from their unfortunate condition. That is the great work of the gospel—to lift men up and help them to do better.

A religion that only takes a person to church on Sunday and to heaven when he dies is not the religion of Jesus Christ. There are some grand and good men and women in this world who have a kindly feeling for the poor and do not find it necessary to call them by harsh names. Miss Jane Addams, of Chicago, of Hull House fame, has spent her money and time among the poor for more than twenty-five years, and in reading her writings, I find no harsh words about the poor. Miss Wilson, daughter of the President, found more pleasure working among the poor than in the pleasures of society. Jacob Riis, who came from Denmark a poor boy, and who became one of America's great philanthropists, in his book, How the Other Half Lives; has no harsh words to say about the poor; his expressions are full of love and sympathy for them. Washington Gladden, one of the noted ministers and writers of America, has no unkind words to say of the poor in his excellent work, Social Salvation. Neither has our good Bishop feelings of harshness toward the poor. If he errs it is on the side of mercy.

To be poor does not necessarily mean to be a tramp, begging at the door. Many of our people because of inability to earn sufficient to maintain a home because of sickness, because they have not been trained in habits of industry and economy, because of unfortunate accidents, are deprived of the comforts of home that are necessary for their physical good and to have better opportunities for education and spiritual care. In the homes of our people there are many weary mothers whose hearts are aching, whose countenances are sad because their burdens are heavy to bear.

We may think that we are doing a great deal for the poor, and may offer many excuses for not doing more, but never need we expect the smiles of heaven and our heavenly Father's blessing until we rise to a higher plane of spirituality and true benevolence, and seek to lift up the poor and unfortunate. There is one kind of poor that the Lord condemns (Doctrine and Covenants 56:5). It is just as much our duty to convert such from the error of their ways as it is to go into the world to convert other sinners.

FINAL SUCCESS

The final success of our work will be realized when we have made a success of the gathering. When that is attained we will not be losing so many of our young; we will have more and better homes for our people; our young can avail themselves in a better way of the opportunities for an education; there will be better opportunities for our farmers to get farms, and less of our young will go to the city. The widow and orphan and poor will have less cause to be fearful and anxious. The great "fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man" can be realized in a gathered condition,—never in a scattered one. There is no provision in God's law for the scattering of his people: "How oft would I have gathered you" is the language of Jesus. The scattering of his people has always been as a result of transgression,—not obedience. When we arise to our duties as marked out in the law then Zion will flourish, and it will be a haven of rest to the weary and heartsick pilgrim.

EDWARD RANNIE.

All that God asks is that the heart should be cleansed from sin, and full of love, whether it be the tender heart of the little child, or of the full-grown man, or of the flaming archangel.—Martha A. Huling.

IMMORTAL LIFE

To fully respond to the Creator's intelligence is to have a fullness of life; and to the extent that we fail to do so, we are dead.

Nature teaches us that neither life nor death are instantaneously realized in their fullness, but are evolving processes that depend upon opposite conditions to bring them about to their full extent; hence, to comprehend the principle of one is to understand the other more readily.

The varying degrees of life between the sponge, or coral animal, and man, are almost innumerable, and are of absorbing interest in this connection, suggesting that there are variations of environment of differing planes or conditions, to which every awakening impulse or degree of intelligence is adapted. This indicates to us that our highest conceptions are possible of realization; that there is a life perpetuating conditions provided for every life impulse; that facilitates perfect development of every faculty of man to an infinite capacity; in which case, perpetual life must result from perpetually harmonizing with life-giving conditions. Christ possessed the power of unending life because he was always in harmony with the eternal Father of life.

We can not see, hear, taste, or smell either life or death, though their manifestations are constantly before us, and their respective processes are continually going on. Concerning this we may learn much from the story of Eden; it shows us that independent life is impossible because a violation of its environment produces death (insures its process) and we can not fix the conditions that promote its continuance.

This truth has been ineffably written on every page of nature's book from creation's morn until now, and has forced itself upon our comprehension in a million ways, always uncompromisingly inflexible in its operation, whether that violation has been through ignorance or viciousness.

By it we also learn that the adjustments of life are so marvelously interwoven and are so delicately susceptible in their operation that even an individual thought may become a power so great that it will alter the course of billions of lives and continue through the ages in increasing potency. Instances of this are being indefinitely multiplied all around us, some for good, others for ill, teaching us that a purely physical adjustment to our surroundings can not result in everlasting life. The process called death baffles all knowledge of physical adaptation to our sphere in this life. The combined experience and wisdom of all ages is impotent before it. When, however, we listen to the omniscient voice, the mystery is gone and heavenly wisdom appears before us vindicated and glorified: "The spirit and body are the soul of man."

It now becomes clear that it is not only necessary for man to be in physical harmony with life, but he must also harmonize his spirit with the law of life. To refuse to do this, is to bring into operation a secondary law called in scripture "the law of sin and death." Thus by transgression, the seeds of disintegration were sown; and death must be operative until a readjustment to the law of life takes place.

God has promised to bring about this redemption if we desire it sufficiently to cooperate with him as he directs; but the intelligence of life to which we shall be entitled will be determined by the measure of our conformity with him; hence, immortal life is of different glories ("the glory of God is intelligence."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6), presenting as great contrast as exists between the coral animal and man, or, as stated in Scripture, differing as much as the sun at its noonday glory differs from the faintest twinkle of the most remote star.

We are to-day forming our lives for an immeasurable eternity that stretches out beyond the limits of human conception in an environment that we ourselves are choosing, if not consciously, then by the unconscious building of our characters formed by the things we do and the thoughts we think, so far as our spirits foster them. Whether or not this indicates eternal progression each may judge for himself. I do not presume to indicate the limit of our possibilities, but the present is of supreme importance to us during the probation of earth life now ours to use.

Our thoughts being the primary and formative force in our lives, it is reasonable that we shall be judged according to the "thoughts and intents of the heart"; because "he who ruleth his spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

It has been in substance stated, though in somewhat different terms, that eternal life must exist when one is in perfect harmony with perfect conditions. We certainly would not wish ours to be perpetual in a state of misery, that imperfect conditions would make possible; therefore some process seems necessary to change our environment.

Death, then, is one of the processes made necessary in this life, because man has fallen from a higher sphere of action; but when he recovers from his descent (Darwin, et al, not disproving), death will no longer exist, because it depends upon mortal or imperfect conditions for its very existence.

Until we are too wise to err, then, we can not hope to be safely guided through this world's intricate labyrinth of uncertain course, without revelation from the great ruler and guide of all. May his intelligence illumine our benighted pathway with that glory before which the sun shall hide its dimmer light; and when the great veil that hides the wonders of celestial life shall be dissolved, upon us shall shine the unspeakable radiance of that environment of supreme bliss where, in matchless splendor, the immaculate Christ shall be revealed with all the seraphic hosts.

JOSEPH F. SMITH ADDRESSES CHURCH

[The following from the opening address of Joseph F. Smith to the late General Conference of the Utah church will be of interest to our readers, especially that portion with reference to finances, it not being the custom of this church to publish receipts and expenditures, this statement seeming now to be called forth only in answer to severe criticism. We quote from the Liahona, The Elders' Journal, published by the Utah church at Independence, Missouri.—EDITORS.]

STATEMENT ON TITHING

The general church auditing committee has examined the receipts and the disbursements of the tithes of the stakes of Zion and missions, also the accounts of the Presiding Bishop's office and the accounts in the office of the trustee-in-trust. Their report will be rendered before the close of the conference, I suppose. The following report will show how the tithing of the church for the year 1914 has been disbursed.

Now I am taking a liberty that has not been indulged in very much; but there have been many false, wicked charges made against me and against my brethren by wicked and evilly disposed people, and I think that this statement which I propose to make to you will at least have a tendency to convince you that we are trying to do our duty the best we know how.

Means expended for the erection and maintenance of stake tabernacles, ward meeting houses, amusement halls and other stake and ward expenses for 1914, $730,960.

For the maintenance of the church schools during the same year, $330,984.

For the maintenance of our temples, four, from Saint George to Logan, $64,508.

Disbursements in munitions for the erection of mission houses, general mission activities, and for return fares of missionaries during 1914, $227,900.

For the maintenance of church buildings and the church institutions, including the temple block and the presiding bishop's office, $99,293.

For the completion and maintenance of the Latter-day Saints' hospital during that year, $136,727. To explain why this happens to be so much I may say that we have built a very beautiful and convenient addition to the old hospital, which has made this expense so much greater. One who knows, who has had experience and seen, says that the Latter-day Saints' hospital, that is the William H. Groves Latter-day Saints' hospital, is one that would be a credit to any country in the world.

For the erection of the Cardston temple, Canada, $52,647.

For the erection of the new church office building, which is in course of erection, already, $108,663.

Paid to the worthy poor out of the general tithing funds, $160,238. (This out of the tithing; there are other funds besides it that have been used for the poor.)

These appropriations and application of the tithing of the Latter-day Saints or of the church amount to $1,887,920 for the year 1914. . . .

REVENUE FROM INVESTMENTS

The expenses of the general authorities and the maintenance of the First Presidency are paid out of the revenue derived from investments and not out of the tithes of the church. These investments as a rule consist of contributions of stocks of various kinds to the church on tithings, which have been held by the church, and the dividends that we derive from these stocks and from these investments, are for the benefit of the people in every instance. For the church has never made an investment that was not for the object of benefiting the whole people as far as possible, fostering industries, fostering the colonization of our country, fostering and aiding the settlers of our country, of our State and of our adjoining States as far as we possibly can, by assisting them with means to help them lay the foundation of prosperity for themselves.

MORE AID TO POOR

In addition to the amount paid out of the tithes to the poor, $116,238 has been expended. There has been collected and paid to the poor by the Relief Society $74,290. Paid to the poor by the bishops from the fast offerings and other ward charities and funds, $76,000 making a total paid to the poor for 1914 of $266,528. . . .

VITAL STATISTICS

The birth rate of the church for the year 1914 is 39 1-2 to the thousand.

The death rate for the year 1914 is 8.3 to the thousand.

The marriage rate during the year 1914 is 17 to the thousand.

During the year there were 14,717 children blessed in the church.

There are 1,316 elders and 115 women laborers in the missions as missionaries.

Of the membership of the church residing in the stakes of Zion 319,000 were born in the United States.

There has been a net increase in the membership of the church in the stakes of Zion from the year 1901 to the year 1914 of 129,493 souls.

There are now 739 organized wards and 33 independent branches.

There are 68 organized stakes of Zion and 21 missions.

During the year 1914, 21 new wards have been organized and 2 stakes of Zion, and in each of the newly organized wards we have been called upon to assist them to help build their meeting houses. . . .

TEMPLE WORK LARGE

The work in the temples has been the largest on record. There have been performed in the temples during the past year 166,909 baptisms—so that we are increasing really the membership of the church very, very much faster in the spirit world than we are on earth—baptisms for the dead.

Endowments for the living and the dead, 72,952.

Altogether 326,264 ordinances have been performed in the four temples. This is a very considerable increase over any previous year.

THE ABORIGINE WHO BEAT A HURRICANE

Whilst we waited at Cairns of the North Queensland coast for the New Guinea packet to be under way across the Coral Sea we got ear of a Cape York aborigine who had some years before astounded the Australian world by saving his life from the sea in the midst of a great hurricane. The wind had fallen down so swiftly—and with such furious white violence (said they)—that of the five hundred luggers of the pearling fleet which it cast away, some were blown to the bottom within a few rods of shore with the loss of all hands.

In the season of the great hurricane this aborigine was shipped aboard a lugger of eighteen tons to fish the Great Barrier Reef off the Cape York coast for shell and beche-de-mer. When the big wind came down (said he) it lifted the little lugger clean out of the water—like a leaf in a gale—and flung her back capsized and cast away. And so swift was this, and wanton, and complete, and careless and lazy, that the aborigine was greatly astonished, for he had not thought that any wind could accomplish it. It was then near six o'clock of a Saturday evening. And all at once it was dark. The wreck of the lugger vanished in the surprising night and a smother of broken water.

What a turmoil there was—how the wind tore off the crests of the magical waves and drenched the air with a stifling mist of spray—and what a confusion of noise and movement, and how black, and how white, the rush of the night—the aborigine could not with any art relate; but said, with his eyes popped out, in the recollection of the magical performance of that jinkie-jinkie gale, "My word, one big-fellow sea!" He was tossed and driven like a chip of driftwood all that night (said he); his head was up, his heels were up, he was rolled over and over, he was beaten deep under water, and breath was blown back in his mouth; and he fancied sometimes that the wind picked him up with its hands and cast him through the air, from crest to crest, clear of the sea—which was doubtless true, for the wind was magically strong, and in magical wrath, and magically as sticky as gum.

In the morning the aborigine fell in with his lubra (wife); and the lubra stood by—to help him (said they), being a stronger swimmer than he, and a more cunning diver after shell and beche-de-mer, and more daring and elusive in shark-water; so that her value was known to all the masters of luggers out of Thursday Island and known quite as well, you may be sure, to the aborigine. By and by—dawn long ago come and noon near, and the wind abating—these two could glimpse the land from the crests of the waves. It was far away—a low, blue line. Yet now, having found themselves, they set out heartily, in about their fourteenth hour on the water, to win the shore. In the afternoon the aborigine began to fail. The thing was too much for him.

He lost heart (said he); he was worn out, and needed food—sleepy, too, with weakness. His anxious little lubra must rest him, now and again—support him whilst he lay still, and once, indeed, whilst he nodded off to sleep, and in this way refreshed his strength and spirit. And so they swam together, and paused to rest, and swam on—the woman having no rest at all, but lending strength to the man, at shortening periods, all the while. In the end they crawled up the beach and fell down and slept for a long time. It was then eight o'clock of a Sunday night; they had been in hurricane water a matter of twenty-six hours; and the man would surely have gone down had it not been for the faithful little lubra. And they did not wake up (said the aborigine) until dawn of Monday.

All this while the woman had carried the baby. It was dead, of course—must have died soon in the smother.

"Wouldn't drop it," said the skipper of our sloop.

We watched the aborigine and his lubra leave the warm, green water.

"That little woman?" said I.

"Oh, my word, not at all!" the skipper exclaimed. "The woman went crazy when she woke up in the morning and found her baby dead. And the black fellow deserted her. This one's a new one!"—Norman Duncan, in Harper's Magazine for February.

JUNE READING—MOUTH HYGIENE AND THE CARE OF THE TEETH

"It has long been recognized, in a general way, that the condition of the teeth has much to do with the health of the individual, but not till recently has the direct relationship between oral [mouth] hygiene and bodily health been definitely and undeniably traced. We all acknowledge that a poorly-nourished body must result in inefficiency, but we have not always studied with sufficient care all of the causes or all of the results of faulty nourishment.

"Let a growing child be afflicted with decayed and neglected teeth, what is the result? To say nothing of the suffering which frequently follows with its long train of perverted function and incapacity, we have the immediate result of inefficient mastication. Without mastication we can not have good digestion, without digestion we can not have assimilation and without assimilation we can not have nourishment. Many a child is starving for lack of the necessary apparatus with which to properly prepare the food which is set before him. . . . The child who is illy nourished intuitively develops a craving for stimulants. Observation has demonstrated the fact that these poor children who are suffering from defective teeth and can not masticate will consume enormous quantities of coffee or tea if they can get it. And it is not fanciful to go one step further. It may seem a far cry from defective teeth to drunkenness, and yet it is a possible and a perfectly logical sequence. We are not giving these children a fair chance in the world for place, preferment or race betterment if we permit them to grow up with faulty mouth conditions.

"Not only this, but there is a quite unsuspected and a very real danger to the individual and to the community as the result of defective teeth and broken-down roots left in the jaws. The inevitable abscesses from these roots discharge large quantities of pus to be taken up in the circulation or carried into the stomach or lungs, creating a constant poison which should no longer be ignored. A general infection of the system sometimes results from an abscess on a single tooth, and it is not unusual to have a life lost from this cause. These decayed cavities in teeth also form an ideal culture place for pathogenic microorganisms, [disease germs] which are a constant menace to the individual as well as to others with whom the individual comes in contact. . . . There is no question that there have been direct tuberculous infections from this source. One writer has gone so far as to say that 95 per cent of tuberculosis is due directly or indirectly to faulty mouth conditions, that aside from the cases of direct infection from the roots of teeth there are numberless other cases where the system is rendered susceptible to tuberculosis through inefficient mastication and its consequent train of evils. . . . The tubercle bacillus seeks a field where the tissues are lowered in tone, and its invasion is usually the result of a lessened resistance through bad air and lack of proper nourishment. Reasoning from this it is not difficult to connect this disease in its incipency with defective and diseased teeth. . . ."

An epidemic of scarlet fever in the schools of Chicago and one at Valparaiso, Indiana, were stamped out by requiring "that no child who had suffered from scarlet fever should be permitted to return to school till all decayed teeth were filled and the mouth made hygienic. . . ."

"If, then, defective teeth are such a prime factor in physical inefficiency it may be well for us to consider briefly the prevalence of this affection. Few people have any conception of the relative number of children who are growing up with bad mouth conditions which prove a handicap to themselves and a menace to the community. In an examination of the teeth of school children in various communities it has been found that at least 90 per cent of them have decayed teeth. In the public schools of Chicago, where nearly 70,000 children have been examined, the percentage runs much higher than this. During the month of November, 1913, there were examined 2,231 children, of whom 2,224 were found with defective teeth. When only seven children out of 2,231 are found with perfect teeth it is surely time that our civic authorities and our boards of health give some heed to this important matter. . . ."

"A Chicago principal writes: 'We are very enthusiastic over the benefits derived from the work done by the dental dispensary in this school. So far this year, emergency cases and very badly neglected cases have kept the dentist busy every minute of the school day. Needless to say the improved physical condition of these children has helped them accomplish more in the schoolroom. . . .'

"Another consideration in this connection having a direct bearing on race betterment relates to the handicap to the boy or girl who is allowed to grow up with deformities of the mouth and face due to irregular teeth. . . ."

"It is to the prevention of disease, the relief of suffering, and the correction of deformities—thus adding to the efficiency and happiness of the individual and the community—that the dentist is committed in his function for the betterment of the race."—C. N. Johnson, D. D. S., in proceedings of the First National Conference on Race Betterment.

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION

"Some mothers think that children's first teeth require no care at all, and that, even if they decay, it is unnecessary to bother about them. This is a great mistake. The first set of teeth, like lovely white pearls between rosebud lips, are needed to keep places for the second or permanent teeth. If these teeth be lost through neglect, the jaw will not grow to its proper shape, and when the second teeth appear they may be so crowded that they will be forced to turn sideways and grow very unevenly.

"When a decayed first tooth is neglected and left in the jaw the decay is almost sure to eat downward to the root, and thus affect the enamel of the permanent tooth just forming underneath. Decay is poison, which will cause, besides very painful toothache, all sorts of more serious complications. . . . No mother would give her child poison, yet she will go complacently about her household duties while little Dottie or little Tom is suffering with toothache and absorbing the poison from that decayed tooth.

"Another great source of harm to young children which is caused directly by decayed teeth is the habit of bolting their food. By this I mean swallowing whole mouthfuls of food without properly chewing it, so that it will be easily digested when reaching the stomach. Children with bad teeth dread to bite on them lest they start aching, therefore they swallow their food without proper mastication. This leads to malnutrition and all sorts of stomach troubles—troubles that seldom end with childhood, but continue to torment the child after he has grown to manhood and even to old age. . . ."

"Because a first tooth shows decay and aches, do not have it pulled. Let the dentist fill it so that it will last until the natural time for it to come out; or at least get advice of your dentist regarding the disposition of a bad tooth. Take your children regularly to the dentist. You will find the money it costs well spent; for if a child's first teeth are well cared for he will have little cause to have much done to his second teeth. . . ."

"Above all, teach your children when they are very young to brush their teeth at least twice a day and insist upon their keeping their teeth clean."—"Parents' problems," from Philadelphia North American.

TWO SETS OF TEETH

"Children grow two sets of teeth. The milk teeth, twenty in number, and the permanent ones, thirty-two in number. The milk teeth generally appear as follows:

- Central incisors, 5th to 6th month.
- Lateral incisors, 7th to 8th month.
- First molars, 12th to 16th month.
- Canines, 14th to 20th month.
- Second molars, 21st to 36th month.

"The eruption of the lower teeth usually takes place before that of the upper. The permanent teeth appear in the following order.

- First molars, 5th to 6th year.
- Central incisors, lower jaw, 6th to 7th year.
- Central incisors, upper jaw, 7th to 8th year.
- Lateral incisors, 8th to 9th year.
- First bicuspid, 9th to 10th year.
- Second bicuspid, 10th to 11th year.
- Canines, 11th to 13th year.
- Second molars, 12th to 15th year.
- Third molars or wisdom teeth, 18th to 23d year.

"As soon as the first teeth appear they must be carefully watched, for as they take some time to solidify, they easily decay.

"As the milk teeth last but a short time, or until they are displaced by the permanent teeth, very little attention is usually paid to their preservation. Tartar and filth are allowed to accumulate, and as soon as they become troublesome they are extracted. . . . So long as they can be saved, they should not be removed, as serious injury is thereby inflicted on the child. If these are extracted the incoming permanent ones are seriously interfered with; they grow out of their allotted space, or grow in an irregular manner, distort the mouth and impede the work of mastication. Nature indicates the time for their removal by absorbing their roots and loosening their crowns, preparatory to the appearance of the permanent teeth. Moreover, it is somewhat dangerous to extract any of the milk teeth, because the jaw is not yet perfectly developed, and is, therefore, very frail and liable to fracture. . . . As soon as the milk teeth appear they should be cleaned every day with soft linen, and when all the teeth are erupted, a soft brush should be used. . . ."

"The sixth year molars deserve a special notice, because they are so frequently confounded with the first set of teeth. The reason of this is, that these back teeth of the upper and lower jaw on either side make their appearance before any of the first teeth are shed. If neglected, as they too often are, they are early lost, and can never be replaced, except artificially. When you are able to count a row of eleven or twelve in each jaw—that is, as soon as there are more than twenty teeth in all—you may be sure that the last molars on either side belong to the second set.”

BAD HABITS AFFECTING THE TEETH

“Thumb or Finger Sucking.—By this habit the lower teeth are forced inwards and the upper teeth outwards. These results are due to the peculiar way in which the fingers rest upon the teeth during the act of sucking. Unless this habit is checked before the permanent teeth appear it will result in disfiguring them and speech and mastication may be impaired. To break the habit, wrap the finger with muslin saturated with some harmless preparation, disagreeable to the taste.

“Lip Sucking.—This is another habit which may result in depression of the lower teeth. The child, by drawing the lower lip into the mouth, exerts a pressure upon the teeth, and they are forced inward to such an extent that deformity results. The space for the back teeth is greatly contracted, and extraction of one or more is necessary to make room for the remaining teeth in the arch. . . . A fixture, similar to a splint is sometimes placed between teeth and lips, so as to make it impossible to draw the lips into the mouth.

“Mouth Breathing.—Mouth breathing also produces irregularity of the teeth. This habit, most commonly indulged in during sleep, is frequently due to some nasal obstruction of the air passages. In these cases surgical operations are often necessary. Sometimes the habit is acquired when no organic trouble exists. . . . The Indian mother bandages the mouth of the child, and in this way forces it to breathe through the nostrils, or not to breathe at all. Rubber appliances, working on the same principle, are in use to-day, only they are free from the barbarous character of the Indian method; that is, they work on the principle of inducing nose breathing, by making it so difficult to breathe through the mouth that the child readily accustoms itself to breathe through its nostrils.

“Cracking Nuts, etc.—Teeth must not be used as nut-crackers. Like the bones, they are not solidified in early life. Even when they are, cracking nuts with them will soon result in their destruction, as they were not intended for such violent work.

“Extremes of heat and cold following each other in food or drink are harmful to the teeth. The habit of eating much candy is also injurious to them.”—Popular Essays on the Care of the Teeth and Mouth by Victor C. Bell, A. B., D. D. S.

This subject will be continued in the reading for next month.

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY

Parents' Day.—Prayer for our families and for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred; that we may all have a greater growth in spirituality; that the homes of Saints may be model Christian homes. Pray for all sick and afflicted.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Brother A. McKenzie, Saint Clair, Michigan, asks prayers. He is sorely afflicted with cancer, and is also crippled from rheumatism.

If I am ignorant, it is my school;

If I am sinking, it is solid ground.

If I am cold, the Bible is my fire;

And it is wings, if boldly I aspire.

Since thus thou givest of thyself to me,

How should I give myself, great Book, to thee!

Local Work

“Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head say unto the feet it hath no need of the feet, for without the feet how shall the body be able to stand? Also, the body hath need of every member, that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect.”—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 21.

The great Architect and Master-builder whose works are known unto him from the beginning of the world knew both how to arrange and build his church, and has left no necessary want unprovided for.

When we take up the Doctrine and Covenants and read what work is described for the local officers; priests and teachers, we discover a wide field for these to labor in. I have had a little experience along that line for nearly thirty years; have labored together with different men, young and old, and can say that I have spent some of my happiest moments in this latter-day work in visiting the Saints in their homes. I have always felt my inability in doing that work, but the Lord has made known unto me that it is his will that this work should be done among his people. And the ones that do it will be blessed by doing the best they know how, with an eye single to his name's honor.

When I was called to labor in that way there was a large branch here; what are now known as Sweet Home, Guilford, and Bedison branches were all one. It took the visiting officers a week to visit all the homes. We made the round from time to time. Once I thought I wouldn't spend so much time for what little good it seemed to me I was doing; it seemed to me it didn't amount to anything. I had the following dream: I dreamed I was over in Denmark, laboring for my father. He had his sheep in the outmost part of the field. He told me, “Go and watch over my sheep.” When I awoke, the dream was upon my mind. I took it to mean that I should go and visit the Saints. I went again. The Saints seemed glad to see us. Later on there arose trouble among the Saints and I concluded again not to go. I had the same dream repeated again. Since that time I have been trying in my weak way to do the best I know how.

This work in the church should not be neglected. In my experience it helps to create more spiritual life and greater unity among the Saints. In doing what the Lord has commanded there is a blessing to follow. It may seem ever so small, what we do, but the Lord will meet us with his blessing. Realizing our weakness we should not forget the good found in each member, for, if we do, we will not find very many worthy of divine approval; but, on the other hand, select the good in each one and we will find them nearly all desirable members.

The Editor at one time had this to say: “Converts added to the church but increase the number and nature of these demands. Heads of families, perhaps careless and remiss in duty, require spiritual awakening that they may, as recognized in their places, be found faithful in this stewardship as leaders and examples to their children, that the latter may learn at home (the primary, principal and first school) to bring forth fruits of love, of patience, of Christ-like kindness, love and beauty of character. Home is the school, we repeat, the first and principal school where these principles should be taught and woven into the warp and woof of daily life motives which form the Christ-like character. The father or mother who fails to grasp these truths, to develop and cultivate these principles, fails to see his or her children go out into the world properly prepared to both withstand its temptation and shed forth the light and love of the exalted nature and strong character of the Christ.

"But, this pastoral work, these duties of the shepherd, these generally required ministrations; different classes of minds, of temperament, are to be dealt with; varied conditions of life to be guarded against or rightly directed. The minister here stands in close relation to his people. His trust is a sacred one, the knowledge oft imparted to him that of a confidential nature. He is placed where he may accomplish great good, or possibly do harm. He should be wise enough not to compromise himself by taking sides in any difficulties arising. Here exists the necessity for careful work, for prayer, for grace, wisdom, discernment." (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 38, p. 453.)

Brother Burgess said: It is not hard to sit and write of service to humanity and the plan that the Master has laid down and lived himself; but it is another thing to follow in his steps and show by precept and example in our lives a willingness to sacrifice, to do without, to set for others an example that gives reasonable hopes of success for all.

"There is a work for you to do
No other one can do for you."

"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so, Amen." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.)

A. JENSEN.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, February 9, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have enjoyed meetings held here by Brother Newby. Truly the way was made plain and sensible. Many nonmembers asked why did he not stay longer, and if he would return. One said, "Let us petition for him to be sent back here. If Brother Newby can not come to us we trust that the conference will send Brother Alvin Knisley to this territory.

Two young men who never attended meetings are deeply interested. My neighbors told me that Brother Newby had explained their belief, though they could not themselves tell what they believed. We regretted the discontinuance of these meetings when people were becoming so interested.

Glasgow is a nice place and has many people. The members of the Christian Church have a beautiful new building, in which they allowed Brother Newby to talk and which we appreciated. My daughter attends the Christian church and Sunday school. They have a large attendance. I used to be a strong member of the Christian Church. It was there where I first found my Savior.

I know our gospel is true and I would that I might live as good a life as my people in Lamoni live. One needs the Christian influence to live up to God's teachings. Those who are interested in the welfare of the isolated Saints should remember us in prayer, lest we falter and fall by the wayside and become as Paul said, a castaway.

Your sister,
MRS. LILY B. ASCHBRENNER.

CHARLES CITY, IOWA, February 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have had to give up our Sunday school, as Brother and Sister Herring and son Elmo, are the only active ones living in town. We have bought and moved on a farm six miles south of Charles City, so that it is not always possible for us to attend. We are still trying to keep up our lessons through the home department. We miss our Sunday school and prayer meeting very much, but know God will still bless us if we try to do our part.

If Brother Reiste sees this we would like him to write an encouraging word to Sister Vida Crane, whom he baptized while here. It would do her much good. I remember after I was baptized I received a letter from Brother T. W. Chaburn who had held meetings at my father's house in Madison, Wisconsin, when I was but a child, and how much courage it gave me.

We are thankful to say that we are still in the work and trying to let our light shine. We are grateful to have had Brother and Sister Paulgers, of San Antonio, Texas, with us for two years. They are Saints indeed. In their moving back to Texas we feel that our loss was the gain of others.

We would be glad to see an elder here at any time. It has been about a year and a half since we have heard a sermon.

Ever praying for the advancement of the work, and asking an interest in the prayers of all, I remain,

A sister in the faith,

Editors Herald: This leaves me at my post of duty doing what I can to assist in building up the cause of Christ. While we find many obstacles in the way, yet by the help of God and a persistent effort on our part we are able to move along. Some of the Saints seem to tire of the fight and leave the task to the few, which adds to the burden. If all would help and do their part, the load would not be so heavy. We are thankful for the few noble ones who are doing all they can to help along the gospel.

In my declining years I am able to say that I have kept the faith. I have nearly finished my work. I ask an interest in the prayers of all.

Editors Herald: I do not know how Saints can do without the church papers. I have taken the HERALD and Ensign for twenty-five years, and could not do without them. We have had meetings every place we have lived, and hope we can hold forth where we are about to go. If any of the brethren are passing through Montour we hope they will call on us. We will do all we can for them. There is a schoolhouse close to where we shall live, and if we can get it we will have meetings if the elders will come.

Pray for me that I may be numbered with the faithful.

Your sister,

MARY KENNELL.

Editors Herald: It is in faith in the gospel of these latter days and in thanksgiving for the blessings received in days past, and in belief of the promise of the first resurrection, that I write these few lines. The resurrection is a grand promise, and within the reach of all. It is worth the price. I know it is hard for the young to resist the allurements of the world. I have tried with the help of my heavenly Father to teach our family in ways of the gospel.

The HERALD and Ensign are a great blessing to isolated Saints. Thirty-seven years ago the seventeenth of this month I was buried with Christ in baptism by Brother Columbus Scott, on which occasion I became heir of God and joint heir with Jesus Christ.

On receiving word of the demise of President Joseph Smith, my mind went back to June, 1878, when I met him and W. W. Blair in conference at Coldwater, Michigan. These two brethren administered to our two children for whooping cough.

Last week a book agent, a Seventh-day Adventist, while visiting me said he had written to many denominations for more light on the Sabbath question, and had yet to be convinced that his present position was wrong. I told him I would give him the address of a man or men who could give him the information desired. His answer was that it would take too long to correspond. I then told him I would send him a tract. He gave his name as J. P. Garber, Berrien Springs, Michigan. I handed him the Book of Mormon, which he had never seen. He remained at our place about two hours.

Brother William Dowker was here the first part of December and held services in our schoolhouse. Not many turned out, the weather being stormy. Brother Samuel Stroh was called here to preach the funeral sermon of Doctor M. E. Hooper, husband of Sister Mary Hooper. Many prominent men of the community heard the funeral address and spoke in a complimentary way of it, saying that they had never heard anything like it—had never heard the Bible explained so readily. One, a merchant's wife, said to me, not knowing I was a Latter Day Saint, "Did you ever hear anything like it?" She said she never heard the mansions and different glories made so plain before. I wish there might be an awakening in Decatur. Your sister, MRS. R. CRAWFORD.

RADVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN, February 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are as lost sheep without a shepherd, as Elder Williams has moved to the Weyburn Plains Branch this winter, some twenty-five miles away. Our priest, A. R. Toovey, moved there last spring, and Brother John Gaw and family left here for Ontario last fall. So we are very lonely, and sometimes long to hear a good sermon or enjoy a prayer meeting, and it seems good to clasp the hand of a Saint who may occasionally stop here. We have enjoyed God's Spirit in a measure, though we are isolated, and we feel to praise him. He has blessed us and we are trying in our weak way to live to be worthy of the numerous blessings we receive from time to time.

Our little girl is improving slowly, for which we are thankful. She can stand up to a chair quite well and seems to be gaining a little strength every day. I have been able to do my work for a month now, but still do not have health and strength as I have at one time. I am putting my trust in God to give me wisdom to know what to do for myself and not to overtax my strength as I regain it.

I feel that I have done little for this work. I am anxious to live and employ my time more for the cause, if it be only by living the life I should and setting an example before others. It seems that the people here are not anxious to hear any other doctrine, being satisfied with what they have, and some are too busy looking after wealth and the pleasures of the world to be interested in religion. I do not care for the pleasures as I did some years ago, although I go to a hockey game occasionally this winter to get out in the fresh air, as one can not stay close in the house all the time.

I consented to our boy going to the Methodist Sunday school, as he asked to go when our own Sunday school was disorganized for the winter. He likes to go to Sunday school. He is ten years old, so I want him to keep going. He is interested in normal work and can name all the books readily and answer a number of questions.

We can see that the coming of Christ is drawing near, as wickedness abounds everywhere in every conceivable form. The Evil One knows his time is short, and seems to be trying to enter every home, seeking to destroy the peace and happiness which should dwell therein.

I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint, as it brings me comfort from day to day. I am longing for the companionship of the Saints, and do not seem to enjoy the companionship of outsiders unless I can get them interested along religious lines. When discouraged I take comfort in playing and singing our hymns and reading God's word. This seems to strengthen and comfort me more than I have ever realized before. If we can cling to the iron rod until we may reach Zion in safety I shall be thankful, which time I hope is nearer than we think. We know it takes preparation on our part, and I hope that when Christ comes I shall be included among the ones prepared.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,
Your sister,
IDA MAE BERGERSEN.

Editors Herald: In Matthew 16 Jesus tells Peter that he will build his church. We learn from 1 Corinthians that God set the members in the body as it pleased him, endowing them with inspirational gifts, against which ignorance and hell are not to prevail. God through the instrumentality of the gospel and the inspiration that attends obedience thereto is to prevail most gloriously.

Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, says in Romans 11 that Israel shall be grafted in again except they abide in unbelief. Now for a graft into any kind of a tree to be possible, the tree must exist. Those who claim succession from the Apostle Peter need eleven other successors, and the ordinances restored to them, with the help of inspiration instead of tradition, etc.

The Apostle Peter speaks of a class who knew nothing only that which was known naturally. When we see the abomination that makes desolate, in the words of the Master, we should "stand in holy places."

May the church with the help of inspiration be able to stand firm.
Your brother,
J. L. RUST.

Editors Herald: The church has gained a foothold here, where all churches have failed, and where a number of people have made the statement that no minister could build up a following. God, through his servant, Brother C. N. Burtch, has established the gospel here. After many discouragements, our brother succeeded in baptizing two members; others embraced the gospel one and two at a time, until our band now numbers eighteen. We have a good Sunday school with an enrollment of forty-four, and where some were at enmity, all are now at peace, and filled with that brotherly spirit which God alone in his mercy can instill in every heart.

We hope the time is near when this gospel will be taught and accepted by people in every place. We appreciate the tireless energies of Brother Burtch in teaching this true gospel.

Editors Herald: I desire to be of service to God and his Son Jesus Christ. Service to God means service to humanity. I love this work and desire to be of service to humanity. My heart goes out to the people of the world, that they may come to a better knowledge of the gospel.

I was permitted to come into the kingdom August 9, 1914. I have helped two of my shipmates to enter the church, under the blessing of God. These shipmates, now our brethren, were baptized February 13, by Elder James Cooper, at Pensacola. Brother I. M. Smith came here that same morning and they were confirmed by him and Brother Cooper. These brethren are F. E. Swift and Ralph Reigens, aged nineteen and twenty years respectively. Both have seen the ways of the world and are hoping to help redeem it. Brother I. M. Smith and I were the only ones to witness the baptisms. Upon this occasion the presence of the Spirit was felt. After baptism and confirmation the brethren had to go back to the ship. I was permitted to go into the country with Brother Smith and hear three powerful sermons before I had to return to the service.

I have been told that there was other work for me aboard the ship. There are among these men two or three fine young lads who may be of service to the church. I desire the prayers of all that I may accomplish what work God has for me to do. Brother Swift would like to know the address of Saints in or near Erie, Pennsylvania. Brother Reigens would like to learn the address of any near Lamden, New Jersey. I know of five Saints in the navy who have made clean records since coming to the gospel. I shall be glad to hear from any others who may be under enlistment in navy, army, or marine corps.

I have lost trace of a brother, adopted from the Protestant Orphans Home, in Detroit, Michigan, in March or April of 1911. His name was William Henry Maynard, then aged eleven. He had red hair and freckles, and was small of his age. I would like to learn of his whereabouts, if any have information with reference to same.

Address me, U. S. S. San Francisco, care postmaster, New York City.

Your humble servant,
B. L. MAYNARD.

Editors Herald: We are all sad that our Brother Joseph Smith has left us, but hope and trust are still ours that we shall see him again with countenance lighted by celestial glory. We have much of good that he has given us all along the way.

There is no end to the school of life, learning of the way in which we should walk to be acknowledged as God's obedient children. For it is life to learn of God of his eternal truths revealed to us by his inspired servants. We may continue to learn as life is allotted to us, and it is to continue in eternity, in which state we are to arrive at perfection. We must carefully watch our steps and ask God to guide us that we may go forward trustingly, and that he will lead us on.

Yours in gospel truth,
Kearney Hill. MRS. JAMES THOMPSON.

Editors Herald: The HERALD has been a feast to my soul, and has caused me to look more steadfastly to my loving Savior who has done so much for me. I feel that if he had dealt with me according to my works I would now have been where mercy could not have been exercised nor pardon obtained. Praise his name for evermore.

I hope the Saints will pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end. I remember all. Your sister, MARTHA JANE MILLER.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, February 18, 1915.

Editors Herald: By vote of the congregation the preceding night, we adjourned our series here for last night that we might listen to the lecture of Ex-Senator Frank Cannon on "The Mormon kingdom." Arriving at the Presbyterian church sufficiently early to do so, Brother Samuel Harding, president of the branch here, and the writer sought and obtained an interview with Mr. Cannon and requested that he make a distinction between us and the people of Utah. This he refused to do, on the ground that he was not in any way attacking us.

Though the night was rainy, a large number of our people were present, as were a goodly portion of the Utah adherents located in this city, so far as we could judge, and at least six of the Utah elders. In fact, had it not been for the presence of those named his audience would have been small indeed. The Utah elders were on the job at the doors as we passed out and were handing out tracts containing two letters written by the lecturer before leaving their church, and in the headlines of which they state that he was excommunicated for "Apostasy and immoral conduct." Unless they have the evidence to back up this statement it looks like a case of slander sufficiently strong upon which to base an action.

As to the lecture, there was nothing in it that would in any way involve us as a people, and was a very tame affair altogether. In fact, it looked more like a personal matter between Mr. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith. Many things said could be indorsed. What appeared to be a very fatal admission by the representative of the bureau behind the whole matter, and especially so as to the success of their undertaking, was that the Utah Church is all the time encroaching upon our national welfare to the extent that it now controls eleven of our States in a political way. It did not sound well for the success of their undertaking. In fact they are so evidently biased in a religious way that their success is bound to be curtailed thereby. There is to-day such an independence in religious thought that sectarian bias is not likely to attract adherents.

The writer made a simple request to be privileged to announce our meetings, but the answer was that in view of the fact that other churches were holding protracted efforts in the city it was thought best not to grant the request. In shaking hands with the lecturer after the close he stated to me that he thought it was a mistake not to grant my request. None of the other churches had dismissed their series to hear, but even at that the chairman could have stated that all churches concerned would be granted the same privilege. At any rate his course was so narrow that it would serve to do us good and him injury.

Considering the icy condition of the pavements (which are at last about clear of such obstruction) and the weather in general, the attendance here has been good and the interest apparently all that could be asked.

Have been continuously busy since the middle of October, and in all places visited the interest has been unusually good. In fact the present awful war seems to be having a good effect upon the spirituality of the people, generally speaking, many seeming to begin to feel that "the time of the end" is much nearer than they had thought for.

Personally, there have come within the last few months some of the sweetest experiences of life, God seeming at times to be so near that our soul has felt so responsive that there has come such an interlinking between the infinite and the finite as to make us feel that we were indeed "In tune with the infinite." May God hasten the day when such a complete attunement shall be realized.

Editors Herald: Brother Robert Newby preached here every night for a week. He has done a good work for the Master. Some are interested through the preaching of the word. We hope Brother Newby will call again soon.

My wife and I were initiated into the kingdom of God's dear Son by Brethren A. H. Smith and T. J. Martin, during Brother Smith's first mission to the Northern Minnesota District. We were called by him his first Minnesota children. We are breaking up new ground here, and are striving for the reward of the just.

JOHN ELLSWORTH.

CONDON, OREGON, February 23, 1915.

Editors Herald: A few of us are still striving to do what we can for the cause we all love so well, but it is rather uphill work with only one member of the priesthood resident in the branch. God is blessing us in our effort, so we desire to continue to labor for the Master.

Brethren N. T. Chapman and C. E. Crumley visited us a few weeks ago and awakened new life and spirituality in us, and we surely had an enjoyable time. Brother Crumley, despite his bodily ailments, preached eleven rousing sermons, full of counsel and good cheer, which were both instructive and encouraging to the Saints.

I have just been in attendance at our district conference at Portland, Oregon, which passed off peacefully, Brethren Chapman and Crumley being in charge. A good Spirit was manifest in all the meetings, and the Saints all tried to outdo each other in their kindness and hospitality to all visitors. Brother Crumley and Brother C. E. Jones, of Honolulu were the chief speakers. Both gave good counsel which if obeyed will be very beneficial to all who heard.

Dear Saints, I wish to bear testimony to God's power manifest among his children. At the time Brethren Crumley and Chapman were at Condon our little grandson, ten weeks old, was taken sick with a severe cold, which settled on his lungs and developed into pneumonia. At midnight on January 26, the doctor carried him to the hospital, stating that the only hope for him was good nursing and plenty of fresh air. Between twelve and one o'clock the next day the child's mother called for the elders, and Brethren Crumley, Jones, Chapman and the writer hurried to the hospital. When we arrived the little one was in spasms, and soon after our arrival went into a sinking spell. The above-named elders, Sister C. E. Jones, the child's parents, myself and companion engaged in silent prayer, and in a few moments the child began to gasp and show signs of recovery. From that very hour he began to mend, and has continued to improve until at this writing he is sound and well and growing fine, for which we truly thank our heavenly Father, knowing that it was only through his love, mercy and power that our loved one was restored to us. Dear readers, let us strive continually to do God's will, and come up higher that we may be the glad recipients of many blessings he loves to bestow on his faithful and obedient children. We had a daughter, Sister H. C. Johnson, in the hospital at the same time, whom the Lord greatly blessed. She underwent a very serious surgical operation and is recovering at this time.

Brother and Sister Jones, of Honolulu, are with us at present and will continue to labor among us for some time. They are both humble, faithful workers in the Master's cause and we look for good results. The work is reviving here, and we look for brighter times for the Condon Branch in the near future.

Asking an interest in the prayers of all Saints and ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am as ever,

Your brother and coworker,
N. E. AUSTIN.

Editors Herald: As I am to do missionary work in New York District this year, I should esteem it a favor if the Saints of said district will notify me of any opportunities for such work in their respective localities. I shall also be glad to hear from the Saints among whom I have labored in past years, and trust that we shall all be collaborators together with God in promoting gospel work in the district.

I hope to be at the next district conference, Providence permitting.

Yours in Christ,

Editors Herald: If it were not for the comfort and strength I receive from God I should be very lonely indeed. After having been most of the time with the Saints since I united with the church, eleven years ago, I am now isolated. The Lord has blessed me many times.

Nine years ago I was sorely afflicted and it seemed that medical aid could avail nothing. At this time I was living away from the church. I had a great desire to be where I could be administered to. My sister was with me and a member of the church, and we determined to return to Lamoni where we could get the desired help. With much difficulty we arrived there, and I was administered to and received relief, eventually being healed to such a degree that I have had better health since than ever before.

I am now again on the bed of affliction, and am not so I can be administered to. I desire the prayers of the Saints, and if it pleases the Lord I desire to be spared to see my three children old enough to have a full understanding of the gospel. While we do not have the privileges of the church and Sunday school, I do my best to teach them, and feel the Lord will be with us when we try to do his word.

My greatest desire is to move near a branch of the church. This would give me much strength. For this I pray. I feel that the Lord hears and will answer in his own due time.

In bonds,
MRS. ETTA KEOWN MARTIN.

Editors Herald: We still count God's blessings. He has been most merciful to me, and brightened many a dark day. The Saints here are struggling onward as bravely as ever. They are now working to procure a new lighting system for their church. God has ever aided in the past, and we are sure he will do so again.

We all have much to be thankful for. We are grateful that God has thus far spared the fair land of America from the ravages of present-day war. As Saints we must live so as to meet in righteousness, whatever may come, trusting that God will care for his own.

Praying for the safety of Zion, I am,

Your sister,
EUNICE SCOFIELD.

WEST BAY, FLORIDA, February 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have been in the church nearly four years. With four of my children I was baptized by Brother S. S. Smith. My wife was baptized when she was a child. Thirteen months ago we moved from Baldwin County, Alabama, to this place. There are no Saints here and we sometimes grow hungry for gospel preaching. It seems that God wanted us to come here for some purpose. There are many Adventists, Holiness people, friends, and Baptists here, and we attend their services. I am superintendent of a Union Sunday school, with forty or fifty pupils. We are trying to live right, and ask the Saints to pray for us.

Brother Sherman came to preach for us in August. We had a good attendance. If we could get some missionaries here I think we could do good. Would Brother Slover write to me, or come and preach to us? Yours in the faith,

J. T. ABBOTT.

News from Missions

Australia

Western Australia is a large and sparsely populated state, and could easily absorb the labor of fifty missionaries. There are two of us here trying to consolidate the work and place it upon such a footing that it will thrive and push back the adverse forces. Our army is small, and as a consequence our fight seems a "forlorn hope"; but when we remember that it all depends upon our being right with God, and God being with us, we are encouraged, for we know this is his work, and we also know that we are trying to live worthy of our calling, and therefore we must conquer.

We come into very close touch with the Utah church representatives here, as they live and hold meetings on the other side of the street. This confuses the public mind some, and necessitates on our part special activity along lines of difference between the bodies. The Utah elders call this persecution, and consider their policy the Christlike one and ours the opposite. This is a deception, for our boldness and zeal for the truth is not persecution, but is that Elijah-like spirit which characterized the defenders and advocates of this latter-day work from its inception; while their apparently "meek and mild" policy is not the spirit of Christ, but merely a product of that secret order of spirit which endeavors to "privily bring in damnable heresies," which can not recommend themselves for their intrinsic work or truthfulness, but must needs have an advocate of whom "silly women" say, "But they are nice men."

This is the cry of most of their women converts. They get a few men. One day recently in conversation with a lady of that cult in reply to this I asked, "When you joined their church were you after the men, or the truth?"

She replied, "The truth, of course."

"Well," I said, "let the 'nice men' drop and stick to the truth, and discuss that."

I had the pleasure of meeting the president of their Australian Mission, who met me with, "So you're a Reorganite." I said, "Yes, so you call us, and you're a Brighamite."

He said, "Yes, and I'm not ashamed of it."

I replied, "Some would be."

We then moved on to polygamy, and he said if I could show where it was condemned in the Bible he would "pack up and go home." I said, "Then get ready to 'pack up.'"

We turned to Malachi 2: 14, 15, and you should have seen the twisting. Where it reads, "and did he not make one" he said, "Yes, he made them one." What a twist, for the evident meaning of the text is that he made one woman in the beginning for one man, that they twain might be one flesh, i. e., through marriage. This man has left Western Australia, but I doubt if he has kept his word and "packed up" for home. It would take more than a direct text from the Bible or any of the books to cause a Brighamite to abandon the belief in polygamy.

Only five days later in this same shop I heard a lady speaking to the shopkeeper on the fulfillment of prophecy. He asked, "What church do you belong to?"

She said, "I know you'll laugh, but I'm a Mormon. They used," she said, "to teach polygamy, but now they don't."

This gave me my opportunity and I said, "Excuse me, madam, do you know that Joseph F. Smith, their president, is a polygamist, living with five wives?"

She said, "No, can you prove that?" I have been trying to do so and hope she may come out of that church.

This shows how the Utah people keep their members in the dark, and when we try to let the truth in they cry, "Slander, persecution," etc. But so far as I am concerned, that cry will not deter me from speaking the truth and saving men and women from being "spider- and fly-like" drawn into their death-oath parlor by the presentation of the pure principles of the gospel, while underneath they have polygamy, secretism, material endowment garments in lieu of the spiritual, etc. "While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption." (2 Peter 2: 19.)

We had the pleasure of baptizing five persons in the church font last Sunday, which is very adaptable from all standpoints. The pulpit and railings were taken away, they are not fixed, and the audience had full view. I think this is a record for Australia, in that three of the persons were twins—a twin aunt and two twin nephews, and it was also my first baptism in Western Australia.

Good news comes from the gold fields, where Brother and Sister E. H. Davies are located. There are two ready for baptism, and we trust that the scattered members of the church in that region may rally together and cause a branch of the church to be formed. I expect to go to that part of this vast field in May next.

This state is over a million pounds sterling in arrears in its finances, and what with the war, which precludes borrowing, and the drought, which last year was the worst on record for the state, things do not look very roseate. We are trying to get the gospel before the people in Fremantle, but so far our efforts do not seem to have resulted in much progress.

My health is good on the average, but that of my young missionary companion, Brother Argent, is not very good. He is working well among the people from house to house, and has already met with some success in bringing in children for the Sunday school. We hope to return to Victoria to wife and home about the end of October or beginning of November. What our future movements may be will no doubt be decided by our new missionary in charge, the announcement of whose pastoral we are anxiously awaiting. We are hopeful of a continuance in divine favor and in this great work, which we trust may move steadily forward to final victory.

The life of our late President is a great advertisement to our work, and will do much to further the cause of truth. We trust that God's blessing will be with the conference, and that God will honor the son of our late great and good leader by granting him the leadings and revelations of his Spirit for the guidance of the whole body.

With confidence in the final triumph of truth, I am,

Faithfully yours in gospel bonds,

SUBIACO, WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

J. H. N. JONES.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

The Saints have lately been called to pass through many sad and trying scenes; there has been much sickness and affliction among us. Although there is still considerable illness and suffering, the work of the Master continues to exhibit much earnestness on the part of the Saints, who in branch and society meetings have received much excellent instruction, the Spirit testifying to the loving watchcare of God over his people.

We have been edified, cheered and comforted in spirit by hearing the elders from abroad, among them C. E. Crumley, R. C. Evans, E. K. Evans, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, Noah Cook, of Saint Louis, Brother Stover, of the Pacific Slope, F. A. Russell, M. A. McConley, and others.

On Sunday the Sunday school surpassed itself in numbers, there being one thousand in attendance. The Religio enrollment is four hundred and fifteen, the average attendance of last quarter being one hundred eighty-nine. There are seventeen classes, under the direction of Brother L. W. Weeks.

The Communal Institute with its various departments, a newly organized body of sisters, with especial functions relating to the better conditions of the home of those needing loving help and sisterly watchcare, appeals to the sympathy and kindly interest of all. Activity is manifest in this special work in all directions, under the supervision of its faithful president, Mrs. A. L. Yingling.

The night and day classes, the Woman's Auxiliary, with its various departments of labor, and the efforts put forth on every hand for good, cause us all to rejoice in the glorious work.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Spokane District Saints: One of the chief duties of the bishops and agents in all parts of the world is to assist members and friends who are interested in the Lord's work to fulfill the law relating to temporal things so that they may be acceptable stewards of his by and by.

We especially urge upon each and everyone the great importance of the work which brings peace and good will to those who fulfill the law which the Lord has commanded and directed in his instructions to his children.

Dear Saints, I wish to call your attention to the urgent needs of God's church. Let all rally at once and send to me or to any of the local collectors that part which belongs to the Lord, which is needed to pay family allowances past due. Let us not be forgetful of our duties, but remember the missionaries who are appointed to labor among us.

This is my tenth year as bishop's agent in this district. I am at your service and a willing worker. This is a day of sacrifice, the hastening time is on. Let us heed instruction that we may not be found wanting.

Local workers, Oliver Turnbull, Sagle, Idaho; Peter Klaus, Gifford, Idaho; J. O. Hower, Coeur D' Alene, Idaho; J. H. Van Eaton, Leahy, Washington; J. E. Turnbull, Palouse, Washington.

Your colaborer,

W. W. FORDHAM.

I have been placed in general charge of the above-named States, and have selected to assist me in charge:

Hubert Case will have charge of Central and Western Oklahoma districts, and Panhandle Texas.

J. T. Riley, of Arkansas and Louisiana.

E. L. Henson, Texas (that part not included in the Oklahoma districts).

Those laboring in these fields will please report to the men named in charge, July 1, October 1, January 1 and March 1. Please do not delay in reporting.

Those needing missionary work please write the one in charge of your district, or myself; home address will reach me. There will be several reunions in these States this year, and to avoid conflicts leave the selecting of the missionaries to assist in these different reunions to those in charge, and then we will not have an overplus at some places and not enough at others. We want to make a special effort to reach the scattered Saints and establish the gospel in their communities, and we will be glad to get the addresses, and directions how to reach them.

We have one patriarch appointed to Texas and Oklahoma, H. O. Smith. His work will be principally to branches, and he will no doubt respond to calls as much as possible. We are satisfied the branches need his help, and will be greatly benefited by it.

Our attitude toward other denominations should be: Do unto them as you would like to have them do unto us. I am quite sure we do not gain anything by personally attacking their faith. We should be affirmative preachers. Of course when a man attacks us and shows he is an enemy to the faith, we are justified in calling upon him to meet us in debate.

We should preach the straight principles of the gospel, well understood by the church, as found in the three standard books, and avoid speculative theories which are a waste of time, cause confusion, and will do harm. Many men have wrecked their little barks by getting away from the books; we have not outgrown these books yet.

I hope this year when there is an interest aroused in any place the man that is on the ground will stay with it until the work is firmly established, and not leave it and say, "If some one will just follow up and look after this point we think some will be baptized." The time to follow up is at the time you have an interest, and by the man that is on the ground. Better work a few places thoroughly than cover much territory. I hope we will be wise servants.

W. M. AYLOR.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 824 South Chrysler Street, April 26, 1915.

To the Saints of Mission Number 12, comprising Northern Illinois, Northern Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ontario, and Quebec; Greeting: The appointing powers have returned me to the above field for the coming year. I hope to continue to labor for the good of the Saints and also help to gather into the fold of Christ those who are willing not only to hear but to obey the gospel of Christ.

I hope that the Saints and friends will continue to assist the missionary force in every way possible to get the gospel before the people. I also hope that the local ministry who have so ably assisted in the past, will continue to help the work along by looking after the needs of the work in their different localities, by helping in the preaching of the gospel and assisting the Sunday school and Religio work, as opportunity offers, remembering that we are laborers together with God.

The families of the missionaries are looking to the tithe-paying Saints for their support. Do not let them look in vain. It costs money to send the gospel to you; we invite you to help send it to others. Help what you can, be it little or much. Don't fail to give the Lord his part. Do it now.

In order that the work might be carried on to the best possible advantage, I have selected the following brethren to act as assistant missionaries in charge of their respective fields, as follows:

Kewanee, Illinois District, O. E. Sade, Joy, Illinois.

Northeastern Illinois District, J. O. Dutton, First Street, Evansville, Wisconsin.

Northern Wisconsin District, Leonard Houghton, Clitherall, Minnesota.

Southern Wisconsin District, L. O. Wildermuth, Plano, Illinois.

Western Michigan District, Ernest N. Burt, Beaverton, Michigan.

Northern Michigan District, Alvin R. Ellis, South Boardman, Michigan.

Central Michigan District, G. W. Burt, Beaverton, Michigan.

Eastern Michigan District, William M. Grice, Crosswell, Michigan, R. F. D. 5.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, J. D. Stead, Lamoni, Iowa.

Chatham Ontario District, Stewart Lamont, 36 Fifth Street, Street, Chatham, Ontario.

London Ontario District, G. C. Tomlinson, Saint Marys, Ontario.

Toronto Ontario District, W. D. Ellis, South Boardman, Michigan.

Roy Young will labor with Battle Creek, Michigan as an objective point.

Robert T. Brown will labor on Manitoulin Island during the summer.

All missionaries should report to me promptly July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Secure blanks for reporting at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. If any are hindered from going to their fields, or if any are under the necessity of leaving their fields, please notify me.

When possible confer with me before signing propositions for discussion.

Mail sent to my home address 426 South River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri, will be forwarded to me promptly.

Trusting that our heavenly Father will bless the efforts of all to the salvation of souls in his kingdom, I remain,

In gospel bonds, J. F. CURTIS, Minister in Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 24, 1915.

To the Saints and Friends of the Australasian Mission; Greeting: In harmony with the appointment of the late General Conference, we cheerfully look forward to being associated with the church interests in Australasia. The field is not new to us, and we are happy to contribute what we can to the advancement of the church in the mission of the southern seas.

The order and appointments of the General Conference appointees in the various fields, as now existing, will continue, at least until our arrival in Australasia.

A large force of workers has been provided by the church, and we trust that the activities and faithful labors of the ministry may continue to receive the support which has ever characterized the attitude of the Australian Saints toward the servants of the church.

The following command to the church is well known to all: "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." (Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.)

With the increase of our field force, and the maintenance of the gospel wagons in new districts, the demands on the treasury will be much greater than in past years, which means that all should enter into and share the sacrifice with a willing heart and ready hand; and thus have to do with building up and extending the interests of God's kingdom among men. The calling of all Saints is to reflect the glory of God among the nations that now grope in darkness.

May the prayers and energies of the church result in the extension of every department of the Lord's work, in the ingathering of souls, and the redemption of Zion. We are,

Your servants for Christ's sake,

PAUL M. HANSON.

To the Officers and Members of Mission Number 1, Comprising Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba; Greeting: It is with a great deal of pleasure that I hereby announce my return to the mission in which I have labored for the past two years. I therefore take up the duties incident to the work of the Master with renewed determination, feeling assured that our heavenly Father who has thus far guarded and protected the interests of the church will continue to feel after and care for his people.

I desire to call attention to the following appointments and the suggestions made in connection therewith:

Lamoni Stake: John W. Wight, Eli Hayer, J. F. Mintun, C. Scott and M. M. Turpen; Brother Turpen to regard Centerville as his particular mission.

Nauvoo District: James McKiernan, Charles E. Harpe, David J. Williams. Should Gomer R. Wells decide to discontinue his residence in Burlington, David J. Williams will succeed him at that point.

Eastern Iowa District: L. G. Holloway, E. B. Morgan and Edward Rannie. Relative to the work in this district, I suggest that Brother Rannie give his attention particularly to the branches, with the thought of imparting such advice and encouragement as needed.

Des Moines District: James M. Baker, city of Des Moines; E. E. Long, J. L. Parker and Daniel T. Williams.

Gallands Grove District: Charles J. Hunt, D. R. Chambers, C. E. Butterworth and J. B. Barrett.

Little Sioux District: Alma Booker and Amos Berve, Amos Berve to be located in Sioux City, with the recommendation that the branch elect him as president. Brother H. N. Hansen will also give some attention to this district.

Pottawattamie District: W. E. Haden, H. N. Hansen and Joshua Carlile.

Fremont District: J. B. Wildermuth and W. E. Haden.

Southern Nebraska District: John A. Dowker and J. F. Grimes. Alvin Knisley will also give some assistance to the western part of district.

Northeastern Nebraska District: W. E. Shakespeare, Paul N. Craig and H. N. Pierce, Paul N. Craig to labor in connection with the Omaha Branch, giving some attention to South Omaha and Blair.

Western Nebraska and Black Hills: R. Etzenhouser, C. W. Prettyman and Alvin Knisley. Brother Knisley will extend his labor into Southern Nebraska District, as far east as Eustis and vicinity.

Central Nebraska District and South Dakota: W. M. Self, Levi Gamet, John Davis and James W. Smith.

Minnesota: B. S. Lambkin and Birch Whiting.

North Dakota: William Sparling, J. E. Wildermuth, John W. Peterson, six months, Thomas Leitch and L. W. Bronson.

Saskatchewan District: Thomas J. Jordan, J. J. Cornish six months, J. W. Peterson six months, J. L. Mortimer, E. R. Davis, Horace Darbey, J. A. Beckman.

Alberta District: D. Macgregor, F. Gregory, W. P. Bootman and William Osler.

Winnipeg District: Nelson Wilson and E. F. Robertson.

In connection with the above appointments, I am asking that the local officers of the various districts and branches cooperate with the missionary force in the spread of the gospel. It would also be wise for the conference appointees to advise with district presidents in regard to openings and opportunities with which they may be acquainted. That all may work together for the accomplishment of God's purposes here among men, we need the help of each and everyone in the mission.

Those who are appointed to the mission will remember the regular dates for reporting, providing themselves in time with the necessary blanks in order that our system may become uniform: That all who engage in the service of the Master may be blessed, is the prayer of your brother and coworker.

JAMES A. GILLEN, Minister in Charge.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, 258 Benton Street, April 30, 1915.

Sunday School Superintendent's Notice

TO MISSIONARIES

We want every minister under appointment to follow the Senior Quarterly lessons during the conference year. Send us your field address, as this kind of matter is always delayed awaiting extra postage when forwarded. The old list is cancelled.

'SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT IN "HERALD"

Our own appointment necessitates a change of residence to Lamoni, where we will move as soon as our children have finished their school work, about June 10. Until then, address Burlington, as below. On account of the conference and conventions, and correspondence piling up, we have omitted our department in HERALD, but expect to resume with the first issue in July, continuing until other arrangements are effected. According to instructions of last convention, an effort will be made to arrange with the publishers of Autumn Leaves to adopt that journal as an auxiliary paper, in which case the association will reach its workers through that organ. A special committee has the matter in hand, but it will be several weeks before final results can be announced.

FIELD WORKERS AT REUNIONS

Will reunion committees who expect to have auxiliary work on their programs please send to undersigned or to the president of Religio-Literary Society your requests for special help, giving place and date of reunion. In case local talent is desired, we would like to be informed who is wanted so that we may be able to cooperate.

May we suggest that it is very desirable that efforts be made at once by every district superintendent where reunions are to be held to help formulate some kind of a joint program, using your best workers and emphasizing those phases of auxiliary work that seem weakest in your district. At reunion time or before, turn your plans over to the one selected to take charge of such work.

If you are to have auxiliary conventions before summer, get a joint program committee appointed to draft a program or gather material for same. If the conventions are past, get in touch with district president of Religio for same purpose, keeping in view the amount of time likely to be available for auxiliary work. Do it now; don't wait until field worker arrives on the ground; have something ready when he comes. You will get better service from him and your local workers will get development. President Gunsolley or myself will try to help with further suggestions along this line if needed.

There are many matters that require thought—more thought this year because we are not wholly in touch. There are details to be worked out. There are educational, temporal and spiritual aspects that require attention. The superintendent is to give his "whole time," which means his whole thought and attention, rather than traveling all over the territory included in the 77 districts of the association.

If he visited one school every Sunday in the year, he could reach but 52 out of the nearly 700 in his jurisdiction, and that would be a rather small percentage.

"Uncle Sam" offers the most economical and quickest means of getting in touch with the various units composing the association, and we feel we ought to freely use this excellent service, taking advantage of the personal touch wherever circumstances and wisdom or urgency directs.

Every department, the secretary, home department, library, teacher training, are linked up with the units under their care through a reporting system. The superintendent finds no connecting link between him and the district or local superintendents. Report blanks must be thought out, printed and set agoing.

A closer cooperation between the home and school must be considered. Pastors and missionaries can help us, and we may possibly help them. We are "workers together," but some kind of system must be discovered to facilitate this, and it must be done almost wholly by mail. The matter of providing more and better helps for our teachers is not only the most urgent but the hardest problem we have, under the circumstances attending our peculiar work. In finding talent that can serve us, a larger acquaintance with the workers is necessary. We have them, no doubt, but they are modest and we shall have to search for them. This requires time and tact and judgment.

Under these circumstances, we crave your patience, the exercise of good will and good sense, as well as a daily portion in your prayers, that we may view our duties in proper proportions and have our efforts supplemented by divine aid in every emergency. As we view some of them now, we can not see our way through, but we expect to go forward, trusting that concentration and spiritual enlightenment will clear things up. Especially do we pray that we may get in touch with the proper persons to write helps for teachers. We want the Quarterly editors to be free from this extra care. We need short, clear hints and helps for each grade on the presentation of the material furnished by the editors, by some one with experience. Anyone who will put us in touch with such people will do a service to the children of the church who are being instructed in the Sunday schools. Help for our many inexperienced teachers—here is an opportunity for service.

GOMER R. WELLS.

ORDAINING PRESIDENCY

PRESIDENT FREDERICK MADISON SMITH AND COUNSELOR ELBERT A. SMITH

According to the call of God, the provisions of the organic law of the church, and the action of the General Conference of 1915, President Frederick Madison Smith was ordained President of the High Priesthood, and President Elbert A. Smith was ordained as his counselor in the First Presidency, at Independence, Missouri, on the evening of Wednesday, May 5, 1915. The ordination service was held in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church, and was attended by a large audience which filled the entire place of assembly.

Elder G. T. Griffiths, president of the Quorum of Twelve, was in charge of the service. Seated with him upon the rostrum were Presidents Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, other members of the Quorum of Twelve, except Elder U. W. Greene, detained, Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, Presiding Bishop E. L. Kelley, president of the Aaronic priesthood, and Elder J. A. Tanner, president of the Quorum of High Priests; also the Independence Choir, under direction of Sister Audentia Anderson.

Hymn number 105, "Come Holy Ghost, our hearts inspire," was sung; Elder C. A. Butterworth offered prayer, which was followed by hymn number 48, "Come gracious Spirit, heavenly dove."

President G. T. Griffiths made an introductory statement:

Our meeting to-night will go down in history as a very important event, because of what is about to take place. We are about to carry out that which God has made known to fill the vacancy that has been made by death, with which you are all acquainted; and to carry out the action provided for at the last General Conference, the ordination of these, our brethren, Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith.

Fifty-five years have passed away since they ordained a president over the Melchisedec priesthood and the Church of Jesus Christ here on earth.

We sincerely hope and pray that our brother, who will soon be installed in the position occupied so long by his worthy and honorable father, will be permitted to be our leader and president as long as his father was. I think you all have that desire in your hearts. May God so grant it.

Brother Rushton will make a short speech, and after him

Brother Frederick A. Smith, the father of the church, our General Patriarch.

Elder J. W. Rushton followed with an address, preceded by a scripture reading. This address, with others mentioned, will be included in a complete report as an addendum to the General Conference Minutes. Elder Frederick A. Smith, Presiding Patriarch, also addressed the assembly.

President Griffiths then asked the assembly to sing the first stanza of the hymn, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah." Elder Griffiths as spokesman, assisted by Elder Peter Anderson, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Elder J. A. Tanner, then ordained President Frederick Madison Smith as President of the Melchisedec priesthood, by virtue of which ordination he became President of the church.

The ordination statement was very spiritual, inspirational, and confirming. Assurances of the divine prescience were abundant, and the calling and work of President Smith were clearly and strongly presented, indicating the greater developments of the church to be realized under his administration as the successor in the Presidency and prophetic office.

Hymn number 353, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," was sung.

President Elbert A. Smith was then ordained counselor in the Presidency, by Elders F. M. Sheehy, G. T. Griffiths, E. L. Kelley, and J. A. Tanner, the first named being spokesman. The same Spirit of truth and intelligence was present, and the wide field of useful service, already occupied by President Elbert A. Smith, in his continuing service in the Presidency, was predicted and foreshadowed in his future usefulness to the church.

Following the ordinations, statements were made by the members of the Presidency.

President Frederick M. Smith said:

Most of you who know me personally can readily guess that had I consulted my personal feelings in regard to the ceremony performed to-night, it would have been performed in the quietude of the council chamber; but recognizing that you have a legitimate interest, I consented to have it attended to here to-night. I take it that this large audience comes not out of idle curiosity but as an evidence or a testimony of sympathy and willingness to support. I have not much to say to-night and what I do say may be simple, but I trust that it may not be inappropriate to the occasion.

I really was surprised to-night when the brother said I had been thirteen years in the Presidency. Those have been thirteen very busy years for me, for I have not only attempted to discharge the responsibility of the church work that was upon me, but I have felt that there was still greater burden of preparation. I have gone about that as my judgment and what I believed to have been God's direction have indicated, and if I have not tried to cast myself in the mold that you would have formed for me, let us both grant that God can use any man who has made or attempted to make a proper preparation and a sacrifice.

You will remember that last fall I left home to carry on some of this work of preparation, and I felt as I did so that it was perhaps my last year of work of preparation along this line; and in the discharge of that work, I took upon myself an obligation, an obligation which has not been discharged, and which I have attempted to discharge in staying in Worcester.

Many a time last fall as I, with my books before me, was attempting to master some of the subjects to which I had applied my mind, both in the daytime and in the hours of night when I was at work, the book would gradually disappear from before me as I became lost in thought on church work and my mind opened out in enlarged vision of the work of the church, such as I never had experienced before. I wondered what it portended. I feared, and that fear was realized when I was called to the bedside of my dying father.

I held myself in readiness to discharge such work of the church as I could along with the obligation that I had assumed; and I made all preparation to come to our late conference. As the Boston delegation passed through Worcester on Wednesday, I had in my pocket tickets bought straight through to Lamoni, and had reservations made for the following Saturday, yet while the Boston delegation visited with me at the train in Worcester, I was so weak physically that I, part of the time, leaned against a post while talking to them, and yet I fully expected that I should go on Saturday. That night my temperature was one hundred and two degrees, and the physician whom we called in the following morning ordered me to bed. I said, "Doctor, can you get me up by Saturday, for I am going to Lamoni?"

He said, "I will try."

He never told me at the time nor till considerable time afterward the really dangerous condition I was in, but he did tell my companion, I learned afterwards. I was in bed fourteen days, and the first time I was permitted to sit up in a chair outside the bed was the day the conference adjourned.

What the purpose of that detention was I did not know—I do not know now; but I do know that I was willing, before God, to go to that conference. But I quit worrying when I found that I could not go, for I took refuge behind that rock that has been my shelter time after time when worried and perplexed beyond endurance and when I could not see further—I have always found shelter in the thought, "It is God's work, and he can do as he will."

When the message came to me that the conference had passed the vote of confidence and asked me to assume the responsibility that I had feared would be mine some day, I did not longer hesitate, but answered that I would be willing to take the position if the church saw fit to place me there. The shortness of time consumed in reaching the decision was not I can assure you, a criterion of the reluctance with which I assume the responsibility. If the church had seen fit to place it upon other shoulders, I should have been relieved. I would that I had not been called upon to assume the responsibility—for the thirteen years of experience in the Presidency has impressed upon me as perhaps no other man can realize what that responsibility means.

I am not going to attempt to say what my work will be or my object is, further than to say that I believe I have had impressed upon me some of the import of the work of this church, and somewhat of the direction in which lies the goal toward which we must work; and before God and with his help, I shall attempt to demonstrate with my brethren to the world, that God has indeed spoken to this church. What that demonstration is most of you know. Whether we shall be able to accomplish it depends upon the closeness with which we can all run with God.

Impelled as I have been by the sense of duty to assume this responsibility, I find courage in the thought while recognizing my inability as a man that the same sense of duty which has impelled me has impelled others, men of ability and with godly intent, to assume similar responsibility and assist in the work, and in this I find encouragement. And as with my associates we shall strive to demonstrate to the world the purpose of our existence, I have the assurance to-night that we shall not be left to battle alone, and in that I find my comfort.

I think that I sense fully the solemnity and importance of the act that has just been consummated. Yet I am impressed to-night by the thought that though you may by ordination set men apart to certain positions, you can not make a prophet by ordination, and you can not make a counselor by ordination. With the pressure of the hands of the elders yet heavy on my head, I am made aware that the need is imperative that God shall do his part and come to the rescue of my brother and myself to qualify us. (I call him brother because he is my brother, or so I feel toward him in spirit.)

When I was between three and four years of age my father was removed from the active service of the church by a terrible affliction, the magnitude of which I could not then comprehend. I did not then know what it meant to me. I learned later; but I will not attempt to explain it to you to-night. My mother and I were thrown to a certain extent upon the mercy of the world. And from then until I was twenty-one years old most of my time was spent at a distance from the church, where there was no branch.

Yet I can not recall a time when it was not my ambition and desire to take up my father's work and carry it on. I am sure I had that idea in mind before I was five years old, though when or how I first obtained it I do not know, except that I am sure it was heaven-born. I do not mean that I was ambitious to occupy the particular positions he had held. At the time when he became disabled he was a member of the Presidency and one of the editors of the SAINTS' HERALD. But in due time God seemed to test my covenant, and called me to the very positions that my father had held, just as he has called Brother Frederick M. to occupy the position vacated because of his father's death, and just as he has called Brother Frederick A. to succeed his father.

I do not think now so much about carrying on my father's work; perhaps I have obtained a broader view. I think about carrying on God's work. My father was my boyhood ideal. In him I saw no fault at all. But now Jesus is my ideal. I have found a friend in Jesus, and I wish to do his will in all things.

So far as my relationship with Brother Frederick Madison Smith is concerned, he shall have my love, confidence, and support, as he has always had. I do not think it necessary to qualify this statement by saying, so long as he is in line of duty, for that is understood. Everyone here knows that no member of the church who is a good man would make any other kind of a pledge of support to any man. We have worked together without friction or trouble and I am sure that we shall so continue.

I do not feel that I have made any great sacrifices for this cause. We were talking with a missionary to a foreign field to-day. He has been in a foreign field fourteen years. His wife, a native born American girl, has been absent from home and in that field for fourteen years. I uncover my head to this man and woman. He told us that for nine months he ate nothing but bread and butter and honey, living on ten cents or less a day. I have never made sacrifices,—not by comparison with this man.

But I pray that we may be willing to make sacrifices, and that the windows of heaven may be open and the Spirit of God be poured out upon us. I desire your confidence and support; but I do not ask for them for myself at this time. I ask for them for my Brother Frederick Madison Smith. You do not comprehend the magnitude of the burden that has been placed upon him—to stand between God and man and bring the word of God to man.

My prayer is that the work may move forward, as it must. We can not return to the days of Brother Joseph, if we would. We must go forward, and may God lead the way.

Following these statements President Griffiths related a spiritual presentation to him while en route from Honolulu to San Francisco, during his recent return from Australia.

The service throughout was spiritual, prophetic in its foreshadowing, and assuring. The spirit of love, of power, and intelligence was present, and the service as conducted in every way in keeping with its important character.

President Frederick M. Smith, sustained by a worthy companion, assisted by a tried and faithful counselor in President E. A. Smith, enters upon his exalted calling with wide experience gained by thirteen years of actual service in the Presidency in former association with his father. He comes to the church as its spiritual leader under Christ as the third in the prophetic line, well qualified by natural gifts of mind and physical powers, with the promise of abundant support and endowment of divine power and grace. With these he has received an educational training that will greatly assist him in interpreting the truth in relation to the new aspects and new demands of the spiritual and social and economic developments of the times. The Saints may be assured that he comes to his work with the same spirit of consecration to great service to God and man, with the same high qualities, and with the same realization and assurance of divine direction and overshadowing grace under which Joseph Smith the Martyr and Joseph Smith his father preceded him.

If the writer is capable of sensing the Spirit that attended his calling, his appointment and ordination, he does not hesitate, in this statement, to assure the people of God of that which thousands by personal acquaintance and spiritual enlightenment already know: that President Smith is worthy the entire confidence of the people as the earthly leader under Christ of modern Israel. He and his associates are called to occupy in this greatest of all dispensations, in this distinctive, culminating period of development, "in the foremost files of time." The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ is "sufficient" for "these things," and he has promised protection, power, and success. Sustained by a united and devoted people, assisted by a consecrated ministry, the great purposes of God will rapidly go forward and culminate, notwithstanding the experiences of trial, the requirements of fortitude and earnest labor, in the redemption of Zion and the coming of Jesus Christ, the great head over all.

May God bless his people and give them assurance of his presence and power under the new conditions confronting the church in the present great opportunity for service to God and the race, which assurance has been confirmed to many present on the historic occasion thus briefly narrated.

RICHARD S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

OPPOSE BRITISH LIQUOR TAX.—Determined opposition has forced a postponement for one week in the House of Commons of the second reading of the liquor tax bill.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Complications have arisen in connection with the Tampico oil fields, from which the British navy draws much of its fuel. Villa forces are in control of the oil fields, while Carranza troops hold the ports of Tuxpan and Tampico, obstructing the exporting of oils. Fighting between Villa and Carranza forces at Morelos is reported. From Carranza sources it is announced that Obregon on the 4th began an attack on Aguas Calientes.

LABOR LEADER CONVICTED.—John R. Lawson, member of the national executive board of the United Mine Workers of America for district fifteen, and one of the leaders in the recent Colorado coal strike, was on the 3d convicted of first degree murder in connection with the death of John H. Nimmo, the deputy sheriff killed in the Ludlow strike battle of October 25, 1913. Lawson was charged with homicide on the theory that he was in charge of the Ludlow tent colony and in command of the strikers, the prosecution contending that the strikers started the battle of October 25. The defense answered that the battle was started by the deputy sheriff, and that Lawson instead of inciting the strikers to battle, tried to calm them. Life sentence was passed. An appeal will be taken.

CHINA AND JAPAN.—Following the consistent refusal of China to yield to her demands, Japan at 3 p. m. on the 7th, issued an ultimatum allowing China forty-eight hours in which to accede to the demands as filed. It is understood that the ultimatum was a modification of former demands, reserving to Japan the right to reopen at a future time the questions of authorizing Japan to supply half the arms used by China; to participate in the conduct of Chinese arsenals; to appoint Japanese advisors in Chinese railroad construction, mining, harbor operations, etc. It is thought at this writing that China will accede to the demands as modified by the ultimatum.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Germany seems to be sustaining a general attack along a great part of her eastern front, from the Baltic to the Carpathians, as well as in Belgium and France. Important German gains in the Russian Baltic provinces are reported. Additional German gains in western Galicia and the Carpathians are announced. Russia claims gains in the Caucasus. In readjusting their lines in Flanders, the British have abandoned positions east of Ypres. German claims of gains in the west are not admitted by the allies. The British announce gains on the Gallipoli Peninsula in their land attack in support of the forcing of the Dardanelles. The allied fleet continues the bombardment of the Dardanelles forts and of Smyrna. The week covered by this report was one of unusual activity on the part of the Germans in their so-called submarine blockade. Submarines have sunk the Swedish steamer Ellida; the French steamer Europe; Russian steamer Svorono; a British schooner; at least fifteen British trawlers, or fishing boats; the British steamers Edale, Fulgent, and Minterne; the Norwegian steamer America, carrying a United States cargo from Philadelphia to Norway; the Danish steamer Cathay was sunk by a submarine or a mine. A German submarine sunk the British destroyer Recruit, British destroyers sinking two German torpedo boats accompanying the submarine. The American tank steamer Gulfight, from Port Arthur, Texas, to France, was sunk by a German submarine. The captain died of heart failure from the shock and two seamen were drowned. The British Cunard liner Lusitania, from New York to England, was on the 7th sunk by a German submarine. The Lusitania carried contraband goods. One hundred and eighty-eight United States citizens were aboard. It is feared that many lives were lost. It is claimed that the Gulfight and Lusitania were torpedoed without warning. Canada has placed an embargo on grain shipments to the United States for other than domestic consumption; to England unless to specified consignees; and to other countries unless under permit. In a budget speech before the British House of Commons on the 4th, David Lloyd-George stated that the present cost of the war to England is $10,500,000 daily, and that if the war continued for a year the cost to Great Britain would be near $5,000,000,000. The debt of the country, he said, had been already doubled, standing well over $5,000,000,000. Italy continues her military preparations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

MICHIGAN'S FAMOUS ORATOR.—The Saint Marys (Ontario) Journal of March 11, had the following to say of Elder S. W. L. Scott of Coldwater, Michigan, who had conducted services at Saint Marys:

Elder S. W. L. Scott concluded his lectures on Bible prophecies Tuesday evening, and Saint Marys has received an intellectual treat of a very high order. His wonderful knowledge of ancient and modern history and the rise and fall of nations and Bible prophecy that he quotes at will . . . entitles him to the well-earned distinction of Michigan's famous orator. His lecture on "Evolution versus the Bible" was a masterpiece of well-defined principles that upheld the Bible theory of creation and proved conclusively that the evolution theory was a fad, and a dangerous one. . . . A request has been made that Mr. Scott return here at an early date, and a larger building may be secured, and that his lectures be published.

HELPFUL PUBLICITY.—The Daily Gem City of Fort Madison, Iowa, unsolicited, gave helpful publicity through its columns to our work in connection with services recently conducted at Fort Madison by Elder D. T. Williams. Brother W. H. Gunn in sending the editor an outline of subjects for the meetings inclosed a pamphlet setting forth facts with reference to the origin of the cause, and its work as an opponent of the evils of Utah, and a very liberal discussion of the differences appeared in a conspicuous column of the paper. Space was also granted for daily announcements. The meetings were a success, aided materially by the publicity secured through this paper. It pays to get in touch with honorable and liberal public men, especially representatives of the press, in our propaganda for righteousness and against sin.

NOT MUCH IMPROVEMENT.—Some time ago there was presented in these columns a statement from the Apostolic Review of the differences existing among the adherents of the Church of Christ, or the non-organ Christian Church people. From the following by Daniel Sommer, and appearing in the Review of April 20, we take it that there has not been much improvement among the ranks of this church:

While existing conditions continue in certain congregations, a preacher is liable to offend some of their members if he calls on the audience to stand in time of prayer, or speaks in favor of a baptistery, or in favor of a sister reading a scripture or praying in a meeting, or in favor of right hands of fellowship, or in favor of Christians voting in political elections even on a moral question, or in favor of receiving anyone that has been baptized by a sectarian. And nearly all this has resulted from certain schools, or those who have advocated them.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD AND CIVILIZATION

To be civilized (according to Webster) one must be courteous, complacent, gentle, obliging, affable, kind, and redeemed from savage life.

These characteristics if actually possessed would successfully insulate the world from war.

Some one has said that "knowledge is the principal thing." A glance at our surroundings should convince us that this statement is true.

When a boy I saw a muscular, intelligent-looking man trying to chop a green cottonwood pole with a good sharp ax, and it capped the climax for awkwardness. As I thought the matter over I became convinced that "knowledge is the principal thing," for I saw that it amounted to more than great strength, good will, good opportunity and good tools combined.

I saw a strong man trying to milk a gentle cow: his failure drilled this eternal truth still deeper into my soul. "Knowledge is the principal thing."

I saw a little girl making soap bubbles. It was but little short of a miracle how she made those glory worlds obey her behest. My own awkward blunders when trying to make soap bubbles at a later date was an illustration to me that "knowledge is the principal thing."

The value of knowledge along any line may be easily and accurately figured out by the importance of the result desired. The range is infinite. It reaches from a soap bubble to eternal life. Jesus affirms, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.) Paul clinched this truth when he told the Saints of Thessalonica that the vengeance of the last days should overtake "them that know not God." And Peter's wonderful salutation shows that a knowledge of God is the fountain head of all civilization: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." (2 Peter 2:2.) "Grace and peace" is a stronger expression, and implies more than the term civilization. Since "grace and peace" are the results of "the knowledge of God," are not the crimes of war the outgrowth of a lack of the knowledge of God? I think so, surely.

Since we can not succeed in the simpler things of common life without a knowledge of what we are doing, why should we expect success in the higher walks, in spiritual things, in the things of God, without a knowledge of God?

HOW OBTAIN A KNOWLEDGE OF GOD?

Jesus gives the most emphatic answer to this question. Listen to him: "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." The Prince of Peace then, is the only teacher who can give to one a knowledge of God. We hope that many good people have obtained the knowledge of the Father through the revelations of the Son; but no man has the faculty of conveying that knowledge to the third person.

There are good books that teach the true character of God, but no book can elevate our minds above a mere belief, so far as the things of God are concerned; and we must have a knowledge of God in order to become civilized, in order to escape the vengeance of the last days, and to put us in possession of eternal life. And no one but the Prince of Peace can reveal to us this coveted prize.

So it is that we can not expect that degree of civilization designed by Deity until the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord "as the waters cover the sea." This will elevate man above the nature of the brute beasts. Then the Lord says, "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain"; "they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." "But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid." This spells true civilization; and we notice that in each case it is the result of a knowledge of God.

It seems to the writer that this should be a sufficient incentive to inspire us to a more determined mind, loyalty to the Prince of Peace, and at the same time wean us somewhat from the contradictory traditions of the scribes.

The great question that must be definitely settled before we can worship God intelligently is this: Is God the author of war, or does the crimes of war originate with Satan? Since Jesus is the only infallible representative of the Father, and the only one who can give us a knowledge of the Father, why should we not let his testimony settle the matter? Why should we not believe him in preference to short-sighted men?

Here we incorporate just a few of his testimonies along this line. The angels in introducing him to the lowly shepherds chanted this beautiful festive ode, "Glory to God in the highest heavens. On earth peace, and among men good will." (Emphatic Diaglot.)

Jesus said, "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you. And unto him that smiteth thee on one cheek offer also the other . . . and as ye would that men should do to you do ye also to them likewise." He said to Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews."

When Peter in defense of his Master smote an ear off his enemy, Jesus rebuked Peter, and lovingly replaced the ear. On another occasion he said, I came "not to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

He prayed thus for those who crucified him: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Should not all this be enough to settle for all time this one fact, Jesus was not responsible for war? Then we would not forget the fact that in no instance have we on record one single word of his in defense of war.

DID JESUS TRULY REPRESENT HIS FATHER?

Let us hear his own answer to this important question:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.—John 5: 19.

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.—John 7: 16.

The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.—John 8: 29.

I must work the works of him that sent me.—John 9: 4.

Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.—John 14: 10.

I think this should set us at rest upon this point. The Bible is replete with the beauty and the necessity of peace. The thunders from Sinai have vibrated in the ears of all succeeding generations this clear, heaven-born commandment: "Thou shalt not kill." But these vibrations were very faint with un-receptive Israel: inasmuch that we find it repeated only once in all of the Old Bible.

Church dignitaries everywhere are charmed by the gospel ethics of peace and good will. They are sounding these beautiful notes long and loud. And we think the world would have been converted long ago, were it not for the sad fact that they can not tear loose from the hateful traditions of the scribes. But when they preface their sermons with the sweet music of the angelic choir and elucidate them with comments on the virtues of David and Solomon, and then conclude by extoling the brave deeds of Joshua, the imprints of the gospel are simply crushed beneath the ponderous wheels of this double standard.

We have fancied that civilization was on the increase. But when I read the headlines of my papers these days I am vividly reminded of the civilization of my bull pup, who persisted in scattering to the four winds a hedgehog every few days, and grizzling with blood and thunder each dequilling process.

REAL CAUSES OF WAR

Much has been written relative to the cause of the present great war. It has been traced to many minor causes; but back of these minor causes stands the gigantic cause of causes. It is a false interpretation of God based on Hebrew literature.

The whole Christian world has been educated on their mother's knees, at public schools, in the Sunday schools, and at church to have faith in a God of war, and to admire the bloody-handed heroes of ancient Israel. The twigs are all bent in that direction: therefore, the men are by nature inclined toward war. How can they be inclined in the opposite direction from which for generations they have been bent? If the world had a knowledge of God as so freely and truly offered by Jesus Christ, do you believe that any such ghastly conditions as now exist could be made possible?

Civilization or good government exists in various degrees; it may be safely estimated by the nation's concept of God. There is a worshipful element or monition planted in our very natures, and all who heed this silent monitor very naturally aspire toward the object of their worship. All we need to know of the character of any nation or race may be clearly read from the nature of the God they worship. Therefore, just as long as the nations hold onto the blood-hungry heroes of ancient Israel as God's favorites, so long will wars curse the earth.

Just as long as the Sunday-school literature of the world is burdened with the praise of those savage leaders of Israel, just that long will our young men consider it an honor to shed the blood of their fellows in battle.

As long as parents teach their children or permit them to be taught that God is the author of war, just that long will peace conferences be signal failures.

Just as long as churches hang onto this false interpretation of deity, that long will the nations of earth continue to sacrifice the flower of the race upon the altar of war.

No one who upholds the indiscriminate slaughter of noncombatants, of innocent mothers in child bed, and infants at the breast, should throw up their hands in holy horror at the legitimate results of their influence when they see nine millions of men on the field of battle.

Do you furnish your little boys with toy pistols and not expect them to point, and snap them, and shout, Bang? If you do, then you are doomed to disappointment.

TRADITION AND ITS EFFECTS ON PROPHECY

We now stand face to face with a very delicate as well as a very stubborn proposition, delicate from the fact that the peculiar wording of many prophecies seems to involve deity in the vengeance of war, which no intelligence in heaven or on earth can harmonize with the teaching of Jesus Christ; stubborn because these predictions have been, and are being literally fulfilled; which proves that they were not false prophecies, and from the further fact that it has to do with men's traditions which at times seem to be more obdurate than obstinacy itself. This forces a complication that few care to wrestle with. But there must be a solution to this vexing problem somewhere; and as the Prince of Peace is the only infallible standard, the solution must harmonize with his word.

There are two facts connected with prophecy that when understood may help us decipher this enigma: first, as a rule Deity does not word the messages given, the phrasing of the truths made known is the work of the prophet, "the ideas and ideals are given to him and he expresses them as best he may;" second, the prophet's early training may have fixed a stanch personality that very naturally shows itself in the message delivered by him: in fact, it is quite likely to enter largely into the body of a prophetic utterance.

I have the profoundest respect for those whom the Lord trusts with a communication to the people. But I dare not defy them: I dare not exalt them into objects of worship: for they are all human, all proscribed by mundane environments, all liable to make mistakes, and all more or less biased by their early trainings.

We notice the distinct individuality of each prophet clearly manifested in his vocabulary. Occasionally one boils his message down to the abstract facts revealed, and, Jonah like, gives them to the people in the fewest and simplest words he can marshal. This seems to be the only safe plan.

One of the most admirable examples of this type may be found in the ministrations of the late President Joseph Smith, of blessed memory. Let the critics study the revelations from Section 114 to date, and it will readily be seen that as a church we have been in much closer touch with God than his people have been in some other ages when the prophets have led them through the labyrinth of tradition and the maze of individual opinion in order to show them the will of God, or the mind of the Spirit.

It would seem that some prophets have been so overstocked with personal verbiage that one is puzzled to know just what part of their utterances was delivered to them by the Lord and what part belongs to their tradition. A short message may have been prefaced and embellished, adorned, and decorated, and then concluded with so much individual verbiage that to find the real kernel in it is like hunting a needle in a haystack in fact, it is largely guesswork to tell what part is the Lord's and what belongs to the prophet's individual characteristics.

In order to illustrate this thought more fully if possible, we will suppose that the Lord gives exactly the same deep prophetic impression to two individuals, A and B, which were in the start as nearly alike as two white peas. The message is intended to give warning of the coming of a terrible scourge of war and famine. A has been carefully trained in the divine law of love, of peace, and good will; he believes Satan to be the prince of all that is evil; whose object is to stir up strife, turmoil and war. He trusts in Deity as an omnipotent, unchangeable Father, whose love is all pervading, to whom men must look for protection from the devices of Satan; that all sacred influences emanate from the Lord; his concept of God is all drawn from the teachings of the Prince of Peace.

But B's concept of God is all drawn from Hebrew literature; Joshua is his hero, and God's favorite; he has made a close study of many of the books of the Hebrew prophets, who were sent to Israel with warnings similar to the one now given to him, but who never referred in any way to the works of Satan, but gave the gruesome glory of all crimes of war to the Lord. Believing God to be an avenger of his adversaries, B maintains a sort of mingled fear and love toward his Creator. He has noted that the wars of the Lord (?) were wars of conquest and extermination, and he feels the thrill and inspiration of those exciting victories in his soul.

I ask, Do you believe that A and B would phrase this communication in the same words? I might rather ask, Do you think you would discern that the prophecies were primarily one and the same?

Can we not see that as delivered by A it would be set in a framework of love, a real warning to the people of the danger of their association with Satan, that they might turn to the Lord in quest of forgiveness and refuge?

And do we not know that B's message would be staged in a threatening attitude, and that we would hear much about the anger and vengeance and chastening hand of an offended God?

Are not our traditions and firm convictions just as apt to enter largely into a prophet utterance as they are to color our sermons and our personal conversation?

God may be blamed for crimes of men only in this way: because he made us men, with powers of our own, to choose what course we will pursue, with power to say if we will go to hell or occupy a throne.

"THE CHASTENING HAND OF AN OFFENDED GOD"

All of the seeds of crime which culminate in war emanate from the enemy of all righteousness, the father of lies; while since the dawn of time our heavenly Father has ever warned his creatures against opening their souls to these seeds of crime, and his mighty hand has always protected his obedient children. But when those under his protection have grown careless, or rebellious, or in any way proved themselves unworthy of God's fatherly care, and he has withdrawn his forces for good and given

Satan a chance to do his work, it may in a sense be called "the chastening hand of an offended God," not however, in the sense that he created the evil, but that he could have continued to protect rebellious souls and did not.

God's act of withholding his powers for good is truly a chastisement. But in no other way can the writer conceive that the king of heaven is the author of crime.

FAITH IN GOD

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 2

BY F. J. EBELING.

When the Apostle Peter called the attention of Jesus to the withered fig tree, he replied, "Have faith in God." The withered fig tree represents the nothingness of man, but with the right kind of faith God can use him to remove mountains of difficulties.

With a true faith in God, mountains will become mole hills; with a lack of faith, mole hills will become mountains. Our success in anything is largely measured by the degree of faith we have in it. Once we are satisfied a proposition is just what it claims to be, there should not anything stand in our way of accomplishing it,—speaking of course of things with which God has to do.

A PRESENT-DAY GOD .

In Hebrews 11, wherein Paul relates so many wonderful things done by the power of faith, in the sixth verse, he says, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is." I have italicized the word is, to suggest that we are to believe in a present-day God. The world without discount believes in a past God, and a God of the future; but the most difficult thing we find is to get them to believe in a present-day God. He is right now just the same, and as willing to exercise his power as he was toward Moses, Joshua, David, Elijah, Daniel, and the apostles.

When Moses was about to go into Egypt to deliver the Israelites, and in reply to his query as to what he should tell the people, he was told to say, I Am that I Am sent you. Not enough for them to believe that he was, or he will be, but that he is a present-day God.

A bishop was once crossing the ocean, when a great storm arose, threatening the lives of the crew. As the captain passed by his stateroom, he heard the bishop moaning in agony. The captain entered and consoled him by asking, "Have you not stood in the pulpit and urged others to have faith in God?"

"Yes."

"Do you think God ruled all things well before you came into the world?"

"Yes."

"Do you think God will rule all things well after you leave the world?"

"Yes."

"Then why not trust him to rule all things well while you are in it?"

The good bishop saw the point, rolled over and went to sleep, and in the morning the sea was calm.

THY WILL BE DONE

Some people seem to have plenty of faith when all goes smooth, but, Peter like, become faint-hearted when the storm arises. The kind of faith God requires is to trust him in storm as well as in calm, in poverty as well as in wealth, in sickness as well as in health. The greatest exhibition of faith is not in receiving everything we ask for, but in being denied and still maintaining our integrity.

Our faith is to ask God for something, and then leave it entirely with him as to whether it is best for us to have it or not. Men or women who can be denied many things they ask for and still trust God have more real faith than those who get everything they ask for.

I have heard some Saints pray for a faith that will take no denial. I do not want that kind of faith. I pray for that faith that will take any and all denial. I am satisfied that some individual Saints have prayed God with such faith and earnestness that their prayers have been answered to their hurt. The Lord in his infinite wisdom knew it was better to grant their petition and let them take the consequences than to deny them and perhaps cause them to leave God. I have known a mother who prayed with such faith for the healing of her child, and afterwards wished God had taken it. But had he taken her child at the time she possibly would have lost faith in him.

The safe and sound faith is to say under all conditions, "Thy will, O God, be done, and not mine." There is a sweetness in that faith which calmly submits to the overruling hand of God; steadfastly believing all things work together for good to them that love the Lord, and moving forward with cheerfulness in the warfare.

TRUSTING GOD

We oftentimes have to trust God where we can not trace him. David, the shepherd boy, learned this beautiful thought while herding in the fields. He injects it into his twenty-third psalm, "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." When David was out after dark and returning with his flock, he had to pass a steep cliff. In so doing he would go before the sheep and with his staff he would rap along the sides of the cliff; while it was so dark at times the sheep could not see him, they would follow the rapping of his staff. From this experience he gathered inspiration to follow the Great Shepherd by his gentle rappings on conscience, although the way be so dark he could not see the reason why such things should be.

With true faith in God the way is never so dark or dreary that it will make us turn back; but by following the gentle rappings at our heart's door, we will eventually be led into open and fair fields of deliverance.

A GROWING FAITH

Faith may be very small at first, as illustrated by Jesus in Matthew 17: 20, by the grain of mustard seed. By putting to proper use the grains of faith planted in our hearts, they will develop into a force equivalent to knowledge. While the mustard seed is small, it does not refuse to come through the ground because of its size and once through it keeps on growing, and does not get discouraged, thinking, "Some big man will tramp on me, or the ox or horse will nip me off." It knows no defeat, and consequently grows to such strength that the fowls of the air find lodgment in its branches. So our faith must be as a grain of mustard seed, not to think of the defeats and failures,—try and forget them and think of nothing but ultimate success, and not think we are forsaken of God because things do not always go our way, for discouragement may be just the very thing needful to bring out the best that is within us.

Job gives an excellent exhibition of faith. When discouraging report after report came pouring in declaring great losses, instead of complaining and becoming discouraged he uttered words that should stimulate every heart into action, "Although he slay me, yet will I trust him."

Read carefully Alma's splendid treatises on the subject of faith. He says if we plant the seed and continue to nourish it, that it will become perfect knowledge. And he urges us to "try the experiment." The reader should carefully read Alma 16.

There is no such thing as "blind faith." Real faith will drop the blinds from our spiritual vision and enable us to see things just as they are, and by it we will work with as much confidence and zeal as though we actually had the real thing right before us.

That was an excellent request made by Peter, in answer to the question, "How many times must I forgive my brother?" The Lord said, "Seventy times seven." Then came the request, "Lord, increase our faith." The grand product of true faith will lead us to forgive our brother from our heart as many times as he asks it of us.

Faith sees but one side, and that is the bright side. To him who has it, the sun is always shining somewhere. Through chaos he will see order. Through the tempest he will see perfect calm. If our God and religion is all we claim, there is no need of losing faith and becoming discouraged.

PREPARING FOR THE ANSWER

If we have the proper kind of faith and ask God for anything we will prepare for the answer. A certain neighborhood met at a village church in Scotland one time to pray for rain. It was a long drought, and on the day they met there was no indication of rain. Among the many who came to pray for rain was a little thirteen-year-old girl with a large, old-fashioned umbrella. They laughed at her and wanted to know why she brought the umbrella. She confidently replied, "Have we not met here to ask God for rain?" She was the only one among them who showed faith by works.

I am firmly of the opinion that more of our people would be healed in the administration if they would immediately put forth an effort to arise and walk, doubting nothing.

In this warfare of life we may lose an occasional battle; but let us see to it that we win the war. And by pressing the fight, having on the whole armor of faith, the victory is sure. And to that end may we as a body move forward.

WORLDLINESS

My kingdom is not of this world.—Jesus.

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.—1 John 2: 15-17.

Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God. . . . Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the Devil, and he will flee from you.—James 4: 4-7.

If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.—John 15: 18, 19.

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.—James 1: 27.

And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts.—Galatians 5: 24.

Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul.—1 Peter 2: 11.

This I say then, walk in the spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh:

and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye can not do the things that ye would.—Galatians 5: 16, 17.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.—Colossians 3: 2-4.

If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Isaiah 58: 13, 14.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.—Luke 8: 14.

But she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth.—1 Timothy 5: 6.

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God: having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.—2 Timothy 3: 1-5.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government. Presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignitaries.—2 Peter 2: 9, 10.

But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ: how that they told you that there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit."—Jude 17-19.

And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient: being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful: who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them.—Romans 1: 28-32.

Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.—2 Peter 3: 3.

For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Cresens to Galatia, Titus unto Delmatia.—2 Timothy 4: 10.

(For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.) For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ.—Philippians 3: 18-20.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. . . . That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh: but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death: but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh can not please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. . . . Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.—Romans 8: 1-13.

Even as I have seen, they that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same. By the blast of God they perish, and by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed.—Job 4: 8, 9.

Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.—Galatians 6: 7, 8.

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.—Romans 12: 1, 2.

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.—John 12: 48.

For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 20.

Ye can not drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye can not be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils.—1 Corinthians 10: 21.

He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.—Matthew 12: 30.

Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit.—Matthew 12: 33.

No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other: or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. He can not serve God and mammon.—Matthew 6: 24.

FOR THE LIVING

Doctor Horst Oertel, formerly chief pathologist of the Russell Sage Pathological Institute, found that in 388 autopsies performed at New York City hospital only 52.3 per cent of the clinical diagnoses were confirmed.

The Medical Record, commenting on the fact, says that the laws should be amended to permit hospitals to perform autopsies except when expressly forbidden by the nearest relative within forty-eight hours after death, and that they should be performed upon the bodies of all persons dying in public institutions and remaining unclaimed for forty-eight hours after death, unless deceased had signed a written request to the contrary, it being of course understood that such a proportion be reserved as may be legitimately needed for the use of medical colleges.

In Europe hospitals are authorized to perform autopsies on almost all bodies. The University college of London in 1912 performed them in 84 per cent of the deaths in that institution. In German hospitals over 90 per cent of the deaths are followed by autopsy, while the Allgemeines Krankenhaus, of Vienna, has the unique record of ninety-nine autopsies in every 100 deaths. But the American record is much below—10 per cent at Bellevue in New York, 9 at Boston City, 10 at Philadelphia General, although Johns Hopkins recorded 62.

Clearly, the hope of the living who suffer must be founded on the knowledge of the diseases to which the dead have succumbed. It ought not to be difficult to so manage it that there may be no want of this vital information.—Exchange.

PROTESTANTISM FALLING BEHIND

THROUGH UNPRODUCTIVE MARRIAGES

Because of a greater Roman Catholic birth rate, the United States is becoming a great stronghold of the Roman Catholic Church. For the same reason, that church has been ascending toward a predominant position in Great Britain and gaining in France and Germany. In Russia, the land of the Eastern Church, the annual excess of births over deaths is much greater than in all the Protestant countries in the world put together. Present-day Protestantism, which in practice stands for a declining birth rate, is thus being driven back in all the great centers of civilization, according to the conclusion of Doctor Meyrick Booth, a scientific contributor to the Hibbert Journal. He has brought together data only recently made available bearing upon the connection between religious belief and the movement of population, which, he points out, is much more intimate than the sociologists of a few decades ago would have been willing to admit.

In England, for example, Mr. Sidney Webb has shown that town dwelling alone can not be held to account for declining birth rate, because the fall in many country districts has exceeded that in some of the largest cities. Nor does luxury account for it, since the decline is quite as marked in many poor districts as in well-to-do centers. Compared with rapid decline in England during ten years, the Irish birth rate rose by three per cent, and the Dublin rate by nine per cent. English towns and boroughs of London, where Jews or Roman Catholics are most numerous, show the smallest decrease in birth rate. Other figures covering approximately twenty years exhibit a Roman Catholic birth rate of 6.6 children per marriage, against 3.74 among the Protestant landed families. From the "Catholic Year Book" a birth rate of 38.6 per 1,000 is contrasted with the general rate of 24.0 for England and Wales. Says Doctor Booth:

It would seem that the English middle-class birth rate has fallen to the extent of over 50 per cent during the last forty years; and we have actual figures showing that the well-to-do artisan birth rate has declined, in the last thirty years, by 52 per cent! Seeing that the Protestant churches draw their members mainly from these very classes, we have not far to seek for an explanation of the empty Sunday schools.

In France, where the general birth rate is lower than in England, Doctor Booth finds Roman Catholic districts which show a higher rate than the usually English country district. And he quotes the opinion of M. Leroy-Beaulieu "that the Catholic Church tends, by means of its whole atmosphere, to promote a natural increase of population; for, more than other types of Christianity, it condemns egoism, materialism and inordinate ambition for self or family; and, moreover, it works in the same direction through its uncompromising condemnation of modern Malthusian practices." Doctor Booth says that Germany shows a similar condition, though the differences there are less marked.

The situation in the United States is attributed to the influx of large masses of European Catholics, who cling tenaciously to their religion, and to the much greater prolificacy of these stocks as compared with the native population.

The New England States, the original home of American Puritanism, are now important centers of Catholicism (Massachusetts shows 1,100,000 members of the Roman Catholic Church and 450,000 members of all Protestant Churches combined). In Illinois there are about a million Roman Catholics, while the strongest Protestant body (the Methodists) can not show more than 300,000 adherents. In New York State we find 2,300,000 Catholics and about 300,000 Methodists, while no other Protestant body numbers more than 200,000.

From statistics representing the five States of Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, California, and Kentucky, where the proportion of Roman Catholics and the foreign element is comparatively small, Doctor Booth shows that in every one of them the birth rate is excessively low—lower even than in France—and in three of them, Indiana, Maryland and California, there is an actual excess of deaths over births. On the other hand, the five States of New York, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Michigan, and Connecticut, in which the Roman Catholic and foreign element is well represented, make a very different showing of higher birth rate (22.0 to 25.0 per 1,000 compared to 13.0 to 16.0 in the first group), and a very marked excess of births over deaths in each State.

Definite statistics for other important States are said to be lacking, but those given indicate a remarkable increase of the foreign and non-Protestant section of the American people as compared with the Anglo-Saxon and Protestant section, an increase which Doctor Booth says must result less in absorption than in a gradual alteration of national character, customs and beliefs.

Numerous other observations are cited by Doctor Booth to bear out the conclusion that the Anglo-Saxon Protestant element, which has all along formed the core of American civilization, is now a diminishing quantity. For instance, the number of children per marriage in Massachusetts in the years 1870, 1880, 1890, was: native stock—2.2, 2.2, and

2.4 respectively; foreign stock—4.4, 5.0, 4.3 respectively. In Boston, 1900, the native birth rate was 18.2, foreign 31.1; in Providence, the same year, native birth rate 16.0, foreign 31.1. In Connecticut, 1900, "there were 173,000 married women, of whom 66,000 were foreign born whites; and in that year these 66,000 gave birth to almost exactly the same number of children as the remaining 107,000—a little over one third of the married women in the State thus producing half the children."

An investigation by a New York religious paper, Federation, graded the different religious bodies in this city with respect to the number of children per marriage in the following order: Jews (highest number), Roman Catholics, Protestant (orthodox), Protestant (liberal), agnostic. A German sociological review states that 40 per cent of the upper-class marriages in New York City are childless.

Looking at the situation as a whole, says Doctor Booth, there is good reason to think that the Protestant Anglo-Saxons are not only losing ground relatively, but must, at any rate in the East and Middle East, be suffering an actual decrease on a large scale, since the average fertility of each marriage in this section falls short of the four children requisite for maintenance of the stock.

In Canada, Doctor Booth compares a birth rate in Roman Catholic Quebec of 37.2 and in Nova Scotia of 25.0 with the mainly Protestant provinces of Ontario, 22.6; Alberta, 23.5; Saskatchewan, 17.7; Manitoba, 15.9; and British Columbia, 14.9.

Doctor Booth, who is himself a Protestant, concludes that "modern Protestantism, is now (in practice if not in theory) virtually identified with a very extreme type of Malthusianism, and that in consequence of this state of affairs it is being driven back in practically all the great centers of civilization, both in the Old World and the New, while the cream of its human material is suffering gradual extinction. If Protestant thinkers are alive to the gravity of the situation, is it not time that they should ask themselves very seriously the question: Are we prepared to accept this extreme Malthusianism, this anxious and drastic restriction of the family, as the true ideal of Christian marriage?"—Current Opinion, January, 1915.

I saw a delicate flower had grown up two feet high, between the horses' path and the wheel-track. An inch more to the right or left had sealed its fate, or an inch higher, and yet it lived to flourish as much as if it had a thousand untrodden acres of space around it, and never knew the danger it incurred. It did not borrow trouble, nor invite an evil fate by apprehending it.—Thoreau.

"The Kingdom of Never Grow Old"

Though we have before quoted from Mr. Richard L. Metcalfe, we feel sure that the reader will not think we are paying too much attention to this one author when we present the following beautiful extract from his article on this subject, found in his excellent book entitled, Of Such is the Kingdom.

"There are many busy men and women in this world today, as there have been busy men and women in the past, who make frequent journeys to those hallowed precincts. 'And a little child shall lead them' is not all a prophecy; it is history. Some of the world's strongest men have been led by little ones; not led from the path of duty, but kept in that path by the influence which the association with little children had upon their lives. Several years ago when Benjamin Harrison, then President of the United States, visited Omaha, he addressed a great gathering of children on the high school grounds. Always happy in his speeches to men, General Harrison showed that he was, as well, a children's orator. He knew how to command their attention; he knew how to touch their hearts; and, President though he was, he made the bold confession, then and there, that he had made it a practice to seek the company of little children in order to obtain the relaxation necessary in a busy career, and that in the company of these little ones he had found the very best in life.

"The man who confines his association to grown folks, ignores opportunities for developing the mind, for rejuvenating the soul, and for renewing faith in mankind. In the marts of trade there is selfishness and brutality; in the political arena there is hypocrisy and insincerity; in the social circle there is double dealing and lack of candor; but in the temple of childhood there is sincerity and truth; in The Kingdom of Never Grow Old there is relief from the meanness and the malice of the world.

"He who would seek rest from the toil and the anxiety of a busy life may find it if he but cast dull dignity to the winds, and cultivate the acquaintance of the little ones. The weary man of business renews his lease upon life, and warms the cockles of his heart; he is brought closer to nature, closer to truth, closer to God—as he strolls in the sunbeams that dance among the trees and flowers thriving about the palaces of nature in The Kingdom of Never Grow Old.

"In the ballads and the tales of the nursery there are lessons of life and of love; lessons of philosophy and of logic; lessons of truth and of poetry; there is simple eloquence and real earnestness. Those who have not accustomed themselves to wander in this kingdom are not able to appreciate these things, but many whose feet are familiar with the ground will bear testimony to these claims.

"There are men who could not, with patience, sit through an evening of Wagner; men who do not know one of music's notes from another; and yet, if one doubts that there is music in the hearts of these men, let him, some winter evening, peer through the portals of 'the kingdom,' and he will be given a touch of the soul of music, compared with which the products of 'the harp that once through Tara's halls,' are hardly worthy of mention. Some of these notes may grate harshly upon the ears of the Wagnerian; the disciple of Thomas may imagine that he detects indication of discord; the followers of Beethoven may assert that all is not harmony; but those who, like the Irish lover, are of 'the kingdom,' will be able to grasp the celestial character of the melody. There is real music in the 'patty cake, patty cake' of 'the baker's man'; in the 'trot, trot, trot,' on the journey to 'Banbury Cross'; in the 'hey, diddle, diddle' of 'the cat and the fiddle'; in the 'sing a song of sixpence, a pocket full of rye, four and twenty blackbirds baking in a pie'; or in 'Oner, orry, ickery, Ann; Fillison, Follison, Nicholas, John; Queevey, quavy, English navy, rinktum, tinktum; Buck.'

