The Medina Branch of the Southwestern Texas District has been disorganized. Letters of removal will be issued by the president of the district, countersigned by the secretary of district. All persons concerned who wish to make any inquiry or requests, may address E. L. Henson, president of district, 120 Pleasanton Road, San Antonio, Texas.

Resolution of Condolence and Respect

The following resolution was adopted by the conference of the Eastern Colorado District held in Denver, February 24, 1917:

Whereas, the Lord did, on February 18, 1917, call to rest our brother and fellow laborer, Elder James Kemp,

We, the Saints of the Eastern Colorado District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, do respectfully express our feelings of deep sorrow and sympathy at the separation from one who has been for forty years a standard bearer in our midst.

We do not forget the fatherly service which he did render us in our days of sorrow or blessing.

By him our children were blessed, our sons and daughters

This advertising talk by the manager of the Board of Publication is one of a series appearing simultaneously in the SAINTS' HERALD and "Zion's Ensign," written with the hope of reaching as many as possible of the church membership. This is the fourth of eight "talks" that will appear.

Your Job Printing

It is generally agreed that it pays to use much good printing in these days of keen competition. The business men of the world will judge us by our letterheads and the character of our advertising.

Our church publishing houses are equipped to do first-class job work in addition to publishing the periodicals, books, tracts, etc., of the church. They can do your job work satisfactorily and as reasonably as it can be done locally and the profits will go directly into the funds for the work of the church.

Why not cooperate with your church publishing houses and thus add to your efficiency directly and indirectly?

were joined in marriage, he ministered to our sick, he spoke the consoling words when our loved ones were laid to rest, comforted and admonished with words of wisdom at our firesides, and was often the mouthpiece of our God in delivering messages of cheer to many, and ever held aloft the royal banner of King Emmanuel, pointing us continually to the Lamb of God as our perfect pattern.

At our conventions and conferences we shall miss him. The vacant room and chair in our homes which he has enjoyed so long will be a constant reminder to us of the life of the Master, whom he constantly emulated, thus spurring us on to action in the rugged walks of life.

May the loving peace of the Master of men evermore abide with those who sorrow, and faithfully keep them in the way of life, till the reunion of the just, when parting shall be no more.

SELECTIONS FROM AMERICAN POETRY.—One of the Macmillan Pocket Classics: The Macmillan Company, New York, 25 cents, 373 pages. A very convenient and well edited 16mo, cloth bound book, uniform with the series of English texts this company is having edited for use in elementary and secondary schools, with critical introductions, notes, etc. A good book at a very low price. Order from this office.

REPRESENTATIVE SHORT STORIES.—A new member of the Macmillan Pocket Classic family: The Macmillan Company, New York, 304 pages, 16mo, 25 cents. Excellent for schools but valuable for anyone. The stories are clean and wholesome and from well-known authors. Carefully edited. Order from this office.

LETTERS FROM MANY PENS.—By Margaret Coult, published by Macmillan Company, New York City, 16 mo., 374 pages, 25 cents. This is a neat little book containing 144 letters which are presented as models in letter writing. These letters are classified and indexed so that easy reference is possible. They include letters from young men and women to those older in years, and from those of older years to young persons. They contain witty letters, as well as notice of invitations, replies and requests. These letters are by masters of style and are presented as a study in literature.

Fewer Eggs are required with ROYAL BAKING POWDER

In many recipes the number of eggs may be reduced with excellent results by using an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, for each egg omitted. The following recipe is a practical example:

Chocolate Sponge Roll

1/4 cups flour	2 tablespoons melted shortening
1/2 teaspoon salt	1/4 cup hot water
1 cup sugar	1 teaspoon vanilla
2 eggs	2 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
2 squares melted chocolate

The old method called for 4 eggs and no baking powder

DIRECTIONS—Sift flour, baking powder and salt together three times. Beat whole eggs. Add slowly sugar, then boiling water slowly; add next vanilla, melted chocolate and melted shortening, without beating. Sift in dry ingredients, and fold in as lightly as possible. Pour into large baking pan lined with oiled paper, and bake in slow oven twenty minutes. When done, turn out on a damp, hot cloth, spread with white icing and roll.

Booklet of recipes which economize in eggs and other expensive ingredients mailed free.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH

On April 6, at ten o'clock, the sixty-fourth General Conference of the Reorganized Church was opened by President Frederick M. Smith in the Brick Church at Lamoni.

President Frederick M. Smith is already well known to the church, either by personal contact or by his work and published likeness. His assuming the grave responsibilities of his office has marked in some ways the opening of a new era. He has for years been making special preparation for his responsible position, and is able when necessary, to meet educated men everywhere on a plane of equality. His intellectual power is well known and has been a subject for favorable comment for many years.

But his deep spiritual power is not as yet so well known; though it will be when people become better acquainted with him and realize that he is not only president of the high priesthood, but also prophet, seer and revelator to the church. We have been well acquainted with him for the past twenty to twenty-five years and realize how against objection, criticism and misunderstanding, he has still persisted in his work of study and preparation.

But he has done so from no sense of vainglory, but from a deep appreciation of the responsibility of his position, and because of an impulsion so strong that it has been to him divine direction, leaving no other choice. We are confident of this both from personal conversation and because, against criticism, which has been less it is true, the writer has also felt that impulsion as a divine command, which left no other choice than the continuation of school and college work.

We have watched with great interest the Spirit of God working with him, preparing him for his present position. It has not been a matter of a day, but years of steady, spiritual growth, until his spirituality is so deep that some of his brethren, failing to fathom it, have not realized its power.

In May, 1906, we were present at a series of meetings conducted by him and Bishop Kelley. On the evening in question, the brother who introduced President Smith, paused to give some of his own spiritual experiences. He had been a former missionary to that place so felt justified in giving a few personal details.

Brother Fred M., as we like to call him, looked over his glasses, as if to say, "Well, I wonder what he thinks he is handing them anyway." But on this occasion instead of remaining silent, he spoke his thoughts; and when he arose before giving his text he said:

"I have been much interested in listening to what Bro. — has just said. Many times I have sat in the conference, and have noted the old gray haired men, who have stood by my father and upheld his hands in time of trouble, have counseled him when he needed counsel, and have helped him in carrying that great burden; then I have looked around and wondered where are the men who will stand by my side, uphold my hands in time of trouble, help me to bear the burden of the work, counsel with me and share with me the responsibility. I do not know who they are nor where they are, but I have this consolation, they are known to my heavenly Father and will be made known by him in due time."

We might cite many personal conversations bearing the same impress, and showing also a growing sense of the responsibility and the need of divine direction.

His wife, Sister Ruth Cobb Smith, has told us that his faith is so great that it makes her feel like a child compared to him. He prays simply and directly, without repetition, with the confidence that God hears and will answer.

His knowledge is great. It is true that he does not pray to learn how to spell or how to read. But through his humility, on that knowledge there is founded a transcending faith, greater, far greater than would be possible to a man without a similar intellectual grasp.

He strongly favors education, but he is not carried away with it. A year ago we were present in an assembly of students and scientists. It was an assembly, every one of whom was a doctor of philosophy, or a master of art, or expected within a month to be such.

The discussion was running rather strongly with the theory of evolution, for with many it was assumed almost as a fundamental dogma. The particular theme was college boys and religion, and much stress was laid on the fact that many college boys became disaffected towards the church, and this period of "storm and stress" was made coincident with collegiate work, with the idea that growing knowledge showed the old doctrines to be untenable.

In fact, this period of storm and stress comes sooner or later to every growing man whether a college student or not, as a period of revaluation.

One of the men, himself a minister, said that no theologian of reputation ever preaches these old fogy ideas of creation, and more along the same line. Fred M. at the first pause remarked, "I do not believe that is fair to bring in the idea of reputation, Men are doing it all over the country. Whether they have the reputation is not the question."

Another minister then took up the gauntlet to urge that the churches are progressive now, that not a man is admitted to the ministry who is not a graduate of a theological seminary. Fred M. replied, "Might that not be taken as an evidence of their narrowness. I dare say they are keeping many a good man out of the pulpit, who would get mighty close to the people, if given a chance."

This shows his deep conviction. Education is not an end, but only a means to an end. Nor is collegiate or university work a prerequisite to righteous service. Every man and woman should secure all the training, preparation, or you may call it education, that he can for better service. But we may rest assured that no test will be applied which will keep out the fit man, because he has not been through some college, or through a college or university. This is not a title of what could be said on this topic.

President Smith has been many times presented as an intellectual giant. We would set him forth in this short sketch as a spiritual giant among men, but a humble son of our heavenly Father.

THE "JOURNAL OF HISTORY" FOR APRIL

The April issue of the Journal will contain an article on "Lamoni," showing that the place where it is located was disputed territory between Missouri and Iowa at the time of the church troubles in Missouri, hence it was territory from which Governor Boggs desired to eject the Saints, and also a part of the territory to which Governor Lucas of Iowa welcomed them. Incidentally the border line difficulty is treated upon.

"Dreams and visions of the yesterdays" is an article by Vida E. Smith, descriptive of a research trip in 1914 and treating interestingly historic features of places visited. Both these articles are highly illustrated.

A third article is a sketch of the experiences of Mary Helen Grant, portraying vividly the life of women under the rule in Utah, and her deliverance under the ministry of the Reorganized Church.

The serial on Presidents of Seventy contains the autobiography of James F. Mintun, one of the active and zealous missionaries of the Reorganized Church, and the close of the biography of Isaac N. White whose record forms a part of the history of the church.

Another chapter in the history of Lamoni Stake by Duncan Campbell is of special interest.

These with Current Events and the Necrology of Asa S. Cochran, James Anderson and John R. Evans, make this number one of vital interest to the Saints.

In the article on "The Jews," by Edward Rannie, appearing in the HERALD of March 21, a mistake occurs on page 271 second column, 28th line. "One half of the percentage," should read, "one half of one per cent."

NOTES AND COMMENTS

We Are Sorry

All the copies of the first issue are gone and the subscriptions continue to come in. On Wednesday about a hundred and fifty arrived and each mail brings more in spite of the fact that we urged for weeks that orders be sent in early. The number printed for the third issue was 2,400.

To Our Readers

In order to give our DAILY subscribers some matter, we include two summaries from the conventions. "The educational aim of the Religio," by Mrs. Alice M. Burgess and "Story-telling for teachers," by Sister Eunice W. Smith. These are printed in connection with the convention minutes.

Are You Willing?

As a favor to those who have to do with such matters in the future, and in behalf of the thousands who try to follow the proceedings of the annual sessions, we suggest this:

Let every paragraph of the official reports be numbered from one to the end. If there is a need, some paragraphs in groups could be additionally subnumbered by a, b, c, etc. When referring to these, either in debate or in the publications, this would greatly aid all concerned. Why not? We couldn't get along without such a method in the three standard books, could we?

The President's Report

Special attention should be given to the report of President Frederick M. Smith in the present issue of the HERALD. We have thought to publish a summary, but the report should be read in full by every member of the church. It is epoch making and lays the basis not only for the coming year, but for several years to come. Practical features will, no doubt, receive special discussion later.

In this trying hour and time of advancement, every church family should have the HERALD to keep in touch with what is being done and planned by the First Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric.

Special Concert for the Red Cross

Sister Marie Riggs will give a concert on Tuesday night, April 17, at 8.30, in Saint Francis Room, Hotel Baltimore, the entire proceeds for the benefit of the Foundation Fund for the nurses in the New Christian Church Hospital Unit. Mrs. Allan Taylor will sing, and Mr. Henry Rittmeister, Concert Meister of the Kansas City Symphony Orchestra will render a solo. Mr. Wallace N. Robinson has graciously donated the Saint Francis Room for this hour.

The purpose of the above concert is for the benefit of the nurses of the Red Cross. Every nurse who enlists in a unit becomes a member of the Red Cross. The fund is used for their benefit and has nothing to do with church or hospital. The concert is free from expense, as everything has been donated—Sister Riggs and her assistants donating their services. We are informed that William Bushnell is handling the sale of tickets at Independence.

The poorest education that teaches self-control is better than the best that neglects it.—Sterling.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

The day began with a meeting of the priesthood at 8 a. m. in the lower room of the church. Promptly on the hour President Frederick M. Smith called the assembly to order and Apostle F. M. Sheehy offered prayer.

Every seat was filled and a number were standing in the rear.

Walter W. Smith was presented as the speaker of the hour and occupied thirty-five minutes. President Smith offered the opening and closing remarks. The topic was Zion and the gathering, and definite emphasis was laid on the fact that gathering is not sufficient—personal preparation and work are essential. A resumé of the remarks will appear.

The benediction at 9 a. m. was by S. A. Burgess.

Immediately at the close of the 8 a. m. meeting a meeting of the high priests' quorum was held in the room at which they organized and transacted incidental business. All the quorums have now organized for work and report matters in good shape for the work of the conference.

BUSINESS SESSION

At 10 a. m. the conference began its deliberative assemblies.

The opening prayer was by Patriarch Frederick A. Smith.

President was by motion and vote chosen to preside and empowered to choose associate presidents. As usual he was authorized to further complete the organization.

R. S. Salyards, the church secretary, was chosen as secretary of the conference, and R. S. Salyards, jr., as his assistant.

The church chorister, Albert N. Hoxie, was chosen chorister, to arrange for assistants, both vocal and instrumental, as necessary.

The ushers appointed by local officers were to act for the conference.

A feature of our present conferences is a wireless department. How strange it would have seemed to our grandparents! Yet we suppose that if Congress declares that war exists, the wireless stations of Lamoni and Independence must be dismantled according to Government action.

A new and much appreciated feature of this conference was an address to the body in the form of a written report, which was read by the president.

It was voted to send a copy of that part of the report referring to the war by wire to President Wilson, a rising vote being taken, practically unanimous.

Early adjournment was taken to allow delegates time to organize.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON

The session at 2 p. m. on the 6th was opened with a prayer by President Frederick M. Smith after the congregation had soulfully sung "My times are in thy hands."

The printed reports of the various officers, auxiliaries and committees were distributed at the morning session and now taken up. Some required only spreading on the minutes, subject to further action, while the recommendations and requests in others were referred to the Joint Council or adopted at the time.

Those simply spread on the minutes were:

Bishop's annual report, Board of Publication, General Sunday School Association, Inspired Translation—teacher's edition, Library Commission, ministerial reports, order of evangelists, recorder, revision of church history, Saints' homes, (of Lamoni, Iowa), secretary, social purity board, Zion's Religio-Literary Society, Order of Enoch, committee on Young People's History, Children's Home.

The report of the auditing committee on the accounts of the bishopric and church institutions was adopted.

A letter "From somewhere in California" was read to a responsive audience, which instructed the secretary to wire its recognition, sympathy and love to the writer.

The letter is as follows:

"FROM SOMEWHERE IN CALIFORNIA"

To the General Conference; Greeting: Just a few words by way of report and greeting: Up to November last I continued my usual church work. But at that time my little world in which I was very busy and very happy fell to pieces suddenly. Since then I have been resting,—so I am told.

Let no one envy me, for it has been the hardest work that I have ever done. Longfellow says:

"Human hearts, like mill stones,
Are driven round and round;
If they have nothing else to grind,
They must themselves be ground."

I have ground and eaten a liberal grist; but feel that a better day is dawning. I hope to emerge from the "Slough of Despond" stronger and wiser and with a clearer message.

At present I am gaining in strength and health daily.

My prayer is for the progress of Zion and that you, my brethren, may enjoy a splendid conference. I thought to-day of the hundreds of loved colaborers soon to pour into my own home town of Lamoni, and it gave me a wrench in my left side where a fool's heart is proverbially located. Lest I fall into that category I will do well to close and try to forget the conference for the time being.

Faithfully yours,

March 30, 1917.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The conference ratified the appointment of Richard Salyards, jr., as assistant secretary of the church and in a few brief words he expressed his willingness to enter into the work and seek to master all its details.

While we expect to reproduce the reports in full as we have space, we cannot do so at once, so will give a summary of what was done with them at this time.

The report of the church recorder was emphasized by the chairman as having some statistics of exceptional interest to those willing to look for them.

It was noted that the Woman's Auxiliary is now known simply by that name, they having dropped last year the "for social service" part of their title.

In the report of Graceland College there is an expression of their needs in the form of a budget. In the Sanitarium report is a similar budget. Both were referred to the appropriations committee of the order of bishops for recommendation.

In the President's report he refers to the statement of the manager of the board of publication that the Journal of History is being published at a loss and recommends that it be referred to the Presidency, Twelve, Presiding Bishopric and Board of Publication for investigation and action. This was done.

The same applies to the committee on a biographical dictionary and the recommendation indorsed by abolishing the committee.

The committee on Book of Mormon concordance reports "the greater part of the work done" but suggests that special care will be required in the completion. The report was adopted and the committee continued.

Some errors were noted in the reports, which will be corrected before the issuance of the official minutes of the conference, which includes them.

The committee on a memorial to the martyrs reported that their work had been hampered by a lack of funds. On the suggestion of the president, this matter was referred to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric.

The request of the social purity board for an appropriation of fifty dollars was referred to the appropriations committee of the order of bishops.

The report of the committee on American Archæology was briefly discussed. A motion prevailed to abolish the committee and allow the Joint Council to appoint such men as are necessary to carry on archæological investigation.

The appointment by the chair of the following committee on boundary lines was approved: R. S. Salyards, C. I. Carpenter, O. W. Newton.

A communication from the Far West District asking that the district be made a stake, was referred to the joint council.

There was a communication from the Northern California District, asking for the establishment of an institution in the West such as the Saints' homes now maintained by the church. It was referred to Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric.

The Mobile, Alabama, District asked that the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric and minister in charge of mission be appointed a committee, with power to act to carry out provisions for a church exhibit in their district. There is to be a Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Mississippi, the present year. The usual features of such an exhibit are contemplated. The request was complied with.

On inquiry the President stated that it was not necessary to take such action to provide a church exhibit.

A request from Toronto, Ontario, that the church be allowed to incorporate in Canada was referred to the joint council and bishop of Canada.

Attention was called to the articles of incorporation in which the authorities provided for by the statutes of Iowa may "further incorporate whenever and wherever the interests of the church may require." On motion the matter was so referred.

The San Francisco Convention League sent in an invitation to the conference to meet in their city next year. London, Ontario, did likewise.

Last year the conference referred the question of mixed bathing to the First Presidency. Their report recommended no legislation and that it be referred back to the Victoria District. It was urged that local church authorities could offer such suggestions on improprieties in this matter as they could on any other procedure.

Much argument followed and eloquent arguments were presented. A substitute was offered as follows:

"Moved that the Reorganized Church in conference assembled direct that mixed bathing generally carried on in the world and usually bad, be advised against by all of our people."

The recommendations of the presidency were adopted after the substitute was denied.

After announcements the benediction was offered by J. S. Roth.

FRIDAY EVENING

The speaker at the Coliseum at 7.45 was Bishop R. C. Evans, he to deliver a series of sermons at that place during the time when conference is in session. His subject was "The Godhead." His subject to follow is "What shall I do with Jesus?"

There are to be three sermons on Sunday—10.45, 2.30 and 7.45. His Sunday subjects are: "Come unto me," "Resurrection," "Deathbed repentance."

Before the bishop arose to tell the audience that he had preferred to remain in Toronto and conclude his series in the theater at that place, people were being turned away because the house was full. Some remained standing during the entire time.

There was a fair attendance at the church where Hubert Case was the speaker. "In the building up of Zion we must lay a foundation that is strong and unassailable," seemed to be the theme of his effort. There was a large choir.

We went around and took a look at the orchestra, where A. H. Mills had gathered about fifteen musicians with their instruments. Some were compelled to transpose the music as they played and other difficulties were found, but we are confident that if there is a way to unite the efforts of the players thus gathered, it will be done.

We note a disposition to slack up a little now that the strenuous times of the conventions are over. Each evening meeting during the five days of the convention began at seven and lasted till quite late and while they were all appreciated, there is manifest a disposition to try to recuperate.

SATURDAY FORENOON

The day began with copious rains. The eight o'clock meeting of the Melchisedec priesthood in the basement of the church was well attended. After adjournment the seventies held a joint meeting of the three quorums. Peter Anderson of the Twelve was present representing that quorum. "The priesthood and its uses," was the subject matter under discussion.

The high priests met at the Methodist church this morning and we are informed that the elders will meet next Monday forenoon. We expect to furnish some details of the work done at these meetings.

The prayer meeting at the church was in charge of W. S. Macrae and Ammon White. The speaker at the church at 10.45 was John J. Cornish.

During the forenoon the heavy rain turned into a driving snow that developed into the worst snow-storm of the year.

A "story feast" was held at the high school building during the forenoon. Mrs. Walter W. Smith was in charge and an extensive program of stories for

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS TO THE CONFERENCE

The following was read by President Smith to the General Conference at its opening session, the forenoon of April 6:

To the General Conference: The past conference year the members of the First Presidency have acted in their office according to the circumstances existing. The two members of the Presidency have worked together without friction; but not having office room together they have necessarily worked at some disadvantage. However, we have kept in quite close touch with each other by wireless communication, telegraph, letter, and personal conference. Brother Elbert A. Smith, counselor, up to about the first of the year kept up his work as editor of the THE SAINTS' HERALD and Autumn Leaves, and in addition has accomplished a great amount of literary work in connection with the Publicity Bureau, in writing tracts, special articles, books, etc. He rather over-worked with the not unusual result that he suffered a breakdown, and for the past three months has been recuperating in California, though he chafes under the enforced restraint from work. I am glad to say reports from him are encouraging though he has been advised to rest sufficiently long to guarantee the necessary reserve of energy and vital force.

As for the undersigned, with the exception of a trip east in May, to Canada in the fall, to Oklahoma in December, and to California in January, he has remained at home most of the year giving attention to office work, routine executive work, and such special work as was made necessary by the legislation of last General Conference. The changes in the Presiding Bishopric entailed extra work in the Presidency's office as well as that in the Bishopric. I am pleased to say that in this work of readjustment there was displayed on the part of the retiring Bishop and that of the incoming one a fraternal cooperation and uniform courtesy which contributed much towards lightening the arduousness of the work.

It can scarcely be amiss here to observe that in my many years of official association with Bishop E. L. Kelley he has always shown himself to be a gentle and courteous collaborer, a wise counselor, and a stalwart defender of the faith; an almost tireless worker, his first efforts have always been in the church's interest, and to him the church owes a debt of gratitude for long and faithful service in an office which is one of the most difficult to fill.

Bishop McGuire and his colleague, Bishop Keir, are working hard at mastering the details of the office, and the way they are conducting the affairs of that office cannot but win the confidence of the church membership and officials. They deserve, and we beseech for them, the hearty support of the Saints. Since assuming the responsibilities of the office Bishop McGuire has kept in close touch with the Presidency, consulting with us on all important matters. The details of his work are set out in his report, and we suggest a careful reading thereof, for it is desired that there shall be general information regarding the workings of the financial department. With the steady growth of the church membership there is a widening of the scope of its activities, as a concomitant there are necessarily changes in the methods of various departments. As the work of Zion's redemption with its various ramifications goes on apace, the work of the Bishopric as a whole will expand, while the corps of officers therein increases. Hence in this department there will come soon many changes to meet new conditions, and on these changes the live church member should be informed.

Of the work of the members of the Quorum of Twelve the past year, not much can be said out of the usual. Their work has been carried on much as in past years. Statistically you may see somewhat of their work reflected in the reports submitted to Conference. In a more detailed way each member has reported regularly to the Presidency as to the work of each conference appointee, and the work of their fields, while by correspondence and personal contact where possible we have kept in touch with them on special development in their respective fields.

To the work of the Twelve and the relation of that Quorum to the Presidency, I have given much thought. Out of respect to custom I have been slow to make changes in their work; but with the gradual change of conditions the system of the past has in many respects failed in accomplishing all that could be desired. This fact alone might justify the inauguration of some changes. In addition thereto is the further fact rapidly becoming apparent to all, viz., that we are entering upon an era which points clearly towards Zion conditions. This admonishes that we must seek the safety found in a multitude of counsel and in cooperation. I have, therefore, made bold to suggest to the Quorum of Twelve a change of policy which materially affects their appointment and work, and necessitates a rearrangement of our missionary force. I am pleased to say that after some discussion of the matter the Quorum of Twelve unanimously voted to support the move and put themselves in position to carry out their part of the work. In brief the change is to do away with the plan of appointing the individual members of the Twelve as missionaries in charge of specific fields, thus leaving them free to labor more directly under the Presidency. Entering, as we believe we are, upon a period of greater and more intensive efforts both in missionary and in local work, this regulating quorum must be left free to functionize, as contemplated in the law, in carrying into effect the executive policies of the Presidency upon whom is cast the responsibility of the work in all the world. By proper consultation and fraternal cooperation, the Presidency, working with the Twelve and Bishopric, hopes thus to expedite the work of organizing Zion, building up the Saints, and warning our neighbors.

Along with this change affecting the work of the Twelve will go a change affecting the entire list of conference appointees, for the mission field boundaries will be changed, and the line of demarcation between missionary and local work will be more sharply drawn. It means specialization of effort and qualification. The standard of efficiency will be raised. This will probably mean the reduction (for the present at least) of our list of appointments; but the vacancies created will, it is hoped, be filled in due time by selections made among the members of the priesthood not now under General Conference appointment. Of this we shall probably have more to say before the assemblage of those holding the priesthood. This change will enforce a more compact organization of the work of the general officers of the church, and emphasizes the necessity of soon securing adequate office quarters. For the work of the various department heads in church work to be properly inter-related, their activities must be clustered around those of the Presidency's office.

Our office has endeavored to keep closely in touch with the various quorums of the church; and while some progress is made in this direction, it is far from satisfactory. It is hoped that the change indicated above will improve conditions in this direction.

From the presidents of the various districts we have endeavored to secure regular reports reflecting the conditions existing. The degree of information conveyed by these reports varies much from report to report. A district president who knows little about his district is not likely to impart much knowledge to us. We have observed that a district president's observation on the spirituality of the district is quite as likely to reflect his own condition as that of the district. A district president of high ideals, clean life, and refined spirituality is disposed to report the spiritual condition of the district poor, when as a matter of fact it is much better than that of another district the indifferent president of which reports the spirituality good. A church officer measures his flock by his own ideals; and the lower his standards the more easily are they reached. So we are not always discouraged by a poor report on spirituality nor elated by a good one. But there are two things strongly brought out by our district reports, viz., indifference and inactivity on the part of many of those holding the priesthood, and an average attendance at meetings of less than thirty per cent of the enrolled membership. Where lies the remedy?

Just here we may well speak briefly of an event which may hold promise of the remedy. It will be remembered that last conference a movement was launched looking to a division of the Independence Stake. Though strongly opposed from some quarters the recommendations of the Presidency and Twelve prevailed, and in June and July arrangements were made and completed for the organizations authorized. Within a very short time after the organization of the new Independence Stake, of Holden and Kansas City Stakes, and the reorganization of the Lamoni Stake, the wisdom of the recommendations of the Council and the action of the conference was made apparent. The work has gathered an impetus, spirituality has been enhanced, and members and officers have become awakened to a sense of duty and to activities quite gratifying. The promise is bright for still better things. The great thing emphasized is that progress is promoted by specialization of effort, limitation but intensification of activity. A small piece of ground intensively, intelligently, vigorously cultivated yields better results to a man than a larger field poorly attended. The fruitage from a larger acreage is secured by an increase of the labors. And in this may lie the suggested remedy above mentioned. Limitation of range, but increase of intensity of activity, together with specialization of effort and talent. This can be brought about by compactness of organization with increase of labors, if there is consecration of talent and energy with the coordination of effort found in unity of purpose. And this means that somewhere there shall be a well-recognized directional force. On the whole, however, our reports reflect a general awakening among the membership. This is far-reaching. From the president of the South Sea Islands, even, there comes the report of a remarkable spiritual awakening. Everywhere the eyes of the Saints are turning Zionward and they see there the idealized spirituality. A native Hawaiian sister recently wrote a letter to the Presidency in which she said that besides paying her tithing, contributing to the branch treasury and assisting the missionaries, she had saved and deposited in the bank one hundred dollars to assist in the redemption of Zion. She found pleasure in being able to make the contribution, and asked where to send it. If in far-away Hawaii there is thus so strongly impressed the desire to consecrate towards Zion's redemption, what can we not say of the possibilities before us under the influences of the spirit of consecration developed by the presence of God's Spirit.

Of the foreign missions we cannot say much further than that under the direction of Brethren Butterworth and Hanson of the Twelve, the work in Australia is forging steadily ahead. Last Christmas their first mission conference was held. It proved beneficial and gave a forward impetus to the work. In Germany, Palestine, and Scandinavia the work has been greatly hindered by the present European War. From our representatives in Germany and Palestine we have not heard for months. In England the work has been hindered, and will be more so by the recent law that no longer are clergymen and men of holy orders under sixty years of age exempt from military duty. Many of our officers will be called to the colors. It may be necessary to send from here many men to care for our work there.

It is to be hoped, too, that we may now begin preparations which will put us in position to vigorously prosecute foreign missionary work when the present war has run its bloody course, for in the readjustment religion is destined to play an important part.

In the recent past there seems to have been a renewed agitation of the question of the gathering. As we enter more largely upon the activities of Zion, this question is of growing importance and it is likely to hold the attention of some of our speakers even more than it should. Much good advice on this has been given in the past not necessary to repeat here further than to iterate and emphasize the admonition that our gathering be without undue haste and that it be well prepared. Ministers, especially those sent out by the church, should not in their advice on this question run counter to that of the leading church officials, and in sermons and conversations our ministers should avoid exciting the Saints to unwise movements. In some places branches have been left helpless by Saints and particularly officers of branches moving away ill-advisedly. Our people seem at times afflicted by a nomadism which engenders instability. This nomadic tendency has at times been the chief factor determining the "gathering" to Zion. Let us be wise on the subject of the gathering and abide the instructions given in the law and await with patience the call of the proper officials.

Along with the general awakening throughout the church there has appeared in the auxiliaries of the church an increased activity and interest, and a desire to more closely adapt their efforts to those of the general church. In their reports to this conference some of the results of their work are to be seen; perhaps of the three the most remarkable has been the development of the Woman's Auxiliary. That society is doing much in uniting the various women's organizations in the church, a work needed, and promising of good results to the church. In the report of the president of this society will be seen a recommendation or suggestion touching the Purity Board or committee. The suggestion that the committee be enlarged and the additional member be elected by the Woman's Auxiliary is good, and should be approved.

To an item in the Recorder's report we wish to call attention. He reports a total of 32,319 absent from branches. In many of the reports from district presidents this item is emphasized, and the Recorder's suggestion is good wherein he asks for the assistance of missionaries and local priesthood in reducing this number. Let me suggest, further, that the statistics presented by the Recorder should be carefully studied by the priesthood, particularly those under conference appointment. Of these and statistics allied to them we will likely have occasion to speak before the priesthood meetings.

In the report of the Board of Publication will be found some comments which ought to be of considerable interest as they affect the general question of dissemination of church literature. I refer to that part of the report touching circulation of church papers, cost of materials, etc. The report also calls attention to the fact that the Journal of History is being issued at a loss. The question of its continuance is raised, and inasmuch as the issuing of the Journal was first authorized as a result of a suggestion from the Presidency, we now recommend that this question raised by the board in its report be referred to the Presidency, Twelve, Presiding Bishopric, and Board of Publication for investigation and action. The Church Historian in his report has expressed his opinion of this matter, at least so far as the Journal is concerned.

In this connection we call attention to another matter mentioned in the Historian's report, viz., the request for increase of office force. On this matter we recommend that for the present at least no attempt be made to do so. With a readjustment of our office forces, we feel sure much of the work done at the Historian's office can be done by other departments. There is in several directions unnecessary duplication of work in various departments, which we hope to avoid by closer organization.

Among the committees reporting to this conference is one on a biographical dictionary. This committee reports nothing accomplished. The Presidency does not think that for a work of this kind there is sufficient demand to justify the effort. We therefore recommend that the committee be discharged.

It will also be observed that for some years past there has been a committee on Monument to the Martyrs. If this committee is to be continued, a change should be made. The present committee was selected largely by reason of offices they held, and as several changes have occurred we suggest that the present committee be discharged; and that inasmuch as this matter will of necessity involve the raising of funds we further suggest that the whole matter be referred to the Order of Bishops to formulate and report plans for the accomplishment of the purpose, and that they nominate a committee of three to further carry on the work if they decide that a committee is necessary.

The report of the college trustees will be of interest to the delegates. We feel that President Briggs is to be congratulated on his success in securing credits and recognition. And he well raises the question why should not the church be as ready to utilize Graceland equipment for the furthering of our work, as is the State. It is a question worthy of careful attention.

At last conference a question arose concerning the division of the Toronto District. It will be remembered that this was referred to the Presidency and the missionary in charge of that field. After consultation it was decided by those to whom the question was referred, to recommend to the next district conference that the division be had. This recommendation was approved; and as a result Owen Sound District is now organized in what was formerly a part of the Toronto District. The new district seems to be fairly well organized and in working order.

Several matters are likely to come before this conference involving the question of district boundary lines, and we suggest that all such matters be referred to a committee for investigation. We have appointed as such committee on district boundary lines the following brethren: R. S. Salyards, church secretary; C. I. Carpenter, church recorder; O. W. Newton, secretary to the President. We ask for your approval of this appointment.

Among other matters which may come to this conference from the Australian mission conference is one involving the question of determining the ex officio membership of the mission conference, as they ask if priests should be granted ex officio rights. I would suggest that this question be referred to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric for answer.

At various times in the past the question of biennial conference has been discussed, and tried once. I see no serious reason why we should not establish the custom at some time, and it may be now is the time. With the change in the work of the Twelve as outlined briefly in another part of this report, it will be quite feasible to make by joint council action of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, such changes in appointment as contingencies may make necessary. In fact, it is not at all unlikely that the new order will result in several interim conferences, appointments or changes. The money saved by this change can, of course, be used to good advantage. We quite fully appreciate the educational advantages of the General Conferences, and this feature must not be neglected. But in the more compact organization of stakes and districts which we hope to promote, the more frequent stake and district conferences made feasible thereby, offer educational advantages to the membership in much the same way as do the General Conferences, (and it is to be hoped this feature will be more and more emphasized) while improved quorum work and local priesthood meetings offer similar facilities to the ministry. We are therefore of the opinion that at this conference serious consideration should be given to the question of making the General Conference biennial rather than annual.

Along with this question goes another of importance, viz., adequate quarters for the General Conference. A building suitable in arrangement, appointment, and space should be built, and the conferences held therein. It can be so constructed and situated that it will be of constant service other than for these annual or biennial gatherings. We suggest therefore the consideration of this question also.

Shortly after the organization of the new Independence Stake, in order to meet what appeared to us a demand, the Presidency appointed an educational commission whose function would be to organize and conduct classes in such subjects as might be desirable and for which there would be demand. As chairman of the commission we appointed Brother Walter W. Smith. In September regular class work began, and has since been conducted, the classes meeting largely in the evenings, and at the church. The commission has reported to the Presidency, the report showing that up to February 1, there was a total enrollment of pupils of 315, a net enrollment of 230 who attended 70 per cent or more class periods. Classes are conducted in twenty-one subjects, under eleven different instructors. One hundred and thirty-nine dollars has been collected and $133.00 expended. This showing is remarkably good, and it is earnestly hoped this school work will steadily increase in scope and efficiency.

As per action of last conference, changes were made in the Standing High Council, and we are pleased to say that the council thus organized has been able to functionize as the advisory council to the Bishopric, and also in the selection of high priests, and this in addition to other work.

It will be remembered that last conference a movement was inaugurated looking to some organization among the boys of the church. A committee was appointed and by report we probably shall learn of the progress made. The boys of the Second Independence Branch, feeling the need of some organization, have acted on their own initiative, and through their officers have reported to the Presidency.

We this year meet under conditions never before confronted by the church. Despite consistent effort prolonged in patience, the United States has finally been drawn into the terrible world war. What it will finally mean to us as a church no one can foresee. Our strong belief that this Government was guided in its formation by divine power and wisdom carries with it an abiding faith that our destinies are still being guided by the Omnipotent Hand. The gospel of the Christ is one of peace, as his followers we cannot but preach peace; and whatever shall eventually be the attitude we assume in this crisis, we cannot but remember that at times the people of God have been compelled to wage sanguinary battle. Though as we believe the United States was founded by Divinity for this purpose, yet its establishment was sanctified by sacrifices made in war, while later its unity was fixed by the fraternal conflict which placed on the altar the best manhood of North and South. Since its inception as a nation the United States has pursued a steady course as the champion of liberty, and much of the progress made in the development of international law has been due to her ever ready defense of the principle of freedom.

On its first appearance I read with deep interest and concern the recent address of President Wilson to Congress and was profoundly impressed with its keen statesmanship and its deep pathos. Not since Lincoln's day has its equal appeared among American State papers. We deplore war; but if this country must enter the conflict as now appears inevitable, may we not thank God that we do so under the leadership of one with a clear envisagement of the great principles at issue, and who will wage war not against a people, but against corrupt government and in the interests of democratic freedom.

As a church our work is onward. The signs of the times point to imminence of momentous events. Everywhere there are evidences of an awakening among our people which indicate that God's Spirit is moving mightily among us. The hour has struck for Zion's redemption. May we under God's guidance be equal to the difficult tasks that hour brings and have grace and strength for the responsibilities confronting us.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 6, 1917.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

THE EDUCATIONAL AIM OF THE RELIGIO

There is a period in the life of man—lying between childhood and manhood—which has inspired poets, philosophers, romancers and musicians from time immemorial. In fact it would be safe to say that a large per cent of the world's literature deals with this age. In modern times it has furnished soil for exhaustive psychological research.

Poets and romancers call it youth, psychologists have named it adolescence.

This golden period abounds in great stirring impulses, in half awakening, incoherent instincts and desires.

It is the time of spiritual awakening, when the soul gives birth to altruistic, social, and religious aspirations; the time of the awakening of the higher powers of the soul.

This, the greatest problem of modern psychologists, the problem of the adolescent, is the educational task of the Religio.

It is a vast task and a weighty problem, but I know of no other institution so fitted, by its very plan and organization, to cope with it. And I know of no other church so well equipped for the solution as is this church where we may receive direct guidance from our Lord.

I shall discuss very little methods by which we may attain our educational aim. I have little faith in stereotyped methods, for in order to succeed in this work we must be ready to meet each new problem with a different method—we must be resourceful and fit our method to the case in hand.

I have attempted, however, to analyze briefly the educational aims of the Religio, trying to fit them to the nature of the adolescent, as psychologists have read it.

One big ideal of the Religio is the mental training of our youth. Everywhere in the church and in the world there is a crying need for straight thinkers, men and women who when given a problem can think through clearly and honestly to its solution, who can look a difficulty in the face and think through and around it till it is turned into an advantage. Mental self-confidence and resourcefulness are at a premium everywhere.

In the Religio we have the very finest opportunity to develop these mental attitudes; especially so in our extemporaneous programs. A speech, discussion or song delivered on the notice of a moment brings to the successful young orator or singer a sense of mental independence and self-confidence which a like event prepared for weeks in advance would never bring.

We do not have enough serious debating in our Religios. There is much that the program committee can do to make a debate successful. The subject should be carefully chosen—a subject which is of vital and personal interest to the young people, not some great world question which our greatest statesmen have never been able to settle.

By a series of preliminary debates the local can choose a champion team of debaters, who in turn could debate with other locals and the district convention could be entertained with a contest among the two or three most able teams.

Youth is the time of self-discovery. Talents before dormant and unguessed, awake and demand recognition. The Religio is by its very organization and plan fitted to aid our boys and girls in this task. But to be able to help them the president or his committee must know sympathetically and personally each young person.

I have been in Religios where one fourth of the people furnished the most of the program the year round. This means that those already expert exercise their talents—and sometimes it means that the most of the program is given by older people with years of experience and training. Where such is the case I am of the opinion that the Religio fails sadly in its mission.

Then we must give youth a chance for self-expression. There is room for more original work on the Religio programs; original short stories, essays, poems, songs, or one act plays or pantomimes, to give vent to the dramatic instinct. Youth loves to express its own thoughts and fancies and to find them of value and interest to others. The Religio program work is a splendid preparatory school for the training of church workers. Let us arrange and use it scientifically.

An elderly man had missed the privilege of a college education. He had started at the bottom of the ladder—in his twelfth year, and had worked up to the top. He had then traveled, read much, had heard good music and had seen the masterpieces of art. In fact he was a cultured gentleman and had acquired more than a college education—without the aid of schools. Yet he felt that he had missed something.

One day in course of a conversation with a Yale junior he asked him what in his college life seemed dearest to him.

The splendid young man, who had won laurels in the scholastic field as well as in football and at the oar thought very seriously, then replied, "It isn't the books, and it isn't the football—it's the togetherness of it. It's the long talks with the fellows after the game, and the great discussions held in some fellow's room at the end of the term about life, it's the delicious exchange of confidences, the telling of your ideals to one another. It's just the achieving and idealizing together."

Doctor William Burnham, one of the finest pedagogues of our day, declares, after an exhaustive consideration of the many ideals of education in past and present—that the great general aim of education should be, not the development of the individual into a physical or mental giant, not the mere acquirement of knowledge, but the development of the individual as a social being. He says further that every subject in the curriculum of our schools should afford chance for social training. This is surely true of us Americans.

The great wise Man said: "A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another.

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you; do ye also unto them."

Is there any greater contradiction of this precept than the average American millionaire with gross individualism?

The Religio gives a wonderful opportunity for the right kind of social training. Surely we all realize that after Brother Elliott's speech this morning. We must make the young people feel the "togetherness" spirit in the Religio. Youth is hungry for social experience, yet needs a very careful guidance.

The adolescent is tingling with desires for companionship, and social approval, yet the very strength of these instincts makes for crudity and awkwardness in their expression, and if the boy cannot find social approval and comradeship at school or church he will be apt to seek it on the street or in the loafing place where he may be "hail fellow, well met!"

Never in life is there a greater desire to be and do the proper thing; and to be not like others—to be a social outcast—is utmost misery and anguish.

The adolescent is anxious to appear at ease among people, eager to be able to meet his fellows on the right basis and overwhelmingly desirous of comradeship with those of his own age.

The question may arise, What is the value of this social experience and training?

Is there anybody who has not met the girl who has missed such training. She is marked by a morbid supersensitiveness. Every word or act which might imply disapproval of her sears her soul. Having had so little experience with her fellow beings she meets them with suspicion which distrusts even the kindness of others. She has lived within herself so much that even when she exerts herself to social affability her efforts are so crude as to repel others. She is incapable of seeing the viewpoint of others and is left with a baffled, helpless feeling when she tries to deal with others.

This is not only very unwholesome psychologically and hygienically, but the boy or girl who cannot meet his fellows in easy social intercourse is handicapped in the great battle of life.

Bringing it down as concretely as possible: Social training develops poise and self-control, engenders the attitude of tolerance and fair play towards others, inspires the feeling of good fellowship and democracy, furnishes favorable soil for the growth of executive ability, and gives our young people a preparatory course in the age old art of statesmanship.

The great psychologist, G. Stanley Hall, after discussing the various known methods of moral instruction, concluded that all such pedagogical schemes are petty and utterly inadequate, that religion was the greatest method.

He says, "To try to educate a child without religion is a hollow thing, an empty sham."

And again, A young man never comes to the fullest and highest development of his powers until he has been converted.

This is the most important task of the Religio—but I dare not enter into so great a subject in the time at my disposal. Merely a few suggestions of some phases of it.

First to provide an opportunity for expression of their spiritual impulses. In small branches this is left to the Religio entirely—no young people's prayer meetings. The atmosphere of the ordinary mixed prayer service is not conducive to the growth of the young. By this self-expression they are led to seek ever deeper and richer spiritual experience.

Training in gospel principles of conduct, spotless ideals of morality should be held before them. The good old virtues of honesty, integrity, moral courage, thrift and the ideals of service will find instant response with the adolescent who longs to do big and noble things.

The Religio should be the high school for the study of God's word. Surely we who have the greatest light and truth cannot afford to leave our youth ignorant or half taught.

The Religio is a society for the young people distinctly. Its big task is to establish before the young people the worth and dignity of the Religio so strongly that they will feel the same need for it and the same loyalty toward it that they feel for and toward their alma mater.

The objection is made that young people too much taken up with school and college activities have no time for Religio. The reason is, public schools and colleges have studied scientifically the needs of youth, making a business of meeting those needs.

Whenever the Religio offers such vital and valuable curriculum the young people will have time for it.

It is not merely a question of making the sessions attractive, of sugar coating everything. The problem is to offer something worth while, that the young will appreciate as worth while. Most of our youth have ambitions for education. Let them see that they are getting good, serious development and training in the Religio and they will come.

ALICE M. BURGESS.

SUMMARY OF RELIGIO BUSINESS

In the president's report the fourth recommendation was adopted which provides that we suggest the advisability of meeting the inroads of moving picture theaters, in the interests of our young people by supplying this need through a moving picture machine purchased by the district Religio and an occasional program giving high grade pictures. In the larger branches the local might to advantage secure such a machine, but when purchased, their use to be supplementary to the regular programs and regular work, and not to be used to displace them.

The first recommendation in regard to the field worker, was referred to the executive committee in consultation with the First Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric. This recommendation provides for a general field worker, who shall receive support to the extent of $50 a month from the General Religio, and who shall act under the direction of the general executive in visiting conventions and reunions, where such services are desired. The expense of transportation is to be met in due proportion by the locals and districts benefited.

Section 2 of the recommendation of the president was adopted, and a committee of three provided for. This committee will be named by the executive committee. The purpose of this recommendation was to provide for a lecture board, through which one or more lecturers will be secured, who will visit such localities as desire their services. The lecturers would act without remuneration, but their expenses be paid by the localities receiving the benefit. It is intended that those desiring their services should write in advance and a regular route provided for the winter.

Section 3 of the president's recommendation was also adopted. This provided for district lecturers. Those who were qualified and willing to do so, would prepare short lectures on topics suggested in the Senior Quarterly. The local presidents making recommendation to the district president, and he providing who should give the lecture in each case. These lectures can be sent out to be used in other locals, but preferably the one giving the lecture will go and deliver it, and thus the good may be realized by several instead of one.

Section 5, providing for a gospel literature commission of three was also approved, and the amendments to the constitution requisite to carrying it into effect in the general organization, districts and locals were also adopted. This recommendation included a proposal, that some one person be placed in active charge and made responsible.

