Died

WISMER.—Aylla Wismer, born March 9, 1901, Essex, Ontario; died October 6, 1915. Baptized by Elder Hon in Detroit, in 1913. Funeral at the home of Mr. George Loucks, sermon by W. S. Bennett, of Detroit, to a large audience of outsiders. There survive mother, father, 2 sisters, 4 brothers.

LANE.—Elizabeth, wife of William T. S. Lane, of Des Moines, Iowa, born January 7, 1874, Fife County, Scotland; died after an illness of 1 week at Methodist Hospital, Des Moines, September 26, 1915. Deceased leaves husband, 3 daughters, 1 son, all at home, father, mother, of Boone, Iowa, many friends and relatives. Baptized January 22, 1893, by O. B. Thomas, Mallard, Iowa. Services Saints' church Des Moines, by J. M. Baker, interment in Glendale Cemetery.

GANDY.—Alice Gandy died August 15, 1915, at Brookville, Pennsylvania, County Home, of old age. Baptized by A. H. Parsons in Pennsylvania. Leaves 2 daughters.

CHATBURN.—Thomas W. Chatburn, born at Lancashire, England, March 22, 1841; died at Independence, Missouri, October 2, 1915. Deceased came to America in 1845. Baptized January 2, 1870, Gallands Grove, Iowa, by Charles Derry, confirmed by Charles Derry and Henry Holiday. Ordained elder July 28, 1874, Dow City, Iowa; seventy, March 14, 1892, Independence, by Duncan Campbell and W. H. Kelley; high priest, April 16, 1907, Lamoni, by F. G. Pitt and I. N. White. Deceased leaves faithful companion, 7 children, Frank J., Bandon, Oregon, Myra Brackenbury, Independence, Florence McNichols, Kansas City, A. B., Shawnee, Oklahoma, Nellie Brocaw, Independence, May Hilliard, Perry, Florida, T. W., jr., Atlanta, Georgia, 19 grandchildren, 7 great-grandchildren, 4 sisters, 1 brother. Deceased was not only a father, but a friend and chum. Evidencing his loyalty, his exact words were: "Some of the old white heads like mine thought the old 'ship of state' would be wrecked when 'the boys' took hold, but I knew it was safe. God is at the helm, and what this church needs is support. Thank God I can say, I have been loyal." He advised his family to avoid harsh judgment. He said: "I have fought the good fight. I have kept the faith, and I know there is a crown for me." A few hours prior to his death, he raised his head with that characteristic shake, and with strong, firm voice, declared, "I know this gospel is true. It is the greatest hope of mortal men." At daybreak of the morning of his death, sitting unsupported in his bed and looking through the open window, he said: "The dawning of a beautiful day, but for me it is the dawning of eternity. My day will be on the other side." Services at the Stone Church, Independence, by President Frederick M. Smith and Bishop E. L. Kelley, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

STRANGE.—William Strange, born November 13, 1839, Coleshill, England; died September 10, 1915, Chicago, Illinois. Baptized November 26, 1888, by R. C. Evans, at Saint Thomas, Canada. Ordained elder February 17, 1889, by R. C. Evans and T. A. Phillips. Survived by 3 sons, 3 daughters: William, Toronto, Canada; Mrs. Alice Wainwright, Albert, Mrs. Ruth Oliver, and Erwin, Chicago, Mrs. Florence Hare, Antler, North Dakota. Services in charge of Henry P. W. Kier, sermon by James F. Kier.

PITT.—Bertha E., daughter of Daniel and Mary E. Hougas, born near Henderson, Iowa, October 19, 1869; died at Sierra Madre, California, July 16, 1915. Married William P. Pitt, of Independence, Missouri, August 22, 1891, and moved to Independence. Leaves husband and 2 children, Fred D., and Clara Mildred. Services from the home, 1310 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri, in charge of W. H. Garrett, sermon by Joseph Luff, interment in Mount Washington Cemetery. Deceased had loved flowers in her life, and friends remembering this, brought a wondrously beautiful offering of them to the funeral.

The "Century"

The Century announces, to begin in the December number, the publication of a series of picturesque historical articles on the period between the Revolution and the Civil War, by Helen Nicolay, daughter of Lincoln's famous secretary and biographer. "There seems to be a period in the history of all mundane things, whether it be the story of a people or the life of a pair of trousers, when the charm of the new has worn off, and the glamor of the antique has not had time to gather," Miss Nicolay is said to assert, applying this homely metaphor to the period she deals with, a period which is confused and deadly as treated in most histories but which is full of important and interesting happenings could they only be properly sifted. This is precisely what Miss Nicolay has undertaken to do, presenting a living, moving panorama of Washington in the making, society under the early presidents, rivalries and jealousies, idealisms and absurdities, the great political events and personalities looming up clear of the muddling little ones. The tone and manner of treatment are said to be piquant and informal, and Miss Nicolay will present a mass of new material to which she has had access in Washington.

Book Reviews

A FAR COUNTRY.—Winston Churchill can say a great deal in a paragraph. And in a book of 500 pages he can say enough to keep a hard-thinking man or woman intellectually busy for—years! If this sounds exaggerative, we refer you to his latest work, A Far Country. Read it as it should be read; seriously, faithfully and with an open mind, and you will register truths—modern and ordinary elusive truths—that will keep your mind, your brain and heart, occupied for a long time. The Inside of the Cup was a surprise to the seeker after good American fiction; and a revelation to the individual who considers all story-telling a mere pastime. And this other great book of Mr. Churchill's is of like character. The two of them should be universally read and reread. The title of this second story-masterpiece, like the first, is borrowed from Scripture: "And took his journey into a far country and there he wasted his substance in riotous living." Hugh Paret, the hero-villain, is our modern prodigal. The far country he sought and reached, was the Land of Luxury, a Principality of Power. He went in for politics, high finance and society; achieving almost everything but happiness. Then at last he discovered that he had wandered away from all his dearest ideals and was living on husks; that he had taken on a personality not really his own—a personality that dominated him, crushed and saddened him. When his realization was complete, he began the homeward journey. He "repented." He arose and returned unto—himself. We can not give any adequate impression of the story in a few lines. It would take the author himself to do that. But surely any book that will keep a tired and literature-soaked proof reader (we know of a case) awake nights, is worthy of recommendation to the more leisurely and less surfeited. Even if you are not seeking thoughtful fiction-stuff, A Far Country will delight you. It is saturated with humor, sparkles with wit, and is uniformly tinged with a delightful satire. We felt all the way through the story that much of it would be lost on less keen intellects than our own! . . . Surely this makes the lighter facts of the book also desirable. In a word, Mr. Churchill's latest work is a crystalization of modern thought in a natural setting. It is so real that it hurts and so diverting that it compels the reader to endure the pain. . . . This to the serious. To the lover of romance—well, we were aware of a heart interest, and one that stung at times. But Mr. Churchill never overdoes the sentimental. In fact, he never is sentimental. He is natural.

Doctrine and Covenants

By order of General Conference a committee was appointed to correct all typographical errors, also Section 22 of the Doctrine and Covenants. This has been done and the book is now ready. It contains a valuable addition in the form of a new concordance. All the revelations up to date are included. You will need this edition.

The Moving-Picture Route to California Expositions

You don't get half the joy of a trip to the Pacific Coast if you take a route that brings you through Colorado's scenic marvels at night, or dodges them altogether. It's a rare privilege to visit Colorado—to view its rugged grandeur, its almost bottomless canyons. It's a travel-mistake to overlook such scenery as this. You need not. The Burlington's Grand Circle Tour to the Pacific Coast is so arranged that you are wide awake when you go through Denver, Colorado Springs, the Pikes Peak Region, Royal Gorge and Salt Lake; then Los Angeles, both expositions; two days on the ocean (meals and berth included to Burlington passengers) to Portland; then you visit Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane; and come back via either Glacier National Park or Yellowstone Park. Positively, no other tour is so filled with pleasurable excitement—and satisfaction.

Let us talk this trip over with you. If you are going to the Pacific Coast this fall—and, by the way, the fall season is perfectly delightful there—you simply can not afford to overlook the special advantages offered by Burlington Tours. Let us tell you all about them, and arrange reservation for you. Please call to-day or write or phone.

Every Woman Should Know

There are three entirely different kinds of baking powder, namely:

- (1) Cream of tartar, derived from grapes;
- (2) Alum, a mineral acid; and
- (3) Phosphate of Lime.

(1) Baking Powders made of Cream of Tartar add to the food the same healthful qualities that exist in the ripe grapes from which Cream of Tartar is derived.

(2) Baking Powders made of Alum add to the food some form of Alum or Aluminum, a heavy metal, wholly foreign to any natural article of food.

(3) Phosphate of Lime is made from rock or by burning bones which by chemical action are changed into a white, powdered acid. It is used in baking powder only because it is a cheaper substitute.

A Cream of Tartar powder never contains Alum or Phosphate.

Every housekeeper should read the names of the ingredients printed on the label and know what she is using.

DEDICATION AT GUILFORD

On invitation of the branch authorities the HERALD Editor was privileged to take part in the dedication of the new church at Guilford, Missouri.

We reached Guilford Saturday afternoon, October 16, and were soon joined by Brother F. M. Sheehy, minister in charge of that field. We were pressed into service to preach Saturday evening to a fair-sized audience.

At eleven o'clock Sunday forenoon, October 17, we delivered the dedicatory sermon; Brother Sheehy, who was in charge of the service, delivering the dedicatory prayer. At this service, and again at three o'clock, when Brother Sheehy was the speaker, the house was crowded with an attentive audience. There were many visitors from neighboring towns, some driving as far as twenty miles; and many neighbors and nonmembers were present.

A basket dinner was served in the basement, to which all were invited, and the day was spent very pleasantly in worship and social intercourse. Brother Sheehy remained to occupy in the evening, and the writer went on to Saint Joseph, where he preached at the evening service.

Guilford is situated on the Chicago and Great Western Railroad, in Nodaway County, Missouri. The Saints have erected at this place a church with a seating capacity of about two hundred and sixty, of which they may well feel proud. They have a branch membership of one hundred and eight, drawing their attendance to a degree from the country around Guilford, and have completed the building at a cost of thirty-five hundred dollars.

The building is thirty-six by fifty-six feet in size, with gallery, and mothers' rest room. It is seated with opera chairs; has its own acetylene lighting system. The auditorium is a frame structure, with concrete basement the full size of the building and finished to use as a dining room and for Sunday school class room. Brother R. M. Jeffries is the architect and builder; C. C. Nelson is president of the branch, and Joseph Powell president of the district.

We were greatly pleased to find such a commodious and attractive building, free from debt and ready for dedication and service. Too often our people have given little consideration to the appearance of buildings that they erect for worship. It is not enough to have merely four walls and a roof. God makes all things beautiful. He spends infinite pains even on a little flower. We may suppose that he will appreciate a house erected in his name and made as beautiful as is consistent with true economy.

Beauty is not a matter of ostentatious and extravagant ornamentation. It is rather associated with simplicity. It lies between the extremes of barren ugliness and the aforementioned ostentatious ornamentation. Good taste is not necessarily very expensive. It costs little more to make a building attractive. The principal thing is to use thought, judgment, and good taste. Saints contemplating building local churches might do well to put themselves in touch with good architects of our own faith who could advise in person or by correspondence. By correspondence with the First Presidency or Presiding Bishop they might get in touch with such architects.

In this particular the Saints of Guilford have done well. Their church, for one of its size, comes near being a model of attractive simplicity attained at a minimum of expense,—this applies to both the exterior and the interior of the building.

A good feeling seems to prevail in the community toward our people. The business men and others of the town have helped most liberally in a financial way and their good will and financial and moral support have been greatly appreciated by the Saints.

The church building formerly occupied by the Saints, no longer adequate to their needs, has been sold to the Christians. The Christians were in the midst of a revival service; but we were told that they called their meetings off on Sunday on account of our dedication. Their courtesy in that regard was appreciated.

Altogether the occasion was most pleasant and spiritual. Success to the Saints of Guilford. The church building thus dedicated is not an end in itself. It is but a means to an end. It is but an instrument for them to use in the service of God and for the salvation of men.

DEATH OF SISTER ADA SMITH

It is our sad duty to chronicle the death of Sister Ada Smith, wife of the late President Joseph Smith.

Her death occurred at the Independence Sanitarium at eight o'clock Wednesday evening, October 20. She had been in a critical condition for some weeks, as a result, we understand, of a malignant goiter with cancerous growth.

Sister Ada Rachel Clarke was born July 23, 1871, at Garafraxa, Dufferin County, Ontario. She was baptized September 4, 1893, at Garafraxa, by R. C. Evans; confirmed by R. C. Evans and J. H. Taylor, at the same place. She was married to President Joseph Smith, January 12, 1898. They took up their residence in Lamoni; moving from there to Independence, Missouri, in 1906.

Sister Ada soon won the love and confidence of the entire family into which she had married; and indeed speedily earned and received the respect, gratitude, and love of the whole church because of her loyalty and cheerful and unflinching devotion to President Smith during his declining years.

Her death will be mourned by all. We can not understand the providences of God at such times. We can only trust his goodness, and that all things will work together for the good of those who love and serve him. Sister Ada did her work well, and filled her mission nobly to the end of her journey.

She leaves three boys, Richard C., Wallace, and Reginald.

The funeral was held at Independence, Missouri, from the Stone Church, Saturday, October 23, at 3 p. m., in charge of Elders F. M. Sheehy and G. E. Harrington, the sermon being preached by Bishop E. L. Kelley. The pallbearers were F. M. Smith, E. A. Smith, B. M. Anderson, I. A. Smith, R. S. Salyards, F. A. Smith.

A good woman has gone to her well-earned reward.

A TRIBUTE TO A FRIEND

The news of Brother Chatburn's death reached me Saturday evening, and filled me with deep depression. What a loss his family has sustained! The church has lost a valiant and chivalrous champion. I have lost a friend.—Friends in these days mean so much to us all, and when we lose them their place can not be supplied. Friendship knows nothing of proxies or deputies.

Our brother was, at his own urgent request, appointed to the Southwestern Oregon District. He was very anxious to see his son Frank and his family again. Some of us had misgivings about his going because of his sickness, but we felt it was not right to deny the request of one who for a generation had been so faithful and tireless a warrior. When we met him at the Myrtle Point reunion, however, it was obvious that his work was finished. It was pathetic to see him heroically struggling against the inevitable; and with his accustomed zeal and bright courage he conducted the reunion so excellently that all seemed to agree that it was one of the best ever held in the district.

When we heard he had gone home, while not surprised, we were sorry, for we knew Brother Chatburn would not have deserted his post had he been able at all to remain. In his last letters he related to me his experience with Brother Harrington on his arrival at the Sanitarium. The doctor told him he had a fighting chance. "Go to it," said he; so long as there was a chance he was ready for the fight.

Our brother was a unique and original personality. He was a remarkably gifted platform speaker, and when caught upon the sweep of his emotions he had a flow of molten eloquence, and made his subject incandescent with his fervor.

I remember distinctly the prayer he offered at the dedication of the new church purchased by our local congregation at Atchison, Kansas. The range of sentiment, the rising tide of impassioned pleading, the profoundly affectionate description of the toil, sacrifice and hope which the little band had intertwined in their work, the climax of the invocation, when he prayed for the divine protection, blessing and recognition, made up altogether one of the most impressive experiences it has been my privilege to share.

We have seen him at reunions,—nothing too big, too insignificant, too hard, too menial, too exacting. He was there to clear the ground, to fix tents, to supervise the commissary department, to see that the ice was in the water, to muster the choir, to draft the programs, to smooth difficulties, to administer to the sick, and then ring the bell for service.

None could resist his appeal for a collection, and it was his delight to see that all expenses were paid, and the missionaries with a little surplus to help them along.

How we shall miss him in the conferences. His familiar figure is with us no more. His cheery greeting is silenced, and his springy step no more is heard; for in the language of his favorite songs, he is tenting on the old camp ground. For: now the battle's over, he shall wear a crown in the new Jerusalem.

What a lot of people will miss his witty and salient reminiscences in the HERALD and Ensign! In their ways "Jots by the Wayside" were among the best things produced in the literature of our church papers. His powers of description were very artistic, his pungent witticisms were like delicate seasoning, and the deep devotional spirit pervading all were nicely balanced and rounded by his grateful remembrances of the hospitalities and kindnesses received.

Brother Chatburn was a product of the latter-day work, and characterized its best expression of cheerful, optimistic common sense; a natural eloquence, a whole-hearted generosity and a passion for his family and friends.

The affecting friendship which existed between our late president and our lamented brother contains the elements of a beautiful idyl. It is a pleasant conceit to imagine the warm greeting and the old-time hearty laugh of affectionate comradeship which will echo through the "Liberty Home" in paradise, when they meet together again. Tempus fugit.

So many friends and acquaintances are passing over that occasionally the imagination longs to "hit the trail" of what Charles Frohman called "the most beautiful adventure of life."

This man's interrogation is a beautiful antidote to fear and cowardice in the presence of that angel who in time looks black and dreadful, but in eternity is full of iridescent immortality, for after all death is the great liberator, and in Burns's wonderful language, "Man's dearest friend."

So as the old guard passes to the eternal silence, one by one, and they colonize the great continents of eternity, it is comforting to know we shall not be lonely, nor sad, for so many will be pleased to see us, and the joy which must be in the morning will drown the grief of the night.

God grant peace to our departed friends, and make them feel as much at home in their new environment as they did with us. And to the sorrowing wife and children, may they hear the echo of his cheery voice reverberating through the corridors of memory.

We shall wear a crown
In the new Jerusalem.

Surely if Maeterlinck's beautifully suggestive drama, "The Blue Bird," is anywhere near true, when he shows how the dead depend upon the affectionate memory of us who remain for their very life, we can only say that immortality is born of love and sacrifice, and we shall remember unceasingly the noble army of pioneers who have blazed the way to better and holier things, and then encouragingly passed through the dark valley of shadows into the never-failing light of Eternal Day.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, October 11, 1915.

WHAT WAR MEANS TO-DAY

PARIS, October 20.—In the middle of the Champagne battle field, my first impression was that judgment day had come; that I had been left behind to roam the disrupted earth alone.

As far as the eyes could see undulated one vast, pitted waste of chalk, with snags of annihilated forests sticking up, gaunt and white and covered with dust, against the skyline, and with arms and legs and other fragments of dead men lying like common garbage on a titanic dump.

This was the work of the French artillery. Here the Germans had been. Here many were still—rotting.

HELL'S FURIES OUTDONE

Hell's furies seemed to have been forestalled and outdone.

For three days I was permitted to wander over the ground recently won by the French.

I had talked previously with many officers and men concerning the efficacy of the French shell fire, but even thus prepared and despite what I had hitherto observed personally, I was totally surprised at what I saw.

Over tens of square miles practically no vegetation was left. Even the rabbits and rats had not escaped.

Almost three million shells were hurled into this area in three days, digging pits from five to seventy-five feet deep, the latter one hundred thirty to one hundred fifty feet across.

PRISONERS ALMOST INSANE

A general told me the German troops were so demoralized that droves of prisoners the French took were sent to the rear without other escort than a single guide—that many were almost insane for days.

Numerous entire French regiments have been trying to clean up the battle field ever since the struggle, but without seeming to make headway, so vast is the undertaking.

Excavations bring to light daily fresh war stores or huddles of putrefying Germans, as if this were some new Pompeii.

What I took at first to be the stump of a shell-torn bush turned out to be a crisped red hand on a human arm, protruding from a caved-in trench.

What seemed to be an old sack had a human foot inside.

A discolored blue sweater had a man's trunk within it.—Chicago Herald, October 21, 1915.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

SUFFRAGE DEFEATED.—Woman suffrage was defeated in New Jersey the 19th by an overwhelming majority. President Wilson, having previously declared himself, voted for the proposition.

"JITNEY" NOT SUBJECT.—The California State Railroad Commission has decided that the "jitney" bus is not a public utility, and hence not subject as such to laws applying to railroads and trolley lines.

OROZCO CONVICTED.—The Mexican general, Orozco, and two companions, convicted of conspiracy to violate American neutrality laws, were on the 20th sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment in Leavenworth. Each furnished bond, pending appeal.

FOR PREPAREDNESS.—The Wilson administration is lining up for a preparedness campaign in the next Congress, which would provide a large increase in the navy and in the standing army, the work covering a term of years and necessitating an outlay of one billion dollars.

INSUFFICIENT SAFETY.—In a late note to Germany in the Frye case, the United States Government gave the German Government to understand that it did not regard "an opportunity to escape in lifeboats" sufficient safety for passengers and crew of an American vessel destroyed when carrying contraband.

RELIGION IN SCHOOLS.—In a Carroll County case in which while the local schoolhouse was being repaired the trustees rented for public school purposes a room in a Catholic school, the Supreme Court of Iowa has decided that school-teachers may wear a religious garb in the schoolroom, read from any version of the Bible, recite prayers, and hang religious pictures on the walls.

PANAMA SLIDE.—A landslide has occurred in the Gaillard Cut on the Panama Canal which is described as the most serious yet to occur in the canal. General Goethals reports that the nature of this slide is such that when removed a similar movement may occur. The conditions make it impossible to predict the date of reopening the canal, and ships in canal waters have been advised to proceed by other routes.

RIVAL RAILROADING.—In the case before the United States Federal Court at New York against directors and former directors of the New Haven charged with violating the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, testified that the New Haven had made him second vice president with nothing to do because he had been "making a nuisance" of himself as general manager of the New York and New England Railroad, a rival line.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Ten Mexicans were killed by a posse on the 19th, for alleged participation in a raid on a passenger train near Brownsville, Texas, on the night of the 18th, in which three Americans were killed and four wounded. Two Mexican raiders were killed by United States soldiers on the 22d. United States forces have been strengthened along the border. The United States and the South and Central American countries participating in recent conferences looking to peace in Mexico, on the 19th formally recognized Carranza as the chief executive of the Republic of Mexico. Carranza had previously guaranteed the protection of foreign lives and property; responsibility for claims growing out of the revolution; safety to persons regardless of religious faith; amnesty for opposing leaders who swear allegiance to the new government. An embargo has been established on the shipment of arms from the United States to factions opposing Carranza. An embargo on all shipments in and out of northern Mexico has been declared, which is calculated to stop the sale by Villa of confiscated property to supply his army. Villa has lost to Carranza, Guaymas, the only seaport of importance in his possession. Fierro, his leading general, has quit his cause, and many desertions are reported.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Serbians are yielding slowly from the pressure of their foes. The Germans have gained slightly on the north. The Bulgarians on the east have made important gains, threatening if not having cut the main railroad line from Nish, Serbia, to Salonika, the most direct route between the Serbian army and the allies. The Serbians are fighting with a desperation all but unparalleled thus far in the war, and their enemies are losing heavily in men. The Serbians have been joined by French forces. Allied troops are still being landed at Salonika. In their first attack on the Bulgarians, the allied forces were victorious, driving the enemy from Serbian territory and capturing the Bulgarian fortified town Strumnitza. The allies have also taken Enos, recently ceded to Bulgaria by Turkey. The Montenegrin forces are attacking Austria on the frontier. Great Britain, France, and Italy have declared war on Bulgaria, and an Italian squadron has sailed under sealed orders, presumably to join the allied fleet in the blockade of the Bulgarian Ægean coast. On the east the Germans have made gains from the Russians south of Riga and in the vicinity of Dvinsk. The Russians report gains in Galicia. Italian successes over Austria are announced. The Italians are making a general attack all along the Austrian frontier. Heavy fighting continues in the west. In Alsace fortune favors the French. German submarine activity continues to grow less formidable, while the submarines of Great Britain are taking a heavy toll of German merchant ships in the Baltic. A German cruiser was sunk recently. British and French ships have been in action against Bulgarian Ægean seaports. Sir Edward Carson, Attorney General, has resigned from the British cabinet, giving as his reason that he is not in accord with the near eastern policy of the British Government. The allies have made flattering territorial offers to Greece, including the island of Cyprus, but this nation, while allowing the landing and transporting of allied troops on and across her soil, still holds in reserve her army, mobilized it is said for the maintenance of neutrality.

THE CRISIS

(Synopsis of an address by Wardell Christy before the Sunday school and Religio at the last General Conventions.)

And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: Let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light.—Romans 13: 11, 12.

The very elements are charged and surcharged with the evidences of a nation-wide crisis. Church and state are facing the solving of problems the like of which have never faced a great people before.

A certain good Scotch brother told me at one time while in the Des Moines District, that he did not expect to attend the reunion that year, but about the second day of the reunion this brother put in an appearance, and when asked how he came to change his mind he assured us he had come to "Take a few nots and watch devel-op-ments." The good brother really meant that he had come to take a few notes and to watch developments.

We are sure that one need not be overobserving to discover that there are some knots to be unraveled, neither do we need be overwatchful to discover some devil-op-ments, and in the meeting of these conditions so apparent, there is nothing so essential as the putting on of "the armor of light."

Crisis: Primarily, to separate, to determine, to decide. Second: The decisive state of things, or the point of time when an affair is arrived at its height, and must soon terminate or suffer a material change.

It will require more than ordinary wisdom, to be able to discern the real needs of the hour, and more than human courage to meet the requirements and make the sacrifices necessary to the development of the church to the state of efficiency and power so essential to meet the needs of the times and the opportunities of the hour.

CHARACTER

Character is in demand. What the world needs most in the solution of its great problems is more men and women of character: more men and women who dare to do right because it is right. We want more men of character in the workshops, that the laboring classes may not so easily be converted into a howling mob, and violence reign where arbitration should rule. We want more men of character in the business houses, that public trust may not be destroyed, confidence lost, the credit system ruined and our national credit weakened. We want more men of character in legislative halls, that the voice of the people may be heard, and their wills executed, lest the great cords that bind our Republic together shall decay through the corruption of politics, the Union be dissolved and the Stars and Stripes be trailed in the dust of a disgraced soil. We want more men of character in the pew and in the pulpit, that the Spirit of the living God may find expression in the modern church, lest it become the cloak of hypocrisy, the school of infidelity, and the power of Christ be lost to the world.

We must look to the church as the one living and true means by which and through which character, real character, may be developed. What are we as a church doing to develop the quality of character essential in this time of great opportunity? What can we do to develop real character, true manhood and true womanhood.

WAYS OF ATTAINMENT

There are three ways of attainment; by hygienic living and physical culture; by education and ethical culture; by regeneration and spiritual culture. No one of these can take the place of another. All are essential in the development of a strong successful, righteous character.

CULTURE

The only worthy end of all learning, of all science, of all life, in fact, is that human beings should love one another better. Culture merely for culture's sake can never be anything but a sapless root, capable of producing at best a shriveled branch.

Culture looks beyond machinery, culture hates hatred; culture has one great passion, the passion for sweetness and light. It has one even yet greater, the passion for making them all prevail. It is not satisfied till we all come to a perfect man; it knows that the sweetness and light of the few must be imperfect until the raw and unkindly masses of humanity are touched with sweetness and light.

In our hands is placed the destiny, and future of the church and the Nation. To us is intrusted to a great extent the molding of the clay, the inclining of the twig, the laying of the foundation of great and noble characters, the production of great men, the placing in and giving to the world symmetry of character, men who love, men who will put their all into the church, men and women, wealthy, rich in the power of wisdom, and true character, anxious to cast it all into the treasury of the world's great need to-day. Are we meeting the demands of the time?

He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten its cause.

How much can we contribute to a better ministry for the future? That is, a better prepared ministry, men of greater power, because of their better equipments. Do we need great men? Does it take much of a man to be a missionary? If it did not God would not have reserved to himself the right to select his ministry; no wonder he said, The field is white already to the harvest, pray ye therefore that the Lord of the harvest will send laborers into his vineyard; and, no man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron.

It requires great men and great women to be true Latter Day Saints. It surely requires great men to be missionaries, great men to touch the world, to infuse into the church and the state the spirit of the living God.

Does it take much of a man to be a missionary? "Every mission constitutes a pledge of duty. Every man is bound to consecrate his every faculty to its fulfillment. He will derive his rules of action from the profound conviction of that duty."

MEN WANTED

The crying need of the hour is manhood and womanhood; not legislation, not organization, not agitation, but men. Men who are ready and willing to begin the reformation of the world in their own hearts. Men who can say to the struggling brother, "Follow me."

I would like to write over the door of every workshop and business house in the land, "Men Wanted."

I would place on the wall of every schoolroom, court of justice, and legislative hall, "Men Wanted."

I would wreath in ivy and gold over every fireplace, altar and pulpit in the land, "Men Wanted."

I would engrave it on the mountain side, have it reflected in every shimmering wave, and waft it on the breezes of heaven, "Men Wanted."

I would sieze the finger of lightning and write in letters of fire across our darkened skies, "Men Wanted."

I would gather the thunder's roll, the cataract's roar and the cannon's boom and echo from ocean to ocean, "Men Wanted."

I would unite all the voices of men and the pleadings of women with the forces of nature to send one sublime appeal to heaven, Great and infinite God, in this time of the world's and the church's greatest crisis, give us men, clean men, pure men, courageous men, men who dare to do right because it is right!

What constitutes a great man? Is it profession? Or is it "Being and doing?"

He only is great of heart who floods the world with a great affection. He only is great of mind who stirs the world with great thoughts. He only is great of will who does something to shape the world to a great career. And he is greatest who does the most of all these things, and does them best.

There are dangers in education, as there are dangers in riches. The man or woman that is educated abnormally, is one of the great curses of the time.

The rich man void of the Spirit of the living God is of no value to the church in its time of need, what he has is reserved for selfish purposes.

What is more pitiable than a rich man with a little soul, or a learned man with a starved and shriveled heart? Manhood is of more worth than money; character is more precious than craft or skill. Fullness of being is superior to encyclopedia learning; the grace of gentleness and pity and love are more beautiful than all the accomplishments of art.

INTELLIGENT WORSHIP IN SONG

"They that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth." I am sure that I am one who truly loves music; I am sure that I sense to the extent that is possible for one of my limited abilities of appreciation, the blessings that come through the service of song; and yet I sense a "crisis," a danger in that we are liable to drift to the extreme, and cause injury to the spirit of this part of our service. But let me append here one of the many statements coming from the presses of the churches of the day, which will present to us the rock upon which they have struck, and owing to the fact that we are almost wholly dependent upon the talents of the world for our special music, that is, in its composition, how can we expect our singers to put soul into a soulless composition?

Smith Stimme said:

I am glad to note your editorial in the Northwestern of the 23d inst., entitled "Intelligent singing." I do believe the anthem singing, the solos, the duets in our churches, more than any other one thing, are the bane of the church to-day. The style, the agony, and the technic display indulged in by the average church choir singer is tiresome to the average listener, in the extreme, and if persisted in will be the means of closing many church doors, and they ought to be closed if that form of so-called worship is to be followed up. The writer enjoys good high grade music second to none, but church service that is intended for worship only is not the place for such a display of technic unintelligent enunciation as is usual with our average choir singing.

Technic: The method of performance or manipulation in any art; technical skill or manipulation; artistic execution. They illustrate the method of nature, not the technic of a manlike artificer.

A COOPERATIVE WORK

Religio, Sunday school, college, can you give us some real composers? We look to you. Will you meet the demands? Can you meet the demands? Sure! Develop the God character, produce the Christ spirit, in your cultivation, and the Christ spirit speaking through you and your subjects will produce to the church and the world, in anthem, duet, and solo, as it has in hymn, the climax in the world's beautiful and sublime music.

Now in conclusion, let us look the problems squarely in the face, and seeing with unobstructed vision the wonderful demands that are made upon us, let us sense the real force and value of cooperation, and with the true spirit of benevolence, and brotherly love, cooperate to the meeting of the demands of the time; let us search the value of this from the pen of Theodore Roosevelt:

The only way to achieve anything in religion, in business, in politics, is through cooperation. The big man in this world must learn humility, if he is to do his work well. If he does not realize how small he is in comparison with the other men and women, he will not help the world to go on. The work of any leader sinks into insignificance when compared with the work of average citizens. We are all on life's chessboard. In religion, in business, in farming, politics, town or government we are all players. There is no one man, no, not the best player who can dispense with one pawn.

A WISE BUILDER

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 12

BY F. J. EBELING

The beauty and durability of a structure is known by the kind of material used in its construction. The first thing the builder considers is the strength of the foundation. For a man to erect a costly building upon a sandy foundation is to make him appear ridiculous in the eyes of the world. The wise builder will dig deep and lay the foundation upon solid ground.

In Matthew 7: 24-27, Jesus uses a very common and practical illustration to show the folly of hearing and not doing, and the wisdom of doing after hearing:

Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.

Doubtless Jesus had seen or heard of the foolishness of building a house upon the sand, and the consequent disastrous end when the rains washed away the sand from under the foundation, and from this endeavored to send to the hearts of his disciples the great ethical lessons.

We are building a home for eternity. Jesus has furnished the right kind of material, that if we use it, will stand the storms and winds of God's judgment; if not, we will suffer the same loss as the unwise man who built his house upon the sand, our house gone here, and no house to go into hereafter.

I want to especially emphasize the fact that Jesus when using this comparison was addressing himself to his people who had begun the erection of their spiritual building, "When he was set, his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth, and taught them (Matthew 5: 1, 2), hence the language of our text is to the disciples directly.

"Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man." In order to know "these sayings," of Jesus, which make for the "wise man," we shall have to go back and review some of the "sayings" which are parts of that ever-memorable sermon on the mount. For the purpose to make an everlasting impression upon the minds of his disciples, Christ concludes this masterpiece with the parable of the builders, wise and otherwise. We will examine some of these sayings:

Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.—Matthew 5: 13.

In this saying we have presented very forcefully to us our relationship to the world. As truly as salt has within it savoring or preserving qualities for that with which it comes in contact, so should a disciple of Christ in his associations with man have an influence that will make them better for having been in his company. We are to be in the world, but not of it. As salt can not be of any savoring good unless it comes in touch with the thing it is going to preserve, neither can a child of God be of much good to those who stand in need of the saving power of the gospel unless he comes in contact with them. But should one become careless and not let his faith be known, he is then like the salt that has lost its savor, hence is building upon a very sandy foundation.

Matthew 5: 14 has this beautiful saying, "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill can not be hid." No better symbol of the Christian attitude to the world could have been presented. The moment one accepts this latter-day evangel, he becomes a marked man. Everybody expects him to be a "different fellow" than he has been. And he will be as prominent in a moral sense as a light in a dark place, or a city on top of a hill. As those places are attractive to all eyes, so should our lives be attractive to all those who look upon us.

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matthew 5: 23, 24.

If this beautiful saying of Christ was fully observed, there would be little unpleasant work for the branch president and teacher. Any brother or sister who attempts to take part in the holy sacrament, and at the same time knows there is any hardness of heart between him and a brother or sister, is surely building upon a very sandy foundation. And the day of judgment will reveal it. Paul says of such, "They drink damnation to their soul." On the other hand, what a strong and secure foundation one builds upon when he is big enough to go to his brother in the spirit of the Master, and acknowledge his wrong, and then with freedom and peace of mind go to the sacred altar and there drink from the cup in brotherly love.

There is not a Latter Day Saint but who has heard these sayings time and time again, and by not doing them surely we are on dangerous ground.

And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

There are things in our lives that, in order to reach perfection, we must sacrifice, although it may be as severe as a real amputation of literal members of our bodies. As a member of our body sometimes has to be taken off to save the whole body from death, so it is in a spiritual sense. But in order to gain that for which the loss stands, it is profitable to suffer it. After the above scripture, the Inspired Translation adds, "And now thus I speak, a parable concerning your sins; wherefore, cast them from you, that you may not be hewn down and cast into the fire" (Matthew 5: 34).

Ye have heard that it has been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you.—Matthew 5: 43, 44.

If this one saying was lived up to it would transform this world into paradise. What a sublime foundation this is! And when the Spirit of God has so wrought in our lives that we will not only love those who love us, but even love our enemies, and offer a prayer for those who wrong us, we then have not heard it in vain.

Love is the underlying principle of all true service, and on love says Jesus, hang all law and the prophets. If we can not love as Jesus in this saying requires, our foundation is insecure.

We are sometimes too shortsighted in the manifestation of this divine virtue. We only love those who love us. In this we show no superiority over those who make no profession, hence little or no credit is due us, simply paying our just debts. Of this Jesus says, For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matthew 7: 33.) Herein lies the secret of securing temporal blessings. Are we giving our first attention to the building up of God's work? Or to our own personal gain? If we expect to be resting upon that sure and safe foundations that will endure the storms of God's judgment, it will be by adhering to this saying in connection with the others.

Of all the beautiful sayings of this great sermon, the one found in Matthew 7: 1, 2, has the most far-reaching effect as far as the happiness of this life is concerned:

Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

How often the spirits of our brothers and sisters have been crushed by a failure to live up to this saying. Not knowing the true motive of another, we often judge and condemn him by outer appearance, when he may be fully justified in the sight of God. A brother may not appear to us to be making much progress in the work, and by us may be criticized, when at the same time he may be making a far more desperate struggle to gain the little he has than one who is regarded by us as a spiritual giant. God looks upon the heart and will reward for every honest effort put forth. Our environments have much to do with our accomplishments here.

When Bishop Blakeslee came to Kirtland some years ago, an old gentleman living there approached him and said, "Your Doctrine and Covenants contains a false revelation. That in regard to the size of the temple. It says it is to be forty-five by sixty-five feet. I have measured it and found it to be much larger."

The bishop took the measurement and found the old gentleman was correct. During the night the bishop gave the subject much thought and prayer. The Spirit spoke to him and said, "The Lord looketh in the inside and not on the outer." The first thing in the morning the bishop took the measure from the inside and found it just as it is in the Doctrine and Covenants.

From this we learn that the true measurements of our worth can only be correctly estimated by the intents of the heart. And by reason of this it is not strange the Master warned us about judging one another. This is a very shaky foundation to stand upon.

That which the world has called the golden rule is found in Luke 6: 31, but one of the sayings of the sermon we have been commenting upon: "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

We believe this saying will stand to condemn more in the judgment day than all the rest, for it deals with all the endless duties of man to man.

Normally it is not supposed man will do anything against his own interest. Therefore, his own interest should control in his conduct toward his fellow man. Hence his good is best conserved when he lives for the good of all. What a fraud foundation for the great superstructure of society to stand upon!

As a church, when examining the foundation stones of other churches, let us, in the light of the concluding part of the sermon on the mount, look well to the strength of our own foundation, lest we be building upon the sand.

"Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

PRAYER

Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.—1 Thessalonians 5: 17, 18.

No duty is more frequently and urgently enjoined in the sacred scriptures than that of prayer. The truth is, a religion without prayer would not be adapted to fallen man—would fail to cultivate and develop that feeling of dependence which should characterize an erring, yet confiding worshiper. This is a universally recognized principle, for all religions, whether true or false, enjoin prayer as a fundamental duty.

THE NATURE OF PRAYER

Webster defines prayer in a general sense as "an act of asking for a favor." But "in worship," he defines it as a solemn address to the Supreme Being, consisting of adoration, or an expression of our sense of God's glorious perfection, confession of sins, supplication for mercy and forgiveness, intercession for blessings on others, and thanksgiving or an expression of gratitude to God for his mercies and benefits.

Prayer is, then, a communion with God. "It is," as the martyr Bradford expresses it, "a simple, unfeigned, humble, and ardent offering of the heart before God, wherein we either ask things needful or give thanks for benefits received." Unless the heart (and by the word heart we mean the moral affections) is enlisted there can be no acceptable prayer. "The true worshiper," says the Savior, "shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him" (John 4: 23).

Reverend David H. Fansie, Denver, Colorado, is reported in the Rocky Mountain News for February 2, as having said in part:

The need of the Christian body is not a new subscription to the doctrine of prayer as a fact and force in the life of Jesus and during apostolic times. Everybody is ready to believe those facts, and modern psychology is making the whole story credible for those of little faith. The need of the Christian church is the conviction that the laws and forces, operative nineteen hundred years ago, are operative to-day; that the prayer results of that distant time may be duplicated now, and that greater and wider reaching demonstrations should characterize our modern Christian life.

DEPENDS ON MEMORY

If our religion is being discredited to-day, it is where she stands in the midst of the terrible demands of a tense and exacting civilization. With only a memory and a record centuries old, to offer men who are going mad for the want of something that will hold them up and give them a sense of security amid the falling walls of their air castles and the crumbling of their human endeavors, mere profession of the supremest truth is cruel mockery to those who need help but to whom help is never offered. It is like the cathedral bells of Saint Petersburg booming through the dungeon walls the response, "Have mercy, O Lord," while mercy is a stranger in the prison corridors.

It is with confusion of mind and face that we churchmen stand before the problems, not of the church, touching her maintenance and existence, though they are serious enough, but the crying, vexing, problems of our communities. If we are anything we are the salt of our cities, but unless we have a decided savor the mocking crowd may justly deny our claims. Indeed, what are we, custodians of an ancient doctrine of prayer, a mere museum of sacred antiquities? Never! We are they who, in the midst of gigantic material achievements profess to the discovery and experience of spiritual influences which are superior to every other. We are in the world, not to talk about prayer, but to pray.

A prayerless church halts and stutters before the claim of Jesus that the works he did we should do also, and that we should do even greater works. We have been satisfied to look back nineteen hundred years and reverently watch him as he went about healing the sick and restoring the lunatic. In so doing we have failed either to glorify him or to honor his teaching.

The world will respect the church that does things, not necessarily the church which is able to assemble the largest crowds, but the church that discloses to weary men a spiritual law which will, in the sphere of man's highest nature, work as definitely and unflinchingly as the law of gravitation in the physical, a principle as workable and as practical in the region of the moral and spiritual as electricity in the natural.

PRAYER THAT IS ANSWERED

Prayer then, is not the mere posture of the body. A man may kneel until he wears out the stones; like the Mohammedans he may put himself into every variety of position—throw himself on the earth and lie in the dust; like the Arab he may put on sackcloth and ashes; or, like the monks of modern times, kneel until his "knees become horny," and yet never pray at all.

Nor is prayer the mere expression of the lips. A man may repeat a hundred times in a day the prayer which the Savior taught his disciples to use, or he may say, "O Lord, my soul thirsteth for thee," and yet not offer up one petition which God will hear and answer. Nor does prayer consist in "excellency of utterance." In this respect, many seem to have a peculiar gift, and can pour out fluently and at length a multitude of words; but both the mind and the tongue may be thus employed, while the heart neither feels the sentiments expressed, nor longs for the blessings implored.

A forcible illustration of this thought is found in the prayer of the Pharisee and publican (Luke 18: 1-4). The prayer that was answered was the voicing of the saint's anxiety in the ears of our heavenly Father.

WITH CHRIST'S INDORSEMENT

Prayer must be in the name of Christ. The Savior himself says, "Whatever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do" (John 14: 13). There is a depth of meaning in this expression which is often overlooked. This passage means that we are not only to approach God through Christ, but through the name of the latter. That is, our petitions must go to the throne of the Father with the name of Christ indorsed, so to speak, upon those petitions.

To illustrate: An insolvent debtor who has squandered his estate by "riotous living" may petition a bank until doomsday for pecuniary favors, but he utterly fails, and the reason is, he has no standing in a pecuniary way. He is hopelessly involved already in that bank. But worthless as he is within himself, if he will draw a note and induce some man of wealth to indorse it, that very bank in which he had no personal standing will grant his request. It is the name of the indorser, however, that secures the favor.

It is just so with man in his fallen estate. He is a moral bankrupt—is, in that respect, insolvent at the bank of heaven; but Jesus Christ is infinitely solvent, and his credit, so to speak, in that bank, is without limit. Whenever, therefore, an humble penitent presents a petition which Christ can indorse, then the inexhaustible treasures of heaven's bank are at his command.

Bearing this thought in mind, we can readily see why so few of our prayers are answered—they are not offered in the name of Christ. In brief, he does not indorse them, consequently they do not even reach the great directory that controls and super-vises the exchequer of heaven.

MOTHER'S PRAYERS

When a boy I used to sing a song entitled "The old cottage home," which was very touching to me. I quote it in part as follows:

One by one they have gone from the old cottage home,
On earth I shall see them no more;
But in heaven shall meet around that beautiful throne
Where parting shall come never more.

Then comes the sweet part to me:

Many years have gone by since in prayer there we met,
With the dear ones around the old hearth;
But my mother's sweet prayers in my heart still are felt,
I'll treasure them up while on earth.

Note my mother's sweet prayer. That sounds good to me. While I was left without a mother, I realize the worth of a mother's prayer, and the wandering boy who has a praying mother will never forget the many times she has poured out her soul in prayer to God for his protection. He may wander from his parental training into the bleak mountains of sin, yet his mother's prayer will haunt him until he returns to obedience.

MUST BE IN HUMILITY

Humility is essential to acceptable prayer. "Everyone that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord." (Proverbs 16: 5.)

God says, "Him that hath a high look and a proud heart will not I suffer" (Psalm 101: 5).

Peter teaches the same thing when he says, "Be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble" (1 Peter 5: 5).

Our blessed Savior inculcated the same sentiment when he set a little child in the midst of the disciples, saying: "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 18: 4).

The parable of the publican teaches the same thing.

FAITH AN ESSENTIAL

On the point of faith the Bible is as explicit as it is possible to be.

All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.—Matthew 21: 22.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.—James 1: 5, 6.

But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must [note the word must] believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Hebrews 11: 6.

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.—Luke 11: 9. (See John 14: 12-16.)

WILLING TO DO

The Savior says:

Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. [The inspired version says: You never knew me.]—Matthew 7: 21.

The individual that does the will of God is the one that will receive the promised blessings. The Christ said: I know that my Father doth always hear me, because I do always those things that please him.

James says: Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed.

So if we would enjoy the blessings promised in the scriptures, we must be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving our own selves.

The wise man says: "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination."

Note the example of our Leader and Commander from the beginning to the close of his life work on earth. He lived in the spirit of prayer, and he died with a prayer on his lips for sinful man. "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." At times he spent long seasons alone in prayer. We note him as he climbs the mountain height to a spot where no human eye can see or ear can hear, where he can plead alone with the Father for the proper instructions to guide him in the great work of organizing the church. There he spent the entire night in prayer and was then able to make choice of the twelve apostles (Luke 6:12, 13).

EFFECTS OF PRAYER

Many a throb of grief and pain
Thy frail and erring child must know;
But not one prayer is breathed in vain,
Nor does one tear unheeded flow.

The Apostle James says the prayer of faith shall save the sick (James 5:15). Read Acts 16 and note the effect of prayer in the case of Paul and Silas. They prayed at midnight and sang praises to God. They were saved from a temporal death, and the jailer was placed in a saved condition spiritually.

Oh, how praying rests the weary!
Prayer will change the night to day;
So when life gets dark and dreary,
Don't forget to pray.

Cornelius prayed and was visited by an angel, and later by Peter, who taught him the way of salvation. Thus Daniel and all the wise men of Babylon were saved from death (Daniel 2). Note the effect of the prayer of Elijah as recorded in 1 Kings.

Back to the text: "Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

Montgomery defines prayer as follows:

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire
Uttered or unexpressed—
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear,
The forward glancing of an eye,
When none but God is near.

Prayer is the simplest form of speech
That infant lips can try;

Prayer the sublimest strains that reach
The majesty on high.

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air,
His watchword at the gates of death;
He enters heaven with prayer.

Prayer is the contrite sinner's voice
Returning from his ways,
While angels in their songs rejoice,
And cry, "Behold, he prays."

WAR AS NATIONAL SUICIDE

If to add a count to civilization's indictment of war is to serve humanity, then testimony which discredits the theory of war as a "biological necessity" may be discussed under the head of social service. Such testimony is submitted by Will Irwin, the war correspondent, through the columns of the New York Tribune. Writing from the battle field of northern France, he tells of a growing conviction among all classes, soldiers as well as civilians, in "the more civilized nations of Western Europe" that "war doesn't pay, never can pay again, because of its effect on human breeding." He asserts that in the brief period between July, 1914, and July, 1915, this idea, hardly considered before, has been brought home to these nations with a staggering impact.

Mr. Irwin has talked with "British officers and British Tommies, with English ladies of fashion and English housewives, with French deputies and French cabmen, and in all minds alike I find the same idea fixed—namely, "What is to become of the French race and the British race, yes, and the German race if this thing keeps up?" Before the war, he says, "only a few advanced scholars knew that war is a backward step in evolution," but now "the people of the workshops, the cottages, and the farms" know it. Before the war this was "a new, obscure, and perhaps rather discredited theory, which even Norman Angell's peace classic, The Great Illusion, touched on only briefly and 'rather hazily.' The only man Mr. Irwin knows who has stated the issue squarely "is Chancellor David Starr Jordan, of Stanford University, and Jordan has tried in vain, it seems to me, for a large hearing."

Those who argue that war leads to the survival of the fittest, says Mr. Irwin, "begin with the fallacy of assuming that a race has the same rules of life as an individual." He admits that in the most primitive stages of warfare it may have been true that the weakest were killed and the strongest survived to propagate the race. But:

From the moment when man invented bows and arrows and other weapons which killed at a distance, all that began to change. With the invention of gunpowder it changed still more; with the great improvement of artillery it changed most of all. To-day, a squad of French soldiers stands at a crossroads. In that squad is one fine young fellow, well-brained, well-muscled, capable of great things if his life be spared, capable also of being father to a strong generation. Beside him stands an undersized dolt, who has barely passed the medical examiners. A German gunner five miles away gets the range from an aeroplane and drops a shell among these Frenchmen, killing half of them. "A cannon," as the Chinese Minister at Brussels gravely informed his colleagues, just before the German invasion, "has no eyes." The young genius is just as likely to be killed as the dolt—no more, no less. There is no "natural selection" at the front nowadays.

Or if there is, continues Mr. Irwin, "it works the wrong way":

I take it for granted that, in a general way, the bravest are the best, physically and spiritually. Now, in this war of machinery, this meat-mill, it is the bravest who lead the charges and attempt the daring feats, and, correspondingly, the loss is greatest among those bravest.

So much when the army gets to the line, but in the conscript countries, like France and Germany, there is a process of selection in picking the army by which the best—speaking in general terms—go out to die, while the weakest remain. The undersized, the undermuscled, the underbrained, the men twisted by hereditary deformity or devitalized by hereditary disease—they remain at home to propagate the breed. The rest—all the rest—go out to take chances.

Passing on to "still another hideous fact in this accumulation of hideous facts," he says:

As modern conscript armies are organized, it is the youngest men who sustain the heaviest loss—the men who are not yet fathers. And from the point of view of the race, that is, perhaps, the most melancholy fact of all.

All the able-bodied men of France between the ages of nineteen and forty-five are in the ranks. But in neither the French Army nor the German do the older men take many chances with death. The fighting age, as E——, a British officer once said to me, is the athletic age. At about that early period of life when the sprinter finds that he can no longer do ten seconds, when the baseball player goes back to the minors, when the champion pugilist discovers that youth will be served, a man begins to deteriorate as a soldier. He has no longer that last ounce of physical force for a supreme effort; his physical flaws begin to tell under hardship; finally, he loses the reckless courage of youth. This is well understood by all military authorities.

These European conscript armies are arranged in classes according to age, and the younger classes are the men who do most of the actual fighting. The men in their late thirties or their forties, the "territorials," guard the lines, garrison the towns, generally attend to the business of running up the supplies. When we come to gather the statistics of this war we shall find that an overwhelming majority of the dead were less than thirty years old, and probably that the majority were under twenty-five. Now, the territorial of forty or forty-five has usually given to the state as many children as he is going to give, while the man of twenty-five or under has usually given the state no children at all. It is a brutal fact that it would be better for the future of any race if the process were reversed, if the men more than forty years old had to endure the process of mortality and the men of twenty were spared.

Mr. Irwin estimates that if the war continues through next winter France will have lost at least a million men "either killed or so badly mutilated that they may be counted out of the history of the race," and this million will be made up of the very flower of the race on the male side. In Germany, with her larger population, the same thing is happening on an even larger scale. "Her losses must have been as heavy as France's in proportion to her population—probably heavier."

To such facts as these, says Mr. Irwin, "your Bernhardt would probably answer that he was thinking in terms of races; that in war the stronger races survive, the weaker perish; and the whole human breed profits thereby." That may have been true once, he admits, but not now:

When the European races were first building, they met and conquered several inferior peoples. I imagine that Attila's Huns were a race decidedly inferior to the Franks, who annihilated them. But there is no such difference among the six great civilized, modern nations who are fighting out this war in Western Europe. Grant for the sake of argument that Germany is the superior nation, the coming race; yet any reasonable pro-German must admit that the margin of superiority is very small indeed. Grant also that Germany wins overwhelmingly and gains the "place in the sun." No one is going to win overwhelmingly in this war, but grant it. She would probably, could she measure it, find her stock reduced below the standard of the "lowest," the most "inferior" race of her enemies as that race stood before the war. The "lower," the "inferior," races would go still further back; and we should find the blood of all Europe thinned, the physical and mental standards of all Europe lowered. As a matter of fact, that has already happened, to a certain extent, with the worst of this war, possibly, yet to come. It was only a year or so before the war that Bernhardt put forth his "biological necessity," his "survival of the fittest" nonsense. No man was ever so quickly or so thoroughly proved a fool.

Because England has not adopted conscription, the case of that country is different, but "it works out toward the same end." We read:

Never before in the world was there such a volunteer army as Britain is raising now. The number of men from the British Isles under arms and ready to fight is perhaps two and a half millions. And here, even more than in the conscript countries, the process is selective. Those who have volunteered are characteristically the best young men of Britain for physical and moral force.

Proportionately at least, the upper and middle classes in England have sustained the heaviest losses, says Mr. Irwin:

The upper class and the upper middle class were first to respond to the call of England. In the early days of the war they took service anywhere—in the corps of officers, in the army service corps, and in the ranks. And of the seventy thousand who retreated from Mons in August, the one hundred and twenty thousand who held the line at Ypres in October, comparatively few survive. Later, England began making subalterns, or second lieutenants, of her "gentlemen" class.

The traditions of the British army are such that the subaltern must take the greatest chances of all. The life of a subaltern on the line is as short as that of an artillery horse. Great family after great family has lost all its male heirs. By the end of March fifteen major titles were already extinct. An English marquis and a plain Warwickshire Tommy have spoken to me of the situation in almost identical terms. "What are we going to do for gentlemen if this thing keeps up?" they said. By what is happening to the aristocracy the Britisher measures what is happening to the whole race.—The Literary Digest, August 7, 1915.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST "MORMONS"

The plans of the National Reform Association supported by a big majority of local ministers to make Kansas City the battle ground of a determined fight against the ever-increasing aggressions of "Mormon" influence in Jackson County, were launched yesterday afternoon at a meeting of the executive committee in charge of the movement and was held at the offices of the church federation.

Reverend Doctor J. M. Wylie presided at the meeting at which Doctor James Martin, general superintendent of the national association, was present and gave an outline of his plan to make the series of mass meetings to be held here during the week of October 3 a death blow to the activities of the sect which he characterizes "the country's great menace."

"MORMONS" WANT JACKSON COUNTY

Doctor Martin informed the committee a "Mormon" official within the last month called on all the followers of Joseph Smith to aid with money and influence in making Jackson County the "Mormon" stronghold of the United States, a condition which is part of one of the prophecies of the church. It is to combat this movement the church leaders of Kansas City are planning the series of anti-"Mormon" mass meetings.

A list of the mass meetings decided on at yesterday's meeting follows:

October 3—Saint Paul's Reform Church, Thirty-sixth and Walnut, Reverend E. M. Evans, pastor, 8 p. m.

October 4—Independent Christian church, Doctor E. H. Combs, pastor, 8 p. m.

AT PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

October 5—Auspices of Young People's League, Central Presbyterian Church, U. S., 912 Harrison Street, Doctor C. R. Nisbet, pastor, 8 p. m.

October 7—Howard Memorial M. E. Church, Linwood Boulevard and Charlotte Street, Doctor Ches-teen Smith, pastor, 8 p. m.

One meeting also will be held in Independence. The date and meeting place have not yet been named. Senator Frank Cannon, Doctor James Martin and other men prominent in the anti-"Mormon" movement, will be among the notable speakers at the series of mass meetings.—Kansas City Post, September 18, 1915.

A CALL FOR PULPIT PURISTS

A plea for dignified speech in the pulpit is voiced briefly but emphatically by the editor of The Continent (Presbyterian, Chicago). He is willing to admit that a minister must be interesting, and that "it is far better that souls be won by the utmost cheapness of speech than that they should not be won." But, he declares, "religion is not the cheapest part of a man, and the appeal that needs cheap phrasing can hardly be the best or the necessary appeal." That Christian dignity which should characterize all "might well appear first among ministers and with them chiefly in the pulpit." So the obvious question arises:

Shall a minister move along the borderland of the language which mothers train their boys not to use? Shall he be colloquial when he stands in his high place of power and privilege? There are some words which are evidently trying to get into good society—low-born words, cheaply constructed words; shall the minister become their sponsor? Shall he not, on the other hand, recognize the aristocracy of words and use in his pulpit and even in his private speech the words which have a right in good verbal society?

There has recently come to hand a book meant in utmost seriousness by an earnest man, dealing with grave problems of our social order. Yet we are perfectly sure that part of its influence will be lost by the readiness of the writer to be what in a smaller man would certainly be called "smart." He urges ministers to get on to their jobs; he patronizes Uncle Sam when he refers to the Government; churches must get down to brass tacks; we must all quit our monkeying.

It is all quite comparable to the easy way of a minister who calls out to "that bunch of fellows" in the gallery or in the back row to do this or sing that, and who declares that at the "eatfest next Friday night we will all have a corking good time," and that the trouble with Christians is that they will not get down on their marrow-bones to God, and that he would rather see a man giggle his way into hell than whine his way into heaven—all of these, alas, actual quotations. This is what we mean by helping verbal interlopers into good society. It is poor business for one who is set to lead his fellows into the high, true life of the sons of God. Let his speech gather force and familiarity in some less costly way.—The Literary Digest, January 2, 1915.

"Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief." Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the vastness of the universe in comparison with the insignificance of this globe, has sometimes shaken my reason for the faith that is in me; but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the gospel of Jesus Christ must be divine reality. The sermon on the mount can not merely be a human production. This belief enters into the very depths of my conscience.—Daniel Webster.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Library

One of the urgent needs of the Children's Home is a collection of books adapted to children, from the smallest child to a youth of sixteen. Those who have observed know well that nothing has a more lasting effect than the impression made by the books read in childhood. Who of us does not remember the characters presented for our consideration in our first storybook? How real, and how faultless they seem! We see the faults of heroes with whom we became acquainted in later life, but these former ones always remain to us the highest and best, and to imitate them is ever our highest ideal. If they were pure our aspirations are for purity, if they were lawless and abandoned, we are inclined to lead such a life.

Great care should be exercised in the selection of books, and as the children have not judgment to select, careful discernment should be exercised by those who choose for them. Therefore a strict censorship should be maintained over what goes into the children's hands. To entertain should not be the only or leading consideration, but the happy combination of instruction and entertainment is the desirable condition. It is impossible to instruct properly or effectually without entertaining, but to entertain, amuse or interest without instruction is time and opportunity utterly wasted. We should seek to please but be sure that the pleasure given shall impress or teach some elevating lesson.

Children should be placed in pleasant and agreeable surroundings, and no good thing, possible to provide, withheld from them, but the lessons of life calculated to make them truly great, unselfish, and useful to the world should not be neglected. Then will they be prepared to meet life in all its varied phases, and then whether winds are fair or adverse their life bark will sail towards the haven of peace. It has been aptly said:

"One ship sails east, and one sails west
By the self-same wind that blows
'Tis not the gale, but the set of the sail
That determines where it goes."

Books should be selected upon the same rule that we select friends. Some of our acquaintances are selected without reservation and we trust them completely, feeling safe in their presence and under their influence; some we accept with reservation or hesitancy, feeling that benefit can only be derived by their association if we exercise discretion in considering the influence they exert. Their worth is determined by a comparison with the friends we trust. Others we reject absolutely, convinced that contact with them is not desirable, but dangerous.

Our book friends stand in exactly the same relation to us. Some should be trusted without hesitation and their teaching considered safe in every respect. This class of book friends will be recognized as the inspired textbooks containing the word of God. The merit of the second class of book friends should be determined by comparison with the first; while the third class should not be admitted into our collection, and especially not be read by our children.

The effort of our assistant matron, Sister Helen Robinson, to institute a plan through which every child leaving the home shall be provided with a set of church textbooks, and to incite such an interest in their minds that they will appreciate and highly prize them, is commendable and should be encouraged by everyone able to further the purpose.

The home has been encouraged with a prospect of obtaining a suitable library, but so far it has not materialized. There may be many suitable books to be found in disuse that would be of service in this way if gathered together. Who can disclose their whereabouts and subject them to our examination and criticism?

HOME INFLUENCE

Two little sisters recently left the home to return to their friends. When they came they had not learned to dwell together in peace but would frequently fly at each other, scratching and fighting. They seemed to consider this a special privilege because they were sisters, for they did not treat others in like manner. But this did not last long. They soon learned they were expected to be as kind and polite to each other as to anyone else. If they carry this lesson with them through life they will have gained a great deal from their brief stay at the home. On leaving, the older one said to their kind friends and teachers at the home, "We'll never, never forget the good things you have taught us here."

One of the treasures they carried away with them was a set of Bible cards. These cards have engaged the interest of the children at the home for a number of months, and they have made quite a study of many of the Bible characters mentioned thereon. Each child old enough to read them has been presented with a set of these cards by those in charge of the home, the expense having been met by the sale of other sets of these cards. The children have helped in disposing of them.

At times a Bible character is announced as the subject of questions and answers at the daily service, which takes place in the dining room each morning just after breakfast. Kneeling by the chairs in which they have been seated at the tables, the children are led in prayer by father, or by some other grown person upon whom he has called. Each morning two or three volunteers from among the children are asked to follow in prayer after the opening one and there are always some who are ready to respond,—different ones each morning.

At times some childish expressions might seem amusing, but the earnestness of the youthful supplicants would make up for all shortcomings. During mother's long illness many prayers were offered for her by the children. One prayed that she might get well "and never have to go to bed again."

Following the prayer time there is a reading from the Scriptures or from the Young People's History of the Church, or perhaps this time is given to the questions and answers concerning the Bible character of whom they have been studying.

Saturday is the great Sunday school lesson day, when Sister Helen sees that the children of all grades have the lessons prepared for the Sabbath Day following. In the morning the beginners and primaries have their turn, in the afternoon the juniors and intermediates and in the evening the seniors. No children come to Sunday school with lessons better prepared than they.

Little Hattie, not quite two years old, when asked concerning what she learned at Sunday school said, "Which Sunday school—at the church or in the sewing room?"

Of late Hattie and Clyde, not quite three, have been contented little companions at Sunday school, but there was a time when Clyde could not be persuaded to stay without Sister Helen. One day she offered him a stick of candy, to be given when he should reach home, if he would stay without her. He said, "I don't care anything about the candy! I would rather be with you!"

It was made a standing offer, and soon there came a time when he permitted her to leave him in the little class circle. When he reached home he said, "I was good! Now may I have the candy?" And the candy was forthcoming.

To Locate John L. Pointer

A certain good woman in this city is weighed down in heart with a great sorrow which it is just possible some attention by the HERALD may alleviate.

The good woman's husband, Mr. John L. Pointer, left the city of Phoenix, Arizona, July 11, 1914, for Oakland, California, and has not been heard from since. His condition of health was such at the time that his physicians affirm that it is quite probable that he could have been taken in by some sanitarium and not even be able to remember his own name and home.

He is a carpenter by trade, and had received a severe wound on the head in an accident while employed upon a large building here, and this seemed to have left him perfectly rational except at brief periods of time when there would come a blank upon the mind which was ominous. The faithful lady, Mrs. Pointer, is entirely alone in her anguish and distress occasioned by the awful uncertainty and suspense (for it would be better to learn of his death than to be held in such suspense), and now after the lapse of fifteen months she waits with mingled hope and despair, and is entirely without tidings.

There may be small hope that any of the HERALD readers could assist this worthy and needy woman in such a search with any degree of good prospect, but we do not know. We here give the man's description, and we hope that California Saints especially, and particularly of Oakland, may be alert for any clew which could so greatly relieve the situation.

Mr. John L. Pointer, if living, is in his thirty-fourth year. Weight, when well, one hundred and sixty-five, at the time of leaving Phoenix he weighed one hundred and thirty-eight. Height, five feet, five and one half inches. Has curly hair, slightly gray at the temples. Had worked in Oakland before, and expected to work there again if able. Records of railroad company show that his baggage was delivered in Oakland on July 13, 1914. Mr. Pointer was a violinist, the instrument which he took with him was number 1776, made in Germany. He had in his pocket the address of a real estate man of San Diego, California, with whom he had transacted some business.

Any information directed to the writer will be very much appreciated.

Curtis-Roberts Debate

Just a few lines concerning the discussion at Carsonville, Michigan, August 3 to 10, consisting of twelve sessions, held with W. G. Roberts of the nonprogressive wing of the Christian Church. Three propositions were discussed, church propositions and the Book of Mormon. The attendance was good throughout, finally reaching to over eleven hundred the last night.

Brother O. J. Hawn had been holding services at this place, which seemed to stir up the Campbellites, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. John Tarzwell, who got in touch with W. G. Roberts who submitted propositions for debate, which were accepted and finally debated. All this was for the purpose of injuring our work if possible, by misrepresenting us before the people, but their efforts have failed as shown by the results that have followed.

Since the challenge was made, and just a few days before the debate started, Brother Hawn baptized eleven persons into the Latter Day Saint Church. Two more were baptized during the discussion and fifteen more since. The next day after the discussion one brother gave me five hundred dollars tithing to help the church work along, which I turned over to the bishop's agent of this district.

In view of these facts it is somewhat amusing to read the account of the discussion as published in the Apostolic Review of August 24, 1915, by E. G. Rockliff, who acted as moderator for Roberts. We extract from this report the following: Evidence was to hand of good accomplished by the debate: some who were 'Mormons' have quit; many who leaned towards 'Mormonism' have got straightened out, and it will be exceedingly hard work for 'Mormonism' to make converts here now."

Not a single individual has left the church as is here claimed. We would like to have the name or names of such individuals. Who are they, Mr. Rockliff? He says that "many who leaned towards 'Mormonism' have got straightened out"; that is right, but they got so straightened out that they called for baptism, and Brother Hawn baptized five more and Brother Grice baptized ten more, making twenty-eight in all since the challenge was made, and seventeen of these since the debate started. If any have joined the Christian ranks since the discussion we haven't heard of it. Yet this is reported by Christians as a great victory.

The debate was well attended by the Saints, whom we left rejoicing in the gospel of Christ.

Robert's stock in trade was as usual, slander, abuse and misrepresentation. He gave his case away when he admitted that they did not expect to make any converts to their faith from the discussion. In this he has not been disappointed.

There are several more that are very favorable to our work and the discussion has increased their interest in our church.

Hoping, praying, laboring, and debating for the final triumph of the gospel of Christ, I remain,

Still on the firing line,

Editors Herald; I had a peculiar experience while tracting here three weeks ago. A woman calling herself a Catholic told me she would not listen to any other religion. I answered that if she had been raised a heathen and refused to hear anything else, she would have remained a heathen. I obeyed her hasty order to leave the yard.

A large man heretofore unobserved, and no relation to the woman, followed me into the street and knocked me down. I did not know his intention until I regained consciousness, and saw the blood upon my clothing and literature. This man paid a fine of ten dollars, and I continued the protracted meeting with a black eye, swollen lip and stiff neck.

Your colaborer,

Editors Herald: The death of Elder William H. Kelley, the late president of the Quorum of Twelve brought sadness to our hearts. It is like one of our brethren in the flesh passing away, notwithstanding we had anticipated his demise for some time. Just before leaving Lamoni we bade each other the last farewell, as neither of us anticipated meeting again on this mundane sphere. I can assure you it was a sad occasion which will not pass from memory soon.

Brother Kelley and the writer had been associated together during thirty-six years, and intimately so. During this time we have lived as neighbors; occupied together in the Quorum of Twelve twenty-six years; traveled as missionaries, and thus I was given ample opportunity to learn the true worth of the man. A more generous-hearted person never lived on God's footstool than said brother. He would, as the saying is, divide the last piece of bread with his fellow worker, or any other person whom he thought was in need. The latchstring hung on the outside, and all were welcome who were worthy.

He was blessed with an extraordinary mind, far beyond the majority of his fellows. He had strong perceptive powers and a keen discernment. A good counselor, he weighed matters carefully before passing upon them. In the time of my early acquaintance with him, he was considered one of the ablest defenders of our faith. I once heard our late President Joseph Smith say of him, "I once heard him in debate, and never heard a public speaker present arguments with such convincing power and force as he did." When put to the test, I never saw any one display more courage and human grit, even to the time of his last sickness. He seemingly did not know what fear was.

On the Sunday following his death, as a mark of respect for our late brother, memorial services were held in the old historic Temple at Kirtland, Ohio. A large concourse of people were in attendance. The speakers on the occasion were U. W. Greene and the writer.

His demise caused a wave of sadness to pass over the Central Eastern Mission over which he had presided for many years. His many sacrifices, and over fifty years of ministerial labor in the interests of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, will not soon be forgotten by his colaborers.

A prince in Israel has fallen, but the change will be most glorious for him, as his spirit is now at rest in the paradise of God, waiting to come forth in a glorious body with the glorified Saints, with the King of kings, who will reward with everlasting life all who have been true to their trust and faithful in his service.

Peace be to his ashes. And our prayer is that our heavenly Father will comfort the sad hearts of his loved ones who are left to mourn his loss.

Editors Herald: Having been driven from church by priestcraft we began meetings in a schoolhouse where we held ten days, then school began and we had to give that up right when our meetings were reaping members each evening. Having no other place to hold forth at the time and being a little homesick, I went home for a week's visit.

When I returned a young man kindly offered us the use of his roomy house. Two rooms were turned into one large one by throwing open the double doors. Notwithstanding the break in the meetings, the interest continued, and from the beginning till our close last evening we baptized twenty-one. Two more think they will be baptized soon and several others are interested.

As ever,

Editors Herald: I am striving to the best of my ability to live the life of a Latter Day Saint, but it seems dark at times. I pray to God for light, and feel his Holy Spirit with me many times. I hope the time will soon come when we can hear the gospel preached again. It needs some one with the Spirit to labor with the people; with the help of God we can do much, but without this power we are nothing. This is the greatest desire of my heart, to work and pray day by day, and follow in Christ's footsteps as best I know how, though I feel at fault and stagger at times.

The Lord has blessed me and mine many times, more than I have been worthy of, and I have seen many great things accomplished under the power of God. I have a great desire to work for the good of this great and marvelous cause, which has been restored in these last days. I can see things being fulfilled which the record tells us of that would come forth.

Hoping and trusting we may all hold on fast to the end, I am,

Your brother in bonds,

G. E. WHITEHOUSE.

GLENTANA, MONTANA, September 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have now been Latter Day Saints for more than a year. I have never had the pleasure of hearing a sermon preached by one of our elders. My husband had heard a number of sermons before we met, also before he became a Saint. We wish to have this opportunity somewhere near our new home. We expect to leave our homestead here in Montana, and live in Washington, on the Samish Island.

If any brother or sister living near there would kindly answer this letter, either in the HERALD, or to me personally, it will be greatly appreciated by us both. Address me at Samish Island, Washington.

Ever praying for an opportunity of being among the Saints, to learn and strengthen our faith, I remain,

Your sister,

MRS. ROY P. DAVIS.

Extracts from Letters

Sister S. M. Burgett, of Nevada, Iowa, writes as follows: "Our last Religio lesson was on love. Have we the love of Christ in our hearts? the love that Jesus manifested? He helped men in all conditions of life, and was found laboring among the poor and the sinners. Let us try to give our all to assist in this work. The time is here for us to make sacrifices. Let us all get busy and give amounts small as well as large and our church debt will vanish and there will be plenty to help the poor and spread the gospel."

The following has been received from Elder Thomas Jones, of the British Isles Mission, written at Exeter, England, under date of September 16: "I may say that I am at Exeter now, battling for a couple of months. Have done considerable tracting and open air work, with fair interest. There is much prejudice here regarding 'Mormonism,' as it is termed. I have had listening to me, the notorious Jarman, the 'ex-Mormon' priest. He is very straight yet, and is eighty-four years old, but seems to be getting partially paralyzed. We have five new Sunday school scholars added since I have been here, and several new listeners at the meeting place on Sunday evening as a result of the open-air preaching. Many seem interested for a time, yes, riveted to the spot. But it seems that the gigantic monster called Popularity is too much for them to face. Prejudice seems to be carried in the arms of Popularity, to the defeat of the truth. But God's word shall not return to him void. However, I am hoping to see some come out and serve God more fully."

Elder W. H. Greenwood, Manchester, England: "I am happy to say that we are well in health, though the experiences that we are passing through are very troublesome. The conditions here are becoming more and more strained each day. . . . But we trust that we shall be able to keep up the interest in the work. All we can say is that we are doing our best to that end."

A. E. Warr, Bay Minette, Alabama, writes as follows: "Our reunion was held at Dicksonville, Alabama, September 18 to 26. Speakers were F. M. Slover, E. C. Shelley, A. G. Miller, the writer, F. A. Smith, D. M. Rudd. The week passed rapidly. The reunion was called a success. Six were baptized. Attendance from a distance was better than formerly, and we hope to hold a reunion indeed some day, as the reunion spirit seems to be growing. The committee was continued and arrangements are under way for a reunion at the same place next year."

Andrew Howard, Richton, Mississippi: "We wish an elder to come here to preach as soon as can be arranged. I have tried to get an elder and have failed. Let me know when you are coming and I will meet you at Richton, Mississippi."

News from Missions

At the Exposition

In regard to our final talks with those mentioned in our last letter, will say that the gentleman of whom I wrote saying he would give all he possessed if he knew the truth, came back just before he was leaving the city, asked me for our card and address, and said we would hear from him. I said we would be glad to hear any time, and he bade us both good-by with a very hearty handshake.

The public speaker of New York is a charming lady and was coming out twice to hear Elder Pitt preach, but being a very busy woman, with so many occupying her time, she was unable to come, but has the church address in many cities she expects to visit. She said she enjoyed our talks very much, and our views on the different points. She has our literature, and I am to send her a couple of our books. I had told her of Brother Rushton, and desired she might meet him, and she was delighted and made arrangements for him to share part of the time she was to address the suffragists, but he not knowing of the arrangement we had made, did not get here in time. She was so anxious to meet him however, that we arranged for him to meet her at the ferry as she came in. She enjoyed the visit with him immensely, and with Sister Holling's efforts, whom she also met and was delighted with, we hope for good results. This lady is returning again to San Francisco for a short time before she departs for home. She came one evening and said to Elder Pitt, What impresses me so much with you people is, I believe you have soul, and that you are honest and sincere in your work, and that is so seldom found. Although she has been away but a couple of days, we miss her sweet presence.

An old gentleman came and looked at the painting of Joseph the Martyr, and said, You may be surprised to know that my father knew that man well. I said, I am pleased to know that, and shall be pleased to know what kind of a man he was, according to your father's statement. He replied, Well I do not belong to any church and neither did my father, but he always said Joseph Smith was a fine young man. He always liked him and spoke well of the family. This old gentleman, aged about seventy-eight, I should judge, is a librarian. He told me many interesting things. I asked him to be seated and rest. He gladly accepted and we talked for an hour or more.

He said he believed in being liberal and broad and charitable, and that in his library the Book of Mormon and other samples of our church literature is found. Some people have come to him and asked why he allows that "Mormon" bible in his library, and he explains to them that it is not a bible, that it is not held as such, but is a good book for everyone to read. He seemed favorable to our work. I asked him why he did not come in and enjoy the work with us and he answered, How can I know whether it is the right one or not? I told him to ask the Lord and it would be made known to him, if he asked in sincerity.

He told me he was interested some in Spiritualism, and asked me what I thought of it. I said, Well you tell me some of your experiences in it first; which he did. And when he finished I observed: Now we do not tell you like some other people might that there is nothing to it. There is a power there, but one you want to be careful of, for we do not consider it is from the right source. I explained to him that it is recorded that Satan and his agents will be able to answer all at the same time, I asked them to ex- were possible they would deceive the very elect. I asked him if those experiences have given him rest to his soul and a lasting satisfaction, and he said, No, they have not.

I told him the gospel story and he had tears in his eyes as he listened attentively, and I remarked, when he was about to go, Now you think it all over, and try to make up your mind to obey what Christ has commanded, and you will be ready then for the change that is coming soon for you. He shook hands good-by, and said he would consider all I had said to him. He took literature and promised to read it and study. He was born in Kirtland, Ohio, but left there when about six years of age.

A rather pleasant hour was spent one afternoon with a very large gentleman, about six feet two inches tall, and weighing about two hundred and twenty-five pounds. He had a pleasant face. I am describing him in the hopes that some one in the State of Iowa may possibly be able to place him and know his position regarding our work. He came along smiling and said, Well, what have you here? I was talking to five or six others, and answered, We have nothing new here, simply the old gospel of Christ. Come back to the old paths, walk therein, and ye shall find rest to your souls. He said, Well, go ahead and tell me what you believe. The other parties had asked questions, and not being able to answer all at the same time, I asked them to excuse me if I answered him first. They seemed pleased to listen, and after I talked a few minutes, he said, Oh, I don't believe in God. What kind of a God made the cyclones, the earthquakes, the tornadoes, the wars, the snakes and other miserable things? I let him go on past that part of the conversation, for I was hardly able to take it up.

I said, when he finished, Do you know, you are not half so bad as you appear to be from your remarks? He said, Don't you think so? I said, No, I can guarantee that you are better than many so-called religionists. That pleased him a little. He asked me what made me think so, and I replied, We believe in discernment to-day as one of the gifts of the gospel, and many times I can tell what church one is a member of. Is that so. Well what church do I belong to? This conversation took place before he had told me he did not believe in God. I said, You don't belong to any. He laughed heartily, and returned, Well, look here now, I used to be a member of a church years ago. I had a lady friend, and in order to stand in with her family better I joined, which one was it? My audience had grown to quite a number by this time, and of course I did not want to make a mistake, and unhesitatingly said, You were a Methodist. This amused him greatly, and he said, You are all right, that is a fact. How did you know it?

Well, I explained the gospel to him for an hour, the others listening, and then he said, Well, now, I am going to tell you something. I am the superintendent of schools in a large city in Iowa, and I know of your people, and I will say this: they are among the very finest people I have ever known. I thanked him. He replied, I am not complimenting people, but that is a fact, and further let me tell you, there are only two churches in the world that could interest me at all: one is the Seventh-day Adventist, and the other the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He took our literature and our card, asked me where we were from, and said when leaving he was very glad he had met us.

Another pleasant half hour was spent in conversation with a minister of the Church of England. He came and looked at the painting of Joseph Smith and said, You may be surprised to know that my grandfather knew Joseph and Hyrum Smith. I said I would be glad to hear what was told him regarding them. He answered: My father always told me that his father declared that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were fine men, though continually persecuted, and that they never had anything to do with polygamy. That, he said, is what my people have always said about those men. I did not like to ask him where he resided, yet I would like to have known, for reference for others. But I am sure we can appreciate such statements, especially from a clergyman, one who has no interest except justice in the matter.

Have also had three rather interesting experiences with Catholic priests. One came along and said, When was your church organized? I replied: The Church of Jesus Christ was organized in 1830, the gospel being restored to earth again. He smiled and said, Rather late was it not, for the Church of Christ to come to the salvation of the race? I answered: It may appear so, but it is recorded in Revelation, "And I saw another angel fly," etc. I said, That is one of the points wherein we differ with the Catholics. He rejoined, You most assuredly do, for our church continued all the way down. Well, I said, if it did, and I don't deny that yours did, you have not the everlasting gospel, for it was up in heaven, or the authority rather. He was not pleased at all, as you can imagine, to have anyone talk to him about the Bible, etc. I said, further: Now just a minute (several were in the exhibit and heard our conversation), what do you claim about that rock your church is built upon? He answered, Peter is the rock. I said, You are sure? Yes, Peter is the rock, and upon this rock I will build my church. I said, Well, I am sorry, for if you really contend that, just a couple verses lower it is recorded that Christ says to Peter, "Get behind me Satan." So you see, according to your argument and your own statement, where it places you. And besides, Peter was not fully converted at that time, and so I can say to you, Repent and be baptized by immersion for the remission of your sins, etc. He was in a great hurry about that time. The people said, How could you talk to a priest? And I said, They are the very ones I enjoy talking with, for it is a great evidence to me, when I see how wonderful is the effect of the words of God and Christ when used by one so incapable as myself. Then I explained how it is recorded that the ordinances have been changed, the everlasting covenant broken, etc. This priest took some of our literature and I asked him to read it carefully.

Two other priests came at different times, and were the jolly kind. One listened for about ten minutes, and was all smiles. I thought I would take advantage of his good nature to try to do what I could at his reformation, and I said, You must repent and stop drinking and smoking (for really both habits could be very easily detected). I told him we believed in our ministers as ambassadors for Christ living lives resembling as nearly as possible the pure, clean life of our Savior, and what he would expect them to do as his representatives, not only our ministers but all our members, who are trying to follow in his steps. He smiled and said, You are a pretty good girl. I answered, No, I am not so good as I should be, but I want you if you are representing yourself as an ambassador for Christ to live as you should. He took our literature, "Open letter to the clergy," and "The Apostasy and the Restoration."

We can usually discern what tract would be best for the parties who come along. If I see those who look like Mormons I get ready the "Corner stones of the Utah church," the "Church in court" and "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy." When the Catholics come I have "The Apostasy and the Restoration" ready, and for those of other beliefs we have the "Latter Day Saints—Who are they?" This we find a fine tract for just such work as we are in here. It is condensed, plain as to our position, and very interesting. So many are anxious to know our position, and yet do not want to gather up much literature to carry.

One pleasant experience of Sister Holling's may be of interest. A very fine couple, a lady and gentleman of Ohio, came and she stopped and remarked as she looked at the painting of Emma Smith, Well, there is the picture of my Aunt Emma! Sister Holling inquired and learned from her that she is not a member of either church. She said that it was untrue that Joseph Smith had more than one wife, that Aunt Emma was his only wife. The evidences from those not in the church are pleasing. They gave us their address, and we hope to have the pleasure of meeting them again.

Perhaps the very most interesting and pleasing experience was the acquaintance of two Philadelphia ladies. They came and sat down to rest. I did not like to burden them at once with what I had to say, so talked of the fair, and their trip west. Then I said, Before you leave I want to tell you what we believe and teach. One especially was deeply interested and the other became so later on, and they visited with us many times. Finally, during the last week of our exhibit, they came and spent most of the afternoon of each day. They kept saying, Oh, how we wish we had met you people before! This is grand! This is what the world is starving for!—and many such remarks. They are reading our literature and we have the address of each, and are going to write to them and tell them more of the gospel. They came two afternoons to meet Brother Rushton, but were obliged to leave the city just the day before he came. They said the last afternoon, Oh, we are so glad we came to this exposition! for here we met you people. They said that Sister Holling and I were certainly a team in talking, and they seemed to enjoy every minute at our exhibit, and listened attentively to all we had to say to others who came. We feel certain that when they reach home, and our Brother Walter Smith and Brother Hoxie call upon them they will be earnest in this matter and perhaps come into the work.

The last month has been a very busy one. We both have been in constant service at the exhibit. Many have expressed themselves as having learned more in talking with us than ever before, and say they are pleased to know the truth, so they will be able to distinguish it, and help the church in its good work. Some people have said, The world is starving for just the plain gospel of Christ, and you people certainly present it in its simplicity, and it sounds good. We tell them that Christ said, My sheep know my voice, and a stranger they will not follow; and sometimes I relate our experiences at Damascus Gate, in Jerusalem, when we used to stand and watch the shepherds as they visited and parted from each other. Many times there would be two or three hundred sheep together, and as the shepherds separated and each gave a call or a whistle, the sheep all scattered and each followed its shepherd, for they knew the shepherd's voice. And so to-day, I tell the people, after you have been around and heard the one hundred and one different religious beliefs represented here and you come and say "This is the best I have heard," we say that is because you recognize the voice of the shepherd, his word, and if you will study and investigate you shall know of the doctrine.

One pleasant, bright woman from Kansas came and listened, and when I had talked quite a while with her, she said, Really, I feel sure this is the true church, and I have felt it was for some time. I said: You should obey then, if you feel that way. She understands our position perfectly, and has heard some of our ministers. She said she thought she would join, she and her husband. I gave them the church address in Los Angeles, for they expect to be there until Christmas time. We hope they will move forward and obey.

Brother Rushton left yesterday after only a day here, and we can say that his association with the Saints and friends during the time we have been together has accomplished a vast amount of good for the cause in the many places we have visited, and we trust that we may have him with us again soon here in San Francisco. We are happy in our work,—and it is work,—for we both sense the responsibility placed upon us in this wonderful privilege and opportunity of getting this work before the public, and in having our position as a church better known throughout the world.

To illustrate how people come along from all parts of the world. One gentleman came, and as I commenced to explain he said, I know about this church: I know Mr. Waller of Hawaii. I said, Yes, he is of this church. He added: A very fine man indeed.

Elder Pitt is busy every hour, it seems. Sunday afternoon is the very busiest afternoon at the exhibit, for many attend the exposition that day and spend the afternoon in the education palace, so there is an opportunity to keep busy all the time. He preaches usually at Oakland in the evening and San Francisco in the morning, and explains the gospel each Sunday afternoon until 6 p. m. at the exhibit.

One little incident amused Brother and Sister Anthony very much. The other morning while in the city to meet the public lecturer, and while awaiting her arrival I stepped to the street, and as I looked, I saw a Church of England minister coming, and from force of habit, I was just about to step up and tell him, This is the Reorganized Church, headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa; but fortunately, I came to myself in time.

Best wishes to all from Brother Pitt and myself.

Your sister in the gospel,

ROSA PARKS PITT.

Western Nebraska and Black Hills

This finds the writer's companion and himself still on the famed prairies of the "Woolly West," near the boundary line which separates Wyoming from Nebraska.

The "dry" West has been noted this year for a rainfall the equal of which I question whether I ever witnessed in any other State or any other country. There are simply train loads of potatoes, which I dare say may be purchased in some localities for thirty cents a bushel if not less. Cabbage I think can be bought for about one half cent a pound.

Miserable windfall apples from the East bring one dollar a bushel here.

The homesteading opportunities of Nebraska are practically exhausted. There is some available land on the Wyoming side, but it is being rapidly culled and picked. I am always glad to help any of our people with information concerning any of these things, simply for the asking and a stamp for reply.

Rattlesnakes are quite numerous. Two have fallen victims to me this year. One I shot; the other I guillotined.

In the summer we motored to Hot Springs, which is in South Dakota, and noted for Wind Cave, its warm mineral springs and the soldiers' home, also soldiers' sanitarium. I preached the gospel in the city park and taught our message to the old soldiers. We tented at first in the valley at the north edge of the city. But answerable to a warning one evening, first by a delivery boy and soon afterwards repeated by the marshal, that our location would be flooded by a wall of water that was rolling down the canyon from above precipitated by a heavy rain, we hastily abandoned the cozy, sylvan spot and sped to higher ground. And when after a little while the swirling mass came down, carrying with it about six of eight bridges, we rejoiced that we had changed altitudes. There is nothing like coming up higher.

Next we encamped near the soldiers' home, which overlooks the city and defies the streams and freshets. We had in view to go farther north in the State, but floods and washouts forbade.

We found the houses mostly deserted on the way to and from there in South Dakota, due largely to drought. We got stuck once with our car in mud that those who are in a position to know said would stick chickens.

Quite a few of the Saints are looking toward Missouri. Some will come this year, or within three months, others later. And I am glad that they all are wise enough to talk of resuming there the same occupation they follow here—farming—instead of huddling on a little lot fifty by one hundred and fifty.

Will probably take a dash home in two or three weeks, where wife will likely remain for the winter.

I baptized one candidate a few days ago and feel that prospects are quite favorable at different points. Success to the missionary force everywhere and prosperity to the work of the Lord in general, is the heart's wish of the writer. My field address is Henry, Nebraska.

Wyoming

I have closed my work in this part of the State and am starting to the northeastern part to look after the work there. I hope to reach there sooner, but the work here was not in shape to leave. I succeeded in getting some good reliable members to take up the work here, and organized a Religio, and we finally organized a branch. These people should now be able to care for themselves, at least in part.

Brother G. C. Connelley will act as president while here, and H. H. Robinson will help the work. Brother Edwin P. Anderson was ordained a priest, and will carry on the work when there is no elder present. He is a studious man and not afraid to take hold and do what he can. Otto Anderson was ordained a deacon and will look after his part of the work. There were seven members present, and two more in the neighborhood who were not present, who will be enrolled on the branch records, who have been baptized at this place and not recorded elsewhere. There were five others present, recorded on other branches, who will place their membership here as soon as letters can be secured. Seven others whom we expected to be present and take part in the organization, live some distance away. We expect them to place their membership in this branch. There are others almost persuaded who will attend the meetings. There are twenty-five members of the Religio and it is in good working order, so we expect they will do well.

I visited Brother and Sister Zeager at Bosler, Wyoming, a while ago, and did some preaching there. My headquarters will be at Alva, Wyoming, for some time.

Yours for Zion's welfare,

J. M. STUBBART.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

A few of our resident elders who have lately returned from their missions are engaged in home affairs, and are giving well-appreciated service in the congregations of the Saints. Among these are Brethren Arber, Self, Hills, Hunt, Metcalf, and H. O. Smith.

The sad parting with loved ones who have been faithful soldiers of the cross, patient, tried and true, like Elders T. W. Chatburn and J. F. Pierce, and the afflictions and continued illness of some of our numbers, have been experiences that have elicited the deepest sympathies of the Saints. The obsequies of Elder L. A. Fowler, of Fourth Kansas City Branch, and H. Asbaugh, of Bennington Heights Branch, took place here during the past week also. Yet in the midst of all this there have come to us through faith and the gospel, joy, peace, and consolation, and continued confidence in the word of God.

The Lord is blessing his people with the spirit of renewed awakening, as evidenced by the zeal of our earnest young workers, and increased attendance at our Sunday morning, afternoon and midweek prayer meetings. The home department study, sewing and singing classes, also the aid society and Sanitarium Patronesses continue faithfully their work. The organ and orchestra music is inspiring and many attend and enjoy Sunday school and church services through its influence.

The elders who have from the pulpit ministered to the Saints recently and with the power of the Spirit to the edification of our people, are Brethren F. M. Smith, E. A. Smith, Joseph Luff, E. L. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, Joseph Arber, and W. A. Smith, together with Elders A. H. Parsons, T. J. Sheldon and M. H. Siegfried, who have continued in their interesting series of special discourses.

On the part of the Woman's Auxiliary, the betterment of church, home and school conditions is not for a day lost sight of by the many willing workers in their far-reaching and arduous service for the Master, and we give due credit to the faithful sisters of this organization who are taking such good care of the interest of the children who attend our public schools. The parent-teacher meetings are giving thorough and unflinching attention to matters pertaining to home and school interest.

The Sunday school and Religio are very busy, the former having an attendance last Sunday of eight hundred and forty-eight, and the Religio has been the means of developing several of its members for usefulness in the church.

The Sanitarium must not be forgotten, for on account of the excellent care given, several have been enabled to return to their homes very much improved in health of late, among them Sister James McKiernan and A. P. Free. Others were also convalescent.

Brother W. Danielson, formerly of the Utah church and who has recently united with us, has been ordained an elder. He and his oldest son Vernon, have shown much interest in the reform movement carried on by the National Reform Association, which institution, by every means possible, is attempting to drive polygamy from our land.

May the light of truth continue to break through, and the darkness of error disappear, is our sincere desire.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Cleveland, Ohio

Cleveland Branch is advancing. Good attendance the last few meetings. The Sunday school has had a record attendance. Since last report we have been visited by Elders Griffiths, Green and Russell. Brother Greene gave us his illustrated lecture on Palestine. Brother Griffiths took charge of two ordinations, E. A. Webbe being ordained an elder, and Brother Mehlisch a priest. Both have served many years as teachers. Our choir has not been heard from lately, but the orchestra is going to be a success. Brother Alma Thomas is stirring up the Religio to action. Sister Edna Mehlisch has started kindergarten work to interest the younger children while the older people better enjoy the meetings.

We have apparently much work to do in this city if we warn our neighbors and prepare ourselves before we flee to Zion.

FRANK C. WEBBE.

Manitowaning, Ontario

The Manitowaning Branch was organized about ten years ago with about fifty members, and for some time went ahead in a prosperous condition, increasing in membership to about eighty. Then many of the Saints moved away and became scattered, to various other places, so that there were only about a dozen left to carry on the noble work. However, those who remained struggled hard to keep the bark afloat by keeping up the meetings, with a Sunday school and Religio home class. With a splendid picnic every year, we were able to keep the financial part of our branch and church work up in a very satisfactory manner.

Last spring Elder Charlton and family, who helped to organize the branch here, moved back after an absence of seven years, and again took up the work with us. About the end of June we were blessed with the coming of our old friend, Elder John Shields, who labored as a missionary here for four years. The same day, Elder Robert L. Brown came to take charge as missionary of this field. These two brethren held a series of meetings for two weeks, and Brother Shields gave a great many blessings. As a consequence much good was done. Fourteen have been baptized into our branch this summer. The Saints have been edified and built up spiritually.

Brother Robert L. Brown is a young man of ability, and takes well with the Saints and outsiders. He has baptized seven, all fine, promising young people.

We also had a very successful two-day meeting. Every accommodation with meals was provided free by the Saints, who spared no pains in making the meeting a perfect success. Two hundred and fifty sat down to dinner and supper on the last day, Sunday, September 5. The meetings were all well attended. The leading speakers were, Elders John Shields, R. L. Brown, and Benson Belrose, of Owen Sound, who gave us some excellent discourses. The prayer services were spiritual and edifying. The gifts were enjoyed and the Saints instructed and strengthened generally.

To Arizona Saints and Friends

Can we afford to miss the opportunity of placing a church exhibit and distributing booths for church literature at the Arizona State Fair for the small consideration of only twenty dollars?

We assume that the Saints will undoubtedly sustain a work which may be made effective at so small a cost; and shall proceed to install such an advertising exhibit for the church at the State Fair, which begins November 15. And if the Arizona people who read this fail to respond with the "needful" for the worthy work, we shall undertake to raise the amount, even if it be necessary to make an attack with a pick upon the interior of some Arizona copper mine. So please obey that impulse and make an offering to the fair exhibit fund.

Mail to Sister Clare E. Sturges, Phoenix, Arizona, 291 East Jefferson Street, who is branch clerk and treasurer. If there be a surplus it will be turned over to Brother S. D. Condit who is bishop's agent.
Very truly,

Corrections for Junior "Quarterly"

In lesson 2, last quarter, 1915, third paragraph, fifth line read, "The night was over" instead of "The light was over."

Under subheading "The Bible in Germany" in fifth line read "thirsted for the word of God," instead of "The work of God."

On page 11, third line from the top, the word "when" is left out. Make it read, "What an awful condition the world was in when the word of God was kept from them."

In lesson 3, third paragraph, second line, read "unconscious of their real surroundings," instead of "conscious of their real surroundings."

Lessons 5 and 6 have been transposed. Have lesson 6, "The Sealed Book," studied for October 31, instead of November 7, and have Lesson 5, "The Sealed Book Translated," for November 7, instead of October 31.

In questions for last lesson read, "What do the flowers represent?" instead of "What do the powers represent?"

"Quarterlies" Wanted

Timely Reading

"The Pleasures of the World," a 3-act drama by John Preston, written expressly for Latter Day Saints, is selling rapidly.

Branches like San Francisco, Brooklyn, Saint Louis, Saint Joseph, and smaller ones have ordered it in quantities and are arranging to produce it.

As reading matter this play is very much worth while. It is nicely gotten up, and the price is unheard-of for such a work.

We are offering this play as publishers, but will put you in touch with the author if you desire to produce it or learn something about productions already undertaken. Takes two hours to enact.

68 pages of interesting fact-fiction

Price, 25c

Branch Presidents Are You Getting Results?

Are you satisfied with your efforts to reach the people?

Are there not dozens—perhaps hundreds—of families that are merely indifferent and might be reached?

Your community is your opportunity as well as your responsibility.

Our most successful men are not only preaching about service, but also suggesting opportunities to try it out.

If you want to try still other methods and plans, why not write our Ad Service Department and let it help you?

If you follow the suggestions received it may cost you no money whatever to reach twice as many people. But even if it does cost a little, the expense will be justified.

The service costs you nothing, but it may be worth much to you. If printed matter is recommended as a part of the campaign, you are under no obligation to get it from us, though we will be glad to do it.

Write while you think of it.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Editorial

"THE 'MORMON' CHRISTIAN WAR"

R. B. Neal, notorious for his senseless and unprovoked war on the latter-day faith, defames the term Christian in an article in the Apostolic Review for September 28, and in publishing the same the Review joins him in one of the most malicious and unprincipled attacks on an innocent and maligned people that we have ever noted.

IS THIS CHRISTIAN WARFARE?

Mr. Neal, under the above caption, "The 'Mormon' Christian War," discusses the confession, so-called, of John D. Lee, touching what is known as the Mountain Meadow Massacre. He quotes Mr. Lee as follows:

The council formed a prayer circle, and kneeling down, so that elbow would touch elbow, the Danites prayed for divine instructions. . . . The meeting was then addressed by some one in authority. He spoke in about this language: . . . The orders are that all the emigrants must die. Our leaders speak with inspired tongues, and their orders come from the God of heaven. We have no right to question what they have commanded us to do; it is our duty to obey.

Mr. Neal follows this with a quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants, section 19: 2:

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his [the seer's] words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth.

Then as if this quotation and the teachings of Joseph Smith and the Reorganized Church, and the record made by this people justify such a conclusion, he says:

There's the heart of the most infamous system the Devil ever planted on this earth! True to-day—the words of the "seers" at Salt Lake City, Utah, and Lamoni, Iowa, are to "be received as if from God's own mouth!" Each says the other is a bogus seer—but the followers of each to-day, if ordered to do a like deed, rape and murder women and children, would form "a prayer circle," giving each other "the elbow touch," and arise from their knees and execute the orders of hell!—baptizing them in the name of God, our loving heavenly Father.

And he calls this a Christian warfare.

TO SELL WARES

And why all this furore? The concluding verse tells us:

Reader, can you not realize what a menace to church and state "Mormonism" is? Greater now than ever! Will you not enlist with us? Send to me at Grayson, Kentucky, for sample tracts.

Neal wants to sell his literature. In the front ranks with those who failed to make good in their anti-"Mormon" propaganda organized some years ago at Omaha, Nebraska, membership fee one dollar per; editor of anti-"Mormon" periodicals—The Helper, which didn't help much, The Weekly, so weakly it only survived for a short season, The Sword of Laban, which never pierced anybody besides Neal; unable through the columns of various journals identified with both factions of the movement organized under Alexander Campbell to resuscitate either of these anti-"Mormon hopes," by the gratuitous cooperation of these same periodicals he peddles his ungodly wares in pamphlet form. Praying on the morbid curiosity of an undying opposition to the truth, he creates a demand for his vituperations by the unprincipled methods cited—a sensational and libelous attack on the integrity of a God-fearing people and ministry.

STRAINING THE TEXT

It is not surprising that one of this disposition should strain the only text he presents which he seems to think he can construe as opening the way for the unnamable evils he says were the leaders of the Reorganized Church to perpetrate their brethren would cringingly execute.

The instruction given in the revelation quoted from is that the church shall give heed to the words of the Prophet as he reveals them "walking in all holiness before me." There is not the remotest suggestion that the church, or any part of it, is to follow the counsel of one, in whatever position, unless that counsel is righteous and in harmony with the law of God as revealed. Indeed, if the prophet or any man walk not, or speak not, in holiness, his words are not to be heeded.

Furthermore, as set forth elsewhere in the law, not even is the prophet and president of the church to direct the body in the giving of law, only as the matter he presents as the light of God is received as conforming to the law already given, and accepted by the various quorums and the church under the rule of common consent, by which rule all things are to be determined and disposed of in the church.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR THE PRIESTHOOD

The law governing the church when applied for ever protects the people against priestcraft. Accepting as the word of the Lord instruction given as early as May, 1829, the church holds that "no man can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care" (Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4), which, "with an eye single to the glory of God," qualifies him for the work (Doctrine and Covenants 4: 3).

These qualifications are gathered up in the concluding sentences of an admonition to the ministry received as the will of the Lord, January, 1831: "And go ye out from among the wicked. Save thyself. Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord" (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9).

Joseph Smith's position and teachings as to the qualifications for acceptable service in the priesthood are set forth in an epistle to the church, written at Liberty, Missouri, in 1839. He says:

There are many called but few are chosen, and why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set upon the things of the world and are aspiring to the honors of men; they do not learn the lesson that the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and that the powers of heaven can not be controlled nor handled, only upon the principles of righteousness. . . . No power or influence can, or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness, by meekness and by love unfeigned; without hypocrisy, and without guile. . . . Let the (thy) soul be full of charity towards all men, and virtue guard thy thoughts unceasingly.—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 121.

These principles have been reiterated to the Reorganized Church times without number, both by what the Saints have received as the word of God, and by word of mouth from the president and ministry. Anybody who teaches to the contrary has apostatized from the faith as restored in latter days. Anybody who attempts to put anything other than this upon the Reorganized Church has laid aside his integrity and departed from the truth.

A PRAYER FOR MERCY

Many thrusts at the Saints and many attacks on the faith as held by them come to our attention, but seldom have we seen anything so deliberately vicious as this attack by Mr. Neal. Not only does it seek to write into the law something that is not there, but it charges the Reorganized Saints with a depravity little short of hell itself, and this, too, when they are known throughout the country as a law abiding and an exemplary people.

And what makes the whole affair more despicable still is that the facts set forth herein are known to—we were about to say Elder Neal, but God forbid that we should so vilify the term—to Mr. Neal. He knows the character of the Saints and the law by which they are governed. He knows that the leaders of our church would not order any such fiendishness as he suggests, and that if they or any of them did, the same would be resented with all the power and virtue of a godly people. Yet in his abandonment he insinuates all that his infamous libel implies, joining himself to the work of the Evil One, referred to by the Apostle Paul when he said, "In the last days . . . men shall be . . . false accusers," and "despisers of those that are good."

May God have mercy on a man who hurls himself to these ends in the craze of his campaign against the truth, and on those who allow him to do it through prostituted channels of the religious press.

J. F. GARVER.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

"HESPERIAN" TORPEDOED.—That the Hesperian was torpedoed and not sunk by a mine as contended by Germany, is claimed by the United States naval department after investigation. A claim will be made for American goods lost on the Hesperian.

NOMINATED BY REFERENDUM.—The first referendum vote in any American political party for the nomination of candidates for president and vice president began on October 27, when nomination blanks were sent to Socialists from the party headquarters at Chicago.

FOR PEACE.—In cooperation with European powers, Japan has requested China to postpone the project for the establishment of a monarchical form of government, to prevent disorder, and to assure the peace of the Orient during the present war in the Occident.

"F-4."—A final report announces that the United States submarine F-4, lost at Honolulu last March, was sunk from a leak resulting from a corroded battery lining, and the failure of the boat through poor diving qualities to respond properly to rudder changes, which should have returned it to the surface.

POOR PAY AND FAULTY CREED.—At a conference of Baptist ministers in Massachusetts on October 26, it was shown by figures quoted that the average salary of Baptist ministers in the United States is one dollar and eighty-seven cents per day. At this conference Reverend Woodman Bradbury, of Cambridge, stated as quoted, that the apostles' creed contained "phases which the modern mind can not accept at their face value."

WOULD DESTROY TRADE.—Five men have been cited for trial charged with attempting to hamper the shipment of war munitions to the entente allies by placing bombs on rudders or propellers, timed to disable ships on their way across the Atlantic. That these men, as stated by one of them, a lieutenant in the German army, in a confession, were working under the direction of or in agreement with the German secret service or government, is denied by the German ambassador.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Private E. Moore, shot by Mexican bandits near Brownsville, Texas, October 24, and who died the 25th, was the eleventh American soldier to be killed in skirmishes with Mexican bandits and raiders. It is stated that Carranza is trying to buy off Villa with gold and promises of amnesty. Villa is yet in the field, but detachments of men and officers continue to desert him to join Carranza authorities. Carranza troop trains have been allowed passage over the Southern Pacific Railroad across American territory from Eagle Pass, Texas, to Douglas, Arizona.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Both the Austro-German and Bulgarian forces have made advances in Serbia. Reports from this field are conflicting, but it is clear that the Serbs have yielded points on the railroad in their territory from Belgrade to their frontier, and extending through Bulgaria and Turkey to Constantinople. The Austro-Germans have also driven the Serbs from the banks of the Danube. That the French captured Strumnitza as reported last week has not been officially confirmed. They made a drive past that city in an effort to flank the Bulgarian army advancing into Serbia, and have since taken additional territory in the vicinity. The French report victory in the south of Serbia, where they have been joined by a British contingent. The allies are still sending troops to the Balkans. The Montenegrins hold Austrian territory, and are withstanding attack. The Italians report success over the Austrians, and are compelling them to strengthen their lines. The Russians are reported successful south of Dvinsk and in Galicia. Russian successes over the Turks are reported in the Caucasus, where Grand Duke Nicholas has been in command since his release from the direction of the defense against Germany. Germany has made gains south of Riga. The French report minor gains in the Champagne regions. A British transport has been sunk in the Ægean Sea, and a British steamer in the Mediterranean, by German submarines. British submarines have sunk four German steamers in the Baltic. From sources said to be authoritative, it is announced that while Greece is unwilling to sacrifice herself to benefit others, yet this country would enter the war on the side of the entente allies if they were to send to the Balkans a force which combined with the Greeks could defeat the Austro-German and Bulgarian armies. It is rumored that Rumania will allow the passage of a Russian army over her territory to attack Bulgaria on the north. The French cabinet has resigned and a new coalition cabinet has been formed. This action is said to follow general dissatisfaction over the government's foreign policy, especially in connection with conditions which brought Bulgaria into the war against France and her allies. The Russian Minister of Finance has been authorized to seek foreign credit to the amount of two billion, seven hundred fifty million dollars, a large part to be expended in England, similar to the Anglo-French loan negotiated in the United States. Japan has joined Great Britain, France and Russia in their declaration of September 5, 1914, not to conclude peace separately during the war, or demand conditions of peace without previous agreement with the other powers of the alliance. Italy also became a party to this agreement on entering the war.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

RUSSELL BUSY.—The Editors are in receipt of the Clarksburg, Virginia, Daily Telegram, which contains a report of the meetings of Elder R. C. Russell, of the Twelve. Brother Russell has been preaching in the Brick Church at that place, also in the courthouse and on the street, and seems to have been successful in stirring up considerable interest.

MINISTERS DIFFERENTIATE.—We are informed that at a recent meeting in Kansas City, the ministerial alliance of that place, in connection with its present vigorous campaign against the Utah church propaganda, by a hearty vote passed a resolution presented by Mr. Vernon Danielson, of Independence, Missouri, a former Utah elder now opposing that church, and seconded by Doctor Meyers, president of the ministerial alliance, differentiating between the Reorganized and Utah churches.

JOE PINE.—The November number of Autumn Leaves contains the opening chapters of a continued story entitled "Joe Pine." This story is illustrated by Paul N. Craig of Omaha. Other numbers of this issue include, "Relation of Life to Wealth," by J. August Koehler; "Leaves from Church History," illustrated with pictures of the home of Joseph Smith at the time when he received his second vision, and the interior of the room in which the angel appeared to him; "Coming Back," by Earnest Webbe; "Song of Fellowship," by Willis Kearney, etc. Those who do not take Autumn Leaves should subscribe at once. You can not afford to miss it. It costs only one dollar per year, and those who sign up now will get the December number free.

CHURCH AT VANCLEAVE BURNED.—Elder Heman C. Smith is in receipt of a letter from Elder J. C. Cochran containing the news that the church building at Bluff Creek Branch, near Vancleave, Mississippi, burned Saturday morning, October 23. The Saints had held their convention Friday and Friday night, and as the church was not completely destroyed at daylight, it was supposed that some one must have set it on fire at sometime past midnight. The Saints, however, held a successful conference on Saturday and Sunday, holding open air services. Two were baptized. They will endeavor to build again soon. No branch records of any consequence were lost. However, Elder Warr lost his books, typewriter, and some clothing, amounting in all to about one hundred dollars.

WORK AT TULSA.—Elder Joseph Arber has been at work in Tulsa, Oklahoma, and sends us copies of the Tulsa Democrat and the Tulsa World of recent date, both of them containing interesting articles from his pen, setting forth our belief and church standing. He also writes: "After a series of meetings of twenty sermons, I had the privilege of baptizing five fine people into the kingdom, leaving others near. Best of all, we were greatly blessed in our efforts with the good Spirit." Elder Arber moved from Tulsa to the vicinity of Ada, where he was conducting services at the time of writing. Elder W. P. Robinson, formerly in charge of the Children's Home, is about to move to Tulsa, where he will take up the work at that place. We trust it will move forward successfully.

DES MOINES DEDICATION.—The Des Moines Saints by a neat folder, announce the dedication of the church purchased there and opened in February, 1913, the service to occur on Sunday, November 14, at 11 a. m., in connection with their annual Home-Coming Day exercises. This church is conveniently located at 717 East Twelfth Street. The dedicatorial prayer is to be by Elder Heman C. Smith, the sermon by Bishop E. L. Kelley. Brother Heman C. Smith will speak at 3 p. m., and on Monday evening will begin a series of lectures on the history of the Smith family. The cantata "Ruth" will be given by the Des Moines choir on the evening of the 14th. The Des Moines Saints are to be congratulated on the purchase and preparation for dedication of this excellently located building. May its dedication make for a deeper devotion and a broader service on their part.

We often hear people, young and old, complaining that they are not rich. We ourselves have probably all indulged, now and then, in this complaint. We like to dream of the things we would do if we had lots of money. But there is something that we all have plenty of. And if we used it rightly and wisely we might gain riches, or almost anything we chose to seek. It is something without which money or talent or any great possession is valueless. So, in a sense, it is more valuable than any of these things. Yet we waste it, and throw it away, as if it were the least important, instead of the most important, of our possessions. It is, of course—time.—The Christian Herald.

THE SONS OF PERDITION

A CATECHISM

1. What is the soul of man?

And the spirit and the body is the soul of man.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

2. What is the redemption of the soul?

Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. . . . And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

And the atonement bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead: and the resurrection of the dead bringeth back men into the presence of God; and thus they are restored into his presence; to be judged according to their words; according to the law and justice.—Alma 19: 105, 106.

And because of the redemption of man, which came by Jesus Christ, they are brought back into the presence of the Lord; yea, this is wherein all men are redeemed, because the death of Christ bringeth to pass the resurrection which bringeth to pass a redemption from an endless sleep, from sleep all men shall be awoken by the power of God, when the trump shall sound.—Mormon 4: 72.

3. Will all men be redeemed?

Yea, this is wherein all men are redeemed, because the death of Christ bringeth to pass the resurrection, which bringeth to pass a redemption from an endless sleep, from which sleep all men shall be awoken by the power of God, when the trump shall sound; and they shall come forth, both small and great, and all shall stand before his bar, being redeemed and loosed from this eternal band of death, which death is a temporal death; and then cometh the judgment of the Holy One upon them; and then cometh the time that he that is filthy, shall be filthy still, and he that is righteous, shall be righteous still; he that is happy, shall be happy still; and he that is unhappy, shall be unhappy still.—Mormon 4: 72-74.

For behold, the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God, and be judged according to their works. Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death; the spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time; and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this restoration cometh to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous.—Alma 8: 98-102.

Now behold I have spoken unto you concerning the death of the mortal body, and also concerning the resurrection of the mortal body, I say unto you, that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body; that is from death; even from the first death, unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption.—Alma 8: 105-107.