"The incident of the little child whose heart was 'beatin' hard' for its 'daddy to come home,' reminds us that as the forget-me-nots of the angels, strewn before the footsore man, makes life's pathway easier to tread, these little 'heart beats' make themselves felt over the broad expanse that separated the nursery from the counting room, spur men to greater effort, and inspire them to nobler purpose.

"The man in the Kentucky hemp fields, who had wandered in a maze of doubts and skepticism, was so impressed with his new-found affection for a noble woman that he finally planted his feet firmly upon 'faith's foundation stones' because he conceived that there must be a good God, else there could not be such a holy love. Within the radius of the child's pure affection, within the embrace of the little arms, within the feel of the little 'heart-beats,' there is no room for doubt, there is no place for skepticism. The purity, the love, the faith of 'one of the least of these' points as unmistakably to divine origin as the needle points to the pole.

"Love and faith, and hope and charity, all these, as well as rest and recreation, await those who would make the happy pilgrimage over hallowed ground—in The Kingdom of Never Grow Old."

Suggestions

One good, practical brother who has in the past manifested an active interest in the home makes the following suggestions as a way of raising means for the operation of this institution. It occurs to us to publish this for consideration, and to ask this brother to continue his valuable suggestions, also to ask others to send us suggestions and contributions for the good of the home on the financial and other features of home operation.

Doubtless many of the Saints and friends have thought much on the subject of the home and could help us materially in this way. Send along your ideas on the different phases of home government. We will gladly adopt those which appeal to us as being practicable and beneficial.

"To fast say one meal on the 1st of each month, and one meal on the 15th, or having a stated two days in each month and only fast one meal each of such days, would be good from a physical viewpoint. It would not impoverish anyone financially to give the price of such meal to the Children's Home fund, for they have saved the price in not eating and it goes into the fund, instead of stomach. It would be no sacrifice except to such poor as are underfed, and they need not observe it, and some would give more than the meal price. Then let us estimate the church membership as 70,000. Then to be liberal say that 60,000 will not, or can not observe it. That leaves us 10,000 to pay. Then let us be easy and say meals are only worth ten cents each; that would be $2.40 a year for each of 10,000 or $24,000 a year. Let us cut this in two again and we have $12,000. Would that not put the Home on Easy Street; or the full $24,000 by this slight effort, I would judge, almost support homes for aged and children. I know how hard it is to get people 'lined up' but could this not be done?"

Work for the Young

That the young as well as the old in the Church of Christ may not be laboring under the impression that there is little or nothing to do in this church, or that the work to be done is of a very easy character, it is extremely necessary that all who can read the history of the church as contained in the four volumes of our church history.

Many young persons in the world to-day are growing up with a false idea of life, its duties and responsibilities, and this is largely true of the church. Our young people should learn to work with their own hands in heat or cold, and to delight in the same, as labor is honorable. If boys and girls are used to doing difficult things, their faith in their ability to accomplish such will increase over and above those who never make the effort to thus improve.

If our church goes forward, then, it must be a working church, and it can not work intelligently without reading its own history. In the common schools of our country one object is to make good citizens of the pupils, and the teacher well knows that this can only be done by giving the pupils a thorough knowledge of the United States history. Hence as soon as the pupil is a little advanced in his studies, the history of our country is taken up.

They learn of the hardships in connection with its discovery and settlement. Of its gaining its independence in the Revolutionary War, and maintaining it in the Civil War. Thus a love for our country is naturally and properly instilled into the minds of the pupils. Without this our government would be weak and vacillating, and the chances for its being overcome would be very great indeed.

So it is with the church. Both young and old should know its history from the beginning. In order to avoid the errors of the past we must know how they were brought on, and what an awful apostasy took place after the terrible suffering in Missouri and in Illinois. Yes, we must be up and doing.

The young should read the Juvenile History of the church, and thus all, both old and young, will not only see that there is plenty to do but that God does not give commandments save he prepares a way for us to keep them.

Zion must needs be redeemed by power, and that power comes as a result of intelligence and work consistent with the will of heaven. Her army must become exceedingly great, and her banners terrible.

Awake O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, for surely thy King soon cometh.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

HANDSWORTH, BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, Feb. 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am a young brother trying my best to serve the Lord in an acceptable though obscure manner. I have been reared in the church and have been a member for nine and a half years, or since I was eight years old. It is little wonder that with the example I have had I am enthusiastic with regard to this marvelous work.

I think that though I am only starting my journey and Brother B. V. Springer was closing his, his words will fit my feelings, as I quote them from Church History, volume 4:

"And while I have powers of body and mind, while reason retains her throne, I will by God's help continue to ring into the ears of this generation my testimony of the truth of the gospel as restored in this dispensation; that the divinity of the calling of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon are inseparably connected with the restoration of the gospel, and indispensably necessary to its completeness in the fulfillment of the Scriptures."

I think that in this work we can not do too much. My fellow countrymen are making great sacrifices for their king and country, and I want to be willing to give my life, if need be, for my King, the King of kings, and for the establishment of his kingdom—to be a patriot in the greatest sense. I ask an interest in the prayers of the brothers and sisters to this end.

"More things are wrought by prayer

Than this world dreams of. Therefore let thy voice Rise like a fountain for me night and day."

—Tennyson.

I am proud to be your brother. In gospel bonds,

Editors Herald: When my father and myself came here some two years ago, to our knowledge there was not a Latter Day Saint here. But after a year or so we heard of some Saints living near Sidney. I can assure you it seemed good to know there were Saints living even as close as that, something over fifty miles. I wrote them, and a few days after a brother called on us.

Brother Newby, of Fairview, Montana, came shortly after, and at the end of two weeks preaching baptized three young men, two of them my brothers.

About a year ago my father brought his family here, where the church now have a membership of ten. We have Sunday school and prayer meeting every week. While we are few in number, we realize the Lord has a work for us here, and we are trying to so live that others may be led to the right way.

I enjoy reading the HERALD and Ensign and would feel lost without them. We would be glad to have any of the elders come here, and can assure them of a place to preach and a hearty welcome from the Enid Saints.

Hoping and praying that we may always be found doing our best for the advancement of the gospel, I am,

Your sister,

MRS. BESSIE POOLEY.

LITTLE DEER ISLE, MAINE, February 24, 1915.

Editors Herald: I united with the church eighteen years ago, and have since tried to set a good example before others, that they might know that I am endeavoring in my weak way to be a child of God. Many things have been hard for me to bear, but I took them to the Lord in prayer and have many times been answered. I have never regretted joining this church, and mean to always live faithful to the covenant I have made, and to put my whole trust in him who is my true friend and who will help me through the rough paths of life.

I want to live in this life so that I may receive the crown that is laid up for me if I am faithful. I have enjoyed doing good for God all my life from a child up. Seems to me that I can not do enough for him who has done so much for me. He has kept me from many wrong things. I want to live faithful and walk in the straight and narrow path that leads to the home beyond, not in the path that leads to the prison house. I hope that my record may be a good one. Pray for me.

Your sister,

MARCIA BILLINGS.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD. It strengthens the weak and cheers the isolated Saints. I have been engaged in this work a number of years, and can truly say the Lord has blessed me in many ways.

The time is at hand when every Saint must be up and doing. It is not enough to be a member of this church in name only, or by obeying the first principles of the gospel; we should strive to study the church books and learn all we can of this great and glorious gospel.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be ever found faithful.

Your sister in the gospel,
 Prairie Avenue. MRS. DANIEL T. WILLIAMS, JR.

LIVINGSTON, ALABAMA, February 27, 1915.

Editors Herald: Away from the association of the Saints, I often feel a desire to write to the readers of the HERALD. For three years I have been attending the State Normal School, at Livingston, Alabama. I am very pleasantly situated, but I often wish I could have the companionship of one Saint, especially when I study my Religio and Sunday school lessons. I think our lessons are interesting and helpful.

No one here knows anything about the Reorganized Church, and I have had several pleasant experiences in telling the story to teachers and students. One day I talked with Mr. Brock, the president, for over an hour, and explained to him the difference between us and the Utah people. The lady principal, Miss Norton, came in while we were talking and corroborated what I had said. She told of her visit to Salt Lake City, and how the guide had shown the party the church in which the Reorganization worshiped and had explained to them in much detail the differences between the two. After this talk Mr. Brock gave me permission to stay in my room on Sundays to study the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

I have had also some interesting talks with Mrs. Jones, the history teacher, and Miss Johnson, the English teacher. Mrs. Jones has invited me to call on her mother and sister and tell them about the church, and one of these days I am going to do so.

Sometimes a thought like this is suggested: that the noble men and women of the world may yet teach us the practicality of the gospel. Of course, I know that they can never do it until they accept it; but I am confident that unless the Saint is willing to study and comply with the law as taught in the three standard books, there exists the possibility of the earnest, consecrated, intelligent, and diligent convert to become the leader of the slothful, though they may have been in the church for years. My supreme desire is to rise above a condition of inertness to one of activity with a purpose, and that purpose to live the gospel. It seems to me that if this were the motive of every member enlisted in the army of the Lord, we should soon be prepared for the coming of Christ. But, alas! our inherited and acquired weaknesses hinder us from doing what we ought.

On the fifty-fifth anniversary of the Reorganization conference will convene in a little over a month. As we read the standard books everywhere the thought is paramount that only those filled with love can assist in the work of redemption and receive a celestial reward. I pray that our coming conference may be characterized by the spirit that "loves to learn and learns to love."

If nothing happens I shall graduate from this institution in June. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that my work as a teacher may be done in the spirit of love, humility, and wisdom.

Ever praying for the success of righteousness in all lands,
 I am, your sister in gospel bonds, BERTHA HARPER.

LOXLEY, ALABAMA, February 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: On coming to this place a year ago I became acquainted with some Saints at Robertsedale, about five miles from here. Brother T. J. Booker organized a Sunday school there in September, of which I am now superintendent, having been elected the first of the year. This school has moved along nicely. We expect to make it a number one school before the next district conference convenes. We lack three points yet.

I would like to have attended the district conference convening now at Theodore, Alabama, but could not go this time. I was at the conference last fall at Bay Minette. We have also effected a new opening at Loxley. We were the only Saints here, but we thought there were some honest-hearted people in and around this place, so set to work to see if we could not get a place to preach in and then have an elder come. I asked for the schoolhouse in Loxley and was told that we could have it, so I brought Elder W. G. Sherman home with me from Bay Minette after the conference. But when we got here we were refused the schoolhouse, so he preached a few times at our house to a few interested listeners.

After that I made another effort to get the schoolhouse, and with the help of friends, succeeded. Brother A. E. Warr came and made an opening. Quite a few came out and some were interested. He stayed about two weeks. Shortly after he went our Brother Swen Swenson came and was with us a few days. Brother Warr came again and held a few meetings and baptized a man and his wife. Brother Slover also was with us a few weeks ago and preached a few sermons. Some are interested and a few are near the kingdom.

We have been greatly blessed. I love to work in the Master's cause. I am in the work with my whole soul, and want to be so to the end of life. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints for my companion, my child and myself, that we may continue faithfully. Your brother in bonds,

H. M. AEBLI.

Editors Herald: It may be due to myself and the church that I write explanatory of my inactivity in the missionary line during the past year. I can assure all that it has not been for filthy lucre's sake. I have never felt justified in dividing my time between the work of my calling and other work, while purporting to give my whole time to the work. There is nothing so sacred to me as my calling. I have tried to give my whole time and attention to it. I do not say that I have always succeeded perfectly, in a perfect understanding and performance of duty.

There is something wrong somewhere if an individual who is really giving himself to the work is not provided for according to his needs or the needs of those really dependent upon him. I am not looking back. It is too late after over twenty years of missionary life and labor. It is too late for the church to look back on one who is willing to do all that lies within his power, but no one should be asked or expected to carry temporal and spiritual responsibilities at the same time. If individuals ask it, it is wrong. If the church expects it, it is wrong. "Take no thought for the morrow," the Master said, with reference to temporalities, in instructing his disciples. Some one must do this for them. One who "forsakes all" the temporal part, or should, is looking back, or made to, if required to give attention to that which he has forsaken, or is made in any way responsible for that part.

I hope to do more rather than less missionary work the year to come by reason of not filling out the application blank for a mission. It would depend somewhat upon who ties or unties my hands, or to what extent they are tied or untied. I don't wish to promise more than I can perform, or be in a position to keep some other man out of the field who should be in the field. I would rather come in last than first on the money part, especially if I or mine can't be entitled to it.

I believe my motive is right, or my heart is right, if my head is not. Some one would have to show me, however, that what I have received in harmony with the law is not the law, or that my head is altogether wrong with reference to my duty.

I am willing to take any bishop's interpretation of the temporal law, until, or pending appeal to the quorums, if such appeal is necessary. But law is sometimes one thing, and procedure is another. Perhaps not all our rules will stand the test of law, time and experience. I have a great anxiety to see the temporal law effective and operative, in myself and in my conditions first; in others and in an organized way second. The Bishop has had and should have my support. If there has been any seeming opposition, it has been open and not covert. I am anxious to help the Bishop in his work; the Twelve in theirs; more so as time passes, though it may not always have seemed so.

The thread of life has been nearly snapped with me, at least three times. I would have been willing it should have been, but for some reason it has not been. God knows why. He is responsible. If I live I wish to live for something. If I wait, or tarry, it is with a view to be more fully ready and effective (in doing what I attempt to do) spiritually and otherwise. What I do do, shall be done at a sacrifice, but to sacrifice the gospel or any principle of it in living in order to preach the gospel is another matter.

I have lost no faith in the gospel, or any of its provisions, as measured by the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. I am not ashamed of these standards. They are true and faithful. They demand much. We should demand much of ourselves, and of the church, not allow any repetition of past disaster, or anything like unto it.

"The inhabitants of Zion are to judge all things pertaining to Zion." They should be familiar with the law; should "all know the Lord." I glory in the perfect law. I do not glory in man, or make flesh my arm. I know what I am standing upon, and standing for, and I hope to endure. I never did covenant, and never will to give my unqualified support to man. I am totally disqualified from ever becoming a Utah Mormon. Let others judge themselves as to whether they are rooted and grounded in the faith, and are sending their roots down deep, or whether their dependence is in man, or in the counsel of man to his fellow men.

Every leader and teacher should be respected and regarded so far as he teaches the law—no leader any farther. All that this gospel ever has required of any man is that he follow Christ. This is the dependence and the independence of every member of this church: that that he is privileged to insist upon, according to his responsibilities. There is liberty for every one, but no special license or privileges to anyone in the gospel.

Blessed liberty! blessed gospel! It will do to live by, to stand by and to die by. It is better, the more that it is tested and the greater the strain that is put upon it. No one knows it so well as those who study it and have experience.

There is all encouragement to go on; none to turn back. Count me willing and desirous to go on, and that there is inward development, if lacking or seeming to, a present outward and visible expression of it. I hope to improve along all lines, and to be an incentive to others for improvement.

That the battle of each day must be fought and well fought that day, is one thing I have learned. There is no certainty of another day. Yesterday is past; we have little business with the future, but oh, how precious the present moment and opportunity should be to all, especially to a "minute man." If we could bring more salvation into the now, or truly make, by our attitude, now, the day of salvation, it would be better than to dream too much, or sing too much of the "sweet by and by."

I want to say a word on the church debt. We have recent revelation on it (1913). How much are we benefiting by the counsel of God in regard to sacrifice and unnecessary expenditure? If one is not faithful in small things, or despises the day of small things, what will he do with the great? I wish to speak of small things, or mention them more particularly than great, because I have had no experience with great things of my own in finance. I have handled large amounts, though not my own.

But let us "get right down to brass tacks," as the saying is. Suppose there is an average of but ten cents a week unnecessary expenditure on the part of each member of the church; how much would it mean if sacrificed for the gospel or church's sake, in one year? Five dollars and twenty cents a member, at seventy-three thousand members, would mean three hundred and seventy-nine thousand, six hundred dollars, the wiping out of the church debt, and a full treasury. There is means enough for the college and every institution of the church, but not as much sacrifice as there might be. Consider the mere unnecessary personal gratifications common to men, women and children, that steal the dimes, candy, gum, soft drinks, theaters, picture shows, etc., that come in even with poor people, as a part of their life. Is this eating, drinking, and pleasure, all to the glory of God, and the benefit of his work? Does it reflect and represent Christ? But each one may examine himself or herself as to what is necessary or unnecessary expenditure and what he is willing to sacrifice for something of better quality.

The spirit of sacrifice is more needed, and the gospel tree will bear fruit. No stated amount in terms of dollars and cents can redeem Zion. Your money will never buy it. Mine never will. Real sacrifice will bring God's power that is necessary, be that sacrifice ever so small in amount. The rich man's sacrifice is acceptable. The poor man's is necessary. The poor can find a way if they try, whether the rich do or not. If the rich allow the poor to go beyond them in the matter of sacrifice, there are first that will be last, and last that will be first in the summing up. Justice and equality will not be for ever mocked. Mere profession counts little on the part of anyone.

"Blessed are they that do," and keep doing. My concern is not, or I do not wish it to be, over what I get. I wish to give more along the spiritual line. The more I can give to the work the better it will suit me. I desire the prayers of Saints that the way may be open for me to do all that God or man could require reasonably.

From the standpoint of sight, I might not anticipate or expect much of myself, but we walk by faith, if true Saints, and should "remember faith."

May peace and true prosperity come as a flowing stream to the true Israel, or to all who wait upon and for it. Hoping for a share.

Your brother,

M. F. GOWELL.

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: Not being able to personally answer all the kind and welcomed letters that have been sent me during my severe affliction, I take this method of writing to all at one time, as well as those that are interested in my welfare. I am happy to say that I am slowly improving, and feel that ere long I will be at my normal condition. However, I suffer almost constantly yet, but it is so slight compared to what I have been endeavoring that I don't think much about it.

So far as it is possible for words to express, I want to thank all the Saints and friends who have taken so much interest in me during this trial. It has surely been a comfort to me and my companion, Sister Baker. It has helped us both to be stronger for the conflict, for a conflict it has been.

While I have not assumed responsibility in branch affairs since March 19, it has been a comfort to know that there were brethren and sisters here who were willing to take added responsibility and relieve me. Without desiring to bestow more honor on one than another, I feel it would hardly be just if I did not make mention of the faithful service of Brother J. R. Epperson, he being the presiding priest stepped in and has so nobly filled the place, that at times I was so relieved I felt no thought but that the work would be cared for.

I wish to say here that there are perhaps few that realize what a comfort it is for a presiding officer to feel that when it is necessary he has some one or more that he can depend upon. Neither is the labor of such men and women appreciated as it should be. I fear when it is too late we with regrets will look back and wonder why we were so neglectful.

Dear Saints, I hope we have fully appreciated all your kindness, not only in a spiritual way, but many have helped in a financial way, which was very needful; all were kind to so remember.

The branch here is doing fine. A few weeks ago we owed one thousand dollars on our new church. The committee made a special effort to raise enough to pay all that was due when the time came, and the report came in that we lacked about $450 of having enough to meet the desired end; so the chairman of the committee took charge of the meeting for the time being, and in about thirty minutes we had enough and more.

I tell you everyone felt like shouting for joy and there was one who not only felt that way, but who actually did shout. So now we have our church paid for. The time of the dedication is set for November 14. It is now a question what are we going to do for more room? Our Sunday school is as badly crowded in some departments as they were in the old building. But the room will come, with this people to push it.

With kindly and loving feelings to all, we are yours in the faith,
J. M. AND JENNIE BAKER.

DEFOE, MICHIGAN, March 1, 1915.

Editors Herald: We arrived in Defoe Branch after an absence of about eleven years, and were glad to get back to our home community again. I was baptized here when only eight years of age, by Brother Ben Blackmore, who died a short time ago. We had been living at Trochu, Alberta, miles from any Saints, for about ten years. We were lonesome for the company of Saints. Still God did not forsake us, for we were blessed by his Holy Spirit. We did all the good we could by talking and giving out tracts, also church papers after we had read them. Good was done. The young man who afterwards became my husband joined the church and is still striving to do his duty.

In the fall of 1913 we moved to the city of Calgary, where we found many good Saints and had many enjoyable times. The next spring we came here and hope to make this place our home until it is time for us to remove to Zion.

We long for the day when Zion will be redeemed and all the Saints will be able to dwell in peace and happiness together. We are surely living in the last days, when peace shall be taken from the earth. There are many signs to show us the end is near. May we be prepared to meet our Savior.

The Saints here are not many in number but are strong in spirit. We have had considerable preaching and have the people stirred up. I believe quite a number will soon be added to our branch. We want to start a Sunday school when warmer weather comes, also preaching services. During cold weather we thought best to close until spring. We have prayer meetings from house to house, and have kept them going all winter.

I would like the addresses of Sister Smith and Sister Petit, both of Calgary, also of a brother in West Plain, Missouri, whose name we have forgotten, who was corresponding with my husband, J. H. Thomas. The addresses of these people were lost in moving.

Would some of the elders who are preaching in Wales, please call on my husband's sister, Miss Jennie Thomas, living with her father and mother? The name of their house is Pantaglass, post office, Manordilo County, Carmshire, South Wales, name of station, Glanshyd, on the Great Western Railroad. She lives just a little way from the station. My husband and I have been sending her tracts and church papers. We also sent her the Two-Story Book. She seems to be interested in our faith. She says she has not heard anything about any Saints, so I think there will be work there for an elder. Anyone going there can say her brother asked him to go, and we know he will be welcome.

May God bless all the Saints is my prayer.

In gospel bonds,

VIOLET THOMAS.

MARLIN, TEXAS, March 3, 1915.

Editors Herald: As a band of Saints we are trying to let our light shine as best we can. We have no house of worship of our own. We hold our meetings in private houses. This, the Philadelphia Branch, was organized in 1897 with a membership of about twenty-six; we have a present membership of sixty-seven. None of the members owned their own homes until 1914, when the writer baptized two sisters who have homes. As a branch we have passed through some very sore trials to keep the banner flying.

The writer attended the district conference last July. The Lord was with us by his Spirit, and we were made to know that he was going to move the stumblingstones out of the way and that his work should go on. We were made to rejoice to know that the Lord was with us in such power. We know that the Lord is very kind in his promises to the children of men.

I have just returned from the district conference which convened at Cookes Point, Texas, February 28. The gathering was a success. The Saints were built up in the Lord's work. Some stated that they were glad to see the work taking on new life. We trust we may so live and conduct ourselves that we may have God's Spirit to lead us on to victory.

The writer visited the city of Dallas where there is a number of Saints. I have two sisters there. The Lord seems to have blessed them. They have a house of their own to worship in, one which a widow gave them. We see in Dallas a fulfillment of prophecies uttered concerning the work there fifteen years ago. Our faith grows stronger when these things come to pass.

Let us all live faithful to the Lord.

Your brother,

B. F. SPICER.

NORTH FORT WORTH, TEXAS, March 3, 1915.

Editors Herald: Since being isolated from the privileges and blessings of a branch, I begin to realize something of the value of the letter column of the HERALD, which I have never before appreciated. I am desirous of getting in touch with any Saints who may be living in or near Fort Worth. If there are any will they please drop us a line?

As a family we are doing nicely, and are thankful for the many blessings God has bestowed upon us; but we sorely miss the true friendships we have left behind. I say friendships because I do not feel that in leaving the branch we have left God and the rights and privileges of worshipping him in spirit and truth. These are still ours, but the fellowship of our brothers and sisters is missing, it is that fellowship and the good which may come from combined effort which we are seeking in our new home.

With prayers for the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom everywhere, I am,
Your sister,
1408 Homan Avenue. MRS. J. E. THOMAN.

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, March 5, 1915.

Editors Herald: There is no branch at this place. There are a few Saints here trying to hold up the gospel banner. We have started a prayer meeting and are doing the best we can. We enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD, and rejoice to know that God blesses his people everywhere. The Lord has blessed us far more than we deserve.

We had the privilege of hearing Brother W. W. Chrestensen eight nights while he was with us. We can say that he is one of God's chosen ones to proclaim the angel message. Although the weather was bad and the crowd was not as large as it otherwise would have been, there was a good interest. Brother Chrestensen went from here to Sapulpa to hold meetings.

Praying for the spirit of the gospel, I am,
Sincerely yours,
A MEMBER.

FORT DODGE, IOWA, March 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: In looking over the HERALD I noticed the request for prayers from a sister of Fort Dodge, Iowa, asking the efforts of the prayer union in behalf of her daughter. We notice there was mention made of there being no elder in Fort Dodge. We wish to let our brothers and sisters know our whereabouts. We live in the little town of Coalfield, seven miles south of Fort Dodge, our address being Fort Dodge, Route 5. We have sympathy for Saints who are isolated from branch privileges. In sickness and times of distress they are without the strengthening help of the elders. We have seen the power of God made manifest in behalf of our loved ones, for which we are thankful.

We have had Brother D. R. Chambers with us for the past week, preaching each evening. At our sacrament meeting Sunday morning, Brother Chambers spoke in prophecy, encouraging to the Saints. We remember the missionaries who have labored here at various times, and who have blessed our lives by their good counsel. We especially remember our afflicted Brother Romanan Wight, of whom and his counsel sweet memories still linger.

Our prayers have gone up to God in thanks for the blessings which we have received since embracing the gospel. My life has been spared by the power of God, and I feel like I want to do all I can in the accomplishment of his work and in the ushering in of that great day when peace and righteousness shall reign supreme.

Your brother in bonds,
RICHARD JORDISON.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, March 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: Will some Saint or Saints living in Providence, Rhode Island, furnish me their address? My father was born in Providence in 1812. I have relatives living there, and I would like to know if any of them are members of the church. My uncle's name is Wade, or some of my cousins living there are of that name. My Grandmother Wade was a niece of Roger Williams. Her maiden name was Ruth Williams. I am the only one of my father's family belonging to the church. I am anxious to have my family hear and obey the gospel.

I praise God I was brought to see this glorious light. It was through the preaching of Brother John H. Lake that I was brought to a knowledge of the true gospel. I hope and pray that I may live so as to receive as sure a reward as I feel Brother Lake has. I was baptized into the church by Brother Frank Reynolds, long deceased, April 9, 1876, at Harlan, Iowa, and have had many testimonies of its truthfulness. I know this is the only true church on earth today.

I am trying to let my light so shine that I will not bring any reproach on the cause. I ask the Saints to pray for me, that if it is God's will I may be healed of sore affliction. I am one of the isolated Saints.

Yours for the welfare of Zion,
829 H Avenue West. MRS. G. L. GOREHAM.

CORBETTSVILLE, NEW YORK, March 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD very much. I wish to contribute my testimony to the truthfulness of the work, and to our heavenly Father's care over the Saints. I believe this work is of God. I am one of the isolated ones, a member of the Niagara Falls Branch.

I was baptized by Elder William Place eleven years ago. Nine years ago next June, I was married and went to Lansville, Pennsylvania, to live, where we remained two years, and then moved to Corbettsville, New York, where we have since resided. I miss the fellowship of the Saints. My husband is not in the Reorganized Church, but I hope he will be some day. I am the only Saint at this place.

We have a Presbyterian Church in our community, and they think they are the only ones who have a right to preach here. But our Brother A. E. Stone has been here two different times and preached at our house. The people showed very little interest, although a few came to hear him. I am still hoping that the people will receive the angel message in the near future.

My husband's brother is a firm believer in the work of Pastor Russell.

It is my desire to serve my Lord with all my heart, might, mind and strength, and to do what I can to show others the true church. It seems to me that one of the greatest things in this world is to be a Saint of latter days, and I seem to feel God's Spirit near me. I can hardly contain the blessings that come to me from day to day. I ask an interest in the prayers of all that I may have faith to the end.

Your sister,
MRS. C. E. DEAN.

DOVER, NEW HAMPSHIRE, March 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: With the coming of another spring my mind goes back to the springtime of twenty-two years ago, when I went forth at the command of God in obedience to the gospel. For several months I had been reading Zion's Ensign and looking up all the Bible references given, thinking perhaps I might find something I could condemn. The farther I looked the more I was convinced that the work was of God. There was ever with me a still, small voice saying, "This is my gospel; go forth and obey and you and your family shall be saved." I desired more light and felt I was not quite ready to accept, although I was a praying woman. From my earliest recollections I believed in going to God in prayer in sickness, sorrow, or any kind of distress. How sweet it is to trust in Jesus and take him at his word. I never belonged to any church until I joined the Reorganized Church.

I was raised in the Methodist Church. When fifteen years of age there was a great revival in our community, and the members wanted me to join. My father said if I wished to do so I could, but he suggested that I be sure that I understood the step to be taken. I replied that I did not wish to join the church, that they did not have the gifts as promised in the Bible, and which Christ said should follow the true believer. My father asked if I believed there was a church on earth that had these gifts. I said I never would join any until I found one that did.

I did not know of this church until I was twenty-eight years old. I then lived by my sister, Rose M. Somerfield. She being a member, persuaded me to read about the church, and it was given me through the Spirit that this is the true gospel of Christ. I thought to wait and accept the truth at some future day. I remembered however, that I had said I would join the true church if I could find it, so one morning, after constant prayer, asking God to show me the way plainly so I would not make any mistake, my petitions were answered, and in a vision I was shown by the Father and the Son that the work was divine.

No power of earth has been able to shake my belief since that time.

Extracts from Letters

Elder John Jones writes from Australia in a report to F. M. Smith, as follows: "I am to take my first turn with the new gospel wagon. I expect it up by train any day from Sydney, and then with a fine young man, Brother C. Argent, we are to take the road (I should have said the bush) and try to break up new ground—present the gospel in every home in the isolated districts where the gospel has not been presented. We are to drive two horses and cook our own food and make our own damper (perhaps this term will beat you), and deliver tracts at every home we come to. We are full of hope and expect by being humble and full of love to so labor that God, our God, will assist us to become a blessing to many. We weigh about four hundred pounds between the two of us, so we should at least carry some weight. Look here. I don't know what is to stop you from taking a run over here when you have things working well at home (you will notice that we Saints, no matter where we dwell, look across the sea to the land of America as our home), and have a look at our fair land and by your presence and counsel assist the work. I have looked for the time when you shall land on our shores, and would like the job of traveling around up the north coast with you. You ask Gomer T. Griffiths and he will tell you that I know the road, and can make egg flip, and will see that you do your share of the work every time. The outlook for the work in this State never was so good. I have just sent my oldest son out in the field. He is to labor in Queensland. He left Saturday. May God bless him, and he become a power for good in the services of the Master. I have others yet who will be heard declaring the glorious gospel. The wagon cost us about fifty-five pounds with the fittings. I will put two horses on it for six months and then some other brother will do the same. I have collected thirty-three pounds, four shillings already for it, and will have it all paid for very shortly. The wagon was to be here a few weeks ago. Nothing like moving, if you don't the grass grows out here not only under your feet but right over you."

Australia

[The following letter to Brother Robert M. Elvin, secretary of the Quorum of High Priests, and furnished by Brother Elvin for publication, will be of interest as referring to the church work in Australia.—EDITORS.]

Knorret Flat, Upper Manning, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA, February 10, 1915.

Robert M. Elvin,

Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother Robert: It is with feelings of thankfulness that I address you, for are we not coworkers in this great latter-day work? I have been connected with a lodge (at one time) that is understood by the world to be a strong tie, a tie that binds amid all sorrows and difficulties; but I know of no tie that binds like the tie of the gospel, and although land and sea divide, yet that love, the love that comes through the gospel, can bridge the deepest gulf and rise over the storm-tossed sea, no matter what the distance that may be between.

I would like to be with you, with the quorum, in your business meetings, and gain that knowledge that can be obtained by meeting en masse; but I must remain under the southern cross until that time shall come when we shall gather home, home to Zion, beautiful Zion. Our hearts turn to the "Land shadowing with wings" whenever we think of our bright home, where we shall gather with the pure in heart and meet the pure; the tried and the true.

I am an Australian, born of Welch parents, but I think of the land promised by God for the home of his Saints, when sin shall be no more, when the sound of war shall not be heard for one thousand years. What a grand old world it will be then. The work of God never looked so promising as at the present. There never was a time in the history of the church in this land when the members were prepared to do more for its advancement than the present.

The young men are advancing shoulder to shoulder, marching forward fighting the good fight of faith. The sisters are also doing all in their power to assist the good work on. Many young men have been ordained and are moving out. Brother Gomer T. Griffiths' visit has done much good, especially in encouraging the young, and with the assurance that God is with them there is no power that can stay the advancement of this marvelous work and a wonder. My oldest son is laboring in Queensland.

This is his first appointment. May God bless and comfort his people. I ask the prayers of the quorum that I may be blessed and so assisted by the Holy Spirit that I may have strength given to enable me to overcome every sin that causes me to stumble, and that I may become strong in the strength of the eternal, and be able to do much for the advancement of the cause we love, have more love for the sons of men and be able to build up the work of God in accordance with the will of our Father in heaven.

Dear Brother Butterworth did a good work here, and so have many who have labored here in years gone by. May God's blessing rest on all his children, and the work advance more and more in the remaining years. May the angels of God encamp around us, watching over us by day and by night, and no power be able to snatch God's people from the path that leads to eternal bliss. And at last amid the tried, the pure and the true, may we hear the welcome home, and the words of praise, "Well done," is my prayer.

Your brother and friend,

JOHN JONES.

South Sea Islands

This being the first day of conference in America, our minds are made to wander across the Great Deep to the body of God's people assembled in Lamoni for the purpose of transacting business for the Great King, our Lord. We must confess that we would appreciate the privilege of participating in the good things received there, but in answer to the summons of the One who has called us to labor for him, we willingly forsake our own desires and seek to build up the kingdom of righteousness among this people.

Although six thousand miles lie between us, there is that same Spirit here that is found there, which seems to shorten the distance and causes us to know that God is not the God of America only, but also of the smallest island of the sea. How great the cause for rejoicing when we think of the divers means of salvation (so called) extant in the world, yet amid them all there has sprung up by the power of God the well of life anew, by which we are privileged to again drink freely of the refreshing waters of revealed knowledge. And to-day our praise ascends to our Father in heaven to know that another year has rolled around, and that still there is a people desirous of meeting in conference capacity in the transaction of the business of his church and kingdom.

There will be no conference here in this mission this year, owing to conditions which render it unwise to so do, but we hope to be ready for one this coming year. Although the natives have not assembled in conference this April, many of them congregated in their own islands to-day and spent the day in prayer and song service, especially petitioning the Lord to meet with the conference in America in all its undertakings.

This morning about 7 o'clock we were greeted from nearly every corner of Tarona by the usual native salutation "Ia ora na oe," and upon our looking over the grounds, we could see the Saints from Tiona and Heberona gathering according to previous arrangement to the church, where at 8 o'clock a prayer service was held. This meeting was one that caused us to rejoice that we were Latter Day Saints, because of the earnestness of the native Saints that was manifested in this service in prayer. I am sure that if our brethren in the States could have heard their earnest petitions to the Lord seeking for the blessing of his Spirit to abide with the Saints in conference in the States, they would have rejoiced with us.

Their prayers were especially impressive in behalf of the one who is to be chosen by the body according to revelation to succeed his father in the presidential chair of the church. Their confidence is unshaken in him, and they look upon it as a matter of law and justice according to the ancient blessing pronounced upon the patriarch of old as well as upon the prophet of the latter days. The natives are firmly grounded in the law of succession, and refute all the attempts of the Utah Church to establish their unlawful claims. In some of the discussions held here to-day, you would have been convinced of that, had you heard the wide-awake and pointed arguments in behalf of the Reorganization. Rest assured that the Island Mission remembers those of God's people in the States.

Brother J. Charles May and family left us February 13 for their home-land, after nearly six years of valiant service in this mission—a privilege they well deserved. This leaves us, Brother and Sister Christensen, my companion and I, alone in the mission so far as human aid of a foreign missionary is concerned. But we have found that divine aid has been bountifully bestowed when the proper presentation of ourselves has been made. We are endeavoring to do all in our power toward the furtherance of the Master's work, and from all news from the other islands the future looks bright for this mission. To help us we have some noble native brethren in the eldership occupying as missionaries, and who are among the brightest of our membership in these islands, who are humble and sense deeply the sacredness of the cause they are representing.

We are convinced more than ever that there is a power within this work that will unite the sin-stained soul of the farthest clime to the cradle-taught child of the homeland to the gospel of the Son of God, if taught and wielded by the wisdom of heaven. Many times in our labors here our hearts' desires are increased to assist Israel's wandering sons to return to the promised land. And through our labors we are endeavoring to implant within them the desire to supplant lust with all of its attendant evils by the engraftment of the virtues of the holy law. Some seem to be very slow in realizing the need of this important work, but gradually it moves on, and we hope to realize the fruit of our labors at some future time.

The labors of the former missionaries stand out as living epistles to these Saints, and occasionally we hear of something they taught or experienced in this mission, revealing very forcibly to our minds the need of being united in all our teachings, as those sent here are looked upon by the natives as being lights to lead them from the dark and loathsome sins they have become engrossed in.

We are convinced that the many prophecies of old are now having their fulfillment in the devastating scourges that are abroad in the land. Who dare say with the knowledge of a common observer that we are not nearing the crest of the history of this old world? Men and women, yes, children! are being slaughtered by shot and shell; nations are being torn by the frequent eruption of revolution; lands are shattered by the fearful power of the earth's deadly quakings; men and women everywhere are writhing under the awful realization that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Yes, this is the day spoken of by those of old, when the hand of the oppressor would wield his satanic influence among and over those under his grasp; the day when the coffers of the rich would be filled to overflowing, bringing discomfort and misery, even death the result of starvation in many instances, and in other instances labor struggles, brought on by the monopolization by the few, to those who are so unmercifully oppressed.

Notwithstanding all this that comes before us as a picture with vividness of no uncertainty, there shines a light of no human origin, bringing conviction to our minds that there is still a God, and after man has fully wrought his unrighteous aim, he (God) will to the joy of the oppressed give liberation through the infinite power of a Zion's redemption. Hope still lingers in the breast of the faithful. How welcome the day when all bloody conflicts for the mastery of worldly possessions will be supplanted by the joy and peace that can alone come from the Great King. We will hail that day with the joy of captives liberated from bondage. The great question before us is, "Who will abide that day." And can we now say, "Come, Lord Jesus, come."

We are all contented and happy in our labors in these parts, and trust that the peace of heaven is abiding in the land of Zion. Hoping for a prosperous year in all departments in the cause of Christ, I remain,

Your brother and colaborer in a grand cause,

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, April 6, 1915.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints and Friends of the Portland, Oregon, District; Greeting: I left home April 1 to attend General Conference, and visit Independence, the home of the Saints. Since coming here the language of the Savior has come forcibly to my mind, wherein he says, Zion has been established never to be moved out of her place. The Saints are fast moving into the stakes now organized. I have found good, kind-hearted people here, and especially those who have been set apart to preside over the Independence Branch and Stake; also our good Bishop E. L. Kelley and his staff.

They need our financial support; at least we want to relieve them of the care and responsibility of our part of the vineyard. I just received a letter from my wife stating she was forty-five dollars behind this month in making up the allowance. I hope and pray that when this appeal reaches the members of our district that all will cheerfully respond, so we will be able to meet our obligations.

Address L. Stover, 406 West Twenty-first Street, Vancouver, Washington, Bishop's agent Portland District, and get receipt.

Pastoral

To the Saints in Oklahoma and Panhandle of Texas; Greeting: The past fifteen years of labor has endeared you to me as Saints; and I desire to have the same good will and co-operation in our work we have had in the past. Please do not challenge others for debates, or sign propositions for same; refer such matters to those in charge. We expect to hold three reunions this summer, one at Eagle City some time in July, watch for the notice; one at Freedom, or near Woodward, as we can get the Saints to agree upon that; the other in the Central District, which will be advertised soon.

As bishop's counselor and bishop's agent, I wish to thank you for the free-will offerings you have given in the past, and trust you will all feel a desire to help in the work of the Lord. As coworkers we should do our part.

My home address will be Lamoni, Iowa, and a letter sent there will soon reach me. I will aim to be in the field and keep in touch with the Saints. As the assistant minister in charge, I will visit you and oversee the work.

Your brother and coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

KINGFISHER, OKLAHOMA, Mission address.

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern Ohio District; Greeting: Having been requested by the general minister in charge, Brother G. T. Griffiths, to take oversight of the missionary work of the above-named district, we wish to ask the most earnest cooperation of all who are interested in the extension of the gospel message. We will be glad to hear from you relative to the needs and prospects of the work in various localities, and will respond as promptly as possible. My field address will be Creola, Ohio, or I may be reached by writing me at my home address, Holden, Missouri.

We are now ready to go to the field, and ere you read this, the Lord willing, we will be in the district, and at work.

In gospel bonds,
H. E. MOLER.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, May 8, 1915.

To the Saints and Friends of Toronto District, Ontario; Greeting: Another conference year, with its possibilities, is before us. Who will help roll on the great work of the Lord entrusted to our care?

The powers that be have returned me to the Toronto District, and I have been placed as assistant minister in charge. I trust I may be able to help advance the "latter-day work" among you. All who love the cause of truth are invited to assist in the work of the Master.

In order to work more systematically, we have divided the district into sections, and have assigned one part to each missionary. Brother R. T. Brown will labor on Manitoulin Island and at the Soo during the summer, as mentioned by Brother Curtis.

Brother S. G. St. John, the counties of York, Simcoe, Muskoka District, and as far east as he can work the territory thoroughly.

James Pycock, the counties of Peel, Halton, Wentworth, Lincoln, Welland and that part of Haldimand County included in the Toronto District.

Henry Ribbel, the territory lying north of the Muskoka District.

Philemon Pement, when laboring in the Toronto District, the territory lying near to Ottawa.

John Shields, as evangelical minister, assisting wherever opportunity presents.

I will look after the interests of the work in Bruce, Grey, Wellington and Dufferin counties.

Dear brethren, let us work for the Master the coming year with a zeal that knows no bounds; but let that zeal be seasoned with wisdom. I hope we may be able to labor together in unity and love, without jealousy or friction. I hope the Saints will assist the missionaries in getting new openings, and in every legitimate way possible.

I will be in the district some time between the first and middle of June. My home address is South Boardman, Michigan, box 45; mission address, South Arthur, Ontario, care William Goulding, Route 2.

Trusting that we may be able to do you good, and advance the work entrusted to our care, I remain,

Your colaborer,

W. D. ELLIS.

If 100 missionaries will send us an order for 500 letter heads each, we can print and deliver the 500 for $1.50. Should the nomination be approved by General Conference, we pray that he may long be spared to guide us, and that under that guidance the church may go forward to still greater efforts, and still greater triumphs in the cause of the Master.

June Century

The June Century, it is announced, will contain an article on "Bulgaria's dream of empire" by T. Lothrop Stoddard. Opening, it is said, with a denial of the common belief that Bulgaria was crushed in the second Balkan war, it will point out how her will to empire, derived from memories of Bulgar domination in the Middle Ages, has been enormously accelerated since 1908, when the Turkish yoke was thrown off and the king proclaimed himself Czar. The article, it is stated, will show why Bulgaria's dream of establishing her imperial throne at Constantinople prevents her from tolerating a Balkan equilibrium, and how unless Macedonia is conceded to her, her lot will be against the allies in the present war. Even more interesting than the discussion of the political question involved, it is said, will be the analysis of the thrifty, capable Bulgarian people, owing to whom the country has made in the last generation astounding strides forward. Some very unusual photographs are promised with the article. "Man has evolved to the point where a new vision of the spirit is possible," is said to be the keynote of "A new note in art," by Ada Rainey. The article is stated to be a discussion of the modern idea of art as decoration and to be devoted to contemporary, and especially American, sculptors. Manship, Fry, MacNeil, Young, Arthur Lee, and G. Borgdum are said to be some of the latter. "The American merchant marine" is the subject of an article by John H. Thomas. Its immediate occasion is the failure of the Ship Purchase Bill to pass the Senate; its wider application springs from the readjustment of commerce as affected by the war. The author is said to assert most plausibly that subsidies do not accelerate shipping and seafaring and that far more important for this end, and especially for our own merchant marine, would be the repeal of restrictive legislation. "Free ships," allowed to have Oriental crews for Oriental trade and not discriminated against even when foreign-built, is said to be the author's solution. The article is stated to contain a most interesting account of the merchant marine of the various European countries.

May North American

The May number of The North American Review is the one hundredth anniversary issue of this great periodical, and the table of contents it offers is one worthy of such an occasion. The editor, Colonel George Harvey, presents the first complete exposition of President Wilson's neutrality in the form of a reply to Mr. Roosevelt under the title "The Government and the war." Among other topics that he considers editorially are "Responses from England," "The senator and the Kaiser," and "The failure of the raiders," including a page or two of comment. The war is touched upon in numerous articles, notably an able paper by William Dean Howells, entitled "Why?" And again in a well-considered essay by Norman Angell on "The Neutralization of the sea." Another

English writer, Francis Aldridge, turns the reader's attention to "The new menace in the Far East," and Lady Henry Somerset writes of how knowledge of the war came to Devon folk "At the back of the hills." President Hibben of Princeton University appeals for "The higher patriotism," and John Galsworthy has a brilliant analysis of his countrymen in "Diagnosis of the Englishman." The United States Minister to China, Paul S. Reinsch, writes informingly on "American intellectual life," and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge contributes reminiscences of his editorial days on the Review, under the caption, "This review: a reminiscence." Arthur Symons, the gifted English essayist, has a short paper on his personal recollection of "Paul Verlaine," and Lawrence Gilman writes the review of the book of the month. The number has more verse than usual, leading off with a poem of first importance, by Alfred Noyes—"The lord of misrule." Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer reflects America's position in the great war in "With malice toward none," and Joseph S. Auerbach has a poem on "The battle of Neuve Chapelle"; while Robert Underwood Johnson writes of "The corridors of Congress revisited in vacation."

DOMESTIC FELICITY UNDER POLYGAMY

ELBERT HUBBARD VERSUS BRIGHAM YOUNG

Some weeks ago the brilliant though rather eccentric Elbert Hubbard, editor of the Philistine, known as "the seer of East Aurora," expressed himself quite freely on the subject of polygamy. His rather glowing indorsement of the system might induce severe criticism; but in view of his tragic and apparently untimely end in the disaster that overwhelmed the Lusitania, unkindly criticism is disarmed. In the New York American, for April 24, he wrote:

Plural wives were happy wives. The disciples of Brigham Young did not depress and repress their women. Life was free, joyous, and filled with religious zeal and hard work. Success crowned their efforts, and the earth laughed a harvest.

Wealth followed, as it always does when men, women and children work together—work in joy, work intelligently, and are animated by a mutual desire and ambition.

We must judge things by results. "By their fruits shall we know them."

With the second and third generation, the refining of sentiment and the advent of art, polygamy was gradually sloughed, and monogamy becomes the rule—all this in response to natural law.

At the last, people can not be governed by legislation. In order to succeed, legislation must be in line with the ebb and flow of the tides of the human heart.

Nothing more cruel, wicked, bitter and unreasonable was ever attempted than the enforcement of the Edmunds law.

It was a New England idea, devised by the New England conscience for New England conditions, but transferred to a people living under totally different conditions from those which existed in New England. This wise men now fully know, realize and understand.

The patience that the Mormon people have shown has been one of their chief claims to the respect of the world. . . .

In the days of polygamy no woman was tyrannized over by a man. There were no heart-broken women, no suicides, no outcasts, no insanity.

Mormon women, from the time they reached the Salt Lake Valley, were economically free.

These Mormon women had big families. They brought their children up to work, to be useful. They lived close to the soil. They moved in line with nature. They had a firm hold on the few virtues for which civilization has never found a substitute.

They were industrious, economical, temperate, honest. These virtues still abide. In Utah they are the rule, not the exception.

Though in general accord on the merits of polygamy, Brigham Young and Elbert Hubbard are far apart in their testimony as to the degree of domestic felicity actually enjoyed under such a regime.

It will be agreed that as witnesses Brigham Young and his associates were better informed than Hubbard. They tested and observed the workings of the system in its heyday (and no one will argue that they failed to give it a thorough trial); while Elbert Hubbard in that particular at best must speak as an apostle born out of due season.

Four years after polygamy was formally adopted by the church in Utah, domestic affairs reached such a state that Brigham Young publicly threatened to divorce every wife in the Territory. He said:

Men will say, "My wife, THOUGH A MOST EXCELLENT WOMAN, has not seen a happy day SINCE I TOOK MY SECOND WIFE;" "No, not a happy day FOR A YEAR," says one; and another has not seen a happy day for FIVE YEARS. . . . I am going to give you from this time to the 6th day of October next, for reflection, that you may determine whether you wish to stay with your husbands or not, and then I am going to set every woman at liberty. . . . And my wives have got to do one of two things; either round up their shoulders to endure the afflictions of this world and LIVE THEIR RELIGION, or they may leave, for I will not have them about me. I WILL GO INTO HEAVEN ALONE, rather than have SCRATCHING AND FIGHTING AROUND ME."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pp. 55-57.

Brigham Young did not exaggerate the situation. His associate, President J. M. Grant, in a sermon in Salt Lake City, September 21, 1856, declared:

If they could break asunder the CABLE of the Church of Christ, THERE IS SCARCELY A MOTHER IN ISRAEL but would do it this day. And they talk it to their husbands, to their daughters, to their neighbors, and say they have not seen a week's happiness since they became acquainted with THAT LAW, or since their husbands took a second wife.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 50.

In all Utah there was scarcely one mother that would not have broken the polygamous yoke and destroyed the doctrine if she could have done it. But they could not. And when some of them began to dream of the rights of a true wife under gospel law, Brigham Young's other counselor, President Heber C. Kimball, in a sermon in which profanity jostled piety, declared:

It is the duty of a woman to be obedient to her husband, and unless she is, I would not give a damn for all her queenly right and authority.—Sermon of November 9, 1856, Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 82.

Let us see: Hubbard says that plural wives were happy wives,—that there were no heartbroken women in Utah, all were joyous and free.

But Brigham Young tells us that many a woman in Utah never saw a happy day after other women entered the home and divided the affections of her husband. President Grant says that there was scarcely a mother in Israel who would not have broken the horrid chain, could she have done so.

But they were powerless.

Why powerless? Hubbard says that the disciples of Brigham Young did not depress or repress their women; that no woman was tyrannized over in Utah.

But President Grant says that they were powerless, and President Kimball says Mormon women were expected to obey their husbands implicitly; and the dear old man adds (in his mild and reverent way) that if they did not their authority and rights were not worth a "damn." He was there and he knew. He knew just what a woman's rights were worth in Utah in the days of Brigham Young. He didn't bid high (he refused to "give a damn") but he was a good judge, and no one in his day overbid him.

Hubbard draws a roseate picture of the joyousness of life in "plural" homes. We can almost imagine we hear a chuckle emanating from the doleful tomb where Brigham Young reposes. He remembers well the day when driven to desperation by unending quarrels in his own home he publicly threatened to cast off every one of his wives and go to heaven alone.

We will not say whether he is laughing at the way in which the Salt Lake Bureau of Misinformation fooled Elbert Hubbard, or at his own rare joke about going to heaven,—probably both.

OF INTEREST TO THE ELDERS

[Editor's Note: Our comment in the editorial of the HERALD for April 28 on the lectures delivered at the late General Conference has drawn forth a suggestion from Brother S. A. Burgess, who delivered the lectures on "The history of philosophy." This letter is of such interest to the elders that we herewith publish it in part.]

Dear Brother Elbert: I was very much interested to see your editorial in the HERALD of April 28.

One feature that I would especially like to emphasize is in regard to the lectures during conference. Certainly there is no disposition to criticize our brethren, and especially those who have not had an opportunity. The purpose is to have those who have had the opportunity extend that benefit to others. I do not think it would be advantageous for each and every one of our men to study ALL of these subjects, but each one should study something. The intention was to point out the importance of some of us having a knowledge of these things, and then we want to share that knowledge with others of our brethren, when the need arises.

This matter of books is an important one. I had been thinking about it towards the close of the lectures, and would like to see you emphasize it in an editorial. It is not advisable that all of our men go off and buy the same book. For example, here Floyd M. McDowell, R. S. Salyards, and the undersigned have each a copy of Weber's History of Philosophy. In Independence John Rushton has a copy, and so has Hale W. Smith. In Philadelphia Walter Smith has a copy, and so it goes. Now I have not bought half or one third of the books I have studied. I have used the public libraries and have borrowed books from my brethren. It would be decidedly a mistake for us to go and buy a large number of volumes more than is really needed.

Several have spoken to me about Hibbert's Journal. I have a file of Hibbert's Journal, of the American Economic Review, of the American Journal of Sociology, The Classical Journal, The Journal of Philology, besides others. I have loaned my Hibbert's Journal to others. In fact, there are four different families who are now using it. Fred M. also receives all of these publications. We should use some economy in making our purchases. I doubt if I have purchased one tenth in the cost of books in which I have read and studied in philosophy and comparative religion. Wisdom should be used in all things.

Now it is for this purpose that the Extension Institute has been organized, so that those who have had an opportunity to find out what is worth while may help the rest of us, in what to read and what to ask for in a public library. At the late General Conference a committee was appointed, consisting of J. W. Rushton, W. W. Smith and C. B. Woodstock to take into consideration the advisability of purchasing books for use in the Institute, as a traveling library to be loaned to our brethren. I think you can see that it would be very unwise for all of us to go and purchase exactly the same books and have so much of the church capital thus tied up.

I am sincerely in hopes that these various movements will prove successful in real helpfulness to our men and at a minimum of expense, and I am sure that you and Fred M. agree with this point.

Very sincerely yours,

S. A. BURGESS.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—A quarrel between Zapata generals in Mexico City led to fighting on the 9th when fifty were killed. Hostilities between advance Villa and Obregon forces in Central Mexico have been resumed. General Carranza says he desires to remove the impression that the Constitutionalists are antagonistic to foreigners and foreign capital.

PUBLIC BIBLE READING.—The New York Senate recently defeated a bill to compel Bible reading in the public schools. A similar measure passed the New Jersey House but has not passed the Senate.

BAR LIQUOR ADS.—The Alabama Supreme Court on the 13th upheld a law which bars liquor advertisements from all newspapers in the State, and prohibits circulation of outside papers carrying liquor advertisements.

BONUS DISTRIBUTION.—Officials of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company announce that on June 12 a bonus of five thousand dollars will be distributed among the ten thousand employees of the company and its subsidiaries. Owing to the depression of September, 1914, wages were cut, and with the improved conditions in the copper mining industry the company wishes to share its prosperity with its men by paying them what they lost by the reduction of wages during the months of depression.

CHINA AND JAPAN.—China has yielded to the ultimatum of Japan, and plenipotentiaries of the two countries are engaged upon a treaty to cover agreements between them. The press announces that China is to transfer to the Japanese Government all rights formerly held by Germany in Shantung; build a railroad to connect with the Kio-Chau road; open treaty ports in Shantung; lease land in southern Manchuria to Japan for trading, industrial and agricultural purposes; submit Japanese in Manchuria to only such police and taxation regulations as approved by Japan; civil and criminal cases to be tried by joint Chinese and Japanese authorities; allow Japan an option on Chinese loans; undertake no military or naval preparations nor allow foreigners to undertake any on the Chinese coast in the vicinity of the Japanese island of Formosa.

GERMAN NOTE.—In a note to the United States, and referring to recent acts by German submarines and air craft, Germany states that she has no intention of causing attacks by submarines or air craft on neutral ships in the "war zone"; that definite instructions have been repeatedly issued to German vessels to avoid attack on such vessels; that even when such vessels have contraband on board they are dealt with according to international law; that should a neutral ship come to harm unavoidably, the German Government would express regret and afford damages without prize court action; and that in case of difference the German Government would allow the matter to go before an international investigation commission, according to the Hague Convention for the peaceful conciliation of international disputes.

LUSITANIA INCIDENT.—Of two thousand, sixty-seven persons aboard the Lusitania, which was sunk on the 7th by a German submarine off the south coast of Ireland, one thousand, one hundred and forty-nine were lost, including one hundred and fifteen of one hundred and eighty-eight Americans. Among the Americans lost were Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, capitalist, and Elbert Hubbard, author and lecturer, and his wife. Sailing of the Muretania, sister ship of the Lusitania, recently doing duty as an auxiliary cruiser, and advertised to resume her regular passenger services between New York and Liverpool May 29, has been canceled. In a note of the United States on the 10th expressing sympathy at the loss of American lives, Germany sought to place the responsibility for the sinking of the Lusitania on Great Britain, whose effort to keep foodstuffs from Germany called forth the German submarine warfare in retaliation.

UNITED STATES NOTE TO GERMANY.—On the 13th the United States issued a note to Germany referring to "violation of American rights on the high seas," and referring to the drowning of Leon C. Thrasher in the torpedoing of the Falaba; the attack on the American vessel Cushing by a German aeroplane; the loss of American citizens in the sinking of the British vessel Gulflight; and the loss of American lives in the sinking of the Lusitania. The United States Government insists upon the provisions of international law for visit and search and for the safety of passengers, all of which is held to be impracticable in the use of submarines, for submarines can not be used against merchantmen "without an inevitable violation of many sacred provisions of justice and humanity." The note expresses the conviction that the violations before cited have occurred "under a misapprehension of the orders issued by the imperial German naval authorities." The United States

Confidently expects, therefore, that the imperial German Government will disavow the acts of which the Government of the United States complain, that they will make reparation so far as reparation is possible for injuries which are without measure, and that they will take immediate steps to prevent the recurrence of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare for which the imperial German Government have in the past so wisely and so firmly contended.

The note concludes with the language:

The imperial German Government will not expect the Government of the United States to omit any word or any act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans have continued to advance in western Galicia and the Carpathians. Russia claims gains on the Vistula and the Bukowina frontier. The French report gains north of Arras, east of Ypres and elsewhere. All the belligerents have lost heavily in men. Operations in the Dardanelles seem to favor the allies. The troops are making their way slowly up the Gallipoli Peninsula and the fleet continues to bombard the forts. General Botha, commanding the Union of South Africa forces, has taken Windhock, capital of German South Africa. The British destroyer Maori has been sunk by a German mine; the British steamers Don and Queen Wilhelmina by German submarines. The British battleship Goliath has been sunk in the Dardanelles. The British submarine E-14 recently penetrated the Dardanelles and sunk two Turkish gunboats and a transport in the Sea of Marmora. Eight Turkish transports have been sunk by the Russian Black Sea fleet. Great Britain has forbidden the exportation of coal except to its allies and possessions. Yielding to pressure from many sources, accompanied by anti-German riots in London and other English cities, the British Government has ordered the internment of "all male allies under military age" and the deportation of those over military age. It is suggested that alien women and children also, in suitable cases be deported. Italy is calling out additional infantry classes. Many Germans are leaving Italian territory, and Italians are leaving Austrian territory. The Italian cabinet has resigned for causes unreported. Rumor is that these resignations will not be accepted. Austria has issued orders that all Austrian ships in Italian waters proceed at once to home waters.

THAW'S SANITY TO JURY.—The appellate division of the New York Supreme Court on the 14th dismissed the prohibitory writ and granted the petition of Harry K. Thaw for trial by jury to determine the question of his sanity. The case has been set for May 17.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

GRACELAND SUMMER SCHOOL.—In the Miscellany Department of this issue of the HERALD will be found an announcement calling attention to the South-Central Iowa Normal Training School to be held at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, beginning June 7. The school is to be conducted by and under the direction of the college faculty, the board cooperating in the matter of buildings, equipment, etc. Those of the church who contemplate summer school work will do well to get in touch with this school, as it should afford all the benefits of the ordinary summer school, with the additional advantage of teachers a large majority of whom belong to the church, and of being conducted in a community composed mainly of Saints and under church influence.

NONE MORE UPRIGHT.—Under the caption "Not for polygamy," the following tribute to the membership of the Reorganized Church recently appeared in the Clinton (Iowa) Herald, and was reproduced in the Des Moines Evening Tribune:

Whatever may be thought of the theology of the Reorganized Church (Latter Day Saints) members, it is agreed that there are no people in Iowa or Missouri who lead more upright lives. They uphold family life, believe in education from the first grade up to doctor of philosophy, maintain a college at Lamoni, take care of their own orphans, old people and charity cases, and pay their debts and their taxes. It is unfortunate that they are confused in the popular mind with the polygamists of Utah.

As suggested by Brother J. C. Cackler of Lacona, Iowa, who sends us the clipping, "our position is better understood every year," and there is promised "a better future for our work" than ever before. And no factor makes stronger for the fair name and success of the church than the integrity and clean, upright living of the Saints.

A MODERN GOLIATH.—A debater of more egotism than logic, and more bombast than argument, writes as follows in the Apostolic Review of April 20:

It has been announced that I would begin debate with "Mormons" at Carsonville, Michigan, May 25, but the "Mormons" have called it off, so far as that date is concerned. They have to wait until after their conference before they can hold the debate. . . . I believe their conference (it should be called confusion) meets in June. They will then decide as to who will meet me in debate at Carsonville.

This man would impress his constituency first, with his own importance as a debater; second, with the "cringing fear" of our elders and organization wherever he appears upon the scene. A sworn enemy of the faith, he holds to the tactics of our common adversary from the beginning. Though he knows better, he hesitates at no extreme in his efforts to exalt himself and abase us. It is unfortunate, indeed! that our conference should have met and adjourned without settling with this modern Goliath. But perchance there may appear in due time a little David with a sling and pebble of truth, and who knows not of the prowess of "this uncircumcised Philistine." Nothing else will be needed.

A boy was going to college. His mother's last words were: "Remember, my son, you are always third." When he reached college, he wrote upon a placard, "I'm third," and hung it in his room. It called forth many queries and criticisms, but to all he turned a deaf ear, until he had been in college about two months. Then he said to his chum: "I have the courage now to tell you what my mother meant: First, God; second, others; third, myself." —Mrs. M. E. Hunn.

COOPERATION

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—This article is given space because it contains some ideas that are worth while. At the same time a word or two of caution may be necessary. The illustrations on which the arguments are based will bear investigation. There may be employers of labor who are making two dollars clear personal profit and three dollars besides for business expenses for every two dollars paid out in wages. If so they are indeed few. There may be concerns clearing one thousand dollars daily on the labor of a force of five hundred men after meeting all expenses. But where there is one such concern there are dozens bumping along on the rocks straight for bankruptcy. Hundreds of others are barely keeping afloat from one year to another.]

When pleading and planning for cooperation we must look at the risks as well as at the rosy prospects of getting rich quick; at the failures around us as well as at the brilliant successes. We should endeavor to promote cooperation but we should do so with our eyes open and not on an air-castle basis.

It does not follow that because some one exceptional man employing five hundred men makes twenty-six thousand dollars per month clear profit, an equal number of men can duplicate that performance for themselves in the same business. Where one has succeeded hundreds have failed. Better cut down our estimates of profits to a more conservative basis, and even face the possibility of grim and absolute failure.

It may be very comforting to take the exceptional (perhaps imaginary) hen in the flock that lays three hundred and forty eggs per year and use her as a basis from which to figure the enormous profits of all poultrymen, and the sure profits to ourselves if we owned one thousand hens; but that plan is apt to prove deceptive. A good many men are not in the poultry business to-day who went into it on that basis five years ago. Let us go into the cooperative movement with a realization of its dangers and responsibilities as well as its possibilities, and with conservative expectations that we can "make stick."]

Men do not fill their creation on account of their selfishness; each is afraid the other will receive more than he, and each is trying to get from the other in excess of what is rightly his. This is selfishness, jealousy, and greed. They do not love their God nor their fellow man.

The beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea, all the vegetable and mineral kingdoms, and the whole earth answer their creation, and in never-ending tones, cry, "I am trying to fill my creation if man would allow me, but man takes me from where I rightfully belong and places me elsewhere; man destroys me while countless millions ask for food and shelter (which I am striving to give); but God, thou didst give man dominion over me, and thou wilt hold him accountable for the good I am ready and willing to give."

Thus, sin consists in the actions of men, and in what we understand to be energy wasted, because it does not do good to mankind collectively.

For the reason that we have had our attention fixed almost wholly upon the moral side of life, we have sadly neglected to properly sense the sin of waste we are committing because we have failed to bring ourselves to the advanced or more perfect plane of a practical and consistent application of the principle of righteousness.

"These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." "There is a way that seemeth right unto man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." This is the way of the parasites. What is a parasite? A parasite is one who gets something for nothing. How? It was formerly done by slavery. Now it is done by indirect oppression, or subtle persuasion to exchange a commodity having a given value for one of less value. The difference between the two values is called profit or gain, and the one who gets it is called a shrewd, successful business man. The one who loses is called a failure.

As all commodities must have something in each that is common to all in order to have an exchange value, we must note that common quality is energy. That (energy) which is the result of labor, applied by the brain, through the muscle of man to the raw materials of nature. This energy is said to be concealed into, or to have become a part of the raw material, and thus gives its value. The unequal exchange of this commodity, or energy value, between those employed and the employer, is the source of all gain; which comprises rent, interest and profit in business exchange, and constitutes the curse of the earth.

Let us understand how the exchange is made, so we may study to rid ourselves of the curse. You, a man or woman, sell or exchange your energy (or labor power), for enough to maintain your own strength and home, and to reproduce the power to labor in your family, which is growing up. For easy figures, we will say an hour is worth a dollar. You must have the benefit of the work of three hours, or three dollars a day for yourself and home. Now, you work eight hours a day for your employer. You do so because you have no capital to buy raw material, nor tools or machinery to work with, so you can not work for yourself; consequently you sell or exchange with your employer. You agree to give him eight hours of your time and work, provided he will give you in exchange the benefit of three dollars, or three hours, of the work in the day. You show your gratitude by donating to him one hour's, dollar's, work towards his rent, another towards his interest, another to pay and replace his machinery, and to keep him in good humor so he will let you work eight hours to-morrow; you work two hours longer so he will have two dollars profit on his business from you.

Well, you are happy to-night, why not smile! You have a good job now. Made three dollars to pay expenses. Had to pay them for somebody if you are in business, and it isn't yours, and, best of all, the boss is satisfied with only two dollars profit from you, for his home and family. You got more from your work for your family than the boss did from your work for his family (to-day). You ought to be satisfied and never mind who did the work.

Think of him being satisfied with only three dollars towards his business expenses, and but two dollars profit from you and he only hires five hundred more men just like you.

How can he be fat and happy, while his servants gave him fifteen hundred dollars a day, so he can pay it back in wages? That's even exchange for the first three hours; but, say, wages mean something for nothing. Oh, yes, you are right? I see it now. Then all of you give him fifteen hundred dollars the next three hours, to pay his business, and does not pay you for that, and you throw in the last two hours, or one thousand dollars a day for profits, to keep him in good humor. Yes, I see where good humor comes from. It's what's left for luxury for the boss after the hired men have paid their own wages, and the business expenses, and then some (you know). And there are only twenty-six working days in the month, or twenty-six times one thousand dollars left for your master to pay his home expenses, which includes his own brains and the reproduction of his family of brainy parasites.

Please don't annoy me by inquiring who did the work, or how much he saves; but I would like to know how much you can save. I would like also to know if it would be right or just if you five hundred men should use that fifteen hundred dollars a day, or thirty-nine thousand dollars a month, to pay the expenses of a business belonging to you collectively, and cooperate to divide the benefits of the twenty-six thousand dollars profit each month among you (who did the work), and invite the boss to labor with you for the good of all?

Are we studying and working to bring about equality and cooperation, to prevent this awful waste of our time and energy? Or don't we really care? Would we just as soon have an employer to spend all our surplus time and energy, for the luxury and benefits, and education of himself and family?

Listen; sin consists in the actions of men, and in what we understand to be energy wasted, because it does not do good to mankind collectively.

Are you a party of this unequal exchange? Are you not entitled to all you can produce through your own muscles, as directed by your own brain? God gave all men this privilege. Why should any normal man deviate from this course? Our muscles, like our brains, must be used to keep us healthy.

God is no respecter of persons. He cursed Cain from the beginning for taking an advantage of his brother Abel. Cain started the competitive, individual, profit system of gain. Competition is war on one scale or another.

The wicked say, "All is fair in love and war."

God says, "There is a way that seemeth good unto man, but the end thereof is death."

Therefore, the wages of sin is death. This is the curse of the parasites.

Verily I say unto you, the time has come, and is now at hand: and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there is an organization of my people . . . both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment (or business) and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world (remember this is a celestial world and only the ways of men need to be changed), you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required for you.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

Now, what are we commanded? Why, to observe equality in earthly things. Our exchange must be on this basis. We are all (as yet) under the curse of inequality, and we can be nothing but hypocrites, until we at least show an intelligent effort to practice what we preach.

Have we blessed heavenly conditions? No. Then we must have conditions which are the reverse, or cursed. Listen; about nine billion dollars are wasted every year by our Nation. It seems like a sin. The people who work donate to their masters, absolutely the whole of the United States (including its people and buildings and machinery) pay every expense, and this is a grand total of one hundred and fifty times one million dollars. Oh, the great condescension of the people.

Also, to keep their masters successful, and in good humor, most everybody (not all) votes that nine tenths of the people donate fifteen billion dollars more to the one tenth of the people who are successful, so they may have this amount clear gain, and proclaim the prosperity of the Nation.

Hark! Some one says I am mixing religion and politics. Yes, I pray you will forgive me, for I perceive that religion is what people think, and politics is what people do, and we must not allow what we think to interfere with what we do, lest we become unpopular heretics, and progressive. That must not be, but "To remain ignorant is to remain a slave to existing conditions."

Does God mean anything by imploring you to come up higher? "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Free from what? Why, ignorance, of course, and the present cursed conditions of life, which are the result of ignorance. Ignorance is that great mystic chain of the Devil, with which he binds you to that hateful competition for gain in business. Think of gain at your brothers' expense. Think of Cain, the cursed of God.

And it came to pass that I (Nephi) saw among the nations of the Gentiles the foundation of a great church. And the angel said unto me, Behold the foundation of a church, which is most abominable above all other churches, which slayeth the saints of God, yea, and tortureth them and bindeth them down, and yoketh them with a yoke of iron, and bringeth them down into captivity.

And it came to pass that I beheld this great and abominable church; and I saw the Devil that he was the foundation of it. And also I saw gold and silver, and silks, and scarlets, and fine twined linen, and all manner of precious clothing; and I saw many harlots. And the angel spake unto me, saying, Behold the gold, the silver, and the silks, and the scarlets, and the fine twined linen, and the precious clothing, and the harlots are the desires of this great and abominable church, and also for the praise of the world do they destroy the saints of God, and bring them down into captivity.—1 Nephi 3: 139-144.

And there shall also be many which shall say, eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God; he will justify in committing a little sin: yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this.—2 Nephi 12: 10.

They rob the poor, because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor, because of their fine clothing, and they persecute the meek, and the poor in heart; because in their pride, they are puffed up.—2 Nephi 12: 15.

And from that time forth . . . they began to be divided into classes, and they began to build up churches unto themselves, to get gain, and began to deny the true church of God.—3 Nephi 1: 28.

And he said unto me, Behold, there are save two churches only: The one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the Devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God, belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations.—1 Nephi 3: 220-222.

Where is your name written? Where is the name of your fellow man written? Nephi says, "Nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men." (2 Nephi 12: 17.)

Of course your names are some place; and your heart also, with one church or the other. But with what church is your heart? From the depths of the heart the mouth speaketh, and the hands do work. Will ye not come out from under the curse unto the loving brotherhood of man? Brethren, what must we do to be saved?

But behold, that great and abominable church, the whore of all the earth, must tumble to the earth, and great must be the fall thereof.—2 Nephi 12: 22.

This is because it is founded on the principle of the parasite. The church of the Lamb of God will triumph, because it is founded on the principle of universal brotherhood. Knowledge of truth, in love, is that golden chain, by which God is binding the Devil. It will eventually destroy him for ever. Brethren, I solemnly ask, How can we get the knowledge of truth? Let us use the brains God gave us.

This church is composed of about sixty thousand persons; (mostly laborers) because our gospel is essentially to the poor. How much loss does this system of unequal exchange mean to this church? This body of the church has no tools of production. Let us estimate it. We will divide 60,000 people by four, giving us 15,000 families, with one laborer for each, or 15,000 laborers. The average laborer receives $500 per year, which is the benefit of one fourth of the energy he expends. The energy he loses is, therefore, three times $500, or $1,500. The $500 he receives has a purchasing power of only one half, or $250. This added to $1,500 makes $1,750 lost for each, or 15,000 times $1,750, which is $26,250,000. We are intelligent enough to keep $250 each for the benefit of ourselves and the church of God, and ignorant or spendthrift enough to give $1,750 each to our worldly masters, and the church of the Devil. This is an astonishing and shameful truth.

Three million, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars for ourselves and the church of God; but think, $26,250,000 for our masters and the church of the Devil. Surely we should awaken to the knowledge of truth and come up higher, according to the pleading of our God, who has said, "For your thoughts are not my thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord, for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Isaiah 55: 8, 9.

Truly, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

Our sin of waste is $26,250,000 every year. Our sin towards God and the needy is written in figures of remorse and shame.

When we know the truth, sin consists in the actions of man, and in what we understand to be energy wasted, because it does not do good to mankind collectively.

The church has laws and commandments which if put into operation would remedy the evils of oppression, ignorance and poverty, and all who would labor would have abundance and to spare of all the necessities and luxuries of things beautiful and scientific, and have time to study the starry heavens and fathom the mighty deep; understand the hidden mysteries, which would open the avenues of solving the problem of "what is man."

We have the law of tithing, free-will offering and consecration. We have a faint understanding of tithing and free-will offering, but of consecration we do not seem to grasp its magnitude and elevating qualities. So let us study and understand this great truth of how to be free from poverty and oppression.

And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2.

And let that which belongs to this people be appointed unto this people; and the money which is left unto this people, let there be an agent appointed unto this people to take the money, to provide food and raiment, according to the wants of this people. And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one.—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2.

And let my servant Sidney Gilbert, stand in the office which I have appointed him, to receive moneys, to be an agent unto the church, to buy land in all the regions round about, inasmuch as can be in righteousness, and as wisdom shall direct. And let my servant Edward Partridge, stand in the office which I have appointed him, to divide the Saints their inheritance, . . . Let my servant Sidney Gilbert plant himself in this place, and establish a store, that he may sell goods without fraud, that he may obtain money to buy lands for the good of Saints. . . . Let my servant William W. Phelps be planted in this place, and be established as a printer unto the church; . . . And thus let those of whom I have spoken, be planted in the land of Zion, as speedily as can be, . . . —Doctrine and Covenants 57: 2-5.

And let there be an agent appointed by the voice of the church, unto the church in Ohio, to receive moneys to purchase lands in Zion. . . . And again, inasmuch as there is land obtained, let there be workmen sent forth, of all kinds, unto this land, to labor for the Saints of God. Let all these things be done in order. And let the privileges of the lands be made known, from time to time, by the Bishop, or the agent of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 10-12.

I, the Lord, willeth, that you should purchase the lands, that you may have advantage of the world, that you may have claim on the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 8.

A wise institution. For if we have no land, we will have no means of support, only as we depend on the world; to exchange our labor, and in return receive that which the world feels to give; but if we have land, then we can get the full benefit of our labor; then we can have a "storehouse" and fill it; then we can manufacture the raw material into useful articles; then we can distribute the necessities and luxuries, and thus cease paying such an enormous profit to the world; then we will get full return for our toil. Each will have his stewardship, as he is faithful and industrious, and he who is not, will be removed.

The idler shall not have place in the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 75: 5.

The time has come, and is now at hand; and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

And again, there shall be another treasury prepared and a treasurer appointed to keep the treasury, and a seal shall be placed upon it; and all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings . . . shall be cast into this treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtains ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it; and there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, only by the voice and common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you, say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me on my stewardship; if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor. . . . —Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.

Now let us see and try to understand the law sufficiently, so we can put it in operation. After we have paid our tithing, we should put our surplus in a common treasury, whether that be house, lands, moneys or cattle, or whatever it may be, that it may be put to use by those who are industrious and have not wherewith to labor, and have complied with the law in this regard.

For instance: One may have, say 200 acres of land, 100 head of cattle, 100 hogs and other things in proportion. He is, so to say, a wealthy man. He by himself can not attend to all this; he has to hire help and pay them wages. The care and worry to try to see to all himself, to get all the gain himself, prevents him from being as free and happy or as spiritual as he would be if he had under his personal care only sufficient to give him a good living.

Too much to see to of the temporal things increases his selfishness, lessens his spirituality, and he has no time for study, or to visit the sick and afflicted, or help the church; while, on the other hand, the one who has not and has to depend on working by days' wages for a mere pittance has no care or responsibility of anything that he is steward over, and has not enough to keep his family, can not develop, can not help the sick and afflicted, and does not feel like taking part, because he feels like he is down and out.

Thus, in branches that are in the stakes of "Zion" there should be an "organization" or "order" and a treasurer or bishop appointed to take charge of moneys or whatever is consecrated toward this fund; and let each one who belongs to this order, put in of his surplus as speedily as he receives it, and when there is sufficient in the treasury, let the bishop or treasurer make it known to the order also to the general bishop, and let a piece of ground be purchased, and choose or select one of the order as steward over it, to work it faithfully, and let him also put in the treasury, so there will soon be enough to buy another piece of ground, so another one may be placed on it, and thus continue.

But this land can not be sold or exchanged by the one who is made steward over it, but as long as he is faithful and a wise steward he may have it, and thus get the full return for his labor. Then when a sufficient number have farms that will justify, a storehouse should be built for the product, that those who have not may buy at cost from the purchaser and save the profit which now goes to the world. Then as the number of cattle, farms and all things increases start manufacturing of all kinds, and let the tradesmen of all kinds receive their stewardship the same as the one on the farm, and let no one say it is his to buy, sell, barter or exchange, but it will belong to the order; and if any prove unworthy or unfaithful stewards, let another be placed in his stead.

Let this be done in every branch, and let the bishop or treasurer or order report to the bishop the same as branches and bishop's agents report the tithing and branch work.

Now for example: There is in a branch, we'll say ten persons, who are willing to join this order, and these ten pay $10 each every month into the treasury; in ten months they would have $1,000 to buy a piece of ground. Then let one of their number be placed on it, and he also pay $10 per month, or $120 per year, and in ten months they are ready for another $1,000 farm for another, and so on.

Now, we do not wish to convey the thought that an employer of labor is a parasite, for under the present system one who can employ and does is a help to humanity. So is an individual that through industry and thrift has accumulated lands, cattle, etc., as that will put that individual in position to help mankind, for these individuals have opened the eyes of the balance of humanity, and caused them to see the benefit of industry and thrift. But the difference between the two systems is that one is for and from an individual standpoint and benefit, while the other is for the people collectively, and places every individual in position to be an asset and not a liability.

RAW MATERIAL AND FINISHED PRODUCT

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 3

BY F. J. EBELING

The most honorable and logical way to determine the value of anything is by its product. Jesus laid down this unbreakable rule in Matthew 7: 16-20:

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; . . . but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree can not bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

AN IRREVOCABLE LAW

In all the realm of nature we are constantly face to face with the irrevocable law that kind produces kind. When man plants an apple tree he expects to pick a crop of apples in due time. That the tree shall have any other kind of fruit never enters his mind.

Ask him why and he will say it is because of the very nature of the tree. And after the fruit shall have appeared we can tell whether it grew on a sour-apple tree or a sweet-apple tree, although we may never have seen the tree. The product reveals that to us.

Just as true as a tree can be judged by the fruit it bears, just so true can the profession we make be judged by the products of our lives. Paul says, "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." (Romans 6: 5.)

In going down into the waters of baptism we are only being planted, which is only the first act in preparation for the great reaping. If we have been planted right and grow right, we are assured of the first resurrection, and, as an infallible evidence of right planting and growing, the fruits will bear testing.

If the products of our lives do not go out to bless and benefit the lives of others, it is because that great change in our natures has not yet been wrought, which a planting in Christ would bring.

In all the products of nature we see the same kind of fruits being produced year after year. A tree does not bear apples one year, peaches the next year, squashes the next year, and then back to apples the next year. And so with us. If we have truly taken on the divine nature, we will not bear one kind of fruit one day and another kind of fruit some other day. It will be the same, blooming and bearing day in and day out till we have been garnered in the resurrection.

I once heard of an old lady who often thanked God in her testimony that she had been serving God off and on for fifty years. In such service we take desperate chances, for we are just as liable to be "off" when Christ comes as "on."

RAW MATERIAL TO FINISHED PRODUCT

From the raw material beneath the ground there comes the iron ore, which is taken to the blast furnaces and there melted so that it runs like water. In this process much of the dross is removed in the form of slag. From there, in the form of pig metal, it is taken and dumped into the cupolas of another department and remelted, and much of the dross is removed. From the cupolas it is lowered into great converters, in which is turned thousands of pounds of blast, blowing out the hidden dross unreached by the first melting. And while in this blowing and blazing converter, its nature is being changed from iron to steel, known as Bessemer steel.

From the converters it is run into molds and shaped into ingots of nearly two tons each. After being cooled and solidified, these are taken by huge cranes and put into heating furnaces, reheated and from there put into the rolls and rolled into long pieces seventy-five to one hundred feet long.

Then they run into shears and are cut into billets of different sizes, and from the shears are taken to the plate mill, reheated and flattened by another set of rolls into sheet iron. This is cut and sheared again into pieces from which tubing, cut nails, roofing, tin, household articles, and many things for the use of man are made. Thus the products of the ore are formed and transformed into useful articles with which to bless mankind. All the melting, burning, blowing, heating, cooling and shearing, were to bring it to that condition of usefulness. But first of all the nature had to be in the ore we took from the ground, hence all the process was but a changing and reforming of its nature.

From the raw cotton, by passing through the various processes concerning which I am not as well informed as in the iron and steel industry, we have the finished product with which to warm and clothe mankind.

From the growing timber we get the finished product to shelter man and beast. All this is brought about in the process of making, guided by the skillful hand.

In all things conducive to man's happiness, the finished product is of greater value than the raw material, as evidenced in the making of steel, cloth, and timber.

ONLY WORTHLESS PRODUCT

The only thing I know of where the raw material is of greater value, and the finished product less, is in the liquor business. The raw material, wheat, corn, rye, and barley, which is good for man and beast, is made into a product which is an injury to man and beast. Its nature has been changed, but, unlike the other things, to the detriment of man and not to his blessing.

Nature herself cries out in no uncertain sounds in protest against the liquor traffic; the results of this change being empty houses, wrecked and ragged bodies, huts instead of houses, cursing instead of blessing.

THE SPIRITUAL PRODUCT

Let us now apply this argument to the products of our religion. If we will let the gospel take its legitimate course in its process of forming and transforming our characters, it will produce a life from the low, sinful, and unrefined state to that of a blessing and true service to our fellow men. In the making of this spiritual product, the process through which it passed must of necessity be a good one. As the process which makes the useful articles of steel, cloth, and timber, must be a good one, hence this the highest compliment we can place upon the church is the product of the characters it makes.

If our lives go out to the helpfulness of mankind, which this gospel is bound to do, if we will let it, all the wrath and bitterness of the opposition will not be able to interfere with its onward march.

It should not go unnoticed that of the natural products for comfort and blessing of man, all come from the same place, the soil. So all the blessings from a highly spiritual developed life come from the one source, Jesus Christ. The outward manifestations of the gospel are to be cherished, but of all the blessings and signs and wonders for which I feel to thank God the greatest is the fact that the gospel has made me a better man.

JUDGING BY PRODUCTS

I have heard it said by our enemy that Mr. So and So is a good man, but I have no use for his church. A man who says he has no use for a church that makes a better husband, father, and citizen, does not realize the inconsistency of his statement. That which makes a bad man good, and a good man better, should be hailed with delight by all men.

All one has to do to know whether any people are good or bad is to examine their doctrine, for one's life is formed and molded by that which he has adopted for a rule of moral action.

Luther gave vent to a noble thought when attacking the morals of the Papists. Hear him:

Wickliffe and Huss assailed the moral conduct of Papists, but I chiefly oppose and resist their doctrine. I affirm roundly and plainly, that they preach not the truth, to this I am called. When I can show that the Papists' doctrine is false, then I can easily prove that their manner of life is evil, for when the word remains pure, the manner of life—though something therein be amiss, will be pure also.—Luther's Table Talks, number 2025, quoted in the Making of the Sermon, by Harwood Pattison, p. 133.

What a grand old world this would be to live in if all men's works and systems that made them were judged by the products!

THE CHARACTER-MAKING PROCESS

Before one can show forth the right kind of fruit, his nature must be changed. Otherwise it will be as Peter puts it, "A sow to her wallow, and a dog to his vomit"—a hard saying, but only too true in the lives of many who have made a profession. So with one who comes into the church not having fully given up worldly pleasures. His nature will soon crop out in some of the many ways to which flesh is heir.

Dear reader, we should unqualifiedly place ourselves in the great character-making process of God, and the products developed from the raw material of a carnal life will go out to bless and sweeten the lives of all those with whom we come in contact, and the great reward will be when we see them rejoicing in the kingdom of God with them.

PERFECT LIFE

Cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.—Jesus.

If one is anxious to reform the world, let him begin by reforming himself.—James Allen.

All religion, all education, and all research should have but one object in view, viz, the uplift of humanity, and the blessing of the world. Therefore it is necessary for us to carefully consider the subject matter suggested in the foregoing texts, and if possible give the spirit they breathe a proper bearing in our lives.

Jesus expresses a divine truth once for all time in the utterance, "Cleanse first that which is within," since it is evident that all life, all growth, and all development is, and necessarily must be from within outwardly, i. e., in order to reach a perfect outer condition, a perfect inner condition must be acquired. It will not do for us to simply put on an outward veneering; the inner recesses of the heart and life must be cleansed and purified if we expect to reach and live in a perfect outer world of circumstances and events. In other words, before the life of man can become pure, his thoughts must be lifted up to contemplate pure things.

If the heart and mind are filled with envy, wrath, malice, hatred, revenge, evil thoughts, and covetousness, we will labor in vain, if we try to reach a perfect condition without first transmuting those inward attributes into the mellower soil of love, patience, goodness, kindness, mercy, pure thoughts, and altruistic service. So long as we look for the cause of our errors and unrest to consist in outward conditions, so long will we be shorn of the conditions of purity. Selfishness is the root upon which all evil springs. Love is the key that unlocks the treasure house of wisdom and virtue. As is the within, so also is that which is without; therefore if that which is within is filthy, impurity necessarily must be revealed in the exterior life.

Since selfishness is the hotbed of sin, we must come out of it if we expect to reach the higher altitudes of divine virtue and transforming love. And we can not come out of selfishness by accusing others; we only sink the deeper into the marshes of ignorance by this method. By hurling painful charges at others we are only retarding our own progress. But by purifying ourselves we attain unto the supreme conquest; for he only who has conquered himself is able to subdue others: And he subdues them by love, not force.

We can not legislate men into righteousness; we must convert them. A code of laws may be decidedly strict, and yet so long as it deals only with the external it will fail of its purpose in reforming the world. But when the source of life, the heart, has been changed, the soul will gradually become purified. The restrictive law says, "Thou shalt not kill," but the law that reaches the heart says, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." The man who hates his brother may never commit the overt act, and so live within the limits of the restrictive law, yet from within he is guilty, because he has the spirit of murder within his heart. Therefore the truthfulness of the statement, "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

The world can only be reformed and made better in the degree that the individual unit is purified and uplifted, and outward peace can never be realized until peace from within is acquired and actualized. And so it is that "he who conquers himself is the world's greatest benefactor." He who would reform others must first reform himself. One can not give that which he does not himself possess; therefore if he would give pure knowledge to others he must first become pure knowledge himself. If he would teach others the purity of life, he must live a life of purity. If he would teach others virtue, he must be virtuous. If he would teach the world the glory of peace, he must be peaceable. If he would teach others divine goodness, he must be divinely good, gentle, and true. So it is literally and scientifically true that that which is within must first be cleansed, that the outside may be clean also.

The wise renew their strength daily, by pure aspiration and strong endeavor, and with the strong wings of faith lift themselves heavenward, until they have reached the consummation of all things and have entered into the habitation of perfect peace, which is the legitimate fruitage of an inward purity.

ONE OF THE DISCIPLES.

Of General Interest

CAMPBELLISM TO CATHOLICISM

[The following is of interest as an arraignment of Protestantism and especially of the Christian Church, by a one-time pastor of the latter. Too bad that such men can not be reached by the gospel as restored in latter days.—EDITORS.]

It is with a great deal of reluctance that I make this statement. It has always been my desire to avoid anything of a sensational nature. Because of some statements made in two of the city papers which in some ways might be misleading, it seems necessary for me to make myself plain.

I have been a minister in the Christian Church for more than fifteen years, during which time I have always tried to lead a Christian life and be guided by the teaching of Jesus Christ. My heart has been sorely pained many times on account of the strife and contention in the Protestant world. The plea of the "Disciples of Christ" for one hundred years has been for Christian unity and yet their history from their birth (in 1809) has been one of contention, strife and unrest. There are some great men among those people, but their time has been spent in bickering and backbiting while souls were going to hell. What is said of the Disciples may be said of Protestantism in general.

I wish it understood that I did not leave the Christian Church because there was contention in that body. I believe in contending, if the contention is for the truth. But the state of unrest that existed in the church of which I was a member caused me to make a reinvestigation, and also a new investigation of the whole field of religious thought. I have spent much time in this investigation. I have read the best church historians, covering the entire history of Christian religion, both Catholic and Protestant. I have been so fair in my investigation as to let both Catholic and Protestant speak for themselves. In no other way can a man be honest in his search for truth. One of the great mistakes that most men make in their reading is, they content themselves with one side of the question.

These months of research have not been without fruit. Therefore I make the following statements:

1. The Catholic Church has an unbroken history from date back to the first century. There are fifteen hundred years between the first century and the Protestant religion.

2. The history of the Catholic Church has been one of unity and faith and doctrine. The history of Protestantism has been one of division, strife, contention and unrest.

3. There is not a single truth that is taught by any Protestant body that is not taught by the Catholic Church. The Catholic Church teaches many vital truths that are not taught by any Protestant body.

4. The great doctrines of the Catholic Church have ever been the same, while Protestantism is always changing. This history of the Disciples of Christ as a people will prove this statement. Read Campbell, Lard and others of their day and then read Willett, Morrison, Jenkins and others.

5. Protestants are quick to quote Catholic teachers and historians when it suits their fancy, if not they condemn them. This is unfair of anyone.

6. There is a spirit of reverence and devotion in the Catholic Church that is largely wanting in the Protestant world. Every Catholic has been taught to feel that the church is the house of God, and should be entered with holy reverence. While, be it said with shame, too often Protestant churches are turned into playhouses and clubrooms.

7. I left the Christian Church because there was a vacancy in my heart that could not be filled within the narrow limits of the Protestant religion.

Yesterday's Star stated that all my time was given to the church at Rich Hill, Missouri. This is an error. I stated that I preached every other Sunday at Rich Hill, the other half of my time being given to the Christian Church at Cleveland, Missouri.

The impression was given out that it was through my wife's influence that I entered the Catholic Church. This is a mistake. She was as much surprised at my announcement as the public. I take all the responsibility upon myself. It is a matter of pure conviction with me. I gave up a salary of twelve hundred dollars and put my trust in God, which I am sure will not fail.

As for the criticism of the Reverend Doctor Jenkins in last night's Star, I am not surprised, for it harmonizes most beautifully with the seeds of skepticism and infidelity that he is constantly sowing among the people whom he labors.

I have a good education and am going to take up some secular work that will meet the needs of my family. I have a most kindly feeling for my friends in the Christian Church and should be pained to think that my change in church relationship should in any way tend to sever the ties of friendship that have been sweet to me these many years.—C. L. Harbord, in The Kansas City Star, January 10, 1915.

WORKING TO MUSIC

"The band shall play while coaling ship." This sentence, which stands first in the paragraph of the United States Navy Regulations relating to bands, seems to a civilian a little vague, as if possibly the musicians were required to work and play at the same time. There is no conflict of opinion, apparently, in the Navy about its significance, and E. J. Delano, formerly ensign and bandmaster in the Illinois Naval Reserve, applauds it as a wise provision that might be well extended to other industrial fields. Writing in The Manufacturers' News (Chicago), Mr. Delano advocates the organization of a band of musicians in every considerable body of employees, although it does not appear that he would advise them to play regularly during working hours. Of the naval rule, which he uses as a title to his article, as we have quoted it above, Mr. Delano says:

The commanding officer has no discretion in the matter. There are the orders in black and white; and so on the occasions for this task, the most arduous, monotonous, and cordially hated job in a sailor's life, there sits the band playing lively music, and lots of it, till the bunkers are filled. Not merely to keep them busy, or to give the function proper éclat, but because Uncle Sam has found by careful experiment that about thirty per cent more coal is put in with music than without. Therefore the position of the bandmen on the "coaling-ship" proposition is fixed. "They also serve who only sit and toot." (That rustling sound you hear is John Milton turning over in his grave.)

So, all over the world where men are free; music breaks the deadly monotony of toil, shortens the long hike, nerves the fainting spirit, and provides a clean, fresh, physical and mental toehold amid the general sordiness of things.

The present war will prove many things, and chief among them, to my mind at least, how far a man may go sustained by a patriotic song or a popular ballad.

All this pertains to the utilitarian value of music. The principle is being used by large employers of labor, and where a wise plan of organization is followed its results are as sure and beneficent as in the army or navy.

The maintenance of a band, orchestra, or choral society has a twofold value; beside that of welfare work (which is great) must be placed its advertising value. Who has not heard of the old Elgin Watch Factory Band? It was extraordinarily good and served to leave an impression that Elgin watches were correspondingly good; because the human mind is prone to lay one idea alongside another.

The specific values of having a band or other music body organized in the ranks of the workers are, I think, not disputed.—Literary Digest, April 17, 1915.

The Conference

With what a joyous burst did Spring break the last fetters of the tyrant cold, and work, almost before our very eyes, the wonders of rejuvenation and re-creation! Almost in the passing of a night and day was the miracle performed, and the marvel of the change is with us still,—hushing our breath in admiration and awe!

When we reached Lamoni, in anticipation of the annual reunion of our happy church-family, not a spear of green grass was in sight! Mud, barren boughs, and all the unsightliness of the prolonged and disagreeable reign of "the fairy snow," met our troubled gaze. But lo! who can explain the magic of the spring when once its pulses are stirred within it to the arousing of all life-giving streams of vigor and resurrection? Before we left, aye, almost before the conference was well under way, the mantle of verdure had, like the testamental cloak of charity, covered a multitude of sins, and life abounding and exultant life was expressing itself in myriads of fascinating and luxurious forms. Blossoms and birds, and the rich brown earth in freshly turned waves, the glorifying sunshine, the doffing of cumbersome wraps, and a hundred other signs proclaimed our emancipation; and, in the mingling of the Saints, the praises to God were sincere and joyous! and helped to swell, in beautiful harmony, the wondrous anthems of adoration all Nature was offering.

From every bough God's love was heralded and caroled by his feathered messengers of song and color! We heard the "thrush at eve," as well as at its matins! The robins, larks, and flickers added to the hymn, and from tree to tree flashed back and forth the cardinal,—that living embodiment of impassioned joy and love! Ah, April in Lamoni! We will ever associate you with the music that is neither vocal nor instrumental, but weaves the best that is in either into the most perfect coronal of praise within the gift of Nature!

How beautiful the lesson to the singers of Israel. What room have we for pettiness, jealousy, or criticism that is harsh or unloving? How can we listen to the joyous strains of the small emblems of tuneful praise, and then choose to intertwine ours with anything that is unlovely or unacceptable to him who gave to us the gift and the desire? No, let us feel the unworthiness of all such offerings, and banish from us everything but love and kindness, that we may indeed render songs of rejoicing that will reach the white throne above.

Happily, we have woven into the fabric of our conference memories only the golden threads of joy, and happiness. Never have we felt more strongly the spirit of brotherly kindness and unselfishness than at this meeting. Everyone seemed moved by one impulse, to give, freely and gladly of his very best effort for the good of all. The result can be safely guessed. Only success is to be written after such a combination, and all present must agree that, in spite of many things which might have leant discouragement, that word is by right our own.

It was a great disappointment that our capable and enthusiastic church chorister was unable to be present and, to your writer, an equal disappointment that, at the last moment, it fell to her lot to carry the responsibility of the musical features of the conference. However, we realize development lies by the way of the unforeseen, many times, and with much fear and trembling, but, withal, a real desire to live up to the emergency, we undertook the work, and we want to here and now, express our great appreciation of the hearty cooperation and good will shown by every member of the conference choir to the substitute leader. More especially is this acknowledgement due, and hereby offered, to the splendid and enthusiastic body of singers at Lamoni, and their earnest, devoted, untiring, and capable director, Brother H. C. Burgess. We realize without the support and response given by the local musicians the conference efforts along our line would have been failures. We found a careful and conscientious preparation of both the current anthems and the cantata scheduled; and it only remained for us, as director of the whole, to round out, smooth over and amalgamate the efforts of all concerned, and we had a remarkably unified result. The cantata chorus of ninety-one singers sang with all the vigor, attack, and shading of an organized body, and we can not cease to marvel at the unity, attack, and expression displayed.

The cantata was given on the evenings of April 11 and 12. The seating capacity of the church was taxed at both performances, many out-of-town people being among the listeners. Sister Robinson was in good voice, and sang her solos with all her usual beautiful purity of tone, carrying a message of strength and reverence to her hearers. Brother Craig, with great dramatic effect in voice and delivery, thrilled all hearts, and helped to bring the Savior very near in the tragedy and sadness of those closing days of his life on earth, as pictured so vividly in this lovely musical production, "Olivet to Calvary."

The chorus supported these soloists with vigorous renditions, containing many and varying expressions—the joyous acclaim of the worshiping multitude, the pathetic and quiet beauty of the Gethsemane number, the excited and cruel spirit of the mob shouting "Crucify him," and the sadness and grief of the cross, ending with the glory and triumph of the resurrection,—all these were brought out in a really wonderful unity of spirit and response, which has again demonstrated the entire practicability of this united choir movement, and again opened up the door of the future and given us a glimpse of the great possibilities ahead of us as organized forces along the lines of musical expression of the highest and most uplifting thoughts.

And now, what of this future? Have we learned any lesson of use to us, from the experience of the past few weeks? Are we prepared to outline, and measure up our lives any differently because of the impetus the conference gave us in any one direction? Are we satisfied with the degree of excellence attained—are we satisfied with our own contributions to that excellence? If we are not, what are we going to do about it? Will we allow 1915 to slip by without laying, in our own way, the foundations for even greater usefulness on our part? Will we repeat our efforts, with still greater consecration to the good of the general cause, or have any of us been made aware of any lack,—any indifference, any blindness to opportunity, and, perceiving, are we mentally resolving to awake, to be alive to the advancing all along the line, and determine to be among the vanguard of the hosts of Israel's singers when next the opportunity comes to join in the "voice of the assembly"?

Grace Notes in Conference Symphony

MUSICAL INSTITUTE. Five enthusiastic musical institute meetings were our very own at the conference time. At these some most excellent inspirational and helpful papers, lectures, talks and discussions were had. We are hoping to have a full and detailed report of these meetings for the Staff readers from one who is well-qualified to grasp the full import and impetus they stood for among the singers, and who is well qualified to convey that message to others.

LAMONI ENTERTAINS. Again the Lamoni choir members demonstrated their ability and success as entertainers, for in spite of a rather damp program on the part of the weather man, never did a group of choir people and their friends enjoy a happier time than was experienced on the evening of April 8, at the Graceland Studio of Music. The rooms were gayly decorated, a fine orchestra, under the direction of Brother J. H. Anthony, discoursed sweet music, and games, speeches, story-telling, feasting, songs, and piano and mandolin solos all combined to color richly the picture of that evening. Sister James has a lovely souvenir in the shape of a flexible leather-bound copy of Zion's Praises, awarded to her for excellent memory of musical signs and composers. Brother Paul Craig has also a curious specimen of primitive attempts at music, won in the same game! Truly the parting songs and the genuinely-felt "Rah! rah! rah!" for the Lamoni choir but faintly expressed the enjoyment of the evening, the general verdict of the visitors was that their hosts were adepts at the game.

EFFICIENT HELPERS. In mentioning the music of the conference, we wish to speak warmly of the efforts and assistance of the various helpers, who, responding so willingly and faithfully, relieved much of the burden. Brother Paul Craig took charge of the afternoon services; Sisters Tilton and Skinner were responsible for the music of the forenoon preaching sessions; Brother Frank A. Russell cared for this feature at the Coliseum meetings; while Brother H. C. Burgess stood ever ready to help out anywhere and at any time,—truly a minute-man of efficiency and resource. Then there was the able corps of accompanists, headed by Sisters Gracia Nicholson, and Edith Yarrington, with Sisters Amy Vredenburgh and Nettie Paulson and many others rendering valuable service. Among the instrumentalists and singers who added by individual or other effort in so much beauty and uplift to the various services, it is unwise to mention any since it is impossible to mention all; but each one must feel assured that his effort was appreciated, and that the record which is kept will hold worthy account of every offering that was made in the spirit of love, humility and service.

MISSIONARY CHORUS. The "Missionary chorus," so called by common consent rather than having been officially named, was a pleasing surprise to those who had not before heard it and realized what a combining of effort and talent can produce among our young men who have the gift of song as well as speech. They were under the direction of Brother F. A. Russell, and were liberal in their numbers, which were very deservedly popular.

ANNUAL SERENADE. The annual serenade was a most enjoyable affair this year. The night was ideal, so far as the weather was concerned, and so far as the beautiful spirit of good will and unity was concerned, it was also ideal. About two hundred and fifty singers and their friends started out, and at the hour of 11.30 there were still thirty-three happy spirits singing the songs of Zion in the open air. Twenty homes were visited, in all the four quarters of the town, and since Lamoni is known to be a "city of magnificent distance," this meant a degree of physical endurance as well as musical enthusiasm. The officers of the local choir, assisted by the leaders of the conference choir had the affair under management, and planned the itinerary so as to take in the homes of many of the aged, the sick, the care-burdened, and the music-lovers, and from the general response the effort was everywhere appreciated. The value of these strolling offerings of song does not end with the gratitude of those serenaded, but it works about a peculiar strengthening of the bonds between the singers themselves, as does all unselfish effort mingled and combined with a definite aim of uplift for others. The members of the conference choir feel well repaid for their weariness, and their hoarseness, etc., by the beauty and joy of the picture added to memory's halls on the evening of April 14.

COURSE IN MUSIC. For the benefit of those interested we might say that quite definite steps are being taken towards the establishment of a course in music through the medium of the Graceland Extension Institute. We can not make announcements now, but hope to soon,—also the plans for next year in regard to the conference anthems and oratorio selections.

CHORISTER'S REPORT. From the report of our church chorister to the Presidency we glean the following items, which may give an idea of the amount of energy and time he is putting upon this Combined Choir Movement: "Two thousand five hundred letters of instruction, encouragement, and acknowledgement written, besides form-letters and announcements concerning the national, district and local work, amounting to as many more. One hundred and forty-six choir rehearsals conducted during the year, and one hundred and twenty church services, including concerts. . . . I sense the need of leaders. Enthusiasm, musical knowledge, grit, 'stick-to-it-iveness,' and the other graces that combine leadership, is a combination seldom found, but when it is, you will find the possessor occupying almost every position of responsibility the church has in its favor to bestow. . . . Our greatest need is for leaders,—specialists, if you please,—who can devote their entire time and energy in teaching and directing. Our work would then grow apace, and I am looking forward to the time when the musical department will be of sufficient importance to warrant this outlay of time and expense. . . . The spirit of progress that has marked this work since its inception leads me to expect great results after we have passed from the trying scenes of the infancy stage of development. In the vision of its possibilities I see a strong, finely-adjusted organization growing out of this primary effort. Its great big volume of harmonious sounds will strengthen the Saints in the hours of need and trial, while its joyous strains will accompany them in their victories. Music is for the world,—the masses; and its greatest place is in the church, where we can associate its magnificent power with the power of the word, for ever acclaiming majestically that God is great and marvelous; and he changeth not!"

Masters of Music

FELIX MENDELSSOHN

Abraham Mendelssohn, good old German Jew and the best of men, used to have his joke, even if he were the butt of it: "Once I was the son of my father," he used to say, "now I am the father of my son." The Jews look with pride on this Mendelssohn family. With pride and with sadness, too; for while Moses Mendelssohn was the first of the great German philosophers and yet orthodox, Felix, grandson, was gifted of the gods with the fine genius of music, yet became a Christian, and gave his art in service to the uncrowned king.

The Jews have given many fine men to the world, but none of sweeter character, nor finer gifts than Felix Mendelssohn. His life was all too short, but was of the rare beauty of the flower that blooms for a day and with the twilight fades out for ever. His was a gentle nature, and a happy experience.

In Mendelssohn, one is reminded of Mozart, yet their lives are thrown into sharp contrast. Both were children of Genius; infant prodigies; destined from their cradles to have greatness thrust upon them,—but how different their course! Mozart wore his heart away in an ungrateful world, stricken in poverty, and rejected of men; Mendelssohn had wealth and fame and friends. Yet, despite adversity for the one, and prosperity heaped upon the other, each kept his own sweet poise, serene and pure and gentle. That alone is enough to measure greatness.

Mendelssohn was fortunate from the start. His grandfather, together with his fame and wealth, had bequeathed him a friend. Zelter, the great musician and a rugged old philosopher withal, took the boy solely out of love for the family, but shortly Felix won a place for himself. Never did child learn more rapidly. He was a constant wonder and joy to his master, and the very idol of his family. From the first he could improvise, and with the simplest theme set before him could weave wonderful and almost endless variations.

When he was thirteen years old, Zelter took him to see Goethe, and a great friendship sprang up between the great German poet and the slender Jewish lad. The visit was prolonged to a month, and from the delightful letters Felix wrote home, we know it to have been a great experience for him. And for the famed man, eighty years now, the fresh, young spirit was a breath of life, and a new revelation. Hours the boy would play, and the old man sat by his side in rapt enjoyment.

When eleven years of age Mendelssohn had written a cantata and produced it at home, and when seventeen wrote the overture to the Midsummer Night's Dream, best known and perhaps most popular of his lighter pieces. What with recitals and composing and travel, his life from the first was crowded full, yet he was a methodical worker and a finished craftsman. No piece left his hand uncompleted, and each bore the date and his signature. Always it is noted as characteristic of his work—his form is perfect, nor does the beauty of his composition find less of harmony and melody than of style.

Many times he traveled from his native city of Berlin, patronized by his proud father who lavished his wealth upon him without stint. Five times he was received in London, each visit proving his popularity greater than before. He played for Queen Victoria. He was numbered among her personal friends. In Paris he met Rossini and Myerbeer. Wherever he went he was guest of honor.

With honor came responsibility, and Mendelssohn was often at the Royal Court. In Berlin he was commissioned to build a great conservatory of music, and many years of his best time and talent were spent in this work at the king's command. He lived to see the work well under way, but he was too delicate to complete the task of organization. Switzerland, where he traveled in high hopes of health, failed to revive his drooping spirits, and he was hurried home to be among his friends. November 4, 1847, he died. Seldom was man accorded greater honor. His acquaintance embraced all Germany, and those who knew him loved him. At thirty-eight he had achieved fame that will last with the memory of the race.

Aside from the many other pieces and "Elijah," one work alone had given him great honor, and to-day stands as his greatest achievement. "Saint Paul," than which, excepting Handel's "Messiah," there is no greater oratorio, was his supreme gift to the world. A Jew's tribute to the "Great Apostle to the Gentiles," Saint Paul, is a pledge of the time when Jew and Gentile shall see the same bright vision, and Christ shall be King to us all.

Hymns We Love

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT

The faultless diction of this most dignified of hymns attests the scholarly ability of the author, John Henry Newman, better known as Cardinal Newman.

He was born in London in 1801. His father was John Newman, and his mother was a member of one of the old Huguenot families, and a Calvinist. He was educated at Ealing and at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated with honors in 1820.

He filled various high offices in the Church of England, and became a leader in ecclesiastical affairs, during which time much of his writing was directed against the Catholic Church. His first poem, written in early life, but not printed in his collection, relates to the massacre of Saint Bartholomew. But gradually his mind underwent a change, and in 1845 he made a formal recantation of all he had said against the church of Rome, and asked admission into it.

He was sincere and satisfied in this change of his religious belief, comparing himself to a sailor long tempest-tossed on the broad sea who had, at last, entered a peaceful harbor. He filled several important positions in the Catholic Church, and in 1879 was made a cardinal by Leo XIII, thus receiving the highest honor in the power of the pope to bestow. His death occurred in 1890.

Cardinal Newman is better known by his prose works, which rank among the world's best literature, than by his poems, of which there are but few. Among these is one entitled, "The dream of Gerontius," from which a beautiful hymn, "Praise to the holiest in the height," is taken; but doubtless his best known hymn is "Lead, kindly light."

This was written in 1833, while on a Mediterranean trip taken for the benefit of his health. He had been in Sicily for three weeks. Of this period he writes, "I was aching to get home; yet for want of a vessel I was kept at Palermo for three weeks. At last I got off on an orange boat bound for Marseilles." This boat was becalmed on the voyage in the Straits of Bonifacio, and during this time the beautiful hymn was written. It is dated "at sea, June 16, 1833," and by its author was entitled, "The pillar of the cloud."

Writing of this hymn, author Howard Greene says, "It comes to us as a draught from the 'well of English undefiled.' Newman has culled some of the most beautiful phrases from the masters of English, and presents them to us in a posy. 'Kindly light,' 'encircling gloom,' 'garrish day,' 'o'er moor and fen,' 'o'er crag and torrent,' 'with the morn those angel faces smile.' We do not often come across English like that nowadays. We must go back to the Elizabethan authors for it."

Musical Notes

At the International Exposition it is expected that at least eight choruses of one hundred and fifty voices each will compete for the ten thousand dollar prize offered some time ago. More than that number of male choruses of sixty voices each will compete for a prize of three thousand dollars which has also been offered.

The Extension Division of the University of Minnesota is arranging for concerts to be given in various parts of that State, principally by its own graduated musicians. It is hoped that these will take the place of inferior ones formerly prevailing. No profit is expected from these concerts, but it is hoped that they will pay actual expenses.

In the Wanamaker Auditorium concerts are being held, devoted to American compositions almost exclusively. They have created quite an interest, being very favorably received thus far.

The University of Illinois has installed a new four manual organ, containing fifty-eight speaking stops. An inaugural organ recital was given subsequently in honor of the event.

Saint Louis Notes

Would that we had the power to properly commend the most excellent work done by the choir of the Saint Louis District during the past quarter.

Many weeks ago, so that a firm foundation might be laid, our district chorister, Brother E. C. Bell, began work on Maunders' Cantata, "From Olivet to Calvary." Almost living the life of a traveling minister, he attended a different branch each evening, personally supervising all rehearsals. However arduous the task might have been, we know he was well pleased, as was the congregation, when the chorus of eighty voices singing with splendid attack and diction those sad but majestic strains filled the church which was taxed to its utmost. Many listeners remained standing throughout the rendition, while still others were unable to gain admittance.

Not alone was it a delight to listen but also to see, for our fifty girls dressed in white, each wearing a corsage bouquet of pink sweet peas, the compliment of our choir leader, and our boys dressed in dark suits made a fitting background.

We feel to especially mention the work of Sister Kate Warren who so ably presided at the organ and Sister Florence Burgess who, with her well-known ability, furnished the piano accompaniment.

We believe all engaged in the work felt the value of service to others and sensed the idea of possibly reaching some one whose soul music alone might touch. And so, with an idea from Longfellow, but with words changed we would hope

That soon hereafter
In the heart of some friend
We might find our Cantata
From beginning to end.

Yours sincerely,

ANNA DE JONG SMITH.

March 27, 1915.

Fanny Crosby

At the age of ninety-five years Fanny Crosby, the famous hymn writer, died at her home at Bridgeport, Connecticut, on February 12. During the last fifty-five years of her life she has written thousands of hymns which have been sung in Christian meetings in every land. Latter Day Saints are indebted to her talent and inspiration for many soul-stirring hymns used in the Sunday schools, and in many meetings of the church, no less than seventeen of her hymns being found in "Zion's Praises," every one of which is well known to nearly every boy and girl in the church. These hymns include "With a steadfast faith," "God will take care of you," "Let us away, no longer delay," "Praise him, praise him," "Glad tidings," and "Hark, hark, the song." Some of her older hymns were "Saved by grace," "Blessed assurance," "Rescue the perishing," and "Safe in the arms of Jesus." She was born in Putnam County, New York, March 24, 1820. Her success in hymn writing is remarkable in that it was accomplished against adverse conditions to which most persons would have surrendered. In her infancy she became blind and so continued the rest of her life, but in her childhood she resolved to bear her lot with patience and uncomplainingly do what she could to make others happy. The joy of her own soul has already extended to thousands and even millions of others and will yet go to many more.—Zion's Ensign.

A Difficult Task

Enrico Caruso, at a dinner preceding his departure for the Covent Garden season in London, said that when he grew too old to sing he would probably teach.