A similar recommendation in Section 6 was referred to the library commission for their consideration and report.

Section 6, providing for a coordination of the home department of the Sunday school and Religio, was adopted. These two members will elect a third, who will take care of the scattered membership.

Paragraph 7 of the president's report was referred to the social purity board.

It was resolved that in the month of July of each year the secretary should cause to be published in the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves a notice stating the number of Graceland College scholarships which are available from this association and where to apply for information.

Questions 1, 2, 3 in the report of the editor of the Senior Quarterly were referred to the executive committee and lessons committee with power to act. These questions were, whether one program each quarter be utilized for work of the temperance department for parliamentary program and for prayer meeting under existing conditions. In the Senior Quarterly for the second quarter of this year one evening is devoted to each of these topics.

Provision was made for the appointment by the president of the association of committees of three each to act as a credentials committee and as an auditing committee, their appointment being made early enough to allow a completion of their work before the meeting of the convention.

The committee on amalgamation with the Sunday school upon its own recommendation was discharged. But carrying out the spirit of their report and having in view the present needs of the auxiliaries, a resolution was adopted providing for a committee of five, one each to be appointed by the Religio, Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary, and General Conference, and these four to select a fifth member. This committee to be known as a coordination committee, and to take into consideration how the work of the Religio may be better coordinated with the work in the other auxiliaries and with the work of the church especially, so as to secure the greatest possible efficiency in our work. The president of the general association, Granville S. Trowbridge, was named as the Religio member of this committee.

Fifty dollars was appropriated for the use of each general officer of the Religio, with the exception of the superintendent of gospel literature, such sum to be used for general routine expenses. The executive committee was authorized to employ stenographic help, and a fund of not more than $500 was provided for this purpose. An additional $75 was appropriated by separate motion for the home department. An appropriation of $50 was made for the gospel literature work in case a commission is organized. If no change is made, an appropriation of $75 was provided. An appropriation of $300 was made for Graceland College scholarships. For translation of tracts into French, an appropriation of $150 was made, or of $300 if found advisable, the matter being referred to the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve and the Presiding Bishopric.

An amendment was made to the constitution, providing for organized home class. Said department to be conducted jointly by Zion's Religio-Literary Society and the General Sunday School Association, the superintendent to be appointed by the joint executive committee and to have power to appoint district workers.

The president was also authorized to appoint a resolutions committee of five annually, to whom should be referred not less than one month before the meeting of the convention all proposed amendments to the constitution of the society.

The following officers were elected: president, G. S. Trowbridge (reelected); vice-president, T. J. Elliott (reelected); secretary, J. W. Stobaugh; treasurer, R. A. Lloyd; member of library commission, Vernon A. Reese; temperance committee, J. W. Gunsolley; home department, William F. Sage; gospel literature commission, Harvey Sandy (reelected); social purity board, C. B. Woodstock (reelected.)

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

With little effort see how the Christmas offering has grown in six years:

1911	8,127.82
1912	8,220.18
1913	9,060.55
1914	10,072.78
1915	10,904.24
1916	12,997.02

With every Sunday school working at top notch speed, this can be multiplied several times by December 31, 1917.

Watch for the Blue Stepping Stones—see if your school is among the workers and doers, and if not, put a little leaven in your measure of meal.

First Chicago, with an attendance of less than one hundred, has appointed a committee to raise two hundred dollars; Independence, with an attendance of from eight hundred to nine hundred, will work for two thousand dollars.

A sister in Minnesota is earning her Christmas offering by furnishing the news from her town to other near-by town newspapers.

See what methodical and persistent saving will do. One cent saved daily by fifty thousand Saints would amount to $182,500 in one year.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

The Christmas offering, like other things, does not grow wild. We have to cultivate it, and should cultivate it through the year. To do so means work. In the past boys have found work cutting some one's lawn; driving a delivery wagon on Saturdays, making and selling candy, doing chores at home or for some neighbor. We know of a boy who made an average of eighteen dollars for several successive years selling candy.

Some are young but others should be strong enough to more than make up the loss. We do not want simply a few parents making up the difference. As members of the Sunday school they may properly do their share. But there is a deeper principle involved than simply giving money. For a child to go and beg a dollar or two to give at the last minute is not what we want and need. Children should be encouraged in habits of thrift. Many parents who are able to do so give them a spending account, or what is better, pay them for services rendered, so it is really earned. This can be done and still leave it a labor of love for mother and father. Some parents, who are able, unfortunately do not recognize even very hard work done by a child of theirs regardless of age. The children thus learn habits of judicious giving. For their sake we should make more of the opportunity to give for the birthday of the great King. It is Jesus' birthday and we should rightfully celebrate it. But especially should this be done for the sake of the children. Children are not little men and women; they are different. We should take their nature into consideration and plan our work so as to help them. We urge the Christmas offering as much for their sake as for the sake of the bishop and the amount collected. There is a pleasure and a joy in making Christ's birthday a day of celebration, not simply the giving of things to one another, but also of giving to him. For is it not his birthday?

Yet there is also a value in the work and planning through the year to be able to give worthily. One boy washed dishes all through the summer vacation to earn his Christmas offering. Do you not think it meant more to him spiritually and morally than if he had simply begged it at the last moment, or it had been ignored by his Sunday school and a general collection taken up, or the collections of the year divided? We know of some places where this is done, but surely it must be from lack of understanding of the needs of our children.

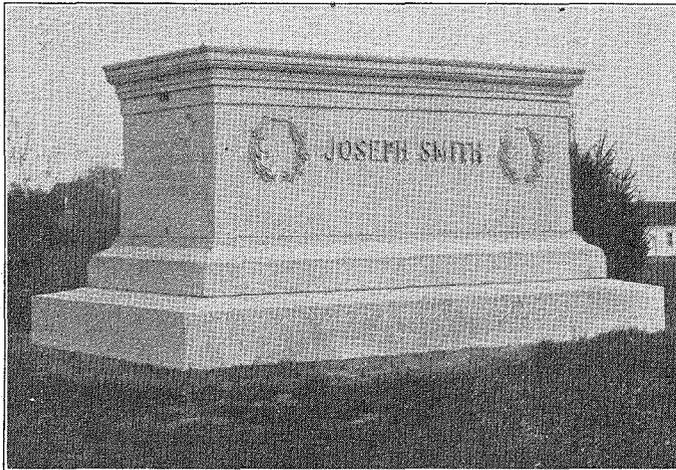

Many young men and women have found that this earning and giving of Christmas offering is proving a splendid preparation for the payment of tithes and consecrations in later life.

The bishop has set our standard high; is it too high? We think not if we set our plans at once to meet it. Many Sunday schools are doing so. Many children are already planning and saving. Are you? If not, why not?

SARCOPHAGUS FOR OUR LATE PRESIDENT

It is well known to the readers of the HERALD that a monument has been erected in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri, to the memory of the late President Joseph Smith. The Saints will be interested in the accompanying cut of the monument. It is a sarcophagus, and the body of the beloved leader lies in a copper casket in the die or middle piece, the capstone covering the stone coffin. The sarcophagus is of the finest Barre granite from Vermont, is finely tooled and of special design. Although simple in outline, yet the sarcophagus is massive and substantial and stands as a fitting monument for the resting place of our former leader. At the unveiling of the monument the speaker commented on the appropriateness of the simple but substantial stone as a marker for the resting place of a leader whose simplicity of life, wisdom and foresight made him the strong and deeply beloved leader of his people.

The Laurel Club of Independence, one of the societies of the Woman's Auxiliary, raised the money for the erection of this sarcophagus. Mrs. Joseph Sturges is president of the club, Mrs. J. Mather, vice president, Mrs. T. J. Watkins, secretary and treasurer. The Laurel Club generously contributed something over seven hundred dollars themselves and raised the balance of the two thousand one hundred dollars which it cost approximately. The women of which this club is composed worked hard but quietly, and are to be congratulated on their achievement. It is true that these sisters have been subjected to rather severe criticism from some quarters, but they were not deterred. From their viewpoint it was only fitting that the resting place of a leader who served this church for more than half a century should be marked appropriately, not only for the sake of the church but in the interest of history. It would not have been done without some one or ones taking the initiative and burden of the work.

Too long have the graves of the Martyrs, the former President and his brother, lain unmarked by proper monument. Two granite sarcophagi, simple but substantial, would appropriately mark these graves. We are not, however, urging that any woman's society should undertake to solicit funds for this enterprise. A monument fund has long been established for this purpose. When will the graves be marked?

The accompanying cut is from a photograph which gives a fairly good view of the monument when first placed. The opposite side of the die bears the name "Joseph Smith," while on the ends are the inscriptions: "Born at Kirtland, Ohio, November 6, 1832; died at Independence Missouri, December 10, 1914" and "President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from April 6, 1860, to December 10, 1914.

We feel that all who see the monument cannot but admire its exquisite beauty and its appropriateness.

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President Woman's Auxiliary.

REPORTS OF THE RELIGIO OFFICERS

PRESIDENT

To the General Convention of 1917: As may readily be imagined it was not found a very easy task to take up the work of president of a society which had been presided over for such a long period by our worthy predecessor, particularly in view of the fact that I had never been associated with the general executive committee and therefore knew but little of the workings of the general staff. I felt this difficulty keenly and so immediately sent out a general letter inclosing an improvised report blank for report from all district presidents and presidents of locals in unorganized territory; however, as these presidents had not been accustomed to reporting it took some time and several tracers in some cases before we succeeded in getting in touch with the conditions in the districts and locals.

REPORTS

This suggested to us that the matter of reports from the district presidents to the general president and also from the local presidents to the district presidents ought to be arranged. With this in mind we asked for suggestions from the district presidents as to just what information they would like to have from the local presidents and from the replies we drew up blanks and established a system of quarterly reports which we feel are essential to successful conduct of the work as the chief executive of the locals and the districts will get much benefit from the making of quarterly reports which will bring forcibly to their attention the work which has been done and which lies before them to be done. This, in addition to the benefit the one receiving the report gets from it. I am glad to say that all of the presidents are now falling in line nicely on this score and I look for good results.

COMMITTEE WORK

I also discovered that the committee work, which I believe to be one of the very essential features of Religio work, was being sadly neglected in some districts, in fact in most of them, and so I took up a campaign for improvement through the district presidents in the shape of periodical letters run off on a duplicator in which the benefits were pointed out and they were urged to pass the word along to the local presidents and endeavor to get them to awaken their committees. This has shown some fruit but it is slow work and will show up in greater degree next year I am sure if followed up.

VISITING BY DISTRICT OFFICERS

In the circular letters mentioned above we also advocated as strongly as we thought we dared that the district officers should make a special effort to get around the district and visit the sessions of the locals, making their presence known as district officers and talking to the local, also to the executive committee in the way of counsel. Some response has been noted to this appeal but in many districts the treasury is too low to permit any help in this work so where the district officers do not feel able to afford the expense themselves, the work has suffered. We hope that this condition may be rectified and that the district treasury of each district may be supplied with sufficient funds to enable the district officers to draw on it for help in carrying out this work when needed. I am sure that the investment will prove profitable, particularly if we can prevail upon the district conventions to get officers who are willing to learn what is to be done and prepare themselves to do it. This work can be carried on to some extent through correspondence but there is nothing which awakens the interest like a personal appeal to the workers.

PROGRAM WORK

The program work has also been given attention in these circular letters and also in our numerous personal individual letters to the district workers as we feel that this department of the work should be made more appealing and of more value in developing our workers than it has been or is at present. We think there is a wonderful opportunity to reach nonmembers through this channel if it can be properly carried out and trust that it may be given greater attention in the coming years.

OFFICE AND FIELD WORK

During the year we have written more than 600 personal or individual letters and have sent out nine circular letters to all presidents of districts and locals in unorganized territory and two circular letters to all locals whether in districts or not. We have attended two reunions, one for two days at Logan, Iowa, and one for a week at Saint Louis, have also visited twelve district conventions, making in all twenty-two addresses besides sending articles to be read at five other district conventions. Have also written five articles for publication. In all of these we have tried to further the interests of the Religio society as we have seen it, striving to further the departmental work assigned to the president but not overlooking the fact that, as a general officer, we were expected to further the interests of all departments. Success has crowned our efforts in many instances and we have felt the approving influence of the Master's Spirit though we have wished that these efforts might have been more worthy.

REPORTS BY GENERAL OFFICERS

We have encouraged the other general officers to move out in their various departments pointing out that each one had a responsibility and that permanent and complete success could only come to a united and cooperative effort. Have also requested that the president be kept advised monthly of the work of the various departments and in some cases this has met with ready response though some felt that the reports were useless and consequently disregarded the requests. Each general officer is reporting direct to the convention so that special mention of the work separately by departments is not necessary in this report.

NEW GENERAL TREASURER

On account of the press of other church work our general treasurer, Bro. J. A. Becker, asked to be relieved of the Religio work and with the approval of the executive committee Bro. R. A. Lloyd was appointed to fill out the term, he taking the office in December. This is a department which should have some careful attention as we find that many of the locals and most of the districts are in poor financial condition and we believe that the general treasurer should make it a part of his work to devise ways and means of overcoming this condition. Bro. Lloyd has given the matter some thought and made some recommendations to the district treasurer which we trust will be followed out and given a fair trial. These societies should be in better financial condition in order that the work may be pushed more vigorously by the officers.

ORGANIZED CLASS WORK

As authorized by the last General Convention the executive committee appointed a superintendent to push the organized class work in the Religio and Sr. Louise Evans was selected for that work. She has been very active and her efforts have met with success as will be indicated by her report to the convention. We think that this department should be continued and made joint with the Sunday school.

NEW CLASSES

We have also suggested to the various district presidents that additional interest might be promoted in the locals if, where it is found that some have lost interest in the lessons on account of the fact that they have been through the Book of Mormon once or twice before, classes in other lines of education be introduced, particularly along the lines which the church is taking up such as psychology, sociology, eugenics, economics, etc., where an interest can be developed in these topics. In order that this work could be carried on profitably I believe it would be well for the normal department to give some thought to the providing of textbooks which will be reliable and suitable to this handling.

"QUARTERLIES"

Our Quarterlies have been issued regularly during the year, the Senior Quarterly being edited by Bro. J. A. Gunsolley and the Junior Quarterly by Bro. C. B. Woodstock and we feel that both have merited and received the approval of the Religians. It was found necessary commencing with the first quarter of 1917 to change the size and type of the Quarterlies in the interests of economy and owing to the rising cost of paper and printing the price of each Quarterly was slightly increased, i. e., two cents per quarter or five cents per year. We would like to recommend to all that they send in the subscriptions by the year rather than by the quarter both for economical reasons and also as a matter of convenience to the publishers and to enable us to estimate more accurately the number which should be printed. In this connection I am glad to report an increase in our subscription list of 2,000 Seniors and 400 Juniors. This indicates that the lessons department of the society is not being overlooked.

RECOMMENDATIONS

We have several recommendations to make to the convention which we feel would serve to improve the society and make its work more effective:

Field Workers

(1) In my visiting of district conventions it has been impressed upon me that we are badly in need of some one who can go into the various districts and counsel with and advise the officers and lend more enthusiasm to the work. Personal work always tells and I am sure that it would be found profitable in this case. Based on this I would recommend that the Religio convention authorize the general executive committee to appoint a general field worker who will spend his whole time in the field, the Religio to assume his family expenses, if one should be selected who has a family, the maximum expense to be $50 a month. Our idea of the way this work should be conducted would be briefly as follows: The field workers to secure from the various districts a list of their convention dates and from these arrange a route so that he or she could attend the convention and then remain in the district for a week or two as the case might justify, visiting the locals and encouraging and instructing them and organizing new ones where conditions warranted. While it is true that most of the Religio meetings would fall on the same night I am sure that all of the locals would be very glad to arrange a special meeting on some other night for the benefit of the field worker and the good he might do them so that every night in the week could be used to advantage rather than just a visit to the convention and then a week of inactivity—these special meetings could be arranged in advance of the convention and announcement made of them at that time. The expense of travel to be borne by the districts and locals benefited, each local or district standing one half of the expense to and one half the expense from their meeting place which would serve to equalize the amounts. I believe that our financial condition at the present time will justify this expense on the general society treasury and I am sure that the good which would be done in the locals and districts would prove to be a profitable investment for them.

Lecture Course

(2) I also wish to recommend that a lecture board be established to provide a lecture course for the Religio, that is, to solicit the services of a number of our talented lecturers to deliver a course of lectures on topics of particular interest to the Religio and the church which would be of an educational as well as entertaining nature. This board could circularize the various districts as soon as they found what lectures they could provide and find out what districts would like to have these lectures and then from this information outline a route for the lecturers and dates at the various places so that car fare might be conserved as well as the time of the lecturers. The expense of travel to be borne by the ones benefited on the basis of each paying one half of the expense to and one half of the expense from their meeting place. As the distances would not be likely to be great between stops this would make the expense of these lectures small as the fee usually paid to the lecturers in other lecture courses would be eliminated through the generosity of our lecturers. This should place this profitable enjoyment within the reach of all our districts and as we would have several lecturers a course could be arranged through the winter months which would, I am sure, help to keep a greater interest in the work all during the winter.

District Lectures

(3) In connection with the course outlined in the previous recommendation I wish also to recommend the adoption in the various districts of what might be called a miniature lecture course or a district lecture course. The plan for this is to have various ones in the locals, who are willing and qualified to do so, prepare short lectures or addresses on the topics outlined for program use in the front of the Senior Quarterlies, the assignment of these topics being made on recommendation of the local presidents to the district presidents so as to avoid duplication. When these have been prepared they can be circulated throughout the district by visits of the one preparing them and thus the good can be utilized by many locals instead of only one. I know that in some districts this would not be practicable on account of the scattered condition of the locals, but in many districts I am sure it would prove successful and promote a feeling of cooperation and sociability among the locals. This matter may be handled by the general and district presidents during the next year but it is thought advisable to mention it here as, if it receives the sanction of the General Convention, it will be much easier to promote it.

Picture Machines

(4) We have also suggested to the various districts the advisability to meeting the inroads of the moving picture theaters on the interests of our young folks by supplying this appetite through the medium of a moving picture machine purchased by the district Religio (or the larger branches where they feel able), such district machine to be passed around the district and be used in showing moving and single view pictures of educational nature. The importance of the eye as a means of education is already appreciated in most places and I do not feel that we should lose the advantage of this prolific source of increasing the interest and profit of our program work. Our idea has not been to let the pictures crowd out the platform work to the members altogether in any locality, but merely to supplement these individual efforts and to add interest. We have been making some investigation and are prepared to give information as to the expense of purchasing and maintaining these machines if desired by the convention. This matter is also simply called to your attention as a plan which may be worked out by the executives unless some action be taken by the convention.

Gospel Literature Work

(5) At the last General Conference action was taken with a view to unifying the efforts of the Religio, Sunday school and church along the lines of gospel literature, and amendments are proposed with this end in view, which will come before this convention. We feel that this is a move in the right direction but if it be decided to have this department handled by a board composed of a member from each society I feel that we should take such action as will require the board, or at least that we suggest to the board that it be our recommendation that they appoint some one person to be the superintendent of the department to carry out the plans of the board as we have not found that boards and commissions operating as a whole are productive of the best results.

Library Work

b. We would recommend that steps be taken to have like action recommended on the part of the library commission, i. e., that they be requested to appoint some one person to have general charge of the execution of the work of that commission.

Home Department

(6) We would recommend that action be taken at this convention with a view to consummating the action proposed at our last convention with regard to the home department. We have reached the conclusion that this department should be made a joint one with the Sunday school in the interests of economy of efforts and finances.

Social Purity Board

(7) We should also like to see similar action taken with regard to the work of the social purity board. Let us have a board composed of members of the three organizations but let them select some one person to push the work and be responsible for the accomplishment of the plans of the board or a definite report as to the reason for failure.

The above does not, of course, include any traveling expenses which have been paid personally or by contributions from the various districts visited as we did not understand that the society should be charged with this expense, nor do we now think so.

It is our firm conviction that the society is becoming more alive to the opportunities which lie before them in the field which is theirs and I trust that the convention will use great care in selecting the ones who are to guide its destiny during the coming year. There is much to be done and it will require the united efforts of the whole executive force in their various departments, as it will be impossible for the president, whoever he may be, to handle the entire matter successfully, and this same spirit should be carried into the district elections as well. Officers who are willing to put forth the effort and who have the time to devote to the work are the ones who should be selected giving due consideration to qualifications in connection with the two requisites just named. May the Lord bless the efforts of each one and help each one to do his part in the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Sincerely,

G. S. TROWBRIDGE.

We note that the total receipts and expenditures of the president are: Receipts, $41.62; expenditures, $47.80. We submit this instead of the itemized account.

SECRETARY

To the Convention: As secretary of the general association my work has been largely routine. During the summer I sent out a series of letters to the district secretaries, outlining plans for a clean-up campaign throughout the whole society. I urged that every lookout committee get busy and go over the local records, labor with the nonattending members as the law provides, and, if there was no other way, drop their names from the record. The purpose was to clear the record so that reports would show a true condition. I think that this work of the lookout committees will account for a decrease in enrollment in some districts.

During the year I issued 35 charters, this bringing directly into the Religio association 697 members. Four new districts were formed and two were divided. Northern District, New South Wales, Idaho, Western Nebraska and Central Texas are the new districts, and the Independence Stake was divided into Independence, Kansas City and Holden Stakes. The Toronto District was divided to make Toronto and Owen Sound Districts.

The statistical report as printed is not nearly complete and it will be necessary for me to bring an additional report before the convention. My financial report is separate and will be submitted through the auditing committee.

Owing to other work I will not be able to let my name be submitted again as a nominee for a general officer of the Religio. With earnest good wishes for the Religio association.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR E. MCKIM.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 15, 1917.

The summary of the report of the secretary of the General Zion's Religio-Literary Society should read as follows: Number of locals 345, gain 32; total enrollment 13,125, gain 529; average attendance 6,349, loss 629; home department 1,832, gain 157; total gains 1,749; total losses 919.

HOME DEPARTMENT SUPERINTENDENT

To the General Convention Assembled; Greeting: You gave us a task to perform, and we tried to do it. The following is our report:

Total number of organized districts in the society, 61.
 Districts having home department superintendents, 53.
 Districts reporting results, 51.
 Superintendents in charge of unorganized territory, 23.
 Appointees reporting results, 17.
 Total number of district, stake, and unorganized superintendents (not local officers), 76.
 Enrollment in organized territory, 2,381.
 Enrollment in unorganized territory, 298.
 Total enrollment, 2,679.
 Number of new locals organized (this reduces our enrollment, as many of the home students are transferred), 35.

EXTENSION CIRCLE

This department of our work was turned over to Bro. Wm. F. Sage, of Detroit, Michigan. He was appointed assistant general home department superintendent last October. His report will appear under a separate heading.

IN GENERAL

My work in the mission field has prevented me from devoting as much time as should have been applied to this kind of work.

The amount we have spent for postage will give you an approximate idea of the number of letters which have been written by this office. Personal letters, circular letters, and literature have kept us quite busy.

FRANK F. WIPPER.

ORGANIZED CLASS SUPERINTENDENT

To the General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society: It will be remembered that last year the organized class work was provided for as an experiment and I was given charge of it. First I wish to say that my whole time could not be devoted to it, owing to the fact that I had a great deal of work to do as a member of the library commission and as a district secretary.

My first effort was to ascertain how many organized classes there were and what the attitude of the officary and membership was towards it. I found about as many foes as friends to the movement, but it might be worse, still there is a great deal of indifference. I learned that there were a few organized classes but through lack of understanding upon the part of some of them they were not succeeding and naturally were meeting with opposition. As nearly as I can learn they have made changes in their methods this year and are meeting with more favor and success. There have been but few new organizations effected, but the many letters of inquiry give me reason to be hopeful that the work will succeed. There is an apparent overlapping of the work of organized classes and local Religio committees. I have however to as large an extent as I could sought to find new work and methods for the classes and have recommended such as these: furnishing an evening's program for the local helping the Literature Committee distribute literature, purchasing books for the library, advertising preaching and other branch meetings, furnishing supplies for the Sanitarium, clothing and food for the Children's Home, books and other things for the homes of the aged, helping the deacons look after the poor, raising funds for general or local church debts, helping branch president in any way he directs, getting up picnics, garden parties and educational trips or hikes.

I sent blanks on which the classes could report to me, believing that a class is more likely to be active when it knows that it is expected to give an account of its activities. The work has not reached that stage yet that a tabulated report could be made upon what has been done.

I prepared a leaflet of instruction which has been approved by the president, but as I look over it now, am very much dissatisfied with it. It was evolved in haste and without experience. The next one can be very much improved. I sent it to all district secretaries with a circular letter urging that they give it their attention and asking them to urge locals to push the class work.

I followed this up later with another circular, aiming to arouse their enthusiasm and strongly urging that effort be made to get the smaller children interested in Religio work, by placing little responsibilities upon them and making them feel that there is something for them to do that will not be done if they do not do it.

I also sent the organized class pamphlet and a personal letter to a number of missionaries and others of the ministry and was very much pleased to receive replies from all except one, all of whom heartily approved of the work and promised to help.

I attended one convention and one institute and furnished a paper on organized class work for two institutes.

This work as we have stated, began as an experiment. I feel now that it can be heartily recommended to the General Convention for a permanent place in its organization.

LOUISE EVANS.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, February 22, 1917.

SUMMARY OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LEGISLATION

Gomer R. Wells, Walter W. Smith and J. A. Tanner were appointed a committee on behalf of the association to confer with a committee of the joint council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric concerning the question, Has the Sunday school a stewardship? If so, what? Has it a surplus? If so, what? And what provision should be made for the current expenses of the association?

This joint committee recommended that the Sunday school is an auxiliary and help to the church, by article 3 of the constitution, page 3; that it has a stewardship in the publishing of the Sunday school Quarterlies, and that as such it should report on the 1st of March its financial status to the Presiding Bishopric together with budget for the ensuing year; that December 31, 1917, and each year thereafter, all moneys on hand in excess of $600, after paying the current expenses of the association then due, should be turned over to the Presiding Bishopric as a consecration to be used as are other funds in his hands. That the Sunday school moneys be retained in the hands of the bishopric, and if at any time the Sunday school finds itself lacking the necessary means for the carrying on of its work, it shall lay its special wants and needs before the Presiding Bishopric to be provided for under the law of stewardships. This recommendation, which is set forth verbatim in the daily and weekly HERALD received the unanimous approval of the body and, as we are informed, the approval of the joint council.

Provision was made for cooperation with the Religio in the home class work, organized class work and gospel literature. The organized class superintendent to be appointed by the joint executives. The home class and gospel literature work to be handled by a joint board of three. The third member for the home class being selected by the two superintendents, and the gospel literature commission by the General Conference.

The resolution from Southern California concerning library work was referred to the library commission.

A petition from New Zealand for help, was answered by an appropriation of $100, subject to the approval of the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric and missionary in charge of that field.

A new class book including absentee visiting report, book of instruction and equipment for system of visiting, compiled by R. B. Trowbridge of Independence, was referred to a committee to be examined and reported upon. They reported in favor of visiting absentees and urged this, but did not consider the plan advisable just now for the numerous schools of the general association.

The amendments to the constitution affecting gospel literature commission were adopted.

Paragraph 2 in the revising committee's report, providing for number of teachers acting under the direction of a supervising editor as editor in chief, was referred to the executive council.

Section 3 of the revising committee's report, providing for the preparation of a series of lessons to be properly graded and placed in permanent form, so as to avoid the continual republication of old matter, was referred to a committee of five, consisting of the five editors of the present Quarterly.

In answer to a question, it was ruled that this be referred to the editors for the coming year.

The constitution was amended, page 14, article 2, section 1, by striking out all after the word "and" in the fourth line, and adding "send a report of the school to the district president ten days before each regular meeting of the association." This section as amended would read: "The superintendent shall preside at each session of the Sunday school, direct its general interests, see that teachers follow methods advised by the superintendent of the association, appoint committees, and send a report of the school to the district president ten days before the regular meeting of the association."

Page 10, article 4, section 1, insert after the word "district" at the close of the first paragraph of this section, "and present a summary of the local president's report at each regular meeting of the association."

Page 17, article 7, section 1, insert the word "beginners" between the words "the" and "primary" in the second line; and after the word "primary" insert the word "junior" in the third line, so that the first sentence of the said section shall read: "The superintendent and assistant shall select teachers for the beginners, primary, junior and intermediate classes."

Page 18, article 7, section 5, strike out "and" in the third line and add at the end of the section "and problems of class work," so that said section shall read: "The superintendent, assistants, and teachers shall meet once a week for the study of the lesson, methods of teaching and problems of class work."

Upon recommendation of the resolutions committee, it was resolved, that the first assistant superintendent, in addition to the duties already provided for, shall make a special effort to provide for institute work in the stakes and districts, and through them in local organizations.

Also that the executives make a special effort in the direction of the Christmas offering fund, and work in conjunction with the Presiding Bishopric to encourage a substantial offering.

The following officers were elected: general superintendent, G. R. Wells (reelected); first assistant, Daniel Macgregor (reelected); second assistant, A. W. Smith; secretary, E. D. Moore (reelected); treasurer, Bishop Mark Siegfried; home department superintendent, F. F. Wipper; cradle roll superintendent, Anna Roberts (reelected); library board, S. A. Burgess; gospel literature commission, R. W. Farrell; social purity board, R. W. Farrell (reelected); member of lessons committee, J. F. Garver; revising committee, A. Carmichael, J. W. Wight, George N. Briggs.

Resolved that an outline of the lessons be made accessible for the teachers' plans.

Fifty dollars was appropriated for the use of the social purity board and a like amount for the use of the library commission, "for intensive work in the stakes, districts and locals."

Daniel Macgregor was elected a member of the coordinating committee—to consist of one each from the church, Sunday school, Religio and Woman's Auxiliary—these four to select a fifth and the committee to consider how the work of the auxiliaries can be better conducted with each other and with the general church.

SUNDAY SCHOOL REPORTS

SUPERINTENDENCY

To the General Convention: Our first assistant suggested this year when asked for the customary separate report that all three might sign the same report, which depended on whether they could approve of all the superintendent had decided to place before the body. Upon hearing his proposals they unhesitatingly approved of them, and hence we come with one instead of three reports.

Both assistants have responded to every call for advice or help, which had to be done by mail owing to distance. At times the superintendent has wished he might assign more of his many duties to them; but it was seen that the time to be consumed in correspondence to place them in touch with it was about equal to the labor of doing it himself. The association might with profit give our assistants some more specific functions than those so briefly mentioned in the constitution, article five, which seems to aim at having their labors in the absence of the superintendent, which can only be at convention time, and between times "as occasion demands." Within the last few months we have discerned in some districts a desire to give something more to the local assistant superintendents. We think we can see service in the school that might be delegated to those officers, since they work under the same roof and are in daily touch with each other. But we have not seen it so clear for assistant district superintendents, and still less possible for the general assistants, working apart, sometimes at great distance. Any light the convention could throw on this would be opportune.

The superintendent at present tries to care for important phases of the work which are rapidly growing more important and in the near future should be given to separate officers. But whether these functions might be given to first, second and third assistants to enlarge their sphere of action, or be placed in the category of other departments such as cradle roll and home department is a question to be considered. This work now included in the functions of general superintendent may be mentioned. They are: 1. Primary or elementary superintendent, handling all the special problems of cradle roll, beginner, primary and junior grades, advising and directing concerning equipment, promotion standards, expressional work, handwork, department programs and special conditions. This has to do with pupils under the adolescent period.

2. Senior or secondary superintendent, handling the very difficult and perplexing problems of early and middle adolescence covered by intermediate and senior grades, including supervision of Sabbath afternoon and week day activities, organized class failures and problems.

3. Adult superintendent, taking care of the advanced work of later adolescence beyond senior grade. This is at present the most disorganized and unsystematized part of our Sunday school work. It contains all sorts of classes for which we provide no specific lesson material, such as church history, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, sociology and others not yet reported. Something definite must soon be provided so that uniformity of purpose and coordination of study shall result.

4. Grading and promotion superintendent. These are becoming live questions in some of the districts and we are thankful to see it.

LESSONS COMMITTEE

As chairman of this committee the superintendent reports no meetings held during the year. This committee appears to be too cumbersome for practical work and it might be re-modeled to fewer members composed of expert talent more easily and economically called together. At present it is composed of three elective members, the general superintendent and the editors of the five Quarterlies, making six members occupying ex officio.

"QUARTERLIES"

The editors are following the course marked out by the lessons committee and all lessons are written up to and including the third quarter of 1917. All have worked faithfully and at times under great strain. Nearly all have covered the entire course but they have had to work apart, with no opportunity for comparisons or of fitting the last year's matter of each grade into the first year of the grade above. This has resulted in some unnecessary duplications of subjects and also gaps and overlapping as grade joins onto grade. Under the circumstances this was unavoidable. Most of the lesson material has now reached the stage of revision and reshaping, leading to a more permanent text; but this should not be attempted until a comprehensive comparison has been made of the whole five grades, eliminating duplications, gaps or overlapping. This must be done this year and will be carried out as a necessary routine matter in completion of the work in hand.

Most of the editors report that the rule passed by a special committee last convention binding editors to the King James Version debars matter of great value to the children's education in the faith of the church. We believe this rule is not in harmony with the direction of the Lord given to the church commanding that the Inspired Translation be taught freely. We therefore urge that action be taken to modify this rule. Let us teach "the books" without stint.

SABBATH KEEPING BY THE YOUNG

For many years Americans have talked about a "Continental Sabbath" as a condition existing across the ocean; but we fear we must admit that we have it boldly stalking through our own land. It affects our boys and girls. In addition to this, they seem to regard it as irksome to attend all the Sabbath services of the church and auxiliaries, which in many branches includes Sunday school (Religio, also in some) morning and evening sermons and afternoon prayer meeting. Many, both children and adults, are inclined to spend the afternoon in recreation, which, if recognized, should be directed on this day above all others. Shall we advise parents to require their children to attend every service? If not, how is the time to be spent? The association and the church should speak with one voice on this question. We urge the convention to take preliminary action towards meeting this condition—not puritanically, but in the spirit of him who said, "The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath." We want our Sunday school members to "call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable." (Isaiah 58: 13.)

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

There has been an almost simultaneous response throughout the association to the Presiding Bishop's suggestion that the church debt be liquidated through the Christmas offerings. Eastern Michigan leads out in convention by a resolution providing a district "sacrifice day" once a quarter, amounts thus saved to be sent in for the church debt. We have assured the church that our association will do its part.

PAYING OUR SURPLUS

On account of the sudden rise in cost of print paper we sold the entire issue of one quarter's lessons at about cost, which compelled us to raise the price. But the year closes with a balance of $2,922.51. Of this amount $1,800 has for years been deposited with the Presiding Bishop which contributes that much to the church debt. Our treasurer has $1,112.51. We might remark that the bulk of our income reaches us in December when the greatest number renew their subscriptions for the year; hence we do not expect so much from the other three quarters' sales. Our present balance should be larger on that account.

We believe the association should no longer hoard funds. We, therefore, recommend that a committee be appointed to ascertain our just needs and wants as an association for the coming year in consultation with the bishop, our surplus determined and turned in as a consecration, but report to be made at this convention that action may be had. As teachers of the law, we ought to keep it. In this respect our association stands before the law of the Lord as any individual, as long as we continue the business aspect of our Quarterlies, deriving profit in a business way.

There is in hand a request from the missionary in New Zealand asking the convention to donate $100 to start a "Maori tract translation fund"—a very worthy proposition, but clearly church work. Let us pay our surplus and allow the church to do its own work, which should apply to all similar requests for donations which we have for years been entertaining.

HAVE WE A STEWARDSHIP?

It might not be amiss also to inquire if, under the revelations directing the printing and sale of gospel literature, the association has ever received a stewardship of that kind. If we have, it will set all doubts at rest and confirm us in our stewardship. If not, the sooner we find it out the better. We shall have a more definite recommendation to offer the body at the proper time.

LIBRARY WORK

In nearly three fourths of the districts the report on this department is, nothing doing. Notwithstanding one or two leading church representatives have publicly advocated its abandonment, we believe library work from a church standpoint is worth while. Admitting that public libraries are found in nearly every city, ours is a church proposition with a denominational aspect that no other institution is capable of supplying. It is not merely a literary matter—books to read and a case to hold them. Library work in the church has not had a fair chance; it needs the concentration of some one who can vision its purpose and possibilities and then infuse this into every district. We have to report that this demand is not being met.

CRADLE ROLL

This department is making excellent advancement, as the report of that superintendent will show. We expect later to see all birth-offerings in the association collected through this department. That is the only offering that the school has been asked to forgo, as it has for years gone to Herald Publishing House to help in printing a new book for children. It rests upon custom, we believe, and unless the convention wishes to change it we shall continue to administer it in that manner. The enrollment includes many children of non-members, which indicates the missionary opportunity lying before the workers of this department, requiring love for children and exercise of tact, taste and talent. It is worthy of the time and talents of any good woman.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Even with eleven districts not heard from this department shows fine results for the small outlay reported by the treasurer. But this has not been done without heroic sacrifice by the superintendent. The possibilities are almost limitless, while it is also of great importance to the church, since its scattered and oftentimes discouraged members may be nurtured and made live assets to the cause. Since it is uncertain that present incumbent will be able to serve again, we urge that great care be exercised in selecting a superintendent this year. She has served faithfully and maintained a steady advance in the department through years of hard toil. We would like to see the standard maintained in the future.

NORMAL WORK

This department really presents a home study course and does not in itself supply complete teacher training. There are two phases: training of officers and training of teachers. That the association should assume the duty of training its officers is very clear. But when we consider that over one third, 36 per cent, of the church's increase last year by baptism was of persons under the age of fifteen years, we think the church is vitally concerned, not only in the kind of lessons provided but also in the training of those who are to plant the living seed in the hearts of her children, those who are to become the future builders of Zion. The association is dependent on volunteer service of amateurs, who, as a rule, know little enough of the matter to be imparted, less of the laws of mind growth, and still less of the proper method of teaching.

Our normal superintendent reports a deeper interest in teacher and officer training. We commend his new "standard course," covering two years of study and which compares favorably with that put out by similar bodies. The international association cannot offer us anything better. We would that every parent in the church and every teacher might read and digest one book of this course in the childhood section: A Study of Child Nature, by Elizabeth Harrison. We predict that enrollments for the full course would come in faster than one superintendent could take care of them. They do not realize what they are missing.

REPORTING

We still find it hard to get reports from some. Three out of eighty-three district superintendents ignored our letters, but recent elections have removed two of them and we hope the third will follow soon, for we are in touch with the new officers. Some otherwise good Saints, local and district superintendents, fail to see that executives must have executive reports. They give us reports grudgingly, believing that reports of their secretaries ought to be sufficient. No executive officer can fully serve the association with statistical reports only. Some have been converted on this point and we predict the good work will go on.

FIELD AND OFFICE WORK

The field labors of the superintendent this year were curtailed some by increasing office work, uncertainty of finances during the last quarter, and also by bodily indisposition due to an operation in the Sanitarium, which was successful but required several months to regain former strength. He labored in Gallands Grove and Far West Districts, all expenses paid, and helped organize the new stakes of Holden and Independence in July. The assistants also labored, each in his own field or district as general conference appointment or other work permitted. The second assistant also acted as vice president of the Religio, which office has its specific duties.

Our office work has continued to get heavier owing to more system and time being devoted to it. Field work and office work cannot both be carried on at the same time. One or the other must be neglected. We were authorized by executive council to secure such stenographic help as needed, but we have been a creature of circumstances, not being able in a small town to get help at the time it was needed. We purchased a course in expert typewriting, hoping to realize their guarantee that my speed would be more than doubled, but the press of correspondence has, so far, prevented the necessary practice. At this moment a large pile of unanswered inquiries lie on the desk, sidetracked by the necessary work of providing convention program and editing and supervising the printing of pamphlet containing this report.

Most of our time has been consumed at the typewriter, leaving little for reading, for constructive executive work, or for planning, thinking and praying over the many problems confronting an organization with 83 districts, 40,000 enrollment and nearly 800 schools, operating under varied and even contradictory conditions. Thus the Sunday school work presents some problems and difficulties with which it will take years to cope.

We feel very grateful for the many expressions of confidence, loyalty and appreciation that have come to us in the course of our correspondence with officers and teachers. But our ideals are far from being attained. The superintendent will be glad to have some one better qualified take up the work and carry it on to greater usefulness and power.

Your servants for the work's sake,
 GOMER R. WELLS, Superintendent.
 DANIEL MACGREGOR, First Assistant.
 THOMAS J. ELLIOTT, Second Assistant.

SECRETARY

The work of the Sunday school continues onward. Progress is to be noted along many lines, and we are confident this will continue. As with other organizations, however, the items reported do not cover the entire amount of work done. Many secretaries are indifferent to the requirements of reporting and consequently many activities go unrecorded.

We have sought to keep in touch with the work throughout the association the past year and have had many pleasant experiences. There seems to be a prevalent desire to handle efficiently the work of the Sunday school, and basing our efforts on this fact, we have secured some interesting information. In other cases we have been compelled to sit at a distance and watch the Sunday school wither and die from lack of attention by district officers. Some districts will not respond, while others are always so late their reports cannot be included in the statistics reported to the convention. Delegates to this convention should carefully study the statistical report and if the items do not properly reflect conditions in the district they should upon their return home make due investigation as to the causes.

In a number of instances we are compelled to use figures of one or two years ago because the district secretary will not report, even though all blanks are furnished. In some instances reports are made but have very little intelligent information on them, and coming in so late it is impossible to secure corrections. One district sent in very deficient reports this year and we immediately sent them back for correction. They have not returned. Another secretary says the membership of the district last year was about 750, while as a matter of fact the number reported last year was 1,060. If every delegate present and every Sunday school worker who reads this would appoint himself a committee of one to see that copies of reports are made a part of the official minutes of the district, it would greatly help. Half of the secretaries who report made erroneous reports on the membership of last report. Copies kept of the previous annual report to the general secretary would eliminate this. One reports that the copy of the previous report was misplaced and not with the minutes. Make it a part of the minutes or record is a good rule not only in this department but all secretarial work.

NOTES FROM THE DISTRICTS

From the reports from conventions we glean the following: Southern California recommends to the General Convention "that in view of the excellent public libraries through the country that the duties of the office of district librarian be so amended as to require only work of an advisory character and the collection and preservation of all archaeological evidences and other books that would be beneficial to the church."

Mobile (Alabama) has adopted a standard of excellence with greater requirements than the one adopted by the General Association for districts. Some districts are changing the standards for schools and adopting new ones. Local conditions should be considered in the adoption of a standard for schools, and an effort made to emphasize such points as will bring up the standard of the district. Normal work is still the great barrier to first grade and one district wants it eliminated, but we surely cannot do without trained teachers.

Northern New South Wales wants "a missionary Sunday school worker." Little Sioux (Iowa) has rescinded all former motions concerning programs for conventions and hereafter executive heads of the two societies will confer with local officers in formulating convention programs.

Massachusetts has appointed an educational committee to supervise the educational interests of the district, institute "promotion day," prepare examination questions for the various grades, arrange for awarding of diplomas and promulgate the religious educational interests of the district.

Eastern Michigan voted to have all printing done at church printing houses when possible. A sacrifice day has been appointed, the proceeds to be sent to the bishop. District officers failing to report each quarter to be removed from office. The superintendent of the normal department is offering prizes for examinations and graduations next year.

Far West (Missouri) has amended district by-laws to conform to those of the General Association. A resolution to have all local elections of officers annually will come up at the July convention.

Kansas City Stake has a new and original standard of excellence for schools. Among the regular requirements, sixty per cent of those present must be on time; half of the teachers and officers must be graduates or pupils of a training class; one third of all teachers and officers must be present at the stake annual institute; schools are to be represented at all conventions. They are compactly located and can expect more along some lines, but we are sure they will make some great strides.

Western Nebraska has dropped the Black Hills from their district. Western Oklahoma now gives the collection of the last Sunday in each quarter to the district Sunday school fund.

Lamoni Stake contributes liberally each year to library work, and like a number of other districts, are enthusiastic over the separate auxiliary conventions in the summer.

Portland (Oregon) is asking the General Convention to amend the standard of excellence so the district will not be required to have a library board to reach first grade. Southwestern Oregon has instructed her delegates to vote in favor of the chair of religious education, if it comes up.

It will be noted that the line-up of first grade districts has changed somewhat during the year. The names printed in black-faced type are now first grade. We congratulate Independence on her steadfast maintenance of her rank, and also one of her daughters, the Kansas City Stake. We haven't heard from Holden.

We now have 83 districts and our total membership reported shows a nice gain, though we were compelled to secure some of the figures from the superintendent's reports. We now have 40,024 members reported, a gain of 1,086.

REVISING COMMITTEE

To the General Sunday School Association; Greeting: Your committee appointed to revise the matter for the lessons of the Sunday school Quarterlies report that we have given attention to all lesson matter submitted to date. Following a series of years devoted to the work of revision of lessons, under your appointment, we report the following conclusions:

We believe that the lesson Quarterlies should be edited by a committee or board of editors acting under direction of a supervising editor in chief, such editors being so located that they may work in cooperation, in consultation, and by concurrence of action; also that in due time all lesson material should be issued under direction of the general board of publication of the church.

We further advise that upon due issue of a comprehensive system of lessons adapted to the various departments or grades, such lessons should be carefully reedited or revised and put into approximately permanent form for regular lesson material. By such a system much expense caused by constant publication of new matter, as under the present system, could be avoided, with decided benefit to the course of study for all the grades.

We call attention to another matter of importance in connection with the issue of the Sunday school lessons: At the General Convention of 1916 a committee was appointed to take into consideration petitions asking for Quarterlies, making no reference to the three standard books of the church; this with a view to meet a so-called demand for lessons suitable to those not of our faith who attend the various schools. The committee was given power to act and adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, that the editors of all grades of Quarterlies be instructed to base their lessons upon the King James Version, and that all other translations and books of reference be used only as corroborative authority."

