The statutes of the State should always be looked to, but as a rule, they recognize the right of the minister who is so recognized by the organization. If the organization authorizes the minister to perform such a ceremony, the State likewise recognizes him to perform the ceremony and make return; otherwise not.

The position of a church may be shown, either by its written constitution, its written resolutions, or by its custom. It is in this connection that the question was raised in Canada of the right of Hyrum Dickhout, a priest, to perform a marriage ceremony. Also the question was raised in Massachusetts in the matter involving Frederick M. Blanchard, also a priest. The attack in both instances, however, was not to the right of the men to perform the ceremony, because the action of the church settled that question. The attack was upon the rights of the church, as has already been set out in these columns; in both cases the right of the church was fully vindicated.

Now so far as the position of the church is concerned, we find the law set forth in section 111, paragraph 1, of Doctrine and Covenants. "According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies, therefore we believe, that all marriages in this Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting, or feast, prepared for that purpose; and that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest, not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married, of being married by other authority."

The above is a resolution of the general assembly in 1835. So far as we know there is nothing decisive in the revelations to the church or in either of the two books, the Bible and the Book of Mormon. Though it may be implied from the right of a priest to baptize, and administer the sacrament and the absence of such right with a teacher or deacon. But the above resolution is directly binding upon the church.

The question may be raised of the right of a seventy, but all officers holding the Melchisedec priesthood are included within the term elder, as it would be absurd to claim that the elder could perform this ceremony, but that an elder that has been ordained a seventy, could not, in the absence of some clear evidence to the contrary.

In addition we have the custom of the church, which has been and is as above indicated, that either some officer holding the Melchisedec priesthood or a priest is requisite as an officiating officer and of these any may act.

There is another possibility, and that is, suppose a teacher is a presiding officer or pastor of a branch, in accordance with section 120:2. Many of the States authorize a pastor to perform such a ceremony. But a teacher with us is not properly a presiding officer over a branch, as that belongs primarily to the Melchisedec priesthood.

Nor is a teacher or deacon authorized to perform any part of the necessary ceremony for the reception of members by baptism. Nor is he permitted to officiate in the ceremony for the continuing of membership, the blessing of the Lord's supper, and its serving. To be exact, he is not recognized according to the usages of the church as an officer who administers what are called by some the sacraments of the church. It is to be presumed that he has not the right to administer in this sacrament of marriage.

Many States, though not all, declare that when a marriage is performed in good faith, it does not become invalid because of a lack of authority in the one performing the ceremony, if those entering into the ceremony believe that he had such right. Probably in such a case the marriage could not be called a common law marriage, but is good for all purposes.

In many other States, either by statute, or without statute, there exists what is called common law marriages, that is, where a man and woman declare their intention to live together in that relation before witnesses and then actually do enter into the relationship and hold each other out as husband and wife. This was held to be a good marriage by the common law, and is upheld in a great many of the States.

The difficulty in this latter case is, that the intention of the party must be shown and shown sometimes with considerable detail and clearness. We have known of a woman who married a man who was fully free to marry her, but there was no ceremony. They lived together for over thirty years, and then when he died she applied for a pension, but the United States Government would not allow it.

For many purposes a common law marriage is good, but it cannot always be depended upon. The safer plan, would therefore be, to secure a license and comply with the statutes in each instance, and see that a proper record is made, and that a proper officiating minister is secured.

This minister in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is either a member of the Melchisedec priesthood, or a priest after the order of Aaron. It does not then include a teacher, a deacon, or a lay member. S. A. B.

"THE AMERICAN HEBREW"

Through the kindness of Sister Nellie Martin, the editors have received several copies of The American Hebrew. The New Year's number, September 14, 1917, is of special interest as they give quite a long write-up of Jews of special note. A great deal of stress is also placed upon the war, and Israel's position in ancient times, as a warlike nation. Yet there is through it all the realization of the awfulness of war, and the desirability of peace. Thus one New Year's story concerns a Jewish sentry, whose challenge not being answered shoots and kills an enemy, only to find that it is a brother Jew. The front cover is a picture of "Universal Peace" by a Jew, but instead of it being a conventional female figure, with arms uplifted, it is a bearded man, hammering his swords into plowshares, while the lion lies at his feet. Great stress is laid upon the necessity of thanksgiving to God and how very thankful we should be to him. There is a tone of rejoicing also, as it looks as though the redemption of the Jews is near at hand. They say, in fact, that the outlook has not been so good for many centuries as it is at present for the Jews.

"Wishes for the year 5678," the coming Jewish year follows in detail and again reemphasizes the peace sentiment.

The conclusion of a general (not separate) peace, after full victory of the powers which represent the principle of equal justice and right for individuals and nationalities.

Special protection safeguarding the inviolable right of the existence, development and revival of small nationalities claiming their historic rights.

The establishment of the United States of the civilized world including republics, kingdoms, empires and other forms of government according to the needs and desires of the various nations with a general compulsory tribunal to which all governments and parliaments should swear an oath of allegiance to put before it their future conflicts and disputes for decision.

Soldiers and sailors to be settled on the land and seashore for doing agricultural, mining and fishery work.

Junkers, jingos, yellow-red press-hooligans, made in Germany or imitated in other countries, exciting hatred and prejudices between nationalities, social classes and religions to be sent to places inhabited by cannibals.

All arms to be transformed into instruments of productive work.

Palestine to be given to the Jewish people as a national home under appropriate protection and as a place of settlement for all Jews desirous of a self-supporting colonization and a full national life.

The abolition of all disabilities against Jews and security for their citizenship, religious communities and free cultural development in all the countries.

A cause for rejoicing for the Jews is the greater freedom gained by the Jews throughout the world, during the year just closing and that includes the wonderful progress made in Russia on account of the revolution. But amid all the sadness of war, this is again and again repeated, that the year past is the dawn for Israel of a new age.

Then, on October 5, it contains a long article on Palestine, for the Jews, most of it based upon an interview with a member of Parliament. It is urged, both on the account of the Jews, and also on account of England, that a Jewish state in Palestine, is to be desired and expected. It is suggested that the United States and the Jews in the United States are best prepared to take care of it. Another point that is urged is the attitude taken by the Jews in Russia, that they are willing to make every sacrifice to support the new Russia, and have subscribed about forty per cent of the liberty loan in that country. Jews, in the Council of Soldiers and Workmen, have been combatting the dangerous doctrine of the Maximalists most energetically.

OUR FIRM FOUNDATION

These are times which try men souls. We hear much of the redemption of Zion. But we hear unkind criticism of the brethren and of one another, for some men's and women's hearts are failing them, they know not sometimes where to turn. It is well then that we should remind ourselves that we have a firm foundation, even Jesus Christ. We are reminded of an editorial by President Joseph Smith in 1869.

It requires a more than ordinary amount of faith to look the accumulated difficulties surrounding the word steadily in the face. Nor does it require less to bear up under the despondency which lies lurking in every work where once flourished this truth.

Those things of which we are assured ought always to remain in our memories as fixed facts. One prominent truth of which all are convinced, is the goodness and wisdom of God. He has so far shown that he is able to control the universe. He did so while Moses journeyed with Israel; and when Jesus came it was still the same. He has not proven changeable during the years of ancient apostasy; nor may we fear that, during the terrible struggles which have fallen to the church in the modern falling away.

Another, which is the anchor of our hope, is the promised resurrection of the dead, in which resurrection those who have proven susceptible to the influences of gospel grace are advanced in degrees of usefulness. This gives stability to every phase of our faith and all are concentrated upon it, else are we without hope. The resurrection does not depend upon the gathering of the Saints, nor does the strength of God depend upon it. The only great object to be accomplished by the gathering is the perfecting of the machinery by which the gospel is promulgated; the securing a unity of action after the perfecting unity of thought. The unity of action through every branch of the church polity is to be attained before any political sovereignty will be permitted by that power which has hitherto ruled the church destinies, and it cannot be confidently hoped that any great power will be vouchsafed to a people not prepared to use that power wisely. That which we have fought, bigotry, superstition, intolerance, proscription, and priestcraft, are some of the ruling evils which cannot be permitted to enter into the councils of a free people; nor are they principles which will in any wise govern the ruler of Zion.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 15, pp. 240-242.

Recently the Presiding Bishop made a similar suggestion in a sermon in Lamoni, that if what is planned is not of God, it will fail and that we should remember our firm foundation and hold fast to the rod of iron. But if it is of God, we do not want to oppose. This was in reference to some matters being undertaken by the brethren. We should remember our foundation and that the fundamentals have remained unchanged and are still sure.

This war has been foretold again and again. It should not therefore, change our faith. Quite the contrary. Trying times will come and only those who stand firm in the truth can hope to escape.

So with our brethren there are the eternal verities of character. We may not always know what our brother is doing; we may not always know what he is planning. It may be possible that he is about to make a grave mistake. But if we know him, we can refer back to the fundamentals of his character and rest assured that the probability is he is at least trying to do the right thing.

It probably happens with all of us, that our friends at times do things that disappoint or surprise us, or which we cannot understand. Sometimes they may seriously disaffect us. But this should not be the case, unless we are sure of the defalcation. Sometimes we think we are, but the fact is, that it is largely made up of our own imagination.

It is so fundamental that it has been recognized time and time again in print that when we know a person we can no longer so easily dislike him. Very rarely can we find so serious faults with those with whom we are thoroughly acquainted.

How then should the men of God proceed? The fundamentals of conduct are clear. There are few differences in morals. But shall we say that if Peter goes upon a housetop in the heat of the day, he cannot receive there communication from God?

Shall we say to the man whose time is kept within an office or schoolroom that he cannot there serve God and receive divine inspiration? Shall we say to the man who goes to the field, In the field you cannot receive light, even though Moses did receive the word of God while tending sheep?

Or shall we say to Paul, when he goes to Arabia, You are wasting your time for three years? Why do you not go to work for the church instead of going down here to loaf, or as you call it, meditate.

Or should we later say to him, Now you have blundered. Didn't we tell you that if you went right to Jerusalem you would be locked up, that you would be tied up and suffer, and yet you would go, and now you are in prison. What good can you do there?

Well now, you have done it, for you have entered into a camp of soldiers. No good can come of that. Alma, why did you do it?

May we not at times be too quick to submit that our own experience is the only one worthy of consideration and he that does not walk in our way is going wrong, in these details of time and place of communion.

Our personal experience has been that we have had as much inspiration in a library studying as in the open field and as much in school as in the missionary work. Also as much on a hillside or mountain as in a room.

God is not limited. He can direct and inspire us where we are, if we will let him. But this does not mean we cannot place ourselves in better position and better condition to receive.

Many times we find it wise, as even the Master did, to go aside from the turmoil of cities, and even from our brethren to commune with God.

Moses, though he took a number with him part of the way, yet went on alone, and the Master many times went aside to pray and especially in the great crises of his life. Though he took a few with him, yet he went on alone.

So in this day, are some of our men seeking earnestly for divine direction, not going into the wilderness, not going apart through fear, but in an earnest effort to get nearer to God, and to become stronger for his service.

We should learn to know our brethren and have right confidence in them. But above all, should we retain our confidence in God and his work, "knowing the foundation of God standeth sure." (2 Timothy 2:19.) And that Jesus the Christ is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. (Hebrews 13: 8.)

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Have You Reported Your Meeting Place?

We have a goodly number of letters and cards already in response to our request for location of city churches and meeting places, but there are still many we would like to have. If you haven't reported, please do so that we may file the information. You would be surprised how many have inquired for such information since they saw our request.

"Only Dignified Poverty"

Reflecting the financial standards of the Jews, a writer in a recent American Hebrew tells of a rabbi friend of his whose salary was $2,400 a year and represented the most the congregation could pay. "He has dreamed of matrimony, but he does not dare to ask the woman of his dreams to share what would only be dignified poverty."

Successful Campaign in Lamoni

On Tuesday, the 9th, previous arrangement, teams of two waited upon the membership of the Lamoni Branch for contributions to meet the branch expenses. The city and vicinity was divided into some fourteen districts, and two men appointed to each two districts. There was an indebtedness for repairs and expenses of about eleven hundred dollars to be met. So far about a thousand dollars have been collected and promised. This may possibly have affected the College Day collection.

How to Select Tracts

It would be a good plan to have one each of all the tracts published by the church, so proper selection might be made for distribution purposes. The next best plan—and the easier—is to own a Dollar Library. This consists of thirty-four tracts and a price list of publications. By a perusal of the set, one will acquire classified information that otherwise might never be had, and can order intelligently for special needs. Brother John Zahnd is so enthusiastic over it that he is willing to refund not only the dollar paid, but to give one in addition to anyone dissatisfied with the set. He's safe.

College Day in Lamoni

Owing to the sacrament service on the 7th, College Day was postponed at Lamoni till October 14. The services were in charge of Elder George N. Briggs, president of Graceland College. Gustave Platz spoke briefly on Graceland from the standpoint of the students. He was succeeded by H. H. Lynn, a business man of Lamoni, on Graceland College from a business man's standpoint. He gave a brief sketch of graduates from Graceland and the work they are now doing, or had done since graduating, which is of note. Elder C. B. Woodstock then spoke of Graceland from the standpoint of the board of trustees, emphasizing the scholarship feature of the College Day collection and the assistance we thereby render the church. The choir, orchestra, and Hawaiian quartet furnished the music. At the close a collection was taken up, according to present reports amounting to about four hundred dollars.

HYMNS AND POEMS
Selected and Original

A Smile and a Song

When the daytime is cold with the mists of the nighttime
Clouds somber and gray hanging heavy with rain,
Hear the call of Bob White o'er the fields clearly ringing,
There's a rift overhead and the sun shines again.

Though the prize just ahead be obscured from the vision,
And the road leading there may seem rugged and long,
Soon the wearisome steps will be left far behind you
If you walk to the lilt of a rollicking song.

Then gayly wayfaring, o'er torrent, through meadow,
Forgetting all cares that to sorrow belong,
There's gladness to-day and there's hope for to-morrow
If these be your watchwords, a smile and a song.

VIDA CATO SIEG.

A Smile Worth While

As I crossed the street depressed and weary,
I met a smile so bright and cheery;
It seemed to come fresh from the skies
Through an angel in disguise.
With that smile there came a look
That from my soul all care it took—
And the heart that beat so sad,
Throbbled more lightly and felt glad.
Glad that such a one was near
That could share with you her cheer.
Heart and soul so strong and bright
Sweet gladness shone where there'd been night.
Heaviness was changed to lightness,
Where all seemed dark there came a brightness
That lifts the load from off the weary
And makes one's life less sad and dreary.
May her life be one glad song,
So she can pass her smiles along.
Seems a little thing to give
Yet it helps some one to live.
It smooths the road and shortens the mile
And makes life's journey seem worth while.

There are a few dead sure things, any housewife who can provide acceptable food for her family at low cost uses brains and spends time marketing, not telephoning. She must know brands and read labels and she must love her work in her kitchen laboratory and find no preparation for it too difficult. It is our great woman's game and we have to know the rules of the game to play it well.—Exchange.

HOW MAY A CHOIR ASSIST A BRANCH

[NOTE. The following paper by Brother H. A. Scott, president of the branch at Omaha, Nebraska, was read at the "Music Convention" at Omaha, October 24, 1916. It deals with the choir and its work from the standpoint of one who is in charge of all the interest of a branch, and who can realize the value of each department of the work under him.—ARTHUR H. MILLS.]

I believe a choir is as indispensable to a branch as an arm is to an individual. Deprive a man or a woman of an arm and such an individual is laboring under quite a handicap in life's endeavors. Deprive a branch of a choir and such a branch likewise suffers a distinct loss. A good choir is a strong right arm to a branch. By the word "choir" I do not mean merely a body of men and women who meet together upon the Sabbath Day, and without previous effort attempt to render an appropriate tribute of praise and thanksgiving in song unto the Lord. A choir such as that is of very little value to a branch, just as a branch that does not show some of the manifestations of life is of little value to the church proper.

Such a choir may be likened to an arm of an individual that has become withered and useless. A choir that merely exists would benefit a branch by ceasing to exist, for then it would at least not be a disappointment to those who love and appreciate good music. But when I refer to a choir as being indispensable to a branch, I mean one whose membership is alive to its needs and possibilities, and whose members are willing to sacrifice of their time from other affairs and devote a just proportion of it to properly qualifying for the duties imposed.

To arrive at some of the advantages to a branch that is supported by a good choir, it will first be necessary to call attention to that which a good choir stands for; and that is good music. The two are synonymous terms—good music, good choir; good choir, good music; and music is heaven-born the same as any other God-given possession.

Music wins its way into the soul when other appeals have failed; music strikes a responsive chord and stirs the heart and mind to an appreciation of the beautiful when even the powers of eloquence and argument may fail; music brings a message of peace and joy which cannot be supplemented by any other force; it lightens the burdens of sorrowing man; it causes this sin-cursed world to lift up its head in hope when other measures have fallen short.

Oh! the power of music. It is a powerful medium for good, and the church is just awakening to its possibilities. Thank God we see the dawning of a brighter day wherein music is being elevated to the high pedestal upon which it should stand. Our people are sensing its powerful mission in the world more than ever before and are responding with an earnestness and enthusiasm that augurs well for the future of the grand cause in which we are enlisted. If only all of our people possessed with talents for music could be made to utilize those talents in a consecrated effort for God. I have digressed from the subject assigned me, as it seemed necessary to lay a foundation upon which to build.

A good choir, as stated at the commencement, is as indispensable to a branch as an arm is to an individual. Should anyone for a moment think a choir is an unnecessary appendage to a branch, just imagine if you can what the effect would be if the announcement were to come to disorganize all of the choirs throughout the church and confine our musical activities to congregational singing only. Would that not be a severe blow to the general interests of the work?

No one in his right senses would recommend such a course, and right here let me ask a pertinent question: If you or I are not encouraging this choir movement, either by a giving of the talent we possess, or by lending whatever influence we may have towards supporting this phase of our gospel work, or by both, then are we not by inference, at least, indicating that a disorganization would not be objectionable to us? This may be putting it a little strongly, but we must either be for a thing or against it.

The benefits of a choir to a branch may be classed under three heads: the benefits derived by those who hear, aside from the speaker, the benefits derived by the preacher, and by the choir members.

How many times in our religious experience have we been thrilled by the rendition of some inspiring hymn, or anthem, or solo; and accompanying such efforts comes the witness of the Spirit testifying of a surety that the service of song is pleasing unto God, and the means of encouraging and uplifting us to higher and nobler aims. Take music out of our services and we would indeed suffer an irreparable loss. God made music a part of our worship of him, and he has revealed to us in latter days, as well as former days, his will concerning it. There is no doubt in my mind that music has been and is an important factor in winning souls for Christ.

A good choir stands for good music, the kind of music that inspires the preacher's mind and encourages him with an earnestness and a desire to give the very best there is in him. I feel secure in the assertion that many a time our speakers have gone into the stand, uncertain and wavering, because of the demands about to be made upon them, and under the inspiration received from the uplifting service of song, with the accompaniment of the Spirit of God, discharged the duty assigned them with confidence and joy, and delivered a sermon in keeping with the high inspirational standard established by the song service.

The choir members are benefited in many ways. The choir provides the medium through which each member may render a service to all who may come within the scope of the choir's influence. There is assuredly a work for us all to do, and those who have a talent for music, especially those upon whose shoulders do not fall priesthood responsibilities, should without reservation declare themselves, "Master, here am I, use me." We cannot all be preachers in the sense that we may stand behind the sacred desk and declare the word, but we can assist in a work for God that is just as important in its sphere of usefulness as preaching or any other department of the work, and that is to preach the word set to music.

So a choir that is of service to the membership, to the preacher and also to the choir members themselves cannot fail to be of great benefit to the branch in general.

I hope you singers here to-day, if you have not already fully realized the opportunity which lies within your power to assist in the carrying on of your part of that work which has been entrusted to all, will, as a result of your association together during this convention receive such enthusiastic impressions, that upon your return to your homes you will redouble your efforts and avail yourselves of every opportunity for service.

What the church needs to-day is men and women who are not afraid of doing too much for its interests; who are willing to use their talents unreservedly. This time must come. Already we see evidences of it, and what a grand feast to the soul it will be when a body of our singers meet together, who are thus fully consecrated to the Lord's cause; what music will pour forth from their lips. It may then well be compared to a chorus from the heavenly hosts, for the inspiration of the Almighty will be there in power.

May those who hold within their grasp the key to the door of opportunity along musical lines, enter within its portals and fully establish our cause, is my prayer.

H. A. SCOTT.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 9

BY J. F. MINTUN

CONGREGATIONALISTS

This title is accepted by a religious organization formerly known as Independents, but the change of name has not been because of any very great change in its church polity, or ecclesiastical doctrines.

The Independents arose in the days of Queen Elizabeth as a result of seeing, as they thought, no possibility of bringing about the reformation they considered necessary, neither through the Episcopacy, nor Puritan ideas then advocated, but believed that the church should be free from the authority of the state, and the reformation sought to be accomplished through men who had been individually reformed.

This position was first taken and advocated by Robert Brown, who gives this definition to what he considers a church: "A company or number of Christians or believers, who, by a willing covenant made with their God, are under the government of God and Christ, and keep his laws in one holy communion." This view being very offensive to the Church of England they denominated those who consented to his views Brownists.

The Independents were separated from the Church of England, and formed themselves into congregations in accord with their views of what the Scriptures taught without any claim to any instruction from God, or any consent of the state-church, the latter condition making it a criminal offense, and as early as 1583 two were executed because of this offense.

They rejected the Calvinistic ideas in a large measure, as well as the Anglican and Puritan ideas, and accepted, or claimed to accept "Christ as the only head of the church," and declared "his laws may no man alter," but claimed the right to interpret these laws without claiming the inspired help granted to God's children in New Testament times.

In 1606, two separate bodies of Independents were organized, one under John Smyth, who concluded that baptism by a corrupt church was no baptism, which conclusion was and is correct; but he then baptized himself without any authority from God so to act. By doing this he became the founder of the general Baptists. The other organization was under John Robinson, at Scrooby.

The Anglican Church made war on these congregations, and the latter fled, as did the first to Amsterdam, but removed finally to Leyden, where they were free to advocate the ideas that had made them offensive to those where they previously resided in England. Robinson was not so radical as Smyth, and acknowledged fellowship with the Church of England, and the virtue of his baptism in that church.

The church at Leyden is considered the parent of the Independents. In 1620, a company of Independents came to what is now called New England, and were joined by Puritans who wished to throw off the yoke of the English Church, who soon after became Independents.

They endured much persecution, and many became martyrs to their belief at the hands of their co-religionists with whom they differed.

The Independents becoming Congregationalists by change of name the history of the Congregationalists is for that reason given with the cause and object of their origin. A late writer on the subject has said, "The (church) polity must come from within; it must not be imposed from without; it may recognize outward circumstances but must not be controlled by them. . . . Ecclesiastical statesmen have no right to construct various forms of polity to express the spirit and tendencies prevailing among different races of men in different countries, and in different churches; the polity of the church must be created by the idea of the church." It is claimed that this is the New Testament idea on church polity.

While the Congregationalists yet hold to this idea in a theoretical way, and that each local church is independent of each other in a sense, yet they have recognized later the necessity of some tie that will bind these local churches under one common organization, hence have organized missionary societies of all these local organizations, they being under one set of general officers.

A declaration of faith for all Congregationalists was adopted in 1633, and at the same time the church order and discipline was outlined, followed by this explanation, "It is not intended that the following statement should be put forth with any authority." In 1671, this declaration was revised, having as some of the objects of its existence,

To promote scriptural views of church fellowship and organization; to strengthen the fraternal relations of the Congregational churches, and facilitate cooperation in everything effecting their common interest; to maintain correspondence with the Congregational churches and other Christian communities throughout the world; to obtain statistics relating to Congregational churches at home and abroad.

In the United States they have always acknowledged that each local church, though complete in itself, is nevertheless related to all other organizations of the same faith. They early adopted the systems of councils, which yet are prominent in the work of the church. It is claimed that through these councils "a fraternal fellowship" is maintained among these independent local organizations, and it is claimed that the especial need of them is when insoluble difficulties arise, or especially important matters claim decision as where a pastor is to be settled or dismissed, or a church itself is to adopt its creed and commence its organic life—it is proper that the advice of other churches should be sought and given in council.

Of this matter Increase Mather says,

It has ever been their declared judgment that, where there is want of other light, or peace in a particular church, it is their duty to ask for counsel, with which neighbor churches ought to assist by sending their elders and other messengers to advise and help them in their difficulties; and that in momentous matters of common concernment particular churches should proceed with the concurrence of neighbor churches; so in the ordination of a pastor, much more in the deposing of one.

The ministers, or pastors and deacons, of the Congregationalist churches are called to their office "through the people; the divine choice is expressed through the men, the divine word enlightens, and the divine Spirit guides."

On the origin of local churches George Penchard wrote in 1843:

If in any place a sufficient number, (Cotton Mather says, "Seven is the least number that has been allowed among us, as capable of forming a church-state for the enjoyment of all special ordinances."—Ratio, Article 1, sec. 1.) of persons wished to be organized into a Congregational Church, an orderly procedure would be substantially as follows:

"After a season of fasting and prayer, the brethren would appoint a committee to advise with one or more of the neighboring Congregationalist pastors and churches; to draw up a Confession of Faith and a Covenant," then to invite "so many of the neighboring churches as should be agreed upon to take into consideration the question whether the interests of religion required the organization of a Congregational Church in that place."

Then he says they should meet "at the time and place specified," the several wishing to unite being present "with letters of recommendation and dismissal," then "if the associated brethren had already selected their future pastor, he should be present, to be embodied in the church as one of its members, and immediately afterwards ordained as its pastor."—A view on Congregationalism, pp. 161, 162.

The church thus organized, as soon as convenient meet together; and after appointing a moderator and clerk, proceed to choose their officers; viz, a pastor, if previous arrangements admit of it, and two or more deacons, according to the size and circumstances of the church.—Ibid., p. 163.

The "Confession of Faith" adopted by the New England Congregational churches, as early as 1680, from which there have been some minor changes locally, is as follows, and shows the faith that is generally subscribed to in order to be a member of this church:

HOLY SCRIPTURES

1. The Holy Scriptures, or "word of God written," is the Old and New Testament. All of which are given by the inspiration of God, to be the rule of faith and life. The Supreme Judge by which all controversies of religion are to be determined, can be no other, but the Holy Scriptures.

GOD

2. There is but one only living and true God. In the unity of the God-head there be three persons, of one substance, power, and eternity, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. Which doctrine of the trinity is the foundation of all our communion with God, and comfortable dependence upon him.

GOD'S ETERNAL DECREE

3. God from all eternity did, by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will, freely and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass. Those of mankind that are predestinated unto life, God, before the foundation of the world was laid, according to his eternal and immutable purpose, and the secret counsel and good pleasure of his will, hath chosen in Christ unto everlasting glory, out of his mere free grace and love, without any foresight of faith or good works, or perseverance in either of them, or any other thing in the creature, as conditions or causes moving him thereunto, and all to the praise of his glorious grace. The rest of mankind, God has pleased, according to the unsearchable counsel of his own will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his creatures, to pass by, and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin; to the praise of his glorious justice.

CREATION

4. It pleased God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, for the manifestation of the glory of his eternal power, wisdom and goodness, in the beginning to create or make of nothing the world, and all things therein, whether visible or invisible, in the space of six days, and all very good. He created man, man and female, with reasonable and immortal souls, endued with knowledge, righteousness and true holiness, after his own image, having the law of God written in their hearts, and power to fulfill it; and yet, under a possibility of transgressing, being left to the liberty of their own will, which was subject to change.

PROVIDENCE

5. God in his ordinary providence maketh use of means, yet is free to work without, above, and against them at his pleasure.

FALL OF MAN

6. God having made a covenant of works and life thereupon, with our first parents, and all their posterity in them, they being seduced by the subtlety and temptation of Satan, did willfully transgress the law of their creation, and break the covenant, in eating the forbidden fruit. By this sin they, and we in them, fell from original righteousness and communion with God, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties of soul and body.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH MAN

7. The first covenant made with man was a covenant of works wherein life was promised to Adam, and in him to his posterity, upon condition of perfect and personal obedience. Man by his fall having made himself incapable of life by that covenant, the Lord was pleased to make a second, commonly called the covenant of grace; wherein he freely offered unto sinners life and salvation by Jesus Christ, requiring of them faith in him that they may be saved, and promising to give unto all those that are ordained unto life his Holy Spirit to make them willing and able to believe.

OF CHRIST, THE MEDIATOR

8. It pleased God, in his eternal purpose, to choose and ordain the Lord Jesus, his only begotten Son, according to a covenant made between them both, to be the Mediator between God and man.

The Lord Jesus, by his perfect obedience and sacrifice of himself, hath fully satisfied the justice of God, and purchased, not only reconciliation, but an everlasting inheritance in the kingdom of heaven, for all those whom the Father hath given unto him.

FREE WILL

9. God hath endued the will of man with that natural liberty and power of acting upon choice, that it is neither forced, nor by any absolute necessity of nature determined to do good or evil. Man by his fall into a state of sin, hath wholly lost all ability to will to any spiritual good accompanying salvation.

EFFICIENT CALLING

10. All those whom God hath predestined to life, and those only, he is pleased, in his appointed and accepted time, effectually to call by his Word and Spirit, out of that state of sin and death in which they are by nature to grace and salvation by Jesus Christ.

PERSEVERANCE OF THE SAINTS

11. They, whom God hath accepted in his Beloved, effectually called and sanctified by his Spirit, can neither totally nor finally fall away from the state of grace, but shall certainly persevere therein to the end, and be eternally saved.

TEN COMMANDMENTS

12. This law so written in the heart, continued to be a rule of righteousness after the fall of man, and was delivered by God on Mount Sinai in ten commandments, and written in two tables. This law, commonly called moral, doth forever bind all, as well justified persons as others, to the obedience thereof; and that not only of the matter contained in it, but also in respect of the authority of God the Creator, who gave it; neither doth Christ in the gospel anyway dissolve, but must strengthen this obligation.

WORSHIP

13. Religious worship must be given to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and to him alone; not to angels, saints, or any other creatures; and since the fall, not without a Mediator, nor in the mediation of any other but of Christ alone.

14. Prayer with thanksgiving, being one part of natural worship, is of God required of all men; but that it may be accepted, it is to be made in the name of the Son, by the help of his Spirit, according to his will, with understanding, reverence, humility, fervency, faith, love, and perseverance.

15. The reading of the Scriptures, preaching and hearing of the word of God, singing of psalms, as also the administration of baptism and the Lord's supper, are all parts of religious worship of God, to be performed in obedience unto God, with understanding, faith, reverence and godly fear.

SABBATH

16. As it is of the law of nature, that in general a portion of time by God's appointment be set apart for the worship of God. He hath particularly set apart one day in seven for sabbath to be kept holy unto him; which from the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, was the last day of the week, and from the resurrection of Christ was changed unto the first day of the week, the observation of the last day being abolished.

CIVIL MAGISTRATES

17. God, the Supreme Lord, and King of all the world, hath ordained civil magistrates to be under him, over the people, for his own glory and the public good; and to this end hath armed them with the power of the sword, for the defense and encouragement of them that do good, and for the punishment of evildoers.

MARRIAGE

18. Marriage is to be between one man and one woman; neither is it lawful for any man to have more than one wife, nor for any woman to have more than one husband at the same time.

CHURCH

19. The Catholic Universal Church, which is invisible, consists of the whole number of the elect, that have been, are, or shall be gathered into one under Christ the head thereof, and is the spouse, the body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all.

The whole body of men throughout the world, professing the faith of the gospel, and obedience unto God by Christ according unto it, they and their children with them are, and may be called the visible Catholic Church of Christ, although as such it is not intrusted with any officers to rule or govern over the whole body.

ANTI-CHRIST

20. There is no other head of the church but the Lord Jesus Christ, nor can the Pope of Rome in any sense be head thereof, but is that anti-Christ, that man of sin, and son of perdition, that exalteth himself in the church against Christ, and all that is called God, whom the Lord shall destroy with the brightness of his coming.

SACRAMENTS

21. Sacraments are holy signs and seals of the covenants of grace, immediately instituted by Christ.

There be only two sacraments ordained by Christ our Lord in the gospel, that is to say, baptism and the Lord's supper; neither of which may be dispensed by any but a minister of the word lawfully called.

BAPTISM

22. Baptism is a sacrament of the New Testament, ordained by Jesus Christ, to be unto the party baptized a sign and seal of the covenant of grace, of his ingrafting into Christ, of regeneration, of remission of sins, and of his giving up unto God through Jesus Christ, to walk in newness of life; which ordinance is, by Christ's own appointment, to be continued in the church, until the end of the world.

Dipping of the person in the water is not necessary, but baptism is rightly administered by pouring or sprinkling water upon the person.

Not only those that actually profess faith in and obedience unto Christ, but also the infants of one or both believing parents are to be baptized, and those only.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

23. Our Lord Jesus in the night wherein he was betrayed, instituted the sacrament of his body and blood, called the Lord's supper, to be observed in his churches to the end of the world, for the perpetual remembrance, and show forth of the sacrifice of himself in his death. . . .

The Popish sacrifice of the mass (as they call it) is most abominably injurious to Christ's own only sacrifice, the alone propitiation for all the sins of the elect. . . .

All ignorant and ungodly persons, as they are unfit to enjoy communion with Christ, so are they unworthy the Lord's table. . . .

STATE OF THE DEAD

24. The bodies of men after death return to dust and see corruption; but their souls (which neither die nor sleep) having an immortal subsistence, immediately return to God who gave them; the souls of the righteous being then made perfect in holiness, are received into the highest heavens, where they behold the face of God in light and glory, waiting for the full redemption of their bodies; and the souls of the wicked are cast into hell, where they remain in torment and utter darkness, reserved to the judgment of the great day; besides these two places of souls separated from the bodies, the Scriptures acknowledgeth none.

RESURRECTION

25. At the last day such as are found alive shall not die, but be changed, and all the dead shall be raised up with the selfsame bodies, and none other, although with different qualities, which shall be united again to their souls forever. The bodies of the unjust shall by the Christ be raised to dishonor; the bodies of the just by his Spirit unto honor, and be made conformable to his own glorious body.

JUDGMENT

26. God hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the world in righteousness by Jesus Christ, to whom all power and judgment is given by the Father; in which day, not only the apostate angels shall be judged, but likewise all persons that have lived upon the earth, shall appear before the tribunal of Christ, to give an account of their thoughts, words and deeds, and to receive according to what they have done in the body, whether good or evil. Then shall the righteous go into everlasting life, and receive the fullness of joy and glory; but the wicked who knew not God, and obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ, shall be cast into eternal torments, and be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.—Views of Congregationalism, pp. 290-312.

A CHURCH COVENANT

It is a principle with our denomination, that every church in order to be rightly constituted, must be united by solemn covenant, expressive of the principles on which their union is formed. This may be included in the Articles of Faith, or, perhaps as most common among us, it may form a distinct instrument, following the Articles of Faith.—Congregationalism, p. 313.

These covenants were of various forms, the one most commonly used found in Cotton Mather's Ratio.

THE DISCIPLINE

The members of our churches are therefore pledged to watch over, to admonish, to reprove, and to discipline each other as necessity may require. A church that neglects this care of its members is liable to be dealt with by its sister churches.

When one in transgression has been labored with by any member of the church acquainted with the transgression, who having at first effort failed to restore the transgressor, shall take with him "one or two judicious and intelligent brethren, to assist," in reclaiming "the erring brother," and if not then reconciled or reclaimed he shall be examined by the entire membership of the church upon the charge brought against him. Witnesses who are not professors should be heard. If convicted of the charge, and he is not willing to make satisfaction, he is either suspended from their communion, or excommunicated, and if the latter, he is considered as "a heathen man and a publican."

Even if excommunicated they may be received back without re-baptism by giving evidence of repentance and making a public confession. (See Views of Congregationalism, pp. 177-181.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WAR WITHOUT HATE?

The bishops of the Church of England are reported to have reached a decision to expunge from the Psalter the passages that invoke a ruthless vengeance on the wicked. Says Current Opinion:

The proposed reform is concerned with what are commonly known as the imprecatory Psalms, those strange, passionate human documents in which thoughts and aspirations of rare beauty, phrases so noble in conception and of such exquisite art that they will ever be upon the lips and in the minds of men, are mingled with wild screams of barbaric rage in which reason, morality, respect for humanity and reverence for God seem alike forgotten. . . . A significant fact in connection with the bishops' decision is that the omission of the dubious passages was resolved upon by a large majority of Convocation.

The London Telegraph comments as follows:

Not many generations have gone by since Christians of all denominations were wont to use the most violent passages of Scripture as weapons, not only against the infidel, but against each other.

Many of us can remember a time when any proposal to strike a word out of the Psalter would have been met with the united opposition of all parties. It is only in the lifetime of men not yet old that the churches have learned to resign the claim to invoke the thunders of Divine vengeance on all who cannot share their faith, and have discovered that in putting from her all desire of imprecation and commination Christianity but fulfills her mission, and is endued with new strength. There have, indeed, all down the ages, been divines of many a creed who chose to preach and live by love, not fear, but they have spoken for themselves, and often under the stigma of heresy and excommunication.

A momentous change is made when one of the great churches of Christendom resolves to declare to the world, by an alteration in services sanctioned with the use and authority of centuries that it is not for Christianity to preach the joy of vengeance, or to pray that men may go down into the pit of destruction and find none to pity them.

CHRISTMAS PACKAGES FOR SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

[The following instruction and information has been sent out by the Government officials, and should be carefully observed by those interested, to save disappointment.—EDITORS.]

The time is approaching to give thought to bringing Christmas cheer to the American soldiers and sailors abroad.

Arrangements have been perfected whereby the Christmas mail to the American expeditionary forces in Europe is to be delivered by Christmas morning. Without the fullest cooperation on the part of the public it will be impossible to accomplish this result.

The three essential respects in which the public can aid in assuring a happy Christmas at the front are mail early, address intelligently, and pack securely. For this reason it is urgently requested that all persons having Christmas mail for the soldiers and sailors and the civilian units attached to the Army in Europe observe closely the following directions:

DIRECTIONS FOR MAILING

1. Mails to reach the soldiers in France by Christmas morning must be posted not later than November 15.
2. Every package must bear conspicuously the words "Christmas mail," the complete address of the person for whom it is intended, and in the upper left-hand corner the name and address of the sender.
3. Every parcel must be so packed and wrapped as to admit of easy inspection by the postmaster. No parcel will be dispatched to France which has not the postmaster's certificate that it contains no prohibited articles.

POSTAL CENSORSHIP

The exclusion of certain publications from the mails by the Post Office Department has caused considerable criticism from some quarters. The following is an authorized statement from Postmaster General Burleson on the policy of the department on this matter:

I am going to enforce the law, but I am not going a step beyond what the law means, and it does not mean a political censorship. Nothing could be more repugnant either to the President or to me than a political censorship. Any newspaper of any political opinion or any shade of opinion can say anything it chooses in legitimate criticism of the President, the Administration, the Army, the Navy or the conduct of the war. It can go the limit. It can say anything it chooses about me, personally. I don't care what it says about me. But there is a limit. And that limit is reached when it begins to say that this Government got in the war wrong, that it is in it for wrong purposes, or anything that will impugn the motives of the Government for going to war.

They cannot say that this Government is the tool of Wall Street or the munitions makers. That kind of thing makes for insubordination in the Army and Navy and breeds a spirit of disloyalty through the country. It is a false statement, a lie, and will not be permitted.

And nothing can be said inciting people to resist the laws. There can be no campaign against conscription and the draft law, nothing that will interfere with enlistments or the raising of an army. There can be nothing said to hamper and obstruct the Government in the prosecution of the war. Political criticism, on the other hand, can go to any lengths it will. It makes no difference what is a paper's political faith, what party it belongs to, or how strong or how weak are its views, it can say what it pleases in the line of legitimate criticism. We won't look at any man or any paper with the thought in our minds that he belongs to the Socialist or any other political party. The whole question is the limit he attempts to go in his criticism. He can say anything he wants to within the limits I have marked out. But he can't overstep that limit one inch.

A CALIFORNIA SOCIALIST

The Los Angeles Herald of September 14, contains an interview with Elder T. W. Williams, president of the branch in Los Angeles, and State secretary of the Socialist Party. In this interview he infers that the Socialist's desire, above all else, is to crush autocracy. He allies in fact the Socialist Party in that State with the present administration, the Government of the United States. The interview continues in part as follows:

The United States has attained the highest expression of democracy ever known to men, he asserts, and this must be safeguarded against alien powers that would shatter it.

His statement follows:

"Despite their opposition to war in general, Socialists and peace advocates of America are confronted with tremendous responsibilities and exceptional opportunities in this hour of our national crisis.

"To pursue a policy of negation, to heckle and embarrass the Government, to begot disregard for our free institutions is un-social and un-American.

"Despite the defects and abuses of democracy, our American form of government is the highest expression of real democracy the world has ever known.

"To uphold the spirit and idealism of our Declaration of Independence; to conform to the provisions of our national and state constitutions; to obey the laws of the land is the duty of every American citizen. The remedy of any law which may be in contravention of the constitution is not its violation but its enforcement.

"We cannot afford either directly or indirectly to weaken the cause of democracy. Mere opposition to war with no constructive vision is abortive. To work and pray for the ascendancy of the right, the preservation of democracy and that social reconstruction which affords the fullest expression of individual and collective effort is the supreme duty of every American."

COMING GIFT TO THE WORLD

The welcome extended by the British parliament to the United States as a co-worker in the cause of the entente allies against the Teuton powers had for its inspiration the thought that the help of the United States will be of great value and that it will prove to be the turning point in the war. We sincerely hope that this is true. Mr. Bonar Law, after expressing this idea, said that he ventured "to express the hope and belief that a change is coming—that the long night of sorrow and anguish which has desolated the world is drawing to a close."

We believe it, too, and in a broader sense than Mr. Law's phrase seems to convey.

With Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy and the United States united in the cause of democracy, to say nothing of the sympathy and support of all the neutral countries, the triumph over autocracy should be not only the ending of this war, this long night of desolation, sorrow and anguish, but the beginning of a world-wide peace, an era of good will such as the world never before has experienced. The fact is that these five great nations, acting together, can command the peace; and in event of success in the war, they will do it.

The trouble heretofore was to arrange this getting together. Mutual distrust and apprehension lest some national interest might be sacrificed, stood in the way; and, of especial significance was the fact that one of the greatest powers in Europe could not be counted upon to cooperate—its interest seemed to lie in an opposite direction. The United States, also, was felt to be isolated by interests confining it to this side of the water. While our Government expressed itself as willing to promote universal peace, there was very good reason to doubt whether it would go into an offensive and defensive alliance with that object in view.

All difficulty, however, has been removed by the war. The powers that can control the situation have been brought together in defense against a common enemy, and that enemy is precisely the European power that could not be counted upon in an effort for the world's peace. The new coalition can proceed after the war is ended, to that large task, that great work for the world's betterment; and that it will be accomplished if once started upon cannot seriously be doubted.—Mobile Register.

A FOURTH OF JULY ORATION

[Through the kindness of Bishop E. L. Kelley, we are permitted to present to our readers the following extract, from a Woodbine, Iowa, paper, an address delivered by Brother Augustine Dwyer on the Fourth of July. Though this is now three months past, still in these times the topic is always timely, especially as we see our boys called forth to service.—EDITORS.]

The Fourth of July celebration at Woodbine will long be remembered by the great gathering of citizens of the town and country, who were present. Rarely, if ever, have the citizens of this part of Iowa listened to a more eloquent patriotic address.

Seated on a platform tastefully decorated with the national colors were the pastors of the various churches of the town. Mr. Dwyer was introduced by the pastor of the Methodist church. As soon as he rose to speak Mr. Dwyer was greeted by an outburst of applause. He said in part:

One hundred and forty-one years ago to-day, our forefathers signed a Declaration of Independence that has vibrated around the globe. It is because you are Americans, and because I am an American, that we are here to celebrate the greatest event in our national history. This is a day sacred to every American. But never in its history has this Nation faced a Fourth of July that had before it what is before it to-day. The spirit of American freedom and American democracy has been making its way through the social and political life of Europe, and the old civilization of empires is falling to fragments. The problem before America to-day is not a declaration of independence for a few States, but a declaration of independence for the world. That independence declared by our forefathers in 1776 is not confined to any particular country, it belongs to humanity, and wherever that independence is assailed America must defend it. History has crowned America as the Mother of Freedom, and the hand of no foreign tyrant will ever tear that crown from her brow. Mother of Freedom is the title that became hers on the Fourth of July, 1776.

America has outgrown the day when she could live apart from the rest of the world. She is the youngest nation upon the globe, but a nation that constitutes the greatest part of the globe in the sense of importance, and all that makes for the progress and uplift of humanity. If America is to keep her freedom, the world must be free. For this reason, ten million magnificent specimens of American manhood registered for their country's service and are now waiting her call to arms. It swells our hearts with pride to think of it. Ten million Americans stand ready to reinforce the great battle of civilization that is thundering for decision upon the fields of France. Ten million Americans are waiting for that critical moment when democracy and liberty are to fight their Armageddon amid the tottering thrones and reeling dynasties of Europe.

The whole civilized world to-day honors the American flag. It is because the world has come to see in that flag the last and best hope of poor, suffering humanity—the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.

Americans, on this Fourth of July give ear to this truth: In the days of the Roman Empire, to be a Roman citizen, was greater than to be king. To-day it is equally true—to be an American citizen is greater than to be the ruler of the proudest kingdom of Europe. Let us not forget our glorious past in this dark hour. Let us not grow faint-hearted nor discouraged. Who of us would not prefer death, a thousand times than see our freedom sacrificed to the Emperor of Germany and his so-called Kultur, which is only another word for tyranny? Who of us would not rather die than see our independence crushed beneath the heel of a foreign despot?

Then let us look up to God in these trying days. Let us look to Him who has guided this country through all her trials. Let us sing the song of one who in another dark hour shook off a tyrant's power—the song of Martin Luther:

O God our strength in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our refuge from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home.

Let us look to our flag, and while we look at it let us remember, that wherever it has gone on the field of battle, the bugle that accompanied it never blew defeat. As it conquered the curse of slavery in the South, as it wiped out the tyranny of despotism in Cuba and in the Philippines so will it now destroy forever the wild ambition of that power-mad monarch on the throne of the German Empire, who has plunged the world into horror and butchery.

It would be out of keeping with the sentiment of patriotism this day awakens in the hearts of every true American were I to make no mention of the great man that rules over us, President Woodrow Wilson. The noble, magnanimous Wilson. He is the living embodiment of the words of Marcus Brutus, the greatest statesman of the Roman Empire. Brutus faced the darkest hour in the history of Rome with these heroic words upon his lips:

Set honor in one eye and death in the other,
And I will look upon both indifferently
For let the gods so speed me,
I love honor more than I fear death.

Wilson uttered the same thought when he said: "War is a fearful thing, but the right is more precious than peace."

For nearly three years our President has been in the thick of the fiery conflict. To withstand such bitter criticism as has been hurled at him requires greater courage than to face the enemy on the field of battle. When frightful activities were committed against the honor of this country upon the high seas, the cry of the Nation was "To Arms," "To Arms," and while these activities burned into his brain in letters of agony, his aim was to keep this Nation out of war if he could. Despite the venomous attacks that were made on him and his policy, he put his trust in the Great Ruler and pursued his onward way. The country grew impatient with him yet he held fast to the course he believed was for the country's best good. I doubt if in the history of the United States any occupant of the Presidency was ever reviled as President Wilson was reviled. True, three of his predecessors were martyred, but there are some things harder to bear than martyrdom. One of them is to face from day to day bitter and shameful attacks, all undeserved, to be misrepresented and misunderstood. To bear all this with calm mind and unruffled brow, to utter no word of retaliation, this, I say, is greater than martyrdom.

But all is changed now. We no longer hear President Wilson spoken of as a man fit only for the small task of a professor's chair, and the limitations of a classroom. He looms up as the greatest statesman of the age. The old governments of Europe, Russia, England, France and far-away Japan, have sent their commissions to the White House to confer with him and to ask his council and guidance. Nearly the whole world is at his feet, and from the bleeding hearts of mothers in Europe, and from the soul-sick soldiers in the trenches, a cry is making its way to the White House to the occupant there, "Watchman, tell us, what of the night?" Europe knows, as we all know, that the brunt of this war has fallen upon the United States, and the United States must bring the horror to a finish, and God strengthening her, she will do it. And when that day comes and come it will, the stars and stripes wherever it waves, will wave with a new luster. It will not only be the flag of America but inasmuch as it represents the best freedom humanity has known, it will be the flag of the world.

War is terrible! It is all that one of the great generals in our civil war, described it to be: "War is hell." It was because he realized all this, President Wilson struggled heart and soul, to keep this Nation out of the frightful massacre. If we would enter the war at all, he would have us enter it, not with the weapons of slaughter, but with the blessings of peace. He would have us, as a peaceful Nation, bind up the wounds of the poor, bleeding Europe. He would have us send, out of our abundance, food to feed the starving mouths of women and children. He would have us, as a people, stand solidly for humanity, and bear all things, and suffer all things for humanity's sake. It was this thought he had in mind when he wrote his message to Congress: "A Nation can be so right it should be too proud to fight." Greater words never fell from the lips of any ruler. America is just beginning to see the meaning and the greatness of them. They will go down in history and will be remembered so long as this war is remembered, and when will it be forgotten? What the President meant when he uttered these words was that force can never conquer force.

These words are but the echo of words uttered by the Prince of Peace, two thousand years ago in Old Judea, "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

With such a man at the helm of state we can take heart and look forward with faith and with hope. A new day is dawning for humanity, and America is ushering it in. Let us pray that before another Fourth of July comes round, we shall behold written large over Europe a new Declaration of Independence, written by the hand of American freedom. A Declaration of Independence that will be the emancipation of old dynasties from slavery of despotism, and the German people from the tyranny of militarism. Let us put our trust in God and wait.

For conquer we must when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto, "In God is our trust."
The Star Spangled Banner in triumph shall wave,
O'er the lands of the globe, and the homes of the brave.

THE STAFF

Edited by ARTHUR H. MILLS, 1514 W. Short St., Independence, Mo.

Some Plans for our Future Work

We believe that it is apparent to even the laity that the church's music work is growing; but to those actively engaged in its more extensive conduct and development, this growth is not only real and vigorous, but in a measure surprising. Enthusiasm is "contagious," but this really desirable "infection" is "spreading" and we trust that in time the entire mass of the church will be affected, with "immunity" rare and exceptional.

But it is not our purpose to write at length about our growth, for we have in mind a more important as well as pleasing subject—to tell you about one of our plans for good things to come.

Not so very long ago it became evident that the choir movement work required a channel of publicity through which it might reach the general church public more effectively. The management of the HERALD was generous when appealed to, kindly granting space to the amount of two pages each month; and "The Staff" came into being. It is not very much of a publication so far as size goes, but we are assured it has met with favor among HERALD readers.

But we have kept on growing which, you will admit, is unquestionably our duty; and now we have outgrown the limited confines of our HERALD allotment of two pages.

So we have had to again go to the HERALD management, and we found their hearts were not hardened. Although unable to grant us a larger allotment of space, we have arranged with them whereby we can more widely and effectively reach the people of the church with our music work.

The columns of "The Staff" will be devoted to, first of all, the necessary routine of its work, which on account of its character must appear regularly. As nearly as we can forecast, it will consist largely of the following:

(1) Editorials: we hope to make these pertinent and not of undue length.

(2) A "news" department, containing news items of our various musical activities that are of general interest. Items of only local interest must be barred. District and branch choristers, orchestra leaders—in fact all musical workers are urged to send us "news."

(3) Special articles or announcements by the general officers of the choir movement.

(4) Miscellaneous: this is a broad term, embracing a lot of things, such as special items or articles for the department, announcements, programs, comments, clippings, etc.

It will be seen from the foregoing that we intend to make "The Staff" columns of general interest in that they shall furnish a knowledge of what is going on musically in our church, stimulate musical activity and development, and a healthy degree of musical emulation and rivalry.

There is another class of musical material, however, that is not provided for in the foregoing outline: the special article, treating some particular feature of music work. We are very mindful of the importance and value of such material, and not only want to provide for its appearance but encourage its production. Articles of real merit (mark this qualification well) are eagerly desired and will be gladly used. Some of them will appear in the articles department of the HERALD; others in Autumn Leaves. The character of the article, as well as availability of space, will determine its disposition; decision as to this last, resting with those in charge.

So now we urge all who are interested in promoting the music work of the church to send us articles upon musical subjects, particularly articles pertinent to that work. If you have burning within your mind some subject, or experience, or problem, that you are convinced will be of value or profit in our music work, let us have the benefit of your ideas. Do not neglect to write because you fear you will not be able to express yourself grammatically, or clothe your thoughts in choice language; your shortcomings in that regard can be easily remedied in the work of editing. Let your chief consideration be that what you say shall have merit and be of real interest.

Are you willing to help us? We feel that you are.

ARTHUR H. MILLS, Editor.

Community Singing

Within the last few years there has sprung into action in many parts of the country what might be styled a popular musical impulse, the nature of which is to impel the people of any given community to gather at some public place and sing the songs that have been woven into their hearts. The origin of this movement is ascribed to a Mr. Harry Barnhard, of New York City, formerly of Kansas, who has had some phenomenal results in his work. The "impulse," if it may be so called, has spread to quite an extent over the country. Given a man qualified with natural powers of leadership, who intuitively senses the psychic forces and moods of the massed crowd, also a suitable place for the assembling of that crowd, and you have about all that is necessary for the work of community singing; for the crowd naturally comes to do its part of the work in singing.

It does not take much to fit one for the work of participating in a community "sing." Everybody goes with his "instrument" (the voice) ready at hand, and kind nature has endowed nearly everyone with enough skill on this instrument to enable him to "carry a tune." A responsive heart that will vibrate to familiar strains, a willing mind and mouth—and there you are. People who go to these "sings," after the first visit of curiosity, generally do so because their hearts have led them there. They cluster around the leader, ostensibly to listen; they hear the beloved songs that have become part of the fabric of the human heart, and before they are aware they are singing themselves, and the cares of the past forgotten. The familiar strains of "Swanee River," "Annie Laurie," "Old Kentucky Home," etc., are born again for them, renewed and refreshed. They sing these time-honored treasures with keen enjoyment, and from them gradually merge into things more pretentious.

It "goes without saying" that the leader is the most important factor in the success of community singing, for without a leader endowed with the peculiar qualities necessary the people will not respond, but the crowd furnishes the study and is itself the chief interest. You find yourself pondering where they all came from; why they came in such numbers; in what way does the singing of the old-fashioned songs appeal so much to them. But you are driven to the inevitable conclusion that on the one hand there is something in music that reaches the hearts of people; and on the other hand there are impulses in the hearts of people that demand expression through the medium of music. We are wondering if the spirit of community singing has not in some way a place in our gospel plan, and its development a real possibility for our church work.

While east this summer we had an excellent opportunity to see community singing in its actual operation. Our general chorister, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, is actively interested in community singing work in Philadelphia, and it seems that he has captured the principal forces of that city for his work, having secured the support of some influential musical people there. At Hunting Park on the first Sunday we were there, we were privileged to be present at the regular weekly "sing." The crowd grew until there were from three thousand to four thousand of them massed in a large semicircle in front of the director, Brother Hoxie, and they sang with fervor and enjoyment. It was evident that they sang because they loved to sing. Again, at the Navy Yard on the following Thursday evening, this "sing" was repeated, with, of course, a different personnel in the singing force, the crowd this time being largely composed of officers, sailors and marines, giving it the appropriate spirit of war time.

Out of community singing is bound to come something, we cannot yet say what. Possibly it may be large choruses built more upon the community plan and endowed with the community spirit; probably it will be an influence in the development of community projects in which the people are brought closer together; but certainly it will be an increased love for and interest in music as a potential factor in the development of the race.

We are going to keep our eye on the development of community music and suggest that you do so too. Brother Hoxie is more than half persuaded that in it are some elements and possibilities of real importance to our church and its work and is alertly watching for the unfolding of such into concrete forms. We shall look forward to the time when, as a result of his experience and observation, he shall be able to give us something of value, both in the way of knowledge and its application, that shall be of real use to the church in its work.

In Prospect

SOME GOOD THINGS IN STORE FOR YOU IN THE NEAR FUTURE

We now have on hand some excellent articles, well written and pertinent to our work, that we propose to give you soon. These articles will be quite helpful to our musical workers, and we urge that all interested be on the watch for them and digest them when they shall appear.

For our choir interests we have three special articles, which will appear in the HERALD columns in the dates noted. The first one, "How may a choir assist a branch," is by Brother H. A. Scott, president of the branch at Omaha, Nebraska. It deals with the work of the choir from the viewpoint of the pastor in charge of the branch. Look for it in the HERALD of to-day. The second article, "The choir, from the choir loft," is by Brother Mark H. Siegfried, bishop of the Independence Stake, who, when he is not busy "bishopsing," sings in the Stone Church choir at Independence. It deals with the duties of choir members as viewed from their point of vision. This article will appear in the HERALD for November 7. The third and last article of the series is "The most successful choir," by Sister Minnie E. Scott, of the First Saint Joseph, Missouri, Branch. Sister Scott endeavors to convince us that the greatest factor in the success of our choirs is the spiritual element of consecration, and her article carries the impress of one who knows. It will be found in the HERALD of November 21.

Our orchestra forces are not forgotten in this providence of good things and for them we have two excellent articles treating upon orchestral problems. These are to be published in Autumn Leaves in the issues as noted. Those of our orchestra workers who may not be taking the Leaves should arrange to get the numbers containing these articles, that they may not fail to read them. Better still, send in your subscription for the Leaves, for there may be a number of good musical things appear in it in the future.

The first article, "First experiences with a Sunday school orchestra," by Brother Harry W. Tilden, superintendent of the First Saint Joseph, Missouri, Sunday School, tells of the very interesting and actual experiences of Brother Tilden in developing the possibilities in his school into a real working orchestra. We feel that they will aid others who may be wanting to know how they may build up an orchestra for service. It will appear in Autumn Leaves soon, likely in the January number. The second article is by Brother Joseph H. Anthony, of Lamoni, Iowa, on the subject of "The combined orchestra." In it Brother Anthony touches upon some of the problems of orchestra development, and the real future possibilities for the church in such development. Brother Anthony is now in the faculty of Graceland, giving instruction on the various orchestral instruments, and we trust his labors will hasten the realization of some of our cherished hopes for future orchestral development. Look for his article in the Autumn Leaves, during the early winter.

From Here and There

Brethren M. F. and C. A. Ralston, of Wiley, Colorado, have each sent us program of a sacred cantata, "The light everlasting," by James D. Gillette, recently rendered by the Saints' choir at Wiley. This program of four pages is very tastefully arranged. The first page contains title of the cantata, with the names of Miss Nina Arnold, directress, and Miss Alice Burgess, pianist. The two center pages contain the listed parts and numbers of the cantata, while the last page is devoted to the personnel of the choir, the arrangement of voices indicating that it is well balanced.

The Brethren Ralston report that the cantata was a real success, much enthusiastic praise being received from outsiders as well as members for its rendition.

We were pleased to receive this program showing the activity of one of our western choirs. Incidentally, we hope to receive programs from everyone of our choirs or musical organizations whenever a special musical production is given. Also, we wish more of our choirs would follow the example of the Wiley choir and present special musical offerings outside of their regular work. Their production brings real returns in added skill, interest and culture.

Sister Louise Evans, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, chorister of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, has been making an extended tour through Canada, and has, in connection with her other work, labored for the advancement of the church's music as she journeyed. She reports as having the best spiritual "liberty" in her efforts in this line; that the people are eager to hear and anxious to develop in the musical work of the church, and that the musical spirit is burning in the hearts of many.

Some encouraging improvement is reported in the condition of Sister Lola Johnson, chorister of the Holden Stake, but she is not yet able to resume her work.

The choirs of the Independence Stake are now working in their combined form, under the direction of Sister Cordie Hulmes, the stake chorister, busily engaged in mastering the oratorio, "Elijah," the masterpiece for next General Conference. It is proposed to develop the numerical strength of this combined choir largely in excess of previous efforts, and the call is now being sounded for those who will join in the great work.

From Eastern Maine and Western California come encouraging reports of choir activity, that indicate much development and growth for the good of the church. Is your choir active?

Our "Aid" Departments!

The relief and service work of the past has largely been carried on by the aid society workers, for they have been the money gatherers of the church among the women, and in many places have paid for the property on which their church stands and have kept the house of the Lord neat and comfortable with the means they have collected.

The relief and service work of the future will also be in the hands of the aid society workers, and we suggest now that the name of your organization be changed to Relief and Service Bureau, and as you change your name, that you change also your aim to real relief and service work, relieving the poor, sewing for the needy, visiting the sick, cooperating with the president of your branch in caring for his flock, visiting new members who have entered your branch, and coordinating with the bishop in all money matters.

We would suggest further that each organization look up the copy of the DAILY HERALD which was printed during the General Conference, and read aloud at your next meeting the talk of Brother McGuire, our Presiding Bishop, on the raising of money. As far as possible we should all fall in line and lend our aid and support to him.

Read Devine's Misery and its Causes, Principles of Relief, and Efficiency and Relief, and study the labor problems. Let us study real relief and service work in the light of modern charity, and cease to lap and overlap in our giving.

One thought more and that will be enough for the present. In many branches we have been having a yearly rummage sale. Let us try a new plan this year. Collect the discarded garments as before; take them into a small storehouse prepared for this work. Clean them, press them, mend them, or make them over into needed garments for the needy. You will thus do a great deal more good than you can with the few dollars made at the rummage sale. Material will be high this winter, and the poor will suffer more than in other years; so why not begin now to prepare to make life better for our own? Let some seek out the needy, finding out their wants; let others gather up the surplus for the storehouse, and still others do the necessary repair work or make the needed changes.

So may we all be workers together in the building up of Zion,—each one fitting into the place she best can fill, and all willing to serve each other.

President General Auxiliary.

A Tooth and Its Care--Part 2

(The second installment of a practical paper written by Doctor G. W. Rodgers, of Sedalia, Missouri.)

When the child becomes about five years old the roots of the anterior temporary teeth have become decalcified, or absorbed, giving room for the slowly erupting permanent teeth. After this absorption the crowns of the temporary teeth become loose and in most cases may be plucked off with the fingers or with a string. Many times the cusps of the permanent tooth may be seen upon removal of the first tooth. The incisors of the permanent teeth are erupted from the fifth to the seventh year normally, and about the sixth year the first permanent molar arrives just back of the last temporary molar. This tooth, the first permanent molar, is often mistaken for a baby tooth by the parents and thus neglected until it has to be removed. There are but ten temporary teeth in each jaw, and the size of this new molar too, would indicate it was not a first tooth. If it is taken out there is a lack of development of the arch, and subsequent erupted teeth come in in malocclusion, or in other words they do not come in improper relation to the opposing teeth and consequently do not give the proper service in mastication. Even the first teeth should be given the necessary care to keep the child free from pain. Keep the child happy, for sorrow enough will come in after life. The removal of a temporary tooth too soon will cause the permanent teeth to arrive in a crowded, irregular condition; likewise the retention of a first tooth beyond the time for extraction will cause a malocclusion. If you are in doubt, consult a dentist; he will advise you best from the conditions he finds within that mouth.

At the end of the thirteenth or fourteenth year, all the permanent teeth have erupted except the third molar, or "wisdom tooth" so called, which may come anywhere from the age of 16 to 60. Right here I might say a word about this so-much-dreaded tooth. I know not why it should receive the name it has, unless it is the experience it gives its possessor during its eruption, its short life, and its removal. This tooth is considered by nearly everyone as a useless part of one's anatomy; but the fact is, it is as good and servicable a tooth as any in the same mouth, if there is room for it, and the owner will keep it clean. True in some mouths there is not room for it to erupt properly, thus leaving small pockets under the free margin of the gum in which particles of food lodge and ferment, thus keeping up a continual inflammation. In such cases it should be extracted. But the real reason is, there is not one person in a thousand that will take the necessary time and pains to keep the posterior part of the mouth clean, and especially the wisdom tooth. It being in an ideal location for food and secretions to lodge causes it to rapidly decay, with the resulting toothache, inflamed and swollen gums, and increased pain in extracting. This part of the mouth should be watched very carefully during the eruption of the wisdom tooth as very serious conditions may arise from infection in this area. It will as the man said who came into the office the other day who could speak but little English, "Sick tooth, make sick all over"! In other words a sick tooth makes a sick mouth; a sick mouth makes a sick stomach; a sick stomach makes a sick body; and a sick body makes a sick spirit;—all because of a little neglect!

This calls to mind a case that came under my care and observation about a year and a half ago. A boy about 18 came into my office so completely bundled up with shawls and scarfs that there was but a small opening through which he could see with one eye. My first thought was, he either had a very bad tooth or he sure had a large imagination. He had not removed all of his bundling, however, before I realized it was more than imagination, for one eye was swollen shut, and I could not pass my little finger between his teeth, so nearly closed had the swelling forced his jaws. The skin upon his cheek was stretched from swelling, to the tightness of a drum. This trouble had come from a neglected wisdom tooth, which had been lanced by his physician some 12 days before. It had to be lanced twice upon the face, (in front of the ear and on the margin of the lower jaw) besides two incisions within the mouth. He could not eat, and his body was being completely poisoned by the pus absorbed into his system. With the aid of his physician in helping his system to eliminate the poison, I was able, in about four weeks, to reduce the swelling enough to obtain room to extract the tooth. In two more weeks, after removing a number of pieces of necrosed or dead bone he was on what seemed to be the sure road to recovery. That boy needs no reminder that his teeth need care, for he is thankful to-day that he is still alive.

"WHO AM I?"

"I am more powerful than the combined rivers of the world. I have destroyed more men than all the wars of the nations. I am more deadly than bullets and I have wrecked more homes than the mightiest of siege guns. I spare no one and find my victims among the rich and poor alike, the young and old, the strong and weak. I loom up to such proportions that I cast my shadow over every field of labor. I lurk in unseen places, and do most of my work silently. You are warned against me, but you heed not—I am relentless—I am everywhere—in the home, on the streets, in the factory, at the railroad crossings, and on the sea. I bring sickness, degradation and death and yet few seek to avoid me. I destroy, crush and maim. I give nothing but take all. I am your worst enemy. I am Carelessness."

I suppose some may wonder what is decay? Some early writers hold the theory that the decay of a tooth was due to an inflammation within the tooth causing it to break down, and that the disease progressed from within, outward. Others thought it was the chemical action of the saliva upon the surface; but this could not be for the reason that if the chemical action was strong enough to affect the enamel it would also attack the soft tissues. In reality, decay is indirectly caused by a disease germ. You will notice if your teeth have not been brushed during the day, or when you arise in the morning, there is a slightly rough film covering your teeth. You cannot see it but you can feel it with your tongue. Within this film the germs of decay find lodgment and start to work immediately. It is not the germ itself that causes decay but its products. In their propagation they produce a lactic acid, which, being held within the mass of gelatine-like substance produced by the micro-organisms, exerts its full strength upon the enamel; thus the acid, held in its full strength in contact with the tooth, decomposes the mineral substance of the enamel leaving a depression, into which the germs themselves enter. If this acid were liberated in sufficient quantity upon the soft tissues of the mouth without being diluted by the saliva, it would also have its decomposing effect. Then these germs of decay are also propagated and communicated to the interior of the tooth, by particles of food that find lodgment between the teeth and within the pits and fissures of the grinding surfaces. This fermenting food together with heat and moisture of the mouth form an ideal culture for their growth. After they have once entered the tooth, their growth is much more rapid. These micro-organisms are found in all mouths,—some to a greater extent than others, due to natural conditions, and the care with which the tooth is used and brushed. Less than ten per cent of mouths are immune from decay while over ninety per cent have decay. If this film is allowed to remain upon the teeth it becomes thick and hard, forming what is known as a calcareous deposit, often called tartar. This deposit is composed largely of inorganic precipitates coming mostly from the fluids of the mouth; but within this also is found such enemies as decayed or decaying food, waste cells from the mucous membrane, and myriads of micro-organisms of all kinds.

(To be concluded next week.)

Saving Mothers

More women 15 to 45 years of age die from conditions connected with childbirth than from any disease except tuberculosis. About 15,000 deaths from maternal causes occur annually in the United States, and the available figures for this country show no decrease in the maternal death rate since 1900. Maternal deaths are largely preventable by proper care and skilled attendance.

These 15,000 deaths do not measure the full extent of the waste. They are merely a rough index of unmeasured preventable illness and suffering among mothers. Furthermore, certain diseases of early infancy are closely connected with the health of the baby's mother and the maternity care she has received, and these diseases cause about one-third of all the deaths occurring among babies under one year of age. More than 75,000 babies die each year from this group of diseases because they do not have a fair start in life.

The life and health of the mother are in every way important to the well-being of her children. Breast feeding through the greater part of the baby's first year is his chief protection from all diseases, and mothers are much more likely to be able to nurse their babies successfully if they receive proper care before, at, and after childbirth.

The expectant mother should at once consult a physician. She should remain under supervision so that any dangerous symptom may be discovered as soon as it appears. She should learn how to take care of herself, and she should have proper food and rest and freedom from anxiety. When the baby is born the mother needs trained attendance. A difficult maternity case is one of the gravest surgical emergencies. Many people do not seem to understand that in any case complications may arise which can be met safely by prompt and skillful scientific care but which at the hands of an unskilled attendant may cost the life of mother or child or both. Even after confinement the mother needs continued supervision and rest until her strength has returned.

Thousands of mothers, both in city and country, do not have the essentials of safety, partly, perhaps chiefly because they do not realize the dangers involved in lack of care or else accept the dangers as unavoidable. Many women are at present unable to obtain proper care, but when all women and their husbands understand its importance and demand it for every mother, physicians will furnish it, medical colleges will provide better obstetrical training for physicians, and communities will see to it that mothers are properly protected.

Little has been done as yet to show women that much of the waste of mothers' lives and health is unnecessary. Even less has been undertaken by communities to provide protection for them. Many communities which have studied their typhoid and tuberculosis death rates and have undertaken costly measures to reduce them have been heedless of the death rates among mothers. It is not strange therefore that since 1900 the typhoid rate for the country as a whole has been cut in half, and the rate from tuberculosis has been markedly reduced, while the death rate from maternal causes has shown no demonstrable decrease.

Just how the importance of adequate maternity care is to be made plain to a community, and just how skilled care and instruction are to be made available for all mothers, are of course local questions to be considered by each community. The prenatal clinics and prenatal nursing which are being developed in many cities suggest a method of supervision and instruction which might well be extended. Even in cities where such work is carried on and where good hospitals are numerous, the number of mothers reached is small in comparison with the number who bear their children without adequate care.

Difficulties are perhaps greatest in rural districts where the sheer inaccessibility of a physician is often added to the other elements of the problem. Here a public nursing service with headquarters at the county seat, or other accessible town, would probably be the first step, placing at the service of every expectant mother a visiting nurse who is especially equipped to give her information about personal care and to watch for symptoms of trouble demanding medical advice. As such a nursing service develops, its headquarters might become, with the cooperation of physicians, a sort of maternal and child-welfare center to which not only expectant mothers but also mothers with babies could come for instruction, examination, and advice. If no general hospital were conveniently near, a cottage hospital for mothers and babies might ultimately form a part of such a center.

A more general use of existing provisions for scientific maternity care and the extension of provisions for such care in all types of communities should serve to reduce the number of deaths among mothers and babies and to improve the health and general condition of children throughout the country. A full discussion of the causes and prevention of maternal deaths and an analysis of available statistics, are contained in a report on Maternity Mortality, published by the Children's Bureau.

The following Children's Bureau publications are of special interest in connection with the work for the welfare of mothers and babies and may be obtained upon request from the Children's Bureau, Washington, District of Columbia:

Birth Registration: An aid in protecting the lives and rights of children. 20 pp., 3d ed., 1914. Bureau publication No. 2. Tells why every birth ought to be registered with local authorities.

Prenatal Care, by Mrs. Max West. 41 pp., 4th ed., 1915. Bureau publication No. 4. Describes the care a mother should have before her baby comes.

New Zealand Society for the Health of Women and Children: An example of methods of baby-saving work in small towns and rural districts. 18 pp., 1914. Bureau publication No. 6.

Infant Care, by Mrs. Max West. 87 pp., 1914. Bureau publication No. 8. Tells a mother how to take care of her baby through the first two years.

Infant Mortality: Results of a field study in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, based on births in one calendar year, by Emma Duke. 93 pp. and 9 pp. illustrated, 1915. Bureau publication No. 9.

Infant Mortality, Montclair, New Jersey: A study of infant mortality in a suburban community. 36 pp., 1915. Bureau publication No. 11.

Infant Mortality: Results of a field study in Manchester, New Hampshire, based on births in one year, by Beatrice Sheets Duncan and Emma Duke. Bureau publication No. 20. (In press.)

The Johnstown, Montclair, and Manchester reports show something of the home and community conditions which endanger babies' lives.

Baby-Week Campaigns (Revised edition): 144 pp. and 15 pp. illustrated, 1917. Bureau publication No. 15. Tell how a week (or a day) may be used to show a community what it ought to do for its babies and mothers.

A Tabular Statement of Infant-Welfare Work by Public and Private Agencies in the United States, by Etta R. Goodwin. 114 pp., 1916. Bureau publication No. 16. List of infant-welfare agencies and their activities in cities having a population of 10,000 or over.

Maternal Mortality from all Conditions Connected with Childbirth in the United States and Certain Other Countries, by Grace L. Meigs, M. D. 66 pp., 1917. Bureau publication No. 19. Discuss causes and prevention of deaths in childbirth and reviews available statistics.

How to Conduct a Children's Health Conference, by Frances Sage Bradley, M. D., and Florence Brown Sherbon, M. D. Bureau publication No. 23. (In press.)—Government Bulletin.

What Americans Should Eat

AMERICAN WAR BREADS

The war breads used in Europe consist chiefly of entire grains instead of the white flours. German war bread at times contains potatoes or turnips. America should adopt war breads made of entire grains with an addition to the wheat products of corn meal and corn flour.

WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR SITUATION

Whole wheat and graham breads and flours are now sold at higher prices than fine flour and fine flour breads. The actual process of manufacture is much cheaper, both because it requires simpler milling and because it retains the bran and middlings, now sold as low price stock feeds. The best whole wheat flour is merely ground wheat and the grinding process is simple enough that whole wheat mills can be quickly set up and operated anywhere.

MILLING INDUSTRY BY-PRODUCTS

As some people will insist on having white flour, the milling by-products, such as bran, shorts, middlings, and "red dog," all of which are now used as stock feeds, may be turned to human account in various dietetic forms.

WAR TIMES BREAKFAST FOODS

Most low cost food campaigns feature rice. Rice is good, but rolled wheat, barley and rye, pearly barley, cracked wheat and various hominies, samps and grits are all cheaper and just as good.

CORN PRODUCTS

In all other nations wheat, barley and rye are as cheap as any grain. In the United States, Indian corn, and more recently, the various sorts of Kaffir corns, are grown at much less than the cost of producing the grains of the wheat family. Corn to-day is worth but sixty-five per cent of the value of wheat and is practically equivalent to it from a nutritional standpoint. Old-fashioned lye hominy is dirt cheap and would make a great hit with every farm-raised New Yorker. It is our patriotic duty now to eat more corn and release our wheat for the use of our allies in Europe, whose people do not know how to use corn, and cannot be expected to quickly adopt it.

SKIMMED MILK AND BUTTERMILK

Skimmed milk and buttermilk are excellent sources of animal protein, but are now lost to human nutrition, being chiefly employed in hog feeding. They can be utilized in numerous ways: when supplemented with cottonseed oil, they become efficient substitutes for whole milk.

COTTONSEED AND OTHER VEGETABLE OILS

From a nutritive standpoint, cottonseed oil is an absolute equivalent of olive oil and butter, but great prejudice exists against the newer and cheaper in favor of the more established forms of food fats. Olive oil is a superlative food, but there is not enough to go around. The use of cotton seed or peanut oil could be made to replace much of the animal fat, saving the enormous waste involved in feeding ten units of nutrition to an animal merely to get back one pound of food in more tasty form.

GLUCOSE

From the standpoint of nutrition, glucose made from corn starch is the equivalent of cane sugar, and is our most economical form of sweet, but because of popular prejudice it is not yet honestly utilized as a food product. Glucose is as unlimited as the corn crop. Glucose is more closely related to the natural sugar of fruit than is cane sugar. It is, in fact, the exact chemical equivalent of the sugar of the blood.

VEGETABLE PROTEIN FOODS

Soy beans and black-eyed cow peas are well-known sources of vegetable protein in stock feeding; they are also fit for human foods, as the writer can testify from abundant experimentation in the use of them. We should have them on the retail market and learn how to use them on our daily bill-of-fare.—From "Suggested war-time food economies," by Milo Hastings in June Physical Culture.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Christmas Offering--Roll of Honor

Dear Coworkers: We are entering now on the last quarter of the present year, the time is short for the work we have before us. Thus far those from whom we have heard have shown a wonderful increase in the Christmas offering. If you have been reading these columns carefully you will have noted some most excellent reports, a sure and positive proof that some of our schools are going to do their part.

We wish to take this opportunity of thanking the schools for the support they have given us thus far, and to show you that we appreciate the fact that you have done well and that you are capable of doing much, we are going to ask that we put behind us all thought of what we have done, whether it be much or little, and that from this moment on let us put our shoulders to the wheel and make it buzz with enthusiasm of earnest endeavor. Let us make it buzz and buzz until the enthusiasm begins to radiate from it and reaches all our Sunday schools, rousing them to earnest action. We all want this debt "wiped out" there is only one way to "wipe it out" and that is for everyone to do his or her part. Some of our schools have already done their part and have already raised more than two dollars per member, yet they are still working. What has your school done? Have you done your share? If not what are you going to do? Surely you do not intend to let these schools work on alone until they have done their share and your share, too.

This is a grand work, we all enjoy it when we enter into it in the proper spirit. The work is a great pleasure and is not a labor when all are working. It only becomes a labor when one is trying to do the work of two or three, then it is not only laborious but it tends to discourage the earnest workers.

We have done nobly thus far—our work is for a noble cause—it is worthy a more noble effort and we shall look forward to even greater returns.

We wish to call your attention to the excellent report of the Tulare, California, Sunday school. Have they not done most splendidly?

Yours for a greater offering,

A. W. SMITH,

Second Assistant General Sunday School Superintendent.

The Sagle, Idaho, school has $39.04 and still going.

The Wheeling, West Virginia, school had a good offering last year—$42.34, but on September 16 had raised $44.46. They expect to make it $100. Some of the offering is in the bank, drawing four per cent interest and some five. They use a roll of honor in the school and also use the blackboard freely.

The First Detroit, Michigan, school raised $225 last year. They set out to make it $420 this time, which would be $2 for each member. At the end of the third quarter they had $299.

At Highland Park, Michigan, they have at time of reporting, about $75.

The La Junta, Colorado, school reports $50 and trying to raise $75.

From Louisville, Kentucky, there is a report of $33.74 raised.

The Anamosa, Iowa, Branch has a little school, and they have raised $9.63.

From Hiteman, Iowa, they report that last year they had over $37, while now they have $204 and expect to raise the $2 apiece, which will mean $252.

Tulare, California, have sent in $218.27 and have another quarter in which to add to it. The school lacks only a few cents of raising $4 apiece, all feeling the need of giving, and doing it cheerfully.

Nauvoo Reunion

The Nauvoo District reunion was held at Montrose, Iowa, from August 24 to September 2, inclusive. The camp was in the school park, an attractive, level situation, with good water supply, and no great distance from the business part of town. Montrose is opposite historic Nauvoo, which drew our people en masse for an afternoon of sightseeing, by ferry and automobiles.

The attendance was better than for some years past, and our bishop reported the outcome financially thoroughly gratifying.

Brethren Frederick A. Smith and Heman Smith were invited speakers present throughout the reunion session, and Brother J. A. Gillen responded to call and arrived for the last three days. Of local ministry, the following were in attendance: Brother D. J. Williams, pastor of Burlington Branch and District President, Bishop George P. Lambert, Brother C. J. Smith, district missionary, and Brother H. N. Snively of Burlington.

The priesthood meetings, held daily at 7.30 a. m., were reported as among the most interesting sessions. The prayer services which followed at 9 a. m., were well attended, and the feeling was good. There was good response from local workers for the auxiliary sessions each day at 9.45, some of the features of which may possibly be reported through the Sunday school department. This work was in charge of district auxiliary officers. The preaching services, morning and evening were also well attended, a number of outsiders meeting with us for the evening services. Two were baptized during the reunion, and it is hoped others are near the step.

The afternoons until 4.30, were devoted to recreation, followed by choir practice.

Dedication at Wheeling, West Virginia

October 7, 1917, marks an event of more than ordinary importance in the history of the Wheeling Branch. Having paid off the mortgage on the church building it was presented to the Lord as a house of worship. The dedication was in charge of Apostle G. T. Griffiths, who organized the branch in 1883 and was the first president of it. There were fourteen members to begin the work of securing ground and building the first house of worship which was erected on the river bank just south of the Wheeling city line. In face of many obstacles the work grew and the number increased until the record contained almost 200 names. Changed conditions finally made it necessary to leave that locality, and with the assistance of divine direction a lot on the corner of Jacob and Forty-second Streets was purchased for $1,950. It required some time to pay that. After considering various plans of buildings in consultation with Brother Griffiths, the committee finally made selection and proceeded to erect the present edifice. That committee consisted of O. J. Tary, L. A. Serig, Joseph E. Ebeling, J. F. A. Smith and Russell Kennedy.

The building was opened for worship on August 20, 1905, Bishop E. L. Kelley preaching the sermon and Brother R. M.

Elvin offered the consecration prayer. The cost of building and furnishings approximated $4,500. It was necessary to mortgage the property to the extent of $3,000 and the liquidation of this burden was attended with much anxiety during a number of years when times were dull and money hard to get. Sometimes it was about all that could be done to meet the interest. Two extraordinary floods, the last one in 1913 reaching a stage of six feet of water on the floor, damaged the property and furnishings several hundreds of dollars. Brother L. A. Serig being chosen branch president about this time, began the work of repairing the flood damage with undaunted courage. In this he was ably assisted by a number of young men, and some older ones. Brother Roy Smith, with some assistance, did the painting. He rendered valuable service in preparing the house for dedication, also. Elder O. L. Martin in charge of varnishing the pews and other interior work; Brethren Jessie Winship, Samuel Martin, John Kimble and others rendered valuable aid. The sisters also contributed both in work and in raising money, in a manner that reflects credit on their zeal and earnestness. An expense of $250 was incurred in preparing the house for dedication. That which had not previously been secured was quickly secured in answer to the appeal of Brother Serig at the close of the service Sunday afternoon. And, at last the Saints are rejoicing in the work accomplished and the release from the financial burden the debt imposed.

We had hoped to have Bishop McGuire with us, but in his absence Bishop Becker creditably represented him. The day was beautiful, the attendance good, and a peaceful, hallowed influence blessed the different services of the day.

Since the organization of the branch the following have occupied as presidents: G. T. Griffiths, A. M. Teagarden, L. D. Ullom, O. J. Tary, O. L. Martin and L. A. Serig, the latter being the present zealous, efficient occupant of that office. Five of the six who have occupied were present at the dedication, and presided at the sacrament and social service in the afternoon. The absent one, Brother A. M. Teagarden, having been called away by death some years ago.

In addition to having a house of worship dedicated to the Lord, the branch has a lively corps of officers who manifest a commendable earnestness and activity in caring for the work. The spiritual condition of the branch is good. The choir work, and the various auxiliaries are greatly aiding in the work generally. A number of talented young Saints are being trained for service, who are destined to be of great service to the church if they continue. Our young missionary, Brother John F. Martin, some time since began the commendable work of training a number of the Sunday school children in singing. This work is being continued by Sister Eva Smith, under whose direction the junior choir sang very creditably at the dedication services. The future looks bright for all who will arise and answer the present call to duty and active service for the Master. As we now rejoice in being able to dedicate a house to the Lord, let us all cherish more ardently, the duty of dedicating to him our talent, and our lives.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA.

Libeling One Deceased Forbidden

When the rumor gets out that a Latter Day Saint is sick, there are many conjectures as to what is the ailment and whether or not he will recover, owing of course to the severity of the sickness, for the Lord has said that, "when one suffers all suffer with him." And that very thought tends to lighten his burden, not that he wishes others to suffer, but rather because he knows he has an interest in their earnest prayers. Many letters of sympathy and hope reached me while in the Sanitarium and since, as well as a host of dear friends made personal visits—as many as sixteen in one hour while I was in the Sanitarium—to cheer, and pray with me; many prayers were offered in public for my benefit also, for all of which I feel deeply grateful and am certainly satisfied I have and am reaping the reward.

There is one thing firmly established in my mind, by my affliction, and that is that I know of no institution in the church that has endeared itself more to me than the Sanitarium and with that I may also include its staff of medical men and nurses, all of whom are filling a mission that to me seems as that of any man in the active missionary field. And with my knowledge of mission life, I find very few actively engaged therein that make as laborious a sacrifice as the physician in charge and the staff of nurses.

From the effects produced by my peculiar form of sickness, not being a physician, I concluded I had a slight stroke of paralysis, yet from the peculiar manner of the attacks I could hardly convince myself to believe it a fact. I was examined in this city by four prominent specialists in nerve trouble, three of whom could not tell me what was the real trouble; however as soon as Doctor Charles R. Ireland began his examination, he at once told me the trouble and cause thereof. The cause being overstudy and overwork. I readily saw the truth of his statements, because during January and February I kept up my conference and other regular work through Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida, and for a special course of study read about one hundred and fifty pages of the Doctrine and Covenants, two hundred of the Book of Mormon and the entire Bible, making notes on the three; then came long, heavy grind of council and General Conference sessions through March and April, and always having been blessed with a strong constitution, I had no idea of the limit of my endurance, but it came in the form of what the medical profession calls splanchnic-neurasthenia, or in common English—exhaustion of certain nerves of the body, that causes a numbness, resembling in some respects, a feeling of the flesh akin to paralysis, but altogether different in results; for with proper rest and care accompanied with electro-therapeutic treatment there is nothing to hinder a permanent recovery, though it may be somewhat slow. This was complicated with pyorrhea of the teeth. I am receiving medical treatment from Doctor Joseph Luff.

I have been administered to several times, each time receiving certain blessings and the Lord has several times spoken to me giving courage and cheer accompanied with excellent promises for the future, so that I have no fear of the final outcome. I have not forgotten the promise of the Lord that "all things work together for good to those that love and serve him," and already I see splendid blessings which have come to me and am really thankful for the blessings which have come to me in disguise; however I long to be out on the firing line again with my brethren and am praying that the time may soon come when such will be the case. I am able for one sermon every Sunday and prayer meeting Sunday and Wednesday nights.

From the time I first came in contact with this gospel and the history of its founder and his cruel persecution unto death, and still further, the ruthless attacks upon his memory by the low, degraded class of humanity who, vulture-like, seek for that which decency deems unwholesome, and who flaunt their flag to the public as those who know the true history of Joseph Smith, I have been a firm believer that when we would get our rights the name and memory of Joseph and all other worthies of the early organization would be defended by the law of the country, and he who would slander them would have to suffer, as he justly should, for libel. I have sought for legal decisions to affirm my position and am happy to say I have now found that such a law does exist in this country of equal rights. I enclose a clipping as follows:

"A statute making every malicious publication which shall tend to expose the memory of one deceased to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy as libel is held to apply in the Washington case of State v. Haffer, L. R. A. 1917C, 610, to malicious defamation of an historical character who died before the birth of anyone living at the time of the publication."—The Daily Reporter, Columbus, Ohio, September 17, 1917.

With this decision in the hands of our people from one end of the church to the other not only through the HERALD and Ensign but in pamphlet form, I am of the opinion that such vile slanderers as some of our debating opponents are, we can and will be able to make them show respect for, not only his name, but that of others whom we revere.

With anxious desire to be again physically able to take the firing line.

I remain yours very respectfully,

R. C. RUSSELL.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, 2081 Waldeck Avenue.

How Wives Can Help

In a late issue of the HERALD, page 975, is found the following question, with a complete reply by Sister R. T. Cooper: "How can wives help with church finances?"

I only wish to say (and I am glad the privilege is afforded me), that I am anxious to cast whatever influence I may have with the people of the church, in favor of the sentiment and spirit of this reply. The reply certainly covers the ground wisely and well. I trust that husbands, as well as wives, will read, or reread it. I do not hesitate for one moment to express my opinion, that if this reply meets with a careful, prayerful consideration by the husbands and wives concerned, great and untold good will be the result. We cannot, with safety, hesitate any longer. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

LAMONI, IOWA.

J. R. LAMBERT.

From Here and There

If there are any Saints at Fort Collins, Colorado, they are requested to call on Mrs. Anna Dietrich, 418 South Howe Street. She is not a member but is deeply interested in the work, we are informed.

Brother A. C. Barmore wants his HERALD sent to Silverton, Oregon, and tells that will be his address now. He says he is holding services at Silverton with fair attendance and interest. About eleven Saints reside at that place.

Already a big community choir of about a hundred voices has been gathered in Lamoni, to practice for a rendition of "The Elijah." An inspiring first meeting was held on Sunday afternoon at 4 p. m., the 14th. It is planned to meet each Sabbath at that hour.

Brother Arthur H. Mills, assistant general chorister, visited the conference of the Far West Stake at Guilford, Missouri, in the interests of the musical work of the church on the 13th. On the 17th he called at Lamoni to confer with Paul N. Craig, H. C. Burgess, and J. H. Anthony, in regard to musical interests in the stake. From here he goes to the Little Sioux, Iowa, District.

ROTHBURY HOUSE, HILL END, UPPER ARMLEY, LEEDS, YORKSHIRE, ENGLAND,

September 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: Just a word or two from far-away Yorkshire. I know there are many Saints over in the States who have a kindly feeling for Yorkshire, and I doubt not they will be glad to read a few lines from us.

I have been located here for the past twelve months, and I think I can truly say that no man ever labored in this country under such trying conditions as those that have existed during that time.

My labors have been chiefly centered in the Leeds and Bradford districts, and in common with all other parts of this mission, our ranks have been terribly depleted, so much so, that it makes our task an uphill fight all the time. This has made the Saints become discouraged, and at times almost lose heart completely.

There are but three of the ministry left here now to assist me, and when we think of the number that were once so active in the Lord's work, we sorrow to think of the many that have fallen aside.

In an attempt to revive the work here, we organized a reunion day for September 16. Brother T. Taylor kindly offered the loan of his field for the purpose, and preparation was made to hold the same in the meeting room in case of unfavorable weather.

During the week previous to the sixteenth, Brother Taylor and the writer were busy going round to the homes of the Saints collecting chairs, etc., for our services in the open. For this, we had the use of Brother Taylor's pony and cart.

September 15 came, and we were all apprehensive of the weather. The weather prophets got busy, and some declared that it would be fine on the morrow, others declared the reverse. Suddenly, as we sat contemplating going to bed, we heard the patter of rain on the windows, and our hearts sank to about fifty points below zero. A brother present declared that it were better to go to bed and have faith. However, we retired, and in our imagination we fancied that we could hear the rain pouring down in torrents the whole of the night. We arose on the morning of the sixteenth and found that whilst it was not so very promising, yet it was dry, so we felt thankful for that.

Time for meeting came, and our hearts rejoiced to find that the weather was improving wonderfully. It continued to improve, until in the afternoon and evening, it was all that could be desired. There was a very good gathering at the morning service. The speakers at the morning meeting were Priest Arthur Mayne, Elder H. Harper and Elder W. H. Greenwood. The latter occupied most of the time and spoke upon the sufferings of Job. The afternoon service was still better attended, and was in the nature of a fellowship meeting. A splendid spirit prevailed.

After this meeting the tables were laid out on the field, and a host of capable sisters got very busy preparing tea. This was a splendid opportunity for old and new friends to get together, and justice was done to the same.

After tea, several Saints gathered around the instrument which had been brought up for the day, and some beautiful songs of praise from sweet voices were raised in thanksgiving to the Lord for his goodness to us. At the evening service the time was equally divided between Elder G. W. Leggott and the writer. Brother Leggott took for his theme the text: "And his name shall be called Jesus," delivering a very inspiring discourse. The writer spoke upon "Religion in this land, before the birth of Christ and after." The testimony of all was that they had enjoyed a splendid day, and the request was frequent for a repetition of the same.

Truly, the worship of the Lord could not have been carried out under more pleasant and healthful conditions. The home of our Brother Taylor is situated right on top of one of Yorkshire's beautiful hills, and the field that we occupied, overlooked a magnificent valley that enabled one to look for miles upon the most splendid scenery.

We are hoping that in the summer time our brother will consent to us having more of these kind of meetings on his grounds, and we somehow feel sure that he will do so.

I pray that the spirit which animated the people at the reunion, will continue to be with them, and that it will cause them to awaken to their privileges.

May God bless our efforts, and help us to continue to the end.

ABEL HALL.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO, October 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: Bishop Evans paid a visit to our branch last Sunday, and in his remarks of congratulation of our church here in Niagara Falls, told us how years ago he had said there was no reason why the church here should be known not only as a place of worship, but should be known all over as a place of rest. When there were so many visitors from all over coming to see Niagara Falls we should have rest rooms where they could rest and meditate, and that our church should be full to overflowing if the Saints did their duty. To-day we had visitors from Port Coldome, Welland, and Port Dalhousie, and some from Toronto. Some brought their lunch and in our newly completed basement there were all conveniences for this. They came in the morning, visited in the afternoon and stayed for service in the evening, having a delightful day, because in our branch we have made conditions such that there is a place to rest, eat and feel at home in the house of the Lord.

The Saints who worked so hard to get the church in this condition feel their service will be nothing compared with the good that will be accomplished and the comfort it will give to Saints visiting Niagara Falls. A lady from Dalhousie was baptized this evening, and others have spoken for baptism. The work here is progressing nicely.

J. MCANINCH.

CLYDE, COLORADO, October 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since I have visited your paper. As I am so afflicted I thought some would like to hear from me. I am getting some better but in a bad condition yet. I have not the good use of my hands and arms and cannot walk yet, but do not suffer quite as much as I did. I ask an interest in your prayers that if it is God's will to heal, I may be healed; if not, his will be done.

MRS. H. A. HOUFF.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN,
October 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: I read with intense interest the letter of Brother T. W. Williams in the HERALD of October 3, and I realized the import of it. I trembled to think of the volcano on the edge of which we are standing. This is the handwriting on the wall, the events as they are coming mean much. To a reader of the signs of the times it is clear that Jesus Christ will soon be here, but "who will abide the day of his coming?" What terrible catastrophe must come before the Saints of God will wake up? "Fear shall come upon every man and the Saints shall hardly escape." (Doctrine and Covenants 63:9.) There is fear now in the hearts of many. It is coming closer and looming darker. The "hastening time" is upon us and God will cut short his work in righteousness or no flesh could stand. If this is only the "beginnings of sorrow," what must the end be? In 2 Timothy 3, there is given a clear description of our day. "Perilous times"—verily there are perils all around us, covetousness, etc.; clearly we are in the latter days.

We hear every day of automobile accidents. People killed by collisions and various ways. Surely we are in perilous times. There never was a time in history when millions were made faster than to-day. The poor are getting poorer and the rich richer. And in many instances natural affection is a thing of the past. "Lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God." Watch the crowds coming out of the theaters, especially on Sunday: a silent testimony to the fulfillment of prophecy. Daniel 12 speaks of the increase of knowledge as a sign of the latter days, also that many would run to and fro. The cars and autos whirling by are a mute testimony of the fulfilling of prophecy. Knowledge is increasing considerably. It would seem man was at the limit of his ingenuity, but it seems sad that the height of human ingenuity can only produce weapons to produce something more deadly to slay his fellow. But in the midst of all this confusion there is a gleam of light when Christ comes to reign, peace and joy and happiness will be here. But before that time comes there is much to be done to purify ourselves of many things, and pride is one of the glaring evils of the time. This evil thing has crept into the church and dares to raise its unholy head to intimidate the weak, and because of it some have got discouraged and point to some sister whom they think is dressed too fine and so they fall in the way. Pride is certainly one of Satan's strong weapons, but God alone can read the heart and we must work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. The look of disdain is hard to stand, but only he who endures to the end shall be saved.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

PRAYER MEETING ETIQUETTE, AND TESTIMONY MEETING COURTESIES

(The following is printed by request, as it contains good advice, and is needed in many places.)

All "meetings are to be conducted" by the elders, as "they may be led by the Spirit."—Doctrine and Covenants.

While we fully believe the rule as stated above we should be much pleased to see a better degree of order and propriety observed in prayer and testimony meetings than is now and then manifested—evidently in the absence of the Spirit. It may not be permissible to prescribe a set of rules to be observed at each and every meeting for prayer and testimony; but we may make a few suggestions, which if heeded may help sometimes in having a "good meeting."

1. All who attend the meetings should be at the place of meeting on time.

2. The officer whose prerogative it is to preside should call the meeting to order promptly, either presiding himself, or inviting some brother to take charge. If no recognized branch officer is present, then the one highest in office should be called by vote, or himself take charge and call the meeting to order.

3. The officer presiding should be brief in his opening address, or omit it altogether. He should be wide-awake and cheerful, prayerful and watchful. He should set a good example of decorum, respecting the rights of all, and avoid scolding, especially should he not scold the absent over the shoulders of those present, thus spoiling the pleasure of those who have come to the house of prayer for needed help and cheer.

4. Everyone present should remember that "words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver," and avoid preaching a sermon when bearing testimony. No one should take occasion to air any pet theory, or to relate any trouble between himself and another. Strive to impart as well as to receive good. Do not mar the good that a judicious silence may do by an improper or an untimely speech. There are times where "speech is silver, silence golden."

5. No one should resent what another may say in prayer meeting. It is not the time, nor the place for personal altercation, either on conduct or doctrine. The presiding officer is the one to rebuke an offender in doctrine; let him attend to that duty.

6. When one rises to speak or kneels to pray, he should not be interrupted till done, either by officer or member; except in case too much time is being occupied, or the person speaking is using improper language. If two or more rise to speak at once, the brother in charge should name or designate the one first rising, and after, the others in their order if time permits. If one begins to sing or pray, he should not be checked for another to speak. The same in regard to one speaking in tongues, et cetera. The decision, or call of the brother presiding should be taken as final, and no one should insist on his right to speak if another is recognized by the brother in charge.

7. When praying avoid repetition of the name of the Deity in any form. It is always understood that those who pray are praying to God the Father; and for a person to be constantly using the name of the Father is to weaken the spirit by which others enter into the prayer. We have heard the name and appellations of God repeated as many as one hundred and twenty-five times in a prayer ten minutes in length. Avoid repeating the name of Jesus Christ in either of its forms. It is understood by all who hear a Saint pray, that he is asking in the name of Jesus Christ, for they are charged so to ask; to constantly repeat the name to injure the sentiment of respect in which all should listen to prayer.

8. The Spirit of God is not an accusing spirit, and for this reason if one finds himself indulging in accusations he should at once stop, and sit down to serious self-examination.

9. Avoid telling long stories, especially if all who are present have heard you before tell the same story. No matter how interesting it may be to you, it may be tiring to others.

10. Be hearty, speak quietly, pray fervently, sing cheerily and in time and tune with others who may be singing; in short do what you can to be glad and cheerful and make others feel so too.—Joseph Smith, THE SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 33, p. 401.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

I have a theory that the rattlesnake developed his terrible poison while brooding over personal grievances.

The soft answer may have a double meaning. A Catholic priest fresh from his glass and game of cards met a worldly young woman clad in ball dress and dancing slippers. The priest frowned and said: "How are you, daughter of Satan?" With demure courtesy and quick wit, the girl replied: "How do you do, Father?"

Some sermons, like the dictionary, are full of words, but are too disconnected to be interesting.

The Gettysburg speech, the Lord's Prayer, and the Sermon on the Mount are very brief, yet they endure forever. But when Paul preached till midnight all we know of the sermon is that one man went to sleep and fell out of the window.

Some men would hesitate to give a disciple a cup of cold water. But they would willingly keep him in hot water all his life.

They had a meatless day in the big New York hotels the other day. It seems that the patrons survived with the aid of cheese, eggs, clams, oysters, lobsters, and many kinds of fish. To the man who has had meat only once a week or once a month this meatless day only once a week is something of a joke.

Edison says that the horse is the most expensive motor ever invented, and intimates that if the "first servant" had been made properly he need not have been bigger than a soap box to develop one-horse power. This would indicate that things were done in too much of a hurry at the Creation. It has taken a long time to remedy matters and get what we need. But fortunately Adam was old-fashioned, (the most old-fashioned man that ever lived,) and no doubt he preferred his horse to a Ford and Eve to a phonograph.

We all like to say, I told you so. In the HERALD for March 6, 1912, commenting on the statement that Jesus made, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," we used this illustration: "Proclaim liberty throughout all Russia to-morrow, and depose the Czar and the head of every bureau, and the Russians could not be free, because they do not yet know true principles of freedom and self-government."

A Russian peasant driving a team was halted and compelled to turn to the right when meeting other teams. He complained bitterly that the recent revolution had been in vain—that personal liberty didn't amount to much after all. Lots of people fail to understand that liberty and law are inseparably united. A few score men lost at sea or buried in a mine are forced to organize and adopt laws. Civilization must compel the anarchist to turn to the right in the road or there will soon be no road.

If there is such a thing as glory in war, France has covered herself with glory. She has sung no hymns of hate. She has not boasted. She has kept still and fought for her soil and her homes. Her sons, in quiet fortitude, quite unlike our ideas of the "excitable Frenchman," have quietly rendered their "last full measure of devotion" to the cause of national liberty.

When Jesus was here he beheld the multitude and had compassion on them. He wept over them. Not a heart in all the assembly that thronged him but had its own cares and sorrows. And he saw into every heart and sympathized with every sorrow. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.

I do not think that Jesus, being a part of the God-head, and filled with infinite wisdom, sympathy, and love, needed to come down to earth and suffer with us in order to understand our griefs. But it was necessary for him to come in order that we might understand that he understands. Otherwise we would not believe that even God himself could understand our sorrows and temptations. But his life, from his birth in the stable to his death on the cross, is a compelling testimony that he understands.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

WHY EDITORIALS ARE SIGNED

Some have raised a question in regard to the signing of editorials, and in some instances have inferred a very wrong motive therefor. The position of the editors is simply that each man should be responsible for his own opinion and not seek to conceal it under a lack of designation. A man's life conduct may affect the opinion of others on what he may say. His position may bring some influence to bear.

Sometimes we receive a communication that the writer seems to feel, as others would express it, "What you are or have been, speaks so loud, I cannot hear what you say." It is not only what is said but who says it.

The editors feel that every man should stand upon his own footing and his own responsibility. Then when there are criticisms, we know, and everyone knows, exactly who is at fault. Where an article or an editorial is printed anonymously, or under a nom de plume, the editors, in a way, must assume the responsibility. We consider it more fair for every man to assume the responsibility for his own acts and his own words.

It should be clearly recognized that the church as such is not responsible for everything printed in the church papers. Often the editors have permitted some one to air his views, though quite contrary to the teachings of the majority of the eldership, and membership of the church.

Even the editors do not represent always the position of the church. They present matters as fairly as they can, but sometimes something appears which possibly may be misconstrued.

We have many times from letters discovered, that some one has read into an editorial something we have never even so much as thought of. They find some idea that we would not think of assuming or defending.

Sometimes our opponents have taken up some article or editorial and put a very incorrect construction upon it, and attempt to use it against the church. The church is bound by its own resolutions and by the three books of the church. The church papers are a medium of expression. At present two members of the First Presidency are on the editorial staff. It scarcely seems to us fair to send out matter and leave it in doubt how far they have affected, or whether it really expresses their views or not.

The editors, of course, try fairly to present the doctrine of the church. They try to write in a constructive way, to assist in the work of the church. But they do not claim that what they write thereby becomes at once the teachings of the church. Neither for the membership, nor for those who oppose us.

Nor does the associate editor attempt to hold the members of the First Presidency responsible for what he presents. So far, most of the confusion of all the years that are past that we have been able to ascertain, is based upon misconstruction of what is written, more than erroneous doctrine.

The liberality of the church in taking for its creed all truth, sometimes including those of very divergent and peculiar views. With all due respect we submit that it appears to us proper and preferable that each man should stand responsible for what he says, or writes. We therefore make it a rule to set an example by signing all editorials. S. A. B.

OUR BOYS AND THE WAR

The editors do not like to take so much space referring to matters of the war, but it seems to be the topic to the front in the thoughts of most of our readers.

A recent comment calls attention to this. Some seem to think that our boys who are taken to the front are as good as gone. We notice in The Saturday Evening Post for October 6, a similar expression, that some one had suggested that the boys who went to the front might as well tell themselves good-bye. This is rather a rough way of expressing it and is the worse because it is not the fact of the case.

The Saturday Evening Post calls attention to the fact that among a million young men a good many thousand would normally die within the next year at home or anywhere else, and then makes the comment with the soldiers or twice their number at the front. The death list for the United States will be less for the first year they spend at the front than it was for the year 1900 without war.

This because of the improvements in sanitation, improvements of special health provision for the Nation at large, as well as for the Army.

We have noticed somewhere that Mr. Gerard is quoted as stating that Germany has lost by death and grave injuries one eighth of her soldiers for the first three years of the war. Others have stated that the probable loss is not over five per cent per year at the maximum. Over eighty per cent of those who are wounded are not only cared for but fully restored, so that they return to the front, and of the remaining twenty per cent of the wounded, which represents a very limited portion of the whole number of soldiers, provision is made so as to make them self-sustaining in after life.

Many of them at least are able to secure similar or other work in times of peace.

Improvements of sanitation, of care of the soldiers, both in the trenches, in camps and on the battle fronts is improving every year. The losses are not near so great now among the soldiers of the entente as in the earlier days of the war, and are growing less all of the time. The chance of a boy being killed or fatally wounded or so seriously wounded as to be handicapped are perhaps one in twenty or less for the first year in service.

Yet on the other hand The Review of Reviews states that the mortality among industrial workers, those killed in industry in the United States is six hundred and thirty thousand for one year. Others have stated it somewhat less, but the killed and wounded in that one department exceeds the Civil War and several other wars put together.

Again the cost of alcohol to the French directly and indirectly in drunkenness and in crime placable to the use of narcotics is stated by certain Frenchmen to be very near as much as is the cost of the war. It is an enormous figure, when all of the different relations are considered.

Again social immorality in civil life causes more damage and more injury than tuberculosis, or most other diseases. But little is said about it, except in medical journals which have for years given the matter very serious attention.

If this catastrophe of war will cause us to wake up to conditions before us so that we correct the preventable waste of life, through alcoholism, through social evils, through industrial wastes, through infant mortality, lives which are lost uselessly, which could have been and should have been saved it will mean so much of gain. Some have figured this last waste of preventable deaths of babies, as high as three hundred thousand a year. If that is so it would mean that many of the babies that died, need not have died. It is certain that four times as large a per cent die where the father's income is not ten dollars a week, as where his income is twenty-five dollars or more a week.

A wonderful improvement is being made along all of these lines. Let the good work be kept up. War is terrible. Do not let us make it worse than it has to be, and let us end it as soon as we can with righteousness. S. A. B.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

First Canadian Church

Through the kindness of Brother J. H. Yager we are in receipt of a picture of the first church in Canada, forty-five years ago. It is apparently little, if anything, more than a barn. He informs us that at that time the whole church in Canada could have met within its limits. Now there are branches which would fill it several times. Many have labored there in the past.

Ontario

Elder B. A. Doty has returned for a short visit with his family in Michigan, leaving the work in Ontario in the hands of Elder J. H. Yager.

Brother Bailey to Investigate Coal Mines

The representatives of the Oklahoma coal mines have been in Washington, District of Columbia, for a conference with Doctor Garfield in reference to operating their mines under the Government price scale. They ask that conditions in the Oklahoma fields be investigated. In this party was Elder Earl D. Bailey, who is interested in the Hickory coal mines, near Tulsa.

No Coal Shortage

Much is said of coal shortage, but the actual figures seem to indicate that there is more coal being mined now than a year ago, or ever before. There is an increase for nine months in anthracite of about fifteen per cent, while the later months show around twenty-five per cent increase of coal produced. Naturally there are heavier drains than ever before, but an effort is apparently being made to meet this need.

Fair Play

In the Nauvoo Rustler of October 23, 1917, reference is made to an address by Father Zaiser of the Roman Catholic Church concerning his conversion and work. We note the following extract:

He told his hearers that when they wanted to know anything about the Methodist religion, to go to the head and not read papers opposed to that church, or listen to gossip; the same with the Mormon and other religions; if you want to know the truth about the Catholic religion don't read the Menace and other disgusting sheets, but go to the fountain head and learn the truth.

This is evidently only fair and just to the reader and investigator as much as to the body concerned. One is not prepared to pass upon a matter until he has heard the affirmative side. We have contended this for some time. But it would seem that it should be axiomatic, so clear is its truth. Articles and publications addressed against some other church or ideal are often unfair and in many instances we have noted, either intentionally or unintentionally, tend to misrepresent. If one wishes to be fair he is compelled to note this often even when an opponent is attacked. Every proposition, religious, scientific, or sociologic should be judged on its own merits and presentation.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

FRUITS IN SEASON

Through the courtesy of N. Ray Carmichael, who had a private interview with one of the best home economics authorities, Miss Catharine Mackay, Dean of Home Economics of Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, and also President of the American Home Economics Association, I submit her quotations as follows:

"The 'season' of a fruit is the time at which it is ripe. Fruit is best at the height of its ripeness or in other words at the height of its ripening season. Seasons for the same fruits differ in different parts of the country, as for instance, the opening of the season for raspberries in Oregon is about July 1, while here in the Middle West, it is fifteen days later. There is a difference also in the length of 'season' for the different fruits. That of berries which will spoil quickly is short, while that of apples and oranges is longer. Oranges, for example, have a long season, nearly the year round. The season of the harvest apple is the early summer; that of the Northern Spy is in the middle of winter after it has been stored.

"During ripening many fruits undergo distinct changes in composition and these changes may continue after the gathering of the fruit. In general the ripening involves a decrease in acid and starch with an increase in sugar content. Bigelow and Langworthy of the United States Department of Agriculture found that the starch content of winter apples, for example, reaches its maximum about midsummer and then decreases and finally disappears almost entirely. The acid content of the apples was found to decrease from early summer until maturity, while the sugar content increases. In bananas, also, there is a marked conversion of starch into sugar as the fruit ripens. The peach, on the other hand, contains no appreciable amount of starch at any time, but shows a steady increase in sugar content as it approaches maturity."—Henry C. Sherman, Food Products.

"In the summer time, however, when the common fruits are in season, it is far better for the child to satisfy the 'candy craving' by eating fresh fruit which contains sugar as the principal edible solid. Fresh fruits which are high in sugar include grapes, pineapples, figs and cherries. Dried fruits, such as raisins, dates, figs, prunes, apricots and citron are also excellent candy substitutes when fresh fruits are not available."—Philip B. Hawk, Ph. D., Professor of Physiological Chemistry of the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

If fruit is eaten at these various stages of ripeness, for instance before the starch and acid content has the stage of maturity, "it often causes stomach and intestinal irritation; if eaten overripe, it has a tendency to ferment in the alimentary canal."—Maria Parloa, "Canned Fruit, Preserves, and Jellies," Farmers' Bulletin, number 203.

The starch grains while raw are insoluble and hard to digest, also the coverings of these grains—the cellulose—which likewise forms the outer covering of the fruit, is a tough substance and in the raw condition often causes much distress. "Cooking changes the character and flavor of fruit, and while the product is not so cooling and refreshing as in the raw state, it can, as a rule, be eaten with less danger of causing stomach or intestinal trouble. And if sugar be added to the cooked fruit, the nutritive value will be increased."—Maria Parloa, "Canned Fruit, Preserves and Jellies."

"As the season for fresh fruits and vegetables is short it is desirable to use some method of treating them so that they may be kept a longer time in usable condition."—Bertha Austin, Domestic Science.

FRUITS INDISPENSABLE THE YEAR ROUND

"Fruits and vegetables are very important to the diet as they furnish bulk to the food, which increases the peristaltic movement during the process of digestion. They are at the same time valuable for the palatability and flavor they impart to other foods. While they have not so great food value as meat and eggs, they are indispensable to the proper assimilation of nutriment from the more concentrated foods. They enable the digestive juices to penetrate all parts of the food, their cellulose or woody structure being most active in this process of digestion."—Bertha J. Austin, Domestic Science.

"Fresh fruits are chiefly valuable for their refreshing, appetizing qualities and for their mineral constituents. The organic acid form carbonates in the body and by their alkalinity assist in the regulation of the body processes."—A. F. Pattee, Practical Dietetics.

Some of these very fruits are especially valuable, such as the lemon, grapefruit, orange, for their citric acid; the apple, pear, peach, apricot, etc., for malic acid. "These release potassium, et cetera, which are changed into carbonates and overcome the acid in the blood because of their alkalinity. This explains the reason for advising the generous use of acid fruit in cases of rheumatism. The acid of the fruit helps to remove the uric acid from the blood and leaves the blood alkaline."—Iowa State College Bulletin, number 20.

Von Noorden, in Metabolism and Practical Medicine, one of the strongest advocates of a liberal use of meat says: "The necessity of a generous supply of vegetables and fruits must be particularly emphasized. They are of the greatest importance for the normal development of the body and of all its functions. . . . If we limit the most important sources of iron—the vegetables and the fruits—we cause a certain sluggishness of blood formation and an entire lack of reserve iron, such as is normally found in the liver, spleen, and bone marrow.

"Excessive use of fat pork, bacon, lard, butter, sugars, starches, and confectionery, would tend to satisfy the appetite and supply the body with the needed fuel without furnishing the desirable amount of iron. On the other hand, the fruits and vegetables are often regarded as of low nutritive value because of their high water content and low proportions of protein and fat. But it is largely this property which makes them especially important as sources of food iron, because they can be added to the diet without replacing the staple foods of high protein value and without making the total food consumption excessive. The ratio of iron both to protein and to fuel value is high in nearly all of the typical fruits and vegetables. . . . The iron content of eggs is also high, but the cost of these is often such as to restrict their use, while present methods of drying and preserving tend to equalize the cost and increase the available variety of fruits and vegetables throughout the year.

"In an experimental dietary study made in New York City, it was found that a free use of vegetables, whole wheat bread and the cheaper sorts of fruits, with milk, but without meat resulted in a gain of thirty per cent in the iron content of the diet."—Henry C. Sherman, Chemistry of Food and Nutrition, MacMillan Company, 1917, Professor in Columbia University.

Sherman lists: 1. Foods in which acid-forming elements predominate: beef, eggs, oatmeal, wheat flour, rice, bacon, corn (entire grain high protein).