And he (Zeezrom) said unto Alma, What does this mean which Amulek hath spoken concerning the resurrection of the dead, that all shall rise from the dead, both the just and the unjust, and be brought to stand before God, to be judged according to their works? And now Alma began to expound these things unto him, saying. . . . Amulek hath spoken plainly concerning death, and being raised from this mortality to a state of immortality, and being brought before the bar of God, to be judged according to our works.—Alma 9: 14-21.

Yea, behold this death (the death of Christ) bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death; that spiritual death for all mankind, by the fall of Adam, being cut off from the presence of the Lord, or considered as dead, both as to things temporal and to things spiritual. But behold, the resurrection of Christ redeemeth mankind, yea, even all mankind, and bringeth them back into the presence of the Lord.—Helaman 5: 70, 71.

But, behold, verily I say unto you, Before the earth shall pass away, Michael, mine archangel, shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore I will say unto them, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7.

4. When will the redemption of all mankind be completed?

And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the Saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever. And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; . . . And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them.—Revelation 20: 7-13.

5. And when all the dead shall come forth and shall "stand before God," what is to be done with them?

And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. . . . and they were judged every man according to their works.—Revelation 21: 12-13.

And it shall come to pass, that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, inasmuch as they have become immortal, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel; and then cometh the judgment; and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God.—2 Nephi 6: 36, 37.

6. When all mankind shall have been redeemed from death, what is to become of death?

And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire.—Revelation 20: 14.

7. Is the lake of fire and brimstone known by any other names?

And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.—Revelation 20: 14.

But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.—Revelation 21: 8.

And according to the power of justice, for justice can not be denied, ye must go away into that lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames are unquenchable, and whose smoke ascendeth up for ever and ever, which lake of fire and brimstone, is endless torment.—Jacob 4: 15.

For he delivereth his saints from that awful monster the Devil, and death, and hell, and that lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.—2 Nephi 6: 43.

For the atonement satisfieth the demands of his justice upon all those who have not the law given to them, that they are delivered from that awful monster, death and hell, and the Devil, and the lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.—2 Nephi 6: 54.

8. After the last great battle has been fought and the victory made complete (Revelation 20: 9); after the Devil has been "cast into the lake of fire and brimstone" (Revelation 20: 10); after the earth and the heaven have been caused to flee away from before the face of the Lord, until no place was found for them (Revelation 20: 11); after the Lord has redeemed the whole human family from death, compelling the sea, and death, and hell, to deliver up their dead, both small and great, and has brought them back into his presence to "stand before God" (Revelation 20: 12, 13); after they have been judged, "every man according to their works" (Revelation 20: 13); and after death and hell have been destroyed, "cast into the lake of fire" (Revelation 20: 14); after all this has been done, and Christ has finished his work, will any portion of the human family die "the second death," that is, be cast into "the lake of fire," to suffer "endless torment"?

And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.—Revelation 20: 15.

Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels.—Matthew 25: 41.

Wherefore, it came to pass, that the Devil tempted Adam and he partook the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment, wherein he became subject to the will of the Devil, because he yielded unto temptation; wherefore, I the Lord God, caused that he should be cast out from the Garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression: wherein he became spiritually dead; which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 11. (See again Matthew 25: 41.)

Wherefore, I the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whoremonger, and the sorcerer, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 5. (Revelation 21: 8.)

But . . . we must come forth and stand before him in his glory, . . . And now behold I say unto you, then cometh a death, even a second death, which is a spiritual death; . . . Then is the time when their torments shall be as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; and then is the time that they shall be chained down to an everlasting destruction, according to the power and captivity of Satan: he having subjected them according to his will.—Alma 9: 26-31. (Read also verses 14 and 21.)

The soul shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; . . . and then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of God. But behold, an awful death cometh upon the wicked; for they die as to things pertaining to things of righteousness; for they are unclean, and no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of God.—Alma 19: 58-60.

Yea, behold this death bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death; that spiritual death for all mankind, by the fall of Adam, being cut off from the presence of the Lord, or considered as dead, both as to things temporal and to things spiritual. . . . But whosoever repenteth not, is hewn down and cast into the fire, and there cometh on them again a spiritual death, yea, a second death, for they are cut off again as to things pertaining to righteousness; therefore repent ye, repent ye, lest by knowing these things and not doing them, ye shall suffer yourselves to come under condemnation, and ye are brought down into this second death.—Helaman 5: 70-74. (Alma 9: 57-59.)

9. What class of people die the second death, and what name is given them?

For behold, if ye deny the Holy Ghost when it once has had place in you, and ye know that ye deny it; behold, this is a sin which is unpardonable.—Alma 19: 8. (See Hebrews 10: 26-29.)

Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies, wherewith they shall blaspheme: but he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation.—Mark 3: 28, 29. (See also Matthew 12: 26, 27 with Matthew 12: 37-39, I. T.)

Therefore God gave unto them commandments, after having made known unto them the plan of redemption, that they should not do evil, the penalty thereof being a second death, which was an everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness.—Alma 9: 52.

Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the Devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: These are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.—Matthew 12: 31, 32.

10. Will any others than the sons of perdition die the second death?

These are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

11. Is there any redemption from the second death?

And now behold I say unto you, then cometh a death, even a second death, which is a spiritual death; . . . Then I say unto you, They shall be as though there had been no redemption made; for they can not be redeemed according to God's justice; and they can not die, seeing there is no more corruption.—Alma 9: 28-32.

Therefore God gave them commandments, after having made known unto them the plan of redemption, that they should not do evil, the penalty thereof being a second death, which was an everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness; for on such the plan of redemption could have no power, for the works of justice could not be destroyed, according to the supreme goodness of God.—Alma 9: 52, 53.

But behold, and fear, and tremble before God; for ye ought to tremble: for the Lord redeemeth none such that rebel against him, and die in their sins; yea, even all those that have perished in their sins ever since the world began, that have willfully rebelled against God, that have known the commandments of God, and would not keep them; these are they that have no part in the first resurrection. Therefore had ye not ought to tremble? For salvation cometh to none such; for the Lord hath redeemed none such; yea, neither can the Lord redeem such: for he can not deny himself; for he can not deny justice when it has its claim.—Mosiah 8: 61-65.

And then shall the wicked be cast out, and they shall have cause to howl, and weep, and wail, and gnash their teeth; and this because they would not hearken unto the voice of the Lord; therefore the Lord redeemeth them not, for they are carnal and devilish, and the Devil has power over them.—Mosiah 8: 72, 73.

12. Are there any others who shall not be redeemed?

These are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, . . . who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hand, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

13. Why can they not be redeemed?

For they can not be redeemed from their spiritual fall, because they repent not, for they will love darkness rather than light, and their deeds are evil, and they receive their wages of whom they list to obey.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 12.

14. But is not it possible to bring them again to repentance?

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.—Hebrews 6: 4-6.

15. Could not another sacrifice be made for them?

For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins.—Hebrews 10: 26. (See also verses 27 and 29.)

16. But could not they pay the penalty, and then come out?

And while ye are in prison, can ye pay even one senine? Verily, verily I say unto you, Nay.—3 Nephi 5: 75.

17. When the sons of perdition are once cast into the lake of fire, will it be possible for them to return?

And the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore I will say unto them, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels. And now, behold, I say unto you, Never at any time, have I declared from my own mouth that they should return, for where I am they can not come, for they have no power; but remember that all my judgments are not given unto men.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7, 8.

And now, I have spoken the words which the Lord God hath commanded me. And thus saith the Lord: They shall stand as a bright testimony against this people, at the judgment day; whereof, they shall be judged, every man, according to his works, whether they be good, or whether they be evil; and if they be evil, they are consigned to an awful view of their own guilt and abomination, which doth cause them to shrink from the presence of the Lord, into a state of misery and endless torment, from whence they can no more return: therefore, they have drunk damnation to their souls.—Mosiah 1: 124-127.

And if it so be that the church is built upon my gospel, then will the Father show forth his own works in it; but if it be not built upon my gospel, and is built upon the works of men, or upon the works of the Devil, verily I say unto you, They have joy in their works for a season, and by and by the end cometh, and they are hewn down and cast into the fire, from whence there is no return.—3 Nephi 12: 22, 23.

And he that endureth not unto the end, the same is he that is also hewn down and cast into the fire, from whence they can no more return, because of the justice of the Father: and this is the word which he hath given unto the children of men.—3 Nephi 12: 30.

18. Is there any deliverance from that condition?

And thus the Devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell. And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them, I am no Devil, for there is none: and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance. Yea, they are grasped with death and hell; and death, and hell, and the Devil, and all that have been seized therewith, must stand before the throne of God and be judged according to their works, from whence they must go into the place prepared for them, even a lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.—2 Nephi 12: 26-29.

19. If there is "no deliverance," "no return" from the lake of fire, can mercy reach them there?

I say unto you, that the man who doeth this, the same cometh out in open rebellion against God; . . . And now I say unto you, that mercy hath no claim on that man; therefore, his final doom is to endure a never ending torment.—Mosiah 1: 80-85. (Read verse 79, also.)

Therefore, they have drunk out of the cup of the wrath of God, which justice could no more deny unto them than it could deny that Adam should fall, because of his partaking of the forbidden fruit; therefore, mercy could have claim on them no more for ever. And their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames are unquenchable, and whose smoke ascendeth up for ever and ever. Thus hath the Lord commanded me. Amen.—Mosiah 1: 128-130.

20. What claim does mercy make upon the creature?

But there is a law given and a punishment affixed, and repentance granted; which repentance, mercy claimeth.—Alma 19: 104.

21. And if the creature refuses to repent, what will the result be?

Which repentance, mercy claimeth: otherwise, justice claimeth the creature, and executeth the law, and the law inflicteth the punishment.—Alma 19: 104.

22. If justice did not execute the law upon those who refuse to repent, what would result?

If not so, the works of justice would be destroyed, and God would cease to be God.—Alma 19: 104.

23. Then whom does mercy claim?

But God ceaseth not to be God, and mercy claimeth the penitent, and mercy cometh because of the atonement.—Alma 19: 105.

24. Will any besides the penitent be saved?

For behold, justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved.—Alma 19: 106. (Read again Doctrine and Covenants 28: 12, and Hebrews 6: 4-6; also read 2 Nephi 6: 53.)

25. As the sons of perdition "will love darkness," and will not repent, is there any way to cleanse them from sin?

That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.

26. But will they not be cleansed at the great last day, the end?

And another trump shall sound, which is the fourth trump, saying, These are found among those who are to remain until that great and last day, even the end, who shall remain filthy still.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 30.

And they shall come forth, both small and great, and all shall stand before his bar, being redeemed and loosed from this eternal band of death, which death is a temporal death; and then cometh the judgment of the Holy One upon them; and then cometh the time that he that is filthy, shall be filthy still, and he that is righteous, shall be righteous still; he that is happy, shall be happy still; and he that is unhappy, shall be unhappy still.—Mormon 4: 73, 74.

And it shall come to pass, that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have become immoral, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel; and then cometh the judgment; and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God. And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, that they who are righteous shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy are the Devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; and has no end.—2 Nephi 6: 36-40.

27. Will Christ's work for the salvation of man be finished at the last resurrection?

These (of the teletial glory) are they who are thrust down to hell; these are they who shall not be redeemed from the Devil, until the last resurrection, until the Lord even Christ the Lamb, shall have finished his work; . . . these are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fullness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work, when he shall deliver up the kingdom and present it unto the Father spotless.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Afterward cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed.—1 Corinthians 15: 22-26, I. T.

Having done this, that I might subdue all things unto myself; retaining all power, even to the destroying of Satan and his words at the end of the world, and the last great day of judgment, which I shall pass upon the inhabitants thereof, judging every man according to his work, and the deeds which he has done.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1.

28. Will the wicked die the second death after the last resurrection and after the final judgment?

And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their work. . . . And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.—Revelation 20: 13, 15.

The soul shall be restored to the body and the body to the soul, . . . And then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of God. But behold, an awful death cometh upon the wicked; for they die as to things pertaining to things of righteousness.—Alma 19: 58-60. (Read again Alma 9: 21-28; Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7; and 2 Nephi 6: 36-40.)

29. As Christ finishes his redemptive work with the last resurrection and the final judgment; and as the sons of perdition are not cast into the lake of fire until after the last resurrection and the final judgment; in what relation to the plan of salvation will they then stand?

Therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death.—Alma 8: 97.

Then I say unto you, They shall be as though there had been no redemption made; for they can not be redeemed ac-ording to God's justice; and they can not die, seeing there is no more corruption.—Alma 9: 32.

But remember, that he that persists in his own carnal nature, and goes on in the ways of sin and rebellion against God, remaineth in his fallen state, and the Devil hath all power over him. Therefore he is as though there was no redemption made; being an enemy to God; and also is the Devil an enemy to God.—Mosiah 8: 77, 78.

30. And what would have been the condition of the human family, if no redemption had been made?

For behold, if the flesh should rise no more, our spirits must become subject unto that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the Devil, to rise no more. And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a Devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself.—2 Nephi 6: 20, 21.

31. How long would this condition have continued, had there been no redemption?

And because man became fallen, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement; save it should be an infinite atonement, this corruption could not put on incorruption. Wherefore, the first judgment which came upon man, must needs have remained to an endless duration. And if so, this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother earth, to rise no more.—2 Nephi 6: 14-18.

Thus all mankind were lost; and behold, they would have been endlessly lost, were it not that God redeemed his people from their lost and fallen state.—Mosiah 8: 76.

32. And now, as all mankind were lost; and as they were "endlessly lost," and must have remained under that first judgment, had it not been for the redemption; and as the "plan of redemption could have no power" on the sons of perdition, and they are to "remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death," how long will this last judgment pronounced upon them remain?

Wherefore, they who are filthy are the Devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever, and has no end.—2 Nephi 6: 39, 40. (See 21.)

Therefore the Spirit of the Lord hath withdrawn from you, and hath no place in you, and the Devil hath all power over you; and this is the final state of the wicked.—Alma 16: 234. (See again Matthew 12: 37-39, I. T.)

And now I say unto you, that mercy has no claim on that man; therefore, his final doom is to endure a never-ending torment.—Mosiah 1: 85.

33. What is the meaning of the word final?

Pertaining to the end; last; ultimate; conclusive; decisive.—Webster.

34. What text is sometimes used to support the claim that the torment of the wicked will have an end?

They shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless, I, the Lord, show it by vision unto many.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

35. Are there any texts that refer to the end of the wicked, in the same manner the foregoing refers to the end of their torment?

And the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire; and their end no man knoweth, on earth, nor ever shall know, until they come before me in judgment.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 7.

For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: Whose end is destruction.—Philippians 3: 18, 19.

Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.—2 Corinthians 11: 15.

36. What is the cause of "the sorrowing of the damned"?

But behold this my joy was vain, for their sorrowing was not unto repentance, because of the goodness of God, but it was rather the sorrowing of the damned, because the Lord would not always suffer them to take happiness in sin. And they did not come unto Jesus with broken hearts and contrite spirits, but they did curse God, and wish to die.—Mormon 1: 37, 38.

37. Where else have we an example of "the sorrowing of the damned"?

And it came to pass, that Satan cried with a loud voice, with weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, and repented hence; yea, from the presence of Moses, that he beheld him not.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 15.

38. But why can they not be permitted "to take happiness in sin"?

Behold, I say unto you, Wickedness never was happiness. And now, my son, all men that are in a state of nature, or I would say, in a carnal state, are in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity; they are without God in the world, and they have gone contrary to the nature of God; therefore they are in a state contrary to the nature of happiness.—Alma 19: 74, 75.

But behold, your days of probation are past: you have procrastinated the day of your salvation, until it is everlastingly too late, and your destruction is made sure; yea, for ye have sought all the days of your lives for that which ye could not obtain; and ye have sought for happiness in doing iniquity, which thing is contrary to the nature of that righteousness which is in our great and eternal Head.—Helaman 5: 51, 52.

39. As the sons of perdition "are in a state" which is "contrary to the nature of happiness"; and as they love that condition of darkness, and "will love darkness rather than light," "being enemies to God"; and as it is impossible "to renew them again unto repentance"; and as their sorrowing is caused "because the Lord would not always suffer them to take happiness in sin"; what effect would it have upon their suffering, if the Lord should receive them into heaven to dwell with Christ and the angels, and with all of earth's redeemed and sanctified ones?

Behold I say unto you, that ye would be more miserable to dwell with an oly and a just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell. For behold, when ye shall be brought to see your nakedness before God, and also the glory of God, and the holiness of Jesus Christ, it will kindle a flame of unquenchable fire upon you.—Mormon 4: 63, 64.

Yea, and in fine, so great had been my iniquities, that the very thoughts of coming into the presence of my God, did rack my soul with inexpressible horror.—Alma 17: 12.

40. Why was it necessary for all men to die the temporal death?

For as death has passed upon all men, to fulfill the merciful plan of the great Creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection.—2 Nephi 6: 11.

And thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man the days of his probation; that by his natural death, he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe, and they that believe not, unto eternal damnation.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 12.

41. What would have been the result, had man been permitted to evade this temporal death?

And now behold, if it were possible that our first parents could have went forth and partaken of the tree of life, they would have been for ever miserable, having no preparatory state; and thus the plan of redemption would have been frustrated, and the word of God would have been made void, taking none effect.—Alma 9: 44, 45. (See also verses 39-43.)

For behold, if Adam had put forth his hand immediately, and partook of the tree of life, he would have lived for ever, according to the word of God, having no space for repentance. Alma 19: 85. (See verses 86 and 90, also Genesis 3: 22-24.)

42. Can the sons of perdition die the temporal death again, after they have been resurrected?

I say unto you, that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body; that is from death; even from the first death, unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption.—Alma 8: 106, 107.

Then I say unto you, They shall be as though there had been no redemption made; for they can not be redeemed according to God's justice; and they can not die, seeing there is no more corruption.—Alma 9: 32.

43. Then, as the sons of perdition can not die the temporal death again; and as they can not be redeemed again, having no space for repentance; unto what condition will they be raised up in the resurrection?

If they be good, to the resurrection of endless life and happiness, and if they be evil, to the resurrection of endless damnation.—Mosiah 8: 84.

Raised to endless happiness, to inherit the kingdom of God, or to endless misery, to inherit the kingdom of the Devil.—Alma 19: 67.

And thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man the days of his probation; that by his natural death, he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe, and they that believe not, unto eternal damnation; for they can not be redeemed from their spiritual fall, because they repent not, for they will love darkness rather than light, and their deeds are evil, and they receive their wages of whom they list to obey.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 12.

44. But will they not receive a kingdom of some kind, even though it be not a kingdom of glory?

He who can not abide the law of a telesstial kingdom, can not abide a telesstial glory; therefore, he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore, he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5.

45. And what kingdom is that which they "must abide"?

Raised to endless happiness, to inherit the kingdom of God, or to endless misery, to inherit the kingdom of the Devil.—Alma 19: 67.

46. And will they reign in that kingdom?

These shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

CONCLUSION

In the foregoing catechism, I have refrained from offering any comments on the texts quoted, preferring to give just what the books give so far as I have gone with the subject, and let each interpret for himself. True, I have tried to arrange my questions, and the answers to them, so as to present the matter in the light in which it appears to me; but I take no position on the final destiny of the sons of perdition. When they "die the second death," that is, when they are "cast into the lake of fire," the curtain drops; and it never rises again. I do not say it never will rise again, for I do not know what the Lord may be pleased to reveal to us in the future; but I find nothing in the three books concerning the sons of perdition, after they are cast into the lake of fire. One thing is sure: The three books of the church do not teach that they will ever be redeemed or saved from that condition.

I do not say there is no hope for them: eternity is a long time, longer than our minds can grasp or comprehend; and I know not what the Lord may have in store for them, "in the ages to come." It would be difficult to use stronger language than we have in the three books regarding the future destiny of the sons of perdition; but, as all God's judgments are "not given unto men," I am content, for the present, to leave it as it is given to us in the books. If others can hope that some way may be provided for their deliverance, sometime in the ages to come, I have no objection; but don't tell me that the books of the church teach that: the books do not teach it.

"Never at any time, have I declared from my own mouth that they should return," is the statement of the Lord. Then why should mortal man say so? "Deep and secret things belong unto the Lord," and the final destiny of the sons of perdition is one of the things which "no man knows; neither was it revealed; neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof"; and not wishing to be a partaker of that torment, I am not insisting on knowing what it will be.

ISAAC M. SMITH.

JEHOVAH'S LAW OF BATTLE

Nations not yet directly involved in the present titanic struggle of war are likely to become involved. Subtle forces to thus ensnare men and nations, and to make them think they are excusable are always at work.

In this manner individuals sometimes capitulate to the doctrines of hate, under the sophistry that hatred is heroism, when it kills to avenge some former wrong, and millions of men become a unit in such delusion and hell on earth is the result.

What shall be the safe and finally the glorified attitude toward war, of the man who accepts godliness to be the true and workable rule of life? What should be the attitude of a Latter Day Saint? Is it important what we think, and how we express our thoughts upon the subject of war in these perilous times?

If actions and deeds count for anything, either good or ill, even so it is not a trivial matter as to what we think, or as to what phase of the great world controversy our thoughts, when expressed, shall support. Shall we descend from the support of a principle which is broad enough, and Godlike enough to apply in all times and everywhere, to some factionalism which is subject to local prejudicial influences?

Shall we deal with the present war situation from a pro-ally, pro-German, or pro-American standpoint? or rather from the standpoint of the demands of the more holy principle of universal brotherhood?

In attempting to answer that question another one arises, with which pacifists, who recognize the dominant principle of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to be peace and not war, are grappling to-day. The question is this: Does not history show that in some instances war has been justifiable in the sight of God and where may the justifiable line be drawn?

The fact that each warring nation, in locating the line of justification for hostilities, first measures the wrongs or supposed wrongs which have been done by other powers, and then with all fervor proceeds to call upon God for success of their arms against each other, is evidence that it is a very difficult task to draw the line, and that the methods which have been employed in order to obtain that seemingly "unknown quantity" deduction, are not correct. The principles hitherto employed have been and are: Alert activity of the national jealous eye for the conservation of every interest which will contribute to the selfish enlargement of national wealth, prowess and dignity, and a military preparation to resent forcibly any encroachment upon either possessions, possible opportunity to get more possessions, or any slur that would seem to question the bulldog fighting qualities of false dignity, miscalled courage.

In the light of the awful facts as to what war is, and the repetition of its blighting curse over and over again, and then this present astounding climax of carnage right in the very time when the intellectual wisdom of the ages is supposed to converge to a point of unexcelled splendor, it would seem that the threadbare arguments for a militarism which has wrought ruin for even the most victorious, would become obsolete in its stupendous failures; but not so. Nations still employ the old, old methods, and continue to advocate the perpetuity of them, and to pay the awful price.

THE COST OF WAR

One Kirkpatrick, in summarizing the conditions and effects of war puts it in about the following manner:

War is wholesale, scientific slaughter.

WAR IS

- For homes—emptiness.
- For wives—heartache.
- For mothers—loneliness.
- For children—orphanage.
- For sweethearts—agony.
- For the nation's choicest men—broken health or death.
- For society—savagery.
- For peace—defeat.
- For bulldogs—suggestions.
- For the Devil—delight.
- For buzzards—a banquet.
- For the grave—victory.
- For worms—a feast.
- For nations—debts.
- For justice—nothing.
- For "thou shalt not kill"—boisterous laughter.
- For literature—the realism of the slaughterhouse.
- For the painter—the immortalization of wholesale murder.
- For the public park—a famous butcher in stone or bronze.
- For Christ—contempt.
- For "put up thy sword"—a sneer.
- For preachers on both sides—ferocious prayers for victory.

For manufacturers of munitions—profits.

That represents a black picture indeed, but the truth of it can not be denied. A statement published in the New York World, a number of years before the outbreak of the great war, is as follows:

The preparations for war bear with tremendous weight in times of peace. . . . Six million picked men in the flower of youth are in arms in Europe. They are all strong men, those who would be most useful in industry. Great Britain's war cost (to-day in times of peace), including national debt service, is $444,000,000 . . . and is now nearly six times as great as her elementary school costs. An even more bitter contest over a greater war deficit which must be met by increased taxation is going on in Germany. . . . Russia runs behind $200,000,000 a year and famine is perpetual.

It is estimated that the annual cost of preparedness for war of twenty-one countries including the United States and Japan is eight billion dollars. The author quoted above states the matter further as follows:

One item alone in this cost of militarism is almost four billion dollars per year. That single item is the wealth that is not produced, but could be produced if the six million, five hundred thousand strong carefully selected young men in the standing armies of these twenty-one countries were engaged in producing wealth with modern machinery and modern knowledge of production. It is to be noted that in this estimate all of South America, China, and other large parts of the world are not included, $8,000,000,000. This expense of twenty-one "highly civilized" countries for twelve months in times of peace, is equivalent to a continuous loss by fire burning day and night of more than $913,000 an hour; about $15,219 per minute. This sum worse than wasted annually to be prepared for slaughter—is equal to a loss by fire burning day and night throughout the year, devouring seven homes per minute, each home worth $1,700, and each home containing $475 worth of furniture.

Thus we get a glimpse of the cost of being ready for defense; so called, and even though the figures should be overdrawn by half, it is wanton waste, and should not receive the approval or commendation of those who, under gospel light, are expected to point to a better way, whether men will accept the better at present or not.

We quote another estimate from the same author, and then note another phase of the subject.

COST OF AMERICAN CIVIL WAR

Direct expenditures of the South, $5,000,000,000.
 Direct expenditures of the North, $5,000,000,000.
 Increase in national debt, $2,800,000,000.
 Interest on national war debt.

a. 1865 to 1898, $2,562,619,835.

b. 1898 to 1910 (estimated), $400,000,000.

Pensions, total to June 30, 1906, $3,259,195,396.

One million selected men, slaughtered in battle or destroyed during the war by disease, or from wounds and disease rendered wholly or partially unproductive for an average term of twenty-five years following the war:

An average loss to society per man thus killed or weakened, of $500 for twenty-five years for one million men—$12,500,000,000. Grand total, $31,521,815,231.

Thirty-one and a half billion dollars. This sum would pay for a $1,700 home and also for $400 worth of furniture for each home, for a total population of 90 million people, estimating six per family in each home.

This expense sum for one short war of less than five years would pay all the salaries of twenty-five thousand school-teachers at $625 per year from the birth of Christ to the year 1909, and leave sufficient to establish fifty universities, each institution provided with ten million dollars' worth of buildings and equipment, and each institution provided also with a ten-million-dollar endowment fund for running expense; . . . and we are not yet through with the Civil War's expense, and shall not be for a long time.

Every slave in the South could have been bought and liberated and every slaveholder pensioned during life with far less loss, aside from the slaughter, than was forced upon the Nation by war. The issues of that terrible war are, of course, settled, but the issues which are fraught with grave possibilities for a repetition of such a disaster, even in America, are not.

ARE THEY COWARDS?

In the current items of the press at this writing an open letter from eight college graduates of Philadelphia is found, wherein they address a certain leading advocate of thorough preparedness "against war" as follows:

In branding the motives of the pacifists as cowardly you are less generous than the pacifists themselves. They concede your sincerity. They too, uphold the ideal of heroism and self-sacrifice which endure suffering and meet death for righteousness, justice and honor. But they condemn the method of warfare as a means to attain these ends, because the act that renders warfare effective is not the sacrifice of oneself, but the killing or maiming of others; because the war spirit with its inevitable elements of ill-will, revenge and hate, can not further the highest ideals of our Christian civilization.

On the other hand, the true pacifists do not advocate mere passive nonresistance. They sound the call to the heroism of an aggressive, self-sacrificing, unrelenting good will, which will endure suffering or death, not to kill or maim an enemy, but to overcome with good the evil that is in him. The method is not based upon mere impracticable sentiment. It has proved supremely effective.

Jesus of Nazareth founded a kingdom upon love, and, rather than maintain his cause by violence, died forgiving his enemies. In the uplift of mankind, what soldier has surpassed him?

Seventeen centuries ago the spirit of the early Christians, was victorious despite the cruelest persecution by the Roman Empire.

The great need of our country is leaders to fire us with the same victorious spirit, to inspire us with the same high heroism. Young men and young women will give their lives for this service as courageously as ever men went forth to battle. They await the summons from the men of vision and influence in our nation. It may lead to martyrdom, but it will lead to victory.

A western editor who doubtless believes in the bulldogism of nations as the only safe defensive, remarks, in criticism of the open letter quoted above:

What has all this to do with the price of beans in New York? This may not be passive nonresistance, but if it is resistance at all, it is so ineffectual as to be of no value at all in this deadly practical world.

Somebody has started something in Europe, the like of which may be started anywhere, and it must be met with something less vague and luminous than an "aggressive, self-sacrificing, unrelenting good will."

The "open letter" seems to contemplate that the pacifist plan will not necessarily have smooth sailing; that there will be hardship and even death, for there is a willingness to give up lives. Martyrdom may have been the seed of the church; it may call the attention of the unthinking to a moral principle, but it will be as dead against the selfishness of nations as faith is without works.

A nation whose victory is achieved by martyrdom would be in no shape to enjoy the fruits of victory.

The signers of this letter may not be cowards, they may be inspired by that high heroism of which they boast. They may be willing to participate in national suicide, but the epithet of mollycoddle must still attach to them.

The Christ method of resisting evil with good is thus reckoned by this editor "to be of no value at all in this deadly practical world." Perhaps the Lord made a mistake then, in teaching that the good for evil doctrine should apply in this practical world. He may have meant that doctrine to apply to some place where things are not done in a practical manner—where the place itself is not a practical reality—the sectarian conception of heaven, for instance.

So the Lord perhaps meant that if an imaginary Devil should slip into an impractical heaven, and cause evil to be done to any hypothetical angel, then it would be very effectual to return good for evil; but that would be the only place where the principle would work. Shame on a cause which needs such dodges of the truth, and such a silly mixture of white-wash to make it look respectable.

Those who with quiet, unobstructive courage refuse to join the majority and rush to arms crying "Vengeance against our foes!" may be called mollycoddles for advocating long-suffering and forbearance, but when the relative values of that kind of mollycoddism stand out in true comparison with the bestial slaying and preyism which characterizes war, and the coarse grades of heroism which it bestows, the supposed coward will occupy no inferior place.

It takes much more courage to stand with the despised minority for peace and the enduring of wrong when the excited majority says, "Let us rend and avenge," than it does to join the rush and flatter ourselves that we are making a most noble sacrifice by jeopardizing life and limb in order to slay and maim others of the common brotherhood of man.

A NATION AT PRAYER

President Wilson, as a consistent pacifist in the one point, at least, called the Nation to prayer, interceding before almighty God for peace in behalf of other nations.

A NATION AT PRAYER

Immediate results, so far as the laying down of arms is concerned were not visible; but upon the divine principle that every effort in prayer or action for the good of another brings a measure of blessing to the thus active unselfish heart, the Wilson government has thus far been preserved from the curse of war. And so long as the people of our land shall so unselfishly hold the welfare of their brethren across the sea, and adjacent to us, so truly at heart that prayers continue to ascend in their behalf, our own peace is secure. But when we harbor rage or the spirit of retaliation against others, hell foment upon our national threshold.

JUSTIFIABLE WARS

Pursuing the thought as to whether wars are not upon occasion justifiable in the light of sacred history, it must be conceded that at times they have been, some perhaps are now, and undoubtedly some phase of future wars wherein right is defended against wrong will be justifiable.

But under what conditions are men justified in taking the sword? Since all combatants insist that theirs is the cause of righteousness, where shall we draw the line?

Did not Moses, as God's general, conduct a conquest by war? Yes. Did not Joshua go with his armies against the heathen to victory? Yes. Did not the Nephite armies upon numerous occasions receive God's council of wisdom in behalf of their cause to victory against a wretchedly wicked and depraved people? Yes, all this is a matter of reliable historical record, but where is the rule or law of God by which nations and armies may determine whether their cause be truly justifiable, without having to rely upon the human judgment alone, which in this important matter is so lamentably at fault.

GOD'S RULE FOR WAR

In this matter the Latter Day Saint people have as just a cause to a feeling of pride in the excellency of the world given to them, and of gratitude to God for the thorough completeness of the restoration of the gospel in covering all points of such vital interests to the welfare of men, as they have in all the calm, spiritual assurance they may have received concerning the validity of repentance from dead works and baptism for the remission of sins.

Let us here read God's rule of procedure for conducting war as given to this church through the Prophet in August, 1833, and it will be found to be commendable and Godlike council, fit to recommend to all nations even to-day.

I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good, that ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God; for he will give unto the faithful, line upon line, precept upon precept; and I will try you, and prove you herewith; and whoso layeth down his life in my cause, for my name's sake shall find it again; even life eternal; therefore, be not afraid of your enemies; . . . for I will prove you in all things, whether you will abide in my covenant, even unto death, that ye may be found worthy; for if ye will not abide in my covenant, ye are not worthy of me; therefore, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of their children to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children. . . . lest I come and smite the whole earth with a curse. . . .

Now, I speak unto you, concerning your families; if men will smite you, or your families, once, and ye bear it patiently and revile not against them, neither seek revenge, ye shall be rewarded; but if ye bear it not patiently, it shall be accounted unto you as being meted out a just measure unto you. And again, if your enemy shall smite you the second time, and you revile not against your enemy, and bear it patiently, your reward shall be an hundredfold. And again, if he shall smite you the third time, and ye bear it patiently, your reward shall be doubled unto you fourfold; and these three testimonies shall stand against your enemy, if he repent not, and shall not be blotted out. And now, verily I say unto you, if that enemy shall escape my vengeance that he be not brought into judgment before me, then ye shall see to it, that ye warn him in my name that he come no more upon you, neither upon your family; even your children's children unto the third and fourth generation; and then if he shall come upon you, or your children, or your children's children unto the third or fourth generation, I have delivered thine enemy into thy hands, and then if thou shalt spare him thou shalt be rewarded for thy righteousness; . . . nevertheless thine enemy is in thine hands, and if thou reward him according to his works, thou are justified. . . .

Behold, this in the law I gave unto my servant, Nephi; and thy father Joseph, and Jacob, and Isaac, and Abraham, and all mine prophets and apostles. And again, this is the law that I gave unto my ancients, that they should not go out unto battle against any nation, kindred, tongue, or people, save I, the Lord, commanded them. And if any nation, tongue, or people should proclaim war against them, they should first lift a standard of peace unto that people, nation, or tongue, and if that people did not accept the offering of peace, neither the second nor the third time, they should bring these testimonies before the Lord, then, I, the Lord, would give unto them a commandment, and justify them in going out to battle . . . and I, the Lord, would fight their battles, and their children's battles and their children's children until they had avenged themselves on all their enemies, to the third and fourth generation; behold, this is an example unto all people, saith the Lord, your God, for justification before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3-6.

The commanding superiority and excellent wisdom of the counsel contained in that revelation is its own guarantee of divine authority. It offers the key for successful pursuit of national tranquility and the only basis upon which a nation may justly claim divine support when wars are thrust upon them. This, through the all comprehensive restoration of the everlasting gospel, the pearl of great price, has been placed within reach of the nations; and when they increase their calamities by rejecting it, God is found to have left them without excuse; and the time speedily cometh when those who know these things and will not, as others, draw the sword to fight, will need to be called together for mutual protection under the law of God.

Let us be ready.

WHERE THE "HOLY WAR" RAGES

Soon after the Turkish rulers were persuaded to draw the sword . . . the Constantinople claimants to authority in Islam proclaimed the often threatened "holy war," urging all Moslems to slay all Christians. The purpose was well known; it was hoped to excite to revolt the scores of millions of Moslems in India, Egypt and French Africa.

That plan failed, but the barbarous Turk was not deprived of his desired feast of slaughter. In Armenia the "holy war" rages, and threatens with extirpation a moiety of the first Christian nation. For the Armenians have that distinction. Sixteen hundred years ago they were a "buffer state" between the Roman and Parthian empires. Their king, Tiridates, converted by Saint Gregory "the Illuminator," set the example later followed by the Emperor Constantine in making Christianity the official religion.

William T. Ellis, a student and traveler personally familiar with the lands and the peoples, in Wednesday's Herald gave two striking illustrations of the frightfulness of the "holy war" in Armenia. Its victims on the lowest estimate are more than in all the persecutions of Christians from Nero to Diocletian, when were enrolled that "glorious company of martyrs" of whom we sing in church. Five hundred Lusitania horrors rolled into one give but a small measure of the hellish deeds done in Armenia.

In all the world there were perhaps 3,000,000 Armenians, half of them in Turkey. Of these about 800,000 are believed to have perished already. . . . —Chicago Herald, October 17, 1915.

THE EMPTY HOUSE

Men and women have been pouring out their vitality since this century began and in the half century before with such prodigality and in so many ways that they have reversed Wordsworth's famous dictum, "The world is too much with us." Many of us have gone so completely out of ourselves that there is no one left at home; the doors and windows stand open, but the house is empty. The winds call to us, the birds sing for us, the stars rise and set in the inaudible song which they sang together at the beginning, nature waits for us at the door to lead us to places of silence and rest; but we see nothing, hear nothing, for we are far from the house.

We are doing a thousand things that are well worth the doing; we travel to the ends of the earth and set our hands to noble tasks; but we have answered so many calls from the fields near and far that there is no longer for some of us any home-keeping. Our hands are so busy that our hearts are tired; our loins are always girded for journeys, our feet are set in so many ways of action that we have no time for shrines and quiet vigils of the spirit.

Many of us have so completely gone out of ourselves into a thousand activities that we have let the fire on the hearth go out, and when night falls and we are spent and weary there is no longer a house of rest for us; like those unhappy men and women who have overstrained their nerves, we go on with hectic, feverish energy long after our working power is gone; we have become automatic and mechanical in our good works instead of being spontaneous, vital, radiating strength and hope. He who came to serve men and to give himself in life and death wholly for men often withdrew himself from his fellows and sought renewal and refreshment of spirit in lonely places. They who work greatly must rest greatly; the vision grows dim and fades when the task takes all the time and strength. It is significant that the prophets often came suddenly out of solitude and as suddenly returned to it.

Bishop Hall, who lived in a stirring time like our own, when great tides of action swept the world, gave some wise counsel for those who are tempted to live wholly outside themselves:

A man need not care for more knowledge than to know himself; he needs no more pleasure than to content himself, no more victory than to overcome himself, no more riches than to enjoy himself. What fools are they that seek to know all other things and are strangers to themselves; . . . that seek to vanquish kingdoms and countries when they are not masters of themselves; that have no hold on their own hearts, yet seek to be possessed of all outward commodities! Go home to thyself first vain heart; and when thou hast made sure work there in knowing, contenting, overcoming, enjoying thyself, spend all the superfluity of thy time and labor upon others.

What Might Be Done

What might be done if men were wise—
What glorious deeds my suffering brother
Would they unite
In love and right,
And cease their scorn of one another.

Oppression's heart might be imbued
With kindling drops of loving kindness;
And knowledge pour
From shore to shore
Light on the eyes of mental blindness.

All slavery, warfare, lies and wrongs,
All vice and crime might die together;
And wine and corn
To each man born,
Be free as warmth in summer weather.

The meanest wretch that ever trod,
The deepest sunk in guilt and sorrow,
Might stand erect
In self-respect
And share the teeming world to-morrow.

What might be done? This might be done,
And more than this, my suffering brother—
More than the tongue
E'er said or sung.
If men were wise and loved each other.
—Charles Mackey.

Across the River

When for me the silent oar
Parts the silent river,
And I stand upon the shore
Of the strange for ever,
Shall I miss the loved and known?
Shall I vainly seek mine own?

Can the bonds that make us here
Know ourselves immortal,
Drop away, like foliage sear,
At life's inner portal?
What is holiest below
Must for ever live and grow.

Therefore dread I not to go
O'er the silent river.
Death, thy hastening oar I know;
Bear me, thou life-giver,
Through the waters, to the shore,
Where mine own have gone before!
—Lucy Larcom.

Work for the Needy

Weary, near crushed, and with grief sorely tried,
They came to the Master, asking release from the load.
"Come, take my yoke upon thee," the dear Lord replied,
"There are others more feeble who fall by thy side;
Thus, work for the needy on life's dreary road,
With faith gazing upward, to thy celestial abode."

"No, no, we're already o'erburdened, and sad is our plight,
'Tis most cruel to ask us something greater to bear."
"My yoke is made easy; my burdens are light"—
The Master thus speaketh, his counsels are right.
Coworkers with him these worthy deeds share,
And in this find relief from their own weight of care.

When striving to walk in the paths he hath trod,
With outstretched hands the law of love to extend,
Thus raising a beacon light, pointing to God,
A return of his peace will on thy own heart descend.
God will give thee a spirit of meekness and grace,
And a stamp of his own beauty within thy heart place.

When a heart filled with love for Christ's needy is found,
There a radiance of sunshine bursts over that soul,
(From all who are noble, good deeds will abound)
And hope that brings gladness, sheds splendor around.
Then faith kindled anew bounds up to its goal,
Till peace like a river flows over the whole.

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 9

The great day of anticipation with all good Latter Day Saints arrived, the dawn of which was hailed with gladness. Almost everywhere you could see the brethren and sisters moving along with lightness of step and cheerfulness of disposition. And the cheery "Good morning" was heard on every hand, while from every direction the Saints wended their way to the Brick Church, where the sixty-second Conference of the church was to convene at ten o'clock a. m.

Many were the greetings exchanged, and introductions made among the brethren. I met many new friends, and quite a number of old friends too, who were anxious to learn of the progress of the work in the homeland, the British Isles.

President Elbert A. Smith called the assembly to order, and the great conference opened with the singing of the good old hymn, "Redeemer of Israel." You may try to imagine what our feelings were during the passage of that glorious hymn! There were many who did not take part in the singing whose eyes were wet with tears. I shall not soon forget my emotions. When I tell you that there were nearly one thousand delegates present you will have an idea of the assembly, and the spirit in which that hymn was sung.

The opening prayer by the Presiding Patriarch, F. A. Smith, was full of intercession, fervor, and pathos, which seemed to breathe the spirit of kindness upon the whole assembly. The same spirit characterized the reading of the lesson by Elder Joseph A. Tanner, president of the Quorum of High Priests, who read the twenty-third Psalm. The lesson was presented in a calm and peaceful manner, that ministered comfort, confidence, and consolation. And as the words, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want," fell upon our ears, I felt confident that the blessing would be with us, and even though we should not be able to trace the hand of the Lord in all things at that time, I felt ready personally to deny myself if need be for the work's sake.

Some have doubts and fears, not particularly with regard to the knowledge of the truth of the work, but in point of progress, organization, and management, and in many other ways. To such I would recommend a visit to the General Conference. Go with a clear and open mind, and with a fixed purpose in mind, even that of conferring with and assisting to a better understanding both self and others in every way possible. There can only be one result, and that will mean the enlargement of heart and mind, together with the wider experience of men and things, circumstances and conditions, that can not possibly be known and understood but by personal contact.

Many of the things and conditions that one might desire to see improved, or to suggest improvement in, would receive the kindest consideration from those whose duty and business it is to supervise any particular department. This has been my experience in the day and age in which we live, 1915.

President Elbert A. Smith read a telegram from President Frederick M. Smith in which he expressed regret for his inability to attend the conference, and his need for our prayers. He desired the work of conference to go on. He said, I am in the Lord's hands. May his spirit be with you to bless. This message seemed to cast a cloud over the conference just for the moment. Our prayers and sympathies were with our President; and according to his expressed desire the conference moved on with faith, courage, and a firmness that assured us of its final success.

President Elbert A. Smith addressed the assembly in a short and pointed speech, in which he said, "It is a time for courage and devotion and faith." Referring to a letter of instruction that was issued by the joint council of Twelve and Presidents of Seventies upon the death of President Joseph Smith he said, And I may say here that when we were reading the "Letter of instruction" and we came to the statement, If there shall exist jealousy or division or rivalry among the two remaining counselors, etc., we turned and smiled at each other, because the only rivalry under heaven we had ever known was the rivalry as to which was to have the privilege to prefer the other in any honor, and the only jealousy that we ever had was for the good name of this church, whose servants it is our ambition to be.

So we see the beautiful spirit and disposition that exists with the members of the First Presidency of the church. Brethren, this statement ought to encourage us onward and upward. Such unity can only have one effect, even that of binding together the whole forces of the Church of Christ on earth. Let us get in line. Our progress may not be rapid, but it will be sure and solid, if built upon such a foundation as given above.

The conference was organized, President Elbert A. Smith, Elders G. T. Griffiths, President of the Quorum of Twelve, and F. A. Smith, presiding patriarch, being unanimously chosen to preside, and provision being made for the successful carrying through of every department of church work throughout the conference.

Among the most interesting of the reports was that of the church recorder, who stated that the net gain for the past year to the church was 2,197, making the present enrollment of membership 73,899. These figures give an idea of the numerical progress of the work. This feature should give us encouragement, for while almost every other body is declining we are making progress, equal to any, if not more rapid, according to our enrollment.

The report of the historian, too, was very interesting. It dealt with the work accomplished during the past year in the several departments of great and grave importance to the welfare, progress, and representation of the status of the Reorganized Church, especially before the world in general.

HERALD readers should take up the General Conference Minutes with the same interest they would the latest novel, or any other work that might come into their hands. They would then read of the efforts that have been made, and of those that the church anticipates making, and it will save the trouble of asking, "What is the church doing?"

April 7, at 8 a. m., found quite a number of the brethren in attendance at the first of the series of lectures given by Elder S. A. Burgess, president of Graceland College, on the history of philosophy.

This series of lectures was given for the benefit of the ministry. The First Presidency are to be complimented for their part in managing the work, for it was truly educational, and can not but be productive of good to those who follow it with attention and interest, though to the untrained mind, much of that which was presented would no doubt be perplexing, and without further study would be meaningless. But this opportunity gave the ministry a splendid idea of the history of philosophy, and of its relation to science and religion, together with the difficulties that the philosopher without the aid of divine revelation, is likely to encounter in the study of nature.

I would not attempt to describe these lectures, for I feel that I have not the ability even if I desired so to do, but I take a few thoughts from my notebook that may stimulate the minds of those who read: Ideas are real things. The idea truly is God, the only real thing. The Spirit of man, if it does not survive the body, then it did not preexist. Intelligence is not material: it is not mud, therefore it is not material. A material universe could not be made out of nothing: from nothing nothing can come. Does the idea exist before the thing, or after? The first philosophy concerned God and intelligence. Learning is not always virtuous. Space is the limit of the material. God is a being; we are becoming. Everything possesses form and being, and is becoming. The seed possesses the form of the tree within itself. God does not change. You are what you think you are. Our ideas are our own. No man can change your mind, if you refuse to change it. The true mind is that which is in tune with God.

These are some of the thoughts that appealed to me during my experience at the lectures of Elder Burgess. Brother Burgess is in no wise bound by these notes. I simply record them for the benefit of others. And if I have not been a good student I crave his pardon, and assure him of strict attention to the next series that I have the pleasure of attending.

April 8 we were again entertained with the first of the series of lectures upon the subject "The history of education," by Elder F. M. McDowell, also of Graceland College. These lectures were most instructive, and none could fail to receive benefit from them. Commencing with the ancient history of nonprogressive education, he outlined its progress right up to the present age.

I herewith append a few thoughts taken from my notebook, and I submit them to you upon the same conditions as the former notes:

Doing is learning: to learn you must do. Types of mind: The sponge, the funnel, the sieve: The sponge—takes all; the funnel—all goes through; the sieve—catches the solid. Twenty-five scholars should be the limit for each teacher. Teaching should preserve the mind, strengthen the character, give courage to each scholar.

Family training, the Jews were compelled to teach. They taught from the Scriptures. From these they learned to read, write, spell and pronounce, and also to speak, for public discourse. It is said that you can not find a Jewess in a house of ill-fame. This fact is due to the method of family training. Regarding intelligence, they had a way of bringing out the ability of each pupil by putting a scholar in charge of a class, thus testing his knowledge, and giving him a chance to succeed.

Temperance means temperance in thought. The hobbyist thinks in a circle. He is insane in part. He can not see the point presented by the other fellow. He is not well balanced.

We should not forget home life, home life is neglected too much. The downfall of the home means the downfall of the nation. We should educate the whole man. Even Saints need to pay attention to this feature of life.

The Romans were practical, though they borrowed their ideas from the Greeks. The Greeks had the idea. The Romans had the practice. The Romans took Christianity and through its influence they obtained the power over the world, hence the apostasy. The Romans made a great mistake in trying to adapt the Greek system to their condition; this meant ruin to the Romans. Each individual should have his own system. Your individual requirements, known to yourself only, you only can successfully supply.

I am pleased that I had the pleasure of meeting the brethren of my quorum in council for the first time since my call to the office of seventy, a period of thirteen years. I was ordained under the hands of Elder J. W. Rushton, Joseph Smith, and R. C. Evans, then of the First Presidency, so I think I waited very patiently for my introduction to the quorum. I was received very kindly, and all the brethren gave me a right hearty welcome, and our confidence was such in a short time that we might have known each other all our lives. The only brother known to me personally in the quorum was Elder John Davis, who is still smiling, and looks as bright and cheerful as of yore. And it was his express desire that I remember him to all the good Saints of Saints of the British Isles.

I am pleased to note that these series of letters have been of interest to the Saints of the mission, and I hereby acknowledge their appreciation, as expressed by letter and otherwise.

Your brother,
W. H. GREENWOOD.

Rise of the Work in Battle Creek

About two years ago I came to the Battle Creek (Michigan) Sanitarium for physical examination, also with the hope of learning foods that would build up my health, as it was quite poor; and this I felt was proper to do, as I had often been administered to, and it seemed to please our heavenly Father to withhold the blessing needed.

I left home, Lamoni, Iowa, and before leaving visited the Herald Publishing House with the hope of learning that a number of Saints lived at this place—a city of thirty-two thousand population—but to my disappointment I could learn of none through the church recorder or the subscription list of the church papers. I learned, however, through Sister Cave, of Lamoni, of the address of one Saint living here.

On arriving, I visited the city papers, asking through them that any members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints noticing the ad should please meet at a stated place for services on Sunday.

The result was that after a few Sundays we had gathered twelve Saints that indeed were like sheep without a shepherd, and were very hungry for the gospel news and spiritual food. We continued our work and regular services, introducing the Sunday school, Religio studies, holding prayer services, and preaching on Sundays.

We have gradually increased our membership until at present date we have a live Sunday school and Religio with about a half dozen who have not placed their letters here with us as yet, for the reason that they may find it necessary to get to another vicinity to locate.

A number of these new additions have been received through baptism, while others have noticed the news stating we were holding regular services here in the city, and hastening to find the flock, came to us and were received with joy by the gathered ones.

I may just here state that a number of our new members recently baptized, have come out from the Utah church and were members of it in this city. The Utah faction had made about twenty-five converts when we arrived in this place, and it was through their elders that we learned of some of our Saints living here. They had baptized two of our members, and when we arrived and learned this we felt that two of our precious sheep had been captured (and indeed they had, for it was told them that the Utah church is the same as the Reorganized, so they stated to us), as these Saints had not had the branch privileges to any extent and therefore had not developed, as they had been isolated for some time.

The rest of our members here had been visited often, but these had had branch privileges, and through teaching and studying had learned their duty and place, so they were not moved from their position, and we feel they were especially strengthened by the Spirit and past teaching and experience in the gospel life.

We at once began to correct impressions left by the erroneous Utah teaching among their converts, also visited their elders, telling them we expected to so do and inform the people of the truth, inviting the elders to attend our services, which they did once, and we offered them half of the service to reply, which they declined.

The little band of Saints worked faithfully and the work grew and developed. The Lord was very good to us, and drew near, imparting the gifts of the gospel. A number of things were given us which encouraged us and revealed the development of the work, showing to us that if we were faithful a branch would be organized. Some of our young men were told they would be called to the ministry. After a few months this was fulfilled, and we have ordained an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, who are faithful and so far proving true to their sacred trust.

We may also state that the Battle Creek Sanitarium has shown great kindness toward us, and permits our baptisms to be performed in the indoor pools where we have heated water and steam heated rooms.

The difference between the Utah church and the Reorganized is understood by them, as you will note by their being forbidden the pool for their baptisms.

The revered district officers and missionaries here in this district have gained the tender regard and love of these earnest Saints, and I trust shall ever hold the same through worthiness.

We have grown spiritually, but have failed to keep up our finances, until we are about eighty dollars behind and have no place for services except in our homes; even this we are pleased to have, yet know we need a public place so as to reach the many honest people here. This will seem strange perhaps, until you learn that our men are principally young married men with families that have no homes, with rent and expenses to meet monthly in this great manufacturing city, and during the winter a number could not get work, so had to go in debt for their family needs. In this condition they could not help the church work here, and as you know, a missionary can not live without food, clothing, a place to stay, etc., and therefore with all the sacrifice we felt we could make as a little branch, we yet had to borrow money or let the child branch go without proper care, which the district officers advised us not to do, and the work spiritually has increased as we have noted.

Like all other branches, we have our trials and weaknesses, yet feel we are kindly remembered by our heavenly Father, and trust him to care for the work to the extent of our faithfulness.

In behalf of our beloved bishop's agent of the district, we wish to say he has visited us often and looked after our interests; but we did not desire his help so long as we felt we could care for ourselves, yet we have had to accept a small amount during the last two months.

Our burden is made somewhat heavier by having some aged ones to care for, yet the city superintendent of the poor has given us a small amount each month for them and wishes to send them to the county home, but they can not endure the thought of being deprived of the association of the Saints, therefore we are reluctant to encourage them to go there.

Any Saints coming here, or passing through, will be very welcome to stop off and visit us, especially the ministry.

I hope to remain your worthy brother and servant,

ROY M. YOUNG.

BATTLE CREEK, MICHIGAN, 285 Champion Street.

[The following letter from Brother U. W. Greene to the Saints of the British Isles Mission assembled in mission conference is sent from England with the request that it be published in the HERALD.—EDITORS.]

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, July 15, 1915.

To the Officers and Members of the British Mission Conference, Greeting: I am sorry that conditions are such that it is impossible for me to attend the conference this year. For a long time my companion in life has been in failing health, and, by consultation with the First Presidency, we have arranged to relieve her of home cares and sojourn by the seaside for a season, trusting that God will grant a return of health, thus enabling me to prosecute the work assigned me at the late General Conference.

You have assembled this year under the most trying conditions that have ever confronted you. Many of your young men and officers have responded to the call of "king and country." Our local organizations are partially disorganized, and your plans for the future upset. Because of the fiery trial that is coming upon the earth, and that rests so heavily upon your country, your hearts will be sad, and you will face the future with anxious forebodings. Not only will you wonder what the future has in store for the beloved Saints who are at the battle's front, but what it has in store for the work of God, we all love.

There can be no safety for us, unless we stand in holy places, keeping the covenant of the gospel, that the seal of God, his Holy Spirit, may rest upon us, and the destroying angel pass us by as he did Israel in days of old. I daily pray that God will watch over his Saints in all the lands distracted by this terrible war, and bring them through in safety; or, if they must lay down their lives, that God will grant them part in his great salvation, when the king of peace comes to reign over his own.

As all things are done by common consent in the church, the conference will select its own presiding officers; but I suggest that the associate minister in charge, Brother W. H. Greenwood, the bishop, Brother R. May, and such other brethren as are needed, be elected to preside. Other officers will be elected according to the emergency of the occasion.

There is nothing I care to recommend by way of special legislation, as I am not familiar with your needs. Brethren Greenwood and May will be able to do all that will be necessary, and I refer you to them.

In these days that try men's souls, it will be necessary for all who are able to contribute of their earthly substance towards the support of the work. To this end may God give the willing heart and mind. There will doubtless be many calls for help from the needy, and we should not close our bowels of mercy towards them. There will be many poor, maimed men, who will need sympathy and help, the offering of which will give opportunity for presenting the gospel message.

My dear brethren and sisters, I pray that God will be very near to you in this conference, comforting by his presence, supporting by his promises, and giving the assurance of your acceptance with him. May he pour his Spirit upon you as never before, and strengthen you for the conflict against the world, the flesh, and the Devil.

I shall welcome the day when my hands may be liberated and I can come to you with the wonderful message of life: not that you have not heard it, but that I may strengthen your faith in God and his work.

May the peace of God that passeth understanding be and abide with you for ever.

Your brother and colaborer in the Lord,

55 Grant Street.

U. W. GREENE.

OZARK, MISSOURI, September 27, 1915.

Editors Herald: Seven years ago the past summer, I allowed myself to drift away from this work. I was first influenced by reading the work of D. H. Bays and becoming convinced in all sincerity that he established his points against the cause. I united with a sectarian church. I tried sincerely to lead a Christian life while connected with that church, and might have succeeded had I any inducements. Seeing that the order I belonged to encouraged different sins and vices, I finally was moved with a desire to commit some of these, which I did. I drifted along in this way, until I became disgusted with religion, and not wanting to be a hypocrite, I finally pulled off from that organization.

On the night of August 17, 1915, my mind began to reflect back to the time I was a Latter Day Saint. I remember that I had not only resisted temptation while in the Latter Day Saint Church, but had no desire to commit any of the sins and vices I had since drifted into. I considered that this alone was sufficient evidence that I was in the right church formerly, when I was a Latter Day Saint.

I asked God for wisdom as to what further steps I should take. I asked his forgiveness for the wrongs I have done. I was impressed strongly from day to day to reunite with the Latter Day Saint Church and take up my duty where I left it off. Without haste, and with all consideration, I asked the branch I formerly belonged to, at Springfield, Missouri, to forgive me for all I had said and done against the church and the work the church is engaged in. Being outside the kingdom because of having been cut off, and in order to be again reinstated, I was rebaptized on September 19, 1915, by Elder A. W. Duemler, at Springfield, Missouri, and confirmed the same day by Elders J. W. Quinly and A. W. Duemler. I am now restored to the church, and again bear testimony that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is not only the true successor to the original church, organized April 6, 1830, but I know also it is the true band of Latter Day Saints.

During the short time I have been back with the church, I rejoice in the promises of God in his word to those who pay tithing and offerings.

I trust that if this letter comes to the attention of some Latter Day Saint weak in the cause, he will be persuaded to consider the lesson I have had in my past experiences, already explained. To such as may be wavering and weak, I wish to say that you may overcome temptations and remain with this great work, which is a marvelous work and a wonder.

If I have in any way offended any, I sincerely ask their pardon. I also ask the prayers of the Saints in my behalf, that I may hold out faithful to the end.

Your brother,

QUINCY ANDERSON.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA, October 5, 1915.

Editors Herald: The years have passed into history and multiplied into more than a third of a century since I preached my first sermon at a district conference. Few, if any, of those who heard that sermon were present at the conference just closed here. Most have gone to their account in the beyond. And thus it is that the dial of time marks the passing moments until one by one we are called to pass to the great beyond! Are we making the needed preparation?

In review this morning I leave home for a summer's campaign, freighted with hope. The incidents of chief import recalled are the various reunions attended and the manifestations of spiritual power attendant. At Clitherall, Minnesota, the home of the few remaining "Cutlerites," and where the privilege was granted to listen to a funeral sermon (?) by their president, we had a time of rejoicing. Here we were permitted the services of Leon Gould as stenographer, and whose hand has not lost its cunning. Next a three day's reunion at Fargo, North Dakota, and where the spiritual manifestation was very marked. Thence to Logan, North Dakota, where another spiritual time was had, and the presence of the angels enjoyed. Both here and in Minnesota the Saints are not forgetful of the financial needs of the church institutions and the church at large, and here a goodly collection was taken for the Jerusalem Mission as well.

Next a stop is made in Minneapolis, where we always feel "at home," and thence to Erie Beach, Canada, where a real reunion was witnessed, and especially so at the social services, at the last one of the series one hundred fourteen testimonies being borne in the usual length of time! Accompanying the minister in charge we go next to Low Banks, Canada, where we receive a royal welcome, and where new acquaintances were made that we trust will never be forgotten. The Canadian Saints, as well as those on this side of the line, are royal entertainers.

Sisters Hunter and Hill did yeoman service in shorthand work, while Sister Miller in Canada, and Sister Shakespeare, in North Dakota, were faithful with longhand service. With nightly service back across Canada and over Sunday with the Chatham Branch, we pass once more into Uncle Sam's domain, to cross the line once again for a short stay in Windsor, 'mid a royal welcome, and over Sunday in Detroit under the influence of a Saintly welcome.

Westward ho! we wend our way, making Muscatine and Nevada one-night objective points each, these reunions contributing to Graceland's needed aid. Thence home for a two night's stay, and on to Stewartsville reunion, where another feast awaited, and where Sister Lehman contributed her shorthand aid. Thence a return to Lamoni to be present at the reunion there, for the second time in all the history of such a gathering at this place. This over and some physical labor performed, commensurate with our ability to occupy in this way, when a night message bids us hasten to North Platte, Nebraska, where physical endurance was taxed along our special line, and where we had among the most pleasing experiences of our patriarchal existence. Sister Richards did our writing in longhand.

Boarding the train at 8 p. m. for this place, at Lamoni, meant an all night ride, with snatches of sleep, to arrive in Omaha at seven the following morning. Here we breakfasted on two sandwiches and a glass of milk, and boarded a flyer for our destination. It had a diner on, and when noon came we were ravenously hungry, but paying about three prices for a meal was neither in harmony with inclination nor purse, besides we thought of the counsel given to others to sacrifice the gum, candy, peanuts, etc., and send the savings to help liquidate college and church debts, and felt that personal application of the advice offered to others would but be showing our "faith by works," hence abstained till the supper hour.

Turning the face eastward, western Iowa is reached, and so far an encouraging measure of both spiritual and financial success has been reached, one family of three giving one hundred dollars for Graceland! The Saints seem disposed to succor the college so that her doors will not be closed, and yet the responses so far are but a commencement of what is needed to keep the institution open! Have we forgotten that fifty cents per capita will save the institution? that three dollars per capita will pay both the church and college debt?

It is OUR institution! belongs to the whole church! Let US free it from DEBT!

The Bishop has made me a financial helper along all lines. May I hear from you at Lamoni, Iowa? Did you read the letter from the brother who said he owned just as much stock in our institutions as the president of the church, or any other member? Did you believe him? I did.

Very sincerely,
J. W. WIGHT.

BRUSH, COLORADO, October 5, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am here all alone. I know of no Saints nearer than Denver, one hundred miles away. I have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon in six years, and may never hear another, but I hope I may. The Methodist church is the only church we have here at Hillrose. All except myself, who belonged to other churches, have united with the Methodist people. I was asked to unite with them and live up to the light that I had. I answered that I could not be a Methodist. I think I have too much light to be one.

I do not know that these people would allow one of our elders to preach in their church, but I would like to see a good man try it. We would only want the best at first. These people will not believe we are not the same as the Utah Mormons. I have tried to tell them different, but they think otherwise, and some say they know what they are talking about.

I am a member of the ladies' aid and help them in that way all I can.

Hoping some time I may be able to help more in the church work, I am,

Your lone but not lonely sister in Christ,
MRS. M. F. INGERSOLL.

Spring River

We came to Carthage, Missouri, the last day of August, put up the tent and commenced meeting the following night. We held forth here for three weeks. Brethren W. W. Chrestensen and O. P. Sutherland assisted me some of the time. Saints came over from Webb City also, a part of the time, and helped in different ways. We did not baptize any, but left some near the fold. Brother and Sister Green, Brother and Sister Jenkins, and a number of good Saints live here. All tried to make the meeting a success.

Utah elders were out one night. These people have a small following at that place. The night I preached on the differences between our church and that of Utah there was not one of these who came out. They do not like to talk about the differences. We should not call these people Mormons, but should call them Brighamites. They have disgraced the word Mormon and we should tell the people its real meaning and help to make the name honorable.

I shipped the tent to Joplin and stored it in Brother J. H. Graves's barn for the winter. I then went to Coody's Bluff, Oklahoma, and began meetings on the twenty-fourth. We have a noble band of Saints scattered about this place. The Christian people had been assailing us there, threatening us with a man of fame. We held forth three weeks, however, and baptized five adults, and only had a little complaint offered by one of their members. We baptized one Adventist lady and her husband.

The work was started here in this way: Sister Reed, a noble Saint, had heard the gospel in Pennsylvania as presented by I. M. Smith and others, and obeyed it. She and her husband moved to Oklahoma. She distributed tracts and wrote to me wanting me to hold meetings. I was not able to answer her call for about two years, but she kept on asking me to come. I finally answered her request, and now we have about thirty-five members here, so you see what one person can do, and the end is not yet. Sister Reed has moved away, but others have come in with the same zeal, and the work is moving onward.

I am now preaching at a point eight miles north of this place in a schoolhouse fourteen miles from the railroad. We have about a dozen Saints here. They are conducting a Sunday school and are getting along quite well.

We need more preachers. There are only four of us in this district, and we could use ten or fifteen good men filled with God's Holy Spirit. What are we to do? We have the men, but can not support them. We wonder why it is so hard for some to pay their tithing. Some pay and others do not. May the Lord bless all and help them to do their duty. Some of our people are making a great sacrifice. They love the work as their own lives. Others love the things of this world. Jesus said there would be five wise and five foolish. Have we ever asked ourselves, "Is it I?"

I am blessed this year in my work.

Your brother,
LEE QUICK.

Pottawattamie

It is with profound feelings that I prepare a few lines for the sacred pages of the HERALD. I am happy to say I am well and rejoicing in the Maser's blessed work. God has been mindful of his dear children in this part. My work has surely been delightful this year. I have had the tender co-operation of God and his Saints, which is pleasant to think upon.

I just closed a three weeks' meeting at Underwood, Iowa, which shall long be remembered by me. There are many dear Saints there. At the close of these meetings seven souls presented themselves for baptism, three fathers, three young men, and one young woman. A happy band of us drove to Council Bluffs in cars to attend to the baptisms. The Saints there had the font in readiness. Following the baptisms we had a confirmation meeting, which was grand. A goodly degree of God's loving power was with us, which filled our souls with praise to him.

Brother John Carlile is president of Underwood Branch. He is a conscientious man. I found in him a beautiful spirit. He and his brother, Joshua Carlile, gave me much help by way of assisting me in services. Sister Clark Haws and her sister, Mrs. Aney, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, did nobly in furnishing music and song. So altogether we felt repaid for the efforts put forth. We could all realize great results if we would only put forth more determined efforts.

It was hard to say the parting words when we came on to Boomer, where Brother Alfred Darrington met me. We preached here at eight p. m. to a nice crowd of Saints and friends. A goodly number of Saints from Underwood came for the meeting last night. We had a profitable and enjoyable service.

So the work is onward and upward in Pottawattamie District. May God continue to bless and move his Saints to diligence, is the prayer of one who delights in his boundless love and mercy.

W. E. HADEN.

Thinking, or talking, or writing about religion is not religion, any more than a treatise on the philosophy of eating is food. Religion is an experience. Your life is your religion—not your theory of it. Religion is a life.

Bishop's agent reported: Receipts, $511.50; expenditures, $503. Reunion committee reported probable deficit in joint reunion association funds. District presidency authorized to appoint committee to be known as reunion committee, to canvass matter of holding reunion in this district and to report findings to the June conference, Charles L. Holmes, Dale S. Holmes, John Constance being appointed. Standing auditing committee was authorized, D. S. Holmes, J. W. Bean, J. L. Terry being appointed for one, two and three years as named. J. G. Cole of Peoria was recommended for appointment as chorister. Following was adopted: "Resolved, That all brethren recommended for ordination to the priesthood be ordained by a vote of the district conference." Delegates to General Conference chosen: O. E. Sade, C. E. Willey, Henry C. Ziegenhorn, Kitty Pine, Albert Sackfield, Joseph Asa, Elizabeth Cole, those present empowered to cast full delegate vote, majority and minority. Those attending were much blessed and edified by the presence of President E. A. Smith. President Smith occupied in three preaching services with excellent liberty, and spoke in the Saturday afternoon business session. His remarks were much appreciated. He bore a strong testimony of confidence in President F. M. Smith, as the man of the hour and for the place. The Saints seemed to be of one heart and one mind concerning President E. A. Smith that God was blessing him for the good of his people. This was a good conference. Adjourned to meet at Rock Island, second Saturday in June. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clark Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

NEW YORK.—October 16 and 17, Niagara Falls, Gomer T. Griffiths and district presidency presiding. Bishop's agent's report and report of auditors thereupon accepted. Grace E. Johnson, secretary, 343 South Karlov Avenue.

Correction

The following and closing part of the Manitowaning, Ontario, branch letter, except for the first line, was by oversight omitted from the HERALD of last week:

"As Brother Brown left for the district conference, October 1, the writer was called upon to conduct the funeral services of the only daughter of Brother and Sister David Arnold, a very intelligent little girl of eight years and two months. It was certainly a great shock to the bereaved parents. This child had only been sick about four days.

"October 14, 1915.

"W. R. SMITH."

Appointment of Orchestra Leader

The first appointment to be made in the orchestral department of the general choir movement is that of Brother Arthur Mills, of Independence, the First Presidency approving of the same. Brother Mills is to proceed at once to organize a full orchestra at Independence, which will be known as The National Orchestra. This orchestra will act as an accompanying body of players in our combined choir work, as well as a solo body.

A. N. HOXIE, Jr.

Died

Briggs, December 14, 1858, was a charter member of Gallands Grove Branch, has been a consistent church member ever since. Services in Saints' church, Persia, in charge of C. J. Hunt, sermon by Charles E. Butterworth. The large attendance gave evidence of the high esteem in which Sister Hall was held.

The War and the Jews

Will the Jews get back to their own land of Palestine as one result of the world war? Many students of history and Bible prophecy think they will. The man who is said to know more about the Jews,—their past history and their present situation,—than any other living man is David Baron, of London. He is a distinguished Jewish Christian missionary and leader of missions to the Jews in several of the warring nations. Mr. Baron has written an article on the Jews and their land that throws much light on the question as to what effect the war will have upon Palestine and the Jews. This article will be published in two numbers of The Sunday School Times, an every-week religious paper, issued in Philadelphia. The publishers will be glad to send free copies of the issues containing Mr. Baron's article to readers of the HERALD who will send a request to The Sunday School Times, 1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Book Reviews

THE PLEASURES OF THE WORLD.—John Preston, whose new Latter Day Saint novel, "Peter Bosten," is soon to appear, has written a three-act comedy-drama entitled, The Pleasures of the World. It is now on sale at the Herald Office for 25c postpaid. Bound in an attractive cover, it makes a booklet of about 68 pages, of artistic make-up. This play is designed particularly for special entertainments where a small price of admission is charged, and takes about two hours to present. There are 6 men and 6 women or girl characters, and only one stage-setting. The lines of the piece are bright and the situations tense and realistic. The plot centers around a family fireside and concerns modern people. The father is so conservative in his ideas about worldly "pleasures," that he constantly harps on the subject, finally driving his elder son from home. Time passes, and sadness has gripped the lives of the whole family. Joe, the son, does not turn up, and the home that was once happy, though frequently "upset" with the father's dogmatism, is now utterly lonely and miserable. Of course, everything comes out right in the end; but the way it is brought about forms a fabric of fact-fiction that will be exceedingly interesting to both young and old. As one reader remarked, there is a "sermon in the play"; but it is a sermon in different form than that to which we are accustomed. It will probably be considered more of a diversion, however, by many "critics," than a "sermon." Nevertheless, there is food for thought in it, as well as argument. It is so constructed that it makes just as good reading as it does material for stage presentation. Finally, it is something new and novel in church literature.

Timely Reading

"The Pleasures of the World," a 3-act drama by John Preston, written expressly for Latter Day Saints, is selling rapidly.

Branches like San Francisco, Brooklyn, Saint Louis, Saint Joseph, and smaller ones have ordered it in quantities and are arranging to produce it.

As reading matter this play is very much worth while. It is nicely gotten up, and the price is unheard-of for such a work.

We are offering this play as publishers, but will put you in touch with the author if you desire to produce it or learn something about productions already undertaken. Takes two hours to enact.

68 pages of interesting
fact-fiction

Price, 25c

A Religio Play

"Truants," (also by John Preston), a one-act play written especially for Religio program work, we also have on sale.

The right to produce it goes with 7 copies of the play.

Buy a copy and you will want to present it. Only 6 characters; takes half an hour to enact. Price 25c postpaid.

Do You Read Labels?

Domestic science teachers and food authorities are urging the housewife to carefully read the labels on all food articles.

The laws of most States compel food manufacturers to print the ingredients of their products on the label, and this enables consumers to distinguish healthful foods from those which may be deleterious.

High-grade baking powders are made of pure cream of tartar, derived from grapes. Royal Baking Powder is a type of the highest grade. It is healthful beyond a doubt and the safest and best to use.

The low-grade baking powders are made from alum, a mineral acid salt, or phosphate of lime.

Consumers can learn the character of the baking powder by referring to the label, which must state whether the contents include cream of tartar, alum or phosphate.

TEMPLES TO ORDER

Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples.—Hosea 8: 14.

We are interested in statements made by Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah church, at their [his] late semiannual conference. We quote from his address of October 3, as it appears in the Improvement Era for November:

WHY A TEMPLE WAS BUILT IN CANADA

I am reminded of one or two other items that I intended to mention. As you all know, we have been authorized and have undertaken, to build a temple in Alberta, Canada, and we have already expended very large sums of money upon that building. It is in course of erection and is progressing rapidly. The corner stone was laid only a week or so ago. The walls are being put up and it is nearing or will be nearing, soon, its completion, and readiness for the ordinances of the house of God. We took it there—why? Perhaps just one instance that was brought to our minds yesterday, or the day before, may illustrate. A young man, who has filled a good mission and returned home, living away off in the northern part of British Columbia, still clinging to the faith and wearing the harness of his ministry, doing all that he can for the benefit of mankind, desires to get married and to be married right. He lives hundreds and hundreds of miles away from a temple; he has been on a mission for years and has exhausted all his means; he returns home almost penniless, and has found some good girl who is willing to enter life with him on the ground floor, and he says to us: "What can I do? I want to begin a home for myself; it is according to the law of nature and of God; but I haven't the means to go to the temple. Will it be right for me to be married here, and then when I get the means sufficient to go to a temple, go and be sealed for time and for all eternity?"

Well, what can you do under circumstances of that kind? All we could do was to say to him: "Go to the nearest bishop or elder of the church that you can find, and with our permission and approval ask him to unite you in marriage for time, and as soon as you are able to reach a temple, where you can go to the altar and be united by the power of God, and not of man, for time and for all eternity, go and get your union sealed by the power of God that will unite you for eternity as well as for time, and will bring your children unto you under the bond of the new and everlasting covenant, as heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ." What else could we say to him? Nothing else, so we said it; but by and by we will have a temple up there, and those who are in these circumstances will not be compelled to waste all their substance in travel to come to a temple here. We were in hopes, not many years ago, of being able to build another temple near the borders of the United States, in Mexico; but that nation's unfortunate people, oppressed by rulers ambitious for power at the cost of the lives of their fellow men, have driven out or expelled, practically, our people from their land.

NEW TEMPLE TO BE BUILT IN HAWAII

Now, away off in the Pacific Ocean are various groups of islands, from the Sandwich Islands down to Tahiti, Samoa, Tonga, and New Zealand. On them are thousands of good people, dark-skinned but of the blood of Israel. When you carry the gospel to them they receive it with open hearts. They need the same privileges that we do, and that we enjoy, but these are out of their power. They are poor, and they can't gather means to come up here to be endowed, and sealed for time and eternity, for their living and their dead, and to be baptized for their dead. What shall we do with them? Heretofore, we have suffered the conditions that exist there, and have adopted the best measures that we know how, always looking to the better and fuller requirements of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Now, I say to my brethren and sisters this morning that we have come to the conclusion that it would be a good thing to build a temple that shall be dedicated to the ordinances of the house of God, down upon one of the Sandwich Islands, so that the good people of those islands may reach the blessing of the House of God within their own borders, and that the people from New Zealand, if they do not become strong enough to require a house to be built there also, by and by, can come to Laie, where they can get their blessings and return home and live in peace, having fulfilled all the requirements of the gospel the same as we have the privilege of doing here.

It is moved that we build a temple at Laie Oahu, Territory of Hawaii. All who are in favor of it, will please manifest it by raising the right hand. (All hands raised.) Contrary minded by the same sign. I do not see a contrary vote.—Improvement Era, November, 1915.

GETTING "MARRIED RIGHT"

We notice first the awful predicament of a worthy returned missionary who desires to be "married right," but finds himself hundreds and hundreds of miles from a temple and with a very, very empty pocketbook,—in both particulars quite unlike his church leaders.

No one can understand how this question of getting "married right" must worry him unless he knows what it means to be "married right" from that man's standpoint.

In the notorious so-called revelation on celestial marriage, accepted by our Utah friends as divine, appears the promise to one who is "married right" and is "sealed" to his wife by "him who is anointed" that in the next world he shall "pass by the angels and the gods, which are set there," to "exaltation and glory in all things," and become a "God" and rule over the angels. Yes, even if he "commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies," providing he does not "commit murder, whereby they shed innocent blood," he shall march right past the gods and the angels to exaltation and glory,—providing, always, he has been "married right."

Blasphemy, drunkenness, thieving, treachery, adultery, will not stop his upward progress into eternal glory with the retinue of his wives; but a failure to get "married right," because a temple was not convenient and money was scarce, brings him to a full and eternal stop, and makes a doorkeeper or a chamber-maid of one who might have been a god. You see, it is not a matter of merit or morals; it is merely a matter of "marrying right,"—a question of forms and ceremonies.

Suppose this unfortunate, returned missionary gets married away up there in Canada, trusting to luck to get money enough to go to Utah later and get "married right," but, alas, his life is cut short before his ambition is realized, and when he attempts to pass by those "gods and angels" to his "exaltation" he is halted and interrogated:

"Did you ever commit murder?"

"I never did."

"Were you ever guilty of adultery?"

"Never."

"Did you ever steal, bear false witness, or cheat your neighbor?"

"I never did."

"Were you 'married right'; according to the 'celestial law' and in a temple?"

"I was not. I was stranded a long way from a temple, without money, so I got married like any poor 'Reorganite,' by a minister of the gospel."

"Too bad, too bad. Here is where you stop. You can not pass by to your exaltation. You must become a servant of some more forehanded brother who was 'married right.'"

To add to the chagrin of this poor fellow, we may imagine that another man comes along just at this juncture, and is interrogated:

"Did you ever commit adultery?"

"Well now, do I have to answer that question?—it is really very embarrassing."

"Well, perhaps not. Did you ever steal?"

"I may have yielded to temptation along that line at times. I do not like to incriminate myself."

"Did you ever commit murder?"

"I did kill a man once; but he was a Gentile. His blood was not innocent."

"Ahem—well, were you 'married right,' according to the new covenant of 'celestial' marriage?"

"I was, in the temple in Salt Lake City."

"Good! Pass on by the gods and the angels to your exaltation."

Of course from our viewpoint such a thing never could happen; because we believe that men are judged according to their works, and if ever they are exalted it will be because they are like Christ, who was "anointed above his fellows" because he "loved righteousness and hated iniquity."

But this poor returned missionary believes this spurious revelation on celestial marriage which makes exaltation depend on forms and ceremonies in temples, and so to him the very thing that we have outlined seems possible—if he is inclined to reason things out to their logical conclusion.

No wonder he is very anxious to be "married right." So a temple must be built in Canada. It must be speeded up so as to be completed before this poor missionary dies, loses his exaltation, his wife, his children, and becomes eternally a bachelor-valet to more fortunate individuals, who have been "married right" and so have passed on by the gods and angels and are joyously busy with many wives peopling worlds without end.

COMPLACENT TEMPLE BUILDERS

The next thing that we note is the extreme ease, the sang-froid, with which temples are projected and built, without so much as a hint from on high that they are desired.

The law is that God shall give commandment when a temple is to be built: "My holy house, which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name. (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 12.) God always commands when a temple is to be built.

The early church operated under this rule. Joseph Smith understood it well. During his absence, at one time, an effort was made to begin a temple at Far West without revelation. We read:

The same day, August 5, the Presidency, High Council, and all the authorities of the church in Missouri, assembled in council at Far West, and unanimously resolved to go on moderately and build a house unto the name of the Lord in Far West, as they had means, and appointed Edward Partridge treasurer, to receive all the donations and subscriptions for the erection of the house of the Lord; Isaac Morley to be his secretary.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 54.

A little later they discovered their error and concluded to wait until the Lord spoke. So again we read:

Also voted unanimously, that it is the opinion of this council, that there is sufficient room in this country, for the churches to continue gathering from abroad; also that the building of the house of the Lord be postponed, till the Lord shall reveal it to be his will to be commenced.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 89.

Andrew Jensen, a Utah authority, tells us how this happened. He says:

When Joseph arrived there, he counseled that the building of that house should be postponed until the Lord should reveal it to be his will to have it commenced.—Historical Record, vol. 7, p. 434.

In every instance when a temple was built in the early church, special and direct revelation was received, in harmony with the law that God had given that he always commands the people when his holy house is to be built.

With the advent of Brigham Young as ruler over the faction that went to Utah, a marked change was instituted. No more bald or succinct statement of his perverted policy can be made than was made by Brigham Young himself when planning the great temple at Salt Lake, the mother temple of a growing brood: Let us see how the brood began. As reported in his own publication, he said:

Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is a wicked and slothful servant who doeth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his master's will. I know a temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? If the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this temple. In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the temple on paper, and then if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 391.

Truly it might have been said, in the language of Hosea: "Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples."

In a general way the policy of Brigham Young has been carried out, and is still being carried out, minus his cynical and blasphemous way of presenting it.

So even at this late date, in the good year of our Lord 1915, a temple may be launched quite as casually as in the days of Brigham Young, and there is no occasion for God to take any notice at all of the proceeding.

The presiding officer merely stands up in the [his] conference, and in the midst of a speech on the general subject of temple building, announces the need of a new temple in a certain spot, formulates a motion, puts it to vote, announces the result, and orders the temple, almost without pause or punctuation, in effect something like this: "We think we need a temple in Hawaii—it is moved that we have a temple in Hawaii—all in favor of having a temple in Hawaii raise the right hand I do not see a contrary vote it is so ordered."

It looks easy. It is easy. It is as easy as voting to build a new theater or a new town hall. But some way we feel that God ought to appear in this temple building, from the moment when he makes the initial move in his own due time, giving revelation to a reverent people, until the capstone is laid,—all the time overshadowing the undertaking with his authority, his power, and his blessing.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

WOMAN SUFFRAGE DEFEATED.—Woman suffrage was defeated in New York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania on the 2d by large majorities.

NO NEW CONSTITUTION.—The proposed new constitution for New York State, involving the short ballot and other reforms, was lost by a large majority in the election of the 2d.

CHINA REJECTS PROPOSAL.—The Chinese Government has rejected the proposal of Japan, Great Britain, and Russia for the postponement of the effort to reestablish a monarchical form of government in China until after the European war. The powers are assured that order will be maintained in the event of the change in government.

LAW UNCONSTITUTIONAL.—The Supreme Court of the United States has declared unconstitutional the Arizona anti-alien labor law, requiring employers of more than five persons to engage not less than eighty per cent citizens and qualified electors. The court based its conclusions on the principle that to deny aliens a livelihood was tantamount to exclusion, which is a federal and not a state function.

AMENDMENT LOSES.—The state-wide prohibition amendment was defeated in Ohio on the 2d. The prohibition vote made a substantial gain over that of last year when the same amendment was defeated.

FRIEDMANN FAILURE.—The last of the institutes founded to sell the so-called Friedmann cure for tuberculosis, has failed. Science has declared this "cure" a failure, and now the people have condemned it as a failure and a fraud.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—After an attack on a Carranza army occupying Agua Prieta, opposite Douglas, Arizona, November 1, Villa withdrew his forces to the vicinity of Naco. In the fighting at Agua Prieta one American was killed and nine wounded by bullets crossing the border. United States forces are stationed at Douglas to protect the Nation's interests. Villa has been denied permission to move wounded soldiers from Naco to Jaurez over American territory.

BRITISH NOTE.—The United States Government has forwarded to Great Britain a new note further protesting England's orders in council. Previous notes have discussed the validity of the blockade of the German coast; Great Britain's interpretation and application of "continuous passage"; that country's enlargement of the list of contraband; and its detention and search of neutrals. The late note declares that the British orders are "ineffective, illegal, and indefensible"; that the United States can not submit "to the curtailment of its natural rights," nor with "complaisance suffer further subordination of its rights and interests."

ON PREPAREDNESS.—Speaking in New York City the 4th on national preparedness for war, President Wilson said:

No thoughtful man feels any panic haste in this matter. The country is not threatened from any quarter. She stands in friendly relations with all the world. Her resources are known and her self-respect and her capacity to care for her own citizens and her own rights. There is no fear among us. Under the new world conditions we have become thoughtful of the things which all reasonable men consider necessary for security and self-defense on the part of every nation confronted with the great enterprise of human liberty and independence. That is all.

The administration's military program as announced from Washington by Secretary Garrison the 8th, would provide a regular army of 141,843; improvement of the national guard, of 129,000; a citizen army of 400,000; acquisition of reserve material; development of seacoast fortifications; the organization of trained civilians, including engineers, bridge builders, railroad men, etc, to aid the army in time of war. This program would require $1,000,000,000 in addition to the $1,000,000,000 for proposed naval improvement and enlargement. Speaking for the opposition W. J. Bryan said in a formal statement to the press the following day:

The plan is not only a departure from our traditions, but a reversal of our national policy. It is not only a menace to our peace and safety, but a challenge to the spirit of Christianity, which teaches us to influence others by example, rather than by exciting fear.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans, Austrians and Bulgarians are slowly closing in on the hard-pressed Serbs. The Serbs continue to offer fierce resistance and to inflict heavy losses on their enemies. The Germans have taken Kraguyevatz, where is located the largest Serbian arsenal. Nish is reported from Berlin as captured by the Bulgarians. The Serbian capital has been removed from this place. The Germans and Bulgarians claim all the Belgrade-Constantinople railroad in Serbia except thirty-five miles running north from Nish. The French and British have made advances in the south of Serbia. British and French soldiers are still disembarking at Salonika. The Montenegrin army is yet holding its own on Austrian territory. The Germans have been forced to withdraw to the southwest of Dvinsk, where the Russians have been on the aggressive. The Russians have also won in Galicia, and have been aggressive all along their line except to the south of Riga. The Germans are on the defensive in the west also. The Turks are forcing the fight on the Gallipoli Peninsula. The Turks report the sinking of a French submarine. French and British submarines are operating in the Sea of Marmora. Premier Asquith stated in the House of Commons on the 2d that the financial situation in Great Britain was serious, and that the nation must be prepared to make greater sacrifices than it had yet done. Field Marshal Earl Kitchener is in France, and the British public think on his way to the Balkans. After a discussion of foreign policies on the 4th, the Greek cabinet, refused a vote of confidence by the Parliament, resigned. Premier Zaimis declined to reconstruct the cabinet. M. Skouloudis has reorganized this body, composed of all members of the Zaimis cabinet except the ex-premier himself, and the former government's policy of neutrality will be maintained.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

NOVEMBER "CURRENT OPINION."—Current Opinion, for November, comes to our desk with its usual vigor and painstaking account of the world happenings this month. The Review of the World department in this number contains a comprehensive statement of the woman suffrage movement, showing its remarkable development throughout the world; discussions of the Mexican situation; the change in Germany's submarine policy; the recent so-called American loan to France and Great Britain; and of the European war in its various phases, with especial reference to the Balkan situation and the possible far-reaching effects of the war in the far east. The Persons in the Foreground department contains character studies of the unique figure King Ferdinand, of Bulgaria, of the Honorable Claude Kitchin, recognized leader of the Democratic majority of the new House of Representatives at Washington; and of the Mikado of Japan. The department of Music and Drama is unusually interesting, including "Young America," Frederick Ballard's new comedy. Science and Discovery department, among other things, presents "A new mechanical theory of the action of the ear"; "Revelation of some secrets of the German aeroplane engine"; and "The most important advance ever made in our knowledge of the atom." The Religion and Social Ethics department presents among other things a discussion of Doctor Hillis's confession; of "Jesus as a prophet of spiritual efficiency"; "The battle over birth control." The Literature and Art department including "Voices of the living poets," and The Business World department, round out a number having interest for all. For the busy man who wishes the best in world news and movements at a minimum cost, Current Opinion offers an excellent opportunity.

THE ELECT LADY

BIOGRAPHY OF EMMA HALE SMITH, WIFE OF JOSEPH SMITH THE MARTYR

THE PURPOSEFUL PLAN

All along the pages of the life story of the world that we call history, we are forced to see through all the manipulations of men and nations, the shaping of a master hand. There is a power that holds the balance of battle, and above the smoke and din of the warrings and contentions of men there is that purposeful power that awards the victory to the ultimate good of the great plan. That is our faith; and the history of the world, ever tending to the higher and grander, confirms it.

In the history of the nations we have the Dark Ages. Early in the fifth century the barbarians from the north of Europe swept down upon the little spot of the world which represented civilization, and seemingly for ever obliterated the glory and the glamor of Greece and Rome. But during the eclipse of centuries an admixture of the races was taking place that would give strength and fiber to a senescent people, that would make for the revival of old ideals, the replacing of the old, material civilization, and the regeneration of the race. And all the time, in obscure corners of the world, the faithful few kept burning the feeble torch, which was to some day burst forth—a new light—to diffuse again through the whole world, the civilization that had once belonged to a few men.

That light did come to the world—and swept it like a veritable fire. We all remember it from our histories, and literature—it was a new birth—an awakening. Historians called it "The Renaissance."

THE DARK AND CLOUDY DAY

There is a theory that every movement making for the good of mankind must pass through the same periods that world history has. Perhaps it is only the dreamy fancy of a dreamy philosopher, but we like it.

In our own church history we have a "dark and cloudy day." Upon the day of our greatest glory there came a night so long and so dark that many gave up in despair the dream of the dawning of a new day. In the hearts of a few, though, there still lived the old faith, a flickering, feeble ray that was yet to light God's people again with the old hope and "faith once delivered to the Saints." Far and away his people drifted, and one by one they gave up the hope, and some went to their far home, before the years passed and the day dawned. But the dark night did open upon a glorious morn. It, too, was an awakening, a new birth—we all know the story—our wise men called it the Reorganization.

When the little band of the faithful saw the breaking of the day they looked for their leader, and they did not look in vain. They found the one they sought at the right time.

THE CENTRAL FIGURE

The central figure in the story of that dark and cloudy day is one we have all learned to love and revere, although few of us indeed, knew her in fact. One woman, alone battling against the stream of events, she stood. It is hard to conceive of what might have been if Emma Smith had possessed a less degree of courage and determination than she did. It is hard to picture the courage of a woman standing in the ruins of her home,—her religion, her life and that of her children in daily danger,—forced to meet life for the first time alone. On one side the lawless mob, to whom life and virtue were as nothing, on the other side the people of him whom she loved, offering safe, sure shelter; but they were a corrupted people. It took a kind of strength that beggars the strength of muscle and brawn to make that decision, but Emma Smith was strong. We all know how the choice was made. Can we estimate what the result would have been if she had accepted the proffered shelter in the valley of the mountains?

It is a great thing to be the prime mover of a cause, to see the onward progress of one's own ideals; but it is a greater thing to stand amid the crash of those ruined ideals, still strong and undaunted, and for the right. It was easy to drift away into the world, easier still to rush into false and contorted forms of the religion once beloved. It was characteristic of Emma Smith's faith that she waited, saying that when God needed her son, he would call him as he had done his father before him. It was the stronger, surer kind of faith.

Emma Hale was born at Harmony, Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, July 10, 1804. It is a very little we know about her early life and ancestry. We can imagine her a thoughtful, dark-eyed, little maiden in the house of her father.

Tradition tells us that Isaac Hale was of Jewish descent, and we are told that "he believed not in the lowly Nazarene, the divine Son of God" but became a convert to Christianity through hearing the prayer of little Emma, who was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday school. "Often," says a relative of the family, "he was heard to attribute this conversion to the doctrine of the Messiahship to her child's prayer."

TREASURE SEEKING

In the neighborhood of the Hale home was the scene of a legend that was the witching entertainment of school children, talked of, too, on winter nights about the firesides of the farmhouses. To the credulous it became almost more than a mere folk story. It was rumored that long, long ago some Spanish pirates visited the regions round about Harmony, and extracted from the soil an immense amount of silver ore; taking some of it with them, they buried the rest deep in the earth, and left, never again to return.

The story grew with the years, as stories will do, and finally became a half-authenticated tale which found fond believers among the credulous and adventurous. One of these, a gentleman by the name of Josiah Stoyal (or Stowell), was then residing in Bainbridge, Chenango County, New York. Mr. Stoyal was deeply enough impressed with this story to start a plan to recover the mystical hidden treasure.

Mr. Stoyal had heard that living on a farm near his own village was a wonderful boy, the son of a poor farmer—a boy with the disposition of a mystic—dreamy and prophetic. The neighbors told strange stories of this lad—how he could discover lost articles and hidden treasures. He sent for the young man, who promptly undeceived him as to supernatural pretensions. He saw before him a big, healthy, blue-eyed farmer boy of nineteen, who gave the name of Joseph Smith. Although he admitted his failure as a treasure seeker, the young man was anxious and willing to hire out as a common laborer. This was done, and Joseph Smith, with the other "hands," was sent to the scene of Mr. Stoyal's undertaking. On arriving at the little town of Harmony, Mr. Stoyal put his hands "out to board" at the homes of different farmers. Some of them, among whom was our young hero, were assigned to the home of a wealthy old farmer by the name of Isaac Hale.

It is needless to say, that treasure seeking did not prove to be a very fortunate venture for Mr. Stoyal, and although Joseph Smith did not live up to his reputation as a supernatural finder of wealth, yet we think that the expedition was not entirely fruitless of treasure for him. He became acquainted with Emma, the young daughter of his host, and the friendship grew into a love which we can each imagine better than any of us can describe.

We like to think that they spent the long summer evenings after Smith had returned from Stoyal's gold digging just as all lovers do nowadays, and have done ever since the world began. Those were days of happy dreams to them, full of great promise for the future.

We sometimes wonder if those two lovers on the Pennsylvania hills could have looked into the future and seen the scenes through which they must pass, if Emma Hale would still have given her promise as unflinching to her young, blue-eyed lover. We think so. Emma Hale's was not the nature to sigh for a cavalier to dance attendance upon her night and day. She saw in this strong-hearted farmer lad a man with a man's work to do, a man's battle to fight, and a man's triumphs to win, wheresoever they might take him, whether into the depths of disappointment or up to the things that are honored of men. Hers was that sort of love which could endure, and she was willing to follow him wherever he must go, to share whatever fate his might be—to live his life. All men dream of such a love—poets and story makers love to picture it, but we have only to turn back the single page of our history to read one of the world's great love stories.

For young Joseph Smith the allurements of the Spain-enchanted silver fields did not end with Mr. Stoyal's project. But he still continued to find attractions at Harmony after Stoyal had paid off his hands for the last time.

Then one day Emma Hale went with him to South Bainbridge, where they were married on January 18, 1827, by Squire Tarbell. It has been said that Joseph Smith stole his wife, but as Emma Hale was of age at the time, it would seem that the two had all the right in the world to take the vows they did, that winter night in the inn at South Bainbridge.

Isaac Hale was not in love with his son-in-law at first; but after the ceremony he relented, as nearly all stern fathers outside of story books do, and he took the young couple home for forgiveness. With Joseph Smith things were different, for as his mother says, "He called my husband and myself aside and said, 'I have concluded to get married, and if you have no objections to my uniting myself in marriage with Miss Emma Hale, she would be my choice.'" The choice was readily approved, and with true hospitality they urged the young wife to make her home with them. Mr. Hale, however, was not far behind them, and it was on a little farm near her father's that Emma Hale spent some of her early married life.

PERSECUTED FOR CUMORAH'S SECRET

In the following September, Joseph Smith was intrusted with Cumorah's secret to the world. It was then he realized that he had made no mistake in the choice of a helpmeet, for to the care of him and his wife was intrusted the joy and blessing of future generations. It was no idle interest that Emma took in her husband's secret, and it was about this time that she took her memorable, long ride on horseback to Macedon to warn her husband, when the sacred treasure was threatened. In the little home near her father's she wrote part of the Book of Mormon as she heard it from her husband's lips. She afterwards said that her experience as scribe for her husband proved one of her strongest testimonies to the truth of the record, for she had seen and heard and knew that it was no imposture.

Almost immediately the persecution that was to follow her through life had begun its relentless pursuit. From Harmony to Manchester, to Macedon, and then to Waterloo, they went. To her was not permitted the joy of homemaking, so dear to every woman's heart, but she did not complain. She had her husband, and a faith and hope in a message that she believed was the greatest that could come to man. At Waterloo she was busy, for here she made cloth and cut garments with which to clothe the first missionaries ever sent out by the church.

She was made a member of the church, upon baptism by Oliver Cowdery, in Colesville, Broome County, New York.

Then came the move to Kirtland, and with it a measure of peace and prosperity, which did not last long. Here her twin babies were born and died, and on the same night in the home of Elder John Murdock twins were born, and on the same night left motherless. The motherless babes were immediately taken by Emma Smith to raise as her own. They were called Julia and Joseph. With these twin babies they removed to Hiram, a quiet little town in Portage, Ohio, September 12, 1831, for the purpose of giving the prophet time and leisure in which to work upon a revision of the Scriptures.

It was in this place, on the night of March 25, 1832, that a mob attacked and brutally mistreated Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon. On this night Joseph was sitting up, watching through the night with the sick babies while his wife slept, when the door was forced open and he was dragged out by an infuriated mob. This mob has been much discussed in history, as it is by even some of the most eminent historians contorted so as to make it appear that it occurred after the Kirtland bank affair, while in fact it took place some six years before. The next morning the mob found Joseph Smith, scarred and bruised, yet preaching to a large congregation.

Persecution soon became so intolerable that the family were forced again to flee, but not before little Joseph, one of the twins, had died, a victim of exposure on the night of the mob,—the first tiny martyr to the cause for which many were destined to lay down their lives—for love of the true brave man who led them, and the cause for which they counted life as nothing.

HAPPY DAYS AT KIRTLAND

The next move was into the little town of Kirtland, and there on November 6, 1832, another son was born, and his name was called Joseph—our own late President Joseph Smith. It was at Kirtland that the building of a house unto the Lord was commenced. These were stirring times in church history; the persecuted and driven believed they had found a haven at last.

Numbers flocked to the little village near the lake shore, and a people poor in money and lands, but rich in love and sacrifice, began the erection of a building on a plan that would have seemed preposterous to a people of less faith. The spot for the temple was chosen, in the northwest corner of a field of wheat, and the standing grain was leveled to provide a place to start the building. The following day after the spot was chosen the brethren began the work, and although at the beginning there were only thirty families in Kirtland, the force kept increasing, and work was never stopped for a single day on the walls until it was finished. They said they "gave no sleep to their eyes, nor slumber to their eyelids, until they found a place for the Lord, a habitation for the mighty God of Jacob." Every man, from the president of the priesthood down to the humblest laborer, worked on the walls and in the quarry until the long dreamed of temple at Kirtland was complete. The women made cloth; cut, made, and mended garments for the laborers; every man, woman, and child loved, sacrificed, and labored until the great day came at last when the house of the Lord was ready for dedication. Everybody knows what happened on that day; our fathers love to tell the story.

THE STORM BREAKS

Those were the happiest days of Emma Smith's life—one of the brief seasons of peace and prosperity, and then the storm broke again. There was land far to the westward, as it seemed in those days, where God had promised his people an inheritance. It was as blessed to the hard-driven Saints as was the promised land to ancient Israel. Starting at night, with hardly enough clothing to keep away the bitter cold, Emma Smith said good-by to Kirtland and took up the long journey westward.

After a two months' journey of more than a thousand miles, through a new country in the dead of winter, the pilgrims at last arrived at Far West, the little city of the Saints, on March 14, 1838.

The family were made welcome, and at home. The household consisted now of the adopted daughter Julia, little Joseph, and the sunny-haired and sunny-hearted little son Frederick, who was born in Kirtland; then in June, after their arrival in Missouri, was born Alexander Hale, who was destined to stand with his brothers Joseph and David, to bring anew the sweet angel message and clear his father's name.

The scenes that follow are too terrible for description, and only those who lived through those days can imagine their horror. It is not possible for us who live in peaceful, prosperous homes, even to form a conception of the brutality of those scenes. Emma Smith was driven from home with four children to care for; her husband in the hands of a lawless mob, she did not know whether or not he was living, and she knew it would be a miracle indeed if ever again she could see him. Around her was a mob who cared nothing for life or virtue, to whom no deed was too violent or too cruel.

Then the news came that Joseph was condemned by court-martial to be shot next day on the public square at Far West. The sequel to this story, too, is well known—how a brave soldier dared to defy his superiors in defense of the right, and sent back the message to General Lucas, "It is cold-blooded murder. I will not obey your order. My brigade shall march for Liberty to-morrow morning, at eight o'clock; and if you execute those men I will hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal, so help me God!" This man was Major General Alexander W. Doniphan.

The message from Doniphan so unnerved General Lucas that he revoked the sentence and gave orders that the prisoners be sent to Independence, Jackson County. At their earnest request they were permitted, attended by a company of soldiers, to visit their loved ones. Joseph Smith was attended by a company of soldiers to his home, where he found his wife and children in tears, for they had expected that the death sentence had already been put into execution. He was given a few moments only to say good-by. We can picture it all, the children clinging to their father, and all surrounded by a mob of heartless, armed men, for a private interview had been denied.

It was only a minute or two, and then he was told he must go, but the children with their arms about him would not go, and were finally thrust from their father by the swords of the soldiers who guarded him. Little six-year-old Joseph clung to his father, crying, "Father, is the mob going to kill you?" The guard, with a savage oath, thrust the child back, saying, "You little brat, go back; you will see your father no more."

That was the life that Emma Smith shared with her husband in those days.

Finally came the order from the great chief magistrate of the great State of Missouri, the extermination order, that said that all "Mormons," man, woman, and child, must be exterminated or driven from the State. Under these conditions Emma Smith took her children and started on another sad, fearful flight, this time without her husband. She knew not where he was, or whether he was living or dead. When she came to the shores of the Mississippi she found the river frozen over, and with her two younger children in her arms, the other two hanging to her skirts, she crossed over the great Father of Waters on foot, into the safety of the free State of Illinois.

THE MARTYRDOM

And here she again found a little prosperity and peace. Her husband joined her. The "city beautiful" was built, the pride of the Saints, for it was their own city. She found herself again queen of a home in Nauvoo Beautiful; all the happiness and joy of home life was hers. The doors of the Homestead were flung open to all, and many guests tasted the hospitality of the Saints. The Homestead was of the Mansion were ever open, and we doubt if ever guests, and the Mansion House was built. The doors of the mansion were ever open, and we doubt if ever the house was without a guest—the lame, the halt, and the blind, the alien and the stranger found friends indeed in Brother Joseph and Sister Emma.

But all was not peace; trouble from without and trouble from within assailed them. It is one of the pitiful facts of life, that we may withstand myriads from without, but it is the stroke from our own that kills. Apostates and rebels arose within the ranks and joined hands with the world outside to try to ruin the man they had once professed to love.

One bright June day Emma Smith heard the one she had loved and followed through those perilous years say farewell to his people, and she knew the end had come. "Farewell, brethren, and farewell to the city I have loved. I am going like a lamb to the slaughter—" Those were his last words to his people, and soon after she saw him ride away, with his brother Hyrum, as ever by his side, to the county seat at Carthage, to give himself up to the officers of the law. There was a sort of boding sorrow to come, that hung over the city and the home during the next few days; even old Major, the big dog, so my grandfather has told me, could hardly be restrained from following his master, whose orders he had never before refused to obey.

On the sunny morning of June 27, Governor Ford, after pledging his protection to the men at Carthage, withdrew the majority of his troops to Nauvoo, where he saw fit to address the citizens upon law and order. Standing on the same platform where the Prophet had stood a day or two before and uttered that famous prophecy concerning his own death, the governor of the State now addressed the people, urging peace and reiterating his statement, that he had pledged the sacred honor of the sovereign State of Illinois, that the two prisoners at Carthage would be protected. At the same moment a gang of painted ruffians were assailing the jail left unprotected by the governor. On that same sunny afternoon in June, Joseph Smith was called upon to meet death, and he met it as he had met life, without fear in his heart, as he said he would do, "as calm as a summer's morning." Even his enemies protested that he never knew the meaning of fear. And his brother too, was beside him in death, as he had been in life.

The messenger of sorrow brought the news to the loved ones in the Mansion House, and then for the first time grief overwhelmed the mighty faith of Emma Smith and she said, "Why, O God, am I thus afflicted? Why am I a widow, and my children orphans? Thou knowest I have always trusted in thy law."

Mr. Green, one of the messengers, offered the consolation that this sorrow would be her crown of life. She answered quickly, "My husband was my crown; for him and my children I have suffered the loss of all."

Love was the secret, for truly "they twain were one flesh." Not many years before he had said of her with strange pathos, "My beloved Emma—she that was my wife, even the wife of my youth, and the choice of my heart—again she is here, even in the seventh trouble—undaunted, firm, and unwavering—unchangeable, affectionate Emma." It was a true estimate of her character.

All that day preparations were made to receive the mutilated bodies of Prophet and patriarch. At last they carried them into the sweet home shadows of the old Mansion House, and laid them near the pleasant south window in the great dining room. Three times Emma Smith tried to go to the side of her dead husband, and each time fainted in the arms of those who supported her; then with characteristic resolution she said, "Now, I can see him; I am strong now," and refusing support she walked alone, and kneeling by his side she placed her hand upon his cheek, saying, "O, Joseph! Joseph! Oh, my husband! have they taken you from me at last!"

At last the family retired to their room to listen for hours to the steady footfall of the multitudes who passed through the house to look at those they, too, had loved. There were the curious few, and the many whom he had loved, and who had loved him, all in one apparently endless line. Early in the evening two coffins, empty of human freight, were borne out of the door of the mansion house, to be buried in state; and under the clear June sky that night at midnight the bodies were laid to temporary rest by true and tried friends near the shore of the river they had loved. And for years few have known their last resting place.

STANDING ALONE

We wish here we could tell how his people stood firm for the right, and faithful to the principles he loved in life, but that can not be said. The church was led into paths so corrupt that Emma Smith, true, brave woman that she was, turned with loathing from their practices, that corrupted the gospel she had once loved. She refused their proffered friendship, scorned their cowardly threats and, true to her convictions of right and wrong, stood alone, determined to stay right there and bring up her boys in the way she chose.

On November 17, 1844, was born the son who was never in life to see his father's face, the beautiful, sensitive, beloved David. Perhaps never was any one more universally loved than this child. Quiet, studious, passionately fond of the world around him, he became his mother's comfort. He grew up to manhood also to become an instrument of good to God's people, and brought comfort and cheer by song and sermon into the hearts of hundreds of Israel's scattered children.

The members of the church drifted far and wide. They bade good-by to each other, and separated. Some took the long, long trail to the westward, or followed other ambitions or designing men into different paths, only to be again and again disappointed. Most of them drifted back again into the world, some burying their past with bitterness and hate in their hearts, praying never again to hear the name of Latter Day Saint; others sadly cherishing fond memories for the past and fonder hopes for the future, waited with a prayer in their hearts for the dawn. Emma Smith returned to the dear old Mansion House when all was over, and took up her residence there, earning for herself and family the respect of the community, formed mostly of the "new citizens" who crowded Nauvoo, after its evacuation by the Saints. One of these, Louis Bidamon, she married.

Later she moved to the Nauvoo House, where in quiet she spent the remainder of her life. It was surely a place of memories, a place that was an ideal one in which to live over the past. Across the street she could see "the Old Homestead," a little farmhouse with deep old doorways and quaint, many-paned windows, where she had spent the first happy days in Nauvoo. Near there, under the locust and haven trees, she bade the children play softly, and her eyes told secrets, that sleeping somewhere 'neath the tangled wild flowers was the body of the one she had loved so long ago, and loved still, until the sunset of her life.

RALLYING THE STANDARD

But that is only half her life, for she who was the comfort and stay of the church's first Prophet, lived to be the inspiration and counsel of her son, when he was called to stand in his father's place. Wisely, she did not advise or take sides with any of the factions, leaving it for God to reveal to the son, as he had to the father, but when the choice was made, she it was who went with him to Amboy, Illinois, where on April 6, 1860, young Joseph came to the church re-organized.

How it rejoiced the man-led hordes of old Israel to hear the clear declaration of the young Prophet, "I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any man or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me."

For nineteen years she was permitted to see the old-time Saints rallying to the standard; to see her three living sons going out again, to carry to the world the gospel their father had loved so well.

On April 30, 1879, she fell asleep in the Nauvoo House, on the shores of the old Mississippi, and was laid to rest in a quiet spot near the unmarked grave of her husband.

Although she has been dead for many years, her spirit still lives, and will live just as long as the Reorganization stands. Hers was a wonderful personality, and her life was a justification of the words of the revelation which called her "Emma, the elect lady"—the chosen lady—and as truly as Joseph Smith was chosen for his work, so Emma Smith was chosen for hers, a helpmeet to her husband, the guardian of her sons, through that dark and cloudy day.

Her character is best shown by her life. Her personality has often been described by newspapers of that time, as one that left a lasting impression on those who met her. She was said to be tall, stately, and handsome, with a "more intellectual face than her husband," the most impressive feature of which was her large, dark hazel eyes, which seemed "to look one through and through." Though the trials of her tempestuous life left their mark on her, after that sad June day in 1844, still to the end of her life she maintained that calm, dignified bearing and candor of speech that brought conviction with it. To the day of her death she was ready to bear a firm, consistent testimony to the work, and to brand in unflattering terms the accusations of her husband's traducers.

It is partly due, we think, to her influence that her sons spent their lives making honorable the name and work their father once cherished. All three of these sons have joined their mother on the other side—but the grandchildren who played about the old Mansion House, grown to manhood and womanhood, have taken up their heritage, and are carrying to all the world with voice and pen the peace and joy of the story their fathers loved to tell.

HOT DRINKS AND CANCER

It is quite a considerable time since I have written anything for your pages. Not from lack of appreciation or a desire to be like a sponge entirely, but feeling that abler pens and greater mental powers could more appropriately occupy the space I might utilize. There are times, however, that, notwithstanding these facts, we feel impressed to pen a few lines, believing it may do some good to record a few of the gleanings from the great laboratory of God or nature.

Anything that is profitable for the health and welfare of the Saints and which can be presented in simple language, easy to be understood when coming to our attention, should be recorded for the benefit of all.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 86:1, last line: "And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly."

This statement came to me with greater force than formerly, to-day, when reading an article in the American Medical Association Journal, September 25, 1915, an article written on "Gastric ulcer," by that eminent surgeon, William J. Mayo, M. D., Rochester, Minnesota.

He states: "Thirty per cent of all cancers in civilized man are in the stomach. The relative infrequency of the disease in primitive man and the lower animals suggests that there is some cause for their preponderance; that is, since the food of man and the lower animals is of the same character there must be something in its preparation or method of taking which predisposes civilized man to gastric cancer.

"There are many well-known illustrations of the fact that chronic irritation from heat disturbs the epithelium (the lining membrane), thus making malignant disease possible. It has been shown that when a considerable quantity of fluid is taken into the stomach it passes by the canalis gastricus (the veins of the stomach) along the lesser curvature (the small end of the stomach) and directly to the duodenum (the first division of the small intestine) without mixing with the food mass in the fundus (the large end of the stomach).

"This is exactly the situation of eighty-five per cent or more of all ulcers and cancers of the stomach and ulcers of the duodenum.