This action binds the editors of the Quarterlies to the King James Version of the Bible as the basis of all Sunday school lesson matter; and under this rule the editors are prohibited from introducing matter from the Inspired Translation, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, unless such matter is specially referred to in the King James Version. In our opinion this action is contrary to the commands of God given to the church in this dispensation. The church has three standard books and it is directly commanded to teach the principles contained in those books. The Book of Mormon refers to the "plain and precious things which have been taken away from them [the Scriptures]"; and states that the teachings of the Book of Mormon and the Bible "shall grow together unto the confounding of false doctrines, . . . and bringeth them to the knowledge of their fathers," etc. In the revelation of God given to Moses we are told that in a day when men shall esteem the words of the Lord as naught, "and take many of them from the book which thou shalt write, behold I will raise up another like unto thee, and they shall be had again among the children of men; among as many as shall believe." In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15 we are instructed: "Thou shalt ask and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people."

The Lord thus indicated what shall be taught to confirm the truth to the world. We cannot omit the things prescribed by him and meet the demands laid upon us as the church of Jesus Christ. The leading purpose of the lesson matter is to teach our own children. In fact, the children of Latter Day Saints comprise the great body of our Sunday school membership, the attendance of others comprising a small minority of those forming the schools. Besides this, there is nothing in the three standard books but what should be taught to those whom we are seeking to convert. It is also true that in the lesson matter such confirmatory teaching from the three books contained in the Quarterlies may be wisely presented, and must in due time be presented, to those not of the church.

For these reasons we consider the action stated in the resolution given above to be seriously out of harmony with the commands of God and in direct violation of the spirit of the latter-day work.

We are credibly informed that while the committee which passed the resolution was supposed to be composed of representatives of the twelve, the seventy, and the high priests and elders, some of the leading representatives named were not present at all at the sessions of the committee; that the action was hasty and in the nature of a compromise. We therefore recommend that the resolution be repealed, that the church may have lesson matter issued in harmony with the standard books, under direction of those in charge of such lesson matter and in accordance with the purpose of the great latter-day work.

MEMBER OF LIBRARY COMMISSION

To the General Sunday School Association; Greeting: One year ago you appointed me as your representative on the library commission, and I beg to submit the following report:

The library departments throughout the country are showing a more lively interest in the work, confirming us in the belief that the How-Book for library workers is faithfully serving wherever it is given an opportunity.

The first edition of this booklet was issued in April, 1916, and free copies of the same were sent to the library workers in every district and stake throughout the country, and quite a lively response calling for additional copies was the result.

Your secretary believes that this library helper answers practically every question arising among library workers. It was the intention of the commission to make this department of the work as nearly as possible self-sustaining, and a small purchase price was placed on the booklet when ordered in quantities. It is not, however, the desire of the commission to keep this booklet away from anyone on account of a lack of funds. A free copy is always sent to every inquirer and it is desired that every library worker should have at least one copy of this little helper at hand. In order to accomplish this the secretary of the commission solicits the aid of the traveling ministry and every person interested in library work, and asks that they send for information and supplies of the booklet sufficient to fill the needs in their particular location.

The commission this year was fortunate in securing the services of Sr. Louise Evans of Grand Rapids, Michigan, (the commission member chosen by the General Religio Association). Sister Evans has spent considerable time in the districts and locals of Michigan and has lately completed a very important addition to the small pamphlet published by the commission during 1916. This pamphlet will now supply the library workers with a splendid list of books such as may be needed in all parts of the country. This work of Sister Evans not only gives the name and price of the book, but also the name of the publisher. Copies of this pamphlet may be secured either from the Herald Office or from the secretary of the commission.

The library commission was never in better condition to serve the interests of the workers everywhere, and solicits the aid of all persons throughout the church in disseminating the literature of the commission and in putting into active use every resource of the department.

Sister Estella Wight has faithfully served the commission during the past year as general librarian, and a report of her work in part may be seen below. Following is also the report of Bishop J. F. Keir, treasurer of the commission, and also that of Heman C. Smith, our church historian, who is the church member of the commission.

The general secretary believes that during the coming year practically every library board in the districts or in the branches will have assimilated the work of this department and will have fallen in line with the original intentions of the library commission, which is to lessen the labor of the locals and districts by placing all of the library interests of the three societies under one head, allowing each society to choose its own representative on the local and district boards.

The library work when taken up systematically and carefully studied is easily understood. The main trouble heretofore has been in a lack of knowledge, principally by not having sufficient printed literature in the hands of the local and district workers. This difficulty should now be almost wholly if not entirely removed since complete information can be secured by all who desire, either from the commission or the Herald Office.

If library board members desiring information will send their questions and suggestions to the general secretary or any member of the commission, they will receive a ready response, and should the first or second letter not clear matters up perfectly, feel at liberty to continue correspondence. It is only by this cooperation that the best results may be had.

TRAINING THE TEACHER

[A few summarized ideas from the speech of Elder A. E. Warr at the Religio Convention, Monday afternoon, April 1. —EDITORS.]

The teacher training problem is the greatest problem of the Sunday school, yet there is antagonism to teacher training and sentiment must be created for it.

There are different stages in the development of the child mind. We must take the infinite truths of the gospel and even adapt them to the child mind. There is need of preparation, though it has been said that the only thing some people will attempt to do without preparation is to teach a class in Religio or Sunday school.

One of the best little books for beginners in the study of mind growth is Common Sense, by E. W. Thornton. He says that adaptability is common sense. Common sense is the sixth sense given by the Creator to prevent the other five from making fools of themselves.

This idea of adaptability is illustrated by the boy who rode horseback to the mill with his bag of wheat. At first he put a stone in one end to balance the wheat in the other, but later his common sense brought an adaptability to the need and he put half of the wheat in one end and half in the other, thus eliminating the stone.

"The only responsibility greater than taking a class is not taking one."—Wesley.

"What you do speaks so loud that what you say cannot be heard."—Proverb.

We must be well informed. Some high school students in a certain school were given a list of questions to answer. While we may laugh at their answers, we should beware that we do not fall into as grievous errors.

Some of the answers included the following: Moses was a son of David. He was one of Jesus' disciples. Jonah was the man swallowed by a whale; he was let out by Solomon.

AN IMPORTANT DOCUMENT

The following is the text of one of the most important pieces of legislation ever adopted by the Sunday School Association:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 5, 1917.

To the Convention: We, your committee appointed to confer with a committee from the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric to inquire into the matter of stewardship, surplus, etc., of the association, hereby report the action of the joint committee, which, we are duly informed, was presented to the said joint council and approved by that body:

"Whereas, The General Sunday School Association is an auxiliary to the church, as outlined in Article II and III of the Constitution and By-Laws as follows:

"II. The object of the association shall be to consolidate and unify the forces engaged in the Sunday school work; to devise and put in operation methods and means for its promotion, for the purpose of teaching God's word according to the best methods suggested by experience and the Spirit of truth."

"III. The relationship which this association shall sustain to the church shall be that of an auxiliary, a 'help.' In its government and direction it shall be subject to its own rules and regulations. Its purpose being to aid the church by actively prosecuting the work of a very necessary department of its spiritual labor, it invites the fostering care of the church."

Whereas, the fulfilling of this purpose requires the editing, publishing and sale of Sunday school Quarterlies and other helps from which revenue is derived, thus creating a temporal as well as a spiritual stewardship; therefore

Be it resolved:

1. That in order to put into active operation this stewardship, the executive council is hereby authorized and directed to file with the Presiding Bishop a copy of the financial report of the association and prepare and submit on March 1, of each year, for the approval of the Presiding Bishopric, a statement of the probable receipts and disbursements necessary to properly carry on the work for which the stewardship was created;

2. That all moneys received by the Association be deposited with the Presiding Bishop, to be paid out upon proper requisition as provided by Article V, Section 6, of the Constitution and By-Laws;

3. That all funds on hand over and above six hundred ($600.00) dollars on December 31, 1917, and annually thereafter, having first supplied all the just needs of the association, shall be paid to the Presiding Bishop to be disbursed by him as the law directs;

4. That should there at any time be insufficient funds to satisfy the budget requirements, the needs of the association may be laid before the Presiding Bishopric, as the law provides.

THE NEW RELIGIO OFFICERS

JAMES W. STOBAUGH

The new secretary of the Religio is a young Irishman from the Kansas City Stake. He has been living at Mount Washington, Missouri until the last few weeks, and has now moved to Englewood, the next suburb east, which is next-door neighbor to Independence. He is twenty-one years of age and resides at home with his parents.

He is well and favorably known locally, having put into operation one of the most model secretary record systems and given the secretarial work in that district a dignity, such as we wish it might have everywhere. At their organization the Kansas City Stake Sunday School Association elected him secretary, and at the recent election of officers honored him in the superintendency of the stake, though he preferred the secretarial work. He was ordained a deacon the past year.

He holds the position of head wire chief, while on his shift, being in charge of all the mechanical equipment of the Western Union Telegraph Company's lines in Kansas City territory. His shift is a convenient one, from one at night till eight in the morning—seven hours. This allows him to attend any services he desires during the day and evening, in the stake where every school is on the car line. Being an indefatigable worker, we predict the districts will hear from him and be impelled to respond.

VERNON A. REESE

Vernon A. Reese is a young man near his thirtieth year, tall, slender, dark and serious. He is a citizen of Chicago. Has been very active in the church work and in that of the auxiliaries for several years. He is a grandson of the late Bishop of the Lamoni Stake, William Anderson, and should prove a valuable acquisition to the library commission. We look for active revival of interest in this department. Brother Reese is presiding teacher and clerk of the First Chicago Branch; president of the Northeastern Illinois District Religio. He is also chairman of the district library board and has practical experience for his new work.

R. A. LLOYD

Robert A. Lloyd, who was recently elected treasurer of the General Zion's Religio-Literary Society, is a young man in his early thirties, fair complexioned, medium height, good looking and a live wire. (This, so you won't be shocked when you see him.) He is a resident of Saint Louis, and has been for several years, and still is the superintendent of the Sunday school there. Under his able direction the Sunday school probably has a larger percentage of organized classes than any other Sunday school in the association. He is an active priest in the branch and has held various offices in both of the auxiliaries, as well as being deacon of the branch for a number of years. He is a brother-in-law of vice president T. J. Elliott, since they married sisters several years ago. He is a traveling salesman for a Saint Louis millinery house.

WILLIAM F. SAGE

William F. Sage was born in Syracuse, New York, September 14, 1892. Baptized on December 9, 1907, at Detroit, Michigan. Formerly a member of the Disciple Church. In 1908 was elected to office of librarian of the Detroit Religio and from then on occupied various positions in the First Detroit local, including that of president. In 1915 while occupying as president of the Detroit Religio the local by means of special work won the District Trophy which consisted of a beautiful silver loving cup valued around fifty dollars, given to them for the highest grade. And a special pin was given the president.

Also served in various positions in the Sunday school. Occupied as president of Eastern Michigan District Religio for three years till business compelled resignation from active work for several months. Is a charter member of the Second Detroit Branch and auxiliaries. Appointed assistant general Home Department Superintendent in October, 1916.

NORMAL DEPARTMENT

To the Joint Executive Committee of the Sunday school and Religio Society: For the Religio-Sunday school normal department, I wish to report for the period from March 16, 1916, to date.

The year's work was planned so that two things might be accomplished: first, the completion of the details connected with the offering of the standard course; second, formation of classes in this course.

The course, accordingly, with respect to minor helps, examinations, etc., has been made ready for use, and to further strengthen it, a handbook for teachers of training classes is being prepared. In order to form classes more readily, a campaign for the enrollment of one thousand students in the standard course was undertaken in the late fall and winter. In checking the results, the cumulative effect of over eight years' work for the Hurlbut text became evident; for while a total of 671 students were enrolled, 372 chose short course No. 1, using the Hurlbut text; 122 chose short course No. 2, using the Religio text; while 177 began the study of the standard course. The course in story-telling at present comprises the first two sections of the standard course, and enrollments are included with the latter. The cradle roll superintendents now being canvassed are responding splendidly and a course in story-telling, separate from the above, will be ready for them soon. The enrollment campaign was conducted by Edward F. Yerrington, Providence, Rhode Island, appointed especially for this purpose, and while he pressed the campaign energetically, replies to his repeated letters to the district superintendents and presidents were received from just about ten per cent. The extreme difficulty in securing response from the supposed district workers, and their cooperation in training the teachers in the schools and locals, constitutes our most annoying problem. However, a by-product of the campaign of great value is the publicity given the standard course, and this will be capitalized in our efforts for further enrollments during the coming year.

Including the new enrollments there are now about 1,800 students of the various courses of the department. Progress with many is very slow, and others must be constantly exhorted in order to prevent lapsing entirely. Thus, the history of the department indicates that examinations have never been in satisfactory proportion to the total enrollment. This year is no exception, as the following record of examinations shows:

Short course No. 2 (Religio text): Examination No. 1, 20; No. 2, 16; No. 3, 6, making 42.

Standard course: Examination No. 1 (a), 6; No. 1 (b), 3; No. 2 (a), 1; No. 4 (b), 2, making 12. Total, including 52 graduates, 250.

It should be borne in mind that the examinations in the standard course represent only those of three small classes organized last summer. Later enrollments are not yet ready for the first examination.

Personally the work for reunion and district institutes increased considerably over the previous year; department correspondence almost doubled; and special work incident to the courses was heavy. Grateful acknowledgement is made of the active cooperation of the Religio and Sunday school executives, and of the department heads whose work touches that of the local teachers and officers.

Reports of the receipts and expenditures of the department, with amounts equally apportioned, have been made in detail to the respective treasurers of the General Sunday School Association, and Zion's Religio-Literary Society. Summarized, these show receipts, including a balance of $12.74 at the beginning of the year, of $89.25; expenditures, $99.98, leaving a balance due me of $10.74.

L. F. P. CURRY, Superintendent.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA, March 17 1917.

STORY TELLING FOR TEACHERS

From her tenth year, when she began to understand what her teachers in the day school were trying to do, she was more or less bored in the Sunday school; not because the Sunday-school teachers lacked the best material.

The greatest teaching factor at the disposal of the Sunday school is the art and science of story-telling. Because every normal child has a thirst for stories, "all the world loves a story," because the story satisfies the quest for knowledge. The child must learn through the story of other's experience, since he cannot learn through his own meager experience the effect of certain conduct. Fairy stories are especially fine for this, since in them the right always prevails and the wrong brings disaster.

If we give our children the proper kind of stories, when the time comes that they want to learn through their own experience (this time comes generally in adolescence), they will go out with the spirit of quest, not of experiment.

Another value of stories is, that they develop sustained attention which later becomes concentration. Children like stories which have action, and especially those which have the element of suspense.

One of the things we must try to cultivate is the habit of sympathetic interest and listening. Also in this age, it is very necessary to develop constructive imagination. We in the United States are too apt to judge things entirely by their value in dollars and cents.

Every great business, every great painting, every great composition, every great building or achievement was first built up in the mind. People who object to children's imagination because they're afraid the child will tell lies, do not understand how truly all right and fine the child is. It is only through contact with grown-ups that the child becomes bad.

The story exercises the memory and assists it by surrounding the truth with pleasant things. Jesus knew that, and when he wanted to emphasize that we should be wise and careful in building our characters, he told the story of the house built in the rock and the house built on the sand.

The story stimulates the emotions. The child's nature is largely emotional. We must arouse the feelings of the child in order to impress upon him any lesson or truth. In every service we have music to touch the feelings of the people.

Educators of all ages, when they wanted to stir the people, have written in story form, e. g., Pestalozzi—"Leonard and Gertrude"; Rousseau's "Emile"; Froebel's "Mother play," etc.

In preparation for telling a story we must read our story over and over till we know it thoroughly as it is told in the Bible; then read other books, Josephus, Farrar, etc. When you begin to tell your stories try to retain some of the words of the original story—not just the bare facts. Then arrange the material; then fix the material in mind, but do not memorize it, so you are bound and cannot vary.

We need not go outside the Bible to find stories for the Sunday school. The stories of the Bible are folk stories, handed down by the people. Folk stories indicate the character of a people; the oriental stories emphasize the inexorableness of fate; the Arabian stories are wishing stories; the Chinese have stories of ancestor worship; Greece had the great stories of heroes; in Roman stories the individual was merged in the exaltation of the race. The Hebrew story is the story of Jehovah, the one true God. These stories should be given to the children very much as they are, because they are told simply, by a people who have not yet reached the adult stage of development.

Children have the quality of God's consciousness. They think of God as near. Her seven-year-old boy asked, when fasting for the church last Sunday, "Mamma, will Brother Fred go to God and ask him what to do for the church, and will God tell him?"

Adapt the story to the children, then tell it in simple, dignified language. Remember you're speaking for God.

MRS. W. W. SMITH.

children was carried out, a goodly number of children being in attendance, in spite of the inclement weather. Eight different sisters took part in the meeting and musical selections and songs filled out the time to the delight of the children.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON

The 2 p. m. session opened with singing "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning," No. 156 in the Hymnal.

J. W. Wight offered the opening prayer.

The minutes of the previous session were as usual read and approved.

Independence Stake conference asked for the 1918 meeting but no action was taken on it at this time.

A report from the Religio Society was read, concerning their recent convention.

The conference adopted the coordinating committee idea which had resulted in the appointment of one each by the Religio and Sunday school. The Presidency was authorized to appoint the member of the committee.

Minnesota District sent in a communication asking that dancing and card playing be made a test of fellowship. It was laid on the table.

The matter of incorporation of the church in Canada was on recommendation of joint council referred to Presidency and Presiding Bishopric with authority to take such steps as are in their judgment thought necessary.

A resolution to have all conferences held at Independence was laid on the table by vote of 164 to 87.

A petition from the Pittsburgh District granted the following:

Whereas, the district has grown to such large proportion, and covers a large territory making it inconvenient for so many of the Saints to attend the district conferences, by reason of the expenses attaching thereto, and whereas, we feel confident that a division of the above district is necessary, and in the interest of the membership within said district and the general church,

Therefore, be it resolved that we petition the General Conference to divide the district as follows: The four counties, namely, Brooks, Hancock, Ohio and Marshall, in West Virginia, and Belmont and Jefferson counties in the State of Ohio, the six counties named above to be known as the Wheeling district. The remaining territory of the original Pittsburgh District to be known as the Pittsburgh District.

Albert Carmichael and Floyd McDowell were elected trustees of the Children's Home for a three-year and two-year term respectively.

The request of the gospel literature commission for fifty dollars was referred to the appropriations committee of the order of bishops.

The following referred to the order of bishops, president of Graceland College and Quorum of Twelve for further report and recommendation:

Resolved, That hereafter all money collected throughout the church on the first Sunday of October of each year, known as "College Day," is to be available as a scholarship fund to pay for scholarships at Graceland College, for worthy and needy young men and women, and that the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric is hereby authorized to devise a method, and put in operation, to carry out the purpose of this resolution.

The question that came in from Australia concerning the rights of priests as ex-officio and members of conferences was referred to the joint council.

On recommendation of the members elected on the gospel literature commission E. D. Moore was chosen as the third member of the commission.

Proposals to change the description of the seal of the church (Conference Resolution No. 163) was by motion referred to the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric with power to act. The description is to be made to agree with the seal as used.

The following brethren were recommended by the Presidency for ordination to the office of high priest: E. O. Clark, A. W. Craig, Edward Ingham, H. N. Hansen, Edward Ingham. Brethren Rannie and Hansen were present and expressed a willingness to serve. By motion and vote, the recommendations were indorsed.

Upon recommendation of the Presidency the following were indorsed by the conference for ordination to office of bishop: E. O. Clark, H. A. Scott, A. W. Craig, Edward Ingham. None of these brethren were present.

Joseph A. Tanner was appointed as the church's member of the coordinating committee.

The part of the President's report suggesting serious consideration of the question of biennial conferences (near top of page 39 of DAILY HERALD for April 6) was brought up.

A motion to adopt the suggestion was offered. Following the proposal of a substitute to refer to the Presidency, Twelve and quorums of seventies considerable discussion on the merits and demerits of the case followed and was not concluded as we close our part for the day.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON—CONCLUDED

As we went to press there was a motion before the body to adopt the suggestion in the President's report for biennial conferences (top of page 39 in the DAILY HERALD). There was also a substitute before the body to refer to the Presidency, Twelve and Quorums of Seventy, for consideration and report. After a long discussion the previous question was ordered. The substitute lost and the original motion carried.

The matter of the time and place of the next conference was then raised, and it was moved that when this conference adjourned, it does so to meet at the call of the First Presidency. A substitute was offered that when this conference adjourns it does so to meet at Independence, April 6, 1918. An amendment to the substitute was offered by striking out 1918 and inserting 1919.

This continued the discussion of biennial conferences. Special stress was laid upon the work of the seventy and their rights, but the chair called attention to the discussion between legislative and administrative powers. It was also strongly urged in the terms of the last paragraph of the President's report, that many new matters were soon to be brought forward, and it was urged under these circumstances that we should have an early conference to consider new legislative propositions. Great stress was also laid upon the educational value of the conference. Finally, in the late afternoon, the amendment was defeated but the substitute carried by a vote of 148 to 125. So the next conference will meet in Independence, April 6, 1918.

It is clear that while the body was ready to approve of the suggestion for biennial conferences, they felt that now there is a need for another meeting in the near future. It also occurs to the HERALD editors that a biennial conference would require the amendment of certain of our articles of incorporation since members of the board of trustees of the college, Children's Home, and Sanitarium are elected annually. This will not prevent the biennial conference plans, but it will make necessary careful consideration and readjustment before it is carried into effect.

The benediction was offered by W. A. McDowell.

EVENING

The speaker at the church at 7.30 was Richard Baldwin and on account of the awful weather the attendance was only fair. As usual Bishop Evans preached at the Coliseum, with the building two thirds full.

The seventies held a joint session in the evening and discussed business which had been pending.

SUNDAY

The brightness of the sun in a clear sky on this Easter morning compensated somewhat for his neglect on yesterday. His warm greeting is certainly appreciated.

Every evergreen bent in humble submission to Winter's will carries great loads of heavy snow. The dairyman reports having been stuck in a snow-drift and being compelled to turn back, the first time this year and the worst time he ever had. People pick their way single file along out-of-the-way side-walks that have not been cleared.

Yet more than a mere caprice of Nature is required to deter God's people from assembling at his house to worship him on occasions like this. J. A. Tanner and Walter W. Smith, presidents of the Kansas City and Independence Stakes, respectively, were in charge of the eight o'clock meeting in the upper auditorium of the church.

Joy and gratitude for the resurrection and its resultant conditions, were the dominant themes. The requests coming from the sick and afflicted for the prayers of the Saints in their behalf were reverently considered in the many humble prayers offered.

Meetings like this give one a vision of what may prevail in the future state when all that is evil and undesirable will be repressed and eliminated while all that is good and pure will be accentuated.

A prayer ascends to God from the heart of one of his servants from another stake of Zion. Another from one whose home is in a distant province of Canada, then a brother from California, one from the South and one from the East are heard. The final reunion of all the pure in heart to unitedly glorify his name appears before one's vision almost like a reality with such an experience as an inspiration.

"Glorious things are sung of Zion" melodiously rolls forth and we think of the Zion to be as well as "Enoch's city seen of old." Truly—"then we'll surely be united, and we'll all see eye to eye."

So long as we are in our present condition we are limited by time. What is a mere hour or more to such an audience, half of whom could easily use all the time, were it granted! "Be brief," is the caution that must be urged, yet it continues to be irksome to most of us. Even the big clock pendulum on the wall seems to tick out: "On—on;—time—goes—march—ing—on."

As the testimonies are uttered by one and another, experiences teeming with interest are heard: some of healings, some of preservation in time of danger, others of God's abiding presence by his Holy Spirit, and they all stir the heart.

Youth and age, member and priesthood, experienced and inexperienced, those who testify all put themselves squarely on record that all may know where they stand. Truly a spiritual prayer meeting is a wonderful occasion. No one can portray the spirit of such gatherings. They are not a mere assemblage of God's people. The calm yet powerful presence of God's Spirit pervading the air at such times must be felt to be understood. Now the time has flown and the meeting is over, but its influence remains and will throughout the day, the week, and we may hope, much longer.

At nine the joint quorums of seventy met at the invitation of the Twelve with the latter in a prayer meeting at the high school building. They were out in time to attend the sermons at eleven.

Instead of the usual session of the Sunday school at 9.30, an easter program was rendered in both the upper and lower auditoriums.

All the seats in the upper room were filled and an excellent attendance of mostly children was had below. One feature in the latter program not advertised, was a short address on the Christmas offering by Bishop James F. Keir. He told us he was incurably afflicted with the Christmas offering fever and wanted everyone else to catch it.

He told a story of a traveling man who visited an old-fashioned hotel in an out-of-the-way place. An old grandfather clock stood in the hall, its ponderous pendulum seeming to say: "Take—your—time.—Take—your—time." The next day he took the train to a great city where a red-capped attendant hustled him and his grips up through the station and out into a throbbing auto to be whirled away through noisy streets, where all was haste and speed to a great hotel.

Up to a register, a hastily written name, and up went an elevator to leave him at his room where a little mantle clock was busily ticking away: "Get there! Get there! Get there!" just as we are going to about raising the money we have set out to, for our Christmas offering.

Bishop McGuire was greeted with a full house in the upper auditorium at eleven, assisted by F. G. Pitt. If there was an empty seat we couldn't find it. Not only repression of unnecessary wants was urged, but a better use of that which comes into our hands.

The action of the Sunday school association in voting to turn over to the church all those funds over and above its needs was commended as a move in the right direction. For years a considerable sum has been deposited with the Presiding Bishop but the recent action will release the entire amount to the church funds.

We noticed a competent stenographer busily plying a pencil and we hope to publish for the entire church his words on this memorable occasion.

A full choir sang the songs of Zion with a solo rendition of "The Lord is my shepherd," by Sister W. N. Robinson.

Brother Ammon White addressed a smaller audience in the lower room the same hour, assisted by M. H. Bond. "Have faith in God," was the text. The speaker urged that we must have faith to move out whether others do or not. Each man in his field must have faith in God and in the work that the work will be done. He very nicely wove the experiences of Gideon's three hundred. No church is organized for efficiency as ours is, therefore we have something on which to base our faith.

The service in the main auditorium Sunday afternoon was opened by the singing of the resurrection hymn 180. A beautiful anthem by the conference choir, and a very appealing solo by Sister Cordie McCormick were introductory features. J. W. Rushton delighted the large congregation with one of his eloquent sermons. The text was: "To me, to live is Christ, to die is gain." To that was added a quotation from Boscom, "It cannot be gain to die until it is Christ to live." He lamented the tendency to take a "short cut," instead of developing through steady application, declaring that faith should be established on an intellectual basis, we should develop a philosophy of our doing and being. The gospel of Christ is a science and a reasonable process. The very fall that we deplore grew out of this desire to take a short cut.

Doctor G. Stanley Hall, the greatest psychologist in America, was quoted as saying, "There can be no moral progress unless we believe that the eternal powers are always on the side of right." Also, the startling statement was made that religion has been the opponent of morals, ethics and right, because it has made its appeal primarily to the emotions—has taken the short cut.

Later we expect to publish this sermon in full.

In the lower room at 2.30 U. W. Greene was the speaker. While the audience was not large, he held the interest of those present in a relation of his experiences in Palestine and more recently in his trip to England. To God he gave the praise for comforting reassurances and exceptional freedom from seasickness on the latter trip.

Bishop R. C. Evans spoke on the resurrection to a full house, with the missionary chorus of about a dozen singers rendering the special music.

At the church at 7.45 J. A. Gillen addressed a full house. The missionary chorus gave the music. The lesson was the prayer of Christ in the seventeenth chapter of John. He believed God would be unjust if he did not give to us the same power to overcome the world as he gave Christ. If we have faith in God he will give us power to overcome the world was the belief of the speaker and he has a faculty of imparting faith to his hearers.

With "Deathbed repentance" for his subject Bishop R. C. Evans disposed of some of the fallacies regarding that situation in his characteristic manner at his meeting. The conference choir of about sixty members sang, and a vocal solo was included. There could be no doubt left in the minds of his hearers that when Christ uttered the words "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do," there was still something left for us to likewise finish. To merely believe it not necessarily to be saved, for the very devils believe and tremble.

R. C. Russell was the speaker in the lower room of the church at this hour. We may get echoes of the meeting later.

The speaker at Liberty Home was W. W. Scott and Thomas Leach at the Saints' Home.

MONDAY FORENOON

The prayer meeting at nine at the church was excellently attended. The preaching service following was by Joseph Arber. He insisted that there is a need for more manifestations of our love for God as well as to testify in prayer meetings. He told of one sister who could not give money, but by her efforts she made up one hundred and thirty-two garments for the Children's Home when it was opened.

As the big crowd poured out of the Woman's Auxiliary, a sister greeted us: "I never was so glad." "What's the cause?" We inquired. "Oh, we had a most excellent talk by Brother McGuire."

No doubt the press chairman of the meeting will report some details of the address.

The seventies were in joint session from 9.15 till noon.

MONDAY AFTERNOON

The opening prayer was by I. N. White, following the usual congregational singing. No. 35 was the song chosen and A. N. Hoxie, the church chorister, acted as chorister.

After the reading of the minutes to refresh our memories and receive any corrections if need be, J. W. Rushton arose and desired the indulgence of the audience while he made a few remarks. He was given the privilege and in a few fitting remarks presented resolutions of appreciation which had been drafted and engrossed by order of the General Conference in favor of Bishop E. L. Kelley.

The mind which does not wholly sink under misfortune rises above it more lofty than before, and is strengthened.—Richard Chenevix.

A similar set of resolutions was presented to the family of W. H. Kelley, coming from the Quorum of Twelve.

The secretary read these resolutions for the benefit of those assembled. They are on a beautiful white paper, hand lettered in black, illuminated in gold, and bound in rich black morocco.

The order of bishops sent in a communication recommending that General Conference resolution No. 225 be reaffirmed. By vote, this was done. The effect of this resolution is that the Presiding Bishop be a member of the Board of Publication.

Six brethren were recommended to be ordained high priests. The recommendation came from the Presidency and quorum of high priests. The names are: H. P. W. Keir, R. N. Burwell, W. R. Adams, D. J. Williams, D. T. Williams, H. E. Moler. Brethren Burwell, Adams, D. J. and D. T. Williams and Moler were present and expressed willingness to serve.

Spring River District asked that a uniform system of reporting for the priesthood be provided. It was suggested that such a system already prevailed, having been worked out by the First Presidency.

By vote the resolution was laid on the table.

B. J. Scott was recommended for ordination to office of bishop. The brother signified his willingness to accept.

The Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric brought in a recommendation that the Nodaway and Far West Districts in Missouri be organized into a stake to be known as the Far West Stake, with headquarters at Saint Joseph, Missouri. They further recommended that R. S. Salyards be chosen president and B. J. Scott as bishop.

A motion to adopt brought out some statements that some had for a long time believed that such a step would some time be taken. R. S. Salyards stated his willingness to serve, as also did B. J. Scott. The recommendation was adopted.

The paragraph following the one on biennial conferences in the President's report, touching on the building suitable quarters for conference gatherings was brought up.

It was moved to refer to the order of bishops for investigation and report.

A substitute was offered, to approve and refer to Presidency and Presiding Bishopric to carry out at their discretion. A substitute prevailed which added the Twelve to the above.

The substitute as amended was adopted.

It was announced that J. J. Cornish would again preach at the church at 7.45 by request. Other announcements were, prayer meeting at 9 in charge of F. G. Hedrick and F. G. Pitt, preaching at 10.45 by J. A. Koehler, assisted by H. W. Smith. Bishop Evans at the Coliseum. The doxology was sung and the meeting closed with benediction by U. W. Greene.

An early adjournment was taken to allow the quorums to handle matters in their hands.

It is hoped the conference will adjourn by Friday.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

The conference which has just adjourned, is one of the shortest for many years. At ten o'clock Friday morning, April 6, the gavel fell for its opening. At 10.30 o'clock April 13, the ordination meeting was adjourned and the conference formally closed, but the final business session was completed by four o'clock the previous afternoon.

Throughout the conference one man stands forth as dominating the situation. Frederick M. Smith, who presided at all the business sessions, stood forth better and stronger than ever before, physically, mentally, as a parliamentarian and as a leader. But it was in the meetings of the priesthood that he appeared at his best and greatest.

He spoke four mornings, outlining the work and what would be expected of the missionary force and of the local men. He explained, also, in part what he was planning to do with the Quorum of the Twelve. He emphasized very clearly the necessity of education in a very broad way, and also the necessity of spirituality. We shall have further comments later and possibly a resume of his remarks for the HERALD readers, with further discussion. What he said then had much to do with quorum action and with the action of the conference. In fact, he showed himself more the leader in the meetings of the Melchisedec priesthood than he did even on the floor of the conference, and we have heard only praise of what he there presented.

The conference itself is significant as setting forth a higher standard for service of the men in the field—the missionary force sent out by appointment of General Conference; also of the new requirements to be made of district presidents. More efficient work is to be required of both the local workers and of the general church authorities. This means preparation as well as service.

The Quorum of Twelve are to assist more particularly in the general work of the church. This change in the work of the Twelve alone is epoch making, but in addition to this we have the higher standard being set and the stronger line drawn between local and missionary work. Much was attempted to strengthen the rank and file of the priesthood.

The matter of a meeting place for General Conference was referred to the joint council.

The idea of a biennial conference was approved, but provision made for a meeting next year.

A new provision was made concerning silencing men in the field, and that power placed upon the authorities of the priesthood, the duty being recognized to protect the interests of the church.

A significant feature is the provision by the conference in connection with the Sunday school, Religion and Woman's Auxiliary for a coordinating committee. This is also of large significance, and we trust will result in the elimination of unnecessary duplication.

Upon the whole the conference business was that arising directly from reports, and especially from the recommendation of the joint council, or in matters which were referred to the joint council with power to act. It is because of this fact and the large amount of work which was done by the council before the conference met, that the meeting was so greatly shortened. We hope to take up special features of the conference in succeeding issues of the HERALD.

The conference is noteworthy for its continual expressions of its confidence and trust in Frederick M. Smith. S. A. B.

"THE MESSIAH"

"The Messiah" was rendered by the conference choir on April 12 and 13, the first rendition being for the visitors, as many left on the 13th for their homes.

The wonderful music, solos and choruses, of this oratorio is already too well known to require a special description here. The church choirs have been practicing it the past two years, and it was rendered at the conference at Independence a year ago.

We have given a hint of the devotion and consecration of the general church chorister, Albert N. Hoxie, and yet we have told only a small part. The choir in Philadelphia under his direction has been a powerful instrument in interesting outsiders in our church work. He has supported the work there, both the orchestra and choir, with his private purse, as well as assisting worthy young people to get a musical education.

[We well remember four years ago, that he was considering resigning his work, so as to do more by way of personal preparation, as well as the direction of the musical interests of the church. Fortunately, he did not do this, and the way opened speedily so that he has not only been able to secure the studies he wished, but also to secure ample means for helping others; which he has done. Last fall he advertised for singers to give a rendition of "The Messiah" in the Philadelphia church at Christmas. Nearly two hundred responded, of whom some thirty-five remained with him and the choir.

Choir prayer meeting is the other great theme, coequal with the choral music, and not a bit third is the subject of consecration.

When we consider how fully he gives himself to his work, we need not be surprised to see his dream come true, when he will direct one thousand voices. One splendid feature of this movement is that it develops the talent of our young people in this special line, and then retains their services for the church.

The recital at Lamoni was a marvelous spectacle as well as an auditory treat. Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley, who sang the soprano has been doing splendid work all winter in Omaha. Mrs. Frances Norris rendered the contralto part in a very effective manner. The spirit of devotion was manifest. Paul N. Craig, director of the Lamoni choir, teacher of vocal music at Graceland College (also counselor in the Lamoni Stake Presidency) is well known to all of the musical interests in the church. When we say that he rendered the bass solos, it should be sufficient to intimate the high character of their rendition. He has been long devoted to the musical interests of the church as well as the spiritual, combining the two in his work of teaching, and especially in his own rendition.

These singers were already known to us. We do not reflect on their work when we say that R. C. Smith who sang tenor, was the revelation of the oratorio. He showed not only great natural ability, well trained, but he showed a conception of the role that is rarely found until the thirties or forties. He did things that he had not been taught, but which gave expression and reality to the difficult, but beautiful parts he had to sing. He showed a grasp of the role and sang with a feeling and spirituality that was quite unexpected. As he develops we look for great work from him.

One hears much of artistic temperament, so we feel that much credit is also due Mrs. W. N. Robinson, who assisted three of the soloists (all except Mrs. Kelley) in their rehearsal and then herself sang in the chorus. When a woman of her social standing and musical standing and ability is not only willing to stand back and let others do the stellar parts, but to assist them in their preparation, and then herself sing in the chorus, we have no fear of the ultimate triumph of the choral work of the church.

Nor was she alone in this: there were other singers, who with a little training, could have handled the solo parts, to be noted here and there, in many places in the chorus. Many of these, in the opinion of their friends, might have assumed the stellar role with equal success with the principals. But all willingly devoted their talent to the general result, which was remarkably fine and smooth in the 13th chorus.

This may sound like high praise, but when the glorious strains of the "Hallelujah" brought the audience to its feet in silent homage to the "Lord of lords and King of kings," even the deaf heard and worshiped.

THE ORDINATION MEETING

To carry out the recommendations of the various councils and quorums, all ratified by the General Conference, an ordination meeting was held in the upper auditorium of the church at Lamoni on Friday morning at 9.30.

President Frederick M. Smith was in charge of the meeting and as a prelude to the service arranged the men on the platform. Brethren Philip Davenport and T. W. Curtis were ratified by their district conference for ordination to office of elder and since they had been put under conference appointment they were included in the ordinations at this time.

"Nearer, my God, to thee" was sung, and J. W. Rushton offered the invocation.

The responsibilities of ordination, it being the gateway to a large field of usefulness, were pointed out by President Smith. It was pictured as a process to liberate latent talent. It presupposes a willingness on the part of the recipient to recognize the opening of the gate to service; a disposition to be studious. It should bring to them a realization of their weaknesses and a desire to overcome them.

One predominating characteristic of a man of God should be cleanliness of thought and action. To keep oneself continually above reproach is one of the permanent responsibilities of the priesthood.

"These men are in a public way attesting to us that they are willing to accept these responsibilities.

"Until we have a band of men who are more consecrated, more devoted, more energetic than those whom they are expected to lead we shall be falling far short of our mark.

"We have looked forward to an endowment, but it means a consecration of mind, body and spirit, an expansion of soul. For the richness of that endowment let us pray, let us hope, let us work."

B. J. Scott was ordained a bishop by Frederick M. Smith and B. R. McGuire.

Edward Rannie was ordained a high priest by G. T. Griffiths and F. M. Sheehy.

H. N. Hansen a high priest by F. M. Sheehy and G. T. Griffiths.

A verse of No. 172 in the Hymnal was sung—"Be with me, Lord, where'er I go; teach me what thou wouldst have me do."

R. N. Burwell was ordained a high priest by U. W. Greene and J. W. Rushton.

W. R. Adams to office of high priest, by J. W. Rushton and U. W. Greene.

The second verse of the song was sung, A. N. Hoxie leading.

D. J. Williams was ordained a high priest by J. A. Gillen and Peter Anderson.

D. T. Williams was ordained a high priest by Peter Anderson and J. A. Gillen.

"I need thy Spirit every passing hour," began the third verse of song, so expressive of the sentiments of the hour.

H. E. Moler was ordained a high priest by W. M. Aylor and J. F. Curtis.

J. F. Mintun was ordained a high priest by J. F. Curtis and W. M. Aylor.

Warren E. Peak was ordained a high priest by T. W. Williams and R. C. Russell.

James E. Bishop a high priest by R. C. Russell and T. W. Williams.

One verse of No. 187 was sung.

E. A. Curtis was ordained a seventy by T. C. Kelley and E. E. Long.

B. J. Doty was ordained a seventy by E. E. Long and T. C. Kelley.

T. W. Curtis to the office of elder by J. F. Mintun and H. E. Moler.

Philip Davenport was ordained an elder by H. E. Moler and J. F. Mintun.

In the absence of the usual pastoral the missionaries are expected to begin work where left off, or in their new fields until such time as detailed information can be given.

After a motion had prevailed to adjourn, the President declared the conference officially adjourned.

No. 111 was reverently sung as a closing number and F. M. Smith offered the final benediction and blessing upon the conference.

The sixty-fourth General Conference of the church is now history.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Bishop Ordained High Priest

A query is going the rounds, Should a man be ordained a high priest before being ordained a bishop, or may a bishop be ordained a high priest? At the late conference the latter procedure was adopted. (James E. Bishop was ordained a high priest.)

And Still They Came

People continued to arrive as late as Thursday evening, and called up the committee to be assigned stopping places, although the conference had already adjourned the final business session. T. W. Williams arrived from California in time to attend the final business session. He said he had heard that the hastening time was at hand, but now he knew it.

A Correction

In "Meeting Place for General Conference" in the DAILY HERALD of April 11, there occurs a ridiculous error. Doctrine and Covenants, 130:7 is under discussion. As printed, it reads, "Naturally we impotently expect these men to set an example in the observance of that law." It should read, "Naturally we confidently expect these men to set an example," etc.

An Untimely Anthem

A few weeks ago while the rehearsals for the conference were in order, the Lamoni choir, instead of marching up and taking their seats in regular order at the opening of the meeting, remained standing and surprised everyone by calling out, "All we like sheep have gone astray." The repetition of this theme was almost fatal to the gravity of their audience, time and place being taken into consideration.

Architects and Allied Trades

On Thursday, April 12, after the business session a meeting was held, of architects and others interested in trades connected with the building up and development of the material properties of the church, such as church buildings, office buildings and other buildings controlled by the church. About a dozen met and organized with H. C. Smith, 101 Highland avenue, Sumerville, Massachusetts, as chairman, and Charles F. Church, Lamoni, as secretary. No name was adopted, as it was decided to enroll during the year all who are willing to serve in the solution of the problems connected with better buildings. The matter was discussed till 5.30 p. m. Encouraging letters have already been received from many during the past year. They want all who are engaged in constructive arts to affiliate with them, and request that such write the chairman, H. C. Smith, at the address given above. They will meet during the next conference.

Our Letter Department

On account of devoting our entire time and space to reporting the news and observations on the recent General Conference, we have been compelled to omit the publication of the usual letters until it was out of the way. However, we shall be able to print a large number of them in the succeeding issues and will soon be back to normal. We desire the indulgence of our readers while we try to get "out of the wilderness."

The Conference Daily

Those of our readers who did not subscribe for the daily HERALD have missed a number of special conference items which lack of space will prevent us from using in the weekly edition. We gave over last week's number to this and most of this week's, but still it is impossible to crowd eighty pages of matter into forty-eight allowed us for the two numbers of the weekly. Some of the back numbers of the DAILY are not obtainable at this office.

Those Omitted Names

Great stress was laid at the past conference upon the fact that efficiency will be the requirement in General Conference appointees, and that many would be dropped. We have not yet completed our comparison of the whole list, but among the high priests and seventies we note the following omitted this year who were appointed last year, or the year before: Walter W. Smith, Joseph A. Tanner, S. A. Burgess, and Frank Russell. Some of these men have the nerve to suggest that they are placed in the same category as the Quorum of Twelve.

The Boys' Organization

The result of the meeting held during the sessions of the conference to discuss the possibilities in the organization of the boys of the church in a somewhat similar manner to the Boy Scouts, Oriole Girls, etc., was the appointment of a committee of three to work out and formulate plans for a more permanent basis later. R. W. Farrell, of 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island, will act as chairman of the committee while D. T. Williams of Des Moines and Audentia Anderson of Omaha, will each do all he can in the way of securing information and studying local needs. The latter will attend more especially to the publicity end of the matter. We hope to hear more of this important matter during the year and that something can be done to extend the work throughout the church and fully organize at next conference time.

Numerous Meetings

Thursday evening, the 12th, a number of meetings were held of special interest. We noticed in one corner the association of architects and engineers who remained in constant session until 5.30. In another session the Graceland Extension Institute met and discussed problems. The same officers were re-elected for another year: Frederick M. Smith, director; George N. Briggs, associate director; C. B. Woodstock, registrar. They were also empowered to use what funds were necessary and to do what is necessary to carry on the work energetically. At the same time the members of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society lecture board were attempting to meet. George N. Briggs, Vernon A. Reese and Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser were appointed by the Religio executive committee to be that board. At five o'clock all meetings took a recess while Elder R. C. Evans led two candidates into the waters of baptism. On Wednesday evening after the oratorical contest the Greater Graceland Association held its meeting in the basement.

THE CAMERA CLUB

The work of the Camera Club promises to be of much interest to the church when it develops into more general lines. During the conference at Independence last year the club was organized with about fifteen members, but during the year this number has been increased through the efforts of Brother Albert Knowlton, the secretary, till they now number about thirty-five members.

The members are constantly on the lookout for interesting pictures of historical interest especially along church lines, such as church buildings and gatherings likely to be of general interest. These are made and collected by the members all over the country, from the Atlantic coast to the Middle West and to the Pacific. The organization is most complete in the East and Middle West, the people in the far West being a little slow in coming to a realization of the possibilities in this work. Those interested in this work and who would like to become members should correspond with the secretary at 1419 Kensington Street, Independence, Missouri. The president of the club is Elder C. Ed Miller, of Honolulu, and since he cannot be present, he is urging that all who can participate in the meetings and the work of the club do so, for it is sure to be of great value to the church.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Keep Your Eyes Upon the Preacher

It has seemed to please the poets,
On occasions to advise
The poor, Christian on his journey
As to where to keep his eyes.
One compares life to a railway,
And that none of us may fail
Of a successful run, he warns us
"Keep your eye upon the rail."

Another quotes a colored parson
Who, emboldened by grave fears
Lest his wrought-on congregation,
Blinded by repentant tears

Shall omit their contribution,
Reminds them in a voice sedate,
"Keep dry eye on de sasser!
Watch de contribution plate!"

And there's scores of other places
To which, if we would be wise
And abound in Christian graces,
We must give attentive eyes.
Of these there's one suggests itself,
Surely an important feature,
When in attendance at church service,
Keep your eyes upon the preacher.

That fine new hat across the aisle—
It certainly is painful,
To have to draw your gaze away,
Just when you've most a brainful
Of plans how you can copy it
With things you have in store,
Lace, velvet, silk, and in that way
Save dollars ten or more.

To add unto your offering—
But how your mind is straying!
Your thoughts are most commendable,
But what's the preacher saying?
That poor mother with the baby
Who can't approve of church a bit,
Let's not annoy her more by staring
While she tries to quiet it.