"Teaching the voice is a difficult task," he continued. "It is a fine thing to be a good teacher. Some pupils are so very stupid.

"You can no more hurry a voice than you can hurry a flower; but most pupils want to become star singers in a month or two.

"A lady said to one of my friends, a superb teacher:

"I am going abroad next month, and I want twenty-five lessons in voice culture before I sail."

"Impossible!" said the teacher.

"Why impossible?" said the lady, "I could take two lessons a day some days."

"Or, better still," said my friend sarcastically, "you could take the whole twenty-five lessons all at once one after the other. A day would do it, then."

"Splendid!" cried the lady. "Shall we make it to-morrow?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS, LAMONI, IOWA

Father

AN INSPIRING FATHER

A short time ago President Wilson addressed the clergy of a certain religious body and took occasion to pay a high tribute to his father, Joseph R. Wilson, who had been a Presbyterian minister. The President said that, upon being requested to make the address, his thought immediately went back to his very happy boyhood, in which he was associated with one of the "most inspiring" fathers that ever a lad was blessed with. Of his father he said that he was the best instructor, the most inspiring companion a youngster ever had, and that he (the President), in facing his audience, could not think of himself as the President of the United States, but as the son of Joseph R. Wilson.

This statement of the noted man who made it deserves to be associated with the one made by "the wise man" of long ago who wrote in praise of the good mother: "Her children arise up and call her blessed."

"THEY TWAIN ARE ONE"

Without detracting from the eloquent and true things so frequently spoken and written of our good mothers; it may be urged that things as true and eloquent may be said of our good fathers. In the picture of the home, close beside mother, near enough for her to lean upon his strength when her own is not sufficient, and just a little taller than mother, because he is the head of the house, stands father when he is in his heaven-ordained place; and many are the strong, true, tender men who are trying right manfully to fill that place.

For every beautiful picture that may be drawn of the devoted mother, its companion picture of the devoted father may be painted; for every tender song we may sing of mother, we may sing the companion song of father; for every poem we read of mother, we may and ought to read one of father, and one to his credit.

For they were created to be one; they are one in the majority of instances.

HOME WITHOUT FATHER

We all know how desolate home is when mother is taken away whether it be early in life or late, but do we not feel bereaved when father goes? What picture is more appealing than that of mother and the little ones who cling to her, left to face life without father's strength and protecting, providing love? Who shall bring into the home the food, the clothing, and the other necessities and comforts of life when father is gone? Mother's hands were already full applying them to their uses after father had brought them within her reach. She must neglect her duties, if father be gone.

Who shall stand behind mother in the years when her boys are just passing from childhood into manhood, when her love does not always appeal immediately and the father's firmness is needed to hold the boat steady, lest the youngsters rock it too boisterously? He must even add his "Thou shalt not," when the young daughter, if she can not overpersuade mother, shall throw off her restraint.

Father has a place in the home all his own, a place no other, not even mother, can fill. It is true all fathers do not measure up to the places they occupy; it is as true that all mothers do not measure up to their places. Both fathers and mothers will do better as the importance of their work grows in appreciation.

Father and mother should not be separated even in the praise we bestow upon them. They belong together; their work is inseparable. While they live and after they have gone, let us reverently and lovingly associate them, father and mother.

"THE HOLY FAMILY"

This is the title often applied to that family in which the Son of God was born, but is not every family, built up after the divine plan, a holy family? Those are sweet pictures of Joseph and his precious charge, Mary and the child, but heaven must smile down upon other family scenes in which they present a holy trinity, father, mother, and child.

Heaven must smile upon the young father beside the couch that holds wife and the little child that has just come to them, as he sits there with a joy in his heart purer than anything he has ever known before and with that light upon his face of which poets say that it "never was on land or sea," the light of a deep, newborn, unselfish love.

Heaven must smile on the little circle when all outside persons who have ministered to them have gone and the father puts his strong young arms about the other two and tells how he is going to work for them, what things he is going to do for them, how his work is light throughout the day when he thinks of the two at home, of the gladness in his heart because of the home for which he toils.

For father-love as well as for mother-love, let the world be thankful.

I THANK YOU FOR BEING SO GOOD

It was a young Jewish daughter who wrote the words and it was to her father she wrote after she had married and gone to her own home: "I thank you for being so good—for the blessing of good parents rests on their children."

This sweet message from a child to a parent persuades us that the blessing which had descended to her from a home so pleasant would continue to descend through her to other generations.

A FATHER THERE WAS

There are fathers—and there are other fathers. A father there was who turned his back and slept on when the baby cried in the night, even if he cried for hours, a father who never was known to do any of those small things a man can do to help in the care of a child, a father who estranged wife and children from him through long years of penuriousness and selfishness, a father who was never a source of comfort or joy, a father who, to-day, reaps the harvest he sowed in the spring of his life, a harvest of loneliness and isolation.

A father there is who finds pleasure in doing for his small son, who was heard to say one day as he dressed the little fellow, "This is something your grandpa never did in his life." Then, as the baby smiled in his face and quivered with joy at his attention, he folded him in his arms, saying, "And he doesn't know what he has missed."

"A babe in the house is a well-spring of pleasure." They do not know what they miss who never drink at that spring.

MY DEAR OLD DAD

Who was it when life's morn was young,
Ere yet its school day bells were rung,
First in my heart and on my tongue?
My dear old dad.

Who never chid our childish play,
But made more bright each sunny day,
And helped the fun in every way?
My dear old dad.

Who, when his babe a schoolgirl proud,
More than his scanty means allowed,
Gave me a chance in life's great crowd?
My dear old dad.

"For I've not much on earth," said he,
"Of worldly goods to leave to thee, Learning is thine, and e'er shall be;"
My dear old dad.

And, when his girl to schoolma'am grown,
Who had, for her, kind word and tone,
And ways of courtesy all his own?
My dear old dad.

Who knew each foolish, girlish thought,
And ways of wisdom always taught?
(Though knowledge ever must be bought)
My dear old dad.

And though his face is now not seen,
Though miles of ocean roll between,
The memory of his love is green;
My dear old dad.

O heavenly Father, close to thee
 Keep him, and guard him sacredly,
 Till his dear face once more I see!
 My dear old dad.

And when we reach the farther strand,
 To meet among the ransomed band,
 May I there clasp him by the hand,
 My dear old dad.

Hot Weather Hints

Doctor John Harvey Kellogg of the Battle Creek Sanitarium quotes a certain psychologist as saying that it is easier to be good-natured in cold weather than in hot weather and as suggesting that a good thing to do is to keep the temper in cold storage during the heated term.

The doctor then proceeds to give some advice as to how to keep the temper in cold storage; in other words, how to keep the body cool. He says:

"1. Avoid flesh foods. Flesh meats increase irritability at all seasons, and especially in hot weather, when the nerves are already overstimulated by the heat and requires a cooling rather than a heating diet. Dog-keepers recognize this, and suppress meat entirely when teaching tricks or training animals for hunting.

"2. Eat sparingly in warm weather. An excess of any sort of food disturbs digestion, and the effects are speedily seen upon the disposition.

"3. Avoid mustard, pepper, peppersauce, ginger and all irritating condiments. These things simply burn, blister, and sting. They have no nutritive properties whatever and their effects are altogether mischievous. The Mexicans are noted for being the most hot-headed people in the world. They are also the greatest consumers of red pepper.

"4. Take a short, cool bath every morning, and a longer neutral bath at night. The morning bath may be taken with a towel wrung out of cold water, or it may be a quick rub in a tub of water at temperature at which the water runs from the pipe. The evening bath should be at a temperature of 92 to 94 degrees. It should be a full bath. The duration should be anywhere from ten to thirty minutes. It is a most excellent means of cooling off, and has a quieting effect upon the nervous system which secures sound sleep and complete recuperation. There is nothing like the neutral bath to combat insomnia. It is better than all the sleeping medicines ever discovered.

"5. Drink plenty of water during warm weather. Do not be afraid of taking a little fluid at meal time. Half a glassful of water or some fruit juice may be taken at meals without injury, provided it is taken at the close of the meal. The principal harm from drinking at meals results from rinsing the foodstuffs down before they have been properly masticated. . . .

"6. Live as much as possible in the open air. Sleeping outdoors in the summer is an excellent practice.

"7. Make large use of fruits. Fruit juices are an excellent antidote for biliousness, summer complaints, and other disorders peculiar to the summer months.

"8. Avoid excessive use of fats in the summer. There is a general tendency to a slowing of the digestive processes during the hot months. Fats have a tendency to interfere with gastric digestion, hence should be used sparingly.

"9. Take great pains to masticate every morsel of food so thoroughly that it will be reduced to liquid in the mouth, and reject everything that can not be made liquid, or at least semiliquid, by mastication. A large amount of rubbish swallowed into the stomach is very harmful, especially to persons suffering from gastric catarrh and slow digestion." (Taken from The Battle Creek Idea.)

An Elder's Mistake

[The following letter from an isolated sister is published for the wholesome suggestions contained therein. This sister seems deeply touched by the effects of labor performed in her vicinity. It should be remembered, of course, that it is not always the fault of the elder when offense is taken. People sometimes attend our meetings out of consideration for our good and righteous Saints and with a degree of unspoken protest. In such instances they are often looking for something to criticize and become offended at. However, this fact is no justification for an uncalled-for attack on the faith of any. In fact, since such is the case it behooves the elder to be careful lest he give offense, or semblance of justification for offense. With reference to the matter of story-telling, the elders are admonished by the Lord that they should lay aside lightness of speech, etc. The HERALD Editors are ever mindful of the isolated Saints. Many letters and pleas that come to us lay bare the feelings of these people. Hence we gladly give place to this letter; the suggestions of which should be helpful both to the ministry and to other isolated members.—EDITORS.]

I consider it a grave mistake for an elder to go into a locality where there are only a few scattered Saints and where there is an opportunity to preach to a few, made up of all denominations as well as nonbelievers, and get up and compare denominations and ridicule the churches and church people. Men under these circumstances sometimes wonder why they do not accomplish more. Some have remarked that if the Saints had lived their religion the minister's efforts might have met with more success, when really it was the manner of his own work that interfered.

It is almost more than one can stand to sit and hear their friends and neighbors whom they have invited to attend submitting to an injury to their feelings by the thoughtlessness of our elders. It takes a long time for the local Saints to adjust matters with these people, when they did not cause the offense nor desire it to be caused.

These neighbors will say, "I know you people have always been very charitable with us. You have come to our meetings, helped us in all ways that you could; but what did that preacher do that for?" So it is not always the lives of the scattered Saints that interfere with the progress of the work.

Another thing: I think our elders should guard against frivolity in both pulpit and home. If they tell the gospel story as we have it and have taught, they have no time for silly stories that are better left untold, and which serve only as a basis of criticism after they have gone.

Our religion is peculiar to many people who do not understand it, and all are watching for an opportunity to find fault. Hence we should be on guard so as not to bring reproach on the cause.

I do not wish to be considered a crank, but we have observed the above conditions and have felt that if they were kindly mentioned it might help some other isolated ones. I do not think that the elders give offense purposely. It is when they are off their guard or when they are not considering the isolated Saints and their position and the effect their work is likely to have on the good cause of righteousness that they give offense.

AN ISOLATED SAINT.

ROCKLAND, ILLINOIS, March 9, 1915.

Editors Herald: In 1913 our Sunday school was organized with an enrollment of twenty-four, of which ten were Latter Day Saints. Before the first of the year three of these had moved away. In December, 1913, some of the sisters decided they would like to do something to help along God's work, so they met every Thursday afternoon, when after scriptural reading and prayer in the observance of the prayer union, the time was spent in sewing.

In January, 1914, we organized the Humble Workers Aid Society. We felt that our numbers would grow and our Sunday school need a place to meet in other than the homes of the Saints, and that if we could save a little money for this purpose as well as others we would be accomplishing good. It is amazing the amount of work a few can do if they are earnest. We believe the Lord has been with us and has prospered us. Our Sunday school struggled along about as it started except that three of our members, adults, were baptized, for which we rejoice exceedingly.

Some elders came in a little while ago and held a few meetings, but it seemed impossible to get any besides the Latter Day Saints to come and hear. Elder Daer, of Roscoe, Illinois, has been our main stay, rarely missing a Sunday, in teaching the Bible class and preaching.

At the beginning of the new year things seem to have changed for the better. Our aid society has been separated from the prayer union and meets now on Wednesday afternoons. The membership is now double what it was when we started, and all are working zealously. Within the past fortnight Elder J. O. Dutton has been preaching here to a few interested listeners. Services were held a few nights in the homes of outsiders, leaving a good impression, with an invitation to come again. Three have given their names for baptism. Some others have moved here, and we are expecting Brother and Sister Randall Robinson, of Lamoni, Iowa, here soon. So we are growing slowly.

Our city is large, and surely there are many honest-hearted people who would gladly accept the gospel if we could only get it before them.

Your sister,

MARY L. BALLARD.

UTE, IOWA, March 9, 1915.

Editors Herald: Last year the church papers were sent to me by loving friends who will never know what great blessing they have been to me until they receive their reward at the judgment bar. May God's richest blessing be theirs to enjoy. None of us have been sick this winter, for which we are thankful. Work is scarce here and many men are out of employment. My companion has been at work at small pay all winter, so our needs have been supplied.

This leaves us strong in the faith and learning more every day about God's plan of salvation. We are watching, waiting, hoping, praying and working that the end of this time of great trouble may be near. In the one faith,

SADIE BURCH.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, March 9, 1915.

Editors Herald: An elder could locate with advantage to the work in Glasgow. There are many here who could be interested in the gospel. I am sure with proper work we could break through the wall of prejudice existing. Two people told me they were going to be baptized. One of them is a lady who was with me when Brother Anderson was here last winter. She was reared in the Roman Catholic faith. I visited a Catholic priest when Elder Newby came here to hold meetings. I found him a reasonable man. While he did not believe in the work of restoration, he said he was willing to investigate our claims further. "He that is warned should warn his neighbor" is a true saying, and worthy of all effort.

It takes money to travel from place to place, and when the elders come to us and try to build up the church it is the duty of all to do what they can in a financial way. The Lord says in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that this is the way to know his disciples, they will feed you, clothe you, and give you money. We are commanded to let our light shine before men that they may see our good works and be led to glorify our Father in heaven. Among the best ways to glorify God is to pay our tithes and offerings to the Bishop, that the ministry may be kept in the harvest field and that more laborers may be called. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers few, especially in our part of the vineyard. The hastening time is here. We can not tell how soon peace will be taken from the earth. Many of us will be weighed in the balances and found wanting lest we exercise care.

I know if we do our part in this glorious work we will be worthy to gather when the command comes. We should take up our cross daily, forsaking all worldliness and worldly lust, keeping the commandments of God.

The few Saints here in Glasgow will get together and try to organize a Sunday school as soon as our Quarterlies come.

Yours in the faith,

Box 286.

Editors Herald: Many good things come to us through the HERALD and Ensign. I take much pleasure in reading the precious things contained therein. The sermons and letters bring joy and peace to my soul, even that heavenly feeling that comes from above. The greatest joy in life is when I go to church and Sunday school, or read the word of God. Were it not for the gospel I do not know what I would do. It is the joy of my life. I want to do whatever I can for the Lord. I desire to be numbered with the wise virgins when Christ comes to make up his jewels.

We are a little band of Saints striving to hold to the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life. A storm blew our little church about and wrecked it badly during the past year. We were not able to use it, so all went to work and the Lord blessed us and now we have a nice new church and a much larger one. It is paid for except for only a small amount, about sixty dollars I think. We thank God for his blessings.

We have a nice Sunday school, with a large attendance. We have prayer meeting every Sunday morning at nine o'clock. Brother I. M. Smith just closed a weeks' meetings here, and left a good interest. I feel that the Lord is blessing his children in the Fairview Branch. Three months ago Brother Swen Swenson visited us and held a series of meetings, with a large attendance and good interest.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may live faithful to the end.

Your sister in Christ,

ROXIE COOPER.

CARBON CLIFF, ILLINOIS, March 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: In the summer of 1904, Brother F. A. Russell was holding meetings in our little village, and Sister Gainey and the writer attended and became greatly interested. He helped us to see the better way, and though the Spirit rested upon us and testified to the truthfulness of the work, we did not yield obedience until one year later, when Brother Thurbow and Amos Berve were holding meetings at the Cliff. There on a beautiful Sabbath morning wife and I were buried beneath the wave in Rock River, to rise to newness of life in service to him whose command we had obeyed.

Though dark clouds have hovered over us and almost shattered our faith, yet we have never regretted the step taken. We are the only ones at this place in the church. Our prayers are that the honest in heart here may be brought into the fold, and that we may live to see our children in the fold of safety.

Ever striving to assist in this great cause, I remain,
Your brother in bonds,
THOMAS GAINEY.

VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, March 10, 1915.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is absolutely the best paper I ever read. It enables me to keep in touch with the work, and I deeply appreciate the contents, especially the editorials and original articles, which are uplifting and encouraging. In them we receive the benefit of greater minds than our own; new thoughts and new fields are opened up to us. The letters from the many are encouraging.

Wishing the HERALD every success, and that the good things contained therein may benefit others even as I have been benefited, I am, Your brother,

ALBERT H. FORD.

"Cumorah" 47 Beaconsfield Parade, Northcote.

LOXLEY, ALABAMA, March 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: Our Sunday school is getting along nicely. We only lack one point now of being a first grade school. We need a suitable house in which to hold our meetings. We have been trying to build a church since last spring, but there are only a few of us, and we are poor and do not get along very fast. Our building is twenty by thirty. We have it sheeted and the roof on, but lack windows, doors and floor. We do not know when we can complete it.

Brother A. E. Warr has been with us, and it is he who organized our Sunday school yesterday. I was selected as superintendent. I want to do all I can for the Master. I love the work, but feel my weakness and inability. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may have God's Spirit to be with me to lead and guide, that I may be a faithful instrument in his hands for good, and that I may be humble and full of charity.

In gospel bonds,

H. M. AEBLI.

LOCK 4, PENNSYLVANIA, March 17, 1915.

Editors Herald: After firing by such big guns as Brethren Richard Baldwin, R. C. Russell, O. R. Miller, A. V. Closson, and James Bishop, in December, 1914, we thought to try some smaller ones. Our Brethren John Carlile, and Cecil Nevill of Akron, Ohio, and Brother Carlile, of New Philadelphia, came to Lock 4 and performed some labor. We have taken nineteen prisoners who have been born into the kingdom of God, with more names for baptism. Others are near the door.

When we look about and see the fruits of their labors, surely the brethren whose names appear in this letter will not think they have sown the seed in vain. When missionaries come to a locality and preach, after their departure Saints should not sleep until they come again. Each man should warn his neighbor, which we are commanded to do. We should live so that our neighbors can see that we are in possession of light, and then we may expect return for the efforts put forth. We can not expect all to be pleasure.

We had a good conference at Fayette City, February 21 and 22, the largest ever held here. Brethren G. T. Griffiths, R. C. Russell, J. A. Becker and others were with us, which gave encouragement and made the conference a success as well as making friends for the cause. When Brother Baldwin preached the funeral of Brother Clyde Steward who had been a railway brakeman and was killed on March 7, leaving wife and four children, our church at Fayette City was crowded to the utmost. Many could not get in the building. The people are wondering about the great man they heard and the things he taught. We have Brethren McConaughy and Nevill with us now.

The battle is on. I want to keep it up until all who are Christ's in our little village come to the light. In gospel bonds,
SAMUEL GASKILL.

Extracts from Letters

Mrs. Lucy Friddle, Route 2, Box 138, Gilmer, Texas, a non-member of the church and writing for literature, says: "We would like to hear a Josephite preach."

Maud E. Stafford, New Liskeard, Ontario: "We intend having our church dedicated and holding a two-day meeting June 5 and 6. We expect Brethren R. C. Evans and John Shields. Visitors from other points will be made welcome and accommodated."

Bettie Belle Smith, 2429 South Thirteenth Avenue, East Oakland, California: "Some one has kindly been sending me the HERALD for some time, for which I feel thankful in my heart. I do not know what I would do without it. Surely the church papers bring to us the bread of life, without which we would weaken, dwindle away, and die spiritually. I pray God's blessing upon all the church."

Mrs. Oral Feagins, Wallowa, Oregon: "We live in Wallowa, Wallowa County, Oregon. If there is an elder near here I wish he would come to us. I wish to be baptized. My husband is a member of the church, and I am ready now to join it also."

News from Missions

British Isles Conference

The business sessions of the annual conference of the Manchester (England) District, Easter Saturday and Monday, also the services of Easter Sunday were held in the new church of the Northeast Manchester Branch, James Street, Bradford. At the Saturday evening session the spiritual reports of the branches comprising the district, the reports of the district ministry, also of the district officials were read.

The district president considered that progress had been made during the past conference year, despite the many conditions which are present to hinder the work.

The treasurer's accounts showed that the income had met the expenditures, with the exception of a very few shillings.

The secretary's report gave a net gain of seventeen members to the district for the year 1914. There had been twenty-three baptisms during the year.

An important item of business transacted were the favoring of the registration of the new church of the Northeast Branch, for the solemnization of marriages. This will obviate the necessity of the Saints solemnizing their marriages in the places of worship of other denominations.

The worthy Leeds Branch presented an appeal for affiliation with the Manchester District. Brother Herbert Stockdale and Sister Meadowcroft were present with us as delegates to represent the Leeds Branch. We were unanimously in favor, and granted the application.

The committee intrusted with the work of providing for the heating of the water for the baptismal font in the new church reported its successful completion.

The North Manchester Branch applied for the money which is being held in trust by the district, to be placed into the accounts of their building fund. (This is the balance of a building fund which had previously been raised by the North Branch, but circumstances had arisen which had compelled them to relinquish their effort; now they are again subscribing with the object of erecting a suitable church of their own in which to worship.) The district presidency were appointed as a committee to attend to the legal and other formalities attendant upon the transfer of the money.

The providing of towels and baptism gowns was referred to the branches for their individual action.

J. W. Taylor was reelected as president of the district, with G. W. Leggott and John Bailey as vice presidents. William Worth was reelected as secretary, with Abel Hall as his associate. James Waugh was reelected financial secretary and treasurer; John Foden as musical director to conference; and James Schofield, the retiring auditor, was reelected for the term of three years.

The Sunday services were spiritual feasts, and were greatly appreciated by the Saints. The speakers for the morning service were Brethren Arber of Sheffield, and William Byfield of Warrington. The afternoon fellowship service was in charge of Patriarchs James Baty and Henry Greenwood. The evening meeting was addressed by Henry Greenwood and J. W. Taylor, the district president.

The whole conference was characterized by the abundance of peace and unanimity and of calmness in its business deliberations.

We are sincerely your brethren,
JOHN W. TAYLOR, District President.
WILLIAM WORTH, Secretary.

Arizona

Having received, in common with all Saints of the riches of spiritual blessings from the Lord, wherein we all with one accord rejoice together, I write to verify the same upon my part anew, and, if possible, to encourage some. Our daily measure of blessings are a continual reminder, when we reflect upon them, of the perpetual renewal of our obligations of service to our King.

We in Arizona are striving to contribute our best energy to the gathering out of the few of this age who will be recruits to the grand army of select from all ages, comprising the "called and chosen and faithful." Our uppermost desire is to be fit instruments through whom the Lord may issue his "call," and we are rejoicing to witness unmistakable evidence of his "choosing" in the excellency of spirit which is put upon those who under our ministry heed his call. Called, chosen, faithful; the calling is true; the choosing is sure; and it remains with each individual whether he will be faithful.

We came to Phoenix, Arizona, by conference appointment a few months ago, entering into a new field where all were entire strangers except one dear Saint who resides here and whom we had met at the General Conference. By the unrestrained support of the very few Saints here and the able assistance we have had from Brethren Ammon White and S. S. Smith of the ministry we have been able to present the gospel to a vast number of people, to make many friends to the church, to rescue many from much of the thralldom which shackles the devotees of pernicious hell-worm doctrines, and to baptize a few into the church and kingdom of God. Last Sunday we had the pleasure of baptizing our nearest neighbor.

A debate between the Utah church and the "nonprogressive" Church of Christ is now in process over at the town of Mesa, which is fifteen miles from the city of Phoenix. W. G. Roberts from the State of Illinois meets the Utah man J. E. Robinson. I inclose notice of the debate for information to HERALD Editors, which they may use as they care to do. Fifteen hundred people crowd the Mesa tabernacle to hear the discussion. Mr. Roberts seems to have the advantage of having to affirm only one proposition, while his opponent affirms the three propositions, namely, the church identity, Book of Mormon, and divine calling of Joseph Smith the Prophet. Moderator for Mr. Roberts is S. O. Poole.

The first night's discussion showed Mr. Roberts to be a little more rapid as a speaker than his opponent, also more apt and alert in dressing up faulty positions to make them look respectable. Both speakers provoked applause from the audience, but the storm of applause was with the Utah man, Mr. Robinson, as their membership at Mesa greatly predominates in numbers.

DISTRICT BISHOP'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Spring River, Eastern and Central Oklahoma Districts; Greeting; As we enter upon the duties and obligations of this very important conference year, I trust and believe we sense the responsibilities that are rapidly rushing upon the children of God. We should divest ourselves of everything that might threaten in any way to hinder our hearty cooperation and absolute loyalty to God and to his work.

The times are perilous, and the call for bold, capable men and women increases as the field widens. Not that all should preach, but all should respond to the call of service and duty, remembering that if the children of God are to find favor, direction and protection here, and salvation at the end of this life, it will come only as the result of observing and obeying absolutely the councils and revelations of God.

The year 1914 was fraught with world-wide disasters, and the church passed through severe trials but the all-directing and loving hand of God has not failed in the hour of need.

We are entering upon encouraging conditions, and our beloved ministry goes forth with renewed determination and zeal. Will we who remain at home arise to the temporal emergency of the hour and see that the dependent ones are supplied, so that the husband and father need not have mental reservations?

I have confidence in God's people, many of whom have been tried in the past and not found wanting. Let the watchwords be courage, duty, service, and on to victory.

The following brethren are agents at large, and will collect and receipt for tithes and offerings: W. M. Aylor, J. T. Riley, Arkansas, Texas, and Louisiana, my counselors, Earl D. Bailey and Hubert Case in Oklahoma, J. Arthur Davis, Western Kansas, Elam Erwin, Eastern Oklahoma and Northern Texas.

Your brother,

ELLIS SHORT, Bishop of the Above Districts.

Summer School at Graceland

For years it has seemed to us that there was a logical field for summer school work at Graceland. This seems especially true this year in view of the fact that there will be no such school in Decatur County and also because of the action of the State Legislature requiring that after July 1, 1915, all teachers must have a twelve-weeks course in normal training, and also offering an increase in salary, based upon the scale of grades.

To meet the demand thus created, a summer school has been organized to be held at Graceland, lasting six weeks, beginning June 7. The tuition for the session will be $10, and board and room may be secured at the college dining hall for $4 per week. All subjects regularly required for the first and second grade certificates will be offered, and in addition courses will be offered in manual training, domestic science, and agriculture. Special courses such as music, oratory, or commercial subjects will be provided for if there is sufficient demand.

Our school has been fully accredited by the State of Iowa, which means that we shall have more than five competent instructors, and sufficient library and laboratory facilities to provide standard work in every way.

Young people of the church, especially those living in Iowa, will have an exceptional opportunity in this school this summer, and should not fail to make use of it. The school is designed especially for:

1. Teachers holding second and third grade certificates who desire to increase their average grade.

CONCERNING THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

To the Church: The Presidency and Twelve, to whom was referred by the last General Conference the matter of reorganization of the Presiding Bishopric, met in joint council in Independence on May 5, in response to a call by the undersigned, there being present both members of the Presidency and all but one of the Twelve. Patriarch F. A. Smith, also present, was given voice and vote in the deliberations.

After a discussion lasting through several sittings of the council, at some of which Bishop E. L. Kelley was present, a plan was agreed upon, the execution of which was referred to the President, the Presiding Bishop, and the president of the Twelve. The plan provides for opportunity being given to the one who was in a recent revelation indicated as having a great responsibility to assume in the Bishopric to step in and occupy in due season and in harmony with a plan suggested by Bishop Kelley and agreed to by the council, the transfer of chief responsibility to be made at the close of the fiscal year.

The council further discussed and agreed upon what should be done in case the one indicated above should not choose to assume the responsibility pointed out (his decision to be made in a specified time), and in such a contingency two bishops will be asked to associate with Bishop Kelley in the work of the bishopric the present year, or until his successor can be legally selected and qualified. Indeed, in either event one of the two bishops will in all probability be asked to go into the office of the Presiding Bishop to relieve Bishop Kelley of office details. The names of the two bishops above referred to will in due time be presented to the church should the necessity for their appointment arise, and further information published as the plan develops.

In the meantime, it is to be hoped and urged that the Saints will avoid agitating the questions involved in this reorganization of the Bishopric, but rather extend to the church their spiritual and financial support. To the joint council was referred the task of working out the readjustment. When this council reports to the General Conference will be the time for discussion of its work. Until then it will be well to avoid agitation of the matter, as harm is likely to result from discussions where all sides are not represented.

May patience and wisdom have their perfect work.

Your servant,
FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Council.

PRACTICAL RELIGION

In this busy age it is demanded that everything should do the work for which it is designed. The man who buys and maintains an automobile expects it to go. The railroad that builds and coals an engine expects it to make time. The engineer does not want a dumb watch; nor the carpenter a tin saw; nor the farmer a wooden plow.

Why should not men be equally insistent that their religion and that of their neighbors should be efficient? We include our neighbors because it becomes a matter of concern to us if our neighbor professes religion and does not live it. If his religion is out of order and will not work, it is bound to affect us sooner or later; just as with the railroad that maintains a train service that is never on schedule time. The moment that we have dealings with such railroad people their delinquencies cease to concern them alone and become a part of our business, subject to our scrutiny and our demand that they make time or alter their time-table.

For similar reasons the community has a right to demand that a man's actions conform to his professions; otherwise he is an uncertain and dangerous element in society, jeopardizing the interests of any who deal with him on the supposition that he is living up to a certain standard. For the very reason that so many professed Christians have been "running off time" the world has lost confidence in their schedule.

As a matter of fact it is not worth while to profess religion at all unless we intend to be practical in our religious life. Certainly it is not worth while to be a Latter Day Saint in name and not in deed.

Do not feel sorry for a Latter Day Saint who is living his religion, even though it may cost him sacrifice and turn away some of his so-called friends. He is not a subject for pity, because he is doing what he is expected to do and will be well paid for it later. Save your pity for the recreant Saint who has inherited the ill name that the world gives our people while he is not living so as to obtain any part in the reward. He has been to some expense for the sake of his profession and has failed to make it work.

A practical religion will work a constant change in one's life; it will keep him patient under severe provocation; it will keep him honest while driving bargains; it will keep him virtuous when tempted. A religion that will not do those things is not worth while.

A practical religion will put one to work. It will lead one to develop and use his abilities. Sometimes it is a pitiful spectacle to see a man trying to work for God while hampered by lack of education or natural ability; but again, do not waste too much pity there—save it for the man who has ability and education and is too lazy to use them. That is the spectacle over which angels weep and devils laugh.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NEED OF GOD TO-DAY

One of the clearest expositions of the so-called orthodox contention that the special gifts and blessings of the Holy Spirit were done away in the first century, or early in the second, appears in the Apostolic Review of December 22, over the signature of Daniel Sommer, recognized among his brotherhood as the leading advocate of the Church of Christ, better known as the Anti-Christian Church, and who perhaps is as able a representative of this position as may be found anywhere. If, then, the fallacy of the contention appears here, its weakness is emphasized by the very medium of its expression.

Elder Sommer states that the gifts and callings of 1 Corinthians 12:28 and Ephesians 4:11 were special, in addition to the natural gifts of man, and that by these gifts was the church prepared to introduce the gospel among Jews and Gentiles to the conversion of sinners and the perfection of believers. He affirms that the church of to-day has a record of these gifts of the Holy Spirit in the New Testament, and that these records, together with those of the Old Testament, furnish this church with all the information needed for the conversion of sinners and the perfection of believers.

GIFTS FOR ALL

It is not specifically stated here that the gifts were confined to certain chosen ones and were not for each and all, but the language "The 'one body' that was ordained by the Savior as 'his body' had in it many gifted workers; men and women that had special gifts of the Holy Spirit in addition to their natural gifts," suggests that such is the opinion held. In the Review of May 11, however, Elder Sommer states specifically that such is his position. He says:

Those "signs" did follow those that were believers at that time, namely, the eleven apostles that received the world-wide commission of our Savior. Yes, and those "signs" followed or attended a few others that heard the gospel through one or several of those apostles.

This, also, is the opinion of the Church of Christ brotherhood and of many others. It is commonly urged that the operations of the Spirit were manifested in the work of the few; and the majority say only in the work of the apostles and of those upon whom the apostles laid hands. This time-worn theory is unwittingly set aside by the further discussion, in the Review of December 22, of the gift of faith. We read:

But some one may ask if faith is not now a gift of God to some? The answer to this question should be negative. Faith was a gift in the days of special gifts, but that faith was a gift only to certain ones that had already become Christians. This is evident by the following: "For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit." (1 Corinthians 12:8, 9.) These declarations show that only certain persons received faith as a special gift. But this was not the faith, nor the special degree of faith, that is necessary to make a Christian.

Now, it is admitted that to one was given by the Spirit wisdom; to another knowledge; to another faith. From the same hypothesis we have the fact that to one was given healing; to another miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another tongues; to another interpretation. Expanding the text to include the introductory statement of the Apostle Paul, and that following after the language quoted, we learn that the manifestation of the Spirit was given to "every man"; that is, each faithful member received, through receiving the Spirit, a manifestation thereof, the nature of which was determined by God who bestowed the gift. So the admission in the Review sets aside the contention that the gifts of the Spirit were limited to a few, and establishes the fact that upon each faithful Saint was bestowed a gift, or gifts.

NO GIFTS NO UNITY

As against the position that the gifts enjoyed in apostolic times suffice for a clear and unerring interpretation of the way of God in the continuation of the church as perfected, the diversion in organization, opinion and effort throughout Christendom, and especially in the development of the institution represented by the Review, furnishes an unanswerable argument. The extent to which this latter church is lacking in unity is suggested by the following, written by Elder Sommer, and appearing in the Review for April 7, 1914:

The truth may be denied, but it will not remain denied. And "facts are stubborn things," is an old and true saying. And it is a fact that in near or about every congregation where certain papers and their friends have flourished the brethren are divided about "voting and holding office in civil governments," about "attitude of the body in time of prayer," about "rebaptism," "right hands of fellowship," "special providence," also about "official eldership," "woman's silence," "literature for Bible classes," "the right to have Bible classes in the meetinghouse," and about "laying on of hands in appointing officers in the church," also about "religio-secular colleges."

Christ promised that the Spirit would "guide . . . into all truth." The apostolic brotherhood, so-called, are found in the utmost confusion and disunion on the most trivial and the most vital points of church life and potency, as well as on points immaterial to Christian development. Whether to kneel or stand while at prayer; whether to ordain men to the ministry by the imposition of hands; whether to vote for the next mayor of the city—on none of these and similar points are they a unit. Thus they are carried all but to the extreme of Hamlet in his famous soliloquy, "To be, or not to be." That they have not the Spirit of God is a matter self-evident. That the recorded operations of that Spirit alone have not and can not lead them into truth and unity is by their own record and admissions shown to be final and conclusive.

The very discussion in the Review of December 22 from which we have quoted is entitled, "A call to unity," a theme considered so important that we have in hand the twelfth installment; and in the same issue of the Review of December 22, we read this paragraph under "Heart to heart talks," and written by Elder Sommer:

I feel quite sure that a large majority of the readers of this paper are lukewarm in regard to its welfare. They don't consider its history, nor its relations to the congregations that are now maintaining "the simplicity that is in Christ." Nor do they consider that it is, perhaps, the only paper now offered to the apostolic brotherhood in which the plea for scriptural unity can be made with consistency. Let those plead for scriptural unity who have never been unscripturally divisive characters, or who have repented of their divisive work.

For many years the Review has stood for Christian unity among all followers of Christ, and especially among the ranks of its own constituency. And after this long and continuous effort, it remains, perhaps, the only paper in which a plea for unity can be made with consistency, and even then, from the language already quoted and from that appearing in the Review for December 8, we note that it, itself, does so only after penance and restitution:

Except for the brief period that the Review, about fifty years ago, was committed to the college and missionary society heresy, it has been kept clear of heresies, and is not responsible for any defection now existing among disciples of Christ.

But why multiply illustrations further? We have read that the gifts have been done away. And the divisions into which the orthodox Christian world, so-called, has fallen, within as well as between individual bodies, establishes the fact that the wisdom of God has not directed in the affairs thereof.

This contention that the church is without special gifts other than the natural gifts of man, together with a record of gifts once bestowed on certain of the early Saints, leaves those so holding to their natural wisdom in an attempt to interpret the work of an institution organized and commissioned to continue under the wisdom of God. It is little wonder then that chaos should develop, since "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," and since "the world by wisdom knew not God," neither can know him.

NEED OF GOD

Man unregenerated by the life-giving energies of the Holy Spirit can never come to a knowledge of God and his ways, as is evidenced by the divine word, and emphasized by the wreckage and unrealized aspirations of the past. As men come to recognize their own limitations, and to rely upon the power and inspiration of Israel's God, the great and unchangeable Father of all, they move out into light and communion with him. And while the divine plan may appear to the wisdom of man as "the foolishness of preaching," yet it shall "save them that believe."

As churches multiply, as theories and contentions become more diversified, and as Satan in all his deceptive power becomes more determined to overthrow the way of truth, the need of God in the world through the direct and independent operation of the Holy Spirit—operating independently of the written word—is more and more apparent. That this divine unction may go forth to all who will heed the counsel and testimony thereof, it devolves upon every man in the true way to redouble his efforts in righteousness.

SUBMARINE "F-4."—Submarine F-4, lost in Honolulu harbor a few weeks ago with nineteen men on board, has been lifted clear of the ocean bottom, but it is feared a gale may again part the cable.

APPEAL THAW CASE.—The State of New York has taken an appeal in the Harry K. Thaw case to the State Court of Appeals, asking that Thaw be not placed on trial before a jury to determine his sanity.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—United States citizens near Esperanza, Sonora, have been attacked by Yaqui Indians. The United States cruiser Colorado carrying marines has been sent to Mexican waters to aid the Americans if necessary. Outlaws in Mexico City have assaulted the German charge d' affairs and threatened the lives of other foreigners. A food shortage is reported in the capital and elsewhere.

ROOSEVELT EXONERATED.—The jury in the Barnes vs. Roosevelt libel case has found in favor of the defendant, exonerating Mr. Roosevelt. The leading statements made by Mr. Roosevelt and on which action was brought charged Mr. Barnes with corrupt political alliance between himself and Charles F. Murphy, democratic leader of New York, and with working through corrupt alliances between crooked business and crooked politics.

PORTUGUESE REVOLUTION.—A revolutionary outbreak led by naval officers, has occurred at Lisbon. Rebel vessels have bombarded the city, and fighting has occurred in the streets between rebels and loyal troops, a number of people, including Spaniards, being killed. A revolutionary committee seeks control of affairs at Lisbon. Joao Chagas, president of the new cabinet, was shot and wounded on board a train bound for Lisbon. Spanish warships have arrived at Lisbon to guard Spanish interests. The trouble seems to have arisen over who should be president of the cabinet, Jose Castro having been displaced by Joao Chagas. There is much dissatisfaction in Portugal over political, economic and other matters.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The fighting of the week in the west has been favorable to the allies. The Germans have been dislodged from their last stand west of the Yser Canal, and allied gains are reported elsewhere. In the east the Russians are thought to have checked the German advances in Galicia and to be in the act of reorganizing their forces along the San River, though the enemy has broken through and crossed the San at one or more points. Russian victory in Poland is reported. It seems to have been the plan of the opposing forces to drive the Russians back as far as possible before the entry of Italy into the war, should this country finally decide to enter. Further allied successes are reported from the Dardanelles. Additional forces have been landed, and Turkish fortifications on the European side have been silenced. The allies have also landed forces on the coast of Smyrna. France reports the occupancy of the post Esoka, in the German colony of Kamerun, Africa. The sinking of the Lusitania is followed by a period of comparative inactivity on the part of German submarines, a French steam trawler and a Danish steamer have been sunk since last report. Russian vessels are said to have destroyed a steamer and thirty-six sailing vessels on the Black Sea. The British Government has extended to June 15 the time in which German goods purchased before March 1 may be shipped from neutral ports to America. A new nonpartisan British cabinet is to be formed for the period of the war. Several thousand subjects of enemy countries and of military age, the majority of whom voluntarily submitted themselves to British authorities, have been taken to internment camps in England. Those for whom there was not room at the camps are under orders not to leave their homes between 9 p. m. and 5 a. m. These precautions together with the disciplining of British participants in the late anti-German riots reported last week, have put an end to the rioting. Reported massacres of Armenians by Turks and Kurds lacks confirmation. The Italian cabinet is retained in power. Clashes between Italian and Austrian advance guards along the border are reported. Germans and other foreigners continue to leave Italy. Railroads have been seized by the Government and freight traffic between Italy and Germany, and traffic on the Adriatic has been stopped. The Italian Chamber of Deputies by a vote of four hundred seven to forty-seven, and the Senate by a vote of two hundred sixty-two to two have passed a bill conferring full powers on the Government in case of war, and a declaration of war is expected daily. Serbia is reconstructing her army preparatory to a campaign against Austria. (Later.) As we go to press report says that a formal declaration of war has been issued by Italy.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

MANY TIMES DIVORCED.—The extent to which the evils of divorce are sometimes carried in these days is exemplified in the case of one Mrs. Polly Anne Strodes, of Evansville, Indiana, eighty-two years old, and who asks for an annulment of her thirteenth marriage on the grounds that her "unlucky" husband refuses to bathe and in other ways mistreats her. It is said that Mrs. Strodes wants another husband.

MATERIAL AID.—Elders L. G. Holloway and E. E. Long were recently at Worth, Missouri, following up the interest created during a discussion had there some months ago, in which Brother Holloway was one of the principals and Brother Long, his moderator. They were warmly received, and report profitable meetings, considering the busy season. This recent effort was materially aided by the cooperation of the genial editor of The Worth Journal, who gave liberal space—three columns, first page—to mention of our work. In the Journal of May 13, we read:

The Latter Day Saints are preaching original Christianity. That is why their message is "different." It sounds different because there is such a contrast between it and the modern article that it (is) usually branded as being new, whereas it is the old message from Nazareth. . . . The Latter Day Saints claim a new dispensation of divine grace, that the angel of Revelation 14: 6, 7 has come to earth and committed the gospel to men in its original purity and fullness. Maybe there is something to it after all. Anyway, the claim demands more than a passing notice.

OUR CROWN

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 4

BY F. J. EBELING

Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.—Revelation 3: 11.

A note of warning is sounded in the scripture referred to, lest peradventure some might lose their crown, which is a figurative expression for eternal life.

The crown of eternal life is that which everyone seeks to secure when he enters the waters of baptism. In coming into the church we assume a responsibility. Up to that time the church has done it all for us; from that time on we must do something for the church, which is but the point of contact between God and man.

If we ever expect to obtain the crown it will only be by holding steadfastly to all we have. To obtain earthly crowns, rivers of blood have flown, thousands of lives have been sacrificed, lands have been made desolate. In all the earthly prizes, success is nearly always, if not altogether, at the expense of some one else,—or one's gain is at another's loss. But securing a crown in the truest and best sense, means gain for ourselves and all others. In a worldly way only, the strong and mighty could obtain a crown of might over right; but in the spiritual sense, the weakest of all can secure one only by holding to all he has till the coming of the Master.

That the doctrine of Charles Darwin from his point of view is true we can not deny. In this world of which he knew only, the survival of the fittest is the ruling passion. It is the big thriving at the expense of the little. But because certain things survive is no reason they are the most fit. The history of the nations has left us the lessons that it has been brute force which has survived. The Darwinian theory is the survival of the fittest; but the doctrine of Christ is to fit all to survive. A sublime difference!

THE LITTLE THINGS

True merit is the only thing which will secure for us the crown of eternal life. We must work for it. The only way that some man will take our crown is for us to let that man do the work allotted to us. There is no one so small and unimportant in this life but what he has an equal chance to obtain a crown if he will but put to use the small talent God has given him. It may only be to give some one a tract, a kind word, a silent prayer, invite some one to meeting, teach a Sunday school class, bear an humble testimony by which some one may be benefited, or to feed, clothe, and give money to God's servants. Some of these little things everybody can do. The little things in life make up the great sum total in the life to come.

I think it was Michelangelo who after explaining in detail the many little things which entered into the great success of his life, was told by a friend that they were only trifles. "True," he replied, "but trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle."

And so it is. The many little things all along the pathway of life may seem like trifles, but they are the parts that make the grand whole, even that of a perfect character. Now, if we let some one else do the little for us, that some one will receive the crown intended for us, and no one is to be blamed but ourselves. This is clearly indicated by the parable of the different talents. Jesus said, "Take the one talent from him and give to him who has the ten." The man represented with the ten talents performed the work the man with one should have done, consequently, in justice, he received the reward the other should have received.

There is another grand lesson we learn by these talents—i. e., because we have only a limited ability, we should not refuse to work. It is by putting the dollar to work at interest that in time it doubles and trebles its original value, but if hidden away it will never gain anything. It will do no good to us or anybody else. We call that kind of a man a miser. I am afraid that a good many in the day of accounting will find themselves spiritual misers.

BUSINESS PRINCIPLES

True religion is conducted very much on business principles. The man who puts his money out at interest will first benefit the man to whom he loans it. The man to whom the loan is made will benefit society by putting it into his business. And at the end of the allotted time the man who loaned it will be benefited by receiving his own with the interest from the man whom he helped. So with our spiritual matters; we put to use the talent we have; some one in need of the very thing we have will receive it; he will go forward with the good news, and by and by we still have our original amount (talent) with the additional satisfaction of the talent having made some one else rich.

Again, men of business before they invest great amounts of capital first satisfy themselves of the soundness of the institution, and once convinced it is a safe and sound investment will put millions into it. Let us apply the same principle to ourselves. Are we satisfied concerning the soundness of the spiritual institution? If so, then we should be perfectly willing to trust all we have to its keeping. Then if we are satisfied it is the best investment we know of, the best way to demonstrate it is to invest our all.

Any man would be considered very stupid who would put one dollar in the bank and at the end of the year expect to receive as much interest as the man who put in one thousand. If we expect God to give us the best he has, we must give God the best we have. It is only a reasonable and business transaction.

A MIRROR

We get out of the world just what we put into it. Put into the world sunshine, smiles, good deeds of kindness, and the same you will reap at harvest time:

For life is a mirror of king and of slaves,
It is just what you are and do.
So give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Truly will the great mirror of eternity in the great day of reckoning reflect back to us just what we present to it. A face full of scoffing, frowns, faultfinding, and backbiting, will reflect back just the same kind of a face. But if a face which shines with cheerfulness, happiness, gentleness, and hopefulness, faces the mirror in that great day, the same kind of a face will be reflected back. In order to see a beautiful face in the mirror, we must present a beautiful face.

IN WINNING THE PRIZE

Paul in speaking of the great prize, in 1 Corinthians 9: 24, 25, says:

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain: "And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible.

All great prizes are gained by thorough drilling and training. The athlete abstains from everything calculated to reduce the physical powers, such as strong drink, tobacco, overeating, keeping late hours. He goes on a regular diet, with just the proper exercise and rest. Now if the athlete has faith in his trainer, he will willingly submit to his advice; if he does not, it may cost him the prize.

How much more assiduously should we give heed to our great teacher, Jesus Christ, who has promised us an incorruptible crown. In order to obtain this crown, we must be "temperate in all things."

I believe more will lose their crowns by the intemperate use of their tongues than from any other reason. One ill-spoken word at the wrong time (and in fact, I don't know of a right time,) can wreck a whole branch, resulting oftentimes in some going out of the church, and others being made lasting enemies, all of which could have been prevented by a little forethought. Beware of the word which may take your crown.

If we have hard feelings against a brother or sister, get rid of them at once. It may cost you your crown. If you are tempted to take a step backward, do it not. It may be the step that will uncrown you. Should an unholy thought enter the doors of your mind, dismiss it at once. It may be after your crown.

In 2 Timothy 2: 5 we read, "And if a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." God has given us a law by which we are to secure the crown, and to do so we must go according to law.

The Lord has given a law pertaining to temporalities. Now if any are content to sit down and let another man or woman pay his or her tithing for the purpose for which the law provides, that other man or woman will surely get the crown. James says, James 1: 12, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." In order to receive the crown we shall have to endure some things,—must qualify by being put to the test.

We can not afford to take any chances with sin or temptation. We should keep these as far from us as possible. Paul well said he had no "confidence in the flesh." Also he "kept his body in subjection," lest by any means while he preached to others he should himself be "a castaway."

A rich man once advertised for a coachman to take him out for his daily drive. He had a steep precipice to pass by each morning. Three men answered the call. He wanted the safest of them, so he put them to a test. He asked the first one how close he could drive to that cliff without going over. He said, "So close that the edge of the tire would touch the edge of the cliff."

He put the same question to the second one, who in his desire to beat the other fellow said, "So close that half the tire will go over the edge of the cliff."

He put the same question to the third one, who promptly replied, "I will not try how close I can go to the cliff, but will keep just as far from it as possible." This man got the position. Because he was not willing to experiment with danger the rich man could intrust his interest to him. So with Jesus Christ. He can not trust anyone with the crown of eternal life who will experiment with the danger places along the narrow way. Keep just as far from them as possible, or we may lose our crown.

AN IMPERISHABLE CROWN

This crown shall never fade. It will not pass from head to head by the force of arms. Peter says, 1 Peter 5: 4, "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." It is only secured by continuing to the end.

Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the Devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days; be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.—Revelation 2: 10.

We here quote our favorite text,

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, . . . and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Timothy 4: 7, 8.

The secret of his triumph was in the fact that Paul had kept the faith. He had borne the cross and was now ready for the crown. He feared not man, but God. He had won his crown, and no man was able to defeat him.

So let us all hold fast that which we have, that no man take our crown.

Department of Education

EDITED BY SAMUEL A. BURGESS, LAMONI, IOWA

COLLEGE CONDITIONS

On account of the meeting of General Conference, this department was omitted last month. On account of the pressure of work for the close of the college year we are using in this issue the manuscript of our opening address, September, 1914.

The report of the General Conference will give a great deal of information about the college work. Some comment was made upon the increase of the indebtedness to the church. The reason for this is that everything that is received from the general church, except what is sent in as offerings and endowments, is debited against the college. The General Conference of 1914 voted that the college should receive $4,500 in addition to these regular college day collections, and that the finances shall be handled by the Presiding Bishop. The report means that the college actually received $2,000 from the general church. Under the direction of Bishop Kelley, this is credited to E. L. Kelley for the church.

We have noticed recently in bulletins from other colleges emphasis is laid upon wills and legacies, and how much the success of the college work depends upon such gifts. Graceland has not been entirely neglected, as we have received the following sums: April, 1914, Helen M. Merritt, Red Oak, Iowa, bequest, $500; October, 1914, Mrs. L. A. Schmutz, of Pennsylvania, $292.33; March, 1915, Mrs. Harriet Shipp, of California, $666. Most grateful acknowledgment is made of these gifts, as they are a wonderful help in carrying on the work of the college, and we hope that other friends of the institution will likewise remember her.

But sometimes the quotation also occurs to our mind in connection with the finances of Graceland and the other church institutions, "Why will you die, oh, house of Israel?"

EXTENSION INSTITUTE AND LECTURES

As showing the changed attitude towards serious preparation, we should note the report of the registrar of the Graceland Extension Institute, that most of those who have enrolled are missionaries, and nearly all hold the priesthood; and that of all those doing the work, more have applied for the work in English than in any other department. There are between thirty and forty fellows, or instructors, and about an equal number of students or members.

A special feature was the class in English grammar held during the General Conference after the afternoon meetings. Over forty enrolled in this class and many of them enrolled permanently with the institute.

It is certainly encouraging to note the steady interest shown in the morning lectures to the priesthood. We should like to see these lectures made as practicable as possible and a real lasting benefit to the missionary force.

SYNOPSIS OF THE OPENING ADDRESS

Later in the year we shall have occasion to offer remarks, which are intended principally for the students and those engaged in the actual work of the college. But this morning we believe, in recognition of the larger assembly, that a subject of more general appeal should be chosen. So we have selected, "What is evolution?"

There are a great many ideas that have been attached or extended from that subject, which do not properly belong to it. Twenty-five years ago there was much discussion from a purely physiological or mechanical basis, and an attempt to explain all things in terms of matter. A sort of materialistic monoism was suggested, that all things can be reduced to terms of substance, and that there is no will, no intelligence, no life or morality except that which is already inherent in matter and which comes therefrom. But to-day Doctor E. Haeckel is perhaps the only man living who holds such a doctrine. But this is not evolution, as many men believe in evolution, who do not accept materialistic monoism.

Again we are asked, "Do you believe in electrons?" This refers to the scientific assumption that all matter is divisible into molecules, (a molecule being the smallest particle of a substance we can possess without changing its character). The molecules are composed of atoms (an atom being the smallest possible subdivision of a chemical element). Within recent years the assumption has been carried further that all atoms are composed of electrons, which are the only basis of all matter, and are composed of infinitesimal points of electricity, which move at such inconceivable speed that despite relatively very great interstices they form the fundamental atom or chemical elements of a molecule, and finally make a solid substance, as we see and feel it. It will be noted that this is monoism for substance or matter, but does not necessarily include either the mental or the spiritual. Whether this is true or not, is a problem for analysis and experimentation. The present conclusion is that these fundamentals have been fairly well established and are true. But whether true or not, this is not the doctrine of evolution; and whether true or not we fail to see that it makes any great or material difference in ethics, philosophy or religion. From a scientific standpoint it possesses marked probability.

Professor James Sully has defined evolution as "the natural history of the cosmos including organic beings, expressed in physical terms as a mechanical process." As such it would be in contradistinction to the idea that the world was created out of nothing, and that the universe has come from nothing. It need not deny creative power nor the creation of the universe out of chaos. With this we need have no quarrel even as a church, for Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6 plainly states the conservation of matter and of energy, and specifically denies such an idea as creation out of nothing. Curious to relate, this was published in 1835, before such an idea was held in the scientific world; and more remarkable to note, neither the book of Genesis nor the rest of the Bible teaches such a doctrine as creation from nothing.

Ancient traditions teach an ideal monoism in which the Eternal One is the reality and all else is illusion, that from IT there evolves or comes forth the whole of the manifested universe, and to THAT or IT it will eventually return, since IT is not one of many, but the only one. Also the Greek physicist presented a similar thought of the world being generated from primordial matter.

But these earlier ideas were lost and confused during the Middle Ages. Though some preliminary ideas were presented the latter part of the eighteenth century, it was not until 1858 that Charles Darwin and A. Russell Wallace published "The theory of natural selection," while "The origin of species" appeared in 1859, and from then on the doctrine has assumed an importance which it had not before possessed in historical times.

Charles Darwin confined himself to the discussion of the causes which brought about the present conditions of matter, assuming such matter to be in existence. He did not attempt to make a criticism of religion, and was most unwilling that his opinions on religious matters should influence others, holding "that a man ought not to publish on a subject, to which he has not given special and continuous thought." He was a man of extraordinary ability, and placed modern science upon a new basis. Later discussion by others led to the assumption of the descent of man from lower forms of life; noting the physical similarity between the physical construction of the body of a man and of monkey, they attempted to arrange all life in a series, that from protoplasm had evolved the lower forms of life, and by similar changes had produced man from the lower forms of life.

Much of the discussion thirty years ago was taken up with the missing link, of which there were several that had never been found. Modern scientists of the twentieth century no more attempt to find a "missing link" than they would attempt to find a connection straight across between the remote tips of a tree. No more do they try to trace life back to a common ancestor. The problem on a physiological plane is simply whether special forms of animal life were especially created in each age of the world, or whether those in any later age have come from a modification of similar forms found in an earlier age.

Another idea much discussed in the latter part of the nineteenth century was concerned with embryology, and an attempt was made to demonstrate in the life of the individual the historical evolution of the race. This is now considered one of the weakest arguments in favor of evolution, and one that will not hold as being subject to general approval. The embryo may go through forms which if it represented the end of development we should have to classify with the fishes or with the serpents, but this does not distinctly relate it to any present existing forms.

Also the argument of apparently useless structures, which we find so intelligible according to the theory of evolution, but so hard to conceive otherwise, is rather explained by evolution than used in an attempt to support that doctrine. It is difficult to say of any organ that it is useless and has no purpose, even though it be difficult to ascertain what that use and purpose is.

This is considering evolution on a materialistic plane. But when we are asked if we believe in evolution, what answer can we make other than affirmative in view of, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be like, but this we know that when he comes we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is"; and "we shall all be changed in the twinkling of an eye"; and "this mortal shall put on immortality."

Evolution in or of itself as a term means "unrolling," and unrolling almost infers a rolling up. So that we would expect to get from anything only that which first has been placed therein. In the spiritual realm, it means development in the life of the individual, or rather it here means an unfolding in the life of the individual of the divine nature, already in man in an embryotic condition. There must be such involution before there can be evolution. The attempt in Spencer and others to argue that evolution is always from the simple to the complex, and to apply these principles historically to the development of ethics, philosophy and religion, we do not believe has proven successful.

Evolution is a doctrine which belongs primarily to biology. It was brought on to a materialistic basis because the bid for recognition by biology was made in a materialistic age. Perhaps to set forth the attitude of to-day we hardly could do better than quote Professor W. M. Bateson in his opening address to the British Association at Melbourne this fall. We quote from the Independent of September 7, 1914:

He questions whether there is any experimental evidence to support the belief that variation in the old sense is a genuine occurrence at all and whether it is possible in any case to produce modifications in a species by changes in climate or conditions of life. It is true that the creation of a new species—which Darwin's opponents asserted to be impossible—is now a common laboratory experiment. New plants and animals, breeding true, are being "made to order" right along to suit the needs of mankind or the caprices of fashion. But these new species are produced by the use of Mendel's principle instead of Darwin's, that is, by the crossing of species having severally the desired characteristics and not by the gradual accumulation of minute accidental variations. But all the peculiarities combined in the new species preexisted in some of the ancestors, although they may have been suppressed in the parents by the presence of some inhibiting factor. By the redistribution of the inherited elements effected by the cross-fertilization, it may happen that in some of the progeny the determinant causing a certain quality, such as color in a flower, or horns in an animal, or musical genius in a man, will be freed from its restraining factor and so attain a novel and striking development. That is to say, the variation is not due to the addition of a new factor, but to the elimination of one previously present. The course of evolution according to this view, has, then, been in the direction of increasing simplicity rather than complexity, and so is contrary to the Spencerian formula.

Professor Bateson doubts whether there is any case of the origin of species that should not be thus explained by division instead of multiplication. For instance, the wild crab apple, he believes, contained hidden within it all the wide variety of size, form and flavor manifested in the cultivated apples, which have been produced from it by the successive elimination of the inhibiting elements present in the original crab. He extends the theory also to the higher powers of the psychic life of man and says:

"I have confidence that the artistic gifts of mankind will prove to be due, not to something added to the makeup of an ordinary man, but to the absence of factors which in the normal person inhibit the development of these gifts. They are almost beyond doubt to be looked upon as releases of powers normally suppressed. The instrument is there, but it is 'stopped down.'"

Mendel's law referred to above and which is now so freely considered and accepted in biology is the doctrine of unit properties, and—that instead of a child being an average of his parents taken in a mass, a child on the average is affected one fourth by each parent, one sixteenth by each grandparent, one sixty-fourth by each great-grandparent. But in any particular case a child may be dominated in his characteristics by one of his remote ancestors. Take and cross a pea plant, tall, with long, green, smooth pods with a short plant having wide, yellow, rough pods, you would not expect to secure a medium-sized, greenish-yellow one half and one half, but that the unit properties would be combined in every possible way.

The importance of this may be readily seen. The individual may still be adapted by circumstances and environment; those properties which tend to survival may survive; the others be only suppressed. If the wild crab apple contains within it all the properties of apples which have been produced since the first, it seems to your speaker it would express both involution and evolution. It presents a doctrine to which we need have no opposition, and certainly not on behalf of doctrine or religion.

But we are not here this morning to either confirm or defend religion; we are here to get the truth. It is in this spirit alone that we are presenting evolution this morning. And in this spirit we may notice that the idea of cumulative acquired, or inherited traits may be called severely in question. For a thousand years the feet of a girl baby in China were bound, yet every newborn baby had normal feet, clear up to the time of the emancipation of woman. Bergson and Bateson agree that creative evolution comes by leaps and bounds and not by minute cumulation changes of inherited qualities.

Scientists have many grave problems to solve; skepticism is in the air and as Sir Oliver Lodge, in his presidential address to the British Association for the Advancement of Science points out, there are grave problems to be solved in each department of science (Continuity, page 7):

In physiology, the conflict ranges round vitalism. (His immediate predecessor was Professor Shafer, the physiologist, who discussed the subject of life and the process of artificially producing it. This is an old discussion between the physico-chemical and vital theories of life. Is life a series of physical chemical changes?)

In chemistry the debate concerns atomic structure. (Sir William Ramsey two years before discussed radio-active bodies, as his experiments had been concerned with the influence of radio-active bodies in promoting the transformation of one element into another.)

In biology the discussion is on the laws of inheritance. (To this we have already referred in the address of Professor Bateson.)

In education, curricula generally are being overhauled or fundamentally criticized, and revolutionary ideas are promulgated concerning the advantages of freedom for infants.

All of our teachers are aware of this discussion, including the Montessori system.

Some of these points do not immediately concern our subject, yet in a deeper way continuity does. As Mr. Lodge says:

But if we have learned from science that evolution is real, we have learned a great deal. I must not venture to philosophize, but certainly from the point of view of science, evolution is a great reality. Surely the universe progresses in time. Time and space and matter are abstractions, but are not the less real: they are data given by experience; and time is the keystone of evolution. "Thy centuries follow each other, perfecting a small wild flower." . . .—Ibid., p. 97.

I see the whole of material existence as a steady passage from past to future, only the single instant which we call the present being actual. The past is not nonexistent; however, it is stored in our memories, there is a record of it in matter, and the present is based upon it; the future is the outcome of the present, and is the product of evolution.

Existence is like the output from a loom. The pattern, the design for the weaving is in some sort there already; but whereas our looms are mere machines, once the guiding cards have been fed into them, the loom of time is complicated by a multitude of free agents who can modify the web, making the product more beautiful or more ugly, according as they are in harmony or disharmony with the general scheme. I venture to maintain that manifest imperfections are thus accounted for, and that freedom could be given on no other terms, nor at any less cost.—Ibid., p. 98.

Either we are immortal beings or we are not. We may not know our destiny, but we must have a destiny of some sort. Those who make denials are assertions thrown into negative form. Scientific men are looked up to as authorities, and should be careful not to mislead. Science may not be able to reveal human destiny, but it certainly should not obscure it. Things are as they are, whether we find them out or not; and if we make rash and false statements, posterity will detect us—if posterity ever troubles its head about us. I am one of those who think that the methods of science are not so limited in their scope as has been thought; that they can be applied much more widely, and that the psychic region can be studied and brought under law, too.—Ibid., p. 100.

Many scientific men still feel in pugnacious mood towards theology, because of the exaggerated dogmatism which our predecessors encountered and overcame in the past. They had to struggle for freedom to find truth in their own way; but the struggle was a deplorable necessity, and has left some evil effects. And one of them is this lack of sympathy, this occasional hostility, to other more spiritual forms of truth. We can not really and seriously suppose that truth began to arrive on this planet a few centuries ago. The prescientific insight of genius—of poets and prophets and Saints—was of supreme value, and the access of those inspired seers to the heart of the universe was often profound. But the camp followers, the scribes and Pharisees, by whatever name they may be called, had no such insight, only a vicious or a foolish obstinacy; and the prophets of a new era were atoned.

Now at last we of the new era have been victorious, and the stones are in our hands. But for us to imitate the old ecclesiastical attitude would be folly, for it can not be sustained; humanity would ultimately rise against us, and there would come yet another period of reaction, in which for a time we should be worsted. Through the best part of two centuries there has been a revolt from religion, led by Voltaire and other great writers of that age; but let us see to it that the revolt ceases when it has gone far enough. Let us not fall into the mistake of thinking that ours is the only way of exploring the multifarious depths of the universe, and that all others are worthless and mistaken. The universe is a larger thing than we have any conception of, and no one method of search will exhaust its treasures.—Ibid., 104, 105.

And therein lies the pity! It is indeed unfortunate that the religious world in the past dogmatically tried to hinder scientific development; but it is equally unfortunate that too many of our so-called scientists appear with stones in their hands, and show as much of dogmatism and as much of bigotry towards the church as has ever been shown by the churchmen of the past.

In the past it has been churchmen who have founded science, maintained and continued the schools. It has been churchmen who have kept the fire of truth burning and have made the great researches of the past, until recent years. Mendel was a Catholic priest, not to name a mighty list of others. Great men have been noted for their willingness to receive the truth, but it is the Pharisees, who come after, who neither enter in themselves nor permit others to enter, who are ready to cast stones on all who do not blindly accept their dogmatism.

To-day we need fear no severe attack from the masters of science, since the vast majority (in fact, there is but the one exception that comes to our mind of those who are really masters and leaders, in modern scientific thought) accept the idea of a great spiritual force, as set forth by the religious world. It is not the scientific leaders nor their thoughts to which we need make objection, but to the countless thousands who were impregnated with the materialism of the last one half of the nineteenth century, and who have not kept in touch with growing thought and investigation, but continue to teach a narrow concept even of that materialism. It is such teaching in the hands of such scientific Pharisees that has a tendency towards agnosticism, and even infidelity. Never need scientific truth offend.

Again, there is the difficulty that the public do not generally place the right value on scientific research. Very little is laid down as absolute truth by scientists, if anything. But there are theories and hypotheses. Now, by saying this we do not by any means discredit scientific discoveries. They are milestones marking the progress of the race, and act as bases, from which further research may be made. They are accepted as probable, and not "believed" in dogmatically by those who know. We are reminded of the story of the scientist who upon being consulted set forth his researches and conclusions, and then added, "But don't you say, young man, that I believe it. Don't you dare say that I believe it!" Meaning, that while his life work showed that his conclusions were probably true, he did not want to be understood as "believing" them, as an article of faith or to any extent dogmatically. His conclusions were still subject to investigation and test and only accepted as probable bases for future study and experiment.

We want the truth, and let us have no fear that the truth will ever work injury. In conclusion, permit us to quote the last paragraph of the address of Mr. Lodge:

Men and brethren, we are trustees of the truth of the physical universe as scientifically explored; let us be faithful to our trust. Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things. It is not surprising that by our methods we fail to grasp it; the actions of the Diety make no appeal to any special sense, only a universal appeal; and our methods are, as we know, incompetent to detect complete uniformity. There is a principle of relativity here, and unless we encounter flaw or jar or change, nothing in us responds; we are deaf and blind therefore, to the Immanent Grandeur, unless we have insight enough to recognize in the woven fabric of existence, flowing steadily from the loom in an infinite progress towards perfection, the ever-growing garment of a transcendent God.

Of General Interest

THE WORKING CHURCH

In the last three quarters of a century a radical change has taken place in the methods and spirit of church work. Three quarters of a century ago the only equipment of a Christian church was a building for Sunday worship, and sometimes, though rarely, a separate room for a Sunday school. The parish house was unknown. Rarely, if ever, was there a mission chapel. The missionary work of the church was done at long range by home or foreign missionaries.

In 1844 the Young Men's Christian Association was organized. At first it, also, was chiefly a preaching and worshiping association, but gradually it grew to be a social, a teaching, and an athletic association. The churches, inspired by its success, followed its example. To-day every efficient church in our larger cities has its mission chapel, and an increasing number of them a parish house, with its educational and club facilities. . . .

By many this development of church activity is looked upon with suspicion if not with apprehension. It is regarded as a secularizing of religion, as a diversion of the work of the church from its proper function of public worship and public preaching, into activities which are purely humanitarian, as a substitution of philanthropy for religion. We recognize that there is danger in this movement, as there is in all radical movements, but we believe that it is distinctly in the direction of a broader, better, more human, more Christlike activity, a movement back to the ideal of Christian service given to his church alike by the teaching and by the example of the Master.

Jesus Christ in his first recorded sermon announced the mission which he had come to fulfill on the earth:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

After his death he imparted to his disciples the Spirit, and gave to his disciples the mission which he had received from his Father: "As the Father hath sent me," saith he, "even so send I you." To do Christ's work is to do what he did. It is not recorded that he ever conducted public worship. He did preach the gospel, but he also fed the hungry, healed the sick, comforted the sorrowing, and imparted a life which has educated the ignorant, emancipated the slave, and transformed governments from the government of the many for the benefit of the few to governments by the many, through the ministry of the few, for the benefit of all. The kingdom of heaven which he preached was not a kingdom in heaven, but a kingdom on the earth, interpreted by the prayer which he taught his disciples, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

We are coming to understand better than our fathers did the nature of this kingdom, to see the meaning of the declaration of Paul, that godliness has the promise of the life that now is as well as of the life which is to come; that the God of this life and of the future life is the same; that the laws of this life and of the future life are identical; that the secret of happiness there is the secret of happiness here.

We are coming to understand also that the object of the church should be the development of a perfect man; that the apostles and prophets and evangelists and pastors and teachers are all for the purpose of bringing men unto a perfect manhood; and that perfect manhood means that the body, soul, and spirit shall all be made blameless. We have learned, on the one hand, how great is the influence of the spirit on the body, and the modern physician does not expect to cure physical disease by merely physical remedies. He ministers to the body through the spirit, and the best doctor is always better than the medicine which he prescribes. We are also learning the effect of the body on the spirit. We no longer expect an ideal sainthood in an emaciated and inefficient body. We do not substitute a gymnasium for the prayer meeting, but the gymnasium may be as truly a Christian instrument as the prayer meeting. We do not substitute a boys' club for a Bible class, but the boys' club may be as truly a Christian instrument as a Bible class. Not only healing the sick but preventing sickness by the promotion of a sound body is doing Christ's work. It is carrying on by modern methods the kind of work that Christ did by the methods available to him in his own time.

We are beginning also to learn the difference between teaching and training. Training is the formation of habit. What a man does once he does more easily the second time. What he does frequently becomes a habit. Habit long continued becomes a second nature. It is advantageous to preach in the pulpit the duty of fellowship. It is also advantageous to form under the leadership of the church and imbued with the Christian atmosphere a club in which boys and girls shall learn fellowship by practicing fellowship. It is advantageous to preach that one should be willing to sacrifice himself for the general good. It is also advantageous to train boys and girls to form the habit of sacrificing themselves for the general good. That is what the boys call "team work," and the habit of team work can better be trained in boys and girls by a wise gymnastic teacher than by a Sunday-school teacher. One of the great lessons we have to learn in America is how men of different races, religious faiths, social prejudices, can work together for their mutual benefit. In other words, one of the great lessons we have to learn in America is the lesson of human brotherhood; and one of the best ways of not only teaching this lesson but of developing this spirit is in the club under Christian influence and Christian leaders.

Under the influence of this movement the church itself is taking on a new life.

The definition of the church given in the Thirty-nine Articles may fairly be taken as the definition of the church which has been prevalent in all Protestant churches until, say, half a century ago:

The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men, in the which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments be duly ministered according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same.

If the church is simply a teaching organization, then an auditorium in which the people can assemble and one educated teacher to instruct them are all that is necessary. If it is simply a worshiping organization, then a sacred edifice in which they may gather and may unite, either passively or actively, while a priest, set apart for that purpose, conducts the worship, is all that is necessary. But if the church is a working organization, if it is to prepare men for successful and beneficent business, if it is to prepare them to develop a good physique, social efficiency, and spiritual friendship, it must have more than a teacher and more than a priest. The clubhouse will be useless unless Christian men and women carry the Christian atmosphere into it. They can not send it by the hands of a messenger. Thus this modern, broad, humane conception of Christianity as a power which fits men for this life, fits the whole man, body, soul, and spirit, and fits him by training, not merely by teaching, reacts upon the church and makes it a living organism, a true army of volunteers.

There is a great difference between the religion of humanity and the humanity of religion. The religion of humanity is based on the belief that we can know nothing about God and a future life, that all we can know is our neighbor, and all we can do is to practice the Golden Rule in our dealings with him.

The humanity of religion is based on the belief that God is the Father of the whole family of man, that because he is our Father we are all brothers, that we go to church not to serve him but to be served by him, that the only way to serve him is by rendering service to his children. The church which substitutes institutional work for inspirational work makes a fatal mistake. The more institutional it is, the more inspirational it ought to be. But that church follows most closely the example and possesses most fully the Spirit of the Master which uses the instruction from the pulpit and the worship at the altar to inspire the whole membership to carry out into life, and, as far as possible, through the influence of the church, the spirit of brotherly love.—The Outlook, December 2, 1914.

LESS LIQUOR--MORE MONEY

[HERALD readers are always interested in the development of Independence, Missouri, the "central place" of the gathering of latter days, hence will be interested in the following from the Jackson Examiner of April 30. It will be remembered that at a municipal election some months ago Independence went "dry." The Examiner, published at Independence, is discussing business conditions there since prohibition went into effect.—EDITORS.]

Mr. Vardeman who operates the Merchants' Delivery for twenty-two firms in this city has noticed several things of special interest, in fact in his business he keeps tab on all parts of town and how the people buy. Mr. Vardeman said this morning:

Within two days after the saloons were closed in Independence after the local option election the C. O. D. packages began to increase in size. Within a very short time the amount of money collected by my boys in this way was fifty per cent more than when the saloons were open, and now the amount is at least double.

Before local option we collected every day from $75 to $100 for C. O. D. packages sent out from the firms we serve. Now our C. O. D. collections run from $150 to $200 every day and more than that on Saturday. I think it means that people who before local option had only ten and twenty cents to spend for food now have forty and sixty cents. This is the way the increase comes, they are buying more than they did before, and only buy what they have the money to pay for.

Most of the grocers and market men agree with Mr. Vardman's estimate of the situation, and say that they have noticed a decided increase in the amount spent in certain quarters for food.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Children's Home Funds

The church through its legislative bodies has caused to be brought into existence the different institutions and departments of church work. No one institution or department should be fostered at the expense or neglect of any other, each one receiving proper consideration at the hands of the people.

The Children's Home is but one of the interests which the Saints are morally and financially expected to sustain, and the hearty support that has been given this institution in the past is a sufficient guarantee that the needs will be met in the future as from time to time these needs may be presented.

Knowing as the trustees do, the continuous demands made upon the membership of the church to sustain financially the various departments of church activity, they are made all the more sensitive to the necessity of exercising diligent care in the matter of expenditures in conducting the affairs of the home.

We are very much concerned and desirous of seeing the institution accomplish a splendid service for the children and meet every legitimate demand made upon it by the church, yet we must not involve the church any further in debt,—had better fail in the service than to run the institution in debt.

We desire to tell you what it should mean to the membership of the church to keep the home on a safe financial basis. The home is in debt $2,500, loaned by different individuals on notes bearing six per cent interest. This amount formerly was a mortgage upon the real estate, bearing seven per cent interest, but within the past year the change has been made at a small saving to the home. The amount of interest to be met is $150 a year, or $12.50 a month. The running expense, including interest, donations of clothing, etc., is approximately $300 per month.

It is not like some other concerns connected with finance where the expense may be raised or lowered at will, but is more or less controlled by rigid conditions, making the requirements the same, no matter whether the donations received are great or small for any given month. There are just so many required on the pay roll each month, just so much light and fuel needed, just about so much provisions to be purchased, about so much repair necessary to be made; and taking all in all you can readily see that the home has obligations to meet each month regularly. To assist in meeting these obligations the treasurer has been receiving from different ones amounts each month regularly. As a result we have learned to depend upon certain amounts coming into our hands to assist in meeting the monthly expenses of the home. The home needs more of these friends who are willing to lay aside certain sums to be forwarded to the treasurer each month or at stated times.

For obtaining a list of those who wish to contribute in this way we have in our office contribution cards to be filled out and returned to the treasurer of the home. We should like very much to send to certain ones these cards to hand to those who feel they can donate regular amounts and send in this way—address the writer and secure these cards.

In addition to those who are sending in these regular contributions there are those throughout the church who send in as they may feel led so to do. Had we the space we could tell you of letters received from those who have made sacrifices in order that they may make an offering in the interest of the children. An aged sister tells how she labored with her own hands and out of her small earnings remembered the children with an offering.

Various Sunday schools and different branches have made special effort and remembered the home with offerings from time to time. This is as it should be.

The sisters in their organizations have been of great assistance to the home in securing of means to carry on the work. In addition to the general society of the Woman's auxiliary, the home has received donations from twenty different local societies at different times during the past year. We feel thankful that there is opportunity for all to labor in the interest of the church, and in connection with the Children's Home is certainly a splendid place for the mothers to assist. We are anxious to cooperate with any and all in advising together along lines connected with the means of support of our home.

There are something near forty acres of agricultural land in connection with the home. Our vision of the future of our home is to retain the land, where the boys and girls under wise and efficient management may be seen tilling the soil, raising all the garden truck, fruit and vegetables, for the table, producing from a small dairy herd all the fresh sweet milk and butter that is needed, and which is so desirable for the nourishment of children. Employing the hand of the child is necessary to proper development along with training the mind, filling the heart and nourishing the body.

We furnish this statement concerning the land connected with the home in order that the Saints may better appreciate the value and necessity of retaining the land—as it has been suggested by some that a part of the land should be sold and with the proceeds pay off the $2,500 indebtedness. This land once disposed of, the home can not, in all probability, secure other land in the future so convenient of access no matter how pressing the need or how able financially the home might become.

I wish it were possible to appeal to the Saints who read this statement of our need to touch the feelings of a sufficient number to cause them to respond, that this debt might be paid and the land preserved to the home for the future development of the work along agricultural lines. Friends of the home, could you not be one of twenty-five to pledge your word to raise one hundred dollars and wipe this debt out? If you are willing to make the attempt we feel while writing this that anyone so making this worthy sacrifice will be blessed in the deed. Dear reader, pause long enough here before you read further and ask in all sincerity the question, Lord, is it I that can do this service for the church? And may we not hear from you in a short while as to what the answer is that comes back to you? We will keep you posted in this department of the HERALD as to the progress made in raising this amount. If you can not pledge the one hundred individually, secure others to go in with you to raise the amount and report results.

Since the organization of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home, the debt has been gradually growing less, and we are very anxious that it be entirely paid off and the burden lifted from the institution.

We feel that the Saints should be apprised of that which the home is doing in the interest of the children; that they should become better acquainted with the policies connected with the management, and be in hearty sympathy and cooperate in the support and development of the institution. Information should be sought by any on matters that are not understood, as well as suggestions offered that would aid the board of trustees in their work.

We have thus briefly mentioned some of the continuous needs required to finance the running of the home, and some of the ways in which the Saints are responding to the support. There are times when our treasury becomes depleted and not sufficient coming in to meet expenses. We are now passing through one of those periods when there is a shortage in funds. We take this opportunity and means of stating this fact that the friends of the home may put forth a renewed effort in the sending in of their offerings at once.

We will report to you from time to time through this department of the HERALD the existing needs and whether these needs are being supplied promptly or not.

Address remittances to the undersigned.

JOSEPH ROBERTS, Treasurer.

A Discussion

[The following is interesting as involving a discussion of questions and matter vital to the faith of the Saints.—EDITORS.]

_____, FLORIDA, October 17, 1914.

Dear Brother Prettyman: After much careful reflection and consideration on the subject, in order to make sure that I was not doing the wrong thing by it, and in order to be fair with you folks as well as with myself, I have decided to withdraw my name from the membership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, and to give you my full reasons for so doing. And as I don't know who the secretary of that branch is at the present time, I will send my application for withdrawal to you, and you can report it to the proper authorities.

First of all, I want to say that I have no personal motives for quitting this church other than that we are unable to see things alike. I hope none of you will feel hard toward me for following the honest convictions of my conscience on this matter. Although I sincerely believed the things taught by the Latter Day Saint Church to start in with, some way or other I couldn't explain it myself except that I couldn't see sufficient proof in the Bible for some of your doctrines. I gradually grew apart from the latter-day faith as held by your people, and am no longer able to recognize the claims of your church as to having more Scriptures, or as to being the Church of Jesus Christ and holding to all its doctrines.

First, let us consider the source of these things, for the source of a thing generally determines its character, as a stream can rise no higher than its fountainhead and as a chain is no stronger than its weakest link.

Most important of all is the Bible test found in Isaiah 8: 19, 20; "And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for (or instead of) the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them."

Now as to the Book of Mormon, from what source did it come? You will say that it was given to Joseph Smith by the hand of an angel. Very well, doesn't the Scripture say that Satan also appears as an angel of light? You say this angel said his name was Moroni. What! not the man that claims to have made an abridgment of the Book of Mormon? Yes, you folks say, We believe it was his departed spirit. Are you then sure that you are not deceived in this matter? How do you know that it wasn't one of them which the Scripture designates as the "spirits of devils," or, "seducing spirits"? John says that we should not believe every spirit, but that we should try the spirits to see whether they be of God or not.

Can we find any place in God's word where it says that the departed spirit of any man appeared unto any living man? Yes, there was Samuel (?), who after he was dead for some time appeared unto King Saul and told him what would come to pass before it came. Well, let us try this spirit and see if he will stand the test, and if he really was Samuel.

By reading the twenty-eighth chapter of 1 Samuel you will see the circumstances that led up to this event I am about to relate for your inspection. You will notice that when Saul had seen the numerous hosts of the Philistines, he was greatly disturbed and tried every way possible to obtain instruction of the Lord as to what he was to do, but all to no avail; the Lord had forsaken him because of his disobedience. He then turned to a woman who had a familiar spirit (which was contrary to the law), and requested her to bring up Samuel for him. Then when Saul asked this medium what she saw, she replied that she "saw gods ascending out of the earth." "What is his form?" asks Saul. Says she: An old man cometh up and he is covered with a mantle. Then Saul perceived (in his own mind) that this was Samuel, and began at once to pour out his troubles to him; but he even got no sympathy from this old ghost who realized that he would lose his reputation if he prophesied good things to Saul when he knew that God was against Saul and had probably decreed his destruction with that of his sons and his armies; so this self-styled Samuel tells him all about these things, stating to Saul that he and his sons would be with him (Samuel) on the morrow.

This statement so troubled Saul that he flung himself upon the ground and we have no record in the two chapters following the one in which the above events are recorded that either Saul or his sons entered the battle until at least four days had transpired (chapter 30: 1-17), when Saul and his sons marched forth with their armies, to be slain themselves and their armies defeated. (Chapter 31.)

First you will notice that this spirit who was supposed to be Samuel came up out of the earth, while Samuel's spirit should have come down from God (Ecclesiastes 3: 21; 12: 7), that is, if such a thing were possible. This spirit came from the wrong direction to be Samuel's. Then he lied to Saul, which, Samuel being a prophet of God, couldn't have done. Here I will leave him for you to draw your own conclusions.

Next we will turn to the spirit Moroni and see how he stands the test. By their fruits ye shall know them, said the Master. If you can find a copy of the Apocrypha, I would be glad to have you look over with me the following portions of the books of the Maccabees: 1 Maccabees 8: 20-22, chapter 14: 16, 27, 48, 49, contain the idea of writing upon tables or plates of brass; 2 Maccabees 1: 18-36 shows up the origin of the name Nephi; then 2: 4-7 mentions the hiding up of sacred things which were to come forth again in their time; and in the same chapter, verses 23 to 32, is suggested the idea of the abridgment of certain records which, according to the idea, first mentioned, would suggest the idea of their being written upon plates of brass or gold in keeping with the custom of the times.

Anyone by reading 2 Maccabees through could at once see that it was incredible and spurious. And as this plainly sets forth the foundation for the Book of Mormon where does it leave Moroni and his gold plates? Doesn't the whole thing look like a fraud on the face of such evidence as above? It does to me, anyway.

Again let us examine a few more of these spirits. Take for instance the one who ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to the Aaronic priesthood. Now doesn't Paul plainly infer in Hebrews 7 that after the death and resurrection of Christ the Levitical (or Aaronic) priesthood was changed for that of the Melchisedec, as there was no more need of the former after Christ had made his offering, which constituted him priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec? So this leaves John the Baptist with no priesthood to offer and you folks without any authority in it.

Now let us bring forth the spirits of Peter, James and John for trial, that is, the ones that conferred upon Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon and Oliver Cowdery the Melchisedec priesthood. Referring to Hebrews 7 again we find that Christ, because he continueth for ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood, or one that passeth not from one to another, which leaves Peter, James, and John also without any priesthood to offer, hence leaving you without any authority in that priesthood. As far as I can find out, the Bible only authorizes us in the receiving of one spirit, and that is the Holy Spirit or the Spirit of God; whatever you mind to call it, it is always spoken of as Spirit (not spirits), showing that God possesses and recognizes but one spirit, so that the Devil must have all the rest of them.

Well, what about the spirits of men? you ask. Isn't God the Father of them? Most certainly he is, for according to Ecclesiastes 12: 7 it was he who gave man his spirit, and unto him shall it return when man yields it up and returns to earth from whence he was taken. If our spirits were really our own we could do what we pleased with them, and most of us would keep them in the body and thus live here always; but God is "The God of the spirits of all flesh." That is, they are all parts of the one Spirit of God (not a part of us), and as they were one with him before our creation so they will return to God at our death and become one with him again. We will receive a new spirit at our resurrection, that is, it will be a part of God's Spirit again and not the old one that we had here with us in this life. (See Ezekiel 37: 13, 14, also 36: 26, 27.)

What about the souls of man? you ask; are they not immortal? Well, let us look up the record and see what it says concerning the soul. By reading Hebrews 4: 10 you will observe that the word of God is powerful "even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit," and "the body without the spirit is dead." What about the soul without the spirit? In Matthew 10: 28 we are told that we are to "fear him that is able to destroy both soul and body." Isn't immortality impossibility of death or destruction?

The decree of the Lord is, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." (Ezekiel 18: 4-20.) According to Psalm 115: 17, 146: 4, and Ecclesiastes 9: 5, 6: 10, "The dead praise not the Lord," "know not anything," their "thoughts," "also their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished; neither have they any more a portion (part) for ever (as long as they are dead) in anything that is done under the sun;" for there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest. And what is it that praises, that knows, thinks, loves, hates, envies and in fact takes part in everything that is done under the sun, if it isn't the soul? So that must be dormant in death.

The Hebrew for "breath of life" as it is used in Genesis 2: 7, and different other places is "breath of lives," including at least two lives in that breath or spirit which God gives us, both psychical and physical life, don't you see? To this corresponds Isaiah's prophecy of Christ; "And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his deaths." (Hebrew in margin) "He hath poured out his soul unto death." (Isaiah 53: 9-12.) Speaking of the same thing David says: "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (Hebrew, sheol, the grave), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." (Psalm 16: 10.)

Do not these verses of Scripture show beyond the shadow of a doubt that when Christ gave up the spirit or breath of lives which was in him, he died both soul and body; both were laid down into the grave, but his soul was not left there, neither did his body see corruption. Thus was brought forth the redemption of the soul and the resurrection of the body contrary to the pagan doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its reincarnation into other bodies than this. "He spared not their soul from death" (Psalm 78: 50).

Again quoting David, "What man is he that liveth that shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" (Psalm 89: 48.) "But," says he, "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave, for he shall receive me." (Psalm 49: 15.) Now the question naturally arises as to when God will receive him. Let Peter answer this question for us. In his sermon on the day of Pentecost, he says, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you concerning the Patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulcher is with us unto this day. . . . For David is not ascended into the heavens." (Acts 2: 29, 34.) And "no man," saith Christ, "hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." (John 3: 13.) "But I will come again, and receive you unto myself." (John 14: 3.)

That is when the Lord will receive David unto himself, as well as all others who will be worthy. "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." (Psalm 17: 15.) In the resurrection morn will the longing of David's soul be satisfied, and not until then. Concerning the resurrection of the righteous, Paul says, "For this corruptible (the body) must put on incorruption and this mortal (the soul) must put on immortality," (1 Corinthians 15: 53.) So then we have no immortality here, but must seek for one to come, to which corresponds, Romans 2: 7, "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, (which is) eternal life." Now if we have it why do we yet seek for it? But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world (Greek, age) to come eternal life." (Mark 10: 30.) Not in this age, but the age to come. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life and this life is in his Son." (Not in us.) "He that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." (John 5: 11, 12.) "And your life is hid with Christ in God" (Colossians 3: 3). "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach; whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen." (1 Timothy 6: 16.) If a man believe not all these witnesses, neither will he be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

Hoping that you will be led to see these things in their right light, and that you will examine them for yourself and not take my word for them, but the infallible word of God which abideth for ever, I beg to remain, as ever,
Your sincere friend,

P. S. Another reason for my quitting the Latter Day Saint Church is that I am a dead stick of timber in it, and want to be free to get into some other movement where I can be a live coal for God, and where I can be one in spirit with God and the movement I am in, or rather where I can be a live branch in the true vine. Would be glad to have an answer to this letter. Hope you are well, as this leaves us all the same. Let me add as an appendix in conclusion to my argument, or what appears to me to be a summary to the whole thing. That the spirit is an inseparable, unlimited part of God, while the soul is an inseparable, limited part of man; corresponding in life to the Spirit of God, which is unlimited as to time, space and power; for God is infinite, but man is finite and will be so long as he is in a finite world,—the next world will be infinite. (Isaiah-66: 22, Daniel 7: 18, Revelation 21: 4.)

TRYON, NEBRASKA, November 12, 1914.

My Very Respected Friend and Brother: Your favor of October 17 received and contents noted. I am indeed sorry that you are in the condition of mind you give expression to. Be assured that I shall still be your friend. And I sympathize with you in your misfortune, for such it surely is. The church you are leaving, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true church, and is in harmony with all the Scriptures. I shall answer your argument briefly, and trust you may see the truth as you once saw it. Please read all my references carefully.

Referring to our claim that the Book of Mormon was given to Joseph Smith by an angel, you suggest that "Satan also appears as an angel of light." And then you raise the question, "Are you sure that you are not deceived in this matter?" "How do you know that it wasn't one of them which the Scriptures designates as the spirits of devils?" Then you remind me that John says we should "try the spirits whether they be of God" (1 John 4: 1). All right, let us put Moroni to the test.

"Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God."

Now turn to Moroni 4 and 5 and read Moroni's instruction on ministering the "flesh and blood of Christ," and tell me if it is not a good confession? Again, Moroni 6: 5, "Relying alone upon the merits of Christ, who was the author and the finisher of their faith," and 7: 21, "For behold, God knowing all things, being from everlasting to everlasting, behold he sent angels to minister unto the children of men, to make manifest concerning the coming of Christ; and in Christ there should come every good thing." Please read the whole book of Moroni, and then tell me if you know of an individual who more strongly confesses Christ.

Then you query, Can we find any place in God's word where it says that the departed spirit of any man appeared unto any living man? You refer to Saul and the witch of Endor and Samuel's "old ghost," as you call him. Now as this is a matter of your own setting out; I prefer to leave it as it is in the record, only reminding you that I never refer to that affair to prove the visitation of angels; and for the simple reason that there is so much proof that is more direct, and plainer.

If you really wanted to answer your question, why did you not refer to the angel that appeared to John? Please turn to Revelation 21: 9, and read to 22: 9. You there find that this messenger was a "fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets." No "medium" here. Again, Revelation 18 and 19 to verse 10. Please read what the angel "having great power," told John. "I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren, that have the testimony of Jesus." I believe you quoted "to the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." (Isaiah 8: 20.) Try the above quotations by that rule.

Here is another, "And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with them," Matthew 17: 3. These men were both dead as to the physical, Elias being John Baptist. Please read verses 12 and 13, also Matthew 11: 13, 14. These angels are "spirits of just men made perfect," (Hebrews 12: 23,) "Who maketh his angels spirits," and Hebrews 1: 7. I think this is sufficient to defend Moroni. He made the right confession. (1 John 4: 2, Moroni 4 and 5.) "By their fruit ye shall know them," said the Master. Please read Moroni carefully and you will see that he bore the right kind of fruit.

As to your reference to the Apocrypha, it strikes me that you must have been scarce of argument to condemn the Book of Mormon or you would not have introduced it. If the Book of Mormon is not what it claims to be, why not bring some valid proof against it! I am aware that 1 Maccabees 14: 48, 49 has this to say: "And they commanded that this writing should be put in tables of brass." But what has that to do with the Book of Mormon?

Job says: "Oh, that my words were now written! Oh, that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!" (Job 19: 23, 24.) "And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a signet." (Exodus 39: 30.) So if Mr. Smith was hunting for some idea of "gold plates," upon which to perpetrate a fraud, he did not have to go to your "spurious" record.

As to your discovery about Nephi, I just remind you that Bancroft's book, Native Races, volume 1, page 450, edition of 1882, says, "Neophites, an Indian tribe," "Nechi," a river almost east of the isthmus." (Parsons' Text Book, page 107.) So if Joseph Smith borrowed the name Nephi from Maccabees how does it come that the natives of this country had it? It is astonishing that after you make the reference you do to Maccabees, you make this statement, "This plainly sets forth the foundation for the Book of Mormon." As well might I say, Judas betrayed his Lord, therefore you are guilty and should be hanged.

If there were not a people on this continent who wrote records and hid them in the earth what shall be said of these statements? A Mr. J. Roberts from Pike County, Illinois, states that "A young man by the name of Wiley, a resident of Kinderhook, commenced digging into a mound . . . he invited others to assist him; finally a company of ten or twelve . . . assisted. . . . When they found six brass plates . . . after undergoing a chemical process, the inscriptions were brought out plain and distinct." (Quincy, Illinois, Whig, April 23, 1843.) Wiley and eight others testify to the finding of these plates. Mr. G. W. West writes: "Manchester, Adams County, Ohio, on the old Smith farm on the Portsmouth pike, in 1880, in a cave where twenty-five bodies had been entombed, as in Egypt, was found a square package at the head of a tomb wrapped in varnished cloth, containing a book of one hundred leaves of thin copper . . . crowded with finely engraved characters."

While I could give you many more quotations similar to the above, these are sufficient to show that others found ancient records here in America as well as Mr. Smith. And they testify of an ancient civilization here, as does the Book of Mormon. And if the Book of Mormon is not what it claims to be, what will you do with these scriptures—Isaiah 29: 4, 11: 12, 17, 18; Psalm 85: 10-13; Ezekiel 37: 15-21? Please read these scriptures carefully, and you will see that a book is to come forth and be delivered to him that is not learned. Now if the Book of Mormon is not that book, pray tell me where the book is. The Book of Mormon meets and fills every prediction and specification, coming in the right time and in the right way.

Next you attack the priesthood, referring to Hebrews 7, from which you reach the conclusion that John the Baptist lost his priesthood, and Peter, James, and John also. But let me ask, What was lost if the priesthood was changed as you suggest? Both priesthoods were in existence, and if one was changed for the other that would not put either out of existence. So while the priesthood was changed to the house of Judah, Hebrews 7: 14, and in its ministrations, Hebrews 6: 12; Matthew 28: 19, 20; Mark 16: 15-20; 1 Peter 2: 5, it was not put out of existence, nor could it be, (Hebrews 7: 3), "Having neither beginning of days, nor end of life." Christ was a priest of the Melchisedec order without taking John's priesthood. "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." (Psalm 110: 4.) "Called of God" (Hebrews 5: 10), and "ordained." (Acts 17: 31.) So being thus armed with an undying and unchangeable priesthood (Hebrews 7: 3, 24), Christ was prepared to build up a kingdom or church with that divine authority in it.

"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." (1 Peter 2: 5.) Why make the offering by Jesus Christ? For the reason that the priesthood was given to the church by him. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you." (John 15: 16, see also Luke 6: 13.) "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." (John 17: 18.) "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." (John 20: 23.) " whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. (Matthew 18: 18.) This is the power of the priesthood. "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5: 4.) "The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." (Acts 13: 1, 2.) They were called to the same office and priesthood that Christ was. "Called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec." (Hebrews 5: 10.) "Consider the apostle and high priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." (Hebrews 3: 1.)

Barnabas and Paul were apostles. (Acts 14: 14.) As the apostles were officers in the church, had office (Romans 11: 13, Psalm 109: 8) can you afford to say that God removed the office, officer and all out of his church after "God hath set" them in the church? (1 Corinthians 12: 28.)

If as you infer all the authority possessed by the people of God now is what they obtain from "the Bible only," then all that have Bibles have equal authority along spiritual lines, the criminal in his cell and the preacher in the pulpit.

Yes, the Spirit of God is always in the singular so far as the Holy Ghost is concerned. You say, "God possesses and recognizes but one spirit, so that the Devil must have all the rest of them." Please don't forget your text, "To the law and to the testimony." "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." (Romans 8: 16, 26; 1 Corinthians 2: 10.)

Your statement, the spirits of all flesh "are all parts of the one Spirit of God," is not a part of the "law and testimony," nor do they lose their entity at any time. Your reference to Ezekiel 36: 26, 27 is misapplied. Please read the chapter and you will see that the Lord is speaking of their gathering and things this side of the resurrection. Notice verses 35, 36. Ezekiel 37: 13, 14, does not sustain your claim. "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." (Job 32: 8. "He went and preached unto the spirits in prison." (1 Peter 3: 18-20.) You tell me, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." (Ezekiel 18: 4-20); yes, they die as dead as those Ephesians that Paul preached to. "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." (Acts 19: 2-6.) Then Paul writes to them, "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sin." (Ephesians 2: 1.)

You seem to lose sight of the fact that there are two deaths referred to in the scriptures, one of which affects the physical, and the other the spiritual relation to God. "But Jesus said unto him, Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead." (Matthew 8: 22.) Three conditions are referred to here. The man to be buried was dead as to the body or physical death. Those who were to bury him were "psychically" or spiritually dead. The man who was to follow Jesus was alive both as to the body and spirit, fit for the Master's service. "For in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (Genesis 2: 17.) Yet Adam lived "Nine hundred and thirty years: and he died." He became "dead in trespasses and in sin," when he went out of the garden. (Ephesians 2: 1.) But you say a day was a thousand years in those times. But the "law and testimony" say, "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years." (Genesis 5: 5.) Notice, there were days in those years.

Your conclusion that "Christ . . . died both soul and body, both were laid down in the grave" lacks proof. Many of the references I have given will go to disprove your claim. Please read Luke 23: 46: "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit and having said this, he gave up the Ghost." Spirit and ghost are used interchangeably here. And to say Christ died and became unconscious is to make him lower than man whom he came to save. "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die, believest thou this?" (John 11: 26.) Please read 2 Corinthians 5: 6-8; Philippians 1: 21-23; Luke 8: 53-55.

The spirit or soul of man is sometimes called the inward man. "But though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." (2 Corinthians 4: 16.) "For I delight in the law of God after the inward man." (Romans 7: 22.) The inward man is the man that "Shall never die." (John 11: 26.) This is in harmony with the "law and the testimony." The word soul is at times applied to the whole person. Please read Genesis 2: 7; Exodus 1: 5; Acts 2: 41. Many more references could be given. And all those souls die, become unconscious as to the flesh, but the inward man, soul, spirit, never dies. (John 11: 26.) "I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain . . . and they cried with a loud voice." (Revelations 6: 9-11.) Their bodies were "slain" but their souls were alive, and always are.

You say "this corruptible (the body) must put on incorruption, and this mortal (the soul) must put on immortality," thus assuming that the soul is mortal, which is out of harmony with the "law and testimony" as above references show. You quote Romans 2: 7 and say that immortality is eternal life. "And this is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." (1 John 5: 11.) "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life." (John 5: 24.) "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." (John 11: 26.) "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." (John 15: 26.) "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." (1 Corinthians 12: 3.) "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17: 3.) So those that "seek," obtain eternal life, and obtain it here, for they shall "never die." The proper rendering of 1 Timothy 6: 16, is, "Whom no man hath seen, nor can see, unto whom no man can approach, only he who hath the light and the hope of immortality dwelling in him." See Inspired Translation.

Do you believe Jesus Christ, "only hath immortality"? How about the eternal God, and all the angelic host? You say you are a "dead stick of timber." Well, you may need quickening. (See Ephesians 2.) And you want to "be a live coal." Then, dear brother, you better stay with the people of God and seek for that one Spirit. (1 Corinthians 12: 13.)

In your summary you say that "the spirit is an inseparable, unlimited part of God. While the soul is an inseparable, limited part of man." Neither of which is true in the way you apply, as I have proved in the foregoing. If the Spirit of God is inseparable, and one man had it, no one else could have it, or if inseparable and pervading all things alike, then the wicked would share equally with the righteous. "To the law and to the testimony": God's people received the Spirit while others did not. (Acts 2: 1-4; 10: 44; Romans 8: 16.) As to the soul being an inseparable part of man, please read Revelation 6: 10, 11 and 20: 4; 1 Peter 3: 18-20; 1 Kings 17: 31, 32; Genesis 35: 18; Luke 16: 22-24; Matthew 17: 3.)

Now, my dear brother, I have answered your argument, cutting questions short for the sake of brevity. I trust you will study the scriptures I have referred you to and continue in the true faith.

I am quite well and very busy. I am preaching here every evening with fairly good interest. Shall close in a few days. May the God of Israel bless you, I pray.

Yours hopefully,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

WEST JONESPORT, MAINE, March 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD very much, for by so doing we glean information concerning this great latter-day work in which we are engaged. This is certainly a great work, even a marvelous work and a wonder. If we expect to reign upon this beautiful earth when cleansed and purified for the habitation of God's people, we must work for it. We can not idle our time away from day to day and then expect to receive the same reward with other brothers and sisters who have lived a life of sacrifice and constant devotion to the Master's cause. By our works we stand or fall. We who have been obedient to the gospel plan are entitled to the blessings mentioned in the sacred word of God.

The good book tells that eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man what God has in store for those that love and serve him; but we must remember that God is not mocked, that whatsoever a man soweth that also shall he reap.

We are thankful to know that the gospel has been restored; that the eleventh hour dispensation has been ushered in; that the trump of the gospel has been blown, and God the Eternal Father has provided a means by which we can obtain eternal life if we will be obedient to the saving plan,

God's arm is extended to you in his mercy,

Ye Gentiles, his arm is now outstretched to you.

Why do you tarry, why scorn the great message,

For soon 'twill return to his people, the Jews.

Then the great door of mercy will be closed for ever

Against you, ye Gentiles, your time hath passed by;

Why not accept the great plan of salvation—

This latter-day message, restored from on high.

When we arrive at the great tribunal bar of God and the books are opened and we are judged from the things that are there entered, what will be the fate of those who have heard the gospel and have refused to accept it? Some men are so self-righteous they will not take the Book of Mormon in their hands, and as for reading it, they would consider it the greatest sin imaginable. If you ask them what they know about the book they will tell you they do not know what it contains and do not care to know, but still they say it is a fraud and that God never had anything to do with it. This is because the minister tells them it is so. God pity the man or woman who in this enlightened day and age does not try to think and act for himself or herself. The Scriptures emphatically declare that cursed is the man who puts his trust in the arm of flesh.

The people here at Jonesport have been greatly favored with the opportunity of hearing the gospel and accepting the same if they so desired. Some of the best representatives that the church has have labored here and in the vicinity. We have a competent representative in Brother F. J. Ebeling, who we are sorry to say takes his departure for General Conference. We hope if it may be the will of the Master he will be returned to labor with us during the coming year. If his mission is to some other field and he never returns, he may rest assured that the good work he has done will never be forgotten by the Saints here. If we heed the counsel and admonition which he has given we are confident that eternal glory awaits us in the future.

The prize is ahead, brothers and sisters; it is obtainable and it is ours to enjoy if we will. Hold firmly to the rod of iron and keep God's commandments, for they are blessed who keep his commandments, for they will have access to the tree of life, and be permitted to enter into the rest that remains for the people of God.

Yours in the warfare,

MRS. LEWIS A. FAULKINGHAM.

HERSCHEL, SASKATCHEWAN, March 29, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are still rejoicing in the angel's message. It has given us satisfaction and contentment no matter how disagreeable our surroundings have been. Perilous times are fast approaching, but the hope of Zion takes away all doubt and fear.

We came west three years ago, so we prove up on our homestead in July. Our three sons have taken up homesteads also. There are two more open here if any of the Saints care to come. We will give the information necessary.

Elder J. J. Cornish was the first to preach the gospel here, and a year later Elder Gregory. This winter we had Elder T. J. Jordan with us. We succeeded in getting the Methodist church at this time, which indicates less prejudice. Brother Jordan preached as one having authority. He knows how to wield the sword. Some were badly wounded but will live, for they are returning the blows over our shoulders. We try to say, "Forgive them Lord, they know not what they do." One lady asked for Book of Mormon after reading the Two-Story Book. I loaned the minister Elder Evans's Book of Sermons.

The people here seem to have been awakened out of their sleep. Brother and Sister Day drove fourteen miles and remained with us and assisted in the music and singing. They with others felt bad when we had to say good-by to Brother Jordan. We all hope he will return.

We have a Sunday school and Religio organized now, and hold prayer meetings. All we lack is a good preacher and a church, and if we live worthily so as to prosper, we intend building soon.

Hopefully,

BROTHER AND SISTER A. E. MARTIN.

LONDON, ONTARIO, March, 1915.

Editors Herald: Some time ago we had here in London an individual named Osborn, who was nicknamed the Drummer Evangelist, preaching in some of the churches, notably the Baptist. During one of his sermons he referred to the doctrine of purgatory, saying, "If any man says there is a pardon beyond the grave he is a liar." This statement was published in the Free Press, and I replied to it, asking permission of the editor to place in open comparison with Mr. Osborn's statement the teaching of the Master. I quoted Matthew 12: 31, 32, which I said was only another way of stating that every sin excepting the one spoken of would be forgiven both in this world and the next.

My letter was published just as I had written it, and a Mr. Rhodes in Point Edward wrote in support of Mr. Osborn, claiming that the word world in my quotation meant age and not world, and ended by saying "If there were a pardon beyond the grave it would take away the tremendous force of the statement of Jesus, 'If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins.'"

To Mr. Rhodes I made the reply for the Press, but was informed that they could not give space to the controversy any further, howsoever interesting or important the matter might be.

A number of my friends here were looking for me to reply to Mr. Rhodes, and I suppose will think Mr. Rhodes got the best of me, but my reply to him follows "Letters to the Editor."

Editors of the Press: We are pleased to see the friends of the 'No pardon beyond the grave' theory coming forward to its rescue. It surely needs every supporter it has, as, with your indulgence, Mr. Editor, we will proceed to show.

"First, however, let us extend the glad hand in greeting to Mr. Rhodes as we say to him, 'My dear sir, this is no controversy as to the correct interpretation of any single word or passage from the Greek into our own vernacular. This world, this age, the world, or the age to come, you have your choice. We have no objection. The issue is not changed in the least. And as regards the "tremendous force" of "ye shall die in your sins," let us write: "And I if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me,"' and ask which of these two statements bespeaks the most tremendous force?"

"Now, Mr. Editor, we are well aware that it is impossible to publish in this form in your columns one tithe of the Biblical evidence supporting the affirmative side of this question, but hope you will give space for a few citations which will abundantly establish the fact that the system of rewards and punishments perfected by the Almighty and proclaimed to the world by Christ and his apostles is in no way circumscribed by death or the grave, but, like the love of its great author, is infinite in scope and application.

"Isaiah says God sent Christ to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. (Isaiah 61: 1.) Christ will bring them out. (Isaiah 42: 6, 7.) He will yet say to them, 'Go forth.' (Isaiah 49: 8, 9.) Zechariah says: 'By the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water.' Isaiah calls them prisoners of hope, and Ezekiel 31, 32 declare that they shall be comforted. Paul says that God is the Savior of all men, especially of them that believe. (1 Timothy 4: 10.) Again, 'As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.' (1 Corinthians 15: 22.)

"That the denizens of hell were here included is abundantly established by the Apostle Peter who says that Christ went and preached the gospel down there. (1 Peter 3: 19.) The object of this preaching was as surely their deliverance and their salvation as it is in this life. Infinite love could have no other object. As they accept the terms of the everlasting gospel and satisfy the justice of God, they come out of their prison house to inherit one or another of the glories mentioned by Paul in 1 Corinthians 15: 41.

"God is not limited as to his power or his purpose to save the human family by the fact of death, hell, and the grave. When Jesus went down there he grappled with Satan and took the keys (possession). (Revelation 1: 18.) The record says that the mission of Christ was to destroy the works of the Devil (1 John 3: 8). And it further declares that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ, to the glory of the Father. (Philippians 2: 10.)

"How much to the glory of God would it be, Mr. Editor, to have billions upon billions of human souls shut up in the torments of a never ending hell! Would Jesus be Lord of all under such conditions?"

Yours for the right and the truth,

P. W. PHILLIPIN.

LEMOORE, CALIFORNIA, March 20, 1915.

Editors Herald: I joined the church when a girl of nine years. My maiden name was Mattie Coon, of Logan, Iowa. My husband is a grandson of Elder John McIntyre, who died in 1902. He has never been taught even the first principles of the gospel. I am reading the Book of Mormon to him, and explain to him what I can.

I have the Book of Mormon, King James and Inspired Translations of the Bible, Instructor, and Doctrine and Covenants.

My grandmother was Mrs. Mary A. Fry, of Logan, Iowa, who passed away March 17.

Your sister,

MRS. GEORGE TRIMBLE.

MOUNT JULIAN, ONTARIO, March 31, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is a long time since I have had the privilege of even speaking to a Latter Day Saint. Realizing the fact however, that God is everywhere, and that I am entitled to his blessings here inasmuch as I keep his commandments. I am indeed thankful to him who doeth all things well. I am thankful for health and strength, for shelter and raiment and food, and a portion of the Holy Spirit which holds me still in the faith.

It is the hope of eternal life that has borne me up over the rough places of life. When the waves of distress were raging high it was beneath his promises that I was sheltered, so I know that God was with me.

I hope and pray that I may ever hold fast to the rod of iron and be faithful and have the Spirit of God with me in teaching and bringing up the three precious little ones intrusted to my care. I wish to do my duty as a wife and a mother, and the least worthy child of God, so that when earth's trials are over I may be counted worthy to enter into Zion's rest.

Let us pray for the redemption of Zion and her people. for the scattered and isolated ones. I long to see the face of the children of God.

Your sister in Christ,

CORA RUTHELLA NORTHEY.

Hymns and Poems

The Coming Dawn

(Tune: "Let us pray for one another.")

Oh, the night is disappearing,
As the light begins to shine,
In east we see the glimmer,
And it cheers your heart and mine.
We have long looked for this token
Told by prophets stanch and true,
And our souls are now rejoicing,
As with faith we onward go.

Who among us can be doubting,
Slow of heart with unbelief?
God is giving all he promised,
As he comes to our relief.
Then be up and doing, brother,
For the time has come to you
To go forth in his great kingdom,
Show by works that you are true.

The millennium is coming,
It is very near the door;
He has told us of its glories,
How could he do any more,
Now, my brother, are you ready,
For the time is near at hand
When the wicked and the careless
Shall be swept from off the land.

W. E. PEAK.

Pass It On

Have you had a kindness shown?
Pass it on;
'Twas not given for thee alone,
Pass it on.
Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
Till in heav'n the deed appears—
Pass it on.

Did you hear the loving word?
Pass it on;
Like the singing of a bird?
Pass it on.
Let its music live and grow,
Let it cheer another's woe,
You have reap'd what others sow—
Pass it on.

'Twas the sunshine of a smile,
Pass it on;
Staying but a little while!
Pass it on.
April beam, the little thing,
Still it makes the flow'rs of spring,
Makes the silent birds to sing—
Pass it on.

Have you found the heav'nly light?
Pass it on;
Souls are groping in the night,
Daylight gone;
Hold thy lighted lamp on high,
Be a star in some one's sky,
He may live who else would die—
Pass it on.

Be not selfish in thy greed,
Pass it on;
Look upon thy brother's need,
Pass it on.
Live for self; you live in vain;
Live for Christ, you live again;
Live for him, with him you reign—
Pass it on.

—Philadelphia North American.

A Guiding Hand

There is never a day so dreary,
Never a heart so sad,
Never a soul so weary,
But God can make it glad.

He gives me the golden sunshine
To brighten my dreary day,
He gives me of gentle wisdom
To keep me on my way.

When my heart throbs heavy with anguish,
And my way grows dim and dark,
My soul goes in prayer to its maker
For safety within the ark.

I know, though I stumble and falter,
God's hand outstretched will be
To lead me safe thro' the tempest
And guide me straight o'er the sea.