"Food is cooled during mastication, but liquids are often swallowed hotter than can be borne comfortably in the mouth. One can not help thinking that hot drinks may be one of the most important irritative causes of chronic ulcer and precancerous lesions. Extreme cold may have the same effect. Primitive men and animals do not take their drinks hot, and seldom have gastric cancer."

The Lord gave us warning concerning the dangers that might come from using hot drinks a great many years ago in the words "hot drinks are not for the body or belly." And yet some have been so short-sighted and self-willed that they are not willing to give God credit for knowing what he was talking about, but seek to modify and curtail the wisdom exhibited in the word by saying it means only tea and coffee.

I took the position years ago, and I still maintain it, irrespective of the opinions and say-so's of those who profess to know that the statement as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants means tea and coffee only, that from a physiological standpoint it means nothing of the kind, but that it does mean "hot drinks," including tea and coffee and all other drinks, adulterated and unadulterated, even to pure water itself.

Tea and coffee are injurious and should not be taken, but their injurious effects, if not taken too hot, are of a different character, and of a less malignant type than that which Doctor Mayo states is probably the result of "hot drinks."

Shall we profit by the wisdom presented to us in the Doctrine and Covenants and proclaimed by this eminent surgeon? or shall we go on debating the issue, that the Lord means only "tea and coffee," and only said "hot drinks" so that his people would have something to quibble over and speculate on, ever learning and never coming to an understanding of the truth?

For the last thirty years I have heard this small sentence debated by minister and layman and the chasm of disunion is as wide to-day as it was thirty years ago.

In conclusion, let us give God the credit of knowing what he wanted to say, and of saying what he wanted us to know; and not try to excuse his inability to explain in plain English what he would have us to understand. "Hot drinks are not for the body or belly"—hot drinks!

THE LAND SHALL BE MARRIED

Should it be published that Miranda Jones, age unknown, noted for her thinness and poverty, was about to be married, no doubt a hundred voices would exclaim, "Who, for goodness sake, is going to marry her; and what will be her new name?"

Quite often I have heard the statement made that the land was going to be married, with some particular concerning the wedding, reference being made to Isaiah 62: 4.

Not being quite satisfied with the accounts of the approaching wedding, a few years ago, I took the trouble to look up the authority concerning the matter, and found that the rumors current were very misleading.

We note what the Book says about it. The King James translation throws a flood of light upon the matter, but the Inspired Translation makes it very much more plain and satisfactory.

We find that the land of Jerusalem (which city, including the ancient fortress of the Jebusites, composes the Zion of the Bible—see 2 Samuel 5: 7-9; 1 Kings 8: 1; Isaiah 10: 32, together with a hundred and one other passages that we might name, besides histories, encyclopedias, Bible dictionaries galore) had been termed forsaken and desolate. God proposes that there shall be a change. A wedding is going to take place and some new names given; instead of the term forsaken for the city, the beautiful name delightful shall be given to it. And instead of the term desolation for the land, the significant name union shall be given to it. For God who for a long, long time, in a manner, for good reasons, had forsaken that land, is according to that prophecy, going to become wedded to it again. Verse 5:

For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy God marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

It would be time well spent should every reader peruse carefully the whole chapter: then no matter what he may hear by way of rumor concerning the wedding, he will have the consciousness of knowing the right of it.

It is one city and one land that the prophet is speaking of—not two cities nor two lands.

For particulars concerning the beauty and glory of this bride when God has married her, read Isaiah 60. "Haste to the wedding." H. J. DAVISON.

THE RETURN OF THE SOUL IN PSYCHOLOGY

When a psychologist like Hugo Munsterberg of Harvard says that the day of the soulless psychology of the laboratories is about over, perhaps the layman who thought all the while that he had a soul may feel a little surer of his ground. The professor does not mean to say of course, that the scientific laboratory methods of the psychologists are either fruitless or improper. They have produced a causal psychology, a description and explanation of the mechanism of mental life, from which the idea of the soul is excluded, whereas the more important thing is to get some conception of the meaning and purpose of inner experience. Purposive psychology or soul psychology is coming to the front, according to Munsterberg, and "the stubborn, one-sided, causal psychology which does not admit a soul psychology at its side will be 'dead as a doornail.'"

This predicted "Return of the soul" appears in The North American Review. Physicians and students of abnormal mental life have seen it in what they have called subconscious mind. Professor Munsterberg considers this an obscure hypothesis for the explanation of conscious facts, and he seeks to show that the same facts can be explained better by another agency which we really know, namely, the brain. "Even if we prefer the subconscious for our explanations," he says, "we remain completely in that psychological world in which everything results from foregoing causes and must be explained from elementary processes. There is no freedom and no unity, and only in the valley of complete confusion some have provided such a hysteric subconscious mind with an attachment for wireless telephony to the absolute."

May there not be a fundamental error at the bottom of this whole discussion? It seems as if there were only two alternatives open. We understand mental life by explaining it with the help of a soul, or we understand it by explaining it without a soul. But is there not an entirely different, third possibility—namely, that we understand inner life without trying to explain it? It is not possible that human experience allows an entirely different approach? . . .

Surely, if there is anything (that is) an actual fact in our mental experience it is that it has mentioning for us who live through it and for those with whom we are in contact. To have a meaning and purpose and inner reference and aim is the most fundamental reality of our inner world. We do not propose it by fancy of our imagination, but it is the rockbed of our inner life. Every idea and volition and emotion means something and points to some purpose, and if we leave this out we omit just the concrete fact. We may be doubtful whether our mental life has causes, but we can not possibly doubt that it has a meaning. Even if we were doubtful about it, this doubt of ours would be such an act with meaning and purpose.

This much-neglected meaning aspect of our self, more important than the explanatory aspect, is the only real one. The other is artificial, according to Munsterberg. "It is a scientific construction which is far from our immediate life experience. It has a value only as long as we stick to our purpose of getting an explanation of inner life."

The meaning of inner life will soon be admitted through the wide-open front door of the temple of science. Then we shall have two independent systems of psychology—a causal and a purposive one. In the one, the causal part, the psychologist studies mental life in that artificial setting in which it appears as a chain of causes and effects; and in the other, the purposive part, he studies it in that natural setting of real life in which every pulse-beat of experience is understood in its meaning and in its inner relations. Both are perfectly justified as long as they are not carelessly mixed and as long as neither is pushed forward as complete. In practical life the two views are intertwined. Thus our neighbor is first of all the personal self whom we try to understand by grasping the meaning of his ideas and intentions, but he may at any moment become to us a mere object of observation which we try to explain.

As soon as this purposive psychology is acknowledged as a fulledged science we can not go very far without discovering that it leads us straight to the old idea of the soul. We understand the meaning of a thought or memory or will act by linking it with the aim toward which it points, and this inner forward movement is understood as the act of a self. What do we know of this self? One thing above all—it is perfectly free. We saw that in this whole world of meaning everything is completely understood as every act is linked with its purpose, hence we have no right at all to ask for causes. It has no subconscious causes, and it has no brain causes. The mere inquiry after its causes would falsify its status. It has not causes any more than it has weight or color. Its whole reality lies in its purposiveness, and this detachment from any possible cause, this completeness in itself is the fundamental freedom of the self which stamps it as a soul.

"The soul, finally," concludes this psychologist, "expresses itself through the body, and the sense organs determine the selection of objects toward which it takes its attitudes, but the soul is neither in the time nor in the space of the physical molecules. If we curiously ask, 'How can we describe the soul?' we must learn to recognize the absurdity of the very question. Every description refers to an object, but the essential meaning of the soul is that it is never an object, but always a subject, always a self, always an action. We can not describe and we can not explain it, not because our purposive psychology is still unfit for this task, but because the task itself would be meaningless. A soul must be understood in its unfolding and in the inner relation of its acts."—Current Opinion, March, 1915.

HONOR SYSTEM MAKES GOOD

The honor system in Illinois appears to have passed beyond the experimental stage. A report issued by the Illinois highway commission indicates that the convict road camps have demonstrated their worth beyond cavil.

The establishment at Reading is described. Through the use of convict labor Reading Township has been able to construct twenty miles of stone-crushed highways on a bond issue of sixty-three thousand dollars. The state commission says this has meant a saving of from three to five thousand dollars a mile over contract prices. From the purely business point of view the honor system pays.

Tested by the welfare of society or by the possibility of reforming the convict, the honor system has even more sharply demonstrated its utility. The men at Reading are guarded by their own honor. The official guards are unarmed. They work as normal citizens and they lead clean wholesome, out-of-door lives.

The discipline which surrounds them is no more severe than that to which soldiers and sailors willingly submit. The convicts do not wear prison clothes. They can not be distinguished from other ordinary industrious members of the human race. In the road camp they are not even called prisoners or convicts. They are "residents."

It is an encouraging statement. Both in New York and in Illinois the honor system has had hard handicaps. In both States it is winning its way. It will not down. It is one of those fine dreams of the immortality of human worth, a dream much too precious to be rejected under even the most dispiriting circumstances.—Chicago Herald, August 19, 1915.

THE COST OF WAR

Every week of the last year dispatches have carried estimates of the daily cost of the war, and the issue of one billion dollar credit after another, but the terrible economic toll of the conflict, and the beggarly returns which the winner will gain, can only be judged by a complete analysis of all the factors entering into the cost of the struggle.

The total war debt of all the European belligerents up to the present is estimated at $30,000,000,000. Of this, the largest debt is Germany's, $9,250,000,000, and the next is England's, $6,310,000,000. The combined daily expenditures of these two countries is $38,000,000, including a part of the burden of allies, so the daily cost of the second year of the war may be roughly and conservatively placed at $70,000,000. If the war is half over, the debt of Europe, due solely to this conflict, will be in excess of $60,000,000,000.

But this will not cover the entire public debt. Due largely to preparations for war, the militarist powers of Europe already have heavy obligations. By countries, as found in the 1915 World Almanac, their debts before the war were:

Austria-Hungary .....	$ 3,700,000,000
Belgium .....	900,000,000
France .....	6,500,000,000
Germany .....	5,100,000,000
Italy .....	2,900,000,000
Russia .....	4,600,000,000
Serbia .....	100,000,000
Turkey .....	700,000,000
United Kingdom .....	3,700,000,000
 Total .....	 $28,200,000,000

This makes a total public debt for the European nations of approximately $90,000,000,000 at the close of a two years' war.

These same nations, when war broke out, had a total wealth of $309,000,000,000. The public debt, therefore, totals 30 per cent of the entire accumulated wealth and land values of the warring nations.

Interest rates on the old public debt vary from 2¾ per cent in the case of England to 5 per cent for Austria-Hungary and 6 per cent for Russia. Rates on the war debt run from 5 to 6 per cent. And the whole $90,000,000,000 will probably average 5 per cent. This means annual interest to the amount of $4,500,000,000, to be borne by the population of 426,000,000, most of which is already pauperized.

And this represents only a fraction of the burden. Wealth has been dissipated by the ravages of war. Industry has come to a halt, causing a loss of billions of dollars in current wealth. The zone of active fighting comprehends an area of 45,000 square miles, mostly of agricultural lands, which will lose in productivity for the next twenty years. The loss will vary from practically nothing up to fully 90 per cent. If placed at only 7 per cent, the loss amounts to $1,000,000,000 on the value of the land, but it is probably nearer $3,000,000,000.

Fifteen thousand cities and towns have been destroyed in the war, including communities larger than Des Moines. If these cities and towns were on an average as valuable as the little Iowa town of Mitchellville, the total loss from this source alone is $10,000,000,000, with more losses to come.

The casualties of the war, to date, are placed at 15,000,000. Half of these men undoubtedly, will be restored to useful labors. But the war is not over. Casualties will be doubled, and the net economic loss will practically duplicate the present total of casualties. If a European is worth half as much as an American, the loss from this item approximates $37,500,000,000.

As a result of the war, the people of Europe will suffer an economic loss of not less than $140,000,000,000. The loss in men, perhaps, should not be charged against the accumulated total wealth of $309,000,000,000, cited above, and yet the loss of these sturdy wage earners makes the burden of the remainder so much the greater, so that account may fairly be taken of this large factor.

The big, outstanding fact is that this war will cost Europe, directly and indirectly, nearly one half of the entire accumulation of wealth that has been made since civilization commenced. . . .

Either group of nations could annex its opponents as they will stand at the end of the war—annex them to the last square inch of land and the last piece of machinery and the last biscuit in Europe—and the annexing nation would be no richer than it was before the war started. Half of its own wealth, and half of the wealth of the enemy, is flaming and smoking on the altar of the god of war.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, September 27, 1915.

A Pleasing Contrast

A few days ago we stood upon ground made sacred by the blood of martyrs, and tried to form a mental picture of scenes enacted there just seventy-seven years before, when, as described by another, "Children were playing on the banks of the creek, women were engaged in their ordinary domestic duties, the newly-arrived immigrants were resting under the trees, which were clad in the scarlet, crimson and golden leaves of autumn." When suddenly the air was filled with reports of firearms as a bloodthirsty mob swept down upon them and men, women and children were falling under murderous fire. Women and children were crying, screaming, fleeing across the mill dam to the shelter of the brush on the rugged hills beyond, or cringing under the banks of the stream that flowed by.

As we looked upon the spot where seventeen of these martyrs, including two small boys, were buried in a common grave, we thought of the pleasant home where our children were protected, and where at that very moment they were perhaps playing upon the greensward under the stately trees that adorn the beautiful home provided by the church for children too unfortunate to be provided for by parents or friends. We thought how different are present conditions as compared with then.

Fear is a stranger, and hunger and destitution unknown to the happy wards of the church. The church may have many severe trials still awaiting her, yet she must be developing and progressing when such a contrast is assured.

It was the happy dream of people in those days to see our present interests obtain and flourish, but it was only a dream, the realization never materialized.

Is there one Saint so blind to real progress as to not recognize the hand of God in the development of the past? or so weak in faith as not to trust him for the future? or so ungrateful as to withhold needed help from church institutions calculated to better the conditions until Zion shall arise and shine, and in her borders their shall be neither ignorance, wickedness nor poverty?

Our college, Children's Home, old people's homes, and Sanitarium are substantial and splendid monuments of material and economic prosperity, and blessings to the Saints, that can not be estimated in dollars and cents. If, as some assert, we have lost in spiritual power, it is to be lamented, but it is not an evil which can not be remedied. We can humble ourselves before God, renew our devotions and make the necessary sacrifices to bring us into a closer walk and deeper communion with God. It is not necessary or profitable to argue the point as to whether we have lost in spirituality or not. No matter how far advanced we are we can with profit make a reconsecration of all our powers to the service of God and our fellow men. In doing this we need not neglect to sustain the material interests that have contributed to conditions that form such a pleasing contrast with those days of terror and persecution of 1838.

Change in Management of Home

On Tuesday, November 2, Brother and Sister W. P. Robinson, superintendent and matron, their daughter Helen, assistant matron, and Sister Lillie Cobb severed their connection with the home. The first three go to Tulsa, Oklahoma, where Brother Robinson expects to engage in missionary work. Sister Lillie Cobb went to Independence, Missouri, where she will be under the care and advice of Bishop E. L. Kelley, whose ward she has been for several years.

We have heretofore expressed our appreciation of the Robinsons and their work. They have been connected with the institution since its beginning, and the board deeply regrets the necessity which led to their separation. Sister Lillie has also been connected with the home since the beginning, first as an inmate. She developed qualifications of extraordinary character as a helper in the care of children, so much so that when she reached the age where she could no longer be recognized as an inmate the board gladly employed her. She will be missed from the home circle where she would have been welcome to continue had she desired. Brother and Sister Robinson became so much attached to the youngest member of our home circle that they took him with them, and will hereafter provide for him as their own.

At the same time one of our home girls left the sheltering care of the home where she had been sheltered for several years to go to the home of her sister, who having been provided with a home of her own is anxious to share it with the sister. A very worthy and commendable thing to do.

Brother and Sister E. D. Briggs of Nebraska City, Nebraska, have been selected to succeed as superintendent and matron and will be here in a few days to enter upon their important labor of love. In the meantime our treasurer, Brother Joseph Roberts, will perform the duty of superintendent, and Sister Resseguie and Sister Stebbins will serve in the capacity of matrons. We bespeak for Brother and Sister Briggs, whom some of us have known for many years, as faithful and capable people, a hearty welcome in Lamoni. Brother Briggs is a nephew of Jason W. and Edmund C. Briggs, long and favorably known in the church, and on his mother's side is a Patten, related to David W. Patten, who was the church's first martyr among her leading officials. Sister Briggs is a daughter of Elder and Sister Armstrong, well known in southern Nebraska among the early defenders of the faith.

Other positions are not yet permanently filled, but prospects for obtaining faithful and competent persons are excellent. We look with confidence for harmonious and successful operation of this important arm of church service. We hope for the continued cooperation of all who love the Lord, in caring for the lambs of his flock.

DECEMBER READING.—ADOLESCENCE

Adolescence is a time of new birth. The whole being is awakening for the work of mature life. Doctor Hall says, "Puberty is the birthday of the feelings and emotions."

Hitherto the child has been largely self-centered. Now he awakens to his relations with the world about him. He begins to recognize that as an individual soul he has rights and responsibilities. "He has a new interest in adults, a passion to be treated like one's elders, to make plans for the future, a new sensitiveness to adult praise or blame."

AWAKENING OF INDIVIDUALITY

"With the entrance into the adolescent period, the boy and girl awaken to their own respective individualities. . . . The spirit of independence grips the young soul and the youth feels an intense longing to throw off all restraint, to follow his own cherished pursuits, to take his future into his own hands. The whole mental being is astir and new voices begin to clamor to be heard." "Hence arise the love of roaming or of trancy even, and the liking for solitude,—all these representative of the new life which has been excited in the child by the changes of his age. To this same cause is probably due the apparent irresponsibility of children of this age. It does not necessarily mean that the child is getting more careless or more depraved, but rather that a new and wide field of knowledge is the scene of his real interest and mental action. Consequently the old takes on less of importance in the light of this newer, wider, intenser life."—Doctor Rowe.

"Naturally, with these new stirrings within, comes a new positive consciousness of self—the self that demands attention and satisfaction. . . . The awakening of the self-feeling makes the boy irritable, impatient of control, boastful and stubborn and the girl bashful, awkward and lacking in self-confidence.

"The self-feeling is a most important instinct and should be carefully studied and trained in each separate child, for out of it grows the courageous, upright, self-respecting man or woman or the cowardly, weak-willed individual, afraid to take any stand whatever against others' opinions. With the strong, positive natures guard against variety, conceit and the tendency to center everything around self. . . . With the timid natures guard against too much humility, self-denial and submission. Such a youth, boy or girl, should be drawn out of himself and gently pushed into companionship with more positive natures. . . .

"In girls the good traits that develop from self-consciousness are modesty, care in dress, desire to excel in studies, or to become proficient in business. . . .

"The youth, boy or girl, should now realize more vividly than ever that he can control his own habits, acts, even thoughts, to a certain extent, by his own will power (under the control of the divine will) and therefore he is held morally responsible for the kind of character he will choose. Pure thoughts and pure living will result in a pure soul—the grandest possession possible to any human being. . . . Reason and principle should begin to rule rather than outside authority. We must lead and inspire if we would avoid arrest. Individuality must have a longer tether."

VOCATIONAL AWAKENING

"With the spirit of independence taking strong hold of youthful ambition, with desire for a larger life calling out into 'the world' many a boy and girl long to leave school when about fourteen in order to try their wings and be free from restraint. . . . Your boy may be admirably fitted for student life . . . yet he hates school because of its confinement . . . and longs to go into business for a change. What shall be done with him? If you feel sure in your own mind that he is capable of a good education, hold him to school by a firm yet gentle hand. Reason with him regarding the future and the necessity for such education if he would enter any of the professions. His future success may depend upon your firmness now . . . and later he will appreciate your good judgment and realize that but for you he would have been unprepared to follow out his desires. Especially will this be so if the wandering spirit is a temporary outburst of the adolescent for freedom and passes away in a few months' time.

"Many boys break away from the training of the schools because they have wrong notions in regard to the meaning of work. Their desire for the possession of the things which are glaringly advertised and for the momentary enjoyment of cheap entertainments lead them to believe that the sole object of work is to provide them the means to satisfy these desires. . . . The purpose of work is to bring man to a complete maturity through the exertions he must make to meet his needs. . . . If in his youth a boy is satisfied only to acquire the wage earning capacity to meet his childish wants it is not likely that in his manhood he will have the capacity to meet his larger wants. . . . The vocational record of one young man showed that between the ages of sixteen and nineteen he had been doing nothing but turning threads on the barrels of fountain pens. Think of the effect of such a period of work on a growing boy's mind and body!"—Eli W. Weaver, in Uplift Book of Child Culture.

AWAKENING OF EMOTION

"One of the most noticeable awakenings and perhaps the most important because of its far-reaching effects, is the emotional awakening. Feelings in the adolescent are uppermost, so, although reason and imagination are prominent, he is more likely to act from feeling than from any other motive. . . . One might conceive of the inner being of the adolescent as a mass of tumbled feelings—anger, pride, jealousy, fear, hate, love, courage, despondency, hope, exaltation, follow each other in rapid succession. This is one reason why the adolescent is so contradictory at times."

Doctor Hall says, "There is a craving for strong emotions which give pleasure in exaggeration; and there are nameless longings for what is far, remote, strange, . . . which mark the normal rise of the presentment of something higher than self. . . . The young must tingle and crepitate with sentiment, and feeling is at no time quite so necessary as during the teens. If there are no worthy excitants the young are very liable to turn to grosser forms of pleasure.

"The sense of humor is exaggerated and manifests itself in joking and in giggling over nothing. . . . Teach self-control and the principle that there is a time to laugh and a time to be sober. But by all means allow plenty of fun and laughter in minor things, not however at other people's expense. Do not permit senseless giggling over nothing which is a habit hard to break when once formed, but the free, hearty overflow of joyous spirits will ease physical or nervous strain.

"But the very opposite to the sense of humor is too frequently met with for the physical and mental health of our girls especially,—namely, despondency. . . . Fear of some secret disease, an overconscientiousness, a reproof of which the one reproved thinks unmerited and countless other things, in themselves trifles, may lead, . . . to despondent spells and temporary melancholia. . . . 'Adolescent insanity' may result, if not actual suicide. . . . Whatever view one may take of the necessity of severe reproof at this independent age, certain it is that with some sensitive natures the tie that binds them to life is frail, and a little over-pressure in work or study, too much monotony, or severity in discipline may cause its snapping in some sudden and awful way.

"Perhaps the strongest emotion develops through the affections, for the instinct to love and self-sacrifice awakens to great activity. . . . The sympathies of the child begin to broaden, he begins to think of others besides himself and to long to do some noble act to help mankind. It is now, if not before, that the deepest religious awakening occurs. . . .

"The love instinct manifests itself in many different ways. With boys it becomes hero worship. . . . If the ideal is a noble one the result is the developing of manly traits, but alas! if the ideal is an individual . . . lacking in moral principle and strong character. The harm from such hero worship is irremediable. . . .

"In girls this desire to 'love something or somebody' is shown by the sudden fondness for a little child—due to the awakening of the maternal instinct—and by intense admiration for a teacher or older friend. Too much show of emotion, such as kissing and hugging should be discouraged. Rather train the affections to do something to show love—thoughtful, unselfish deeds and a striving to reach the standard, if worthy, of the one admired. . . . But these ardent young natures crave the outward expressions of affection and unless the father and mother satisfy these longings, crushes, ill-advised friendships or too early love affairs are liable to come.

"The boy's love of the heroic touches the literary interest. The love of reading is likely to be strong, so provide books which depict noble heroes—those who have accomplished something not merely by one or two daring acts but by lives of strong, manly service for humanity or by achievements in the field of literature or science. . . .

"Girls' love of reading inclines more to stories of daily life, to descriptive writing, to stories embodying moral precepts, to poetry and to love stories. All these should be encouraged, especially the reading of noble, beautiful poems. . . . Love stories should be allowed only in moderation. Those of the silly unnatural type which give false ideas of morality and depict sensational happenings should be avoided entirely.

"Because memory reaches its climax about sixteen, the adolescent years should make of it a storehouse from which to draw in after life. . . . With memory active and the minds of the boys and girls stored with things conducive to right thinking, impure and unwholesome thoughts will necessarily be crowded out."

SOCIAL AWAKENING

Before the time of adolescence the child's desire for companionship has been satisfied with "just anyone to play with" in addition to the home folks who have supplied the atmosphere of love and of interest in his childish doings. But at this time of important changes, there arise new desires for special friends: "No matter how confidential the relations with the parents may have been, an important domain of the soul now declares its independence. Confidences are now shared with those of equal age and withheld from parents, especially by boys, to an extent probably little suspected by most parents. . . . There is now a longing for that kind of close sympathy and friendship which makes cronies and intimates. So the boy seeks his chum and the girl her bosom friend into whose sympathetic ears hopes, fears, dreams, ambitions, secrets are poured. Wise choice in these close friendships is most imperative, for seeds of evil sown now by a questionable comrade may never be wholly uprooted and, on the other hand, a noble, good-principled friend, be he of the same age or older may unconsciously mold the life into beautiful symmetry.

"The thirst for companionship satisfied by the choice of a good chum or two; wise sympathy with the new social desires, a spirit of comradeship on the part of father and mother by which they show an interest in all that concerns the youth,—these will hasten the renewal of the confidential relations with the parents, if indeed they have ever been broken."

The time for the seeking of a love mate now approaches and this is the central fact underlying all the social experiences of the young. But modesty and wise guidance will delay the choice until years have added wisdom and physical development is ripe for parenthood.

"Shall boys and girls not be thrown together then? By all means, yes. The wholesome comradeship between boys and girls as found in games, indoor and out, social gatherings and other activities, begun at a time when they naturally incline toward each other will do much toward a proper relation of the sexes later. But this companionship must be free from sentimentalism from the start and should be general, not narrowed down to one or two individuals."

A summary of the social activities legitimate for adolescents includes "games and athletics for both sexes; clubs, when conducted at proper hours and not secretly; occasional parties with proper chaperonage; plenty of opportunities for amusement at home with chums and acquaintances. These will in a large measure satisfy the cravings of the social nature, will help to crowd out desire for questionable entertainment and will do much toward a proper balancing of pleasure and work."

"Diction, Phraseology and Idiom"

No modern, who is educated as far as the grammar grades, thinks that Christ used the words thee, thou, and thine. Anyone who has become familiar with the English language, as it is taught to-day in our schools and colleges, must know that these words are forms of speech in common use as modern-day English.

Some who have not been taught in the correct use of the English language, make blunders in the use of these devotional terms; and it is good practice for such not to use the words at all. It is always best to avoid the use of any word that one can not use correctly.

We might be asked, Is it not better to use our own language, and to live in the immortal present? What is our own language? What is the language of the immortal present? Is it the turbulent stream of seething slang that such men as Mr. Sunday give to the people? How many of us would feel just right, when we kneel to pray, if a brother should break forth in such language trying to claim the divine benediction and the peace and presence of the Holy Spirit? If the poor man knew no better way of expressing himself we would bear with him; but, even so, there would be many who would be unable to appreciate his dearth of words. As a rule, those who would be the most critical are they who need the severest criticism.

What is the English language of the immortal present? William Shakespeare, a writer in the sixteenth century, John Milton in the seventeenth century, Oliver Goldsmith in the eighteenth century, and Charles Dickens in the nineteenth century, all of these men are looked upon by modern educators as writers of purest English. And strangest of all, the sixteenth century man is regarded as the best user of words who has ever written in the English tongue. Which of these men wrote in the language of the immortal present?

To be sure, we do not expect Deity to humble himself and say to us, "Wouldst thou go and do my bidding, I would spare thee such chastening." But when we reverse the process, it is natural for us to use more intimate terms and more endearing and devotional, when we try in our poor way to appeal to the great Father. As for me, I would delight in a "twentieth century," Inspired Version of the Bible and Book of Mormon. Even then they might properly contain a "thee" or "thou" or "thine" occasionally, for if I mistake not these are words considered in good use in the twentieth century; but they are not used commonly in speech and writing.

We are developing idiomatic speech in the English; and it is a common thing to have a number of different vocabularies for use upon different occasions. I am not ready to say that it is better so; neither shall I try to change the vocabulary of my brethren to suit my own fancy. The better policy is to read and study enough to get acquainted with the proper use of the words that bother one and then they will bother no more.

Yours for the one way,

BENJAMIN BEAN.

Concerning Fertility of Palestine

ELBERT A. SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: Having formed the acquaintance of several of the company that went to Palestine with George J. Adams, I took occasion to get a statement from three of them in reference to the fertility of that land. I inclose their statement herewith. If it may serve any good purpose, I shall be glad to have you use it for what it may be worth. These people are nearing eighty years of age, and were old enough to make proper inquiry about these matters at the time they arrived in Palestine.

Brother (Doctor) Joseph Luff was present at the conference and is a witness to this statement.

Very respectfully,

J. A. KOEHLER.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS, September 6, 1915.

"To Whom It May Concern; This is to certify that we, the undersigned, were members of the company which, under the leadership of George J. Adams, left Jonesport, Maine, on August 6, 1866, for Palestine; that we landed at Jaffa on September 22, 1866, and remained in Palestine until November, 1867.

"During that time we made diligent inquiry of the natives regarding the past and present fertility of the land, and learned that, so far as the oldest inhabitants could bear evidence, until the year 1852 no 'latter rain' whatever had fallen in that country, nor had any dew been seen.

"In 1852 the 'latter rain' first made its appearance, and since that date it had been steadily increasing in quantity. We certify further that during the winter of our stay in Palestine the November rain was very plentiful. The spring rain was not so plentiful as the fall rain, yet it was sufficient for agricultural purposes.

LITTLE DEER ISLE, MAINE, October 5, 1915.

Editors Herald: I left my home at Jonesboro, Maine, last Thursday and came to Cherryfield by rail, where I was met by the Reverend Alexander Case, who took me to his residence some three miles away. From here I was taken by team fifteen miles, staying over night with two members of the Christian Church (Charles Young and mother), where we were cared for as though we were of the family. The next day Reverend Case took me to Corea, where we held the Eastern Maine conference, which was a very good one.

Saints from different parts of the district came and enjoyed themselves, and why should they not have a good time, when it was hard to tell the difference between those in the church and those without? Several men whose wives belong to the church said that they believed the gospel as we preach it; in a short time, if their companions are faithful, they will obey and become workers together with us.

G. T. Griffiths has organized a branch at this place, and efficient men were chosen to lead on the noble cause, Brother John Sheehy being president. Brother Sheehy is well liked. He minds his Master's business.

The Christian minister who was kind enough to take me to Corea, a distance of twenty-three miles, had been a soldier in defense of his country in the Civil War, as well as myself. He has been a strong opposer of the latter-day work, but has learned it is hard to kick against the pricks. He said: "John, you are a good people, and I choose to respect you as such."

I have held six meetings here this week. I leave Monday for Haverhill and Boston, Massachusetts. I found Harland Billings, his dear old father, Captain John, and Hosea Eaton alive and caring for the flock.

Your brother,

J. C. FOSS.

VANDALIA, MONTANA, October 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: Elder Newby was here, had a good turnout, about a month ago. He held meetings at a schoolhouse about four miles from where we live, called the Lime Creek Schoolhouse. Some of the people have asked for baptism. I myself am one. A Baptist preacher tried to get the people to turn against Elder Newby, but could not do it. Mr. — told one man that Newby was a bad man; this man told the preacher that Newby taught Bible and that was more than he did.

This preacher had been hired to preach all summer every other Sunday for these people, but after Newby came they would have nothing to do with Mr. —'s doctrine. This same man left word that he was not wanted there, so he would leave.

I hope that Elder Newby will soon be here to do more of the dear Lord's work. I am your little friend,

SAM E. ELLSWORTH.

LEON, IOWA, October 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is a pleasure to me to be associated with a church that practices the teachings of Jesus Christ, which he laid down for his disciples to follow. If any are ashamed of these teachings found in the Bible, they are ashamed of the Savior. I am glad I was led to see the light of this glorious truth. I am sorry, however, that I did not see it sooner.

I read letters from Saints coming into the church who have not been taught the gospel principles, and I am glad to hear of their seeing the light. I was not raised in the latter-day work, being taught to believe in the Methodist faith; but thank God, I saw the true light before I joined any church.

Some object to a prophet in the church. I do not see how they can. Prophets were had in the beginning of time, so why not now? I am glad we have a prophet in our church, also apostles, and signs following the believer.

When I received my patriarchal blessing in 1912 I was told that I should understand the word of God and his work more perfectly than in the past. This was my first time at General Conference. It was a pleasure and a treat to me. According to promise, I have been more able to see and understand the things of God than before. Those who have not their patriarchal blessings are missing a grand thing, for they are a comfort when we feel as though we had more than our part of burdens to bear.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may do that which comes to my hand to do, that I may be able at all times to be ready for whatever duty is mine. I wish if Aunt Carrie Barron sees this she would send me her address, so I can write her, also Cousin Chester Smith.

With love and best wishes to all, I am

Your sister,

Route 3.

MRS.. E. H. BAILEY.

Southeastern Mission

The reunions of Alabama and Florida districts were a success. By the urgent request of the writer, Brother F. A. Smith, presiding patriarch of the church, attended the latter, which was held near Brewton, Alabama. The new church at that place was dedicated September 26, the day the reunion ended, and which has already been reported. A large audience was present, and the good Spirit was there to bless and encourage those who have built this beautiful place in which to worship.

After the reunion I took a tour of our field with the patriarch and his daughter Freda, whom he had brought South with him to act as his stenographer. During their stay of one month about one hundred received their patriarchal blessings, which is a strong indication that the Saints are trying to move up to higher spiritual grounds. It is very encouraging to note the great interest that was taken by the Saints in the work of the patriarch everywhere we labored. The only thing we regretted was that he could not stay longer and visit Saints in other parts of the field where his work is needed.

Near Pensacola on October 10, we dedicated a nice church in the country, which is beautifully located. Brother Smith preached the sermon and the writer offered the dedicatory prayer.

The Saints in the South are having a hard struggle by reason of financial depression, but as a rule are strong in the faith and are working to be able to wear a crown when the struggle is over.

I am now at the place where Reverend Huff, a Methodist minister, led a mob against our people about ten years ago. A part of this mob made an assault on Brother T. C. Kelley. Despite all this opposition from the outside and with troubles that have existed within, the work at Escatawpa still lives and the branch is in better condition than ever before. The Saints, though poor, have about completed a good church building and nicely seated it.

Recently one Reverend Hulbert delivered a half dozen lectures here against the Saints before a large audience in the Baptist church, and classed all the same as Utah Mormons and Joseph Smith as a polygamist, misrepresenting our work in various ways. A number of our local brethren were present and wished to make reply, but were refused even the privilege of making an announcement. I was then appealed to by the president of the branch to come and make an effort to defend the work.

This man being determined to shut out every reply, a large supply of circulars were printed and spread far and wide among the people, containing our effort to meet the Reverend Hulbert in public discussion, of the following resolutions: "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?" F. M. Slover to affirm. "The Missionary Baptist Church is in harmony with the church of Christ described in the Bible, in faith, organization, doctrine, teaching, ordinances, worship, gifts and blessings," Reverend Hulbert to affirm. To this date there has been no response.

As we read in the papers of the Saints who are passing over the river one by one, it impresses us very strongly with the thought that all should be careful and diligent in the work, in order that they may be worthy to enter into rest when the time comes for each to pass over to the other side.

F. M. SLOVER.

Pittsburgh District

The Pittsburgh District is moving along nicely. We had a splendid conference at Wheeling, West Virginia, September 25 and 26. Brother G. T. Griffiths was with us, and his cheerful talk and splendid sermons encouraged and instructed us all. The Spirit was with us to a marked degree, which indicates the development of the Saints. Our young missionaries, James Bishop, L. G. Burdick and John D. Carlisle, were present, and we are pleased to be able to say that they are doing a splendid work and each developing along his particular line. These men will make strong, useful workers in the church if they continue faithfully, as they have begun.

Last Friday I was called by phone to go to confirm six that were baptized by Brother John D. Carlisle that day. Two more gave in their names for baptism, which will be attended to in the near future.

Brother Carlisle is doing a good work in that region and his influence is extending, which shows the wisdom of keeping a man in the same field long enough to enable him to get acquainted and to carry out the policies he has adopted. His wife is a faithful Saint, living in Wheeling, and is doing her part well. He can do his work successfully and yet go home every few weeks. This is proper, for it keeps him and his wife cheerful and contented, so they are both doing much better than they would if separated for hundreds of miles for months at a time.

Elder Bishop and Burdick also have their families in the district, with similar results. This is in harmony with the revelation given for the doctrine of the church, when the Lord told Thomas B. Marsh to "Go from them [his family] only for a little time, and declare my word, and I will prepare a place for them; yea, I will open the hearts of the people and they will receive you." (Doctrine and Covenants 30: 3.)

It is not necessary for me to testify to the Saints that the "prophecies and promises," (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 7) in the revelations are true. Yet we may relate one instance.

Last year I traveled for some time with Brother W. W. Chrestensen in the Central Oklahoma District. In a certain community Brother Chrestensen created quite an interest. There was a small branch that needed help and there were many fine openings in the surrounding country. A gentleman, not a member of the church, offered Brother Chrestensen a suitable house, free of charge, as long as he wanted it, if he would move his family into it.

Brother Chrestensen was well adapted for the work in that country and could have spent five years in a radius of fifteen miles of that town successfully. The Lord was doing his part according to the promise he had made to "prepare a place for" the family, as told in this revelation, and he will always do his part if we will let him. But Brother Chrestensen is laboring this year in another State.

Two have been baptized in Pittsburgh and three in Fayette City during the last few weeks. So the work slowly but surely wins its way.

The Pittsburgh Branch is fortunate in having such wise sacrificing officers in the lead. They are humble, teachable and full of zeal. They are ably assisted by the membership who give them their support and confidence, all working together in peace.

The lonely missionary can not help honoring such Saints, and the longer he stays with them the stronger the attachment grows. God is blessing them, and his blessing will continue and increase just to the extent that they live according to the principles that bring success.

The gospel will bring prosperity to those who live it, in spiritual and temporal things. But it does this according to law, and when we learn these laws they are only, as often called, natural laws. Often worldly people understand and comply with these laws that bring financial and temporal prosperity better than some of our people do. That is the reason these prosper often, more than some Saints.

Our people should by prayer, study and industry become the best workmen, business or professional men in the community. They should be among the most economical, industrious, and honorable of the land. If one is employed he should so conduct himself that he can be absolutely relied upon by his employer or the firm. He should become so proficient in his work that he will be entitled to promotion, and so profitable to his employers or firm that they can not afford to lose him. This will bring him success in temporal things. If he is unreliable and shiftless, he can pray and testify in the meetings and talk of the wickedness of the world all he pleases, but no prosperity will come to him. And as a rule, he would spurn the wise advice of a practical man who attempted to explain to him how he could succeed.

The business man who runs a grocery store may pray for prosperity, but the wise man does not expect the Lord to slip sugar into his barrel or potatoes into his bin during the night. He expects the Lord to help him to understand how to obtain customers that will pay their bills, and what he should buy, etc.

The same can be said for the professional man. Correct business principles are a part of the gospel. It is a sin to violate them, and all who do so will surely suffer. The missionary should be able to teach and should teach this part of the gospel as well as any other part. All private and church business must be carried on according to business principles or failure will, like the vulture, devour our business undertakings.

When we learn that religion is simply an understanding and observance of the natural laws that God has given to govern mankind, we will be able to break loose from the wild superstition that has tied mankind down and disgraced the name of Jehovah for ages. Of all people, Latter Day Saints should take the lead in this respect. This same principle applies to health, strength, mental and spiritual development, and should we, as a people, think and preach more about these principles that pertain to the practical and everyday affairs of life and less about Daniel and the book of Revelation, we would be better off.

Perry, Iowa

After a season of quiet but earnest endeavor, the Perry Branch is again beginning to take on new interest with the preparations for the winter months. The church on North Fifth Street has been made more convenient and comfortable by the addition of a large vestibule, the enlargement of the basement and repairs to the furnace, etc., and we feel prepared to start on our winter's campaign.

Brother D. T. Williams begins a series of meetings the coming week. He will probably be assisted by Brother E. E. Long, whose coming is always greeted with enthusiasm by the Saints as well as by many who are not yet united with us.

The aid society has been very active during the summer and has done much toward relieving the financial situation for the church. Their food exchanges are not excelled by any of the larger denominations, and many expressions of praise are heard from patrons for the culinary skill of the sisters.

In the last few weeks we have had visiting brethren with us as follows: E. O. Clark and O. Salisbury of Des Moines, William McBirnie of Boone, C. E. Hand of Holden, Missouri, and J. F. Mintun, all of whom occupied to the pleasure and edification of the membership.

Since our last communication, our branch has felt the chastening hand of affliction, and as when one member is afflicted, the whole body suffers, so it has been with us. On September 15, our beloved leader and elder in charge, Brother H. H. Hand, was called upon to pass under the rod when his faithful and beloved companion passed over to the other side, after a brief illness culminating in an attack of apoplexy.

Sister Anna R. Hand was forty-one years old, just at the most beautiful time of a matron's life, when with her children growing up around her, the joys of motherhood and companionship seem at their zenith. Four winsome children, besides the husband and other relatives, are left to mourn their loss and to revere her memory.

In Brother Hand's loss, we have each felt a personal grief, as Sister Hand had that peculiar quality of endearing herself to every member, and her friends outside of the church were only limited by her acquaintance. There has been a vacancy and a depression in our meetings since her absence, and while not permitted at all times, because of her physical limitations, to do much that was her desire, yet she wielded a peculiar influence for good upon all with whom she was associated, both in and out of the church. Our prayer services were always more spiritual and uplifting when she was present. Her testimony was always helpful, and through her gift of prophecy we have been many times admonished and encouraged by the Spirit.

While human wisdom has not been able to make it clear to us why we must suffer these afflictions, yet by virtue of our faith in the divine guidance of a righteous and loving Father, we are made to feel that in the calling to a sphere not burdened with the physical infirmities and cares of this life, he is but manifesting his divine wisdom and loving care.

Fall River, Massachusetts

Recently we had with us Elder John Smith of the Lamon Stake Presidency. Brother Smith, who was for many years president of the Fall River Branch, preached twice to the pleasure of those who had been associated with him in branch work many years ago.

On October 24, the choir sang, "Olivet to Calvary" to a packed house. We were assisted by Sister Elenora Whiting, Brother Thomas Fielding, and Sister Susie Sinclair of Boston. Everyone is delighted with the outcome of this effort. The oratorio was sung under the direction of Doctor Milton Gilbert.

Fall River presents a peculiar situation. Eighty per cent of the population is foreign and Roman Catholic. Especially in the locality of our church building, the opportunities for proselyting are extremely poor.

While the Saints are scattered over the city, the attendance at services is well up to the average in other places where I have been. I find here many pleasant and congenial associations. This means much to me, for the especial reason that immediately upon my arrival here on the first of last June, I was elected branch president. Another encouraging feature is the "booster" spirit manifested particularly among the young men and women.

Activities of several kinds are carried on. We have a class in logic for the young men; also a mixed class in English. The "Orioles," about twenty young women in number, seem pleased with their regular programs and special functions. Deficits in branch finances are carefully watched by an ever active "Woman's auxiliary." "Thanks," says the deacon (and others). Industrial classes for boys and girls from the ages of eight to fourteen are conducted on Saturday afternoons. Not a few young men and women are doing special school work evenings.

I must say this is a busy lot of Saints. Just now announcements are out for three special social functions for the month of November. I think I am safe in saying that here, as well as elsewhere, there is growing up a body of young people to whose shoulders the burdens of church work may be safely transferred in the not very distant future.

One Little Boy

By heaven's first law my house was kept,
The brass was polished bright,
Each room was dusted well and swept—
It was a pleasant sight.
But now mud tracks are on the floor,
And with them many a toy,
And finger-marks upon the door
Tell of one little boy.

Once quiet reigned, or silvery sounds
Of music filled the air;
Now tramp of many feet resounds
And clanging up the stair.
March martial bands, with fife and drum,
All flushed with pride and joy;
Behold at "double quick" they come,
Led by one little boy.

Time was I pondered Browning's verse
And Walter Pater read;
Of Ibsen I could once converse,
But now—a tired head
Is cuddled close at "story time"
When evening shadows fall,
And I am wise in nursery rhyme
And fable, that is all.

Once, when I tucked him into bed,
He hugged me tight, and then:
"What would you sell me for?" he said—
I kissed him once again,
And answered, "Not for diamonds, pearls,
Nor gold without alloy;
Nor all the wealth of all the worlds
Would buy one little boy."—Selected.

A Prayer

Oh, our heavenly Father, loving friend,
For the truth may all thy Saints contend;
May all our lives with thy love blend,
To tell the gospel story.

Oh, may we here our mission fill,
Cheerfully, always, to do thy will,
Helping others to climb the hill
To tell the gospel story.

Oh, bless thy elders wherever they be
With faith and love to follow thee;
Bless them with wisdom and charity
To tell the gospel story.

And when at last our race is run
May we hear thy words to us, "Well done,"
And be with the faithful and thy dear Son
Who lived the gospel story.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

The Lost Chord

Seated one day at the organ,
I was weary and ill at ease,
And my fingers wandered idly
Over the noisy keys;

I know not what I was playing,
Or what I was dreaming then;
But I struck one chord of music,
Like the sound of a great amen.

It flooded the crimson twilight,
Like the close of an angel's psalm,
And it lay on my fevered spirit,
With a touch of infinite calm;

It united pain and sorrow,
Like love overcoming strife,
It seemed a harmonious echo
From our discordant life.

It linked perplexing meanings
Into one perfect peace,
And trembled away into silence,
As if it were loath to cease;

I have sought, but I seek it vainly,
That one lost chord divine,
Which came from the soul of the organ
And entered into mine.

It may be that death's bright angel,
Will speak in that chord again,
It may be that only in heaven
I shall hear that grand amen.

Book Reviews

GOLD SEEKERS OF '49.—Edwin L. Sabin, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, $1.25. This is a story of Charlie Adams and his father, who in the year 1849 set out for far-off California to discover gold. It tells how they crossed the tropical isthmus of Panama by canoe and mule to the Pacific side; how they landed at last in San Francisco; relates their adventure among the high Sierras; how they encountered fortune and misfortune in that new land of people from every country of the globe. The story is prefaced by a short history of California, also a history of the Panama Canal. In his foreword the author says: "The discovery of gold in California was hailed as an occasion for getting rich quick; but its purpose proved to be the development of character. It seems a long, long way back to forty-nine, when across the Isthmus and across the plains thousands of men—yes, and not a few women and children—pluckily forged ahead, bound for the land of Gold. Some made their fortunes, but the best that any of them achieved lay in the towns that they founded, the laws that they enacted, the homes that they established, and the realization that these things were of more importance than the mere frenzy for quick wealth."

Something New For Latter Day Saints

A professional writer, and member of our church, whose pen-name is "John Preston," has written a play, called—

"The Pleasures of the World"

This is something new in the way of church literature, and will give many a branch the vehicle for legitimately entertaining its young and also raising funds for special purposes, that it desires.

No Religious People

will appreciate this play as will our people. It is a frank discussion of

from all sides; and not a "sermon." It is because we believe in the originality and thought-progressiveness of Latter Day Saints that we are offering it for sale and presentation.

This Comedy-Drama

does not pretend to solve the "pleasure question": it merely presents the various phases of it—frankly—illuminatingly—humorously. The idea was taken from a sermon.

Several Large Branches

have already made arrangements to produce this play and are very enthusiastic over it.

The Holiday Season

is a good time to produce it. And it is because there is only one "setting," which any stage or platform will accommodate. The scene is the interior of an ordinary living room. There are six men and six women characters. It takes 2 hours to present the 3 acts.

Easy to Produce

Between 60 and 75 pages

Nicely bound

Per copy, 25c, postpaid

Read it

And you will want to produce it.

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

Timely Reading

"The Pleasures of the World," a 3-act drama by John Preston, written expressly for Latter Day Saints, is selling rapidly.

Branches like San Francisco, Brooklyn, Saint Louis, Saint Joseph, and smaller ones have ordered it in quantities and are arranging to produce it.

As reading matter this play is very much worth while. It is nicely gotten up, and the price is unheard-of for such a work.

We are offering this play as publishers, but will put you in touch with the author if you desire to produce it or learn something about productions already undertaken. Takes two hours to enact.

68 pages of interesting fact-fiction

postpaid

A Religio Play

"Truants," (also by John Preston), a one-act play written especially for Religio program work, we also have on sale.

The right to produce it goes with 7 copies of the play.

Buy a copy and you will want to present it. Only 6 characters; takes half an hour to enact. Price 25c postpaid.

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa

Colored Post Cards

Of Herald Publishing House, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Graceland College, and Saints' Church.

All situated in Lamoni.

Copies
Sold Before Publication

Price

The book is now ready. Those who have been awaiting this announcement may now send in their orders.

This absorbing and true story of the eventful life of Mrs. Emma Burton will appeal to all who admire Christian devotion and are interested in the struggles to maintain it.

The author has had enough experiences to make several books, but has selected the best and put them into only one.

It will be an inspiration to the young and a comfort to the aged—all ages will be benefited and enjoy the reading.

There are 21 chapters, 383 pages, 7 illustrations from photographs, all on good book paper and well bound in dark green cloth.

Will You Join Me

in a tour of the North Platte Valley of Nebraska and the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, leaving Omaha, December 7? The prevailing high prices and great demand for agricultural products will soon force a big increase in land values. This trip will enable you to see first hand the almost unbelievable opportunities that abound in these sections and give you a chance to buy land before the price goes up. Neither the company nor myself have any lands for sale and my services are free. We want reliable farmers as residents along our lines. I strongly urge you to make this trip, because it won't cost you much, and because I believe it will pay you handsomely to do so. How many will there be in your party and where will you start from? Let me know soon, please, so I can make the necessary arrangements.

The New Serial

"JOE PINE"

The first installment of the new story by this title appeared in the November number of the Autumn Leaves. Other chapters will appear in each issue.

You can get this story by subscribing now. The December number will be sent free, and it will include a synopsis of the opening chapters. You'll need to do it right away.

AN UNUSUAL STORY

A real Latter Day Saint story in every way, written by one who knows how to portray human emotions and activities, which he does with his usual skill. The author is Elbert A. Smith.

There is real heart interest in the story. You'll feel acquainted with the characters and intensely interested in what they do and say. And there is unsurpassed humor—the kind that is akin to pathos. Every chapter, every paragraph, is written with a purpose. Nowhere is there a drag.

There are many other interesting stories, articles and illustrations coming—altogether too much to miss. Thirteen issues for only one dollar.

PASTOR RUSSELL WARNS AGAINST US

We have come into possession of a copy of a letter written by C. T. Russell, of Millennial Dawn fame, during the year 1897. Though some time has elapsed since it was written, it may still be of interest to the Saints. It was forwarded to us by Elder F. M. Slover, and reads as follows:

ALLEGHENY, PENNSYLVANIA, June 16, 1897.

MR. JAMES RIGGLE, Louisville, Kentucky.

Dear Brother and Sister Riggle: We learn through Brother Davis that you are in danger of confusion at the hands of people calling themselves "Latter Day Saints"; that you are so far in sympathy with them that you are cooperating in spreading their doctrines by entertaining them at your house, etc. It seems to me quite probable that you are not quite well informed respecting this people and their views, and therefore, I write you a few words of caution.

They are what is commonly known as "Mormons," some of them however, do not practice polygamy as those of Utah used to do; otherwise their doctrines are identical.

(1) They do not accept the apostle's statement to Timothy to the effect that "The word of God is sufficient that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work." On the contrary, they claim that an additional revelation was given to and through them. We hold this is entirely contrary to the Scriptures, and contrary to reason. In Millennial Dawn we show that God's word is a great storehouse which contains sufficient food for every period down to the very close, and you will remember that it especially deals with this harvest time and the errors of this time—one of which we forewarn you is Mormonism.

(2) These Mormons believe in a transmigration of the soul, and in the immortality of the soul—both of which doctrines you should recognize at once as antiscriptural.

(3) By mixture of the "law" they establish certain ones of their number in authority as a kind of hierarchy and degrade the individual Christian under them. Our answer to these boastful claims would be the same as to the claims put forward by papacy and other denominations, namely, that they are human arrangements which are not only without authority in God's word, but opposed to the simplicity of the gospel of Christ. We show this in the Tower article bearing on "The one true church." We hold that none but our Lord and his twelve apostles ever had special authority in the gospel church. "All ye are brethren, and one is your Master, even Christ." What authority have the "Mormon" elders? They certainly do not claim any apostolic succession, such as papacy claims; their claims are based entirely upon their "fraud" of a new revelation.

(4) That they are not taught of God should be evident from the fact that they neither recognize the ransom for all, nor the fruits of that ransom as that Scriptures show they will be developed during the millennium.

Of course, if you fully investigate the matter, and then conclude in contradiction to the Scriptures that these people are walking in the light and actuated by the Spirit of Christ, you will act accordingly, but if you find their claims to be false, as above set forth, we advise you to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

With best wishes and Christian love, I remain,

Your brother and servant in the Lord,

C. T. RUSSELL.

It is interesting to learn that Pastor Russell should find time from his earnest, strenuous, and almost successful efforts to attain perpetual vocalization to write private letters of warning against us, for at that time the persons addressed were investigating the teachings of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

It is evident that all the way through his letter he has confused us to an extent with the Utah Mormons. Fearing that others might not be "quite well informed," he exposed his own lack of information while attempting to enlighten them.

The church at that time being investigated by Mr. Riggle in whole and in part is and ever has been opposed to polygamy, and has never in any manner sanctioned its practice. In his effort to enlighten "dear Brother and Sister Riggle," Mr. Russell said that "some of them however, do not practice polygamy as those of Utah used to do," thus creating the impression that some of our members do practice it.

We may assume however that he was making a well-meant but very unsatisfactory effort to draw a line of distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Mormons. His efforts to locate the Millennial Dawn would not warrant one in expecting great accuracy. But his further statement that in other matters our doctrines are identical is very erroneous, and convinces us that he is not "quite well informed respecting this people and their views." We differ from the Utah Mormons on other vital questions of doctrine and church polity.

Continuing with his epistle he notes four points on which he thinks we are in error. First he assumes that we reject the apostle's statement in Timothy (2 Timothy 3: 16, 17), which, by the way, does not read at all as he quotes it.

We most heartily accept and indorse the statements made in the passages to which he refers. Never at any time have we rejected them.

In the Book of Mormon, Lehi says of his vision:

And I beheld a rod of iron; and it extended along the bank of the river, and led to the tree by which I stood. And also I beheld a straight and narrow path, which came along by the rod of iron.—First Book of Nephi 2: 62, 63.

In the third chapter and sixty-eighth verse of this same book we are told that the rod of iron that he saw leading to the tree of life along the straight and narrow path was the word of God, and that those who clung to it and followed it were saved.

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants the elders are instructed to teach the things that are contained in the word of God, as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and in the church covenants. In our epitome of faith we declare that we believe in the word of God as contained in the Bible, so far as it is correctly translated.

These statements are introduced to refute the insinuation that in some way we reject the word of God. To the contrary, we have always insisted that it should be the end of controversy.

The trouble is that Mr. Russell attempts to make the passages referred to, and others, mean that all of the word of God is found in the Old and New Testaments making up our present version of the Bible. This is a wrong assumption not warranted in the Scriptures.

God's word is indeed a great storehouse containing sufficient food for all time; but his word is not all contained in the Bible. Jesus himself said to his disciples that he had many things to tell them but they were not ready at that time to receive them.

The arbitrary closing up of the canon of scripture by the theologians at some time later did not cut him off from the opportunity to reveal his will further.

Even Mr. Russell has not that authority. Indeed a little further on he repudiates authority. We read that Jesus spake as one "having authority" and not "as the scribes." Mr. Russell wishes us to distinctly understand that he and his associates speak as those having no authority, like the scribes and Pharisees. Behold Mr. Russell come to confession!

His second charge is that we believe in the "transmigration of the soul and in the immortality of the soul." We do not even know just what he means by charging us with a belief in the transmigration of the soul. Perhaps he has in mind some of the vagaries of Utah Mormonism about peopling other planets, building up kingdoms in other worlds, Adam coming to this planet with one of his wives, etc., we do not know. Evidently he is not "quite well informed respecting this people and their views."

So far as the immortality of the soul is concerned, it is written in the word of God by which he sets such store: "Our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel" (2 Timothy 1: 10).

If we are able to see and believe that which Jesus hath "brought to light," and Mr. Russell is not able to perceive it, judge ye concerning whom these words refer: "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light."

Next he raises the question of authority. He may make his own argument against the papacy. We have not "degraded" individual members of the church. The fact that certain ones are called to do a specific work and given authority to do that work does not indicate that other church members not so called and ordained are degraded. If it did, then the authority conferred upon Jesus and the twelve degraded all other members, as he admits that Jesus and the twelve held special authority. His argument is a boomerang.

His assertion that none but "the Lord and his twelve apostles ever had special authority in the gospel church" will not stand investigation for a moment:

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself could not come.—Luke 10: 1.

And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.—Luke 10: 17.

To these men he said: "He that heareth you heareth me." Scores of other references might be cited: To Paul, sent out as a special witness; to Ananias sent to lay hands on Paul that he might be healed and receive the Holy Ghost; to Philip, preaching, baptizing, healing the sick by divine authority; to the elders ordained and set in various cities with power to regulate and set in order; to Titus, who was to "exhort and rebuke with all authority."

Mr. Russell may make his own confession of a lack of any special authority; but he must not assume that such lack is typical of the ministry of the true church of Jesus Christ in this or any other age. Such poverty is not of God. It is distinctly of man.

Just what is meant by his assertions in the paragraph numbered four we can not say. Certainly it is not true that we fail to recognize Jesus as the Savior of all men who accept his gospel; nor do we reject any of the fruits of his work that are to develop during the millennium.

In his final injunction in the closing paragraph Mr. Russell gave some very good advice to Brother and Sister Riggle. We are happy to say that they acted upon his suggestion. Having investigated the matter, and having become convinced that this people are walking in the light and actuated by the Spirit of Christ, they united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (not, however, in contradiction to the Scriptures, but in harmony therewith), and ceased to have fellowship with unfruitful works of darkness.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

BLINDNESS OF OPPOSITION

OTHER OX GORED

The following statement from the Gospel Advocate, written by Elder E. C. Fuqua, of Denver, Colorado, editor of the Word of Truth, discontinued, and identified with what is commonly known as the Non-Progressive Christian Church, is interesting when considered in the light of recent history:

Let no one be alarmed regarding a report emanating from Greeley purporting to be a statement of my work in Colorado. The true church of Christ in this State is behind me more than ever before, it seems, and we will win even though beset by every form of opposition. We have no time nor disposition to stop to notice seriously persecution from without or within the church, especially when it is manifestly waged to retard and counteract the good work. Our life and life's work here and elsewhere stand guard while we diligently labor for the conversion of souls and the spread of the truth. We have met every form of report from bigamy to blasphemy, and have always prospered in spite of such efforts of enemies of Christ to deter us and defeat our purposes.

Elder Fuqua has been foremost among those who by the repetition, aggravation and creation of "persecution" have sought "to retard and counteract the good work" of the cause we represent; and he opened wide the columns of the Word of Truth for every effort to do so. He has been ready at all times to pass on "every form of report from bigamy to blasphemy" against us; and at no time has he been known to make allowances for the overanxiety of the "enemies of Christ to deter us and defeat our purpose."

He has stood and now stands with a class who have ceased not to defy denial, and who have alleged that if the Saints are not willing to follow them into every ungodly avenue of misrepresentation and unfounded attack, it has been because they dare not do so for fear of bringing to light further dark deeds of a terrible past which they wish to see dead.

But how different when one is himself attacked—and we note, too, from the Gospel Advocate, that the complaints against Elder Fuqua come in the form of charges "sent out from Greeley, Colorado, by parties claiming to be the Church of Christ," or from the former home congregation of Elder Fuqua at Greeley. When attacked himself, our friend has neither time nor disposition to "stop to notice seriously" charges drawn up by his own brethren. We would not, however, be so rude as to suggest an application of the same rule he and his kind have sought to apply to us.

We do not refer to this matter to injure Elder

Fuqua personally. We only do so to note the blindness of the opposition to the cause of the latter-day restoration: Anything from whatever source is true when urged against us; matter urged against our opponents, even when brought forward by their own people and congregations, is of no consequence. The difference seems to be in whose ox it is that is gored.

We may remark in passing, that while the Latter Day Saints and the cause they have espoused have been subjected from the beginning to opposition, blind and otherwise, yet, in the language of our persecuted and maligned friend of Colorado, we may thank God that

We have met every form of report from bigamy to blasphemy, and have always prospered in spite of such efforts of enemies of Christ to deter us and defeat our purposes.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

DESTRUCTIVE STORM.—A tornado sweeping over Kansas towns and centering at Great Bend on the 11th, killed eight and destroyed considerable property, leaving hundreds homeless.

INFORMATION ASKED.—The United States Government has asked of Great Britain information concerning the recent search of the American ship Zelalandia in the Mexican port Progreso by a landing party from a British cruiser. The Zelalandia is said to have a German crew aboard, and a cargo of resin consigned to Sweden.

LINER SUNK.—The Italian liner Ancona, outward bound for America, carrying six hundred and forty-two passengers and crew, has been sunk in the Mediterranean by a German or Austrian submarine. Many lives are thought to have been lost, possibly including Americans, who were aboard. Particulars are not known at this writing.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa forces attacking Fuerte have been defeated. Zapata's army in southern Mexico is said to be disintegrating rapidly. The soldiers are being given amnesty by Carranza. The American consul at Juraz has warned Americans to leave the state of Chihuahua before a suspension of railroad connections, which is threatened.

JAPANESE CORONATION.—Amid spectacular ceremonies, the people of Japan and representatives of foreign countries, for the first time in the history of the country, witnessed on the 10th the coronation of a Mikado, when Yoshihito acceded to the throne of Nippon. The ceremonies, covering a period of three weeks, cost $5,000,000. The United States was represented by Ambassador George W. and Mrs. Guthrie.

AMERICAN PREPAREDNESS.—The discussion pro and con of proposed American preparedness for war is bringing out the extravagance of the United States in establishing naval yards, army posts, etc., without sufficient consideration and in some instances with no consideration of their need and strategic importance, and extravagance in other lines. If there is to be additions to the army and navy, there is coming to be a well-defined insistence that they shall be made and maintained along lines of fitness and economy.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON DEAD.—Booker T. Washington, the famous negro teacher and educator, died at his home in Tuskegee, Alabama, November 14. This remarkable man was born in slavery near Hale's Ford, Virginia, in 1857 or 1858. After freedom came to him through emancipation, he gathered together sufficient money to pay his stage fare to Hampton, Virginia, where he entered the school for negroes, and worked his way through the academic course. Later he became a teacher in Hampton Institute, and still later organized an industrial school for negroes at Tuskegee. This institution started in a rented shanty church and to-day owns three thousand, five hundred acres of land in Alabama, and has nearly one hundred buildings valued at about five hundred thousand dollars. Among other honors bestowed upon Booker T. Washington we note the honorary degree of Master of Arts conferred by Harvard in 1896, and the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws in Dartmouth in 1901.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Germany, Austria and Bulgaria have continued to gain in the north and center of Serbia, while in southern Serbia and southwestern Bulgaria the allies are successful. The Russians have been on the offensive in the north, over a front from Riga to Dvinsk, where they have the advantage over the Germans. There is no material change on any other front. German and Austrian submarine activities have been revived, especially in the Mediterranean, requiring increasing vigilance on the part of the navies of the allies to insure the safe conduct of troops to the Balkans. Several British steamers, a French steamer and a British torpedo boat destroyer have been sunk. Two German submarines have been sunk by British cruisers in the Strait of Gibraltar. Premier Asquith stated on the 9th that Earl Kitchener had gone, "I hope for a short time only, to survey at close quarters the situation in the near east." Winston Churchill has resigned from the British Cabinet and will join the army in France as major of the Oxford Yeomanry. The premier has announced in the Commons plans for the establishment of a permanent Anglo-French war council, in which Russia and Italy would likely join. The premier also announced on the 11th a committee of five from the Cabinet to direct the war. Lord Derby, director of recruiting for Great Britain, stated on the 11th that to avoid compulsory service "young men physically able and not indispensable in any business of national importance or any business conducted for the general good of the community" should volunteer before November 30. A loan of $8,000,000 from Great Britain, France and Russia to Greece has been arranged. The new Greek Cabinet has given to the allies formal assurances "to continue our neutrality, with the character of our sincerest benevolence toward the entente powers." The new cabinet holds to the attitude of the former cabinet toward the allied forces landing at Salonika, being "too conscious of the real interests of the country and of what it owes to the powers which are protecting Greece to swerve from this line of conduct." In defiance of the war party, headed by ex-Premier Venizelos, King Constantine has dissolved the Greek Parliament and ordered an election to occur December 16.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

LIQUOR AND LIBERTY.—A man must have a very poor understanding of liberty if he construes liberty to mean that to gratify his appetite for drink he has a right to bring ruin upon others. . . . The man who puts his appetite above the security of his neighbors has yet to learn the first principle of liberty and freedom. No man can so exercise his liberty as to do harm to other people; the man who insists upon the open saloon in order that he may be a patron subordinates the common welfare of the community to his own personal desire.—W. J. Bryan.

COST OF WAR.—The Literary Digest for October 2 has the following estimate of the cost of the present world war:

That "Money talks" is once more proved by the comment of editorial observers on the latest figures from London and Paris which show what the war is costing. The state of things on any of the battle fronts is an unheeded topic for the moment as they contemplate the European nations mortgaging their future generations. The war is now costing Great Britain $25,000,000 a day, we learn from cable dispatches, and the third war-budget introduced in the House of Commons by Reginald McKenna, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is the greatest in the world's history. In France Mr. Ribot, Minister of Finance, presenting a bill for the appropriation of $1,240,000,000, "for the expenses of the last quarter of the year," stated in the Chamber of Deputies that the average monthly war-expenses of Russia are $360,000,000 and that of Germany approach $500,000,000 per month. At present France is spending daily about $10,000,000, estimators calculate on the basis of the figures of last June, which were $8,700,000 a day. In the judgment of the Boston News Bureau "all the active belligerents in the war can not now be spending much if any less than $75,000,000 in aggregate a day." If we reckon in addition, says this journal, the indirect costs of the conflict in "property-destruction, waste and loss and diversion, destruction or crippling of human energy, at another fifty millions a day," we have "a gross cost of close to $1,400 for every second of the war, day and night."

VALUE OF THE WORD OF WISDOM

The Word of Wisdom was given Wednesday, February 27, 1833. It was given "for the benefit of the council of high priests, assembled in Kirtland and church; and also, the Saints in Zion. To be sent greeting, not by commandment or constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom; showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days. Given for a principle, with promise; adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all Saints, who are or can be called Saints."

This is a peculiar and unique document, but we think it will bear the closest investigation; and though it is now over eighty-two years old, and the subjects treated have been investigated and discussed by men of learning, it will be found to be in harmony with or in advance of the best of the age.

The Word of Wisdom was given by revelation, showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days. We are dealing with a revelation direct from God. Let us keep that in mind. We will treat on the subjects contained in this revelation in the order in which they appear in Doctrine and Covenants, 86.

STRONG DRINK

I have warned you, and forewarned you, by giving you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh strong drink among you, behold it is not good.

God in his infinite love for mankind deigned to warn his people against that which was not good for them. It was so with the first of the human family in the Garden of Eden. Man was told not to eat certain fruit of a certain tree; if he did he should suffer for it, nevertheless, he could take his choice. We see what the effect will be if man disobeys God.

Wine, whisky, beer, and all other strong drinks are classed as alcoholic drinks. Diseases of the heart and vascular system; the kidneys, brain and liver and of the respiratory system, particularly pneumonia and asthma, the predisposition of which is greatly increased by the habitual use of alcohol.—Robert Ludy, M. D., Late Assistant Surgeon, United States of America.

Excessive imbibition of alcohol causes congestion of the stomach with altered gastric secretion, precipitation of pepsin during gastric digestion, congestion of liver and finally destruction of many of the liver cells. On entering the circulation it acts as an irritant to the whole vascular system and to the kidneys. It also causes subnormal temperature. Alcohol causes a great lessening in the excretion of the products of tissue waste.

In small doses it acts as a cerebral stimulant, while larger doses greatly depress, and abolish nervous activity, and check digestion. The habitual use of alcohol is accompanied by a disposition towards fatty degeneration, particularly of heart muscle, liver and kidneys, and in enlarged and dilated condition of the smaller blood vessels and a degeneration of all nervous structures.

LESIONS CHARACTERISTIC OF CHRONIC ALCOHOLISM

In the nervous system a form of multiple peripheral neuritis (alcohol neuritis) characterized by swelling, redness, infiltration, and degeneration . . .

The typical beer drinker's liver is a much enlarged organ showing fatty degeneration. The stomach and intestines may be dilated. . . .

The arteries usually show arterio-sclerotic changes, frequently associated with cardiac dilation. The superficial capillaries and venules, especially of the cheeks and nose, are dilated and have thickened walls (acne rosacea). The resistance to tuberculosis and other infectious diseases is decreased. The will and intellectual faculties are greatly impaired, and there is perversion of the moral tendencies.—A. C. Morgan, M. D., Philadelphia, General Hospital.

Doctor Goldwater, Commissioner of Health, in the city of New York, has this to say, as quoted in The Saints' Herald, August 25, 1915:

A diminution in the consumption of alcohol by the community would mean less tuberculosis, less poverty, less dependency, less pressure on our hospitals, asylums and jails. Intemperate drinking cuts into the support of the family. Drinking mothers lose twice as many babies as do sober mothers. More alcoholism is found in the parents of feeble-minded children than in the parents of normal children. The children of drinkers develop more slowly and do poorer school work than do the children of abstainers. Alcohol impairs the tone of the muscles and lessens the product of laborers; it depreciates skill and endurance of artisans; it impairs memory; multiplies industrial accidents; causes chronic disease of the heart, liver, stomach and kidneys; increases death rate to pneumonia, lessens natural immunity to infectious diseases.

Thus we see that medical science proves to the world that all alcoholic drinks are not good for man. God said in 1833 that it was not good for man to partake of strong drink. As Saints of God we do not have to wait for the medical profession to prove to us that God knew what he was talking about when he said that strong drink was not good for man.

EVIL CONSEQUENCES FROM USE OF TOBACCO

They are: Catarrhal inflammation of pharynx, tonsils, and mouth. Nervous disorders of the heart, palpitation, and insomnia also result. Derangement of the stomach with loss of appetite, and impairment of vision, together with paralysis of optic nerve; nervous tremors, and muscular twitching may result.

Some of the results of tobacco smoking are: It depresses the circulation and produces palpitation of the heart. It causes low grades of inflammatory processes in the upper air passages, catarrhal conjunctivities, mental lethargy, with inability to sustain mental application.

Here are a few cigarette facts: It is estimated that twelve hundred American boys begin the cigarette habit every day. A boy conquered by the cigarette is conquered for all else. In the smoke of the cigarette the most precious opportunities of life float away beyond recall. No devotee of tobacco ever graduated at the head of his class at Harvard. High-school teachers say that cigarette smokers stand at least ten per cent lower than their nonsmoking classmates, and that they are untrustworthy, untruthful and deceitful. All the largest railroad companies, business firms, insurance companies and banking institutions in the United States practically debar the cigarette smoker.

God says: "Tobacco is not for the body [neither inside nor outside] . . . but is an herb to be used for bruises, and all sick cattle, and to be used with judgment and skill."

Mr. Will S. Hale, Superintendent of the Oregon School of Training for Delinquent Boys, says:

It is my opinion that no boy who smokes or chews tobacco will ever make as good a man physically, morally, or mentally as he would have made if he had left tobacco alone; and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the victims of this habit are complete failures as men, while a large percentage do not even reach maturity.—Youth's Temperance Banner, July, 1915.

Where do boys learn to smoke or chew tobacco? From men who are old enough to know the evils resulting from this filthy habit, and who should set a better example; are any of them Latter Day Saints?

HOT DRINKS

"And again, hot drinks are not for the body." This has long been interpreted to mean tea and coffee. W. D. Halliburton, M. D., F. R. S., Professor of Physiology, Kings College, London, England, has this to say:

Tea, coffee, and similar drinks are stimulants, chiefly to the nervous system; tea, coffee, mate (of Paraguay), guarana (of Brazil), cola nut (of Central Africa), bush tea (of South Africa), and a few other plants used in various countries all owe their chief property to an alkaloid called theine or caffeine, cocoa to the closely related alkaloid theobromine, coca to cocaine. These alkaloids are all poisonous, and when used to excess, even in the form of infusions of tea and coffee, produce overexcitement, loss of digestive power and other disorders well known to physicians. Cocoa is not only a stimulant, but a food in addition; it contains about fifty per cent of fat and twelve per cent of proteid. Still as ordinarily prepared as an infusion, the quantity taken does not contain much of these food materials.—Kirk's Handbook of Physiology. Edition 7.

Like alcohol in small quantities, tea, coffee, cocoa are all stimulants. This is due to the alkaloids contained in them. Tea has in addition an astringent of the nature of tannin. The alkaloid of coffee (there are about two grains of caffeine in each cup) with a volatile oil called coffeon makes this beverage strongly stimulating to the nervous system and kidneys. Cocoa also contains fats (sixty per cent), starch and albuminous matter, and thus must be looked upon more as a food than the others.—Anthony Bassler, M. D., Professor of Clinical Medicine, New York.

Coffee is in no sense a food, because it can neither build up the tissues nor provide them with potential energy. Coffee produces a disturbance of digestion due to a direct interference with the chemical part of the process, but in part also indirectly brought about by the nervous system; it also produces a dyspepsia which is of the atonic type, and a slow digestion, accompanied by flatulence, with a disturbance of the heart's action, so that it is decidedly contraindicated from a feeding point. Coffee is a cardiac stimulant, quickening the heart action in small doses, and depressing it in larger quantities. Such symptoms as muscular tremor, nervous anxiety, and dread of impending danger, as well as palpitation; cardiac intermissions, and an uncomfortable feeling referred to the cardiac region can be traced to coffee. It is a diuretic, and increases the excretion of urea; it produces insomnia, nervousness, and fear; also choreiform movements. Caffeine has been known to produce paralysis in lower animals, and might produce a similar effect if taken in large quantities.—Diseases of Infancy and Childhood, p. 202, by Louis Fisher, M. D. Fifth edition.

Doctor Turner, late of Sandwich, Illinois, in treating Brother William Newton for paralysis strictly forbade tea, coffee, tobacco, alcoholic drinks, or meat to be used by the patient. Doctor Turner also stated that a law should be passed prohibiting anyone to use tea or coffee after they became thirty years old. He also says, "Meat should be used very sparingly." After giving the evidence as rendered by four of the most prominent physicians of the age in which we now live, do I need to add that the Great Physician knew his business when he said in 1833, that hot drinks are not for the body or belly?

In Matthew 4:4, Christ makes this statement: Men shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Also in Matthew 7:30, I. T. we read this language: Verily I say unto you, it is not everyone that sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven.

This revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 86) was given to the Saints showing forth the order and will of God. We are told that it was given for a principle—a principle of the gospel, surely.

MEAT

Yea, flesh also, of beasts and fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold or famine.

When Daniel with his three friends was in captivity in Babylon, he refused to defile himself with the king's meat and wine. At the end of ten days he appeared fairer than those who had partaken of the king's meat, and he was granted thereafter a vegetable diet.

More than once in the annals of the Old Testament do we find that flesh was excluded from the diet of God's people. When the children of Israel came out of Egypt, God gave them a diet of manna. Many of them still had Egyptian appetites and complained against Moses, declaring that he had brought them out of Egypt to die in the wilderness. They would not be satisfied without flesh, and God rained quail upon them, giving them meat to the full until it became loathsome to them. They were smitten with a great plague because of their faithlessness (Exodus 11).

Let us remember that a flesh diet was not in the original bill of fare. God gave the first man for food every herb, bearing seed, and fruit of every tree, yielding seed (Genesis 1:31, I. T.). This diet has never been withdrawn and is adapted to-day to all classes.

FIRST PERMISSION TO EAT FLESH

The first permission to eat flesh was given to Noah after the flood. Man was under the curse. The conditions of Eden having disappeared, the flood had swept over the earth, the climate changed, and thus facing a scarcity of food, Noah was permitted to eat flesh. At the same time, however, the blood of the animal was restricted, being a type of the shed blood of Christ on the cross. The blood thereof shall they not eat, for it is the life of the flesh,—and only in this manner were animals permitted to be slain.

It is a fact that the more flesh man eats the more like an animal he becomes. The slaughter of thousands of creatures for food produces moral deterioration. Men engaged in this business become hardened to the cry of the agonized brute, and the sight of quivering flesh, and streaming blood loses its horror.

Why should people clamor for flesh food when they have better health without it? It is not necessary for strength. Beefsteak does not make one strong like an ox, for the ox gets its strength from corn, or a vegetable diet. Animal food is vegetable food second-hand. The flesh of animals is saturated with poisons and is the fruitful source of many diseases. This is the verdict of science. There are several classes of diseases resulting from a flesh diet,—parasitic diseases, tuberculosis and trichinosis. These parasites bore their way through the blood vessels, get into the blood streams, circulate through the body, and thus imperil life.

Oysters are a fruitful source of typhoid. Meat eating causes gout, rheumatism, Bright's disease, cancer, and epilepsy.

Physicians have done much to enlighten the public on these subjects, and it is time for the people to call a halt, abandon their carnivorous propensities, and listen to the God who created them. If God knew how to create the human body, he certainly knows how it should be taken care of, and preserved from the ravages of disease.

FRUIT IN SEASON

Every herb and fruit has been given for the use of man "in the season thereof." What other time could you gather them? Don't try to gather apples or pears in the winter, when everything is frozen solid, or you will be disappointed; but gather them when they are in season. "All these to be used with prudence and thanksgiving." Webster defines prudence as practical wisdom.

Wisdom should be exercised in the storing of the different fruits and herbs for future use. They should be stored so as to be kept in a state of perfection. Potatoes, for instance, will keep better if buried in the earth deep enough so they will not freeze and where no air can get to them. If left in the open air they will soon begin to decay. Fruits also will decay quicker if left in the open air or even when placed in cellars where air has access to it. So if the fruit can not be kept in its natural state, the only other way that presents itself is to can it.

Some have taken the position that fruits or vegetables when canned die, from the lack of air. If left in the air they decay, so what are we to do that we and our children might have food? The fact of the matter is this, that when fruit or vegetables are separated from the vine or tree, there is no more life there, because they are separated from that source from which they received life.

All grain is good for the food of man. Nevertheless, wheat for man, corn for the ox, and oats for the horse, and rye for the fowls and for swine,—and barley for all useful animals. This statement is plain enough. It needs no comment.

In writing about the value of the Word of Wisdom I have endeavored to cling to the verdict of science and the medical world upon the various subjects contained in the Word of Wisdom. Does it remain for poor, weak, puny, humanity to come forward and prove to the world, and especially to those who call themselves Saints of God, that God's word is true? That God knows what is best for the human body?

God said in 1833 that alcoholic drinks, tobacco, and hot drinks are not good for the human body and are not intended for the use of man as a food. Medical science claims the same.

THE PROMISE

God said that meat should be used sparingly, and that it was pleasing to him to only use it in cold weather or famine. Medical science has also advanced this theory, and claims man will have better health by doing so. Does medical science hold out any promise of reward if we follow their advice? Yes, but the reward goes to the physicians who give the advice. Does God hold out any promise of reward? Yes.

And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them.

Has God at any time refused to keep his promises made to the children of men, when they follow his instructions? Nay, verily, he has not.

Some have said that this is not a commandment to the church, and so it does not make any difference whether we keep it or not. In Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6, we read: "For he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant." Again in the same verse: "But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned."

In John 14: 23, 24, we have this language: "Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him. He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings."

We hope that those who read or hear this article will be spurred on to a greater determination to take God at his word and to heed his advice in all things whenever given.

H. WILLIAMS.

THE SACRAMENT

A PART OF THE LAW OF PARDON OR REMISSION OF SINS

He shall save his people from their sins.

There is such a variety of opinions about the law of pardon, or remission of sins, among those who believe in Christ, that many are unable to discern what the truth in Christ Jesus is, and do not seem to see there is danger in religious beliefs that are not in accord with the teachings of Christ. Yet the Savior said, "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch" (Matthew 15: 14.) Paul said:

Because they received not a love of the truth, that they might be saved. . . . God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they might all be damned who believed not the truth (2 Thessalonians 2: 10-12. See also Ephesians 5: 6.)

To obtain accurate information upon the question one must learn facts as they are recorded in the Holy Scriptures. Great men are great thinkers; knowledge and wisdom are the results of thinking; deception is a rare caller upon the thinker who is governed by evidence and reason. Reason is a God-given faculty by which knowledge and understanding may be apprehended by the human mind. (Matthew 22: 37.) Let us search the Scriptures, then, for God's plan revealed to man, for pardon, or remission of sins.

THE MISSION OF JOHN

It is important that we note first the mission of John the Baptist. His work was foretold by his father, Zacharias, who, when filled with the Holy Ghost, prophesied saying:

And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins.—Luke 1: 76, 77.

When John grew to manhood he was sent of God to preach repentance and baptism for the remission of sins (John 1: 6-33; Luke 3: 2, 3.)

Baptism was for remission of sins committed in the past; and John gave no promise of remission of sins committed after baptism. All must look to Christ for a re-remission.

In the Mosaic law there was a way provided, by obedience to which God's people could receive a remission of sins from time to time; not so with John's teachings, there was but one baptism for each person. Jesus was to finish the work that John was sent to commence. He would provide for a re-remission of sins.

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the son of God. . . . The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1: 1-4.

This that John taught was making the paths of the Lord straight; surely faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins is the strait gate, the gate of righteousness (Matthew 7: 14; Psalm 118: 19, 20).

THE MISSION OF CHRIST

And the teaching of John the Baptist was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Jesus took up the work of John and taught and practiced the baptism of John. Jesus went to John to be baptized of him, thus indorsing the work of John as being authorized of heaven, and he said, "Thus it cometh us to fulfill all righteousness." And he said to the chief priests and elders, "John came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not" (Matthew 21: 32).

Let us examine the statement of the angel to Joseph about the birth of Jesus and his mission:

"And she (Mary) shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." Two important points in this statement should be noted carefully; who are his people here referred to? And how will he save them from their sins?

WHO ARE HIS PEOPLE?

Jesus said, "I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. . . . and I lay down my life for the sheep." (John 10:11-15). Jesus gave his life for his sheep, and he said:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same [are not his sheep] is a thief and a robber. But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. To him the porter openeth.—John 10: 1-3.

Jesus entered in by the door (baptism), and John the Baptist was the porter.

Surely all ought to see that faith, repentance, and baptism in water for remission of sins, constitute the door to the sheepfold, the strait gate. We read again:

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ [entered the door to the sheepfold]. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed [sheep], and heirs according to the promise.—Galatians 3: 27-29. See also Romans 6: 3-6.

Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16: 16); or, in other words, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life" (John 10: 27, 28). His people, his sheep, are they who enter the door into the sheepfold. And he will save his people from their sins. He laid down his life for the sheep (John 10: 15). His blood was shed for the sheep.

SINS AFTER BAPTISM

Notice! He would save his people, his sheep, from their sins; and they did not become his people, his sheep, until they had been baptized for the remission of sins. Then his blood must be for remission of sins committed after they were baptized. And did his people commit sins after they were baptized? It must be so. John says:

If we [Saints, his people] say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins [one to another, James 5: 16], he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—1 John 1: 8, 9.

How?

But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John 1: 7.

Did the blood of Christ remit sins before they were committed? Paul says not:

For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past.—Romans 3: 23-25.

Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him.—Romans 5: 9.

FOR REMISSION OF SINS

The great question is, In what way is the blood of Christ applied to his people for remission of sins? And is there any way revealed for remission of sins other than baptism and the blood of Christ? Is there a law provided by the Lord, by obedience to which we may have a remission of sins from time to time? I think we will discover there is. Let us examine briefly the passover supper.

The preparation for the paschal supper was as follows: A male lamb of the first year, without blemish, was to be killed while the sun was setting, the blood to be sprinkled upon the two side posts and the lintel of the door of the house. The lamb was then roasted, whole; there must be no bone broken. In studying the festival of the passover, we see it was both commemorative and typical. The deliverance which it commemorated was a type of the great salvation it foretold. (Smith's Bible Dictionary.)

There is no type or shadow of the salvation introduced by the Savior, that can vie with the festival of the passover. The lamb slain was a type of the Lamb of God, Christ, who died as the sun was setting; not a bone of him being broken. A beautiful symbol of unity; and by his blood are his people delivered from the bondage of sin, when they are obedient to his commandments. As Paul wrote to the Philippian brethren, "work out your salvation with fear and trembling." Notice! The passover was useless unless eaten, and Jesus, the lamb of God said:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.—John 6: 53, 54.

The Jews strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat? Many of his disciples when they had heard this, said, This is a hard saying; who can hear it. From that time many of his disciples went back and walked with him no more. They knew not that his flesh and blood were to be partaken of in the bread and wine of the sacrament; and but few to-day understand his words, as addressed to his disciples, when the sacrament was instituted at the last passover supper.

And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.—Matthew 26: 26-29.

It is right here, we must look closely: The wine was to represent his blood and was for the remission of sins that were past (Romans 3: 25). Justified by his blood as we receive it in the sacrament (Romans 5: 9). Jesus said he gave his life a ransom for many, his people, his sheep (Matthew 20: 28; 26: 28; Mark 10: 45; Hebrews 9: 28). He shall save his people from their sins, the good shepherd giveth his life (blood) for the sheep (John 10:11). It was while eating the passover supper that Jesus substituted the eating the lamb of God, symbolically, in the sacrament.

The bitter herbs of the passover supper to be eaten before partaking of the paschal lamb were a type of the bitterness in repentance and confession, confessing our faults, or wrongs one to another, seeking reconciliation that we may have fellowship one with another, or fellowship with all, and a remission of sins, so that we may have his spirit to be with us (1 John 1:7-9; Doctrine and Covenants 17:22, 23).

As the Israelites ate the passover prepared for the journey, or their flight out of Egypt, so his people must prepare, by repentance and confession, for their escape from sin, and to have the Spirit to be with them as their guide and protector.

The three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, the water, and the blood, is it not water baptism, and the blood, as in the sacrament? I think so (1 John 5:8).

John on Patmos saw a vision:

I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, . . . before the lamb, clothed in white robes. . . . And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? And whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me: These are they which come up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the lamb.—Revelation 7:9-14.

Notice! Each one had done his own washing. The bride had made herself ready (Revelation 19:7-9).

The writer of Hebrews has given a warning we must consider, Hebrews 10:26-29:

For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?

It would seem that all sins, committed knowingly, are committed willfully, yet few would willfully do despite to the Spirit of grace. It may be this refers to the unpardonable sin, or sins of that character (Hebrews 6:4-8).

SACRIFICE AND PRIEST

Now we ask a question: Does all wine represent the blood of Christ? The answer is, No, of course not. In what way, then, is it made to represent the blood of Christ? Can anyone who may wish to, invoke such a blessing as will cause the wine to correctly represent the blood of Christ? And we answer, No; it is a spiritual sacrifice for sins, and is to be offered by one appointed to represent Christ, a priest of God; as we read:

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.—Hebrews 5:1.

A holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.—1 Peter 2:5.

The sacrament is of great value to all who are in Christ, (his people); and as his flesh and blood were a part of his body while upon earth, so it is in his body, his church to-day, and no one can have access to it unless he is of God's people, his sheep, members of his body, or church, for he said, I lay down my life for the sheep; and the angel said he would save his people from their sins (John 10:1, 11, 15; Matthew 1:21).

This is an important question, a great question. Many great men have studied it, many councils have discussed it. The study of this question has been going on for centuries, yet how few understand it.

God will save his people from their sins by making it possible for them to wash their robes and make them white in his blood (the sacrament), as operative in the perfect law of liberty.

LIFE OF ELDER F. C. KECK

Elder Floyd C. Keck was born October 13, 1855, at Aurora, Kane County, Illinois. He removed to Missouri in 1873, where he married Miss Emma Shade, October 31, 1875. He spent the early part of his life on the farm.

When the latter-day work found him he was living in Vernon County, Missouri. Elders I. N. White and Emsley Curtis came into his neighborhood and began preaching.

Brother Keck had always been of a skeptical nature, and had never been attracted by any religious theory. He went to hear these men through curiosity. During the first sermon he felt the power of the Spirit, causing him to realize it was the work of God, and on May 22, 1887, he and his wife were baptized. February 17, 1889, he was ordained an elder, by I. N. and Alfred White, at Virgil City, Missouri.

The first time he was called upon to administer was about a month after he was ordained. His wife had a very hard chill, and under his administration she was healed, which was an evidence to him of the divinity of his call, and strengthened him for the work before him. He labored locally, working on a farm and filling appointments over Sunday, sometimes holding a series of meetings with good interest.

He met with a serious accident about December, 1892, in which he got a broken leg. It was a bad break, but he received such a blessing through administration that he went on crutches in two weeks, and began a meeting at Walker, Missouri, and continued it with good interest.

After this he decided to heed the call to devote all his time to the work, and the next spring, 1893, he took his first General Conference appointment. Since that time he has been a diligent, faithful missionary. He was ordained to the office of seventy, October 18, 1894, at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, by Joseph Luff, I. N. White and T. W. Chatburn, and was a member of the second quorum.

He labored extensively in Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma, and many were made to know the beauties of the gospel through his efforts. Sometimes the burden seemed almost too heavy, and he was tempted to quit the field, but October 4, 1902 a revelation was given him that if he did not loose his hands and go into the ministry and devote his whole time to it he would come to poverty.

In his work he has witnessed many marvelous manifestations of the Spirit in the signs that "follow them that believe." In notes he made before he died he tells of many experiences. The following are some he mentions:

The first healing he ever witnessed was soon after he came into the church. His wife was very sick with fever. Brother Abner Lloyd administered to her and she was instantly healed, and arose and helped get supper.

August 9, 1894, he was preaching south of Lebeck, his home. While in secret prayer it was shown him that something was wrong at home. He was greatly worried, but preached at night. While in the pulpit, Brother George Swenson came after him and told him his wife was very low with typhoid fever.

He went home and was there eight weeks before she was well enough for him to leave. He had found it very hard to stay in the field because of homesickness, but he promised the Lord if he would spare his companion he would stay in the field without complaining.

February 7, 1898, he was called to administer to a man who did not belong to the church. This man had dropsy, and was so bad he could not lie down, but had to sit in an invalid's chair thirty days and nights. The man told him he had seen his name in gilt letters on the wall one night, and asked his mother to send for him. After explaining that there was no power in him to heal, but that God must give the blessing, he administered and the man was healed. In five minutes after the administration he breathed naturally, and that night he went to bed and slept well, and was able to be up the next day. He never came into the church.

In October, 1906, Sister Lloyd Gouldsmith was very sick with lung trouble. Her mother died of consumption, and it looked as if she would, too. She had small children, and he thought how much they needed a mother's care. In the administration the Spirit came with great power, and she was healed and is living to-day.

December 17, 1902, he was called to administer to Sister Eva Goff, who was very low with typhoid fever. He administered fourteen times before the blessing came. Such was his perseverance.

February 23, 1903, he was called to administer to Brother Christie's little girl, who had pneumonia. The doctor said there was no use for him to come back, for the child's lungs were solid. Brother Keck administered to her and she was healed and became strong.

By the power of the Spirit, demons were cast out on several occasions, and persons who were raving maniacs were made well and their right mind restored. One whose wife was a faithful Saint afterward accepted the gospel.

April 7, 1898, he was called from Independence General Conference to preach a funeral sermon at Oranogo, Missouri. After the burial he administered to a little boy. The child was born with a crippled foot, that turned to one side. During the administration the foot was drawn back straight without a groan, or quiver of the body.

He testified to hearing angels sing at Coal Hill, Missouri, July 1, 1891, and conversed with angels later.

Thus passed his life until he was taken sick three years ago. Since then he preached as he was able, but was compelled to spend considerable time in the Sanitarium and at home. It was one of the great burdens of his life not to be able to preach the gospel he loved so well, and often he expressed the wish that he might be released here and permitted to go where he could labor without the hindrance of bodily afflictions.

Sometimes when he thought his wife was sleeping, she would hear him praying to go where he could work unhindered. He felt his time was near, but was cheerful to the end. He attended the conference at Coal Hill, June 25 to 27, and Sunday afternoon preached his last sermon—the funeral of Sister Bernice Russell, who was buried with her babe in her arms.

The next Sunday, July 4, he attended service at Nevada. It was rally day, and he seemed to enjoy the services. He announced that he would speak the next Sunday night on his experiences, but when that time came he was too weak to fill the appointment. He was still able to be up, and Wednesday morning, July 14, he arose early, feeling better than common, but at the breakfast table, complained of feeling queer and blind. His wife helped him to a couch; at times he partially recovered, only to sink again.

He called his brother, C. W. Keck, to administer, and told him not to ask for his recovery, but only for his peaceful release. He had the realization that the end was near, and said he saw a messenger standing in the door and could see the place being prepared for him.

He told the doctor he was not afraid to go, for he knew where he was going. He only regretted to leave his faithful, sorrowing Emma, but told her not to grieve for him, but to still be brave.

He called all to his bedside and bade them an affectionate farewell, and made some requests in regard to his funeral, among them being that a plain black casket be used, saying, "It was good enough for Brother Joseph, it is good enough for me."

So ended a useful life, at 8 p. m., July 14, 1915. peacefully as he had asked, without a twitch of a muscle or even a gasp.

NEW METHODS AT SINC SING

The old barbaric theory which regarded the treatment of criminals as a matter of retribution and punishment is gradually giving way to the civilized theory of reformation and education. Yet it remains a fact that our whole system of criminal law is still based upon that old and hateful theory.

The first duty of a prison reformer, therefore, is to impress and reimpress upon the public the doctrine that the present theory of the law must be changed,—that its aim should never be punishment, but prevention and reform. The theory of punishment is condemned by religion, discarded by experience, contrary to democratic ideals, and a disgrace to civilization.

There must be a more enlightened system of justice, which shall include the administration of both county jails and State prisons; a system which shall aim at reform rather than punishment; which shall encourage those unfortunate fellow men who have broken the laws to learn to adapt themselves to the proper conditions of organized society.

Law itself is but the formulated expression of the conscience and convenience of society, and to change the law we must first arouse public opinion to the need. The ordinary man thinks and talks of a criminal as a creature of a different breed than himself, and one that must be mastered; and punished as a matter of course.

The interest that people are now taking in the question of prison reform is encouraging. I confess that I have been greatly surprised at the way in which the public have gained a clear-headed notion of what we are doing at Sing Sing.

SELF-GOVERNMENT FOR PRISONERS

... The self-governing system now in use at Auburn and Sing Sing not only goes a step beyond the honor system, but is totally different in kind,—for it trusts not the individual, but the entire prison community. The individual is made responsible not to the warden or to some autocrat, more or less benevolent, but to the whole body of his fellow prisoners.

What we have done at Sing Sing is to lay the foundation for all good prison work, by getting a right spirit of cooperation among the prisoners. This has been accomplished by allowing the prisoners to form themselves into a Mutual Welfare League. To the league all the privileges have been given; and the league, as an organization, becomes responsible for the good conduct of its members. Each violation of discipline or good conduct becomes an offense against the league, punishable by its duly constituted officers. Thus we bring to the aid of the prison authorities the public opinion of the prisoners, the loyalty of a man to his friends,—to the "gang,"—which is characteristic of prisoners.

My firm belief is that under such a prison system the men will become desirous and capable of leading an honest and useful life.

ESSENTIALS OF AN ENLIGHTENED PRISON SYSTEM

The very foundation of our prison system needs to be rebuilt; and at the bottom must lie three principles:

First—The law must decree not punishment, but temporary exile from society until the offender has proven by his conduct that he is fit to return.

Second—Society must brand no man as a criminal; but aim solely to reform the mental conditions under which a criminal act has been committed.

Third—The prison must be an institution where every inmate shall have the largest practicable amount of individual freedom, because "it is liberty alone that fits men for liberty."

The plan of sentencing a convicted man to an indefinite period of imprisonment,—the length of which is to be determined by his conduct and tendency to reform,—has been tried and has proved itself. It should be extended. After the verdict of "guilty" is pronounced by the jury the man should be told by the court that, as he has transgressed the laws of society, he must remain in exile from it, until he has shown by his conduct that he is fit to return.

Then every help should be given him, every resource of the State should aid him, every incentive should be offered him—to learn his lesson. When he has learned it, be that time long or short, society should welcome him back to its midst. It should not turn its back upon him, because his very return will show that he has worked out his own salvation, that from the bitterness of experience he has learned the truth he would not or could not learn without it. . . .

But always the basis of the system must be not more and more repression, but simply less and less liberty; the accent always being on the liberty. As much freedom as the man can stand; no attempt to close the avenues of wrongdoing; but rather that the avenues to wrongdoing be left open and very apparent, so that he may learn to avoid them.

"It is liberty alone that fits men for liberty," as Mr. Gladstone wrote regarding Ireland's demand for home rule. The prison system now endeavors to make men industrious by driving them to work; to make them virtuous by removing temptation; to make them respect the laws by forcing them to obey the edicts of authority; to make them far-sighted by allowing them no chance to exercise foresight, to give them individual initiative by treating them in large groups; in short to prepare them again for society by placing them in conditions as unlike real society as they could well be made.

Character, however, is made not through absence of temptation, but by resistance of temptation. That is one of the fundamental mistakes of the old prison system. There was a vague idea in the minds of many people that men can be made better by training in absence of temptation; so the endeavor always was to remove all temptation in prison life. . . .

THE PRISON LABOR PROBLEM

It is recognized now clearly that in all our prisons men should learn to labor. But it is not so clearly recognized that when you force men to labor that is slave labor; and there are few people who learn to love work by being forced to do it. You are grating against all the grooves of human nature when you take such action. If it is desired that these men should work willingly when they come out of prison (and with many of them voluntary honest labor is the first necessity of their reformed life), then they should be taught while in prison voluntarily to choose labor rather than idleness. In order to do that you must give them liberty to remain idle; but let them bear the economic results of idleness—starvation and dependence.

Outside the walls the man must choose between work and idleness—between honesty and crime. Why not let him teach himself these lessons before he comes out? Such things are best learned by experience. . . .

It should never be lost sight of that it is the duty of the State to make the prison a school where men can be trained for citizenship,—and that includes the learning of some industrial pursuit, so that a man may be able to live by honest work.

A PRISON-REFORM CREED

I have stated in my recent book, Within Prison Walls, and in more than one public speech, certain general principles that my further experience further supports. Some of these follow:

No sensible person proposes to sentimentalize over the lawbreakers. Call the prison by any name you please, yet prisons of some sort we must have so long as men commit crime; and that, from present indications, will be for many generations to come.

So far from setting men free from prison, I would put more men in prison than are there now; for we should send up all who now escape by the wiles of crooked lawyers, and we should include the crooked lawyers.

But behind the prison walls we should relax the iron discipline—the hideous, degrading, unsuccessful system of silence and punishment—and substitute a system that will be fair to all men, a limited form of freedom, and work in the open air.

My personal observations of the working of the Mutual Welfare League at Auburn and Sing Sing have made me realize more firmly than ever before these doctrines discussed in the volume just mentioned:

(1) The prisoners are men—real men—your brethren and mine.

(2) If you treat them like beasts it will be hard for them to keep from degenerating into beasts. If you treat them like men you can help them to rise.

(3) If you trust them they will show themselves worthy of trust.

(4) If you place responsibility upon them they will rise to it.—Thomas Mott Osborne, in Review of Reviews, October, 1915.

ZIONISTS AND PROPHECY

Jewish propaganda for restoration to Palestine is apparently gathering force as the great war progresses. The Jews alone of all the races have not so spiritualized the promises of prophecy that they have lost their historic value. They cling to the belief that, however the war may result, the disposition of the old land in the manner indicated in prophecy will go forward. If we may accept the view of the foremost Zionist journals, their leaders look forward confidently to the ultimate realization of their hopes. Controlling vast wealth, they are prepared to use all the means at their disposal to find a way to an agreement, with Turkey if need be, providing for the Jewish occupation and colonization of Palestine.

Their dream, as their journals describe it, looks to a "development on a scale which no other nation would attempt." Strangely enough, the fact that Jews are fighting on both sides in the European war does not seem to complicate the case in their judgment, as they hold to the belief that the same Divine Power which led their nation in the old days will so overrule conditions as to bring about the fulfillment of the prophetic promise of national rehabilitation.

For the first time in modern history what may be called the Jewish patriotic spirit is awakened. The first official flag of Jewry, which flew at the masthead of the steamship carrying the delegates to the recent convention in Boston, has been accepted as a favorable omen. It is a great hope, suddenly kindled, and one in which a very large proportion of Christians throughout the world have a sympathetic interest.—Christian Herald.

MAKE HARD TO GET

When a raid was made in South Dakota recently, the Sioux City Journal reported that "champagne, beer and whisky were fished from a well, liquors were found in a chicken coop and a demijohn was found in a sack of oats."

Antiprohibitionists are using the Journal's recital as a basis for an attack on prohibition on the theory that the picture of a hole-in-the-wall makes the picture of a saloon more attractive. "This," says the Creston American, whose editor is Postmaster Robb, "is how prohibition works everywhere."

Be that as it may, it should occur to every anti-prohibitionist and prowhisky man that if drinkers have to fish booze out of a well or a sack of oats, or rummage around a chicken coop for it they will be less likely to hunt for it or enjoy it after they find it. Nothing could be less inviting than swigging bottled riots at a chicken coop bar, and it is reasonable to assume that men will not long search for a supply in places of that sort unless completely lost.

Of course the liquor interests have contended with elaborateness that prohibition increases the consumption of booze, oblivious to the absurdity of their position in fighting the movement if that were true; but common sense will lead any sane man to the conclusion that if the enticements of brilliantly lighted saloons are withdrawn from the liquor business it will have a hard time keeping up when it has to do its atrocious work from a chicken coop or a sack of oats or a deep well.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register.

An Irreparable Loss

Since our last writing we have been called to part with one who had endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact, Sister Ada Smith. Our loss is great. The constancy, faithfulness, generosity and kindness of her nature were unailing, and her sympathy quick and helpful. Of clear judgment, seeking always the real, vital things of life and scorning the shams and hypocrisies, with a heart keenly sensitive to another's need, and a hand ever ready and willing to succor, her loss is irreparable; but we bow to the will of God, and in trust and confidence look to him to compensate for her departure in ways which, however inscrutable, we feel will be just and right.

Encouraging Lines

We certainly feel encouraged! The choir movement is becoming better understood, its working forces organized and methods are being employed that must produce results. The choir convention idea is spreading. Omaha has gone down in history, Lamoni follows shortly, and Saint Louis no doubt will get the benefit of Brother Bell's journeys to these respective places, while other affairs of the same nature are being planned elsewhere.

The graded anthem course is bound to attract and enlist the small choirs in the choir movement. In the East we are interesting many musicians who are astounded at the possibilities and results of this combined work. The Staff is doing fine work in spreading the good message.

In the last three weeks we have answered over one hundred inquiries from all over the country. Do you wonder that we feel good? and that we feel encouraged to formulate greater plans than what our vision at the inception of the choir movement would warrant?

Have you placed your orders for anthem books yet? The 1916 Conference Series can only be secured in book form by ordering now.

To-day, not to-morrow, is the watchword these days. So let us work with a will and cooperation that will surprise even our very selves.

I extend to all fall and winter greetings, and may our work be characterized by the spirit of humility.

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

Omaha Convention

Unfortunately for us, we were compelled to be absent from the city during the first two days of the music convention here. We are told, however, that the concert given by the Omaha choir on Friday evening, October 22, was a real success, the men's chorus, in their Cadman number carrying off the honors in that line.

The choir was assisted by Sister Marie Riggs, of Kansas City, lately returned from her studies abroad and in the East. We were delighted to find her work so advanced, the rich promises of three years ago having been largely materialized. She played again on Sunday evening, to the delight and edification of all present. It is needless to say, Sister Marie will be enthusiastically received by the Omaha Saints any time she chooses to favor them with her charming presence, and her beautiful work as a pianist.

None must think this excellence has been obtained lightly, or by the simple expenditure of money. That is impossible; there "is no royal road to learning" now, any more than there was of old. Sister Riggs has worked hard and faithfully, making many sacrifices undreamed of, and unappreciated, by the thoughtless or casual listener. Would that there were more and more of our young people willing to make similar efforts and sacrifices so necessary to properly "cultivate the gift of music."

The institute meetings Saturday forenoon and afternoon, were well attended, and great enthusiasm prevailed. Fifty or sixty out-of-town visitors responded to the wide invitations sent out to the neighboring branches by our energetic and tireless enthusiast, Brother Craig. The topics discussed were: "Is a choir possible for every branch?" "Should membership in our choirs be limited or restricted?" "Is the district choir practicable?" "Does our Sunday school music reach our ideals?"

A picnic lunch at noon introduced a pleasant note of sociability, and gave everyone a chance to get acquainted with everyone else. That evening Brother Bell, our assistant general chorister, directed a very enthusiastic choir rehearsal, preparatory to the music of the Sabbath. Brother Bell possesses, to a marked degree, the essential elements which go to make up the successful choir leader. He is a musician; he is progressive; he is enthused about his work, and able to impart that enthusiasm to others; and above all, he is consecrated to the cause of music in the church.

Sunday morning Brother H. A. Scott gave a talk on how a choir may assist a branch, and Brother Bell followed on the district choir. In the evening Sister Leeka talked of choir ideals, and Brother J. A. Dowker told us of music as a factor in missionary work. All of these addresses were fine and timely. The music was under Brother Bell's direction, for the most part, though one special number was rendered by the singers of the Council Bluffs Choir, directed by Brother Craig.

All these good things, with the valuable edition of a prayer service in the afternoon, combined to make our Omaha convention a grand success, and its influence and the impetus imparted will be felt for many miles. The delegates (from as far east as Des Moines, and west as far as Lincoln), carrying back with them many helpful and encouraging ideas, will put more vigor and life into the service of song everywhere they can, and will realize that this work is a special privilege, and carries with it joy and gladness and satisfaction.

Chords from Other Choirs

We understand that the Central Kansas City Branch had a rally day not long ago, and that the evening service was devoted to music, a splendid concert being given by the branch choir, under the direction of Sister Belle James. We have not the items in full, but we are gratified to even know that the event transpired, as it is but another indication of the aroused interest in music which is being manifested all over the church. Gradually we will see music taking the part in our thoughts which God intended it to occupy, and we will be made to realize, to a greater or lesser degree, the wonderful power it will exercise in our efforts to put our work before the people, in convincing, and then in encouraging and uplifting afterwards.

Independence choir at the Stone Church, gave another of its very popular "Composer's Concerts," on the evening of October 24. Mendelssohn was the master chosen, and, with the combination of solos, by voice, flute, and organ, and orchestra and chorus numbers, well-chosen and well rendered, and an address by Brother Arthur Mills on the life and work of the composer, the evening was another to be remembered as uplifting and educational, as well as entertaining. President Frederick M. Smith made announcement of the appointment of Brother Mills as director of a national church orchestra and Brother Mills arranged for the initial meetings for organization. This is another step forward in our church music work, and the future alone can demonstrate its value. Sister George Hulmes is still directing with faithfulness and efficiency the work of the Independence choir, and Brother C. B. Eaton, with his Sunday school orchestra, is ever ready to cooperate with the singers in these expositions of the works of the great masters of music.

BROOKLYN

It was anything but a jubilant gathering of choristers that attended the farewell tendered to Brother Earl Audet, for some years organist of the Brooklyn, New York, Branch.

The splendid sentiments expressed during the evening of Brother Earl's consecrated talent and devotion to the cause of Christ will ever be a source of comfort and joy to him. The director of the choir, Sister Ella Squires, presented to Brother Audet a fountain pen, with a very broad hint of its intended use. His response touched us all and made us sense keenly how we are to miss him in our work. Brother Earl has moved to Independence. We commend him to the Saints, especially to those interested in the musical welfare of the church.

PHILADELPHIA

Considering the experience we have had musically, we approached the study of "The Messiah" with a considerable degree of hesitancy, but with a willing spirit, born of great determination, we have bent to our task.

The result has been glorious and satisfying. The beauty and character of Handel's writing is being constantly revealed as we master every phrase, and the enthusiasm of choir members grows with each succeeding rehearsal. Elaborate preparations are being made for its production; we will make announcement in due course as to the soloists, and date of performance. It is also worthy to note that the Brooklyn Branch is taking up this serious work, and it is hoped to combine these two splendid choirs, making over one hundred voices in the ensemble.

We are endeavoring to impress upon those who are participating in this work that a spiritual preparation is one of necessity. To sing "The Messiah" "with the Spirit and the understanding" will produce an effect of indescribable beauty and majesty.

We rejoice in the possibilities of our work, and our hearts are made glad in the new note of triumph contained therein.

The fall program of choir endeavor calls for a banquet, halloween party, Thanksgiving concert, and "The Messiah," a review of all anthems of the 1913, 1914 and 1915 series, and excerpts from "The Holy City." After January 1 we will take up the 1916 General Conference Series.

We are having glorious times in Philadelphia, but how much more so would they be if we could sense the seriousness of God's work and the joy of constant service.

A. N. H.

Announcements

We have a number of bulletins announcing the graded anthem course, and instructions how to procure same. These will be gladly mailed upon application, and your inquiries should be accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

All orders for music will receive greater care and prompt attention by addressing: "The Theodore Presser Company, 1712 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. (Attention Mr. George H. Benzon.)"

We announce the appointment of the following district choristers: New York District, Sister Ethel Hagerman, 1920 Whitney Avenue, Niagara Falls, New York; Eastern Iowa District, Mrs. Cora B. Hart, 1416 Harrison Street, Davenport, Iowa; Nauvoo District, D. J. Williams, 725 Lewis Street, Burlington, Iowa. A. N. H.

With Our Correspondents

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, October 13, 1915.

Editor Staff: We have learned that earnest effort has always produced its results, and always brings satisfaction and pleasure to the laborers, and blessings to all concerned.

Since coming to the Saint Louis District, I have discerned that among other persistent workers and helpers in the spreading of the gospel message, there are in the district a corps of singers and musicians who have been very faithful in their support of the work, and in helping the work of the missionary. I am sure that it is always better to give encouragement and approval where such is due, and to make all who labor to sustain the work feel our appreciation of their earnest efforts.

In our last year's campaign we had splendid success, and much credit is due the good efforts of the singers of the district, who have been so ably supported and directed by the untiring efforts of Brother E. C. Bell. He has worked hard with his choruses, and spent much time and effort, when others were sleeping, in trying to develop the musical talents of the young of the church in this district, and the work is bearing fruitage.

I was well pleased to observe the following favorable notice received and the comments in the Weekly Musical Review section of the Saint Louis Star for Saturday, October 9, which I believe should be encouraging to the workers of the church in this department of the Lord's service.

"Edward C. Bell, 2817 University Street, prominent in the West as a conductor of choruses, especially singing sacred music, has been named as the assistant national director of the general choir movement of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This is the largest choir movement now proceeding in this country and one of the most general in influence. This movement was begun in 1912, but the promoters feel that it is now just fairly under way. The motive is to coordinate the work of the various local choirs so as to make possible better choral and congregational singing at conferences and conventions.

"The use of uniform music makes possible the assembling of district choirs. The work of a district is intrusted to a district chorister, which office is under the direction of the general chorister."

My prayer is for the success of the choir work, and that it may be as great a success as its worth to the church merits or demands we will ever intercede at the throne of grace. May those who have the selection of the music for our services be directed by the spirit of wisdom, that they may consider the mass of the people—the body as a whole, and its needs, and be directed wisely to meet to the fullest that need.