Neither vow we'd not have brought it,
Perhaps we'd lack the fortitude
To ever reach God's house at all
If we had to bring a brood.
Which of course is speculation,
There's but one thing we can declare,
Without fear of contradiction,
All will agree the child is there.
And 'twill be the mother's verdict,
That we're most angelic creatures,
If, instead of baby's efforts,
We will calmly watch the preacher's.

Our minds are with such ease diverted;
Now a fly proceeds to roam
From gray head to thatch of auburn,
Then strolls awhile on hairless dome;
Or a brown bird out the window,
O'er the sill his head will poke;
But see the congregation's smiling!
And you didn't get the joke.

The question's really psychologic,
Though understood by everyone,
That the object holds our interest best
Which we place our eyes upon;
So to learn the lessons from God's word,
How to please Christ, the great Teacher,
And acquire mind concentration,
Keep your eyes upon the preacher.

"Don't complain about the high cost of living until you've taken time to study your budget. Remember it's not the food eaten that costs so much as that wasted by poor economy."

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

MONDAY EVENING

The church was packed long before meeting time to hear "Johnnie" Cornish. A number remained standing throughout the meeting.

On occasions like this, about all one can do is to sit like a sardine, and look and listen. The choir meets in the basement before marching to their place on the platform, and always have prayer before beginning their work. We weren't there this time, but we have been.

The director observed that the front aisle was full—too full to allow comfortable passage.

"Would the ladies and gentlemen please refrain from obstructing the majestic march of the choir as they ascend from the lower regions to the heights of glory?" he suavely requested. They did.

The sermon was on—"if any man preach any other gospel than I have preached, let him be accursed." The audience was very responsive and seemingly much edified.

At the Coliseum, Bishop Evans, backed up by the missionary chorus, talked on "Divine faith versus human reason."

The seventies met in their various quorum meeting places.

The local members of the Woman's Auxiliary held a reception to visiting members in the lower room at the church during the evening.

Most excellent weather prevailed throughout the day and evening.

TUESDAY FORENOON

The first meeting of the morning was a choir prayer meeting from 7 to 8.45, in charge of Albert N. Hoxie and Arthur H. Mills. It was held in one of the smaller rooms in the basement and the attendance was good. One member who has been raised in prayer meetings reports: "It was the best prayer meeting I was ever in." They will be continued.

The eight o'clock lecture to the priesthood was by President F. M. Smith. These meetings begin promptly at eight and are spoken of as the most educational and worth-while of any the church has had. There is the utmost frankness and a spade is designated by its proper name. Mark H. Siegfried will be the speaker to-morrow.

The prayer meeting at nine was in charge of F. G. Hedrick and F. G. Pitt.

The nine o'clock prayer service opened with the song, "Lord, we come before thee now." Brother Pitt exhorted that we remember the sick in our prayers and use wisdom in our testimonies.

After six prayers and two testimonies "A song of entreaty," copies of which had been distributed, was sung.

Brother Hoxie arose and urged all to take enough copies of this song home for their branches and paste them in their hymn books. He expressed the hope that some day we might have a songbook full of such songs as this which would express the peculiar spirit of our gospel. He also offered a few words of heartfelt thanksgiving and testimony.

There were in all twenty testimonies and six prayers, interspersed by "Let us pray for one another," "Blest be the tie that binds," and "Rejoice ye Saints of latter days."

At ten Heman C. Smith addressed the high priests and the elders adjourned to attend. The subject was: "The Utah Mormon hierarchy." The meeting was held at the high school and some went away because there were not enough seats.

At 10.45 J. A. Koehler was the speaker at the church, with good interest and attendance. The sermon was reported and will no doubt be published.

The joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric meet each forenoon to consider matters referred to them and the routine of appointments. They hold forth in the church recorder's office.

The order of bishops hold sessions each morning at 9.15 in the library, closing before the joint council convenes.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON

The session at 2 p. m. was begun with singing "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning," and prayer by James F. Keir.

The minutes were read and approved.

The order of bishops recommended that the new gospel literature commission be granted fifty dollars to prosecute their work. This was adopted.

The same body brought in the following and by motion it was adopted.

The Order of Bishops has carefully considered the matter of memorial to the martyrs, referred to them. A committee of three was appointed to make a preliminary investigation. Their report, which was submitted and adopted is as follows:

We believe immediate action should be taken looking toward permanent protection of the grounds at Nauvoo and to the preservation of the house still standing and known as the homestead of Joseph, the martyr.

To this end we recommend that a permanent committee be appointed from this order looking toward the fencing of the grounds, caring for the house, locating some one there to act as caretaker and who shall also handle church literature, and continue the work of arranging for a suitable monument to be paid for from the general funds of the church or by special contributions in response to the call of the Presiding Bishop.

The committee appointed consists of Bishops B. R. McGuire, James F. Keir, and M. H. Siegfried.

An amendment prevailed to add George P. Lambert to those suggested.

The joint council brought in the following and it was adopted without debate. The quorums had gone over the matter thoroughly.

We are instructed by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric to present the following action by that body:

"The Joint Council, appreciating the difficulties arising from a misunderstanding or misrepresentation of Conference Resolution No. 604, recommend that it be rescinded, and the following substituted therefor:

"When any ordained officer or minister is believed to be guilty of immoral or unchristianlike conduct, the usual court procedure of the church adequately protects his interests. However, ministerial or official influence involves also such factors as reputation, ability, etc. Upon the authorities of the priesthood and church officers rests the duty of protecting the interests of the church when necessary by withdrawing representative or ministerial rights, these rights or interests of the individual concerned being safeguarded by appeal through the administrative line."

The order of bishops presented the following, which was adopted without debate:

We are instructed by the Joint Council of Presidency Twelve and Presiding Bishopric to present the following resolution unanimously passed by the Order of Bishops and endorsed by the Joint Council:

That it is the opinion of the Order of Bishops that every branch should comply with the law by receiving oblations at sacrament service, as found in Section 59:2, and that the amount so received should be placed with the Bishopric in harmony with Section 42:8.

The Presiding Bishop recommended the following as members of the Board of Publication. The recently reaffirmed conference resolution makes the bishop a member: A. Carmichael, Frederick B. Blair, James F. Keir, E. A. Blakeslee, B. F. McGuire. These were by vote indorsed.

As committee on Saints' homes, the names of A. Carmichael, R. J. Lambert, and A. J. Yarrington were named and indorsed by vote. The recommendation that one of the membership of the committee be appointed business manager of the homes, and that the superintendent of the home farm at Lamoni be also superintendent of the farm at the Children's Home and College Farm, was included in the indorsement of conference.

The time set for introduction of new business was 2 p. m. on the 11th.

The roll call of the ex-officios of the conference was called.

The committee on Bible normal was continued.

The joint council are continued as committee on church offices.

The committee on appointment for vacancies on board of auditors was continued as at present constituted.

The term of M. A. McConley as member of the board of auditors having expired, and he being located in the Hawaiian Mission, F. F. Wipper and Charles Fry were nominated and Brother Fry elected.

The President and Historian were authorized to appoint the committee on revision of church history. The fifth volume is practically completed by the historian.

A new committee to confer with the Church of Christ at Independence now stands as follows: F. M. Smith, E. L. Kelley, W. W. Smith, Mark H. Siegfried and B. R. McGuire.

By motion and substitute, the committee on Book of Mormon concordance were instructed to turn completed manuscript over to Board of Publication and president and that its publication be hastened so far as possible. The manager of the Board of Publication desired that all vote yes on the latter proposition—and they did.

The committee on Young People's History was continued as it stands.

Albert Carmichael and G. R. Wells were reelected members of the Graceland College board of trustees. S. A. Burgess was nominated to succeed G. R. Wells and the vote was: Wells, 196, Burgess 59.

The members elected on the general library commission now are: Elbert A. Smith for the Presidency, James F. Keir, for the Bishopric (both ex-officio members of the board) and E. D. Moore for the church, Heman C. Smith suggesting the latter be elected instead of himself.

No changes were made on the Sanitarium board of trustees.

The action of last year which suggested that two women be on board of trustees of the Sanitarium was brought up and rescinded.

The committee on Book of Rules have completed most of the work and were continued with the suggestion of one of the members that they speed up.

J. F. Garver was continued as a member of the social purity board.

L. E. Hills said he had prepared a copyrighted Book of Mormon map and had two zinc etchings made of it. He offered them to the church. It was received and referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the chair, the committee to report a year hence.

It was moved to rescind the action of last year, referring matter of atonement to the First Presidency, Twelve and Seventy, and that it be referred to the Presidency. The motion was laid on the table.

The Presidency, Twelve and Quorum of High Priests nominated the following for ordination to office of high priest: J. F. Mintun, W. E. Peak, R. T. Cooper, A. E. Stark. These were by vote indorsed. Brother Mintun and Peak were present and signified willingness to accept.

The meeting adjourned at 4 p. m.

TUESDAY EVENING

The Woman's Auxiliary occupied the time at the church with an interesting program. In this case, as in a number of others, we publish details of the meeting under separate heading.

The Coliseum attendance was very large to hear Bishop Evans.

A number of quorums held meetings in the evening, while a number of committee meetings are always to be found here and there between and even during every general session.

Some jokes are always passing around among the missionary force about being brought "on the carpet" before the joint council. Here and there they may be seen awaiting their turn to appear before that body.

One wag intimated that they kept a tape measure on hand to ascertain whether everyone measured up to the physical standard, while questions were put to each to ascertain his mental capacity.

Of course we know this is only one of a number of jokes which serve to lighten the real situation. It is common knowledge that men are called in to talk over their financial needs, their special desires, etc., that so far as possible all appointments may be satisfactory.

The choir held a reception at the high school building during the evening.

WEDNESDAY FORENOON

The first meetings on the 11th were simultaneous prayer meetings of the choir and the young people at seven a. m.

The eight o'clock priesthood meeting was as usual well attended. Bishop Siegfried of Independence Stake, told in a most direct way of the problems incident to the gathering. He did not attempt to give a solution for all the difficulties, but suggested some of the ways in which the general ministry could help. He will continue to-morrow. President Smith suggested that there were a number of things "up his sleeve" which he wanted to present, even if it became necessary for the priesthood to remain a half day after conference to hear a number of speeches bunched up.

The prayer meeting at nine was in charge of O. Salisbury and William Grice. Excellently attended and most interesting.

At 9.15 the elders met. We got in late, but in time to note the customary intense interest and hear some most excellent comments. At 10.30, like a lot of colts that want to get into the pasture lot they went in a body to the church to hear the "Indomitable Dan" Macgregor. In addition the appointment of Elder Macgregor to speak at 10.45 was supplemented by a number of requests sent in from the audience.

The great world conflict in its relation to prophecy was the subject. Quoting liberally from a miniature library he presented the opinions of men of the past and present on the present situation, with his own interpretations thereon.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

The 2 p. m. meeting was called to order by President F. M. Smith and after singing No. 120 in the Hymnal, Frederick A. Smith offered prayer.

W. O. Hands sent in a message asking that the boy movement be kept alive. The President stated that those interested should arrange a meeting soon.

The appointment of the following as members of the committee on revision of church history, was indorsed by conference action: E. L. Kelley, Mark H. Siegfried and Charles Fry.

A recommendation from the Presidency, Twelve, order of bishops and president of Graceland College was to the effect that they looked with favor on the adoption of the scholarship plan for Graceland. They further favored setting apart such part of the college collections as are necessary for this purpose.

The committee on boundary lines suggested granting request of Mobile District in defining boundaries; that the counties of Rogers and Washington in Oklahoma be transferred from Spring River District to Central Oklahoma District; that territory in British Columbia east of 120th meridian be taken from Seattle and British Columbia and placed in the Spokane District; Dallas County, Texas, from Central Oklahoma District to Central Texas District. These recommendations were adopted.

The Woman's Auxiliary nominated Mrs. Jennie M. Studley as member of the social purity board, and she was so indorsed.

As the nominee for member of the Children's Home board of trustees, Mrs. L. L. Resseguie was suggested. She was elected.

They asked that a member of the auxiliary be given a place on the library commission. No action was taken.

The auxiliary had chosen Mrs. Frederick M. Smith as their member of the coordinating committee provided for by action of the church, Sunday school and Religio.

The high priests sent in a statistical report which was read and spread on the minutes.

The Sunday School Association work was reported by its superintendent and secretary. That part of it which referred to the stewardship (already reported) was adopted as the sentiments of the conference.

A communication from the library commission told of the appropriation of fifty dollars each for library extension work and asked that the conference vote one hundred and fifty dollars to the fund. The request was referred to the appropriation committee of the order of bishops for consideration and report.

The gospel literature commission reported that they had organized and appointed R. W. Farrell as superintendent of the active work.

It was moved to look with disfavor upon the action of the Sunday School Association in adopting the King James Version of the Bible as the basis in Quarterly lessons.

It was urged by the mover and supporters of the motion that the conference should take action so the next Sunday school convention could base its action on the sentiments of the church as expressed by the conference.

Much interesting debate was brought out. This question always does. Some urge that we should not fear to more fully use all three standard books. Others were as positive that Sunday schools in smaller places are handicapped by the opposition of non-members to the lessons which are based on the Inspired Translation and Book of Mormon.

The motion to lay on the table prevailed by a big majority. This matter persists in coming up, but every effort to change it fails.

The meeting adjourned at 3.30 with a clear table. The quorums have several important matters on hand and they were urged to dispose of them.

Immediately following the service a conference picture was taken in front of the church.

WEDNESDAY EVENING

The successful contestant in the Graceland College oratorical contest was Charles Hield, with an oration on "Patriotism." Ralph Travis had second place, Richard J. Sweetman third, David Hopkins fourth.

At the Coliseum Bishop Evans continued with unabated interest. It is planned to continue the meetings over Sunday as announced.

THURSDAY FORENOON

The eight o'clock meeting for the priesthood was held as usual, with President F. M. Smith as the speaker. Some most excellent advice was given, with instruction on reporting, etc.

The prayer meeting at nine was in charge of L. W. Fike and R. E. Burgess. The attendance was unusually large, though all these meetings have been popular and much interest manifested.

At 10.45 L. E. Hills told of his new map on Book of Mormon geography. Some of the brother's conclusions are out of the ordinary and will receive due consideration by the committee to be appointed to consider the matter.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON

The meeting at 2 p. m. was opened by singing "My times are in thy hands" and prayer by J. F. Curtis.

The minutes of yesterday were read, and we note we omitted to report that a telegram expressing continued fealty to the church was received from the London, Ontario, Branch.

The credentials committee brought in an additional report, saying among other interesting items that there were 276 ex-officios and 143 delegates enrolled.

Some interesting matter was reported by the order budget of the Sanitarium and the request of the library commission for $100. The report was adopted.

They had considered a number of very important matters, including a proper interpretation of the temporal law. Eleven sessions had been held.

The newly organized Latter Day Saint Traveling Salesmen's Association reported that they had adopted as a motto: "Push." Their object is to coordinate and unify the church forces engaged in this occupation by increasing their "efficiency in the commercial world and in the promotion of church interests."

"No person shall be allowed to remain a member of the association who is found guilty of immoral conduct, or who is unwilling to do his part in making effective the object of this organization." They meet each year at conference time. O. Salisbury is president, A. N. Hoxie and B. M. Anderson associates, Clarence Skinner, secretary.

The conference voted to look with favor on the movement and give it hearty support.

The Woman's Auxiliary made a comprehensive report of their work.

The First Seventy reported their work. F. C. Smith, W. R. Smith, S. O. Foss and B. F. Renfro had been released. J. F. Mintun, W. E. Peak, H. N. Hansen and Edward Rannie were to be ordained high priests, leaving sixty members in the quorum. They report 8,240 sermons and 505 baptisms among other items.

The council of seven presidents of seventy reported as follows:

Up to the present date the Presidents of the Seventy have held twenty regular sessions since the 27th of March, when we held our first session, one joint session with the Twelve, one joint session with the Twelve and Seventy, and seven sessions with the quorums of the Seventy, in joint session.

The Council have recommended for release the following named brethren with the understanding that this action on our part is without any reflection on the personal honor or integrity of the brother whom we recommend for release: F. C. Smith, W. R. Smith, S. O. Foss, M. F. Gowell, T. J. Sheldon, F. J. Chatburn, C. H. Porter, C. G. Lewis, B. F. Renfro, C. E. Crumley.

The last four brethren have been released at their own request. We have also recommended to be dropped from the office of seventy Brother E. J. Goodenough: . . .

We have selected the following brethren to be ordained to the office of seventy: Robert T. Brown and E. A. Curtis.

Respectfully,

J. F. MINTUN,

Secretary Presidents of Seventy.

The report was adopted, with recommendations.

The matter of dropping the name of a certain member of the seventy was referred to the Presidency and Twelve with power to act.

The third quorum of seventy reported. They turned over ten dollars to the Bishopric for Christmas offering, with request that it be applied on the church debt. They had preached 3,090 sermons and 285 baptisms.

The second quorum of seventy reported 5,733 sermons and 369 baptisms. A. C. Silvers succeeds H. E. Moler as secretary.

A program committee will provide for work at the elders' meeting next year their report said. They had held four meetings, including a joint session. The average attendance has been 56.

The order of evangelists reported having held one meeting, with eleven members present.

The usual sustaining of church officers and organizations was gone through with, meaning much, though seemingly gone through with perfunctorily.

A number of the seventies voted to sustain themselves—we hope they will.

The appointments were read, but issuing of certificates deferred till to-morrow.

It is planned to hold an ordination meeting in the morning at nine, following the eight o'clock meeting. All those who have been indorsed for ordination will be set apart at this meeting.

The "Messiah" is to be rendered to-night and to-morrow night at the church.

Most of the conference visitors will be leaving to-morrow and Lamoni will take up its usual local activities with renewed determination, seeking to hold its place in the onward march of events.

"Onward Christian soldiers" was the closing song and Frederick A. Smith offered the benediction.

POINTS OF INTEREST FROM THE REPORTS

It is rather surprising to notice from the report of the credentials committee that in the order of membership their various stakes and districts would be classified as follows:

First, Independence Stake, 3,600; second, Lamoni Stake, 3,276; third, Eastern Michigan, 2,770; fourth, Little Sioux, 2,231; fifth, Spring River district, Missouri and Kansas, 2,221; sixth, Far West District, 2,028; seventh, Toronto, 1,935; eighth, Central Michigan, 1,850; ninth, Kansas City Stake, 1,848; tenth, Northern California, 1,668; eleventh, Owen Sound, Canada, 1,367; twelfth, Des Moines, Iowa, 1,340; thirteenth, London, Canada, 1,328; fourteenth, Chatham, Canada, 1,324; fifteenth, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1,243; sixteenth, Holden Stake, 1,225; seventeenth, Southern Ohio, 1,152; eighteenth, Southeastern Illinois, 1,144; nineteenth, Western Michigan, 1,120; twentieth, Pottawattamie District, 1,112; twenty-first, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, 1,088; twenty-second, Southern California, 1,066; twenty-third, New York and Philadelphia, 1,060; twenty-fourth, Gallands Grove, 1,054; twenty-fifth, Massachusetts, 1,052; twenty-sixth, Northeastern Illinois, 1,034. Other districts so far as reported have less than 1,000 members, though some have close to that figure.

It may be surprising to some, as it was to the editors, to notice the rank of the Kansas City and Holden Stakes but location has much to do with it, and they have the advantage of close association with the general church officers and with the many workers of Independence Stake.

It is also of interest to note that if the Toronto District had not been divided it would have been second in rank, with 3,302 members. Also that the new Far West Stake with 2,319 members will be fourth in order.

People who mind their own business usually succeed. They have so little competition.—Selected.

THE PRESS

From the very beginning, this church has appreciated the value of the press. The Book of Mormon was in print before the church was organized. The Evening and the Morning Star was printed in Independence almost as soon as the Saints began to settle there in any considerable number. The Times and Seasons was published at Commerce before the place was renamed Nauvoo. Even the SAINTS' HERALD came out in January before the reorganization in April of 1860.

To-day the church issues seven periodicals regularly, and numerous books and tracts, the latter being added to constantly, one in process of printing now, being a brief history of the church by Elbert A. Smith.

There are several private publications and a mission paper each in the Swedish and Tahitian language.

Zion's Ensign began the publication of a conference daily and in 1915 the HERALD made its first attempt in this line. The effort was so well received that it was decided to try it again.

Consultation on plans to improve it resulted in a decision to print all reports to conventions and conference the regular width of the HERALD column, thus allowing its use in these columns without resetting. Also it is set solid—no space between lines—which gives us more in the same space.

It was decided that subscribers to the DAILY wanted most of all, convention and conference news. Something else might be appreciated, but first and paramount, the reports of the general gatherings and interesting personal sidelights and comments.

Our readers are to be congratulated that they can receive practically all of every official report, beginning with the Religio and ending with the appointments of missionaries. Of course, excepting the credential lists, they being of little interest. Religio and Sunday school workers should preserve every copy, for these official reports will be generally available in no other way.

Church members in general will have occasion to refer to the general church reports and action thereon, at least until the issuance of the official minutes later.

Paper is high, and only the usual print grade will ordinarily be used, so the use of cuts will be restricted if any at all are used.

Those who cannot attend the meetings may be interested in the methods employed in getting the DAILY to them promptly. Will tell you a few of them so you may be charitably inclined to overlook some of the faults and the better appreciate the general result.

When the presiding officer raps for order and announces the hymn the editorial pencils begin to scratch. The songs that are sung, the prayers that are offered, the preliminaries, may be incidental, but also they may not.

The organization is completed or the minutes read. A report is presented, a motion is made, seconded and stated, discussion may follow, an amendment to the motion made, some one wants to amend the amendment and so moves, a substitute is offered, a question arises, the chair decides, an appeal is taken, the chair sustained, the previous question is ordered, carries. Back, step by step, it goes and the report is adopted. Two pencils have been worn out and we suspect somebody may be lost in the tangle, possibly the editors.

The above is not an exception—it's rather ordinary. It must be taken at top speed, written legibly for the linotype operators and all kept in order.

Then comes a breathing spell, things go smoothly but not so smoothly as they did in other days. Then some one would say: "What's on for this morning?" "Oh, nothing but reading reports." Few went and some slept in meeting while the secretaries took turns reading yard after yard of reports. Now they are printed—except belated ones, and everyone is supposed to have read and digested them before the second session at least.

The meeting has proceeded. Reason, logic, horse sense, humor, seriousness, wit and veiled sarcasm with all their relatives may have been there.

A boy scout who acts as page, is given a roll of crumpled paper, he speeds to the purring type machines a half mile away that they may begin to tingle and thump. The summary of the meeting as ye editors have seen it soon gets into type, to be followed by more when the meeting closes. Forms are made up, type already set is lifted, a hasty reading given it, the worst errors marked, a quick make-up by sweating workmen, aided in the windup by one of the editors to get in the right material. A rumble of the elevator takes the form to the press, a fast run through, the folder machine grabs it and pastes it as it folds. Mailing girls quickly wrap each one in a wrapper, throw them into the right mail bag of the fifty open, and go to supper, while the editors are looking up something for the morrow.

How can we do it for a quarter? Only by having a good subscription list. You have broken the record in that, so we are confident there will be no financial loss at least—maybe a slight profit for the church.

During the conference the editors sleep with one eye open and both ears working. Sometimes they learn something worth while outside the sessions, but usually they feel they miss about everything. But after all, no mere words can express the spirit of these gatherings—that must be felt to be understood. Yet much may be imagined.

Be patient with the poor pencil pushers.

THE PRIESTHOOD LECTURES

At 8 a. m. on Tuesday as usual the Melchisedec priesthood assembled promptly at the church to listen to the fourth of the series of lectures. As we sit waiting for the opening exercises to take place one is struck by the evident earnestness of the assembly. These men mean well; they have been tried and proven; they are disciplined; they know what service means and they are ready for service.

One is also struck with the great earnestness of the speakers. Their very zeal makes them at times emphatic to the point of dogmatism. They are sincere men talking to sincere men—to none other could their appeal be made. The redemption of Zion must be by workers and those specialists.

While the rearrangement of the work of the Quorum of Twelve has not yet been discussed, one still considers it one of the things that had to be and which were surely coming. Clearly it should avoid many difficulties of the past. The disadvantages of the separate appointments will be obviated, but one hopes and expects that it will be without losing the advantage of personal appointments. Again it is apparent, that there should be much gain, in that it permits the members of the Quorum of Twelve to be used in those places and those cases and circumstances, where each man can work to the best advantage; that is, in those places for which he possesses special qualifications.

Yet deep down one sees that it is but one more step, though a necessary one and in the right direction. Much more yet must be done. And one feels like taking off his coat and pitching in earnestly to help to make it succeed and move forward. It is a big thing and it means big things.

Instead of considering the priesthood a ladder up which a man should climb, it becomes the problem to seek that place which each man can fill best, then place and honor him there. Business men for deacons, who become associates of the bishopric. Tactful men with great discretion and love for humanity for teachers; tireless men with tact and wisdom to visit and teach the law and be with those Saints under their care, to educate and bring them nearer the divine standard—for priests. So for each office the fit man. Men of judgment are needed as much in the Aaronic priesthood as in the Melchisedec. Men are needed who can interest; men who can engage and seize the moment for decision and bring people to God and his Christ. But men are also needed to care for these babes in Christ, feed them, nourish them and strengthen them, that they may grow in knowledge and understanding. Executives are needed and also clerks, and none can say, "we have no need of thee." All are needed, but each in his own place, according to the gifts of God unto him.

SAINT LOUIS TO LAMONI

I wonder if those who travel often do not miss some of the thrills that may be had by others. It may seem paradoxical, but surely there can't be that sense of adventure that there is when a trip into the next State is like a journey into another world. I really didn't need the rainy weather, though, to add to the excitement, nor did I need the train to help out that sense of adventure by trying to go off and leave me. Not that I was not there in time, for I was waiting at the little station near our home, the rest of our party having boarded the train at the Saint Louis Union Station. But I must have been the last one to get on there, and somehow the signal was given and the cars began to move, with me still standing there. From those with me I heard futile cries of "Wait a minute," and urgent cries of "Get on, Florence," so I desperately grabbed both handles and stepped up.

A conductor followed somehow with my suit case, and directed me forward to the right car. I was laboriously making my way through the next car, a sleeper, with berths made up and the narrow aisle full of people, when whom should I meet but the gallant A. W. Smith, and after that it was smooth sailing. He possessed himself of my luggage and piloted me till we saw the genial faces of the rest of our party, Brother and Sister G. S. Trowbridge and Brother T. J. Elliott.

Of course I soon had to assail their sympathetic ears with the story of my troubles with the railroad and my athletic performance at the start. Brother Elliott had something to tell too—a story of hail and rain in such torrents, as it drew near the time for him to leave home, that even he, veteran conference goer that he is, was almost daunted. He told how, after it abated a little, he sallied forth, balancing himself on a board and propelling another board into position, in order to get out of the back gate. He said the board was not floating, but it seemed quite a gondola-like performance, for all that.

One of our number soon deserted us for the sleeping car, and after a while Sister Trowbridge and I tried to settle ourselves to repose, and the two men settled themselves to a steady murmur of conversation, about "the power of music" and "organized classes."

We arrived at Darlington in the cold and semi-darkness of early morning, and sat in the little station which we had practically to ourselves. When it grew light, we might well have wished for darkness again, for Brother Trowbridge pulled out a book by one John Quincy Adams (not the famous one), full of fierce opposition to our church, and insisted on reading it to us. It was quite entertaining, though, be it said in defense of Brother Trowbridge.

Ordinarily we should have waited there till eleven o'clock, but some of the enterprising men of our party arranged for an auto to take us to Albany Junction, there to catch a train that would get us into Lamoni soon after twelve, in time to hear the afternoon lecture by Brother Dwyer. Then they started out bravely to walk, fearing there would not be room for all of us with the luggage. And now supposing the auto had not come, after all! Ah, but we were not left to grapple with such a possibility, for Brother Elliott gallantly refused to desert the ladies.

"Albany Junction!" Sounds imposing enough, doesn't it? But it stands for a tiny red telephone shed, to which we scrambled up the hillside with our luggage, finding even that locked! The signboard with the name on it lay on the ground near, upside down. Again our thoughtful guides had planned well, though, arranging to stay at Darlington till nearly the last minute, so the wait in the cold wind was not long. Soon came the dramatic moment when the white smoke appeared in the distance, like it does on post cards, and we boarded the train for the final run.

Our experiences were not yet over, though, for the genial conductor seemed to take a liking to us, and told us we might have the last car to ourselves after the next stop, if we wanted it. So we marched on to our "private car," and he locked us in to prevent interruption, coming in now and then himself to talk to us. Now were we right to feel pleased, or do you suppose he thought we looked suspicious? In other words, was it exclusiveness or incarceration? It may be, indeed, that Brother Trowbridge was in league with the conductor, for we had not long been caged thus, when out came the book again! After due patience, however, we passed the familiar names of "Kellerton" and "Mount Ayr," finally the conductor boomed "Lamoni," we walked gladly out, were received into the arms and the delightful home of Brother H. C. Burgess, and that is only the beginning of the story.

FLORENCE BURGESS.

THE NEW FAR WEST STAKE

The Far West Stake will start with a membership in excess of twenty-three hundred. It includes practically all of northwestern Missouri.

It forms the connecting link between the Lamoni Stake and the three stakes of Kansas City, Independence and Holden. Its organization at this time is the logical step and expected. For the intensive, constructive work now needed; to care for the work of the immediate future this recent action and the action of a year ago, providing for the division of the old Independence Stake, shows both wisdom and inspiration.

R. S. Salyards, nominated for president of this new stake, is already so well known as scarcely to need introduction to the church at large or his new field of labor. Yet we shall doubtless publish later a resumé of his church history. B. J. Scott acted for years as a counselor to the bishop of the Independence Stake; he has labored the past few years in Saint Joseph and has the love and confidence of the Saints there. We congratulate the new stake on these nominations and extend to these brethren a hearty godspeed.

SONG OF ENTREATY

(Given by the Spirit through Elder Joseph Luff, at the prayer meeting in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, April 1, 1917, sung to the tune, "I will sing of my Redeemer.")

O, my people! O my people!
Is to you my counsel vain?
Why call me your God and Father
While unhonored I remain?
Are my utterances but language
To be mingled in your song?
Do the lips that call me Master
Unto aliens belong?

Think ye I have joy or honor
In the sounds that laud my name,
Where my voice is held to silence
And my ordinance to shame?
What to me your loud hosannas?
What your gifts or zeal's pretense?
Righteousness hath voice in service—
Music in obedience.

Ye have said "God is sufficient—
He alone our strength shall be;
His the glory of achievement—
His the sword of victory:"
What, then, means this quest of armor?
What this lust for equipage?
That your energies consume and Cumber in the war you wage?

Who is wise shall learn my secret;
Whoso trusts shall understand:
Wisdom with obedience walketh—
Faith with victory—hand in hand.
Ishmael shall not Isaac fetter,

Nor my temple David build;
Uzzah's hand, my ark approaching,
Will be with disaster filled.

My ways are not yours, but, know ye,
I am God, nor speak in vain:
Be not slow my call to answer—
Few the moments that remain.
Not by skill or wisdom human—
Not by wealth of carnal lore;
But with panoply from heaven
Seek ye conquest evermore.

See ye not the clouds portentous?
Note ye not the world's alarm—
Nations to their ruin hast'ning—
Self their interest—flesh their arm?
Is this desolation voiceless?
Speaks this carnage not to you?
Echoing my ancient warning—
Witnessing my word is true?

Would you teach my fingers cunning?
Doth my thought no shrewdness know?
Who hath at my bidding ventured
And been smitten by my foe?
Ages offer you the story—
Centuries my record bear—
Tribute to my prudence paying
In full measure everywhere.

By my skill worlds have their being;
Would you teach my soul to plan?
Years eternal greet my vision:
Think ye yours outstretch the span?
Scent ye dangers I discern not?
Catch ye sounds that 'scape my ear?
Needs the sword my hand hath sharpened
To be whetted by your fear?

Heaven lingers for your answer—
Angel's wait your faith's appeal:
Zion's course must clearer impress
Of my Spirit hence reveal.
If by these be pledged your triumph
Favor waits you from on high;
Whoso finds not here contentment
Soon must cease to occupy.

THE MISSION OF THE GOSPEL LITERATURE BUREAU AND THE GOAL OF 1917

[The following was written with the intention of being presented at the Religio convention by Harvey Sandy, but on his motion, it was withheld to allow more time for the conferences.—EDITORS.]

In a broad sense, the mission of the gospel literature bureau is the same as that of the church, i. e. to assist in the redemption of man, and this is done through the dissemination of the printed word, and with that distribution, goes an urgent appeal for a careful study of the same.

The object of the missionary as he goes out to proclaim the glad tidings, is to attract sinners to the banner of Jesus Christ; to show them a better path in which to walk; one more pleasant and easy, one less dangerous from the pitfalls of life; to walk in the "narrow" way.

The main cause for the unfavorable condition of mankind, physically, mentally, and spiritually, is a lack of information, or ignorance. While it is doubtless true, there never was a time when plenty of information could not be had, yet a proper presentation had not been made so as to render the knowledge or information of any material benefit. They sort 'o know about things, but it has never been made clear enough to them so they might realize the importance of it.

The mission of the gospel literature bureau is not only to proclaim or vend news, but as stated previously, to induce the one to whom the news comes, to study as well, for without study, it is worse than useless.

To make a long story short, and to express it in a nutshell, our mission is to disseminate gospel information amongst the people first; and second, to make students of them, for without the latter, our mission is largely, if not altogether, a failure.

No one ever became a real live Latter Day Saint in every sense of the word without being a student. There are too many people who have their names on the books but have never taken an advance step. The reward of such as these will scarcely exceed that of the heathen. The fact about the matter is they could not appreciate anything better, any more than the pupil in the first grade could be promoted to high school without covering the courses in the ward school.

The gospel literature bureau is trying to help to obviate just such conditions as referred to; that is, to make real live students and Latter Day Saints.

As stated in the beginning, the lack of information causes unfavorable conditions with the people, and we believe that as a rule, they do not do wrong because they want to, but because they do not know any better. They usually want to do what is best, but the importance of it has never been presented to them in such a manner as to create within them a desire to investigate and find out how.

In the early history of this church the Lord called the attention of its members to the importance of the study of books on various subjects.

Emphasize study:

Definition: To apply the mind to with a view to learn or learn about; examine, search into, as to study philosophy; to study the rocks.

2. Specific. To learn words or ideas of. Bolingbroke, letters on History, says, Some (histories) are to be read, some to be studied.

So it is in the world, so some people just read, read, read, but seldom if ever, do they study.

More definitions on "study." "To fix the gaze on attentively and thoughtfully." Were this the universal practice of Latter Day Saints there would be more, who knew they were Latter Day Saints aside from the fact that they have their names on the books.

Still more: Any systematic effort to learn, as by observing, reflecting and memorizing; as study broadens the mind! I have often wondered why there were so many narrow minded Latter Day Saints. Here's the reason. Study broadens the mind, etc.

Ever since the organization of the gospel literature bureau, we have been pleading with the membership to heed the admonition referred to. As proof of this, you are referred to the first page of our leaflet of instruction.

The people are slowly coming to a realization of the importance of this revelation, and during the past year especially we are seeing the fruits of our efforts, in the organization of study classes in different parts of the country and other movements looking toward a more careful investigation of the matters referred to in said revelation.

Of course, we do not claim all the credit for the gospel literature bureau, but just invite your attention to where we stand and have stood for years and leave it to you as to credits, as we are not especially interested in this phase of the subject, except to impress upon you the importance of our mission.

NOW AS TO THE GOAL OF 1917

Definition of "Goal"—the objective point, or terminus that one is striving for.

The goal in this particular instance, consists in attaining to a number of points. Here are three sub-goals we might call them, which we hope to reach this year, which will enable us to more quickly reach the final goal, that of salvation to man.

1. A coalition of all the forces of the church, Sunday school and Religio as outlined in the proposed amendments to the constitutions of the above referred to organizations. There ought to be no opposition to this idea; it's the only sensible thing to do. There may be a better plan and we are ready to adopt it, if we can be shown. When this is accomplished, there will be harmonious action in all departments. There will be no excuse for failure to select a gospel literature superintendent in a district or local, as we sometimes have, because the local is dead, or other similar excuses. The available supply of timber will be greatly increased.

2. A gospel literature bureau or representative in each locality, where there is a local Religio, Sunday school or branch, and isolated member of the church.

Just to show how this would work in case of the isolated member: Here is a newly baptized member, say 100 miles from any branch. Many such have died spiritually or at least failed to make any progress, because they had nothing to do. This will provide a way out.

3. The distribution of 500,000 pieces of literature. Please remember this, and listen to the reading of the report next

April at Independence. Of course, this will require some tall hustling, but it can be done very easily if only a few more people will do a little more work. Australia and Canada combined last year, reported more than two fifths of this amount, and two thirds of what was reported this year. The workers in the United States should move up, and they just as well prepare to be jogged up, if they do not move up. When 13 districts in the United States report less than 1,300 pieces of literature distributed, and having a membership of over 2,000, as compared with Australia and Canada with a membership of less than 1,600, (according to reports) reporting two thirds of all distributions in the whole organization, you will doubtless agree with me that some one deserves being jogged.

Of course, we are not without our difficulties. We are confronted with the high cost of living, I was going to say. I mean the high cost of printed matter. The price of tracts has gone up, and one of the papers used quite extensively in our work, has increased the rate to nonmembers which makes it somewhat harder along this line.

However, we believe this seeming hardship should work to our advantage in this way: It will result in more real personal work, which is very necessary, and the loaning of literature, which will bring better and more lasting results than promiscuous distributions, which we do not recommend as a rule.

Now it would seem that this is enough to set out to accomplish in one season, and after a careful consideration of the same, we believe you will consider same justifiable reasons for the continuation of the bureau, and the united support of every member of the church.

In concluding, we wish to say we feel assured that our cause is just and entitled to the careful consideration of every member of the church; and if there are no other reasons why the Religio should be continued as an organization, the fact that the gospel literature bureau is conducted under its fostering care, should be enough.

THE GOSPEL LITERATURE COMMISSION ORGANIZED

The new commission created this year to handle the united interests of the church along distribution of church and other literature has organized by electing R. W. Farrell superintendent. His address is 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island, and he will conduct a campaign of education and explanation as well as be responsible for the continuance of the work already done.

During the year instruction booklets and other literature will be written and distributed and everything done that can be done to make the work more than a Religio activity. In the meantime, all Religio workers on good literature committees should continue as energetically as before. Branches and districts as well as local Sunday schools and district organizations will be asked to elect a member each to cooperate with the Religio members and thus give a great impetus to the work.

Harvey Sandy and E. D. Moore will assist in a number of ways, but Brother Farrell will be directly responsible. You will hear from them often during the year and we predict good results will be reported at the end of the year.

The following is a report of gospel literature conference held during the sessions of the Religio:

A very enthusiastic conference of gospel literature workers was held Tuesday evening, April 3, in charge of Harvey Sandy assisted by A. L. Keen. The following points were considered:

1. Difficulties encountered by gospel literature workers and how to surmount them.
2. How to distribute literature.
3. Different phases of gospel work.
4. The plan to ask the cooperation of the Sunday school and church, is it practicable and advisable.

The importance of this department and its wide field of operations seemed to be keenly felt by all present, and its many phases provided avenues for service for practically every member of the church.

It was decided that there was no one set method of distributing literature, but that one had to be guided by the conditions surrounding, as sometimes it might be distributed promiscuously and do much good, while others not.

Also the question of raising funds seemed to be an important one in the minds of some, but it was decided that much literature work might be done with little or no funds, by the collecting of used papers and books and loaning same to those not able to purchase, or that did not have them. It was also suggested that funds might be obtained by buying literature in large lots and selling to the Saints at retail with the distinct understanding that they first read the tract and then pass on to some one that had not the privilege.

MINISTERIAL REPORTS TO CONFERENCE

Annual ministerial report of James A. Gillen, minister in charge of Mission No. 1, comprising Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. The following ministers, under General Conference appointment, have labored in the mission: Seventies: W. P. Bootman, Hubert Case, D. R. Chambers, F. M. Cooper, J. J. Cornish, J. A. Dowker, R. Etzenhouser, Levi Gamet, Fred Gregory, J. F. Grimes, W. E. Haden, Hans N. Hansen, Charles E. Harpe, L. G. Holloway, Alvin Knisley, E. E. Long, Daniel Macgregor, James McKiernan, Peter Muceus, J. L. Parker, J. W. Peterson, E. F. Robertson, Columbus Scott, W. M. Self, W. E. Shakespeare, Joseph W. Smith, Birch Whiting, J. B. Wildermuth, J. E. Wildermuth, David J. Williams. Patriarchs: C. E. Butterworth, Joshua Carlile, John Smith. High Priests: Amos Berve, J. M. Baker, Thomas J. Jordan, B. S. Lambkin, William Sparling, M. M. Turpen. Elders: J. B. Barrett, Horace Darby, E. R. Davis, Thomas Leitch, Warren McElwain, William Osler, C. W. Prettyman, Charles J. Smith, D. T. Williams, Nelson Wilson. Priests: T. E. Barton. The total reports for the year show the following: Sermons preached, 5,167; baptisms, 356; patriarchal blessings, 96; new openings, 53; debates, 6; organized branches, 3; Sunday schools, 5. One of the features of the work this year throughout the mission has been to bring about greater cooperation between the missionary force and the local workers, in order that the interests of the church in general might be better conserved, through organized procedure. Some of the results have been indeed pleasing. We are pleased to note that in many instances the nonmembers have given liberal support financially, as well as lending their influence toward making our work a success, particularly reunions. We desire to call special attention to the efforts put forth by the Saints at Burlington, Iowa, and the sacrifices made, in order that we might appear in our true light in that city; not forgetting the support received by friends, who were not members. We must not forget to mention the serious disability under which C. E. Butterworth labored for so long, which deprived us of his service. Glad to note his convalescence. F. M. Cooper, because of sickness, was under the necessity of withdrawing from the active field for a time. The prospects for the mission in the coming year are indeed bright.

Annual ministerial report of F. M. Sheehy, minister in charge of Mission No. 2. The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending March 1, 1917: Seventies: A. M. Chase, R. L. Fulk, J. F. Mintun, George Jenkins, O. W. Okerlind, A. M. Baker, R. T. Walters, H. Sparling, J. W. Roberts, L. E. Hills, A. C. Silvers, F. L. Sawley, Lee Quick, J. A. Davis, D. E. Tucker, John Davis, T. C. Kelley, W. A. Smith, J. W. Paxton. High Priests: Charles Fry, B. J. Scott, R. Bullard, S. Twombly, J. A. Tanner, W. S. Macrae, M. H. Bond, C. N. Hunt, M. H. Siegfried. Patriarchs: William Lewis, I. N. White. Elders: William Bath, R. H. Henson, John Ely, W. P. Pickering, Roy S. Budd, J. D. Showers, A. E. McCord, A. C. Martin, S. H. Fields, P. R. Burton, J. W. A. Bailey. Priests: T. W. Curtis. Total reports: Sermons preached, 5,409; baptized, 338; patriarchal blessings, 246; new openings, 54; debates, 6. Organized: branches, 6; Sunday schools, 8; Religios, 5. The organization of the three new stakes, Independence, Kansas City, and Holden, has been productive of increased activities, which bids fair to be more in evidence as we move along the lines already indicated and under way.

Annual ministerial report of Ulysses W. Greene, minister in charge of Mission No. 3, eastern States. The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending March 1, 1917: Seventies: A. B. Phillips, H. A. Koehler, J. F. Sheehy, James Pycoc, W. L. Christy. High Priests: A. E. Stone, J. A. Koehler, R. W. Farrell, F. J. Ebeling, E. B. Hull, S. A. Burgess. Patriarchs: A. D. Angus, I. M. Smith. Elders: H. W. Smith, J. R. Lentell, G. W. Knowlton, George Morris. Priests: E. J. Gleazer. Total reports: Sermons preached, 1,619; baptized, 78; patriarchal blessings, 89; new openings, 10; debates, 2. Organized Sunday schools, 2. Condition of field: the past year has been one of unusual activity by the local officers who were organized for missionary work. A number of new openings were made by them and several baptisms have resulted. Those doing this kind of work have been richly blessed of God. I believe this line of work should extend to every part of the church. It being necessary for me to visit that part of my field known as the European Mission, I placed Elder A. B. Phillips as associate minister in charge of this field and he performed his work with ability and success. There have been no difficulties to adjust of serious moment, so that all could engage in the work of preaching the gospel and building up the local churches. This has resulted in a great outpouring of God's Spirit upon the Saints and they have been strengthened in faith and rejoice in the gospel of our blessed Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. The work is extending and the calls for preaching come from every side. We are greatly encouraged at the outlook and hope for final success.

Annual ministerial report of Gomer T. Griffiths, minister in charge of Mission No. 4, western Pennsylvania and Ohio. The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending April 6, 1917: Seventies: J. C. McConnaughy, J. G. Halb, W. Anderson, Leon Burdick, Alma Booker, Richard Baldwin. High Priests: T. U. Thomas. Elders: J. E. Bishop, J. D. Carlisle, M. W. Liston, T. D. Harnish, C. E. Bozarth, W. H. Kelley. Priests: E. D. Finken. Total reports: Sermons preached, 2,452; baptized, 93; patriarchal blessings, 61; new openings, 20; debates, 2. Organized branches, 3. Condition of field: The mission is in fair condition, and some of the branches have made considerable growth in spirituality, and some others have been disorganized. Many of the local officers could do more than they are doing, to build up the work in their respective localities. A great many people have been baptized by the local ministers. Quite a number of the missionaries were late getting to their mission, and some of them were hindered by sickness and other causes. Brother C. E. Bozarth quit the general ministry in February. Brother W. H. Kelley left the mission before Christmas. Brother Liston was kept home some of the time through his wife's illness, and Brother McConnaughy's wife was sick for a time. The severe winter weather has also been against the missionaries in many places. Three branches have been organized in the Pittsburgh District, namely at Du Bois, Punxsutawney and Lock No. 4, Pennsylvania. The prospects for the future of the work in the mission are much brighter than one year ago. There are quite a number of Saints located at Dayton, Ohio. L. F. P. Curry has charge of the little mission. There are two or three other places where they are ready for organization. The Pittsburgh District conference has petitioned the General Conference to divide said district into two districts, and in my opinion there is a great necessity for such a division. Praying that our coming together in conference capacity will be a great blessing to the whole church, I remain your fellow laborer in Christ.