For the mercies and blessings I'm thankful,
They are many, though unworthy I've been;
But for love and endurance I'm praying,
That through the gates I might enter in.

EUNICE SCOFIELD.

Opportunity

They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in;
For every day I stand outside your door
And bid you wake, and rise to fight and win.

Wail not for precious chances passed away,
Weep not for golden ages on the wane!
Each night I burn the records of the day—
At sunrise every soul is born again!

Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped,
To vanished joys be blind and deaf and dumb;
My judgments seal the dead past with its dead,
But never bind a moment yet to come.

Though deep in mire, wring not your hands and weep;
I lend my arm to all who say "I can!"
No shame-faced outcast ever sank so deep
But yet might rise and be again a man!

Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?
Dost reel from righteous Retribution's blow?
Then turn from blotted archives of the past
And find the future's pages white as snow.

Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell?
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,
Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven.

—Walter Malone.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of the Church in Mission Number 5, Comprising California, Oregon, Washington (except Spokane District), British Columbia and Hawaiian Territory; Greeting: The undersigned having been appointed to supervise the interests of the church in the above-named territory, desires to call attention to the following disposition of the ministers appointed with him to labor therein, as follows:

In British Columbia and the Seattle District, R. D. Davis and R. F. Slye will labor together. William Johnson will labor as heretofore. J. M. Terry will labor in Seattle Branch.

Portland District: G. M. Shippy and C. N. Hedding will be associated.

Southwestern Oregon District: T. W. Chatburn and A. C. Barmore.

Eastern Oregon: M. H. Cook and C. E. Jones, the latter concentrating at Condit.

Northern California District: M. A. McConley and C. J. Cady will be associated in the work which they developed last year. W. A. Brooner will labor in the San Joaquin Valley, and we hope to secure some help which will make tent work possible there. F. G. Pitt has been transferred to the Northern California District, and will labor as evangelical minister. C. A. Parkin as before will render what service he can as usual in the financial department.

In Southern California District, we regret that our staff is not very well equipped, Brother Goodrich being the only appointee to that part of the field, namely to Sacramento. Unfortunately, owing to sickness it may be some time before our brother is able to take up his duties there, so he will remain in Los Angeles doing what he can in the meantime. This arrangement is tentative and may be changed should a closer acquaintance with the work suggest such need.

We earnestly solicit the cooperation of all as we attempt to discharge the several onerous duties before us, and trust that our associations together will be pleasant and profitable in the efforts which we hope will be made to do what we believe is right, resulting in the extension of the kingdom of God and the salvation of souls.

The times are momentous in many ways, and the church as well as the world is being subjected to searching and testing criticisms; but there never were more magnificent opportunities for great endeavor, daring enterprise and glowing achievement. That we may individually and collectively measure up to the demands and prove ourselves worthy of the name we bear and the message we herald, should be the anxious desire of all.

Commending our cause to divine wisdom and grace, we subscribe ourselves.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1522 West Short Street, May 18, 1915.

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Greeting: Having been requested by the general minister in charge, Brother J. F. Curtis, to assist him in the missionary work of the above-named district, we wish to ask the cooperation of all who are interested in the extension of the gospel message. We will be pleased to hear from you relative to the needs and prospects of the work in the locality where you live, or any other part of the district where you may have friends that are interested and would assist the missionary in making a new opening, and we will respond as promptly as possible. Dear Saints, when you read this request please make a note of it and at a time most convenient to you, or at the time that would be most opportune to have work done, write the undersigned at, 517-519 Ottawa Avenue, N. W., Grand Rapids, Michigan.

In gospel bonds,

J. D. STEAD.

To the Saints of Mission No. 2, Composed of the States of Missouri, Kansas, Central and Southeastern Illinois Districts; Greeting: Somewhat of a stranger to the mission, there is not much at present that I can say other than "Good cheer," and hope that our cooperation will be governed by the highest motives, under Christlike influence, so necessary to our success. High motives are not all we need, however. Means ordained of God through the medium of the "house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." Loyalty to the church is a part of the divine requirement. Wrecks of human endeavor, without Christ, attempts to steady the ark, lie along the road since the church started in this dispensation. Let us be wise and profit by these ensamples. No success without God, no God without Christ, should be our motto.

The following arrangement of the General Conference appointees is largely with concurrence of my predecessor:

Independence Stake: J. A. Tanner, Central Church, Kansas City; Charles Fry, M. H. Bond, George Jenkins, F. L. Sawley.

Clinton District: W. S. Macrae, F. C. Keck, R. T. Walters. Spring River District: Lee Quick, A. C. Silvers, R. S. Budd, the latter two associated together.

Northeastern Missouri District: D. E. Tucker and John Ely associated together, M. F. Gowell.

Southern Missouri District: Henry Sparling, M. L. McFadden, A. T. Gray, latter two associated together.

Far West District: B. J. Scott, First Saint Joseph Branch; W. P. Pickering, Third Saint Joseph Branch; J. W. Roberts and A. E. McCord associated together.

Nodaway District: O. W. Okerlind.

Saint Louis District: W. L. Christy, W. A. Smith.

Saint Louis and Central Illinois districts: J. W. Paxton and F. A. Russell associated together.

Northeastern Kansas District: Samuel Twombly, Blue Rapids objective; J. W. A. Bailey.

Northwestern Kansas District: J. D. Shower, W. A. Johnson, associated together.

Southern Kansas (unorganized territory): J. A. Davis, T. C. Kelley, A. C. Martin, the latter two associated together.

Southeastern Illinois District: R. H. Henson, S. H. Fields, Thomas Newton.

Central Illinois District: A. M. Baker, R. L. Fulk, associated together.

Fraternally yours,

F. M. SHEEHY, Minister in Charge.

Two-Day Meetings

Coleman, Michigan, June 12 and 13. Good speakers. George W. Burt, president, Beaverton, Michigan.

Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN JUNE

For the church in Zion, that it may indeed be a city that is set on a hill. That the light reflected from it shall so lighten those that sit in darkness, that those without may see, and desire to enter in. Let us remember that Zion is the pure in heart, and Zion shall become the city of the pure, and thus work to that end.

Lesson, Matthew 5:13-16. Memory verse, Psalm 93:5.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER

Prayers are requested for Brother E. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who is suffering from anemia, and is in a very weak condition. This brother desires speedy recovery on account of his family. May he be remembered and blessed.

Sister N. J. McKeever, Flint, Michigan, requests especial interest in the prayers of the Saints. This sister is very sorely afflicted with cancer. She has been confined to her bed since March 2, at which time she was operated on and doctors said she could not live but a short time. She has faith and asks prayers that she may recover.

Sister H. C. Norwood, Townsend, Montana, asks that the Saints fast and pray June 6 for her little boy five years old. This child was stricken with infantile paralysis when eight months old and has never recovered. Sister Norwood is to take him to the Bozeman Conference, June 6, where he will be administered to. This sister is isolated, yet is doing all she can to "forsake all pleasures and live worthy of the name of Christ." May her desire be granted.

Attention Cooks

WANTED.—At once at the Children's Home, Lamoni, Iowa, a competent cook. Address R. J. Lambert, secretary of board.

Died

BABBITT.—Loren L. Babbitt was born September 23, 1835, Kirtland, Ohio, died April 30, 1915, five miles north of Stewartville, Missouri. Married Mary Ann Petty, August 28, 1864, Berry, Illinois. To them were born 3 sons, 2 daughters, two dying in infancy. Lydia Powell died in 1904, George and Alma survive. Deceased was baptized in November, 1863, Albany, Illinois, by Loren W. Babbitt, his father. Ordained elder June 20, 1867. Besides the sons, he leaves aged companion, 10 grandchildren, 1 great-grandchild. Services by T. T. Hinderks, assisted by A. W. Head, before a large congregation. Interment in Pleasant Grove Cemetery.

LIPPINCOTT.—Lillian A. Lippincott was born January 28, 1844, Springfield, Massachusetts, died May 6, 1915, Independence, Missouri, after a long illness. Married N. L. Nilley in 1860. To them was born one daughter, Sister Pettybone, Lawrence, Kansas. Married J. L. Kerr, October 24, 1884, who died in December, 1899. September 15, 1911, married James F. Lippincott, who survives. Deceased was a faithful Saint and loved the work with her whole heart, ever ready to help those who needed. Services in Saints' church, Independence, in charge of G. E. Harrington, sermon by A. H. Parsons.

OATES.—Elizabeth J. Oates died at her home, Lancaster, Wisconsin, April 10, 1915, aged 63 years. Baptized June 6, 1894, Flora, Wisconsin, by E. M. Wildermuth. Lived a faithful Christian life, loved and respected by all who knew her. Deceased leaves husband, 2 daughters, 1 son, grown, many relatives and friends who will miss her cheery smile and kindly ways. Services from the home and at the Union Church ten miles west in charge of James Edgington, sermon by Lester Wildermuth.

BROWN.—Emily, beloved wife of Elder Samuel Brown, was born in Dunn Township, Haldimand County, Ontario, April 13, 1863, passed peacefully away at her home, Stevenson, Ontario, May 7, 1915. United in marriage with Samuel Brown, at Blenheim, Ontario, by J. H. Lake, October 8, 1883. To them were born four sons, three daughters. John Leslie (an elder and president of Windsor, Ontario, Branch), Robert T. (an elder, missionary to Manitoulin Island); Samuel Gordon and Alma Fred still reside at home. The daughters are, Mary E. (Mrs. Harry Lively, of Saint Clair, Michigan); Thalma A. and Illa M., at home. The cause of her demise was a cyst ovarian tumor, from which she suffered for over a year. She bore her condition with patient resignation, committing her case into the hands of her heavenly Father, and always applying to administration for relief instead of to medicine, and ever obtained the blessing sought. Physicians were amazed that she did not continually suffer the excruciating pain that others in her condition are subject to. How good it is to have an abiding faith in the power of God! Brother Brown labored as a missionary in Canada as early as 1883, and Sister Brown well knew the lonely hours and care of a family in his absence, but sought earnestly to bring her children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The fruit of her labor has been apparent in that she has left behind an honorable and God-fearing family, who will magnify her labor and do her honor in years to come. Funeral discourse by John A. Grant, from the text, "She hath done what she could," to a large concourse of relatives, Saints and friends. Sister Brown was baptized September 8, by George Cleveland, at Buckhorn, Ontario, in 1872. Was ever consistent in life with her faith. Ever kind and considerate, she was beloved by all who knew her best. Interment in Evergreen Cemetery; Blenheim.

SMITH.—Maud Myrtle Smith, daughter of Elder Jacob and Sister Annie Smith, passed away at peace with her Savior and all people at her home, Long Valley, near San Lucas, California, March 31, 1915, aged 25 years, 9 months, 14 days. Her willing, humble, self-sacrificing life, a crystal stream of gentleness and willing service, claimed the love and confidence of all who knew her. Her musical talent was consecrated to the church service in which she did a noble work in Oakland. Services at the home by Eugene Holt. Father, mother, 2 brothers, 2 sisters survive.

TITTLE.—At Leon, Iowa, May 16, 1915, Clarissa E. Tittle, aged 74 years, 7 months, 21 days. Born in Livingston County, New York. Married John Walker at Mount Carroll, Illinois, in 1856. Baptized at Sandwich, Illinois, in 1872, by Charles Williams. Family removed to Leon in 1873, and Mr. Walker died in 1888. Of 9 children, 6 survive, 5 being present in her last illness. Services at the residence by H. A. Stebbins.

June "American Boy"

Mark Tidd, the stuttering fat boy who has been such a marked success in recent juvenile fiction is back in The American Boy again. "Mark Tidd in business" is the title of this newest story by Clarence B. Kelland, the opening installment of which appears in the current issue. Mark is funnier than ever and just as clever as of yore. "The Igloo in the snow," is another tale of Connie Morgan in the Alaskan gold fields. These virile stories by James B. Hendryx have proved marked successes, and the latest of the series is possessed of all the vigor and interest of its predecessors. "The horse that did not go to war," by Dennis H. Stovall, is a story of the ranch; "The big one" is a fish story by Hamilton Johnson; and "The tortoise" is the lively tale of a boy and a boat, by Walter Kellogg Towers. Book Reviews

THE PASSING OF THE SALOON.—George M. Hammell, D. D., editor in chief. American Issue Publishing Company, Westerville, Ohio. This book of 436 pages is an authentic and official representation of the antisaloon crusade in America. It contains contributions by leading American citizens and antisaloon workers, together with illustrations of all the prominent antisaloon workers of the country. Mr. Hammell in his prologue says: "I have undertaken to tell the story of the passing of the saloon—the story of what the French call a debacle, a downfall. I believe that the saloon will cease to exist, and that there are moral, political, social and economic forces now operating, which will speedily destroy it. . . . This volume is a record; it is also a prophecy. It reports achievement; it utters a prediction. Born of loyalty to the public welfare, it is a contribution to the campaign for universal brotherhood. Against its facts and arguments there can be no logic, even as against the ten laws of Moses there can be no legislation." Chapters of the book are: "The saloon an economic vampire," "Physiological effects of alcohol," "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union," "The Anti-Saloon League—purpose and methods," "The temperance tidal wave," "Liquor's fight against prohibition," "The negro problem and the liquor problem," "On to Washington," "The antiliquor fight in Canada," "Signs of the times." As an indication of the fight against liquor and the saloon, and as a reliable source of information along the lines indicated, this volume is a most excellent source.

CAPITAL.—George L. Walker. Dukelow and Walker, Boston, Massachusetts. 15 cents. This is a vigorous defense of capitalism by the editor of the Boston Commercial. The author requests frank criticism to which he pledges himself to give personal consideration.

SINGLE STANDARD EUGENICS.—Professor Thomas W. Shannon. The S. A. Mullikin Company, Marietta, Ohio. 75 cents. Professor Shannon is perhaps the most widely known social purity worker of the country. He brings to the cause a high ideal. His message is dignified by noble manhood and impressed by direct yet wholesome expression. His Single Standard Eugenics is a strong appeal for clean living by both sexes. In the preface he says: "Parents, teachers, reformers, ministers and especially the women, by a concerted, systematic and persistent effort, can change public sentiment so as to give society a high single standard of morals, which will eliminate the chief causes of degeneracy and make possible the most happy, satisfactory and perfect attainments. The author's hope, desire and prayers are that this book may rouse the careless to a sense of the value of existence; encourage and enlighten those who are striving to attain true manhood and womanhood; inspire and help those upon whom devolve the privilege, duty and responsibility of teaching the principles of individual and race betterment by means of a single standard of morals."

WOMAN AND WAR.—Olive Schreiner. F. A. Stokes Company, New York. Price 50 cents. This little booklet of 60 pages is an extract from Miss Schreiner's classic Woman and Labor, written after a trying personal experience of warfare in South Africa. From the introduction we quote the following: "No excuse is needed for reprinting at this time from Olive Schreiner's classic, Woman and Labor, her treatment of Woman and War. There is no other exposition of woman's natural hatred of war so searching, so true and so moving as this. Her inspired words on the subject, beyond their importance as a deeply significant statement of the attitude of women toward bloodshed and killing, to be read and taken to heart in its bearing on the greatest war in history, are vital as a prophecy of how war in the future will pass away."

"BILLY" SUNDAY, THE MAN AND HIS MESSAGE.—William T. Ellis. John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia, $1.50. A book of 432 pages, well printed and profusely illustrated, giving characteristic sermons by the noted evangelist "Billy" Sunday, together with a study of his character and methods. Prepared shortly after his recent remarkable campaign in Pittsburgh. From the first chapter we extract the following: "Heaven often plays jokes on earth's worldly-wise. After the consensus of experience and sagacity has settled upon a certain course and type, lo, all the profundity of the sages is blown away as a speck of dust and we have, say, a shockingly unconventional John the Baptist, who does not follow the prescribed rules in dress, training, methods, or message. John the Baptist was God's laugh at the rabbis and the Pharisees. In an overecclesiastical age, when churchly authority had reached the limit, a poor monk, child of a miner's hut, without influence or favor, was called to break the power of the popes, and to make empires and reshape history, flinging his shadow far down the centuries. Martin Luther was God's laugh at ecclesiasticism. While the brains and aristocracy and professional statesmanship of America struggled in vain with the Nation's greatest crisis, God reached down close to the soil of the raw and ignorant Middle West, and picked up a gaunt and untutored specimen of the common people—a man who reeked of the earth until the earth closed over him—and so saved the Union and freed a race, through ungainly Abraham Lincoln. Thus again heaven laughed at exalted procedure and conventionality. In our own day, with its blatant worldly wisdom, with its flaunting prosperity, with its fashionable churchliness, with its flood of 'advanced' theology overwhelming the pulpit, God needed a prophet, to call his people back to simple faith and righteousness. A nation imperiled by luxury, greed, love of pleasure and unbelief cried aloud for a deliverer. Surely this crisis required a great man, learned in all the ways of the world, equipped with the best preparation of American and foreign universities and theological seminaries, a man trained in ecclesiastical leadership, and approved and honored by the courts of the church? So worldly wisdom decreed. But God laughed—and produced, to the scandal of the correct and conventional, Billy Sunday, a common man from the common people, who, like Lincoln, so wears the signs and savors of the soil that fastidious folk, to whom sweat is vulgar and to whom calloused hands are 'bad form,' quite lose their suavity and poise in calling him 'unrefined.'"

"MUST PROTESTANTISM ADOPT CHRISTIAN SCIENCE?"—PART I

A REVIEW

Our caption is the title of a little book of sixty-five pages, recently published<sup>1</sup>; the author being the Reverend J. Winthrop Hegeman, Ph. D. (Episcopalian). Answering the question in the affirmative, he says:

Christian Science seems to be the only power in religion to retard and return the tide that is setting away from God and the church by revealing the God whom they in heart ignorantly worship and whom on their lower plane they desire but see not.

It is most significant that representatives of great churches like the Protestant Episcopal Church should now confess that their denominations are lacking some vital element, a lack so serious as to threaten a complete defeat of their entire work. One hundred years ago the heavenly personage that manifested himself to Joseph Smith told him that the churches were wrong. They were in fact so lacking in essential elements that God found it necessary to set his hand again to establish his own church and restore his own gospel.

EMMANUEL MOVEMENT A FAILURE

Some years ago Reverend Elwood Worcester (Episcopalian) and others discovered that their people had entirely neglected "the gospel of healing," as they termed it, a thing that we as a church had been telling them ever since 1830, though our allegation was ever met with scorn. But suddenly it dawned upon them that the allegation was true, and they set about remedying it by introducing the "Emanuel Movement."

These gentlemen undertook to treat disease in the name of Jesus in connection with medical practitioners of repute (a thing in itself legitimate). But in this treatment the patient received examination by the physician and if the disease were discovered to be organic he was not admitted to the sacred precincts of the pastor's study for treatment,—he was referred back to medical specialists. If the disease proved to be purely functional he might pass under the benign influence of the Emmanuel Movement to receive healing from the Great Physician.

This reference of serious organic diseases to the doctors and tractable functional disorders to Jesus did not appeal to us very seriously as worthy of the name divine healing. We did not consider it a return to primitive Christian healing, under which those most terribly afflicted with malignant diseases came and were healed. The limits set by the Emmanuel Movement men were exactly those set by nature between diseases tractable to human suggestion and those not so tractable. And at the time we wrote:

Their claim is the well-known claim made by psychologists, that in certain diseases, more especially nervous diseases wherein the victim is self-deluded, the student of psychology can work a cure by mental suggestion. They admit the human nature of their work and the absence of the divine by refusing to treat diseases of a more serious nature.—SAINTS' HERALD.—vol. 55, p. 1081.

THE POWER OF GOD TO HEAL PREJUDGED

It is not surprising therefore that we find Mr. Hegeman saying that in a recent report ten clergymen of the Church of England and ten English physicians of repute report that:

They have spent three years in the study of prayer and suggestion in therapy, and find that all forms of healing by faith, prayer, and what not, are instances of suggestion and that equally good results are obtained by suggestion without spiritual means such as prayer. They conclude that benefit has been found only in functional disorders, but not in a single instance has there been a bit of proof that an organic lesion has been cured by such means.

The mental attitude of those experimenting along these lines has not been one of complete faith and surrender. They have deliberately prejudged the power of God to heal, have limited and circumscribed it, and now those who have pursued the methods adopted by Reverend Worcester and others report as we have seen.

It is quite obvious that the lack of the churches in that regard (the gospel of healing) has become apparent to their adherents. An effort has been made to supply that which is lacking. The effort has failed and the Emmanuel Movement and similar cults have succeeded in accomplishing only that which can be accomplished by mental suggestion without prayer or faith. The situation has not been remedied. There has not been a return to the New Testament method of healing.

NOW TURN TO CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Mr. Hegeman therefore casts about (and others with him) for something more radical, something sufficient and satisfactory. Christian Science seems to them to be the thing needed. Such a confession of spiritual poverty and helplessness is certainly startling. (Was it only recently that Reverend Nutting told us that the churches were all right in 1820, and have continued so?)

The greater part of Reverend Hegeman's book is devoted to assertions that the Protestant churches have utterly failed to meet the needs of the modern age, that they are powerless to combat and eradicate sickness, poverty, crime, and war; and the further assertion, repeated frequently, that complete and permanent relief may be found in Christian Science.

CONFESSION AND ASSERTION

This confession of failure on the part of Protestant churches, coming from a prominent churchman is interesting. But the assertions that such wonders would be wrought by the general adoption of Christian Science are not convincing. It is easy to make assertions. Many zealous advocates of other systems, ecclesiastical, political, and ethical, are making exactly similar claims.

The book is in its entirety a confession and an assertion: a confession of failure made for Protestant churches by a Protestant clergyman, an assertion of the efficacy of Christian Science made by an Episcopalian minister acting as a special pleader for Christian Science. The value of the book is gauged by the importance of such a confession and such an assertion coming from such a source.

The confession and assertion are not backed up by specific data or evidence. There is not much argument; but a great deal of dogmatic declaration. The value of such assertion must be estimated for himself by each reader, with regard to its degree of self-evident truth and the authority of the writer to speak dogmatically.

To us the statement that Protestantism has failed on many points is self-evident; and we concede that as a churchman, of a most aristocratic and orthodox denomination, Mr. Hegeman speaks on that subject with a degree of authority. That the adoption of Christian Science by Protestant churches will bring general relief is not so self-evident, and we recognize no particular authority in Mr. Hegeman to make such a prediction concerning the doubtful outcome of an untried experiment.

Certainly the "restored church," which is neither Catholic nor Protestant, has nothing to gain by adopting Christian Science, for in its gospel is included every good thing that Christian Science teaches, minus its errors and absurdities. From the very inception of the work of restoration, healing was taught and practiced, though opposed most bitterly by the "orthodox" religious world, whose representatives are now falling over each other in an effort to adopt or devise some substitute. Some of the errors and absurdities set forth by Mr. Hegeman will be considered in our next issue.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

DEFEAT WOMEN'S BILL.—What the Chicago Herald denominates as a "reasonable and moderate" women's nine-hour bill, was defeated in the Illinois house the 27th.

IN PORTUGAL.—Quiet seems to have been restored throughout the country. The president is reported as having resigned. Premier Joao Chagas who was shot, is recovering. The new cabinet has announced that it will maintain an absolutely neutral attitude toward all political parties.

PAN-AMERICAN BUSINESS.—Business men of North and South America have been in session in a Pan-American conference at Washington, to devise ways and means of benefiting shipping and business relations between the United States, and especially conditions incident to the European war.

CHINA AND JAPAN.—Treaties and notes have been signed by China and Japan bringing to a conclusion negotiations continuing since January. These treaties have to do with Japanese rights and privileges in Chautung and South Manchuria, and are substantially in accordance with the late ultimatum by Japan.

LAKE TO GULF.—A bill has passed the Illinois Legislature to build a waterway from Joliet to La-Salle, a distance of sixty-five miles, to connect the Chicago drainage canal and the Illinois River, in forming an eight-foot waterway from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico. The cost of this work is estimated at five million dollars.

PRESBYTERIANISM AND PROHIBITION.—The United Presbyterian Church of North America in general assembly at Loveland, Colorado, on the 28th, adopted resolutions petitioning Congress to enact a constitutional amendment prohibiting the importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors; to enact legislation prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; the creation of a federal commission on motion picture censorship; a law forbidding sectarian appropriations for education.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Telegraphic news from Mexico is meager. Letters convey the impression that military forces are exhausting themselves, and that food supplies in parts of the country are running short. Desultory fighting in central Mexico developed in a battle near Leon, where a decisive victory is announced by the Villa forces over the Obregon army. Silao, a Carranza base south of Leon, is reported captured by Villa. Later reports indicate a defeat of Villa's army. The American Red Cross is collecting relief supplies for needy Mexicans.

DIVORCING LINES.—A recent decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission orders railways owning and operating steamship lines on the Great Lakes to dispose of their ships and give up that part of their business after December 1. This action affects several of the trunk lines, which together move the greater part of freight between East and West. The decision is rendered under the Panama Canal law, which forbids the leasing and owning by railways of competing water lines, unless the "public convenience and necessity are concerned thereby."

BRITISH CABINET.—The new coalition cabinet is announced. H. A. Asquith retains the premiership; Sir Edward Grey the ministry of foreign affairs; David Lloyd-George, chancellor of the exchequer in the old cabinet, is made minister of munitions in the new, Reginald McKenna succeeding him in the chancellorship; Lord Kitchener is continued as Secretary of War; Winston S. Churchill is made chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, giving place to A. J. Balfour as first lord of the admiralty; Andrew B. Law is secretary of the colonies. This new cabinet recognizes the various parties and alignments of the empire, and is calculated to further unite the government and the people in the present war struggle.

CUSTOMS RULING.—Affirming the ruling of the Board of General Appraisers, that under the five per cent clause in the Underwood-Simmons tariff law, goods imported in American-owned ships are entitled to a reduction of duties to that amount, the United States Court of Customs Appeals on the 26th held that this reduction applies also to ships of countries holding reciprocal commercial treaties, and affected by the "favored nation" clause of the tariff law. France is the only large maritime country in Europe not affected by this ruling, not having such a treaty. It is expected that an appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court, under the provision allowing appeal in customs cases involving treaties. If the decision is sustained, $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 in duties already collected must be refunded.

GERMANY REPLIES.—Germany has replied to the American note of May 13. Regarding the German aero-attack on the American steamer Cushing and the sinking of the American steamer Gulflight, the note states that German airmen and seamen have been persistently and specifically instructed to avoid attacks on neutral ships not guilty of hostile acts. An investigation is being conducted covering these two cases, and results will be communicated to the American Government, which, if necessary, may be supplemented by consideration under The Hague agreement. Touching the sinking of the British Falaba in which an American life was lost, it is urged that this vessel was in the act of flight, and that she was fired upon only when suspicious crafts were hastening to her assistance. With reference to the loss of life in the sinking of the Lusitania, the German note states, that the Lusitania was built as an auxiliary cruiser and was so carried by the British admiralty; that according to information received by the German Government she was armed with cannon, concealed below deck, that British merchantmen were under instruction to ram or to otherwise damage German submarines, hence the Lusitania was not in the "undefended" class; that she carried Canadian soldiers and munitions; that her owners evidently sought her protection under these conditions by carrying American passengers, which was in violation to American law; hence,

The German Government believes that it was acting in justified self-defense in seeking with all the means of warfare at its disposition, to protect the lives of its soldiers by destroying ammunition intended for the enemy.

The German Government withholds its final decision on the demands of the United States with reference to submarine attack on merchantmen and reparation in the case of the loss of life on the Lusitania, etc., until after American reply to this note.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The deadlock continues in the west, with slight gains for the allies. Reports from the east are conflicting. It is clear, however, that in the fierce fighting of the past few weeks the Russians have lost all along their extended front from the Baltic to the Carpathians. Their retreat has been orderly, however, and the German general advance seems to have spent itself, save in the vicinity of Przemyśl, Galicia, where late German gains are reported. The allies continue to land troops on the Gallipoli peninsula, and are still reported as slowly making progress toward Constantinople. The Turks are suffering heavy losses here. The sinking by British submarines of two or three Turkish warships and two transports is offset by the enemy sinking in the Dardanelles the British battleships Triumph and Majestic, which were supporting the land forces. The German submarine warfare during the week has resulted in the sinking of the Swedish bark M.

Rwoosvall, the Danish steamer Betty, and the British steamers Cadeby and Spennymoor. Danish steamer Ely has been sunk by a mine. The 24th saw the first fighting between Austria and Italy following the declaration of war by Italy on Austria. In land, sea, and air skirmishes Italy seems to have had the advantage. An Austrian submarine has been sunk by Italian torpedo boats. The Italian army is surging across the international border at several points, and has taken Austrian outposts. Italy has declared a blockade of Austrian ports, including islands. In giving to neutral nations reasons for entering the war, Italy says, in effect, that in violation to the treaty creating the triple alliance, a purely defensive coalition, and designed to preserve equilibrium in Europe, she was not consulted when Austria declared war on Serbia; that the course of Austria against Italy constitutes an encroachment upon Italy's political and economical interests; that Austria declined to adequately compensate Italy for the diminution of Italian influence in the Baltic, thus further violating the terms of the treaty; in all of which Austria has made it imperative that Italy defend her interests in war. Germany has declared war on Italy. The American steamer Nebraska, outward bound from Liverpool, and in ballast was damaged by an explosion off the southern coast of Ireland, and returned to Liverpool. Investigation and report indicate that the ship was disabled by a torpedo.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

HOMEWARD BOUND.—By letter from New York, dated May 26, Elder W. H. Greenwood says:

Please announce through the SAINTS' HERALD that I sail for England on board the Adriatic, of the White Star Line, on Thursday, May 27 at noon. I will write shortly an account of my trip to the United States and the General Conference. . . . I would like to express my thankfulness to all the Saints, especially those of Independence for the most homely welcome accorded to me during the month that I was in residence with them. May God bless them.

GRACELAND COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.—Elder Paul M. Hanson and Elder John W. Rushton arrived in Lamoni Saturday, May 29. Brother Hanson delivered the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of Graceland College Sunday morning, at the Brick Church. Brother Rushton spoke in the evening, and is to deliver the commencement address for the college Thursday evening. Both Sunday sermons were listened to by large and very attentive audiences.

LAMONI HIGH SCHOOL.—The graduating class of the Lamoni High School for 1915 is the largest in the history of Lamoni. There are twenty-nine graduates,—fourteen girls and fifteen boys. This is a splendid showing for a town the size of Lamoni. The commencement exercises were held in the Coliseum, the evening of May 27, the address being by Doctor C. P. Colgrove. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Bishop A. Carmichael the Sunday evening previous to the commencement.

BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS AT TABOR.—The senior editor was privileged to deliver the baccalaureate address before the graduating class of the Tabor (Iowa) High School, Sunday evening, May 23. Five of the eight members of the class are Latter Day Saint girls. Though some pressure was brought to bear by certain members of the community to induce them to delinquit their right to select the speaker for the occasion, they stood their ground and maintained their right of choice. The services were held in the Methodist church; the pastor of that church, Reverend Cook, treated us with the finest Christian courtesy. The superintendent of the Tabor High School, Mr. Hammersly, a Christian (Disciple) by profession, had charge of the meeting; prayer was offered by the Congregational minister, Reverend Fisher; while the Methodist pastor read the scripture lesson,—so it will be seen that it was quite an inter-church affair. The church was filled to overflowing, the aisles and vestibule being occupied by people standing, while many were turned away. We were also privileged to speak in the Saints' chapel at the afternoon service, and to meet in the Congregational church in the forenoon in a union memorial service to the dead soldiers of the Nation.

EDITORIAL SELECTION

THE FORTUNATE ISLES

You sail and you seek for the Fortunate Isles,
The old Greek isles of the yellow bird's song?
Then steer straight on through the watery miles,
Straight on, straight on, and you can't go wrong.
Nay, not to the left; nay, not to the right,
But on, straight on, and the isles are in sight,
The Fortunate Isles where the yellow birds sing,
And life lies girt with a golden ring.

These Fortunate Isles, they are not so far,
They lie within reach of the lowliest door;
You can see them gleam from the twilight star;
You can hear them sing by the moon's white shore—
Nay, never look back! Those leveled gravestones
They were landing steps; they were steps into thrones
Of glory for souls that have sailed before,
And have set white feet on the fortunate shore.

And what are the names of the Fortunate Isles?

Why, Duty and Love and a large Content.
Lo! these are the isles of the watery miles,
That God let down from the firmament.
Lo, Duty and Love, and a true man's Trust;
Your forehead to God, though your feet in the dust;
Lo, Duty and Love, and a sweet face's smiles,
And these, O friend, are the Fortunate Isles.

"GODSPEED" PRESIDENT SMITH

[Opening addresses on occasion of the ordination of President Frederick M. Smith, Independence, Missouri, May 5, 1915.—EDITORS.]

BY J. W. RUSHTON

We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. We then, as workers together with him beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. (For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succored thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.) Giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed; but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labor, in watchings, in fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report; as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.—Paul.

It is, as already has been remarked, a most unusual and singular event which brings this large and expectant congregation together this evening. In this event we witness the culmination of an epoch—a series of events that we might well call the epoch of preparation. Thirteen years ago, through what we believe was the intimation originating from the divine wisdom, our brother, whose ordination we hope to witness this evening to the high and holy calling already designated, was selected, and in the selection it was quite broadly implied that the selection to that office was preparatory to the office he now holds.

As the years have come and gone, bringing in their rapid trail events which have been fraught with anxiety and apprehension, yet with unfaltering and increasing prosperity to the cause in which our hope is fixed, we have with mingled feelings of sorrow and buoyancy looked forward to this very hour, this very moment; sorrowfully in that we realized that this hour could only come with much labor and distress, bereavement and disappointment in that the one whose strong and sturdy figure has been leading for more than fifty-five years the growing hosts of the spiritual Israel, from not only the dark shadow land of obscurity, but from the low-lying plains of disappointed hope, of mistaken zeal, of shattered ideals and the wreckage caused by trusting in the arm of flesh, until when he left us there was numerical strength, spiritual vision, a sensitized collective personality at once the tribute to the excellency of his leadership and at the same time the testimony of the divine origin of this work we are representing tonight. I say that this hour could only come when death should strike down the beloved figure of our late prophet.

Still we had joy in the expectation of this coming moment, tragic, sorrowful, apprehensive though it was and is. Our joy lay in the realization of the fact that each age produces its own peculiar problems, each age produces its own peculiar conflicts, and that each generation must provide the strong, clear brain, the invincible fortitude and the courage that dares in order that those peculiar problems and peculiar conditions can be adequately met and provided for, and the people led from one step to another with unfaltering assurance, in firm and undeniable hope of final triumph.

We, therefore, stand at the parting of the ways, —or probably, more correctly speaking in figure, we stand at the summit of a new peak, and as we look backward over the fifty-five years of the preceding time and in wonderful prospective we see the way along which we have traveled, our hearts are cheered, our faith is strengthened, and our vision receives new clarity as we gaze from the then to the now. In the light of this inspiration coming to us in response to that retrospective, we dare to turn our faces to the future.

And we to-day can see all around us the evidences not only of the growing influence of God and spiritual power in our own church, but that the influence of this growth has also spread outwardly, and tide after tide has swept over human experiences, silencing many of the noises of conflict, blending many of the irreconcilables until the ministry of reconciliation has reached a step never chronicled in all the ages of the past.

Within the short space of one year, or a little more, the authoritative voice of science has either acknowledged defeat or declared a truce in many of the long-standing and bitterly-fought conflicts between faith and science. Many of those stalwarts who were hardened in their intellectuality and strength of knowledge and phenomenal growth, have been converted into pioneers carrying the torch of truth into many avenues, and have given unto us entrance to greater continents of opportunity than ever the world had dreamed of before.

Presiding over this harmonious union there sits in solemn approval the muse of modern philosophy, who bids us hope, with the assurance that which we have been denied for centuries, in the slow and tedious progress of our Christian faith, of which this church now is probably the most modern, adequate and completest representative. For I may remind you tonight that revelation from God, or more correctly speaking, the revelation of God to man, the immortality of the soul, and the working out of the divine purpose in the history of human development, are the three great objectives approved of in our most modern theology, philosophy and science. I need only to say to you that at the commencement of our late prophet's experience each one of these was wholly denied or obscured all but universally.

To-day our brother will commence his career of leadership with these forces as reinforcements to our religious idealism, for we do not represent a discipleship of a "closed canon," but we represent a community whose veritable life,—spiritual power, vision and reality, is conditioned in the overshadowing intimation of its divine interest, approval, chastening, rebuking and direction.

We are here to-night to bid our brother Godspeed; to assure him that from our full hearts there shall go with him, about him, before him, and supplementing him, the strong and courageous support of those men who have secured a testimony to the truthfulness of this work, in experience and in sorrow and in labor and in hope and the qualities that have been outlined by the Apostle Paul as the qualifications and credentials of an accepted ministry, in our brother as well as in ourselves. Together we are pledged to continue the work of reconciling man with God. We are here to assure our brother that in this ordination, which symbolizes our approval of the divine selection, that as he shall be confronted with the new problems and shall have his ears filled with the new sounds demanding attention and interpretation; and as he shall attempt to bring out of the human disappointment the fulfillment of the eternal purpose of God, we will support him not only with sentimentality but with a strong and even critical faith that shall bear and dare in the hour of conflict, of doubt, even in the experiences of defeat and humiliation,—all things with him, believing that God who has sustained us in all the years of the past will continue by his strong right hand to support and uphold until the golden age has been brought down from dreamland and converted into the reality of experience.

May God breathe upon this congregation, and recognizing the solemnity of the occasion give to us the assurance that this thing is of God, and send us forth with an inspiration we have never known before to attempt the great task which lies before us on the threshold of the future.

BY F. A. SMITH

It is with peculiar feelings that I undertake to make a speech to-night, as I had no thought of anything of this kind; but in looking over the past, thinking of the conditions through which the church has grown, the conflicts of the early church to almost final dissolution when there came to it the loss of the Prophet and president of its organization; contrasting that with the conditions that exist now, we can not help but feel that there has been a development, a growth both in our moral aspect and in the spiritual, and the understanding of the law that makes us look upon this occasion with a feeling of intense satisfaction.

As we look back over the past and study the work of gathering together the divided forces that lay before our late prophet, the scattered membership, binding up the wounded, seeking to hear, to advise, to counsel, to break down prejudice and error that had grown up, and to unite them upon the truth of the word of God and qualify them that they need not meet with such a disruption again, we can not help but feel that his administration was a success, for at this time we have entered into this event in quietness—there was no confusion, there was no fear. Our way had been mapped out, provision had been made, the people had been instructed, and we met the conditions that arose without fear. While there was anxiety, it may be true, it was not with that fear that otherwise might have come to us.

We can say, too, that under this development the work that lies before the church in the future must necessarily advance from where it is now, and to him who is now to take up this burden and upon whom shall be laid this care, there must come a great weight of responsibility. He can not escape it. He must meet it. In his own wisdom he could not do it, and while I recognize that thought I am conscious too, that he steps out upon this duty better qualified, better fortified than was his father before him. He has had experience under the guiding, fostering care of that father; he has been given opportunity to qualify himself in the study of the word, in the study of the educational features of the day which has helped him in the qualification; and now as he shall be set apart to this sacred and holy office he shall receive by virtue of this ordination the sanction of the people, the sanction of almighty God, and the divine influence that shall qualify him for the spiritual work that may attach to this office.

We are conscious too, of the readiness of this people to criticize. We have heard some of those criticisms, and we ask you now to withhold and wait until he shall have demonstrated at least by actual work whether that would be necessary or not. Let us unitedly enter into the service, and as the church moves out practically upon a new era, and starts once more upon its journey with a new leader to occupy the president's office, let us rally around him and give to him our hearty and best support; and if he shall fail let it not be said it is because the people withheld from him their faith and prayers and their efforts.

I have no fears personally. I have received that which to me has been satisfactory, and I have every reason to say to-night, that in confidence I give to him my hearty support, in confidence that as he shall move out under these responsibilities he will "make good," if you will allow me to use that term; that deep in his heart he has deep-seated a love for this work, and it will become uppermost with him; and as he shall enter more fully upon the duties there will come more evidence from time to time of the qualifications that are essentially necessary for the office.

And as we thus enter in, oh, may we do it, friends, with that assurance that as we have passed through the crisis, have reached this particular point where we shall be in proper condition to move forward again, that we can continue to grow in grace, in the knowledge of the Lord and of his will toward us, and as this church shall increase in membership, increase in its duty toward God, its faithfulness along these lines, there will come added burdens, greater questions that must be solved, and many perplexities, and there will be no place where we can cease that continual effort and that continuous prayer of faith in sustaining those who shall enter in upon their duties to-night as leaders to this church.

We would all like to look down into the future, I know. There is scarcely one, probably, but what would like very much to be conscious of the conditions that lie before us; but I have thought it has been a wise thing that God has not unfolded all those things; it is a wise thing that he gives us but a glimpse now and then. I feel there are many who would fail, who would be unable to face the conditions that may confront us were we to see all that lies before us; hence the apostle in recognition of this has expressed the thought that we must walk by faith; the Master has expressed that, and so we will have to do. Let us, therefore, move out in confidence, in assurance, in unity, for if there is one thing that can bring to this people more strength than another it is when we stand united. Then my friends, we are strong, and we can accomplish the good that has been designed. If we shall put away our doubts, our fears, and in faith move out to the accomplishment of our work, each doing the duty that is assigned to him, and in confidence and assurance standing shoulder to shoulder with others that may also be assigned duties, I am confident of the success of this work, and the next few years may see the advancement of the work, the increase of its influence, the greater hope that shall come to us, the realization of many of the promises of God and the hopes and aspirations of this people.

I plead with you to think of the situation, compare it with the past and you will discover, my friends, that there has come that spiritual influence with us that has enabled us to move out under this critical condition as none have done before. Now that we have come thus far and entered into this situation we see to some extent the results of the teachings, the pleadings, the prayers and the earnest workings of the President who went before—for I have no hesitancy in making the statement it has been almost the burden of his life to lead this people to the place where they could meet emergencies of this kind without fear, without distresses such as have come to them before. He has led us to this; he has set an example for us.

Now as this man steps into this position and occupies there, he shall undertake to continue the policy that his father has laid before us, holding us together, pleading with us, instructing us, admonishing us and helping us in our endeavors to move unitedly to the accomplishment of the new duties that may come, and the new responsibilities that may be ours by virtue of the increase of the work, the development of time and the necessities that arise therefrom, if we will heed his teaching, pay attention to it, move up under it, unitedly standing with him, we shall see more rapid strides, and this church shall rejoice in the greater strength and greater power and greater spiritual development than we have done in the past. To that end let us work and pray.

And as he shall be set apart to this sacred office, and our brother as his counselor, may our prayers be united that God may let rest upon him the mantle of his father, the prophetic office that shall enable him to stand between this people and God, to move under the influence of that divine Spirit and reach out and take hold of the greater intelligence that comes from divinity, and bring to us more and more of that divine light and will of God that shall be necessary for us in the accomplishment of the work that lies before us. Let our prayers extend to that end, and may God endow him and enlighten him and strengthen him in body and mind, and qualify him for the important office that he now assumes, is the prayer of your humble servant.

TRUE GREATNESS

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS—NUMBER 5

BY F. J. EBELING

He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.—Proverbs 16: 32.

At the time the wise man uttered the above words, he recognized the secret of true greatness. Doubtless he had the experience of ruling a great nation, and of trying to rule himself. He succeeded in the former, but failed in the latter. Just in proportion as he failed to rule himself, the glory of his kingdom departed. Great as King Solomon was, he was no greater than the average run of men when put to the tests that make for true greatness.

As a chain is no stronger than the weakest link, so is man no stronger than the weakest part of his nature. Unchecked liberty of any one weakness in our lives will render us hors de combat in the great fight for the Master.

How different is the rule which measures man's greatness in this world from the one which measures greatness in the world to come. In this world greater honor and glory are sometimes bestowed upon a man for his destructive ability than for his constructive ability. If there ever is to be a lasting monument erected to the greatness of man it should be to him who prevented a war instead of him who won a war.

Of all the great deeds we read of upon the battle field; of all the great cities men have taken by strategy or bombardment, there is one who is mightier, "he that ruleth his spirit."

In the keeping of this injunction we see the greatness of it. Should man rule his own spirit instead of getting angry, there would be very little war or contention in this world. One angry moment may set the world back generations.

Sometimes we have to become little in this world, as the world sees it to become great in the world to come. Jesus said, Of all men born of woman there is none greater than John the Baptist, but he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than John. Jesus was speaking of himself. The world regarded Jesus as a very little thing, despised and of no value, but in reality he was the greatest of all born of woman. He was the stone the builders rejected, destined to become the head of the corner.

EVIDENCES OF GREATNESS

Greatness does not consist in overcoming the other fellow in argument, right or wrong. He is a truly great man who when he sees he is in the wrong will acknowledge it and not try to justify himself with makeshifts and excuses. A wrong act is not so bad as the effort to justify oneself in the wrong, for by so doing one lowers his standard of manhood, and reveals weakness. In an unguarded moment one is liable to err, but the better part is to exert oneself to apply the remedy as laid down by the Savior.

Two mountaineers in the West became enemies to each other, and each vowed he would kill the other at sight. They were hunters, and one day they were in the fastnesses of the mountains. One was above the other when he spied his enemy. Immediately the old feud arose within him. He leveled his gun to shoot. Just then he saw a mountain lion in the act of springing upon him. Instantly his better manhood and sympathy asserted itself and he sent the deadly bullet that was intended for the man into the vitals of the lion and saved the life of his enemy. They approached each other, saw what was done, and thereafter were the best of friends. At the very moment the one was about to take the life of another he controlled his spirit—greatness over cowardice, and hatred turned into friendship.

Assassination is not always done by the bullet. In a more disastrous sense it may be done by the smiting of the murderer's tongue. Anything that is worth doing at all is worth doing right. And to become great in any vocation, one must keep constantly at it.

It was Sousa, the great bandmaster, who said, "If I stop practicing one day, I will know. If I stop two days my friends will know. If I stop three days the public will know it." This is just as true in our spiritual program. The first backward step our conscience will rebuke us; the next our brethren, the next our friends, and finally the great Judge.

Some evidences of true greatness are condescending to men of low estate; overlooking the failings in the lives of our brethren; patience under the fire of provocation; acknowledging our faults; looking for the good in the lives of others; and never shrinking from duty, let it be ever so menial.

STARTING RIGHT

Starting in the right cause and keeping therein, is the shining path to power and might. In the State of Ohio, there is a city called Crestline. Its name suggests that it is on the highest point in the State. Two drops of water falling upon a certain building there may take directly opposite courses.

The drop on the south side with its associates goes into the Ohio River, on to the Mississippi, on to the Gulf of Mexico, to the Gulf Stream in the Atlantic, across the deep, absorbed by nature into the ripened grain or fruit or flower, which is taken up by a human being presented to us as in a scientist, as Galileo, or Kepler, or Edison, or Marconi, in a statesman, as Blackstone, or Bismarck or Gladstone; in a philosopher as Socrates, or Demosthenes, or Aristotle; or a musician as Mendelssohn, or Mozart, or Beethoven; or in a general, as Cæsar, or Napoleon or Hannibal—all called great in their calling.

The drops on the north side, born from the same cloud, with its associates, takes its northward course into Lake Erie, then to Niagara, through Ontario, into the Saint Lawrence, on to the frozen north to be of little use.

Which course would you prefer? The sunny road to fame and honor, or the frozen road to a chilly life of inactivity? Before we can become great in any line of activity we must have purpose well established. A man without a purpose is like a ship floating on the tides of the ocean. The one great purpose which makes for the greatest of men is a life consecrated to God for the betterment of the world.

EXAMPLES OF WEAKNESS

He whom history has stamped Alexander the Great, conquered the world by the sword, leaving ruin and suffering in his path. But with all his greatness he was not great enough to conquer himself, and surrendered to King Alcohol. Much of the luster which would otherwise belong to Napoleon fades in his lack of strength to overcome certain temptations. He arose above the greatness of armies and navies, but not above self in that which stands out as a work of truth and strength of character.

General Grant, the mighty little fighter, was strong enough to bring to terms the almost invincible foe, but not strong enough to conquer the little black cigars which are said to have caused his untimely death. All men of more or less repute have sleeping within them an unlooked-for enemy, to whom unless they arise in the power of Him who is altogether great they will be compelled to surrender.

A most sublime example of greatness was found by Christ when in answer to the question, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven, took a little child and set in the midst of his disciples and said, Except ye humble yourselves and become as this little child, you shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven.

TRUE GREATNESS

To learn the secret of true greatness we should study the characteristics of the child. The most beautiful and outstanding qualities of the child are his entire freedom from vain ambition, jealousy, spite, suspicion, revengefulness, and deceit. He has absolute confidence in his parents. With such virtues in the child of God, no power on earth will be able to prevent him from becoming great in the kingdom of God, and, as Daniel says, Shine as the stars in the firmament.

In Matthew 5:17 we have the underlying cause that makes for the greatness or smallness of man.

Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.

To be great, then, in the kingdom of heaven, we may have to come down in the valley of humiliation and abase ourselves in the eyes of men; but for the privilege of becoming kings and priests and standing among the great and mighty of earth's nobles, we can afford to do so.

Jesus illustrates this by the Pharisee and publican. One was regarded as great by men of this world and the other small. The latter in his petition to God indicated his nothingness. And to give inspiration to the weak and humble, Jesus says, I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for everyone that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

All truly great men will do many little things that men of little real consequence will not do. It is said of Judge Marshall, of the Supreme Court, that he was in a grocery store just before Christmas. A young man purchased a turkey, but refused to carry it home, thinking it was beneath his dignity. The judge said to him, "I am going that way and I will carry it for you." So picking it up, he carried it to the man's gate. As the young man took it from the judge, he inquired who he was, and on being told he was Judge Marshall he felt like sinking to the ground.

The same principle is suggested by Christ in Luke 14: 10.

But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

It is much better to begin low and gradually work our way up to a seat with the mighty than to begin high up and have to step down. Such will be the humiliation in the day of judgment. Some who are among the mighty will be compelled to take a low seat.

If you would be great hereafter, be small here. If you would be exalted hereafter, be abased here. And at all times remember he that "ruleth his spirit," is greater than he that "taketh a city."

WOMEN OF THE BIBLE

The Apostle Paul in writing to Timothy told him that scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; and we find in the scripture brief histories of the noblest and also the lowest of womankind. The Creator made man and woman equal; both to serve him and each other. All the characters are given to us as examples or warnings. Let us not judge Eve too harshly; she sinned, it is true, but perhaps she did not know the awful consequences that would follow her one act of disobedience. Among the few women mentioned in the earlier records of the Old Testament is the granddaughter of Eve, who became the wife of Cain, and, like her husband who loved Satan more than God. The wife of Noah, not mentioned by name, must have been a God-fearing woman, because she and her sons were permitted to go into the ark and were saved with a temporal salvation.

The next is Sarah, who became the mother of a great nation, and the only woman whose name was changed by command of the Almighty. Then there was Lot's wife, who did not want to leave her home and friends to utter destruction. The command of the angel was, "Look not behind you." She looked back upon the burning city and was punished with death. What a lesson for us, and how strict are the commands of God.

Rebekah was a good woman, yet she helped her son Jacob to defraud his brother. Rachel and Leah, sisters, were wives of Jacob; one was the mother of Joseph to whom was promised the choice land, the other was the mother of Levi to whose tribe the priesthood was given, and Judah, of whose lineage was the Savior.

Miriam was honored by being the sister of Moses, —his nurse and guardian. With a musical instrument in her hand she led the women in singing praises to God after their journey through the Red Sea. She accompanied him on his journey through the wilderness, and with Aaron rebelled against him on account of the Ethiopian woman whom he had married. For this she was stricken with leprosy, and it was only through the prayer of Moses she was healed. She also had the gift of prophecy.

Deborah was a wise leader, judge, and general, and was the only woman permitted to sit in judgment over God's chosen people.

Sad, indeed, was the fate of the daughter of Jephtha who was offered up as a burnt offering because her father made a rash vow.

Delilah was a despicable woman, who conspired with the Philistines to destroy Sampson.

Ruth was of the hated tribe of Moab, but was a woman of noble character and self-sacrificing disposition; and through her marriage to Boaz she became an ancestress of the Christ.

Naomi was greatly loved by her two daughters-in-law; they were willing to leave their own country and people in order to be with her. This love of women for their mother-in-law was as uncommon then as now.

Hannah must not be forgotten, whose prayer was answered, and who kept her vow to surrender her son at an early age to the service of the Lord; and Samuel, her son, has the cleanest record of any prophet in the Old Testament, except Enoch.

The name of Jezebel will always remind one of all that is wicked; but Esther was a noble queen in a foreign land, willing to give her life to save her people, and was greatly honored for it.

A very different type was Job's foolish wife, who, when he was so sorely afflicted, asked him the question, "Dost thou still maintain thine integrity?" She then advised him to curse God and die.

The first woman mentioned in the New Testament is Mary, whose son was to be known as the Son of God, and who gave his life that we might be redeemed. Anna and Elizabeth were blessed with the gift of prophecy. Martha and Mary were loved by the Savior, and he restored to them their brother whom death had taken away.

The Savior praised the woman who poured the precious oil upon his head, and prophesied that what she had done should be held in remembrance of her in generations to come wherever the gospel would be preached.

Mary Magdelene was the first human being to see the Savior after his resurrection, and was told by him to go and tell others.

Dorcas made garments for the poor and was a useful and respected woman, who after her death, and in answer to the prayer of Peter, was restored to life again. Salome was the mother of James and John the beloved; she followed Christ even to the crucifixion.

Then there was the widow who gave her mite, which act pleased the Savior because she gave all she had; while another woman had such faith that she asked only for the privilege of touching the hem of his garment.

Peter's wife's mother immediately began to serve the Lord and praise him as soon as she was restored to health.

There were Lois and Eunice, grandmother and mother of Timothy, whom even Paul praised; and Priscilla, who taught Apollos the gospel so perfectly that he was afterwards able to do much good and convince many of the Jews that Jesus was the Christ.

WASHINGTON'S VISION

[We have been requested by different persons to publish what is known as Washington's vision, said to have been related by one Anthony Sherman to Wesley Bradshaw, and published many years ago. In response to these urgent requests we herewith furnish the matter as reported. So far as we know there is no means by which this article may be verified and shown to be genuine. We simply publish the matter on request as stated, without in any way committing ourselves to its genuineness or significance.—EDITORS.]

The last time I ever saw Anthony Sherman, was on the Fourth of July, 1859, in Independence Square. He was then ninety-nine, and becoming very feeble; but though so old, his dimming eyes rekindled as he gazed upon Independence Hall, which he had come to gaze upon once more before he was gathered home.

"What time is it?" said he, raising his trembling eyes to the clock in the steeple, and endeavoring to shade the former with a shaking hand, "What time is it? I can't see so well as I used to."

"Half-past three."

"Come then," he continued, "let us go into the hall—I want to tell you an incident of Washington's life, one which no one alive knows of except myself; and if you live, you will before long see it verified. Mark the prediction—you will see it verified!"

Reaching the visitors' room, in which the sacred relics of our early days are preserved, we sat down upon one of the old-fashioned wooden benches, and my venerable companion related to me the following singular narrative, which from the peculiarities of our national affairs at the present time, I have been induced to give to the world. I give it as near as possible in his own words:

When the bold action of our Congress in asserting the independence of the colonies became known in the Old World, we were laughed and scoffed at as silly, presumptuous rebels, whom British grenadiers would soon tame into submission, but undauntedly we prepared to make good what we had said. The keen encounter came and the world knows the result. It is easy and pleasant for the present generation to talk and write of the days of '76, but they little know, neither can they imagine, the trials and sufferings of those fearful days. And there is one thing that I much fear, and that is the American people do not properly appreciate the boon of freedom. Party spirit is yearly becoming stronger and stronger, and without it is checked, will at no distant day, undermine and tumble into ruins the noble structure of the Republic. But let me hasten to the narrative.

From the opening of the Revolution we experienced all phases of fortune, now good and now ill, one time victorious and another conquered. The darkest period we had, however, was, I think, when Washington, after several reverses, retreated to Valley Forge, where he resolved to pass the winter of '77. Ah! I have often seen the tears coursing down our dear old commander's careworn cheeks, as he would be conversing with a confidential officer about the condition of his poor soldiers. You have doubtless heard the story of Washington going to the thicket to pray. Well, it is not only true, but he used often to pray in secret for aid and comfort from God, the interposition of whose divine providence brought us safely through those dark days of tribulation.

One day, I remember it well, the chilly winds whistled through the leafless trees though the sky was cloudless and the sun shining brightly—he remained in his quarters nearly all the afternoon alone. When he came out I noticed his face was a shade paler than usual, and that there seemed to be something on his mind of more than ordinary importance. Returning just after dusk, he dispatched an orderly to the quarters of the officer I mentioned, who was presently in attendance. After preliminary conversation, which lasted about half an hour, Washington, gazing upon his companion with that strange look of dignity, which he alone could command, said to the latter:

"I do not know whether it is owing to the anxety of my mind or what, but this afternoon as I was sitting at this very table engaged in preparing a dispatch, something in the apartment seemed to disturb me. Looking up, I beheld standing opposite to me a singularly beautiful female. So astonished was I, for I had given strict orders not to be disturbed, that it was some moments before I found language to inquire the cause of her presence. A second, a third, and even a fourth time did I repeat my question, but received no answer from my mysterious visitor, except a slight raising of the eyes. By this time I felt strange sensations spreading through me. I would have risen, but the riveted gaze of the being before me rendered volition impossible. I essayed once more to address her, but my tongue had become powerless. Even thought itself suddenly became paralyzed. A new influence, mysterious, potent, irresistible, took possession of me. All I could do was to gaze steadily, vacantly at my unknown visitant. Gradually the surrounding atmosphere seemed as though becoming filled with sensations and grew luminous. Everything about me seemed to rarify, the mysterious visitor herself becoming more airy, and yet even more distinct to my sight than before. I now began to feel as one dying, or rather to experience the sensations which I have sometimes imagined accompanied dissolution. I did not think, I did not reason, I did not move; all were alike impossible. I was only conscious of gazing fixedly, vacantly at my companion.

"Presently I heard a voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn;' while at this same time my visitor extended her arm eastwardly. I now beheld a heavy white vapor at some distance, rising fold upon fold. This gradually dissipated, and I looked upon a strange scene. Before me lay spread out in one vast plain all the countries of the world, Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. I saw rolling and tossing between Europe and America the billows of the Atlantic, and between Asia and America lay the Pacific.

"'Son of the Republic,' said the same mysterious voice as before, 'look and learn.'

"At that moment I beheld a dark, shadowy being like an angel, standing, or rather floating, in mid-air between Europe and America. Dipping water out of the ocean in the hollow of each hand, he sprinkled some upon America with his right hand, while he cast upon Europe some with his left. Immediately a dark cloud raised from each of these countries and joined in mid-ocean. For a while it remained stationary, and then moved slowly westward, until it enveloped America in its murky folds. Sharp flashes of lightning gleamed through it at intervals, and I heard the smothering groans and cries of the American people.

"A second time the angel dipped water from the ocean and sprinkled it out as before. The dark cloud was then drawn back to the ocean in whose heaving waves it sank from view. A third time I heard the mysterious voice, saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"I cast my eyes upon America, and beheld villages, towns and cities springing up, one after another, until the whole land from the Atlantic to the Pacific was dotted with them. And again I heard the mysterious voice say:

"'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"At this the dark, shadowy angel turned his face southward, and from Africa I saw an ill-omened specter approach our land. It flitted slowly and heavily over town and city of the latter, the inhabitants of which presently set themselves in battle array against each other. As I continued looking I saw a bright angel on whose brow rested a crown of light, on which was traced 'Union,' bearing the American flag, which was placed between the divided nation, and said, 'Remember ye are brethren.'

"Instantly the inhabitants, casting from them their weapons, became friends once more, and united around the national standard. And again I heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, the end of the century cometh, look and learn.'

"At this the dark, shadowy angel placed a trumpet to his mouth, and blew three distinct blasts, and taking water from the ocean, sprinkled it upon Europe, Asia, and Africa.

"Then my eyes beheld a fearful scene. From each of these countries arose thick, black clouds, that were soon joined into one. And throughout this mass there gleamed a dark red light, by which I saw the hordes of armed men, who, moving with the cloud, marched by land and sailed by sea to America, which country was enveloped in the volume of the cloud. And I dimly saw those vast armies devastate the whole country, and burn the villages, towns and cities that I beheld spring up. As my ears listened to the thundering of cannon, clashing of swords, and shouts and cries of the millions in mortal combat, I again heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"When the voice had ceased, the dark, shadowy angel placed his trumpet to his mouth, and blew a long, fearful blast.

"Instantly a light as if a thousand suns shone down from above me, and pierced and broke into fragments the dark cloud which enveloped America. At the same moment I saw the angel upon whose head still shone the word Union, and who bore our national flag in one hand and a sword in the other, descended from heaven attended by legions of bright spirits. These immediately joined the inhabitants of America who I perceived were well-nigh overcome, but who, immediately taking courage, again closed up their broken ranks and renewed the battle. Again, amid the fearful noise of conflict, I heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"As the voice ceased, the shadowy angel for the last time dipped water from the ocean and sprinkled it on America. Instantly the dark cloud rolled back, together with the armies it had brought, leaving the inhabitants of the land victorious. Then once more I beheld villages, towns and cities springing up where they had been before, while the bright angel, planting the azure standard he had brought, in the midst of them cried in a loud voice, 'While the stars remain and the heavens send down dew upon the earth, so long shall the Republic last.'

"And taking from his brow the crown on which blazoned the word Union, he placed it upon the standard, while the people kneeling down said, 'Amen.'

"The scene instantly began to fade and dissolve, and I at last saw nothing but the rising, curling vapor I had first beheld. This also disappearing, I found myself once more gazing on my mysterious visitor, who in the same voice I had heard before, said:

"'Son of the Republic, what ye have seen is thus interpreted: Three perils will come upon the Republic. The most fearful is the second, passing which, the whole world united, shall never be able to prevail against her. Let every child of the Republic learn to live for his God, his land and the Union.'

"With these words the vision vanished, and I started from my seat, and felt that I had seen a vision wherein had been shown me the birth, progress and destiny of the United States.

"In union she will have her strength, in disunion her destruction."

Such, my friend, concluded the venerable narrator, were the words I heard from Washington's own lips, and America will do well to profit by them.

THE RAIMENT OF THE POPE

The costliest wardrobe in the world is undoubtedly that of the pope. Etiquette demands of him that every day in the year he wear different garments, which, as nearly all are ornamented with the costliest and rarest jewels, no millionaire may hope to be able to acquire them, even if a price thereon should be named to him. The small head coverings of the pope (kepis) are made out of the finest silk, and his embroidered velvet slippers present a magnificent appearance. Still more costly are his gloves of white wool, embroidered in the form of a cross with splendid pearls. In Rome is kept a special flock of fifty sheep, the wool of which is used only for the wearing apparel of the pope. The stole of the supreme shepherd consists entirely of the most precious and finest lace while a kind of longer cloak the "Cappa magna," which is seldom worn and then hangs straight down from the shoulders, from top to bottom literally glitters dazzlingly from gold and precious stones. And then the rings of the pope, set with many jewels of incomparable beauty, are entirely beyond estimation in money value.—From the Berliner Lokal-Anzeiger, translation by Frederick M. Smith.

JULY READING—MOUTH HYGIENE AND THE CARE OF THE TEETH

"Suppose that from childhood we had been taught that diseased teeth were results of neglect and promoters of physical weakness, and that the loss of a tooth was irremediable. Suppose we had been taught that artificial teeth interfered with natural speech, and that they ruined the natural lines of the face. Suppose we knew that the wearer of artificial teeth was annoyingly conscious of them at all times and that they did the work of mastication but indifferently. Suppose, on the other hand, we had been taught to regard the natural teeth as organs without which health and comfort would be endangered. Suppose we had been taught that decay was a harmful disease which should be eradicated by every possible means and that our teeth were essential to our future advancement. Suppose we knew that their preservation meant freedom from discomfort as well as from many general diseases. Suppose this view, which does not exaggerate the condition in the least, had been vigorously drilled into each one of us, we should then have no more than a proper sense of the value of the natural teeth and an adequate appreciation of the discomforts attending artificial substitutes. Happily such wholesome ideas of dental hygiene are growing more general every day."

The foregoing quotation is from The Care of the Teeth, by Samuel A. Hopkins, M. D., D. D. S. Doctor Kellogg in his Lectures on Practical Health Topics presents urgent reasons why such teaching should be promulgated.

An extract from one of these follows:

"CONSTITUTIONAL FEEBLENESS

"Biologists recognize as a general law that premature decay of the hard structures of the body is one of the most indubitable evidences of racial decay. Among the people of the United States at the present time, it is very rare to find a person thirty years of age or over who possesses in a sound condition all of the thirty-two teeth which belong to him. . . .

"Decay of the teeth is not merely an accident; it is not alone the result of neglect of daily cleansing; it is an evidence of constitutional feebleness. The child whose teeth are not able to resist the attacks of the bacteria to which they are necessarily exposed in the mouth has bones which will readily yield to the attack of the tubercle bacillus, and soft tissues which are unusually susceptible to the various parasitic enemies to which the human organism is exposed."

The writer first quoted says further:

"It is not, perhaps, strictly true that decay is a disease of modern civilization. The author has found in examining about seven hundred skulls of different uncivilized races that there were evidences of decay in about one tooth in forty-five, but few of these teeth would have required any treatment. . . . And these were not selected cases. What story would seven hundred average skulls of average Americans tell to-day? It would be remarkable if one skull in the entire number did not show such evidence of decay of the teeth as would indicate a need of dental operations. . . .

"If our boasted superiority and intelligence is to avail to make life more charming, more beautiful, and more worthy of being lived, it would seem as if its greatest effort should be directed toward the strengthening of the body and the preservation of health. It would appear, however, that the very simplicity of the laws of health engenders a desire to break them, and because the punishment does not immediately follow and our fracture of the law result in quickly following illness, we are led to take chances with our health that we should never think of taking if our punishment were meted out immediately upon the breaking of the laws. . . . Our confidence in the physician is so great that in the matter of food and drink self-indulgence is the rule rather than the exception. In the same way our confidence in the dentist leads to our neglect of the means by which dental operations may be avoided. . . . But careful observation will discover the truth of the general proposition that the men and women who lead in the world's progress must have strong teeth, and that if you would see your children pioneers and leaders in the world's best work you must give them good teeth. Without these vitality is lowered and force is weakened. . . . Degeneracy of the teeth means deterioration of the race."

ACID PRODUCING BACTERIA

"Bacteria are single cell organisms belonging to the vegetable kingdom, so minute that many millions of them could dance on the head of a pin. In a suitable soil or medium for cultivation they multiply with a rapidity almost incomprehensible. . . . In the human mouth there are many forms of bacteria that are so commonly found that they may be looked upon as almost indigenous. Among those forms of bacteria found more or less constantly in the mouth are many kinds which are capable of producing lactic acid under favorable conditions. . . .

"It is undoubtedly a shock to the average layman to be told that the human mouth is a perfect hotbed of bacteria, and that from time to time it is probable that nearly every form of bacteria finds its way into the oral cavity in food and water and by means of the air, and indeed by almost everything that enters the mouth. The habit of using the mouth as a convenient receptacle for small objects when the hands are occupied tends to increase the number and variety of bacteria entering the gateway of the body. . . .

"In the mouth it is possible for us to control in some measure the rapidity with which bacteria develop. This can not be done by antiseptics or mouth washes alone, as experiments have shown. . . . On the other hand, it can be readily shown that thorough mastication reduces the number of bacteria in the mouth. By the act of vigorous chewing they are brushed off the teeth and out of their resting-places and are mixed with the masticated food and carried into the stomach to be destroyed by the acid of the healthy gastric juices. After a meal—particularly one which consists of food requiring prolonged mastication—bacteria will be found much less abundant than before the meal. Shortly after the meal they begin again to increase, and continue to do so until the beginning of the next meal, when they are again found in greatest numbers. If, however, the mouth is well cleansed and the food particles carefully washed out immediately after the meal, the increase in bacteria is greatly lessened, and if the saliva is normal and the teeth and mucous membrane are in a healthy condition the development of bacteria will be greatly retarded.

"If starchy food, like bread, crackers, etc., is allowed to remain in the mouth, it will greatly enhance the development of the acid-producing bacteria which have been found so destructive to the teeth. This effect is also produced by saccharine food, like sugar, candy and other sweets. . . . When the mouth is kept free from starchy and saccharine foods it deprives the acid producers of the elements needed for their growth. . . . Besides protecting the teeth, such cleanliness reduces the likelihood of acquiring other diseases. . . . However, there are many considerations other than the mere presence of bacteria which must be taken into account in explaining the decay of teeth.

"LACK OF EXERCISE

"In the care of teeth, it may be said in a general way that they suffer from a lack of nutrition and from a lack of exercise. In addition to this lack they suffer also from a lack of surface polish, which would make them more resistant to the action of bacteria and their acid products. All three of these conditions are interdependent and can not be separated readily, and each one is largely the result of civilized methods of selecting and preparing food. . . . As food is now prepared for the table, it requires little or no chewing, and we have consequently lost in a great measure the habit of mastication and the strength of the masticatory muscles has diminished. When food does not melt in the mouth we wash it down with a draft of water or tea or coffee, and our children are permitted to do the same. It is no great wonder that the teeth become weak, that the muscles which control the movements of the jaw lose their strength and grow tired if called upon for any prolonged effort. It is not remarkable that the lower jaw retracts and becomes small and narrow when there is insufficient exercise to encourage its development.

"If children could be sent to a chewing school as they are now sent to a kindergarten, there would be a marked improvement in the race. . . . To produce strong teeth is almost as simple a matter as to produce strong arms. To accomplish this, however, it is necessary to see that the children have at each meal some wholesome article of food that calls for vigorous mastication and to see that it is thoroughly masticated. If this plan is persisted in, the habit will soon become established so that it will never be forgotten. Bills for dentistry will be reduced, the child's teeth will become strong and well polished, and there will be a distinct enlargement of the jaw and a strengthening of the facial muscles. There can be no exaggeration of the marvelous results achieved by vigorous mastication. . . .

"Exercise causes the blood-vessels to take up the waste material which has served to nourish the part, and when this is taken up fresh material is brought to nourish and strengthen it. It is perfectly obvious that no matter how abundant the food supply may be, no matter how rich the blood is in nutrient material, no matter how well adapted that nutriment material is to the needs of a given part of the body, yet unless sufficient exercise is taken the nutrient pabulum will not be taken up because the waste material can not be expelled to make room for it. This applies equally to the arm or to the teeth or to any other portion of the body.

"If however, the food taken into the system be insufficient, or if sufficient in quantity it fails to contain enough nourishment for the entire body, the condition is much more serious, and that organ or that part of the body which is least used will suffer most from the scarcity of nutrient pabulum. . . .

"Even the little temporary teeth must have a goodly amount of exercise, since exercise insures a bountiful blood supply, and upon this depends not only their own preservation and usefulness, but also the size and shape of the jaw and texture of the permanent teeth which follow. All are influenced by the use or neglect of these tiny teeth. . . ."

"In all the skulls of prehistoric races departures from the normal regular order of teeth are extremely rare. It is also true that irregularities seldom occur in the deciduous or temporary teeth of children except such as are brought about by some unfortunate habit. If it is true, then, that we almost invariably start in life with regular dental arches, and that until the second set of teeth begins to come irregularities are seldom seen, it is obvious that something must happen in the first twelve years of the child's life to account for the misplaced and irregular teeth which are so common in America. The explanation is often found in a lack of sufficient development of the jaw to accommodate the increased size of the second teeth. Almost as soon as the first dentition is completed the little temporary teeth ought to begin to separate, and small but well defined spaces ought to appear between the teeth. These spaces should continue to increase up to the time of the appearance of the first permanent incisors. This separation of the temporary teeth tells us that the bones of the jaw are developing and are increasing in size to afford room for the permanent teeth which are soon to appear. If development is retarded and we fail to see these spaces caused by the separation of the teeth we may well be apprehensive, for it indicates that the jaws are likely to be too small to accommodate the permanent teeth when they appear. . . . Wholesome food and vigorous use will enlarge the jaws and go far to prevent irregularities due to arrested development of the jawbone. . . .

"HEALTHY MOUTH SECRETIONS

"Mouth-breathing and its attendant evils affect the mouth secretions most harmfully. . . . If we can avoid the habit of mouth-breathing and can acquire the habit of thorough mastication we have gone far toward rendering the mouth secretions normal. Normal mouth secretions prevent decay. . . .

"Besides benefiting the teeth and jaws, mastication, if properly performed, stimulates the glands of the mouth to healthy action and the saliva is rendered clear and normal. Such saliva mixes readily with the food, and a small amount will convert a large amount of starch into sugar and assist materially in digestion. Sluggish glands bring forth unhealthy secretions. It is scarcely necessary to refer to the effect of mastication upon stomach digestion, since it is pretty generally conceded that a large number of all diseases of the stomach and of other disturbances of the digestive tract come from bolting the food. . . .

"GUM CHEWING

"A question that naturally arises is, Why is not the remedy to be found in gum chewing? . . . The truth is that the constant chewing of gum overtaxes the salivary glands to such a degree that they do not respond to the normal stimulus of food when it is taken, and as a consequence large quantities of liquid must be taken at meals to supply the loss. The stomach is irritated by the unusual quantity of saliva swallowed between meals, and digestive disturbances are the common result of indulgence in this objectionable practice."

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY

Parents' Day.—Prayer for our families and for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred; that we may all have a growth in spirituality; that the homes of Saints may be model Christian homes. Pray for all sick and afflicted.

SUBJECT FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY

Prayers for our missions and missionaries in all places, especially remembering the Lamanites that the preaching of the gospel may be with conviction that will lead them to obedience, and that thereafter their lives may demonstrate its purifying, uplifting power. Remember the mission at Jerusalem, and those who have been sent there, that they may be protected, and be successful in winning many to Christ and to his truth.

EDITED BY GOMER R. WELLS, LAMONI, IOWA

This committee is composed of the following, all of whom participated in the work of the committee during the convention and conference just past: The five editors of Gospel Quarterly, viz, Christiana Salyards (senior); Lucie Howes Sears (intermediate); Margaret Macgregor (junior); Anna Zimmermann, resigned (primary); Eunice Winn Smith (Beginner); Heman C. Smith; J. F. Garver, J. A. Gunsolley, secretary; General Superintendent, chairman.

The following report was made to the Convention:

"The editors report that in all the grades lessons are prepared up to October, 1915. In several instances, the lessons of the three years just completed have been, of necessity, a departure from the course originally outlined. The practical work of writing lessons has revealed necessity for changes which could not be anticipated, and the effort has been to meet emergencies while adhering to the course as closely as seemed reasonable.

"The work now before the committee is to revise the course, taking advantage of past experience to make the grades fit more smoothly together. In the past two years or more, the editors, working many miles apart and without opportunity to compare work with one another, have attempted to work out their individual courses. They are now called together to confer, with the hope of making progress in the correction of existing imperfections.

"It has taken educational experts on other graded courses three years to select subjects alone, and we could hardly expect to perfect a course satisfactory to us upon a first effort.

"In January, 1916, the lessons will begin again on the first year of the course. The committee, as a whole, or any of the individual editors will welcome any suggestions made in the interest of the lesson work by teachers or persons of experience; for, the work of preparing teaching material upon the great subjects of true religion for the children of the church is arduous and of immense importance. The committee has held two meetings and expects to work during the conference."

In the further deliberations of the committee, the items below gathered from the minutes are interesting to all.

GENERAL AIM OF THE COURSE OF STUDY

1. To bring souls to a knowledge of God's truth revealed in the gospel of Christ as given anciently and restored in these last days.
2. To inspire the doing of God's will, thus developing a perfect character in Christ.

SLIGHT CHANGE IN AGE LIMITS

Those who have read the statement of the course as agreed on three years ago, will recognize that one year has been taken off the beginner grade and assigned to the cradle roll department, which results in advancing all other grades one year. Lessons will be prepared, beginning with January, 1916, to suit grades as under:

Cradle Roll Department.—Including children under four years of age, provision to be made in the Beginner Quarterly for such, by inserting suggestions to teachers, somewhat along kindergarten lines, of materials, plays, etc., suitable for their use.

Beginner Grade.—To cover ages 4, 5 and 6. No pupils to be kept in the grade after age seven, but may be promoted any time after they reach six.

Note that this suggests flexibility, which is also found in all the grades following:

Primary Grade.—To cover ages 7, 8 and 9. No one to be retained after reaching ten, but may be promoted any time after reaching nine.

Note that the grade has them one year before the age for baptism and one year after. It is to be hoped that all parents, elementary writers, and teachers will keep this divinely-appointed age of eight in view all the time. Let it be an important epoch in the life of the child. Let our motto be: Give us the child until he is eight and you can have him the rest—he will be a baptized believer in the latter-day work.

Junior Grade.—To cover ages 10, 11, and 12. No one to be retained after reaching thirteen, but may be promoted any time after reaching twelve.

Intermediate Grade.—To cover ages 13, 14, and 15. No one to be retained after reaching 16, but may be promoted any time after reaching 15.

Senior Grade.—To cover ages 16, 17, and 18.

By turning to article VI, page 14 of by-laws for Sunday schools, it will be seen that the above does not conflict and no amendment will be necessary.

PROMOTIONS

A resolution was passed recommending that certificates of promotion be given upon the completion of the work in each grade up to and including junior and that no diplomas be given until completion of the intermediate grade.

We hope to have the certificates and diplomas on sale at the Herald Publishing House. A diploma means more to a pupil in Sunday school at the completion of the intermediate grade, age about fifteen, than it does to a young man or young lady of eighteen at the close of the senior grade. The giving of a diploma at this time may be an incentive to some to stick to Sunday school who now drop out.

Those finishing the senior grade will be urged to take the Religio-Sunday school normal course, upon completion of which they will receive a diploma for advanced work.

Autobiography of Amanda M. Butler

[The following letter was prepared by Brother T. J. Smith at the dictation of Sister Amanda M. Butler.—EDITORS.]

Editors Herald: I am now in my eighty-first year. I was born in Delaware County, Ohio, January 27, 1835. I was the youngest daughter of Reuben and Mary Martin, and am the only one living of our large family. My father emigrated to, and settled in Indiana, a few miles from Terra Haute, when I was an infant, and when I was about seven years of age my parents came in contact with the restored gospel. This came about in a very peculiar manner.

There was an old man living in our vicinity by the name of Wilsey. He was quite poor and unpretentious. He often came to our house to talk upon the Scriptures, but never hinted as to his belonging to any religious sect. He surely was well informed in the Scriptures; my mother often said he could explain the Bible in a manner far beyond anyone she had ever heard.

There was another man in Terre Haute engaged in the grocery trade by the name of Clark. This man always went well dressed and had a very gentlemanly appearance. He visited Wilsey frequently, and it was a matter of great curiosity to the neighbors, why he came to visit this poor old man so often.

One Sunday they both came over to our house to talk Scripture. My mother stirred up courage sufficient to inquire of them what faith they represented. Clark replied that they belonged to the Latter Day Saints, better known to the world as "Mormons." My mother was greatly surprised, for, as yet, she had heard naught of these people but evil. Clark asked the privilege of preaching in her house, if he would bring an elder. She consented. So an appointment for Sunday, two weeks, was given out.

When the time came for the meeting, who should arrive with Mr. Clark but the noted John E. Page. His first sermon was from the text, Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel, etc. When he read the text, my mother wondered what a "Mormon" would do with such a text as that, as, she thought, surely "Mormonism" was a different gospel from what Paul preached. But when he got through she wondered just as much why she had been so blind as not to see it in that light before.

Meetings were continued in our house for some time by Brother Page, when he was joined by Zenos H. Gurley, sr., and John Kearns. By this time my father, mother, one sister and her husband were baptized. My parents prior to these meetings belonged to the Christian Church, and when the elders began to baptize, the preacher began to stew and attempt to raise trouble. But the elders seemed to possess such power that but little outward demonstrations were indulged in by him or his members.

When my parents were baptized and came up out of the water this preacher (his name was Ringer) took them by the hands and rebuked them for their action, saying that they would surely repent of it. My mother said, "Never; but in one year, Mr. Ringer, you will be one with us in the Latter Day Saint Church." Of course he said no, but in less than six months he joined. We met Brother Ringer in Nauvoo some time afterward.

About one year after my parents were baptized, we moved to Nauvoo, and after some time located in Lee County, Iowa, about seven miles from the latter place, where I was baptized when nine years of age by Elder John Cooper.

It was here that a strange and miraculous warning of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith was given. The morning after the assassinations occurred, my mother was sweeping her doorstep when nine great drops of blood came splashing down upon it from somewhere, she did not know where. We had not heard of the deaths of the Smiths as yet, and all took it as a warning that they either had been killed or were soon to be killed. Brother Charles Derry in his account in the Journal of History, of this strange and miraculous circumstance, states that it was on the doorstep of Nancy Martin, a sister-in-law of mine, where the blood fell; this is a slight mistake, it was on my mother's doorstep.

Previous to this time my brother, Z. S. Martin, who was not over twenty years of age, and who had been previously baptized, was ordained an elder and immediately sent on a mission to Indiana, near Logansport. He remained on this mission for three years, raised up a large branch and led the whole number back with him to Nauvoo. In the final expulsion of the Saints from Nauvoo this same brother was dangerously wounded in one of the battles with the mob, a piece of wood, which had been knocked from a stump by a cannon ball, striking him in the breast.

About the time of the big emigration of the Saints from Nauvoo to Utah, in 1846, this same John E. Page, before mentioned, tried his utmost to persuade our folks to follow Brigham Young as the proper one to lead the church. On being bluntly refused, he exclaimed, "I had a hard time bringing you into the church, and now you are going to back out. I am going to follow the church, and if there is anything wrong, it will be rooted out." But it can be said to his credit that he never went to Utah.

After the most of the Saints had left for the West, we moved back again to Nauvoo, supposing there would be no more trouble; but we were sadly mistaken. The mob renewed their efforts to clear the city of all the Saints. Before making their final attack, they showed mercy enough to order all the women and children from the place. We were sent over to the Iowa side, to a little place called Montrose.

It was here that we had the most trying time of all our bitter experience. Montrose was completely overrun with refugees from Nauvoo, and there was no place for us to get shelter. My mother was sick and badly in need of some one to take care of her, but there was no one to do this. She was finally taken to an old shack of a building, as the best place available for the time being. I was immediately sent to a relative by the name of Daniel Bullard, about two miles in the country, to come and take her out to his place. When I got there he was not at home, so I had to wait his coming, and when we got back to Montrose it was after dark.

During my absence my mother had been taken from the old shack down to a steamboat that lay at the river bank, as a more suitable place for a sick person, and we had quite a serious time locating her, as everything was in wild confusion. We finally found her on the boat.

There was a saloon on the other end of this boat, and it was full of men from the mob, who were drinking, carousing and cursing the "Mormons," and telling what dire things they were going to do to them. The reader can imagine what a place it was for a sick and helpless person to be in. Mother was overjoyed to be taken out to Brother Bullard's.

The next day I was sent to a neighbor's house quite a little way to try to get a chicken for my mother. I succeeded in getting one, and on coming back I saw at a distance about one hundred men of the mob coming toward me. I was terribly frightened and at a loss to know what to do. I thought, of course, they would take my chicken, even if they did not harm me. I slipped off to one side and crouched down behind a shock of corn in a field. They passed by without seeing me. So I delivered the chicken.

After the trouble at Nauvoo was over, we all went from Brother Bullard's up the river to Fort Madison, crossed over into Illinois, and went down to Knoxville. It was on our way to this place that the following circumstance took place.

We had stopped at a farmhouse for the night and had rented a room. The farm folks were very kind to us, even offering to share their beds with us, which offer we felt willing to accept. Of course they did not know that we were Saints. Before we retired however, a neighbor woman dropped in and enlightened us with the following item of news:

"Well, what do you think! Old Joe Smith's mother is over in Knoxville at this very time showing some dead mummies."

"Is she?" asked the woman of the house, "the old thing ought to be shot."

This was too much for my mother, so she said, "Oh, no, the poor old woman has trouble enough without being shot."

We did not share the woman's beds that night.

After living in and around Knoxville for three years we moved again over into Iowa, near Davenport, where my father died of cholera. Then after several other moves, back and forth between Iowa and Illinois, we finally came west to Council Bluffs, Iowa, with an expedition my youngest brother had fitted out for California. Here I became acquainted with my husband, Stephen Butler. We were married in December, 1855. After this we went into Nebraska and took up land near De Sota, in Washington County. We resided here until 1880.

In the meantime my husband joined the army, served his time, was discharged, and in June, 1865, he, my mother and myself, were baptized into the Reorganized Church, by John N. Burton, who at the time was in good standing in the church. We were charter members of the old De Soto Branch, which, for several years, was considered one of the best branches in the church.

It was here that my mother died and was buried. She calmly rests now on top of one of the great hills overlooking the winding course of the Old Missouri River. It was here that we first became acquainted with Brother Elijah and Sister Sylvia Webb, the life experience of the latter having been so graphically told a few weeks since in the HERALD. It was here that we first met Brother Charles Derry, Mark H. Forscutt, H. J. Hudson, and many others of the noted pioneers of the Reorganization.

Prior to his conversion my husband was bitterly prejudiced against the church, and fought it just as zealously as he afterward defended it. Sister Nancy Martin, it was claimed, literally prayed him into the church. After he passed over the "divide" (as the old saying goes) he was a true, faithful and energetic Saint to the day of his death. His remains rest in the cemetery at Kingfisher, Oklahoma, at which place he died July 6, 1900.

I am the mother of five children, three of whom are now living: Catherine Smith, of Independence, Missouri; Preston L., and Rena Sorden, of Kingfisher, Oklahoma. I have ten grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

I want to remain faithful to the gospel banner the remainder of my days on earth, and trust to have a good part in the world to come.

AMANDA M. BUTLER.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, April 11, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am rejoicing that in his infinite love and mercy God has met with the Saints in this branch by the voice of the Spirit through Brother Goodrich, urging the Saints to come up higher, showing by their acts that they have been with God and he with them.

The young people of the Religio gave a fine program recently. The Religio is doing nicely at present, fair attendance and good programs being in evidence. There is also a good interest in the lesson study. The young people should be encouraged in the efforts they put forth. They desire, I am sure, the prayers of the older ones that they may be blessed.

Hoping and praying for greater success in every department of the church work, I am as ever,

MINNIE ROCKHOLD.

HELENA, OKLAHOMA, April 2, 1915.

Editors Herald: A lecture was given here in the Presbyterian church recently by Mrs. Deifender, who tried to make her hearers believe that the Reorganized Church was as bad as the Utah Church in doctrine and practice. Some did seem to believe it, others did not.

I tried to defend our cause but had little opportunity, as there were some things urged that I had not heard before. I did not know what to do until the Ensign came to our relief with an article covering the matter in question, which through the kindness of the editors of our local paper who wished to see fair play we had published here. We are pleased to do that much good and hope the reprint will be enlightening to the people.

We are grateful to the Ensign and the brother who wrote this article, and forget not to thank our heavenly Father.

Your brother in Christ,

J. L. CONYERS.

News from Missions

Washington

At the close of another conference year, we can look back with some degree of satisfaction at the result of work done in the Master's cause. When we say satisfaction, we do not lose sight of conditions that prevail; success in one place would not be considered so in another. For instance, an audience of ten would not be considered much in the eastern missions, but as far as investigators are concerned, it is a good average with us. I may be too liberal at that.

Several of the brethren have labored here, but very few have asked to return. With all the discouraging features, we love the work here because many noble souls share the burden untiringly. The faithful ones keep their faces to the foe, and when we clasp the hand and look into the eye of those who appreciate the calling of a Saint, the obligation to God and their fellows, it is an inspiration to press on.

Recently we accepted an invitation to go into the jungles of the State of Washington, on the west slope of the Olympic Mountain range, the home of the giant fir, spruce and cedar. One of the brethren in building his barn selected a fallen tree as one side of the building.

We took the stage from Hoquiam to Humptulips. This last is an Indian word, meaning hard to get up, referring to the river. We started for our destination, a distance of fourteen miles, over gravel and puncheon road. We took this part on foot. We were accompanied by Brother E. E. Fishel. When I tell you he had been a forest ranger for the Government for several years, you will know what it meant for us to keep up with him. Let me tell you now, I did not.

After eleven miles, we arrived at the home of Brother and Sister Bockover, where we were welcomed. We stopped here, Brother Fishel going on home. We began meeting the following night in a little schoolhouse about two miles from Bockover's. I had an appreciative audience for eight nights.

We then hit the log road for Quinault, fourteen miles further into the interior, where we were domiciled with a good samaritan, a Mr. Pealer, there being no Saints there. We were made comfortable for a week, and again met with an interested audience, from twenty to thirty-five being in attendance. We left here with earnest invitations to come again. We returned to Brother Fishel's and held two more meetings in the home of a Mr. and Mrs. Kelley. Two young men attended here who walked ten miles. Mr. Pealer also came on horseback. Sister Bockover and two of Brother Fishel's children were baptized. We then came back to Humptulips, where we held from Saturday till the following Thursday with very good interest.

In all these meetings we were ably assisted by Brother Fishel and Sister Bockover. This sister bravely walked the several distances and played the organ and sang hymns. In fact, we met with a ready response from all in the singing.

While we must give credit to many of the Saints for the integrity displayed, we regret that some are very indifferent.

I wish to mention our rally day at Seattle, May 16. Brother Terry called for the rally. We had a good day, and the Spirit was with us to cheer. The morning service was grand. The grandchild of Sister Vida E. Smith was blessed at this meeting, daughter of Evan and Earlita Inslee.

We wish to say to the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District that the finances have never been so low as at the present. We have not enough on hand to meet the demands of the elders' families. This is the first time since I have been bishop's agent that this has occurred. Let us rally to the work. Do not read this and lay it aside without giving it proper thought. It is time to act now. Make out an order now. Send it to the following address. Please do not ignore your duty in this regard.

Yours for success,

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, 3632 Evanston Avenue.

News from Branches

Andes, Montana

Our branch here, called the Culbertson Branch, is still growing. We have a membership of fifty-seven, most of whom are alive and interested in the work. We have quite a number of young people, and the rest are mostly comparatively young. We are all colaborers in the work of the Sunday school. Our choir under the leadership of Mrs. M. A. Higgins shows that we have some talent here as elsewhere. Our Sunday school is working for place as a first-class school.

Two missionaries, Elders J. C. Page and J. A. Bronson, have their homes here, so that frequently we have them to preach for us. They are both at home at present for a few weeks before going away to their missions.

Last year Mrs. Ben Huenink, of Shelby, Montana, came to teach our school. She had been a reasoner and reader of the Bible, so when Elder W. P. Bootman came and preached a series of sermons here, she was ready to obey. She went back home a true Saint, and will try by her life and words to preach the true gospel to those at home.

This is a rural community, and we are all busy planting and plowing. It is very dry now, and we are very much in need of rain.

MRS. S. M. ANDES.

Houston, Texas

Have read letters in the HERALD from branches in all parts of the United States, and think it is about time to hear from Houston. We have an enrollment of about sixty here, not all of them living near enough, however, to allow them to attend services. We are ably presided over by Elder Noel T. Starkes, who has kept interest going in the work here for the last two years. He is assisted by two resident elders, one priest, one teacher, one deacon and many good and faithful Saints.

We hold Sunday school and two preaching services on Sunday, normal class, prayer meeting and Religio, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday nights respectively. Attendance is good at most meetings, with a few outsiders dropping in now and then, which gives more zest, if possible, to the telling of the gospel story. We are looking forward to a good year, and are hoping to do much good by spreading the gospel in this place. There seems to be much pleasure exhibited in the branch at the appointment of an evangelical minister to Texas, and adjoining territory. We hope to welcome Brother H. O. Smith to Houston in the near future.

We were deeply interested in an editorial by Brother John F. Garver in the HERALD of May 5. This should be closely read by every Latter Day Saint, and then put in practice what they find there. Every Saint has a commission in this glorious work, and if we put forth every effort with untiring energy, in harmony with the direction of the Spirit of God, we can accomplish the seemingly impossible. This unanimity of purpose, in conjunction with faith and obedience to the gospel plan, will bring us all up to a higher level before the Lord, and prepare a people to meet him when he comes to reign with us upon this changed earth.

The prayers of the Saints in Houston are that every Saint shall so live that he may share in the glorious promises made by God to those who diligently serve him. May we all attain this state.

Your humble servant in the work of God,

ALBERT J. BANTA.

HOUSTON HEIGHTS, TEXAS, 1541 Ashland Street, May 10, 1915.

Independence, Missouri

A wonderfully peaceful and spiritual time was the occasion of the ordination of President Frederick M. Smith and his counselor, President Elbert A. Smith.

Of late we have had more notices read concerning "meetings of interest for women" to be held than almost anything else. The sisters are getting busy. Lectures, demonstrators, teachers of athletics, students of ancient history and advanced English, teachers of culinary and millinery, art, seamstresses, house cleaners, vocalists and instrumentalists—these interests are springing up in every direction, and their growth is phenomenal. Notwithstanding this sudden development of classes and others in psychology, training of nurses, some hope to become acquainted with metaphysics, and during many hours of both day and night the seekers after more mental and spiritual things, a few of whom are brethren of the ministry from abroad, are engaged in trying to fathom the depths of the conscious and subconscious mind.

Mrs. Harriet MaGassow gave the first of a series of lectures on practical psychology before the aid society and a few others on May 19, and Sister J. W. Peterson, a trained nurse, has been giving lectures to large audiences of late in the church hall.

All this affords but an iota of the unprecedented opportunities given here in the central place for soul development, mutual helpfulness of the home, the spreading of the gospel, and for greater and more efficient labors of the missionaries as they go and come, bringing to the Saints their rich and enduring truths of Christian experience to gladden men and enrich their lives and strengthen their spirits.

Among those still with us are Brother Muceus and Brother Okerlind from the Norway and Sweden missions respectively, who gave much encouragement and good counsel to their hearers, Brother Barmore, late of Australia, and J. Charles May and H. W. Savage from across the sea, with their message of love and good will. Many like Brother F. M. Sheehy have left their happy firesides, and are on their way to their distant fields to labor, and whom we have had to bid good-by until we meet again.

Our preaching meetings, Sunday school, Religio and Auxiliary, together with the social gatherings, continue the same as usual, and although sickness and affliction and bereavement have invaded our ranks of late, we have great reason to rejoice because of the many assurances of our heavenly Father's watchcare and good will concerning his people.

Your sister in the faith,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

AGENTS' NOTICES

MICHIGAN

To the Saints of Western Michigan; Greeting: In the year just passed we as a district have done well along the financial line, and I feel thankful to you for the way you have sustained this part of the work. As we are starting out on another conference year and have renewed responsibilities, let us double our diligence and make the necessary sacrifice that there may be means in the treasury to supply all demands.

Let us prove the Lord as he has asked in Malachi 3:10, and then we may escape the burning spoken of in Doctrine and Covenants 65:4. Let us go to with our mite and be laborers together, accomplishing the things which the Lord has commanded, and thereby receive the reward which comes through obedience to the celestial law.

Your brother and colaborer,
F. W. HASTINGS.

SOUTH BOARDMAN, MICHIGAN.

MASSACHUSETTS

I find our receipts of tithes and offerings have been shrinking considerably of late. While I appreciate that times have been pretty close, yet the Lord has been very good to us, and we must not forget our obligations to him. It will be necessary for each of us to do our whole duty in order to meet the requirements financially in our district.

During the last two months I have not had funds enough on hand to take care of the elder's families. I wish every member of the district would figure his or her tithing and let me have it as soon as possible so that those who have left their families in our care while they are away on missionary work may not be hampered by worrying over the fact that the families are not properly cared for. A little effort on the part of each one will give us an abundance to carry this work along.

May God bless you in your endeavoring to do your whole duty.
M. C. FISHER, Bishop of Massachusetts.

GALLANDS GROVE

To the Saints of the Gallands Grove, Iowa District; Greeting: The late General Conference expressed its abiding confidence in the membership of the church by approving the large list of missionary appointments (which means that we should help support them and their families) presented by the First Presidency and Twelve. It was also voted to support the Children's Home, old peoples' homes, Graceland College, Sanitarium, etc. We believe we can by a united effort do this and make the present conference year the most prosperous one in the history of the reorganization. Will you help by paying your tithes and offerings promptly, and more liberally than ever before?

While many nations are wasting their strength, money, and even the lives of thousands in cruel war, the aspiration of the Saints should be to seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness.

The following brethren are branch agents and will receipt for church funds: J. L. Butterworth, Dow City; T. N. Franklin, Harlan; D. A. Holcomb, Gallands Grove; L. O. Myers, Deloit; A. R. Crippen, Cherokee; John Jordison, Coalville; C. L. Carmichael, Mallard.

Your brother,

C. J. HUNT, Bishop, Gallands Grove District.

DELOIT, IOWA, Mission address.

Pastoral

British Isles Saints; Greetings: Having been appointed by U. W. Greene as associate minister of this mission, I herewith address you in regard to method by which we hope to keep up interest in our work in its several departments. The war has robbed us of some very noble brethren, young ministers to whom we have looked for real effective and intelligent service. While this terrible conflict is going on we must reserve our efforts and expand all our energy in supporting our local organizations. This must be our first consideration—first things first.

With respect to missionary labor, I shall not append prospective organization of ministerial labor or objective points, but this feature shall have my first consideration upon arrival in Great Britain, which I trust will be safely accomplished early in June. We are sorry to state the minister in charge will not be able to reach the mission for some time, therefore it is desired that all matters of business concerning the work be referred to the associate minister in charge.

I am delighted to report that the Presidency and Twelve have granted our request in thus appointing U. W. Greene minister in charge, and also appointing the writer to spend a short season with you, as per your request. We shall therefore enter upon my work this conference year with wider experience such as will qualify us at least to recognize the great opportunities that lie before us and which I hope we may mutually improve upon.

In accordance with resolution of last August conference, I herewith appoint Manchester as the place for the convening of the mission conference. The secretary of the mission will notify you in due course of the details of the conference, etc. I will attend the district conferences that may be held in July, and there report my labors as their delegate to General Conference.

Finally, I exhort the Saints to do their utmost financially to support the bishopric in their effort to care for the missionary labor and the poor, and every other interest that may come under their duty. I hope ere long to be able to appeal to you personally, if I shall be favored with a safe arrival in Britain. In the meantime be of good courage, do your best to hold full and complete control of yourselves and circumstances. In all things seek to carry out the advice and counsel of the Lord, then look for the fulfillment of the promise, I will be with you always, even unto the end of the world.

May God bless us all.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD, Associate Minister in Charge.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, 23 Cicero Street, Moston.

Saints and Friends of Arkansas and Louisiana: As I have been chosen assistant minister in charge of this field, I take this means of letting all know that I will be glad to hear from any who might like preaching, and especially isolated Saints. If you care to have the work opened up where you are and will assist us in trying to get the gospel before the people, let us hear from you and we will try to reach you as soon as we can. There are only three of us to labor in these two large States, and of course we can not reach every place at once, but will do the best we can.

Remember, the missionary is not always overburdened with money and that the railroads will not carry him on his good looks. The missionaries are willing to go as far as they can without help, but money is needed to reach the various points.

Remember also I am acting as bishop's agent, having been appointed by Bishop Ellis Short, so if you have tithing or offerings, I am ready to receipt for same, be it little or much.

You can reach me at any time by writing to my home address, 109 West Adams Street, Pittsburg, Kansas. Or if you desire you may write the other brethren, W. W. Christensen, 2222 Empire Street, Joplin, Missouri; or E. A. Erwin, Wilburton, Oklahoma.

Trusting that you will let us hear from you, and that we may all work together for the building up of this great latter-day work and the spreading of the gospel, that this year may be if possible a more prosperous one than the one just passed, and trusting that the Lord will bless all our efforts, I am,

Your brother,

J. T. RILEY.

Book Reviews

INDIAN DAYS OF THE LONG AGO.—Edward S. Curtis. World Book Company, Yonkers-on-Hudson, New York. A splendid book, printed on plate paper, illustrated with photo-his foreword the author has the following: "This little book was written in the hope that it would give a more intimate view of Indian life in the old days, in the days when to the far western tribes the white race was but a rumor, and buffalo roamed the plains in countless numbers. A further desire was to call attention to the great divergencies in Indian life, the number of languages, and the striking differences in dress and habits. The pictures, as well as the text, will emphasize this. We have been prone to regard Indians as being without religion or spiritual life. Instead of being without a religion, they were influenced in every important act of their life by spiritual beliefs and religious practices. This fact is touched upon not as a pedantic lecture but rather as we see its influence on the character of the story and in the folktales. I have tried to show how their religious beliefs influenced the character building of the youth. Simple animistic beliefs, which bring the spirit beings close, are easy of comprehension, and the belief in the ever-present nearness has a strong influence upon the children. What could be more powerful in character building than the mountain vigil of Kukuism? This story of fasting and prayer is not a created play of words, but is given practically as told by those who have thus fasted."

IN THE LAND OF THE HEAD-HUNTERS.—Edward S. Curtis, author of the North American Indian. World Book Company, Yonkers-on-Hudson, New York City. A splendidly gotten-up book of 112 pages, illustrated with fine photo engravings from pictures taken by the author. From the foreword of the author we extract the following: "This book had its inception in an outline or scenario for a motion picture drama dealing with the hardy Indians inhabiting northern British Columbia. I submitted the scenario to my friend, Robert Stuart Pigott, who urged that it be put into book form and that the declamatory style of the tribal bards be followed. Pigott is responsible for the suggestion; I am guilty of its execution; and we mutually have a deep affection for the little book. It is the outcome of one of those rare friendships which tend to make life worth living. In the working out of the photo drama and the book, there came to be slight differences between the two; but in the main they are the same, and both give a glimpse of the primitive Americans as they lived in the Stone Age and as they were still living when the hardy explorers Perez, Heceta, Quadra, Cook, Meares, and Vancouver touched the shores of the Pacific between 1774 and 1791. Astonishment has been expressed that head hunting existed among the North American Indians, notwithstanding the fact that every explorer of the North Coast region mentioned this custom. The taking of heads was a common practice along the Pacific Coast from the Columbia River to the Arctic. Much material bearing upon this subject will be found in Volumes IX and X of the North American Indian."

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH, ITS FAITH AND ORDER.—Reverend George Hodges, dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York City. $1.25. This book consists of ten lectures by Mr. Hodges, devoted to the doctrines and orders of the Episcopal Church. The subjects dealt with are: The Bible; The Prayer Book; Baptism; Confirmation; Renunciation; Obedience; The Creed; The Church; Prayer; and The Holy Communion. A valuable book for those who wish to obtain a statement of the doctrines and principals of the Episcopal Church from the standpoint of one of its own well-known representatives. The author has been for more than twenty years connected with the Episcopal Theological school of which he is now dean.

THE EVIDENCE IN THE CASE IN THE SUPREME COURT OF CIVILIZATION AS TO THE MORAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE WAR.—James M. Beck, late Assistant Attorney General of the United States. G. P. Putnam's Sons, 2, 4, and 6 West Forty-Fifth Street, New York City. $1. This book is an effort to digest and arrange the evidence and bring in a verdict as to the "moral responsibility" for the great war now in progress in Europe. It is an analysis by one of the ablest jurists of the country, formerly Assistant Attorney General, of the evidence presented in the official state papers, British, German, Russian, and Belgian, in regard to the causes of the war. Conclusions presented by Mr. Beck have been accepted by leaders of thought on both sides of the Atlantic as constituting a most notable contribution to the literature of the war.

IN THE DAYS OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.—Arthur Thomas. Broadway Publishing Company, 835 Broadway, New York City. A more or less sensational novel in which the author assumes the role of Joseph Lorenzo, "eighteenth offspring of Henry Lorenzo," and second child by his third plural wife. This Henry Lorenzo, be it so understood, being a prominent Mormon during the reign of Brigham Young, his son, the hero, supposed to have been born in "Zion" under those conditions.

A man went down to Panama,
Where many a man had died,
To slit the sliding mountains
And lift the eternal tide;
A man stood up in Panama,
And the mountains stood aside.

"MUST PROTESTANTISM ADOPT CHRISTIAN SCIENCE"—PART II

(A review of the work by Reverend J. Winthrop Hegeman, Ph. D., (Episcopalian) bearing the foregoing title.<sup>1</sup>)

MIXTURE OF TRUTH AND ERROR

As might be expected, having imbibed deeply of Christian Science theories and adopted Christian Science nomenclature, Mr. Hegeman mixes much that is wholesome and admirable with a great deal that to the average man sounds absurd and grossly erroneous. As for instance he says of the works of God:

"All his works are as perfect to-day as when he created them, and because he is creating them to-day."—Must Protestantism Adopt Christian Science, p. 38.

Common sense rejects at once such a denial of manifest evil and degeneration. A lily springs from the sod in beauty and purity. A cowboy riding past flicks it with his blacksnake whip and leaves it broken in the mire. Shall we assert that it is still as perfect as when it came from the hand of God?

A young girl emerges from childhood. She is "as pure as the lily in the dell." Her every thought "is as clean as mountain air." By deceit and force a brutal hypocrite ruins her, and she is dragged down in the mire of sin to utmost infamy. In time she even comes to accept her evil life and will not leave it when solicited to do so.

Christian Science may stand over that blighted wreck of loveliness till the sun goes down and assert that the girl is as perfect as when she came from the Creator's hand; but most men will believe the evidences of their own senses and the verdict of their own reason. It is useless to deny the very real and terrible existence of evil with such examples around us.

Yet that is what Christian Science does, and asks us to believe that the man who betrayed that girl did no sin or else that God was responsible for it. Notice:

* Man is incapable of sin, sickness and death.—Science and Health, p. 475.

All that is, God created. If sin has any pretense of existence, God is responsible therefor; but there is no reality in sin.—Mary Baker G. Eddy, in Unity of Good, p. 80.

MATERIAL MAN NOT REAL; SPIRITUAL MAN PERFECT

Again the assertion is made by Mr. Hegeman:

Christian Science believes that because man was made like God he is thereby perfect. The real spiritual man can not fall. The material man can not be real, nor can the real man be material and spiritual.—Page 16.

Here certainly is the antithesis of our belief, as expressed in the Doctrine and Covenants, "The spirit and the body is the soul of man." Christian Science (according to Mr. Hegeman) denies the real existence of the material man and affirms that the spiritual man can not fall. With no real material bodies to reckon with, and with a world full of spiritual men that are perfect and can not fall, it is pertinent to ask, Who is doing the dirty work?

We purposely select a most repulsive example in order to show the absurdity of this dogma. The vice commission of one of our great cities reporting on conditions in the "red light district" report "ladies" entertaining as many as sixty "gentlemen" each in one night.

Stand up now, Christian Science, and affirm that these men had no real material (grossly material) bodies. Stand up and affirm, as the only thing more absurd, that their spirits were perfect and could not fall,—that they were uncontaminated by their deeds and environments—that having been made like God in the beginning, they are even yet perfect as God is perfect.

BROWBEATING ONE'S OWN REASON

To maintain faith in such doctrines one must constantly look his reason in the face and browbeat it to silence. He must lie to his God-given five senses.

If he has a stomachache he must affirm to himself very firmly and confidently that he has no stomach and no ache. If he has dragged his soul in the mire of sin he must repudiate his conscience and affirm that he is a perfect man and that sin has no existence.

A CHAIN OF MORTAL ERRORS

This belief requires one to look a little child in the face and deny obvious fact, an act immoral however conscientiously undertaken. If a little child fall and hurt her face, Mrs. Eddy says:

The better and more successful method for any mother is to say, "Oh, never mind! You're not hurt, so don't think you are?"—Science and Health, p. 155.

The blood runs down from the bruised and swollen lip, but the mother must look into the little eyes and affirm something that is obviously false.

Ah, but the hurt is not real, we are assured. It is an "error of the mortal mind." How then does the mother know that the child has any existence, spiritual or otherwise? Another error, perhaps. Why bother to comfort a phantom error of the mortal mind. How does she know that Mrs. Eddy's words of advice are real? Another error, perhaps. Even the "mortal mind" that has this "mortal error" and sees this unreal bruise on an unreal child has no real existence. Listen:

This lower, misnamed mind is a false claim, a suppositional mind, which I prefer to call mortal mind.—Mary Baker G. Eddy, in Unity of Truth, p. 40.

Last of all, after this comedy of errors, dawns upon us the cold suspicion that Christian Science itself is a "mortal error." Let us back to the realities. It was a real child of a real mother that fell down and when real red blood ran the child suffered a real pain, and a real mother will comfort her with kisses and soothe the pain. So in a world of suffering we see no hope in closing our eyes to facts; but rather turn to God, as the child to its mother, for comfort in the hour of real need.

JESUS RECOGNIZED ACTUAL SIN AND DEATH

Jesus recognized the bondage of sin, the real bondage of real sin, suffering, and death, but gave the promise, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Christian Science affirms: "Jesus accepted the one fact whereby alone the rule of life can be demonstrated,—namely that there is no death. (Mary Baker G. Eddy in Unity of Good, p. 69.)

But we read that Jesus said to the Jews, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead." (John 6: 49.)

Paul, his inspired apostle, said, "It is appointed unto men once to die." (Hebrews 9: 27.)

Jesus recognized the existence of death, real, grim, old-fashioned death, the king of terrors, the thing that got Mrs. Eddy and that will finally get Mr. Hegeman when he at last gracefully yields to "mortal error." Jesus said plainly, "Lazarus is dead,"—just baldly, obviously, malodorously, dead, d-e-a-d, DEAD.

But turning to Martha he said, "I am the resurrection,—and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." He raised up Lazarus, "And he that was DEAD came forth." (John 11: 44.)

Jesus recognized the actual existence and terror of death, but affirmed and demonstrated his power to redeem men from that condition.

MAN NOT NOW PERFECT

The word of God recognizes that man is not now in the condition that was his at creation; and clearly teaches that there shall be wonderful changes, all leading toward a higher stage of being, a thing that could not be if man is now, as affirmed by Mr. Hegeman, perfect, and, having been made by a perfect God, incapable of imperfection. To talk of leading a perfect thing up to perfection would be idle. Yet we read:

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.—Philippians 3: 20, 21.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.—1 John 3: 2.

But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.—2 Corinthians 3: 18.

SICKNESS NO STRANGER THAN "MORTAL ERROR"

The familiar argument that man having been made by a perfect God can not actually become the victim of real pain, sickness, and death appears plausible to certain minds. "Why, yes," they declare, "man being an emanation from God, who is all good, and perfect, can not have such things. He is the victim of mortal error and imagines them. They have no real existence."

But here we become involved in another difficulty. How is it that man, made by a perfect God, entertains such grievous "mortal errors? . . ." God can entertain no error at all. How then can an emanation from God entertain error? Is not "human error" as incomprehensible as cancer or tuberculosis, in the light of this reasoning?

"HUMAN ERROR" NO STRANGER THAN SICKNESS

On the theory that God is everywhere present, Mr. Hegeman bases the conclusion that sickness can be nowhere present, for if present it must be within God himself, as he is everywhere. But again the question intrudes, Can mortal error which believes that sickness exists where it is not, be anywhere present without being also within God? One is no more unreasonable than the other.

But Mr. Hegeman himself solves the problem by contradicting himself. He says:

To remove illness as a cause of many resulting evils one must do as Jesus did, who opened his life to let God through upon those who by faith opened their lives to receive him.—Page 22.

Very well. There are, then, lives in which God is not present. Into such lives both error and real illness may come and be no part of God, and by the law of association and consequences, from prevalent sin other lives even though innocent may suffer.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE FAILS TO "DEMONSTRATE"

Christian Science speaks often of "demonstrating." In fact, it has never demonstrated in a single instance the truth of its theory that sickness, suffering, and death are not real. The demonstration may seem to occur in individual cases, but it is only temporary and seeming. Of the many individuals whom Mrs. Eddy mentions in her book as having been healed, all, including herself, finally succumbed, or will succumb to accident, cancer, tuberculosis, or other form of illness, or old age, and death prevailed, or will prevail. The demonstration was never completed in a single instance.

EVIL VERY REAL BUT CONQUERED BY GOOD

We will do well to keep our feet on the safe and sane grounds of Bible teaching. God made man and gave him his free agency. When he chooses to make himself a servant of evil he becomes subject to evil and is no longer godlike. His body becomes subject to disease and his mind subject to both error and disease.

Evil in its various forms is real. Death is real. Real human bodies and minds suffer real and terrible miseries. But God is able to overcome evil with good. When humanity enlists to obey him error is overcome, and in due time, as obedience becomes complete, all evil will be overcome. And "the last enemy that shall be overcome is death."

Our conclusion is that Protestantism has little to gain by adopting Christian Science. Far better avoid the erroneous attitude of Christian Science toward sin, sickness, and death, and turning to the original platform of primitive Christianity, continue thereon.