There are few if any who are not benefited and uplifted by the power of music. Henry Ward Beecher said, "Music cleanses the understanding, inspires it, and lifts it into a realm which it would not reach if it were left to itself."

In your selection of music and the carrying out of your great mission you are in the same position as the minister, who must deliver a message suited to the minds of his hearers. Sermons or music will never "cleanse, inspire, or lift up, until it reaches the understanding.

So your duties will be fraught with much of difficulty, and encounter much of opposition, but there is nothing that is good but what has its opposites; there is no easy road to success in any good undertaking; but you can afford to be faithful, with the knowledge of the power of music, and the good that is to accrue, though your efforts may not always be immediately appreciated.

"Almost all occupations are cheered and lightened by music," and the best sort of music is what it should be: sacred. And we should see that it is sacred, so far as that we employ is concerned. "The time is probably not far distant (if not already here) when music will stand revealed perchance as the mightiest of the arts, and certainly as the one art peculiarly representative of our modern world, with its intense life, complex civilization, and feverish self-consciousness." May we reach the world with the power of inspired song; may our music be pregnated with the divine atmosphere, and appeal to every spiritual mind, uplifting and satisfying, a power for good.

"Music, . . . so long as it preserves its purity, may consecrate all the forms of art by raising them into its own atmosphere,—govern them as the soul the body." The "soul" of our own music has been so fully attested, its superior spirituality so manifest, that I pray always for more inspired composers in the ranks of the church, more revelation to the minds and hearts of the leaders of this great and glorious work, and more earnest support and cooperation in the body of Christ in all the earth. And here at this stage of the work that is being performed, let me pledge myself anew to the support of every honest effort for good, spiritual, soul-cheering music.

Fraternally,

Easton-Kuykendall Debate

I send greetings from the late battle field at this place. After considerable agitation by one J. C. Easton, a Baptist minister, who was boasted as a mighty warrior, we finally signed up for a debate at Manning, near Adamson, Oklahoma. The matter hung fire for a few weeks, when finally, in consultation with the authorities, we were advised that we might secure Brother Glau I. Kuykendall to meet this Baptist minister.

Accordingly, we got in touch with Brother Kuykendall, and he agreed to come. He arrived October 18, the date set for the debate. The Baptist minister was two or three days late. The discussion began October 21. General church propositions were discussed, there being twelve sessions of two hours each. The Baptists insisted on their propositions being considered first.

To say that they were defeated is putting it mildly. As the people and outsiders in general remarked, the Baptist preacher was completely snowed under, and made a complete failure on his affirmative. With their own books and the Bible, Brother Kuykendall showed that the Baptist Church was not scriptural in origin; that their source or beginning could be traced only to the Anabaptists of the sixteenth century. Brother Kuykendall had to force the fight all the way, as the Baptist minister would not bring out their organization, and very little of their doctrine. Our brother brought their institution out for them, and then riddled their theological boat and sent it to the bottom in complete failure. Thus the first six sessions passed and our man was master of the situation.

This Baptist minister boasted that he was going to fix Brother Kuykendall on the last proposition, but he failed to make good his promise. His greatest stock in trade was polygamy. Brother Kuykendall followed him, and again truth was made evident to nearly all outsiders, and our cause was vindicated. Brother Kuykendall built firmly and securely in his affirmative argument, and it stood towering above the efforts of his opponents to overthrow it. All the negative argument offered by the opposition was easily and successfully met by Brother Kuykendall.

Elder Easton at first seemed to attempt to intimidate and browbeat Brother Kuykendall because of his being so young. These tactics availed the Baptist nothing, save the disapproval of the people, and instead of bothering Brother Kuykendall, it had not the least effect. He smiled through it all and was always perfectly composed.

The last night was a big one for us, and the victory was complete. The Saints rejoiced greatly over the outcome. Some of the more intelligent Baptists admit defeat. Doctors, preachers, school-teachers, and the intelligent outsiders in general claim that the Baptist preacher failed in trying to meet our "boy preacher." So a victory has been won for the truth, and our praise is unto the Lord for the same.

The writer acted as moderator for Brother Kuykendall. He is an able defender of our faith. He is a fine young man, and liked by all outsiders here. We were ably assisted by the Saints of Wilburton, as well as the Haileyville Saints. Everybody is satisfied with the debate, unless it is the Baptists.

We are feeling fine in spirit, believing the work will gradually grow until many yet in this country will be convinced of its divinity. Trusting all will work together for good, and praying for success, I am,

Sincerely your brother,

V. L. LUNN.

South American Finds

In Desire Charnay's work, Ancient Cities of the New World, page 15 of the introduction, we find the following: "The earlier theories furnished many instances of ingenious hypotheses and naive credulity. To those whose sole desire was to make the history of man in America conform to revelation, Noah's ark presented itself as a convenient deus ex machina. Lescarbot fails to see why Noah should have experienced any difficulty in reaching America, when—his reason is remarkable—'Solomon's ships made voyage lasting three years.' Another opinion is that the sons of Noah reached America by land; while Orrio, in order to show that one human pair was equal to the task of populating the Old World and the New, assures us that 'one woman can in two hundred and ten years become the ancestor of one million, six hundred and forty-seven thousand and eighty-six persons.' In support of a derivation from Noah, we are constantly referred to the tradition of a foreign origin and the native flood myths. According to Lord Kingsborough, who is a willing believer in scriptural analogies, the Mexican tradition of the deluge bears 'unequivocal marks of having been derived from a Hebrew source.' But there is little reason to doubt that such of these traditions as are not wholly spurious are in the most essential parts 'improved' by the Spanish chroniclers and priests, who were not unaccustomed to draw upon their imaginations for their facts. As a sequel to the flood myths we come upon traditions of the building of a tower of refuge, and this led some writers to identify the Americans with certain of the builders of Babel, who were scattered over the earth after the confusion of tongues. Indeed, there is no limit to the fancy of the chroniclers."

One may readily conclude from the foregoing that M. Charnay ridiculed the connection of the myths and traditions of the primitive American with the Old Testament narrative of the creation, the deluge, and the building of the tower of Babel. Furthermore, there is in it a trend of insinuation that the early missionaries of the Catholic Church, and the chroniclers of the time, drew largely upon their imagination for an explanation of the origin of these peoples. Baldwin says in his Ancient America, that no one short of a lunatic would try to connect these myths with the Old Testament narrative of the deluge and the building of Babel.

The general inference of these writers is that some one has jumped at conclusions, called upon their imagination, and then palmed off upon the people a supposed tradition or myth of these events. For you will notice that Charnay says: "But there is little reason to doubt that such of these traditions as are not wholly spurious, are in the most essential parts 'improved' by the Spanish chroniclers and priests, who were not unaccustomed to draw upon their imaginations for their facts."

The University of Pennsylvania has for the past two years been investigating and exploring various regions of the Amazon basin, with marked success. A brief survey of the work of the expedition and many photographs can be found in this month's Travel magazine. The article is entitled, "Native life in the Amazon wilderness." In an editorial it is stated that some of the aboriginal tribes encountered were never before seen by white men. Then on page 22, there is a photograph of a huge snake, with the following text appended: "These huge snakes which are plentiful in the Amazon forest, are regarded as sacred by certain tribes. Doctor Farabe has recorded several myths current among these people which bear a marked resemblance to the stories of the creation and the flood as related in the Old Testament."

Compare the above with page 15, introduction, Ancient Cities of the New World, and pages 110, 165 to 167 of Baldwin's Ancient America. In the comparison please remember that some of these tribes had never before seen a white man, and that Doctor Farabe is not influenced in the least by any preconceived idea. Neither is he trying to prove the Scriptures.

Among other interesting photographs is one of an Indian girl of southern British Guiana spinning cotton by hand. The health of the natives is excellent; it would seem that none of the diseases familiar to civilized people have reached them.

And again these people are very cleanly, the men and women bathing two and three times a day, and using bamboo scrapers instead of towels after the bath.

Trusting that this review will be of worth to some of the HERALD readers, I beg to remain,

Your brother in Christ,

DENNIS E. BENBOW.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO, September 12, 1915.

ATMORE, ALABAMA.

Editors Herald: I am still in God's service, praising his holy name. We read in the book of Doctrine and Covenants that this is pleasing to the Lord, and that the angels rejoice over our prayers. We read again that that which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. Therefore if we are clean we are truly sanctified by doing his will.

I want the Saints to pray for me that I may ever be like Christ, found doing his commandments, that I may always be ready to be used at his will and time. I am trying to do my part.

I shall be pleased to hear from any of the Saints.

Yours in the faith,

DORA BOOKER.

QUINCY, ILLINOIS, October 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: Some time ago I saw a statement by Brother Wight that if each member of the church would send in fifty cents it would pay the debt of Graceland College, and if each one would send three dollars it would pay the church debt and Graceland also. I thought, Why not get busy? I promised God that if he would make it possible for me I would send three dollars this month, and I did so.

I am a poor man. I draw a pension of nineteen dollars a month and have to send one hundred ninety-one dollars a year to my wife for rent and water tax, so it takes nearly all I have. I came to the home here in the hope that I could make a little out of my trade to help in church work.

My one thought in writing is to try to encourage each Saint to do his duty in tithes and offerings.

I long for Zion's redemption and the building of the temple.

Your brother,

J. M. P. DELANCY.

BELLAIRE, KANSAS, November 2, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Saints here are still striving in their weak way to serve the Lord. The reunion held at Lebanon in September was a success. Although there were but few of the Saints in attendance, it helped to allay prejudice, and there was plenty of it.

The editor of one of the papers gave us a fine, though brief write-up, which was followed with The Epitome of Faith. I am trying to interest him by giving him HERALDS containing Sister Pitt's letters telling of the work done at the exposition. I also have given him Brother Roth's book of sermons.

I think there could be more good done here if the reunion just past could be followed by another one next year.

I am anxious to see the serial written by Sister Estella Wight, and appearing in Stepping Stones, published in book form. It is a fine thing for both old and young, and should be in every Saint's library. It is the only thing I have been able to interest one gentleman in, in this neighborhood.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. H. O. TURNER.

Eastern Iowa

The Eastern Iowa District comprises twenty-one counties, seven of them border on the Mississippi River; the greatest distance north and south is about one hundred and fifty miles. The number of branches is nine, and the total membership is about five hundred and fifty. Five of the branches are located in cities, and four in the country, and small towns. There are ten Sunday schools and several Religios.

The writer is one of the appointees of the General Conference, and was selected as one of the presidency of the district at the June conference, and since that time has made one complete tour of the district trying to spend about two weeks in each branch, and also in Waterloo, where there is a Sunday school but no branch. As a result of this systematic visit a fair knowledge of conditions has been obtained, some conclusions arrived at, and some plans for the future considered.

Before stating my opinion of the condition and needs of the district, I wish to express my profound sympathy for my immediate predecessor and all others that may have been in a like manner situated, i. e., having to be engaged in secular employment to provide for their families. How a man can care for this, or any other district, and be occupied with the busy affairs of the world is beyond my comprehension; it is not possible to render a faithful and efficient service unless the person can devote his entire time to the work.

The conditions are similar to what I have observed in other districts where I have traveled, with some things a little more annoying. Some few are very faithful; some are lukewarm; and some so dead that it will take something akin to the resurrection or judgment day to awaken them. Pleasure that does not "enrich the soul" is a stronger incentive to some than the pleasure that is found in the house of worship; with some, rainy Sundays keep them at home, and on fine Sundays the time is used for visiting. Such conduct not only kills them spiritually, but also their children.

One of the very pressing needs is shepherds to feed the sheep: they are starving for food that is needed to give them spiritual strength; they are like lost ones out on the mountains "bleak and bare," hungry and cold, dying for the need of nourishing food. We are short of true, faithful, tender, loving shepherds, and also short of the material from which they are made. It is just as true to-day as in the past—"the harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

Some branches have no meetings except when the missionary calls; in one branch the only resident officer is the secretary; several of them are quite well organized, have a Sunday school and Religio, and are making a commendable effort to render a faithful service.

The largest branch has one hundred members; fifty per cent are absent. The next has eighty-two, and ten per cent are absent. One has forty-four per cent absent. Thirty per cent of the district are reported absent. The number present in the various branches at the preaching services while I was present, which included week night services, was about forty-three per cent of the number resident in the branches.

The disintegration of the branches comes mostly from natural causes. The branch in the country may be composed of several families with a large number of young people. John makes up his mind that he will be a doctor, and goes off to a medical college. James concludes that he will be a merchant and goes to the city. Charley intends to be a farmer, and when he gets married he wants a home and concludes he can not pay one hundred and fifty dollars per acre for land, so goes out West where he can buy cheaper land. Bessie becomes a school-teacher, gets married to a doctor and goes out into a new country to begin life. Mary marries a farmer, and with her husband is soon on their way to Canada or Washington to secure a home. Rachel marries a mechanic, and moves to one of the stakes. And the old folks may die, or move to where some of their children are.

The above is a fair pen picture of what is going on in this and other districts, with slight variations, continually. There is no way at present to stop this outflow, because it is controlled by conditions and not by individuals. Whenever we get to that point in our work that the gathering is directed by the proper authorities, the tide of immigration will be toward the stakes, and much that is now lost to the church will be saved.

The missionary force laboring in the district is competent, experienced and faithful (this does not mean the writer, because he was changed to pastoral work), and are well qualified to carry on the work, but are greatly hindered because of our traditions. It is a matter of current history and government reports that the telephone, rural mail, and the automobile have brought the country, town and city people to be close neighbors; the isolation of the past is largely removed, and rural churches in the near future will be to the religious world what the stage coach is to the railroad. A few years ago the States of Illinois and Kansas each reported about fifteen hundred empty rural churches.

In the time of Paul the missionaries went to the market place where the people resorted. In the time of the pioneers of this church the people gathered in the grove, both for political and religious meetings. That day has passed by, and in its place has come the modern town and city, the convenient, well lighted, and comfortable hall, auditorium, and theater. Where we have no church building of our own, these are our only convenient places of reaching the public, and with our present method of carrying on our missionary work we have no money to meet the expense for the use of such places. The time must come when such expenses will be met by funds from the church set apart for that special purpose, until a branch is built up and is strong enough to care for itself.

The children of this world are wiser than we are because they make special provisions to assist in the missionary work. It seems unreasonable to think that in a city of thirty thousand or more that after more than twenty years' labor there is only a small branch.

The trouble with us is that we are trying to do twentieth century work with eighteenth century methods. We are trying to fit square pegs in round holes. The gospel never changes, but our methods must change to meet changed conditions.

Your brother,

EDWARD RANNIE.

November 3, 1915.

Southern Wisconsin

It is a number of years since a two-day meeting has been held anywhere in this district, and since there are always those who are unable to attend the reunions, I believe it is unfortunate that the two-day meetings in the branches have been discontinued, considering the results of those just held, in the spiritual uplift of the saints, as well as the favorable notice that has come to us from the outside.

Of the latter, the inclosed extract from The Fenimore Times for October 27, is to the point. Those who have labored in Wisconsin know that favorable mention of our work on the part of representatives of the press is rare:

"But while Flora's old glory seems to have departed, one distinguishing feature is left, and that is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which there are but two in Grant County, the others being located on Buckwheat Ridge in the town of Ellenboro. Two-days' meetings were being held at the church, which we had the pleasure of attending. The speakers present were Elders Lester Wildermuth, of Plano, Illinois; B. C. Flint, of Evansville, Wisconsin; and Ervin Lenox, of Soldiers Grove. They gave earnest, thoughtful addresses and were assisted by Philip Davenport, Jr., of Soldiers Grove, and D. R. Holly, of Chetek, Wisconsin, and the local representatives, Messrs. Edgington and Noble. Elder Flint had his wife and baby with him.

"This church believes in the organization as it existed at the time of Christ, and that these are the 'latter days,' immediately preceding this second coming, hence the term 'Latter Day Saints.' Its followers are often unjustly classed with the Mormon Church in Utah, but there is no connection. The Reorganized Church repudiates polygamy, which has made the Mormon Church a reproach to the Nation. The founder of the church was Joseph Smith, afterwards assassinated. After his death, Brigham Young led a portion of the church to Utah and instituted polygamy and similar doctrines. But those who would not accept such doctrines reorganized and were recognized by court decision as the lawful successor to [and] the continuation of the church founded by Smith, on the grounds that the Utah church had departed from the original faith by the introduction of polygamy.

"The headquarters of the Reorganized Church are at La-moni, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri. These are matters of interest with which the general public is not familiar, and it is but fair to the members of this church who seem to be just as sincere and earnest in their convictions as adherents of others, to state them. Few people would continue in a 'despised' organization or church unless they believed in it, and while the members of the Reorganized Church feel hurt to be misrepresented as they are, they know a knowledge of the facts will soon remove the unwarranted stigma. . . ."

Mr. Rothe, from whose article the extract was taken, is the editor of the paper mentioned. He has also held the office of assemblyman in the State Legislature for several terms, and at the primaries three years ago was a candidate for governor.

Mr. Rothe attended our two-day meeting at Flora Fountain all the way through, and the favorable mention he gave us was wholly voluntary on his part. This fact, together with Mr. Rothe's standing, makes this a unique case in Wisconsin, as we have always had great difficulty in getting anything like fair treatment from the editors generally throughout the State. Hence we are sending this statement to the church papers for publication, believing it worthy of special notice.

Generally speaking, I believe the work is onward in this field. I have not been as active as I would like to have been the past season, being still quite weak from an operation last spring at the Sanitarium, but as I gain I have reason to feel that the improvement will be permanent, and in the near future I will be able to resume my old-time activity in the work I love above all else.

I have as traveling companion Elder Ervin Lenox, a young man just entering the missionary service. He is faithful, earnest, and energetic, and bids fair to become a very useful man when he shall have become fully developed.

Hopefully in the conflict,

B. C. FLINT.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

The announcements from the stand Sunday, October 31, when the Saints were pleased to receive admonition, instruction and spiritual food from Brethren Sheehy and Vanderwood, showed that there are just now many meetings going on that are of interest to all.

The Religio had an attendance of seventy-five seniors, forty-four juniors, eleven teachers, twelve officers, forty-seven visitors, and a collection of one dollar and ninety-two cents on the evening of November 5. The program, including a whistling and piano solo, a reading by one of the high school faculty, and an instructive talk by Brother McWithee, of Saint Louis, proved an interesting feature. The officers of this society have in view a one-mile hike with a sumptuous weenie supper to be undertaken shortly for the benefit of the seniors. The veterans and crippled members will also be expected to go along.

The bazaar and bake sale of the Laurel Club for the benefit of the church will take place in a room near "The Square" next Friday and Saturday. The Laurel Club are young folk who merit the patronage of the Saints, for they are financially a power in this branch.

We have had cause to mourn the departure of our beloved Sister Ada Smith, who was in our midst a loving friend and helper. She was one of those of whom we may well say:

"She paused to comfort them
Who feared the storm and stress;
Where sorrow was, she left the glow
Of sturdy cheerfulness."

May we as Saints pursue the way, though long and rugged, being joyous in our warfare, that glorious may be the victory.

The Reflection

I saw upon the river yesterday
The clear reflection of the setting sun;
The dusk had tinged the distant hills with gray,
And all the treetops, in their sleepy sway,
Seemed saying softly that the day was done.

Deep tinted lay the purple of the west
Upon the hilltops, and a hovering cloud
Swept low to kiss the calm horizon's breast,
Then glided, phantomlike, to its own rest
Amid the shadows of the twilight's shroud.

Slow paled the water, save where, quivering,
The great, red orb lay sunken in the stream;
Sweet evening vespers tuned a mellow string,
And from the thicket one lone bird, a-wing,
Went, calling shrilly, through the witching gleam.
—Lurana Sheldon.

Gospel Life

(Tune: "Send me forth, O blessed master.")

In the beauty of the gospel
We can see the works of God
By our daily consecrations to his word,
And the love that shines about us,
As we tread this earthly strand,
Gives us courage in the service of the Lord.

Chorus:

O there's joy in gospel living
When we give the heed we should
To the teachings and the lessons of God's word.
And our hearts they swell in gladness
When his spirit with us strives,
And we try to live each day pure and good.

Let us watch and pray as Jesus
Has commanded that we should,
And Satan's tempting powers all dismay;

Then when trials and afflictions
Shall be ours to withstand
The Comforter shall drive all clouds away.

Chorus.

But we must each one our crosses bear
With patience and with cheer;
Murmur not, and do your duty without fear.
For the time of Jesus' coming
Draweth nearer every day,
Soon our blessed Lord and Savior will appear.

Chorus.

ORVAL L. THOMPSON.

The Chamber of Hope

There is a room upstairs, a little room,
With sunlit silence filled the long day through;
Where climbing roses breathe their faint perfume
And nod and smile at me—as if they knew!—
When I sit sewing there beside their bloom.

A cradle waits there, all soft, snowy white.
And heaps of clothes—such little, little things
That seem to shine with some deep, inner light
As if the thoughts I stitched had dipped their wings
Into the glory of my joy's far height.

All good that has been mine as maid and wife
Is gathered there as in a sacred place;
My fruits of sacrifice, of inward strife,
Are laid before the Future's veiled face
As altar-trove to bless the dawning life.

And when I dream in silence there—or pray—
A brave parade of all the great ones gone
And all that are to come wends happy way
Before my heart. In shining outlines drawn
They point the prescience of my coming day.

Before the Gates

Wistful stood he before the temple's gate,
A youth whose eyes reflected heaven's blue;
So young and yet the plaything of the fates,
By race a Jew.

And as he gazed upon the gilded star,
That swam in silver light above the street,
He heard "Te Deum" winging from afar,
In strains most sweet.

"Long have I listened to these holy bells
That ring the triumph of the Nazarene,
For in my heart, a ceaseless longing wells
For God's demesne.

"Forgive my people, Lord of Truth and Right,
If they in blindness passed the Infant's cot
On that divine, resplendent winter's night
And knew him not.

"Thy benisons how gladly would I win!
There gleams the cross and yonder calls the star,
I know not now which gate to enter-in,
Both stand ajar!"

—Maurice A. Beer, in Literary Digest.

Funeral from his mother's home in Kansas City, interment in Mount Washington Cemetery.

Book Reviews

MAKING MONEY.—Owen Johnson, Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York City, $1.35. A story of Wall Street, the great modern money mart, of which the publishers say: "Making Money has a universal appeal—a wider interest than any of Mr. Johnson's previous works. In it is an absorbing love story that is an essential part of his plot. Many will feel that 'Patsie,' his new heroine, a wholesome, mischievous, wholly delightful person, almost puts into the shade the hero and his friends who are making spectacular plays in the Wall Street game. Beauchamp Crocker, known to his friends as 'Bojo,' at work and in love is a type frequently met. Young, eager, able, determined to succeed, he is blinded by the successes of his friends in Wall Street and meets adventures in business and love that bring him to a dramatic situation that will bring responsive thrills to all who know ambition and romance."

DAVE PORTER AT BEAR CAMP.—Edward Stratemeyer, Lathrop, Lee and Shepard Company, Boston, $1.25. "Just before locating with his chums at Bear Camp, in the Adirondacks, Dave Porter, the favorite young hero of all boy readers, saves some moving-picture actors caught on a burning steam yacht. One of the actors claims that he was stolen from home when a child and put into a poor-house, the very thing that had happened to Dave, and that he is the real Dave Porter, and the latter still a person unknown."

Of All the Ways to Go to California

experienced folks are agreed that for comfort, enjoyment and economy, Burlington Personally Conducted Parties hit the nail on the head. Think of going all the way without a single change enroute, through Denver, Colorado Springs, Royal Gorge, Scenic Colorado and Salt Lake—in daylight! And under the personal charge of a congenial, competent excursion conductor, whose sole duty is to look after your comfort and enjoyment, and to indicate and explain the points of interest enroute!

It is certainly the one care-free way to go to California. It is also the economical way. Special attention is given to elderly persons, women and children traveling alone.

This is just one of the Burlington's Willingness-to-Serve features rendered without charge to its patrons.

WHEN YOU TRAVEL WEST BE A BURLINGTON GUEST.

The Burlington's illustrated folder telling you of this wonderful way of traveling to California will be furnished free upon request—and it's worth reading even if you don't go.

THE NEW

Peter Bosten

By John Preston

As up-to-date a novel, in point of plot, action and characterization, as you can buy; yet it means more to YOU than any story of the day.

L. D. S. characters, taken from real life. You will identify them.

Nothing on the SURFACE to indicate that it IS Latter Day Saint.

A wonderful vehicle for spreading the SPIRIT of the gospel.

An unequalled Christmas gift for your OUTSIDER friends.

Ignores the Utah question.

You can get the book with or without the Herald Office imprint.

John Preston is the author of several successful novels. This is his best work. It was written by order of the Herald Office, and involves many characters known to you personally.

PETER BOSTEN is an agnostic. He can not believe in God. Even the gospel in its fullness appears illogical to him. Yet he feels a strange potentiality surrounding it.

He meets and falls in love with a "church" girl. But a gulf opens between them as time passes. He can not believe, and she can not understand his unbelief.

Years full of events slip by. You are reminded of your own soul-striving—especially in the days of impetuous, rebellious, passionate youth.

Is the agnostic finally converted? Read the story and see. And in the reading you will get great pleasure and profit—maybe a little pain as well.

If you are a lover of real life and worth-while fiction, you will enjoy "Peter Bosten," as you have probably never enjoyed a work of fiction before.

To you, the story will be real and alive. To your friends it will be a thought-breeding thing of mystery. They will ask: "Whence comes the spirit of this unique book?"

Ready for mailing, we expect, by December 15, at latest. 350-400 pages. $1.00, postpaid.

She Knows What She Wants

The well informed housekeeper insists upon using only a baking powder which is made of cream of tartar. She might read in an advertisement or be told that alum and lime phosphate, which are used as inferior substitutes in cheap baking powders, were all right in the quantities used but she would not buy them or permit them to enter her kitchen. Why?

Because she knows that cream of tartar has always been accepted as the most wholesome agent, with soda, for raising cake and biscuit, and she wants a baking powder made of cream of tartar, like Royal.

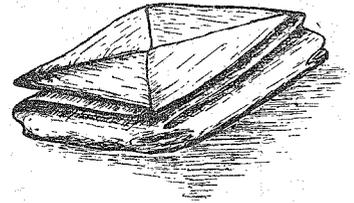

This conclusion is the result of unconscious absorption, either her own or her mother's, of the opinions of the highest authorities on hygiene and home cooking.

The prudent housekeeper, when she uses baking powder, reads the names of the ingredients printed on the label. She knows what she wants.

OUR INFLUENCE ON DOCTRINE

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS
AS A FACTOR IN SHAPING THE WORLD'S RELIGIOUS OPINIONS

The Latter Day Saint is frequently asked, "What is the principal difference between your church and others in matters of belief?"

While attempting to reply with a concrete statement of differences many will occur to him; for instance the question of authority,—a vital question on which we differ from nearly all others, whether Catholic or Protestant and with the odds all in our favor.

Yet he will be struck with the fact that many differences which might have been named in 1830, and for years after, apparently do not now exist.

Many items of doctrine preached by few if any and opposed by most when we began their exposition are now either quite generally taught by many orthodox believers or are looked upon with much more favor, and every decade they receive a wider acceptance.

You may run over the list: The gathering of the Jews; the second personal appearing of Christ; healing of the sick; probation after death; yes, even continuous revelation; gathering; tithing and consecration of properties. Others will occur to you perhaps. At the same time many obnoxious tenets opposed by us have been dropped from the creeds, or if retained, the public promulgation of them has ceased.

Why this change? Many who have opposed us, and who yet oppose us, are much more nearly on common doctrinal ground with us than in years gone by. Yet we have never abandoned a single position taken by us in the beginning.

The statement that Latter Day Saints have been one of the greatest human factors in forcing a revision in the world's religious opinions would probably be hooted by many prominent divines. Yet it is no less or more than the truth.

Our missionaries have for many years carried on an aggressive campaign, reaching most parts of the United States, Canada, England, Scotland, and Wales, as well as parts of Germany, France, Australia, Scandinavia, New Zealand, Palestine, and the islands of the sea. Multitudes have listened to their convincing presentation of doctrines, who have been loath to unite with us but not slow to borrow those doctrines.

Thousands of influential clergymen have attended these meetings or otherwise investigated the message, mostly with a view to debate or combat. Very many have actually engaged in public debate. They have found our position on doctrinal points invincible, and as a sheer matter of self-protection, have themselves aided in the work of revision. In addition to this, most of our adherents the world over have been actively engaged in teaching their neighbors.

Probably no other religious movement ever received greater publicity, and it has had its effect. Furious and constant attack has been made upon us and we have met it with strenuous and unexpected resistance.

Many a lance has been broken on the helmet of truth and the aggressor has retired with battered theological mail, only to reappear as a reformer on his own account. It is easier to imitate than to surrender.

So to-day other voices than ours are preaching our doctrine; voices of ministers whose particular denominations bitterly opposed that doctrine fifty years ago.

In the one item of the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and its imminence, what a change in a few years! The voice of God to us, in October, 1831, was, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." It was much like the commission to John the Baptist, and conditions were somewhat similar.

Christ was coming in the first instance with blessing. It was but just that the people be told, otherwise his paths would not have been straight, or strictly in harmony with justice. John was sent as an authoritative messenger to warn; yet his was not the only work. The Jews themselves preached Christ's coming and daily looked for it. The Messianic idea was at its height among them when he came; it afterward declined. John warned them and they warned each other.

Christ is coming again, this time to judge as well as bless. It is but just that the people should be warned with authority, as they have been; and now they themselves have taken up the work.

At a so-called "prophetic conference," held in the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, in 1914, a new creed or statement of faith was adopted by the seventeen hundred or more delegates present representing churches all over the United States and Canada. As reported in the Sunday School Times for March 21, 1914, the ninth article of that creed reads:

We believe in the second, visible and imminent coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to establish his worldwide kingdom on earth.

If there shall not be a work of getting ready as well as preaching, when Christ comes he may justly say, "Why are you not ready? My paths were straight. You were warned, and you yourselves taught my coming."

At times it would seem that this borrowing of our doctrine has robbed our message of its force. Yet when we take a comprehensive view of God's work we are satisfied. Our work is to warn. People will be judged not alone by what we have preached to them, but also by what they themselves have preached to one another.

The work of warning has been more thorough and comprehensive than we had thought; and we need not feel badly that others have relieved us of a part of the responsibility.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A NEW COMPANY

[Believing that the Saints will be interested in news concerning the formation of a new company on the stewardship plan, we give place in the editorial department to the following statement prepared by Brother F. B. Blair, one of the company.—EDITORS.]

Prior to the fire which destroyed the Herald Office in January, 1907, a gasoline engine furnished the power and kerosene lamps the lights for that institution. The manager was making investigation of the cost of using electricity for power and light at the time of the fire.

When the new plant was provided for it was arranged to electrify the institution in every practical way. It then was thought best to provide electric lights for the other church institutions in Lamoni as a matter of economy and safety. Before the plans were fully worked out, the town council expressed a desire for twenty-five street lights, and then the citizens advanced the argument that so long as the plant was required to run for these other customers that service should be supplied to residences.

So the business of the Lamoni Electric Light plant started—without the intention to go into the central station business.

In April, 1910, it was sought to separate this business from the Herald Publishing House business, and a separate manager was appointed, as the Board of Publication did not think it wise to operate an electric light plant under the charter given them by the State of Iowa authorizing them to do a publishing business.

On February 21, 1912, the Board of Publication "met to consider the incorporation of the electric light plant," but no definite plan was decided on.

On April 29, 1914, the board appointed a committee to suggest a plan to incorporate a new company to hold the property and conduct the business of the electric light company.

On December 17, 1914, the board offered to sell the electric light plant to the Lamoni Order of Enoch but the offer was not accepted.

Finally, on May 26, 1915, the board authorized the sale of the electric light plant "to a company to be organized under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric, to operate the electric light plant, as outlined in the law under the stewardship plan."

In carrying out this resolution, A. Carmichael, Joseph Roberts, H. C. Burgess, R. C. Willey and F. B. Blair incorporated the Lamoni Electric Company, and have taken over the electric light department of the Herald Publishing House, paying the full invoice price for the same.

The articles of incorporation and by-laws of the new company, together with the plans of the new company, were submitted to and approved by the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric. Special care is being taken so that when the articles are finally completed they will represent an official interpretation of the law relating to stewardships.

The profits of the company, if any, are to be distributed as follows:

First, to pay the legitimate expenses of the business. No stockholder or officer receives a salary from the company except when engaged as employee, and then the salary is intended to cover just wants and needs.

Second, to pay the expense of extending the business.

Third, to pay the indebtedness of the company.

Fourth, the balance to go into the treasury of the church as surplus.

The members of the company can see no reason why the farmer and the business man should not conduct their business on the plan laid down in the law the same as those in the ministry or those otherwise engaged in church work.

The revelation of 1887 says, "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work, labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." What will be our answer to this instruction?

"STAR-TIMES" ON LATTER DAY SAINTS

Brother I. A. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, sends us a clipping from the Kansas City Star-Times of November 10, and comments on it as follows: "I got hold of the morning Star-Times and noticed an item of interest in the Questions and Answers department. It struck me with very great force as well as with gratitude that the day has come when this question would be answered as it is. A brighter day dawns in the realm of publicity. We are better known than ever, and the Reorganization is the active—the only active body that is causing the name of Joseph Smith to be had 'for good.'" The item referred to is as follows:

LATTER DAY SAINTS

To The Star: Is the Mormon Church of Utah and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints one and the same?
STAR READER.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as founded by Joseph Smith, was organized April 6, 1830. After the death of Joseph Smith in 1844, Brigham Young assumed a leadership which resulted in a movement westward and a settlement in Utah, where doctrines and teachings foreign to the original church were promulgated. In 1852 the church as founded by Joseph Smith was reorganized and in 1860 the late Joseph Smith of Independence, Missouri, became its president, he being succeeded at his death by his eldest son, Frederick M. Smith, of Independence, Missouri. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the original church in succession, and is in no way connected with the Utah Mormons. The Reorganized Church has always been an active and vigorous opponent of polygamy, and its members have the reputation of being law-abiding, peaceful citizens. The above facts are clearly set out in the decision of Federal Judge John F. Philips in the famous "Temple Lot" case.—Kansas City Star-Times, November 10, 1915.

GEORGIA PROHIBITION.—The Georgia legislature has passed a bill prohibiting publication of liquor advertisements and limiting the amount of alcoholics a person may receive from outside the State to two quarts of whisky, one gallon of wine, and six gallons of beer per month.

MUNDAY GUILTY.—Charles B. Munday has been found guilty of conspiracy with former Senator William E. Lorimer and others to wreck the La Salle Trust and Savings Bank and its four Chicago subsidaries. The jury fixed the penalty at the extreme sentence, five years in the penitentiary.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa has withdrawn his army from Naco and is personally directing an attack for possession of Hermosillo, Sonora. It is claimed by Villa followers that General Obregon has been repulsed near Cananea. Quiet reigns along the international border. The Carranza agency at Washington has announced that bull fights, cock fights, and all games of chance have been prohibited in the State of Mexico and Mexico City.

TOLERANCE IN PERU.—An amendment to the constitution of Peru has passed the Congress granting religious tolerance. President Pardo is a progressive Roman Catholic and is expected to sign the act. The present constitution reads: "The nation professes the Roman Catholic apostolic religion; and the State protects it and does not permit the exercise of any other." The amendment strikes out the words "and does not permit the exercise of any other."

LINDSEY FINED.—Ben B. Lindsey, judge of the Denver Juvenile Court, has been held guilty of contempt of court and fined five hundred dollars and costs. The case grew out of his refusal to disclose information in the trial of Mrs. Berta Wright on the charge of murder, said information coming to him he claims in a privileged manner through the confession of Neal, the twelve-year-old son of Mrs. Wright. Thirty days are allowed for appeal.

THE "ANCONA."—Italy has addressed a communication to all neutrals claiming that the Ancona was sunk without warning; that the vessel was shelled and passengers wounded and killed after the ship was stopped. Two hundred men, women and children are reported shot or drowned, including Americans. The Austrian Government assumes responsibility for the sinking of the Ancona, claiming that the vessel attempted to escape; that it was not shelled after it was stopped; that ample time was allowed passengers and crew to enter lifeboats, and that it was torpedoed only when another ship appeared.

CHINESE AFFAIRS.—Eighteen of twenty-two provinces of China have given support to the proposal to establish a monarchical form of government. The Chinese Government, however, yielding to protests from Japan, Great Britain, France, and Russia, has announced that no change will be made this year. Efforts to include China in the alliance of powers against Germany are reported as being made. The addition of China to these powers is thought to be advised as a political necessity, not with an idea of her participation in the war, but to insure against antially propaganda carried on from China to disturb India and Persia.

PHYSICIANS' ETHICS.—The refusal of Doctor Haiselden of Chicago, to perform an operation in an effort to prolong the life of a deformed child he thought likely to be deficient mentally and morally, and an epileptic, and the concurrence of the child's mother in the decision not to operate, has created considerable discussion throughout the country. Six eminent physicians, composing the coroner's jury and inquiring into the death of the infant, while holding in their verdict that they found no evidence from physical defects that the child would become mentally or morally defective, that in doubtful cases competent consultation should be sought and that a physician's highest duty is to relieve suffering and prolong life, held also that "morally and ethically a surgeon is fully within his rights in refusing to perform any operation which his conscience will not sanction."

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Anglo-German and Bulgarian gains in the northern and central part of Serbia have continued, until they have possession of the greater part of the country and all the Belgrade-Nish railroad running into Bulgaria, and to Constantinople. The Serbian army in this territory for the more part at least, has been driven to the mountain strongholds, and the situation for the Serbs is thought to be critical. Gains for both the allies and Bulgarians are reported in southern Serbia. The Russians have advanced on the north of their line against Germany, and have shown considerable strength elsewhere. Weather conditions are unfavorable in the west, where the fighting has been confined to artillery work and mining, centering in the Champagne district. The British have been in the offensive at the Dardanelles on both land and sea, and have made slight gains. The British hospital ship Anglia and a Norwegian steamer have been sunk by mines. The Germans announce the sinking of two British gunboats by submarines in the Mediterranean. An Austrian submarine has been destroyed in the Mediterranean. An official statement announces that the cost to Switzerland of guarding her neutrality to the end of October was $51,000,000. An order has been issued confining the sale of alcoholics in greater London to five and one half hours on week days and five hours on Sundays. That there is disorder and threatened revolt in India is denied in London. The first meeting of the joint Anglo-French war council occurred at Paris on the 17th. It was announced in the House of Lords on the 18th that Earl Kitchener had been sent to the Eastern Mediterranean because in his opinion the evidence at hand did not seem sufficient for a conclusion upon the questions of policy involved. There is uncertainty as to what the attitude of the King of Greece would be toward the entente armies if they were forced to retreat to Grecian soil, it being intimated that he might attempt to disarm and intern them. The entente countries demand guarantees of safety for their forces. Great Britain has ordered that all Greek vessels in British ports except those loaded or loading, be held until further notice, and France has ordered that no further shipment of goods destined for Greece be accepted.

The Things Divine

THE THINGS DIVINE

These are the things I hold divine:
 A trusting child's hand laid in mine,
 Rich brown earth and wind-tossed trees,
 The taste of grapes and the drone of bees,
 A rhythmic gallop, long June days,
 A rose-hedged lane and lovers' lays
 The welcome smile on neighbors' faces
 Cool, wide hills and open places,
 Breeze-blown fields of silver rye,
 The wild sweet note of a plover's cry,
 Fresh spring showers and scent of box,
 The soft pale tint of the garden phlox,
 Lilacs blooming, a drowsy noon,
 A flight of geese and an autumn moon,
 Rolling meadows and storm-washed heights,
 A fountain's murmur on summer nights,
 A dappled fawn in the forest hush,
 Simple words and the song of a thrush,
 Rose-red dawns and a mate to share
 With comrade soul my gipsy fare,
 A waiting fire when the twilight ends,
 A gallant heart and the voice of friends.
 —Jean Brooke Burt, The Outlook, August 25, 1915.

Twilight

How many things are like this sad, sweet hour,
 When neither light nor darkness rules the world—
 And nature lulls to slumber ev'ry flower
 Before night's dusky banners are unfurled.
 A solemn hour when all things bright must die,
 That made the world so radiantly fair;
 The sun's pale crimson fades upon the sky,
 The breath of night is in the perfumed air.

Perchance there's some desire in our hearts
 That, like this dying day, will never see
 The light that hope to everything imparts,
 And never blossom to reality.
 Some secret love that never must be told—
 Some hidden wish—some thought of ungained fame,
 All sink on life's horizon, dark and low,
 Just like the sunset's dying evening flame.

Whose life is there this twilight does not mark—
 Whose heart is there that does not hold within
 Some poor, dead hope that once burned like a spark,
 And struggled hard its victory to win?
 So struggles day against the coming night,
 Till, weary with the shadows on her breast,
 She yields to darkness all her treasures bright,
 And slowly sinks, just like our hopes—to rest.

—Joseph P. Galton.

Consolation

To those who struggle onward
O'er life's uneven path,
And overcome in triumph,
A crown for them at last
Awaits them at the judgment,
When the good receive reward,
For devotion, consecration,
And service to their Lord.

We wonder why the trials,
Why burdens we must bear;
And forget celestial glory,
And the crown that we might wear.
Turn rather to the blessings
Which outnumber trials by far;
Think kindly of the Father,
That his Spirit we may share

To assist us in the warfare,
As we travel hill and vale,
Which will every comfort give us
When all mortal powers fail.
To God we owe our being,
Our blessings day by day,
So let us trust him, trust him,
As we wend the narrow way.

LORA HUNTER STRACHAN.

Unbelief

There is no unbelief;
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusts in God.

Whoever says when clouds are in the sky,
"Be patient, heart; light breaketh by and by."
Trusts the Most High.

Whoever sees 'neath winter's field of snow
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

Whoever says, "To-morrow," "The unknown,"
"The future," trusts the Power alone
He dares disown.

The heart that looks on when eyelids close
And dares to live when life has woes,
God's comfort knows.

There is no unbelief;
And day by day, unconsciously,
The heart lives by that faith the lips deny.
God knoweth why!

CALLING TO THE PRIESTHOOD

The following was prepared and read before the Quorum of High Priests at the General Conference of 1915, by Elder J. W. Wight.)

SHOULD ANY ACCEPT AN ORDINATION TO THE PRIESTHOOD WITHOUT A PERSONAL REVELATION?

Why not? "Well," says one, "do not the Scriptures positively declare that he shall not?" Not that we have been able to find. All revelation of God to man clearly points to the fact that none should be ordained without being called of God, but does it follow that such a call shall of necessity be of a personal nature? or may it not come through those chosen and ordained of God without the necessity of such personal call or revelation?

"All they who receive this priesthood receive me, saith the Lord, for he that receiveth my servants receiveth me" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6). This seems to answer the question quite clearly, in that it sets the bounds of receiving from the servants of God and thereby receiving God himself. This thought seems to be fully portrayed in the calling of Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13: 2). It is here declared, "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." The inference is here clear that the Spirit, using one of these prophets or teachers as an instrument, called these two men into the ministry, and no thought intimated that they did not receive this call until they had received a personal testimony. The rather the language implies to the contrary, as follows: "And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away."

But it is not to be understood that the position is assumed that none are to get a personal revelation, for there are times and conditions when it is absolutely necessary. Instance the case of John the Baptist (John 1: 6). "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." John further emphasizes this thought in verse 33 of the same chapter by saying: "And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me," etc. Here was a case when none upon the earth was occupying by divine authority, and as a consequence such authority had to be revealed.

In such cases, then, it is to be understood that there is a direct necessity for such personal call or revelation, and there may be and doubtless are other instances where God gives a personal call, the circumstances being such that it is necessary. But to absolutely refuse to accept a "call" through another unless in some way there is a personal revelation, is to take an unwarranted position and but assumes that God must come to our terms or else we will refuse to have anything to do in the matter.

The safer position to occupy is that the direct revelation is to be to the church, and thence ramify through the various departments thereof. As the parent stock in the vegetable world receives its nourishment direct from the forces that operate in producing such effect, and which in turn feeds the various dependencies by sending the vital forces to the remotest extremities, so the law governing revelation manifests by direct revelation to the church as a whole and to its various departments through the "heads of departments," so to speak, until finally the extremes of the church, even to its membership, feel the influence divine without necessarily getting it from the fountain source direct—God. This is clearly seen in Doctrine and Covenants 87: 2, as follows:

Verily I say unto you, The keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come; nevertheless, through you shall the oracles be given to another; yea, even to the church.

It may be argued that this has reference to revelations given to the church as a whole and not to the individual. While this is granted, yet the real thought brought out by the quotation is that there is a direct rather than a promiscuous method of revelation, by which confusion is avoided. For the direct method of revelation avoids confusion, while the promiscuous method would only serve to enhance it.

The oracles or revelations to the church would necessarily come then to and through the presiding head of the church, and be subject to quorum scrutiny to determine as to whether they were in harmony with revelations already approved. Being satisfied that they are genuine, then, they become binding without having to await the fact of a personal revelation individually before being accepted as being from God.

So it should be in calling men into the priesthood. To such as might be in a presiding capacity over the particular department in which such individual might be occupying, the revelation should come, and the one to whom the "call" has thus come should seek to determine as to whether it is in harmony with revelations calling men to the ministry, rather than to cast the shadow of doubt upon such revelation by demanding that he must have a personal revelation before accepting the "call" made by revelation to other than himself.

Of course such personal revelation may come to one, and then again it may not. But to refuse such call as a revelation unless God shall confirm it by personal revelation, is to do one of two things, cast doubt upon the revelation itself, or else upon such method of giving revelation, and makes one, by such refusal at least, an advocate of the personal revelation method, or the giving of revelations promiscuously. It should at once be seen that such a method would be one of confusion rather than of order, and that out of it unity could never come to the church. There may not be any method in one's madness, but a lot of madness in his method!

It was the turning away from the method chosen of God to reveal himself unto his people that led the people astray in the forties. Listen: "And if my people will hearken unto my voice, and the voice of my servant whom I have chosen to lead my people, behold verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place." That they were moved "out of their place" none can deny. It was the turning unto the more promiscuous method of receiving revelations that did the mischief, for here and there arose the assumers, each claiming the right of personal revelation from God, until there was "confusion worse confounded," and people were led here and there as sheep without a shepherd.

In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 39, it is shown that the presidency are "to receive the oracles for the whole church." Suppose that there shall come the oracle of revelation calling one to occupy in the apostolic quorum, should he refuse to so occupy unless he get a personal revelation as to his call?

But the objector to this line of reasoning interposes that in Hebrews 5: 4 we are told that "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron," and then immediately asks, "What are you going to do about that?" Well, here is the way the Lord did about it, just called Aaron through his brother Moses! "And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office" (Exodus 28: 1). Aaron did not say, "Unless I can get a personal revelation I will not accept"; at least we have no hint of such a statement from him. In fact the quotation favors the position taken in this paper rather than having in it any proof to the contrary.

Hence we feel that the rule should be to accept the call, if we are satisfied that the revelation is from God, the acceptance to come from the fact that the revelation is in harmony with previous revealments, rather than that one should demand a personal revelation before accepting the "call."

Little self-denials, little honesties, little passing words of sympathy, little nameless acts of kindness, little silent victories over favorite temptations; these are the little threads of gold which, when woven together, gleam out so brightly in the pattern of life that God approves.—Farrar.

CATHOLICISM

AS VIEWED BY ITS FRIENDS AND REPRESENTED BY ITS OWN BOOKS

Is Protestantism still a protest?

Is not the genius of Protestation rather modified lately? Was there sufficient heresy in the mother church to warrant the zealous protest which gave modern Protestantism its being?

If so, can Protestantism now be consistent in a compromise with the mother church which would include her as a custodian of the faith, and as being orthodox?

The reformers said to the mother church: You have departed from the faith; you are an apostate and an heretic—you jeopardize our souls' salvation,—we withdraw from you and organize churches of ourselves, free from your accursed doctrines of men.

These churches now having grown large enough to command some attention in the world as daughters, and to supply many comfortable places for men who crave prominence and place—is it consistent now for these daughters to offer an arm to the church which they have deserted as an heretic and say: Come, mother, let us of a kind—we representatives of Christ's kingdom—walk together.

Can two walk together unless they be agreed? Evidently in this time when Protestantism in its various divisions is showing such a tendency to compromise its own discords in the interest of amalgamation, the spirit which at one time fired the zeal of the reformers against the heresies of the mother church is on the wane.

DURATION AND CONQUEST NO CRITERION

The boast of the Roman Catholic Church that "She has been at the cradle and the coffin of legions of her organized defamers," being to an extent true, and the further fact that her numerical strength and the great worldly power is indeed colossal, cause many to stand in awe of her, practically for those reasons alone.

Of course, if long duration and mighty conquest is a safe gauge by which to measure a church or institution, then the Catholics and Mohammedans have the arena, and all others had as well roll up their little old short scroll of history and retire by the rear exit.

But even if age and power are to be considered important in reckoning the merits of a given cause, then Satan wins all, for he got the start of the Roman Church, with his institutions, by quite a lap, and he too has been at the cradle and the grave of quite a number of his opponents.

But the antiquity of a deception, the prestige of its claims, or the numbers of its dupes, can never transform an error into the truth; and errors and deceptions, though they be as old as the stars, and though they be spread abroad as far as the curtains of heaven, must die when Babylon the great shall fall.

Neither is it safe for any who desire to give all due credit for their proper value to rely upon an enemy's statement concerning a church or institution; nor yet upon the representation of friends entirely.

AMONG HER FRIENDS

As an example of patronage to the Roman Catholic Church because of her commanding proportions, let us notice the following. Congressman Wooten, of Seattle, Washington, though not a Catholic, said:

The Catholic Church to-day is the only form of organized Christianity that is vital enough to merit consideration, and faithful enough to command respect.

William Allen White says:

The Roman Catholic Church, whether we like it or not, still must be admitted by serious-minded persons of every faith, to be the cement that is holding civilization together. If the influences of the Catholic Church were removed, barbarism and anarchy would rise rampant in the world.

We believe, however, that a considerable portion of "serious-minded" people would be perfectly willing to take all chances on the "rampant" without fear of it being worse than some of the rampant which obtains where Catholicism predominates.

Vice President of the United States, Thomas R. Marshall, said:

I am not a member of the mother church; but I can say that throughout my life, the best friends I have ever had, the most honored associates, worshiped at her shrine. The sainted men and women who have devoted their lives to the service of the Eternal, have won the admiration of all people and of all creeds.

Mr. William Winters, a dramatist of New York City, is quoted as saying:

To think of the Catholic Church is to think of the oldest, the most venerable and the most powerful religious institution existing among men. I am not a churchman of any kind. That, probably, is my misfortune, but I am conscious of a profound obligation of gratitude to that wise, august, austere yet tenderly human ecclesiastical power which, self-centered among the vicissitudes of human affairs, and provident of men of learning, imagination and sensibility through the world, has preserved the literature and art of all the centuries, and has made architecture the living cymbol of celestial aspiration, and in poetry and music has heard and transmitted the authentic voice of God.

We would just remark that if she has transmitted the "authentic voice of God," then most assuredly some of the literature (the Bible) which was wrested from her secret grasp and given to the world in spite of her, and at a fearful cost in martyrs' blood—then said revered literature gives an awful misrepresentation of what the authentic voice of God should sound like.

Mr. C. A. Windle says:

Truth compels me to say that the Catholic Church was the first Christian organization to consecrate itself to the mission of reclaiming mankind from slavery. She planted the first banner upon the ramparts of paganism; and single-handed and alone, she has sustained the battle for nearly fifteen hundred years before the birth of Protestantism.

Something might be said in this connection about taking from so-called slavery of the wild and free life of unsophisticated people and making them tributary to such a great wealth-gathering institution as is represented as having her banner upon certain "ramparts" single-handed, high-handed and "alone," etc., but a word upon that is sufficient.

So while these nice things are being said by men (some of whom at least) whose gaze is smitten by the eternal bigness of the mother church, it might be well to reflect that true merit is best judged by the quality of a product rather than by dimensions alone.

Where Catholicism predominates in Europe, is superstition and ignorance wanting? Are the people of those countries any nearer the standard of Christ—love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, revile not again,—than they were before Catholicism subjugated the people?

What of Catholic Mexico? What of South America, where in some states the law is made to prohibit any other religion than Roman Catholic?

ROMAN CATHOLIC WORKS

Opponents of Romanism, speakers and writers, give the impression that if that church represents Christianity at all it must be in a woefully distorted form; but a study of that church from an observation of its services and from its own literature will erase from the open-minded such an impression, and will establish the fact in the exact spot where said impression was erased.

All of the following quotations are taken from a Roman Catholic work by Priest J. E. McGavick. The title of this book is: Catholic Relief and Practice.

AN OPENING FOR HERESY

We must believe that Christ established a church and only one church for the whole world and all people; and that she is the Catholic Church; that Christ is her invisible head and the Holy Ghost her guide; that she as a visible head on earth, the pope, who holds his office by virtue of his being the successor of Saint Peter, whom Christ made chief of the apostles and his vicar on earth; that this church is infallible, and shall exist to the end of the world, and has the authority to rule and govern the faithful. We must believe that a revelation was made by God to man, or that God spoke words to man; that this revelation is contained in the sacred scriptures and in tradition.—Page 8.

Catholics, then, must believe, not only in the Scriptures, but also in doctrines of men which may be foisted upon the credulous under the mask of tradition.

What a lovely opening for any heresy of the doctrines of devils is here! If the church introduces a worship of Saints, a reverence and adoration for bones of the dead, and for traditional holy relics; grants an indulgence to any who may possess a crucifix or a string of beads which has been blessed; teaches that the sprinkling of "holy water" around the room will be a protection against evil or calamity—if the church introduces these and a thousand other poisonous superstitions, and the objection be raised that there is no authority for such in the Scriptures, the dodge can be made nicely: "We must believe in the revelation contained in the Scriptures and Tradition, with a capital T for tradition."

In the question cited, the "T" is actually capitalized. An attempt to justify their countless innovations upon Christianity necessitates the capitalization of the entire word TRADITION, admitting endless heinous contortions and counterfeits which the use of such a subterfuge makes possible.

To give due authority to all adopted traditions, without question or investigation by the people, the next step is: "We must believe in the infallibility of the church." Then, in the interest of mysterious profundity which is always profitable to the manipulator of mysticism, we are asked to believe that the bread and the wine of the "Eucharist contains truly, really and substantially the body and the blood, with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ" (page 9).

Then to incite people to "deeds of charity," no doubt in money consideration, as penance to go along with prayers for the dead relatives whom the priest may report to be in purgatory, that we may pray and pray them out:

We must believe in a communion of Saints, that is, a fellowship between the members of the church on earth, the Saints in heaven, and the souls in purgatory. We can help one another by our prayers and deeds of charity; we can pray for the souls in purgatory and thus help them, and to the Saints in heaven, and they can pray for and help us. We believe also, that the Saints in heaven should be honored and venerated, and that this veneration is good and useful.—Page 9.

Then, in order that any and every manner of sugar-coated performance of the church may be swallowed down by her votaries as being divinely authentic, whether it has ever been written in any scripture, preached in any place, or hatched from any tradition before or not:

There are other doctrines which a Catholic must believe, but they are really contained in the above, as, for instance, the definitions of the church assembled in her General Councils which follow from her infallible teaching authority.—Page 10.

Thus an infallible pope may call an infallible church into General Council and issue edicts which must be obeyed without question.

Besides the Ten Commandments, the church has framed certain laws or made binding certain precepts which must be obeyed. The chief of these are six, namely: To go to mass every Sunday and holy day of obligation; to fast and abstain on days appointed; to go to confession once a year; to go to holy communion during Easter time of each year; to contribute our share towards the support of the church (binding in charity).—Page 11.

QUOTATIONS OF INTEREST

The next quotations following herein immediately are inserted here for their general interest and are given without comment:

The church has marks by which she may be known. The church is Catholic, because she is universal as to time, place and truth, or she subsists in all ages, teaches all nations and maintains all truth. A national church is not universal, hence not Catholic. It is true that the Catholic Church is called Roman, but this appellation is not given because she is intended solely for Rome, but to designate that the chief seat of her authority is Rome.

She is finally apostolic, because she was founded on the apostles and teaches what they taught, and is governed by their successors. No church can claim to be apostolic that was founded centuries after the apostles.

Besides the above marks the church has three attributes; namely, Authority, infallibility and indefectibility. By her authority is meant the right and power to teach and govern the faithful. By her infallibility is meant her inerrancy in defending or teaching doctrines of faith and morals. She speaks infallibly in her General Councils, as through the pope when he speaks "ex cathedra" or defines a doctrine of faith or morals to the whole church. By her indefectibility is meant that she will last to the end of time.

No church has these marks and attributes but the Catholic Church. A church in which any one of them is wanting is not the church which Christ founded.—Page 17.

Christ said of little children: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Romanism teaches that unless children are baptized they are lost.

On account of its absolute necessity, children are baptized as soon as they can be brought to the church with safety. . . . There is great danger in delay.—Page 25.

In baptizing infants the priest asks the question: "Dost thou renounce Satan?"

Sponsor speaks for the child in answer: "I do renounce him."

"And all his works?"

Sponsor for the babe: "And all his works."

"And all his pomp?"

Yes, the little innocent babe renounces all of Satan's pomp, at least the sponsor says, "Yes," for it.

Priest: "Dost thou believe in God the Father Almighty Creator of heaven and earth?"

Sponsor: "I do believe."

Here follows a list of similar questions, and the infant believes them all. Then the priest says: "Dost thou wish to be baptized?"

Sponsor: "I do."

Then the priest pours water on the child's head, and hands the sponsor a lighted candle made of beeswax, and the child is considered to have been duly baptized, and is by reason of this ceremony now in a saved condition. Any little innocent child which might chance to die before thus being baptized is considered so unholy that its poor little body would pollute a holy Catholic burying ground, therefore unbaptized children are denied the rites of Catholic burial.

The privilege of Catholic burial must be denied to those who die in infidelity, heresy or schism; to those who are excommunicated and die evidently impenitent; to those who, unless deprived of their reason, take their own lives and die without repenting; to those who die in a duel even though they repent before death; and also to unbaptized children.—Pages 46, 47.

CEREMONIES FOR DEAD

As an effectual means of holding a tight grip upon the affections of the people, the church goes into tradition and brings out a set of ceremonies for the dead, all of which tends to make capital of the tender affections of the mourners for their dead to the enrichment of the church coffers.

It works this way: The church is thought to be infallible. The church teaches that charitable acts for the dead are helpful to the dead. Money can not be paid to the dead in person, but the next best thing is, pay it to the church. While the sorrowing heart mourns, the hand is free to give for the welfare of their loved ones. Who would be stingy with their means if they really believed that their contributions helped their dead?

And the Catholic Church loses no opportunity to work that little scheme to its fullest yielding capacity, as for instance, note the following:

From the very beginning the church has recommended a high or solemn high mass for the dead, not only on the day of the funeral, but also on the third, seventh and thirteenth day thereafter, as well as on the anniversary.—Page 49.

So the mourner is reminded of his obligations to the dead on the day of the funeral, and then again in three days, and then again, lest he forget, there is the seventh-day ceremony, and again if in thirty days more he could make another gift of charity for the poor sufferer in purgatory his mind is refreshed by solemn mass to do so.

Then after the lapse of one year they get back to him again in the same manner; and then if circumstances are favorable other anniversary masses are indulged, and in time the said mourner dies, and then some one else carries the good work on in his behalf. Is it any wonder that with such an endless claim this church can build such fine buildings and fatten their ministry so well?

The church teaches that the sacrifice of the altar is of infinite value and can deliver not only one soul, but all the souls in purgatory.—Page 49.

We should be careful, therefore, to remember the anniversaries of those who were near and dear to us. It is a Christian duty.—Page 49.

The Scriptures teach that the sick should call for the elders and be anointed with oil in solemn prayer. Catholicism teaches that the priest should be sent for to administer extreme unction in the Eucharist and that he should be met at the door with a lighted candle, made of beeswax. (Pages 63, 109.)

BLESSED ARTICLES LOSE INDULGENCES

Blessed articles, which are commonly designated as movable, and to which an indulged blessing is attached, such as rosaries, crucifixes, medals, statues, or other articles generally carried about the persons, lose the indulgences attached to them, first by being destroyed either by wear, breakage, fire or any other cause; secondly, by losing the ownership of them through sale, purchase, or by giving them away after becoming the owner, or in any other way. . . .

Statues when slightly damaged and repaired do not lose the indulgence blessing. If the chain of a rosary be broken and mended again, or if a few of the beads be lost, or if the beads be resting on another chain, the indulgences remain. . . . Religious articles are bought or sold before being blessed, and blessed afterwards.—Pages 87, 88.

HOLY WATER

Holy water is water that has been blessed. Its origin dates back to earliest times, and its use became universal in the Catholic world. To such an extent is this true that the church makes use of it in all ceremonies, blessings and functions of religion. . . . The people are advised to keep it in their homes, and sprinkle themselves with it on various occasions, and also to sprinkle their homes with it. The spiritual benefits resulting from it are most salutary. It is a safeguard against the attacks of the evil spirit and commands him to depart. It invites the presence of the Holy Spirit at all times; and it brings health to the soul and body.—Page 108.

SPIRITUAL LIGHT AND BEESWAX

Light is always used in celebrating the sacred mysteries. It dispels darkness and is symbolical of God who dwells in light inaccessible. . . . In this connection the candle is the light of the church. It must be made of beeswax. No other material has ever been allowed, except in a few very rare cases. There is a special day in which candles are blessed for the whole year. That day is the feast of Purification of the Blessed Virgin which is held on the second of February.—Pages 109, 110.

THE ROSARY

The Rosary of Saint Dominic, which is the one in most common use, is a form of prayer to the Mother of God said on beads. It consists of one hundred and fifty "Hail Marys," fifteen "Our Fathers" and fifteen "glories." These are divided into three chaplets, and each chaplet is divided into five decades. Each decade consists of ten "Hail Marys" and is begun by an "Our Father" and ended with a "glory." . . . The beads are used for the counting of the "Our Fathers" and "Hail Marys."—Page 107.

THE CALL TO COME OUT

So we have a bowing down to worship before a woman, Mary, rather than the Lord, and this is idolatry.

These innovations were concocted by the craftiness of priests who sold "holy" articles and indulgences, and this constitutes a wicked form of priestcraft. Vain tradition suggests the counting of beads in lieu of prayer, and this is superstition.

This saying of prayers on beads reminds one of what is related concerning the Irishman who not having time to say all his prayers, had them written and tacked to the head of his bed, and upon retiring at night he would simply point to the written paper and say: "Lord, them's my sentiments."

Superstition, priestcraft, idolatry—component parts of Babylon which is great, and shall continue so, till the mighty, sudden, and calamitous fall portrayed in Revelation 18.

"But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 4: 9.

While the Lord still tarries, while we await his coming, at which time error is to fall and truth to be made manifest, the call is to all the honest hearted who are ensnared in Babylon or any of her institutions: "Come out of her, oh my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, that ye receive not of her plagues."

WAR LOSSES WE DO NOT GRASP

There is not a person in America who really comprehends what is going on in Europe. We cannot grasp the situation. Figures simply roll off our tongues like so many ciphers with a numeral before them. They give no conception of the actual state of affairs. . . .

The British casualties to date—the actual losses from battle, capture and disease—are greater than the total number of soldiers who fought for the South during the Civil War.

The British losses in a single charge at Gallipoli, which was not given two inches of space in the dispatches, were greater than the combined losses of the federals and confederates at Gettysburg.

The British war loans now total $8,000,000,000, and within two weeks will be $10,000,000,000. The United States Government financed the Civil War on a loan of $1,000,000,000.

British war expenses to date are greater than the total expenses of all wars of Christendom between the years of 1790 and 1860, including the entire Napoleonic campaign, the Crimean war and the struggles of Prussia, Austria and Italy.

The war loans of Europe for one year were greater than the total cost of all wars of the last 125 years, these loans covering only a part of the cost of this war.

The German and French casualties in the recent offensive in the Champagne were 50 per cent greater than the total number of soldiers of both sides who fought in the battle of Waterloo.

More men are killed every week in Europe than the total of northern soldiers slain in all the battles of the Civil War.

The German losses in the Champagne battle equaled the northern losses in the twelve greatest battles of the rebellion.

If all the men lost in the war were stretched out in rows, it would take the fastest transcontinental train a month to pass them, running twenty-four hours a day.

The losses in the European war, up to the present time, are equal to one person from every family in the United States, as the population stood in 1900.

The death list is greater than the total loss of life in all the preceding wars in Europe for 150 years.

But all this gives no real appreciation of what is happening. What one needs is to see a procession of the war cripples, hobbling past on wooden legs or swinging their ghastly iron hands. It would take them a year to pass a given point.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, November 13, 1915.

PREACHER AND HEARER

WHAT THE MAN IN THE PEW EXPECTS FROM THE MAN IN THE PULPIT

We are most apt to be influenced by the man who is evidently ready for the next life, but is obviously fit for this one. Suppose that our preacher announces his text in the tone and manner from which in the past we have not infrequently suffered. Instantly everybody is filled with gloom. If a man from the outside crowd happens to have found his way into a pew, he at once concludes that the unhappy preacher is borne down by the weight of a great sorrow. His tone suggests not only that awful things have happened in the immediate past, but also that the worst is yet to come. The man accustomed to his place in the pew knows that this is not the true explanation. The preacher is merely one of those who have fallen into the bad habit of lugubriousness. "Cheer up," I venture to shout. "If you are going to preach the gospel, please do not forget that you are the bearer of tidings of great joy. If you are not going to preach the gospel, we should have had warning, so that we could stay away."

Such is a characteristic bit of advice offered by a layman in the Yale lectures on preaching this year.

The course was given by George Wharton Pepper, LL. D., a prominent lawyer and churchman of Philadelphia. Mr. Pepper is the trustee of the University of Pennsylvania, who, in connection with the dropping of Professor Scott Nearing from the Wharton School of Economics, said "free speech means the right to proclaim views not discordant with the ethical sense of the community, and so proclaimed as to evidence due consideration for the sensibilities of those holding different views." Doctor Pepper's brilliant addresses at Yale are coming out in book form under the title, A Voice from the Crowd (Yale University Press). It was the first time that a layman had been invited to deliver this series known as the Lyman Beecher lectures, and both the style and content arouse interest far beyond the theological student body.

On the difference between the written and spoken word in the matter of compelling power Mr. Pepper is emphatic. The written word is the message only. The spoken word is the message plus the man.

It is impossible to exaggerate the weight which the man in the pew attaches to the integrity of the preacher. Let the hearer even suspect that all is not well with the man who is exhorting him, and the message, however true, will have lost its penetrating power. The man in the crowd not only asks of the preacher's message, "Does it work in practice?" but he insists upon inquiring whether it works in the case of the preacher himself. The man in the crowd is apt to declare that the preacher himself is Exhibit A to his own message. "I reject his advice," he may say to himself, "if following it will make me like him." This is brutally frank, but it is the expression of a state of mind that must be reckoned with.

In talk with other men in the pews about the kind of men they need in the pulpit, Mr. Pepper finds that a very large percentage of them want what they describe as a "spiritually-minded" man. They want an intelligent man, of course, and a man with gumption enough to administer congregational affairs. But there is an increasing emphasis upon the spiritual note:

When men in the crowd cry for a spiritually-minded man, they are clamoring for one who is not content to be at one time this and at another time that, but for one who is always struggling to be simultaneously a mystic and a man of action. They want a minister who is himself a demonstration that, as God knows more about heaven and earth than anybody else, so his most faithful servant is one fitted to be thoroughly at home in both places. They know in their hearts that there is no opposition between the qualities that make for happiness in the two spheres of life, and they long for a man to whom they can point as a living reason for the faith that is in them.

But in the task of interpreting the world to men so as to make them realize that life is full of God, Mr. Pepper pleads for an understanding of men in the pew-crowd as they are. As a matter of fact his observation is that their spiritual equipment is apt to be overestimated by the preacher.

I think it is safe to say that in nine cases out of ten the man next me in the crowd, whether he is or is not an occasional churchgoer, has an idea of God that is too hazy to be communicable. If you essay to draw him out, he betrays signs of nervousness, as if fearful that an attempt at statement will make him lose his hold on the modicum of belief that he has. His God is the God of whom he heard in childhood. Experience has neither matured nor enriched the conception. If he prays, it is apt to be a prayer his mother taught him. If he should attempt to talk with God in prayer, even if no one else were nigh, it is probable that his self-consciousness would almost suffocate him. . . .

In the great majority of instances thoughts of God play no appreciable part in his daily life. He "believes" in God. Certainly. He recognizes that his belief is something to be clung to. He suspects that the belief might become a real power in his life and he hopes that some day it will be. In the meanwhile he is like a man holding in his hand an unopened telegram. He knows it is important, but he is half afraid to read it. . . .

If you are ever with a man from the crowd when serious illness lays its hand on wife or child, your heart will ache when you see his utter hopelessness or note his mute appeal to you for help to express himself in prayer. When he stands beside the new-made grave he is of all men the most miserable.

This is an effect of the habit of Americans to be too busy to stop and think. They have no reservoir of spiritual power upon which to draw in time of need. On reflection, Mr. Pepper suggests that it would be surprising if the situation were different. Why should we expect Americans to be rich in faith?

An enormous territory, vast resources and great prosperity fill the imagination of the man of privilege and of power; while the sight of these things just beyond his grasp is becoming a madness to the man who lacks capacity or has never had a chance. Surely there is little place for God in the thoughts of either. If ever there was a man choked with the cares and the riches and the pleasures of this life, it is the man in the American crowd. If he is very rich, he is busy nowadays pleading to indictments and is most of the time in resentful mood. If he is a man of affairs, the telephone rings while he is in his bath. If he is in moderate circumstances he is continually looking for a way in which to become suddenly rich. If he is very poor, the daily struggle absorbs all the energy he has, except that with which he tells you that the poor man nowadays does not get a square deal.

But assuming that the object of preaching is to reveal God to man, here then is the day of the preacher's opportunity. What is usually meted out to the listening crowd?

In a very great number of cases it is a sermon replete with references to spiritual experiences which the man in the crowd does not have, and presupposing a greater knowledge of God than the man in the crowd in fact possesses. As far as mere use of terms is concerned, preachers are apt to forget that much of the language which to them has a precise theological meaning is understood dimly or not at all by the man in the pew. . . . The preacher should not forget that in his case it is not merely a question of understanding terms, but a question of having or not having the experiences of which he familiarly speaks. I have in mind such common words as God, prayer, forgiveness, immortality, and not merely terms seldom used except by theologians.

Let me try to make my meaning more clear by giving some instances of the way in which pastors often make the mistake of feeding meat to babes. You will agree, I think, that if the man in the pew knows little of God it must follow that for him prayer is not much more than a form of words. The decent humility which characterizes him must not be mistaken for a sense of sin. The need of redemption is to him not obvious. The forgiveness of sins is not what he would describe as a live issue. The suggestion of eternity makes him nervous. A life after death seems to him at best but a leap in the dark.

Try to imagine what kind of an experience to such a man is an exhortation to prayer, a plea for the acceptance of a redeemer, or a dissertation upon the condition of the blest in paradise. Allusions to the doctrine of the trinity, the atonement, the incarnation, are as nearly meaningless to most American men as are references to abstruse scientific principles of which they have heard all their lives but have never understood.

Mr. Pepper does not impugn the validity of the teachings referred to, nor does he think creeds outworn. He declares whole-hearted belief that the most important aspects of God's revealed truth are within the ken of every man in the crowd, however much his spiritual capacity may differ from his brother's. But he solemnly protests that:

You must get something like a working conception of God into his mind before you can edify him by the proclamation of Christian doctrine. Once give him even a glimpse of God and you can proceed by precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little, until you have helped him to add many cubits to his spiritual stature.

We have all noted the mute agony of the father of the family escorted to a symphony concert by a music-loving wife and daughters. He is not tone-deaf by any means, but there is much for him to learn before he can really appreciate Bach and Wagner. The man in the pew must be made aware of the unseen world before he can be interested in its life. God must precede theology. The man must be taught to face the problems of life of which Christian doctrines are intended to be the solution. The trouble with much preaching is that it is directed at the solution of difficulties of the very existence of which the man in the pew is not aware.

Compassion, not condescension: preaching for the sake of the pew-crowd, not for his own satisfaction; and conviction that he has something to offer which, if received, will mean light and leading to his hearers, make up the secret of effective preaching, according to Mr. Pepper. He calls a sham sermon an offense to God.

The sham may take any one of several forms. A detestable species is that in which the preacher gives glib and conventional answers to questions which have never troubled him, and offers hearsay solutions of problems with which he himself has never wrestled. Perhaps the most common sham is the appeal to experiences to which the preacher is a stranger, or the proclamation of beliefs upon which he has a slender hold. It is extraordinary how quickly the man in the pew can distinguish between that which has its source in the recesses of the preacher's being and that which comes only from the lips. A proposition announced by a man convinced of its truth and power may carry the preacher's conviction to many a heart, when the same words will be utterly ineffectual if spoken by one to whom they mean little or nothing.

It is just because the man counts for so much that his elocution and fluency count for so little, Mr. Pepper goes on to say. And by way of reenforcing this point he adds:

Cato the Censor, so Cicero tells us, used to wonder why one soothsayer did not laugh when he met another. There are cynics in our own day who are ready to impute a like insincerity to the clergy. As a generalization this is utterly unfair and unjustified. But insincere and disingenuous preachers give color to such a charge. Theirs is a weighty responsibility. They counterfeit and debase the currency of the King of kings.—Current Opinion, October, 1915.

MONKEY DIED LIKE A MAN

The death of Bill Snyder, the veteran baboon of the Central Park zoo, from acute indigestion, is chronicled in the day's news. Bill was not one of the higher order of the monkey family; his kinship to the human race, if he had any, was remote. Yet surely in the manner of his death he displayed a simian resemblance to man.

He died as hundreds of thousands of beings higher in the scale of evolution die, as countless numbers of our "best citizens" die—from overeating. He was as reckless in the indulgence of his appetite for food as the most cultivated member of the human family, and if the circumstances of his death excite surprise, it is that his natural instincts did not preserve him from the fate of the most intelligent human beings.

Bill's death points a dietetic moral for monkeys that exchange the nuts and roots of the jungle for the richer food of zoo captivity and idleness. The application of the moral to mankind need not be considered. A vastly greater number of men die from overeating than from starvation, and the death of a humble simian in the circumstances from this characteristically human ailment, may serve to emphasize the fact.—New York World.

When news finally had reached him that Lee had surrendered, and the officials began to make preparation for the entry into Richmond, just as immediately Lincoln put his foot down and said: "There shall be no triumphant entry into Richmond. There shall be no demonstration just now." He made his way to Richmond and walked through the city alone. He walked with his head down, with heavy step and sad heart, and when he reached the Southern capitol and went to Jefferson Davis's room, he bade his two officials step aside and leave him alone. After a few minutes had passed by, one of them, out of curiosity, looked to see what had taken place, and there sat Lincoln, with his head bowed on Jefferson Davis's desk, his face in his hands and his tears falling. His great, sympathetic heart saved the republic.—Cortland Myers.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

New Relations and Responsibilities

The evening of Thursday, November 4 saw the arrival at the home of the new superintendent and matron, Brother and Sister E. D. Briggs, of Nebraska City. A little company of friends connected with the home had gathered to give them welcome, and with the older children of the home family awaited their coming, after which a social hour was spent together.

A hearty greeting from their new friends had set the children at ease from the first and before their somewhat belated bedtime, one and another was saying, "I like them," and, "So do I." A momentous thing it is, the adopting of a new father and mother!

The introduction of the other children occurred before breakfast the next morning, and all were reassured by the smiling faces and kindly words with which they were greeted, while the little ones went straight into the motherly arms open to receive them.

Then in their accustomed way the children ranged themselves in line and marched to music to their places at the tables in the dining room. Being seated they listened with bowed heads while the new head of the house asked God's blessing upon the morning meal and upon all their association together.

Prayer followed breakfast as usual, and then the boys and girls went to their various tasks in order to have their work done and to be on time at school. Of course the boys were much interested in showing father about the barn, and so on, and mother must come and see the calf and the chickens. There were many things to see and learn, and each turn disclosed some new view of the great possibilities undertaken. But these are faced with a brave and cheerful spirit and a firm reliance upon the great Helper and Father of all.

The first Saturday proved to be a gala day for the children. An extra horse had been secured (only one being kept at the home) and father was going to the country for apples. A load of apples had been offered for the home on condition enough help should be furnished to pick them up from the ground where they were lying. Four of the oldest boys were delegated for this service and gladly accepted the privilege.

While they were gone word was received through Brother Heman C. Smith that free admission to the home children had been kindly granted for a series of stereopticon lectures. These were to be given by the Athenian Literary Society at the college on six successive Saturdays, beginning that day, the afternoon being devoted to the children. Then everybody helped, and the Saturday bathing and donning of fresh clothing was quickly accomplished, and a clean, happy lot of children started out to enjoy the afternoon. This time they were under the chaperonage of Sister Inez Davis, recently returned from the Hawaiian Mission. The absence of the apple boys was regretted, but there would be other days when they could go too.

These boys came home hungry enough to do full justice to their late dinner, which they enjoyed, sitting at the same table with father. When it was over they were ready to work with him again, and soon they had the apples transferred to their place in the fruit cellar.

Other donations of apples had been received as well as a fine lot of pears; but many of these would not keep to be used in the fresh state, so one of the early experiences of the new matron and superintendent was that of meeting a number of willing-hearted sisters who gathered in to help put up the fruit. On three afternoons they worked, until all were sorted and those in need of attention had been put up.

In the forenoon of the second Saturday the boys were permitted to accompany father to a sale of stock which was held at the Saints' Home. In the afternoon all who chose to do so went with mother to see the pictures at the college.

There have been several flying trips in the bishopric automobile, lately donated to the stake. Sometimes it has looked like the old woman's shoe overflowing with children, and once, for a three minute-trip, little Roy "sat all alone in the back seat!" while his playmate, Harriet, rode with Brother Roberts.

These are some of the outside attractions which, however, cannot dim the story hour, the Sunday afternoon with pop corn and nuts, or other happy and profitable times when father, mother and children are drawn close together in common interest.

May the bonds of love be so strengthened as to prove a safeguard to the children and an aid in solving the many problems connected with their care.

Touching the Keys Aright

We have been at this place for over a year and have no church privileges, so far as our own church is concerned. There are other churches, but there is nothing satisfying in attending them. My desire is still for the angel's message. The gospel is just as dear to me now as it was when I embraced it years ago. I hope I may be ready, when called, to hear the blessed "Well done." If we can only keep in accord with the latter-day work there are blessings in store for us.

Some one near by was playing a flute, high, clear and sweet. The melody rose, then the player struck a wrong note; sweetness and melody vanished—no longer was there joy in it. This only reveals that the instrument of life is true and sound. If played right it will always give forth sweetness; it is only when played wrong that discord comes. The fault is not in the instrument, it is in the player. We are apt to blame fate or circumstances when life goes wrong. If we would look carefully into the matter we would discover we have struck a wrong note. This has thrown our life out of tune. We may recover the melody, and except for the hurt of the slip, little ultimate ill is done, or we may get farther and farther off the key until life ends in utmost discord.

We should not blame life. The instrument is true, and if we keep ourselves tuned to the Spirit of truth we shall play it correctly. Whenever we hesitate as to the right key to be struck there is always an inner guide that not only tells us the individual note, but the motive of the whole melody of our life sings in our heart. It is only when we refuse to listen or to follow that the melody grows faint, and if we turn a deaf ear it is lost entirely. With every passing day it becomes more easy to play the instrument of life lightly if we wish to do so. To what wondrous melody would this old world move if we all touched the right keys. Everyone would voice his own sweetness but no discord would arise. It would be one grand symphony.

Let us strive to so live that we may play the instrument of life rightly, is the prayer of,

A sister,

Mrs. S. A. Foss.

[The following letter from the editor of The Avery Boomer, who became interested in our work during services held at Avery, Iowa, some months ago, will be of interest to the Saints.—EDITORS.]

AVERY, IOWA, September 28, 1915.

MR. A. N. HAZELTON, Lamoni, Iowa.

My Very Dear Sir: Your letter at hand and read with pleasure. I am very glad to hear from you people at Lamoni. I send you what few Boomers I have left of the edition you mention. I printed about one hundred extra of this number to help your elders who were expecting to come here. My idea was to see if we could not arrange for a debate between them and our Methodist minister, but he would not debate. So I got up a petition and secured about forty-five or fifty signatures to it, and your elders gave us two lectures, one on "Joseph Smith, was he a prophet of God," the other on the Book of Mormon. These lectures were a great success, and the people turned out well to hear them.

You may tell your church authorities at Lamoni that we people here in Avery think well of the elders and preachers who have been sent here, and hope that they will come again. Although not a Latter Day Saint, I like the Saints, and I like to hear them preach. I believe Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God. I see nothing unreasonable in believing that the Book of Mormon may be an historical account of the wandering prehistoric children of Israel on this continent. I have read some works and books on Joseph Smith and have read the first three histories of your church, published at Lamoni, Iowa.

If you wish to send some church literature here I shall be very glad to receive it and read it, and will judiciously distribute it so that others may get the good of it too. The people here at Avery are taking a good deal of interest in your church, and I believe you could keep up your propaganda further with profit and good results. There are three or four of your families in Avery. They are all nice, respected and well-esteemed people. I have suggested to some of them that they obtain discussional literature and start a circulating library and let people read how your church interprets the Bible.

I have written several articles for Swedish and American papers on Joseph Smith and his character, stating that he was a good man and did not originate the doctrine of polygamy, as it is sometimes urged that he did.

Yours truly,

AXEL PETERSON.

AMHERST, NOVA SCOTIA, October 22, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are still trying to keep the gospel banner afloat. Although isolated from church privileges we are still hopeful and are looking forward to the time when we shall enjoy the companionship of those of kindred faith.

Some Saints who are isolated think that they can do nothing towards helping along this great work; but that is where they make a great mistake. We can all become workers together, by paying our tithing and living the law that the Master has made so plain. I often think, what a shame that so many of the Saints withhold just tithe, when they know that they owe it to help God's work, and some of those who are able to pay are among those who do not. Saints, turn to Doctrine and Covenants 64:5, and read what latter-day revelation says about those who withhold the just tithe; read carefully, think the matter over, and ask yourself the question, Does that mean me? Then read Malachi 3, and note the promise God has made to those who are faithful in their stewardships.

Some of those who will not pay anything and who are able to do so, when Christmas time comes can find money to spend on presents. Ask them for a dollar for the church and they tell you they have a hard time to make ends meet. Saints, do you think you can deceive God? When you stand before the great judge, what excuse will you have to offer?

Ask yourself the question, Have I been doing what I should to help along the work that I love so well? Take an inventory of your past life and find out how much you have paid, and then take another inventory of what you own and mail it to the Bishop, asking what you should give to keep along the Master's work.

May the God of peace continue to bless you. I remain,
Your brother,
BOYD JOHNSON.

[The following letter is from a brother who, in January, 1914, wrote for certain information of the Bureau of Publicity, and who became further interested in the work, and with his wife and brother was baptized by Brother J. W. Metcalf. He is showing a creditable development, and should be of assistance to the cause.—EDITORS.]

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, October 22, 1915.

MR. ELBERT A. SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir and Brother: I am in receipt of and have read to-day your editorial concerning the "Book of Abraham" in the HERALD for this week. The matter is entirely clear to me now, and I feel as though I shall be in a position to offer defense in this connection when occasion demands. Like many other subjects, when they are threshed out, this one proves the same conclusion—that it is hard to bring to naught the work of God by attempting it in roundabout ways by means of propositions with which the Saints are not familiar. This work to us is truth, and we need not fear but what the trap is set at all points along the line or road, and persons who attempt to prove their pet theories and endeavor thereby to blind the eyes and minds of the honest people who really want something stable to cling to, are sure to get in the trap sometime, somewhere, if merely let alone in the territory they want to roam in.

The fact that the Spalding Romance showed up on the islands proves a watchful eye is kept on the slow but sure advancement of the Book of Mormon and its teachings, and further proves the purposes mentioned therein will not fail. But not having encountered this particular feature of the various objections offered by outsiders to annul the claims of Joseph Smith, I wrote you for light and information.

I want to say this, that when I write you or Brother Garver, in fact each of those to whom I have written at either Lamoni or Independence, have always been given thorough information on the subject in hand.

Yours in the work,
W. O. ROBERTSON.

DELOIT, IOWA, November 5, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Gallands Grove District in general and the Saints at Denison in particular are much pleased with the good support the nonmembers of Denison are giving them in the erection of a church, as noted in the following from The Denison (Iowa) Review:

"A special business meeting was held in Denison by the Latter Day Saints on Monday evening of this week, at which time it was decided by a unanimous vote to erect a church building. . . .

"Plans and specifications have not been fully agreed upon, but it is expected that the building will be about thirty by forty-six, and it is hoped to have it ready for use by Christmas.

"The Monday evening meeting was in charge of Elder C. J. Hunt, financial agent for the Latter Day Saints in north-western Iowa, and he will appoint a soliciting committee to aid the building committee. There were present at this business meeting Elders C. E. and J. L. Butterworth, of Dow City; C. W. Winney and J. T. Spence, Deloit. Members of the Latter Day Saint church in Crawford County will aid the Denison Saints in every way possible in making a success of the undertaking here.

"The local organization has long been in need of a meeting place, and for a year or more the members have held Sunday school and preaching services in private homes, but, owing to increased membership, they are greatly in need of a church in which to accommodate the congregation. Without doubt they will receive the support of the business men and residents of Denison."

Denison is a town of about four thousand.

Very truly yours,
C. J. HUNT.

RAVENWOOD, MISSOURI, November 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: The HERALD has been a source of strength to me many times. I am thankful that I am permitted to live in this momentous day and age of the world; a day in which the Lord has set to gather his elect. Dear Saints, we should set our affection on things above. Too many of us are going along thoughtless as to what our duty is, and as to the questions that we may be called to answer at the great judgment day. The Lord in his goodness has required only the small sum of one tenth as the first tithe of all this world's goods that he has blessed us with, to carry on his great work here on earth.

One cry is that we need more laborers in the vineyard, but there must be means to support them. Will we be called to answer when we stand before the great white throne, Why did you not pay unto the Lord's storehouse that which was due? Let us now answer the question, Are we doing all we can to assist in this great work? If we are not, let us begin right now. Our brethren leave their homes and families and give up all for the gospel's sake. Why can not we sacrifice at least one tenth of that which the Lord has blessed us with? Think what a small sum that is. Can it be said that we were faithful if we keep not the law? I fear not.

The Saints of Sweet Home Branch are making some progress. The Lord has blessed us in our efforts for good. We have regular preaching services every Sunday except sacrament day, and every Sunday night. We have prayer meeting and Religio one night during the week. Some of our young people are beginning to take an active part, which encourages us, and we are sure the Lord is well pleased with their efforts.

May the good Master help us as Saints to come up to higher planes, is the humble prayer of

Your sister,
MRS. MARTHA NELSON.

FONTANELLE, IOWA, November 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is interesting and encouraging to read of others' experiences. We hope that our experiences may encourage others. Some former members of this branch have moved away. We still have a small band trying to hold our candle high for a light to the world. We hold Sunday school every Sunday, and had prayer meeting to-day. Those who attend do not become discouraged, but try to hold out faithful and pray for all. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, for we need God's help to present the truth to the people, some of whom think we are foolish.

One man, an Adventist, told me I believed in spiritualism, because I said I believed we were conscious after death. I corresponded with the minister in charge of this territory and have challenged this people to debate on soul sleeping and church propositions, or any other questions including church propositions. Their elder is away now and we are waiting for their members to find out what they will do. This controversy started by Elder J. H. Baker preaching a sermon on the future destiny of man. After he was gone their man called me over to hear an answer by a sermon on future probation.

This man said there was no chance for a man after he died in sin. He said that 1 Peter 3:18-20 referred to Christ's Spirit preaching through his prophets to the spirits in our bodies. I tried to explain to them our belief, and they said if any man told me that, I had better leave that man alone, hence the challenge to debate. Then they said they were not trying to down anybody's work, that they were out to save the people. I told them that was what I was after, that I wanted to get the truth before the people, and if they had the truth they ought not to be afraid to debate in public. So I am waiting in hopes, for the neighborhood is interested and excitement is running high.

We have no church building and only one officer, a teacher, L. O. Lents, who gives us some good talks. Our branch president, a priest, E. D. Blair, is in Lamoni taking treatment for his nerves. He is getting better, so we are looking forward with gladness to his return in the spring. He is a very able talker, and Sister Blair is a help to all with her words of comfort.

Your brother,
V. G. LENTS.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, November 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: We receive benefit from the letters of others in the HERALD. We are all busy here, working in the several departments. This conference year finds us renewing our covenant for service. Brother O. J. Hawn has been holding tent meetings which lasted about four weeks, being interrupted only for our conference. Eighteen were baptized, and more heard the gospel and we are satisfied that the work here is not done.

Truly the kingdom of God is like a net which gathers in every kind. We have baptized some Catholics, some Methodists, some Salvation Army soldiers, some Presbyterians. One from Lansing, hearing the gospel in our little tent, obeyed, and went back with the promise to help advance the gospel there.

The Saints are now talking about renting a large theater for some meetings this winter.

The writer is much interested in Sunday school and Religio work. We think the last conference in Central Michigan was an incentive to better work and more systematic effort along these lines. Our district association offers three prizes, first, second and third, to schools having the highest grading in the following points: First, best reporting; second, best report of home class work; third, best showing in cradle roll work. This ought to encourage every school. Every live worker wants to get to the top.

We are making an earnest effort to make our district first grade, and feel sure that we can do it. So let one and all put forth the best effort, and what our hands find to do, do it with our might. We hope every Saint in Central Michigan will catch the real spirit of the work and do his best to make this our best year. There is work for all. Our Sunday school and Religio convention voted to meet semiannually, so we will have a better opportunity for work.

Earnestly desiring to advance the cause, I am,

EDITH SMITH.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, November 12, 1915.

Editors Herald: I just closed three weeks of meetings at Spring Valley Schoolhouse, six miles southwest of Creighton, Nebraska. Sisters Thompson and Jones sent for me to come and hold meetings. We had a full house every night. We left five or six near the kingdom, who will be baptized ere long. Much prejudice was broken down, and many friends made to the cause. On leaving I was invited to come back again and to go to the houses of the people and talk with them.

Sister J. M. Thompson and Sister J. R. Jones are true and noble Saints. They are alone in the church, but will soon have their noble husbands in the work with them. I baptized Sister Thompson at Loveland, Iowa, two years ago.

This is a grand and glorious work, and one that is dear to my heart.

To the scattered Saints of Northeastern Nebraska District—what is the chance of opening up the work? If any want me to come and hold meetings, write me at my home address, Bartlett, Iowa. Let me know your needs and I will arrange to come your way.

H. N. PIERCE.

Extracts from Letters

J. M. Terry, Seattle, Washington: "Our church work is moving along quite well. We are just inaugurating an effort to pay off remaining debt and properly seat our church house and prepare it for dedication. We owe four hundred dollars, and two hundred more will seat it. I am very busy, but it seems to take much work for apparently small results. Wife's health is quite poor yet. She keeps on going for the sake of the good cause. I am having good health,—yet years begin to tell. Brother Peter Anderson was with us a few days with his daughter. He was feeling well in the work. Is in Portland now en route to his field again."

Elder George H. Graves writes from London, Ontario: "The work here in this city is onward. God speed the right. To the dear Saints scattered abroad, greeting."

E. A. Ulrich, Hardtner, Kansas: "I have been isolated from the fellowship of the Saints the greater part of ten years. I was baptized in December, 1898; was ordained a priest in March, 1902, by Brethren Baldwin and Ebeling, at Toledo, Ohio. During the above-mentioned years I was a regular subscriber to the HERALD. Since 1906 I have moved about a great deal and have lost possibly much of what I might have attained under a more spiritual environment. Yet the angel's message to-day to me represents the same uncompromising and unyielding truth. Those under present economic conditions who fear they may be swept from their place, should maintain their integrity and loyalty to the order of God as set in the church. To me the responsibilities of the ministry, especially those who publish the tidings of the church, is great. Jesus said, Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has lost its savor it is thenceforth good for nothing.

Sadie Burch, Independence, Missouri: "As Saints we should stand in holy places, putting away the sins which so easily beset us. We should work, watch and pray, for the hour of desolation is at hand. The time of trouble is upon us."

Michigan and Indiana

News that would be interesting to many of the HERALD readers, known to many of the missionaries, if it was published, would be appreciated by them. The several items which go to make up the experiences of a missionary, one who is moving from place to place in his field of labor, are such commonplace things with him, that many times when things happen that would be interesting to others, he gives them but little more than a passing notice, when if they were properly written up and published would make interesting reading to a great many, besides there would be very much in the experience of the average missionary that would be encouraging to those who are interested in the onward progress of this latter-day work.

I have neglected to write for publication much that might have been written for the benefit of others, and perhaps that would be true of most all of our missionaries. Several reasons might be given for neglecting this duty we missionaries owe to the membership of the church who are sustaining us in the field. One of the reasons that we seldom if ever hear from some of us is that we are not gifted in the use of poetry or prose, we are not so well qualified to write as some of our gifted brethren, and we are not anxious to expose our lack of ability along literary lines. We have missionaries who are excellent speakers but who are not good pen-pushers. If all are to labor according to their gifts and callings, and if some of us are not gifted along literary lines, we could not reasonably be expected to write much for the papers. However, some may be gifted more in that way than they are aware, and with a little more practice they might develop along literary lines in a way that would surprise them.

If the foregoing is sufficient apology for letters and articles not appearing often in the columns of the HERALD over the signature of the undersigned, then may I not be excused for not writing oftener?

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District is still on the church map, with some three or four missionaries busy most all of their time in gospel work, I do not recollect the exact number of people that have been baptized by our small force of missionaries this year, but I would not miss the number far if I were to say fifty.

Our work has not been done without the usual amount of opposition by those who differ from us religiously. This may or may not be a good indication of progressive work done by our missionaries. I believe it was Goethe who once made the statement, "I always know that I am traveling when I hear the dogs bark." I am inclined to think however, that it is possible for a missionary to say and do things that will create the displeasure of others, and not be making much progress either.

We were called on to defend our work in March in a sixteen-session debate near Galien, Michigan, with Elder B. E. Kesler, of Puxico, Missouri, representing the Church of the Brethren. I think he was the equal of any man I have ever met in debate in "mud slinging." Mr. Kesler had the "mud," and knew how to mix it, and he was proficient in throwing it. (I was informed that Elder Kesler had been a lawyer in the past, but is giving all of his time to debating now.) His stock in trade was the usual tirade of abuse. His principal textbooks were The True Origin of Mormon Polygamy and The True Origin of the Book of Mormon, by Charles A. Shook.

Some people in Hibbard, where I am at this writing, have done what they could to hinder the work here. Brother O. R.

Miller came here in July and forged his way through much opposition, succeeding in baptizing more than twenty before leaving, first and last. Since he left our enemies have flooded the town with "anti-Mormon" literature of the Reverend John D. Nutting brand. I am inclined to think, from what I have heard, that these "Guardian Angels" of men's souls have already discovered their mistake in much that they have said and done. Some of the best people here are not slow in taking a stand with our people, and are outspoken against those who are the leaders in this movement against our work. Our opposers have injured themselves more than us in the eyes of most everyone.

I leave this place Monday for Lansing, Michigan, to engage Bishop E. Fagan, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Holiness Workers, in a twelve-session debate, on the usual church propositions. The bishop informs me that he wants a clean, honorable debate on the Scriptures, and will not resort to "mud slinging" under any circumstances. He says if we have the truth he wants to know it, that is what he is seeking, and if he shall succeed in proving to me that they have the truth, we ought to be equally anxious to know it and be honest enough to accept it. When I left the bishop and his wife I told them that I should expect to baptize them into our church at the close of the debate.

The work in this district, I am pleased to state, so far as I am acquainted with it now and in the past, is in as good condition as at any time in the past. There have been three new branches organized within the last twelve months, and prospects are good for one or two more in the near future.

In a number of places where I have held meetings of late, quite good interest was manifest among those who are not members of the church. At Ora, the last place I preached before coming here, the attendance was quite large, numbering from forty to one hundred and forty. Out of this large number there were not more than ten or twelve Saints present. When we are successful in getting as many as forty or fifty nonmembers out to hear preaching in this district, we think we are doing well, and when we can do better than that we are very much pleased.

Our labors in this district have been made very pleasant by the Saints and friends that we have been privileged to labor among. I have been kindly treated by all; have been blessed with quite a large measure of the Holy Spirit in all of my work. Taking all things together, I have no reason to complain. I think that I am in the faith, I know if I am not, I want to be.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. D. STEAD.

HIBBARD, INDIANA, November 12, 1915.

Spring River District

When I last wrote I was at the Wimar Schoolhouse, in Oklahoma. I closed there on Sunday night, October 24, with a full house and good interest. We have a fine band of Saints at that place. All they need is help. The school director did all in his power to make the meetings a success. He is a fine young man.

The next morning we started with Brother Green with a load of oats for the railroad, a distance of twelve miles. We got stuck in a mudhole, but a good neighbor helped us out, and we got to the station all right. We reached home Tuesday noon. About the first thing we heard was, "Brother Quick, are you going to preach for us?" We consented to preach Friday and Saturday nights, and twice on Sunday.

We had been requested by a lady of the Christian Church to preach on "Hell," so we announced for Sunday night the subject, "Is hell literal fire?" We had a full house, and all seemed pleased. Sunday afternoon myself and wife, and Brother H. C. Hughes and wife, went about twelve miles to see Brother Hillman's family. They are passing through a great trial. Their oldest boy has been sick for two or three years. He is about twenty years old. He is a member of the church. His mind is strong, but his body is weak. Saints, pray for him.

On Friday I again had to do the hardest thing of my life, bid wife and children good-by, and we were off for the conference at Pittsburg, Kansas. At Fort Scott we met our good Brother A. C. Silvers. We were soon in Pittsburg, shaking hands with the good Saints. We all ate at the same table, Sister Bird being the head cook.

Brethren F. M. Sheehy, Charles Fry, and T. C. Kelley were made presidents of the conference. To say that they did well is putting it mildly. Bishop Ellis Short was there doing his part of the work. Brother Short has always been interested in the Spring River District. After a social meeting in the afternoon, we hurried away to this place to commence a two-weeks meeting. We were ten minutes late, but tried to make up for it.

Bob Jones, the evangelist, is in Joplin, occupying in a big tabernacle. He is going after the people in Billy Sunday style. Here are some of his statements, which the papers call "Jones's Jolts":

God Almighty was never able to do anything with a man who argued with him.

You ought to be ashamed of yourself if you are a Christian and are not able to tell men how to be saved.

The most of you have about enough religion to keep you uncomfortable.

A man may quit drinking, quit swearing, and quit lying and still go to hell.

There is nothing that disgusts me quite so much as to hear an insignificant girl say, "I do not see any harm in dancing."

There are mothers in this town who would rather see their daughters in society than in heaven.

To my mind some of these statements are good for our people to think over. Jesus said we might go in and out and find pasture.

Everything seems to be moving along nicely in this district. The missionary force is at peace with each other, and we ought to be at peace if we are followers of the Prince of peace. Brother Fry, our district president, seems to be the right man in the right place.

Your brother,

LEE QUICK.

WEBB CITY, MISSOURI, November 9, 1915.

Central Oklahoma

Down here in the Southeastern part of Oklahoma, where cotten grows, and crops are varied, we have been given evidence of the productiveness of this country under favorable conditions, such as there have been this year. We are hopeful for the sake of many poor people that the droughts that have been so prevalent in late years have now ceased, at least for some time to come. Here, as elsewhere, the struggle for existence continues, in some instances practically resolving itself into the Darwinian theory of the "survival of the fittest."

This finds the writer preaching in the town of Fitzhugh, which is the forensic battle ground, where there have been two debates held between the Christians and Latter Day Saints; the first one held was about five years ago, when Elder W. M.

Aylor met Elder Chism, and again last fall Elder W. E. Peak met Elder Witcher. From all I can learn, while these people are still very bitter towards us, they have had all they want of debates, as the usual thing has happened, and proven disastrous to their cause.

Previous to coming to this place I held a very successful two-weeks' meeting eight miles southwest of Ada, in the Lightning Ridge Schoolhouse, where I organized the few faithful Saints of that vicinity into a Sunday school, also ordained Brother Herbert C. Backus to the office of priest, and Brother William F. Page to that of deacon. Both men are of sterling quality, and will prove efficient workmen if they will continue humble and faithful to him who has called them. Two were baptized, a Mr. John Crabtree and his wife, who are also a credit to the cause.

This conference year so far has proven an unusually busy one. I have performed labor very satisfactory to myself, and I trust to all others, in the following places: Bartlesville, Vera, Holdenville, Shawnee, Oklahoma City, Witcher, Ripley, Mounds, Bristow, Sperry, Skiatook, and in the oil fields near Cleveland, also in the city of Tulsa, where for three weeks we enjoyed splendid liberty in presenting the gospel truths; and one evening for two hours and a half I made a reply to the Utah elders, following this effort up with a lengthy article that we were enabled to get in the Tulsa World, and the Tulsa Democrat, two widely circulated papers, showing the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah church.

Our appreciation and thanks are due our heavenly Father for the bestowal of his assistance by way of the outpouring of his blessed Spirit that has given so much encouragement in all our work, and in him only we hope to be victorious in the end.

There are so many calls for preaching that it is a little perplexing to know where to go first. The work in this district is moving towards higher planes. A number are seeing the necessity of complying with the law in paying their tithes, and it is pleasing to our heavenly Father that all, rich and poor, should become obedient to this as well as all other commandments. Shall it be said of Saints, as it was said of the Pharisees by Christ, For ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

The fall weather has been ideal, but now we are having a little cold snap.

Everywhere I have been treated with the utmost kindness by all, and my appreciation is extended to everyone who has so nobly assisted us in our work.

As president of the Central Oklahoma District, I would be pleased to hear from every elder and priest not under branch appointment, with a view to have them try and make new openings, and I am sure all the missionaries will assist them all they can. Mail sent to my home address, 1517 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri, will be forwarded.

May God bless his Israel everywhere. Ever praying and working for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOSEPH ARBER.

FITZHUGH, OKLAHOMA, November 15, 1915.

Oklahoma

A delightfully pleasant cool summer has yielded a bountiful harvest; too much rain for the wheat, but the corn and other crops are excellent.

The work of the Lord is onward in many places in the State, though some seem to be sleeping and very indifferent. The harvest is great and the laborers few. Three of the missionary force have left the field, making the burden much heavier on the few who remain.

Our work at Tulsa and near-by towns seems a very inviting field since our meeting there one year ago. We have had "strong men" there who have stood by us with their means and influence, such men as Robinson and James, also Adamson, Lancaster and others. Brother W. P. Robinson is now located there with his family to look after the work.

The writer opened a good new point about thirty miles west of Tulsa in the oil fields, resulting in eight baptisms and many interested.

The effort at the State Fair to advertise our work and make some money to build our first church in the capital city, resulted in a net gain of about five hundred dollars for eight days' work in our booth, serving regular meals and cold drinks.

The Indians are on the move during the summer months, making it difficult to hold regular meetings. However, we have about twenty baptisms to report among them, and five more ready for the water. Brethren Cook and Taylor visit the various camps and talk the gospel and preach occasionally. We hope to build our first church among them soon near Kingfisher.

Our three reunions were held at Eagle City, Piedmont, and near Terlton. Too much rain, and too few people were so much in evidence at Piedmont that it nearly spoiled the meeting, but at the other two places we had fine meetings.

We need volunteers, not for Germany nor the allies, but for the work of the Lord, not sinners, but Saints, who will work, rendering willing service, by their means and influence. If we get the ready response we should the work will go forward as it should.

Your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

Des Moines

NOTES AND OBSERVATIONS

The work in the Des Moines District is onward. Reports from every branch except one were received at the Nevada conference October 11 and 12, all showing more or less activity. New churches at Boone and Rhodes are being erected and will soon be ready for occupancy. The Nevada and Perry Saints have made some timely improvements on their church buildings, adding comfort and convenience. Isolated Saints are making noble efforts to get the truth before their neighbors.

There are wonderful opportunities at the door of every Latter Day Saint, and the possibilities are great. Everywhere men and women are hungering for the truth. The sham and shallow religion of the shouting hallelujah sort that catches so many in its delusive drag-net does not give satisfaction. They can not deliver the goods. The substitute for the bread of heaven only increases the hunger. The promised water of life is no more than a delusive mirage. Once the poor victim awakes he finds it is all a nightmare.

From my limited observation, the spiritual condition of the district is good, the Saints generally being active, and little or no friction being manifest. Branch officers, for the most part, are alert and have matters well in hand, ready to repulse the enemy with a little effort. The district authorities, too, are on the watchtower, and can scent danger afar off. With a well organized defense guard, and wide-awake watchmen, the enemy has considerably less opportunity for making attack of any consequence.

The missionary department is considerably behind, there being but two of us in active field service at present, outside the city of Des Moines, with more calls for labor than we can possibly answer. Brother D. T. Williams and the writer have worked together most of the season, but are laboring separately at present, to meet the pressing demands for preaching.

After the Nevada conference we went to Montour, Tama County, and began a meeting in a schoolhouse two miles out, staying with (it ought to be brother) Felt Kennell and his good wife, Mary. She says she is ready to give up her religion any time for something better; because if it is any better than this it is "awfully good." Felt, the brother of "Sol," is a good-natured "half brother," who makes the missionary feel at home, and if any one says anything against the church he can make his resentment felt. Ask Roth, Christy, or Reiste.

Brother Williams was shortly called to Perry, leaving the writer to continue the effort alone. We had a good attendance. Some excellent people became interested, and one woman requested baptism. At this juncture Satan began to rage and she was hindered, one of her sons threatening to shoot her if she was baptized. If I had a brother who would make such a threat against his mother I would put him under peace bonds or in jail until he learned that the right to rule belonged to the mother and not to the son. However, it is usually a good omen when Satan rages in such a fashion, and this boy, like many others, may see the error of his way and repent.

Another young man accompanied his mother to the meetings, manifesting a proper regard for her feelings, whether he was interested or not. What a wonderful contrast between the two boys! One was influenced by the rabble, the kind that crucified the Christ, and actuated Saul of Tarsus. The other was impelled by a loving respect for his mother, regardless of sentiment or popular prejudice. He will be a man among men, honored and respected by all. The young man who will honor and respect the feelings of his mother will seldom go astray, and will number among his friends the best people of the community. The other fellow often has an undesirable career.

I have noted with interest the action of the Ministerial Association of Kansas City. The doings of that body are not all on the surface. I speak advisedly. The rumblings of distant thunder, though the clouds may be below the horizon, indicate an approaching storm. The Lord's vineyard has been devastated by storm more than once, and we have been warned and warned. There is only one thing that will subject the Saints to the dangers of another catastrophe, and that is a reckless disregard for the counsels of God. We have been admonished time after time to separate ourselves from worldly influences, and God has said he would spare none that remained in Babylon. He has also declared that the pleasures of the world will not enrich the soul. Yet many of us continue to feast on them to our spiritual undoing. When will we heed the admonition so often given to "come up higher?"

I am not opposed to the use of pictures, moving or otherwise, for educational purposes; but moving pictures, or anything else, used solely for the purpose of gratifying an appetite for pleasure is detrimental to spiritual development and should be avoided. The modern picture show appeals to the carnal nature, and to be carnally minded, we are told, is "death." Not will be, but is death—death already. We may hypnotize ourselves with the delusion that we can keep it under "proper control." But the ulcer, with its tentacles penetrating the vitals of the body, will break out at intervals with its sickening putrescence, blighting the bloom of spiritual life with the touch of its deadly virus. As a matter of fact, they are already under "control." Every blood and thunder film in use has the approval of some one or more of the numerous army of censors. The censorship rises to the level of the moral sensibilities of the censor, and no higher. And none of them are in a position to set the standard high enough for Latter Day Saints.

A meritorious feature of Des Moines District gospel work is a fund known as the "Church Literature Extension Fund." This fund, in the hands of the bishop's agent, is maintained by the voluntary contributions of branches and individuals, and is used solely for the purpose of placing the church literature in the hands of Saints who are "cold" and indifferent, or poor, and outsiders who might be interested in our work. If every district in the church had such a fund, and it requires but little effort to maintain it, the subscription to the church papers would be quickly doubled, and many who now sit in darkness would be enlightened by the rays of gospel hope. We often meet strangers in our travels who manifest an interest, and a desire to know more about us. This fund will send a preacher to that home fifty-two times a year, and afford an opportunity to thousands of Saints to bear testimony from various parts of the world. It affords every one an opportunity to push, boost, and do.

I came to Clear Creek yesterday, the 8th, and will begin meetings to-night. My stay here will necessarily be short, as I am soon to meet my former opponent in debate at Brown-ing, Illinois. This fellow, Roberts, has been flaying "Mormons" for some time, but it is beginning to dawn on some who have put up the cash that they are losing more "Camp-bell skins" than they are getting "Mormon hides." But so long as he can find some who are willing to pay the price he will continue to follow his trade. We have nothing to fear from him. His reputation as a debater is bigger than his ability.

I almost forgot to mention that I spent five weeks in the Eastern Iowa District with Brother L. G. Holloway. He, with the use of Brother Fred Clark's Ford car, had made an opening in a union church building eleven miles distant. We made the trip to and fro a few times until it was no longer necessary, friends being made to the cause, and we having invitations abundant to "stop." The result of that effort was four baptisms, all adults, and others near the kingdom. Thanks to the little Ford.

Right there I was "converted." Some day I hope to have a car for gospel work. Why not? A Christian minister told me that one of his brethren gave five cars to traveling ministers last year. If one man will give five cars to propagate a fragment of the truth, what ought some Latter Day Saint do for the spread of the gospel in its fullness? Now, you stay-at-homes who are driving nice cars, don't be surprised if we come at you soon for a liberal donation. Here is an opportunity to "divide up," and the missionary will not be the sole beneficiary.

I will not relate my first experience at the wheel. L. G. may do that. I will say, however, that it will not happen again.

Hopefully in the conflict,

E. E. LONG.

News from Branches

Burlington, Iowa

Thursday, October 14, Bishop E. L. Kelley came through Burlington, and stayed over with Brother Williams, speaking for us at the Thursday evening meeting.

The following Sunday, October 17, Brother Williams was called to New London to preach a funeral sermon, and Brother Ed Schweers, branch priest, occupied the morning hour.

Sunday, October 24, Bishop George P. Lambert was in Burlington, speaking morning and evening. In the afternoon, Brother Williams baptized two, Sister Marie Kunz, and her niece, Ruth Kunz, a little girl of nine.

Friday, October 29, Brother L. G. Holloway, of Lamoni, Iowa, came through just in time to attend our Religio, and favored us with a short talk on the "Harvest time," showing that he had not forgotten his boyhood days by interweaving some Halloween reminiscences.

The following Sunday we were all glad to listen to Brother Williams again, after his two weeks' "vacation."

Sunday, November 7, was a busy day, and thoroughly enjoyable, to auxiliary workers in particular. Brother G. R. Wells came in Saturday afternoon on his way home from Canada and Michigan, and arrangements had been made to devote Sunday to auxiliary work, with his assistance. He spoke with his usual stirring intensity Sunday morning, on "Efficiency," and at an afternoon session on "Getting acquainted with our own boys and girls." After this talk opportunity was given for discussion and questions, and some helpful points were brought out.

The attendance at Sunday school exceeded our enrollment, and among the visitors we were glad to have with us Brother W. H. Thomas, superintendent of the Rock Creek School. A new feature which is proving of considerable interest is a sand box which our "beginner" teacher is trying in her curtained corner, with marked success. We believe, too, that there is an increased class interest as a result of a chart showing the relative standing of the classes from week to week.