Annual ministerial report of John W. Rushton, minister in charge of Pacific Slope Mission (No. 5). The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year: Seventies: A. Allen, Alma C. Barmore, N. L. Booker, M. A. McConley, G. E. Shipley, High Priests: M. H. Cook, A. V. Closson, H. J. Davison, W. H. Garrett, V. M. Goodrich, G. E. Harrington, Charles W. Hawkins, Charles A. Parkin (bishop), C. Ed Miller. Patriarchs: F. G. Pitt. Elders: W. A. Brooner, C. E. Jones, B. L. McKim, R. F. Slye, H. E. Winegar, N. C. Heading. Total reports: Sermons preached, 2,156; baptized, 92; patriarchal blessings, 65; new openings, 20; debates, 1; organized branches, 3; Sunday schools, 3; Religios, 3. Condition of field: One appointee did not take the field at all. Bro. Heading retired in August. Bro. Garrett came into the field about three months ago. The branches organized were in the following places: San Diego and Long Beach of southern California, and Hilo, Hawaii Territory, where Bro. McConley has done excellent work since arriving there last September. The condition of our work in Utah is not encouraging though in some parts the opportunities are inviting, especially in the northern end of the district. Throughout the whole of the mission opportunities are good and the need for consecrated service never more urgent than to-day. Speaking of the field as a whole, we feel justified in saying that the condition is good.

Annual ministerial report of James E. Kelley, minister in charge of Mission No. 6, comprising Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and Mexico. There have been ten men laboring under General Conference appointment: Seventies: J. Charles May, J. F. Petre, James E. Yates, W. H. Mannering, S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, and O. E. Sade. High Priests: James R. Sutton. Patriarchs: Ammon White. Elders: Amos T. Higdon. The local ministry have done some good work during the year. Some are able and very active and are to be commended, others are able but seemingly loath to reach out and assume responsibility. We have some good prospects for local workmen in the future, in several places. Conditions: In general our work is in good growing and encouraging shape, with a distressing demand for more laborers. Much of the field is indeed ripe for our missionaries. Here and there are things that hurt and hinder, but we hope for wisdom and power to eliminate these in the future. In the Republic of Mexico conditions are much as reported to you last conference. Arizona is in better shape than last year, but the work has not been accomplished here for the year that we had hoped for. New Mexico is improving as a field to work and we have gained there during the year. Colorado is a good field and prospects such that we must have more appointees. Finances: In the matter of money the mission has been a success, I believe, and fine prospects for increase the coming year. Spiritually the district conferences, letters and statements of the ministry and reports from the membership show a marked increase and a forward movement. Thank God for it! Because of physical ailment my personal services to the church have been broken and irregular though I have been in the field and in touch with my work all the year; and while I have had and expect burdens and cares, let me say to the church that God has so blessed me when the real hour of need came, so freely given the light needed and with no uncertainty, and taken me in such close touch with him that I have never felt to complain, but to be grateful that I am counted worthy to be a laborer. God is increasing his power and goodness to his church.

Annual ministerial report of Peter Anderson, minister in charge of Mission No. 7. The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending March 1, 1917: Seventies: J. W. Thorburn, J. M. Stubbart, S. Swenson, J. C. Page, J. A. Bronson, R. D. Davis, J. T. Davis, J. H. Hanson. High Priests: J. M. Terry, William Johnson, A. J. Moore. Elders: G. W. Winegar, R. Newby, L. W. Bronson. Total reports: Sermons preached, 1,616; baptized, 85; new openings, 28; debates, 1. Organized branches, 1; Sunday schools, 2. Condition of field: Owing to the fact that, at present writing, March 14, several of the missionaries in my field have not yet sent in their annual report, this report is only approximately correct. With a few exceptions conditions in my field are quite good, and the prospects for future work are very encouraging. Demands for labor in different parts are constantly increasing. Generally speaking there is a growing desire on the part of the Saints for a greater spiritual development, and a manifest willingness to aid in the financial work of the church. The conferences of the several districts during the year have been quite representative and spiritual, and the Saints seem very desirous of attending and profiting by those gatherings. Owing to the size of the districts territorially, we can hardly carry on auxiliary work after the manner of the smaller districts, but we strive to adapt this work to our conditions, and to do the best we can under the circumstances.

Annual ministerial report of Ulysses W. Greene, minister in charge of European Mission (No. 8). The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending March 1, 1917: Seventies: W. H. Greenwood, Peter Muceus, C. A. Swenson. High Priests: Thomas Jones, J. W. Taylor, G. W. Leggott, John Schofield, William Ecclestone, W. R. Armstrong. Patriarchs: James Baty, H. Greenwood. Elders: James Schofield, John Bailey, Able Hall, Albert Hall, J. E. Meredith, John Judd, A. Kendrick, J. Pughsley, T. J. Picton, Joseph Holmes, John Holmes, W. H. Chandler, J. G. Jenkins, Earnest Wragg. Total reports: Sermons preached, 1,218; baptized, 38; patriarchal blessings, 5; new openings, 6; debates, 4. Organized Sunday schools, 1; Religios, 2. Condition of field: This mission is passing through the terrible scourge of war, and because of universal conscription, brother is fighting against brother. This emphasizes the need of Zion as a city of refuge and the necessity of instructing those in foreign lands to flee to Zion as the Lord has commanded. I have not received word from Palestine for over six months. Rees Jenkins had been seriously ill and our native Saints were suffering for the necessities of life. It has been impossible to send them supplies and have them delivered. They were stolen. We have no assurance that the funds cabled through the State Department have reached them, but efforts have been made along these lines. I have received no word from the Saints in Germany since last spring and then my heart was saddened to learn of the number that were killed, wounded, and captured. The brethren who labored in Scandinavia felt it advisable to return to this country and did so in the fall, leaving that territory without a missionary. A number of people in Switzerland desired to unite with the church and I tried to reach them, but the French authorities refused to allow me to cross their country, on learning that I expected to return before the war ended. Our brethren in England have labored under great difficulties. Every available man is enrolled under the "Defence of the Realm Act," and they were not recognizing our ministers, who were entitled to exemption under the said act. This question of "nonrecognition of the church" was finally presented to the State Department by the Presidency, and they promptly called the attention of the British Government to the standing of the church. After that we had but little trouble. Such a large number of brethren are in the service that the work has been greatly crippled, and will be more so unless the war soon terminates. W. H. Greenwood has been acting as associate minister in charge, and has performed his work acceptably. My association with the Saints of Great Britain was pleasant, and their kindness will ever be treasured in memory's casket by me. We must try to hold our work together as best we can, until the dawn of peace will enable us to prosecute it with vigor once more.

Annual ministerial report of W. M. Aylor, minister in charge of Mission No. 9, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana. The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending March 1, 1917: Seventies: J. Arber, J. E. Vanderwood, S. W. Simmons, J. M. Smith, D. S. Palmer, J. T. Riley, E. A. Erwin, J. Harp, W. P. Robinson, B. F. Renfroe, J. M. Simmons, H. N. Pierce, S. N. Gray. High Priests: E. L. Henson, J. C. Chrestensen. Patriarchs: H. O. Smith. Elders: G. R. Kuykendall, W. W. Chrestensen, J. H. Baker, P. Cook. Local appointment: J. W. Jackson, B. F. Spicer. Total reports: Sermons preached, 3,502; baptized, 191; patriarchal blessings, 77; new openings, 54; debates, 4; ordained 23; organized branches, 4; Sunday schools, 2; Religios, 2; children blessed, 124. Condition of field: We are growing in the South, the field becoming more interesting all the time. Oklahoma a few years ago was a new field, to-day we have about 25 branches and prospects for many more soon. Texas and Arkansas are coming to the front fast, not so many openings in Louisiana. Most of the missionaries have done well. Some have stayed too close to the old trails and home to make much headway for the church. J. E. Vanderwood preached 286 sermons, baptized 5, made 8 new openings; Joseph Arbor, preached 221 sermons, baptized 24, made 7 new openings; J. T. Riley preached 201 sermons, baptized 27, made 3 new openings; W. W. Chrestensen preached 218 sermons, baptized 22. These are the highest—others are near this mark. The local men have done well this year and the branches are in a much better condition. Our reunions and conferences have been very spiritual. The Indian work is about as it was last year. A. W. Sanders has done a good work among them. Altogether we feel we have advanced and are still desiring to press on and do more.

Annual ministerial report of Paul M. Hanson and C. A. Butterworth, ministers in charge of Australian Mission (No. 10). The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending December 31, 1916: Seventies: W. J. Haworth, H. W. Savage. High Priests: J. H. N. Jones, George Lewis. Patriarchs: John Jones, J. T. Gresty. Elders: W. J. Burrows, Edwin H. Davies, William H. Gammidge, William Patterson, Harold I. Velt, Herman Peisker. Priests: W. J. Vaughan,

A. L. Loving, J. M. Argent. Total reports: Sermons preached, 1,039; baptized, 63; patriarchal blessings, 16; new openings, 15. Condition of field: We have visited nearly all parts of the mission where we have church interests. Of the ministry appointed, J. M. Argent was released the latter part of the year owing to ill health, after diligent service performed in West Australia. Elder J. T. Gresty because of hindering causes did not fulfill his appointment. The ministry, general and local, have labored in unison; the year has been one of harmony in all departments. Elder Savage who is in New Zealand intends to devote a part of his labors among the Maoris; a tract is being prepared for translation into the Maori language. A mission conference was held in Sydney at the close of the year, the first of the kind in the mission; the educational and spiritual phases of which fulfilled the expectations of all. Notwithstanding the war and its effects, the outlook of the church work is encouraging. We would be pleased to have one of the Presidency visit Australia.

Annual ministerial report of Clyde F. Ellis, minister in charge of South Sea Islands Mission (No. 11). The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending November 30, 1916: Seventies: Clyde F. Ellis, Alvin H. Christensen. Elders: Araiati, Horahitu, Marerenui a Marerenui, Pori Bellais, Paia a Metuaro, Tuteirihia, Tenati, Taihiava Paite, Tetaku a Moeava, Tapu a Moana, Tane a Temai, Tetuarere; Tai, Tane a Pou and Taia a Piritua did not report. The report as stated below does not include Brother Christensen's and mine, therefore I give our reports separately, as they cover a different period of time. From March 1, 1916, to February 1, 1917: Sermons preached, 144; baptized, 36; organized Sunday schools, 1; Religios, 1. Native reports only: Total reports: Sermons preached, 324; baptized 6. Condition of field: The work has apparently taken on new activity during the year that is past, and we have hopes of greater success during the year that is before us. As reported last year, the work in the lower districts near Tahiti is in much better condition than the districts in the upper division. However, through the labors of A. H. Christensen and two of the native brethren in the upper districts, the work in that section has taken on new life, and through our continuing the work with vigor in those districts, we hope to overcome the worldly conditions, and spiritual carelessness into which they have become engulfed. That, however, cannot be accomplished without added help. We must have a stronger foreign missionary force, so as to be able to cover the territory, strengthening, and broadening our influence. The native himself will not contend and strive for the moral standard that must be raised; he must be directed by a stronger force. We have many isolated members, where, if we had a larger missionary force from America, we could make efforts in opening the work, thereby extending our borders, establishing a missionary and enthusiastic spirit among the present membership. I have spent the greater portion of my time in Tahiti, printing Te Orometua, a twelve-page mission paper, also Sunday school and Religio Quarterlies, report blanks and tracts. It is too much for one man to handle properly, and at the same time give the needed support to the outlying islands. However, notwithstanding the above I have spent nearly three months in the Tuamotuan group. All in all, the work is in a better condition, new ideals have been imbibed by many, which gives us encouragement.

Annual ministerial report of J. F. Curtis minister in charge of Great Lakes Mission (No. 12). The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year ending March 1, 1917: Seventies: E. N. Burt, D. E. Dowker, J. W. Davis, William Davis, J. O. Dutton, A. R. Ellis, W. D. Ellis, Otto Petting, E. J. Goodenough, J. R. Grice, O. J. Hawn, L. Houghton, O. R. Miller, J. L. Mortimer, S. T. Pendleton, W. E. Peak, J. D. Stead, R. D. Weaver, L. O. Wildermuth, A. L. Whiteaker, C. E. Willey, G. C. Tomlinson, S. W. L. Scott. High Priests: G. W. Burt, W. M. Grice. Patriarchs: James Davis, John Shields. Elders: G. E. Burt, F. S. Brackenbury, A. E. Burr, R. T. Brown, B. H. Doty, B. C. Flint, L. W. Fike, C. N. Burtch, E. J. Lenox, J. C. Goodman, J. W. McKnight, P. Pement, Henry Ribbel, S. G. St. John, A. E. Starks, F. F. Whipper, Roy M. Young, E. A. Curtis, J. B. Scott, Philip Davenport, J. H. Yager, James A. Wilson. Priests: K. H. Green, F. A. Pement. Total reports: Sermons preached, 7,079; baptized, 625; patriarchal blessings, 281; new openings, 55; debates, 7; organized districts, 1; branches, 14; Sunday schools, 13; Religios, 8. Condition of field: The field is in fairly good condition, but we are sure that it could be better. We think that we are making progress along several lines. Several new churches have been built this conference year, and 14 new branches, 1 new district, 13 Sunday schools, and 8 Religios having been organized in the mission with 625 baptisms by the missionary force, show that we are making advancement. Many of the local ministry are doing excellent work in the branches. Six reunions have been held with results fair to good. Several of the larger branches need pastors stationed in these several branches so that the membership can be properly cared for. Most of the missionaries have done good work, but some have been hindered so that they could only give a part of their time to the work. The membership of the church in this mission is increasing so that more attention must be given to the membership of the church. Several attacks have been made on the church by our opponents, but wherever we have had the chance to defend ourselves we have made friends and the work has advanced. The local ministry have been more thoroughly organized into quorums where there has been a sufficient number to justify such organizations. The spiritual side of the work is still good and improving, but it has room for improvement. With faith in God we are still ready to continue to make progress as the way may open for us.

Annual ministerial report of R. C. Russell, minister in charge of Southeastern Mission (No. 13). The following named ministers under general appointment have labored in said field for the year: Seventies: J. W. Metcalf, F. M. Slover, E. Rannie, S. S. Smith, L. C. Moore. High Priests: J. R. McClain. Elders: F. A. Rowe, A. E. Warr, Thomas Newton, A. G. Miller, F. Moser, jr., W. R. Kapnick. Priests: C. A. Nolan. Total reports: Sermons preached, 2,516; baptized, 171; new openings, 39; debates, 2; organized branches, 6; Sunday schools, 5. Condition of field: There was a marked departure, by the missionary force this year from former years, in their earnest efforts to open up new fields and thus the gospel was taken to many new localities in all States of the mission. There is a pressing need of bishops and high priests as well as evangelists, for it is not good policy to leave the lambs and sheep on poor pasture at the mercy of hoards of wolves while the shepherd who enrolled them has to go look for others equally precious to the Master. I am quite anxious to see the day dawn when the shepherd and his flock will alike live in accordance with section 86 of Doctrine and Covenants and meet as provided in section 59. There is a growing tendency to prepare for a home in Zion, but the Saints are aware that the proper places to make the necessary preparation are in their home branches and therefore increased efforts to proper development are manifest. Several of my missionary force have been unavoidably detained from spending all their time in the mission, but what time has been is certainly to their credit and not a complaint has come to me of misconduct on the part of any of them. The strenuous times now prevailing at home and abroad are causing many of the Saints considerable anxiety for their friends and relatives who are not within the arch of safety, while on the other hand they look up and rejoice that the time of redemption of the faithful is nearing. May we all fully prepare for that momentous day.

THE APPOINTMENTS

LAMONI, IOWA, April 12, 1917.

To the General Conference; Greetings: The First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve herewith present to you for consideration and approval the appointments made for the ensuing conference year.

It will be noticed several have been referred to the post conference council. This does not imply suspicion against such minister, but is in order to give better opportunity to consult with a view to meeting conditions in the field and also to arrange as nearly as possible to meet the conditions and circumstances of the brethren.

Several have been released this year whose days of active service in the missionary department obviously are over and they have been referred to local authorities with a view to spending their time and talents in this way and our list will be made more representative of the missionary work we believe should be characteristic.

If in making these releases there should be need for continuing support to the families either fully or in part, the Presiding Bishopric will take steps to meet such needs until such time as the ones affected may be able to meet their own demands, so that none will be made to suffer because of the change.

Several of our well-known brethren whose declining health because of advancing years makes it impossible for them to continue in active service any longer have been superannuated.

On the behalf of the Presidency and Twelve,

F. M. SMITH.
J. W. RUSHTON.
Secretaries.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, TWELVE AND PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

PATRIARCHS

1. Angus, Archibald D., New York and Philadelphia and New York Districts.
2. Baty, James, British Mission.
3. Butterworth, C. E., Gallands Grove District.

CONFERENCE REPORTS

BOARD OF TRUSTEES, CHILDREN'S HOME

Since the General Conference of 1916, the Board of Trustees of the Saints' Children's Home Association has held twenty-one regular and specially called meetings for the transaction of business, besides the vast amount of committee work which has been done by less than the full board. The attendance of these meetings has been remarkable—it rarely happening that there were absences of even one member.

At the present time the trustees are; Heman C. Smith, chairman; Sisters Callie B. Stebbins, Lucy L. Resseguie, and Minnie B. Nicholson; Brethren A. J. Yarrington and Floyd M. McDowell, and R. J. Lambert, secretary and treasurer, the changes for the year being the election of A. J. Yarrington to succeed Oscar Anderson, and the appointment of F. M. McDowell to succeed Joseph Roberts.

On July 14, Joseph Roberts, then treasurer of the board and a useful member, deceased, and R. J. Lambert was chosen to act as treasurer until the close of the conference year. Floyd M. McDowell was chosen to act in the place of Joseph Roberts as trustee of the Children's Home until the end of the conference year.

The terms of election as trustees of Heman C. Smith and Lucy L. Resseguie expire at this conference, and Floyd M. McDowell was selected to act until the conference of 1917, which will make it necessary for the conference to elect two trustees for the term of three years, and one trustee for the term of two years.

At our last report E. D. Briggs was acting as superintendent of the home, and Sr. E. D. Briggs as matron. They continued their work till November 1, when they resigned their positions. Since that date, the trustees have secured the services of Joseph and Carrie Goode, as superintendent and matron, and who came at the earnest solicitation of the trustees for the term from November 1, 1916, to May 1, 1917, when they feel they must retire to protect their individual interests.

The year 1916 has been a very active one in the matter of putting children into private homes, and the number thus placed has reached nineteen. Many of these have been adopted, and more will be in the near future. There has also been a large number of admissions to the home, the number reaching twenty-seven, including ten who have not yet arrived in Lamoni.

There has been no death at the home for the year, and the general health has been very good with the exception of the spring months of 1916, when diphtheria had a reign of several weeks, during which time the home was under quarantine.

The efforts of a limited number of faithful members of the church to see the home out of debt have been rewarded by the accomplishment of that purpose, and at the present time we owe nothing to anyone which we do not have the money to pay. The trustees feel grateful for this support, and if the coming year shall prove favorable, marked improvements will undoubtedly be made at the home. We should not forget to mention the fact that members have not forgotten to donate livestock, musical instruments, fruit, clothing, etc., as they had opportunity, and Christmas was made a time of rejoicing to the children because of the ample provision made for them at that time.

We are appending a copy of the treasurer's report to the Presiding Bishop.

LIBRARY COMMISSION

GENERAL SECRETARY

The library departments throughout the country are showing a more lively interest in the work, confirming us in the belief that the How-Book for library workers is faithfully serving wherever it is given an opportunity.

The first edition of this booklet was issued in April, 1916, and free copies of the same were sent to the library workers in every district and stake throughout the country, and quite a lively response calling for additional copies was the result.

Your secretary believes that this library helper answers practically every question arising among library workers. It was the intention of the commission to make this department of the work as nearly as possible self-sustaining, and a small purchase price was placed on the booklet when ordered in quantities. It is not, however, the desire of the commission to keep this booklet away from anyone on account of a lack of funds. A free copy is always sent to every inquirer and it is desired that every library worker should have at least one copy of this little helper at hand, and in order to accomplish this the secretary of the commission solicits the aid of the traveling ministry and every person interested in library work, and asks that they send for information and supplies of the booklet sufficient to fill the needs in their particular location.

The commission this year was fortunate in securing the services of Louise Evans of Grand Rapids, Michigan, (the commission member chosen by the General Religio Association). Sister Evans has spent considerable time in the districts and locals of Michigan and has lately completed a very important addition to the small pamphlet published by the commission during 1916. This pamphlet will now supply the library workers with a splendid list of books such as may be needed in all parts of the country. This work of Sister Evans not only gives the name and the price of the book, but also the name of the publisher. Copies of this pamphlet may be secured either from the Herald Office or from the secretary of the commission.

The commission was never in better condition to serve the interests of the workers everywhere, and solicits the aid of all persons throughout the church in disseminating the literature of the commission and in putting into active use every resource of the department.

Estella Wight has faithfully served the commission during the past year as general librarian, and a report of her work in part, may be seen below. Following is also the report of Bishop J. F. Keir, treasurer of the commission, and also that of Heman C. Smith, our church historian, who is the church member of the commission.

The general secretary believes that during the coming year practically every library board in the districts or in the branches will have assimilated the work of this department and will have fallen in line with the original intentions of the library commission, which is to lessen the labor of the locals and districts by placing all of the library interests of the three societies under one head, allowing each society to choose its own representative on the local and district boards.

The library work when taken up systematically and carefully studied is easily understood. The main trouble heretofore has been in a lack of knowledge, principally by not having sufficient printed literature in the hands of the local and district workers. This difficulty should now be almost wholly if not entirely removed since complete information can be secured by all who desire, either from the commission or the Herald Office.

If library board members desiring information will send their questions and suggestions to the general secretary or any member of the commission, they will receive a ready response, and should the first or second letter not clear matters up perfectly, feel at liberty to continue correspondence. It is only by this operation that the best results may be had.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 3, 1917.

SAINTS' HOMES, LAMONI, IOWA

To the General Conference: During the year the Saints' Homes at Lamoni have been filled to their capacity, with applicants waiting who could not be accommodated.

One death has occurred at Liberty Home and two at the Saints' Home, making a death list of three for the year. There are at present in the two Homes twenty-four men and thirty-five women as inmates. The general health, considering the advanced age of the inmates, has been all that could be expected.

The Board of Managers at the beginning of the year was composed of A. J. Yarrington, president; Joseph Roberts, treasurer; and R. J. Lambert, secretary. The death of Joseph Roberts created a vacancy in the board and also left the office of treasurer vacant. By action of the remaining members, R. J. Lambert was chosen to act as treasurer the remainder of the year. A. J. Yarrington has occupied as superintendent of the Homes and farm. Sr. Alice P. Dancer continues as matron of the Saints' Home and Sr. Sarah J. Moore has occupied as matron at Liberty Home.

The change in the live stock referred to in our report last year, i. e., from scrub cattle to a high-class dairy herd, has proven very satisfactory. The permanent improvements of the year consist of the completion of the woven wire fence inclosing the entire home farm, except the railroad right of way, which we expect the railroad company to build during the coming year, and a new building for housing machinery.

Recommendations for the coming year: We are still in need of better laundry equipment, as mentioned in previous reports. The equipment for canning fruits and vegetables in large quantities for home consumption is still a need which we have been unable to meet for lack of funds, but for which we shall continue to hope, as a considerable saving could be made on our food expense. It is the ambition of the present board to still further improve the equipment of the farm, so that it shall pay better dividends toward the support of the aged ones resident in the homes. In order to properly care for those applying for places in the homes for aged, and who are worthy of admission, it will be necessary to enlarge the capacity of the homes very materially.

The following is the report of the treasurer of the board of managers for the year ending December 31, 1916.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Woman's Auxiliary fills a peculiar place in our economy. Much question has been raised in regard to the woman's proper sphere. A recent article in the HERALD attempts to point out three different conditions; the first being the fallen condition and another her redeemed condition. Perhaps it might be better to define the first, as the condition which has existed for some time in the world, the failure to recognize woman as the companion and coworker. This we are quite willing to consider as a fallen condition.

Eve was given as a helpmeet and companion to Adam. The prophecy after the fall has been literally and at times brutally fulfilled: "thy husband shall rule over thee." But we think we are safe in considering this as a prophecy, that has been fulfilled rather than a declaration of divine law.

Paul has been often quoted, and somewhat erroneously considered a woman hater. A more careful reading of the Bible would correct this apprehension. It is true, he gives his opinion, as an apostle, that the women should keep silent in the church, they should ask their husbands at home; but considering the time in which he lived, it would have created somewhat of a useless scandal to have declared otherwise.

On the other hand he praises repeatedly the work of different sisters by name. He urges that as Christ loved the church, so should the husband love his wife. And after emphasizing this for common conduct, the passivity of the wife, he concludes, "Nevertheless . . . so is the man also by the woman." (1 Corinthians 11: 11, 12.) Again he declares that we are called to be sons and daughters of God.

As we read these passages he was making a declaration of the custom of his time, and it was wise that it should be followed then. Nevertheless in Christ they are called sons and daughters.

So in modern times we find a resolution of the church in 1835: "It is not right to persuade a woman to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband, neither is it lawful to influence her to leave her husband."—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4.

We find a similar provision in the next section regarding bondservants or slaves. Yet it is well recognized that the church individually and collectively did not approve of slavery, and were driven out of Missouri for this belief. So this evidently had the recognition of the law as it existed at that time, for we find in this same section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"Do you both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives."

Here we see that she is referred to again as a companion. "You mutually agree." This should establish a woman's position in the law of God, in marriage or out of it. It is a condition of redemption, if you wish to call it so. But it is a condition to be applied now.

Certainly no people should be so much concerned as we in securing justice and freedom for woman-kind. No people should be more concerned with the work for which the Woman's Auxiliary is organized. It is after all fundamentally right that our sisters be indeed our associates and companions, walking side by side in the great work intrusted to us. This organization is an effort on their part to prepare themselves for better service to the church, to the home, to the family, and eventually to the state.

For some of them are coming to recognize the obligations, which it is their duty to assume. To assist as they have special talents and means in the problems of the State, and especially those which most nearly concern the home, the care of children, the protection of the virtue of women, sanitation and the prevention of food monopoly. Women have been found especially capable on the boards of children's homes, hospitals and schools.

But our more fortunate sisters wish also to secure better protection for the woman who must leave her home day by day, and contend for a livelihood in the marts of trade. Our sisters are becoming interested in this phase, and justly so. It is an obligation, that confronts us to help them to that end.

S. A. BURGESS.

The Late Convention

We have not time this morning to transcribe for you any detailed or comprehensive account of the various meetings of the women during our recent conference and its attendant conventions.

Permission to use the lower auditorium each morning from 10.30 to noon, had kindly been granted by the conference authorities and the women availed themselves of this privilege to a greater or less extent.

One would be inclined to think that the women of our church who are sufficiently progressive to wish to attend a General Conference would by that same token be very, very eager to grasp every opportunity offered by which they could more clearly understand the definite work they have to do in the church as well as in their own homes. Yet it was amazing and, to a degree disheartening, to see the great number of women who chose to attend a preaching service in the main auditorium while their own peculiar problems of life were being helpfully discussed and considered in the room below.

Why any Latter Day Saint mother should prefer to listen, for instance to an illustrated explanation of the exact location of certain cities and deserts mentioned in the Book of Mormon in preference to having wide-awake consecrated specialists in the subjects tell of the dangers and mistakes in parental training, bringing to their attention definite ways in which these mistakes can be avoided or counteracted, is hard to understand. Archæology is interesting, intensely so—as are all matters of general information and culture—but will archæology save your heart one single ache or pain, your soul one agonizing cry, when your boy or girl, perhaps through your ignorance and indifference to his real needs, has gone down into the terrible depth of sin, a vortex from which your earnest study to understand your mission as parents, might have saved him?

Not many of us have a divine commission to be archæology experts for the benefit of the church—some are, we feel sure—but most of us sooner or later do receive a commission direct from the hands of the Most High,—the giver of life and light—and that commission is parenthood—more precious and important than any bestowed upon any earthly ambassador by any earthly king or potentate! And yet how terribly lightly do many of us hold that sacred trust! Our children just grow up, or tumble up, as best they may and if they turn out well, we beam in fond pride, and if ill, we moan and ask, "Why, oh why, did God place this burden upon me?"

Foolish hearts! God who is ever entreating us to come to him and learn! Who tells us it were better a millstone were about our necks than that we should offend (or injure or neglect) a little child! The crime of neglecting a child, one in whom divine tendencies have been undirected or misdirected or who has been at the mercy of suggested evil, is one which no Latter Day Saint who is really worthy of the name should be guilty of committing.

And yet simply because we willfully shut our eyes to the golden opportunities all about us of acquainting ourselves with facts concerning the mental and physical natures of our children, we grope blindly in the matter of their training, and frankly confess ourselves at times unable to cope with the situation.

The address of Brother Charles E. Irwin, superintendent of Lamoni public schools, upon "The story of life," in which he painted out the necessity for parents to understand their children at every point of their development, and the practical way in which we may fortify our children against the period of "storm and stress," we are happy to say, will be to the readers of this column in the near future.

Brother McDowell's address on "The psychology of the adolescent age," was so animated, so full of vigor and suggestion, so replete with real concrete helps and sidelights in the problem all parents have to solve when dealing with children at this vital period of their lives, that every parent at the conference who was not present—and their name is legion—has, however unconsciously to himself, suffered a distinct loss!

It was said of Christ "A light shined in darkness, but the darkness comprehended it not." We feel just that way about much of the good that was offered at these auxiliary programs—the light and the food were there, free for the taking, but many comprehended it not, and perhaps are still in a degree of darkness concerning their children that might have been dispelled—hungry still, when they might have fed on living vital present truths.

We long for the day when parents, and the fathers' need is as great if not greater in these lines than the mothers', to whom God has in some measure through instinct often partially supplied where preparation and equipment has been lacking—will sense more keenly the need for intelligent parenthood and will be more eager to humbly but persistently prepare themselves for that sacred commission and the efficient accomplishment of its purposes.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

The Adolescent Age

(Impressions gleaned from Professor McDowell's lecture on "The psychology of the adolescent age," given Thursday morning, April 12.)

In his plea for parents to equip themselves for intelligent training of their children, Professor McDowell placed value upon experience but argued that if the lessons gained through experience by others, can be gleaned directly by us, without going through the circuitous route of these same experiences we are the gainers, by so much.

Thus if parents can get the knowledge of the peculiar conditions surrounding the physical and mental changes of their children at the adolescent period without the risk which would attend an experience covering years, it will be of great value to them.

If children cannot find what they want at home they will go where they can find it. It is a period of storm and stress, of variableness and change constantly. They are moody, spasmodic, go to extremes; parents should recognize all these symptoms, and deal with them patiently.

There are no inherent evils in the nature of a child, what seems so is often just a flash of these many instincts in a nature in turmoil and unacquainted with itself. Our modern school studies are not adapted to the child of adolescent age. They should not be burdened with abstraction, in literature or music, we often take the soul out of the subject and teach but the technicalities. A boy should be asked "How does this poem make you feel? What does it mean to you?" The poorest grammarian in the school can sometimes get the best grade in English and the worst boy write the best essay on morals! We should get back to fundamentals, and teach the child instead of subjects,—put the soul back into the information. Temperance in our thoughts, purity in life, respect and reverence from heart, self-control, not by repression but by direction, should be in mind. Overcome evil with good should be the mother's slogan!

The home has shifted to the community the work that should be done there. Prevention should be the watchword.

Repression is a dangerous thing. Use fewer don'ts, and fill the child's life with so many wholesome do's that unconsciously he will pass unscathed through the evils of the world and be a shining light of purity and strength in the world.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Testimony of John J. Cornish

I am indeed glad of this privilege of meeting with you. About forty-five years ago for the first time I heard this beautiful gospel of Jesus Christ as restored in latter days. After hearing eight or ten discourses, I became very much interested, and believing the minister who said if anyone who had a desire to do right would go before God in earnest and humble prayer, asking the Almighty for light, that he would make it known unto him. That saying rang in my ears for days, and I began to pray. And one Sunday morning I slipped away along on the road leading into the woods where they were drawing out wood, and so far from the hearing of any person, I there bowed in humble prayer, and from my heart I prayed to my heavenly Father to give me a knowledge of this gospel. I went further and asked him to do it in this way, that I would go to the morning preaching service, then to their evening prayer meeting, and in that prayer meeting I asked that he speak through the elder to me in the gift of tongues, and in the interpretation, telling me that it was true, and at the same time to give me a manifestation of the Holy Spirit by which I might know it was true. (In later years it seemed presumptuous upon my part to ask God to do it in that manner, but I did not know any better then.)

Concerning this matter I was determined that no soul on earth should know of what I had done. I went to the morning meeting and that elder was not there. I also went to the evening meeting where many were gathered together, among them the elder that I had asked God to speak through. The meeting was opened in the usual way, and one or two had prayed and testified and sung; then the elder arose as I had felt sure in my mind he would when I had prayed that morning, and he began to talk, but I did not know a word he said. After saying something apparently to the congregation, he turned toward me and raised his hand, and pointed to me, talking as before, but I did not understand. But while he was talking, some power came upon me which caused my body to tremble, and a powerful sensation passed through it from my head to my feet, remaining in power while he was speaking, causing the tears to flow down my cheeks, unbidden by me. They were not tears of sorrow; I felt glad and happy in my soul. As the elder turned back to his seat and in the act of sitting down, but instead he walked back and began to talk to the people to the understanding of all, then, pointing again to me, said: "Thou son of man, inasmuch as thou hast inquired of me this day to know of the truthfulness of my gospel, I now reveal it unto thee, and give thee a manifestation of my Spirit by which you will know this work is true." (This is the import; I quote from memory.) While the elder was thus speaking, that same power came but somewhat in greater power than when he was speaking in the unknown tongue. The thrilling sensation was also greater, to my satisfaction that he was directed by the power of God, so to speak. And while that Spirit seemed to linger but not so powerful as while he was speaking, I felt as though my body was changed. I felt so glad and happy, "Oh," thought I, "I can never sin again!"

I asked my cousin who had talked so much to me about this gospel, not to ride home with the others but to walk with me. She gladly consented. We walked about halfway home before either said a word to the other; I could not break the silence; by and by she spoke and said, "Pleasant evening, isn't it?" So to speak, that broke the ice. I replied, "Yes, Mary. Was that the Holy Spirit I received when the elder spoke?" "Yes," she replied. Then she felt free to explain, and she talked so nice to me about it and asked me if I had prayed to know if the gospel was true, as stated. I answered "Yes," then told her all about it. A few days passed, and this was on my mind continually. Finally, at another prayer meeting, I longed to have some one say something to me about getting baptized, but I did not know what move to make and did not have the courage to ask, but before they separated that evening, Sister Arthur Leverton put her hand on my shoulder and said, "Now, Johnny, you know your duty." I then asked, "Do they baptize any time?" She replied in the affirmative. The next day I was baptized—February 22, 1872. In the confirmation Brother Arthur Leverton prophesied that I would be healed of my affliction and made whole, and that if I were faithful before the Lord I would be clothed with authority to preach the gospel to the nations of the earth, and become a polished shaft in Israel, and be the means of bringing many into the church and kingdom of God.

At the time of my confirmation I did not receive any evidence of the Holy Spirit that I could discern, and after three days had passed away I began to feel serious over the matter. I had tried to live right, prayed every morning and evening, and at other times. Not at all times did I kneel down to do this praying, except at night as I retired to rest, and morning when I arose—but at any time when I might be walking around. But when the fourth day came and I had not received any light or Spirit of God, and began to feel so downcast, while standing on a log in deep meditation, I felt to conclude that I had been doing my duty in serving my Master, and that he would send me the comforter whenever he saw fit. At the same time I was in the act of starting off, when suddenly I heard a sound up at a distance coming toward me. It sounded like the rumbling of a heavy train in the distance, louder and louder until it reached me, and at that moment the power, about as it was four days previously, came in answer to my prayer, thrilling through my body as sensibly as the water was around my body. I then said, "Lord, is this the Holy Ghost?" It thrilled through my body again. I then said, "Lord, if this is the power of the Holy Ghost, by which I may testify that I know this work is true, let it thrill through my body again." That moment it thrilled through my being to my entire satisfaction, until I was filled with love toward God and my fellow men, and I cried, "Lord, it is enough; I am satisfied," and have been ever since.

J. J. CORNISH.

From Here and There

A sister desires that we all especially pray that God will spare us from the cruelties of this war, suggesting that Wednesdays and Sundays be observed.

We have a request for the history of where the worms were blown from the trees when the people paid their tithing. Perhaps this and even more remarkable things have happened, but we do not recall the incident.

If there are any Saints living in or near Carter County, Missouri, will they kindly drop a card to L. E. Danforth, 1560 Willow Avenue, Niagara Falls, New York, as he wishes to get in touch with some one in that locality.

In a late issue of the HERALD we neglected to note that the dedicatory sermon at the opening of the new church at Niagara Falls, New York, was by Elder Fred Mesle, of Sherrill, the former pastor. It was merely an oversight on our part.

Desiring to let the Saints know that he is still serving his Redeemer, and that he enjoys very much the reading of the letters and testimonies of the Saints, Brother John M. Long, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, writes us. He requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of his daughter, Amelia.

The following ordinations are reported from the Oakland Branch at Hamilton, Missouri: James Dawson, elder; Guy Hawley and Oscar Ford, teachers; Albert Nelson and John Bullard, deacons. These young men are reported as proving themselves worthy of the call. The prayer meetings are referred to as being very spiritual. J. T. Ford is continuing as president of the Far West District until its organization into a stake. Much interest is manifest in the Christmas offering. James Winslow has moved into the community.

This advertising talk by the manager of the Board of Publication is one of a series appearing simultaneously in the SAINTS' HERALD and "Zion's Ensign," written with the hope of reaching as many as possible of the church membership. This is the fifth of eight "talks" that will appear.

BOOK SERVICE DEPARTMENT

One of the ways in which the publishing interests of the church can greatly assist the church is through the Book Service Department. At both the Herald Office and the Ensign Office much information has been collected and filed by which our readers may profit without cost to themselves.

If there are certain books that you need, order them through the nearest house. If you want books on a certain subject, ask them to tell you what is available and worth while.

Along many special lines recommendations have been secured on various books from those in the church who have made use of them in their work.

By making use of the service thus offered, many dollars may be saved to the church which would be lost in the purchase of unsatisfactory books. Just address Book Service Department, in care of either house.

Our Departed Ones

ALLEN.—William Roy, infant son of Lee Roy and Myrtle Allen, died March 26, 1917, at Macklin, Saskatchewan, Canada, aged 8 days, of hemorrhage. Services in charge of William J. Cornish.

HANDLEY.—Arthur C. Handley died March 24, 1917, after a brief illness of pneumonia, at the age of 47 years. Leaves wife, 4 children, father, brothers and sisters to mourn his departure. Funeral from Butterworth and Sons undertaking chapel, Seattle, Washington, on the 27th. Music furnished by Brother E. E. Inslee and Sister Sarah Barney; sermon by J. M. Terry.

JOHNSON.—Bernhard Johnson was born February 1, 1875, at Danville, Iowa. Baptized November 13, 1892. Married Bertha Johnson February 26, 1902. Two children were born, Gertrude and Benjamin Orville. Died March 15, 1917. Leaves a wife, 2 children, mother, 4 sisters, 3 brothers, and a large number of relatives and friends. Funeral at German Saints' church at Stewartsville, in charge of T. T. Hinderks; sermon by William Lewis.

JACK.—Earl C., son of Brother and Sister J. A. Jack, was born June 25, 1897, at Byron, Illinois, and moved with his parents to Brooklyn, New York, March, 1912. Died of typhoid pneumonia after a sickness of ten days. A faithful and stalwart defender of the work, and highly respected. Funeral service conducted by Ward L. Christy to a church full of Saints and friends, then in Proton, Canada, where James McLean conducted another service.

LITTLE.—Sister Margerath Little died suddenly at her home in San Diego, California, April 1, 1917. Married twice, the first husband having passed away some years prior to her second marriage. Both husbands were soldiers in the same regiment in the Union Army. She was an aunt to Sister Lydia King of Seattle, and was a member of the Eastern Star Masonic order. Funeral was held at Johnson's Undertaking Parlors, April 4, 1917, G. E. Harrington officiating.

SMITH.—Frances Sabina Smith was born near Great Yarmith, England, July 15, 1849. She came with her parents to America in 1855 and lived on Long Island 7 years, thence went to Salt Lake City, Utah, where she was married to John Cross, December 9, 1864, and to this union 13 children were born, 7 of whom are still living. Came to Iowa in 1867 and was baptized into the Reorganized Church October 15, 1868. Died at her home in Dow City, Iowa, March 24, 1917. Funeral in charge of J. B. Wildermuth.

BOOTMAN.—Brother C. E. Bootman, Springfield, Missouri, who was a switchman for the Frisco Railway, was killed while at work Sunday morning, March 25. The funeral services at the Saints' church, sermon by Henry Sparling. The church was altogether too small to hold the large number attending. The Frisco laid off two switching crews and everything stopped for thirty minutes to allow as many who desired to attend. Baptized at Lamoni, Iowa, thirty years ago. He was a good, kind, and honest Latter Day Saint, very highly respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and daughter, both members of the church, also another boy whom they have raised, the son of W. P. Bootman. He was laid to rest in Green Lawn Cemetery.

THOMPSON.—At Virgil, Oklahoma, March 3, 1917, Brother Jasper Newton Thompson, died in his fifty-second year. Born June 22, 1864. United with the church May 25, 1910; died as he had lived, honest and honorable in his dealings and firm in the faith, leaving wife, children and a number of near relatives to mourn his departure. Funeral in the Doaksville Schoolhouse. Sermon by Elder J. C. Chrestensen, interment in the Doaksville Cemetery at or near Fort Towson, Oklahoma.

LOTT.—Sister Clara Lott, born in Glamorganshire, England, 1859. Baptized December 18, 1878, by R. B. Howlett. Died March 22, 1917. She leaves to mourn her loss her husband, George, 1 daughter, Sister L. Burnard, 2 sons, Harry and Wesley, and 9 grandchildren. She was faithful to duty and earnest in service. Her sufferings brought increased trust in God and a bright hopefulness of that resurrection morn when she would ever be with the Lord. Funeral at the home in charge of George Henley; sermon by William Fligg.

KINNAIRD.—At Aylmer, Ontario, Canada, January 23, 1917. Nelson Kinnaird, passed peacefully away after bearing testimony that he knew the latter-day message to be the doctrine of Christ, the gospel restored. He was born at Sherbrooke, Haldmand County, Ontario, December 26, 1844. Twenty-four years ago, after hearing part of one sermon, he, wife and her sister prepared Stromness town hall for Elder Shields to preach in, remarking that they knew Hiram McDonald before he went to Lilbary to live, that they had known his life for two years since his return and a religion that could make as much difference on a man's life they welcomed it to their neighborhood. He was baptized at Selkirk, Ontario, June 28, 1903, by Elder M. F. Derby. Confirmed by M. F. Derby and Nathan Overholt. Funeral sermon at his home, Aylmer, Ontario, by John Shields, in charge of J. L. Burger and C. C. Raison. He leaves aged wife also strong in the faith.

You Can Make Excellent Cake with Fewer Eggs

Just use an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, in place of each egg omitted.

This applies equally well to nearly all baked foods. Try the following recipe according to the new way:

CREAM LAYER CAKE

Old Way

1 cup sugar
½ cup milk
2 cups flour
2 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
3 eggs
½ cup shortening
1 teaspoon flavoring

New Way

1 cup sugar
1 cup milk
2 cups flour
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
1 egg
2 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon flavoring

Makes 1 Large 2-Layer Cake

DIRECTIONS—Cream the sugar and shortening together, then mix in the egg. After sifting the flour and Royal Baking Powder together two or three times, add it all to the mixture. Gradually add the milk and beat with spoon until you have a smooth pour batter. Add the flavoring. Pour into greased layer cake tins and bake in a moderately hot oven for twenty minutes. This cake is best baked in two layers. Put together with cream filling and spread with white icing

SMITH-PELOUBET'S BIBLE DICTIONARY.—By William Smith, LL. D., Revised by F. N. and M. A. Peloubet. An invaluable book for students of the Bible. More than 800 pages of concise information, covering all phases of scriptural study; excellent colored maps, and 440 appropriate illustrations. The volume is described as "teacher's edition"; and, since all active Christians are Bible teachers, is therefore a universal necessity. No. 291, cloth, net$1.60

BOOK OF MORMON LECTURES.—Are you a student? Here is something for your faculties to wrestle with. The author, H. A. Stebbins, has, with comprehensive outlook, embodied in these lectures a wealth of archæological facts corroborative of the Book of Mormon narrative, dug from works unknown to the public prior to its publication, and from others published since that time. The statements in these lectures are made in such unaffected plainness and simplicity of language as to carry conviction to any normally unprejudiced mind. No. 51, cloth$.75

BRADEN - KELLEY DEBATE.—Probably the most exhaustive and most exciting debate ever held in the Reorganization. Both sides of the controversy are given in full, the manuscripts being signed by both participants. The Christian Church claims its representative, the late Clark Braden, defeated Bishop E. L. Kelley in this discussion—but we are doing the selling. The attacks upon us in this volume are so numerous and characteristic every preacher and would-be preacher of ours should acquaint himself with them. The book is a mental and spiritual stimulant. No. 152, cloth$2.00

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.—Containing all the important resolutions passed in the church since 1852. This makes not only educational but highly interesting reading. Many of the elders are in doubt about matters that have been settled and are recorded in this collection of conference enactments. No. 206, paper, 40c; No. 207, cloth$.60

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.—Columbus Scott, in this work, adduces much Scripture to prove that the first day of the week is the Sabbath Christ observed, and that its observance is in harmony with the gospel as taught in every dispensation. Contains much valuable information on this mooted question. No. 161, paper, 25c; No. 162, cloth$.40

ARCHÆOLOGICAL COMMITTEE REPORT.—By the joint efforts of leading minds in the church this work was compiled. It gets down to rock bottom in archæological investigation bearing upon the claims made by the Book of Mormon. Data that will fortify Book of Mormon students against arguments of "science." Interesting reading in itself. No. 142, cloth$.75

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home.—Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

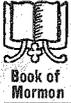

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

ROBERT M. ELVIN PASSES

The hearts of many were made sad at the death of Robert M. Elvin on April 20 at the Independence Sanitarium. He had a fatal stroke in January, and while no hopes were entertained for his recovery, he was removed to the Sanitarium early in February so as to make his last days as easy as possible. He was baptized April 15, 1866, so had celebrated his fifty-first spiritual birthday the Sunday preceding his death. He was ordained an elder six months later and had spent over forty years in the mission field in various parts of the country. On April 15, 1890, he was ordained a high priest and high councilor. Only three men were senior to him as members of the high priests quorum. He was also chosen as secretary of the high council, holding that office until his release when the high council was reorganized in April, 1916. He had been secretary of the quorum of high priests since April, 1903. His years of service have been many and well filled. His reward is sure.