PRESIDENT SMITH ON LIQUOR QUESTION

While searching through some old papers formerly the property of President Joseph Smith the HERALD Editors found several copies of an old handbill bearing the date of December 4, 1875, in the nature of an address to the voters and citizens of Plano, evidently drafted by a committee appointed for that purpose. President Joseph Smith was a member of the committee. We reproduce the text of the bill as showing his attitude against liquor at that early date in his ministerial career.

To the Citizens and Voters of Plano: Being satisfied that the licensed sale of wine, beer, whisky, and other intoxicating liquors, is detrimental to the peace and welfare of the town, we present for your consideration the following:

First. Under the "No License" Board of Trustees, chosen at last election, the town has had a year of comparative quiet from disturbances originating in drunkenness.

Second. There having been no open saloon where liquor was exposed to sale, some have remained sober who otherwise might have been enticed to squander their time, money and health, to their direct injury, and the indirect injury of society.

Third. The money paid for licenses when issued, is not in reality paid by the "rum seller"; but is drawn in the main from the inebriate, and that class of working men who can ill afford to buy whisky; while their wives, children, and creditors suffer; the latter by nonpayment of their just dues, the former by the actual loss of the means which should feed and clothe them; thus replenishing the town treasury with the price of peace and plenty paid by penury and want—indirectly, the price of blood.

Fourth. Prohibition by the people of the town, expressed by their vote and the enforcement of local laws against the sale of intoxicating drinks seems to be practicable; while no general law of the State seems adequate to the suppression of the traffic, but to furnish a remedy for specific personal injury, which we deem sufficient, if properly enforced.

Fifth. It is, to us, far better for the public morals of the town that liquor should be kept and used in private by those "who will have it"; and to be stored and drank in the secret recesses of the "club room," or the "dollar store"; than that it should be permitted to be arrayed in the attractiveness of the saloon, stored, kept, sold and drank, an offense against decency, morality and the public good—as its deeds are deeds of darkness and death.

We, therefore, ask that you take counsel with your better selves, the purity and peace of the community, and vote the Citizen's No License Ticket, at the corporation election for town trustees, on Monday, December 6.

By order of mass meeting.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

NEW PORTUGUESE PRESIDENT.—President Manuel de Arriaga, resigned, has been succeeded by Theophile Boraga, provisional president following the revolution, and elected president by the national assembly on May 29.

LOSES SUIT.—Holding that the United States Steel Corporation is not a monopoly within the meaning of the Sherman antitrust law, the United States District Court for New Jersey in a unanimous decision rendered the 3d, denied all injunctions, and refused the petition of the Government to dissolve the steel company. The court holds that mere "bigness" is not monopoly; that the steel company is not a monopoly and could not control prices and markets. The acquiring by the Steel Company of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company during the 1907 panic was upheld. It is expected that an appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

"TIMES" PROSECUTED.—The British Government under the "defense of the realm act," recently passed to prevent "publication of statements in the press which might assist the enemy or interfere with the successful prosecution of war," has brought action against the London Times for printing information useful to the enemy. The prosecution is based on a letter in the Times of May 21, stating that "The last of the French reserves are out. At the present moment young raw recruits have been called up." This statement, true or false, the Government holds, was calculated to give confidence to the enemy and distress the allies; the liability rested upon the Times to determine whether information received was of a prohibitive character.

WOULD STOP PLEDGE.—Attaching as a penalty a fine of two hundred dollars to one thousand dollars for each offense, the lower house of the Illinois Legislature has passed a bill to make it unlawful for a legislator to give a written pledge with respect to future legislative action, or for an association to demand such a pledge. The Public, published in Chicago, and discussing this action under the caption "Conserving legislators," says:

It will be noted that the offense consists of giving a written pledge. By implication, a spoken pledge will still be lawful. This fact may serve as a clew to the motive underlying the legislative action. . . . If enacted into law a voter would have little opportunity to ascertain by lawful means, whether or not a candidate represented his views. . . . The house has disgraced itself in passing such a bill. To assume that there is any possibility of its passage through the senate would be an insult to that body.

UNITED STATES AND GERMANY.—The German Government in a note to the United States reports that the sinking of the steamer Gulflight was a mistake, the commander of the submarine not noticing the United States flag on the steamer until after orders to fire. The case of the aero attack on the Cushing has not yet been cleared by the German inquiry. Germany offers compensation. A conference occurred on the 2d between President Wilson and Count von Bernstoff, the German ambassador, over matters involved in the diplomatic interchanges between the United States and Germany covering the situation arising between these countries incident to the German submarine warfare. Following this conference, Meyer Gerhard, for several months representing the German Red Cross in America, departed for Germany, said to have been sent by the German ambassador, presumably to more fully acquaint the German Government with the demands of the United States, and public sentiment in this country, other means of communication between the ambassador and his home country being unsatisfactory. A reply to the late German note has been approved by President Wilson's cabinet.

WARNING MEXICO.—The United States Government has issued an appeal and warning to the various Mexican factional leaders. This note refers to the purpose of the Mexican revolution, which was to secure for the Mexican people constitutional and just government; to the disagreement among revolutionary leaders in the hour of their success; to the lack of protection to either Mexicans or foreigners; and to the starving condition of the people. While the United States Government "want nothing for themselves in Mexico," yet they deem it their duty as friends and neighbors to lend any aid they properly can to any instrumentality which promises to be effective in bringing about a settlement which will embody the real objects of the revolution—constitutional government and the rights of the people. . . . the United States . . . must presently do what it has not hitherto done or felt at liberty to do, lend its active moral support to some man or group of men, if such may be found, who can rally the suffering people of Mexico to their support in an effort to ignore, if they can not unite, the warring factions of the country, return to the constitution of the republic, so long in abeyance, and set up a government at Mexico City which the great powers of the world can recognize and deal with, a government with whom the program of the revolution will be a business and not merely a platform.

Calling upon the various leaders to unite for the relief and redemption of Mexico, the note concludes with the statement that unless they do so the United States Government "will be constrained to decide what means should be employed by the United States in order to help Mexico save herself and serve her people."

EUROPEAN WAR.—Meager reports indicate little change in the west, minor gains being announced by the allies. In the east the Germans have retaken Przemyśl, captured ten weeks ago by the Russians after a long siege. It is reported that the defenses of this city were destroyed on its surrender to the Russians. The Germans are prosecuting an attack toward Warsaw, whether to break through the Russian lines or prevent the latter from sending reinforcements to Galicia is not known. Allied gains on the Gallipoli Peninsula and British success in Mesopotamia are reported. Italy continues her advances into Austrian territory. The German submarine warfare for the week has claimed the following steamers: Danish, Soborg and Cyrus; Norwegian, Caubano; Swedish, Lapland; Portuguese, Cysne; British, Ethiope, Inkum, Sunnet Head, Tullochmoor, Golenlee, Iona, Dixiana, officers of the latter reporting the submarine attacking her under the

CRACKING SOME NUTS

[Under the caption, "Some nuts for Latter Day Saints to crack," an article appeared in the King's Highway, for February 23, 1915. The King's Highway is the organ of the Reformed Baptists, of Canada; the article in question is from the pen of Reverend C. S. Hilyard. Reverend Hilyard has run foul of some of our missionaries (see Elder F. J. Ebeling), so rushes into print to ease his feelings. His caption reminds us of the story of the schoolboy who was asked by the teacher to name three kinds of nuts. He replied, "Peanuts, doughnuts, and forget-me-nuts." Most of the nuts presented by Reverend Hilyard are doughnuts, as Brother Stebbins demonstrates in his article. The article by Reverend Hilyard appears first, followed by a reply by Elder H. A. Stebbins.—EDITOR.]

REVEREND HILYARD'S CRITICISMS

According to the apostle (so-called) Joseph Smith the Book of Mormon, their foundation, was dug up in New York State, and translated by inspiration by him.

Let us look at some of this modern inspiration; if it is unreliable, then is also the prophet.

First—It conflicts with the Bible and all Jewish chronology as to the date of the death of Christ: "Mormon" prophecy, book Helaman, chapter 5, section 4, Samuel the Lamanite Prophet is made to say, "But behold as I said unto you concerning another sign, a sign of his death, the sun shall be darkened and refuse to give his light upon the face of this land even from the time that he shall suffer death for the space of three days, to the time that he shall rise up again from the dead."

Book of Nephi, chapter 4, section 2, "And now it came to pass that according to our record—and we know our record to be true—the people began to look with great earnestness for the sign which had been given by the Prophet Samuel the Lamanite, yea for the time that there should be darkness for the space of three days over the face of the land. And it came to pass in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, in the fourth day of the month."

(2) Inspiration of Joseph Smith fails as to time of darkness. Three days instead of three hours; (3) also as to date of death; fourth day instead of fourteenth, the Jewish passover.

(4) The Messiah of the Book of Mormon came thirty-six years too late to be the Christ of our Bible and of Jewish history. In 2 Nephi, chapter 11 (the Book of Mormon) we read, "For according to the words of the prophet, the Messiah cometh in six hundred years from the time my father left Jerusalem, and according to the words of the prophets, and also the word of the angel of God, his name shall be Jesus Christ, the Son of God."

His father left Jerusalem the first year of the reign of Zedekiah. (1 Nephi, chapter 1, Book of Mormon.)

According to Jewish chronology, Zedekiah reigned eleven years, was then taken captive to Babylon, and the captivity was seventy years, and from the end of captivity to Messiah was four hundred and eighty-three years, making in all—starting from where they start—five hundred and sixty-four years to Messiah.

(5) According to the Book of Mormon their Savior was born at the wrong place. In book of Alma, chapter 5, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand and the Son of God cometh upon the face of the earth, and behold he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem.

They say that Joseph put the interpretation in his hat, and then put the hat over his face and saw things. Well, this is about as reliable as a man "talking through his hat."

All history, religious and secular, credit him (Jesus Christ) as being born at Bethlehem, as also all prophecy.

(6) If our Bible is wrong (as the "Mormons" say it is) why does the Book of Mormon teach that one year after Jesus was resurrected he visited America and taught the Nephites and after he had used (according to their record) the exact words as recorded by Matthew, Mark and Luke, they made him say (Nephi, 7th chapter, Book of Mormon), "Behold ye have heard the things I have taught before I ascended to my Father." And yet the same Joseph Smith, when writing his inspired translation of the scriptures, Jesus credits with different language altogether. If your Book of Mormon is true, then is our Bible true and your inspiration translation false, and if your translation is true your Book of Mormon is wrong.

The Book of Mormon says that when certain people came to America, one of the sons of Zedekiah (Mulek) came with them.

Omni 1: 6. "And part of the land was named for Mulek, (Helaman 2: 27), and that the seed of Zedekiah was with them," (Helaman 3: 4, Book of Mormon.)

If this is so then God must have raised Mulek from the dead, for in Jeremiah 39: 6 we read, "Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes, also the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes; he slew all the princes of Judah." They (the "Mormons") might try to get out of this difficulty by saying they left before that happened, and that the king of Babylon killed all that were left.

But the Book of Mormon makes Omni, chapter 1, say: They came out from Jerusalem at the time that Zedekiah was carried away captive into Babylon.

And Joseph Smith when he brings out his translation of the Bible forgot that he said in the Book of Mormon that Mulek came to America, and he makes Jeremiah say the same as our version that Zedekiah's sons were all slain.

If a man is going to lie he needs a good memory. This is just a starter for them, and this is a sample of Joseph Smith's inspiration.

ELDER STEBBINS'S REPLY

It hardly seems worth while to make reply to such weak objections to the Book of Mormon as those in the foregoing production, yet some readers may not understand the facts which make plain the folly of such arguments, and therefore it may be best that an answer be made. Evidently the writer of the "Nuts to crack" was trying to make a great deal of capital for himself out of a very small amount of material; or else he really believed he was exposing gross error. But he either lacks knowledge of facts and figures, or he is trifling with the truth when he knows better.

1 and 2. In the first place his quotation marks fail to include over twenty words that are in Helaman, fifth chapter, between the words, "But, behold" and the words "from the dead." Among the missing is the prophecy that not only the sun but "also the moon and the stars" would fail to give light during those three days. He objects to the three days because in Palestine the time of darkness was only three hours, as stated by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, that is from the sixth hour to the ninth hour, or, as time is counted now, from noon until three o'clock in the afternoon of the day that Christ was crucified.

Apparently Mr. Hilyard fails to comprehend that Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, foretold just where the darkness should be when he said, "upon the face of this land"; that is, it would be over the land upon which the prophet stood when he spoke, and the people he addressed were then living in the north-western part of South America, where now the republic of Colombia exists. The land is thousands of miles from Jerusalem. He uttered no prophecy about Palestine or the extent of the darkness there. He was only guided by the Lord to prophesy what should take place where his own people lived.

That the Savior should be crucified at Jerusalem had been foretold by Nephi the son of Lehi, over five hundred years before Samuel the Lamanite's time, and by Mosiah at a later date. And though at Jerusalem the period of darkness was only three hours, yet the Hebrew people who lived in South America were to be visited with three days entire cessation of light, not only of the sun in the daytime, but also of the moon and stars at night. Mr. Hilyard does not appear to have taken into consideration the fact that the three days of darkness came as a judgment upon another nation, and in a land far distant from the people and region where the three hours of darkness fell. When the Lamanite prophet said, "upon the face of this land," he spoke correctly, and he did not include nor refer to either Palestine or any other part of the globe.

More than this, it is certified by such eminent historians as H. H. Bancroft, J. W. Foster, J. D. Baldwin, and the celebrated Indian student, George Catlin, that native history and native tradition among the former people of South America, Central America, and Mexico, and even in some of North America, say that there was in ancient times one special period of several days darkness, when earthquakes, winds, waters, and volcanic fires destroyed cities and caused great upheavals of the land in southern regions. The Honorable H. H. Bancroft relates that the Toltecs retained tradition of certain great catastrophes in an age that terminated with a great hurricane which swept away trees, rocks, houses, and people; although many men and women escaped, chiefly such as took refuge in caves which the hurricane could not reach. After several days the survivors came out . . . and all this time they were in darkness, seeing neither the sun nor moon.—Native Races, vol. 5, p. 209.

Could anything be plainer than the foregoing to prove that both the prophecy and the history are altogether facts and not fiction? Professor Foster on pages 396, 397 of his Prehistoric Races, and Professor Baldwin on page 176 of his book, Ancient America, and other historians and antiquarians testify to the same peculiar period of darkness and destruction in ancient American history. The facts are very plain to all the honest in heart.

3. Mr. Hilyard mentions the statement in Nephi 4:2 that the sign of Christ's death was given on the fourth day of the month instead of the fourteenth, thereby stating a falsehood. He counts that as being one of the lies that Joseph Smith was guilty of. But there is no proof in it that a falsehood was intended. Indeed, the fact well known to Bible students (in our times at least) that Christ's crucifixion was on the fourteenth day of the Jewish month called Nisan, would prevent any person who was aware of the date from changing it. Millions of church members to-day if asked what date Christ was crucified on could not readily answer. And a hundred years ago among the common people in the new regions of America there was not one book where now ten thousand are read. It is doubtful if Joseph Smith had any historical information by which he could know on what date or in what month Christ was crucified. And if he did know, there would be no object in changing it. Instead, it is probable that while translating he spoke the word "fourteenth" and his scribe understood him to say "fourth." The words are so much alike that a mistake could easily be made.

There is no more evidence of a purpose to falsify than in similar cases in the Bible. For instance, in 2 Kings 8:26, it is said that Ahaziah was twenty-two years old when he began to reign over Judah, but in 2 Chronicles 22:2 it reads that Ahaziah was forty-two years old when he began to reign.

Also 2 Kings 15:33 states that Jotham reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, then died, and his son Ahaz reigned in his stead. But in verse thirty it reads that a certain event occurred in the twentieth year of Jotham. I read one writer in a Christian paper who said that Jotham must have reigned four years after he was dead.

But these and others I could cite are simply instances where historians and copyists have made errors, and without intention or purpose to falsify. Mr. Hilyard would hardly be willing for some vilifier of the Bible to say that the Bible tells lies.

In 1 Corinthians 10:8 it reads that Paul wrote that at a certain time in Hebrew history twenty-three thousand perished because of their iniquity, whereas in the original account (Numbers 25:9) it reads that twenty-four thousand died. Because Paul momentarily forgot the real number, or else some scribe or copyist wrote the wrong number, Mr. Hilyard wouldn't therefore say that Paul lied. Perhaps Mr. Hilyard has not realized that nothing that passes through the hands of mortal men is entirely secure from the possibility of error, no matter how honest, how devoted, or how careful they may be.

Furthermore, about the Book of Mormon, it is incredible that in such a small matter there would be a falsehood attempted. To pick out such little items and thus condemn the book for themselves and others is small business. Such warfare against the book of no value. Voltaire, Volney, Thomas Paine, Diderot, Ingersoll and others have made a thousand times more telling attacks upon the Bible, a book which we also defend as being divinely inspired, and the first book of all in advocacy of God, and Christ, and the gospel, as we hold it to be.

The simple, straightforward manner of the narrative of events given in the Book of Mormon, the evident candor and truthfulness of the writer in the consecutive detail of events, with dates and description of the lands and waters, of directions as to east, west, north and south, all such things are against the idea that the book is a fraud. No liar could invent such a book, one which from the first page to the last teaches the existence and the supreme power of God in his control over the world. Also the daily accountability of man and their entire dependence upon God for every good that they receive. From page to page is taught the absolute necessity of honesty, truthfulness, righteousness in each motive and purpose of the heart, and in every word and action. And all through it is taught the work of salvation, that can only be wrought through the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God. The book contains such repeated denunciations of sin, in thought as well as in word and in deed, and the strict accountability of every soul, that no just person (after examining it) can say that it was written as a pious fraud, or as an imposition upon the world, to deceive people and lead them to hell. Nor is Nephi the fourth to the eighth chapters the result of some story-teller's imagination. The account is not fiction but fact, as is sustained by the findings of well-known historians, explorers, and students of ancient American history.

4. Mr. Hilyard says that "The Messiah of the Book of Mormon came thirty-six years too late to be the Christ of our Bible and of Jewish history." Then Mr. Hilyard does some strange figuring, and he also manifests remarkable ignorance of the world-wide accepted chronology which he claims to be so well acquainted with. He says: "According to Jewish chronology, Zedekiah reigned eleven years, was then taken captive to Babylon, and the captivity was seventy years."

This carries the idea that the captivity lasted seventy years after Zedekiah was taken to Babylon, whereas all chronological tables count the captivity as beginning with the first siege by Nebuchadnezzar, in B. C. 606, which was eighteen years before Zedekiah was taken to Babylon. He was captured at the third siege, which was B. C. 588. He was taken to the camp of the King at Reblah, "his eyes were put out, and they bound him with fetters of brass and carried him to Babylon." (2 Kings 25:7.)

The second siege was in B. C. 599. A little before this second siege, namely, B. C. 600, the Lord warned Lehi of the impending evil and instructed him to flee from the coming destruction. He did so, and any reader can see by reading the dates in the Book of Mormon, those given by the various writers, that it was full six hundred years from that time until the sign of Christ's birth was given, even as Bible chronology shows that the seventy years captivity ended in B. C. 536, and that known events filled the time at Jerusalem till Christ came.

No, the Book of Mormon is not at fault, nor false. It agrees with Bible chronology as anyone can see who really wishes to inform himself. The last verse of Mosiah, chapter thirteen, states that five hundred and nine years had passed since Lehi left Jerusalem, and the first verse of chapter one of Nephi, the grandson of Helaman, states that ninety-one years had gone by since the rule of the Judges began, that is since Mosiah; and Nephi 1:4 tells of the sign of Christ's birth. Thus exactly six hundred years had elapsed since Lehi began his migration.

We do not understand how Mr. Hilyard fell into such blunders as he did. Where he obtains his four hundred and eighty-three years and five hundred and sixty-four years it is impossible to see. There is no basis in the Book of Mormon for such figures. He has been so anxious to make a case against the book that he has fallen into "the ditch," (Matthew 15: 14). I do not say that he does this bad work willfully, but at least his wish to find evil may be father to the idea that there really is evil in the Book of Mormon.

[Smith's Bible Dictionary (revised edition) page 487, gives the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah as B. C. 599, which is sufficiently in accord with the statement in the Book of Mormon that Christ should come six hundred years after Lehi left Jerusalem, that event occurring in the first year of his reign.—EDITORS.]

5. As for the objection that the Book of Mormon says that Christ was born "at Jerusalem," it is of no value against the book. Jerusalem was the center of all life and hope to the Jews, no matter what part of the earth they lived upon, and that word represented the whole land of Canaan (or Palestine) to them. Alma 5: 2 says, "Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers," thus showing that Alma used the name of the city to represent the whole possession that God gave to the Hebrew race.

When the three wise men came seeking the newborn Messiah they came first to Jerusalem, not to Bethlehem. When Solomon offered the eloquent prayer of dedication (1 Kings 8) his request of the Lord was in behalf of all who prayed toward Jerusalem. Again and again he repeated the words "toward this place," meaning the city and the temple which were the emblems of all the possessions given to their fathers. Jerusalem was the one name which all understood, and all knew its location, whereas some might not have understood had he said "in Bethlehem," which was a small village near to Jerusalem, and like a suburb to the beloved city. We sometimes say we have friends at Boston, whereas they live at Somerville, at Cambridge and other suburban places, which names and their location would not be known to many distant hearers, while the name and location of Boston everyone knows.

6. Mr. Hilyard says, "If our Bible is wrong (as the "Mormons" say it is), why does the Book of Mormon teach that one year after Jesus was resurrected he visited America," etc. See that whole paragraph.

His first words in this might convey the idea to those not acquainted with our views that we altogether reject the King James translation, whereas we simply say that in quite a number of places the rendering is wrong and inconsistent with itself as a book of truth. Such as that "it repented the Lord that he had made man," and that we should pray, "lead us not into temptation," when elsewhere it says that "God tempteth no man"; and where Christ told his disciples to be "wise as serpents," and where it says that the "children of the kingdom shall be cast out"; and in Revelation 3: 1 about the "seven spirits of God." Scores of other places also exist. But these are only the imperfections of by-gone centuries, which are corrected in the Inspired Version, even as the Spirit of God gave instruction. They do not change even one ten thousandth part of the Bible, but only correct the errors. Those errors came by the carelessness or lack of understanding on the part of scribes and copyists. So-called orthodox bodies have admitted that many errors have been made in the work of translating and copying. A leading man among those who brought out the Revised Version in 1870-1880, stated that so many difficulties existed to prevent a correct rendition that such could not be produced unless men were guided by the inspiration of God to know how to do this.

As for the Savior not visiting the Hebrew disciples in America until a year after his resurrection, we say that no such declaration is found in that book, or in any other held by the Reorganized Church. All of us understand that he visited the people in South America (as we now call it) soon after his rising from the dead, after he had "ascended to the Father." Who invented Mr. Hilyard's "one year" idea, I do not know.

About Christ speaking to the Nephtes in "the exact words" that he used when in Jerusalem, there is no such claim that I know of. For though the Book of Mormon clearly shows that Christ taught the same truths on both continents, the same doctrine, and gave similar counsel in both lands, yet his language differed in the order of the words and the form of speaking.

The truth of the Inspired Version does not depend upon one text. There are scores of corrections which every honest heart can see attest their value above the readings in the King James Version, or in any others extant.

7. As to the sons of Zedekiah being all slain, as Mr. Hilyard claims, the fact is that neither Jeremiah 39: 6 nor 2 Kings 25: 7 read that the king of Babylon killed all the sons Zedekiah had. Neither version reads so. Both read that he "slew the sons of Zedekiah," doubtless those who were old enough to be with their father fighting the armies of Babylon when they attacked Jerusalem. These were taken with their father to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, while a younger son, doubtless remained alive to go across the-sea as stated.

A similar instance of not mentioning the younger is found in the case of Jesse's family. In Samuel 16: 5 it reads that when the prophet came to choose a king in Saul's place that he "sanctified Jesse and his sons," and nothing was said about another son.

Thus one by one the seven sons passed before the prophet and the Spirit of God said that neither of them was accepted as the coming king. Therefore Samuel inquired if these were all the sons that Jesse had, and thus Jesse brought forward David the one who had not been mentioned before, because not considered old enough to name, or qualified to serve.

Therefore it is not strange that the men who wrote the Book of Kings and the Book of Jeremiah did not mention a young son who was not with Zedekiah in the battle. And the claim that Joseph Smith's "Inspiration Translation" says that all the sons of the king were slain is certainly proven false. Both versions say that Nebuchadnezzar "slew all the nobles" of Judah, but in no place is it said "all the sons."

It may be that some "nuts to crack" are now given to the other side to consider. H. A. STEBBINS.

WHAT'S IN A WORD?

Yes, what is in a word? Not much, some seem to think; but others who have a love for beautiful and expressive language there is enough in a word, or the lack of one, to make or mar the effect of the finest sermon. We have often thought in listening to some of our ministers, What a pity it is that their lovely and inspiring message is not couched in a form more worthy its beauty and strength.

When we see a man struggling against the handicap life has imposed upon him because of the lack of early opportunities for culture, and realize how wonderfully his mind can reach out and grasp the divine realities, and how clear is his conception of the eternal principles, we are moved to exclaim, Oh, why does not God make up to him those withheld opportunities, and cause him to speak of these wonders in the purity of the language, instead of allowing him to fill his discourse with the pitiful exhibition of his deficiency!

Then we begin to reflect. God works in the channel of wisdom and prudence, and seldom does he deviate from his established laws in order to work miracles, either in his instruments or for the benefit of the masses. He has placed within the reach of all the things that are necessary for their development if those same people are interested enough to make the effort to find and appropriate them! Can we expect him to go farther, and perforce, purify and elevate the language of a man who scoffs at education?

Why should God perform a "marvelous work and a wonder" in the way of transforming the diction of a speaker who openly boasts of his lack of opportunity, forgetting as he evidently does, that the fact is so apparent that he need not trouble himself to mention it? Some men seem to think that the gospel, having converted them from wrong to become active advocates of truth and purity, has also so demonstrated itself upon their mentalities that an observer would mistake them for having been college-bred; were his mind not carefully disabused of such an error! Spare yourself the trouble, brother! Except in the event that you have perceived your deficiencies in this line and have worked patiently and persistently to overcome them, your language will cause such announcement to be superfluous, and that, too, in spite of the depth of research and spiritual perception you may have attained.

We have no desire to discount the office work of the Spirit of God; we know of wonderful transformations it has effected, not the least of which is the awakening of a true and intense desire for knowledge and correctness in all things. We praise the Father that this is true, and in the light of what he has given us we can not feel that he would have us indifferent to the means of our expressions. Surely, he does not prefer that his representatives shall use incorrect, awkward, unattractive or repulsive constructions of language. He will not, we believe, deny support and inspiration to a man just because that man may be unlettered or unlearned, but we do believe that he desires that individual to acquire the knowledge which, when coupled with the same Spirit and support will make him a better and more powerful representative for him.

We have heard men quote "God uses the simple things of the earth to confound the wise." True; what more simple or foolish than a blade of grass, and yet, where is the wisdom that can explain its life? Can we look upon Christ's life, believing it to be our pattern, and still deny that it is our duty to study and to investigate? He was learned in all the learning of the day, so that at the age of twelve he astonished the doctors in the temple. It will not do to say that God miraculously gave him this power. It is casting too great a reflection upon the gentle, refined woman of culture, to whom had been intrusted his preparation for his wonderful life's work. Think you she "pondered these things in her heart," and then sat idly by during the years her boy was growing and developing, trusting to the Lord's inspiring him for his work when the time should come? Fie! that would be evidence of even less devotion and care than a common mother of a common lad to-day shows for her son. No, she carefully superintended his education, making every sacrifice necessary, uncomplainingly, knowing what wondrous thing had happened to her, and trying to be indeed a "coworker with God," in preparing that young mind for the unique place it was to fill in the economy of the world.

Where do we find Jesus mixing his numbers? Where is he guilty of using "me" for "I," and vice versa? Little things, you say? Ay, but little things indicate character; and a man who is careful to acquaint himself with the proper use of the language he is using in giving expression to what is in his mind, is the same man who exercises care to use honestly and wisely the property which may be intrusted to him. Why not be as honest with our English parts of speech as with the silver certificate, coin or gold stamped with the signatures of our Nation upon it?

STUDY GOOD BOOKS

"Study all good books," is a latter-day command. It is a positive command, not a negative one. If God did not deem it essential, he might have put it, "If you wish, you may study good books,—I will not condemn you for it, but it will make no difference in your efficiency as a worker for me, for, while in all things else about your life, your business affairs, etc., it is very necessary to gain knowledge concerning them, in my work, such trouble and care are totally unnecessary, as you have only to open your mouth and I will fill it, and that, too, with pure, chaste language that will appeal to even the cultured people who hear you; for surely you must know the cultured and educated people have souls to save as well as the crude and ignorant, and you must be able to reach them too!"

No, God did not put it that way; he gave it the force of a positive command, "Study all good books;" and how are we heeding it? Are we knowing the purity of our lives, desires and aspirations, just content, feeling that, though we may be "in the rough" still we are diamonds? We may be; but did you ever think how much more the value is increased when the gold is refined, or the diamond polished? Then let us put ourselves in touch with the environments which will enable us to correct, so far as possible, the errors of our speech, and thus endeavor to show ourselves "workmen approved of God."

Here are a few of the more palpable mistakes made in public, at the late conference. They are given below, with a brief explanation of the error made. They are offered, not in the spirit of harsh criticism, but in belief that many of our men are not awake to their laxity in this regard, and also in the belief that they will be as anxious as any to correct the errors when once their attention is called to the matter.

PRONUNCIATION

Ex qui' site. This is a common error; the accent should be upon the first syllable, instead of the second. Rec' og ni zance. The accent here should be upon the second syllable, dividing is thus, re cog' ni zance.

Cal' i ope should be ca li' o pe, four syllables instead of three, accent on second.

Main te' nance. Accent here should be on first syllable.

Her ald was pronounced with the first e as the u in urn, while, correctly, it should be as the e in end.

Pre rog' a tive was very unfortunate. Some pronounced it pe' rog a tive, and others got it per' og a tive. Notice that the first syllable is pre and not per.

Sep ul cher was proclaimed as sep li cher.

De mos the nes was just recognizable in De moth e sis.

Gos pil was heard—comment unnecessary.

In' ter est ed is correct, while in ter est' ed is not. Accent on first syllable.

Acting councilor was used repeatedly, where evidently counselor was intended. The first, pronounced with the i as in ill, is a member of a council. The second, pronounced with the e as in end, is one who counsels.

Savor was pronounced savior.

Least was used incorrectly for lest.

Ar' bi tra ri ly came out with two mistakes. One was the accent upon the third syllable, and the other was that the second r was eliminated, the word sounding thus: ar bi tar' i ly.

Al ter nate should have the first a given as in am. The accent for either adjective or noun is optional placed upon the first or second syllable, the precedence given to the first; thus: al' ter nate, the last a being obscure.

Prec' e dent was heard as pre ce dent. The e should be short as in end, and not long.

Sence for since, sech for such, Abindeggo for Abednego, vistage for vestige, siminaries for seminaries, thut for that, thum for them, ut for it, looze for loose, and the use of the prefix on instead of un, as in the words uneducated, unrighteous, unchristian, etc., are all too obviously incorrect for one to detail, and it seems unbelievable that they should still be used by men who think.

Pug na' ci ty has the a as in am, and not the long sound.

Slough of despondency was pronounced as slow. More properly it is sloo.

Dis cre tion uses the e as in end instead of as as in eve, as was heard.

A pos' tul was often used for a pos' el by many who are otherwise careful. The t in apostle is silent.

ERROR IN NUMBER

Rule. Invariably, a verb should agree in number with its subject. Should that be hard to remember? Yet we heard the following—only a small part of the whole list of carelessly used words.

"There is many here." Many, being the subject, should have the plural form of the verb,—“there are many here.”

The blessings that is in thy mind to bestow, should be “blessings that are in,” etc.

According to the way and judgment that is his”—same trouble, way and judgment used together becoming plural.

Everyone who appears on the surface to be humble are not humble.” Here the speaker separated his subject one so far from the verb are, that he lost sight of the number. Everyone is singular in form, and should have been followed by “is not humble.”

“There are no two of anything in the universe that is alike.” Two is the subject; are should be the form of the attending verb.

“There was resolutions” should have been “there were resolutions.”

“The part that women wishes to play,” should have been “the part that women wish to play,” since women, plural, and not part, singular, is the subject of the verb wish.

“Without divine light, men has ever walked in darkness.” Men being plural should have the plural form of the verb, thus: “Men have ever walked.”

“The first eleven chapters . . . is not even good history,” should be “are not even good history.”

“The wise men of every nation treats it as a myth.” Same trouble, the word men should control the verb, and its correct form in this instance should be treat.

“The prayers of a good wife is his advocate to heaven.” Prayers are.

“Sorrow, misery and gloom that has been spread over.” These taken together, as in this sentence, become plural and the verb should be “have been spread.”

“Certain lines of secular work was mapped out for me.” Lines, plural, should have plural verb, were, not allowing the singular word, work, to mislead as to the subject.

The same error was made in a certain report. “The many inquiries from parents in regard to reading matter for their children, shows us.” Subject is inquiries, and it demands the verb show.

Here is another of the same class: “Heart and soul seems bound up,” instead of seem.

“There is many young people here.” A mistake like this is very perceptible when the sentence is turned around. Who would say, “Many young people is here”?

“If we are a child of God.” While this is not an error of verb, it is an interesting one, for how could we, plural and numerous as we might be, be a child, just one? “If we are children of God,” evidently.

“Revelation don't always come by prophecy.” This brings us to what is perhaps the most frequently heard error of speech,—the use of the word don't in connection with a singular subject. The word itself is, as everyone knows, a contraction of the words do not, just as can't is a contraction of the words can not. But which of us would care or dare to use the above in full, rendering it thus: “Revelation do not always come by prophecy”? Yet we hear hundreds of times, he don't, she don't, it don't; the Bible don't, the preacher don't, and all through the long, painful list. Just stop and separate the word into its component parts, and then decide whether you should use it or not.

“Some say the gospel don't do nobody any good.” This was really spoken in public, as well as this: “I don't know no reason why we can not.” Small children seem disposed to use two negatives, but should children of larger growth forget?

Almost as awkward in construction was this: “Never hardly amounted to anything.” The first word could have been discarded; “hardly amounted to anything” conveying the same intelligence.

Connected with these errors in the number of the verb are those that confuse the numbers of the pronouns or adjectives and the nouns they modify. Here are a few examples of that error:

“Committee continue their work, and they be requested.” Committee referred to as a unit as in this case is singular, and should be treated as such, the statement more properly being “committee continue its work, and, it be requested,” etc.

“These kind of things”—a very common mistake. Kind is the subject, and is singular, and the modifier, these or those should agree in number, becoming this of that. Thus one should be careful to say, “This kind of things.”

“Each member and officer do their duty.” Here the word each gives the singular form to the combined nouns which make the subject of the sentence. Ordinarily the combining of more than one thing pluralizes them, and they receive the plural verb; but in this case, it was not intended that each member should do the duty which might have devolved upon all, but should do only his own. Really, an ellipsis was here, the whole sentence implying that “each member should do his duty, and each officer should do his duty.” Thus, the proper construction should have been, “Each member . . . and each officer should do his duty.”

IMPROPER USE OF AUXILIARY HAVE

Many people become confused apparently about the use of the past participle, to express completed action.

“But when the time come,” one man said, meaning “but when the time had come.” If he meant the simple past tense, he should have used the word came, as “but when the time came.”

"First time we seen him" was used, when "first time we saw him" would have been correct. Seen is never used when speaking of the simple past tense. Should one desire to speak of a time prior to some other past time, one could say "First time we had seen him."

"Missionary chorus sung two numbers." Here sang was intended, the rule above quoted applying.

"Everything has went nicely." Either the speaker meant "everything went nicely," or "everything has gone nicely." Has and went are quarrelsome.

"He become a minister." Either "he has become," or "he became," whichever truth indicated.

"Until the Lord seen fit to release." Same trouble "Until the Lord saw, or had seen."

"Fourteen years since I drunk any coffee." Drank, please.

"No man ever done it." "No man ever did it," or "No man has ever done it."

"And the angels come to my bedside." "Came," brother.

ERRORS IN CASE

This is another very common error, the confusing of the nominative and objective cases. I should be used when I am the one performing, but if I receive the action of another, the form is me. For instance, would not say "me read the book," nor would he say, "the book was read to I." Yet the mistake occurs frequently when two pronouns are used together.

"Who is right,—we, or them?" asked one earnest debater. He used we in the nominative case correctly, but placed them objectively. It should have been "we, or they."

More often the mistake is made when a preposition is used, as in the following: "The time has come for you and I to hesitate." Proper construction would have it, "The time has come for you and me to hesitate." Try it with the one pronoun, and you can not make this mistake, for who would say, "The time has come for I to hesitate"?

Similar, is this: "It rests upon you and I as young people in the church." "It rests upon I?" And, "I speak of the condition that are before you and I."

"I speak as if it was me under consideration." Here we have two errors. The me should be I, as in the foregoing examples. There comes also the consideration of the subjunctive mode. The use of if or though, in such sentences, demands the use of the plural form of the verb. "I speak as if it were I under consideration," is the proper form.

"If there was no fall," should be, "if there were no fall." "If there was no law giver," comes under same correction.

"As though he was going," should be "as though he were going."

"As if he was." "As if he were."

"If it was," more correctly, "If it were."

"They looked the same as though it was one," was an interesting combination. The subject of the sentence is the word they, which, being the antecedent of the pronoun it, should control the number of the latter. Thus it should have been they, and the verb following should also agree. So a correct rendering would have been, "they looked as though they were one," the rule concerning the subjunctive form also applying here, through the use of the words as though.

SUPERFLUOUS WORDS

"I accepted of some of them." "I accepted some of them."

"Accept of our tributes." "Accept our tributes."

"Permit of them." "Permit them."

"For to take up church work." Just "to take up church work" is enough. In these examples the extra words mean nothing, and their use is improper.

"Office of an elder." This should be simply "office of elder." When a man is ordained to an office, it is an office that is held by many other men, not simply "an elder."

MISCELLANEOUS

"I set here, and feel to home." Evidently this man meant "I sit here, and feel at home." Strange how often we hear the word set for sit. One man said he was setting under a tree. No, no, even a hen would not do that. We might set her, but afterwards even she sits! Just remember that the word set is transitive, and requires an object to receive the action. We set the lamp upon the table, and likewise we lay a book there; but we sit in our chair or lie upon our beds.

"Take cognizance about it," more properly would be "take cognizance of it."

"Will not allow another to be broke." The infinitive to be requires the form, broken.

"It is easier to say what we didn't ought to do, than to say what we did ought to do;" would this not have been better constructed thus: "It is easier to say what we should not do than to say what we should do"?

As a parting help, let us remind you of the story told in the class of a university. A student was walking along the street and heard a woman calling apparently to two small children who paid no attention to her. The young man called their attention to the fact that their mother was calling them, and the larger of the two replied, "Oh, her ain't a-callin' we; us don't belong to she!"

Here are the four errors in case, and one other,—do you catch it?

KINDLY CRITIC.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,

LAMONI, IOWA

The Home

There have been some changes in the Children's Home circle since last report but conditions are hopeful.

One good sister observing the suggestion made by Brother Roberts that twenty-five persons giving one hundred dollars each, could relieve the home of debt, promptly responded, nor did she wait for the other twenty-four, but promptly sent in her hundred. In doing so she not only made the indebtedness one hundred dollars less, but at the end of the year six dollars will be saved in interest, and each year thereafter the expense will be six dollars less. Thus does her generous act grow.

This is but an example of how the good we do grows in all departments of human experience, and it also admonishes us that the evil we do grows in the same ratio, and the good we have opportunity to do and fail to do is not only opportunity lost, but it serves to weaken us in purpose, and detracts from our powers. When the other twenty-four respond we will not only be free of debt, a condition much to be desired, but the net assets of the home will be increased in the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, and current expenses for the year will be one hundred and fifty dollars less.

Judging from the experience we have had when appealing for help for this great work, we shall not be surprised to see this list complete in the near future. Some may desire but not be able to respond, but such may be able to form a club of ten or twenty who will raise the amount together. Who will be the next?

One of the trustees of the home, Brother Richard Bullard, of Independence, Missouri, feeling that his distance from the home injured his efficiency in that duty, expressed a desire to be released in favor of some one more favorably located. The late conference therefore selected Brother Richard J. Lambert, a resident of Lamoni, to succeed him. It was not without a sense of regret that the board witnessed the severing of its association with Brother Bullard, thus making the first change since the board was organized. We feel, however, that we have been highly favored in having the valuable assistance of Brother Lambert. At the reorganization of the board, he was chosen its secretary, and has already entered into the discharge of his duty with commendable zeal.

One boy and two girls who have been with us in the home have left for other homes. We sincerely hope that they may be a blessing to homes which have received them, and that they may be helped by their new associations to make their influence for good felt in the world.

One little girl of whom we spoke on a former occasion who went out from us to bless a home, which was before childless, has carried out her expressed intention and been baptized. This ordinance was performed on Mothers' Day, and was a splendid tribute of respect to the mother who taught her to love and honor the Lord Jesus by keeping his commandments.

Mother Robinson, the matron of the home, who for such a long time has suffered with sickness, is much better. The children are rejoicing in her restoration, and now that school vacation has come they will be able to do much to help "mother" and make the bright summer days pleasant for her.

The Little People

A dreary place would be this earth,
Were there no little people in it;
The song of life would lose its mirth,
Were there no children to begin it;

No little forms, like buds to grow,
And make the admiring heart surrender;
No little hands on breast and brow,
To keep the thrilling love-chords tender.

The sterner souls would grow more stern,
Unfeeling nature more inhuman,
And man to stoic coldness turn,
And woman would be less than woman.

Life's song, indeed, would lose its charm,
Were there no babies to begin it;
A doleful place this world would be,
Were there no little people in it.

—Whittier.

Childhood's Laughter

Oh, there is nothing like childhood's laughter
Once in a life, and never after,
It comes, with a ringing, joyous sound
Casting its gladness on all around,
'Tis like the carol of some wild bird,
Whose shrill, clear warbling at eve is heard;
Or like voices of angels, beyond the skies
Shouting their heavenly melodies.
Sometimes the laugh is low and still,
Like the rippling sound of a summer rill—
Anon, like the dashing, wild cascade
Waking the echoes o'er valley and glade.
What is it gladdens the halls of pride?
What sheds a joy round the cottage fireside?
The careless laugh of a happy child,
In musical cadence soft or wild.
Go where we will, on earth so fair,
Find we not sorrow, pain and care,
Save in the faces of sinless youth,
Where all is trusting and full of truth?
Wherever fate may cast our lot,
In the desert of life, 'tis the one bright spot—
That vision of childhood, which comes again
To cool with its breath our fevered brain.
Look at the old man, bent and gray,
Pausing to watch the children play!
Their joyous voices have made him start,
And touched a chord in his withered heart;
And he thinks of the time when he himself,
Like the little ones there, was a careless elf;
And he smiles to think how little is left
Of youth's gay tone, in his heart bereft.
Bereft of all upon earth 'tis true—
But ever is falling a gentle dew,
Distilled from heaven by Jesus' hand,
To freshen his soul for the better land.
For short and fleeting is childhood's dream—
'Tis here! 'tis gone! and we scarcely seem To have felt on our cheek its rosy breath,
Ere we're summoned to sorrow, pain and death.
And when time and care have wrinkled the brow,
And the laugh of gladness is silent now,
'Tis with calm delight we dwell at last
On the sinless vision, for ever past!

Prophecy Concerning War

[The following by Elder J. E. Yates was recently published in one of the daily papers of Phoenix, Arizona.—EDITOR.]

The evangelist, W. A. Cuddy, of Washington, District of Columbia, spoke Sunday afternoon at the City Hall Plaza upon the subject of Bible prophecy, and predicted with great assurance that the war would continue till the allies were in possession of Jerusalem. Next, that the Jews will assemble there, and while under the fostering care of a government, supported by the allies, build another Solomon's Temple. That a universal peace pact will be subscribed to by all nations, supported by the most powerful ecclesiastical bodies of the world. Next that the clergy of all isms will herald the peace era, and announce that the great millennium has begun. Then in the midst of prospective permanent peace the United States will be ravished by war and utterly vanquished.

The speaker affirms his own inspiration as a prophet of God, and claims to have been delivering this same prophecy, in substance, for a number of years, or ever since quitting his former profession as bartender and gambler. The evangelist relates his former sins in detail, in evidence of the genuineness of his conversion.

The speaker however produced a concrete and powerful argument in favor of the truth of the Bible as against the errors and arguments of skepticism. His good and gracious words were amply seasoned and peppered however, with caustic criticism of the various churches and doctrines which he regarded to be unsound.

Catholicism, Russellism, Seventh-Day Adventists, Pentecostal church and Latter Day Saints came in for their share of criticism. The writer of this sketch, as a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, notices in brief the statement made by Mr. Cuddy, that the Book of Mormon contained no prophetic forecast of national events, which by coming to pass would give the book a legitimate right to its claim of divine origin. We affirm that the book does contain such forecast of events; and that the transpiration of those events amply substantiates the claims made for the book by its adherents.

For instance, bear in mind that the work was first published in the year 1829, and that its prophetic features outline clearly what the policy of the American Government would be towards the American Indian. And note, that the Government now follows that policy to the very letter. Also note the singular fact wherein a conquering nation stoops to lift up their vanquished foe, and actually expends millions upon millions of dollars for their betterment, as our venerable Uncle Sam has done, and is still doing for the once savage Indian, which stands almost without a parallel in history. All this was clearly foretold.

So with all due respect to the evangelist, W. A. Cuddy, in his commendable efforts to prove to skeptics by the Bible that there is a God in heaven, who foretells future events, we affirm the irrefutable fact that other prophets than the ancient Hebrews and other books as well as the Bible refute the arguments of infidelity, and speak in no uncertain tones for God and his son Jesus Christ as the redeemer of the world.

JAMES E. YATES.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 12, 1915.

Editors Herald: The work here is progressing and the seed sown has not been in vain. Some have enjoyed the gospel and many are investigating, which is encouraging to us and inspires us with greater desire to go onward in this great work. All has not been sunshine. We can not expect this, for the Lord has said his people are to be a tried people, and we realize that we can not become polished shafts unless we endure the polishing.

We are grateful that the Lord has called us into his kingdom, and are thankful that he has been merciful unto us. We feel our unworthiness and are striving to be faithful, humble, and full of love, for we desire to assist in God's work. We desire to carry out the will of our heavenly Father; to be active, for activity brings success; to be studious that we might become more efficient workers; and most of all to be prayerful and watchful that by our lives others may be led into the fold.

We are looking forward to the time and trust it is not far hence, when we shall be able to organize a Religio here. When I read of the work accomplished by Religions here and there I often look back and think of the good times and pleasant association I once enjoyed in the Religio at Philadelphia. I think one of the greatest blessings of the gospel is our association with the Saints. The Toledo Saints seem to appreciate this and strive to help one another, to lighten each other's burden. Many times we are led to sing with the Spirit and understanding, "Blest be the tie that binds."

We are very much encouraged in the work here, and have great hopes for the future of our branch. When first organized there was only one member of the priesthood here, our aged Brother Cairnes, who is still with us, and whose faithful testimony has been the means of much good. This brother has been a Latter Day Saint for over fifty years and his testimony still is, "I know this work is true. The longer I am in it the grander and more glorious it becomes. The Lord has never failed to keep his promises." What a beautiful testimony, and especially encouraging to the young, who are called to carry on this work to victory.

We now have three elders, a priest, teacher, and deacon. Each seems to be alive to the duties and responsibilities of his office and calling. Thus is the Lord blessing us, and our earnest prayer is to see the work grow and prosper, not only here but elsewhere, wherever God has a people. We desire to please and serve him always that he may be able to say to us in the great day to come, "Well done."

Your sister in bonds,

OLIVE HETRICK.

Editors Herald: I wish to do what I can to encourage others who have been engaged in the good work of the Master. I am sorry to say that our cause in South Wales is not so prosperous as it might have been.

The great work of the church is evangelistic, preparing the way of the Lord for his second advent, which is to be in glory. We are told in Doctrine and Covenants that the glory of God is intelligence. The highest of all intelligence ought to come from the fountain of light, which ought to be the character of this latter-day work. This does not do away with the fact that the Master was the true light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world.

God's promises are sure, and so long as the earth stands a remnant of his seed shall remain. I often wonder whether the world or professing Saints will have the greatest amount of faith when Christ comes, as it is possible for the most of the church to fall away, and for those who we think have the least chance of being saved to take their place. This work is especially designed to gather in the outcasts among the lost sheep of the house of Israel. The light has truly come unto the Gentiles for the set purpose of the Lord that all things shall be gathered into one, and the times are being fulfilled which have been called the times of the Gentiles. It is sometimes asked, "Are all of Israel who are called Israel?" We have it in past history that the glory of the Lord has departed from Israel. The query is, Shall it depart from us who have been once lightened with the wisdom from on high?

In bonds,

Editors Herald: You will find inclosed a letter from Peter Casey, who is going to San Francisco next Sunday to be baptized. He is a minister of the General Assembly and Church of the First Born. He has seen his way out of darkness into the light through the beauty and truth of the Inspired Translation. He has not heard a sermon by an elder of the Reorganized Church.

I am sending for another Inspired Translation for another preacher who is weary of Russellism.

Your brother,

J. W. LEA.

J. W. LEA, Napa Junction, California.

Dear Brother: I am happy in Christ Jesus and rejoice in the truth of the Latter Day Saints. I thank you for your kindness and faithfulness to the Lord Jesus Christ in praying to God that I might see the whole truth. By investigating and reading the Book of Mormon, I can say with Brother Reiste and the Latter Day Saints, that the Bible is truth, but not all of the truth.

The Lord has been blessing me wonderfully the past week. I thank you, Brother Lea, for the Inspired Translation, as translated and created by the spirit of revelation through Joseph Smith. It has been a blessing to my soul. To-night I am standing on the rock of Jesus Christ, proclaiming the whole truth.

My love to all,

306 Glen Street.

Editors Herald: I am here for the present to help build up the good work that is, or should be, the dearest thing on earth to us. There are some fifteen or twenty Saints here, not yet organized into a branch, but we expect they will be after Elder William Grice, district president, returns from General Conference.

As God's servants go forth to their several places of labor from the conference, we trust they may impart some of the good they have been feasting upon, to the strengthening and encouraging of those who are not permitted to be present.

In gospel bonds,

A. M. MCKENZIE.

FILER, IDAHO, April 11, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have a branch here now, organized February 24. We have Sunday school every Sunday, with preaching following, prayer and sacrament meeting the first Sunday of each month. We hold our meetings in a school-house two and one half miles east of Filer. Elder H. P. Hanson is our branch president, with Brother James Winegar, priest. These are all the officers we have. We are trying to do what the Master would have us do.

The Saints here were brought together through a letter written us by the Herald Publishing House, giving the names of members here who were subscribers to the HERALD, and inquiring for other Saints not taking the HERALD.

We have had two series of meetings conducted by Brother J. T. Davis, and one by Brother T. C. Kelley. Brother George Winegar held a few meetings here also. We have been made to rejoice in God's Spirit.

In announcing our meetings at one place, I met with some of Pastor Russell's followers. A lady here informed me that Christ had already come in the Spirit, and would reign in the Spirit, and that those worthy of the resurrection would also reign with Christ in the Spirit. The statements in Ezekiel 37: 5, 6; Acts 1: 9-11, do not harmonize with this theory.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may see my duty before God, and be of service in the work. I have been elected assistant superintendent of our Sunday school. I desire to be found worthy.

Praying for God's people, I am,

Your brother,

ALBERT THATCHER, JR.

KANSAS CITY, KANSAS, April 14, 1915.

Editors Herald: I recently attended a stereopticon lecture given in Yecker Avenue Baptist church here, by Reverend P. O. Salvara, pastor of Oakland Park Baptist Church. The church where the lecture was given is about five blocks from our church on Quindaro Boulevard.

The lecturer quoted from Reverend Nutting's work and from other self-styled historians. His main object seemed to be to paint Joseph Smith the Martyr, as black as possible, the effort being to hold him responsible for all the depredations practiced by the Utah church.

Reverend Salvara said the Reorganized Church claims not to believe in polygamy, but they were Mormons nevertheless. He also said the Book of Mormon is unclean, treasonable and immoral, teaching the doctrine of Adam-god worship. He spoke of Joseph Smith being in Independence with five wives.

At the conclusion of his efforts I called the congregation to order and told them I was a representative of the Quindaro Branch of the Reorganized Church, and announced that the lecture would be answered the next Monday night at our church. I also told them we did not resent what had been said about the Utah people, but we did object to the attack made upon the life and character of Joseph Smith, who was a true prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon, which was a true record of the prehistoric people who once inhabited North and South America. I also said that the plates from which the same had been translated were delivered to Joseph Smith by an angel of God.

Our church was well filled Monday evening with Saints and Baptists, the Baptists seeming to be in the majority. Reverend Salvara was also present. I addressed the people for an hour and a quarter, and we think an interest has been aroused.

Yours for the redemption of Zion,

North Twentieth and Brown.

SHELL BROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, April 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: Spring is here, and the shooting forth of the grass and tender plants seems to have revived God's children spiritually. We have changed the hour of our Sunday school from 2.30 p. m., to 10.30 a. m., as we feel that we will be blessed if we will arise early and put forth more of an effort in the good cause.

There is a desire among the Saints of this place for a two-day meeting. We are hungry for some gathering where we can meet with others of like faith and have our spiritual strength renewed.

We have not been visited by any of the missionaries since last August, and we feel the need of some one coming. Missionaries who have visited us have expressed themselves as feeling that there was a good work to be done in this part, and we feel that if we could have an elder come for a while and arouse the people and have his efforts followed up by a two-day meeting, good could be done. There are some here who would attend.

We have no church building, but have a number of nice groves which we could seat, and there provide meals for all visiting Saints. All would be done free, and all we would ask of the brethren and sisters would be to come and bring the good Spirit with them. We would arrange to have this meeting about August 1, as that is the time most slack, just before harvest.

We would like to correspond with the district officers and see what can be done. We would like also to hear from Elder Davis and any others interested in the Shell Brook Saints.

Wishing the HERALD every success, and hoping the General Conference has been a spiritual one, I remain,

Yours for advancement,

MRS. OSWALD SCHRANK.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, April 17, 1915.

Editors Herald: I wish to bear my testimony with reference to having been led into the church. In September, 1911, I was privileged to meet with the people of God at the reunion of the New York and Philadelphia District, held at Manasquan, New Jersey.

When I went to this reunion I had no thought of being baptized. But one evening after hearing the sweet gospel story as told by Brother U. W. Greene, I felt the Holy Spirit come upon me in might and in power. I went into the woods, where I enjoyed a blessed experience. I was told by the good Spirit of God to go and be baptized. I started to go to Brother Greene, but after walking some distance the evil power came upon me and I was driven back. I shall never forget the experience I had in the contending of the two powers. I am glad that the power of the Master was the greater.

The gospel is the joy of my heart. It feeds me when I am hungry and raises me up when I am downcast. I can not write in words the testimonies that the Master has given me. I hope my life shall be faithful to the Lord who has done so much for me.

Since writing before I have been ordained a priest. I rejoice because the Lord has given me a testimony of my calling, not one but many.

Elder T. U. Thomas is still laboring in Scranton, and we hope that he will continue for some time. I remember reading of Brother Thomas in the Autumn Leaves, where it was said that he was a willing worker. How true this is. He is always ready to work for the Master's cause.

I ask Brother William Anderson to write me again.

Your brother in Christ,

446 Edwards Court.

JOHN JENKINS.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is with a deep sense of gratitude I attempt to write of an experience which I passed through recently, regarding our sanitarium at Independence, Missouri, hoping that by relating it others who are afflicted might be persuaded to go there rather than to the medical institutions of the world.

About March 1, I was called by telegram to the bedside of sick ones in my brother's family at Topeka, Kansas, where, after a week or more, I was taken sick myself, so seriously that two of the best physicians were consulted, who told me an operation was imperative, one of them saying I was past all medication.

My great desire was to go to the church Sanitarium where, according to the kind provision of the Lord, we can be surrounded by spiritual influences. And not being satisfied with the decision of the Topeka doctors, I immediately wrote to Brother E. L. Kelley, asking him with reference to skillful physicians and surgeons at Independence and Kansas City, who replied as follows, suggesting that if I needed special diagnosis, I had first better go to our own Sanitarium. As Brother Kelley's letter will prove instructive to all, I desire to quote at length:

"There are no more skillful physicians and surgeons in the country than we have the benefit of in this part, the head of our own institution having studied not only in America, but has also studied with the benefit of operations in Austria, Germany and England. There are very few places where they are equally good and skillful; it doesn't make any difference what you wish done. A great many times when parties have been sent here by physicians and they had determined that nothing would help them but an operation, they have been entirely cured here without the operation, and returned home and rejoiced over it."

This, dear Saints, also proved to be my experience a few days after receiving the above letter. At this time, however, I was too sick to travel, being in almost constant pain, but I prayed to our ever loving Father for strength to take the trip. My folks sent word to Elder B. L. Dobson in Topeka, to come and administer to me, and as he did so, pleading with the Lord to answer my prayers, peace and comfort as well as strength came, and I was soon able to go to the Sanitarium, where I received most excellent treatment and nursing.

Oh, the relief and assurance that came to me when I was told that an operation was unnecessary. It veritably seemed like a place of refuge, as I felt to realize my narrow escape from the surgeon's knife, and you can imagine my thankfulness that we had such an institution of our own. How kind the Lord was to us when in 1906 he indicated his will: "that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church, . . . where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick."

Those of us, and there are a number here at Lamoni, who have been permitted to go to the Sanitarium, will always find our hearts welling up with joy and gratitude at the memory.

Dear Saints and workers, we ought to rejoice that we have such capable and skillful ones in charge of this institution. And if we are truly glad we will help all we can to make their burden lighter. There are many ways to help. Those who attended the annual program of the Woman's Auxiliary on April 9, will remember the very interesting and practical hints given by Sister L. E. Hills in her paper on "The aims and possibilities of the Patroness Society of the Sanitarium."

There is no time for idle moments. The call is to all, work while the day lasts. We hope there will be a ready response to the call for financial help toward purchasing the new X ray. Just think of the triumphs the X ray is accomplishing in the medical world, and what a boon it will be to our own afflicted people! The church is told not to contract a debt, but "those to whom this work is assigned should exercise the necessary degree of wisdom that the work be effectual for the intent and purposes designed." This is what those in charge are trying to do. Let us uphold and assist them.

What more blessed work could we do, than help to succor the discouraged and afflicted?

My earnest desire and prayer is that the work of this and all other departments of this great work may prosper, until the final accomplishment of God's righteous purposes on earth.

PEARL JAMISON.

REDICKVILLE, ONTARIO, May 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: Since learning that I have been changed in my location of labor from Chatham and London districts to Toronto District, I have called at Thorndale, Saint Marys, Stratford, Acton, Cedar Valley, and Shelburne. I spent twenty years of my life on a farm two miles from Shelburne, in Mulmur Township. There I was brought up in the Episcopal faith (Church of England). When about twenty years of age I united with the Methodist Church, where I remained about four years, till I heard the restored gospel at River-view, some nine miles from Shelburne. After about two weeks of investigation I was baptized. The evening I requested baptism, a friend said, "I believe it's right."

I said, "I believe when God directs, man should obey. What about being baptized on Saturday with me?"

He said, "I am going to Shelburne to-morrow and am going to ask Reverend ——— about this baptism."

I said, "I have been asking God for wisdom and am satisfied."

That minister told Mr. J—— that those "Mormons" put too much stress on baptism, but if he desired to be baptized to satisfy his conscience that he (the Reverend) would baptize him. Mr. J—— concluded he could satisfy his conscience without baptism, when he had the word of the reverend that such was all it was good for. Now the last I heard of Mr. J—— he was an agnostic. I cite this instance to show that "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm," not only applies to Brigham Young and others who have departed from the true Latter Day Saint faith, but to anyone who will trust man and his word more than God and his word.

After over thirty-one years in this church, and over twenty-seven in its ministry, I have been enabled to realize with all the powers of my being that this is truly the "gospel restored," with its gifts and blessings. I have lacked the advantage of either college or high school education, nevertheless have proven that, "faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him (me) for the work" (Doctrine and Covenants 4:1), in whatever office or calling the Lord and his church have seen fit to place upon me. I do not say this boastfully, but by way of testimony, with the hope that it may encourage some one else to trust the Lord and his promises more fully.

I see I am getting away from the news I began to tell, so will go back to Shelburne and state that I am the oldest of a family of six, and the only one to become interested in the latter-day message. My sister died some years ago; my four brothers are still members of the Methodist Church. If I talk anything about this work to them they stop talking or change the subject; if I mention any church matter in my letters they do not answer. They have concluded that I have wasted the best of my years preaching an unpopular doctrine without salary—never even being able to secure a home—and that I am likely to be a cripple in their corner some day.

Last week I had dinner with my brother on the old homestead. He has two hundred acres of fine land and everything that heart should wish, with only one son to inherit it all. When I see him possessed of that fear which shall come upon every man (Doctrine and Covenants 63:9), I would not be willing to exchange my faith in Christ and his restored gospel for all my brother has of this world's goods. My treasure is where neither lightning nor any power can touch it, and my hope is that when I am of no further use to his church here the Lord will deliver me from this tabernacle, so that I may be a burden to neither church or kindred.

In Shelburne I was guest (part time) and held meetings in the home of Elder John Wilson, now in his eighty-third year. He acted the part of a father to myself and family in the early days of my ministry, and he has been ever kind to the many of the ministry when Masonville Branch flourished, three and one half miles north of town. Of the First Presidency who have been guests at his home I might mention Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair, and R. C. Evans. Bishop Hilliard has likewise been there, but space forbids the mention of the many names that come to mind of those who shared under his roof-tree. One time Elder J. L. Mortimer and I met at his home when returning from different fields of labor. J. L. awoke me in the morning with his laughing. "What's the matter J. L.?" I asked. "You were preaching in your sleep and said, 'If you don't speak according to this word, you ought to have your tongue tied to a stump.'" I never used the expression when I was awake.

I am on my way to New Liskeard to visit my family and assist Bishop Evans who is to be with us for a two-day meeting and church dedication June 5 and 6.

I am continuing to use 618 Layard Street, London, Ontario, as my field address for the present. More anon,

JOHN SHIELDS.

EROS, LOUISIANA, April 26, 1915.

Editors Herald: I feel thankful that I live in this day and age when the gospel is being preached throughout the world, that the honest in heart may be saved. The scriptures plainly teach us that the day of the Lord is nigh at hand. Satan with all his cunning and craftiness is striving to overthrow many, and some are becoming weak and unconcerned about their soul's salvation. We must be tried. Let us all realize that we are living in the evening time, when perilous times are to come. If this is the beginning of sorrows, it behooves us to be about our business as Saints, that we may be strong in the faith, not yielding to Satan's temptation. It seems that all we can do is only too little.

We humbly ask the prayers of the Saints that the Lord may remember the few Saints in this part of the land. We have prayer meeting every Wednesday night and preaching every two weeks by J. W. H. Fuller.

May the Lord bless each and every one with a determination and loyalty to serve him, is my prayer.

Yours for success,

Route 3, Box 107.

J. L. GRyder.

FULTON, IOWA, May 3, 1915.

Editors Herald: It was my pleasure to attend the late General Conference with my wife. The conference was a good one from all points of view. It was inspiring to see the noble army of elders, both old and young, engaged in the Master's great cause, all eager to do their duty and let nothing arise that would hurt in any way the progress of the work. Familiar faces present at other conferences were now absent. We missed our worthy President Joseph Smith in his place at the stand. The Saints were all united when the vote was taken to place our worthy Brother Frederick M. in the important and responsible position as president of the church. I hope we will all arise to a higher altitude and live better and truer lives of devotion to the Master.

I spoke at Andover, Missouri, near Lamoni, Easter Sunday and twice after conference, by request of the brethren there.

We are holding our own here, we think. Brother I. A. Chamberlain, of Eldridge, was here last Sunday and spoke twice and once at Maquoketa. He was laboring in the interests of the Sunday school. We lack two points of being up to the standard of excellence. We intend to come to the front so we can be perfect if possible.

We are glad that wherever we meet the Saints they seem like one family. Let us cultivate the spirit of love. Let us love to learn and learn to love. May the blessing of the Master be with our new president, giving him the Spirit in double measure.

We would urge that the Eastern Iowa Saints forget not the financial law of the church. If you have any means to give, send it to me at Fulton. I will send a receipt for it at once. Let us all be workers together with God for the furthering of the cause. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. Send your private check if you use checking account.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

OTTAWA, KENTUCKY, May 2, 1915.

Editors Herald: I left Louisville last fall on account of work being dull. I was sorry to leave the branch there. It is a lively one. They also have a good Sunday school. I miss the association of the Saints very much. I came back to the farm where I was raised, and will try to farm this year. There are a few Saints here, and we are trying to put the gospel before the people of the community the best we can.

I was baptized in 1904. Brethren J. W. Metcalf, W. H. Forbes, W. H. Kelley and H. E. Moler labored in this community, and I was told that if I would do the Father's will I should know the doctrine. This promise has been verified. I was ordained a priest in 1909, under the hands of J. W. Metcalf and W. H. Forbes.

Brother Charley Oliver and the writer are trying to tell the angel's message in this locality. I spoke last Sunday night to one hundred or more people. Our crowds are increasing all the time. I was informed that the Holiness people were going to let us have their church when their pastor was not present. I wish a couple of missionaries could come here with a tent. I think there is quite an interest manifested here at present.

I believe the time is at hand when all the Saints should be up and doing. The harvest is great and the laborers few. I do not see how Saints can be slothful in this great latter-day work.

We trust that when the King comes to reign, who is Christ Jesus, we shall be able to stand and reign with him.

Your brother in the gospel,

HENRY OLIVER.

WHEATLAND, NEW MEXICO, May 4, 1915.

Editors Herald: I wish the Saints to know, particularly those of our acquaintance, that we are located in the north-western corner of New Mexico. This is a Brighamite settlement. My family is the only Josephite family here. Brother Crandall's family lives at Flora Vista, twenty-five miles from here. Almost all of the Brighamites believe in polygamy as much as ever. Elder Higdon was here last summer and held a debate with the Mormons. They defended polygamy from the pulpit during the debate.

I see by the HERALD we have an elder sent to New Mexico. If he will come to this place I will see that he is provided for, and will get him a place to preach and assist him all I can. Prospects are good for preaching the gospel. We can travel in my buggy.

We have lived here seven years, away from the church and Sunday school. How lonely it is to be away from the services. Sometimes I try to sing, "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink." The Master says if we live godly in Christ Jesus we shall suffer persecution. I know this to be true.

Our hearts were made to rejoice when our oldest son sent us word he would send tickets for his father and mother to come and visit them in Tulsa, Oklahoma. We had not seen him for seven years. We have three sons and one daughter in Tulsa. My family is all in the church except the youngest boy, who is twenty years old. I have five sons and three daughters.

What a pleasure it was to meet so many of our children again, and so many of the old-time Saints. To complete our joy, when Sunday morning came who should appear in the pulpit but our old friend Bishop Ellis Short, of Independence, Missouri. It was truly a treat to hear his voice again, declaring the words of eternal life. I preached three times for the Saints in Tulsa. We had a time of rejoicing together in the Lord.

We also visited in Scranton, Kansas, where my wife's mother lives. She is now ninety-four years old. I preached twice for the Scranton Saints. Also preached in Durango, Colorado. I trust that the elders in charge will not find fault with me for performing this labor.

I have been a member of this church thirty-seven years, and the more I see and hear of it the better I like it. I am now getting to be an old man, but my testimony is to-day as it has been all these years, that this is the church of the living God.

Dear Saints, we are living in perilous times. The hearts of men are failing them for fear of the things that are coming upon the earth, wars and rumors of wars, etc. The Lord said as in the days of Noah, so it would be at the time of his coming. The spirit of the age seems to be nothing but greed, and graft, and pleasure. Let the Saints stand in holy places, looking to the coming of the Lord. Let us see that we have clean hands and pure hearts when the Master appears, which appearing is near at hand.

May the Lord bless his church and all his Saints, in my prayer.

PETER ADAMSON, SR.

DAVILLA, TEXAS, May 4, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have lived in Texas over eight years, and have not met a Latter Day Saint in the country. I was at home to visit my parents in Missouri and had had the privilege of meeting with Saints five years ago last Christmas. I did not have the privilege of meeting in any kind of Christian service until last summer.

We now live in a little country place with four churches; only two have pastors. The Baptists occupy the first Sunday in the month, the Methodists the third. The Holiness people closed a three weeks' meeting a week ago to-night. They used the Christian church. The Methodist pastor would not allow them to use his church, and only came out once; but the Baptist pastor took them to his home and attended their meetings. They had large crowds and got the people to reading the Bible. They were earnest men and preached more Bible than I have heard from all these other churches. They went after the people for using coffee, snuff, tobacco, etc. They said it was hard to tell the church from the world, for many church people did the same as those of the world.

My nearest neighbor is a Methodist lady past eighty years of age. She has been a member of that church for over sixty years. However, she does not believe in sprinkling infants. I told her of our faith, and she said, "That's Bible, that's what Jesus did, but I never had a chance to have my children blessed." I loaned her my SAINTS' HERALD. She read of the death and funeral of President Joseph Smith and said, If there were more men like that the churches would accomplish more than they do.

My oldest son, eighteen years of age, is interested in his soul's salvation. My oldest daughter, fifteen years of age, is also seeking after the truth. The Baptist pastor gave her their book yesterday to read. She was studying and comparing it with the Bible, and one asked if she was intending to join the Baptist Church. She said she was going to join the one that taught nearest like the Bible. She has never heard our elders preach since she was a little child, but feels she ought to make a start, and may join with them, as she says there are none of our people here, and she has not even an opportunity to hear and obey. I have met no one who has ever even heard of a Latter Day Saint.

While these older children are seeking light, the younger ones are seeming to be led differently. I have tried to teach them aright. Their father has been from home almost constantly for the last two years, and the burden has been very heavy at times.

Many in my old home, Spring River, Missouri, will remember me, and I ask all to pray that we may not be forgotten, but that all things may work for the best.

Your sister,

MYRTIE JONES BROWN.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are in receipt of a letter from Sister Mary Wardle, of Sandy, Utah, containing the news of the death of Sister Margaret Goff, of Springville, Utah, April 10, 1915.

Sister Goff, with her husband, was baptized into the Reorganization in 1880, in Provo, Utah. Brother Joseph Luff baptized the husband, James Goff, and Brother Gordon E. Deuel the wife. Brother Goff died in 1887.

While in Utah, I met and visited with Sister Goff at the home of her son-in-law, Brother Ether Blanchard. I think the last time was in 1912. She was in rugged physical health, and while her memory of passing events was gone, she seemed to retain her recollection of former times, and delighted to talk of events as they had occurred in connection with her experiences in the work in the earlier years.

The newspaper clipping places her birth as December 25, 1808, in Unidella, Delaware, but the church record places it as Delaware County, New York, December 27, 1809. Of her I think it may be said, "She kept the faith and her reward is sure."

A. M. CHASE.

THE DALLES, OREGON, May 12, 1915.

Editors Herald: We request that some of the missionaries in this part of Oregon come to our place. There is a schoolhouse about half a mile from our home, and I am sure the people would like to have meetings. There is hardly ever anything going on in our neighborhood. I would like for whoever comes to stay with us, and help make arrangements to have some preaching in The Dalles.

My husband's health is very poor, and we live quite a way from town, but I think some one who is experienced in missionary work could with what help my companion could give, get the gospel work started in The Dalles.

I long to live among the Saints. We would like for some one to come here whom we used to know in the East. I earnestly hope some one will respond to our request.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. L. O. DAWSON.

DERBY, INDIANA, May 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have received the HERALD for many years, and am always glad to hear the good news from different parts. I have been in this work quite a while, and have been greatly blessed. I have also seen many sorrows, but the Lord has been with me, guided and helped me to guide our children, three of whom with their companions have obeyed the gospel. I trust the other four will find the gospel message ere long. My husband has been dead twenty years.

I am striving to do the Master's will to the best of my knowledge. I ask the Saints to pray for me.

Your sister,

MARY McPEAK.

BLANCHARD, OKLAHOMA, May 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: We can not get along without the HERALD. We are in Oklahoma in the wilderness, and do not get to hear much of the old-time gospel, as preached by Christ and the apostles.

Brother S. W. Simmons was here at Blanchard last summer. He interested a few, but he did not stay long enough. He says he will come again. We hope he will return soon. We would be glad if some of the other elders could come also, as we are almost starved for the bread of life.

H. DUNCAN.

MONTROSE, IOWA, May 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD. It strengthens the weak and cheers the lonely. I fell in the cellar April 3 and was badly hurt. I am better now, but not as well as I was before. I truly know the power of God has been with me, else I would not be here. I doubt not the Lord nor his mercy; I have proved him in days that are past. I feel that he is with me, and I want to live this life so that I may receive the crown laid up for the faithful.

It has been many years since I embraced the gospel. How much I have tried to do right the Lord knows. Many things have been hard for me to bear, but I have taken them to the Lord in prayer and have many times been answered. I have tried to do good wherever I could. I realize God is my true friend, even when all others fail. I hope to be faithful and do still more for the good of the cause I love so well.

I thank my heavenly Father for sparing my life through my afflictions to the present time, and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

MRS. F. M. ROSS.

HIGBEE, MISSOURI, May, 1915.

Editors Herald: My colaborer, Brother John Ely, is with me, and we are in our field and at work. We want to canvass the ground thoroughly, search diligently, and leave nothing undone that we should do, believing that constant, persistent effort will bring success in time.

If there are any isolated Saints who wish meetings in their neighborhood, we would be glad to be notified.

Hopefully,

D. E. TUCKER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 110 South Chrysler Street.

FLAGSTAFF, ALBERTA, May 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: My wife and I are isolated from all church privileges, and find it hard to be away from the Saints, and to be with those who are prejudiced against latter-day work. But I thank our heavenly Father for the light he has given us in this latter-day gospel. I find great comfort in reading the HERALD and Autumn Leaves and the church books. I like to read the sermons in the HERALD.

I was baptized February 15, 1914, at Edmonton, by W. J. Baldwin, and my wife was baptized August 9, 1914. We left Edmonton August 12, 1914, so we did not have the privilege of being with the Saints very long.

I would like to be with the Saints of God and learn more of the Master's work, for the Good Book says, "Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do." (1 Thessalonians 5:11.) But we all have a good work to do for the good Master no matter where we are. I know that the fear of man brings a snare by halting in our duty and going back in the time of trial. Our hands grow weaker, our ears grow dull in listening to the language of the true shepherd. Nothing else but this, seeing God in everything, will make us loving and patient with those who annoy and trouble us. Let us pray always that we fall not into temptation, and that we do the duty which lies nearest to us, which we know to be our duty, and not become weak in our work. In God we live, and move and have our being.

I have been cowardly in the way of telling my neighborhood of the latter-day gospel. I have told some, and one is reading the Book of Mormon, but cowards will never do in the Master's work. I fight a good battle against evil. I try to love my neighbor as myself. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." (1 John 4:8.)

It is far easier to feel kindly, to act kindly toward those with whom we are seldom brought in contact, whose tempers and prejudices do not rub against ours, than to keep up an habitual, steady, self-sacrificing love toward those whose weaknesses and faults are always forcing themselves upon us. The spirit of love, wherever it is, brings its own blessing and happiness, because it is the truth and reality of God in the soul; and therefore, is in the Saint joy of life, and is the same good to itself, everywhere, and on every occasion.

Would you know the blessing of all blessings? It is this God of love dwelling in our souls, and killing every root of bitterness, which is the pain and torment of every earthly selfish love. For all wants are satisfied, all disorders of nature are removed. No life is any longer a burden; every day is a day of peace; everything you meet becomes a help to you because everything you see or do is all done in the sweet, gentle element of love. "Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." (1 John 4:7.)

We complain of the slow, dull life we are forced to lead; of our having no room to make ourselves known; of our wasted energies; of our years of patience, so do we say that God has forgotten us. Oh, men of little faith! because you are not sent out yet into your labor, do you think God has ceased to remember you?

The many troubles that come to us day by day are for our edification, if we strive to bear them all in gentleness, patience, and kindness. Let us keep this ever before us, remembering constantly that God's loving eyes are upon us amid all these little worries and vexations, watching whether we take them as he would desire. Offer up all such occasions to him, and if some time you are put out and give way to impatience, do not be discouraged, but make haste to regain your lost composure.

In bonds of gospel love,

WILLIAM MCLEOD.

UNIOPOLIS, OHIO, May 20, 1915.

Editors Herald: There was a branch here at one time. It was very promising. Many missionaries have been here; some have labored hard and done much good; some have done some damage. May the Lord bless those who have labored earnestly in this part of the vineyard.

We have a few faithful here yet, some have moved to Saint Marys, Ohio, and some to Lima. Both places are in great need of missionaries. Brethren Joseph Bartley, Morris, and Crutch are in Saint Marys, and would be glad to entertain a gospel messenger. A schoolhouse is available there any time.

May we so live that while we are in the world we shall not be of it.

Hopefully,

A MEMBER.

Extracts from Letters

G. H. Counts, Dagonia, Missouri: "Our branch is dragging along at a slow pace. We hope the time will soon come when all will make up for lost time. The time has come when all Saints should be up and doing in regard to the work of building up the kingdom of the Lord here on earth."

John Livings, Kulu, Mississippi: "Myself and family are without preaching and church privileges here among Catholics. The last sermon I heard was by Brother J. B. Erwin, I think in 1887. We have not been associated with the church since 1880 or 1881. We keep the faith and battle along the best we can. The Lord blesses us with health and knowledge."

News from Branches

Flint, Michigan

Elder J. R. Grice just closed a three week's series of services here, which was successful in more than one way. The attendance was good, we had the opportunity of using the daily paper to advertise. Several have been baptized. By getting the work before the public in this way, many are investigating.

We were made sad by the death of Brother Thomas Heaviland, two weeks ago. He was here visiting his daughter and two sons and was struck with paralysis. He was indeed an example of faithfulness and patience.

We are looking forward to the time when the work here may progress more than at the present, though it is indeed steadily advancing.

Z. V. BLASDELL.

Saint Louis, Missouri

We were nicely cared for here while our pastor and others were attending General Conference, and those of us not privileged to attend were very much benefited upon the return of those who did go by goodly reports of what they had seen, heard and felt.

We are very thankful for the missionaries sent to our district for the ensuing year, and we feel sure much good will result, with our united effort. All no doubt are now busy in various parts of the district. Brother Christy occupied in Lansdowne the first Sunday after his return. He has spoken three times at the rock church in Saint Louis, and is now holding a two week's series of meetings in Cheltenham with good interest and attendance.

Our local officers are not idle, and are fully occupied at the various branches in and near the city.

We were blessed with two fatherly discourses by Patriarch William Lewis, who stopped here one week en route to his eastern field. He intended staying only one day, but so many desired blessings his stay was lengthened and fully occu-ped. Sister Ruth was with him. We trust God will continue with them both.

Under the live officers of the Sunday school and Religio the young people are well cared for. Our sisters are also busy.

Your sister in Christ,

2739 Greer Avenue.

disguise of sails. A number of British fishing vessels have also been sunk. A British submarine has sunk a German transport in the sea of Marmora. Following a Zeppelin raid on London in which ninety bombs were dropped and four persons killed and others injured, anti-German rioting occurred requiring a special constabulary to restore order. The tiny republic of San Marino, dating from the Middle Ages, and comprising thirty-eight square miles, surrounded by Italian territory, with a population of eleven thousand, an army of nine hundred and fifty, and one piece of artillery, has approved the action of Italy in entering the war, and has declared herself in a state of war. It is rumored that Rumania and Bulgaria are likely to soon enter the war on the side of the allies. Rumor says further that in connection with the German-American parley over the sinking of the Lusitania, the German Government has suggested terms of peace, including freedom of the seas; evacuation of Belgium and northern France; creation of the Kingdom of Poland; and the return of her colonies to Germany. It is thought that the allies are not likely to consider these terms.

Roll of Honor Cards

Home department superintendents and others will be interested in the new Roll of Honor card on sale at Herald Publishing House. This card is to be hung up in a conspicuous place in the Sunday school room. And it may be presented to each isolated home class member or group of members.

It is designed to show the names of home class members who have been faithful in studying lessons and reporting the same during a period of six months.

For the sake of uniformity we suggest these cards be filled July 1 and January 1 of each year. Home class superintendents can look over their rolls and start these cards by the coming July 1.

Try it and let all home class members know that another card will be issued the first of next January. It will stimulate effort and give the regular attendants at Sunday school and church to understand that the shut-ins and others of the home class people are not allowing their mental talents to rust out.

The card is printed appropriately on a good grade of cardboard, 9 by 7 inches. It has room for 25 names and can be hung up by a ribbon or cord, or framed, as desired.

Prices, 1 for 5 cents, 5 for 15 cents, 10 for 25 cents, postage prepaid. Order number 66a from Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Ohio Organizations

We give notice that on the afternoon of August 21 at Kirtland, Ohio, will occur the organization of the two new districts, Western Ohio and Youngstown, provided for at the last General Conference. We urge the Saints interested to be present to take part in these organizations.

G. T. GRIFFITHS, Minister in Charge.

Correcton

Through an unfortunate oversight the heading of the installment in the Sunday School Department was omitted in the HERALD of last week. This matter should have been headed, "Work of the Lessons Committee." Correction is made so that the discussion may be intelligible to all interested.

The bishop or bishop's agent in your district will be glad to authorize some one in your branch or school, or both, to have charge of these cards. The subagent thus appointed will issue cards to anyone requesting them. When a contribution is made, he receives the money, punches the card to correspond with the amount, and the owner retains it until another contribution is made. When one card is filled, another is issued. When the card is filled the subagent remits the amount to the bishop or agent, then a regular tithing receipt is issued from his office direct to the owner of the card and he is credited on the books in the usual way.

Certain it is, that those who have once filled their lungs with the invigorating ozone and bathed in the indescribable sunshine, invariably long to return.

Colorado is a wonderful place for children. The summer life out there is just about as ideal as can be imagined and a few weeks of outdoor life is wonderfully beneficial to everybody. Best of all—it isn't expensive.

PREJUDICE

The first antagonist of the Christian faith was prejudice.—Dean George Hodges, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, in The Early Church, page 63.

Prejudice squints when it looks, and lies when it talks.—Duchess de Arbantes.

Dean Hodges very truly states that the first antagonist of the Christian faith was prejudice. Jesus himself encountered it and said to his disciples: "They hated me without a cause." He had been prejudged and his message rejected on this ground: "Can any good come out of Nazareth?"

His disciples later found that state of mind everywhere. The Jews at Rome declared to Paul: "As concerning this sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against." The church inherited the malice that had been directed toward the Master.

This was as Jesus had predicted, for he said: "The servant is not greater than his Lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you."

History repeats itself. Wherever the gospel is presented it encounters prejudice. In the last days "the way of truth is evilly spoken of," as Peter said that it should be.

Scarcely had the "latter-day glory" shone forth before the messengers of the covenant encountered as their first and most potent adversary the old-time spirit of prejudice. The old cry, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" was repeated in a different form. Persecution followed quickly and naturally.

The Duchess de Arbantes is credited with saying: "Prejudice squints when it looks, and lies when it talks."

Prejudice is unable to see correctly the message that we have to present. Its vision is distorted and perverted. And to the error and wrong of false perception is added the mendacity of willful misrepresentation. So that it is pretty nearly correct to say that prejudice squints when it looks and lies when it talks.

Such misconception and misrepresentation have made martyrs in this age no less than in past ages. Blinded by prejudice people see monstrous things that have no existence; maddened by absurd and malicious stories having their origin in prejudice they resort to deeds of violence,—perhaps like Saul of Tarsus verily thinking that they are doing God's pleasure.

Thus the Jews of old persecuted Christians, crucifying Jesus and driving his disciples from city to city. Christians in turn have persecuted Jews for centuries past.

In the name of God Catholics have burned Protestants at the stake; and Protestants, by way of returning evil for evil, in direct disobedience to their great Exemplar, have burned Catholics at the stake. (And by the way, even to-day no story about Catholics is too absurd to find instant credence among Protestants in some quarters; while many Catholics will neither read nor listen to any appeal from non-Catholic sources.)

It is an evidence of the power of prejudice that it held so clear-sighted a man as Paul so long a captive. He consented to the foul murder of Stephen. His arguments were bonds, scourges, and prisons. It took a miracle of grace to tear the scales from his eyes. He spent the rest of his life in repentance. But scarcely was he free from the personal dominion of prejudice until he became its victim in another way. He who had cast others into prison was himself cast into prison. He who had been deaf and blind to reason found others blind and deaf.

How much better to be the victim of prejudice in that way than to be its slave, bringing suffering unjustly upon others. The Master has told us that we shall be blessed when men say all manner of things against us falsely for his name's sake.

The spirit of prejudice is not dead; neither is it asleep. That fact is forced upon our attention in various disagreeable ways from time to time,—lest we forget. Were it not so we might feel greater concern.

Had the first great antagonist of the Christian propaganda ceased his efforts against us we might well pause to inquire whether or not we are still active in the true Christian propaganda. So in one way we may take comfort when we encounter blind and bitter prejudice, as we do frequently enough to keep us sober and alert.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

"FRYE" CASE.—In a note to the United States the German Government contends that the sinking of the Frye was not in violation of treaties, and insists that this case go to the German prize courts.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Obregon claims another decisive victory over Villa at Leon. Villa reports the Obregon forces surrounded. Credence is given to the reports of Obregon over those of Villa. Villa forces have taken Tuxpan.

PERJURY CHARGED.—Gustav Stahl, former German soldier who made affidavit that he saw four guns mounted on the Lusitania before she sailed from New York, has been arrested on the charge of perjury. Held in ten thousand dollars bail, in default he was remanded to the Tombs.

WOULD BUY FACTORIES.—The German Government or German capitalists are said to be negotiating for the purchase of extensive war munition factories in the United States. The purposes of the Germans is to secure and shut down these factories, thus preventing shipment of munitions to the allies in fulfillment of contracts. The likelihood of serious complications following such transfer has caused the Washington administration to consider the matter with the view of interposing legal objections.

BRYAN RESIGNS.—Because of differences in policy between President Wilson and himself, W. J. Bryan, Secretary of State, has resigned from the cabinet. In an announcement through the press Mr. Bryan states that two points of difference are: First, in the matters of dispute between Germany and the United States and arising especially over the loss of life in the sinking of merchantmen by German submarines, Mr. Bryan advocates investigation by an international commission, while Mr. Wilson insists upon assurances that these offenses be not repeated. Second, Mr. Bryan advocates that Americans should be warned against traveling on belligerent vessels, or with cargoes of ammunition; President Wilson insists upon the rights of United States citizens to travel on the high seas unimpeded and unmolested. Mr. Bryan "differing irreconcilably" from the President, resigned because he could not join in the late note to Germany "without violating what I deem to be an obligation to my country," and that he might employ as a private citizen means for "reaching a peaceful solution of the problem arising out of the use of submarines against merchantmen" which the President does not "feel at liberty to use." Robert Lansing is serving temporarily as Secretary of State.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The war in the west continues with little change, such slight gains as are reported being favorable to the allies, especially the French. Reports from the eastern line are confusing. In the Baltic territory, however, the Russians seem to be advancing. In Galicia the German advance is announced as having reached the vicinity of Lemberg, which the Germans say is threatened. The Germans announce gains elsewhere in Galicia, and in Bukowina. The Russian reverses are said to result partially from lack of ammunition, incident upon closed ports and the late disputes between China and Japan, which temporarily shut off shipments from Japan. The Italian campaign continues successful. Further advances have been made into the Austrian territory without reverses and with little formidable resistance. A deadlock is reported on the Gallipoli Peninsula. German submarines during the week have sunk the Belgian steamer Menapier, the British steamers Star of the West, Lady Salisbury, Erna Boldt, two British torpedo boats, the Russian warship Yennissi, and a number of fishing vessels and other small craft. Three German steamers have been sunk by Russian submarines and mines, and a German army steamer by the British in African waters. The Turkish gunboat Marmaris has been sunk. A young Canadian sublieutenant on the 7th, from an aeroplane dropped bombs upon and destroyed a German Zeppelin, the twenty-eight men on the Zeppelin being killed. This is said to be the first Zeppelin destroyed by an aeroplane passenger, the comparative safety of the Zeppelin being in its power to rise quickly. Aero-attacks with indifferent success are reported by both Austrians and Italians. Premier Asquith has announced to the House of Commons that British casualties from the beginning of the war to May 31, in men killed, wounded and missing, and referring only to continental and Mediterranean land forces, has been two hundred and fifty-eight thousand and sixty-nine. Naval losses will be given later. A great demonstration meeting eulogizing Italy for entering the war was held the 5th at Bucharest, Roumania.

NOTE TO GERMANY.—President Wilson has replied to the late German note. This reply expresses gratification in that the German Government has recognized the freedom of the seas to neutral ships, and has shown willingness to acknowledge and meet liability when unoffending neutral ships are attacked. "With regard to the sinking of the steamer Falaba by which an American citizen lost his life," the Washington administration is surprised that Germany should contend that the effort by the Falaba to escape and secure assistance altered on the part of the German officer the obligation of "seeking to make the capture in respect of the safety of the lives of those on board the merchantman," the vessel having ceased her attempt to escape when torpedoed. Concerning the sinking of the Lusitania and the consequent loss of life, the note in answer to the German reply states that it was the duty of the United States Government to see to it that the Lusitania was not armed for offensive action, that she was not serving as a transport, that she did not carry a cargo prohibited by the statutes of the United States, and that, if in fact she was a naval vessel of Great Britain she should not receive clearance as a merchantman; and it performed that duty and enforced its statutes with scrupulous vigilance through its regularly constituted officials. It is able, therefore, to assure the imperial German Government that it has been misinformed.

The note further states that the contention of Germany with reference to contraband aboard the Lusitania was "irrelative to the question of the legality of the methods used by the German naval authorities in sinking that vessel," which involves principles of humanity which throw into the background any special circumstance of detail that may be thought to affect the case, principles which lift it, as the imperial government will no doubt be quick to recognize and acknowledge, out of the class of ordinary subjects of diplomatic discussion or of international controversy. . . .

The Government of the United States is contending for something much greater than the mere rights of property or privileges of commerce. It is contending for nothing less high and sacred than the rights of humanity which every government honors itself in respecting and which no government is justified in resigning on behalf of those under its care and authority.

The note expresses the willingness of the United States Government to strive to "bring about even a partial accommodation of interests or in any way mitigate the terrors of the present devastating conflict" on the seas and between Great Britain and Germany. The note renews the representations of the note of May 15, asks for assurances that measures will be taken to insure protection to unoffending neutral merchantmen, and to noncombatant passengers aboard unresisting vessels.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

SENIOR EDITOR IN CHICAGO.—It was the privilege of the Senior Editor to visit Chicago and spend Sunday, June 13, with the Saints at that place. We occupied on the west side at 11 a. m., and on the South Side in the evening, attending prayer service at the latter place in the afternoon. During the day we attended to the ordination of Brother James F. Kier to the office of bishop, pursuant to conference action. During our stay in Chicago we were also privileged to baptize Miss Alice Smith, a granddaughter of Joseph the Martyr, being a daughter of Frederick Smith, who was brother to Joseph, Alexander, and David. During the past winter she united with the Utah Church, the only descendant of Joseph Smith who has taken such a step, but quickly discovered her error, which was one of judgment, not of the heart.

We were glad indeed, to usher her into the true church of her fathers through the authorized door of baptism.

The Coming Man

A man cries out in the wilderness,
And he has a terrible thing to tell;
He cries aloud to age and youth,
His words are hot with the sting of truth
And fierce as the bite of hell.

A man cries out in the wilderness,
For his heart is raw to the world's distress;
His soul is seared with the people's shame,
And his message brands like a burning flame.
His heart is scarred and his hands are torn—
He has blazed the trail through hate and scorn;
Vice and ignorance, wrong and wreck—
These are the foes he has beaten back;
These are the beasts he holds at bay,
And he cries, "Make way! Make way!"
Make way for the race that is to be,
The conquering race, the coming man:
Clean, courageous, intrepid, free,
Pure as the great God's plan.
Dream of the ages—a vision dim—
Martyrs have burned and died for him;
Prophets have preached him unafraid,
For him we have wept, for him we have prayed.

A man cries out in the wilderness,
And he pleads for the human race;
For a race that shall come to birth,
God like, glorious, on this earth;
As far in advance of present man
As heavens we can only scan.
Did we dream it could breed from a low desire?
Did we dream it could rise from bestial mire?
Could the beautiful, celestial thing,
From lust and lechery spring?
A man cries out in the wilderness,
And his heart is raw to the world's distress,
With terrible truth his feet are shod,
"Make way, make way for the Son of God!"

The Barometer Baby

When the baby cries the heavens turn gray
And the gathering clouds chase the sunshine away,
And it seems that the world itself should pause
To grieve and condone at the unknown cause;
For with love a-plenty it wonders why
The baby should cry.

When the baby laughs—ah! then you should see
How utterly happy a day can be!
The little birds sing and each flower looks up
To catch a smile in its tiny cup;
And the air is filled with a rolicky chaff
At the baby's laugh!

O barometer baby—despot dear,
Do keep to the weather that's fair and clear!
The world is moody—aye, stormy, too,
And we get our sunshine in watching you!

Song of a Heart

Dear Lord, to thee this morning
I offer a song of praise.
For thy loving goodness and mercy,
Through many dark, dreary days.

Oh! how my heart has hungered
For the sound of thy comforting voice;
Yet often through prayer and fasting
Thy Spirit has made me rejoice.

And the "hope of a portion in Zion,"
Has cheered and urged me on,
And given me strength in weakness
To battle for right against wrong.

I know that when life's work is ended,
And the deeds I've done passed on,
I'll rejoice and be glad that through sorrow and trial,

I've clung to the "Rod of Iron."
FAIRVIEW, MICHIGAN. MARY HOGLE.

A Creed

Faith in him who calls me friend,
Faith in what is sweet and clean;
Faith that just around the bend
All is peaceful and serene.
Faith that after care and strife
Come the happy days of rest;
Faith that everything in life
Really happens for the best.

This my faith and this my shield
'Gainst the arrows of distrust;
Much of justice is concealed
In what seems to be unjust.
Now what seems a dismal way
That alone I'm forced to tread
I may come to see some day
Is a glorious path instead.

Undisturbed by petty wrongs,
Undismayed by what is mean,
Though the false attracts the throngs,
Though the multitude unclean,
Though at times I stand alone,
Though I'm oft misunderstood,
Faith I still would keep and own
In the decent and the good.

Our Little Cottage Home

We have no ivied parapets to crown
A height sheer where a placid river turns
To glimmer through an avenue of ferns.
For thee, dear wife, no treasuries of gown
And fur are stored in chests of red and brown.
For me no silver candelabrum burns
In mellow tints on carven oak and urns.
We have a little cottage near the town.

They who are friends of song and histories
Of men who strove on mountain and on shore
Can build high castles dwarfing those of yore.
We have a little cottage home. It lies
Within the province of the street and store;
And yet it is a gateway to the skies.

THE BOY AND GIRL AS PASTOR'S HELP

[The following excellent and suggestive article was written by Elder J. A. Tanner, president of the Quorum of High Priests, and pastor of the Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri, at the request of Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, vice president of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and whose work has met with marked success among the young people of the church. We gladly welcome this article from Brother Tanner, a practical pastor, and who finds the young people a ready and valuable help in his pastoral work. In the young people of the church we have a valuable present asset, and when their services are enlisted their efforts find permanent place among us, thus assuring the continued growth of the church from within.—EDITORS.]

Every wide-awake pastor finds his work so voluminous that it often appears mountain high. In his effort to accomplish the work and care for every detail, he often finds himself weary, tired, and worn out. In his desperation he goes to God, asking for help and strength and physical endurance, forgetting all the while that he is surrounded with an abundance of helpers who are anxious to do something for their Master and his church, but who need some one to advise and direct. Who are these helpers? The boys and girls that you find in every branch of the church where the membership is twenty-five and over.

What! Use boys and girls to help in pastoral work? Yes, why not? Every boy and girl has a love and a religious patriotism for his or her church, and is jealously anxious to see it meet with success, and is willing to help it on to success, if given something to do. We often sing, "Something to do for the Master each day." Here is your chance, dear pastor. Instead of wearing your life out, and then trying to pray it in again, just put your finger on your boys and girls as helpers and lo! they are off like an electric machine.

WORK FOR BOYS

Have you any aged people in your pastorate? Go into the Sunday school or Religio, select a class of bright boys in the adolescent period of life, make a fatherly talk to them about helping Jesus, the church and his people. Talk to them of service for others, etc., and then place them on their honor and tell them you expect merit. Have them visit the homes of the aged, converse and manifest a willingness to help them in various ways. Let them take to them literature, of the church first, then other good literature and see that they are always supplied, and keep them posted in local church affairs, etc., do chores for them, take them flowers and any other little thing that will make them feel happy and that they are remembered by the pastor and the church. Many of our classes in Sunday school and Religio organized in this way can do the work as an organization, their officers directing and working them in relay, so that a hardship will not fall on any one of the class.

Have another class of boys visit the home of non-attendant boys and the waywards. Systematize this kind of work for them and supervise it, but, if possible, through their organization.

Have at intervals a "boys' day." Let the boys do all the work on that Sunday, conduct the Sunday school, the eleven a. m. and evening service. Let them do the singing, the praying, the talking, etc., the pastor only helping in the selection of suitable subject matter, etc., and filling in if the boys need him.

Not long ago there was a "boys' day" in my pastorate, and the boys at the eleven a. m., service so much exceeded the expectation of the pastor, that at the conclusion of the service he offered them his ministerial garb, "even the long-tailed coat."

Have them visit sick men and boys, teaching them how to wait on the sick, also to pray in the sick room when convenient.

Make of several bright boys an advertising committee, and let them get your Sunday advertisement in the paper. Let them do your blackboard advertising work to be placed on the corner, or before the church a day or two before Sunday.

For special meetings, let them have a district to work, distributing circulars, tracts, etc.

If you have something to buy for the church and the amount is not too large, let the boys raise the amount. Let them plan the way to do it. Let them do it all by their "lone selves," if they want to.

Try all of the above, pastor, and then if your resources get low and you can not think of anything else to give the boys to do, advertise for help.

WORK FOR GIRLS

Much that has been enumerated for the boys to do can also be done by the girls. Probably you have some widows in your branch who are struggling for the things of life for themselves and children. They are tired, worn out, discouraged and sick with the daily grind. Select some bright, cheery girls and send them into such homes. Have them take flowers, literature, little tokens of friendship and memory. Have them sing, or entertain in any way that will break the monotony of a life of drudgery. Have the girls encourage them to come to church, also to church socials, picnics, amusements, etc. Many widowed mothers feel a degree of pride, and often because being burdened down with the cares of life, and not able to provide so as to look as well as others, feel that they are not welcome at the social functions. It will do the girls good to work with and in behalf of such and it will surely do the widowed mothers good.

Many times there are prolonged cases of sickness, and often cases of shut-ins, cripples, etc., of the feminine sex. Systematize the work of your girls in such cases. Let them volunteer help in the way of choring, running errands, and anything that will lighten the burden of life and cheer the soul.

Let the girls get experience and learn that religion is not confined between church walls, to be experienced only on Sundays or Wednesday nights. Let them learn that they are coworkers together with God.

In cities there are many cases of poverty among the members, also of the world, in your church community. Send your boys and girls to these places, impress them that they go in the interest of their church to do good. Did you ever see a bunch of boys and girls start out with well-filled baskets, clothing, etc., to some poor homes, and watch the feeling of pride manifested as they were going to serve? It is a beautiful sight! and if you are touched with the true spirit of pastoral work, you will shed a silent tear as you watch youth go out in the vigor of coming man- and womanhood to carry happiness into the souls of the unfortunate in life.

Do you wish to put a new carpet on the rostrum? linoleum in the vestibule? extend the electric lights? do a little church cleaning and decorating? If so, get a class of lively girls (if an organized class the better) to help raise the means, and see how you feel at their expressed confidence, "We did it."

Have a "girls' day," and as suggested of the boys, let the girls have full sway for the day. Let them do all the advertising for the day, singing, etc., make all the talks, and look after all the services in general. If they do not hold the priesthood, do not feel worried. Probably they will do better than many of their brothers would who do hold it.

Many other suggestions could be made for the pastor's helpers in the boys and the girls, but the above will serve to awaken in the pastors the many ways they can use the helpers. Very much of the success of "helpers' work" will depend on the tact, genius, and resource of the pastor, and also on his foresight to see the needs and demands of his pastorate.

J. A. TANNER.

MISSPENT OPPORTUNITY

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 6

BY F. J. EBELING

In Isaiah 55:2 we have the idea of misspent opportunity clearly presented to us under a very applicable figure: "Wherefore, do ye spend your money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?"

As a church we have been criticizing the creeds of modern invention for their worthlessness in feeding the soul, urging that they were as chaff compared to the wheat; but perhaps if we turn the light on ourselves we may be able to discern that much has been chaff upon which we are trying to thrive.

Every opportunity that presents itself to us for good all along life's pathway of which we do not avail ourselves, is the meaning of Isaiah's question, Why spend your money for that which is not bread,—as more particularly, the misdirected energy?

When we see a man work hard a whole month, take his wages and spend all at the barroom or gambling den instead of buying bread for his family, we call that man foolish, and our better manhood revolts at such wanton neglect. But at the same time, in a spiritual sense, we may be just as neglectful and unwise by spending our time and opportunity in things that bring absolutely no return to ourself or anyone else.

In a literal sense, the hardship that may follow others by reason of the wrong way of spending our energies may be minimized by the kindness of society; but the losses sustained by an improper use of our time and energy in the spiritual way is beyond the redemption of man. Time thus lost is lost for ever. If we are doing what God requires of us, we are serving him with all our might, mind and strength, hence no chance to make up lost time after once we have entered the race.

Are you going to the pleasure resorts instead of attending the midweek prayer meeting? Are you paying your quarters and dollars into some human organization instead of the church to help take the gospel to others? Are you spending your time in reading trashy literature instead of the church literature? Are you giving more time to accumulating the riches of this world than to helping others to the riches of eternity? If so, then you are spending your money for that which is not bread; and laboring for that which satisfieth not.

THE LAW OF COMPENSATION

Misspent opportunity is clearly and fearfully presented to us in Luke 17. Lazarus went begging in this life, and doubtless did the very best he could with what little opportunity he had; and when he died was carried into paradise by an angel. But the rich man, who doubtless gave unbridled liberty to all his wants and pleasures here, died and went to torment. And there, awakening to the true situation, beheld the misspent opportunity, and begged the chance to be with the very class he would not even recognize in this life. What a great change had taken place; the haughty is brought down and the lowly exalted.

I much rather prefer to be a beggar in this world than a beggar in the world to come. We oftentimes beg and plead for a place to preach, beg and plead to have the people come to hear us preach, beg and plead to have them enter the church, and beg and plead to have live the gospel after they do come into the church. But all this we should gladly do rather than have all our selfishness here gratified, and when we go to the other side become a beggar in eternity.

Do what we will, think what we may, we can never get around the eternal law of compensation. It is an attribute of God. Whatsoever ye sow, so shall ye reap, is as true as the law of nature, which is demonstrated to us at every seed time and harvest. No one ever thinks of sowing wheat and reaping pumpkins.

HOW ABOUT YOUR MATERIAL?

In contemplating the awfulness of lost opportunity, which must be met in the hereafter, I am impressed with a dream of an individual relative to the hereafter. Whether the dream was ever had or not, it clearly represents the true condition.

A certain rich woman who had plenty of this world's goods indulged in all pleasures of the world. In her dream she died. She was taken by her guide through the most beautiful region of glory. She came to where they were erecting the most beautiful mansion she had ever beheld, far surpassing the one she had on earth. She asked, "And for whom is that mansion?" She was told that was for her gardener.

Her soul thrilled with joy as she contemplated that if her gardener was to get such a grand mansion as that, what must hers be? On they went till they passed to the outskirts of the city, and there seeing some men building a squatty little hut, she asked, "And for whom is that little shack?"

The guide replied, "That is for you, madam."

She almost went into a rage in protestation, but her guide calmly informed her that the great Master Builder was doing the very best he could with the material she had sent up.

The scene changed. In this world she looked down upon her gardener, and now she would be glad to dwell with him. This illustrates the difference between misspent and well-spent opportunity.

If we are sending up material of pleasure, selfishness, indifference, and wanton neglect, from such a material we may get a shack of bitter disappointment.

According to the Book of Mormon, a keen realization of one's guilt will be the hell's fire of our suffering. Mosiah says:

The demands of divine justice doth awaken his immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt, which doth cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord, and doth fill his breast with guilt and pain and anguish, which is like an unquenchable fire, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever.—Mosiah 1: 83, 84.

And if they be evil, they are consigned to an awful view of their own guilt and abominations, which doth cause them to shrink from the presence of the Lord, into a state of misery and endless torment, from whence they can no more return: therefore, they have drunk damnation to their souls.—Ibid., 1: 127.

From this we learn that the hell fire punishment we hear so much about is the clear "view" of our true condition—a full realization of what we have lost, or what we might have gained had we made better use of our time here and now. Looking afar off, some will beg to be with the very ones they scorned and rejected here. Bitterly disappointed will be the man or woman who, by neglect, lets slip his or her opportunity for a better mansion.

In this connection there is much to the statement of the Apostle Paul, "How shall we escape if we neglect such great salvation." There is danger in neglect. And this refers only to those who have had the opportunity and have failed to improve it. It behooves us to send up to the great Master Builder good sound material of sacrifice, faithfulness, devotion and earnestness to duty, from which to erect our mansion.

There is not one single reason we can give for not living our religion. We may give excuses, but not one single reason. For our God has made abundant provisions for all the demands made upon us for service. To whom much is given, of him much will be required. But to whom little is given, of him little is required. If our talent is wrapped in the napkin of carelessness and worldly lust, it will sink us as deep into the misery of a guilty conscience in the day of judgment.

Some try to excuse themselves from duty by saying, "I am just as good as so and so." That may be all true, and then one not be very good. The great question for us is, Are we as good as Christ would have us be? If not, why not? Another man's weakness is a very poor rule for our righteousness.

What lasting good did you get out of that last dance, picture show, or drink, or smoke, or Sunday joy ride? Would it not have been much better for you here and hereafter to have used that time and money for furthering God's kingdom?

WHAT SHALL IT BE?

There are two great characters of the Bible whose ending is as different as two opposites can be—Solomon and Paul. The former indulged in all the pleasures and carnalities of this world, and, looking back over a misspent life remorsefully declared, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." On the other hand, note the triumphant ending of the well-spent life of Paul, who, looking back over a life of toil, sacrifice, and service, could calmly declare, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

One had a flowery bed of ease in life and a bed of thorns in death: while the other a bed of thorns in life, and a bed of flowers in death. One had only a misspent life to haunt him, the other a glorious conscience; he had "kept the faith."

We can not live a life of a Solomon and die the death of a Paul. Which of the two endings is sweeter? And which do you prefer to have, in that great hour of passing?

Judge ye and do accordingly.

WILL MAN BECOME A GOD?

[The following put out with the aid of a mimeograph, is being used by Brother B. L. McKim in prosecuting the work in Utah.—EDITORS.]

That man will become as God is now, and function in all the works performed by our heavenly Father, and by obtaining Godhood, or perfection, use the powers of the universe and create even as God has created, and become the father of his creation, is a doctrine taught by the dominant church of Utah. Much depends upon this teaching. If true, and if their position regarding how man came into spiritual existence be also true, then they are justified in marrying for eternity. On the other hand, if it can be proven that man will not have such opportunity, then the temple ordinances that are for his benefit when such a condition is attained, the sealing of a wife or wives to a man, the sealing of children to parents, etc., are of no worth to the practitioners, and is putting "trust in dead works."

MORMON VIEWS

Celestial Glory.—Those in the highest degree of this glory shall have thrones, dominions, and endless increase; they shall be gods, creating and governing worlds, and peopling them with their offspring.—Manual, 1901, 1902, pp. 51, 52.

It is on the basis of this thought that Mormonism predicates an eternity of scientific endeavor for man; a future life devoted progressively to the apprehension of and obedience to law, till all the secrets of creation are known, and the untrammelled power to create has been attained.—Scientific Aspects of Mormonism, p. 220.

The object of man having this "power to create," is that he may have "a continuation of the seeds for ever and ever." And in harmony with the above, the faithful are sealed to "inherit thrones, kingdoms, principalities and powers."

IS SUCH IN HARMONY WITH THE WORD?

We read: "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Are those who contemplate being a god, and are sealed to inherit thrones, kingdoms, etc., to receive a greater blessing than the meek, and have an eternal home elsewhere? If so, where is the scripture that so states?

Again we read: "And hast made us unto our God kings and priests and we shall reign on the earth." (Revelation 5: 10.) Is there a greater glory than being a king or priest unto God? If so, then those who obtain that glory may dwell elsewhere than upon this earth; but where is the scripture to that effect?

Again: "And I hold forth and deign to give unto you greater riches, even a land of promise, a land flowing with milk and honey, upon which there shall be no curse when the Lord cometh: and I will give it unto you for the land of your inheritance,—and for the inheritance of your children for ever, while the earth shall stand, and ye shall possess it again in eternity, no more to pass away."—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 38: 18-20. Are some to receive a greater blessing than those of the "church of the first born"? If so, where does God so state by revelation?

Both positions can not be held by those who maintain man will become a god, for if man is going to become a god and create, as some of their statements imply, then this earth will not be his future home. Or if this earth is going to be man's future home, then he will not become a god as is taught. The two positions can not be harmonized. Having proven from the revelations of God that the "meek," the "kings and priests unto God," and the "church of the first born" will have this earth for their eternal home, then those who teach that they are to become gods and will create a world, will have to be considered a different class of people and dealt with accordingly.

The question might be asked: Will there be a different class of people than the "meek" and "kings and priests" who will become gods and thus create worlds? Again I appeal to the revelations of God for the answer: "All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or a lesser kingdom."—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 88: 36, 37.

Elder B. H. Roberts in his writings declares, (see Mormon Doctrine of Deity, page 40) that these kingdoms mean created worlds. If that is true, then I can not see where any class of people will have the opportunity of becoming gods and creating worlds. Can you? for where would they put them, seeing God has said: "There is no space in the which there is no kingdom"? Both positions can not be true. If men are to become gods, and obtain creative perfection, and create as God has created, as the teaching I quote implies, then Joseph Smith stated an untruth when saying: "For there is no space in the which there is no kingdom." But if Joseph Smith stated the truth, then man will not become a god.

Having shown from the revelations that space is full with the creations of God, we come to the question: Are all these created worlds of God inhabited? If not, then possibly those who are sealed to "pass by the angels and the Gods" will be given one of those worlds to people,—or to beget spirit bodies that will inhabit tabernacles of flesh upon them,—and thus become gods to the inhabitants of these worlds. But if it be found that these worlds are inhabited, man is again foiled in his effort to obtain that exalted position, that is, of becoming a god.

Again I use the revelations of God to bear witness: "Therefore, unto this parable will I liken all these kingdoms, and the inhabitants thereof; every kingdom in its hour, and in its time, and in its season; even according to the decree which God hath made."—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 88: 61. On this paragraph Elder B. H. Roberts comments as follows: "Third, the prophet taught that these worlds and systems of worlds, of which I have spoken, were inhabited."—A New Witness for God, p. 439. If it be true that these worlds are inhabited, then the question is for ever settled as to whether man from this earth will be given one of these worlds to people or become the god of it. And those who are married for eternity can not look forward to having one of these worlds, for they are already inhabited.

Having settled this question, the following may be added as to what has been proven: First, that the earth will be the home of the meek, the priests and kings unto God, and all those who obtain celestial glory throughout eternity. Second, that inasmuch as space is occupied with the creations of God, no man, regardless of what he may have been sealed to be, can obtain creative power, whereby he can create and govern worlds and people them with his offspring. Third, that all these worlds of God's creation are inhabited. Fourth, as all those who are worthy of a resurrection are confined to this earth, by the decree of God, than our question, Will man become a god, and create worlds and people them, is answered; and that answer must be NO.

Having proven man will not become a God, what must our conclusion be in regard to those things that are practiced for such a condition? that is, marriage for eternity, the sealing of children to parents, the sealing of man to inherit thrones, kingdoms, etc. Are not all these things contingent upon man becoming a god and creating a world? Is not the purpose of marriage for eternity to beget spirit bodies, that will inhabit fleshly bodies, that are to dwell upon the worlds man creates? Marriage for eternity can not be for those who dwell upon this earth, and I do not know that it was ever so taught, for the Lord has said that marriage was instituted that the earth "might be filled with the measure of man" (Utah Doctrine and Covenants 49: 15-17), and when that is done it will be "crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father."