An oyster supper given by the men's organized Religio class November 10, is reported as having been quite successful, the proceeds of which, we understand, will go toward church improvement.

CORRESPONDENT.

Saint Louis, Missouri

Thanksgiving time has again come, and while we give thanks daily for our many blessings, at this time when we consider the abundance of God's love he has poured out upon us during the entire year, our hearts are filled with gratitude for all he has bestowed upon us.

We have received excellent instruction since last report, and we trust we may retain the same, and grow and be the means of helping others see the beauty of this glorious work. Our pastor, Brother G. S. Trowbridge, is an untiring worker, and good results will surely follow. Brother Christy has been laboring in the district recently, returning to Saint Louis when practicable to preach to us on Sundays. Our district president and bishop's agent, Brother Russell Archibald, has also been out on church duties the past six Sundays. Brethren Paxton and W. A. Smith are working hard for the Master's cause, which we know they love well.

The morning of November 14 Brother Christy inducted into the kingdom three precious souls for the Master, Sisters Elvina Wagoner and Ruth Morgan, and Brother Albert Lee Cooke. It is always impressive when a man of God asks the candidate just about to be immersed if she or he is willing to take the name of Christ and keep his commandments. These thus promising were confirmed at the prayer service by Brethren Christy and Archibald.

The Sunday school and Religio are doing very nicely. The interest of the young seems especially improved. The man's class of the Sunday school is coming into prominence. This class is organized and holds regular meetings for benefits and improvements of Christian service. Their prayer meetings are reported as being very encouraging and uplifting. It is good to see so large a band as they are, unitedly working in so noble a cause.

The Religio has been having interesting and instructive programs, the lessons being beneficial and enjoyed. Thus our young are well looked after, and the present preparation will develop into a grand future.

For all these blessings and opportunities we are thankful.

Your sister in Christ,

2637 Greer Avenue.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

AGENTS' NOTICE

To the Saints of Spokane District; Greeting: "The needy shall not always be forgotten: The expectation of the poor shall not perish forever" (Psalm 9:18). This year is nearing the end, our books will close December 30. I wish to thank all who have honored the temporal law this year and request that they and others send in their portion, so that the elders' families can be supplied.

Is your faith in God and his work sufficient to move you to obedience? "Faith without works is dead." Is your name written in the tithe book for the amount due your Creator this year? All will be rewarded in the day of judgment according to their works. Let us make up our minds to pay a tenth of our increase to the Lord, so we can reasonably expect his blessings. "I, the Lord, am honored when you do what I say." Do you believe it? If so, your duty is clear.

Would you rather have all that comes into your hands and have no promise from the Lord, or pay one tenth and have all the promises God has made to his people fulfilled? It takes effort and diligence on our part. This is a day of sacrifice, the Lord says: "Gather my Saints together unto me, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice" (Psalm 50:5).

We must work out our salvation according to the pattern, not in some other way. Saints of God, let us wake up (if asleep) to our privileges and duties; we are no better than others unless we do better. Real Saints must prove themselves and make reasonable effort to do what the law says.

Sometimes we cannot see just how things are coming out, so we wait. Some have waited too long—like the foolish virgins. Let us have faith in God and his promises, as suggested by the above illustration, recorded by Malachi.

W. W. FORDHAM.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven Street.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are asked for Alphonse Milotte, of Kansas City, Missouri, who is reported suffering with softening of the brain.

L. S. Tipton, of Kountz, Texas, who has been in ill health for a year and a half, helpless a large part of the time, requests the prayers of the Saints.

Conference Notices

Spokane, December 11 and 12, Saints' chapel, Spokane, Washington, 10 a. m. the 11th. Have branch and priesthood reports and other matters in secretary's hands week previous. Spokane Sunday school meets day previous. W. W. Fordham, secretary.

Convention Notices

Spokane Sunday school, December 10, Spokane, Washington. Let reports be sent in time and an effort be made to insure good attendance. W. W. Wood, secretary, 127 South Regal Street, Spokane, Washington.

To Presidents in Mission Number 5

I have sent out new application blanks to each minister in charge, and request these to be used in our work this year.

Please see that all missionaries and applicants fill in as fully as possible. If any have failed to receive the roll of blanks, notify undersigned at once, and I will forward roll.

JOHN W. RUSHTON,

Minister in charge, Mission Number 5.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1522 West Short Street, November 15, 1915.

Addresses

December "St. Nicholas"

December St. Nicholas, it is announced, will be altogether a Christmas number. The seasonable features will include an Arthur Rackham frontispiece in colors; a special cover design by Will Bradley; a Christmas play, "Mr. S. Claus's predicament," which children will be able to act for themselves; "Anna Belle's Christmas eve," a story by Josephine Scribner Gates, in which Anna Belle interviews a Christmas fairy and discovers just what the holiday means and how to observe it; "The spirit of Christmas," a story by Dora H. Hooker, which tells how old Mr. Grouch was cured of his bad temper; "The little fir tree," a Hans Andersen-esque parable by Carolyn Wells; "The fate of the Christmas pie," a rollicking ballad by Ellen Manly with pictures in color by Reginald B. Birch. Other favorite illustrators who will contribute special Christmas illustrations are Maurice L. Bower, C. Clyde Squires, C. M. Relyea, and Fanny Y. Cory.

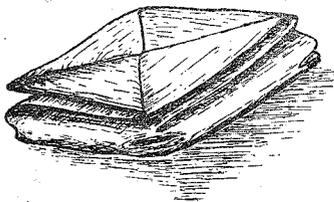

These Christmas features are, it is said, to occupy nearly half the number.

December "Cartoons Magazine"

A survey of the entire field of world politics, from President Wilson's engagement to the German drive through Serbia, is presented through the eyes of the cartoonists in the December Cartoons Magazine. Subjects treated editorially and in cartoon include Wall Street's speculation in "War brides"; President Wilson's demand for a "line-up": Britain's cabinet crisis; the Weehawken bomb plot; the Balkan situation and its meaning; the shooting of Miss Cavell; the defense program of Uncle Sam; the Armenian massacres; the race for the Golden Horn; Carranza's recognition, and Russia's newly-given lease on life. Erik Sjoestedt of Paris writes intimately of some of the French war painters—George Scott, J. Simont, Lucien Jonas, and others—who are recording for future generations the heroism of the "Poilus."

DON'T WAIT

Until the last minute to buy your Christmas Presents

Now is the time to be getting them and your Christmas shopping will not be finished until you get one or more of my genuine leather folding pocket books. The New Serial

"JOE PINE"

The first installment of the new story by this title appeared in the November number of the Autumn Leaves. Other chapters will appear in each issue.

You can get this story by subscribing now. The December number will be sent free, and it will include a synopsis of the opening chapters. You'll need to do it right away.

AN UNUSUAL STORY

A real Latter Day Saint story in every way, written by one who knows how to portray human emotions and activities, which he does with his usual skill. The author is Elbert A. Smith.

There is real heart interest in the story. You'll feel acquainted with the characters and intensely interested in what they do and say. And there is unsurpassed humor—the kind that is akin to pathos. Every chapter, every paragraph, is written with a purpose. Nowhere is there a drag.

There are many other interesting stories, articles and illustrations coming—altogether too much to miss. Thirteen issues for only one dollar.

Peter Bosten

By John Preston

As up-to-date a novel, in point of plot, action and characterization, as you can buy; yet it means more to YOU than any story of the day.

L. D. S. characters, taken from real life. You will identify them.

Nothing on the SURFACE to indicate that it IS Latter Day Saint.

A wonderful vehicle for spreading the SPIRIT of the gospel.

An unequaled Christmas gift for your OUTSIDER friends.

Ignores the Utah question.

You can get the book with or without the Herald Office imprint.

John Preston is the author of several successful novels. This is his best work. It was written by order of the Herald Office, and involves many characters known to you personally.

PETER BOSTEN is an agnostic. He can not believe in God. Even the gospel in its fullness appears illogical to him. Yet he feels a strange potentiality surrounding it.

He meets and falls in love with a "church" girl. But a gulf opens between them as time passes. He can not believe, and she can not understand his unbelief.

Years full of events slip by. You are reminded of your own soul-striving—especially in the days of impetuous, rebellious, passionate youth.

Is the agnostic finally converted? Read the story and see. And in the reading you will get great pleasure and profit—maybe a little pain as well.

If you are a lover of real life and worth-while fiction, you will enjoy "Peter Bosten," as you have probably never enjoyed a work of fiction before.

To you, the story will be real and alive. To your friends it will be a thought-breeding thing of mystery. They will ask: "Whence comes the spirit of this unique book?"

Ready for mailing, we expect, by December 15, at latest. 350-400 pages. $1.00, postpaid.

FATHERS' DAY

(An address by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, October 31, 1915, reported by Winsome Smith.)

Fathers, this is our day. Mother has bouquets thrown at her for three hundred and sixty-four days in the year; but this is the day when we get what is coming to us.

The libraries are full of tributes that have been paid to mother. I have a volume in my own library containing several hundred pages of poems that have been written to the memory of mother.

SPELLING THE WORD "FATHER"

These tributes are deserved; and yet I am reminded that it takes just as many letters to spell the word father as it does to spell the word mother. It takes just as many letters to spell "papa" as it does "mama," that is, the way we spell mama to-day. It even takes just as many letters to spell "paw" as it does to spell "maw."

This may be simply a fancy, but it suggests to me the thought that a certain equality should exist between father and mother. I am reminded also, that while it takes just as many letters of the alphabet to spell the word father as it does mother, after the first two letters the words are identical.

And this perhaps is typical of the life of the two individuals who preside over the home—the father and the mother. The first years of their lives have been spent individually and separately, but there comes a time when they are united in the holy bonds of wedlock and of parenthood, and after that they are as one, in harmony with the divine edict that was issued in the beginning, "Therefore, shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh."

And so while mother is the sweetest, the most tender word in the English language, father shares it in common with mother after the first two letters. Two thirds of the name is held in common.

A DIVINELY APPOINTED COPARTNERSHIP

This suggests to my mind the idea that there is a divinely appointed copartnership between father and mother. According to the old tradition, and in harmony with the word of God, the father is considered the head of the family. The way in which it is stated is not obnoxious if we take the definition the Apostle Paul gives us. He says, "The husband is the head of the wife [or of the family] even as Christ is the head of the church." It is the mission of Christ to be the protector, the companion, the lover, the partner of the church, and in that sense the father is the head of the family,—not the "boss."

Whenever you find a home where the father has abdicated his lawful place, and has compelled or permitted the wife to assume the head of affairs and perform not only her own proper functions but his also,—you will find that home in nearly every instance a failure, and in some instances it is absolutely ruined.

WHAT IS A RENEGADE FATHER WORTH?

What do you think of a father who will sit down and fail to magnify his calling and office? What would such a father be worth? I think perhaps his worth is set out in a dream that I was reading not long ago. One good sister awoke in the middle of the night, weeping violently, and her husband said, "What is the matter?"

"Why," she said, "I had a terrible dream. I dreamed that I was passing by a store where they had husbands for sale. There were some very fine ones that could be bought for five thousand dollars; and there were some fairly nice ones that could be purchased as low as five hundred dollars."

"Well," he said, "I don't see anything in that to cry about. Were there any there that looked like me?"

She began to weep again, and said, "That is just where the trouble is. There were hundreds of them just like you. They were all done up in bunches like asparagus and sold for twenty-five cents a dozen."

WOULD YOU SELL OUT TO ROCKEFELLER?

I want to talk to you a few minutes this morning, first about the joys of fatherhood; and second, about the responsibilities of fatherhood.

A real father is worth a great deal, and it is worth a great deal to be a father. I leave that to the vote of any father in the assembly. You know very well that though you may count yourself poor, John D. Rockefeller has not money enough to buy the little hand that nestles so confidently in your own; or if your children have grown to manhood and womanhood, you know that J. P. Morgan has not resources enough to buy that thrill of pride and joy that you feel in your grown sons and daughters, and in the pleasure that you have in planning the great things that they are to accomplish.

A LITTLE CHILD SHOULD LEAD THEM

It is worth a great deal to be a father. But Paul tells us that in the last days some people will be without "natural affection." I was in Kansas City last week in one of the largest and most aristocratic of the department stores; and I noticed a young couple who came in to do some shopping. They had the cutest little poodle dog you ever saw. While the woman did the shopping the man held the little dog in his arms like a baby. The more I looked at the man the more sorry I felt for the dog.

Now, let me tell you, right around the corner and down the street from that store is a divorce court, and that couple was going in that direction when I saw them last. It was never written, "A little dog shall lead them."

MURDERED UNDER WING OF STORK

There are some homes, it is true, that are denied children, where children would be very welcome. We ought not to add to the sorrow of any such home by any thoughtless jibe or remark of any kind. There are homes, on the other hand, where children are not wanted,—where they are murdered while yet they hide under the wings of the stork.

Do you know where I think such people ought to go? I will just give you a hint and you may draw your own conclusions. They ought to go where they won't have what they don't like. They do not like children. There are no children in hell. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," Jesus said.

I think such a home as that, if we may call it a home ought to be taken up and carried across the water and set down squarely between the English and German firing lines while they are shooting from both directions, so it would be blown to purgatory in about ten minutes or less.

JOY AKIN TO PAIN

While there is much joy connected with fatherhood, it is also closely associated with pain, anxiety, and care. The most exquisite joys of life are nearly always closely associated with tears and pain. Possibly there are fathers here to-day who have walked a thousand miles in the middle of the night entertaining their youngest hopeful. I can sympathize with them, because my youngest had a passion for personally conducted travel of that kind.

Yet this physical weariness and exhaustion is as nothing compared with the mental and spiritual anxiety that we feel when we are watching over the beds of little children when they are sick; and it is as nothing at all in comparison with the mental anxiety and suffering that we feel when we think about the possibility that they may sometime go wrong as they grow older.

That brings us to the responsibility of fatherhood. We can not have its joy and escape its responsibility.

It may be that after you have done all that you can to raise up your boy or your girl in the way that he or she should go, and have warned them and taught them and prayed over them, they will go wrong. But if they do, while your sorrow may be great, it will not be tinged with that bitterest sorrow that we call remorse,—regret for duties that we have failed to perform.

IF LOVE HAD FAILED

The responsibility of fatherhood includes that of love. Love is the great factor that is responsible for the very existence of the human race. The human creature comes into this world absolutely helpless. Unless he receives attention he will die within two or three hours. He has nothing at all with which to buy his own way,—only the coin of love that he brings with him. But as Jesus Christ said in speaking to those who were presently to go over on the other side, "In my Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you," so when these little child spirits come here to this world, he sends the spirit of love before them to prepare a place for them.

Think back over the line of your ancestors, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, away back yonder; mother, grandm<sup>o</sup>ther, great-grandmother, back to the very beginning of time. If at a single link in that great chain, love had failed, you would not be here to-day. That is an impressive thought. You would not be here, I would not be here, if love had failed us at a single point in that long chain reaching back to the very beginning. The first duty of fathers to their children is that they shall give them the love on which the existence of the race depends.

FIGHTING THE CHILDREN'S ENEMIES

This means that they will provide for them. The father is the breadwinner; the mother is the bread-maker. It means that the father shall provide the things that they need to eat and to wear, a home to shelter them, and an education; and that he shall protect them against their enemies. In the past the father was expected to go out and fight all enemies, to protect the children against lions, and tigers, and savages. Generally we do not have those things nowadays to contend against.

But still there are enemies that threaten their welfare, and it is the duty of the father to go out and contend against them by his franchise, and by his personal influence; that the saloon, the brothel, and the gambling den, and all the lesser evils that would destroy your children and mine may be cast out of the community.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION

It is the duty and the responsibility of a father that he do all these things in defense of his children and his neighbor's children. But his duty and responsibility does not end there. In Doctrine and Covenants 68:4, we read:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

The statement is made that "the parents" shall do these things. It devolves on the father, jointly with the mother, that he shall teach the children to be religious. Here we find ourselves working at the very foundation of citizenship. Paul says, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Sir Oliver Lodge tells us that religion is rooted in human nature and in the very necessity of things, and thus we find that the Bible and the greatest modern scientist are one in this thought, that religion is at the base of all good citizenship. So it properly devolves on the father that he shall teach his children the principles of religion, and that he shall teach them to pray.

Too often the father shirks this responsibility. He leaves the religious act for the wife, and so the Apostle Paul, in writing to the brethren and sisters of his day, advised them that they be not unequally yoked together with the unbeliever. When the agnostic father, the indifferent father, is yoked up with a believing and faithful wife, they are unequally yoked together. He thinks that she can pull the whole load with that yoke, and possibly drag him by the neck into the kingdom of heaven,—if the yoke holds out, and the neck holds out.

A CHIP OFF THE OLD BLOCK

It devolves on the father, then, equally with the mother, to teach the children morals, as well as de-

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

DESTRUCTIVE TORNADO.—Thirteen persons are reported killed and twenty injured by a tornado sweeping over territory near Hot Springs, Arkansas, the 25th.

FIRST GOVERNMENT TRAIN.—The first train over the Government railroad in Alaska ran on November 9 between Seward and a point called Mile Twenty-Nine.

FOR NEUTRAL CONFERENCE.—Henry Ford and other noted Americans are arranging to visit Europe in an endeavor to bring about a conference of neutral nations to attempt to end the war and establish a permanent peace.

INCREASE RATES.—The Missouri State Public Utilities Commission has allowed an increase of railroad passenger rates to two and one half cents a mile, and an average freight rate increase of five per cent, to become operative January 1.

ANOTHER LOAN.—In addition to the late American loan to the allies, a loan to Great Britain has been arranged by American bankers. This loan is for $50,000,000, bears four and one half per cent interest, runs six months, and is secured by British bonds amounting to $55,000,000.

LAW UNCONSTITUTIONAL.—In the case of a grocer prosecuted for selling goods on Sunday, the Sunday closing law of Oregon has by the district court at Portland, been declared unconstitutional. Forbidding to sell on the Lord's Day was by the court held to be religious discrimination.

AMERICAN FEDERATION ACTION.—The American Federation of Labor on November 17 passed a resolution for an American marine, to be manned by American seamen; on the 16th resolutions urging citizenship for Porto Ricans; and declaring against a large standing army, but urging "a citizen soldiery democratically organized and controlled, so as to prevent either the small standing army or the larger supplements and its units to be used for or by any special privileged class, either at home or abroad."

TO AID RED CROSS.—President Wilson in a Thanksgiving appeal to Americans, urged contributions to the American Red Cross for relief of suffering in the war zone. The American war relief fund contributed thus far is in round numbers $1,600,000, of which only $5,000 remains available. Four hundred American surgeons, nurses and sanitarians have gone to Europe. That this good work of relief may continue to a people sorely in need, President Wilson asks for contributions to be forwarded "to any State or local treasurer of the Red Cross, or to the National headquarters at Washington, District of Columbia."

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa, whose army continues to weaken from losses and desertions, is reported defeated at Alamito, Sonora, with heavy losses. An increasing stream of returning Mexican refugees indicates confidence in the new government. Eighty persons are reported killed by bandits dynamiting a train between Tampico and Monterey, the 23d. United States warships and marines have been ordered to the west coast of Mexico to protect Americans and other foreigners against Indians and roving Mexican bandits. Mexican soldiers crossing the international border near Nogales, Arizona, the 25th, fired on American soldiers, who returned the fire, and according to report killed a number of Mexicans. A skirmish occurred between Villa troopers and United States soldiers at Nogales the 26th, in which one American was killed and two wounded, twenty Mexicans being reported killed. The trouble was started by a drunken Villa soldier. The Villa forces have withdrawn from Sonora and Obregon has marched into the city.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Austro-German and Bulgarian forces report further gains over Serbia on the north and east respectively. It is reported that the Serbians are being crowded over the international line to Montenegrin territory. The Serbian capital has been removed to Scutari, Albania. The Bulgarians in an attempt to take Monastir have been defeated by the Serbs, suffering a retreat with heavy losses. The French also report gains in southern Serbia. The Bulgarians are endeavoring against increasing allied forces to hold ground gained. Allied forces are still being landed at Salonika. Report from Berlin is that the way to Turkey is open; that munitions are being shipped via rail to the Danube, down that river to Bulgarian railway terminals and then on to Constantinople, and that foodstuffs are being shipped by the same route from Bulgaria to Germany. An Austro-German attack on the Russians in Galicia has failed. The Russians report gains near Riga. Heavy cannonading continues on the western front, unaccompanied by any extensive engagement of infantry. The Italians have been conducting a campaign of unusual vigor against Austria, and report important gains. The allies have continued their offensive at the Dardanelles, where they have met with successes. Rumor is that Italian troops are landing on Albanian soil to join the Serbs, and that a large Russian army is preparing for a Balkan campaign. The French and British report successes in the German colony of Kamerun, West Africa, a large part of which is in the possession of the allies. Twenty million bushels of wheat in Canadian elevators from Lake Superior to the Atlantic seaboard, has been commandeered by the government for shipment to the allies. The grain owners will be promptly remunerated. Earl Kitchener, representing England, and Denys Cochin, representing France, have been in conference with Greek authorities. Forecasts indicate that in reply to demands Greece will assure the allies that she will not disarm allied forces required to retreat for security to Greek territory, and that the allies may continue to use Greek railway and telegraph facilities. The allies are said to have assured Greece that territory occupied would be restored and justifiable indemnity paid.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

NEW CHURCH.—The Saints of Missouri Valley, Iowa, are to have a new church to replace the building they have heretofore worshiped in. The Omaha World-Herald for November 21 reports on this work as follows:

MISSOURI VALLEY, November 20.—Excavation work has begun at First and Huron streets for the erection of the Latter Day Saint church. The building will have a full basement and will be fifty by thirty-two feet.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS AT GALIEN.—The Galien (Michigan) Herald for November 12 contains a short but exceedingly favorable mention of the meetings recently held at that place by Elder O. R. Miller. These meetings were twenty-four in number, and according to the Herald were well attended, and many friends were made to the cause and to Elder Miller personally. The report states that the services were made attractive by special music each night, and that the methods employed by the preacher were successful in securing and holding the interest of the congregation.

FROM APOSTLE HANSON.—Under date of October 20 Brother Paul M. Hanson writes from Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, as follows:

Before leaving the islands I baptized seven in addition to the ones referred to in my letter to the HERALD. The prospects before the Australian mission are bright. Many things need looking after, however. As you have seen, I am now in Brisbane. Arrangements have been made for a debate to take place between Evangelist George Burns of the Church of Christ, and myself, in the Belmore Hall, Tarre, New South Wales, beginning November 15 and continuing six nights. Church propositions will be discussed. I am planning to be present at the dedication of the new church at Argents Hill, Sunday, October 24. The new church was dedicated at Johns River, September 12. A kind reception has everywhere been extended to us by the Saints, who are a generous-hearted people. The trip seems to have done Sister Hanson much good. I am well as usual.

Try to live such a life, so full of events and relationships, that the two great things, the power of Christ and the value of your brethren's souls, shall be tangible and certain to you, not subjects of speculation and belief, but realities, which you have seen and known; then sink the shell of personal experience, lest it should hamper the truth that you must utter, and let the truth go out as the shot goes, carrying the force gun behind.—Phillips Brooks.

votion,—that they shall “walk uprightly.” And I know of no way in which he can teach this so forcefully as by his example.

You will probably remember a story that one of our fathers told, I think he is in the audience to-day, at one of our preaching meetings. He went down to the Supply Store one evening, and while talking to the storekeeper he absent-mindedly helped himself to some raisins from a box. On the way home he became conscious that his little boy was tugging at his sleeve, and on being asked what he wanted, the little fellow said, “Father, how many did you get? I got this many.” He had a lot of them.

You may have heard about the father who was walking across a field, and he happened to look around and saw his little boy stepping as far as his little legs would reach. He said, “What are you doing?” And the little boy answered, “Papa, I am stepping in your tracks.” They are bound to step in our tracks.

Nine times out of ten the boy is a chip off the old block, or, perhaps, sometimes, as the Frenchman said, “A chip off zee old blockhead.”

TEACHINGS THAT STICK LIKE A BUR

It devolves on us to teach our children not only by precept, but by example, and we will find that the work of the church, of the Sunday school, and the Religio are valuable helps along this line; but we should never forget that, after all, the home is the place where we have the greatest influence.

I have heard some people reason along this line: They say, “My boys are bound to do so and so away from home, so I let them do it at home. I would rather they would do it at home than to go away from home to do it.”

That always seemed to me to be a false line of reasoning. Sometime my boy may go away from home to smoke cigarettes, but he will never smoke them at home with my consent or if I can prevent it. Sometime my boy may go away from home to gamble, but he will never gamble at home with my consent; if he does it at all it will be over my protest. Sometime my boy may go away from home to drink, but he will never drink at home with my permission.

He will never be allowed to feel that the roof that shelters and sanctifies my family altar will also sanctify the cigarette, the poker deck, and the beer bottle.

And if he goes away and does these things I hope that my teaching may have so impressed his mind that he will be uneasy and unhappy all the time he does it, and that his conscience will gnaw at him when he does that thing until finally he will turn away from it and come back to the home and say,

“Father, your teaching stuck in my mind like a bur and I could not get rid of it.”

That is the sentiment of the second verse of the song we sang at opening:

And when my wayward feet
Seek worldly pleasures fleet
His counsel grave I meet Afar or near.

A JOLLY GOOD TIME

I do not mean by this that we should rob life of all joy and pleasure. One good father said to me, “If boys need recreation, let them saw wood.” You need not tell me that sawing wood is recreation. I have tried it. The wood should be sawed, it is true, but after the wood is all sawed what are we going to do? We should oppose evil practices and pleasures, but recognize legitimate and proper recreation.

There is no earthly reason why a Christian father and a Christian mother, together with their Christian sons and daughters, in a Christian home, should not have a jolly good time; so that all the days of their lives the children will look back to that home, not looking back to the card table, the theater, the dance hall, the beer bottle, but back to the happy home of godly parents who were their chums and where they freely enjoyed life.

IN PARTNERSHIP WITH DEITY

Now, fathers, this is our day, and in conclusion I want to impress on your minds the thought that parenthood is partnership with God: “Our Father which art in heaven,” our father which is on earth. The two are in partnership, working for the salvation of the souls that are developing here below.

I leave with you a text for this occasion, as Paul has it in the third chapter of the first Corinthian letter: “For we are laborers together with God.”

REFLECTIONS--NUMBER 1

BY W. E. PEAK

CONCERNING MISSIONARIES AND PROCEDURE

As the years roll by leaving their effects on the nations of the earth and mankind in general, we as a church find new problems for solution, new difficulties to contend with, and new obstacles to surmount.

This new condition into which we have been whirled by rapid movements of “the hastening time,” calls for wise actions by the members and elders of the church, to enable us to adapt ourselves to our environments.

These problems are dismissed by some with the statement that God will bring all things about in their proper order, and when the time comes for us to understand them, he will make it plain. So he will. God raises large crops of corn, builds railroads, and constructs wonderful machines, but he does it all with human agents, which requires much hard work and study by man.

The problems that confronted our forefathers in the church were wisely met, and we feel thankful for the degree of success that crowned their efforts. If we do as well as they did, it will require as much prayerful study, willing sacrifice and unselfish action by us as was displayed by them.

This epoch introduced by the installation of a new president finds the church further developed and in a much better condition to carry the work on to completion than when our late president was ordained. Not that we have greater men than those that gathered around and valiantly supported our late president, but by occupying the vantage ground gained by them we enjoy opportunities that they did not have.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY

This problem is in process of solution. Many of our people have had and some still have an exaggerated idea of inspiration. In fact, it almost becomes superstition. They have imagined that all an elder has to do is to pray, then go into the pulpit, open his mouth, and behold, great truths will be presented, clothed with wonderful eloquence, producing such sublime oratory that he will "put to flight the armies of the aliens."

But when this beautiful theory has been tested it has failed to produce the desired results. The poor elder has stood before the congregation stuttering, and repeating till he gave up in despair and sat down in confusion and disgrace. Then the dear brother has been comforted and cheered by being told that he failed because he was not sufficiently humble, or that he lacked in faith.

Some sectarians have said, "All that is needed to preach the gospel is a large brain and a good education." This is the extreme on one side of the truth, while some of our people have gone to the extreme on the other side. One is as far from the truth as the other, only the sectarian idea is the more successful in practice.

Those who were not personally acquainted with our late president, nor with those who labored with him from an early date, should read their books and articles that have been published. It will be noted that they were not only fine reasoners, but they were students and had spent years in studying their subjects.

The condition of society has changed during the last twenty-five years, so that now it is not only necessary for our leading men to be educated, but it is necessary for the average missionary to be educated also.

Not long ago a young sister, who had married a high-school teacher, that did not belong to the church, came to Independence after being away from the Saints for some time. She was firm in the faith and well educated. She had obtained her education by a determined effort under difficult conditions, and made by few. She was very anxious to hear a "good gospel sermon." One of our leading officials preached that morning. His sermon was illogical, full of grammatical mistakes and mispronounced words. The sister was disappointed, and about the only comment she made was, "I am glad my husband did not hear it."

It is sometimes said that the young who get a little education are too finical, and there is no use to pay any attention to them. But when we consider the amount of money and labor required to make a convert, we see that it will pay just as well to make an effort to save our own children, even if they are educated, as it does to convert strangers. We will never succeed in converting the educated nor holding our intelligent children without an educated ministry.

A series of meetings was held in a college town, not long ago. Arrangements were made for another one of our leading officials to preach two sermons, during these meetings. A young sister, that was completing her university course, with a bachelor of arts degree, invited several of her college friends to attend these two meetings and hear one of our leading ministers. They came and were favorably impressed, both by the ability of the elder and the doctrine he preached, and classed him among the best speakers they had ever heard.

This brother may not have understood the principles of the gospel any better than the first one referred to, but he had made a special effort to qualify himself to present the principles according to the accepted rules of logic and oratory. His words were correctly pronounced and his sentences were properly formulated, which enabled him to present the beauty of the gospel in such a way that it was clearly seen by those educated young ladies. Had his discourse been marred by mispronounced words and grammatical mistakes quite a different impression would have been made.

Among the Brighamites, criticism has been quite effectually silenced by referring to apostolic precedent. If an apostle had done a certain thing it was sufficient authority to justify the act. If his arguments were illogical or ungrammatical, it was quite evident that the Lord wanted the gospel so presented or else he would not have called a man who preached that way. But the Reorganization does not stand for such traditions.

We are told "if they [the ministers] be found transgressors, or idle servants, ye shall not uphold them" (Doctrine and Covenants 118:4).

An "idle servant" is one who fails to prepare himself to do the work required, as well as one who is prepared and refuses to make the effort necessary to do it. In either case it is not simply the privilege, but the duty of the church to refuse to "uphold him." This applies to all officers in the church.

Is it safe to believe that the time is coming when this principle will be enforced more than it has ever been in the past?

HOW CAN WE EDUCATE OUR MINISTRY?

Joseph Smith and many of the early elders of the church were uneducated when called to the ministry, but the vast majority of them soon became better educated than the average minister of other churches, while Joseph Smith and several of the leading elders became accomplished scholars.

They established a school in Kirtland and taught the elders the rudiments of grammar, oratory, science, etc. So the industrious ones among them could continue their studies in their ministry, till they became accomplished scholars.

This procedure is what enabled the early elders to meet with such phenomenal successes. We can and must follow their example. A six weeks' summer term for the elders with efficient teachers will enable the average missionary who has not a proper understanding of grammar to get started in that study, so he can soon complete it. A few weeks instructions in composition, rhetoric, spelling, pronunciation, logic, homiletics, etc., with the association of each other would do us all good.

The fact is staring us in the face that as a whole the ministry is not up to the required standard, and an effort has already been made by the Quorum of Twelve to weed out the less competent ministers in the field; but the object of the church should be to make them competent, so that all who are willing to make the sacrifices of a missionary may be retained profitably by the church. This can be done, if we can adopt the proper method of teaching.

Can we learn and adopt that method? It may be just as profitable for us to discuss this question at the General Conferences, as "the atonement" or the "Bishop's books."

Some churches have adopted a course of study for their ministers and have demanded that each pass a required examination. Shall we have some method of examination which will require certain known qualifications?

The Lord demands that the missionaries of the church have certain qualifications, and these qualifications are to be recognized as the following indicates: "The presidents of seventy are instructed to select from the several quorums of elders such as are qualified and in a condition to take upon them the office of seventy" (Doctrine and Covenants 120:10).

These seventy are to be the permanent missionaries of the church. Their duty is "to travel continually" (Doctrine and Covenants 107:44). They must be "qualified," and in "a condition" to do this work before they are selected to be seventies.

The standard of qualification is higher now than ever before. Once a man who used tobacco was eligible for the Quorum of Twelve or seventy, but not now. This illustrates the onward march of progress, and our ministry must keep up with the vanguard.

The responsibility of selecting the permanent missionaries of the church is placed on "the presidents of seventy," and no quorum or officer in the church has the right to say these thus selected shall not be the missionaries. They are to labor under "the direction of the Twelve, . . . in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations," in a similar way as "the Twelve" are to labor "under the direction of the presidency of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 104:12, 13). The Twelve shall "send, as provided in the law, of the seventy" (Doctrine and Covenants 125:12).

RELEASING SEVENTIES IN GOOD STANDING

It is possible for a seventy to fail to improve by not studying so that he is unable to do the work that is now demanded of a missionary, or he may become weakened, from disease or old age. It makes but little difference as to the cause of his inability, it is of no benefit to the seventy or the church to keep him in the field, when he can not do the work required.

Those who weaken from age are to be superannuated, and the church has decided what officers shall perform this important work. No one should object to a release for this cause. I began my missionary work when twenty years old, and have now spent thirty years in the field, and am willing to be superannuated any time.

While we cannot object to the principle of superannuation, yet the method by which it is done may be questioned. If the presidents of seventy are to decide when a man is "qualified" to enter the Quorum of Seventy and become a permanent missionary, why not give them the right to have something to say when it is supposed that he has become disqualified to do the work of a missionary? There is some food here for thought at least.

It has for years been the custom of the Twelve to release seventies from the missionary field without consulting the Quorum of Seventy. Just when this practice began or by what authority, we do not know.

The Quorum of Seventy is equal to the Quorum of Twelve (Doctrine and Covenants 104:11). The Twelve cannot place men in the Quorum of Seventy nor release them. This is done by the Seventy, through the directions of the presidents of seventy; and when an elder becomes a seventy he is a missionary, and the Twelve have no more right to remove him from the missionary force, than from the Quorum of Seventy.

When the seventy becomes disqualified for the active ministry, he is disqualified for membership in the quorum. The supposed facts of his disqualification should be presented to the presidents of seventy, and if they find them sufficient to justify his release they should so recommend to the quorums of seventy in joint session. And the brother should then be released, or superannuated from the quorum. This work belongs to the seventy, and should be performed by them.

OFFICERS IN GOOD STANDING HAVE BEEN RELEASED

When a man is ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood he holds the priesthood during his life, unless he forfeits it by transgression. But not so with the officer in this priesthood. He is only to occupy in the office to which he is ordained as long as it is "wise" for him to so occupy. It is no more of a disgrace to be removed from a general office to which one has been ordained, than from one to which he has been elected. We should always use the best material we have, and when it has been "wise" to remove men from the First Presidency or the Quorum of Twelve it has been done, through the same source by which these men were placed in those quorums.

The Quorum of Seventy is equal to the Quorum of Twelve or First Presidency, and is one of the three "regulating," "presiding councils," and forms a part of the highest tribunal in the church, from which there can be no appeal (Doctrine and Covenants 104:11; 126:10).

Then as men in good standing are only removed from the First Presidency and Twelve by the directions of the president of the church, by whose directions they were placed in these quorums, it is evident that seventies in good standing should only be released from missionary appointment and their quorum by the direction of the council of seven presidents of seventy, approved by the Seventy in joint council.

The presiding bishop and patriarch are called by the president of the church and ordained according to his recommendation. In case of transgression these officers would be tried before the high council (Doctrine and Covenants 126:11; 122:10; 68:3).

This places these men before the one through whom they were called, for trial, and he would be the one to pass or pronounce the sentence, and if it should be decided to release the one on trial from office, the president would so recommend.

Should the bishop become incompetent from age or other causes, so the finances of the church would be in danger, this fact would be determined by the "joint council" of the "presidency, twelve and seventy," "and their action and determination would govern" (Doctrine and Covenants 126:10).

In this case the president of the church would sign the decision or action of this "joint council," and should it be decided to remove the presiding bishop from his office, the directions to do so would come to the church over the signature of the president, through whom the bishop was placed in his office. Why not apply the same principle to the releasing of seventy from missionary appointment?

Common consent rules in the church, but if the majority decides to proceed contrary to the law, the results will always be bad.

In September, 1830, the Lord said, "Joseph shall be appointed to preside over the conference by the voice of it" (Doctrine and Covenants 27:4). It is true they could have voted against him and selected another, but their refusal to proceed according to law would have been disastrous.

CHARGES PRESENTED TO PROPER TRIBUNALS

If you should collect the various accusations of official mistakes made against the missionaries or minister in charge in any field you may visit, you would have quite a number before you visited all the members. Suppose some brother would espouse the cause of the accusers and formulate a resolution, so these accusations could be discussed publicly in the General Conference. During this discussion the mistakes or supposed mistakes of the brother would be presented in their worst form. How many times could this take place till the apostle or seventy would lose his influence in the church?

We do not allow such an unwise and unjust method of procedure. If an effort of that kind should be attempted, the resolution would either be declared out of order or else be referred to the proper tribunal. The brother would be considered innocent and his policies proper, till he was convicted after a fair trial before the proper authority.

It is considered slander to condemn an officer's procedure till it has been condemned after a fair trial according to the law. No officer or member is to be tried for personal transgressions nor official incompetency in a public meeting or general conference. Neither should any complaint or accusation be made or discussed publicly.

If some brother disagrees with the policies of a minister in charge, or with his methods of carrying his policies into effect, we should not accept his objections as being valid till they are tested and sustained by the proper authority.

So with the presiding bishop. If some one does not agree with some of the bishop's policies, or his methods of doing business, who is to decide whether the bishop is wrong, or the brother that is making the complaint?

This question has been answered by the Lord, some time ago. He says: "The joint council of the presidency, twelve and seventy" (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10) is to decide.

This "joint council" will not sit to hear the complaints made against the bishop in open conference, but by themselves, and all complaints and objections made against the presiding bishop in a General Conference should be referred at once to the president of the church, who has the right to call this council. It always injures the church to weaken the confidence of the members in the general officers.

We may have a new presiding bishop some day, and let us be prepared to treat him according to the law. If his policies are wrong or dangerous, condemn them "by the joint council" that God has appointed for that purpose. Then we will know how to proceed. But if the accusations and complaints made against the bishop are simply the whims of a fault-finder, let the "joint council" or the president that has the right to call the council, decide for us. Then we will be doing as the Lord said, and we have the promise, if we do that, the "Lord is bound"; if not, we have no promise.

IS JESUS CHRIST THE SAVIOR OF MAN?

The hope of the Christian world has lain in the fact of their faith in the divine sonship of Jesus Christ, and that through him and him only is salvation to come unto the children of men. "Eternal life" is a gift of God, and it is also by the "grace" of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ the gift is given; hence he has been the first and central thought of all Christian teachings.

There seems to be an exception to the above belief by one demonination claiming to be Christian, or at least a close analysis of their philosophy forces such a conclusion—the "Mormon" church of Utah.

Personally, the majority of its members believe Jesus Christ to be the Savior of the world, but the writings of some of its leading exponents force another conclusion, as will be shown, making a double standard of belief for those who wish to uphold such philosophies, and still retain their belief that Christ is the Savior of the world.

The books I shall use in proving the above position are: Rational Theology as Taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by John A. Widtsoe, published for the use of the Melchisedec Priesthood by the General Priesthood Committee 1915; Mormon Doctrine of Deity, by Roberts; Scientific Aspects of Mormonism, by Nelson, (Mr. Nelson was professor of English in the Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, when he wrote this book;) and The Articles of Faith and Jesus the Christ, by J. E. Talmage.

In these books I find the teaching that man had at least two preexistent estates; and that in each he was a distinct conscious entity, possessing the power of choice to act.

Thus it is shown that prior to the placing of man upon the earth, how long before we do not know, Christ and Satan, together with the host of the spirit-children of God existed as intelligent individuals, possessing power and opportunity to choose the course they would pursue and the leaders whom they would follow and obey.—Talmage.

Our doctrine is that "Intelligences are begotten spirits"; which spirits are in form like men, and are really substance.—Roberts.

In addition to his power to learn and his consciousness of his own existence, the spiritual personality possessed, from the beginning, . . . an independent and individual will.—Widtsoe.

It is also taught that, before man was born in the spirit-body, God had begotten for him, he existed eternally in that first preexistent estate, coeternal with God, an intelligent, conscious self-willed person.

All that is really clear to the understanding is that man has existed from the beginning; and that, from the beginning, he has possessed distinct individuality impossible of confusion with any other individuality among the hosts of intelligent beings. . . . From the beginning, the ego of man has been a conscious being, saying to itself, "This is I; that is not I."—Widtsoe.

There is that in man, according to our doctrine, which is not created at all; there is in him an "ego"—a "spirit" uncreated, never made, a self-existent entity, eternal as God himself.—Roberts.

In the first preexistent estate, according to these men's writings, man was coequal with God in all ways, and started from the same point in the evolution of life; hence the teachings of a progressive God:

We believe in a God who is himself progressive, whose majesty is intelligence; whose perfection consists in eternal advancement.—Talmage.

And I can conclude this chapter in no fitter way than to refer to what I regard as the sublimest utterance of modern times, if not of all times; the dominant note of Mormonism, and an epitome of its philosophy. This is the utterance: As man is God once was: as God is man may become.—Nelson.

God the Father, the supreme God, has gone through every phase of the Great Plan, which we are working out.—Widtsoe.

We are also informed that the reason why God is so far in advance of us, and why he is God and we are only man, is that he exercised his will more vigorously in the acceptance of law, when all started in the evolution of life:

It is clear also that, as with every other being, the progress of God began with the exercise of his will. In the beginning,—God undoubtedly exercised his will vigorously and thus gained great experience of the forces lying about him. . . . We may be certain that, through self-effort, the inherent and innate powers of God have been developed to a Godlike degree. Thus he has become God.—Widtsoe.

It is fairly evident from what has been said why man is man. Man is subject to eternal laws, and in the far off beginning he must have exercised his will more slowly [than God.—B. L. M.] or not at all; perhaps, even, as laws came to him he ignored or opposed them.—Widtsoe.

For the same reason, it must also be concluded that the mothers of our spirit bodies got far ahead of us and Christ; since we are told we had such mothers:

In accordance with the gospel philosophy there are males and females in heaven. Since we have a Father who is our God, we must also have a mother, who possesses the attributes of Godhood.—Widtsoe.

From the above teachings it must be concluded that we were equal with God and those mothers, in every way; as we existed coeternal with them before they began in eternal progression. This conclusion being true, the questions naturally arise, What was the cause of God and those mothers exercising their will more vigorously than we? What was the incentive? Experience teaches us that when the will is exercised in the acceptance of divine law, there is an incentive, which is based upon the promises of a higher or superior being, but how could it have been so with them as there was no higher? Or was it by chance that God, and those mothers in heaven, launched forth and have outdistanced their brethren in the evolution of life?

We are told by Mr. Widtsoe that we are "of the same race with God"; also, that the only way we can progress to the Godlike condition, is to obey "a system of laws, representing eternal realities." Inasmuch then as God and those mothers are progressive, and of the same race as we, they would have need of obeying the same laws equally with man; how else could they progress? But whence came the laws God obeyed, as there was none before or greater than he? Did the law exist before there was a law-giver?

Seeing what a dilemma the doctrine of a progressive God leads to, Mr. Nelson attempts to surmount the difficulty by claiming an infinite line of gods. That position would also imply an infinite line of mothers; since the God of this earth has gone through every phase of life that we are going through he must have had a mother also. He writes:

In a previous part of this discussion it was pointed out that the Mormon aphorism as to the sequential relations of man and God implies the possibility of an infinite number of divine beings, related to each other by sequence, and reigning coordinately (at least in time if not in authority) as gods in the universe. . . . For the moment we assume a first God, we immediately ask, what God enabled this being to attain the rank of Godhood.

But to take the position, as the writers I have quoted do, that man preexisted coeternally with God, and that God is progressive, overthrows Mr. Nelson's infinite line of gods; for it makes no difference how many millions of gods have come down in succession, was not man there, in the beginning, a conscious, volitional entity, and coequal in all ways with this infinite line of gods and mothers? To confirm this thought I repeat:

There is that in man, according to our doctrine, which is not created at all; there is in him an "ego"—a spirit uncreated, never made, a self-existent entity, eternal of God himself.—Roberts.

To deny there was a first God is to deny the psychic evolution of man, or that man has progressed in the evolution of life, since man was equal with the gods before progression started. Such doctrines as are taught, demand that one God start first. Having found that there must be a first God, to start in "eternal progress," and of course this implies a first mother too, our questions: "What is the cause of God being so far ahead of us?" "What was the incentive?" are no nearer solved than before.

Mr. Widtsoe must be wrong in teaching that the reason God is so far in advance is that he exercised his will vigorously in the acceptance of law, for where did the law come from? That would imply a law before there was a lawgiver, which is something that can not be comprehended by the human mind, and is contrary to all known facts.

Seeing that these questions can not be answered by affirming that the first God progressed by obeying the laws of one before him, as there was none, there is but one solution to this matter, if the doctrine "As man is God once was: as God is man may become" is to be sustained, and that is by the theory of evolution. Such conclusion is inevitable. It has been said that Mr. Darwin revolutionized the scientific world with the doctrine he brought forth; but by a close study of the doctrines of the Utah Mormon Church, it will be discovered that they were in the psychic field with the evolutionary theory, by teaching a progressive God, before Mr. Darwin.

It being conceded that there must be a first God, and according to the Mormon teachings he is progressive, then inasmuch as there was no one before him to direct the course he was to pursue, he must have progressed according to the "law of adaptation"; no other conclusion can be drawn, unless it is accepted that God is as the Scriptures state: "Even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God"; which surely overthrows the progressive-God theory.

If the progressive-God doctrine is true, it must also be concluded that the first God and the first woman attained the high state of perfection they are now in, independent of all other beings. They had no God to give them laws to guide them; they had no Christ to atone for their sins. Thus according to the Mormon teachings, it can be seen that they have passed through every phase of life we have to pass through, without the assistance of any God or Christ; and since we are told "we are of the same race with God," and that we preexisted coeternal and coequal with him in the beginning, then what need have we of a Jesus Christ to atone for our sins?

Can not we do the same as the first God and woman? Why do we need eternal life given us if God could obtain it without the help of a Savior? Can not we? We must conclude that we do not need Jesus Christ as a Savior, if the doctrine that man preexisted coeternally with God, a conscious entity, and that God is progressive, is true.

Thus we have found that if the above doctrines are the teachings of the Utah Mormon church, and they seem to be, then they are not a Christian denomination. If Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world, then God is not a progressive God, neither did man preexist in the way the above doctrines teach; and if the doctrine, "As man is God once was," and that man preexisted as the above writings imply, then there is nothing to the doctrine that Jesus Christ is the Savior of mankind. Both doctrines can not be consistently taught by the same church. Which doctrine will the "Mormon" people cast to one side as false?

Believing such doctrines, it can be seen why Brigham Young made the statements he did. Of Adam he said:

He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do. Every man upon the earth, professing Christians or nonprofessing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later.

And of Christ he said: "He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost" (Millennial Star, vol. 15).

And to prove that Christ is looked upon in the same light to-day, I quote what Joseph F. Smith, jr., says:

In connection with this subject, Reorganites also claim that Brigham Young went astray and apostatized because that he declared that Jesus Christ was not begotten of the Holy Ghost. Reorganites claim he was begotten of the Holy Ghost. . . . If the Reorganites are correct then Jesus is not the only Begotten Son of the Father, but the Son of the Holy Ghost.—Origin of the Reorganized Church.

We are also informed that it was very necessary for us to inhabit the bodies that were begotten for us, in order to progress; first the spirit body, and then the fleshly body here upon earth:

It was of first importance that the intelligent beings aiming at the conquest of the universe, should learn to understand, thoroughly the properties of universal matter, in all of its forms. As nearly as can be learned, the efforts of man were first devoted to the education in the properties of spirit matter. We were begotten spirits by God, who thus became our Father, and we are his sons and daughters, . . . Only when education in this division of the universe was completed were we permitted to enter the next estate [take an earthly body—B. L. M.]—Widdsoe.

This uncreated being, though negatively omnipotent, that is able to resist the coercion of all other forces combined, was nevertheless devoid, perhaps, of all positive power. . . . By positive power, I mean the ability to react upon spirit or upon matter so as to create what one may invent. . . . But if it already had power, what motive could it have in thus becoming into relations of subordination to God? There could be no reason. The ego was therefore a powerless being, in point of execution, whatever it may have been in point of conception. . . . Probably the first important occasion presented to the ego for saying, "I will," was that of being born into a spiritual tabernacle (Nelson).

But since we are told that God is progressive and that we were coequal with him before he started in eternal progression, it overthrows the theory that we need bodies to become a god. Did not God and the first woman attain Godhood without any bodies? Who was there to beget bodies for them? If they could attain to the rank of gods without a body, can not we? Then since we all started in the evolution of life, from the same starting place and at the same time, and seeing that God and the first mother have attained perfection without any bodies, we must conclude that in the place of the body being a blessing to us it is a curse, and we are slaves. Is that why we are not gods to-day?

We also discover that in the place of God being the loving, merciful Father, as is taught, he and the first mother are tyrants, as they by some unknown cause got ahead of the rest of us, and by taking advantage of our ignorance, they devised plans whereby we were subjected to them, and told us that if we wanted to progress we would have to inhabit spirit-bodies they would beget for us, and that if we did not obey the laws they gave us we would be eternally damned; and have thus made us slaves. What else could we conclude if the doctrines that God is progressive and man preexisted with him are to be believed?

Seeing the absurdity involved in teaching that the God of the Bible is progressive, there is but the one alternative, that I mentioned above, if this doctrine is to be taught. If the doctrine is true that God, in the beginning, was the same as man, which implies he had no body; and that he now has a body, as is taught, there can be but the one answer as to how he attained it; that is, by the "law of adaptation." Whether it was by slight modifications, or radical changes is immaterial. If the progressive-God doctrine must be taught, it would be the most reasonable to teach that God progressed, by the way of the lower animals of creation, or as Mr. Darwin taught.

It can now be seen why President Joseph F. Smith stated at the Salt Lake conference, March, 1905, that "to say that God had given to me a revelation upon some new doctrine, or theory, or principle, or precept, or anything to be written, to be observed, or handed down as a guide to the church, would have been untrue."—Origin of the Reorganized Church, page 131, by Joseph F. Smith, jr. What else could be expected with this progressive-God belief? For a God who gives revelations is a God of miracles, which can not be a progressive God.

Moroni states:

For do we not read that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and in him there is no variableness neither shadow of changing. And now if ye have imagined up unto yourselves a God who doth vary, and in him there is shadow of changing, then have ye imagined up unto yourselves a God who is not a God of miracles.—Book of Mormon.

Those who want Jesus Christ as their Savior should cast aside false doctrines; and denounce all false teachers; take the Bible and Book of Mormon as their guide; and put not their trust in the arm of flesh, but in the true and living God, who is from "everlasting to everlasting," and in Jesus Christ the Savior of the world.

"OFFER THINE OBLATIONS"

Webster defines oblations: first, "anything offered in worship or sacred service"; second, "in the early Christian days, a gift or contribution for the expenses of the eucharist or for the support of the clergy and the poor."

Surely, the cause or purpose for which the oblation is intended is a worthy one, and all the members of the church are admonished to offer or bring the same. In Doctrine and Covenants 59:2, we have the following:

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High. Nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord.

From the above we learn that we ought to offer our oblations (a gift or contribution) on this the Lord's Day. I believe it is the oblation the Savior had in mind when he said:

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matthew 5: 23, 24.

Our offering or partaking of the Lord's supper is not acceptable to the Lord unless we have done our part to become reconciled to our brother. If we partake of the bread and wine worthily, we shall receive spiritual strength; and one of the things necessary to be done is to offer our oblations. If we have the privilege but once a month or once every three months to partake of the emblems, we should not withhold our oblations, but remember, as the Lord says, that on this the Lord's Day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments. It is not so much the number of times we partake of the sacrament, but the spirit in which we do so. It may be on every Lord's Day, or on the first Sunday of every month. The statement is:

This cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come—1 Corinthians 11: 25, 26.

We may be able to have sufficient spiritual strength and partake of the Lord's supper once a month, or every three months, but if we only bring our oblations every time we partake of the sacraments, it is possible the needy will not be cared for; hence the wisdom of offering our oblations on this (every) Lord's Day. It becomes our duty when the Lord's Day comes to offer or give our oblation, whether we partake of the sacrament or not, for it is one of the means to bring into the hands of the Bishopric funds, by which the work of the Lord can be carried on, and the worthy poor cared for.

As early as 1833, in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10, the statement is made:

There is even now already in store sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the church (branches), who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.

That voice has spoken not only to bring in your tithes, but your offerings (oblations). Much is said about the temporal needs of the Saints; fault is found because no steps are taken by the church to bring about industries that will give employment to the willing worker and give inheritances to the worthy poor. Nearly ninety years have come and gone and not much done, we are told, to bring about the redemption of Zion, and that the reason there has not been more done is the same as stated in 1833 (Doctrine and Covenants 98, 10). Just stop and think what a blessing along the financial lines it would be if we all, eighty thousand members, would observe the command; yes, the command, for the language is: "But remember that on this, the Lord's Day, thou shalt offer thine oblation" (gift).

This year 1915, if all would set aside the small sum of five cents per week as their oblation, two dollars and sixty cents per head, the grand total for the eighty thousand members, would be two hundred and eight thousand dollars. Add this to the Christmas offering and tithing, besides the many consecrations, and the entire debt would be paid and land bought, and soon many would get employment in Zion and the regions around about and secure their inheritances.

While meditating, on the first day of last May, upon this law of oblations (prior to partaking of the sacrament), I was made to see, as never before, that little heed was given to that law, and that as a church, in all lands, we ought to give more earnest heed to the same. For one, I have resolved to prepare during the week, so that on the Lord's Day I shall be able to do my part, and honor the admonition to offer my oblation. I hope that we will get away from the custom that is so general (in Sunday collections) of dropping in a penny. Spend a little less during the week for candy, gum, or at the picture shows, and see if we cannot enlarge the offerings. I do not think it commendable for a family of five to bring to the house of prayer one cent each, and spend fifty cents per week on the things mentioned.

"On this, the Lord's Day, thou shalt offer thine oblation" (gift). If all the membership were to observe this law and pay five cents once a month, there would come into the hands of the Bishopric about fifty thousand dollars annually, and if we offer our oblations on every Lord's Day, as I understand is our duty, the eighty thousand members at five cents per head, would pay in the grand total of two hundred and eight thousand dollars every year. Suppose we as a church would double our gift, there would be four hundred and sixteen thousand dollars. This can be done if we will add this to the tithes and consecrations: The interest and debt of the church would be paid and sufficient left to support the worthy poor and the families of the missionaries.

As a church we have neglected to observe the law pertaining to oblations, and we should see to it that from this time forth, we shall do our part. Stop and think the amount of money that is spent annually for that which we can get along without and would be better off, such as chewing gum, candy, picture shows; and just lay aside half of what you spent last year along this line and others, and it will be easy to bring our oblations.

It is true that there is a heavy drain for means to support the ministry, their families, the old people, the Children's Home, the Sanitarium, and the College. Are they not all worthy of our support? Can we withdraw our hand from any? No. And if, as a church in every land we bring our oblation, all of the above will be well cared for, and the tithes and consecration will bring homes to hundreds every year. For one, I have resolved that as for me and mine, while we have no tithing to pay or surplus consecration to give, we shall bring our oblation on every Lord's Day.

While I cannot, with the authority of a bishop, call upon the members in my field to fall in line and do their duty along financial lines, I can, as a father, invite your consideration of and support to the above, and shall pray that all may feel the need of doing their part, so that it will be said of us:

I was hungered, ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and in prison and ye visited me: . . . inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least my brethren, ye have done it unto me.—Matthew 25: 35-40.

Brothers and sisters, we have the privilege to be worthy among the righteous, therefore, let us be wise!

WILLIAM LEWIS.

CONFERENCE DIVIDES EPISCOPALIANS

Echoes of dramatic speech which preceded the resignation of five dignitaries of the Protestant Episcopal Church from its Board of Missions recently still rings through the religious world.

Last Sunday the Reverend Doctor McKim of Washington took issue with the head of the diocese of Washington. Bishop Harding, who was one of the quintette who withdrew because they believed that the board, by joining with other Protestant bodies in a missionary conference at the Isthmus of Panama, would affront the Roman Catholics.

That significant action opens anew the great subject of church unity and brings again to public notice the question: "Is the Episcopalian Church drifting to Rome?"

Occasionally a group of the ritualistic wing of the Protestant Episcopal Church do unite with the See of Saint Peter, although they take with them few communicants.

The issue which was brought up before the Board of Missions was one which accentuated the basic differences between the Anglican communion and the other branches of the Protestant faiths, and also showed that however fixed many regard the gulf between the Catholics and the Episcopalian, there is still hope it may yet be closed. . . .

In arranging thus to take to Panama religious work for the upbuilding of Latin America the projectors of this great enterprise endeavored to meet every objection. In this they have not been successful, for the High Church wing of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which contains many members of the party which would bring about a union of all communions and is now in close touch with the Greek Church, objected most strenuously to the Board of Missions sending any delegates to the conference. This party held that the priority of the work of the Catholics in the Latin-American countries should be recognized in every sense and that, by holding a conference with Protestant bodies who were much more separated from the Roman Catholics than the Anglican communion, a breach was being widened.

How the proposal to have a congress affected the Roman Catholics is shown by the pastoral letter of the Bishop of Panama in which he forbids all his followers, on the penalty of committing a mortal sin, from having anything to do with the congress. He declares that the sending of the conference was nothing less than an insult to the Church of Rome, which in all its work had done much for the civilization of the countries of South America. It is also said that the President of Panama, on the advice of the Catholic bishop, canceled the agreement to let the conference have the use of the National Theater at Panama, although the minister from that country in Washington had especially commended the leaders of this great Pan-Protestant movement.

The withdrawal of Bishops Weller, Harding and Williams, the Reverend Doctor Manning, Rector of Trinity Church in this city, and Dean Delaney, who has recently come to New York to accept an appointment as a member of the staff of the Church of Saint Mary the Virgin, was the natural sequence of the refusal of the Board of Missions to rescind its action.

The board had decided to send delegates, and the meeting of October 26, intended to appoint the necessary representatives when it met the determined opposition of High Church and Church Unity. The board finally decided to send delegates, but with the express understanding that they were merely to confer and not to commit the board or the church to any policy.

Even this was considered by the opponents of the movement as taking part in an ill-advised congress. In the view of the Right Reverend Reginald H. Weller, Bishop of Fond du Lac, the position of the board was a violation of an expressed wish of the House of Bishops and amounted to the arraying of the Episcopalians under a banner of hostility to the largest church in Christendom.

The objection of the minority in the board was not to send missionaries to the South American countries, for there are already five Episcopal dioceses in Latin-American countries, but in consorting with religious bodies which are more or less radically opposed to the Roman Catholics.

The High Church party believes that it can agree with the Roman Catholics on some things, but that at present there is serious conflict with other religious bodies and the followers of the See of Saint Peter.

Bishop Weller, on his recent visit to New York, in a talk with a reporter for The New York Times, said that the Episcopal Church stood midway between the Roman Catholics and the Protestant churches, and as such it was the hope of all who believed in church unity that it would be the means of drawing Christendom more closely together.

"The Episcopal Church," said he, "has its orders, its ritual, its traditions which the Catholics can understand. The Catholics do not understand the other Protestant bodies. I do not believe that in my life and perhaps not in the life of any person now living, church unity will come, but it is my belief that some day there will be a united Christendom. It has been the position of the Anglican communion, that is of the Church of England, that it should not send missionaries to any other than heathen lands. It is a tactless and an inconsiderate act for us to send delegates to a conference or congress which proceeds on the assumption that the peoples of South America are in darkness and thereby offend the Roman Catholic authorities."

It is the position of a conservative element in the Episcopal Church that the field is very large in the Latin-American countries and that immigration from other lands has sent there many Protestants who should receive spiritual care.

Bishop Greer maintained before the Board of Missions that in Catholic countries the Catholic Church itself was stimulated and helped by the Protestant effort in the field.

Dean Grosvenor, of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine, has publicly expressed the same view and has told of his wish that it might be possible for the Roman Catholics to cooperate with the conference.

The great question of how the divided forces of Christendom may be united still remains unanswered.—New York Times.

GERMANY'S RACE PROBLEM

We read that Germany, with her customary promptness, has taken up the problem of a childless state as a result of the war. Sociologists say that for every man killed in the trenches there will be one less baby born in the next five years. If this average holds good for the whole of Europe it is even greater in Germany, where the birth rate is the highest of any country engaged in the war.

At a meeting of prominent political leaders and scientists held recently in Berlin the Society for a Population Policy was formed. The following plans for encouraging the birth rate were proposed:

Premiums for motherhood, premiums to increase the willingness to marry, the reduction of the legal age for marriage, the removal of all bureaucratic legal obstacles to marriage, measures to make possible marriage for those who feel they cannot marry, state premiums for large families on one side, heavy taxation of bachelors, old maids, childless couples and those who adhere to the one or two children system, on the other.

This is by no means a new propaganda in Germany, although the measures suggested are much more stringent, due to the present emergency. For years it has been impossible to pick up a periodical in Germany that did not contain an article with statistics on the falling birth rate and suggesting how it might be arrested. As a result we find that prior to the war the natural birth rate was 14.8 per cent higher than the death rate, whereas in Austro-Hungary it was 11.8 per cent higher, in the British Isles 9.5 per cent higher, and in France less than 1 per cent higher. . . .—The Des Moines (Iowa) Capital.

Sunday School Department

EDITED BY GOMER R. WELLS, LAMONI, IOWA

A Profitable Trip

Sometime last summer, the superintendent of Toronto, Ontario, District and his assistant thought their district should have a visit from the General Superintendent, and communicated with him about it. After some correspondence and some consultations it was agreed that we should go, the local district treasury bearing half the expense and the general association treasury the other half.

Thanks to our new reporting system from superintendents, our files showed that the neighboring district of London, just south, was to hold a convention a week later, and a similar agreement was made to be there. The third Ontario district, Chatham, reported no convention till February, 1916. As soon as their officers knew of our plans, they got busy and called a special meeting to which we were invited, thus making a chain of dates covering the whole of Ontario, and all agreeing to the same financial arrangement. This made it light on all concerned.

When in a mission, we consider ourselves laboring under the minister in charge of that field, with whom on this trip we found it a pleasure to labor for five weeks. He urged that we attend the conference of Eastern and Northern Michigan following those of Ontario, whereupon we corresponded with the superintendents of those districts who gladly extended an invitation to come, and were pleased to consider their districts as committed to the same financial arrangement. The superintendent of Eastern Michigan said he had never yet asked his Sunday school people for anything they did not grant. The way they responded proved it, for more than the half was raised, which, of course relieved our general treasury similarly as it relieves the church treasury when a missionary is provided with traveling, clothing and incidental expenses.

We wish we had time and space to detail our experiences and impressions in the three Ontario and two Michigan districts. We must say, though, that we have never enjoyed any kind of church work any more than we did this. Our general plan was to attend five district conventions, a week apart, holding institutes nearly every night with local school workers at intermediate points during the week. Upon request each district superintendent routed us so as to meet with the workers in places most in need of help, which with our office correspondence kept us busy all the time.

At all the conventions we met fair representations of the schools of each district. The attention and enthusiasm was all we could ask for and in some instances more than we expected. One handicap was in evidence,—the experience of every district that does not hold separate conventions, and that is the small attendance on Friday as compared with attendance on Saturday and Sunday when the time belongs to the conference. Whenever a district is strong enough to hold separate joint conventions, or a session in between conferences for institute work, good results have followed. It is delightful to have a good attendance all of Saturday and Sunday for auxiliary work.

Still we could not ask to be treated better than we were at the Eastern Michigan conference, where they had no convention but expect to hold a separate convention during the winter. Good opportunity was given to us to hold institute sessions on Saturday and Sunday.

We shall not soon forget our pleasant associations in the good work at Chatham, Thamesville, Bothwell, London, Toronto, Port Elgin, Clavering, Wiarton, Owen Sound, Saint Thomas, Glen Rae, Kimball, Port Huron, Sandusky, Saint Clair, Detroit, Flint, Boyne City, Grand Rapids, Battle Creek, west and south side in Chicago, and Burlington, where we finished with three meetings on "auxiliary Sunday," by mutual agreement between branch and auxiliary officers.

How Do They Do It?

We cannot disassociate Eastern Michigan from its indefatigable, irrepressible superintendent, who embarrassed us at several meetings by passing out lots of tablet paper, at the same time exhorting the workers to take copious notes of "the many good things they were going to hear." It is the easiest thing in the world to exhort thus when some one else is expected to fill the bill. We haven't forgiven him yet, though, we admit, it put us "on our metal." We were amazed when told by him of the standard of preparation their teachers in Detroit have agreed to apply to themselves. We hardly thought we would ever hear of any who would attempt it. We know you will be interested in it. Here it is, as near as we could get it while conversing on the train:

STANDARD FOR TEACHERS

Reading lesson over once .....	1
Studying lesson by paragraphs .....	1
Reviewing lesson and answering questions .....	2
Committing golden text .....	1
Attendance at school .....	4
Punctuality .....	1
Total .....	10

They have a list of substitute teachers who also study the lesson, but we did not have time to ask if they were expected to report on the standard same as the others. At roll call each regular teacher is expected, on honor, to report his or her grade according to the above standard. If it falls below seven (that right, Brother S.?) the teacher answers "unprepared," and a substitute takes the class for that Sunday. What the teacher does during the period, we did not learn.

Once a quarter the secretary prepares a report showing the average grade of each teacher for that time, also once a year. Thus they secure better teaching, better class interest and better taught pupils. Wonder how some such standard would work for the pupils—say those above primary classes?

The Organized Class

In our new blank for report of local superintendent to district superintendent, they are asked if they have any organized classes in the school; how many in each grade? are they a benefit to the school? if not, why?

Some of those having no organized classes seemed to fear that their schools might appear unprogressive, and have been making inquiries for information on the subject, expressing a desire to be up-to-date.

It is our duty to keep in touch with organized class work in the church, hence the queries. In some places they are a benefit, in others they are not. We want to know why. But we would not have any superintendent feel that his school is behind the times simply because he must say that he has no organized classes. He may have a live school notwithstanding that fact.

We do not speak of organized classes as a requirement. They are rather to be regarded as an opportunity with certain possibilities, where properly understood and utilized within proper bounds.

We do not like to see any school rush into this merely for fashion's sake. After one class organizes in a school or Religio, there is sometimes a clamor by every class for organization. Then is the time the movement needs guidance; it is the time to be cautious. For this reason we want to be in touch with what is being done.

We would prefer to see our girls' classes form Oriole Circles, of which we have more to say under another heading. But for those who will still want to organize in the usual way, we suggest the following draft of a simple constitution which might be adopted by a class of intermediate girls or boys. No class should attempt to work without some such statement as this. This was first written for the "I'll Try" class of Religio girls, while pastor of the Burlington Branch. If desired, class motto, class colors, and class yell may be inserted, after statement of "object." Some young people could not think of getting on without them.

CONSTITUTION FOR ORGANIZED CLASS

For boys or girls 13 to 16 years of age

1. Object.—(1) To increase our store of knowledge; (2) to build up our school with a larger and better class; (3) to promote sociability; (4) to deepen our devotional and spiritual life.

2. Name.—This class shall be called _____.

3. Officers.—The officers of this class shall consist of teacher, president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer, —their duties to be those usually understood.

4. Meetings.—This class shall meet in regular lesson periods in local Sunday school every week. Other meetings may be held as often as shall be determined by the majority, provided it be not oftener than (once a month or once in two weeks. Suggestive—G. R. W.)

5. Socials.—Class socials may be held, but not oftener than once in (three months. Other classes, branch, school, Religio, etc., might wish to hold socials—better be moderate.—G. R. W.)

6. Serving the School.—The membership of _____ class will consider it a Christian privilege to fit themselves to serve as substitute teachers, or as regular officers and teachers. No one shall lose membership in class on this account.

7. Activities.—(1) To study Sunday school lessons; (2) to take supplementary readings or study of any good subject; (3) to encourage members of the class to attend main church services, assisting in song service and music—especially in revival and missionary meetings; (4) holding special class meetings, such as socials, etc.; (5) putting into practice at every opportunity the good principles we learn in our Sunday school lessons. Note.—Our "activities" shall not interfere with our obligations to home, church, or Sunday school.

8. Reporting.—The president and secretary shall draw up a report of the class to be read and approved by the class once a year or oftener if asked for, the same to be presented to the superintendent for reading before the executive council or business meeting of the school.

9. Organizing.—The superintendent of the school shall first be consulted and permission granted for organization of the class. A copy of this constitution shall be furnished to him for approval by the executive council of the school. After this approval has been received, a vote of the majority of the class shall be considered as sufficient to make the constitution binding on the class. Thereafter, it is to be understood that new members shall read a copy of the constitution and agree to abide by it before being enrolled members of the class.

10. Amendments.—Any of these rules may be amended by a two thirds vote of the class, after a notice of one month shall have been given. Notice of such changes shall be reported to the superintendent by the secretary of the class.

Sister Bertha Graham, near Minot, North Dakota, has obtained good results in organizing a class called "The Swastika Girls," in a Presbyterian Sunday school. Swastika is the Lamanitish word for "good luck," and its sign may be seen in every Navaho blanket and moccasin, as well as in the products of other tribes. The Swastika Girls adopted for their colors: White (purity) and green (perseverance), which they interpret something like this: Purity in perseverance and perseverance in purity. Their motto is: "Climb, though the rocks be rugged." The main thought in their aim is, "Loyalty to God."

Our notes show that Sister Graham, their teacher, told about this class at the North Dakota reunion at Logan last summer. We would like to hear from others.

The Oriole Girls

In the day of judgment when you stand to give an account for the deeds done in the body, would you like to be confronted with the charge that you discouraged a movement to help the girls of the church to be better members, better daughters and housekeepers, healthier and better mothers and wives? No? Then do not discourage or oppose the organization of the Oriole Girls.

Would you like to have it charged that you were indifferent to an organization that was designed to bring about the above-mentioned objects? No? Then acquaint yourself with the Oriole Circle work.

No girls of your own? You're not selfish. You want to help the girls of others. Of course. What are earnest women of the church trying to do for our girls? You are interested. You can find out very easily by looking into the circle work of the Oriole Girls.

Fifteen cents will bring you a copy of their manual. Send to the superintendent of young ladies department of the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 707 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

The Oriole circle will give to your daughter a more Christlike, healthful, courteous, competent, self-reliant development than she otherwise could have by remaining outside its influence. She may have a model mother, capable of giving her every desired training, yet the Oriole circle will accentuate everything that parents, teacher, minister, doctor, nurse, economics, or athletics could possibly introduce into her life.

The Oriole circle puts a premium on ennobling service. It makes simple, wholesome, intellectual living indoors and outdoors more attractive, and the superficial life less attractive. Who could oppose a movement with such good purposes and results as that? Who? Not you, dear reader.

THE OBJECT

"The object of the Oriole Girls is to associate love of home and church with pleasure. It is an organization which will attract every girl whatever her life and opportunities may be. . . .

"In this organization, it is hoped there may be developed a great body of character builders, by showing that true service may be given in the social life; in the monotonous routine of home life, or the daily grind of business. It is designed to make happy hearts and cheerful givers, and loyal friends of every one."—Oriole Girls Book, p. 7.

Any girl eleven years of age or over may become a member, and each group of girls of from five to twenty, as near the same age as possible is called a "Circle."

There is nothing complicated about the organization. That fact commended it to the writer as soon as he studied the rules. A "monitor," who is the head of the circle, and a local superintendent of circles, elected by the girls, and a chairman and recorder appointed by the monitor, constitute the officers.

Monitors must be persons of mature judgment, "having ability and character to inspire the girls to high ideals." Here is a chance for good experienced mothers in Israel to become leaders of the girls of the community. Yes, and a chance for some one else.

ORGANIZED CLASS WORK

Teachers of girls in Sunday school or Religio, will you listen while we urge you to regard this Oriole work as your opportunity to enlist your girls in the best kind of team work?

Has there been talk of organizing the class? Call their attention to the Oriole Girls. Ask them to consider it, and if they are willing after you have given them an idea of its objects and work, proceed according to the simple rules laid down in their working manual to make an Oriole Circle of your class. It will then be a wheel within a wheel, to help roll on the latter-day work,—for be it remembered, the object is character building.

What better organized class work could you have than that which unites your girls in a circle which associates love of home and church with their pleasures? What better movement than that which makes of your girls a circle of builders—character builders?

There are three ranks in the Oriole circle: 1. First Rank Builder; 2. Second Rank Builder; 3. Songster. They work from the bottom up, beginning as "Songster." There are tests for each rank.

Their symbol is a spreading tree, which means service and beauty. A uniform has been adopted, to be made of brown khaki, similar to that of the Camp Fire Girls. The rank is indicated on the sleeve and the symbol on the pocket; but each circle may adopt its own special local symbol, similarly as an organized class may have its mottoes, etc.

The organized class might have its yell; the Oriole Girls have adopted the cheery, sweet call of the golden oriole as their signal. This signal is indicated by bars of music in the book above mentioned.

Why need we say more? Won't you mothers and teachers of girls' classes take this up instead of the organized class in the ordinary manner, and make it worth while?

But if you are not born of the Spirit; if you are not looking for something to build up character, and make better women of the girls, be fair to the new movement and don't touch it until your heart is consecrated to the service of God. If you know of such a woman whom you think would be a good monitor for an Oriole Circle, introduce this to her. If you are sure your heart is in the right place, why not you?

So be fair to the Oriole Girls' work and do not take hold of it half-heartedly. And the very same applies to organized class work of any kind. My reports from district superintendents show that organized classes do not amount to much, or have been a detriment when the object for which a class should organize was either lost sight of or was never sighted.

This is a day for earnest work along gospel lines. Let's get busy.

The Joy of Reporting

Occasionally we hear of some secretary who feels that reporting to conventions is an onerous task. Sometimes he gets this idea because the audience has seemed bored when he last made the effort.

Then there are some secretaries who make the report feature of the business session so interesting that no one cares to miss it.

After all, why shouldn't it be interesting to hear how the other schools are getting along? It should. The only difficulty is in presentation.

In reading reports from schools, do it as though it meant something—and it does. Some secretary has given his time to recording the items and getting them to you. You have no right to murder the only medium he has of telling other folks about his school.

Some of our most progressive districts print a tabulated list of the most important items, right along with the program of the convention. This is a very good plan and should be encouraged. If you would like some samples, say the word and we will send several.

But if that seems too expensive, use a chart or a blackboard, or both. Put on it the most important items from all the schools. Line up the columns so they may be easily read, then put it where everyone will be tempted to peruse and be edified.

Sometimes it is really necessary to read reports. When you do it, give the audience the most interesting items in your own words, commenting as you go along. Make comparisons and contrasts and inject such items of information as you have collected in your work as district secretary. Put some personality into it.

There are secretaries who start with the heading and read every word, clear to the bottom of the sheet, hardly leaving out the number and cost of the blank at the bottom. Don't. Your hearers don't care how the information looks to you; they want it so they can tell what happened. The mere blank is a lifeless thing, but the items may be made to breathe the life of the school from which it came. It is your duty and privilege to do that. It can be done. It is done.

Reports are important. In some cases—we hope not with many—they are the only link in the chain which should hold the work of the local and district together. Should this be your predicament, it only increases the importance of making the most of reporting.

The Scientific Point of View

At the Religious Education Association convention in Buffalo, New York, Professor George A. Coe urged scientific methods in the Sunday school which he said was only the application of law. He showed that a right theory or a practical application of it could not be had only in a full knowledge of the facts. Therefore, he urged scientific methods of record keeping in Sunday schools. He considered that the church is entitled to detailed information upon the life and activities of the young person within the school. He thinks those in authority should be able to know at any time and accurately such things, as when the pupil entered the school; when they advanced and how; under what teachers they studied; who are church members and when they joined; also something of their vocational record. He believes in standardizing church and Sunday school records.

We would like to see our officers and teachers take a more serious view of record making and reports. We want every local and district superintendent to be able to hand to his successor a complete history of their work, by which the new officer can enter in without embarrassment, and by which the school can have better continuity of service. For this reason we punch our blank reports and urge every secretary and superintendent to secure loose-leaf binders to hold the same.

—G. R. W.

Despise not Small Things

Did we ever stop to think that every day is a little life, and that our whole life is but a day repeated. Those, therefore, that dare lose a single day are dangerously prodigal.

The cradle roll is a small department of this great church work, but it has a tendency to keep the child interested in the work, from the fact that as he grows older and is promoted from one grade to another, he may look back with pleasure on the fact that he could not remember a time when it was not enlisted in some department of Sunday school work.

Let us remember that it is by studying the little things that we attain the art of having as little misery and as much happiness as possible. Is it not that the little things in the aggregate make up whatever is great? It takes the successive strata to compose the great mountains, and the myriads of almost imperceptible stars that whiten the milky way.

It is the same in our lives. Every little act moves significantly on the dial of character and helps to make the immortal man. If we cannot be a mighty river bearing great vessels of blessings to the world, we can be little springs by the wayside, giving as it were a cup of cold water; and if we make the little events of life good and beautiful, then the whole life will be what the Master wants it to be.

Then let us as parents enroll the darling infants in the cradle roll, thereby taking them while they are beautiful and good, and then make every effort to keep them in that pure state.

MRS. E. W. KENNICUTT.

Religious Education Association

This association, composed by such educators as Professor George A. Coe, of Union Theological Seminary; Professor Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard University; Professor Frederick Tracy, of the University of Toronto; and Reverend George B. Stewart, of Auburn, New York, is organized, to quote the last annual report of the secretary: "To secure to the child its full rights. Our largest hopes for accomplishing those ends for which we stand must lie in working with and for the child. We believe in the whole of the welfare of the whole of the child." (Emphasis ours.)

In what light do the churches appear, while claiming this is a "Christian nation," under the following rather strong arraignment of society, made by the above-mentioned professors, in a signed "declaration of principles" of the Religious Education Association at the last, twelfth, General Convention? The emphasis is ours.

"This convention is evidence that the conscience of the people is awakening to the fact that society is wronging its most defenseless members. . . . Society does not yet recognize the right to be well born. The preventable physical defects with which multitudes of children start life are an invasion of rights more serious than attacks of highwaymen.

"Society does not yet effectively recognize the right of children to real mothers and real fathers, or the right to be trained through responsibilities.

Society does not effectively recognize the right of the child to health.

"It does not fully recognize the right to grow. Powers for growth and for human happiness are being turned into commercial assets.

"Society does not effectively recognize the right of the child to be educated. Witness the insufficient accommodation in our schools, the elimination of pupils, the too early entrance into industries.

"Society does not effectively recognize the right to character. We condemn certain peoples of antiquity for exposing infants to the natural elements, but we expose American children to moral contagion—and we do it for gain!

"Society does not effectively recognize the right of children to the religious heritage of the race. We are as yet at the beginning of the problem of providing religious education for the children of the whole Nation. We rejoice at the multiplying efforts of churches to give to the children of the whole communities instruction in religion comparable in method and in continuity to instruction in the public schools.

"Our problem requires cooperation between the public school, the home, the churches, agencies of philanthropy and reform like the national child-labor committee, civic authorities, and right-minded individuals."

"Instruction in religion comparable in method and continuity to instruction in the public schools" is one of the aims and purposes of graded lessons.

News from Missions

Arkansas

The chilly winds of November are here, and Jack Frost has made his appearance on the mountains. The leaves are falling to the earth to let us know that winter is coming.

The last time I wrote I was in the Ozark Mountains, having fine meetings, and where I met Brother T. J. Riley. From that country we went to Bald Knob, where there is a little branch of fine Saints. I do not believe I ever associated with any better people than I found among the Saints at that place. We had a week's fine meetings there. The Saints were built up spiritually and the sinners were made to feel the judgments of God to be poured out upon the wicked.

From there we went to Rivaisto, where Brother Riley did a good work and baptized some fine people. We had a good meeting there. We went from Rivaisto to Fisher, where Brother Riley had fought two hard battles in debate with the Christian people. Victory was won for the gospel in both conflicts, and Brother Riley succeeded in building up a branch of fine Saints. They are erecting a nice church there. We had a good meeting there, and during the two weeks Brother Riley helped the Saints work in the church. He is a good mechanic as well as a preacher.

There are many calls for preaching. Oh, how I wish we had hundreds of preachers in the field where we have hardly one. The judgments of God are upon us, and the people ought to be warned of what is to come. This is the age of the world that all of God's prophets wrote about, and the day when beautiful Zion is to be built, and God's people gathered out of the plagues that are coming upon the earth.

Saints, it is time to wake up, put on the holy armor of righteousness, and be ready for the day of destruction that is to come. The Gentiles' time is about up, and God is going to return the gospel to ancient Israel.

With all these conditions pressing upon us, let us be up and doing. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption is near, and we are soon to meet with all the noble Saints that have gone on before.

I dreamed a few nights ago of meeting Brother John A. Robinson. I thought he was young again. I thought he said to me, "Brother Erwin, this is what we live for and serve the Lord for."

By the help of God let us redeem Zion and get ready for his coming in glory. God bless his work everywhere, is the prayer of

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

Mission Number 9

This finds me in this busy southern city. As in a great many other large cities, we have a little flock of Saints here struggling against odds, to get the gospel before the people, and to prepare themselves to meet the Master when he comes. It is surely commendable to find a people who have to work hard to make a living, and who at the same time find time and spare some money to help carry on the church work. It shows their faith by their works. It is too bad we have the best thing in the form of religion and have the poorest equipment, and are at such a disadvantage to carry it forth to the world. If this work was of the world we could get more help from that source, but as it is not, we will have to fight it out on these lines, by the help of God.

I organized a branch here in Houston two years ago, with Brother Noel L. Starks president. At this time our young brother, Elder A. J. Banta, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa, is the president. The branch has done well considering the chance it has had. Brother and Sister Banta are a great help to the work here.

I spent two weeks in San Antonio before coming here. We have two churches in that city. While there I ordained Brethren T. J. Jett, jr., and Hamilton Davenport, elders, and Robert Jett, priest. All are from the Second Branch. If these young men are faithful there is a chance for them to do a good work. Their parents are faithful Saints. I felt good in ordaining and commending them to the Lord. They all miss old Brother O. D. Johnson, who lately passed away. But the Lord is raising up young men to take the place of the older ones and fill up the ranks, we are glad to say.

The First Branch is having a struggle. It is hard to get one suitable to preside, but we have some good faithful Saints there and we have hopes that they will get started out right again. Sister (Miss) Elma Neal is superintendent of the Sunday school, and this church cannot furnish many better than she for the place, and this part of the work is doing fine. While she teaches in the public school she always finds time to attend to her church work.

We are glad to announce that Brother D. S. Palmer is now in the missionary field. His appointment read, October 1. He desired to stay at home the first part of the year to help the boys in the dairy. While crossing the railroad a fast passenger train struck his wagon, killed his horse, and came very near killing him and his two little boys. This laid him up three months. He is now able to go about his work, but he will always know he has been struck by a train. The company compromised with him without a suit by giving him $3,800. We are glad to have him back in the field.

After leaving San Antonio I came to Rock Island, where I met my old friend, George M. Hiles, and family. While there I preached two nights in the Methodist church and ordained Brother Hiles an elder.

Patriarch H. O. Smith is now in this district, and is proving to be a great help to the Saints.

I hear good reports from Oklahoma and Arkansas, from the men who are active. It takes activity to bring good results from priesthood or members. Idleness and spirituality will not go together; the former often breeds discontent and a fault-finding spirit.

We had a little frost a few nights ago, but generally the weather is warm.

Sincerely yours,

W. M. AYLOR.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, November 18, 1915.

Chatham, Ontario

Having been appointed by the General Conference to labor in Chatham District, Ontario, we take this means of letting our friends know that we are well and busy in the Master's cause.

Since arriving in our field of labor, the first day of June, we have labored at the following named places: Kimball, Glen Rae, Bothwell, Windsor, Wabash, and Chatham. We recently were with the Saints of Stevenson for a few days, and thence to Coatsworth, where we have preached twelve sermons, making a new opening.

At the above-named places we have found the Saints, in most instances, laboring faithfully to keep the banner of King Immanuel afloat; but here as elsewhere we find that improvements could be made. In some instances we find that the Saints are neglectful with regard to meeting as often and promptly as they should. We expect God to be faithful to us, and give us of his Spirit, hence the necessity of fulfilling our part of the contract. We are not desirous of finding fault, but rather of encouraging to greater diligence, that we may receive the greater blessing, and rejoice together as God's people, "The people of the Most High."

Outside of the few discouragements which are to be found everywhere, we find that the work shows a tendency to move upward. We have had good crowds wherever we have been, and have found the Saints ready to assist the missionary in every way possible. This is commendable indeed; for it is sometimes the case that the missionary is unable to get the Saints interested enough to come to the meetings themselves, let alone getting the outsiders out. We are glad that such has not been the condition here. We have received a hearty response to the call for aid when we have endeavored to get the gospel before the people, and as the popular saying goes here, Everyone seems willing to do his bit.

Two-day meetings are seldom heard of here, but there are a goodly number of anniversaries observed which seem to be productive of good. The Sunday nearest the date of the church opening or dedication is, with most branches, observed as an annual event, and has been observed at the following named places: Glen Rae, Longwood, Wabash, Kimball, Chat-ham, Stevenson and Windsor.

The auxiliary work throughout the district is at the present moving onward. The General Superintendent of the Sunday schools, Gomer R. Wells, during his visit to the district, was the means of arousing a greater desire to reach the standard of excellence than had been manifested heretofore. In behalf of the work of Brother Wells, we are glad to say, that although a Sunday school man heart and soul, yet he does not forget to drop a word for all the other auxiliaries whenever the opportunity presents itself. He is very thorough and systematic, and we feel is doing a good work.

When we receive so many calls to "come and preach for us," we are made conscious of the need of more laborers in the great vineyard, and see the necessity of keeping up the work of the auxiliaries at all hazards, that the young among God's people may be equipped for the great work which lies before them, viz: the carrying of the gospel to the nations of the earth. Let us, then, rally to the cause, Saints, and keep up the great work intrusted to our care.

I have been laboring alone until just recently. One day while thinking upon the needs of the work, (so many calls having come to me and being unable to fill them) the Spirit presented to me the name of one of our young men in Flint, and I was led to believe that the time was ripe for him to enter the missionary field. Going to London conference, I talked the matter over with Brother Curtis, and the result is that Brother Joseph Yager, of Coleman, Michigan, who has been working in the auto shops at Flint, is now associated with me in the work. He is a promising young man, and if faithful will be able to do a great work in the church. He is a congenial companion, willing to do his share, humble and faithful in his work, and shows that the training received in Religio and Sunday school will not come amiss.

It has been a great pleasure to us to stand here in this place (Coatsworth), where to our knowledge the work has never been declared before, and present the gospel to so many who seemed to be hungering and thirsting for the truth. Through the efforts of Brother Mifflin, who lives here, we were able to obtain the Baptist church, and held forth for twelve evenings, with a full house nearly every night. The first Sunday evening the church was crowded to its capacity, and last Sunday night some turned away, unable to find room.

Some had expressed themselves as wishing that the trustee who had allowed us the use of the building would come out to hear, but, as we view it now, the hand of the Lord must have been keeping him away until we had presented the gospel. Sunday evening he was there and the Book of Mormon medicine seemed too strong, so much so that on Monday Brother Mifflin received notice that we could occupy no longer than that same evening. Our crowds were so large and our interest so good that they were unable to stand it any longer, and the only way they could stop the work was to refuse us the use of the church.

However, we have made a good many friends to the cause; have sold several Books of Mormon, and have more orders. Some drove for five and six miles every evening, and the majority were very much put out because of the action of the Baptist trustee. We tried to secure another building, but were unable to do so. We decided to hold forth a few evenings in the home of Brother Mifflin, but this failed on account of rain, so we will close our effort Sunday night at the Stevenson church, a few miles from here. As soon as a building can be secured we expect to return.

We were ably assisted in our meetings by Brother Robert Brown, who is home from his mission to Manitoulin Island.

Brother Brown took charge of the singing. He is earnest and faithful in service.

From here we expect to go to Wallaceburg. A man by the name of Hendrickson has been lecturing there against the Catholics, and during the course of his lectures he attacked our faith, the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith. Some of our people brought him to task about it. He would not recognize them at all for a time, but finally he admitted that he knew nothing about the Book of Mormon. He said he would not meet our people in discussion. A number of the bystanders said, Rent a hall and bring your man over and we will come and hear him. So they believe it is a good time to strike while the iron is hot, and if a hall can be secured we will start there about Wednesday night.

Thus the work goes on: clouds and sunshine; joy and sorrow; and why not? Without the clouds we would not appreciate the sunshine, neither would we fully appreciate the joys of life, did not the sorrows also come. God's hand will rule and overrule, turn and overturn to our lasting good, if we do not get impatient. Let us faithfully follow where he leads, that we may be able to sing in truth.

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
Over mountains, or plain, or sea;
I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord,
I'll be what you want me to be."

Hopefully till the fight is won,

J. R. GRICE.

COATSWORTH, ONTARIO, November 20, 1915.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

Sunday, November 21, dawned bright and pleasant, and the Saints passed a profitable day listening to the usual edifying word of counsel at church and Sunday school.

The afternoon meeting was characterized by the spirit of intelligence and spiritual fervor. Several unfamiliar faces were discernible in our midst, and several others also gave forth many words of encouragement.

During his stay here, Brother R. S. Salyards has frequently been of comfort to the Saints by his strong and eloquent appeals, his forceful logic, and in his addresses by the evidence of unwavering faith. He and Bishop E. L. Kelley occupied yesterday to the edification of all present, morning and evening.

On Thursday next there will be Thanksgiving service, and at the evening hour the church choir will give a special concert, and will be ably assisted by Sister Marie Riggs, recently from Europe.

Brother Frederick M. Smith gave announcement that on the 20th the Honorable Frank Walsh, a noted attorney and editor of the Kansas City Post will give at the church a lecture of an industrial order, and commended his proposed effort very highly to the hearing of the Saints.

Mrs. Frederick M. Smith at 4.15 p. m. appeared before the ladies of the Child Welfare department, and took charge of the leaflet lesson, which treated of "Adolescence." At the same hour, Brother A. H. Mills introduced to the Junior Orchestra and others, the work of the National Orchestral Movement, advanced lately by Brother A. N. Hoxie. Thus we are speeding onward.

The free night school, the parent-teacher's meetings, and last, though not least, the Jackson County Sunday school convention, which joins hands with the public school teachers gatherings, all combine in the strenuous work of solving the educational problems that confront the progressive citizen of this age. The Sunday school experts tell us that this is the opportune time for placing "the child in the midst."

On Thursday evening the 18th, the branch here placed our respected church president and his family "in the midst," and gave them a reception, that it might pay them the tribute of love and confidence which was their due. A beautiful song of greeting, composed by Sister M. T. Short, was sung, prayer was offered by Bishop E. L. Kelley, a congratulatory address penned by our beloved president, G. E. Harrington, was read by Elder W. H. Garrett. After the handshakes, the many souvenirs were prepared for the presenting, and a suitable closing hymn was sung, the Saints returned to their homes.

May we as Saints continue in love and good works, and, as was truly said from the pulpit of late, "We all need in this day a path that is laid out in righteousness."

The things that are passing ought to strengthen our faith. The Lord is placing his sign in the heavens, and he is placing the sign in Zion. Your sister in the new covenant,

NOVEMBER 22, 1915.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Conference Minutes

FREMONT.—October 16 and 17, Henderson, Iowa. Reports: Riverton 53; Henderson 81; Bartlett 43; Thurman 203; Tabor 64; Hamburg 60; Glenwood 65. By motion, appointment of auditing committee was left with presidency with power to act. No services Saturday evening on account of rain. Preaching by J. B. Wildermuth at 11 a. m., 2.30 and 8 p. m., Sunday. Adjourned to meet with Thurman Branch at call of presidency. J. B. Wildermuth, secretary pro tem.

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—October 23 and 24, Sandusky, J. F. Curtis, William Grice, William Davis presiding. G. R. Wells, General Sunday school superintendent, conducted high-grade institute work. District chorister, Sister Plato, was in charge of musical features, and did work for Woman's Auxiliary. Preaching by J. F. Curtis, J. W. Davis, R. D. Weaver, Arthur Leaverton. Bishop's agent reported splendid working balance and encouraging reports were had from branches. Meetings were of high spiritual order, and all present seemed to enjoy themselves. Saints of Sandusky are to be congratulated on their splendid achievement in the erection of a church which is well under way to completion. It is a well located and fine building. J. W. Davis, R. D. Weaver, committee.

Convention Minutes

MINNESOTA.—Sunday school, November 5, Minneapolis. Committee appointed to consider joining International Sunday School Association reported favorable in so far as it did not conflict with the work of our own organization; unfavorable if such conflicts were unavoidable. Election: Superintendent, R. J. Wildey; assistant, Ralph Murdock; secretary, Alta Kimber; treasurer, Mrs. S. Sloan; home department superintendent, Mrs. O'Hare; cradle roll superintendent, Mrs. H. J. Wise; member library board, Ruth Serrell. Further advertising was arranged for by electing Ellis Murdock member advertising board to act in conjunction with member elected by Religio. Delegates to General Convention: B. S. Lambkin, Charles Lundeen, Sister Charles Lundeen, R. T. Wildey, Cora Wildey, Birch Whiting, Sister DeLapp, to cast full vote. On account of meager representation, it was decided to make succeeding conventions mass conventions. The Minneapolis local gave an interesting program in conjunction with the Religio. Adjourned to meet same place next conference, day previous. Alta Kimber, secretary.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Western Colorado District; Greeting: The year will soon be gone—a thing of the past. I take this means to ask all Saints in the district who have offerings or tithing they wish to give to send in early so we can close up our accounts for the year on time.

We thank all who have helped during the year, and ask all to try to have their names on the list of regular contributors. Don't wait until your "ship comes in"; begin now. The littles are what make the work move on.

We trust that each may feel to give of what he has received, at least a small portion unto God, that his work may be carried on to victory and his kingdom come and over all prevail.

Sincerely, your collaborer,

M. L. SCHMIDT, Bishop's Agent.

DELTA, COLORADO, 326 Main Street.

To Locate Saints

Information with reference to the whereabouts of the following members of the Dahinda, Illinois, Branch will be appreciated: Mrs. Catherine Magnusson, Mrs. Jennie Thompson, John Magnusson, Martha Pennington.

MRS. CHARLES DAWSON.

Notice of Release

Notice is hereby given that Elder E. C. Shelley who was appointed to the Southeastern Mission has been released at his own request from this appointment.

ELBERT A. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

LAMONI, IOWA, November 20, 1915.

Requests for Prayers

Sister M. A. Connett, Missouri Valley, Iowa, asks prayers for her mother, Sister W. A. Cook, who is sorely afflicted with heart trouble. They desire that she shall be healed if it is God's will.

Died

HAWLEY.—Willard Alvin Hawley, oldest son of Gideon and Mary Hawley, born May 5, 1871, Gallands Grove, Shelby County, Iowa; died at Woodbine, Iowa, November 16, 1915, of heart failure. Baptized in 1881. Accompanied his parents to Woodbine in 1900. Deceased was commonly called "Bob." He was useful to his mother in caring for his afflicted father. His parents will greatly miss him both for the love they bore him he having been a great care to them, especially to his mother, and for his great usefulness, which he rendered willingly. Services at the home by Elder Kibler, sermon by Charles Derry, from James 6: 13-15, and 1 Thessalonians 4: 13-18.

CATRON.—Daliah Catron, born May 1, 1824, Avington, Virginia; died November 19, 1915, Great Falls, Montana. In 1842 deceased married Phillip W. Catron. To them were born 6 sons, 2 daughters. Husband, 2 sons, and the daughters have gone on before. Deceased also leaves other relatives, including 24 grandchildren, 6 great-grandchildren. Baptized by J. D. Stead, at Adel, Montana. She was faithful to the end, and it could be said of her, She has fought a good fight, and has kept the faith. Funeral at Great Falls, Montana, by G. W. Thorburn.

FLINN.—Hezekiah Teaman Flinn, born August 2, 1852, Jackson County, Iowa; died November 10, 1915, Lamotte, Iowa. Married Mary Green, April, 1886. Leaves wife, 1 sister, 1 adopted daughter and her 3 children. Baptized April 14, 1910, by John Heide, remaining faithful until death. Services at the home and at the Saints' church, Fulton, Iowa, sermon by John Heide, assisted by L. G. Holloway. Interment in Esgate Cemetery.

GALLAND.—John Galland, born in January, 1859; died October 30, 1915, San Antonio, Texas. Funeral by John Harp at the home of A. B. Kuykendall, Cottonwood Avenue, San Antonio. Interment in Wood Cemetery. Brother Galland will be remembered for his many acts of kindness.

HASTINGS.—At Lamoni, Iowa, October 30, 1915, Winter Hastings, aged 84 years, 8 days. Born in Yorkshire, England. Was married and had sons and daughters. His wife died many years ago, and where his sons are he has not known for a long time. One daughter lives at Custer, Washington. Baptized at Gilman, Washington, by John Davis. Ordained an elder by Thomas Delay. Officiated at Gilman and Seattle. Came to Saints' Home, Lamoni, in 1907. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by D. D. Young.

LAMBSON.—Minerva Jane Otto, born March 27, 1835, in Mercer County, Pennsylvania; died November 10, 1915, at Liberty Home, Lamoni, Iowa. Married Edwin H. Lambson, April 9, 1854. To them were born 9 children, 5 of whom with the father have gone on before. Baptized October 22, 1871, by Howard S. Smith. Services on the 12th, prayer by Joseph Roberts, sermon by Rob't M. Elvin, from Psalm 49: 8, 9. There survive 2 sons, 2 daughters, 15 grandchildren, 8 great-grandchildren, 2 sisters. A mother in Israel hath gone to her rest and reward.

MATHER.—James Wilbur Mather, born March 31, 1844, at Shatee, Chateaugnay County, Province of Quebec, Canada; died at Lamoni, Iowa, November 14, 1915. Baptized August 6, 1869, by Mark H. Forscutt, confirmed and ordained elder same date. February 14, 1882, was unfrocked and denied fellowship, nevertheless, retained his faith and confidence in the restored gospel, and was helpful to sustain the local work. Under the conviction of the truth he was baptized April 18, 1915, by R. C. Evans. Twice married. Was at his office at work Saturday, and passed peacefully away on the following evening. Service in charge of John Smith, at Brick Church, Lamoni, sermon by Rob't M. Elvin, from Haggai 1: 5-7. Leaves wife, 2 aged sisters, many other relatives. Interment in Rose Hill.

BLATT.—Minerva Esta Dennis Blatt, born February 17, 1871; died at her home, Independence, Missouri, after long suffering, November 21, 1915. Baptized November 23, 1886, by A. H. Parsons. Married Jackson E. Blatt, December 5, 1889. To them 5 children were born, 2 having passed on before. She leaves husband, daughter, 2 sons to mourn their loss, with 4 brothers, 2 sisters, many friends. Her life was given to bless others, and when sickness overtook her she patiently endured severe suffering and waited for the end. Funeral in charge of G. E. Harrington and F. C. Warnky, sermon by A. H. Parsons in Stone Church. Interment in city cemetery by the side of her mother, who passed away about one year ago.

LOCKLING.—Charlotte Gentle Maule, oldest child of Donald Maule, born at Clackmannon, Scotland, September 13, 1846; died September 30, 1915. Deceased came from Scotland to America with her parents when 3 years of age, and to Harrison County, Iowa, at the age of 5, where she resided until death. Baptized at the age of 13 by James Gillen, sr., Little Sioux, Iowa. Married Orson W. Lockling, December 1, 1863, who survives her. To them were born 4 children, Ida, wife of J. W. South, living near Little Sioux; Amy, deceased; James Leon, deceased; Ruby, wife of J. E. Swalley, living at Magnolia. Besides these she leaves 7 grandchildren, 2 great-grandchildren, father, 6 brothers, 2 sisters, many other relatives. She was a loving wife and mother, and her life's motto was, Do some good for some one each day. Her last thoughts were for her loved ones, planning to the very last for their future welfare. Services in charge of Amos Berve, sermon by R. C. Chambers, to a very large audience.

BEECROFT.—Henry Beecroft was born January 28, 1815; died February 18, 1915. Married Isabel Frazer, June 24, 1835. To this union eight children were born, of whom three survive; Henry, jr., and Mrs. Theodore Guittar, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, Mrs. E. D. Brackenbury, Almo, Idaho. His wife preceded him September 13, 1903, aged 87. Brother Beecroft came to America from England, 1851, and after some disappointment religiously, having been baptized in 1844 into the Latter Day Saint Church, he finally settled in Council Bluffs, Iowa, and thereafter lived a consistent member of the Reorganized Church. Funeral from home of his daughter, in Council Bluffs, a Baptist minister having charge and J. W. Wight preaching the sermon.

ROTH.—Susan B. Garber was born at Andersonburg, Perry County, Pennsylvania, July 5, 1839; died November 20, 1915, passing so peacefully that even her husband knew not of it until seeking to awake her on the morning following her death in the night. Married John S. Roth, in Blain, Perry County, Pennsylvania, who afterward became a missionary for the church of his choice, and who is so well known that the mention of his name is all that is necessary to the Saints generally to realize the choice of her married companionship. To this union four children were born, William C., Elmy J., George W. and Isaac L., the latter dying at the age of 11. Sister Roth was raised a member of the German Reformed Church, but was baptized into the Reorganized Church, March 7, 1880, living a consistent life thereafter and enduring many hardships for the sake of the gospel, such as the deprivation of her husband's companionship that he might preach that which was so dear to her heart. Her husband, with living children and grandchildren, were present at her funeral from the Saints' church, Lamoni, Iowa, in which city she had made her residence for the past few months. Elder John Smith had charge of the obsequies, J. W. Wight preaching the sermon. May those who mourn be comforted.

Will You Read This Twice?

A very important question to-day which every housekeeper must decide for herself is whether she prefers pure, cream of tartar baking powder like Royal or whether she is willing to use baking powder made of inferior substitutes which do not add healthful qualities to the food.

One kind is easily distinguished from the other, since the laws of various States require the ingredients to be printed upon the label. If anyone is in doubt which kind is most healthful, it is worth while to ask the family doctor. Then decide.

And when once a decision is reached let no advertisement or dealer's argument or canvasser's solicitation change the decision. It is not a question of a few cents or of pleasing a salesman. It is a question of health.

If this appeals to you as reasonable and sensible advice, it is worth reading twice. And it is worth remembering.

IS THERE ANYTHING IN SPIRITUALISM?

Ever since the witch of Endor professed to "call up" the aged Prophet Samuel, men have asked the question, Is there anything in Spiritualism? Allowing for all the obvious and suspected fraud perpetrated by fake "mediums," is there back of it at any time anything at all supernatural or superhuman?

In modern times a systematic attempt has been made by learned, scientific men of world repute to answer this old riddle. In 1882 there was organized in England the now famous Society for Psychical Research. The list of its presidents includes some of the greatest names of modern times: Right Honorable A. J. Balfour, Professor William James, Sir William Crookes, Professor Henri Bergson, Sir Oliver Lodge, and many others.

The society has given itself carefully to the investigation of telepathy, mesmerism, hypnotism, suggestion, hallucinations, apparitions, spiritism, etc. Working with the best and most famous mediums, they have "tried the spirits" under the most rigorous, exacting, and skeptical scrutiny. Also thousands of cases of alleged apparitions or appearances of spirits of the departed—"ghosts," if you please—have been carefully investigated. The proceedings of the society occupy many large volumes.

Though no definite findings have been returned, some expressions lead us to believe that at least some of the members of this body of investigators (by temperament and training rather skeptical men) have been impressed that there "is something in spiritualism."

In his address as president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1913, Sir Oliver Lodge said:

In justice to myself and my coworkers I must risk annoying my present hearers, not only by leaving on record our conviction that occurrences now regarded as occult can be examined and reduced to order by the methods of science carefully and persistently applied, but by going further and saying, with the utmost brevity, that already the facts so examined have convinced me that memory and affection are not limited to that association with matter by which alone they can manifest themselves here and now, and that personality persists beyond bodily death. The evidence—nothing new or sensational, but cumulative and demanding prolonged serious study—to my mind goes to prove that discarnate intelligence, under certain conditions, may interact with us on the material side, thus indirectly coming within our scientific ken; and that gradually we may hope to attain some understanding of the nature of a larger, perhaps ethereal, existence, and of the conditions regulating intercourse across the chasm. A body of responsible investigators has even now landed on the treacherous but promising shores of a new continent.

Yes, and there is more to say than that. The methods of science are not the only way, though they are our way, of being piloted to truth. "Uno itinere non potest perveniri ad tam grande secretum."—Continuity, p. 102.

John Haynes Holmes in his recently published book, Is Death the End? has this to say on this subject:

It must be admitted, I believe, that, whatever else the psychological researchers may or may not have done, they have at least demonstrated that, amid all the fraud and superstition which are unquestionably present in this field of experience, there is a very large residuum of fact, which rightly calls for scientific explanation. After all the results of trickery and sheer credulity have been removed, there still remains a great mass of hypnotic, telepathic, apparitional, and "mediumistic" phenomena which must be regarded as in some sense or other genuine. In other words, the Society for Psychical Research has demonstrated that there is something more in this mystical field than mere deception and superstition. Something real is happening, and always has happened. The extraordinary nature of the events does not alter their reality. Many of these things at which we have been laughing all these years are facts, and must, in the name of truth, be treated as facts!—Page 181.

Admitting that there "is something in spiritualism," a superhuman or supernatural spiritual power seeking expression, is it of such a nature that humanity may approach it and supplicate its enlightenment with safety and profit?

We note, first of all, the possibility of fraud on the part of the medium, at the very beginning of investigation. What chance has the average man or woman to detect and circumvent this fraud? The medium dictates the terms and conditions of the seance, and all the advantages are with him or her, as the case may be. And these terms are almost universally such as to favor fraud and the suspicion of fraud,—darkness, or semidarkness, a passive mind, etc.

So at the very start the investigator is liable to become merely a dupe. But supposing that he actually falls into the hands of a genuine medium, and there is a real manifestation of psychic power; suppose some incarnate spirit does speak in one way or another, what assurance has he that this spirit is that of the particular individual, usually a departed friend or relative, that it professes to be? Or if he is seeking evidence of human immortality, what assurance has he had that it is indeed a human spirit speaking? Here appears the second opportunity for fraud and deception.

Professor William James, the great psychologist, had an arrangement with an intimate friend and fellow investigator named Hodgson, by which the latter was to attempt to communicate with him after death. The medium was the celebrated Mrs. Piper, one of the best. The sittings were numerous and the search prolonged. And yet in his report, which covers over one hundred and twenty pages of the Proceedings (volume 23) of the Society, Professor James makes this most significant statement:

I myself feel as if an external will to communicate were probably there. . . . But if asked whether the will to communicate be Hodgson's, I remain uncertain and await more facts.

Here is the point: Professor James felt that some spirit indeed was there attempting to pose as the spirit of his departed friend, Hodgson. But he was not convinced that it was indeed the spirit of his friend.

The circumstances were most favorable. The two were intimate friends. The event was prearranged and well understood. The medium was very familiar to both. Yet in spite of all this care and precaution, probably because of it, the "external will" or spirit that claimed to be Hodgson, failed to convince Professor James. The ruse or deception did not work. How then can an ordinary individual under ordinary circumstances feel sure of the identity of the spirit that seeks to communicate with him, posing possibly as that of some dearly loved friend or relative? The risk of deception is too great.

Professor James's experience reminds us of the advice given by John: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."—1 John 4: 1.

Even when such manifestations are accepted as genuine, are they of a nature to enlighten men and reward them for the double risk of fraud, first by false mediums, second by false and evil spirits? If indeed there be genuine spiritual communication, almost invariably it would appear to come from a very low order of intelligence. On this point, John Haynes Holmes, already quoted, has this to say:

Nobody can study the evidence gathered in this particular field without noticing, first of all, the triviality, almost the inanity, of the communications received. Here we come eager for evidence of the future life and information as to what it means to die and pass into the great beyond! And what do we get? First of all—and naturally enough, perhaps!—frantic endeavors on the part of the alleged spirits to prove their identity by the citation of intricate and unimportant details of where they were and what they did at different times when they were here among men. Then the endless and tedious rehearsal of the various family connections of the individual or individuals interested in the communications—of the peculiarities, infirmities and eccentricities of this, that, and the other person—of trivial and oftentimes silly episodes that have happened many years before and have long since been forgotten! Sometimes there is a recounting of an event which is taking place in a part of the world far removed from the locality in which the medium and recipient are sitting. Frequently there is a prophecy of something which is going to take place at some more or less distant moment in the future. Again and again, there is a descent to obscurity and feeble chattering. Even in the reported conversations with Myers and Hodgson there is the same perplexing and discouraging barrenness of revelation. Never do the communications rise to any sustained level of clear thought and fine feeling.—Is Death the End, p. 184.

We may be prepared to admit that there "is something in spiritualism"; that supernatural manifestations do indeed occur at times. But the opportunity for fraud on the part of the medium and the spirits is so great that the ordinary investigator can never be sure that he is not duped.

Again, the communications received, though genuine, are of such a nature that they are unprofitable, or worse,—such indeed as might be expected to come from intelligences that work in the dark and refuse to speak to an active mind. Indeed, the degrading tendencies of such communications and presences is well recognized by thoughtful observers. It is notorious that the lives of many mediums are downward, lead into insanity and the grossest of immoralities and excesses.

We conclude then that it may be dangerous to seek for light from spiritualism. Further, it is unnecessary. "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day star arise in our hearts." (2 Peter 1: 19.)

Many investigators of spiritism, the most intelligent at least, seek an evidence that man is immortal. They hope in this way to solve the old riddle. Science being unable to demonstrate immortality on this side of the grave, they seek for confirmation from the other side. But well does one writer say:

But does the evidence afford us proof of immortality? Obviously it cannot; nor can any investigation yield scientific proof of that larger, higher, and enduring life which we desire and mean by immortality. . . . Our own limitations, in fact, make it impossible for the evidence to convey the assurance that we are communicating with what is best and noblest in those who have passed into the unseen. In fact, psychical research, though it may strengthen its foundations, cannot take away the place of religion.—W. F. Barrett, F. R. S., in Psychical Research, p. 245. (Is Death the End, by John Haynes Holmes, p. 148.)

The question cannot be answered in this way, for the reasons already indicated. We do not need to seek for an answer in that way. Spiritualism cannot thus usurp the function of religion. Revelations of doubtful origin, coming through mediums of doubtful character, cannot take the place of divine revelation.

As Paul tells us, once for all, Jesus, our Savior, has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. His revelation is in all probability the only answer that will ever be given to the question, Is man immortal? It must be accepted by faith, but is not in conflict with science.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

DEADLY EXPLOSION.—Thirty men were killed and seven severely injured on November 30 by the explosion in a packing house of the DuPont Powder Company, Wilmington, Delaware, of eight thousand pounds of black powder. Of twenty-six men in the powder house, only one could be identified. The cause of the explosion is as yet unknown.