2. Foods which make the blood alkaline: Celery, cabbage, potatoes, prunes, turnips, milk, apples and other fruits.

"We have no reason to anticipate any disadvantage from a predominance of alkaline-forming elements, but a diet in which acid-forming elements greatly predominate . . . cannot be regarded as advantageous.

"It should clearly be understood that an excess of alkaline-forming elements in the food is not in any sense objectionable, since the oxidation processes in the body are constantly yielding such large quantities of carbonic acid that any surplus of alkaline-forming elements acts as reserve material to maintain neutrality."—Sherman, Chemistry of Food and Nutrition.

Since fruits should be used in daily diet, and since the "season" of most of them is short, (too expensive when purchased out of season) a wholesome means should be resorted to for preserving them.

CANNING

"The problem of canning any product is simply that of totally destroying the bacteria that may be present. This is brought about most generally by the action of high heat. Method of keeping bacteria out of sterilized product is hermetic sealing."—H. W. Conn, Bacteria, Yeasts and Molds in the Home.

"Can or preserve apples, peaches, pears, cherries, quinces, berries and other cultivated and wild fruits.

"Every can of vegetables or fruit and every jar of preserved food means that you have saved food materials that would have otherwise been wasted."—"Food thrift series," number 1, United States Department of Agriculture. (Just published.)

"Try to have one kind of fruit or one kind of vegetable, (both if possible) in the diet every day. These are very valuable for certain regulating materials which we are not so likely to get in other kinds of food.

"Dried fruits we may have all the year round at about the same price and this is usually less than for fresh fruits, so it pays to know how to use dried fruits.

"Care must be taken to save the water used in cooking, or the valuable substances (mineral matter dissolved in the juice) are likely to be lost."—Lessons on Food and Nutrition, Teachers College, May, 1917.

"In the season when each kind of fruit is plentiful, and at its best, a generous supply should be canned for the season when both fruit and fresh vegetables are scarce. A great deal of the fruit should be canned with little or no sugar, that it may be as nearly as possible in the condition of fresh fruit."—Farmers' Bulletin, Number 203. "Canned fruit, preserves, and jellies."

"Fruits should be used in abundance in the diet. When fresh fruits are out of season, the dried fruits are especially valuable as well as economical."—Greer, Textbook of Cooking.

"As the season for fresh fruits and vegetables is short, it is desirable to use some method of treating them so that they may be kept for a longer time in usable condition. Too much cannot be said about the value of preserving foods. There is no reason why the ordinary household should not have every kind of vegetable and fruit for table use even during the seasons when they cannot be obtained in a fresh condition or are too expensive to be bought fresh."

—Bertha Austin, Domestic Science.

"The present food situation doubtless will cause a marked stimulation of drying as a means of conserving the food supply. This country is producing large quantities of perishable foods this year, which should be saved for storage, canned or properly dried. Drying should not take the place of storing or canning to any considerable extent, where proper storage facilities are available or tin cans or glass jars can be obtained readily and at a low cost."—Farmers' Bulletin, number 841, "Drying Fruits and Vegetables in the Home."

"A few sweet potatoes or apples or peas or even a single turnip can be dried and saved. Even when very small quantities are dried at a time, a quantity sufficient for a meal will soon be secured. Small lots of several dried vegetables can be combined to advantage for soups and stews." (The Government says, "Dry and save." We say, "Be ye frugal." Although these fruits may not be in their season the year round, we are not justified in letting them waste.)—Farmers' Bulletin, number 841, "Drying Fruits and Vegetables in the Home."

VALUE OF NATIVE RIPE FRUIT

Is there a special advantage in fruit at the time it is ripe in the native garden? Is there a decided advantage in favor of native fruit over imported in this part of the country?

"By all means take the fruit of the native garden; you get it fresh and at a time when it is harvested nearer the height of its ripening season. The advantage of the native fruit over the imported is in that you can secure the native fruit in a riper condition. Of course each fruit has its particular food value, as starch in the banana, or the active principle in pineapples."—Catharine Mackay, Iowa State College.

"Stewed fruits are more easily digested than raw fruits. Oranges, lemons, grapes and peaches are very generally digested with ease.

"The apple exerts a most excellent influence upon the liver and kidneys, and is valuable in cases of acidity of the stomach.

"The juice of the ripe pineapple contains a remarkable active digestive principle similar to pepsin and so powerful is its action upon proteins that it will digest as much as one thousand times its weight within a few hours. It is especially valuable in diphtheria and diabetes.

"Dates, figs, and prunes are valuable for inactivity of the liver and most excellent laxatives.

"Bananas, raw, are often indigestible, but baked act as a stimulant to the nerves, being at once received and rapidly assimilated by the stomach."—Alida Pattee, Practical Dietetics.

Eugene Christian, the famous New York Food scientist, says: "In the tropics, where the pores of the skin are constantly kept open by superficial heat, the body can eliminate and volatilize a great quantity of poisons. In the tropics acids are necessary as germicidal fluids, but in northern countries, such articles as grapefruit, lemons, limes, pineapples, apricots and all highly acidulous fruits should be avoided, save, perhaps, in exceedingly warm weather. Taken at other times the tendency is to increase the total acid content of the stomach and to ferment other foods. This results in crystallization of the starch atom and produces the blood crystal. This in turn produces rheumatism, lumbago, arteriosclerosis, et cetera." (This man seems to take a rather extreme stand in comparison with many other authorities.)

ACID FRUITS AND RHEUMATISM

Are acid fruits bad for anyone suffering from rheumatism?

"No! It is a popular misconception that acid fruits, such as peaches, oranges, plums, lemons and grapefruit should not be eaten by rheumatic individuals. In the course of its transformation in the body, the acid of the fruit is changed into alkali, which is the opposite of an acid. The elimination of uric acid, the substance on which the blame for rheumatism is frequently placed is not significantly affected by eating fruits, and even if it were it would be of no particular importance as rheumatism is practically always due to bacteria, uric acid having nothing at all to do with it. . . .

"Lemonade is not too acid for the stomach if the stomach is a normal one.

"The acid fruits aid digestion indirectly, cause the stomach to manufacture more hydrochloric acid, which is necessary if our food is to digest properly. The acidity imparted to the stomach contents by the juice of an acid fruit may thus be a slight aid to digestion in stomachs unable to manufacture the normal amount of hydrochloric acid."—Philip B. Hawk, the Place of Nuts and Fruits in Our Diet.

PRESERVED FRUIT

"All fruits are better before they are preserved, i. e., when they are at the height of their ripeness. To study preserving one must take into consideration the materials that are added, such as sugar or syrups. It is to be remembered in eating and serving these fruits that have been preserved that something has been added and not to use the same quantities as of the fresh fruit."—Catharine Mackay, Iowa State College.

"There are minute substances (vitamines) present in very small quantities in a number of foods and apparently absolutely necessary to health, but not found in all kinds of food materials. This is one reason for variety in the diet. Cooking reduces the amount of vitamins in most foods. Adults would do well to eat some raw food and fresh fruit daily."—Foods, issued by Life Extension Institute, New York.

FRESH FRUIT OR DRIED FRUIT

Fruits in the fresh state are mainly water. When the bulk of the water is removed in the drying process, we have a more concentrated food. Thus dried figs, dates and raisins are much more nutritious, bulk for bulk, than is any fruit in the fresh condition. However, fresh fruits, even with their lower food value, are especially desirable dietary articles because of the presence of antiscorvy vitamins (These are lacking in the ordinary diet.) So far as the stomach is concerned it handles dried fruit about as satisfactorily as fresh fruit."—Philip B. Hawk, Ph. D., The Place of Nuts and Fruits in Our Diet.

FRUIT RAW OR COOKED

Fruits are good foods either raw or cooked. If we take them raw, we give the stomach less work to do (I question this); and also derive full benefit of the antiscorvy vitamins which are lowered in quantity by cooking. On the other hand, we take more of a chance with our bacterial foes if we consume uncooked fruit. But the gastric juice can cope successfully with the great majority of microbes which infest fresh fruit. This presupposes that the stomach has the normal quantity of acid present.

"The baked apple and the baked banana are digested with about the same readiness as these fruits in the fresh condition. Considerable sugar is usually added in baking apples. This increases their food value, but we find them to leave the stomach more slowly. There are many abnormal stomachs which handle the cooked fruit better than the raw."—Philip B. Hawk, The Place of Nuts and Fruits in Our Diet.

"In this country the apple is much more widely used than any other fruit, and it probably deserves its proud place at the head of the list. However, there is no evidence that it is more healthful than the orange or the banana, for instance. In fact, so far as the stomach is concerned, the response is much the same to the banana, orange, or apple."—Philip B. Hawk, The Place of Nuts and Fruits in Our Diet.

"The characteristic odors from cooking fruits indicate loss of flavor. This can be prevented somewhat by cooking fruits at a low (simmering) temperature in a covered utensil. The casserole used on top of or in the oven of a range is most desirable for cooking fruits."—Carlotta Greer, A Textbook of Cooking.

"While cooking often increases the palatability it is apt to change the flavor. This is due to the loss of the volatile essential oils which are so characteristic of the raw foods and which give flavor and odor to them.

"It sometimes appears that cooked fruit is either less or more acid than in its raw state, but experiments prove that the acid content is really but slightly changed. When fruit is boiled, some of the volatile acid may pass off in the steam.

"Since none or very little of the nutrients is lost in cooking, and since cooking often increases the palatability of foods their food value is not impaired by this method (canning) of preserving."—Bertha Austin, Domestic Science.

Canning has made possible the use of great quantities of material which previously were sure to decay before they could be used. It is possible to take any crop which is produced in abundance during a short season and preserve it indefinitely for future use.

"Canned food is, however, always changed in character by cooking. Although materials which are ordinarily cooked before they are eaten may, of course, be canned without further change. Canned fruit has a flavor of its own and oftentimes a very pleasant one, but the flavor of the fresh fruit is usually more agreeable. Experience has shown that a diet of canned foods alone is not wholly satisfactory, although arctic explorers have learned they can live upon them much more healthfully than they can upon salt foods."—H. W. Conn, Bacteria, Yeasts and Molds in the Home.

"Most foods can be reduced to a dry or otherwise condensed state without loss of nutritive value or danger of decomposition. . . . Their chief use as mainstays will doubtless be in cases of temporary shortage of fresh foods, due to devastating storms, strikes and other happenings which interrupt traffic."—Alida Pattee, Practical Dietetics.

"All articles mentioned as true foods should be taken in their freshest and purest form—as nearly natural as possible. Canned products should never be used where fresh ones can be obtained, for there is no method of canning or preserving that will wholly arrest the process of chemical changes."—Eugene Christian, Scientific Eating.

PRESERVATIVES

"Borax, boracic acid, salicylic acid, formaldehyde, all of which when strong enough to hinder the growth of bacteria are thought to interfere more or less with the digestive processes of man. The use of any such substances is prohibited by the United States pure food law."—S. Maria Elliott, Household Bacteriology.

"In fruit canning in the household it may be given as a universal rule that no disinfectants of any sort should be used. If the housewife cannot satisfactorily preserve her fruits without them, she would do very much better to depend upon the commercial products which she can buy at the store. They (disinfectants) are dangerous to use, they are at least partly poisonous and their use in any form should be absolutely avoided in domestic work."—H. W. Conn, Bacteria, Yeasts, and Molds in the Home.

"There is a widespread prejudice against the use of antiseptic substances for the preservation of foods. It is hard to prove that material harm has been done by such preservatives. If the choice must be made between foods which have undergone prolonged and gradual decomposition and foods of the same age kept by the aid of antiseptics in minute quantities, the latter must in many cases be the safer. The mention of benzoate of soda may be productive of disgust, but the same ingredient is native in certain foods, such as cranberries. The common adulterants are not likely to endanger health."—Percy G. Stiles, Nutritional Physiology.

"At the present time benzoate of soda is allowed by the Federal Government, it having been determined as not being poisonous or deleterious. When used each container must bear a label stating the amount, although the Government does not limit the quantity, one tenth of one per cent is employed by manufacturers.

"The harmful nature of these chemical compounds has been argued for and against for a long period. At present time probably all agree that their use is absolutely unnecessary for goods that are to be consumed in a short period. Modern methods of sanitation and sterilization by heat have proved so much more reliable and less expensive.

"Possibly the strongest reasons for prohibiting their use are that they may lead to carelessness in manufacturing processes and to the use of inferior material."—Vulte and Vanderbilt, Food Industries.

"Any substance known as a poison must be assumed to be injurious to health even when taken in the smallest doses, unless we have definite and specific reasons for believing that it fails to have any effect when the dose is minute. There is no known chemical poison whose effect is so deadly that a person cannot take a little of it without suffering any serious consequences. It is neither safe nor sound public policy to assume that they may be made ingredients of our daily food even though the quantities used may be small as compared with the doses capable of producing demonstrable results.

"It is not clear that the use of even a somewhat harmful preservative might not on the whole be desirable in the case of certain products, which, without the use of a preservative would be eaten in various stages of decay.

"Although the chemical may not produce demonstrably injurious effects in a relatively short time—it is not a theoretically sound position when it becomes a question of the consumer's being called on to take the chemical to the end of his days."—Otto Folin, Preservatives and other Chemicals in Foods.

SPICES

"It has been left to modern science to discover that spices assist in the preservation of materials. They do not furnish a complete protection, however, and food material should not be allowed to stand in a warm place or fermentation and decay will set in.

"Unfortunately many of them are irritating to the mucous membrane and when used in excess are harmful."—Vulte and Vanderbilt, Food Industries.

"Spices are thus of much value both as a means of imparting flavor and as a preservative, but they never preserve the original taste of the foods. In warm temperature the effect of the spices is not sufficient to prevent a more or less troublesome fermentation and decay and particularly molding."—H. W. Conn, Bacteria, Yeasts, and Molds in the Home.

TIN FROM CANS

"Much indigestion and general ill health is popularly attributed to this cause. Canned goods which have been kept a long time dissolve salts of tin in surprising quantities, especially when the material is markedly acid. There is, of course, the possibility of cumulative injury when canned goods are used with regularity for long periods."—Percy G. Stiles, Nutritional Physiology.

PORK—WINTER AND SUMMER

"The use of too much meat (especially by persons of sedentary habits or indoor occupation) tends toward excessive intestinal putrefaction with resulting absorption of putrefactive products which are detrimental to the red blood cells. Fruits and vegetables have the opposite property and their use in liberal quantities tends to prevent or correct intestinal putrefaction, both by stimulating peristalsis and by furnishing a medium less favorable to the activities of the putrefactive bacteria."—Sherman, Food Products.

"Some kinds of meat are well known to occasion indigestion. Pork and veal are particularly feared. While we may not know the reason why these foods so often disagree with people, it seems probable that texture is an important consideration. In both these meats the fiber is fine and fat is intimately mingled with the lean. A close blending of fat with nitrogenous matter appears to give a fabric which is hard to digest.

"Meat unprofitably spurs the metabolism, more particularly objectionable in warm weather, and is a menace of auto-intoxication."—Percy G. Stiles, Nutritional Physiology.

"Pork contains more fat than does any other meat. The fat is most intimately mingled with the lean. For this reason it is difficult of digestion. Fresh pork should be used sparingly. Its use should be confined to the winter months. Pork should be cooked thoroughly. It sometimes contains organisms which may produce serious results if not destroyed in cooking. Pork is made more wholesome by curing, salting and smoking. Smoked ham and bacon are much more digestible than fresh pork. Fat of bacon is readily digested."—Carlotta C. Greer, A Textbook of Cooking.

Because pork is so high in fat it is valuable as a fuel and energy food in winter. Fat yields twice as much heat and energy as starches, sugars, or proteins.

"Pork has a large amount of fat, is close grained and very fibrous, but largely on account of the fat digestion is made hard. It is several times harder to digest than other meats. People should eat very little pork in the summer time. Bacon is much the easiest to digest of any of the pork products.

"The advantage of pork as a food is a productive problem. Much more pork can be produced from a given amount of feed than any other meat, and too, it is much more easily kept."—Catharine Mackay, Iowa State College.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE GREAT FEAR

[The following seems rather extreme, yet represents one aspect of the world situation. We think we sense a reevaluation of late—a greater willingness to try to find the way of the Master. We hope this is so at least. Certainly deep in us we know goodness alone is worth while.—EDITORS.]

The great fear is upon us.

It covers all countries as a blanket of darkness and cloud. It grips all hearts with a nameless dread, paralyzes all wills with inexplicable foreboding.

The great fear is, lest we shall be good.

We ridicule goodness; if a man has it we sneer at him; he must be small, a weakling, bloodless, contemptible. If a woman is good we pity her; she is missing so much. And all the while we know, deep within us, that goodness alone is worth while, majestic, great.

We are afraid of love.

We know it is the cure of souls, yet we will try anything rather than that.

Think of it! Wives and husbands afraid of loving too much; mothers afraid they are too fond of their children; boys ashamed of displaying affection for their mother; men ashamed of friendship; all of us timidly shrinking from trusting ourselves into the God-blessed river of love that runs through humanity, its waters alone able to save us from the bogs of beastdom!

We are afraid of humanity.

Afraid to be humane to criminals. Beat them, shackle them, starve them, give them solitude and darkness till their skin bleaches, their hair thins and grays, their souls shrivel into idiocy; murder them, electrocute them in a chair or hang them from a gallows tree—put your trust in brutality, in terror, in punishment—to “protect society”! And all the while we know punishment never cured a human soul. Why don't we try to love? We are afraid!

The silent Christ of the centuries says: “Love your enemies, do good to them that spitefully use you; if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink.”

But no! We have this great fear. We will shoot him, mangle him, starve him. We can be safe only when we have bludgeoned him into subjection. Love him? We dare not.

The great fear is upon us all. It darts its murderous torpedoes and plants its mines in the sea; it fills the red trenches of the land; it froths upon the lips of emperors and prime ministers; its horrid shadow rests on ten thousand homes; it desolates the habitable earth.

Why do nations hate? It is draining their treasures, decimating their peoples, smiting their first-born like the angel of the passover, a red devil of ruin, a vile harlot of Babylon, a mowing madman running amuck destroying civilization. Why do not nations love one another? They are afraid.

The great fear is upon Europe, and hell is with it. The great fear advances in America; we are shrieking for more armed ships, more forts, more professional killers, to save us. And they never saved a nation yet.

We dare not trust humanity. We dare not throw down arms and say to all the world, “Peace, brothers!” All the mad mullahs of the world would rail at us.

We are afraid. The great war is upon us, the fear of love, the fear of reason, the fear of light.

We are afraid, not of war with its rampant and wholesale wreckage, not of war with its abysmal brutishments, its lies and frauds and childish bombast; no, we are afraid of the Christ we worship, and dread most of all to do as he said.

Nothing is so dangerous as love.

Nothing so absurd and unfeasible as reason.

Nothing so untrustworthy as humanity.

Nothing so utopian as cooperation, nothing so practical as contention.

We fear not the pit, and the devils of distrust and wrath and ravaging that swarm us from its stinking depths; what we fear is the white thunders of Sinai, the smiling wisdom of Jesus.

We are not afraid of hell; what we fear is the kingdom of heaven.

The great fear is upon us.—Editorial, in The Christian Work, April 28, 1917.

RUSSIA FREES JEWS FROM GALLING LAWS

With the utmost thoroughness the provisional government of Russia has sought out every law of the old empire which places restrictions upon Jews, and by a decree, news of the publication of which has been received in this country, has categorically abolished all of them. The text of the decree follows: “Being conclusively convinced that in a free country all citizens should be equal before the law, and that the conscience of the people cannot be reconciled with limitations on the rights of citizens based on their religion and origin, the provincial government decrees:

“All existing legal restrictions upon the rights of Russian citizens, in connection with this or that faith, religious teaching or nationality, are revoked. In accordance with this:

“Repealed are all laws existing for Russia as a whole as well as those of separate localities, the limitations concerning:

“(1) Selection of place of residence and change of residence or movement:

“(2) Acquiring rights of ownership and other material rights in all kinds of movable and immovable property, and likewise in the possession of the use and the managing of all property, or receiving for security;

“(3) Engaging in all kinds of trades, commerce and industry, not excepting mining; also equal participation in the bidding for government contracts, deliveries and in public auctions;

“(4) Participation in joint stock and other commercial or industrial companies and partnerships, and also employment in these companies and partnerships in all kinds of positions, either by elections or by hiring;

“(5) Employment of servants, salesmen, foremen, laborers and trade apprentices;

“(6) Entering the government service, civil as well as military, and the grade or condition of such service; participation in the elections for the institutions of local self-government and all kinds of public institutions; serving in all kinds of positions of the government and public establishments, as well as the prosecution of the duties connected with such positions;

"(7) Admission to all kinds of institutions of learning, whether private, government or public, and the pursuing of the courses of instructions, and receiving scholarships. Also the pursuance of teaching and the other educational professions.

"(8) Performing the duties of guardians, trustees, or jurors;

"(9) The use of languages and dialects, other than Russian, in the proceedings of private societies, or in teaching in all kinds of private educational institutions, and in commercial bookkeeping."

Paragraphs II, III, IV, V, VI, VII and VIII proceed to enumerate and cite section by section, paragraph by paragraph, each and every law that was in existence coming within the broad terms of the repeal enumerated. The enormous number of the citations and the minuteness of their character, testify in themselves to the thoroughness in which the Jewish restrictions were carefully searched out, so as to leave not the slightest question as to the exact laws which were abolished. They also serve to bear out quite convincingly the statement, which Baron Gunzburg made, that prominent Jewish lawyers were called into consultation by the ministry of justice in the searching of these laws, and the drafting of the repeal.

Paragraph IX of the repeal states the following: "The force of this decree is extended to embrace the corresponding restrictions which have been enacted in relation to foreigners not belonging to the citizenship of the countries with which Russia is at war, in connection with their faith, religious teaching or nationality."

All restrictions against Jews in Russia from non-enemy countries, though they may not be Russian citizens, are likewise abolished.

Paragraph X merely states: "This decree shall be in force from the date of its publication."—Editorial in the Christian Work, August 11, 1917.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

In answer to the inquiry, Why should we have prohibition, the following is culled from Liberty, vol. 12, no. 4:

Let Abraham Lincoln give answer:

The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating the vitals and threatening destruction; and all attempts to regulate it will not only prove abortive, but will aggravate the evil. There must be no attempts to regulate the cancer. It must be eradicated; not a root must be left behind, for until this is done all classes must continue in danger of becoming victims of strong drink. . . . Slavery is abolished. The next great question would be the overthrow of the legalized liquor traffic. And you know, Merwin, that my head and my heart, my hand and my purse, will go into that work. In 1842, less than a quarter of a century ago, I predicted that the day would come when there would be neither a slave nor a drunkard in the land. I have lived to see one prediction fulfilled; I hope to see the other realized.

The American Medical Association gives answer. At its sixty-eighth annual session in the city of New York, in June of this year, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, We believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy; and

"Whereas, Its use in therapeutics, as a tonic or a stimulant, or as a food, has no scientific basis, therefore,

"Resolved, That the American Medical Association oppose the use of alcohol as a beverage; and be it further

"Resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be discharged."

Let Doctor Howard A. Kelley, medical professor of Johns Hopkins Hospital give answer:

"Alcohol—

"1. Is non-efficient as a food, a most awful, wasteful substitute.

"2. May be classed as a drug and a poison.

"3. Has no rightful position as a medicine.

"4. Destroys individual, domestic and civil.

"5. Increases taxation by filling prisons, madhouses, and workhouses.

"6. Greatest foe to civilization in heathen lands.

"7. Therefore could be wholly abolished with profit.

"8. Therefore, as one of the human family, an individual member has no right to introduce into the household or use for his own pleasure that which hurts even one other member, or sets at work an evil influence he has no well-grounded hope of controlling. . . . It is clear in the light of experience and of recent research work that alcohol ought to be classed in the list of dangerous drugs, along with morphine, cocaine, and chloral, a drug which may so affect the will power as to gain the complete mastery over a patient and in the end destroy him. . . . As a citizen, I note that it is alcohol which fills our prisons, whether taken in the form of a strong beverage as whisky, or beer, as a representative of milder beverages. It is at the bottom of most crimes, domestic infidelity, poverty, seductions, murders; it is allied to all that is evil and destructive of the high aims of civilization." . . .

L'ALARME

[Societe Francaise d'Action Contre Alcoolisme; Honorary President, M. Raymond Poincare.]

To French Women and French Young People:

1. Alcohol is as formidable an enemy to you as Germany.

2. It has cost France since 1870 in men and money more than the present war.

3. Alcohol pleases the taste, but, a veritable poison, it destroys the body.

4. Drinkers grow old early. They lose half their normal life, and are easy prey to numerous weaknesses and maladies.

5. The "little glasses" of parents are transformed into hereditary weaknesses in their descendants. France has to-day about 200,000 insane, twice as many consumptives, to say nothing of the victims of gout, scrofula, rickets, premature degeneracy, and the majority of criminals.

6. Alcoholism reduces our productivity two thirds, increases the cost of living and misery.

7. Like the criminal kaiser, alcoholism decimates and ruins France to the great joy of Germany. Mothers, young people, husbands, fight alcoholism and remember the glorious wounded and dead for the country.

8. You will thus accomplish a great task, equaling that of our heroic soldiers.

A Tooth and Its Care--Part 3

(Delivered by Doctor G. W. Rodgers, of Sedalia, Missouri, at the Holden Stake reunion, August 18, 1917.)

ABSCESS

I suppose you have all either had an abscessed tooth or have seen one. Abscess is the result of the death and decomposition of the tooth pulp or nerve. This is usually due to neglect, though it may be caused by some abnormal condition, as an injury or shock from thermal change through a large metal filling from icewater or hot drinks. (See Word of Wisdom.) It is accompanied by severe pain and sometimes fever. There also appears to be an apparent elongation of the tooth which is due to inflammation set up in the peridental membrane which lines the tooth socket. The accumulation of pus at the apex of the root forms a pocket by destroying the surrounding bony tissue. This is the abscess. From this pocket nature forces the pus to escape by the way of least resistance, oftentimes reaching the surface upon the face or neck, and has been known to travel down between the muscles and find opening upon the breast. During the time the pus is penetrating the bone the patient suffers most, the pain at this time being of a throbbing character and most severe. The features become swollen on the affected side, the eye sometimes entirely closed and the jaws so stiff that it is with difficulty the mouth can be opened at all. Science has discovered that rheumatism and many systemic disorders are caused by abscessed conditions of the mouth. One may wonder how. Nature seeks to eliminate the pus formed and in this process a more or less amount is absorbed into the blood and thus by the blood may be carried to any part of the body. Thus we can see how an abnormal condition may obtain indirectly from an abscessed tooth. Many times though, there is no sign of an abscessed condition but by resorting to the X ray these pus pockets have been located and either the offending tooth removed or the abscess drained which resulted in the patient recovering from his ailment.

is a prevalent disease of the gums especially in mouths that receive poor care. More teeth are lost in this manner than any other way; I might say all other ways. Deposits are allowed to accumulate around the necks of the teeth, encroaching upon the gums, and causing them to break down. Pus pockets are thus formed into which disease-producing germs find their way with particles of decayed and fermenting food, causing absorption of the tooth socket and peridental membrane. This leaves the tooth without fastening, consequently it becomes loose, drops out, or may be easily lifted out. I have extracted such teeth as though removing a loose peg without obtaining a drop of blood. I remember one party coming into the office saying she did not know when she lost her tooth. I suppose she had a pleasant dream and swallowed it. Yet we find the possessor of two or three such teeth will hang on to them as though it were a case of life or death. This disease at one time was considered incurable, but now, if taken in time, it may be cured.

DISCOLOR AND STAINS

Among other deposits of simpler form is the green stain found frequently upon the teeth of children, but may also be found on the teeth of adults. This deposit is usually found near the gum margin. It is wholly superficial and easily removed; it varies in color from a dark green to a yellow, usually of a greenish tint. This deposit should not be allowed to remain, because it has a decomposing action on the enamel, producing pits and chalk-like spots. Then also it gives an unsightly appearance.

There are many things that discolor the teeth, as colored tooth pastes, medicines, decay, putrefied food, spices, tea and coffee. (Word of Wisdom.) And then along with these deposits, stains, and decayed teeth, comes a bad breath. A few teeth, or even one tooth, can make a very offensive breath. Suppose you were in business and a young man or woman applied for work, apparently intelligent and neat in appearance, but on opening his or her mouth displayed an array of decayed, broken down teeth and emitted a breath laden with germs, some of which are of the vilest character. Would you employ such an one? No, you would not; and your decision would be made without hesitation. I have had mouths brought to me for examination and work that were in such a putrescent condition, that I have wished for a gas mask such as we read of the soldiers using in the trenches. Some are so offensive, that as we say, we shoot their mouth full of a conglomeration that makes them want to spit for a week, then tell them where to obtain a tooth brush and a can of "old dutch," and to use them a few days before returning! I tell you it is disgusting to see the condition of some mouths while the outside is sprinkled with gay tinted powder and paint. As much as I detest the use of tobacco I would rather come in contact with the odor of a fifteen-year-old cob pipe, than inhale such a breath. So we can readily see that a good, well-kept set of teeth is a great asset to one's advancement in the business world, protecting his health, thus aiding in keeping a bright, clear mind. No man can work with the toothache, he cannot concentrate his mind upon what he has to do. It is an evidence of ignorance or a lack of refinement and is inexcusable to show dirty, ill-kept teeth. This may sound rather harsh but it's the truth; and I find it makes some wonderful transformations in some mouths too.

It should also be remembered that one of the greatest aids to mouth cleanliness is the habit of thorough and vigorous mastication of hard coarse foods. Thus the teeth are mechanically scrubbed in a natural manner, a copious flow of saliva is induced by which the mouth is cleansed and at the same time gums and peridental membrane are massaged. In the day of our fathers and grandfathers they did not live upon predigested breakfast foods, pastries and sweetstuffs and naturally did not have so many tooth troubles. They were forced to use their teeth, and thus they saved them by using them.

Too much care cannot be taken of your teeth. Select a brush suitable to your mouth with as harsh a bristle as your gums will stand and bristles irregular in length. Avoid the use of a brush that sheds its bristles or will not stand sterilizing in hot water. Your brush requires a better cleansing than your knife and fork. Hang it where the air can reach it, not in a closed dark box or container. Use a good, reliable tooth paste that has no coloring, as some colorings will stain the teeth. Common table salt is good occasionally—especially for the gums. In fact, some people prefer salt entirely. A strand of dental floss should be passed up and down between the teeth to cleanse the surfaces between that cannot be reached with a brush. The teeth, in fact the gums, tongue and roof of the mouth should be brushed every evening before retiring and upon arising in the morning. Thus at night you have no particles of food remaining while your mouth is at rest to aid fermentation and in the morning you remove the film and accumulated germs before eating and carrying them into your stomach; also rinse your mouth well with water after each meal. This entire performance will not take over 10 minutes of your day's time and what a difference it makes in your looks, health and happiness!

Do not crack nuts with your teeth, nor put pencils, pins or the like in your mouth. You who sew, do not cut threads; bad habit. Do not drink ice cold nor hot drinks as the sudden thermal change will check or crack the enamel as does hot water on a glass jar. Do not pick your teeth continually, if they annoy you they need attention, better go to a dentist immediately. Do not be under the impression your teeth need no attention until you have had them examined, and they should be examined every six months or a year at most. In fact, a good set of teeth is really a matter of your own choice; you know their importance; they give health; they bring attractiveness to the most comely face, and they win for you happiness.

So let us have our mouths, and teeth put in order and heed the admonition, "Be ye clean in body and thought." If we live in strict obedience we will indeed obtain to a state of purity, and God will be pleased to call us his children whom we claim to be, and he will pour out upon us his blessings without measure.

Our "Cultural" Classes

Greetings to those interested in the Cultural Classes: It is indeed with great pleasure that I see the advent of this intellectual movement among the women of our church. This desire to learn and improve in the various activities is evidence that many are working towards the great and ultimate goal—the redemption of Zion.

This is pioneer work, and all large movements are a result of steady and patient growth; a "mushroom" growth would not be desired, for then it would only be a "fad" and could not endure. This study work must stay and grow, for as women of Zion no preparation is too great.

Do not, therefore, become discouraged if the work does not move as rapidly as you think it should; remember you are helping to lay the foundation of a great institution.

The "hopes" for this department are many. The plan is that some day in the future, the classes will be so well-organized and the unity such that a member might be transferred from one section of the country to another, if necessity requires, with no interruptions in his course of study.

Helps and suggestions will be greatly appreciated, especially from those who have taken special work in any of the branches of this department. May we have the true spirit of cooperation that our efforts will make us better women, our vision broadened, and our ability increased for service to the glory of our God!

MRS. ANNA JO VAN EATON.

LAMONI, IOWA.

(Sister Glines requests us to say that Sister Van Eaton will give special instruction in regard to courses of study in any of the cultural subjects. Supervisors or field workers, knowing of classes wishing to take any of these, should get in touch with Sister Van Eaton, at once. They should also note that there is now outlined a course in public speaking by Sister Lula Sandy. Sister Glines will be glad to send upon request, outlines for study in any of the many branches of the Educational Department. Address her at 622 South Crysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri.)

Among Our Locals

KIRTLAND REUNION

Sister C. Pearson writes of the very interesting and efficient part the Auxiliary women took in the work of the late reunion here. She speaks of the love the Saints have for the historic place, and the large numbers in attendance. Talks on mothers' problems proved instructive, especially to the many young mothers who were present. Sister Sadie Skeen on "Telling a child what to do, and what not to do." Sister Royton on "The ideal home," and, later in the week, the stimulating work of Sister Ella Smith, fieldworker, the afternoon spent in Red Cross work under the direction of the local chapter, and last mentioned, but not least in importance, the helpful caring for the little ones at the reunion, in which the Orioles, under Sister George, were very prominent, were among the many bright and memorable events of the occasion.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Recent letters from Sister Rushton and Sister Will Badham, tell of the new impetus given the auxiliary work in their locality. The relief and service department meets regularly every week; a public speaking, or expression class, under the guidance of Brother Williams, meets Thursday evenings, and has a membership of near thirty; another class is studying Mark's, The Teacher and the Child, which item may be repeated with accuracy, concerning some others of the near-by branches. This was the text Brother Rushton used for the morning study hour at the late reunions in California, and from which much helpful thought was evolved.

ALBERTA, CANADA

Sister Zella Ihrke has been appointed superintendent of the Oriole work in the Alberta district, and is writing for help, as she desires very earnestly to be of great service in this line. She was appointed by Sister Daniel Macgregor, who is president of the district. Sister Fred Gregory being the vice president. With such earnest and capable sisters in charge of the auxiliary work in that locality, we should expect fine results, and they are all "live wires."

LONDON, ONTARIO

Sister Rosa Tier of this city sends us the names of the officers of their newly-organized district auxiliary, together with three excellent papers which were read at some of their meetings. They were greatly encouraged by an indorsement of their move which came by the Spirit at the sacrament meeting following their organization. They were warned of discouragements and trials, but cheered by assurances of blessings, and the good their example would do for others. The members are taking active interest, and they hope to enlarge their fields of usefulness as they can. Sister Tier is president, with Sister Mottashed assisting her; Sister G. C. Harnden is secretary, and Sister Reilly treasurer, while Sr. Clara Hardy acts as historian.

Ours a Thriftless Nation

It is said that what were luxuries in one age of the world become necessities in another; but it is easy to deceive yourself on that subject. You should remember that you do not really need a thing the lack of which causes you no worse suffering than that of ungratified desire or unsatisfied pride.

The average wages, salaries and incomes are higher in this country than in any other, yet our savings banks do not make a creditable showing. Fourteen countries greatly outrank ours in the proportion of savings accounts to population. In thrift, as indicated by the savings banks, we stand at the bottom of the list of the principal nations.

Of every 100 of our citizens 66 leave at their death no estate at all. Only nine leave as much as $5,000. The average estate left by the other 25 is less than $1,300. Ninety-seven out of every 100 lose their earning power at the age of 65, and, as most of them have saved nothing, they become dependent on relatives or on the public. It is estimated that there are 1,250,000 of such destitute persons in this country, most of whom might have escaped that sad fate.

Let every young man who has to make his way unaided realize that to say, "I have money in the bank," is a certificate of character and ability.

There is no doubt that, barring accident and disease, almost every family not dependent on mere unskilled day labor could lay up some provision for the future by cutting off waste and steadily practicing un hurtful self-denial. There must be a choice between passing desire and lasting well being. The day of small things must not be despised; all growth is from little seeds. Dimes are the germs of dollars.

A rational person can certainly get no real enjoyment from any outlay that leads to a hand-to-mouth existence; he has no safeguards against misfortune that are sure to come sooner or later to everyone.

Among all material pleasures there is none so great as that which springs from a store laid by for future wants, especially for the needs of those for whose well being you have become responsible. And when you have gathered that store by steadfastly refusing thriftless self-indulgence, you have a satisfaction that outweighs and outlasts all fleeting joys. I speak from my own experience, and I can call to witness thousands of others who have traveled the same road.—Judson Harmon, in the Youth's Companion.

A Sinful Waste of Food

The average American eats too much. It is no exaggeration to say that he eats twice the amount that is needed to nourish the body. Long life depends upon proper functioning. In order to preserve one's strength and vitality, no more food should be taken than is actually needed to maintain one's weight and strength. Scientific feeding, therefore, would require one first of all to make a test to determine the particular amount of food which most satisfactorily maintains normal weight and strength. The particular weight that one should carry can be measured to a large extent by one's vital condition. The weight at which you feel strongest and have most endurance, with a brain clear as a bell, is the weight you should try to maintain.

Edison has said that the American people are doped with food. And there is no question as to the accuracy of this statement. Horace Fletcher in his dietetic experiments in connection with the rationing of the Belgian refugees brought some revolutionary principles into the limelight. Those under the influence of this rationing improved in health to an extraordinary extent. The death rate was reduced by about one-third.

This habit of eating beyond bodily requirements is due in large extent to our regular-meal habit. We have certain times for meals: breakfast, dinner and supper; or, if you belong to the so-called "upper classes," breakfast, lunch and dinner. It's about the same in either instance. Gormandiz-ing is actually considered necessary. We become slaves to the three-meal-a-day habit.

The time to eat is when you are hungry, and at no other time.

If you are hungry at mealtimes, those are the times when you should eat. But you should eliminate forever from your mind the idea that it is necessary to sit down at the table and attempt to eat at the accustomed time whether you are hungry or not.

If we could rid this Nation of the meal-time slavery, the statement is no exaggeration that the amount of food that could be saved would feed all the soldiers now engaged in this terrific war. And not only would food be saved but the Nation would be benefited both mentally and physically.—Bernarr Macfadden in Physical Culture.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Roll of Honor

"The Greenwood Sunday school's last year's Christmas offering was ten dollars and eighty cents and already this year we have seventy-five dollars. We have every reason to make it one hundred dollars before the end of the year."

The Dayton, Ohio, Sunday school with an average attendance of nineteen have already accumulated thirty dollars.

Beardstown, Illinois: "We, too, want to help in the increase of the Christmas offering and decrease the expense of each pupil's name appearing in the Blue Stepping Stones, so request by a unanimous vote of the school that our record appear thus: The Hope Sunday School of Beardstown, Illinois. We have nearly sixty dollars now and are increasing all the time. We hope to reach one hundred dollars. Our enrollment is sixty."

Wheeling, West Virginia: "Three weeks ago when I wrote you about our Christmas offering, I stated we expected to have one hundred dollars by the end of the year. We now have one hundred and forty-nine dollars, and fifty-eight cents. Think we will have to set our aim at two hundred dollars now. On last Sunday, the day of our dedication, a dear old brother whose contributions to the church may be counted in the thousands, handed in one hundred dollars for that purpose, which was turned over to Bishop Becker at that time."

East St. Louis, Illinois: "As you know, I am consecrating my best day's wage each month to the Lord as Christmas offering, and I thought it might interest you to know that I was so blessed in my work during the nineteenth day of September that I was able to make $18.45, which amount I turned in as Christmas offering the first Sunday in October. The Master makes me very happy when I realize that in truth he helps me in doing his will. I am so proud of my God."

Far West Stake, Home Department Superintendent: "The scattered members of the Home Department of the old Nodaway District gave $18 last year, and I know most of the same members will give enough this year to double that amount. We already have $30 promised."

Providence Branch

The branch is happy and growing. I voice the sentiment of the great majority of active workers—in fact the voice of all the workers, for only such are happy, and in this case all who are working in the Providence Branch are working together in one spirit and that spirit is the Holy Spirit. It blesses us in our prayer services, preaching services, Sunday school sessions, Religio work, and every other effort put forth to advance the kingdom of God.

Providence is the second largest city in New England. Within eighty miles radius there are more people than within eighty miles of Boston, so the editor of the Journal states. Thus there are lots of people to preach to if one could only get their ear. This seems to be the great task of tasks in city work. I am confident that God expects the membership to seriously discharge the responsibility resting on them to bring nonmembers to service. As a rule every outsider who comes to church is brought by a Saint. The work of saving the world is committed to the membership as a whole. There has been too much laid upon the shoulders of the ministry. God will not hold the slacker, the shirk, guiltless in the day of accounts.

The Sunday school held its rally service last week. There was a splendid response both in attendance and offering. Twenty-two dollars was contributed; everyone seemed to rejoice in the giving—this was the best part.

The Religio has opened a new class. It is a lecture class followed by questions. We have four themes and four teachers presenting five lessons. 1. The historical and geographical settings of the Bible. 2. The Doctrine and Covenants, its history and teachings. 3. Outline study of the Old Testament. 4. Church History.

Dutee Hall, musical genius and student at Brown University, was baptized recently. Sister Susan Godfrey also entered the church by the new birth. Two splendid additions to our branch.

We are much encouraged and have reasons for believing that God is pleased.

R. W. FARRELL.

GREENWOOD, NEW YORK, October 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: After being "grocery man," for two weeks at the reunion in Massachusetts I left for New York, stopping at Brooklyn for a few days as guest of Brother Ward L. Christy and Brother Jack. I preached for the Saints in Brooklyn on Sunday and on the street with Brother Christy on Tuesday night. Wednesday I left for Malone and was made welcome at Sister McDonalds. I held services in Malone until September 4, and left next day for Saranac Lake where I continued preaching until the 17th, then to Malone for a few days. While at Malone Mr. McDonald made my stay very pleasant, and he is kind and very hospitable.

On September 24, I left Malone for Sherrill, where I was made welcome by Brother Frank Mesle. Sherrill is a very nice little city of some two thousand inhabitants, it has quite a romantic and interesting history. Brother Mesle is well thought of, and has many friends in the community. The few Saints there are somewhat at a disadvantage in not having a public place to meet in, we trust however that in the near future this condition may be overcome. I remained in Sherrill until October 6. We started at 6 a. m. for Greenwood, Brethren Montgomery, Frank Mesle, Fred Mesle, Glen Davison and the writer, all on board of Brother Mesle's latest convert—an automobile. I do not know whether it is thoroughly converted or not. Anyhow we made a brave start and kept going fairly well most of the time. Brother and Sister Whitehead of East Syracuse had requested us to stop there to administer to their boy who was quite sick; we did so and felt that he would be blessed. A familiar voice called our attention to a house near by, and on investigation found Sister Braut of Somerville, Massachusetts, and Elenor Whitehead, her daughter, who is a bride of a few months. How good it is to see old friends, if for only a few moments.

Well, it began to rain, but what do we care? we are a jolly party. I never knew that there was such beautiful scenery in the State of New York as there is. From Syracuse to Cortland we went along in fine shape only once the machine had a notion of leaving the good road for a convenient ditch, but happily changed its mind. We stopped at a garage to get some "free air," and away we went, twenty-six miles out of our way. However that isn't much when you have about one hundred and seventy-five miles to go, if you make no mistakes.

We finally got on the right road again, and arrived in Cortland at noon. Frank was very particular to put up a nice large lunch the night before that we might have plenty to eat, but oh dear! he left it on the table at home, so we went to a nice restaurant and had lunch. It had concluded to quit raining awhile, and as we went along at a good rate toward Ithaca through valleys, over streams, past mountains covered with trees of every shade of red, green and gold, I thought it was good to be alive. Both priesthoods were represented in the party, all being of one order or the other, so we had to make extemporaneous and instantaneous speeches on every conceivable subject dictated to us. They were certainly some wonderful speeches. Then a debate followed between Brother Frank and the writer. It must be understood, however, that while Frank was debating Glen was driving the machine, not but what Frank could do both at the same time, I am only stating as a fact that he did not. Past Ithaca and now at Montour Falls, where the water falls from a great height, making a brilliant display as it tumbles down the mountain side. "The shades of night were falling fast," we were still on the road, and no one seemed to know how far we were from our destination. We passed through Horseheads and Corning and Addison and then learned that we must reach and pass Jasper. O Jasper, Jasper, how you seemed to recede in the darkness and awfulness of the solitude! We were anxious to reach Jasper because then we were to strike a real country road which would take us direct to Greenwood. Well we struck the road all right, and by and by the road struck us. Pop—swish—and there we were, 9 p. m., and we should have been at conference at 2.30 p. m. Glen is a mechanic; so is Frank; the rest of us stood around and gave advice. At 10.45 we saw the gleaming lights of the village, but the Saints had all gone home. The hotel lights were still burning, however, and we put the poor tired machine in the barn and obtained three rooms in the hotel.

The services of the conference were well attended and a fine spiritual time was had. Brethren Stone, Lewis, Monters, Angus, Weeger, and the writer were present, besides a number of brethren and sisters from various places in the district. Brother A. D. Angus and the writer continued to hold services in the church until Thursday when Brother Angus left for Scranton, Pennsylvania, the writer continuing the services. We trust good may result. We are kindly entertained at Brother and Sister Weeks's of this place

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

HAMMONDSPORT, NEW YORK, October 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: I come asking space in your columns to speak a word for the district in which our labors have been cast for some years past, and am truly gratified to see the manifest desire of so many in various parts of the district to arise to greater heights of spirituality than they have ever enjoyed before.

That which was enjoyed at our district conference of October 6 and 7, was evidence that progress is surely being made as the manifestation of the Spirit of God enjoyed, bore witness to all present that he was mindful of their desires and their efforts to more fully keep his commandments. And in his fatherly way pointed out to us through the gift of tongues and interpretation the exact means by which our desires may be realized.

Prayer, said the Lord, with fastings and consecration of purpose, will bring a realization of those things hoped for in righteousness.

Our conference was not the largest from the standpoint of numbers ever held in the district, but decidedly the very best. The spirit of sacrifice was evidenced by the manner in which the Saints present contributed to the various needs of the work, the missionaries were liberally provided for. Graceland was remembered in a substantial way, not forgetting the debt the church is struggling under. The little Sunday school of Greenwood, New York, of not over twenty members have set their standard for their Christmas offering at the high mark of one hundred dollars, which means on an average of five dollars per head for every member, young and old. And if every school in the land would make such an effort, and set their standard as high in proportion to their membership, I could predict a smile upon the bishop's face that would gladden the hearts of all the children of God, the church soon freed from debt, which would mean advancement along other lines that hitherto has been impossible. While the New York District is large and rather difficult in which to prosecute the work, yet we find in our search for honest souls that there are some who are ready to give ear and heed to the message of life. In passing through the historic village of Palmyra, one is reminded of the struggles of the Palmyra seer and those who were in sympathy with him and his work, and strange as it may appear that same spirit is still manifest among the residents of that place and in fact it is present in many places throughout the entire State, so many people are so utterly opposed to anything that is known by the name of Latter Day Saint that they will not consider it for one moment. However, the truth is being preached, and those who are willing to hear have the opportunity to do so.

The experience of the writer of late has proven that there are those who are not willing to hear when they have the opportunity, one case in evidence while holding forth in a little hamlet in Connecticut, a certain woman was in attendance for a number of evenings and finally refused to attend any longer and when asked why, she recognized that the truth was being taught and because of that it made her feel very uncomfortable, hence she was not going to attend any more of the services.

We are gratified, however, that the truth is being taught and people are forced to confess it, thus is God glorified. We feel that the hastening time is now and Saints as well as sinners need to be taught. Our experience teaches us that the successful fireside preacher, is just as needful and of as much importance as the pulpit preacher, and in fact the fireside sermon is usually the one that is the most profitable to the inquiring mind. The writer is trying to divide his time as far as possible between the scattered Saints of the New York District and the Saints of Broad River, Connecticut. Trusting in the Author of the gospel of peace for grace and wisdom to wisely perform the duties devolving upon me,

I am your brother in Christ,

A. E. STONE.

ONTARIO, CALIFORNIA, October 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: Having often seen in our beloved HERALD a call for letters from those of the church, I wondered if a word from one who has never ventured to write for publication would help anyone or encourage a weak one like myself. Realizing my weakness and inability to be of any use more than to strive to so live that I may not be a stumblingblock to any who would perhaps accept the angel's message. I have refrained from adding my mite, but of late I have been impressed with the thought that has been my motto more or less during the thirty years since I first heard the gospel message: He that taketh not up his cross and follows not after me is not worthy of me.

I was brought up in the Methodist faith, my parents being strict members of that church. My father would have us read portions of Scripture with him of an evening and I noticed many passages that they did not teach, but father would answer, Those are done away with. That was all the answer we got, and I expect that was why I more readily looked for more. There seemed a void somewhere, but that was the best I knew until in 1887.

Brother R. C. Evans came to our village and announced meetings, Brother James Bannister allowing him the use of his house. It was rumored at once that a Mormon was holding meetings in town. I might say the whole settlement was mostly Methodist, excepting the Bannisters and a few others. They resented his coming very much, but the majority went to hear what he had to say, and many went away and slandered him, and misrepresented him. I stayed away until my husband, having attended several meetings, wished me to go and hear him, saying that he had never heard so much Scripture. I replied that I was glad of it, and I hoped he would be converted as he had never made any profession of religion. Finally I decided to go and hear for myself. Suffice it to say, the first sermon had so much of truth in it that I was determined to hear more of it and I attended every service that it was possible. Before very long I was convinced of the truth of his preaching, but did not unite with them until the following April. Brother and Sister Longhurst and Brother and Sister James Bannister and Sister Welsh were among the first to unite with the church.

Branches were soon organized in the surrounding towns. The Spirit was with them in power. Now came the test. I must leave the church of my childhood, for I knew that the despised Latter Day Saints had the truth and that God was leading me. I prayed constantly that if this was his church that he would lead me to obey, and if not he would keep me from being deceived. The words would ring in my mind, He that taketh not up his cross to follow me is not worthy of me. I even dreamed of uniting with the church and the joy I experienced was evidence enough. When my little girl was twelve weeks old, I went down into the waters of baptism with joy in my heart, for I knew I was obeying God's will.

I was alone so far as friends and relatives were concerned; my husband listened to the false rumors and stood back, but the more I read and studied the more I was convinced of the truth, and I have tried in my weak way to be true to God's word, and the older I grow the stronger my faith becomes.

Although I am only human, my greatest desire is to see this great work prosper. My sister united with the church later, and we are the only ones of all our relatives that we know of that belong. I wish to say to anyone that feels like giving up the struggle, Do not be discouraged, for Christ is at the helm and he that endureth to the end the same shall be saved. Most of my family united with the church as they grew up, and I have reason to hope others will come in the true fold.

Fearing I have written too much, I will close, as space will not permit me to write more at this time. Brother R. C.'s Autobiography makes mention of all I could tell.

Yours for the truth,

M. J. CROFF.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, CANADA,

Editors Herald: We are beginning to feel the cold winds away up here which are heralding the advance of winter. Our little church has also undergone a coat of paint and looks very bright and cheerful, and by the labors of devotion of E. G. Robertson, our branch president, slowly but surely are advancing Zionward. At present we are looking forward with much pleasure to Brother J. J. Cornish's visit here this coming week, and are praying for a fresh outpouring of God's Spirit. We ask the prayers of the Saints that a great and glorious work may be done in Winnipeg in the near future.

Trusting that the blessing of God may ever be yours,
JENNIE HANLOW, Branch Correspondent.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: Besides the classes going on, which attract a fairly good attendance, there are two choruses being conducted in the interest of all persons who are able and desirous to sing with any ordinary degree of proficiency.

The chorister of the Stone Church is enthusiastic over the idea of obtaining about four hundred of the Saints to represent a choir of voices for the Oratorio, Elijah; and also an invitation is extended by the musical people of Kansas City to our singers to functionize with them in a chorus of one thousand at Convention Hall—an event which will occur early this fall.

Also a community movement is being agitated for the men and women to renew their diligence in the new Liberty Loan venture and Red Cross work.

The Saints were edified and instructed by two discourses on Sunday, October 14, Brother J. A. Koehler speaking in the morning and Brother U. W. Greene in the evening.

Brother Greene selected for his theme the operations of the Holy Spirit and gleaned from his own experiences many examples of God's power and blessing in the gift of healing, and directing, and he cited many who came, during his extensive travels, under his special ministrations. These were especially mentioned as occurring at a time when his ministry was associated with that of Brethren Macgregor and Sheehy. The speaker alluded with emotion to the teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants and said, "Oh, that the young people present would delight to read and appreciate these writings!"

God, he declared, is directing the people, and they should not be opposed to the studying of these things. He will endow the Saints with power and in a most peculiar way he has in the recent past been the directing force to bring many into the gospel fold. To devote one's life to the study of the doctrine of the church and to consecrate it to the service of the Master is the duty of all those who are seeking to establish the work of Zion.

Brother Koehler in the morning service also commended the reading of the Doctrine and Covenants, and took for his text section 1: 7, "Search these commandments."

He reviewed the present conditions politically, economically, socially and religiously, and stated that there was, in both church and state, the necessity for a great change.

The prayer meetings have been very interesting of late, and both old and young are progressing spiritually, all being desirous to further the interests of the work. Sunday was Graceland Day and liberal contributions were made at the services.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

HIGHLAND PARK, MICHIGAN, October 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: Having been elected branch correspondent, I will now write my first letter to the HERALD. The work was first started here under the fostering care of Elder J. A. Grant, and through his efforts a Sunday school was started in January, 1917. A storebuilding was secured to hold services in. Sunday school and preaching each Sunday, also prayer meeting was held on Wednesday nights, of each week. The interest continued to grow until in April the Detroit Branch, number one, declared this a mission. The writer was asked by Elder Grant to take charge of the mission, and after some study and prayer over the matter, consented to do so.

On July 16, the mission was organized into a branch, the writer chosen as branch president. Have baptized two since that time and others are near the fold. Many times our building has been taxed to the utmost. Our average attendance at Sunday school is fifty. Our branch membership is twenty-eight, but there are many Saints living here that will join our ranks as soon as their letters of removal can be secured. In May, I was asked by the bishop's agent, Elder W. A. Blair, to act as his solicitor. During the month of June, seventy-seven dollars and fifty cents was collected by a special offering for the church debt. Also the Saints are remembering their tithing. Our Sunday school did not start collecting their Christmas offering until July 1. Since then we have collected a nice amount. We hope to turn at least one hundred and fifty dollars into the Bishop's hands by Christmas. One thing noticeable about our branch is the scarcity (?) of meetings. Notice: Sunday morning prayer meeting, eight fifteen; Sunday school, nine-thirty; preaching, except sacrament Sunday, eleven; song service, five p. m., study club and normal, five-thirty until seven; preaching at seven-thirty. Monday night at eight o'clock is priesthood meeting. Wednesday evening, at eight o'clock is prayer meeting and Friday night we have Religio. Are we keeping the Lord's commandments to meet together often? We expect to hold a series of meetings here soon. Our aim is to help build up his kingdom on earth and to establish this in righteousness among his people. God has blessed our efforts in the past, and I believe he will in the future if we keep humble and faithful to our covenant with him.

In gospel bonds,
2942 Hamilton Boulevard. W. HENRY WILLIAMS.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, October 17, 1917.

Dear Herald: I thought the Saints, who are so highly favored as to be able and wise enough to include the HERALD among their weekly periodicals, might read with some degree of pleasure the news from this section of God's vineyard.

We have just wound up a week of very strenuous but pleasant service in the army of the Lord. The writer returned from an extended western trip in time to jump into an auto almost immediately upon his return and after a few hours careful consideration of New Jersey's traffic police and a careful observance of her many speed traps found himself and family being warmly welcomed in Philadelphia by the Saints of that place and others from Scranton, Pennsylvania, Elk Mills, Maryland, Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, and some of our own dear Brooklyn Saints who had all assembled at Philadelphia to attend the district conference.

The spirituality of the services was of the kind that makes one feel glad that they are identified with a church and people who have the high aims and aspirations that our people have, and it surely did give me renewed courage to meet with and take part in and partake of the influences that feed the soul.

Brother U. W. Greene delivered a most interesting sermon on the endowment of the Holy Spirit, during which he related some of his wonderful missionary experiences, and how loath we were to hear his concluding remarks after an hour and a half of feasting on the good things that were set before us. One worthy young brother was ordained to the office of president of the quorum of priests, and some children were blessed. The Philadelphia choir with the assistance of the visiting Saints who sing in their respective choirs, rendered the "Holy City" under the able direction of Brother A. N. Hoxie, with accompaniment of Sister Hoxie on the piano, and a gentleman whom we understood is not a member of the church, played the violin. It was all very inspiring.

Now as to Brooklyn, our local meetings are well attended, and everything in our church work seems to be looking up with admonitions tending to encourage and instruct. Our last Sunday's services we think are worthy of mention inasmuch as they were somewhat exceptional. After a rousing sermon in the morning, we were requested to attend a booster service in the afternoon. Same was presided over by one of our heavy hitters, namely Brother Christy, who, after telling us how to boost things, asked for volunteers to go calling on the people living in the neighborhood of our little church and invite them to the Sunday evening services. While all the people called upon by the volunteers did not come that evening, some did, and who can say what good was done, as we left tracts everywhere we called, and had promises from some to come at another time. The sermon in the evening was preceded by the rendering of that beautiful anthem, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings," etc., by the choir, led by Brother Gene Christy in a masterly way. We must not forget to mention Sister Anna Warnky's singing of the obligato in the anthem as it was very beautiful. The subject of Brother Christy's discourse was, "Why we go to church, Why should we go to church, and Where should we go to church?" It was a wonderful sermon, a feast of fat things, with a goodly portion of that enlightening Spirit in attendance.

The friends of Brother Roy Squire will be pleased to learn of his ordination to the office of teacher last Sunday afternoon, and I am sure that those who know the young brother will uphold him with their faith and prayers. There could be no other or better start from youth for one who has consecrated his time and talents to the service of the Master, as has our Roy from his boyhood to the present. He has truly remembered his creator in the days of his youth.

Last Wednesday evening after prayer service Brother Johnson, one of the soldier boys who came from Illinois, and who is stationed at the Fort on Staten Island, came to Brother Squire with the girl of his choice and asked Brother Squire to marry them so we had a very unexpected wedding in our midst. The young couple spent Sunday at church with us all and are very happy, of course. The Christmas offering for Bishop McGuire's work seems to be progressing well here. May it continue so to do.

We see the great war cloud settling over our fair land, and along our eastern coast the activities are more pronounced than inland, and as we are brought face to face with the terrible reality that we must sacrifice almost countless numbers of our young men to help to decide whether the world be ruled by autocrat or democrat, we fully feel it is high time for God's people who possess the true knowledge of who will really rule triumphant as Lord of lords and King of kings, to stand in high and holy places and do their part in helping to strike a blow into the heart of evil that will materially assist in the final conclusion of these international conflicts incited by selfish men with selfish purposes. Hurrah for our soldier boys, and may God bless them.

We are glad to welcome to our branch Brother Frisbee and family, who have located here. They come from Flint, Michigan, and like true Saints moved right next door to the church. Brother Frisbee is a priest. The same welcome is extended to Brother and Sister Hawkins from Scranton, Pennsylvania, who have joined our ranks, having moved here. If this letter is too long for your columns use the Herald Office's big scissors.

Ever faithfully yours,

WILLIAM E. NICHOLS.

JOY, ILLINOIS, October 18, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have not seen anything from the Kewanee District for some time. We just closed a district conference at Millersburg; it was one of the best that has been held in this district for some time. We were sorry not to have our district president with us, Brother W. E. Peak, who was called home the week before to his family. But we had our vice president, Brother C. L. Holmes, also Apostle Sheehy came just in time to help us out. He gave us two fine sermons, which were uplifting and instructive, as all can judge who knew him.

The conference was well represented throughout the district and we can see an awakening on the part of most of the Saints for which we are glad, although there are a few standing by with folded hands waiting for Zion to be redeemed.

I have found plenty to do this conference year, as I am the only missionary in the district, Brother Peak being local, but we have worked together in harmony. All who know him, know this to be his policy.

I have found his advice to be good. It has been well said, "Old men for council, young men for war," using old in the term as it is generally used to-day. This district seems to be slow in making new openings as but few of the Saints have caught the missionary spirit. I have done quite a bit of street work during the summer months, which seemed to meet with some success. I have some new openings in view for the winter months and the leaves which are beginning to fall, together with chill winds, make one think that it is at hand.

I wish to relate a dream I had some time ago. One evening I had been taking a retrospective view of this year's work and it seemed I had accomplished so little, after reading in the HERALD and Ensign of the success of others, and I retired for the night, feeling downcast and somewhat discouraged. During the night, I saw a large bill, (something like a large sale bill) only it seemed to be more artistically arranged. It seemed to be advertising a prayer meeting of the Saints, a certain number of testimonies, a certain number of tongues, and the interpretation and a certain number of prophecies were billed and the only thought that came to me was that I would attend the meeting without fail, when a voice spoke to me, saying, It was quality and not quantity that God desires, and then I awoke.

My desire is to labor on in this great cause as I realize the reward lies at the end of the race and it will be quality that will stand.

Your colaborer,

E. A. CURTIS.

WAUCONDA, WASHINGTON, October 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: For some time I have been thinking of writing you. We are of the isolated ones and seldom hear the word of God preached. Recently we were made to rejoice when Brother R. Newby visited us and dispensed for us the word of life, in a series of sermons that were well received by the people, a fine interest being maintained throughout the series. We of the faith here feel that Brother Newby is truly a man of God, well versed in the faith and the word of truth, and knows how to rightly divide the same, as instance, he strongly denounces Brighamism, false faiths, man-made churches, traditions of men taught as commandments of God, in short all kinds of sin, without offense to any. About the same number attended the series throughout, although it was harvest time and the people were very busy. We all hope Brother Newby will soon return and give us more of his life-giving sermons. One was baptized, and more interested.

I can truly testify that this is the true church of God, for one evidence of its truth witness everywhere. The same gospel preached, the gospel signs following wherever its elders go in all the world, also the manifestations of the coming of that Just One. Let us make every effort possible to be ready against the day of his appearance. We know the world is ripe in sin. If we be the salt of the earth, let us for his sake, who died to make us his, put away every evil thought; and strive for more salt daily in our vessels, so that our labors be not in vain, and so that Christ shall not have suffered for naught.

Yours faithfully,

ISAIAH M. DUNGAN.

AITKIN, MINNESOTA, October 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have thought of writing to you quite a good many times but thought others could do better. I came here four years ago next April. The night before I arrived here, I dreamed of catching three fish and while looking at and admiring them, they were changed to humans and I was given to know that they were one family.

So I began preaching and after one hundred and fifty sermons in the Lone Lake Schoolhouse, and seven at Wealthwood, and one at the Butts Schoolhouse, I had the privilege of baptizing Brother and Sister Griffith and daughter Winifred. So you see I caught my fish all right and my older daughter came home on a visit and I baptized her. That makes four baptisms this fall. She will be recorded at Walthill, Nebraska, while the others will be recorded at Bemidji, Minnesota. I should say that Brother and Sister S. F. Wedlock and myself and wife and the three new members are all there are near Lone Lake. There are four members near Glen, Minnesota, about eight miles east.

Brother and Sister T. H. Brogdon from Deloit have gone home, having been here all summer. While going to the city of Aitkin he had the misfortune to receive a stroke of paralysis, which caused his left side to become helpless. We ask the prayers of all the brethren for him. We love this work and hope to see all striving for its advancement.

If C. J. Hunt and B. S. Lambkin should see this, take notice. I would like to hear from them.

Your brother in Christ,

J. G. MYERS.

Arrange for Auxiliary Speaking Dates

Sister Lula Sandy, president of the Woman's Auxiliary, is making a tour in the interests of that work, having been speaking at a number of points in Kewanee, Illinois, District, and in Eastern Iowa with much success. She not only addresses audiences, but endeavors to leave every community in an organized condition, with an organizer to further care for the work. She should be addressed soon by those desiring appointments, as she is on the move and may visit intermediate points at a minimum of expense. Address her in care of J. A. Dowker, 6549 South Lincoln Street, Chicago, Illinois. She visits points in Michigan soon, and will be in Chicago for a big meeting of the three branches on the 11th. The only expenses to those visited will be those incident to her traveling from place to place.—EDITORS.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

LITTLE SIOUX.—Convened at Moorehead, Iowa, October 13 and 14. Amos Berve presiding, assisted by J. W. Lane. Statistical reports showed a net gain of 39, or a present membership of 2,296. Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrando, reported tithes and offerings for quarter, $3,137.22. Total receipts since January 1, 1917, $9,036.90. A proposition from Logan for a permanent reunion ground was submitted and postponed indefinitely. A report was received of the organization of the Woman's Auxiliary within the district. Conference approved of same. Chester O. Butterworth of Sioux City ordained to the office of priest. Adjourned to meet at Missouri Valley in February. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

Change on the Home Department Board

Mrs. J. Arthur Davies, of Chetopa, Kansas, appointed shortly after the last General Conventions as General Extension Superintendent on the General Home Department Board, has asked to be relieved of her duties because of home cares. Mrs. Wesley Burwell, 3243 Virginia Avenue, Louisville, Kentucky, has been appointed to fill the office for the balance of the term. This appointment has been ratified by Gomer R. Wells, general superintendent of the Sunday School Association, and Granville S. Trowbridge, President Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

Under the new arrangement the Home Department work is cared for by a board consisting of three members. Two of them are the general Home Department superintendents of the Sunday School Association and the Religio-Literary Society already provided for in the constitutions of the respective organizations. The third member is a special appointee. The principal work of this special member on the board shall be to locate all isolated Saints through every available channel of information, and then to induce them to enroll with both Sunday school and Religio departments, or either of them, for the study of the lesson Quarterlies at home. A special leaflet of information will be furnished to anyone desiring to be more fully informed with reference to the new arrangement.

All stakes and districts have already been informed that we desire them to provide for a board of three members after the pattern of the general board. The stake or district extension superintendent is appointed by both Sunday school and Religio Home Department superintendents. A number of the districts have already advised us of their selection. We wish to hear from the rest of the districts as soon as possible. The time of the year for doing our most effective work is now at hand. Let us strike while the iron is hot.

All extension superintendents appointed are urged to get in touch with the new general extension superintendent as soon as possible.

FRANK F. WIPPER,

Sunday School General Home Department Superintendent.

WILLIAM F. SAGE,

Religio General Home Department Superintendent.

Attention! Literature Workers

God is good to us. Did you read the notice printed on the first page of a late HERALD? Here it is: "When you have finished reading this magazine place a one-cent stamp on this notice and hand to any postal employee and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors at the front. No Wrapping, No Address. A. S. Burleson, Postmaster General." Is not this wonderful? The reason nine times out of ten why we do not mail our literature to others is because it is such a bother to wrap it and address it. We need do neither in sending literature to our soldiers at the front. And where can you send gospel literature where it would be more appreciated than to men who are gazing into the awful blank (to many of them)? Men are thinking of God, "somewhere in France"! Will you help supply them with the vital instruction they need? Will you? Answer now—not tomorrow, for to-morrow will be too late for some of them.

And it is such a simple thing to do—almost too simple, I fear, for we will not sense the importance of it all. May God help us to do so.

Will you purchase fifty (only fifty) one-cent stamps and affix them to your HERALDS and Ensigns, as they come to you and are read, and send them on their errand of life to those who walk in darkness? This is the request of the gospel literature commission that you placed in office to direct the work of sending gospel literature to men and women asking for bread (and in many, too many, instances receiving a stone).

And will you kindly send me a card on the first day of March stating how many pieces of literature you have distributed this year, ending March, 1918? If you report to the district or local it will not be necessary.

For the General Commission,

RALPH W. FARRELL.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, 14 Kenwood Street.

Buying Silence

The user of the "Silent Smith" buys, in addition to a writing machine—OFFICE QUIET.

Instead of the clatter of the ordinary typewriter, he hears the gentle "tap, tap," of the type against the paper—practically the only sound.

This result has been brought about by mechanical refinements. Ball bearings, lightness of touch, ease of operation and a minimum of noise—all help the operator to turn out neat, accurate written work.

Send for free booklet, "The Silent Smith." It has valuable information about typewriting and typewriters.

BOOK OF MORMON LECTURES.—Are you a student? Here is something for your faculties to wrestle with. The author, H. A. Stebbins, has, with comprehensive outlook, embodied in these lectures a wealth of archaeological facts corroborative of the Book of Mormon narrative, dug from works unknown to the public prior to its publication, and from others published since that time. The statements in these lectures are made in such unaffected plainness and simplicity of language as to carry conviction to any normally unprejudiced mind. No. 51, cloth $.75

JOAN OF ARC.—"Frances" here tells the story of Joan of Arc in a most human way. The French heroine is here brought down to the present and is seen as a living being, rather than a remote historical character. The social revolution she helped bring about, the service she rendered her country, make the story of her life interesting to all generations. Joan is an inspiration. No. 370,

Renters and Farm Hands

There is no reason why the successful renter or farm hand may not own his own farm and be well-to-do, if he will locate in Wyoming along the Burlington Railroad, and get a start where the land and water right go hand in hand; prices are low and terms so easy you can't lose, where the climate is good and the crops sure, the markets right, in a good community where life is worth living.

Send for literature describing the land, soil, water, climate and general conditions in different localities. Help yourself to these opportunities. Write and tell me what kind of farming interests you most. Let me help you find the kind of location you want, where you will be prosperous and your family happy.

Neither the company nor myself have any lands for sale. The company pays me to help you locate. My services are free.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

God wants consecrated men, not hired men.

With an artist, an eraser is quite as necessary as a pencil. There are few men who do not often feel the need of repentance.

Very long sermons require plenty of "wind and endurance." The preacher needs the former and the audience the latter.

A good sermon is a balm to the bruised and a blister to the calloused; it has a message of rest for the weary and a jab in the ribs for the lazy.

Many ponderous tomes eulogize the war-makers; but Jesus Christ chose to apotheosize the peace-makers in a single luminous sentence that will live forever.

The Des Moines Register commenting on international intrigue, espionage, and diplomatic double-dealing, says that wars are brought about by men who think that they are "devilish sly" and that peace will be conserved by nations and diplomats who believe that honesty is the best policy.

Evidently the old Christmas carol that was sung over Bethlehem will not have much of a vogue this year. No one remembers the tune, and the words seem inappropriate. And anyway, the shepherds are busy reading the war news.

It is difficult for celebrity to conceal itself. It is related that the great tenor singer Caruso was traveling "incog" by auto through Pennsylvania. The auto broke down and Caruso sought refuge in a farmhouse. The farmer asked his name, and Caruso condescended to reveal it confidentially. The astonished farmer leaped to his feet and exclaimed, "Little did I ever dream that I should be so honored. I never thought this humble roof would shelter the great traveler, Robinson Caruso."

A mother complained because her hungry baby cried. We suggested that she reason with it. No results. Then we suggested that she try Christian Science on the little thing. Again, no results. But a bottle of good warm milk soon brought peace. Strange that children prefer milk to the windy assertions of Christian Science—but of such is the kingdom of heaven.

If I were to paint a picture of the three graces, I would not picture Faith looking with longing eyes into the dim future. I would picture Faith at work. Let Hope scan the future. And I would not depict Charity, the greatest of the three, in the act of giving alms, but rather in the act of giving herself.

Kipling relates a legend about the great King Solomon. It seems that Solomon made a grand feast and with much pomp and flourish invited all the animals in all the world to come and eat. But lo, when the dinner was ready, an animal came up out of the sea and ate it all at one bite. When Solomon asked him who he was, he said, "O king, live forever. I am the smallest of thirty thousand brothers who live at the bottom of the sea. My brothers sent me to inquire when dinner will be ready. They will be along presently." The king said it was a lesson to him not to attempt to "show off." If we are inclined to "show off," let us remember the thirty thousand brothers.
ELBERT A. SMITH.

The quintessence of genius is to posit its own inmost thought as the truest thing in the world for all men.—G. Stanley Hall.

SOCIAL PURITY

In our General Interest department this week, appears a clipping from the Des Moines Register on the above topic. It is one which is receiving much consideration of late. Several of our readers have sent us other clippings from the daily press as strong and even stronger than this concerning some of the conditions in Europe.

It is indeed unfortunate that so many times this accusation has been brought against mankind and apparently so often with justice. A similar statement was made concerning the troops on the Mexican borders. Kitchener is reported to have admonished the English soldiers at the opening of the war, that such action would not only be vice, but practically amounted to treason. But while criticism is made against the various armies on this score, we should not ignore the fact that the percentage is just about as great in times of peace. It is a social evil and reaches deeply.

The point of great value is, that the question is being raised, discussed, and provided against. We have the instance of the English Army above. We have evidence also, that special provisions are being made around the various camps with everything possible being done to protect our boys. Cities near camps are required to clean up or they cannot secure the encampment for that vicinity. This includes the shutting down of saloons, as well as the removal of temptations in a moral way. We are also advised that in the Navy they have not been content with prophylactic means, but are also instructing the men, appealing to their chivalry, and to their hopes of the future of the race, with the result that over seven hundred men in one group came through clean.

In some newspaper items, it should be recognized that those looking for such things, are often prone to exaggerate, even though unintentionally. Finding so much they think it presents the general average, when such is not the case. We have known the statement to be made by a local missionary, that in one of the large cities of this country, a man could not walk in the main retail district of the city, extending for several blocks in one direction, and a mile or two in another direction, the district in which the main shopping was done, at any time, day or night, without being accosted. Yet we know men who have walked those streets for thirty years, every day, without ever once being approached.

Circumstances and persons evidently alter cases.

It is true that there are many places of disrepute in France. It is also true that there are many such places in this country and it is unfortunately true that very many young men have been affected first and last.

Probably more is being done now to protect them than ever before. More is being done by the Government to instruct them as to consequences, than ever before. Apparently people are more aroused to the issue than they have ever been before. We hope that the instructions and the result will be good.

We are inserting elsewhere an extract from Physical Culture and also one from The Ladies' Home Journal. This latter is only part of a letter, but expresses the feelings of our people so well that we take the liberty of copying it. The matter has been already discussed in the Autumn Leaves.

It is a time that we should consider the instruction of those who stay at home, the cleaning up of our cities, the establishment of higher moral standards.

One of the signs of the times is this growing insistence upon morality. More is being urged and insisted upon in connection with the training camps for our soldiers than has ever been the case so far as we are aware in any previous military camp at any time in the history of the world. There is an insistence upon good food, good water, proper exercise, mental training, and the elimination of intoxicants and temptation or immorality in any form so far as is possible.

Also, there is a certain insistence that the men accepted for officers and for the army shall be clean men. This means that the flower of the country of our young manhood will be taken, but it also means the setting of a higher standard than has heretofore been possible. It can hardly help having its effect in civil life both now and after the war.

Yet, on the other hand, in a single day we find in the daily newspapers the continuance of practical white slavery in evil life such as to make one's blood boil. Some may object to us publishing such items, but so many instances are reported in different parts of the country that it behooves us as citizens and parents especially to take precaution. It is evidently not always safe for a young girl to go out at night alone. It seems also evident that some at least of our schools, need more critical supervision.

Vice on the part of our soldiers is akin to treason, although it may not be punished directly as such. But it has always amounted to that against the family and society. It possesses the elements of cowardice, since the man shifts so much of the consequences on those who are unable to escape.

This would seem to be one good result of our present trouble that it is arousing a greater interest in this question. We hope that the results may be for good and make for better manhood, cleaner manhood, and for better conditions in our own cities in times of peace. We need clean, noble boys and men for the work of humanity.

IS SIN A NECESSITY?

The problem of evil is one of the greatest that has ever been considered by humanity. In some places in the history of religion it has led to a frank dualism of good and evil, coequal and coeternal, neither of which is able to destroy the other and each of which has its period of ascendancy. We are not prepared to accept that. God is infinite, all-loving, all-powerful, and all-wise. Is sin necessary for our spiritual development? Many arguments have been made that it is necessary, that one cannot act so well, until he knows the world and has drunk at the fount of iniquity; that one can better appreciate the sweet, having tasted the bitter; that the prodigal son was superior to his elder brother, because he had gone wrong; and that Adam's fall was essential to his salvation and the purposes of God. This would involve that progress is secured through disobedience and that we become better through disobeying God, which appears as a palpable absurdity. It should be noted that many of the passages quoted to show the necessity of the fall are suppositions of the writers.

It is doubtless true that the divine plan was so made, that the sin of Adam did not defeat it, for the purposes of God cannot be frustrated.

What has he gained by a command which cannot be fulfilled, or the fulfilling of which would bring harm and the disobeying of which bring blessing? So far as Adam was concerned, the statement of Jude indicates that Adam did not ignorantly fall, but that he followed Eve. If this is true, her statements and his rejoicing are simply that they are still together and may have been for this cause.

But the graver question is, Must a boy sow his wild oats and is sin necessary at any time to spiritual development? The life of Jesus is an emphatic negative. He was tempted and tried like us in all things, yet without sin. He was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief; he had not where to lay his head. He took upon him the nature of man and became a little lower than the angels, yet he sinned not. He descended into hades, and yet without sin. He knows the sorrow of every soul, because he has suffered for and with them, and yet he sinned not.

Our experience and trust in the gospel has confirmed the belief that not only is this true of him, but that it may also be true of every man of God, that he may without sin know by the Spirit of God all that is necessary for his own highest living and salvation and for full sympathy with and help for the erring.

The three Nephites are said to be exempt from all sorrow save suffering for the sins of the world. This may seem a little thing, but it is not. A deep realization of the prayer of our Savior, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," means almost more than humanity can bear; to see the wrongful acts of men and realize that the penalty is certain and cannot be avoided, and yet that it is both just and best. All one needs to know can and will be given through the divine teaching of the Spirit of God.

It is noted by scientists as well as theologians and others that a man is more harsh toward those who commit similar sins to his own. It was the divine Master without sin who said: "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." It was the sinners who were ready to stone her, and it will often be found so. The man of God directed by the Spirit of God, may err on the side of leniency.

Certainly the proposition is without foundation in ethics, in law, in science, or in fact, that sin better fits a man for righteous service, for understanding, or for the indwelling of the Spirit of God or for any work or duty.

Yet we claim and recognize that there are some, nay, even there may be many who have gone wrong and yet are doing a greater work than those who have sinned but little. Their repentance has called forth a great reaction and sternness of purpose, sometimes of enormous power for good; and a great repulsion or turning from sin. This intensity of purpose accomplished more than some one else's mediocrity.

But that is almost beside the question, as our comparison is not the good accomplished by some one else, but what is the plane of each man's highest powers?

Our greatest realization of joy, living and doing, is to be found in the path of right living. Sin tends to darkness rather than to light—to darkness of understanding as well as of soul. We believe it is a safe statement that there can be no continued intelligence without morality. Continued sin leads to and is the contributing cause to degeneracy of the very tissues of mind, brain and body. Lesser sin dulls the ability for clear thought. So it is said of Lucifer, "Light and truth forsaketh that evil one." (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.)

"Light has come into the world and men love darkness rather than light. How great is that darkness." This is capable of a rational discussion. Intelligence and morality are twin sisters. Literally and physically he who sins against the laws of God decreases in intellectual power as well as physical.

THE UNITED STATES CENSUS

We are very much surprised in looking over the census of religious bodies in the United States for 1906, to note that they state no replies were received from the following States among others concerning our church: Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Georgia, Texas, Ohio, Indiana, Minnesota and South Dakota. This is indeed surprising, for we know the membership of these States in 1906 was a few thousand at least.

Now the Government is taking another census for the year 1916, but a letter from the bureau states "the returns from your denomination have been very gratifying and reports have been received from all the churches as given on the list furnished by the secretary for each district, except those for which schedule are inclosed." There are thirty-eight cards inclosed as follows: Southeastern Illinois District, Parrish; Nauvoo District, Adrian; Kewanee District, Dahinda, Canton; Pottawattamie, Hazel Dell Township, Crescent City; Gallands Grove District, Deloit; Northeastern Kansas District, Atchison, Centralia, Fanning, Netawaka; Eastern Maine District, Jonesport, Kennebec; Eastern Michigan District, Applegate, Ubyly, Port Huron, McGregor, Imlay City, Detroit, Buel Township, Carsonville, Saint Clair, Palms; Central Michigan District, Lake (near); Northeastern Nebraska District, Blair; North Dakota, Milroy, Bantry (?); Youngstown-Sharon District, Youngstown; Kirtland District, Barberton, Canton, Cleveland, New Philadelphia, Kirtland; Western Oklahoma District, Calumet, Seiling, Canadian Center, Elmwood; Utah, Provo.

There is a request that they be filled out here, but this is only possible to a limited extent. They will be filled out by the Church Recorder so far as he can, which is to give the total number of members, but the secretary of each of these branches should give the matter immediate attention and return the original card properly filled out to the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce, in the envelope provided for that purpose. It is not a matter that permits of delay. We should appreciate that the value of the census depends upon its accuracy. It is of value to us as well as to others. Therefore we hope for as full returns as is possible from our organization. Will the secretaries please take notice and give this their immediate attention?

NOTES AND COMMENTS

President Elbert A. Smith's Correspondence

Our readers are well aware that Brother Elbert is back in Lamoni, enjoying the privilege of a weekly editorial to the HERALD readers. He also enjoys looking over the letters he receives. Though he is greatly improved, he is not yet ready to handle official correspondence, either for the HERALD or for the First Presidency, and it is decidedly inadvisable that he should attempt to do so. He is very glad to receive personal letters from his friends, and from any who care to write, but he does not promise to answer any letters at all for the present. He is in a "receptive mood," but not in a "responsive mood" as yet. We trust our readers will keep this in mind and not unduly burden him.

Christmas Presents

If we could know the amount of money that is spent every Christmas by members of the church in making gifts to their friends, we would doubtless be amazed. We do this to make them happy and we in turn are pleased.

War conditions and the needs of the Lord's work are causing us to ask ourselves the question:

"Can I give presents this year?"

Bishop McGuire says you can, but do not plan yet what that gift shall be. In the first HERALD and Ensign of December he will tell you how you can give as much as you ever did and make more people happy, and bring to you a never ending pleasure.

Watch for his plan.

The November "Autumn Leaves"

With inviting exterior and most satisfactory contents, the Leaves comes to us this month, with the first chapters of the new story by Elbert A. Smith—"Timbers for the Temple." It is a special story number. Among the array we note: A Thanksgiving story by Fred W. Smith, some excellent poetry, the Periscope, intimate editorial chat, and a fine lot of material in the departments. The young women of the church will be vitally interested in the announcements and articles in their department, while the Religio's Arena and Sunday School department teem with good matter for all auxiliary workers. The editors of the Autumn Leaves have so much excellent material for the next year that we wonder if they won't have to enlarge the publication to use it all—and they say they have more coming all the time. We hear many favorable comments concerning the Autumn Leaves, and we assure our readers that the one story alone by Brother Elbert is worth more than the price for a year—a dollar, in advance.

FATHERS' DAY ADDRESS

(By J. F. Garver, Sunday morning, October 29, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

The observance of Father's Day is a new thing among us. There are no precedents to which we may go in outlining the activities of the occasion. Not only is this true among us, but there are no activities afield to which we may go in securing suggestions as to the nature of the services of the day. So we are thrown practically upon our own resources.

When asked to deliver this address I thought that surely somebody, somewhere, must have said some very nice things about father. I went to a book in my library which had never failed me, and which is supposed to contain all the best things that the best men and women have said on all subjects for all time. Turning over the leaves to the place where the word father should have been, I discovered that it was not there.

The words between which this word should have occurred, if it had occurred, were fate and faults. One might be led to wonder if fate had ordered that father's faults were so many that there were no good things to be said about him.

I thought surely this book said some good things about mother, and that in connection therewith I might find something said about father, and I did. This is what I read:

It is generally admitted, and very frequently proved, that virtue and genius, and all the natural good qualities which men possess, are derived from their mothers.—Hook.

I turned to the next page, thinking I might find some further suggestion, and I did. This is what I read:

I think it must somewhere be written, that the virtues of mothers shall be visited on their children, as well as the sins of their fathers.—Dickens.

I might have been led to conclude that all the women that lived before my time were good and virtuous and true, and that all the fathers were wicked; but judging the past by the present, I concluded, in spite of what this book said, that while some mothers were good and noble and true, some fathers were good and noble and true also; and that it must have been that those who wrote were so busily engaged in singing the praises of their mothers that they had no time left to say anything good about their fathers.

Now if our fathers have done nothing more than this, they have made it possible that we might live.

We believe they have done more than this. We believe they have made it possible that we might live well; that they have had their part in planting within our bosoms those aspirations which are wholesome, and to a degree divine.

Not finding what I sought in the first book, I laid it aside and picked up another. In it I found the writings of one woman who had evidently had a good father, or who had observed some good father in action. She wrote after this manner:

To my eye, a man never looks so grand as when he bends his ear patiently and lovingly, to the lisping of a little child. I admire that man whom I see with a baby in his arms.

The author of this language as the context shows, had in mind when she wrote the lines a young father with his own baby in his arms, bending to catch the sweet lisplings of its rosy lips.

Now when I thought over these words, without depreciating the good things our mothers have done, I could not call to mind a grander sight than this: A young father, his whole being pulsating with the emotions of parenthood which characterize a father as well as a mother—I say, I could think of no grander sight than a young father, swept by these emotions, fondling his own child, and moving to lead its activities to noble achievement.

This is one of the functions of every man, to become a father. No man morally, mentally, and physically fit, all other things being equal, has fully functionated until he has become a father. In fact, this is the most vital function of man; because if all men ceased to become fathers, the race itself would immediately cease.

To be a father in the broader sense, the companion of God, with the associations of a noble woman, in the creation of a human form in which there is planted an immortal spirit, and to direct its activities through this veil of tears, and finally to its completion in the presence of God—what grander and nobler function could man have?

With those who would have become fathers, but could not, we pause to drop a sympathizing tear. With such we may yet rejoice, if they will father the fatherless.

If there be any who might have become fathers but would not, for this occasion we draw about them the mantle of charity. They would not intrude themselves upon us; nor should we call them from the shame of their seclusion.

Wealth, success, ambition, position, all these our fathers have enjoyed most because they have been fathers. And he who has been active in things material as a wise steward, as well as in things spiritual, and has handed down through posterity the best in him, he it is who has most fully lived. We honor then the men who in coöperation with God have given us life.

"ON UNTO PERFECTION"

Having thus established ourselves, in the phraseology of the Apostle Paul, "Let us go on unto perfection."

It is not enough for men to be fathers. Those who have worked in our behalf have not been content to become only our fathers. These noble men have dreamed by night and toiled by day, that they might provide us with the wherewithal to move us forward to achieve beyond that which they have been able to realize; and this has been true in all lines of activity.

They have sought to bless us with things material. What father is there who does not seek to provide for his own son material things better than he himself has enjoyed? There are no doubt fathers who have come to this building this morning with threadbare coats, that their sons might be attired in a way to place them without embarrassment in the association of their young friends.

Our fathers have sought not only to provide us with these material comforts and necessities, they have labored to the end that educationally we might be better equipped than they have been equipped.

They have sought to place us in positions of trust in the community beyond that which they themselves had occupied.

They have sought to bless us and put into our lives those things that are noble and true, to the end that in good works we might be carried beyond the point which they have been able to reach.

In all these things our fathers have earnestly sought that we might be more efficient and better than they have been.

All honor then to our fathers, to those men who, harnessing the age-old energies of parenthood, have directed the preparation of their children to produce a generation to outstrip them in all lines of human activity.

Now these noble men have done this good work by precept and by example, not saying one thing and doing another.

A story is told of a certain gentleman of Italy, who coming down to the days of his decline, took into full partnership and fellowship in his business, his son. This young man was not actuated by the sentiments of his noble sire. He sought to take to himself all that he could of things earthly. His avarice finally overcame him so fully that to save the cost of his keep he placed his poor old father in the city hospital. To cover his shame he announced to his neighbors and friends that he had put his father in the hospital because the city, through that institution, was better prepared to care for him in his declining days than he could do in his own home. When they did not believe him, he sent to his father certain gifts to persuade them that he spoke the truth.

Upon one occasion he sent his son with two nice shirts to deliver to his grandfather. When the father returned from his place of business that night he said, "My son, did you take the shirts to your grandfather?"

The boy said, "I took one."

"And what did you do with the other?"

"Why, I kept it," the boy replied, "that I might have a shirt to bestow upon you when I place you in the city hospital!"

This boy is said upon this occasion to have coined the expression, "Let him that does evil expect evil in return." And so his father, who had sown evil, reaped evil in the life of his son.

I say, our fathers, unlike this ungrateful man, have sought not only by word of mouth, but by all the activities of their lives to impress upon us the lessons that should have made us noble and good men and fathers, and they have cherished the hope that we might surpass them in all things.

Our fathers have taught us industry. It is to be hoped that the fathers of this generation will be as faithful in this connection.

They have taught us honesty, to regard every obligation as one that should be met.

Our fathers have taught us fidelity. They have taught us never to betray a friend, much less one of our own household. They have taught us to be true to our convictions under every emergency.

Shakespeare has one of his characters, a father, say to his son going out into the world:

To thine own self be true, and it must follow, as night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man.

Thus reasons the poet: To thine own best emotions be true. Never disregard thine own counsel. Never allow thyself to drown thine own sensibilities. At no time, under no emergency, allow thyself to grieve thine own conscience. And as night follows day, of necessity thou canst not be false to any other man.

Our fathers have taught us to have faith in God. As they feared God, they sought that we might also fear and obey him.

They have taught us the principles of consecration. If in no other way, by the way they have consecrated their lives for our sakes they have taught us to consecrate all we have to our children, to our community, to our country, and to our God.

These are the things we have inherited from our fathers. All honor, then, to these good men.

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM"

Our fathers have done more than this. They have directed us not only through this veil of tears as men among men, they have pointed us to those higher altitudes to which we may finally achieve if we are faithful to the trust imposed in us.

One of the old prophets brings to us this suggestion, in the language, "A little child shall lead them." As our fathers have looked upon us in life, as under their great desire that we might achieve there have welled up in their souls emotions known only to parenthood, they have laid hold upon God, that they might lead us to reverence his holy name and to move out that his purposes among men might come to pass, and that with other righteous men we might be brought finally into that state or condition portrayed by the prophet when he said, "A little child shall lead them."

This conviction and effort is suggested in the beautiful lines by Richard Watson Wilder, entitled, "Father and child":

Beneath the deep and solemn midnight sky,
At the last verge and boundary of time,
I stand and listen to the starry chime
That sounds to the inward sense and will not die.
Now do the thoughts that daily hidden lie,
Arise, and live in a celestial clime—
Unutterable thoughts, most high, sublime,
Crossed by one dread that frights mortality.
Thus as I muse, I hear my little child
Sob in its sleep within the cottage near—
My own dear child!—Gone is that mortal doubt!
The Power that drew our lives forth from the wild
Our Father is; we shall to him be dear,
Nor from His universe be blotted out!

The poet here pictures a noble man, drawn apart from the busy cares of the day, standing at the last verge and boundary, or at this end of time, with all the advantage and heights of achievement to which his forebears have climbed, contemplating the handiwork of God. As other men have experienced, this man experiences the hidden emotions which rise upon rare occasions such as this. Responding to nature's harmonies, he reaches in his exaltation the zenith of his intellectuality, of his appreciation of the grand expanse of the universe, and of all that it portrays.

Only one thought steals in to mar his peace—the blighting doubt that has cursed and marred the minds of men since the beginning of time: the question raised by the prophet of God, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Now breaks in upon his reveries the sob of his own child, disturbed in his sleep by some imaginary trouble. At once his soul responds, and as he would do in fact were the child in real trouble in his waking hours, he rushes in spirit to his rescue, and by the impulse of love which would lead him to protect and to perpetuate the life of his own son, he is made to know that the Power that created him will redeem and deliver him and plant his feet finally on the shores of immortality.

I say, responding to the impulses which the heavenly Father has planted in their bosoms, our fathers have led us onward to achieve in the name of God. Mortality touched by divinity in the making of men—they have been helped to comprehend God our heavenly Father. So it is that to a degree at least our fathers in the light of their love for us have interpreted God's great love to us, and have inspired us to achieve for our own selves and for the race.

Exercising themselves under the attributes which characterize God, these fathers have given their lives for us.

The Apostle Paul in the Ephesian letter says:

The husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church. . . . Therefore . . . husbands love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave his life for it.

Taking Christ as their example, our fathers have not hesitated to give their lives for both their wives and their children. They have literally poured out their lives that we might live under conditions calculated to make us all that we are to-day, and much more than we are to-day. Nor will we be true to our heritage until we arise and carry forward the great work they have so well begun.

If the sweetest and most enduring thing in the world is mother's love, then the noblest thing in the world is father's self-sacrificing toil. It is father who has gone out from the shelter of the home and wrested from a cruel world the means by which we have lived. It is father's hand that has compelled the elements to yield the things we have needed to perpetuate our lives, and to achieve any degree of success. And while he has done this rugged work, this noble piece of work, he has not in any sense taken from mother the glory which has rested upon her.

Father has labored that the family might live on. Mother has ministered to the helpless babe that he might become a full-grown man. So in order to crown father we do not take away from mother's brow the blessed crown which men of all ages have placed there. Though the literature of all time be silent with reference to their part, we honor the men who have labored and toiled that we might have the constant companionship of our mothers, and come under the benign influence of our heavenly Father.

Among us as a people, father and mother, hand in hand, each doing the part allotted, have together moved forward that we might be reared a godly generation, to usher in the Zion of God, the end of this world, and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

This is the piece of work to which our fathers are putting their hands to-day. And in that effort, by precept and by example, they seek to persuade us to do righteously: not only our fathers in the flesh, but our fathers in the church also.

To this end labor the ministry of Christ, that our fathers may be fully awakened, that the generation which comes after us may be one which under the power of God shall be delivered, and be made indeed the Zion of Promise.

May fatherhood among us then become a thing so cherished and so cultivated, that all that God has ever designed to do through the family may be soon and early done.

HOW MUCH OF HOLY GHOST WAS GIVEN BEFORE CHRIST?

(Read before the meeting of the Southern California branch of the Pacific Quorum of Elders, Garden Grove, California, May 29, 1917. In answer to a question propounded by Nathaniel Carmichael.)

To say just how much of the Holy Ghost was here before Christ would be rather difficult, and depend on the periods of time before Christ under consideration, for it is evident that the Holy Ghost was manifested in varying degrees of power at different times of the pre-Christian era.

It would seem to be a more satisfactory solution of the question to observe what record may be found of its operation at various times and places prior to Christ, than to say just how much of its power was exercised.

We will assume for the purpose of this paper that the time meant is all that time prior to the time when after his resurrection, when in company of the "eleven," he "said unto them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me even so send I you, and when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." (John 20: 21, 22.)

Immediately after Adam was expelled from the Garden of Eden, God visited him "and he also said unto him, If thou wilt, turn unto me and hearken unto my voice, and believe, and repent of all thy transgressions, and be baptized, even in water, in the name of mine only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth, which is Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven, whereby salvation shall come unto the children of men; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Genesis 6: 53, I. T.)

Then follows a conversation between God and Adam, discussing the reason and needs for baptism. Adam yielded, and was "caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the water, and was laid under the water, and was brought forth out of the water; and thus he was baptized. And the Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit, and became quickened in the inner man. And he heard a voice out of heaven, saying, Thou art baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost; this is the record of the Father and the Son from henceforth and forever." (Genesis 6: 67, 68, 69, I. T.) In verse 59 Adam was commanded to teach the same things to his children, and in verse 71, it is said: "Behold, thou art one in me, a son of God; and thus may all become my sons." It would therefore be logical to conclude that the Holy Ghost was given to all who obeyed in Adam's time.

Again, this is fortified by the statement of Enoch. After reciting the commandment of the Lord for him to teach repentance, "and he gave unto me a commandment, that I should baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, who is full of grace and truth, and the Holy Ghost which beareth record of the Father and Son." (Genesis 7: 13, I. T.)

To just what extent the Holy Ghost continued down through the Old Testament times, I have not had time to search satisfactorily, but see no reason why it should not continue as long as there was the gospel, Melchisedec priesthood, and obedient believers on earth.

One might well ponder by what power all those ancient prophets were able to predict the future, even to our day, but the query is solved by the Apostle Peter: "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Peter 1: 20, 21.)

This scripture is reaffirmed in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5, speaking of Christ's salvation reaching those who "even as many as were before he came, who believed in the words of the holy prophets, who spake as they were inspired by the gift of the Holy Ghost."

And inasmuch as the Prophet Malachi was important enough that when the angel appeared unto Joseph he quoted very largely from his book, it would seem justifiable to concede that the Holy Ghost was active in his day.

For David himself said by the Holy Ghost, The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool.—Mark 12: 36.

Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus.—Acts 1: 16.

Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers.—Acts 28: 25.

BOOK OF MORMON

The Book of Mormon is explicit that they were under the law of Moses. "And we did observe to keep the judgments, and the statutes, and the commandments of the Lord, in all things, according to the law of Moses." (2 Nephi 4: 14, authorized edition.)

Behold, they believed in Christ, and worshiped the Father in his name; and also, we worship the Father in his name. And for this intent do we keep the law of Moses.—Jacob 3: 5, 6.

Particular notice is invited to the wonderful conversions by the preaching of Aaron and Muloki and their brethren about B. C. 77, Alma 13 and 14, where they preached "also the plan of redemption, which was prepared from the foundation of the world, through Christ, for all whosoever would believe on his name." (Alma 13: 45.)

And as sure as the Lord liveth, so sure as many as believed, or as many as were brought to the knowledge of the truth, through the preaching of Ammon and his brethren, according to the Spirit of revelation and prophecy, and the power of God, working miracles in them; yea, I say unto you, As the Lord liveth, as many of the Lamanites as believed in their preaching, and were converted unto the Lord, never did fall away.—Alma 14: 10, 11.

The number thus converted is placed at four lands and three cities.

Alma 14: 74, 76 states there were many others who joined themselves unto the Anti-Nephi-Lehites:

And they did walk in the ways of the Lord, and did observe to keep his commandments, and his statutes, yea, and they did keep the law of Moses. . . . Now they did not suppose that salvation came by the law of Moses; but the law of Moses did serve to strengthen their faith in Christ.

They also continued to keep that law until Christ's appearance.

Behold I say unto you that the law is fulfilled that was given unto Moses. Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel; therefore, the law in me is fulfilled, for I have come to fulfill the law; therefore, it hath an end.—Nephi 7: 5, 6.

Still while they were limited under that law, it appears these converted people became a "very industrious people." The curse of God did not follow them any more, and the great King Lamoni said,

And behold, I thank my great God that he has given us a portion of his Spirit to soften our hearts . . . and I also thank my God, yea, my great God that he hath granted unto us that we might repent of these things and also that he hath forgiven us of those our many sins and murders which we have committed, and took away the guilt from our hearts, through the merits of his Son.—Alma 14: 30, 32.

Also Aaron and his brethren in their work: "And they went forth whithersoever they were led by the Spirit of the Lord, preaching the word of God in every synagogues of the Amalekites, or in every assembly of the Lamanites where they could be admitted." (Alma 13: 21.)

About three years previous to these things Alma, in reproving his son Corianton for his immorality said: "Know ye not, my son, that these are an abomination in the sight of the Lord; yea, most abominable above all sins save it be the shedding of innocent blood or denying the Holy Ghost? For behold if ye deny the Holy Ghost when it once has had place in you, and ye know that ye deny it; behold this is a sin which is unpardonable."

Question. If the Holy Ghost could not be given to those people what virtue was there in warning against its denial, as that could not be done until once it has had place in them?

Might it not be they had the work of the Holy Ghost? or that some of the work attributed to the "Spirit of God" was really the operation of the Holy Ghost?

Turn now to the words of Jesus himself at the time of his first appearance or rather the voice which was heard at the close of the great destruction, "Behold I am Jesus Christ the Son of God," "I am in the Father and the Father in me," "I came unto my own and my own received me not, and the scriptures concerning my coming are fulfilled."

And as many as have received me, to them have I given to become the sons of God; and even so will I to as many as shall believe on my name, for behold, by me redemption cometh, and in me is the law of Moses fulfilled. I am the light of the world. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. And ye shall offer up unto me no more the shedding of blood; yea, your sacrifices and your burnt offerings shall be done away, for I will accept none of your sacrifices and your burnt offerings; and ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And whoso cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost, even as the Lamanites, because of their faith in me, at the time of their conversion, were baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and they knew it not.—3 Nephi 4: 47-50.

Immediately following this was the ministry of Jesus establishing his gospel, choosing his twelve disciples, authorizing them to baptize in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, administration of the sacrament and the "gift of the Holy Ghost" to follow in regular sequence from that time forward.

It would seem proper to believe that the Holy Ghost had ministered to the Lamanites before Christ's time, by special providence of God, but that there was not the regular "gift of the Holy Ghost" as promised under the gospel administered by the Melchisedec priesthood.

NEW TESTAMENT TIMES

And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.—Luke 1: 35.

Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 1: 18.

But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 1: 20.

And Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill country with haste, into a city of Juda; and entered into the house of Zacharias and saluted Elizabeth. And it came to pass, that, when Elizabeth heard the salutation of Mary the babe leaped in her womb; and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost.—Luke 1: 39-41.

In 1 Corinthians 12: 3 we are told positively that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." "And Jesus answered and said unto him, blessed art thou Simon Barjona for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee but my Father which is in heaven," and all because Peter had answered and said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," which Paul said no man could say "but by the Holy Ghost," so when Jesus says, "My Father hath revealed it unto thee," the Father must have revealed it by and through the Holy Ghost, the same as when the power of the Highest overshadowed Mary. The word is first, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee," afterward the word is to Joseph, "That which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost."

And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him.—Matthew 3: 16.

And Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and John saw, and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and lighting upon Jesus. And lo, he heard a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him.—Matthew 3: 45, 46, I: T.

So we have the word of Peter, Acts 10:38:

How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the Devil; for God was with him.

Evidently Jesus, while hampered with the limitations of the flesh through which divinity had to manifest itself, was also helped and prompted and assisted by the Holy Ghost, but we find no record of him bestowing the gift on any of his disciples prior to his resurrection.

After his resurrection, however, his descension into the lower parts of the earth and his ascension to the Father, when he met the disciples he informed them that all power had been given unto him both "in heaven and in earth." "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." (Matthew 28: 18.) John tells us, "Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you, and when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." (John 20: 21, 22.)

Luke again bears his witness to the same where he says:

This former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and to teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen.—Acts 1: 1, 2.

From this time forth we find the gift and work of the Holy Ghost following the ministration of the apostles and in regular course and also the power of conferring it upon others who obeyed and believed according to the commands of Jesus, and the question is, strictly speaking, answered to the best of our ability, but I trust a few observations of our day will not be tiresome.

THIS GENERATION

A messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and the baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins." . . .

He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; . . . and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery and afterwards that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized. [Joseph baptized Oliver, Oliver baptized Joseph, Joseph laid his hands on Oliver and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and Oliver laid his hands on Joseph and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood.]

Immediately upon our coming up out of the water after we had been baptized, we experienced great and glorious blessings from our heavenly Father. No sooner had I baptized Oliver Cowdery than the Holy Ghost fell upon him and he stood up and prophesied many things which should shortly come to pass. And again, as soon as I had been baptized by him, I also had the spirit of prophecy, when standing up, I prophesied concerning the rise of the church, and many other things connected with the church, and this generation of the children of men. We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 34, 35, 36.

"Samuel H. Smith . . . obtained revelations for himself sufficient to convince him of the truth of our assertions to him." Oliver Cowdery baptized him and he returned to his father's house, greatly glorifying and praising God, being filled with the Holy Ghost. (May 15, 1829, p. 37.)

And all this before the Melchisedec priesthood had been bestowed at all, but had only been promised about a month later, but was not realized until the organization of the church, April 6, 1830.

I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," after which he ordained me also to the office of an elder of said church. We then took bread, blessed it, and brake it with them, also wine, blessed it and drank it with them. We then laid our hands on each individual member of the church present that they might receive the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and be confirmed members of the church of Christ.—Vol. 1, p. 77.

There seems to be a great similarity in the procedure in the instigation of the work in Christ's time and the latter days. God bestowed the Holy Ghost on Jesus, Jesus to the apostles, the apostles to others.

Now under the direction of those apostles, Peter, James and John, who evidently acted by the instruction of God, the work is again instituted, and as before, the Holy Ghost is active in its promulgation independently of the direction or ministration of men until men were empowered to confer its offices in the regular course of the gospel work.

Manifestly acting as part of God, to bring to pass his will and in entire harmony with God, performing according to the commandments of God and still of its own volition, to bring to pass the organization which could then do a still wider and greater work by the efforts of men duly called, ordained and obedient, through whom he, the Holy Ghost, could work, as shown in Doctrine and Covenants, 19: 1:

Behold, there shall be a record kept among you, and in it thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ; . . . through the will of God the Father, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ; being inspired of the Holy Ghost to lay the foundation thereof, and to build it up unto the most holy faith; which church was organized and established, in the year of your Lord eighteen hundred and thirty, in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month, which is called April.

R. T. COOPER.

Stand forth, O heart and soul of childhood. Reveal thyself to us more fully. We want thee stark naked, unclothed of all disguises, false tastes, bad habits, partial theories, with the purity of that divinity in thee unshadowed just as thou camest forth into the world, fresh from the hand of the heavenly Father. The norm of thy development is our only sure guide, our pillar of cloud by day and fire by night.—Tertullian.

Other mortals galore had thought themselves divine, but with no such witness and with no such plenary assurance. Thus the great affirmation was made and sealed. Jesus knew himself for what he was, and accepted himself as veritable man-God. God did not merely come to consciousness in him, but was his own ipsissimal noumenal self, and what a postulate!—G. Stanley Hall.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A LETTER FROM DAD

You neither want nor need maxims. I think you inherit my distaste of them. There is only one thing that counts in this life, and it beats all the maxims ever penned—that is, for a man's spirit to be all right. If that is what it should be all the little details of his life will fall into their proper places. I think your spirit is all right, my boy. It should be, for it came to you from your mother. Live that spirit.

And as that spirit came to you from a woman, do you play the game and show that you have it to other women. It is the finest thing you can do with it, and you can't very well do less, because it is why your mother gave it to you: That you should stand foursquare before men. And men, in this case, means women. For when you get "Somewhere in France" you will meet women: all kinds. Some of one kind in particular. Many of them will have their men folks at the front. They will be alone—alone for other men to respect and honor and show the right consideration.

These women will make much of you, for an American in khaki in France is very welcome, and will be made so. But don't let that welcome for your coming to save their homes and honor mean an approach or opening for you for anything but the highest consideration. Don't forget that when you are invited somewhere to hang up your hat it doesn't mean to hang up your conduct also. You will hear that in France they have "let the bars down." But there is no such thing anywhere as letting the bars down to a man's conduct toward a woman. To be a gentleman in a French home is no different from being a gentleman in your mother's home. Think of every woman you meet as a member of your mother's sex, and treat her accordingly. Think of every girl you meet as you would Nell, and treat her as you hope every chap in the camp near us will treat her. It is a tremendously big "Bit" that every chap who goes to France now does, who upholds his own honor at the same time that he upholds the honor of the United States when it comes to his considerate treatment of the women of France. It will be the finest tribute in the world to our great country if, when our boys leave France, it can be said of them that they were Spartans of personal honor. Nothing—no results in battles—will count for so much as that one record. These French women have suffered much. Let us, as men from America, not ask them to suffer more. . . .

So, go to it, my boy! Do your duty and do it strong. If it be God's will that you come back to us a silent tribute to your sense of right, so be it. We will bear and live it, as thousands of others will be called upon to do. But I have a strong feeling that you are going to come back to us a bigger, finer man than you are leaving us to-day. I cannot help feeling that this is God's will. And when you come back, more than any honor that may come to you for duty done, I want to feel that, clean-blooded and clear-eyed, you can look your mother straight in the eye and that she will feel that most glorious and satisfying of all exaltations that comes to a mother, that tremendous inner satisfaction, when her mother-heart says within her: "Thank God, my boy has kept the faith." Keep you that faith with your mother. Nothing can count so big.—Editorial in The Ladies' Home Journal, October, 1917.

COMBATting SOCIAL DISEASES IN THE NAVY

What do the boys who are living at home know about the possible consequences to themselves and their loved ones of sexual immorality? What definite, authoritative instruction have they received upon this subject? Because they are living at home is no guarantee that, during their leisure hours, they will not be met by temptations to which they may, because of their state of ignorance, thoughtlessly succumb. The danger period for boys, as is proven by a study of Army and Navy statistics, is from seventeen to twenty-three years of age. Before the boy enters the Army or Navy, then, he should have received right instruction in these vital matters, and this educational prophylaxis should continue during the danger period.

Experience has taught Dr. Owens of the Newport Naval Reserve Training Station that it is not enough simply to present medical facts and statistics to the young men in his charge; an appeal must be made to those sentiments which are strongest in them and which will influence them to right action. He bases his appeal, therefore, upon their patriotism and their love for their own immediate family. The man who risks venereal infection is untrue to his duty. He has betrayed his country because he has rendered himself unfit for service.

This is indeed the attitude of our National Government at the present time. In accordance with the provisions of a law passed last August, a man in the Government service does not receive pay during the time that he is in the hospital from a venereal disease, and the man who is discharged from the service because of venereal disease receives no pension. Here again is a most effective lesson to the enlisted man, for, as it has been well said, "You must hit a man in his pocketbook if you want to make him feel."

How many of the boys who are living at home know that, if they are suffering from a venereal disease, they should not allow themselves to kiss their mothers or sisters, or to use the same eating utensils with other members of the family? This is taught to every boy in the Navy. Not only that, but he is not allowed to return to his home as long as he may be a source of infection of one of these diseases. Instead, he is placed on the venereal restricted list until he is pronounced cured by those who have subjected him to the most rigid tests.

What would it mean to us in civil life if such regulations were in force?

So successful has been Doctor Owens' educational campaign that the boys in the Naval Reserve Training Station have a keen sense of shame when compelled to admit a venereal infection. Instead of being a hero in the eyes of the other fellows for having proven himself "a man of the world," he is looked upon as an undesirable member of society by his mess mates, who would like to thrash him soundly for having brought into their midst a danger which they have been taught to recognize. It is the opinion of one's fellows that counts, and public opinion in the service is turning against the sort of living that menaces the welfare of one's associates and the safety of the Nation.

A method which has proven to be so successful should be made official for the Army, as well as for the Navy, in order that every one of the 687,000 young men, now being taken into the service may be given the required instruction in the most impressive manner.—From "Protecting the Nation's Defenders," by Mrs. Woodallen Chapman in September Physical Culture.

SECRETARY DANIELS ON IMMORAL DISEASES IN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Dealing frankly and boldly with the social evil as a menace to the Nation's military efficiency, Secretary Daniels of the Navy, in an address before the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America, appealed to the medical profession "to end the false double standard that decreases military effectiveness." The profession, he declared, must share its part of the blame for the "unpardonable prudery that endured a festering evil rather than have it exposed and eradicated."

"There is not an army in the field whose effectiveness is not reduced by reason of immoral disease," said Secretary Daniels. "The navy suffers likewise, and business halts because venereal diseases destroy the manhood of workmen and fighters. During the last statistical year, men of the American Navy lost 141,378 days sickness from a small group of absolutely preventable diseases, or rather, diseases contracted by sin. This means that every day throughout the year there are 456 men disabled by this disgraceful malady. Add to that number those required to care for the disabled and we have enough men on the noneffective list each day to man a modern battleship. And this does not count those who, though diseased, were not disabled, or the danger of contagion to the clean members of the crew.

"In the Navy in 1915 there were admitted for treatment for venereal diseases 112 persons in every 1,000, and in the Army 84 for every 1,000, the number in the Army having decreased from 145 to the 1,000 after passage of an act stopping the pay of all soldiers admitted for treatment for venereal disease. The new Navy laws stop the pay of men so afflicted and will probably reduce the number to the Army ratio. But these figures show a condition of immorality upon the part of the minority in both arms of the service that challenges the thought of the authorities.

"In civil life the number afflicted is quite as large, proportionately as in the military service. It has been printed that Hecht of Vienna stated that one time the equivalent of three entire Austrian divisions of 60,000 men was under treatment for venereal disease while the German Army in Belgium representing only a small part of the total German forces, is reported during the first five months of its occupation to have furnished 35,000 such patients. Canadian and Australian officers have deplored the ravages of this disease. The later figures from the British Army gave 78,000 cases, and all other countries have also been weakened.

"Sir William Coler places these infectious diseases at the top as a menace in war and in peace. The time has come to realize that this subtlest foe of humanity must be conquered and it cannot be conquered by denying its existence, saying it is a necessary evil, or applying palliatives. It is deadlier than smallpox or cancer or tuberculosis. A Canadian authority says: 'Its ravages to-day are more terrible for Britain and Canada than Vimy Ridge, the Somme and Lens.'

"The remedy? There is but one—continence. It must be preached in the home, in the school, in the marts of trade, in the pulpit and in military camps and among shipmates afloat. The eradication of the evil effects must be thorough, but the teacher who will be heard and heeded when the teachings of all others will fall on deaf ears is the word of authority from the medical profession. Young men expect ministers of the gospel to call them to clean living. The preacher seeks to save their souls, and too many youths hardly realize they have a soul. But they know they have bodies and the doctor is the man to whom they trust the treatment of their bodies. When he preaches continence as the only rule of life to young men and points out the dire penalty for lapses, his words have a weight no other admonition possesses.—Des Moines Register, October 23, 1917.

THE WAR AND THE CHURCHES

At the May meeting of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, Reverend Bernard Snell, chairman, spoke with terrific vehemence on the war and the churches. Before the war, he said, we repeated Christ's law of love in our sanctuaries, and vitiated it by omitting justice before him. Now we mean to cleanse our souls, even if we have to reconstruct the whole social order. Everywhere the atmosphere is charged with the electricity of fellowship, the spirit of brotherhood is urgent everywhere, except in the churches of Christ, which are called into being to engender fellowship. The worst laggards to answer the cry for unity are the churches. They are still the abode of intolerance and contempt. The churches of Christ, as at present constituted in this realm, are an apparatus for keeping the people of England apart to a degree and in a sense in which they are not kept apart by any other institution. Disunion, arrogance, mutual suspicion! Do the people want the disunion that is characteristic of our Protestant life in the churches? No more than the people of Europe preferred the war. But they were misled by the professionals of militarism. Who is responsible for the continuance of the cleavage in matters religious between Englishmen? If the churches are to regain the allegiance of men they will have to end this disunion and division among themselves. One would have thought that in the greatest war of time all ecclesiastical differences would be buried out of sight for shame's sake; that when noble men were laying down their lives all bitter, heated controversy would cease. Yet while this stable earth rocks, certain religious papers report church discussions on liturgies, apostolic succession, the reservation of the sacrament, whether the mass is not more attractive than morning prayer, whether woman is worthy to stand in the chancel, whether King Charles the Martyr should have a black letter day in the Calendar of Saints! Such proceedings are the derision of the profane and the despair of the devout. Men ordained to bear witness to the truth of Christianity contend in the temple courts for privilege, punctilio, prejudice, I know not what. Not one of them seems to see the Master himself coming with a scourge of knotted cords, or to hear his voice pronouncing the doom of the church that knows not the day of her visitation. The greatest need of the church is leaders who shall interpret the splendid patriotism of our people in its spiritual values; who shall reconcile, not exacerbate; who shall be the voice of our nation, and of some one higher, saying to the churches, "But, sirs, ye are brethren!"