By proving from the Scriptures that this earth will be our future home, we are forced to accept the statement of Jesus who said: "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage."—Luke 20: 35. B. L. MCKIM.

WHO IS FOR ME?

There are some church members who seem greatly embarrassed when politely asked by a stranger whether they have fellowship in the church or not, and they hesitate somewhat about acknowledging such affiliation.

To those who may feel any wavering or uncertainty about the matter of their religion I would say as follows: Is there anything about your religion to be ashamed of? Do you believe what you have publicly professed? Do you intend to the best of your ability to live up to the principles of the cause which you have espoused?

True religion is both progressive and aggressive. It defines clearly and distinctly right and wrong as expressed by the greatest of all books, the Bible. It awakens the conscience and directs to better and higher things than you have hitherto known.

The best statutes which have been formulated to govern the great commonwealths of the highest civilization of modern times are based upon the principles of religion, so plainly set forth in the Bible; and the lawmakers themselves declare that the success of any nation, primarily, at least, depends upon the moral or religious tendency of the individual citizen.

It is true that you are but one atom in this wonderful scheme of civil and religious advancement; but your position is not less important than the most microscopic part of any complicated piece of machinery. If the smallest part fails, then the entire machine might cease to perform its function.

If you are loyal to your government and true to your religion you are holding a place of honor and trust to be proud of, and should exhibit no humiliation because of such alignment with the powers for right.

The civil government under which you live expects improvements through and by those individuals who will make conscientious, daily effort to improve themselves and their surroundings.

The church expects that you, as a member, will advance and grow in the knowledge of the Lord until the highest degree of perfection possible shall have been attained.

No government is greater than its individual citizenship. No church rises to a higher plane than that of the members composing the same.

All this being true, it is the duty of each and every member with proper discretion, to be aggressive, and to declare himself before all men frankly and positively as to the position he maintains and the work he intends to support.

PROGRESS AT SING SING

[Those interested in prison reform will read with profit this recital of the success of Warden Osborne at Sing Sing prison, Ossining, New York, notorious for the desperate character of its prisoners.—EDITORS.]

While Thomas Mott Osborne, warden of Sing Sing, who introduced self-government among the inmates last December on taking charge of the institution, does not claim that his experiment has yet ceased to be an experiment, he is more encouraged than ever at the end of nearly five months under the new system to believe that it will solve the problem of prison discipline. The fact that there is some friction among the members of the Mutual Welfare League, the prisoners' organization, Mr. Osborne regards as a healthy sign, since it means that the men are beginning to rouse themselves from prison lethargy and to think and act of their own initiative.

Naturally, not all of the inmates of Sing Sing are pleased with existing conditions, because those who had been given special privileges under the old regime no longer enjoy them.

Fighting among the more turbulent of the prisoners is the offense most often committed in Sing Sing; and, while the prisoners' court always deals severely with this breach of the rules, one of the results of placing disciplinary powers in the hands of the self-elected officers of the league is that they have more than once assumed greater authority than it was intended they should exert, and have themselves inflicted physical punishment upon these offenders on the spot. It was difficult at first to make the men understand that they were unjustified in thrashing a man who had sought a quarrel with another and attempted to thrash him, and the judges were inclined to wink at such action. Warden Osborne, therefore, believes that a distinct improvement in the morale of the league was marked by the action of the prisoners' court early in April, when a very popular deputy sergeant-at-arms was removed from office and sentenced to fifteen days' loss of privileges, as punishment for having personally chastized an exceedingly unpopular and quarrelsome prisoner he had discovered in the act of assaulting another.

PRACTICAL RESULTS

That general conditions at Sing Sing have improved under Mr. Osborne's administration is shown by trustworthy reports that have reached The Outlook.

The use of drugs among the prisoners has practically ceased, and, while a few bottles of whisky were smuggled into the prison in April, the warden was able to trace that phenomenon to a deliberate attempt on the part of outside enemies of the new system to create trouble. There are three hundred members of a knitting class at Sing Sing, who have already sent more than seven hundred and fifty pieces of their work—sweaters, caps, scarfs, etc.—to the suffering women and children among the Poles. (Incidentally they knitted a complete worsted suit—cap, leggins, and coat—for the recently arrived son of Governor Whitman, which was accepted with a cordial letter of thanks that is now framed upon a wall of the knitting-class room.) Fifty prisoners are studying shorthand and thirty industrial drawing; there are ten members of a mandolin club; and a class of twenty is awaiting the installation of the instruments presented by the Western Union Company to take up the study of telegraphy. A class in clay modeling is in prospect, and others in languages—French, Italian, Spanish, and German, in addition to those in English. The men not otherwise engaged in the evening are being taught chorus singing. Baseball, tennis, boxing, and other amusements are going on in the prison yard during recreation hours daily.

Mr. Osborne is encouraging the visits of educational societies to Sing Sing, not only for the humanizing effect upon visitors, but because it is calculated to have a like effect upon the prisoners. It so happened that the members of the School of Philanthropy and of the Women's League for Political Education chose the same afternoon for their visits, on which occasion two hundred and twenty-five women, the largest number within the walls in the history of Sing Sing, were shown through the institution—not by guards, but by the polite and attentive escorts in convict garb. And it is only three years ago that the then warden of the prison felt obliged to put a loaded pistol in his pocket when he went into the yard.

Perhaps the most daring of all Mr. Osborne's experiments tending to prove the existence of a sense of honor among his brethren of the prisons is the one he told his audience in Cooper Union about at the meeting under the auspices of the New York Board of Education on the evening of April 17. On the occasion when the delegates of the Mutual Welfare League held their last election in the prison court room, the count was not finished until after one o'clock in the morning. The warden then invited the fifty-four delegates to his house; sent for his cook and butler, both of them also convicts, and served a light supper. The warden's house, which has no bars or windows or doors, is outside the prison walls; there was no guard within a hundred feet of it; the New York Central Railroad tracks are just under the windows on one side, and the public highway on the other. After their repast the fifty-six prisoners, whose sentences ranged from a few years to life, returned quietly to their cells.—The Outlook, May 12, 1915.

THE STRENGTH OF WEAKNESS

The Paris Temps finds that the woman's peace conference at The Hague imparts a "comic note to these war-darkened days." Presumably it goes on the theory that the disproportion between will and power—the apparent certainty that the appeal will be wholly ineffective—provides the humorous flavor.

On this theory our trans-Atlantic contemporary must have found the last nine months full of intense amusement. The ineffectiveness of the Belgian protest against the overwhelming might of Germany must have charmed it with its rich and comic flavor. The thought of a powerless peasant woman in east Prussia appealing in vain to the invaders to spare her pitiful possessions must have awakened regret that Moliere died so soon.

However, it will strike the average man that such disproportion makes the thing more tragic still. The smallness of this band of women and the patent limitation of their powers serve to emphasize the catastrophe from which the world is suffering to-day. And in the light of that realization there is small room for mirth. What if the power to find a remedy lags far behind the wish? Even to protest is praiseworthy.

But, after all, who can say what will ultimately come from this meeting? Who can look within the seeds of time and read the secrets hidden there? There is a strength in weakness which the practical too often overlook. Not in the furrows made by the chariots of the great are sowed the seeds of the great changes in the thought and history of men. Not from strength but from apparent weakness comes the final victory.

The Herald has no desire to exaggerate the possibilities of this meeting. It is only sure of one thing—that it is somehow in harmony with the future. It is expressing to the best of its ability what will—what must—some day be the verdict of mankind.—Chicago Herald.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Living Up to Opportunity

We are happy to present to our readers this month, the helpful analysis made by Sister Leeka of one of our church anthems. As we study this with the purpose in mind to express the exalted thought of the text presented, let us remember the preliminary articles Sister Leeka has given us concerning this art. It will be well to reread them to refresh our memories, and to get at the inner meaning of the writer. They may be found in the Staff issues for October 14, November 18, and December 11, all of last year.

We should also like to call particular attention to Sister Farr's thoughtful article in this number. The crying need of the education of the parents of to-day upon the subject of the trashy music so sadly prevalent is evidenced on every hand. It is astonishing how many homes are desecrated (yes, desecrated is the word) by the presence of unworthy words set to unworthy music. If our Latter Day Saint fathers and mothers knew where most of it originates, and the uses to which it is put, they would hesitate long before allowing its contamination to enter into their homes, which should stand irrevocably for all the ennobling and uplifting influences which can come into a child's life. Sister Kelley, in a splendid address given at one of our conference institute meetings, also touched upon this theme, a reproduction of which address, happily, we will be able to present in an early issue of the Staff.

Brother Hoxie assures us that the selections for the anthems for next General Conference will be made shortly, and available at an early date. No doubt he will communicate with many of the choirs before another issue of the Staff, and we would strongly urge everyone to act promptly, and not only have the benefit of the individual and local stimulus given thereby, but, by thus lining yourselves up with the general choir movement, feel that you are not on the outside when conference time approaches. It is good to know and feel that one is living up to every advantageous opportunity, and to be affiliated with this one is indeed an advantage. So do not sleep upon your rights and privileges this year. Success to each and every musical organization in our midst!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Musical Signs of Progress

Brother David E. Dowker, one of our active young singing missionaries, who attended as many sessions of our musical institute meetings last April as possible, reports the organization of a choir among the singers of the Chicago Central Branch. He was made director, with Brother James Lang as assistant, and Sister Mae Horton as organist. He also says that the choir at the First Chicago Branch is making good headway, under the leadership of Brother O. O. Randall.

Sister Sarah Boydston reports the recent organization of an orchestra at Oakland, California, and asks if there are orchestral arrangements of pieces in the "Praises" and "Hymnal" obtainable for the use of these beginning organizations. This is a matter for our capable orchestra leaders like Brother Anthony, at Lamoni, Brother Hoxie, at Philadelphia, or Brother Eaton, at Independence to take into consideration. As they make arrangements of these songs to meet the requirements of their various instruments, why not arrange a plan by which such arrangements may be duplicated for the benefit of all?

Brother Hoxie has been one busy music man, according to the bits of news which come our way. On Sunday, May 28, the choir of the Philadelphia Branch, assisted by Joseph Heindl, 'cellist and Cornelius Estill, pianist, gave a program of unusual beauty and excellence. An outline is given on the printed programs, of the work planned for the coming season, and an invitation given to any who desire to join in the study proposed. Brother Hoxie has also conducted some special rehearsals at Scranton, and some live wire institute meetings. If all choristers, local and district, were as live to the musical possibilities and as energetic and enthusiastic in carrying them out as our general chorister, we would progress marvelously, for he seems ever alert, and optimistic, and is not afraid to attempt the big, worth-while things.

The Art of Expression

("What are these which are arrayed in white robes?"—Revelation 7: 13-17.—One of the anthems in 1914 series.)

Choir hymns should be practiced with especial reference to expression. The object is either to make an impression upon the congregation—to create a mood (a mood is a temporary state of the mind in regard to passion or feeling), or to voice for the people, prayer, aspiration, praise, etc.

Feeling demands a specific picture. Let us create the scenes of this anthem for our imagination. But first, to prepare the imagination for the scenes, let us dwell upon the subject matter from which it is taken.

"The Revelation, or Apocalypse (a Greek word meaning uncovering) consists largely of prophecy couched in the language of symbolism. It is a symbolic representation of great principles rather than a collection of definite predictions. It gives comfort and edification to Christ's people. The book of Revelation is the record of the discovery of the kingdom of God in the life of man, and when man has discovered all those mysteries in his own life, he will more fully see the significance of everything contained in that book."

The writer of the book says that he was in the Spirit when the revelations came to him. We can interpret the spirit of the things of life only by the Spirit, which is the spirit of discernment. That is why it is so hard to interpret this sealed book.

The very soul or vocal interpretation is the ability to define accurately and carefully each emotion. If this be not done, there can be no impressive or even truthful expression.

An angel ascends from the east having the seal of God. (A seal is that which confirms, ratifies or makes stable.) Thus he comes to ratify the work done by the servants of God on earth.

Besides the tribes numbered, there were multitudes unnumbered, of all nations, before the throne, clothed in white robes worshiping God. This is suggested by the first phase in the anthem, "Hallelujah, hallelujah, hallelujah!" (An exclamation used chiefly in songs of praise or thanksgiving to God, and as an expression of gratitude or adoration.) This is objective, as it describes the outward scene. As the elders looked upon them, one said to John: "What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?" and John said unto him, "Sir, thou knowest (you inform me)" and he said, "These are they which came out of great tribulation."

This phrase is subjective, as it suggests the inner conflict of personalities. We at once begin to reflect upon the individual life. The life of tribulation—"the life of fitful fever," as Shakespeare puts it—the life that is made up of the experiences which test our strength, our patience and our faith!

This scene of the mass of human souls as they have struggled with life, brings us into a philosophizing mood, and we struggle to solve the significance and value of personality, its promises for the future, and its place in evolution. We quite agree with the philosopher who claims that we were born for the conflict, "the shifting struggle of the sunbeam in the gloom, and must accept it all as a vital part of the whole." We behold the reward for him who has kept before him the highest end of life—the eternal values.

"The intelligence of a man is measured not only by the distance of his ends, but also by the size of the social unit whose good he serves." The brotherhood of man has been realized through the conscious realization that God and man are one.

The beautiful figure of the robes having been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb, suggests the assimilation of Christ's personality into their own. "They shall hunger and thirst no more," (hunger, to have an eager desire, to long; thirst, (figurative) to yearn after anything,) "the thirst I had after knowledge," Milton).

"Neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat." No need for the physical heat or light. All the eager desires, the longing and yearning to know the mysteries of the kingdom are now unfolded by the unhindered radiation of divine love. The influence of the Spirit of the Lamb on the throne is the sun that radiates warmth and vitality. The living fountain of water refreshes and fertilizes the soul life of that sphere. Mortal life has been swallowed up in immortality.

Words express the conception of the mind, but the tones of the voice reveal the feeling, which is something that rises in the heart and seems a vital part of ourselves. Tone color can not be illustrated in print.

The Effect of Music Upon Character

That music has a definite effect upon character, no one who has thought upon the subject will deny.

How many lovers of music (whether they understand the art or not) can hear music of pronounced rhythm without an impulse to keep time with hands, feet, head, or whole body?

Take martial music: It suggests marching; and how it inspires one to forget self and long to accomplish great deeds. One could brave death with a smile, under the influence of a fine military band! The Russians especially understand this, with their thousands of musicians to lead their armies.

How does pipe-organ music affect the worshipers? Well, sometimes I have thought it filled them with a desire to hear their own voices above the organ, but possibly these were "visitors" instead of "worshipers." To my mind, it is a power that frees my soul and lifts me to a higher plane, where communion with God is the natural consequence. Sacrifice seems easy, then, and trials are nothing. One's mind is attuned to the purpose of the place. And if such exaltation of spirit could remain with one during the every-day struggles of life, victory would more often be written on the day's record.

Let us listen to a light, airy, major melody. You feel happy; you do not know just why. You want to laugh and make others laugh and be happy, too. You are care free; life is not so serious after all. Your clouds present their silver linings, and the world seems a good place in which to live.

Now listen to beautiful minor harmonies. A feeling of sadness (although it may be an exquisite sadness) steals over you. You suffer with those who sorrow. You sympathize with the weak and oppressed. Your heart expands to take in your fellow creatures. Anger seems to melt away before love's warmth, and a peaceful, brooding spirit hovers over you. Perhaps this effect explains the use of so much minor music in church voluntaries.

Music is roughly divided into two classes: classical and popular. And these two kinds of music seem to relate and appeal to two kinds of people, those with depth of character and those who are shallow. I do not mean by this that all who like popular music are shallow. A popular piece of music is often charming in its first rendition. Indeed, a good piece will often stand a number of repetitions. But after a few hearings there is no more to be gotten out of it; it palls, and we want something new. What I do mean is that the kind of music one chooses for one's soul-friend indicates the depth of that soul.

Classical music seems to appeal to the spiritual man, while popular music appeals to the physical man. Man is not all spiritual or all physical, but a combination of the two; so a diversified program seems to meet the needs of the majority. Popular music appeals to the senses rather than to the intellect, while the depth of the classics seems to reach the soul. Of course this is a rough division, for some popular pieces approach the classic in their beauty and depth.

The very young have not the depth gained by years and experience, so unless trained to the best from childhood, or drawn to the better by natural talent, their inclination is to the lighter class. Some people go to the extreme of insisting on nothing but the classics, but this is not wise, either, for association with only one class of music or people is conducive of narrowness. To be broad, one must know the different classes and be able to distinguish between the good and that not so good. But young people are not always competent judges. They must be taught the best in music as well as in morals. There is a good grade of popular music, but there is also a bad.

And now to a subject which has been agitated to some extent—ragtime. This syncopated form of music, with its uneasy movement, has a direct downward influence, which seems to be either overlooked or unrecognized. A "don't-care," "free-and-easy" something seems to take the place of conscience and supersede training; and oftentimes acts are committed under this unhealthy stimulant that make the soul writhe in agony when the mind becomes calm and normal. No, I am not exaggerating! The act may be only silly or indiscreet, but things are done and said under this stimulant that would not be thought of in saner moments. Think this over and see if it isn't true. This doesn't apply to all syncopated music, but only to that exaggeration called ragtime.

Another thing I deplore is a class of popular songs much in vogue nowadays. It may be a wave that will pass over, but the encouragement it receives keeps it going. The demands fosters producers. That to which I refer is such songs as, "If you talk in your sleep, don't mention my name," "She's probably doing the same," and others of like elevating (?) sentiments; songs that are not only vulgar but downright immoral, and that one would expect to be confined to loose or immoral districts. And yet the pianos in many homes, where every care is supposed to be taken to shield their inmates, are loaded with trash that ought not to be tolerated in any society, let alone good society.

It's high time a censorship of music was enforced in the home! Most parents would be troubled and take active measures to stop an intimacy between their children and dissolute associates, but these same people allow the songs of the morally depraved to be the constant companions of their young folks. These songs, with their Satanic appeal, lead to thoughts, and thoughts to deeds; and fallen children, often, can justly accuse parents who have given an active or passive encouragement to such associates. The words of many of these songs (as one writer has already said) if spoken in a decent home, would banish the speaker from that home. Then how does the singing of them make them any more tolerable? Is our moral sense, in these degenerate days, growing so dull that we can not see these dangers? For the sake of the young, and for the sake of society, let us wake up, throw off this cloak of indifference, and stand for what is right and pure.

The evil power is subtle, for these words are often clothed in beautiful music. But more often the music is suggestive and sensual, appealing to the baser passions. If this evil were discountenanced in homes, and young folks taught to be ashamed of such sentiments, rather than to think them cute, the demand for this sort of stuff would diminish, and the young would be more ready and fit to carry on the good works of their parents. Too many deplore the downward tendency of the age, and yet, either actively or passively, encourage it.

The general movement in the church at the present time in regard to music is bound to help us out of this trouble, for it is encouraging and teaching the best, and inciting all to greater endeavor. How beautiful and ennobling are the hymns and anthems being practiced and sung in and by our various large and small branches and choirs! and who can estimate the good accomplished by mere association with those interested in a beautiful art and working for so good a cause.

But, my dear young folks, to be Saints of God you do not have to sing hymns and anthems all the time. There are many, many beautiful popular songs with healthy, helpful sentiments, that appeal to the joyousness of youth. Let us be thankful for Carrie Jacobs Bond, Jessie May Jewett, and others of this class of composers. May their success increase.

Just a word about classical music. Popular music lives in the present; classical music in the past, present and future. Classical music paints beautiful pictures to the mind, brings beautiful thoughts and dreams, and improves with use. The more you hear it and the better you understand it, the more wonderful it becomes, until your association with such a deep and ennobling influence must make its mark upon your soul and character. Beside it, other music sounds thin.

As it is with human associates, we are affected by the company we keep in music, and while we may occasionally need something light to rest our minds, our friend should be the music which lifts us to the higher plane and inspires us to greater deeds.

Independence Notes

On June 2, an interesting program was given at the Stone Church by the choir under the direction of Mrs. George H. Hulmes, and the orchestra under the direction of Mr. C. B. Eaton. Besides the numbers given by these two organizations, which were deservedly well received, there were solo numbers for voice and violin, a vocal duet, and a flute duet. The collection of near forty dollars was for the benefit of the branch treasury. Miss Ethel Etzenhouser, and Mr. W. S. Tipton assisted the members of choir and orchestra on the program.

The Sunday evening of May 16 was marked by a variation from the regular alternating concerts by the choir or orchestra, in that the program was furnished by a string quintet, composed of Brethren Loar, Friend, Green and Smith, and Mr. Schutte of Kansas City. This organization has been working together for a year or more, and the progress they are making is very gratifying to lovers of chamber music. Plans are being laid for a continued and more concentrated effort this coming year, and it is hoped that nothing will occur to prevent these plans from materializing. The field is wide, and the class of music open to an organization of this kind is becoming more and more appreciated as the public becomes more closely acquainted with it.

The Euterpean Chorus of young people disorganized and reorganized under the auspices of the Religio. They are doing excellent work, and made a decided "hit" at their first appearance before the Independence congregation on the evening of May 23. Sister Farr is still conducting, and the enthusiasm and ability she brings to the work is a guarantee of its continued and increasing success. The "engagements" for this young chorus are already booked far ahead, and we hear whispers of a concert to be given by them in the not very distant future.

Announcements

The anthems for the 1915-16 selection for large choirs only have been selected. Our next step is the selection of an oratorio for large choirs, and a series of anthems together with a cantata for smaller choirs. The cantata will undoubtedly be selected with an end in view of using it at Christmas time. The next issue of the Staff will contain the announcement of these selections, and where same may be procured.

We urge all district choristers to establish institute work at reunions. Interesting papers on music, and speeches pertaining to the musical welfare of the church should be included in these programs. Wherever it is possible the rudiments of music should be taught, and carefully studied. The great need of fundamental work is only too apparent throughout the field. It is also urgently asked that at reunions especially all the singers of the district be rallied and combined choir work started. The glorious work that has been established along this line in the New York and Philadelphia District was an inspiration gleaned from the singing of a few humble hymns at a Sunday school convention in 1913, which showed the possibilities of work of this character.

Day Among Omaha Indians

While visiting my parents at Decatur, Nebraska, the 16th inst., there came a call for preaching at two points on the reservation, one seven miles north, and the other about fifteen miles, at or near Macy, a little inland town. The interest began among these people by some of them being in Oklahoma and hearing of the work being done among the Cheyennes and Arapahos, the Otoes, Cherokees, and others. The spirit of the latter-day work seems to be taking hold on them, calling them to the enjoyment of the riches of the gospel work as forecast in the many prophecies of the Book of Mormon concerning them.

My brother, Vern Case, took us in the car to the first gathering, where a goodly number of representative men and women of the Omaha tribe were holding one of their meetings. We were greeted, and invited into the house, where they were in readiness for us to occupy. They had heard of our work and were very anxious to hear some of the preaching. Brother Marteni offered the prayer, and the sermon lasted an hour. The interest and attention were excellent, the Spirit carrying the words home to them, as they have many traditions among them of the very things told in the Book of Mormon concerning their history. It really is an inspiration to talk to them concerning these things. We usually get a good response from them. At the close the interpreter came to me and shook hands saying his friends had greatly appreciated the sermon.

Our next meeting was at Macy at Sister Hamilton's. Here we were invited to eat a good dinner, after which we preached for another hour, following the prayer by Brother Ether Lewis, and a song in which all joined. These people are educated, and some of them are white; no one would ever think of their being Indians.

A Mrs. Springer and two young ladies who were there asked for baptism at the conference to be held at Decatur, June 5 and 6.

I preached at the Saints' church in Decatur at 11 a. m., twice to the Indians in the afternoon, and again at the church at night. The wind was furious and chilly, yet we felt we had done much good.

The Winnebagos are near this reservation, and many of them interested in the work. I am really sorry Brother Richard Mann could not be returned to work among them, as they all love him, and are very anxious to have him come and stay among them as their special minister.

This awakening among this people is a thing we have all longed to see and have prayed for. I have enjoyed the work so much the past four years that I now wish I could spend all my time among the tribes for a few years. The leading men of the tribes are now coming to the front, having read the Book of Mormon and some of our church books and papers. The leading lecturers among them, some of whom are Chautauqua speakers, are basing their knowledge of their history on the story of the Book of Mormon. The missionary force over the United States, wherever the Red Man is found, gives us a good opportunity to work among all the tribes.

We need not become discouraged as some of our men have because we can not get the Indians to come up to our level, quitting all their old customs at once.

Hopefully, your coworker,
HUBERT CASE.

ANDES, MONTANA, May 24, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is with interest that we read the letters in the HERALD from week to week, especially when we read of those whom we have known, and of places where we have been associated. To us though, all of the HERALD is of interest, and eagerly read.

We are happy in the work of the Lord, and I believe it is especially encouraging in this new district, Eastern Montana, where the gospel is just being planted, and where we can see the work start in so many new places. The peace of this new country is appreciated by us also, it seems we are far from the many things that cause heartaches and sorrow. But of course there are some things that cause us to be sad even here.

A temperance movement is being started in our country, and the Saints here are giving it their undivided support, I believe. Brother J. C. Page had the privilege of addressing a large crowd at Sydney, in the interest of temperance. He had gone to the meeting to hear another, but the speaker failed to appear, and Brother Page volunteered when they asked for volunteers. He said his talk was received with loud applause, and afterward he shook hands and talked with a great part of the people. We hope an opening can be made in Sydney, and that the gospel seed may be planted there.

We feel that the work is going onward in the Culbertson Branch, and with the different auxiliaries it is no trouble to keep busy. Quite frequently of late our friends and neighbors have met with us in our regular services, and we are trusting the honest in heart may see the light of the gospel, for the gospel and the hope that goes with it are among the grandest things on earth to-day to us.

Brother J. A. Bronson does what he can when he is at home, in the interest of the work. Brother Page is an able defender of the work we think, and are glad conference saw fit to appoint him to this district.

Ever hoping for the onward progress of this great work,
I am,

A sister in the faith,

MRS. VIVIA FREEMAN.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, May 27, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have always enjoyed reading the letters in the HERALD. I have many friends in the fields where I have labored. I think of these daily. I have been laboring in this city for ten months and have had good success, with the aid of others. I feel that the way has been paved for a much greater work yet to be done.

Brother Rushton was through here before General Conference, and organized a branch. We also have a good Sunday school. Brother Martin Bolt, our branch president, is the only officer living here. We feel the truth of the Master's statement, The harvest is great, but the laborers few.

If there are any among the Saints who have saved the Quarterlies of the senior grade and will send them to me I will be glad to get them, especially those from January, 1913 to January, 1915. I will put them to good use.

Of 12 children, 10 preceded him. Wife and one of two remaining daughters followed him, each succeeding the other by a few days, leaving Mrs. Lena Craton, only daughter, and 7 grandchildren. Brother Madison left Denmark for America in 1882, wife and family following. They resided near Council Bluffs, Iowa, for 26 years. Removed to Holden, Missouri, for one year, thence to Independence, in 1910. Baptized August 22, 1881, Alborg, Denmark, by Peter Brix. A faithful member of the church, a loving husband and kind father, a good citizen, he will be greatly missed.

She lived but a few days longer than her husband being ill at the time of his departure. She wished that she might attend his funeral, which was postponed for that reason. It was not to be so, however, and she grew weaker and at last passed over to join him in his happy home.

Toft, daughter of Brother and Sister Jens Madison, wife of Marion Toft, was born November 3, 1881, Alborg, Denmark; died April 28, 1915, Independence, Missouri, with the same disease which took her father and mother, every assistance to overcome the malady being of no avail. She leaves sorrowing husband and sister. Baptized in 1893, Hazel Dell, Iowa, by J. J. Chrestensen. Sister Toft came to assist her father and mother in their last illness and was taken with the same malady. Married Marion Toft in the spring of 1906. Services held simultaneously with those of her father and mother of Independence, in charge of G. E. Harrington, E. L. Kelley and Peter Anderson being the main speakers.

HICKLIN.—George Alma Hicklin was born November 17, 1885, Bevier, Missouri; died Fort Madison, Iowa, April 26, 1915, after an illness of eighteen days. Remains were brought to parental home Bevier, and services held in Saints' chapel, April 28, conducted by W. B. Richards and F. T. ### THE CHICAGO MEETINGS

In our last issue we made brief mention of the services conducted in Chicago, Sunday, June 13. It may be added to that report that a splendid spirit was present at all the services, and our visit among the Chicago Saints will long be remembered by us.

The forenoon preaching service was on the West side. The church was filled to its capacity. The ordination of Brother James Kier to the office of bishop took place at this meeting, and was rendered most solemn and impressive by the presence of the Holy Spirit. It is our impression that the Saints need not hesitate to support Brother Kier in his new office, as we feel that he is a man worthy of their confidence,—devoted, intelligent, and consecrated. May success crown his efforts. May the Lord give him a loving heart, open to the appeals of the poor; yet a wise mind to discriminate, that his ministrations may ever result in good.

Baptism was administered at the chapel on the South side in the afternoon at a quarter of three. Those baptized, including the three baptized the day previous, numbered eight. They were confirmed at the prayer service which convened at three o'clock, with Brethren F. G. Pitt, James Kier, and the writer in charge.

An unusual degree of the Spirit was present at this meeting from the very start. The spirit of prophecy was exercised, and words of encouragement were given to the congregation and to individuals. Two were called to the Aaronic priesthood.

At five o'clock the quorum of priests of the district met at the home of David E. Dowker, and we were present with them during the reorganization of the quorum, which was carried out with advice and assistance of Brethren David E. Dowker and Jasper O. Dutton.

At the evening meeting, in charge of Brother Henry Kier, the writer was greeted by a very large audience, and discoursed on the subject, "The perfect law of liberty." After this service with reluctance we extended the parting hand to the Chicago Saints and hastened away.

We were fortunate in getting out of the city Sunday evening at eleven o'clock, whereas the great street car strike materialized at midnight, closing up both surface and elevated lines. It had been threatened for days, but was put off from one day to another until Sunday passed, which seemed very fortunate, almost providential, for our meetings.

In our last we reported the baptism of Alice Frederica Smith, a granddaughter of Joseph the Martyr. This occurred on Saturday. At the same time we baptized her stepfather, William John Creen, and a young brother by the name of George Kerr.

Sister Alice Smith is the only lineal descendant of Joseph Smith that has ever united with the Utah church, she having been a member of that church some months. Her removal after a chance to hear both sides makes more impressive the fact that no descendant of Joseph Smith has ever sanctioned the pernicious teachings of Brigham Young, and only one has ever graced that church with membership, and that for a very short time only.

Her joy at finding the truth, and her happiness and buoyancy in the new covenant are in marked contrast to her depression and feeling of spiritual darkness while in the other organization. Having tasted the bitter, she now enjoys the sweet.

Departing from this great, struggling city of Chicago, we were impressed, almost depressed, by the remembrance that we were leaving only one conference appointee in that great cosmopolitan field with its teeming thousands, our capable and devoted Brother David E. Dowker. Yet this one city has more inhabitants than some States, more we were told than all the rest of the State of Illinois. Though the one missionary is sustained by an able body of local laborers, still the need of a large force of missionaries is apparent. Once more we felt the need of more laborers in the vineyard, and more money with which to support them adequately and meet the needs of the work in such a place.

E. A. S.

Take the selfishness out of the world and there would be more happiness than we should know what to do with.—H. W. Shaw.

DEPENDABLE MEN

We have received a letter from a young brother in the mission field that breathes the true spirit of service. This brother has been engaged for some time in work of a pastoral nature. One paragraph of his letter we reproduce:

One more item before I close, and it is not the least important to me. It is about a dream I had about you several weeks or more before conference. I thought not so much of it then as I have since. I was with you in a room and you were praying. I thought I never heard a man pray so earnestly and with such self-effacement as you did then. It seemed as though your very life was in every word you uttered. It affected me greatly and the power of your prayer forced me to my knees. You were pleading for pure, true, benevolent men for such missions as mine, consecrated, dependable men, and I too was weighed with the need, for I saw that they were scarce. This dream put new determination in me. I shall never forget how alone you seemed to be, and how deeply you seemed to sense the need for men to lead modern Israel. I want you to feel that I can be depended on. I am not altogether sure of myself, outside of the great hunger of my life,—to be a pure, true representative of my Master, forgetting myself in a life of service to my brother. Some way I feel a sense of security in having this ideal so paramount in my life, and it is fixing itself more firmly there, so maybe I'll realize a part of it anyway.

The author of this letter is a man of the type mentioned in the paragraph quoted,—pure, true, dependable. He has touched upon the most pressing need of the times.

At a great Presbyterian convention in Denver some years ago, the slogan of the conference was, "we can get plenty of money, give us men!"

That is the need of the Nation. It is also the need of the church. While we can not join in the declaration that we have plenty of money, we can join in the wish for men.

The Bishop of Exeter wrote:

Give us men!
 Men—from every rank,
 Fresh and free and frank;
 Men of thought and reading,
 Men of light and leading,
 Men of loyal breeding,
 The nation's welfare speeding;
 Men of faith and not of fiction,
 Men of lofty aim in action;
 Give us men! I say again—again—
 Give us men!
 Strong and stalwart ones;
 Men whom hope inspires,
 Men whom purest honor fires,
 Men who trample self beneath them,
 Men who make their country wreath them
 As her noble sons,
 Worthy of their sires;
 Men who never shame their mothers,
 Men who never fail their brothers,
 True, however false are others:
 Give us men—I say again,
 Give us men!
 Give us men!
 Men, who, when the tempest gathers,

Grasp the standard of their fathers

In the thickest fight:

Men who strike for home and altar

(Let the coward cringe and falter),

God defend the right!

True as truth though lorn and lonely,

Tender, as the brave are only;

Men who tread where saints have trod,

Men for country—home—and God:

Give us men! I say again—again—

Give us men!

To carry on the work of God we need men who have arrived at the true stature of manhood in Christ Jesus; women who have developed into pure and lovely womanhood in Christ Jesus. We need pastors for the people. We need teachers in the Sunday school. We need laborers in every department of church work,—men and women who are consecrated, benevolent, pure, dependable.

Let us pray the Lord of the vineyard that he will send more such laborers into the field, for surely the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

E. A. S.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

TREATY ANNULMENTS.—The United States has instructed its diplomats abroad to ask for an annulment of such paragraphs of commercial treaties as conflict with the new seaman's law.

REFUSED REGISTRY.—Eight or more foreign steamships have been refused registry by the United States Government after they were purchased by a newly organized company reputed to be composed of parties interested in German shipping circles.

PEONAGE IN TEXAS.—A case of peonage was exposed in the Federal Court at Sherman, Texas, on June 8, the trial showing that about two hundred negroes worked on a plantation in Houston County who are continually in debt for supplies.

BLACK HAND.—Chicago has appealed to the Federal Government to help stamp out its black-handers, who have terrorized "Little Italy" in defiance of local authority. United States officials are reported as having started a campaign that is expected to check these outrages.

CHICAGO CAR STRIKE.—A general strike on surface and elevated street railway lines was declared at Chicago at midnight of the 12th, an increase in wages and changes in working conditions being the matters in dispute. This strike was called off on the morning of the 16th, under an agreement to arbitrate.

HOSPITALS IN CHINA.—The Rockefeller Foundation announces the purchase of Union Medical College at Peking, in furtherance of its plans to spread over China a chain of hospitals under American direction with a view to improving medical and hospital conditions in the republic.

DESTRUCTIVE STORMS.—Eleven persons were killed and about forty injured in a storm on the night of the 12th, sweeping over Wisconsin. A storm centering in Kansas and Missouri the night of the 17th resulted in the death of fifteen and the injury of a score. Considerable property was destroyed in each of these States.

THAW TO JURY.—The court of Appeals, at Albany, New York, on the 18th, upheld Justice Hendricks' ruling, granting Harry K. Thaw a jury to pass upon his sanity. The court holds that while Thaw has no mandatory right to a jury trial, it was in the discretion of the judge to decide whether such request should be granted.

BELGIAN RELIEF.—Figures made public by the Belgian Relief Committee show that sixty-six ships have sailed from the United States ports, with four hundred and fourteen thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six tons of food and clothing for hungry and destitute Belgians, the total value of cargoes being over sixty-six million dollars.

REGISTER CASE.—The United States Supreme Court on the 14th declined to review the reversal by the Sixth United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the conviction of officers of the National Cash Register Company, of alleged violations of the Sherman antitrust law. The case against the Cash Register Company is considered a strong one, and it is thought that the denial will probably discourage further litigation.

SUNDAY AIDE RESIGNS.—Bentley Ackley, one of William Sunday's first aides, has resigned from the service of the evangelist, giving as a reason that other members of the organization less deserving than himself received vast profits, in one case aggregating twenty thousand dollars, from the writing and publication of hymns, and the sale of hymn books, and the disposition of other privileges connected with the revivals.

TO ENFORCE PEACE.—On the 17th, with Ex-President Taft elected president, a League to Enforce Peace, American Branch, was organized at Philadelphia. The object of this movement is to promote the creation of a league of nations with a view to preventing wars, lessening the possibilities of conflicts by "a threat to use force," and if need be, by the use of force, economic and military, against nations of the league going to war before submitting questions at issue to tribunals to be provided for. An effort will be made to have the United States Senate adopt measures in line with the object of this league.

BRITAIN CONTROLS LIQUOR.—A British order in council is announced creating and defining the powers of a "control of liquor traffic board," to govern the sale and supply of intoxicants within prescribed areas. The board is given power to regulate and prevent entirely the sale of liquors, and even to prevent the practice of treating; it may take over saloons in areas where munitions of war are manufactured, or without license may dispense liquor under its supervision in factories engaged in government work. This board is created largely in the interests of temperance, to the end that munitions of war may be supplied the allied forces.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Carranza has issued a proclamation from Vera Cruz calling on other factions to affiliate with his government, claiming to control the greater part of the population and territory of Mexico. Villa has proposed to the various leaders that they participate in a conference "to unite and reorganize the factions." In a note to President Wilson in reply to the United States note to Mexican leaders, Villa outlines the purposes of the Villa-Zapata faction to bring about a reconciliation with the Carranza element. In a later communication, the Villa party suggests that if President Wilson's recent statement warning the Mexicans to compose their differences should "signify pressure of authority," the Conventionalist government "still laboring under the conscience of its sacrifices, will maintain the dignity of the Mexican people." From reports, Carranza seemed inclined to avoid a parley with the Villa party, and to play for foreign recognition. The Yaquis Indians are giving United States citizens of Yaqui Valley, Sonora, more trouble. They are said to have declared war on Germany, Mexico and the United States. Under instructions from Washington, Admiral Howard is ordering three cruisers to Tobari Bay, the landing of forces for protection of Americans being discretionary with the admiral.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The French have made gains north of Arras, where heavy fighting and enormous losses are reported. The Germans continue to gain in Galicia. Additional Italian advances are reported. The Gallipoli Peninsula campaign has settled down to a siege. Italian airships are said to have inflicted severe damage upon Pola, Austria's chief naval base. Twenty-three allied aeroplanes have attacked Karlsruhe, inflicting damages on an arms factory and other buildings, killing nineteen and wounding fourteen. This raid was followed by one by German Zeppelins on the northeastern British coast, resulting in the death of fifteen and wounding many, setting fires by bombs. An Italian submarine has been sunk by an Austrian submarine. A French torpedo boat was sunk by a collision with a British steamer. Greece and Servia have declined proposals by the allies for the cession of Macedonian territory to Bulgaria. A parliamentary election in Greece has resulted in the defeat of the government ministry and the success of ex-Minister Velizelos, who stands for war on the side of the allies, with two thirds of the legislature behind him. Report from Sofia via Rome is that the allies have agreed to the demands of Rumania, presupposing an entrance of the latter into the war at an opportune time. The British House of Commons on the 15th voted another war credit of $1,250,000,000, making a total of $4,310,000,000 allowed to date for war purposes. Premier Asquith on this occasion remarked that expenses from April 1 to June 12 had been at the rate of $13,300,000 daily and he estimated that during the currency of the new credit it would not be less than $15,000,000 daily.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

MISAPPLYING SCRIPTURE.—The Devil in tempting Jesus misapplied the scripture "Cast thyself down." Forces for evil in all ages have done the same. There comes to our table a handbill written by one who seems ashamed to divulge his identity and who lauds what he calls temperance above prohibition, misapplying the language of Paul, "Let no man judge you in meat or in drink." He who thus wrests the Scriptures evidences the weakness of his position—truth attacking error needs not to misapply truth.

FORCEFUL SPEAKER.—Brother Alvin R. Ellis was recently called upon to defend the interests of the church in replying to an attack by a lecturer at Boyne City, Michigan. His efforts were well received, and are reported as resulting in much good. The press of the city gave prominent notice of the work of Brother Ellis. The Boyne Citizen of May 26 says:

The speaker was forceful in his arguments, and in a convincing way, not with boasting, vindicated the character of the Reorganized Church of which he is a representative.

REVEREND STELZLE IN TROUBLE.—Reverend Charles Stelzle, superintendent of the Presbyterian Department of Church and Labor, and author of The Church and Labor, and other books, seems to have encountered difficulty with his brethren. The executive commission investigated charges that his economic and sociological activities and writings were socialistic and pernicious. According to press reports the Presbyterian assembly in session at Rochester, May 26, sustained his protest that the Executive Commission had no right to try him on his sociological convictions. This action is interpreted to mean that in the opinion of the assembly "a Presbyterian minister may not be tried for his economic beliefs."

BURGESS-CHASE MARRIAGE.—Wednesday, June 15, Brother Samuel A. Burgess was united in marriage to Sister Alice M. Chase. The ceremony took place in the brick church in Lamoni, being solemnized by Elder Elbert A. Smith, before a very large audience.

Brother Burgess has served as president of Grace-land College for two years past, also is well known to the church at large because of his lectures at the General Conferences and his other work along educational and literary lines. The bride is a daughter of Elder Amos M. Chase well known as an active missionary. Brother and Sister Burgess have arranged to spend the next year in the East, both doing work at Clark University, with the idea to equip themselves for further and better service in the church.

WHY BE VILLAINOUS.—One of the despicable things in connection with the opposition to the latter-day evangel is the disposition of certain among its opponents to maliciously misrepresent the work when there is no opportunity for answer. The senior editor of the Apostolic Review, in the issue for May 11, places himself in this class when in discussing a position said to have been taken by certain ones believing in the divine calling of Joseph Smith, he says:

Not much difference between such teaching concerning Joseph Smith and saying that he was Jesus the Christ and died for the sins of the world.

Now our friend of the Review knows there is no such teaching as this anywhere in the standard works of the church, nor as set forth by any representative man. Yet before his constituency, the greater part of whom are ignorant of the facts, and who care not to know them, he so far forgets the dignity of his position to intimate that the Saints teach that Joseph Smith "was Jesus the Christ and died for the sins of the world." If "the Mormon doctrine is a monstrous affair!" as represented by our critic, why need he stoop to villainous methods in combating the same?

EDITORIAL SELECTION

AT FINAL PARTING

Could I but teach man to believe,
 Could I but make small men to grow,
 To break frail spider webs that weave
 About their thews and bind them low;
 Could I but sing one song and lay
 Grim Doubt, I then could go my way
 In tranquil silence, glad, serene,
 And satisfied, from off the scene.
 But, ah, this disbelief, this Doubt,
 This doubt of God, this doubt of good.
 The damned spot will not out.

Wouldst learn to know one little flower,
 Its perfume, perfect form and hue?
 Yea, wouldst thou have one perfect hour
 Of all the years that come to you?
 Then grow as God hath planted, grow
 A lordly oak or daisy low,
 As he hath set his garden; be
 Just what thou art, or grass or tree,
 Thy treasures up in heaven laid
 Await thy sure ascending soul,
 Life after life—be not afraid!

ELDERS' COURTS AND EVIDENCE

Evidence is that which demonstrates that a fact is so; testimony; proof; witnesses. "The means by which allegation in a cause is proved false or true."

We are dealing with that phase of the matter regarding elders' courts which has reached beyond the point of mercy, and has gone into the region of justice. And it is perfectly right that it should be so, for this phase of the matter, from a legal standpoint, is as different from mercy as oil is from water. We are now dealing with a different element, and must of necessity work under new conditions. A mixing of the acids and alkalies at this juncture would neutralize them, or make them of no practical value, so far as reaching the end we have in view, viz,—to prove whether the allegation is true or false.

DIFFICULT TO OBTAIN

Evidence is as a rule a very difficult matter to obtain. Many branch officers can testify to the fact that the preliminary stages of a case are about as mixed up a mess as can be found anywhere; not even excepting discarded baling wire pile in the barnyard.

There are many apparent well-meaning souls murmuring, grumbling, or casting reflections about the conduct of so and so, and others again continually goading the officers with, "Why don't you do something?" but yet there is not to be found anywhere a person willing to submit evidence. It reminds the writer of the oft-repeated statement, "Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink."

Very often the inferences and reflections cast have absolutely no foundation in fact. The following from the Boston Transcript is a case in point:

Mrs. Goggles.—"Do you believe everything you hear?"

Miss Gossip.—"Not until I have repeated it a few times."

Permit me to sidestep the main issue for just a moment. These sinister inferences and reflections we hear against certain members are beasts that should be run down to their dens as soon as possible, and the sooner it is determined whether or not these rumors have any foundation in fact, the better it will be for all concerned. And the best one to start on is the party that asks of the branch officers, "Why don't you do something?"

Mr. Branch Officer should have the courage to state then and there, "Will you be so kind as to commit to writing that which you state against this party, and place your signature to it?"

"No, you didn't see it yourself? Well, then, who told you this?"

"Why, it was so and so."

"Good, will you then come with me to so and so?"

"No, I can not do that, as it was strictly confidential."

This party has burned all bridges of investigation behind him, and virtually acts as judge, jury, and executioner. He should be kindly urged to help to untangle the mess, or be requested to refrain from mentioning the subject again. Or, as is often said in every-day language, "Put up, or shut up."

Coming back again directly to the question of evidence, many a case could have been expeditiously handled, were it not for recalcitrant witnesses. Our people must be educated to the injury the cause oft-times suffers as a result of these conditions. It is too late to educate when the occasion demands action. And it is not always altogether wise to pull up the unruly tare, for in so doing some good wheat might be pulled up also.

We feel grateful to notice the good work our auxiliaries are doing along the lines of enlightenment. The faster our people become informed along these lines, the less frequent will be disorders of this kind when evidence is required.

Like all unpleasant subjects, it is possibly relegated to the archives until needed, but when we take castor oil, we find it easier to take a substantial swallow of the washdown before taking. It goes down easier, and is much less nauseating.

NATURE OF EVIDENCE

However, after much labor, we come to the elders' court.

What shall now be the nature of the evidence that is to determine the truthfulness or falsity of the allegation in the cause?

According to section 149, Book of Rules, this court is a court of inquiry, to sit, hear evidence, and determine the truthfulness or falsity of the complaint.

According to section 152, Book of Rules, this court has the right to enjoin the attendance of the necessary witnesses.

Section 156, Book of Rules, on the functions of a court, states that it is a commission of inquiry, and that after it has heard the allegations and evidence, it is to determine as to the guilt or innocence of the member accused.

Section 157 on the competency of witnesses and evidence, permits even nonmembers to testify, and also the introduction of matters of record and public notoriety, questions of general reputation, records of trials, and convictions in civil courts, etc., duly certified to.

Matthew 18:16 states that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. This is confirmed by Doctrine and Covenants 6:13. Further, in Doctrine and Covenants 42:22 on the question of adultery, the evidence is to be established by two witnesses or more, of the church only, two being sufficient.

Section 158, Book of Rules, under amendments by General Conference, provides that proceedings shall be commenced within one year from the time it becomes known that such offense has been committed, except in cases of felonies, as provided by the laws of the land, and where the statute of limitations does not run.

The worst felonies according to modern usage means, are grave crimes; high offenses. According to Smith, "In many (States) of the United States, felony is defined by statute as including all crimes which are punishable by death or imprisonment in the state prison."

A statute is a law emanating from the government of a state.

A statute of limitations is the period of time limited by statute after which an action can not be maintained.

Section 154, Book of Rules, states that the court shall require that a plea of guilty or not guilty shall be entered by defendant.

BEFORE THE COURT

From the foregoing we epitomize the following:

1. That this court is a commission of inquiry.
2. That it is to base its conclusions on evidence.

The rules providing for evidence as follows:

- a. From the complainant by a plea of guilty or not guilty.
- b. From witnesses of the church, at least two or three.
- c. From witnesses not of the church (excepting cases of adultery).
- d. From matters of public, private and civil record, the latter only certified to.
- e. Within one year from time it becomes known that offense has been committed, excepting felonies, and where statute of limitations does not run.

3. That the court is to pass judgment on the evidence received to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused; and what might also be reasonably inferred, that in the event of lack of evidence, the accused to receive the benefit of the doubt, and the case thrown out for want of sufficient evidence, thereby reinstating the member again in fellowship with the body.

COMPETENCE OF EVIDENCE

The competence of evidence is next due for consideration. By competent in this case we refer to suitability, adequate fitness, reasonableness. But what shall we consider as suitable, reasonable evidence, and of adequate fitness? On the matter of evidence we are confronted with two different kinds, viz: Direct evidence—evidence that is positive, not inferred or circumstantial; indirect evidence—inferential or circumstantial.

The following may be classed as direct evidence.

1. That which is admitted by accused.
2. That which is received from witnesses who were directly involved in the offense, or who were nonparticipating witnesses to the offense.

Under indirect evidence we have the following:

1. Circumstantial evidence.

Of this Blackstone states, "That class of evidence deduced from circumstances which necessarily or usually attend facts of a particular nature, from which arises presumption."

In clearer language this would mean something attending or relating to the main subject. To illustrate, we say where there is smoke there must be fire. We see smoke coming out of the chimney, and circumstantially conclude that there are occupants in that house.

Of the persecution of the Jews in Spain a certain author writes, "To avoid persecution many Jews became nominally Christian. . . . To discover how widely covert Jewish practices prevailed, it is said, it was only necessary to ascend a hill on their Sabbath, and look down on their towns and villages below. Scarce half the chimneys would be seen to smoke, for multitudes of secret Jews celebrated their holy time."

Either of the foregoing cases are circumstantial, and hence evidence based on presumption.

A brother may be accused of stealing a sack of oats from the fact that footprints of a man's shoes, plainly visible in the virgin snow, were found leading from the granary to his home, and further that a trace of oats falling from the sack accompanied the prints. This aside from everything else is purely circumstantial, but other evidence of a corroborative nature may be introduced to establish the truth of the original allegation. If the accused refuses to admit his guilt, or refuses to be questioned, steps must be taken to obtain the necessary information in another way. His relatives may be called in to testify as to their knowledge of the size of the party's shoes. Next a shoemaker may be called in as expert witness to testify what sized shoe it would take to make a print in the snow of certain dimensions.

But should even this be established against the accused, it is still circumstantial.

2. Constructive evidence: Created or deduced by construction or interpretation; not directly expressed but inferred. At first thought this appears to be the same as circumstantial evidence, but it is not.

A constructive crime is an act of a character similar to that forbidden. A constructive notice is the knowledge one should have or is supposed to have. These definitions deal principally with equivalents—equal to.

A constructive theft might be the act of a farmer who deliberately sends his cattle into another man's cornfield. Or the act of a man who would permit little boys to use his barn to hide wares in that he was suspicious were stolen, and then through threats scare them from taking possession of them, and thereby succeed in obtaining all the plunder. The man who sold Joseph Smith's ginseng was virtually guilty of constructive theft.

Constructive adultery might be interpreted as the act of a person who was only wanting the occasion or convenient opportunity to commit the deed. And it might also cover the case of a person willfully encouraging, inciting, countenancing, or assisting an immoral act. According to civil law, the foregoing might be interpreted as an act of abetment.

Constructive evidence is virtually that class of evidence that proves constructive crime, or an act equivalent to a crime. We accept the function of a constructive notice in that we interpret the accused to be in possession of the desired information because the notice was left at the proper home in care of anyone over eight years of age. This is literally constructive evidence, and a substantial precedent for its use in proving an allegation.

3. Moral evidence.

Evidence sufficient to satisfy the mind, although not susceptible of rigid and incontrovertible demonstration. This may be deduced from the following:

Spiritual evidence is moral evidence, and as a spiritual organization this kind of evidence should have precedence over all others. We can not however, reverse the meaning, and say that moral evidence is spiritual evidence. This is not the case by any means.

There are many things in life not susceptible of incontrovertible demonstration. For example: The theory that the earth is round, that the sun is about ninety-three million miles from the earth, that light moves one hundred eighty-six thousand miles per second. A great portion of moral evidence may be safely said to be also deduced from the principle, "actions speak louder than words."

PASSING JUDGMENT

Thus far we have canvassed practically all the known variations in evidence. Our rules do not expressly forbid the use of any of these variations in evidence. The elders' court is to sit, hear that which demonstrates that a fact is so, and pass judgment.

In a civil case judgment can only be passed upon what evidence has been submitted, and not upon personal "think so's," etc. Judgment is confined to facts susceptible of rigid demonstration.

In answer to the question as to what constitutes evidence in an elders' court, permit me to submit the opinion that it is any means by which an allegation in a cause is proved false or true, whether that evidence be direct or indirect, according to the judgment of those presiding, directed by the Spirit of God. And the findings of said court should be so constructed as to enable those of the higher tribunals (in the event of an appeal) to distinctly interpret their findings therefrom.

In a case built up of moral, circumstantial, or constructive evidence, the examination of principals and witnesses must be skillfully conducted to make the records of the case properly interpret the findings of the court.

This treatise has by no means exhausted the matter, and we hope that further and better efforts will be made in the future along the same lines.

'WHERE THERE IS NO VISION THE PEOPLE PERISH'

To perish is to die, decay, or go to ruin. Vision is sight, that which is seen, or, "divine revelation." Solomon said, "Where there is no vision, the people perish: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he." (Proverbs 29: 18.) The law of the Lord, his commandments, can be received from him only through "divine revelation." When nations or individuals accept and obey the revelations of God to them they may prosper, but if they heed them not they must perish.

"ASK GOD'S VOICE TO END THE WAR"

Under the above caption the Chicago Sunday Herald for September 20, 1914, contained the following:

NEW YORK, September 19.—(Special).—There has been forwarded to the King of England, the Emperor of Germany, the Czar of Russia, and the President of France, through the founder and leader of the Drexel-Biddle Bible Class of Philadelphia, the following suggestion for ending the war in Europe:

As a member of the Drexel-Biddle Movement, which numbers forty-two thousand throughout the world, we suggest that each of the fighting nations appoint a delegation of God's ministers to convene with one another at an appointed time and place and let all fighting cease while those ministers kneel to God and ask him to speak from the heavens, as he did of old.

"Can anyone doubt but that God's voice will be heard again, as it was of old, to tell the Christian nations how to adjust their differences?" (Italics mine.—AUTHOR.)

We understand that many prominent Americans have written approval of this plan. Whether it will be carried out or not we do not know; however, we venture to say that should the Lord speak "as he did of old," we doubt that the rulers of the nations would accept the message. Further than that, we doubt whether the forty-two thousand members of the Drexel-Biddle Bible movement would accept it.

HOW DID THE LORD SPEAK?

It would be a good policy to settle this question first, for history might repeat itself,—they might not be satisfied with the way the Lord would speak. They might reject it as did many of the rulers in days of old.

The Prophet Amos says: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." (Amos 3: 7.)

Then the Lord spoke through prophets in those days of old! Will he now? The majority of people say, "No!" In the first place, it would be quite necessary to let the Lord choose his own mouthpiece. That is the way "he did in the days of old." In the second place it would be altogether necessary to believe that the Lord would answer if petitioned upon such an important matter.

MESSAGE OF PROPHETS REJECTED

The Lord, by his prophets, forwarned his people when disaster was ahead of them. He did not often wait until they were stared in the face by destruction before he prepared a way of escape.

Ahab, king of Israel, lost his life through failure to heed the instruction given through Micaiah, the prophet of God. He wanted to take Ramoth-Gilead from the king of Syria. He commanded an officer to "Hasten hither Micaiah," to hear what he would say concerning the matter. Micaiah said: "I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the Lord said, These have no master: let them return therefore every man to his house in peace." After Micaiah had ended his prophecy, Ahab commanded that he be put in prison and fed on bread and water of affliction. So King Ahab went up to battle against Ramoth-Gilead and was slain before evening, and his people were scattered as Micaiah said they would be.

Likewise Jeremiah was smitten because he prophesied evil upon the men of Anathoth. He rebuked them for "offering incense unto Baal," for which they sought his life. The consequence was that they perished by the sword and their sons and daughters died from famine.

When Amos prophesied destruction upon the house of Jeroboam, he was accused of conspiracy, and was commanded to "flee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there; but prophesy not again any more at Bethel: for it is the king's chapel, and it is the king's court." But the prophecy came to pass. The king's land was divided, his family fell by the sword, and he died "in a polluted land." Israel went into captivity as predicted by Amos and many other prophets, because of failure to observe the commandments of the Lord.

NEPHI FORETOLD PRESENT CONDITIONS

Nearly six hundred years before the first advent of our Savior into this world, there was a prophet of God upon this the American Continent by the name of Nephi. From his prophecies we read the following:

But behold, in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles; yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles; . . . Yea, even upon all the lands of the earth; behold, they will be drunken with iniquity, and all manner of abominations; and when that day shall come, they shall be visited of the Lord of hosts, with thunder and with earthquake, and with a great noise, and with storm and with tempest, and with the flame of devouring fire; . . . For it shall come to pass in that day, that the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, when the one shall say unto the other, Behold, I, I am the Lord's; and the other shall say, I, I am the Lord's. . . . Because of pride, and because of false teachers, and false doctrine, their churches have become corrupted; and their churches are lifted up; because of pride, they are puffed up. They rob the poor, because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor, because of their fine clothing; and they persecute the meek, and the poor in heart; because in their pride, they are puffed up. . . . For the day shall come that the Lord God will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth; and in that day that they are fully ripe in iniquity, they shall perish. But behold, if the inhabitants of the earth shall repent of their wickedness and abominations, they shall not be destroyed, saith the Lord of hosts.—Second Book of Nephi, chapters 11 and 12.

That this wonderful prophecy is being fulfilled in these days is only too true. The world is going too fast to recognize it. Men are selfish, heady, high-minded, and as Paul says, lovers of themselves, and "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." Crime, according to criminal records, especially in large cities, is increasing at an alarming rate. An English writer, in a recent secular periodical, says:

Those who think themselves Christians heap up wealth at the expense of their fellow men, and expend the riches, which they never ought to have possessed, on the luxuries and caprices of their families and themselves.

The money expended for pleasure and lust is astonishing. In the United States alone the yearly expenditures on white slavery is $3,000,000,000; for intoxicating liquors, $2,000,000,000; for tobacco, $1,200,000,000; for jewelry, $8,000,000,000; and for automobiles, $500,000,000.

WAR RUMORS SIGN OF DECAY

Think of the fast increasing armies and thousands of battleships controlled by Christian nations and rulers! Yes, Christian nations! Oh, what a shame! Just before the present European war broke out, Doctor Jefferson, one who is prominently connected with the peace movement, wrote the following:

"A volume setting forth the cost of armies and navies reminds one of a book on astronomy. The only figures used are millions and billions. . . . The imagination is first dazed, and then paralyzed. When one scrutinizes for an hour the tables compiled by statisticians, showing the cost of armed peace, the mind is stupefied, and the heart benumbed. . . . Governments are to-day not only impoverishing the living, but hanging millstones of debt around the necks of generations yet unborn. Guns are bought with borrowed money. The house is being mortgaged that the foolery may go on.

All schemes of internal improvement are curtailed and embarrassed, and every program of social betterment is handicapped or postponed. Militarism blights like a pestilential mind the higher life of nations, and eats like a gangrene into the vitals of civilization. The very sinew and bloom of humanity are going into this expanding establishment of gold braid and steel, and the end is not yet. One thing is certain, the world can not go on indefinitely in the direction in which it is now moving. Something is going to break. . . . Well may any man who believes that nations, as well as individuals, are in the grip of inexorable moral law, tremble when he beholds the satanic heartlessness with which the peoples of Christendom are being plundered and oppressed by the ever-accumulative expenditures for the enginery of slaughter."—Quoted in Signs of the Times, November 3, 1914.

The "break" has come, and now the great world powers have been plunged into war—ruin, to destroy each other's wealth that might have been used to emancipate the poor, struggling masses of humanity who are now compelled to fight the battles for the rich.

MESSAGE FROM HEAVEN IN DUE TIME

As we approach the world with this grand truth, that the Almighty hath spoken to us in these latter days, we are reminded of the words of Peter: "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering as to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

How grand, indeed, to know that God has remembered his promise and has not left "latter-day Israel" without a comforter! How inspiring are the words of Oliver Cowdery, who, with Joseph Smith, jr., received under the hands of the messenger from heaven on May 15, 1829, the priesthood of Aaron! He said in part: "While the world was racked and distracted, while millions were groping, as the blind uncertainly, as a general mass, our eyes beheld, our ears heard." What a wonderful testimony in an age when men deny "divine revelation." "Our eyes beheld, our ears heard!" Continuing, he says: "'Twas the voice of the angel from glory; 'twas a message from the most high!"

Under divine direction the church of Christ was established. God continued to reveal himself to his church and gave to his servants a message to bear to the nations of the earth. For eighty-five years Latter Day Saints have been heralding forth this message containing the instruction to "prepare," for the "great day of the Lord" which is at hand. This message is to all: "Verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons." Because it contains a rebuke and the errors of men are made manifest, the word of the Lord is rejected by the world as were those words of his prophets of old.

Listen to what the Lord says:

Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all will hear may hear; prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; . . . they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own God, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall. Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; . . . that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3, 4.

Like King Ahab said of Micaiah: "I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil," the wise and the prudent now say it was uncharitable of Joseph Smith to rebuke their creeds and accuse them so. By their own works they evidence the statement that "every man walketh in his own way," and surely, there are plenty of ways. But God desires all to "return to the old paths" that they may "find rest," but they "will not walk therein."

A REBUKE TO THE RICH

Not only are the religious teachers rebuked for teaching error, but the rich men of the earth are also reminded that the earth is the Lord's and that they should remember the poor:

Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls, and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved.—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5.

Mr. Carnegie, while celebrating his seventy-ninth birthday, said: "If I could get an option on life, I would allow you to name your price and not squabble over it." The grim monster death faces the rich and the poor alike. The wealth of this world can not purchase eternal life, only in so far as it is used as the Lord has decreed, and that is as follows:

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my Saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my Saints: That the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

PROCLAMATION TO KINGS

Isaiah 62: 11 says:

Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Say ye unto the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

The prophecies of the ancient prophets are so closely related to the latter-day message that those in possession of the Spirit of truth can see the connecting link between the past and the present dispensation.

Doctrine and Covenants 107 contains a revelation received January 19, 1841, in which Joseph Smith was commanded "to make a solemn proclamation" of the "gospel." The Lord said: "This proclamation shall be made to all the kings of the world, to the four corners thereof." It was to be "to all the nations of the earth, scattered abroad," and to "be written in the spirit of meekness, and by the power of the Holy Ghost." The Lord declared: "For, behold, I am about to call upon them to give heed to the light and glory of Zion, for the set time has come to favor her."

Continuing in verse 2, the Lord says:

Call ye, therefore, upon them with loud proclamation, and with your testimony, fearing them not, for they are as grass, and all their glory as the flower thereof, which soon falleth, that they may be left also without excuse, and that I may visit them in the day of visitation, when I shall unveil the face of my covering, to appoint the portion of the oppressor among hypocrites, where there is gnashing of teeth, if they reject my servants and my testimony which I have revealed unto them. . . . For the day of my visitation cometh speedily, in an hour when ye think not of, and where shall be the safety of my people, and refuge for those who shall be left of them? Awake! O kings of the earth! Come ye, O come ye, with your gold and your silver, to the help of my people, to the house of the daughters of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 2, 3.

If the kings and rulers of the earth have power to collect and control so much wealth in military organizations to destroy and kill, they might also accept the proclamation of the gospel and organize the forces under their control and use the wealth they are now destroying for the establishment of Zion and the temporal salvation of humanity.

The Drexel-Biddle Bible movement claims to want the Lord to speak as he did of old "to tell the Christian nations how to adjust their differences." The Lord has already spoken "as in the days of old," but they heed it not. And so we venture to repeat that should the Lord speak again they would not heed.

The proclamation quoted above is still in force and still declared by the Lord's servants. It will be in force until the Lord comes to earth.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days they shall be visited.—Isaiah 24: 21, 22.

And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.—Isaiah 2: 17.

The Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.—Isaiah 24: 23.

We welcome thy coming, oh, Lord. Help thy Saints to be patient and endure until thy appearing, is the constant prayer of latter-day Israel.

Department of Education

EDITED BY SAMUEL A. BURGESS, LAMONI, IOWA

WHY NOT GO TO GRACELAND?

Now is the time for our high school graduates to decide upon their college for higher education. Graceland College presents splendid possibilities. In the first place, concentrating its whole effort on the first and second year of collegiate work, it is able to offer unusually careful instruction. The work of the first and second year is radically different, as a rule, from the third and fourth year, so that work may be taken here preparatory to an engineering, a classical, or a technical course to be taken elsewhere. We make a specialty of helping our young people to prepare to continue their work satisfactorily in other institutions.

Our aim is not simply to secure students for Graceland College, but to secure the best interest of our young people; and with this end in view, we have advised some to go elsewhere, when in their special case this seemed the best thing to do.

In addition to presenting educational work of high rank, Graceland possesses all the advantages of a small college, in the personal attention given the students, and in the moral and spiritual stimulus.

Owing to the increased prices of living and the added expense on this account to our faculty for their just wants and needs; and because the tuition at Graceland is extremely low; and because it is deemed advisable that those who can should pay a larger share of the expense of the institution, the tuition fees have been raised, beginning next September, to $45 in the collegiate and preparatory departments, including the normal school; and to $55 in the commercial department, including bookkeeping or shorthand and typewriting. This tuition, however, includes registration or matriculation fee, library fee and athletic dues. A certain per cent will be set aside by the Board of Trustees for athletics, to be used in meeting routine expenses and securing better equipment so as to make the work of value to all. The athletic finances will be handled by a joint board, on which both the Board of Trustees and the faculty will be represented. This places the fees at Graceland still lower than elsewhere, and especially is this the case, since the board is not raised for next year, but remains at four dollars per week, including room, heat and light. The rooms are partly furnished, but it is well for one to bring towels, dresser scarf, rug.

and curtains. Some students prefer to bring part of their own bedding, such as a bedspread or a pair of blankets, but all bedding is furnished.

Some rooms for boys may be secured at the farmhouse for $3.75 per week. All board at the same table.

The influence of the industrial department, felt by the whole body of the students in the seriousness of the work done and the habit of self-reliance, is also a gain. Then why not send your boy or girl to Graceland College? It is your own school, and you will help to make it a success. Twice as many students can be taught here as are at present. The educational facilities are equal to elsewhere; the moral and spiritual surroundings better for you, and the cost less.

GRACELAND COMMENCEMENT

Graceland had the largest graduating class this year of any year in her history, as there were thirty-two names on the Roll of Honor. The graduates were presented separately by the heads of departments. Miss Kelley as director in the studio presented four graduates in music and oratory. Professor Gunsolley as principal of the commercial school presented six in bookkeeping and ten in stenography. Professor R. V. Hopkins as principal of the preparatory school presented four for the college preparatory and two in the normal department. Finally, Professor McDowell for the college of liberal arts presented six graduates of the junior college.

It will be noted that Graceland has become definitely a junior college for the present. Doing this, those who complete the two years of collegiate work will graduate and receive a degree of Associate in Arts. All who possibly can are encouraged to continue their educational work to the bachelor's degree. And a special effort is made to prepare each one to continue work along the line in which he is best fitted and is most interested.

The reason for the junior college has already been ably set forth in this department by Professor McDowell. Our motto is to do thoroughly the work which we undertake, and not to undertake more than we can do in justice. The junior college is well recognized in academic circles, as the work in the first and second year is so different from the third and fourth years.

These graduates, of course, increase the graduating class, but it is thought better to make a distinct recognition of the completion of the work in Graceland College. The degree of Associate in Arts is conferred by many of the junior colleges, especially in this part of the country. It is also conferred by the junior colleges of Chicago University.

This is the only large university we know of which has a junior college. And Chicago University organized the first two years of work under the junior colleges and the third and fourth years under the senior colleges. They confer the degree of associate for the completion of work in the junior college, and a degree of bachelor when the third and fourth years are completed. So this title is also becoming well recognized in junior colleges.

The above is written in reply to any question in regard to the commencement, and having special regard to the junior colleges. We are always glad to answer any questions concerning either the work at Graceland, in the Extension Institute, or concerning education in general.

CHANGES IN THE FACULTY

We are indeed pleased to be able to announce that Professor George N. Briggs, for many years connected with the Bureau of Education of the United States Government, and especially in connection with the Philippine Commission, has tendered his services to Graceland College. Brother Briggs has had many years of experience in practical educational work both in this country and in the islands. He is at present with the Government Exhibit at the Panama International Exposition. He comes to Graceland for less than one third of what he is earning with the Government. But he comes because he wishes to donate his services to the work of the church. The Board of Trustees have elected him president of the college to begin September 1, 1915.

The present incumbent believes that the interest of the work of Graceland College and of the church requires his resignation and the acceptance of the offer of Brother Briggs. It gives an opportunity for a year of special research work in the East. This is work we have long desired to take up in the hopes of a better preparation for service in the church, in what capacity, it remains for the future to determine.

SOUTH-CENTRAL NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL

On June 7 Graceland College again opened her doors, having just closed them June 4 upon the departing class of 1915.

The doors were opened to receive the South-Central Normal Training School. This has no business connections with Graceland College. It is run, however, by members of the faculty of that college, Professors F. M. McDowell and R. V. Hopkins being primarily in charge, and having associated with them Professors Clyde T. Reed and J. A. Gunsolley. In addition to these the services of Miss Maude Donohue, a graduate, were secured for domestic science, and Mr. Cromer, A. B. and B. S., Iowa State Teachers College, was secured for manual training and agriculture. This presents an unusually strong faculty for the normal training subjects required by teachers in Iowa. They have started with an enrollment of something over fifty, with prospects of an increase.

As a business venture, this is entirely one by the men named. The college donated the use of the buildings and equipment, with the understanding that all expenses will be paid. This is an excellent move on behalf of the college, because it puts Graceland forward in educational circles; and we believe the men named deserve our thanks for assuming this responsibility. It is of interest in being another move along educational lines, and we wish it every success.

EXTENSION INSTITUTE

The interest in this department continues, as the registrar, Professor C. B. Woodstock, Lamoni, Iowa, reports on June 1 about seventy enrollments. We are pleased to see this steady increase. We also are pleased that it is not more rapid, as it is giving opportunity to work out the necessary problems. Now, however, we are coming to the point where we shall be able to handle the work more rapidly, if need be.

Provision was made at the late General Conference at the meeting of the members of the Graceland Extension Institute to authorize the officers to provide clerical help for the registrar, as it might be needed, and provision made for pushing the work more aggressively during the coming year, and taking care of its normal growth.

We have been pleased to note that nearly all the enrollments so far have been of the priesthood, but it should be remembered that enrollment is also open to others who may so desire and who have passed the age when they can conveniently take work in the regular school.

So the Extension Institute continues its steady growth. It is expected that after September 1, the director, President Frederick M. Smith, will take immediate charge.

Of General Interest

RUSSIA UNDER PROHIBITION

Some time ago the commander in chief over all the Russian troops prohibited the sale of ale and stout in all the districts declared to be in a state of war. And, as mentioned above, in very many places the full prohibition, including also all kinds of wine and beer, is adopted by the local authorities, according to the law of October 10, 1914.

To enforce this prohibition the punishment for appearing in an intoxicated state has proven effective: In Russia an intoxicated person may now be fined 3,000 rubles or punished with imprisonment for three months. In this drastic way will also all those be punished who try to offend against the prohibitory law. The Russian army has carried on the war absolutely without alcohol. . . .

The street life of Petrograd is totally changed. Ragged "huliganes," who formerly were common sights, are no longer to be seen, and the people even in by-streets are well dressed. Indeed, somewhere it must be felt, when Deputy Tschelischev, who knows the condition of that great land, has estimated that the people of Russia during the month of September last, in consequence of the prohibition of alcohol, saved about three hundred and fifty million rubles, or as much as the Turkish Government had to pay to Russia in war contribution after the war of 1877-1878. . . .

MONOPOLY PERMANENTLY DEAD

This state of things is meant to last not only during the time of the war. The Czar has declared that for all time he has decided to cause the government sale of whisky to cease. This is meant to say that the government, being in possession of the monopoly of the exclusive sale of whisky, will now stop selling, and will in no case turn this monopoly over to others.

The people have received this news with great enthusiasm. The newspapers contain, regardless of parties, resolutions of thanks for the close of the liquor traffic; in many places the people have asked the priests to hold services of thanks in memory of the cessation of the liquor slavery.

NEW PRISONS NOT NEEDED

On account of this prohibition, crimes have diminished so that the planned building of new prisons has had to be interrupted. Physicians tell us that the number of patients in the hospitals has decreased considerably and the alcoholic polyclinics in Petrograd are now practically without anything to do. On the other hand, the officials of the savings banks have been compelled to ask for increase of their number, in some places double, on account of too much work, and the number of depositors has, in spite of the war time, and unusual difficulties, increased enormously.

The fire accidents have also during the war time decreased in comparison with preceding months. The leading Russian statesmen say that, since the enforcement of prohibition, industrial labor gives results thirty to fifty per cent higher than formerly.

As the consequences of the closing of the whisky shops have been so exceptionally favorable, it may easily be imagined that people do not want to stop there, but demand to have the sale of beer and wines in the same way, even in the future, generally prohibited. The total prohibition of the sale of wine in a country which produces so much of it is of course rather difficult, but it seems to tend this way, that while distilled drinks will be prohibited totally, the sale of ale and wines will also, after the war time, be left to local option. But of this it is too early yet to speak with any degree of certainty. . . .

ON THRESHOLD OF NEW ERA

However calmly the case may be weighed, yet one comes to the understanding that Russia has stepped over the threshold of a new era. The writer has never met with so grand a success in the temperance cause as now in Russia, except in the United States of America. Who could have imagined that such a thing should be possible so soon in Russia, which suddenly stands at the head of the fight against alcoholism in Europe?

And in Finland, most of the alcohol traffic was stopped by the order of the monarch on November 18, 1914. Only at a few first-class restaurants is wine and beer sold in connection with meals. The breweries still have the right to sell at wholesale to such persons as are approved by the police authorities.

The new era in Russia has awakened the hope that the wishes of the Finnish nation, as regards the prohibitory law, will soon be realized.

FINLAND AND PROHIBITION

In 1907 the Finnish Diet passed a general prohibitory law. It was, however, submitted to the monarch so late that the sanction of it was impossible even from a formal point of view.

In 1909 the monarch therefore decreed that the Finnish Senate should prepare for a new law proposal, as much as possible in conformity with the first proposal of the Diet, but at the same time to take into consideration wishes advanced by the Russian ministers.

In the same year, 1909, the Finnish Diet itself made a new proposal for a prohibitory law, with due consideration of the said wishes. The Diet afterwards, two different times, petitioned that the law proposal should be submitted to the sanction of the monarch. The majority of the Finnish people are now anxiously looking forward to the decision of the question and sincerely hope that the same monarch who has made an end of the monopoly sale of whisky in Russia will, in his capacity of Grand Duke of Finland, sanction the Finnish prohibitory law.—Doctor Matti Helenius-Seppala, Finnish patriot, in The New Republic, May 21, 1915.

WAR SHIFTS IN OUR EXPORT TRADE

The entrance of Italy into the war shuts the biggest side door through which Germany was obtaining supplies from this and other neutral countries. It remains to be seen whether it will actually diminish American exports, which to the end of March totaled $1,930,976,869, as against $1,883,221,915 for the same period the year before, or will merely cause another change in their course.

Because of the domestic clamor over the alleged "unfairness" of certain branches of export trade there is a popular impression that most of its increase has been with the allies. In fact, it has increased more with the neutral states adjacent to the enemies of the allies. Here are the figures, from the Department of Commerce bulletin for the nine months ending with March:

In these nine months a year ago our aggregate sales to the United Kingdom, France, Belgium and Russia were $691,182,213. For the nine months lately ended they were $896,462,324, an increase of $205,280,111. But the comparative figures for our exports to Greece, Italy, Holland, Scandinavia and Switzerland, all countries adjacent to the German empires or their Turkish ally, are $174,441,788 and $403,935,549, or an increase of $249,472,466.

Some details of this growth of trade with neutrals adjacent to warring states are interesting. Greece takes the first place for rate of increase, from $747,337 to $19,978,705. Sweden comes next with a nearly sixfold increase, from $11,026,562 to $65,980,749. Denmark and Norway are little behind, with increases from $12,044,401 and $6,925,181 to $63,103,962 and $32,401,556 respectively. Even Switzerland has more than doubled her small purchase, from $705,907 to $1,778,735. Holland shows the smallest rate of gain, from $89,160,673 to $101,892,382. . . .—Chicago Herald, May 30, 1915.

Greater than the pyramids in their grandeur are the slaves who built them; greater than the canals that link the seas, greater than the tunnels through the mountains are the men who dig them; greater than the greatest railroad systems are the men who run.—Cullen F. Thomas.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS, LAMONI, IOWA

Responsibility

When Brother Frederick M. Smith was ordained to the office of President of the church a short time ago, he said that he felt deeply the responsibility of the position to which he had been called. When reading the report, we felt as never before, to exclaim, What can we do to lighten the task? to help bear the responsibility of leading on to victory the army of the Lord?

It is a conflict with the evils of the world that the church is engaged in and compared with the millions of people in the world the number in the church is very small; but then, "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," yet we are sometimes led to ask ourselves, "Are we the leaven, or only a part of the great lump of humanity that must be raised?"

"In the world ye have tribulation, but in me ye have peace," was never more forcefully illustrated than in the present time. We read in the daily papers of the distress of nations, wars and turmoil; then we turn to the HERALD and read of the divine and peaceful influence that attended the ordination of our beloved President, the standard bearer of truth, and our hearts swell with a desire to be true to our leader.

We desire to see the sisters of the church united as never before to help on the gospel work, in our homes, in the church services and in the world.

We invite and urge all women of the church, young and old, to rally to the support of the woman's organization. Let us make this auxiliary the power, in gospel work; that it is capable of being. Let all societies previously organized become a part of the auxiliary.

We call attention to the auxiliary departments in the church papers, HERALD, Ensign and Autumn Leaves, and urge a careful reading of them. They are full of good things. Do not rest until you have all or a part of these papers coming to your homes regularly. When you have read them pass them on to others who may not be able to subscribe for them; or, perhaps are too indifferent.

Let us talk of good things in our homes. Counsel and practice love, forbearance and peace. A doctor once told us, "I can tell when I call at a home, even in a friendly way, in what esteem I am held in that home, by the manner of the children towards me." Children are so quick to note the words of the mother in speaking of anyone, that even very little ones feel the atmosphere of likes and dislikes and act accordingly.

Watch, and see for yourself, how soon the family is cheerful if mother is so. Note how the family rate the minister, the doctor, the gospel, at the estimate put upon them by the parents.

It is no use to talk peace if we are ready to take offense at every slight, real or imagined: no use to urge others to live the gospel, if we are not doing the best we can to make it a part of our lives.

The superintendent of our sewing and aid department wrote, "I want to begin work early this year." We hope all department superintendents feel the same, and that the good done this year will exceed any previous year.

By "good done," we do not mean simply organizing new locals, but advancing in learning, in spirituality and in love for one another. There should not be in this church a single sister who harbors hard feelings toward another, no matter what cause she may feel has been given for such condition.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart therefrom," has never been put to a wholesale practical test. Let us begin in the church this year to teach our own the good of righteous living; to establish our own in the faith, then we will help bear the responsibility by service.

We are sending letters to field workers this week, and wish to ask the elders in any district where the auxiliary is not represented to communicate with us and give the name and address of some live, willing and earnest sister to whom we could write and send literature and instructions for work among the sisters.

MRS. S. R. BURGESS.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 5920 Etzel Avenue.

Whom Should Our Girls Marry?

The writer of this paper is a married woman, has reared a family, and is able to write from experience, as our home life has been a very happy one, notwithstanding I am a missionary's wife and must bear all the inconveniences and hardships incident to such a position. By observation I have learned much that is found in the home, either to make it a pleasant and enjoyable place to dwell, or one of discord and strife, where the proverbial dove of peace does not remain long at a time.

If you are spiritually minded, have an interest in the gospel, and desire that your children should be reared under such conditions, you should marry a man of like temperament. Such a man will do all that is right and just to help you; he will see that the church papers and books are in the home and that you have every reasonable opportunity to attend the house of worship. He will help make the home a house of prayer. He will not forget the financial obligations he owes to the Lord's work, and will heartily cooperate with you so that you can do your very best. If he is not that kind of a man, he will be selfish and his pleasures and conveniences will have first consideration with him, and those things that make for your spiritual welfare and religious happiness will be overlooked; and where you have a right to expect a hearty cooperation, you will be neglected, and instead of sympathy you will find cold indifference.

Don't marry a man who uses tobacco in any form, and especially cigarettes, or intoxicating liquors. It means poverty and sorrow and bodily and mental pollution of your children. The state runs reform schools, you should not make the attempt. It usually results in failure and proves disastrous.

You should not marry an aimless man, one who has no more thought than the beasts or birds, who are satisfied with enough to eat for one day at a time and trust to luck for the morrow. A man should be ambitious to be something in this world, a good mechanic, a successful business man, a doctor, a lawyer, an educator, an up-to-date farmer, or a participant in any honorable occupation that possesses the elements of usefulness that will increase the sum total of human happiness.

A man who is too lazy and shiftless to face the real issues of life without being a croaker, or a grumbler or a dreamer of a lucky day to come, if he only waits for it, who will not get out and hustle and dig, who spends his time in pool halls, loafing on street corners, and wasting what little he earns by foolish expenditures, if he ever marries, the woman who becomes his wife will have a burden to bear heavy enough to wear out half a dozen women. The girl who marries such a man (person) is adding sorrow to her life which she must bear alone. Her friends can do very little for her. She must be a beast of burden with no hope of relief this side of the grave.

A young man who wastes his earnings, or is too lazy to work and provide the nucleus of a home before marriage, will not do it afterwards. You must help bear the burden, and the heaviest part of it will fall on you. You should say no to such with emphasis. There is a business side to marriage and it is very important that that part of it should not be overlooked.

True love shows itself by doing things that make for comfort, peace and happiness in the home. It never seeks to cast the burden on the one who is not able to bear it. The more love a man has for his wife the more he will do for her.

The man you marry should come to you pure and virtuous. He demands that of you. Why should you ask less of him? If you did wrong he would probably not recognize you on the street, or sit in the same seat in church with you. Then why should you take the chances of bodily pollution? The spirit of forgiveness does not require that you should pollute your body as an evidence of your Christ-like character.

In imagination I hear some girls say, "We can not find a man of the excellence required." Then do not marry. A person possessing less virtue than we have named is not a full-grown man, and you will have to make up the deficiency by adding the extra burden to your own back.

In return for the love of an honest, industrious, kind, gentle, clean, religious, moral and virtuous man you ought to give the same. Then you will have a prosperous, happy and successful life. "AUNT MARY."

Keep Baby Cool

Keep cool, but, above all means, keep your baby cool. This is the advice of the federal children's bureau, to mothers who are just entering upon the hot summer months of the year.

"The records show that thousands of babies, most of whom are bottle fed, die every year in July and August because of the direct or indirect effects of heat," the bureau says.

"Next in importance to right food in summer," it continues in a bulletin made public to-day, "are measures for keeping the baby cool and comfortable; frequent baths, light clothing, and the selection of the coolest available place for him to play and sleep."

BATH EVERY MORNING

Babies should be given a full tub bath early every morning. If the weather is hot and the babies restless, one or two sponge baths should be given during the day. A bath before bedtime often will induce sleep when otherwise the child would be restless.

Soft water is better than hard for babies. Also, mothers should always make the water as soapy as they need it, in order to avoid rubbing soap directly on the skin of their children. When the bath is over the babies should be patted dry, and particular care should be taken to see that the folds and creases are as dry as the exposed surface of the body.

If the baby has proper food, given only at regular intervals, a clean body, and a cool place in which to play and sleep, he should prosper during the hottest months.

PATENT REMEDIES ADVISED AGAINST

Mothers are also urged not to give their children baby medicine of any sort, except on the prescription of a reputable physician.

"Never give him patent remedies which are said to relieve the pain of teething, or to make him sleep, or to cure diarrhoea," says the bulletin, "for such medicines are likely to do the baby more harm than good, especially in summer, when the digestion is so easily disturbed."

In conclusion the bureau strongly urges mothers to remember to give their children plenty of water to drink during the day.

"Boil the water first, then cool it, and offer it to the baby in a cup, glass, or nursing bottle," it says. "Babies and young children sometimes suffer cruelly for lack of drinking water."—Chicago Tribune, June 6, 1915.

Subjects for Prayer Union

FOURTH THURSDAY

Prayer for our Sunday schools and Religio societies, for the Prayer Union, and for all the missionary departments in the church, that each may be blessed in its work for the general uplift. For the sick and afflicted.

FIFTH THURSDAY

For our country and our rulers; that the preaching of the gospel may make greater progress, winning its way over all false systems and creeds, to the enlightenment of the Gentiles of Joseph's land.

FIRST THURSDAY

For the church in Zion, that it may indeed be a city that is set on a hill. That the light reflected from it shall so lighten those that sit in darkness, that those without may see and desire to enter. Let us remember that Zion is the pure in heart, and Zion shall become the city of the pure, and thus work to that end.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Sister A. R. Crippen, Cherokee, Iowa, who is suffering from abscesses caused by an operation.

Sister F. J. Manchester, Pheonix, Nebraska, asks prayers for her son Clarence, who is afflicted with sore eyes. The doctor says he will have to undergo a painful operation, and that it will take some time to cure him. The sister asks that her son may be remembered that he may have good eyesight. He has heretofore been nearsighted.

Sister Eliza Maxwell requests prayers for her son, and asks that the Saints join the family in fasting on July 4. He has secured temporary relief from prayer, yet this special effort is asked in the hope that the Lord may be pleased to restore him. Sister Maxwell wishes, however, to be subject to the will of God.

Letter Department

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, April 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have just had our annual Easter conference. All seemed to enjoy a very happy, peaceful time. Business opened Saturday evening at 6.30.

There has been much sickness among the Saints during the winter months. Two sons of Brother Smith have joined the colors. They are missed in their home circle and in the church, as is also Brother Pitman, a fine young man well respected by all who know him.

Our branch president, Brother Hedrick, is a very energetic worker. We are pleased to know our mission president, W. H. Greenwood, has arrived safely in America for the conference. We trust he will profit by his visit there, and trust that he may have a safe return voyage.

It is now six years since my husband brought us to this large city of Birmingham, and well did the Lord show me in a beautiful dream how rugged the road would be, but how by his almighty hand he would cause obstacles to disappear.

We can truly say, Surely his kindness and mercy has followed us all the days of our lives, and we hope to dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

SISTER JOHN SCOFIELD.

112 Ferne Road, Sparkhill.

ALBERTON, SOUTH AUSTRALIA, April 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am reminded by the date that General Conference begins to-day, and I pray that our Father will abundantly bless the conference so that the business transacted may be in accordance with his divine will. I have been laboring in this district about seven miles from Adelaide for the past eight months, and though I have distributed a lot of literature and done a lot of personal work, I have not had the pleasure of winning one soul for the kingdom so far. But I have the satisfaction of knowing that we have been able to inform a considerable number of the difference between us and the Utah Mormons.

The Mormons have been very busy in this locality of late, two of their elders living here and getting around from door to door with their tracts. This has not been altogether an unmixed evil, as it has given me many opportunities to explain the difference. I wonder sometimes if ultimately the labor and money these people are expending in missionary work will not in the near future be a help to us. It seems to me that the time must be near for the coming forth of the sealed book, which will show these people that the Reorganized Church is after all the true church.

I am becoming fairly well known about here. About six months ago I was thrown out of work as a result of the combined influence of the war and drought. As I could not get other work, I obtained a horse and dray and started a fruit and vegetable round. It has given me a better opportunity for getting in touch with the people. As a result, I am becoming well, and I think favorably known, and though I may not have the pleasure of reaping what I have sown, yet some one else may be able to reap an abundant harvest. I read an article sometime ago about some being sowers and some reapers, and I sometimes think I am of the former class. The Lord has given some encouragement from time to time, and I know that in the end we shall reap if we faint not.

I hope as a result of the conference which convenes to-day, we may have more help in Southern Australia. We have only one missionary here, Brother Gammidge, and though he does what he can, he is hampered by having to preside over the Adelaide Branch. I feel the need of some young men to get around and wake the people up. I hope it may be possible for a missionary to come here and do some reaping.

I have had a lot of discouragement in my efforts here, but the Lord is good; he has encouraged me from time to time, and I mean to press forward, ever trusting in him and striving to do my best, and above all to lead a good life, for I realize example is better than precept.

Ever working and praying for the kingdom, I remain,

Your brother,

King Street.

WALTER DYKE.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, April 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: It was with deep sorrow that I left the conference and started on the long journey home, in response to a telegram announcing Mrs. Greene's illness. It was the third time in twenty-seven years that I had been called in, once for death, and once before for sickness. Somehow I felt the assurance that the Lord would hear the prayers of his people; and am glad to report that the cloud is passing away, and we are thankful indeed.

Events often occur, however, that cause us to wonder at the dispensations of God, which are past our finding out. Two years ago it was my privilege to assist in the ordination of Brother Philmore Millard Falkingham, of Jonesport, Maine, to the office of priest. This young man had applied himself diligently to the work, and his influence has been remarkable in the town and surrounding country. He entered Colby College at Waterville, to prepare himself for better service to the church and his fellow men.

Monday, the 19th, is known as Patriots' Day, and is a legal holiday in New England, when we celebrate the Battle of Lexington. Brother Falkingham and a friend had been canoeing on a branch of the Kennebec River, and after a ten-mile spin were opposite the college buildings when the canoe capsized. Brother Falkingham swam ashore, and was running up and down the shore to warm up, when he noticed his friend sinking, and immediately jumped in and swam to his rescue. He had nearly reached his side when he was seized with heart failure and sank at once. He was within arms length of the canoe, and less than twenty feet from shore.

His body was recovered in about two hours, and after due preparation was taken to the home of the college president, where it remained until after chapel services the next day. The president paid the following tribute in his address:

Mr. Falkingham, in the few months he was among us, gained the respect and high regard of all who knew him. He was a fine type of physical manhood, who had mind and heart to match. He was clean and pure in speech and deed; kind and friendly and generous; loving all and beloved by all. The way he met his death was the way he lived his life; it was the way of helping and unselfish service. After the accident he swam safely to shore, and then lost his life going back to save his friend.

To find the larger meaning of such an event as this baffles the understanding. Why this boy in the early morning of manhood, with his lofty purpose and noble ambition, and splendid hopes of unaccomplished years; why he should be permitted to leave a world that seems to sorely need such as he, we can not tell. We must turn to him who alone knows, and with simple, trusting faith, say through our tears, "Thy will, not mine be done."

Professor H. W. Brown wrote as follows to the bereaved parents: "The college is in deep mourning for your manly son, who has been so tragically taken from us; and in the heart of every Colby student there must ever remain, concerning your boy, the pain of a sad, tender, and sacred memory. The deceased was universally respected and loved.

"No one has a word of reproach for Philmore Millard Falkingham. He was energetic, friendly, helpful, trustworthy. He took his place in the college as one who wanted to impart as well as to receive good. He stood on the side of all right things. He was unselfish. He lost his life through the very excess of his impulse towards self-abnegation. That he needed not to have hazarded so much does not lessen the fact that he was willing to do so. Herein he showed himself to possess the character which the whole world properly recognizes as heroically Christian. After all, he died as you would have had him die, had you known that death was inevitable.

"His influence upon the faculty and the students of Colby is thus strongly to the credit of that phase of Christian faith which he and his parents represent. He honored his parents, his church, and his God. As a student he was given an important position in the Y. M. C. A. organization. . . . In his sudden death and the manner of it, he has exerted an influence of saving power here, which many a man has failed to render in a long lifetime of ordinary existence. For this let us be thankful.

"Every mourning student—and all are mourners—desire to possess and to pass on those elements of excellence, of moral worth, those virtues of mind and heart which have made this former comrade beloved by all."

Brother Falkingham has been prominent as a worker in Sunday school and church. He was developing as a speaker; commanding respectful attention from all in his home town. Three weeks before this tragedy he presided over the prayer meeting and dwelt at length upon the joy he experienced in his religious life, and his hope of doing good among his fellow students.

The whole town was in mourning. Schools were closed, and the student body attended as a mark of respect. Flags were at half mast. The pastor of the Congregational church and his choir led the singing. Reverend Mann of Westbrook, Maine, and Mr. Skillings of Colby (the young man whom he tried to save), assisted in the service. I could find no more appropriate text than the words of the Master: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Brother and Sister Falkingham have the prayers and sympathy of all God's people.

Respectfully yours,
U. W. GREENE.

Editors Herald: On Sunday, May 9, 1915, in the small hours of the night, the bell in the tower of the Kirtland Temple rang out its warning of fire! a cry that stirs the heart of any who hear it. Hurried feet wended their way to the foot of the temple hill, where fire was consuming one of the oldest residences of the historic town of Kirtland. History tells us that this house was built by one Peter French, when the inhabitants of the place found their way through the dense forest by the blazed trail. The house was built about the time of Perry's victory, when a huge pile of logs was piled near the spot and burned in honor of the event.

The house was later owned by N. K. Whitney, so it is claimed. At the time it was burned it was owned by John Shuppe. The excellent walls still stand to mark the spot. Those who have visited Kirtland will understand what place is meant when we say it was situated just at the foot of temple hill, on the corner as one turns toward the bridge which spans the east branch of the Chagrin River. The house was built of brick made by hand and laid in lime mortar, burned by the parties themselves, it is stated.

Hence passes one of the old landmarks of the pioneer days of our historical Kirtland.

Editors Herald: We would like to ask if there are any Latter Day Saints living at or near Corning, California? If there are any I would like them to write me soon. I am still preaching at the Rose Crossing Schoolhouse, with a good attendance. One has been baptized, and others are interested.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD very much. I do not see how any live Saint can do without it. The many cheering letters that it brings each week are inspiring to the soul.

In looking over the HERALD I was glad to learn that our faithful Brother J. T. Riley was sent back here. He was the first to open up the work at this place. He is also the one who baptized me. We have about thirty members here now. We have bought a house and lot in Winthrop and have preaching every Sunday. We are truly glad to have a place in which to worship. We have succeeded in getting an elder and a teacher to move here. We are to be organized into a branch, which will take place in the near future.

Elders W. M. Aylor and J. T. Riley held a meeting here in the winter and baptized two, and three have been baptized since by Elder J. Hoffman, who lives here. Among the latter was a fine young man who will have to carry the good news and glad tidings if faithful.

Wishing success to all, I remain,

Yours in the faith,

Ohio

On my return trip from General Conference I visited friends in Des Moines, Iowa, also Waterloo, and relatives and Saints in Chicago, arriving home at Kirtland, Saturday, May 1. I thought, "Now I will rest up a week or two and then start out for another year." On the following Sunday, May 2, I had the privilege for the first time, of preaching in the Kirtland Temple.

On Wednesday, May 5, I received a card from Elder E. L. Ulrich, of the Toledo Branch, saying, "Come at once. We need you for the meetings at Sylvania." I prepared immediately, and left home Thursday for Toledo. Brother Ulrich, with the assistance of the branch president, Brother Hittrick, had gone to Sylvania, twelve miles out, and rented a hall. With them working every day, it was hard to preach every night. We started in on Friday night and held on till Sunday, May 16. The people got us confused with the Utah church, and I was asked to deliver a lecture on "Mormonism," which I did to a large crowd. It broke down prejudice to a certain extent.

These meetings brought ten into the fold, seven of whom were grown people. We expect to return this fall and hold more meetings there, if we can again secure the hall.

Brother Ulrich is a fine young man to work with. He has a motorcycle, and in that way we were able to go and come every night. Many times we were called by those attending the meetings as well as those of the town the "motorcycle evangelists." We found it a very easy way getting around, and are looking forward to the time when we can get out and make new openings in that way.

I am expecting Brother J. C. McConaughy this week, and if the weather man will favor us with warm weather we expect to start in the season with the tent. If there are any Saints in western Ohio who know of friends or Saints who would like to have meetings, kindly let me know. My mission address this year is 609 Chestnut Street, Toledo, Ohio.

I just returned from a short visit with the Saints at Oak Harbor, Ohio, where I found the work progressing as well as could be expected. Thus the good work goes on.

Trusting this year may be marked with success for the church work in every way, I am,

Yours in the conflict,

TOLEDO, OHIO.

Southeastern Mission

Down where the orange blossoms grow and near where the beautiful Gulf of Mexico touches our southern shores, ye missionary deals out the words of life to those whom fancy, idle curiosity, real interest, or perhaps the parental mandate impels to listen, and at the same time incidentally makes observations as to the spiritual, social and economic development, as obtained under the supervision of the powers that be. On the spiritual side we see advancement proportionally as we yield ourselves to the law of development as found in the gospel of Christ, and the two last-named fields seem to loom up before us at present in greater magnitude than ever before.

In the Sunny South, as elsewhere, the struggle for existence continues, in some instances practically resolving itself into the Darwinian theory of the "survival of the fittest." The gulf separating capital and labor grows wider and wider, while in desperation the laborer clamors for his inalienable rights and a division of the spoils. "Never," says the capitalist, and as one has expressed it, "The greedy monopoly grinds on." May we venture the thought that the small outbursts here and there are but harbingers of the more determined and universal effort for liberty and equality.

In the midst of this confusion it is indeed restful to turn our minds to the theoretical solution of this world-problem, as revealed in the sacred books; but far more so will it be when we can see a more practical application of the divine economy. Although the gospel is primarily individualism, as its greatest expositor amply exemplified, obviously preaching a change of heart as a first requirement, yet it has been estimated that three fourths of his teachings have reference to our relation to our fellow man; and may we not by reason of this change of heart catch a broader vision of our corporate responsibility?

William Newton Clarke says, "Society is the field of Christianity. To bring the sound and godly life to perfection in the narrow field of individualism is impossible. The great laws of life depend upon reciprocity, and can not be brought to full effect until men are obeying them together. There are duties that are altogether social; high virtues, too, that can not be exercised except in the social field. The Christian character is a social character as well as a private, and the full victory of Jesus' ideal can be won only by a revolution that touches every fiber of the social heart and every action of the social life."

The idea of equality appeals to right thinking men, and especially to those who are deep down in the struggle for existence. Thinking men in the past have arrived at varied ideals of the social order. To Plato it was the republic, to Augustine it was the city of God, to Sir Thomas More it was Utopia, but to God and Christ it is Zion, the pure in heart. We do not want a democracy which is "a recognition of rights," but a brotherhood which is "an acknowledgement of duties" from the standpoint of love.

May we think upon these things, have all things prepared before us, both temporal and spiritual, live the gospel together, that Jesus' ideal may be realized in deed and in truth.

Yours for Zion's weal,

A. E. WARR.

News from Branches

Bay City, Michigan

The work has advanced much here. Our number is gradually increasing, ten being baptized the past week, some who have grown old, others from the junior class of our Sunday school. All walked bravely into the cold water, and were afterward blessed in confirmation. Some of these have persecuted the work, but honest in heart, they accepted the truth.

As old and young were led into the water last Sabbath we sang "God is marshaling his army." The rite of baptism is to be attended to again next Sunday.

The work among the children is very encouraging. We feel more and more that "just anybody" can not teach the children. We have some talented teachers, and through the normal work are preparing more for service along that line. Five of us are getting ready for the third examination.

We are proving at this place that the lazy man or woman can not be a Saint in the real sense, for we find not a moment to lose. Our Religio has grown more and more attractive. The crowds are increasing, which shows the value of active committees. Our young men seem to enjoy rendering music, and certainly music is a gift of God, especially as we see it cultivated for the sole purpose of helping carry on the gospel work. There is much work yet to be done, many are yet to hear the angel's message. Every Saint must in a sense be a teacher, and no work is trifling.

Brother O. J. Hawn has been with us for some time. He is leaving soon, but we expect to hold the fort until help comes. We find the fight the sweetest thing in life, knowing that if faithful we are not alone.

Praying for the success of the cause, I am,

Your sister,

1511 Sixth Street.

EDITH SMITH.

The Children's Home

Children's Day in Lamoni

Sunday, June 13, was set apart as Children's Day, and the entire day was given up to the children. The regular Sunday school lessons were suspended, and a happy throng of bright faces glowing with animation and delight covered the platform and occupied the front part of the spacious church. A beautiful and appropriate program had been prepared and was carried out with pleasing effect.

The older people who crowded the galleries and rear of the church partook of the spirit of the occasion and rejoiced with the little ones, apparently catching in full fruition the spirit of the divine injunction, "Let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit; and remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph."

Our family from the Children's Home mingled with the other children in all the exercises and enjoyments with the same glad and care-free delight, forgetting in the happiness of the occasion the misfortunes that have contributed to make them inmates of this institution, and to throw them into the association of a community that receives them with open arms and sympathetic love.

How such evidences cause the heart to rejoice and swell with gratitude to God who inspired the prophet to say: "There should also be a home for children established, and the effort of the Daughters of Zion should be approved and carried unto completion as soon as is consistent with the necessary demands of the work of the church in other directions."

Thank God the time came! and that a generous and loving people provided the means to establish that home beautifully, embowered in those lovely trees, a little way from the church where these children will retire from this happy occasion with minds filled with happy memories too deep and heartfelt to ever be effaced. God also bless those kind hearts and true friends who have made this home possible, thus demonstrating the living truth of the divine words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

After this service a sermon devoted to children was delivered by Elder John Garver, in which he expressed the well-established principle that children are the most sacred trust ever delivered into the keeping of men and women; and expressed the conviction that no family not touched at some angle by the sweet influence of childhood could ever complete its mission. To this we could heartily respond with full approval, and add that the nearer and deeper this influence the more complete the result.

Thank God for children! Thank God for the fatherly and motherly instinct that causes men and women to tenderly and carefully provide for their own, and for the extension of that instinct that causes them to provide for the needy children of others.

As a fitting close to the exercises of this eventful, happy day, seven precious buds of promise were buried with Christ in baptism. May the happiness of this day be but a prelude to the life of service now dawning before them.

Suggestion

In answer to our invitation for suggestions on the raising of means for the Children's Home, one good brother, superintendent of a Sunday school, who is willing to put it in practice suggests: "Why could not the Sunday school superintendents get the schools to have a fast day, or two days, say the second and fourth Sundays in each month, and each one who can give ten cents each fast Sunday. I sincerely believe that this would relieve the situation, and I believe that as a rule the Sunday schools are always ready and willing to cooperate in an undertaking of this kind. . . . You can readily see if no more than twenty per cent of the schools responded to this that it would be quite an item."

We see no reason why every Sunday school, Religio, or person should not be free to adopt any system they chose, but we could not approve of a system that would cause those who can not contribute to feel any embarrassment on that account. If this or any other plan can be adopted and so carried out that none would feel embarrassment it would be appreciated, and encouraged by the trustees.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS MORE ON DEBT

While writing these items a good sister came in and wrote out a check for one hundred dollars to be applied on the debt. We need now but twenty-three more of these and we will report the home free from debt; and we certainly will apply all given for this purpose as directed, using it not for current expenses.

These twenty-three are certainly coming. It is a pleasure to work with and for such generous souls as have been assisting to maintain the Children's Home.

Childhood's Days

In childhood's days—in childhood's days!
The sky was pure—the grass was green,
And every flower that met our gaze,
In hope's prismatic hues was seen.
How lovely then seemed every phase
In which each season reappears!
What spring can vie in after years—
With childhood's days—with childhood's days?

In childhood's days—in childhood's days,
Our frames are weak—our hope is strong!
We bound through life's bright, flowery ways
With ringing laugh and merry song.
A world of care before us lays.
But what heed we, who know it not?
Our tears are brief, and soon forgot
In childhood's days—in childhood's days!

My childhood's days—my childhood's days!
There is magic in the word,
Half joy, half sadness, that will raise,
So oft its welcome sound is heard.
In riper years life's zest decays,
No laugh does e'er so jocund ring,
Nor woodland birds so sweetly sing,
Since childhood's days—since childhood's days.
My childhood's days—my childhood's days!
E'en while I tread life's downward hill,
Their light shines forth with weakened rays
That shed a halo round me still.
And as the wearied traveler's gaze
On scenes long past, looks back in vain—
I would I might recall again
My childhood's days—my childhood's days!

Hymns and Poems

Graceland Poetry

[The influence of the spirit of cooperation and helpfulness which characterized the work of Graceland College, and makes to the end that character and better service may follow in the activities of those who enter truly into the life of this institution, is not the least of the good influences of the school. Something of the significance of these things is realized by those associated together on the "College hill," and of their high regard of the same, is caught in the following poems. The first "A Graceland farewell," written by Austin M. Dobson, a student at Graceland for a number of years, and appearing in the 1915 "Acacia," the Graceland annual, published by the students, deals with the pleasant associations and fond memories which make for true friendship. The second, "A benediction," by Marjorie Tait, a young student, was written in commemoration of the farewell prayer meeting held recently in the college chapel, and tells of the strong religious influence of the college. The third, "Adown the years," dedicated to the graduating class of 1915, and written by J. A. Gunsolley, one time acting president and for many years in charge of the commercial department of the college, sets forth that true greatness comes only with learning through humility—through learning "by study and by faith" and for which Graceland stands preeminently.—EDITORS.]

A GRACELAND FAREWELL

There comes a tinge of sadness
With that melancholy day,
When, parting from our Graceland,
We shall each pursue our way;
For the ties that bind us closely
In the bonds of Christian love
Are welded by the Spirit
Of the God who dwells above.

We have daily been together
In the class room and the hall;
We have grown to each a brother
Since the days of distant fall.
We've rejoiced in others' pleasure,
We have wept when they were sad;
In our Graceland richest blessings
Are bestowed on lass and lad.

We met midst scenes of autumn
 When the leaves were tinted red;
 Too soon that season vanished
 To abide with summer's dead.
 We met the snow-clad winter
 As he climbed the College Hill;
 We heard him when he left us
 To invite the daffodil.

Together we have welcomed
 The seasons of the year;
 The joyous, verdant springtime
 To all has grown most dear.
 But with perfume-scented flowers
 There must come a gentle sigh,
 'Tis the parting word, "Farewell,"
 To our Graceland dear, "Good-by."

With a sense akin to sorrow
 We approach that time of year
 When the distance will have silenced
 Voices sweet which now we hear.
 Ties of friendship welded firmly
 Will be carried near and far,
 Then will Graceland be our solace,
 Thoughts of her our evening star.
 —Austin M. Dobson in "Acacia 1915."

THE BENEDICTION

Again we kneel his throne before,
 The birthplace of the best in life,
 Remembering how soon we'll see once more
 A world with sin and sadness rife.

Too soon, a part of it we'll be!
 But each for other oft has prayed
 When trials come, that we may see
 A solid base has here been laid.

Then, glancing back, we'll see again
 Sweet pictures of a swift-fled past;
 More hours of sunshine than of pain
 There were. Alas! they went too fast.

Behold, again, these girls and boys
 Remember why they are so dear,
 And think the end of all our joys
 In Graceland's halls is drawing near.

Now, each has just a word to say,
 Because we love this college band.
 And all, by earnest effort, pay
 A tribute to our loved Graceland.

Let us on this occasion fair
 Unite, as sister and brother,
 In one fervent ascending prayer
 For glad Graceland and each other.

"Father, we're helpless as a child
 Viewing the wide, wide world before.
 Father, thy Spirit send, holy and mild,
 Thy guiding hand each of us be o'er.

"Father, and may her faculty
 Be ever blessed—her students all.
 Grant some may always ready be
 To come at Graceland's pleading call."

Now may we bear with us the light,
 And gladsome touch of each old song
 By youthful voices sung to-night;
 May mem'ries sweet guide us along.
 May, 1915. MARJORIE TAIT.

ADOWN THE YEARS

In years agone, some less, some more,
 To run the race of life, and o'er
 Earth's pilgrimage our way to make,
 Each one and all our course did take
 Adown the years.

From childhood's hour in strength we grew
 In knowledge, and in wisdom, too,
 Until we thought the azure sky
 Above we'd reach, if we'd but try
 Adown the years.

In youth, our aspirations pure,
 We deemed that our success was sure.
 The wonder was to us, how such
 So young as we could know so much.
 Adown the years.

The time passed on; but all too slow
 The world did move, for we did know
 Our wisdom and our knowledge rare
 Would prized be beyond compare,
 Adown the years.

And now to manhood's blessed estate
 We've come, and to us all the gate
 Of opportunity stands wide,
 And we within may safe abide
 Adown the years.

'Mong other things we needs must learn
 Is this: the planets do not turn
 About our center; but they all
 The plan of God obey, or fall,
 Adown the years.

So we shall find, as others have found,
 That to be great, or be profound
 In understanding, first must we Bow down and learn humility,
 Adown the years.

So, now, on our Commencement day,
 The Gold and Blue in streamers gay
 About us, let us pledge anew
 Our fealty to all that's true,
 Adown the years.

Our alma mater we'll revere.
 And for our Graceland shed a tear,
 As from her walls we outward go
 To make our fight for weal or woe
 Adown the years.

Then, classmates, teachers, fare thee well.
 Eternity alone will tell,
 When books are opened, kept by hand
 Of angels, how we then do stand
 Adown the years.

O, may that record then reveal
That each has won a golden seal
For his diploma; and may God
Reward us for the path we've trod
Adown the years.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

Eastern Colorado: Ammon White, J. R. Sutton, S. S. Smith and J. Charles May.

I bespeak for these brethren the hearty support and cooperation of the local ministry and the Saints, and ask that they in return assist the local brethren when possible, and more especially that they look after the needs of the scattered Saints, and the auxiliary work away from branches.

The brethren of the ministry will please remember that reports are due July 1, October 1, and January 1. Annual report should be mailed to me not later than March 1. I will furnish you blanks for the annual report in due time, but prefer that you secure from the Herald Office blanks for quarterly reports. In order to better meet the demands of the field, I would be pleased to have you write me once a month as to your whereabouts and the conditions of the work in the locality where you may be laboring, if only briefly.

I shall be pleased to hear from any of the brethren and Saints in the mission as to conditions, prospects for the work, etc., and will render you all the assistance in my power, hoping for a successful year for the work throughout the field.

My home address is 1420 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri, mission address 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Respectfully your colaborer,
PETER ANDERSON.

To the Officers and Members of the Church in Scandinavia, British Isles, Germany, and Palestine; Greeting: Being a stranger to the greater part of this vast mission, I have delayed writing my pastoral until, by consultation, I have learned somewhat of conditions in various parts of the field. The following brethren will labor under conference appointment, in the following fields:

Norway, Peter Muceus.
Sweden, C. A. Swenson.
Denmark, Peter T. Anderson.
Germany, Alexander Kippe.
Palestine, no one appointed until the war is over.
England, W. H. Greenwood associate minister in charge.
Evangelical ministers: James Baty, Henry Greenwood.
Bishop: Roderick May, who will have general charge of financial matters in the mission, assisted by his counselors.
High Priests: Manchester District, J. W. Taylor, G. W. Leggott, W. R. Armstrong; Western Wales District, Thomas Jones; Leeds and Bradford, Thomas Taylor.
Elders: W. H. Chandler, Warrington;;; John Bailey, Eccles; Edward Maloney, Farnsworth; John Schofield, Birmingham; J. E. Meredith, Birmingham; Albert Kendrick, Birmingham; William Ecclestone, Leicester; John Judd, Enfield; E. J. Trapp, Gloucester; James Schofield, Denton and Hyde; Charles Cousins, Sheffield District; John Holmes, Sutton-in-Ashfield; Earnest Wragg, Clay Cross; John Pughley, Aberaman; T. J. Picton, Neath; J. G. Jenkins, Gilfach Goch.
Priests: Joseph Holmes, Clay Cross; Abel Hall, Manchester; Harry Sykes, Sheffield.

The brethren in England will labor according to the rotary plan as heretofore, reporting to Brother W. H. Greenwood, who will have the active oversight during my absence.

There is no doubt but we have entered upon the troublous times prophesied of in days of old. There is certainly distress of nations, with perplexity, with the hearts of men failing them through fear.