GUILTY OF DEFRAUDING.—Three high officials and a subordinate officer of the Hamburg-American steamship line, were in the United States District Court at New York, on the 2d, found guilty of conspiracy to deceive and defraud the United States Government by obtaining false clearance for relief ships laden with coal and other supplies sailing from American ports to German cruisers in the Atlantic early in the war.

AIDING JEWS.—According to a report made public the 2d in New York City, the Central Committee for the Relief of Jews suffering from conditions incident to the present war, Jews in America have contributed more than $1,700,000,000 for relief of destitute Jews in the war areas of Palestine and Europe. This report declares that the situation of the Jews in Europe and Palestine is worse than that of the Belgians. The Committee urges the necessity of further contribution to save these unfortunate people from suffering and extermination.

RECALL REQUESTED.—The United States Government has asked for the recall of Captain Boy-Ed and Captain von Papen, naval and military attaches, respectively, to the German embassy at Washington, because of "improper activities in military and naval matters." Captain Boy-Ed was in the testimony given in the Hamburg-American line case, mentioned elsewhere in this column, associated with the supplying of German cruisers from American bases. Captain von Papen was mentioned in connection with plans to cripple American munition plants, and more recently in the recall of Doctor Dumba, Austrian Ambassador.

FORD FOR PEACE.—Henry Ford has arranged what he calls "a peace expedition" to the neutral countries of Europe to press plans for peace and an early termination of the war. Two Scandinavian-American steamers have been chartered to convey the peace party to Europe. Attempts to commit the United States Government to a neutral peace conference have failed, the Washington authorities declining to give such a movement the impetus of their support. The United States Government has also announced that it will not issue passports for the Ford party to visit belligerent countries. The first of the Ford ships has sailed from New York.

SCOUTS AND MILITARISM.—Announcing his resignation on the 5th, as Chief Scout of the Boys Scouts of America, and the formation of the Woodcraft's League, which scouts are urged to join, Ernest Thompson Seton is reported as having said:

When Baden-Powell and I organized the boy scouts of England in 1908, and the Boy Scouts of America in 1910, our purpose was to make all young people of America outdoor children by teaching them the joys of outdoor life. As originally formed, the scouts of America were to bear a message of conservation and brotherhood. The study of trees, flowers and nature is giving way to wig-wagging, drills and other activities of a military nature, thus destroying the original aims of the organization. As it stands now, militarism comes first and woodcraft second.

TO ORGANIZE FARMERS.—Resolutions creating a central committee to organize the farmers of the United States into cooperative societies covering every farm product, were unanimously adopted the 2d by a national conference of marketing and farm products, composed of delegates from forty-five States. Objects of the organization are: Examination into methods of production and distribution of products, and a system of economy and efficiency in handling and marketing the same; cooperation of farmers and those of allied industries for mutual help in distribution; storing and marketing of products; instruction in the best methods for rural betterment; cooperation with government departments, educational centers, etc.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa forces have been defeated on the Fuerte River, Sonora. Following defeat at Hermosillo, the Villa army, with the exception of a contingent commanded by General Jose Rodriguez, is said to be demoralized and surrendering in small groups. Report is that Carranza has released the railroads of Mexico from military supervision. Passenger traffic throughout the republic is said to be gradually improving; freight service continues inadequate. A conference between Carranza and Governor Ferguson of Texas, has resulted in arrangements whereby local Americans and Mexican authorities without appeal to central authority will cooperate in the suppression of brigandage.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The setting in of winter has lessened activities on the various European war fronts, except those between Italy and Austria. The Italians continue their deadly attack in what is described as "the most sustained and fiercest" fighting of the whole war. Their effort is to take certain Austrian strongholds—keys to territory once held by Italy, and which that country hopes to wrest from Austria. Their advance is slow and costly, largely due to the topography of the country, offering natural fastnesses all but impregnable. The Turks have shown new activity on the Gallipoli Peninsula. They report success over the British in Mesopotamia. The Serbian army of the north seems in part, at least, to have been crowded across the Montenegrin border, where with the Montenegrins they are offering stubborn resistance. The army of the south with the allies, yet holds Monastir, and territory thus far fought for in southern Serbia. Two French steamers have been sunk by German submarines. Press report from London is that during November twenty British steamers have been sunk by German warships, four hundred ninety-five lives being lost. Germany and Bulgaria have announced that the object of the Balkan drive to effect communication between Germany and Bulgaria and Germany and Turkey having been realized, the drive is brought to an end. France has called to the colors the class of 1917, composed of youths of eighteen years, and aggregating four hundred thousand men, not for immediate action, but to make ready for a spring campaign. The call of the French cabinet for a three billion dollar "loan of victory" has been taken so quickly by the French people that the subscriptions are expected to run to four billion. The foreign minister of Italy is said to have announced in the Parliament that the Italians had on September 5 signed the London pact providing for no separate peace, and to have intimated that assistance would be sent to Serbia. Allied forces are being landed at Salonika at the rate of four thousand daily. Following a visit of the Kaiser of Germany to Vienna, three members of the Austrian cabinet resigned, giving place to men of pro-German leanings, it being rumored that Germany seeks to direct Austrian internal affairs. Lord Kitchener has returned from the Balkans and has been in conference with the French at Paris. Greece in her latest reply insists upon the maintenance of her neutrality and independence, and final settlement of points at issue between that country and the entente powers has not yet been reached. While Rumania seems friendly to the allies, her course continues uncertain.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

NEW BOONE CHURCH.—The Editor of the HERALD was with the Saints at Boone, Iowa, Sunday the 5th, at the opening of their new church. The opening service in the forenoon was in charge of Elder O. Salisbury, president of Des Moines District, the prayer being by Brother John Clark, the music by the Perry choir, the address by the Editor. President E. A. Smith spoke also in the evening. The Boone Saints have a fine brick edifice, forty by fifty feet, with basement, cost five thousand dollars. May the Lord bless and prosper them in their new home.

BALDWIN'S PRAYER.—The Editors are in receipt of an eight-page pamphlet entitled "D. R. Baldwin's Prayer," written and published by Elder D. R. Baldwin, Box 71, Roberts, Montana. This prayer deals with the brother's understanding of the attitude of God toward war, as set forth in the Old Testament. The author wishes us to announce that free copies will be sent to anyone who desires them.

CONFERENCE MINUTES DESIRED.—The HERALD Editors have occasional calls from libraries in different parts of the country for files of our General Conference Minutes. We have such a call from Rochester Theological Seminary. Anyone having such a file that they are willing to donate, will please correspond with the HERALD Editors.

EULOGIZING GRIFFITHS.—Gomer T. Davies, a friend of the Saints, though not a member of the church, publisher and editor of The Kansan (Concordia, Kansas), discussing an occurrence in the mission field of Elder G. T. Griffiths, says of Elder Griffiths, in The Kansan of November 25:

The editor of the Kansan and Griffiths are very good friends . . . Griffiths has a wonderful personal history. Forty years ago he was a mule driver in a coal mine at Bevier, Missouri. . . . He was converted to the faith of his father and mother. He had no education, and hitherto had no desire for book learning, but his conversion transformed the wicked boy into a serious minded man and a correct perspective of his station in life came to him. So he burned the midnight oil—and plodded. His struggles have culminated in his now being the foremost man, next to the Presidency, in his church. He is eloquent and influential, and not one of his church is more beloved than he.

For a few brief days in May the orchards are white with blossoms. They soon turn to fruit, or else float away in the air, useless and wasted. So it is with our present feelings—they must be deepened into decision or be entirely dissipated by delay.—Reverend Frank J. Boyer.

REFLECTIONS--NUMBER 2

BY W. E. PEAK

THE SEVENTY

The presidents of seventy are instructed to select from the several quorums of elders such as are qualified and in a condition to take upon them the office of seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 10.

To be a seventy one must be qualified to do the work required, and in "a condition," to "travel continually" (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 44) "under the direction of the Twelve" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13). Should the seventy be appointed by the Presidency to labor "under the direction of the Twelve," that has been assigned in charge of the field?

Their duties are quite similar to those of the Twelve, and they form a quorum equal to them in authority (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11). These quorums are more closely associated than any other quorums in the church.

The special duty of the seventy is "in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13). This is also the special duty of the Twelve. The main difference is, the Twelve can only visit the district occasionally and remain there a short time, while the seventy should stay there until the work is done. The apostle may have several districts to care for in his mission, and should regulate them through the seventy in charge of each district. Wherever the Twelve are in charge, the seventy should be in charge under them.

The seventy is to be familiar with the branches in his district, so he will know when and how to labor with and regulate them through the district and branch officers, as necessity demands. He is to assist and see that the policies marked out by the minister in charge are carried out. This requires an intimate acquaintance with all the members and conditions of the districts. It will take months, perhaps years, to obtain this knowledge and to carry out these policies.

He is to "build up the church" by doing missionary work himself and by directing the missionaries in his district, as well as regulating in the organizations. To do this successfully, he must know the conditions of his whole field of labor. This will require years, if he would be prepared to labor successfully.

It is a custom among the Brighamites to throw bouquets at themselves, and for one of their number to criticize the procedure of their church would be looked upon as an evidence of apostasy. Just to what extent we imitate them in this respect may not be easily estimated. But the fact remains that we as a church are not making the progress, either in the branches or in the missionary field, that we should.

The cry is coming up everywhere that the branches are not holding our young members, nor are they as branches up to the desired standard. Can we adopt any better methods than those we have followed for years?

WORK OF THE SEVENTY

The seventy should be appointed as a regulating officer according to his calling, wherever one is needed. This is honoring the law, as should be done, as the following shows:

If my people (the Twelve included) will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 14.

The branches in many places need the "blessings of direction." The minister in charge may visit them once in a year or so, it is true, yet the president of the Quorum of Twelve, in our late district conference, stated "There are branches all over this mission that are dying out."

The seventy should be assigned to a district and kept there for a number of years. His family should be located in the district, where they can help him and he can help them.

After thirty years of missionary work I am thoroughly convinced that it is a sad mistake to separate our missionaries from their families, as we have done; that it is not for the good of the missionary, his family, nor the church. All lose by it. To send a missionary a long distance from home should be the exception instead of the rule.

Districts and branches should be encouraged to build parsonages, and the church should locate the missionaries' families in them. Then when the lonely wife and little children are sick, the husband need not be many miles from home, and can come and help her as every wife deserves.

Did you ever consider how few sons of the missionaries we have in the field? When we think of the policy of keeping men away from home, as we missionaries are kept, is it any wonder that many of our sons curse such a system?

We know the church was organized by the direction of the Lord; we know our call to the ministry is from God; but we do not know, nor do we believe, that the policy of keeping men so much from home is according to the will of the Lord.

This policy was adopted by the church when it was first organized, and it was the only church on earth that adopted such a policy. I know of no statement in the revelations authorizing such a policy. Who can tell what would have been the history of the church if Brigham Young's wife had been sent to England with him? The wife is always a help to a good man.

When a missionary is sent away from home, and is gone seven or eight months, it is time for him to return as a rule. Then he is out of his field for four or five months. It costs just as much to keep him at home as it does in his field. The district where he labors is supposed to support his family. They pay for twelve months' work and get seven or eight months' labor. But of course the district, like the seventy, has nothing to say about that. This is all regulated by higher authority.

The seventy that is not capable of laboring successfully for ten or fifteen years in a district is not fit to be a seventy, and should be released.

HOW THE SEVENTY ARE APPOINTED

It is claimed the law provides that the seventy is to be appointed to his field of labor by the Twelve (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14; 125: 12).

If the Twelve have this right by the law, is there any danger of their ever making a mistake? No, not if they are infallible. But as we cannot make this claim for them, it is just possible that mistakes are made, and that some improvements can be made in the policy of appointing and carrying on missionary work.

They have for years appointed the seventy without consulting him as to the field of labor, even when the seventy has requested a certain field and has given special reasons for so requesting. By what authority they do it, we do not know. We are told that "all things shall be done by common consent in the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1). This should apply to the appointment of seventies also.

WHEN SEVENTY AND TWELVE DISAGREE

The seventy must submit or the question must be decided by a superior tribunal. The Twelve have their missions appointed by the First Presidency, and they are amenable to the Presidency in the same sense that the seventy are amenable to the Twelve. The case should go to the First Presidency, and as the Twelve are to do their work "under the direction of the Presidency of the church," the Presidency would have the authority to give the final "directions," in the case.

These three regulating quorums form a check to each other, so there is no chance for "bossism," or for one to play the tyrant over the other. The work of each quorum and officer remains legal till reversed by proper authority. The decision of a quorum, when rendered as a quorum decision, stands till reversed by the other two (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11).

One may disagree with the Twelve in his appointment, but he should submit or else appeal to the First Presidency, who should hear the case and decide accordingly.

The Lord said, "So far as you can agree, work together without heat, confusion, or malice" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 16). We should do this, but when we do not "agree," it is not supposed that the seventy should submit without being heard, and his reasons carefully considered by a proper tribunal which has the right to decide. This tribunal is the presiding one. It does not follow that a transfer from the Quorum of Seventy to the Twelve bestows additional wisdom. There is a difference between additional authority and additional wisdom.

SEVENTY AND GATHERING

In order to work together harmoniously, it is necessary that the rights and judgments of each be recognized. Demanding unquestioning obedience is not the way to prevent "heat, confusion or malice," among thinking men.

The present policy of keeping a man from home and changing him every year or two not only destroys his confidence in the wisdom of the appointing powers, but nullifies his missionary ability. It also prevents his development, and makes "eleven sermon" preachers. When he preaches in a branch or new opening, and does not expect to ever see them again, he cannot take the interest in his work that he should, and if he succeeds in interesting a few, he can not follow up the work till it is completed. To do this may require years. If his home were in the district and he knew he was to remain there for years, he could and would build permanently. He could adopt a suitable policy and carry it out, even if it took a lifetime. This should be done.

It is true the missionary gets some consolation when he realizes that he is not accomplishing half as much for the church as he could do, by saying, I am not to blame.

The following is in point:

And now, verily I say, concerning the residue of the elders of my church, the time has not yet come, for many years, for them to receive their inheritance in this land [Zion], except they desire it through the prayer of faith, only as it shall be appointed unto them of the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 9.

This indicates that only those elders who are to labor in or near Zion are to gather there, and these are to be appointed to go there "by the Lord." It will be "many years" before the Lord wants the "residue of the elders" to go there. And when he does he will tell them through the proper officers. There will be no guess work about it. This means the elders' families are to be, not in Zion, but in the missions with their husbands, and this can be done successfully only by keeping the elders in the same mission "for many years."

When the Lord spoke to those Saints in Kirtland, who he intended should go to Zion in a few years, he said, "Wherefore, let them act upon this land as for years, and this shall turn unto them for their good."

This is the advice that should be given to the Saints everywhere. Let them buy homes, build churches and parsonages, and proceed in every way as though they were to remain "for years, and this shall turn unto them for their good." Then if the time comes during our lifetime for us to gather to Zion, or to a stake, the Lord will enable us as wise Saints to sell our property, churches, parsonages, and all at par value, so we can "have all things prepared" before us. We should never get scared and run away. No good ever comes from being scared, for one always goes in the wrong direction.

Only six years ago the Lord spoke of the gathering; he did not tell us to start to Zion, nor even to get ready to start, but said: "The conditions surrounding the work, the increase of the membership of the church, the increasing desire for gathering together," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 128:1). The desire to gather was with the Saints instead of the Lord. There is a difference between "the increasing desire" of the Saints to gather and for the Lord to want them to gather. There was an "increasing desire" with the Israelites for a king, and the Lord made provisions for them to have their desires granted. But it would have been better for them to have waited till the Lord directed.

If you will read the writings of the late president of the church, you will see that he wrote but little to "increase the desire for gathering." It is safer to wait till the Lord directs through the president of the church.

OBLATIONS

Referring to an inquiry with reference to oblations I note a question as follows: "What should be done with the money that is collected at sacrament services?"

Answer. Doctrine and Covenants 59:2, states where the oblations should be placed. "Thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren and before the Lord." The oblations are offered unto God.

How should they be placed then?

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8.

The oblations that are given at sacrament service should be placed then at the direction of the bishop; and when you are in a district, the oblations should go into the hands of the bishop's agent of the district where the oblations are taken or sent directly to the bishop. However, we advise placing them in the hands of the agent of the district where the oblations are taken up.

If parties wish to take up an offering for incidental expenses in the branch at that time, notice must be given that this is not an oblation offering but for incidental expenses of the branch and then it is placed in the hands of the branch treasurer. There is no necessity of mixing the oblations with the incidental expenses of the branch any more than there is of mixing the incidental expenses with the consecration or tithing of the branch.

We advise that the incidental expenses be taken up at some other meeting than the sacrament service, but if the circumstances are such that the branch cannot meet any other time to take up the incidental expenses, then let it be announced that there will be a collection taken for incidental expenses of the branch in addition to the oblation that is given at the sacrament service.

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

TRAINING OUR CHILDREN

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

This question is a subject which should be uppermost in the mind of every Latter Day Saint. We as a people have received the light of the gospel, and a more perfect knowledge of what is expected of God's children. Therefore our responsibilities are greater, and we should endeavor to make our lives just what we think Jesus would in the same circumstances.

We well know the wickedness existing in the world to-day, and we all have to some extent trials and temptations too numerous to mention. But these are for a purpose, to test us, to prove whether we are worthy to be called children of God.

All things work together for good to those who love the Lord. Knowing this, why do we easily become discouraged when things go wrong?

No matter what may happen, if we put our trust in the Lord, he is ever ready and willing to help us. Let us at all times, whether we are at home or at work, with friends or foes, strive to live nearer to God and always ask ourselves under any circumstances, What would Jesus do?

I am sure if we keep that thought uppermost in our minds we will not stray very far away from God. The blessed assurance of the nearness of our best Friend is not obtained all at once. Many there are who go through life and never receive this knowledge. We ask, Why is this? Is God a respecter of persons? No. It is this: few really understand why they came into the world at all, and the importance of their mission.

Do we come into the world to live? Yes, in a sense, but our sojourn here is only a school preparing us to live hereafter, when Christ comes to claim his own.

The first thing for each of us to do is to step into the footsteps of Jesus: make our thoughts, our words and actions just what would be pleasing to him, then follow closely where he leads, shaping our lives by his example.

Since we realize God permitted us to come into the world for a purpose, and that each of us has a work to do, let us first see what that work is. Do you not think our first task is with ourselves? to get ourselves right in the sight of God? then show by our everyday life that we are striving to be his children? Let our light shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father who is in heaven.

Fathers and mothers in the Lord, are you letting your lights shine before your children? Are you following closely in the footsteps of the Master, and leading your little ones with you? If your child should die to-day, would you feel that you had done your full duty in instructing it in every way as God would have you? Or, perchance, if you should die, could you stand before your heavenly Father and truthfully say, "I have done all I could in training my child up in the right way."

How many parents realize the blessing and honor God bestowed upon them when he gave them little children? Suppose when children came into the world they were very wicked little creatures; and it was each parent's enforced duty to reform those little ones. How, then, would your duties compare to what they now are? God in his goodness did not allow this, but gave you a pure, innocent little babe, and expects you to train it up in paths of righteousness.

The mother who follows closely in the Savior's footsteps can impart that which is pure and good to the little embryo which will greatly influence the child all through life.

You may give as an excuse that your family was large, your cares so many that you did not have time to train your child as you would like to have done. God knows this; in fact he knows all things, so now is the time to lean upon his arm. Do not let the vain and fleeting things of this world keep you from giving God his share of your time. In providing food, clothing, shelter and a worldly education, remember these are only secondary things. Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and all these things shall be added unto you.

Some may say, I have taught my children the first principles of the gospel, and had them ready for baptism at eight years of age. Well and good, but is that all God expects? Do you feel that is the most important part of your duty? No, indeed, that is only the beginning.

Your child is passing his babyhood days and life's mysteries begin to unfold before him. His little brain is trying to comprehend; he is eager to learn. Now is the time to instill those good things into his mind. Pray God to help and direct you, then teach your child to come to you with every difficulty, and help him solve his problems. Then as he grows older teach him to understand that God is his truest friend, better than any earthly father or mother, and will always help him when he trusts him.

The future work of our church rests upon the children of to-day, so now is the time when you can do your greatest work for the Lord.

Do not tell your child what he should do, but take him by the hand and lead him in the narrow way. There may be some children who though properly instructed will wander far into the ways of the world. What satisfaction it should be to parents to know they had done their full duty. Keep right on trusting the Lord for all things, and he will in his own due time reward abundantly.

Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. Because we do not see immediate results, let us not get discouraged, but strive to keep ourselves true to our trust.

Teach your children obedience to yourself and your heavenly Father, not through fear, but with love and kindness. Seek to use wisdom with your kindness. There is kindness which savors of cruelty because it allows the child to be a little tyrant without so much as a word of remonstrance.

In observing the children in different homes we are at times made sad to see conditions even among Latter Day Saints. When we see a tired mother toiling all day and a good part of the night for grown-up sons and daughters we wonder who is to blame. That mother no doubt thinks she is being kind. Is she? No, she is only shortening her days of usefulness, and allowing those boys and girls to be thoughtless, selfish, and irresponsible. Everyone should be taught to wait on himself even when quite young; then as he grows older and has to fight life's battles alone he will be far more capable of holding any sort of position. He can and will depend upon himself, and be helpful instead of helpless.

The methods of that grand and noble woman, Doctor Montessori, should to a certain extent be followed in every home. With each child being able to do his share of the home work the mother has time for thought and the study of God's word, thus preparing herself to instruct others. If this method be adopted and a desire to follow in the Savior's footsteps be instilled into each little brain before the child is old enough to mingle much with the world, fewer boys and girls would leave the church.

Have you noticed in our Sunday schools how much larger our primary classes are than the intermediates or young men and women classes? Where do they go as they grow older? Die? Move away? Some do, but more are traveling in the ways of the world. Their minds are being filled with worldly things because you, no doubt, are neglecting to impress upon them their dependence on God and how needful it is for each of us to be workers in God's vineyard.

Let us reach out our hands kindly, lovingly, and help to draw them back into the fold.

Many times after years idly spent we begin to realize the necessity of working for the Master, and oh, how sorry we feel that we ever wandered away. We try to make up that time, but it has gone from us, never to return.

Let us now, before it is too late, consecrate our lives to the service of the Master, and help our children to do the same. Happy is the man or woman who has no wasted years to regret. Now is the appointed time. Now is the day of salvation. Let us each one seek to do our part bravely and well.

AIMS OF HOME AND CHILD WELFARE WORK

Psychologists teach us that the home is the environment that does most to shape the destinies of the future citizens of the state. If these theories are correct, the home should be more than a comfortable place to sleep and eat. It is a refuge or a retreat from the cares and anxieties of the world—a place of peace and comfort from the stress of outside duties. And the inspiration and guiding spirit of it all is the mother. In her centers the happiness of the whole family group. If this conception of the home and the mother is correct, it follows that a new value must be placed on some of the household processes, and in many homes a complete readjustment of the domestic machinery is necessary.

But however ideal the home conditions, home without children is not complete. The welfare of the church and state depends upon the rising generations for continuance. Your children and mine must fill their places, and it depends on their training what those places will be. Should we as a people, fail to recognize the importance of a problem of Nation-wide interest? No other question holds more of the attention of our best thinkers, to-day, than that of the welfare of the child.

There is work right at hand in every community. Statistics show that, in the United States, out of every 1,000 babies born, 150 do not live beyond infancy. In New Zealand, out of every 1,000 babies born, only 38 die within the first year. Quite a contrast, and yet New Zealand has only just begun her investigations along this line. Is it not time then, for a campaign here in this broad land against infant mortality, by teaching mothers how to bear and care for children?

Too long a time have brains and energy been devoted to perfection in livestock and animal industry, at the expense of the Nation's most valuable asset—its future men and women. Too long have the nature and needs of the child been left to the mother instinct. How far will the mother's instinct fit her for understanding and meeting the needs of her children to-day? In the matter of instinct, she has little, or nothing, over the brute creation. True, a woman without the mother instinct is an unnatural mother. The realm of a mother's instinct pertains almost entirely to her child's physical wants, and even there it is not a safe guide.

None of us are willing to admit that parenthood is less responsible than the teacher's office in our schools, and yet we insist on the highest qualifications there. We have established certain rules and certain requirements that a teacher must fill in her capacity, yet how many of us think of ourselves, in connection with our children, as teachers?

Let us see: The school-teacher teaches our child reading, writing, arithmetic, history, etc., to the end that he may go forth into the world, equipped with such knowledge as will enable him to compete favorably with those with whom he associates. But to the home teacher, the mother, usually falls the responsibility of instilling into the minds of her charges such vastly more important subjects as judgment, kindness, honesty, sympathy, patience, reverence, honor, courage and self control. It is her part to train the child that he may judge correctly between right and wrong, that he may make of his individual life a helpful and not a harmful thing. Failure of the parents to do this is the primary cause of the juvenile courts throughout the land.

It is the mother's privilege to instruct the child in the things that will make him strong and serviceable to his fellow men. It is hers to realize that she, too, is a teacher, and that her work is under the eye of the Great Teacher, who requires the best at her hands that she has to give.

Here is the field of the child-welfare workers, to impress those who will listen with the fact that more is required at their hands than ministering to the mere physical needs and comforts of their children. We often see homes where the offspring are cared for in the most careful manner so far as food and raiment are concerned, yet are starved and neglected in all that is refining and elevating. Many girls are permitted the utmost freedom to make their own acquaintances, select their own amusements and go where they will, all without an apparent thought on the part of those who should know of the dangers that lurk on every hand, not only for girls but for boys as well. Yet such parents are the ones that are the hardest to reach, as they generally fail to realize that their responsibility does not end with the material wants of their child.

A prominent authority in this movement has expressed himself as follows:

Bringing a child into the world is a prerogative that woman shares with every other female thing on this earth. It requires no brain, no reasoning powers, no sympathy, no soul to bear a child—only physical strength to bear physical pain is necessary.

But after the child is born, then must come the care and unselfish devotion that makes the word mother a prayer on the lips of every human who has known the right kind of a mother. There are mothers and mothers, and it is not how a mother brings a child into the world, but how she prepares him for speeding through it, that makes the difference.

Luther Burbank, the great wizard, says, "If it be worth while to spend ten years upon the ennoblement of a plant, be it fruit tree or flower, is it not worth while to spend ten years upon a child in his precious formative period, fitting him for the place he is to occupy in the world?"

In the home life and environments are the greatest factors in child-culture—the attitude of the father and mother toward each other and the community in general are sure to be reflected in the offspring of the home. To reach the highest degree of happiness, the parents should be believers and followers of the Divine Teacher, and should teach their children by example as well as precept to obey the gospel as well as temporal laws.

The father should not only do his part in providing for the home, but should have a part in the social life and good cheer of the family. If father's and husband's arrival is heralded by a sudden hush, it is a foregone conclusion that his place in the home is not what it should be. Besides being of good cheer, the mother and wife should exercise her ingenuity and skill in making the best of the conditions under which she is placed. Domestic science and home economics are designed to aid the wife in the solution of the daily needs and physical welfare of the family from a hygienic as well as an economical standpoint. Many there are who are wasting their substance and strength, when by turning a listening ear they might learn of an easier and better way.

As the mother of a brood of four youngsters of average intelligence and activities, I have received much help and information from the writings of those to whom the subject under discussion is a deep and important study. To my mind this is one of the greatest problems that must come to every home, the ambition of which is to fit children for the highest service in their sphere of life.

A loving parent has spoken to his children in these latter days and admonishes them to seek knowledge, by study and acquaintance with all good works. What is more important to the upbuilding of the church than good homes and good children? Truly, better homes will make a better church. Therefore, let no Latter Day Saint remain ignorant along these lines.

THE POWER OF THE PRIESTHOOD

In a letter written from Liberty jail, and published in the Times and Seasons, volume 1, pages 131 to 134, Joseph Smith says:

No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness, and meekness, and by love unfeigned; without hypocrisy, and without guile: reproving with sharpness when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and afterwards showing forth an increase of love towards him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy, so that he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death. Let thy soul be full of charity towards all men, and virtue guard thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrines of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven, thy scepter shall be an unchanging scepter of righteousness, the Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, the ends of the earth shall inquire after thy name.

THE SOURCE OF POWER

There can be but one source of the power of the priesthood, and that is from God. As John says: A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. Paul says: "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Of this fact all Saints are aware, but sometimes we fear that they fail to see the enabling clause of this priesthood.

CONSENT OF THE GOVERNED, THE ENABLING ACT

The Master when exercising this priesthood in Palestine, never used force to compel in any degree, a recognition of his right to act as an ambassador for God, but said: "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not." But he says further: "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." The only possible exception to this rule was when he drove the merchants and money changers from the temple, and their actions were an infraction of the moral code. "Ye have made it a den of thieves!"

Sometimes we are made to wonder, when we hear of brethren demanding their rights and even contesting another's right to act in some position where they have been placed to preside or officiate, and this under the claim of their official title, whether it would not be good for them to read the enabling clause as laid down in the letter referred to above.

No matter what may be my office in this church, unless I can make my ministrations of such character that they are desired by those to whom I am sent, there can be but one emergency in which I may be justified in asserting my official authority—the violation of the moral code.

At the very commencement of this work the Master declared, "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care," and again, "Faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."

May the Master assist us to qualify ourselves for the work laid upon us, and to do it in such a spirit that our ministrations, whether as presiding authorities, or as ambassadors of the word, carrying the message far and near, we shall persuade men "to be reconciled."

The question should not be, Is it my right to preside where this brother is standing? but rather, if I have failed to be given the opportunity for service, which I looked for as a part of my work, wherein have I failed to make my ministrations acceptable so that they are not sought after? Is the fault mine? Then let us remedy it by studying to show ourselves approved of God. Is it the fault of those to whom I am sent? Then let us leave the matter for the final arbitrament, when the word of God shall judge them, and this equally true among the Saints as in the world at large, for Christ's dominion shall be without compulsion, a kingdom of peace.

A. M. CHASE.

The chief function of the church is to point men to Christ. Only a sane, constructive and scriptural evangelism can save the church. This is the drive wheel of all the churches in the land. If passion and compassion have gone out, then our churches become nothing more than ethical culture clubs. A church may be only an organized corpse, and its orthodoxy a sickly, grinning skeleton. One thousand and one nondescript movements can not take the place of the church, which is the supreme agency in the world.—Reverend George W. Truett.

THE FOURTH OF JULY AT SING SING

When convict John Doe* awoke in his cell at Sing Sing on the morning of the recent Fourth of July holiday, he shuddered at the thought of the day that was before him. On the last holiday, Decoration Day, he had been a free man. To-day the yellowish-brown walls of his cell, glistening with dampness and stifling him with their narrowness, seemed unendurable. Tantilizing memories of the beach at Coney Island and of the lucrative board walk at Atlantic City swept over him. He cursed his luck.

But convict Richard Roe, who had spent twenty-three Fourth of Julys in Sing Sing, had far different waking thoughts. He welcomed the day. Gratitude and hope filled his heart. He realized that this would be the most wonderful Independence Day he had ever seen since the heavy iron door of the prison clanged shut upon him. Heretofore the coming of a holiday on Monday had meant that the inmates were locked in their cells at five o'clock on Saturday afternoon and kept there until six o'clock Tuesday morning. Two days and three nights, fifty-nine hours, of rigidly enforced silence in a cell hardly more than a stone box—a cell only three feet four inches wide and only seven feet long, where water dripped from the walls and where the air was indescribably foul! Is it any wonder that Sundays and holidays have always bred hatred and rebellion in the hearts of Sing Sing prisoners?

On my arrival at Sing Sing that morning, I asked Warden Osborne what the events of the day were to be. "That matter is in the hands of the officers of the League," he replied; "the Mutual Welfare League," he added. "They have the plans in charge. Of course they consulted me, but they've looked after the details. I know there's to be a holiday dinner, for I've attended to that, and there's to be a baseball game, if the weather clears, and a motion-picture show. But I don't think," he concluded, smiling, "that there's to be anything of special interest here to-day."

The morning had dawned dark and showery. But the leaden clouds and the rain sweeping in gusts across the yard and filling the baseball diamond with puddles seemed to have no depressing effect on the spirits of the inmates. As I stepped into the cell block, under the courteous guidance of Mr. Timothy O'Connor, of the warden's staff, the sound of hundreds of voices, talking and laughing, filled this disgraceful old structure, robbing it for an instant of some of its horror. On each of the six long galleries groups of men were gathered together, chattering. They did not look like criminals, but like ordinary men of the outside world. In honor of the day they were allowed to wear white or colored negligee shirts, collars, and ties instead of the gray prison shirts. The barbers had evidently been busy early, for most of the men were clean shaven. It was easy to discern the feeling of self-respect which was fostered by this change of attire.

Suddenly from one of the upper galleries the sound of music floated down. A negro quartet of banjos and guitars was playing. Several voices joined in the music. There was no shouting, no disorder; these men were enjoying themselves in a simple, rational way.

The special holiday dinner was the next event of the day. Under the old system the men were made to march in utter silence to the mess-hall—except on holidays when their meals were thrust through the barred gate of their cells—and when in the mess-hall they were not allowed to speak, nor even to turn their heads to the right or left. Guards watched them constantly; and if one of these “screws” caught a man breaking these rules he sent him to the dark cell. On this Fourth of July the spectacle of hundreds of men marching to the mess-hall unguarded and accompanied only by their chosen delegates was inspiring. They walked along with heads up, shoulders squared, talking to one another, and filed into their places at the long, narrow tables in a most orderly manner. While they ate they laughed and talked, and no “screw” spied upon them. One needed only to invoke the vision of that great room under the law of compulsory silence in order to realize what a marvelous change for the better has been wrought.

While the various companies were taking their places at the tables the brass band of thirty-five pieces—the pride of Sing Sing—crashed into the stirring strains of “The army and navy forever!” Instantly hundreds of voices joined in, and at the close of the selection the applause was tumultuous. All during the dinner hour the band played popular airs and patriotic music. Every selection was enthusiastically applauded. This holiday dinner, which had been so eagerly looked forward to, consisted of soup, which was served in tin basins, somewhat rusty, and boiled chicken, accompanied with mashed potatoes, bread and butter, pie, and cheese.

At the close of the dinner Warden Osborne made a speech which contained the surprises of the day. The applause when he stepped upon the platform left no doubt as to the regard which the inmates have for him. It was a full minute before he could get a chance to speak.

He began by telling them that in celebration of the day he would announce two new privileges which would be granted to them. “The first one,” he said, “is that you may have an extra hour of recreation during the summer months—that is, you may have two hours in all, from four o’clock until six in the afternoon.” With a roar of sound like that of Niagara the mess-hall broke into applause. When Mr. Osborne could finally get silence, he explained to them that in return for this coveted privilege every man must work faithfully at his shop job until four o’clock.

“You know best, each of you,” he said, “whether you are playing fair now. I can’t keep a watch on every one of you, but you know how it is with yourself. From now on make it your business to work right up till four o’clock. That is the price you must pay for the new privilege of an extra hour in the yard.” Men glanced at each other, nodding their heads in tacit agreement. There was no doubt about the willingness to “stand by” the warden.

“The other announcement,” Mr. Osborne went on, “will, I think, meet with the approval of each one here. You all know how inadequate the bathing facilities here are—less than a dozen tubs for sixteen hundred men! Well, you are to have a new swimming-pool in the North Basin. A board fence—” the rest of the sentence was drowned in the thunderous acclamations of delight. They clapped their hands, they stamped their feet, they shouted. The warden waited patiently until this first burst of enthusiasm had spent itself. Then he held up his hand for silence. A sibilant “sh-sh-sh” ran through the crowd.

“I’ve often told you,” he began, “that the price of privilege is responsibility. You can have only what you earn. You must pay in one way or another for what you get. In return for this swimming-pool I shall expect you to keep the following new rules. They are just, they are necessary, and they must be kept.” He then read several rules enforcing strictness in the use of passes and pass-books in going from one part of the prison to another, and forbidding the loitering of inmates around the entrances to the various buildings. “These are your rules,” said the warden, in closing, “proposed by your judiciary, and approved by your delegates, and you must obey them.” The hearty approbation which was given to his speech showed how strong the feeling of loyalty and responsibility has become.

In the afternoon the rain stopped, the sun came out, drying off the baseball field, and the game with the visiting team from New York City was played to crowded bleachers. It was a fine-looking team that battled for the honor of Sing Sing, and won. There was no trace of prison pallor in their sunburned faces, no hint of prison confinement in their athletic bodies, so well set off by the attractive uniform of white trimmed with green. These are the colors of the Mutual Welfare League, and they mean truth and hope. The spirit of fair play was manifested throughout the game. Good plays of the opposing team were greeted with shouts of approval. The enthusiasm of the crowd, the gratuitous advice from the side-lines, the catcalls, hootings, and yells of encouragement showed that a "fan" is always a fan even though high stone walls and sentries in watch-towers are between him and the outside world. Beyond the bleachers the Hudson River sparkled in the rain-washed sunshine, beyond the wall were family, home, and friends. But here, inside the prison yard, this little community for an hour or two forgot these far-away things in the wholesome excitement of the great American game. Are these men not being better prepared to be decent American citizens than if they had spent the afternoon locked in a stifling cell?

Another event which marked the day was the new arrangement for interviews between the inmates and their visitors. Heretofore all conversations have had to be carried on through two gratings, between which was an aisle. It was not possible, therefore, to touch even the finger tips of the beloved one who came to visit. Warden Osborne felt that these gratings, which disfigure the sight of the face seen through them, were a handicap to the prisoner's self-respect and an unnecessary precaution for men who have proved that they can be trusted. So he arranged little compartments fenced off by gratings, and on this Fourth of July the prisoners sat down by the side of their visitors. As we passed by a father who was kissing a baby the man looked up at the warden with tears in his eyes. "Warden," he said, "this is the first time I've ever been able to even touch my little baby. Thank you, sir, thank you!" The gratitude of both the prisoners and the visitors for this privilege of speaking face to face, instead of through a grating, darkly, was very touching.

After supper a motion-picture play, "Hearts in Exile" was given in the chapel. The men came in and took their seats in as orderly a manner as if they had been a college community assembling to hear a lecture—in fact, more so. They were not accompanied by guards. The lights went out. There was half a minute of almost utter darkness before the first picture flashed upon the screen. Yet there was not the slightest disorder. Throughout the play the men proved themselves keenly appreciative spectators. No subtle point of pathos or humor escaped them. And during the whole evening their behavior was dignified.

To anyone who studies at first hand the conditions to-day at Sing Sing there can be no doubt that during the seven and a half months since Thomas Mott Osborne was appointed warden a miracle of regeneration, of new manhood, and of loyalty has been wrought among the inmates of this prison. Society will always be his debtor for what he is doing.—Beatrice Denison, in The Outlook, July 21, 1915.

COUNTRY CHURCH PROBLEMS

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27.—One out of every nine country churches has been abandoned in recent years. Only one third are increasing in membership and two thirds have either ceased growing or are dying. Eighty-three per cent have less than 100 members; 21 per cent have less than 25; 27 per cent have between 25 and 50; and 34 per cent have between 50 and 100. Only six per cent have individual preachers, while 26 per cent share ministers with another church; 23 per cent have one third the time of a minister; 27 per cent have one fourth time; 14 per cent have one fifth time; 5 per cent have one sixth time. A large proportion of preachers receive about the same pay as a day laborer. Less than 40 per cent of the rural population are church members.

These facts, shown in an extensive rural survey of Ohio, whose results were announced to-day, are applicable to most States, according to officers of the Commission on Church and Country Life. Plans for scientific surveys in all States, to secure definite data for each locality, will be formulated at the national convention of the Commission on Church and Country Life, to be held in Columbus, Ohio, December 8, 9 and 10, with President Wilson and Gifford Pinchot among the speakers.

The Ohio survey is considered the most thorough ever undertaken, but the campaign, not only for surveys but also for speedy reforms to make church community centers, as well as houses of religious worship, is to be carried into every part of the country within the next year.

Here are the causes which the country church of the near future must promote in order to save itself, according to a much-discussed report by President Kenyon L. Butterfield of Massachusetts Agricultural College, ready for presentation to the commission: Good roads, better farming, encouragement of agricultural college extension courses, community beautification, public health and recreation, temperance, better schools, Saturday half-holiday for agricultural laborers, community athletics, observance of religious and patriotic holidays and home-coming weeks, community planning and contentment with farm life.

The church must become the social center for the community, with its minister leading in a variety of interests, and religion thereby will become a stronger appeal, says the Butterfield report. Naturally this program is expected eventually to dim denominational lines.

Concrete means of promoting the community church movement are disclosed in another report which the commission is expected to adopt as working plans. President Wilson, who will make an address at the convention, December 10, is reported particularly interested in these plans.

They are summarized thus: First, rural ministers and church leaders during the next year will receive publications issued by the Commission on Church and Country life devoted to the problems of rural church federations and combinations. This will prepare the way for discussion of church cooperation. Then in each township or natural community, churches will be urged to form a federation, with delegates and ministers from each church forming a supervisory committee to coordinate community activities. Ultimately this federation might employ a common minister and pay him a salary adequate to allow him to undertake wider social work. In many cases these churches could merge. Denominational connection with a certain church organization could be maintained, but within the community sectarian differences would be largely ignored.

It is a big program, but officers of the commission believe they can make great headway within the year. The movement will be directed by Gifford Pinchot, chairman, and Reverend Charles O. Gill, secretary of the commission.—Fall River (Massachusetts) Evening News, November 27, 1915.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA
Home News

The following letter from a lady who took an infant child from the home, when but a few days of age, is a significant suggestion of the benefit the home is accomplishing, and the reciprocal good done by the parent and child thus brought together. Let us bear one another's burdens and thus fulfill the law of Christ.

"Will pen you a few lines this morning and send you a post-card picture of our dear little girl. She is nineteen months old now, weighs thirty-one pounds, has sixteen teeth, and has been walking since she was thirteen and a half months old. She is still bottle fed, taking her nourishment at regular hours, and is also allowed light nourishing food at meal-time. She is a happy, healthy little girl, and a great joy and blessing to our home.

"I wish to mention the adoption papers, as I have not yet received them. Do you think it could be arranged so I would receive them in time to have them recorded in 1915? If there is any cost in connection with the papers, will be pleased to send the necessary amount.

"When you visit _____, we would be pleased to have you call and see baby."

These testimonials of the homes of love, given to the little ones under our care, and of the blessing these angels of peace are to the homes whose protection is extended to them, are very encouraging to the trustees who feel that largely the happiness of these little ones is committed into their care.

We are also cheered by the manner in which Father and Mother Briggs are received by the affectionate hearts of the little ones who remain with us. Very naturally they felt very much aggrieved at the departure of Father and Mother Robinson, much as our own little ones would to have their own parents succeeded by others; but their tender hearts respond to the loving kindness of Father and Mother Briggs, and we feel when entering the precincts of the Children's Home that we are entering the sacred precincts of a God-blessed home of happiness and peace.

Receipts

We have not received enough cash to meet our current expense for a month or two last past, but by comparison with the receipts of the same period last year we find an increase has been made on receipts for expenses, though there has been a substantial sum subscribed towards the payment of the outstanding indebtedness.

The contributions in fruit and provision have exceeded that of any other period of the home's activity. Receipts of fruit, jelly, preserves, etc., are coming in almost daily. As an instance of the liberal way in which our children are remembered, here are two communications, leaving the same place on the same day.

"Dear Brother: I am sending you two dollars as a Thanksgiving offering for Children's Home from the primary class in the Sunday school. I am not sure who to send it to, but thought you would attend to it."

"Dear Brother: The ladies aid, with the cooperation of the Saints of the branch here, have solicited a barrel of jellies and preserves for the Latter Day Saints' Children's Home, same being shipped to-day by freight prepaid. Let us know at once if this is received.

"It has been a pleasure for the Saints to make this donation, and we hope the children will enjoy it."

While cash is what is especially needed, because the management knows just what is required and can therefore purchase to the best advantage, and because we have to have cash to compensate those who labor, yet these donations of necessary supplies are very acceptable indeed, and it touches us deeply to read the expressions of deep solicitude and love that accompany these donations so freely and generously bestowed.

Let none who help in this noble work doubt but they are scattering sunshine and peace among these little ones who but for their kindness would be in desolate and discouraging circumstances. As long as one of these children live, your names will be held in fond remembrance, and at the altar of prayer God's blessing will be solicited for you; while many shall rise up to call you blessed.

Autumn Days

How we have enjoyed these beautiful autumn days with the old trees that shelter our beautiful home, robing themselves in crimson, scarlet and gold, and changing their dress almost daily.

A poet has said of these autumn days:

"The melancholy days have come,
The saddest of the year*
With wailing winds and naked woods,
And meadows brown and sear."

But we have not found them melancholy. We have enjoyed wandering and playing under the great trees, and thinking how wisely God has ordered that when the leaves which were once green and offered us shelter from the rays of the sun have served their purpose and we no longer need their shade, they fall and decay to make the ground richer, that the grass next year may be greener and the trees more lovely. Then we have had plenty to do. The boys have been helping father, going to the orchard of a good friend several miles away after apples, and then carrying them into the cellar and putting them away to enjoy when the colder days shall come.

The girls have been helping mother care for the household work and take care of the little ones. Then school has been in session, and we have enjoyed our lessons and the kind instruction of our teachers. We have had so much to be thankful for that we were in condition to enjoy Thanksgiving Day, and to be truly grateful for the good dinner that we enjoyed and for the good and pleasant home that is ours.

November, which by many is thought to be a dreary month, has not been so to us. It has passed cheerfully, and though we have seen gloomy days we have felt to sing with the poet:

"November a dreary month,' you say?
But why make it worse by sighing?
Let's try to find how many pleasant things
We can do while her days are flying.

"The best way to brighten a dreary day,
Lighten tasks, or a dismal room,
Is to pick out a cheerful song and sing—
'Twill quickly dispel the gloom.

"Sighs waken sighs—mirth answers mirth,
We will find as we travel along,
And many a life takes an upward trend
For the lilt of a happy song.

"So through gloom days it is up to us
Just to play the sunshine's part;
For work and troubles will lighter grow
If we carry a cheerful heart."

Our Treasury Department

The following brief statement is for the months of August, September and October, 1915. The cash receipts for the three months were $862.58. Three hundred and thirteen dollars of this amount is to apply on the Children's Home debt, leaving the balance of $549.58 for the running expenses of the home for three months. The total running expense for that time was $622.88, leaving a deficit of $73.30.

This will indicate to the supporters of the home that the contributions are insufficient to meet the running expenses. We suggest that the workers take this report into serious consideration, and if possible, help us to devise ways and means whereby our receipts may be increased to meet the demand.

Since our last report we have received valuable donations—canned fruit, jellies, preserves, clothing, etc. It has been somewhat difficult for us to identify these donations with the parties donating. If those contributing to the support of the home would, in addition to sending in a bill of lading, write the treasurer that such goods have been shipped, giving the names of the donors, we will have little difficulty in giving the proper credit to those donating, and will send receipts from the treasurer's office.

The home is still in need of those who are willing to contribute each month regularly, such amounts as they may be able to give, and for this purpose we have contribution cards which we will send to anyone desiring them that they may hand to others. This method is very effectual for the running expenses of the home, because if we have a number who have filled out these cards, promising to donate a certain amount each month, we can, as a rule, count on these amounts coming in each month. Can we not have more contributors? Send to the treasurer for a supply of these contribution cards.

We have word from several that they are intending to remember the Children's Home debt fund, and by the first of the year will contribute liberally to that fund. What a splendid thing it would be to be relieved of this burden of debt. Then all our contributions could go for the running expenses and for better equipment for service. Let us hear from friends of the home by way of suggestions along the lines of finances.

The brother who expressed himself as being willing to duplicate any amount contributed to the debt fund by any one person up to $500 has informed the trustees that he is willing to change his statement to read as follows: Any amount up to $500 contributed to the debt fund by any number of persons up to January 1, 1916, will be duplicated by him.

This would mean that if between now and the first of next January there is contributed to the home treasury to apply on home debt the amount of $500 this brother will put another $500 with it, which would amount together to the sum of $1,000.

Come, let us get busy. A splendid opportunity to pay off the home debt; but in the meanwhile we must not neglect the regular amounts needed each month for running expenses.

Home and Child Welfare Department

JANUARY READING—ADOLESCENCE

RELIGION INHERENT

"God implanted religion with the roots of our being, to grow under proper conditions equally with the other elements of our expanding life. . . . God does the planting . . . in every normal child; he looks to home and church for proper care and training."

"Notable is the child's inherent faith in God and simple trust in God; his clear acceptance of immortality as an axiom; his faith in the goodness of God and his instinctive dependence upon it; his intuitive knowledge that God is a loving, personal spirit, the causal agent and source of life, at the heart of things; and also his honest conscientiousness. These are among the fundamental religious instincts of the human race. In their purest, simplest form the child pos-esses them. No wonder the Wisest and Best once said: 'Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.'—Fiske.

By latter-day revelation God's plan for the continuance of this native faith and trust is made plain to us. "Great things" are to be required at the hands of the parents for their influence upon their children even before these little ones "begin to become accountable." As children develop in understanding they are to be taught "faith in God and in his Son Jesus Christ, . . . to pray and to walk uprightly." They are also to be taught concerning baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit so that when they have reached the age of eight years they may be ready to receive the ordinances by which they become members of the church.

Thus the Lord has provided that they may continue in the way of willing obedience, with the Holy Spirit as their guide, leaving no break between the time of childish innocence and acceptance with God and the time of conscious choice to be free from sin, a member of the family of God.

RELIGIOUS AWAKENING

"Statistics show that far more conversions, proportionately, take place during the adolescent period, which does not normally end before the age of twenty-four or -five, than during any other period of equal length. At this age most churches confirm."—Hall.

"About ten or eleven the child begins to manifest an interest in the why of things. . . . The mind questions partly because the spiritual character of religion is becoming prominent. . . . Religion is becoming a personal affair. . . . It deepens, is inspiring and enforces obligation. These transitional years are years of beginnings, awakenings, fathomings, transformations and revolutions."—Haslett.

"The evolution of the religion of boyhood is beautiful, wonderful, entirely natural. The evolution of the religion of youth is more subtle, still more wonderful, but no less natural. It is simply the way of God with the boy soul.

"The boy on the verge of physical manhood is at the first crisis of his life, and though he understands it not, he is conscious of strange movings within him. It is of course a mental crisis no less than a physical and it should be a religious and social crisis also, for puberty is essentially a new birth of the person into a larger life. It is the new birth, not merely of bodily functions and powers, but . . . of everything which deepens, exalts and enriches the boy's life. It is the real birth of the individual into independence in thinking, feeling, choosing, though not fully realized for two or three years to come. It is the slow awakening of the God-given reason, born to supercede instinct and to check or direct impulse. It is especially the flowering of the social instinct, which hitherto has not been prominent. With the birth of altruistic feelings the boy outgrows his egoism, often his selfishness, and his interests broaden with his sympathies. . . .

"It is no meaningless coincidence that the culmination of the religious impulses and the sex impulses come together. . . . Both mean life for others. Now as never before, the boy is sounding the depths of his soul. . . . Early adolescence is the chivalry period of boy life and its characteristic is personal loyalty and hero worship. Nothing could be more natural than for the boy soon to yield his supreme loyalty to Jesus Christ, his Lord. . . .

"Early adolescence marks preeminently the social awakening of the soul, the discovery of the world of persons. Middle adolescence completes the boy's discovery of himself. Individuality is the key word best describing the religious development now. The boy has finally come to himself. . . . He is a person; he will stand alone! He resents interference, coddling, discipline, advice, except from whom he chooses. It is the self-assertive period of life, often the revolutionary period. Its dangers are grave and serious; but its opportunity is glorious! It is the life chance which comes to every healthy, wholesome youth, born to the purple, the royal purple of sonship to God; the chance to live a kingly life, to master self, to overcome selfishness, to throttle evil passions and unworthy emotions, to crown with growing efficiency and usefulness every worthy talent and personal power; in short to grow into symmetrical, well-rounded manliness, Christian manliness, the threefold life which makes a man, in body, mind and spirit. . . .

"In boyhood imagination soars; in youth, ambition. It is the age of faith and courage undaunted. . . . When this natural heroism of youth is combined at this period with the religious impulse, the result is inspiring. . . . Even when the boy in the Christian home, has always considered himself a Christian, or at least has always meant to be and has as a child loved Jesus Christ with a sincere and childlike simplicity, all of which is as natural as it is beautiful, even in such a case, when the boy passes through the deeper experience of adolescence, he finds the rebirth of the soul as necessary as was the new birth of body and mind. In such cases the 'illumination' experience of whole-souled dedication to God, which may come several years after church membership is practically a new conversion, made necessary by the higher levels, or rather the deeper currents, of the adolescent life."

SKEPTICISM AND CRITICISM

"The winning appeal to the boy at this period must be the broad appeal to his whole manhood. . . . The young fellow may even pretend to be irreverent and like to parade his doubts but he is not immune to religious influence of the right sort. It is a double slander on young manhood and true religion to assert that when the boy graduates from boyhood . . . he has outgrown his capacity for religion. No, he is just discovering that capacity. . . . The young man is deeply in earnest at this period, even though he may try to conceal it sometimes by feigned frivolity. For this period is especially the period of the battle royal of life, the struggle for character, that subtle conflict between the good and evil forces incarnate in the young man's person, a conflict—perhaps which no one knows but himself and his God. . . . Atheistic or skeptical tendencies often appear, but are usually of short duration, and the young man who thinks his way through independently finds surer ground for faith than ever. At all events he must have freedom for independent thinking."—Boy Life and Self Government, by George Walter Fiske.

"Adolescence is the time of questioning. The growing critical faculty should be treated with the same respect as the other great faculties of the mind and encouraged to a normal exercise. The youth should be encouraged to reverently 'prove all things' in order that he may 'hold fast that which is good.' Only so can he acquire the vertebrate convictions which can be relied on to stand upright in the storm and stress of life. . . . The normal skepticism of youth is simply the attempt of the fledgling reason to try its wings and acquire the art of flight."—Adolescent Boyhood, by Hanford M. Burr, B. A., B. D.

"Conscious reasoning now asserts itself and the youth puts to the test all that touches his intellect. He becomes a remorseless critic especially of himself. 'Why was I born?' 'What am I good for?' are questions with which he frequently torments himself and which he asks others, and the ofttimes unsatisfactory answers sometimes lead an overconscientious youth into morbid melancholy.

"Moral and religious truths do not escape questioning and doubts now arise concerning God and the universe. These doubts and questions, if not carefully treated, may lead to flippancy and boastfulness in religious matters, if not to actual skepticism. They should be respected, for the young questioner is simply trying to adjust himself to the mysteries about which he has hitherto thought little and an independent mind is not willing to take these things for granted but must reason them out in its own way. Many parents and teachers fail at this point to influence the young inquirer because of lack of sympathy with his questions and doubts."—Emma Virginia Fish.

RELIGION THE GREAT SAFEGUARD

"The great peril of the adolescent period lies in the fact that the capacity for self-control does not keep pace with the growing intensity of impulse. Perhaps the abnormal conditions of modern civilization are responsible for this in some measure. The development and reinforcement of all the regulative faculties and forces should be the chief aim of parent, teacher and leaders. . . .

"The soul becomes sensitive in a new way to the appeal of truth and beauty and righteousness. There is a new capacity not merely for love of woman, but for love of one's fellows and love of God. . . . The close relation between sex and religious feeling points to the fact that religious feelings and principles are the best normalizers of the sex life at any age. It is providential, then, that the boy is peculiarly responsive to the appeal of religion at the time when he becomes responsive to the appeal of sex. It seems to be a part of the divine plan that love of God and love of woman should go hand in hand, and we anxious parents and friends would do well to remember it. . . . We cannot handle the problems of sex without a renewed emphasis upon plain, old-fashioned piety. The heart that is right with God has found its normal center and so its moral equilibrium."—Burr.

"The child who reaches adolescence a Christian properly trained may have some storm and stress during this trying period but if properly looked after he will come forth settled and fixed in his religious habits and characters for life.

"But even such a youth has need of careful nurture and help, for he has entered upon a new world and has no previous experience to guide him. Now is the time to give practice in self-sacrifice and in service for God and man, for the adolescent, with his newly awakened life eager for activity will 'perform duty for the Master as at no other time in life,' . . . and young people should be trained not to overlook the fact that whatever the life calling, service for the Master can be performed there. Unselfishness and helpfulness at home, faithfulness and honesty at school and fair dealing and integrity in business should be made as much a part of the youth's religion as church attendance and duties. Religion made a part of the daily life through childhood and these early, intense adolescent years will not be in much danger of losing its hold upon the mature man and woman. It is the separation between religion and daily living that makes frivolous insincere Christians."—Miss Fish.

"We want a home religion that enters into every rule, arrangement and fiber of family life: a religion that shall be as natural as eating and sleeping; a religion that shall brighten and sweeten every atom of family existence. Such a religion appeals to the child not as a luxury added to life but as an ingrained fiber of all true and natural life.

"What is the basis of high principle and noble living? It is the moral sense: and the home is the school where the moral sense is educated and man's ideal is developed. . . . Teach the young from the beginning the great moral law of cause and effect—teach them not to look for wealth without work, for honor without honesty; teach them that character stands above surroundings; that esteem should be bestowed where it is due.

"Then, neglecting no part of physical, intellectual and social education . . . remember that the greatest thing in the world is to bring the soul to God. 'Unless the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it' applies preeminently to the building of character. God is necessary to the flowering and fruition of the soul as sunlight to that of the plant. Faithfully doing our work of planting and cultivating we may reverently expect the miracle of the sunlight."

Laboring for Zion

The year is fast drawing to a close—a year never to be forgotten, one that will go down in history as one of the most trying to the nations of the world. The happenings have been of great interest to all people, but especially to the Saints of God.

We should be thankful to God for his blessings to us as a Nation: the harvest has been bountiful, and we are at peace with all men, and as a Nation are moving on in the even tenor of our way.

There are many things being done which we cannot indorse, yet we believe in the power that called us into existence as a Nation, and that that power will use that Nation to accomplish its purpose. Therefore, as a people, believing in the eternal purpose for which God brought forth this Nation—that the Saints of the Most High may be in the van of the workers of righteousness, and become instruments in his hands for the accomplishment of his work, let us heed the admonitions of his word to us in these last days and strive to keep his commandments unto us as a church. Having obeyed the ordinance by which we become his children, let us go on unto that perfection which he desires of us, by learning and doing that which the law requires.

As baptism is important, or bearing our testimony of the truth of this latter-day work after we have entered the fold, so the law of offering, tithes and consecrations is for the development of the Christlike spirit of giving, that the various departments of the work may receive proper support, that the design of the Almighty may be accomplished through us, that design being a plan, yea a law making his people equal in all things temporal. God intends that the faithful shall enjoy the blessings of a redeemed land, when the curse shall be removed for their sake, and they shall build her holy city which shall become a refuge for his people in the perilous times to come.

In order to do this he has given a law unto his Saints with a promise if they obey he is bound. Shall we then forget to honor God with our substance? Nay, let us seek to more fully comply.

Many of the Saints have done well and nobly. There are many more who have not made their offering unto God, or rendered the tithed, which is the Lord's share of what they have received.

Now Saints, is not this a matter worthy of our serious attention? Can we not arrange to help in the Lord's work? We are all coworkers in this work. He that toils in the affairs of business and everyday work can share in this glorious work of the gospel by obeying the temporal law, so that with the priesthood we can help to gather the honest in heart into the kingdom of God, his true church.

How did you learn of the gospel? From some servant of God perhaps who left his loved ones to the care of the church and forsook his vocation by which he could amply provide for them—all that you and I might hear the glad tidings he brought us in the way God appointed.

Have you thought of our aged ones who have labored long through the heat of the day, and in their declining years have no home in which to rest, as also other unfortunate worthy ones? Would you like to see them safely housed and cared for? Then can you give an offering of consecration as the law requires?

What we have said of the aged and missionary applies to our Sanitarium and Children's Home for the homeless orphan of our people. Also our college, where not only the young but the old as well, may become workmen thoroughly equipped for the battles of life and more especially the work of the Lord? All these are only the carrying into effect of the laws establishing the kingdom of God upon the earth.

Saints, let us count the blessing which the gospel has given us and give unto the Lord his portion, and if we have nothing to tithe, nor surplus to consecrate, let us give an offering unto God. If it be a sacrifice the greater the reward; for our heavenly Father knows these things and they are not despised by him, but prized many times above the generous gifts of him who has an abundance.

Dear Saints, can we not work with the bishop's agents of our various districts? each doing his part, be it little or much? that the work may not languish? So may we help bring forth Zion, that her light may shine unto the ends of the earth, that the elect of God may be gathered into her borders, and that all may hear the gospel of the Son of God.

To this end let us all labor, that we may be among the jewels the Lord shall gather when he comes.

Yours in the gospel,

M. L. SCHMID.

DELTA, COLORADO, November 25, 1915.

VINAL HAVEN, MAINE, November 9, 1915.

Editors Herald: As a band of Saints, we are still holding up the gospel banner and are using all means in our reach to present the glad tidings to the people. Though few in number and somewhat scattered, we are nevertheless united in the one purpose, and our efforts are being made manifest in this place, not only in the attendance at our services, but in the efforts put forth by other churches to hold the people. The people here are getting the go-to-church-on-Sunday habit.

In August, Brother Raymond obtained the use of the town Hall in which to hold our Sunday evening services, and Brethren Begg and Raymond are telling the gospel story to the people every Sunday evening with fair attendance. Brother Begg is also speaking every Thursday night in the Aery-Harbor Schoolhouse, and Brother Raymond every other Sunday afternoon at the Granite Island Schoolhouse. Both have aroused fair interest.

We had with us Elder I. M. Smith the last two weeks of October. He presented the gospel to his audience with such plainness that it would leave them no reasonable excuse when they stand at the last day before the great tribunal bar of God. Two precious souls were added to the kingdom by baptism, Brother James Barton and wife. We feel that others are near. Brother Smith's instruction to the Saints has built them up in the faith. It has given us a firmer determination to keep the full law of Christ, and cleanse our lives that we may stand united in the great cause of truth.

I rejoice that I have had a willingness to join myself with the children of God. May we all have on the wedding garment, which is the righteousness of the Saints, that when the Master shall appear in the clouds of heaven we may go forth and greet him with songs of gladness.

Ah! the midnight cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." Until that day may we battle on with pure spirits and complete confidence in the ultimate triumph of this latter-day work, is the prayer of,

Your brother,

W. L. CANDAGE.

BIGELOW, MISSOURI, November 10, 1915.

Editors Herald: I arrived home from my former field the latter part of March. Attended the General Conference and was appointed to labor in the Nodaway District, which comprises the five northwestern counties of Missouri. I can say that I have enjoyed the labor in this field.

There is a good band of Saints located here, who are willing to help the missionary in his work. There is a large number of young people here who promise prospects for the future, if they will continue faithful in the performance of their respective duties, those placed upon every Saint of God.

I have been able to open the work in some new places during the summer, and have also labored some in branches. I had the pleasure of holding forth in the new Guilford church a couple of weeks, baptizing six, one of them a promising young man who has been a teacher in the Sunday school for some time. This young man has a good influence in and out of the church.

At present I am about eight miles southwest of Bigelow holding forth in a schoolhouse. We have a good attendance every night. There are a few Saints here, and also several who seem to be near the kingdom. We hope they may not wait too long to enter. I am assisted for a few days by W. B. Torrance, the bishop's agent of this district.

Yesterday we walked two and one half miles to the Rulo ferry, crossed the Missouri River in a skiff, and walked over three miles north into Nebraska to the home of Sister Harlan Jones. We found her aged father, Thomas Kent, there, who was baptized in Illinois many years ago. His parents were members of the church in the days of Joseph the Martyr. Brother Kent said that his parents always testified that Joseph was all that he claimed to be.

We found these two Saints, though isolated from church privileges for many years, still alive to the work. They are readers of the HERALD. We also found in Sister Jones's husband a good friend to the cause of our Master, and if I am not mistaken he will in due time accept the gospel. We had Bible reading, song and prayer, and administered to Brother Kent.

The Saints of the district have not only remembered the missionary, but his family also, by sending to them potatoes, apples, and other useful things.

With a desire to continue in the good work of the Lord, and a wish for the redemption of God's people, I remain,

Your brother and servant,

OSCAR WILLIAM OKERLIND.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

HAYWARD, CALIFORNIA, November 10, 1915.

Editors Herald: As my mother and I live about twenty miles from the exposition in San Francisco, we often go there. We nearly always call on Brother and Sister Pitt at the church exhibit, and always find them busy. They are very earnest and enthusiastic workers, Sister Pitt often going beyond her strength. The booth is attractive; the bust of our late president and the pictures of the Martyr and his wife draw the people's attention. Many who can read faces are able to see that these founders of the church were of noble and true worth. We are thankful for the exhibit, and think it one of the greatest opportunities the church ever had for getting itself before the people from all over the world.

In California very few people know about the Reorganized Church, and even then confuse it with the church of Utah. In passing the various church exhibits it seems to me that we have more inquirers than the others. We only wish that we could have had the exhibit when the fair opened.

Brethren Sheehy, A. B. Phillips, H. J. Davison, and R. J. Parker are kindly remembered by us.

Your sister in Christ,
ELSA BOYDSTUN.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, November 20, 1915.

Editors Herald: Will you please announce through the HERALD that if any of the Saints have tracts, HERALDS, Autumn Leaves, Ensigns, or Glad Tidings, and will send them to me, I will see that they are used to get the gospel before the people. In this way we all can help in missionary work.

The Lord has wonderfully blessed me this summer in preaching on the street. My crowd was from thirty-five to five hundred some nights. We have the good will of the mayor and city officials, and also the business men. While we meet with some opposition, it is nothing to what it used to be twenty-five years ago.

In 1913 we built a nice church here, which cost $6,250. The Saints have worked hard. All are poor in this world's goods, but have reduced the debt to $2,700. When we started to talk church building three years ago, we only had $138. This shows what can be done if we are willing to help in this work.

I hope that some of the Saints who see this will help us with papers. Port Huron is a city of twenty-five thousand people. You can see what a big field we have to work in. We are trying hard to get the gospel before them. May God inspire your minds to help. I know the Lord will bless you for what you do.

Thanking you in advance, I am,

Your brother in Christ,
OTTO FETTING, Branch President.

Extracts from Letters

The following is an extract from a personal letter written by Elder W. R. Armstrong from Manchester, England, November 5: "I have just returned to Manchester after a mid-term visit to the home of Brother Roderick May and wife in Northeastern London. As far as London is concerned we can well trust the work in Brother Roderick May's hands, but he needs help. He is a shrewd, far-seeing man, fearless in the defense of truth, yet what are his efforts among so many? Even he, cheery as he is, has often been discouraged. However, we have a saying here that 'all things come to those who wait.' Brother May has waited, and at last there appears to be a rift in the clouds. He has baptized several and one of them is a Brother May—yes, an energetic May, too. I believe he is going to be a worker. Our bishop is beginning to gather new material for his spiritual house. On Sabbath afternoon, October 31, in company with Brother May, we visited the London Hospital, Whitechapel Road, in order to see our young Brother Nephi Dewsnup, grandson of the late Elder Joseph Dewsnup (H. P.) of Manchester, who was lying there very ill. He has been brought from the Dardanelles on the transport Aquitania, suffering from sunstroke.

He had enlisted a few short months before as a naval engineer. I remember him leaving our Sabbath morning service at East Manchester, full of youth and hope in his newly-donned khaki uniform. He fell whilst blasting rock in the trenches and was carried away. He lay at the point of death for a time and was ultimately brought to London via Southampton. He is a physical wreck, yet believes that the Lord will restore him through the ordinance of the church. He longs to return to our little meetinghouse where he desires to return thanks for his miraculous preservation and the prayers offered by the Saints on his behalf. No one knew where the lad was. He had been carried to the great city unknown to anybody, but at last a letter written in pencil in an unfamiliar hand reached us in a roundabout way. Brother and Sister May and Sister Crick hastened to visit him and take flowers to him. Others have been too, and your correspondent was one of the last, but we are nearly two hundred miles away. Oh, we shall thank God when the lads come home. Many, many, many will never come. They might have been ours, and we weep for the many who have fallen. The poet Gray was right: 'The paths of glory lead but to the grave.' On Sabbath evening we were permitted to address an interested congregation gathered together in Brother May's drawing room. The place was full and we experienced the presence of the Holy Spirit to the comforting and strengthening of the Saints. On Monday, November 1, Brother May and I visited the scenes of the Zeppelin raids. The effects of these hellish things dropped indiscriminately among the seething masses of people with a crash that defies all description for awfulness, has to be seen and heard to be realized."

Sister McHannat, Montebello, California: "We could not get along without the dear old HERALD. It has been a weekly visitor to our home ever since I came into the church. We have also taken the Autumn Leaves since it started, with the exception of the first year. It is surely worth the price. I wish all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

News from Missions

Ottawa, Ontario

How are you getting along in Ottawa? is a question that is very often asked me. Well, I will tell you. I hold meetings in a hall that holds about one hundred and twenty-five people, on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday nights. The audience varies from half a dozen to one hundred. On Sunday nights I have the best crowd. Quite a number are interested, and I do not feel that it would be prudent to relax my exertions, now that I have a foothold established. I am determined to go ahead. Besides this, I am holding cottage meetings three times a week, and making all the personal appointments possible. I feel reasonably sure that the effort already put forth will bring results if properly followed up, and as I am giving all my time to the work I trust Him, whose power it is, to give the increase.

There are many things that stand in the way; the pulpit, press, and the ignorance of the people relative to our work, and the awful meaning, in the minds of the people, of the term "Mormon." Were it not for the stigma that attaches to the word Mormon, I am sure that enough people would come into the church to organize a branch at once; but brethren, it is necessary to remove this supposed stench from the minds of the people, by the presentation of a Biblical argument that cannot be gainsaid.

I have ordered eight Books of Mormon, and sold seven of that number. Last night I visited a family where the man and wife desired to know all about the Book of Mormon. They have a fine young daughter, an excellent musician; we sang about twenty of our real latter-day hymns, in the hymnal, and they were carried away with them. We talked till almost eleven o'clock, and the man was sorry that the time had gone so quickly. I am invited to that home whenever I desire to go. This young lady fairly makes the piano talk with soul-stirring songs of Zion, and you know just what that means.

I am trying to place a Book of Mormon in the public library, as well as a copy of Book of Mormon Lectures. The librarian has both these books now for examination to find out their value as educational factors. I had quite a conversation with him relative to their merits, and he promised me he would examine them carefully before he would call the board of directors' attention to them.

This afternoon I had the pleasure to attend a cottage meeting where a few met to study the gospel. It was at the home of a former Millennial Dawnist. The restored gospel has knocked so hard at this woman's door that she is ready for baptism, as also two other ladies; but it seems that opposition must manifest itself from the man side of the house, to retard their entrance into the kingdom of God. I am sure that time will remove all the barriers.

One of the strange things I have met with here is the spectacle of some who are members of the church, but who have never shown their faces at any meeting yet, since I came to Ottawa. When it seemed that I would almost go down under the strain of a thirty-days' meeting, when I had to do all that devolves on those conducting meetings, by myself alone; when the handshake of a real friend means so much, I was not privileged to even know they were in town. Truly the Lord said, "Five were wise and five foolish," but I pray that an awakening will take place ere the door is shut.

Pile up on the top of these difficulties the fact that a man is sent to do a work among a class of people in whose language (French) the church does not print a solitary line of the Angel's Message, although commanded to do so (Doctrine and Covenants 125:11), it is just in this situation that the reader of these lines would come to a full realization, as the writer often has, that the proper way to do work is for men to be properly equipped.

There are close to three million French Roman Catholics in Quebec alone. This people are almost entirely unacquainted with the Bible. It is not hard doctrinal teachings they need at the first; it is milk and not strong meat that they should have. Almost to a man, they view the teachings of what they denominate Protestantism, with distrust and suspicion. Let me tell you, dear reader, they need to be approached from another angle altogether. They will read a short real life experience. They get interested in ascertaining the reason men change from one religious experience to another. Take a Roman Catholic, as I have been, and let him come through the "melting pot" of such an experience as I have; then let him put such experience in a plain, easy to be understood recital, and the people will be attracted to such a pamphlet when they would throw away a tract dealing with scriptural texts.

Now my reason for coming to this conclusion will be clearly seen. As a rule Catholics do not read the Bible. They are not encouraged to read it—they are even taught that they are not able to understand it. The individual who enters into a conversation with a Catholic on the Bible comes in contact with one who will present the Catholic Church against what the Bible plainly teaches, and the result is a profitless argument; whereas, if an individual reads a life experience, with no one to discuss the points, it will leave impressions which will not be lost sight of, and that particularly when attention is plainly called to the instructions of Christ as a reason for the course pursued. This will open the way to further investigation.

But remember that it is next to impossible to make an opening with a person by trying to sell him something, when it is about all you can do to get him to read by giving it to him. If you can get him started once you have done something that gives you hope for further advancement. You must give away a lot of literature in order to attract the people. That is why phenomenal success attended many trashy institutions. Let us be sufficiently awake to use this means of advancing our work.

Now reader, I want the tools to do that very thing. I want to print just such literature, and distribute it in such a manner in and around Ottawa, that the people will know that the church is in existence, and after this locality has been sown with the gospel seed, let the field be widened out. Literature! literature! and more literature is the need here.

Trusting, hoping, praying and keeping everlastingly at it, is the role I have set out for myself in this field.

Yours in the ultimate triumph of the gospel,
PHILEMON PEMENT.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, 502 Bank Street, November 23, 1915.

News from Branches

Tryon, Nebraska

This branch is progressing under the presidency of Brother Frank Payne, a deacon. He and the writer drove about forty miles north, where a part of our membership reside, with the thermometer registering five above zero at 10 p. m. We held six services, beginning Saturday evening, and ending Sunday evening.

Brother Payne spoke to a full house on the differences between us and the Utah church. One who had heard two of our missionaries preach on the same subject remarked that Brother Payne made it plainer than either of them. I mention this for I know the brethren will be pleased to learn that the Lord is favoring this young brother in the work here. Our cause needs such workers. Brother Ralph Coleman, our teacher, is coming to the front as a public speaker.

On account of our members being scattered, and it being such a long distance to the church, we have appointed the first Sunday of each month as Rally Day. We take our dinners and have services all day. Missionaries please take notice, if you can come to visit us.

Sunday school and Religio are progressing. Our district Sunday school convention will meet at North Platte, December 3. All interested take notice.

In gospel bonds,
WILLIAM F. GODFREY.

Pray for One Another

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats,
That nourish a blind man within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer,
Both for themselves and those who call them friends?
—Alfred Tennyson.

Notice Auxiliary Workers

Advisory Board Woman's Auxiliary has found it necessary to raise price of monthly reading leaflets for Home and Child Welfare meetings from 50 cents to 75 cents for ten each month, for one year. Larger numbers will be furnished at proportionate rate. The board urges the locals to subscribe for these leaflets. There is much valuable information given in them, and it should be more widely distributed.

ADVISORY BOARD.

Addresses

J. S. Roth, Box B, Lamoni, Iowa.
James Kemp, 1519 South Sherman Street, Denver, Colorado.

Died

FARROW.—James M. Farrow, born February 1, 1828, in West Virginia; died at Independence, Missouri, November 21, 1915. Deceased served in the Civil War from 1862 to its close. Baptized in 1878, by S. J. Madden. Left soon after for Independence. He was a faithful member, a good man and a friend to everybody. Leaves wife, 5 sons, William, Benjamin, Seth, Moses, Albert; 3 daughters, Mrs. Mary Poller, Mrs. Julia Singleton, Mrs. Amanda Bowen; 48 grandchildren, 38 great-grandchildren. Services in charge of J. T. Curtis, sermon by F. C. Warnky, South Side Church, Independence. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MACCARLIE.—Elizabeth Mable Manchester MacCarlie, born April 1, 1875, Dighton, Massachusetts; died November 14, 1915. Baptized June 5, 1902, Providence, Rhode Island. Married George MacCarlie, October 2, 1902. Services in charge of H. W. Howlett. Interment in Oak Grove Cemetery, Fall River. Fall River Branch choir rendered three appropriate selections, "Beautiful isle of somewhere," "If we could only understand," and "Sleep on, beloved." Sister MacCarlie had for a number of months tended her afflicted mother, and was taken suddenly ill, lapsing into unconsciousness from which she never recovered.

MONK.—William Monk, born April 6, 1853, Preston, Lancashire, England; died November 9, 1915. United with the Fall River, Massachusetts, Branch, December 17, 1882. Brother Monk leaves wife, son, 5 daughters. Saints, relatives and friends manifested their sympathy and love by their presence at the service with beautiful floral tributes. Funeral by H. W. Howlett, interment in North Burial Ground, Fall River.

NELSON.—John Peter Nelson, born at Kettle Stad, Sweden, September 11, 1837; died October 5, 1915. Baptized July 31, 1893, Cormorant, Minnesota, by Swen Swenson. Brother Nelson was faithful until death. His health had not been good for some time. Immediate cause of death was a fall from a buggy when his horse ran away. Services by Reverend H. H. Knudsvig, interment in Scandinavian Cemetery, near Audubon, Minnesota.

REESE.—Mary Jane, wife of Thomas Reese, born June 7, 1852; died November 19, 1915, leaving husband, 4 sons, 1 daughter, 2 brothers, 2 sisters, many other relatives and friends. Sister Reese was one of the first to unite with the church in Montana. Prayer at the house by Robert Newby, funeral at Saints' church, Bozeman, Montana, in charge of Brother Brewer, sermon by A. J. Moore.

WHENHAM.—William J. Whenham, born July 27, 1896, Albenarle, Ontario; died same place November 23, 1915. Baptized June 25, 1911, Colpoys Bay, Ontario, by R. D. Walters. Services November 23, 1 p. m. Interment in Colpoys Bay Cemetery. Deceased leaves father, mother, 1 brother, adopted sister. Services by W. D. Ellis.

TERRY.—L. A. Terry, born near New Brighton, Canada; died at Capac, Michigan, September 18, 1915, aged 52 years. Moved to Michigan with his parents in boyhood. Baptized about 14 years ago. Was ever active in seeking to uphold and advance the work, making many sacrifices. Manifesting the Christ life, he was a shepherd, giving counsel and exhortation. He suffered much, though never lost confidence in God, expressing himself as willing to abide in his care. Elder Terry had learned to love, and was one upon whom the Saints had learned to lean for support.

HOLMES.—Charlotte Holmes, of Bonheim Home, Independence, Missouri, born in Germany, July 5, 1838; died November 27, 1915, at Independence Sanitarium. She has been cared for at the home for about 3 years. Neither husband nor children are living, so far as known. The only relative known in this country was Charles Hackett, post office address unknown. Baptized at Amber, Michigan, May 26, 1895, by G. W. Washburn, confirmed by Jacob Kaplinger. Sister Holmes was a quiet, industrious woman, patient and agreeable, showing that she was a child of the Master. Services by E. L. Kelley and J. F. Kier, from Carson undertaking rooms, Independence.

KENNEDY.—John A. Kennedy, born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1837; died at Independence, Missouri, November 26, 1915. Came with his parents to Ontario, Canada, in 1844. Married Mary S. ### Two Hundred and Fifty Stories

And every story a good one. They are entertaining, but that is not all you can say about them. You know there is hardly a periodical published that is not full of time-wasting stories, but not a single story in The Youth's Companion is a time waster. Take the stories of C. A. Stephens. It would be hard to pick out one from which you cannot learn something useful and yet entertaining.

Some of The Companion stories refresh your knowledge of geography; some tell you the mysteries of chemistry, some reveal the secrets of forestry and of general farming. They cover a wide range. They are chosen with an eye to the possible likings of every member of a Companion family—stories of vigorous action and stirring adventure for boys, stories of college life and domestic vicissitudes for girls, stories that range all the way from sheer drollery to deep seriousness for men and women. There are no stories quite like those in The Companion.

If you are not familiar with The Companion as it is to-day, let us send you sample copies and the Forecast for 1916.

New subscribers who send $2 for 1916 will receive free a copy of The Companion Home Calendar for 1916, in addition to all the remaining 1915 issues from the time the subscription is received.

Something New
For Latter Day Saints

A professional writer, and member of our church, whose pen-name is "John Preston," has written a play, called—

"The Pleasures of the World"

This is something new in the way of church literature, and will give many a branch the vehicle for legitimately entertaining its young and also raising funds for special purposes, that it desires.

No Religious People

will appreciate this play as will our people. It is a frank discussion of

The Pleasure Question

from all sides; and not a "sermon." It is because we believe in the originality and thought-progressiveness of Latter Day Saints that we are offering it for sale and presentation.

This Comedy-Drama

does not pretend to solve the "pleasure question": it merely presents the various phases of it—frankly—illuminatingly—humorously. The idea was taken from a sermon.

Several Large Branches

have already made arrangements to produce this play and are very enthusiastic over it.

The Holiday Season

is a good time to produce it. And it is because there is only one "setting," which any stage or platform will accommodate. The scene is the interior of an ordinary living room. There are six men and six women characters. It takes 2 hours to present the 3 acts.

Easy to Produce

Between 60 and 75 pages

Nicely bound

Per copy, 25c, postpaid

Read it

And you will want to produce it.

Book Reviews

PETER BOSTEN.—Here is a Latter Day Saint novel by John Preston, of a type hitherto unknown in the church. Nor have the Brighamites had anything like it—that would be impossible. It is strictly a Reorganized story, and as up-to-date in its style and plot as anything on the market. Peter Bosten, a Kansan, and Noel Crayne, a Missourian, are the most conspicuous characters. They are inseparable friends. Peter falls in love with Helen Dyke, but a gulf of religious differences opens between them. Noel goes out in "the field." By and by they meet in the east, amid dramatic surroundings. Noel is undergoing a severe trial, involving an actress. Peter, now worldly wise, a half cynical newspaper man, comes to Noel's aid. Again they separate. And again Peter and Helen come to the "dividing line." Follow chapters full of human hopes, disillusionings, heartaches. Peter has drunk his fill of the liquid, Life; his health is gone; he has soured on his philosophy. Then, when the end seems near, a turn of "fate" throws him into intimate association with President Stern. The scales appear to be dropping from the agnostic Kansan's eyes. But once more comes a revulsion against the "miraculous," the "sentimental," the "irrational,"—and Peter faces eternity. His life and his love—even his friendship for the lovable Noel—seems to have come to naught. We cannot anticipate the climax for you. It is something to be felt, rather than described, in the closing chapter of this book for thoughtful lovers of real life—especially the gospel life. We have had fourteen characters pointed out to us as conspicuous figures in this latter-day work-to-day: nevertheless this novel, Peter Bosten, will go out into the world without a label of any kind attached. It will fight for a place as fiction alone—and yet it is Latter Day Saint to the core. (Herald Publishing House, $1.)

THE NEW L. D. S. NOVEL

Peter Bosten

By John Preston

As up-to-date a novel, in point of plot, action and characterization, as you can buy; yet it means more to YOU than any story of the day.

L. D. S. characters, taken from real life. You will identify them.

Nothing on the SURFACE to indicate that it IS Latter Day Saint.

A wonderful vehicle for spreading the SPIRIT of the gospel. An unequalled Christmas gift for your OUTSIDER friends. Ignores the Utah question.

You can get the book with or without the Herald Office imprint.

John Preston is the author of several successful novels. This is his best work. It was written by order of the Herald Office, and involves many characters known to you personally.

PETER BOSTEN is an agnostic. He can not believe in God. Even the gospel in its fullness appears illogical to him. Yet he feels a strange potentiality surrounding it.

He meets and falls in love with a "church" girl. But a gulf opens between them as time passes. He can not believe, and she can not understand his unbelief.

Years full of events slip by. You are reminded of your own soul-striving—especially in the days of impetuous, rebellious, passionate youth.

Is the agnostic finally converted? Read the story and see. And in the reading you will get great pleasure and profit—maybe a little pain as well.

If you are a lover of real life and worth-while fiction, you will enjoy "Peter Bosten," as you have probably never enjoyed a work of fiction before.

To you, the story will be real and alive. To your friends it will be a thought-breeding thing of mystery. They will ask: "Whence comes the spirit of this unique book?"

Ready for mailing. Order now. A fine Christmas gift. Illustrated cover. $1.00, postpaid.

Of this devious path I am weary, my spirit with pining is worn,

All life seems so empty and dreary, of zest it is utterly shorn.

My pulses once bounded so happy, I never had sorrow to mourn.

Ah, beautiful days of my childhood! Would God they could only return!

Of this devious path I am weary, my spirit with pining is worn,
All life seems so empty and dreary, of zest it is utterly shorn.
My pulses once bounded so happy, I never had sorrow to mourn,—
Ah, beautiful days of my childhood! Would God they could only return!

While thus in my sadness repining, I sought my low pillow to rest,
And there in the stillness reclining, a voice spoke peace to my breast.
“Those hours are numbered forever, yet there is a truth thou canst learn, Although they may come to thee never, unto them thou mayest return.”

LOVE

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Sister Winsome Smith.)

My theme is compassed in a single word, a word of only four letters. This word, or its equivalent, is as old as creation. Adam whispered it in the ears of Eve as they walked in the lovely lanes of the Garden of Eden. With it they solaced each other when they were driven out into a harsh and bitter world. The sons of Adam still delight to whisper this word into the ears of the blushing daughters of Eve; and speaking it and hearing it, they turn their footsteps back toward the paradise that was lost. If we ever regain that paradise it will be because we have learned the full import of that word.

This word, we may presume, is the watchword of the angels of heaven when they leave the courts of glory and come down to earth to minister to the heirs of salvation; and having finished their work of watching over the cradles of little babes, guiding the wandering feet of little children, ministering to strong men and women who are heartsick, and smoothing the pillow of troubled age, when they return again, I imagine that the austere angel who stands at the pearly gates, halts them until they repeat this watchword.

They do not forget it. If they were to forget it, they would not be worthy to remain in heaven as the angels of God. They could not minister on earth to the heirs of salvation.

CHRIST AS GOD'S DECLARATION OF LOVE

This is the word that God himself, stooping down from on high, spoke to a dying world, in the person of Jesus Christ; for Jesus Christ is God's declaration of love to the world. "God so loved the world," we are told in John 3: 16, "that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The theme, then, that we wish to consider is that of "Love."

I call your attention to three texts. The first one is: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God" (1 John 3: 1).

The second is: "We love him, because he first loved us" (1 John 4: 19).

And the third is: "For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another" (1 John 3: 11).

THE "ETERNAL TRIANGLE"

These three texts suggest the three divisions of our theme:

The first, the love of God for man: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us."

The second, the love of man towards God: "We love him, because he first loved us."

The third, the love of man for his fellow men: "This is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another."

It is said that it takes three individuals, at least, to live the Christian religion: You, your God, and your brother. The Christian religion does not function fully until it includes this "eternal triangle" of entities in a bond of communion, fellowship, and right relations.

"GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD"

Taking up, then, the first division of the theme, the love of God for man: Why was it that God sent his Son into the world?

He was not moved by any of the considerations that commonly sway humanity. He did not have anything to gain. His glory could not possibly be increased. It was already infinite and ineffable.

But we are told that he sent his Son into the world because he so loved the world. Yes, he loved us before we loved him. We are told that "we love him, because he first loved us."

We have had some discussion about the atonement of Jesus Christ and the place of his death in that atonement. I do not intend to enter upon any discussion of that at this time, but we will all agree in this thought, that the death and sufferings of Jesus Christ were not designed to bribe or to propitiate an angry or an indifferent God and win his favor and approbation for man.

Before there was the first dimmest stirring of an impulse of love in our hearts for God, God loved us. He loved the world before his Son came into the world.

We grasp the thought then, that God and Christ were one in their love for humanity, as in all other things, and Jesus came here as a living declaration of God's love for the world, to explain to the world and impress on the heart of the world the fact that God indeed is love,—this he did in life and in death.

AN INDIVIDUAL; A FATHER

There are some philosophers and scientists in the world who seem to believe in God, that is, they believe in the existence of a certain supreme intelligence or force or power that is back of all things. But in most cases they do not individualize this dominant mind or force.

But Jesus Christ came into the world to teach the world that there is a personal God and that he is our Father.

He said, "He who hath seen me hath seen the Father." In that single sentence he presented two ideas: The idea of personality, and the idea of fatherhood. "He that hath seen me, [a person] hath seen God [a person]." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

Jesus Christ was the first one who ever really taught the world to pray, "Our Father, which art in heaven."

BRIDGING HELL GATE

What place does this thought have in the economy of God? They are building now in New York City at a place called Hell Gate (an appropriate name for our illustration), a great steel bridge, and they are building simultaneously from the two banks of the stream. It is to be a single great arch, or span. By and by this arch will meet in the middle of the span, and the bridge will be complete.

And so, when the love of man for God, and the love of God for man, springing from earth towards heaven, and from heaven towards earth, finally meet, then the gap is bridged, and there is a highway formed by which we can approach God. That is the place that love has in the economy of God.

IN LIFE OR IN DEATH

What evidence have we of God's love? We have the evidence of his sacrifice and his service.

What is the extent of this love? In Romans 8: 38, 39, we read:

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

That means, if it means anything, that the love of God is going to seek after every individual born into the world, and there is no power on earth, or under the earth, there is no other creature that can overthrow the designs of God. His love will reach every man somewhere, sometime.

THOSE WHO NEITHER LOVE NOR ARE LOVED

I heard Billy Sunday say, about two weeks ago, that those people who say there is probation after death are all liars. But a greater than Billy Sunday has said that death can not separate us from the love of God. The gospel is to every creature.

If there is any benighted creature in any dark corner of the universe whom this message of love has failed to reach in this life, it will reach after him until it finally finds him, somewhere, sometime. He will not be given up until he rejects that message. There is only one thing that can separate us from the love of God, and that is our own personal will.

And finally when that love reaches that individual, if he shall then fling it away willfully, after tasting it, then and only then will he be sent down to dwell with the "sons of perdition" who neither love nor are loved,—and that is hell. If there is any individual now living in the world who does not love anybody and whom nobody loves, he does not need to die to go to hell; he is there now.

LOVE IN THE PRESENT TENSE

As Latter Day Saints, we prefer to think of God's love in the present tense. I was talking with a certain minister, and he said to me, "Do you people believe the Bible?"

I replied, "Yes. Do you?"

"Why certainly."

"Well, do you believe that statement in the sixteenth chapter of Mark, 'These signs shall follow them that believe'?"

He paused a moment, and then said, "I believe that those signs did follow."

"Well," I said, "that is the difference. You say they did follow; we say they do follow."

God did love the world; God does love the world. God used to reveal himself; God reveals himself now. God used to bless the people; God does bless the people. Religion in the past tense; religion in the present tense. Which will you take?

We read that God used to give the people certain blessings, and we are told that certain signs shall follow, and that the manifestations of the Spirit are given to every man; but the world tells us that these things are not for us. What is the matter? Is God a respecter of persons?

HOW ABOUT THE YOUNGER BROTHER?

I have two boys, a little one and a larger one. When I go away on a trip, as I have done frequently, I often secure some little presents to give them when I return,—something that doesn't cost very much, as a rule, but they appreciate it. Suppose the next time I go away, the little boy should come to his mother and say, "Mother, does father love me?"

"Oh, yes, your father loves you."

"Will my father bring me some little gift when he comes home?"

"Why no, you must not expect that. He used always to bring presents to your older brother. He used frequently to write letters to him. He used to show him evidences of his love, but you must not expect that. You can look at the gifts that he gave to your older brother. You can read the letters that he wrote to him."

Well, I imagine I see that little boy turn away heart sick. He says in disappointment and distress, "I want a father who loves me, and loves me now. I want the same blessings, the same gifts, the same communion that he gave to my older brother."

His demand is just and shall be satisfied so long as I can satisfy it. But is man more just than God?

We believe that God will bless us just as he did our older brothers. "God is love," John says. God is love,—in the present tense. God loves us now.

He always connected his commandments to serve him with his promises of blessing. If the promises of blessing are not good any longer, then the commandments to serve him are no longer binding.

THE SHADOW OF A LOAF

Two travelers came to an inn and put up for the night. One of them became very sick and could not eat either supper or breakfast; but in the morning the innkeeper insisted that he should pay him for both of the meals. Finally a third man appeared, and all agreed to leave the dispute to his judgment to decide.

He said to the man who was sick, "Give me two pieces of silver." He was given the pieces of silver, and then he rattled them by the ear of the innkeeper and said: "This man got only the smell of your meat; you get only the jingle of his money."

If we get only the smell of the meat that our older brothers ate, then God can justly claim only the jingle of our money in the way of service,—and that, by the way, is about all the world is giving him.

But the matter is reversed. The world is only willing to give God the jingle of its money, and hence the world gets only the smell of the meat that Peter ate, the shadow of the bread of life on which Paul feasted.

God is willing to bless now as much as in the past.

HARD-HEADED AND SOFT-HEARTED SERVICE

Taking up the second division of the text, our love for God: We are commanded in Mark 12:30, that we shall love God with all our heart, and with all our mind, with all our soul, and with all our strength.

The heart is the seat of the emotions, so our religion ought to be emotional. The brain is the seat of intelligence, so our service should be intelligent, rational. We are to love him with our heart, and with our mind; so our religion and our service ought to be intelligent as well as emotional.

And finally, we are told that we should love him with all our soul. The soul, we are told in the Book of Covenants, is the body and the spirit, the whole man. There is no power, quality, no part of us that should not be enlisted in God's service, dominated by love.

Who is it that loves God? In John 14:21 we are told, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me."

We have here the test of our love for God, that is, that we shall have his commandments, and that we shall keep them. We should manifest our love by service and by obedience.

LOVE TRANSLATED INTO TERMS OF SERVICE

I will not, however, dwell long upon that part, but pass to the third division: The love of man for his fellow men.

John says, in substance, How can a man love God whom he had not seen, if he does not love his brother, whom he hath seen. In other words, if we love God we will manifest that love in service for our fellow men.

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 42:8:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me.

The thought is that if we love God we will love our fellow men. And if we love our fellow men we will give of our surplus properties for their support when they are poor and in need.

The same idea is presented in James the second chapter:

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

And he goes on to tell us that kind of religion, like faith without works, is dead.

And in 1 John 3:17:

But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

The answer is, it does not dwell there at all.

Our love of our fellow men will be manifested in our service to him, and it will take not only a spiritual, but a material or temporal turn. Without this evidence we can not demonstrate that we do really and truly love God.

CASTING OUT SELFISHNESS

One thing that we as a people must cast out of our lives is selfishness, the very reverse of this love of God. Selfishness is the thing that hinders our progress. He who labors in Zion for money, according to the divine statement, shall perish. But it seems that on every turn we are hindered by this selfishness that occupies our hearts. How shall we get rid of it?

I think Tennyson perceived the truth when he said:

Love took up the harp of life, and smote on all the chords with might;
Smote the chord of self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight.

This hateful love of self, when it is touched by the divine love of God, passes in heavenly music out of sight.

THE OVERFLOWING GLASS OF WATER

Here is another illustration. This glass is full of air. How shall I empty it? I cannot pour the air out. I cannot throw it out. I cannot dip it out. If the glass were hermetically sealed in some way I might pump it out; but I might destroy the glass while doing so, for we are told that "nature abhors a vacuum."

But there is one way in which I can get the air out of this glass. See, I simply pour it full, running over of water. Thus I get the air out. It is very simple and easy. When the water goes in the air goes out.

And so it is with these hearts of ours that are full of selfishness. You cannot drive it out. You cannot force it out. You cannot pump it out, for "nature abhors a vacuum." The only heart that is empty is in a dead person.

But when you fill this heart of mine with love of God, when you pour the ardent love of this work into that heart until it overflows, then selfishness goes out.

POTENTIAL ZION

We talk about Zion. Have we Zion? We surely have potential Zion. We have six thousand members in the Independence Stake,—six thousand individuals. When we become one body in Christ Jesus, in the full and complete sense, then we will have Zion. Six thousand individuals, each working for himself to an extent, at least,—when we are all working together, with one heart and one mind, all for each, and each for all, then we can say that we have Zion materialized, visualized, objectively, for all to see.

TWO JUDEAN BROTHERS

According to an old tradition, two brothers lived in Judea on adjoining farms. One of them was single, and lived alone; the other had a wife and many children. One night during the harvest season the man who was single said, "My brother has many mouths to feed. To-night, while it is dark, I will carry some of my sheaves over and set them in his field, and in the morning he will rejoice to see his plentiful harvest."

And the same night the other brother said, "My brother is sad and lonely, while I have many to cheer me. To-night I will carry some of my sheaves over the line and set them in his field, and in the morning his heart will be made glad to see his bountiful harvest."

So each carried out his plan for two nights in succession. But on the third night the moon came out and they came face to face. Tradition says that on that spot the temple at Jerusalem was built, because there earth came nearest heaven.

When we get the fullness of that spirit, and each seeks his brother's good, then we can build the temple of God, for then earth will come near to heaven and heaven near to earth, and Jesus will be ready to come and take up his abode among men.

THE SEASON'S GREETINGS

With this issue of the HERALD the Editors are pleased to present a magazine number, and to send to the Saints and friends the greetings of the season. And it occurs to us that this expression at this time should come with especial significance.

The past year has been one of unusual commotion and sorrow. The world is under the sable mantle of a great and a devastating war. Men's hearts the world over are torn and bleeding; with bowed heads and subdued emotions they await the passing of this terrible scourge.

While these conditions prevail in the world, in the church of God are peace, and safety, and hope of a final triumph which shall conserve and develop the energies and strength of all. The Saints of every clime unite in prayer and labor to the end that outside as well as inside the household of faith, peace and brotherhood may early come. And among the Saints, so far as we can judge, and we are in touch with the brethren in all parts, there exists mutual love and Christian fellowship, all alike looking forward to the establishment of righteousness and the realization together of the Zion of latter days.

So it is with special significance that we greet you at this time. We unite with you in the prayer that at this season remembrances of the Christ child may bring to all men the Christ spirit; and that the New Year may bring a new spirit among the nations.

May God graciously minister among the Saints and friends, that all things in all lands may be tempered to their strength to endure; and may he hasten the day of a fuller establishment of the principles of Zion, thus loosing the hands of the church to a fuller administration for the gathering and upbuilding of his children.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Fighting is reported between a Carranza army and Villa forces under General Rodriguez near Esqueda, Sonora. Villa is retreating toward Chichuahua, closely pursued by Carranza forces.

TO SAINT LOUIS FOR WILSON.—The national democratic committee on the 7th decided to take the coming national democratic convention to Saint Louis. This convention convenes June 14. The committee also adopted resolutions favoring the renomination of Woodrow Wilson for president.

REQUEST REFUSED.—Germany has asked the United States Government for reasons for the recall of Captain Boy-Ed and Captain von Papen, German naval and military attaches at Washington. The United States has replied by a note not yet made public, in which it is anticipated the Government declines to go into detail in the question of facts, or to disclose its source of information, leaving the matter as it stands, with the request for recall because of "improper activities in military and naval matters."

"ANCONA" CASE AND OTHERS.—The United States has sent to Austria-Hungary a note in which it is understood the Government asks for disavowal of the sinking by a submarine of the Italian liner Ancona; assurances that the act will not be repeated; punishment for the commander of the submarine; reparation for American lives lost. The Standard Oil Company tank steamer Communiaw has been sunk in the Mediterranean, presumably by an Austrian submarine, and an Austrian submarine has fired on the American ship Petrolite in the same waters. Particulars in the last-named cases are as yet unknown. It is recalled at this time that to date while declaring that hereafter liners will not be sunk without warning unless resisting or attempting escape, Germany has failed to disavow the sinking of the Lusitania.

CONGRESS OPENS.—Congress opened at Washington the 5th, for a session which it is thought, in consideration of proposed legislation, may be the most important held for many years. President Wilson in a message read personally before a joint session of the Senate and House the 6th, urged action to provide for national defense through a larger army and navy, along lines already reported; for the building of a merchant marine, first by the Government by purchase and construction, then, the Government withdrawing, by private capital; alteration and reform of the government of the Philippines, and fuller political justice for the Porto Ricans; extension of what is popularly known as the "war tax"; increase of the income tax by lowering present limits; special tax on gasoline, naphtha, automobiles, and internal explosive engines, iron and steel. The President urges legislation in the matter of a merchant marine and Philippine and Porto Rican reforms similar to that submitted in the last Congress; the matter of taxation is urged to insure against deficit in the national treasury.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The struggle between Italy and Austria for possession of Austrian strongholds continues. The Serbs and Montenegrins seem to have checked the Germans and Austrians, temporarily at least, along the Montenegrin and Albanian frontiers. In the south the Bulgarians have begun an attack on the Anglo-French positions, and German forces are reported on the way to join them. It seems to be the purpose here to drive the allies back into Greece before troops landing at Saloniki can be brought to the front. The Serbs are said to be planning to reform their army, made possible by civilians leaving the country on the retreat of the army. The Germans have sustained losses on the Yser River in Belgium from flood, artillery and infantry attacks. German airmen are reported active on the Gallipoli Peninsula, where the British continue their aggression. Activity is reported on the Russian front in the vicinity of Riga, with the Russians in the offensive. The British are sustaining reverses in Mesopotamia where the German field marshal von der Galtz, has taken command of the Turkish forces. A Turkish torpedo boat destroyer and supply steamer, and four sailing vessels have been sunk by a British submarine. Vienna reports the sinking by Austrian vessel of a French submarine, six steamers and several sailing vessels in the Adriatic,

AMONG OUR POETS

Australia

BY E. F. ROBERTSON

There's a land far away 'neath the Southern Cross,
Where the sun shines warm all the year;
Where the winter comes not with snow and with frost,
Depriving the world of its cheer;

Where sweet-scented flowers are ever in bloom,
And fruit always ripe on the tree;
Where waters gleam bright in the light of the moon,
And the breeze blows soft from the sea.

My thoughts oft return to those high, rugged hills,
And forests so stately and tall
Where the welkin with music the lyre bird fills,
Or, at nighttime, the curlews call.

Then I dream of the skies that were azure blue,
The sunsets of purple and gold,
As I viewed them with friends that were tried and true
In the beautiful days of old.

And I long for a moonlight ride on the lake,
Or a moonlight walk on the shore,
With those I first loved for the gospel's sake,—
Then loved for their own sakes more.

But now I am here in a land far away
From the bright Australian shore,
Where blustering winds of the north round me play
And the snow drifts high round my door.

So I sit here and think of days that are gone
And of friends of the dear, dead past;
And I pray that we all may meet round the throne
In the kingdom of God, at last.

Revelation

BY EDWARD INGHAM

The favored Seer, on Sinai's trembling crest,
Beheld the wonders of our planet's birth;
There, vision-rapt, God's spirit filled his breast
And taught him secret things of heaven and earth.

He saw the tribes of men, as numberless
As grains of sand upon the ocean's shore:
Whose earthly habitat God sought to bless
With peace and happiness forevermore.

He learned how man's first disobedience brought Death to our race, and woe, with loss of bliss;
And how the Prince of Darkness subtly fought
To drag our souls into hell's dark abyss:

But how the Father's love and wisdom wrought
The plan whereby our souls were snatched from doom,
How, ransomed by his Son, our souls were brought Back from the grave to win immortal bloom.

Again, like sound of many waters, fell
The Master's voice upon his servant's ear,
When driven from the haunts of man, to dwell
On Patmos Isle, an exile, loan and drear.

There, in ecstatic vision, he beheld
The angel flying through the vault of heaven,
Bearing love's message to this sin-cursed world:
Seal of good will and peace to man forgiven.

Then, in the peaceful grove, the kneeling boy
Saw the great light and heard the wondrous voice:
Gave to the world the tidings of great joy,
Causing hell's hosts to mourn, while heavens rejoice

Thus, in the brightness of the noonday light,
God's light has shone: his Spirit's voice been heard;
And in the silent watches of the night
His messengers have hearkened to his word.

Though now his face is hid from mortal sight;
When the dark veil at last shall be withdrawn,
The sun of righteousness will banish night,—
When o'er the earth doth break millennium's dawn.

Then Christ shall reign supreme and man be free;
All his redeemed shall see him face to face;
Rich blessings long foretold in prophecy
Shall then be shared by those who claim his grace.

Twilight Reverie

BY MYRTLE ROSE STEWART

The midnight bell is tolling
A sad and dreary knell,
"Good-by, Old Year, farewell!"
Then the door swings slowly backward,
And, amid the scenes of death,
We hear the low, soft whisper,
We feel the New Year's breath.
Then sadly we look backward
At life's volume closed for aye:
For each day a page is written,
Every month a volume finished,
With its battles lost or won.
Then we sigh as we remember
Not one word can we erase,
Not one harsh or cruel action,
By kind deeds can we replace.
With one foot upon the threshold
Of the New Year, bright and gay,
Let us strive to sow but kindness
All along life's rugged way.
Life is filled with golden chances;
In our hand we hold the pen,
That must write, not on cold paper,
But upon the hearts of men.

A Better than Santa Claus

BY VIDA E. SMITH

One little tender story,
Ere the last glad, sweet good-night,
Ere the tripping feet start homeward,—
Out in the Christmas night.

Of the bright, red, crimson holly;
A legend old I know,
It was stained with blood of Jesus,
In the sad time long ago.

The waxen leaves and berries
Of the fated mistletoe
Were cursed and cast from out the earth
With never a place to grow.

But it shall not be a legend,
Nor a wondrous fairly tale,—
Nay! I shall speak on a dearer theme
Where sweetness cannot fail.

Of the star and the baby Jesus
Who would not think this night?
Of the wonderful angel chorus
In that softly watching light!

Would Christmas be as joyful
Did we forget its cause?
Forget, in this holy season,
The better than Santa Claus?

Oh, gleaming, snow-clad Hermon,
You saw that Christmas star.
Speak! Tell! Was it an angel
That watching stood afar?

They say the star soon vanished,
Its steady glow was gone,
While other stars for ages
Shone brightly on and on.

Had this one star commission
To watch each night and day
The lowly cradle manger
Where the baby Savior lay?

And the Bethlehem hills—we love them,
To-night they are more than dear,
For angel songs ring o'er them
When the Christ-tide draweth near.

Then sleepy shepherds watching
Beside their silent flocks,
See floods of silver brightness
Transfigure hills and rocks.

We cannot put it from us,
With time it grows more dear,
A better than a Santa Claus
Is born and dwelleth near.

I know the good friends hiding
In Santa a loving face;
Without their sweet remembrance
Earth were a lonely place!

My heart goes upward by them,
To the source of love's high laws,
'Till I walk this holy birth-night
With a greater than Santa Claus.

Good-night! When the happy tumult
Of this merry time shall cease,
May you hear this benediction
"Good will, on earth sweet peace."

JERUSALEM AS A CITY WITHOUT WALLS

In Isaiah 11: 12, there appears the following prediction:

And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

This is in harmony with many other scriptural prophecies foreshadowing the return of the Jews to their native land. In Zechariah, the second chapter, there is an interesting account of a vision in which an angel was seen going forth to measure Jerusalem, to see what "is the breadth, and what is the length thereof." We may suppose that the figure set forth in the picture or vision was intended to intimate that

JERUSALEM TO BE MODERNIZED.

The walls of the Holy City, it is reported, are in danger of demolition owing to projected improvements. Trolley lines are to be built, electric lighting introduced, and a water supply brought from a distance. The medieval walls of the city are, according to report, being offered for sale by the authorities as building material. All lovers of historic antiquities will hope that the efforts which are being made to save some of the massive towers and portions of the walls will succeed.—The Outlook, April 4, 1914.

the angel was measuring Jerusalem to see whether or no it would contain the multitudes of returning Jews.

This angel is met by another one who commands him: "Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."

We gather from this statement that at some time some particular young man was to receive the angelic message, telling him that Jerusalem should be inhabited as a city without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein, i. e., that the time would come when the Jews would be gathered back again in great multitudes to Jerusalem, so that the area of the ancient walled city could not contain them.

The angel who visited Joseph Smith (then a young man) in the year 1823, told him that the time was near at hand when the scriptural predictions concerning Judea should be fulfilled, referring to those in Joel, in the eleventh of Isaiah, and elsewhere. On the strength of this assurance, Joseph Smith and his followers freely announced that the time was soon coming when the Jews should be gathered home again, and that Jerusalem should be inhabited as a city without walls, for the multitude of men and cattle therein.

The New Encyclopedia Britannica, 11th edition, volume 15, has this interesting statement:

Prior to 1858, when the modern building period commenced, Jerusalem lay wholly within its sixteenth century walls, and even as late as 1875 there were few private residences beyond their limits. At present Jerusalem without the walls covers a larger area than that within them.

Though Joseph Smith confidently made the prediction, he did not live to see its fulfillment, for his life was cut short, and according to this authority, as late as 1858 Jerusalem was still circumscribed by her sixteenth century walls; but the prophecy was sure, and to-day Jerusalem is spread far beyond her walls, covering a larger area outside the walls than within,—and that has been the case for some years past. So it may truly be said that she is "inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."

Along this same line of proof is an article appearing in The Outlook, April 4, 1914, under the caption: "The walls of Jerusalem," in which it appeared that at that time the walls had been so far outgrown and had become so useless, that the city authorities were advertising them for sale as building material. With this article appeared an illustration, which is reprinted herewith, together with the text appearing under it in The Outlook. The article itself is as follows:

A picture on another page shows the walls of Jerusalem which may be soon demolished. Their situation is striking, for deep ravines surround the city on three sides.

These are not the walls of that Egyptian time, when we

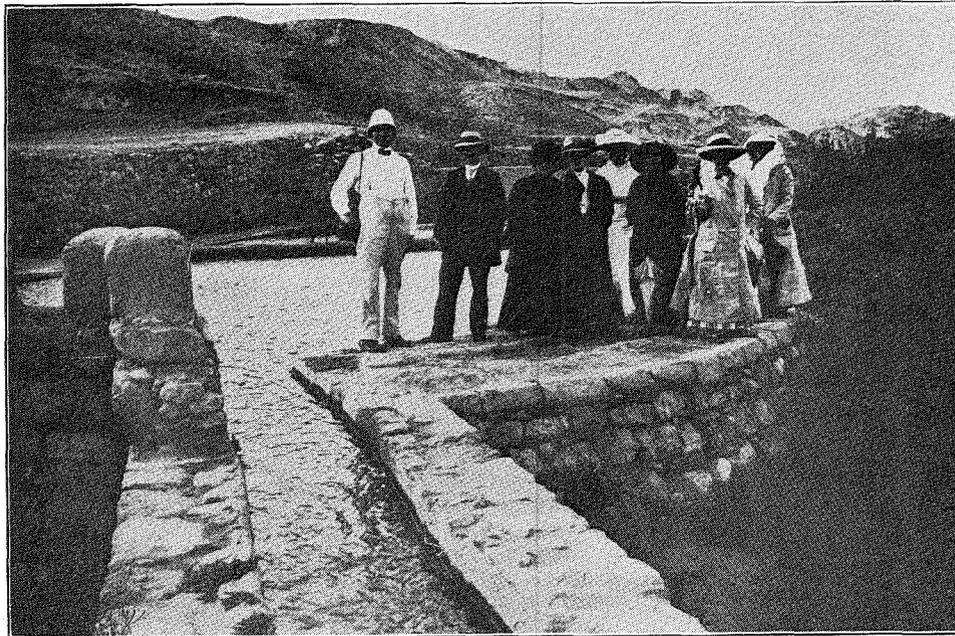

J. Bliss; and the Fountain Gate, not far from the Pool of Siloam, near where excavations have laid bare Hezekiah's underground water supply system.

The present Jerusalem covers a larger area without the walls than does the city within the walls. The sanitary condition of both sections is deplorable. The necessities of a new water system and of trolley lines and electric lighting call, it is claimed, for the demolition of parts of the walls—indeed, that portion adjoining the Jaffa Gate was some years ago thrown down, a new gate was opened, and the old Herod's Gate reopened.