What a new birth it would be for this nation, if the churches of Christ became a living power for the right—a church for all Englishmen, expressing all the best in the religious life and thought of the Anglo-Saxon race, and embracing in itself all Christian organizations in the United Kingdom and in all the seas! Why not? It is the day for something heroic. The churches are reduced to defending the religion of Christ from the indictment that it has failed—when it has not been tried. In God's name, why not try? Who should set the example but the churches that exist to foster and practice the brotherhood of man, that stand for human fellowship, mutual trust and service? The one accident that soldiers dread is firing into their own men, yet Ephraim and Judah are always at it. We must drop this insensate guerilla warfare amongst ourselves, and get together as a disciplined army against the foe, or there is ruin ahead. When men realize what are the most precious things they experience a fellowship such as no formulary can induce, a fellowship of the spirit. Therein is unity. The exclusiveness of the churches is the bane of the churches. There are so many passwords for the churches, so strong are the fences, so barbed are the entanglements, that there are few churches to which Jesus of Nazareth would be admitted unless he has greatly changed.

Nothing will be gained in the direction of unity by adopting some common denominator by way of doctrinal compromise. Men may hold the same opinions without being in the least united; men may hold different opinions, and differ in nothing but opinion. I quote Lloyd George:

"The problem won't be solved by diving into pigeon-holes for dust-laden precedents and programs." Our free churches live, not by the faith of yesterday, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the living God. Again, those are misled who, seeing here one and there another returning to mother church, has the vision of all non-conformists trooping home and passing under the Caudine Forks. We are not going to slough our self-respect; we are not going to put to shame our fathers who stood for inclusion and liberty. There is a Prussianism among the churches, as there is among the nations, that has no use for brotherhood, but only for submission—an arrogant self-idolatry, deeming its own kultur so perfect that it would be a universal benefit to mankind to impose it all round. The supreme call is for harmony, unity. I can't see why all the Englishry should not pray together and worship together, as well as fight together. Something like a common church is being shaped in the huts of the Y. M. C. A., whom all praise in the camps at the front. They tell me that when you are burying dead comrades who have fallen at the post of duty you think little of doctrinal or denominational distinctions. If our churches are to have a fighting chance of survival they must become societies to which all true-hearted men have entrance. Many have left our churches in order to become religious. Nothing short of the bombardment of half the churches and the compulsory conversion of the others into hospitals for the period of the war will have any ameliorative effect. The politicians have a vista of a consummation of which they have hitherto despaired. Have we in the churches no vision?—Reverend B. J. Snell, in the Christian Work, June 16, 1917.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

An Appreciation from Australia

When I consider the vast amount of good the noble women of the church are doing at the present time, my mind goes back to the work of some of them in the past, recalling first a certain most noble sister who worked assiduously in this land, becoming a great power for good in building up the church! She was so kind, so considerate and tender! Ah, yes! dear Sister Burton! You did us all good; your influence is still felt among us! I was baptized at Tuncurry, when only a girl, and coming out of the water, Sister Burton met me with a "God bless you." A few seconds later, she turned and came to me again, and putting her hand on my shoulder said, "Yes, dear child; the Lord will bless you!" Perhaps Sister Burton will remember that little spot, where her husband led so many into the kingdom. The tall umbrella-like "cabbage" palms, formed a background; the Saints stood on the bank and sang the sweet songs of Zion! Ah! those were my happy childhood days, but it seems but yesterday that I listened to those cheering testimonies, when, with tears streaming down our faces, we heard Sister Emma speak in unknown tongues—words later interpreted to mean hope, joy, admonition and counsel! As I write to-day, those scenes seem as beautiful visions, oft-repeated!

Our hearts have been saddened of late by the passing of our dear young cousin and sister in Christ, Chloe Taylor Blackmore, whose parents loved the work so much in days of yore. Bereft of a mother's care in early childhood, Sister Chloe with the others, became very dear to our family whom she also loved in return. She too, was baptized at Tuncurry, while still a child, and was a constant attendant at all church services. Approaching womanhood, she went to live with a very kind lady who taught her as a tender mother, many of the necessary lessons of life. In after years it was our privilege to have her with us, and happy days and months flew by on magic wings. How well I remember the tender love she bestowed upon my small children, when tired out and ill, I could not give them all the attention due them. How she smoothed my throbbing brow, cooled my fever, and spoke words of comfort and peace marvelous in one so young! I missed her when she left us and went to the city to get employment in order that she could be near to the church and enjoy its privileges. About this time she saw Brother F. G. Pitt, and requested her patriarchal blessing. He had not seen her before, and could not know that she had worried for fear her long absence from the church had been displeasing to the Lord; but, as the good brother, in tones of conviction and assurance said, "The same Divine Presence which hath been with thee from the beginning of thine existence here upon earth, is with thee now, and will be to the end," the Spirit descended upon her in great power, and she was shown that her prayers and desires were answered. Nineteen months ago, in all the full beauty of her young womanhood, she went to help a young member of the priesthood make a home—an earthly paradise. Later, she shared the rich joy, so commonplace that its glory is sometimes overlooked, of being counted worthy to have a "partnership with God" in the clothing of a spirit with flesh! Reverently we draw the curtain and let these two young beings enjoy the brief moments of parenthood vouchsafed them before the little life returned to God who gave it! Five days later, with heavy hearts, we laid the young mother beside the little one for whom she suffered and died! God pity the broken-hearted noble young husband, and all of us who mourn the loss of one whom it was a delight and a benediction to know!

We here, in this far-away land, appreciate the good things which come to us through the church publications. We feel to thank Sister Sandy for passing on to us the thoughts gleaned while attending the parent-teacher conventions. We also are grateful to "Angelina" in Autumn Leaves, whom, we sincerely hope, will be privileged to attend General Conference next time. We do not forget the author of: "The vineyard story," who has a rare gift with her pen, leading both young and old along the paths of happy expectation, and realization. To a host of other sisters, too, our thanks are due, for they bless us with rich outpourings from ready pens.

Last year we were privileged to enjoy the stimulating company of Sister Paul Hanson for three weeks, which will always be remembered as one of our most pleasant experiences. She and husband have left for home, via New Zealand, and much as we regret their departure, we feel we must not be selfish, and "our loss will be their gain." We have enjoyed the company and advice of so many of our missionaries, who leave home and loved ones to help spread out this wonderful gospel net. They have all endeared themselves to us, and we will long retain the uplift they have given us.

I am deeply interested in every woman's movement in the church; it seems to me that wonderful development must be the result, and I hope that we in Australia may also heed the call to become efficient workers, and help to swell very materially the numbers of this noble army of consecrated and intelligent women.

That we may find the places of our best service in the world and fill them wisely and well, is my prayer.

Your sister in the faith,
ANNIE J. PARKER.

The Lamoni Local

After the summer vacation the various departments of the Lamoni local are again at work. Our meetings were discontinued during July and August, the time being so fully occupied with Chautauqua and the reunion, with Red Cross and other work.

The Oriole girls gave good service during the reunion and the general work of the Woman's Auxiliary was represented in connection with the Sunday school and Religion.

The beginning of the college year brought work for the Graceland Patronesses and they have been meeting various dormitory expenses with money already in their treasury. They have been holding fewer meetings than usual because many have been busy knitting and because they are considerably leaving the money-making field for the present to the Red Cross and other societies.

The classes of the educational department have been fortunate indeed in the arrangement of work for the coming year. Two classes in mothers' and teachers' problems have been organized, one studying the needs of children under six years and the other dealing with older children. One is taught by Mrs. Lydia Wight and the other by Professor C. B. Woodstock, both of the high school teaching force.

Brother McDowell will be at Iowa University this year and there was sincere regret at losing him as instructor in some of our classes. But others of the Graceland faculty have kindly responded to our appeal and we now have a class in sociology taught by Professor Charles E. Erwin and one in home economics conducted by Miss Mabel Knipschild, both of which are well attended and are proving exceptionally interesting. The latter class is especially gratifying at this time because it enables us to give intelligent heed to the call of the Nation for food conservation, etc.

The Government has been very generous in supplying Miss Knipschild with bulletins for the class and she has added to the effectiveness of the work with experiments and demonstrations. In connection with one of these there is a message which we are glad to send out with this report.

At one meeting our instructor showed us a loaf of brown bread and told us that it contained a twenty per cent portion of cotton seed flour. Many of us had never heard that there was such a thing as flour made from cottonseed. It will be new to many of our readers. In our class we had been learning of the great value in the diet, especially of children, of protein—the great tissue forming element in food; that this is found chiefly in meat, eggs and milk, though it is found also in vegetables and grains, beans containing the largest percentage of any vegetable. We were told of the very high protein value of cottonseed flour and that it is also very rich in fat and sugar.

Then we were allowed to sample the bread—and it was good! It was made four fifths of white flour, without shortening other than the oil of the cottonseed and with only a little sugar used in starting the yeast.

Among other material sent for use in the class was a copy of an address by Miss Kate Gordon before the Cotton Seed Crushers' convention in New Orleans, August 8, 1915, on the practicability of cottonseed flour as the saving medium for twenty to twenty-five per cent of the wheat supply. Miss Gordon was chairman of a committee for investigation concerning the use of this flour from the Era Club, "which club, desirous of doing its 'bit' in war service, believed that in the conservation of the wheat supply lay woman's most practical contribution."

portion of cottonseed flour, ginger snaps containing a one third proportion, jumbles in fifty-fifty proportion and biscuits with twenty-five per cent of this flour. Two kinds of old-fashioned southern ginger cake would also be served, both made on the same recipe except that one would be under the old dispensation entirely of wheat flour, the other having a twenty-five per cent proportion of cottonseed flour. The speaker said, "The proof of the pudding is in the eating" and she could "anticipate with confidence that the verdict would be one of indorsement."

If we had not received of this proof in the eating we might not be so enthusiastic concerning the spread of the use of this flour, but we feel sure that the convincing and inspiring statements of this address which follow will cause many to wish to try it. But do not stop at that. Call for it at your grocer's. Get them to order it for you as they have done here it Lamoni. It sells at about the same price as wheat flour, notwithstanding its higher food value. It may be secured from the Schulenberg Oil Mill Company, Schulenberg, Texas.

"The saving of one fifth of the wheat supply would liberate one million bushels for our army and allies. . . . There are few women who are not anxious to do some patriotic service, if but shown the way. We believe a very practical way is in the use of cottonseed flour. There is no sacrifice in eating biscuits and battercakes just as good, and in my opinion, better to taste, with a fifty per cent higher nutritive value than when wheat flour alone is used. Such a mixture of flours, if used in the daily routine of the homes of the Nation will make a phenomenal saving. Appropos of saving there is one point to which I particularly wish to direct your attention and that is that in all the substitutes for bread making to liberate wheat, some article of food valuable to conserve in other lines is used. The substitution of cottonseed flour employs an entirely new food value, rich in the very quality in which patent wheat flours are so woefully deficient.

"In the introduction of this new food value I cannot accentuate too forcibly its value from the standpoint of its high percentage of protein. Ordinary wheat bread we call the staff of life is so deficient in this essential that the race is rapidly deteriorating, due to the high cost of meat, eggs and milk, from which is mainly drawn our protein supply. . . .

"Therefore if Mr. Hoover is correctly quoted that a fifth saving of the wheat supply means victory, then bread and the bread products in which cottonseed flour is used may well be called 'victory.' By a Nation-wide adoption of cottonseed flour . . . every home to advocate the exclusive use of victory bread two or three days of every week, we shall not alone do a service for our boys in the trenches but we shall at the same time raise the standard of health of the men, women and children of the Nation. If there are any Americans not sufficiently aroused to the seriousness of the situation to make a sacrifice (though cottonseed bread and biscuits mean no sacrifice) for our Nation, there is an appeal to adopt this substitute for race preservation. . . . In the use of cottonseed flour we incorporate a food value five times that of wheat flour, three times that of lean round of beef and three to thirty times that of ordinarily considered nourishing food. . . ."

Accompanying this paper were several recipes for using the flour, some of which are here given. In addition we suggest its use in thickening gravies where meat is not used or where the amount of meat juice is scanty. A portion of it used with the wheat flour will increase the brown color, the flavor and the nutritive value.

COTTONSEED AND CORNMEAL BREAD

- 2 cups boiling water.
- ½ tablespoon lard compound or other shortening.
- 2 tablespoons sugar.

- 1 teaspoon salt.
- ¾ cake compressed yeast.
- 1 cup fine cornmeal.
- 1 cup Allison cottonseed flour.
- 3 cups wheat flour.

Pour ¾ cup boiling water over sugar, salt and shortening, ¾ cup over the cornmeal. Let the remaining ½ cup cool and dissolve yeast cake in it. When lukewarm add flour and mix. Let rise to double its bulk. Knead and shape into loaves. Let rise to 1½ its height. Bake in moderate oven forty minutes.

GINGERBREAD

- 1 cup butter.
- 1 cup sugar.
- 2 cups molasses.
- 2 teaspoons soda.
- 1¼ cups Allison cottonseed flour.
- ¾ cups wheat flour.
- Ginger to taste.

"Use ordinary recipes for biscuits and battercakes, only cutting down the amount of shortening from one third to one half. If you make those things successfully with wheat flour they will only be a little better with the cottonseed flour which adds a nutty flavor. For bread the cottonseed flour is recommended to be used with any good recipe for bread making, using one fifth cottonseed flour and four fifths wheat flour. Set the sponge with white flour and add the cottonseed flour when making up the bread. Use less shortening, or none. Or, in accordance with a Government recipe, the flours may be blended first. The twenty per cent proportion is recommended as making a most palatable loaf, closely resembling Boston brown bread when made without shortening. Larger proportions of the cottonseed flour have been recommended but your committee believes the above proportions are the safest upon which to launch our Victory Bread Campaign.

"Do not make the mistake of using the commercial cottonseed meal fed to stock. The Allison flour, made by the Baumgarten process has been tested for digestibility and healthfulness and pronounced absolutely safe."

On Birth Registration--No 1

Why has the United States lagged behind other civilized countries in the care and completeness with which births are registered? All the States fail to provide for some of their children the official record which may become to any citizen at any time essential for the protection of his property rights, or even his life.

The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor has taken up the question because the recording of births affects children immediately and in various ways. Complete registration is indispensable to any comprehensive work for the welfare of babies. Without it, regulations for the prevention of blindness in babies cannot be enforced; the public-health nurse cannot be sure of reaching every baby in the congested districts; and the death rate among babies—that most sensitive index of social well-being—cannot be reckoned either for the community as a whole or for districts within the community.

The Children's Bureau, in cooperation with the Census Bureau, has therefore devised an informal test which is carried out by local committees and which brings home to the parents of young babies the importance of accurate and complete birth registration, for after all, it is upon the interest and understanding of parents that an absolutely complete record must, in this country, depend.

Of course a good State law is necessary to provide the machinery for registering births in each community and forwarding records to the State Registrar. A good law is necessary to give authority for the fining of physicians and midwives who habitually fail to report the births they attend, and such fining has proved essential for securing registration in some communities. But even with a good law and officials who honestly try to enforce it, there will always be some unregistered babies unless parents insist upon having their children's births recorded.

Interest in birth registration is constantly growing. Many State and city health departments are systematically working for better registration in their respective districts. Volunteer committees in 282 communities in 27 States have already reported to the Children's Bureau on local tests, and over 250 committees are now at work. And Baby-Week campaigns usually include a birth-registration day or some other special publicity for the subject.—Children's Bureau Bulletin.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Spiritual Experience

Awaking from my sleep in the early hours of the morning, and meditating upon the work that lies before me, and praying to the Father for divine light to direct me in the work of the Master, the Spirit rested upon me, filling my soul with light and joy and peace; and I was moved upon by the Spirit to write, and bear testimony, to the divine calling and acceptance of God, of his servant, Frederick M. Smith, whom he has called to be a leader and standard bearer in his church and kingdom here on earth.

Of late, as I have been traveling through my district, over which I have been presiding, I have been greatly impressed by the Spirit, to admonish the Saints to come up to a higher standard. And in so doing I have presented the Christ as that standard. Recently, after preaching a sermon along this line, a brother approached me and said, "Brother Hawkins, you have set the standard so high that I am afraid that I shall never be able to reach it." My reply was that we would have to reach it or we would never be able to redeem Zion. This has been given me by the Spirit.

Last evening on returning home from visiting some of the Saints, I picked up the Ensign and read carefully the account of the dedicatory service, held at the Stone Church in Independence, the center Stake of Zion. Just before retiring for the night, I read the sermon delivered by the president of the church; and oh! how my soul was thrilled by the Spirit of God, as I read the words of inspiration contained in that message to the Saints of God; for in it was reiterated those high ideals that had already been given me by the Spirit, and had preceded this message to the western shores of California. I thanked our heavenly Father that this has come in confirmation of what had already been given by the Spirit.

The Lord has said that out of the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. So as the Spirit rests upon me this morning, I admonish you that you give heed to this message that has come to us through him whom God has appointed to reveal his will. The admonition of the Spirit is that you read it carefully, that you reread it, and study it carefully; that every sentence of it may be impressed upon your minds, and kept there as a beacon light to guide and direct you in the path of right and duty. Do not pass it lightly by and console yourselves with the thought that it means some other brother or sister. Dear Saints, it means you, it means me; let us pay heed to it and put it into practice. Do not discard it and throw it away as you would a scrap of idle gossip, or a fairy tale; but preserve it, place it where we can find it, and freshen our memories from time to time by reading it over and over again, as a divine message from the Father of light. Let us not go around murmuring and complaining because the Saints failed to keep the commandments of God in the beginning of this work, and redeem the land of Zion as they were admonished to do. But let us profit by the past, and pay heed to the instruction given to us, at the present time! and arise in the strength of the Lord and redeem Zion, in its fullest sense, as we are instructed in this message to us. Let us not be slothful, nor faultfinding. But let us examine ourselves, and see whether we are in the faith or not. See whether we are willing to make what we call the sacrifice, or not, that this work demands of us!

Oh! can we not see the need of using all the means that God has given us, of talent, of influence, and of earthly possessions, to accomplish the work that he has intrusted to our care; that we may do our part in bringing about those conditions in the world, that will make it possible for the Lord to come and reign? Oh! when will we be willing to serve the Lord with all the powers of mind, might, and strength, or substance, that he has given us? When, oh, when will we have faith in God? When will we be fully converted to the full "law of liberty," that is comprehended in the gospel of Jesus Christ?

Now, dear Saints, I trust that you will not pass this admonition lightly by; for it has been given me by the Spirit; and the Spirit saith further, that you should receive that which comes through him whom God has chosen and set at the head, as coming from the Father of light; and if you will pay heed to the instruction that he has given, and will give from time to time, my people shall prosper, and Zion shall be established, and be made a place of refuge for my people, when the devastating scourges shall go through the earth, cleansing and purifying it from wickedness, and making it a fit dwelling place for the righteous.

That we may all be valiant soldiers of the cross, and have no "slackers" in our ranks, is the prayer of

Your humble servant,

C. W. HAWKINS.

Christmas Offering---Roll of Honor

Up to October 21, Logan, Iowa, had $210 and are trying to make it fifty dollars more by November 4. This is "Girls' Day" and they are working for the Christmas offering. The school has an enrollment of 118, yet they are working for $300 and expect to get it.

Alton, Illinois, with a membership of 21, reports as already raised the sum of $50, and they are still at work.

Fort Scott, Kansas, raised $15 last year, but so far this year have $91.43, with a goal of $120, with all looking encouraging.

Hiteman, Iowa, turned in $37 last year. They set out to raise $252 this year, and by October 21 had raised $217. They will surely get the balance.

The following is a copy of a letter which has some most interesting experiences and observations in it. Read it over and see how it affects you:

EAST SAINT LOUIS, ILLINOIS, September 6, 1917.

MR. ARTHUR W. SMITH,

Federal Reserve Bank Building,
Saint Louis, Missouri.

Dear Brother: Your letter was a great surprise to me, and caused tears of love to flow from my eyes. In it I see God's recognition of my offering. "Thine alms have come up to me." This blessing alone is a Godsend, and has paid me ten times more than I have given. How I wish that all the Saints would take God at his word. Years before I came into this church I read Haggai again and again. That book made me fear God.

My occupation is hammersmith—hammering railroad car axles. I have six men in my gang and we have very heavy and hot work—piecwork. Much depends on how long I can keep my help working each day if I am to get good wages.

I pay my tithes, freewill offerings, and all other obligations coming up from time to time. In addition I always feel and know that I cannot get as close to God as he would have me if I do not sacrifice.

During the spring when my wife began to save our pennies we soon found that we were leading in the Christmas offering and my spirit was longing for a chance to do more. Our superintendent read a letter giving suggestions as to what we could do to save for the offering fund. Then the way was opened; there was my chance to sacrifice. The way was pointed out and how to do it was before me and I decided then and there to give my one day's labor. But what day of the month would I give? The first working day of the month came to my attention. After a few days of considering and taking the Scripture for my help, I was still undecided. Right here Satan tried to help me. He is so cunning, he kept saying to me, "The average day is right and fair because the other Saints who have wages, will, if they give, have to give an average day—for they are working by the month." I was not satisfied. How did the Israelites give? If they looked over one hundred sheep did they take the first sheep that passed? Was that the first of the flock?

Thus I reasoned, and again Satan would answer and say: "Yes, certainly, that would be the leader." But, I reasoned on, suppose the first one would be a little under the average—suppose my first day's work would not come up to the average? Could I be happy and content over such a gift? No, God shall have the best of the fruit, the best day's wage I draw during the month. Well, I felt content and the first week the Lord favored us with a class of work, doing which we could make more than usually was made, and I asked God to help me, and on the 24th day of June I turned into the Sunday school as Christmas offering $11.77. Bishop McGuire dedicated our church that morning.

I now decided to give one day's wages each month to the Lord and on the 9th day of July I made $10.35, and said: "Lord, if I do not get a better day during this month, this is your day." The very next day I made $10.80, and I thanked God that I had beat the day previous, but I was not satisfied and I tried to get my help to work harder and beat this mark the next day, but they were satisfied and had enough at $10.80 for me. Then I realized that God thought I had done enough and he gave me as much on the eleventh as I had given him the day before and that was a blessing to me. August 7 I offered God $12.40, but he let me keep that and on August 9 I gave him $12.90 which I turned to the Sunday school September 2.

Your brother in gospel fellowship,

JEROME OWENS NOLES,

Trying to be a worthy servant of Christ.

Nauvoo District and Eastern Iowa

Responding to a call from the officials of the above districts, the undersigned visited them in their recent conventions, under the auspices of the Religio Lecture Bureau.

The Nauvoo people met of Rock Creek, near Adrian, Illinois, a rural community. The conventions took a long step forward in deciding to hold only one business session a year, and devote the other two to educational or institute features. They also favored an amendment to the Sunday school constitution which would allow those districts which desire it, to dispense with the delegate system in their district conventions.

The auxiliary work of the district is in a progressive state, but needs—and which district does not—constant supervision and urging by its leaders in district and local capacity.

There was little business to be handled, so the most of the time was devoted to institute work, with a lecture in the evening.

By Sunday the attendance was good, some young men walking nine miles from Fort Madison, after being up most of the night in getting there from Burlington.

During the sacrament service in the afternoon two young men were ordained to the priesthood: W. H. Gunn, of Fort Madison, to the office of elder, and J. F. McIntire, of Burlington, a priest.

The district had been observing the custom of giving fifty per cent of the oblations at a conference sacrament meeting to the branch where held, and the rest to the district fund. On recommendation of Bishop G. P. Lambert, the rendition of the law by the bishopric at the recent General Conference was acceded to, and hereafter the entire amount of all oblations will be turned into the church treasury.

During the week it was our privilege to visit the people at Fort Madison and Burlington and address them along the lines of auxiliary extension, presenting what we considered some of the larger phases of this work.

Eastern Iowa met a little early this year, beginning on Thursday afternoon. The meeting place was at Fulton, a village north of Maquoketa, about seven miles. In this community Brother John Heide and his married sons and daughters, with their families make up the principal part of a live branch of energetic workers.

They, too, favored one business session and the privilege of dispensing with the delegate system for small districts. The literature work was launched by electing three active workers, and we expect to hear good results from this. In various lines, we came to know of plans for increased efficiency and activity in a number of departments.

They permitted us to occupy both Thursday and Friday evenings, and we also had a good time at the business sessions, where a number of interesting matters were discussed.

Sister Lula Sandy arrived on Friday, to find that all her letters but one had been returned to the writers. She had intended to fill a number of appointments immediately following her visit to Fulton, in the interests of her tour as president of the Woman's Auxiliary, but there was nothing to do but write a postal card to all who might have had any inclinations to write her, telling them of the situation. This may even reach the eye of some who were expecting a visit, only to be disappointed when the time came and she did not appear.

She is doing a good work, and all who can do so should arrange for a visit. As noted in last week's issue, she is to be in Chicago on the 11th, and intends to visit Michigan prior to that date. By addressing her in care of David E. Dowker, 6549 South Lincoln Street, Chicago, Illinois, arrangements may be made at a minimum of expense.

While the work of the Sunday school and Religio in these two districts is not all it should be, we were made to realize that they both have the material. The necessity of a consecration of purpose among those who have the ability—though it may be latent—is apparent to all who look into the situation. We have hopes that the day is at hand when such a consecration will be made and the work prosper as never before.

It is pleasing to note the very hearty cooperation between the district officials of the church with the auxiliary workers, all realizing the importance of efficient organization and methods. In fact when it was found that Sister Sandy could be present on Saturday evening Brethren William Sparling and E. R. Davis readily granted her the afternoon hour of three, and the evening. However, the Sunday school had some numbers left over, which they would put on during part of the evening. We left in the afternoon for home, and did not get to hear the program, much as we would have liked. Neither did we learn the nature of the Sunday services.

It seems to us that in the lecture courses offered by the Religio there are exceptional opportunities for both those who hear and those who go. There is an interchange of experiences which can but be valuable for years to come. We understand the calls are gratifyingly numerous, and we have no doubt they will continue so as their benefits are more fully understood.

The experiences we had and the pleasure of meeting so many noble Saints will never be forgotten. They expressed their appreciation of our efforts and we hereby publicly extend ours. It was a most enjoyable trip. E. D. MOORE.

Two-Day Meeting and Church Dedication at Marlette, Michigan

Notwithstanding the cold rain and bad roads a goodly number assembled on the morning of October 13. The Spirit was present in the prayer meeting, causing all to rejoice under the gentle influence of the same.

The eleven o'clock preaching service by Elder J. J. Bailey was very instructive. The afternoon was occupied with preaching at 2.30 p. m. Also our district chorister, Sister Plato, was with us to take charge of the singing, doing so in a very instructive way and her efforts were appreciated by all.

Sunday morning we had prayer and testimony meeting at 9 a. m. Saints were present from different parts of the district. Many noble testimonies were offered and a good degree of the Spirit was present to manifest God's goodness toward us. All are feeling encouraged to press their way onward with a greater determination to do the Lord's will. The meeting closed with the ordination of Brother Dexter Foster to the office of elder.

In the afternoon at 2.30 occurred the dedicatorial service, an event the Saints had labored for a long time to accomplish. Elder William Grice was in charge, assisted by the writer. After song and prayer a brief history of the church was given by the writer, after which Elder Grice preached an inspiring sermon to the large and attentive audience, commending the Saints for their faithfulness and the manner in which they had accomplished their work, also setting forth the works of God, the setting up of the church of God in a spiritual manner. Then came the transfer of deed, also the church keys were transferred to Elder Grice in the name of Jesus Christ and in behalf of the Marlette Saints, with a request that he in turn would place them in the hands of the proper officer of the church for the use of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He in turn promised to do so, seeing that the deed was placed in the hand of the bishop of the church, also giving the keys over to the deacon of the branch, Daniel Westover, admonishing him to faithfully look after and care for the church and comfort of the Saints. Then the dedicatory prayer was offered by Brother Grice.

The Sunday school field worker, Brother D. V. Schaar, also Religio field worker, J. R. Grice, were with us to instruct along the line of duty in the two auxiliaries. The services were of a high spiritual order, being very instructive.

The Saints who did not return to their homes Sunday evening met with the Saints of the branch at 7 a. m. Monday morning for prayer meeting, which proved to be a feast to all, the Lord speaking through our worthy district president, William Grice, calling Daniel Westover to the office of priest, and Charles Foster to that of deacon, admonishing the Saints to lay aside the temporal and take on the spiritual side, and imparting of their substance for the upbuilding of Zion. Only those who are Saints can grasp the meaning of such a service.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. H. MEAD.

Gallands Grove District

Our fall conference held at Mallard, Iowa, on October 13 and 14 adds one more successful conference to the annals of the history of our district. The weather during the conference turned out to be fine, affording a good attendance, and a very lively interest was taken in the sessions throughout.

Brother Pearsall, our district chorister, had the musical phase well in hand. He was supported by a host of singers, the platform in the church being filled at each session. The wise man says, "there is no new thing under the sun" yet some of us found songs in the Hymnal that were decidedly not old. The musical work is gaining in our district, and Brother Pearsall has in mind now the joining of our forces in the larger branches in the southern part of the district into a choral union, looking to, as we understand, a possible organization of the whole district at our reunion next August.

The preaching was of a very high order. Elder J. B. Barrett of the missionary force, occupied on Saturday evening and again on Sunday afternoon. He was in good form and spoke with freedom, and his message was very much appreciated. Patriarch Charles E. Butterworth occupied Sunday morning, and again on Sunday evening, in his characteristic style, bringing a message home to the Saints with such forceful logic and a command of his subject, that all must have been impressed that he "knew whereof he spoke."

The entertainment the visiting Saints received at the hands of the Mallard Saints was first class, and everyone felt loath to leave such a hospitable environment.

The convention of the Sunday school and Religio was held on Thursday evening and Friday prior to the conference. Talks, papers, and round tables, on subjects of vital interest were a feature of the program. The last session of the convention was in charge of the Mallard local and a high class program was given. The tot of five years and the sage of three score were used with profit in this program.

Three social services were held all told, and the Saints were given opportunity to give vocal expression to their inward feelings. The voice of the Spirit admonished us to be more humble and followed with special promises of the Lord's protection of his people notwithstanding the "besom of woe" with which the nations were being swept. Special direction was given to us as a district, in that, some places which seemed to be crooked, and from purely a human viewpoint, beyond repair, would be made straight. Our young men, interpreted to mean some of those then present at the conference, and others throughout the district, were admonished to prepare for special work in the priesthood.

Our reunion is to be held at Dow City, Iowa, in August next and we are looking forward to that time with interest. February conference convenes at Denison, Iowa.

We leave such gatherings as this to take up our regular vocations, some to their plow, others to their schools, offices, or duties domestic, but we feel that out of it all something has been gained that will make life larger and of more value to ourselves, and to the homes, community, Nation, and church of which we are a part.

For the information of those in the district who advanced funds to meet the expenses of the tent work at Fort Dodge, will say that the meetings continued over a period of about eight weeks. Elders Harpe and Barrett holding forth to good advantage for about five weeks together, when Elder Barrett was forced to seek a change on account of ill health. Brother Harpe continued the last three weeks alone, baptizing eight and organizing a Sunday school. The Sunday school will undoubtedly prove a factor for good as they are holding regular sessions, and have preaching each Sunday morning by Elder John Jordison of Coalville.

With best wishes for Zion's cause, C. E. ANDERSON.
WEBSTER CITY, IOWA.

To the South Dakota Saints

Once again through that wonderful process of law, the earth, the mother of us all, has transformed a part of her substance into food for her children. Ever careful of her offspring, she gives us only that which is pure and good; she has never failed to furnish her own with all they have required to sustain them till the next harvest. She has never failed to remember our needs.

As a wise mother she gives us that which nourishes our every part, that which meets our every need. She also gives us that which pleases the taste, the sweets, the condiments, the spices. From her wonderful storehouse she brings forth fruits and meat in due season.

This year has been one when she has blessed her children with a lavish hand. She has filled our granaries to overflowing, and has taught us to gather for those unable to do so for themselves.

South Dakota has just harvested the biggest crop in its history; prices have never been so high; the farmer to-day is the master of the world. As we are all members of one large family, the success of one depends upon the success of others. The merchant is helpless without the farmer, the mechanic is idle if the farmer fails to sow.

There is a degree of faith manifested in all this even if it is sometimes blind. If He who established this law of production should revoke that law, how long could we survive? Have we any claim on God that we can compel him to feed and clothe us? What have we done that merits his generosity?

Through his divine wisdom worlds have been created, billions of men and women have lived and died. Surely this has all been done with some well laid out plan and for some good purpose. Think you that with the world in the condition it is to-day that we have done our part in God's great scheme? He has tried several times to redeem man from the awful fate he has rushed into. We have now come to our last opportunity, this is the last time that he will strive with man. He has established a plan whereby we can be saved. As Saints we all know what this plan is and the laws governing, but do we fully realize how binding each law is and how much depends on the full observance of each and every one?

Take the law of tithing and consecration for instance, and you will find that it is just as essential to salvation as baptism or any of the other ordinances.

In the instruction to the church upon this part of the law in 1861, we have as follows: "In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing; and let them before God see to it, that the temporal means so obtained is truly used for the purposes of the church." (Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1.) Further, we have: "The law must be fulfilled, if we are to be accepted as the children of God, otherwise we are no better in our works than others, 'who leave undone the things that they should do.'"

When you read this, take five minutes and see if you can think of any place where you can place your money where it will be safer or bring a larger rate of interest. Can you think of any? There is none. The blessings of heaven await him who is faithful in following the instructions of God.

Dear Saints, do not neglect this duty, but now render unto God his dues. You certainly would not like to be called dishonest, or "hard to collect of," or one who never pays a bill if he can avoid it, yet you are under obligation to him with whom you are in partnership, and you should pay him as you pay other debts.

I will gladly and promptly receipt you for any money sent me for the church. Yours in his service,
HURON, SOUTH DAKOTA. E. E. WILLARD.

IHLEN, MINNESOTA, October 17, 1917.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write a few lines to your pages. I would not be without the church papers, for being in an isolated condition, they are a source of strength to me. I enjoy every article, and especially the sermons and letters, from those isolated as I am. I surely miss my brothers and my sisters in my former home.

How thankful I am to my heavenly Father that I was permitted to accept the gospel in its fullness and that during these perilous times we can feel the assurance that God will guide, guard and direct us, if we will only let him. When we hear statements from those not of our faith, that they fear and tremble for the outcome of conditions, peace comes to us in place of fear, for we know that we have nothing to fear, if only we will live our religion.

I have read and studied the different articles in the church papers concerning the different opinions of our brothers and sisters in regard to the stand the church takes in this war, and it seems to me anyone that will read section 95 in the Doctrine and Covenants, especially the sixth paragraph, will see that our country is justified in going to war and that our president surely has lifted up the ensign of peace more than three times. I am proud of the stand the church is taking in standing back of the Nation. Although war brings us horror, we cannot stand by and see the weak crushed without doing what we can to prevent it.

My little son and myself are the only Latter Day Saints in this little town, although there is a fine family of Saints in the next town, Jasper, just five miles away, Brother and Sister Arthur Adams, with whom we visit occasionally. We surely feel strengthened and encouraged after such visits.

I have held the Sunday school at the schoolhouse over a year now, and have enjoyed it and hope good may come of it. At present we have fourteen members, but have had as many as twenty-three. Three families moved away, taking several of the scholars. Have also talked to several about the gospel and distributed quite a few tracts and literature of all kinds. Brother Darby was here and preached three times to fairly good crowds, so I am at least doing what little I can to bring the gospel before the people. I am trying to let the results be with God.

I am not ashamed of the name of Latter Day Saint. I am heartily proud of it and hope to grow in knowledge and wisdom so that I may more intelligently defend the work.

Our Sunday school is doing their little bit for the Christmas offering, and already have over eight dollars.

I would surely be pleased to welcome any of the Saints coming through here and especially any of the ministry and will make arrangements for preaching if any come this way. We live on the terminal between Sioux City and Wilmar.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's people,

I am your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. C. E. WOLFE.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, October 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: I believe our church dedication has been written up and no doubt will be published soon, but there was a little affair, sort of an aftermath.

Brother Griffiths, of course, with Bishop J. A. Becker had charge of the dedication, and being the founder of the work here and through his fatherly watchcare and counsel for about thirty-five years has naturally become very much endeared to the hearts of the Saints, both those who "have gone on before" and those who now enjoy the full fruits of his sacrificing labors. Wishing to show him especial honor at this time, our branch president, Brother L. A. Serig prevailed upon him to remain over Monday evening after the dedication to "talk over matters." In the meantime he had quietly passed word around for the Saints to gather at his home.

Monday evening Brother Griffiths and Brother Serig were sitting in the parlor very seriously engaged in conversation and the folks began to come in quietly and unobserved—one or two at a time. After a while Brother Griffiths looked around and was surprised to see the room half filled with people. He then realized what was up and the conversation became more general. Others kept coming in and though all the visitors had left for their distant homes there was quite a fine gathering present. Notwithstanding his extensive labors over isles and continents, Brother Griffiths has spent a lot of time in our territory, so a large part of the evening was spent listening to the amusing and interesting reminiscences which he told. Music was one of the diversions and refreshments were served. A small purse was presented to Brother Griffiths and at a reasonable hour good-bys were said with the hope that he would be able to return and visit us many more times yet.

Yours in service,

3526 Woods Street.

SAMUEL A. MARTIN.

MOUNTAIN GROVE, MISSOURI, October 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: Just got in from a trip across Dent, Texas, and Wright Counties. I called on a few of our scattered Saints in those counties. My first stop was at Salem, Dent County, where Brother and Sister Guy Routh now live. I baptized Brother Guy this trip and left quite a number of others very near the kingdom. Sister Routh has lived a life highly spoken of by her neighbors. She is not like some of our Saints who will not mix and mingle with other worshipers, but she attends their meetings and Sunday school and has done a great deal towards securing us a good hearing. This is how it should be if you want to get a hearing when our elders come in.

My next stop was near Licking, Texas County, where the gospel had never been heard and a very large attendance greeted the "Englishman." I had splendid attention and the best of behavior that I ever had. The young people sang for me and others invited me home. One Mr. Hadley, who also is English, both he and his wife, believe in the message very strongly, also several others, and I can say if the husbands were as easily convinced as the wives, I would have baptized several more on this trip, I am sure. Brother and Sister Rathburn have lived near Licking for these ten years and I saw their letter this summer. They have lived a good, honest, upright life. They are both English, from Birmingham, and Sister Rathburn made me two Yorkshire puddings and other good old-fashioned English dishes, which reminded me of days gone by.

My next stop was at Brother Reibold's, but owing to busy times my crowd was not large, but I sure enjoyed my stay. They are Germans, but we were at peace, very much so. Brother George brought me about thirteen miles on my way to catch the Mount Grove mail auto, so I am safely landed waiting for my train.

Yours, hoping for the future,

H. SPARLING.

FISHER, ARKANSAS, October 22, 1917.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from the sunny South. I conducted a fine meeting in August at Winthrop, a newly organized branch. Brother Barney Sharp, a young elder, has the branch in charge. He is a fine worker, doing all he can to get the gospel before the people. Brother and Sister McClain live there. They have been faithful getting the gospel built up in that town. The good Saints there know how to remember a missionary in his expenses.

My next stop was at Bald Knob, where I found Brother O. F. White in charge of the work. He is indeed a fine man, doing all he can for the work. He is successful in his financial business. He is highly esteemed by all that know him. Brother and Sister Martin, Brother and Sister Edwards and a few others are trying to keep the camp fire blazing in the town.

At Fisher, my next stop, I found Brother D. M. Balden in charge. He is a fine man. He is wisely watching over the little flock at Fisher. We ordained a fine man, Brother Charley Heardy, a deacon. He has a bright future. There are some noble Saints in the Fisher Branch. They are doing all they can to build up the gospel in that place, and they never let a missionary go away, needing anything for his traveling expenses. There are many bright features for the gospel in this State. The Saints are becoming more interested in the tithing law and in the laws of the gospel in general.

At all the points mentioned we had fine meetings and baptized some fine people, so amid all the dark war clouds that are rising and the many trials we have to pass through, there is a bright hope that Zion will soon be built up and the church be ready for the coming of our Savior.

So may the Lord bless his work everywhere.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

From Here and There

If anyone knows the whereabouts of Joseph Chestnut, please inform S. D. Huff, Clyde, Colorado.

The Saints at Des Moines are in the midst of a series of meetings with J. J. Cornish as speaker, beginning October 26 and continuing over three Sundays.

Elder I. A. Smith stopped for a day or two over Sunday, the 28th, on his way to Des Moines from Independence. He was engaged in church business.

We note that Elder F. F. Wipper, who has been laboring in the Northeastern Illinois District, has accepted a position in the office of the Presiding Bishopric, at Independence, Missouri.

"If any mother having boys at Camp Funston wishes any service done their sons, we will be glad to act for them, if they will give us names and addresses.—Mr. and Mrs. William Madison, Manhattan, Kansas, 618 Osage Street."

Brother Louie F. Beaty, of Marshfield, Oregon, sends us a picture of two very old Saints at that place. The sister is ninety years old and her husband eighty-seven. They have been members of the church for twenty years and have not been in a church building for eleven years, being isolated from such privileges. She reads without glasses and does her own housework. We wish we had their names.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Victor G. Lents was recommended for ordination to office of priest by Rhodes Branch and it was approved. Request from the Clear Creek Branch that they be disorganized and granted letters of removal to the Rhodes Branch was approved. Adjourned to meet at Des Moines in February. Bessy Laughlin, secretary.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.—At Boyne City, October 21 and 22, J. F. Curtis, A. E. Starks and D. Schreur presiding. Reports from Gulliver, Bellaire, Boyne City, East Jordan, Onaway, Clear Springs, Gaylord, Vanderbilt, Boyne Falls. Ministerial reports were read, also reports from officers. Delegates elected and given full power. Officers elected: A. E. Starks, president; D. Schreur, vice president; A. E. Starks, treasurer and bishop's agent. Speakers were J. F. Curtis, A. Schreur, E. N. Burt, R. D. Davis. A. E. Starks was ordained to the office of high priest, W. Alldread and George H. Joslyn to office of elder. A good spirit prevailed and the interest manifested showed a growth in Northern Michigan. C. N. Burtch, secretary.

KEWANEE.—At Millersburg, Illinois, October 6 and 7, F. M. Sheehy and Charles L. Holmes presiding. William R. Norris secretary pro tem, Florence Holmes, assisting. Branches reported: Kewanee 138; Joy 114; Dahinda 88, Twin City 81; Buffalo Prairie 75; Millersburg 73; Peoria 68; Matherville 65; Canton 53; Rock Island 44. W. E. Peak, district president, reported and recommended that Hubert J. Archambault of Rock Island, be ordained to office of elder, and Edward Jones, of Kewanee be ordained priest. Ordinations provided for. Delegates to General Conference: Brother and Sister E. A. Curtis, Brother and Sister William E. Wakeland, Elizabeth Cole, Kitty Pine, Joseph Asay, alternates: Sadie Adams, Hubert Archambault, Florence Holmes. Carrie Holmes of Joy, Illinois, was chosen as member of the gospel literature board. A motion to reconsider the petition from Buffalo Prairie Branch, presented at the last conference with reference to reinstating the Kindlespargers to membership, was voted upon favorably. It was voted to petition the next General Conference to authorize Buffalo Prairie to reinstate Jona Kindlesparger to membership in their branch. (His name had been erased without trial at his own request, back in the sixties.) Motion prevailed that the conference suggest to the Twin City Branch, in East Moline, Illinois, that they change their name to that of East Moline Branch. Next conference will be held at Kewanee next summer, the date to be left to the district presidency. W. E. Peak, district president, was absent on account of the sickness in his family. District secretary too ill to be present. But there were present 1 apostle, 1 seventy, 12 elders, 5 priests, 3 teachers, 3 deacons. A large number of delegates were present and a good conference was had. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115

Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois; William R. Norris, secretary pro tem.

Correction for Literature Workers

Through an oversight, the numbers of the blanks suggested in the leaflet of instructions for literature boards were incorrect. On page 6 they are listed as S129 and S125, when they should have been R141 and R142 respectively. It is a little mistake, but one which is apt to cause considerable annoyance, so please make the correction in your own books and help us get the matter straightened out.

About Church Papers for Soldiers and Sailors

It seems we made a mistake in including the Ensign in our recent statement. All publications which bear the "Notice to Reader" on the front page may be handed to any postal employee after placing a one-cent United States stamp on the notice, and they will be sent to our soldiers and sailors abroad. No doubt the Ensign publishers will arrange to print this notice and allow it to be sent in this manner as the HERALD and Autumn Leaves do. Will all take notice of the matter and do not place the stamps on papers not bearing the notice. R. W. Farrell, 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island.

A Christmas Suggestion

When you make a present of The Youth's Companion you are giving not merely the means of wholesome pleasure and fascinating information every week. The Companion is all that. But it is something more. Hundreds of letters to The Companion speak of the influence of the paper in binding home ties. The mothers and fathers and the boys and girls in Companion families are very close knit in their affections. They have a common interest in the same duties and recreations, and they all regard The Companion as one of themselves. It has a personality and a character unique among publications, and you cannot introduce a more inspiring influence into any home circle.

It is not a publication merely—it's a friend. The Companion alone is $2.00, but the publishers make an Extraordinary Double Christmas Present Offer—The Youth's Companion and McCall's Magazine together for $2.25.

This two-at-one-price offer includes:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues in 1918.
2. All remaining 1917 issues of The Companion free.
3. The Companion Home Calendar for 1918.
4. McCall's Magazine—12 fashion numbers in 1918.

All for only $2.25.

Buying Silence

The user of the "Silent Smith" buys, in addition to a writing machine—OFFICE QUIET.

Instead of the clatter of the ordinary typewriter, he hears the gentle "tap, tap," of the type against the paper—practically the only sound.

This result has been brought about by mechanical refinements. Ball bearings, lightness of touch, ease of operation and a minimum of noise—all help the operator to turn out neat, accurate written work.

Send for free booklet, "The Silent Smith." It has valuable information about typewriting and typewriters.

EVANGELISTS OF LOVE

The Lord is surely blessing his people and is drawing nearer unto them. We have seen many evidences of this in Lamoni as well as at remote points. Many are made very sad concerning the existing conditions in the world. While there is only the kindest of feeling and of compassion in our hearts towards those who have gone forth to battle, yet we have longed for and desired just such an expression as was given at the sacrament service at Lamoni, November 4, through Brother Elbert A. Smith. The communication is as follows:

The feeling that is with me to-day is one of humility. As I reached forth to take the emblems I said to myself, "I am not worthy to partake of this sacrament." I wonder who is worthy to eat with God. For this ordinance is not only to remind us of the sacrifice of Christ, it is also a prophecy that we shall presently eat with him in his kingdom.

Yet God does give us the privilege to partake, under certain conditions. And this is one of the most sacred and important of the sacraments. One that we do well to observe at this time.

The Spirit has opened my vision to an extent and indicates to me that two forces are at work in the world. The one is the spirit of hate. That is the spirit which entered into Cain when he slew his brother. And many men to-day desire to slay their fellow men.

This spirit of hate increases as it is gratified. The more it is glutted with vengeance the greater become its inordinate desires for vengeance.

The other force is the spirit of love. It too increases as it is gratified and becomes bigger and better upon deeds of kindness and mercy. The Apostle John most fully entered upon this spirit. And standing in the midst of the people he uttered these words: "See to it, little children, that ye love one another."

The Spirit of God, which bridges time, and to whom yesterday is as to-day, brings that injunction also to us, and it is laid upon this people. Yea, saith the Lord, I desire many evangelists of love to preach the gospel of love, not only in word but also in deed. If there is any man here who has not been baptized with the spirit of love, he has not been baptized of me, saith the Lord.

Again, at this time, you are admonished that you be not unduly concerned because you are few in number as compared with the world. That is not your concern, but be concerned only that your righteousness shall be very great. For a few righteous men can accomplish very much, and a little leaven leaveneth a great lump.

I have many forces at work in the world, saith the Lord. I have many spiritual forces at work that you know not of. You see but the smaller part of my work, and the world perceives it not at all.

Therefore be not concerned because you are few in number, but let each one look to himself, and to the condition of his own heart and life. Be humble and righteous and full of love, casting out the spirit of hatred, that you may stand in holy places and receive the blessings of the Lord.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

The HERALD has been running for some time a roll of honor of the Sunday schools which have passed the one dollar or two dollar per member mark. There are many more which have not as yet been printed. We also published last week a letter which has appeared in the Stepping Stones from a brother who is giving one day's labor each month. It appears from the letter that his earnings have greatly increased since he entered upon this plan. In fact, if his letter is any criterion, he makes more in the remaining days of the month than he did in the whole month before. This is not, however, held out as any inducement, but his efforts appear to have been prospered in this direction.

Others may not earn so much, and with the present high cost of living may not be able to do so much, but should we let the children do it all?

Bishop McGuire in last week's HERALD asks that we wait till December 5 to learn his plans for Christmas gifts. The Autumn Leaves for November has a note on the prevention of useless giving. The Stepping Stones has a story of girls who agreed to cut out their useless gifts and to donate the proceeds to the Christmas offering. A letter in Glad Tidings for October suggests giving as an offering the same amount as we give for Christmas presents. Would it not be a good idea for every member of the church to take this into consideration and make an offering to the Lord before the first of the year? A Christmas offering to be applied upon the church debt and according as the Lord has prospered us?

Some would be willing to help liberally, but would not want to do it through the Sunday school, lest it seem to overbalance the splendid efforts of those less able. There is an opportunity here for each one of us.

There is no reason why the Christmas Offering should not go over one hundred thousand dollars, and it will if we want it to do so, and thereby the debt be greatly reduced. We need not wait to consider whether we belong to the Sunday school; it is a church matter after all, for it is the church debt.

Who will help?

PRAYERS FOR PEACE

Sunday, October 28, was declared by the President a day of national prayer for peace and for the divine favor to the Army and Navy. No doubt as heretofore our congregations in praying did so as they were moved by the Spirit of God, without formalism. Other churches, as has frequently been the case, declared set prayers, at least for some congregations. One of the best we have seen was that presented by Reverend John A. Rice, of Saint John, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Saint Louis, which follows:

Our Father who art in us and above us and beneath us and around us, we turn to thee to-day in grief and pain. We have not always made our lives hallow thy name. We have obstructed the coming of thy kingdom. In our selfish struggles, we have too often forgotten thee and each other. We have tried to substitute things for filial faith in thee and fraternal service to each other. We have neglected to nurture that brotherliness in business and toil, in politics and statecraft, in religion and life, which alone can usher in the long delayed social order inaugurated by the suffering love of thy Son, our Savior. We have often been too busy trying to have our own way to pay much attention to thy will.

We have sought to feed the hungers of our souls with bread for our bodies. Thy children have held grudges against each other as individuals, as races, as nations, and have not sought forgiveness. And now our sins have brought us into trouble. Thou seest brother arrayed against brother in a deadly effort to settle civic questions and right social wrongs by force. Men and nations are giving up the fruit of their bodies for the sin of their souls—and our boys all called into the strife! Will thou, O Father, encompass them with thy protecting and providing love and keep them with a Father's keeping, that they may come back to us unhurt. If they must fall, give them the consciousness of thy presence and the courage of thine approval. And will thou hold us and them to the course thou dost will; for we seek only to be right.

Will thou intervene with the weapons of the spirit and end war forever.

We commend to thy tenderest care the soldiers and sailors of all the nations, the wounded, the suffering, the sorrowing, in every part of the world. Show them, show us all, thy Fatherly face, and bring us in the peace of universal brotherliness into the secret place of thy love.

Give guidance and strength to the President of the United States and all who with him are in authority among us, that the Stars and Stripes may be the symbol to all peoples of righteousness and peace and the joy of holy living.

In the name of him whom we seek to make master of races and nations, as well as of our own souls, we ask it. Amen.

The following by Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle of the Protestant Episcopal Church was used in the fifty-four churches in the Eastern Diocese of Missouri:

FOR ARMY AND NAVY

O Lord God of hosts, stretch forth, we pray thee, thine almighty arm to strengthen and protect the soldiers and sailors of our country; support them in the day of battle, and in the time of peace keep them safe from evil; endow them with courage and loyalty and grant that in all things they may serve without reproach, as seeing thee who art invisible, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR PEACE

O Almighty God, father of our Lord Jesus Christ of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, look with pity, we beseech thee, upon the members of thy family who are now at war. Restrain us all from hatred, pride and hardness of heart. Sustain in us the love of justice and mercy.

Keep, O Lord, under thy protection those who are in peril by land or sea. Remember the prisoners, relieve the sick and wounded, support the dying.

Give strength to those who minister in hospital and camp, and hope to those who are in anxiety or sorrow.

Hasten the day when all nations shall dwell together in peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

We are sure that the sentiment expressed in these compositions will appeal to our many readers, as they do to us, in their love and compassion for all of the warring peoples.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

We make many a bitter pill worse by Fletcherizing it before we swallow it.

About the deadest thing in the world is a hobby that has been ridden to death.

The gospel grasps the humble man by the hand and helps him up; but it takes the haughty man by the heel and pulls him down.

They do say that Adam's failure was largely on account of Eve's extravagance. He started out with a fine estate and a good position, but she squandered it all on apples and aprons. But there were no neighbors to worry about it; which makes it quite different from any similar case from then until now.

John Smith, finding himself in debt to Pocahontas for his life, paid the debt with his heart. Which was quite like a man. Thereupon she left all else that she loved and followed him to England where she quickly died in a strange climate among strange people. Finding herself in debt to John Smith for his heart she paid the debt with her life. Which was quite like a woman.

Mrs. Eddy, mother of Christian Science, argues that poisons kill only because everybody thinks that poison kills. The individual is the victim of universal mental suggestion. This is "demonstrated," no doubt, by potato bugs, which are very susceptible to mental suggestion and die quickly after eating paris green.

In the foregoing paragraph we say that potato bugs die, which of course is merely a "term of convenience" to cover their "mortal error." The farmer thinks that they are dead, and the bugs think that they are dead—which is another convenience.

Joseph Luff used to say that there are many willing to be the anvil and more who are willing to be the hammer, but oh, how few there are who are willing to be the iron between the hammer and the anvil!

If the house of God is a house of order, then a sermon delivered in the house of God, to be a godly sermon, should be an orderly sermon. It should have a proper and dignified beginning. It should have an orderly and coherent line of thought all the way through, each idea being in some way related to the central theme. And it should have a fitting ending, and not merely "run out."

The emblems of the Lord's supper seem even to cast a certain sanctity about those who serve them. But they cannot make that clean which is unclean or holy which is unholy. So the Lord has commanded that those who bear the vessels of the Lord shall be clean. That means plenty of soap and water on the outside and good clean living on the inside.

The gathering brings out that which is in men. Some men come to Lamoni or Independence and stay. As the years go by they grow and become stronger, more charitable, more useful. But they had tasted the "hidden manna" before they came. Others stay a little while, get offended at something or nothing, and go away sour clear through. But Lamoni and Independence were not to blame. These men had the mother of vinegar in their hearts before they gathered.

If you are an elder, heed a word of counsel. Do not often indulge yourself to tell others of flattering financial offers that the world has made for your services, or the success that you might have made in secular matters. This for four reasons. 1st.—You do not intend to boast, but you may be understood as boasting. The world has nothing to offer worth consideration as compared with that which the church gives. Paul boasted only in the work of Jesus. Rome offered him nothing worthy of a second thought. 2d.—It may have the appearance of giving thoughtful consideration to a bribe. 3d.—Most of us owe all that we are to the church. It educated us, gave us our ideals, and developed our abilities. They belong to the church. We hold them in trust. They are not at auction. 4th.—In some cases these dreams are all moonshine. Perhaps they are in our case. Many who have left the church with the ambition to make a name in the world have made a flat and dismal failure. With God you may be making a success. Without him you might be just such another failure.

NEEDS OF THE Y. M. C. A.

Our attention is again called to the needs of the Young Men's Christian Association. They intend to start a ten-day drive, beginning November 11 to raise thirty-five million dollars, to be used for the work among the soldiers and sailors. We are warned that one of the great difficulties is the social evil, and the best preventive is other entertainment, or proper meeting places for the young men. This, the Young Men's Christian Association provides to the limit of their means. They go out, even to the firing lines and erect their shelters, can be easily reached, even under the enemies guns. It is a serious proposition our young men going forth. The Young Men's Christian Association provides material for correspondence, and encourages the young men to write. They give practical help as well as religion, and provide a warm drink when needed, when the men are separated from their cantonment, religious meetings, conferences, athletics, motion pictures, and high class entertainments are given so far as their means permit. That is why they need our help.

THE WRITINGS OF CYPRIAN

A letter from Elder Herman Peisker calls attention to the version of the Lord's Prayer which is to be found in the Writings of Cyprian, volume 1, treatise 4, paragraph 7, published in 1873 by T. and T. Clark, of Edinburgh. Cyprian was Bishop of Carthage A. D. 248-258. The oldest manuscript that we have of the New Testament belongs to the middle of the fourth century. Cyprian therefore lived at least a century earlier. He gives the Lord's Prayer as follows: "Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven so in earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And suffer us not to be led into temptation; but deliver us from evil. Amen."

The point to be especially noted is "suffer us not to be led into temptation." The American Revised Version, both in Matthew 6:13 and Luke 11:4, gives it, "and bring us not into temptation." The Authorized Version gives it in both instances, "and lead us not into temptation." Both of these are as if God would bring or lead us into temptation." But the Inspired Version reads in Luke 11:4: "and let us not be led into temptation," and in Matthew 6:14: "and suffer us not to be led into temptation." The thought is the same in both, that we ask him to protect us so that we shall not be led into temptation. It may be noted that the wording in the Writings of Cyprian as translated, agrees exactly with the text of Matthew in the inspired Version.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Growing Christmas Offering

Bishop McGuire is publishing each week, in the Ensign, a statement showing from week to week how the Christmas offering fund is growing. Watch for it. You can help make it larger.

The Sermon on the Mount

We call attention to the letter in this issue from Brother C. A. Gurwell, in which he tells of his efforts to secure a greater distribution of the teachings of Christ as embodied in this wonderful sermon. It is a commendable enterprise without personal profit and deserves consideration and support.

Are the Indians Hebrews?

This question is raised by a recent copy of The American Hebrew (October 19, 1917,) containing a picture of Palestine refugees. The person sending us the magazine has added a note, "Don't these people look like Indians?" Truly there is a remarkable resemblance in most of the individuals in the group.

Silver Jubilee of Anti-Saloon League

At its next convention the Anti-Saloon League of America will celebrate its twenty-fifth birthday. Though it is not quite that old, it was that long ago that Doctor Howard H. Russell, founder of the league, got his inspiration to organize this great institution. When the league began its work there was little dry territory in the United States, but to-day the Nation is almost dry. One House of Congress has adopted nation-wide prohibition and the other may do the same thing in December. The convention will be held in Washington, December 10-13.

War Costs

In a recent HERALD the statement was made that Germany's loss has been placed at twelve per cent for the three years of war. This is true in some quarters. In others we find that it has been placed from two to three times as high when there have been included not only those killed and seriously injured, but also those whose inefficiency is more or less decreased. We have no desire to minimize the awful horrors of war. We do wish to emphasize the need of correcting existing industrial, economic and social conditions at home and in times of peace. Also we do not want to make our troubles greater by magnifying them.

"Our Sunday Visitor"

A Catholic paper published at Huntington, Indiana, which appears to have as its main purpose the presentation of the doctrines of the Catholic Church for the benefit of Catholics and the purpose of converting non-Catholics, gives a full page in its issue of October 28, 1917, to an attack upon Martin Luther. It is surprising to find in the first part of the first column the following:

"One of these gentlemen, a clergyman, writing lately of Luther, called him a heretic, fit only to be ranked with—whom do you think? Joe Smith, the Mormon prophet. Joe Smith and Luther, that is the combination with which we are now presented."

It is stated that this appears in a book which was presented by two bishops of the upper house of Convocation and received by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and then placed in the library for that learned body to consult. Reference is made to Froude, "Short Studies on Great Subjects."

Manifestly this is unfair to Joseph Smith, as it attempts to humiliate both Martin Luther and Joseph Smith, and ignores the radically different character of their work. The one was a reformer, the other was a restorer claiming immediate divine revelation. The one approved of polygamy in some cases, the other did not, though he has been accused by some parties in interest, that is, those whose interest it would be to make him out such. No reflection should be made on the splendid work done by Martin Luther and the courage he showed in stepping forth to lead the reformation in Germany. His many excellent qualities should be recognized, and the reform that he was one instrument in securing, not only in the church in Germany, but throughout the world.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE MOUND BUILDERS AND THE INDIANS--Part 1

BY C. W. CLARK

[The following article was written by Brother Clark for the Ohio Archæological and Historical Quarterly, and published in the April, 1917, number. It is reproduced here by kind permission of the editors of that publication, and though written primarily for those who have not espoused our faith, will be of much interest to our readers.—EDITORS.]

In relating the story of prehistoric America as outlined in the Book of Mormon it is the purpose of the writer to avoid religious issues and controversies as far as possible, and to present simply the statements and portray the record in a way that will bring out only such parts as will be of interest to students of archæology. But it will be necessary to introduce a few of the religious facts that bear upon the statements connecting the life and manners of the people of which the Book of Mormon purports to be a record.

THREE PEOPLES

The Book of Mormon tells of three groups of population that inhabited the continents of North and South America in times past. These groups were, first, the Jaredites who came to this continent in boats or barges shortly after the building of the tower of Babel. This division traversed Southern Europe, crossed the Atlantic Ocean, and landed at or near the Yucatan Peninsula. On account of wars among them, this civilization became extinct about 600 B. C., but during the time of their sojourn they built many cities and traveled in a northerly direction, and this northern travel may account for one class of mounds, a few of which we find in Ohio, and large numbers in the State of Wisconsin. These mounds are known as effigy mounds, including the great serpent mound in southern Ohio. We will speak of these later.

The second colony of which the book relates left Jerusalem about the year 600 B. C., and originated with Lehi and his four sons. These people crossed the deserts of Arabia and eventually, after a long voyage, arrived on this continent on the Peruvian portion of the coast of South America. On account of the rebellious disposition of the two older brothers, sons of Lehi, Laman and Lemuel, against divine instructions, the younger brother Nephi, third son of Lehi, was chosen by instructions of the father Lehi as leader. The father claimed divine manifestation evidenced the approval of this choice. Nephi having become leader, the two older brothers and their families rebelled and withdrew from association with the younger brothers, Nephi and Sam, fourth son of Lehi.

MOUND BUILDERS

Thus originated the two groups of people known in the Book of Mormon respectively as Nephites and Lamanites. The former became the Mound Builders of the higher class, or those who built such fortifications as the inclosures at Circleville, Marietta and Fort Hill in Butler County, Ohio, and perhaps also Fort Ancient, Warren County. As to the apparent difference in construction between Fort Ancient and the forts above referred to, the writer's personal opinion would be that Fort Ancient was constructed by the Jaredites, the colony which had preceded the Nephites. The Lamanites became the familiar American Indians, and were probably the builders of the type of mounds known as burial mounds. Thus the book gives the Mound Builders and the American Indians a common origin. But the latter were cursed with a skin of darkness on account of their unbelief and wickedness in a similar manner as the descendants of Ham were cursed.

Baldwin in his book Ancient America, refers to a statement, made by Montessinos, concerning a tradition among the ancient Peruvians that four brothers originated their civilization, a younger brother assumed command which caused a rebellion, and finally descendants of the younger brother became the founders of a long line of their sovereigns. Nadillac, in his Prehistoric America, refers to a tradition of seven families as the originators of this civilization.

FOUR BROTHERS

In the Book of Mormon, while the story of the four brothers is most important and seems to have much to do with their history, it cannot be overlooked that there were two sons born to Lehi, Jacob and Joseph, on their way to the American Continent, and that they brought with them Zoram, a servant of Laban, who was one of the tribe of Manasseh and undoubtedly had been a distant relative of Lehi in Palestine. Thus we have the seven families represented by the six sons above named of Lehi and Zoram. These people were, according to the Book of Mormon, descendants of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt, and who had come to America by instructions from their heavenly Father. Being descendants of Joseph through Manasseh these people claimed to be learned in the language and arts of the Egyptians, and also the learning of the Jewish nation. They believed that they had come to Joseph's land (America) a land promised in Genesis 49: 22-26, and Deuteronomy 33: 13-17. Therefore having acquired the arts and learning as above they began to make improvements along the line of implements, buildings, etc. This we shall describe from time to time as we advance in our narration.

The land to which they had emigrated was to be a choice land, as promised them. The two brothers (Laman and Lemuel), who rebelled and became the Lamanites, had been warned by the voice of prophecy many times so that they were aware of the curse that was resting upon them for being disobedient. They brought with them records engraved on plates of brass containing the Mosaic law, so that they were taught the story of the creation and the flood, which traditions we find quite prominent among the Indian to-day, and the records of which are often freely discussed by noted archæologists.

EGYPTIAN CULTURE

The Nephites and Lamanites were well acquainted with the traditions of Egypt on account of their being descendants of Manasseh, having undoubtedly learned them through the connection of Joseph with Pharaoh's court. It is not surprising that we find them building on this continent great pyramids of exact geometrical construction, such as are found in Uxmal, and also other large structures resembling Egyptian architecture, although undoubtedly the pyramids were built by the Jaredites rather than the Nephites, as we will explain later.

We are told by Priest in his American Antiquities that the art of embalming was known and practiced by the American prehistoric people. This is also confirmed by Tschudi in his Peruvian Antiquities. In no other country was this art practiced to such a great state of perfection as in ancient Egypt, and it must be remembered that Joseph's wife was a daughter of one of the Egyptian priests, and that the practice of embalming in Egypt was performed by those holding the priesthood.

THE HORSE A CONTEMPORARY

John Delafield, on page 33 of his book, American Antiquities, comments on the traditions of the flood and tower of Babel, calling particular attention to the fact that the traditions of the American continent were the same as the traditions of these events which followed the Semitic race, and he also speaks of the nature of the hieroglyphics which were the same as those of the Egyptians. The Book of Mormon story of the voyage says that they sailed for many days, and after arriving on this continent in which is now the land of Peru, they began to plant seed and cultivate the soil which brought forth in abundance. They also found upon the land various animals, including the horse, left here by their predecessors, the Jaredites.

The question of the horse existing on this continent has been a disputed point. Delafield, on page 94, insists that there were no horses on this continent, and ascribes their absence as a reason, or one of the reasons, for his belief that the inhabitants came across by the way of Alaska. However, we are informed by Priest, on page 151, Nadillac on pages 25 and 42, the National Geographic Magazine, also by the Columbian Encyclopedia, that the horse did exist on this continent prior to the time of its discovery by Columbus, but had become extinct, the evidence of which we shall discuss later.

BRANCH OF JOSEPH

The book also says that they found gold, silver and copper ores from which they made plates like those they had brought from Jerusalem, and that on these plates they made a record of their great events. It is asserted that the Lord brought Lehi and his descendants here to raise up to himself a righteous branch of the descendants of Joseph, and in support of this believers of the Book of Mormon refer to Ezekiel 37 and Isaiah 29, to show that this is in harmony with promises previously made by the Lord.

We have promised to abstain from religious discussion arising from our point of view, but it is necessary to express certain statements, that an understanding may be had of the story of the book.

In the second book of Nephi we are told that he began to educate his people along very practical lines. Perhaps a quotation here may better illustrate what was taught them. We find in the fourth chapter as follows:

And I did teach my people to build buildings, and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious ores, which were in great abundance. And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things: . . . but the manner of the construction was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceeding fine.

It must be remembered that these people left Jerusalem according to the Book of Mormon about 600 B. C., so that they had opportunity of knowing all about the construction of Solomon's temple. In this same chapter is told the story of how the Lord put the curse of dark color upon the Lamanites so that they would not be attractive to the Nephites, and later it was told the Lamanites that the Lord would not permit any kings to rise up to rule the people that should inhabit this continent. Whether it is admitted or not that this statement is inspired it must be agreed that it seems to be remarkably fulfilled, particularly as this statement was addressed to the Gentile nations. The remarkable historic cases of the failure of Don Pedro in Brazil and of Maximilian in Mexico seem to have been in fulfillment of it.

SEVEN FAMILIES

Enumerating the different tribes and their branches that settled in America we find that Jacob, the brother of Nephi, enumerates them as Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites and Ishmaelites, the descendants of Ishmael, who did not personally come to America but whose sons and daughters intermarried with the other tribes. These branches all became in time either Lamanites or Nephites. It will be noted that there are just seven names here given, which correspond to the seven families, tradition of which is mentioned by Nadillac in his Prehistoric America.

BOOK OF MORMON CONDEMNS POLYGAMY

It is common tradition with most people that the Book of Mormon supports the practice of polygamy, but the contrary is the truth of the matter, for in the second chapter of Jacob, the Lord, speaking to Nephites, told them that they thought to excuse themselves for polygamy because David and Solomon had many wives, and adds that this was an abomination before him, as he had brought them forth that they might be a righteous people. Then he issued this commandment: "For there shall not any man among you have, save it be one wife, and of concubines he shall have none." The Nephites had departed from the law of monogamy and had inaugurated the practice of polygamy, but the Lord tells them he will not permit it, and in the same chapter he praises the Lamanites by saying in spite of their wickedness they had not departed from the law of monogamy. We find to-day that very few tribes of Indians practice polygamy.

TOOLS OF COPPER

We are told in various places that the Nephites were instructed in the arts of war and that the Lamanites were continually coming against them in battle. It was necessary then for them to learn to make darts and javelins for their defense, also other articles and tools, even tools of copper.

FORTIFICATIONS

An interesting topic is the consideration of their fortifications. In view of what we know to-day, as has been explained to us by noted writers along these lines, we believe that their fortifications present a remarkable likeness to those found among the remains of the Mound Builders, so called. Mr. E. O. Randall in his history of the State of Ohio, volume 1, of the Rise and Progress of an American State, by Randall and Ryan, says that in Butler County, Ohio, the fortification known as Fortified

Hill is built after the manner of the famous Tlascalcan forts of Mexico with the same special forms of gateways, and on page 23 of volume 1 of this work the inference is drawn that the Mound Builders or at least the builders of this class of fortifications suggest a racial relationship to the ancient Aztecs and Toltecs. Additional testimony is also given on page 28 of this same work where the author quotes from Professor Moorehead as follows: "The skulls were well shaped and of two types of mentality, a lower and higher order."

The writer believes that this is the correct viewpoint and it is in confirmation of the Book of Mormon story. The State of Ohio, part of Pennsylvania, and Western New York are conceded to be the location of the last stand made by this remarkable people. To-day an army in retreat would not erect great and permanent fortifications; so east of Ohio there are fewer evidences of their fortified work. Admiral Lindsay Brine in describing the American Indians, their ancient earthworks and temples, and speaking particularly of a work at Circleville, Ohio, quotes from Caleb Atwater in regard to this fortification as follows:

There are two forts, one an exact circle and the other an exact square, the former is surrounded by two embankments with a deep ditch between them, the latter is encompassed by one wall without any ditch. There are eight gateways or openings leading into the square fort and only one in the circular fort. The extreme care of the authors of these works to protect and defend every part of the circle is nowhere visible about this square fort. The former has a deep ditch encircling it, the latter has none. The round fort was picketed in, if we are to judge from the appearance on and about the walls. Half way up the outside of the inner wall is a place distinctly to be seen where a row of pickets once stood and where it was placed when this work of defense was originally erected.

Some of the articles found in the circular fort show that this was a domestic abode while the square construction was the fort proper. A similar structure does not appear at Fort Ancient. This leads the writer to believe that Fort Ancient was probably the work of an earlier civilization as we do not find the same evidence of the building of ditches for defense, or other special preparations that we find at Circleville to defend the domestic portion of their people, although this is more conjecture on the part of the writer, as Fort Ancient may have been hurriedly built to defend against attack. Now let us see if the above fortifications are in harmony with the Book of Mormon theory. In chapters 21 and 22 of the book of Alma, we find the following:

Moroni on the other hand had been preparing the minds of the people to be faithful unto the Lord their God; Yea, he had been strengthening the armies of the Nephites and erecting small forts, or places of resort; throwing up banks of earth round about to enclose his armies, and also building walls of stone to encircle them about, round about their cities, and the borders of their lands . . . and behold the city had been rebuilt . . . and they had cast up dirt round about, to shield them from the arrows and stones of the Lamanites.

. . . Behold how great was their [the Lamanites'] disappointment; for behold, the Nephites had dug up a ridge of earth around about them which was so high that the Lamanites could not cast their stones and arrows at them, that they might take effect, neither could they come upon them, save it was by their place of entrance. Now at this time, the chief captains of the Lamanites were astonished exceedingly because of the wisdom of the Nephites in preparing their places of security. . . . For they [the Lamanites] knew not that Moroni had fortified or had built forts of securities in all the lands round about. . . . Now behold, the Lamanites could not get into their forts of security by any other way save by the entrance, because of the highness of the bank which had been thrown up, and the depth of the ditch which had been dug round about, save it were by the entrance. . . . The captains of the Lamanites brought up their armies before the place of entrance, and began to contend with the Nephites to get into their place of security. . . . Caused that his armies should commence . . . in digging heaps of earth round about all the cities, throughout all the land which was possessed by the Nephites; and upon the top of these ridges of earth he caused that there should be timbers; yea, works of timber built up to the height of a man round about the cities. . . . And they were strong and high; and he caused towers to be erected that overlooked those works of pickets.

We might also quote from the 24th, 25th and 29th chapters of the same book which deals largely with the wars which we believe will bear remarkable resemblance to the means of defense prepared by the Mound Builders in the State of Ohio, the remains of which, without this solution, appear to remain an unanswerable riddle, and a means of much philosophy without reaching a definite result. The circles represent the camps of the women and children while the square forts were no doubt erected to defend in the best possible way the places of entrance.

We believe at least the solution is reasonable and worthy of consideration, and will bear as much inspection as the famed Atlantis theory of Donnelly or the theory of migration from Wales, Denmark, or Delafield's idea of the Behring Strait passageway. We are told that they built towers in many places for two purposes, that of defense and for religious worship. Early in their history the Nephites sent out an exploring party to discover the Lamanites' defenses, and this party discovered that another people had landed on the northwest coast and migrated to the northeast coast of South America, this latter people having been led there by one of the sons of Zedekiah about the time he was led into captivity. This was the tender plant referred to in Ezekiel 17. The people of Zarahemla became associated with the Nephites.

ANIMAL MOUNDS

It must be remembered from time to time dis-senting Nephites associated themselves with the Lamanites so that some of the traditions of the Mound Builders would be found among the American Indians of to-day. It might be well here to discuss the reason why the Mound builders erected serpent mounds or other effigy mounds in various places, as for instance, the serpent mound in Adams County, Ohio, and others in different localities representing the bear, tortoise, elephant, etc. It will be remembered, no doubt, that coming from Palestine and being of the line of Joseph, through his son Manasseh, the Mound Builders were versed, no doubt, in the religious traditions of the Egyptian courts, as about the first thing that the children of Israel wanted to do after escaping from Egypt was to set up an image of an animal that they could worship. George Rawlinson in his book, Religions of Egypt and Babylon, and also Herodotus in his history bring out the fact with reference to idol worship that the Egyptian either worships the animal itself or else images of the various animals and that while some worship crocodiles, others would worship the sacred bulls or other animals. Thus when the people on this continent crowded northward from the tropical regions and neglected the worship of the true God, they no doubt erected mounds that best suited their fancy of the divinity they worshiped. This same feature we find to-day in some tribes of Indians in their devotion to the totems.

THE PYRAMIDS

We are told that the Nephites built towers for religious purposes and also for watch towers. The towers for religious use were generally built upon elevated ground to which they could ascend and thus speak to advantage to a large concourse of people. Nadillac tells us of a tower in Peru where the natives that had not yet come under the gentle (?) touch of Spanish civilization, in passing, fall down or bow reverently before this tower as if it were some sacred place and yet it shows such age as to be classed with the oldest remains.

In the writer's mind there is little doubt that the pyramids of Egypt and of South America are due to the same original cause, and no doubt will remain a great mystery until we are able to fathom the real meaning of the Egyptian pyramids. But let it be remembered that, according to the Book of Mormon, the civilization representing the Jaredites dates back to the tower of Babel. Is it not possible that the pyramids of Egypt and of Central America might have originated in one and the same idea that rested in the minds of those who attempted to erect the tower of Babel in order to frustrate the commands of God. Be this as it may, the weight of evidence shows two civilizations existed in America before the race of Indians.

TWO KINDS OF MOUNDS

There seems to be, on careful research, two classes or more of mounds, and the writer believes that there are clearly three classes of mounds. The fortifications for defense which give every evidence of a great intelligence, were built, undoubtedly, by the Nephites on similiar models to those which they had erected from stone and other building material in South and Central America. Thus the mounds or fortifications in Butler County constructed with the Tlascalan gates or entrance was probably built by the same race that inhabited Central America and Mexico. This mound is referred to by Mr. Randall in The History of Ohio, by Randall and Ryan.

The burial mounds were probably built by the dissenting Nephites and Lamanites, particularly those mounds in which the remains of man are found commingled with the remains of animals, while the effigy mounds previously referred to could be ascribed to the previous civilization of the Jaredites. Professor W. C. Mills has stated that in some of the mounds are found instruments of bone and stone used for warfare, together with those of copper, which indicate two grades of civilization and that the more crude civilization overcame the intelligent and their burial in the same mound does not necessarily indicate their association in daily life. This would be in perfect harmony with the Book of Mormon story in which mention is made of the fortifications that were erected for defense.

It is a notable fact that mounds of defense are scarcely known in the Northwest, while in the State of Wisconsin are found many mounds in the form of effigies of animals, such as the elephant and bear and others, mounds of defense are not found to any great extent in this territory. This statement is borne out by Professor A. B. Stout, of the University of Wisconsin in the Ohio State Archæological and Historical reports. This shows conclusively that the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York were the last great battle field of the cultured race that was forced from its home in South and Central America through the great Mississippi Valley until at last reaching the territory above referred to, they were met by an overwhelming force as cited in the Book of Mormon in some of its closing chapters, and this civilization was blotted out.

The Lamanites were now supreme and long before the white man of the present age reached the shores of this continent, the remains of this cultured race were a mere tradition and only through these traditions are we led to the evidence of the past. We are told in the book of Mosiah that the people were taught to till the ground and in the National Geographic Magazine, we learn explorers have discovered remarkable traces of the ability of the ancient inhabitants of Peru in agriculture, in-somuch that they built terraces around the mountains and remarkable as it may seem, the remains in Peru of this form of agriculture are corroborated by the evidences of this method employed in Palestine.

We are told also in the Book of Mormon that these people were taught to weave and spin, and anyone who has had the opportunity of viewing the charred remains as shown in the display at the Ohio State Archæological and Historical Society museum must agree that there was at least marked evidence of ability along that line.

The remains of their cities show a remarkable knowledge of architecture. The use of cement, so frequently mentioned in the Book of Mormon, is substantiated by nearly every writer on this subject, from the time of Stephens and Catherwood to the present day. Some of the ancient roads constructed are still a wonder and an object of admiration. In any event there is an amazing amount of evidence, which renowned archæologists have produced in connection with the early inhabitants of Peru and Mexico connecting them with Egypt and Southern Asia. Delafield mentions in his publication that there was a tradition of the tower of Babel and the Semitic account of the flood and refers to the fact that the hieroglyphics resemble those of the section of the country ascribed to them by the Book of Mormon, namely, Southern Asia, Palestine and Egypt.

We are told also by such writers as Prescott, Tschudi, Priest and others that the use of iron and copper was known to them, and while some writers deny the use of iron, yet on a whole, there are several evidences that tend to show that the use of those metals was known, as the Book of Mormon states. In many places in the Book of Mormon towers are spoken of, and Admiral Lindsay Brine speaks of a cairn or tower built near Fort Ancient which stood quite high, which was built, no doubt, not only as a place of defense, but as a place where the chief priest or rulers would gather and discourse to the people.

(To be concluded.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE HOLY LAND LAID WASTE

Woe is Jerusalem!

Grim war has laid its wasteful touch on the land of patriarchs, prophets and kings. God's chosen people are fleeing the Holy City as they did two thousand years ago. Starvation is the scourge that is driving them. War's desolation is asweep of the Holy Land.

The victorious British troops are at Bagdad, thirty hours by rail from Jerusalem. An army of one hundred thousand turks and Germans is said to be between them and the Holy City every step of the way being strengthened by fortifications of modern type. German and Turkish soldiers flock in and out of Jerusalem; auto trucks with the trappings of war are passing through at all hours of the day and night.

In the footsteps of our Savior, when he was on earth to preach the gospel of peace, servitors of war are trampling the sacred ground. In the wilderness and the mountain where he retired to meditate and pray, where his disciples and the multitudes followed him, the word of God is being set at naught by the works of war. Big guns frown from the heights of Mount Olivet.

War has not reached the city of kings and the temples of gods. Its forerunner is spreading the work of desolation. Want is its advance agent. In the city where Pilate put the finishing touch to the world's great tragedy and whence flowed the prophecy of war upon wars and all nations embroiled in strife, with the end of the world in sight when the earth should be rocked with the tumult of battle, starvation is doing the war's cruel work. A 42-centimeter gun is the new cross on Calvary.

And in the wake of famine stalk disease and death and happenings to women worse than death. . . .

These are the tales of desolation and want brought last week to New York by eighty-nine Jewish refugees from Jerusalem; brought out of the land of promise, into the land of reality, by the charity of their fellow Jews and by the protecting strong arm of the United States. One thousand of them were expected, and the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid society's home at 229 East Broadway was rent with wails and lamentations on the afternoon and night of their arrival, and the police reserves had to be called out to maintain order in the wide thoroughfare in front of the society.

For word had gone abroad that the remainder of the thousand had succumbed on the way, to privation, or had been lost on the way out of the Holy Land, or drowned or torpedoed on the ocean almost within sight of the new promised land.

But nothing of the kind had happened. Only a few dropped out of the number which had started for New York a little more than four months ago. The larger party, not understanding that their expenses were being paid, feared the long trip through strange lands, fell back and remained in the land of want, preferring to take their chances there to risking new perils, the magnitude of which they could only guess.

The situation in Jerusalem and other cities of the Holy Land was not entirely unknown to persons in this country; but it remained for these refugees to tell of the real horrors. An appeal for aid, for medicines and food reached this country in the latter part of 1915. In February of last year the collier Stirling left New York with the stuff for which the Palestine sufferers had asked.

The collier got no further than Alexandria, being held there by the exigencies of the war. The cruiser Des Moines was sent to convoy the collier to Jaffa, and the Jewish distribution committee of the American Funds for Jewish War Sufferers asked the United States Government to turn the cruiser into a transport to bring to this country men, women and children who had claims on American citizenship. Consent was granted, but Ambassador Elkus found it impossible to get the refugees out from around Jaffa. Then appeal was made to the Turks for permission for these people to leave by way of Constantinople. Before this was granted, America was in the great war.

The Jewish committee guaranteed the expense of travel, but the Turks wouldn't permit anyone to leave who couldn't pay his or her way to Constantinople. Many who had the necessary funds feared to make the start, not understanding the fact that they were to be cared for after leaving Constantinople. Others grasped the opportunity as a last extremity and gave up their last cent to get out of the famine-ridden Holy Land. A thousand had written relatives in this country that they were to start, and the majority backing out at the last moment gave rise to the rumors on New York's east side that they had perished.

Some of those who arrived at New York still had money or could put their hands on some on arrival. The majority of them were absolutely without funds and their sufferings were written on their faces. At the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid society they tasted meat for the first time in four years. Children among the refugees had never seen kosher meat. The party comprised forty-two children, thirty women ranging in age from 20 to 50, and seventeen men, most of them old.

JEWISH RELIEF

A number had been in this country. Most of them had relatives who had come on years before to make their way in America and had never seen these friendly shores before. Money had been sent to them, but the purchasing power of it in the land of the Turks wasn't sufficient to keep the wolf from the door. The monthly $40,000 sent by the Jewish distribution committee dwindled to about $10,000 through Turkish handling. The Turks, these people said, recognize only their own currency and paid the money for the relief in that currency.

But the storekeepers, the merchants, the butcher and the baker would accept the face value of the currency at only one fourth of what it called for. A five dollar bill sent by relatives had the purchasing power of $1.25.

The refugees were brought from the ship to the Hebrew Shelter in automobiles and hundreds of Jews followed them when they reached East Broadway. Their identity rapidly spread, and men and women dropped their work to hurry after them to seek their expected relatives or hear the latest word from them. When it was learned that there were so few, men, women and children gave way to grief and tried to force the doors of the society. It was then that the police reserves were called out.

Mother Concors, as the good wife of the superintendent of the home is known, took the refugees in charge and insisted that they be given first a good warm meal, and appreciation was shown of her efforts by the manner in which the people who had known the ravages of starvation responded.

One man ran into the home and found his wife and two children. There had been five children when he left his family in Jerusalem. To his inquiry for the remainder, his wife made mute reply, then, bursting into tears, cried that they had died of starvation. Theirs had been the fate of thousands of children and of old men and women. The refugees told of little children lying in the streets, tiny arms extended in mute appeal for food and no food for them.

Leon Levinson, a druggist in Jerusalem, told of the need of drugs and food and how helpless the city was without either.

BEGGING FOR FOOD

"Little children were begging piteously for food," he said, "but there was no food for them. Jerusalem is not a city of industries, and the products of the Jewish colonies were bought by the Germans or the military duties were so great as to make production almost impossible. The Nathan Straus and Captain Dreyfuss kitchens in Jerusalem did all they could do, but when there was no food, no milk, no anything to be had, what could they do?"

"I have seen babies and older children lying on the sidewalks dying from starvation, without any possible aid. All the people could do in those cases was to place a cloth over their little pinched faces to hide their sufferings from others."

M. Davidson, principal of a Jewish rabbinical college, told of the children who attended a sort of experimental school attached to the college. In 1914, he said, the attendance was 850. All that were left were 550, and of the remainder a small number had been sent out of the country by the Turks because their parents hadn't become naturalized. The rest died of starvation.

Charles Neiditch of Hartford, Connecticut was one of the fortunate ones in this band of pilgrims. He went to Palestine in 1913, attracted by what he deemed good opportunities for business in the Zionist movement in the colonies in the Holy Land. He is the only one of the fugitives who declared that he would return to the Holy City. But his return will be postponed until after the war.

He described the trip as one of wearisome travel, beset with doubts and difficulties. Our affairs in Constantinople were in the hands of the Swedish ambassador, but it was not without considerable diplomatic treatment that they were enabled to leave that city. The party journeyed by train to Damascus and then to Aleppo where it was detained several weeks before being allowed to proceed to Constantinople.

The women and children were in constant terror until safely out of the dominion of the Turk. At the Hebrew Shelter the refugees sent up a cheer when told that Djemal Pasha, former governor of the province in which the Zionist colonies are located, had been removed from office. They predicted better treatment and a chance for life under any new administration. At Aleppo they were referred to a consul, and the consul asked them what kind of a consul they wanted. He had in his office the flags of all nations, and he would represent any of them at a price.

It was the Swedish ambassador at Constantinople who finally advanced the money for the remainder of the journey, which took the refugees through cities of Austria-Hungary, where they received the best of treatment, and on to Berne, Switzerland, and from there to France.

Mr. Neiditch said that the starvation and desolation were confined to the cities of the Holy Land; that there was no distress in the colonies, which are self-supporting, notwithstanding the military imposts on production. He was located at Pesach Tikvo (the Door of Hope). He is a Zionist.

THE JEWISH DREAM

The dream of the new movement of Zion is the establishment of a Jewish center in Palestine, and the dream has been in the making for the last twenty-five years. It is the dream of 5,000,000 Jews in America, whose hope is in a new land of promise where they may live and die in the land of their forefathers. In the land of the olive, the fig and the vine they have established colonies, being joined in the movement by Jews from Russia. In fact, the Russian Jews have been the pioneers in the movement, and the wilderness has been turned into gardens of fruit and flowers and wine.

The fertile soil has yielded its riches to the toilers and the dream of the Zionists was developing into a reality when war began to spread over the land. Then the Turks took a hand. The youth born of the colonies were declared to be Russians, since they had not embraced the Turkish doctrines of politics and faith. These young men were banished from their native land.

The majority of them went to Alexandria. They had learned to ride like Cossacks and shoot like Americans. The majority of them took up arms and became the famous Zion mule corps of Gallipoli, doing wonderful work in transportation under the British flag.

Morris Lebresku, one of this corps, is now at Ellis Island, denied a landing in this country, where he arrived three weeks ago, and his case, with its peculiar circumstances, is now in the hands of the labor department. Lebresku was born and grew to manhood in one of the colonies. The Turks declared him a Russian because his father had not been naturalized and ordered him to leave the Holy Land.

HOLY LAND FORTIFIED

After his work in the corps and being wounded in action, for which he was decorated, he organized a regiment under the British flag, which he intended to be the first unit of an organization to reclaim Palestine. He had many volunteers among the soldiers of fortune in Alexandria and a regiment of 1,000 started for Malta when the British withdrew from Alexandria. The transport was torpedoed and in the neighborhood of 100 soldiers were killed outright or drowned. With the others Lebresku escaped by swimming to a little island in the Mediterranean, where they were marooned without food and with little clothing for four days.

Then they were picked up by a British cruiser and taken to London, where Lebresku went to work in a munition factory. When America entered the war he begged to be sent to this country to stir up the Jews against Germany and her allies. The British Government paid his passage and that was his undoing, the law prohibiting the payment of a person's passage into the country by a foreign government. But the department of labor has his case under investigation and he may yet land to do his crusading work.

Several students were in the party which found comfort and food in the Hebrew shelter. They say they dare not give their names in speaking of political matters in the Holy City, for fear of Turkish reprisals on their families, citing cases where such things happened to the families of men who reached England and spoke of things as they were in unhappy Jerusalem.

They told, when guaranteed that their names would not be mentioned, of the fortifications in the Holy Land and corroborated the tales of starvation and the outrages on young women by German soldiers. Said one of them;

"Jerusalem looks like a military post. Auto trucks with guns and ammunition are continually passing through the city and more German than Turkish soldiers are seen there. . . .

"A commission of German engineers was sent to Jerusalem to search for new water for the German and Turkish troops. They had been trucking water from the city to the troops, but this used up too many horses and much of the water was spoiled on the journey. The commission drafted a number of the students in our college to aid them in the search, and told them to say nothing of what they had seen, when they returned to Jerusalem, on fear of death.

EVERYWHERE—GUNS!

"But they did tell their fellow students. In the search for water they visited every known place made famous in the Bible in the environments of the Holy City. Every eminence was surmounted with big guns from Beersheba to Bethlehem, and on every hand they saw the soldiers of the Turks and Germans. The war seems getting very near to Jerusalem. We had no way of learning of the changes the war was making in our vicinity. We understood when we left that the Turks and Germans were still in possession of Bagdad, and now learn that the British have captured the city.

"The people of Jerusalem were too busy with their own needs to think much of the war. What their fate will be God only knows."

Again, after two thousand years, around the walls of the Holy City, is heard the cry:

"Woe is Jerusalem!"—Joseph S. Jordan, in The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, November 4, 1917.

THE NEW POSTAGE RATES

[We were in doubt as to some points about the new rates, so we asked the local postmaster to give us definite information, which he did, in the following.—EDITORS.]

Letters and other first-class matter (except drop letters and post cards and postal cards) will be subject to postage at the rate of three cents for each ounce or fraction thereof which should be fully prepaid. If less than three cents is prepaid on a letter, or other first-class matter, it shall be returned to the sender, if known, for the deficient postage. If the sender is not known, it shall, if prepaid at least two cents be rated with the deficient postage and dispatched to its destination for collection of the amount due upon delivery to the addressee. Letters and other first-class matter prepaid less than two cents shall be treated as prescribed by Section 545 Postal Laws and Regulations.

The rate on drop letters on and after November 2, 1917, will be two cents an ounce or fraction of an ounce. This applies to all letters mailed for delivery within the postal district of the office where deposited, including delivery by the city, rural, or other carriers of such office. The two cent drop-letter rate also applies to offices which have no free delivery service.

All postal cards, whether they bear written messages or are entirely in print must be prepaid two cents each and, therefore, the one-cent postal cards must have a one-cent postage stamp affixed to them in addition to the one-cent stamp impressed on such cards.

Post cards or private mailing cards, which include all cards not exceeding in size approximately 3 9-16 by 5 9-16 inches nor less than approximately 2 3-4 by 4 inches will also be subject to two cents postage each whether they bear written or printed matter. All cards bearing the words "post card" or "private mailing card" which are not within the size above set forth shall be charged two cents postage each if in print, or the letter rate if wholly or partly in writing, but the rate of postage on printed advertising cards or cards containing printed circular matter which do not bear the words "post card" or "private mailing card" and do not come within the size prescribed for post cards is not affected, such printed cards being subject to postage at the third-class rate.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Echoes from the Oriole Camp at Kirtland

We look back with pleasure over the ten days' camp in the grove beside the old historic Temple.

Many others beside the Orioles seemed to like to drop in the camp for a rest or to read, as well as group around the piano in happy song. We think our camp was very cozy, with its pennants, flowers, pictures, etc., and especially on the eve of our entertainment, when our decorating committee surely made it look beautiful with the lighted Japanese lanterns nestling among the branches of weeping willows. We could but notice the contrast when we arranged our circle of chairs for the program, for last year we had eighteen chairs, and this year fifty-five Orioles were on the grounds, so we realize the work is growing in these parts.

We were very sorry Sister Pearl Gintz was unable to meet with us, for she has been a great help in the Oriole work.

One evening we held a "Snipping Party" for the Red Cross, after which the young people played games around the huge bonfire outside the camp. Many other innocent pleasures were enjoyed, such as hikes, corn roast, etc.

The Orioles again assisted the Woman's Auxiliary in caring for the babies and small children during the prayer meeting hour, so the mothers could be relieved.

Another evening the choir in the Temple was composed entirely of Orioles in uniform, under the direction of Brother T. U. Thomas.

These are a few of the good points which we learned some of the girls are making. In one circle several have memorized the Word of Wisdom and the Beatitudes, reading their chapter from the Bible each day, and one young lady who was reading a chapter from the three books each day while she was away at college, found upon her return home on a vacation that she was unable to find one of the needed books, just as she was getting ready to retire, but rather than "miss her point" ran to one of the neighbors quite late at night to borrow one. Had she not been winning her points, I am afraid "her chapter" would have been neglected. Two other girls are so interested in reading the Book of Mormon, which they said they never did before they began reading it for points, that one says she reads a "lot more besides her chapter each day." Then one mother told me her daughter never became very interested in the church until she "became an Oriole," so we see these auxiliaries are "helps" just as the heavenly Father said they would be.

This work does not alone develop the spiritual side of the lives of our girls, but it will teach them to love God's out of doors better, and to become more efficient in their homes, as well as furnish the proper kind of "good times" that our girls must have.

We have started our plans for next year. The reunion girls, ere they separated, appointed the following officers to work up the interest among the various circles during the year, so that when we meet together we will have some definite arrangements to work from. Any circles who wish to know more of these plans may do so by communicating with any of the following:

Reunion monitor, Alma O. Curry, Kirtland, Ohio; assistant monitor, Doris Kelsey, Akron, Ohio; recorder, Ruth Sautters, Canton, Ohio; assistant recorder, Elizabeth Logsdon, Canton, Ohio; song leader, Anna May Curry, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; cheer leader, Celia Richards, Cleveland, Ohio.

ALMA O. CURRY, Reunion Monitor.

ADDITIONAL POINTS OF MERIT

Home Building: Give the proper diet for a normal child of two years. Three years. Four years. Five years.

Give the predominating play interests of a child at two years. Three years. Four years. Five years.

Beauty: Bathe once a day for thirty consecutive days.

Loyalty to the Nation: Make over or refurbish a last year's dress and wear it instead of purchasing a new one. Plan menus for a meatless day. Plan menus for a wheatless day. Plant and care for a plot of flowers or two window boxes at home or on the church lot. Make one article for the Red Cross. Two. Three.

The 1917 edition of the Oriole Book is ready for mailing. This edition is very similar to the 1916 edition and those who have that book need not purchase a new one. Those who are working with the 1915 edition will find it easier and much more interesting to work with the new book, as it is very different, being more complete.

Send your Christmas letters to the soldier boys now.

For any suggestions for Christmas activities or patterns for decorating, send stamped envelope to Miss Ina Cockerton, Independence, Missouri.

To a Far-Away Sister

The following letter was written by Sister Madison in reply to a card received from Sister Roos, of Basil, Switzerland. Sister Madison has sent it for publication, in the hope that either the private letter or its public reprint may escape the submarines and reach Sister Roos. Sister Madison also desires that the sisters everywhere would write her very frankly concerning the good they have, or have not, received from the papers sent out this summer for reunion or district use. She has been commissioned to attend to the matter of presenting the Woman's Auxiliary work at reunions, and she hopes to be helped intelligently in this by the responses from the sisters she tried to reach. She would welcome suggestions, criticisms, comments, ideas or plans, offered by any who have at heart the strengthening and uplifting of the cause. Each department leader wishes to give out what is most needed by the largest number, and this can best be ascertained by her being placed in contact with those whom she aims to serve. So let your wishes be heard; write to Sister Madison your suggestions for reunion work and "do your bit" in this woman's movement in the church. Sister Madison's permanent address is Independence, Missouri, although for a few weeks she may be reached at 618 Osage Street, Manhattan, Kansas.

Here follows the letter referred to:

Dear Sister Roos: Your card came to me in spite of submarines and I am happy indeed to be of service to you, and through you, to some of the women of Europe. Surely the women of Europe need now, if ever in the world, the comfort and blessings of the gospel. These papers I am sending you under a separate cover were prepared by the sisters here—supposedly for the entire church, but they may be of little real help to you over there, because we are unable to sense the conditions of your environment. But the needs of womanhood and of motherhood are universal, and the blessings of the gospel are designed to reach all and suffice all. That is the message we would send to each in just the form to reach their needs, did we know them.

Are there any special problems you face that we may help you with? Be very frank in criticizing these papers and the Year Book I am sending you as to their fitness to meet your needs, pointing out the lines of work you wish amplified, and I will try to place it in the hands of specialists so that you may be benefited. Pray for the church, and for its women, especially that they will answer to the Lord's call: "Awake, awake; put on thy strength O Zion, . . . shake thyself from the dust; loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion," and be ready for the stupendous task awaiting thee, when thy stricken continent shall have been purged and so humbled before God that they will welcome the gospel. I am fearful that we here must take as much or more before we realize the brotherhood of man. If this and the material sent herewith reach you, write me further. I will be glad indeed to help in any possible way, and in the meantime I pray for you and your associates in the work that strength and wisdom may be given as your tasks need.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. WILLIAM MADISON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, U. S. A., October 29, 1917.

On Birth Registration---No 2

Suppose a legacy were left you, a native American citizen, by a relative in a distant State or in a foreign country. Could you establish your parentage and receive the inheritance? An official birth certificate, perhaps, would be the only valid evidence. Could you furnish it? Can your child furnish it?

Suppose your son were living abroad, and military laws were about to force him into the trenches. Could you send him an official certificate of his birth, with his name, and yours, and the place where he was born, so as to establish his American citizenship without question and save him from the firing line?

Sometimes the laws of the United States demand adequate registration of births if they are not to work hardship. There was the young daughter of an immigrant Swede. He wanted this child who was born in the United States to see his home, and he took her with him on a visit to Sweden. But the strain and excitement were too much for his failing strength, and he died soon after reaching his boyhood home, leaving his daughter an orphan. Her friends were all in this country, and she determined to return. The courage that took her to Ellis Island was severely tested when she was told there that as an unprotected minor she could not enter the country unless she could prove her claim to American citizenship. Much time and trouble were spent in looking for the record of her birth, but none could be found. Kind-hearted friends continued to search for some witnesses, and finally they found the doctor who had attended her mother when she was born, but who had failed to report the birth as the law required him to do. The kindly fate by which it happened that the doctor was still alive and that this young girl had friends willing and able to search him out, alone prevented her becoming a girl without a country.

Should we be so careless of losing our citizens for lack of an official record of their coming into the world?

Only eleven States and the District of Columbia have birth records which the Census Bureau accepts as fairly adequate, and even in this "birth registration area" the records are seldom one hundred per cent complete. The Federal Children's Bureau urges each community in the country to see that all the children born within its boundaries receive the fundamental protection of an official record of birth.—Government Bulletin from Children's Bureau.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

An Open Letter On Life Insurance

Regarding your comment about life insurance and also a letter from Bishop Keir to a Saint on the same topic, the following is written, not in a contentious spirit, but that the matter which is of vital import to a great many may be further discussed for the benefit of all. In the bishop's letter he stated, he is told that only thirty per cent of the premiums paid ever reach the beneficiaries, the balance being consumed in paying commissions, expenses and dividends. I speak from experience when I say emphatically that such a statement is very untrustworthy.

Life insurance is nothing more or less than putting into practice a habit of thrift. I believe the Saints as a whole are thrifty, or should be, because the more prosperous we as a people are, the more assistance we can give the great work we are all interested in. I suppose the Saints, as a people put money in the banks, and draw interest therefrom, also the Presiding Bishop encourages us Sunday school workers to bank the Christmas offering and get the interest also for the good of the church.

And why should we not assure our dependents help in times of trouble by banking money with an honorable insurance company, and at the same time have the risk covered? Any reliable insurance company compares favorably with the banks, for most of the banks charge ten or twelve per cent, and even higher, which is unjust, for loans, while the insurance companies only charge five and six per cent. Which is the most honorable? The bishop states in his letter that he believes the people of the world are wise in taking advantage of life insurance, but he does not state plainly what a member of the church should do, when he, the bishop, admits that the members of the church have not stepped forward with faith, believing in the promises of God, and carry out his instructions. Is a member of the church doing wrong, when realizing that owing to the nature of his work he may through the carelessness of his fellow men, or otherwise, be injured or killed any moment, is he doing wrong, I say, when he protects his dependents against such an emergency through the medium of life insurance? We hear a great deal at this time about buying liberty bonds to help win the war, but to my mind, the man who insures his life and protects his children, the future generation, has fulfilled a greater obligation to the State than by the purchase of a liberty bond. The bishop also says life insurance is only a human scheme. This reminds me of the every-day statement that we are only human, and when the wage earner pays the grocery bill and clothes his wife and family he begins to realize he is only human, hence he cannot do better than invest his small surplus after doing his bit towards the church, in a human scheme, and thereby get the protection he cannot obtain any other way.

We must not forget that in this world, which is a hard one too, the average workingman must call a spade a spade, and if, as the bishop says, the members of the church have not stepped forward as a whole, who are we as individuals to depend on for material wants in times of stress? Personally I cannot depend on my brother for help because he is in the same condition as myself, viz, a poor but honest workingman. Again, all the prominent men of the present age in every country, irrespective of class or creed, indorse life insurance, realizing that the habit of thrift should be encouraged and fostered because the rising generation need to have this principle demonstrated more and more, and after all a thrifty people are the backbone of the Nation.

The time is not far distant when in the United States of America and Canada compulsory insurance will be a reality, and if so we will have advanced a long way towards adjusting some of the wrongs of our present social system, and give the children and other dependents of the working class a chance to live.

These few lines are penned mainly because I have thought that some may allow their policies to lapse and thereby lose what they have struggled to save, from the fact that the bishop does not favor life insurance.

Yours fraternally,

WILLIAM B. BARTLEMAN.

NEW LISKEARD, ONTARIO.

[We are pleased to be able to present the above letter that our readers may hear both sides, but in doing so we should give the matter fair consideration in every aspect.

In fire insurance the risk is always less than fifty per cent, and after the return, is as low as thirty per cent. In life insurance as a rule, the margin is not so large; as the above article states, it represents a form of compulsory saving. But on the other hand, the church in carrying out the plan as set forth in the law, provides better for all kinds of insurance. This includes fire, life, accident, employer liabilities, and every other kind of insurance that now come to mind. The church plan is better and safer. Those who hold policies which are well paid up, should by no means be in a hurry to surrender them, and certainly not without consultation. The essential thing would appear to be to confer with your bishop or bishop's agent, or with the Presiding Bishop, for your own special circumstances and how it may best be met. It certainly would involve a loss if we made such an undertaking, if it did not involve a like saving and contribution on the part of those to be benefited. Those who show such habits of frugality are the very ones needed to assist in putting into effect the temporal law. It is evident that there must be a wisdom in all things. Many policies have a definite surrender value.

This is one possibility to be considered, but as all things shall be prepared before for those going up to Zion, so should it be in this respect; those who are thinking of taking out life insurance or other policies would do well to confer first with their bishop secure his counsel and advice, and so act to best meet their own interests and the interests of the church at large. The vital point in the former letter and editorial was that the bishopric apparently desire to make a start. We are all convinced, or will be as time passes if we are not now, that the temporal law of the church is the best for every man.—EDITORS.]

Personal Views of a Socialist

Yours received. The interview to which you refer was given out over my own signature and indicated my own, rather than the views of the Socialist party.

Experience is sometimes a good teacher, and the Socialists of the Nation are being compelled to adopt a constructive program in order to exist. While at the Saint Louis convention last spring I urged from the floor that no action be taken that could even be construed as un-American. I argued that the American people would not accord to any program which did violence to American idealism or American institutions. Some fifty others took a similar stand. The extreme radical group won out. The majority resolution on "War and militarism" carried in the convention and overwhelmingly prevailed in the following referendum on the membership.

A vigorous antiadministration propaganda was instituted, with the consequent result that it drew the attack of the Federal Government and has resulted in the suppression of most of the publications of the party, the arrest of many workers in various parts of the country, the raiding of the national as well as many State and country headquarters.

I think the action of the Socialist party in this regard a serious mistake. I likewise am of the opinion that the wholesale suppression of newspapers and public meetings has, in many instances, been a mistake on the part of the authorities.

When the Socialist convention at Saint Louis obligated the party to "support all mass movements against conscription," it invited suppression. The fact that its leading representatives have been kept busy disavowing any intention to go without the law has not mitigated the opposition. True, a Federal jury in Detroit recently acquitted the national secretary on an indictment covering this phase of the question, but the trouble was done and the party has suffered.

Such men as John Spargo, Charles Edward Russell, J. Phelps-Stokes, Upton Sinclair, J. Stitt Wilson and many others withdrew from the party. I was acting as state secretary for California at the time and refused to submit the referendum to the membership, tendering my resignation to the state committee. The California committee, however, indorsed my action. I continued as secretary pending the selection of my successor.

On October 1 I entered upon the active missionary work. I need not tell you how much joy it gives one to be where God wants him to be. My experiences during the past few years have been varied and extensive. I am hopeful that they will be of incalculable benefit to the church.

The idealism of socialism is the purpose of the church. The tactics and program of many of the socialistic institutions are at variance with the end to be achieved. The spirit of the church is altruistic—the tactics of the socialistic organizations largely selfish. Class hatred is self-destructive, love for man its sole corrective. Some of these days I'll tell you more of my experience and conclusions. Let this suffice now.

Sincerely yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

The Sermon on the Mount

INSPIRED TRANSLATION, POCKET EDITION

The plan of salvation is not found in any version of the Lord's most important sermon, save the Inspired Translation only; see Matthew 5: 4, to verify this, in comparison with any other version of the Bible extant.

The Lord told the Saints in 1831, (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15) they should teach this version of the Scriptures when they were received in full. We have been slow to do this.

With a desire to have them more generally read and studied, a neat vest-pocket edition of the Sermon on the Mount as found in the three chapters of Matthew, has been gotten out by the Herald Publishing House. It is bound in cloth and contains in addition to the sermon, an account of how the early Scriptures were given to Moses and how they have been restored in these latter days, an epitome of our faith and a statement of some of the differences between the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah, with references to one of our most valuable tracts and to the SAINTS' HERALD, and that they may be had from the Herald Office upon request.

No better "handbook" can be found for the Saint who desires to have with him all the time "daily food" as it was given by the Master, and a statement of our faith. This might be called in "capsule form," it is so small and convenient—22 pages, vest-pocket size, cloth binding, the full message of the Master in his first recorded sermon.

Every one of our soldier boys should have a copy in his pocket as a constant reminder of the covenant he has made with God and for daily strength, as he mingles with those who continually pour into his ears a torrent of profanity and vulgarity. (I am among them daily and am a witness to this at Camp Funston.)

I have sent a copy in a sealed envelope to every address that has appeared in the Ensign since and including October 11. Will you help in this work? My means are not unlimited. Let us put a copy in the hands of every one of our young men that are in the Army and Navy.

About two thousand copies of the sermon with an accompanying leaflet, were sent out early in 1915. The leaflet is now printed as a part of the book. It has the approval of the First Presidency and the Board of Publication, and was warmly approved by our venerated Brother Joseph Smith a few weeks before he was taken from our midst in 1914.

The actual cost of mailing a single copy to a soldier in a sealed envelope, exceeds six cents. To those who send me one dollar I will send twenty-five copies by mail, or one dozen for fifty cents. Enclose one in a letter to your soldier boy. Sunday school teachers, get each of your scholars one for Christmas. Missionaries will find them an excellent tract for interested inquirers. The prices given barely cover the cost of printing and postage. Single copies, five cents each. Address me either at Manhattan, Kansas, or Independence, Missouri.

Yours in the faith,

C. A. GURWELL.

Arousing Opposition in Ohio

I came to this vicinity the 7th, inst., and began a meeting that evening in the schoolhouse near by. I was informed, that there was an injunction on the building especially designed to shut out the Latter Day Saints, granted by the Court of Common Pleas in 1888, and has stood as a barrier ever since. When Brother Erter informed me that the building, a frame structure, on which the injunction was placed was on another lot and sold several years ago, I told him I was of the opinion the injunction would not apply to the present structure. However, we received a polite letter from the school board asking us not to hold meetings longer until "matters were cleared up." We drew up a petition asking the court to dissolve the injunction. Nearly every man in the township signed it. We took it to Paulding and consulted the county attorney. After looking the old one over carefully he said it was "dead and ought to be buried." He told us to go ahead with our meetings and if the board was in doubt, to call him up. When we informed him that the original building was moved away he laughed and replied: "Oh, it doesn't apply to this building at all."

So it appears that when the building was sold the purchaser bought the "injunction" and hauled it away, and the building now standing might have been used years ago had a little investigation been made. We are occupying nightly now, while the enemy, deprived of his weapon, has retired.

Last Sunday evening we began a Sunday night campaign in Hicksville, a town of about four thousand, in a theater building. We had a good hearing for a start despite the fact that it rained in torrents just at the time of gathering, and from the further fact that the church people were warned from their respective pulpits to "stay away." It is the same old game: keep the people in ignorance. However, we are advertising for next Sunday again and if the people continue to walk in darkness it will not be our fault. Our subject last Sunday was, "Why the nations fight," laying the blame primarily at the door of the popular churches. One prominent business man said to-day, "It was the best thing I ever heard." An old Dunkard preacher expressed himself about the same way. Next Sunday our subject will be, "Who represents God?" From the lips of chosen leaders we expect to convict the popular church of usurpation, spoilation and defamation. Is that enough? We have the goods, and we have the promise of a "jury"—a large audience. Will report results later.

E. E. LONG.

Are We Justified in Participating in War at Any Time?

It is with reluctance that I take up my pen and write a few lines on this much agitated question.

I hesitate lest some might mistake my motive, and conclude that I am in favor of war. So at the outset I will say, God forbid that I should ever let such a spirit get possession of me, but, to the contrary I am thoroughly opposed to war. The sight, or even the thought of bloodshed turns me sick at heart.

I am in rapport with the words of Paul: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." But I realize that it sometimes becomes necessary to break off our peaceful relations with a self-constituted enemy, because it has become impossible, and does not lie within us to continue to live peaceably with him.

Those whom I term extremists, base their claim of neutrality on the word of God which says; "Thou shalt not kill," and, "He that taketh up the sword shall perish by the sword." Now my application of these scriptures differ in that I believe that they apply in an aggressive, and not a defensive way. "Thou shalt not kill," has reference to murder, and does not apply to a soldier who takes up arms at the call of his Government, in defense of that Government, even though he in pursuit of that occupation does shed the blood of his fellow man. Here I wish to recall a statement made by our worthy president, Frederick M. Smith, in Ensign of July 19: "The consensus of opinion is that for the bloodshed of war, not individuals but nations are held accountable."

I have heard it said by some, that they would not take up arms to the extent of shedding man's blood, even in defense of their homes, their wives, and their children. Now such an attitude is strictly contrary to the word of God, as recorded in Alma 20: 50-52:

"Nevertheless, the Nephites were inspired by a better cause; for they were not fighting for monarchy nor power; but they were fighting for their homes, and their liberties, their wives, and their children, and their all; yea, for their rites of worship, and their church; and they were doing that which they felt was the duty which they owed to their God; for the Lord had said unto them, and also unto their fathers, That inasmuch as ye are not guilty of the first offense, neither the second, ye shall not suffer yourselves to be slain by the hands of your enemies. And again, the Lord has said that ye shall defend your families, even unto bloodshed; therefore for this cause were the Nephites contending with the Laman-ites, to defend themselves, and their families, and their lands, their country, and their rights, and their religion."

Again, Alma 21: 132-136:

"And Moroni was a strong and a mighty man; he was a man of a perfect understanding; yea, a man that did not delight in bloodshed; a man whose soul did joy in the liberty and the freedom of his country, and his brethren from bondage and slavery; yea, a man whose heart did swell with thanksgiving to his God, for the many privileges and blessings which he bestowed upon his people; a man who did labor exceedingly for the welfare and safety of his people: Yea, and he was a man who was firm in the faith of Christ, and he had sworn with an oath, to defend his people, his rights, and his country, and his religion, even to the loss of his blood. Now the Nephites were taught to defend themselves against their enemies, even to the shedding of blood, if it were necessary; yea, and they were also taught never to give an offense; yea, and never to raise the sword, except it were against an enemy, except it were to preserve their lives."

Herein we have portrayed the character of a wise and just man in the sight of God, who taught his people to defend themselves against their enemies, and who led his armies in many a victorious battle, because his soul stood fast in the liberty in which God has made us free. (Alma 28: 13.)