ROBERT M. ELVIN

THE ORDER OF BISHOPS

The order of bishops report an unusually successful session. Eleven sessions were held, and one in joint conference with the Presidency and Twelve. They considered a number of very important matters, including a proper interpretation of the temporal law, on many points of which they reached an agreement. Especial attention was given to the law of stewardships. Their reports have been referred, however, to the joint council for consideration.

Thirteen bishops were in attendance at their sessions and seven bishops' counselors. Of these seven bishops attended every session, three missed only one, and two missed two sessions. Apparently only one bishop missed more than two sessions and none missed a session except from necessity. This gave an unusually high average attendance, and showed their keen sense of responsibility for their important duties.

They passed upon the special appropriations needed, and approved the budget of Graceland College and the Sanitarium, besides appointing the various committees referred to them. The Presiding Bishopric recommended that the superintendent of the home farms at Lamoni be also superintendent of the Children's Home and college farms.

The action of the Sunday school association in declaring a stewardship and agreeing to turn over the surplus to the church, and also in appointing the second assistant superintendent to boost the Christmas offering and in this particular to cooperate with the bishopric, was and is strongly approved. The only objection we have heard to this plan is that we ought not to make the children pay, that we should pay it ourselves. But the children will, if we do not do it quickly.

We are informed that the order of bishops voted to avoid the erection of buildings this year, including church edifices, office buildings and meeting place for General Conference, and concentrate their efforts on paying the debt of the church.

One very favorable aspect is that the Presiding Bishop not only did not have to borrow money for elders' expenses and transportation home, but that he actually had more money in the bank, when the conference adjourned, and the expenses of the conference had been met, than he had at its opening. A substantial bank balance makes an excellent start for the work of reducing and paying off much of the church debt this year, if each one helps. We can pay it all if we will.

Many are moving forward earnestly to obey the law and assist in this great purpose. We have been informed that one man gave a farm valued at $7,000; another gave $6,000, in addition to $1,000 given earlier in the present year shortly after his baptism. This does not mean superabundance. It has cost more the past year than ever before to care for the missionary work. That will probably be the case the coming year. Prices are high and apparently going higher, as usually occurs in time of war. Yet if we will, we should be able to care for the missionary affairs, our ordinary expenses, and pay the debt. Will we?

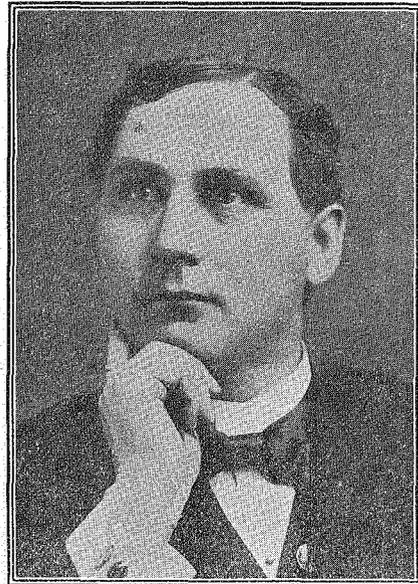

THE EVANS MEETINGS

Last week's HERALD was practically closed up the 13th, so that it was not possible to put in all of the items. One feature of importance has been the meetings of Bishop R. C. Evans at the Coliseum. Those who know him will not be surprised to know that the Coliseum was filled at every service and many standing up, except on the 7th, when a heavy snow-storm kept nearly everyone indoors. But even then those in charge were surprised to find the building two thirds full.

These meetings of Bishop Evans's are apparently becoming one of the features of the General Conference. This necessitates his closing his special winter meetings in Toronto earlier than he otherwise would. We are informed that he baptized thirteen the day before he left Toronto, and twenty-six the last week before coming to conference. He has baptized a few here but not as many as no doubt would have resulted if the meetings had been continued for several weeks, though a number were interested. In fact many who would like to have heard him remained away simply to give opportunity to others who had not yet heard the gospel of Jesus Christ to conversion. Bishop Evans reaches many who are reached in no other way. And such was the effect of his meetings during conference.

We were surprised many times to notice the large number of old and even very old people who walked a half a mile or more of an evening to hear him. These meetings allowed an opportunity for nine thousand auditors in the fourteen meetings. This gave an opportunity for each one in Lamoni to hear him several times, and many took advantage of this opportunity.

An additional point of interest about these meetings is that the owners of the Coliseum let the church have the use of the basement and its service free for a dining hall, and of the auditorium also without cost for the use during these special services of Bishop Evans. The only charge that was made is for light and heat actually used.

How the Canadians look upon Bishop Evans will be shown by the extract from Jack Canuck, received during the conference.

THE BISHOPRIC

We should like to call particular attention to the report of the Presiding Bishop for the past year. It appears to show the results of earnest work on the part of the Presiding Bishopric and the local bishops and agents. It also shows a decided growth of interest in the keeping of the law on the part of the membership.

The receipts for the year show a decided and healthy increase, totaling around $275,000 for the year ending January 10, and possibly close to $300,000 for the conference year, April 1. This includes all moneys paid in to the Presiding Bishop, bishop's agents, or to the various members of the boards of trustees for the church institutions. It includes tithes, offerings, consecration and surplus.

These means have been used principally for the elders' families, elders' expenses and for aid to the poor. These three items total close to $175,000 for the year ending January 10, of which $126,500 is for elders' families, $27,000 elders' expenses, and $19,500 for aid to the poor. The church institutions, the college, sanitarium, Children's home and various homes for the aged, require a total receipt of donations of between $32,000 and $33,000. The bishop's report states a loss for the year of $45,000, but the amount of bills and accounts receivable charged off were close to 87,000, which shows a real gain for the year of $42,000 to $43,000. This is also indicated in the decrease in bills payable, as set forth in the bishop's report. Interest, office expenses and general expenses account for the balance.

It may be noted that the decrease of present worth is figured from April 29, 1916. At that date it showed a decrease of $8,807.23. This is not unexpected, as the return of our missionaries to their home or field marks the low ebb in the General Conference year. This amount should be deducted in figuring the net actual gain for the year as set forth above. (That is, it would be $33,000 to $34,000 apparently.)

One matter of particular interest is to note that Graceland College summary is to June 30, 1916. It indicates an increased indebtedness from the report, to last conference of over $2,000. (We are using round numbers.) Five times "one fifth of the debt" as reported to last conference, gives an amount of $2,154.52 less than the liabilities shown in the bishop's summary.

This is quite natural as tuition is generally collected the first part of the school year, and the last three or four months show the smallest relative receipts. June 30 usually shows the college finances at their lowest point for the whole year. A more fair comparison would be to take from the report of the treasurer the statement, that $8,302.95 has been paid on the indebtedness and that since making that summary a $4,000 note bearing 6 per cent interest has also been paid by the bishop. As the interest is payable semiannually, it would amount to $120. But the decrease of indebtedness would appear to be over $12,000 over a year ago. This is on the most conservative estimate and place, the present indebtedness of the college lower than it has been for many years and over $14,000 less than in the summary for June 30, 1916.

Also in the Independence Sanitarium, we notice a slight discrepancy in the amount due the church. But in making a summary of the total indebtedness of the church and total assets, it would seem that each should be decreased by this amount, even though it is properly carried as an asset of the general church and a liability of the Sanitarium. That is, in the general summary these items cancel, thus decreasing the percentage of liabilities as compared with the assets. Especial attention should also be called to the change in the character of the liabilities, as the amount due banks has been greatly decreased, if not entirely wiped out.

Bishop B. R. McGuire is a lawyer with many years practice behind him. He has given especial attention to the department of real estate and finance, and is especially qualified to act on these questions as affecting church interests. He has also made special preparation for several years for this particular work, giving particular attention to the laws of Missouri.

Bishop James F. Keir is specially prepared to take care of the accounting department. So between them they have a splendid record for their first year.

In brief the church is to be congratulated on having Benjamin R. McGuire as Presiding Bishop and James F. Keir as his counselor.

BIOGRAPHICAL

BISHOP M'GUIRE

Eastern people cannot say too much about "Our Ben," especially those around Brooklyn. Not only has he been actively engaged in the branch and district work, but his professional work has been ruled by the strictest principles of honor and the insistence that both the letter and the spirit of the law shall be obeyed.

It is related that once a particular friend of many years standing called him up to have an acknowledgment to some minor document taken over the phone, but "Our Ben" refused. "Oh, Ben, you know me, and it is all right." "I don't care how well I know you. My certificate says 'personally appeared before me,' and I would not take an acknowledgment for the President of the United States unless he personally appeared before me." This story illustrates in part his disposition. He is the very model of courtesy, and lenient in all points that do not matter and in which no principle is involved. He has shown with his private means that he has a large heart. As one Brooklynite expressed it, "Ben has the biggest heart of any man on earth." He has always been ready to help and care for those in need and to do it generally in a way not to give offense.

But when a principle is involved he will still be courteous, still lenient, but inflexible. A few thought that almost anyone could run over him and dominate him and force him to do as they would. A few we hear have tried it the past year only to find out that they were mistaken. He has a mind and will of his own though he will keep that fact to himself if you will let him.

In addition to the items in the editorial from several friends of Bishop McGuire we glean the following items:

He was left in early youth without the help and counsel of his mother, as she passed away in his boyhood. While still a boy he built up an extensive news business in his home town, Long Branch, New Jersey. His father was a veteran of the Civil War, and survived until two years since. Both parents were members of the church.

After studying law in New York City, and being admitted to the bar, he was employed for several years, and until he resigned to take up his present duties, in the legal department of the Lawyers' Title and Trust Company of New York City.

He became head of the legal department, a position of great trust, as at times the whole wealth of that institution were left in his charge.

He has been president of the Brooklyn Branch several different years, as well as superintendent of the Brooklyn Sunday school; and he has been a counselor to Bishop Zimmermann from the organization of the bishopric of the New York and Philadelphia District, until his call to the Presiding Bishopric.

"You may talk of hospitality, but hospitality is Ben's middle name. He has brought many people into the church in Brooklyn by this virtue. He and his wife are first in hospitality."

"There is not a more spiritual man in the church than Ben. His spirituality is high, and no man will depend more on spiritual insight."

We think it may be of general interest to know what his friends think of him. He is too modest to let us print this, if he knew. S. A. B.

JAMES F. KEIR

About ten years ago the writer came in contact with a young man in the city of Chicago in the person of James F. Keir, then an instrument in the making, now counselor to the Presiding Bishop of the church. His life then, and ever since, was of that character, that it gave one a desire to remain in close touch with him. It was no surprise, therefore, to learn from his own testimonies, and from that of others, that much of his success was due to the influence of his good mother.

James F. Keir was reared in an atmosphere of sacrifice and trained in the college of "Hard Knocks."

At an early age he was thrown upon his own resources in the large city of Chicago, amid bad influences, but the prayers of a faithful and devoted mother and personal spiritual aggressiveness prevailed, and the work in Chicago and elsewhere has been benefited by one whom God has prepared for a special work.

His office and legal training was received in a Chicago firm, with which he was connected for many years. His employers were loath to part with him when the call came to serve the church, for they recognized in him one who had served them long, faithfully and efficiently, performing service of unusual tact and skill when a crisis was at hand.

He received his religious training with the First Chicago Branch of this church. Many still recall his first five-minute sermon. It surely was a trial for him to undergo. But since that time "efficiency" has been his motto. "Get there—get there!" was his byword. On four-mile hikes from office to home, after work in the evening, the writer was often tortured, sometimes edified, by lengthy poetry and phrases used for practicing public speaking. Not mentioning anything about the exercise for proper breathing, etc. His mind was always alert to every opportunity for development. We attended the public night school together for awhile to study grammar. Always it was "Get there, get there, get there!" Even the washing machine in his home, worked by his vigorous arm reechoed this cry. Church committee work was no exception to the rule, notably a certain committee on which was appointed a modest young lady whom Brother Keir introduced to the writer, and then he was ever at it again: "Get there, get there," etc. I did, to my great pleasure.

For a number of years, James F. Keir acted as president of the First Chicago Branch, and his pure life, kindness, charity and cheerfulness endeared him to all of the Chicago Saints. They miss him very much. He always championed the cause of the down-trodden, and a better friend the young man of Chicago, who were trying to develop, will never find.

His home was graced with the presence of a lovely companion, a wife whom all have learned to admire for her cheerfulness, virtue and helpfulness.

When the church asked him for his services, he responded quickly, willingly and cheerfully, notwithstanding the fact that it meant quite a sacrifice.

F. F. WIPPER.

WILL WE DO OUR PART?

(Sermon by Bishop B. R. McGuire, Sunday, April 8, 1917, at General Conference, Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Belle Robinson James.)

I am sure I should be pleased to speak to you this morning under such favorable conditions; with the sunshine streaming in through the windows and the influence of God's Spirit brought into our midst through the harmony of the chorus and solo.

I presume that we have all at some time in our life, witnessed the little boy or the little girl standing in in the parlor in the midst of the company, reciting his first piece; we have noticed how nervous the mother was; how she was ready to prompt her little one. We have noticed the composure of the father as he tried to strengthen his child by not evidencing an air of excitement. We have probably taken part in chorus work or have been present at times when the chorus has rendered some masterpiece and in the few bars have noticed the tremolo in the voice of the singers.

To-day we are approaching a great world crisis, and have felt the tremor as we read in the newspapers that war had been declared. We, as members of the Church of Jesus Christ, believe in God, the Father and Jesus Christ, his Son. We have shown our belief in the doctrine of repentance, submitted to the ordinance of baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. We have desired to be new creatures in Christ and believe that having to be born again as new creatures in Christ we should approximate to the standard set before us by Jesus Christ, our Lord, the great exemplar. We believe "that as many as have received him, to them he gave power to become the sons of God, even them that believe on his name which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh nor of man, but of God."

Then "let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus," for it is God which worketh in you, both to will and do his good pleasure. We believe: "That every good and perfect gift cometh down from the father of lights, in whom there is no variableness neither shadow of turning."

The mind that was in Christ Jesus, our Lord, appraised all the kingdoms of this world; having done so, he did not, as some in this world, put his trust in chariots and in horses, but remembered the name of the Lord our God and to his tempter said: "Get thee behind me, Satan," and when upon another occasion the Apostle Peter would have swerved him from his course, would have had him sit, as he supposed, upon the earthly throne of David, he said unto him: "Thou savorest not of the things that be of God, but of man: get thee behind me, Satan."

To the young man, he said: "Go, sell that thou hast, and give to the poor; come, follow me, for what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" We also believe that "Surely the Lord God will do nothing save he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets." Through our latter-day prophet we have received these words from the Lord, found in the first paragraph of the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, Hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together; for verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated; and the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them.

In the 6th paragraph of that same section, we read:

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his Saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing except he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets."

Can we believe this morning—are we justified in believing—that that part of this prophecy has been fulfilled, when peace shall be taken from the earth? Continuing, reading the next paragraph, I find: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and the promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."

Turning to section 129, paragraph 8, I read:

The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members. "I am God; I change not."

The last sentence of that paragraph reads:

Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart.

Turning to section 130, paragraph 7, I read:

The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debts have been accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.

This instruction is to both members and the church at large—and when I think of the instruction as to members, I recall the question contained in Malachi, "Will a man rob God?" then inquiring, Wherein have we robbed him? The answer is, "In tithes and offerings."

The language of the Lord to us in this day is just as forcible, but possibly we may think it is just a little more kindly spoken. He says, "Both in public and in private expenditure, carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants."

There is not any of us this morning but believes that if we are found in good health with a strong mind and a vigorous body; if in the contest with our fellows in the commercial world we have been able to accumulate this world's goods, especially measured in dollars and cents to the amount of hundreds and thousands, that we have not the right to spend that without first paying our debt to the Lord; but it seems to me that oftentimes our vision is obscured and our judgment is affected by the display of others. Or, as is stated in the language of those who wrote in olden times, we see the glitter of the chariots, we see the horses. Now we see the automobiles, and the automobile is a very useful instrument, but because we can now go ten miles with an auto in the same time that it took us to go one mile years ago with the horse and carriage, is it necessary that we should waste the time saved?

I noticed upon a shelf in a home in which I have recently been in Lamoni, five lamps. They were not using them. They were using electric lights. I thought, Well, that is a saving to the housewife; she doesn't now have to see that the lamp is filled; she doesn't have to see that the chimneys are kept clean; and when visitors come to the door, instead of the wind blowing out the light as soon as the door is opened, and utter darkness following, all she now has to do is to press the button and there is light on the porch. But because all we have to do to have light is to press the button, you would not say that the housewife's time that used to be used in the cleaning and filling of the lamps, etc., should be wasted. Why not? Why can't I use that time as I please? The time that was taken by the housewife in filling the lamps and cleaning the chimney, that same time is being spent now by some man at the electric plant, by some man putting up the wires, by some man installing the fixtures. Time is spent, man's time, in making the light, but that does not give to those who formerly used more time in supplying an inferior means of illumination the right to waste the time thus saved.

That same principle holds good throughout all our experience. Do not think we should not have modern conveniences in our homes, but if we have modern conveniences in our homes, the electric light and those things that go to make home more sanitary and more livable, it is no good reason why we should take the time that was formerly spent in keeping the home, and waste it in something that is of no consequence—that is not necessary to the onward progress of the general work of the church.

We are told in this revelation that we should be careful to see that our funds are not spent in the unnecessary building of houses of worship. The books of the office will show that during the past year there have been sold and the returns have been received from the sale of several church buildings owned by the church. If in the past we may have in the different places built houses of worship that cannot be utilized, if we are not careful may we not do so to-day?

I was very much pleased at the action taken by the Sunday school convention the other day because I believe in spirit it is in harmony with section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 9. It seemed to me that when the association was willing to give that which was over and above the amount necessary to properly discharge its work, it was fulfilling the spirit of this revelation.

You will recall the statement of this section of the Book of Covenants (130:7) that the word of the Lord to us in this day is that we should repress our unnecessary wants—those things which may not be essential to the continued onward progress of the work.

We might raise the question: What are the contributing factors to the onward progress? What is the relative importance of each? There is the general church, the missionary and the local divisions: the auxiliaries, the Sunday school, the Religio and the Woman's Auxiliary; there are the institutions:

the College, the Sanitarium, the Old Folks' and the Children's Homes. Each of these departments, each of these institutions are contributing factors, either for the continued onward progress of the work, or else they are doing that which is hindering the progress of the general work. When they are each fulfilling their mission in their day and time and to the degree that it was intended they should, in the economy of God, then they are contributing to the onward progress of the general work; but when a department or any institution of the church becomes abnormal in its growth, abnormal in its energy, abnormal as a factor in receiving the contributions of the Saints, then instead of being one in harmony with the other departments and institutions of the church in making for the onward progress of the church, it is hindering that progress.

What amount of consideration, what amount of energy, what amount of money should be spent in each? This is a problem that requires not only consideration, but it requires a great deal of investigation, and examination, to obtain the necessary information from which we can make the correct, right, and just deductions and conclusions.

We are counseled in this revelation, which I have read, to repress both in public and in private unnecessary wants. Does it not seem that our attention has been drawn to the need of ascertaining what are essential or necessary wants? Such wants as we would have if the mind of Christ Jesus was in us? Such wants as would make for the continued—not temporary—onward progress of the work? Such wants as would develop us as children of God to bring about Zion's conditions? And as we think of the fulfillment of the word of the Lord through our latter-day prophet that peace shall be taken from the earth, and of the word of the prophet, seer and revelator to the church last year that we were living in the hastening time, do you think that we can give too much consideration to the searching of these commandments, to find what is the will of God concerning us?

To-day the professing Christian world commemorates the victory of our Lord over the grave. The Apostle Paul has said: "O death! Where is thy sting? O grave! Where is thy victory?" The sting of death is sin—the strength of sin is the law, but thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as you know your labor—your labor in the Lord—is not in vain.

He said to his disciple that doubted: "I am the way, the truth and the light." He also said: "My father gave a commandment what I should say and what I should speak and I know that his commandment is life everlasting." To-day we commemorate his victory over the grave.

There is before us the opportunity to have part in the redemption of Zion. There is given to us the opportunity of being children of the Highest. There is offered to us the privilege of being sons of God, and if we desire to be considered as brethren of Jesus Christ our Lord, it seems to me that in all we shall do, in the doing, we should resemble our Lord and Savior, our elder brother who said, "Even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." There come to me the words of a hymn that possibly you have heard sung: "In loving kindness, Jesus came." Is that the spirit, my brothers and sisters, that buoys us up? Is that the spirit that strengthens us? Is that the spirit that fortifies us? Is the spirit with which we are going forward to discharge our several duties that of loving-kindness? We, as ambassadors for Christ, in going forward in the discharge of our duty should carry with us the spirit of the loving-kindness of our Master, reaching us, not by telling us that awful result that should follow if we did not do as he would have us to do, but rather in a spirit of love he has asked us to be children of God, to bring about on this earth peace and good will to mankind.

And at this period of the world's history when we are upon the verge of this awful world conflict, when it seems that even in our fair land peace shall be taken from us, is there not borne home to our souls the necessity of trying to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God?

Do not, then, the words of our Lord come to us? Not commanding us, but counseling us, entreating us, pleading with us to do our part, and though we may tremble as a little child who does his part before the company for the first time; though we may hesitate, can we not feel that we have the support of our heavenly Father just as much as the little one has the support of its anxious parents?

He wants us, brethren and sisters, to demonstrate to this cruel world; he wants us to demonstrate in spirit and in deed the message of peace. The opportunity is ours. Let us then, embrace the opportunity to the glory of God, to the salvation of mankind; and as a secondary consideration, for our own good. This is my prayer, in Christ's name. Amen.

LECTURES TO THE PRIESTHOOD

[During the recent General Conference President Frederick M. Smith delivered four lectures to the priesthood, from the first two of which we herewith submit the following extracts. This summary is by no means complete as he spoke for forty-five minutes on each occasion. A number of diverse notes were used as well as our own, so the result is indeed a summary in which we attempt to preserve as much as possible the spirit of the occasion and the principal points emphasized. It was in these meetings that President Smith stood forth so plainly as a leader, more so than ever before both spiritually and intellectually. We expect to give a resume of the third and fourth lectures next week.—

EDITORS.]

The great advantage of these meetings is that they permit a plain presentation of our problems. These meetings are not round tables, but any question pertaining to the topic will be answered later.

We should be willing to trust our superior officers. If we cannot do so, then we should remove them, and place those in office whom we are willing to trust. Effective work requires more than a formal vote to sustain him.

(In law, a man who is even a criminal is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Sometimes a disposition appears to be manifest to presume our brethren and even our superior officers guilty, until proven innocent. This is wrong both in theory and in practice. We should assume that a man's intentions are right until the contrary is shown. Especially is this true of our brethren of the priesthood, and most especially with those who have been called and ordained to assume the heaviest responsibility among us, and are called of God, and placed by us in position of chief and heaviest responsibility. Effective work cannot be done without confidence.)

There is, of course, a possibility of the Presidency using their power unrighteously. But that power exists because God placed it there. We cannot progress until we give the Presidency our confidence and include in this also the Twelve and the Seventies. If you cannot trust your President, silence him. You can do it without filing charges, and he has no recourse. Every other officer of the church has a recourse or appeal. You have the right to silence your President peremptorily by voting to refuse to sustain him. Wherein, then, lies the charge of the infringement of personal rights, if he has also the power to silence a man in the same way?

The questions of entering the church and entering the ministry are essentially different. Regardless of a man's previous morality he may through repentance be received. There may be a nice question as to where we should draw the line on a man who is so immoral that the church cannot receive him. But morality is an essential. A man presents himself and asks baptism. Entering the priesthood is logically different. A man does not enter the priesthood of his own volition, though there may be exceptions where he has attempted to do so.

Entering the ministry requires all the qualifications for entering the church plus something. Then you must recognize that a man may violate his right to hold the priesthood, yet not touch his right to membership, for priesthood requires everything that membership does, plus something. Some of this plus may be designated ability, wisdom, loyalty. Yes, he must be loyal. For effective work the Presidency must have your confidence and support.

The right to sustain or not to sustain rests with the body. If not sustained by the body, where can the President go for recourse? Where under God lies appeal?

It is your privilege and your duty not to sustain them, if you think the interests of the work are jeopardized. But so long as they remain in office, the supreme rights of the executive arm of the church lie in the Presidency. But do not forget to draw the line between the legislative and the administrative or executive arm of the church.

Next to the Presidency in authority stand the Twelve. Who may silence a member of the Twelve? The Presidency, and the appeal is limited. Under the Twelve in an administrative way stand the Seventy. A member of the Twelve may silence a member of the Seventy in a peremptory way. If he does so, an appeal lies to the Presidency. . . .

We hope under the new regime that when the missionary arm comes in contact with the local, there will be no conflict. We have the missionary line, we have the local line of authority, and they should run parallel, so as not to cross and conflict. An elder laboring under the seventy in charge may be silenced for two causes: immorality followed by proper action; also for unwise or careless conduct. An appeal lies, if there is a member of the Twelve in the vicinity or district in charge of the work in that place, to the Twelve, and if not, to the First Presidency.

Locally, any local minister may be silenced by the branch president or by the district president. If he is silenced by the branch president, an appeal lies to the district president and then to the First Presidency. If a member of the Twelve is laboring in this field, an appeal may be to this member of the Twelve. If satisfactory consideration is not secured, the appeal goes to the First Presidency.

A seventy (or elder under church appointment) becomes to a degree a general church officer. To every seventy is the right to demand the license of a local man, if an emergency exists. The appeal then lies in due course upward to the Presidency. Again, providing for contingency, if there is a member of the Twelve in that field, the appeal lies to him.

To what local court is a man—a seventy—amenable when traveling for the church, when tried for immorality? There is some basis for asserting only before the High Council.

Of the local officers, what are the duties of the deacon? To fill the coal hod and sweep out? That is only a small part of his duties. He should be among the best business men of the church, assisting the bishop and the brethren. Yet you have ordained such men elders and they have been on the shelf, their real work prevented. If you have a deacon who can only fill the coal bucket, you had better let us silence him.

We have been just as erratic and foolish in selecting teachers. In most branches he is held as a detective. This is a mistake. No office calls for more tact, good sense and discretion than the office of the teacher. Many indifferent elders might make good teachers. But too often we consider the office of deacon and teacher a step on the way to "higher" office. This is logically and fundamentally wrong. Their work is as important as any work in the church. A deacon or teacher who does his duty is higher than a president of the church not doing his duty. We should select and sustain men who are especially qualified for these offices. If we honor our office and calling, God and the church will honor us.

(This calls to mind the story of a young man who was ordained a deacon. He dreamed that he went out with a double-barreled shotgun, and some one interpreted this to mean that he would receive the Aaronic priesthood and the Melchisedec priesthood, as a double-barrel shotgun, and finally would go out as a minuteman (seventy) to represent the church. So he got the idea he would be something "big." It was beneath his dignity to be a deacon. He did nothing and there he has stuck. Many of our young men are actually hindered by dreams of those who wish them well but who persistently call them to "higher office." Even if their intentions are good, it tends to hinder rather than to help.)

We wish to emphasize again the validity and importance of the work of the Aaronic priesthood, and that a priest who does his duty has as much right for divine inspiration in doing so, as has any minister in the church.

The teacher who hunts another one to uncover his sin, rather than to so minister to the member that the sin be removed and not come to light, should himself be removed. His work is not that of the detective or police. His duty is to save souls as much as it is the duty of an elder or seventy.

The same is true of the priest. The priest who works as he should, will be intimately acquainted with all his members: not a mere formality but a real interest, in a spirit of helpfulness. He will be clean and careful in his appearance and deportment, not careless and indifferent.

We want to say to every man of the priesthood, that you should exhibit just a little more spirituality than the average member. Should we not expect the priesthood always to be clean and tidy? Sloveliness frequently causes immorality. We have a right to demand a high standard of living from these men.

As to grammar, the priesthood have no right to be ungrammatical. Often it is a matter of inertia, or should we call it pure laziness? There is no reason why our message should not be presented in the very finest language. Yet, if the life behind the message is fine, we may forget the crudities of tongue. But if behind it is that which is not pure, then he should be removed. We are jealous of our standard. We want to place it high and yet higher. We want to get some of these things off all our books, and present ourselves a holy priesthood before our heavenly Father.

Many instances were cited of men who were not properly representing the church, and some actually attacking it, and yet were sent out year after year as church representatives. This is not proper. A man has his individual privilege, and should have it, to say what he likes, but he ought not to go out as a representative of the church and attack the church's position.

Personal deportment to avoid the appearance of evil and personal appearance are also urged, and an appeal made against set sermons. It is proper that we shall have an outline—a skeleton—of our discourse. Think it out and plan it beforehand. But we should then leave it for the Spirit to give it flesh, blood and life. We ought not to preach the same sermon over and over. There are some men, who, as soon as they start to preach, those who have heard them a few times can tell from the first text or two everything that will be said. They follow the same line year after year. This is wrong; we ought to grow. We ought to adapt ourselves to circumstances, locality and the congregation; we should build. We should choose each text as an integral part of many sermons and make it over, fresh and living—reedit it—re clothe it.

In our personal deportment we must consider the effect of what we say. It seems humorous to crack a joke, but if you will notice, many a time it is directed against some one else in such a way as to give offense. Watch yourself to see that you do not. If you must joke, let it be at your own expense.

Sometimes an issue comes between the interests of the church and the individual man. If it comes to an issue, there can be no question where our choice must lie. I have urged, and still urge upon these men who go out representing the church generally, that where they find its interests jeopardized, act and let the matter take its course. Do not hesitate to act when the interests of the church are in danger.

(This is a very brief presentation and only parts of the many excellent points made. These lectures proved highly beneficial and their effect is seen in quorum action as well as on the floor of the conference. We want ideals high and men to maintain them.)

NOW

Ah, but my computations, people say,
Reduced the year to better reckoning?—Nay,
'Twas only striking from the calendar
Unborn to-morrow and dead yesterday.
—Omar Khayyam.

Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.—Paul.

It is not living in the world of yesterday, nor in the world of to-morrow, but in to-day's world that counts. The past is properly used only when it is employed in the service of the present and the future. We must not only look backward and learn our lesson but we must look around and apply it; then we are true to our time and to its demands. It is not what we have done, what we intend to do nor what we can do, but what we do that counts.

The biggest word in our language is the word To-day. Time is but a measure of duration and all our life is just one "to-day." As Tennyson says, it is "one eternal now;" for time really stands still.

We poor, weak, human beings naturally procrastinate. We like to follow the line of least resistance and salve our conscience with the prospect of a "more convenient season." But there never will be a more convenient season. The accepted time is now; the day of salvation is now.

Emerson, in his essay on "Experience" deals with this question in his customary unique, but convincing style. He says:

To finish the moment, to find the journey's end in every step of the road, to live the greatest number of good hours, is wisdom. It is not the part of men but of fanatics, or of mathematicians, if you will, to say, that, the shortness of life considered, it is not worth caring whether for so short a duration we were sprawling in want or sitting high. Since our office is with moments, let us husband them. Five minutes of to-day are worth as much to me as five minutes in the next millennium. Let us be poised, and wise and our own to-day.

And again he says:

It is said all martyrdoms looked mean when they were suffered. Every ship is a romantic object, except that we sail in. Embark, and the romance quits our vessel, and hangs on every other sail on the horizon. 'Tis the trick of nature thus to degrade to-day.

Of course, this kind of an argument does not contemplate such an extreme view as might be suggested to certain minds; as for instance, the crowding of a prodigious amount of work into every twelve hours of daylight. What it does imply, however, is, that if we cannot do a thing to-day, or begin to do it, lay the foundation of it, we will never do it.

To-day is our surest possession: there really is no to-morrow, it is only another to-day; and the last day lies hid, therefore we should watch every day; just as the Master has enjoined: "Be ye therefore ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

In thus dedicating ourselves to the present we are not in anywise minimizing the value of vision—using this term in its broadest sense. "Where there is no vision," says the prophet, "the people perish." No great enterprise was ever accomplished by an individual who had no vision, who could not visualize and plan. The men of dreams and visions are the men who are always well in the van in the march of the world's progress. Not that a dream or vision is per se a thing of any great moment or value. Its worth may be determined only by the extent to which it is susceptible of being transmuted from the abstract into the concrete. As the poet has so aptly said,

Those love truth best who to themselves are true,
And what they dare to dream of, dare to do.

There are plenty of important duties however, that do not require a vision or dream to disclose, that give ample opportunity for service every day of our lives. As Carlyle has stated, "Our grand business undoubtedly is not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand." But the following quotation from one of Professor Dresser's notable works is more comprehensive as well as thoroughly germane to the subject:

If we would only permit the Word to become flesh in its own way, all would run smoothly, but here is where we are apt to forget, to grow impatient and doubtful.

Instead of reaching out in strained, ascetic fervor, we should regard the eternal vision as a picture of what may be. The prophetic forecast shows what may come to me if every day of my journey I am faithful to the guidance of that day.

I do not attain salvation once for all; I work it out daily. I must keep in constant touch with the Spirit, if I would always live by the Spirit. The working out of the eternal vision is in the world of time. The vital question is, Granted the vision of myself as I may be, what shall I do with myself as I am?

Then how about the redemption of Zion? Have not the eyes of our church been fastened upon this glorious vision for nearly a century? Its prophetic forecast has been with the children of God almost since the inception of time upon our planet. We certainly are not lacking in vision, but there must be something lacking, somewhere; else there would not have been any necessity for the Lord to utter the following arraignment against his people:

There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—

Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.

So far then, as the subject of Zion is concerned, now is the accepted time; now is the day of redemption.

How long, then, before we realize the vital importance of this fact? When shall we get a proper evaluation of the things of worth?

Truly, when the time shall come that we shall fully recognize that the sphere of Zion embraces the things which are present as well as things which are to come: That the little happenings of our daily lives are as much the agencies of God as the Apocalyptic ecstasies of the heavenly places; it will assuredly be the precursor of the brightest day that has ever shone for us upon this planet.

EDWARD INGHAM.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

YUCATAN

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—“To industrial American Yucatan,” says a bulletin of the National Geographic Society issued recently, “is chiefly interesting as the home of the henequen, or sisal fiber, used in the manufacture of binding twine, the price control of which is now being passed upon by our Federal courts. But by the archæologist this coral-ribbed peninsula has been appropriately named the “American Egypt,” and it was here that Central American civilization reached its apogee. We quote the following from the bulletin:

The origin of the Mayan builders has caused much debate. Arnold and Frost, who made extensive investigations on the peninsula and the near-by island of Cozumel were convinced that they came direct from Asia, by sea, probably not earlier than the sixth century, and the similarity which these students found in the buildings and ornamentations of Yucatan and Java and portions of India lend credence to this theory.

R. Spence Hardy, in his Eastern Monarchism, said that the ancient edifices of Chichen in Central America “bear a striking resemblance to the topes of India,” and a writer in the Edinburgh Review, 1867, remarked that “the great temple at Palenque so closely corresponds in its principle details with that of Boro Budor in the province of Kedu (Java) as to place beyond all reasonable debate the common purpose and the origin of both.”

With few exceptions the archais building of Yucatan stand on truncated pyramids, a peculiarity of construction wherever Buddhism anciently prevailed, and the Mayan arch is found in ancient Buddhist structures and nowhere else in the world. The brilliant wall colors are like those found in Buddhist edifices, and one characteristic design, called the “red hand” was observed by General Grant’s party when they visited the Maharajah of Jeypoor in 1879, and passed through the temples there.

On the friezes of the Stupa of Bharahat in India, found by Sir Alexander Cunnigham in 1873, are rows of carved hands precisely similar in shape to those on the ruins of Conzumel, and the “water lily” decoration at Palenque, Central America, is believed by some to be the Buddhist lotus.

Whatever may be the finally accepted theory of their origin, the student of Central American archæology will find at Uxmel, Kabah, Sayil, Labna, and in the Chichen-Itza, the Taj Mahal of Central America, marvelous ruins testifying to the great architectural ability of the Mayans.

Columbus in 1502 concluded that Yucatan was an island, and it was known to the early Spaniards as “Isla Rica.” In 1517 Francisco Hernandez de Cordova came to Yucatan from Cuba and Europeans for the first time saw stone houses in America.

During the first half of the sixteenth century various attempts were made by the Spaniards to conquer this territory, and the names of Solis, Pinzon, Valdivia, Cordova, Grijalva, Montejo and Davila, figure in the Yucatecan history, and occasionally in the Yucatecan diet of that period, the Mayan being partial to broiled Europeans. In 1535 not a Spaniard remained in Yucatan, but in 1549 Montejo the younger had succeeded in establishing Spanish rule over about one half of the peninsula, and the city of Merida was founded, built from stones on the ruined site of Tahoo.

The Merida of to-day is a Paris in miniature, having achieved enormous prosperity through the sale of henequen, “the green gold of Yucatan.” Merida is a city of windmills, about 6,000 being used to pump water from the limestone. The streets are excellently paved and very cleanly.

In 1824 Yucatan became a federal state of Mexico, but excessive taxation brought on an armed revolt in 1840, the federal forces were driven out, and the state declared its independence, being forced back into the federation by Santa Ana. Another revolt of the Indians took place in 1847 and they maintained their independence down to Diaz’s administration. In 1910 they once more revolted, after which they retired to the unknown territory of Quintana Roo.

Though nature has treated Yucatan in niggardly fashion in the matter of soil, the fortunes which the Yucatecans have reaped from sisal have more than compensated them. The henequen raisers are positively so rich that they do not know what to do with their money. When Senor Molina was governor he taxed every bale of henequen loaded at Progreso, the chief port, in order to raise money with which to pave Merida. Within three years $15,000,000 was raised in this manner and to-day from north to south and from east to west, side streets and main streets for the full three miles width of the city, the surface is as smooth as glass and as spotless as a Dutch kitchen.

Progreso has no harbor, the shallows stretching far seaward. It sprawls on a semicircle of pale sand fringed with weathered warehouses and a thin belt of palm trees. Yet out of this port in 1916 went $40,000,000 worth of sisal, a large amount of which came to the United States. It may be truly said that the interest of the American wheat grower is bound up in the crop success of Yucatan.

VALUE OF TIME SPENT IN SCHOOL

[The following is the text in full of one of the charts used in the Graceland booth at the church during the recent General Conference. It is from the United States Bureau of Education Exhibit, of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Much interest was manifested in the statements set forth and a number of requests have been made for its publication.—EDITORS.]

EVERY DAY SPENT IN SCHOOL PAYS THE CHILD NINE DOLLARS

Here is the Proof: Uneducated laborers earn on the average $500 per year for forty years, a total of $20,000.

Educated laborers earn on the average $1,000 per year for forty years, a total of $40,000.

This education required 12 years of schooling of 180 days each, a total of 2,160 days in school.

If 2,160 days at school add $20,000 to the income for life, then each day at school adds $9.02.

The child that stays out of school to earn less than $9 a day is losing money, not making money.

FINIS?

It is a sobered world. Engulfed in war, facing death and starvation, nation after nation has been swept by the terrible tide of destruction.

Neither hemisphere has escaped. Armies march in Europe, Asia and Africa. No seas are without their mines, their battleships and submarines. All skies are speckled with armored aircraft.

The few neutral nations across the Atlantic tremble in fear that their time will come next as the tramp of hostile armies echoes across their borders.

Our own country, serene and satisfied in its fancied isolation and independence, has trusted to these to save it from being whirled into the maelstrom of war. But this may not be.

If not, we shall see the whole world ablaze. Neutrality will be extinguished—Mexico and South America and all the Orient involved, the Monroe doctrine endangered and militarism supreme.

Is it surprising that some are inquiring if the end of all things is not approaching? The world may well be sobered by the thought.—Los Angeles Times, March 31, 1917.

AN ABORIGINES ASSOCIATION

The aborigines of the States of Mexico, Tlaxcala, Puebla and Morelos have organized an association under the name of the United Society of the Indigenous Races, and already have half a million members enrolled, according to the Mexico City Universal. Colonel Miguel de la Trinidad Regalado, himself an Indian, has been chosen president by a convention recently held in the capital city, at which were present two hundred and fifty delegates, representing the half million members.

This association has been in process of formation for the past five years and has grown steadily until it has attained its present encouraging proportions. The leading object of the organization is the acquirement by each member of a small tract of land, upon which he may labor for the support of his family. This means to him all that is best in life, giving him, in addition to a comfortable subsistence, an opportunity for education and for association with his fellows for the uplifting of the entire body of aborigines. The establishment of schools in even the smallest and most remote hamlet is one of the prime objects of the organization, and its efforts in this and all other directions are being ably seconded by the authorities. They have pledged their firm support to the Government that has made possible the advancement already noted and are enthusiastic in their allegiance to the Constitutionalist leaders.

A VERY CLEVER LAWYER.—A Londoner who was staying in Scotland for a little while recently had need of legal assistance. Titbits tells that he went up to a sensible looking man in the street and began: "Pardon me, sir; but are you a resident of this town?"

"Weel," was the cautious reply, "I've leaved here a matter o' fifty year."

"Ah! then, perhaps, you can help me," went on the visitor. "I'm looking for a criminal lawyer. Have you one in this town?"

The Scotsman dropped his voice to a confidential whisper as he answered:

"We hiv, but we hinna been able to prove it against him yet. He's ower sharp."—Current Opinion.

THE STAFF

Music at General Conference

The first meeting of the singers of the conference occurred Thursday evening, April 5, at which rehearsal ninety-seven appeared, which was a fine showing. The first anthem was rendered Friday evening, followed by a fine service of a similar nature at many succeeding meetings.

The first rehearsal of the oratorio, "The Messiah," took place Sunday afternoon, and so satisfactory was it, that all fears of its ultimate success vanished from the mind of our chorister, and his enthusiasm from then on was contagious. He had chosen Sister Nelle Atkinson Kelley to sing the soprano, Sister Frances White Norris, the contralto solos, Brother Paul N. Craig for the bass solos, and Brother R. C. Smith for the tenor solos. The latter is the eldest of the three sons of the late president of the church, who were left motherless at the death, a year ago last fall, of our Sister Ada. The lad is but eighteen, but is the fortunate possessor of a full, rich tenor voice, of excellent timbre and resonance, which he uses with wonderful ease and vitality. Under the guidance of Brother Paul Craig, while in attendance at Graceland this year, the young man visioned to some extent the—shall we call it "stewardship"?—of such a gift, and will without doubt, in harmony with the spirit and the essence of our beautiful faith, consecrate his musical talents to the service of Him whose gifts they are, in a way both humble and appreciative. The splendid response our young people are making to the demands by the church upon their gifts and attainments of whatever nature they may be, speaks well for the consecration of our coming defenders of the truth, and offers us great encouragement as to the achievements of the future.

Thursday and Friday evenings, to audiences which filled to overflowing the large auditorium of the church, the conference choir sang the wonderful music of Handel's masterpiece, the appreciation of the listeners being attested by their perfect attention and interest to the close of the unavoidably long program. Sister Kelley interpreted the solos intrusted to her care with delicacy and clearness, her pure tones ringing out with assurance in the triumphant words of "I know that my Redeemer liveth!" Sister Norris, with beautiful sympathy declared "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd," as well "He was despised, and rejected of men." Brother Craig, with vigor and skill, warned of the coming of Him who shall be as a refiner's fire, and asked, in rich, deep tones, "Who shall abide the day of his coming?" while Brother R. C.'s voice reached the climax of feeling in his plaint, "Thy rebuke hath broken his heart; he looked to see if there was anyone to comfort him, but there was no man!"

The choruses chanting in joy of the "Glory of the Lord," or in full tide of happiness over "Unto us a child is born," or the prophetic announcement "Behold, the Lamb of God, who hath taken away the sins of the world," through the triumph of "Lift up your heads, O, ye gates," to the grand climax of multitudes acclaiming, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain," and in "Hallelujahs" proclaiming him "Lord of lords, and King over all," felt, through the inspirational leading of their director, Brother Hoxie, and their own consecrated preparation through prayer and devotion, for their part of the message, a thrill something akin to what must be in store for those who partake in the songs of everlasting praise around the throne of God—those, whose garments are washed clean, and who have gained the victory over wrong and darkness!

These are experiences which bring us close, close to the giver of music who has counseled us to study that we may sing with joy and understanding, and who is asking for service at our hands.

The Conference Choir Prayer Meetings

Three mornings at seven o'clock found a number of the singers assembled for prayer and testimony in one of the primary rooms. These meetings proved to be a source of comfort and uplift of soul to those who attended, and they expressed themselves as getting thereby a clearer vision of the service of music in the church through what they heard and felt. Brother Hoxie led, being assisted at times by Brother Mills, Brother Bullard or others, and the singers assembled gained a more definite idea, through these meetings, of the aims and the hopes of the leaders of the choir movement in the church. Experiences of many kinds were related, and served to suggest ways and means, remedies and preventions, plans and defenses, along the "rough and thorny" path of the hard-laboring chorister—either of local or district endeavor! Sisters Plato and Evans, of Michigan, especially, proved sources of much profitable information and suggestions, for they are among our most successful district choir workers.

One young man declared that he had found a new path, since conference opened, for never before had he experienced the fact that one could feel a baptism of the Spirit while singing. He said it meant a new service for him, and he would not have missed being present for a great deal.

Another spoke of the encouragement which had come his way from some of the leaders, and that he had gone on in the pursuit of music in spite of difficulties, and was determined that his services should some day be of value to the church in this direction.

A young woman told of the direct influence for good which she had felt come into her life through the devotion of a chorister under whom she had studied, and felt that she owed very much to that one. Another told of how music had lifted her from despair and gloom, and had opened for her doors of opportunity as well as rejoicing, and that she could not praise God enough for the gift and appreciation of music which had enriched her life.

The Choir Reception

As has been customary for a number of years, the local choir entertained the visiting singers. This time it was on Tuesday evening, following the program of the Woman's Auxiliary at which service the choir had rendered two magnificent numbers. The place was the high school building, in the fine assembly room in which a short program was given, the quality of the offering not being diminished by its brevity. Brother Harold Burgess presided over proceedings, with inimitable humor and the happy result of making everyone present feel at peace with himself and all his neighbors.