But why destroy all? The walls are picturesque; they contain memorials of earlier times; they offer opportunity for further discoveries. Hence it is not surprising that the rumor of an offer by the authorities to sell the walls for building material should have called forth much adverse comment. This is specially noted in Jerusalem itself, where, so we are informed, a number of the foreign consuls have united in a protest.—The Outlook, April 4, 1914.

first hear about Jerusalem. Nor are they the walls of the Hebrew time—of David and Solomon and later of Hezekiah, walls which saved the city from the siege of Sennacherib, the Assyrian general, but which fell before the attacks of the Babylonians.

In 445 B. C., Nehemiah—a good example of “scientific efficiency”—rebuilt the walls in an incredibly short time. But Jerusalem was still to be often captured. When, for instance, Alexander the Great came, the gates were opened to him, but he left the Jews in peaceful occupation. When Ptolemy came, he partly demolished the walls. They were further destroyed by the Græco-Syrian conqueror, Antiochus Epiphanes. The latter's oppression led to a Jewish revolt under the leadership of the Maccabees. Herod the Great restored the walls; Titus demolished them; Hadrian rebuilt them; the Empress Eudoxia strengthened them; so did the Mohammedans from 637 A. D. to 1099, when Godfrey de Bouillon captured Jerusalem. Then, nearly a century later came the wall-building by the Mohammedan conqueror Saladin, completed early in the sixteenth century by Solyman the Magnificent. The result is the walls as we know them.

They are pierced by eight or ten gates and surmounted by many towers, of which perhaps the best known is the so-called Tower of David.

The most important gates are the Jaffa and Damascus Gates. Then there is the old Valley Gate, the remains of which were discovered some years ago by Mr. F.

IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS

BY ELDER PAUL M. HANSON

On the morning of June 23, a number of Saints met at the wharf in San Francisco to bid farewell to my wife and me, who were on board the Moana ready to sail for the Australian Mission. Deep was our appreciation of the kindly presence of dear friends at the parting moment—then the steamer left the wharf and slowly moved out, seeking her pathway in the sea.

It is a long run to Papeete, and we were glad the afternoon of July 4, when we saw the faint outlines of Tahiti, and sailed late in the evening into the harbor of Papeete.

OUR NEW CHURCH, NEAR COMPLETION, PAPEETE, TAHITI.

The Mission House is seen to the left, the sea wall in front to protect against tidal waves.

We were met at the steamer by Elder Clyde F. Ellis, his wife, and two of the native brethren, who gave us a glad welcome, and escorted us to the church, where a large number of the native Saints from all over the district had gathered, awaiting our arrival.

The church in Papeete is in the midst of tropical vegetation, near the ocean. Adjoining is the mission house, the home of our missionaries, and where we found with Brother Ellis and wife, and later with Brother Chrestensen and wife, at all times a happy home during our sojourn in the islands.

Calls from different parts of the mission came for our labors, so a tour of the islands was outlined, which would take us to the islands of Apataki, Kaukura, and where an opportunity would be offerred to meet many of the Saints. On the afternoon of July 10, Brother Ellis and I boarded the Saint Francois, a small French steamer trading in the islands, and after a rough night at sea sailed the next evening into the pass of Apataki, one of the Tuamotuan group of islands. These islands lie low, just a few feet above the level of the sea, and are covered with coconut trees.

They are of coral formation, and consist of a narrow strip of land, from one half mile to one mile in width, each island surrounding a lagoon. Some of the lagoons are thirty miles long and ten miles wide, and in them the water is comparatively calm. Around the islands are coral reefs, situated a sufficient distance from the shores so that the seas in breaking upon them with tremendous force lose their power before reaching the land. What a wonderful protection to these islands! Nearly every island has a narrow pass through which small boats can enter into the lagoon. It was in one of the passes that our steamer anchored, and soon we were resting on the island of Apataki. A cargo of copra (dried coconut) was then taken on board, for which the natives had received in exchange money and necessary provisions.

On July 13 we boarded a small auxiliary boat, propelled by gasoline and sail, and in a few hours passed through the very narrow, dangerous pass of Kaukura. The boat was in charge of natives, and I marveled at their skill in maneuvering it among the rocks, and bringing it safely into the lagoon. Through the pass the boat marked a sharp zig-zag course. As we passed through we saw near the boat a number of sharks, the water being very clear.

July 18 at Kaukura was a busy day; the district president, a native elder, preached at 8 a. m., after which I baptized eight in the waters of the Pacific. Elder Ellis preached at 10.30 a. m. Several children were blessed and one brother was ordained at the afternoon prayer service, and the writer preached at night. There was a large attendance at all meetings.

At Kaukura I met an old man, a full-blooded native, said to be the only one remaining of the number baptized by the missionaries sent out in the days of Joseph the Martyr. He was baptized on the island of Anaa by Elder Benjamin F. Groward, who with three other missionaries left America in 1843 on the ship Timoleon. He is yet a well-preserved old man, and has borne a strong testimony in the interest of the truth of the gospel; he remembers well the teachings of these first missionaries relative to the order of marriage, and when the representatives of the plural marriage system under Brigham Young came to the islands he declared their teaching was

OUR CHURCH EXHIBIT AT THE PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION

BY ELDER F. G. PITT

Our church exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition occupies a wall space at the west end of the Palace of Education, and consists of a table six feet long by three feet wide on which is displayed our church publications and various tracts for free distribution. On the wall above the table hang oil paintings of Joseph the Martyr and his "only wife," Emma. Between is the plaster bust of the late President Smith. The aisle is fifteen feet wide, in the center of which is an art partition nine feet long and eight feet high, at the top of which are two panoramic views, one of Lamoni church and the other Independence church, taken during our General Conferences. The balance of the partition is divided into eight panels,—the first giving the six principles of the doctrine of Christ as recorded in Hebrews 6. Under this is a photo of the Sanitarium and a brief explanation, including the statement, "We believe in faith healing as taught and practiced by Christ. not the same as the teaching of the missionaries in the beginning. When the elders of the Reorganized Church came he said their teaching was the same, exactly the same as what he heard in the beginning. I have heard the old man in public eloquently and earnestly set forth the teaching under Joseph the Martyr, contrast it with the teaching of polygamy under Brigham Young, and then harmoniously blend the work under "Young Joseph" with the work supported under the direction of his father. This old man has evidently in his long life been able to perform a good mission.

While we have not the space many other religious institutions occupy, yet, being in one of the main aisles we reach many people who might otherwise pass us by unnoticed, so after all we are favored in the location.

We are kept busy most of the time answering questions, and explaining the gospel to people from all parts of the world, most of whom express their appreciation and thankfulness.

We have every reason to believe that great good is being accomplished, and if so, to God belongs all the praise.

'NEATH THE SOUTHERN CROSS

(From an account of a missionary tour in Queensland, Australia, during 1914.)

BY ELDER W. J. HAWORTH

We arrived at Brisbane thirty-eight hours late, and were met at the wharf by several of the Saints, who escorted us to the places of abode that had been allotted to us. Here it was my privilege to see Brother Gomer T. Griffiths in action as one of the authorities of the church whose duty it is to set in order and regulate. I received something of an

Wondai from New South Wales, and were soon busy among them preaching and visiting their neighbors. Brother Griffiths remained one week and then went on to Kingaroy. Before going, however, he baptized

We found a fine band of Saints who had come to Again our hearts rejoiced and the forest rang with our songs of praise, both going and coming from the baptism.

In the meantime, Brother Griffiths had organized the Inverlaw Branch, at a point about thirty miles

We decided upon a large dam situated in a forest inclosure, the property of Brother Robert McKay. It was an ideal place, and our hearts were indeed glad as we worshiped our heavenly Father so near to nature that morning. Though the air was cold, the sun shone brightly, the birds sang sweetly, and we ourselves made melody in our hearts. The glorious surroundings brought us into close touch with the Infinite and left little that we could desire to make our cups of joy overflow. The journey was repeated the following Sunday, when the writer baptized three more.

farther on. These members were with few exceptions, baptized in New South Wales and had removed to Queensland. Returning, he joined me at Wondai, and together we returned to Brisbane, where two days later, he organized the district of Southern Queensland. The newly organized branches brought the number of branches in the state up to three, and made the organization of a district possible.

The organization of the district was a red-letter day for the Saints of Queensland, and the first conference was an event which will be long remembered. The Lord put the impress of his Holy Spirit upon the proceedings and gave us the assurance that he was well pleased with what was done.

THE SCRANTON L. D. S. BAND

BY ELDER T. U. THOMAS

On the evening of September 22, 1913, when about six were present, we organized a band to be known as the L. D. S. Band of Scranton, Pennsylvania, with Elder T. U. Thomas, president; David James, vice president; W. J. Lewis, bandmaster; Earl V. Wagner, assistant bandmaster; Clyde Coates, secretary; and Albert Lewis, treasurer.

The band was organized for the purpose of assisting in the church work, and I am pleased to say that they have given a good account of themselves since organizing, for they have, on request, assisted in Apostle Griffiths returned to Sydney by the steamer Canberra on July 29. Quite a gathering of the local Saints assembled at the wharf to see him go. How reluctantly the Saints said "good-by" to him. He had endeared himself to all by his kindly, cheery manner and by the good work he had done among them. I felt lonely as I saw him go, for he had been a father to me.

After the departure of Brother Griffiths, I remained a month in Brisbane, continuing the work begun by him, instructing the Saints, visiting their homes, and working in the many ways open to a minister in a city. Among other functions I assisted in working up the first "Institute Sunday" program ever rendered in Queensland. I do not pretend to be a musician, but here, for the first time, I undertook to teach the children several action songs. This entailed a lot of labor, but it brought its reward when the time came to render the program. The educational features were also excellent, and altogether our first "Institute Sunday" in Queensland whetted the appetites of the Saints for more of such educational work.

some large parades held in this city of so many parades. They have nobly assisted in the church work, and much credit is due them for their faithful attention and response to duty.

During the summer months on Saturday evenings the writer tells the gospel story in the park, where hundreds of people gather to take a rest, there being a large number of seats provided for their accommodation. The band meets at the church, where prayer is offered by one of the number, then they march to the place of meeting, playing some marches as they go, thereby drawing many people after them. The band has been engaged several times to furnish music to several of the city societies, which have highly complimented them for their rendition, and also their deportment.

The band picture was taken on last Decoration Day, before the Scranton church building, after our return from the cemetery, where the band had been furnishing the old veterans with music in the memorial service.

It should be stated that there are a few of the number who are not Latter Day Saints, but who enjoy being in the band and assisting in the good work done. If every branch that possibly could would have a band to furnish music for outside preaching, we believe much more good could be done, and the result would be very encouraging.

Several times we have heard the men state after returning from the street work that they were wonderfully blessed in their effort, and that playing on the instruments was very easy for them. This confirms the writer in the belief that music and musical instruments of the right kind are in their proper place when utilized for church work.

The view here published is from the southeast. The main entrance, it will be observed, is from the east, as at present. There is to be an addition on the south of the church, as will be seen in the cut, and one exactly similar on the north. Also the west end of the church will be built out to the rear to accommodate the rostrum and the choir. The two towers now at the front of the building will be torn down and replaced by larger towers.

PROPOSED NEW LAMONI CHURCH.

PROPOSED NEW LAMONI CHURCH

The Lamoni Saints are considering the proposition of building a new church, or rather remodeling the old. We present herewith a picture of the church as it will appear if the designs to be submitted by the building committee are adopted. The plans have been prepared by architect Charles F. Church, of Lamoni. The cut is used by his courtesy, at his expense. The plans have been adopted by the building committee of the branch, but not by the branch itself. They are to be submitted to the branch for consideration at the January meeting.

The building committee consists of Heman C.

these plans, Lamoni will be provided with a very convenient and beautiful church edifice. It will furnish them with a better building than the church has ever had for General Conference use, and will furnish better housing for the local congregation. The church building at Lamoni at present is not adequate for the needs of the local congregation, particularly the Sunday school.

A PEN PICTURE OF TWO OF THE OLD GUARD

[The following pen picture of two of the old-time missionaries, Elders E. C. Briggs and J. C. Clapp, is taken from the serial story "Joe Pine," by Elbert A. Smith, now running in Autumn Leaves. See the portrait of Patriarch E. C. Briggs on cover of this number.—EDITORS.]

Joseph Brady beheld a tall, straight, slender old man. His beard and hair were clean and white as snow; but his cheeks were smooth and soft and flushed like a baby's cheeks,—or like June roses bordered by untimely December snows. His eyes were bright and perpetually inquisitive like those of a boy. In a remarkable manner he created an impression of dignified and hoary age coupled with perpetual youth and energy.

He was dressed in faultless clerical black, as clean and fresh and immaculate from head to toe as though he had just stepped from the proverbial bandbox.

Joseph Brady recognized him as Elder E. C. Briggs, one of the landmarks of the conference, a man whose name had long been a household word in thousands of homes of his people.

"Yes," declared Elder Briggs, "at one time, bless your heart, I was the entire missionary force of the Reorganized Church. And I had the honor to be the first missionary to go to Utah and proclaim against polygamy, long before any of the so-called orthodox denominations established missions there. Brigham was king then. Bless your heart, you should have heard him roar when I goaded him in his den."

Joseph knew that these statements were true. This man in his youth had gone out at one time as the sole traveling representative of the Reorganized Church. With no missionary force, no press, no department of the Bishopric back of him, he had faced the world and staked his all on the truthfulness of the prediction that one of the seed of Joseph would presently come at the call of God and take his place at the head of the church.

He had lived to see his faith justified by events. Once a lone tree, he was now as one of a forest, and enjoyed taking part in a great assembly of fellow ministers from many well-established missions.

Looking at him, Joseph instinctively removed his hat; he felt that young men like himself could do no less than to honor such a man for what he had done. He knew that he stood in the presence of one who all his life had been a stranger to the sensation of fear.

With him was another elderly man of a different type; a great, rough, rugged man, who looked at him with small, piercing eyes from under great overhanging brows, and spoke to him in a deep yet rasping voice; a man whose clothing hung loosely on his angular and rugged bulk, whose immense hooked nose gave an impression of power and militancy.

"This is Elder J. C. Clapp," announced Briggs, and Joseph knew that he was meeting another of the "old timers," as he might have expressed it. This man had grown up in the Wild West in an early day. He and his people had been through the stirring scenes of early Utah history. They had apostatized from Utah Mormonism and had escaped with their lives. He knew Indians and the trail and cow-boys and desperadoes.

Called to preach the gospel, he had traveled far and wide with fearlessness and force, with untiring zeal lavishly expending the prodigious primeval strength of his great body and mind in the service of his Master. He literally poured his life out in service. A pathetic family tragedy that Joseph could not know had left its lines upon his rough-hewn visage and its sadness in his penetrating eyes, but of these he did not speak.

"Yes, I knew your father," said Elder Clapp in his deep, rasping voice. "I heard him preach a sermon once that took my fancy. He began like this," and to Joseph's surprise he repeated the text and for ten minutes recounted the opening passages of the sermon. "That was twenty years ago," he concluded, "I could repeat it all, but I will not take your time." Joseph looked at him wonderingly. He recalled stories that he had heard of this man's prodigious memory.

"Bless your heart, my boy, we call him the walking encyclopedia," said Elder Briggs, in his soft, high-pitched voice. "He remembers everything he has ever read."

As the two bade him good-by, Elder Briggs said, "God bless you, my boy," and added, apparently as an afterthought, "Is that a daily paper you have? May I borrow it?"

The parting benediction seemed habitual; he wished it most sincerely and whole-heartedly for all men. The borrowing of the paper seemed no less characteristic, a manifestation of his predilection to acquire and read everything printed that met his gaze.

In old age his spirit still pressed forward, inquisitive, alert, asking the news, ready for any adventure.

As the two old men walked away, Joseph watched them: the one so slight and immaculate, the other so rugged, loose hung, and carelessly draped. He perceived that both were kindly Christian gentlemen, yet in opposition to error and evil by nature and training most formidable fighters.

The difference between the two was that Briggs would approach and challenge the enemy with alert poise and grace, while Clapp would charge him with a crashing onslaught like the charge of a grizzly,—though it is true he possessed a keen and savage wit that could be used with deadly precision on occasion. He was the sort of man to go out of his way to meet a mob. Having met it he would rush it, carrying one half from its feet and winning the friendship and support of the other half.

Untaught in any school of theology, these men had met and held their own with theologians of every school. They had wrestled with opposition most bitter, met mobs, defied the elements, known sorrow, endured poverty, and now in old age, unsoured, they were taking a sweet pleasure in the enjoyment of some of the fruits of their labors. They were of the pioneers. Our younger men will do well to respect their memory and will find use for every faculty at its best if they would excel their record.

PREACHING THE GOSPEL

[Note.—The following article is in fact a synopsis of a sermon preached by Elder W. J. Trembath to the ministry at Geelong, Australia, in response to an invitation from Elder C. Ed. Miller.—EDITORS.]

A few hints are hereby given which it is trusted will be helpful in the preparation of the ministry for the preaching of the gospel.

ARE YOU PART SERVANT OR ALL SERVANT

1. The word minister really means servant. The gospel minister serves God, the church, and the world at large. The minister who really wishes to be successful must be willing to let God be God, to be the chooser and appointer, as any earthly master would be, in the filling of a vacancy, and the choosing of his own servants.

Many ministers fail because they want to be only one quarter servant and three quarters God. In their hearts they are dissatisfied with the office to which God has called them. They think it is too low in rank, and that they are situated in a poor place to show off their talents and their ability. If they had been called to be elders, seventies, high priests, apostles, or even counselors to the First Presidency, instead of being in the lowly office in which they are really placed, what wonderful things they would do!

Again, if they were sent to China, Japan, Africa, or to South America, with their teeming millions of people especially if they were the only and sole minister there, would not they stir things up and surprise the natives of those countries and the church in general? Would not the onlookers acclaim the great star which had arisen?

That is not God's plan. He knows what he wants, and whom he wants. Be a servant filled with humility and the Spirit of God.

Be willing to faithfully serve him to the best of your ability in any office or capacity to which he in his divine wisdom chooses to call you. Be willing to work just where you are, surrounded by your present environment, to do the best you can now, and just as long as God shall choose to keep you there, and if you will do that you will meet with the favor and approbation of God, and in his own time and in his own way, he will see to it that you are promoted in office in his kingdom. Remember, as Milton says: "They also serve who only stand and wait."

THE CALL TO OCCUPY

2. The call to the ministry. In the so-called churches of the world, the human, not the divine, is almost always the determining factor in the call to the so-called ministry.

Often the personal desires alone of the candidate, the wishes of a congregation, or the plans of parents for the future means of livelihood of their sons, are the means of bringing into existence the ministry of these so-called ministers of the churches of Christendom.

THOMAS, RICHARD AND HENRY

For instance, a brewer whose wealth has been made by the manufacture and sale of beer, which has been a curse to the community, has three sons, Dick, Tom, and Harry. What shall I do with them to give them a start in life? he asks himself. At last he says, I'll make Dick a lawyer. He's a smart fellow. Tom shall be a doctor; but what in the world am I to do with poor Harry? He's a bit of a fool. After scratching his head he says, I've got it. I'll make a parson of him.

The brewer's wealth pays for Harry's education at college, the university, and the theological college, and at last he comes out a full-blown parson in a long-tailed coat and a white necktie. There is a lot of theology apparently in that raiment, but poor Harry's ministry did not originate in God's choosing, but in the brewer's mind, backed up by the beer-produced heavy purse which was at Harry's disposal. That is a human plan for the ministry of Christendom; but it is not God's plan.

God always keeps the choosing of his ministry in his own hands. He may make known his choice to any man, woman, or child, in his church, and they may have the gift of prophecy, and publicly foretell the ultimate call and ordination of such person; but such prophesying is not the real and true call to any person to the work of the ministry itself. It is only an intimation that at some future time, which is God's own time, the call itself will come through the proper officers of a branch, district, or mission, as the case may be, and in all cases the concurrence of the presiding officers of branch, district, or mission separately, or conjointly, must be obtained to prevail before any call and ordination can be deemed to be valid and of God.

God will always stand by and illuminate the minds of the proper presiding officers in these matters of calls to the ministry if they be true and faithful men. The one called is entitled to have evidence for himself as to the genuineness of his call to any office, and he should hesitate to act in such office until he gets the evidence for himself of the divinity of his call. If need be, he should seek it by earnest prayer and fasting, and may ask the branch to assist him by their prayers, so that no mistake may be made.

THE STORY OF AN INDIAN

3. The minister should be devoted to the cause of God. The cause should always come first.

I once heard of a red Indian who was in great trouble in the forest. He prayed to the Great Spirit, but got no answer to his prayer. He laid down his gun on the log as an offering to the Great Spirit, and then prayed again. Still he got no answer. Then he called his dog, a thing of life, flesh and blood, whom he greatly loved, and said, "Great Spirit, I give you my dog as well as my gun. Now hear my prayer." Still he got no answer. He then seated himself on the log, and said, "Great Spirit, I have given you my gun, and my dog, I now give you myself. That is all I have in the world. Now hear and answer my prayer."

The self-abnegation of that red Indian should pervade the whole being of the real, divinely-called minister of God. I beseech you, therefore, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which is your acceptable service, said Paul the apostle. The same sacrifice of even our bodies as well as our all is required now.

Every officer in the church holds a royal commission in the army, not of King George of Great Britain, and the Over-Sea-Dominions, but of the Lord of lords, and of the King of kings. How such officer, then, is honored.

There should be no skulking in the trenches; but such officer should always be ready and anxious to lead his men on in the charge against the world, the flesh, and the Devil.

The minister has to feed the flock of God. Let him then do his very best to lead them to the green pastures and the still waters. Let him learn all his divinely appointed duties and then do his best to perform them for the good of all concerned.

ANGELS TO DO THE PLOWING

4. Get knowledge, tact, and wisdom. We have to be laborers together with God. If we live as we should, he will help us in our preaching by his Spirit; but he will not do all.

Many have the notion that they have only to open their mouths, and God will fill them. They have no more right to do that as a general rule, than they have to expect that the Lord will send down the angels from heaven, and hitch them on to a plow to plow the farmer's land whilst his horses are standing still in the stable, and he, himself, is idling about in the house.

To preach an effective sermon, we must get knowledge. To that end we should carefully read the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, church papers, and all good books; make a careful study of the tracts published by the church; listen carefully to the preaching of others.

Do not trouble too much to criticize. Don't bother about the chaff. Be always on the lookout for the good grain, like the poultry in the yard, or like the miser who seeks to keep the pennies that he may ultimately have pounds. Fill your minds with the wealth of knowledge, then you will seldom be poor in thought. Take a broad, deep, statesmanlike view of what you read, like David Lloyd George in Great Britain, who during this terrible war thinks not in pennies, but in hundreds of millions of pounds, and as Lord Kitchener who thinks in millions of men.

Try to grasp the height, depth, and the breadth of God's wonderful love in giving us the original, and this restored gospel, and then tell out what your thoughts are, so long as they are true. The man who is always expecting the Holy Spirit to fill his mouth, may cover his audience with a cloud of words, words, words,—mere verbosity,—but the Spirit of God will not be the author of that, but the preacher's own vain spirit, who mistakes mere words for argument, edification, and instruction.

The Scriptures tell us that everything is to be done in decency and order, and anyone who reads the revelations given in the Doctrine and Covenants can see that true inspiration means not merely words but instruction, logic, common sense, comfort, and edification for the benefit of the people of the church. Paul told Timothy to study to be a workman who needed not to be ashamed. He told him further to be given to reading.

THOUGHTS THAT GRIP LIKE POLAR BEARS

Almost any fool can wander along, and meander about for an hour. That is easy, but it requires a gifted and clever man to preach a gem sermon in fifteen minutes. Few can do it. Do not preach in farthing thoughts, nine hundred and sixty of them to the pound, or pence thoughts, two hundred and forty of them, or shilling thoughts, twenty to the pound. These are loose strings of coin, but not of much value. Compress, be clear, pointed, direct, concise. Give guinea thoughts,—much value contained in little space.

"Liebig's—extract—of beef," the words; but let the thoughts grip the audience like polar bears which can not easily be shaken off. Aim at that. It is worth trying for. Always seek to improve your ordinary education. Learn to speak grammatically. The educated man generally, if not always, has an advantage over the ignorant one in his pulpit addresses to the public.

Never forget that knowledge and tact and wisdom are not one and the same thing. A man may have a great deal of knowledge, but if he have not tact and wisdom, to say and do the right thing in the right way at the right time, his ministry will be greatly handicapped by the lack of these things.

BEATEN OIL FOR THE TEMPLE

5. Preparation for work, especially pulpit work, should always be the rule of life in these matters.

If you know you have to preach at a certain time, at a certain place, try to find out what the needs of the people are there and try to supply them. When you have selected a subject to preach upon, prepare that subject to the best of your ability. Think about it, examine it top and bottom, inside and outside. Get all the knowledge you can about it, then select, eliminate, and condense. Throw out all immaterial matter.

Do not load up a twelve-inch cannon to kill a mosquito. Take the mountain peaks of the subject and view the landscape over from there. Remember, there must be no lazy preparation or preaching. There must be oil, beaten oil for the temple, if the light of God is to shine forth with its best effect.

OUR QUARREL

6. Be earnest. Do not have a mere politician's view of your preaching vocation. Do not say like him, "They're my sentiments, but if they don't suit they can be altered." Be true to truth.

I once knew a man who said he only found out he could preach when he had a row with his neighbor. He had been wronged. His grievance was his text. He was in earnest, so much so that he lost his temper, and then the words came to him. He was in earnest and impugned his neighbor. I do not say we are to quarrel. But there is a great deal in the underlying principle. If we realize that we have a quarrel with the world, the flesh and the Devil, we shall generally be in earnest, and then the words will come.

If a person be in earnest about his or her lover, such person can generally find tongue to talk about the loved one. "God is love." "Jesus lover of my soul." Is this real to us? If so, we shall generally be able to talk earnestly about it, and thus influence others.

MILKING THE COW DRY

7. Let your sermons, as a rule, be short. Some preachers forget that the object of preaching is to edify, instruct, warn, and comfort the congregation. They like to hear themselves talk, and are never satisfied till they have utterly exhausted the subject in one sermon. One would imagine that they thought the end of the world would come with the end of their sermon, and they would never get an opportunity of speaking on the subject again. That is a mistake.

Do not treat the subject as if it were a cow that you have to milk, and you must keep dragging at her udder until you have extracted the last drop of milk. Take into consideration the mental and spiritual digestive powers and stomach capacity for food of your audience.

Would any mother bring a funnel to put into the mouth of her baby, and a bucket of milk to pour down the funnel for one meal for the young baby? Poor little thing, she would smother or drown her baby if she did that. Feed the lambs and the babes in Christ according to their needs.

Then again take the old in the church. There is the old brother of seventy or eighty years, whose powers are impaired by his length of years. He wants a bit of lunch. Would any sane person think of bringing him two hams, three turkeys, four geese, five ducks, six hens, and a big fish a yard long for his bit of lunch, as if they wanted to kill him, and then fill up his grave with those things upon him? Such a thing of course would be absurd.

Yet in our preaching we often act on that principle, and waste a lot of good material that has no more effect upon the congregation than a large flock of birds flying over their heads.

Divide the text into short sermons, and preach from the same text several Sundays, one after the other if need be, progressing step by step, like climbing a ladder, and then the young and the old can remember much of what we say and be profited.

Is we preach so plainly that the children can understand us, then the adults will be sure to do so, and after all, that is the object of all preaching, viz, edification, or building up the hearers.

MADAM MELBA NOTES

8. If the sermon must be preached and not merely written or printed, the voice is a very important matter in its delivery. Seek to cultivate a sweet, clear voice. Speaking is only a certain kind of singing, as singing is a certain kind of speaking. Aim at Madam Melba notes, notes so sweet and precious that people will give bank notes to hear them.

Do not speak from the throat or the palate. Form the words by the lips as much as possible, and speak from the front of the mouth. Enunciate slowly, clearly and distinctly. Do not roar like the bulls of Bashan, or whisper so that you scarcely be heard. In a small building do not shout as if you were in a large cathedral; or in a large building do not speak in a low tone as if you were in a small church. Learn to measure the building by your eye, and speak accordingly.

Some preachers speak in a high, strident voice, and monotonously keep it up from the beginning to the end of the service, as if the Lord were deaf, much less the congregation. It gets on the nerves of the hearers like the sharpening of a saw. Do not mumble and make a noise which no one can properly understand, like the sound of a buzzing bee in a corked up beer bottle.

Whatever you do, do not yell. People do not want their scalps lifted, so that you may play wild Indian and hang them onto your belt. Whenever we think of the angels, we think of their wonderful voices in their sweet songs. There is marvelous power in the human voice. Seek to use it to the best advantage to help, not hinder us in our preaching services. If need be, study elocution.

NEITHER BOORISH NOR FOPPISH

A very great deal depends upon the dress, neatness, cleanliness, and manners of a minister. Do not be eccentric in dress. No preacher has a right to wear a bell-tapper three feet high, or flaming red breeches. Nor has he a right to be ultrafashionable in his dress. He should so dress that he would be able to stand among his compeers without attracting undue attention for either eccentricity and coldness, or newness of fashion in his apparel.

Be scrupulously clean in clothing and in person. Don't be an angel with a dirty face, a collar of dirt round the neck, a shaggy unkempt beard like a he-goat, or band of black mourning under the finger nails. Be clean in the thoughts of the mind, and then we shall be clean in acts, life, clothing, and body.

Be careful as to manners. Do not be rough as a Boer, or be a fashionable fop. Always and everywhere, be a Saint, and a real and true gentleman in the highest sense of the word.

GEMS DIFFER THOUGH EACH A JEWEL

10. Be yourself. Do not mimic, imitate or pattern yourself after other people in voice, manner, or style, especially in your preaching services. Have a high ideal. Seek to develop your own personality and individuality by every proper means within your power.

All gems are not alike, but every gem is a jewel, and when cut and polished has a peculiar beauty of its own, and its own special value.

All flowers from the violet to the sunflower are flowers, and have their own special beauty.

Be content to be yourself, but seek to develop the very best that is in you, then you will be a success as a man and a preacher.

11. Rightly divide your subject or text. Ever remember that if you take a text it is like a rosebud. You have to expand it into the full-blown rose, and show its hidden meaning and beauty and fragrance.

Too many preachers instead of unfolding a text treat it as if it were a hat peg, simply to hold up things they bring to it; these things are often the most distant, and altogether foreign and immaterial to the text, but men think that because they may be true and right enough for some other text, they will do to hang on the hat-peg of the particular, present text they are trying to preach from.

THE SERMON NOT A DOCTRINAL STEW

That is all wrong. Many preachers preach a sermon that is a kind of religious or doctrinal stew or hash. They throw into the pot a little bit of a dozen doctrines, stew it over for an hour, and then think they are very fine ecclesiastical cooks, and have prepared and served a fine dish for the feeding of their congregation. We don't want ecclesiastical stews, hashes, or mince pies. There is too much mixture about them for a plain, edifying, instructive sermon.

The design of God as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7 and other places, is that local men should do local work in the branches and districts, and such work should be left in the hands of the local men, as far as possible, and that the traveling ministry or missionaries should travel and do free missionary work in the outside world, that is, not among the Saints. Yet God's plan seems to be perverted, and in branches, even when the proper local officers are acting in their places, missionaries are sometimes attached to those branches as a kind of unofficial over-lord to the officers of the branches.

The missionaries in other places seem to leave their own proper mission work to a large extent undone, and make one eternal round of visits from branch to branch, district conference to district conference, and reunion to reunion. In fact, such missionaries seem to make a kind of ecclesiastical, or spiritual picnic of their work, and when one asks why it is thus, the answer is, "The local men can not hold the congregations together, and if it were not for the constant attendance of the missionaries the branches would become as ropes of sand and would soon dissolve."

Well, there seems to my mind something wrong somewhere, and I am making this effort so that the local men may be helped to qualify themselves to hold their rightful positions in the branches and to fill them effectively, so that the congregations may be held together by their efforts.

AIM AT THE TARGET

Other men may have a different plan of preparing for and preaching a sermon, but it has seemed to me that the plan I herein set forth might help some, hence my reason for presenting it:

When we give out a text, let us say on "baptism," we should remember we are to preach on baptism today and nothing else. We must not preach a little bit on baptism and then run off at a tangent on the laying on of hands, or the resurrection of the dead, or the second coming of Christ, etc. Those are all separate subjects, and should be treated of one by one, on separate Sundays, one after the other, till all are dealt with separately. If the subject is to be baptism, let it be baptism and nothing else at that time.

Baptism is your target. Aim for the bull's-eye; don't fire at everything on the horizon, north, south, east, and west. Travel in a straight line. Do not wobble and wander about.

A, B AND C PREACH A SERMON

To make the matter clearer, we will suppose we are in a priesthood meeting with a dozen priests taking part in the composition and preaching of a sermon on baptism. We will call them Brother A, B, C, D, E, etc. Twelve times five would be sixty minutes, or one hour for the whole sermon. That would allow five minutes for each, which would really be too long for a sermon. However, we will take one hour so as to illustrate our ideas.

Now brethren, remember no one is to say or repeat what any other has to say. Each brother is to deal with his own particular head, or point, and not interfere with another brother's. By so doing we shall be constantly progressing and getting new material. It is like climbing a ladder or ascending a staircase. We are constantly advancing and covering new ground, not going up certain steps or rungs and then descending to the bottom, and beginning to climb all over again. How could we ever reach the top that way? So it is with our sermon.

Now Brother A, our subject or text is baptism. Give us a point, head, or division on that subject, and talk about it for five minutes.

Brother A's point is that baptism is by immersion. All right, Brother A. Talk about the immersion phase of the subject and nothing else. He does. Time is up.

Now Brother B, give us your point. He says baptism is not pouring or sprinkling. All right. Go ahead and talk on that for five minutes. Do not say anything that Brother A said, for he finished with that.

Now Brother C, give us your point. His point is that before people can be baptized they must (a) believe, (b) repent, (c) make restitution, if possible. All right Brother C, keep to your point, don't repeat what another brother has already said.

Brother D says babies must not be baptized. They have never sinned, hence do not need baptism. And they are unable to believe and repent anyhow, for they are so young they cannot even speak.

Brother E says baptism is for the remission of sins, and Brother F says baptism to be legal and effective must be performed by those who have authority from God to perform the act.

Brother G deals with the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Each man has given what he knows on his point or head, and has not anticipated, repeated, or trespassed on the point of any other brother. New ground has constantly been broken. There has been no repetition. The congregation has been instructed and pleased. Seven brethren out of the twelve have taken part in the sermon. That means thirty-five minutes, just a nice time for a sermon, and all were pleased and profited.

If only one man were to preach, and he took the heads or points used by Brethren A, B, C, D, E, F, and G, it would make a splendid sermon for one man, if he dealt with the various heads exactly as the various brethren dealt with them. Divide your text into the natural parts which it consists of. Block the subject out if you may express it that way, like a chess board, and deal with each square in its turn, and the sermon will be pleasing, instructive, and edifying, and the congregation will continue to attend and increase as they realize that they are being taught, and spiritually fed.

DRAWING MEN TO GOD

12. In my judgment, too much attention is paid to doctrinal preaching and not sufficient to moral or spiritual preaching, helping lead good lives. We must remember all will be judged according to the deeds done in the body, and not merely according to the knowledge we have of doctrine or theology.

The devils have a knowledge of doctrine, etc., but they remain devils still.

Doctrinal preaching is to a large extent descriptive, like describing a mill, a man-of-war, etc. The main preaching which is required is that which will make us unselfish and Christlike in our lives. Blend the doctrinal and moral, or spiritual teaching to induce the Christ life, and we shall not go far wrong.

In preaching do not rail at people, or be eternally finding fault over little things. Let charity abound. Give all credit for the good that is in them or that they do, and try to entice, woo, and win them to that which they lack in higher and better things.

"And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," said Christ—the world's magnet.

THE WHITE COVERING OF PEACE

13. Pray. Do not preach a little sermon to the Lord, after preaching an hour to the people. The Lord knows all about theology, and does not need that we try to teach him under the guise of prayer.

Do not attempt to order or boss the Lord. Pray. Be humble, ask, beg, entreat. Give thanks for blessings received. Remember you are the spokesman for the people.

Do not be selfish in your prayer, like the man who prayed God bless me and my son John, my wife and his wife, us four and no more. Remember there may be aching hearts in the congregation. Be in earnest. The prayer of a righteous man is effectual and avail-eth much.

Ask that the Comforter may heal the wounds of the troubled ones, the he guide, guard, and sustain, and that the Father place his hand upon the head of his every child, and give each one the very blessing he needs, and cover each one with the white covering of peace.

Pray to the Father in the name of Jesus Christ.

IN MEMORY OF E. C. BRIGGS

BY ELDER CHARLES DERRY

(A word of gratitude and esteem from one who has been benefited through the life and zeal for truth of our lamented Brother E. C. Briggs.)

In the year 1860 I heard a report that Joseph Smith, the eldest son of the martyred president of the Church of Latter Day Saints, had been called of God to fill his father's place at the head of the church. I considered that Brigham Young was using him as a tool to decoy those who had not followed Brigham to Utah, and those who had left Brighamism in disgust, to return there.

I, being one of the latter class, paid no heed to the story. But in the month of February, 1861, I visited a neighbor, not a Latter Day Saint, who handed me a paper, a copy of the HERALD, sent to me by Brother E. C. Briggs. I read the paper aloud in the house of my neighbor. With the reading another spirit came over me, the Spirit of God, the same Spirit I had received when I obeyed the gospel. It bore testimony to the truth of the message borne in that HERALD.

I returned home, told my family, and read to them the good tidings. My family altar had been neglected. But my house was now made a house of prayer. My wife and children, with myself, accepted the message. I requested wife to cook me a few biscuits. We were then in the wilds of Nebraska. She cheerfully complied, and on the 28th day of March, with their prayers in my behalf, and the snow eighteen inches deep on the level prairie, I started for Iowa in search of the Reorganized Church. I was then about sixty miles west of the Missouri River.

My only means of travel was on foot, except that on the second day I was permitted to ride a few miles by stage. I found the ice on the Missouri River covered with water four or five inches deep. I landed safe on the Iowa side,—then six miles through slush and mud, to Council Bluffs.

I found Brethren E. C. Briggs and William W. Blair about ten miles east of that city, at Keg Creek. I was permitted to tarry with them. I traveled with them to Farm Creek. I heard their message, was satisfied God was with them, and on March 3, 1861, in the waters of Farm Creek, I renewed my covenant with God, under the hands of W. W. Blair, and was confirmed by him and E. C. Briggs. Brother Briggs also generously ministered to my temporal necessities, for I had been to Jericho and fallen among thieves, who had robbed me of my faith and left me bare of temporal means.

Our brother has gone to his reward. No braver soldier of the cross have I known. I thank God for the life and holy zeal of Edmund C. Briggs.

May I be as valiant for truth, is my prayer.

GROWING OLD GRACEFULLY

If you happen to have a fancy for comparing life to a hill, it is quite certain you must often have said to yourself that it isn't so much the eastern slope that bothers you as the western one. Going up is easy enough, for the climb comes when you and the world are young; it is the trudging down, when youth's dreams have gone and bodily you are beginning to grow a bit out of your prime,—that is the thing to do gracefully.

Of the eastern slope perhaps no man can complain. The ascent finds us with a song on our lips and courage abundant in our hearts.

All things are fairer then, both the sky above and the earth below. Children that we are, we prance along with much plucking of flowers by the wayside, and plenty of merriment with our comrades in the garden of youth.

Surely grace is ours when the boy and girl is in us. The day of sighs and disappointments and nigh-have-beens has not yet come. Ahead we can see only the crest of the hill, and we press eagerly forward, believing that once we have gained the top, paradise must lie just beyond,—paradise, that happy country, where we were told we could do as we want to "when we have grown up."

Then some day, quite before we realize it, the last rise of the hill comes in sight, and the feeling begins to creep over us that we have hurried along too fast, that we are approaching the great divide before we ought to. So we slacken our pace somewhat, for now the hilltop is in range of vision, and we have our doubts as to the desirability of crossing it. On this side we know how the story runs; on the other we must meet the record we have made. But life is a forced march and no man can tarry by the way. We must grow old in spite of ourselves. In September it is useless to wish May back. The summit is thrust upon us. We are urged on to its very pinnacle. Most of us would like to remain there forever, viewing life from its highest and most attractive point; but this is not possible.

Sooner or later, and it is generally sooner, we are called upon to say good-by to the eastern slope, the slope that knew us when the blood was reddest, and to begin our dreaded journey down the western one. And then it is that the problem of how to grow old gracefully stares us in the face.

But it is not so much of a problem, after all. Does not the matter adjust itself? I believe it does. I have a way of thinking that in a rightly ordered life there are no undue regrets for lost youth, or undue apprehensions for old age.

The years come along naturally, this one different from the last, perhaps, but yielding its necessary and desirable harvest nevertheless. In place of what last year took away from you, the next should grant you something better. For everything you have lost you should have gained something. Here, I fancy is where Emerson's great law of compensation must come in.

The dice of God are always loaded (the Concord philosopher wrote). A perfect equity adjusts its balances in all parts of life.

The world looks like a multiplication table or a mathematical equation, which, turn it how you will, always balances itself. . . . And yet the compensations of calamity are often made apparent to the understanding only after long intervals of time. A fever, a mutilation, a cruel disappointment, a loss of wealth, a loss of friends, (and he might have added a loss of youth) seem at the moment unpaid loss, and unpayable.

But the sure years reveal the deep remedial force that underlies all facts.

If he but know it, it is a shameful confession for one to make, that he fears old age. Is it not equal to confessing that he has been unsuccessful in learning what life and every year of life stands for?

Things have certainly gone far wrong when grace of mind and spirit is not forthcoming to take the place of grace of body; to lose one charm should mean to gain another: Life is growth, and growth is substitution.

Time endows, or should endow, age with a repose, a richness, and an understanding that is impossible in youth, and which can only come when one has lived through certain experiences and towards certain ideals.

The growth of the body stops at twenty, and its charms begin to fade at thirty in a woman and at forty in a man; but growth of the mind and the heart is never done. And seeing that life should be a thing of the character and the soul rather than a thing of the flesh, it is reasonable to suppose that one's years after fifty should have their glories and their delights.

Nothing could be more fitting to revere in the cherished memory of the late venerable Joseph Smith than the oft-repeated remark, "I am trying to grow old gracefully," fully exemplified in the noble life that he lived and left as a dying legacy to all.

Browning in his Rabbi Ben Ezra tells as usual the whole story of the matter:

Grow old along with me;
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made.
Our times are in his hands,
Who saith, A whole I planned,
Youth shows but half; trust God; see all, nor be afraid.

REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS

BY D. R. BALDWIN

I like to search deeply and extract important lessons from the history of the past, and I enjoy contemplating the glories of the future when our Savior shall reign supreme. But I have learned that our lives should be so shaped by our education that rewards and punishments either past, present, or future should be very remote incentives to action. In other words, we should be so completely absorbed in the duties of the immortal present that duty would be the real substance, while rewards and punishments fade into mere shadows.

Our love of duty should be so developed as to absorb every other incentive to action; it should be our slogan, our watchword, and worked so thoroughly into the fiber and texture of our lives that it will become as natural as the act of eating when we are hungry.

Let us suppose that by some means we become convinced that there is no God, and no future; that the change we call death is an eternal stop so far as we are concerned. How would this affect our lives?

I remember saying in substance to a congregation not long after I became interested in this latter-day work: The service of God and of humanity as set forth in this restored gospel pleases me. I like this manner of life. I am getting more satisfaction, more real good out of it than out of anything else that I ever engaged in. If this whole matter should turn out to be false in the end, I am losing nothing by being engaged therein: I am losing nothing by being deceived. If this work is not true, then I have been lifted infinitely higher along all lines by an error, and that is contrary to all of the arts and sciences. If you convince me to-morrow that this work is all false, I shall by no means go back to my former manner of life.

This was over forty years ago, and I have seen nothing in all these years to cause me to change my mind.

Take from me my faith in the mission of Christ if you can. Strip me of my belief in God, and thus rob me of all my hope of Zion, of paradise, of the millennium, of heaven, and of future rewards, and still we have left in the gospel a wealth of treasures that in every way outweighs, outmeasures, and out-values all of the frivolous, selfish, competitive doctrines and attainments of the world. I would still be a Saint in principle, and a socialist in fact. I would not change my course one degree. I would still be compelled to love the Christ ethics. I would still be pleased to continue my labor of love for the emancipation of the race from greed. I would still find joy in trying to lift the world a notch higher.

Many years ago I challenged the agnostic world to point out to me one good thing, one single desirable thing I have missed or lost by engaging in the work of God; but not one of these good people has ever tried to do it.

It is when we develop the Christ life that the fear of hell and of anything else ceases to vibrate in our souls, and we become so wrapped and absorbed in our labor of love that we forget all about rewards and punishments, and life really becomes worth living.

I am not opposing any goodly influence that may be found in the anticipation of rewards that will induce one soul to a higher life. I am not wanting to destroy any influence of fear that may restrain a single soul from evil. But I would have all people know that when we have developed the Christ character we have so far outgrown these incentives that they are practically forgotten.

GENERAL INTEREST

RELIGION'S SOCIAL SIDE

Doctor A. F. McGarragh of Chicago, the church efficiency expert who is making a survey of the Central Presbyterian church, states no novel proposition when he says that greater efficiency may be obtained through emphasis upon the social life of the church, and through a division of the labors that are frequently thrown entirely upon the pastor.

The church rests upon a social basis. It can no more exist as an unsocial organization than the minister can perform his work by preaching to the stones of the desert, beyond the reach of any ear but his own.

Modern churches must utilize this strength of association, and make it serve the central religious purpose of the church. It is for the purpose of developing latent power that Doctor McGarragh has taken up his work with one of the Des Moines congregations. The question is one which is of interest to all denominations and to each individual church.

A religious institution which confines its activities to a few hours of formal services, one day in seven, does not penetrate beyond the verge of the community's life. And the influence is still less, if church activity is measured solely by the personal appeal of the minister to his congregation.

Were that all there is to the church, the minister might as well preach one day in one church, and the next Sunday in another, speakers passing in constant rotation, in order that a fresh message may be brought to each congregation fifty-two times a year. The minister enjoys a place of more or less permanence because the church is more than a sermon a week. The preacher is also an organizer and a director of the associated endeavor of his congregation. The greatest strength of the church lies in its power for united action—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, September 28, 1915.

IN DARKEST TURKEY

Necessities of Syria have caused the Presbyterian Board to forward to that war-smitten country up to August 1, $181,512.20, from 1,040 Syrians in the United States, who are thus trying to aid poverty-stricken relatives and friends. As if war, plague, and famine were not enough, we now hear of an awful incursion of locusts—not the delicate creatures of our acquaintance, but immense fellows, some of them four inches long. A late letter states that practically the whole country from Palestine to Aleppo has been devoured by them. The vineyards, gardens, wheat fields,—everything, except in a few local cities, has been completely ruined. Mats from the floors, corners of beds, and everything at all dispensable has been sold to buy a little food. And still the war drags on with constant sorrows and calamities. British missionaries are of course unable to continue their work, except in isolated cases, and Americans are under great restrictions.

In Darkest Turkey the Armenians are the target for Moslem hatred and bloodshed. Taking as a pretext the rising of Armenian revolutionists at Van, which led to Russian occupation, Turkey is systematically and desperately trying to wipe that race out of existence. By massacre, but more often through torture and exile, they are being put where they need no longer be considered. Mission stations of the American Board report awful scenes, and a general breakup of all law and order. From the districts of Zeitoun and Marash about 28,000 persons were sent by government order to distant places where there are no Christians.

The old, middle-aged, young, the strong and the sick, being driven in herds to the four points of the compass to a fate which none can predict. . . . The sick drop by the wayside, women in critical condition, giving birth to children that ac-ording to reports many mothers drown because of lack of means to care for. Fathers exiled in one direction, mothers in another, and young girls and small children in still another. According to reports from reliable sources, the accompanying gendarmes are told that they may do as they wish with the women and girls.

Happily the American missionaries are not being molested except in rare cases; indeed, they are being treated with consideration and kindness. Yet everywhere they must bear the sorrows and burdens of multitudes. Pray for them all.—Sunday School Times, November 6, 1915.

BRIGHAM FOUNDED UTAH CHURCH

No important part in providing the conditions under which the Mormon Church had its later and better evolution was played by Ann Eliza, last to die of Brigham Young's twenty-four wives.

In the same year in which the Mormon leader was acquitted of a charge of polygamy, Ann Eliza got a divorce from him as his nineteenth spouse. After this ludicrous example of the absurdities of American courts, the ex-number 19 devoted herself to public exposures of Mormon evils.

In the ornate temple grounds at Salt Lake City, founded by Young on a site of his own selection, stands a statue of Joseph Smith. Most peoples make effigies of their leaders and heroes more than life size. This statue is much less than life size. The effect is unusual in an art creation. It conveys the sense of the injustice of understatement.

From the impressionable traveler from the East, newly arrived and with the awe of mountains and deserts still upon him, the diminutive statue and eager, credulous, boyish face upturned to the mighty works of his followers in the surrounding city, have a singular and powerful appeal. It even dissolves old prejudices and transforms them into sympathy.

For Smith was only eighteen when he discovered the gold books. He was still hardly more than a boy when, at twenty-two he began the "translation." Before he was thirty thousands had left their all to follow him. He was only thirty-nine when, to the celebrity of founder of the first important religious system to originate in America, a mob added the sanctity of Mormondom's chief martyr. Millions of men and women have believed in the man whom this boyish statue represents. Hundreds of thousands still believe in him and their number is increasing.

If "Mormon" theology, which Smith developed seems fantastic, Mormon business policy and organization, which Young developed—though a touch of the Fourier Communism that Sidney Rigdon gave to it early always persisted—has been eminently workable and practical.

In a sense Young was the founder of the Utah branch of the church. Indeed, the courts have ruled that the branch which repudiated polygamy and remained in Missouri and Iowa is the only lawful successor of the church Smith founded. Brigham conceived, planned and directed the migration to the West. . . .—Saint Louis Post-Dispatch, September 5, 1915.

SHOULD A PREACHER MAKE MONEY?

"Should a preacher make money?" That is the question the Hillis case, which promises to remain in the public eye for quite a while, is presenting to many people. In his confession Doctor Hillis took the position that he should not—that efforts in that direction were at the cost of inspiration and ideals.

However, the average fair-minded man is likely to take a less strict view of the matter. It goes without saying that a preacher should not speculate under any circumstances—that he should be unusually scrupulous as to the character of his investments. It is likewise to be taken for granted that the minister should not neglect his sacred calling and that if his efforts in other directions conflict with that his duty is to abandon either the pulpit or the business.

But, after all, the preacher is often a man with a family to support—a father with children in whose future he is interested and for whom he wants to provide as far as he can. In other words, he has the natural desires of the lay father. And it looks as if it would take a very censorious person indeed to blame a minister for doing what he could consistently with his calling to acquire a competence for his old age and to give his children a better start in life.

For many preachers, particularly those in small towns and rural communities, the question unfortunately is not whether they shall make money but how they shall make a living. But there are no doubt others in a position to make an effort to better their financial condition, and it is hard to see why the effort is more immoral in their case than in that of a member of the congregation.—Chicago Herald, September 28, 1915.

bearing enemy munitions. The concentration of German troops on the Rumanian border suggests, it is thought, the possible entrance of Rumania in the war, or an attack by Russia over Rumanian territory. Germany is said to be making in the United States extensive purchases of copper, cotton, wool, lard, wheat, and farm machinery for shipment "on order," or "sixty days after the war."

NOTES AND COMMENTS

OREGON ALSO.—Missionaries have many and varied experiences. Some of them are humorous, some are sad, some are exciting. The people are generally very much interested in such experiences, —when they can get an elder "started talking." We have got the elders "started talking" along that line, in Autumn Leaves. Elder Amos Chase will lead out in the January number with a personal anecdote, entitled, "Oregon also." Others will follow. Now is the time to subscribe for Autumn Leaves for 1916. Only one dollar.

EARLY TO PRESS.—Extra work in the mechanical department in the putting out of a magazine number of the HERALD makes it necessary that our forms be closed this week earlier than common. This excludes late-coming miscellany items, and happenings which would have place in our Current Events column. It is the effort of the management to hold the forms open to the latest practicable moment, and which time would be regularly extended if our facilities for mailing and the requirements of the postal authorities would allow. On each magazine number much extra work is necessary, the departments herein mentioned being correspondingly affected thereby.

HOW ABOUT YOU?—With this special magazine number the Editors and publishers of the SAINTS' HERALD send you holiday greetings. They also venture to inquire, How about your subscription for 1916? The SAINTS' HERALD is the official church paper, and so belongs to all the people. The Editors are doing all they can to make it interesting and profitable. But we must have subscribers. Only with a large list of subscribers can we make the HERALD pay and bring it up to its highest development. If you are a regular subscriber, we trust that you will not neglect to renew. If you have not taken the paper in the past, now is an excellent time to subscribe. If you have not encouraged others to take the HERALD, now is a good time to do so.

REGRETTABLE ERROR.—It is with regret that we note an unfortunate error on page 1206 of this issue of the HERALD. The reader will note that to get the proper connection, after turning the page he must pass to the third line of the first paragraph following the cut, "Our church exhibit at San Francisco." The oversight may be explained in this way: The matter is first set, or cast, and when cuts make it necessary, that portion required is again set in shorter lines, the first lines being thrown away. The present error occurred by a failure to discard all the first lines after the matter was reset, and by a failure later to detect the error. The form containing this matter is all but off the press; it not being practicable therefore to correct the error we make this explanation. This incident like some others is not without an amusing suggestion. After the words "please do not confuse," the reader is left to wade through an entanglement bewildering indeed to one unfamiliar with the eternal vigilance required to avoid errors of this kind in a shop putting out much and varied classes of work.

Miscellaneous Department

Reunion Notices

Committee met during recent Pittsburg conference and decided to hold next Spring River, 1916, reunion in Cunningham Park, Joplin, same place as last year, grounds being kindly offered by Mr. Keith and the park board, time, August 4 to 13. Charles Fry, chairman of committee.

Died

Services from the home, Pacatello, by H. E. Winegar.

RAINES.—Gillis Herman Raines, born June 25, 1900; died November 3, 1915. Deceased was working on a bridge of the G. F. and A. Railroad across the Alabama River, and was drowned at one o'clock in the morning. Baptized by Swen Swenson in 1914.

HITCHCOCK.—Catharine Hitchcock, born May 14, 1839, in France; died November 30, 1915. Baptized August 27, 1895, by T. J. Bell. At the age of three she came to America, locating in Livingston County, Illinois. Married John E. Hitchcock, May 20, 1858. Moved to Harrison County, Missouri, in 1870. Leaves 2 sons, George W. and Frank P.; 1 daughter, Pearl G. Simpson. Husband, 1 son, John C.; 1 daughter preceded her. Funeral in Christian Church, Pawnee, Missouri, J. F. Garver in charge, sermon by L. G. Holloway. Devout and faithful, she was counted worthy. A good woman has gone to her well earned reward.

Book Reviews

THE HUNDRETH WAVE.—The name of a 1915 book, written by Grantly Standerson, deals with the doctrines and practices of the Mormons in Utah and is staged in the years just beyond 1930. It sets up a new society, religious or cult prompted by the "hopes and dreams of a young man" for the "redemption of Mormonism." The young man is the son of a Mormon by his legitimate wife, but reared in Gentile environment. He has a half-sister born of the polygamous companion of the father, who figures in the plot of the story but not in its higher purpose, who adheres to the doctrine protecting her birth and in which she was reared, to a tragic ending of her life. There are seven converted maidens from as many different social and religious sources; seven apostles of the new society, hence seven romances. Seven Degrees in the society, seven readings of curtain scrolls or panels, seven doors to the chapter house and forty-nine disciples "on the platform," yet no essential value attaches to the number seven. There is a Beloved Philosopher who comes from ———? but is the soul of the organization and he marries the young man's mother, who is an apostate Mormon and whose money finances the new society most generously. The young man is the hero of the book and the Lesser Master of the Society of Progress. The book stages many of its scenes in some of the most beautiful places in the West, and that in finely chosen language. The personal names introduced are unique in their perversion or assumption of names prominent in Mormon history. The Society of Progress propose to have no revelation other than that manifest through general cosmic law and discoveries of science, although they believe in God they challenge the truthfulness of all scripture and accept no Savior. Whatever there may be of worth in the book, it is besmirched with a most revolting and impossible revelation on plural marriage [polyandry] and its immediate sequence, in one of the closing chapters of the volume. The writer is without doubt thoroughly, even intimately acquainted with the Utah people. Charles H. Kerr & Company, Publishers, Chicago. Price $1.35, net.

The Saints' Herald

Every important branch of industry of today has its trade journal. The progressive business man must keep pace with the progress in his line.

Every Latter Day Saint should have access to the official publication of the church. The times demand that every member of the church be informed of the various movements of the church.

The building of the kingdom of God is the all-important task of the church to-day. We shall only be wise builders as we know the needs of the body.

The SAINTS' HERALD goes to the people laden with the best that can be secured by the writers of the church. There is doctrine and news and information. Various special departments cater to special needs, such as the musical, Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary.

Occasionally we issue special magazine numbers, with a number of good illustrations and articles on special subjects, but every week there is something for the thoughtful reader.

It will be a real loss if you do not have the SAINTS' HERALD the coming year. Subscribe now.

Two Different Effects

The quality of food is very largely determined by the ingredients in the baking powder with which it is made. Cream of tartar baking powders, such as Royal, add only healthful qualities to the food.

The cream of tartar of Royal Baking Powder as used in food has the same wholesome effect on the digestive system as the cream of tartar in grapes, from which it is derived.

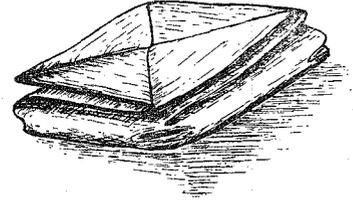

On the other hand, it is in evidence that objectionable mineral residues exist in food made with alum or phosphate baking powders.

There is a clause on baking powder labels which names all the ingredients. Read it and let it guide you.

WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS?

(An examination of the attitude of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, touching the man who was arraigned before Pilate. From a sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday, December 12, 1915. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

Text: "Ye should follow in his steps."—1 Peter 2: 21.

Many centuries ago a certain Roman governor ruled in the city of Jerusalem. And on a certain occasion there was brought before him for judgment an individual who had been accused by the Jews. This man Pilate, as he sat in judgment at that time, did not realize that the eyes of all the world for centuries to come would be turned backward to examine all that was done. He did not comprehend or anticipate that the greatest jurists of all time would look back and that they would analyze the evidence that was submitted before his court, and scrutinize every detail of the action that was taken, and finally would condemn the outcome of the trial as absolutely unjustifiable and contrary to law—contrary even to the Roman law by which this man was judged.

"BEHOLD THE MAN"

He did not know that he himself, sitting as a judge, would be judged by millions of others yet unborn, and that he would be so condemned.

After the case had been bandied to and fro, from the council of the high priests to the court of Pilate, from Pilate to Herod, and from Herod back to Pilate, he brought this individual out and presented him before the mob that had assembled, and pointing to him, said, "Behold the man,"—significant words that have been taken by poets and painters as their theme on many occasions since that day. "Behold the man."

"BEHOLD THE LAMB OF GOD"

On one occasion John, standing on the banks of Jordan, had pointed to the same individual and said, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Thus judgment had been rendered on this individual by the world and by heaven itself;

Pilate, representing the world, the dominant power of the world, said, "Behold the man." John, sent of God, pointing to the same individual, said, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Both individuals were right in their judgment, for Jesus was man; but he was also more than man. He was the Lamb of God that taketh away all sin.

MOB JUDGMENT

After he had thus called their attention to this individual, this son of the carpenter, Pilate rendered his verdict. He said, "I find no fault in him." He repeated this verdict three times, and three times the mob, incited by the high priests, waved the verdict aside and the case having gone from court to court, was finally decided by the mob.

Then Pilate presented to them a choice. He said to them in effect: "We have here two individuals; this man that is called the King of the Jews, and Barabbas, a murderer and a rebel against Cæsar. On this occasion it is our custom to release some one prisoner. Whom shall we release?"

And they all cried out, "Let Barabbas go free."

He then turned to them and said, "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?"

This question, coupled with his former statement, "Behold the man," furnishes us our theme, and we might state it in this language, "What shall I do with this man that is called Jesus?"

Well, the people on that occasion instantly answered, without any hesitation, being incited again by the high priests, "Crucify him."

In this strange case the verdict was, "Innocent"; the sentence, crucifixion. Pilate rendered the verdict, the mob pronounced sentence, Pilate weakly concurring.

CRUCIFIED AFRESH TO-DAY

Here we have their answer as to what they would do with this man that is called Jesus; and if we are to trust the Apostle Paul, many individuals to-day return the same answer, because he says that by their conduct they crucify the Lord of glory afresh, and put him to an open shame. That happens in the case of individuals who profess to be followers of Jesus Christ, yet by their ungodly conversation and deportment, bring shame on their Lord and the cause they profess to represent.

FUTILE EVASION

Elders who have gone into a community and attempted to preach where such individuals live, know what it means to have Christ crucified afresh, and the cause put to an open shame. You cannot preach successfully in that kind of a community.

Pilate took a basin of water and washed his hands, and said to them, "I am innocent of the blood of this just person."

Really Pilate wanted to let Jesus go free; he wanted to do justice, but he had lived a life of intrigue; he had so long dabbled in injustice that when the time came that he really wanted to do justice he could not do it; he lacked the moral courage, and so he washed his hands, and said, "My hands are free from this man's blood."

What a futile exhibition that was! Well might he have said with that wicked king in Shakespeare's play:

Can all Old Ocean's waters wash this blood
Clean from my hands? Nay, rather would this hand
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green—one red!

We cannot evade responsibility. We cannot wash it away. Even by refusing to answer the question, "What shall I do with Jesus," he answered it. Sometimes this is the most dangerous and disastrous way in which we can answer. The individual who comes out and openly declares against our cause is frequently the individual who is finally the most speedily converted.

A LIVING QUESTION

This question, "What shall I do with this man that is called Jesus?" is about the only thing for which we are indebted to Pilate at the present day. It is a question that is still living and vital in the world. It has not been outgrown and it never will be outgrown. It has never been so with any similar question. Other men have lived who were a problem in their age, but who speedily passed away and with their passing they ceased to be a problem.

Napoleon, for instance, in his day was a problem. He was the scourge of Europe, and threatened to dominate the whole world. There was the question in the minds of many individuals and nations, "What shall we do with this man Napoleon?" But after Wellington labored with him at Waterloo he ceased to be so much of a question; when he was banished to Saint Helena the question lost still more of its force; and finally, when his spirit, beating on the bars of his prison, had worn his body out, and he was dead, the question was forgotten.

Not so with Jesus. The question was not settled when he was laid in the tomb; and it comes up to disturb the minds of men now as then. This is so, because, as we have already pointed out, when Pilate indicated him and said, "Behold the man," he pointed to one who was more than man.

"GOD WITH US"

And this name Jesus,—“What shall I do with this man who is called Jesus?”—this name in itself is suggestive. When the angel appeared to Joseph and spoke to him about his wife Mary, he said:

And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emanuel, which being interpreted is God with us.—Matthew 1: 21-23.

When Jesus stood before Pilate, God was there before him,—“God with us.” Into the life of every individual before whom Jesus is presented, God comes, and hence the question is still vital and always will be, “What shall I do with this man that is called Jesus?” This man that is called Emanuel, which means, being interpreted, “God with us”?

It is a question that has troubled various nations. Japan for years has been debating it: “What shall we do with Jesus?” They do not know whether to let Christianity in or shut it out. It is a question with them, and by and by when the gospel in its fullness, as you and I believe it, is preached in all the world, it will be a question even more vital in Japan, as in all other nations.

It is a question that confronts individuals. It is a question that confronts churches, and they have rendered various answers, including the one rendered by Unitarians, who say this man Jesus was nothing but a man, and is the son of God only in the sense that any of us may become sons of God.

OUR POSITION NOT UNDERSTOOD

On this question we as a people have been misunderstood and misrepresented. I remember when I was traveling with Bishop Carmichael in California, years ago, when we were going from house to house leaving our tracts and talking with the people. We talked with a certain lady who said, “Well, I believe you men are honest, but I cannot see why you deify Joseph Smith and put him in the place of Jesus Christ.”

Before such ignorance as that we were almost helpless. We might have been tempted to feel like Billy Sunday, who was preaching in Omaha some weeks ago, when a man arose in the audience and asked the question, “Is there any difference between

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

REPUBLICANS AT CHICAGO.—The Republican National Committee on the 14th decided to hold the next Republican National Convention at Chicago, June 7, one week before the Democratic Convention at Saint Louis.

REPRESENTATIVES RECALLED.—Germany has recalled Captains Boy-Ed and von Papen, naval and military attaches to the German embassy at Washington, and has requested safe conduct for them and their successors.

WAR TAX AND ADJOURNMENT.—On the 17th Congress passed a joint resolution extending the war tax one year, following which action an adjournment was taken until January 4. President Wilson signed the tax bill the same day.

WILSON WEDS.—President Woodrow Wilson and Mrs. Norman Galt were married at 8.30 p. m., the 18th, at the home of Mrs. Galt, in Washington. The congratulations of the Nation accompany them to Hot Springs, Virginia, where they are spending their honeymoon.

THE PEACE PARTY.—Henry Ford's peace party landed at Christiania, Norway, the 18th. The party is to travel through neutral countries to The Hague, gathering strength in numbers as it advances. Mr. Ford announced in Christiania that his motive in going to Europe at this time was to develop an understanding throughout the world by the time the peace sessions begin their work at The Hague.

CONSPIRATORS SENTENCED.—Three of the officials of the Hamburg-American line, convicted on the 2d of charges of conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining clearances for relief ships laden with supplies for German cruisers in the Atlantic, have been sentenced to eighteen months in the federal prison at Atlanta, Georgia, the fourth official to one year and one day. These men have been released on $10,000 bonds each, pending appeal.

RELEASE DEMANDED.—The United States Government has demanded that the French Government release six Germans and Austrians taken by the French cruiser Desartes from American vessels in West Indians waters, and that the act be not repeated. The note declares that the seizure of the citizens of any nation from an American vessel on the high seas is without legal justification, and constitutes a violation of American rights.

CHINESE CHANGING GOVERNMENT.—Acting as a parliament on the 11th, the Chinese Council of State canvassed the vote of the proposition to change the form of government, finding 1,993 representatives out of 2,043 qualified to vote favorably to the change from a republic to a monarchy. Yaun Shih-Kai, President of the Republic, has accepted at the hands of the Council the throne, with the provision that he continue as president until a convenient time for the coronation.

FOR NAVY.—Secretary Daniels in his annual report to the President recommends the expenditure within the next five years for warship construction, exclusive of maintenance and personnel, of $500,000,000. The secretary also urges a $25,000,000 reserve supply of ammunition; a change in the system of promotion so that younger men of ability may more quickly go to the top; an efficient hydroaeroplane service; plans to make the navy attractive to young men to man the ships.

RATES INCREASED.—The Interstate Commerce Commission has authorized an increase of interstate passenger rates from two cents to two and four tenths a mile in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, north of the Missouri River, and Kansas north of the main line of the Union Pacific; and in Missouri and Kansas south of the Missouri River and Union Pacific, two and six tenths per mile. The intrastate rate of two cents, or the rate between points within individual States, is not affected by the decision.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—A defeat was administered to Villa troops at Fronteras on the 9th by Carranza forces. Military operations seem since to have become a contest between the triumphant Carranza army and fleeing bands of Villa and Zapata followers. Under persuasion from his council, Villa is said to have withdrawn from the revolution, and to have announced his intention to enter the United States or go to Europe. The interruption of industrial life and the flocking of the people to the cities has brought distress to the poor. The death rate in the Republic from starvation and diseases due to lack of food is estimated at two thousand daily. Eliseo Arredondo has been appointed ambassador to the United States, in the first step for the resumption of diplomatic relations between this country and Mexico.

"ANCONA" CASE.—The American note to Austria-Hungary covering the Ancona case has been made public. This note demands that Austria-Hungary denounce "as an illegal and indefensible act" the sinking of the vessel; punishment of the commander of the submarine which sunk the Ancona; indemnity for Americans killed or injured. Austria has replied, declining to accede to these demands. The Austrian note contends that there was not sufficient reason for blaming the submarine commander, and raises other questions, leading to the statement that the Austro-Hungarian Government is prepared for an exchange of opinion. The note expresses regret for the loss of American lives. A second American note will be sent, reiterating demands already made. The Communipaw was not sunk as previously announced.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Interest in the war during the time covered by this report has centered in the Balkans. The Anglo-French army in southern Serbia, together with retreating Serbs, has been forced to retire from before the advance of the Germans and Bulgarians, and has withdrawn to Grecian territory. The Greek troops are said to have withdrawn from Saloniki. The allies are fortifying this point against possible German and Bulgarian attack, and continue to land munitions and reinforcements. The Austrians, possibly with German forces, are engaged with Montenegrins and Serbs on the Montenegrin border. Another contingent of Serbian troops has found an asylum in Albania. Italian troops are being landed at Albanian ports. Germany has centered a considerable force on the Rumanian border. Rumania has closed the Danube River, it is said, to prevent Austrian monitors from going down the river to bombard Reni, Russia, where Russian forces are gathering. Rumania is also commandeering ships in her ports. Italy continues her fierce assault on coveted Austrian ports. Incessant trench fighting is reported in northern France and heavy artillery fighting in Flanders. The Turks claim gains in southern Arabia. British reinforcements are reaching Mesopotamia, where the British are reported standing their ground. Russia is said to have ordered the training of the class of 1917, to begin in 1916, to swell her armies, now undergoing reorganization and requirement. The meeting of the Russian Duma, prorogued September 16 and expected to reassemble December 8, has been indefinitely postponed by Emperor Nicholas.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

SALOONS CLOSE IN ZION.—In accordance with action by the Missouri State Supreme Court, all saloons running in Jackson County outside of Independence and Kansas City have been ordered closed. It will be remembered that the saloons of Independence were closed under local option one year ago. It is a matter of congratulation to the Saints that their position on alcoholics is being vindicated, and that, too, in Zion, from which place, because of these convictions and other advanced opinions, they were once required to withdraw.

PHOTOS DESIRED.—The editor of Autumn Leaves will be pleased to receive from amateur photographers in the church, copies of some of their choice photographs. It is desired to obtain these for the files, so that they may be used in illustrating Autumn Leaves. Pictures of especial beauty or merit of almost any subject will be appreciated, especially photos of historical scenes. Each photo should be marked on the back with the date and place, also the name of the author. Send all such contributions to the address of Elbert A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

WITH SOUTH CAROLINA DRY.—South Carolina has gone dry and the brewers and distillers are jubilant. They always sell so much more liquor in dry States than in wet States, that they always order new autos, build additions to their houses and increase their capitalization whenever a State votes dry. The feint they make of opposing prohibition, of buying votes, debauching voters, bulldozing business men, printing tons of lying circulars full of fake statistics—of course that fools no one. The whole world knows that the brewers and distillers just adore prohibition, because they sell so much more liquor under prohibition than under local option, and sell so much more booze in the local option countries than in the wet ones. The figures prove it, and the brewers and distillers pay for the figures.—William Allen White, in Emporia Gazette.

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING.—Elsewhere in this issue will be found an appeal from the General Sunday School Superintendent for an extra effort on the part of those able to make it, that the Christmas Offering this year may be swelled to proportions that in consideration of the trying times and needs of the church may be proportionately helpful. And what arrangement could be more appropriate? At this season of joy and giving, why should not those who are blessed with health and plenty, and with the peace of the gospel, give generously, that others may have the temporal things needful, and the light of truth as ministered by the Son of God? In this way may we bring, as did the wise men, and potent with greater good, gifts to Bethlehem's babe, now the Master of men. If we have not already done so, let us give good measure, pressed down, heaped up, and running over, accompanying our offering with the prayer that it may bring needed comfort or gospel truth, as it may please God to order from our faithful service.

BE TRUE

Thou must be true thyself
 If thou the truth would'st teach;
 Thy soul must overflow, if thou
 Another's soul wouldst reach
 It needs the overflow of heart
 To give the lips full speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
 Shall the world's famine feed;
 Speak truly, and each word of thine
 Shall be a fruitful seed;
 Live truly, and thy life shall be

WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS?

the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Utah people?"

Billy Sunday is reported to have replied in his characteristic way, "Any man who in this day does not know the difference between these two churches has not brains enough to have a headache."

OUR TESTIMONY

I think possibly we owe it to the Utah people to a certain extent that we are thus placed in a wrong light, because everywhere their elders go the burden of their testimony is that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I never heard one of them testify that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

About a year ago I received a letter from one of their men who said he wanted to have a debate. He said, "Let it be a colossal affair between our leading men in Salt Lake City, and your leading men in Lamoni."

I replied, "Certainly. Write your president in Salt Lake City to arrange for it there, and have it repeated in Lamoni." I added, "I will give you warning that you will not succeed, and let me suggest that when you make your failure you simply bow yourself out after bearing your testimony that Joseph Smith was a prophet."

Sure enough, the answer came back, and he said, "I have decided that it will not be profitable to have a debate, and I have not the authority to arrange for it anyway. And in conclusion, I want to testify that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that Brigham Young was his successor."

The burden of our testimony is that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. Joseph Smith takes his place only as a servant of God, and in no sense does he displace Jesus, any more than did Isaiah or Jeremiah or John or any other of the major or minor prophets in ages gone by. We have been misunderstood. We have been misrepresented,—and possibly willfully so.

WILLFUL MISREPRESENTATION

Some of you read not long ago an editorial from the pen of our Brother John F. Garver, in the HERALD of November 3. In it he quoted the language of one Neal, who is a so-called "Christian" preacher and was writing to the Apostolic Review, an organ of the Church of Christ people, and in that article he recounted the Mountain Meadow Massacre, and told how John D. Lee testified that the Utah people got together when they had their commandment and formed their prayer circle, elbow to elbow, and then went out and murdered men, women, and children.

Whether or not that was true does not concern us at the present time, but he goes on to say:

There is the heart of the most infamous system the Devil ever planted on this earth! True to-day—the words of the "seers" at Salt Lake City, Utah, and Lamoni, Iowa, are to "be received as if from God's own mouth!" Each says the other is a bogus seer—but the followers of each to-day, if ordered to do a like deed, rape and murder women and children, would form "a prayer circle," giving each other "the elbow touch," and arise from their knees and execute the orders of hell!—baptizing them in the name of God, our loving heavenly Father.

NURSED AT THE UDDER OF RELIGIOUS BIGOTRY

Jesus said, "They have hated me without a cause," and went on to tell the disciples, that as it had been with the Master so should it be with the servant,—that all manner of evil should be said against his followers falsely for his name's sake.

Think of this, published in a Christian paper, coming from the hand of a so-called Christian minister,—such a statement about the people here in Lamoni, that receiving such a commandment they would go out and murder men, women, and little children. Imagine Brother Heman Smith, Brother Gunsolley, myself, and others here, whom you know, going out after prayer to murder men, women, and little children, on such a pretext as that! This man must have known otherwise, it must have been willful, because he knows our people by reputation, and he knows many of them personally, and he knows very well in the first place the president of our church would not give such a revelation, and he knows in the second place that if he were to give it that we would not heed it.

The commandment is that we shall accept his word when he is walking in all holiness, and if such commandment as that came it would be instantly rejected, and he would soon find himself deposed from his place at the head of the church. But we have this to meet. This willful misrepresentation. Peter tells us that we should bear it with patience. It can only come from those who have pulled for a long time at the udder of religious bigotry, and so are full of hatred and malice.

Within the past two weeks our Brother L. G. Holloway was assailed at the close of his services in an Iowa town, by the people, members of the same church with which Mr. Neal is identified, and they called him all manner of names. One woman said to him, "Why you dirty dog, you miserable skunk, I would like to put a hole clear through you." Others used similar language.

What spirit is it that actuates members of any church to utterances of that kind? What spirit is it that actuates them to do a thing like that? It most evidently is the spirit of the Devil. The time may come when we shall see such a spirit further revealed, as in the past. This spirit itself reveals who the would-be murderers are.

OUR ATTITUDE

Now let us review briefly the real attitude of this church in answer to the question, "What shall we do with this man that is called Jesus?" I have before me that which is known as the epitome of faith and doctrine. It is as near an approach to a creed as we have ever formulated. It would stand in any court of the land as an authoritative exponent of our doctrine.

The first statement is: "We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." And it goes on to say that "through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel."

A WONDERFUL TESTIMONY

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants appears one of the most significant testimonies that has been borne to the world since John wrote on the Isle of Patmos:

We, Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, being in the Spirit on the sixteenth of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, by the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened, and our understandings were enlightened, so far as to see and understand the things of God; even those things which were from the beginning before the world was, which were ordained of the Father, through his only begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, even from the beginning, of whom we bear record, and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision, . . . And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

OBJECT OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

And in the Book of Mormon, in the preface, we find this statement, "an account written by the hands of Mormon upon plates taken from the plates of Nephi":

Wherefore, it is an abridgment of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites; written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile; written by way of commandment, and also by the spirit of prophecy and of revelation. Written, and sealed up, and hid unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed; to come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof; sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by the way of Gentile; the interpretation thereof by the gift of God.

An abridgment taken from the Book of Ether; also, which is a record of the people of Jared; who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven; which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations.

HEAR YE HIM

I have read from the standard books of the church, revealing our decision as a church touching this great question, and I am reminded that on the occasion when Joseph Smith had his first vision, in the spring of 1820, that the heavenly Father, in the vision, pointing to the Son, said to Joseph Smith, "This is my beloved Son. Hear him."

The message of this church from that day to this has been to direct the attention of the people from all human leaders and from all human leadership, and point them to the Savior, who is the head in all things.

The burden of our preaching is and should be the divinity of Jesus Christ and the magnitude of his work on earth; and when I speak of that work, I feel precisely as the brother expressed it in the opening prayer, I feel unworthy to talk about him or attempt to explain his mission, but as he said, I realize that from our own midst God has designated certain men and placed on them that duty, and so on this occasion I accept the responsibility of calling your attention to the answer we have rendered to the question, "What shall we do with this man that is called Jesus?"

As a church we must and do accept him, in harmony with statements made in Ephesians:

Far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church.—Ephesians 1: 21.

We accept him as the head of the church, the divine head, and recognize that it devolves on us as an organization to prosecute the work that was his work.

When the microscopic search of skepticism, which has haunted the heavens and sounded the seas to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society and has found a place on this planet ten miles square where a decent man can live in decency, comfort and security, supporting and educating his children, unspoiled and unpolluted; a place where age is revered, manhood respected, womanhood honored, infancy protected and human life held in due regard—when skeptics can find such a place ten miles square on this globe where the gospel of Christ has not gone and cleared the way and laid the foundations and made decency and security possible, it will then be in order for the skeptical literati to move thither and there ventilate their views.—James Russell Lowell.

REFLECTIONS--NUMBER 3

BY W. E. PEAK

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

These few words clearly outline the duty of the Presidency. They are to "set in order all the affairs" of the church. To do this, they must correct the mistakes that are made by any quorum, council, stake, or organization. This can be done by them personally, or through their agents or representatives by their direction. But it is their "business and mission" to "set in order all the affairs of this church," by correcting these errors or mistakes when made.

If the Twelve should make a mistake in appointing a seventy to a certain district or should the seventy think they had made a mistake, the case should be referred to the Presidency for examination and adjudication. Their decision should be final, and could only be appealed from to the general assembly.

The Quorum of Twelve bears the same relation to the Presidency as the Seventy does to the Twelve. If the seventy makes a mistake in his mission the minister in charge does not refer it to his (seventy's) quorum, but decides on the merits of the case himself. This is proper, for the seventy is to labor "under the direction of the Twelve"; and if the apostle makes a mistake, the case should not be referred to his quorum, but to the Presidency, where examination and decision should be had, for the apostle is to labor "under the direction of the Presidency."

Should the Presidency sustain the appointment of the Twelve, then the seventy has two quorums against him, which would rule in the general assembly, even if his quorum should stand by him. But leaving out quorum decisions, which would only be made in very exceptional cases, the dissatisfied seventy could well afford to cheerfully submit, when he realized that the proper tribunal, whose duty it is to correct the mistakes of the Twelve, had decided against him. In fact, he should conclude that he was wrong himself.

BURDEN OF ALL THE CHURCHES

Verily I say unto you, my servant Thomas, Thou art the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom (as pertaining to the Twelve) abroad among all nations, that thou mayest be my servant to unlock the door of my kingdom in all places where my servant Joseph, and my servant Sidney, and my servant Hyrum, cannot come; for on them have I laid the burden of all the church for a little season.—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 7.

Joseph, Sidney and Hyrum were to occupy in the Presidency for "a little season." While they thus occupied they were to do the work and carry the responsibility of that position, which is to have "the burden," of caring for "all the churches."

This places the stakes under their care and jurisdiction, as well as districts and branches; and should it become necessary to change a stake president or bishop for the good of the work, to set the stake "in order," the Presidency would have the right to do so. This could be done by them personally or through their representatives, by their direction.

Stake officers are under the jurisdiction of the general officers of the church and the General Conference, the same as districts or branches. These officers should be appointed each year to their missions by the appointing authority, the same as other high priests, and sustained by the General Conference. Stake officers are not general officers in the same sense as the Presidency of the church, and Presiding Bishopric, yet these cannot receive support from the general treasury without being sustained by the vote of the General Conference.

But these stake officers are supported out of the general treasury, because they are sustained in these offices by the stake conferences. If the stake conference can demand money from the general treasury of the church for the support of its officers, then the stake conferences become equal to the General Conferences. That is to say, a part of the church is equal to the whole church.

Should the Presidency, whose duty is to "set in order the churches," and on whom is "laid the burden of all the churches," exercise the right of appointing these officers, as other ministers are appointed, they could easily set the stake "in order," by appointing these stake officers to some other field, and appointing more suitable men in their stead. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 5; 120: 2.)

Deprive them of this right, and the only way that remains to regulate a stake that needs a change of officers is to get a sufficient number at the stake conference to vote them out.

Where is the law authorizing the bishop to support any officer financially, without the consent of the General Conference?

PRIESTHOOD AND OFFICES

There are, in the church, two priesthoods; namely: the Melchisedec, and the Aaronic.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1.

The office of an elder comes under the priesthood of Melchisedec.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 3.

There is no difference in the priesthood [Melchisedec], though there may be and is in the office in which the several orders may occupy.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 7.

When a man is ordained an elder he has the Melchisedec priesthood. He may be ordained to various offices in this priesthood, but he receives no more priesthood authority.

The President of the church is a high priest. A high priest has no priesthood authority that an elder does not have, for "an elder has the right to officiate in his stead when the high priest is not present" (Doctrine and Covenants 104:6). If a high priest possessed priesthood authority that an elder does not have, the elder could not "officiate in his stead" without an ordination. This may be illustrated by a priest desiring to administer to the sick, when the elder is not present. The absence of the high priest does not confer priesthood authority on an elder any more than the absence of the elder will confer priesthood authority on the priest.

The ordination to an office in the priesthood confers neither gifts nor priesthood authority, but designates one as being eligible for or set apart to a certain work. Three men were "ordained" to build the Kirtland Temple. (Doctrine and Covenants 92:3.) Emma Smith was "ordained to expound scripture." (Doctrine and Covenants 24:2.) Sons of perdition are "ordained unto this condemnation." (Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.) Men have been "ordained" and blessed for certain missions.

The President of the church only holds the Melchisedec priesthood and has no more authority in the priesthood than any other elder. His ordination to the presidency of the high priesthood and Presidency of the church confers neither priesthood nor gifts.

Joseph the Seer, had and exercised the gifts of a seer, revelator, translator, and a prophet before he was even baptized.

"The gifts and calling of God are without repentance." (Romans 11:29.) But not so with the priesthood. This is conferred by ordination. But to be ordained to an office in this priesthood is very similar to the ordination for a mission or to "build a house," which holds good as long as it is "wise" for one to occupy.

"The burden of all the churches" is laid on the Presidency. The Twelve are ordained and thus recognized as being eligible and set apart to be sent by the Presidency "to unlock the door of my kingdom in all places where" the First Presidency "cannot come." (Doctrine and Covenants 105:7.) And they are to thus occupy as long as it is "wise," to retain them in this position. They were to go where the Presidency "cannot."

The work that they are to do is to be done by the Presidency or anyone of the Presidency when they are present. But where the Presidency cannot go, the Twelve is to do this work. The apostle is to labor "under the direction of the Presidency of the church," whether they (the Presidency) are present or not.

The ordination to the Quorum of Twelve is a recognition of the man's qualifications to be in charge and he is thus set apart for this work, and to proceed "to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same"; yet he has no authority to thus proceed, till this right is delegated to him by appointment from the Presidency.

It is the duty of the Presidency to appoint the Twelve in charge in preference to any other officer, if other conditions are equal, in the same sense that a high priest should be chosen to preside. But should the Presidency see fit to appoint a seventy, high priest; or an elder in charge of a mission, by virtue of this appointment, delegated authority, to represent the Presidency in that mission, he would have all the rights to "build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same," that the Twelve would have.

APOSTLE

The primary meaning of this word is "one sent to preach the gospel." This is the sense in which it is generally used, both in the Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants.

In Doctrine and Covenants 17:1, we have an account of the organization of the church on April 6, 1830, and at this time Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were both called apostles. They were ordained elders that day, and that was the highest office to which either of them had been ordained, nor did either of them ever occupy in the Quorum of Twelve. They were ordained high priests in June, 1831. Here we have two elders called apostles before they had ever been ordained to a higher office in the priesthood. These elders were apostles. In this sense all elders are apostles.

In 1832, some three years before the Twelve were ordained, the Lord said, "And as I said unto mine apostles, even so I say unto you; for you are mine apostles, even God's high priests." (Doctrine and Covenants 83:10.) Here the high priests are called apostles.

The seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the Twelve to minister the word where the Twelve cannot go, are in the powers of their ministrations apostles—those sent.—Doctrine and Covenants 120:3.

The seventy are also called "apostles—those sent." Jesus was an "apostle" (Hebrews 3:11) and so was "James the Lord's brother" (Galatians 1:19), but they were not members of the quorum of twelve.

So we see that elders, high priests, Seventy, Twelve and Presidency (Doctrine and Covenants 19:1) are called apostles, and each has a specific work to perform in "this church and kingdom." In this organized body there are "many members, yet but one body" (1 Corinthians 12:20), and the head cannot say to the feet, I have no need of you, but the feet and every member of the body is directed by the head. Each member functioning according to its organic nature as it is directed by the head, the whole body moves in harmony and performs the work desired. But when one member is out of order, a derangement is made, and it must be "set in order" by the directions of the head, or else the whole body will suffer.

When the Twelve are appointing missionaries, if they are performing the functions of their office, "to build up the church" "under the direction of the Presidency," the Presidency has supervision. When one works under the directions of another, his work is to be examined by the one directing, and corrected if necessary. The Presidency should examine and correct the appointments of the Twelve before they are presented to the conference.

Last spring, Patriarch I. M. Smith stated in a prayer meeting that he was impressed by the Spirit to request the Saints to pray especially for the Quorum of the Twelve.

GOSPEL AND END OF WORLD

SHALL THE GOSPEL BE PREACHED TO ALL NATIONS AS A WITNESS BEFORE CHRIST'S SECOND ADVENT OR AFTER?

This is a very important question, and is one on which some are divided. The only way to get the true light is to let the word of God answer, by harmonizing all the truth restored in the latter days in the precious books of the church.

In the Inspired Translation, Matthew 24, Christ's disciples asked him the following question: "What is the sign of thy coming; and of the end of the world? (or the destruction of the wicked, which is the end of the world)."

Many prophets have written concerning Christ's great second advent in power and glory, each one having different light on the subject. In Malachi 4 we are told of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, when all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble. God forewarned the people before the flood, by Noah, a preacher of righteousness for many years; and although his judgments are coming on all those that are proud and do wickedly at his second advent, and as God is always merciful and the course of the Lord is one eternal round, he will I believe, warn them first by the preaching of the word, as in Noah's time before destroying them.

Zechariah also prophesies of this important event, and we are told that God is going to fight the battles of his people and deliver them. From this evidence alone it is sometimes stated that only the armies of all nations who are surrounding Jerusalem will be destroyed,—and that the gospel will be preached to all nations afterwards. But if we harmonize the words of the Prophet Malachi we find that all they that are proud and do wickedly shall be destroyed. There is a very plain statement in the Inspired Translation, that the destruction of the wicked is the end of the world which Malachi has testified of, and is at Christ's second coming. In Matthew 24:32 we read:

And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked.

Now it is plainly stated here that the destruction of the wicked is the end of the world, when Christ comes to inaugurate his reign over the whole earth. Therefore, verse thirty-two answers the question that the gospel will be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations before Christ's second coming, or the destruction of the wicked, which is the end of the world. That the term, "The end of the world," or the destruction of the wicked (which is the end of the world) refers to this time is evident, for Christ answered their question concerning the time of his coming. Again Matthew 24:56, I. T., shows clearly that this referred to Christ's coming,—and not the end of the earth, which was a period later. In this same verse we read, "But the end of the earth is not yet; but by and by."

From this chapter then, is shown clearly that the end of the world, or the destruction of the wicked, which is the end of the world, is at Christ's second coming, and at a different period to the end of the earth, which comes later; and Matthew 24:32, I. T., plainly declares the gospel will be preached to all nations as a witness before his coming, and is conclusive evidence, without any other, and is plain and unmistakable.

There is additional evidence in the Doctrine and Covenants 36:12: We read that when Enoch the seventh from Adam asked the Lord when he would come upon the earth again, the Lord answered, "Righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth." Also righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood." The next paragraph shows Christ coming in glory with Enoch's city, and the great meeting with Zion on earth, and then we read that "for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest." Plain evidence that the gospel will sweep the earth with a flood before his coming. How this is to be accomplished is not definitely stated. Perhaps literature will form an important part as well as the preaching of God's servants; but this will occur before Christ's coming.

Again, Christ said to the wicked Pharisees: If I had not come ye had no sin. But now that he had come there was no cloak for their sins. So I believe this plainly shows Christ will not destroy nations which have not had a chance of obeying the gospel.

The church generally understands Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25 to mean that Christ will visit his church first, and will give a great endowment to all who are worthy, that they may give the gospel in great power to the nations. In verse 26 we read, "That great church, the mother of abominations . . . the tares of the earth . . . ready to be burned"; and the following strong statement: "And he shall sound his trump both long and loud and all nations shall hear it."

Here it is plainly stated that the gospel trump shall be sounded both long and loud by God's servants to gather the wheat (his select) into the fold and those who will not receive the gospel are accounted as the tares, to be burned at his coming (harmonizing again with Malachi 4). It is stated her bands are made strong; no man can loose them.

All this, the preaching of the gospel both long and loud to all nations who shall hear it, occurs before the second coming of Christ. For in the next verse, 27, is a picture of Christ's great coming in power and glory. The resurrection of the Saints, and the quickening of those who are alive show important events that take place after his coming, before Satan is bound and the earth shall rest for a thousand years, when all who are in heaven, and those on earth that survive the great judgments that take place at his coming, and those under the earth, will bow the knee and confess to him; showing plainly that with the aid of his celestial armies, and Saints made perfect, and also terrestrial which are resurrected after his coming,—all shall acknowledge his sway on earth, and also under the earth.

Then the seventh angel shall sound his trump, showing the triumph of Christ, and after that the binding of Satan for one thousand years, when the great millennium will take place, which has been the hope of the saints of all ages.

In Doctrine and Covenants 108: 7 we read:

And now verily saith the Lord, That these things might be known among you, O inhabitants of the earth, I have sent forth mine angel, flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, who hath appeared unto some, and hath committed it unto man, who shall appear unto many that dwell on the earth; and this gospel shall be preached unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, and the servants of God shall go forth, saying, with a loud voice: Fear God and give glory to him.

The following paragraphs give a wonderful description of Christ's second coming; and it is plainly taught that the gospel shall be preached by the servants of God to every nation before his coming.

While I believe all the evidence shown from the word of God clearly shows a plain answer in the affirmative, the gospel will be preached to all nations as a witness before Christ's second coming; yet the scriptures harmonizing with this show that this will be to nations as a whole, not every individual being will have heard it or will it condemn them, for there are some to survive the great judgments of the Lord to people the earth during the millennium, who will know the Lord from the least unto the greatest.

The statement, then, Shall the heathen nations be redeemed, no doubt largely refers to those of the heathen nations who have survived the judgments of the Lord.

We have a final witness in Doctrine and Covenants 108: 11-13, where it is stated that the fullness of the everlasting gospel has been sent forth, and that by the weak things of the earth the Lord shall thresh the nations by the power of his Spirit; and for this cause these commandments were given, and they were commanded to be kept from the world in the day that they were given, but now are to go forth unto all flesh; and that upon those who hearken not to the voice of the Lord shall be fulfilled that which was written by the Prophet Moses, that they should be cut off from among the people. The twelfth and thirteenth verses show the second coming of Christ, the twelfth showing the time spoken by the Prophet Malachi, "The destruction of the proud and wicked," the thirteenth reading thus:

Behold, and lo, there are none to deliver you, for ye obeyed not my voice when I called to you out of the heavens, ye believed not my servants; and when they were sent unto you ye received them not; wherefore, they sealed up the testimony and bound up the law, and ye were delivered over unto darkness; these shall go away into outer darkness, where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Behold, the Lord your God have spoken it. Amen.

From all the scriptural evidence produced we firmly believe the gospel will be preached to all nations as a witness before Christ's second coming.

WHEN WILL JESUS COME?

The coming of Jesus to earth again to live with his people is not an idea of modern times; it was talked about in Paul's day, and his coming was expected by many in that age (2 Thessalonians 2: 1-3).

Many of the early Christians believed he would come in A. D. 1000. The time for his coming was set by some religious enthusiasts to be in 1844, and since that time different years have been fixed for his coming. All these efforts to fix a year have resulted in failure, and the latest is that he will come when the allies capture Constantinople. The cause of making these blunders is that heed is not paid to the words of Jesus—"And whoso treasureth up my words, shall not be deceived." (Matthew 24: 39, I. T.)

We have the following in the Book of Mormon:

Wherefore, thou seest that after the book hath gone forth through the hands of the great and abominable church that there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book, which is the book of the Lamb of God; . . . because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceeding great many do stumble, insomuch that Satan hath great power over them.—1 Nephi 3: 171-175.

With this information in their possession, Latter Day Saints ought to pay heed to the teachings of Jesus as found in the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. We appeal to these three standard books and see if they will not give us light on this very important question.

Turning to Doctrine and Covenants 45, and commencing to read in the latter part of verse two and including the greater part of verse four, and note the following: Jesus tells us as he did his early disciples when he talked to them of his coming in glory and also of the restoration of scattered Israel. Jerusalem would be destroyed, the temple would be destroyed, the Jews would be scattered among all nations, all of which occurred while Titus had command of the Roman army, when he gained possession of the city, A. D. 70. The third paragraph concludes with the following language, "But they shall be gathered again; but they shall remain until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

In Luke 21: 23, I. T., Jesus says Jerusalem would be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles were fulfilled; and Paul said that blindness in part had happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in, and then their deliverer would come out of Zion (Romans 11: 23-26).

In Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4 we note that when the time of the Gentiles is come in,—notice the difference in the language, when the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled and when the time of Gentiles is come in—"when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel."

When was the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ proclaimed? Was it later than 1830? when the church was organized and the Book of Mormon sent forth to the world? which book contains the fullness of the everlasting gospel (Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2)? The evident thought of Jesus, when the time of the Gentiles was come in, was that the long night of spiritual darkness was passing away, men would have an opportunity to hear the gospel; it also points out the fact that they will not receive it very readily.

This verse continues with the following: "And in that generation shall the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled," or in other words, the Gentiles having had an opportunity for a generation it would now be Israel's turn. Israel had the first chance in the time of Christ, and then the gospel went to the Gentiles; in these latter days it would be reversed, and thus the "last shall be first and the first last." Paul said that "blindness in part had happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in," and then a deliverer would come out of Zion. Who shall deliver them? Why, Jesus Christ. And by what means? We know of no other than that of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

And it shall come to pass that the time cometh, when the fullness of my gospel shall be preached unto them, and they shall believe on me, that I am Jesus Christ, the son of God, and shall pray to the Father in my name.—1 Nephi 9: 69.

In Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3, we are informed that the gospel should go to the Gentiles first, "and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews"; are not the Jews a part of Israel? Are we not justified in believing that when our heavenly Father speaks through the prophet of the church and commands the church to send missionaries to the Jews, and they take with them the Book of Mormon, which is to the convincing of Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ," (see preface to Book of Mormon) that they are fulfilling the prophecy that the deliverer was to come out of Zion?

In the generation in which the time of the Gentiles would come in the time of the Gentiles would be fulfilled. There are two ways in which to determine when the times of the Gentiles would be fulfilled.

First, It would be in the generation when the time of the Gentiles were to come in. The term generation sometimes means a definite number of years. In the book of Nephi son of Nephi 1: 25, it means one hundred years. In the time of Jesus he said the Jews would be destroyed in that generation, and Jerusalem was destroyed seventy years from the reputed time of Christ's birth. From the call of Abraham to the birth of Christ was forty-two generations (Matthew 1: 17), an average of forty-five years to a generation. Allowing the number one hundred years for a generation, and add it to 1830, when the time of the Gentiles came in, and we have 1930, when the times of the Gentiles would be fulfilled.

Second, Jerusalem would be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled (Luke 21: 24). It has been under Gentile rule since A. D. 70, except for a very short period of time, following the Crusade wars, and since the early part of the eighth century it has been in possession of the Mohammedans.

When the Jews get possession of Palestine and are an independent nation, or are under the protection of a liberal nation, that will grant them civil and religious liberty, it can be truthfully said they are no longer trodden down of the Gentiles.

Having located, approximately, the time when the times of the Gentiles would be fulfilled, and the time when Israel would come in, we note the following in Luke 21:32, I. T., "Verily I say unto you, this generation, the generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, shall not pass away till all be fulfilled.

This is the concluding statement of Christ to his disciples about his coming. Some time after the commencement of the time when Jerusalem is no longer trodden down of the Gentiles, in that generation Jesus will come; we do not know whether it will be in the first part, middle, or last part of the generation. Doctrine and Covenants 49:5 tells of three things to happen before Christ's coming, and none has happened yet.

QUAKERS IN WAR-RELIEF

We have dwelt upon the tragic dilemma presented to the English Quakers in the contrary demands of their country and their religion during the war. We have seen how some have felt called to make sacrifice of that principle of their religious faith which would keep them from bearing arms. Those who have listened to the dictates of faith, however, have not been inactive in their country's service. "Confronted anew in 1914 with the necessity of reaffirming their testimony touching the iniquity of all war," says William W. Comfort in the New York Evening Post, "they speedily threw themselves into the work of salvage and reconstruction."

So successful have they been that they have aroused favorable comment in England, even from those who do not share their attitude toward this and all wars. Indeed, we are told that "except for the patching of mangled bodies by surgeons and nurses, theirs is about the only really constructive work that has yet followed in the wake of organized destruction." As would naturally be the case, their work was begun in France:

Early in September, 1914, British Friends decided to undertake relief work in France, and the "War-Victims' Relief Committee" was formed in London. Permission was readily granted by the French Government, and operations were begun under the control of the Sanitary Commission of the French military authorities. Permission was the more readily granted as the Friends had organized a similar expedition in 1870, and their services were gratefully recalled.

The valley of the Marne, from which the wave of invasion had just receded, was selected as the region most in need of aid. Much of this territory had been twice fought over on the German advance and retreat, and some villages had been bombarded by Germans and French alike. Local conditions were found by the first groups of visitors to vary greatly. One village had suffered slightly, whereas its neighbors had been almost completely destroyed and its inhabitants rendered destitute and homeless. The farms, stocks, and crops were in most cases ruined. The able men, of course, were gone. The old people, the women, and the little children were living in cow-stables, cellars, and improvised shacks. Children were being born in the most deplorable surroundings.

The method of village-relief is as follows: A visiting party, working with the mayor, the priest, and the local council, if such exists, tabulates the population by families, together with the sort of aid, if any, which is required. This aid is given with the approval of the local authorities, who know family conditions and merits. From the big warehouses in London, through the clearing-house in Paris, are constantly sent forward great supplies of clothing, blankets, medicines, furniture, seeds, and agricultural implements. About two hundred men and women are engaged, mostly British Friends. They are doctors, nurses, teachers, architects, sanitary experts, artisans, and craftsmen, possessed of strong constitutions, unbounded enthusiasm, unfailing sympathy, and—the ability to use French.

Architects and carpenters have been constructing for a year hundreds of movable houses of one to five rooms for the homeless. They have braced up tottering walls and chimneys, and given needed utensils for housekeeping. Others have given seed for gardens and fields and sent planting and reaping implements, in order that this year's harvest might not fail. They have visited the sick and prescribed for them over a large area, with the help of motor-conveyance. They have cleaned out pestholes, and prevented the outbreak of typhoid by modern sanitary measures. They early organized in Chalons a maternity hospital of sixty beds for the expectant mothers among the emigres of the department. Most of all, they have infused a splendid spirit of confidence and a renewed interest in life among those whose hearts were seared with sorrow and whose hands hung idle all the day.

The letters of gratitude written by these French Catholics to the British Quakers, it is said, support the claims of the workers themselves that "the moral uplift has been the most important feature of the expedition." We read:

All this work has gone on fifteen to thirty miles behind the present lines which leave ten Departments of France in German hands. There has been much red tape to unwind with the French civil and military authorities, owing to the precautions which had to be observed in the military zone. On the whole, the cooperation between individuals of different nationalities and different creeds has been splendid; all jealous bickerings have been banished between men and women whose sole desire was to put a prostrate population physically and morally upon its feet.

It is cause for gratification that perhaps no body of well-intentioned people in England could have commanded the confidence of the French in this difficult task, except the Society of Friends. Every possible facility has been granted by the French authorities, and the leaders of the relief-work have been received and warmly thanked by the Government committee for the relief of the devastated provinces.

The writer was privileged to sit as a member on the London general committee, representing American Friends. He had a chance there to see the admirable economy with which the large funds are disbursed upon recommendation from the experts in the field. Every pound of money is looked at twice before it is spent, and, as the time of the workers is given freely, the funds go directly for supplies and for the living expenses of those in the field. Over a quarter of a million dollars has been raised, and something more than half of that sum expended. As much as possible is kept back in order to meet the demand for similar work in France and Belgium, which stretches away without limit into the future.

The work here described is exclusively among the ruined civil population, from whom all that usually makes life worth living has been removed. The Quakers have also financed two other undertakings: one the Ambulance Unit near the firing line between Dunkirk and Ypres, working under British sanction and military authority; the other, engaged in practical work among the Belgian emigres in the Dutch concentration camps. The reports of these other fields of labor are as thrilling as those of the relief work in France, and constitute an inspiring instance of practical Christianity. A great many helpers have offered their services in England for the work on the Continent, but many are unable to meet the rigorous requirements of the committee.

There may be some in America who, unable to offer their services, would like to join in relief which is so judiciously administered. The treasurer of the committee is Isaac Sharp, Devonshire House, 136 Bishopsgate, London, who will gratefully receive and acknowledge funds.—Literary Digest, November 13, 1915.

CHURCHGOING AS A BUSINESS ASSET

In the New York papers one Saturday a few weeks ago there appeared a large advertisement beginning with the words, "In this commercial age, here is a business asset"; and closing with the appeal, "Go to church to-morrow." The appeal, declares an editorial writer in The Christian Herald (New York), should be repudiated by the churches of New York, because it puts the duty of Christian worship upon an un-Christian basis. True enough, he says, "the appeal to the business interests was acknowledged to be but a means to an end. That is, the advertisement stated that church attendance would be a business gain, and went on to state that spiritual gain would undoubtedly result." But, we are told, the advertisement contained these words:

Right within your reach is a business asset—a very definite one—which you are perhaps overlooking. This asset is derived from your going to church. Undoubtedly you have never looked upon it in this light. It is obvious, if you are known as a steady, sober-minded churchman, those with whom you deal have greater confidence in you. Going to church will tend toward establishing you in the mind of everyone as a man to be trusted. This is a decided business advantage, a personal asset, and worth while in every way.

Whereat the Christian Herald writer is moved to this indignant and vigorous protest:

It is simply impossible to think of Jesus or any of his first followers using this appeal to induce people to come into their fellowship. Their call was quite opposite: a call to poverty, a call to sacrifice, a call to danger, a call to probable death. This advertisement in the New York papers is a striking indication of how far the church has in some quarters allowed itself to drift from the spirit and teachings of Jesus.

One of the greatest reproaches of the church has always been the fact that some men have sought membership in it for this very cause, and it is inexcusable to make this very thing which has been the church's shame the basis of an appeal to outsiders to come in. Peter on one occasion said to a man who sought to gain spiritual information and gifts in order that he might coin them into money: "Thy money perish with thee, thou child of the Devil."

Some such spirit as this would do much to bring the church back to the purity and the power she has lost. For the most part, we are altogether overdoing the appeal to the prosperous. These were not the people whom Jesus particularly sought. It was the common people who heard him gladly, and it is the common people, with their poverty and their woes, their struggles and their hopes, that the church must try to reach and help to-day.

Of course we should try also to help the well-to-do, but we may help him best by sounding again the warning which Jesus spoke that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. Particularly must we do all we can to purge the church of the reproach of containing people who have sought her courts for the sake of gain. It is to be hoped that the churches of New York will in emphatic terms repudiate the advertisement referred to and bring to an accounting the men who were responsible for its insertion in the public press.

Suggestions to Choirmasters

Here follow a few suggestions to choir leaders, which we hope may prove both timely and helpful. The first is from a source unknown to us, having been sent in by a contributor. The second, as noted, is from one of the wide-awake musical magazines of the country, and contains many gems of thought and constructive criticism. The third selection is from the able pen of Brother S. W. L. Scott, in an issue of the column called "The F Clef," which he conducted for a time in the Glad Tidings, and which, we regret to say though full of so much life and originality, has for some reason been discontinued. We hope Brother Scott, or some other music-lover, will reestablish the "F Clef," and give us some more of the very inspiring suggestions with which it abounded during its brief existence. Read all these selections thoughtfully, and try to benefit by these suggestions therein contained.

SUGGESTIONS NUMBER 1

"When the form of service permits, the director will adapt his selections, in both text and style of music, to the central theme of the sermon. When sermon, hymns, solos and concerted pieces all tend to the enforcement of a particular thought, the effect upon the congregation is likely to be powerful; certainly much more so than when the service-music bears little or no relation to the theme of the discourse.

"It is sometimes impossible to find selections particularly appropriate to a sermon topic. In such case the well-equipped director will at least be able to choose numbers which will not be incongruous. He can give a tone to the service, one of solemn worship, of praise or thanksgiving, as may seem best under the circumstances.

"Too many services have as little point and symmetry as does the ordinary, dreary hodgepodge known as the 'Miscellaneous Concert,' and cause the intelligent and sensitive worshiper to wonder on what ground anthems are introduced into the public service."

SUGGESTIONS NUMBER 2

"I—ALWAYS BE PUNCTUAL

"You ought to set an example in all respects to your singers. Nothing is more likely to upset the temper and discipline of a choir than for the members to have to wait ten minutes or a quarter of an hour for the choirmaster to turn up at rehearsals. Arrange your plans so that you can be at your practice-room ten minutes before the hour fixed for meeting; you can then see that everything is ready, and you can begin punctually.

"II—HAVE YOUR PROGRAM FIXED BEFOREHAND

"It shows a lack of interest for a choirmaster to begin a rehearsal by saying, 'Let me see, what shall we practice to-night?' Decide at home what you intend to work at, and come with your plans 'cut and dried.' It is careless for a leader to leave things till the last moment, and then fix upon a piece almost haphazardly. Such methods—or lack of methods—do not inspire confidence and enthusiasm in your singers. Careless musicians—whether conductors, singers, or players—will never succeed.

"III—STUDY CAREFULLY YOUR SELECTION OF MUSIC

"It is a mistake to always provide music that your singers can sing almost by sight, and needs no work. Music is suitable for babes, but not for men and women. Give them something that needs effort and close attention. They want to advance and grow in musical knowledge. So get on as fast as you can beyond the alphabet of music. On the other hand, do not always provide music that is too difficult, and beyond the capabilities of your singers, for that depresses them and damps their energies. A judicious mixture of both easy and difficult is what is required, and with care such can be found.

"IV—DON'T SPOIL YOUR REHEARSALS BY FUSSINESS AND CHATTER

"Some choirmasters are like old maids—unhappy and make all around them thoroughly uncomfortable, unless every little detail is in perfect order. How often the rehearsal is stopped by such expressions as these from the choirmaster, 'Sopranos, please sit closer together.' 'Tenors, come forward a little, I can't hear you.' 'Will some one please close that window, it is so cold.' 'That chord is a chord of the seventh,' and off he goes into a long harmony lesson. Do as little talking as possible. Don't stop your singers at every mistake they make, but point out the mistakes as briefly and as clearly as possible at the end of the piece. Any unusually difficult part might be taken by itself, and gone over time after time till it is correct. Never go over a piece a second time without explaining the 'why' and 'wherefore.' Don't get impatient because the choir do not learn the music as fast as you think they ought to do. Encouragement will do much more than scolding and the use of hard names. Make up your mind what you want, and don't be happy till you get it, but get it by pleasantness and cheerfulness.

"V—ALWAYS BE COURTEOUS AND FRIENDLY

"Because you are a choirmaster don't think that you ought to be severe—not to say rude—with your choir. Remember that your singers, especially voluntary workers, ought to be treated with respect and consideration. You can be firm and gentlemanly at the same time. Don't say smart and offensive things at certain members of your choir if they are not as brilliant as you wish. Such remarks only lower you in the estimation of all your singers. To have influence over them you must have their respect and esteem. Endeavor to gain their regard and good will as well as their faith in your musicianship. Have no favorites, but treat all alike at rehearsals. Favoritism begets jealousy and ill-feeling.

"VI—DON'T BE AFRAID TO GIVE A WORD OF PRAISE WHEN DESERVED

"A choirmaster who does nothing but scold and find fault cannot be a great success. Reprove and point out faults where necessary; but if really satisfactory work is done, commend it and so encourage your singers to further effort."—The Musical Journal.

SUGGESTIONS NUMBER 3

"AN IDEAL CHURCH SERVICE

"The morn was bright and clear. So was the congregation. 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow' was sung by the congregation, led by the choir. The prayer took up some of the phrases of that hymn of worship, thanking God for the beauty and freshness of the world, with the glowing sunlight spread over city, field and forest, and the sunshine of the Holy Spirit swelling the heart with joy and thanksgiving. At the 'Amen' of the invocation, the choir sang, 'Acapella,' some beautiful music by Rhineberger to the words:

"Sunlight o'er the field is spread,
Sabbath bells are ringing;
Waken from each doubt and dread
Praise the Lord with singing.'

"A beautiful Psalm was read, expressive of the majesty of God's kingdom, after which the choir rendered, very feelingly, Shelley's setting of 'Christian, the morn breaks sweetly o'er thee,' a rendering that prolonged the note of cheer that so far had dominated the service. Here was the suggestion of the theme of the coming sermon, in the closing line of two stanzas, 'Where the Redeemer reigns alone.'

Then followed an admirable sermon on 'How the kingdom grows,' the spread of the 'marvelous work and a wonder,' the Redeemer at the right hand of power moving the work along; the sermon was practical, and polished by the Spirit.

Then followed a solo (soprano) the music by DeReef, set to the two first verses of 'Abide with me,' and almost before the closing word the choir broke in soulful melody with the stanzas:

"I need thy presence every passing hour,
What but thy grace can foil the Tempter's power?
Who like thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, oh, abide with me.