Again we quote from Alma 28: 14-19 the words of Pahoran, chief judge over the people of God.

"And now behold we will resist wickedness, even unto bloodshed. We would not shed the blood of the Lamanites, if they would stay in their own land. We would not shed the blood of our brethren if they would not rise up in rebellion and take the sword against us. We would subject ourselves to the yoke of bondage, if it were requisite with the justice of God, or if he should command us so to do. But behold he doth not command us that we shall subject ourselves to our enemies, but that we should put our trust in him and he will deliver us. Therefore my beloved brother Moroni, let us resist evil; and whatsoever evil we cannot resist with our words, yea, such as rebellions and dissensions, let us resist them with our swords, that we may retain our freedom, that we may rejoice in the great privilege of our church and in the cause of our Redeemer and our God."

Read also in connection with this, Doctrine and Covenants 95: 5-7. I have also heard men say that if they were forced to go to war, they would take good care that the weapon that they wielded would be so directed as not to cause the shedding of the blood of a fellow man. Now I believe this too is contrary to the will of God, and that such would be classed as traitors, or slackers, a case of which we find recorded in Alma 29: 12, where we read: "Moroni and Pahoran having restored peace to the land of Zarahemla, among their own people, having inflicted death upon all those who were not true to the cause of freedom." Also chapter 23: 16: "And they refused to take up arms; for they were so wroth with the chief judge, and also with the people of liberty, that they would not take up arms to defend their country."

I find a number to-day who are wroth with the chief judge, and with the people of liberty. I refer to those who are creating so much disturbance, and raising so much opposition to the registration, selective draft, and other war measures.

We read in Alma 27th chapter, where there was wickedness entered into the government, so that there was a division among them, to the extent that they failed to support the armies in the field, and because of this failure to support the armies, thousands were slain, while it might have been otherwise (verse 18). And we read how that Moroni admonishes the government for their exceeding slothfulness, and in verse

40 he says: "Or do ye suppose that the Lord will still deliver us, while we sit upon our thrones, and do not make use of the means which the Lord has provided for us?"

And in the 49th verse he admonishes them to bestir themselves in the defense of their country. And in the 48th verse Moroni says that it is according to the commandment of God that he has taken up his sword to defend the cause of his country.

The result of this disturbance was a short civil war, in which Moroni raised the flag, or standard of liberty, and called for volunteers, resulting in thousands flocking to the colors (Alma 29: 1-12).

In the light of this knowledge we can see the great wisdom and foresight in President Wilson's urging the Nation to rally to the support of the Army, and observe the strictest conservation along all lines.

We are sometimes cited (by the peace-at-any-price class) to the case of the people of Ammon, as an example worthy for us to pattern after. The people of Ammon had taken an oath that they nevermore would shed blood. (Alma 24: 65; 20: 12.) And when their enemies came upon them, they made no resistance but allowed the Lamanites to slay over a thousand of their number. But I find later or according to Alma 24: 67, when they saw the many afflictions which the Nephites bore for them that they apparently repented of the oath they had made, and were desirous to take up arms in defense of their country, but were persuaded by Helaman not to break their oath. And reading on in the same chapter we find that they had many sons who had not entered into such a covenant as their fathers had.

"And they entered into a covenant, to fight for the liberty of the Nephites yea, to protect the land unto the laying down of their lives; yea, even they covenanted that they never would give up their liberty, but they would fight in all cases to protect the Nephites and themselves from bondage."—Verses 72, 73.

Now there were two thousand of these young men. "And they were all young men, and they were exceeding valiant for courage, and also for strength and activity; but behold, this was not all; they were men who were true at all times in whatsoever thing they were entrusted; yea, they were men of truth and soberness, for they had been taught to keep the commandments of God, and to walk uprightly before him."—Verses 76, 77.

And in chapter 26: 103, 104, also we find the character of the young men portrayed, and according to verses 56 and 96 it was attributed to the teaching of their mothers. And of their captain they said: "Our God is with us, and he will not suffer that we shall fall; then let us go forth." And in verse 94 we find that they did administer death unto all those who opposed them. The record also says they fought as with the strength of the Lord, and not one of their number was slain. We have another case in Mosiah 6: 20 where it says the people went forth in the strength of the Lord to battle against their enemies.

Thus we see that in all the ages of the past, on both continents, God's people have not been exempt from war, and we have not yet reached that time when his people shall be exempt from war. But we are hoping and praying for the time we read of, that they shall be at peace, and live in a place of safety, when the enemy shall say, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for behold her armies are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand.

We believe God inspired Columbus to discover this land; we believe that God inspired Washington and his associates in drafting the Declaration of Independence, and the constitution of this Government, and as he says: "Redeemed the land by the shedding of blood." We also believe that God inspired Abraham Lincoln in the freeing of the slaves.

And now are we going to doubt that God's Spirit is directing the present head of our Government? Inasmuch as we believe that God was the author of this Government, do we suppose that now in this most important of all ages, that he is going to forsake us? At this most important time, when Zion is to be redeemed, Israel restored to their promised land, and the gospel proclaimed to the nations of the world preparatory to the coming of the great king.

Of course I realize there is much wickedness in our Nation, and because of this much suffering shall come upon the people. Nevertheless our cause is just, and many of our boys shall be called upon to take up arms for the same cause of liberty, justice, and freedom, as did the Nephites. Cannot our boys go forth in the same strength, and under the same protection as did the sons of the people of Ammon? But if our boys allow themselves to become contaminated with the evils, and vice, with which they will be surrounded in their life as a soldier can they expect the protection of the Almighty, when they enter the dangers of the battle field? But if they keep themselves clean and pure and prayerful before God, they can claim his protection. And because of their faithfulness, and the many earnest prayers that shall go up from the Lord's people, the blessings of God shall rest upon them, and upon the Nation also.

I do not believe we should allow ourselves to be enthused with too much of a military spirit, nor to be anxious to get into the fray, but when our country calls, let us be loyal, true, brave, citizens of the Nation, and by so doing we shall become loyal, true, brave, citizens of the kingdom of God. His richest blessings shall rest upon us, and we can look back and see how God's hand was working for the good of his cause.

E. R. DAVIS.

RENFROW, OKLAHOMA, October 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: Since I know of no Latter Day Saints in this region of country, other than my sister and I who have charge of the schools at this place, I feel impelled to make inquiry in the columns of the HERALD. If there are any Saints near, we would certainly be glad to make their acquaintance. These times are certainly the perilous times of prophecy in fulfillment. It is, therefore, expedient, that the Saints come together as much as is possible and consistent.

The time for the redeeming of Zion is surely at hand. Every faithful Saint will not wisely neglect to make liberal sacrifices for the cause of the kingdom of God. Many of us are being called upon to give up our sons and brothers, for this great, world-wide conflict.

This is hard for many of us to do, but we should realize, that this is the testing time. Men's faith is being tried very sorely. Yet, as sure as prophecy is true, if we study, we cannot help seeing, that it is sure to win a victory for the cause of freedom, liberty and righteousness on this sin-cursed earth.

The Lord and the church have declared that the Saints should support the governments. If the Lord and church with its ever praying people are for us and those of our number who are called to the front, what evil power can overcome us, and cheat us of salvation? Let us always be true to him, who is our Redeemer, even if we do have trials and temptations in this ever-changing path of life.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, and the speedy establishment of peace and righteousness on the earth, I am,

Your brother in the gospel,

CHARLES M. WILLIAMS.

CAMERON, MISSOURI, October 24, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are in the midst of a series of meetings; we are doing our best to get our neighbors to attend, but as yet only a small number have come, but they are somewhat interested and we look for some of them to apply for baptism. If the interest continues—although the whole town does not wake up and attend in a mass—we shall have Brother J. W. Roberts hold forth for a week or two, beginning the 29th. The old saying is, "Change of pasture is good for the calves." Last evening we had the best attendance yet, except Sunday afternoon. Our town papers are open for us; in fact, they have invited short, newsy articles, relative to our church work and the series of meetings, which we appreciate. I have taken advantage of their invitation twice and it has done good. I believe that it was the kindly invitation which I had in the papers yesterday evening that brought out several new faces, both of our people and friends. I had excellent liberty in presenting the subject, and notwithstanding the strong food given, I believe the subject was timely.

So far only two questions have been placed in the question-box: "Why is it that your people are called Mormons?" Second, "Give a brief statement why you claim your church to be the Church of Christ." I answered them briefly and called attention of the inquirer to the subjects, especially those of the 22d, 23d, 24th, and 28th.

Some of our people object to advertising subjects several nights or days in advance. One of the missionaries remarked that he did not believe in that way of preaching. He thought we should store the mind and be prepared when we entered the place of worship to present the subject that comes to the mind. I replied that I thought that light could be given several days in advance as to what line of thought would be advisable to present, and by announcing the subject in the papers and by handbills and cards, some would come who would not have even thought of coming if they had not known the subject. I can say from experience that light has been given when I have sought for it even days in advance in arranging the subjects for a series of meetings and never have I had to introduce another and drop the one advertised. I, therefore, believe that advertising the subjects is a drawing card, and I cannot see why any objections need to be made. I believe that where we have free access to the papers, it would be advisable to not only advertise the meetings, but also the subjects, for it is the subject—as a rule—that will draw the attention of those interested and not merely the announcement of the meetings or the speaker. I believe that it is just as consistent and essential to advertise from behind the pulpit as the counter. It is the man who tells the public that he has the goods who is successful, and so I believe it is with the preacher. Paul says, "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets." Is not the spirit of the preacher subject to the preacher when he, in humility, is seeking for the best means to bring the gospel to the people? Does not the Spirit know one or two weeks in advance the line of thought best suited for the audience, or is it necessary to wait and see the class of people present before preparing? I think not. The promise is, "According to our needs shall our wants be supplied, spiritually and temporally," but we must do our part. God helps those who try to help themselves. Jesus said, when standing near the tomb of Lazarus, "Take away the stone," and then he cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth." The same power that brought Lazarus forth out of the tomb could have removed the stone, but Jesus asked them to do so. From this we see what we can do, the Lord expects us to do.

The first Far West Stake conference was held at Guilford, Missouri, October 13 and 14. I should say the first since the organization of Far West District into a stake. I learn that the different branches were well represented and all enjoyed the various services and speak very highly of the stake president, Brother R. S. Salyards, and also Bishop B. J. Scott. Several have made the remark: "The right men at the head." And, our unassuming, worthy sister, Minnie E. Scott, the secretary of the stake, had her work so well arranged that many who were present and who are competent judges, remarked, "Far West is very fortunate in having one so well qualified for the secretaryship." Remember the angel said, "Daniel, a man greatly beloved." Daniel did not become exalted, or, using a modern phrase, "Get the big-head"; no, but he was encouraged, and we have many Daniels to-day, in the sense that a word of praise or a compliment will encourage and inspire them and they deserve it, although they may not look for it. Let us not wait for the funeral of these workers before giving them their bouquets, for "A word of praise now and then, is enjoyed by the best of men," and they will not explode.

Several of our people have bought farms in the vicinity of Cameron lately, paying from $85 to $100 per acre; some others have bought residences in town. Cameron is located near the center of Far West Stake and there are two main lines of railroads here; the Burlington and the Rock Island. We have thirty passenger trains daily and all stop at Cameron. Cameron has a population of about five thousand and has excellent schools and also the Missouri Wesleyan College is located here. The country around here is a good farming, stock, dairy, poultry and fruit country. We are fifty-five miles north of Kansas City and thirty-five miles east of Saint Joseph, which are good markets. There are several different churches here and within a radius of sixteen miles, there are eight branches of our church and also one in Cameron, the latter in charge of Brethren Thomas Fiddick, president, Scott Daniel, priest, John Stade, teacher, and Sherman Sloan, deacon and bishop's agent. All are good men. Any of the Saints contemplating moving into the regions round about, would do well to consult our bishop, Brother B. J. Scott, at Saint Joseph, Missouri, (1620 Faraon Street), who has taken much interest in obtaining needed information for the benefit of all wishing to locate in the Far West Stake.

Respectfully your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA, October 26, 1917.

Editors Herald: We just closed a tent meeting Tuesday evening last, at Dinuba, where we organized a branch with forty-two charter members. Brother J. W. Rushton of the Twelve, and C. W. Hawkins, district presidency officiating.

Brother A. S. Votaw was ordained and chosen as presiding elder, and Joseph W. Enix deacon, and Doctor (Sister) Fannie Graham secretary.

This is where we have done considerable tent work in the past, the writer having baptized twenty of the charter members, sixteen of them this year.

We have some very fine people there, and feel that the branch is starting off well. This is in the great raisin growing section of California, and there are also many figs and peaches grown here. Brother J. F. Wiles and the writer were holding tent meetings there when Brethren Rushton and Hawkins came to help us and organize the branch.

We had some fine meetings, especially after the brethren came to help us.

Brethren Rushton and Hawkins came with me to Fresno Wednesday, and we are having some very interesting services here at present. But sorry to say the brethren have to leave us and go to Tulare.

But we feel also glad to say that the work here in Fresno is taking on new life, too, so we feel hopeful.

W. A. BROONER.

NAVY YARDS, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, October 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I just finished reading in the Ensign, the account of the dedication of the Independence church, I thought I would write to the Saints some of my experiences since coming to Brooklyn. I enlisted in the Navy as a landsman for electrician on June 12, coming from Oklahoma City. I arrived here on the fifteenth. On that date I saw my first large ships and big guns. After reporting on board the receiving ship, I secured my bag and hammock and was permitted to go ashore, or on liberty, until the next Monday morning. During these two days I received my first impression of New York City. Monday I was vaccinated and then did nothing until Thursday when I drew part of my clothes. The other two days of this week I was put in a gang of men whose task was painting and chipping on some of the large interned German liners.

During this week and the three or four weeks following, my impression of the United States Navy was not encouraging. The ship I was on had fourteen hundred men on board when her capacity was only eight hundred. Our food was also prepared under a corresponding disadvantage—feeding five thousand to six thousand men per meal on board one ship is entirely too many. I had entered for the electrical school, but it was overcrowded, so many of us were put on guard duty for about six weeks. During this time we had it very easy with liberty every other day. During my second week here I located our church and first found Brother W. L. Christy, our pastor, preaching on the street. I can go to church about two Sundays in the month.

After doing my time on guard duty I went to drilling for a month. This was during the very hottest weather. During this month our new barracks, just outside the navy yards, were finished and we moved into our new and very comfortable quarters. Here our food has been very good, indeed.

I started in school the first of September. It is an eight months course and during this time our pay is thirty-two dollars and sixty cents per month, paid twice a month.

When I came to Brooklyn, it was my first trip east of the "Father of Waters," and of course I found many things of beauty and interest. I think the prettiest scenery I ever saw was on the Horseshoe Bend of the Susquehanna, near Harrisburg. However, a trip up the Hudson, forty miles to Bear Mountain, proved to me the famous beautiful scenery of that river. Then several of the parks are of course very beautiful, and during the summer excellent band concerts are given in some of them. In the Bronx Park is an excellent zoological exhibit, one of the best in the country. A large aquarium down at the battery is a fine place to spend an afternoon. Then the American Museum of Natural History is a wonderful place. I spent three afternoons there and have seen only one floor. A person could study here for a lifetime. I wish all of our elders interested in our work among the Lamanites had an opportunity to visit this museum, for it seems to me that many interesting things could be learned concerning the Indians.

At the Art Gallery in Central Park may be seen paintings from the noted artists of the world, while statues of note fill one large section of the building. Some of these sculptorings are the originals and some are exact reproductions. Many of these paintings and statues are entirely beyond my appreciation, but I certainly enjoy many of them. One large section of this building is devoted to a collection of musical instruments. Almost every nation and tribe of people on earth is represented in this collection. Many miniature reproductions of old Roman buildings, the Panama Canal, etc., makes a visit to this building really worth while in educational value. A visit to the Statue of Liberty is also of interest. This statue, as you will remember, was made in France and presented to this country. When mounted on its base, the statue is three hundred and six feet high and is located overlooking the harbor. It is at night, when I stand off at a distance and see the statue lighted up that a sense of its portended mission comes over me. Then, one feels his responsibility—his duty—of helping to make the world free, liberating all people, not with big guns and big ships, but with those things that indeed make them free.

However, immediately the thoughts of the present struggle engaging not only the bodies but even the souls of over thirty-eight millions of men make one feel his utter helplessness along any line of action. However, such thoughts as the latter are to our detriment and we must only give heed to those thoughts which lead to higher action. While temptations are more numerous and often of a more strenuous character than many of us who are in the service are accustomed to, yet I feel that the moral value of a lofty purpose and high ideals will enable us to resist those things which tend to degrade.

Trusting that all of us who are in the service will receive the prayers of the Saints, I remain,

Yours in bonds,
Company 7, Electrical Class.

Editors Herald: Who hath seen the prairie? Who hath stood on a bright autumn day, or observed from a flying passenger train the fields of golden grain? Little did man think a century ago that in the Far West where then roved the bison, the home of the red man, that this expansive plain would some day be a great wheat belt? But thus has it taken place. Cities have sprung up, and towns and villages dot the horizon. And as prosperity has visited the people of this land I sometimes wonder if they stop to consider what hand has extended to them their good fortune. Few, I am afraid, as to the population.

Nevertheless, family after family have been led to this northwestern country. Some from far and near. The Lord works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. Many have wondered for what reason they have been led. I have listened to many testify that the Almighty's hand has led them and they rejoice in the fact that they have found the true gospel. The God who created this land with all its fertility, has placed some of his chosen servants here. The glad tidings have been told, and many have been brought in to his fold and kingdom. We rejoice in the fact and herald the day when many more shall learn of his marvelous ways.

Realizing that the end is near, that the latter times have come, and as we see distress and sorrow falling upon the sons of earth, we feel assured it is time we should all be up and doing, no matter where we are, in the east, or in the far west, to the north or to the south.

We are surely living in a momentous day. We have reached that day the prophets of old desired that they might live in. While on one hand all seems dark and sorrowful, yet on the other in the light of the gospel we are made glad, and rejoice that the angel has come and restored the everlasting gospel to earth.

As cold weather has set in here, we look forward to the springtime when nature shall awaken from her sleep and put on her robe of beauty and splendor. So also should we all look forward and live for the millennial day, when Christ shall come in his splendor and great power, lifting the sad conditions that now prevail. I hope that we may all live for the blessings of God, both young and old, and receive a portion with the redeemed of earth at that day.

Your colaborer for the one faith,

W. D. BOWERMAN.

BUTMAN, MICHIGAN, October 29, 1917.

Editors Herald: Again I wish to use a small space in your columns. I certainly appreciate the HERALD and the much-needed advice we receive of a spiritual nature from the HERALD staff and others.

We have just lately divided our branch into two branches, the southern part being named Gladwin Branch, and organized by Apostle Curtis, and District President G. W. Burt, Brother George White being ordained at the time from a teacher to a priest and also voted in as presiding priest, or president of the Branch. Brethren D. Garbett was also voted as deacon of the branch.

I have been giving them my assistance for about a year in the gospel way and must say they have been very kind to me in ways that has benefited me temporally. I am thankful that God has blessed me with a desire to do right and a privilege to assist others to do right and that I might bring my family up with a desire to serve God. I know, as Brother Cornish says, the children raised by those in the gospel have more faith than their parents.

Ever praying for the success of the cause,

I am your brother and servant,

ISRAEL GOHEEN.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, October 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am sending reports of our recent Eastern Iowa conventions and conference. I hear all around, the expressions, "I never attended so good a conference before," and "It was the best I ever attended," and such expressions as these. It was indeed just splendid, from beginning to the end, and I know all enjoyed it very much from the least to the greatest, and I am glad I was there.

Your sister in the gospel,

CORA B. HART.

1416 Harrison Street.

NOWATA, OKLAHOMA, October 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a line from this part of the Lord's vineyard would be of some interest to your readers and as there has been very little reported from this part of Oklahoma I will give a brief history of this great latter-day work in this vicinity.

About ten years ago Sister Joseph V. Reed of Pennsylvania moved in this neighborhood. She and one daughter were the only members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. She saw an open door for service for our Master and made use of the opportunity by scattering tracts and literature among her friends and neighbors, later sending for Elder Lee Quick to hold a series of meetings. Brother Quick accepted the invitation and held his first meetings in a small schoolhouse about nine miles east of Nowata sometime in the spring of 1910. About once or twice a year since that time Elders Quick, Silvers and Budd have held meetings in this part of the State, in different schoolhouses, also of Nowata court house. Brother Quick organized a Sunday school about 1911, and with an occasional visit from one of the elders these have been the only church privileges the Saints have enjoyed. Last spring Brother Quick came and held a ten-day meeting, and as the membership had grown to about fifty in number, he advised us to make Nowata the place for our Sunday school and prayer meetings, and suggested Elder Roy S. Budd as our leader, promising to take up the matter with the proper ones at our late General Conference. Brother F. M. Smith granted Brother Budd the privilege of coming to work among us, arriving in June.

July 19, 1917, the Saints met at the home of Brother George H. Allen for prayer meeting and to consider the buying of a church which was for sale, known as the General

Baptist church. The meeting was presided over by Elders Roy S. Budd and Charles Fry, district president; Brother Budd and others had looked the property over and found it could be bought for $1,000. A goodly number of Saints were present and voted unanimously to buy the church. Roy S. Rudd, W. T. Hayworth and T. G. Williams were appointed a committee to buy and receive money, also given power to borrow the amount remaining due. By promise Saints raised $500 the same evening. Aid was solicited from outsiders and $350 more was raised. The deal was closed August 5, and by October 19 the remaining $150 was raised, house painted, papered, carpeted, new steps erected, bell put in belfry, also chairs for rostrum at a total cost of $1,133.40.

On October 19, 20, 21, Elders W. M. Aylor and Charles Fry came to hold meetings and consider the work here. They decided the membership and interest was such to justify the organization of a branch. Saints met Sunday at 2.30 p. m., Brethren Aylor and Fry presiding. The following were selected as branch officers: Elder Roy S. Budd, president; O. A. Duncan, priest; Mrs. W. T. Hayworth, clerk; Brother Aylor suggested Roy S. Budd as bishop's agent, which was approved. The remaining officers are to be filled in later. We are contemplating the organization of the Religio to be held each Friday evening, preceded by one half hour's practice in song.

The Lord has also blessed us with his Spirit from time to time, Brother Budd having been blessed with the gift of prophecy, encouraging the Saints, gave rebuke where necessary, calling some to prepare for the work and admonishing us to be faithful, promising us this to be a beginning of the great things we would enjoy if faithful. Thus the Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard are rejoicing in this great latter-day gospel.

Your sister,

MRS. W. T. HAYWORTH.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA, November 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: Not long ago a voice spoke to my soul and told me it was poor comfort I was getting from excusing myself when I had no excuse. While I wondered wherein I had excused myself, the same voice said: Seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness, and all these other things shall be added unto you.

I did not believe it was meant only for me, so I have told it to my children and am now telling it again. My real reason for writing was to send in five dollars for Christmas offering so it may be there in good time; please pass it along to Bishop McGuire.

Thanking God daily for the blessing received,

Yours for the truth,

MRS. NICHOLINE THOMSON.

From Here and There

Following the conference at Rock Creek, Illinois, near Adrian, Elders C. E. Willey and C. J. Smith have been holding a series of meetings in the church with good attendance and interest, though the bad weather has had its effect.

"God has wonderfully blessed me since I boldly took my stand and began lending my books and papers and tracts to my neighbors. In only one or two instances have I received cold treatment.—Florence Thompson, Manistique, Michigan." And there are many others who have had like experiences. It is a privilege offered to all of us.

From a personal letter from Bishop C. J. Hunt, we quote: "The work of the Holden Stake is progressing, and the last sixty days has been the best in financial returns the stake has ever had. In many ways I feel hopeful and greatly encouraged."

Notice to Texas Central District

In my recent trip to San Antonio, I had a good visit with Brother John Harp, who was elected president of our district last August. Brother Harp informs me that his throat is no better than it was at that time, and as he was in no condition to work in the district, he tendered me his resignation. Upon my return home, I received a letter from him, confirming this and requesting me to let the district know through the ever-ready columns of the HERALD. It is too bad that Brother Harp could not be with us, as we need some one to give his entire time to traveling in the district as president.

You all know that on account of the nature of my work, I am unable to get over the district, and as the responsibility of the president's office will fall upon my shoulders as vice president, I will have to take care of that work as best I can through correspondence with the branch presidents and others. If there is anything that anyone in the district wishes to take up with me, I will be glad to hear from them at any time.

As bishop's agent, I rejoice in the fact that you, as a whole, are recognizing your duty in the payment of your tithes. God is surely blessing you for this effort in keeping his law. As a result of your efforts, God's work is being helped gradually forward and you are given a personal interest that

MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER

The third edition of this booklet by Elder Daniel Macgregor is just off the press. It is bigger and better than ever. Many chapters have been absolutely rewritten and enriched by evidence hitherto unpublished.

Presents in a logical and absorbing manner an array of facts and figures garnered from the world's greatest and rarest publications of all ages and nations.

A convincing solution of the far-famed prophetic periods solved with the dawning of that illustrious year, 1830.

An arsenal of facts and figures which no up-to-date Latter Day Saint can be without. Just the thing for your neighbor.

Sets forth in a captivating manner all of the prominent features of the latter-day work and unlocks the treasury of Daniel and the Revelation as no other book does. Just the thing to meet Adventism in its distortion of the 1260, the 2300, and the 2520 days.

One of our antagonists has said: "It will deceive the very elect," while one of our missionaries avers that it has brought into the church in his district between fifty and sixty people.

The price is 35 cents each; 4 for $1, postpaid. Order of

Our Departed Ones

HORNER.—Barbara Allen Horner was born June 30, 1859, at Elmwood, Illinois. Died October 21, 1917, at her home in Nevada, Iowa. She leaves to mourn besides her husband, 5 children. Funeral services were conducted from her home in charge of D. T. Williams.

HINTZ.—Elizabeth Matilda Hintz was born in State Center Township, Marshall County, Iowa, November 27, 1870. Was a member of this church. Died October 20, 1917. Leaves to mourn 3 brothers, besides numerous other relatives. Funeral services were in charge of D. T. Williams, from the Saints' church, Rhodes, Iowa.

VICKERY.—Carl Lewis Vickery was born September 2, 1893, at Plano, Illinois; baptized September 2, 1901, by C. H. Burr. Married Rose Rouch, September 22, 1914. To this union one child was born, George Henry. Died September 11, 1917, at Hackney, Kansas. Leaves wife and child. Interment in Hackney cemetery after funeral services in United Brethren church, conducted by J. Arthur Davis.

LIVELY.—William Lively was born in Ontario, February 17, 1852; baptized at London, Ontario, by Augustus Dipper and confirmed by J. J. Cornish. Died June 6, 1917, at his home in Chatham, Ontario. Funeral in Saints' church, Chatham, sermon by R. D. Weaver. Stewart Lamont in charge. Brother Lively was a faithful Saint and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. His loving wife and children look forward to the time when they will join him in the realm of rest and peace.

FORDHAM.—Margaret Fordham, wife of Brother M. Fordham, of Lovell, Wyoming, was the oldest daughter of Brother Henry Pankey, of Santa Ana, California, and was born February 18, 1875, near Santa Ana, where she lived until 1907, when she married M. Fordham. She died October 23, 1917. Was a consistent and faithful member and for years gave her unstinted help towards establishing the church work. While others became disheartened and faltered, Sister Margaret quietly but unswervingly helped to keep up the church activities in her neighborhood. A good reward awaits her.

PETERSON.—Henry Roy Peterson, son of George and Hattie Peterson, was born at old Far West, near Cameron, Missouri, May 7, 1917. Died November 3 at same place. Those left to mourn are father, mother, 2 brothers, 6 sisters. Funeral sermon by J. T. Ford.

SEAWORTH.—William Evan Seaworth, only child of Mr. and Mrs. William Seaworth, was born at Fort Collins, March 24, 1917. Departed this life October 29, age 7 months and 5 days. Death due to bronchial pneumonia. Funeral at Hollowell's undertaking parlors. Sermon by George Bullard, assisted by W. E. Grubb. Interment at Grandview Cemetery.

PRATT.—Robert Pratt was born Fifeshire, Scotland, January 18, 1844. Married Marion Moise. To this union were born 8 children, 5 surviving to mourn their loss, with their mother and many other relatives. Died October 14, 1917, at Boone, Iowa. Services in charge of C. Malcor, sermon by D. T. Williams.

CANE.—Mary Helen Cane was born at Batesville, Arkansas, February 4, 1842. She has been a member of the church about forty years. Died October 22, 1917, at Kansas City, Missouri. Her remains were taken to Warrensburg, Missouri; funeral conducted from Saints' church by J. A. Tanner. Leaves to mourn 3 daughters and one son, and other relatives. She was a very faithful and self-sacrificing sister.

HUFFAKER.—Jane C. Huffaker was born July 15, 1855, at Culpepper, Virginia. She was a faithful member of the church at Clear Creek Branch. Died October 8, 1917, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Walter Pitcher, near Collins, Iowa. Leaves 4 children to mourn. The service was conducted from the home of Walter Pitcher, by D. T. Williams. Interment in Collins Cemetery.

BOOK OF MORMON.—We sell this book in various bindings, listed in our price list. The most popular editions are, No. 11, cloth, 90c; No. 12, full leather $1.30

HIS FIRST VENTURE AND THE SEQUEL.—A story by Estella Wight, editor of Stepping Stones and the "Religio's Arena." It tells about a country boy who was led astray by the lure of the city, but came back at last to loved ones—and the realization that "homely goodness" is the best thing after all. No. 369, cloth$.60

THE TRUTH DEFENDED.—In this answer to Davis H. Bays' "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," Heman C. Smith provides the reader with something more than intellectual entertainment—he not only excites but inspires the faculties. "The Truth" is so "defended" that the impartial critic is roused to unavoidable participation in the discussion greatly to his enlightenment. No. 304, paper, 50c; No. 305, cloth$.75

Buying Silence

The user of the "Silent Smith" buys, in addition to a writing machine—OFFICE QUIET.

Instead of the clatter of the ordinary typewriter, he hears the gentle "tap, tap," of the type against the paper—practically the only sound.

This result has been brought about by mechanical refinements. Ball bearings, lightness of touch, ease of operation and a minimum of noise—all help the operator to turn out neat, accurate written work.

Send for free booklet, "The Silent Smith." It has valuable information about typewriting and typewriters.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS

Now concerning spiritual things, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost. Now there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.—1 Corinthians 12: 1-11, Inspired Version.

Truly the above involves a wonderful promise, which is further elucidated in the succeeding chapters of this letter to the Corinthians. It is confirmed and revealed to us in these latter days in Doctrine and Covenants 46: 6, 7:

And again, to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, as it will be pleasing unto the same Lord, according as the Lord will, suiting his mercies according to the conditions of the children of men. And again, it is given by the Holy Ghost to some to know the diversities of operations, whether it be of God, that the manifestations of the Spirit may be given to every man to profit withal. And again, verily I say unto you, To some it is given, by the Spirit of God, the word of wisdom; to another it is given the word of knowledge, that all may be taught to be wise and to have knowledge. And again, to some it is given to have faith to be healed; and to others it is given to have faith to heal. And again, to some it is given the working of miracles; and to others it is given to prophesy, and to others the discerning of spirits. And again, it is given to some to speak with tongues, and to another it is given the interpretation of tongues: and all these gifts cometh from God, for the benefit of the children of God. And unto the bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint to watch over the church, and to be elders unto the church, are to have given unto them to discern all those gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing and yet be not of God.

It is a remarkable feature how since the restoration of the gospel in these last days, the work of the Spirit of God has been emphasized and reemphasized, and the teachings of the gospel have acted as leaven, so that many others are coming to see the great fundamental truths therein set forth.

Campbell Morgan, in The Spirit of God, remarked that more has been written in the past twenty-five years than in many centuries before, concerning the work of the Spirit of God. This book has been out some ten years and so this period should be dated back some forty years, as the years since then have, if anything, shown a fuller fruition than the earlier years of the past half century. Men are turning more and more to a realization of the deep underlying truth of the nature of man and of the workings therein of the Spirit of God.

Perhaps we have been inclined as a church to take some of these things too much for granted. There is a need of a great revival and a drawing nearer to God, that we may talk with him and he with us, and that we may have renewed our testimony, that we may know him as he is, and know that this work is of him.

Some movements have been almost entirely founded on the one factor, the healing of the sick by the application of a little knowledge of the law of healing. Other churches are beginning to take it up, as witness the Immanuel Movement; and others are also recognizing the therapeutic value of faith.

But how rich has been our outpouring, not only that our sick have been healed, but also the gift of faith to heal has been in our midst, so that men have been permitted to go forth devotedly to bestow this wonderful blessing upon others. How many times have our loved ones been raised up, when life has been despaired of. The writer believes that on at least two occasions it has been the power of God that has healed him and so prolonged his life. We have also witnessed many times this wonderful power of healing for the sake of others.

It is true, as some allege, that we ought not to make this the sole basis for our faith. The healing of the body is secondary to the healing of the soul. So the Master on various occasions in healing said, Thy sins are forgiven. So the apostles of the Master wrote in James 5: 16: "If he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." The healing is not alone of the body, but also of the mind and soul.

Herein does the healing power of God differ from all others. It is possible for a man to put his spirit upon a man and work a physical healing, but only the Spirit of God can heal not only the body, but also cleanse and purify the soul, and bring with the healing all good and only good. Thus our elders in administering do not strive to place their will or their power upon an individual, but seek only for the divine influx, for the Spirit of God to direct and heal. So they ask in humble, earnest prayer, that his power may be made manifest to the healing of the afflicted one, and his power only.

It may be true that he has given us power in ourselves, but it is not by our power, but by his almighty power and love, that the sick are healed. This follows a natural law as well as a divine promise. Also, we believe, it is given to us many times for our teaching, that we may better understand, not only through suffering, but through the power of God, which is given to us from time to time.

Then there is a gift of tongues and the interpretation of tongues; when a spirit comes upon us, not to overcome our wills, but to lift up our hearts with gladness, so we feel to sing in joy and praise his holy name. Such instances as we have been able to observe in our own experience have led us to believe that this is not a matter of opening our mouths and letting words come, but that we speak to our own edification, and know what we say, that the thought is clear to us, and not merely the pronouncement of meaningless sounds.

But it is not clear to all who hear. Therefore should one, either he who gives the tongue, or another, interpret, that the whole body may profit withal. (See 1 Corinthians 14: 27, 28.)

The church has also the voice of prophecy, which Paul places above the gift of tongues, because there one speaks directly so that all who hear may understand. This is, indeed, a wonderful experience, and such as to make man feel his smallness in the presence of the Divine, and yet the wonder and greatness of the love of God. How wonderful it is that time and again, one receives a clear impression and direction of the Spirit, arises and gives it utterance, only to find afterward that some one spoken to and admonished or exhorted was in trouble, or was praying earnestly for an answer. Many times has this occurred when it was beyond human power to know either the answer or the question. Yet the clear and positive answer was given, bringing with it an influence that convinces all that it is more than human. "Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak in tongues." (1 Corinthians 14: 39.)

Again we read: "Your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions, your sons and your daughters shall prophesy," as given in Joel. The Lord may direct and inspire us wonderfully in vision or dreams, and as in days of old he so manifested his purpose on many occasions, so in this age of the world does he from time to time manifest his great purpose in a like manner to his children, by the dream and open vision.

At times, also, the followers of God have received the visitations of angels. All the gifts and blessings of God are open to his children, if they will seek with faith.

Then as Moses found not the Lord in the thunder of the earthquake, but in the still small voice, and as the Master promised, that he would come and take his abode with us, so may we find in the still voice of wisdom and knowledge, a knowledge of things on earth and under the earth, and of things in heaven, and also wisdom and divine directions for our work. Above all else should we desire this gift of God that we may with wisdom and righteousness help to build up his work, and not through foolishness in any way hinder.

We hear at times, criticisms, that some do not esteem as they should the gifts of the Spirit. It is true that some have been misled, that is why to some is given the discerning of spirits. The fact that there exists counterfeits by no means reflects upon the great reality. There is a need for the discerning of spirits, so the Lord has placed it in the church.

Some one would interpret the gifts of wisdom and knowledge to be only such as are gained through school work. This is a grave mistake for God has set all these gifts in the church for his own wise purpose. Some think that school and college work can have nothing to do with these gifts; a few may even think that school work hinders them! but this is equally erroneous. He can and often does inspire us in study.

Some of our opponents point out some things which have been given in prophecy, that contradict the books of the church and so are evidently unwise or untrue. The fact that such may have occurred by no means reflects upon the great reality. It is recognized time and time again that there are evil spirits and evil forces as well as good.

The good is not manifest by a laying aside of all intelligence, and leaving our mind a blank. Quite the reverse. The glory of God is intelligence and in every instance we have so far been able to observe, it has been when the soul is reaching out the strongest for truth, and intelligence is the most alert, that our greatest manifestations and blessings come to us.

Yet we find at times counterfeits. In the HERALD of September 5 perhaps some features were set forth too briefly. No one ever acts foolishly under the inspiration of the Spirit of God. But a man or woman may enjoy the Spirit of God in a marked degree, and then turn around and in a short time afterwards act unwisely, acting in his or her own wisdom, or lack of it.

The instance given on page 844, on wheels, was from a nonmember of the church. We had received several such within a few months before printing that editorial, from nonmembers, which were equally ridiculous. But in fact counterfeits are often so sent. The Spirit of God is intelligence, and its work is to increase our intelligence.

But it is well established that when a person weakens his resistance, and throws himself open to anything, keeping the mind vacant, that anything may come. It is for this reason that certain officers of the church are promised the discernment of spirits. Because the mind may be thrown open to that which is inferior, by no means contradicts or affects in any way the ability for the mind to be open to that which may be from above. The gifts of the Spirit of God are well established. They should be sought with great earnestness, faith and prayer, yes, even by fasting and prayer. It is a great privilege, indeed, that our heavenly Father opens unto us.

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of anti-Christ, whereof, ye have heard that it would come; and even now it is already in the world. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world; therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.—1 John 4: 1-6, Inspired Version.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

The gospel has a cure for sore hearts but it seems almost powerless in the case of soreheads.

Sam Jones used to say that some people think that they are "preserved" when in fact they are only "pickled." And he added that when his old mother made preserves she sweetened them.

If one habitually tries to be kind and forbearing, as the gospel requires, some people conclude that he was just naturally "born that way" and can't help it. But the chances are he could develop as much vinegar and vitriol as anyone if he chose to do so.

Of a Sunday Brother A—— remarked, "I don't know whether to go to church or take a nap." And Sister A—— replied: "Why not do both?" But she was by no means the first person to study out that combination.

Sometimes the preacher is invited out to dinner and sits down to an overloaded table. His host insists that he shall eat long after his appetite is satisfied. This should be a warning to him not to attempt to force a long, six-course sermon upon an audience that at best is not very hungry.

The schoolmaster in the White House was a hard man to arouse. His patience wore the hot-heads out. The world came to think that his solemn warnings were empty threats. His smooth and placid countenance was as good a mask as the seamed and rugged face of the rail splitter, into whose class he now comes as Destiny's man in the hour of crisis. How comforting at this time to know that the mask covered a real man and a great man.

The Saints of Lamoni and Saint Louis remember Elder Charles Jones, a man of many pleasant eccentricities. Years ago he met two Utah elders in Saint Louis. At that time many of the Utah Mormon dignitaries had been lodged in jail by a stony-hearted Government because of their zeal in collecting hearthstones and swelling the census report. These elders therefore were complaining bitterly about their "persecutions." But Brother Jones comforted them thus: "You are mistaken, young gentlemen. You are not persecuted. Jesus was persecuted; you are prosecuted—see?"

It is strange how the old fear of the student and the dreamer persists. One is supposed to have his nose in a book, the other his head in the clouds. The clamor is for practical men. It may help us to recall that a schoolmaster sits in the White House and four fifths of the world looks to him for help and leadership. Across the water the visionary Welshman, David Lloyd-George, is perhaps more powerful than any other man in shaping the destiny of Great Britain.

Paul, possibly the greatest missionary that ever lived, was a great student as well as dreamer. He could quote the Greek poets or mend a tent. He walked with composure and dignity up the slopes of Mars Hill and with equal ease took charge of a ship at sea in a storm when the crew was in a blue funk. Joseph's brethren said, "Behold this dreamer cometh." Later he administered the affairs of Egypt. The truth of course is that these men were practical men—plus the dream, the study and the vision. And that is the kind of men we need in redeeming Zion.

Californians cull their oranges. The best oranges are sent out of the State to Eastern markets. The culls are sold for home consumption. A great many people act on the same principle. The best manners and kindest words are saved for strangers, and odds and ends of bad temper and ill manners reserved for the home circle. In the sense that charity is love, the old saying holds true, that charity should begin at home.

A wise old owl upon being told that he was bigger than the eagle, merely blinked his eyes. In his own mind he hooted at the idea. But he was too polite to say anything out loud, so he kept on catching mice and thinking his own thoughts. But a foolish sap-sucker receiving the same flattery immediately flew up in the air and imagined that he filled the whole heavens with the spread of his wings.

A modest man receiving great praise retains his own opinion of himself. But a vain man immediately swells up to fill the new specifications.

When an otherwise excellent brother becomes inflated and imagines that he is the very last word in the vocabulary, ordinary men are greatly tempted to puncture him. But what is our duty in the case? It is a problem. Does it call for Christian forbearance or "direct action"? What did Jesus do when the brethren got the bighead? Strangely enough, he began at the other extremity. He got down on his knees and washed their feet. And while he did it the men got smaller and smaller and smaller, until they were quite normal again. But Jesus was really a big man. If we should try that we might become very proud of our humility.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

First Inhabitants of South Dakota

Professor W. H. Over, of the University of South Dakota, has discovered what he believes to be traces of early inhabitants of that part of the country, who antedated the Arickara Indians, perhaps centuries before the advent of the white men. The conclusions were recently placed before a meeting of archæologists at the university, we learn from the Sioux City Journal.

Britain Favors Jewish State in Palestine

There is great rejoicing among the Zionists because the British Cabinet has officially declared in favor of the establishment of the Jews in Palestine as their national home. It has been believed for some time that such a feeling prevailed, and now that it has been officially proclaimed "there will come about a reunification of Jewish forces throughout the world such as has never been seen before," according to Jacob de Haas, secretary of the Provisional Zionist committee. In our next issue we will devote more space to this important event.

Lowering the Draft Age

There is being some discussion of lowering the age limits of men to be drafted for the Army from 21 to 19 years of age. While the HERALD as a rule avoids reference to politics, the value of education and of college work is so vital in the interests of our young manhood we feel we must protest against any such action. Our boys are of far more value in school and in college than they possibly could be in camp, or at the front. We hope for an early termination of the war, but if this should not occur, these men would still be more valuable two years hence for all purposes. If our much desired peace should be secured, they would be far better prepared for social service and reconstruction.

Rents During the War

We note in a letter from the People's News Service the statement that England has passed an act prohibiting the raising of rents during the period of the war. These houses that rent for thirty-five pounds a year or under in London, or in Scotland for thirty pounds a year or under and in other parts of Great Britain for twenty-six pounds a year or under. It thus applies to the poorer class of houses, those renting for less than fifteen dollars a month, for the protection of the poor. It is a matter presenting some difficulty, as landlords also have to pay higher charges and we know from observation that fair-minded landlords do not have a gold mine. It should be a movement for social justice and especially for protection of the poor.

THANKSGIVING DAY

President Wilson has issued a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to set aside a day in which to give thanks to God for the blessings that he has so graciously bestowed upon us.

In other nations this same appreciation of our heavenly Father's watchcare finds expression.

It is a fitting thing to acknowledge God's goodness and our dependence upon him. How futile would be our best efforts to raise corn or other grains if God did not supplement them. We could plow, we could harrow, sow, and cultivate, but what would that all amount to if God should withhold the sunshine and the rain?

While we are thus rejoicing we must remember that there are always some who are less fortunate and to whom God expects we should lend a helping hand. By doing so we not only bless them, but there is developed in us a greater love for humanity, we are disrobed of selfishness and the nature of God himself is expressed in us.

When we were helpless and needy, "He gave his only begotten Son." Ought we not then to give to those who need? "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

No individual can expect to enter the kingdom of heaven that becomes so absorbed in himself that he fails to see the needs of others.

There are legitimate and well organized channels through which we can dispense our charities, such as for the Saints' Homes, where many aged ones are cared for, who are either destitute or have no one to give them the kindly care that they should have; or the Children's Home, where sweet-faced, innocent little "lambs of God" are taken into our strong arms and protected until they are placed in the homes of God-fearing people; or the Sanitarium, where our afflicted ones are tenderly nursed back to health.

In Matthew 25: 35-40, Jesus indicated that by and by, when he comes with all the holy angels with him, that there would come before him a class of people to whom he would say, "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me." In answer to their inquiry as to when all these kindly acts had been performed, the Master replied, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these the least of my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Doubtless just such words of commendation will be said to us, if we, out of our abundance give to support our church institutions, the children's, and old folks' homes, and the Sanitarium.

Last year one brother sent us a check for one thousand dollars as a special Thanksgiving offering. We received it with gladness and offered a prayer of appreciation to our heavenly Father.

Soliciting your interest and financial support of these worthy institutions, I am

THE MOUND BUILDERS AND THE INDIANS--Part 2

BY C. W. CLARK

[The following article was written by Brother Clark for the Ohio Archæological and Historical Quarterly, and published in the April, 1917, number. It is reproduced here by kind permission of the editors of that publication, and though written primarily for those who have not espoused our faith, will be of much interest to our readers.—EDITORS.]

CLIFF DWELLERS

We are told that in the region of the Cliff Dwellers there were built estufas, or places of meeting where they held council. From all that can be learned there seems to be a sort of reverence for the estufas that indicated their use for some of those purposes by the Cliff Dwellers or Pueblo Indians.

We now approach this proposition: Who were these Cliff Dwellers, that seemed to make their homes in places that man could not approach easily and which were so carefully guarded? We are told by the Book of Mormon that there originated at one time a powerful league of men who desired to rule and live by plunder. These people were bound together by secret oaths not to reveal each other or their secrets, so that they might get gain without labor, but rather by exploitation of their fellow men. They were compelled finally to withdraw from their neighbors and dwell upon the borders of the land of the Nephites. They builded their fortifications in the rocks and made war with their former brethren—not after the manner of soldiers—nor even after the manner of the Lamanites, but sought to prey upon them and rob and slay. These people were known in the Book of Mormon as the Gadianton robbers. In speaking of them the book says:

They did commit murder and plunder and then they would retreat back into the mountains and into the wilderness and secret places, hiding themselves that they might not be discovered. . . . Now behold these robbers did make great havoc, yea even great destruction of Nephites and also among the people of the Lamanites. . . .

And it came to pass that the ninety and third year did also pass away in peace, save it were for the Gadianton robbers, who dwelt upon the mountains and who did infest the land, for so strong were their holds and their secret places that the people could not overpower them.

This history gives a reason for the remarkable cliff dwellings which have stood for centuries as silent proof of a people that must have builded for a purpose, and that purpose for secrecy and defense. Of course, these robbers must needs have been called upon to defend themselves, and we find that the book unveils a mystery so profound that we view with awe the structures that were left as silent evidence of the remarkable civilization, the result of careful study, and an organized effort that cannot be found to-day among the scattered remnants of this once powerful and cultured race. How often have we wished that

Out of the past their rocks would deign to tell,
The history of this bright and cultured man
The story which the bleak cliffs hold so well,
A culture which at best we only scan
By the remains which the dark past has left.
And as we view their cliffs and dell and field
We know that history is of much bereft
Unless of their past a record does reveal.

The Book of Mormon does give a record and explains their reason for so erecting marvelous cliff dwellings.

GREAT CATAclysm

We now approach a period in history that has a remarkable amount of tradition to support it—that is, the tradition of a great continental cataclysm which nearly obliterated the people and destroyed much that had been done in the way of building, etc. Baldwin, in his Ancient America, on page 176, makes reference to this event. Ignatius Donnelly, in Atlantis, on page 102, speaks of a tradition in the Popul Vul or Sacred Book of Central America, and I will quote some of the most descriptive portions:

They were engulfed and a resinous thickness descended from heaven, the face of the earth was obscured. . . . There was heard a great noise above their heads as if produced by fire.

And on page 126 of the same work we find in quoting De Bourbourg, that originally a part of the American Continent not now existing extended into the ocean, and that this portion of the continent was destroyed by frightful convulsions. Stephens, in his Travels in Yucatan, speaking of the ruins of Mayapas, and of a cave in particular, says that marine shells were in such a state as to indicate that the whole country, or at least a portion of it, had been once, possibly at no very remote period, overflowed by the sea. Bear in mind that it was in the neighborhood of Central America that the events referred to, which I shall quote later, relate.

Brasseur de Bourbourg, as recorded by Nadaillac, on pages 16 and 17, tells us that these traditions of this cataclysm exist in Mexico, Bolivia, and Peru. Also, he tells us that the region of Sierra Nevada, where he affirms that the discovery of implements and weapons were found at depths of several hundred feet, were witnesses that the remarkable convulsions of nature extended over this territory. And Bancroft, in volume four, page 647, of Native Races of the Pacific States says, in quoting Captain Walker: "A storm of fire had passed over the town, the stones are calcined by the flames. The very rock from which the chief building arises there gives traces of fusion, everything testifies to the intensity of the heat." And, finally, Susan E. Wallace, in her book On the Land of the Pueblos, portrays with remarkable force the history of an event, which has left marks that will not be obliterated, which must be described as something more than an earthquake, and of which the hot springs are the last of the active evidences.

Now let us see if we can determine the purpose that led up to this event. We believe that the history thereof will be best described by quoting sentences from the Book of Mormon itself, for we have arrived now at a time when the book tells us that Christ was crucified at Jerusalem. Simultaneous with the rending of the veil of the temple at Jerusalem came this catastrophe of which we shall quote:

And it came to pass in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, in the fourth day of the month, there arose a great storm, such an one as never had been known in all the land; and there was also a great and terrible tempest; and there was terrible thunder; insomuch as it did shake the whole earth as if it was about to divide asunder; and there was exceeding sharp lightnings, such as never had been known in all the land. And the city of Zarahemla did take fire; and the city of Moroni did sink into the depths of the sea, and the inhabitants thereof were drowned; and the earth was carried up upon the city of Moroni, that in the place of the city thereof, there became a great mountain; and there was a great and terrible destruction in the land southward. But behold, there was a more great and terrible destruction in the land northward: for behold, the whole face of the land was changed. . . . And many smooth places became rough, and many great and notable cities were sunk, and many were burned. . . . And there were some who were carried away in the whirlwinds. . . . And the face of the whole earth became deformed, because of the tempests; and the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the quaking of the earth. And behold, the rocks were rent in twain; yea, they were broken up upon the face of the whole earth, insomuch that they were found in broken fragments, and in seams, and in cracks, upon all face of the land. . . . For behold, they did last for about the space of about three hours; and it was said by some that the time was greater. . . . There was thick darkness upon all the face of the land. . . . And there was not any light seen, neither fire, nor glimmer, neither the sun, nor the moon, nor the stars, for so great were the mists of darkness which were upon the face of the land. And it came to pass that it did last for the space of three days, and there was no light seen; and there was great mourning, and howling, and weeping among all the people continually. . . . And in some places they were heard to say, Oh, that we had repented before this great and terrible day.—Chapter 4, Book of Nephi, Book of Mormon.

I do not wish to make any comments, but want to ask how much out of harmony with modern discovery is this little-understood and much-misrepresented Book of Mormon. Another quotation, worthy of citation, is found in New Light on the Great Pyramids, by Alfred Ross Parsons, as follows:

From the New York Herald, October 5, 1894: Word comes from Bogota that the remains of a prehistoric city have been discovered near the crater of the volcano of Purace in the Andes Mountains. Professor Gutierrez, who made excavations on the spot, found there the bones of a race of giants who attained the height of eight to ten feet. The buried city embraces hundreds of acres and contains the ruins of great buildings with immense granite columns, remains of an aqueduct in an almost perfect state of preservation have also been found.

How like the fate of the city Moronihah referred to! We leave the reader to judge for himself.

CHRIST'S VISIT TO AMERICAN CONTINENT

We now take up the subject of the tradition which would indicate that the Savior himself came to the American Continent. The Book of Mormon features this idea, and indicates that he here taught the same doctrine he did on the Eastern Continent, and for the same purpose. He also told the inhabitants that they were the people of whom it was said, "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold; they, too, must hear my voice." We do not wish to slight this subject, but lack of space compels us to treat the matter briefly, yet we wish to show it to be in harmony with the general traditions. We need but mention Lord Kingsborough's work wherein he quotes from Humboldt in regard to the Mexican Quetzalcoatl, who by tradition was born of a virgin without man by the power of divine will, and that the Son was both God and man; that he had existed, previous to his incarnation, from eternity; that he had descended to reform the world and was crucified for the sins of mankind.

We find also from the same work that the sign

Nahuy Olluy, or four earthquakes, was dedicated to Quetzalcoatl as a sign of his first coming to the Ancient Mexicans, and which sign they expected would accompany his second advent. Desire Charney in his Ancient Cities of the New World says that this great prophet, priest, and king departed for the east, promising to return to reign over them again. Nadaillac, on page 527, refers to a tradition that a white man wearing a long beard had taught them many good things and had disappeared to return to earth in about two thousand years, and finally Susan E. Wallace tells us in her book, The Land of the Pueblos, of the time when the savage hailed a white man as a child of the sun and brought their blind to have their eyes opened, and their sick that by laying on of hands they might be healed. Mothers brought their children for blessings, and all their traditions point to the second advent of this wonderful individual who would not fail to come and redeem his promise.

To-day we blush for shame when we think how the trusting savage was betrayed at the hands of those who sought only gold and territory, and who pushed back the natives of the soil from their former possessions, and we can only say, "O Civilization, what terrible crimes have been committed in your name!" And to-day the Red Man is the last remnant of a people who was once, as we believe, a righteous and intelligent race, but because of his disobedience was punished, much in the same manner as the descendants of the tribes of Jacob.

We believe from the quoted evidence it is at least a thought worthy of consideration that the Christ did visit this continent and leave with his people here the traditions which we have cited; a religion in conformity to that taught in the New Testament Scriptures.

MIGRATIONS NORTHWARD

Now as it is true that in the history of other nations evidence of revolutionary movement, particularly of a religious character, shows that influence to be but ephemeral; so our history points to the fact that after a few decades had passed these people turned to their former sinful ways and began to fight against each other. The Book of Mormon shows their course was northward. This is also sustained by Nadaillac, Baldwin, and Priest, while those of the higher type were gradually driven from their former habitations. They came through the Mississippi Valley, continually pressed on every hand by the Lamanites and dissenting Nephites, until they reached the valley of the Ohio and its tributaries, and there made their last stand against the intruders until, as their mute remains testify, they were overcome.

According to Book of Mormon chronology, about the year 400 the last of the faithful Nephites were overcome and slain. This data is also in harmony with modern research, and here—in this Ohio country—it was that fortifications were built in manner similar to those which I described previously, duplicating in earthworks many of the forms of defense known to them before being overrun by their enemies. As a crowded, fleeing nation has no time to build cities, the circular inclosures were no doubt places to defend their helpless ones, while their warriors fought within the square fort at the entrance or fort of protection; retreating to the circle only as a last resort, and dwelling, as they must have done, in tents. Their specimens of fortifications show art combined with strength, and are truly marvelous pieces of architecture.

ANCIENTS USED IRON AND STEEL

The Book of Mormon avers, and the writer believes, that sufficient evidence can be produced to show that these people were acquainted with the use of iron and steel. But on the contrary, many have asserted that because no such evidence was found its use was unknown; much in the same manner as one might assert that because he had never seen a steamship, there was no such production. William Pidgeon, in his traditions of the De Coe Dah, refers to the finding of pieces of copper with iron rust about it, as if the decayed object might have been the remains of a sword, and Donnelly, in his Atlantis, states that the ancient Peruvians worked excellent iron mines on the west shore of Lake Titicaca. It was remarkable, says Molina, that iron, which was thought unknown to the ancient Americans, had specific names in some of their tongues. He states also that the Mound Builders fashioned implements from meteoric iron.

Caleb Atwater, in his Archæologia Americana, as recorded in Admiral Brine's work, refers to a sword found in the mound at Circleville, the handle made of an elk's horn, but the article found showed an oxide which must have resulted from iron or steel. It is not surprising that nothing but oxide remains when we consider that a possible period of one thousand years had passed away before the white man came to this country, and then a long period intervened before investigators of the mounds could have revealed their contents. The same author states that in the same mound was found an oxide which undoubtedly resulted from a plate of iron.

EFFIGY MOUNDS

The remains of Mexico reveal many idols in the forms of animals, such as were worshiped in southern Asia and Egypt. These Mexican remains find their last expression in the effigy mounds of which the great Serpent Mound in Adams County is a type.

Perhaps it might be well to consider some of the evidences in favor of there having been at least two civilizations on this continent prior to the American Indian, the story of which is recorded in the Book of Mormon.

COMMON ORIGIN

William Pidgeon, in his tradition of the De Coe Dah (on page 176), says that the conclusion must be drawn that at least two distinct races occupied portions of the northwest territory, and that both races became ultimately extinct anterior to the occupation of the country by the present Indian race. Many modern investigators believe the Indians and Mound Builders had the same origin, but the same authorities are forced to admit a racial distinction between them. Pidgeon makes inferences, drawn from Indian traditions, that there was a great war between the Indians and Mound Builders, and that finally the Indian race predominated. Stephens and Catherwood, in volume 2, Harper and Brothers' edition of Central America, Chiapas and Yucatan, page 186, write as follows:

Comparing the remains of Santa Cruz del Quiche with those of Copan and Quirigua points out that there were no evidences of these places [cities] being built by the same people, but on the contrary all indications considering these remains point to the fact that Copan and Quirigua were cities of another race of much older date.

In volume 1 of Travels in Yucatan, page 304, speaking of Uxmal, the author says the building possesses a curious feature—it is erected over and completely incloses a smaller one of older date. Notice on the map the point of the Jaredite landing and their line of travels and there will be seen, by comparison with the Nephite camp, the relation of the two civilizations in the territory they covered; and how well the story in the Book of Mormon is verified by these discoveries.

THE HORSE AND OTHER ANIMALS ON THIS CONTINENT

Statements in the Columbia Encyclopedia and other works definitely testify that the horse existed on the American Continent in prehistoric times. This knowledge was first narrated in the Book of Mormon (1830). We are told further in this book that the Jaredites and Nephites were learned in fine workmanship of stone and wood, and every explorer who has visited the mines of Central America and Peru expresses surprise at the wonderful remains there observed. Admiral Brine, referring to a lintel found at Uxmal, says:

No attention has, however, been directed to the artisan qualities of the workman who shaped and fitted the lintels, which, however, proves that the workers in wood were as skillful as the masons. The lintels were made of wood harder than mahogany and it is doubtful if a good carpenter's plane could give them a smoother surface.

This quotation agrees with the fourth chapter, second book of Nephi, Book of Mormon, as follows:

And I did teach my people to build buildings, and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious ores, which were in great abundance.

Concerning the animals that were upon this continent, we find in the Book of Ether (4: 18-21) a statement as follows:

And the Lord began again to take the curse from off the land. . . . insomuch that they became exceeding rich, having all manner of fruit, and of grain, and of silks, and of fine linen, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious things, and also all manner of cattle, of oxen, and cows, and of sheep, and of swine, and of goats, and also many other kind of animals which were useful for the food of man; and they also had horses, and asses, and there were elephants, and cureloms, and cumoms: all of which were useful unto man, and more especially the elephants, and cureloms, and cumoms.

This statement refers to the first or Jaredite civilization, which became extinct before the year 600 B.C., and bears out the writer's idea that the people of the earlier civilization were the originators of the effigy mounds. Prescott, in his Prehistoric America, refers to the images and remains of the elephant and mastodon as found in various places and as the Book of Mormon was written from plates supposed to have been inscribed several centuries ago, it is possible that the mastodon may have been one of the animals to which reference is above made.

Nadaillac says on page 25: "Mixed up promiscuously with the human remains were found those of several animals, chiefly feline and cervine, still extant in some regions, together with others belonging to species which have now migrated or become extinct." On page 27 the same author refers to the fact that several species of animals have disappeared from the Western Hemisphere since the arrival of man, and this bears out the statements contained in the Book of Mormon. The above is also confirmed by articles in the National Geographic Magazine.

THE ONLY RECORD OF THESE PEOPLE

As we stand on the ancient battle fields in Ohio where, according to tradition, have perished two powerful civilizations, it is a source of much pleasure to the writer to note that at last there has appeared a record of these people, the study of which record we see agrees with authenticated accounts by scientific investigators, and that this record shows that the same divine providence which overshadowed the Hebrews in their migrations also protected the sons of Joseph and their posterity when faithful; and we can see how he has created of one blood all nations and has determined the bounds of their habitation.

This subject introduces itself into Ohio history not only because there are found in this State abundant records of the otherwise unfathomable past. Here the Indian pushed back the greater civilization and in turn was deprived of his great inheritance. But we believe that this is a matter of interest, inasmuch as the people who accept the Book of Mormon as corroborative evidence of the Bible, early in their career built a temple that still stands in Northern Ohio, known as the Kirtland Temple.

A STATEMENT OF CHURCH HISTORY

For the benefit of the readers of the Ohio State Archæological and Historical Quarterly, who may not be familiar with the relation of the Book of Mormon to the prehistoric earthworks of Ohio, and the relation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to the history of Ohio, a few words of explanation, in conclusion, are in order. In 1827 Joseph Smith, jr., then a young man, resident of Palmyra, New York, began his translation of the sacred writings on the gold plates, known as the Record of Mormon, which translation, (in addition to the Bible) constitutes (not only the faith and teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but also is) a religious history of the aborigines of America, as is brought out in the narrative statement of the article herewith written. In 1831 Smith moved with his followers to Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio. Here the members of the new sect rapidly increased in number and the building known as the Kirtland Temple was erected, a building still standing and the object of historic interest to innumerable visitors. Here the church thrived and was thoroughly organized, with Joseph Smith, jr., as its chief head. The name of the new sect adopted was, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

From Kirtland they went to Jackson County, Missouri. While there, religious persecution became intolerable, which forced them to make their departure. Their next place of settling was in Illinois. There they founded and built the city of Nauvoo. Again religious persecution became very intense. Joseph Smith was arrested on a pretense of treason. Of this charge he was acquitted. He was immediately rearrested on some false accusations. With his brother and two others, he was committed to jail without a hearing, although protest was offered by their counsel. While in jail, they were attacked by a drunken mob of about two hundred, which fired, killing Smith and his brother Hyrum, on June 27, 1844.

The iniquity of polygamy, as condemned in the Book of Mormon, was taught to be a great evil by Joseph Smith. Brigham Young, one of the disciples of the church, became the chief apostate and usurper, taking the leadership of the church without authority and taking such as would follow him, migrated to the wilds of Utah, at Salt Lake City, in the year 1852, eight years after the death of Smith.

Brigham Young instituted the nefarious doctrine of polygamy into the apostate Latter Day Saint Church, headquarters at Salt Lake City.

The original Latter Day Saint faith, as established by Joseph Smith, jr., was adhered to by bands and followers remaining or originating in various places in the Middle West. These representatives of the original church are strong and outspoken opponents of the doctrine and practice of polygamy. A portion of the original organization retained an existence in Kirtland and claimed the property as against the Utah branch. In 1880 the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as the eastern remnant of the true faith designated themselves, brought suit to affirm their title to the Kirtland Temple. The Utah Mormon church was made defendant. The decision of the Ohio court, Judge L. S. Sherman presiding, was not only that the Kirtland Temple belonged to the "reorganized" organization, but that the reorganization represented the true and lawful continuation of, and was successor to, the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, instituted in 1830, and was entitled in law to all its rights and property. The court also held that polygamy and kindred false doctrines were only promulgated and exclusively adopted by the church of Utah.

This Ohio trial and court decision therefore legally established the fact that while the church of Utah had departed from the faith, doctrine, and usages of the original church, and the clear teachings of the Book of Mormon, the Reorganized Church now existing in Ohio, and in other localities of the country, has never departed from the true principles and practices of the original church; and not only does the Ohio church abhor, but it denounces the doctrine of celestial marriages, plurality of wives, and Adam-God worship.

(Concluded.)

The American Hebrew is authority for the statement that forty per cent of the drafted men from New York City, assembled at Camp Upton, at Yaphank, Long Island, are Jews. At the present time, according to Colonel Cutler, there are more than fifty thousand Jews in the National Army. The Jewish Board for Welfare Work, an organization similar to the Y. M. C. A., are seeking to raise a million dollars to carry on their activities at the camps and cantonments.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL CHOIR

(Note.—This excellent paper was read by its author at the "Musical institute" at the late reunion of the Far West Stake, at Stewartville, Missouri, August 24, 1917. Sister Scott is one of the musical workers of the First Saint Joseph, Missouri, Branch, and is the daughter of Brother B. J. Scott, bishop of the Far West Stake. We urge that our readers endeavor to grasp the spiritual import of Sister Scott's message—that true choir service can best be had when attended by consecration.—Arthur H. Mills.)

It has been truly said that a man can rise no higher than his thought—that which motivates, directs, controls him—and the collective body can in no wise go beyond the thought-average of its individual units.

Choirs we have throughout this favored land without number, their membership ranging from those who demand and receive remuneration in a professional sense, to the volunteers, intent upon enjoying good music and at the same time lending their talents to the church to which they owe affiliation. As a church organization the former is to us unknown; our choirs are of the volunteer type only. Are they, or may they be classed among the most successful?

You are probably anticipating a treatment of tone-quality, good attack, intelligent phrasing, clear enunciation, and all that tends to really fine chorus singing. No doubt you are expecting suggestions upon ways and means of attaining these. But while technic is by no means to be disparaged, it should be added to heart qualifications, which are essential to true choir efficiency.

What is a choir? A body of singers trained to conduct the musical part of a church service? Yes; and more. It at once assumes the double responsibility of constituting a part of the worshiping congregation and a part of the service itself, and if it proves the power it should, individually its members must be imbued with the spirit of reverence and feel the need of assisting in creating a worshipful atmosphere, their very conduct having no small part therein. They lead the congregational singing;—and here permit me to make an appeal for more attention to this feature, for the song response of all the worshipers generates a devotional spirit which flows from heart to heart and better fits the assembly for the word-message which awaits delivery. In their anthems their attempt should be to increase this religious fervor, to try to lead the mind and the heart heavenward, to nobler aims and higher purposes.

How can we do this if our hearts and minds are not attuned to these lofty endeavors?

Have you ever listened to a sermon wherein it seemed the minister was simply reading another's thoughts, or giving the digest of the research of various writers? Contrast that with the message of the man who declares it with the conviction of knowing whereof he speaks. Did it ever occur to you that to sing with conviction we must know whereof we sing? We must put our very souls into the rendition of the text.

When Professor Rosenberg, conductor of the Kansas City Symphony Chorus, first rehearsed our combined Independence choirs preparatory to their joining his big chorus in the rendition of "The Messiah," last Christmas, he was profoundly impressed, and said: "You people sing as if you understand this masterpiece; as though you believe it!" and in the general rehearsal held us up before his own voices as exponents of singing with understanding. We might have added, with the spirit and the understanding.

Choir leaders often experience the discouragement of slackened interest, decreased attendance, half-hearted support at regular services. We hear much of the indifferent, the over-sensitive, and the passive choir member. We sometimes learn of marked ability that must be entreated, and there have been instances of solo, organ, and chorister "ambitionists" whose influence has been demoralizing to the body; but in every choir there is an ever-reliable, stanch, and steadfast element upon whom the chorister, the branch, and the Lord himself can depend. We know how earnest and sincere are the efforts of these to assimilate the vacillating membership—social events; study sessions; special programs giving expression to individual attainment and including secular choruses which well-nigh impel attendance, are scheduled; more interesting anthems, cantatas, and where ability justifies, oratorios, are introduced. Interest is increased, and when the enthusiasm attendant on these special features subsides, oftentimes the "ever faithful" have an added one or two.

What of those who remain irregular, indifferent, passive? "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." This element has failed to fathom the spirit of true choir activity; they have not grasped the magnitude of its possibilities nor realized the opportunities which it lays before them.

What is a choir? Review its purpose, as given; and a sincere heart, a nature striving to be true to God and man, seem essential, for if the heart and mind are not attuned to these lofty endeavors, if the God-given talent is not consecrated to the highest ideals, the musical product is a mere combination of tone whose pleasing quality is dependent upon the technic, previously mentioned. We need reverent, consecrated singers if the true spirit of the gospel is to be wafted to the audience from the choir loft.

A man can rise no higher than his thought; the altitudes reached by the collective body are dependent upon the thought-average of its individual units.

To the choir which is motivated by a constant desire to fulfill its mission of elevating the souls of its hearers, bringing them nearer to the great Master-Musician, gaining inspiration and broadening their own vision in the effort, we ascribe the distinction of being the most successful. OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR

[Mr. Spargo is one of the ablest American writers on Socialism. He has been a strong antimilitarist, and for that very reason is opposed to German military domination. When he left the Socialist Party three months ago, it was because that party was, as he said; "committed to a program essentially unneutral, un-American, and pro-German."—Editors of the Outlook.]

I have been asked by the secretary of the American Union Against Militarism (a gentleman whom I very highly respect) to give my opinion on how our Government should deal with the problem presented by that very difficult person, the "conscientious objector"—the man of military age who on religious or humanitarian grounds refuses to participate in war, even when drafted.

As an antimilitarist, long identified with the pacifist movement, I have a very keen sympathy with the great moral revolt against war which inspires the conscientious objector. I am not insensible to the gravity of the problem which his conscience forces upon the attention of the Government. I confess, however, that I should find it easier to offer some suggestion towards a solution of the problem if the American Union Against Militarism, or some other competent authority, would tell me how the genuine conscientious objector is to be distinguished from the horde of pretenders who adopt the language of conscience as a subterfuge. The duty-dodging slacker, self-indulgent and viciously indifferent to the social welfare, finds no difficulty in claiming that his objection to military service comes from a hypersensitive conscience. The anarchist, with his enmity to organized society, finds it easy to masquerade as a conscientious objector. The craven coward seizes upon the excuse of conscience to protect him from the contempt of his fellow men. If we grant that some provision should be made to exempt the honest, conscientious objector, how, in practice, is he to be identified, so that his privileges shall not be seized by a host of others eager to secure immunity from the burdens of citizenship?

This is no mere cavil. It is, indeed, a matter of very great importance. The Quakers have already found it necessary to protect themselves against the efforts of slackers to gain admission to the Society of Friends as a means of securing exemption from the draft. According to Mr. James Wood, President of the New York Society of Friends, "duty-dodging young men" have sought admission "in extraordinary numbers." The society adopted a resolution "advising" young men of conscript age to postpone coming into the Society of Friends until after the war. Mr. Wood has said:

The Friends realize the tremendous responsibility placed on them by exemption from military duty. We do not believe in killing our fellow men, but we will not stand for slacking. No Friend will fail in his duty at this time of crisis when the world is torn and bleeding. We love our country and will help by doing constructive work.

Already the various meetings have been besieged by young men seeking admission into the Society. Some of them, we feel, are obviously "slackers," seeking to hide behind the cloak of Quakerism. They want conveniently to become Friends and dodge their duty. We will not stand for that. We purpose to see that the exemption granted us is not abused. This is the object of the resolution. . . . By its text we "advise" young men of conscript age to postpone coming into the Society of Friends until after the war. I used "advise" advisedly, however. That's a polite way of saying they will not be allowed to join the society. It will, in effect, be ironclad, and no "slacker" will find refuge among the Friends of New York and Vermont.

In support of the claim for the exemption from military duty of those whose consciences will not permit them to perform such duty, the democratic principle of the protection of the rights of minorities is invoked. As a Socialist I cheerfully admit that the modern conception of democracy includes an increasing regard for minorities and their protection against the ruling majorities. This fact is one of the great assurances that the world can trust democracy to be just and zealous in its regard for freedom. But it must not be supposed that democracy is compatible with the admission of the rights of minorities to do as they please. Minorities have, and can have, no rights which conflict with the rights of the majority. No organized society which hopes to endure can ever admit the right of any minority to persist in conduct which imperils the majority, restricts its essential liberties, or makes impossible the orderly achievement of its just aims.

It has long been the practice of the most democratic nations to exempt from military service the members of certain religious bodies, notably the Quakers, whose religion forbids them to bear arms even in wars of self-defense. In general, the men who have sought exemption from actual military service upon religious grounds have harbored no hostility toward the state and attempted no revolutionary upheaval. They have been willing to perform useful noncombatant service under either military or civil authority. As a rule, they have accepted service which involved some risk or discomfort, such as caring for the wounded in military hospitals, showing that they were not seeking their own comfort and safety under the cloak of religion. Some have carried their scruples so far as to refuse even noncombatant service under direct control of the military authorities, on the ground that such service is inevitably a part of the work of conducting warfare. They have been permitted to choose as a substitute some noncombatant service, vitally necessary to the national well-being, but not directly connected with military operations or subject to the rule of the military authorities.

It must be borne in mind that by consenting to such arrangements the state does not recognize the right of citizens to such special consideration on account of their religious scruples and beliefs. It is a privilege which the state can well afford to permit its citizens to enjoy as a general rule. Efficient warfare requires enormous industrial and agricultural production, and economic service is generally as valuable to a warring nation as military service. So long as there are enough men available to bear arms, the democratic state can well afford to indulge the scruples of its citizens by letting them perform noncombatant service, either directly for the army, under military authorities, or in occupations which are not directly connected with actual warfare nor under the direction of the military commanders.

If, however, there should be a deficiency of soldiers, so that the exemption of men of military age able to bear arms would imperil the national cause, the state could not afford to grant exemption to such men, even for religious reasons. It could not admit the right of the minority to make impossible the orderly achievement of the just aims of the majority. The state in such circumstances, must regard the religious scruples of the minority as of no weight. Even the measures of exemption granted to the Quakers are conditional privileges which the state has at all times the right to revoke.

It is easy to understand the man whose conscience does not permit him to take up arms and fight, but who loyally desires to serve his country in her peril and need by doing some noncombatant work. Even though it may appear to be a rather low ethical standard which leads him to throw the burden of his share of the repellant tasks upon others and to insist upon his own moral estimate against that of the majority of his fellows, it is possible to sympathize with such a man. It is even possible . . . to admire the man if by deeds of courage and devotion, as many English Quakers have done in Red Cross work, or by such work as the young American Quakers are doing in France now in restoring the recovered villages and towns, he proves through service and sacrifice his love for country and humanity.

But the conscientious objector whose moral scruples have become a political problem is not of this type. The processes of his moral reasoning are not direct and intelligible, but as devious and subtle as those of a German bureaucrat. His conscientious objection to the use of force and the taking of life does not generally prevent him from sympathizing with the violence of syndicalists, saboteurs, Sinn Feiners, and other exemplars of social terrorism. Among the hundreds of conscientious objectors I have known there are very few who have not defended and even glorified the use of force when directed against organized society. It is difficult for the ordinary man, possessed of a common, everyday conscience, to understand by what process of moral reasoning men condone the Dublin insurrection with its mad use of armed force and glorify it as a "noble dramatic gesture," and then profess to hold conscientious objections against the use of armed force. Is it mere cynicism to suggest that candid analysis would reveal the fact that their real objection is not to the use of force per se, but to its use to preserve organized society?

The typical conscientious objector refuses not only to bear arms, but also to perform noncombatant service, even where this is carried on under the direction of some civil authority and is not directly connected with military undertakings. He argues that to engage in any occupation which strengthens the power of the nation in time of war, either under compulsion or by voluntary agreement, would be in effect aiding the nation to make war. Therefore his "conscience" makes him refuse to render such service. Because efficient agricultural production adds to the fighting efficiency of the nation he cannot agree to work on a farm. For the same reason he cannot accept employment as a railway worker, a telegraph operator, or a miner. Logically he cannot do any useful, necessary labor at all, since all such labor efficiently performed adds to the sum of national prowess available for war purposes.

Conscience is sternly logical and impatient of compromises. The illogical and devious compromises and evasions of the typical conscientious objector are the result of caprice, not of conscience. They have no rational ethical basis. To refuse to perform labor because that labor adds to the nation's weapons of force, and to consent to the payment of taxes, which have the same effect, is not the result of the logical application of great principles, but of irrational and capricious choice. To honor the municipal police force, whose duty is to kill in certain emergencies, while holding the soldier in dishonor because in certain emergencies he too must kill, is not logically sound or morally defensible.

If we accept as a principle of democracy the right of the citizen to exemption, for reasons of conscience and individual moral judgment, from all service of military value, whether combatant or noncombatant, upon what grounds can we deny his claim to exemption from taxation for military purposes? And when we have established the precedent in connection with the military and naval forces, how shall we deny the claims of the anarchist and the dive-keeper to exemption from duty of supporting the police force by service or by tax, provided they make their appeal in the name of "conscience"? On what grounds shall we deny the claim of the "conscientious" disbeliever in medicine and medical science to exemption from the duties which the public health authorities impose upon the citizens?

These several claims are equally valid and equally preposterous. The whole philosophy of the conscientious objector is unsound and incompatible with any reasoned system of social ethics. It is subversive of the very existence of organized society to exempt citizens from the fundamental laws generally approved because those laws do not meet with their individual approbation. That way lies, not democracy, but disintegrating anarchy. It is strange, indeed, that men and women who call themselves socialists should be so blind to the necessary implications of their own faith as to accept this principle so alien to democracy and to socialism. There can never be a socialist state of society until the supremacy of the collective will and purpose is established beyond all question. The theory that the moral qualms of individuals gives them a claim to exemption from the scheme of things approved by the collective moral and intellectual judgments of the majority must, if acted upon, destroy all possibility of achieving socialism.

Suppose we carry the idea of the exemption of conscientious objectors over into the social struggle, the war of classes. The members of a labor union decide upon a strike for the attainment of certain aims. There is, however, a small dissenting minority opposed to the strike on moral grounds. The members of this group argue with a certain seductive plausibility that a strike is really a form of war and an appeal to force instead of to sweet reasonableness. They argue, further, that strikes provoke bitterness and hatred among those who ought to love one another. For these reasons they object to the strike and claim exemption from the resolution ordering all members of the union to strike; to avoid offense to their consciences they ask to be permitted to remain at work. Does anybody believe that such a plea would be granted, or that the socialist would favor granting it?

Democracy wisely and properly permits the individual a wide range of choice in the service he performs, whether in peace or war. That freedom of choice makes for efficiency because men will, on the whole, give their best in service of their own choosing. But this freedom of the individual to choose his own task is not absolute; it is limited by the need of the state and its ultimate authority. Men are not free to insist on being hospital orderlies in war time if there is no room for more hospital orderlies. They are not free to refuse to bear arms if there is a dearth of soldiers. No individual moral judgment or prejudice can ever confer such a right, and the claim to such a right is fundamentally immoral, even if made in the name of religion. No minority can ever be permitted to coerce the majority, or to prevent the realization of its deliberated purposes and policies.

So much we may say with certitude concerning the moral principles involved. The issue is clear and unmistakable. . . . —John Spargo, in The Outlook, September 26, 1917.

CHURCHES CAN HELP SAVE COAL

EMERGENCY FUEL FROM THE FARM WOODLAND TO HELP THE WAR SITUATION

Many churches, including some rural churches, could help the fuel situation by using wood for heating, says the United States Department of Agriculture, which advocates the substitution of wood from the farm woodlot for coal, in these days of shortage, wherever practicable.

For heating churches, the department points out that wood has some obvious advantages, because the heat is required only occasionally and is then wanted in large volume at short notice. After the period of required warmth is over, it is desirable that the heat should die down as soon as possible. All these qualities are obtainable with wood as with no other fuel.

CORD TO A TON

In heating value, one cord of the best woods is said to be equal to one ton of hard coal, while a cord of some of the softer woods equals a ton of soft coal. Thus if the consumer can buy coal at $8 a ton, it would not pay him to burn wood at the same price a cord, because coal is the more convenient fuel. But if the shortage of coal becomes really acute, as seems likely, people living in wooded regions will have a great advantage over those living in the prairie and plains States, especially if they have a supply already dry. In fact, it may become a patriotic service to burn wood in order to relieve coal for the war industries and for the people in sections wholly dependent on coal.

The whole question of wood for fuel is discussed in a publication entitled "Emergency Fuel from the Farm Woodlot," which may be obtained by asking the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, District of Columbia, for Circular 79.

The Country Choir

Too much cannot be said in favor of the development and support of the country church choir; for if there is a musical activity that needs help and encouragement, it is the choir of the rural or country town church.

The importance of the country church choir has been sadly underestimated. A census of the various country churches would probably bring to light some surprising conditions and would in all probability reveal the fact that in very few country branches would there be found anything more than casual attention to choir work as a feature of worship. Many country branches have no choirs at all, content to get along with the mere rendition of a limited number of time-worn hymns by the congregation, in a more or less half-hearted, ill-fashioned way, and often sung in a manner tending to depress rather than elevate the devotional spirit of both preacher and congregation. Other country churches, fewer still in number, have bodies of singers who occupy seats of comparative prominence before the congregation and "take the lead" in the singing of the hymns. Their efforts generally result in a betterment of congregational singing, for they make a fairly serious effort to improve themselves and render creditable service. A few country choirs have understood the real importance of their service to the church and have striven not only to make their work more effective, but to enlarge their capabilities. We must respectfully make our best bow to such choirs, for they are doing God's service itself, elevating their churches in a degree not realized, and laying up for themselves "treasures in heaven."

It is very important that every rural or country town branch have a choir and that this choir be supported and encouraged by the membership of the branch. It is impossible, within the confines of an editorial, to enumerate all the benefits that accrue to the branch from a good choir, or to enlarge particularly upon any one of them. If the work of the choir is unimportant, why did God so particularly enjoin it upon his people? A good choir will render the service far more attractive and beautiful. This alone would amply justify the existence and work of the choir. But it is the least of the good things accomplished. The benefits to the congregation of added culture and increased spirituality are far more important, and are too great to estimate.

Practically every country church may have a choir and enjoy some of the benefits of choir work. In branches where a choir does not already exist, those best qualified for its service should be organized into a choir and duly put in charge of the song service of the branch. In small branches where material may be scarce, discouragement should not necessarily exist. Such material as can be found should be put into service and should endeavor to perform well its part in the confident hope that others will in time come to their assistance. They should be ever mindful of the fact that God has enjoined the burden of the song service upon those who are qualified to carry it. (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.) Shall we fail to heed his commands?

There is a very marked tendency in many country branches to conclude that because they are country branches therefore but little is possible for them in the way of choir work. Their fallacious logic runs something like this: Country branches do not have much in the way of choirs. We are a country branch. Therefore, we cannot have a good choir. As a result of such reasoning (!) many country branches do not try to do much.

It is a serious mistake. Very few country churches but what could achieve creditable results if the proper continuous effort was put forth. We have seen too many good choirs in country churches, that have developed as a result of wise, faithful effort, to believe that such a conclusion is a correct one.

The country church needs a choir, and it needs it more than it realizes. Not only does it need a choir for the beautifying of the church service, but that the gospel may have an added luster to the world, and the spiritual status of the members may be enlarged.

Greetings from the General Chorister

A short time before we were ready to "go to press," that is send in our "copy" to the HERALD for this issue of The Staff, we received a telegram from the General Chorister, Brother Hoxie, asking that his greetings be extended to the choir singers of the church. As we would be unable to express Brother Hoxie's sentiments with the same fervor he has employed, we copy the telegram entire, as follows:

"NEW YORK CITY, November 7, 1917.

"ARTHUR H. MILLS,

"Extend my greetings in The Staff to the singers of Israel, urging them to keep on the firing line, working day and night for the redemption of Zion. My many activities prevent lengthy epistle. Am redoubling my energies for the work's sake. It is a wonderful age and a still more wonderful hour, and let us take every advantage of it to-day. Through the Little Sioux District

We have but shortly returned from a trip through this very excellent district in the interest of the choir movement work. The trip was made partly in compliance with a promise made at the preceding reunion to return and visit some of the several branches, and partly to ascertain at first hand for our own information what would be the musical condition of the branches in one of the representative districts of the church.

We visited seven of the eleven branches of the district and were most kindly received and cared for wherever we went. In each branch we found good faithful children of God who were eager to assist us in the work of the church. At each of the branches visited we met with the choir, and in mutual association discussed its various problems and counseled with the members regarding work and plans.

We found the Saints and choir members of the district eager to know concerning both their duties and the work of the choir movement, and earnestly desiring to get in the line of advancement in the musical service of the church. We found the several choirs to be at least equal to the general average, with abundant talent for future development.

The best thing we found in the district, that which was most promising for future prosperity and growth, is a movement that the district chorister and choirs of every district might well emulate, and it furnishes the reason for this article. The district chorister, Brother Fred Fry, and his two energetic associates, Sisters Ollie Derry and Clara Bell Lane, have formed an association in which all the choirs of the district are de jure members. The plan is for all the separate choirs to work in parallel lines, the same material being used by each choir at the same time. Then, once each month, these choirs come together at one of the central branches and en masse sing the material practiced separately. Choir problems and interests are to be considered at these meetings in the spirit of mutual helpfulness.

It is anticipated that this association will prove available for service as the "reunion choir" at the next reunion of the district, to be held at Logan, Iowa, and the material practiced rendered for the benefit and enjoyment of all.

We predict much in the way of growth and development for the choir work of this district if their efforts are faithfully continued.

The New Anthems for Next General Conference

Elsewhere in this issue of The Staff will be found announcement from our General Chorister, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, containing list of anthems for use at our next General Conference. This list will be of interest to the choristers of the church, who have doubtless been expectantly watching for its appearance.

The writer has concluded to offer, unsolicited, and independent of Brother Hoxie's announcement, his individual comment upon this list of anthems. He feels that a word from him may enable choristers and choir workers to better understand this new series of anthems and thereby order for their needs more intelligently. He has given each anthem careful examination and believes he is able to intelligently advise concerning all of them.

The compilation of this new series has involved more than ordinary time, labor, and diligent search, and Brother Hoxie has gone to unusual lengths to select anthems of a much easier grade than in previous lists, and at the same time maintain the desired standard of excellence. We feel that he has been eminently successful, despite the difficulties of the task.

There has been some complaint in the past that the anthems of previous conference issues were mostly too difficult for the ordinary church choir. In this connection it might be well to remind ourselves that the terms ordinary and average are relative ones, and that what is "ordinary" or "average" from one viewpoint might be either above or below those conditions when regarded from other angles. Alas, it should be borne in mind that in the selection of thoroughly good anthems of unquestionable standard, also suited to the capacities of the "ordinary" choir, the task is doubly difficult. However, the anthems of the 1918 series can be mastered by almost any of the average choirs of the church; those choirs that have been singing anthems regularly of about an ordinary grade of difficulty.

These anthems are not merely intended for use at the next General Conference and then laid aside. They are good, wholesome anthems, suitable for use in all regular services of the church, and they will make a valuable addition to the repertoire of any choir.

As stated before, the terms ordinary and average are relative, and probably some of our choirs will be in doubt as to whether they would fall in such class or could handle these anthems. To such we would say that the risk involved is almost nothing. The anthems are graded on the list announced as to degree of difficulty, on the scale of grade one being the easiest and grade seven the most difficult. Let those choirs that are in doubt order one or two of the easiest grades. Then if no difficulty is experienced in mastering them, others of the same or more difficult grades may be ordered. In this way each choir may select for its own needs with practically no risk.

We urge that the choirs of the church adopt and secure the anthems of the new 1918 series. They are anthems of more than ordinary merit and beauty, carefully selected for the needs of our work.

The 1918 Series Conference Anthems

You will note below a list of anthems selected for rendition at the General Conference of 1918, to be held at Independence, Missouri. We have spared no pains to make this the most interesting collection that has ever been selected. Conditions are such that it was impossible to consider the publishing of this series in book form, but special prices have been made by the publishers if purchased in octavo form. These prices will be mailed upon application to the general secretary of the choir movement, Brother Arthur H. Mills, 1514 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri.

The oratorio, "Elijah," by Mendelssohn, is included in this year's program for conference rendition, and we urge those who anticipate joining the large special chorus for this work, to take up the study of this oratorio without delay, in order that they may be counted among the fortunate ones who are privileged to appear in this noteworthy production. Begin now, as the work is difficult, and requires special and serious application. Prices for the oratorio, bound in paper, can be had from the general secretary.

The following is the list of anthems for the 1918 General Conference, in which the grade of difficulty, serial number, title, author, and list price are given in order noted. Name of publisher is given in parenthesis.

The Far West Stake Musical Institute

Sister Elma Scott, chorister of the Far West Stake, is intensely desirous of developing the musical interests in her charge, and since her induction into that office has introduced some excellent policies and ideas that cannot fail to be productive of results. The latest enterprising venture is so noteworthy that we have thought best to bring it to the attention of musical workers through The Staff columns, recommending it to them for emulation as well as consideration. The program of this "musical institute," held on Sunday, November 11, at the Saint Joseph, Missouri, First Branch church, is hereby given:

9.30 a. m., Sunday school session, special music by the Zion's Star Sunday school orchestra.

11 a. m., Address, "Music; its place in our church work and our lives," by Arthur H. Mills, Assistant General Chorister.

2.30 p. m., Institute work; subjects treated: 1. "How to train and maintain a church choir," by Edward C. Bell, Assistant General Chorister. 2. (a) "The organist's responsibility in congregational singing." (b) "The organist's contribution to choir success," by Edna Christiansen. 3. "The choir and the congregation," Notes from the congregation, by Ruby Jackson Hitch. 4. "The pulpit speaks," by Elder Scott. 5. Round table in charge of Brother Mills.

7.45 p. m., Program by the combined choirs of the stake: Prelude, selected.

Anthem, "March! March!" Arthur Farwell, by Choir.
Solo, "Consider and hear me," Alfred Wooles, by Miss Athena Scott.

Chorus, "Come unto me," W. Coenen, by Ladies' Chorus.
Solo, "The Lord is my light," Allitsen, by Paul H. Pugsley.
Anthem, "O, pray for the peace of Jerusalem," James Knox, by Choir.

Offertory, selected.
Chorus, "Deep river," Burleigh, by Choir.
Solo, "Hear my cry," Oley Speaks, by Grace Mason-Woodside.

Trio, "Lift mine eyes," from "Elijah," Mendelssohn, by Mrs. C. E. Haden, Mildred Nesser, Mrs. H. W. Tilden.

Chorus, "He watching over Israel," from "Elijah," Mendelssohn, by Choir.

Postlude, selected.
Mrs. Elma Scott, chorister.
Miss Edna Christiansen, organist.

We will make but one comment: The work of this institute was very enjoyable, as well as profitable, and the individual and collective numbers of the program were most excellently rendered.

About Our Boys

In the Ensign of November 8 appears a copy of the letter Brother T. W. Williams as monitor of a boys' club, sent out to the members, together with a copy of their constitution and by-laws. We hope everyone interested in banding our boys together for good, will read this letter, and imbibe of its real stimulating helpfulness. The intimate interest shown in the affairs which will appeal to the boys, the fatherly or, rather, elder-brotherly attitude taken towards the boys themselves, and the real insight into their needs and desires, all are of such a nature as will bind the boys most closely to their leader, and will win for him their allegiance and co-operation.

The rules adopted by the "Boosters" of Southern California, may prove suggestive to many another group in the church, as will also the constitution and by-laws submitted by Brother D. J. Krahl, president of the Holden Stake, which will be found elsewhere in this column. Brother Krahl, in the letter accompanying this document, expresses his very great interest in the boys' movement in the church, and adds:

"We need some one, however, who will give his entire time to this movement in the branches. It needs to be maintained, and cannot unless there be a maintainer—a leader. We need one here. Some one might suggest that the branch president could do this; but my experience has been that branch presidents can do considerable towards standing behind those who are pushing the movement along, but, owing to the pressure of the other phases of the work they should be doing, they cannot give the special attention and time needed in this direction to make it count."

God speed the day when a man endowed with the gift and the learning, as well as the burning heart's desire, shall be commissioned to make this work of reclaiming, holding, awakening, directing, and inspiring our young men his sole aim and purpose!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Constitution and By-Laws of a Boys' Club

Name. This organization shall be known as _____.

Aim and Purpose. The aim and purpose of this organization is to further physical, social, mental, and spiritual development of boys and young men, under the fostering care of the church.

Membership. Any man over ten years of age who is of good moral character and is recommended by the executive committee and pays the membership fee and monthly dues shall be eligible to membership in this association and shall be received by majority vote. A member may be dropped from membership upon violation of any of the rules and upon recommendation of the executive committee and a majority vote of the association.

Meetings. Regular meetings for the transaction of business shall be held on the last Thursday night of each month, or upon call of the president or five members of the association, one week's notice having been given.

Finances. The finances of the organization shall be maintained by the charge of an entrance fee, based upon the age as nearest birthday of applicant being one cent per year and a monthly due of ten cents per month for those over eighteen years of age and five cents for all others.

Officers. The officers of the association shall consist of a president, two vice presidents, a secretary and treasurer, and four directors. These officers shall constitute the executive board and transact the business of the association between meetings.

Duties of Officers. The president shall have general charge of the association and preside at the business sessions and countersign orders drawn on the treasurer. The vice president shall perform the duties of the president in his absence, priority in age determining precedence. The secretary shall perform the usual duties as generally performed and draw orders upon the treasurer upon vote of the association. The treasurer shall have custody of the funds and shall pay out same only on order of the secretary and countersigned by the president. There shall be four directors of the following activities: Physical, social, mental, and spiritual. The director of physical activities shall have charge of all athletics and gymnastic work. The director of social activities shall have charge of the social work. The director of mental activities shall have charge of educational and musical activities. The director of spiritual activities shall have charge of the devotional work and be alert for the spiritual uplift of members.

Quorum. Ten members shall constitute a quorum.

Amendments. Amendments may be made to these articles by a two thirds vote of the members present at a regular meeting, one month's notice having been given.

The executive committee shall draft the rules governing the work of the departments.

On Birth Registration--No 2

Where do you keep your children's birth certificates? Or don't you live in one of those up-to-date communities where a certified notice is sent to the parents of every registered baby. The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, which is conducting a special campaign for complete registration of births, urges the importance of securing such a notice from the registrar and of treasuring it for the child's use in later life.

A number of things come to one in the normal processes of life for which there is to-day a legal minimum age. Proof of age may be needed in school, for working papers, for voting, for marrying, for life insurance, or for securing a civil service position. Or again, one may need to establish citizenship or the right of inheritance. In any one of a dozen ways a birth certificate may be a saving of trouble and expense; it may even save the life of a neutral citizen in time of war.

Only when parents have received a notice of registration can they be absolutely certain, without making special inquiry, that their child's birth has been registered, for even in the "birth registration area"—the eleven States and the District of Columbia which the Census Bureau accets as having fairly adequate records—there are some unregistered babies.

Moreover, such a notice of registration is an excellent device for making birth records more complete. Mrs. S— receives a notice that Mary's birth has been registered and shows it to Mrs. T— who straightway wonders why the city did not pay her the same courtesy when Billy was born.

Five States: Maryland, Michigan, New York, Virginia, and Wisconsin, and a few city health officers in other States send notices to the parents. The notice is often an attractive document; in some places it is adorned with a picture of a mother and baby.

But if the notice is to serve the child as a proof of age in later years, it must be a signed and certified transcript of the fact entered on official record. In States whose records follow the model form issued by the Census Bureau these facts include the name of the child and the date and place of birth; the sex of the child; the name of the father and the maiden name of the mother, with the birthplace, age, color, and occupation of each; the number of children born to the mother and the number living; the name of the professional attendant; and the date on which the birth was reported.—Bulletin from Government Children's Bureau.

Whole Wheat Flour

(From a bulletin sent out by one of our progressive agricultural colleges.)

VALUE OF WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR

The greater use of whole wheat, or graham bread should be encouraged for dietary, if for no other reasons. Whole wheat bread contains more inorganic salts and more of the recently discovered "dietary accessories" than does bread from white flour. These substances occur chiefly in the germ and bran of the wheat and are largely removed in the milling process. These substances are important for proper nutrition. They are often lacking in the diet. Whole wheat bread, because of its larger proportion of indigestible material, is not recommended in the diet of young children or of invalids. At the same time, it is especially valuable in the diet of persons who follow a sedentary occupation. Because of its mechanical effect on the intestines, it tends to prevent constipation.

USE OF WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR IS ECONOMICAL

The greater use of whole wheat will save more of the wheat crop for human use. In the milling of 100 pounds of wheat about 72 pounds appear as white flour in the finished product. The remaining 28 pounds go into the shorts and bran, which are not used as human food. White flour contains on an average 12 per cent of moisture. The digestibility of white bread is about 90 per cent. Every 100 pounds of wheat therefore supplies 57.00 pounds of water-free digestible food material in the form of white flour. The digestibility of whole wheat bread is about 80 per cent. Whole wheat flour contains on an average 11.3 per cent moisture. One hundred pounds of wheat supplies therefore 88.7 per cent of dry food material in the form of whole wheat flour, 80 per cent of which is digestible. One hundred pounds of wheat supplies therefore 70.96 pounds of digestible food material in the form of whole wheat flour, as against 57.00 pounds in the form of white flour, a net gain of 13.96 pounds of food from every hundred pounds of wheat. If all wheat that now goes into white flour were converted into whole wheat flour, approximately one seventh more food for human beings could be supplied in this way.

HIGH PRICE CHARGED FOR WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR

At the present time whole wheat and graham flours sell for 1.5 cents per pound more than Nebraska milled white flour on the local market. Just why this is so, is not clear. It would seem that whole wheat flour could be supplied by the mills at a lower price than white flour. Whole wheat flours contain more of the oil of the germ than does white flour. For this reason they do not keep as long. Because of the limited demand for whole wheat flour, the mills make up only small stocks at a time. As the demand becomes greater the price should come down.

GRINDING FLOUR AT HOME

When whole wheat flour is so high in price that there is no economy in its use, hand grist mills may be used and the wheat ground at home. Several different makes of mills may be had from manufacturers and catalog houses at prices ranging from $2.15 to $5.00. Larger mills designed to be run with a small engine or motor are also on the market.

Wheat for home preparation must be clean and dry when it is ground. It should accordingly be sacked direct from the machine and stored in a clean place. It may then be put through a fanning mill, after which it is ready to be ground. When necessary, wheat may be cleaned by washing. The washing may be conveniently done in a large stone jar or a pail. Half fill the receptacle with wheat, fill with water, and stir. The wheat quickly settles, while the dust and impurities rise to the surface and may be poured off with the water. The process may be repeated till the wash water is clear. The wheat should then be drained for a half hour in a sieve with a screen bottom and dried on a clean canvas or sheet in the sun. In thin layers, the drying may be accomplished in two or three hours. Long contact with water should be avoided, since this softens the berry and interferes with the milling.

For bread-making purposes, the best flour is made by putting the wheat through the mill a second time. It is run through once with the burs set to give a medium coarse meal, and then a second time with the burs set closer together. Coarse or fine flour may be made to suit individual taste.

CRACKED WHEAT A BREAKFAST FOOD

Cracked wheat for use as breakfast food may be made by setting the burs farther apart, so that the berry is broken into few pieces. The finer pieces may be sieved out, if desired. Cracked wheat is considered by many quite as savory a breakfast food as the wheat breakfast foods to be had on the market. Some of the latter,—cream of wheat and farina, for example,—have had the outer branny coats and the germ removed, while in the cracked wheat all the nutrients are retained. Since whole wheat flour does not keep as long as white flour, the making of large quantities at one time should be avoided.

(Recipes will follow next week.)

A Tribute for Mother

How all-powerful for good is the influence of a mother! During our infancy, she it is who has all responsibility concerning us. The father we see but little, he scarcely having time to salute with a hurried kiss or embrace as he departs for his daily work. Throughout the years, we may set joy on what we like, but we never find any pleasure on earth greater than that bestowed by the love of our mother. She is the first one to us in the cradle, and the last to leave our cold clay dust. She loves us, whatever be our worth,—whatever our character. Would we all gave her cause to glory in her child!

With noiseless step she moves about our room when we are ill, supplying every want, listening to our slightest movement or request. Can anything be more thrilling or sublime than the song she sings over her infant child? Can anything compare with her care and prayers all along the years? Can anything cheer and comfort like her smile or stimulate like her confidence? She shares every joy, and every sorrow. She lives more for her own than for herself. Freely she gives of her strength and her courage when others may forsake or dismay; contagious diseases alarm her not; faithfully she ministers through every trial.

Witness Hagar in the wilderness when dying from thirst, the water bottle empty! Her heart bled for the sufferings and groans of her son, until in agony she placed him beneath a shrub, crying to the Lord, "Let me not see the death of my child!" And the Lord, listening to the mother-love, "was with him!"

"Whose love can equal that of mother?

Whose the devotion, so loyal and true?

Who suffers so much, with such joy, for another?

Who works with so much pleasure as mother for you?

You hail with delight the friendship of others;

You revel in love of the sweetheart you've won;

Yet where do you find a friendship like mother's,

Unbroken till death comes, and life's work is done?"

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Coming to Zion

The powerful engine hauling the eastbound transcontinental train over the Santa Fe Railroad is bounding forward through the gray dawn, and after a restless night all eyes in our family are wide open and anxiously awaiting the coming day that they may have a first look at the beautifully rolling land of "bleeding Kansas."

Two days and three nights have passed since we boarded this train at San Bernardino, California. At that time a crowd of Saints and friends gathered at the station to bid us farewell, and, incidentally, to load us with baskets of fried chicken, (one basket coming from Brother J. W. Cooper, of Redlands) sandwiches, cake, and delicious California fruit, together with a few yellow coins for expense money. This, after being delightfully entertained at the home of Doctor Aldrich, and conveyed to the station in the car of Sister Ella Harris, renders the immediate scene of our parting with the good people of San Bernardino one that will never be forgotten.

We recall with pleasure the joy that came to us when the Good Spirit accompanied our ministerial efforts there, the kindly regard manifested by the congregation, and the evident oneness of purpose in establishing the kingdom of God. The branch there is just a big family with but a single ideal, yet at times striving over the means for its accomplishment; nevertheless, in their meetings there is a communion of souls where the fires of the divine are ever kindled.

But the "iron horse" is lunging forward, the last shadow has fled before the rising sun, and we are now entering the borders of Zion! Shall we find the same congenial spirit, the same hope manifest in the lives of those who inhabit the "central place" that comes in word and in deed from the great western rim of the West—shall Zion arise and "shine like the sun"?

Fields of ripening corn, green pastures, newly plowed fields shaded green with the first appearance of fall wheat, woodlands, creeks, and villages through which we are passing hold our little group in silent admiration. This is what we have dreamed of. In this Eden of the world we have longed for a home. But this that God intended for the equal heritage of all mankind has become the private property of but a few, and the great masses are destined to live on in disappointment, poverty, and want; driven to the ends of the earth in search of free or cheap land, or crowded together in tenement houses where disease and crime are steeping, they eke out their miserable lives in the very heart of the greatest civilization the world has ever known. At present a business stimulus which is the direct result of a great crime, renders life more tolerable among the landless and homeless by a greater demand for labor. Yet the fact of the expropriation of the great masses remains, and some day, after the struggles and agonies of this terrible conflict have passed into eternity, the people who feel the sting of the lash of poverty but cannot "locate the whip" will endeavor, by wrong methods perhaps, to correct social ills, and then the "souls of men" will be tried.

But the faithful engine is whistling, whistling, and this picture of civilization's fatal flaw is laid aside for a look at the great metropolis we are now entering. Kansas City is located in the geographical center of the United States, and surrounded by the richest and most prosperous country in the world. In beauty this city cannot compare with many cities of the West, but in business activity it surpasses them all. It is a great center, pulsing with business from the four corners of the continent, and destined to increase and grow with the increase of population and advance of civilization.

At the union station in Kansas City, someone "beat" me to a fine overcoat with which we were presented by a good Saint in San Bernardino. So leaving the children in care of a matron in the children's apartment at this commodious depot, we hied away, in the face of a stiff north breeze, attired in our Southern California "rags," to Bishop McGuire's office in Independence, for advice with reference to temporary quarters. We had, in harmony with the law, previously arranged with the bishop for this coming, and, while I believe that no definite plans had previously been made, yet everything had the outward appearance of prearrangement, and we seem to "just fit" in the place where we are located, and it is said that we are a blessing to those immediately affected by our coming, and we, ourselves, certainly appreciate the kindly regard for our welfare as shown at the bishop's office. This being our first meeting with these whole-hearted and congenial brethren, we were pleased and surprised at the instant success with which they met in locating us in a comfortable place where we were of service to others and they to us.

We are convinced that if the scattered Saints, who contemplate coming to the "central place," will first arrange with the bishop they will not regret it.

That Zion may arise and stand in her place—a beacon to the weary traveler through a darkened world—is the end ofr which I shall labor and pray.

Christmas Offering--Roll of Honor

At Deerfield, Missouri, they keep a list of the names of the classes and the amounts given, which proves quite an incentive. Though the school is composed mostly of children, they expect to raise $120. Four children are raising an acre of corn, the proceeds to be given.

Fort Scott, Kansas, has $100 now, compared with $15 last year.

With 26 members, the school at Taberville, Missouri, has increased last year's offering of $5 to $62.50. This includes home class.

At Brigiden, Ontario, they made a large clock face with figures running to $200. They raised so much that it is now going around again and is about to bump against $300.

Sister Eliza Edgington, of Lancaster, Wisconsin, believed it impossible to raise so much money throughout the church, but upon mature thought found it was possible. She, like many another housewife, has her many duties to perform, but by walking two miles to pick gooseberries and doing similar work, found it a great pleasure to earn the money, though the work was hard.

Eustis, Nebraska, had $9.34 last year and have $18 now.

Alamo, North Dakota, had $16.50 last year and has now $67.92.

Cherokee, Iowa, has been so successful that with their 60 members they have raised 189.99. This is over $3 per member. Last year they raised $10.95. They expect to make it $300.

One of the Chicago Sunday schools reports that with a membership of 65 they have set their mark at $175, having now reached the $95 mark. They took some pictures of the priesthood of the branch with the Presiding Bishopric and sold a number of the pictures at ten cents each. They have a colored mission under the home department who have raised $9 of the $25 they have aimed for. The home classes at Oak Lawn are trying to raise $50.

Fairland, Oklahoma, has 35 members. Last year they had $15.99 and already they have $54.86 this year.

Ontario, California, has 49 members, 20 of these under twelve years of age. Last year they raised $7.59; so far this year, $33.59.

The Levering Sunday school, of Carp Lake, Michigan, did not understand much about the Christmas offering last year and only raised 85 cents. Now they have about $13 and a day's wages promised by one member.

Cass City, Michigan, sent in $13.89 last year. They have $48.11 raised now, and are still working.

From all sides we hear that the workers are endeavoring to raise not less than $2 each. It looks as though it would be done. This Christmas Offering is getting to be a big thing, isn't it?

Successful Services in Des Moines

The meetings are going along in fine shape, the church is almost full every night, the audience is very attentive and Brother Cornish is doing fine.

About the advertising: We did not try to cover the whole city, but laid out a territory of about six hundred houses and kept going over the same territory all the time, seven or eight times. We did our own printing. I expect to continue to go over this same territory all winter with some kind of church notice.

Next Sunday is our "Home Coming Day." Brother Cornish will be the speaker. I will send you a program.

PASSED BY THE CENSOR

I am afraid that the people in this . . . are too prosperous in proportion to what they are doing for the work. Autos are as common as fleas almost, and it is nothing to see the church surrounded with them, and sometimes where they are the most numerous there seems to be the least inclination to help the poor missionary with funds. I preached . . . weeks in . . . and not a soul thought of the fact that I needed expenses except two . . . who gave me a dollar. . . . After it was all over with the . . . of the . . . said something to me about it, and I told him that if the other parts of the . . . were as generous as this . . . I would not get enough to pay postage. That rather stirred . . . up and . . . went around among the . . . and got me . . . dollars and . . . cents, and I presume that they will think that I begged for that. And there are but two in the . . . but what rode to church in their autos, and they were not cheap ones either, but those that cost upwards of a thousand dollars. And one of those two bought one before I left.

SILVERTON, OREGON, October 29, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have just concluded a week's series of parlor services at the home of Mr. B. F. Terry, who lives out in the country about three miles. I began on Monday night and closed Saturday night. Several people in that community have been interested for some time. All attended, but they were not all present at any one time. Because of the private character of the meetings I held only one preaching service. The rest were Bible readings, and were, of course, social in their character. I found the people very approachable. Had many invitations to visit. Will respond, of course.

The schoolhouse there has been closed against us. It was done by a few officious persons and was against the wishes of the majority. One of the citizens who is friendly to us is building a new house. When he moves he intends to knock the partitions out of his old house. That will make a room twenty-two by forty which he intends to let us have for public services.

I preached here in town yesterday, occupied in the home of Brother J. M. Volgamore. Held services at eleven a. m. and three p. m. Several nonmembers were present. We are not now using the hall. The Saints think they cannot keep up the rent.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

CENTRAL LAKE, MICHIGAN, November 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: As there are many Saints interested in me I will write a few lines. Mid all my trials I am still trusting God. God is good to me. He provided a way for me to go to Boyne City and South Boardman Conference and dear Saints, I feel much stronger in the faith. My husband who was in the asylum at Kalamazoo died this summer. My five little ones are all well and God is surely caring for us. He says the righteous shall never be forsaken. What a grand promise, dear Saints, if we put it to the test. My older girl who was at Ann Arbor in the hospital is getting along fine. She says, "Mamma, it is Jesus' work."

It is grand to be a Latter Day Saint. He promised never to leave me, never to leave me alone. O God, how can I ever praise thee for thy goodness? He is so mindful of me now.

I will close by saying, dear Saints, trust in your God. He will help you to overcome. Pray for me, because I need your prayers.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. JENNIE ADAMS.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA, November 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: The membership of the Bay Minette Branch has been so widely scattered, there have been only a few who have lived near enough to attend the meetings regularly. Within the last few months some of the young men have been called to the colors, while matrimony has claimed some of both the young men and women.

The tropical storm wrecked our church building so badly we have had to discontinue meetings for a while.

This is a nice little town and we feel that many honest-hearted people live here, as their many acts of kindness show, and I wish they understood the gospel as taught by the Reorganized Church. Nevertheless we believe they are honest in their religious views.

The Perseverance Branch, in Baldwin County, was disorganized a few years ago, and the membership sent to the Bay Minette Branch. If any of these scattered Saints read this, please write me, as both the Sunday school and Religio home department superintendent would like to have their name and address.

Hopefully,
MISS NORA WARR.

BELGRADE, MONTANA, November 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: We just closed one of the most spiritual conferences ever held in Montana. Every meeting was good. Prayer meetings were extra good. Two young men were called to the ministry. The spirit of love and peace was poured out without measure. Six were administered to and we believe their souls were made to rejoice.

One brother spoke by the Spirit and said, "The prompting of the Spirit is to you, that if the older ones would do their part, the younger ones would follow." Yes; how true this is! especially in the Deer Lodge Valley, as the young are surely trying to do their part.

Many good testimonies were given Sunday afternoon. Preaching was good. Brother Winegar spoke Saturday evening. Brother Thorburn eleven a. m. Sunday, and W. P. Bootman Sunday evening.

We said good-by and separated. May the good Spirit that attended us while there continue to bless us.

Your brother,
A. J. MOORE.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—At Fanning, August 4 and 5 with District President Samuel Twombly in chair. District presidency was chosen to preside. Branches reporting: Fanning, Atchison, Topeka, Scranton, Blue Rapids. Ministerial reports read. An amendment was offered to Rule III, to strike out all after the word district and insert "and all members in good standing present from the several branches of the district." Notice of expungement as follows: "Rule 5, section B, by striking out all of section B." Topeka chosen as the place for the next conference, February 2 and 3.

The Presidency

CHANGE IN APPOINTMENT

After proper consultation Elder James M. Smith's field of labor for the balance of the conference year has been changed from the Central Oklahoma District to Eastern Oklahoma and Arkansas.

RELEASE FROM APPOINTMENT

Because of his physical condition, Elder R. Etzenhouser has been released from his appointment to the Southwestern Oregon District for the balance of the conference year.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Eastern Oklahoma District; Greeting: Having been authorized to collect tithes and offerings for the bishop in behalf of the church, I will gladly receipt you for any amount so paid to me in person, or by letter. Be sure to state for which purpose it is given, tithes, oblations, freewill offerings, or what. Send all money by bank draft, or express order, as either are collectable at any point or place. All mail should be addressed to me at Haileyville, Oklahoma, my field address.

J. C. CHRESTENSEN, Bishop's Agent.

To the Saints in Spokane District, Greeting: There has been a generous response by many to the financial needs of the church, all previous records of receipts have been broken the past six months. Those who are desirous of being among the willing and obedient ones have yet opportunity. Do not seek for an excuse to avoid a duty that God makes as binding as baptism, but rather be diligent to find an opportunity to make a sacrifice for the good of the cause which we ought to love.

The Lord recently said: "Bring in your tithes and offerings, that my work may increase. Let us heed this instruction that we may not be found wanting when he comes. We especially urge upon every Saint the great importance of the work which brings peace and good will to those who fulfill the law which the Lord has given his children in this life.

Do not forget the Christmas offering. Every Sunday school in this district is enthusiastic with the hope of canceling the general church debt. The home department expects to average up with the schools $2.00 for each member. Isolated Saints are requested to do their part, every member of the household of faith should take pleasure in helping the financial work along. Local collectors will receipt for tithes and offerings. Saints in British Columbia east of the 121st meridian please remember this territory has been added to the Spokane District.

Your colaborer,

W. W. FORDHAM,
Bishop's Agent, Spokane District.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven Street.

Quorum Notices

The Quorum of Elders of the Eastern Mission will assemble in ministerial conference at the Saints' church, Bellevue Avenue, Providence, Rhode Island, November 24 and 25, 1917, opening session Saturday, 7.30 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to all the ministry and membership to come and enjoy this conference. H. W. Howlett, quorum secretary, Pottersville, Massachusetts.

Convention Notices

Western Nebraska Sunday school and Religio, December 2, at the Saints' church near Tryon. William F. Godfrey, superintendent; Lillie M. Richards, Religio president.

Southern Wisconsin Sunday school and Religio at Evansville, November 30, 1917. Religio at 10.30 a. m., Sunday school at 2.30 p. m. Ervin J. Lenox.

Convert Your Neighbor

Is it worth fifty cents to you to put the Ensign in the home of a nonmember every week for a year? You owe at least that much to the Missionary Cause.

This offer is good for three months and for nonmembers only.

"Let the Ensign be your preacher."

Nonmember rate: 50 cents a year.

Proof Reader Wanted

We need an experienced proof reader to work in the department at this place. The work is congenial and pleasant. Address Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Married

WHITMAN-DARST.—Walter W. Whitman and sister Verna Marie Darst, both of New Philadelphia, Ohio, were married at Cleveland, Ohio, on November 4, Elder L. W. Powell officiating. The bride is the daughter of Brother and Sister Thomas Darst.