Then the scene of activities shifted to the gymnasium, where gay decorations added to the festivity. Stunts of various kinds, calculated to make everyone well acquainted with everyone else, with iced punch and wafers on the side, a medley of songs as a diversion, and a wind-up of chorus singing under the direction of our church chorister, who, as usual, skillfully guided the selections into quieter and more subdued channels, finishing with the usual tender "God be with you till we meet again," and prayer for protection and watchcare by Apostle Russell, combined to make the bright lights of another one of those pictures which Memory used as mural decoration in her famous halls! As the laughing, or singing, or challenging voices vanished in varying directions in the darkness of the night, we could but thank God for the "tie that binds our hearts in Christian love!"

The Missionary Chorus

We should sadly miss something very delightful and very much appreciated by the entire conference congregation, were anything to deprive us of the privilege of hearing at various times, the spirited singing of our young missionaries. Each spring, the joy of their reuniting seems to permeate their music with a subtle quality of tenderness, and unity of purpose, and as we listen to their harmonies, we are touched with the beauty of their life's services, their humility, recognition of high ideals, and their pure heart-consecration to God and his church. Bless them—collectively and individually, these music loving minutemen of our organization

Our Orchestra

The history of our music at conference would hardly be complete without a mention of our new feature—the national orchestra. Under general supervision of Brother Hoxie, but chiefly due to the active and efficient labors of his lieutenant, Brother Arthur Mills, the infant was brought out for inspection and hearing at the Coliseum, one evening, in connection with Brother R. C. Evans's series of sermons there. While it had not grown much in the year that has passed since we first saw it and heard its efforts, we feel that it is nourishing upon the proper kind of food, that which will build substantially and firmly. Brother Mills is no dreamer that is content with dreaming; he sees a future for this organization of our orchestral forces, and he is forming and fostering many quiet plans looking towards the fulfillment of what he sees. We have every reason to feel encouraged. The difficulties are many but there are those who are qualifying and soon these difficulties will melt away before the fire of enthusiasm and real preparation to "praise God with the instruments of strings and of reed and of brass!" Speed the day!

The Farewell

After the pleasing strains of the oratorio, Friday evening, and the eloquent words of praise and benediction from the lips of Brother Rushton, Brother Hoxie announced a general invitation to the choir to go with him to the "Fern," the well-known little restaurant down town, conducted by Brother Foreman. Seventy responded to the call, and the capacity of the place was taxed to accommodate the happy throng. It wasn't a question of "What will you have?" it was "Take what is offered, and be thankful!" The tables were put together in long banquet fashion, seats were secured for the ladies, and the gentlemen transformed themselves into waiters and entertainers! Such lusty songs as issued from lusty throats—glad for very gladness's sake.

Then the tables were turned, not again literally, but this time figuratively, and the ladies were entertainers, while the gentlemen disposed of various sweets. Rounds, glees, melodies old and new, patriotic songs, and original thrusts set to music, filled the hour with just pure fun and nonsense, and the participants with a better understanding of the hospitality and generosity of the church chorister, who "paid the piper" when the fun was over! The enthusiastic Graceland boys who happened to be present, voiced the sentiments of all, when they gave "three and a tiger" for "Hoxie—he's all right!"

One hundred and twenty-five was the number singing at the first rendition of the oratorio, we understand, while the second night there were but one hundred and two, which we consider a very fine showing considering the fact that conference had adjourned in the morning. Our chorister tells us all to get busy and "dig" on the "Elijah," which he hopes to conduct at the conference of 1918, in Independence. Everybody take notice, and "All in favor, hurry up!"

Special Numbers

The "special" music heard at the conference and conventions this spring was of a wide and varied nature. There were choruses by the college glee club, by the high school girls glee club, by the Graceland male quartet, and instrumental music of an orchestral nature under Brother Anthony's direction as well as Brother Mills's. Piano numbers were given by Graceland students, some being solos, some duets, and one for eight hands.

Vocal solos were furnished at many of the preaching services, Sister Robinson, of Kansas City, Sister Kelly, of Omaha, Sister McCormack, of Denver, Sr. Craig, of Lamoni, Sister Brown, of Chariton, Brother Elliott, of Saint Louis, Brother Craig, Brother Smith, Brother Fry and many others appearing at different times. A program was given by the Lamoni orchestra and another by the Graceland school of music. It is a delight to see the willingness and the efficiency which these young people manifest in this part of the worship, and we would that many, many more of God's people would see the wisdom and the desirability of obeying this good command in regard to cultivating the gifts of music and of song. Surely we must be a gladsome people and we must have wherewith to praise the Father, in the days of rejoicing which are opening before us!

PHILADELPHIA, 1917

In keeping with what has come to be a "custom," the choir of the Philadelphia Branch, under the leadership of Brother Albert N. Hoxie, held its annual festivity on Tuesday evening, April 2.

This performance is no doubt the greatest achievement of our local choir movement to date. Not only is "The Elijah" the most difficult work thus far undertaken, but the success was achieved under great difficulty and in a comparatively short period of time.

The rendition was sublime. These functions always tax the seating capacity of the church; and while this itself is a tribute to the choir work, we have further evidences of appreciation in such expressions as "Don't you ever allow me to miss anything like this." One person, of the number who stood on the sidewalk and listened, said: "It made the roots of my hair tingle." This may help you to form an idea of how really wonderfully this work was accomplished.

We had in attendance some of the "critics" of Philadelphia. These expressed surprise at hearing such a performance in a church choir. Three factors enter into these successes: First, very capable leadership. Second, devotion to the service of song on the part of the chorister and members of the chorus. Third, the inspiration which attends the efforts of those who give themselves over to such worthy undertakings.

We are exceedingly fortunate in having such a capable accompanist as Sister Clara Hoxie, whose help is no small factor in the success of these difficult oratorios.

We solicited the master's aid in this work, and we are sure that the divine presence was felt in the soul of both singer and hearer.

THE ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

in the month of March will long be remembered by our members and friends. Forty-five members, under the leadership of Brother Hoxie, rendered a most inspirational program. This is a new feature here, and prospects are that it will grow to such proportions that the whole community will feel a deep interest in its development. It is now talked of as the "Community" orchestra, and it is patronized very largely by the friends in the community.

We look forward with happy anticipations to our musical functions. The social gatherings of the choir members have much to do with developing a fraternal feeling among the members. We cannot measure the good that our choir work does for the Saints and friends of the church.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Woman's Auxiliary Convention

We feel sure the readers of this department of the HERALD are eagerly awaiting news from the general convention of our auxiliary held in connection with the recent conference. We feel equally sure they will be glad to hear that the sessions held were of a gratifying high order, and that their influence cannot but be felt most widely for good and uplift. A brief history of our activities may be in order, prior to the official report which our secretary will soon be sending to us.

Printed programs of all the scheduled meetings, together with reports from officers, and the proposed changes in constitution and by-laws, were placed on the stand at the beginning of the conference, and frequent attention was called to their existence, and all interested were urged to obtain one, and to attend the various meetings outlined. The officers of the conference had kindly allowed us the use of the lower auditorium of the church each morning, from 10.30 to noon—a decided advantage over two years ago, when we were compelled to go to a building down town to hold our sessions.

On Saturday forenoon was held the opening meeting, under the auspices of the superintendent of the Young Woman's department, Sister J. A. Gardner, of Independence, "The need of education for girls, as a preparation for life's work," was the subject of an earnest appeal from Sister William Madison, of Independence. She feels that a well-rounded education for girls consists in an intelligent conception of her duties to God, to her body, and to her mind. She puts them in that order. Spirituality first, physical perfection second, and lastly mentally, through which woman should be well equipped to understand clearly her duties in every direction.

"Need of personal culture for girls," was dwelt upon by Sister Ruby Short of Independence, instructor in art in Kansas City manual training school. Sister Short has had years of experience with girls, and herself one, in true sympathy and understanding of their nature, she pointed out in well-illustrated paragraphs, some of the underlying principles of real culture for girls. She feels that they have their foundation in that word, so descriptive of the Christian doctrine—unselfishness, and she thinks that our girls have a definite mission to the world, expressed in the words of a teacher in the Independence school, who said, "We have grown to look for better things from Latter Day Saint children than from others; we expect them to show a higher grade, both of mentality and morality than other children."

Sister Earlita Smith Inslee, of Seattle, daughter of Brother and Sister Heman C. Smith, talked of "The Oriole girls in civic work," and pointed out many ways in which such organizations can be utilized for community uplift. She made a strong plea for mothers—and this means those with the real mother instinct, whether it has had a natural outlet or not—who are living in large cities, to open their homes to our church girls, where they may feel at liberty to bring their friends, to spend an evening in music, games, or reading, or just in expression of the God-given privilege of youth—a "good time." Only women or girls who have lived within the limiting space of a tiny city bedroom, with no place in which to receive their friends, or to go of an evening, can realize how such a home can be appreciated, and what a tremendous factor it may be in the life of such girls, who, good as they may desire to be, too often succumb, sooner or later, to the appeal of the world, and go the easy and downward way.

Sister John Lentell, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, told of the many ways in which "Home training for the Oriole girls" has proven of great benefit, and help in the homes. Sister Lentell has perhaps as wide an experience as any worker among the young in this regard, as she has organized, stimulated and directed many clubs of young girls. She does not restrict her influence, either, to those of our own church, for she believes that these Oriole circles appeal to others, as well, and are a distinct means of interesting them in our church and doctrines. One of her circles is composed entirely of Catholic girls, and is one of her most enthusiastic groups.

Monday forenoon, Professor George N. Briggs, President of Graceland College, made an address on "The community social and recreational center, and its relation to the home" which abounded in splendid facts and suggestions. A survey of Lamoni last year, disclosed many conditions which are typical of those prevailing everywhere; imagine a home where six children live, in which there is not one game, not one book, or magazine, no provision for wholesome amusement or the direction of a child's activity of any sort! Other homes had a few books, and perhaps a game of "jacks"! And these people are the very ones who most strongly opposed the idea of establishing a social center, where games and reading, and opportunities for good, innocent recreation could be at hand! The children from such homes are not found in them very much of the time, and the neighbors could vote differently from the parents on the advantages to be gained from a community center for recreation.

Bishop McGuire followed Professor Briggs, on the subject, "What women can do in the church," and gave a very clear idea of his conception of the highest duty and privilege of our sex. He feels that a woman's first duty is to her home and its inmates; her second to her neighborhood and church insofar as it does not interfere with an efficient discharge of the first.

Bishop McGuire will have an article soon for our columns giving us his idea concerning the raising of money by our women.

Owing to the bereavement in the family of our president, referred to elsewhere, the reception given by the Lamoni auxiliary to visiting members was postponed from Saturday evening to that of Monday. Sister Lydia Thomas Wight was in charge of this, at which every effort was made to make the women mingle, and get acquainted with each other and with the officers of the organization as well as the superintendents of different departments.

(Short talks, questions asked and answered, a few musical and literary numbers, and general good will made the evening pleasant, and one to be remembered, although the attraction of a very popular speaker in the upper auditorium prevented as large an attendance of the women at this reception as had been anticipated and desired.

Tuesday morning was held the first business meeting, details of which will doubtless appear in these columns shortly. That evening, in the upper auditorium of the church, occurred our annual "open program." This one was considered unusually attractive. Sister Frederick M. Smith presided, with grace and dignity, and the great conference choir furnished two special numbers for the occasion. Sister Lula M. Sandy, of Kansas City, spoke of "History of woman's progress," followed by "The cause demands the woman," by Apostle J. W. Rushton, of Los Angeles. Both these addresses were timely and breathed a recognition of the valuable place women should take in helping to solve the problems of to-day. Brother Rushton declared that Zion could not be redeemed without the cooperation and consecration of our women. Sister Blanche Allen Needham, of Toronto, Canada, sang a much appreciated solo, with spirit and beauty, her full, rich voice showing to good advantage in the song selected.

Business on Wednesday engrossed the attention of the auxiliary workers but, owing to the feeling that conference would adjourn sooner than customary some of the programs planned were shoved forward. Thus the one scheduled for Thursday, or at least a portion of it, was run in between the business of the day, Miss Jarvis, Lamoni kindergarten teacher, giving an illustrated address on "The value of play to the child." She had a group of little folks who demonstrated some of the play-work which a mother can carry out with her little ones at home, and the meaning or development sought for in the games.

Thursday forenoon Brother Charles Irwin, superintendent of the Lamoni public schools, gave a very valuable address on "The story of life," mention of which, as well as the one on "psychology of the adolescent age" by Professor Floyd McDowell, of Graceland, which followed, was made last week in these columns. Both of these brethren feel that it is very important for the parents to understand the problems which confront them in the training of children, that they may deal with these responsibilities in an intelligent and successful way, to the saving of our children to God and his church.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Our New Officers

For president we have now, Sister Lula M. Sandy, of Kansas City, Missouri. Sister Sandy was formerly superintendent of our child welfare department, and also president of the Kansas City Stake auxiliary organization, and the efficient way in which she has managed the work in both these fields of activity gives fair promise of what she may do for us, as our chief officer this year.

We have now, two vice presidents. The first is Sr. Eunice Winn Smith, wife of our Independence Stake president, and, for several years, editor of one of our Sunday school Quarterlies. Our second vice president is Sister William Madison, of Independence, a woman well educated and experienced in many lines of work, peculiarly the mission of women.

Sister John A. Gardner, who practically performed the work of the secretary last year, because of handicaps the elected secretary could not remove, was made our auxiliary secretary. She is peculiarly well qualified for the position, both by natural equipment, and by experience, and the locals will have the benefit of her consecrated efforts in this line.

Our new treasurer is Sister Emma Beebe Sheehy, wife of Apostle F. M. Sheehy. Having had a wide education in a commercial way in the past, and having a well-defined and deep-seated interest in the advancement of women in our church, she is a decided addition to the organization, both in a business way, and as a member of the executive board.

Sister B. C. Smith, who reported this year such progress in the work of compiling our history, was reelected historian, and she would be greatly helped in her work were the locals to respond a bit more enthusiastically in her requests for items of historical interest.

The following supervisors of bureaus as our new constitution puts it, were appointed: Educational, Christiana Sal-yards; relief and service, Helen Silsbee Smith; home and child welfare, Lydia Thomas Wight; and young woman's, Alice Mae Burgess. Audentia Anderson was reappointed editor in chief.

In Sympathy

The opening days of conference were saddened beyond measure by the bereavement which came to the family of our auxiliary president, Sister Frederick M. Smith, when the loved elder son of her sister, Sister Fred H. Johnson, of Chicago, died from an injury to the spine received in a gymnasium in that city on Thursday, April 5. The body of the young man, Lyman, only eighteen years of age, was brought to Lamoni for burial the services being held at the home of his aunt, Sister Fred Blair, Sunday afternoon, in charge of Apostle Griffiths, the brief sermon being by Brother David E. Dowker of Chicago, who deeply loved the lad, and spoke in warm praise of his cleanliness of life and thought.

Rather frail in his early childhood, Brother Lyman had been the center of affectionate love and care from his entire family, his parents sparing nothing for his good. As he approached manhood, strength of body came to him in fuller measure, and his fine mind took on the rich equipment of education and culture desired by those who loved him best. The innate nobility and refinement of the lad, kept him from many foolish paths too often found by heedless or ignorant feet, and his friends rejoiced in the promises he embodied of a life rich in good influences and consecrated to God and humanity. But it is not always for us to see the purposes of God, nor the ways in which he feels that he may best be served; and thus it is, that to-day, heartstrings are bleeding with the cruelty of separation from the object around which had twined the tendrils of affection and hopes!

He who takes away can comfort, and we pray the "peace that passeth understanding" may enter into the hearts of Brother and Sister Johnson, and their remaining son, as well as those of the others who held this youth dear, and that in full measure they may feel the presence of God in this hour of grief, recognize his love and care, and abide in his promises to confidence and trust.

Organize Your Boys

With the echoes of the good-bys at the close of conference still ringing in our ears, comes the insistent note of the last impression made upon our minds—that of plans for a general organization for our boys. The meeting at which this topic was discussed, was not well advertised, nor very well attended, and the utmost that seemed possible to the interested ones, was the appointment of a new committee to formulate plans to present next year. This was a distinct disappointment to many parents who had hoped to see things gotten into workable shape this spring; but it often happens that that which grows most slowly, is most permanent, and we are hopeful that that which shall be presented next year, will prove to be exactly what we want.

The committee appointed consists of Ralph W. Farrell of Boston, David T. Williams of Des Moines, and "ye editor." By informal consultation this committee decided upon a definite procedure for the year, something as follows: They shall each investigate the various boys' organizations with which they can come in touch, with the object of selecting from such rules as govern them, those which may be considered practicable and desirable for our own boys—a basis upon which to form a constitution for a church organization.

Connected with this investigation and study, the committee desires to stimulate the organization, NOW, of as many boys' clubs as we have groups of boys which need them, and is not the number legion? Every branch of the church where there are boys, should have them banded together, for the great benefit of personal uplift to the boy, and of concerted allegiance and cooperation with church interests. Boys need each other; and we need them! The "gang spirit" which controls at a certain age, should be utilized; their activities in their leisure hours should be directed into channels both ennobling to themselves and useful to others. Boys are not naturally outlaws; on the contrary, most boys have a finer sense of loyalty and respect for authority than they are given credit for. The difficulty many parents have found is in recognizing and diverting this allegiance to "gang" law and rule into paths of safety to morals and spirituality.

Now, we desire to make special and personal appeal, through this column, to every parent, male or female, to every teacher and trainer of boys, to every missionary or pastor, upon whom rests the burden of saving souls to Christ, to rally to the support of this movement to cement the interests of our boys to those of our homes, our church, and our God. It is worth more to save one of our own, than to proselyte a stranger to the kingdom, for the reason that it is nearer to our hearts, and is one of the responsibilities we are bearing before him who said: "I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth." Good old King Benjamin told his people, "Ye will not suffer your children to go hungry or naked; neither will ye suffer that they transgress the laws of God, and fight and quarrel one with another, and serve the Devil, who is the master of sin. . . . But ye will teach them to walk in the ways of truth and soberness; ye will teach them to love one another, and to serve one another." That is the spirit of this organization for boys—love for truth and sobriety, love for each other, and service to all. Is it not worthy of our very best efforts, now? Then, let us stimulate these boys banding together, their work and pleasure to a large extent being under the loving and intelligent guidance of a consecrated man of God, who finds he can serve his church and his Maker well, by thus devoting his time and attention to the welfare of the youth of his locality. Organize under any good rules which are available and suitable to the circumstances, with a view of merging into the general organization when it shall be perfected.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

In Lamoni Stake

Sister Anderson: I was present with the Saints at Greenville, March 18, and succeeded in organizing a local with Sister T. J. Bell, president, Sister Ethel Sprague, vice president; Sister Birdie Chandler, secretary; and Sister Harbert Bell, treasurer. While we were attending to the election of officers the men had gathered a little collection that the women might start with something in their treasury. They expect to hold their first meeting at the home of the president the first Thursday afternoon after the close of the General Conference.

Sincerely,

LETTER DEPARTMENT

British Isles Mission

I am afraid, Mr. Editor, that you will think that I have forsaken the columns of the Saints' messenger (The SAINTS' HERALD), but if so, let me assure you that it is not with design, for I feel that you always appreciate news from a far-away mission such as ours, especially in these perilous times of war and famine.

It is not my purpose to write war news, for I know that you have and are supplied with the details of the same through the daily press, possibly more so than we are here. Therefore, it would be useless for me to repeat the same, but of the condition of the work I know that you will be interested to learn of the circumstances under which we labor during this terrible struggle.

While our country is under this dark cloud, and our brethren both old and young are being taken from us, we are doing our best to keep up the spirits of the Saints who are called to sacrifice their loved ones in the interest of their country and its righteous cause.

Our branches, Sunday schools, and Religio societies have lost some of the brethren upon whom we had looked with pride, and upon whom the success of these organizations depended in the future. These losses are most keenly felt by us, and our work has suffered much in consequence thereof. It is, therefore, taking all our energy to keep the work moving, and since the advent of this year the changes have been most rapid, while the clouds seem to gather more thickly than ever.

Financially we are feeling the stress more keenly than ever before, while our food is taxed almost beyond our reach, and our poor people suffer almost beyond endurance, while there is a famine of potatoes and sugar. Yet with it all our people are trying their best to be as cheerful as possible, and in some instances are manifesting great faith in the work, and seeking to stand in holy places, fully realizing by the signs of the times that the gathering is nigh at hand, when the command may be given to the Saints, and the great witness (The gospel) shall be proclaimed to all nations. During the past year we had the pleasure of the association of President U. W. Greene, who spent five months in England and Wales. The labors of the brother were very much appreciated by the Saints throughout the mission. We were sorry when the time came to say good-by but the conditions under which he labored were perplexing and in some instances annoying, he having to register his movements in every town and city throughout his travels; however he got along fairly well, all things and conditions considered. But missionary labor is extremely difficult and trying, even to our native brethren, while Brother Greene being regarded as an alien; of course in his case it was even more so.

We did our best to make our brother as comfortable as possible, but you will no doubt quite understand that comfort of mind and body are entirely out of the question during these perilous times of war, when everything is in a state of confusion and tumult.

In fact the perilous times spoken of by the Apostle Paul are upon us. "Men are lovers of their own selves" first, last and ever. "All these things are the beginning of sorrows," so spake the Master. "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold," lose faith. It is only through these experiences that we can prove our fidelity to our cause. The time has fully come to prove ourselves, "in affliction and in death" and the trial of our faith is being thoroughly put to the test. It is better to live faithfully in life, though it is a great thing to prove faithful in death.

Well, I can only say that we are doing our best to keep our work moving; many of our noble young men are now no more. They fell in a noble cause, and they will no doubt receive their reward, and still more are wanted to take their place while we have branches and schools from which all our men have been taken, and there are none but the old brethren and the sisters to carry on the work, while our country is still calling for more men, and some of the old brethren will ere long have to buckle on the armor and engage in the work of national service.

It is the hardest task that I have had for a long time to write these lines, I hope that they may reach you in safety. Be assured that we will do the best that we can for our cause at all times, while we may have our liberty. We take it for granted that we have your prayers and sympathy always?

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

Independence Stake

[During the conference sessions we were compelled to hold out our letters from Independence as well as elsewhere. The following is our summary of Sister Abbie Horton's letters during that period.—EDITORS.]

At the sacrament service of April 1, President Frederick M. Smith had charge, and wonderful testimonies were borne of the goodness of God and direction of the Spirit. It was at the afternoon service that "A song of entreaty" was given by the Spirit through Brother Joseph Luff. In the evening, Elder U. W. Greene spoke on the signs of the times, presenting many statistics concerning the terrible world war.

Many Independence people attended the General Conference.

The Religio has appropriated fifty dollars toward the purchase of a piano.

A heavy fall of snow was had for Easter Sunday, but it soon passed away. The attendance at Sunday school was over 600, with 186 at Religio, while there was a house full in the morning, afternoon and evening services.

The Battery C boys of Independence have not as yet been called to service, but four high school students have enlisted in the Navy.

RECEIVED THIS WEEK

The usual interest has been kept up in church services during the past week in the several branches, Brethren Metcalf, Elder Wheaton of the Church of Christ, Francis Smith, Hale W. Smith, W. D. Bullard, Elder Cochran, W. A. Smith and E. T. Atwell attending to the preaching services, also W. L. Christie and T. W. Williams holding forth at the Stone Church April 15 and 17, and at the church on the Temple Lot on April 16. An excellent spirit of fellowship was manifest among the brethren of the two churches, on the occasions mentioned, Monday and Tuesday evenings. Our Sunday school was fairly well attended by the local membership and brethren and sisters from abroad, there being eight hundred and sixty-nine present.

During the time of the General Conference the Saints of the Religio and home department classes continued as usual in their work, and the never-failing Aid Society sisters were busy toiling in the interest of the Master's service.

The DAILY HERALD with its bright, newsy columns afforded considerable satisfaction with its fund of information and spicy contributions.

So we are moving along; and the latest movement set on foot by the gardeners, and especially the brethren interested in cooperation, is occupying the minds of the Saints here, and seems to portend excellent results both in regard to temporal and spiritual interests.

Also church and home improvements are going on, and the Saints rejoiced on last Sunday to witness added indications of spiritual progress in our midst. Brethren A. McKim and E. Moore were, at the 8 o'clock meeting, ordained under the hands of Elders W. W. Smith and I. A. Smith, as priests; and in the afternoon we again received communication through the spirit of prophecy, with an entreaty to be faithful.

Brother Walter's efforts with the young people are being upheld by the faith and prayers of the older ones, and the Saints are looking forward with thankfulness to God to a glorious consummation, because of this forward step taken in the interest of the young people—the lambs of his flock.

The Saints were edified and strengthened by the sermons on "Preparedness for the conflict of life," by Brother Christie, and on "Consecration of life and interests," by Brother T. W. Williams. Many of our musical folks repaired to Hotel Baltimore on Tuesday, April 17, to help along the Red Cross movement, and to hear again the beautiful piano renditions of Sister Marie Riggs.

There was a large audience out the same evening to hear Brother Williams on the subject of "Love to God and to our fellow men." Many of the brethren and sisters from across the way were present, and all were built up and rejoiced in the spirit of love and Christian fellowship.

The Evans-McKenzie Controversy

[A letter from Brother H. A. Martin of Herschel, Saskatchewan, contains the following. We have a copy of the Evans booklet, which is being widely circulated to meet McKenzie's attacks on our faith.—EDITORS.]

We are pleased to note the following in Jack Canuck under date of March 31, 1917:

"Isn't the Reverend J. A. McKenzie, of Pope Avenue Presbyterian Church, a pretty sick man since he started that unfortunate controversy between himself and Bishop R. C. Evans?

"If there is a spark of manliness or Christianity in the above named Presbyterian minister, won't he apologize to the Bishop?

"How long will it be before the Reverend J. A. McKenzie launches another attack on a God-fearing Christian of the type of Bishop Evans? . . .

"Also commencing in the above named issue is a report of the controversy, under heading of "Reverend J. A. McKenzie starts something he can't finish."

Cleveland, Ohio, Branch

Cleveland is a little city on the shore of Lake Erie that is wondering whether it comes fourth or fifth of the big cities of the United States. Having passed Cincinnati in 1910, it just got used to name of Sixth City in time to find it had also passed that mark! The local Saints have not grown in any like proportions in that time, but have succeeded in firmly establishing themselves in a good part of the city, and have bought and improved property from which good work may be carried on. At the last business meeting a good showing of increase by baptisms was reported and future prospects are good. The vocal and instrumental features of service will be strengthened by the whole-souled cooperation of our new Brother and Sister Quale, the Campbell families and others.

The branch celebrated the Easter time sacrament by using a new individual communion cup service which seemed to be received with unanimous approval by all participating. We have enjoyed visits and sermons by Apostles Griffiths and U. W. Greene since the first of the year; balance of the time has been divided between the local ministry and an occasional visit from Bishop J. A. Becker.

We must also record the visit of "the beautiful angel of death" to our suffering sister Lizzie Delorme who passed away with the closing of the month of March, leaving a record for gentle patience and saintly character among many neighbors and friends, some of whom are inquiring concerning the latter-day hope.

Religio society is holding successful meetings, varying the program with special "national" evenings—Manx, Scotch, Welsh, etc., but, of course, the best will be that provided by the citizens of "Joseph's land" at a later date.

NEW CAMBRIA, MISSOURI, March 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am happy to tell you that I am still rejoicing in this blessed work, for I know it is of our God. I have a hand glass that I can read and write through, and I am getting a HERALD from a dear unknown sister in Decatur, Michigan. Her name is Mary Hooper. The HERALD is all this world to me. Pray for me and my husband, that the light may shine so bright before him that he will see it; and for me, pray that I may not fall but cling fast to that solid rock that will not break.

March 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I wrote you a few lines, and I feel like mentioning, for the benefit of others, some of the benefits received from the SAINTS' HERALD. It has been a source of comfort and pleasure to me to read the many solid and interesting items it contains, and more especially the original articles and the many and varied experiences of those who contribute to its pages which have been food for my soul, and many times I have had cause to rejoice when reading of the experiences of others and have felt like saying, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

The sentiments expressed by others have urged me on to greater diligence in the Master's cause, and I long to be able to take my place in the ranks of the workers for God and the cause of mankind. I appreciate also, the items from the pen of Brother Hoxie and others who have written in regard to the soul inspiring theme of music, and feel that in this line in the church there are great benefits to be received.

I deeply appreciate also the home and child welfare department, and feel if the suggestions and wishes contained in these many articles were taken to heart and put into general practice, a betterment of conditions would surely result to all if we could but realize our responsibilities along these lines. How much good could be accomplished! Have been a number of years in the church and at the present time the work of God is dearer to me than ever, and the more I look on its beauty and grandeur, the more I feel its vastness and my insignificance.

That I may be faithful so as to have a part in Zion's final redemption, is the prayer of your brother in the gospel,

ALBERT H. FORD.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, March 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: This is the first time I have written to the HERALD. Many years I have been in France and other countries where I never saw a church paper or met a Saint. It was like a feast to me to hear Brother U. W. Greene speak while he was in London, and a strong feeling of homesickness, a longing to be back in Pittsburgh, and possibly a visit to conference. I wish to be kindly remembered to all God's people in Pittsburgh, and to ask their prayers that I may remain truly humble and faithful to the end, and that God will open up the way for me to get to Independence with my three children.

God has been very merciful to me and given me a personal testimony of the truth of this work—a testimony stronger than I had ever hoped for in this life. I cannot express the joy I find in the Spirit; it truly is a comforter and will do all that is promised in the word, if we do nothing to hinder its working.

The Saints in London have two small branches. It seems strange that London should have so few Saints. The work here is now alive and in a few years there will be a church to be proud of. I have learned to love the people here and admire the true Christlike spirit which so many possess. One hears the wisdom of God from the lips of the ministers, and you feel at each cottage meeting, surely it is good to be here! They are humble and meek of heart, and it is by their very willing sacrifice that the work here is carried on. I have a strong feeling that a man or woman can save more souls in London than anywhere else. The help of an evangelist would start us in open-air meetings. Bishop May will surely have a blessing for his efforts here. I have a great longing to hear Brother Rees Jenkins who is now in the Holy Land, back in London. We all enjoyed his words when he was with us. God is working with and for his people in London, and we are looking forward to an opening out of the work here in all directions. We need a Sunday school for our children, and classes where we can study the church books and help each other to a better understanding of them. Pray for us and help us if you can.

These few lines have come to my mind and may be a good ending to this letter. If we do not understand our fellow creatures, we shall never love them; and it is equally true if we do not love them we shall never understand them. Want of charity, want of sympathy, want of good feeling, fellow feeling, what does it—what can it breed but endless mistakes and ignorances both of men's characters and men's circumstances.

"When thou didst call me to resign all that made life,
It ne'er was mine: I gave up only what was Thine."

Thy will be done.

Your sister in Christ,

Editors Herald: Our son, Leonard Joseph Lea, who is taking advantage of an opportunity to attend Graceland, writes in glowing terms of the many advantages to be had and of the good work of its faithful faculty, and that none will be disappointed if they will diligently apply themselves. Besides, there are the best and most spiritual speakers on earth to be heard frequently. He also writes that Brother Dwyer may extend his priceless lectures to other parts of our land.

Scientists and men of research are making every effort to unlock the mysteries of earth and ether's space and present it to us in an open book, and every truth they discover is a buoyant testimony to the first, last cause. Within the Mind Maze, by E. L. Larkin should be accessible to every thinking member of the church, and especially the eldership. Brother Elbert published an editorial in the HERALD a few years ago that was very gratifying; we would like to see it in print again, or better still if Brother Burgess would kindly favor us with a review of the same.

We have before us The Historical Bible, by Professor C. F. Kent of Yale. That portion of the book dealing with Egyptian and Babylonian discoveries is profitable to read, but the historic part with the author's deductions is valueless, for the reason that the errors of the King James Version are used as a basis from which the author arrives at faulty conclusions. As evidence of the composite character of Genesis, he says on page 22, "In the first passage the Deity is presented as a God of spirit, majestic, omnipotent, issuing his decree from afar; in the second and third chapters he is presented as living and talking with the first man and woman, and as walking in the cool of the day to avoid the hot midday sun."

Without giving Tom Paine credit, he uses the same argument from Genesis 36:31, but far surpasses The age of Reason in proof to point out the heathen or Babylonian origin of Genesis. Surely our Bible receives the worst wounds "in the house of its friends" (?).

The local Methodist Episcopal pastor called on us recently and among many other things denied that the sacrament was for the remission of sins. We wished to know what Jesus meant when he said in Matthew 26:28: "For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Also Hebrews 5:1-4 and Revelation 1:5.

HONOLULU, HAWAII, March 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have a few faithful Saints in these islands, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith and good works. The Hawaiians are a fine class of people when they are converted to this latter-day work, being living examples of the glory and transforming power of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

We have a splendid leader in Brother Miller, a live wire in the work of the branch, always ready to be of service to the Saints in any way he can. His wife also is quite a worker, so far as her strength will permit. Altogether we are greatly blessed in having Brother Miller and family with us.

I am new in this message, brought in through Brother Gilbert J. Waller. Was a Seventh-day Adventist. Not being satisfied, and really desiring to know the truth, God brought me here, where, through his servant, Brother Waller, I was baptized into the church of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, having hands laid on for the gift of the Holy Spirit. Never was so happy in all my life. In June will be sixty-nine years old.

THOMAS CLANCY.

ORION, MICHIGAN, March 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: I thought perhaps a few lines from this place might be of interest to the many readers of the HERALD. We were organized into a branch on August 15, 1916, by Brother J. F. Curtis, missionary for Eastern Michigan District, and Brethren William Grice and William Davis, president and vice president of said district, with thirteen charter members. We had rented a small hall about three years before, and had been holding regular meetings, and as the majority belonged to the First Detroit Branch, we had been furnished with speakers from there.

At the time of organizing we had but one officer, Brother D. M. Taylor, a priest. Brother Taylor was ordained to the office of elder, and Brother Frank Davis to the office of priest. We have twenty members at the present time, with several more very near the kingdom. Brother Taylor has been preaching in a schoolhouse about five miles from here, and many are interested.

We are buying an organ for our hall, and we held a supper and sold three quilts last Friday evening, which netted us the nice sum of twenty dollars. We have never charged for our suppers, neither have we ever taken a collection at our preaching services. All funds are raised by freewill offerings, and we have never lacked funds to pay for our hall rent or other expenses. Many outside of the branch have given us much financial aid, and we hope to form into a large branch.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's work everywhere, I remain,

Your sister,

Mrs. JULIA HAMMOND, Branch Secretary.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA,

March 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I have been reading the HERALD and Ensign for some time I would like to say a few words in regard to this northwest. We have had a fine winter all through. It has been quite cold at times, but we enjoy good sleighing and do not stay in on account of cold weather. But the snow will soon be gone and spring will be here, when everyone will be looking forward to sowing grain and garden. We raise many nice vegetables and small tame fruit, and also have many wild berries, such as raspberries, gooseberries, currants, two kinds of cranberries and blueberries. We have fine timber and good water, so God in his goodness has given us many blessings, temporal as well as spiritual.

We have had the gospel preached here, and have been blessed with elders who came from time to time. In all, there have been eleven elders here and some have been here several times. Six years ago we were the only family of Saints here, and now there are quite a number. Twenty-two have been added by baptism, and some have moved in, and we have a good interest from outsiders, and a number of children have been blessed. Elder Dobson has just been here and held a series of meetings. He had good interest and good meetings. We all enjoy having the elders come; when we hear one is coming, the cry goes out, "Good."

We also have Sunday school and have it regularly since the cold weather is over. We organized a mite society and are getting along fine. We meet from house to house and have our business, and prayer, and sometimes we have had testimony; the rest of the time is spent in sewing. We make quilts, dresses, fancywork of various kinds, and have had good sale for them. We sell them privately and the money is to go to help pay the church debt. We have a lunch and each one puts in ten cents at the meeting. When some walk so far they get so hungry where the afternoon is spent, and especially the children. The Lord has told us to use wisdom in all things. We have a good sociable time, and with a sisterly love we depart to our homes, and are anxious for the time to come when we can meet again. We thank our heavenly Father for his love to us all, and for his Holy Spirit to guide us upward to a higher calling.

We ask all the Saints to pray for us that we may be faithful. Our prayers are for all God's people.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. A. SIMS.

Since the detailed items will be presented in these columns later, we have omitted this summary for the present. In the Miscellaneous Department of this number we are printing a part of the conference report.

The Prize Oration

The oration by Charles R. Hield, that was awarded the prize in the recent Graceland Oratorical Contest will be published in the Autumn Leaves for June.

Joint Council in Session

The joint council are again in session, the first regular postconference session being held the 19th in Independence. It is expected they will remain in session for two or three weeks, until the many matters referred to them have been worked out.

Clinton District Seventeenth

Our attention has been called to an error in "Points of interest from the reports," in issue of April 18. The Clinton, Missouri, District should be seventeenth, with 1,206 members, right after Holden Stake.

Campaign to Increase Food Supply

The press of the country are supplementing the appeal of President Wilson that every possible effort be made to increase the production of food this year. Every foot of ground should be made to yield something to fill the Nation's depleted pantry. The great wheat shortage of the year demands that the maximum of other foods be raised. We are confident our people will do their part, whether it be in planting and tending the back-yard garden or managing a great ranch.

Parting Incidents

At the close of the conference as usual the visitors poured out of town in great numbers and many of the trains carried an extra chair car for their accommodation. Friday, a sleeper and chair car were waiting on the side track for the eastern delegation who occupied them en route to Chicago. Saturday noon many of the visiting singers together with the general chorister took the train south for Independence. The sign which has hung across the street during the week, "Messiah this week, April 12 and 13 at the Saints' Church," was taken down by a number of the young men and tacked securely along the side of the chair car.

Conference Sessions

The business sessions this year adjourned on the afternoon of April 12, and the appointments were read. The conference did not adjourn until 10.30 a. m. the 13th. We find upon examining the conference minutes for the past twenty years, that since 1897 there have been twenty sessions of General Conference. There was none in 1899. The average date of adjournment was April 18. Once, in 1903, the conference adjourned on the 14th. But that is the only year besides the late conference, which adjourned before the 16th, while four conferences held over as late as the 21st. We have not yet made comparison prior to 1897, but this year a new record is clearly established, in this particular as well as in many others ways. A short session means economy.

A Missing Face

In the meeting one tall and slender figure of poetic and spiritual mien was greatly missed. Two years ago he was the strong man of the hour, and bore the burdens of the conference. This year he was taking needed rest in California. Having been separated from the conference a year ago ourselves, we can sympathize keenly with him in his deprivation. Continued letters advise of his steady gain in strength and courage. Would that the many silent prayers in deep, sincere love could waft themselves from the conference to him in his temporary isolation. Many eyes are now turned to next year, when they expect to be made glad by the sight of his countenance, standing shoulder to shoulder in the work of the Presidency with our leader and President, Frederick M. Smith.

The World Conflict

The part this country is taking in the world's turmoil is principally preparation to provide food and money. The British minister for foreign affairs, Arthur J. Balfour, and other members of the British commission have arrived at Washington for a war council. France and other of the entente allies are sending representatives. Indications are that national prohibition may be forced as a war measure to save for food the millions of bushels of grain used to make liquors. The British report of vessels lost shows a slight decrease during the week. Nothing in the war zone is spared, even hospital ships being sunk. Further progress is reported by the French and British in France. Considerable territorial gains with about twenty thousand men and many guns are listed in the captures.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

From the Presiding Bishop's Report

To the General Conference: It has been thought to supplement the usual financial report with a statement concerning the transaction of the business of this office and make a few deductions to show the actual state of the church finances and point out the most pressing needs.

By agreement with Bishop E. L. Kelley, April 29 was fixed as the date when his administration of the business of the office should formally end and that of his successor commence. Notice to this effect was published in the Saints' Herald and Zion's Ensign, and the local bishops and agents were required to submit reports accordingly. This made necessary the two reports, as published, one covering the period from January 10, 1916, to April 29, 1916, and the other from April 29, 1916, to December 31, 1916.

Except for a few weeks spent in arranging our personal affairs and responding to urgent official calls elsewhere, our entire time has been spent at the office in Independence, Missouri.

Checking up the church real estate holdings proved to be a work of several months. In this I was greatly assisted by Brother D. J. Krahl. Bishop Kelley has willingly executed deeds where it was considered necessary. As you may probably know, we are at the present time carrying out a plan to check up the real estate holdings of the local congregations throughout the world. There are over three hundred of these houses of worship, aggregating in value hundreds of thousands of dollars which are not included in the statement of the available assets of the general church.

By the action of the last General Conference in adopting the recommendation of the joint council, to whom was referred the auditors' minority report, the matters therein mentioned were referred to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric for adjustment. These have been given attention and the disposition of them approved by the Standing High Council.

Since April 29, 1916, the present worth is reduced by $45,088.32. This is occasioned by the large amount charged against Loss and Gain. These accounts and bills receivable of uncertain value have been transferred to a special ledger. Against some of them the Statute of Limitation has run and there are others which we have no reasonable assurance of collecting. These accounts will be followed up periodically and returns therefrom credited to Loss and Gain.

The report apparently shows that some funds have been invested in real estate. This arises from some paying their tithing by transferring title to real estate, which we have not been able to sell. In other cases members who were indebted to the church for money loaned and not in position to repay the same have transferred their property to the church in payment, or as security for the funds borrowed.

On May 1, 1916, the amount of Bills Payable was $204,583.11; on December 31, 1916, the amount was $192,462.98. To-day, March 17, 1917, it is $187,564.17. To Bills Payable of May 1, 1916, we add $14,600.00 secured by deeds of trust on real estate (the equity only having been heretofore carried on the books—these properties now are entered at full values) making total Bills Payable May 1, 1916, $219,183.11, or a reduction of $31,618.94

On May 1, 1916, $20,300.00 was secured by deeds of trust on particular parcels of real estate. To-day the total amount of notes secured by mortgages on real estate is $11,950.00.

The present average rate of interest on the $187,564.17 Bills Payable is 5.6 per cent. This means that during the year 1917 the church will probably pay about $11,000.00 for interest, as against $13,161.06 paid during 1916, or a reduction of $2,161.06.

The total reduction of liabilities from May, 1, 1916, to December 31, 1916, is $21,157.10.

During the year the elders' family allowances have been promptly paid. Where from lack of sufficient funds any agent has been unable to care for the allowances on his list, the necessary funds have been forwarded immediately upon receipt of notice. Besides this we have been called upon to pay some heavy local improvement assessments on real estate, paid the Supply Store the accumulated accounts owing by the Homes and College, and have taken care of the college budget and met the added expenses of the missionaries' families occasioned by the increased cost of food stuffs and the many transfers ordered by the 1916 Conference.

In the light of these facts, which reveal the confidence of the Saints in the church and its officers, we have reason to praise God and press forward to greater achievement during 1917.

During the year the matron of Kensington Home resigned. After consultation with President Smith, and with a view to later consolidating all of our old folks' homes, it was deemed best to care for the inmates of Kensington at Bonheim.

Besides caring for the poor and needy, meeting the elders' and their families' expense and paying our financial obligations this conference year, we must be prepared to assist the homes, Sanitarium and college as the needs demand and provide funds for Kirtland Temple and other needed property improvement. The provisions for the erection of General Office Building should receive immediate attention.

Methods will be devised as authorized and directed by the Lord to meet the increasing desire for gathering and settlement in the regions round about. In this the Saints must observe the commandment to have all things prepared before them and consult with those who have been appointed for this purpose, in harmony with the law, before removing into those regions. A great responsibility rests upon the members of the Aaronic Priesthood, standing officers to the church. The full performance of duty on their part will go far toward molding the attitude of mind and heart necessary to the development of Zion's conditions.

We shall endeavor to arrange the affairs of the Presiding Bishopric so as to perform every duty, discharge every obligation, and adequately meet every situation and contingency.

For the success of this department during the conference year now closing we acknowledge the generous help of the office force and here wish to thank Bishop Kelley for the deference which he has shown us and the kindly manner in which he has so willingly assisted us to discharge the onerous duties which he performed for so many years.

Attention should be called to the harmonious relations existing between this office and the local bishops and agents and with the leading quorums of the church, and also the generous support extended. We have had frequent consultations with President F. M. Smith which have greatly aided us in our work.

For the loyal support of the Saints and the sharing of his full part of the load, and more, by Bishop James F. Keir, whom our heavenly Father in his wisdom and love has associated with us in this work, we are deeply grateful. I recognize our indebtedness to him for every good and perfect gift and have determined to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. With the sustaining grace and illuminating and guiding influence of his Holy Spirit, I feel assured the infinite purposes of Jehovah will be accomplished in us to our blessing and to his honor and glory.

Respectfully submitted,

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.—Columbus Scott, in this work, adduces much Scripture to prove that the first day of the week is the Sabbath Christ observed, and that its observance is in harmony with the gospel as taught in every dispensation. Contains much valuable information on this mooted question. No. 161, paper, 25c; No. 162, cloth$.40

ARCHAEOLOGICAL COMMITTEE REPORT.—By the joint efforts of leading minds in the church this work was compiled. It gets down to rock bottom in archaeological investigation bearing upon the claims made by the Book of Mormon. Data that will fortify Book of Mormon students against arguments of "science." Interesting reading in itself. No. 142, cloth$.75

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

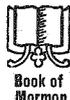

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

SEEKING DIVINE DIRECTION

Excellent as was the recent conference, some returned to their homes disappointed because "we did not receive a revelation." Just before the conference we received quite a number of requests that the HERALD call for a general fast. Some of these requests were almost hysterical, lest we should permit the conference to meet without such a request. They overlooked the obvious fact that this call rests rightly elsewhere than with the editors of the HERALD. As individuals we may fast when we so desire. In fact, we are instructed to meet together frequently in fasting and prayer.

And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or in other words, rejoicing and prayer.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3.

In other words, the singleness of purpose, the devotion of heart, is of more vital importance than the refraining from food.

Some urged that a fast be called in order that the vacancies in the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric be filled. It is natural that the members of the church should take an interest in these important quorums. It is natural that they should desire to see them completed, since such very important duties are laid upon them in an administrative way. But again, we would suggest that the primary duty of seeking divine direction in order that these vacancies may be filled lies elsewhere than with us, and we have no doubt that those having in charge this very important work appreciate the needs of their work as much or more than anyone else.