Our duty as men of God is to stand in holy places and preach the gospel with the warning voice: it is the Lord's last message to the nations before the end. We should try to keep ourselves free from the animosities that embitter the lives of warring nations, and remember, that we are brethren in Christ.

So far as possible, I desire that the bishop's hands be freed from local work, that he may devote his time to temporalities. To this end Brother Greenwood will assist in the city of London, if his throat condition will admit of outdoor work during the summer months; otherwise provide help if it is available.

During the year I hope to see tracts suitable for introducing the gospel to strangers, prepared and translated into the languages needed for our work. This is a long-felt want. It will receive attention.

The date of my going abroad is indefinite; depending entirely upon conditions that may develop. I regret that this is so and pray that my hands may be liberated.

We earnestly pray that the Lord will bless and protect his Saints, and provide for every necessity. It will be incumbent upon the membership in every land to remember the financial law, and make every sacrifice possible that means may be provided to carry on the work.

I shall be glad to render every assistance within my power, and shall be glad to hear from the missionaries at any time.

The appointing of time and place for holding the mission conference will be left to Elder W. H. Greenwood, who will consult the brethren interested.

Matters requiring immediate attention should be sent to him in the British Isles. In the other fields direct to me.

Please be prompt in reporting upon the dates agreed upon.

Respectfully yours,

U. W. GREENE.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, U. S. A., 55 Grant Street, June 8, 1915.

To the Saints and Priesthood of Southern Indiana District, Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in this district again, I ask your cooperation in doing all that we can to build up the work and break up as much new ground as possible. Our force is small and we have a large field, so we earnestly ask all who hold the priesthood in southern Indiana and central and eastern Kentucky to get in touch with me. Let us know your needs and what you are doing to effect new openings that may require the presence and help of one of the missionaries.

We hope the Saints will put forth every energy to help the work with their money as well as their work. The church needs are great financially. Since the Lord has said, "He that will not learn his duty and show himself approved, shall not be accounted worthy to stand," let us not be in the rear when our report is turned in next March. Let us be as near the front as possible.

My field address is 220 East Saint Clair Street, Indianapolis, Indiana; home address 813 West Kansas Street, Independence, Missouri.

J. W. METCALF,
Assistant Minister in Charge.

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

Saints of Saskatchewan District: I wish you to know that we are short of funds and are not able to supply all the families of our missionaries. While we must acknowledge that times have been hard, we think also that when the Saints understand the conditions they will rally to the cause. So, dear Saints, send along your tithes and offerings. Let it not be said of us again that we are unable to supply the elders' families, who have left home and loved ones to proclaim the angel's message and gather in the honest in heart to the true fold of Christ.

Your brother,

J. L. DOBSON, Agent.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Arizona: A little over one hundred dollars per month is needed to support the families of the missionaries who are expected to give their time and labor exclusively to the ministry in this field. Can the Saints of this State meet such a demand?

A neat church building was erected in Douglas, Arizona, this spring without membership backing. Trusting in the Lord to stand by us, we went ahead and performed our part fully, with satisfactory results, almost miraculous in the eyes of the people. If we move ahead as individual members in this State with like determination to perform our part, trusting in the Lord to move on the hearts of others, we may render a satisfactory report for Arizona at the close of the year.

Send tithes and offerings to the undersigned without delay, that we may be able to meet the obligations placed upon us. Remember, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The gathering will be of those "Who have made covenant with me by sacrifice." S. D. CONDIT, Agent.

DOUGLAS, ARIZONA.

June "Century"

The leading feature of the July Century is an article called "Paris: red and black—and gold!" by Estelle Loomis, describing in a series of spontaneous impressions not the war facts but the war feelings of the most sensitive city in the world. The streets, the shops, the fashions, the attitude of the women, the American hospital, life in a pension, are some of the subjects treated, with a background of war and the varied emotions of war. Lester G. Hornby provides a series of sketches, and there are also a number of unusual photographs of the various American war-charities in Paris.

Another interesting article relating to the war is T. Lothrop Stoddard's "Imperiled Holland," with an introductory note by Hendrik van Loon, the Dutch historian, and James Davenport Whelpley's "English Characteristics," as observed during the stress of war. Mr. Stoddard points out how Holland, midway between the two giant hostile empires, flooded with refugees, in constant fear of the loss of her colonial empire on which her prosperity depends, and maintaining with difficulty a neutrality begrudged by all, is easily the most unhappy of the neutral countries.

Of timely interest is Gardner L. Harding's "The peril of China," showing how at a moment when China had reached a point of unprecedented hopefulness, having established herself against all odds on a stronger basis than ever before, she has been faced with a new and unexpected menace in Japanese aggression. The author shows that wherever Japan assumes control, there European and American trade rapidly diminish.

Cleveland Moffett's "Into the crater of a volcano," describes a thrilling descent into Kilauea, the famous Hawaiian volcano. The article is accompanied by a remarkable series of two-color plates from Lumiere photographs.

The Century serial "Me" comes to an end in the July number. There are stories by Barry Benefield, Reginald Bliss and Peter O'Shea; and poems by Alfred Noyes, William Rose Benet, Charles Hanson Towne, and Ruth Comfort Mitchell. "In Lighter Vein" and "Current Comments" conclude the number.

July "Cartoons Magazine"

What the cartoonists of England, France, Spain, Canada and the United States think of the Lusitania disaster is portrayed in the July Cartoons Magazine, which devotes almost half its space to cartoons and world comment on the crisis with Germany. The entrance of Italy into the arena of war was naturally the subject of many striking cartoons, the best of which are reproduced in this issue.

CHRIST AS OUR WITNESS, LEADER, AND COMMANDER

Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.—Isaiah 55: 4.

This Scripture is understood to refer to Christ. It suggests our subject, Christ as a leader, a witness, and a commander.

The subject has a martial or warlike sound that may be thought to be out of harmony with his mission as the Savior of men. But those who have had experience in his service will not need to be told that it is a warfare. It is a fight against a triple alliance,—the world, the flesh, and the Devil. No one of the three has been idle.

The world especially has made it interesting for the people of God, in latter days as well as in former days. Those who could not be enticed away by temptation or flattery, or purchased with money, have been subjected to violence.

Mr. Hudson Maxim, inventor of explosives and weapons of war, in a certain article told of a certain English inventor who in the year 1718 invented a machine gun that would use either round or square bullets. In a way he was a humorist. When he applied for a patent he specified that the round bullets were to be used when killing Christians; while the square bullets were to be used in killing Turks.

His idea was that a Christian should be killed with a little consideration, while anything was good enough for a Turk.

Evidently Latter Day Saints have been considered neither Christian nor Turk. They have been shot at with all kinds of bullets,—round, square, and three-cornered, brass bullets, soft-nosed bullets, BBs, DDs, Minie balls, and mud balls. But the Lord has said that no weapon forged against his work shall prosper. Why? Because of the character of our leader and commander.

There have been many leaders of men, warriors like Grant, Lee, Washington, Cæsar, Alexander, a long roll of men who stand higher than the heads of their fellows. There is another long line of leaders of the character of Lincoln and Gladstone who were constructive and conservative statesmen and thinkers. But above all leaders towers Christ, the greatest of all.

He was great in this: Most men legislate for others; but Christ never gave a law or issued a commandment that he did not himself stand ready to obey. He was a leader who always led.

In that he is the great witness. He taught a certain mode of life and he was a living testimony to the fact that his ideas could be carried out and that they would lead to perfection of character.

He declared that he had power to lay his life down and power to take it up again, and further, that those who believe on him shall live again even though they are dead.

He was placed in a tomb, the tomb was sealed, and the august authority of Rome stood over it to see that it should not be opened. But he came forth on a Sabbath morning, as a living witness that he had told the truth. Rome could not do that which death could not do; nor both, nor all the powers combined against him could hold him captive.

His testimony as reduced to writing is found in the New Testament Scriptures. It is a mistake, however, to suppose that his work in that regard ended with his last sentence on the cross, or when the last one of his then living apostles spoke or wrote the last word that found its way into the New Testament.

To his followers he made this promise:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 19, 20.

How would he be with them? By his Holy Spirit that was to be an abiding Comforter, bringing to their minds things past, opening to their vision things to come, testifying of him, witnessing that the gospel is true (John 14: 16).

Peter on the Day of Pentecost said:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord your God shall call (Acts 2: 38, 39).

The Bible contains the letter of his testimony, we need the Spirit to make it alive. Christ is still a living witness to those who will seek after him.

As a commander he directs not only because of power, all power having been given into his hand, but by virtue of superior intelligence, operating as he does always in accord with God, and also because his laws are inherently true and just. He commands the thing that ought to be done.

He has concentrated his philosophy in these two commandments:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matthew 22: 37.

There are leagues and societies that profess to exist solely to promote the brotherhood of man, the idea of which is derived from this second commandment. But they overlook the first commandment and give little place for God in their work. They ignore the fatherhood of God, the idea of which is suggested by this first and greatest commandment. On the other hand, there are churches that profess to preach the fatherhood of God, but they largely forget the brotherhood of man, thus ignoring the second commandment.

A full and complete observance of both would bring Zion. Christ kept both of these laws. He loved God with all his heart (with all his emotions). He loved God with all his mind (all his intellect). He loved God with all his soul (the complete man, body and Spirit—all his spiritual and physical forces). The result was that he kept all of God's laws. He loved his fellow man with equal consecration and fervor.

Who are the followers of Christ? Those who keep all of his commandments, and do as he did. A certain man was asked, "Is Christianity a failure?" He replied, "No; it has never been tried."

There is a great deal of irony in that answer, yet some truth. How few there are who go into the work without reservation. Yet we can not say that Christianity is a failure until we try it in the same way that Christ tried it,—and then we will not have the occasion.

It was a success with him. He surely put it to the test. His experiences were varied. One day he rested in the home of Mary and Martha, happy and at peace. The next he was abroad among strangers and enemies, without shelter, homesick and sad. The foxes had holes and the birds had nests, but the Son of God had no place to lay his head. One day he entered Jerusalem accompanied by a triumphal procession; a little later he was bound and scourged and the people cried out, "Crucify him!" He tasted joy and he experienced sorrow. He was exalted and he was debased. He had his Gethsemane and his Mount of Transfiguration.

His experiences are ours, to an extent at least. He is fully qualified by experience, by inclination, and by ability to be our witness, our leader and our commander.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

President Sam was the eighth executive in seven years, all but one of whom were forced out of office. The country is said to be on the verge of financial collapse.

FULL CREW SUSTAINED.—Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania, on the 20th vetoed a bill to repeal the full train crew law, stating that members of the legislature had been subjected to the pleadings of a "large and persistent lobby." The governor said that since the present law has been in operation the loss of life among passengers has been substantially reduced. The railroads, he added, should receive the same consideration "that is guaranteed to the humblest citizens, and no more."

LABOR FOR PEACE.—The central labor organization of France has officially approved of a proposal from the American Federation of Labor for a world conference of labor representatives to be held at the same place and time as the peace conference. The purpose of this labor conference is to facilitate permanent peace by: The suppression of secret treaties; absolute respect for nationalities; the immediate limitation and the eventual suppression of armaments; and obligatory arbitration.

CONTRACT ANNULED.—A contract by which the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad sold in 1909 the complete output of seven million tons from its anthracite coal mines to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Coal Company, which it had just organized, was annuled on the 21st by the Supreme Court, as a violation of the commodities clause of both the Hepburn rate law and the Sherman anti-trust law. The courts specifically preserved to the Government the right to proceed in a new suit against the railroad company, to test the latter's right to purchase coal for sale.

CLAUSE UNCONSTITUTIONAL.—The United States Supreme Court on the 21st declared the "grandfather" clause of the Oklahoma election law unconstitutional. This clause was designed to evade the Fifteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. It restricted the right to vote to persons able to read and write and entitled to vote on January 1, 1866, or prior thereto, or to the lineal descendants of such persons, or to persons who had they become naturalized at that time would have been eligible to become voters. This decision will probably affect laws in other States and give the ballot to many illiterate negroes heretofore barred from voting.

TRADE NOTE.—In a note to the United States Government made public the 24th, Great Britain deals conciliatorily with trade conditions incident to the German blockade, urging that concessions have been made to United States shipping from the order in council, and which can not be continued except in cases involving particular hardship and if goods concerned are required for neutral governments or municipalities, etc. The contention set forth in the United States note of March 1 insisting upon the neutral rights of trade in noncontraband with civilians in belligerent countries is not answered. It is expected that a note will be soon sent by President Wilson to Great Britain dealing with the situation.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—A Carranza army is reported encamped in the suburbs of Mexico City, awaiting the outcome of operations elsewhere and the arrival of food supplies for the people, opposing forces being fortified behind trenches in the city. The occupation of Agues Calientes by Carranza soldiers is announced. Unofficial dispatches from Washington state that President Wilson's new Mexican policy contemplates nothing beyond moral support to some Mexican who appears to commend the backing of his countrymen, and an embargo on arms to other factions. The administration has hoped to choose a man for provisional president with the consent of Carranza, Villa and the other leaders. Four members of Carranza's cabinet have resigned and a break is reported between him and Obregon. Angeles, Villa's right-hand man, is in the United States, it is rumored with political significance. Chazaro, newest convention president at Mexico City, expresses a desire to unite for peace with the other factions. Carranza has informed the United States Government that under no circumstances will he treat with General Villa; that he will not compromise with his opponents, and that he will continue his plans to crush his adversaries. General Huerta, former dictator of Mexico, and for some time past a resident of the United States, is being held under authority of the United States Government at El Paso, Texas, under the suspicion that with others he was about to organize for an effort to gain control in Mexico. The Red Cross states that in Mexico City thousands are begging for bread.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans have taken Lemberg, Galicia, captured by the Russians in September, and are continuing their Galician campaign. The Russian retreat has been orderly, few guns and stores being taken by the Germans, and the Russian army is virtually intact, all of which lends weight to the report that the Russian defeat is due largely to the lack of ammunition. The French continue to gain north of Arras. They also report gains in the Vosges and Lorraine districts and in Alsace. The Italian advance into Austria continues, though marked with more severe fighting than heretofore. Serbian troops are operating with success in Albania. The Dardanelles campaign appears to be lagging. Russian submarines have sunk a Turkish steamer and two Turkish sailing vessels; a German submarine the British steamer Carisbrook. In outlining a munitions measure in the House of Commons on the 23d, to control the output of munitions factories and men responsible therefor, Lloyd George, minister of munitions, stated that British labor leaders had been given seven days in which to make good their promise that men would rally to the factories in sufficient numbers to produce a maximum supply of munitions. This munitions bill makes strikes and lockouts illegal; provides for compulsory arbitration; limits the profits of employers; creates a volunteer army of workmen pledged to go wherever they are wanted, and contains other provisions which would give the minister full powers to carry out the plans he has devised to develop the production of munitions. Lloyd George urges "that trade union restrictions which interfere with the output of munitions should be temporarily suspended. The cause of the allies has been hampered for the want of munitions, and it is the purpose of the Government to insure the fullest supply possible. Special appeal is being made for men to enroll as workmen, and many are responding.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

SAFE AT HOME.—Elder W. H. Greenwood, who attended the late General Conference and visited in America, under date of June 4 writes:

After a most exciting passage across the Atlantic I arrived safe at home on the evening of the above date. . . . There was great rejoicing upon my safe arrival in these perilous times.

ONWARD IN CANADA.—By letter dated June 12, Bishop R. C. Evans writes from Toronto as follows:

The work here is going along. Forty-eight baptized since I reported for 1914. Dedicated new church at New Liskeard last Sunday. Spoke in church Saturday and opera house Sunday. Brother Shields was there and preached before I came, and will continue for some time. His health is poor, but he is working well.

MUSIC CONVENTION.—We call attention to the notice by Sister Audentia Anderson, found in the Staff of this issue and announcing a music convention to be held at Independence, Missouri. This meeting should be inspirational and helpful to the sweet singers of Israel, of whom there are a goodly number within easy access of Independence. Success to the convention.

FROM JERUSALEM.—Letter just received from Brother Rees Jenkins, dated Jerusalem, Palestine, May 3, opens with the following paragraph:

We are glad that we are privileged once more to write you a few lines to inform you that we are still in Jerusalem and all in good health, for which blessing we are very thankful. So far as we are concerned all is well here, excepting that we are in need of financial help. We fully expected something on the steamship Vulcan, but were disappointed. We are doing the little we can to bring a fuller knowledge of the Christ and his gospel to our fellow men here.

Gentler than kindness, softer than the whirl of angels' wings, "sweeter than honey and the honeycomb," more beautiful than the first rosy gleams of the early dawn, is the spirit of forgiveness. When one forgives, Truth approves, Justice averts her eyes, Mercy rejoices and Love sheds tears of gratitude.—Dallas News.

Poem of Peace

Hark! I hear the sound of voices,
Like the roaring of the sea;
As a million souls uprising,
Cry for peace and liberty.

For great nations have forgotten
Love for God, and love for men;
Ay! the whole world needs the spirit
Of the King of Bethlehem.

Fling a banner 'cross the heavens,
Like a meteor let it shine;
With a message to the nations
That shall breathe of love divine.

Let it float across the heavens,
Till the world shall read the lines—
Love, liberty, humanity,
For all nations and all times.

Let it float across the heavens
Until war and sin shall cease;
Until truth and love shall triumph
And each heart finds peace.

—Mary Louise Dawson.

Doing Our Duty

It is not what we do, so much, dear Saints,
It is what we leave undone,
That gives us a bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun.

Though our path be dark and dreary;
Though we can not see the way,
There is yet a brighter dawning,
And for us a perfect day—

When our blessed God, Redeemer,
Comes to us, and says, "Well done"—
After we have crossed the river,
And seen the glory of the Son.

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing;
Learning to labor and to wait.

MRS. O. L. ROCKHOLD.

I Saw Thee Weep

I saw thee weep—the big, bright tear
Came o'er that eye of blue;
And then methought it did appear
A violet dropping dew;
I saw thee smile—the sapphire's blaze
Beside thee ceased to shine;
It could not match the living rays
That filled that glance of thine.

As clouds from yonder sun receive
A deep and mellow dye,
Which scarce the shade of coming eve
Can banish from the sky,
Those smiles unto the moodiest mind
Their own pure joy impart;
Their sunshine leaves a glow behind
That lightens o'er the heart.—Byron.

PROBLEM OF SOCIAL PURITY

FOREWORD

During the past summer, the writer was invited to give several lectures on the subject of "Social purity" and "Sex hygiene"; with the result that interest was aroused and many requests made for a resume of the lecture.

It was impossible to respond to all the requests but yet being desirous of circulating what information I had upon the subject, I concluded to prepare the article for publication, and so give to all who wished an opportunity to inform themselves upon the matter.

With an earnest hope that it may do some good in saving our young people from the dangers which allure them, we commend it to the reader.

In Mr. Harold Begbie's latest work, A Crisis in Morals, he offers as the justification for the book the following striking indictment: "I still insist after reflection and in cold blood, that IMPURITY is, indeed, the chief disease of this age, and that the chief danger of civilization does, indeed, lie in a dishonoring attitude towards woman." Yet he believes "with real assurance that the hideous and disfiguring disease of the period which spreads only because its symptoms are suppressed, will be cured directly if it is faithfully attacked."

That which constitutes the greatest menace to the strength, power and beauty of life in body, mind and spirit can be annihilated if only we can bring knowledge and sincerity to bear upon the problem instead of allowing ignorance and prudery to cover the festering mass with sheltering hypocrisies.

On the authority of Doctor G. Stanley Hall, our public teachers and parents are declared guilty of this grave, if not criminal, neglect in the proper and judicious impartation of the knowledge of sex and its concomitant responsibilities, and reminds us that it is only comparatively recently the church has taken any active part in the campaign against vice. However, the reproach against the church is no longer just, for some of the most effective work against the evils of impurity has been originated and performed by the church and church people.

Without fear or hesitation the churches have accepted the program outlined by Mr. Begbie in the book already referred to.

The immediate course of the church is straight and decisive. She must attack impurity and organize her forces to attack it. . . . She must attack it publicly, politically and nationally. . . . Not for its suppression but for its extirpation.

The three agents to which we are directed to look for help in this warfare are religion, science and politics; involving the awakening of the individual sense of reverence, the education of the mind and the development of the public conscience with the arousing of the public sense of honor.

URGENT NEED OF INTELLIGENT EFFORT

Of the importance of this movement through which the church and other influential organizations are seeking to arouse public concern and interest in this alarming menace, there can be no doubt. And the first thing which should have our attention is the education of the public as to the nature and extent of the evil to be combated; and then the causes which underlie the problem. We agree that the worst enemy of progress whether considered industrially, morally or spiritually, is INDIFFERENCE, and allied with this indifference we have IGNORANCE and PRUDERY. This trinity constitutes the deadly and stubborn barrier of stupidity to the successful advance of social purity endeavor. And of it Goethe says: "Against stupidity the very gods strive unvictorious."

We have allowed the terse saying of the Old Testament: "Where there is no vision the people perish," to become a theological device, and have all but forgotten its ethical content. Wherever there is a want of even a limitation of spiritual discernment and the consciousness of divine realities within us and about us, there exist all the necessary impulses and equipment for evil, vice and misery. The people must be led to see and understand what is possible and be taught to appreciate the ideal within their reach in order to properly and understandingly measure the danger they are in of perishing. For anything which fails of realizing its possibilities has perished.

In a recent address to an English congress, George Bernard Shaw in discussing sex education said the way to solve this problem was to keep the imagination at work, by arousing real interest in fine arts, in music, in painting and poetry, that would do the most to keep the cruder passions under. This modern satirist probably more than any other British man of letters now living realizes that a lack of vision means death to everything worth while.

MOTHER GRUNDY, THE PRUDE

Upon no other subject affecting the life and well-being of society is there exhibited such despairing stupidity as there is in this eternal question of sex, and the sex impulse. The worst phase of this stupidity is in the prudery which seeks to hide the important facts of life because of what is called "modesty"; but actually is encouraging vice to masquerade in the garb of innocence to the danger of the unwary and ignorant.

Why there should be anything to be ashamed of in nature's ways and means for the transmission of life and the continuity of species, is not quite clear. Does not this affectation of a modesty constitute a reflection upon Providence which is not less irreverent than the caricatured schoolmistress who ignored sex because she regarded it as "an indiscretion if not positive impropriety on the part of the Creator"?

There is no need to apologize for insisting that sex pedagogy should be provided for and further suggest that there could not possibly be worse results from enlightenment than we have accruing from the ignorance cultivated under prudery. For history and experience will sustain the following equation, in which we sum up the results of the unscientific processes of the past:

"Ignorance plus prudery equals pruriency."

INCUBATOR OF WORLD'S CRIME

Indifference, hypocrisy and ignorance are the incubator of vice, crime and misery; while conversely, knowledge, sincerity and diligence constitute the power which can not fail to produce freedom, dignity and achievement.

Science has in the last few years identified the influences which determine the life of succeeding generations, and what is more, has given a very clear and convincing array of evidences which show how these influences can be controlled. While the names employed may be a little strange, and also because they have been abused by those who are attracted to new words as some people are to novelties of other kinds, yet they have a very important and specific content.

Eugenics, means, in the language of Sir Francis Galton, the man who coined the word, "the science which deals with all influences that improve the in-born qualities of a race; also with those that develop them to the utmost advantage." Euthenics, means "improvement through bettered environmental conditions"; or what is sometimes referred to as "nurture."

It is not difficult to see that these are the two fundamental problems of all times, peoples and philosophies. To bring into existence a new race of men who will have more of goodness and less of evil, and be placed into an environment where it shall be easier for those men to be good and do good and harder for them to be bad and do ill. To use Bible language: The new birth of the individual and the establishment of the kingdom of God and the entrance of the new-born into that kingdom.

It is very suggestive that the tremendous need is recognized; as is also the earnestness and preparedness which is cultivated for the meeting of that need, by so many of the leading ministers, educationalists and public men and women engaged in this crusade against the forces of ignorance and prudery. It is also proof of the seriousness of the matter that a new terminology has been cultivated, and many things are being said in language which a little while ago was considered shocking. But it is now admitted that if those who should impart sex knowledge will not do so, then the awakened curiosity of the adolescent child will be gratified through other channels and by other agents who certainly would not be as particular in the motive nor the ways and means employed to satisfy that curiosity as parents and teachers.

THREE INSTITUTIONAL FACTORS

Three institutions which exert the most lasting influence upon life are the home, school and church. Particularly do these assist very extensively in supplying the foundations of character. But one can not substitute the other, they are all supplementary and should coordinate to the same end, namely, the production of character upon which the future and immortality of the race shall be established in happiness and prosperity.

It is a matter of supreme concern, especially in the United States, that home life is decadent. It can not be insisted upon too often nor too strongly that there is no substitute for home and parental influence. The teacher and the minister can not substitute for mother and father, nor are the school and church equivalent exchange for the home. To a very large degree the outcome of children is determined by what the parents and home will supply. So that in this matter of social purity all three must work together.

We know that thoughtful parents look with anxiety to the time when their boy or girl must go from the control of home for several hours in the day to be associated with crowds of other children, to see, hear and experience all sorts of acts, sayings and associations which in general tend to neutralize what the parents at home have striven to do.

We also know of the despair of the intelligent and earnest teacher who tries to supply the necessary safeguards, and yet is made to realize the deadening effect of a parental and home influence which does not care or does not know of the importance of ceaseless vigilance and tireless activity to keep the mind of the child sweet and clean and pure.

We know also of the dreadful temptations and dangers which await the entrance of youth and maiden into the industrial world; though the economic causes of vice which in some quarters have been so violently blamed are not as much responsible as some believe.

It seems as though the enemies attacking life in all of its manifestations, which every scientist has observed and from which the "law of the survival of the fittest" has been deduced, are at work with the same ferocity in the moral realm, and in a variety of ways. Hence, to produce moral fitness we must commence early and employ every means within our reach. Anything which tends to moral laxity, or can lower our standards of sex relationships, or produce irreverence in our esteem for the sacredness of sex or the sex relations, is bad and must be classified as one of the most invidious of our foes.

The abuse of the divorce courts, the disgraceful caricaturing of the marriage service, the substituting of the hotel, apartment house and the flat for the old-fashioned and independent home, and the new ideas regarding the purposes of marriage issuing in the deliberate campaign against babies, for they are regarded as intrusions, and in at least two millions of homes in America, the blockade against Nature has been absolutely effective; are all matters of grave concern and may easily account for the anomaly in which we find ourselves in America as the one Christian nation whose criminality is on the increase instead of on the decrease.

It is time that home, the shrine of civilization, should be rescued from the vandals who have sacrificed such a sacred institution to their selfish interests, and in which the future well-being of the nation is generated and conserved; that our schools should teach boys and girls something of the responsibilities which are before them; and that our church should insist on the ancient philosophy that "Where women are honored, the divinities are complacent; where they are despised, it is useless to pray to God." Then we shall develop a new code in which as before the childless women, the childless home, will not be approved, that any mother or father who allows son or daughter to go uninformed upon the greatest event in life will be held up for shame, and that every curriculum shall include sex pedagogy in order that we may preserve to the world intelligent and devoted mothers and fathers of the race which shall become "the family of God on earth."

THE SCARLET WOMAN

With curious accuracy the "Seer of Patmos" traces the pathway of the church from the pristine simplicity to the ornate and gaudy realm of barren failure; and with fascination we watch the devolution of her who once was clothed with the sun; bediademmed with stars, and founded upon the regality of the heavens as the queen, having the companionship of God, and controlling the destinies of nations for their eternal splendor, to the Scarlet Woman whose throne was uncontrolled bestiality, enslaving all nations in the distillations of her shame and sin.

She is for evermore the symbol of that deadly sin which has poisoned the sources of life and littered the pathway of progress with the wreckage of empires and nations, men and women of genius, power and culture, and, like the vampire, still sucks the vital fluids of civilization with insatiable greed. Before her imperious call everything has given way, nothing has withstood successfully her advances. She is the Nemesis which relentlessly pursues and defeats man in his struggles to the "Uplands of the soul."

Notice briefly her record in the historical epochs:

Egypt's bewitching mysticism and wonderful power, the fascinating culture of Greece, the splendor of Rome's imperialism, the romantic chivalry of France, each one going down in the vortex of sensuality, their glorious day ending in the night of dreadful revolution; lust and turgid passion of sex giving to the Scarlet Woman her ghastly triumphs over physical, mental and social dominion.

It may not be too much to say that, so far, all attempts made by the Supreme to establish the kingdom of heaven have been thwarted by the power of vice; and the "image of God in man" defaced by the corroding influence of the flesh, sparing neither beauty, culture, intellect nor genius.

If the modern church hopes to succeed in opposing the machinations of the Scarlet Woman she must acquaint herself with the methods and weapons this formidable enemy employs to accomplish her ends. We must remember also, that the church, in spite of her idealism, ecstatic vision, and rapturous joy, has not always resisted successfully the attacks which the powers of the flesh has urged with ferocious malignity.

It is also instructive to remember that the black scourge of "venereal disease" which first swept through Europe in the fifteenth century, and has maintained its devastating reign to the present, was introduced by the Crusaders. These valiant knights of the "cross"; and the defenders of the "grave of the dead Christ," while performing exploits of valor for a sepulcher, became themselves the charnel-house in which the romantic ideal had an ignominious ending. There is need for common sense, expert training, consecrated living, and altruistic devotion to God and man, besides the glamor of romance.

This need of an all-round equipment for service is emphasized when we remind ourselves that never has so much money been spent, so large a force of highly trained men and women employed for the purposes of education as at the present time in our country; and yet never have crime and vice been so prevalent and shameless as to-day; when, like a conflagration the fires of iniquity sweep through the land and, as a colossal Moloch, devour the best and noblest blood of the time. This is not a spasm of exaggeration, but the truth, as stated by Doctor Louis T. Wilson.

"This vice is on the increase rather than on the decrease in this country."

NATURE AND EXTENT OF SOCIAL EVIL

Let us seriously consider this question in the light of the results traced and catalogued by those who are qualified to speak with authority.

Doctor Prince A. Morrow says "One eighth of all disease and suffering come from this source."

Taking Chicago as a representative American city, the following statistics from the police list are alarming, to say the least: There are 192 houses of ill-fame; employing 1,912 women in this traffic of commercialized vice.

Appalling as this number of unfortunate women is, it is not to be compared with the number of men whose sin demands employment of these unfortunate creatures, which is listed at 15,180 per day, in the year totaling 5,540,700 or two and a half times as many as the population of the city. At a very conservative estimate these figures show that one half the population of the country is indulging in commercialized vice; for these figures do not take into consideration the clandestine or secretly maintained lives of vice.

However, the Chicago Commission, with Dean Sumner at the head, proved the Chicago police list to be woefully lacking in its details and estimates, and as a result of a more careful and extended investigation it was discovered that not less than 5,000 public women were employed in this work, and that 1,000 girls were required to supply the demand each year, to fill the vacancies which occurred in the ranks of the victims of social impurity; and as a result of this dreadful sacrifice of 1,000 girls annually, a profit of $15,000,000 was collected by those creatures who fattened on this pollution of the city's life.

It is estimated that there are at least 500,000 unfortunate girls and women thus being sacrificed to the lusts of American manhood, entailing 40,000 (some say 50,000) recruits each year. For it is a tragic fact that the average life of a public woman is but five years in such sin.

THE DOUBLE STANDARD

The double standard of morals which is tolerated by our civilization is a standing disgrace to our boasted culture; for while it looks with disdain upon the "fallen woman," it has no censure or frown for the "fallen man." The estimate of a French authority is that only four young men out of one thousand going to the altar to marry their brides are sexually pure. I refer to M. Brioux, the author of Damaged Goods. It is also a fact that for every "fallen woman" there are TWENTY FALLEN MEN.

And unspeakably sad as the tragedy of a woman's descent from virtue and chastity is, we are not justified in pouring out upon the "weaker sex" our merciless contempt, while the "lords of creation" blight and wither the bloom and fragrance of holy womanhood at the rate of 40,000 per year with impunity.

If men were men and not less, we should not have "fallen women," for woman is always what man wants her to be.

SOWING AND REAPING

These statistics of Doctor Morrow are full of tragic meaning:

Each year 770,000 males of the population of this country reach maturity and enter the danger zone of sex.

This great army leaves the realm of childhood each one a potential citizen, at least, with possibilities for being the greatest among men and enters into that state of adolescence in which the new emotions well up and surge through the being, liberating the powers of a new imagination which as a mighty tide carries the individual into a new world. In a most literal sense a "nation is born in a day."

But watch the history of this annual reinforcement to the Nation's manhood as they step forward to take the place of those who lay down the burden of life, and who now have the sacred duty of "carrying forward to higher heights the torch of life."

Sixty per cent, that is, 450,000 become infected with venereal disease sometime during their lifetime, at the following rates:

20 per cent before they are 20 years of age.

50 per cent before they are 25 years of age.

80 per cent before they are 30 years of age.

Then reflect that this disease is communicable not only to innocent wives, but is transmitted to the helpless offspring.

The two diseases which follow in the wake of this vicious conduct are syphilis and gonorrhoea.

Doctor Morrow says that the former is responsible for:

90 per cent of locomotor ataxia.

75 per cent of ocular paralysis.

40 per cent of abortions.

The Christian world has always held up Herod as the great baby-killer, and therefore he has been execrated; yet the self-same Christian civilization has permitted this tidal wave of lust, producing this disease which is responsible for a denial of life to from 60 to 80 per cent of unborn innocents; while many who are born are doomed to suffer with iritis, choroiditis and retinitis, which are serious diseases of the eye; or general paralysis.

The toll of the other species of venereal disease is as follows:

80 per cent of inflammatory diseases peculiar to women.

75 per cent suppurative pelvic inflammations.

50 per cent of all gynæcological operations.

80 per cent of blindness of new-born babies.

20 per cent of all blindness.

The total number of blind in the United States in 1890 was 10,000 plus, traceable to this scourge of venereal disease.

In some countries the grave menace of this condition has been recognized and provision made to cope with it; for instance, in some places, as Norway and Denmark, doctors are required to register such cases of venereal disease, as here, scarlet fever, diphtheria, etc., must be registered. In Spain a young man who wishes to marry must have a doctor's certificate as well as a license.

More and more the need of safeguarding innocent women in marriage from possible danger to themselves and their offspring is becoming imperative and some States of this Union have legislated similarly to Spain.

That such a course has some justification is suggested by a study of the following statistics:

In this country one marriage in seven is sterile; that is, the end in view, children, is unrealized.

Fifty per cent of such sterility in wives and 25 per cent in husbands is caused by gonorrhœa.

Doctor G. Stanley Hall says:

We can now squarely put the first question in this field. It is inevitable, and parents and teachers with a just sense of their responsibility must now answer it in one way or another. It is this: If the above is true, shall your children be informed of it clearly, or will you let them take their chance in ignorance, for the results of which they may later hold you to grim account?

CAUSE VERY LARGELY IGNORANCE

That this condition has its origin in ignorance of childhood is sustained by facts and experiences which have been collated, and some of which are herewith noticed.

In the Juvenile Court of Chicago, Illinois, during the first ten years of its experience, 2,241 girls were brought before it, and of this number 65 to 80 out of each hundred were arraigned for sexual irregularity. OF THIS NUMBER ONLY FIFTEEN PER CENT WERE OVER SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE.

The Committee of Fifteen in New York reports that a considerable proportion of syphilitics treated in the hospitals are boys in their teens.

Professor Fournier observed 10,000 syphilitics and found that 817 were infected before their twenty-sixth year; and 1,530 from twenty-one to twenty-six.

In 1908 there were 3,122 children brought before the Juvenile Court of New York City, and it was found that one per cent of the boys and twenty per cent of the girls were suffering from venereal infection.—Reported by Clara Schmidt.

Can parents be excused if the duty of informing children in these matters is longer neglected? Shall we not have a right to insist that our boards of education consider this subject and try to reach it in some satisfactory way, and not any longer adopt the "ostrich philosophy"? Is it not time, as Professor Henderson says, "for all those who value our national health and morality to unite in a reasonable, earnest and patient campaign for sexual purity? For apathy and neglect there is no longer any excuse."

CATALOGUE OF IDENTIFIED CAUSES

In order to properly and intelligently devise remedies we should at least get a cursory glance at the causes which produce this terrific harvest of corruption, misery and death, which has been but inadequately described. The Chicago Commission prepares the following list as discovered causes.

1. Lack of ethical teaching and religious training.
2. Economic conditions.
3. Employment in seasonable trades in which women especially are engaged.
4. Abnormality.
5. Unhappy home conditions.
6. Careless and ignorant parents.
7. Broken promises.
8. Love of ease and luxury.
9. The craving for excitement and change.
10. Ignorance of hygiene.

For six of these causes, parents, teachers and ministers are responsible. The economic causes can be reached by parents and legislation. Abnormality can be reached by eugenics. Broken promises, meaning the betrayal under the promise of marriage, might be largely controlled by home influences.

For it is so conspicuously true that when the age of puberty has been reached and the association of the sexes means vastly more than it did mean before that time, that there ought to be both judicious teaching and vigilant supervision. When courtship is permitted it should be with a dignity and sacredness which would impress upon each of the lovers the tremendous responsibility of the event. But for the foolish and promiscuous familiarity of young people, where suggestive talk, actions and liberties are permitted, there should be positive condemnation. It seems pretty clear that these ten causes can be grouped into two catalogues and both of them covered by eugenics and eutherics, which will bring them under the control of either parents or society.

PARENTAL NEGLIGENCE

Again, we can not insist too often nor too strongly that most of this world-misery is the outcome of parental negligence, either in ignorance or prudery.

Therefore we must primarily make our appeal to mothers and fathers, and insist that instruction can not begin too early, for the prophylactic method is the safest, most economical and most effective. The old saying is true in this case, "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." The two great factors in this prophylaxis are comradeship and education.

Children not properly controlled in childhood will certainly be reluctant in their obedience in youth, if at all obedient. One of the direst fruits following laxity in parental control and home discipline is this general feralism, one of the chief characteristics of American youth of both sexes. We mean, allowing young people to run wild, without chaperonage or control: grouping themselves together in the cities, loitering in public places, drug stores, dance halls, picture shows, theaters, hotel lobbies, railway stations and amusement grounds.

The clandestine motor car rides, often with parties unknown, which are too frequently the beginnings of tragedies such as can be read in daily newspapers at any time, and of many scandals which are not permitted publicity.

Another thing which needs attention is the permitting of young people, especially girls to stay away from home at nights without parents knowing precisely where and with whom they stay. Still worse is it for them to leave home and take up apartments or rooms while pursuing studies or at business.

It is well also to get acquainted with the companions with whom our children like to associate, find out by comradeship what they like to talk about, what pleasures interest them, and also what books they like to read. Live the children's lives and so prepare yourself to save them from dangers which you can see when they are quite innocent of danger.

HOW AND WHEN TO TEACH SEX HYGIENE

Of course the time and methods of teaching our children the lessons of life and its methods of transmission must be considered a serious duty that parents should not leave altogether to others but attend to themselves. Just when and how must depend upon many circumstances and particularly upon the development of the child. In no case should the child who comes with the various questions with which all are familiar, more or less, be turned away with scoldings or evasions or untruths. For if the parents will not supply the satisfactory replies, curiosity will demand satisfaction through other channels, not always sweet and clean, so that these matters which should be treated with sacredness and great care are brutalized and presented in such a way as to disgust the sensibilities.

If in the judgment of the mother or father the full information sought is considered beyond the child's capacity, then express pleasure that you have been approached and say that just now is not a good time to talk things of that kind over fully, but that you will take time to think about it and when you are ready you will tell them of the matter. ABOVE ALL THINGS DO NOT LOSE THE CONFIDENCE AND RESPECT OF YOUR CHILD IF YOU WISH TO CONTROL AND TEACH IT.

THE FINAL REMEDY

The final remedy for the social evil is in training the children to clean thinking, and unfolding the truth to them in such a manner and in such proportions as will meet the capacity and need at the time. To do this the parent must be comrade as well as mother or father, and home must be a real place of shelter, comfort, enjoyment, sympathy and repose; a place that will always be a refuge even when everything else has failed.

The unity of interests and the cooperation of parents, teachers and ministers in this greatest of all duties, is growing, and the splendid help of the earnest men and women of the medical profession who are letting in upon these questions the sweetening influence of knowledge altogether make an augury of better days and inspire us to believe that the nadir has been reached and we are on the upward trend.

Everything which can lift up the mind to a nobler and sweeter outlook upon life should be accepted and employed to improve and strengthen all that is good and honorable in the child; avoiding the measures of repression, but directing and discriminating to the end that evil shall be refused and goodness always welcome. Never forget that ignorance menaces, demeans, and enslaves. Purity in the social realm depends upon individual purity in thought and word and deed. Social redemption is in ratio to the individual consecration of life to high and noble purpose.

Finally, may we make a special plea to our boys that they will spurn the false spirit of the age, which upholds the dual standard of morality, and urge them to treat all young ladies in the same way in which they would wish their chums or friends to treat their own sisters; and that they will prepare themselves for the day when they shall seek the hand of the lady they wish for their wife and companion with a cleanness and honor equivalent to that which they hope will characterize the man who seeks the love of their sister.

Sex is a holy thing; God is responsible for it, it is not a trick of the Devil to damn the soul; it is the most dynamic spring and fountain of the heroism and chivalry the world has ever known, and to it we owe the grandeur and glory of human character, which is the heritage of the past generations to us, and will be the patrimony we shall hand over to the future.

Let us treat sex with intelligent reverence; and not allow it to run riot in the ways of sin, but direct it to the holy purposes which God has revealed in Nature's wonderful "book of life."

GAMALIEL'S ADVICE HOLDS GOOD

Jealous of the measure of success that came to the preaching of the gospel in and around Jerusalem after the day of Pentecost, the popular clergy sought by every means fair and foul to silence the apostles. At this particular time (see Acts 5) imprisonment did not stop them, as the very angels were in league with them and helped them out. Still, officers brought them before the council of the Sanhedrin to meet a charge of contempt of the council. They had been commanded not to teach their doctrine, yet they had "filled Jerusalem" with it. The apostles soberly testified that they were witnesses of the wonderful events culminating with the resurrection of Jesus, and that the Holy Spirit also was testifying of the same to all believers.

This was unbearable; they must end this mad delusion, and were about to discuss their death when a certain wise rabbi, Gamaliel, stood up in the council and "commanded to put the apostles forth for a little space." This seems to indicate he was president of the council. He is known to have been the teacher of Paul in his youth, and the very chief of the rabbis of that time. This was his advice to the council:

Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye can not overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.

They took his advice but without letting the apostles know it. They put on a bold official front. Again they "commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus," beat them, and turned them loose. The apostles departed, "rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. And daily in the temple, and in every house they ceased not to preach Jesus Christ."

The apostles were positive in the conviction that they "ought to obey God rather than men." The men, to-day, who can hold this conviction, without being fanatical, are the only ones who can build up the kingdom for the coming of the Lord.

Strange it is that Gamaliel's advice has not been taken more seriously by opposers of the Latter Day Saints. The main point in his wisdom was that "religious opinions usually gain strength by opposition and persecution, while if not noticed at all, they are sure not to leave any lasting impression on the minds of people, if devoid of truth; and it is vain to contend against them, if true." Thus writes an eminent doctor of philosophy living in our time.

DOES IT PAY?

Claiming that our elders are not worth noticing, some have announced a policy of letting them severely alone, only to reverse it the first time they see the elders are gaining the ears of the people. Sometimes they quietly boycott, seeking to poison the minds of people over whom they have influence; or perhaps they challenge to open debate, which is always accepted. However, seldom do our opposers fail, both covertly and during discussion, to slander our first president and all his successors in the faith, using sometimes the most despicable methods.

At one place in our district some years ago this method was tried out to the limit, and we went to tell the reader now how our opponents prospered in it. Our people were compelled to endure all kinds of unfair, un-American opposition from one of the most powerful and popular churches in the town. They were glad when at last the opportunity came to have the issues tried out in open debate, in which their minister essayed to take up the cudgel.

Of the issues or the immediate effect we need not write. It is interesting just now to hear of the welfare and success of the reverend gentleman who debated, and of the congregation that backed him up. He has been dead some time, but he had a successor who is now reaping the fruit of his predecessor's planting. I quote from a recent letter received from the president of our branch at that place:

I had quite a surprise this morning. This minister of the ——— Church came to me with his troubles. He said he and forty of his members could no longer fellowship the others, and they (minister and party) wanted to rent and use our Latter Day Saints' church for Sunday afternoons, Thursday nights and sometimes on Sunday nights, when not interfering with our appointments. They propose to put in electric lights and pay their share of fuel, etc.

I told him I would call a business meeting of the branch and lay the case before the membership and return him answer next week.

It seems the irony of fate that the very church which has opposed us the most, whose previous minister debated here with our Elder S. W. L. Scott and abused our church outrageously, is now divided, and the larger portion comes to us for advice and favor. Also that the widow of the aforesaid debater often came to wife and I for advice and council in all her business affairs. He died worthless, and his wife in later years lost all her property because she failed to follow our advice to sign no papers that would jeopardize her home that she inherited from her mother.

It would seem that a person can not indulge in slanderous, questionable warfare against the truth without suffering for it. It involves the sacrifice of characteristics that make up not only a good American, but also an attractive minister. The price one pays is the loss of a good personality. The nature of truth is such that those who practice it and defend it develop finer personalities, while those who array themselves against it must emphasize in their characters the opposite features that deaden the soul, kill their influence for good, make them negative and destructive in temperament, unattractive, unloved, until finally they are cast out, even by their friends.

TITHING AS UNDERSTOOD BY A MEMBER

There has been a great deal written and preached on the subject of tithing. We hear it to-day; we read it in the church papers; and we find it in the church history, also in our early church records. We find it in our standard works, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. We are all agreed that tithing is one of God's commands to the church, but we seem to be anything but a unit in what constitutes tithing as binding on ourselves.

We pick up the church statements as issued in the HERALD yearly and we find a comparatively small representation of our membership with their names written there,—less than nine thousand out of a membership of fifty thousand. At a conservative estimate one would think that there should be at least fifteen thousand tithe-payers out of fifty thousand. But we do not want to be accused of the pencil and paper habit, so we will say no more as to what number should be represented on our tithing list.

I am not going to use any quotations from the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, as we are all aware that they teach tithing, and there is not one of us I am sure but will agree that it is our duty to pay tithing. But how many have an excuse like this, "We did not save anything, so we could not pay tithing," and feel all right about it, feeling themselves justified by said excuse, and so move along with a clear conscience.

So many of our dear brothers and sisters are under the impression that when the time comes to build the temple and acquire the land round about, that it will be performed by a miracle, that they do not feel impressed with the idea that they should make any special sacrifice to add to the stores of the church.

Now my idea is that we must acquire everything by purchase, and if so we must make special effort to pay our share into the church so that there may be something to purchase with. When I say our share, I do not want to be understood that we estimate the gross amount and divide by fifty thousand to reach the amount we should give, or are in duty bound to give. I will just refer you to what the Lord said of the widow's mite. Now it would seem from this that the Lord did not think that there were any too poor to give, but he did recognize the sacrifice of this poor woman inasmuch as she had given more than all others in giving all she had.

Before going further I would like to refer you to some latter-day financing as practiced by our everyday business man. Take a catalogue house, for instance. Buildings, stock, and help represent more millions than we can readily realize. Did you ever stop to consider that the success of these houses depends almost entirely upon small orders? An order reaching fifty dollars is a rare thing. They do not thrive on large orders, but upon the large amount of small orders, and so it must be with the church. If everybody would pay some tithing you can readily see that the volume of small tithe-payers when it is all added together, as it is in the business referred to, will amount to a large sum, and thereby give the church the capital with which to accomplish what the Lord has commanded. And if I understand the Lord's plan, he will never accomplish his work here until we by our righteous living, tithing, and offerings, make it possible for him to do so. For I believe that if he were going to accomplish this work by miracle instead of sacrifice that he would have done it long ago.

Just a few words more and I leave the matter with you. I want to impress you with the thought that the Lord's work must be done by sacrifice, so let us examine ourselves. I have a good position, or my husband has a good position; we take a vacation every year; we go to different amusements; we keep up with the fashion; we entertain quite extensively; we are paying for a home; we are sending our boy to college; we are giving our girls music lessons. Now I admit that these are all more or less legitimate expenditures, but is there not some place that you could economize, sacrifice, or, putting it in very plain language, never mind what Jim does or what Mr. Brown wears, but just say to yourself, "I owe something to the Lord that must be paid, even if I have to dress a little more plainly, or cut my vacation expense some."

In conclusion I will say that I do not believe that there are any of us who have our health and steady employment but owes a debt to the Lord, and if we do not pay that debt here when he is blessing us with the means, even though we must needs sacrifice our desires and appetites to do so, when the books are opened that debt will still be there, for the debts of an honest man can never be outlived.

Saints, we are all agreed from past experience that we can spend our income. Now let us see if by sacrifice we can not begin to pay our debt to the Lord. Let our slogan for 1915 be, "Everybody's name on the tithing list," and God will bless us all.

NEGROES AS FARM OWNERS

The movement of southern negroes toward farm ownership has been one of the marked developments of the past decade. Nevertheless, even with a general knowledge of this movement, it is a surprise to learn that one fourth of all the negro farmers of the South own the farms they cultivate, and that their total value is $500,000,000.

These are the figures offered by Doctor E. C. Branson of the University of North Carolina, who is one of a committee charged with the expenditure of $3,500,000 for the betterment of the Negro. He reports that the colored man is solving his own problem, and is solving it in terms of industry and soil ownership.

Negro population in the South is dwindling, says Doctor Branson, except in the States of Arkansas and Oklahoma, but it is increasing in the cities and decreasing in the country. The negroes are rapidly changing from tenants to farm owners.

There is in this connection an interesting suggestion. In every country of the world, the land owners have developed into an aristocracy. What will happen in the South if present tendencies continue?—The Register and Leader, June 22, 1915.

ALCOHOL IN RETREAT

There is nothing on this round earth so eminent and so powerful to-day as the cause which was championed half a century ago in the city of Portland, Maine, by Neal Dow, despised and rejected by "the boys." No war, no politics, no invention, no literature, is so potent, for this propaganda affects one thousand, seven hundred million human beings. Whether you are a tippler or a teetotaler, whether you wish for a reign of John Barleycorn or his defeat, you must acknowledge this. An opinion or an appetite is a weak antagonist to a juggernaut fact as it moves down the street.

Those of us who have taken the ground that a little alcohol does no harm and may do good, a belief which may be reasonable, must yet remember what of evil alcohol let loose without stint among low or unthinking men may achieve, and it is up to us to ask whether even the example of a small drink in a quiet way is not at least constructively a wrong to mankind when the abuse of these things is doing so much harm.

No longer is the temperance cause championed by eccentrics or persons of one idea. Even the great have seen and acknowledged the world-wide evils connected with the use of alcoholic drinks. The question has reached the stage of statesmanship and involves the existence of nations. Thus it has become perhaps the most important subject before intelligent human beings.

The individual can not be alone in the world. He is simply a part of the great aggregate, as it were; one of the small organs of the great body. It is for each one to say for himself what his attitude shall be under these conditions. As the cause is now moving on, it would seem that individual desires and preferences must be swept away before long, and alcoholic beverages relegated to the status of ancient and abandoned evils.—The Economist.

JUSTICE AND JUGGLERY

Out in Wyoming a man was sentenced some time ago to hang for murder, but the indictment having recited that the crime was committed on August 12, 19013, that is seventeen thousand years in the future, his lawyers applied for and secured a writ of error to the United States Supreme Court on the ground that he was not convicted by due process of law.

There is an old case in which it is said an indictment was held bad because it charged the defendant with having forged a certain instrument, whereby one person "was bound" to another, the court holding that no one could be "bound" by a spurious document. In a North Carolina case, the court set aside an indictment because the word breast was spelled "brest," even though it was correctly rendered in a preceding clause—another argument for reformed spelling. In another case, the word kill was used instead of "did kill," and the accused was discharged. And the supreme court of Mississippi has decided that a wrong initial in the naming of the accused vitiates the indictment.

Perhaps one of the most amazing examples of legal hairsplitting is to be found in another North Carolina case. Here poor blindfolded Justice was literally juggled from one side of the State line to the other!

A man standing in North Carolina, shot across the boundary line, killing a man in Tennessee. It was held that he was not punishable in North Carolina since the crime had been consummated in the adjoining State. The authorities of Tennessee then endeavored to extradite the culprit, but the highest tribunal of North Carolina held that, never having been in Tennessee, the murderer could not be a fugitive of justice therefrom, and therefore it could not be successfully contended that he was deliverable to the latter State.

Such instances, multiplying steadily, are convincing on the point that simplification of rules governing criminal procedure is essential; and it is puzzling that the lawyers, who are chiefly concerned and alone are potent to effect a reform, do not move to that end. . . .—The Register and Leader, June 1, 1915.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Music Convention

All choristers, organists, and other musicians and music-lovers, are invited and urgently requested to attend the big music convention to be held in Independence, July 2, 3 and 4. Each is invited to bring a copy of the anthem he wishes to be included in the next conference collection; also express his choice of a cantata to be rendered at that time. A fine institute program has been arranged for Sunday morning, the 4th; and a grand concert for the public that same evening. Papers will be read and speeches made in the interest of music throughout the church, and Brother Hoxie, by his presence and enthusiasm, will get in closer touch with the singers and music-lovers of the Middle West. All who wish to have their music activities receive new impetus and direction, and who wish to help light the fires for next spring's musical successes should not fail to attend. A committee has been appointed to provide entertainment for all visitors who will please make their presence known to Sister Nellie Brocaw, chairman.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Choir Convention

The first choir convention ever held in the church was that at Elk Mills, Maryland, by the New York and Philadelphia District.

From the start everyone seemed to be in the spirit of the affair. Friday evening our concert in Philadelphia went with a great big swing, which was a fortunate beginning. The next morning we left on the boat, and in three hours were at Elk Mills, Maryland. Having been warned of a surprise on our arrival, we awaited the thrill with no little anxiety. With loud yells, amidst dust and much noise, our arduous committee dashed around the corner of a barn on horseback with pistols swinging in the air, holding up the entire crowd in true western fashion. It was very picturesque, and a rousing welcome that the crowd appreciated to a great degree.

We got right down to work, and had a little meeting to establish the order of the day. The concert on Saturday evening was a repetition of the Philadelphia affair. Meals were served in the basement of the church, which added much to the gayety of the occasion, and it was certainly a pleasing sight to see our young people at our little banquets merrily chatting away, and oftentimes bursting into song while waiting for the next course. Never have I seen such enthusiasm and spiritual intensity as manifested in a hundred different ways during the progress of convention.

The fellows insisted upon staying all together, and twenty-two or twenty-three of us slept in a barn, which we named "The Hotel de Gink," after that famous hostelry of New York town for the unemployed. Such fun and hilarity, and still along toward two or three in the morning some one of the fellows whispered, "Are the bunch going to forget their prayers," and when the suggestion was mentioned all frivolity ceased, and twenty-three fellows sat up in the hay. That little round of prayers warmed many a soul—my own especially—and the inspiration of it all has started a fire in my own soul that has been in a way neglected of late—not to mention its influence upon the rest of the hotel's guests.

At prayer meeting the following morning the crowd showed up at eight o'clock in full force. Heaven could not be a sweeter place than that little country church, with its deep-toned bell, amidst its grove of Lombardy poplars, and an aggregation of sixty consecrated souls beneath its sheltering roof. Perhaps it was the rain that held us together, but I am sure that it was the Spirit of God that opened up the many channels of reserved thought, and one after another those boys and girls prayed and sang and bore testimony, until it seemed that our cup could stand no more, for it seemed to be filled to overflowing.

The institute work followed the morning service. We reviewed the Easter music, and a number of our students interspersed the speeches and papers with their melodious treats, and the strange part of that was that every selection rendered showed something worth while, which went to conclusively prove that the cultivation of good music is the watchword. The paper by Sister Harris will be found in full in another part of the Staff. Sister Harris was a delegate from Brooklyn, New York, a school-teacher with a future, and an ardent Sunday school worker, especially in the normal department.

Then, too, we have been anxious to learn to what extent the choir movement work had had its effect upon those working under its influences. Louis Ostertag was selected to tell us "What choir work does for the individual." Here is a lad who works in the mill from seven in the morning until six at night, giving voice to expressions that made us laugh one minute, and weep the next. It proved the topic of conversation the whole day long, and my wonderment increases as I ponder upon some of his mentionings. I have asked him if he would endeavor to put it on paper, as much as he could remember, and it is my hope that it will appear in an early issue of the Staff, and may it prove in a small sense the inspiration to its readers that it did to the listeners at Elk Mills.

After the noonday meal the boys repaired to the hotel for a nap, which we felt might go to make up for the loss of sleep which we found not the night before. They were surely tired this time, and the couple of hours of sonorous snoring was a timely affair for all of us. By the time we awoke the skies had cleared, and dress parade looked feasible.

In a body we went for a long walk, and soon landed on a high hill. Just beneath us were rows of little homes kept by the mill folks, and one of those picturesque, sublime, silvery sunsets furnished a wonderful setting. With its sinking beyond the horizon we sang the truly wonderful songs of Zion in a circle with our arms locked. Then we marched to the church for supper, passing the little houses and singing all the way over the bridge, beyond the falls, and down the shady lane to our little church. A ladder leaned lazily against the side of the church, leading to the steeple, and up we went into the belfry, occupied only by our lonely friend, the bell, now gladdened by our continuous singing. By this time you can well imagine how wonderful we felt for the oratorio performance.

The little church was packed to its doors, the choir never sang better, and the rendering of "Olivet to Calvary" will go down in the history of the lives of those people as the sweetest music they have ever heard.

After that strenuous day the crowd was pretty well fatigued, almost ready for sleep. I can never describe the yearning and the longing that was expressed in those songs in the barn before the "rest of the weary" overcame us. Sometimes they were hummed, but never sung very loud, until a most peaceful and quieting influence came over us all—forgetting even that another day of strenuous effort confronted us.

Breakfast was scheduled at seven o'clock, but Mr. Bell had spoken three times before anybody had courage to see if the next fellow was asleep. Some one shouted, "A dollar for the first fellow that gets down to the church, washed and dressed!" Twenty-three fellows in two thirds of a second emptied the barn, two of whom disappeared out of the window as if by magic, and in eleven minutes, with faces more or less washed, we were again good fellows ready for the activities of the day.

A ball game in the morning with fun and frolic on the side occupied our attention until the noon hour. Then we took our final long walk, the girls joining us, away up the country lane into the swamps and woods, picking flowers by the wayside which nature had provided in profusion. Here and there we rested or talked, and drank from a cool spring. A hasty supper at five, with prayer meeting directly afterwards, and catching the 6.40 train, completed one of the happiest sojourns of our experience. On the station platform we sang a farewell song to a brother who was sick across the way, and scrambled aboard a train that we disliked seeing come round the curve.

We were a weary crowd, but not so much so but what the return trip was a pleasing final touch to the transpired events. Most of the girls had gathered large bouquets of wild flowers and were taking them home; even those beautiful creations of God will wither, but the memories I trust will never fade—sacred memories that will ever be associated with the first choir movement convention of the Reorganization.

Gleanings from Reports

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

The awakening of the church to the possibilities before us along musical lines is but the directing of the divine mind, we all agree, for we are sure that through these means souls can be won for God, who are persuaded to tarry to listen to the music. For Brooklyn we can report progress in choir work. It has improved our services one hundred per cent, so report they who do not sing but listen; and we attest as to the truthfulness of this, as our attendance has noticeably increased. It is also solving the problem of how to interest our young people, and is a wonderful help in developing those qualities that we wish to see brought out. We are indeed glad for the opportunities of the choir movement.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA

It is hard to do justice in speaking of the choir, band and male chorus by penning a few words, because they must be heard before one can appreciate and render due credit. All three organizations are coming to the front; musicians and also organizations are after our singers and instrumentalists for assistance. Our choir sang the chosen cantata with great success. The choir had to learn this music from the very foundation up. Neither sopranos nor altos could read music at sight. So you can readily understand the amount of work it required of a choirmaster. The male choirs I believe would electrify you. Next Saturday evening is the first appearance of the band on the street with their white uniforms, at which time they are playing for the "Trail Hitters." On Decoration Day the band will be playing for the veterans, so you can readily see that we are not behind in this great musical city of much talent. Our praises have been gained through hard work.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND

We have just organized a choir through the assistance of Brother Chase, of about twenty-five voices, and by the time the next choir convention is held we shall surely render an anthem. We meet twice a week for rehearsals, and on Sundays.

PHILADELPHIA, FIRST BRANCH

Our choir has grown to a membership of sixty voices, and an average attendance of over eighty per cent. We have mastered practically all three of the series of anthems published in the interest of choir movement work, many of which have been committed to memory, together with two oratorios, and one cantata. We have given a number of musical events, and have had the pleasure of having many outsiders join us in our work. A number have been baptized into the church after having become identified with the choir work. A number of our members are studying, and the desire is keen for the best of music, and a constant service.

PHILADELPHIA, SECOND BRANCH

The 1914-1915 series of anthem books published for the general choir movement are being carefully studied under the direction of Brother William Zimmermann. The members we have are much interested in their work, and are dependable. Much interest is being taken in a junior choir.

Music in Primary Department

(The work of the choir movement essentially embraces work with the children. To teach them to love music as children leads often to an incentive for deeper study, when their little fingers are able to manipulate the keys of instruments. The following was rendered by Sister Mabel Harris, of Brooklyn, New York, as the district choir convention, May 30, 1915.)

"All the music that we hear,
Listening with the outward ear,
Would be powerless to win us,
If there lived not deep within us,
Its innate idea."—Froebel.

Music is a craving which demands satisfaction almost as much as instinct. Music played an important part in the history of the race, and since the child passes through the stages which the race has passed, music naturally plays an important part in the life of the child.

In the early ages, the religious instinct was satisfied by music, naturally in a crude form. The child who is passing through a period which is emotional rather than intellectual, finds greater satisfaction in having its religious instinct appealed to by some form of art, rather than by mere exposition. What a soothing effect a lullaby has upon a baby!

The value of music in developing the spiritual nature of the child should therefore be appreciated. Children are interested in anything that awes them, and the beautiful sounds coming from a mechanism will be more attractive and have more effect than equally beautiful human tones. Since children are emotional, one can play with their emotions and put them into the desired state. The piano gives results which the human voice can not give. This is done by raising and lowering the tone, playing very softly at times, and by using various other devices known to musicians.

In the primary department, the children receive impressions, perhaps their first of the spiritual world. To enter into this higher life, the children must develop love and reverence. Miss Harrison has said that "much of the well intended primary Sunday school work loses half of its efficiency from the teachers not understanding that the child must be in a gentle, reverential mood, before he can be in the right religious attitude. The teacher should approach this holiest temple of God with reverence. Is there a place holier than the soul of a child?" The quiet, beautiful, soothing music, growing softer and softer while teachers and children sit with folded hands, at the beginning of the hour, creates the atmosphere for the whole period, and causes the children to feel the spirit of worship. The voice could not give this result. This quiet music, followed by silence, is a good preparation for prayer. It brings the spirit of prayer into the room. By means of this, the children realize that God is there, listening to what they say, and knowing whether they are thinking about what they are praying and singing. There is a great need of teaching children reverence to-day.

So many of our older children do not understand how to act in God's house. The secret of this is, begin the little ones right. Early impressions are the most lasting. The early instruction is the foundation of character. They may be too young to teach by many words, but example and environment will bring results. The "Song story" is often the most impressive part of the lesson. Songs are one of the best methods used in teaching. The tune fastens itself into the child's mind, until it is a part of him. The meaning of the words are often clearer than any explanation or illustration. To teach reverence for God's day and his house, after talking about the six days of creation, of work and the seventh day of rest, impress the truth by a song, such as,

"Jesus, precious Savior,
We would give to Thee,
One day out of seven,
All thine own to be," etc.

The song is often used to impress the lesson. After teaching of the protection of the baby Moses, they might sing,

"God watched o'er Moses,
Cradled in his little boat,
Safe upon the water,
Did it gently float."

Music should and does occupy a large part of the primary department time. Thoughts that are put into song stay with the children, as we know from experience. After all, it is the song that is remembered. The children sing at home during the week the songs they learn in the Sunday school. I venture to say that a number of the grown folks, still sing the songs which they learned in childhood. . . . Thus the music serves to connect the Sunday school with the home.

Music also helps to introduce order into the routine, since chords instead of words are able to give commands, as in the Sunday school with which I am connected, one chord on the piano, without a word being spoken, tells the children to prepare to stand, and a succeeding chord tells them that they must stand, and with martial music they drop their pennies into the baskets and march to their assigned places.

Since we wish to make what we teach the child really a part of him, it is necessary that he understand what is given him to assimilate. This can be brought about naturally, if the teacher, before taking up a song, discusses its meaning with the children.

There are several methods which might be used in introducing a new song. One is to tell the story of the song first, a story bringing out the truth which the song is to teach. Then have the children repeat the words before putting them to music. Another method is that of questioning. By the use of skillful, logical questions, lead to the lines of the new song. Then have the words taught with the music.

Let everything that is sung teach something. Each song should be chosen for some specific reason. Call attention to the teaching after the song has been sung many times, as "Since it is raining, we will sing about God's gift of rain." Bear in mind that the object before you is character building. It is your duty to add to the lives of the children. If the ideals of the children are not raised, and their characters not truly developed, the music in the primary department will have failed to fulfill one purpose for which the Almighty has inspired the gift of song.

In our choice of songs, we must not forget that the child's vocabulary is very small. Words simple to us pass over their heads with no meaning whatsoever. The songs should impress the desired truths, but they should be so simple as to come easily within the child's comprehension. The tunes should be adapted to the words, which should be simple and childlike, and taught so as to be full of meaning. A new song appeals to the children because of their love of music. They will quickly catch the tune, if it is a simple melody, with words that are adapted to their age, so that they can understand what they are singing about. The bright children will naturally learn it first, but there will always be some slow children. In order for these backward children to get the song, the way must be prepared for them. Therefore, choose attractive songs suitable to the age, no matter how simple, for though simple, they can still be melodious.

Of all places, the Sunday school should be the place for children to hear the finest music, and the primary department should begin this. Too many songs should not be given. It is better to learn a few thoroughly than a great many only partially. One song well learned is far better than several only half learned. The more the little children sing the few songs they know, the better they love them, and the deeper the impression.

The way songs are chosen adds to the children's interest in them. Do not always say "Let us sing," etc. Frequently let the children themselves choose the songs, or let the piano announce some of the songs. It makes the children attentive, as "Listen, the piano is going to tell us what to sing. Who knows what it says?" Only a few bars are needed as a prompter. A little informal conversation sometimes leads to the song. Introduce the element of surprise, as, "We will fall asleep, while Belle whispers a song to the pianist, and we will wake up when we know from the tune what the song is."

No one book contains all the good songs one may desire to use in a primary department. A good device is to use a scrapbook. A loose leaf one is ideal, as it is the only way to have the songs always on hand for use when needed. Use seasonable songs—songs of the coming of the birds and flowers for spring,—including Easter songs; songs of blossoming of flowers for summer; of harvest time and the departure of birds and flowers, together with Thanksgiving songs, for the fall; and songs of snow and Christmas in the winter. All the year teach songs relating to God's loving, thoughtful care. Teach some of the older classics, that our grandmothers loved, as "I think when I read that sweet story of old," "Jesus loves me, this I know," etc.

To obtain the desired results from the music in the primary department, much preparation on the part of the superintendent is necessary. Be satisfied with nothing less than the best of which the children are capable, and you will find that they will do better and better as the Sundays pass. To secure this, give them no less than the best of which you are capable.

The following poem by Charles M. Dickinson, may be an incentive for more work along this line in our primary departments:

"There is nothing on earth half so holy
 As the innocent heart of a child.
 They are idols of hearts and of households,
 They are angels of God in disguise.
 His sunlight still sleeps in their tresses,
 His glory still shines in their eyes.
 Those truants from home and from heaven,
 They have made me more manly and mild,
 And I know now how Jesus could liken,
 The kingdom of God, to a child."

New Liskeard Meeting and Dedication

The above-mentioned two-day meeting and church dedication occurred at New Liskeard, Ontario, June 5 and 6. Saturday, 10.30, prayer service. Preaching at 3 p. m. by the writer, at 8 p. m. by Bishop Evans. Sunday, 8.30 a. m. prayer meeting was attended by about thirty-five Saints from Thornloe, Earlton and Casey mines, most of whom had driven from eight to twelve miles and were present before meeting time.

At eleven Bishop Evans preached the dedicatory sermon to a full house, from Psalm 127: 1, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." The dedicatory prayer was by John Shields. Dinner was served, free of charge, by "The committee of sisters" and branch in a house across the street, which house was loaned, also free, by an estate agent (nonmember).

Preaching services at 3 and 8 p. m. were held in the Grand Opera House, Bishop Evans being the speaker. His audiences were large and attentive, and Brother R. C. spoke with his old time force and vigor and made excellent efforts on gospel lines, the local paper having this to say: "The bishop proved himself to be an eloquent speaker with a good delivery and gave an interesting address." Evidently good has been done and prejudice removed.

I held special services two weeks previous to the dedication and a week after by request of the branch. In the services I was ably assisted by Elder Ribble and the branch officers. Five have been baptized by Brother Ribbel and one by Bishop Evans.

This New Ontario town is situated on Lake Temiskaming, ten miles north of the mining town of Cobalt, Hailebury being situated about midway with electric cars running between every hour.

Of most interest to HERALD readers will be the rise and progress of the work in this place. It began through the faith and zeal of Sister Stafford (formerly Maud Stone, of Owen Sound), who alone here began as a home class member of the Sunday school, and later conducted a Sunday school in her home, and had some ready for baptism when Elder S. G. St. John came as a missionary, he having since accomplished a good work here. Later Elder James Pycoc performed good work here, he also having a controversy with a Baptist minister. Elder Henry Ribbel moved here from Stokes Bay, and has assisted much, preaching here and in the surrounding country. He gave much assistance in every way along spiritual lines, as also painting the church building when erected and other work. Since last July he has been under missionary appointment, laboring mostly in the region north. He has baptized some forty-four.

This branch was organized in July, 1912, by the missionary in charge, Frederick A. Smith. Later a lot was purchased and building erected, with basement and gallery (basement not complete, awaiting sewers). Opened by Bishop R. C. Evans, August, 1913. Space forbids mention of all who labored in the various lines of mechanical work in erecting and finishing this building, only to say that no money was paid out for masonry, carpentering, electric installation or painting, (Stanley and Percy Shields, with Elder Ribbel at inside work). Concerning the material, I quote from branch minutes the following:

"Whereas, the Shepherdson Lumber and Building Company has presented to the Latter Day Saints, the pulpit, horse shed, as also the lumber and shingles required to complete the church, save the siding and hardware, electric lights, paints, doors, cement and sand; and, whereas the said company has done all the teaming; drawing all the material for said church; therefore be it,

"Resolved, That we, the New Liskeard Branch, also Bishop Evans, representing the general church to whom the property is deeded, express our appreciation to the Shepherdson Lumber Company, and hereby tender them a hearty vote of thanks for their work and labor of love."

I might say in conclusion that not being here I do not know the names of all who did labor for and on this church, or what each did, and just wish to say that it is a credit to all and the church in general.

In gospel bonds,

JOHN SHIELDS.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA, May 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: I was baptized into the church about three years ago, and since that time have been trying to live my religion to the very best of my ability. My husband is a missionary, and consequently away from home most of the time, and I experience many lonely hours. But knowing that it is the will of God, I am content to bow in humble submission to his divine order, though at times my faith is indeed tried, especially during the midnight hours when I awaken and hear strange sounds that I can not readily account for.

I thank God for my patriarchal blessing. It is a comfort to me, wherein I am told that the angels are guarding my home and are at my side. I am trying hard to put my trust in the heavenly Father, and feel that I am gradually gaining a much needed faith.

Oh! that our characters may be made so strong that when our faith is tried to the utmost we will be able to stand. Sometimes we think we have faith in God; but when the hour of trial comes we find our faith wavering.

The Lord has blessed us with a dear little girl, who is indeed a comfort to her mother when her father is many miles away, and though she is only two years old she does her part toward making a happy little home.

It has been over two months since I last saw my husband, and I can certainly sympathize with those who are thus separated from their loved ones. But what a comfort it is to us to know that our companions are called to such a great and grand and high calling, and what helpmeets we can be to them if we only will. Let us do our part to comfort and cheer them, for the life of a missionary is not such an "easy job" as some have termed it.

We have a nice branch here, and if the members would put forth as great an effort for its advancement as the officers do, I am sure we would enjoy the blessings of the Spirit to an even greater extent than we do.

I need your prayers, dear brothers and sisters, that I may be able to overcome the many trials and difficulties of this life, and I shall always remember God's people.

Praying for the success of this great and grand gospel message, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. ALBERT E. WARR.

NORTH BAANDEE, WEST AUSTRALIA, April 20, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have read with interest the many letters that appear in the HERALD from time to time from different Saints giving their experiences in this latter-day restoration. I was led to know about the gospel in its fullness in God's own mysterious way. In my younger days I used to live very near to the Savior. I could not understand why Christ did not reveal himself to me as it is promised in the scriptures he will do if a man would live right and keep his commandments. I read also that the Spirit of truth which proceeds from the Father should testify of Christ, and again that the Christian world was not to be left comfortless, but that Christ would come to it. I saw also that if man would do his will he should know the doctrine, whether it be of God or not.

Just before God led me to become a Latter Day Saint I was constantly dwelling upon Peter's exclamation that if men repent and are baptized, they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. I am thankful indeed, for this beautiful truth. At last my soul has found peace, which the world can not give.

I was baptized November 6, 1913, by Elder E. A. Davis, during the time I was on the gold fields. Brother Davis was then holding services in Boulder, having started a branch there. Our heavenly Father set his seal upon me and confirmed upon me the evidence that I was his child. It was given me to know that Christ revealed himself to the former day saints, and that he revealed himself to the Latter Day Saints also. The Holy Ghost has testified to me that Jesus Christ is the Savior and the only begotten of the Father, and that God is our Creator.

Like Job of old, I have been able to say, I know that my Redeemer liveth. With tears streaming down my face, I have many times had that sacred and solemn manifestation from God, and during these times I have been able to say, "Dear heavenly Father, I know that thou lovest me with an everlasting love."

It has also been shown to me by the Holy Ghost that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is God's true and only church, and that the time for the gathering of the Saints to Zion is very near, for we shall be gathered together when he comes, and his coming is not far off. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be when Christ shall appear. The world seems to be in a troubled state at the present time, and has been now for some time, by the occurrence of the great war and other events happening of late, all of which tend to show Christ's coming is near.

We pray that all his children everywhere may be faithful unto him always until he shall come. I pray for the Saints and ask that they remember me in their prayers, that I may remain faithful unto the end.

All honor and praise be unto God and Christ, our Redeemer, for ever and ever, amen.

In gospel bonds,
WILLIAM J. REEVES.

WIGAN, LANCASHIRE, ENGLAND, May 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: The work is progressing here. We have added two young people to our number by baptism, Brother Walter Green and Sister Flossie Hart. We have a fully organized branch of energetic Christian warriors, always willing to give advice and labor for the success of the Saints. The sisters are also anxious for the welfare of the work here. As a whole, the branch is getting on fairly well. We trust that all may learn their duty and that we may have the courage to do our part with all diligence.

Your brother,
WILLIAM SPARGO.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, May 24, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am back on the field of action, and am feeling quite well. I found that while I was away to conference, the pastor of the French Baptist church who stigmatized our work and classified it with Utahism, had not been idle. He sought to turn the heads of some of his sheep who had been looking Zionward, backward into his fold, but he could not do so. Although he succeeded in cooling their ardor, which was plainly manifest when I came back, still I was given a warm welcome, and had some explanations to make which soon revealed the fact that even ministers are liable to turn a deaf ear to the commandment which says, "Thou shalt not bear false witness," when it will serve to stem the tide of the latter-day glory.

I was given an opportunity to show up the nefarious work some pulpiteers will do, when there is no person present to defend our work. And the result has been that those whom our Baptist friend sought to instruct have discovered that he falsified, and now are farther away from him than ever, and have come nearer to the truth. Indeed, they are now exerting a little effort to have people come to their home to listen, and next Sunday is the day set for our first meeting in their home.

These are French people, and for the time being we have to confine ourselves to the French Bible, because we have no other literature. If I could burn into the hearts of even those with whom I am acquainted a realizing sense of the need of French literature here, it would not be long till the printers would be at work and we could give this people the word which has come to us, freighted with blessings from heaven. May God speed the day when that will be done.

On my arrival I found fourteen letters awaiting me. Some were in answer to my letter published in the HERALD of April 28, 1915 (read it if you have not done so), and in all they contained seven dollars to assist in getting some literature printed in French. This is encouraging, and having received some assistance from Chicago friends before I left, I deposited the whole amount in a bank so as not to spend it, and await the time when I can begin to print some of our tracts in French.

There was one letter among the lot that, to my fancy, solves the problem of getting the work started among the two million, eight hundred and eighty-three thousand and forty-one Roman Catholic French Canadians in the Province of Quebec.

I will give it here in full; it is short and to the point:

"READLYN, SASKATCHEWAN, April 5, 1915.

"PHILEMON PEMENT,

"Ottawa, Ontario.

"Dear Brother: I saw your letter in SAINTS' HERALD for January 26. Too bad we as Latter Day Saints are not more wealthy so as to fit out with tent and the necessary (things) to go about your work. Still if one thousand of us gave you one dollar each, it would fit you out. Inclosed find one dollar, as one of the first one thousand.

"Yours faithfully,

"WILLIAM JONES."

What could I not do with an amount like this? Listen! I could set the province of Quebec aflame with the gospel from beginning to end with that amount (and what would come to the support of the work from those who know nothing of it at present), and not all the power of the Roman Catholic Church could put it out.

The business man uses printer's ink in prosecuting his trade to a successful conclusion; he can not do otherwise and succeed; and if success crowns our efforts among the French Canadians, it will be because we have used the same means.

"Keeping everlastingly at it brings success," and as "nothing succeeds like success," I am going to fight it out on that line until success comes; did you hear that? I will find out. I know that I have a hard task before me, but there is an Almighty hand behind it.

The General Ministerial Association of Ottawa has passed resolution against me and our work, and has warned the people against what it calls "Mormonism." I replied in the press, and the result has led one of the most hopeful characters I have ever met outside of the church, to write me asking for an interview. I have met him twice.

He is reading "Presidency and priesthood." He told a friend in my presence, who was opposing me, "Well, if Mr. Pement can prove that the Book of Mormon is true, from the Bible, we will have to accept it." I thought that kind of investigation had the right ring to it. He has laid out a plan of investigation that will cover the entire field, and I know that I will have to give an account of myself with this character; but thank God, I am prepared, and shall go praying when I do so. This is a young man, who is in the Government employ, sharp, bright and well educated, and possesses a very friendly disposition.

Praying, working, and believing that I shall succeed, and that the work is worthy of my best efforts,

I am yours for success,

12 Tormey Street.

PHILEMON PEMENT.

KNOXVILLE, IOWA, May 30, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have seventeen members of the church at Knoxville. We have a temporary organization, with two elders and one priest. We have Sunday school, prayer meeting and preaching every Sunday evening in a private house. There is no hall we can secure. There is a Congregational church which has discontinued meetings. We tried to rent this building but were refused. We could not get it at any price.

We wrote to Brother J. S. Roth and asked him to come and hold a series of meetings. We had secured the court room, but to our surprise were shut out for the present. At least, when we met the board they told us we could have the house if we would pay the janitor, so we made arrangements with him. He said if we were going to hold meetings when the court was in session, and the room would be heated, it would not cost anything for coal, but we were finally refused.

Brother Roth was here, so I went to the house of Brother Clarence H. Smith and his sister, a sister in the faith, who said she did not see why we could not have the meeting in the opera house. Her brother agreed to open the opera house. Mr. Pruet, a brother-in-law of Brother Smith who is not a member of the church but a friend to us and a fine man, together with Brother Clarence Smith, painted large signs and put them on all four corners of the square, announcing the meetings, the subjects, etc. Our meetings started with forty-eight outsiders, increased to seventy and eighty, and up to one hundred and fifty.

Bad weather set in and it rained for twelve days; still we continued with about forty in attendance until the rain stopped, then our crowd began to pick up again, and we closed with an attendance of over three hundred, after four weeks' meetings. There are several near the kingdom. Much prejudice has been removed. Prejudice was strong here before the meetings. One said Brother Roth should be run out of town. Brother Roth preached on the persecution of the Saints, and we heard no more about that.

I have heard Brother Roth in several places, and it seems that he is getting better all the time. I was told by a business man that he is the ablest man that ever came to Knoxville. He said he had heard more Bible at these meetings than in all the preaching he had heard before. I was told again that Brother Roth preached more Bible in one sermon than the preachers of Knoxville altogether did in six months. One man, a member of a church here, said he belonged to that church but did not attend much, that the whole thing was a form. He said, Now you time our preacher; he will not talk twenty minutes, and there will be no Bible in it. I took out my watch and to my surprise he talked just twenty minutes and there was not the breath of life in it. Brother Roth will start meetings in a few days, eight miles out in the country.

We have a young man here who is well respected. His friends suggested that he study to be a doctor. He started to take a course of home study. During this time he asked the Lord what he should do, and he was instructed to study the word of God, which he is doing. He assisted Brother Roth here, preached three times, and was well received.

We just learned that three preachers, one lawyer and one doctor were in attendance at our last meeting. The subject on this occasion was, "What will you do with Jesus which is called Christ?"

WILMORE, KANSAS, May 30, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am an isolated member, trying to do the Lord's will the best I can. If you were ever isolated from church privileges you will know how to bear with us in our minglings with the outside world, many of whom look with scorn at everything we try to do. For these reasons one who is isolated must be on guard all the time.

We take the HERALD and enjoy reading it. The sermons and discussions are edifying. The discussion by Brother Prettyman was had in the proper and correct spirit, and should be a good thing for the man or woman who has become a dead stick. If we are meek and lowly, God will never forsake us, no matter how dark and dreary the road may seem. We need as Paul says, to prove all things and hold fast that which is good; pray without ceasing; abstain all appearance of evil.

So let us come out from the dead bark and see if by doing good to others we can not make ourselves better and all around us. We know it is hard to follow some of the lines we are told to do; the Devil in these last days will almost turn the very elect from the right way. Yet we pray for the uplift of our brothers and sisters, that we may go on and on until our reward is reached.

With best wishes to all, I remain,

Your brother,
E. N. REDFIELD.

TRYON, NEBRASKA, May 31, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am ordering the fourth Book of Mormon sent to nonmembers. I want to tell the Saints how I do it.

We live on a main traveled road, and have fed many people passing through the country, without charge. I finally asked myself what we were doing in the way of spreading the gospel message. I read in Lucy Smith's History, page 218, how a man on the shore cried out, Is the Book of Mormon true? I then read Sister Lucy Smith's testimony, where she adds, Until every family of Adam's race be left without excuse.

I then accepted from those who were anxious to pay, fifty cents for meals, took their address and sent them a copy of the Book of Mormon, so they would not be left without excuse.

I write this that others may try the plan. Let us get busy, brethren, and see how many copies we can send out in this way within a year. It will not cost anything, because, if thine enemy hunger, feed him. How much more then should we feed a friend. We will not lose anything by feeding people. I have the book sent direct to the parties, saving extra postage.

In gospel bonds,
WILLIAM F. GODFREY.

SWEET LAKE, LOUISIANA, May 31, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am still isolated and without communion with the Saints. I feel much need of your prayers for myself and family. I thank all who have heretofore remembered us. I have been greatly benefited by and through your prayers. I have gained in physical strength and am able to do some work, for which I am thankful. I want to try and live near to God, and overcome my trials and temptations.

Three weeks ago my little girl, eight years old, was injured by falling from a horse and was taken with blood poison. Through prayer she has gotten along fine. Her arm is not well yet, but is mending. We ask prayers for her full recovery, if God wills. In falling lately, I injured my knee. I can not yet put my weight on my foot. I ask the prayers of the Saints. I also ask prayers for my son, who has been afflicted for some years.

Your sister,
MRS. JOSIE HELMS.

Extracts from Letters

J. H. Graves, Chatham, Ontario: "My work is onward in this field, with more calls than I can fill. Two baptized June 5."

Mrs. M. J. Flowers, Lewanna, Nebraska: "We are isolated from the church but take the HERALD, which is a comfort. I want to do more and more for the cause."

S. D. Condit, Douglas, Arizona: "We are trying to move on with the Lord's work, but we are hampered because of financial stringency and secular demands. The Lord has been with us, however. A church building to cost one thousand dollars or more when completed stands at Nineteenth and C. Douglas. Three people were baptized in its font May 30, the carpenter and his wife and one other lady. Others will follow soon. We have a debt of one hundred and forty-five dollars thus far, and perhaps two hundred more will complete and seat the building. Sunday school at 10, preaching at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. have been regularly conducted in this building for a month.

News from Missions

New York

June 12 found a goodly number of the Saints of the New York District assembling at Greenwood, New York, for the annual business conference of the district, which convened at 2.30 p. m. Various parts of the district were represented.

Business passed off very pleasantly, a good spirit being manifest. In the evening a good crowd greeted the one who dispensed the word. The following day, Sunday, was a busy one and profitable also. The early service was quite well attended, being the hour appointed for prayer and sacrament. Sunday school was held at 9.45 a. m. At 11 a. m. the Saints assembled joyfully to listen to the preached word. A bounteous repast was served in the vestibule following this service, and a very sociable time was fully appreciated by all present. Song service at 3 p. m. was enjoyed, and a good feeling accompanied the singing of the songs of Zion. A short sermon followed, at the conclusion of which the Saints separated for the first time during the day.

The beautiful sun had now broken through the clouds and dispelled the gloom that had hitherto prevailed on the outside. Nature was radiant with beauty on every hand. The deep green foliage of the trees and the rugged wood-capped hills, towering far above the valley, which makes the county of Steuben famous, presented an interesting view to those who had long lived in the crowded cities of the East. Cameras were made to play an interesting part in the program of the day.

Immediately after the evening service Brother Lee Lewis, of Hammondsport, New York, inducted his only son into the waters of baptism. This makes them now an unbroken family in Christ. The preaching of the conference was done by A. B. Phillips, A. D. Angus, A. E. Stone, and William Anderson, local men assisting.

Respectfully,
A. E. STONE.

News from Branches

Perry, Iowa

The Saints here are very much encouraged over the prospects for the spread of the gospel at this place, and have great hopes for the future of the Perry Branch:

We had the pleasure of entertaining the Des Moines district conference and convention of the Sunday school and Religio, at Perry, last week, June 10 to 13, and as a climax to our joy and satisfaction, we were able to dedicate our little church on Fifth Street, at the Sunday morning service. Elder James A. Gillen presided and preached one of the most inspiring and eloquent sermons it has been the pleasure of this congregation to listen to. The dedication brought peace and comfort to the few faithful ones whose devotions, prayers and unceasing labors for years, under the most discouraging circumstances, made the organization of this branch possible. To those few who "kept the camp fire burning," we who have lately accepted the gospel feel that we owe much.

Sunday afternoon the Saints enjoyed a very spiritual sacrament and prayer service, at which many of those who "blazed the way" gave wonderful and touching testimonies to the truthfulness of the work; all present were impressed that God has been very mindful of this little flock.

We have an enrollment of about seventy members, although many are not resident members. Those here are very active and aggressive in the campaign against the powers of the Adversary.

We have enjoyed the labors of such missionaries as Elders E. E. Long, C. A. Butterworth and J. S. Roth, in addition to numerous sermons by visiting brethren in the last year, and through their efforts we have made wonderful progress, and the prospects for the future of this branch seem bright.

Our Sunday school and Religio are striving hard to live up to the duties and privileges that are theirs, and have a good enrollment and regular attendance. Under the Woman's Auxiliary we have two departments, the Home and Child Welfare, and a thriving ladies aid society. An interesting session of the auxiliary was held during the conference at the home of Sister Taylor, presided over by Sister Hattie Clark, of Des Moines. One evening of the conference was given over to a very interesting and helpful program by the Woman's Auxiliary and the Des Moines District Doers.

We had about one hundred visitors, and the only regret expressed among the Perry Saints was that none had as many guests as they had arranged for and hoped to entertain.

With renewed faith in this latter-day work, and great hopes for the future progress of the same, I am,

June 19, 1915. A PERRY SAINT.

July St. Nicholas

A leading feature of the July St. Nicholas is an article entitled, "What everyone should know about the aeroplane," in which Montague Palmer, E. E., tells about the latest forms and achievements of the man-carrying machines that navigate the air. Of special interest are the directions and plans enabling any boy to make model aeroplanes, reproducing in miniature the leading types in use. "The athletic author of the declaration," by James Frederick Rogers, will surprise many who have not known of Thomas Jefferson's great strength and vigor. The article tells how he developed and maintained his athletic condition. The series of baseball articles by Billy Evans is proving a great success. "Speed and the baserunner" is the subject of his July installment, and he not only collects many anecdotes, thrilling and amusing by turns, but also presents the opinions of Ty Cobb, Base Runner Extraordinary, and other fleet experts. Girls can be just as plucky as boys, and "On the edge of the Amazon," a genuine jungle story, tells of a girl's bravery in a perilous adventure which threatened to set her adrift on the great river, in a skittish Brazilian dugout. It is written by a traveler who is thoroughly familiar with the vast South American forest, and illustrated by Paul Branson. Nicknames sometimes hurt. "The rechristening of Phoebe," by Samuel Scoville, jr., is the story of one that did, and how a Yale boy with grit got rid of it. It is a story full of thrills for every lover of athletic contests and characteristic college fun. In the July installment of "The lost prince," Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's serial "Marco and the rat," continue their mysterious wanderings, and spend the night in a chalet above the clouds descending soon after to Vienna, where they see a royal pageant and the mystery of the story deepens. "The boarded-up house" introduces in July two new and interesting characters who would never have met in the old house if those two young feminine Sherlock Holmeses, Cynthia and Joyce, had not done their work well. The other serials still gain in interest. Clarinda, of "Peg o' the ring," runs away. The small hero of "Tommy and the wishstone" gets a new and authentic view of the life of a mink,—a little animal which, it seems, has often to face danger. In "Chained lightning" the bandit dies but not before confessing a secret of great interest to the other characters.

Mr. Log, in the serial for very little folk, produces an invention which surprises Mr. Bear very much. Several other stories and poems complete the number, and "Nature and Science" for young folks contains, among other features, a remarkable series of photographs taken fifty feet under the surface of the sea, including one of a real battle between a man and a shark.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

THE RECORD OF A SIDE TRIP

It was our good fortune to be present in Independence during the week ending June 26. While there we were privileged to occupy on the South Side, Sunday forenoon, June 20.

By invitation we delivered an address before the graduating class of the Independence Sanitarium nurses for 1915. The graduation exercises were held in the Stone Church, Thursday evening, June 24. A very interesting program was rendered, including songs, instrumental music, and recitations, also a short but excellent address by Doctor Leonard G. Harrington, physician in charge of the Independence Sanitarium.

Six nurses graduated. In our remarks we suggested that it might be said of them, in the language of John the Revelator: "Who are these arrayed in white? These are they who have come up through great tribulation."

The record of their struggles, disappointments, ambitions, hard and often disagreeable tasks during their three years of training can only be guessed at,—and that intelligently only by those who have thoughtfully watched the nurse at her work, or had actual experience in such service.

To us the occasion was inspirational. We gave unhesitating homage to the noble calling of the trained nurse. These girls go out into the world equipped by education and religion for a life of service to humanity.

Consecrated service is the keynote to Christianity. Never before, perhaps, was it needed more than now.

The great wars now raging, with the inevitable horrors of armed conflict, and the special atrocities characteristic of this world struggle, are inundating the Old World with a deluge of hate. Generations must pass before men will forget ruined homes and mangled women and children.

Jesus taught men to love even their enemies. But now in many nations the citizens are taught to hate the citizens of other nations with the most bitter and intense hatred.

One bright star in all this tempest and earthquake of war is the conduct of surgeons and nurses of the Red Cross, who go out, not with hatred, but with love in their hearts. They administer to the needs of stricken men of all nations and of all armies. They risk their lives, not for salary but for service,—for the chance to serve.

Even the nations that are at peace can not entirely escape the deluge of hatred that we have mentioned. Hence the nurses who graduate from the Sanitarium at this time go out into a world that needs consecrated service as seldom before in all its history. And they go from an institution where the day's work is begun with prayer.

Attending the chapel service on the morning of June 26, we felt to breath a prayer that God might bless the Independence Sanitarium, safeguarding those whose lives are given into the hands of the devoted men and women who labor there. May many homes be made glad, and many hearts be caused to rejoice because of loved ones returned sound and well.

From Independence we went to Omaha and Council Bluffs. We occupied in the pulpit in Omaha, Sunday, June 27, in the forenoon, and in Council Bluffs in the evening. A splendid spirit was present on both occasions. But we found the Council Bluffs Saints in sorrow and affliction.

In the afternoon we were required to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Jacobson, a young married daughter of our esteemed Brother Harding, president of the branch. Her death was very distressing,—that most tragic of family calamities, death in childbirth. Going down into the valley of the shadow of death to give the world a new life, she found the effort to return too great, and so passed on.

On Tuesday afternoon we preached the funeral sermon of Sister Thomas Riley, of Council Bluffs. She was an old-time convert from Utah, under the ministry of Elder W. W. Blair, her maiden name being Duell. At this service we were assisted by Reverend Jones of the Congregational Church, who was very courteous and friendly, and spoke in highest terms of the departed sister.

At Council Bluffs we found the Saints looking forward to the dedication of their delightful new church edifice. They take great comfort in the presence of the family of Apostle James A. Gillen, who has located his home there, and in the presence and assistance of Brother Gillen on the occasions when he is at home with them.

In Omaha we found the work moving steadily forward with the assistance of our devoted young Brother Paul N. Craig and a band of energetic members of the priesthood, with whom we were delighted to meet on Monday evening.

Our visit with the Saints in these two places, Omaha and Council Bluffs, was for us both pleasant and spiritually profitable.

FRUIT IN THE SEASON THEREOF

[EDITORIAL NOTE.—The statement contained in the Word of Wisdom to the effect that fruit is, to be used in the "season thereof" frequently provokes discussion. Various opinions are expressed. It may be edifying to some to learn the opinion of the late President Joseph Smith on that subject. Herewith we reproduce a letter dictated by him shortly before his death, and transcribed by his son Israel A. Smith.]

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October —, 1914.

SISTER MARY HOGLE, COMINS, MICHIGAN.

Dear Sister: Your letter concerning canning fruit was received this morning, and in reply thereto:

The Word of Wisdom, from which persons seem to get their theory that it is wrong to can food products, is not given as a command, but as judicious direction as to what food may be eaten, and it may be said such direction is summed up in the words, "the season thereof." Persons who, like yourself, feel it to be right to preserve by canning food products upon their reaching the condition that they are healthful, are but using the privilege of securing and storing that which is healthful to be used in the season of necessity, and I believe that a sufficient answer to those who are constantly nagging those who use preserved food would be to tell them plainly that the season for using foods so preserved may be properly called, "The season of canned fruit."

It is a fact generally acknowledged by all reading and thinking people, that the average length of human life has been increased by the preservation of foods through the canning process and eating such food in the season thereof. I believe that fruit, vegetables, and food products which can be preserved in a condition—proper condition to be eaten by canning them, which is simply the excluding them from contact with the air, by means of which decay occurs, is not only permissible but is absolutely judicious; and in a great many instances a very great necessity, and especially so in temperate and northern climates.

I remember answering a brother once in discussion. He said, "What season do you call it when you eat strawberries, cherries, etc., that have been canned?" I answered at once, "It is the season of canned fruit, sir," and it did more to answer his complaint than any argument I might have used.

We are using on our table now canned milk, simply because we can not get at all times sweet milk, and it comes in handily at times.

Any process of preserving food without the addition of that which would be injurious to health may be properly used by the Saints without coming in contact with condemnation of what is written in the Word of Wisdom. The heading to that section declares it is given not by way of command or constraint, but is a "word of wisdom." Injudicious or harsh argument on either side is not wise, and is therefore contrary to the Word of Wisdom.

Hoping this will give a degree of ease to your mind, I am,

Your brother in bonds,

JOSEPH SMITH.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

SUFFRAGE IN ICELAND.—The King of Denmark has signed the bill passed by the Icelandic Parliament some months ago, granting full suffrage to the women of Iceland.

BRITISH INDEMNITY.—Great Britain has announced the intention to pay one hundred thousand dollars as the first installment in settlement for seizing the American Wilhelmina, en route with foodstuffs from United States to Germany.

BILLION DOLLAR BALANCE.—Figures for the fiscal year just closed indicate a balance of something over one billion dollars in favor of the United States in her international trade. As a result of the present European war, imports fell off heavily, while exports increased considerably, the combination making a banner year in totals.

"ARMENIAN" SUNK.—A German submarine has sunk the British freight liner Armenian, carrying mules from Newport News to England. Twenty-three American mule tenders were lost with the vessel. Mules are contraband, and it is rumored that the Armenian was chartered by the British Government. An inquiry is under way by United States authorities to learn the status of the Armenian, and the conditions under which she was sunk, to determine the rights of Americans aboard, if any.

"FRYE" CASE.—The United States has issued a note to Germany in the William P. Frye case, sunk with a cargo of wheat, by the German Prinz Eitel Friederich, denying that the case is one for the German prize courts, Germany having admitted liability for sinking the vessel under the treaty of 1828. The American note also denies the claim that Germany had the right to sink the Frye upon payment of damages, and contends that the only question for disposal is the method to determine the amount of indemnity to be paid for this breach of treaty obligations. This note concludes with the words:

The Government of the United States renews its former suggestion that an effort be made to settle this claim by direct diplomatic negotiations.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Obregon reports success against Villa forces near Aguas Calientes. Zapata has defeated the forces of Carranza at Mexico City. The capital is cut off from communication with the outside world. Famine and a reign of terror are said to threaten the city. Angeles has issued a statement of his loyalty to Villa, including the information that his mission in the United States at this time is military and not political—he being here for the purchase of munitions for the Villa army. Huerta, after a brief confinement at Fort Bliss, Texas, has been released on a bond of fifteen thousand dollars, pending trial on the charge of conspiracy to violate the neutrality laws of the United States by inciting revolution in Mexico. Other arrests have been made.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The German advances in Galicia continue unchecked, and have surged across the international border north of Lemburg into Poland. The Germans are reported in the preliminary stages of a new drive on Warsaw. German losses are said to be appalling. The Russian army continues orderly in retreat, and seems to have suffered no permanent disaster. Severe fighting is reported along the Meuse. Heavy artillery fire has been resumed by the Germans at various points in France. Italian successes against Austria continue. The allies report important gains on the Gallipoli Peninsula. Scutari, Albania, is reported from Rome as having been occupied by the Montenegrins. An Austrian submarine has sunk an Italian torpedo boat. The toll of the German submarines for the week covered by this report, besides the Armenian, includes the British destroyer Lightning, the British steamers Lomas, Caucasian, Inglemoor, Welburg, and lesser craft. The Russian cabinet has been reconstructed; the Duma called together; and the mobilization of industry for war processes provided for, by the formation of a board of military supplies, with special reference to the manufacture of munitions. It is reported that Italy has broken diplomatic relations with Turkey, and will send troops and a fleet to the Dardanelles.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

EFFECTS OF AGITATION.—In referring to so-called debates with the "Mormons," the editor of the Word of Truth, a no-organ, anti-Sunday school Church of Christ sheet, says: "People need agitation of religious thoughts, else stagnation will kill all religious tendencies." If it is agitation that the Church of Christ people need they should thrive, as is evidenced by the never-ending discussions of mooted questions in the press of this faction—there may, however, be some question as to the effects of some of this discussion on their "religious tendencies."

MORE LAMANITE BAPTISMS.—In the News from Missions department of this issue of the HERALD will be found a letter from Elder W. E. Shakespeare and referring to the excellent interest and success of missionary work in Northeastern Nebraska District. On June 28 Brother Shakespeare writes further: "We are able to report the baptism of eleven more yesterday. Eight of them were of our Lamanite brethren and sisters. This makes thirty-five baptisms by Brother Pierce and myself in this district this month. The work is progressing, and God's promises are being realized."

ZIONISTIC CONFERENCE.—The Jew is again a most pitiable victim of a great tragedy,—this time a world tragedy. In the great wars now raging he has no nation of his own to fight for and must fight under many flags, in some instances against his own people, and at times under the ensign of his oppressors of yesterday. His own cause of Zionism is for the time overshadowed, eclipsed, even endangered by passing tragic events. Yet many are sanguine that out of it all will arise an opportunity for the Jew and for Jerusalem such as has not hitherto been witnessed. The following is taken from the Omaha World-Herald, June 27:

BOSTON, Massachusetts, June 26.—Several thousand representatives of Zionist organizations of the country arrived here to-day for the opening session of a conference regarded as the most important ever held by American Zionists. According to leaders of the movement, Zionism in Europe has been seriously affected by the war, and as Jews they are unable to bear their portion of the Zionist work, added responsibility for the success of the movement devolves on American Zionists. It is contended that at the end of the war there will be keen competition for Palestine and that the logical disposition would be to assign it to the Jews. L. Brandeis, president of the allied conventions, who was one of the speakers at a reception given one of the delegations, outlined the purpose of the Zionist movement, pointing out that it was not intended to compel Jews to move back to Palestine, but was designed to give them more freedom. This freedom, he said, was expected to give Jews rights now enjoyed by other peoples and the privilege of living at their option in the lands of their fathers or in some other country.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH.—Our readers will be pleased to learn that President Frederick M. Smith has improved in health constantly since his return East, and is nearly if not quite restored to his normal condition. He expects to complete his work in Worcester by the middle of July, and will then return to Independence. He has in mind a proposed trip home by way of Maine and Canada, visiting the various branches en route in the interests of church work. If this is undertaken, his arrival in Independence will probably be about the first of August or a little later.

FROM ELDER GREENWOOD.—In a personal letter to President Frederick M. Smith, dated June 9, Elder W. H. Greenwood in chronicling his safe arrival in Manchester, England, recounts some of his experiences while en route. We quote:

“Knowing that you will be most anxious to learn of my safe arrival in England, I herewith send you the good news of that fact. My experience was most trying in crossing the great Atlantic—and really how we came to be successful is almost a mystery to me, for no less than four vessels have been sunk in almost the very course that was taken by our boat. Commander B. F. Hayes, R. I., R. D., B. N. R. (our captain) contrived to reach the war zone by night, and there being no moon he ran through at full speed until daybreak when we were met by an escort, and by this means we arrived safely in the port of Liverpool, where there was great rejoicing indeed. I am well, save for my nervous system being a little unbalanced by reason of the great excitement that existed during the voyage. Every care was taken that all on board should be fully prepared for the event should disaster overtake us—we were given instruction in every particular, life-belts were given out, and we were drilled. The crew were drilled at the boats, all of which were lowered in readiness; four men were told off, and commanded each boat. While all this precaution was necessary, it was simply awful to see some of the poor souls who seemed to be in terror of death; many of them would not leave the deck, and remained there for several nights. The cargo is said to have been valued at New York at twenty-five million dollars, and consisted of foodstuff, guns, shells, machinery, motor wagons, of the latter there were no less than two hundred and fifty,—and six aeroplanes, etc. The vessel carried a record cargo, and was thirty-five feet deep in the water, so one can quite understand the anxiety felt for its safe arrival. On Sunday evening the opportunity was given me to hold divine service, of which I availed myself and had full charge. Hymn books were provided and we had a very nice song service, after which I preached for forty minutes to a very attentive audience, from Luke 4: 18, ‘The Spirit of the Lord is upon me,’ etc. I had splendid liberty throughout. When I began to speak, and my voice was heard in the next room, the people who were playing cards gave up and flocked into the companionway and stood there all through the discourse. At the close the people complained that the sermon was too short. So they petitioned the steward for the use of the room for another meeting on Wednesday evening, which was granted. I had some talk with several and gave them my card; they promising to write me.”

Heart of Mine

Stricken heart of mine, still look up to God;
Behold, in love he wields the chastening rod.

If rough the paths through which he leads the way,
And dark the clouds that veils the light of day,
Yet a more grievous path our Savior trod.

Weeping heart of mine, still soar to one above,
Place all thy hopes in Christ's redeeming love.

Rejoice that earthly woes will soon be passed.
See, the shores of time are receding fast,
Hovering near, behold the celestial dove of peace.

Aching heart of mine, why sigh and grieve?
Bid faith but lift the veil, and bliss perceive.

Grasp faith that will triumph o'er thy foes,
And through Christ regain thy lost repose,
His aid now claim, and former joys retrieve.

Fainting heart of mine, still in God be strong;
With might and vigor, battle against the wrong.

Work for the Master till thy task is fully done,
Wavering not in thy course till a prize is won,
Returning home at last with rejoicing and song.

Doubting heart of mine, shun false despair;
Bid hope drive the demon back to its lair.

Let lift faith to omnipotence, his mercy there see,
His sacrifice purchased a ransom for thee.
Just trust in his merit, and rest from all care.

Grief-laden heart of mine, say God's will be done,
In unison of spirit with the most holy one.

Ascend the Mount of God, through faith's pure air;
Drive sordid stress away with pettish care,
And lay the load of sorrow on God's eternal son.

Faithless heart of mine, why this clouded brow?
Cast all thy care on Jesus, and at his footstool bow.

For succor flee to the dear incarnate breast,
Thy weary head there lean upon him and rest;
With quickened hopes, renew thy covenant now.

Feeble heart of mine, on faith's pinions soar,
Come in penitence, God's pardoning love implore.

Rich benefits of grace are now within thy grasp;
In faith reach up his golden promises to clasp,
Be sealed in covenant with Christ for evermore.

The Broken-hearted Came to Thee for Cure

Lo, as at morn a dove that upward springs,
Bathes glad its plumage in expanse of light,
So we, in words of love, O King of kings,
Behold a dawn that follows after night.

The weary one doth ever near thee draw,
The broken-hearted come to thee for cure;
All tenderness and just thy simple law,
Thy life all spotless as the lilies pure.

As beautiful the lilies to our eyes,
So is thy gift of love unto the soul;
Aye, still we learn that in thy teaching lies
The perfect love to make our beings whole.

Thy master love shall triumph, Prince of Peace,
And one by one the thoughts of hate decay—
Thy blameless conquest, may it never cease,
As age to age the future rolls away!

EFFICIENCY IN MISSIONARY EFFORT

(Prepared and read by A. E. Warr, before a mass meeting of the elders at the recent General Conference.)

What is efficiency? Webster says it is, (a) "The condition or quality of being efficient; effective agency or power. (b) The condition of being competent; possession of the necessary knowledge or dexterity to accomplish a task."

In the language of another, The idea of efficiency seems to have found its way into all the activities of life where success is dependent upon human energy and effort, and as human energy and effort are certainly requirements in the ministerial field, this line of work is no exception to the rule, hence the subject under consideration.

Let us take this last definition as given by Webster, and instead of saying the necessary knowledge or dexterity to accomplish a task, let us say the necessary knowledge and dexterity, for surely no matter how much knowledge we may possess, we are failures unless we are skillful in the application of that knowledge, and the statement that "knowledge is power" is not without its modifications and is true only when knowledge is applied.

I once saw a young man smoking a cigarette and heard him calmly remark, "I'm interfering with my efficiency." This is knowledge without power. The question resolves itself therefore, into two general and natural divisions, viz, how may we qualify ourselves for the work? and what are the best methods of missionary effort?

The call to the priesthood appeals to us as a high and holy calling, sacred and responsible. He who stands as a mouthpiece for God and a teacher and leader among men should sense this responsibility and the necessity of acquiring efficiency. Many are called, but few are chosen, because of a failure to qualify. The oft-repeated instruction "study to show thyself approved unto God" is still worthy of repetition, and is just as applicable to this latter-day ministry as it was to Timothy, hence the greatest word in our vocabulary as ministers should be efficiency, and that in its broadest sense.

ACQUIRING EFFICIENCY

We are told that "the glory of God is intelligence, and we expect to rise in glory in the other life proportionally as we have risen in intelligence, efficiency and power in this life, and in this same manner do we affect those round about us. How then, may we acquire efficiency?

We would impress this thought, that in order to become efficient in missionary effort we must begin with ourselves. Primarily the doctrine of Christ is individualism, not the Darwinian idea of the "survival of the fittest," but in the sense that everyone is individually responsible to God for his own works, and the relationship which he establishes between himself and God. The man who said, "Know thyself" had this idea of individuality and initiative, as also the man who said, "To thine own self be true." We are told in latter-day revelation, "all things are controlled by law," and, "to every kingdom there is a law given," hence to know ourselves we must know the laws that govern in the spiritual and physical realms, and then be true to ourselves in the application of those laws to the development of character.

The development of a strong personality or character is a very essential prerequisite of successful missionary work, and just here we are reminded of the statement of the philosopher Eucken, who says that "spirituality is the very core of human personality." But what is spirituality?

It is the manifestation of Christ to the world through us, or, in other words, it is that influence which gives us a strong individual personality by which we are enabled to exert a Christlike influence over the lives of mankind, while without this influence we are sadly lacking in one of the essential elements that go to make up a successful minister.

In the development of our personalities one truth should impress itself: "No chain is stronger than its weakest link," and no character is stronger than its weakest point. There's danger here! It is a well-known principle of warfare that the enemy will attack at the weakest point,—then we go down. Hence the necessity of making every point strong, and this requires a complete observance of the law of development as found in the gospel of Christ. We see in the gospel an unparalleled opportunity for growth, development and power, let us see to it then that we take advantage of the opportunity afforded. The result will be a beautiful, symmetrical character, which not only insures us against the attacks of the enemy, but also makes our work effective.

So far as instructions to us as a ministry are concerned, we are left without excuse. Our standard books abound with such instructions as these: "Be one," "Be ye clean," "Come up higher." This means the elimination of envy and strife, for surely as James says, "Where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." Let us remember that Christ is not divided.

It means the elimination of jealousy, and a complete observance of the instructions to prefer one another in love. When we fully overcome this "green-eyed monster" there will be no more quarrel over precedence, neither as to who shall sit upon the right hand and who upon the left. May God help us to choose the Christ principles, which are the very embodiment of truth, light and love, and to properly discriminate between the constructive and destructive elements that are at work.

"Be ye clean" means that we shall be clean in our bodies, in our clothing, and in our speech. How often is the cause of Christ made to suffer because of indiscretions along these lines! Let us remember that we shall give an account unto God not only for our own works, but also for the fruit of our doings. In short, unless we live right we will not have the spirit that characterized the Master, and without this we will be failures. We must come up higher if we would fill the measure of our probation.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS

As to methods and tactics, no ironclad rule that will govern in all cases can be laid down, but we venture a few general suggestions. It has been said that when the first missionaries went out into the world with the message of restoration they took Joseph Smith under one arm and the Book of Mormon under the other, and that they were more successful than we are to-day. Granted; but bear in mind that we have different conditions to confront now. The stigma of Utah Mormonism, so called, meets us on every hand, assuming coloring according to locality. Sometimes open opposition, at other times sullen indifference. In view of this fact we can not say whether to preach the Book of Mormon first or last; whether to preach the spirits out of prison the first night, or let them stay there longer. These things are governed by conditions as they exist in the locality, and the directing influence of the Spirit of God.

Experience has taught us that the majority of people have an ordinary power of apperception, or the ability to connect new thoughts with the old, hence the wisdom of beginning upon common ground, or at least with subjects upon which there is not such a wide degree of difference. By doing this we not only lay a strong foundation, but also win confidence, and have a much greater influence when we come to the more difficult subjects. Suffice to say however, as before stated, the Spirit of God will direct all these things if we are in a condition to receive its directing influence.

AN AGGRESSIVE WARFARE

The question naturally arises, What shall be our attitude before the world in our work of proselyting, aggressive, or defensive? We answer unhesitatingly, aggressive. Being on the enemy's territory for the express purpose of overthrowing his kingdom, and to fight against spiritual wickedness in high places, in the nature of things we are placed in the aggressive. On the aggressive we carry into effect our motto of onward and upward, while on the defensive we would have no hopes of progress, but simply the holding of our ground; and in view of the fact that the ground we now occupy compared with that of the enemy is so small, we are not satisfied with it, but are constantly looking for new openings. Not only does the Devil build an altar wherever God erects a house of prayer, but usually he is already on the ground and has his work well established and the people happy in his delusions when God's missionaries arrive.

But when we say aggressive, we mean constructive aggressiveness. There are two kinds, constructive and destructive. Constructive aggressiveness consists of a common sense application of the best principles of proselyting, while destructive aggressiveness consists of knocking every man's church except our own, and making a stab at every person who may not agree with us as to the vital points of Christianity. This is wrong, and may work great injury to the cause we love. We are commanded to be wise servants and harmless as doves.