Our Departed Ones

BEAM.—Esther Emma, daughter of Eunice Beam, was born September 23, 1901. She was baptized when 8 years old by L. D. Ullom at Fayette City, Pennsylvania. Died November 3, 1917. Leaves mother, and 2 sisters to mourn her departure. Services held in her home, Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, in charge of James E. Bishop.

WELCH.—Frederick Welch was born in Walla Walla County, Washington, March 9, 1884. Baptized by B. S. Lambkin, 1915. Died November 4, 1917, Brandon, Minnesota. Leaves to mourn a father, 3 sisters, one brother and a half brother. Funeral services in charge of Reverend R. Brown of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HIGHT.—Evelyn Vera, daughter of Edward and Tillie Hight, was born at Magnolia, Iowa, September 5, 1913. Died October 20, 1917, at Yankton, South Dakota. She leaves father, mother, one sister, 3 brothers, many relatives to mourn her early departure. Funeral services in Saints' church at Magnolia. Sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by J. D. Stuart. Interment in Magnolia Cemetery.

RASMESSEN.—Louis Rasmussen was born in Denmark. Was a member of the Utah church, but learning the more perfect way, he was baptized at Janesville, Wisconsin, by David H. Smith. Died at Independence, Missouri, November 2, 1917, age 84 years and 3 months. Leaves 2 sons and 2 daughters to mourn. Funeral at C. D. Carson's undertaking rooms. Services in charge of J. C. Foss and J. F. Keir. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

DOCTRINAL REFERENCES.—Alvin Knisley, being a compilation of references on all subjects connected with the gospel, taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. No. E185, paper, 10c; No. E186, cloth, 15c; No. E187, leather$3.00

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE.—A dictionary and alphabetical index to the Bible with a concordance to the Apocrypha, and a table and concordance of the proper names of the Bible. No. 166, cloth, net$1.50

THE MORMON GIRL.—Paula Brown Dykes, a member of the Reorganized Church, who has lived in Utah for years, writes a telling indictment of Brighamist spiritual and carnal methods in this novel. No one can resist the realism of the story. It is so entirely different from the usual anti-"Mormon" work; so sincere and straightforward in its style, and natural in its plot. Founded on facts. No. 371, cloth$1.00

THE PLEASURES OF THE WORLD. A three-act drama by John Preston, showing the effect of unwise discipline in a home. There are 12 characters, 6 male and 6 female. The play takes 2 hours to enact. A strong vein of comedy runs through the piece. Everywhere this play has been produced it has proved a success. Easy to present on any platform, as there is only one simple stage setting. Interesting as reading matter. 68 pages, paper binding, No. 38125c

SMITH.—Walter Christy was born February 22, 1883 at Caiman, Jefferson County, Indiana. Was baptized December 21, 1913. Married Flossie May McCormick, February 3, 1915. Leaves to mourn his loss a wife, 2 children, an aged mother, 3 brothers, 2 sisters and a host of friends. Died November 8, 1917. Services in charge of J. D. Shower, and T. N. Curtis.

OMANS.—Roy D. was born January, 1880, at Ferris, Montcalm County, Michigan. Baptized April 8, 1894 by Joseph Ward, at Rogersville, Webster County, Missouri. Leaves wife, and 3 children to mourn his loss. Was drowned in Big Horn River, Wyoming, September 30, 1917. Sermon by Thomas Leitch, assisted by Reverend L. C. Thompson.

NASH.—Beatrice Nash, daughter of Henry and Pearl Nash, was born August 15, 1906. Was baptized with her mother, July 11, 1915, by W. H. Mannering at Douglas, Arizona. Died October 15, 1917, after an illness of two months at Los Angeles, California. Funeral services held in the church in which she was baptized, Douglas, Arizona. Services in charge of S. D. Condit. The profusion of flowers attested the deep love she had won in the community.

KING.—Corwin King, jr., was born in Hepler, Kansas, July 28, 1884. Moved with his parents to Illinois when a boy. Died in the Peoria Hospital, November 6, 1917. Leaves to mourn mother, 6 brothers and 2 sisters, his father preceding him to the beyond; also many friends. Funeral in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Victoria, Illinois. Services in charge of E. A. Curtis, assisted by Reverend Carl J. Wells, and Reverend John R. Killip. Interment in Victoria Cemetery.

STAFFORD.—Caleb N. Stafford died October 28, 1917, age 63 years and 29 days. He was a son of Edwin Stafford, formerly of Knox County, Illinois, who removed to Decatur County, Iowa, in 1875. Caleb was baptized at San Bernardino, California, in 1894, by William Gibson, and he gave good help to the gospel cause at Omaha. His second wife and 2 children survive him. Also 2 daughters by his first marriage. His body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Services in charge of Heman C. Smith, sermon by Henry A. Stebbins. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Let Me Plan the Details of Your California Trip

Do you dislike the task of arranging and mapping out your trip to California? It IS bothersome for one not familiar with it.

But it is no bother for me. I have planned many such trips and know just how to go about it. Come in and let me help you with yours.

Let me tell you all about the Burlington "Personally Conducted" Tourist Parties (additional comforts without additional expense) through the marvelous West to California—through Denver, Colorado Springs, the Pike's Peak region, the Royal Gorge, the Colorado Rockies, Salt Lake City, the Sierra Nevadas, and all of the wonder spots of that great Western country—in daylight.

Let me relieve you of the bother of planning, and have a specially-trained guide take care of the details en route. More than that, he will explain interestingly and intelligently all the sights along the way—you'll feel that you really know the West when you get back.

Come in and get your copy of our illustrated folder with maps—Worth reading even if you don't go.

FIFTEEN SUBS IN ONE DAY

Brother Matthew Liston went out in Flint, Michigan, and got fifteen subscriptions to the church papers in one day, netting him on the ten per cent allowed on new subscriptions for Christmas offering, the sum of $2.01. And he says he hopes to have more next week. We know of a number of other communities in which as good results might be attained. How about yours?

Buying Silence

The user of the "Silent Smith" buys, in addition to a writing machine—OFFICE QUIET.

Instead of the clatter of the ordinary typewriter, he hears the gentle "tap, tap," of the type against the paper—practically the only sound.

This result has been brought about by mechanical refinements. Ball bearings, lightness of touch, ease of operation and a minimum of noise—all help the operator to turn out neat, accurate written work.

Send for free booklet, "The Silent Smith." It has valuable information about typewriting and typewriters.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

Any of our people within calling distance of Antler, North Dakota, are requested by Sister Vivian Short, of London, England, to call on her cousin at that place, Mrs. C. D. Tritt. Her husband is principal of the consolidated schools at that place. We are sending her a few copies of the HERALD.

A letter from Mrs. Pearl Oliver, Tate, Saskatchewan, tells how the Lord has prospered her, saying that it is not a good place for those who do not like to work. The closest church is one hundred and fifty miles from her.

TORONTO SERVICES OPEN AUSPICIOUSLY

We learn from a personal letter that Bishop R. C. Evans opened his fifteenth winter in one of the largest theaters of Toronto, Ontario, on the evening of November 11. Long before the opening of the service every seat was taken and hundreds were turned away. The subject was, "Why God permits war." This was used for an opening to introduce the gospel. On the 18th he will take up the subject of the different glories, under the heading, "The soldier's reward after death." The meetings this year are being held at Shea's Theater, as has been the case the past few years, and bids fair to receive the usual strong popular interest and support.

MEETING OF GENERAL AND STAKE OFFICIALS

President F. M. Smith is expected in Independence, Tuesday, the 20th, so that several conferences, including those of stake officials are called at that time. The ill health of Sister Smith makes necessary his absence part of the time from Independence. But even when he is away he has all matters sent to him for consideration, and keeps in closest touch with his office work. Brother Elbert A. Smith will attend the meeting.

GETTING SUBSCRIPTIONS IN MINNEAPOLIS

We like the way they handle the subscription getting in Minneapolis. They found that there were not nearly so many of the church publications being received as there should be, so they are carrying on a general campaign to increase the number. The superintendent of the Religio is offering a dollar to the one who gets the most subscribers, and the president of the Religio is giving the same amount to the workers in the intermediate grade and as a prize for the best work. Of course they retain ten per cent on all new subscriptions for their Christmas offering. The community that keeps up with the work of the church is the one that is going to be heard from in all legitimate lines. We are always glad to send extra sample copies to those who need them.

OUT ON LECTURE TRIP

Historian Heman C. Smith left Lamoni on the 14th for a lecture trip under the auspices of the Religio lecture bureau. He took his stereopticon machine with him and will deliver illustrated historical lectures on our church history, which are always popular and interesting. His schedule on this trip is Cameron, Missouri, evening of the 15th; Stewartsville on the evening of the 16th; Saint Joseph the 17th and 18th, and Fanning, Kansas, on the 19th and 20th.

LET US HEAR FROM YOU

On this page we want to list little items of interest about the church and its people. To make it as comprehensive as we ought to, we need your cooperation. A goodly number are responding, but there ought to be more. Let us hear from you. Have an understanding who is to furnish a careful every week or so.

NEW ISSUE OF THE FOLDER TRACTS

When you want something extra good in the tract line, order some of Nos. 1051 and 1052, one cent apiece in small quantities. They are on beautiful India tint paper, printed in sepia. Number 1051 is a brief outline of the church history, with two large pictures. Number 1052 is a brief history of Joseph Smith the Martyr and the First Presidency, with pictures of the three presidents of the church.

EARNS $3.02 ON ONE ORDER

J. A. Anderson, of Albin, Wyoming, sent in an order the other day for $27.23, practically all subscriptions to the church publications, HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. He had deducted his ten per cent allowed on new subscriptions, netting him a nice sum and introducing the publications to many new homes—a fine combination.

ACTIVITIES OF BROTHER RUSHTON

We know that our members are interested in the activity of members of the Twelve, especially under the new regime. So we trust that Elder John W. Rushton will pardon our passing on some of the information from a personal letter. He has been engaged the past several weeks or months in a lengthy and busy trip through the Coast States, going as far north as Canada, preaching in Chilliwack, New Westminster, and Vancouver. He organized two branches, one at Bellingham, Washington, and one at Dinuba, in California. He reports the work everywhere to be in encouraging condition and prospects of at least two more branches to be organized in the near future. The people are appreciative of the work of the church and are trying very hard to make it a success where they live. The war is making a deep impression upon many. Generally speaking, the people stand strongly by the President and the Government. There is a spiritual revival in the work, and looking hopefully for the coming development of the church. We have already pointed out that Brother T. W. Williams is now devoting his whole time to the work of the church. He by no means renounced the belief in the triumph of the Socialists, but believes that it can be best worked out through the church, and so secure a solidarity for righteousness.

A FRIEND FOR THOSE AT CAMP LEWIS

Any of the Saints having relatives or friends in the National Army stationed at Camp Lewis, Tacoma, Washington, will be doing them a favor by sending the names, regimental and company numbers to Robert J. Holman, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICE

The Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Branch, held an anniversary service of the fifth year of the opening of their church building on October 27 and 28. We have not learned how it came out, only receiving the belated notice indicating a good program. It closed: "In the prayer meeting let us remember President Wilson's proclamation; the welfare of our branch; our sick, and our three brethren in the Army." And it was suggested that all bring lunches and stay all day Sunday.

Queen Lilioukalani, the last royal ruler of Hawaii, is dead. She was a picturesque figure, revered and respected by the natives. The date of her demise was November 11.

"I cannot get along without the church papers," writes Brother Roy F. Ursenbach, of the Twelfth Cavalry Band, Columbus, New Mexico, having his address changed.

COME UP HIGHER

(An address to the priesthood at the Logan, Iowa, reunion, 1916.)

In addressing a word to the priesthood and the membership I hope I shall be able to arouse a keener appreciation of the sacredness of our work and stimulate to larger activity. As a people we have long been talking about, and singing about, and looking forward to a consummation of what we have termed a marvelous work and a wonder. We have sung of the time when the Lord will accomplish this marvelous work. We have looked forward to the establishment of what we term Zion, and the instituting of what we call Zion's conditions, and I fear that we have been far too content to allow the Lord to do the work, rather than to be willing to do our part of it.

It requires on the part of the people a consistent, constant, and active faith in order for the Lord to accomplish that work, and it will not be accomplished until the Lord has developed a people, which he says must be a tried people. And he points out the fact that we must pass through a period of preparation, perhaps of long duration, that shall eventually bring us up to a plane where the Lord can use us in a way that he never has been able to use us in the past. In other words, the Lord will not do this work alone; we must do our part; we must constitute ourselves as workers together with God for the accomplishment of this purpose.

It is a well-known fact that when old habits are broken up before new habits are formed there is a period of confusion, in which there is an effort on the part of the individual to adapt himself to the changed conditions. And frequently this period of confusion is accompanied by considerable distress, depression, or uncertainty, and is potential with danger. That has been demonstrated in the life of almost every individual. When a child has been cultured and nurtured in the faith of the church, has been taught it at his mother's knee, there has developed in him a simple, unquestioning faith in God, faith so pure, so simple, and so sublime, that when any little trouble comes he feels that he will be helped by an appeal for divine aid.

But there comes a time in that life, when because of his contact with his environment, because of his associations with other individuals, because of the expansion of his mind, he learns new mental traits, and forms new habits. Then there comes a period of confusion, a period when young people may drift away from the church. We see them drifting away; we see them becoming indifferent. They may even drift so far as to question the very existence of Deity. They are in a period of life that is full of dangers spiritually. But if they are kept in a proper environment, where proper influences are thrown around them, there comes a complete readjustment to conditions, and they find themselves on firmer ground than before.

What is true of individuals is true of groups. You who have been alert to conditions in the church, know that it has been passing through such a period of confusion, that we have been breaking up some old habits in the process of forming new. It means that we are passing from the activities contingent upon the solution of the older problems to the activities necessary to meet these later conditions. We are entering a period when the church must broaden the sphere of its activities, must apply itself to the solution of problems not present a generation ago. Perhaps many of you sense the resulting confusion, and are disturbed as to the outcome. But if we do our part and heed the admonition to stand aside and see the salvation of the Lord made manifest, you will soon see the time when there will appear full justification for our change of activity, and you will look back and wonder why you were disturbed. It is a good thing for people to be disturbed once in a while.

So the church must readjust itself to changed conditions, and must reform its ranks in order to make a different attack on the forces of the enemy than we have ever made before. You know when an army has been engaged in battling, there come times when it must reform its forces, rearrange lines, re-adjust its plans, and then go on fighting for the same cause. The general or commander of the whole army may be quite aware of every step that is being taken, and yet the men in the battalion may feel confused, when as a matter of fact everything is being purposively worked out. Such a time of re-adjustment has reached us, and hence I feel like bearing a particular message to some of the priesthood to-day. That message can be summed up in one sentence. We expect every man to do his duty, his full duty.

DEACONS

We might begin with the deacon. Of course the deacons shall be concerned about the welfare of their congregations, not only the welfare of their congregations, so far as building a fire in the church is concerned, but that they be busy acquainting themselves with the duty of a deacon, so that they can enter into that larger field of activity of a deacon's work, which has not been entered into heretofore. I look upon the deacons as being one of the most important arms of the priesthood. They are a part of the financial arm of the church, and are by virtue of their ordination, agents for and workers with the general bishopric. They have not been utilized in the past as such to the extent that they should, and I am satisfied that the bishopric, the general bishopric, has come far short of its possibilities by not utilizing this corps of officers that the Lord himself has set in the church for that purpose. The deacons are not only to teach the financial law, but they should be men who would be of service to the bishopric in collecting tithes, offerings, and the general funds of the church. Not only that, but they should be of direct assistance to the bishopric in dispensing the money to the poor. The aggregate of money spent by the church as aid to the poor is very large in proportion to our other expenditures. Look over your bishop's account and note it. Perhaps this amount in the aggregate has grown unnecessarily large because we have not used the deacons as investigating officers, to investigate the condition of those who are demanding aid from the church. There may be and probably are many people who have been receiving aid from the church, who are not entitled to it. We have been giving money every month to people in this church who have sons and daughters abundantly able to keep them, and these sons and daughters have unnaturally thrown the responsibility and care of their aged parents onto the church. Such sons and daughters should be compelled to provide the necessary care.

Then what is the difficulty so far as our deacons are concerned? One is this: Too frequently when we have a real first-class deacon who has been able to appreciate the needs of his congregation, knows how to seat them quietly, knows how to put song-books into their hands unostentatiously, knows how to regulate the ventilation of the church, keep it warm, knows how to raise money for the branch, we say, "What a fine fellow that is. We must ordain him to something higher," and we have spoiled many a first-class deacon to make an incompetent priest. One of the most spiritual bodies of men in the church ought to be the deaconate.

They ought to be first-class business men in every sense of the word. Ability to preach a sermon is not a prime requisite. Their first work is to administer the financial law, and keep the congregation alive to church financial duties. Then they would be discharging their duties as they should. We have never yet trained a proper corps of deacons in the church. But a good deacon who has made an indifferent elder might yet functionize as a deacon. Let him take his Melchisedec priesthood along with him, and act as deacon again.

I remember once that Brother Elbert A. Smith had occasion to go to Colorado Springs for his wife's health. Not knowing anyone out there he attended branch business meeting, and somebody nominated him for deacon in the branch; he was elected and he served. He would sweep out their very small building, build the fire and have things ready for the congregation. The next spring when I saw him, I said, "Hello, Deacon Smith," and he instantly retorted, "Why, don't you know that a deacon in Colorado Springs is higher than one of the Presidency at Independence?" And let me tell you, that a deacon at Colorado Springs or anywhere else, who is doing his duty, is higher than one of the Presidency or anyone else who is not doing his duty.

ABOUT TEACHERS

We have the same trouble with teachers that we have with deacons. A good many who should be teachers are making poor elders. There is not a more responsible office in the church than teacher. The difficulty has been that we have looked upon a teacher as a sort of church detective, to smell out trouble, and to get people out of the church as fast as the missionaries can get them into the church. It is well to be able to detect where trouble lies and to locate the responsibility when trouble comes along.

But the difficulty is that many of them are able to locate trouble, but are lacking when it comes to knowing how to settle it, and one of the great duties of a teacher is to settle difficulties. How many teachers are capable of doing it?

So it goes with the priests and perhaps the elders. Do you know we have in places a whole quorum of elders with not a dozen regular appointments in the neighborhood, whole groups of elders, whose church occupation seems to be to criticize those who are trying to do something! They can tell the Presidency and the Twelve what to do. They can tell you where the Twelve make mistakes in appointments and fall short of duty. They can do all that, but when it comes to doing something themselves they have nothing to show.

How is it with you, elders? Are you magnifying your calling? The time is here when the church must clearly understand that ordination in this church means something, that it is not a mere conferring of honors. It means he must magnify his calling, that he must do something towards shouldering his responsibility and towards a most conscientious application to duty and to work. The time is here to ask every man who holds the priesthood, whether it be deacon, or priest, or teacher, to magnify his calling, or hand in his license and make room for those who will work. The slogan for every man of the priesthood is, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

BE CLEAN

"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." In the first place that means that a man who has assumed responsibility in the church as a member of the priesthood and is therefore called upon to bear the vessels of the Lord should be clean in person. The same is true in regard to his personal appearance, his clothing.

The same is true particularly in regard to his language. There have been many persons, persons of talent and refinement, who have been repulsed by the things that they have heard fall from the lips of men whose language should at all times be clean; and I am sorry to say that in the past, and I do not know but what even in the present, the priesthood of this church have not been entirely blameless in that respect. Men holding the priesthood should not indulge in stories of a questionable character. They should not indulge in language unclean in any way. If they are disposed to be funny, let their wit be of the proper kind. There is clean humor, and the disposition to see the funny side of life is the salvation of some people, but there is a legitimate way to exercise it.

I would like to admonish all men who hold the priesthood to make a consistent and strenuous effort, that they shall be clean in every sense of the word, that the elders as they pass from place to place, attempting to advise people in regard to their spiritual welfare and to purify their lives, may set an example to the people. The people have a right to expect that the men holding the priesthood shall be exemplary in their conversation, in their deeds, and in their thoughts.

PRIESTS

Whenever we have talked about, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," I always think about the sacrament. I have seen men administer the sacrament who were so filthy and dirty in their personal appearance that persons could hardly take the sacrament without nausea. It is decidedly wrong to violate the proprieties in any such way as that.

Any priest who is called upon to administer the sacrament, who does not think highly enough of his office to see that his hands and his face and his clothing are clean when he carries about the vessels of the Lord bearing the sacramental meal, should be asked to resign his office at once. And they are being asked to resign in some places. In one of our stakes a priest was visited, and told: Unless you clean up, and clean those whiskers and that dirty neck, and clean your hands, and put on decent clothing, we will not permit you to administer the sacrament in this branch." And that officer did exactly right.

Furthermore, priests as visiting officers, are expected to go into the homes, to admonish the Saints to live clean personal lives, to remove from their homes that which is wrong spiritually. What kind of a spectacle does it present for a priest who is not clean in body or in conduct, to go into a home and ask those people to clean themselves up spiritually? It makes a farce of it.

Of course I could speak of the teachers and deacons the same way. Every officer should keep the thought before him constantly that the Lord has said, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." It applies to every one of the different offices.

The church has asked me to assume responsibilities as the president of the Melchisedec priesthood, and if that means anything it means that I am supposed to have a personal official supervision over those holding the Melchisedec priesthood in all parts of the church, and I am firmly determined that every man holding the Melchisedec priesthood shall be asked to keep himself clean, to keep himself in a state of activity, to show that he is magnifying his calling. If there are men holding the Melchisedec who are inactive, yet who are in position to work.

who are not disqualified by personal disability, or who are not so completely tied down by other affairs that they are not able to work, I expect to ask for their licenses, if they persistently refuse to magnify their calling. I believe I shall be justified in doing it.

Furthermore, I shall feel myself justified in asking for the license of any man who thinks more of his chew of tobacco than he thinks of his license. Not that I think that a man who chews tobacco will forever be denied admittance to celestial glory, but I do not doubt that he will have to go through a probation of cleaning up first. We have of course never made the use of tobacco a test of fellowship, yet in the matter of cleanliness alone we have a right to expect that the ministry shall maintain a higher standard than the membership.

Furthermore, I think that I shall be justified in asking a man to surrender his license when he has an unsavory reputation in his neighborhood, even if we cannot prove anything against him. There are men in this church, I could put my hands on several of them without any trouble, who hold licenses, who are known as men who are dishonest, who will not pay their debts, who are known as trouble makers, but we cannot prove anything against them. I say I think we will be justified in taking their licenses, and insist that they establish a reputation for honor and integrity. We have already recalled some licenses and silenced men for such cause.

Furthermore, I think we will be justified in demanding the licenses of men who constantly misrepresent this church rather than represent it; men who go out and ride hobbies, that they know are not in harmony with the teachings of the church. Some do this claiming that they should be granted what they term "liberty of speech." Within certain limits it is true that they may say what they please. As individuals they can criticize the men of the church, and even make personal attacks on them, so long as they keep within certain limits prescribed by law. But there is a much closer limit beyond which they cannot go and retain their rights as representative men of the church. Some men distort liberty of speech into license of speech. I have seen men who were unable to earn their living drawing monthly allowances from this church, yet misrepresenting it, who said they had a right to say what they pleased. I say, certainly you have a right to say what you please, but we have the right to say whether you can say it as our representatives or not.

A characteristic of this latter-day religion is that it has given to us an ideal, He that is warned, let him warn his neighbor. That is missionary work. Of course I know that some of our people have been most unwise in warning their neighbors, and have been unreasonable in their unwise zeal in forcing our religion on people who did not want it. They do not seem to know when it is time to warn their neighbors, and they make themselves obnoxious as a result. The first thing necessary is to create a desire to hear what you have to say.

The times demand the true missionary spirit throughout the church. I should like to see the time soon come when around Independence and Lamoni particularly, and in other populous districts of the church, there shall be appointments held every Sunday regularly by men of the priesthood, that shall keep every man in the Melchisedec priesthood busy from two to three times on Sunday. I should like to see the Aaronic priesthood assisting in that, and you people who have cars and teams can be of great assistance in our missionary work, by seeing that the missionaries are transported to the places where services are to be held.

Between Lamoni and Independence, for instance, there is a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles that covers one of the most fertile and one of the best agricultural territories in this part of the country, and yet we do not own very much of it. I have heard my father say that he expected to see the time come when a person could drive from Independence to Lamoni and eat every meal in the home of a Latter Day Saint. I should like to see the time, when a person could start out on foot and never be out of sight of land owned by people of the church.

I should like to see the proselytizing work of the church carried forward so vigorously that in Independence, Lamoni, Far West, Kansas City, and Holden Stakes every family head shall have had a chance to accept or reject this gospel, by having heard it in its fullness. Is that too high an ideal? How can it be done? By real missionary work, under the direction of the Twelve, intensified missionary work, engaged in by all who have talent, till even the local priesthood shall offer their services, even if it be only for one hour or two hours a week, or as much as they can spare. We have not given the Lord half a chance to convert the people of this country, for we have not done our part. It demands a consecrated ministry and a consecrated membership working together with a definite purpose in view.

Let me give you a little mathematics of it. If we are going to establish Zion, or redeem Zion by purchase, how much money do you think it will take? Jackson County is an immensely wealthy county. Out riding not long ago about six or seven miles south of Independence and about ten or fifteen miles from Kansas City, we saw a sign up on a piece of land, "This fine eighty acres of land for sale at $600 per acre. Can you beat it?" How much of Jackson County do you think you are able to redeem? When you get over to Kansas City, six hundred dollars per acre looks small.

Some time ago we were driving to the Holden Stake conference, and Sister Krahl was in our car. As we passed over that magnificent agricultural country, I said, "There is your mission. You cannot buy it, but you might convert the people that own it." If we make our rightful effort it will be easy for the Lord to do his part, and you may be surprised that you ever wondered how to redeem Zion. But we cannot do it unless there is extant among our people this spirit of consecration that will give to God and his service, every talent, every ability, every bit of wealth that we possess. I wish first for the consecration of your efforts and your talents, and then as a secondary thing for your wealth, or your property.

One more appeal I wish to make. It seems to me that it has constantly been the mission of the priesthood to stand against iniquity in every form, to stand against it without fear or favor. In some places we find that our people recognize that there is iniquity existing in their midst, that is undermining the spirituality of the people and is putting them in a dangerous position spiritually, yet their tongues are silent, they are not raising up their hands against it, simply because they fear to estrange people who are not members of the church.

You cannot afford to do this, you cannot afford, you men of the priesthood, ever to be found not raising your hands against iniquity wherever you find it, and it doesn't make any difference to me how completely you estrange people who sanction it. I know they will have a more wholesome respect for you always if you stand fairly and squarely for your convictions, and less respect for you if you attempt to compromise principle for the sake of maintaining friendship.

You cannot expect the ministry to stand out against iniquity unless you uphold their hands in righteousness. Our positions in the church as officers are occupied by your choice, and we endeavor to care for your interests; but we cannot do it unless you give us your support. It is unfair in the extreme for you to select men to positions of responsibility in this church, from the deaconate to the presidency, and then stand aside and criticize rather than assist them. They are your servants, and their success can come only by reason of the contribution of your support and your cooperation, and I plead for it. It must be given.

Our work cannot go forward unless the membership shall stand fairly and squarely in unbroken ranks behind the men they have asked to assume responsibility, and take up the work of leadership.

Leadership is nothing unless there is something to lead, and a man cannot lead a people who are pulling back. We will make mistakes, but let us make our mistakes in going ahead instead of going back. We can then correct the mistakes and still struggle onward and upward.

I become very earnest, especially when I see the enormous amount of work to be done, when my mental view is expanded and I see the long road that is to be passed, and the shortness of the time in which it is to be traversed, and then look back and see the small progress we have made. I sometimes become disturbed in soul, but I realize that if we are engaged in the Lord's work, if we will do our part, we will yet traverse this road to his glory and the advancement of his cause, because of the exercise of his great power.

May his peace be with us.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Brother X— has done all he could to discourage the elders from running about needlessly. He never gave one of them a penny.

Some people take the elder's ministration as a matter of course, not worthy even of thanks, as in the case of the invalid to whom a sister said, "Wasn't it kind of Elder Fifthly to walk six miles in the heat and bring you that big basket of fruit and chicken and groceries?" The lady frowned and said, "Kind? Why, what is he for?"

No brain can long dictate a course in which the heart is not enlisted.

The law of the land may stay the hand in mid-air and say that you must not steal your neighbor's money or his wife or his life. The law of God checks the heart in mid-bound and says that you must not covet your neighbor's money or his wife or his life.

We must not think of forbidden deeds, for thought is a seed that in time will surely germinate and break through the soil a deep-rooted deed.

President Wilson knows how to coin a striking phrase quite as well as Roosevelt does. In his speech to the Federation of Labor, at Buffalo, he said of Mr. Gompers, president of the federation: "If I may be permitted to do so, I want to express my admiration of his patriotic courage, his large vision and his statesmanlike sense of what is to be done. I like to lay my mind alongside of a mind that knows how to pull in harness. The horses that kick over the traces will have to be put in a corral."

A Christian Scientist is the only man who will deny the existence of matter and work hard to earn coal, ice, and flour; who will act as pallbearer for a friend and on the way home deny the existence of death.

The Italians complain that the Germans attacked them at a point at which they were not prepared and where they did not expect to be attacked. They seem naively resentful. But it is worth while to remember that the enemy always aims to attack at such a point. It is the same in the Christian warfare. If you are strong as Gibraltar in your financial honesty, but rather susceptible, let us say, to feminine blandishments, you may be sure the Devil will not waste a minute trying to tempt you with a ten-dollar bill.

The guide at the Temple grounds in Salt Lake was showing a party about and giving free information about the glories of marriage for eternity. Doctor D—, a member of the party, inquired, "May I ask if all these marriages in the temple for eternity turn out happily?" The guide shook his head and replied, "No, I am sorry to say some of them are very unhappy." "And yet they are tied together for eternity," commented Doctor D—, "I think I will take mine for time only."

Apparently Christmas will be celebrated in great style, with the Kaiser throwing kisses at London, Haig and Petain saluting Hindenburg, Uncle Samuel sending overseas many new soldiers "made in America," Zeppelin commanders speeding the departure of little children to Him who said, "Suffer them to come unto me," and many Christmas trees festooned with sharp shooters taking pot shots at Red Cross nurses.

The fate of Palestine may seem a minor matter in this world war; but to our mind it is a matter of tremendous importance. History may reveal clearly how in the chaos and disorder of this great cataclysm God's hand was working in an orderly manner to accomplish his purposes concerning the Holy Land. An issue that we hope for is that Palestine may be freed or come under liberal and enlightened government so that the Jews may be permitted to return, redeem the land, and restore their nation.

Here is something to which one might pin a conviction. A triumph of the central powers would leave Jerusalem under the dominion of the Turk. That God will permit such a denouement seems to us incredible.

Others as well as ourselves are watching the Holy Land. The Des Moines Register says: "A sentimental interest will attach to the rescue of Jerusalem from the Turk. A complete new chapter of history will open with that event. Perhaps in the great future the rescue of Jerusalem will count as one of the most significant achievements of the war."

As we read our early church history, let us recall the words of Emerson: "Whatever outrages have happened to men may befall a man again: and very easily in a republic, if there appear any sign of a decay of religion. Coarse slander, fire, tar and feathers and the gibbet, these the youth may freely bring home to his mind and with what sweetness of temper he can, and inquire how fast he can fix his sense of duty, braving such penalties, whenever it may please the next newspaper and a sufficient number of his neighbors to pronounce his opinions incendiary."

RADIO-TELEGRAPHY AT GRACELAND COLLEGE

Elsewhere in this week's issue will be found an announcement by Graceland College of their wireless station. The Government is greatly in need of wireless operators for the signal corps. Graceland has been requested to take up this department of work. Some of our young men already drafted who have taken work in this line, have properly been assigned to signal work, but they report that there are many vacancies, and a great demand in this field. The Government very much needs a large number of qualified young men. It is an opportunity for those drafted to render special service in a vital arm of Government work, service of the more and better remuneration.

But it also means preparation for better work after the war. The wireless is coming more and more into use all the time and there will be a great need for wireless operators.

The course requires four and a half months. Early enrollment is advisable. Yet there is sufficient time between the first of the year and the end of the school year in June, if prompt enrollment is made after the Christmas holidays. But do not delay. The college feels that it can render its best service in the present crisis in this manner. It is a splendid opportunity for young men and it is also a splendid help for the Government. President George N. Briggs informs us that the station was established at the request of the Government and they are urging us to put forth every effort to train wireless operators as rapidly as possible.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

S. S. Smith in the Arena

We have noted with gratification the publicity given our work in Spokane, Washington, through the activities of Elder S. S. Smith, our pastor at that place. He has been carrying a newspaper argument on the subject of evolution in a commendable manner, and sees that our church activities, such as coming conferences, securing of outside speakers, etc., are noted—all very wholesome and essential publicity, yet all too often not used because of lack of appreciation of its value.

The Advertisements in This Issue

These announcements are written with as much care and with the same spirit of helpfulness as any other part of the publication. They should be read for the information they impart, giving the suggestions the same careful consideration as is given other features. This year the question of gift giving is important—if possible, more so than ever—yet it is not to be expected that we will cease to give, as one of the advertisements points out. Let us replace useless giving with useful giving.

Much Coal for Brewers

The American Issue publishes a statement from E. D. Leach, assistant State fuel administrator of Ohio to the effect that it requires sufficient coal for the maintenance of the brewers to furnish fuel for 726 round trips for such a giant ship as the Lusitania and transport 23,595,000 tons of supplies to the allies. It requires 180,000 cars of coal to move the raw material to the breweries, to say nothing at all about the grain and sugar. It takes a pound of coal to make a pint of beer. All this while thousands of families have no coal and cannot get any.

Herbert S. Bigelow Attack

A few weeks ago according to newspaper report an attack was made upon Herbert S. Bigelow when he was about to address a meeting in Cincinnati, Ohio. He was kidnaped, stripped, beaten, and crude oil poured upon his head. His affliction was so serious that he was confined to a hospital for some time. Instances of this kind are certainly a disgrace to our civilization. During the election in Philadelphia, an attack was made, and one of the contestants was killed. We have no need for government by either mobs or murder. Such actions are deservedly denounced regardless of where they may occur.

German Tracts

Brother Frederick Roos of Basel, Switzerland, has written us recently concerning his rejoicing over his privilege of baptizing his wife in the Rhine River. We are now just in receipt of two tracts in German, one concerning the fullness of the gospel, the United Order of Enoch, that the underlying principle is not egoism, but altruism. A list of the services are also given. The lower half of the tract, which is printed on one page, is taken up with reference to the four errors of Mormonism, polygamy, Adam-god, that Christ was born from Adam and not from the Holy Ghost, and blood atonement. The other tract concerns itself with the constitution of the Woman's Auxiliary for social service. It refers to each of the ten departments, with a short description of their work. This latter is signed Mrs. Julie Roos-Vollmer.

The December "Autumn Leaves"

This bright monthly comes to our desk laden with human interest articles, stories, and all that goes to make up a good magazine. For instance, Elder William Lewis tells us that his tract "The church of Jesus Christ," was given in a dream and finally worked into a tract in its present form. Those who missed the first chapters of Elbert A. Smith's story, "Timbers for the temple," may read the synopsis and thereby partly catch up. "At the hour of twelve," is a strong short story on a Christmas theme by a skilled church writer. The editorial department features an important communication given by the Spirit to the young at a Lamoni prayer meeting. If anyone has missed getting a sample copy of the Autumn Leaves, send for one and read it to the end, including the "Editors' postscript," on the back page, wherein is an indication of what may be expected the coming year. The price is only a dollar a year and the list of subscriptions is growing amazingly. The edition will soon be gone. Order of this office.

In religion especially, man has grown passive, almost to the point of masochism. Dogma fetters his mind, convention his heart and life, and if he is saved it is done for him by an alien, outside power. Protestantism has stripped religion of all its beauty, while Puritanism robbed it of its joy. In secular life we seek to forget it, while science, its own child, is estranged from it not actively hostile toward it. Its cheerfulness is chipper and falsetto. Its creeds are clung to by an arbitrary will to believe, with penalties for failure to do so, and religious feeling, if cultivated at all, is as an exotic if not as an artifact. God and another life are a far cry.—
G. Stanley Hall.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

OUR PRESENT DUTY

The one overshadowing duty of the church to-day is loyalty to support the principles of liberty and justice enunciated in the Declaration of Independence of the United States.

We are obliged to the Almighty to uphold the constitutional law of this land and every law which conforms to the spirit and purpose of the National Constitution.

The Lord in giving this counsel clearly intimated there was danger that laws in contravention thereto would be enacted. He admonished us to befriend "that law which is the constitutional law of the land."

There is an alarming tendency to disregard and even discard these fundamental documents. This is not only in evidence on the part of the Industrial Workers of the World and the "disgruntled misfits" at the lower rung of the economic ladder. The most dangerous manifestation is on the part of the money kings and speculators of America. An "I-won't-work" at the top is oftentimes more dangerous than an "I-won't-work" at the bottom.

I do not contend that the Declaration of Independence is the last word in economics or that the Constitution is an all-embracing Magna Charta for human liberty—far from this. I do contend that in our growth and national expansion we cannot afford to either ignore or discard the truths contained therein. We may, with propriety, extend and strengthen the positions taken. We cannot go on to larger freedom while we ignore the principles which have secured to us what we now have.

The Lord has said to the elders of this church:

I, the Lord, justifieth you and your brethren of my church, in defending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to laws of men, whatsoever is more or less than these cometh of evil.

It is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the constitution of this land, by the hand of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose.

The very first amendment to the Constitution and which was ratified December 15, 1791, reads:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or the press; or the right of the people peaceable to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

No one individual or organization should be denied this right. If, in the exercise thereof, any individual or individuals connected therewith overstep the bounds of the law, then let the administrators of the law deal with the infraction. It is a dangerous precedent when any governor, mayor or alderman can arbitrarily say to people who have not violated any organic law, "You cannot hold any assemblage within my jurisdiction."

I fear such arbitrary rulings will react and, instead of making people patriotic, it will make them sullen and rebellious. The one thing which I fear for America more than even foreign war is internal revolution. We can go into a foreign war and the people may be united, but once let the sentiment grow that officials or individuals may disrespect the Constitution and we are on the verge of anarchy.

As a church we are not responsible either for the war or the declaration of war. I do not see how we can "proclaim war" in the light of God's direct command that we "proclaim peace." But the men who are entrusted with the responsibility for determining this question have declared war—they have passed the selective draft law. As law-abiding citizens we can do no other thing except to conform thereto.

Our church is international. Simply because in this present war England, Canada, Australia, France, etc., are fighting on one side and Germany, Austria, Turkey, etc. are fighting on the other side, should not cause the church to assume a narrow partisanship. Our loyalty must be to principle rather than to people. Who knows but, in a few years, other wars may arise wherein the alignment will be entirely different. The imaginary boundary lines which kings have drawn around their preserves should not mark the dividing line between love and hate.

Let us approach this question as internationalists. When we speak we must not speak merely as Americans but a church comprehending the rights of all the peoples of the world.

If America had heeded the message of God to this generation I verily believe there would have been no occasion for this Nation going to war at the present time. God could and would have overruled to prevent complications. The Lord has permitted this and other nations to be embroiled. God did not bring on this war. As in the past, he does bless and help those who act in accordance with truth and righteousness. He will always bless men who seek to uphold liberty and freedom as against tyranny and wrong.

I will go farther than this and affirm a belief that, if the Saints of the latter days had kept the commandments of God, making the establishment of his work of paramount importance, Zion would even now have been established with the resultant protection and power of which we are now largely deprived.

I do not look for Zion—a "charmed center" where men can repair and with utter disregard for the condition of the rest of humanity "enter into rest." The majesty and power of Zion which will impress the nations of the world will not consist in impregnable walls and marshaled hosts but in the majesty of right, the dominancy of love. The glory of Zion consists in what she sends out to the world and not what she bottles up for her selfish aggrandizement.

Necessarily we want the world made safe for democracy and likewise do we wish democracy made safe for the world.

God has called the men and women of this church to be pioneers for democracy, heralds of freedom, champions of liberty. As such we must be foes to all privilege, advocates of equality and messengers for human brotherhood.

There is much of truth in this wonderful poem of Ella Wheeler Wilcox:

PEACE SHOULD NOT COME

Peace should not come along this foul earth way
 Peace should not come until we cleanse the earth.
 God waited for us; now in awful wrath
 He pours the blood of men out day by day
 To purify the high-road for her feet.
 Why, what would Peace do, in a world where hearts
 Are filled with thoughts like poison-pointed darts?
 It were not meet, surely it were not meet
 For Peace to come, and with her white robes hide
 These industries of death—these guns and swords—
 These uniformed, hate-filled, destructive hordes—
 These hideous things that are each nation's pride.
 So long as men believe in armed might Let arms be brandished. Let not Peace be sought Until the race-heart empties out all thought
 Of blows and blood, as arguments for Right.
 The world has never had enough of war,
 Else war were not. Now let the monster stand
 Until he slays himself with his own hand;
 Though no man knows what he is fighting for.
 Then in the place where wicked cannon stood
 Let Peace erect her shrine of Brotherhood.

AN UNFINISHED WORK

(Funeral sermon of Charles F. Graham, at Lamoni, Iowa, July 5, 1917, by John F. Garver. Brother Graham was instantly killed in an automobile accident on July 3.)

For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops. And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows. Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 10: 26-33.

We stand to-day in the somber shadows of a deep sorrow. If we are to receive any degree of comprehension, any ray of hope as a community, as friends and as a family, that hope is extended to us in the promises of the gospel, in the Word of God. As a suggestion of the theme which we may have the liberty to present we draw from the verses we have just read from Matthew, and from the 40th verse of the 12th chapter of Luke: "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed. . . . Be ye therefore ready."

We are conscious of the question in the mind of the average man of this community in connection with the early passing of our brother. That question is not to-day to be answered. Our Lord and Master, however, makes to us the solemn promise that in the day when we stand ready to receive, when the heavens shall reveal the wisdom of God, we shall be made to understand.

In harmony with the beautiful sentiment of the song we have just heard, in harmony with the prayer of our brother, in harmony with the scriptures, in harmony with the purposes of God, we may patiently await the day of his counsel, and in the eternal world take to ourselves that degree of comprehension that will enable us to understand; and while we may not be able to experience the sentiment fully at this time, we have confidence to say that in the divine economy of our God, when the revealments of heaven are laid open to our vision we shall not only understand, but shall be content.

"There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed." Many things are hidden from us now, and for reasons which are likewise many. And it is well ordered that we cannot understand. Were we able to understand all things now covered from us, we would be made most miserable indeed: Partaking of none other of the divine attributes, with all presented to us that awaits us and those that we love in this world, without divine strength coupled with foresight divine, we would indeed be in a state much more unfortunate than that in which we are found to-day.

Among the reasons why we are not able to understand not only this hidden thing which confronts us to-day, and very many more of the distressing scenes of life—among the things, I say, which hinder us, is this: Our comprehension, aside from the limitations placed upon us in our making, is obscured. We are not able to comprehend many of the mysteries of life, the things which fall upon us and distress us, because we have fixed our attention on other things: Having fixed our hearts, our aspirations, our efforts upon the things we have desired, we are not able to comprehend the things which confront us. Clinging still to the things which we desire, but which are denied us, and turning from the things which we desire not, but which have been permitted to come to us, our vision becomes obscured, the meaning of the experiences from which we shrink covered, and hidden.

We are not able to understand to-day many of the things which distress us in this life because we have not reached our fullest development in this order. The things which distress us to-day, the meaning of which is hidden from us; the things which it seems to us we cannot now surmount we know of ourselves we cannot, the things of which we stand in fear and trembling, and in the face of which unless we are held by the sustaining power of God, we will yet be found wanting—these things are dark to us because we have not reached our fullest development; when if we exercise in patience and deliberation, continuing our energies in the heavenly way, we shall understand finally in our fuller development here many things not known to us now.

We are held from many comprehensions because God has wisely provided that in this order thus far we may come, and in his wisdom we are held from coming farther. In the mercy of God, for our good, for our development, and for our strength, in his tender consideration, while it may not seem tender to us because of the fact that his ways are not our ways.—many times he graciously holds from us, wisely ministers, and keeps from us that which we might otherwise comprehend, because in his matchless wisdom he sees that our development is best reached under such denial.

Furthermore, it is not necessary that we understand all things at this time. It is not necessary for our present forward and constructive effort; it is not necessary to our eternal salvation, that we understand all that may distress us. We have confidence that such portion as we need to know will be brought to us clearly, in order that we may be persuaded to continue our righteous efforts, and eventually come to our full reward.

And finally, when the heavens are opened to us we may then come to know if we may not now, that God has most graciously set his hand to deliver us from a worse fate by allowing what has fallen upon us to come to pass.

Now if there be any who come to this solemn meeting to-day with any degree of doubt incident to the passing of this life, or because the opportunity in the life of this man seems to have been cut short, let not that doubt extend toward God. Out of like conditions, when we are not able to comprehend situations which confront us; when we have thought that certain leadings have meant thus and so; or perchance when men may have failed in their expressions of the purposes of God—from these scenes our people sometimes carry a feeling of hesitation and of doubt. While I stand personally in this connection to-day at a pivotal point, I say without the least degree of hesitation, if there be in the minds of any of you a single doubt, let that doubt be cast upon the inspiration of man; let it be placed wherever it may be, but for the love of the great God, hold fast thy faith. As Christ expressed upon one occasion, "Have faith in God." Bide thy time. Cast not doubt upon God. If you doubt let it be in the wisdom of his workmen.

We are limited, we are slow and stumbling and fallable in our comprehension of the things of the kingdom of God. When we come to comprehend the mysterious workings of the inspiration of heaven, and so come more fully under its operations, we may understand what we do not understand to-day, that is, some of us may understand what we do not understand to-day, and in a fuller degree understand perhaps, as some may already more fully understand.

God has placed in the life of every man certain gifts and blessings and possibilities. The workings of his divine Spirit make possible to the comprehension of the minds of men these potentialities, by means of which we are able to understand that men may become competent workmen. So far as our people are concerned, we unite upon this basis; even though beyond the same we may not at this time be able to go, other than to say that discerning the capacities of our brethren we may not always discern to the fullest extent when and where they are to perform the part of which they are seen to be capable.

Now after all is said, and after all is done, we occupy here for a single purpose: that we may make ourselves ready and that we may minister to other men, helping them that altogether we may qualify for the hereafter. At best our labor, our time here is but a brief span. The essential thing in the life of every man is that he stand ready. If therefore, in our consideration of this situation we shall determine that our brother was ready, at least to a degree we may be content.

Our understanding of the Scriptures does not suggest to us that when we shall have finished our work here we have for all time completed our activity.

The Word suggests otherwise to us. In the 14th chapter of Revelation, John in writing of certain scenes which passed before him on the Isle of Patmos, says that after there had been shown to him certain mysterious workings he was about to fall down and worship the personage that had visited him, and from whom he had received his instruction. This personage, addressing John, said, "See that thou worship me not, for I am of thy fellow servants, the prophets." Do not fall down before me or worship me: I have been but a man, as you are a man. I worked and labored among men as one of the prophets of God, in times past. I am come now in the purposes of my Father, to speak to you these things. I am continuing, in other words, in my activity in the world which is beyond—and in behalf of the world in which you yet occupy.

And so with our brother. Having been made ready for the change, having been prepared, he passes on, not only to his reward, but to his fuller opportunity as a minister for Christ, in the things that have to do with his eternal kingdom.

A few words now applying the remaining portion of our theme:

The expression "Be ye therefore ready" it is true, was made in connection with the teaching of Christ with reference to his second advent, but the principle applies in all of our activities. "Be ye therefore ready," not only against the day of the second coming of Christ, but against the many changing scenes of this life, and as they fall upon you, either contemplated or suddenly, as a thief might come in the night to steal away and destroy, then shall you be able to stand and endure, even though all but overcome; and continuing until the coming of Christ, so shall you be able to understand and uncover all things that heretofore may have been mysteriously hidden.

In making this preparation the Savior suggests to us that we are to seek if we hope to find: Seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you; ask and ye shall receive. And this principle is to be carried into all of our activities.

We may not find in this life the thing for which we seek, yet we may find that which is better. In the divine economy of our God he sometimes withholds from us the thing we desire. And as we learn this lesson, to seek diligently, to dig deep, by continuous, persistent effort in righteous purpose to know the counsels of God, there shall be added unto us, not each day the thing we like, but that portion which is for our good upon that day, until finally in our unfolding development we shall come forth in the first resurrection morning, and in that state, the promise to us is that we shall know.

Now if we have any degree of comprehension as

The Big Question

What Shall We Give This Year?

To be sure we should not quit giving for that is a fundamental of this latter-day work—whole-hearted giving to God through man.

But it must be done wisely. No need of shutting our eyes and buying the first thing offered, regardless of its appropriateness.

Select gifts with the same intelligence that characterizes your other activities and let them be the helpful kind.

In this issue are a few of the many books and publications described that are sure to be acceptable and worth while. They are not all here, but we will be glad to send a price list of the rest.

to how we are to know, and how much we are to know in the eternal world, we have it unfolded to us in the expression, "Ye shall know even as ye are known." There shall be no thing withheld from Christ or the heavenly hosts that has been hidden in my life, or in me. And if I am to be known like that, I am to know like that. I am to know, even as I shall be known.

Let us therefore be strengthened, if not comforted in great measure, by these sacred promises. Let us remember that it remains for us to stand deeply embedded, firmly fixed in the faith of our fathers, in the expression of our eternal hope, and we have the promise that not one jot or one tittle of the law or promises of God shall pass away.

While we fall from this world, while our brother fell from it but recently, at a time unexpected and in a way which has brought a great shock to his family and to the entire community, there is for us a degree of comfort in the lesson we have read. God never promised that the sparrow should not fall; neither did he promise that no good man should fall from his place at a time when it would seem that his work was yet unfinished. What God did say through his son, Jesus Christ, was "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."

This man has not gone down therefore without the consideration of his heavenly Father. His family and friends are not to be left without his sustaining power. It is for us then not only to take hope, but to be comforted in the promise which brings to us the courage to move forward, under which moving we should receive consolation and strength.

It remains for us now to address ourselves for a few moments to the present situation in our community. And I solemnly call upon all gathered here to-day to witness this one thing: I would not mar the peace of this hour. Yet under the sacred responsibility which I feel pressing heavily upon me, I dare not withhold this one thing. I believe every good man who has made any study of the situation can bear witness that I speak the truth when I say that this man in this community, as the mayor of this city, began a noble piece of work. Now before this vast assembly, as his brother and fellow workman, as one who with him was interested in the welfare of this community, not only in the welfare of our people, but in the welfare of all the people of this community, and all the people who may follow after us, before this large concourse of people, as his fellow minister for Christ, I charge his fellow workmen, in the fear of God, to give to us, if he may be found in this community, as good a man to continue this good work. And I think, standing here in honor of his sacred memory, we are to be sustained in delivering this charge. I say in honor of his memory then, let us see to it that a proper man is furnished us and, let that man move forward that the noble piece of work for the elimination of evil and the establishment of righteousness which this man had the courage to begin—I say let it be carried forward without fear or molestation.

Our understanding is feeble, but I take the liberty to suggest, not having given it due consideration: If it takes this experience to bring home to us the absolute necessity of civic righteousness and a place of purity in which our young men shall be delivered, let us bow in humble submission, being ourselves denied for the good of all. Let us out of this experience be charged to move without fear for the good of all the people.

If there be any word necessary to the church, Let not your hearts be troubled. We are deeply moved by this early passing of our brother who had already brought to us the counsel of wisdom. We are constrained to say, however, that God who sustained the church in the beginning will continue to sustain us. We need have no fear with reference to the things which do not concern us personally. Let God attend to the work which belongs to him. Let us stand ready to receive. And when we do this in faithfulness and in diligence God in his own due time will provide us a man.

To the family I can only express this conviction, born of experiences rich and observations many: He who does not allow the sparrow to fall without him will not allow these who mourn to be pressed down beyond that which they are able. As sure as the sun rises to kiss our prairies into warmth and beauty to-morrow morning, just that sure will the God of heaven graciously minister and abundantly sustain.

And now the beautiful promise of our Lord, "Blessed are they that die in the Lord." For our brother, we have no need to fear. We believe with all who are gathered here to-day that he stood ready. No man can bring a charge against him. He stood ready to be received, and as is the promise of Christ in the economy of the gospel he becomes more blessed being gathered to those who have been worthy altogether, than if he had remained and continued the arduous duties that were imposed upon him; and as we verily believe, duties which would have been more arduous as he gathered more strength to endure.

"Blessed are they that die in the Lord;" and likewise blessed are they who remain in the Lord. If they die, they die unto me, is the promise; if they live, they live unto me. So blessed are we who live unto God in full confidence, in the exercise of our faith, in the sending of our energies into every good and heavenly purpose. Having faithfully occupied, passing over we may become blessed indeed.

We are to-day heavy in spirit. We are not yet conscious of the thing which has fallen upon us. We extend but feebly our sympathy to this family. Let us remember, therefore, that it is to-morrow and the day after, and the day after that, when time shall have allowed a degree of comprehension of this passing, that these who mourn shall need our support and comfort. So may it be given. And so may the comfort of God, and the ministration of his Holy Spirit be given, as we are confident they shall be, is our prayer.

HOLDEN HOME FOR THE AGED

At a meeting of the joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric which was held at Independence, Missouri, just prior to the General Conference, Bishop C. J. Hunt, apprised the council of an opportunity to secure for the church a large brick building at Holden, Missouri, formerly occupied by the Saint Cecilia Seminary. Upon the suggestion of the council, Brethren C. J. Hunt, F. A. McWethy and D. J. Krahl entered into negotiations with Mr. James Ritner, the owner of the building, with a view to securing it for the church. The terms at first submitted were not approved and further consideration was suspended. However during the post-conference council a proposition was submitted which met the unanimous approval of the council and a contract was entered into to secure the property for $8,250, which is about one fifth of what it originally cost to build. It should also be mentioned that Brother G. F. Baker and M. F. Haney, formerly of Grafton, West Virginia, but now residents of Holden Stake cheerfully aided the brethren in no small measure.

With the approval of the joint council the Presiding Bishop immediately set in operation the forces to renovate and equip the building for use as a home for the aged. During the summer, under the watchful eyes of President D. J. Krahl and Bishop C. J. Hunt this work has been going on, the Saints of Holden giving of their time and means to this end. In August the Holden Stake reunion was held upon the spacious lawn to the south of the building, and part of the building was utilized by the reunion committee. Included with the building it should also be stated is about five and one half acres of land.

Under the direction of Brother J. W. A. Bailey this was planted to tomatoes, sweet potatoes, beans and other vegetables for the use of the home this winter. Brother Joseph Kaler, who had been making his home at "Bonheim," has been busily engaged during the summer in looking after the garden and this fall as chief food conservator has gathered and canned several dozen gallon cans of tomatoes.

On the 15th of the month steam was turned into the boilers and it was decided that the "Holden Home for the Aged" was ready for occupancy. On the 20th eight of the brethren and sisters of "Bonheim" took up their abode at Holden. Each day, the weather

Author of "A Vineyard Story,"
"His First Venture," etc.

Those who are reading "A vineyard story," now running in the Autumn Leaves should be sure to read the book that precedes it—In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage.

One can hardly appreciate the one without the other, the present story being a sequel of this book.

In addition to being straightforwardly interesting, the story brings out in the lives of the characters all the gospel principles in such a way that a member's faith is strengthened, and those who are not members will gain a comprehensive insight into our teachings.

A logical present for any member of the family. In decorated binding—an ornament to any bookshelf and nicely illustrated.

permitting, several of those who have lived at "Bonheim" will remove to Holden. When all are there the home will be formally opened with Brother R. O. Self in charge as superintendent of the buildings and grounds and Sister Self as matron of the home.

While the home has not been equipped to accommodate to its full capacity of about 100, through the kindness of Brother Walter Beebe of Beebe and Runyan, of Omaha, furniture was secured at such a reasonable price that it was deemed wise to furnish fifty rooms for the present.

When vacant, Bonheim will be renovated and thereafter used as a home for the nurses of the Independence Sanitarium. This was very much needed, as their present quarters were inadequate, and a change of ownership required they seek another residence.

It is calculated that while the purchase of the Holden home for the aged will eventually require an outlay of about $12,000 for buildings, improvements and furniture, funds to meet this will be secured by sale of properties from which the church has been drawing no benefit, financial or otherwise, and for the present will be offset by the saving of the rent of the Sanitarium Nurses' home, and later when it is hoped that it will be found practicable to house the Saints now at Kirtland Home at Holden, the gross saving will exceed the carrying charges of the Holden property. The consolidation of Kensington, Bonheim and Kirtland Homes at Holden, in providing an adequate permanent home for the Sanitarium nurses, and securing to the church a suitable home for our aged that can be operated more cheaply, and which will furnish at least twice the accommodation offered by the three homes supplies two most urgent needs. When we report the formal opening of the home, we aim to tell you more in detail about it, and how the Saints and friends of Holden appreciate the establishment of this institution in their city.

THE ARMY AND NAVY INSURANCE LAW-- A PARTIAL SUMMARY

A division of military and naval insurance of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance has been organized as a part of the Treasury Department and is in active operation. A number of policies on the lives of soldiers have already been issued, aggregating nearly $25,000,000 in insurance. The benefits of the law are available to all members of the United States Army, Navy, and Nurses' Corps.

A short summary of some of the main features of the law follows:

Premiums for a $10,000 policy begin with $6.30 per month at ages 15, 16, and 17; increase to $6.40 per month for the ages 18, 19, and 20; to $6.50 per month for the ages 21, 22, and 23; to $6.60 per month for the ages of 24 and 25; to $6.70 per month for the ages of 26 and 27; to $6.80 per month for the ages of 28; to $6.90 per month for the ages of 29 and 30; to $7 per month for the age of 31, with progressive increases for ages above those given. The minimum amount of insurance that may be taken out is $1,000.

The compulsory allotment to a wife or children, which is separate from the insurance, shall not be less than $15 a month, and shall not exceed one-half of a man's pay. A voluntary allotment, subject to regulations, may be as large as the insured desires, within the limits of his pay.

In addition, the Government will pay monthly allowances as follows:

Class A. In the case of a man to his wife (including a former wife divorced) and to his child or children:

- (a) If there be a wife but no child, $15.
- (b) If there be a wife and one child, $25.
- (c) If there be a wife and two children, $32.50, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.
- (d) If there be no wife but one child, $5.
- (e) If there no wife but two children, $12.50.
- (f) If there be no wife but three children, $20.
- (g) If there be no wife but four children, $30, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.

Class B. In the case of a man or woman, to a grandchild, a parent, brother, or sister:

- (a) If there be one parent, $10.
- (b) If there be two parents, $20.
- (c) For each grandchild, brother, sister, and additional parent, $5.

In the case of a woman, to a child or children:

- (d) If there be one child, $5.
- (e) If there be two children, $12.50.
- (f) If there be three children, $20.
- (g) If there be four children, $30, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.

If the man makes an allotment to certain other dependent relatives the Government will also pay them an allowance which may equal the allotment, but this shall not be more than the difference between $50 and the allowance paid to the wife and children.

The increased compensation in case of death runs from a minimum of $20 monthly to a motherless child, or $25 monthly to a childless widow, to a maximum of $75 monthly to a widow and several children. The widowed mother may participate in the compensation.

In case of total disability the monthly compensation runs from a minimum of $30, if the injured man has neither wife nor child living, to a maximum of $75 if he has a wife and three or more children living, with $10 a month extra if he has a widowed mother dependent upon him.

The maximum is enlarged still further, for when the disabled man constantly requires a nurse or attendant, $20 monthly may be added. If the disability is due to the loss of both feet, both hands, or total blindness of both eyes, or if he is helpless or permanently bedridden, $100 monthly is granted.

The law contemplates future legislation for reeducation and vocational training for the disabled. It gives them full pay and their families the same allowance as for the last month of actual service during the term of reeducation.

THE WAR-SAVINGS PLAN SUMMARIZED

The war-savings plan provided for in the last bond act, of September 24, 1917, has been formulated and announced by the Treasury Department and goes into operation on Monday, December 3.

The plan puts it easily in reach of every American citizen to save money and at the same time aid the Government by supplying it with the sinews of war.

Stamps, which are the Government's certificates of indebtedness, are to be sold in two denominations—thrift stamps, which cost 25 cents each, and war-savings stamps, which cost from $4.12 to $4.23 each according to the month in which they are purchased.

With the first thrift stamp the purchaser is given a thrift card with spaces for 16 stamps. When 16 thrift stamps have been purchased and affixed the thrift card can be exchanged for a war-savings stamp by paying the difference between the $4 the thrift stamps represent and the current value of a war-savings stamp, which in December, 1917, and January, 1918, will be $4.12, and thereafter 1 cent per each succeeding month during the year 1918.

With the first war-savings stamp obtained by purchase or exchange the owner is given a war-savings certificate containing spaces for 20 war-saving stamps. If the 20 spaces are filled during December, 1917, or January, 1918, the cost to purchaser will be $4.12 for each stamp, or $82.40 for the full certificate, and on the 1st day of January, 1923, the Government will redeem the certificate at $100, giving the holder a net profit of $17.60 for the use of his money.

What is your child learning at home?

Does he have the proper opportunity to gain a knowledge of the latter-day work?

Are you doing all you can to provide the necessary literature for his spiritual education?

See that your children have the things that not only entertain, but build character and character-forming habits.

Do it, even if it means the sacrifice of something else.

Children may not appreciate the same things you do, therefore get something suitable for his age. Picked at random, here are some they will like:

Autumn Leaves—A bright and interesting monthly magazine for the youth of the church. Twelve teeming full numbers for only a dollar.

Stepping Stones—Are there any boys and girls in the church who do not have this indispensable weekly, edited especially for them? Fifty cents brings it 52 times.

Zion's Hope—Comes weekly for the small children who will read and reread it, gaining early from it the essential love for God and his children. 30 cents a year.

The Indian Maiden—A throbbingly interesting temperance story which will fortify the young mind with a knowledge of the evils of drink he will never forget. No. 363, cloth binding, postpaid$.60

Sadie and Her Pets—All children like pets and they will get much inspiration from this little book written especially for them. No. 367, cloth, postpaid$.60

Joan of Arc—A great story simply told by Marietta Walker. No. 370, cloth, postpaid$.60

January 1, 1923, provision is made whereby upon 10 days' written notice after January 1, 1918, such certificates will be redeemed by postmasters at their cost to the purchaser plus 1 cent a month on each war-savings stamp on the certificate.

The thrift stamps do not bear interest, but the war-savings stamps bear 4 per cent, compounded quarterly. The certificates will be dated January 2, 1918, and mature January 1, 1923.

Under the plan an amount as small as 25 cents can be invested in a government security, and as soon as $4 has been thus invested an interest-bearing certificate of the United States Government can be secured.

The stamps and certificates can be obtained from post offices, banks, or trust companies, at most railroad stations, stores, factories, and many other public places.

Having the entire wealth of the United States back of them, and being redeemable as above stated, there is no danger of any depreciation in value of the certificates.

WILL POLYGAMY "COME BACK"?

[The assault of the world war is primarily upon the family and the home—the home in every land. What will come out of it after the war is a matter of speculation. No doubt the evil spirit that in 1852 led Brigham Young to predict the final triumph and world-wide popularity of polygamy was quite prepared in due time to attempt to force a fulfillment of the prediction. At least the following from the Literary Digest for November 10 is of interest to our people along that line. Strange things may develop after the war. It is just possible that in some places a form of polygamy may be adopted in order to take care of the immense surplus of women and quickly reproduce a fighting force for the state, for unless militarism is crushed the chief aim of the world will be to breed soldiers. It is not likely, however, that any form of state-sanctioned polygamy will become general. But it is to be presumed that there will be a lowering of moral standards and public sentiment may come to wink at semisecret alliances of various kinds. The family and our form of monogamic marriage may feel the shock of the war long after the guns are silent.—E. A. S.]

A war poem recently expressed the observation of an old inhabitant of heaven on seeing the mass of newcomers stream up from the battle fields. "They must be rich in men down there," he mused, and wondered at the fine young fellows that could be spared. But the countries who make the sacrifices are appalled at their coming poverty, and, in their efforts to replace the lost, all sorts of old laws and traditions, human and divine, are going by the board. England has been a land of difficult, almost impossible, divorce, but now the problem seems to be to make it easy. One of the best-known legal authorities on divorce is quoted by the London Daily Telegraph as urging that "every legal facility be granted" in order that married people living apart may have "no excuse for avoiding the national duty of parenthood." He asserts that "at the present time a million men and women in this country are separated by justices' orders, and tens of thousands are living apart owing to domestic infelicity." In two days, it is stated, over three hundred applications for divorce were made to the Poor Persons' Department of the High Court of Justice. The great proportion of the applicants are said to be men, and the majority are soldiers whose wives, they allege, have been unfaithful during their absence. The secretary is quoted to this effect:

"The number of applications is daily increasing. In the first six months of this year we had 14,000 appeals for assistance, of which between five and six hundred have been granted, and the cases are now being proceeded with. There are no fees payable, but every applicant must find the solicitor's out-of-pocket expenses and expenses incidental to witnesses. If witnesses are not brought from a long distance the whole proceedings from beginning to end do not cost more than £10, and some cases may be completed for as low as £6. Before we take up a case we must be satisfied that the applicant is really poor. No one earning more than £3 a week should apply to us."

Information in a telegram from Rome, which may or may not be accurate, speaks of pamphlets widely circulated among German troops by the military authorities in which a sort of polygamy is urged under the general title, "Lateral marriage: the only means for the formation of a new powerful armed force and for ennoblement of morality." The New York Evening Sun comments on the information thus obtained:

"In one pamphlet forwarded to Rome explicit exhortation is addressed to married women, 'in the interest of the Fatherland,' to 'obtain the necessary permission from their husbands to contract lateral marriages, based upon personal inclination, with married men who in turn must obtain their wives' consent.' It is added that these lateral marriages, whose object is to increase the birth-rate and 'mitigate conditions brought about by the war,' can be 'dissolved after children are born.' The Vatican, not unnaturally, is indignant over such a proposal, and is preparing to denounce it."

THE JEWISH RESTORATION

Just now when the British Army is driving the Turk before it in Palestine, recalling the places made sacred through association with the steps of the Savior of mankind and the romantic as well as tragic history of the Jewish nation, it is significant that the government of Great Britain has recognized the Zionist movement and declared in favor of the establishment of a Jewish state in the Holy Land. This means the rehabilitation of the Jewish people with a national existence, the provision of a home for their old traditions and a refuge for the persecuted of that race after nearly two thousand years of political denationalization. And, there where the old fathers of this people, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, once dwelt in the tents of contentment, it is promised that their descendants shall again gather where a modern Moses shall lead them in safety, who, unlike the law-giver, shall not be denied entrance to the Promised Land that was the haven and sanctuary of wandering Israel.

And is not this contemplated reversion of Palestine to its original nationality significant of the restoration of other things upon which the hand of sacrilege has been laid, and that out of this great welter of world woe shall come the morning star that shall light all the peoples of the earth to the rebirth of that first democracy that ennobled the brotherhood of man through the anguish of Gethsemane and the blood sacrifice of Calvary.

If this two thousand year dream of the Jewish people is to have fulfillment in reoccupation of the home of their patriarchs, can we not see the "bow of promise" spanning the heavens in other lands for the equal fulfillment of the rights of common humanity and that regeneration which comes up out of great tribulation. —The Wheeling (West Virginia) Register, November 13, 1917.

ZIONISM AND THE WAR

One of the unexpected developments of the war is the very considerable likelihood that it will hasten the settlement of the Zionist question—a question vitally affecting the interests of the fourteen million souls in Europe and America of Jewish origin. The American public has not yet heard much of a turn of affairs that in England has aroused general interest and even become the subject of discussions in the War Office and the Cabinet. A Jewish regiment is being raised for service in Palestine, and the Government has been reported as on the point of formally espousing the cause of the Zionists.

Of all the claims now being urged upon the allied governments in behalf of small nationalities, none is more interesting than the proposal that Palestine be set apart as a Jewish state under allied protection, with local autonomy and free opportunity for the development there of a distinctive Jewish nationality. The British Government's action in raising a Jewish regiment for the Palestine campaign

Resolve that your time shall be spent in reading and studying some of the church books you have long hoped to read.

You'll be surprised at how much you have been missing if you haven't read the following books:

Young People's History—By Vida E. Smith. While it is written primarily for young folks, none of us are too old to enjoy reading it again and again. No. 126, cloth, postpaid$1

Beatrice Witherspoon—By Emma Burton. A story of the life of an active missionary's wife, who traveled much with her husband not only on this continent, but in the islands of the sea and to Australia. Inspires faith and gives courage. No. 360, cloth, postpaid$1.30

The Mormon Girl—By Pauline Dykes. A story of romance and intrigue among the Mormons in Salt Lake City, showing some of the perniciousness of plural marriage and the dominance of true love. No. 371, cloth, postpaid$1

Peter Bosten—By John Preston. In it a young man strives to comprehend the spirit of this work yet would resist it. Is finally converted. Has church characters you will know. No. 374, cloth, postpaid$1.00

Memoirs of W. W. Blair—One of the most influential men of the Reorganization and the story of his life is largely the story of the early days of the Reorganization. Valuable for its historical data as well as its spiritual concept. No. 236, cloth, postpaid$.75 amounts to an indorsement of the plan. Its future course rests largely with the Jews themselves. Many of the most influential Jews in England oppose a revival of nationalism. These are largely men who have attained power and distinction as British nationalists, and who therefore are quite satisfied with things as they are. Opposed to them is the growing Zionist movement, representing men and women who personally may enjoy every advantage, but who are moved by pride and interest in their race to work for the emancipation of the great majority of Jews who remain poor and oppressed. Its aims were stated at the first Zionist Congress, held at Basle in 1897: "The object of Zionism is to establish for the Jewish people a home in Palestine, secured by public law." The Basle program proceeds to point to the means by which this end is to be attained: "1. The promotion, on suitable lines, of the colonization of Palestine by Jewish agricultural and industrial workers. 2. The organization and binding together of Jewry by means of appropriate institutions, local and international, in accordance with the laws of each country. 3. The strengthening and fostering of Jewish national sentiment and consciousness. 4. Preparatory steps towards obtaining Government consent, where necessary, to the attainment of the aim of Zionism."—Mrs. Joseph Fels in The Public.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

In the Latter Days

We cannot too strongly urge the reading of Sister Sanford's most excellent article appearing in this issue, entitled, "Strengthening home ties and church ties." If ever there was a time when these suggestions are timely, it is in the vital NOW, when laxity of morals, laxity of purpose, laxity of unity, seem in the air; when the young are letting go of time-honored customs and are striking out for themselves into new and strange—and, alas! too often unfruitful—paths! Pleasure seems to have enthralled them; they seem to think desire is the only requisite for gratification. "I want," or "I don't like," seem to be grounds and excuse for either the doing or the failure to do; and parents, swinging from the rigid harshness of a few generations back, have gone to the other extreme, and, hiding behind the thought, "I had such a hard time when I was young, I want my children to have a good time," they have let down the bars, and given the youngsters free rein and liberty to follow unrestrained their untrained will!

The complexities of modern life, the haste of it all, the turmoil and the stress of it, have entered into the homes of the Saints as well as the people of the world, and many of us have abolished the family devotion; the quiet readings and study in the family groupings, have merged into a hasty performance of home duties prior to a vanishing to the picture show or other place of amusement or relaxation. Molly is going to a party; Jack to the gym; father and mother to the club, or the banquet, or the line party at the play; little Jennie has invited some chums in to make merry with taffy or popcorn; while Willie goes out to play pranks with "the gang" or to the movie round the corner! Is the picture over-drawn? With changes, such as perhaps father has gone to priesthood meeting, or mother to choir practice, or both to prayer meeting, and sister to a concert, brother to a lecture, etc., it might quite fairly represent the conditions in the average modern home of an evening. Sunday afternoons are as diversified; the old-fashioned pleasures of song or story, of book or music, shared together, in the family group, seem to have vanished with the days of wood-chooping in pioneer forests!

Saints, where lies the remedy? Does God want us to live thus? Is there no clear path between the rush, the whirl, and complete stagnation? Is there no golden mean between motor cars and ox-teams? Between the wireless and the stage coach? Would that we could learn the secret of poise and calm; of choosing wisely among the multitudinous array that is offered; of eliminating the useless, and adapting the nourishing forces of life to a steady upbuilding, hindered neither by rush nor neglect. Our children are absorbing the spirit of haste and of overreaching; they stand bewildered, as do we, between the manifold demands of modern school methods, modern opportunities for relaxation, for pleasure and enjoyment, and modern facilities for forgetting and ignoring the real purpose of life and its ultimate goal!

Read Sister Sanford's helpful paper, and see if we cannot find many suggestions of real value, many gentle reminders of remissness in duty, and many stimulating thoughts for new effort, new determination to "bring up our children in truth and righteousness," according to the admonition which has come to us in these latter days of peril and turmoil!

Strengthening Home Ties and Church Ties

Abraham Lincoln, perhaps our greatest American, once said, "All that I am and all that I ever hope to be I owe to my mother." Great men before and since Lincoln have said the same thing, and how truly they spoke.

The destiny of the church and of the Nation lies far more in the hands of the mothers than in the hands of those who possess power. The world is now awaking to the fact that the women are the educators of the human race and that they must be trained for their great work or else a new generation cannot accomplish its task. Much valuable assistance is now being given the mothers by consecrated men and women and great things are being planned and accomplished for the benefit of the children and young people. We have had a man age and a woman age; we are now at the dawn of a child age.

Every mother dreams dreams and plans about the future of her child in which he figures as a superior person, but it takes something beside dreaming to help a child to develop those qualities that will make him successful. There must be untiring effort on the part of the mother to drill her child until he has formed habits that will give him the best start in life. "Habit is a rut, made by going over the same course repeatedly—a rut into which the same act will fall ever afterwards." Children are creatures of habit. The habit forming of children should not be left to chance or environment, but should be established by conscious and repeated effort. We see children growing up all about us with habits that are distasteful, habits that will handicap them through life. We see grown people with habits that bring sorrow to all around them—habits that could have been broken so easily in childhood. They tell us that the worst characters in history possessed characteristics which if properly directed would have placed them in the front ranks of civilization. How great then is the need of scientific child training!

The leak in our civilization is in the American home. If great men are not so plentiful as they might be and as we wish they were, it is because great fathers and mothers are scarce. It is because parents have depended upon public schools for the academic side of their children's education and on Sunday schools and young people's organizations for their spiritual life. The hearth has disappeared, its cheer has fled into the street, and until it is restored we cannot accomplish the great work that lies before us.

Much has been said of the duty of children to their parents. Much more might be said of the duty of parents to their children. Our children are what we make them. Character is not born but builded. Every parent is the architect of his child's character, the constructor of its future career. Are we sufficiently impressed with the importance of this?

Children absorb what is in the atmosphere, therefore the atmosphere of a home should be carefully guarded. All gossip should be kept from the ears of little children, and older people should never be discussed in their presence. A mother's real inner life inevitably tells upon that of her children. This fact should arouse in her a desire to live the highest, noblest spiritual life of which she is capable.

In order to help their children to develop honest, upright characters, parents must constantly keep in mind their four-fold nature; the physical, mental, moral and spiritual and give them every opportunity for an all-round development. They should take a vital interest in the work or play that interests them, and we can interest the children in almost any line we wish by surrounding them with pictures and articles and carrying on conversations with them about that certain thing.

If the children are to get the greater part of their education from the world about them they should be taught to use their senses. The majority of people are only half alive because they do not sense things. Make the children see beauty in the earth and sky and water and in living things. Help them to find interest in something outside of worldly pleasures and petty personalities. Cultivate a spirit of gratitude and thankfulness. Train them to get the other person's point of view—to be sympathetic and broad-minded, and to learn to put themselves in the other fellow's place. Pampering a boy or girl leads to selfishness and weakness. The "mother love" which shields a child from all hardship and all sacrifice, is an extremely selfish form of love, inconsiderate of the child's future welfare as an individual. He must go out into the world and fight his battles alone, and if she can arm him with the armor of good habits, self-denial, faith and reverence, he goes forth ready to defy the demons of appetite within, the evils of temptation without, and she need have no fear. True, some mighty force may hurl him for a moment from the path of rectitude, but even then, the reaction will swing him back into the accustomed path.

Some mothers feel that they have all they can attend to in clothing and feeding their children, and that they cannot find time to play with them or enter into their life as they would like to. It is these mothers who are finding it hard to hold their young people. A very small portion of each day spent in companionship with the children will produce results beyond comprehension.

Every home should establish a children's hour—an hour held sacred to the children, when simple games may be entered into by the entire family. Children need to be taught how to play, and what to play in order to get the most out of their plays, for by them they should learn lessons of self-control, justice, honesty, unselfishness, fair play, etc., and parents may learn much by quietly observing their children's attitude during play.

Every home should contain a musical instrument of some kind, preferably a piano. Children love music, and next to the power to read, the ability to appreciate good music gives mortals the greatest pleasure. When children are tired and out of sorts nothing will bring about harmony so quickly. No parent, who understands anything at all about music, should hesitate to instruct their children. It takes time, and patience, of course, but the results are well worth it. If children are encouraged to take part in little family concerts it will be found a great help to them when it comes to taking part in larger affairs outside the home.

Parents should cultivate the art of story-telling. Well told stories, which have in them admirable traits of character, are powerful instruments in their hands. Good stories cultivate a taste for good literature, and it is just as easy to provide good material as the trashy stories one finds on the market. No other reading in after life is so vital as the books that are put into a child's hand when his mind is just forming. With plenty of good, clean, interesting reading, dime novels will be less dangerous. This is also true of pictures. If children are taught the beauty of good pictures, the Sunday comic section will not have so bad an influence on them. The Perry pictures make it possible for children to become familiar with all the great paintings and their interest may be aroused by letting them make an album of their own and learning the story connected with each.

Sunday ought to be the happiest and best day of the week in every home. Childish impulses should be directed into channels suited to the sacredness of the day. Parents should make Sunday the day around which shall cluster throughout the entire life of each child the most sacred recollections of childhood. Between birth and the age of twenty-one years there are three solid years of Sundays—an amount of time almost equal to the number of years given to an entire college course. The Creator has not laid upon parents the responsibilities of parenthood without giving them ample time and opportunity to discharge those obligations to him, to themselves and to their children. The same parental authority that secures a child's devotion to the irksome duties of secular life should be exercised to establish a similar devotion to religious duties and spiritual concerns. If left to their own inclinations children will invariably go wrong in the affairs of both worlds. Parents owe it to their children to teach them to be reverent in God's house, to bow their heads in prayer and to be attentive to the sermon.

The parent who fails to use wisely the opportunities of Sunday afternoons for impressing the children with spiritual truths, loses the greatest opportunity that family life affords. Many profitable games may be used and great truths instilled in their minds in a way that will never be forgotten. Bible and Book of Mormon drills are excellent. Children like to be reviewed and given a chance to tell what they know. The Junior Religio Quarterly for this term takes up the study of the history of the church from its very earliest days. These lessons should be valuable to every parent. They should become thoroughly familiar with the lessons themselves and then adapt the material to the minds of their children, making it as simple and interesting as possible. The children will be sure to enjoy it if it is handled properly, and now is the time to prepare them for the great work of the future.

It is the mother's friendship and sympathetic understanding more than anything else that helps to shape her children's lives for future usefulness. It is her love and faith and the tender memories of a pleasant home life that gives them courage and strength to "fight the good fight." The mother's companionship has helped produce our best men and women. It is every mother's duty to make the greatest possible success of their children's lives. The school at its best, builds upon the home instruction, supplementing and developing the teaching given by wise parents. Let us pray earnestly for wisdom, strive to make our homes a fit dwelling for the Holy Spirit and we will not need many discussions on "How to hold our young people."

(Read before the Massachusetts District Sunday school convention, November 11, 1917.)

Our Auxiliary President Afield

It has been pleasing and gratifying to note the hearty reception which has been accorded to our most valiant general president, in her travels and work among the various branches of the Saints. Sister Sandy is very industrious in pursuance of her plans to help the sisters to see the opportunities which lie at their doors, opportunities for enlarged service to the church, in their neighborhoods, and in their families. Sister Sandy will have gathered, ere she returns, a rich store of facts and information, of insight into conditions in small branches, on the "frontiers," as they are called, all of which should serve to increase her qualifications for the task of superintending the activities of our organized women, of directing the same into most profitable channels, and of understanding and meeting all needs and opportunities.

Activities of Our Honorary President

We are most pleased, also, to have been kept in touch, from time to time, with the work of our honorary president, Sister Frederick M. Smith. Compelled for a time to withdraw from heavy responsibilities which taxed her limited strength too severely, she has, nevertheless, not been asleep, indifferent, or inactive in affairs which concern our women. She has answered many letters, counseled with the general officers, suggested policies and improvements, and constantly stimulated to fresh endeavors her fellow workers in the auxiliary. In addition, she has had some very practical experiences in social service work. In the city of Colorado Springs this summer, she was for weeks in close touch with the Commission of Public Welfare, and had opportunity to observe its splendid work in safe-guarding the morals of the young. She was privileged to help in this and her influence was felt for good among the wayward ones with whom she was thrown in contact. Sister Smith had long studied these conditions from the theoretical side, and was grateful for this opportunity to become acquainted with the practical workings of these agencies for uplift among us. Her vision and her sympathies have been enlarged through these experiences, and she will in time be able to still more ably assist the women of the church in their plans for active work among the unfortunate ones of earth. Sister Smith is also keeping in close touch with the matter with which she was particularly intrusted at our last General Convention: that of more fully coordinating the Women's Auxiliary activities with those of the church. We may confidently expect, next spring, to have opened to our consideration definite plans by which we may more efficiently serve the church in its widest missions.

A Call to Prayer

It is not often that we get so earnest and pitiful an appeal as that which comes from a sister in the East who is suffering from a case of cancer. She has had an operation which the doctors think has failed, and she feels that only in God, and in the prayers to him of the Saints, rest her chance and hope of remaining with her five children who need her care and ministrations. She pleads with the sisters to set aside a day of fasting and prayer for her, that she may thus be healed and restored to her family. It is good for us to heed such a call; it is good for us to share another's trouble, and if we may suggest such a thing, shall we not all try to remember this sister's request, selecting a day—let us say, the first Wednesday in December—for this purpose? It is for Sister Oldenburg of Rochester, New York.

Beauty Spots

It is the beauty spots in our thought that bring beauty spots into our gardens and our cities. These are the things that bring beauty spots into our lives until finally all the room is taken up by "spots" and nothing but beauty remains. That is the "city beautiful" in the hearts of men.

The realities of to-day surpass the ideals of yesterday.—Frothingham.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

A Wilted Rose

I found you to-night on the sidewalk
While hurrying down the street;
A poor little wilted bud,
Who was once so fresh and sweet.
And I wondered who had plucked you
And carelessly cast you away,
During the heat and bustle,
The worry and glare of the day.

Glad I am that I found you,
Poor little forsaken rose,
A dear little seven sister,
For I see you were one of those.
Spurned on the street and forsaken,
Slowly dying, alone,
I placed you safe on my bosom
And tenderly carried you home.

For a hint of your former beauty
Remained and appealed to me,
And I knew that you must have been lovely
When torn from your parent tree.
I have tended and gently refreshed you
Till again you are very fair,
And you smile with adorning sweetness
From your place in the window there.

Glad am I that I found you
And lengthened your little day
After some careless destroyer
Had heartlessly thrown you away.
And I feel a pride of possession
That once more you are fair to see;
You dear little seven sister
Who has bloomed again for me.

Earth's Autumn

The lovely autumn days again are here;
The golden harvest time of all the year.
Our country's warning call we've tried to heed,
Prepared as best we could for future need.
Our voices raise
In songs of praise
To God above, for all his love and care.

Old Father Time his ceaseless rounds renew,
The while portentous clouds obscure our view.
While yet 'tis calm, for those who're still at home,
We feel 'tis but the calm before the storm.
The world's at war
As ne'er before;

Can we as Saints escape the great alarm?

E'en as the summer time is past and gone
The sowing time and harvest nearly done,
The autumn of this world we know is here
When Earth's commotions strike the heart with fear.
When one by one,
Each stalwart son
Of our own Nation will be called to war.

One of the Big Events of a Child's Life

Christmas means much to the child—and it is not always the quantity of our gifts that counts.

The simple gifts that we offer to prove that it is our love that prompts them are what really count.

See that some books are among the presents this year, right under the toe of the stocking.

If necessary, take the personal interest in them to explain the good that comes from reading clean and wholesome books.

If you are not sure, select from this list, which is not complete, but will help:

The Happiest Christmas and The Silver Thimble—A child's book that should be in every collection.
No. 364, cloth$1.40

Easy Steps in Sewing for Big and Little Girls—Wonderfully illustrated in two colors, with many patterns for doll dresses, etc.
No. 403, postpaid$1.70

The Mary Frances Cook Book—Makes cooking a delight with its recipes just the right size for the little miss. Scores of pictures and decorations.
No. 402, postpaid$1.40

The Gospel Story and Footsteps of Jesus—Inspires noble thoughts and incites noble deeds.
No. 366, cloth$1.60

To-day, our joyful hearts are tuned to praise—
 For blessed peace and love, which crowns our days.
 To-morrow? Ah! who knows; who dares to say
 What unknown horror lurks along the way?
 Will specter grim
 Drown thoughts of Him
 Who came to earth and died, all men to save?

When war and bloodshed stain our own fair land,
 Will death and famine, walking hand in hand,
 Strike terror to the Saints of God the same
 As to the world who reverence not his name?
 Oh! God forbid.
 Let us be hid
 Beneath the sheltering hollow of thy hand.

The promise has been given those who stand
 True to the faith, one firm, united band—
 (Though test to prove our love may come to all)
 Protection by his power, whate'er befall.
 We prove our love
 To God above
 By loving service to our fellow men.

No greater love hath any than to give
 His life that others—friend or foe—might live.
 One life have we (say not it is our own,
 And lost it be if lived for self alone)
 That we may give;
 Not die, but live
 That some one may be guided to the throne.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Material God Most Uses

I am still interested in the Master's cause and love to see it prosper. While nations are contending for supremacy, regardless as to cost and suffering that falls upon the innocent, it is comforting to trust in the Lord and to feel assured that his dominion is supreme, and that he holds the destiny of all in his hands. With hope we can look forward to the day when the "Prince of peace" shall reign, and when nations shall learn war no more.

The day may come when the nations will be hungering for the gospel of peace. May we not hope that the failure of the present tremendous conflict will finally teach the masses to seek for something better than the means of warfare and destruction? But when such a day comes will we as a people be prepared and ready for the great sacrifice that may be required?

From some of the things we frequently hear and read, one might conclude that education and scholarship was the sole qualification for a minister for Christ, and it almost causes some of us whose opportunity in youth was not so favorable, to feel like presenting our resignation. Yet we are convinced that while education is desirable and an important help it is by no means the only thing needed.

As an individual I have felt the need of a better education all along in my work, and I am thankful that the young of to-day have superior advantages to what was my lot. I, however, think there are great dangers in trusting too much in the wisdom of man, for it is as true now as when Paul wrote: "The world by wisdom knew not God."

I am not making a plea for ignorance, as I believe it the duty of all to qualify themselves, in order to perform their part of the Master's work well, and in a way that shall appeal to honest and fair-minded men and women, but I think we should be careful and avoid extremes.

The Lord selected men with but limited education to lay the foundation of the latter-day work, and as a rule it has been men of similar attainments that have been its standard-bearers and supporters from 1830 until the present. It has been men with only a common education that have been found in the front rank, but with the love of God in their hearts, they have been acknowledged of heaven, and their labors crowned with success. From an earthly standpoint they have seemed disqualified, yet when they encountered opposition—and that sometimes from the wise and the learned—the cause was not made to suffer, as the Spirit of God was with them. The work has required sacrifice and toil, and as a rule it has been men with only a limited education that has been willing to bear the burden, regardless as to what would be the earthly reward.

It is said: "God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform," and I have yet the faith that he can and will qualify the faithful and humble who strive to do their duty. I am of the opinion that Jesus, the great teacher, had but little of what may be termed worldly wisdom, and was not regarded as a scholar. The prophet wrote of him: "When we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." It may be claimed that this applies solely to his physical appearance, and not to his attained qualifications, but we are safe to conclude that when he, at twelve years of age, astonished all who heard him, when disputing with the doctors in the temple, it was by the gift and power of God, he being in his Father's business.

When at a later time, he astounded the Jews with his doctrine, they said: "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" He selected for his ministry men that in the eyes of the world were disqualified. Even after Christ had been their instructor for years and their contact with the world had given them experience, those who heard them, "perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men." Yet these men were the chosen of God, as special witnesses of the resurrection of Christ, the very foundation of the gospel.

I cannot and have no desire to get away from the original faith that God will qualify his ministry, and thus fulfill the promise: "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of the prudent men shall be hid." I think it may be said to the Saints to-day, as was said by Paul to the saints in Corinth: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty. And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are: That no flesh should glory in his presence." Is not this true in regard to God's work in this dispensation? If this latter-day work had been depending solely on scholarship, where would we have been to-day?

I know the argument: The unlearned cannot reach the educated and refined, as they will not listen to them. That may, as a general rule, be true, but I question very much that the gospel of Christ will reach anyone until he, like Saul of Tarsus, is willing to come down from his lofty station, to receive the truth from whoever the Lord has chosen. One of the signs that Christ could point to as evidence of his calling was: "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." Ought we not to be content if we can point to similar results to-day?

The Lord no doubt will carry on his work in his own way and according to his wisdom, and I am confident it will be preserved by him, possibly, not only to the astonishment of the world, but also in a way contrary to our expectations.

Where the faith has been understood and the Saints have lived a life corresponding with their profession, they have gained the respect and good will of their neighbors, even though they may have looked upon their religion as a deception. The feasibility of the advice of our late and honored president, Joseph Smith, to make the name of Latter Day Saint honorable, by honest and upright lives, has been demonstrated again and again, and that, too, where the Saints were only on an average so far as education goes.

According to the word of the Lord the important qualification for one engaged in his service, is as follows: "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care." Likewise: "He that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Christmas Offering

As the time of Christmas draws near I am reminded of the united effort being made this year to swell the Christmas offering fund. The Oklahoma City Sunday school has almost pledged itself to send one hundred and fifty dollars this year to the Christmas offering. We have much confidence that we shall reach the mark, but to do so will require self-denial and sacrifice. The Master has said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." In another verse he concludes thus: "So likewise, whosoever he of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." This is a day of sacrifice and self-denial.

The most up-to-date word is: "Conservation"—save, save, save. We can celebrate Christmas as Christmas should, as becometh Latter Day Saints by consecration and true worship to God in prayer and thanksgiving. We need not follow the world's manner and style by spending our money for whisky, egg-nog, wine and revelry; nor by costly dinners, foolish and extravagant presents, and in numerous ways by squandering our money. But in this hour of great need—need of sacrifice and self-denial—use our means, the means that God has given us, for the good of the Lord's work and help pay this terrible debt.

The true spirit of the Christmas offering, as I understand it, is for us to avoid the useless and foolish expenditure of money and send the amount to the Bishop. It is very gratifying to observe that the Spirit is gaining in influencing the lives of the Saints.

A few years ago I beheld a most inspiring scene in the Independence Sunday school, when several hundred children cheerfully and unitedly responded with uplifted hands that they were willing to sacrifice and deny themselves of Christmas gifts and let the money go to the Christmas offering fund.

There is in the church to-day about eighty thousand members; counting five members to the family, that would be sixteen thousand families. Sixteen thousand families united

THE NEW TRACT CASES

In their leaflet of instructions the General Gospel Literature Commission advertised that they would have tract cases for distribution, either for sale or given free with orders for tracts.

A very good model was worked out and some made up, but it was found that by making them by hand in the small quantities required, it would cost about a dollar apiece. If we had a demand for several hundred, they might be made cheaper by purchasing dies for cutting the material.

We made up 25 as a trial and will sell them at actual cost—one dollar postpaid. If desired, we will send one free with any ten-dollar tract order.

They are worth a dollar, easily, but we feared it would be inadvisable to try to sell one regularly for more, so when these are gone, no more will be available.

Order one to-day for your church, or for any other good public places where tracts would be taken. They are attractively made, with three compartments of varying heights which hold the literature up nicely till it is all taken. The material is heavy book board, covered with book cloth and are intended to hang on the wall.

with heart and soul could easily save and deny themselves of five dollars on an average to each family. Most families would spend five to twenty-five dollars at Christmas time, that could be avoided. By a willingness to sacrifice and deny ourselves, that same amount could be sent to the Christmas offering fund. And yet the birthday of our Master could be observed and properly commemorated without the expenditure of this money.

Remember the church debt remover—the Christmas offering. Let us make it spell: "The church debt is paid."

News from Toronto

On Sunday, November 11, Bishop R. C. Evans opened his fourteenth season in Toronto theaters. He is preaching in the same house as last year, Shea's, Corner Victoria and Richmond Streets, with a seating capacity of over two thousand. Every seat was taken and a number turned away. The same method of advertising is being carried out as in past seasons. We look for a splendid winter as our work has been thoroughly established that we have no fear of failure.

Brother Evan's subject was, "Why God permits war," which he handled in his usual forceful style. The immense audience gave him a good reception, and it seemed like a happy reunion, to once again meet the big crowd. Many faces have become familiar by their constant attendance through the past years. While the subject was a war theme, yet Brother Evans did not fail to get in the gospel. Next Sunday his subject will be "A soldier's reward after death." This is an interesting topic and will give a good opportunity to present our belief about rewards.

The work in this city has made good progress, there being one hundred and twenty-five baptisms during the ten months ending October 31. Our branch reunion at Low Banks, in August, was the largest we have ever had, there being one hundred and thirty-eight tents on the ground. Notwithstanding the high cost of living it was a success financially. Meals were fifteen cents and children under eight years free. Many improvements of a permanent character have been made; and splendid reunion grounds are being developed. It is the big event of the summer, while the theater services are the winter attraction.

The Sunday school, Religio and Woman's Auxiliary are all in a flourishing condition, being very busy in their different lines of work. The ladies are preparing for a big bazaar in December. They usually clean up a handsome sum at their bazaars. Sister Lizzie Evans is president and during the past year this society has greatly increased in numbers. It has always been a strong financial support to our branch and is one of the best societies we have.

The Latter Day Saint Dramatic Club, under the direction of Brother Evans, played "East Lynne" on Monday and Tuesday evenings. The house was packed each night. All parts were well taken. The proceeds go to the purchasing of literature for free distribution throughout the city. A small army of young Saints are busy distributing sermons and engaging people in conversation where opportunity offers. Many thousands of sermons are distributed during the season. The problem here is not how to get the work moving; but rather how to keep up with it as it moves along. A very great change has taken place in Toronto since Brother Evans commenced his work here fourteen years ago, and we hope the good work may continue.

Florida Reunion

Reunion of the Florida District was held at Dixonville, Alabama, eight miles south of Brewton, Alabama, October 27 to November 4. F. M. Slover, J. W. McKnight, D. M. Rudd and S. H. Fields were chosen as a presidency. A. E. Warr, secretary. Sister C. J. Clark, chorister.

We were favored with the presence and preaching of the veteran, J. C. Crabb. He is still "young" in the work and his preaching was enjoyed by all. Two were baptized during the reunion. The attendance was better than last year, the meetings were good throughout and a spirit of uplift was manifest. The round table discussions were of special interest and proved to be a feature of the meetings. There is a growing demand for meetings of this kind, which we feel is an index to a greater tendency toward individual preparation, without which Zion cannot be redeemed.

A committee of three was appointed to make investigation and report to the next district conference as to the advisability of holding a reunion in 1918, and motion prevailed that the second conference from now take action on the matter.

There was present of the missionary force, F. M. Slover, F. A. Rowe, J. W. McKnight, S. H. Fields.

Reunion Secretary.

Trusting in the Arm of Flesh

From the days of youth, more especially since I began to have more or less contact with the public; during my professional training and now as a public servant, I have often been approached, almost to the point of provocation, by representatives of life insurance companies. It has been a query to me whether I am a subject of pity or an object of prey, but it would meet my hearty approval if the word protection could be removed from English parlance.

As we grow into years of accountability we are daily brought face to face with the stern reality that to live we must eat, and that our bodies are a part of the soul mechanism, which must be fed, even a balanced ration, that the spirit may find a suitable abode for its culture, growth, and development.

For this cause we toil, that we and our dependents may continue to exist to our mortal three score and ten. We invest, that a home or place of existence be possible, where an altar may be erected to the Omnipotent, and wherein may be housed that which we are pleased to call "ours."

It is in this inning of the game that the philanthropic life insurance agent comes with his well-learned lesson, a voice quivering with emotion, since but yesterweek he had the sweet privilege of paying a policy (1,000) to Mrs. Did-Not-Expect-it, whose provider met an untimely death. How happy and grateful she appeared! How it actually remedied or alleviated the loss of her John! Now she could hire an auto-hearse; employ the Right Reverend D. D. from the city to eulogize at the "parting of the clay."

How often the old adage is exemplified—"Easy come, easy go."

Did Mrs. D. stop to consider that the revenue of the companies are largely premiums paid by Mr. and Mrs. Comfort, who in the days of prosperity were attracted by the eloquence of solicitors to sign up and receive $5,000 in twenty years. "Just like finding it."

The Comfort's at twenty-five often become the Hardup's at thirty-five years. Grocery bills unpaid, a "toss up" between paying premium or house rent and obliged to default the payment.

Watch a half dozen dependents musing on the unprotected floor, in youth a genial companion, now irritable, and lines irascible in the once rounded face. A head now streaked with gray inclosing a conscience of recalling the $1,500 paid in installments since their marriage.

The first man died to beat the policy, the second lived to see his reward, yet they twain had placed their trust in the arm of flesh.

The benevolence instilled in the mind of the unsophisticated was "weighed in the balance and found wanting."

A clean, moral, young man at the age of twenty-five (a desired prospect) with his chosen mate sets about in their Eden to build their nest, and with vim and vigor, brain and brawn, together they toil. An added responsibility graces their home, perhaps shortly succeeded by other heirs. The happy parents toil the harder to meet necessary obligations and provide comforts of life.

The "protector" pays his visit and tells of the $2,000 estate to be administered should the provider be called to man the fort on the other side.

Now in reality this annual fifty or sixty dollars in premiums to these good people during the days of home building and dependents are as large and dear as should be the $2,000, twenty years hence when the home possibly is paid and the children, paying on the investment. Should good fortune have smiled on them, so as to set aside the equivalent of the premiums, this would have accumulated just as much at interest and be available to the owner for further investment or the training into professionalists of the children.

I once was asked regarding church polity as to life insurance. As to direct legislation I know of none, but deducting from other measures bearing on the subject, gain the grounds for an opinion.

Though I annually pay to a company a stipulated amount to insure my life, and they even succeeded for a time, would the premium be added to necessary expenses, subtracted from receipts and the balance tithed, in spite of the phrase, "Cursed is the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm"? Will God open the windows of heaven, and pour out a blessing that there shall not be room to hold it? How can the windows of heaven be opened upon an insurance policy, and how can we try God? By dying after the first payment? "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts."

KANSAS CITY, KANSAS.

Editors Herald: Being aware of the fact that some of your readers were once associated with us here in our little branch, those whom we still remember so fondly as being of great service to us in times of need in inspiring us with their manifestations of zeal and interest in the great work we represent, these Saints we feel would like to learn how it is with us now, and hence we are glad to say, "Altogether lovely."

Our last quarter has been one of unusual activity along all lines. Brother and Sister Etzenhouser seem to be a perfect fit for the place given them. Several new features have been inaugurated which seem to have become effective in creating a new and greater interest and more favorable future results. Bishop Keir came over and preached us a good sermon, concluding with some very much appreciated information upon inventories and tithing, which was very instructive and well received.

I have distributed up to date over fifteen hundred copies of papers and tracts in some three hundred homes, and have some families apparently well interested in our faith. I am very anxious to keep in close touch with them and I inclose one dollar for HERALD for four nonmembers, hoping when that time expires they will be sufficiently interested to continue to take them at their own cost. If not, I will continue to pay for that number until I see results. I understand that nonmembers get the Ensign for fifty cents a year. If this is not so, I will renew at time the inclosed is exhausted. I can get Ensigns enough here from our members to distribute with the HERALDS.

Last Sunday being College Day, I have given a special contribution in behalf of Graceland in an article written for publication that will go into over three hundred homes in twenty different States. I copied the most favorable features of it found in the last conference report, with the most favorable comments upon it I was able to present. Thus it will be read by many hundreds of my relatives, besides multitudes able to read it now in my biography.

Our little branch is making an extra effort to double its Christmas offering, its mark now being one hundred and fifty dollars. Also I learn other branches are being urged to pile up their utmost in order that the old and long-standing church debt may be lightened, which is a just and righteous demand and a duty incumbent upon every Saint to help as best they can in this important matter.

Yet I ask, Is there not another debt even more urgent and longer neglected that demands our most earnest and sacred, and prompt attention, namely the erection of a monument over the graves of our martyred founder, prophet and president, and his brother, Hyrum?

Is Your Boy Contented at Home?

If not, it may be because he is not provided with what his nature demands. Look about and see if he has plenty of good reading matter of the kind he needs and likes.

Don't be disappointed if his taste is not yours—possibly it will be when he is as old as you are. Get him books and magazines suitable for his age and you will have gone a long way toward keeping him happily at home.

In addition to the Stepping Stones and Autumn Leaves, he should have some magazines such as The American Boy, The Youth's Companion, The Boy Scout Magazine, The Pathfinder, etc.

Send your subscriptions to us and we'll take care of them, either singly or in such clubs as you find listed elsewhere. The commission we get will go into the church treasury, just as the Christmas offering and similar savings.

Then here are some books he will like and should have:

Our Boys—A social purity book issued by the Woman's Auxiliary.

No. 332, cloth$55

Perfect Boyhood—Another good social purity book by T. W. Shannon. Has information he will get—you should see that he gets it properly.

No. 349, cloth$50

No. 350, paper$.25

The Two-Story Book—Sufficient action and interest to hold him and when he gets through he'll know many interesting and vital things.

No. 372, cloth$55

His First Venture and the Sequel—A story of a boy, written for boys. You'll want to read it, too.

What greater debts could we owe than this? Ought it not to be the first debt to be paid? We can recompense the owners of the church debt with interest, but how are we to excuse ourselves for this long and procrastinated neglect of respect and honor so justly due to those who shed their blood and laid their lives upon the altar of the religion we now so rejoice over and which is so dear and sacred to our hearts (or ought to be).

I would like to see both of these debts wiped out and have a clear field in which to labor henceforth. And if it seems to be the more important that the church debt be paid first, then do it, and let the debt of honor come immediately after. I feel very much like there could not occur anything to help me more to die happy than to know these debts were paid. Hence I will give twenty-five dollars for the church debt, and fifty dollars for the debt of honor to our martyred founders, and feel that it would be the best investment I ever made in all of my eighty-six years of life. Even if I have to work at twenty-five cents an hour to pay it, there would be a consolation and encouragement and an inspiration all the time in knowing what was to be the result of my labor. That same encouragement would be right with me all the time that is found in the last sentence of Doctrine and Covenants, "So be ye encouraged and push on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory." Thus saith the Lord.

Then with these debts wiped out, honor and glory would follow us. Oh, why does not every good, honest Saint say we can and will do it! If anyone doubts my sincerity in this regard, I will pay the money now if a guarantee is given of its fulfillment in the near future. Poor as I am, I can borrow that amount any day at three different banks in this city, and have all the time I want in which to work it out, if I had to. Should I die before the time is expired or money be paid, I will make it obligatory upon my family to make it good. Of course this is but a drop in the bucket, yet if five thousand out of our eighty-three thousand members would do likewise, the church debt would be paid with seventy-five thousand left to build a monument. Or if, as I have said before, each member of the church would pay twenty cents, it would put up a respectable mark of honor to our dead founders. It ought to be done by the Sunday school, so every child would have an interest in it and something to be proud of the rest of his life.

I am absolutely retired from all business cares and ambitions, save that of my Master, to which I dedicated myself anew at the time of my ordination, unreservedly, so long as I can add my little mite after mite to the general cause and more especially to our own little branch, to which both wife and I have become so closely attached. We have made a covenant together with God to spend the remainder of our days in his service in any and every way possible, to contribute to its every interest. We ask the prayers of all the Saints who may read this that we may continue to be faithful to this end.

J. L. WINTER.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, November 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have been accused by some of taking a vacation or some other thing happening to us, as we have not written you for a long time. I think I can explain if you will give me time, and allow me to run over the events of the last few months.

After my change in appointment from the Youngstown-Sharon District to the First Flint Branch it was entirely new work to me and naturally took me some little time to get acquainted with the new work as well as the people. Now that I have been here for six months I can tell you the work we are doing and the prospects for the future.

The fore part of July we were favored with a visit from the ministers in charge, Apostles J. F. Curtis and R. C. Russell, and the district president, Elder William Grice. While they were here they caused a little division among us from which we have not entirely recovered. They organized the Flint Branch, which took a number of workers from us. We are not complaining when we see the good work they are doing in the new branch.

With the addition on our church building completed, we are now very comfortably fixed for the winter. We can seat about three hundred in the church as it is arranged at present. Even with the addition on the church, at the preaching services the building is well filled, with few seats empty.

The last six months has seen wonderful progress in the branch. Twenty-one have been baptized and more are waiting for the opportunity to obey. Most of these have been young men and women. The spiritual growth has also been noticeable, the young taking the active lead in the prayer meetings as well as the other services. At a recent prayer meeting thirty-five of the fifty present were under thirty years of age. This is encouraging; to see the young moving forward in the work.

Flint seems to be a center for the Saints to come for work. We find many that come here for a short time only and for some reason leave without hunting us up. If any of the Saints know of anyone moving here, please send us their address and we will try and locate them. Our church is located on Newall Street, opposite the Dort School. The second church is at the corner of Jane and Olive Streets. Both churches are handy to the car lines.

Our choir work is fast coming to the front. At present we are rated as the best choir in the city. Under the directorship of Sister Zella Blasdell Harder, great improvements have been made. The male chorus work and ladies' chorus and male quartet are receiving due consideration and will soon be ready to render efficient service. The orchestra movement is well under way, with Brother Eugene Everhart in charge. Many are purchasing instruments and taking lessons with no other thought in view but to assist in the orchestra.

Thus with everyone pulling together we are looking forward to a very successful winter. We may be able to tell you more about the work here the next time. We would be pleased to hear from any of the Saints who are planning on locating here. Ever working for advancement of the work we all love,

Sincerely,

MATTHEW W. LISTON.

BAILEY'S STATION, VIA BATTLE MOUNTAIN, NEVADA,

November 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am teaching here in Nevada, twenty-five miles from Battle Mountain, a small town in the desert. I have only three pupils and the school is in the house where I board. The family, Schwin by name, are nice people and are very kind to me, otherwise I would be very lonely, for we are nine miles from our nearest neighbor. There are very few people in this part of the country, since it is either desert or mountains.

We are in the mountains, seven miles from the desert. There is a spring of good water on the place, which enables them to raise considerable alfalfa, a lovely big family orchard, and all kinds of vegetables. I have been here six weeks and have been off the ranch four times, and then only to get our mail at a station seven and a half miles away, where the train leaves it, once a week for us. Here is an opportunity for a horseback ride, which I enjoy very much, since there is a young lady in the family to go with me.

This, with music, reading, and fancy work, is our only amusement. I would like very much to be where I could meet with the Saints every Sunday, or at least once a month, but it seems to be my fate to be always isolated. If there are any Saints near here I would be glad to meet them. Anyone around Austin or Battle Mountain knows where we live, and all are welcome here.

Your sister in the faith,

BERTHA GILBERT.

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN, November 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: It is with joy we look forward to the weekly visit of the HERALD and with thanksgiving we read its contents. We notice Brother Elbert is back again, giving his "Blue pencil notes," which are fine. Yes, sermons in a few lines, although they may appear as an anecdote. It was with sadness we read of his illness, and it was with joy we saw his jottings appearing once again, indicating his return to health, and may he continue to grow, his health speedily and completely return, that he may be a pillar of support, a wise counselor and a just administrator. True it is when one member suffers, the whole body feels the effects.

We have read with interest from time to time of the joyful news from afar of how the gospel is wending its way, and no doubt you would be interested to know what is going on up here. So with reverence to the God of love and honor to whom it is due, we will endeavor in our weak way to tell you the good news.

There are three branches in the "Saint settlement," as it is sometimes called, one in the Alberta District and two in Saskatchewan District. When anything unusual is going on in either of the three branches we are all there. For instance the Alberta conference was held in the West Branch, known as the Michigan Branch, last July, and the other two branches met with them, together with the Alberta Saints, and consequently had a good time.

Last Sunday, November 4, special meeting was held, in the Artland Branch. Invitation was sent to the neighboring branches and so about two hundred Saints gathered together and all were partakers of an enjoyable time. Our district president, Elder T. J. Jordan, was with us for the day, and his cheery smile and hearty handshake assisted very materially in putting fresh life into the Saints. We do not wish to flatter, but T. J. is a tower of strength, admired by all and he appeals to the young. The result is his sermons sink deep and his words take effect.

The prayer service was of special interest. Much admonition was given, and a goodly portion of the Spirit of God was felt and enjoyed by all. Elder W. J. Levitt, Alberta's bishop's agent, gave his mite and admonished the Saints along the financial line. The testimonies and prayers were offered under the Spirit's influence and at the close Elder Jordan said he had a message to give at the night meeting, and at eight p. m. delivered a fine sermon, taking as a basis the parable of the sower.

Two young men were called higher, A. J. Cornish to the office of elder, and Joseph Bates, priest. In making a few remarks, Brother Cornish mentioned he had fought against it, only to receive a strong rebuke through the Spirit as it rested on Brother H. Smith, a man of humility, whose tongue was dictated by the inspiration of heaven, and cried out, "You must not fight against it, you must take the stand, saith the Spirit. Amen."

And oh, how it rang. With bowed head he yielded in subjection to the Father of mercy, and is now determined to accomplish the work that lies before him. Did we say work? Yes! Whilst being ordained the Spirit rested on Elder

A Parrot Can Imitate— But What Do You Know?

Aside from the three books, which every family should have and study, have you the four volumes of Church History? It makes a splendid Christmas gift, even if all the family have to "chip in" to get one volume. Why not get one volume this year, another next and keep it up till you have the entire set?

Or better yet, let the family buy the full set for the "family" by sending for one volume for each of four members. There are four volumes in a new edition just printed this fall. The price differs according to binding, $2, $2.50, $3.50, and $4 for a book.

Or for the children there is a "Young People's History" in cloth for $1.

Have you really considered how many excellent gifts of practical books can be secured from your own Herald Publishing House? Some of these books are not published here, but most of them are. Yet you help the church by buying here, such as Cruden's Complete Concordance for $1.50 or Young's Analytical Concordance for $6.50, and Smith-Peloubet's Bible Dictionary $1.60.

The Doctrine and Covenants can still be secured for 65c, $1, $2.05 and $3.25, according to binding.

The Archæological Committee's Report in cloth is 75c and the Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology is 60c. Objections to the Book of Mormon, etc., Answered, cloth, 50c.

Then we have Doctrinal References from the three books in cloth for 20c; the Compendium of Faith for $1, $1.25 and $2, or the Instructor in similar bindings at like prices, $1, $1.25 and $2. And for the priesthood, The Interpreter, for 50c

For the financial law we have, The Law of Christ and its Fulfillment, for 45c and 60c.

And there are others for those who know or want to know.

Jordan and reiterated what was given through Apostle J. A. Gillen, at last district conference, that angels would go before him; his companion in her lonely hours would have the joy and consolation that her husband was sowing the seed of truth. He also stated the mantle of his father, J. J. Cornish, would rest upon him. How grand and noble it is to be called to be a partaker of this latter-day work. Delivering the angelic message, true it is, trials and tribulation would come, but only as Christ prophesied it would be prior to the consummation of all things.

Elder T. J. Jordan was called away in the interest of the work to another part of the district and so his visit was short, yet sweet. The happenings of the day will long be remembered as one of the memorial days of the Artland Branch.

May God strengthen and bless his people and sustain them through the trial of war that is resting on humanity is the prayer of your humble

CORRESPONDENT.

NEW BEDFORD, MASSACHUSETTS, November 13, 1917

Editors Herald: Our little church is located on the corner of Bourne and Thompson Streets. We are only a small branch and when we look back over the past we sometimes think that we have been asleep. But when we look ahead and see what we are trying to do we do not get so discouraged after all.

Our Religio temperance committee furnished a program for the Religio one night recently. The program was gotten up by Brother J. P. Spinnett and was in his charge. Addresses were by Reverend W. S. McIntyre and Mr. Austin Conway, solos were sung by Miss Minnie Sweet and Brother Andrew Cross. Our Woman's Auxiliary is not dead, either. They have raised a hundred dollars, which we understand they intend to apply on the debt of our church this fall. Our Sunday school is trying to organize its boys and girls for more efficient service.

The church is starting a series of cottage meetings which we hope will last through the winter months, the first to be on November 20 and the first two in homes where not one of the family belongs to the church.

CORRESPONDENT.

CAMP DONIPHAN, OKLAHOMA, November 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: After forty days of experience of soldierly life, I am glad to say that it is making a better man of me physically and while there are evils aplenty, a man with a strong will power well seasoned with prayer need not fear being led away from the "straight and narrow way."

I am certainly proud of the early training I have received at home and the church and Sunday school privileges I have received. These are requisites that stimulate me in the onward progress of life. While I am denied these privileges now, I hope to temporarily effect an organization here.

The gospel as we believe and teach is quite unknown to some of the men with whom I am associated.

I will be glad to hear from anyone who is a Latter Day Saint in this camp, and those who know of men that are located here. I have looked up several already, but the more that can be gotten together the more and efficient work can be accomplished.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints and for the accomplishment of God's purposes to be speedily realized.

I am truly your brother in bonds,

LEEDEY, OKLAHOMA, November 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated and have not heard a sermon for several years. I long for the time when I can have the privilege of meeting with the Saints once more.

I have two boys in the Army in the training camps. James A. Scott at Camp Cody, Deming, New Mexico. He is in Company C, 134th Infantry; and Charlie G. Scott in Company B, 133 Machine Gun Battalion, Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas.

If there are any Saints in either place, I would be glad if they would go and see the boys. Neither of them are members of the church but I think they would be glad to have the Saints call on them.

Your sister in the gospel,

SARAH SCOTT.

CAMP TRAVIS, TEXAS, November 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: I will offer a few lines to your splendid columns. I was raised in the church and am a strong believer in the restored gospel.