"Then the congregation sang the closing hymn, led with intense fervor by the choir:

The holy gospel we profess,
"So let our lips and lives confess

"Some of the fine points of transition are beyond description, but notice how the keynote of youthful worship was impressed, and how skillfully the subject of thought was introduced without the slightest discord. This is not studied, nor artificial. It is just properly opening the gates and seizing the beauties which come through!"

The Voice and Its Culture

(This paper was prepared by Louise Robinson, and read before the music institute held at Lamoni, Iowa, in April, 1915.)

The subject assigned to me, and its development, is almost the most interesting part of my life, outside, of course, of my interest in my husband my daughter and son.

It is a subject never exhausted, but with each year's study becomes more interesting, wonderful, and the desire for more unfolding of its wonder never satiated. Of all gifts the ability to sing seems to be the most coveted.

The voice is the medium through which our inmost feelings are expressed: joy, sorrow, ambition, victory, every desire of the human soul can be expressed through the voice by the singer.

Jennie Lind was called the Swedish nightingale; the same was said of Christine Nilsson; their voices, full rich, liquid, and as the nightingale is described, fall with a strange loudness into the still night; sweet, low and tender, the long drawn out notes come, and are prolonged till the air vibrates as if a wire had been struck.

While all singers no doubt appreciate this comparison, bird song is not true song, but is a class alone, between vocal, and instrumental music; it is vocal so far as the bird uses its own voice, and instrumental as no words are used. What makes the difference in human beings is articulate speech, and it is the power of adding speech to song, poetry to melody, that makes human song vocal in the highest sense of the word.

The ancient Israelites with their refined sensibilities and poetic temperament possessed exalted ideas about music, especially singing; it was inseparable with their religion. They addressed the Almighty in hymns of praise and penitential psalms. Moses is believed to have acquired a knowledge of music as practiced by Egyptian priests. He had two silver trumpets made which were used as signals during the forty years' sojourn in the desert.

Miriam's song of triumph after the destruction of Pharaoh and his hosts was the first musical outburst of the Israelites, and was no doubt regarded as divine inspiration.

To-day all good sopranos study months and even years to sing acceptably that beautiful setting of Handel's of the words, "Oh had I Jubel's lyre and Miriam's tuneful voice," from the oratorio "Joshua."

The Greeks endeavored to cultivate the voice for singing and speaking. They taught enunciation and proper modulation of the voice. Their cultivation of the voice however was more for their orations, contests, declamations, etc., rather than for singing.

Passing from this period to the American Indian, music, especially singing, played a very important part in their daily life. They had songs for war, prayers, successes, feasts, thanksgiving dance and game songs.

However, my subject is the voice and its culture, and not the history of the voice; but I believe a little history as to how the voice was used in the different periods is not amiss.

Voice consists of sounds produced by the vibration of two elastic bands, the true vocal cords, situated in the larynx, or as is often called, the music box.

To better understand the location of the larynx, I might say it is more commonly called Adam's apple.

The vocal cords can best be imagined as inner lips, which we do not have under control either as beginners or artists, nor do we feel them. We become conscious of them first through the controlling apparatus of the breath, which teaches us to spare them, by sending the breath through them as carefully as possible.

The voice is produced by the waves of air in inhaling and exhaling, acting upon the vocal cords, the same as a stringed instrument. But I am very much of the opinion that to dwell too much on the physiology of the voice is a mistake, and only tends to confuse the student, and often he contracts muscles that otherwise he would relax naturally. The voice is a matter of sensations, and these are gained by the careful instruction of a competent teacher.

The power or fullness of the voice is brought about by the employment of those harmonics which are added to the original tone by the intervibrations and sensations within the accessory cavities, of the nose, face and head.

In the German Conservatory, eight years was considered the proper length of time for the development of the voice, to make it lasting and ready for the severe demands of opera oratorio and concert. Lilli Lehmann is a living example of the correctness of this theory. She is past sixty-six years of age, and is still giving her three concerts each season in Berlin, and her programs consist of the most exacting compositions of the masters, and of songs few modern singers attempt because the strain on the voice is too severe.

All muscles of the diaphragm, abdomen, chest muscles and vocal cords must be exercised, developed and kept in a healthy condition, the same as we consider exercise necessary to keep us physically healthy. The strengthening of these organs is done principally by developing breathing and relaxation. And when we say breathing we have the life and pulse of vocal culture. The breath becomes voice through the operation of the will and the instrumentality of the vocal organs.

To breathe properly the breath should be drawn in through the nostrils slowly, the diaphragm stiffens or draws in, also the abdomen. The chest is always supposed to be raised, the air going into the lungs fills them and this causes the ribs to distend. Then the soft palate should be raised, which prevents the air escaping through the nose. The diaphragm beneath the lungs acts elastically then and furnishes pressure from the abdomen. With this preparation the breath should be emitted sparingly through the vocal cords, which regulate it.

After the taking and controlling of breath is understood we must next turn our attention to the tongue, lips and hard palate—all these are most important in the final production of tone and enunciation.

One of the first things the student must learn is to hear and feel. The voice is generally a matter of sensations, and in this the student must become sensitive to causes and effects, whether the tone be forward, muscles relaxed, and breath under control.

Of course false impressions will be gained, and the student must work hard to overcome these, and gain a clear vision of where each tone must go and the sensations attending, etc.

Then the singer must obtain a natural, voluntary placing and mixing of vowels.

In this the tongue plays an important part, being able to take many positions. In activity all muscles contract, in inactivity relax, and we strengthen them by continued vocal gymnastics, so that they may be able to sustain long-continued exertion, keeping them elastic and using them so.

This also means a well-controlled activity of the diaphragm, chest and face muscles, and this is really about all of the physiology of the voice the student needs to know for the perfection of tones.

Always the best time for this practice is in the morning, regularly, singing exercises through the whole compass of the voice lightly. It is these exercises that make the singer master of his vocal organs.

Proper resonance is one of the first considerations of the student. In other words, the hard palate, the nose, the head, all have their resonating chambers, or properties. For instance, the lowest tones we sing, whether bass, tenor, alto or soprano must be felt vibrating in the upper lip and against the teeth, having followed the arch of the hard palate until the loosening of the lips frees the sound. All tones must reach these resonating chambers according to the various degrees of height or depth the voice is carried.

The accepted theory of all teachers is: The voice has three distinct registers, some claim two, some five, but the three usually considered are chest, middle and head voice. By chest we mean chest resonance, when the voice seems to come from the chest. Basses sing nearly altogether chest resonance. This resonance is heard in all voices to some extent.

The middle voice has its resonance in the mouth, upper hard palate and the nose.

The head resonance is found in bone cavities in the upper face and heard, and very often the sensation is that the voice goes through the top of the head.

The art of singing is to merge these three registers so skillfully that the letting off of one and the beginning of another cannot be detected by the listener. To gain this skill is to thoroughly control the breath, and place the voice forward enough to reach the different places of resonance supplied for the different characters of the voice.

There are descriptions of how the palate, vocal cords, larynx, glottis and other muscles act during tone production, but these could not be described in a half hour, nor in a day. Book after book is written about them, and after reading only two or three you are almost in despair trying to unravel the skein of membranes, cartilages and a hundred other things which have a bearing on the voice.

Simplicity should be the watchword of the teacher, otherwise he or she wonders at the lack of progress in the pupil; and too much explanation has a tendency to produce hopeless confusion. After all the method is simply the proper control of the breath, which is muscular and comes with daily practice. Then a clear mental picture where to put the voice with the breath, and make the best use of the sounding boards or resonators provided by nature. Conscientious daily practice and intelligent work, under the guidance of a good teacher, will usually provide the proper results.

Don't be misled by methods. All methods are striving for the same result.

The Italians were really the first to put great stress on developing the voice, and they excel in the bel canto. The Germans have equally good ideas developed for certain things, as well as the French, and the wise singer will adapt them all according to his needs. But as I said above, they are all striving for the same results, only by different routes. The destination is the same: pure tone, good breath control, and interpretation.

Each heart hath its burden of sorrow;
But after the weariest day
May dawn a radiant morrow,
For that is our Father's way.
His love grants the sweetest surprises.
Oh, wait thou, my soul, on him!
For his sun in its glory arises
As the morning star grows dim.

With the Gospel Wagon in Australia

ELBERT A. SMITH,

Dear Brother: If you have not had cut made of the print of the gospel wagon, I suggest you wait until I send you one I made the other day. It is a fine negative, I think. Will make a print and send it on to you with the next article on the wagon work. [Will appear in Autumn Leaves later.—EDITORS.]

Am writing this in the gospel wagon. We are camped on the side of the road. Arrived last night; depart to-morrow morning for another little town. Have been out three weeks. It is a great way to get the gospel to the people. Have not converted anybody yet, but that was not to be expected.

We passed through some of the finest roadways I have ever seen. The national flower, the wattle bush and tree, is ablaze in all its golden glory, and the roads are gorgeous, as they are at each side, giving a grand effect.

Sincerely yours,

C. EDWARD MILLER.

KOO-WE-RUT, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, October 31, 1915.

KNOXVILLE, IOWA, November 17, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from the land of Zion, having been there on a business trip. I always feel at home in Independence. I stopped at the Order of Enoch House, where I have always found a welcome boarding place, and the Spirit of God. This is the only hotel that I ever stopped at or heard of where every morning after breakfast prayer is observed. I always attend all the services I can while in Independence. I lived there at one time about four months. I think it the best place in the world, if a person is prepared to stay there. Work is scarce. If one has to depend on day labor it is not the place for him, unless he is a good mechanic. Most people there work in or near Kansas City, and are away from home long hours; they work ten hours and sometimes it required two hours to get to and from work.

We note by the HERALD that many are looking toward Missouri. Those contemplating going should not be a law unto themselves. The bishopric should be honored, and then all should be on the safe side. Let the bishopric know what you want. I have learned by sore experience that to ignore the bishopric means loss.

My prayer to God is that he will soon redeem Zion. I am not worrying how he will do it. He commanded the early Saints to seek redress of the governor of the State, of the President of the United States, and then leave the matter in the Lord's hands, so it is in good hands, and in his own due time God will perform his work. The thing for us to do is to live our religion. We need not fear the results.

We are trying to keep the gospel before this people. Brother G. F. Hull is holding meetings at Flagler, four miles from here. He holds forth there every other Sunday, and does a lot of preaching around town. He is well liked by all who meet with him.

We expect to have a tent come here in the spring. Brother J. S. Roth's meetings, held here in the summer, have begun to take root. Many ask about him. There is no hall here we can get, so we have to hold meetings in our houses, and not many come because of the services being held in private houses.

May God bless his people everywhere, is my prayer.

527 Robinson Street.

New York

My last writing was from Buffalo, where in company with Brother A. B. Phillips we were doing tent work. We were not so successful as we would have liked, the season being bad for such work. We decided that I was the Jonah, as my other experience in tent work was similar, "rain." However, we trust that the effort was not wholly in vain. The Saints in Buffalo did very well by us, and we will ever remember our stay at that place.

From Buffalo the writer went to Niagara Falls, New York, remaining there till the conference, holding some few meetings at La Salle during that time. The Saints at the Falls are alive and striving to keep the camp fire blazing. They are presided over by Brother William Landes.

The conference of the New York District, which convened at the Falls, was one of the best I have had the privilege of attending. We had the privilege of meeting a number of old Canadian faces, some from Hamilton, Saint Thomas, Humberston, and Niagara Falls, Ontario. The conference was along educational lines and was A number 1. We had the pleasure of meeting here our missionary in charge, Brother Griffiths, the first time for the year. While we had but little opportunity to converse with him, we were pleased to see him and hear his good counsel.

Conference over, we bade good-by to all. Brother Phillips and the writer said good-by to each other, he wending his way East, the writer remaining a few days. We were sorry to part company with Brother Phillips, having enjoyed laboring with him.

By special request from the branch on the Canadian side of the Falls, and permit from the missionaries in charge, the writer held a series of meetings there. The efforts were mainly directed to the Saints, on the higher principles of the gospel. We trust that the effort will bear fruit to the honor and glory of God. Several invitations to visit came from Saints in Canada, branches where I had labored in the early days of my missionary work. I would have liked to have availed myself of the invitations, but felt I might be trespassing.

From the Falls we wended our way to Buffalo. I must not forget to mention that the Canadian Saints did not forget that the missionary was out without purse or scrip, so helped him along financially. Remaining in Buffalo over two Sundays, I had the privilege of listening to Brother Stone preach while I sat with the audience.

From Buffalo I came to this place, Fulton, New York. Having only been here a day or two, I am not in a position to say anything about prospects. The branch is small. The Saints meet in a hall, which they can have only on Sundays, so special meetings seem to be out of the question. I am told that there is much prejudice against our work here. New York State does not seem to be a very fertile field for the gospel.

Billy Sunday is stirring things up in Syracuse, twenty-seven miles from here, and of course he takes everything before him, even to money, his collections for twenty-six days being $23,429.94. Special excursions are conducted from this place each week. The statement, They shall turn away their ears from the truth and be turned unto fables, is surely being fulfilled. I hope to hear Sunday once at least.

Wishing all compliments of the season,

Sincerely,

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK, 36 Tremont Avenue.

Great Lakes Mission

I left home May 20, and since that time have visited every district in the Great Lakes Mission except Northern Wisconsin District. I find many good, faithful workers doing what they can to advance the work.

One of the live features of this mission is the reunions that are held each year. This year reunions were held at the following places: Port Huron, Michigan, Erie Beach in the Chatham, Ontario, District, Low Banks, Ontario, which is also on Erie Beach, Plano, Illinois; Madison and Chetek, Wisconsin. Those who do not attend reunions are missing a spiritual treat.

Another live feature of the work in Michigan is the two-day meetings that are held in the different parts of the State. These two-day meetings are also held in some other parts of the field, but Michigan seems to be in the lead along this line. When a meeting of this kind is announced, the Saints come for miles around, either by train or automobile, and are cared for by the Saints where the meeting is held. If you want a good spiritual feast, get ready and come to some of these meetings.

The missionary force have done quite well considering some of the drawbacks they have had to meet. In some places the work seems to be doing excellently. The last I heard from Brother Alvin R. Ellis, who is laboring this year in Northern Michigan District, he had baptized seventy-one persons since the middle of May. His work at Boyne City, Michigan, has resulted in a large number being gathered into the fold at that place. Some forty-eight persons had been baptized there. At Levering, Michigan, we organized a branch of the church in town, and one eight miles in the country, results largely of Brother Ellis's work.

Brother O. R. Miller has done good work in Indiana, baptizing over twenty at Hibbard. Brother B. H. Doty and Otto Fetting have done excellent work on the streets, preaching, during the summer months. In some places this is the best way possible in reaching the people. Others of the brethren have done excellent work. Brother Philemon Pement has succeeded in opening up the work at Ottawa, Ontario, and many are interested in the work there.

The Saints at Toronto were preparing another winter campaign in the theater under the leadership of Bishop R. C. Evans. Many have heard and obeyed the gospel by these special efforts.

Two debates have been held in this mission this year, one by Brother J. D. Stead with a Holiness minister, Mr. E. Fagan, at Lansing, Michigan, and one at Carsonville, Michigan, with W. G. Roberts, Campbellite, where I met him for twelve nights. Two persons united with us during the debate, and eighteen more have united since the debate that live in the regions round about.

A Baptist minister made an attack on us at Boyne City, Michigan. Brother Alvin R. Ellis replied to him and offered propositions for discussion. But up to the present the Baptists have refused to meet this challenge.

A new branch has been organized at Loomis, Michigan, with thirty-five members. They have a nice church in which to meet, and the outlook is bright for them. Brother S. T. Pendleton has baptized a large number in the Central Michigan District. Many others of the brethren have labored hard, and are doing excellent work; we haven't room to mention all.

New church buildings have been erected: One at Brown City, Michigan, one at Sandusky, Michigan, and one at Lachine, Michigan. Three churches have been dedicated. One at East Fremont, Michigan, one at Lachine, and one at Alpena.

In some parts of the mission the calls for preaching are more than we are able to fill, while in other parts it seems hard to get openings.

While the battle is still on, we are thankful that we are still on the firing line.

In gospel bonds,
J. F. CURTIS.

Northeastern Illinois

It has been some time since the writer has written from this part of the vineyard, not because the work in this district has not been moving, but rather because of the press of labors of different kinds, which have occupied the time well.

This in many ways has been the hardest year's work in my experience as a missionary. The calls for preaching have been more than the missionary force of the district could fill, including the efforts of some of the local men, who have done good work.

We all miss very much our genial Brother James F. Kier, who faithfully served the First Chicago Branch as president for many years. But we are certainly glad that he was prepared and willing to respond to the call of the church in other duties, and hope and pray that he may be blessed in his new work, as he has in other labors he has been called to do.

We are glad, too, that the First Chicago Branch has another genial man as its first servant, Elder Harry Passman, who is moving forward with the work of the branch, backed by a noble lot of other elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. And what I say of the First Chicago workers I am glad to be able to say of the Central Chicago Branch, West Pullman, not forgetting Oak Lawn Mission, where the local brethren are active in the conflict, all these being assisted by our willing worker, D. E. Dowker, city missionary and vice president of the district.

Brother W. A. McDowell as patriarch for Northeastern Illinois and Wisconsin, has been very active, sometimes more so we fear than has been for his good, considering his condition of health. Elder F. F. Wipper, our other conference appointee, has been very busy, not only with missionary work, but also as general home department superintendent for the Religio. Elder J. F. Curtis as missionary in charge has given us such assistance as he has been able, attending the Plano reunion, and having the general direction of the work. There have been quite a number of baptisms during the year thus far, Brother Wipper baptizing twenty at Batavia. The other branches as Plano, Sandwich, Mission, Belvidere, Piper City, and DeKalb, are holding their own, and in some cases growing as with DeKalb where the branch has purchased a church and several have been added by baptism this year. We are glad to note the activity with which the local men, both branch officers and otherwise as a rule moved out into the field, ready to harvest.

Finances are a little closer than in other years, but still the Saints have done well as a rule, by which the demands on the district in caring for the missionaries' families have been accomplished thus far. We wish to say that Brother Robert Burwell of Dalton, Illinois, who is acting as bishop's agent since the departure of Brother Kier from the district, is in need of finances at the present time, and we hope that now as we celebrate the birth of Christ, we will bring our gifts to him, thus showing to God that we appreciate the gift of his Son, that we might have eternal life, the greatest gift to man.

The Plano reunion was very good and the meetings in general spiritual. Financially it was successful, and we can report the sum of one hundred and thirty dollars as a beginning for next year. We wish to say however, that the district is in need of a district tent, to be used as a dining tent, the one now in use being so old and worn that it is no longer suitable for more than a horse tent. We hope for measures to be adopted by which a new one may be purchased. This might be a good thing to keep in mind for new business at the conference, January 22, 23, which will meet with the First Chicago Branch.

We hope that all the branches will have their statistical reports on hand, that proper report may be made to the general recorder before reporting to General Conference. We hope that all branch officers and those of the priesthood not officers of branches will also report their labors for the past six months, to January 1. Please procure from the Herald Publishing House the blanks issued by the First Presidency, that uniformity may obtain.

This finds the writer in this great city, attending to some district matters.

Ever praying for the progress of the work and the final redemption of Zion, I remain,

Your brother and servant,

J. O. DUTTON.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, 4822 Dalkin Street, December 8, 1915.

At Arizona State Fair

As an advertiser of the church work our attractive exhibit at the Arizona State Fair was a success. Many thousands of people had their attention directed to the fact that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is alive and alert, and a potent factor to be reckoned with.

One of the leading features of our exhibit was an open view of the Book of Mormon at the third chapter of the Book of Jacob, where the language is plain and strong in condemnation of the wicked practice of polygamy. We used a large edition of the Book of Mormon, which has a clear, large print, and we underlined the leading points with red and blue to make it catchy to the eye of the throng passing by, and it worked excellently.

The book was fastened to the center of a nicely decorated board three feet square, by means of four large screws around the edges of the book; a little rubber cord stretched across the page held the book open. Short, explanatory lettering upon the white cloth background surrounding the book helped to center the thought to the point at a glance.

Groups of curious people would gather around, which in turn attracted others into the press of eager observers. This gave us a splendid opportunity to discourse upon gospel themes, answer questions, and distribute tracts.

Mrs. Yates, as our assistant in the booth, soon developed quite an aptitude in delivering short lectures to few or many. By the kindness of the Herald Publishing House and the Presiding Bishop in supplying us with a splendid shipment of tracts, we were prepared to distribute them among the people by hundreds.

Some of our most interesting interviews were with leaders and members of the Utah church. One of their first observations would be: "Oh, well, polygamy is a dead ism." But before we had conversed long the evidence would appear that instead of it being a dead issue, it is a smothered, smoldering fire.

The men of the Utah church defend the crime of polygamy as a godly principle, with great determination, but many of the women do not seem so sure that it is just the thing, especially if it is to be applied in their own homes. One of their elders said that if he could be convinced that the doctrine of sealing wives for time and eternity was untrue, he wanted nothing whatever to do with any religion. Surely all roads lead to polygamy with that man, and with all who are like-minded.

We had a very pleasing interview with the governor of Arizona, Honorable George W. P. Hunt, at the place of our exhibit, and he seemed interested to know of the activities of the Reorganization, in contradistinction to the Utah church. It was a matter of personal interest to the writer to learn that the governor's mother was a Yates, of the Illinois family tree, in which we trace our kindred.

We did not sell many of the books of the shipment advanced by the Herald Publishing House, but shall try to pay for the budget and keep the remaining portion on sale here in Phoenix. Arizona Saints may get Books of Mormon and a variety of other books from us at the regular catalogue prices. See us, or write if you need anything.

In our call for contributions for the fair exhibit fund we estimated the need to be about twenty dollars, and asked the Saints for that amount. The actual expense (exclusive of tickets for the week for Mrs. Yates and myself, which we bear on our own account), is twenty-one dollars and eighty-five cents. We hereby thank the Saints who have contributed to this worthy and successful enterprise, for their contributions which to date of this writing aggregate fourteen dollars; amount needed to balance the account is seven dollars and eighty-five cents. We will be thankful to receive this amount, but if it is not forthcoming we shall not complain. The work accomplished in the interest of the church was all that we could reasonably expect.

As a laborer in our common cause, JAMES E. YATES.
PHOENIX, ARIZONA, 35 South Second Street.

News from Branches

Providence, Rhode Island

News items from Providence Branch come in the form of an annual message from the pastor. Many things have transpired in Providence since the year 1914 passed away. Some of our members have been taken away by death. Marriage has claimed several of our young people. Since June twelve have been added to the branch by baptism: six adults and six children. For several months there has been a steady improvement in branch affairs.

We held a summer school this year as last year. The school itself was a success, in that it was well attended and had a splendid average on all points that characterize a summer school; but the after showing has not been what we hoped it would be. A half dozen boys came to Sunday school for a few sessions only. They seemed to be ashamed of public opinion; they are very friendly, but not strong enough to stand opposition.

This is not a summer school territory. All the children who came are well cared for by other churches; they have attended good Sunday schools all their lives; they are not "street children"; many are members of the Young Men's Christian Association; if we are to win them to us we must adapt the summer school to our peculiar work; how this can be done I do not know. It might be only fair to add that we have not given up trying yet, and are planning a series of socials to which we hope to draw these children of the strangers just outside our gates.

Since coming to Providence I have changed my first opinion of the city and State. I mistook, evidently, the appearance of quaintness and quietness to indicate righteousness; but it seems they stand for stolid indifference or corruptness of heart. By investigation I learned Rhode Island ranks among the blackest in the Union on the liquor question. (The license to sell liquor here must be very low or the trade brisk, for there are saloons everywhere, hyperbolically writing.) She is away behind the times in trying to prevent crimes of various sorts. This is not an arraignment of the good people here—there are many.

Providence Branch has a membership of over three hundred. Many of these are scattered, and some are lost. To the branch clerk such names as Olch, Swanburg, Peet, and many others, are haunting ghosts: no one here knows where they are. We go to one of the old members and say, "Do you know anything about Benjamin Olch?"

And the answer comes, "Olch, Olch. Let's see. Isn't he that Jew who was baptized many years ago? Oh, yes; I recollect now. He went to England. The last I heard he was on the stage." If his face was only known, some of our moving picture fans might be able to trace him through the films. Our history is the history of every old branch, in this respect.

The first ministerial conference of the Massachusetts District met in Providence last month. A report of this—I might almost say experiment—will be sent to the papers. The interest was intense. Brother Griffiths was with us and his counsel was in words fitly spoken. The labors of our brother were marked with great success. I feel that honorable mention should be given the distinction of a separate paragraph.

The new missionary in charge of the Eastern Mission, Gomer T. Griffiths, came among us at reunion time. He proved his power of endurance by speaking several hours every day. His chart lectures were so interesting that only two other classes were held during the institute hour. The lectures on priesthood were a treat to both brothers and sisters. The laws which govern offenses and their cure were explained in a manner that none need misunderstand. In the priesthood meetings every member present would sit and listen as if under some influence more than human. The brother taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes and Pharisees. And his counsel has stirred up members in every branch where he has been, and especially members of the priesthood. I once said to my dentist that he was the only man who ever hurt me physically as he did without making me angry. Brother Griffiths proved to be a spiritual dentist—he hurt by telling the naked truth, but he did not make anyone angry. He moved to laughter and to tears. In our humble judgment he has proved to be the most unique and powerful man that ever blessed the Eastern Mission. I write this praise without fear or favor. It may be a sort of return of "good for evil," for when the brother ordained me he did not spare my feelings any.

Our Sunday school is holding its own. It is the second largest in the district, and has the best average attendance, I believe. The local Religio here is becoming very popular, and the classes are anxious to renew the study of the Book of Mormon. I think the change of texts is timely, and the new study will be introduced at a time in our church history when we are prepared as never before to enjoy and profit by the study of the "Stick of Joseph." I think the Religio discharged a serious obligation when it devoted the last few years to the study of the Doctrine and Covenants; but this task accomplished, we can now go back to the Book of Mormon with a free conscience—however, not forgetting the lessons we have learned.

A word about my efforts in gospel literature distribution—I say my efforts because I alone have made the real effort here. Thousands of pieces of literature have been given out. I feel that I can spend an hour no better than in placing our HERALDS, Ensigns, Autumn Leaves, tracts, in the hands of men who know not God. The arguments urged against this kind of work are silly, it seems to me. The dates are old! The church papers are not newspapers. What does the reader care when a religious paper was published, so long as he finds something that interests his soul? When were the Bibles published? Few will read them! What of that? Few come to hear us preach. Should we stop making effort to save souls because few hear us? It is that "few" we are after and get. If we get one reader to every hundred pieces, the time is well spent.

But bigger than readers is the fact that distribution advertises the location of our church; it tells the people that we are not connected with Utah Mormons; it keeps our work before the people; it clears our conscience in that we warn the people. On each piece of literature I pass is stamped in blue the place and time of services, the statement that we are not connected with Utah Mormons, and after many pieces have been passed, I stamp the words: "If you do not care for more literature please notify the address given above."

The Lord commanded us to prepare tracts, and he commanded the church to print papers. What for? For the people to read. How will the people get our literature? I can suggest one very cheap and simple way—carry it to them. If a man were drowning in the sea, would he reject a plank because he could not get a lifeboat? Admitting that the perfect way to reach souls is through the power of a consecrated branch and ministry, are we to sit idly by and do nothing while waiting for that day to come? If we do, God will condemn us as slothful servants. Let us do what our hands find to do, and of our own selves bring to pass much righteousness. I will call again.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

Perry, Iowa

Brother D. T. Williams closed a very successful series of meetings here about ten days ago, which covered a period of four weeks. During his stay he baptized five, one adult and four children, also blessed two children. As a result of the meetings, our people are encouraged and strengthened in the faith, and hope for much good to come out of the outside interest manifested.

Brother Williams went from this field to Packard, Iowa, where he is now preaching, on the invitation of the several families there located.

Our Sunday school is busy preparing a cantata entitled, "Santa Claus' Dream," for the Christmas entertainment.

Our parliamentary class is again meeting regularly, after a vacation through the last few months, on account of sickness and absence of many of the members. Much pleasure and profit is received by those taking active part each week, and at our business meetings we are glad to note that the Rules of Order is generally observed.

Although at times the results seem slow, we hope to press on with renewed faith and courage for the New Year.

Sincerely your sister,

CORRESPONDENT.

Los Angeles, California

A very successful bazaar was held at the Los Angeles church Thursday afternoon and evening by the ladies aid for the particular purpose of assisting in renovating the auditorium and supplying a new carpet, etc.

A program was rendered in the afternoon, followed by a splendid chicken dinner, which was largely attended by the Saints and friends, closing with an auction to dispose of the remainder of the goods, with Brother Rushton wielding the hammer. Evidently England must be a great place for auctions, as he succeeded in disposing of every article, and some things sold the second time. The audience was in good humor and seemed to catch the spirit of the ladies, i. e., "aid." Altogether the report showed a net revenue of two hundred and two dollars, exceeding the most sanguine expectations of the promoters, leaving less than one hundred dollars to be raised on all the work done.

Many encouraging features are observed in the district and branches from time to time. Attendance seems to be improving somewhat. Brother V. M. Goodrich continues to improve in health. A special series of meetings was held in Santa Ana last week with good results. The San Bernardino church was well filled last Sunday when Brother Rushton conducted two services. He also addressed the Young Men's Christian Association in the afternoon, there being present a large crowd. He also arranged to speak for the high school on Tuesday. Prospects seem good that Brother George H. Wixom will be successful in retaining the mayorship at the coming recall election on December 14.

Sister Rushton, accompanied by Sister M. T. Short, arrived last Monday, and is resting well at the home of Brother and Sister R. T. Knowlton. It is hoped that the California balm will soon begin to accomplish her recuperation, as it undoubtedly will.

R. T. COOPER.

289 East Forty-eighth Street, December 3, 1915.

Jonesport, Maine

A large delegation attended the Sunday school convention held here October 30 and 31, the different schools of the district being well represented. Many interesting papers were read and readings delivered. Brethren F. J. Ebeling and John F. Sheehy delivered interesting lectures. Brother Herbert Rogers, our worthy chorister, with his band of singers, assisted by the orchestra, did their part towards the success of the meetings, and we may say that it was a big success.

Since the convention our school has grown wonderfully in membership, and many inquiries as to our school have been made, showing that non church members are noting the developments in the different lines of our church work.

A few weeks ago through the efforts of Brother Frank J. Ebeling, a Religio was organized. Since organization we have enjoyed a number of pleasant gatherings. Our attendance is growing rapidly, and it has already become evident that by means of this auxiliary a goodly number of non church members and their children are becoming regular attendants at the services. The social committee is about to make arrangements for a social for the children. The president is making arrangements for some debates, and it is a settled fact that with God as helper this auxiliary will prove its worth during the coming winter.

A goodly number were present during our district conference, held November 27 and 28. Interesting sermons were delivered. All enjoyed a spiritual feast and felt more than paid for the effort put forth to get here. Our local priesthood number eighteen or twenty. With the loyal service of these, great accomplishments can be realized in this vicinity. We are blessed as members of the priesthood in having such able advisers as F. J. Ebeling and W. E. Rogers to encourage us. These brethren are working hard that God's work may grow and prosper in this district.

Your sincere brother,

CHARLES F. CUMMINGS.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District: Stop! Think! Have we taken our inventory? Are we planning to have our names on the financial record before the close of this year?

While we are trying to satisfy those we owe by meeting a part of our obligations, will we be as thoughtful with our heavenly Father and make a payment on the oldest debt we owe? Can we hope to be a true child of his and disregard the demands he has made upon us? He only asks of us that we do the best we can, and surely no earthly parent could be more patient with us. Shall we impose on his kindness? I hope we will not be so ungrateful as that. Think of the many blessings you have received from his hand, and act accordingly.

Let us look forward with pleasure to Christmas time, and help to make this year's offerings the largest the church has ever received.

Those who may have money in their hands and wish to have credit in this year's report, please send it so it will reach me by December 28.

In the Master's cause,
SAMUEL STROH, Bishop's Agent.

Conference Notices

Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, January 29 and 30. Religio and Sunday school conventions will meet on Thursday and Friday preceding. Arrangements have been made with Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and Canadian Northern Company whereby we obtain cheap rates. In buying ticket buy single fare, obtaining from agent where you purchase your ticket a standard certificate. If 100 delegates are present each holding a standard certificate we may return free of charge; if 50 delegates are present holding standard certificates we return for one third fare; if 25 or less hold standard certificates we return for two thirds single fare. Now, notice: If only one is present holding certificate, he will return for the two thirds fare, which is equal to a return fare at any time; so we stand to win all, and nothing to lose. During last conference there were almost 400 in attendance, and only 70 had bought single tickets and received standard certificates. The rest who bought return fares forced those who held standard certificates to pay one third of a single fare to get home, when if everyone had bought a single ticket and received a standard certificate the whole crowd would have gone back for nothing. Arrangements have been made for cheap rates and lodgings. We are expecting to introduce some new features along educational line. We invite all to come. Thomas J. Jordan, Joshua Dobson, William J. Cornish, presidency, Bertha Cornish, secretary.

Northern California, February 19, 10 a. m., Saints' church, Oakland, corner Sixteenth and Magnolia streets. Branches send full reports. J. W. Rushton will probably be present. John A. Lawn, secretary, Hollister, California.

Northern Wisconsin February 12, 13, Porcupine Branch. Teams will meet those coming to Durand, Thursday or Friday. Meals served in basement of church, 15 cents per meal. Lodging at homes of Saints free. Priesthood should have reports on hand. We expect several missionaries. Leonard Houghton, president.

Portland, 10.30 a. m. January 29, Saints' church, Portland, Oregon block north of Glisan Street, on East Seventy-sixth Street North. Take Montavilla car. Priesthood earnestly requests to report labors. Election of officers: M. H. Cook, president; R. E. Chapman, secretary.

Florida, January 15, 10 a. m., Fairview Branch, near Pensacola, Florida. Ministers and branches kindly report in time. E. N. McCall, secretary.

Seattle and British Columbia, February 5, 10 a. m., Seattle, Washington, church, corner Kilbourne Street and First Avenue Northwest. Take Fremont-Ballard or Sixth Avenue Northwest car at Union Depot, or at any point on First Avenue. Both cars pass the church. Branch clerks will receive blanks on which to make report in ample time for closing five months, ending December 31. Priesthood laboring within district past five months report not later than January 21, in accordance with new district by-laws, copy of which may be obtained from any branch president or undersigned. Election of district officers, and delegates to General Conference. J. W. Rushton is expected. Let all who can be in attendance. Religio and Sunday school conventions 10 a. m. and 2.30 p. m., respectively, the 4th. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 4233 Bagley Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Convention Notices

Portland Sunday school and Religio, Portland, Oregon, January 28, Saints' church in Montavilla. Send reports early. Election of officers and other important matters. Good attendance desired. Lottie Gage, secretary.

North Dakota Religio, December 31, Fargo. Bertha Graham, secretary.

Quorum Notices

HIGH PRIESTS

To the High Priests, Greeting: This will give notice that program and report blank have been mailed to each member of the quorum to the address last furnished the secretary. However, if you have not already received your copy and the blank on the reading of this notice and will so inform me, I will mail you another supply. The report blank was sent out early this year in the interest of economy to the quorum, and all who may so elect may make out their individual annual report to the quorum for the year ending December 31. This will be quite satisfactory to the secretary; and please note, all reports should be in hands of secretary not later than March 10.

Papers or answers to questions on the program are due as soon as you can get them in; one already has been received.

Your fellow servant,

ROB'T. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 13, 1915.

MICHIGAN ELDERS

Meet at Coleman, Michigan, January 1 and 2. Good representation from every part of the State desired, as quorum is now filled and a division of it will be discussed and recommended to the authorities. A good program is provided and copy mailed to each member. Coleman Saints have been requested to provide concert program for Saturday night. Will you be there?

W. L. BENNETT, Secretary.

Notice of Release

At his request, presented with reasons for making it, Elder Frank A. Russell has been released from missionary appointment.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 17, 1915.

Notice of Appointment

By concurrence of the Presidency, missionary in charge and the Presiding Bishopric, Elder J. W. Davis has been appointed to labor in Eastern Michigan District for the balance of the conference year.

ELBERT A. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 17, 1915.

Two-Day Meetings

Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, January 8 and 9. Those coming from a distance notify Arthur Davenport, Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin. L. O. Wildermuth.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Wolfe, Charlotte Harbor, Florida, requests the prayers of the Saints, and especially the prayers of the eldership. This sister is suffering with severe pains in the right side of her head. She has not found relief in professional care. She is isolated and her husband is a member of another church, not sustaining her in her wish to be healed. This sister should be remembered. May the Lord bless her.

A Christmas Message

To the Members of the Sunday School Association, Everywhere; Greeting: This word will reach the most of you during Christmas week, while you are helping to swell the tide of good cheer. Will you pause while we ask if you have tried to preserve the true spirit of Christmas? Are your gifts made with the thought of getting back others in return?

Have you remembered our annual offering—not mine or yours, but ours? It takes the united help of thousands to make this Christmas Offering worth while—a welcome lift to the financial needs of the church at this time of the year when the calls are so many more than usual. Have you done your part?

Last year we exceeded the mark set by Presiding Bishop, and yet we gave an average of only 28 cents each, with a membership of 36,000. The Bishop suggests that we set our mark at $12,000 this Christmas—about 6 cents more per member. Surely, that's easy! Only six cents more for every 25 cents given last year would more than raise the $12,000—provided the conditions are the same. But they are not. Americans living in favored "Joseph's land," are blessed with bigger crops and more prosperity than last year; while most of our members across the seas are poorer this Christmas on account of the awful war. And the church will be called upon to send aid to them as well as to some nearer home. Our Bishops must do this and at the same time keep the missionaries in their fields, preaching the gospel to many who know it not.

Now, will we be satisfied to increase our offerings by only one fifth while the gospel needs to be preached and some of our Latter Day Saint boys and girls go without a Christmas dinner? Could you be happy while you eat yours with the knowledge that you have not made any sacrifice to aid them? Perhaps father has paid his tithing. Could he not do a little more to help make our annual offering worth while?

Shall we not try to double the amount of last year? That will make up for those who have nothing to give. That's the Jesus way. It is the real Christmas spirit—giving without expecting a gift in return.

The time is short. The books will soon be closed and the list printed in the Blue Stepping Stones. You can hand your offering at once to the nearest agent, or send to Presiding Bishop. Will you help to make it $12,000 or more?

We feel sure you will—all who can.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

Notice Lamoni Order of Enoch

Notice is hereby given that the regular meeting of the membership of the Lamoni Order of Enoch will occur at the Saints' church, Lamoni, Iowa, January 3, 1916, at 7.30 p. m.

The purpose of this meeting is to hear the annual report of the trustees of the order, and to elect four trustees to take the office for a term of three years, to succeed A. J. Yarrington, C. E. Blair, John Smith, and H. C. Burgess, the time for which they were elected having expired.

A report of the treasurer of the body will also be made, and such other business as the body desires to transact may be taken up.

R. J. LAMBERT, Secretary.

Notice Woman's Auxiliary

Send suggestions for amendments to constitution to Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller, Independence, Missouri. Minnie E. Scott.

Died

CROSHAW.—Ann, beloved wife of Benjamin Croshaw, passed peacefully away November 9, 1915, after a short illness, of bronchial pneumonia, aged 79 years, having celebrated her birthday October 27. Deceased, who by former marriage was Mrs. Ann Lester, married Benjamin Croshaw, August 19, 1873, at Staffordshire, England. They came to Oxford, Idaho, September 25, 1880, residing there 12 years, then removed to Pocatello, Idaho, October 1, 1892, where she remained until death. Deceased was a member of the Reorganized Church. With husband and 5 children, she embraced the gospel, R. J. Anthony and Joseph Luff officiating at the baptisms in the fall of 1885. Two other daughters joined the church a few years later. Deceased was faithful and lived a God-fearing life, beloved by all who knew her. Lending a helping hand to those in need, she spent the best part of her life in ministering to the sick and afflicted. Whenever a call came she was ready. She was a woman of intelligence and ability, and a friend to everybody. She leaves to mourn a highly respected family and a host of friends. Services Saturday afternoon at the residence, 855 West Sublett Street, where a crowd of relatives and friends came to pay their last tribute of respect to this beloved wife, mother and friend. She was the mother of 13 children, 7 of whom survive: George H. Lester,

Book Reviews

IN THE SHELTER OF THE LITTLE BROWN COTTAGE.—This is the popular serial that has been running in Stepping Stones, by the editor of that paper, Estella Wight. It is strictly a Latter Day Saint story and concerns itself with characters familiar to the Saints of village and country places especially. One correspondent writes that it is the only literature of ours which she has been able to induce an outsider friend to read: and he is deeply interested in it. Undoubtedly the story contains an element of strong human interest for the great majority of readers, particularly those of our faith. The name "Latter Day Saint," is, of course, used freely throughout the book, as are also other terms characteristic of our message to humanity. The plot of the story is perhaps not as sensational as it might be; the professional critic would say it lacked "action"; but it makes up for this shortcoming in its homelike description and simple, life characters. The chief character, Janey, upon graduating, feels obliged to assist her mother and family in paying off the mortgage of the little brown cottage. Against their wishes, though not their will, she accepts a position as school-teacher far away from home, and there, while plodding to help lift the mortgage, she finds opportunity for developing her character. There, also, she is confronted with a new religion, which she accepts. The folks at home have also accepted this message, unbeknown to Janey—whose conversion is also unknown to them, because of circumstances arising in the story. Everything works out satisfactorily at last, of course; but not until the reader has tramped through snowstorms and religious storms, worried over the leading characters a good deal, and heartily wished for the very thing the author, in her mercy, finally decides to bring about. If your neighbors like good, wholesome, homelike fiction, but are not inclined to argue over doctrine with you, you could not do better than let them read this book. (Herald Publishing House, $1. Excellently bound in cloth, illustrated, and with attractive cover.)

SOCIALISM, FEMINISM, AND SUFFRAGISM.—The American Publishing Company, 1820 City Hall Square Building, Chicago. 301 pages; $1.25. This book is written by B. V. Hubbard. On the title-page appear these words, "Socialism, Feminism, and Suffragism, The Terrible Triplets." As may be suspected from the subtitle, the work is antagonistic to the three movements treated upon. The author states that the book is constructed on the plan of an encyclopedic review of these subjects. Appreciating the fact that individual readers secure only fragmentary information on these subjects, he has attempted to read, digest and correlate the principal authorities on each subject. He states that he has endeavored to mark little journeys after the plan of Elbert Hubbard, to the homes of Carl Marx, Helen Key, and Emmaline Pankhurst, and offers his observations. His conclusions are that the three movements are akin; that they are all revolutionary; and that their full or partial success would be a great injury to organized society. He has endeavored, as he states, to present in the most forceful words at his command, his opinion on the subjects considered. The arguments adduced are rather radical and sensational in nature. The quotations from various writers on the three subjects should be of value to anyone making a study of the question. His introduction he concludes with thus: "The dominant note in Socialism, Feminism and Suffragism is the escaping of labor and the duties of motherhood as they came to mankind as a consequence of the disobedience of man's first parents, as related in the book of Genesis. The common sentiment of these three spirits is materialistic infidelity, and their common motto is, "No God, no Master." It is the purpose of these essays to show that the proposed remedies for present conditions are not medicines for healing, but poisons, which kill the remnants of our faith and morals, and will plunge our country into greater political corruption and intensify our industrial and economic difficulties."

The Saints' Herald

Every important branch of industry of to-day has its trade journal. The progressive business man must keep pace with the progress in his line.

Every Latter Day Saint should have access to the official publication of the church. The times demand that every member of the church be informed of the various movements of the church.

The building of the kingdom of God is the all-important task of the church to-day. We shall only be wise builders as we know the needs of the body.

The SAINTS' HERALD goes to the people laden with the best that can be secured by the writers of the church. There is doctrine and news and information. Various special departments cater to special needs, such as the musical, Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary.

Occasionally we issue special magazine numbers, with a number of good illustrations and articles on special subjects, but every week there is something for the thoughtful reader.

It will be a real loss if you do not have the SAINTS' HERALD the coming year. Subscribe now.

RELIGION IN THE LIFE OF THE STUDENT

(An address before the Lamoni High School, by Elbert A. Smith, December 17, 1915.)

Of course when you invite a preacher to deliver an address you run the risk of getting a sermon. I presume, however, that you were aware of this risk, and are prepared to take the consequences.

I wish to talk for a few moments on the subject, "The place of religion in the life of the student." In the first place, what is the object of the student? We become students almost before we are aware of it. In fact, we might almost say that we were born students. Doctor Talmage, the celebrated divine, said that he was born asking "Why,"—and some one retorted unkindly that no one had ever found out why. Although we may not be born asking questions, we begin asking them very early in life.

One of these little fellows in the kindergarten, when he really gets started, can ask more questions in fifteen minutes than all the teachers in high school can answer in a day. In fact, children begin asking questions long before they enter kindergarten. Evidently the object of all these questions is to find out facts; or to state it in another way, the object is the pursuit of truth. It is an evidence of the inherent longing in man to arrive at the truth.

We ask these questions of those whom we think are prepared to answer them and enlighten us. Thus those who answer our questions become our teachers. I may say in passing, that the information that your teachers may attempt to force upon you in your indifferent moments makes little impression; but the information that you receive in answer to questions that have come up in your own minds makes a lasting impression.

We are not always satisfied with the information that we obtain as a result of inquiry and as the result of teaching by precept. It is quite natural for us to wish to experiment, and arrive at truth by demonstration.

When requested some weeks ago to relate a personal anecdote, my mind went back immediately to the time when I had been told that a cat when falling, always alights upon its feet. I learned this by precept, but not satisfied with that I must try an experiment; and so in company with another boy I climbed to the top of an old barn, and, reversing the house cat, dropped him and watched the result.

Thus I arrived at the facts in the case by experiment. That is the scientific way. I was a scientist. Scientists endeavor to demonstrate truth to one or all of the five senses. That which we see, hear, feel, taste, or smell we believe, although there is always danger of being deceived even by these senses, on which we rely so implicitly.

I stated that you might get a sermon. However, I will not take my text from the Bible, but from the writings of a very celebrated scientist. We have here a book called Continuity, containing an address by Sir Oliver Lodge before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1913. At that time Sir Oliver Lodge was the president of the association. Thus you will see that the statements contained in the book come from the greatest modern scientist, and were made before possibly the greatest assembly of scientists of modern times. In this address Sir Oliver Lodge says: "The methods of science are not the only way though they are our way, of being piloted to truth."—Page 104.

He goes on to add: "Pre-scientific insight of genius—of poets and prophets and saints—was of supreme value, and the access of those inspired seers to the heart of the universe was often proven."—Page 104.

It appears from this reasoning that scientific methods are not the only methods of arriving at the truth; that the truth may be arrived at by way of revelation, intuition, inspiration. He mentions the poets, and without doubt many of the poets have been to a degree inspired. I recall for instance, a verse from the poem "Locksley Hall," by Tennyson:

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew

From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue.

Tennyson's prophetic insight into the future has been to a wonderful degree justified. Since his day man has won a notable victory over the elements, found his wings, and obtained power to fly, so that the heavens were filled with commerce.

At the outbreak of the great European war, regular lines of dirigibles were running between given points in Germany,—running on schedule time. Tennyson went on to say he heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew from the nations' airy navies grappling in the blue. To-day the airy navies of the world are grappling in the heavens. Zeppelins and aeroplanes are fighting each other over France, Germany, Russia and Serbia, and too often as a result of these strange combats in the heavens, there rains on the earth below a ghastly dew. Something inspired Tennyson to perceive this then future strange phenomenon.

It is evident too, that the prophets and seers of old, especially the Biblical prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, John, and others, including the preeminent seer, Jesus of Nazareth, were able to perceive future events, and what is more important, lay hold upon hidden eternal principles of truth in relation to man, his destiny, his moral conduct, his origin, etc. Others of lesser power, not generally recognized as prophets, have received similar gifts, to an extent at least, so that they have arrived at truth. For instance, such men as Tolstoy, the Russian, and our own great Emerson.

It will be conceded at once that inspiration is naturally associated with religion, and I quote further from Sir Oliver Lodge: "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things."—Page 106.

If you are a student and are human, religion has its place naturally in your nature. It is true that some people seem to think that a genuine student is scarcely human. We speak about "high brows" with a degree of contempt. Some one has said that a bookworm is a worm that would rather eat than read or a man who would rather read than eat. But a real student is human. He likes to read, it is true; but also he likes to eat on occasion. He has time for home and family and children, and association with humanity.

When our President Wilson entered the White House there were some who considered him scarcely human because he had been president of a great university and was known the world over as a scholar of renown. He was considered cold and academic, and without emotion. But we have discovered that he is very human, that he has that in common with Lincoln, our greatest president; who, although a great student, always kept his ear close to the heart of humanity.

In fact, we may say that the real student is the most alive and the most human man on earth. If you are a student, then, and human, according to Sir Oliver Lodge, genuine religion has its roots deep in your nature. You cannot uproot it without injuring your own nature. Atheists, agnostics, infidels have done violence to their own nature.

I wish to impress this thought upon your mind, because as you go on through the high school, into the college, and possibly into the university, you will meet men and women who will assure you that religion has no place in the life of a student. Remember this, that one who dug very deeply into science and one who climbed to a position of pre-eminence, standing in this twentieth century before a great assembly of scientists, declared that genuine religion has its roots deep in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things.

And so in the pursuit of truth, bearing in mind his statement that scientific methods are not the only methods of arriving at the truth, you will not go far wrong if you heed the divine injunction and seek learning not only by study, but also by faith.

PROFIT SHARING.—The International Harvester Company has announced arrangements whereby employees may purchase on easy terms, stock with guaranteed remunerative returns.

HEAVY MAILS.—Some idea of the tremendous amount of mail handled daily in the United States may be formed from the statement of the press that on December 19, a record day, there was handled in the Chicago post office eight hundred tons of mail.

"EASTLAND" BLAME.—Reporting on the Eastland disaster, which vessel was wrecked some time ago at Chicago with the loss of many lives, Secretary of Commerce Redfield, on the 18th, placed the blame on insufficient inspection service. He urged appropriations to extend the service.

RATES RAISED.—The Interstate Commerce Commission on the 2d granted to railroads operating between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers and the Rocky Mountains increases in freight rates on many commodities, including agricultural implements, canned goods, boots and shoes.

THE PEACE PARTY.—Henry Ford is reported ill, with the possibility that he may have to leave the peace party and return home. The peace delegates have left Christiana for Stockholm, Sweden. Report from Christiana is that invitations to Norwegian friends of peace to join the party have met with no response.

FOR RIVAL NAVY.—The annual report of the general board of the navy, of which Admiral Dewey is president, made public by Secretary Daniels the 21st, contains the following paragraph:

The navy of the United States should ultimately be equal to the most powerful maintained by any other nation in the world. It should be gradually increased to this point by such a rate of development year by year as may be permitted by the facilities of the country. But the limit above defined should be attained not later than 1925.

CONSPIRACY CHARGES.—Paul Koenig, chief detective of the Hamburg-American Line, and Richard Lelendecker, an antique dealer, have been charged with conspiracy to dynamite the Welland Canal, and Edmond Justice, a Hamburg-American watchman, has been charged with conspiracy in the United States to secure military information for the German Government regarding Canadian munitions. Koenig is also named in the Justice charge. These men are under heavy bonds to appear in answer to the charges named.

THE "ANCONA."—Holding that the admission of the Austro-Hungarian admiralty that the vessel was torpedoed after her engines were stopped, and when passengers were still on board, fixes on the submarine commander responsibility for violation of the recognized law of nations, in the second note to Austria-Hungary, made public the 22d, the United States declines to discuss facts or law in connection with the sinking of the Ancona. The note holds the Austro-Hungarian Government responsible for the act of the commander, and renews "the definite but respectful demands" made in the communication of December 6.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Influential Villa generals have been in conference with Carranza representatives arranging an agreement under which the main part of the Villa army is to be taken into the Constitutionalist army and used in a campaign to be inaugurated against Zapata, amnesty to be granted the Villa generals. It is said that the arrangements further provide, in agreement with United States authorities, that Villa may become a political fugitive to the United States. It does not seem that Villa is in full accord with the concessions of his generals, he being reported first at one place and then at another, his purposes unknown. General Rodriguez, the last Villa officer with any considerable following in the State of Chichuahua, and not a party to the agreement just mentioned, is said to be arranging terms of surrender to Carranza authorities. The Carranza government is extending civil and military authority throughout the territory surrendered by Villa generals. Henry Prather Fletcher, American ambassador to Chile, has been appointed ambassador to Mexico.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The entente allies continue work on defensive lines about Saloniki, and are still landing troops at that point. Greece reiterates her intentions of neutrality. According to statements made, she will permit the entente allies to complete the fortification of Saloniki; she will not oppose an Austro-German attack, if guarantees are given that her territory will not be put in jeopardy, but she insists that neither Bulgarians nor Turks must enter Greece. Greek villagers in the neighborhood of the British lines are leaving their homes. Serbian and Montenegrin resistance continues against the Austrians in Montenegro and Albania. Austro-German troops are being massed on the Greek border, and Bulgarian and Greek forces are engaged in skirmishes along their common border. The British have withdrawn from the north coast sections of the Gallipoli Peninsula, the troops at these two points being transferred to some other sphere of operations. British troops continue to occupy the tip of the peninsula, commanding the entrance to the straits leading to the Dardanelles. Report that Varna, Bulgaria's chief Black Sea port, has been captured, is unconfirmed. The Russians report successes in Persia. Minor gains for both Germany and France are reported in Alsace. France announces important gains in the Vosges. An Austro-Hungarian submarine on the 21st sunk the Japanese liner Yasaka Maru. All on board, including an American, were saved by a French gunboat. The United States Government, through its representatives, is investigating the sinking of this vessel. The Reichstag has voted a new war credit of 10,000,000,000 marks, the Socialist minority of nineteen opposing the vote. The British House of Commons on the 22d passed a bill providing for an increase of the army to 4,000,000. The life of the present Parliament on the same day was prolonged eight months. Lloyd George stated in the British Parliament the 20th that the success of the entente allies depended on the attitude of organized labor: He plead for unskilled workmen to be put on the work of skilled labor to operate new munitions factories, saying "Victory depends upon it." At the Greek elections the 19th, the mobilized soldiery had no opportunity to vote and the opposition to the crown refused to vote, hence the Government had little opposition. The Venizelos party holds that the election was illegal, and refused to participate therein.

REFLECTIONS---NUMBER 4

BY W. E. PEAK

GATHERING

When our late president took the lead of the church he found many who were very anxious to gather to Zion. This question was then, and is yet, generally discussed. It was very difficult for the Saints to understand just what to expect about it, or what was best for them to do. So the Lord spoke to them in 1873 and said:

Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11.

This was very satisfactory, with the exception of one point. That was, how far did "the regions round about" extend from Independence, Missouri.

Joseph answered the question several times by saying that the regions round about extended a day's travel, by the swiftest mode of travel from Independence. I accept his answer. I know of no one who is capable of giving a better one.

One can go from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to Independence in less than twenty-four hours. This places the western part of Pennsylvania in "the regions round about," and which is just as much the gathering place as Jackson County, Missouri.

The command was to be observed by the Saints "until it shall be otherwise given of me." The financial reverses that many have met with in Independence is a strong evidence of the truthfulness of this command, and shows the folly in disregarding it.

In 1909 the Lord spoke to us on the subject again as follows:

The conditions surrounding the work, the increase of the membership of the church, the increasing desire for gathering together, and the necessity existing for the obtaining of places for settlement in the regions round about, under the existing laws of the United States and specially the State of Missouri, require that the bishopric be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association in different localities where settlements may be made and may lawfully secure and hold property for themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when organized.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1.

The thought that stands out clear before us is, there was an "increasing desire for gathering together," among the Saints. All who were acquainted with the conditions in the church know that such was the case. There had been much said and written for several years on the gathering and the Order of Enoch. Some were wild for this organization. This increasing desire to gather and organize the Order of Enoch made it necessary to obtain "places for settlement in the regions round about," but nothing is said about the necessity of obtaining places in Zion,—"the central spot."

In verse five we have the following explanation: "It is well to understand that the term regions round about must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot."

The bishop was authorized to proceed to bring into existence "organizations," "under terms of association in different localities," in "the regions round about." The nature of the work of the Saints was such that these organizations could not be "in near proximity to each other"—verse six.

"The great variety of callings, avocations and professions" of the Saints would demand that farmers live in a farming community, the coal miners in coal regions, iron and tin workers in a country where such mills are located, etc.

This all harmonizes with Joseph's explanation of "the regions round about," and especially when we consider the fact that Kirtland, Ohio, will yet be a stake (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 27).

It makes no difference where you live in the regions round about, these organizations can be brought into existence, and you should so live that the place where you "occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord" (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8).

If we do this, the place where we live will be "redeemed of the Lord," and will constitute one of the "holy places" in which the Saints will stand when the long-predicted judgments come upon the earth. These places in the regions round about will be "redeemed" and made "holy" by the righteousness of the Saints, and will afford all the blessings and protection to the faithful in Pennsylvania, or in any other State in the regions round about, that can be obtained in Independence.

It is necessary for some to gather to Zion, "the central spot," but they are to be designated by the Lord, and are to go when appointed "by the presidency and the bishop of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2). And when they have been thus "appointed" to go to Zion, they should proceed according to the following:

And thus let those of whom I have spoken, be planted in the land of Zion, as speedily as can be, with their families, to do the things even as I have spoken.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 5.

This is the law to govern the gathering to Zion, but the elders and bishops may "counsel" and advise about the gathering into the "regions round about."

ELDERS' FAMILIES

Those elders who were to labor in Zion were to go "with their families." This shows that the Lord wanted to keep the elders with their families, and so directed. If the church failed to do as directed and suffered as a result, the fault is not with the Lord.

The elders that were to labor in Zion were to take their families with them and receive inheritances, which simply means places for them to live. But "the residue of the elders of my church," were not to obtain inheritances,—places for their families to live—in Zion, "for many years" (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 9). They were not to be in Zion, but in their missions with their families, and were to stay in these missions "for many years," or till their missionary work was done.

This is in harmony with all that the Lord ever said on the subject. The policies that the church should have pursued, not the policies it has pursued, were given in a very short time after the church was organized.

In September, 1830, the Lord outlines the policy for the missionaries and their families, when he spoke to Thomas B. Marsh, who was afterwards the president of the Twelve. He says:

Behold, verily I say unto you, Go from them [his family] only for a little time, and declare my word, and I will prepare a place for them; yea, I will open the hearts of the people and they will receive you.—Doctrine and Covenants 30: 3.

This is the Lord's way of carrying on missionary work, and for one I indorse his plan. Elder Marsh was to go from his family "only for a little time," to declare the word. The Lord would "prepare a place for his family, so he could do this. This is the only method we read of in the revelations for building up the church. Why not adopt it? This is in keeping with the statement that "the residue" of the elders were not to obtain inheritances in Zion for many years.

What would a young missionary want with a home in Independence, if his work were in Pennsylvania "for many years"? He would want his wife and little children so located that he would have to be away from them "only for a little time," and be able to return as the Lord directed Thomas B. Marsh, and the Lord is "no respecter of persons."

The Lord would "prepare a place for them," so he could do this. If we count the money that has been spent by this church in carfare in sending missionaries to and from their distant missions, and the amount that has been spent in keeping their families while the missionaries were at home, saying nothing about the time the missionary loses in the field from homesickness, we will find that we have wasted more money than it would cost to build parsonages in every district in the church.

Many of the missionaries have some money that they could invest in a parsonage, if they knew that they would labor in that district for a number of years. They could do this and live in the parsonage as their home, and if it should ever become necessary to change the missionary, the bishop could make proper arrangements about refunding his money.

But this policy is contrary to tradition, and I learned years ago that tradition is a hard thing to fight. It may take another generation before we will change, but the change will come.

SEVENTY AND TWELVE TO TRAVEL

The Seventy are "to travel continually" (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 44), and so are the Twelve.

The seventies are to build "up the church and regulate the affairs of the same in all nations," (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13) and so are the Twelve.

The main difference in the work of these two quorums is, the member of the twelve is to have several States or nations for a mission, while the seventy is, as a rule, to have only a few counties. This explains the difference in the degree of traveling they are to do. The seventy who has his family, not in Zion, but in his mission, if he can be away from them for a few weeks at a time, can do all the traveling that his calling demands.

But to keep him going all over the United States and have him preach only a few sermons here and there, is making a tourist or an exhibition out of him, instead of a missionary. He can neither build up nor regulate the church. There may be some in the church whose beauty and wisdom are such that it would pay the church to thus send them around to show the world what we have, but they do not belong to the Quorum of Seventy.

There are enough competent seventies to have one in charge of every district as the law provides. These seventies in charge could do the work of their calling—building and regulating the district—under direction of the Twelve, as the Twelve does under the Presidency. When they had been there long enough to understand the conditions, they could keep the Twelve in charge informed as to the needs and conditions of the districts. The twelve in his office with these reports would have the information needed and could give such directions as were necessary. He would know the parts of his mission that needed his presence, and could proceed accordingly. This is the policy given by the Lord and will be enforced some day. Then it will not be necessary for the Twelve to attend every district conference, nor to travel too much. As a church we will suffer till every man is recognized in his calling. This is the only way proper "confidence" can be had.

The twelve passes through a district, and as he is a visitor everybody goes to meeting. He is kindly greeted and listened to, receives his donations, and passes on. It is quite doubtful if he learns the real condition of the branches during his short visit. If he does, he has not the time to adopt a policy and carry it into effect. All he can do is give instructions according to his understanding.

But the seventy should stay there. He becomes acquainted and knows the conditions and the needs of each branch—that is if he has been left there long enough to find out the conditions. And if he has not sufficient understanding to formulate a suitable policy, he can report the conditions to the Twelve and obtain counsel and advice.

It is true, there are in some branches a few who soon tire of a missionary and want another. They are always anxious to hear a new minister, but soon tire of the one they have and clamor for another. These would tire of the Twelve just as soon as they do the seventy, if he were to stay as long. To suit them a new man would have to be sent every few months at least.

But even that class can be helped, and it is necessary for the missionary to be with them perhaps for years to learn how to deal with them, and to carry out the plan of instructions necessary to raise them to a higher plane. They cannot be helped in a few days or weeks; it takes time, and the one who has been with them long enough to understand them should have the time to give them the needed experience and instructions.

The faithful workers soon learn the missionary, and he learns them; each tries to adapt himself to the other, that harmony may prevail and success come to the work of God. Then when this understanding has been obtained, it is folly to send the missionary away before he has had time to do any more than to get ready to work.

The longer men work together the better they can succeed. There are gossipers and faultfinders in some of the branches, it is true. These will not be satisfied with what is being done, and they must tell it all to the one in charge when they see him. But of course one of the Twelve would not pay any attention to a gossip. He knows that a man must be heard before his work is condemned, and he will proceed to counsel with his colaborer, the seventy. Then they can formulate plans to meet the emergencies, and save even the gossip and the faultfinder.

When a missionary has been away from home for months in a community, the nonmembers know it and it makes a bad impression on them. They look on us as worse than the Catholic priests, for we have families and they do not. They have the same opinion of us personally that they have of the priest, besides considering us cruel for neglecting our wives and children. And it is cruel to thus treat a wife and children. This closes many homes against us.

We speak of it as a sacrifice for the Lord. So it is. But an unnecessary sacrifice is not accepted. This is illustrated by the Hindoo mother when she gives her child to the crocodiles. The Lord does not demand, nor does he accept any sacrifice that injures the ones who make it. For one to stay in his mission so long that it injures himself or his family in any way is doing wrong, and he will suffer for it. His sacrifice may be made in good faith but is unwise, and it is not accepted. "It has pleased the Father to accept many of the sacrifices of his people" (Doctrine and Covenants 124:8). This explains the principle: Many of the sacrifices of his people were accepted, but not all of them. Some sacrifices had been made that God did not accept of. They were not what he required, or else not made in the proper spirit. Is it possible that some of us missionaries left our homes and were gone for months because so appointed, and this great sacrifice was not accepted because God knew we should have been near home so we could help our families?

If our families were located in our missions where we could be home when needed, and yet be able to continue our missionary work while at home, the church would have our service all the time. And when we were away from home in the district we could be back every few weeks, then the nonmembers would have no reasons for accusing us.

An elder can do just as much missionary work at home when his family is located in his field as he could if he were at the same place alone staying with the Saints, and most of us can do more. I know this by experience. The Saints in a branch could defray the expense of the missionary when he was living with his family, just as well as they can when he is along, living with them, and it would be much better every way.

Yes, the elders are to "go without purse or scrip." That simply means that the Saints where they go are to supply them, for the Lord said:

Whoso receives you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple; by this you may know my disciples.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:16.

The majority of our Saints understand this and should be encouraged to live according to it. I am just as much satisfied that this principle of helping the missionary will bring blessings to the one who does it as I am that baptism or prayer will. We missionaries can relate many cases we have seen prove it. And the Saint that fails or refuses to comply with this part of the gospel will suffer loss, both in this world and in the one to come.

Those few in the branch who usually bear the missionary's expenses could and would help defray them if his home were in their branch, just the same as if he were there alone. Those who do this are Christ's "disciples." You will find them doing all they can along this line, and when the missionary's wife or child is sick you will find them giving a helping hand.

In conversation with an aged sister who had raised a large family,—not one of them was attending the meetings and some of them had disgraced themselves,—she referred to another sister about her age that had raised several children, and whose daughters were leading workers in the branch and district and said, "The elders always made their home there, and their influence kept her children in the church."

She was worrying over the condition of her family and thought the elders had been partial by not staying with her more. The truth was she did not want to be bothered with the elders, nor to spend the money that caring for them would take, when her family was growing up. They had never paid tithing nor helped defray the elders' or the branch expenses. They never thought they were able,—always too hard run. They had sown to the wind and were reaping the whirlwind.

We listened to her pitiful and melancholy story and wished we could help her, but there was no help. As far as her case was concerned, "The summer was passed, the harvest was over"; the sorrows of neglected opportunities were being reaped, and there was an abundant crop.

TEMPERANCE CRUSADE ADVANCING

A press dispatch from Liverpool, dated August 7, says that new and drastic orders have been issued in that city for the regulation of the sale of liquor in saloons. One of the provisions of the new order prohibits treating; another prohibits the giving of credit for liquor, and the third limits the sale of liquor to five and one half hours a day. Thus the cause of temperance marches on; every limitation, every reduction of the hours during which liquor can be sold is a step in advance; it is one way of measuring the strength of the opposition to alcohol. The prohibition of sales or credit is also to be commended. After a man has taken enough liquor to stupify him he is not in a condition to contract a debt; he doesn't know what he is doing. A drunken man is in no condition to defend himself against any bill that is presented.

But the prohibition against treating will be even more effective because much of the drinking is the outcome of treating. In fact it is no unusual thing for a saloon keeper to do the treating, if necessary, until the patron gets to the point where he will spend his money freely.

And why should we not have treating prohibited in this country? It is within the power of Congress to fix the conditions under which liquor shall be sold by those who obtain a government license—or, not to offend against the niceties of language, those who pay the internal revenue tax levied against the liquor dealers. There are some State laws against treating, but the trouble is that they put the penalty on the man who treats instead of putting it on the saloon keeper who permits it in his establishment. It is the saloon keeper who profits most—he is really the only one who does profit.

If Congress desires to do something that will have immediate results of good, let it provide for the forfeiture of the license of any holder of a Government receipt who permits treating in his place of business.

And while Congress is legislating it might just as well make selling on credit a cause for forfeiture of license.

Congress should also require publication in advance of notice of application for Government license; that would shut off the issue of licenses in dry territory.

And why not compel a monthly, or at least quarterly, report of all license holders. It would be instructive to know at stated intervals, first, how much liquor is sold; second the price collected for liquor sold; third, the kind of liquor sold; and fourth, the alcoholic content of the liquor sold. It would be no hardship upon the holder of the license to make such reports, and the information would be vastly helpful in the consideration of the liquor question. National prohibition is impossible until three fourths of the States are ready to ratify a constitutional amendment, but it only requires a majority of the two houses and the concurrence of the President to legislate on the subject, and the suggestions above made outline only a few of the many things that may be done to lessen the evils of the traffic in alcoholic drinks.—W. J. Bryan, in the Commoner.

OUST VICE BUSINESS

Owners and agents of buildings occupied by more than two hundred tenants for immoral purposes are officially reported to have ousted them since the injunction and abatement law went into effect on July 1. So far it has not been necessary to invoke the law against owners. Some of them have invoked it against tenants. It will be invoked, if necessary, against the recalcitrant.

So far the new law is justifying in Chicago the predictions made for it on the basis of experience elsewhere. It is cleaning out haunts of vice which were heretofore very difficult to reach. It deprives the vice promoters of their strongest ally, the "vested property rights" of owners either negligent or indifferent to the effects on public morals of the uses made of their property.

Of course it may be said that the vice promoters and their pitiable human "stock" are still here. Doubtless it will be said, as it has been, that the only effect of such "cleaning out" measures is just a "scattering out."

No business can live without well-known and recognized places in which to do business. It must have a "market place" where buyers and sellers know they can find each other. Deprived of this it ceases to be a commerce and becomes an isolated personal act. The injunction and abatement law is not, except incidentally, an attack on personal sin. It is an attack on the vice business as a business. And it seems to be working.—Chicago Herald, August 14, 1915.

Margery

It was late when Burton returned. His wife awaited him with cheeks glowing and eyes sparkling.

"I thought you would never get home!" She could scarcely take time for the accustomed kiss of greeting. "I've been over to Washburn's to see the new baby. It's the dearest little thing, and so beautiful. It has great blue and dark fluffy hair." She clasped and unclasped her hands excitedly. "You don't know how I wanted to bring it home with me!"

Burton smiled at her a little sadly, and she knew his thought before he spoke. "This is a queer world," he said. "Little ones would be so welcome here, and Washburn doesn't want children."

"She doesn't either. She's perfectly horrid about it. When I made so much ado about the baby, she said she wished it had been mine. Oh, she couldn't think of giving it away, of course, but she said it had better never have come, because they already had three too many. I couldn't say that if I had a dozen!"

"Of course you couldn't, you model little wife!" and he laughed at her indignation. "But isn't dinner waiting? It seems to me I smell something mighty appetizing."

"It's the roast. Yes, everything's ready this long while, but I was so busy thinking of that baby, I forgot everything else."

When the meal was finished, he tried to read to her as she washed the dishes, but he was not in the mood for it, so he laid down his paper and remarked, "I guess that baby has upset me, too. I can't help thinking how much we miss by not having children."

An idea struck the little wife, and she stopped still with a plate half dried for a minute before she exclaimed, "Oh, James, I've been thinking! It seems no babies ever are coming to our house. Why can't we adopt one?"

If she expected James to jump at the idea, she was doomed to disappointment. It was a little while before he answered her.

"No, Elizabeth, it wouldn't do. I could idolize children of my own, but I could not take another man's child and treat it as mine. I suppose I ought to be able to do so, but, somehow, I'm not that kind. Don't you know, every trait the child developed, of which we did not approve, would only bring to us the thought that our child would never have been so, and, really, Elizabeth, I'm afraid I would be unjust."

"But you can love any of them so," she protested. "I could simply worship that Washburn baby in an hour, if I knew it were mine to keep."

"Of course you could while it was a babe in arms. But children grow up and become far different from innocent, prattling babies."

Elizabeth was silenced, but not convinced.

For the first five happy years the Burtons spent together they did not miss children very much. They were too busy enjoying each other. Then, too, there were payments to make on the little cottage, and furnishings to buy, so that when they thought of children at all, it was with a sense of gratitude that none came until expenses were lighter or his salary larger. But as the years went by and the home became their own in fact and in deed, as his salary was advanced, and luxuries began to come to them, with it all came an increasing sense of loneliness that was heightened with the advent of a new baby in the neighborhood. Yet this was the first time it had occurred forcibly to either of them that there are children without homes as well as homes without children.

"You know, Elizabeth," Burton said in the hope of further convincing her, "I have always thought of a daughter named Margery ever since my poor little only sister died. I remember I told the other boys in the barn loft where we had stolen to cry after the little white funeral, that when I grew up and married, I meant to have a baby girl and name her for little sister, and I've thought about it that way ever since. And I couldn't call another man's child Margery."

However, that night he pitied her with all his heart as she knelt by her bed, for he knew by the tremor of her frame that she was praying the prayer of Hannah—only Elizabeth was praying for a daughter.

But as the days went by and the Washburn baby grew and thrived, she was almost content with her interest in its development, and although James seldom saw the child, he grew to look forward, just a little, to his wife's evening account of its charms and sweetness.

When it was a little less than a year old, Elizabeth met her husband one night with tears, large and unshed, behind her long lashes. He had no time to ask the trouble before it was told and the tears were shed. "The Washburn baby is so ill! The doctor says that unless a change comes as suddenly as its illness, it cannot live. And he won't let anyone see it—not even me, and the nurse is so strong and forbidding, I'm afraid she will not be tender with it."

"Calm your fears, Dear Heart," he soothed her as he held her close. "Nurses are wise. They know even better what to do than loving mothers and friends. And she will be tender."

"Do you really think so?" She sought comfort from him even though she knew that he knew little about it.

"I know she will. Come to dinner and you'll feel better."

But Elizabeth was too troubled to eat and retired early, although it was to toss upon a restless pillow.

It was a moonless night and the darkness was thick and foreboding. The whole weight of it seemed to rest upon Elizabeth's heart each time she awoke and looked across at the light showing faintly from the Washburn window.

Toward morning, worry and fatigue conquered, and he fell into a deep sleep unbroken by dreams. But the subconscious mind was alert, and when the doorbell pealed violently, she was out of bed in an instant, sobbing. "The Washburn baby! Oh, the Washburn baby!"

In an incredibly short time she had dressed and opened the door. Only the heavy blackness met her, but when her eyes fell to the step she cried out, "Oh, James, come here!" Instinctively she knew what was in the fluffy basket at her feet.

By the time James reached her, yawning and sleepy-eyed, she had found beneath the coverlets the baby—very tiny, and very sound asleep. "Oh, you little darling! You sweet little innocent waif! Why don't your folks want you?" she was whispering tenderly to the little outcast.

"It's plain enough why nobody wants it," muttered James, "but I don't see why they brought it here. We don't want the refuse of wickedness."

"How can you speak so about it!" she cried indignantly. "It is so helpless." She caught it hungrily to her bosom, and the Washburn baby was forgotten in her new-found joy, and fear.

She ventured timidly, "It would seem truly ours, coming to us this way. Do let us keep it, James. Oh, I could love it so!" and the arms, empty so long, clung with passionate entreaty about the little form.

All through her ministrations to the newcomer she plead for it, but James was obdurate. Yet, through it all, he was devouring the sight of her in this new phase of her womanhood. Truly, she was meant to be a mother, for there was no awkwardness about her movements with the child. Unconsciously, she made a picture, the like of which men have paid thousands to preserve upon canvas.

But the child was not his own. The thought rankled within him and would not be stilled. Indulgent as he had always been with his wife's whims, this was one impulse which he dared not sanction. For the undeveloped traits of that bit of helpless humanity might prematurely whiten Elizabeth's rich brown hair, and change her everbursting smile of gladness into a rare and feeble one of sorrow. So, hard as it would be for her, the child must go.

The next morning, when Elizabeth begged that the baby be not sent to those "unfeeling boards of charity which deal in children as with commodities," but, rather, that they try to find some really nice people who would take the child and love it as their very own, James saw no harm in yielding that much to her wishes.

So day after day found the baby still with the Burtons. He was too busy to search for homes for indigent children, and although Elizabeth really asked a number of people to take the little thing, it was so evident to them what the agony of the parting would be to her, that they all kindly suggested she keep it herself.

"But my husband," she would tell them tremulously, "he isn't willing."

"He will be," they would console her, "when he learns to love her. Such a sweet, pretty baby as she is, will soften any man's heart in time. Just wait and see."

That such would happen was the fondest hope of Elizabeth's heart, but she knew her husband to be so truly a man of his word, that the hope had little encouragement to grow. However, she kept her charge so clean and dainty, and the child was so physically perfect that she felt it would be a hard heart, indeed, that would force the little thing from loving arms out into a cold and forbidding world.

James, in spite of himself, began to feel this, and in self-defense would tell Elizabeth, sternly, that if she did not find a place for the child at once he must look up the charity board. Then Elizabeth would vow in her heart and promise with her lips to do her best.

He talked little of evenings, now. He pretended to be deeply absorbed in an historical work he had purchased, but he knew the nightly program of feeding and disrobing the interloper better than he knew the causes of the fall of Rome. After all, it was more interesting.

"I suppose you'll be giving her a name, soon, won't you?" he asked one evening, and, as if in expectation, the baby pushed aside her bottle and looked at him steadily. That amused him so much he scarcely heard his wife's timid reply, "No, I shall not name her. The people who take her will wish to give her a name."

From that time on the evening reading was neglected, and he began to play with the baby. Timidly, at first, and half sheepishly, but growing bolder as time went on.

Now, Elizabeth grew brave enough to tell him of her cute ways through the day, of how good she was and how seldom she cried, yet never mentioning the hope that was beginning to grow in her heart.

At times he still asked of her success in finding a home for the baby, but at far widening intervals. He would not own it even to himself, but he was conscious that down at the depths of his feelings, he would miss dreadfully the little snowy, frilly mass—now beginning to sit alone—that he nightly found in the small carriage in the dining room. Her eyes were so big and blue, and her hair, yet but a hint of the coming glory, was like silken gold threads, even now curling up bewitchingly over her head. All this he thought of in spare moments at the office. And one evening she had laughed at him, almost aloud. "Say," he said, "she will be a beauty by and by!"

It had been many nights since he had questioned his wife about the home hunting, and the hope in her heart had been growing larger. So this night of all nights, when he came in with eyes first of all for the baby, she slipped into the kitchen and left him alone with the foundling.

"Goo! Goo!" the baby cried at him, and shook her fists invitingly. Never before had he held her, but to-night there was no resisting her charms. He seized her and tossed her above his head exultantly. "You fine little girl!" he said.

Elizabeth, standing in the shadow, pressed her hands against her heart to still its beating. Hope was almost grown heartfelt now, and forthwith it swelled until it seemed it would surely burst the muscled walls.

"Our sweet little baby girl! Where's mamma, Margery?"

Letter Department

MOUNT WASHINGTON, MISSOURI, November 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: I welcome the HERALD again. Its weekly visit is like the coming of a dear friend. For some months I have been without the HERALD. My address was not permanent and I did not renew my subscription until I became located. Now at last we are in our home at Mount Washington, a little station between Kansas City and Independence, about four or five miles from the Stone Church, on the electric line.

We have a fine branch at Mount Washington, so I attend here, although I go often to the Stone Church. My heart swells with gratitude to God that I am permitted to have a home in Zion. Our little branch is growing by baptisms and letters. The Saints are moving in. Elder Lentel is our president. He is a man full of the Spirit, one whose very presence is uplifting and ennobling.

I want to say to the dear Saints of North Dakota and Minnesota whose friendship I have formed, that they are to accept this as an invitation to our home at any time. We would be glad to welcome any of them.

In the HERALD of November 10, I noted an article by Brother W. A. Sinclair on hot drinks. May God help us to always do his will in this regard.

The gospel grows dearer as time goes by. Oh, how my heart goes out to the loved ones left when we came away, that they too may be gathered to Zion, and this gospel go into all the earth and fill each heart as it has done mine.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. H. HEISZLER.

MASON TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA, November 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am truly thankful I am a Latter Day Saint, and can say with assurance that I know this work is true. I have never regretted the step I have taken. As the days and hours go by I realize more and more the need of faithful and righteous living.

I have been greatly blessed all my life in many ways. I was sick about three years ago. The doctor gave me up, saying I could not get well. He said that I had to go through an operation; that I had appendicitis in a critical form. He feared that I could not go through the operation on account of my heart. I wished Brother Ullom to administer to me, and as he was coming to my grandfather's house, the Lord directed him to our place. He administered to me and I began mending right away, and in a little while was up and around.

This shows what the Lord can do when we are of strong faith. He can help us if we do his will. He has said he would reward those who diligently serve him, and I know he will do so.

Brother Ullom is a faithful man, and kind to everyone. He is a noble servant of the Lord. He will be missed by us when he is called away.

My uncle Thomas Downs and wife were baptized at Brother Joseph Maxon's at Bellsow, West Virginia, October 17, by Brother Ullom. We are few in number, and realize that perhaps it means hard work to live up to the work of the blessed Master, but the Lord says where there are a few come together he will be in their midst. Brother Ullom preached eight spiritual sermons and we had a social meeting on Sunday the 24th. There was a good spirit present, the Lord being in our midst, which was strengthening to us.

There are twelve of us: my father and mother, three sisters, myself, my uncle, P. S. Rodabaugh, and wife, my grandfather and grandmother, and Thomas Downs and wife. Two of my sisters are married but their husbands are not members of the church. My little sister died June 3, 1914. Our home seemed empty when she went away, and it seemed as though I could not say, but the Lord knows best.

I am sixteen years of age. I have been in this work for over two years. My sister and I were visiting Brother Rush and the Saints at Vanvoorhis, and had the privilege of being in two good meetings. There were Saints there I had never met before. I was glad to meet them. We regretted to part, but we had to leave each other. If we live faithful we will not have to part when we meet in the other world.

My sister Gertie is afflicted. I ask the Saints to pray for her. If any of the brethren or sisters wish to write I will answer. I enjoy hearing from the Saints.

Pray for me that I may ever prove faithful.

Your sister,
HANNAH EDITH RODABAUGH.

The corner-stone in Truth is laid,
The guardian walls of Honor made;
The roof of Faith is built above,
The fire upon the hearth of Love;
Though rains descend and loud winds call,
This happy house can never fall.

News from Missions

Central Nebraska

My efforts the present year in the Central Nebraska District have been enfeebled by sickness in my own person, and since my recovery, in that of my wife, but I do not think I love the work less on account of these experiences.

Immediately on my return from the General Conference I was called to Meadville in Keyapaha County, to preach the funeral of Sister Smith, the stepmother of our beloved fellow missionary, W. A. Smith. After the funeral he and I held a few meetings at Union church, after which, during the month of June, I labored at Clearwater and a country place twelve or more miles northeast of that town, in company with J. W. Smith, of the missionary force; also at Meadow Grove and at Norfolk. Five persons were baptized, mostly through the efforts of Brother Smith.

Leaving Norfolk, July 7, I parted company with Brother Smith, he going to Springfield, South Dakota, and I to Creighton, Nebraska. I was kindly entertained in the homes of J. R. Jones and Milom Thompson while preaching at a school-house some five or six miles out of town to the southwest, and near the home of Mr. Thompson. Brother H. N. Pierce has since held meetings at the same place with good interest, as per his letter in a recent number of the HERALD. We hope for some additions there.

Leaving Creighton, July 15, I visited Bonesteel, South Dakota, preaching but once, though I visited some of the Saints in Gregory County. I went home sick July 20. During the time of my sickness the district conference was held at Clearwater, and was attended by Elders Joshua Carlile and Walter M. Self who held meetings previous to and following the conference, with good interest. Later Brother Self visited Foster, Nebraska, where lives Brother S. J. Lynn and wife, and Brother Frank Hancock and wife, the daughter of Brother Lynn. Through the efforts of these brethren a very good series of meetings was held in the Presbyterian church at that place.

After my recovery I was called again to Keyapaha County to preach the funeral of Mrs. Hartman. While she was not a member of the church, she was very favorable to us, and has one daughter in the church. I held one meeting after the funeral at the Union church, and would have continued longer in that locality, but I left my wife only just able to be out of bed, so hastened home.

While about home I tried to do what I could for the good of the work there, assisting in Sunday school, preaching on Sunday in the church, etc.

I came to Comstock, November 10, and have been here ever since. Was joined November 27 by Brother W. M. Self. We are doing what we can to encourage the Saints and interest those outside the ark of safety. The Saints have a nice little church building and quite a nice little congregation when they all come.

I wish you much success in your labor of love. I appreciate the HERALD, and no department of it more than the Editorial Department.

In gospel bonds,

LEVI GAMET.

Eastern Maine

This is a beautiful balmy day along the coast of Maine. Just enough breeze to push the vessels gracefully upon the ocean blue. While the children are at school and wife calling upon a neighbor, and while the warm sunbeams come into my window, and peaceful quiet reigns, my soul is filled with thankfulness for the gospel of peace and good will to man which some day will have its full sway among the nations now bleeding and struggling in the terrible grip of war.

As the ever eventful year 1915 is soon to close its doors upon the awful inhumanity of man, I am reminded I have been receiving much and contributing nothing to your columns. Not because I have had nothing to report of work done or sweet associations enjoyed, for truly the last year has been replete with both. So I put myself on record as saying that the year so near closed has been the banner one in my ministerial experiences, not so much for the number of baptisms,—for they are generally the echo of previous labor,—but for the growth and development of the Saints of God, and the different lines of work we have so nicely under way, and which ere long are bound to yield bountiful harvest.

In May I started for my field in Eastern Maine, stopping off and attending the conference at Stonington, my former field, meeting with and enjoying the association of Saints in a good conference. From there in company with Brother John F. Sheehy I sailed up the coast and held a few profitable meetings.

At Corea a little band of faithful Saints have recently been organized and have a handsome house of worship, in which we held a very pleasant conference last October. They show their faith by their works in more ways than one. Lobster fishing is the chief business there, and the brethren seem to think that this much-sought-after delicacy was not put in the mighty deep just to satisfy fleshly desires, so from this industry we receive a nice sum of tithing to help feed and clothe the less fortunate ones.

During the summer we were blessed with a visit from our well-known minister in charge, Brother Griffiths. He did much good by his peculiar way of getting after things.

With pleasure we have noted a big improvement in the district along different lines, chiefly in the Sunday school. Last spring I felt strongly impressed to organize a Sunday school association, which we did at the excellent conference at Kennebec, with our hustling J. F. Sheehy president. From this association we expected big things, but the reality far exceeded the anticipation in the convention held at Jonesport the latter part of October.

The Sunday school received an impetus we have never seen before. The Jonesport school has made a gain of nearly twenty-five per cent. We have talent in this district, both in and out of the church, which is rarely seen anywhere, and best of all, they are all willing to take their part.

Brother David Joy has been ordained an elder and now presides over the branch at Addison. He succeeds Brother N. M. Kelley, a grand, faithful old landmark of the work in these parts, who by reason of impaired hearing and sight, was compelled to lay down the armor he loved so well to use. He has a well-earned reward awaiting him.

Our sweet singers, under the leadership of Brother Herbert Rogers, are contributing greatly toward the success attending our efforts. We are now trying to get in line with the general choir movement. Our choir has greatly improved in this branch lately. Have made quite an addition from the ranks of the young.

It is helpful to a preacher to have standing by his side, with sweet songs of Zion, nearly fifty voices, young and middle aged. We are looking for good things from this field of church work. Many are much interested in our message in these parts. Our large church is filled every Sunday night. There is very little doing in the other churches here, as we, by all pulling together, have about captured the place. In every undertaking we succeed. People are now taking notice of us who never before did so.

I have good times with my Bible class, with from thirty to forty men—last Sunday forty-one. How good it is to see such a large body of big, good-natured, husky men sitting together studying the word of God, instead of lounging around the bar-room or gambling places. Two weeks ago they gave me a pleasant surprise by presenting me with eighteen dollars. I appreciate their good will as much as the money.

We will soon have our can opening and social, proceeds of which go toward seating the handsome upper room of our new church. We expect to realize about two hundred dollars from this. We have started a busy bee society among the children, under the efficient leadership of Sister Sophia Dobbins. Sophia's big family are doing fine. They have undertaken to raise money to furnish the pulpit. It will cost one hundred thirty dollars, and this we are getting at half price, through a good friend who deals in such material. The busy little hands have already over one hundred dollars, and will soon have the balance. It is wonderful what a little effort can do when properly directed. In all departments, about all we need to insure success is good, faithful leaders to inspire the workers onward, and with a system by which results will come.

Then we have a band of willing workers, among the sisters, who have contributed much to the success of the work here. They are not only willing in name, but in deeds. They will give their annual fair the 16th of this month. They usually realize about two hundred dollars from this. It pays to get busy and work together.

We organized a Religio at Jonesport four weeks ago, with ninety-six charter members; it has increased, till last evening there were one hundred twenty-eight. A great many outsiders are becoming interested. We try to arrange our program to favorably appeal to both young and old, members and nonmembers.

Am ably assisted in arrangement of the program by Sisters Sophia Dobbins and Grace Moran. We have in Sister Jessie York a most efficient secretary, who is contributing much toward the unexpected success attending the Religio. Boston Branch may well lament their loss of Jessie. With her, our ever faithful sisters, Annie Smith and Mamie Cummings, are on the lookout committee. Brother and Sister W. E. Rogers and Edith Dobbins are the good literature committee, and we are working with them to make this a power for good.

Systematic distributing of our literature is the one great way to "warn our neighbors." We are looking for some big things from these earnest workers.

Sisters F. J. Ebeling, Bertha Rumsey and Lulu Woodward are the social committee who will furnish proper amusements for the young from time to time. Charley Cummings, a growing young man in the church, whose soul is consecrated to the work, is our editor. He is the right man in the right place. He amuses and edifies the Religians each Tuesday night with his spicy and newsy paper. It is a feature with us. All Religios should have a good editor.

Brother Sherman Woodward is treasurer, and with his associates, George Woodward and Ralph Rogers, will look after the poor and afflicted. Sister Maude Woodward is superintendent of the home department and is anxious to take the good work to the aged and shut-ins. Brother Lewis Hinkley is superintendent of temperance.

Now with all this force at work, with consecrated hearts, the work must move and will grow. For we are determined to have only those who will work. We have no use for the lay members. We don't like the term. We prefer nonofficials. The lay member's place is in the graveyard, not in the church.

We must not forget to mention the great work Sister Lizzie Smith is doing as superintendent of the home department of the Sunday school association. She has happily surprised us by the way she takes hold of her work, and the joy she receives in return she says fully recompenses her for the effort put forth. And so will it be with anyone who does likewise. She has an auto, and does not stop at the burning of a little gasoline to get after members for her department. She is encouraged at all times by her good husband, Frank Smith.

Aside from my three meetings on Sundays at Jonesport, I hold regular meetings at Jonesboro, and West Jonesport, which are proving a great success, and I am about to open up at several other places.

I have been so busy I have had only one night to myself in the last month, but this is the only way I can be happy. I now have my family with me, the first time in all my life I have had them so near my work. It is a great treat for me. They like the place and people, and are entering into the work with me. Brother Peak, you are right when you say the elders should be located near their families. We are very comfortably situated, and the good, hospitable Saints are taking good care of us, seeing to it that we lack nothing. In return, we will do all we can to give value received.

How beautiful it is to all cooperate in the great work of God: you help me and I help you: bear each other's burdens, and thus fulfill the royal law. I have never been in a place where so many members as well as nonmembers, have taken such an interest in our work. We have a large crop of children growing up, whom we hope to see take hold of the work in the near future. My eyes and heart are on them. Save your children by pushing the auxiliaries.

Last evening a representative of the National Congress of Mothers organized a parents' association, an organization to improve the morals of our public schools, by interesting the parents. Your humble servant was elected vice president. Through this we will be brought in contact with the "best" people of the town, and will see to it that we shall never let go an opportunity to drop a word relative to that which lies nearest to our heart—the angel's message.

The gospel has never seemed any dearer to me than now, and I have never been more enthusiastic for its advancement. There is nothing on earth that brings such joy and contentment as the privilege of working with God for humanity. And for these privileges I am thankful. F. J. EBELING.

News from Branches

Cleveland, Ohio

Cleveland Branch has had a week's meetings by William Lewis, of Cameron, Missouri. A good many were in attendance and some interest was manifested by the visitors. Brother Lewis explains the gospel work in a practical, convincing manner, with many personal experiences.

Our library is now complete, except a couple of books being reprinted.

Pastor Russell has visited Cleveland to deliver a sermon on Armageddon. In closing he said Armageddon was a stone cut out of the mountain. This from a Bible student seems strange.

Two Cleveland reverends argued in the following manner concerning Adam and Eve: We quote from the Cleveland press, November 6: "Of course the whole story is one of tradition," said Reverend Rowe, of Wade Park Methodist church. Reverend Daniel F. Brady, of the Congregational Church, said, "If there were any such persons, they left the Garden of Eden for better conditions; but nobody now has any idea there was an Adam and Eve."

This kind of inconsistent twaddle by our learned neighbors makes us rejoice to hear an able exponent of gospel truth, like Brother Lewis.

What is truth? It is a correct arrangement of facts without error.

Wichita, Kansas

The branch at Wichita has approximately one hundred members. We meet at 116 North Elizabeth, in the "Carpenter shop," "shack" or "tabernacle," according to the viewpoint you have of it. Come and worship with us when you are passing, and we will give you a cordial welcome.

Saints in southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma tell us they are watching the HERALD for news from Wichita, so we beg space for an occasional report. Announcements of our church services are made every week in the Eagle and Beacon. A few have found us that way.

One brother found Sister Reed's name in the Blue Hope, hunted her address in the city directory, called at her home one Sunday morning, and learned the location of the tabernacle. He worshiped with us that morning, and has since moved his family here. This is Brother and Sister C. E. Nelson and son Paul, from Tulsa, Oklahoma, who are proving a great help in the branch. Brother Nelson, who holds the office of deacon, preached his first sermon a few weeks ago, making a most excellent effort. The brother speaks with ease, arranges his subject logically, and in time will prove an able defender of the faith. Both he and Sister Nelson give valuable aid in singing, and with their son are a welcome addition to our number.

Elder E. L. Barraclough is our branch president. Four years ago we found him presiding over a little handful numbering about twenty-five; now we have nearly a hundred. The brother, though young, is proving a father to his flock, visiting the Saints in their homes, ministering to the sick, comforting those who come to him for comfort, and calling all to repentance and obedience.

His faithful companion, four years ago, was greatly afflicted. She was told in the gift of prophecy that because of her righteous desires, and her faithfulness in ministering to the wants of the missionaries who visited Wichita from time to time, that in due time she should recover. To-day she is in comfortable health, attends the services of the branch, teaches the beginners class in Sunday school, and still entertains the district missionaries.

Brother and Sister J. N. Madden, with Sister Madden's mother, Sister Flickinger, will spend the winter in Wichita, and are a most welcome addition to our number. Brother and Sister Madden were formerly from Kansas City, Kansas, and more recently from Vera, Oklahoma, where they labored in the mission field. Sister Madden is district superintendent of the Sunday school home department in Spring River District. Her correspondents may address her at the post office, general delivery.

Brother and Sister McKnight, from Oklahoma, have located in Wichita, and having been isolated for a long time are enjoying the services as only the isolated can. We are glad to have them with us.

Since the reunion last August our attendance at Sunday school has increased from twenty-five to fifty, and a junior bible class of ten interesting young people has been formed. Four of these are nonmembers of the church, and all seem interested. Sister P. L. Brockway is our superintendent, Sister Nita Reed assistant. These sisters are diligent and faithful, and the work is prospering in their hands.

IDA H. STEWART.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN MONTANA.—November 20 and 21, Andes. Reports: Culbertson 76; Fairview 26. Eli Bronson was ordained an elder. Preaching by Thomas Leitch, J. E. Wildermuth, J. C. Page. Delegates to General Conference: J. C. Page, Lester Bronson, and Irene Page alternates. Amendments to district rules proposed subject to action of next conference.
 Chester Constance, secretary, Vida, Montana.

LAMONI STAKE.—Hiteman, Iowa, November 13 and 14.
 Statistical reports read from all branches except Lone Rock, showing: Number at last report 3,107. Gain by baptism 80, by letter 72, total 152. Lost by removal 67, by death 14, total 81, net gain 71, present number 3,178. Ordination of David Taylor, Centerville Branch, priest, and Charles E. Morey, Pleasanton Branch, elder, approved. Ward Branch was by motion disorganized. As a solution of the matter referred to the conference by the stake reunion, the following was adopted: "Whereas, the stake reunion has been ordered by action of the stake conference, and is therefore an authorized gathering for the furtherance of the work of the church within the stake, and whereas, the work of the reunion should be best directed by the reunion assembly, and whereas the stake by its conference should have the ready direction of all the work of the stake, including that of the reunion, be it therefore resolved, that hereafter the stake meet in special conference during the reunion of each year, at such time as may be appointed by proper authority, to attend to any and all business that may properly come before said special conference, necessary for the conducting of the reunion.
 And be it further resolved, that this conference concur in the appointment of a reunion for 1916, and sustain the present reunion committee in providing for same." Time and place of next conference left to stake presidency. On November 14 David Taylor was ordained to the office of priest by M. M.
 Turpen and John F. Garver. C. I. Carpenter, secretary.

MOBILE.—October 23, Vanclave, Mississippi. Reports: Bluff Creek, Theodore. Committee was appointed, consisting of branch presidents and bishop's agent, to investigate the purchasing of land at Vanclave. Owing to the burning of the church, the conference was not as good as it might have been, as some reports were destroyed, and some time was lost in selecting and arranging a place to hold meetings. We all felt discouraged to a certain extent, but all felt desirous of making the conference the best possible under the circumstances. In this respect we were not disappointed. The preaching by Brethren Slover and Warr was of a high order.
 Sunday school and Religio convention was held Friday previous, being among the best we have ever had. Reports from schools and locals are encouraging. The next conference will be at Bay Minette, convention, day previous. Edna Cochran, secretary.

SPRING RIVER.—November 6 and 7, Pittsburg, Kansas. Reports: Pittsburg 184, Webb City 248, Purcell 65, Traverse 39, Weir City 122, Joplin 328, Vera 133, Scammon 103. Petition for ordination of D. L. Lewis elder, referred to minister in charge and district presidency. Petition for branch organization at Arma, Kansas, referred to minister in charge and district presidency. Notice presented that general revision of district by-laws will be moved at next conference. A.
 C. Martin ordained elder by F. M. Sheehy and Charles Fry.
 Two prayer meetings were held. Preaching by F. M. Sheehy, Charles Fry, T. C. Kelley, A. C. Martin. Adjourned to meet at Scammon, Kansas, March 4. Mollie Davis, secretary.

SPOKANE.—Reports: Spokane 311, Sagle 86, Gifford 40,
 Leah 20. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts, $534.53; expenditures, $528.82. Tent committee reported on hand $23.
 New committee, S. M. Gray, W. W. Wood, V. L. Gunter.
 Reunion arranged for July 1 to 9, in vicinity of Sagle, Idaho, committee being H. P. Jenkins, J. L. Detrick, Oliver Turnbull, L. P. Summers, A. G. Crum, W. F. Yates. Delegates selected to General Conference: S. M., Carrie, and May Gray, Emma Bell, J. A. and Mrs. J. A. Bronson. A. G. Crum was recommended for district chorister. Preaching by L. P. Summers, F. D. Omans, J. A. Bronson. Next conference will be during reunion. W. W. Fordham, secretary.

Convention Minutes

NODAWAY.—Sunday school met at Guilford, Missouri, November 13 and 14. One new school reported, making five in all. Interesting program Saturday evening. Adjourned to meet with Sweet Home School, March 18, 2 p. m. Frank Powell, secretary.

WESTERN MAINE.—Sunday school. Owing to circumstances, time did not permit of arrangement for program. We hope for better prospects in the future. Election: H. A. Koehler, superintendent; George H. Knowlton, assistant; G. A. Koehler, chorister; Myrtle Eaton, treasurer; John J. Billings, home department superintendent. Louise J. Eaton, secretary.

Conference Notices

Southern Nebraska, January 15 and 16, Fairfield. Branch secretaries send reports to Mrs. Blanch Andrews, Lincoln, Nebraska, not later than January 10. Priesthood report to president of district not later than same date. All intending to come, correspond with James R. Croft, Fairfield, Nebraska, early. Election of officers and delegates to General Conference, and other important matters. H. A. Higgins, president, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Pittsburgh, February 5 and 6, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Change of date has made it possible for Brother G. T. Griffiths to be present. Emma Lochar, secretary, 622 Sickles Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Convention Notices

Far West Religio, January 15 and 16, Cameron, Missouri. Secretaries report and send delegate credentials promptly to district secretary, J. E. Armstrong, Stewartsville, Missouri.

North Dakota Sunday School, January 2, 2 p. m., Fargo, North Dakota. Mrs. W. E. Shakespeare, secretary.

Appeal for Help

Sister J. H. Pardu, of 926 West Hillsdale Street, Lansing, Michigan, announces that she has a brother, Martin Stowenburg, a member of the church, living at Osage, Iowa, who is ill and needs the ministrations of the church. If there are any Saints in the vicinity, it is requested that they call on this brother and give him such aid as may be needed.

Died

WALRATH.—Charles M. Walrath, born July 30, 1853, Fulton County, New York; died from dropsy November 29, 1915, Edgerton, Alberta. He was a faithful member of the church for twenty-four years. Baptized at Fork, Michigan, by Robert Davis. Leaves companion and 6 children, two sons deceased. Services at the home by J. R. Beckley, attended by a large number of friends and neighbors. Deceased was held in high esteem by all. He passed peacefully away after nine months of suffering.

MCKENZIE.—At New Philadelphia, Ohio, December 13, 1915, of pneumonia and old age, Mary Jane, beloved wife of B. S. McKenzie, better known as "Doc." Deceased was born at Sandyville, Ohio, April 1, 1845. Baptized at New Philadelphia, September 2, 1888, by G. T. Griffiths. Leaves husband, 2 sons. Sermon by L. W. Powell, of Kirtland.

HAMMEL.—Julia Hammel, born March 15, 1865, in Texas; died December 19, 1915, leaving husband, 1 son, 2 daughters. United with the Methodist Church when a child. She was converted to the Latter Day Saint faith, but had not been baptized. Sermon by Lee Quick, interment in Carthage Cemetery.

MARTIN.—W. M. Martin, born March 18, 1856; died December 10, 1915. Baptized May 20, 1883, by John T. Davis. Deceased was a noble, kind-hearted man; had great faith in the latter-day work. Leaves wife, 1 son, 3 daughters, 3 grandchildren. Services by Lee Quick, interment in Webb City Cemetery.

BUTLER.—Amanda Martin Butler, born in Ohio, January 27, 1835; died December 17, 1915, Independence, Missouri, at the home of her daughter, Sister T. J. Smith. Baptized at 9 years of age. Was personally acquainted with Joseph and Hyrum Smith, being in Nauvoo at the time of their death. Was with the Saints driven out of that country. Married Stephen Butler in 1855. Five children were born to them. She has a number of grandchildren, including S. S. Smith, one of the church missionaries. Joined the Reorganized Church with her husband in 1865. Brother Butler, an elder, preceded her 15 years ago. They were among the first settlers of Oklahoma, living near Kingfisher. Short services held in Independence in charge of W. M. Aylor, the body being shipped to Kingfisher for burial; services there in charge of Hubert Case.

MORTIMER.—Elizabeth Mortimer, born August 28, 1852, Kilvenning, Ayrshire, Scotland; died November 25, 1915, at her home, Owen Sound, Ontario, of heart failure. Came to Canada when a girl of 17. Married James L. Mortimer, Hamilton, Ontario, August 5, 1879. To them were born 3 sons, George A., Redickville, Ontario, James N. and John W., South Melfort, Saskatchewan. These with their father are left to mourn. Deceased was baptized July 30, 1888, by John Shields. She was alone at the time of her death, her husband being engaged in missionary work in western Canada. Services postponed till December 1, waiting arrival of her companion and son. Sermon by Benson Belrose, from Revelation 14: 12, 13. Numbers 133 and 350 of Saints' Hymnal were sung, deceased having requested that the former be sung the last times she was at prayer service; the latter was her favorite hymn. Interment in Greenwood Cemetery.

KOLLESCHING.—Ellis M. Kollesching, born to Brother and Sister Max M. Kollesching, February 6, 1909; died at Kansas City, Missouri, December 6, 1915, God allowing that this little bud of promise be transplanted from this cold world to the sweet fields of Eden, where he has joined his little brother Ora, who passed on a few years before. They await the arrival of loving parents. Services at the residence, 3613 East Fifty-eighth Street, by F. C. Warnky, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

Tucker, of Kansas City, who preceded him to the sunny banks of sweet deliverance by about ten months. Deceased was baptized by D. C. White, December 8, 1896. Services at undertaker's parlors in charge of G. E. Harrington, sermon by A. H. Parsons. Interment by side of his first wife near Harrisonville, Missouri.

Book Reviews

THE PENTECOST OF CALAMITY.—Owen Wister, author of The Virginian. Macmillan Company, New York City. 50 cents. This book is a consideration of the position and conduct of Germany in the present European war. The author is of German extraction and has spent many years in Germany. In fact, he was present in Germany during the Franco-Prussian war, and has watched the development of the country from that day to the present. The book may be considered pro-German in this, that he devotes the opening chapters to a very enthusiastic eulogy of German efficiency and thoroughness. It is anti-German in the sense that he condemns the German, or rather the Prussian military policy. He considers that Germany has permitted Prussia to dominate her and force upon her a tremendous military system, and that for years past Prussia has been preparing Germany for an attack upon Europe, having in mind world dominion. He believes that the Pentecostal Calamity that has come upon Europe has brought the baptism of a new spirit to the French and Belgian people, and hopes that in time it will also bring a new spirit to the German people. He holds that the United States should have entered a vigorous protest against the violation of Belgian neutrality and alleged atrocities of the campaign in Flanders.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.—W. A. Lambert, pastor of Saint James Evangelical Lutheran Church, Lebanon, Pennsylvania. Richard G. Badger, Boston. 75 cents. This book deals with the question, "Is it possible to introduce religious education in our public schools?" Special attention is given to methods of education in Germany. The author's predilection for the views of Luther is plainly seen in the volume. His argument is that religion is an essential part of human education; that character cannot be properly developed for this life or the life to come without religious education. Since the state has taken over education, it devolves upon the state to see that religious education is included in the public school curriculum. The author feels that historical difficulties and denominational differences should be avoided, and some common ground obtained on which Protestants can meet; some way in which to develop the religious spirit without antagonizing the various denominations, one against another.

THE SCARLET PLAGUE.—Jack London is always original, and usually forceful. In this new book of his (Macmillan Company, N. Y., $1) he is both—with emphasis. His vivid and realistic imagination has carried him on into the twenty-first century, whence, as the associate of men again primordial, he views the havoc that has been wrought by the Scarlet Plague, in the year 2013. The leading character of the story, "Granser," a senile old man, sits on the beach at what had been San Francisco, telling his semi-barbarian grandsons of the great civilization that once was. Little of his long story is intelligible to them, and they make many humorous objections to his rigmarole; but being wiser than they, we, the reader, hold our breath and follow the chapters with an interest that few books and few writers can command. In Jack London's inimitable description we forget the present and see things as they are pictured in this book. We sit on the sands with Granser and those little savages and remember civilization as something of a dream; we see it in long perspective and are filled with thoughts that embroil our minds for hours after we have put the fiction aside. We vehemently declare that no such thing as the destruction of man could come about through the instrumentality of mere germs; but in spite of our aversion to the picture, we find ourselves struggling with the realism of it, until our faculties strike an impassé. We may have views of our own concerning the fate of this present civilization and the works of man as a whole; we may believe ourselves among the few who have formed any definite picture of the twenty-first century A. D.; we may even believe there will never be a twenty-first century; but when we read The Scarlet Plague and apply to it our little knowledge of history and biology, we simply stand aghast and exclaim: "Where on earth did that man get such thoughts!" The reader who can afford to spend a dollar on a story of unusual brevity—and originality, a story that will cause him to think deeply, and which will probably strengthen his faith in God in proportion as it weakens his faith in man, we refer to this book. To the admirer of Jack London we can say: It is perhaps the most brilliant thing he has written. As a production of the human brain it is nothing short of wonderful.

HABITS THAT HANDICAP.—Charles B. Towns. Century Company, New York City. $1.20. Recent sensational legislation against the traffic in habit forming drugs has brought to light startling facts about the prevalence of drug addiction among all classes of people, including physicians. It has been the life work of Mr. Towns to study and treat victims of these habits. In this book he sums up his experiences and observations in regard to the prevalence of drugs, and the method of treatment and cure of drug habits, and he extends his discussion also to alcohol and tobacco. It is interesting to note that on page 171 of his work he says in regard to tobacco: "The use of tobacco reaches far beyond the home circle and the schools, and even pollutes the atmosphere of the church itself. There are few clergymen in the United States who do not use tobacco." The book contains an introduction by the celebrated Doctor Richard C. Cabot, of Boston, which in itself is a very strong recommendation and assurance that the work is worthy of reading. In this introduction, he says: "All the statements made in this book except those relating to tobacco I can verify from similar experiences of my own, since I have known and used Mr. Towns's method of treatment." Chapter headings include "Peril of the Drug Habit," "The Need of Adequate Specific Treatment for the Drug-Taker," "The Drug-Taker and the Physician," "Psychology and Drugs," "Alcoholics," "Help for the Hard Drinker," "Tobacco and the Future of the Race," etc.

ARMS AND THE RACE.—R. M. Johnston, Assistant Professor of Modern History in Harvard University and Lecturer at the U. S. Army War College, Washington. Century Company, New York City. $1. This work is an outcome of the war in Europe, yet the opinions put forward are not the result of any spasmodic hasty observation. They are based on historical study, extending over a long period prior to the war. The author attempts to set down, analyze, and make to yield whatsoever of sense there is in the arguments for Militarism, Pacifism, Kruppism, and all the other isms relative to armament.

THE LIBERTY OF CITIZENSHIP.—By Samuel Walker McCall, LL. D. This is one of a series of Yale lectures on the Responsibility of Citizenship. Yale University Press, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City. $1.15. In his introduction the author says: "No one can be a citizen all by himself. Robinson Crusoe may have been a sovereign, but a citizen he could not be. The conflicts between labor and capital that rent his little state were only such as swept across his own breast. Most envied of mortals, he could placidly monopolize any part of the trade and commerce upon his island without fear of being proceeded against under any Sherman anti-trust law. He could follow his ancient habit of taking nine hours sleep each night and not be stigmatized as a reactionary. Since we cannot each one of us have his island, let us try to preserve for ourselves some measure of freedom upon the continent to which we have been consigned, and let us regard it as one of the first duties of citizenship to aid in checking the rapidity and greed with which the laws are coming to devour liberty.

SPIRITUALISM, ITS TRUTH, HELPFULNESS AND DANGER.—James Henry Fletcher. Occult Book Concern, 9 to 15 Murray Street, New York City. A study of spiritualism by a spiritualist, who declares it is not his object to make converts to spiritualism, but to call attention to what he terms the truth, helpfulness and danger of the cult. He attempts to establish the truth of spiritualism by scriptural references to Daniel, Joseph, Samuel, and others of the old Bible characters; also from some New Testament sources. Its helpfulness he professes to find in its alleged ability to remove fear, warn against danger, assist individuals in business transactions, and bring consolation to those who mourn the loss of friends. Its danger he says is in the power obtained over individuals by wicked and unclean spirits of a low order of intelligence.

A WHOLESOME STORY

Presents the Gospel
Plan in the Living of it :: ::

$1 Postpaid

In response to many requests from subscribers to the Stepping Stones, we are pleased to announce the publication of this popular serial in book form. There are 320 pages, in large type on good paper, cloth binding. Cover and inside illustrations. Price one dollar.

Those who have read any of the chapters will already know of its merit and want the book. Those who have not may be assured that it has much of special interest as a story that contains true-to-life experiences.

Sister Estella Wight, the author, has woven commonplace events, such as all of us know, into a pleasing story fabric which brings out many of our church doctrines in a convincing light.

The story was finished in the Christmas number of the Stepping Stones. The book is a very nice product of the printer's art. Order now.