Never was it more necessary to observe this commandment than now. Are we complying with it? If not, we are not up to the standard of efficiency as marked out by the Savior. We can not be too careful on this point. Immortal souls are at stake! 'Tis not our province to use harsh or coercive measures in our efforts to get the gospel before the world, but on the other hand, we are commanded to manifest the Christ spirit, knowing this, that the goodness of God leadeth men to repentance. By all means let us have zeal and enthusiasm, but let us have it according to wisdom and knowledge.

In our attitude toward other churches, why not meet their representative on halfway ground, grasp his hand, call him brother, agree with him so far as possible, and thus lead him to the full light of God's truth. Individually, I consider the representatives of other churches honest and sincere until ample proof is submitted to the contrary; in the absence of such proof I give them the benefit of the doubt. We must contrast their darkened and confused condition with our superior knowledge and light, and remember the time when we were in the same condition. And let us not get the idea that because we belong to the Latter Day Saint Church that we are God's pets, and that he blesses no one but us. Much could be said on this point, but be it sufficient to say here that he who preaches the gospel in the affirmative and does it acceptably will have no time to knock the other fellow.

OUR PROPER RELATIONS

Another thing we would mention, and that is that old fight for precedence between local and missionary authorities. In the hope of benefiting some who may have met with these conditions in their fields of labor, we submit a few thoughts in the language of the First Presidency:

While in general the work of the missionary arm of the church and the work of the local arm are along quite distinct and different lines; yet in administration and prosecution of the two lines of work there is frequently such overlapping of endeavor and jurisdiction that unless there is present in both arms the spirit of brotherly cooperation the old quarrel of precedence is likely to arise and mar the efforts of both.

In general where the local arm of the work is well organized it means that the general authorities (missionary) are thereby freed for work in other and newer fields; but frequently the demand for missionary and proselyting exists in such close proximity to organized branches and districts—in fact practically within them—that the work of the missionary can not be done without apparent encroachment on the domains of the local work. Where this condition exists is where cooperation should have perfect play. Attempted coercion would be an error. On the other hand, in fully organized local work the expansion thereof will engender a class of work so closely allied to missionary work that there is apparent encroachment upon the domains of the missionary arm of the church, yet such expansion of the local work should be looked upon by the missionary authorities as a sign of wholesome growth and as help they need. Where in local organizations the demand for proselyting exists the assistance of the missionary arm where available should be highly welcomed; and where the local work has developed and expanded till the work of the local men takes on the nature of missionary effort, the help and assistance should be just as warmly welcomed by the missionary arm.

Where the assistance and cooperation of the local arm are needed by the missionaries, such assistance and cooperation should be sought, not demanded. On the other hand, where the help of the missionary arm is needed by the local, it should be sought in the spirit of brotherly cooperation. All of which is to say, that the old quarrel over precedence need not longer exist where saintly and brotherly cooperation have fully developed.

In this, though only a glance at some of our problems as ministers, we see some of the destructive elements which are at work and the necessity of eliminating them, while at the same time we cultivate the constructive ones. May God help us to have a proper conception of these things, catch the vision of our possibilities, become efficient workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, and thus fill the measure of our probation.

BRIEF HISTORY OF SUNDAY SCHOOL

(Prepared and read by E. F. Robertson before Pottawattamie District Sunday School Association, February, 1915.)

The primary object of the Sunday school is to teach the word of God to the children, and though we sometimes ascribe to the work a modern origin, in reality it had its beginning with the beginning of the race of man.

The Master commanded Peter to "feed my lambs." And long before that time the Lord had made choice of Abraham, because, as he said, "I know Abram, that he will command his children after him."

Moses, the great lawgiver, commanded the children of Israel as follows:

At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel and in their hearing. Gather the people together, men, and women, and children, and thy stranger that is within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn, and fear the Lord your God, and observe to do all the words of his law: and that their children, which have not known anything, may hear, and learn to fear the Lord your God, as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it.

In its essentials, the Sunday school, or Bible school, was an important part of the early Jewish educational system. About A. D. 70 to 80 Simon Ben Shetach established a system of religious schools in connection with synagogues in Palestine, making attendance obligatory.

Bunson says that the apostolic church made the school the connecting link between itself and the world: "Her catechetical instruction grew so steadily in acknowledged importance that church buildings were designed to provide special accommodations for the Bible school." These early schools were for both children and adults, whose teaching began with the story of creation in the Old Testament, and ended with practical Christian principles.

Luke 1: 4 refers to previous instruction received by Theophilus, possibly in such a school; and Acts 28: 23-25 indicates that on a certain day of the week the Jews of Rome came to Paul's house to receive instruction from the law and the prophets.

Gregory the Illuminator is said to have Christianized Armenia at the beginning of the fourth century by a compulsory system of Bible schools for children in every city, while at the same period similar schools were to be found in Mesopotamia, Cappadocia, Egypt, and elsewhere.

In the Middle Ages the Bible school idea was adhered to among the Waldenses, Albigenses, Lollards, Wiclifites, etc.

A notable example of the Bible school, apparently in many ways like our modern institution, were the schools of Charles Barromeo, Archbishop of Milan, in the middle of the sixteenth century. He was very zealous in establishing Sunday schools in all parts of his archdiocese, and succeeded in arousing the enthusiasm, and securing the cooperation, of the laity, men, and women, so that he had a large number of teachers.

In order to unite the workers and furnish a means for training them for the work, he established an organization called the "Confraternity of Christian Doctrine." Besides the teachers who were members of this confraternity, there were also others, who were called fishers, whose duty it was to gather the children and ignorant and bring them to the places appointed on Sundays, or sometimes on other days, to receive instruction.

At the death of Barromeo there were, in his diocese alone, over four thousand members of the confraternity, who taught in seven hundred and forty Sunday schools, and had more than forty thousand pupils.

This confraternity still exists, having a large membership in England, and was introduced into the United States in 1902, being established in the archdiocese of New York by the Roman Catholic Archbishop Michael Augustine Corrigan.

PROTESTANT SCHOOLS

Robert Raikes, the son of a printer in Gloucester, England, is regarded as the founder of the modern Protestant Sunday school. His attention was drawn to the need of such an institution by seeing the streets around him filled on Sunday with crowds of wretched-appearing children, most of whom had to work on other days and were afforded no opportunities for education.

The idea was suggested to him that there would be less desecration of the sacred day in keeping these children in school than in allowing them to spend it in the streets. He accordingly engaged several women who kept schools in the neighborhood to receive such children as he would send them on Sunday, and instruct them in reading and in the catechism, paying each of them a shilling for her day's work.

The effects of his benevolent exertions were so beneficial that his example was followed by other charitable persons in different parts of the city, spreading from thence to other places, until within a few years Sunday schools were established in almost every part of Great Britain. Within five years after the first experiment by Raikes in 1781, it was estimated that there were two hundred and fifty thousand children receiving instruction in Sunday schools.

In 1785 a Sunday school society was formed, and the members were encouraged to give their personal services gratuitously. The first Sunday school union was formed in London in 1803, the example soon being followed by many large towns, and some counties.

Sunday schools were established in Protestant churches in Scotland, Ireland, and America, in the years immediately following their establishment in England; the Scotch Society for the Promoting of Religious Instruction Among the Poor being formed in 1796, and the Irish Sunday School Society in 1809, although for several years previously a system of Sunday teaching had prevailed in Ireland.

The Sunday school movement was looked upon with disfavor by the people of New England at first; being regarded as a menace to the sacredness of the Sabbath, and as an infringement on the duties of the home.

The Protestant Sunday school as it now exists may be said to have had its beginning in Philadelphia, December 19, 1790, when twelve persons held a meeting and decided to begin the work. There had been a few schools established prior to that time, but they had been only local institutions.

On January 11, 1791, a society was formed in Philadelphia, having for its object the establishment of Sunday, or "First Day," schools. Bishop William White was its president, and Matthew Carey its secretary.

The American Sunday School Union is the outgrowth of the "Sunday and Adult School Union," established in Philadelphia in 1817, the new and broader organization taking definite form May 24, 1824.

On its seventy-fifth anniversary this union had one hundred thousand, nine hundred and twenty-eight schools, with a membership of four million, seventy thousand, three hundred and forty-six pupils, and five hundred and seventy-eight thousand, six hundred and eighty teachers. It had distributed literature to the value of nearly ten million dollars.

The first national convention was held in Chatham Street chapel, New York, October 3, 1832, since which time several national conventions have been held. At the convention in Baltimore, May, 1875, the name "International" was assumed; a name to which it had a right on account of the enlargement of the work, both in aim and in territory. The first world's convention convened in London, July 1, 1889.

The organization embraces, besides the usual executive officers, lesson committees and various department workers.

In many States annual state conventions are held, besides county and city conventions.

The department of field workers is most important.

SUNDAY SCHOOL IN REORGANIZED CHURCH

In the early days of the Reorganization the need of systematic work among the young was recognized, but there was reluctance on the part of many to take it up on the lines of the sectarian world, their idea seeming to be that everything that was done outside the true church of Christ was necessarily wrong. Others, however, thought that the people of God should accept good wherever it might be found, and accordingly some of the branches began to form classes among the children and older people with the object of studying the books of the church. At first the Sunday school was regarded as a part of the branch, and the superintendent was elected at the regular branch business meeting, along with other officers of the branch.

The school at Council Bluffs was among the first established, being organized December 23, 1866. The Union Branch in this district however, was a few months in advance, their school having been organized in May, 1866. We may safely assume, however, that Council Bluffs school is one of the oldest in the church.

The first printed matter put out by the church in the interest of the children consisted of a small department in the SAINTS' HERALD. This work was considered so important that as soon as practicable arrangements were made for a special juvenile publication, and in 1868, eight years after Joseph Smith had taken his place as president of the church, Zion's Hope was established, with him as its first editor.

A small book of questions and answers was prepared by Sister Marietta Walker for study by the children, which was used in the early Sunday schools before we had the Quarterlies and other helps that we now have.

At the session of General Conference which met at Kirtland, Ohio, April 6, 1891, the General Sunday School Association of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was effected, E. A. Blakeslee being chosen as the first superintendent.

For some years after this there was little uniformity in the work of the various schools, owing to a lack of properly prepared lesson leaves, but at the General Convention of 1891 it was decided to issue a lesson quarterly.

The first Quarterly was published in 1892, and since that time we have been making rapid progress. Quarterlies are now provided for children of all ages, and a system of teacher training has been adopted and is being employed by most of the larger, and many of the smaller schools, which is sure to make the work in the future more effective than it has been in the past.

Besides the Quarterlies the association continues to publish Zion's Hope as a weekly for the small children, and in 1913 another publication was established, called Stepping Stones, for those of the teen age and older. In 1906 a paper called the Sunday School Exponent was established, but, presumably for want of patronage, it was discontinued in 1914.

By order of the convention of the general association in April, 1903, a Sunday school songbook was provided for, Zion's Praises being issued as the result. This book is one of the most popular of all the publications of the church.

IN CONCLUSION

We have seen how the Sunday school began in a small way in the sectarian world, and how it had its beginning in a small way in the Reorganized Church. We have also seen that the sectarian churches found it one of the most effective departments of church work. We have found by experience that the same is true in the Reorganized Church. No field offers better opportunities for consecrated effort, nor yields a greater return for labor bestowed. Let no one deem it a condescension to work in the Sunday school. Angels could not engage in a holier or more exalted work!

LOYALTY TO OUR INSTITUTIONS AND SOCIETIES

There are a number of institutions owned and maintained by the church, and several societies that are auxiliaries, that give aid in a financial way to help carry them on and to render assistance through labor and in a social way. In order that these institutions and societies may be able to render the very best service in their chosen field of endeavor it is necessary for our people to give them their loyal support. The purpose of this article is to call attention to these institutions and societies, to what they are trying to do, and how necessary it is to assist them.

SAINTS' HOMES

There are four "Saints' homes": Two in Lamoni, Iowa, one in Independence, Missouri, and one in Kirtland, Ohio. These places are not a shelter for paupers and victims of poverty as those terms are generally used in the world. No such terms are ever used by Jesus and his servants when referring to persons who are the victims of greed, selfishness, and oppression, or their own lack of ability to foresee the many difficulties that beset the pathway of those who have been unfortunate in their environment and training so that they have not been able to make the best success in life, or have felt heavily the hand of affliction and sickness.

They are "homes" in as true a sense as that name implies, so far as it is possible when numbers and ages are considered. They are warm, sanitary, with books, papers, music, prayer meetings, preaching services; and best of all is the spirit of good will and love and kindness that exists between all that are within their sacred walls. It is "Home, home, sweet, sweet home," with the tender recollections that go with that sacred and holy name, and all who enter these institutions are not creatures of misfortune. Some have sufficient of their own means, or are remembered by their children, so that the church is remunerated for the service rendered. They go from choice because of the pleasant surroundings and religious and social privileges.

CHILDREN'S HOME

What can be more sad than to see a child who has lost one or both parents, and especially if it is mother who has been taken away, and they must face a selfish world which will rate them at their commercial value. A public home can never fill the measure of a good home where father and mother are found and love and kindness rule. The Children's Home is incorporated under the State laws of Iowa, and its officers are responsible to the State and the church for the faithful performance of their duties.

This home cares for children until such time as desirable homes may be found for them, and when it appears that it is for their best good to be placed in private homes. The officers of the institution and others connected with it are good men and women, and are anxious to render a faithful service.

SANITARIUM

The Independence Sanitarium is an institution built by command of God, and it is folly for anyone to quibble over it unless he wants to assume the responsibility for believing that the prophet deceived the church, and that the General Conference erred in approving the revelation. Many surgical operations are performed at the Sanitarium with good results, and some are marvelous indeed; but that is not all the work that is done. Good care by competent doctors and faithful nurses and administration by the elders bring good results, while many go away rejoicing without having taken medicine or having been operated on. The environment conduces to creating faith, and the administration of the elders to the sick is a daily occurrence. A spiritual atmosphere pervades the whole building. The chapel service each morning with song and prayer sends each one to his work with a feeling that God is recognized and that he is a worker together with him for the good of others.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

Graceland College supplies a need for our young people that can not be obtained elsewhere. The scholastic opportunities are not equal to a university or some of our richly endowed colleges, but the testimony of many who have been students, and of their parents who have observed, is to the effect that there has been moral and spiritual gain, and as the whole church advances on these lines the conditions of the college will do likewise—the college faculty and the student body will be typical of the whole church.

ORDER OF ENOCH

We have two orders of Enoch at present, one in Independence, Missouri, and one in Lamoni, Iowa. Their purposes are identical, to help the poor, to aid our people in obtaining homes in city, town, and country, and to give assistance to the young people, where it is needful to obtain an education.

ORDER OF ENOCH HOUSE

Where there are several thousand members in one community, as in Independence, and a number of our brethren engaged in business, a large number of our people go there on business; and they desire board and lodging, and it is not always their wish to stay with old friends, or make new ones with the same purpose in view. They seek a public place, and in the Order of Enoch House is found the combination of home and hotel, where the guests will find good accommodations, and are not saturated with tobacco smoke, or shocked by coarse or vulgar stories.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service is a society the special purpose of which is to labor for the social and moral betterment of our women and boys and girls. The name is a big one, but not nearly so large as the opportunity to labor for those who sorely need such service.

SOCIETY OF PATRONESSES

The special work of the Society of Patronesses of the Independence Sanitarium is to help supply the multitude of little things so needful in an institution of this kind, such as sheets, towels, napkins, pillow cases, blankets, and many other useful articles, also to repair the linen. [There is a society of the same name in Lamoni to help Graceland College.—EDITORS.]

"HERALD" AND "ENSIGN"

The HERALD and Ensign are the two chief literary arms of the church, and their chief aim is to reach the church and the world with literature that will best present the faith of Christ and give a true history of the latter-day work, and as a minor part do commercial work suitable to present-day business needs.

HOW SHALL WE BE LOYAL?

It is very important to know in what manner we should be loyal to these institutions. The financial part in some ways is the most important. The law as given in the books makes ample provision to meet every proper need, and it is based on justice and mercy, so does not rob the rich or oppress the poor. The tithing comes from those who have an increase above their "just needs and wants"; the surplus from those who have the ability and desire to pay more than a tithe, or who have that for which they have no special need in their business. Consecrations may apply to special needs outside of the current expenses, and offerings come from those who are not able to pay tithes or surplus, the "widow's mite" was of that class. This wise provision of our heavenly Father makes it possible for all to help in his work. And that our opportunity to do good might be further extended, the Lord spoke to the church (Doctrine and Covenants 117:12), and said, "Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith." All these institutions are of a kind that gives us an opportunity to carry out the practical work that is a part of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and to fail in these things is to come short of meeting our responsibilities, and those so failing can be properly classed among those who are disobedient children, and the Lord has said the rebellious shall be cast out of the land of Zion (Doctrine and Covenants 64:71).

The work of these institutions is sacred and holy. It would seem that it would not be necessary to ask a second time for their support; and yet it requires a continuous appeal to obtain bare necessities.

It is not enough to only give these institutions our financial assistance; they need our moral support, and to fail in this is to convey the impression to the public that they are not capable of performing the work for which they were organized. Human shortcomings, and a failure to show the highest administrative qualities is not a legitimate excuse to fail in our duty; troubles of that nature come to all who make an effort to improve human conditions; they are a part of the price paid in the struggle for the good of the human race, and we must expect to find the same among our people.

Our Sanitarium is rendering a good service to those who go within its walls. Some other institutions have a finer equipment, but none have a class of doctors and nurses more faithful to duty, a service that brings comfort and joy to the afflicted ones. This institution deserves our hearty and sympathetic support, and except in emergencies, or extremely severe sickness, our people within three hundred miles, or more, ought to patronize it; the moderation in charges by the physicians will usually more than make up for the railroad fare, and the environment is conducive to faith, and the privileges of administration are under the most favorable conditions.

We should not look on our institution, our doctors and nurses, as being inferior to others in like professions; these are as competent and as anxious to render a faithful service as others, and oftentimes more honorable and fair in dealing with their patients. Without any reflection on other good people of like professions, we ought to give encouragement to our own in such a manner as will show that we appreciate their talent and efforts to be of service to us. The opportunities for the Sanitarium to do good for our own people and our neighbors is so great that we can not see the limit of its field of usefulness, and we should give it our loyal support so that it can enlarge its usefulness. If we only think to do good to our own we are not the children of our heavenly Father. The Saints throughout the church should give their loyal support to the Society of Patronesses of the Sanitarium in sending them money and merchandise; by so doing they will help them in their good work.

The best way to be loyal to Graceland College is to send our boys and girls there. It is very evident that all of them can not go there, lack of money will prevent many, and some will have the same advantages at home; but where there are no special hindering causes we should give our own school the first consideration.

The HERALD and Ensign offices do not receive the financial support they deserve. The subscription lists of both papers should be double what they are. If we do not read the church literature we can not know what the church is doing, or become acquainted with its history and doctrine, and as a result we lose interest in the work. We should also give them consideration when we need printing done.

To sum up the whole matter, we should give all our various institutions and societies our moral and financial support.

The excuse that these institutions, societies, and the church are always "begging" for money will not justify us in withholding our support; our heavenly Father will not accept such an excuse. What we waste in extravagance, to gratify our vanity, pride, selfishness, and love for the frivolous pleasure of the world, would supply all that is needed, and plenty left for other needs. One cent per week from twenty-five thousand (25,000) for one year would be thirteen thousand dollars ($13,000), enough to meet all the demands for our benevolent and educational institutions.

Last year one of the small Protestant churches, with about the same number as our own, collected sixty thousand dollars ($60,000) for benevolent work and five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) for foreign missions, and maintains more than fifty colleges and academies, and about the same number of sanitariums. If we believe that we are the children of the kingdom we ought to do the works of the kingdom, and that is to be constantly doing good. The good King Benjamin said that when we were in the service of our fellow men we were in the service of God.

TO MOTHER

(Written for Mother's Day, Colorado Springs, Colorado, May 19, 1915.)

God gives many good gifts by two's and threes;
By sixes and sevens, some others.
But like many good gifts to mortals given
He only gives one mother.

My mother I never knew, she was permitted to stay with me only a few short weeks. I never was conscious of her love, her smile, or frown! of any of her characteristics, disposition, even her looks. I know only what has been told me,—and have one picture taken while young. Therefore her influence on my life has not been through or by any teaching or counsel, for that could not be.

When I was nearly grown I heard a comment on her life, made by a friend who had known her well: "She was never known to have said an unkind thing about anyone."

There I believe was the key to her life; the charity that could cover a multitude of sins; a nature that had something at least of the divine in it, worthy of my emulation.

Can anyone dare to say that mother though out of sight and sound did not still help those left behind? And when she obeyed the summons we each shall hear, I imagine she might have said: "Oh, heavenly Father, be more than a mother to these little ones; make their path just as smooth as you can, and let them each one find thee, and me."

For her this white flower.

God gives only one mother, but he gave my father wisdom to give us a very good substitute.

She it was who at eighteen undertook to mother five little motherless children, and so well did she accomplish it, that if there was any mother love, kindness or care lacking, I never discovered my loss.

In her life I see devotion to duty, and PATIENCE, I write it in capitals.

For her is this pink bloom.

Recently I read an article entitled "A halo for father." It reminded us of how continually we throw bouquets to mother, for her many virtues, deservedly, but apparently forgetting how patiently father may be plodding along; rubbing the sharpest corners off the pebbles before mother steps on them; making it possible for mother to sit quietly under the halo and teach the beautiful poems and sweet lessons to the little ones.

So let us not forget to toss an occasional blossom to father, even though he did come home sometimes so tired he wasn't the sweetest playmate in the world.

In speaking of my father, two words only fit, right and duty. I can not imagine anything that could cause him to go contrary to his conception of these two principles. It is his teaching I remember the clearest: I must honor my parents; speak the truth; and respect the Sabbath. These things taught in our youth we can not forget when we grow older.

To her through whom this life was given;
Who fain would guide our souls to heaven
All honor due.

Her heart was filled with love and charity,
Her life, in peace toward all, and sweet humility,
Was kind and true.

To him who stood between this one,
And winter's cold, and summer's sun
Give honor, too.

Whose stand for duty and for right;
Has oft helped others in their fight
Win victory true.

So mother; father! both of you
We love, respect and reverence you.
And may we in that better land
With you beside life's river stand
And all our loved ones, too.

SALLIE J. CONWAY.

Of General Interest

REVISING BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Of general interest to all Christian churches, and especially to the Protestant Episcopal Church of America is the work of the two convocations, at Canterbury and at York, which have been for some time in session in attempting a revision of the Book of Common Prayer. The work is being done under the authority of a Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline, the need for such revision being thus stated in the act of creating the commission:

The law of public worship in the Church of England is too narrow for the religious life of the present generation. It needlessly condemns much which a great section of church people, including many of her most devoted members, value. . . . In an age which has witnessed the most extraordinary revival of religious life and activity the church has had to work under regulations fitted for a different condition of things without that power of self-adjustment which is inherent in the conception of a living church.

The historian Green voiced a somewhat similar criticism when he wrote:

It [the church] stands alone among all the religious bodies of Western Christendom in its failure, through two hundred years, to devise a single new service of prayer or praise.

There have been many liturgies in the Christian Church from the earliest times and in different countries, such as those of Saint Chrysostom, Saint Peter, Saint James, Saint Basil, and others. There have been Armenian, Roman, Gallican, Ambrosian, Spanish, African, and English liturgies and, the latter has caught something of the spirit and sometimes of the actual words of most of these. The liturgy of the Church of England dates back to 1547, and was established under Edward VI. Adopted in the second year of his reign, it was reviewed in the fifth, when, in compliance with objections brought forward by Calvin and some eminent English divines, alterations in regard to various matters were made, the general confession and absolution added, and the communion made to begin with the ten commandments. By this review the use of oil in confirmation and extreme unction were taken away, as also prayers for the souls of the departed. The liturgy thus reformed was established by Acts 5 and 6 of Edward VI, was abolished by Queen Mary, who caused a return to the liturgy as used in the last year of Henry VIII, but was again reestablished in the reign of Elizabeth. A few alterations were made in the reign of King James I, and the Prayer Book so amended remained in force to the fourteenth year of Charles II. Another review was made in 1661, and here it has remained stationary for more than two hundred and fifty years, though many applications have been made for review, but until the present these have failed of success.

That there should be a manifest unwillingness to change or alter in any way a form of service which has come down to the church through nearly three centuries is readily understandable. There is a certain majesty of conception in a church using forms sanctioned by the use of centuries. A great church coming down through the ages with a stately ritual speaking of the centuries rather than of the varying currents and fashions of the thought of to-day makes an appeal to the historical as well as to the religious imagination. Yet difficulties have grown up which at last seem to demand decision, and hence the two great convocations at Canterbury and York have a very important and seemingly necessary, though extremely difficult, work to do.—The New York Times, June 6, 1915.

CHRISTIAN COMITY NOT A CRIME

The average American may find it hard to understand why the Church of England has been in the throes of upheaval over the act of two missionaries in Africa who fraternized with a Scotch Presbyterian fellow worker; and why the Archbishop of Canterbury should be severely criticized for giving the two offending bishops a half-vindication. The Bishop of Zanzibar started the storm, as recorded in these columns at the time, by branding the Bishops of Mombasa and Uganda as "heretics and schismatics" because they took part in a communion service in the church of the Scottish mission in Kikuyu, and discussed with non-Anglicans "a scheme of federation whereby the Christian churches might present a united front to the appalling darkness of heathenism in the midst of which they were working." The Primate of England endeavored before entering judgment to ascertain if anything had been done at the Kikuyu Conference that was contrary to the principles of the Church of England. The problem is said to be becoming a pressing one in every mission field, and is thus stated in the archbishop's pamphlet:

It is the paramount duty and privilege of those who are already Christians to promote the upbuilding of the Church of Christ among all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues. The church so upbuilt must in every land be, or become, what we call for shortness' sake a native church, a church, that is, into whose structure the characteristics of the people of that land are for the common good of the whole Church of Christ taken up and interwoven. The message of the Lord Jesus Christ must not permanently be read by the Indian or Chinese or African Christian through European eyes, or be expressed in terms of European speech, or maintained and set forth by usages and forms of worship which are distinctively or exclusively of European origin. Still less must the growing native church—Chinese or Indian or African or Australasian—be hampered in its young life by schisms and divergences whose origin and meaning are due to what may almost be called the accidental happenings of English or Scottish life—political, social, and ecclesiastical—one hundred and fifty or two hundred and fifty years ago.

In view of the desire of both to create a genuinely African church for the future and also to maintain the existing loyalty to denominational systems and traditions, the archbishop finds the two African bishops quite justified in their acts, and sees nothing subversive of church order in welcoming recognized ministers of other churches to preach at Anglican services, though he asserts that Anglicans must stand by "the threefold ministry which comes down to us from apostolic times." On the point of open communion he intimates that while Christians of other faiths may properly be welcomed at the table of his church, he can not indorse the reverse. No Anglican can receive communion at the hands of alien clergy. This might seem to condemn the two "heretical and schismatic" bishops, but the Primate covers them thus with the broad mantle of charity:

The communion service at the end of the conference at Kikuyu does not come within the scope of the considerations which we have previously advanced about exceptional cases of admission to holy communion. For there was on that occasion no such necessity as we were then contemplating. It was an act of a different nature, unpremeditated, and prompted by an impulse of a deeply Christian kind. We desire to abstain from any expression of judgment about it. We can well believe that for the purity of its motive and for the love that was in it, it was acceptable to him to whom it was offered, and whom its participants united to adore.

But after saying this, we are bound to add that any attempt to treat it as a precedent, or to encourage habitual action of the kind, must be held to be inconsistent with principles accepted by the Church of England. It would be a very serious alteration of the terms of communion, made not by any deliberate and corporate resolution of the church, but by the sporadic action of individuals. However well intended, it would be subversive of church order. It would perplex the minds and distress the consciences of multitudes of loyal churchmen. So far from promoting unity, it would, in our judgment, rather imperil the measure of unity which we now possess and the prospects of the fuller unity for which we pray. Inspired by the laudable motive of charity toward those from whom we are unhappily separated, it would be grievously hurtful to charity among ourselves.

Surely, remarks The Episcopal Recorder (Reformed Episcopal, Philadelphia), "there must be something wrong here," for:

If that particular communion "was acceptable to him to whom it was offered, and whom its participants united to adore," why should not other union communion services be "acceptable to him"? And if "acceptable to him," what more could anyone ask? Surely to mention the "historic episcopate" in the same breath is either false emphasis or imperitance or possibly both.

The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, lately met, looked with no great favor on the archbishop's words. They give "a decided setback to anything like organic federation," said Doctor Ogilvie. But the prevailing impression was that points of difference should not be debated during the war. The Church Times (London) shows that Anglicans themselves are many of them dissatisfied with the views of their spiritual head:

Things are being whispered in the ear which may soon be proclaimed on the housetops. Men are speaking of the "apostasy" of the archbishop, and threatening withdrawal from the ministry of the Church of England in consequence. We have little patience to discuss the matter with such minds. We might ask, if the Archbishop of Canterbury be an apostate from the faith, why a parish priest in the Midlands should on that account forsake his altar? An apostate bishop—there have been such in all ages—should be fought outright, not left in peaceable possession of the field. Still less can we understand why the apostasy of an Archbishop of Canterbury should prove to anyone—the proof seems to be alleged—that the largest claims of the Roman See are well founded. Such inconsequence staggers the understanding. But, above all, we are lost in wonder when we try to understand why a pronouncement which renders organic federation with Presbyterians impossible should be taken as evidence of apostasy from the Catholic Church.—The Literary Digest, June 19, 1915.

AUGUST READING.—MOUTH HYGIENE AND THE CARE OF TEETH

TOOTH BUILDING FOODS

"The lime-salts needed for the upbuilding of the tooth structures are generally contained in simple, natural and easily digested foods. The cereals—wheat, rye, oats, etc., are most of them rich in the ingredients needed for the teeth, and unless these ingredients are destroyed in the process of preparing these cereals for market they furnish abundant nutrition for the bones, and teeth, provided intelligent use is made of them. The same can be said of milk and many of the fruits and vegetables. . . . The nutritive value of beans is higher than that of any other vegetable. Potatoes contain valuable potash salts which are lost in boiling without the skins, but are retained in baking or boiling with the skins on.

. . . "It may be said of meat that the tendency is to feed too much rather than too little. . . . Meat is a natural food, and when properly cooked serves a useful purpose, but meat extracts and meat juices are artificial, and should be given only on the advice of a physician. . . . Moreover, meat and many of the other natural foods give an opportunity for mastication which plays such an important part in developing strong teeth." . . .

NATURAL FOODS

"Just what is meant by natural foods may be illustrated by referring again to wheat, which, perhaps more nearly than any other one vegetable product, answers to all the requirements of the body. In the process of making fine wheat flour the outside layers of the wheat kernel are discarded. It is then no longer a natural food. The portions richest in lime salts essential for tooth building have been cast aside and lost. It is true that the extreme outside coating has no nutritive value . . . but within this outside coating are two other layers extremely rich in phosphates, and these are the most valuable as nourishers of bone and teeth, yet these also are cast aside in order that the flour may look white and make white bread. . . . Although it may be shown that such flour is as nourishing, measured by heat calories, as the whole-wheat flour, it is a well-known fact that no animal could be fed for any prolonged period on such a diet without the effect showing itself in a marked deterioration of the bones and teeth. . . .

"Observations made of the teeth of a large number of school children in Sweden show that in the lime regions where the grains contain a high percentage of calcium salts the teeth are very much stronger than in the lower countries where the land is not so rich in lime. Thus it can be seen that whereas the lime salts which are so essential to the teeth are not usually taken into account in experiments determining food value as measured by calories, yet they must be abundantly supplied. . . .

"In the preparation of grains for food the modification or alteration has gone on to an extent that is inconceivable, and especially is this true of wheat when it is converted into flour . . . and so general is the use of fine flour that there is just cause to fear that the 'bolting cloth of the miller will become the shroud of the American people.' . . .

"The oatmeal that is used so widely as a breakfast food is a natural food in itself. It is still a natural food when eaten with that other natural product, milk. It ceases to be a natural food when to this combination is added an inordinate quantity of manufactured sugar. Serious digestive disturbances frequently result from overindulgence in this mixture.

"It is probable that the craving for sugar by a child is unnatural and acquired. . . . This does not mean that sugar is not an important and essential ingredient in the diet of a child, but simply that the normal requirements of the body for sugar can be amply supplied by natural foods. . . . There is an abundant supply of sugar in milk, fruits and vegetables for all the needs of the body and these can usually be bountifully supplied without injury to the child."

NUTRITION OF THE MOTHER

"Of course, consideration of the question of food for the child's nutrition should begin with the mother before the child is born. That she should be bountifully nourished and supplied with every hygienic aid that science can suggest goes without saying. The health of the child for years to follow may depend upon the proper nutrition of the mother at this time."

BUILDING THE TEETH OF THE YOUNG CHILD

"The testimony of dentists will show that it is unusual to find healthy teeth in the mouth of a child who has been brought up on one or more of the prepared foods. . . . The food of the child, like the food of the plant, must contain all the ingredients necessary for its perfect development, if it is to become robust. . . . In repeated experiments where animals were fed on food lacking in mineral salts . . . the attempt to supply these mineral salts artificially was unsuccessful. . . . So it is in the feeding of children, the addition of phosphates to the food in artificial or medicinal form can not possibly make up the loss when the natural food is deprived of its normal mineral ingredients. . . .

"If up to the age of three or four years the child has been well nourished, passing from the material font to good cow's milk and to other wholesome foods, but slight obstruction will probably be offered to the carrying out of a systematic plan for improving the nutrition of the body, and of the teeth in particular. . . .

"Insist upon the child's eating slowly and never allow him to take a drink of anything while he has a particle of food in his mouth. . . . If the food is washed down with water or milk it can not come in contact with saliva, nor can the teeth properly prepare it for stomach digestion, besides which the teeth and jaws are not afforded their proper exercise. . . . It is well to encourage children to drink all the water they require before the meal begins."

EARLY CLEANSING OF THE TEETH

"The care of the child's teeth should begin as soon as the first tooth comes through. A clean, soft, wet cloth may be used to wipe off the teeth. . . . If the nurse feels her way carefully, this cleansing may be done after every meal and will become a delight to the child, who will experience a sense of relief and refreshment on having his teeth and gums rubbed. This will also teach the child to open the mouth, and in this way will simplify the dentist's work when the time for the first visit has arrived.

"When the first temporary molars have arrived the brush should be used. It should be small, the bristles soft, and it should be used very gently. Gradually brushes of harder bristles may be selected and as the child becomes old enough to acquire some skill in the use of the brush he should be encouraged and guided in his efforts to use it. . . . It should be borne in mind that it will do no harm to rub over the grinding surfaces of the teeth as vigorously as circumstances will permit, but that care must be used in brushing near the gum margins. The cloth or brush must be kept surgically clean, otherwise it will become a breeding place for bacteria. . . .

"At as early an age as possible the habit of brushing the tongue should be incorporated with the care of the teeth, for the tongue forms a lodging and breeding place for bacteria, and by keeping it clean, not only are the teeth protected, but the health of the child as well. . . . Care must be used so that the cleansing process shall always be an agreeable occupation for the child. . . .

"If the teeth have been cleansed as has been suggested there will ordinarily be no need of an examination by the dentist until the child is about three years old. Up to this time the teeth must be carefully watched, and if suspicious marks appear professional advice should be sought. . . . The first step should be to polish every part of every tooth carefully. . . . Repeated polishing removes, as nothing else will, those transparent coatings so harmful to the teeth and in some measure it also frees the mouth from bacteria. It also probably acts as a substitute for the exercise which is needed to stimulate the activity of the blood vessels and serves to improve the texture of the teeth. Moreover, by frequent examinations, it is possible to detect each carious process [decay] at its earliest inception and by this method, and with the cooperation of the parent, it will be possible to take the child through life without a really serious operation."

CARE OF SIXTH YEAR MOLARS

"The six-year molars are the largest of all the teeth and are superb grinders when they are carefully preserved. . . . They come in behind the last temporary teeth without disturbing or displacing any of the first teeth. . . . Often they are unnoticed or if noticed at all are supposed to belong to the first set. This failure to recognize the six-year molars as permanent and valuable teeth gives rise to great neglect in their care, and too often results in their loss; and yet it is probable that no teeth are more valuable in mastication and the loss of no others is attended by more harmful results. There are no teeth the extraction of which will break up so thoroughly the articulation or perfect occlusion of the other teeth and which will so disastrously affect the power of mastication.

"For these reasons the vigilance which has been pointed out as necessary for the preservation of the temporary teeth must be redoubled with the coming in of the first permanent molars, but the watchful eye of the dentist only can be depended upon to discover the first signs of decay in these somewhat remote teeth."

EXTRACTION OF TEETH TO BE AVOIDED

"If closely watched and carefully treated no pulp or nerve, as it is erroneously called, should ever become exposed in any tooth, and with this cause anticipated and prevented few cases of toothache would arise to torment the world. . . . In all cases of toothache, from whatever cause, the dentist should be consulted at once. Nothing can be gained by delay, and in many cases delay is almost suicidal. Extraction should never be resorted to except by the advice of a competent dentist. In a majority of instances it will not be necessary and will on the contrary do incalculable harm.

"If allowed to decay, the first teeth will produce exactly the same suffering that comes later with the decay of the permanent teeth. Moreover, if the temporary teeth lose their vitality the roots do not become absorbed readily and the incoming of the second teeth is thereby interrupted. The retention beyond the proper period of a temporary tooth is likely to produce an irregularity in the second teeth. Similar irregularities may also be produced by the too early extraction of a first tooth. The general health of the child and the comfort of the parent are greatly enhanced by keeping the first teeth in order."—Samuel A. Hopkins, M. D., D. D. S.

TARTAR

"This is a deposit of animal and mineral matter, precipitated from the fluids of the mouth upon the teeth. . . . It makes the gums spongy and sloughy and causes them to bleed at the slightest irritation. It produces suppuration of the gums and pus accumulates . . . making the mouth exceedingly unwholesome. It forces the gums from the teeth and working its way between them produces such an absorption of the bony sockets as to cause the teeth to fall out of their own account, or to be taken out at the least exhibition of force. It vitiates the saliva and imparts a disagreeable odor to the breath. . . . By the most unremitting attention the teeth should be kept free from tartar. . . . When once allowed to become incrustated with tartar, no one can thoroughly clean his own teeth . . . Every one, then, should visit his dentist at least twice a year, for cleaning and examination of his teeth. . . It is not sufficient to have only the aching teeth attended to; whenever it is necessary let them be cleaned, filled or capped for thus only can every source of disease be removed and the mouth restored to a healthy condition."—VICTOR C. BELL, A. B., D. D. S.

USE OF THE TOOTHBRUSH

"All teeth should be brushed toward the crown—that is, for the upper teeth a downward motion and for the lower an upward motion should be used. This will clean the spaces between the teeth more effectively than merely brushing backward and forward and has the additional advantage of not pushing the gums away from the necks of the teeth. . . The grinding surfaces should also be well brushed. . .

"Whenever circumstances will allow it, it is desirable that the teeth should be brushed after every meal. . . Self respect and a desire for a better feeling in the mouth induces one to brush the teeth the first thing in the morning, and at bedtime the most thorough cleansing of the day should take place.

"For soft, spongy and bleeding gums, massage and brushing (very gentle at first) combined with proper mastication will in a majority of instances effect a cure without other treatment.

"Silk floss drawn between the teeth, if carefully used so as not to injure the gums is a valuable adjunct in the cleansing process.

"While brushing the teeth the mouth and the brush should be frequently rinsed . . . and the brush at short intervals should be sterilized.

"To avoid the use of harmful preparations in the form of tooth paste or powder it is advisable to use only such as are recommended by a reliable dentist, and it is well to remember that no mouth wash can be of great value unless the teeth are cleansed and the food particles removed before its use.

"The teeth, if properly brushed can never be brushed too often . . . though cases might be cited where too vigorous brushing with a hard brush and coarse powder has worn the teeth to an injurious degree. . . Smooth, highly polished enamel offers great resistance to the destructive forces."—Hopkins.

"When our soldiers, on account of the heat in Cuba, had thrown away their baggage . . . a British officer who was with them marveled as he saw a regiment march by, each soldier with a toothbrush twisted into the band of his hat. Thus children should be taught that a toothbrush is an essential article of the toilet—the last thing that they should use at night [then if at no other time] and the last thing that they should throw away."—William H. Burnham of Clark University in Parents' Problems.

LEGTHERIDGE, ALBERTA, June 1, 1915.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed to Alberta District, and it being a new field to me, I desire the hearty co-operation and assistance of all who wish to work for the Lord. Such can greatly assist by informing me of opportunities in their locality for preaching. We are all laborers together with God.

During the busy season for the people in the country, let us try to do all in towns and cities we can. We can preach on the streets and distribute tracts, and in this way reach many whom we could not otherwise reach. Let us thrust in our sickle and reap, as stated in Psalm 1: 26, so that at the end of the season we can say like Paul, Thanks be to God which gave us victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

I have not yet chosen a field address, but mail will reach me at Calgary, Alberta.

In bonds,
W. P. BOOTMAN.

PAONIA, COLORADO, June 4, 1915.

Editors Herald: Though isolated here, we have organized a Sunday school. We are five families of Saints. A few have been added since, not belonging to the church. We meet at the homes of the Saints. We organized on April 18. The Lord has blessed us in our efforts to do his will. We hope by his help we may grow in numbers.

In gospel bonds,
FLOYD POTTORFF.

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND, 23 Koran Street,

NORTHEAST VALLEY, May 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are still doing our best to further the interest of the latter-day work. The little branch in Dunedin is still plodding along and living in hopes of some one of the missionary force coming to help swell our numbers. Brethren Hall and Leberz are always at the front when opportunity presents itself, and sometimes they have good audiences, although it is hard to hold a crowd together on the streets.

Brother Hall's oldest son Ralph, met with a very serious accident on May 1, at a garden party, being thrown from a pony and sustaining an ugly fall on his head. He was admitted to the hospital suffering from hemorrhage, concussion of the brain and fracture of the skull, and lay unconscious for three days. The doctor said that if he did not improve they would need to operate, and as these operations are very delicate Brother and Sister Hall were not anxious for it to be done. We fasted and prayed that Brother Ralph might be spared, and Brother Hall continued to administer to him. We were rewarded the following day when Ralph regained consciousness and remained so for three hours. It was a great relief to those who watched at his side. The next day the doctor came and seeing the improvement said that there was no need for an operation. We truly thank God for hearing our prayers and answering them that we may be more strengthened in the fight. Ralph will be out of the hospital to-morrow, or Saturday, having been confined there only a fortnight.

We are anxiously awaiting for the next HERALD to read all the conference news. We are a patient lot in this part of the vineyard, having to wait from four to six weeks for our HERALDS.

We pray that the great world war will soon end, and that mankind will be allowed to live in peace.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother,
J. C. BRADLEY.

DUNLAP, OKLAHOMA, June 3, 1915.

Editors Herald: Two years ago a family by the name of Swain moved near us. On acquaintance with them we found them to be upright, honest people. Everything about them seemed to be all right except their religion. They said they were Latter Day Saints. I had never heard of a Latter Day Saint before, and the neighbors intimated that these people were Mormons. This caused us to watch them closely. I liked them as neighbors and could see nothing wrong, but thought if they were connected with Mormonism there must be something wrong with them which I had not discovered.

After they had lived here some time, they sent me word one evening that one of their elders was here and would hold services that night. This was Elder J. H. Baker and they invited me to attend. I went partly from curiosity, and partly because I had always enjoyed attending church. I had never been a member of any church, but had lived a better life I thought, than many who had their names on church books; besides I had never found a church which I considered was the one Christ had established. I had made up my mind this church did not exist in the world to-day, and that it made no difference whether I belonged to any church or not, just so long as I lived the best I knew.

I went to hear Elder Baker the first night, and as he continued for ten consecutive nights I attended every night. Some of the things he preached I had always believed, but had never heard anyone else preach. Others were new, and I sometimes sat spellbound. It seemed to me he was preaching to no one in the house but myself, especially one night when he preached an impressive sermon on baptism. He seemed to have known my thoughts. I had never thought baptism essential, but had concluded that if I were ever baptized it would be by immersion. In closing the meetings Brother Baker said, "This will be the last night," and all bade him good-by except myself. He had good interest and a good congregation.

I slipped out quietly, unobserved, I thought. Something told me I would see Brother Baker again. I thought during these meetings that surely this man was preaching the truth. Then doubts would rise, and then I would conclude that if I found nothing back of this movement connected with Mormonism I would obey. I went home after this last meeting and after all had retired took the Bible and asked God to show me the right way. I continued this until about twelve o'clock, when something seemed to say, Go in the morning to Swain's and tell Brother Baker you want to be baptized. When I had decided to do this I fell asleep.

On awaking next morning, January 26, it was cloudy and cold. I prepared breakfast, and told the children I was going over to Swain's. I feared Brother Baker would be gone before I got there.

On the way I stopped twice to turn back, the Tempter suggesting that I had been almost an invalid for years, and that this was too cold a day for me to be baptized. Then the Good Spirit urged me to go on and test the matter for myself, and then if I found the church not as represented to be I would withdraw.

When I reached there Brother Baker remarked, wondering if his labor at this place had been in vain. Bursting into tears, I said no, that I wanted him to baptize me. I was baptized at ten o'clock the same morning. In my confirmation it was said that if I remained faithful I would be an instrument in saving others.

In April Brother Baker came back and my husband and oldest son, fourteen years of age, obeyed the gospel. A family by the name of Sible moved here shortly after, and lost a little boy. Brother Baker preached again and Brother and Sister Sible and two children, nine and eleven years of age, were baptized.

Last fall the Saints held a reunion at Dunlap, and we had the privilege of meeting Brethren Durfee and Arber. This meeting was a great inspiration to us. The brethren spoke encouraging words that have helped us. Since then we have had trials and persecutions until it seemed we were entirely forsaken. When we have been in the depths of despair God has come to our rescue and by giving us a portion of his Holy Spirit has enabled us to redouble our efforts and try to walk as our heavenly Father would have us do, letting our light shine before the world.

We organized a Sunday school, holding it in our house. Brother Swain and family have moved away. People became so prejudiced against us after our reunion that they would hardly speak to us. Brother Sible runs a little grocery store, not being able on account of weak eyes to work in the sunshine. It seemed at times that he would lose all his trade on account of his religion. But the righteous are never forsaken, and all the prejudice is gradually disappearing. Some outsiders are now attending our Sunday school. We have also heard favorable comment concerning our school. Two others of our sons were baptized after Brother Sible's were, and we are now nine Latter Day Saints besides our small children.

Last week a Bible class was formed, and I was quite astonished when I was selected by our president to be leader.

Praying that God will bless all of his children and give them help and strength to accomplish some good in this life, I am,

Your sister,

IDA M. KELLEY.

News from Missions

Ohio

I left home, Cameron, Missouri, May 8, for my field. Spent Sunday with the Saints of the Saint Louis Branch, and preached morning and evening, also preached at the Oak Hill and the Landsdowne branches, and attended to other lines of the evangelical work. I was pleased to meet with the Saints and to form acquaintance of some noble souls who had lately come into the fold. I would have been very much pleased if I could have remained longer, but one week was the longest I could stay with them, for I had promised to meet with the Saints at the Brush Creek Branch, in the Southeastern Illinois District, Sunday, May 16.

There was a large gathering at this branch, I spoke at 11 a. m., and 3 and 7.30 p. m. Many brought well-filled baskets and partook of the contents in the pleasant, shady grove. The visit was short, but very much enjoyed. A request came to continue services all week, but was not complied with, as it was a busy time for the farmers, and I thought it would tax the Saints and friends too much, so Monday I left for Akron, Ohio, and arrived there at 4.30 p. m. the 18th.

A letter from Brother G. T. Griffiths, minister in charge, suggested that I call at Akron, Canton, New Philadelphia, and Youngstown. I held nine meetings at Akron, in their neat chapel which is located on a good street in the residence district. Brother A. R. Manchester is in charge, assisted by a good, faithful force. I made my home with Brother and Sister Roberts, (whose parents I knew nearly half a century ago, at Brookfield, Ohio,) and also at the home of Brother and Sister John McCoy. There is a good lot of Saints in Akron, and some very promising young material.

I held seven meetings at Canton, Ohio. This is a prosperous branch; not large, just forty members. Peace and unity prevails here; the officers are alive and at their post of duty. While they are of short experience, they are anxious to learn their respective duties and then do them. I am safe in saying that if they continue as they are at the present, this branch will grow to be one of the largest in the district. Here, too, are some young plants that will be of much value in coming days. One David Lewis, a lad of seventeen years, is the deacon of the branch; the church in coming days will hear from him; he is the grandson of Brother and Sister Lewis of Kirtland, Ohio.

In nearly all of the branches that I have visited in Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Ohio, we have an army of young people, brothers and sisters, who are alive in the work, and in the near future will be heard from in organized and unorganized territory, as able, valiant soldiers in the vineyard of the Lord. Truly, the Master has a large nursery from which he shall call and send forth men and women that will be a power in bringing about the redemption of Zion. May the Holy Spirit ever abide with them to keep them in wisdom's ways and in the path of righteousness, so they shall be worthy to receive the sacred, precious endowment that must be had to bring about the redemption of Zion. May God hasten the day!

I arrived here, New Philadelphia, June 5. Have held nine meetings. The Saints here have had an experience that has been of much value, and I believe will be of much interest to all who read or hear of it. I know that some object to publishing or speaking in public gatherings, conferences or reunions about spiritual manifestations, quoting the language in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, "Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works." I do not understand by the above that we are not to speak in public nor publish in the columns of church papers what we have heard, seen, or felt along spiritual lines, but we are not to speak or write of such in a boastful spirit, or in a way that will leave the impression with those we speak to that our righteousness or faith exceeds that of others. Hence, the reason of our experience we should always have in mind, when testifying or speaking of the power of God, first, the object, to strengthen and encourage those to whom we speak so that they may have faith in God and in his promises; second, to honor and glorify the Lord; and, third, as a witness for the Lord.

Several years ago the late Robert G. Ingersoll at the close of one of his lectures, read from Mark 16, the commission of the Savior and the promise to those who would believe. He asked how many believed in what he had read. Possibly seventy-five per cent of that large audience of over three thousand replied in the affirmative. Then he asked how many present were witnesses to the truthfulness of the promises, viz, "These signs shall follow them that believe," etc. Not one witness in that large audience, at least, not one answered. Mr. Ingersoll said, Gentlemen, I must conclude that the promises made by Jesus, whom you believe to be the Son of God and whose words you say can be relied upon, are not worth the paper they are written upon, or you are all unbelievers.

There were present several Latter Day Saints, some of them elders, but not one stood as a witness for Jesus. And it is possible that had they arisen, and in a meek, humble way, testified that they had seen the fulfillment of these promises would have been requested not only by Mr. Ingersoll, but by those claiming to be believers, to come forward to the stand and take poison, or heal some one that was deaf, blind, lame, or sick. I would not find much fault if unbelievers should make such a request; but it is inconsistency for those professing to be followers and believers in the Savior and his word to ask for a sign to convince them that Jesus told the truth. I can speak for one who was present and who did not stand as a witness, that if I should ever be placed in similar conditions, I would answer, Yes, I do know that the signs follow the believer, not in a boasting way, though all may treat it lightly.

Ye are my witnesses and this gospel is to be preached for a witness; the gospel is the power of God to all that believe; then I claim that I can speak to my brothers and sisters of what the Lord has done for me and mine, and as my soul has rejoiced in hearing of the experiences of others in the Lord, in being blessed, I take it for granted that they also rejoice, under similar conditions, so I write of the incident that has brought joy and strength in the Lord to the Saints of this branch, and the precious and valuable blessing to the afflicted brother and his family.

Brother F. H. Darst, a brother of our esteemed Sister V. M. Goodrich, was for about ten months sorely afflicted with ulcers of the intestines. For nearly nine months he was not able to work. He also had severe hemorrhages of the bowels. He consulted home physicians, and also three specialists in Cleveland, Ohio, without relief. The specialists recommended an operation, and he finally made arrangements to go to the hospital, but concluded he would consult his home doctor first. The doctor advised him not to go, but continue to take treatment and medicine from him, which he did without any benefit.

He had been administered to, but had not received much relief. He at last concluded that he would quit the medicine and all medical aid, and lean entirely upon the Lord. So for six Sundays he fasted, and the branch observed Sunday, April 11, 1915, as fast day, and invited the Kirtland, Cleveland, Akron, and Canton branches to unite with them in prayer and fasting.

On this Sunday at 8 a. m. the priesthood of the home branch held a prayer meeting in which all took part. The Spirit was present to a marked degree. After the prayer meeting, Sunday school was held at 9 a. m. and at 10.15 the regular branch prayer and testimony meeting, when several earnest prayers were offered, and all felt the presence of the Holy Spirit in a marked degree. Then appeared the Evil One; he was seen by one of the elders; he was in the form of a man, standing not far from the pulpit, near the organ. The brother called the attention of one of the elders in charge of the service to the presence of the Evil One; this other brother had not seen His Majesty, but felt the evil influence. The Saints were still on their knees engaged in prayer, when one young sister, Susie Benbow, who was praying, partially arose from her knees, looked toward the door, saw the Evil One, and cried out so that all in the house heard her, "Begone, begone, thou Evil One!" and suddenly three hard, vicious raps or knocks were heard on the door by all in the house. A spirit of fear come on most all that were in the room. Prior to his departure several in the room felt the power of the Evil One, so much so that they could hardly pray. As the Adversary left, the same sister who saw him go arose to her feet and with much power spoke and said that the Lord was going to perform a miraculous healing; there accompanied the prophecy much greater power of the Holy Spirit than before, so that all were bathed in tears of joy.

At 11.30 the administration took place; Elder Charles Cramer anointed, Elder J. C. Carlisle confirmed the anointing, and Father John Cramer assisted. The faith and prayers of God's people prevailed, and the Evil One had to withdraw, and Brother Darst was healed, and wisely moved out in a few days doing his work. From the time of the administration he suffered no more pain, and in less than one week he had laid several feet of concrete walk. Truly, as the Spirit had said, the Lord did perform a miraculous healing. A large number of the Saints were present at this meeting, and as was said upon one occasion, when the sons and daughters of God came together, Satan, an unwelcome guest, came also.

I have tried to give the facts in this case in the spirit in which they have been told to me by several, that of gratitude to God and love for my fellow man, within and without the fold. I send it that the Saints may rejoice far and near, as the Saints, including myself, do here, and sing praises unto the God of Israel and his Christ. In conclusion, let me say that Brother Darst is following his daily occupation as a brick mason, and also working at concrete work. He is in excellent health, strong in the faith and in the spirit of the work, and he has good reasons to be.

My mind has been disturbed some since leaving home, as my wife has been very ill. Last Sunday we had priesthood prayer service at 8 a. m. and all the dear Saints have taken our needs to the Lord. While I would like to be at her bedside, circumstances were such that I could not very well be, so I took much comfort in the thought that the Lord knew why I was not at home, and that though nearly one thousand miles away, he could hear my prayers here, as well as if I were at home; and if I should go home, I would again have to return to my field, and the expense of going and coming would be considerable, about forty dollars. My wife realized this and sent word not to worry, she was in good hands, the children were near, and the baby, Ruth, (full-grown, however) was at home and would do all she could. After receiving word that wife was seriously ill (heart trouble), I was much worried, but was comforted in a dream in which I saw her some better; this brought peace to my mind, without which, doubtless, I would have started home, and believe I would have been justified in so doing, but did not think so, after the information I received, though it was but a dream. The next day my dream was confirmed in a letter from home, "Mamma is some better." May strength be given, so that in time of peace and prosperity we shall not forget the Lord, and in days of adversity he will not forsake us.

I feel to say like Paul, It is not expedient for me, doubtless, to glory; I shall come to visions and revelations, and might say, healings of the Lord.

I have been in this work fifty years next February, and if I live to see the anniversary of the day of my birth in the waters of baptism, I hope to gather loved ones of the home, as well as those of the household of faith, and give a birds-eye view of the fifty years, and try to tell the most important experiences, the ups and downs, bitter and sweet, so as to cheer and strengthen all who feel the need of spiritual experiences. I am glad that at the present time my faith is stronger in this great and glorious work than it ever has been, and it is my meat and drink to speak of it to others, and to tell of the goodness of the Lord.

I leave here the 18th for Youngstown, Ohio, to hold forth over two Sundays. It was near Youngstown (Brookfield), that I was baptized. I left there forty-five years ago. Little did I think then that I would be able to tell the gospel story to others. For about eight years, notwithstanding I was an elder, I had imbibed the thought that I never would be able to speak in public, that all I could do was to visit the Saints, call on the sick, pray for them and have fireside talks with friends. It was Brethren Charles Derry and Alexander H. Smith who encouraged me to move out and have more confidence in myself, and with the grace of God, tell the story. Since that time I have tried, and am still trying, with my stammering tongue, to tell the story.

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO, June 16, 1915.

Northeastern Nebraska

This finds Brother H. N. Pierce and myself at the agency of the Omaha tribe of our Lamanite brethren, rejoicing over the fulfillment of the promises of the Lord made to his covenant people, the house of Israel, and also over prophecies that have been made from time to time concerning the work in this part of the Lord's great harvest field.

About the time the writer came into this district, this being his third year here, there was a prophecy given in a meeting at Decatur, when the Saints were told that there would soon come an ingathering to that branch. Some seemed to doubt, thinking that the ground had been so well covered that all had heard the gospel.

We went to work, however, with the help of others, to whom a great deal of credit is due. The way gradually opened up and we found a spark of interest in a locality about five miles west of Decatur, and after repeated efforts succeeded in bringing a worthy brother and sister and daughter into the fold.

It then began to dawn upon the Saints that there were perhaps some who might be brought in according to promises. At this time word came again, in which the Lord said that the work done was accepted of him, and that the promise was beginning to be fulfilled, that he knew the honest in heart and that he would lead his servants to them, and that those who returned to this district this year would reap an abundant harvest.

The impression to me was that I should be returned, but I did not know who might be sent with me, the word being directed to "my missionaries," Brother Knisley and myself then being present. When the General Conference was past I was not at all disappointed to find my lot cast among this people again, with the help of Brother H. N. Pierce. Brother Pierce preceded me into the district some little time and did a good work at Decatur. I entered the field a short time before our June conference, which convened at Decatur June 5 and 6. I then joined Brother Pierce in our labors.

We at once made arrangements for starting with our district tent, and decided to take it among our Lamanite brethren. We have been very busy ever since. The time has been short but the work accomplished is beyond our expectations. On the Sunday of conference at Decatur the brother and myself had the pleasure of leading twelve precious souls into the waters of baptism, the writer baptizing nine little girls, four of whom were of the Lamanites; Brother Pierce three grown persons, two of whom were full-blooded Lamanites.

The people of the Lord were again admonished that some had scorned these Lamanite people, which was not pleasing to God. The Saints were told that the time was at hand when the Lamanites were to be gathered into the kingdom, and that patience should be shown toward them. The following Sunday the writer had the pleasure of leading four more souls into the water, not of our Lamanite brethren, however, they being the wife and children of a Brother Teeters who lives about five miles down the river, near where the old Lake Shore Branch, perhaps the oldest branch in Nebraska, used to be located.

Again the Sunday following, or yesterday, witnessed the going down into the watery grave of eight more of our Lamanite brethren, three of whom are big, strong men, and two of them Lamanite sisters. One of them who is sixty-two years of age and has heard the gospel, has been wanting to be baptized for some considerable time. She is the one mentioned in letters from this district during the past two years, living near Pender. She was born near Cainesville, Iowa, in 1843, and remembers well the "Mormon" emigration during the years when women pushed their handcarts across the plains to Utah. Brother Pierce did the baptizing, making a total of twenty-four since the sixth of June, and the end is not yet. We expect to have to go to the creek again next Sunday, because there are some who desire to be baptized who were prevented yesterday.

All of the Lamanites we have thus far baptized have been mostly half-blood Indians. As the Indians are becoming dissatisfied with other churches they seem to come into the light, thus coming to us, having great influence over others.

We are having good attendance considering the weather.

We hope to continue for a few weeks more at this place. We are of the opinion it will require one man's time right here among these people to look after them. There are twenty of the Omahas now in the church. They are as little children, are very eager to learn, and to be taught the gospel. May God bless our efforts, here and may we have the confidence and prayers of the Saints everywhere that the promises of God may be realized. We are rejoicing in that we can see the beginning of promises made, and we lift up our heads and rejoice.

As we were engaged in the confirmation of our Lamanite brethren and sisters we were made to feel the presence of the Holy Spirit to a great extent. As we sang the words of the hymn, "The pebble has dropped in the water," all seemed to enjoy the Spirit. So may the waves continue to spread until they lap on the farther shore, when the gospel has gathered in all the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Surely the Gentile times are drawing nearer to a close, and it behooves us who have embarked in the service of the Lord to be up and doing, letting our light shine and being prepared to meet any requirements made of us. The gospel is the best thing in the world, and why should we be wasting our time in going after the things that are fleeting! Why should we not make an offering to God of the best we have, our lives and our all! Our lives are his, and why not give him that which rightfully belongs to him! "In his service pain is pleasure." We have not made sacrifice for this work until we have given our lives to it, as it were, laying down our lives for our brother.

May God bless one and all and help us that we may move this great work on to its triumph.

Your brother in Christ,
W. E. SHAKESPEARE.

Queensland, Australia

July 1, 1914, saw Queensland with only one branch and no missionaries. It is hard to picture the great change which have taken place since then, and the manner in which the work of the Lord has increased. The advent of Elder Gomer T. Griffiths was the beginning of a new era, and to-day Queensland has a district of three branches, and has three missionaries who are forwarding the work in conjunction with branch and district authorities.

BRISBANE BRANCH

This is the first in Queensland, being now about thirteen years old, but its progress was slow because it was all but unnoticed in an obscure corner of the vineyard. However, when visited by Brethren Griffiths and Haworth in July and August, 1914, fresh interest was aroused and the progress was very favorable, the membership increasing from sixty-three to eighty-two. The branch officers are alive to their duty, and we trust the progress in the future both in increase of members and spirituality will be great.

Already the Brisbane Branch has supplied two of the young missionaries who have lately entered the field—Elder Herman Peisker who is laboring in the Nantyglo District, and Elder William Burrows who is on the north coast of New South Wales. The latter is a fine, steady brother with great talents, and we hope to hear of his successful work in the near future.

The branch also has a Religio and normal class as well as a large Sunday school, and each of these three are live, active organizations which have done and are doing great good.

Street preaching and house to house tracting are being carried on by Elder William Patterson—who has a beautiful tenor voice and can draw the crowds—in conjunction with the branch and district officers, and we look for good results in the future. It may not be the sower who will do the reaping, yet both sower and the reaper are one in the sight of God.

District conference will be held in Brisbane about the second week in August.

WONDAI BRANCH

The writer spent the first month of his labor in the mission field in the above branch, and was kindly cared for in the home of Brother and Sister Donald McKay. This branch was organized by Brother G. T. Griffiths about the middle of July last year, and although it has only added a few to its numbers by baptism, we believe it has progressed spiritually. The members of the church in this place are held in high esteem by their neighbors, because of their integrity before God and man, and we trust that under the shepherding hand of Elder William Ballard the progress will be continual and their numbers augmented.

INVERLAW BRANCH

The progress of this branch since its nativity under the fatherly direction of Apostle G. T. Griffiths in July or the beginning of August, 1914, is phenomenal. At its birth it consisted of an elder, priest, deacon and eight members. The writer spent August and September holding forth in a school-house which the Saints had obtained. Part of the time Elder W. J. Haworth gave a series of lectures which aroused great interest. As a result of these continued services, the numbers of the branch advanced from eleven to twenty-four, by about the middle of October. In January they increased to twenty-seven, and in April they still further advanced to thirty-one, while three young women are awaiting baptism and still others are interested.

From eleven to thirty-one in the space of about eight months is good progress. Also during that time this branch has supplied two young missionaries: Elder H. I. Velt, who has already baptized eleven in Victoria within three months of the time he was appointed, and has others almost ready in a part where not even a sermon has been preached before; also Cyrus Loving, a priest, who has done good work and is now laboring with Elder William Burrows on north coast of New South Wales.

They also have a Sunday school, Religio and normal class, all of which are live, active organizations. The services are ably supplemented by the members who have fine voices and will form the nucleus of a fine choir in the future. I must not forget the brass band which is almost confined to the Saints, and which to a great extent has made our reunion a success at Easket, and from which we hope to receive aid to attract the crowds for us to preach to in Kingaroy, a large town close by.

I have spent the best part of my time laboring in the vicinity of this branch during the nine months I have been in the mission field, making my home with Elder C. A. Loving and wife, the former being president of the branch. I shall ever remember the kindnesses I have received at their hands in the days of trial and need, and I am sure the Lord will reward them. Elder Loving has a family he may well be proud of. One of his sons, Cyrus, is a missionary, another, Bert, priest of the branch, and another the teacher.

I can truthfully say that I have never enjoyed greater blessings spiritually or met with a people more blessed of the Lord, than I have since I have been with the Inverlaw Branch. If the Saints remain humble and faithful it will be a power of much good in the hands of the Lord in the days to come.

May our heavenly Father inspire us all with greater energy in his service.

Your brother in Christ,
HERMAN PEISKER.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Central Texas: I take this means of letting you know that we are in need of funds to care for the work in this district. Let one and all rally to the call and be doers of the word as well as hearers. We should remember that we owe one tenth of our increase to the Lord. So let us keep all the commandments.

Brother Banta, of Houston, Texas, will collect and receipt for tithing in Houston and suburbs.

Yours for service,
B. F. SPICER, Bishop's Agent.

MARLIN, TEXAS, Route 2.

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida; Greeting: By reason of having been chosen to act as assistant minister in charge of the above-named territory, I take this method of requesting all who are interested in the great latter-day work to assist all the missionaries in every way possible to speed the great gospel message among the people, and thus make the great work of God effective to the salvation of precious souls in the kingdom of God. Those who are ordained and go forth with the spirit of inspiration burning in their breast as ambassadors for Christ in order to spread the gospel, do so cheerfully because it is a great pleasure to work for Christ.

To all the ministry who are thus called to labor, I commend the words of the inspired Paul as a good motto to follow under all circumstances: "Giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed; but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distress." The true minister is willing to endure patiently and cheerfully all things for the work's sake. The command to all Saints, "Let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap if we faint not," is still in force the same as anciently.

I ask the cooperation of all the Saints throughout this large field, and the only way we can thus cooperate is by all doing our part faithfully and well in keeping the commandments of God. The work must be supported financially. The church needs your help, and by being a helper in every way stated in the law, God will help you in this life and give you a rich reward in the world to come.

Send your tithing to the following-named brethren, who are bishop's agents, whether it be little or much, and they will gladly send you a receipt for the same: Alabama District, George O. Sellers, McKenzie, Alabama; Florida District, E. N. McCall, Brewton, Alabama, Route 5; Mobile District, W. L. Booker, Bay Minette, Alabama.

My field address is McKenzie, Alabama. I will be much pleased to hear from anyone by letter in any part of the field concerning the needs of the work in his vicinity. Those who write me will be answered promptly.

Those who live far away from any branch in new places should take heed and do all they can to have the work opened up in their part, by living right, as well as by calling for the help of a minister. Who will be the first to respond?

I pray the Lord to bless all who are called to labor in any department of honorable service, and trust that the year will be spent in great activity by all in building up the kingdom of God, that the Master may say, "Well done," and crown the efforts of each one with success.

Your coworker for Christ's sake,
F. M. SLOVER.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, June 30, 1915.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

PASTURE FOR THE SOUL

(An address by Elbert A. Smith before the Lamoni Stake convention of Sunday school and Religio.)

I am the door, by me if any man shall enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture.—John 10: 9.

Obviously the pasture here referred to is spiritual, at least to a large extent. Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone." Mohammed said, "If I had but a single piece of money, I would go without my dinner and buy a hyacinth with which to feed my soul."

The lesson is taken from the sheep fold. The sheep do not spend all of their time in the fold. They go in and out and find pasture in many broad and inviting fields.

The Lord's sheep are men: "And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men."—Ezekiel 34: 31.

The only inference we can draw from the language used by the Master is that his sheep, men and women, are not to remain all the time in sanctuary, within the church's walls, or at devotion. They are to come in and go out and find pasture.

There are many fields of human endeavor and thought open to them wherein they can find real sources of strength and growth. But these of course are not without danger. The sheep that go out to pasture find much wholesome food. They also find some that is poisonous and unfit for use. Other food there may be that while not poisonous is hardly worth eating. It contains no nutriment. The sheep have a sure, God-given instinct that guides them in these matters.

Men do not have such instinct; God has given men brains,—with some exceptions. He has given them a conscience, and a law. They are supposed to use those brains, to heed that conscience, to obey that law, then they will be able to choose the good and reject the bad.

Each one must determine for himself to a certain extent and make his own choice between the good and the bad. The church has spoken on some subjects, but obviously could not speak on each particular point, even if it were desirable to do so.

Yet some would like to have an "authoritative opinion" on each particular subject. They wish us to label each book, for instance, This is a good book, or this is a bad book; or to say, You may play this game, but must not play that game.

Brother Burgess sees in this disposition the desire "to avoid the wear and tear of original thought." But each must think for himself, to a certain extent, at least.

It is better for men to learn to apply principles to conduct than to have all their morals ready-made by legislation. President Joseph Smith always opposed excessive restrictive legislation. He argued that room should be left for the Spirit's direction and for individual thought and responsibility. A certain amount of prohibitive legislation is necessary, it is conceded, but in the past the pernicious activity of foolish fadists has discredited and hindered the cause of true reform.

General principles may be laid down and men must reason therefrom. And one of these general principles is that enunciated in the Book of Mormon, in free rendition:

"That which inviteth and enticeth to do good is from God; and that which inviteth and enticeth to do evil is from the Devil."

We may also conclude that there is much between these two extremes that has of itself no particular tendency in either direction, and at best may serve only as a pastime. It has no real nutritive value.

Among the fields that are open to men and women of the church affording them pasture, we may mention: Travel, art, music, literature, social intercourse, recreations, games, diversions, etc. This by no means exhausts the list.

TRAVEL

Not all of us can visit Europe. Not many of us would care to do so now perhaps. Yet everyone travels these days. And it is not a matter of how far we travel but how well we use our time when we travel.

An hour's ride out from town in spring or autumn may discover to the thoughtful observer more than some men see in a complete tour of Europe, rushing from one city to another.

Thoreau found enough within a radius of a few miles around Walden Pond to fill a great book. A week on the Concord and Merrimac rivers furnished him with material for another book. Socrates walked down to the market of his home town, engaged a stranger in conversation, and by his peculiar methods of cross questioning drew more from him than some would get by visiting the crowned heads of the nations.

Travel may be a great educator; or it may be a great time killer, money spender, and home wrecker.

ART AND MUSIC

Not everyone can visit the great art centers and view the masterpieces. But cheap and excellent reproductions are within the reach of all. Modern methods of illustrating, particularly in high grade books and magazines, bring real art within the range of nearly every pocketbook that is not depleted by the drain of nickels for cheap picture shows.

More people are dabbling in art than ever before. Drawing is taught in the public schools. Many are painting in oils or water colors, or modeling in clay. Probably few of these amateurs will ever become great artists. Probably few will ever become even good artists. They do not begin at the beginning, as a rule. They would draw without a knowledge of perspective; and paint or model figures without studying anatomy.

Yet the effort as a whole is good. One who has essayed to draw the delicate, lace-like limbs of an elm tree will always afterward see more beauty in the forest. One who has attempted to paint the evening sky will ever afterward see more beauty and color in the sunset. But why do so many merely copy? That is good so far as it goes, but why not try original work? Why paint painted roses when the June gardens are full of real roses?

Music has ever fed the soul of man. Sublime hymns and melodies have always been associated with religion. That noble sentiment, love, has ever sought expression in music. Men have grown great and strong under the inspiration of the musical masters.

God has set his seal of approval on our excursions into this particular pasture. The young men and maidens are commanded to cultivate the gift of song. And the older people are admonished that they forget not the gladness of their youth.

Yet both music and art may contain that which is harmful. The illicit in art has long debauched the morals of the people. Whole nations have been demoralized in this way. Or perhaps it were better to say that their demoralization found expression thus; yet inevitably it reacted upon them, leading to worse excesses, and vitiating the innocent, as individuals. And that which is true of art is true of music. Music has too often been prostituted to the service of the Devil. Here, too, men and women must learn to choose.

LITERATURE

When I was a boy I received from my mother as a present three books of poems: Tennyson, Whittier, Longfellow. These books opened up to me a new world, the world of literature, for one good book invariably introduces us to others.

Here is a broad and rich field: the star-decked, flower-strewn regions of poesy, the diamond mines of the essayists, the treasure houses of history and biography, the glittering pageantry of fiction, the vast and varied stores of modern contemporaneous thought expressed in every form.

In this we have the broadest liberty. For we are told that we should study "all good books." A good book is one that makes you think for yourself. It may not cram your mind with predigested ideas; but at every page you must stop to pursue a train of individual thinking suggested by the dynamic personality of the book you read. A good book is one that leaves you with a desire to live better; with a resolution to arise and build.

Formerly there was a prejudice against fiction that was almost prohibitive. But now we realize that there may be and indeed are many good books even in fiction. The strongest writers of the age seek to reach the people with their message through the medium of the novel. If we would get their thought we must read their books.

But here, as before, we note the danger signal. Many books are essentially evil in their effects. Many are not especially good or bad in and of themselves. They do not have force enough for that. They are time killers only. At best they could do good only by inducing relaxation of overworked minds.

RECREATION AND DIVERSION

In this strenuous age men and women, young people in particular, demand recreation and diversion. A good brother said: "If the young men want recreation let them saw wood." Yes, and James said, "Are any merry, let them sing psalms."

There you have it, saw wood and sing: "Hark, from the tombs a doleful sound." But do not tell us that sawing wood is recreation. Sawing wood is work. We can secure living witnesses to that great fact.

It is good to sing, and it is good to saw wood. And it is good to saw wood and sing. But after the wood is sawed, what then? Then the boys and girls will demand recreation, and they should have it.

Wholesome recreation revives the body, rejuvenates the spirit, and as the body and the spirit is the soul of man, according to the Doctrine and Covenants, the soul may thus be fed.

Outdoor games of a wholesome nature, when dissociated from gambling and wrong environment, easily lead the list. They take one into the open air and the sunshine. Indoor games of a wholesome and legitimate nature must take second place. And here again men must learn to draw the line for themselves, to an extent.

It should without doubt be drawn so as to exclude all games played for or on a wager, or that in any other way tend to arouse the gambling spirit. And there are some that even when played without betting should be excluded, for the reason that from time immemorial they have been associated with and have been the common property of thieves, gamblers, drunkards, prostitutes, bums, and toughs.

The company that such a game has habitually kept for generations is enough to bar it from decent society. Such a game is as much out of place on the table of a Latter Day Saint as a plug of tobacco, a six shooter, a bottle of whisky, or any other of its accustomed accessories would be.

Social functions at proper hours, and of a wholesome nature, when divested of the almost universal extravagance, jealous rivalry, ostentation, and excess of the times, are certainly legitimate. They foster good fellowship. They stimulate brain and heart. Such must be simple, heartfelt, and natural, for the sake of the fellowship, and not for the display of silverware, elaborate toilets, prestige, and the thousand and one follies into which so-called best society leads its willing dupes.

Our list of legitimate fields open to those who would come in and go out and find pasture is merely suggestive. From every such excursion men should come back to the fundamentals in religion with fresh zeal, deeper joy and zest. They should come back with full hearts and minds and willing feet, to the prayer service, the preaching meeting, the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, to service in the immediate fold, to devotion at church and in the home.

If they do not come back in that way they have wandered into wrong fields, or have eaten of the wrong food in a legitimate pasture.

That book (the Bible), sir, is the rock on which our Republic rests.—Andrew Jackson.

CINCINNATI STORM.—Thirty-one dead, ten missing, seventy-two injured, and damage to property estimated at one million dollars, is the toll of a severe storm at Cincinnati, Ohio, occurring on the eighth.

LIBERTY BELL.—Liberty Bell is at this writing en route to San Francisco, to be placed on exhibition at the Panama Exposition. Thousands of citizens are permitted to view this historic relic at various points across the continent.

GERMAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS.—Following President Wilson's declination to enter into informal negotiations with Germany in connection with American demands growing out of the sinking of the Lusitania, Germany on the 8th filed with Ambassador Gerard a reply to the late American note.

GOVERNMENTAL CONTROL.—United States naval authorities have taken charge of the wireless plant of the Atlantic Communication Company at Sayville, Long Island, which will be operated by the Government until the close of the European war. This plant is German-owned, and is taken over to insure against violations of neutrality.

INDIANA FRAUD.—Thomas Taggart, democratic committeeman from Indiana, and one hundred and thirty others have been charged with fraud in connection with the 1914 primary and election. One hundred and twenty of these men have been arraigned, and seven have plead guilty. Mr. Taggart denies guilt and asks an immediate trial.

WORK OF DEFECTIVE.—J. P. Morgan was wounded by pistol shots at his home, Glencove, New York, the 3d, by one Frank Holt, an instructor of Cornell University, and who on the 2d placed a bomb in the capitol at Washington which, exploding, damaged the building. Holt, of German descent, is said to have been brooding over the shipment of munitions to the enemies of Germany. He died at his own hand on the 6th.

JANE ADDAMS AND PEACE.—Jane Addams, of Chicago, landed at New York the 5th, after visiting the most of the European countries at war, following the International Congress of Women for Peace, at The Hague, over which she presided. Miss Addams is quoted as saying:

The nations at war have no choice but to go on. No negotiations can now be suggested by any of them without giving the appearance of weakness, and none of the nations as yet feels in the slightest but that its cause can and must succeed. Every day that peace negotiations are delayed will make terms of peace just that much harder. The heavy toll of life and the expenditure of treasure mean that the people will expect just that much more consideration for their agreement to end the war. What will be the outcome and what nation or nations will be the mediative forces can not be told at this time, despite the fact that I found everywhere a spirit of anxiety among the people to stop the horror.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Repeated attempts by Carranza forces to take Mexico City have failed. Fighting between Carranza and Villa troops is reported in the vicinity of Torreon. Villa officials have informally reiterated their willingness to enter into a peace conference with Carranza representatives. Though Carranza continues to ignore Villa, Obregon, his most successful general, has agreed to a conference with Villa, and a conference of Villa, Zapata, and Carranza representatives is announced to meet at Washington. General Huerta, out on fifteen thousand dollar bonds under charge of violation of neutrality, was on the 3d rearrested at El Paso, Texas, and placed in jail with five other Mexican suspects. Waiving preliminary hearing and failing to secure bonds, Huerta was removed to Fort Bliss. United States authorities are determined to prevent counter revolutionary movements in Mexico if possible, especially from bases in United States territory.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The German-Austrian advances in Poland and Galicia have been checked by the Russians, the Austrians having fallen back at some points. The British have assumed the offensive in Flanders, and have taken certain trenches from the Germans. The French report heavy fighting and gains. Hard fighting is reported by the Italians and Austrians. The struggle on the Gallipoli Peninsula continues favorable to the allies. Russian submarines have sunk two Turkish steamers and a sailing ship; a British submarine, a German battleship; a Russian vessel, a German mine layer; a French warship, a German submarine; an Austrian submarine, an Italian cruiser. German submarines have sunk a British steamer, a French schooner, two French steamers, two Norwegian barks. Italy has proclaimed a blockade of the Adriatic, with the announcement that merchantmen will be safely conducted to Italian and Montenegrin ports. The entire German Southwest African force has surrendered to General Botha, leader of the Union of South Africa army. German socialists have addressed a manifesto to the Government, calling upon it to open peace negotiations. The Government has made no response other than to suppress for a few days the socialist organ, the Vorwarts.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH.—By letter from Brother Frederick M. Smith dated July 4, we learn that he has made some change in his plans. He intends to spend a week at the eastern reunion at Onset, and will proceed from there to Maine, where he will spend about two weeks. He expects then to visit Toronto and perhaps Hamilton and other points in Canada, returning to Independence by way of Chicago and Lamoni, reaching Independence about the first of September.

A GIFT TO ZIONISM.—The following from The Register and Leader, Des Moines, July 1, reports the generous gift of Nathan Straus to his own well-loved cause of Zionism:

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, June 30. Nathan Straus of New York to-day donated to the Zionist cause his steam yacht Sicilian, valued at $35,000. The yacht has been turned over to a provisional committee and the proceeds resulting from its sale will be added to the fund of $100,000 pledged since the Zionist convention here. It was announced that the Order of the Sons of Zion had received from the State a corporation charter permitting it to operate as a fraternal insurance society.

WAR AND DRINK.—Everyone will admit that it is necessary to protect the French race against the dangers which face the nation from alcoholism. If the chamber stops at the suppression of absinthe, it will not have gone far enough. There must be a reform of the legislation on all alcoholic liquors. This question will be forced on all governments consequent on the enormous evils flowing from alcohol. It is not a financial question only; it is a great moral question, in which the interests of the nation are concerned. The Government asks that the chamber will do honor to itself and the nation.—M. Ribot, French Minister of Finance.

LEAD LITTLE FEET

Lead little feet with the rhyme of your patter,
Play it was I who had blundered my way,
Out of my routine, O let me trip after;
Lead little feet, I will follow to-day.

Hold little hands, should I stumble or falter,
I am a pilgrim and you are my stay;
Beacons may fail me but you will not alter;
Hold little hands, O, I need you alway.

Lead little heart, yours the wings that shall take me,
Out of my worries when days shall be long;
Let me be just what your trusting would make me,
Worthy of you; little sunshine, lead on!

WHERE DO WE STAND? -- NUMBER 1

BY J. AUGUST KOEHLER

Are the manifestations of the Spirit in the church to the extent or in the degree that they should be? Some say no. If not, why not? If conditions are normal we can afford to say so; if not, it is much better to explain the situation than to deny it.

Occasionally we see a chronic dyspeptic going around patting himself on the back and saying to all who comment upon his poor health that he is in the full vigor of manhood and in possession of all his normal powers; but of course such men have miserably poor judgment in the eyes of those who see things as they are.

If the dyspeptic would confess, saying: Yes, I know I am in poor health, I am not enjoying life as I ought, but it is because I have been housed in a poorly ventilated room and haven't taken the necessary exercise; however, I am going to correct these conditions and in that way regain my health; then we would have a different opinion of his judgment.

Now if the church has been "housed" under unnatural conditions, and has failed to "exercise" itself in a way necessary to spiritual health, we can do no better than admit our mistake and consequent poverty, and set about to correct the conditions and regain our health and thus prove to ourselves and to those who watch our experience that the revelations given to us as a church are in fact the laws of spiritual life.

A CONTRAST

This question is a relative or comparative question. If I say it is warmer in the tropics than in the arctics, obviously the temperatures of the two zones must be set side by side (in our minds) to determine the facts. For a moment we set the spiritual temperature of the church at different periods side by side to determine whether the temperature of today agrees with that of other days.

And now, Lord, . . . grant unto thy servants, that with boldness they may speak thy word, by stretching forth thine hand to heal, and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus. And when they had prayed, the place where they were assembled together was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost. . . . And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul: neither said any that aught of the things which he possessed were his own; but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all.—Acts 4: 29-35.

And by the apostles' hands were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; . . . insomuch that the people brought forth the sick into the streets and laid them on beds and couches, . . . There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folk and they which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one.—Acts 5: 12-16.

When we compare this description with the experiences of our church in the early days, and with which nearly all Latter Day Saints are familiar, we find a striking parallel. There is no discrepancy. We are assured by the testimony of the senses of others that then, at least, the spiritual temperature of the church was normal.

You know what you think about your own personal experience and the experience of the church so far as you have had opportunity to observe it. Now, candidly, can we set our present-day experience by the side of the description taken from the book of Acts and assert that they are on the same plane? It is the perspective that such a comparison presents that suggests the question, "Where do we stand?"

CHURCH NOT COMPLETE WITHOUT NORMAL SPIRITUAL POWERS

An old, worn-out horse on its last pegs has animal life. It can see, hear, walk and eat after a fashion; yet it is incomplete and unable to do the work for which horses were evidently created. It has a complete organism: body, limbs, head, etc., and still it can not answer the purpose for which horses were created—it is incomplete.

Now it is not enough to assert that there is spiritual life in the church. That is quite true. The primitive Christian church doubtless had life in it up to the moment of its death. It is not enough that there are occasional manifestations of the Spirit; a partial diet is not adequate to the demands of the organism; a half-starved body can not do its work properly. And God never intended that this church should live on "half rations" spiritually; the experiences of the church when proper relations were maintained is proof enough of this.

We have apostles and prophets and all other necessary organs so far as we are able to judge. Yet is anyone prepared to maintain that an organism in itself is complete? (using the term as an arrangement of parts, and not in the biological sense). The object of the church (the structure or organism) is a particular kind and amount of function; and the church, like the horse, can not answer the purposes of its creation if it is deficient in function. Function is necessary to make the church complete; and normal function at that.

We have a measure of just pride in being able to defend our theory of doctrine, organization, and government, by the Scriptures; why should we not be equally concerned about defending our experience by the Scriptures? I believe we are in purpose, but hardly in effect.

"God set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." The words "God set" have just as much significance in relation to the spiritual powers mentioned as to the officers; both are set in the church; and it would seem inconsistent to emphasize the words when related to certain officers and minimize their importance when used in relation to certain spiritual gifts.

A NORMAL CROP

I do not say that the manifestations of the Spirit are not in the church; I do say that they are not in the church to the extent or in the degree that they would be if we sustained proper relations with each other and God. The manifestations may be of just as high order, measured by any standard, as any the church ever enjoyed. Under my own hands there occurred something not long ago quite as marvelous as when Peter's wife's mother was healed of the fever. What I contend is that a peck of apples, no odds how magnificent specimens they may be, is not a normal crop for a tree that has a yielding capacity of ten bushels. It is a sign that something is wrong when such a tree yields only a peck; and any horticulturist would be very much concerned if the trees in his orchard yielded only a peck of apples annually when a normal yield is something like ten bushels. Just so, some are concerned about the fact that the "trees" in the orchard of the Lord—the branches throughout the church—are yielding only a "peck" of spiritual gifts annually, when a normal harvest is something like ten bushels.

NO REFLECTION UPON REVELATIONS TO CHURCH

This church is built upon what to us are the revelations of God. These revelations make spiritual prosperity with the church conditional. Now suppose we have not fulfilled the conditions or requirements, would it be consistent to claim to enjoy blessings the enjoyment of which are declared in the revelations to depend upon fulfilling those conditions? One of two things must be true: either it is necessary to live by the word of God to enjoy spiritual prosperity, or it is not. And if it is, certainly the man who claims to enjoy prosperity when he does not live by the word must be mistaken.

Suppose that our idea that a man must eat to live was predicated upon the truthfulness of the Bible; but we discover by experience that we can live without eating; how would our experience affect our idea of the truthfulness of the Bible? If we admitted the testimony of our experience and continued to assert our confidence in Scripture that contradicted that experience, we would only emphasize our credulity and gullibility.

Now what do the revelations say with reference to spiritual gifts and powers? Doctrine and Covenants 70:3 makes particular reference to the law of stewardships and equality in temporal things, and closes with the positive decree that, nevertheless in your temporal things ye shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld. Is that a revelation from God, or is it not? If it is, the conditions are most certainly binding. And yet when we examine into our relations we discover neither equality in temporal things nor an approximation to the law of stewardships from which the revelation says positively "none are exempt . . . who belong to the church of the living God." Clearly we have not complied with the conditions of spiritual prosperity. Is it consistent then, to claim to enjoy this prosperity when we have utterly failed to fulfill the conditions? Surely not. Doctrine and Covenants 70:3 is only one of a number of revelations that decree substantially the same thing. We will have occasion to use some of these later.

What is the value of a law that is not binding, that inflicts no penalty? Is it a law at all? In this connection I want to say that my appreciation of the "restored gospel" increases; and my confidence in latter-day revelations grows stronger; and my interest in the work intensifies as I contemplate the testimony of our accumulated experiences.

CHANGE IN CLIMATE

Some may say that the law of stewardships and all things common was never in operation in the church; and since the church once enjoyed normal spiritual powers, it might now enjoy the same powers without attendance upon that law. That is to say that like causes always produce like effects; the causes that operated in the early days of the church operate to-day; therefore the spiritual status is no different to-day.

Whatever else is wrong with this reasoning, this fault it surely has: it assumes that the measure of conduct that once kept the church in spiritual health is sufficient to keep it in health now also that age and experience does not place the church under new obligations. It assumes that the garments of conduct which were sufficient to keep the church warm in the climate in which it once lived are sufficient to keep it warm in the climate in which it lives now.

Many of us live in a variable climate. We know by experience that the clothes which protect us in summer are not adequate to protect us from the rigors of winter. We know too, that it is much more difficult to maintain our mental, moral, and spiritual equilibrium under certain conditions than under certain other conditions. It must be evident to every careful student of American history that the church has passed from a tropical social and economic climate (so to speak) into one that is almost frigid; that being true, it seems in exact accord with human experience to assert that the church needs to put on more garments of conduct in order to protect itself from the rigors of the climate in which it now lives.

Society is continually battling against evils which have grown up with our present civilization. The Lord foresaw what the social and economic conditions would be to-day. He knew that the life of the church would not be what it ought to be if it remained in the world and of the world; and so he said, "I give not unto you that you shall live after the manner of the world," but gave us the rules by which our spiritual well-being might be conserved or promoted. It seems to me that we do not stand on these rules as we should. In later articles we propose to discuss some of the social and economic factors in our spiritual prosperity; and all with the view of discovering in part the answer to the question, "Where do we stand?"

REVIVAL MEETINGS

SHOULD REVIVAL MEETINGS BE HELD?

Yes, we think so. The Lord has spoken to the church in regard to them. In Doctrine and Covenants 125: 4 we read, "When traveling and preaching, holding revival meetings."

WHAT IS MEANT BY REVIVAL MEETINGS?

Webster gives us to understand that the word revival means: First, "A return or recall to activity from a state of languor, as, the renewal of spirit." Second, "A renewed and more active attention to religion. An awakening of men to their spiritual concerns."

As we understand the nature of the work done we at once see that it is a work of great importance. So important, we believe, that it should be conducted as the Lord directs if the good intended is to be accomplished.

WHO SHOULD HOLD OR CONDUCT THESE MEETINGS?

The priesthood of the church may, but the Lord gives us to understand that the Presiding Patriarch is an evangelical minister to the whole church. He is to be a revivalist, and when "Traveling and preaching is to hold revival meetings" (Doctrine and Covenants 125). It is thus clearly the duty of the evangelical minister to the whole church to hold revival meetings. He is to labor in connection with the branch and district officers, and not be subject to the ministerial control of the minister in charge, except he should transcend his bounds and teach false doctrines, or be found in transgression (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 4).

Having been commissioned by the Lord to conduct revival meetings in branches or districts, the evangelist should be left free to conduct these meetings as he may be directed by the Holy Spirit, and should be placed in charge of same. The meetings should be of the nature that he, led by the spirit of wisdom, may direct. The officers and members of the branch or district should render assistance in every way possible that the meeting may be successful.

HOW SHOULD THE MEETINGS BE CONDUCTED?

There should always be prayer, and then more prayer. I am of the opinion that the nature of the meeting should be determined by the evangelical minister as he may be directed by the Spirit. "The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God." (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 9.) Thus the evangelical minister should be left free to act in his office and calling, according to whatever his duties are under the law. He should be made free by both officers and members to step forward in the discharge of his work of holding revival meetings.

As a father to the church, he should give comfort to the Saints. He should give advice and counsel to those who seek it, and labor in every way to build up the kingdom of God and establish righteousness. He should lay on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessing, and if so led point out the lineage of the one blessed. His field is to the whole church (Doctrine and Covenants 125, 107, 124). He should be respected by the officers and members of the church, and they should seek him for advice and counsel, that all may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, receiving spiritual strength.

As the Lord has clearly set forth the duties of the Presiding Patriarch and evangelical minister to the whole church in Doctrine and Covenants 125, so has he outlined the duties of other evangelical ministers in verse 6 of the same section. We read: "Other evangelical ministers besides the presiding patriarch have similar duties in the districts where they are appointed." What the presiding evangelical minister is to the whole church, the other evangelists are to their respective districts in which they are laboring. As the presiding evangelist is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, counsel and advise, comfort the Saints, give blessings, and hold revival meetings, so the other evangelists should labor in a similar way in the fields where they may be sent, invited, or requested to labor. As the former is left free to labor in the duties of his office and calling in the whole church, so should the latter be free to perform their duties in their respective fields.

We find that in many branches and districts the officers and ministers do not understand the duties of evangelical ministers, and as a result do not arrange for revival meetings or seek advice and counsel as the Lord has commanded. Again, the proper respect is not shown. These conditions will be avoided, however, if the instructions of Doctrine and Covenants 122:8 are followed. "If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized branches, districts," or conferences to the standing ministry, under the Presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and districts, then will those evangelical ministers provided for in the law be useful and He who gave the law be honored. The differences between the quorums will be healed, confidence will be restored, and good will and peace come to the people of the church.

Again, in Doctrine and Covenants 125:14 we read: "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and blessings." Each officer should be respected and honored in his office under the law. As evangelical ministers we should respect those officers God has set in the church, and in turn they should respect us. As we may be sent to labor in branches or districts we should be granted opportunity to carry out the duties of our office.

WHERE SHOULD THESE MEETINGS BE CONDUCTED?

Revival meetings should be held at the gathering places of the Saints in branches or districts, as contemplated in the law. In such places the Saints should be instructed as to their spiritual duties, and awakened to their spiritual concerns.

As there is much need of this kind of labor throughout the church, may we continue our efforts and thus hasten the redemption of Zion and her people, is my prayer, in Jesus' name.

W. A. McDOWELL.

THE FULLNESS OF LIFE

In the fourth chapter of Matthew and the fourth verse, are these words: "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." The occasion on which this was spoken is too familiar to need any repetition, but it is just possible that the full significance of the phrase has escaped the notice of a good many people, and for that reason it is worth while taking it into consideration.

It is often said that to get the most enjoyment out of life we need to be in sound health and strength, in possession of all our faculties, which, together with a fair amount of success financially and socially, is conducive to a realization of that end.

Herein lies the sum and substance of all that goes to make up the average person's life,—the desire for and employment of necessary means to a certain end; and that generally spells "pleasure" of the most selfish and arrogant type, hence it is we see all around us the mad rush, the insane competition in business affairs, ending in that soul-destroying maxim, "The survival of the fittest."

No one would for a moment begrudge the healthy and innocent pleasure possible to be obtained without the baneful influence of selfishness. What we would and should fight against is that kind of enjoyment of life obtained at the expense of another's ceaseless toil and labor; and too often at the sacrifice of honor and virtue. It is quite obvious that this kind of life is foreign to a state of happy innocence; therefore not the life the Creator designed and intended for his creatures, which life proves beyond any shadow of doubt that there is in mankind a connecting link between them and the God who made them, made in his image, as indissolubly in his likeness as we are in that of our earthly father.

We understand full well that there is a chord of sympathy and of harmonious response in our earthly relationship. "How much more so in our divine relationship." For that reason the Savior made use of the words, "Man shall not live by bread alone." The very being who created man, by virtue of his love-given power and wisdom, knew well enough the composition and nature of man, just as the artisan knows the composition and nature of some complicated mechanical appliance, and the proper means of keeping it in good working order; and so we have the greatest possible authority declaring to mankind how we shall live, not might or ought to live, but a plain command, "Man shall not live by bread alone," and he tells us at the same time how he shall live "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"; thus it resolves itself into a question of obedience or disobedience.

The very fact of the word alone being in the divine command proves that man is of a dual nature, composed of body and spirit; hence we see that Christ recognized that bread is necessary to feed the body that it may live; but to feed the body for its sake alone can only end in death, it being corrupt. Therefore, the whole man to live truly in this life, and to obtain the life everlasting, must nourish his other half or nature with spiritual food, and that food Jesus declares to be "every word" of God; and man is not to be content with some words in the Psalms and leave the prophecies; to take the words of Creation's story and not the words of the history of those created; to take to himself some of the gospel and not the whole; some of the acts of the apostles, and some of their epistles; to believe in the mysterious and not in the Revelations. By adopting this course we make our own spiritual food and reject that provided by our Creator, who knows best what is for our need; and as it is not his food, but our own, we can not possibly "live" according to the command; but rather, after our own inclination. Hence we would be living in disobedience, and while in that state could not be living a truly happy life.

The Apostle Paul knew what this meant by his own experience, as was manifested when he said, "If only in this like we have hope, we are of all men most miserable." He had tried some of the bodily life and had great hope in his own method of living, but when he gave obedience to the commands of the Savior, memory of whom he had previously hoped to obliterate from the minds of men, then it was that he realized the true meaning of the problem of life, and found he could not live really and truly without the spiritual food that sustained him throughout his ministry and enabled him to endure persecution, privation, and want, and to glory in his experience, because the spiritual food made him contented and happy in this life, and exultant in the glories of the life to come; so that he lived in the double sense, bodily and spiritually, thus responding to the will of his Maker, as the instrument in the hands of a mechanic in performing a great work.

When I think of the hundreds of different ways in which men are trying to respond to their conception of the spiritual life, instead of obtaining nourishment from that food revealed by Christ, I feel apprehensive as to their portion in the life beyond; it seems as if they are all alike in one respect: their inability to realize the true meaning of this terrible European conflict. Surely they are ripened in iniquity, not necessarily because they are countenancing and participating in the war, but because many evils have arisen under the guise of religious movements, and many older ones are sanctioned and strengthened by these systems, which have served only to make men jealous of their neighbors instead of loving them, and the insane competition between individuals extended to nations and kingdoms who are at each other's throats in a close and deadly grip for supremacy.

They do not, or will not understand that because of evil these things are, just as Christ declared they would be, as a sign of his second coming and of the end of the world. God is surely hastening his own work to a speedy and final consummation, and woe be to those who are deliberately disobeying his command "to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," for unless they repent and take hold of his word they will surely lose their portion in the true enjoyment of spiritual life and bliss in his kingdom.

In a time like this, how many take the trouble to consider Paul's idea of the power of the word of God as given in his second epistle to the Corinthians, found in chapter four? In this striking chapter he clearly shows what effect the word has, if it is handled truthfully and not deceitfully, and how it counteracts the pain and trouble the body is subject to, by the more powerful influence of the spiritual life nourished thereby. He says in verses eight and nine by way of consequence, "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed but not in despair; persecuted but not forsaken; cast down but not destroyed."

Further on, in the fifteenth verse, he declares what all this is for. In effect, it is for our sakes, so that through response to, and returning thanks for our spiritual kinship and sustenance, it may redound to the honor and glory of God; and then in the sixteenth verse, "For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

This is equivalent to saying that only by a daily study of God's word and receiving thereby daily nourishment and strength, we, as it were, are made stronger spiritually, the while our bodies may be subject to all the ills flesh is heir to, and so able to overcome all the weaknesses, trials and temptations of the body. Never at any time in the world's history could these mighty words of the apostle be more applicable than now. They bear upon their face the stamp of a real, living truth, such as will help us in these perilous and trying times to comprehend more fully the glory of our relationship with our heavenly Father, and to regard all these terrible signs of the times in the right spirit of joyful hope and longing anticipation for the setting up of his kingdom.

The apostle might have lived in these very days and he could not have gauged the situation more accurately; and I say to all who may be perplexed, that even though we may be called upon to give up our life in the flesh, yet, for the truth's sake, for the sake of the whole word of God from Genesis to Revelation, we should faint not, we should be renewed day by day. And that is the truest and fullest conception of life.

WILLIAM MOORE.

LIFE OF JOHN LEWIS MORGAN

[This essay was written by Mrs. Susie Spencer Williams, of Hiteman, Iowa. It was entered in competition at the Des Moines Eisteddfod, a Welsh musical organization, March 1, 1914, there being a prize of ten dollars offered to the one writing the best essay of not less than one thousand words. The prize was given by Mr. John D. Owens, of Des Moines, an old friend of Mr. Morgan. There were four competitors. Mrs. Williams won the prize. As she is not a member of the church, her generous eulogy of Brother John L. Morgan, a resident of Hiteman, will be doubly appreciated.—EDITORS.]

John Lewis Morgan was born in Brookfield, Ohio, on February 14, 1870, of Welsh parents. His father's name was John J. Morgan.

Brookfield was his home for the first few years of his life. Then his parents moved to Bevier, Missouri. John was by this time a sturdy little lad, and at a very early age showed wonderful delight in music. It is said he used to play the organ when he could not reach the pedals and some one else had to work them for him.

He began to work in the mines at a very tender age. Nevertheless, we find him, between the age of nine and ten years, studying "Tonic, sol, fa," under the able tuition of F. D. Jones, of Bevier, and eventually he was in proud possession of three certificates for the same.

At the age of fifteen years he led a band and composed a lot of his own music. A few years later he was leading a band of twenty-two pieces, at Cairo, Missouri.

He continued to work hard and gain more musical knowledge until we find him taking lessons of the celebrated Professor Carl Busch, of Kansas City, who thought highly of his capabilities and advised him to continue his studies in Europe. He kindly offered him many inducements to do so, of which unfortunately he was unable to avail himself.

Later he lived in Ottumwa, Iowa. While there he worked in the mines and instructed a great many pupils in music. He also led the Citizens' Band. When the Methodist Episcopal church was opened he composed and dedicated the music which was sung that day by a male party.

His services were requested at different Eisteddfods and musical contests. I have heard him relate a funny incident of one old gentleman who thought he looked too boyish for an "educator" (he meant an "adjudicator"). John L. was quick to see the humorous side of things.

He moved from Ottumwa to Kebb, and from there to Cleveland, Iowa. While at Cleveland he led two bands. One was composed entirely of colored people; this band was a great source of pleasure as well as hard work to him.

After residing there for about ten years he moved to Hiteman, where he lived for nearly five years, when death claimed him. He led the Hiteman band and the orchestra of the Latter Day Saint Church, and had numerous musical pupils.

Throughout his life he wrote music, of which there are left to-day many pieces ready for the press. The following have been in use for some time.

Quartet—"Abide with me." (This was a test piece at the Albia Eisteddfod, Thanksgiving Day, 1913.)

Song—"Old Missouri home."

Song—"The trees are budding, Jessie dear."

Song—"Won't you come out in the country?"

Instrumental piece—"Croston's March."

Music for church hymns—"A calm and gentle quiet reigns to-night." "One hour with Jesus."

John L. Morgan was undoubtedly a man of great musical talent, and had fate been kinder to him he would have been benefited more by his gift. His hymns are being sung in the churches of the Latter Day Saints in other lands as well as in America.

John Lewis Morgan was a faithful, lifelong member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, having joined when he was eight years old. His parents were also of the same faith. He always took an active part in the work of his church, especially in the musical part, as director and choirmaster. He held the office of priest at the time of his death.

There was nothing narrow-minded or bigoted in him. He believed every man should enjoy his own opinion, and was always ready to give a word of advice or a helping hand to anyone, regardless of his creed. He was a peacemaker in every sense of the word.

When his last illness came upon him he was eagerly looking forward to the opening of the new Saints' church at Hiteman, and all the improvements he proposed making in the choir. "Man proposes but God disposes."

He married at the age of twenty-one, Miss Nellie Jones, a young Welsh girl of Bevier, daughter of J. D. Jones, who was known at that time as the "Bard Parod" (Ready Poet).

To this union were born ten children, seven girls and three boys, seven of whom are living, viz: Mrs. Margaret Allison, Hiteman; Mrs. Elizabeth Terrell, Hiteman; Tessie, John J., Annie, Handel, and Nellie.

His married life was a happy one. His wife was a real helpmate to him under all circumstances. For the last ten years of his life his health became delicate and he had several long illnesses which he bore with fortitude.

He was greatly liked by his fellow workmen and always had a cheery word and a pleasant smile for everyone. In the cars to and from the mines he would hold everyone's attention with his conversation and never was there a lack of listeners.

As a father he was most devoted, and at all times possible you would find him surrounded by his family. He endeavored by example and precept to bring them up in a good way.

He took a lively interest in every public question, and nothing took place in the community in which he lived but what he had something to say about it.

Albia Eisteddfod has lost a loyal supporter and valuable help in him. He took the keenest interest in its success. He also was a most active worker in keeping up the united choir of Hiteman when preparing for competition. He would help the leaders in every way possible and every member of the choir felt they had lost a valuable friend when he died.

He was never able to lead a union choir in his late years on account of heart trouble. He was not able to stand the strain. In his younger days he led a great many choirs and carried away a great many prizes.

John L. Morgan had been troubled with his heart for some years. He had had several spells of sickness, and when his last illness came his family had every hope that he would rally once again. His death came as a surprise to most people. He endured great suffering for three months, died September 15, 1913, and was buried at Hiteman. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people. The service at the Saints' church was most impressive, for John Lewis Morgan was beloved by all, irrespective of creed.

NEW YORK PRISON REFORM

Thomas Mott Osborne, warden at Sing Sing penitentiary, has caused quite a commotion in the East by trying to make men out of convicts through treatment calculated to bring out their manhood. He is now fighting something more difficult to handle than the shortcomings of the criminal intellect, namely, hostility on the part of his superiors.

Three hundred convicts at Sing Sing have been transferred to Great Meadows prison by the State superintendent of prisons, John B. Riley, with a remark on his part that he doesn't believe in "pink tea" life for convicts.

Neither does anyone else, save a few sentimentalists, but the work which Mr. Osborne is doing is not sentimentalism, and the convicts do not enjoy a "pink tea" existence. What Mr. Riley literally means is that recreation and amusement must be totally removed from the reach of prisoners, that they shall not be permitted to live in the natural, healthy manner which will make a certain proportion of them good citizens. . . .

If punishment and degradation are the aim of imprisonment, then John B. Riley is right. If reclamation is the aim, Thomas Mott Osborne is right.

The old and the new systems of penology have come to grips in New York. The old order dies hard, but if Osborne loses his fight, the setback is only temporary. The Osbornes may be the exception today; the Rileys will be the exception in another decade.—The Register and Leader (Des Moines), July 3, 1915.

POPE WILL STAY IN ROME

King Alfonso's offer to place his historic palace of the Escorial at the disposal of the pope—a palace so large that it would easily accommodate the entire Pontifical Court and the Cardinals of the Curia—has been declined by the holy father, who declared that he had no intention of leaving Rome for the present. This was officially announced a few days ago at Madrid, by Senor Eduardo Dato, the Prime Minister of Spain.

But while Benedict XV has thus resisted all the powerful pressure brought to bear upon him by Germany and Austria-Hungary to seek refuge in some neutral country while they are at war with Italy, it does not follow that he is satisfied with the idea that by reason of the conflict he is cut off from all intercourse with those subject to his spiritual sway in the dominions of the two Kaisers and in the Ottoman Empire.

Benedict's one aim since his elevation to the tiara, at the outset of the war, has been to emphasize the international character of the papacy—its catholicity in the broadest sense of the word. He is just as much supreme pontiff to the members of his church in Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Turkey as he is to those in Italy, France, Belgium, the British Empire, in Russia, Japan, and in Serbia.

He is forced by this fact to observe the strictest impartiality. His sacred office precludes him from taking sides, and it is this that has caused him to observe such extreme discretion, worthy alike of a great statesman and of a great priest, in refraining from showing any leaning to one power rather than to another, and to take a quiet but firm stand against all the efforts made to obtain from him some pronouncement as to the rights and wrongs of the issues forming the subject of the present war. For he takes the ground that Christ did not found the church that she might teach which side is right in a war between Christian nations.

Pope Benedict has adopted this attitude primarily on ecclesiastical grounds, having at heart first and foremost the interests of the church. But he also appreciates the immense value which the reputation of entire impartiality, above every kind of suspicion, that he has obtained must prove when his services are invoked as the most impartial of mediators, in the negotiations which sooner or later must be inaugurated with a view to the restoration of peace. Indeed, it is owing to the belief in his complete neutrality that he has already been accepted by all the belligerent powers as an intermediary in connection with the arrangement for the exchange of severely wounded prisoners of war and of interned civilians incapable of bearing arms by reason of either age or infirmity.

It is because he is so anxious to maintain this reputation for absolute impartiality that Benedict is distressed by the situation created through the existence of war between Italy and her former allies. Shut off as he is at Rome from all official intercourse with Austria-Hungary, Germany, and Turkey, who have been obliged to withdraw their embassies and legations accredited to the Vatican, he feels that these three powers are placed at a disadvantage with regard to the church. As stated last week in the Osservatore Romano, which is the official organ of the papacy, he finds himself "confronted by a restriction of that internationality which is so necessary to the pontiff in order to fulfill his mission to Christianity."

To these sentiments on the part of the holy father, to his earnest desire that there should be no feeling on the part of the members of the Roman Catholic Church in Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Turkey that their religious interests have suffered through the exclusion from Italy of their diplomatic representatives accredited to the holy see, must be attributed the origin of the plan which he has at present under consideration.

It is nothing more nor less than a request to the other powers now engaged in the war to withdraw their envoys to the court of the Vatican until the restoration of peace. Since the rupture of the Concordat in 1905, between the papacy and France, the latter has ceased to maintain any diplomatic intercourse with the holy see. Japan, Serbia, and Montenegro have no legations accredited to the supreme pontiff. It is only, therefore, the newly-appointed minister of Belgium, a professor of the devastated University of Louvain; the Russian envoy, M. de Nelidoff, and Sir Henry Howard who would be affected by the scheme, and Sir Henry's mission, at the best, is only of a temporary nature.

For he was appointed less than six months ago, for the particular purpose of keeping watch upon the Austrian and German envoys to the holy see, and to counteract their diplomatic efforts to obtain from Benedict XV a departure in their favor from his attitude of strict impartiality toward all the belligerents. The British envoy's presence at the Vatican ceases to be necessary, now that the diplomatic representatives of Prussia, Bavaria, of the Dual Empire, and of the Sublime Porte have taken their departure from Italy.

This project does not date from yesterday. For it formed the subject of much negotiation and of a number of long interviews at Albano between Prime Minister Salandra and the late Cardinal Agliardi before Christmas, but at a time when the probability of Italy's being drawn into the war on the side of the powers of the Triple Entente became apparent. Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, and who had lived for nineteen happy years in Paris, was present at some of these discussions with the Italian premier, and it is understood that the negotiations on the part of the church were carried on under the personal direction of Benedict XV.

Under the terms of the provisional arrangement the pontiff

1. Admitted the impossibility of the continued residence at Rome and unrestricted action there of the diplomatic representatives of powers with whom Italy was at war—representatives who, by reason of their diplomatic immunities, were exempt from the jurisdiction of Italian law.

2. The possibility of restricting the action of the Austrian embassy and of the Prussian and Bavarian legations by interning the members thereof in one of the pontifical palaces, such as the Vatican, the Lateran, or Castel Gandolfo was likewise excluded.

3. The complete independence of the holy see, its entire spiritual freedom, and the inviolability of the extraterritoriality of the pontifical palaces are reaffirmed both by the Italian Government and the papacy.

4. An agreement with regard to the adoption of certain measures of general order to be extended to all the diplomatic representatives accredited to the holy see by foreign powers, both hostile and friendly to Italy. These measures would be in harmony with the absolute neutrality and complete impartiality of the papacy in the present war, since they would restrict and suspend the diplomatic privileges of the representatives accredited to the Vatican of all the belligerent nations.

5. In this way the holy see maintains its complete independence toward the Government of Italy and toward all foreign powers.

This convention may be officially promulgated at any moment, by both church and state at Rome, simultaneously with the departure of Sir Henry Howard, with his Russian and Belgian colleagues, from the Eternal City and from Italian territory at the New York Times, Magazine Section, Sunday, June 6, 1915.

Peace to the Aged

(Dedicated to the homes for the aged, Lamoni, Iowa. Tune—"Jesus, my Savior.")

Peace to the aged,
Those who've toiled throughout life's day;
Now in the twilight,
Flowers should strew your way.
May these garlands perfumed,
Touched by dews of setting sun,
Bring their cheering message
To each aged one.

CHORUS:

Garlands, lovely garlands,
Plucked from dale and meadow fair,
Whisper, softly whisper,
Banish every care.

Dawn's swelling chorus
We would echo through this hall,
Bidding the aged
Hear again youth's call.
Go with us in mem'ry
To the scenes of distant days;
Build again life's fancies
'Neath the sun's bright rays.

Crowned with a halo
Which the years alone can bring,
Thus to the aged
We a song would sing.
You have climbed the mountain
To the sun-kissed radiant crest;
You have earned a respite;
May your days be blessed.

AUSTIN M. DOBSON.

The White Flag

I sent my love two roses—one
As white as driven snow,
And one a blushing royal red,