This finds me in the National Army at Camp Travis. I came here on September 7. This camp is close to San Antonio; have good car service and have had lots of "liberty" so have been able to get pretty well acquainted with the good Saints here. Have attended church at the Second Branch and have been received very kindly by them. I have learned to love them very much.

At present we are quarantined and cannot go out of camp on account of measles. I certainly miss going to church and the Saints. My home is in Houston and I belong to the branch there.

If these lines should find any Latter Day Saint boys in Camp Travis I would be glad to see them, or if anyone will give me one's address I will be glad to hunt him up. I find many good friends among the boys here but I would like to find some Latter Day Saint boys, for they seem more like brothers to me. Would be very glad to hear from any of my old friends in Oklahoma if any should chance to see this. Many remember my father, G. W. Hancock.

I belong to a machine gun company. I expect we will go to the front in the spring, at least that is the talk. I find this sort of life interesting but not exactly to my liking in every respect, but I believe it is a good cause we are in, so I put forth my best efforts.

I tried to get in the service last spring but was turned down on account of some physical defects but I was O. K., so these doctors said, so here I am.

I hope this does not go to the waste basket as it is my first letter to the HERALD.

Yours in gospel love,

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, November 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have not noticed any reports recently from this place and so wish to inform you the Saints here are still moving Zionward, and in fact we believe the branch is in better condition spiritually and in more united cooperation than it has been for two or three years at least, with a good interest among nonmembers and with a good social feeling prevailing throughout the surrounding community.

During the summer one of the Methodist ministers announced a lecture for the following Sunday evening on "The Latter Day Saints" but we did not become aware of it until the day of the lecture, so in order to obtain the best possible means of defense, as we felt we would be the object of attack, we phoned to Buffalo for Elder James Pycock who, with G. F. Landes, branch priest, and Sister Alice Miller, stenographer, attended the service, but apparently their presence was noted and the reverend sir postponed indefinitely his lecture and made a desperate struggle to preach instead.

We have Elder Pycock with us this week while he is waiting his coming six-night debate with a Christadelphian minister in Buffalo.

We have let the contract of plastering our church building on the ceiling and also the basement, and have a committee arranging plans to put an addition on the front of the building, for which one sister has donated four hundred dollars to start the fund.

The district Religio and Sunday school, under President and Superintendent Sister Koehler and Elder Pycock, are having Buffalo and the Fall Branch hold monthly or frequent rally day services, which are doing much to boost the locals.

Our Sunday school started out to raise $200 as this year's Christmas offering, but with the promise of $100 from Sister Wahl, we hope to make it $300 before the year ends as several have each promised one day's salary to the superintendent, Brother Dansforth.

We have lost about a dozen of our members during the past month or two owing to them leaving the city, among whom was our branch deacon and ladies' aid secretary, Brother and Sister Terryberry. They were both efficient and earnest workers, but we hope that they may be the means of starting the work at Mansfield, Ohio, where they have gone to reside. It left us without a deacon, and Brother H. Landes, one of the branch teachers was elected to act temporarily.

Elder Pycock is taking on a renewed impetus; the occasion being to celebrate the arrival of a baby daughter at his home in Toronto.

We are beginning to feel the sting of war here as we hear of relatives killed in action with the Canadian Army and our boys here being drafted for Uncle Sam. The war office and President Wilson have designated patriotic subjects to be delivered in the thirteen theatrical places of the city by the clergy of the city and other speakers among whom your writer has been appointed.

Elder Lindley writes from the 176th Regiment overseas that he is well and enjoying spiritual blessing even though isolated from church privileges.

Editors Herald: This is my first attempt to write to the church papers. I feel it my duty to express my thoughts regarding this glorious gospel. I have been in this church for nearly six years and find it is the best thing I ever enlisted in. I can say that the Lord has blessed me in my work this year more than in the past.

I have been laboring with Brother E. E. Long this summer, and we find the Saints in a very poor condition in this district. We began our efforts at Uniopolis, later going to Lafayette, where I baptized three. Then we went to Mermill and preached for them a few nights. From there we went to Toledo for the Sunday school convention. I had the opportunity to attend the reunion at Kirtland this summer and it did me lots of good to meet with so many Saints from different parts of the country. The good Spirit was there in abundance. I surely was blessed by going to the reunion. And from the reunion I went home for awhile, the people being so busy with their work that we could get no place to preach. I came to this place October 11, and found Brother Long busy at work preaching in a schoolhouse. There was an old injunction on the school building ever since 1888, but by consulting with the county attorney we learned the injunction was obsolete.

It Is Highly Important

That you do not allow your subscriptions to expire. The work of the church is moving along rapidly and we may expect important developments to be reported at any time.

We must be well-informed or we will fall behind in the onward march of the kingdom of God.

It should not be counted a sacrifice to keep up our subscriptions to the church publications. Have you overlooked any of these:

SAINTS' HERALD—The official publication of the church. $1.50 a year.

Zion's Ensign—The missionary paper—and more. $1 a year.

Journal of History—Containing important historical matter that would otherwise be unpublished. Issued quarterly. $1 a year.

Unity—For the priesthood. Every ordained man should be on the list for this monthly. 25c a year.

Autumn Leaves—For the youth and youthful of the church. $1 a year.

Stepping Stones—For the boys and girls in the Sunday school—but the older folks clamor for it. 50c a year.

Zion's Hope—The publication for the little folks—and they have all too little that they understand anyway. 30c a year.

Requests for Prayers

Brother and Sister Daniel Brannan request the prayers of the church in behalf of their daughter, Cule Brannan, who is afflicted with attacks of something which seems to tap her between the eyes, knocking her to the floor, if standing. No one knows the diagnosis of the case, whether connected with the nerves or muscles.

Our Departed Ones

ROBINSON.—Jacob Cameron Robinson was born in Rawdon, Nova Scotia, February 22, 1846. Died in Milford, Massachusetts, November 4, 1917. Funeral sermon by Ralph W.

Farrell. He was faithful unto the death of his body; he died in the Lord.

BRUCE.—Robert Bruce was born December 14, 1876, in Vernon County, Missouri. Baptized into the church November 23, 1893, by F. C. Keck. Died November 2, 1917. Leaves an aged father and mother, one brother to mourn. Funeral was held at his home in Fort Scott, Kansas. Prayer by J. T. Higdon, sermon by Lee Quick.

BEARD.—Carrie Beard, wife of Otis Beard, was born April 24, 1888. Baptized when eight years old. Married April 1, 1911. To this union one child was born. Died November 14, 1917 at her home in Saint Joseph, Missouri. Leaves husband, daughter, father, a mother, and one sister to mourn her loss. Funeral was held at Stewartsville, Missouri. Services in charge of T. A. Ivie, sermon by T. T. Hinderks.

BROWN.—Walter L. Brown was born near Cuba, Kansas, March 15, 1888. On November 12, 1917, while working a crew of men in the shipyards in California, he was accidentally killed. The body was sent to Garnett, Kansas, the home of his parents. Mr. Brown did not belong to the church, but was a fine young man. Funeral held from the Christian Church. Sermon by Lee Quick.

SINGLETON.—Sylvester V. Singleton was born December 13, 1855, in Gumsett County, Georgia. Was baptized March 21, 1915, by James E. Yates, at Phoenix, Arizona. He was a faithful and earnest member, rejoicing to have found the true gospel. After an illness of several months of tuberculosis, he passed away October 31, 1917, at Phoenix, Arizona. Funeral services conducted by James E. Yates, and D. Amos Yates.

BRAY.—Ira Earnest Bray was born September 7, 1875, at Monrovey, Hendrix County, Indiana. Moved to Houston, Texas County, Missouri, where he grew to manhood. Married Miss Lillie Sanford, August 15, 1898. To this union were born five children, one boy, and 4 girls. Baptized March 18, 1917, in Barton County, Missouri, by O. P. Sutherland. Died November 17, 1917, in Kansas City, Kansas. Was a member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge, No. 79. Funeral November 18, 1917, Kansas City, Kansas, conducted by E. L. Kelley.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

Writing from Wayne, Nebraska, Brother George Elson says he is much improved from his lifelong affliction and appreciates what the prayers of the Saints have done for him. He desires to secure more wisdom and understanding.

If there is anyone in the church by the name of Lock, or related to them, such names as Terrill, Bailey, Pretty, Moden, please send word to Mrs. N., F. Avenue, Coronado, California.

TRYING TO FIND "STONE AGE" MAN

It is the opinion of N. C. Nelson, who reports to the Museum of Natural History in the American Museum Journal, that in the famous Mammoth Cave and similar caverns and rock shelters in Kentucky may be found traces of a civilization that may give to or be contemporaneous with the Mound Builders. A survey is being made, which has already developed the fact that this cave has been inhabited for a long time, at least near the mouth, where camp refuse to a depth of more than four feet has accumulated. "Chief interest in these remains," he says, "is that they point to a people who lived entirely by hunting, whereas, the aborigines of late prehistoric times all over the Ohio basin were at least in part agriculturists."

ENCOURAGING RESPONSE

In one day recently there were 90 subscriptions for the Autumn Leaves received, all new, and receiving fourteen months for a dollar. The Leaves is coming to the front and

DO YOU OWN YOUR HOME?

If not, change this condition right away and begin working for yourself. In the territory along Burlington Lines in the West there are countless opportunities for the homebuilder and the investor.

WESTERN NEBRASKA AND NORTHEASTERN COLORADO excel in dairying, live stock and grain raising. Non-resident owners have many well-located farms ($25 to $50 per acre, with terms of payment easy), which they are unable to develop. Any industrious farmer can become well-to-do on one of them in a remarkably short time.

WYOMING.—Big Horn Basin irrigated lands—near to beet sugar factories, oil refineries, coal mines and other natural resources—which grow big crops of wheat, oats, alfalfa, sugar beets and potatoes, can be bought at $50 and up per acre. Some very desirable 640-Acre Free Homesteads, in a large area, are still available.

Ask for folders outlining the advantages of these sections. Write me about your plans and I'll give you the benefit of my experience. No charge for this—it's a part of Burlington Service.

of good things left over, including The Periscope. They even had to put a postscript on the back cover.

The names of the dear old people whose picture was sent us by Brother Louie F. Beaty are Smith—Brother and Sister William Smith.

USELESS GIVING PROHIBITED

Yet you can give some one a subscription to one of the church papers and feel that it will be eminently worth while and that the recipient will remember the gift with gratitude every time the mail man brings it.

Extract from a prayer showing an example of unnecessary repetition: "To try to strive to attempt to learn to benefit ourselves." This would appear to be quite the equal of the common example of "aid, help, succor, and sustain."

TO HAVE NEW MEETING PLACE IN LONDON

"Just lately (letter dated October 24) we had air raids which dropped bombs near us. The Saints are surely in God's help, and they enjoy a peace through all this trouble which is beautiful to see. My husband has been in France in A. S. C. and is now British supply officer to the Indian Cavalry. He is wonderfully well and likes his work. You will very soon, I hope, hear that we have a very nice meeting place in London, and a strong branch of good workers."—Vivian Short, London, England.

AUGUSTINE DWYER AT HOLDEN

The Holden Progress comments favorably on the work of Brother Augustine Dwyer at Holden, Missouri, where he has been delivering a series of lectures. The opening lecture was on "Wilson and the war," which is said to have aroused the patriotic fervor of the audience to a high pitch.

SON OF MISSIONARY A PRODIGY

The Bozeman (Montana) Chronicle of recent date tells of the unusual account of James W. Moore's record, he being the twelve-year-old son of Elder A. J. Moore. Though so young and diminutive in size, he closed his first quarter of the sophomore year in high school with grades of 99, 99, 96 and 95 in the four studies taken in a commercial course. His work is very accurately done and his instructors state they can almost O. K. his work without looking at it.

NEW ADVERTISING MAN

It becoming necessary to have some one look after the advertising department of the Board of Publication work following the resignation of Brother McKim, the assistant editor, E. D. Moore, has consented to help out in this work for the time being though very busy with other duties. He seeks to bring to the Saints in this way vital information, for are we not all interested in the opportunities the church offers through its publishing department? The aim is not merely to sell things, but help our readers to make intelligent selections.

The Christmas offering roll of honor this year will close December 31, 1917, and just as soon as your school has secured or will pledge $2 per member, notify Arthur W. Smith, 2903 Sullivan Avenue, Saint Louis, so the Roll of Honor can be made up and printed. This list will include those schools who have reached the $2 per member or over.

Brother William M. Sauter says his new address is as given below, and he expects to be there for some time. It is: Armed Guard Detail, Gun Crew No. 63, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

EDITORIAL

A TIME OF THANKSGIVING

Even though this article will reach the church after the season set apart for Thanksgiving Day, it may not be amiss to set forth a brief review. Last week other more valuable material took its place.

By an individual review of the past year, we are sure that each of us may find many causes indeed for thanksgiving. It has been a matter of interest in the past to note that those who in some way seemed to have the least cause, are often the most thankful. Some good mother or wife who has spent a large part of the year fighting sickness in her family, arises with deep gratitude to God that her loved ones have been spared.

Some one who has not had a superfluity, but the bare necessities of life, feels to thank the heavenly Father that, hard as the year has been, day by day he and his have had bread, and with this simple living, they seem many times to have that added grace of spiritual bread and strength.

In the minds of many the present world catastrophe will tend to overshadow the blessings of the year. It is probably true, as has been stated by admonitions in several places, that we have not as yet entered upon the worst but are only at the beginning of our trials.

We should be thankful that our Nation has been so long spared. We should be thankful that there has been within its bounds a sufficiency. We should be thankful for the opportunity to help and feed others, and as a church there should be a deeper thanksgiving to the Lord of peace, that even in the coming hours of trial he is able and ready to protect and preserve us; not simply keep us in a bed of ease, but protect us from serious harm, blessed and guided by his Holy Spirit.

Here in the Herald Office, we feel we have very deep cause for thanksgiving, with which we are sure the church will join, in that our beloved brother, Elbert A. Smith, has been spared to the church. Those of us who have had the opportunity of seeing him in recent months, have deep cause for rejoicing and thanksgiving to see that his improvement since returning to Lamoni, has been not only steady but even rapid. He has not recovered his full strength but as the church is already aware, he has been able to meet with the joint council in the week of November 20, attending often two sessions a day, morning and afternoon. His brethren rejoice in having him with them, and he takes joy in their welcome, as well in his return to association with them and service before his heavenly Father.

All too often we take our blessings for granted and fail to appreciate their value. Those who are whole, fail to give due value to the ordinary physical gifts of sight, hearing, speech, health, strength, ability to work, home, shelter and necessary food, and sometimes we take too much for granted, the wonderful blessings of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the direction of his Holy Spirit.

There are many chances to go wrong. If trust is placed wholly in man mistakes are certain, but we are not left to labor alone. There is a tremendous power in this work, great enough to accomplish all his will if only we are ready and willing to do our part.

We would that we could extend to the church the deep inspiration and help of these conferences which have been called in Independence, beginning November 20. There have been conferences of the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric; of the Presidency and Twelve; of the stake presidents and stake bishops; and of the general high council of the church.

Then a meeting was held of the priesthood of Independence on the evening of November 26, with W. W. Smith in charge and President F. M. Smith, B. R. McGuire, G. T. Griffiths, F. M. Sheehy, U. W.

Greene, P. M. Hanson, J. F. Curtis, P. Anderson, and W. M. Aylor on the stand. The purpose of the meeting was a better organization of the priesthood, so as to secure the efficient service of every man, and at the same time provide that each member should secure more immediate pastoral consideration and spiritual administration. In a large branch of several thousands this is impossible for one man to do, but he may have many assistants, and by dividing the body see that none of the flock suffer.

While it is true, that one member of the First Presidency has found it necessary to take his Sabbatical year of rest, in order that refreshed of God he may better return to service, the work of that department is being energetically pushed, many individuals being called upon for special features of work, according to their previous preparation. In a way the President of the church is using a score of unofficial advisers. The High Council also report a unanimity of opinion in their work under the blessing and the direction of the Spirit of God. We have seen this happen many times in the High Council when men discouraged or doubtful have received this blessing and assurance.

We think we sense from the Bishopric, a very deep earnestness and a desire not only to discuss but to understand, to know and apply the law of God, and an earnest effort to secure a greater unanimity, in fact a complete unanimity of opinion on the questions involved in the upbuilding of Zion, such as the storehouse, the Order of Enoch, and stewardship. There is an exaltation of spirit, and an earnestness with these men that causes us to look for a decided advance movement in an economic way, and a better understanding of the needs and abilities of our people. This may eventually require a survey of the membership of the church to ascertain our several abilities, qualifications, and situations. Such information certainly should be secured before we seek to move Zionward. (Doctrine and Covenants 123: 12; 128: 4; 72: 3, 4.)

We feel thankful to our heavenly Father that he has raised up these men and that he has blessed them with his Spirit. We feel thankful for the pending advance movement of the church. We feel thankful for the advancement already made and being made. We feel thankful that the Spirit may be and dwell with each one, giving strength, courage and enlightenment.

We are at a dividing of the ways. We can look down one pathway and see darkness and destruction; but looking the other way, we see the coming of the kingdom of God. May his righteousness be in our midst, and also his peace.

S. A. B.

He who won't be advised can't be helped.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

When we get angry and "say just what we think" we usually take a long time afterward thinking about what we have said.

An old Chinese proverb says: "A thousand men can make a camp but it takes a woman to make a home." To which a great many American soldier boys are saying, Amen.

Evidently Uncle Sam intends to be rather moderate. A certain conscript is reported to have asked for exemption on the ground that he was a strict vegetarian. He was told that he might be expected to kill Germans but would not be required to eat them.

Liberty in which there are no restrictions set upon thought or speech or act is a dream—and it is not desirable that it should come true.

Commenting on the recent burning of a negro in Ohio, the Independent says, "The nation that tolerates the mob may perish by the mob."

The ambassador from Russia says that Russia is a country of unlimited possibilities. Readers of current history will admit that he told the truth. But we would like now to know something about her probabilities.

Under a despotic government most men must do many things that they do not wish to do. But no one man dare protest, because under orders from above the power of all may be used to crush the individual. This continues until some courageous or desperate man who loves liberty more than life rebels. Others follow. A rift is made. The walls crumble. An avalanche ensues. The whole structure falls. Chaos reigns. But out of the confusion Liberty and Order begin to erect their temple among the debris. Such was the history of France. May such be the history of Russia—and of Germany.

The poets have something of the spirit of prophecy. If you doubt it, after reading a newspaper account of aerial battles in Europe, turn and read Tennyson's Locksley Hall. A few verses from that poem, reduced to prose form, read: "For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see, saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be; saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails, pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales; heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew, from the nation's airy navies grappling in the central blue."

We have heard much about exemption from military service granted to Quakers, Adventists, and Mennonites. But when the matter is examined carefully, is this exemption of any real value? Men from these sects are not required to actually fire upon the enemy, but may be compelled to engage in almost any other work of the war. The distinction may be clear but is there any accompanying difference? The man who digs a trench, strings a barbed wire entanglement, drives a motor truck laden with ammunition or provisions, or cooks meals for a company contributes to the work of killing enemy soldiers. If we are to assume guilt as existing does it not rest upon him as well as upon the men who fire the bullets?

Workers in an army are cogs in a great machine. All contribute to the results. The immediate results sought are dead or disabled enemy soldiers. Even if we as a church could have won such exemption for our young men honorably (which is another question) of what real value would it have been to them so far as "conscientious" objections are concerned? True these other forms of work may be safer. (And again they may not.) But exemption is granted solely on the ground that a man wishes to save his conscience and not on the ground that he wishes to save his body.

There is enough in life to render one serious, at least to dispel frivolity. Every young person faces life knowing that he will make of it either a success or a failure. None but the foolish or the insane will go boisterously down the road to ruin. Every middle-aged man who has not failed or been disabled by misfortune is too busy for frivolity. Every old man looks back with a tinge of melancholy on the dream-tinted pictures of the past. Yet despite the seriousness of life there is enough in the gospel to brighten it and make it happy. That is our anchor in the worst storm.

God forbid that we should speak lightly of the real and great sorrows of life. We approach them with reverent sympathy, having both seen and felt the grief which comes with the dispensations of death, and the greater burden entailed by the inscrutable providences of life entailing years of waiting in which hope deferred turns the heart sick. But the gospel was not designed to deal with "trifles light as air." If so it would not be the power of God unto salvation. It rises to the emergency and cheers the disciple under trials that in the world drive men to desperation.

All men make mistakes. You make mistakes. I make mistakes. We may boast that we never make the same mistake twice. If so we have an astonishing variety of new ones. We are versatile. Our own experiences in this line should make us more charitable toward others. Let us remember that Jesus left the courts of glory where no mistakes ever occur and came down to consort with men who are like us. He loved them in spite of their mistakes. Can we do less? If we wait to love until we find men who never make mistakes we will go to our tombs unloving and unloved—and the sooner the better. But after all is said on the subject of mistakes, it remains to add, that the most fatal and fatuous mistake of all is made by the man who refuses to recognize and admit that he makes mistakes. ELBERT A. SMITH.

SHALL WE KNOW EACH OTHER BEYOND THE GRAVE?

This question is a prevalent source of thought among all classes of religious believers. Perhaps by no other people is the question asked with more intensity of feeling than by the Latter Day Saints. We do not propose to attempt to answer this question categorically or at any great length. However, it seems fair to state that our belief is unmistakably to the effect that those who have been acquainted with each other on the earth will renew such acquaintance and knowledge of each other on the other side.

In confirmation of this belief we quote from the words of the Savior, Matthew 8:11: "And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." Also the statement made by the Savior in reference to marriage, referring to those who are privileged to rise in the resurrection, they "are as the angels which are in heaven . . . I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living." Also the statement made by the Master: "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection . . . For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him."

Of the same character is the statement made by the Master when children were brought unto him and the disciples rebuked those who brought them: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." (See also Mark 10:14; Luke 18:16.)

These testimonies are singular if they do not mean that there shall be an interdependent knowledge of identities and personalities in the world to come;

for if many shall come from the east and the west and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God, these worthies must necessarily be recognizable, or there is no value in the promise. And if little children are without sin and their angels do always behold the face of their Father who is in heaven, they also must retain their conscious identity and be recognized.

At the time of universal peace prophesied of by Micah (4: 4) when strong nations shall be rebuked and the Lord shall judge among many people, swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, the sword shall not be lifted up against any nation and the art of war shall not be studied nor learned, "They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

At the time the Savior rebuked his disciples and the children of Zebedee with their mother besought a favor of the Savior to the effect that he should grant that her two sons should sit the one on his right hand and the other on his left in his kingdom, he answered her thus: "Ye know not what ye ask . . . Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father."

The Book of Mormon tells us that the greatest gift of God is eternal life; and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants 6: 21 informs us that certain parties shall dwell with Jesus in glory; and we are also informed by Paul in 2 Thessalonians 4: 17 that those who are caught up into the air to be with Jesus shall ever be with him. This is confirmed in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27; 98: 5.

We conclude from all these testimonies that we shall know each other beyond the mists of death and in the light and life of the Lord.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 51, p. 1066, 1904.

LIFE INSURANCE

A few weeks ago, Bishop J. F. Keir wrote us on this topic, and we published his letter in the HERALD. Since then some of his statements have been questioned, especially that only thirty per cent of the premium paid to life insurance company came back to the policy holder. We are now in receipt of a further communication from him giving data as set forth below, which we are sure should prove of interest to our readers. The church is moving forward. A definite effort is being made to solve these problems, and for us to work together in accordance with the law of God. Certainly we should be able to do better within the church than this, and by doing our own insuring, have the full results of our savings go to benefit ourselves, our family, and our brethren. The letter follows:

In the recent correspondence which I submitted to you which you published, concerning life insurance, I made the statement that I had been told that only thirty per cent of the premium paid to life insurance came back to the policy holder, and that the remainder of it was consumed in managements, commission and dividend. We recall that one brother stated that this was an untrustworthy statement.

I have before me a book entitled, Statistics of Fraternal Societies, 1916. On page 226 I find a table giving twenty-five legal reserve companies. One column in this table shows the percentage of death claims and endowments paid in proportion to the income. I know that it will be interesting to you and therefore I submit it:

New York Life	30 2-10
Mutual Life	31 9-10
Northwestern Mutual	26 4-10
Mutual Benefit	25 4-10
Pennsylvania Mutual	29 2-10
Union Central	31 2-10
Travelers'	30 1-10
Massachusetts Mutual	25 1-10

There are a number of others, one running as low as 19 3-10. This will be sufficient to show you that our statement was not extravagant.

The average for twenty-five companies is only 32 71-100. The twenty-five fraternal orders show a much higher rate, running from 41 6-10 per cent to 99 per cent, we give you a few of them as follows:

Woodman Circle	41 6-10
Brotherhood of American Yeoman	56 5-10
Woodman of the World	59 5-10
Nights of Columbus	41
Brotherhood of Locomotive, Firemen and Engineers	57 2-10
Woodmen of the World	64 5-10
Independent Order of Foresters	67 1-10

The average of the twenty-five companies is 71 4-10 per cent. When you take into consideration the fact that many fraternal orders have had to revise their rate in the last few years, this may account for the high percentage of death claims in proportion to the income, as experience has shown that their rates were not high enough.

Yours sincerely,

JAMES F. KEIR.

CHRISTMAS GIFT CERTIFICATES

Custom is a powerful influence and many times persuades people to perpetuate a folly. The giving of useful gifts is not folly but the giving of one which has no practical utility is waste.

This war is causing us to plan economy in every direction. Conservation is the watchword of every household. We must economize upon every necessity.

Christmas is rapidly approaching and according to custom we are soliloquizing about as follows:

"How much can I spend for presents this Christmas? There are so many that I would like to give something, but I simply cannot afford to give to all of them. I must keep my purchases down to fifteen dollars, but how can I? If I give a small present to sister Mary's children I must give to all my other nieces and nephews. I do wish that there was some plan of getting away from this annual waste of buying toys and useless gifts, which to-day are and to-morrow are not."

We want to help you to solve this problem this year. Every member of the church is or should be interested in the purpose of the Christmas Offering. We have pledged ourselves to use it for a definite purpose, and now you can help some one of your friends to have something to their credit on the Christmas Offering.

THE PLAN

Secure from your branch president or from the Presiding Bishop a

and send it to your friend or relative, it reads as follows:

"I have sent to the Bishop, Benjamin R. McGuire, a gift of money as a Christmas token from you to be used in caring for the poor and needy and promoting the Lord's work. Will you accept this as my Christmas present to you together with my wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year?"

Then detach and send to the Bishop the part which reads: Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, Box 125, Independence, Missouri. Inclosed please find $..... for the Christmas Offering. I am sending a gift certificate to..... My name is..... Address..... The person to whom you make this gift will then receive direct from the bishop the following acknowledgment.

To

has sent us a gift as a Christmas token from you, to be used in caring for the poor and needy and to advance the gospel of Him whose birth we commemorate. We hope this kindness and thoughtfulness will make you happy as it has the giver.

BISHOP BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

These certificates are printed in attractive holiday style with two-color holly border and will carry with them the Christmas spirit and many hearts will be made glad by knowing that both giver and receiver by the spirit of sacrifice and consecration have contributed toward the purpose of the Christmas Offering.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." What have you to give to perpetuate the work for which he gave his life?

Yours in gospel service,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 125.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Anonymous Articles or Letters

The editors have been in receipt of a few anonymous letters recently. Some are requests for answer to questions or attack. As a general rule we pay no attention to anonymous communications. Evidently it is impossible to answer letters of that kind. You should be sure to see that your name is signed to your order, letter, or request.

Presiding Bishop Goes West

We learn that Bishop McGuire expected to leave right after Thanksgiving for a very necessary trip to the West. He feels the imperative need of coming in closer contact with some aspects of the work in that part of the field. As is indicated elsewhere, he is proceeding very carefully in the organization of his office force, and in consideration of the grave questions confronting the Bishopric for the solution of our economic problems.

Holden Home

The Presidency desires to call the attention of the Saints to the article in last week's issue by Bishop McGuire relative to the Holden Home. Bishop McGuire desires that the Saints shall be fully informed as to the movement in this matter, and the reasons therefor. We cheerfully commend his article to a careful reading.

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

President.

American Defense Society

Petitions are being circulated by the Iowa branch of this society, asking for signatures to the following statements, which are to be sent to Congress at Washington:

Whereas the security of the United States and the success of our arms are endangered by the activities of disloyal persons and organizations within the borders of our country, we, the citizens of the United States whose names are hereto subscribed, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for Pro-German activities, or for the publication of public utterance of statement tending

To impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war, or in recruiting or enlistment, or

To hold the Government of the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy, or

To cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war.

The High Council

The general High Council of the church met at Independence on November 27 and 28. As is stated elsewhere, they report a very profitable time, and a marked unanimity of opinion in their work.

Lamoni Sacrament Service

The sacrament service of December 2, at Lamoni, the last for the year 1917, was very well attended. The priesthood well filled and even crowded the stand. The church, including the gallery, was also well filled, with scarcely a vacant seat in evidence. There was an earnest, devoted spirit from the first of the meeting. As has been so often the case the past year, the gifts of the Spirit were manifest in admonition to the Saints, that the deciding time has come, and we must choose. The time has come for the greater devotion and consecration of the people of God. Three thus spoke in prophecy, one after another, and one in tongues. All four were high priests of the church. Through the whole service there was an earnestness of spirit, and a devotion, which was strengthening to those who were able to be present.

Tithing Pays

In the Tulsa Democrat for November 4, 1917, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, there is an article about the Kerr Glass Manufacturing Company at Sand Springs. The feature that is especially emphasized is, that Mr. Kerr and his son tithe carefully all of their property. "To tithe, he says, is simply to pay ten per cent regularly of your income, wages, increase or profits to the Lord. The Lord returns it to you with profit and great blessings. One year's test will prove it, and you have everything to gain by the trial. God lives, and his promises are sure. You only pay God what you owe him." Mr. Kerr devotes his ten per cent to missionary work abroad and the Community Church in Sand Springs. He claims to have been wonderfully protected from the San Francisco earthquake and fire and at other times of danger, and considers in paying tithing he is only doing his duty. It seems that he gained the idea from the reading of the Bible, as no church organization is mentioned in connection with the article.

President F. M. Smith in Lamoni

Frederick M. Smith came to Lamoni on Thanksgiving Day on church business. He remained until Sunday, when a meeting of the joint council and many other urgent matters compelled him to leave. In the meantime he held many important individual conferences, concerning different aspects of the work of the church. Elder J. A. Gillen, in immediate charge of the work in President Smith's office in Independence, returned to his home in Omaha over Thanksgiving, and for the week end. He will no doubt return to Independence for the joint council on Monday, December 3. Elder U. W. Greene who has been at Independence the last month and over, in connection with the work in President F. M. Smith's office, expects to remain in Independence at least until General Conference. We heard the rumor there that he expected his wife to leave soon and settle in Independence for the present at least, and he has secured quarters for this purpose. Elder R. C. Russell came to Independence on November 24, and has since that time been meeting with the joint council. He is looking very much improved, and has evidently recovered from his illness in the spring, and is very glad to be able to meet once more with his brethren.

Lamoni Priesthood Meeting

On Sunday afternoon, December 2, at 2.30 one of the largest gatherings of the priesthood of Lamoni we have ever seen met in the upper auditorium. President Elbert A. Smith, John F. Garver and Paul N. Craig presided. It had been expected that President F. M. Smith would be present, but owing to urgent matters which unexpectedly arose, he was compelled to depart, leaving the matter in charge of his brethren. President Elbert A. Smith offered a few opening remarks, the first time he has addressed the priesthood this year, then Elder Frederick B. Blair was called to the stand and ordained to the office of bishop under the hands of President Elbert A. Smith, and Patriarch F. A. Smith. This ordination had recently been provided for by the unanimous vote of the standing High Council. Brother Blair's ordination should give added strength to the Order of Bishops in their present deliberations. John F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake then addressed the brethren at some length, following the instructions of President F. M. Smith. He laid especial emphasis on the meetings held at Independence of stake presidents and stake bishops on November 20 and 21. These meetings are proving very valuable to the brethren having charge of the stake work, as they meet frequently for consultation and exchange of opinion. They find that they are making real progress. It is promoting much closer harmony between them and also in each stake, between the stake presidents and stake bishops. President E. A. Smith placed especial emphasis upon the need of personal righteousness. The time is at hand when jealousy must not be permitted to defeat our purpose. Within the next few years the church will either make or break. It is a time for cooperation, but above all for individual righteousness.

You cannot dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge one yourself.—Froude.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

WHAT IS THE BISHOPRIC DOING?

(Sermon by Bishop A. Carmichael, at Lamoni, Iowa, August, 1917. Reported by Winsome Smith McDonald.)

A brother came to us this afternoon and asked what we would suggest with reference to the further development of our stake work. He said, alluding to myself, "I have heard you so many times in the past, talking about what we are going to do, 'It is time we are doing something. Quit talking so much.' What have you to suggest that we do?"

THE RESPONSIBILITY

We sense keenly, Saints, the fact that to some extent at least the responsibility of moving out in the temporal things of the stake rests upon your stake bishopric. We thought when the brother spoke to us, that we had been trying to tell you folks some of the things we thought were necessary for us to do in order to accomplish the work. The president of our church told us at our meeting in Independence a few days ago that he would expect the stake officers to move out in a positive and aggressive way, and not come to him and ask always for details of the work; that he expected us to take the initiative. So we suppose you will naturally expect from your stake president and from your stake bishopric a constructive and aggressive policy.

As we understand the proposition, the spiritual side of the matter more particularly belongs to your stake presidency while the material or temporal things belong to the stake bishopric. Do not misunderstand us. Each department has the right to overlap and teach all of the counsel of God, but the spiritual side of the constructive work of this stake belongs to your stake president more particularly, while the temporal division belongs to the bishopric.

We hope to-night if we have the liberty of the Spirit, to outline to you some of the things we would like to see accomplished in our stake. We know, as we have said before when we have stood in the pulpit that we will run counter to some of your ideas, but of course we cannot forego setting a positive program for fear it interferes with some ideas preconceived, for if we did we would do nothing.

OUR MARK

Somewhere in the revelations to this church in the latter days there is a statement made something like this, "Zion shall be independent of everything under the celestial heaven." That is a high mark, but we cannot afford to aim at anything less; that must be our goal; that Zion shall be independent some time and somewhere of everything under the celestial kingdom; and the object of this condition is to fit us for service to humanity. Zion as we understand it to-night, not only means a condition, but it means a location. Let us get the term clearly in mind.

You heard in the lecture of Brother McDowell that one of the great difficulties between the teacher and the pupil was that they did not use a common language, and when we use the word Zion to-night, standing as instructor to you, we want you to understand what we mean when we use that term. If you have another comprehension of the word Zion than we do we will be at cross purposes until we understand alike. So when we use the word Zion we mean not only a condition, but a location. God's people must not only be in a certain condition of purity and intelligence, but they must have a location. With this thought then let us go ahead with our proposition.

BASIC PRINCIPLES

If we expect to accomplish the work of God we must of course keep in harmony with the basic principles that govern the work. In all progressive movements that we expect to make we must not violate certain great basic principles, but in our moving out there will be many details that will have to be worked out, and we will not know for a certainty whether these details are correct or not until we have experimented more or less. There are none of us so far as humanity is concerned who are infallible. We are all liable to make mistakes, but we will minimize these mistakes if we will always remember our foundation principles. We have tried time and again in your hearing to tell you what these are, we do not care to repeat them to-night. It is sufficient to say, we ought to know what certain fundamental principles are, and intelligently move out along those lines, but there are as we said before a few items that must be worked out, and in working out these details necessarily we are going to have to uproot some of our prejudices, preconceived ideas, and some of our habits of long standing.

Have you noticed in to-day's paper that Mr. Hoover who has charge of the food distribution of the United States, has given out certain fundamental principles? And when you read them did you think that possibly the body which we represent may have to move along those lines before we can make a success of Zion's work?

INVENTORY AND BUDGET

We remember while attending a meeting of the Board of Publication a few weeks ago one of the members of the board suggested the idea of stewardships in the publishing department. The Board of Publication gave the business manager of the publishing department the privilege to work out the stewardship plan. As one of the steps toward this, and we want you to notice what we are trying to get at, the business manager of the publishing concerns of the church made out a blank which he thought—while not absolutely essential—would be a great help to accomplish this work. This blank provided for an inventory on one side and a yearly budget on the other side.

Now, the Lord years ago commanded all members of this church to lay all they had at the bishop's feet. Don't misunderstand that expression and run away with the thought that the bishopric expects to get all you have. They do not expect that at all. The expression to lay at the bishop's feet, means this in brief: that you shall make out an inventory of your resources and liabilities and place it before the bishopric so that the church will know your financial standing and thus be able to correctly determine what your tithing and surplus is. That is good business. You cannot do business with any banking house in this town or any other town, you cannot do business with any prudent man but what they must know your financial standing.

On the inventory side of this blank we have the resources and liabilities, and on the other side we have what we call the yearly budget. We asked the employees of the publishing department of the church to state to us approximately just how much they needed during the year for shelter, food, fuel, clothing and incidentals. "Oh," you will say, "Brother Carmichael, you are trying to hew too close." Read your daily newspaper and you will find that the State of Iowa is going to do that very thing to a certain extent, and do you know, Saints, that this is being done by the economic writers all over the United States?

THE POINT OF CONTACT OF HOME ECONOMICS—A BUDGET

A great deal is being said to-day about home economics. Many are learning the theory of the conservation of food; learning how to save theoretically. What we need is a practical application of the laws of home economics. This can be done in no better way than by first giving simple lessons in diet, cooking, and in clothing, etc.

To do constructive and efficacious work and really help, a family budget should be the foundation for all instruction. This family budget is the connecting link between the theory of conservation of our means and the actual conservation of the same—the point of contact between the theoretical and the practical.

We have a book on statistics in regard to family budgets, of nearly three thousand families, taken from the northern part of the United States, from the Western States, from the Central States, and from the Eastern States, so as to get approximately a fair average, and these three thousand families were requested to state in this yearly budget just about how much they would need for clothing—what they would need, not luxury, but needs. I want to drive that home. Their needs. And then the experiment went on during the year, these families were to keep tab on every expenditure for clothing, food and educational purposes, etc.

The thought by this committee on economics was to get this data from all over the United States so that they could determine approximately just about what it takes to properly clothe, feed, shelter, etc., a family of two, three, four or five, whatever the size may be. The data is there in the book.

Again, another society on the study of economics tried seventy-five families, and they gathered their data for the year 1916, after the war began. Do you know that the presiding bishopric of this church, if they had studied the data from these books, could not have come nearer to their deductions as to the amount each family should receive?

Now this committee went about it in a practical way to determine just what it would take to clothe properly and feed properly and take care of properly the average family, and did it with the thought of that family being amply supplied, and they have made almost the same statements that are made to this church in the revelation, that every family might be amply supplied. But they wanted to determine from an economic standpoint, from a practical standpoint if you please, just how much it does take to amply supply a family. They wanted to know whether the Americans were running wild in luxuries and extravagance. Their data has been printed and spread abroad. Do you know that the average figures for those seventy-five families of 1916, after the war began and after prices were high, was just about almost to a cent what the presiding bishopric is allowing the missionaries to-day? It seems as if our bishopric did not make a wild guess on that.

To us there is something very remarkable in the coincidence, if you can call it so, that out of nearly three thousand families in one case, seventy-five in another, that this church allows to the missionary's family approximately what this society found was necessary that the families in America should have to be amply supplied.

How many of you, how many of us, are ready to go on a budget?

Bishop M. C. Fisher, if we remember correctly the last time we met in General Conference, showed us a method he had of putting a check on his extravagance. He had a little book. In one column he had "Expenditures," and under that he had "Necessary" and "Unnecessary." He was honest to himself, and whenever he would spend anything unnecessary he would put it over under that column. Well, he told us, it didn't take him very long to find out where his money was going. You try it and be honest about it.

What we want to get at is this. The plan that God has outlined to this church, which your bishopric—the stake bishopric, desires to see put into effect, the plan which provides for an intelligent conservation of our resources is being enforced now by the Government, and it does seem the irony of fate that the children of this generation are as wise if not wiser than the children of light, wiser because they have to be.

PRODUCER AND CONSUMER

One of the great questions of to-day included in the study of economics, is the question of getting the producer and consumer together. Have you noticed to-day what the Government is going to do in regard to this matter? When you read the daily papers you will find how the Government is going to do this, Mr. Hoover saying to the producer—you Saints who are producers listen, and if this is right from the Government standpoint as a means for carrying on war against a physical enemy, it surely is necessary and just as essential to carry on war with a great spiritual enemy—he says he is going to see that the producer gets a fair profit out of his products. I hope he will see that they do, and you producers who are supplying your fellow men be sure that the price you ask is not exorbitant—that your price does not exhibit the "spirit of greed" and "speculation."

Now brethren and sisters, this thing is a practical thing, hence Mr. Hoover says he is going to see that the American producer doesn't rob the consumer by asking an exorbitant price. That is speculating. I hope he will see to it that speculating ceases.

Do you know by actual test what it costs to raise a bushel of corn? It costs about sixty-eight cents a bushel, yet they are asking two dollars and twenty-five cents for a bushel. Is or is not this speculating on people's needs?

You producers may think I am hard on you. Very well, I expect as your stake bishop to see the time when the producers of this church are as consecrated as they ought to be, so thoroughly consecrated to God's way of doing business that they will not ask an exorbitant price for the things they raise, but they will go to work carefully, intelligently, and efficiently so as to minimize the cost of production, and then ask a fair profit. Remember the land is not yours, it is God's, and you have no right to take God's heritage and use it as a club to oppress your brethren.

Mr. Hoover says the first thing he is going to do is to see that the great variance between the cost of producing a thing and the cost to the final consumer is cut down, to see that the producer makes a fair profit. That is the first step. That is right, that is the thing to do. As a people set apart to serve our fellow men, what right have we to exploit the laborer because we happen to have the temporary possession of the soil? It is owned by God and he will possess it in the end. Notice how Mr. Hoover's statements agree with the statements made here the other morning by your president, when he said some of these principles had to be worked out in Zion, the time was here to do so, and that we must be awake to these realities. Mr. Hoover says he is going to try to see that the people of Illinois eat Illinois wheat, the people of Illinois eat Illinois corn, eat Illinois meat, and he is not going to have unnecessary transportation of one thing from one community to the other, and make a large expense of extra freight.

In other words there is to be cooperation. Cooperation among the Saints in adjoining counties. One county will determine just what to have to sell, another determine what they will have to trade for it, and by motor trucks and such means they will put an end to commerce embargo. We will have to do that also in our stakes.

The time is coming and is now when our young men will come from the agricultural universities and teach our farmers how to raise crops efficiently.

What Shall We Give This Year?

To be sure we should not quit giving for that is a fundamental of this latter-day work—whole-hearted giving to God through man.

But it must be done wisely. No need of shutting our eyes and buying the first thing offered, regardless of its appropriateness.

Select gifts with the same intelligence that characterizes your other activities and let them be the helpful kind.

In this issue are a few of the many books and publications described that are sure to be acceptable and worth while. They are not all here, but we will be glad to send a price list of the rest.

The people down at Far West, our adjoining stake, will cooperate with us and there will be commerce between the two. And then to crown it all, your State of Iowa, through Ames, states that they are going to have a county agent in every county to instruct in all lines of agriculture. Thank God for Ames, thank God for Hoover, thank God for these men that are showing us the real, practical conservation of our forces, and that luxury is a curse to the nation. This is practical religion.

NEEDS AND JUST WANTS

What right have we to take that which God has given us as a special gift and use it for our own luxury when we see humanity all about us in dire need? Every man should have his needs and just wants. If you need anything, then get it. If you need a threshing machine get it; if you need an automobile get it, but do not get anything you don't need. That is the statement, every man shall have according to his needs and just wants. All your needs are just, but your wants may not be just. A man's needs are just, but his wants are just or unjust. What is Ames, the State of Iowa, going to do? They are going to send down a county agent, and he is going to show us just where we are extravagant, he is going to teach us home economics, if you please. We ought to understand how to take care of what we have, not to waste it.

When we presented the idea of an inventory and budget two months ago to the employees of the publishing concerns of the church some of them almost threw up their hands in horror. The idea of your asking us to make out a budget of what we are approximately going to spend in a year in clothing, in shelter, and in food!

ORDER OF ENOCH

The Saints asked the Lord for directions for cooperative and constructive work, several years ago. They fasted and prayed and asked what they must do. The Lord told them. A man came to us with tears in his eyes this evening and said, "What are you going to teach this people to do?" The Lord at that conference (1909) told this people what to do. We do not know, but we have our doubts whether the man that asked us that question ever joined the Order of Enoch. He may have, we do not know. The Lord told this people what to do. Here it is: "It is necessary that my people organize." And how many of you people belong to that order that the Lord said was essential that there might be progress made in his work, in your stake? The Lord said this eight years ago, and that little order here in Lamoni is struggling along because it has not the means to do its work, and yet people will shrug their shoulders and say, "How is the Order of Enoch? I hope you will be a success." Hope is cheap at this price. They say, "I do hope you fellows will succeed." So do we hope it. Come up and see the treasurer of the order to-morrow, and make your hope a practical thing by putting in his hands means to aid the needy. The Order of Enoch is trying to do these things that are absolutely essential that we might make progress in this church.

What are some of the things we want to do? Why, as we said in the first place, we must each one of us, to make progress along this work, comply with the financial law of the church, and that law is to come and lay your inventory before the bishop, and be ready to enter into your stewardship formally. "Oh," you say, "I cannot do that." Do you think the Lord asks an impossibility of you? He asks you to do it. The Lord has spoken to us, and it is up to us whether we move out or not. How many of you farmers are ready to take your stewardship? If not, why not? We cannot make a success of this work until you are willing to comply with the law. We are getting down to what we call the fundamentals, every man should be a steward over what he possesses. And do you know what a stewardship means? It means for you to put yourself on the same basis as any other man that is in a stewardship. You may talk to us all you want to, but you know that one of the curses of the world to-day is the twofold interpretation of the law.

TWOFOLD INTERPRETATION

You know if you go into our legislative halls you find a class of legislators there who are trying to make class legislation, and you know that is the curse of all democracy. Again, you know the curse of the world to-day is that men have a double standard in the moral law, one for the man, and one for the woman. You know that is the chief curse of humanity to-day. Put the two under the same interpretation of the law morally and you will see society change with wonderful rapidity in a short while, and that for the better. And when it comes to a financial question, do you want to put the poor brother on one platform of interpretation, and the business man on another? You will never succeed in the wide world. All any brother ought to get out of his stewardship is his needs and just wants. All a farmer ought to get out of his farm is his needs and just wants, and all anyone ought to get is his needs and just wants. This applies to every man in the church.

WHAT TO DO

What does that mean? It simply means this, that we want you farmers of this stake to come before the bishopric and make your statement to us in regard to your financial standing, and then retain your stewardship, and out of that farm which is your stewardship—recognized formally as a stewardship of God—you should take your needs and just wants, amply supplied. There are three things in this world that make a man want to save; he wants to save because he is afraid of old age, fear is one of them; fear of poverty; secondly, he wants to save because he loves his family, the love for his family prompts him to save; and thirdly, he wants to save because of the love of money, which brings power, or selfishness. We will never make a success of this work until selfishness is eliminated. The true motive is that stated in the Book of Mormon as follows:

After ye have obtained a hope in Christ ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek for them; and ye will seek for them, for the intent to do good, to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive and administer relief to the sick and the afflicted.—Job 2: 24.

We should have our needs and just wants and all above that should go towards helping our fellow men. That is the doctrine of Jesus Christ, that is what we are trying to teach, and this stake will never progress until we get the producers on that basis. Are you ready? Are the producers of this stake ready for that? The United States Government is working along that line. The income tax and excess profit tax are means employed toward that end, that a man should give of his surplus. The whole world is recognizing that economic proposition, that men are but stewards over what they have, and that men could not accomplish or save what they do only through the protecting arm of society, and society has its right to part of the gains. Now that is true of the producer, that is the ideal condition.

"Tell us something to do," you say. We will tell you something to do. We repeat, you producers in the fear of God comply with the financial law of this church, come before the proper authorities and ask for your stewardship and you will get it. You already have gotten it, you are stewards now whether you will have it so or not, but come and get it formally recognized. Receive your stewardship, and then progress as God wishes you to. As stated before, if you need an automobile in your business, get it, but if you do not need don't get it. Confine your expenditures to your needs. That is drawing the line pretty tight, but it must be done. Is that a comprehensive program for the producer as well as the consumer? Is it a constructive one? As you know what to do it is your duty to do it.

Keep an account of your yearly receipts and expenditures. Under your receipts put everything obtained from sales off your farm, or salary of any kind, or any property received with value of same.

Under your expenditures put what it takes to keep up your needs and just wants, which includes proper clothing, food, shelter, fuel, etc. Not forgetting to keep up your farm or whatever your business is to a hundred per cent efficiency, allowing also for proper expansion or growth of your business or stewardship. Better consult with the financial authorities of the church when contemplating an expansion of your business.

Take out of your yearly increase on the farm your needs and just wants.

What are your needs and just wants? In brief, the Lord expects you to keep your farm up to a hundred per cent efficiency. He does not expect because you are going to pay your surplus into the church that some other fellow may get a start in life, that you do not need to keep it up to a hundred per cent efficiency.

A man came to us last week and said, "Brother Carmichael, I am ready to start on the stewardship plan," and we expect to start him. Is that progressive enough? Is that something definite to do? Do you want something definite along spiritual lines? Then go to your stake president and he will tell you what to do, you ought to listen to what he says; if you want something definite along temporal lines the bishopric should be able to give it to you.

You producers get to work under the stewardship

New Stock of Preaching Notices

In this issue we are printing a duplicate of the new form of general preaching notices we have just stocked. They are a good thing for places where it is not thought advisable to get out personal notices.

Of course it is not possible to incorporate all the best features of result-getting announcements in one form like this, but we believe it has a number of good features. Any suggestions as to improvement of future editions will be gladly received and filed.

We urge care in filling in the blanks, for upon this part depends considerable of the success you will have in attracting favorable notice.

These sell at 50 cents a hundred, postpaid, and will be available for quick delivery. Order No. E545, this office.

plan, every one of you, for your line of work is the basis of all wealth. You men that are in the manufacturing business, you in the commercial lines, you who are professional men, every one of you, get under the stewardship plan. Is that progressive enough, definite enough? What more definite thing do you want? That is the ideal as your stake bishopric understands it. That is the ideal that we have for this stake, that every man must recognize that he is a steward, and sometime, somewhere, you will have to answer for it. Why not recognize this fact now and move out in the fear of God, and he will bless you when you do this. That is true if this people expects to be upheld by God, and it will come, when every man instead of having his own private account in the bank—we do not mean that we should not have any private account in the bank, there should be—but we haven't time to dwell fully on that. We do not mean to say that you farmers or men in business should not have any working capital, you must have your working capital as part of your needs. Carry as much working capital on hand as is necessary. To have proper credit to pay as we ought to pay, we have to carry three or four thousand dollars in the bank as a working capital for the Herald Office. I would not put that into the surplus because we need that as a working capital. It should be understood that a working capital is not a part of a man's surplus. So don't get the idea you should have nothing to run your business on.

If that is true of the producer, then let us go a little further. Is it true of the home?

HOME ECONOMICS

The Lord has spoken to us in regard to clothing, that the ornamentation be of our own hands. How many of our sisters are doing that? How many are willing? The women in this church ought to know how to make their own dresses, and that is what the State of Iowa is going to do, send instructors around in this country to teach the women to make their own dresses. Home economics will be taught these girls and women.

In this budget we spoke of we asked the employees of the publishing department if they were willing to take a course in home economics, how to make dresses, how to make hats, how to cook, etc. We would save a lot of money if our wives knew how to make their own dresses, hats, and would conserve in our food. I do not mean by that they need to wear dowdy hats or outlandish clothing. We believe that this unnecessary expense is wrong. Don't you? You must know that it is wrong. Then why do you do it? All around us is suffering humanity. Men and women in need, dire distress. We must learn how to economize. Dress becomingly, not conspicuously.

We do not say that it is always the most economical for our sisters to do their own sewing, etc. Wisdom should govern. Circumstances may be such that it would be better to hire it done, but we do believe that every girl should be taught how to do these things if necessary. We must learn to eliminate our expensive living. We must cut out these luxuries. We must live just as God wants us to live, with our needs and wants amply supplied.

What does it mean? that Zion is going to be independent. We must begin to work like, say, Marshall Field & Company of Chicago. If we are informed correctly they own their own land in the South where they raise cotton, have their own mills, their own manufacturing plant. They control the cotton from the time it is planted to the time it is a finished product sold over the counter. Marshall Field & Company know how to cut out unnecessary middlemen. This church has got to do that if they expect to be independent. We are going to have men of intelligence come to us. Zion can only be redeemed by intelligence. By the aid of men who know the proper use of materials at our hands. By a cooperation of all our energies. By team work, if you please. Some of our people will raise the sheep. Others manufacture the cloth out of the wool, and the finished product be distributed over the counter of our storehouse. Zion shall be independent of everything under the celestial heaven. Of course we cannot do it at once, but that is the comprehensive program that lies before us. We must be self-contained. That is the object, the primary object of the constructive work as outlined by the law of temporalities as we understand it.

THE STOREHOUSE

Up to date we have started a couple of storehouses, one here at Lamoni, and one at Independence, Missouri. Bishop McGuire is also preparing a large building for a general storehouse.

We expect in due time to be able to purchase the majority if not all of our necessities of manufactured articles from manufactories owned by our own people. These people engaged in this business of manufacturing will be on the stewardship plan, and will not try to obtain an unfair profit, consequently the storehouse can distribute the finished product at a just and fair profit.

By means of the storehouse all unnecessary middlemen will be eliminated. In place of being a parasite on the consumer the unnecessary middleman will finally adjust himself to the new order of things and become a producer.

At the present time we have to pay double and triple tribute to selfishness incarnate. This should not be.

We have been warned against speculating. Let us heed the warning.

The establishing of storehouses is part of our constructive program.

What else can we do? We ask this people to move in and occupy just as God intended them to occupy and organize as our Lord and Master told us to organize. The farmers have their land, we all have the means to do with, the only thing is to move out and do it. As we said before, it seems to us that as a people we ought to see the handwriting on the wall; we ought to see that the plan that God has outlined is now being enforced approximately by this Government, and that from the time an article is raised until it is finally used this Government is going to see that men and women are not undersupplied, nor overcharged, a necessity arising out of our war condition. Such a movement under ordinary circumstances is fraught with danger, but it now becomes a real necessity—a war necessity. The German Government is an example of this danger. America, including Latter Day Saints, have had such an exaggerated idea of democracy that they have swerved too far toward individual rights. The powerful German nation moves like a clock because so many of its people are engaged by the Government. So much of its activities, commercially and spiritually, are centralized by the Government. Her people look to their Government to such an extent that they are controlled as one great solid machine, a dangerous condition in which to find fallible humanity—too much paternalism. The United States has swerved too much the other way. We do not want that in the kingdom of God, we do not want men to do these things because the Government says to do them, but we want them to do it because they know them to be right. First of all, says Paul, have a willing mind. This work can be accomplished only along the lines of freedom, volition, if you please. The program is before us. As the Lord has told us, we can move in and occupy or we can reject.

We are here to state to-night that we hope and expect this stake to organize more fully. We expect it to be in the condition God wishes it; in the condition that the people who are looking towards this stake expect to see it, who are asking, "What are you doing down there, what progress are you making?" who are watching and waiting and praying that they may be able to gather here. The hope of the church for years has been to have a place of refuge for this people, and to accomplish this we have to organize along the lines God has given. That the kingdom of heaven may be built up there must be close cooperation between those not only on the farm, but also in our manufactories. In fact, team work by the whole church.

OUR LAUNDRY

As an example of what we expect to do as soon as we are able we cite you to our expected laundry.

We have found two qualified members who are willing to enter this business on the stewardship plan. We emphasize the word qualified. You remember the Lord told us to send up qualified men to Zion. It is going to take something else besides prayers to redeem Zion. Let us never forget that with prayers must go intelligent workers, active workers, qualified workers.

These brethren expect to demonstrate that the laundry business can be run in harmony with the law of stewardships—that out of the proceeds of the business they will get their needs and just wants and the balance will be turned into the common treasurer as tithing and surplus. It will not go into any bank and pile up to their credit.

This surplus will be used to help other worthy members.

These brethren will be so working not because they have to but because they love to—with them right is might. It will not be as the world puts it—

“The good old rule, the simple plan:
Keep all you get—get all you can,”

but “in all things what ye would that men should do to you do ye even so unto them” will be the governing thought.

The title to this laundry will eventually be in the name of these two brethren as stewards if they continue to operate it. The church has no idea of trying to run all the different business enterprises. This will be left to individual effort or in some cases to the cooperative efforts of two or more individuals. This will insure the proper development of our individuality, this individuality being properly governed and controlled by the fact that all such efforts will be made under the dynamic of “service to our fellow man.”

The success of these enterprises will largely depend on the Saints' attitude towards them, whether they patronize them or not. Is this constructive or not? “Judge ye this day.”

I hope I have said something to cause you to think, and hope it will help some of you.

THE CHOIR, FROM THE CHOIR LOFT

(Paper read at the choir institute session, at the General Conference of 1916, at Independence, Missouri.)

“Should the consecration of the individual choir member equal that of the choir leader?”

As I understand it, I am to deal with this topic from the standpoint of the “choir loft” and not from the director's standpoint nor from the standpoint of the congregation. “Should the consecration of the individual choir member equal that of the choir leader?” This is the question at real issue.

What is the choir? It is a necessary adjunct to the work of the church, which is the instrument of the Lord by which he is to make the best out of men and women. Logically, therefore, the question arises in the minds of those who are interested in the work of the church, should choir members be as wholly consecrated to the choir work as the director?

Our answer would be that not only the director but all the choir members should be wholly consecrated to the work of the church. The choir being part of the church, should give consecrated service through its members the same as men give consecrated service in any other line of church work. Choir members should be as interested in making their part of the service a success as should any other participants. It should be remembered that choir service is a part of the service; not all. Choir members should see to it that their part is performed in such a way that the balance of the service is not detracted from but made better. They should be consecrated to the whole service and not to the singing only.

This raises another question: Should choir members be required to make their interest in that part of the church service first? Shall we require members to attend choir practices and choir renderings to the exclusion of other work in the church? or shall we admit persons to membership knowing that they have other obligations, who when there is a conflict of dates, will give preference to their other work?

To some of us this latter question should be answered in the affirmative; for, though some have other duties which they consider the work of their calling, they may assist in the choir work. But this in no sense is a license for a lack of consecration to the musical line when they are in attendance, and it is not an excuse, behind which too many apparently hide, and fail to make the best of their opportunities for better choir service. Everyone should be so thoroughly interested in and consecrated to the work of the church that he will be willing to make every sacrifice necessary to give the best possible to the church.

Choir members who expect to make useful servants to the church should not expect to become such without being “blue penciled.” The best friend any choir member has is the director who is fearless enough to call attention to errors made. The hope of the church, so far as relates to choir work, lies in those who are willing to be taught and who are willing to try to learn by being corrected by their leaders or directors. If members are so efficient that they are beyond the reach of the blue pencil of the director, the choir is fortunate; such are few. And the choir is unfortunate in having for members (if such they have, and they usually have them) those who are so constituted that when their errors and extravagances are brought to their notice they either sit back on their dignity (?) and half-heartedly sing their parts or leave the choir for the balance of the practice, or become conspicuous by their absence for innumerable times, because they “don't like the director's methods.”

Attendance is no more compulsory than baptism. If you do not want to comply with that ordinance you do not have to. But you have to take the consequences of trifling with your duty if once you have understood it, and no one can afford that. No philosopher would be insane enough to hope for the reward in his ideal, if he did not consecrate himself to the working out of his purposes. And choir members cannot hope to see the church equipped with excellent choirs unless they are consecrated to the work of their calling, any more than we can hope to have efficient leaders in the church from those people who have trifled with their consciences all the days of their youths, by doing everything but their plain, unvarnished duties. Many able and talented members are outdone by others less gifted, because the latter ones apply themselves conscientiously to their work.

There is one observation which is all too easily made. It concerns the common practice of quite a number who desert the leader during the long, hard grind during the periods when there is nothing special to prepare for; and when the regular work of the church needs the choir as much or more than at the specials. But they drop in at the first sign of something special and practice until it is over and are gone again. This is not consecrated, devoted service—the kind that makes for permanent growth.

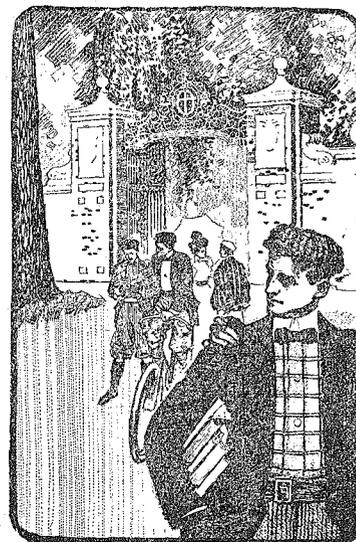

Another class may be found who drop into this work believing there is some short cut to musical prominence. They attend well for a few weeks or months, and then, seeing there is something more to the statement, "Let those who have the gift to sing take upon them the burden and care," than the mere passive attention, they drop off by degrees and finally are heard saying, "there is nothing to it." And there isn't for that kind of people. "Take upon themselves the burden," and "cultivate the gifts of music and of song." Assume the burden and cultivate the gift: that means something. The future church choir success is with those who are willing to work for it.

Choir members, how would you like a leader who comes late, trifles when present, and withal is very irregular in attendance? Too often that is what you put up to your director.

Is it true that the more talented the members, the more trouble they give? Some not especially gifted realize that if they are to accomplish anything it must be by making the most of everything there is in them and working with all their forces to learn the meaning of art; but those really gifted by nature sit back in the easy confidence that all things will be added to them without struggle or effort on their part. Inspiration does not come made to order, and cannot be forced into members by the director any more than the man who baptizes you can give you the spirit of this great cause in which we are working. We must get it; and to get it and hold it requires real, live, active, earnest, consecrated effort.

Choir members, have you answered these questions: Have I a purpose in giving so much time to the choir? have I an ideal? what do I attend choir services for? is it to show myself or is it to make some one else feel the spirit and power that wells up in me through this artful charm—singing? Am I artificial or am I in it heart and soul? You can answer these questions in a way that may fool the whole world including yourself, but you cannot fool God.

Any so-called secret of success which ignores the moral foundation is either superficial or unsafe, or both. Cleverness without morality deceives most the ones who practice it. This involves our conduct in the choir loft during services; and it requires that we give ourselves to the entire services—the body of the work of which the choir is but an arm. To have the letter without the spirit makes machines of men, and to have any spirit but the best is to miss something in the measure of success. Craftiness is not wisdom; but very generally an ignorant substitute for sound morals. Nothing can ever take the place of honesty, sincerity, a pure mind and a true heart. The moral standard of the choir should be high—on a plain with that of the preacher. Without it there is insufficient coordination. The real secret of success is to think right, to do right, to live right; and then we can sing right and with the Spirit.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE GREAT DAY FOR ISRAEL

It has come to pass—the day long wished for in all its momentous and farthest-reaching consequences to Israel and the world. Zionism was. Zion is about to be. The declaration of the Right Honorable Arthur James Balfour on behalf of the British Government has transferred Zionism from the field of national aspirations to the realm of political fact. Not in centuries has any word been spoken of equally vital consequence to the well-being of Israel. The British Government, true to a policy of two hundred years of sympathy with and friendship for the Jew, leads the way in indicating to its allies and to the world that the day has come for the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and that it will use its best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object.

ITS LARGE SIGNIFICANCE

Two things may be assumed on the basis of the historic utterance of the British Minister of Foreign Affairs, the one that Britain is not acting alone. It is not for us to predicate that England has spoken and acted in concert with her allies, but we are justified in believing that England, ever working in closest cooperation with her allies in the war, will in the day of peace find herself not only supported by France and Italy but above all by the American Government and people, which, under the leadership of President Wilson, must needs insist that the destruction of the Prussian ideal must be followed by the establishment and maintenance of the integrity of the lesser nations.

The other fact that is bound up inevitably with the declaration of the British Cabinet as made by Mr. Balfour is that it is to be taken for granted that opposition to Zionism is ended. Whatever some Jews may heretofore have thought and said about the Zionist hope, they face a fact which cannot be controverted nor annulled. I for my part believe that not only the great masses of Jewry throughout the world look upon these days as the beginning of a new, and perhaps the happiest, epoch in Jewish history, but that even those who could not up to this time be persuaded of the practicability of Zionist plans will be ready as Jews and Americans, alike, to assent to the unanswerable argument of a fact.

The doors of the Zionist organization have never been shut even to those who kept themselves outside of the Zionist organization. If anything, the doors are to be wider open than ever before. It is our business to forget who was or was not a Zionist or an anti-Zionist before this time. The time is come to put away the memory of difference and division in the past and to welcome the service and helpfulness of every Jew who recognizes that this is the hour of Jewish destiny.

TIME FOR REAL SERVICE

One word of warning to the Jewish people needs to be spoken. However important may be Mr. Balfour's declaration on behalf of Great Britain, nothing more than the first step has been taken. We have done no more than pass out of the realm of hope into the field of possibility. This is the hour that will test the soul of the Jew. They who have shared the dream of their people must now serve as they have never served before, and they who up to this time have held aloof will find fullest opportunity for high and devoted service. The immediate task is greatly to augment the number of members of the Zionist organization of America. Every American Jew ought to become an enrolled and shekel-paying Zionist. This is the prime duty of the hour.

May not we who have borne the burden of the day in expressing our joy and gratitude call to mind the wisdom and statesmanship of our leaders, who, alike in England and America, have made possible the coming of the great day—Justice Brandeis, loved and honored leader of Zionists in our own land, and Dr. Chaim Weitzmann, of England, who has carried the infinitely difficult and delicate negotiations with the British Government to the point of glorious triumph. The privilege it has been of my associates and myself of the Provisional Committee and allied Zionist organizations to hold up the hands of our leaders.

The greatest and heaviest of tasks yet lies before us. We summon every Jew in America to the post of service and of honor—under the Zionist flag.—Doctor Stephen S. Wise, in The American Hebrew, November 27, 1917.

JEWISH PEOPLE WILL RESPOND

The British declaration will be received by all the Jews, and not only by Zionists, as an historic event fraught with great significance for the future of the Jewish people. Our destiny is involved in how we react to the declaration. The Zionist movement aims not only at national recognition and opportunity, but also to lift up the Jewish people to the height of national idealism. The British declaration gives us the national recognition we were striving for. Clearly and unmistakably it implies that the British Government appreciates the national capacities of the Jewish people and therefore recognizes the right of that nationality to a place among the nations of the world.

But no power on earth can give to the Jewish people anything which it is incapable of taking advantage of. No power on earth can give a people strength of character and willingness to sacrifice. That must be supplied by the living generation of Jews. Will the Jews of to-day be worthy of the generation in which they are living? Will they rise to the occasion?

We have no fears for the Zionists. They may be, at the beginning, a little bewildered by the grave responsibility which devolves upon them, but we have faith in their courage and their loyalty. We know that the word of liberation will find them prepared. They have labored so long, without reward, for Zionist ideals, in spite of obstacles and with only small things to show for their work, that they may be trusted now to be equal to the occasion, and to be prepared to make larger sacrifices, in order that all of their idealist strivings may be fully realized.

But the Zionists themselves, that is, the Zionists who are now enrolled in the Zionist organization—are not, numerically or economically, strong enough to carry the burden. They will be compelled to call upon all Jews to join the ranks and to cooperate in the work. It is the whole body of the Jewish people outside of the Zionist ranks at present who awake doubts. For a generation the Zionist organization has been pounding the Jewish people with theories, with sentiments, and with achievements. It has been unable to goad them or persuade them into becoming partners in the work of redemption. They have even struggled against us. Only grudgingly have they given approval of achievements, and have sturdily refrained from lending a helping hand. The question is, will they now throw away their prejudices, and with a generous spirit join with us in the tremendous work that now looms before us?

Those who have faith in the Jewish people believe that the Jewish people will respond; the Zionist organization has always had faith in the power of the Zionist ideal ultimately to bring the Jewish people to appreciate the value of its program. Now that the door of opportunity has been opened, and all the world may see what there is before us, we, for ourselves, have no doubt that the Jewish people will be found equal to the historic task. It is the duty of the Zionists, however, relentlessly to pursue the members of the Jewish people who still hold aloof. Day in and day out the work of conversion must go on. That is our present huge task—to bring the Jewish people into the Zionist organization, and to make of them enthusiastic co-workers in the redemption of Israel.—Louis Lipsky, in The American Hebrew, for November 23, 1917.

AN OFFICIAL CALL FOR RESPONSE TO WAR RISK INSURANCE

To the Officers and Enlisted Men and Women of the Army and Navy of the United States and their Relatives:

The Secretary of the Treasury, through the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, has been charged with the administration of the War Insurance Law enacted by the Congress as a measure of justice to the men and women who have been called to give their lives, if need be, in the service of their country.

I wish to acquaint you with the benefits and privileges which your Government has placed at your disposal. It is essential that you and your families at home should know of your and their rights under this law in order that full advantage may be taken of them.

To care for the wife and children of the enlisted man during his service, the War Insurance Law compels him to contribute up to one-half of his pay for their support. The Government, on application, will generously add to this an allowance of from $5 to $50 a month, according to the size of the family. Moreover, if the enlisted man will make some further provision himself for a dependent parent, brother, sister, or grandchild, they may be included in the Government allowance.

If, as a result of injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of duty, an officer or enlisted man or an Army or Navy nurse should be disabled, provision is made for compensation of from $30 to $100 a month to him and, should he die, compensation of from $20 to $75 a month will be paid to his wife, his child, or his widowed mother.

In order, however, fully to protect each person and family, Congress has made it possible for every soldier, sailor, and nurse to obtain life and total-disability insurance. This insurance applies to injuries received while he or she is in the service or after he or she shall have left it.

Exposure to the extra dangers of war makes the cost of life insurance in private life insurance companies prohibitive. It was, therefore, a plain duty and obligation for the Government to assume the risk of insuring hundreds of thousands of our soldiers and sailors who are making the supreme sacrifice. Under this law, every soldier and sailor and nurse, commissioned and enlisted, and of any age, has the right, between now and February 12, 1918, to take out life and total-disability insurance up to $10,000 at very low cost, with the Government without medical examination. This right is purely optional. The soldiers and sailors are not compelled to take insurance, but if they desire to exercise the right, they must do so before the 12th of February, 1918. The cost ranges from 65 cents monthly, at the age of 21, to $1.20 monthly, at the age of 51, for each $1,000 of insurance. This is a small charge on a man's pay—small in proportion to the benefits it may bring. The premiums will be deducted from his pay, if he desires, thus eliminating trouble on his part.

To provide adequate protection until February 12, 1918, during the period when the soldiers and sailors are learning the details of this law, the Government automatically insures each man and woman, commissioned or enlisted in the military service of the United States. It pays the man $25 a month during total permanent disability; if he dies within 20 years, it pays the rest of 240 monthly installments of $25 each to his wife, child, or widowed mother.

I desire to call the provisions of this just and generous law to the attention of our officers and enlisted men and women so that they may not be deprived of their rights through lack of knowledge. Full information may be obtained from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance of the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C. I earnestly urge that the officers of the Army and Navy give to the men under their command all possible aid in helping them to understand fully the benefits that this insurance may bring to their families and the small cost at which it may be obtained.

This is the greatest measure of protection ever offered to its fighting forces by any nation in the history of the world. It is not charity; it is simply justice to the enlisted men and women and to their loved ones at home, and each and every one of them should promptly take the benefits of this great-law.

W. G. McADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Gog and Magog to the Fray

We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time,
In an age on ages telling
To be living is sublime.
Hark! the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray;
Hark! what soundeth is Creation's
Groaning for its latter day.

Will ye play or will ye dally
With your music, with your wine?
Up! it is Jehovah's rally!
God's own arm hath need of thine.
Hark, the onset! will ye fold your Faithless arms in lazy lock?
Up, oh up, thou drowsy soldier!
Worlds are charging to the shock.

Worlds are charging—heaven beholding;
Thou hast but an hour to fight;
Now the blazon'd cross unfolding,
On, right onward, for the right!
What! still hug thy dreamy slumbers?
'Tis not time for idling play;
Wreaths, and dance, and poet numbers,
Flout them; we must work to-day!

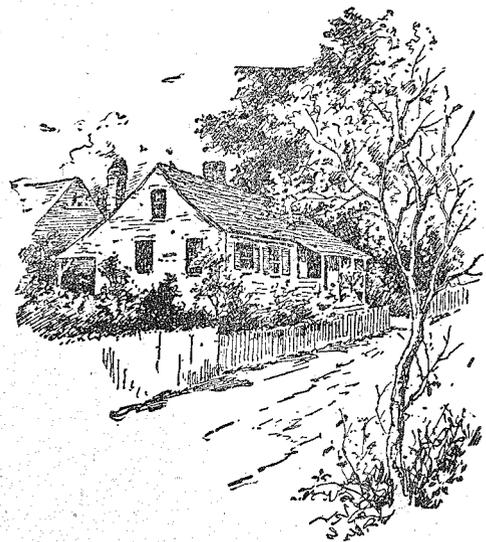

Fear not! spurn the worldling's laughter;
Thine ambition—trample thou!
Thou shalt find a long Hereafter,
To be more than tempts thee now.
Oh! let all the soul within you,
For the truth's sake, go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages—tell for God.

The Battle Cry Has Sounded

"Yes," the battle cry has sounded,
In the Nation of the free
Calling for our gallant manhood
To respond across the sea,
And there defend the Stars and Stripes
And our rights to "liberty."

We are proud of our young soldiers
As we cheer them on their way,
Who is that so gently weeping?
It is a mother old and gray.
Oh, so many dear old mothers
Left alone at home to-day.

"In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage"

By Estella Wight

Author of "A Vineyard Story,"
"His First Venture," etc.

Those who are reading "A vineyard story," now running in the Autumn Leaves should be sure to read the book that precedes it—In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage.

One can hardly appreciate the one without the other, the present story being a sequel of this book.

In addition to being straightforwardly interesting, the story brings out in the lives of the characters all the gospel principles in such a way that a member's faith is strengthened, and those who are not members will gain a comprehensive insight into our teachings.

A logical present for any member of the family. In decorated binding—an ornament to any bookshelf and nicely illustrated.

She has given to her country
 Just the greatest gift in life,
 We doff our hats unto our "women,"
 Be they mother, sister, wife.
 And we don't forget the sweetheart,
 That has pledged to him her life.

May God protect the soldier boy,
 In trenches far away;
 It is a mother's brief request
 As she kneels each day to pray.
 So her heart is always with him
 In this quiet, faithful way.

And if a silent, salty tear
 Down his furrowed cheek should trace
 It's in honor of the folks at home,
 It is surely no disgrace;
 When the order, "charge," is sounded
 He will occupy his place.

Many hearts at home will shudder
 Many heads be bowed in grief,
 Many rosy cheeks change color
 Like a faded "autumn leaf,"
 But their prayers will ever be,
 Honor, health, and "victory."

When this world-wide war is over,
 When the cannons cease their roar,
 When our boys come streaming homeward,
 We will welcome them galore.
 Weak and weary, worn or wounded,
 We will part with them no more.

Our dear old flag must be respected,
 We protect it with our life,
 And for those who are now sleeping,
 In those mounds across the sea,
 We can only ask for blessing
 As we humbly bend the knee.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

From Our Auxiliary President

Home again! What comfort we get from the word! After four weeks of traveling through Iowa, Illinois, Michigan and Northern Indiana we are back at our desk trying to catch up on the mail. If we were to try to tell you of the kindness of the Saints to us as we worked among them those four weeks it would take all of our space, so dare not undertake it; but instead will say, "God bless all the kind-hearted ones who cared for our comfort; we shall not forget it."

The Woman's Auxiliary work as advanced was well received everywhere. We found the women eager for the new plans and policies laid down by the general officers, and anxious to conform with the plans advanced along educational lines. We found them willing, too, to cooperate and coordinate their work under the district and local church officers—the men in charge of the work—which is well.

The Relief and Service work as advanced seemed to meet the approval of all and there is growing among our women a great desire to be of help in caring for our own poor. This is quite commendable. Many locals were ready after hearing the general plans to unite all of the Woman's Auxiliary work on one day of the week, and make of it a great school—a training for Service with a capital S!

One more thing there was that pleased us very much; the men all over the church are eager to learn our plans, and generous in their praise of our work as advanced. They are heartily indorsing the work and fostering it as has never been done before. We must have their support and fostering care, if we are to make a solid growth at this time. Everywhere they came out to hear the work explained, and gave way where other meetings had been planned; and when they had heard it explained they gave it their heartiest indorsement. Many new organizations were formed, we found our girls all over are ready for the Oriole work, and happy when we formed their circles and united them by organization. We came to love every one of them, and hope that the work that has been started will develop our girls while they are young, and make them true servants of the Master.

We have never understood the need and value of a personal touch with our women, as we understand it now, for we found that our work is but little understood away from the central places. We found too that our people need the Educational, and Home and Child Welfare work that the Woman's Auxiliary offers, in order to be ready to help in the redeeming of Zion.

On this trip we made seventeen stops, attending one conference, organized one district and many locals.

We found as we journeyed along from place to place, the need of the Holy Spirit in the work; as we entered each new church door we asked for help that we might be able to meet the need of that particular place. There came to us, as a result, an insight into things as they were and a growing desire to help each woman find her place in our work. Some of our natural bluntness and harshness fell away like a soiled garment and there was left only a desire to render service and be a humble worker among our women.

Perhaps this is the first time in the history of the church that a woman has gone out to introduce the work from place to place dependent entirely on the Saints for railroad fare and care such as was given us on this trip. Again we wish to thank all who contributed to our wants; and we pray that the work that was started or strengthened in the places visited, may grow and develop as never before and be of great benefit to all. What shall the harvest be?

The Vital Influence of Child Training

(Read before the Northern California District Sunday School convention August 23, 1917.)

Solomon, the most renowned sage of all times, says in one of his famous proverbs, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it." (Proverbs 22: 6.)

No profound student of the subject of child training but what recognizes the truth of this ancient proverb: knows that every experience of childhood puts its mark indelibly upon the brain and mind of the individual. A child regards as true whatever his teachers choose to inculcate, and whatever he discovers to be believed by those around him; and he will continue in after life to believe the same things, provided his knowledge and experience do not happen to infringe upon their falsehood. The opinions of the majority of mankind are thus insensibly formed: mere installation being sufficient to make them believe almost any proposition; especially in reference to the boundless regions that lie beyond the reach of the natural sense activities.

There are certain interesting facts about the human mind in all its wonderful faculties which explain why a great portion of the opinions of mankind are thus propagated by transmission from one generation to another, without any option on the part of those into whose minds they are instilled: and these facts are referable to the science of psychology, which is to-day one of the most important as well as one of the most popular branches of knowledge. Briefly stated, it is the science which undertakes to describe and explain the phenomena of our inner life.

THE POWER OF IMAGINATION

The Duke of Argyll, in his work Primeval Man, says: "What faculty of the human mind lies nearer to the very center of its highest life than the faculty of imagination? Without it we could not interpret nature, or form any conception of its laws, or feel their harmony, or understand their use. Without it we should be without motive to resist impulse, or to maintain conviction, or to rise to duty. We could form no idea whatever of religion. It would not be possible to desire the unknown or to hope for the unseen."

Truly, the least reflective mind must realize what an important factor in all our diversified experiences and activities the wonderful faculty of imagination really is. Every chiseled statue, every radiant picture, every cunning invention, in short, every human achievement, must be first outlined in the airy and impalpable elements of imagination.

Thus we see the incalculable value of idealism in the vital work of child training, where the artist, instead of working in stone or iron or pigment, is occupied with the delicate fabric of flesh and blood imbued with that mysterious thing called life.

THE MEANING OF IDEALISM

Professor Dresser in discussing the meaning of idealism, says, "Sometimes idealism has been understood to be the rearing of a man's own mental world from within; hence the new precept has been: Build any world you like. Now one may indeed construct any mental world he chooses. One of the greatest services of idealism is the revelation it makes in regard to the mental worlds which people project into nature."

There is nothing in the fact itself that prevents a man from continuing in this course. The questions, What is ideal? What ought I to do? are quite different from the mere matter of fact. Hence the great issue is this: What sort of a world ought I to build from within? What is real? What is worth while?

CHARACTER

In answer to the question, What is ideal? the most natural response is "Character." This is the end and aim of all discipline, education and culture, in the home, in the school and in the church. And by character we mean, of course, true character. But inasmuch as the ideal is apt to differ with every individual it becomes absolutely necessary that the practical builder of character has a tangible, usable definition of what he is to build, or an idea of it that is clear enough to shape principles and methods of procedure. For genuine results to come we must have a higher regard for truth than to ascribe supreme authority to an idea, merely because it happens to be my idea. To insist upon my way is to intrude the self and carries with it the tendency to set aside every fact by which the idea is opposed in order that it may have free course to run and be glorified.

Now when we turn to Christianity we find that this principle of self-contemplation is conspicuous by its absence.

"Study to Show Thyself Approved Unto God"

XXXXX

Aside from the three books, which every family should have and study, have you the four volumes of Church History? It makes a splendid Christmas gift, even if all the family have to "chip in" to get one volume. Why not get one volume this year, another next and keep it up till you have the entire set?

Or better yet, let the family buy the full set for the "family" by sending for one volume for each of four members. There are four volumes in a new edition just printed this fall. The price differs according to binding, $2, $2.50, $3.50, and $4 for a book.

Or for the children there is a "Young People's History" in cloth for $1.

Have you really considered how many excellent gifts of practical books can be secured from your own Herald Publishing House? Some of these books are not published here, but most of them are. Yet you help the church by buying here, such as Cruden's Complete Concordance for $1.50 or Young's Analytical Concordance for $6.50, and Smith-Peloubet's Bible Dictionary $1.60.

The Doctrine and Covenants can still be secured for 65c, $1, $2.05 and $3.25, according to binding.

The Archæological Committee's Report in cloth is 75c and the Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology is 60c. Objections to the Book of Mormon, etc., Answered, cloth, 50c.

Then we have Doctrinal References from the three books in cloth for 20c; the Compendium of Faith for $1, $1.25 and $2, or the Instructor in similar bindings at like prices, $1, $1.25 and $2. And for the priesthood, The Interpreter, for 50c

For the financial law we have, The Law of Christ and its Fulfillment, for 45c and 60c.

And there are others for those who know or want to know.

Herald Publishing House
LAMONI, IOWA

We are confronted by a religion whose very basis and starting point is the idea of self-forgetfulness.

It has taught mankind that to make self the aim of life is to prevent the development of the individual; and that if men would really attain to the full stature of personal being, they must do so by the banishment of self from their thoughts.

The men who come to the front, not only in the history of Christianity, but in the world's annals, are the men, who, almost invariably, have their own interest in the background.

The great Master of life conquered by stooping, became rich by self-improvement, and reached the summit of dominion by ministration to the wants of the humblest human soul; and he alone has put into our hands the talisman by which our life mission shall ever be crowned and perfected.

To further quote the views of Professor Dresser on this point: "No conclusion could be more false than the supposition that the world is what I make it by my thought, therefore I can make it what I will. To assert, to affirm the self, to make claims and demands as if the universe could be shaped by one's will, is to create illusion upon illusion, to be in a worse plight than the materialist. It is precisely because of these self-assertions that reality has been hidden from us. The true conclusion, the moral of the idealistic tale, is entirely different.

"If you would know what the world really is, you must obey Christ's injunction and rise above your mere self. . . .

"Hence the importance of a sound theory of first principles is clear: The same principle that guides us in the pursuit of truth is the starting point in the world of conduct."

The importance of repressing inordinate egoism has been emphasized for the reason that its perennial exhibition does not mark any great degree of mental stability in an individual; and stability of character can only be associated with stability of mind.

The sacred duty of training up a child in the way he should go involves a tremendous responsibility, and cannot be successfully accomplished without due regard to the fact that the old familiar saying about the bent twig epitomizes a fundamental truth. It is essential that we should understand very clearly that the future of the child will be very largely determined for good or ill by the treatment to which it is subjected during its infancy and childhood.

Three great institutions must contribute to the proper training of the child. They are: the home, the school and the church.

Of primary importance undoubtedly, is the training that the child is to receive in its natural environment, the home; and on this matter we have authoritative revelation as follows:

"And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

And in another place the Lord has said, "I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

Home has been eulogized, both in philosophy and song, as the most blessed place on earth, and its influence is of a paramount importance. The laws of instruction, however, require that both young and old must meet together in companies larger than and different from the family circle. Hence the great educational institutions of school and church. But the most perfect systems of school and church training bring their respective influences directly to bear on the child for only a few hours each day, whereas the home influence is perennial. Right home training during this period, therefore, will give the child a start that will render it in a considerable measure immune from distinctly adverse conditions in after life; thus affording demonstrative proof of the truthfulness of the wise man's proverb; "When he is old, he will not depart from it."

Men, even the wisest, are slow in discovering the deepest and best meaning of their systems of thought and action; and in finding the elements of power and durability which must be combined to make the perfect and enduring institution. The secret lies in proper education. If this vital essential is ignored or its importance minimized the institution will not long withstand the test of time.

Only those things survive which have their basis in intellectual activity. According to Lester F. Ward nothing less than the sum total of human achievement constitutes the subject matter of sociology, and the structure of sociology is reared upon the foundation of psychology.

At least one of the foremost religious organizations of the day has appreciated the immense advantage of impressing upon the child mind, during the years of its tenderness, the ritualism and religious dogmas peculiar to that institution, with the result that the devotion of its millions of votaries is at once the wonder and admiration of Christendom.

It is an object lesson that should not be lost sight of by us. Zion's hope is in her young people. Upon their proper moral and spiritual training the future weal of our church will very largely depend.

Perhaps one of the most reassuring signs that betoken the dawning of a brighter day upon our planet is the remarkable new interest in childhood, which is no doubt attributable in a great measure to the tremendous influence of sociology upon our modern thought. President G. Stanley Hall, of Clark University, in an address before the American Sociological Society refers to "the remarkable new interest in childhood, which in many respects in this country had grown colder, more formal and oblivious than in any land or period in the world, but which has lately resulted in the formation of over a hundred organizations for child welfare and benefit, and in a renaissance of interest in work for children so great that some enthusiasts have even wanted to call this the century of the child.

What does this recent awakening to the nature and needs of children that is now pervading all civilized countries and has resulted in the institution of many academic chairs, laboratories, clinics, journals and a vast and rapidly-growing body of literature, really mean?

It certainly marks an extension of our social consciousness, an enlargement of our interests, and a new awakening to our duties to the young.

These duties cannot find their full expression without due regard to the imperative need of establishing in the child mind right habits of thinking and acting. Heredity may determine something as to this. We know, for example, that habits that are easy to acquire for one person are hard for another.

But environment and practice will determine much more. We do not inherit knowledge; we inherit the capacity to learn, and it is highly important for the individual that the teachings instilled into the mind at the earliest period of its receptivity should be those that result in right rather than in wrong action.

Error is so much more easily propagated than truth that some one has remarked that a lie can travel around the world while truth is getting its boots on. The indisputable facts of history prove that man, even in his most civilized condition, is capable of degradation, that his knowledge may decay, and that his religion may be lost. It was Solomon who said that "God hath made man upright but they have sought out many inventions."

Observation and experience prove that it is the most difficult of all things to maintain the pristine purity of any spiritual faith.

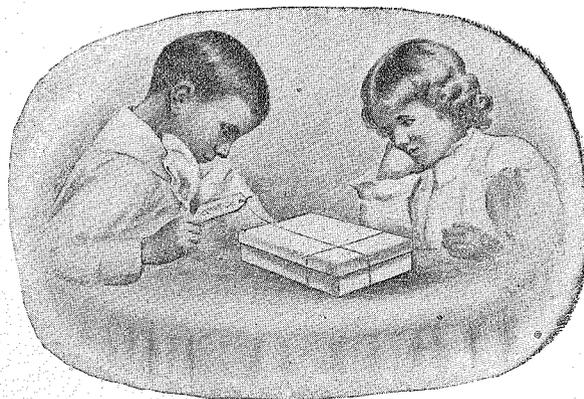

Professor Max Muller says: "If there is one thing which a comparative study of religions places in the clearest light, it is the inevitable decay to which every religion is exposed. . . . Whenever we can trace back a religion to its beginnings, we find it free from many blemishes that affected it in its later stages."

Viewing, therefore, as we may, the history of religion retrospectively, it is not difficult to appreciate the necessity of the Lord's command to Moses in Horeb: "Gather me the people together, and I will make them hear my words, that they may learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children." (Deuteronomy 4:10.) And Moses enjoined them regarding the statutes and judgments delivered to them by God, that they should "teach them thy sons, and thy sons' sons." Unless the elements of imagination are properly directed and controlled it is one of the most deceitful powers and has always been the chief agency in the degeneration of the religious faiths of the world.

Let us not flatter ourselves that because we live in this enlightened age of the world we are immune from the danger of lapsing into the degrading superstitions of older times. There may be some defect in the moral education of the young, or some excess in our love of material things, that will in a comparatively short space of time cause our cherished civilization and enlightenment to vanish like mist before the morning sun.

In his epistle to Timothy, the Apostle Paul indicated that the perilous times of the last days would be characterized, among other things by disobedience to parents, and the lack of natural affection. Take just these two conditions, without reference to the rest of the catalogue of evils enumerated by the apostle, and apply them universally to the homes of Christendom and no other result could possibly ensue than the dissolution of everything that society holds sacred and the utter chaos of religion. And as the apostle visualized the social upheavals and moral earthquakes of our times it was only natural that he should adjure the young man Timothy to "continue in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." (2 Timothy 3:14, 15.)

The Prophet Samuel, dedicated by his mother to the service of the Lord, was brought by her just as soon as he was weaned and delivered into the custody of Eli in the house of the Lord at Shiloh. While but a young child he ministered before the Lord and grew up in favor with God and man. After a long and honorable career he died lamented by all Israel. The history of his noble life presents a marked contrast with the recorded doings of Hophni and Phinehas, the corrupt sons of Eli, whose vileness their father failed to restrain, with the result that the Lord made a summary end of his house in Israel.

There is a basal principle of nervous action which it would be well to keep in mind: doing a thing once—good thing or bad thing—makes it easier to do that thing again.

Start a grooved channel of nervous impulses and the tendency is to repeat. It is easier for future impulses to travel the old track than to break into new channels. From early infancy, vibrations of various kinds are being sent into the brain centers along the various nerve paths, and channels of action are being worn, so that particular types of action in response to these specific impulses become more and more easy and natural. In this way our habits of thought and action are established, and by and by we are able to perform numerous acts without giving them a thought, though they may have been extremely difficult when first performed.

The learned apostle recognized the immense advantages to be derived from training the brain cells to right lines of action, particularly if this habit is continued throughout life, and enjoined it upon the Saints in his Philippian letter, as follows:

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." "This is right thinking; then comes right acting:

"Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you."

When the mind is brought into perfect symmetry and poise our actions will come into perfect harmony, for the body follows the mind. It is a reflector of habitual thought. The proverb, "As a man thinketh, so is he," is literally true; for no one can escape the molding hand of his habitual thought, and he who follows faithfully any calling must wear at last a soul of that calling's shape. Sunday School Superintendent of District One.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Vision Seen by Elder Joseph Burton

(The following is a letter written by Elder Joseph Burton to his wife, and dated at Brighton, California, Sunday morning, May 26, 1878.)

This morning I felt very happy, being in the enjoyment of the Spirit of God in my heart. I desired to be alone, where I could commune with God, and went out for a walk in the fields. They are now very green and beautiful, and while there the following passed before my views:

From the western side of Asia there arose a great cloud of smoke which rolled westward until it enveloped all Europe, and extended even to America. I heard a great noise accompanying this smoke, as of heavy artillery, and the charging and clashing of cavalry and arms; and the dark cloud was pierced from time to time with shafts of light and fire, the sight and sound of which caused an intense feeling of horror to rest upon me, inasmuch that I felt to be sinking to the earth.

I then saw near the center of this (the American Continent) a large temple facing the west, which was surrounded by an evergreen wall at an equal distance from the temple on either side. At the northwest corner of the wall was a narrow gate at which stood a man, tall of stature and pleasing to look upon.

A man came out from the temple and walked down the steps, and to the gate. He was called a "servant" though I knew him not. He who stood at the gate guarding the entrance put into the servant's right hand a large leaf, shaped like a palm leaf fan and which was composed of a great many small leaves of the same shape; and he bound on his left arm in bright golden letters the words, "Bind up the testimony. Seal up the law."

The "servant" then went on his mission, traveling rapidly and crying his message with a loud voice unto the people of the earth; and as he neared a town, I saw a crowd of men with dark, threatening countenances, armed with guns, knives, clubs, and stones, seemingly determined to take his life.

The "servant" saw and apparently knew of their evil designs but heeded them not. I trembled for his safety; but as he neared the angry mob, a way was made for him through their midst, and it was as though he was encircled by a great chain about waist high and at a little distance from him on either side, over which the angry mob had no power to harm him, though they made desperate efforts to reach and stab him, but as quickly fell backward, powerless, and as he passed through their midst, calm as a child, only shouting his message of "Bind up the testimony. Seal up the law." They fairly gnashed their teeth, and their countenances became distorted and hideous in their disappointed rage. But the "servant" went on his way over the country, through cities, towns and villages, fearless and unharmed.

I saw a little form continually at his side, ever looking up into his face—and very happy! Occasionally he would stop to give a leaf to the children, who always seemed pleased to see him, and received the leaf with gladness. I then saw and heard that after he had thus gone shouting his message, war, famine, pestilence, and all manner of evils that ever have been spoken of followed in quick succession. There were fearful plagues such as caused sudden death. Men who at one moment appeared to be in the enjoyment of health, the next moment fell to the earth dead, and others were eaten with worms. There were also terrible thunder and fierce lightnings; mountains were rolled and tossed, and cities destroyed by earthquakes. The dagger of the assassin and pistol of the communist deluged the earth with blood, and I heard the roar of a great fire rushing and crackling through towns, cities and over the earth.

I then heard in a clear, full voice from one "mighty and and one on the shore of the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, each having a long rod in his hand with which he smote these coasts simultaneously saying, "Thy bands are broken" immediately after which there were many towns and cities destroyed by tidal waves, such as were never known before, and much land was covered with water.

I then heard in a clear, full voice from one "mighty and strong" the words "Come home; come home," the sound of which filled the whole earth and reverberated from the vault of heaven. But none of all the inhabitants of the earth heard it except the "children," those to whom the servants had given a leaf.

I saw the servant return from whence he had started, weary and travel worn, bearing in his right hand the skeleton stalk of the palm. I then noticed many "servants" returning also, and I understood that the mission of each had been to stay out until he had given all the leaves from his palm—one to each person who was worthy—which leaf was a passport to enter through the gate into the temple; and as this "servant" returned the leafless stalk to him who sent him forth, his eyes beamed with joy, and his countenance became radiant as he heard from him the words, "You have done well and have been faithful. Enter; no power can hinder." As he passed through the gate a bright crown of glittering gold ascended and rested upon his head; and as he who bound the golden letters upon his arm adjusted the crown to his head, he again spoke, saying: "Now is fulfilled the promise made to you by my Father that if you would be faithful you should receive a crown when his Son visited the earth again."

At these words I realized who the servant was. Oh, what joy flooded my soul! I seemed to be entranced and beheld a beautiful city above the earth which was exceedingly bright, and heard in midair, music, oh, so sweet as from thousands of angels.

The atmosphere opened and we ascended, you and I, and I heard a voice saying, "Those who are faithful and remain shall not die, but shall be changed with power and glory! This is the end."

When I became conscious I was lying on the ground powerless to move; but gradually my strength returned.

Language utterly fails to describe the feeling of perfect joy and peace that now fills my soul after viewing the earth in all her beauty, and feel the quiet of a holy Sabbath morn.

* From the Manager of the Religio Lecture Board

We feel sure you are all interested in knowing that the Religio lecture board is getting under way very nicely. Many calls are coming in and some circuits have already been covered. Others are being arranged for as far ahead as February, and we are confident that the demand will grow as the benefits to be derived are more fully understood.

One of the first to go out in this capacity was Brother E. D. Moore, who lectured on some of the larger phases of auxiliary work, setting many goals for districts and locals to reach. He reported excellent treatment and good liberty in presenting his message, feeling that there is a need for work along this line throughout the church. We are fully convinced of this and trust the work will continue to grow.

Perhaps the most gratifying results that come to any speaker are the ones based on personal effort. He tells us that in a number of instances workers in various lines expressed conversion to the fact that they could do some things they had not thought possible. For instance, one brother said: "When I saw you on the platform going down to my imaginary street and distributing real tracts, I said to myself that I could do that—and I'm going to do it."

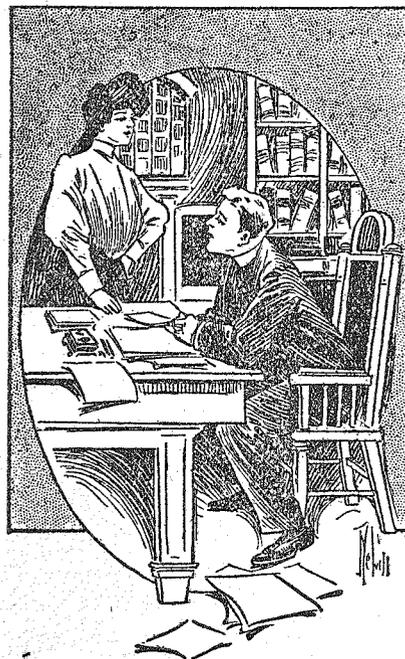

That's the spirit of this work, and when it is more general, the results will be wonderful.

Letters to us from the officers in Nauvoo and Eastern Iowa districts are most commendatory. Brother E. R. Davis, missionary and field worker in the latter district, declares himself well pleased and heartily in favor of the lecture board's efforts.

If we weren't afraid of the blue pencil—or the red-ink pen—we might quote freely from these letters, but we must be permitted to say that the reports received may be characterized by a statement from the superintendent of the Eastern Iowa District—Brother C. G. Dykes: "We are still enthused with what we got at the conventions."

As we write this, Brother Heman C. Smith is out on a circuit in Missouri and Kansas, giving his illustrated historical lectures to packed houses, and we know good will result.

Let us awake to the good that may be accomplished in this lecture course. If the district officers will only consult with the locals I am sure it will be found quite possible to arrange

ARE YOU PROUD OF YOUR LIBRARY?

(A Little Catechism)

Did you ever go into the home of a Latter Day Saint who had none of the church books, possibly one or less of the church periodicals, and some of them unopened?

Did you count him among your progressive members?

Sad, wasn't it?

Yet how many are in your own library? Do you want us to judge you by your supply of books?

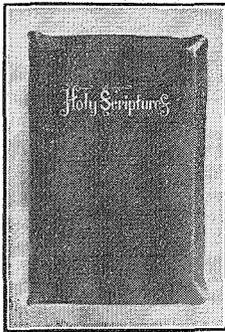

They aren't too expensive, are they? Doesn't real education pay for itself, whether religious or secular?

How many newspapers and magazines do you receive? Do you know the family of Saints that we do that takes four newspapers but not a church paper? Are all that you receive really essential? Do they crowd out the things of vital interest in the church papers? Can you afford to be ignorant about spiritual matters?

If times are close for you, is it fair to save it all on dispensing with the church publications?

Will you answer these questions and abide by the decision?

for a lecture in almost every local, and by so doing the expense to any one local will be very small indeed, compared to the good that will result. These people donate their time, and all the expense there is will be those incident to traveling. If you have lost your list of speakers and subjects, let us know.

Often we need some new thoughts injected into our meetings; we need to be stirred up a little; we need the encouragement that these good brethren and sisters can give who have made a special study along certain lines.

We are grateful for the support already given and pray that the good work may continue to prosper.

Most sincerely yours,

ARTHUR W. SMITH,
Manager Lecture Board.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, Federal Reserve Bank Building.

Lamoni Notes

The work in the Lamoni Branch moves along steadily, developing nothing spectacular nor unusual. The meetings are well attended in spite of the innumerable activities in which all engage, or should. The community has done its part well in the purchase of Liberty Bonds, supporting the Y. M. C. A. and carrying its local chapter activities of the Red Cross work. The local membership is over five hundred and the full assignment and more of knitting was sent in.

Graceland College is getting more and more on the map each year, especially in athletic lines. While not all of us may be enthusiastic over football and basket ball, none of us can deny that it does wonders for a college when its young people can go to a distant community and play so clean a game and so well that the big newspapers herald the fact far and wide. Those who play a good game usually work in the same way. Debating material is already lining up, and later on we will hear of some big contests in the forensic arena.

The work of filling outlying preaching appointments is being done well, and good results are apparent already. It serves to unite the interests of the community and extend its influence. Some good preaching talent is being developed as well as excellent use made of that which has already been developed in general church work. The expression we sometimes hear: "If some of those preachers who are at Lamoni doing nothing would only come out and preach for us, it would be more profitable," doesn't apply any more—if it ever did. Every man who is able and willing to work is busy, and the call is for more. The church is as short of qualified men as is the world.

The conference at Hiteman this fall was an excellent one, counted as one of the best of many good ones which have made history. We note that just so soon as the Saints are in a responsive condition the Lord is willing to meet them more than half way, spiritually as well as temporally.

The laundry building is nearing completion and should be a nice addition to the local industries and supply a long-felt need.

The Christmas offering bids fair to reach the two-dollar mark, though it is hard to get it lined up in seventy-five classes sufficiently to count it. Bazaars and sales are well patronized and some classes of boys want to have a huskin' bee to earn theirs. The late season handicaps this ambition some.

The publishing house takes on a holiday-rush attitude as the orders for Christmas goods come in faster and faster. We hope for their sake and the people's sake that the orders will not be postponed too late and cause disappointment. In spite of shortage in help, in common with other institutions, they hope to keep up with the work. We note lights in the various departments late at night, indicating a strong effort to keep up with things.

It looks though as if most of us would have to burn a little more midnight electric light if we are going to keep up with the demands of the times. Let's keep sweet-tempered over it.

DELBERT.

Convention Minutes

EASTERN IOWA.—Religio at Fulton, Iowa, October 25, 1917. C. G. Dykes, district president, and E. D. Moore, presided. Election of officers postponed until February convention. Voted that the general plan hereafter be that the February conventions be business conventions; all others reserved for educational work. By invitation Brother Moore assisted during the business session, and lectured in the evenings of the 25th and 26th. His work was both entertaining and educational, showing some of the features that have to be met in other places and opening to our view many avenues for service. Sister Lula M. Sandy of Independence was present to organize the Woman's Relief and Service work. In all it was the best Religio convention Eastern Iowa has held. Clarence Heide, secretary.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, DISTRICT

Brother William Richard of 216 Edgar Avenue, Steubenville, Ohio, has been recommended to us by the Wheeling District conference as bishop's agent for that district. In addition to the recommendation coming from the conference, several of the brethren who are well acquainted with Brother Richard have given us their personal indorsement of him, and we take pleasure therefore, in appointing him as the bishop's agent for the Wheeling District, and I trust that the Saints will give him the support and confidence necessary to make his work a success.

This appointment will take effect January 1, 1918; until

American Archaeology Is An Absorbing Study

The Book of Mormon gives us an advantage had by no other people. The true origin of the ancient inhabitants of this continent ceases to be a mystery and becomes a constant source of interest.

Archæology, the study of ancient buildings, monuments, etc., confirms our beliefs and proves a revelation to investigators.

The following books are especially valuable, and the "Autumn Leaves" during the coming year will have some especially good illustrated articles on this subject.

Archæological Committee's Report.

No. 142, cloth$.75

Issued by authority of the General Conference, being a report of the church committee on this subject. Contains findings on which we base our Book of Mormon geography to-day. Covers the ground extensively.

Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology.

No. 176, cloth$.60

The title is self-explanatory. A standard and easily read text for all Religio students. Written by Louise Palfrey Sheldon, one time editor of the Religio "Quarterly."

Book of Mormon Lectures.

No. 51, cloth$.75

A series of important lectures given by H. A. Stebbins at Independence, Missouri. A strong presentation of the subject, with abundant proofs from some of the most valuable books on the subject to be had.

Book of Mormon Vindicated.

No. E48. Paper, 25 cents; 5 for$1.00

No. E49, cloth$.50

By I. M. Smith. A fine little book for students, containing a logical presentation of the supporting proofs of the Book of Mormon.

THE MARY FRANCES SEWING BOOK or Mary Frances' Adventures Among the Thimble People.

Easy Steps in Sewing for Big and Little Girls—
By Jane Eayre Fryer.

The cleverest and most fascinating book for imparting instruction in an entertaining way. This enchanting story tells how the fairy "Thimble

People" teach "Mary Frances" to sew. It teaches first the various "stitches" and their use. Every turn of the needle is accurately described. Then it teaches how to use patterns—how to fold and cut material—how to piece it together—and how to bring into play all the progressive elements of sewing. And all the while, with the fascination of the story, the little reader is drinking in the instructions, putting them into practice, and learning to do all that "Mary Frances" learned. It is all so absolutely plain, all so interesting, that no girl who reads the story can help but understand. The book includes a complete set of patterns for doll clothes—one set permanently bound in, with a duplicate set on thin paper to be detached for use. Illustrated with 300 colored drawings that for interest and instruction are absolutely inimitable. 280 pages, 7¼ x 9½ inches. Bound in genuine cloth, with inlay in colors on front cover. Price, $1.50. Postage extra, 20 cents.

THE MARY FRANCES COOK BOOK.

or Mary Frances' Adventures Among the Kitchen People.

Easy Steps in Cooking for Big and Little Girls—
By Jane Eayre Fryer.

Nothing could be more fascinating to any girl than this story of Mary Frances who wanted to learn to help her mother.

Only it is more than a story, for it gives recipes in the simplest, plainest words, describes every operation of preparing these dishes so clearly that even very small girls can understand them and follow them. The recipes are printed in the order of their simplicity; the easiest comes first, and by gradual steps, as experience gives confidence, the young reader is led to the preparation of the more difficult dishes. The complete work contains nearly 200 pages, including seven full-page illustrations, and original illustrations on every page. It is printed in red and black inks throughout. The book measures 7¼ x 9½ inches. Bound in genuine cloth, with inlay in colors on front cover. Price, $1.20. Postage extra, 20 cents.

A Valuable Publication

The Public, a weekly journal of fundamental democracy founded twenty years ago by Louis F. Post, now assistant secretary of labor at Washington, announces that beginning January 1 its size will be increased one third and the subscription price increased from $1 to $2 a year. The Public has been one of the few strong journals that have wholeheartedly supported the Government in its war policy without compromising in the slightest degree with those "enemies within" represented by social and economic injustice. It is steadily growing in influence, and its editorial and special articles furnish an excellent lead for liberal-thinking in these critical times.

District Sunday School Secretaries

In common with others, we have trouble in keeping track of all changes in the names of district Sunday school officers. All too often the former secretary does not report the changes to us, nor instruct the new one about it. If there are any who read this who know of such a situation, please let us know right away, that the blanks soon to be mailed may be properly addressed. E. D. Moore, General Secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

Any of our elders who happen to be near McAllen, Texas, in Hidalgo County, should call on Miss Florence Mitchell. She has recently moved there from Iowa and is friendly to the work. If meetings are held, she will be a great help in the musical line.

MEETINGS AT MONTROSE

"Just concluded a series of meetings at Montrose with good interest and attendance. Although we did not baptizing at this time, we left some who will be poor Methodist's and Presbyterians in the future. We left with an urgent invitation from both members and nonmembers to return and present some more of the teachings. Dropped in at Burlington over Sunday and found them in a very prosperous condition and an example worthy of imitation.—C. J. Smith."

Save Money and See the Most When You Go to California

For many years the Burlington Route's "Personally Conducted" Tourist Excursions to California have been a popular way of crossing the continent.

The cost is moderate, and the trip has been carefully planned so that the most interesting places are passed in daylight.

Furthermore, each one of these "Personally Conducted" Parties is accompanied by a specially-trained guide, who goes all the way with you on the trip, taking care of the little details of the journey, relieving you of many little anxieties and explaining to you all of the interesting features on the way—Denver, Colorado Springs (with Pike's Peak and the Garden of the Gods near by), the Royal Gorge, scenic Colorado, Salt Lake City (the home of the Mormons), and the ride through the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

The trip is made in through Pullman tourist sleeping cars, which are comfortably appointed but much less expensive than the regular type of Pullman.

Come in and talk with me—or drop me a postal and I will send you an illustrated descriptive folder containing maps and everything that you should know about the trip—worth reading if you don't go.

"MOST INVALUABLE MAGAZINE PUBLISHED"

"To-day I received the Autumn Leaves for November and at once became interested in 'Timbers for the temple,' and though being very busy, I simply took the time to read 'One of the fittest,' and 'Where spiritual vision and consecration counts.' I felt so moved upon by the 'fittest' and 'timber' for a 'consecration' of a dollar to send this November Leaves as a starter toward a fitness and spiritual vision to prepare the timber for a new subscriber to the most invaluable magazine published, so far as I know, throughout the Christian world. Long may it live to enjoy one of the foremost places in the hearts of God's people." With the above letter, Brother I. N. White sent a dollar.

Reverend R. H. Stone, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church recently delivered a lecture against our church at Glasgow, Montana, to which Brother J. A. Bronson replied, with great success. Hundreds were turned away because of lack of room. The Saints were highly pleased with the results. Reverend Stone has stated that he would give another lecture pointed directly at the Reorganization and the Saints have promised Brother Bronson the use of the opera house for the next reply. A challenge to debate church propositions have not been accepted by Mr. Stone. Brother James C. Page is located at Glasgow and doing a good work.

BOOK OF MORMON NAMES IN SOUTH AMERICA

A sister calls our attention to the fact that in a book entitled, South America and Her People, published by Silver, Burdette and Co., Chicago, there is reference to a river in Dutch Guiana by the name of Corentyn and another by the name of Maroni. The citation is on page 330.

Sister Zulia B. Clawson, of Hillsboro, Iowa, sends in three dollars to apply on the church debt. She tells of most comforting spiritual manifestations being given her, of seeing in vision many wonderful things. She desires to do all she can to further the cause of Christ and not only hopes but helps that the church debt may be paid.

We note in a current number of the Chariton Leader (Lucas County, Iowa,) rather extensive reproductions of Brother Elbert's "Blue pencil notes," of course with due credit given.

WRONG ADDRESSES

Wrong addresses are easily made up when one has to deal with thousands of them, and our readers should not be surprised if some of them come that way. One brother is surprised that an announcement reached him which had been addressed to his father, the latter dying about a year ago. Of course it does seem strange to him, but to those who do not know all the people on the list—and who does—it is easily accounted for. We appreciate any corrections in matters of this kind. Address them to the advertising department, this office.

LIFT UP YOUR HEADS

(A Thanksgiving address delivered by Elbert A. Smith at Graceland College, November 28, 1917.)

ONE INEVITABLE THEME

There is one inevitable theme. No speaker of to-day or to-morrow can avoid it. 'Tis the theme of war.

This is different from any Thanksgiving Day that has ever dawned upon this Nation and radically different from any Thanksgiving Day in the memory of this generation. We have been accustomed on Thanksgiving Day to subscribe to the sentiment of Browning:

God's in his heaven,
All's well with the world.

But to-day it is quite evident that all is not well with the world, and many have come to think that God is not in his heaven.

About a year before this war began, David Lloyd-George in addressing a federation of churches in Wales during the holiday season, said that if the veil could be lifted so that the rich and the well-to-do could look into the homes of the poor and needy, the spirit of frivolity and revelry would vanish. The veil has been lifted. The war has lifted it.

WHAT SHALL WE BE THANKFUL FOR?

We might ask ourselves, What is there to be thankful for to-day? Shall we thank God for health and life and strength? Certainly we do, and none more than your speaker. But immediately our thoughts turn to more painful subjects. A friend recently returned from Canada, told about seeing a Canadian soldier who had just come from France. He returned to his home minus both legs, minus both arms, and minus both eyes. Friends were carrying him about in a basket. He said he would gladly take poison, but no one would administer it, and he could not get it for himself. This of course is an extreme case, but we know that there are thousands, and possibly millions of men shattered in body and limb and possibly blinded as a result of the ravages of war. And we do not know how many others may have suffered in like manner.

Shall we thank God for our peaceful and comfortable homes? Certainly we do, and we should. But immediately we think of the many homes of Belgium and France that have been destroyed by shell fire and the inhabitants scattered to the four winds of heaven. We think of the homes in London where women and children are slaughtered while they sleep by the assassins that fly by night.

I hope that the allies, and particularly the United States, will not be led very far in the doctrine of these reprisals in kind. Because that would mean a complete recession from the philosophy of Christ and a complete reversion to the old Mosaic law, "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." When the so-called Christian nations revert from the philosophy of Christ to the Mosaic law then we may well conclude that the times of the Gentiles have come to an end.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS

Shall we thank God for our abundant food? Certainly we should, but immediately we think about the Belgians, the Jews, the Servians, the Poles, the Armenians, and the Germans, who are suffering from hunger. We can only properly thank God for an abundance of food, when we have it in our hearts to use our superabundance in feeding those who are in need. Of course we meet an occasional man who does not think at all of others. He is willing to gorge himself as he has always done. He must have his wheat bread at every meal, and his meat as often as he desires it.

Ruskin says that the difference between the modern Pharisee and the Pharisee of old is this: "The Pharisee whom Christ saw said, 'I thank God that I am not as other men. I fast daily, while others feast,' while the modern Pharisee says, 'I thank God that I am not as other men, because I feast every day, while others fast.'

In view of these things, and many others we might mention, we cannot think of ourselves and our blessings to-day, without thinking of others, and that perhaps is one thing to be thankful for.

THE WORDS OF JESUS

I wish now to call your attention to the words of Jesus. You will remember that he predicted this war. He said that nation would arise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there should be wars and rumors of wars, and famine and pestilence. In this connection also he said:

And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.—Luke 21: 25-28.

You will note that he said that when we saw these things coming upon the earth we should lift up our heads. We are to rejoice because the redemption of man draweth nigh. It may be, of course, that there are still worse things to follow than those which we have experienced, if such be possible. I recently saw a cartoon in which the Kaiser was represented as pleading with his Satanic Majesty. He feels that God has deserted him, and asks for aid, but the Devil replies: "I would gladly help you, but I cannot think of anything that you have not already done." But I do not think that human ingenuity and diabolical malice are by any means exhausted, and this war and possibly succeeding wars may be worse than anything that we have witnessed, provided man is able to develop other more terrible machines with which to destroy his fellow man.

But we are assured that after the storm will come a calm. That right will triumph over might completely and absolutely. Many things tend to show that the words of the prophets are being fulfilled. At this very hour the British are closing in about Jerusalem, and we hope that in due time that city will pass from the dominion of the unspeakable Turk and come under a government that will permit the Jews to have their freedom and to return and till their land. Among our own people we feel that Zion is going forward.

OUR FAITH STRENGTHENED

About three years ago, I was talking with a leading minister in the city of Council Bluffs. He said that this war was the greatest shock his faith had ever received. I wondered why he should feel thus. In view of the fact that the prophets, with Jesus as their chief or leader, predicted these things, our faith should be strengthened when we see them come to pass. As Latter Day Saints, of course, we have been looking for them for at least seventy or seventy-five years.

As long ago as 1843 the Saints in the city of Nauvoo sang a hymn that was entitled "Israel is free." It seemed almost prophetic in its nature, and I wish to quote the second verse of that hymn.

Tremble ye nations of Gentiles, for yonder
The hosts of the despot in battle array,
With engines of war shake the earth with their thunder—
The bright sword is drawn and the sheath thrown away!
Sound the alarm of war,
Through nations near and far,
Let its dread tones be heard o'er land and sea;
Zion shall dwell in peace,
Israel will still increase,
Liberty ne'er shall cease,
Israel is free!

To-day we see the fulfillment of that hymn. The earth is shaken by the engines of war. The sword is drawn and the sheath is cast aside. The alarm of war is sounded through all nations and over sea and land.

You will remember also that Joseph Smith in the revelation given in 1832 in predicting the Civil War, said that beginning with that great struggle, war should be poured out upon all nations.

In view of the fact that these dire predictions are being literally fulfilled, our faith is strengthened in the belief that the glorious promises connected with them will be as literally fulfilled.

THE BEATITUDES

We are looking for a fulfillment of the Beatitudes, because it occurs to me that the Sermon on the Mount in itself was prophecy. I will read:

Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.
Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth.
Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled.
Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.
Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.
Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

We look forward to the day when those who mourn shall be comforted, when the meek shall inherit the earth, and those who hunger after righteousness shall be filled, when the merciful shall obtain mercy, the pure in heart see God, and when at last humanity will see that the peacemakers are the sons of God.

SHARERS IN GOD'S SECRETS

We are told that God reveals his secrets to his servants the prophets. We are the recipients or sharers of God's secrets. Only as we understand these matters can we comprehend or understand the outcome of that which is taking place about us in the world.

In conclusion now, I exhort you, do not on this occasion give all your attention to the material blessings for which we have rendered thanks in years gone by. Let us pass on to higher themes. Let there be more of soberness in our prayers. Men's hearts are indeed failing them while looking upon the things that are coming upon the earth, but let us heed the admonition of Jesus Christ, and lift up our heads. In the words that we sing so often:

Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory,
Cast aside your doubts and fears,
He who called you to his kingdom,
Soon will reign a thousand years.

PROFITABLE COUNCIL MEETINGS

To the Church; Greeting: Following the recent councils of the First Presidency and Twelve between themselves and with other bodies of church officers, under instructions from the Presidency, the members of the Twelve have taken up various lines of activity. Apostle Gillen remains in Independence to assist in office work and attend to matters in near-by fields. Apostles Greene and Aylor are traveling into the Northwest to visit various places needing attention and to gather information of conditions which will facilitate joint council work in the spring. Apostles Hanson and Curtis will travel south and west touching points in Texas, Oklahoma, and Arizona, which need setting in order and where churches are to be dedicated. Apostle Griffiths will attend to needed work in Central Illinois and Eastern Iowa, where he will be accompanied by Apostles Gillen and Anderson, one or both. Later Apostle Griffiths will go to Ohio and other points to set in order places needing such work. Apostle Russell will for the present remain in Independence, attending to such matters as may be referred to him. Apostle Rushton will continue his activities on the Western coast where he will be joined later by the brethren traveling westward.

The brethren of the Twelve are traveling directly under the instructions of the Presidency, and are therefore representing the Presidency. The Saints will heed their advice and counsel, and give them such deference as their office, official prerogatives and the church law demand. The brethren of the Twelve are fully expected by us and the church to discharge their duties with all due dignity and priestly propriety, and should receive the like courtesy in return. May we all indeed be workers together for the Master and his cause.

Bishop McGuire in full understanding with the Presidency and on advice thereof is traveling through Texas to California on business connected with his office.

The work is onward, the call for greater service sounds, let us unitedly be at our great work!

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

President.

THE RED CROSS

The editors are just in receipt of copies of the report of the Red Cross War Council to November 1. It will be remembered that they undertook a drive for $100,000,000 last June and that this amount was oversubscribed. It appears that $40,000,000 of this amount has now been spent, $7,649,000 of it having been advanced for the purchase of materials, which will later be repaid by the chapters. This reduces the actual expenditures to about $32,000,000, but of this $4,500,000 has been advanced for supplies. In fact most of it has been for advanced work preparing for the time that our Army will be in France, and for the boys who are already there, for work in Armenia and Syria, Serbia, each of the allied countries including England, Italy, Russia, Belgium and Rumania.

We are interested to note $2,500,000 has been spent for civilian relief, restoration of villages, and the like, and $600,000 has been expended for canteens, at the front, at railroad stations, and other important points, where hot soup and hot drinks are served to soldiers of the allied armies. It may be a source of surprise to our readers to learn how widespread is their work of helpfulness and healing. They are evidently caring not only for the wounded, but also for the destitute and for some of the physical needs of our soldiers. This includes not only knitted goods, but also canteen service.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS AND CHRISTMAS OFFERINGS

We should like again to call the attention of our readers to the suggestion made by Bishop McGuire in last week's HERALD, providing for a gift certificate for the Christmas Offering, instead of some of our useless gifts. It is indeed an excellent idea and one that has already been adopted by many commercial houses. They provide for a gift certificate and so simplify Christmas buying. A gift certificate suitably engraved is given and may be used on future purchases. Brother McGuire extends this now so that we may make our gifts to the church.

After all, could there be a more fair proposition?

On birthdays we are inclined to buy a present for our loved ones and especially for children. When one has a birthday we scarcely expect our friends to go off and buy themselves or one another presents, for it is his birthday which is to be celebrated. In this case we are celebrating the anniversary of our Lord and Savior. Should not at least part of our gifts be made to him, and for the sake of his little ones. Some of us may do this directly by helping those in need. All can do so through this method of a special Christmas Offering.

FREEWILL OFFERINGS AND CONSECRATION

It is a voluntary matter, a gift of love on our part, and should be so. It is true that many extend their gifts through the year, or take and make them at the time that they make their business inventory, or at a time more convenient. This is well, but for those who have failed to do so the past year, now is the time to make a self-examination, to give as the Lord has prospered us, directly to his representative.

The special Christmas offering drive naturally ends with the year, December 31, so far as the general officers are concerned. In many places a little more time is allowed for the collection to be made, for the secretary to prepare the list of names, or to put matters in shape to submit to the Presiding Bishop. But we do not want to delay till the last minute, but get our offering to his office early in January, so as to be in time for the Blue Stepping Stones.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Church Offices to Have New Location

The residence property in Independence occupied the last twelve years by Bishop E. L. Kelley has recently been transferred to the church and is being remodeled to accommodate some of the general church offices at that place. Fireproof vaults are being installed now and other alterations will be made.

Rushton in San Bernardino

Through the kindness of Elder George A. Wixom we learn of the visit of Elder John W. Rushton to San Bernardino. He spoke twice in the church there on November 25. He also spoke in the Baptist church and was well received with a packed house. He also addressed the high school and was exceedingly well received. Several clippings from the newspapers there have been forwarded to us, each one different, including a summary of a sermon which was printed in the Sunday morning Index of November 25.

British Hold Home of Abraham

General E. H. H. Allenby reports that he has occupied the town of Hebron, in Palestine, the British war office announces to-night. Ancient Hebron, today called by the Arabian name of El Khulil, is situated about twenty miles southwest of Jerusalem with approximately 15,000 inhabitants. The taking of Hebron is of interest because tradition identifies it as the site of the tombs of Abraham and other patriarchs. King David resided there the first seven years of his reign. A magnificent mosque, accessible only to Mohammedans, stands upon the traditional site of the patriarch's burial place.—Des Moines Register, December 7, 1917.

How to Be Well-Informed

We have a number of inquiries as to the best method of keeping in touch with the important world events without having to spend too much time in getting that which does not matter. One of our best recommendations is to include in the reading list Current Opinion, one of the best monthly reviews of the larger phases of history in the making. "A Review of the World" is broad in its scope and pertinent in its treatment. Out of the chaos of happenings which few of us are able to interpret as they pass, the kernel of the situation is presented from official sources, and with apt and impressive press comment. Recently it has ceased to be strictly eclectic, and is now featuring a strong article each month from some national or international writer. The subscription price is three dollars per year.

The state of the real knowledge of and feeling for Christianity on the part of the world of modern culture, and the complacency of the church in antiquated conceptions constitute to-day the one great blemish and the one great danger of our civilization. The church is a cult and no longer stands for the highest culture. It has become an idolator of its symbols, and lost the holy passion to penetrate ever deeper into their significance. It has lost control of, and often all vital touch with the leaders of mankind, and makes only a falsetto, sporadic appeal to educated youth. Its mission is to save souls but its very seminaries teach or care little about what the soul of man really is. It should take the psychology that deals with the deeper things of humanity to its very heart of hearts, instead of maintaining its attitude of suspicion and exclusion, and help to show forth the new sense in which our Scriptures are being revealed as the world's chief text-book in psychology.—G. Stanley Hall, Jesus, the Christ, in the Light of Psychology.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

(Sermon by Frederick A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, October 8, 1916. Reported by Winsome Smith McDonald.)

For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation. I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just.—John 5: 21-30.

AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

In this number of the series of lectures or sermons that are being delivered here on Sunday evenings we have reached one of the important, and I don't know but what I may say one of the best of the subjects of the gospel. As I look at it, it is fraught with much of comfort, of consolation, and of hope to humanity, and especially to the household of faith.

When we take up the question of the resurrection of the dead we have before us one of the peculiar subjects of the gospel of Christ that carries with it possibly one of the most wonderful features of the gospel, and is the culmination of the great effort of Christ in bringing about the redemption of mankind.

If you will study carefully the work of the Christ, and look thoughtfully into those things that have been given as to the purpose of his coming, you will be made quite conscious before you get through, that there came into the existence of mankind a condition in which this thing that we call "death" had obtained control, and man, brought under its subjection, must remain in that condition with no hope of release, and must ever after lose the status that God gave to him and remain incomplete, imperfect, and without redemption in the fullest sense of the term. But through the economy of God there was instituted this feature of the work, and the Christ came to earth, took upon himself the nature of man, suffered the conditions of this life, passed through the portals of death itself that he might have power over it, and bring to mankind a restoration from his lost condition.

Now I shall not have time to go into all of it as I would like to do to-night, nor present all the evidence we would like to present. We will have to confine ourselves to a few of the most important evidences that present themselves and let them be sufficient. But we must not lose sight of the thought that to some this is a mystery, to some it is incredible, and they doubt it. It was so in the day of Christ himself; it was so away back in the ancient times; it is so in our day. There is also an indefinite conception of just what it purports and what it purposes to bring.

In the first place, Why should it be incredible? Why should it be a mystery? If you will take the time to think seriously along the line a little, I think every one of you can find sufficient in your everyday life around you that is of as great a mystery as this, if you will only stop and examine it. It will be just as hard possibly for you to gather a full understanding of it, and to see just where it leads you as this does.

I do not see why it should be accounted impossible or extremely miraculous, for when I look back and look carefully into it, God created this being, brought it into existence, gave to it its several peculiar elements and parts, and having created it and brought it into existence, given the law that perpetuates it, regulates and governs it, why should it be looked upon as a strange thing that we should take the stand that he has the power to raise it up again when it passes through what we call death?

When you look for a definition of the word "resurrection" you will discover that the basic principle of that definition rests upon the statement "raised upon again." So when we get right down to that thought it had not ought to be accounted strange, we need not look at it with that incredible feeling. We go back to the beginning of mankind and we discover that there we are given to understand that he was created first spiritually, a spiritual entity. Afterwards, we discover, there was created this body from the elements of this earth, that we are earthly, and to that body the spirit was brought and placed in it, and it became the habitation of the spirit of the individual.

Now if God brought it into existence once from the elements that exist around us, why it seems to me that we ought to readily concede that an individual with the characteristics of God, as we give him credit for having, could easily bring it into existence again without very much difficulty.

And it requires the spirit and the body to complete man, and if you go back and read carefully, you discover the statement made after he had created him, and breathed into him the breath of life, he became a living soul.

There, my friends, is the complete feature, the body and the spirit united together became the living soul. If it was necessary to have that organism and that spirit united in the first place to make it a living soul, answer, Would it not be reasonable that if man by reason of transgression loses that condition, and the separation of that spirit and body comes, if there ever comes the principle of redemption that shall make man a perfect living soul again he must have a spirit and a body.

Looking at it from that standpoint we readily accept the thought that under those conditions the resurrection of the dead becomes absolutely necessary that the Redeemer of mankind may perfect his work and redeem men.

NATURAL PHENOMENA

Let us look around us a little bit and see. As you go out into the fields in a thoughtful mood and examine carefully the situation as you find it there, especially in the spring of the year, but you can see it in any season, what do you find? If you use your head you can find some of the most marvelous things that we ever ran across. For instance, we go out there and look at one field, and they have plowed it and harrowed it, and put it in nice shape, and sowed seed in it. "Oats," you say. Yes, oats. Another one they have drilled in wheat. Another one right alongside they have put in corn. Just beyond that lies the meadow with its grass, and on the hillside down by the creek you will find the timber. And in the midst of these, the flowers.

Now stop a moment. From the same soil, from the same sunlight, the same water, the same atmosphere, these different grains, and different evidences of life all of them spring up and gather together their own peculiar kind of element necessary to produce wheat, oats, corn, grass, flowers, and trees. The wheat and the oats come up with a little stem and bring their seed upon the top. The corn grows to a high stalk with its ears of corn in the center. The grass grows alongside with a very narrow, slender stem, and narrow blade, and never reaches great heights. Each of them different, each of them growing from the same elements, and using the peculiar feature that is essentially necessary for itself. Pray tell me, by what law do these things gather from these elements that which is necessary to give to them the component parts that are required? Did you ever stop and think of it? Can you tell us? Can you unfold it? By what rule are they governed, that shall accomplish this peculiar purpose? And in the midst of these we see the towering oak from the same elements exactly, which are gathered to produce the hard wood of the tree.

And we have before us one of nature's laws, you say, made manifest. And right in the midst of all these you will see the little flowers shooting up their stems, and one is red, and one is yellow, and one is blue, but the stems are all green.

Tell me, friends, where did they find the pigment, where the different colored materials that give these bright hues, and how did they separate them and gather the part that was essential for themselves? Some one says, "That is a law of nature."

* NATURAL FOR GOD TO RESTORE OUR BODIES

Ah, what is nature? If that is only a law of nature, then we might just as well accept the thought that when God created man and put him into this life, and gave to him a body, it would be perfectly natural for him, if a man lost that body to restore it, and he purposes to redeem the human body, to give him a body again. It would be a law of nature, that is all, just as natural as anything can be.

My friends, so far as this body of ours is concerned it is practically indestructible. You watch carefully the thought and see. Look at it as you will, go through the records that are made, and you will discover that you can reduce this being of ours back until you get it almost completely into the gases, elements if you please, around us.

Now what are gathered from these elements that made this body? Again, did you stop and think that when we begin to get right down to it and examine carefully, there is that same peculiar natural law regulating and governing and making this body of ours continue in existence, that governs the tree, and the oats, and the wheat and all that, for when we get right down to it we discover that this body is sustained and maintained by that which comes from the earth, and the air and the sunlight. I do not care whether you eat meat or whether you eat vegetables. It matters not to me. If vegetables, then from the elements you have gathered from the vegetable that which is necessary for the sustenance of your life. If you eat meat, you discover that the meat has been sustained, the animal got its life from the vegetable that came from the earth around it, and you came from there. You are of the earth, are earthy. That is the expression, and it is correct, so far as this body is concerned, in this mortal condition especially.

DEMONSTRATION OF THE RESURRECTION

Now, my friends, we were unfortunate enough to come under the condemnation that rested upon mankind, and death claimed us and separated us and brought about the dissolution of the body that we call death. Men could not be perfect in that condition. There must come something that would relieve. When we take up this work and look at it, there is nothing in all the gospel economy that Jesus Christ demonstrated to the human family more perfectly and completely than he did the fact of the resurrection of the dead. I want you to give that thought, for when he was here on earth in this life, not only did he bear witness to and demonstrate his power over sickness and disease, and the possibility of exercising power over the very laws of nature, as we call it, but we discover that in his life work here he demonstrated to the human family that the power over death was resident within him. He gave us evidence upon evidence of that thing, and we are struck forcibly with the thought that when we get into it we discover it bears the evidence of God's divine favor as strikingly as anything that we can possibly bring to you.

Take, for instance, the first circumstance we have of Lazarus, who died and lay in the tomb four days; yet at the command of that man Jesus that made the statement that there was life resident within himself, and that as God had power to raise the dead, so he had power at his command, Lazarus came forth from the grave.

We see him again when we stand by the bier of the widow's son, and as he looked into the cold features of that individual, and sensed the sorrow of the mother, and made that wonderful declaration, "Arise," the young man received life again and moved out in the performance of his duty.

We have but to go to the ruler that came to him and begged him to come because his daughter was dying, and what do we find there? When we reach the place they are mourning and weeping for the little girl. She is dead, they said; but when he stepped up to that bedside and took that little maid by the hand and said, "Arise," she obeyed, and life once more was made manifest through the power of that individual's command.

And then as a climax to all that, he brought to us that wonderful evidence of his power, that he had life within himself, when he submitted himself to death, and went down into the tomb, suffered the pangs and the agonies of death, and came under its power so far as the human being was concerned, only to break the bands, and the third day arise and witness unto mankind that he did have that power.

We have before us other evidences that we might bring, is that enough? Does that not demonstrate it? Does it not witness that thing unto us? But when we look into it our books are full of it. All the way through we find it, and the worst difficulty we have is finding some place to stop.

Turn to John 11 and read from the eleventh to the forty-fourth verses, and you have the story of Lazarus. You can read that and discover what he says, in the twenty-fifth verse he makes the declaration, "I am the resurrection and the life."

We discover him making his own declaration over in Luke 24, in which he is talking to those individuals, and he argues with them and shows them clearly that it was necessary that he should come and die, that the resurrection of the dead should be established. He himself explains that thought.

Now let us look into some of those other statements and see.

DESTRUCTION OF THE BODY

Turn back, away back yonder in Job, and we have a little declaration made by that man, in the nineteenth chapter, reading from the nineteenth to the twenty-sixth verses, in which he says:

Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!

He wanted it to be so that it would remain and bear testimony to what he was about to say, for he says:

I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God.

He emphasizes that thought for us nicely, indicating clearly that though the destruction might come, though the flesh might fall away, that there would be that peculiar separation, that dissolution and destruction of this body, yet, my friends, he presents the thought that in his flesh he would see God. Away back there he holds up that thought.

I cannot take up all of them, but I want you to think over it. In speaking of this thought, I want you to gather another idea, in connection with this condition of the destruction of the body.

I used to look upon the principle of cremation with a good deal of horror. At the thought of it a feeling of considerable horror would come over me. And while I would prefer an ordinary burial in the ground, yet there are worse things than cremation. My experiences have taken away some of the awful feelings that I had previously had.

When I was in San Francisco some years ago, I went into one of the big crematories there, and took pains to investigate it. They not only have that crematory nicely arranged in a cemetery, but they have a memorial hall, or building, a very large and beautiful building, built with galleries all around it, and niches in the wall. These niches are fitted with copper or other metal fronts with glass in them—copper frames, and glass. Inside they have the ashes that remain of their loved ones, and these are generally incased in a small jar. That is set in a vase, or something of the kind, upon which is inscribed the name and the dates, if they wish it, unless they wish to inclose the whole thing, and then the inscription is on a plate outside.

There I saw the peculiar performances that they carried out, and the destruction of the body in the crematory is not so terrible as you might think. It is not a thing that would bring horror, because you cannot see anything, only the outside act of putting them in. Nothing more. And when it is all done, and everything gathered up that remains, there are just about four pounds and a half of a man of one hundred and eighty pounds, or somewhere about that size. Never more than that unless it is an extremely large-boned person. These are the ashes of the bone. So far as the tissue of the body, the muscle and flesh, is concerned, that is absolutely consumed, and goes off in vapors and gases, and there is nothing left; not a thing.

Now these bodies are not placed in the fire, but they are placed in what we might term an oven, built purposely. The fire is on the outside of it, but it is heated so hot that it consumes them immediately after they have gone in, or practically so, but it takes some little time before they can gather the ashes, because the oven must be allowed to cool down before they can go in after them. You can put the ashes of a man that would weigh two hundred pounds into a quart jar. You have an idea now as near as I can tell you about what is left.

Has it been entirely destroyed? Is it not just as reasonable to think that God can call together the elements that constituted that body the second time as he could the first? Is it not just as true that if you put them in the soil, that they eventually come to the same position until you have nothing left but a little handful of bone that you may scrape up there? What has become of that body? It has gone into those elements just the same. So when you get that feature, friends, remember that there are some peculiar elements of our being as a body that are absolutely indestructible. You can change their form, you can put it back into the elementary condition, but destroy it you cannot. It is not in our power to accomplish that.

Under these circumstances we can readily see how the law that was put into operation in the first place could bring about and make this creation that we call man, can exercise its function in the second place as well as the first, and bring into existence this body again; and God giving it the spirit can quicken it and make it alive.

“THY DEAD MEN SHALL LIVE”

Now I want to present some more evidences here, and I want you to look carefully along, and if you wish to do so, make notes and read them. Isaiah 26: 19 is a positive declaration to Israel, “Thy dead men shall live again.” A clear, positive declaration of the prophet under the inspiration of the Almighty God to that nation, that these individuals shall live, and they shall come out of their graves and shall inherit the land he has promised to give them.

Turn to Ezekiel 37: 13, and you will find another passage that will set you to thinking. You may read on further than that, but in that one verse there comes that positive statement that they will come forth.

Again, turn to 1 Corinthians 15. You will know that; everyone is acquainted with the statement in the fifteenth chapter. If I were going to quote from that I would have to quote the whole chapter, for it all dwells upon that, and especially the latter part, in which he presents clearly the resurrection of the dead, and in its presentation he uses the idea of a grain of wheat that falls in the ground, and he says it will not spring up into life except it decay and fall away. He presents to you the very thought there that when that grain has grown we get a new grain as we sometimes call it, but the same elements are contained in it that constituted the other. We have the same thing existing there over and over again. We see this thing enacted under our eyes, and if it can be done along lines of that kind, is it not reasonable to believe that as that germ of life in the wheat springs up and brings about those conditions, there should be a germ of life in you that should remain and bring about the perfection of the great work of God, the redemption of man and the saving of him?

This you can read, for it offers some splendid things; it gives us to distinctly understand that Jesus Christ was the first fruit of this resurrection, and as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. There is the great mission work of Jesus Christ. There is the great principle that shall come, and the life that we must lead here, in the following out of the principles of the Christ, shall find its reward in that peculiar benefit that God has said should come to those that are his, for the apostle says emphatically, in this chapter that he shall recognize all those that are his at his coming, and they shall come up first, every man in his own order.

Now you can go home and read those things. He tells us in that same chapter another thought that I want to emphasize, that in this resurrection of the dead. He says, “It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption.” It is sown as a mortal, it shall be raised immortal. There is meaning in that language. It is one of the things we must look at in the thought that it is going to accomplish God's purpose.

DEATH AND HELL GIVE UP DEAD

I turn to the twentieth chapter of Revelation, and there is it emphasized in the fourth and sixth verses, and you have the promise made to those that are with Christ, they shall reign with him a thousand years. They are the ones that have been obedient to him and have kept his commandments. They shall come up and reign with him a thousand years. Then comes the statement farther down, when the great judgment shall sit, and all men come forth, both great and small, every one must come up to this judgment, and death and hell give up the dead that were in them. They must come forth and the power of the resurrection shall have something to do with them, and manifest to them that peculiar promise of Jesus Christ that shall come unto all flesh.

What does that mean? Let us read another statement or two (and we will have to hurry along here a little bit).

BOOK OF MORMON TEACHINGS

Turn to the Book of Mormon, we have something on the subject in it and we are going to read it. We were told this morning it was plain, and it is plain, and we are going to see what it has for us.

Turn to Mosiah 8: 53-66. I want to read a portion, although we ought to read nearly all of it to get the necessary part of it.

For were it not for the redemption which he hath made for his people, which was prepared from the foundation of the world; I say unto you, were it not for this, all mankind must have perished. But behold, the bands of death shall be broken, and the Son reigneth, and hath power over the dead; therefore, he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead. And there cometh a resurrection, even a first resurrection; yea, even a resurrection of those that have been, and who are, and who shall be, even until the resurrection of Christ: for so shall he be called. And now, the resurrection of all the prophets, and all those that have believed in their words, or all those that have kept the commandments of God, shall come forth in the first resurrection; therefore, they are the first resurrection. They are raised to dwell with God who has redeemed them: thus they have eternal life through Christ, who has broken the bands of death. And these are those who have part in the first resurrection; and these are they that have died before Christ came, in their ignorance, not having salvation declared unto them. And thus the Lord bringeth about the restoration of these; and they have a part in the first resurrection, or have eternal life, being redeemed by the Lord. And little children also have eternal life. But behold, and fear, and tremble before God; for ye ought to tremble: for the Lord redeemeth none such that rebel against him, and die in their sins; yea, even all those that have perished in their sins ever since the world began, that have willfully rebelled against God, that have known the commandments of God, and would not keep them; these are they that have no part in the first resurrection. Therefore had ye not ought to tremble? For salvation cometh to none such; for the Lord hath redeemed none such; yea, neither can the Lord redeem such: for he cannot deny himself; for he cannot deny justice when it has its claim.

Also the eightieth and eighty-fourth verses:

And if Christ had not risen from the dead, or have broken the bands of death, that the grave should have no victory, and that death should have no sting, there could have been no resurrection. But there is a resurrection, therefore the grave hath no victory, and the sting of death is swallowed up in Christ. He is the light and the life of the world; yea, a light that is endless, that can never be darkened; yea, and also a life which is endless, that there can be no more death. Even this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruption shall put on incorruption, and shall be brought to stand before the bar of God, to be judged of him according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil. If they be good, to the resurrection of endless life and happiness, and if they be evil, to the resurrection of endless damnation.

You will discover they do not disagree with the Scriptures. He gives us a plain statement touching that, and we want to notice one more in this same work.

The ninth chapter of Mosiah, just a portion of verse 40:

Yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and to stand as witness of God at all times, and in all things, and in all places that ye may be in, even until death, that ye may be redeemed of God, and be numbered with those of the first resurrection, that ye may have eternal life.

I shall not take the time to read the balance, but ask you to read it, and you will find it exceedingly interesting.

Alma has something to say in this connection, and I am going to look at one or two statements of his. I told you I could not read all; I will not try to, but there are a few I want to call your attention to.

I turn back to the eighth chapter of Alma and notice a little statement made in verses 97 to 107:

Therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death; for behold, the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God, and be judged according to their works. Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death; the spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time, and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; and even there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost; but all things shall be restored to its perfect frame, as it is now, or in the body, and shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil. Now behold I have spoken unto you concerning the death of the mortal body, and also concerning the resurrection of the mortal body. I say unto you, that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body; that is from death; even from the first death, unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption.

We have another little statement that we might read, touching this same thought. I do not know that I shall take the time, it is more lengthy than I wish to read, but it is in the nineteenth chapter of Alma, verses 24 to 45. Read it, it will do you good.

Then turn to the revelations that have come to us in our day, and I will just quote two or three of them. It will show you to what extent they agree with others given at different periods, to different people, at different places, and you will understand the harmony that exists there, and see to what extent at least there has been agreement in these things.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

Turning to section 85 of the Doctrine and Covenants, beginning with the fourth verse I will read:

Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it.

Now the sixth and seventh verses read:

And again, verily I say unto you, The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore, it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it; for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body: they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness: and also they who are quickened by a portion of the telestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness: and they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received. For what doth it profit a man if a gift is bestowed upon him, and he receive not the gift? Behold, he rejoices not in that which is given unto him, neither rejoiced in him who is the giver of the gift.

Here you have a little outline of the conditions at the resurrection. Turn to the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians and you have the same thing practically, giving the various glories that are outlined there. Turn over a little in the same section and we have another one, but I am going to let you read that, the twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth verses of the same section.

In section 28:3 you will find another positive declaration as to this resurrection of the dead.

I think I had better read to you section 63:13.

It is quite clear, and we want to get it before you. I will read only a portion:

He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his works shall follow him; and also a reward in the world to come: yea, and blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, when the Lord shall come, and old things shall pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord, in the holy city, and he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man, wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; wherefore, for this cause preached the apostles unto the world the resurrection of the dead.

Go where you will in these records and you will see the power of God, the great tendency of his work toward man, the wonderful event that must eventually bring about the culmination of the purposes of this great gospel of Jesus Christ in the redemption of man, and the Spirit and the body reunited shall give to them a living soul again.

When we go back we discover in the start they were in the presence of God, they were in the garden wherein was the tree of life, and had access to eternal life, but by reason of transgression they lost that condition, and now to redeem them and accomplish the purpose of redemption in the fullest sense of the term, there must be an exercising of power that shall reach out and take hold, and not only bring the spiritual being in the redemption, but the body back and uniting them together, making them as they were in the beginning, a complete redemption, worthy, fit, and qualified to come back into the presence of their God, and partake of eternal life.

DEATH NOT END

Now when we get into the scientific world, they are moving along peculiar lines, and every little while there crops out a realization of the fact that they are picking up something of truth. I want to call your attention to the statement made by quite a prominent doctor at one of their conventions in New York several years ago. The main speaker was F. B. Wilson, LL. D, who remarked that new things might be intuitionally recognized as truths before being practically demonstrated. Then he declared:

Scientifically it has been proven that death does not end life and individual consciousness. I claim that it has been proven to the complete satisfaction of the most exacting of scientific men that those who have passed through what we call death have spoken and identified themselves to mortals here.

I claim that if the published records of investigators are carefully examined there is only one of two conclusions to be arrived at; that either these investigators, working sometimes in groups and sometimes alone, in almost every civilized nation in the world, are to be put down as liars, or that life has been proven to be continuous, and that those who have passed through the change called death live and preserve their individual entity.

This man had the courage to stand up before that assembly and say that. You stop and think for a moment. If the scientific world has been aroused and is awakening to the thought that there is more to man than this little span of life here, and that death that comes at the dissolution of this body from the spirit is not the end of the individual, it is not a hard matter or a long step from that to a recognition of the truths that Jesus Christ has ruled, and demonstrated to the world by his own power, that there will be an exhibition of power upon the part of God that shall bring man back to his natural condition, is reasonable and right, and God will give to him his body and his spirit that he may become a living soul in fact as well as in spirit.

So I think we can safely say that we are justified in accepting the evidences that present themselves that the resurrection of the dead is a truth, and we can afford to believe it and take the comfort and consolation of the great hope of the gospel of Jesus Christ that comes to us through its administration; that should give to the world the assurance that this power is a reality.

May God help us and bless us in our endeavor to see the beauties of the work of God as outlined in his gospel, is my prayer.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE MEEK SHALL INHERIT THE EARTH

When most people, even professed Christians, hear the saying of Jesus, that "the meek shall inherit the earth," they consider it one of those extreme, Utopian, and idealistic sayings that sound well but are utterly impracticable.

Some time ago a magazine made merry over the idea that the meek would ever get anything in this world, and even offered a prize for any record of a meek person achieving success.

But Jesus had more sense than these worldly-wise men who worship him on Sunday and condemn his wisdom on week days.

The meek do and will inherit the earth.

For instance, Europe to-day is a wrangle of violence. Wrath, force, arms, ships, ultimatums, and all sorts of nonmeekness are rampant.

Kaiser and czar, king and emperor, will stand no temporizing. They will draw the sword. The whole European system is based upon the rejection of any sort of meekness. The people are war dancing. The women are singing, "Go, my hero, and get the daylight shot out of you because our emperor is peevied." Millions of armed men march. A devil's Sabbath is brewing.

Over on this side of the Atlantic folks are rather meek, comparatively speaking. The jingoes couldn't arouse a war furor against Mexico. No two of the United States would think of getting into a fight. There will be no war here, because the people are not getting ready for war, don't want war, and don't consider it among the possibilities.

The United States, the dominant American Nation, is permanently committed to peace.

What's the result?

The meek are inheriting the earth!

Europe is whetting its ax to destroy billions of dollars worth of property; we are going ahead creating things.

Europe is murdering ignorant workers who are fools enough to march out and be shot by platoons; we are redeeming deserts, founding new states.

The best blood of Europe—its working blood—comes in a constant stream to the New World.

Every day America grows stronger. Every day Europe grows weaker.

The program of military arrogance devastates fields, transforms the wheat land into "the melon patch," where the melons are bleached, vulture-plucked skulls. The program of meekness is raising a bumper crop of corn and cattle.

There is more gold in New York to-day than in any capital of Europe. Europe is borrowing gold of us by shiploads.

At the present rate the United States will be richer than combined Europe before long.

So perhaps after all Jesus was not such a visionary dreamer.

Above the thunder of artillery, the roar of war drums, the cry of battle-mad hordes, comes the word from the calm lips of destiny:

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Doctor Frank Crane, in Omaha World-Herald.

If we cannot show that the soul of man is essentially Christian to its very depths, when both it and Christianity are understood; if science and faith cannot be made henceforth one and inseparable, indispensable each to the other; and in fine if the gospels, epistles and the church cannot have a new vital, radical, re-evolution and reconstruction in the world, and that soon, our faith must soon resign itself to the slow fate that overwhelmed the great religions of the past and some new one will arise upon its ruins. Never in all its varied history has the Church of Christ faced so great a crisis as that which confronts it to-day.—G. Stanley Hall.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

How Sweet the Hour

(The following lines were composed by Elder George A. Kelley, on the occasion of a baptismal service at Tulsa, Oklahoma, some time since. The words may be sung to the tune of "Sweet hour of prayer.")

How sweet the hour, how bright the day,
When earthly sin is washed away,
And from the waters, pure and white
Come children of the heavenly light!
With newborn hopes and new desires,
And in each heart rekindled fires,
Oh! Joy bounds up and overflows,
For Jesus all His children knows!

How sweet to sense his presence here,
Each soul to bless, each heart to cheer,
And each weak child to safely guide
'Till all stand worthy at his side.
Though storms of earth may fiercely rage,
Though oft the tempter's power engage,
With eyes turned e'er to Zion's land,
We'll cling to our Redeemer's hand!

Should the Choir Be Organized?

Last summer, in the interest of choir work, we were present at five reunions, and this fall we likewise visited quite a number of individual choirs throughout several districts of the church. Everywhere we have gone, and from a number of directions in correspondence, the above question has been asked repeatedly. Sometimes it would be presented in one form, sometimes in another; but invariably the "gist" of the question would be the same.

Experience has taught us that this question, contrary to its apparently immaterial nature, is of real importance and we have always endeavored to give it due and careful consideration. And now that we are addressing a much larger audience we shall endeavor to answer it as carefully and as fully as we can.

Webster, to whose justly celebrated dictionary we all go when we want to know the exact meaning of a word, says organize means, "To arrange or constitute in interdependent parts, each having a special function. . . or relation with respect to the whole; to systematize; to get into working order."

Taking this definition as a correct one and a true guide we can heartily say, Yes, every choir should be organized.

Organization, to be effective, must be a matter of careful and wise direction. Organization may be fittingly compared to machinery. If the organization is good, it is like the machine that is well built, each part proportioned to every other part, and all working in harmonious balance and adjustment. If the organization is poor, the machine is of faulty mechanical construction, running with friction and "lost motion." Our politicians have learned the value of well-planned organization, and their systems have generally run so admirably that society has given them the peculiarly fitting title of "machines."

In order that we may understand organization as related to our choir work let us take two examples of choirs we have been in touch with and consider them analytically.

Choir number one will probably be found in a good many of the branches of the church and is typical of branches where little appreciation has been had for choir work and consequently little thought or effort bestowed upon it. The branch where this choir was found had the regular institutions of chorister and organist and upon the chorister devolved the burden of providing the choir as well as directing it. Thus the choir was started out with two officers already "found" for it. But there all attempt at organization in its greater sense ceased; the machine contained no further parts. A general call for singers to assume the burden of the song service was issued; a general invitation extended for those who "felt like it" to come forward and assist. What was the result? Everyone felt that he had an invitation to "come up and sing," but no one felt any sense of obligation to do so; everyone felt that he had the privilege of "singing in the choir" whenever his inclinations prompted him to do so, but no one felt the call of duty to serve. With everyone in the congregation possessed of "rights" in the choir, no one felt the burden of the service resting upon him.

It was but another verification of the old adage, "That which is everybody's business is nobody's business." (Isaiah Walton). One Sunday the choir would be filled to overflowing with singers who desired to enjoy their "privileges"; the next Sunday the despairing chorister would look down from a sparsely filled choir loft into the congregation where many of these same singers would be following the lead of their "inclinations." It was ever a "feast or a famine" so far as choir attendance and service at that branch was concerned. It is needless to say that that choir never got anywhere, so far as the quality and range of its service is concerned, so long as it remained in that condition.

What was the matter? Simply a lack of organization; no arrangement of the work in hand; no systematizing the material available; no getting into "running order." Instead of a well-adjusted machine, running smoothly and efficiently, many of the important parts were missing.

Choir number two, because of its size, could not be found in many branches of the church. This choir had been a creature of continuous growth for a number of years, and the pillars of its strength were consistently devoted to its service. Desiring to labor for its further development they had, at some time in the past, formulated and put into operation an elaborate plan for its greater construction, and had "organized" upon a most extensive scale. The chief executive power in this choir was vested in the chorister, elected by the branch, with the privilege of choosing his assistant. The selection of the remaining officers, together with its own government, was left to the choir itself. The complete roster of officials in this choir is as follows: 1. Chorister; 2. Assistant chorister; 3. President; 4. Vice president; 5. Secretary; 6. Treasurer; 7. Organist; 8. Assistant organist; 9. Librarian. Then there were some committees that were deemed necessary for the proper conduct of the work; first, a membership committee, to recruit new members in the scheme of expansion; second, a music committee, delegated to select the music to be rendered by the choir; third, a social committee, whose task it was to minister to the social needs of the organization. On top of this extensive "layout" there was a most beautiful and wonderfully constructed "Constitution and by-laws," elaborated and intricate, prescribing what should and what should not be done, and which, on account of their complicated nature, were destined to be "honored more in the breach than in the observance."

What was the matter with the choir? Simply a case of over-organization. A scheme of government had been instituted for a limited body of singers extensive enough to have served for a whole musical community. It was like a business concern whose assets were limited and whose prospects for business could be estimated at a few thousand dollars annually, putting in an office system and equipment sufficient to handle millions. Its organization could be likened to a machine that was overly complicated in construction; where parts were needlessly multiplied and improperly proportioned to each other and lacking proper adjustment, thereby entailing undue friction and lost motion. Needless to say the salvation of the choir lay in ridding itself of its cumbersome machinery, and organizing on a plan that was simple and direct; which it did, and is now flourishing and accomplishing the service desired of it.

We have given two instances; one in which the choir lacked organization altogether, the other wherein it had too much. Between these two extremes there lies a golden mean which should be sought for by every choir. But let us analyze the work and purpose of the choir.

In this church no choir can or should exist for any other purpose than to do the service of the church and thereby build up the cause of Christ. The choir is a duly constituted servant of the church, set apart for a certain line of service, as is the apostle, or the deacon, or the presiding elder. Consequently when the choir fails to be mindful of its true mission or allows its energies to be "sidetracked" by issues that are outside of its purpose, it fails to render the acceptable service that it should. What is true of the choir as a body is necessarily true of each individual composing the choir. Any choir member who does not keep before himself the real object of his service in the choir, striving to serve so that that object will be attained, is not rendering acceptable service. The individual choir member must render services that are consecrated, and when the members are unitedly doing that the service of the choir as a body will be efficacious, holy, and acceptable to God.

But what has the above to do with organization, you say. Simply this: when choir members give their services from consecrated hearts, aglow with the knowledge that such service is for God and his work, then intricate forms of organization and elaborate "Constitutions," "By-Laws," and "Rules" will not be necessary. Consecrated choir members will not need these things to tell them how, or when, or why they serve; the love of the service will effectually direct them. It goes without saying, therefore, that organization and legislation can never take the place of consecration.

We believe that a wise, careful organization will result in good to any choir, simply because it brings the work to be done into a definitely arranged system. "Order is heaven's first law," (Pope) and a disorderly choir accomplishes but a portion of what it might. But let us continually bear in mind that organization should always be had with the greatest of care, first making sure that the spirit of consecrated service is the real, animating force. A carefully planned system should always be arranged, designed to care for the real necessities of the work, and it should always be made as simple as possible.

We have been asked a number of times to give some suggestions as to how a choir may be organized, and what would constitute a well-organized choir. In our work heretofore we have always tried to wisely aid, and give carefully considered advice. We have now decided to publish our conclusions on this subject, and in the next issue of The Staff will do so in the second half of this article.

Two Papers

(Read before the Far West Stake Musical Institute, Saint Joseph, Missouri, November 11, 1917.)

I. MUSIC AND THE CONGREGATION—NOTES FROM THE CONGREGATION

By Sister Ruby Jackson Hitch

When our chorister asked us to write a short paper for the institute on the above subject it seemed almost an impossibility (as it still does) to convey to you our conception of the influence of music upon the congregation.

That music has been used in the church from its very foundation is perfectly clear from references in the sacred record: "And when they had sung an hymn they went out into the Mount of Olives" (Matthew 26: 30). "And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God and the prisoners heard them" (Acts 16: 25).

Apostle Paul in his letter to the Colossians (3: 16) exhorted them: "Let the work of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

Prior to the time of Christ, we find vocal music occupying an important place in Old Testament history in religious worship, public rejoicings and social festivities. The Israelite men led by Moses sang in chorus, and Miriam led the women in the refrain at each interval. (Exodus 15: 21.) We read that the age of Samuel, David, and Solomon was the golden one alike of poetry and of music.

The Hebrew use of music was inspirational, whether festive or mournful. David's skill on the harp in his youth brought him under Saul's notice, and he played away Saul's melancholy under the evil spirit (1 Samuel 16: 23).

As David elevated music to the praise and service of God, so the degenerate Israelites of Amos's time degraded it to the service of their own sensuality.

We simply mention these things to show that the power of music to reach and impress our inner consciousness has been recognized as far back as our history of Christianity permits us to go.

The mission of the song is twofold. First, there is the influence of the music; but there is in addition to this the message of love, of hope, of courage or of praise expressed in the words of the song. Often in the attempt of singers to produce perfect tones the pronunciation of words is neglected and words not plainly spoken are not understood; and thus half the value of the song is lost. What would we think of a preacher who spoke in such a way that not half of his words could be understood? It is just as important that God's message to us, or our praise to him, in song, be spoken clearly and distinctly.

Billy Sunday, the popular evangelist, has said, "When you get to heaven you will find that not all have been preached there; many have been sung there." Much of the success of his meetings is due to the influence of his music. The singing is as essentially a part of the service as the sermon. The tabernacle music in itself is enough to draw the great throngs which nightly crowd his meetings, and to the writer the music led by Mr. Rodeheaver was three fourths of the attraction in attending the meetings. When Billy Sunday was ready to preach the congregation had been worked up into a fervor and a glow through the singing that made it receptive to his message, and it would be just as receptive to one who had a bigger message to bring.

The message that is brought to us from the choir is well expressed in the following extract from a paper on this subject, written by Brother Arthur E. McKim, read by him at a "musical institute" during the General Conference at Independence, Sunday afternoon, April 9, 1916, and printed in The Staff for August 8, 1917:

"The service is a ritual in itself. First the organ, with its deep, full tones—powerful, impressive, dignified, calling all to quit their thoughts of self, and join in worship of their Maker. Then the hymn in which the congregation enters with sober thoughts. It is as a confessional in which they sing to God their faults and their sorrows. It is truly a pouring forth of the heart, an expression of the pent-up emotions of a week of stress and too often of sin.

"With the hush of the last words, in the subdued quiet, comes the prayer, as of a high priest who meditates for his people. It is the translating of their emotions into words, words that ascend to God as from one soul intensified one thousand times over! The prayer is heard, the answer is distilled like dew from heaven into every heart.

"The hymn that swells forth now is a hymn of praise, of joyfulness, of thanksgiving to a God who is so gracious to receive and so gentle to forgive. It is sung with hearts full to the overflowing, and with thoughts subdued by the sacred Presence.

"As the congregation settles back to its place, the choir or soloist, it matters not so much, takes up the service. It is the answer to the prayer and to the praise. Whether it be a gloria to the Father sung with intense emotion or a quiet song of promise and of hope, it comes to the waiting people as a gift and a seal to their blessing.

"We have no ritual we say; but this is ritual enough. It is the world-old ritual of penitence, of acceptance, and of praise before the Father. Our music can mean this and more. We can sing into it whatever our hearts are capable of feeling."

II. THE ORGANIST'S RESPONSIBILITY IN CONGREGATIONAL SINGING AND THE ORGANIST'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE CHOIR SUCCESS

By Sister Edna Christiansen, Organist of First Saint Joseph Branch

Music, the harmony of sweet sounds, stands foremost as a means of drawing us heavenward. The power of song is as deep as it is universal. It inspires, elevates and exalts religious feeling. No art, I believe, affords such strong evidence of the spiritual in man as music, so we should develop the desire for song and music.

Nothing helps a church service more than good congregational singing, therefore it should be encouraged. Some congregations like to sit back and hear the choir do all the work, but I think that each one in the congregation would enjoy the service to a greater extent if he had a part in it. Hymns that are familiar to all will meet with a greater response by the congregation than those that are not so well known.

The organist can be a great help in this cause. First, by clean phrasing and positive pulsation; second, by playing in strict time without dragging or going too fast; in other words, playing so that the assembled people will be led instead of diverted.

The organist is generally the leader of the congregational singing and should play the hymns well. It is almost impossible to give any safe directions with reference to speed at which hymns should be sung. It depends mainly upon the character and style of the hymns. Slow singing is favored by many because they consider it more "congregational."

The tendency, though, of congregations or large bodies of singers not perfectly disciplined is to drag. Rapid singing is condemned as un-congregational, and rightly so if too fast; but I think that a bright, cheerful service, not unduly hurried, is more successful than one inclined to be dragging. The organist should try to realize the sense and character of the words of the hymn which would surely suggest the proper tempo of any particular melody.

In playing the church service, the organist is only a cog in the wheel. Hardly anyone notices him or pays the slightest attention to what he does until the choir begins to sing. Necessary he certainly is to the success of most choirs. How few choirs can sing acceptably without an accompaniment! In church it is necessary nine times out of ten to keep the choir up to pitch. It is necessary nine times out of ten to keep the choir alert and up to time. The accompaniment must not be too loud, but should be used as a background for the voices.

Some organists feel that they have a hard and thankless task and get thoroughly discouraged, for they say that there is no interest taken in their part of the service and feel that the congregation looks on them as something to keep the choir from getting "off key." This is too often true.

The organist is taken for granted, being almost a part of the church. His services range with those of the pulpit and pew, always there, fulfilling their parts. We must strive to create interest in our service—by putting ourselves heart and soul into what we do. Of course there are many mistakes made by the best of us, but if we work with all our skill, knowledge and taste, we will reap our reward in time.

Independence Stake Choirs To Sing "Messiah"

The combined choirs of the Independence Stake will render Handel's immortal masterpiece, "The Messiah," during the Christmas holiday season, Thursday night, December 27, at the Stone Church. There is a strong sentiment demanding that the rendition of this oratorio be made a regular annual event of the stake during the holiday season of each year.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Sex Hygiene

It was the hope of those interested in this subject to have a definite program detailed from a selected text early in the fall, so that all auxiliaries might consult it in planning their year's work. In all three particulars I am disappointing, but I trust, not failing you. The lapse of time has served to give a broader view of the field before us; we believe the use of several books will bring richer results than the original plan and if the organized classes have elastic minds and programs there is still time to make a beginning on this work, in the year that is before us.

Our first need is to understand the importance of our subject. I am selecting for your first lessons, books that emphasize the need of intelligent study on the part of the parents and teachers and of wise and definite training of our young people. The old methods of silence and ignorance have failed. Silence does not pervert the course of nature; ignorance does not prevent curiosity and neither satisfies nor fortifies against the time of need.

Instead of grasping the big harmonious truths of life and using them as forces to bind parents and children in a closer companionship, we are letting them act as wedges of separation. Our failure to understand has amounted to criminal neglect which is fostering such evils as white slavery, illegitimacy and many forms of sex evil.

Maurice Bigelow of Columbia University, in his Sex Education, says that the problems with which we must concern ourselves are: 1. Personal sex-hygiene; 2. Social disease. 3. Social evil. 4. Illegitimacy. 5. Sexual morality. 6. Sexual vulgarity. 7. Marriage. 8. Eugenics.

I quote these here to show you the magnitude of our possible knowledge and influence as women of the true church, as mothers in our homes, as friends and protectors to all young or fortunate, as powers in our social and civil communities.

We need not touch some of the topics this year. My hope is that we shall, first, overcome prejudice and indifference, realize our need; then make a beginning on a definite course of instruction for our children and early adolescents. Some of the books I shall refer you to will help with the more advanced topics and you who have the time and need for more advanced study can easily do individual work. I shall be glad to answer inquiries as to reference books, or can refer you to some one who will help you with your problems.

One sex hygiene writer says, "There are so many aspects of the subject, and so many books, each adapted to special needs and purposes that one who knows the field can best advise the thing that will fit your need."

I hope the auxiliaries all over the land are collecting good references which are recommended in the Year Book, into helpful libraries. I do not consider it necessary for each member in a class to own a text book. One book read together and discussed will often prove satisfactory. By using texts in this way members can buy different books for the use of all where there is no public fund. The books that can be of the most service to you are the ones you should individually buy and keep.

Some study clubs may already have Galloway's Biology of Sex. That was recommended last year and can be purchased at the Herald Publishing House for seventy-five cents. It is the best thing I have found for general use in what we need to study this year. While you are ordering it get also a copy of "Guide to Sex Instruction" by T. W. Shannon, sold at the same place for fifty cents.

COURSE OF STUDY

1. Read the first two chapters of Biology of Sex and the first chapter of Guide to Sex Instruction in your classes. Discuss them until there are no more doubts of the need of a course of sex instruction for mothers.

2. Now the scope of our work with children and some very excellent suggestions will be found in Galloway, chapters 3 and 8, and the appendix; also Shannon, chapters 7 and 14. You will have to use your own discretion as to the time needed for this division. As it includes the suggestions for daily watchfulness, proper dressing, exercises and games, the wholesome living by which our children can grow up in right thinking and with good habits it should not be hurried.

3. All sex educators agree that the method of definite instruction for children under twelve, boys and girls alike, is to teach biology; that is, give them plant and animal stories in such a way as to bring out the laws of reproduction. Children accept the great truths as natural and right. It is so easy in these early years to lay solid foundations for future building and to forestall unwholesome curiosity or misunderstanding.

Shannon's Guide to Sex Instruction gives the stories commonly used through plant and animal life to man in a simple way which mothers can give with little adapting. Those who have access to good libraries and would like to read more, see: Plant and Animal Life, by Torelle; How Shall I Tell My Child, by Chapman; Removal of Life, by Morley; The Way Life Begins, by Cady.

4. Bigelow divides child periods into—
 - (a) Preadolescent: to about 11 years.
 - (b) Early adolescent:
 - girls 12 to 16 years.
 - boys 13 to 17 years.
 - (c) Late adolescent:
 - girls 16 to 21 years.
 - boys 18 to 25 years.

At the beginning of the second period the work with boys and girls should be separate. What we want to know is how much and in what way to give information that will prepare for the changes that are coming. There are a number of good books but I will refer you to the two I had opportunity to read which I found very good. For girls, For Girls and the Mothers of Girls, by Mary Hood, price, one dollar; for boys, From Youth into Manhood, by Winfred Hall. Read with the children and lead them along the way, then they will not feel timid about coming to you with their problems. If father can and will take charge of the boy's education at this point it is well, but I see no reason why a mother cannot keep in close touch with her boy's heart and confidences and feel free to read this book with him if there is need for her to do so.

Two good little books by Winfred Hall at ten cents each are Chums, for boys, and Life's Problems, for girls.

Now I hope we realize the importance of this work and will take it up with zeal. If you have any questions that I might help to answer do not hesitate to write to me.

Young Women of Lamoni

Sunday, November 4, saw the gathering of a group of earnest girls in the lower auditorium of the brick church. This meeting had been announced in the pastor's notice of services in the local weekly, had been verbally announced in high school and college, and notice of it had been impressively and favorably read by the pastor at the sacrament service that morning. It was called a "Mass meeting of girls over fifteen."

The first half hour after the opening prayer was consumed by speeches on the needs of organization and consecration by Ruth Allen and Mrs. Jessie Morant. The last half hour was devoted to explaining the new movement, its ideals, purposes, and its usefulness to the girls. A general discussion followed. The young women were very enthusiastic over the prospects of broadening their circle of friendship and of overcoming the apparent snobbishness of cliques and sets among them.

The study idea also appealed to them very much. There was no time left for organization, so a committee was appointed to arrange a meeting where the definite details of organization could be settled. This meeting was held on the Tuesday of the following week, and resulted in a complete organization of a chapter of about fifty members, who composed girls from the college, high school and from the teaching staff of Lamoni. To the necessary corps of officers were added two counselors to assist the leader with executive problems.

These young women are all extremely busy with school work, so have decided to meet regularly only once a month, when they will have a study hour with lectures, followed by a social hour. They voted to take up two lines of special study, personal hygiene, and vocational reading. Under the latter head we hope to have professional women from all vocations tell us about their advantages and disadvantages.

Besides these two lines of work we hope to have a few minutes of devotional services each time: Miss Sear's sermon, or a talk and a prayer. We are also sending to the Iowa Circulating Library for a number of volumes of the best fiction which will be circulated among the members during the month. This reading they will discuss during the social hour.

Altogether the new movement is getting a fine start in Lamoni, and the girls are promising themselves many good times and much profit. Since half of our girls live at the college dormitory we hope to meet every other month at the college. You who have ever lived in Lamoni will appreciate the importance of uniting in this way the college and the town young people.

A Word of Sympathy

Sister Dora Glines, supervisor of our educational bureau, has recently been called to part with a beloved sister, Sister Margaret Fordham, of Lovell, Wyoming.

We extend to Sister Glines and family our deep sympathy knowing well what such a loss means to a loving heart. We feel sure, however, that our sister, like most Saints, has experienced the sustaining power of a tender Father, and has felt the sweet peace which comes to the trusting soul which rests confidently in the bosom of the Savior. This peace passing understanding, is the rightful heritage of the child of God and comes as a blessing to tired and sore hearts that trust in him.

Whole Wheat Flour Uses

The recipes promised for use of whole wheat flour in a recent issue were crowded out by other matter, but are included herewith. The bulletin including the recipes may be had of the Nebraska State University Extension Bureau, Lincoln, Nebraska. Many valuable aids and suggestions are always available too, by addressing the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, District of Columbia, mentioning along what line help is desired.

Whole wheat flour may be used alone or mixed as desired. When used alone, more moisture is required by the home-ground flour, and the product is slightly heavier and darker but altogether wholesome. The addition of one fourth white flour both in quick and yeast breads brings the best results.

The following recipes are made with home-ground whole wheat flour:

MUFFINS

1½ cups whole wheat flour.	1 teaspoon salt
½ cup white flour.	2 tablespoons fat
2 teaspoons baking powder	1 cup milk
2 tablespoons sugar or molasses.	1 whole egg

Mix and sift the dry ingredients. Cut in the fat, add milk and finally the well-beaten whole egg.

Whole wheat flour may be used alone if desired.

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD NO. 1—COMPRESSED YEAST—1 LOAF

1 yeast cake plus 1 table- spoon water	1 tablespoon fat
½ cup skim milk	1 teaspoon salt
½ cup water	2½ cups home-ground whole wheat
1 tablespoon sugar or molasses

Make a sponge of dissolved yeast cake liquid and 1 cup flour. Let stand until light. Add the remainder of the flour. Let rise until double its bulk, mold into pan, let rise again, and bake in a moderately hot oven.

Compressed yeast is used in this recipe and less may be used (¼ cake to each loaf) if desired. The time required for rising will be longer with less yeast.

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD NO. 2—COMPRESSED YEAST—1 LOAF

1 yeast cake plus 1 table- spoon water	1 tablespoon fat
½ cup skim milk	1 teaspoon salt
½ cup water	1 cup white flour
1 tablespoon brown sugar	2 cups whole wheat flour

Prepare as above or mix ingredients at beginning. Knead well. Let rise, and mold. Let rise again, and bake in a moderately hot oven.

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD NO. 3—YEAST FOAM—4 LOAVES

PART 1	PART 2
1 yeast cake	2 cups skim milk
¼ cup luke warm water	1 tablespoon salt
2 cups water	3 tablespoons fat
2 cups white flour	3 tablespoons brown sugar
1 cup whole wheat flour	8 cups plus wholewheat flour

Dissolve yeast cake and set sponge, mixing part 1 thoroughly. Let rise over night. In the morning, scald milk in double boiler; add fat, sugar, and salt; cool; add to sponge; and stir in the remainder of the flour. Knead well, and let rise to double its bulk. Mold into loaves. Let rise again, and bake in a moderately hot oven.

BREAKFAST FOODS

The amount of moisture the wheat will absorb depends upon the condition of the grain, but a general proportion is one part of wheat to four parts of water, using three-fourths to a teaspoon of salt to one pint of liquid.

The time of cooking required to give the best results is at least one hour to make the starch soluble. A longer time for the cracked and whole grain improves the flavor greatly. The method of preparing cereal is important in the making of a good product. Stir the wheat into boiling salted water in the upper part of the double boiler. Stir constantly until smooth and creamy. Cover, place over hot water, and finish cooking.

BRAN

When a finer quality of flour is desired, the bran may be sifted out. These siftings may be utilized by adding them to a starchy breakfast food. In this case, it supplies additional flavor and bulk.

Bran gems, a wholesome addition to the diet, may be made from these siftings as follows:

BRAN GEMS

1 cup bran	1 tablespoon sugar
1 cup graham flour	1 teaspoon fat
3 teaspoons baking powder	1 cup milk
½ tablespoon salt

Mix the dry ingredients and add the fat and milk. Mix thoroughly. Bake in a moderately hot oven.

If a lighter product is desired, part white flour may be used.

Tuberculosis is an insidious and uncompromising foe. We must not permit the entrance of this enemy by neglecting to study the methods by which tuberculosis thrives. Let everyone now become interested in the problem and strive to control the dread white plague.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Christmas Offering---Roll of Honor

Boise, Idaho, got busy early and appointed a committee which set $100 as an aim. They must have had much courage in face of the fact that last year they only raised $5. Now they have the hundred and have raised their sights so they point toward the $150 mark. They have an enrollment of about 30.

From Windsor, Ontario, they report an aim of $180, with $130 reached. They liked the illustration of the wheel very much.

Marseilles, Illinois, address of the school at Mission, report an aim of $110. The reading of the letter from this office brought a total offering of $20.

Bently, Michigan, 65 members, $11.60 last year, now: $45. Vancouver, Washington, 27 members, $9.34 last year, now: $62.73.

Logan, Iowa, have the real school spirit. On Girls' Day it was learned that they had raised $101.50. The fathers had a day' and they turned in $143.90. We have heard they had a Boy's Day and wonder if they made up the balance, the latest total being $446.20. A fine showing all around.

Fresno, California, in common with other schools, reports quite a large percentage who are not able to pay anything. Their total membership is 56. They paid in $5.20 last year and have raised $35 already.

Bourbon, Missouri, have raised $30.

Oelwein, Iowa, report 20 members, $6 last year, $14.50 to date.

Sharpville, Pennsylvania, have passed their aim of $100, reaching $108.50. They feature a roll of honor on which a star is placed opposite the names of all who pay two dollars or more. It has 29 stars out of an enrollment of 67, but only 42 of these are of our church.

"We are doing fairly well," reports the school at National Stock yards post office, Saint Clair County, Illinois. They have to date $201 and have set aside a week for self-denial. They have a membership of 75—almost $3 apiece. You certainly are doing fairly well.

Saint Thomas, Ontario, have about their full quota.

Moss Point, Mississippi, report $27, and expect to make $10 more.

Denver, Colorado, First Branch, report $77, with a gathering together on Christmas Eve which will bring the amount up considerably.

Knox, Indiana, report their spoke placed in the great wheel, having raised $49.41. They have a membership of 19.

Corinth, Ontario, have $30.09, with a membership of 15.

Wilber, Nebraska, have $66.98, which is $2 per member.

Fort Madison, Iowa, have adopted the best day's wage plan. They have on hand $67, pledges for $23.30 and think they will more than reach $100.

Sperry, Oklahoma, with average attendance of 50, one third nonmembers, have $108.40, with enough promised to make $125. Last year's offering was $45.

Burlington, Iowa, made a large cardboard wheel with a missing spoke for them to fill. It took $278 to do it, but they soon had $310.07 and expect to make it $350. Last year they sent in $47.30.

One of the Chicago schools (wish we know how to tell them apart—anyway the one Brother J. J. Oliver is superintendent of) divided into sides, the boys on one side, and the girls on the other. They went to work, and the whole school decided they could qualify in one of the sides. After an enthusiastic time, they reported: Boys, $100; girls, $96.30. They had $98 when they began the contest, thus making $294.30 instead of the $175 they started out for. They have a new goal—$325.

The Sweet Home school at Ravenwood, Missouri, had $20.25 last year and $61 now, with good prospects for $75.

"The tiniest school in the tiniest city of New York State," is the way Sherill school reports, having an average attendance of 18. Last year they gave $8.50, but now have $46.

Woodbine, Iowa, had $147 on November 1 but a chicken pie supper raised $60 since. They expect to have $250. In just the past few weeks they have sent in $23 on subscriptions to the church publications.

Lamoni Sunday school has something like $1,000 raised now, and it may run to as much as $1,400. Several classes have more than one dollar each, while the beginners and primaries will take a silver offering at the Christmas entertainment which they will give. All those who have been members of the school but who have moved elsewhere are being invited to contribute through this school, and considerable money is coming back.

Pike Lake, Saskatchewan, are to give all their offerings from now till Christmas to the fund.

South Rawdon, Nova Scotia, just a home class, have $22 and promise of more.

Williamsdale, Nova Scotia, generally give about $3, but so far they have $100 and giving yet.

Alexander, Kansas, has 50 members and have $63.99, expecting to make it $100.

Second Detroit school reports over two dollars a member, having an enrollment of 70, average of 58 and total raised of $154.86. Last year's offering was $52.56.

Mondamin, Iowa, has 25 members and to date have raised $100. Doesn't take long to say it, but note the average.

In 1916 The Plains, Ohio, sent in $19.25. Now they have over $120, expect more, are poor in this world's goods, and are only 50 strong.

Thurman, Iowa, have raised $96.09 and will have over $2 per member when they open their Christmas bank. Their membership is about 50. Last year they gave $8.12.

From Bates City, Missouri, we have a short letter, which we will quote: "On last Sunday our Sunday school pledged itself to give our apportionment of $8 per member for the Christmas offering. The amount is over half paid in now and the balance is accounted for." A. W. SMITH.

"The Mormon Maid" in Minneapolis

I have enjoyed the lines penned by those from other parts. In the city my work for this year, or the past six months, has been somewhat different than it has been heretofore.

The local work has had ample support from the brethren in charge of that work, which has left me free to devote my time to activities among those not of our faith.

My efforts have been from house to house, in which I have distributed about twelve dollars worth of church literature. My experiences have been peculiar, meeting those that are bigoted as well as those that are very antagonistic.

I have also met many that have been very reasonable, and have expressed themselves as interested in the work. This work has greatly improved my efficiency as a minister, as I have had to meet the views of many different religious beliefs. The Lord has wonderfully blessed me in mind, as I have successfully met some that are unusually hard to talk with. I have become better acquainted with the points of doctrine used in support of the restored gospel.

Some twenty people are interested in the work here in the city, and at Anoka, which is eighteen miles from here; several are interested, and pay my expenses to and from when I go to speak each Sunday. Of late our experience has differed from that which we have been engaged in during the summer and fall. At one of our leading theaters of the city, a picture has been running. Its title, "A Mormon maid," aroused the curiosity of many, especially the church people. We took advantage of the opportunity, telegraphed the Herald Office, and enough literature was obtained to keep two of us at the doors of the theater, giving same to those who came out of the show, the entire week.

The heading of our tract was "Polygamy," which stated that it was not a doctrine of the true Latter Day Saint Church, also gave quotations from Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants on the question and the court decisions.

The pictures shown were of the early days in Utah, showing the council chambers of the church officials, in which their secret wife system was solemnized. The picture was the usual love affair, seasoned with romance, and heroism, showing how a young girl had been spirited away to Utah, and there had been compelled to become one of the wives of a leading member of the Utah Church.

The revelation (?) sanctioning polygamy, which Brigham Young palmed off on his followers was shown on the screen, not stating which book it was from.

The young maiden, however, used her wits to satisfaction, took advantage of the wording of the so-called revelation, and declined to become one of his wives on the grounds that she was not a virgin, and was liberated. There was nothing to the play, although it showed the Utah people up badly.

We almost had an opportunity to speak each evening from the stage, stating some of the facts concerning the origin of the church and Book of Mormon, and of course we would not have forgotten to tell Brigham Young's little part in the assumption of leadership after Joseph's death in 1884.

With the business affairs of every day life pressing hard, and up late every night made it difficult to arrange a talk that would be brief enough, and the manager, although favorable towards it, thought that it would be too long a story. But the opportunity will come again, I am sure, and we shall try to be prepared for it.

Almost all took our literature, folded it up carefully and put it either in their pockets or pocketbooks, some tore them up and looked back at us with contempt, others when they saw the large heading "Polygamy," dropped the tract like they would have dropped a red-hot coal. We had a chance to talk to many and explain the church work and answered some of their many questions. An invitation was extended to lecture on the Book of Mormon before a young men's Bible class here, which we expect to arrange for at some future date.

Some of the Utah elders thought they would try to give out some of their literature, but they were only there for two hours one evening. They were two in number, and acted rather backward, not making any attempt at first to give out their tracts. I finally said to the young man on my side of the house, "Have you some literature to give out?" He said he had, but did not want to butt in. I then said, "If you have literature to distribute, then get busy, and if you and I cannot act as Christians, we had better both go home." So we both gave out our literature and talked together in the meantime. They have a small branch here, which I attend occasionally, and give out quite a lot of tracts. I am on friendly terms with all of them and hope to remain so.

The prospects are bright here, although I anticipate that it will develop slowly. City people are skeptical, and the grafters and sparks make their daily rounds and in a way you cannot blame people for their attitude towards men calling at their doors.

Two small openings have been made here this past six months, and prospects look bright for another soon. The local brethren have assisted me, and the branch has donated liberal sums for literature. I have enjoyed good liberty in speaking, and God has recognized my many needs, so I do not hesitate to ascribe the honor and thanks to him.

Yours for success,

E. H. BENNETT.

DIXONVILLE, ALABAMA, November 17, 1917.

Editors Herald: This finds me as happy as a clam, holding meetings nightly and twice on Sunday. I find a bunch of warm-hearted Saints in this region. Have two places in view after leaving here, by invitation of those in charge. Have in view to go farther south later on.

Was impressed while in Canada, this last summer, that I ought to exercise as good judgment as a goose, at least as good as a gosling, which is hatched out in northern Canada in summer and comes south for the winter.

Had an excellent reunion here two weeks ago. All enjoyed themselves under the influence of the good Spirit.

J. C. CRABB.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA, November 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: When the church papers came this week, and seeing the communication from our pastor, Brother C. W. Hawkins, in the Ensign, the same being in the HERALD the previous week, this thought was impressed on my mind: Shall we continue to receive from week to week the precious truths and helpful suggestions which their columns contain, and not express our appreciation to those whom the Lord has called and placed upon the editorial and contributing staffs of our publications?

When we read some of the "Blue pencil notes" in the HERALD; admonitions in the communications given by the Spirit, and other splendid articles, they tend to create a stronger desire for holier living and more fully consecrated lives for the Master's service.

Many times there comes to my mind the "Vision of the swords," as described by our beloved and departed president, Joseph Smith, and I wonder if they will cross and prevent my entrance into that higher life?

We as a little band of Saints here in San Jose are striving hard to uphold the banner of our King, and to heed the admonition to "Come higher."

Last Sunday morning our pastor used for the foundation of his sermon, the text from Romans 12:1 and discoursed from President F. M. Smith's dedicatory sermon, all of which was timely and we trust will have the desired results. Our little church here is not paid for yet, but which we hope will be ere long. This is truly a day of sacrifice and when we as Saints are willing to deny ourselves more for the Lord's work, then can we hope to see Zion arise as the Lord intends.

Sunday evening the Religio program was under the auspices of the local library board, and the "suggestive program" sent out by Vernon A. Reese of the General Library Commission, was carried out. Trust we may have more such programs in the future and thus prove an impetus to that line of the Lord's work. Having had charge of the library work for several years, I realize the importance of a good library in connection with the church work. Sunday evening, November 4, a pretty little wedding was held at our church which united Brother Cyrus Williams and Sister Eva C.

Fletcher in bonds of matrimony. Brother Charles J. Cady officiated.

Have some sick among us, most of whom are improving, for which we are thankful. Quite a number of our local members were away for a time, one and all were glad to get home again. Might it truly be so everywhere, that the Saints upon returning to their home branch, feel that they were truly getting home again.

We feel to thank our heavenly Father for the man we have for our pastor, the Lord knew our needs and so directed.

May we all strive to so live that when our Savior comes we shall be arrayed like him.

In gospel bonds,

MARY E. LAWN.

SCRANTON, KANSAS, November 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: The HERALD comes to me loaded down and running over with food for thought, and to my hungering soul it is surely food in due season. My soul had been perplexed for a few weeks. I had written to our district president to come and help me out. But before he came, that article from the pen of our inspired brother, Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, in the HERALD for October 10, page 963, was worth a mountain of gold. Yes, worth more than that to me.

Brothers, the Spirit of the loving Father never made a mistake. Where we find we have some slothful in the service of the Lord, the Spirit saith woe be unto such. There you find it is the will of our Father that we hold up the hands of the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve Apostles. Are we doing it? Why, no, and that is why the Lord speaks and Brother Griffiths tells us we should fast and pray for them because of the great responsibility and heavy burdens they have to bear, as the leading officers of the church. Surely if all could have the spirit of this letter we would bury forever the spirit of discord.

Again on November 4 the Spirit of God makes it known through our dear Brother Elbert A. Smith: "Yea, saith the Lord, I desire many evangelists of love to preach the gospel of love, not only in word but also in deed. If there is any man who has not been baptized with the Spirit of love, he has not been baptized of me saith the Lord. . . . I have many forces at work in the world saith the Lord. I have many spiritual forces at work that you know not of." Just think of that, brethren. Consider it now.

Yes, brothers, we have just been having with us one of God's evangelists of love in the person of Elder Samuel Twombly, and his love seems to grow and because of that the congregation grew larger until the last meeting and the interest increased accordingly, and we heard many say, "We hope he will soon come back again." This is just as it should be. But oh, how seldom this has happened for a long time. But I am glad the Lord has said he wants many evangelists of love. Will we help to fill the gap?

Yes, brethren, for the work's sake, let your light shine brighter until the perfect day. We cannot serve God except we abide in his love.

May we all grow in grace is my prayer,

JAMES BAILLIE.

PORT DALHOUSIE, ONTARIO, November 22, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are a few isolated Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and truly know the meaning of the word isolation as the majority of us came from the large branches. For two years four of us struggled together holding our Sunday school and Religio meetings in an unorganized form, and holding two prayer meetings a week, which services proved of great blessing to us, as we proved the statement that where two or three are gathered together in

His name there would He be in our midst. During that time we had Elder Place of Niagara Falls, Ontario, preach several times in our home when the good seed was planted.

At the time of writing we have nine grownups and six children here. Recently we had two baptized at Niagara Falls (one being Sister Jessie Jarvis), where on sacrament Sunday we attend, inviting friends to accompany us. The last time we had twenty-five in party and all very anxious to go again. All were thrilled by the Spirit.

On November 18, Brother Charles Gerrard, district president of Religio and Brother W. Mather, vice president of Toronto, formally organized our Religio and Sunday school. There were over fifty present, as the Saints of Niagara Falls, Welland and surrounding districts were also here. We had the town hall rented for services and Brother Roy Jarvis's basement converted into a dining hall, which was gayly lighted and decorated, where we all enjoyed the provided bounties. In the evening Brother Place preached on "False prophets, who are they?" to a very interested audience, three of whom are going to attend our classes.

Our boys are canvassing this place with tracts and we ask the Saints to remember that we may be the instruments in God's hands for the gathering out his elect, and that we may live in love and unity.

In gospel bonds,
SISTER M. HILL.

TERLTON, OKLAHOMA, November 22, 1917.

Editors Herald: The church at Terlton was dedicated Sunday, November 18, 1917, by Apostle W. M. Aylor, assisted by Brother Joseph Arber of the seventy, and Brother Earl Bailey for the Bishopric. The services were Sunday school at ten a. m., dedicatory services at eleven a. m., basket dinner at noon, social service at two-thirty p. m. and preaching at night by Brother Aylor.

Although the day was a rainy one, the house was comfortably full. The meetings were spiritual throughout.

Visiting Saints were Brethren Aylor and Arber from Independence, Missouri, Brother Bailey from Sperry, Oklahoma, Brother Kelley from Tulsa, Oklahoma, Brother and Sister Vansickle, Sister Fannie Coiner, and Sister Mae Coiner Troth from Yale. Brother and Sister Will Culver and family from Glencoe, Sister Linden and Sister Liggett from Morrison, Sister Mae Burgess from Sapulpa, Sister Rothwell and daughter from Manford and Sister Bernice Hart and family from Enid. All expressed themselves as feeling repaid for the effort in coming.

The Presidency

The Presidency has for some time been in correspondence with Brother Floyd M. McDowell, now at Iowa City, with the view to having him take the leadership of the Boy Movement of the church, with a view to coordinating the efforts of the local movements in this direction. We are pleased to say that after some urging Brother McDowell has consented to accept the responsibility, and we therefore request that all local leaders of boys' movements, or those who are interested therein, get in touch with Brother Floyd McDowell at once, lay their plans before him, give him such information as he might desire, and give such assistance as they can to help him to get the movement coordinated throughout the church. Brother McDowell can be reached at 331 North Gilbert Street, Iowa City, Iowa.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

CHANGE IN APPOINTMENT

By action of the Joint Council of Presidency and Twelve, recently in session, Elder Francis J. Ebeling was transferred from his appointment to the Lamoni Stake to the Southern Ohio District. Those concerned please take note.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 6, 1917.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Southern Idaho District and Eastern Oregon: "Let those give now who never gave before, and those who've given often, give some more."

To many Saints scattered in Southern Idaho and Eastern Oregon, I am appealing direct to you. A goodly number, I am pleased to say, have heeded the Lord's call: "Bring in your tithes and offerings," but there are many yet, indeed, to hear from.

Realizing that another year has almost winged itself into eternity, let each one ask of themselves, Have I done my whole duty? Do not view the scene with the same complacent eye as I have heard expressed by foreigners to the faith, "Jesus paid it all." He never did. I believe the Saints of the above-mentioned districts have been blessed as never before, and while the call for money has never been greater, remember the call of God is paramount to all other calls.

More names appear on the tithing list than ever before, but many more, I know, wish to do their part, but keep delaying. Remember procrastination is still standing at the cross roads. Dear Saints, "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thy increase."

This day the church has many missionaries in the front lines in the trenches, as it were, and what we are doing to keep them there? We of the second line, reserves, must remember the injunction, "Freely give and freely it shall be given."

Your offerings are needed for the upbuilding of Zion. The poor must be taken care of, children's and old folk's homes, Sanitarium and Graceland. The Sunday school is struggling to lift the church debt by raising two dollars per member. Are we doing our part? The up and doing ones shall receive their reward. What of the idler? Read Doctrine and Covenants 56:4. In line with the quotation at the beginning, let this be our thought and do it now.

J. L. BENSON, Bishop's Agent.

MINIDOKA, IDAHO.

To the Saints of the Youngstown-Sharon District: You will recall with pleasure the day you emerged from the waters of baptism to walk in newness of life; how light and happy you felt and with what determination you started to follow in the footsteps of your Savior. In the years that have passed your experience has, no doubt, been similar to ours, the road has not always been easy, trials and temptations have been numerous, and sometimes we have felt like giving up the struggle. Whatever our experience has been, we are still forced to confess that the angel's message is the greatest boon that has come into our lives. What have we done to merit so high a calling?

In reviewing the experiences of this year can we say that we have made satisfactory progress? If we are still subject to the same weakness, and have acquired no additional Christ-like traits we are no farther advanced than we were at the beginning of the year.

We are living in the hastening time. The redemption of Zion is nearer, perhaps, than we realize. Whoever abides in Zion must obey the celestial law. The celestial law deals with temporalities. If we are overcoming selfishness and imparting of our substance as becometh Saints we are well on the road toward Zion.

Can we say that we have done all within our power to advance the cause of Christ? If not, why not? If we have not paid our tithing have we any reasonable excuse to offer for our failure? Shall we continue to call "Lord, Lord," and yet fail to keep his commandments? This is the day of our prosperity and the best opportunity we will have to remember the Lord with our substance.

Many are making earnest efforts to live up to all their privileges as is evidenced by the monthly reports of tithes and offerings. If your name is not among these, we appeal to you, for your own good; become a regular tithe payer and partake of the blessings that follow. Let us combine work with faith and be Saints worthy of him who made such great sacrifice for us.

We depend on your cooperation to place the names of all the members of this district on the tithing records. If convenient pay your tithes and offerings to the solicitor in your branch, otherwise remit direct to the undersigned.

Faithfully,
M. AHLSTROM, Bishop's Agent.

Our Departed Ones

ALLEN.—John Scott Allen was born June 11, 1852, on the bark Clio in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence. Was named after and baptized by John Scott, captain of the boat. He came to Melancthon, Ontario, in 1869, and settled on the place where he died, November 19, 1917. Married Elizabeth Fraser, April 15, 1876. To this union 8 children were born. His wife and all his children survive him. Services at the house by W. D. Ellis. Interment in the Badjenos Cemetery. Mr. Allen did not belong to the church, but was a believer in the doctrine. He was one of the honorable men of the earth, a man of good influence.

EVANS.—William Francis Evans, son of W. J. Evans, born December 15, 1886, at West Nissouri Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. Baptized June, 1894, Ottawa County, Kansas, by Elder Resch. Died November 18, 1917, of Bright's disease, at London, Canada. Leaves invalid wife and 3 daughters. Interment at Woodland Cemetery, November 20, from London church, sermon by John Shields.

UNDERWOOD.—Minnie Esther Underwood was born January 21, 1867, at Winterset, Iowa. Baptized November 1, 1892, by Joshua Carlile. Died November 20, 1917, at Saint John's Hospital, Cheyenne, Wyoming. She leaves husband, 3 brothers, 4 sisters, and other relatives to mourn. Funeral in the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Neola, Iowa, sermon by H. N. Hansen. Interment in Neola Cemetery.

SPANSWICK.—Ruth Genevieve Spanswick of Council Bluffs, Iowa, died October 7, after an illness of five months, with leakage of the heart; aged 15 years and 7 months. Six of the boys from her Religio class acted as pallbearers, and the girls of her Sunday school class were flower girls. There were numerous floral offerings. B. S. Lambkin offered words of consolation to relatives and friends at a private funeral, in compliance of the wishes of the deceased. The patience and faith exercised by this child was an example worthy of imitation.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

AUTUMN LEAVES OFFERS "SPECIAL DOZEN"

[The editors of the Autumn Leaves have the following announcement made up for the January number of that monthly. It was so interesting that we decided to reproduce it entire for those who might possibly miss it otherwise.—EDITORS.]

From the many people we know who sometimes write, we picked out a dozen and asked them to write us a story each for the coming months of the year.

They all responded, some with the stories and some with promises. It was certainly gratifying the way they took hold of the proposition.

Of course we don't intend to limit our stories to just these twelve, for there will be a goodly number of others, written especially for the Autumn Leaves and possessing an air that stories from other pens could not have.

We added a few unusual features to this "Special Dozen" which will prove of much added interest. For instance, we asked each of the twelve to let us have his picture, and include with it a very brief sketch of his life. The big Leaves family ought to be better acquainted, and this will help. Look over the list, and see how many of them you know.

Of course they demurred over this latter—they didn't want their pictures in, but we threatened to take a snapshot when they weren't looking and write the sketch ourselves, so you'll likely get something to identify them by.

Here's the list. It may not run exactly in this order, but likely will:

Holmes J. Davison. Author of "A test of mettle" and other stories. Read his story about "Sandy" in this number, illustrated by himself, with his illuminating life sketch.

Fred W. Smith. Author of "One of the fittest," "The rise of the underdog," and other stories. In the February number we will present "Morgan's rifles," a story of Washington's time.

Miss Jessie Ward. Author of "A call at evening" the big serial to begin later in the year. A school-teacher out west whom you will be glad to meet.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us. This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

One of the dearest thoughts to me is this—a real friend will never get away from me, or try to, or want to. Love does not have to be tethered.—Anna R. Brown.

Vida E. Smith. Author of Young People's History, and many other contributions to the church publications, including some of the songs we love to sing. She sends us a delightful little Easter story, "awfully true in places and in the main," and the title is: "By the grace o' Eleanor's laugh."

Richard J. Lambert. Author of a number of things you may have read in the general publications and one who has story talent, as you'll recognize later.

Miss Florence Burgess. Author of "The other cheek," and correspondent from her home branch in Saint Louis. The christening of her story has not been attended to, but it has much of heart interest in it.

It Would Surprise You to know how many Northern folks are planning—and wisely too—to go South this winter.

The irresistible charm of the balmy sunshiny shores of Florida and the Gulf Coast annually draws hundreds of good people from the winter ridden north.

The coming of the frosty nights and dreary days are unmistakable signs that it's none too early to begin plans so as to get the most out of your trip. Why not let me help you. Get your copy of our new, compact, pocket-size "Southland" folder. It's filled with valuable information, gathered from years of experience in carrying northern folks south. In it you will find answers to many questions you would ask and a lot of other handy-to-have information. You'll be surprised at the wide choice of interesting tours and what a comparatively small amount of money it takes to purchase a ticket covering a perfectly grand and glorious trip. Come in!—

"Delbert." Author of the "effusions" that appear in The Periscope each month and some other things you may have read. He believes he would like to try a story for next fall. After writing up all the rest of us, he ought to find some material for a story. We haven't his promise of a picture yet, but that doesn't matter. We'll try to get it.

Marcella Schenck. Author of "Unto each of us" and other contributions for the young, under the signature of "Marcella." Her story will be about "The Christmas of 1861."

FINE CHANCE FOR DRAFTED MEN

Anyone with an eighth grade education—though of course the better educated the better—can enroll at Graceland and in four and a half months learn radio-telegraphy. (Most of us would say "wireless telegraphy.") Those who are in line for the second or third call should by all means have this work, for it will fit them for much better service in one of the most important branches of service. The course is comprehensive and even includes French for those who want it. Write a card for particulars, to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

ADDITIONS TO ROLL OF HONOR

We have a few late arrivals which we will mention here in connection with the Roll of Honor elsewhere in this issue. Phoenix, Arizona, has an enrollment of 27 and have more than $54 required for the spoke. From Bevier, Missouri, we learn of one school organized October 1, with 6 members which now has $51.50 raised. Central Kansas City has enrollment of 242 and $562.81 raised to date.

Mrs. L. H. Hayes, a sister who has moved to Washington, Pennsylvania, from Barberton, Ohio, would like to hear from any missionary who will visit that place. Let her know when you can come, and she will be glad to provide accommodations. Anyone interested in Religio home department work in that region should also correspond with her. The address is 322 Green Street. She will be there till after the holidays.

The membership of the Independence Stake, which includes these within the city of Independence, Missouri, numbers 3,153, according to the latest report. The membership of the Lamoni Branch at last accounts was 1,779.

SHOULD HAVE A WIDER READING

Reporting the recent ministerial conference of the Massachusetts District, Brother W. A. Sinclair says this, writing to Brother Elbert A. Smith: "Brother Burgess sent us the little booklet, Duties of Branch Officers, (No. 189, 5c each,) containing a digest on priesthood. I think this booklet should be more universally known. The material is good and we were more than pleased to have it to present to the ministry."

ASSISTANT NORMAL SUPERINTENDENT CHANGES ADDRESS

Brother Edward F. Yerrington has changed his address to 315 Pearl Street, Hartford, Connecticut. All teacher training enrollments should be sent to him at that place, as he is the assistant superintendent of the normal department.

Brother F. J. Ebeling has changed his address to Wiloughby, Ohio.

Elder Hubert Case returned to his home in Lamoni from Omaha recently on a short visit, and when he went back to his field, he took along twelve Dollar Libraries. They are a popular seller and everybody is well pleased who gets one—so much so that we usually sell more to the same person, who has found it convenient to give them away.

CORNER STONE LAID AT WALNUT PARK

The Walnut Park Branch in Independence are to have a new church building, 40 by 70 feet. The corner stone was laid, with imposing ceremonies on November 25, by Bishop B. R. McGuire. It is the intention to provide a temporary roof for the basement so services may be held till the building can be completed. The three church books and other similar articles were placed in the corner stone.

GRACELAND LECTURES

From the Lamoni Chronicle we quote the following:

"Graceland College is very glad to be able to announce the following course of lectures to be given at the college and Latter Day Saint church.

"Mr. S. A. Burgess, on Philosophy, the week of December 10-14.

"Bishop Benj. R. McGuire, on the Law of Property, February 25 to March 1.

"Mr. Augustine Dwyer, on Travel and Literature, March 25-29.

"President F. M. Smith, on Relation of Church to Society May 6-10.

"The first of this series will be given next week, a lecture being delivered every morning at the college chapel at 9.10, and on Tuesday and Friday evenings in the church at 7.30. The lecturer will be S. A. Burgess on the subject of philosophy. The general public is invited and is especially urged to take advantage of the Tuesday and Friday evening lectures at the church."

A WELL-SPENT THANKSGIVING

The Pleasant Hill Branch, (at McKenzie, Alabama) held a community fair on Thanksgiving, prizes being offered for the best exhibits of agricultural products. The proceeds went to payment on church debt—we suppose through the Christmas fund. A fine dinner was served to one hundred and twenty, and the receipts were $72.40. One stalk of okra measured twelve and a half feet in height.

Bishop A. Carmichael is out on a trip under the auspices of the Religio Lecture Board. He visits Bevier, Missouri, on the 9th, and goes on to Kansas City Central Branch.

There is a campaign being conducted in Decatur County, Iowa, to establish a war emergency farm bureau. The Saints everywhere should support such movements, for they are wonderfully efficacious in their operation. The seed corn proposition alone, is of sufficient importance this year to pay an agent's yearly salary.

"Sunday night I had a congregation of six hundred people," writes Brother John F. Sheehy, from Jonesport, Maine, where they recently held a record-breaking conference for attendance. Two thirds of this big audience was made up of non-members.

SCRIPTURE TEXT CALENDARS

The Ensign Publishing House is selling a Scripture Text Calendar, in colors, size 9¼ by 16 inches, for 25 cents each. It is based on the International Sunday school lessons, with a scripture text for each day.

The Saints at Bourbon, Missouri, are working on their new church building, which they expect to complete and dedicate by spring.

ONE CLEAR CALL

THE DOUBT

Some have become doubtful and skeptical about the divinity of that which we term "the Latter Day message." They have thought that it is indeed a beautiful philosophy but entirely of human origin. They have concluded that Joseph Smith was not in fact a prophet of God sent to restore the gospel and reestablish the church. They have subscribed to the thought that one church is about as good as another, and that all churches may be included under the generic term, "The church."

THE REFUTATION

Tragic events in their unfolding tell us that these men were absolutely wrong in their conclusions. God did verily raise up the prophet Joseph Smith, even in his boyhood days, and unfold to his vision the mysteries of eternity. Through him he brought to light again the principles of the gospel of Christ. And God did verily establish the church again in the year 1830, and did say of it that it was the only church under heaven with which he was well pleased, speaking of it collectively and not of individual members.

THE AFFIRMATION

The Lord did personally send the first elders forth to preach the principles of faith in God, repentance from evil deeds, baptism for the remission of sins, and the bestowal of the Holy Ghost through the laying on of hands of the elders. With these were associated other doctrines which have been termed "the principles of the gospel," and the Christian graces which Peter so clearly enumerates—including virtue, temperance, and charity.

And the Lord did further bring to the knowledge of his people, and urge upon their attention, the gathering, consecration, equality, and the Lord's storehouse.

Let no one now speak slightly of these doctrines, not even of the old and much preached principles of baptism and repentance, for they all have to do with the regeneration and salvation of man. God did not send the first elders out to preach non-essentials.

ETERNAL TRUTHS

These things are eternal, in the sense that they continue and never change until they have accomplished their work. The phenomenal success of the first elders continued so long as they hewed to the line and preached to the word.

Repentance is the same to-day as when Nathan said to David: "Thou art the man." Baptism is the same as when Jesus came down the banks of Jordan and compelled the unwilling John. The laying on of hands is the same as when Ananias was sent of Jesus to lay hands on Paul that he might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

And we have been expressly assured that the gathering, and the Lord's storehouse, and equality are the same to-day as when God taught them to the first elders.

PROPHECY NOW HISTORY

The Lord did in due time reveal to Joseph Smith the secrets of the then future, as he is said to reveal his secrets to "his servants the prophets." He foretold to him the great Civil War to come upon this land; and told him also that the time would speedily come when peace should be "taken from the earth," and that war should be poured out "upon all nations."

It is true that prophets of old had predicted these, but after "the fathers fell asleep" scoffers came, saying, "Where is the sign of his coming, for all things continue as they were." But here came a prophet, after the world had enjoined the further coming of prophets, and declared that the time had come for these things to be fulfilled. Here was a man with the authority and power of an Elias, declaring set times and making straight the way of the Lord for his second advent.

OTHER FORCES AT WORK

These things are now to an extent history—history that is being written every day in crimson. But we have been assured of late also that God's work is not confined to this visible church alone, but that he has many spiritual forces at work in the world that we know not of. Evidences accumulate that he is working through devout individuals in many churches.

A group of Protestant clergymen of Great Britain has recently issued a most remarkable manifesto. The group includes Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, and Episcopalians. The manifesto is signed by ministers of world renown, including G. Campbell Morgan, until recently pastor of Westminster Chapel, A. C. Dixon, formerly pastor of the Moody Church of Chicago, and F. B. Meyer, secretary of the Free Church Council of England.

A REMARKABLE MANIFESTO

Their manifesto, entitled, "The Significance of the Present Hour," appeared in the London Christian World, and is quoted in American papers. We make the following extracts from the document as it appeared in the Chicago Herald for December 6:

First—That the present crisis points toward the close of the times of the Gentiles.

Second—That the revelation of our Lord may be expected at any moment, when He will be manifested as evidently as to his disciples on the evening of his resurrection.

Third—That the completed church will be translated, to be "forever with the Lord."

Fourth—That Israel will be restored to its own land in unbelief, and be afterward converted by the appearance of Christ on its behalf.

Fifth—That all human schemes of reconstruction must be subsidiary to the second coming of our Lord, because all nations will be subject to his rule.

Sixth—That under the reign of Christ there will be a further great effusion of the Holy Spirit on all flesh.

Seventh—That the truths embodied in this statement are of the utmost practical value in determining Christian character and action with reference to the pressing problems of the hour.

THEIR MESSAGE ANTICIPATED

Perhaps no group of Protestant clergymen ever drafted a document more remarkable and epoch marking. They are devout men. No doubt God has opened their vision to the signs of the times. They do not pose as prophets. Yet their manifesto is prophetic in character. But if their utterances seem remarkable, when coming from such learned men, how much more remarkable that an unlearned youth should have anticipated every point that they make, by at least eighty years, and warned his followers to be prepared for all these things.

Nearly every great principle that we preached to the world in 1830 that was by the world then spurned and rejected has since that time so commended itself to the judgment of thinking men that it has been incorporated into their belief. We need but to enumerate divine healing, the gift of tongues, the return of the Jews, the close of the times of the Gentiles, the second personal advent of Jesus, the end of the world, the Millennial reign.

TO TEACH, NOT TO BE TAUGHT

In view of these facts, how true was the statement made to the first elders, a statement then seemingly so incredible, considering their "ignorance" and the "wisdom of men:"

Ye are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit.

We are commanded to study all good books. We do well to educate ourselves to the limit of our inherent capacity and power of development; but we must remember that the doctrines and truths revealed to us of God are our groundwork, not to be set aside, but to be built upon.

What cause have we to droop our heads or apologize for our message or for the "old fashioned" doctrinal teachings of the first elders. Time vindicates them. They went out to teach and not to be taught, as concerning "the things revealed by the power of the Spirit."

HOLY PLACES DESIGNATED

But there remains yet another work to be done along this line. Because of the things coming upon the earth, the Lord commanded his children to stand in "holy places." He has indicated such a place, as the central place of gathering—with other points of support, known as "stakes of Zion."

There remains yet a work of warning, of preaching the gospel for the last time, of gathering the honest in heart together to meet the Savior. It is a stupendous work. It is a work of gathering together the ravelled cords and binding them into a cable.

THE LAST CLEAR CALL

We may well shrink at the thought of our task. But remember how gloriously God's promises have been fulfilled thus far. Remember how tragic the fulfillment of his warnings. That which remains is as absolutely sure of fulfillment.

It remains then for us to prepare ourselves that we may with power and assurance send forth a last clear call to the children of men, to repent, make themselves clean, and come to Zion that they may assist in the consummation of God's work and enjoy the fulfillment of all the things spoken of by all the holy prophets.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

In every sincere and earnest man's heart God has placed a little niche where the poetic, the spectacular, and the legendary hold full sway.—Willis George Emerson.

THE DAY OF HIS BIRTH

Once more the Christmas season is with us, when we celebrate the coming of the Lord of life to earth. To all of this generation it is a strange Christmas. If newspaper accounts or reports are to be believed, the appropriation for this one year is two thirds of that for all the earlier history of the Government up to this year including its several wars. ($26,300,000,000 expended prior to this year; $19,000,000,000 appropriated this year.)

The result is, a higher cost of living than ever before, and arbitrary restrictions as to the quantity which may be secured by any one family at one time. The issue is grave throughout the world.

For the church, many of those on whom is laid the responsibility for leadership feel that a crisis or time of proving is upon us.

Yet despite this crisis we meet the season with joy and deep thankfulness. This is not alone because man's extremity is God's opportunity, but because we can sense the tremendous power ready to help us, for the sake of righteousness. Our heavenly Father is able to protect us and accomplish his work. It is our privilege to work with him, if we will. In doing so we may find peace to our souls and safety.

So in the midst of turmoil, we lift up our eyes and thank God that in the meridian of time he saw fit to send unto us his Son.

We do not feel to urge greatly a "Merry Christmas," in the sense of hearty pleasure, or bluff merry-making. Rather the time means a deep joy and a peace beyond that, not to be expressed in a feast of good things alone, nor in our gifts one to another. But rather it finds expression in "God so loved the world that he gave his Son," and in "Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace; good will to men."

As we pause to consider that cradle of long ago, we think it must have been of this that Tertullian wrote:

Stand forth, O heart and soul of childhood. Reveal thyself to us more fully. We want thee stark naked, unclothed of all disguises, false tastes, bad habits, partial theories, with the purity of that divinity in thee unshadowed just as thou camest forth into the world, fresh from the hand of the heavenly Father. The norm of thy development is our only sure guide, our pillar of cloud by day and fire by night.

In the presence of the purity of childhood, we desire to put aside the trapping of time and place and be ourself. Pretense has no real place.

We feel that we stand in the presence of the divine, even though it be in no such great sense as the wise men of two millenniums ago, who came and gave him gifts, and paid tribute at his feet.

In that great tragedy and glory of life called motherhood, man finds humility and prayer, if not the primitive and eternal verities. In fatherhood he finds copartnership with God.

It is doubtless something of this causes Doctor G. Stanley Hall to intimate that every true mother feels that which is beneath her heart is akin to the divine, and herself in league with heavenly forces.

That which is true of all mothers was doubtless so in a fuller sense of her who was honored on this great birthday. As Hall expresses it concerning her,

Motherhood beams with a very different light. The bud has blossomed and borne fruit. The tree of knowledge of good and evil, and also the tree of life, have been tasted. The intuitions are larger, the quality of innocence loftier. These two sides of womanhood here blended have evoked love and adoration in the world second only to that which Jesus himself has called forth. Religious sentiment here idealizes woman as she is conceived to have come from the hand of God, and many a Protestant envies his Catholic friends their attitude toward the Blessed Virgin. No one has ever asked whether she knew Egyptian, Chaldean, or even could read or write her own tongue. She cannot be conceived as bemoaning fancied limitations of her sex or wishing to make sex a sect, but she triumphs and glories in her womanhood and has been adored all these ages as its supreme type, more generic, nearer to the race, richer in love, unselfish devotion, and intuition than man, so that the Madonna idea which teaches that it is more holy to be woman than to have achieved eminence in any kind of superiority, should teach our own sex a corresponding lesson. The worship of Mary has been of potent influence in safe-guarding womanhood from the growing danger that it will decline from its orbit, lose just confidence and due pride in its sex as such, till in lapsing toward mannish ways its original divinity becomes clouded.

Sometimes in the painted representations of that period of his life, the mother is made too dominant, the child subordinate. We should never forget that the great fact has been and is that He was born into the world.

If we consider it historically, he was indeed and is the light of the world. The one for whom all those who came before him longed with earnest prayer, the one to whom those who have come since him look back for salvation. There may have been other types handed down by traditions, but he was the great reality in the highest philosophic sense—the archetype and Son of God.

Other mortals galore had thought themselves divine, but with no such witness and with no such plenary assurance. Thus the great affirmation was made and sealed. Jesus knew himself for what he was, and accepted himself as veritable man-God. God did not merely come to consciousness in him, but was his own ipsissimal noumenal self, and what a postulate!—G. Stanley Hall.

Consider that simple picture, the babe in the manger, the adoring wise men, the angels with their "Peace on earth, good will to all men," and the shepherds in silent adoration. He was born in a stable, yet of the royal line of David, and the very Son of God. He was at once man, yet also very God of very God.

With his mission complete, he returned to the Father and asked only "the glory I had with thee before the world was." Too often mankind takes it all for granted and fails to consider the great reality. Few indeed have ever sensed how much more this is than the birth of a man-child. The soul of man demands and requires such a demonstration of the possible union of man with God. So great was humanity's need that some students have intimated, that had not Jesus come when he did, man would have had to create such a personality or have gone down to ruin.

But the only Begotten of the Father seeing man's dire need, laid aside his great glory and came to save. In order to do so to the uttermost he came as a babe in arms and grew as a man. No wonder men who were wise came and worshiped and angel hosts sang forth,

"Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace; good will to men."

TO THE STUDENTS OF THE RADIO TRANSMISSION

December 15, 1917.

I have received from the Radio Inspector at Chicago the following letter:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE (Navigation Service.)
"Office of Radio Inspector, No. 629 Federal Building.

"CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, December 5, 1917.

"Mr. Frederick M. Smith, President, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Independence, Missouri.

"Dear Sir: I am informed that a radio course is offered to the young men of your church and inasmuch as an examination for commercial radio operator's license will probably be held at Kansas City sometime early in the year, there may be some who would desire to participate in the same, in which case I would appreciate your calling their attention to this examination.

"Applicants should forward their names to this office as soon as possible in order that they can be notified of the exact date and place.

"Thanking you for your courtesy in this matter, I am

"Respectfully, (Signed)
"ROBERT E. EARLE, Radio Inspector."

President Briggs had previously brought this matter to our attention, and we present it to our young men of military age for consideration. The second draft is close, and many of our young men are sure to be called to the colors. Graceland is offering a course in wireless which will in one semester put an ordinarily bright young man in condition to accept position as wireless operator. These positions are of great service to the country, and thousands of wireless operators are needed. Our young men should consider the advisability of taking this course as a preparation for serving our country in an important line of work.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

The radio course takes four and a half months. By enrolling now for work beginning January 2, the course can be completed before summer.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Funeral of Queen Liliuokalani

We have received a copy of The Pacific Commercial Advertiser from Elder Ed Miller, containing a full description of the funeral rites of Hawaii's late queen. She was deposed in 1898 by the United States Government and only at the opening of this war would she run up the American Stars and Stripes over her residence. We note the many pages of description, that full royal honor was paid her, the same as if she had died while reigning queen. President Wilson sent a wreath and condolences and the Government of the United States paid her full and fair recognition. Still in the place of honor there was left the American Eagle, where once had been the crown in the throne room.

British Take Jerusalem

After the Mohammedans have held the city of Jerusalem for over twelve hundred years, for the first time within that period the Christian nations have accomplished the work of the Crusades, and have taken Jerusalem. December 10, 1917, will no doubt for this reason take its place in sentimental history. We are informed that the city has no value at present from a military standpoint. It has, however, a tremendous advantage from a religious point of view. For nearly seven hundred years the Ottoman Turks have held undisputed control. For fifteen years, the emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, Frederick II, held it for a short time. But outside of that for over twelve hundred years it has been held by the Turks. From the days of Joshua, Jerusalem has been a prize city of half the nations of the world. It has been held by the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Greeks, Romans, Persians, Arabs, and Turks. Now at last it is held by the descendants of Richard, the lion-hearted. That which is of most interest is the declaration made in England, their intention to turn it over for the establishment of a Jewish State.

It makes considerable difference whether a man talks bigger than he is, or is bigger than he talks.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES—Part 10

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE QUAKERS OR FRIENDS

This society of worshipers had its formal rise in England some time in the seventeenth century, through the personal influence of George Fox with others, who became dissatisfied with the forms of religious worship then known to them, and because of this dissatisfaction withdrew from communion with every visible church, and sought in a quiet and secret way to come into communion with God through the Holy Spirit.

It is believed by them that Christianity had become corrupted and spiritual darkness abounded from the seventh to the sixteenth centuries, when there was no church of Christ on the earth. About the latter date some degree of spiritual light came to a few devout men and women who led the reformation, which was but the foreshadowing of a revival of primitive Christianity, now represented by this people.

Because of their peculiar views, so different from the prevailing religions existing at the time of their rise, and the zeal and integrity with which they maintained these views, they met with considerable persecution. The name "Quakers," is but an appellation attached to this society through ridicule, but now acknowledged by them as not an ignoble title, but the name by which they desire to be known is that of "Friends."

They refuse to acknowledge the saving efficacy of any outward ordinances, and deny that even baptism or the Lord's supper were instituted by Christ to be used in the church as sacraments. With them the baptism of the Holy Ghost is Christ's baptism, and the only Christian baptism. Repentance toward God and faith in his supreme directing care is requisite to salvation.

The Scriptures are considered only secondary in authority in directing in the way of duty, and the Spirit is primary in authority, but it will not direct contrary to the word of God contained in the Bible. The Bible is considered somewhat imperfect through errors that have crept in through translators and transcribers, but the Spirit is errorless in its directing, hence the members of Christ should wholly depend upon its direction.

The ministry must have a direct call, but there needs to be no ordination or setting apart with the laying on of hands to qualify and fully authorize one for the work of God in an official way. Both males and females are called, and each are to occupy with equal distinction, according as God shall by his Spirit qualify them to minister. The receiving of hire for preaching is strictly forbidden, but the minister is to be supplied out of funds voluntarily contributed, and they deny that tithing is a gospel requirement.

The use of the organ is not looked upon with favor as a part of divine worship and no visible ordinances or set forms of worship are favored, not even a set time to sing, pray or preach, but all are to be led in what is done by the Spirit.

Members of the church are forbidden to retain membership in any oath bound society, to go to war, either in offensive or defensive warfare, to take any form of oath, and only to obey civil magistrates so far as it will not require them to conform to that forbidden by their society.

Marriage is considered a sacred covenant, and all cases of separation are dealt with as transgression, each individual case being considered upon its merits.

With these prefatory statements relative to their belief and history I submit extracts from their own works upon separate topics, believing this will be the more satisfactory to all.

GOD

We believe in one only wise, omnipotent, and eternal God, the Creator and upholder of all things visible and invisible, as revealed unto us in Holy Scripture, in the manifestations of Father, Son and Holy Ghost; and that he directs and governs the universe with unlimited power and infinite wisdom, and that he is the only legitimate object of worship.—The Discipline of Iowa, of 1883, p. 17.

JESUS CHRIST

We do accept and believe, with the inspired prophetic, evangelic, and apostolic record which God has given of his well-beloved Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. He was conceived by the power of the Highest, and born of the Virgin Mary, in Bethlehem of Judea (Luke 1: 35; 2: 7). We believe on him as the Son of God, true God and perfect man, one and inseparable, a union of the Godhead and manhood, ordained by the Almighty Father, and consummated in the person of Jesus Christ.—The Discipline, pp. 17, 18.

He purchased the church with his blood (Acts 20: 28). Christians are justified through faith in his blood, (Romans 5: 9). We have redemption and forgiveness of sins through his blood.—Ibid., p. 19.

For the infinite and most wise God, who is the foundation, root, and spring of all operations, hath wrought all things by his eternal word and Son. This is that Word that was in the beginning with God, and was God, by whom all things were made. . . . This is that Jesus Christ, by whom God created all things, by whom and for whom all things were created. . . .

Hence he is fitly called, "The Mediator betwixt God and man"; for having been with God from all eternity, being himself God, and also in time partaking of the nature of man, through him is the goodness and love of God conveyed to mankind, and by him again man receiveth and partaketh of these mercies.—Barclay's Apology, p. 41.

ATONEMENT

We firmly believe it was necessary that Christ should come, that by his death and sufferings he might offer up himself a sacrifice to God for our sins in his own body on the tree; so we believe that the remission of sins which any partake of, is only in and by virtue of that most satisfactory sacrifice, and not otherwise.—Barclay's Apology, p. 155.

For it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul.—The Discipline, p. 19.

HOLY GHOST

We believe that the Holy Spirit calls, convicts, reproveth, warns and condemns the sinner; and that he leads, teaches, comforts and encourages the Christian; and those, who with full purpose of heart consecrate themselves to God, and obey the teachings of the Lord Jesus, and follow the leadings of the Holy Spirit, he will sanctify by virtue of the atoning sacrifice of the Son of God; while the Holy Spirit convicts and lighteth the sinner, he dwells only in the righteous.—The Discipline, p. 22.

Christians now are to be led inwardly and immediately by the Spirit of God, even in the same manner, though it befall not many to be led in the same measure, as the saints were of o'd. . . .

If the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, and Spirit of truth, be all one with the Scriptures, then it will follow that the scriptures are of God, seeing it is true that the Holy Ghost is of God. . . .

That this Spirit is inward, in my opinion needs no interpretation or commentary,—“He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.” This indwelling of the Spirit in the saints, as it is a most needful thing to be known and believed, so it is as positively asserted in the Scriptures, as anything else can be. . . .

For but take away the Spirit, and Christianity remains no more Christianity than the dead carcass of a man when the soul and spirit are departed, remains man. . . .

It is by this Spirit that both wisdom and knowledge, and faith and miracles, and tongues and prophecies are obtained. (1 Corinthians 12: 8-10.) It is by this Spirit that we are all baptized into one body, verse 13. In short, what thing relating to the salvation of the soul, and to the life of the Christian, is rightly performed, or effectually obtained without it?—Barclay's Apology, pp. 54-59.

REVELATION

Seeing no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son reveals him (Matthew 11: 22), and seeing the revelation of the Son is in and by the Spirit; therefore the testimony of the Spirit is that alone by which the true knowledge of God hath been, is, and can be revealed; . . . so by the revelation of the same Spirit, he hath manifested himself all along unto the sons of men, both patriarchs, prophets, and apostles, which revelations of God, by the Spirit, whether by outward voices and appearances, dreams, or inward objective manifestations in the heart, were of old the formal object of their faith, and remain yet so to be; since the object of the saints' faith is the small in all ages, though set forth under divers administrations. Moreover, these divine inward revelations, which we make absolutely necessary for the building up of true faith, neither do nor can ever contradict the outward testimony of the Scriptures, or right and sound reason. Yet from hence it will not follow, that these divine revelations are to be subjected to the examination either of the outward testimony of the Scriptures, or of the natural reason of man, as to a more noble or certain rule or touchstone.—Barclay's Apology, pp. 17, 18.

We distinguish betwixt the revelation of the new gospel, and new doctrines, and a new revelation of the good old gospel and doctrines; the last we plead for but the first we utterly deny.—Ibid., p. 105.

As to these words (Revelation 22: 8), That “if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book”; I desire they will show me how it relates to anything else than to that particular prophecy. It saith no. Now the canon of Scripture is filled up, no more is to write more from the Spirit; yea, do not all confess that there have been prophecies and true prophets since? The Papists deny it not. And do not the Protestants affirm that John Huss prophesied of the Reformation? . . . So that, though we would extend that of the revelation beyond the particular prophecy of that book, it cannot be understood but of a new gospel, or new doctrines, or of restraining man's spirit that he mix not his human words with the divine; and not of a new revelation of the old, as we have said before.—Ibid., pp. 107, 108.

BIBLE OR SCRIPTURES

From these revelations of the Spirit of God to the saints, have proceeded the scriptures of truth. . . . Because they are only a declaration of the fountain, and not the fountain itself, therefore they are not to be esteemed the principal ground of all truth and knowledge, nor yet the adequate primary rule of faith and manners. . . . They are and may be esteemed a secondary rule, subordinate to the Spirit, from which they have all their excellency and certainty.—Barclay's Apology, pp. 18, 19.

That which is given to Christians for a rule and guide, must needs be so full, that it may clearly and distinctly guide and order them in all things and occurrences that may fall out.

But in that there are numberless things with regard to their circumstances, which particular Christians may be concerned in, for which there can be no particular rule had in the scriptures; therefore, the scriptures cannot be a rule to them.—Ibid., p. 88.

If it should please God to bring to us any of those books, which by the injury of time are lost, which are mentioned in the Scriptures, as the Prophecy of Enoch; the Book of Nathan; etc., or the Third Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians; I see no reason why we ought not to receive them, and place them with the rest.—Ibid., p. 106.

It has ever been, and still is the belief of the Society of Friends that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments were given by the inspiration of God; that, therefore, the declarations contained in them rest on the authority of God himself, and there can be no appeal from them to any authority whatsoever; that they are able to make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus, being the appointed means of making known to us the blessed truths of Christianity.—The Discipline, pp. 25, 26.

OFFICERS AND AUTHORITY

As by this gift, or light of God, all true knowledge in things spiritual is received and revealed; so by the same, as it is manifested and received in the heart by the strength and power thereof, every true Christian minister of the gospel is ordained, prepared and supplied in the work of the ministry. . . .

Moreover, those who have this authority may and ought to preach the gospel, though without human commission or literature; as on the other hand those who want the authority of this divine gift, however learned or authorized by the commissions of men and churches, are to be esteemed but as deceivers, and not true ministers of the gospel. Also, who have received this holy and unspotted gift, as they have freely received, so are they freely to give, without hire or bargaining, far less to use it as a trade to get money with.—Barclay's Apology, p. 24.

And when they wait upon God, and to worship and adore him, then such as the Spirit sets apart for the ministry, by his divine power and influence opening their mouths, and giving them to exhort, reprove and instruct with virtue and power, these are thus ordained of God, and admitted into the ministry, and their brethren cannot but hear them, and receive them, and also honor them for their work's sake.—Ibid., p. 224.

To such ministers we think the outward ceremony of ordination or laying on of hands not necessary.—Ibid., p. 312.

So that we conclude that ministers, pastors, or teachers, do comprehend all, and that the office is but one, and, therefore, in that respect we judge there ought to be no precedency among them.—Ibid., p. 338.

Seeing male and female are one in Christ Jesus, and that he gives his Spirit no less to one than the other, when God moveth by his Spirit in a woman we judge it no ways unlawful for her to preach in the assemblies of God's people.—Ibid., p. 342.

No one should be acknowledged or retained in the position of minister or elder among us who continues to participate in, or advocate the necessity of the outward rite of baptism or the Lord's supper.—Discipline, p. 48.

When any one of our members has frequently spoken as a minister, and the Preparative Meeting of Ministry or Oversight is united in the belief that a gift in the ministry has been conferred, and that it is sufficiently developed to be acknowledged by the church it should, with the approbation of the quarterly meeting of ministry and oversight, make such a proposition to the monthly meeting which will, if it unites therewith, record such a Friend a minister of the gospel.—Ibid., p. 44.

CHURCH

The true name and title of a Christian, by which he hath right to the heavenly inheritance, and is member of Jesus Christ, is inward righteousness and holiness, and the mind redeemed from the vanities, lusts, and iniquities of this world; and a gathering or company made up of such members, makes a church.—Barclay's Apology, p. 303.

The church is defined to be the kingdom of the dear Son of God, into which the Saints are translated, being delivered from the power of darkness. It is called the body of Christ.—Ibid., p. 305.

Christ saith, that the kingdom of God was in the very Pharisees (Luke 17: 20, 21), who did oppose and resist him, and were justly accounted as serpents, and a generation of vipers.—Ibid., p. 190.

SALVATION

It is by this light, seed or grace, that God works the salvation of all men, and many come to partake of the benefits of Christ's death, and salvation purchased by him. By the inward and effectual operation of which, as many heathens have come to be partakers of the promises, who were not of the seed of Abraham after the flesh, so may some now, to whom God hath rendered the knowledge of the history impossible, come to be saved by Christ.—Barclay's Apology, p. 188.

DOCTRINE OR GOSPEL

We do firmly believe that there is no other gospel or doctrine to be preached, but that which was delivered by the gospel.—Barclay's Apology, p. 105.

Though the outward declaration of the gospel be taken sometimes for the gospel; yet it is but figuratively, and by a metonymy. For to speak properly, the gospel is this inward power and life which preacheth glad tidings in the hearts of all men.—Ibid., p. 182.

BAPTISM

This "one baptism" which is the baptism of Christ, is not a washing with, or dipping in water, but a being baptized by the Spirit.—Barclay's Apology, p. 427.

The new covenant or gospel dispensation is spiritual, standing not in meat and drink, but in righteous peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, and confirmed us in believing that baptism with water, and the communion of bread and wine were not commanded by our Lord as ordinances in the church.—Discipline, p. 28.

COMMUNION AND ANOINTING THE SICK

The communion of the body and blood of Christ is inward and spiritual, which is the participation of his flesh and blood, . . . of which things the breaking of bread by Christ with his disciples was a figure, which they even used in the church for a time, who had received the substance for the cause of the weak; even as . . . "washing one another's feet," and the anointing of the sick with oil; . . . seeing they are all but the shadow of better things, they cease in such as have obtained the substance.—Barclay's Apology, p. 26.

RESURRECTION

And believing that the spirits of all men are immortal, and cannot die except in the sense of separation and alienation from God, we believe that when the resurrection of the dead is spoken of in the Bible, it means the resurrection of the body, changed from natural to spiritual.—Discipline, p. 21.

JUDGMENT

And we believe that, in the all-wise counsel of the Almighty Father in heaven, we receive the remission of sins that are judgment, over which the blessed and holy Jesus will preside.—Discipline, p. 22.

REMISSION OF SINS

We believe that through the goodness and mercy of our Father in heaven, we receive the remission of sins that are past by repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.—Discipline, p. 19.

APOSTASY

For the particular church of Christ, gathered in the apostles' days, soon after beginning to decay as to the inward life, came to be overgrown with several errors, and the hearts of the professors of Christianity to be leavened with the old spirit and conversation of the world. . . .

There was none so vile, none so wicked, none so profane, who became not a member of the church. And the teachers and pastors thereof becoming the companion of princes, and so being enriched by their benevolence and getting vast treasures and estates, became puffed up, and; as it were drunken with the pomp and glory of this world: and so marshaled themselves in manifold orders and degrees, not without innumerable contests, and altercations who should have the presidency. So the virtue, life, substance and kernel of the Christian religion came to be lost, and nothing remained but a shadow and image; . . . so that thus was no more to be accounted the Christian religion, and Christian religion, and Christian Church, notwithstanding the outward profession, than the dead body of a man, is to be accounted a living man; which however cunningly embalmed and adorned with ever so much gold or silver, or most precious stones, or sweet ointments, is but a dead body still, without sense, life, or motion.—Barclay's Apology, p. 291.

RESTORATION

The Lord God, who as he seeth meet doth communicate and make known to man the more full, evident, and perfect knowledge of his everlasting truth, hath been pleased to reserve the more full discovery of this glorious and evangelical dispensation to this our age.—Barclay's Apology, p. 145.

In our day, God hath raised up witnesses for himself, as he did fishermen of old.—Ibid., p. 330.

Wherefore, the time of God being come, wherein by Jesus Christ he hath been pleased to restore the true spiritual worship, . . . be come to an end, we find that Jesus Christ, the author of the Christian religion, prescribes no set form of worship to his children, under the more pure administration of the new covenant, save that he only tells them, that the worship now to be performed is spiritual, and in the Spirit.—Ibid., pp. 378-9.

We accuse, and are ready from the scriptures to prove the Protestants guilty of gross errors, and needing reformation, as well as did and do the Paptists.—Ibid., p. 309.

MIRACLES

We need not miracles, because we preach no new gospel, but that which is already confirmed by all the miracles of Christ and the apostles.—Barclay's Apology, p. 310.

FALSE PROPHETS

Certainly, if a man make a bargain to preach to people for so much a year, so as to refuse unless he have it, . . . it cannot be denied that such a one preacheth for hire, and so looks for his gain from his quarter, yea, and prepares war against such as put not into his mouth; but this is the particular special mark of a false prophet and an hireling, and therefore can in no ways belong to a true minister of Christ.—Barclay's Apology, p. 347.

DEVIL

We believe in the existence of an evil agent distinct from man, known as the Devil, or Satan, by whom our first parents were turned away from their uprightness, whom our Savior met and successfully resisted in the wilderness of Judea.—Discipline, p. 25.

MARRIAGE

The holy covenant of marriage was ordained by our All-wise and Beneficent Creator, and is, therefore, honorable, in all.

Notwithstanding genuine conjugal union is of the Lord, yet it is reasonable and right that all marriages should be legally consummated before witnesses in a solemn manner, recognizing it as a divine ordinance.—Discipline, pp. 71, 73.

The Friends also advise all to live within their income, and pay all their debts on penalty of being dealt with as transgressors. They believe it possible to attain to perfection, but that progress is yet to continue, and a possibility of falling at any time.

One thing we must never forget, namely: that the infinitely most important work for us is the humane education of the millions who are soon to come on the stage of action.—George T. Angell.

REVELATION FROM GOD

[Elder James E. Yates is alive to the work in Phoenix, Arizona, and secures the publication of many interesting church notices and summaries of his sermons. The following sermon synopsis was published in the Arizona Republican, November 5.]

Before there can possibly be any revelation of any kind, two conditions must exist.

First, a conscious intelligence capable of comprehending and of acquiring knowledge; and second, a field of undiscovered truth open for revelation or discovery.

Where these two are, a third must be, God. For a conscious intelligent creature such as man is could not be as the result of chance or of accident; but evidently must exist as the result of a master design.

The designer is called God.

So, in a study of the principle of revelation we have these factors to reckon with, man possessing limited learning, God having superior knowledge, and a vast field of truth undiscovered to man.

The principle of revelation is so closely related to that of discovery that it is scarcely possible to draw a dividing line and to say this knowledge comes by discovery, and this comes by revelation.

Every truth, be it great or small, which is unfolded to the mind comes by the laborious process of discovery and is revelation.

By means of many bumps and some pain a child discovers that to fall upon rocks or to bump his nose upon the corner of the door jam is unpleasant, and that fire is dangerous. This is a revelation to him.

The mere announcement of a certain truth or a statement of the same by one who knows, may persuade to belief, but it is neither a discovery nor a revelation to the believer.

A personage having every appearance of a heavenly messenger might stand before me and announce that the moon is inhabited, and I might have some reason to believe his words, but that would not be a revelation to me until by some more compelling means I were made conscious that such was the fact.

If God himself should proclaim some of the greatest mysteries of the universe with a trumpet in the ears of all living it would not be a revelation to the thinking machinery of a pig; neither would such a proclamation of the deepest mysteries of God be a revelation to any man if his qualities of mind were not better fitted to comprehend such things by being far superior to the brute creation.

The mother tells her child that a burn will be painful, but that fact is not revealed to him until he feels it. The feeling is obtained by discovery and constitutes a revelation.

Personal effort is a prerequisite to every discovery, and revelation from God himself is not possible to the mind, making no effort to discover and to know the truth; therefore discovery and revelation are almost identical.

A school-teacher cannot cause a primary class to know the great things pertaining to the higher branches of learning by stating those facts to them, even though they should be stated ever so clearly. Why? Because it is impossible for the learned to impart their learning to others contrary to the natural God-given laws governing in those things.

Moreover, when a student pursuing any branch of science or learning delves into the mysteries of the unknown to him, and returns with knowledge, I shall affirm that his schoolroom is as holy a sanctuary as any shrine of worship ever erected by human hands, and that the things there discovered to his mind are revelations from God.

They are of God because man is of God, truth is of God and is discoverable only by the laws of God.

That some learned men fail to honor him as God, is no evidence that they have not received revelation from him, but rather that as yet, what they have received is lamentably limited in some very important branches.

But this should not detract from our appreciation of the kind and quality of knowledge which such men have discovered, and which they do promote in the world.

Let it be remembered by everyone, who would seek a fuller revelation of the divine, that such cannot come to the mind unfitted to receive.

God is represented to us as desiring that all mankind shall be perfected in knowledge and thus be saved.

Note the language of the text: This is life eternal, that they know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

But to give us more of the revelation of the almighty than our capacity to receive, would be to crush us.

The purpose of God's requirement that man be obedient to the primary principles of the doctrine of Christ is that by this tutelage our capacity for the higher learning and for the greater revelation may be enlarged. And there is no other way to do it.

Let our studies be to know God in his majesty and to understand more of the grandeur of his works and power. Let no man be discouraged in his search for God merely because some revelation claimed to be of him appears faulty and defective, for man is still far from perfect and the perfection of God cannot in the very nature of things, be reflected through an imperfect instrument.

Divine revelation to man increases with his every approach to God-likeness. Ignorance and misery increases with every departure therefrom.

Obedience to gospel law connects man with the divine dynamo of power unto eternal salvation.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SURVIVAL AFTER DEATH

The Most Striking Evidence Yet Produced

[The following from the Current Opinion for October is characterized as set forth in the above heading, though it may be less striking to many of our readers than some of their personal experiences.—EDITORS.]

A remarkable "cross-correspondence," alleged by the members of the Society for Psychical Research to be the most convincing testimony yet advanced from any quarter of the continuation of conscious personality after death, is given in the proceedings of this famed organization. The alleged communicators (the late Doctor Verrall and the late Professor Butcher) were in this life, says the London Westminster Gazette, learned and brilliant scholars, and though, it adds, on the hypothesis accepted by Mr. Gerald Balfour, a distinguished authority, the method chosen by the departed is the one best calculated to establish their identity, it is difficult to follow and still more difficult to explain clearly to those who are not acquainted with the recent developments of psychical research. Our London contemporary therefore gives a brief explanation for the benefit of those who are not familiar with the method of cross-correspondence.

The theory is that the communicators are trying to construct a kind of literary jigsaw puzzle by giving one portion to one automatist and another to a second automatist, each being unintelligible by itself but becoming ultimately intelligible when combined with the other. The method is designed to exclude telepathy from the living—since, presumably, no living intelligence could be in possession of the completed design—and also to prevent either the conscious or subconscious mind of the automatist from evolving a complete alleged communication and palming it off as a communication from the dead.

If the test conditions are observed, which means especially if neither of the automatists knows until the end what communications have been made to the other, neither can separately complete the design. The automatists write both in the trance state and in the normal state, and in the trance state they dictate. In both states they are alleged not to know consciously what they are writing or dictating. The completed design should be of such a character as to bear strong evidence of the identity of the communicators.

With this preliminary explanation, observes the well-informed writer in The Westminster Gazette, we can get to the facts:

"The automatists in the present case are 'Mrs. Willett' (a lady now living who for this purpose bears that name) and the late Mrs. Verrall. The puzzle is spread out over six years. On August 26, 1910, Mrs. Willett gets the first fragment: 'Dionysius's Ear—the lobe.' That is easily interpreted by Mr. Gerald Balfour as a reference to the grotto in one of the stone quarries at Syracuse where the Athenian prisoners were set to work after the failure of the Syracusan expedition. It is actually called 'L'Orecchio di Dionisio' because it has the qualities of a whispering gallery, and the elder Dionysius, who also used it as a prison, was supposed to listen in it to what his prisoners were saying. The allusion seemed to lead nowhere, and it dropped for four years. Then on January 10, 1914, it was revived in another alleged communication to Mrs. Willett, and there were added perplexing references to Euripides and Philemon, and an 'ear-ly' pipe, which looked like and apparently was an abominable pun. The clew to Philemon and Euripides was discovered without much difficulty in 'Aristophanes's Apology,' and is clearly an allusion to the story which Balauston tells Philemon that she sent the original tablets of Euripides's Hercules Furens to Dionysius, who, more appreciative than the Athenians, hung them up in the Temple of Apollo. The object of this is apparently to identify the Dionysius referred to and to prepare the way for what followed."

The next communication was to Mrs. Willett on February 28. In this there are all manner of allusions, which to those who knew them seem to identify the alleged communicators as the late Professor Butcher and the late Dr. Verrall. This script is closely packed with roundabout literary allusions, but the previous fragments are repeated, and there is added to them references to the stories of Polyphemus and Ulysses and Acis and Galatea.

In the next script (March 2) the material is added to by references to Aristotle, a zither, satires, jealousy. It is surmised that jealousy is the motive of some story or piece of literature which is in the mind of the communicators. So far the principal pieces in the puzzle may be summarized:

"The Ear of Dionysius,

"The stone quarries of Syracuse in which prisoners were confined.

"The story of Polyphemus and Ulysses.

"The story of Acis and Galatea.

"Jealousy.

"Music and the sound of a musical instrument.

"Something to be found in Aristotle's Poetics.

"Satire."

For a year and a half that was all, and the investigators tried in vain to piece the fragments together. Then on August 2, 1915, the clew came in a communication to Mrs. Verrall, who, we are assured, knew nothing about the communications to Mrs. Willett. In her script occurred these words:

"'Cythera.' 'Philox.' He labored in the stone quarries and drew upon the earlier writer for material for his satire. Jealousy."

Even an accomplished scholar might, as Mr. Balfour says, have been pardoned for not understanding the reference. Who, indeed, has ever heard of Philoxenus of Cythera? A very little research discovered him. He was a writer of dithyrambs, a species of poetry combining music (the zither) with verse, a native of Cythera, who spent some time at the Court of Dionysius, the Tyrant of Syracuse. He ultimately quarreled with his patron, who sent him to prison in the stone quarries (The "Ear of Dionysius"). The story is that his patron, who also thought himself a poet, was jealous of him, because he not only refused to praise the tyrant's poems, but, when asked to revise one of them, bluntly refused, and said that the best way to correct it would be to draw a black line through the whole of it.

But why are Homer and Galatea dragged in? The answer is found in the "Encyclopædia Britannica":

"The masterpiece of Philoxenus was the Cyclops, a pastoral burlesque on the love of the Cyclops for the fair Galatea, written to avenge himself upon Dionysius, who was wholly or partially blind of one eye."

Why, again, is Aristotle dragged in? The answer is that in the second chapter of the Poetics (upon which Professor Butcher wrote a standard book) the Cyclops of Philoxenus is mentioned as an example of the poetry which aims at making men worse than they are, i. e., satirical poetry. It only remains to add that there was subsequently found among Dr. Verrall's books a presentation copy of a learned work by an American scholar on the Greek Melic Poets, which deals, among others, with Philoxenus. This Dr. Verrall is known to have used in his lectures.

Here, says The Westminster Gazette, we should be tempted to stop, and leave our readers to form their own judgment, or, still better, to get Mr. Balfour's paper and study in extenso the complete story of which this is a bald summary.

"Let us say boldly, that if all the links are made good, we see no escape from Mr. Balfour's conclusion that 'the communications have their source in some intelligence or intelligences not in the body.' The next step—that the communications are from the disembodied spirits of those known in life as A. W. Verrall and S. H. Butcher—depends on cumulative evidence about which our judgment is of little value, and we can only record Mr. Balfour's opinion that 'those who have got so far as to ascribe the communications to intelligences not in the body are not likely to find any difficulty in the personal identity claimed for the communicators. To do so would be to strain at a gnat after swallowing a camel.'

"Everything, then, depends on the essential links having been made good under test conditions. Here the all-important point is the final communication to Mrs. Verrall. The rest is merely the setting of the conundrum to which Mrs. Verrall's script supplies the solution. We may think it improbable that Mrs. Willett, not being a classical scholar, could have planned the riddle and evolved this strange classical lore from either her conscious or subconscious self, but the negative is hard to prove. If, however, Mrs. Verrall, without knowing the conundrum, produced the solution, the most incredulous could not ascribe it to coincidence. If, on the other hand, some knowledge reached her of Mrs. Willett's communications during the year and a half between the last of these and her own script of August 2, 1915, the mystery would be explained. Mr. Balfour is positive that Mrs. Verrall knew nothing of the previous communications until she had received her own, and he tells us explicitly that they were known only to the six members of the 'group' engaged in the investigation. He tells us, further, that Mrs. Verrall knew nothing of Philoxenus until the mention of 'Philox' in her script led her to look him up in the Dictionary of Biography and Mythology—which excludes the last remaining hypothesis, viz., that she dredged the previous communications telepathically from Mrs. Willett's mind and then found the solution. The only weak link in the chain is unhappily that Mrs. Verrall is no longer present to give evidence on her behalf, but, assuming that Mr. Balfour has made no mistake in reciting the facts, we cannot challenge his conclusion that 'the communications have their source in some intelligence or intelligences not in the body.'"

PALESTINE FOR THE JEWS

[The following is from The American Hebrew for October 5, 1917. It is an interview with Commander Josiah Wedgwood, M. P., the distinguished English statesman, written by M. J. Woddis, the London correspondent of The American Hebrew.—EDITORS.]

Day by day the question of creating a Jewish State in Palestine is becoming more a matter of "practical politics" than some people would imagine. And the surprising thing of all this growing interest is that Gentiles even more so than Jews are frankly and freely discussing this topic on the platform and in the press, in the parks and the open spaces, in the trade unions and in the churches.

And now that the British Army is threatening the very gates of Gaza, it seems more than likely that Palestine will pass away forever from the dominion of the Turk. With this wonderful possibility rising in my mind of the Jew taking the rightful station once again among the nations of the world, I betake myself to the House of Commons to procure the views of Commander Josiah Wedgwood, on this burning topic. He recently issued his single minority report on the Mesopotamia Commission to which, owing to his special knowledge, he was selected by a special committee of the whole House.

It was not long after I had handed in my card to the constable-usher that I saw the beaming and breezy commander approaching towards me down the long, decorated passage of the Commons. Without any fuss the gallant commander led me, arm-in-arm, towards the M. P.'s Club Room, and there, in soft, damask, leather cushioned arm-chairs we chatted on . . . the far-flung Jewish problem and the means of its probable solution.

Sitting near us were the Right Honorable Neil Primrose, M. P., Mr. John Burnes, M. P. (ex-cabinet minister), Mr. Ramsey Macdonald, M. P., the famous labor leader, Mr. Henderson (the ex-minister of the war cabinet), and Mr. Philip Snowden, M. P., the pacifist.

"So you want me to give my views to the Jews in America on a Jewish Palestine?" Commander Wedgwood began. . . . "Well, I must confess I feel somewhat embarrassed. Fancy asking an Englishman to speak on a topic to Jews, on a topic which vitally concerns themselves. The position ought rather to be reversed. You Jews ought to come to us and state your views and prospects of a settlement of the Jewish problem, so that we might help you to carry out your schemes.

"In speaking to Jews I cannot help feeling somewhat like a little schoolboy who is addressing the headmasters of the world for the Jews are the oldest, the most civilized and the most intellectual people that I know. And if I am to speak to you about Palestine there can be no other connection in the mind of Gentile or—even Jew, that Palestine, which has been Jewish before, will become Jewish once again.

"This reminds me. The other day I had a curious reception in the club room. Opposite this table several Jewish M. P.'s sat. And when I made my appearance, I noticed that the Jewish M. P.'s immediately got up, looked me askance, and beat a hasty retreat. I must say that for the moment I felt surprised and annoyed. But after a moment's reflection, I began to understand the reason for the strange behavior of these Jewish M. P.'s. As you know, owing to the correspondence which I recently initiated in the Manchester Guardian, appealing for a settlement of the Jewish question by the establishment of a Jewish State in Palestine, I was persuaded to address several big, influential Zionist meetings, both in London and in New Castle (the constituency I represent in Parliament). Well, at these meetings I spoke my mind on what I thought of the attitude of the Jewish M. P.'s toward Jewish politics. I complained of their lack of racial sympathy and loyalty and of their utter moral cowardice to people. Have Jews lost their self-respect? Or is it timidity or humility? Or is their silence to be taken as a sign of diplomatic caution? Now, the Jews have gained nothing by the game of silence and secrecy for the Jews, so I think it is about time they tried a change.

POTENTIALITIES OF AMERICAN JEW

"These and similar views I expressed at the meetings, and because I advised the 'combing out' of the Jewish M. P.'s to give place to 'real' Jewish M. P.'s in Parliament, they are now giving me the 'cold shoulder.' What are they angry about? Are they afraid of being packed off to Jerusalem? Now I hope that in America the 'Junker' class of Jew is absent, for he is not only a traitor to his own race, but he is also a positive danger to the State. And here let me add that it was my late master and friend, Joseph Fels of America, who, by his prophetic advocacy of the Single Tax System as applied to Land Reform, converted me to the belief that the American Jew has in him potentialities of a higher order than mere money-getting.

"And therefore, I am glad in a way, for asking me to give you this interview for The American Hebrew, as I think that the question of the creation of a Jewish nation and city in Palestine will be well handled by American Jewry, since they are organizing a Pan-Jewish Congress at which, I understand, this will be one of the topics to be debated."

"But may I ask whether the psychological moment has yet arrived for pressing this question?" I interposed.

"Certainly," the gallant Commander replied. "It is now or never. Yes, never before in the history of the Jews has such a glorious opportunity of acquiring Palestine as Jewish Settlement 'risen at the flood,' as at the present. It remains for the Jews 'to take' it, and so lead themselves on to national good fortune.

BRITISH ARMY IN PALESTINE

"The British Army is now standing outside the gates of Gaza, and soon, like Samson of old, it will carry off the gates on their backs. Once this important outpost, the key to Jaffa and Jerusalem, is in our hands, Palestine can be freed for the Jews forever. For a British victory in Palestine would mean not merely a Turkish defeat, but the utter collapse of Prussianism.

"It is curious how history repeats itself. It was Sir Sidney Smith who gave Napoleon his coup de grace at Acre, which defeat saw the decline of Napoleon's military power. So, to-day, the defeat of Prussian militarism, the greatest menace that ever threatened human liberty, lies in Palestine.

"The aim of Germany, you know, has been the driving of a wedge between Great Britain and her Far Eastern possessions by striking at the link, the Suez Canal. Fortunately, up till now, all their diabolical plans have failed in this direction. And this is where the Jews come in. As an Englishman I cannot regard Palestine entirely from the Jewish point of view, i. e., merely from the idealistic point of view, but with the usual characteristics of my race, who invariably make their own interest coincide with some ideal, I think that it would be a good bargain for England, if Jews were allowed to re-create a Jewish State in Palestine.

A GOOD BARGAIN FOR ENGLAND

"Let me give you my reasons for thinking so. In the past, Egypt, which was a British Protectorate, merely required from 5,000 to 6,000 soldiers to guard it. Whereas, if Palestine were to remain in future in Turkish hands, i. e., in German hands, we should have to keep some 50,000 or 60,000 soldiers, i. e., nearly two Army Corps permanently stationed in Egypt, against an inevitable attack and probable invasion from the Northeast.

"The Germans would make of Palestine a base for a coup de main on our African possessions on the immediate vicinity. And by holding the Gulf of Akaba, which washes the Sinai Peninsula, the Germans could point the pistol at the Red Sea route, and the London Akab itself would in all probability become a second Heligoland, and so Zeppelins and submarines and aeroplanes would constantly threaten us from that quarter.

"The Suez Canal would never be safe, as we know that the Germans have designs upon it. Once the Canal is cut they contemplate (and very foolishly, too!), that India with its 200,000,000 Mussulmen would 'cut the painter' and that Australia and New Zealand would throw over the Mother Country and declare their independence. But the valiant doings of our brave and heroic Colonials should have dispelled all their idle fancies and vain ambitions. It is enough to say that our Colonies are loyal to the core.

"You see, then, that it is vital and necessary that a Jewish Buffer State should be created out of Palestine, not only for the safety and security of the Jews, but also for the safety and security of our own Empire."

VIEWS OF JUSTICE BRANDEIS

"And who is to be the guardian Protector of the proposed Jewish State?"

"Personally, I do not mind whether England or America becomes the guaranteeing protector of the Jewish State. As an Englishman, all that I am concerned about is that Germany should not become predominant in Syria. When I was over in America last, I tried to sound Justice Brandeis, who, as you doubtless know, carries great weight with President Wilson, on the creation of a Jewish Nation State in Palestine. He listened very attentively to what I had to say, and expressed himself in full accord with the Basle Program, as the best means of solving the world-wide Jewish problem. He quite appreciated the fact that American Jewry has the advantage over all the other Jewries, in that it has had so many Jewish ambassadors at Constantinople, and consequently they have been able to study the question and the surrounding difficulties, on the spot, as it were. Their knowledge and experience, he readily admitted, ought to be of great value to the Jewish people.

"Then again the Jewish financiers in America, men who until recently were open opponents to a scheme for a Jewish State in Palestine, men like the Strauses and Jacob Schiff, and the Rothschilds here in England might take the Jewish Colonial Trust, the financial weapon of the Zionist movement in hand and invite the Jewish financiers of other countries in Russia and Italy to join them. He fully concurred with all these suggestions, and with a silent look, which spoke volumes, he believed that much would be done, when the real opportunity arose.

"As regards diplomatic actions, however, Justice Brandeis was very cautious and reticent. He expressed no decided view as to whether England or America or both of them jointly, together with France and Italy should act as the Guarantors of a Jewish Palestine. He did not seem to wish to commit himself, but thought that, under the present conditions, the Zionist leaders were fully alive to the issues involved. Should the occasion demand it, a public announcement would certainly be made.

"Personally, he said, he was quite hopeful of a better future for the Jews after the war, and should they need any assistance in the matter of a Jewish Palestine he would be only too ready to be of service to the Jewish cause."

"Would the British Government and the American favor Zionist schemes in Palestine?" I then queried.

ENGLISH STATESMEN FAVOR PLAN

"I believe it is common knowledge," the member for Newcastle-under-Lyne put in reply, "that the Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Asquith and Lord Bryce are sympathetic to the idea. And has not President Wilson in clear and unequivocal language expressed himself in favor of the free development of the small nationalities, among whom, I suppose, he would include the Jews, and the right of the small nations to dispose of themselves under which rule they would care to exist?"

"But how can you expect the governments to do anything, unless they are approached continually and continuously? Their practical support is bound to come when all the details have been worked out satisfactorily to all parties concerned, such as, the internationalization of the Holy Places, the form of government in the future Palestine, the rights and privileges of the contracting parties; the question of military protection, the ownership and use of the railways, canals and harbors (in time of peace and in time of war), the financing of irrigation works, the sanitation of unhealthy districts and the country generally, the question of drainage, both natural and artificial, and last, but most important of all, the question of 'local autonomy' or an independent Jewish State for Palestine. Well, my view is if Palestine is to be restored to the Jews, they should get complete independence. And now that a Jewish Regiment is to be sent to fight on the Palestinian front, it may be that the great sacrifice they are about to make will seal forever the sufferings they have had to endure in the past."

"But the Jewish Assimilators are secretly intriguing by placing obstacles in the way of the Jews, realizing their national aims, as was revealed by the issuing of the famous Manifesto of the Conjoint Committee," I could not help mentioning.

GERMAN PLANS AGAINST PALESTINE

"Do these Jews desire that Germany should solve the Jewish problem?" Commander Wedgwood angrily replied. "For every vote given against a Jewish Palestine is a vote cast for Germany. Has not Professor Delbrück pointed out, and so have dozens of dozens of other influential Germans, that Germany must forestall England in setting up a Jewish State in Palestine, in order to safeguard her Berlin to Bagdad line which runs through Damascus? I have lately been reading of all sorts of German fantastic schemes for the Germanization of the Orient, and one is, that the Tigris should be linked up with the Levant by means of a canal to run just south of Damascus. This proposed route would cut off some 600 miles' journey in rounding the Arabian Peninsula to get to the Persian Gulf. The Suez Canal would thus have a serious competitor.

"Now I do not know much about the character of the country towards the interior. My first-hand knowledge of the Coast of Syria comes through my being shipwrecked there, and where I nearly lost my life. But I have been making inquiries of the competent authorities, travelers, geographers, engineers and irrigation experts, and they assure me that the Tigris-Levant Canal is not such a hair-brained scheme, as I originally thought. You see, then, that it must be the task of England to forestall Germany.

"I wonder whether the Jews are alive to the fact," Commander Wedgwood with some emotion concluded, "that they are living at a great, important moment in their history. A slight turn of the wheel, a great British military success in Palestine, and the Jews may become a nation once again, and thus win back that dignity and self-respect, without which no people can hope to achieve great ends. Will they be ready?"

At that moment the division bell rang, and the whips hurried round to get their members to pair in the lobbies. I then rose to go. And as the good commander rushed off into the division boxes, I could hear the cries of the tellers in the corridors. "Vide! Vide!" . . . "Vide! Vide!" and I wondered if the Jews too would ever reach to that glorious position of having a free, parliamentary institution of their own.

Yet with steadfast courage that rather would die than turn back.—Nathan Haskell Dole.

To meditate in solitude upon the stupendous problem thus sprung upon him, Jesus felt impelled to retire to the desert, whence John had come, to brood and think it out. Meditation and introversion of soul favored by solitude, as the lives of hermits and anchorites show, has always been a great resource of great men, not recluses, on supreme occasions when they needed to orient themselves, to find poise after shock, or seek direction from within. When this exercise and discipline are combined with fasting, they tend to give a very peculiar and specific exaltation of mind. When alone, man abstracts from all the constraints of the outer world, and frees spontaneity and inner impulsion from inhibitions.—G. Stanley Hall, Jesus, the Christ, in the Light of Psychology.

The Meaning of Christmas

What does Christmas to us mean?
 Observ'd in every Christian land,
 By old and young a pleasing scene?
 Would you the myst'ry understand?
 If so, then list to my simple verse
 While I, the pleasing truth rehearse
 Of man's redemption from the fall
 Through love divine for one and all.

Awake my muse! awake and sing
 The praise of Christ our newborn King
 In Bethlehem's manger as foretold
 By prophets in the days of old.
 Who were inspir'd by light divine
 To cause His wondrous love to shine.
 Who left his royal throne above—
 Took on our nature thus to prove

This matchless, condescending love,
 And raise our souls to realms above;
 Redeem the world from Satan's power
 That we might live forevermore
 In that eternal world of light
 Where no more sorrow, no more night
 Shall dim our sight or mar our joy,
 Or sin no more our peace destroy.

O, boundless love, mercy divine
 In this incarnate birth doth shine!
 Too deep for man to comprehend
 Unless God doth his Spirit lend,
 Our eyes to open and inspire
 And our hearts fill with holy fire.
 Hence, the decree to fallen man—
 "Ye surely must be born again!"

Become his children, freed from sin
 And thus his kingdom enter in—
 Heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ
 Whose precious blood has paid the price—
 For you, for me, for all mankind
 Who will obey his law divine.
 He came to die that we might live
 The life eternal and receive
 Those endless joys which angels sang
 When at his birth sweet anthems rang

Of peace and joy, good will to man,
 As set forth in the gospel plan.
 This is what Christmas to us means—
 Far more than all earth's brightest dreams—
 Then let us sing with one accord
 The praise of our Redeemer Lord
 By works of righteousness and truth,
 As it becomes both age and youth,
 That our gratitude may shine
 In all our lives with love divine.

Christmas Night in the Trenches

It was dark and the night appalling;
The snow and sleet fell fast.
Two soldiers stood crouching with numbness,
Brought on by the wintry blast.
Yet o'er them the shrapnel was flying
The heavens were red with its glow,
Unconscious of what was about them,
These soldiers stood still in the snow.

Their thoughts were of home and of loved ones;
Their minds wandered back to the time,
When out from the old church belfry
They heard the bells merrily chime.
Still again comes the fire-like billows
From out the huge cannon's throat;
As these men stood there near speechless,
With snow and ice for a coat.

Said one, "Jack, I'd like to be home now
With loved ones I left long ago.
Yet, somehow, again I feel happy
While crouching right here in the snow."
And as the heavens were lighted
By powder igniting o'erhead,
Poor Jack heard no sigh, neither murmur,
As his comrade fell backward—dead.

The angels had come from the heavens
And wafted his spirit above,
As his comrade stood doing his duty,
Giving all for the cause which we love.
And then in his lonely position
He lifts his sad heart, through despair;
And breathes to the Father in heaven
A humble, but heartfelt prayer.

"Oh God, why this struggle and carnage?
May peace soon come to the earth!
The peace that the angels sang of,
The night of the Savior's birth."
Once more from the mouth of the cannon
Belched forth a volley of lead;
And peace came to this weary soldier,
As, without struggle, he too, fell—dead.

That night from those cold, damp trenches
Two spirits wended their way.
To a happier, fairer glory.
T'ward the realms of endless day,
And, as Jesus came down from heaven
To champion the cause of right,
So these two men gave their lives
In the trench, on Christmas night.

No man is without fault, nor any institution composed of men, but we cannot afford to judge either by its faults alone. Nothing would stand under such a judgment. Yet men drift, perhaps unconsciously, into that practice, and the Government raised by the hand of God, and its officers chosen by the voice of the people are dishonored by unjust criticism and wholesale condemnation by some. Surely here is a point wherein Saints need to be careful to avoid partaking of the spirit of the world, and not to let the practice find place in the church, to the injury of any.—The Unity for November.

Practical Hints for Home Nursing

[In response to a request from us, Sister Ralph W. Farrell, of Providence, Rhode Island, has written some papers on some of the most common and dangerous diseases known to childhood, together with practical hints for nursing those who have contracted such. These will be found very dependable, for Sister Farrell, herself a graduate nurse, had years of training and experience before her marriage, and since then, in caring for her own little family, she has had opportunity to test out, weigh, and properly estimate, the practical workings in the home, of all theories and instructions technically received. This little series of articles will, it is hoped, prove of assistance to the young or inexperienced mothers in caring for their children. The one on scarlet fever in this issue, will be followed by others on measles and diphtheria.]

SCARLET FEVER

The symptoms of scarlet fever are sore throat, (which is red and swollen) chill or chilliness, active fever and the "strawberry tongue." Vomiting is frequently an early symptom. The attack usually begins suddenly, very often at night. There is headache and uneasy sleep. The bright red rash appears about the end of the first or during the course of the second day. At first the rash consists of numerous little red points appearing upon the chest, neck and shoulders and soon diffusing into a general redness of the entire surface, excepting around the mouth where pallor is pronounced. Upon light pressure of the finger the rash momentarily fades.

The period of incubation (the time between the implantation of the germ and the appearance of the disease) is from two to seven days. When the rash fades the desquamation, or peeling begins. This is a critical period of transmitting the disease as each particle of skin is filled with scarlet fever germs. Extreme care should be taken during all stages of the disease for it is spread also by the discharges from the nose, mouth, etc.

Regarding the care of scarlet fever, it is very important to keep the patient quiet; even a patient with a mild case should be kept in bed and no one allowed in the room but the one who is caring for him. The diet at first should be principally milk. After the temperature, or fever, has gone down, cereals, egg-nogs, milk toast, water toasts, custards and the like, may be given. Rich foods must not be allowed. Give plenty of water to drink. No red meats, such as beef, lamb, etc., should be given until two or three weeks after the disappearance of the rash, and not then if there is any tendency to kidney trouble, which is a common complication. Bright's Disease often has its foundation laid in scarlet fever; hence the diet plays an important part in the care of this disease. Baths are important treatment in allaying the fever but they should be given with care, for harm would result if the patient were exposed to drafts and chills. Olive oil is excellent for bathing. The throat should frequently be sprayed with some mild antiseptic, such as Dobell's Solution, Listerine, hydrogen peroxide or ordinary salt and water.

After the peeling process has begun, the body should be rubbed twice daily with some greasy substance such as fresh lard, vaseline, etc., to prevent the little particles of skin from flying about.

As complications, there may be inflammation of the middle ear and glands of the necks, pneumonia, inflammation of the kidneys. For this reason we readily see why great care should be taken to keep the patient out of drafts, off the cold floors, quiet and free from the effects of unwise feeding. Soft rags must be used instead of handkerchiefs for the discharges from the nose and mouth; these rags should be wrapped in paper and burned as soon as soiled. A pail of water to which has been added a disinfectant should be kept ready to receive all clothing from the sick room, and these clothes should be boiled before being washed and never washed with the family washing.

Keep the patient in his room until the peeling is over which will probably be four or five weeks. Before being allowed to mingle with the family he should have an alcohol shampoo and have his body bathed in warm water to which has been added not only lots of soap but a disinfectant. Dress the patient throughout with clean, well-aired clothing which has not been in the sick room.

Much more could be said, but space will not allow for more than the following: Scarlet fever and scarletina are two names for the same disease. The notion, very widespread, that scarletina is a different or less serious disease than scarlet fever is wrong. Scarletina is scarlet fever just as a light case of pneumonia is pneumonia. Doctor J. C. Wilson, physician-in-chief of the German Hospital of Philadelphia, says: "The sense of security that so often arises from the use of the term scarletina instead of scarlet fever is wholly false, nay more, is exceedingly dangerous when it leaves those concerned to underrate the danger of the sickness or the risks of contagion."

A Wide-Awake Supervisor

Sister Burgess, supervisor of the Young Women's Bureau of our Auxiliary, is sending out the following message to all the women in the church she can reach who have charge of our girls' organizations. Does it not breathe an alertness, an enthusiasm, which promises much for her success in the peculiar work intrusted to her? She, as editor of our department in the Autumn Leaves, is putting much spirit into that also, and the last two or three numbers are teeming with helpful things. Does the Leaves come regularly into your home? You cannot afford to be without its influence upon your children.

LAMONI, IOWA, October 25, 1917.

Dear Sister: The importance of the work of the Young Women's Bureau cannot be overestimated. We are living in the hastening time and our girls of to-day will be the women of to-morrow who will have many of the problems of Zion-building to work out. Will your "women of to-morrow" be united and consecrated and prepared for these responsibilities?

When the Oriole movement was launched in 1915, Sister Gardner intended to plan more advanced work to meet the needs of older girls. She was overburdened, however, by her general secretarial duties and her home and the task was finally passed on to the present supervisor. No doubt you have read the plans sketched for the new movement in the October Autumn Leaves and will soon have read the first draft of lessons in the November issue. We are eager that every girl in the church shall belong to the Woman's Auxiliary and it is to this end that we are asking your cooperation.

The new organization should not in any sense take the place of or encroach upon the Orioles. Girls who are contentedly working as Orioles should complete the highest rank there before taking up the new organization. Those girls, however, who have not felt that the Oriole work has met their needs may be organized under the advanced movement. This of course applies only to girls over fifteen.

Will you help us to a more accurate vision of the general condition of our work by answering the following questions? If you find any suggestions or difficulties in the course of organization we shall be glad to hear from you. With earnest wishes and prayers for the young women of your district, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. ALICE M. BURGESS,
Supervisor of Young Women.

1. How many active Oriole circles are there in your district?
2. Will you please give the names and addresses of their monitors?
3. How many chapters of the new organization have been established?
4. Will you please give names and addresses of their leaders?
5. Is there prospect of other chapters being formed, how many, where?
6. Will you discuss briefly the spiritual, moral and intellectual status of the young women of your district? Are they interested or indifferent towards the church?
7. Will you procure a list of young women of your district not now taking the Autumn Leaves, especially those who might be prospective subscribers? We wish to send to each of these a sample copy of the Autumn Leaves for November which will contain the first installment of Brother Elbert Smith's new serial and the first lessons for the Young Women's new movement.

Human Conservation

The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor is sending out bulletins with the object of informing the public concerning the value of retaining all the protection which has been thrown about women and children who must work in factories, mills, and other places which require long hours and arduous effort. These bulletins are intended to influence popular opinion, the greatest factor in human interests to-day, against the move which is being made by certain manufacturers who are attempting to change this protective legislation so as to allow them to employ women and children at longer hours per day, or at more tender years. This has been claimed to be a "war measure," but the experience of the other nations which have been in this war turmoil for a longer period than we, have proven the folly and the detrimental effect of thus removing the protective laws which have tended to strengthen the working women and children physically and mentally. The next generation depends upon the healthiness of the parents of to-day, and the sturdy parents of to-morrow depend upon the right conservation of the child health of to-day. What we can do to help in the interests of mercy, right and justice in these matters, is to individually or as societies or other groups, appeal to our representatives in the legislature protesting against any lowering of our past standards, or the introduction of anything, even under the guise of "war measures," which will tend to lessen the physical, mental, or moral efficiency of our women and children.

The bulletin which follows is of recent date. A. A.

SAVING HUMAN CAPITAL

The struggle of nine of the warring countries to strengthen their human resources by making labor conditions tolerable for children who must work, and by providing schools to teach them how to do better work, are recounted in Child Labor in Warring Countries, a brief review of foreign reports just issued by the National Child's Bureau.

The prospect for better industrial education for England has lately been strengthened by the bill introduced in the British Parliament by Mr. Herbert Fisher, President of the Board of Education. The bill fixes the compulsory school attendance age at 14 without the present exemptions and requires that all working children under 18 spend at least 320 hours a year in continuation schools.

In Italy, as well as in France and England, standards of labor protection were relaxed at the beginning of the war only to be restored and strengthened as experience showed that long hours, night and Sunday work, with their evil effects on health and efficiency, did not pay.

And Russia, according to information received since the bulletin went to press, has found it necessary to withdraw the power given her ministers of labor and industry early in the war to grant exemptions to concerns doing war work from the laws regulating hours and the employment of women, and children under 17.

Canada, New Zealand and Australia have maintained practically unchanged through three years of war strain their high standards of protection for working children.—United States Department of Labor, Children's Bureau.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Charity

"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

These verses are found in the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, and have long been favorites of mine. Charity rightly defined means love, and without love for our fellow men we are nothing. It was this love for the world that caused our Lord and Redeemer to come to earth, suffer and die, that man might be saved. We, too, must suffer that follow in his steps, but do we always bear our sorrows as Jesus did? Do we love them that despitefully use us or do we love just the ones that use us well? If we do we are not followers of Christ.

We are now living in the hastening time when men's hearts are failing them for fear. Are we helping keep the banner of King Immanuel afloat, or are we dragging it in the mire? Saints, the world is watching us and we little know how our words and actions affect the lives of others. Then let us be on our guard and do nothing to cause the name of Latter Day Saint to be dishonored. Thought is parent to the action and as a man thinketh, so is he. We must eradicate all impure thoughts from our minds.

Do we always look for the good in others? Are we praising their victories and overlooking their faults? Do we always want to be first to tell some idle tale, something that will injure another. Perhaps it has been exaggerated and we have heard it in the wrong light. Should we repeat it? I remember a little maxim we learned at school years ago:

"First somebody told it, then the room wouldn't hold it,
 So the busy tongues rolled it till they got it outside.
 Then the crowd came across it, they onward did toss it,
 Till it grew high and wide.
 From a very small lie, sir, it grew wide and high, sir,
 Till it reached to the sky, sir, and frightened the moon,
 For she hid her sweet face, sir, at the dreadful disgrace, sir,
 That had happened at noon,
 From mud and vice, its courses flew higher,
 Till it hit the sad liar and killed his good name."

That is always the way when we do wrong. It falls back on our own heads.

"Think of the beautiful, think of the true,
 Though like an avalanche sweep over you,
 Keep not the multitude, sort them with care,
 Testing by purity, purging by prayer,
 Think of the beautiful, think of the fair."

If we allow beautiful thoughts to enter our minds and dwell there, we have no room for impure ones. We will be led to talk of the beautiful.

"Talk of the beautiful, talk of the true;
Tongues full of poison are whispering to you,
Answer them not with a tale-bearing word,
Only in blessing, the voice should be heard.
Talk of the beautiful, talk of thy Lord."

We must not retaliate when we hear that some one has been talking about us, for if we are living the best we can, we have nothing to fear. Even should all earthly friends be against us, Christ knows our innermost thoughts, and he will be with us. I remember a few lines of a hymn my mother used to sing.

"There was never a form so degraded,
But that eye shining only in love,
Might find it something worth loving,
'Tis the gift of our Father above."

If we have love in our hearts we will see some good in all. Saints, it is this class of people that will help redeem Zion. Are we to be one of them, or are we to be among the foolish virgins? Let us commence right now to find some good in our neighbors and friends and tell them the good some one has said of them, but keep the evil to ourselves. Satan uses the evil to help carry on his work and every time we repeat an evil tale, every time we listen to one and allow it to find room in our hearts, we are helping him. I once heard a brother say, that the Devil was more of a gentleman than we gave him credit for. For he simply would not stay where he was not wanted.

Let us all learn to be pure in heart and have the charity that thinketh no evil.

EFFIE J. DENTON.

Mammoth Corn in Ancient Mounds

Below is a copy of an article that appeared in the New York Herald for November 25, and is a reprint from the Milwaukee Sentinel. This may have come to your notice. However, I am sending a copy, also a copy of a letter addressed to Mrs. Christy from Mr. William A. Akin in answer to one she wrote asking if the story of the wonderful "Corn and Stalk" were true, or a well-garnished newspaper report. There are some things in the article that may be of interest to the students of the church, and you can use or not use as your judgment would indicate the matter contained.

"CORN TEN FEET HIGH FROM SEED 1,800 YEARS OLD

"Milwaukee Man Raises Gigantic Stalk from Grain Found in Prehistoric Mound.

"This is going to be the most interesting, the most extraordinary and, mayhap, the truest story concerning a corn-stalk that any reader of the Sentinel or for that matter, any other reader has ever read. For this cornstalk antedates American history. It even would rear its yellow head to prove that America, that the United States, is as old as the Pyramids of Egypt themselves. And, best of all, this plant is supposed to have been produced from a seed 1,800 years old, and, mind you, is growing in Milwaukee, up on the east side, where it rightfully belongs by dint of its aristocratic heritage. It stands there, or rather, towers above everything else in the flower garden of William A. Akin, of 793 Summit Avenue. . . . It measures more than ten feet high and has maturing upon its stalk seven ears of princely corn. . . . Mr. Akin is convinced that through the cornstalk in his yard the world will know more about America and the first people who inhabited it than is recorded in history. He believes it will set aside all theory as to the life of a seed of corn and will open fields of research undreamed of.

"Mr. Akin traces the life of the cornstalk growing in his yard to a seed 1,800 years old. He has data to verify his attestation, in fact he says he has the proof to show that the plant is the direct product of a seed that was buried by people who lived at the time of Christ. I came into possession of the seed from a friend of mine. . . . Let me begin at the beginning and tell you what I know about the history of the seed planted in my flower garden. It will sound like a dream, but I believe what I tell you is true and I also believe that if the proper persons take time to investigate, the story of the world will be enriched with new knowledge."

Doctor E. S. Curry, the noted archæologist, who for twenty-five years was a missionary to the Chippewa and Ojibway tribes of Lake Superior Indians, discovered on one of his explorations a strange mound formation on which a tree was growing. This was near the little town of Marked Tree, in Arkansas. He cut down the tree and dug into the mound. He easily found that the tree was six hundred years old. The mound he opened proved to be a prehistoric grave. The roots of the tree had wound themselves around the mound, and from the character of the other vegetation around he stated that it was his firm conviction that the mound was as placed there 1,800 years ago. In this mound he found ossified bones, stone weapons and implements of one kind and another, the most extraordinary of which was some tempered copper from which Doctor Curry had a razor made. Doctor Curry shaved with that razor of tempered copper. This is no hallucination. It is a fact, for he was seen shaving with it.

"Among other things in the mound was a hermetically sealed stone jar containing eleven ears of corn of the prehistoric red dent variety. The age of this corn was further verified by the cement that was used to seal the lid of the receptacle. This cement was of the flint character, relating and associating it with the kind used in sealing the mummy cases in the Pyramids of Egypt.

"I got one of these seeds of corn, and, more out of curiosity than anything else, the seed was planted in the yard. I wanted to see if the story could possibly be true. I didn't know how, where or when to plant the seed. That's why you see it growing out there next to some bushes. The seed was planted after the middle of June. Ordinarily you know, corn should be planted sometime in May. And even though it wasn't planted properly, even though it doesn't get the sunlight all day, that seed has grown into that ten-foot plant. It was awesome to see it grow. Some days it just seemed to jump out of the ground. As it kept on growing the story that was told me of the seed became more and more plausible. Then I decided to investigate. I found that an experiment was conducted in North Dakota and that the yield from the seed of the prehistoric corn was at the rate of 184 bushels to an acre. The largest stalk was one hundred and eighty-one and a half feet tall, and four inches in diameter. The largest leaf was ten inches wide, and ten feet long. The stalk produced eight ears of corn, the largest of which was nineteen inches long, four inches in diameter, and held eight hundred and sixty grains. There were sixty-eight ears on nine stalks."

"As these immense stalks grew out of the ground there came with them what was known as a bracer or storm roots, which grew as high as four feet, and in that way they acted as a support for the giant stem."

"To show the reports that the stalk growing in the yard was of the same character he was taken and shown the plant. There on the base of the stem were the storm roots, only they were stunted. Mr. Akin explained that he did not know anything about planting corn and therefore did not 'hill' the ground. Therefore, he said the storm roots could not grow and simply bled to death. But the stalk had grown to maturity. It stands there majestically like some power from an unknown world. Who knows but that its ancestors heard the voices of strange people and listened to the romantic whisperings of other winds?"

November 25, Mrs. Christy wrote the following letter to Mr. Akin:

MR. WILLIAM A. AKIN,
"793 Summit Avenue,
"Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"I have just read in the Sunday New York Herald for November 25, an interesting account of a cornstalk in your garden, said to have grown from a seed found in a hermetically sealed stone jar in a prehistoric mound in Arkansas along with stone weapons, implements, tempered copper, etc. As I am especially interested in the prehistoric people of our land I beg the privilege of asking if this is an authoritative account or just a newspaper write-up?"

Mr. Akin's reply:

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN, November 30, 1917.

"Mrs. L. Lenor Christy,
"Brooklyn, New York.

"My Dear Mrs. Christy:

"Your letter of the 25th inst. reached me in due season and in reply to your inquiry as to the truth of the article in the New York Herald, relative to some corn grown from prehistoric seed, I will say, I have not seen this article, but if it is a copy of one published some time ago in our Milwaukee Sentinel on this subject it is true so far as pertains to the origin of the seed and the history or story of its finding. Of course all such articles are more or less embellished with flowery rhetoric in telling the story but the main points are true.

"Very sincerely,

WILLIAM A. AKIN."

I have a dim recollection of having read something about a similiar experience or incident preceding this, and so this may be old. If not, there are some things of interest to the Saints. If I were not too busy I would like to make some observations, but time says "no."

I am hastily and truly yours,

WARD L. CHRISTY.

Lecture Board Notes

The lecture board is still active and doing all that can be done to advance this department of our good work.

Recently Brother Heman C. Smith responded to calls from several of the branches for illustrated lectures. His trip was highly satisfactory and productive of good. There is a growing demand for this work and we trust that the districts and branches will take advantage of the splendid opportunities that are offered them in these lectures.

Brother Frank G. Hedrick, Fanning, Kansas, writes: "Brother Heman C. Smith gave us his illustrated lectures last Monday night. The house was crowded and the people were well pleased. I think these lectures will prove a great success, and the Saints will receive much good from them. We had in attendance a large number of nonmembers that are not in the habit of attending our services. I feel enthusiastic in regard to the lecture course and the good that may be accomplished by it."

Brother Thomas Fiddick, Cameron, Missouri, writes: "Brother Heman C. Smith's lecture was well attended, we having a full house, and the audience was well pleased."

Brother John W. Agenstine, Stewartville, Missouri, writes: "I am very glad that we had the opportunity of having Brother Smith come to our town. We had a very large attendance and the pictures seemed to interest the people to a great extent. I never heard one single complaint. I think this movement will be a success and many good results may be accomplished."

L. A. Woodside, Saint Joseph, Missouri, has this to say of the lecture: "Have heard many good things said of the lecture and we hope to have another visit by Brother Smith."

It is gratifying to have these good reports come in and we sincerely hope that much good will be accomplished by our lecturers.

Those who desire these lectures, or lectures by any other of the lecturers, should address letter to A. W. Smith, Federal Reserve Bank Building, Saint Louis, Missouri. If you do not understand just how we handle the lectures we desire that you should so state at the time you write.

Brother A. Carmichael has just returned from Bevier, Missouri, where he lectured on the evening of the 9th. On the 10th he lectured at Mount Washington. We have not had time to receive reports.

Brother E. D. Moore, will soon leave for a lecture trip through Iowa towns. Brother Moore will be kept busy several days on this trip as he will have some seven places in which to lecture. He will be in Perry December 17, Boone the 18th, Nevada the 19th, Rhodes the 20th, Runnells the 21st, Knoxville the 22d, and Des Moines the 23d.

We trust that a good spirit will prevail throughout these lectures and that much good will result. We urge all who can to arrange to be in attendance.

Sincerely yours,

LECTURE BOARD.

SHELLBROOK, SASNATCHEWAN, November 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: I was very glad to read the article in the HERALD for November 14 from E. R. Davis. "Are we justified in participating in war at any time?" And I heartily agree with Brother Davis.

I do not think Saints should show a bloodthirsty desire to participate in war, but when duty calls they must obey.

The war was forced upon us and especially upon the United States for they waited until every other means were exhausted before they would engage in war, and only when the call came that France was in need and she sent delegates to the States to urge their help did she go into war.

Then she went to the aid of a sister nation, one who had stood by her in time of trouble, and aided her.

America has ever stood for liberty, and right. The land of the free and the home of the brave. This is the land that people from every nation are to come to; a choice land above all other lands. Can the Saints sit with hands idly folded and await for others to fight their battles then step in and say we have a place prepared to go to for protection in time of war?

None of us want to see our loved ones go to war but if duty calls we must obey. There are many, many ways we can help and stay home. Not all have to go to the trenches to help in the war. We women can help the Red Cross work. We can send boxes to the soldiers, and cheer their darkened lives. We can write letters of cheer. In many, many ways we can help.

May the Lord hasten the day when there will be no more war.

Sincerely,

EFFIE J. DENTON.

TAYLOR, NORTH DAKOTA, November 22, 1917.

Editors Herald: While I send in my subscribers' names I will also write a few words. I was at Seaside, Oregon, a year ago, five miles down in the valley on the river. There was one of your missionaries passing by, giving tracts. I saw him, but did not know who he was and did not get a chance to speak to him, else I should have asked him to hold services in the big schoolhouse there. There are many people there who have not been to any church or services for years. I should think that it would be a good place in which to teach. I do not know how kindly they would be, but they are sorely in need of hearing the gospel, so if any pass that way, I pray stop and see what can be accomplished for God's sake.

MRS. C. H. ENGEN.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, November 26, 1917.

Editors Herald: The ladies aid societies worked together again this fall in giving a bazaar November 21 to 23, and a chicken dinner the 24th, both of which are reported as having met with success, adding a neat sum to the building fund. Opportunity was also afforded for some good literature work.

Elder C. J. Smith of Sioux City, missionary in the district, has been in Burlington for two or three days, and was the speaker Sunday morning and evening at regular services. His theme for the morning was in keeping with the Thanksgiving season, and appropriate to the day, which had been set apart by the Sunday school superintendency as a special offering day to swell the Christmas offering. This was the second special offering day set apart this year, and the result was thoroughly gratifying—the total reported for the day coming to approximately $87, and bringing the pro rata for the school well over the $2.00 mark.

Baptism is announced for Wednesday evening, the 28th, and a special effort is urged to make the service genuinely one of Thanksgiving.

CORRESPONDENT.

HOUGHTON LAKE, MICHIGAN, November 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: Readers, after many years I come again to call on you to state that the Saints of this branch are alive and that we receive many wonderful evidences that God the Father owns us as his children. We are acknowledged by him through prophecies, revelations, and through the healing of the sick.

We have a fully-established branch, having an elder, priest, teacher, and two deacons. Our little church which stands on the bank of the lake in this village was dedicated October 21, and we are glad to have other Saints of other branches visit us. We have a Sunday school and Religio, and although our members are scattered, many of them having gone away to work in the cities, there are enough to keep the camp fire blazing.

I have been requested to state that Mrs. Mina Norton, who has been afflicted with paralysis for some years has gone to her sister's near Charlotte, Michigan. She wishes if there are any Saints in or near Charlotte that they will call on her or write her. She wishes to hear, from or see some elder. So do not disappoint her. You will find her at the home of Mrs. B. D. Cooper, Route 8. If you cannot call her write to her and cheer her up.

Also two of our sisters near Harlem, Montana. They are new in this work, having been baptized at Beaverton, Michigan, October 12, 1917, and went to their home in Montana. Mrs. David Lighthall has a sheep ranch about twelve miles from Harlem, and her mother, Sister McIntosh, is living with her. They request that Saints in that part will call or write, and if any missionaries could come that way, Sister Lighthall will meet them at Harlem and find them a place to preach. Send them reading also.

Your sister,

Box 35.

MRS. A. B. HAWLEY.

DENVER, COLORADO, November 29, 1917.

Editors Herald: God has been very good to us in the second Denver Branch. Two of his chosen servants have been with us, Brethren F. G. Pitt and O. E. Sade. We have had some very enjoyable services and the Spirit has been present in power. We are praying for the recovery of Brother Sade, who has been afflicted for some time.

Brother Pitt has given us some excellent talks on the present conditions in Palestine. When we stop to think of the sacredness of the place, with its future possibilities we have a greater degree of thankfulness than the world can know.

Thanksgiving Day was one to be remembered by us in this place. We all met in the church for dinner. In the evening we had our midweek prayer meeting, in which we enjoyed the peaceful presence of God's Spirit. We have many among us who are eligible to the country's service and it behooves us to so live that they may have our support and that our prayers for them may be effectual.

We are laboring very zealously for the Christmas offering. We have been organized as a Sunday school about two years and our membership has increased about fifty per cent. Many meet with us who are not members of the church and they seem to be as enthusiastic over it as we.

God has recognized the prayers of the Saints in behalf of Sister H. D. Bartlett, who has been operated on at the hospital. Her recovery astonished those in charge.

In gospel bonds,

OLIVE L. BULLARD.

GREENVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA, November 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have been laboring in this State a year. It has been a slow proposition to get the work before this people, but we are going to keep at it till we get some of the honest in heart to come out from the autocracy in religion and do their own thinking, not being content to be tossed about by every wind of doctrine.

This is a new field of work for the grand angel message, and Satanic influences seem hard at work to prevent a foothold being gained. I like the fight, even though it is rough sometimes.

There are about forty-five thousand soldiers here, and I am doing all I can among them. The city has been quarantined against the camps for a while because of an epidemic. As a whole, the boys there are the best-behaved, cleanest and most mannerly of any I ever saw. Of course some will be careless in the use of God's name, but by and by they may learn the better way and cease this habit.

I am tracting the city with Angel Message tracts. I leave No. 1 this week and take it up next week, leaving No. 2. This is continued till I have left all nine of them. It is a good way to let the people know we have what they need. Wish all of our branches would do this work in their near-by cities and towns.

It is surprising to hear the questions that will be asked. Why cannot our sisters or brethren get out one day of each week and devote a little time to this important work? Are we soldiers of the cross? If so, the Commander has called for us to charge. Are we afraid or ashamed to own his cross? If so, God is ashamed of us. Let us take hold of this work with our whole souls, our whole purse, and do something. God has asked us time and again to do, do, do. Why don't we? Do we love him? If so, we will do his will.

If any of the Saints have relatives or friends in the Army in any of the camps of North or South Carolina, please let me know their addresses and I will try to be of some help to them. I know of a number of our boys who are in the Army here whose names I have not seen in the church papers. Why is this? We ought to have them in print.

Brother C. Edward Miller has given his address in the HERALD, he being at Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands. I hear the Mississippi soldiers are going there. We have a good many among them.

I attended two services to-day. It has been a gloomy day, but I am thankful that we are all alive and blessed with the grand blessings of the gospel. Though we are involved in the greatest struggle in the history of nations, in which we must use all our great resources and manhood of the present, yet there is light ahead. The brightest day is to come, when autocracy and anarchy will be wiped out and true freedom and love for God and humanity prevail. God speed the right and crush the wrong is my prayer.

Yours for the truth,

A. G. MILLER.

Ministerial reports from 34 of the ministry. Recommendations were read requesting ordination of A. A. Williams and J. J. Oliver to the office of elder, provision made to care for these ordinations. Bishop's agent's report was: Receipts $2,247.13; disbursements $2,191.59. District treasurer's report: Receipts, $30; paid out $22.25. C. B. Harts-horn was elected to fill vacancy in committee on Graceland student loan fund, due to F. F. Wipper moving to Independence. Conference delegates elected were Earl D. Rogers, Beatrice Rogers, J. O. Dutton, W. A. McDowell, David E. Dowker, Jennie Dowker, Will Trowbridge, Blanch Trowbridge, Grace Johnson, R. N. Burwell, and Ella Burwell. Alternates were; Fred H. Johnson, Mary Grace Johnson, Maggie Warlick, Daisy Faulkner, Rachel A. Fairbanks, LaJune Howard, Harry Thorne, Sadie Seale, Arthur M. Colburn, Edgar O. Byrn, and Ethel Williamson. Moved to adjourn to meet with Mission Branch at the call of the district president. The united choirs sang the "Holy City," by Gaul, Margaret Wickes, conductor and Ruby Sumption, pianist. Frederick E. Bone, secretary.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—Met at London, Ontario, new church, September 22 and 23. District Presidency, John L. Burger, William I. Fligg, with J. F. Curtis presiding. Frank Gray and Louise Evans acted as secretaries. Bishop's agent reported: $3,822.31 collected in tithes and offerings in eleven months; auditors reported accounts correct. Request of Brethren G. H. Henley, Charles Raison, George Tier, John Vasbinder, and John L. Burger to assume responsibility of financing and caring for a reunion to be held in 1918, was unanimously adopted. The reunion is to be known as the London District Reunion, and the committee to select time and place. London Branch had provided a tent for literature and distribution of tracts at the Western Fair, held in London this year, and upon the request of the branch officers of district, decided to take over the responsibility of continuing the tent for another year. Election of officers resulted as follows: John L. Burger, president; William I. Fligg and Percy Yerks, vice presidents; Frank Gray, secretary; John L. Burger, bishop's agent; B. H. Doty, chorister; Clarence Duesling, member library board; Silas Ridley, member gospel literature board. Next conference in Saint Thomas, date to be selected by district president. David Withrow of Stratford, and Ralph Moore of Rostock, were ordained to the offices of elder and priest, respectively. Woman's Auxiliary met Friday evening prior to conference and organized into a district association. Ontario Quorum of Elders and Ontario Quorum of Priests held sessions during the conference, and a general priesthood meeting was held Sunday afternoon. This conference was one of the largest and certainly the best that the new London District has ever held. Frank Gray, secretary.

The Presidency

To General Conference Appointees and All Who Are Devoting Their Time and Energies to Church Work: The Presidency desires from you a complete statistical report of your work for the year, so far as statistics are available and can show your work. Add to this such general observations as you think we should read. Besides these we should like to have you tell us briefly of what signs you have observed of progress towards Zionie conditions; and what are the prospects for more and better work the coming conference year. Tell of the best work accomplished under your observation, and express your opinion of what is the most urgent work before the church.

This request for report applies to the following:

General church officers, Stake presidents and bishops, appointees doing missionary work, appointees doing local work, bishops of district or bishops without localized fields, evangelists or patriarchs, all quorum presidents, any who in any line are devoting all their time to church work, all heads of institutions controlled by the church, and heads of departments of church work or auxiliaries.

Respectfully,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

A Good Book for Children

MOUFFLOU AND OTHER SHORT STORIES.—J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, 50 cents net. By Ouida (Louise de la Ramee). Cloth, 3 illustrations in color. One of The Children's Classics. How fate separated a dog and his young master with the events that brought about a happy reunion. The other stories are strong in underlying lessons. "Lamp-black" is a tale of a wretched being made happy in rendering of service.

Do You Read "Zion's Ensign?"

THE MISSIONARY AND CHURCH NEWSPAPER

Possibly there are some readers of the HERALD who do not know about Zion's Ensign, the sixteen-page weekly published at Independence, Missouri. Then there may be others who have not been in touch with it of late. For these, we would commend the following briefly stated statement of its character.

The editors are Walter W. Smith, J. A. Koehler and I. A. Smith. The contributors are numerous and of the best writers in the church.

Each week the first page carries a brief but timely editorial on some subject of vital religious appeal.

The second page is made up of editorial comment on current developments in the church.

Under the heading "Sermons and Articles" will be found able sermons by some of the best speakers we have, on topics of paramount interest to members and nonmembers alike. Then there are articles dealing with gospel principles and phases which strengthen the faith of members and reliably inform those who should be.

It is the aim of the Ensign to present an affirmative gospel.

Each week several pages are devoted to detailed news from widely separated branches, stakes and districts, showing what the members are doing in their local activities.

The correspondence department carries letters from church people you may know.

A conference and convention calendar shows at a glance the date and place of meeting of district and stake gatherings, while announcements of various general church officials are to be read here each week.

The balance of the publication is devoted to short, spicy selections and announcements of interest, making a well-balanced whole.

A favorite slogan of the publication is "Every Ensign as good as a tract. Pass it along."

During December it may be sent to nonmembers for only fifty cents a year. The regular price to others is a dollar a year in advance.

Subscriptions may be sent to this office and will be forwarded.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us. This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

Lots of people boast that they spend as they go who seldom go anywhere.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER.—A plainly told series of sermons by J. S. Roth, followed by a synopsis of his life as a "gospel messenger." This book is very popular; doubtless because of its simple, affirmative manner. It is not a book alone for the "wayfaring man or the fool" but for the earnest seeker after truth. No. 208, cloth$1.00

MEMOIRS OF W. W. BLAIR.—Every Latter Day Saint has heard about W. W. Blair. The "Old Guard" speaks reverently of him. He was universally loved. The key to the life of such a man is a possession worth having. These memoirs by his son, F. B. Blair, are such a key. No. 236, cloth$.75

VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH THE SEER.—A businesslike little work, scientifically written, showing forth the truth of the Book of Mormon and establishing the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission. Contains pointed and significant statements of Doctor Lederer, converted Jew, and others bearing upon the question. No. 311, paper$.15

THE GOSPEL STORY AND FOOTSTEPS OF

JESUS. By Frances. Charming child stories, of the birth-offering series. Adapted to the baby mind. Tales of truth that will register and remain. No. 366, cloth60c

BEATRICE WITHERSPOON. An autobiography of a prominent church worker. By Mrs. Emma Burton, including much of the life experiences of her husband, Elder Joseph Burton. Sea stories, pioneer experiences, conversion in spite of deep-set convictions—numerous features that go to make an interesting, active, useful life. No. 360, cloth$1.30

ARCHAEOLOGICAL COMMITTEE REPORT.—By the joint efforts of leading minds in the church this work was compiled. It gets down to rock bottom in archaeological investigation bearing upon the claims made by the Book of Mormon. Data that will fortify Book of Mormon students against arguments of "science." Interesting reading in itself. No. 142, cloth$.75

THE INSTRUCTOR.—A compilation of scriptural and other citations by the veteran apostle, G. T. Griffiths, gleaned from the Word and his own wide experience as a thinker and preacher; not only handy but necessary. Ammunition every defender of Latter Day Saintism needs. No. 216, cloth, $1; No. 217, leather, $1.25; No. 218, flexible$2.00

MANUAL OF THE PRIESTHOOD.—A book of instruction to the priesthood, based on the law and upon church usage, prepared by Charles Derry, one of the veteran ministers of the Reorganization. The first fruits of an extraordinarily fecund mind, noted for its wisdom and judgment. No. 232, cloth$.35

THE INDIAN MAIDEN. (Object lessons on Temperance.) By Frances. Unique as a story and as a temperance propaganda. Indian life, the old story, and the evils of civilization, furnish the author with material of which she takes full advantage. Quaintly appealing; anti-barbaric and anti-alcoholic. No. 363, cloth60c

Let Me Plan the Details of Your California Trip

Do you dislike the task of arranging and mapping out your trip to California? It IS bothersome for one not familiar with it. But it is no bother for me. I have planned many such trips and know just how to go about it. Come in and let me help you with yours.

Let me tell you all about the Burlington "Personally Conducted" Tourist Parties (additional comforts without additional expense) through the marvelous West to California—through Denver, Colorado Springs, the Pike's Peak region, the Royal Gorge, the Colorado Rockies, Salt Lake City, the Sierra Nevadas, and all of the wonder spots of that great Western country—in daylight.

Let me relieve you of the bother of planning, and have a specially trained guide take care of the details en route. More than that, he will explain interestingly and intelligently all the sights along the way—you'll feel that you really know the West when you get back.

TALES OF WASHINGTON IRVING'S ALHAMBRA.—J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, 50 cents net. Simplified by Lelia H. Cheney. Four illustrations in color, making it a valuable acquisition to The Children's Classics. Charming style and atmosphere, in which a few historic as well as imaginary characters give a touch of realism. In the process of simplification there is retained that indescribable element of interest which appeals to all ages of readers. Will bring to the little ones a world of delight.

Services at London in charge of Joseph Yeager. Interment services at Kirtland, Ohio, in charge of Lorenzo Powell.

HERE AND THERE DEPARTMENT

THE RED CROSS NEEDS MEMBERS

A big campaign is being made to secure 10,000,000 more members for the American Red Cross before Christmas. Though there are now over 5,000,000 members, there are not enough to meet the needs of this organization. There has been an overwhelming appeal for knitted goods of all kinds for our own men and for our allies.

A GOOD PLAN ALL AROUND

The secretary of the General Religio Society, James W. Stobaugh, says he is asking the officers who report to that society to number their paragraphs and letter any secondary items in the paragraphs. Those who have noted the difficulty in referring to these reports at convention time without this aid, will appreciate the situation. It would be fine if it were also done in extensive district or local reports.

COULD YOU DO IT?

"I was called into a store last week to put up our side to three Catholics, two Methodists, two Baptists, one traveling man, and three strangers, all at once," writes a correspondent.

ONE WAY TO SAVE PAPER

Those who do not have sale for waste paper may be interested in this suggestion from Brother A. G. Miller: "For saving of wood and coal, save all of your paper, put it in water and leave to soak for twenty-four hours. Take it out and roll into bundles the size of a snowball or larger. Put to dry in the sun, after which they may be used in place of wood or coal."

Brother Arthur W. Smith has not forgotten the home department in the effort to have all help in the Christmas offering. A letter is being sent to all district superintendents, urging that they also help.

WANTS CHURCH LITERATURE

Mrs. Florence Thompson, 136 North Second Street, Manistique, Michigan, has an outlet for considerable church literature at the county house. Some have been sent there and the demand is for more. Drop her a card before you send, and await her reply so she will not be deluged. Yet don't put it off, thinking everyone else will attend to it.

"WHAT EVERY L. D. S. FAMILY NEEDS"

Wellston, Ohio: "Read the sample copy of the November Autumn Leaves and am well pleased with it. I had never taken it as I thought the HERALD was enough for any Latter Day Saint family to take at a time, but I will have to confess that I was wrong in my belief. I have come to the conclusion that the Autumn Leaves is just what every family of Saints needs. It appeals to our young members and older ones as well. It should be a companion with the HERALD and Ensign in every family. I am sending a dollar for a year's subscription.—Sam Ely."

CHURCH LITERATURE AT SOLDIERS' CAMPS

We wish the local Saints in touch with the situation at the Y. M. C. A. buildings at the various camps would see to the supplying of our church literature there. If there is not enough available, let us know, and we are sure more can be had. It is an important matter and should not be overlooked.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

O beautiful star, that guided afar over valley and height, where are your rays to-night? They are blotted out in the dust and route and smoke of the fight. They shine not to-night. O beautiful song, full-toned and strong with angels' delight, where are your strains to-night? They are drowned by the crash of guns and the flash of shells as they break. The sad hearts that ache in this dark night of pain forbid that glad strain. The angels sit dumb in their heavenly home.

Some years ago President Joseph Smith said that the hastening time was at hand. Only about a year ago President Frederick M. Smith said that the hastening time was upon us. We are in the midst of it. Can anyone who observes current events doubt that these men told the truth?

We occupy a position different from that of any other people. We look at current history from a view-point different from that of any other people. Until three years ago the world was drifting in a haze of self-righteousness.

It was the general belief that the so-called Christian nations had accepted the gospel. We denied that assertion. It was held that man was becoming more civilized, more kind, more moral. We denied that contention. It was affirmed that we were entering upon an era of universal and lasting peace. Again we entered a denial.

Our position has been verified in such an astonishing manner that even we are almost stunned by the revelation of world conditions. One writer sums it up thus: "A veneer so thin separated us from barbarism that it cracked at the touch of a war lord."

That which has taken place is exactly what we have looked for ever since the organization of the church. The prophets are vindicated. But seen objectively it is so much more terrible than we had realized when contemplating it subjectively that we are filled with horror. Yet we have not reason to believe that we have yet seen the worst.

Having been forewarned we should have been forearmed. But if we have not made our preparation individually we cannot too speedily make it. We are assured that even the righteous shall hardly escape. Nor has the church entirely escaped thus far. But we may say with Jesus that if such things are done to the green tree what shall be the fate of the dead trees.

We may be assured that if events are hastening in the world, God will also hasten them in the church, as an organization. But each individual must make his own preparation in righteousness. The church cannot do that for him. Let us not move in panic, goaded by fear, but soberly, as men who stand in the presence of eternity and understand God's purposes. We must be more humble, more intelligent, more nearly absolutely pure in heart, that we may see God. Then can God use us for the accomplishment of his peculiar work and the consummation of his holy purposes.

A young soldier home on furlough recently walked into the office of his bishop and made out a check for seven thousand dollars tithing. A man wants to get square before he goes into the trenches. But is the soldier an exception? As Lyman Abbott says, "The soldier may be going to his death, but are we not all going to our death?" It is a good time for all of the Saints to "get square."

ELBERT A. SMITH,

GOOD WILL TO ALL MEN

We have been greatly amazed at the numerous attacks made upon the Germans in this country. Of course it is possible, and even probable that some are unpatriotic, but those whom we know are not such. They are Americans. The fact that the United States is at war with the hopes of putting an end to extreme militarism, and in defense of democracy against autocracy would seem to offer practically no reason for the exclusion of German from the public school curriculum.

To those who can read the German literature, it presents a sad commentary, amusing if it were not worse, to see this attempted exclusion of the German language, German literature and German music.

We should also recognize that while the Puritan fathers and the settlers of Jamestown came to this country in order to secure greater political freedom, and since other families have come from the British Isles and from France, so have many also come from Germany because they desire to escape that very thing against which we are fighting. They are not to blame for it. They left their fatherland in order to get away from it. They are willing to assist most of them to the extent of their ability, on the firing line, Red Cross, or bond issue while they have long practiced food conservation.

It makes our hearts sad indeed to note in some places a disposition to persecute them. Without tangible evidence a grievous error will be made if we suppose that a German community is necessarily anti-American. If we persist in attacking them, the injury is ours.

As pointed out by President Elbert A. Smith a month ago, it will be remembered that they have natural affection for the homeland, where probably dwell some near relatives. On the other hand they will be found generally loyal.

There evidently is something of a spirit of hysteria, in connection with this question. We hope nothing of it will be permitted to come into the church, but as members of the body of Christ, we shall exercise his charity, love and sympathy.

Recently we heard the suggestion made that the basis of these attacks upon the German language, German music, German poetry, was made on behalf of the central powers in order to stir up division in the United States, and especially to force a division in which those of Teutonic origin would be placed on one side. These people have not risen in behalf of Germany. If they could be forced to do so by any action however vindictive, it might be so much gain for the central powers. True Americans ought not to be engaged in such work.

But our real objection is that no Christian should assume such an attitude. We should love our enemies, how much more than the brother by our side! They should be given splendid credit for the help they are giving the Government in this hour of trial and the splendid support they have given the church.

The church stands for the broad brotherhood of man, the fatherhood of God, sympathy and help for those who suffer. The gospel is indeed good-will to all men.

WAR SAVING STAMPS

We have been sent some interesting information concerning war-saving stamps and certificates. No one can hold more than a thousand dollars worth, nor can anyone purchase more than twenty stamps or a hundred dollars worth at any one time. This month and January, twenty stamps would cost $82.40 as no interest is paid semi-annually, but only when the stamps mature, January 1, 1923.

Thrift stamps which are twenty-five cents each to help one in saving, can be exchanged when one has sixteen of them on a card for a war savings stamp by paying the additional few cents at the time of the date of exchange. Twelve cents for each sixteen up to January 31, and one cent more each month. They must be exchanged prior to December 31, 1918. These stamps cannot be turned in for cash. The only way they can have any cash value is for one to secure sixteen of them before December 31, 1918, then turn them in for a war-saving stamp.

Each war-saving stamp increases in value one cent a month up to December 31, 1922, and can be exchanged on ten days notice at any post office for this valuation. This means that December 31, 1922, each stamp will be worth four dollars and seventy-one cents, but January 1, 1923, it will be worth five dollars.

There is no advantage in holding thrift stamps except with the purpose of exchange, as they cannot be cashed in, and apparently have no value except for purposes of exchange for war-saving stamps.

The question should I take money out of the Savings Bank to buy war-saving stamps is answered, "No, you should save as much as you can every day and buy thrift stamps, and war-saving stamps with these savings." War-saving certificates are not transferable. War-saving stamps should be placed upon a certificate with one's name on it and then when it is registered it cannot be cashed by anyone else. If it is lost the Government will replace it. If a thrift stamp is lost, it is of value to the one who finds it. But if a thrift card is lost, it should have one's name and address upon it, and can then be dropped into any mailbox, and will be returned without postage or expense. An unattached saving stamp is of full value to anyone who finds it, unless one writes one's name across it.

We give the above information as it may prove of interest to some of our readers.

THE "MORMON BIBLE"

Numerous statements concerning the issue of a Mormon edition of the Bible has been sent to our desk with request for publication. The following from the Lutheran Witness is one of the more fair statements:

A new edition of the Bible has been issued in 1917, with a section inserted between the Old and New Testaments containing 118 pages of Mormon teaching. There is no mark on the outside of this Bible to distinguish it from the ordinary King James version. The cover reads, "Holy Bible, Cyclopaedia Concordance, Ready Reference, Oxford S. S. Teachers' Edition." The only indication of the evil hand of the Mormon Church is on the title page of the Mormon section, which states that it is "copyrighted, 1917, by Joseph F. Smith, Trustee in Trust for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." It is "Designed for the use of missionaries and other students of the Scriptures."

The Deseret Evening News, the official organ of the Mormon Church, prints an editorial entitled, "Important Help to Bible Study," in its issue of June 23, 1917, which reads as follows:

"A significant proof of the growing interest taken in the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and of the increasing public demand for its literature, is seen in the fact that not long since the publishers of both the Cambridge and Oxford Bible applied to the presiding authorities for a revised and authenticated copy of the 'Ready References,' which we desired for incorporation with the respective Bibles. It consists of quotations from the Bible, classified under appropriate headings in support of the fundamental doctrines of the church, these scriptural passages being supplemented by explanatory notes and citations from historical and theological writings of recognized importance."

When the first clipping was sent in we wrote to the Oxford University Press and learned from them that such a Bible was made for the Utah people for years past, by Mr. James Pott and Company, agents for the Cambridge Bible. Their answer was as follows:

The King James Bible has been made for the Mormon people for years, first by Messrs. James Pott & Co., agents of the Cambridge Bible, and for several years by us, with the Mormon "Ready References" inserted. We find in it no reference to polygamy, blood atonement, or politics.

It was made for them and sold only to them, and has on title page of the insertion the imprint: "Published by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints," and on the opposite page "Copyright by Joseph F. Smith," and on the outside of the book is stamped "Ready References."

A half truth is far worse than a lie, and some slanderers are in danger of serious trouble in the near future.

There was no deception, either intended or perpetrated.

We have for years sold them large quantities of the Bible, with no helps, and we were honestly glad of this opportunity to still further spread the word among them.

They will hereafter make their own books.

We have not the Deseret News for June 23 before us, but if such an editorial were printed it is evidently misleading. On the other hand many Bibles are printed with extra notes, pictures, various concordances, and the like, by request. Some have contained long articles upon other topics. There would seem no reason why such a Bible could not be printed for any people desiring it, with such extra notes or concordances as they desired. For the use they make of it the Oxford University Press could hardly be responsible. As to what use is made of it after its publication we are not sufficiently advised to answer, though we notice that the sectarian churches rather uniformly accuse them of misrepresentation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Christmas Gifts

There is still time to send to the Bishop's office, and have him send a Christmas certificate of a donation made by you for the sake of some loved one. Do it now, so that the return will be sure by Christmas morning.

Christmas Offering Honor List

It is very evident that we are going to have a successful Christmas offering. Up to the 10th of December, two hundred and fifty schools have reported success. We know there are many more who will make it, who have not as yet reported. Some may not be able to do it, but if you have done your best, your reward is sure. We are glad to see that those who are able to do better, are doing so, and are not stopping at two, three, and a few are not even stopping at ten dollars per member, but are continuing the good work.

The Second Assistant Superintendent, A.W. Smith, has sent out letters and report blanks for final report. As soon as possible after December 31, you should send him your statement. We plan in the first issue of February, 1918, to give a list, an honor list, including just the names of those schools which have made more than two dollars per member. In order to have your name on this list, your letter must reach Superintendent Smith not later than the twenty-fifth of January, which means that it should be mailed not later than the twentieth. It takes two weeks' time to prepare the lists, and have them set up. We have to allow over a week in the Herald Office, so please be prompt.

But do not rest content with this. Gather your moneys, send them in to Bishop B. R. McGuire, Box 125, Independence, Missouri, at once. All the money should be sent to Bishop McGuire. Your report may be sent to Superintendent Smith.

This is the last chance for the 1917 Christmas offering, and we are going to make it a big success.—EDITORS.

According to the San Francisco Argonaut, it has been estimated that there are 40,000 Jews in the British Army, including 8,000 colonials. About 30,000 are in foreign service.

THE WORK OF A BISHOP

Having been requested by the Editor of the HERALD to write a brief account of the work of the Bishopric, over the districts which I have been appointed to preside, I submit the following:

In May of 1900, I was ordained a Bishop, at Independence, Missouri, and at once was placed in charge of what is now the Eastern Oklahoma District which embraced Eastern Oklahoma and a part of Western Arkansas.

Soon after my ordination, Brethren Earl D. Bailey and A. L. Newton were selected as counselors and both have served with faithfulness and courage, Brother Bailey continuing his service to the present time and Brother Newton until called to his reward in 1907. At the time of taking active oversight of the work, the membership was scattered, but little known by them in regard to tithes and offerings for the greater number had been connected with the church only a short time; hence the work of education was necessary and the mode of procedure was sought through diligent work and fervent prayer.

From the first, I attended reunions and conferences, where I placed before the Saints, the temporal arm of our work.

Much good came through the round table and as a result of teaching, many are now willingly doing their duty; for the hearts of the Saints were open to the reception of the truth, to a willingness to perform duty; hence have paid their tithing gladly and as circumstances permitted.

It was in the spring of 1903 that the Spring River District, one of the oldest districts in the church, was placed under my charge. At that time it had a membership of about one thousand but now numbers about one thousand eight hundred. Many of our valiant and efficient men, who have now entered into their reward, lived in this district and did valuable service, viz: John T. Davis, D. S. Crawley, W. S. Taylor, Washington Short, M. T. Short, D. H. Bays, William Pendar and T. W. Chatburn. The last named had charge of the district for about four years and it was there he did his last splendid missionary work.

Other residents of the districts, belonging to the missionary force, who labored with godly zeal and courage, are Evan A. Davis, Warren E. Peak, John Arthur Davies, Ed. Wheeler and Brother Roy Budd, one of the live young men who has charge of the newly organized branch of Nowata, and is doing excellent work.

The Saints of the district have been highly favored, not only by the traveling ministry but by many valuable local men, among whom were Henry Smart, O. P. Sutherland, James Graves, Lesley English, Brother Thorp and others, also many valuable priests and teachers. The Saints have been forward in the honoring of God with their substances and for the last ten years, have been more than self-sustaining.

Brethren Heman C. Smith, Fred A. Smith, John W. Rushton, F. M. Sheehy and Frank Curtis of the Twelve, have presided at different times, rendering valuable service and receiving the hearty support of the membership. This district is now presided over by High Priest Charles Fry and under his careful and efficient management has made unusual growth. The recent district conference held at Weir City was a rather unusual one; the attendance large, meetings highly spiritual and a large volume of business was transacted. During it all, there was not one dissenting voice or vote. The names of eighteen or twenty were presented for ordination and same provided for, as also was the organization of two branches.

In the spring of 1911, the entire State of Oklahoma was placed in my charge, also the unorganized territory in Southern Kansas. In April, 1915, Brother Hubert Case was ordained as second counselor and rendered valuable service until his field of labor was changed from Oklahoma to Nebraska. His place was filled in the spring of 1917 by Albert Karlstrum, of Joplin, Missouri, a capable and worthy man.

Oklahoma has been a fruitful field. Some of the Saints have highly prospered and in turn have been liberal in the paying of their tithes and offerings and the past year has been one of gain to the church, both in number and spiritual uplift. Brethren laboring under appointment have had a busy year. The western part of the State was affected by severe drouth but the work under local brethren and Brethren Vanderwood and Christensen, has had no serious discouragements. The central district was favored by having High Priest Edward Rannie to preside and his educational work was very helpful.

Tulsa, the largest city in the State, is in this district and the branch there is a live one. It is presided over by Brother George Arl Kelley. Brother Orville and Sister Belle James, who are in charge of Hotel Tulsa, give excellent Sunday school and branch assistance as well as caring for the elders who pass that way. There are others who willingly assist in Sunday school and branch work, such as Brethren Peter Adamson, senior and junior, Brethren Brown, Rudd and Lucas, Brother Carl and Sister Cara Brand and many others. This branch has a comfortable house of worship, all paid for and dedicated. Brother Joseph Arber has been laboring long and faithfully in this district and is highly appreciated by the Saints. When he comes into their midst, they at once begin checking up their tithing accounts and getting their check books.

The Sperry Branch, ten miles north of Tulsa, is the home of Brother E. D. Bailey, first counselor. This branch is in excellent working order, and the Skiatook Branch, which is about fifteen miles north of Tulsa, is noted for its unity and loyalty to the church, for every member there is a tithing payer.

The Saints in these fields, almost universally, now have a well-defined understanding of the law of God, pertaining to the temporalities and this largely the result of careful and diligent effort, not only upon the part of the Bishop and his counselors, but of the priesthood, many of whom have labored faithfully to teach the people and to help them to arrive at a proper understanding of what the Lord required of them. One essential part of our work was to establish within the minds of the Saints, confidence in the men whom God had selected as his legal and authorized representatives and to urge that the superiority of our work was vested in an authoritative form of divine Government; hence if it is a success, as God ordained it should be, then undeviating faith in God and in men of his selection, must be observed. It is well to know that the Saints are standing shoulder to shoulder with the church representatives and I am thankful such harmony prevails.

As bishop, I have endeavored to be well and faithfully represented among the people, either by myself or agents and have endeavored to select men who were acceptable to the Saints. I desire to say in behalf of these appointees that they have, without exception, rendered excellent service and labored with commendable zeal and been faithful to the trust and confidence bestowed upon them.

The traveling ministry have proven very efficient collectors, especially in sparsely scattered districts, among scattered and isolated Saints, and their work is greatly appreciated. I am a believer in cooperation and one can readily see that I have applied it to this part of our work and I can say, without reservation, that success has attended.

Some have suggested that with so many handling money, loss was liable to occur, but we have never had one dollar misplaced, or not accounted for by anyone who has collected funds from the Saints. All have proven themselves men of God and trustworthy.

I have occasionally mailed to the Saints a brief circular letter, seeking to encourage and strengthen them and urging the demands of our work. This has resulted in much good. I also endeavor to closely affiliate, either directly or through representatives with the people. An almost universal reciprocity on the part of the Saints has resulted.

I have unfailing confidence that as the demands of our work enlarge in territory, willing men and women will rally to its support as they have in the past. Notwithstanding the high cost of living, individual tithes have far surpassed those of any previous year.

The times are perilous, more so than ever before visited mankind. Disaster crowds upon disaster and nations rush madly into the conflict. Conditional protection has been promised to those who honor the law of God, not a negative honoring and not with mental reservation, but fully and completely.

Are we ready to say as one of old, "Speak Lord! thy servant heareth"? "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when you do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3.

ELLIS SHORT,

Bishop of Oklahoma and Spring River District.

(In this field Bishop Short reported receipts of $9,316.81 last year, from Oklahoma, and $3,285.60 from Spring River District.)

TWO GREAT LIVES---A CONTRAST

(Summary of a sermon by Elder R. D. Weaver. Reported by Sister Ivan Pritchard.)

There is a rule that holds good in nature everywhere and that is, that things are more readily understood and in fact more deeply appreciated by way of contrast. For instance, having never known bitter, we could not enjoy the sweet. Having never known sorrow, we would not be able to appreciate joy. Having never been sick, we would not be able in the fullest sense of the term to appreciate the priceless boon of health, and to-night I believe that you will grant me that all things, to a greater or less extent, are understood by contrast.

So I purpose this evening, if the Lord in his transcending love will deign to give us a portion of his Spirit, to contrast the lives of two famous men of history, from a Biblical standpoint. My texts are in contrast one with the other because one is found in the Old Bible and the other in the New Testament.

Both might be termed the last words of these two great men.

In Ecclesiastes 1: 14, 15, you will find our first text, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit. That which is crooked cannot be made straight." The second is in Paul's letter to Timothy:

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Timothy 4: 6-8.

Now the thought that we wish to get before your mind from this reading is, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

These two Bible characters come before us tonight occupying the extremes we have mentioned. First we desire to consider the life of Solomon. When he bursts forth upon our vision first, we find him cradled in the lap of luxury, reared in a palatial home surrounded by every comfort that his heart could desire or money could buy. I presume that he never had a wish that was not granted him. He was his father's joy and pride and while David, his father, occupied as the king of Israel, recognizing the fact that Solomon would take his place, he doubtless inculcated in his life every principle that he felt would be conducive to spirituality and would assist Solomon in occupying wisely as king over the hosts of Israel.

We follow him in his course through boyhood and we see that he was a wonderful boy and grew to be a wonderful man. In childhood his father told him the story of the bitter part. He directed his feet in the proper course and told Solomon the mistakes that he had made and how that in his heart he had yearned to do the work of the Lord, that he had indeed made preparation to a certain extent for the accomplishment of that work, but because he had fastened his eyes upon the rainbows of delusion and centered his hope upon the things of earth rather than the things that are above, God could not and would not permit him to occupy, where his soul yearned to occupy. Here he warns the boy of the pitfalls that are before him.

There is no parent who has tasted of the bitter, but what longs to shield his boy or his girl from the same thing. There is no parent that has wandered from God, but what longs to see his boy or his girl continue within the confines of that straight way, that leads from earth to realms of bliss and happiness in the kingdom of God.

As David took a retrospective view of all his past I see him entering his secret chamber and pouring out his soul to God that the Father would put around his son the protecting arms of his care and shield him from the pitfalls and dangers in his pathway.

He tells the boy of his heart's desire that yonder on Mount Moriah where the glory of the Lord had been revealed in Moses's time he had longed to rear a structure known as the temple of God. How he had even prepared some of the lumber to place in that wall, an evidence and monument of God's mercy and love. But by reason of the fact that he was a man of war and his soul was stained with sin, God had told him that it was not meet that he should occupy in the capacity of the one who should rear that wonderful edifice.

I believe that David, as he looked back and realized all that he had lost and what little he had gained by his deeds, could indeed say with Whittier, "Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these, it might have been."

He tells the boy, however, as the sunset of his life is westering and the shadows are lengthening around him, to come to his bedside and Solomon comes in response to that fond voice and bows at the side of his father.

I see the trembling hand laid upon the young man's head and he tells him the story I have told you—the mistakes of his life had been many, the sins of his heart had been more and he says:

My son, do not make the mistakes that your father has made, do not fall into the ruts that your father has fallen into but may your life be like the snow-flakes—leave a mark, but not a stain. Solomon, my boy, it is my desire that after I am gone, you shall occupy as king over Israel. To this were you born and to this end have I nourished you and taught you. And now I trust that when I am gone you will labor for the accomplishment of the work that I have longed to accomplish and upon Mount Moriah build the temple I hoped to build.

I see the golden treasures of the soul as they stand in the eyes of that young man and he says, "Father, God helping me I will. I will do the best I can for the accomplishment of the work you so much desire." And the spirit leaves David's body and winds its way to the place of rest.

Solomon ascends the throne. The sceptre of Israel is placed in his hands. The royal robe of state is placed upon him and the retinue of servants come and make obeisance to their king. Solomon sets to work to build the temple.

He builds the temple, but before he undertakes this great task I see him one evening as he goes to his room. His servant removes the livery that adorns him and making deep obeisance withdraws himself and leaves Solomon alone with his God. I see that man, upon whose shoulder the burden of the kingdom of Israel rests, bow before his God and I hear him say:

While I am to be the king of Israel, thou art the Monarch of the universe. While I may be looked up to and honored by the people of my kingdom, thou art worthy to receive honor, glory and power for thou hast created all things and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

As the Spirit of God moves upon this man I hear him supplicate the throne of grace and in language about as follows:

Thou God who hast created me and before whom the angels and archangels bow the knee in humble adoration; thou God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and God of my father, David; thou who hast led me all my life long, do thou deign to lend a listening ear unto the cry of thy servant. Thou knowest that I have been called to occupy as the king over Israel, but I feel my nothingness. For as a grain of sand when compared with the mighty mountains, so am I when compared to thee, O God. Before the earth was made and the mountains formed from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God and the earth is thine and the fullness thereof and the cattle upon the thousand hills. But Lord, while I am called to occupy I realize that I am not able of myself to conduct myself in a becoming way before thee. I am not able to take charge of the hosts of Israel in a way that will reflect the knowledge and power of God unless thou dost deign to bless me. So in thy infinite kindness and tender love wilt thou bless me with those things, which in thy superior wisdom thou seest would be for my good.

If Solomon had always occupied in the capacity of humility as when possibly he made such a prayer, the story that I am telling you to-night would never have been told. God listened, and we are told that when Solomon laid down upon his downy couch and his eyes closed in slumber, an angel from the presence of the Deity on high left the shining courts and came to that room.

I see that beautiful room in that beautiful palace adorned with gold and silver and precious stones, aglow with the glory of God. I see the wondrous light that the presence of the heavenly messenger poured around him and I see him as he stoops and lays his hands upon the brow of Israel's king and in his slumber Solomon listens, while the angel informs him that God has heard his prayer and has sent him the angel to ask him what he desires most of all in life and he tells Solomon that it shall be granted him.

I presume that had that been you or I, we would have said,

Lord, I want to occupy in the annals of fame. I desire wealth and honor and to be looked up to and respected. I don't like to go through life bound down by the chains of ignorance, but I desire to be so equipped and qualified that I may occupy anywhere and feel at home there. Lord, fill my coffers with wealth.

But it was not so with Solomon. He knew that God expected more of him than those things. So I see him while he listens and I hear the angel say:

Think well, Solomon, make a wise choice. Decide now, but do not decide too quickly, for when your decision is once made it is made forever. I cannot be recalled.

Friends, I have thought sometimes when I have seen our young people halted between two opinions, the angel of purity standing on their right hand pointing to that which leads to peace and rest and the angel of sin and of iniquity (possibly in the person of some one whom they love) standing on their left endeavoring to lead them down the old trail that leads ever down, where those who follow, look with shy glances over their shoulder and pursue a meandering course of pleasure and sin until they have lost their all; if they could when they stand with reluctant feet between the two opinions only make the wise choice; if they could only choose the better part and realize that way brings death, while the other way brings life, how much sorrow, misery, woe, despondency and gloom would be spared us. But too often we listen to the siren's song of delusion until the bark of our virtue and purity is dashed upon the shores of sin. Too often we follow the rainbow of delusion looking for the golden bags of treasure and when we find them they bring us only sorrow and leave us an aching void.

So the angel said, "Think well, Solomon, and make a wise choice now," and Solomon says, "Father, the best thing, the greatest thing in all the world to me is wisdom. Lord, endow me with intelligence that I may be able to occupy wisely as mediator between thee and thy people, Israel, as king over the hosts where thou hast placed me. Cause me to know men."

Then the angel returned to God and entering the shining portals delivered the message, and God was so highly pleased that he endowed him with the greatest wisdom that man ever possessed. And because he chose this the Lord said that these other things—wealth, honor, health, and fame should be added to him. It was a wonderful thing.

Solomon was humble then. If he had always remained in that condition, the story I am telling you to-night would never have been told.

Solomon set to work and God gave him wisdom. We find that he wrote 3,000 proverbs and 1,005 songs. He had 40,000 horses and 20,000 horsemen. His one day of provision for the palace alone was 115 bushels of fine flour, 556 bushels of meal, 20 oxen, 100 sheep, roebuck and fallow deer.

Wealth and honor were his to command. His fame spread world wide and his court was one of the most magnificent in the world. His retinue of servants had never been equaled. The queen of the East, (the Queen of Sheba) heard of his fame down in her domain. She could not believe it, so she left her country, journeyed up to Jerusalem, where Solomon showed her through the temple, the palace and the court.

She listens to his wonderful wisdom and she says, "The half has never yet been told."

When I have traveled through cities and have gone through parks beholding the flowers in their dazzling beauty growing in profusion on every side and listen to the songs of the birds, I wonder could there be anything more beautiful in all the world, then when I read the language of the apostle where he exclaims, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man what God has prepared for those who love him," I must exclaim with the Queen of Sheba.

That city where the glory of God's presence glitters o'er the jasper walls; that city that shall be the eternal home of all the faithful of earth who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Solomon in his glory was a wondrous sight to behold. He had one wife, but later his heart departed from the Lord. I believe that one of his first mistakes was forgetting to pray. Had he remembered to be as humble as he had been, he would not have forgotten to pray. But he became so taken up with the cares of life that he says, "Well, now, this morning, I am too busy for family prayer. I have not time," and the next morning he offers a short prayer and says, "Lord, I am too busy to pray any more this morning," and he goes on about his work. It is a fatal mistake. God has said that man should always pray—not a vain prayer, but the soul's sincere desire. God lets his blessings flow as a peaceful river upon those who are in rapport with him. But Solomon forgot to pray.

He forgot his God and fastened his eyes upon women, so we are told that he had seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines. The clown in the circus or in the show used to sing, "Old Brigham Young has forty wives, but I'm content with one." One is enough. I don't want any more.

Solomon says (and surely he ought to know), "He that has found a good wife has found a good thing," but he also says, "It is better to live in a corner of a housetop than with a brawling woman in a whole house." He centered his eyes upon the rainbow of the delusion of this world and he went away from God.

He constructed the great temple known as Solomon's Temple. It took seven years to build it. It took 10,000 men 11 years to cut the trees that were needed; it took 80,000 hewers of wood, 70,000 men to bear burdens and there were 80,000 squared stones in the building. After it was completed he declared a festival of seven days in celebration of the finishing of the work and 120,000 sheep and a lot of oxen were killed and eaten at the dedicatory festivities. He made the most wonderful prayer that man ever made when he dedicated the temple. The roof of that wonderful building was of olive wood covered with the purest gold and it dazzled the eyes of everyone that looked upon it. The building and its courts would accommodate thousands of people. The pillars were of the finest marble that could be had. The gold on the inside of the building was worth millions of dollars and the silver was also of great value.

But Solomon was not yet satisfied. He looked at it and he knew that it must perish. It was not a building that was made without hands. It would crumble to dust.

He sets to work to beautify the city. After he constructed the great temple he turned his talents to the making of Jerusalem into a beautiful city. Flowers of every kind and hue were there and as he wanders through the courts gazing upon the beauty of nature that grew about everywhere, I see him, dear friends, after he has accomplished all this, that I have called your attention to, one day walking out in his beautiful garden. He stands in the shade of those stately trees, and he sits beside the fountain as it sends up its beautiful spray, the sun shining upon it causing a rainbow to burst forth. He looks at all these things.

Suddenly the door opens and he sees his wives surrounding him. He sees that they are also growing old. He looks at his hands. He sees that he is getting old. He looks at all that there is around him and as he sees he has lost his hope in the world beyond, he wrings his hands and says in the words of our text, "All is vanity."

He looks back over the course he has followed and he sees the first time the bypaths lead him away from God and he says, "That which is crooked cannot be made straight." I cannot go back and live it over. I cannot redeem time, and like one of old when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, he cried unto God that God would give him his youth again. "Take me back and let me follow the straight course and I will live my life different."

But, my friends, it was too late. He could not go back. It was impossible; he could not redeem his misspent years. How is it with you and me? Now is the time to remember that though we have the most beautiful things in all the world, if we refuse to sell them all and buy the pearl of great price they will profit us nothing.

(Concluded next week.)

We must admit that the anaemic, sallow likeness of Christ does small credit to his divine Father in whose image he is made, or to the traditional beauty of his mother, while the quality of the contemporary regard which he evoked has a more normal explanation if we conceive him as the fairest among men, who withstood all the temptations of blandishment, and perversion, while he worked out the loftiest beauties of the soul.—G. Stanley Hall.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A JEWISH TRIUMPH

Mr. Balfour has written to Lord Rothschild a letter conveying, on behalf of the Government, the following declaration of sympathy with Jewish Zionist aspirations approved by the Cabinet:

His Majesty's Government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country.

In an article welcoming the declaration as "a Jewish triumph," the "Jewish Chronicle" writes:

"With one step the Jewish cause has made a great bound forward. Amidst all that is so dark and dismal and tragic throughout the world, there has thus arisen for the Jews a great light. It is the perceptible lifting of the cloud of centuries, the palpable sign that the Jew—condemned for 2,000 years to unparalleled wrong—is at last coming to his right. The prospect has at last definitely opened of a rectification of the Jew's anomalous position among the nations of the earth. He is to be given the opportunity and the means whereby, in place of being a hyphenation, he can become a nation.

PROUD AND ERECT

"Instead of, as Jew, filling a picture at best equivocal and doubtful, even to himself, and always with an apologetic cringing inseparable from his position, he can—as Jew—stand proud and erect, endowed with national being. In place of being a wanderer in every clime, there is to be a home for him in his ancient land. The day of his exile is to be ended.

"The determination at which the Government has arrived is doubtless the result of political circumstances which have shaped themselves by the war. And what has probably been one of its chief considerations in the course it has adopted is the necessity for making of Palestine a prosperous country, independent and vigorous, and that by reason of the Empire's obligations to Egypt and its responsibility in respect to the Suez Canal.

"But the idea is by no means of to-day. The setting-up in Palestine of a National Jewish Home was favorably viewed by that great Egyptian Pro-Consul, Lord Cromer, as well as by that far-seeing Imperialist, Joseph Chamberlain. Nor has the Government hastily come to the conclusion that a Jewish Palestine would be helpful to the best interests of the Empire. The declaration now made may be traced, for the beginnings of the policy which animates it, to the days when the great founder of the modern Zionist movement, Dr. Herzl, negotiated with the British Government in respect to proposed settlements, first in El Arish and then in East Africa.

ENDING OF BRUTAL SUPPRESSION

"We have called the Government declaration 'a Jewish triumph.' It is in truth much more. It is a triumph for civilization and for humanity. For it points the way to not alone an ending of the brutal suppression of our people from which directly they have suffered the last 2,000 years, but from which civilization, albeit indirectly, has suffered no less certainly.

"It will mean releasing for mankind, as a great spiritual force, the soul of our people, cramped and bound as it has hitherto been because of the world position till now assigned to the Jew. The time can at last be described when the Jews will be able, without let or hindrance, to perform for the world his mission of Judaism, that mission which alone is the justification for his existence as a Jew, and the sense of his responsibility for which has alone enabled him to endure the untellable suffering to which our people have been subjected."—London Chronicle, November 9, 1917.

IMPORTANT SERIES OF ARTICLES ON THE JEWS AND PALESTINE

[Believing our readers may wonder how to keep in touch with developments in the Holy Land and increase their knowledge concerning it, we present the announcement The Sunday School Times is sending out. It offers some pertinent queries.—EDITORS.]

Did you know that Jewish colonies have been tried in Argentine, Brazil, Canada, the western United States, and Palestine, and have failed everywhere but in Palestine?

Did you know that the new question now facing the Jews of Europe is, What shall we do with our freedom?

Did you know what startling success was attending the Zionist or Jewish colonies in Palestine up to the time of the war? For example:

That the Jewish population in Palestine rose from 25,000 in 1880 to 43,000 in 1890, then to 95,000 in 1910, and was still gaining when the war broke out?

That the steamships and sailing vessels clearing from the leading port of entry to Palestine's Jewish colonies increased about 100 per cent in seven years?

That in one of the Jewish colonies the price of irrigable land rose from about $17 an acre to $180 an acre in twenty years, while the value of the colony rose from $6,000 to over $3,000,000?

That the Jewish colonists increased the productivity of Palestine soil from the Arab's yield of $5 an acre to their own yield of from $20 to $25 an acre?

Did you know that the Jewish National Fund was founded in 1901 to purchase land in Palestine as the inalienable possession of the entire Jewish people, never to be sold, but only leased?

Did you know that the Palestine Land Development Company buys and develops large tracts there for settlers?

Did you know that the Jewish Colonial Trust, Ltd., of London, with its subsidiary, the Anglo-Palestine Co., Ltd., has many branches in Palestine engaged in all kinds of banking business?

Did you know that Palestine is the only land in the world where the use of Hebrew as a spoken language is being successfully revived—and on the lips of children at play?

No, of course you didn't know these things. We Christians have been too busy with our own mistaken programs to pay much attention to what God has said in his Word the Jews would yet do, and what he would do for them.

And so we haven't even read the newspapers intelligently nor kept in touch with the most thrilling of all current events.

But we're learning better. The Sunday School Times in a sensational yet soberly scriptural series of articles on the Jews publishes an article by a Jew giving the ardent Jewish Zionist's hopes and convictions.

Elisha M. Friedman, Secretary of the University Zionist Society of New York, who speaks for the Jews as a Jew, has packed his message with startling facts.

It is followed by a Christian Hebrew's interpretation of Zionism: Max I. Reich discusses the meaning of the vigorous movement to give Palestine to the Jews.

Your newspaper and your Bible will teem with new meaning after you have read these articles.

This amazing Jewish series in The Sunday School Times includes such topics as the following:

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Christmas Offering—Roll of Honor

Nebraska City, Nebraska, write, "You may be assured our spoke will not wobble. We have it safe now, but cannot say how much more we will be able to do."

Phoenix, Arizona, report, "Our school enrollment is 27 and we have more than the $54 required to send in a complete spoke when the wheel comes our way. Although we may not be able to send in as much per member as some of our schools, we are going to keep on working and doing our 'bit' till the time allotted for this year's offering is up."

One Sunday school in the Northeastern Missouri District organized on the first of October, with six members, and they now have $51.50 for their offering at the present time.

Kansas City Central Sunday school report $562.81, and will doubtless reach $600. Their membership is 242.

Scammon, Kansas, are still working. They expect to have some class socials, and a final program on Christmas evening. They have $23.47, and have set their mark at $100.

Valley Center, Michigan, have a membership of 26. They report that their offering exceeds the $2 per member mark by $52, and that more is coming.

Bay Port have more than $2 per member.

A. G. Miller, wife and family have sent $2 each to the bishop.

Thurman, Iowa, have a membership of 56 members. They report $100.15.

Merlin, Ontario, has reached the $2 per member mark.

The Tulsa Sunday school has 90 enrolled. They have already sent in $210 to Bishop McGuire, and report that there are more "offerings in sight, so we are hopeful."

Pana, Illinois, have a total attendance of 30. They state, "We want to beat the $100 mark."

Taylorville, Illinois, have $200. "We expect to have quite a bit more before Christmas."

The Vinalhaven West Side Sunday school, Maine, has a membership of 14 members. They certainly are doing well. They write, "We have $174.20 to date. We have gathered it mainly by consecration. Some of us smoked herring and sold them, while three of us who have fish weirs have consecrated the income from a bushel of herring each week, for which we receive from $1.50 to $2.50 per bushel."

"We want you to know that we are awake here," writes the Spokane, Washington, Sunday school. Their membership is 75. They set their mark at $2 per member, but report up to December 1, $211.17, with the best month yet ahead.

Wiley, Colorado, have passed the $2 per member enrolled, and state that they "have one more month in which to work." They have 68 enrolled, with an average attendance of 50.

New Liskeard, Ontario, write, "I hereby notify you that we may be among those schools who are in the Roll of Honor, and who have done their best to try to have the church debt paid. We still intend to put forth a strong effort until the last, so that we may receive the blessing that is intended for those that have done their best." They, too, have reached the $2 per member mark.

Orion, Michigan, write: "We now have about $1.09, or over five dollars per member. We expect to raise more before December 31."

Fulton, Iowa, Christmas offering last year was a little over $21. "We have fixed our mark this year at $100. We have on hand to date, $67.15."

The following additional schools report $2 per member, or over:

Henrietta, Missouri; Warrensburg, Missouri; Skiatook, Oklahoma; Little Sioux, Iowa; Sharon, Pennsylvania; Saint Thomas, Ontario; Vancouver, Winnipeg; Corinth, Ontario; Kirtland, Ohio; Blenheim, Ontario; Tulare, California; The Plains, Ohio; Niagara Falls, New York; Plymouth, Massachusetts; Almo, North Dakota; Cherokee, Iowa; Kimball, Ontario; Knox, Indiana; Omaha, Nebraska; Taborville, Missouri; Allen, Nebraska; Sandwich, Illinois; Longwood, Ontario; Elgin, Illinois; Merlin, Ontario; Parsons, Kansas; Herschel, Saskatchewan.

Church Progress Measured by Ours

A. Carmichael,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: I have just read and reread your sermon as published in the HERALD for the 5th of this month, and I want to congratulate you on the stand you have taken. People are inquiring everywhere what the leading men are doing to redeem Zion, but do not think for a moment that there is anything for them to do, and my effort has been to constantly hold before the Saints that it is the individual effort that is going to count. The leading men of the church can plan and advise till the heavens fall, but if their plans and advice are not taken and put into operation by the individual there can never be any results, but the Saints have been waiting for years to see what the other fellow is going to do, and nine times out of ten if one starts to do something the others will stand around and prophesy failure.

I am asked nearly everywhere I go what progress the church is making, and I always answer that it is making just as much progress as you are making individually, that each person is an integral part of the church, and the church can make progress only as its integral parts are making progress, and that as each member fails to take advantage of the privileges the church offers him, just that long will the church fail to reach its ideal, and will fail until each person finds his or her place and fills it, and fills it well.

I believe, however, that the church is making progress, so I am not going to be one of these calamity-howlers, but it is making progress only as the Saints wake up to their duties and privileges, and endeavor to cooperate with those whom they have chosen for their leaders, and gradually they are waking up, just as some whom you mention in your sermon are making the effort to carry out the law. May their tribe increase.

May the good work go on, and may God bless you and your colaborers in the work that you are trying to do and may he inspire the hearts and wills of the Saints to sustain you by their means as well as by their prayers. Prayers are such empty things without works to back them up.

Yours in bonds,

H. O. SMITH.

DO YOU OWN YOUR HOME?

If not, change this condition right away and begin working for yourself. In the territory along Burlington Lines in the West there are countless opportunities for the homebuilder and the investor.

WESTERN NEBRASKA AND NORTHEASTERN COLORADO excel in dairying, live stock and grain raising. Non-resident owners have many well-located farms ($25 to $50 per acre, with terms of payment easy), which they are unable to develop. Any industrious farmer can become well-to-do on one of them in a remarkably short time.

WYOMING.—Big Horn Basin irrigated lands—near to beet sugar factories, oil refineries, coal mines and other natural resources—which grow big crops of wheat, oats, alfalfa, sugar beets and potatoes, can be bought at $50 and up per acre. Some very desirable 640-Acre Free Homesteads, in a large area, are still available.

Ask for folders outlining the advantages of these sections. Write me about your plans and I'll give you the benefit of my experience. No charge for this—it's a part of Burlington Service.

The acme of negation, therefore, is found not in the above denials of historicity but in the liberal repudiation of divine elements in Jesus by the higher criticism. It is impossible without flying in the face of even the Ur-Markus, to reduce the central figure of the New Testament to merely human dimensions. Hence the above attempts to reverse this process and consider him as a God from the starting point are opportune.—G. Stanley Hall.

During the Long Winter Evenings

Resolve that your time shall be spent in reading and studying some of the church books you have long hoped to read.

You'll be surprised at how much you have been missing if you haven't read the following books:

Young People's History—By Vida E. Smith. While it is written primarily for young folks, none of us are too old to enjoy reading it again and again. No. 126, cloth, postpaid$1.00

Beatrice Witherspoon—By Emma Burton. A story of the life of an active missionary's wife, who traveled much with her husband not only on this continent, but in the islands of the sea and to Australia. Inspires faith and gives courage. No. 360, cloth, postpaid$1.30

The Mormon Girl—By Pauline Dykes. A story of romance and intrigue among the Mormons in Salt Lake City, showing some of the perniciousness of plural marriage and the dominance of true love. No. 371, cloth, postpaid$1.00

Peter Bosten—By John Preston. In it a young man strives to comprehend the spirit of this work yet would resist it. Is finally converted. Has church characters you will know. No. 374, cloth, postpaid$1.00

Memoirs of W. W. Blair—One of the most influential men of the Reorganization and the story of his life is largely the story of the early days of the Reorganization. Valuable for its historical data as well as its spiritual concept. No. 236, cloth, postpaid$.75

With the Church in an Early Day—By Marietta Walker. The development of the church in story form. Sister Walker has put her life into the book but you forget that in the spiritual concept of the work. No. 375, cloth$1.00

Book of Mormon Talks. By "Orion" (H. O. Smith) who understands the minds of boys and girls. The Book of Mormon story briefly and simply told in conversational form. You and the children will enjoy the simplicity of the story, and remember the teachings thereof. No. 365, cloth$.60

THEY BRING RESULTS, TOO

Elder E. E. Long has had some striking posters made by a professional sign painter, varying from four to six feet in length, all three feet wide, in colors which he uses in conspicuous places, usually in theaters where he is billed to speak. One of his posters bears these words: "This lecture, The Divided House, will open your eyes. It's different. Come and see." Another, illustrated with a man with a megaphone, reads thus: "Ho! The secret is out. Latter Day Saints have been telling the truth. The churches are wrong. Leading ministers admit it. To-night Elder Long will tell the story of The Divided House." The Divided House is a late book by one Reverend Rogers of the Presbyterian faith.

AND EVERYONE APPRECIATED IT

"I have $7 from subscriptions for my Christmas offering, from a total of 73 orders taken," writes Elder Matthew W. Liston, who simply went out in Flint, Michigan, and easily found them. Others have done almost as well.

HEALED FROM BLINDNESS

Sister James Caffall recently found herself totally blind upon waking in the morning. Brethren Sidney Pitt, sr., and Charles Putnam were called in, and after administration her sight was restored as it had been. She is past ninety years of age, and resides at Magnolia, Iowa.

It was Brother Arber, and not Brother Aylor, who spoke in the evening at Terlton, Oklahoma, dedication. Brother Arber remained two weeks, preaching a series of sermons, baptizing four and blessing two children.

"A good, old-fashioned social meeting," was held in Seattle, Washington, on Thanksgiving Day, largely attended. The sacrament service was very excellent and progressive. The pastor, Brother J. M. Terry, says they are working to advance the spirituality among the members rather than the addition of new members, though both are desirable.

A good book is the precious lifeblood of a master spirit embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life.—Milton.

Who that is intuitive, ingenuous, and spontaneous, in bringing himself to bear with all his resources upon some theme or cause, has not had the experience of feeling himself caught up or swept along (or occasionally restrained like Socrates) by a higher power which he felt to be not himself, but which we now interpret as the soul of the race breaking into that of the individual? This complex of submerged constellations, which man has always been prone to conceive as superhuman, divine, or demonic possession, the afflatus or inspiration of a muse, or a revelation from on high, Jesus interpreted as his sonship. Holtzmann, Baumann, and other recent Christologists have emphasized as a chief trait in Jesus' life and character that instead of being occasionally dominated by this higher self he was almost continuously so; that, in a word, he was nearly always a trifle ecstatic, exalted, erethic, or in a state of spiritual second breath.—G. Stanley Hall.