On the other hand it is urged by still others that many come to a conference with a feeling of curiosity and regard a revelation almost as a fetish. Our opponents think this is the general case, while those who have carefully followed our history know that it is not.

Still there are a few like the elder we once heard of who, when some were suggesting not understanding a certain revelation, replied, "There are some here who talk about not understanding this revelation. Why, Mr. President, I do not begin to understand it. I do not understand the first word of it. I do not even expect to understand it, but I expect to grow and grow and grow up to it through all the ages yet to come. I do not expect to understand it a hundred years from now!"

We respectfully submit that while the Presidency may have received a revelation, that brother had not. A revelation is not something mysteriously received by the prophet, then presented to us without the hope of understanding. What we cannot understand, we cannot carry out.

The glory of God is intelligence; when he speaks light and truth should prevail, and we should as a result know better how to solve the problems that lie before us.

In this sense we did have inspiration, if not a revelation at the recent conference. We had a close approach and a good beginning towards the establishment of the school of the prophets. The early morning meetings made for better understanding and more intelligence, and should put us more nearly in position to carry out the work before us. In this sense it was inspired and the result of inspiration to him who is our leader, even though it was not presented to the quorums for adoption.

Many have urged that the vacancies in the two quorums indicated should be filled. Considering the important duties resting upon the joint council it is not surprising that the people take a very deep interest in their work, and that some even go so far as to urge a reorganization.

There are many possible reasons why these quorums have not been filled. First, it may be that the men who should occupy are not yet ready. Second, it may be that the body is not ready to move forward as they will be called upon to do when these quorums are fully organized. A decided effort was made this conference to strengthen the work of the high priests and to get the seventy into better trim for aggressive work.

Third, it may be in some other way, that the time is not ripe. There is a possibility that those seeing the great vision before us would move forward too rapidly with eighteen men really endowed with the Spirit urging on the work; that there might be too much engine pull for the load they would have to carry. We do not assert that this is the case. It might be.

There is a tendency of the human mind to try to look over the horizon for something interesting and tell some other man how he should do his work (aptly called the fallacy of the elsewhere). Those who have never been in the mission field have much good advice to offer to the missionaries. Those who spend much of their time away from the branch, are quite ready to tell how a branch should be conducted. So sometimes those whose work it is not, may become overly anxious. In this instance those whose problem it is, we believe, are more keenly alive to the needs of their special work than anyone else. But they prefer wisely to go slow, realizing the gravity of the responsibility and the importance of their work.

Thus we may note that in charge of the four stakes as now organized, there are but two men in the stake presidency in each instance, and we venture to suggest that the president of the new Far West Stake will also be very cautious in choosing his counselors.

We should rejoice in the great advance movement at the late conference in drawing a clear line between local and missionary work, the strengthening of both of these departments and in the closer association of the Presidency and Twelve.

We are inclined strongly to favor the idea of fasting and prayer before a General Conference, remembering always that the main purpose is to prepare our mind and heart for the deliberation and work of the conference, the laying aside of worldly affairs for a season, and a devotion of purpose and a prayer that the Spirit of God may be with us in all our assembling, and in our work in the quorums and in the conference business especially.

We recognize the fact that our heavenly Father knows our needs and is ready to help and ready to reveal his will. The history of the world shows that the hindrance lies in the slowness of men to obey. Still we must wait his time. It is not a matter of the will of individuals, nor of our time. (2 Peter 1: 20, 21.)

As individuals we need divine revelation. That revelation is limited only by our ability to receive. Human intelligence unaided can never equal the heights possible to the man of God. The church as a whole need keenly to keep the commandments, so we may be worthy and ready for further divine direction. To accomplish our work, it is a prerequisite. Yet not all inspiration from on high is presented as revelation.

We need to be careful with all diligence to receive the truth and prove it regardless of the form, and to reject error, whatever may be its mode of approach.

If, then, there comes a revelation, it becomes both our privilege and our duty to give it careful, thoughtful and prayerful consideration. It is the duty of the quorums to do this, and their responsibility is as clear as is that of the Presidency, in the giving of revelation, that righteousness and truth may prevail.

We should endeavor not only to secure the spiritual assurance that it is of God, but also that growth of intelligence that we may make it part of our lives and understanding. If there is no understanding, there is no revelation.

It is true that many in the world look upon spiritual phenomena as a thing to be accepted with open mouth and closed eyes without a question. But such has never been the requirement of the law. Always it has been that we should seek to understand so that we may learn to obey. Blind obedience is not required by our Father.

So therein lies our present great duty: youth, service, but greater than either, obedience to the law of God. There is need then for deep, earnest prayers that we may understand the law of God and understanding; we may have the courage to keep it. If we will do this, we need not fear but that in his own time, those whom the Lord has called will be chosen, and His work move onward to the blessing of his people and of those who love truth.

THE COORDINATING COMMITTEE

At the late General Conference a committee was formed to take into consideration what could best be done to simplify the work of the auxiliaries and to coordinate their work with each other and with the general church for the purpose of securing more effective service. On this committee, Joseph A. Tanner was appointed by the Presidency for the church, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith for the Woman's Auxiliary, Granville S. Trowbridge for the Religio, Daniel Macgregor for the Sunday school, while these four will appoint a fifth.

Some have suggested that the First Presidency are the coordinating committee. Naturally this is true, but we take one step at a time. This committee was named in order that we might discharge the amalgamation committee, and also that these auxiliaries might be consulted in this work and take into consideration how their work may be better carried on.

Ten years ago the library commission was organized. One of its great purposes was to adjust and bring about a closer relation between the church and the auxiliaries, to bring about a closer cooperation. So far splendid progress has been made.

At that time it is doubtful if the Sunday school and Religio would have been willing to have turned over their books to a church officer or committee, and unfortunately in some cases with good reason. That time is past and there is now a much better understanding. It may be that the time is approaching and is now here, when the library commission may be reduced in numbers to three and the library boards in some instances at least to one effective member. It is better to have one worker than three drones. We hope the time is here for a much closer affiliation with the church, as departments of work.

The Religio has provided for a lecture board. Yet this is one matter that has been under serious consideration for and by the college and also for and by the church officials. It is also being undertaken in some degree by the Woman's Auxiliary, and partly in institute work by the Sunday school. It is probable that in many ways the work will overlap, because the Religio is for adolescence, though it has attempted to establish as well an infant department, attempted to imitate the Sunday school.

The Woman's Auxiliary naturally feels a deep interest in the adolescent girl. There comes here an overlap. It may be questioned if the social purity board should not be reduced to three members, one of whom should be a woman.

In the humble judgment of the writer, we should have women on the board of trustees of the Sanitarium as well as on the social purity board and Children's Home. But they should go in on their merits and ability, not as members of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The gospel literature commission, home class work, the normal department, and educational work in general give not only points of contact but duplication. That a readjustment is needed has been very plain for several years and is more so now than ever before, to the one end that we may do more and a better work as a church.

REAFFIRMATION OF BELIEF IN POLYGAMY

The Liahona of April 17, 1917, contains a synopsis of the opening conference address by Joseph F. Smith of Salt Lake City. We notice many statements with which we quite agree. For example, "It is abominable that men who are entrusted with protecting the country's honor and borders are not in every instance virtuous." But we also read:

"As members of the church," said President Smith, "do not forget those ordinances of the gospel from which accrues blessings. Teach the children the principles of the eternity of the marriage covenant, teach them to be worthy to be married in the temple." "Do not forget these things," said President Smith, "they are essential to the welfare and happiness of the saints."

President Smith said he desired to bear his testimony. He has served in various church capacities since the days of President Brigham Young. He named early church authorities and down to the present. He said he has been associated intimately with them and he bears testimony they were true, virtuous, pure men; men of God; men above reproach, except that wicked men saw a practice which in itself was as pure and true as any principle of the gospel.

It was a crime in the eyes of lecherous men that Brigham Young should have more than one wife. But they were his wives and his children. He cared for them. He suffered persecution and others have suffered. But that is a thing of the past.

"To-day some of us," said President Smith, "are condemned because we do not abandon the wives we had before the church capitulated to the laws of the land and gave up polygamy." He said he should like to say to all the world that if any man deserves to be damned it is the man who would abandon his wives he had before the Manifesto.

This would appear rather clearly to include a reaffirmation of the doctrine of polygamy. In fact, they claim that it is a practice "as pure and true as any principle of the gospel." We regret to note this repeated affirmation of that which is against the law both of God and of the land, by their own admission. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pp. 334, 430.)

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The "Herald" Free to Missionaries

Continuing the usual policy, THE SAINTS' HERALD is sent free to all ministers under general church appointment, simply by making request of this office. Zion's Ensign is sent on the same terms by applying to the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. Give your new address as well as the old one.

Funeral of R. M. Elvin

The funeral of Robert M. Elvin, for many years a missionary and for twenty-six years a member of the general high council, was conducted Sunday afternoon, April 22. The services were in charge of Stake President J. F. Garver, assisted by John Smith. Joseph A. Tanner, president of the high priests quorum and of Kansas City Stake, a lifelong friend of Brother Elvin, preached the funeral sermon.

Library Commission Organized

The new secretary of the General Library Commission is Vernon A. Reese, of 3833 West Park Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. It will be his special work to help the districts to organize more fully and carry out the cooperative plan of the library commission. The blanks have already been revised and plans formulated to carry on a rather extensive educational campaign the coming year.

Allied Drive Continues

Some of the most sanguinary battles of the war have been fought recently as a result of the continued drive of the British and French on positions held by the Germans. The latter have gradually retired from a number of important trench systems, while the losses reported have been enormous. Air fighting has been furious, and many planes lost by both sides. The weekly report of shipping losses by the British shows the greatest of any week since the unrestricted campaign was inaugurated in February.

Answering Misrepresentation

Elder O. J. Tary has a rather extensive answer to the misrepresentations of Doctor J. S. Martin, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in The Wheeling Register of April 17. He corrects inferences to the effect that the church from the beginning has been polygamic in its teachings. He places the blame where it belongs in saying that "the system against which Doctor Martin urges such a vigorous protest was not in existence until set up under the regime of Brigham Young, commencing in the latter part of the year 1844, after Joseph and Hyrum Smith had been killed."

An Apostle Thirty Years

The joint council recently suspended operations long enough to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of his membership in the Quorum of Twelve of Gomer T. Griffiths. A gold pen, suitably inscribed, was presented to him by President F. M. Smith, as a token of the sentiments of the quorums in session. On April 11, the DAILY HERALD contained this item: "Thirty years ago to-day Gomer T. Griffiths was called to the Quorum of Twelve. All of the quorum of that date have passed away except him and Joseph R. Lambert." Becoming reminiscent, told us some interesting things of those days. We asked him to write some of them for our readers. When he gets time he will, he intimated.

Employing the Children

The National Child Labor Committee is sending out a letter and leaflet outlining a workable plan to use the young people in the national effort to increase the food supply. They suggest that all over fourteen might be hired to farmers or sent from home in groups to work in farm districts. Those under that age could be supervised at home and trained in local agricultural work by competent teachers from the schools and other organized bodies, "those who will appreciate the limits of a child's strength and not allow him to be overworked." All interested in the matter should send for the free leaflet by addressing The National Child Labor Committee, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City.

The War

The House of Representatives in session as a committee of the whole on April 28 voted by 279 to 98 in favor of selective conscription as opposed to the volunteer plan for raising an army. There is every indication that the Senate will concur in this action, though a conference may change the age limit. The House favors 21 to 40 as the limits, while the Senate plan seemed to favor 19 to 25. It is planned to have a national registration day within thirty days, and from the names thus secured the army of 500,000 desired immediately will be drawn by the jury wheel system. It is announced that these men will be called to service about September 1, perhaps many of them to foreign lands. Prices on all grains, meats, and including many staple necessities, are constantly rising, breaking all records. Government officials are investigating, the public press, and other methods are being employed to see that the utmost is done to increase the food supply. China is expected to declare war on Germany within a short time, Guatemala has broken off relations, and Brazil is on the verge of war. Of the $7,000,000,000 to be raised for war purposes in this country by the sale of bonds and taxation, much will be loaned to the allied European powers. Great Britain has already received $200,000,000 and France and Italy will receive as much soon, while arrangements are to be made to loan Russia as much as she can use.

And again: what shall be said concerning the traces of iron implements which have been discovered from time to time in the mounds, but more frequently at great depths below the surface of the soil. Though accounts of such discoveries are generally from reliable sources, they have latterly received no attention, and always have been considered as so much perilous ware which no one cared to handle.—Foot-Prints of Vanished Races, pp. 108, 109.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The following is a very brief summary of the third and fourth addresses of President Frederick M. Smith to the Melchisedec priesthood, April 12 and 13, 1917.

We have heard of several requests, How can we learn to preach a correct sermon? Some have urged that we run a series of articles in the HERALD for the benefit of those who have not had an opportunity for even a grammar school education. It is urged with much truth that a large part of the educational work is beyond many of our workers. Still we recognize that a course in grammar, rhetoric, public speaking and homiletics, in the HERALD would appeal to only a small number of our readers.

Provision has been made to meet this condition in the Graceland Extension Institute. Frederick M. Smith is director, George N. Briggs, assistant director, and C. B. Woodstock, registrar. The plan of the institute is to ascertain, first, the amount of schooling, the amount of general reading, the amount of experience, and then just what practical work each individual requires and why, and to adapt the instruction to his personal need.

Forty or more young people with the advantage of a good education have volunteered their services to help. The fee for a course for one year is $2.50, with a special rate of $1 to missionaries. This is merely to cover the actual cost of postage and preparation of lessons, as no one receives remuneration for services. At present the classes in English, grammar, rhetoric and logic are the largest.

We want to use all the facilities at our command. These men are ready to assist you in taking advantage of these facilities. By all of our facilities we do not mean exclusively church organization, but also public library, university extension courses and any accessible means of help.

If you want to improve yourself so as to render better service and do not know how to begin, write to Professor C. B. Woodstock, Lamoni, Iowa.—
EDITORS.

We have a letter here from a sister who writes to deplore the apparent carelessness of some of our ministers in regard to the use of English. She points out several examples, such as "I taken" for "I took," "Had went" for "had gone," etc., all of which might have been corrected by a little study of a simple grammar and a pocket dictionary. We are all guilty of some errors in speech, and meetings such as this are good places to talk such things over. It is important that we seek to correct our faults in this, as in all other things. Included in the equipment of almost all of us should be a grammar and dictionary. It has been my custom in the past to carry around cards, on which I would write down the spelling and definition of a word which appealed to me and about which I should know more. The habit has been a great help.

There should be no criticism of the men who exert themselves to become better educated. Some of the finest men in the church and the world have been educated men.

We have here a resolution from a district which wants to know what it can do with men who are ordained to the priesthood and will not occupy in their offices. We have maintained that those who refuse to work after due labor has been performed with them, should be asked to give up their licenses. It is wrong to permit a man to act as a dog in the manger.

Then the question comes up this year as it has often before: "Shall we accept the labors of those of the local priesthood who use tobacco?" While I may not have the sanction of all my associates in it, I emphatically say No. A man cannot keep both his filthy habits and the holy priesthood which God has intrusted to him, and this would apply to the Aaronic priesthood, also.

While some of these things may sound harsh, it is well to come to an understanding about them. There need be less haggling and disagreements over some of these matters if we discuss them on such occasions as this.

It is not wise to go out from here and teach such things as tithing in such a way as to make it difficult for the general officers of the church to carry out the law. Some one may ask, "Is it not proper to teach according to the books?" It is, but at the same time it is not wise to run counter to the accepted interpretations of the law.

We advise our men to let the Menace proposition alone. If we are in such imminent danger as it is suggested we are, I have all faith that God will warn us in time to allow our escape, if that be necessary.

The missionary appointment list will be read before long and there will be those who will feel badly because certain names do not appear. Some believe it a terrible thing to drop men who cannot do anything else. God pity us if we must carry men for the sake of charity. It seems to us that the most kindly thing that can be done for such men if there be any, is to drop their names from the active missionary list and put them into other departments of the work for which they are better fitted. We honor those who have worn themselves out in the work and they are worthy of all praise, but it is unjust to them to expect that they can continue indefinitely to do acceptable work for the church.

Many men have been appointed who could have been first-class workers but they quit growing. They are not all on the missionary list, either. Many simply fill places, and it is not the inspiration of the call that gave them the priesthood that is at fault, but simply that they have not forged ahead as they should have done.

Criticism has been offered because we have gotten away very largely from the custom of sending out missionaries two by two. [We truly have lost since we got away from that plan. We have saved time and men in a way, but have also lost men whom we might have otherwise saved. Just how soon we can get back we cannot say, but we are working to that end.]

There have been some very poor selections made in regard to our church buildings in some places. They are oftentimes a little old hut of a building in the poorest, meanest end of the town, and quite inaccessible. We ought to establish the custom of having the location and plans of the public buildings of the church indorsed by the general church officers. There is a movement already started among the architects to help in this. Then why not some day adopt a style of architecture peculiar to our faith, having variety yet distinctiveness? We hope it can be done. [Some one suggested here that we already had a distinctive style—distinctively ugly.]

This year will be marked as an epoch-making time. There will be a departure from several old customs, and among them that of reporting. We want a personal report once a week from each man under appointment, direct to the Presidency. Set some time of the week that suits you best and regularly observe that day as one on which your report of the past week's efforts is sent in. Make your report a lesson in English; free from error, brief, yet sufficiently long to tell conditions as you have seen them.

As the list of appointments is read, you will note that some are marked with an L and some with M. This means local and missionary, respectively. Let the work be divided. The missionary is not to concern himself with the local work, neither should the local man seek to regulate the missionary's efforts. There should be cooperation without conflict. Missionaries should seek to imbue local forces everywhere with the possibilities of the work and fire with zeal those who have not been fully employed in the service of the Lord.

Those intrusted with local work should first feed the flock, waking lazy ones and make a perfect working branch.

Several years ago I was talking with Dean Wilcox of the Iowa University on the question of credits for Graceland. At that time we were not fully accredited as we are now. He said: "I dislike to take a stand against Graceland College because every one but one of your students has made good. I think it is because everybody is thought to be against you, and your people learn to fight for their rights and to stand alone. You should be thankful it is so, for when that condition ends, they will drop into the ordinary channels and cease to excel."

When we run out of religious opposition to fight, we must replace it with something else, such as the indifference and carelessness that so often creeps in among us. We need discouragement to wake us up.

Some one asks again about reporting. No, we don't want such uniformity that we can tell by a glance at the signature just what is going to be said, neither will we expect you to be on the qui vive, not knowing what to expect next. A little advice we received from our preceptor in English while at school might be good for us. He said whenever we discovered what seemed to us an exceptionally witty or smart passage, to eliminate it without fail, for unless we did it would spoil the entire effort.

A brother in the rear is asking us to tell of some of the good things, something to please us more and worry us less. We have already reported to the conference that a distinct upward movement is noted throughout the church. We heard yesterday of some of the conditions resulting from unwise gathering to Independence, and some want to know about moving to the center places for the educational advantages for their children. We cannot discuss that at length at this time, but the suggestion of the brother over here is that by proper encouragement the branches here and there can develop as much talent in musical and other lines as is found proportionately in the larger places.

The Religio has its place among us if it can find it. Let us suggest that it should be, to paraphrase the words of Lincoln, an organization of the young people, by the young people, and for the young people. Adolescence has its special problems which should receive our special attention.

The conference which we have just enjoyed has reiterated a keen desire for intensive and extensive work in the stakes. I am disappointed in not having a larger representation in the stake missionary list, but the postconference council may attend to that. Sometimes I think we could accomplish more if every missionary on our list were placed in the five stakes and went to work. That would not mean a cessation of labor on the part of the local men, either. If we are to have success in this work, we must talk it, think it, sleep it, and even snore it.

Some ask about the school of the prophets. We have made an excellent start in that direction in the meetings in this room. There are tremendous possibilities in getting the priesthood together and as a result working together. It is necessary that we have loyalty on the part of the missionaries, and that does not necessarily mean that we are not to think for ourselves. Principles should be discussed and agreed upon if possible, but at any rate have loyalty to the organization and to each other. Do not follow Brother Jones into a community where he has been working and agree that "he is a fine man, but—" Tell of his good qualities, and if he have failings that are necessary to notice, tell him. If you think the Presidency, for instance, are wrong, do not tell everybody else, but write them direct and point out their errors.

The work of the Twelve will now be different, but the missionaries will not be out of their jurisdiction. You may get two in your territory instead of one. They will be able to acquaint themselves with the work and its needs as never before. Hitherto they have often had to be content with seeing these conditions and needs reflected in the HERALD or otherwise. Next year we should find a different condition confronting us.

District presidents should also report and instructions will be issued to that effect. Some of them have compiled figures to show how many sermons were required to each convert made, and the average is about twenty to each baptism. Just how many of these are adults and other information should be more easily available if the reporting is done well.

There seems right now to be a need for more pastoral work than missionary. Both are important, but we must not let what we have gained die from our neglect.

All these things will require education—study to meet modern conditions intelligently—and education means not only training in schools and colleges, but it is the fullest and richest response to the stimuli of our environment. There are a number of men here who have not had many advantages, yet we believe they are educated. The president of the Independence Stake, for instance, has had only one year of high school and the president of the Lamoni Stake even less. A canvass of the situation might reveal a similar situation all about us. Yet these men have not stopped growing; they have gone on, as we can all go on. All can be educated.

Neither should there be the least jealousy of those who thus take advantage of their opportunity. Education but enhances spirituality if possessed by the proper individual.

The Graceland Extension Institute can and will help all who desire it and the expense is very little. We cannot stand around rooted in our places and receive the endowment. We must move out and prepare ourselves.

BETTER RESULTS IN THE BRANCHES

(How may we organize and motivate the official forces in local churches to get the best results. Paper read before the High Priests' Quorum by Ralph W. Farrell, April 9, 1917.)

ORGANIZATION

Effective relation among men is secured only through organization. Without it, effort is spasmodic and satisfactory results are not had. Energy is wasted when promiscuously applied. Through organization a leader multiplies himself, and the division of labor is made possible. There are many other reasons why men should organize; not the least God's command, and he gives no idle counsel. But when to organize and how must sometimes be determined by the spirit of wisdom.

IN LOCAL BRANCHES

Organization should never weaken individual power, for this increased to its biggest extent is really the only source of organization strength. Working on this principle, I requested the branch in Providence to discontinue electing presiding priests, presiding teachers, presiding deacons. (For which old custom there is no law.) The reason for this change was twofold: To stop the inconsistency of electing one priest, or one teacher, or one deacon, to preside over another officer of equal rank (to use a convenient term); to enable the pastor to receive proper recognition as the chief directing and counseling authority, entitled to full acquaintance with every matter of local importance. It is necessary to hold group meetings. Have the priests meet in council with the pastor; likewise the teachers, and the deacons. These different committees may elect of their number permanent chairmen to preside only when in session, and this for the convenience of the pastor; but be it borne in mind that the branch president has the elective right to preside over the entire membership of the branch. Often (if not always) he prefers to act as a counseling and advising member of each group body when it is in session. Between sessions there is no presiding officer save the branch president. At these council meetings collective and individual work is arranged, parts assigned and, if necessary, votes taken to settle such matters that require the voice of the majority.

These council meetings are wheels within wheels, and it devolves upon the pastor to see that the great machine runs smoothly, is supplied with necessary inspection, and repaired when out of order. The priests are given their lists of names and mutually agree on such other lines of work that form parts of their spiritual stewardship. The teachers likewise arrange their common work. The deacons are members of a financial board, choosing one of their number as branch treasurer and also agreeing on proper division of labor. Whenever any serious problem comes up for solution, that group of officers which it concerns meets in council and settles it. General workings of the branch are discussed in general priesthood meetings, when such discussion is necessary. In the pastor's absence, the highest in authority (to use another convenient term) presides. All things being equal, the seniority of priesthood should be recognized; but a clear understanding may be obtained by careful arrangement of this matter in general priesthood meetings, or, and possibly more properly, by the pastor. (It would be in place to state that the provision for presiding exigency, as given in chapter fourteen of the Book of Rules, refers only to business meetings.) At times when branch officers are elected, simply elect a presiding officer, and sustain all other branch officers, by show of hands. Arrange work in group meetings.

MOTIVATING THE GROUP INDIVIDUAL

In the gospel economy there is no law which forces a man to work. His moral agency will never be taken from him. Unwilling service (if there be such) is not what God desires. Our efforts to move men, therefore, must be along lines of encouragement, stimulation, instruction and assistance.

The control of men is a problem which every pastor must master if he is to do effective work. Systematic soldiering is the menace of industry, and the need for executive ability is fundamental in all organized effort. Live leadership makes for effective group action.

We should not ignore the fact (and I hardly think anyone desires to do so) that all acts, all effects, are governed by laws, whether they be things spiritual or things material. If we can discover the laws that relate to our problems and work in harmony with such laws, the solution of these mysteries will be ours.

I am not exaggerating a disagreeable truth, when I state that a large percentage of our local officers are idlers, comparatively speaking. Some perform a small amount of work, others do nothing. (I speak, of course, from the vantage point of my observation of the branches in the Atlantic States. And I by no means reflect disparagingly on faithful men.) Many of these idle men are not dead spiritually, but they have allowed the plow handles to rot away and the shares to turn to rust. And this violation of law has resulted in a condition of death and dying among many of the Saints. I mention this fact to voice a conviction that is blood-streaked by experience; I mention this matter to call attention to this condition which menaces the very existence of our present-age church; and startling it is that the initial attempt to solve this most serious problem, must be made by the pastors of the branches. I believe that this attempt is being made, and that success will attend the efforts, and that the church will yet shine brighter than the sun in midheaven.

Men act because they are impelled by three things—reason (or intellect) emotion, conscience. These three words, when properly analyzed, reveal the secret we desire to learn. The intelligent pastor will direct his effort at one or all of these parts of man, and in so doing labor face to face, brain to brain, and heart to heart with the person that needs help.

Seeing that inactivity has gripped the members of the priesthood of the branch, the president calls them together and exhorts them in soul-stirring fashion. The effect which often follows is resolution by the men to "get busy." And they are sincere in the main. Thirty days pass. Those same men assemble with empty reports—nothing accomplished. Another soul-stirring exhortation is given. Another renewal of resolutions follows, only to fail in bringing forth the actual fruit of service. What is the trouble? Why this failure? Three things may be detected as responsible for the whole failure. They are: (1) Each officer was given too much or too little to do. (2) Practical help was needed. (3) Unwillingness to work. Rest assured that one or all of these difficulties spragged the wheel of progress. To consider, understand and remove, if possible, these obstructions, is the work of the executive. Let us consider them separately.

GIVEN TOO MUCH OR TOO LITTLE TO DO

A goal is reached step by step; great buildings erected stone on stone; type is set letter by letter. Too much work imposed upon a man confuses and paralyzes him. Detail the work of your assistants. If you give a long list of names, specify those which require first attention. A group of workers must be given piecework. This consideration is essential—vital—to promote big results. Those last meetings were failures because, though the men had their enthusiasm stirred, they did not know what to do first, and inactivity resulted, as it always does, in the cooling of desire to serve. I cannot emphasize too strongly the necessity of laying upon the hearts of the men specific tasks to perform in a limited time and with the understanding that reports will be required at the expiration of that time limit. Here is opportunity to be firm but kind. The advantage of council meetings is observed here, for you will be able to go into details of work more fully with the individual groups. The priests, being sort of local patriarchs, or evangelists, should not be burdened with the ofttime evils that teachers have to consider, and teachers should be freed from considering specific tasks of deacons.

THE NEED OF HELP

How can you help the man in need? Is his inactivity the result of youth and inexperience? If so, he should be associated with some one who can help him. It might be well for the pastor to visit with this brother. I find that more work is done by men who are coupled in service than by men who work separately; in fact, in actual experience few local officers do much visiting alone. Further, it is the Lord's plan that men go "two by two." The deacon should be called upon often to assist the teachers, that the former may receive experience other than common attention to externals. Surely "occasion requires" when large branches have languished many years because of teachers' inactivity, and when teachers are assisted by deacons the work may be performed twice as rapidly as when teachers go together. Priests should not be assisted by teachers when priest work is being done.

Do your officers lack understanding of duties? Then instruct them. Give private talks and public lectures on the duties of local officers. Domestic troubles are often the cause of inactivity by members of the priesthood. This is a serious matter, made more so because little can be done by the pastor to remedy the trouble. Incompatibility of temper, lack of sympathetic support from the wife, willful disregard of God's laws, are some of the things which sap spiritual power, which lack, we admit, is at the bottom of all spiritual inactivity. Sunday-school teachers should take special interest in the children of homes thus afflicted. Spiritual-minded sisters should visit the wife and encourage her. I pity much these women who are victims of this unfortunate state of mind, but I pity more the men, for one of the most difficult phases of priesthood work must be the attempt to save others when one's own home is crumbling to decay. Establish prayer meetings for the members of the priesthood, and let one officer encourage another. They all need the warm hand of the brotherhood.

NOT WILLING TO WORK

This is the third difficulty, and it requires much the same treatment as the second. However, you are now dealing with men who have no seeming desire to "play the game fair." What can be done to change this attitude of mind? The remedy is stimulation, and the following are some of the ways to apply it:

APPEAL TO HIS CONSCIENCE

Visit him at the earliest and most convenient opportunity. Let the interview be private. (Beware of the public-criticising habit.) Pray with this man. Lay before him the case, frankly and calmly stated. Tell him that Saints are becoming indifferent to duty; iniquity is creeping into the fold, and wolves are destroying the flock for which the Lamb of God gave his life; seats are vacant. Where are the watchmen? Are they asleep at the post of duty? Did not the priests and teachers of the Book of Mormon days pledge to take upon themselves the sins of the people if these officers neglected to do their duty? Tell him that children, perhaps his children, are drifting away because not cared for by those officers whom God has called to feed the lambs. Plead for him and the people. And if this does not move him—

APPEAL TO HIS LOYALTY

Loyalty is a real force among men. Is he loyal to the cause, to his fellow officers? Is he leaving the burden to a few men? His very manhood is at stake. Men hate to be called quitters. Of course in your kindness you barely hint that he is a quitter—let the Spirit burn that fact home. The least wrong word, and in many cases the proper word, is criticized by the man inactive.

APPEAL TO HIS SENSE OF JUSTICE

If he is a business man, he will see the need of working the system. He will sense the value of co-operation, and admit the justice of your claim for assistance. And he will realize in time (if he be not totally dead) that there can be but one end for the persistently inactive man—and that end disaster! Transgression of law is sin, and the wages of sin is death. The pendulum of God's clock swings as far towards justice as it does towards mercy. There can be no doubt of this in the mind of the man who is not insane. In dealing with men do not neglect the power of suggestion, as a means of helping him. He needs faith, a bigger view of life, more love for humanity, power to eliminate selfishness. Suggest ways and means. Cannot he come to prayer meeting? Would he like to accompany you on a visit to the needy? Prayer will help him. The family altar is a means of grace, et cetera.

THE APPEAL TO FEAR

There is still another element in his element which might be stimulated—it is his fear. Have we completely lost sight of this principle? Jesus used it when necessary. The latter-day angel brought to earth the cry: "Fear God!" Asked a penitent sufferer to his companion on the cross: "Dost thou not fear God?" The persistently defiant officer must be dealt with—and this for the good of the body. When other attempts fail, there remains the last—the appeal to fear. That man who will not observe the "rule of the road," must step aside and allow another to take his place. He is a menace to the body politic. He that is not faithful shall not be accounted worthy to stand. The Lord has spoken on this. We need not speculate. The elders shall see that the law is kept, and if he does not do well his part he is likewise a lawbreaker. Law is not law if it has no penalty for its transgression. Until a pastor can say to the persistent idler, "Brother, you move on or let another take your place"—until a pastor can say this with power to act, the advance of the church will be neither great nor fast. The army of the Lord is sorely weakened by possessing men who have forgotten or are trying to forget their unspoken vow to God when they were ordained and expected to work in the vineyard. It has been my experience, and no doubt that of others, that simply a hint at requiring the surrender of licenses has worked well in the interests of God's kingdom. Men who have a spark of the spirit of self respect would as soon surrender their membership as their license. Say what we will against the fact, fear is the great inhibitor of action. At heart the transgressor respects the man who honors and enforces the law.

SUMMARY

To sum up briefly: Organize the various groups of workers, but in no wise allow organization to diminish the strength of individual efficiency. Let the presiding officer, the pastor, preside over the entire membership of the branch, and this includes the members of the priesthood as such. Study carefully the laws governing control (laws at which I have only hinted), and having learned them, use them. The time is upon us when we should work with all our might. Remember that the inactivity of officers is caused (in the general sense) by their having too much or nothing definite to do; by their need of help; by their unwillingness to serve. To overcome these difficulties, we must perfect details for the confused, assist the needy, enlighten the ignorant, appeal to the loyalty, sense of justice, fear, conscience, of the unwilling. And first, last, all the time, instruct the entire body of Saints, holding before their quickening vision the soul-stirring doctrine of idealism.

The Autumn Leaves fills a place in the church which no other publication can. The youth among us are especially kept in mind and those who do not keep in touch with it are missing some important phases of development.

EXTRACTS FROM A WORK OF 1842

(Mormonism in all Ages, or the Rise, Progress, and Causes of Mormonism. By Professor J. B. Turner, Illinois College, Jacksonville, Illinois, Copyright by Platt and Peters, New York, 1842.)

The professor shows graphically the work of the Missouri mobs; early tolerance of the people of Illinois; vigorous efforts of the intelligent, industrious Saints, even establishing at once a university.

He also shows his opposition, but nowhere in the book published in 1842 does a hint of the existence of polygamy appear. Had it existed he would have noted it.

Of the Missouri troubles Professor Turner writes: "Who began the quarrel? Was it the Mormons? Is it not notorious on the contrary, that they were hunted, like wild beasts, from county to county, before they made any desperate resistance? Did they ever, as a body, refuse obedience to the laws, when called upon to do so, until driven to desperation by repeated threats and assaults on the part of the mob? Did the State ever make one decent effort to defend them as fellow citizens in their rights, or to redress their wrongs? Let the conduct of its governors, attorneys, and the fate of their final petitions answer. Have any who plundered and openly massacred the Mormons ever been brought to the punishment due their crimes? Let the boasting murderers of begging, helpless infancy answer. Has the State ever remunerated, even those known to be innocent, for the loss of either their property or their arms? Did either the pulpit or the press through the State raise a note of remonstrance or alarm? Let the clergymen who abetted, and the editors who encouraged the mob, answer. We know that there were many noble exceptions; but alas, that they were so few! We hate the Mormon imposture; it is from beginning to end utterly detestable, both in its principles and its effects. Mormonism is a monstrous evil; and the only place where it ever did or ever could shine, this side of the world of despair, is by the side of a Missouri mob. In that position it really shines not inherently, but from the contrast, and it is indeed to be hoped that the citizens of Illinois, where the Mormons are now located, whatever may or may not come, will never disgrace their State, their Nation, and their age, or degrade themselves and shame their posterity by resorting to mob law, either against the Mormons or anybody else."—pages 57, 58.

"After the Mormons were thus infamously and cruelly driven from their lands and their homes, and robbed of their arms, corn, cattle, horses, swine, utensils, clothes, and indeed all that renders life tolerable, they wandered in the dead of winter through the State of Missouri, toward the Missisissippi. A large number arrived opposite Quincy, during the months of February and March, 1839, where they found the ice running so fast that they were obliged to encamp in the open woods, without clothing or shelter, on the opposite bank of the river. Among this miserable and destitute multitude, were not only naked children, and famished infants, and married women in delicate and critical circumstances, but also about twenty females, whom the savage ferocity of mob law had deprived not only of their living, but also of their husbands and friends, who had either been butchered before their eyes, as narrated above, or had sunk beneath the lingering torments of hunger, cold, despair, and want. The citizens of Quincy, to the honor of themselves, of civilization and humanity, immediately called a public meeting, passed appropriate resolves expressive of their abhorrence and detestation of the principles of the authors of their calamity, and entered upon a course of vigorous and systematic efforts to relieve their necessities and provide for their future wants. A similar course of conduct towards the refugees, has in part wiped off the disgrace which the mobs of Missouri had inflicted upon human nature and the American name.

"After casting about them for a time to retrieve their misfortunes, the prophet and his comrades selected the town of Commerce, on the Mississippi, in Hancock County, Illinois, to be the future center of their operations, under the name of the 'Stake of Nauvoo' of the beautiful city."—Pages 58, 59.

"Their leaders are now launching out again, to procure the handling of a little more cash. Accordingly, at the last session of the legislature of Illinois, they obtained six charters; one incorporating their city with peculiar privileges; another incorporating a standing army under the name of the 'Nauvoo Legion'; another incorporating a company for the building of a temple, worth some one hundred thousand dollars; another for building a tavern-house worth one hundred thousand dollars more; another for incorporating a school for the prophets under the name of the Nauvoo University, and another for incorporating a manufacturing company."—Page 61.

Much else for and against could be gleaned from this work. Since it nowhere mentions polygamy it is evident it did not exist in 1842. The good character of the Mormons stands out above the denunciations the professor chooses to treat them to. Intelligent, industrious procedure stands out in their activities as he narrates them.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A MESSAGE TO THE PRESIDENT

[The following communications were recently exchanged as indicated in the letters which we reproduce here.—EDITORS.]

LAMONI, IOWA, April 6, 1917.

HIS EXCELLENCY HONORABLE WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States,
Washington, District of Columbia.

At the opening session of the annual General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, held at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1917, the following statement from the opening address of President Frederick M. Smith was indorsed by vote and a copy ordered transmitted to you by wire:

"We this year meet under conditions never before confronted by this church. Despite consistent effort prolonged in patience, the United States has finally been drawn into the terrible world war. What it will finally mean to us as a church no one can foresee. Our strong belief that this Government was guided in its formation by divine power and wisdom carries with it an abiding faith that our destinies are still being guided by the Omnipotent Hand. The gospel of the Christ is one of peace, and as his followers we cannot but preach peace; and whatever shall eventually be the attitude we assume in this crisis, we cannot but remember that at times the people of God have been compelled to wage sanguinary battle. Though, as we believe, the United States was founded by divinity for his purpose, yet its establishment was sanctified by sacrifices made in war, while later its unity was fixed by the fraternal conflict which placed on the altar the best manhood of North and South. Since its inception as a nation the United States has pursued a steady course as the champion of liberty, and much of the progress made in the development of international law has been due to her ever ready defense of the principle of freedom.

"On its first appearance I read with deep interest and concern the recent address of President Wilson to Congress and was profoundly impressed with its keen statesmanship and its deep pathos. Not since Lincoln's day has its equal appeared among American state papers. We deplore war; but if this country must enter the conflict as now appears inevitable, may we not thank God that we do so under the leadership of one with a clear envisagement of the great principles at issue, and who will wage war not against a people, but against corrupt government and in the interests of democratic freedom."

I take pleasure in thus transmitting to you report of the foregoing action.

RICHARD S. SALYARDS,
General Church Secretary.

THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON, April 12, 1917.

MR. RICHARD S. SALYARDS,
General Church Secretary,
Lamoni, Iowa.

The President thanks you cordially for the good will which prompted your kind message, which has helped to reassure him and keep him in heart.

WOULD GIVE PALESTINE TO THE JEWS

LONDON, April 18.—Sir Archibald Murray, commander of the British forces now advancing into Palestine, favors the establishment of a Jewish state in the Holy Land. In a semiofficial report issued by him to the army he says:

The Palestine plateau, once we have occupied it, will be easy to defend. It is flanked on one side by the sea and on the other by the desert, the latter untraversable by troops and the former our natural domain and highway. From coast to desert this long, narrow and secure corridor has an average of only some forty or fifty miles. It could be held with ease by a comparatively small force, which could be reinforced at leisure.

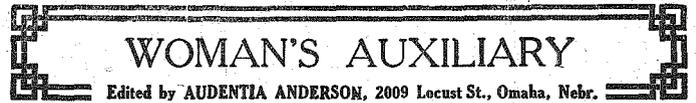

What should we do with Palestine, thus liberated from the centuries-old Turkish grip? There can be little doubt that we should revive the Jewish Palestine of old and allow the Jews to realize their dreams of Zion in their homeland.

All the Jews will not return to Palestine, but many will do so. The new Jewish state, under the British or French Ægis, would become the spiritual and cultural center of Jewry throughout the world. The Jews would at least have a homeland and a nationality of their own. The national dream that has sustained them for a score of centuries or more will have then been fulfilled.

—Los Angeles Times, April 19, 1917.

According to Morse, the geographer: "In digging a well in Cincinnati, the stump of a tree was found in a sound state, ninety feet below the surface; and in digging another well, at the same place, another stump was found at ninety-four feet below the surface, which had evident marks of the axe; and on its top there appeared as if some iron tool had been consumed by rust."

Says Priest: "We have examined the blade of a sword found in Philadelphia, now at Peale's Museum, in New York, which was taken out of the ground something more than sixty feet below the surface. The blade is about twenty inches in length, is sharp on one edge, with a thick back, a little turned up at the point, with a shank drawn out three or four inches long, which was doubtless inserted in the handle, and clinched at the end."—Foot-Prints of Vanished Races, p. 110.

Are We Remiss?

Sister Russell's latest article in her social service series, is one which all parents should carefully ponder. If desirous of real, specific knowledge concerning the character and the prevalence of this danger to our youth, go to some reputable physician, who will tell you the truth, and get information at first hand. Then look your duty squarely in the face, and never let a ruined, suffering, crippled or disfigured son or daughter be able to truthfully reproach you in the future with, "You knew the dangers which beset my path; why, oh why, for the love of me and of God, did you not warn me and save me?"

The path of sin is an easy one, and swiftly trod. Most of the men afflicted with this terrible social disease, contract it before they have reached the age of twenty! Mothers, fathers, where have you been? During the early years, when it was your privilege to instill habits of purity, when it was your duty to warn and to guide, when it should have been your joy to counsel, and lovingly instruct in the mysteries of life, did you shirk? Did you leave to others the guiding of little feet—the training of little habits of self-control? Did you think it "immodest" to inform your child about the great gulf of sin and self-indulgence which yawns before everyone who passes from childhood to manhood? Again we say, read, think, ponder, arouse, do! Let not another sin of omission be counted against you, but faithfully discharge, with prayers for guidance and wisdom, this most vitally important duty you owe the life you have brought into being!

We are glad to present in connection with Sister Russell's article, the closely associated one which Professor Charles Irwin, superintendent of the Lamoni public schools, presented in the form of an address to the women of our general association in their recent convention. Brother Irwin emphasizes the necessity for early fortifying our children against the onslaughts of the enemy of souls, by giving them the armor of truth, a definite and clearly outlined knowledge of the fundamentals of life, which shall be their very shield and buckler in later years of conflict. Without this knowledge children are very much like ships at sea without charts or rudders! Nature herself is in a turmoil; new thoughts and new impulses are surging through their beings, the real meaning of which they do not understand, and they are, thus, hopelessly at the mercy of any person or any influence, which shall seek to interpret for them. Fortunate for them, if at such a time, when their parents have failed them, they shall find a real friend in a teacher, leader, or companion more blessed than they have been, who shall impart to them the correct view of their own potentialities; but oh, woe indeed is their lot, should they fall into the hands of the evil-minded, who shall distort and discolor, draw false pictures of glittering pleasure and sensual delight, unaccompanied by a knowledge of the inevitable disease and disaster which will follow!

As latter-day parents, let us not be guilty of such gross neglect in the equipment of our children for the battles they shall have to wage! Let us, humbly seeking aid from the Giver of life himself, implant in the innocent, unfolding minds of our children, that conception of life and its great meanings, which shall forever keep before them true ideals of attainment, of deportment, of thought and imagination! Then they will be incapable of dragging in the mire their rich endowments of nature, or of bowing their heads before the altar of any false god of lust or pleasure, whose only reward is suffering and death.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Civilization, Syphilization, and Their Relationship to Race Betterment

Many of the conditions found in society to-day demand means for a general uplift of humanity which shall make itself definitely and permanently felt throughout the race. A knowledge of the conditions, coupled with a knowledge of the means for uplift, should be possessed by every human being with philanthropic desires, for without this knowledge and its general dissemination, many are doomed to mental, physical, and moral unbalance and dependency.

How this knowledge may best be disseminated is the question before us. We recognize in looking over the social service field that the worker therein may have a very large and important part in solving this problem, and in instituting one of the greatest reform movements the world has ever known. The professional nurse or physician not only becomes, by study and observation, acquainted with the facts as they exist in regard to this great menace called the "social evil," but when this knowledge is coupled with a great desire to uplift and benefit he becomes an agent for untold good, in the way of warning, explaining, and counseling those who come under his care.

Medical history traces this specific disease, syphilis, back to ancient Biblical times; in the days of Moses and King Pharaoh. It was then called "King's Evil." What have the years of "civilization" done for us in this regard, since that far-away time? Alas, with all our "progress," we are still "living in an unclean generation" compared to which, the primitive wild man was indeed a child of innocence and purity! Is the world, then, "better"? Sad as it may seem, directly in the wake of civilization, this awful malady (syphilization) has made steady—yes, steadier—progress! Something is fearfully wrong, that this masquerader of human suffering, appearing in most gorgeous multiplicity of forms, can go on in polite and impolite society, showing itself, indeed, more often and more virulent in well-kept society, than in the more primitive!

It would seem, then, that civilization and our present methods of education, social, ethical, and spiritual, have yet a space or department which has been sadly overlooked and neglected. A knowledge first of the situation as it is, then an analysis of the law of cause and effect, with a preparation and propaganda for the prevention of the causes, sums the only logical solution.

We must have some new thought in the guidance of society, to protect it from the dangers of this fearsome enemy of mankind, which gets a victim in its clutches, and holds on for generations, spreading paralysis, insanity, and all manner of evil and suffering in its wake. Medical history, in its progress, is doing much to discover the causes and phases of syphilis, and to establish a truer conception of its sources and workings in general. There seems to have been some misconception regarding the moral standing of some unfortunate sufferers from this disease, for the fact has been established that it can, and does, attack a perfectly innocent individual, and often its worst effects are there evidenced. The virus finds its way into the human system through accidental contamination as well as a result of immorality. We see and sense this more closely each year, and thus we feel the great need for warning and educating the young and the innocent.

By raising, through education and enlightenment, the intelligence and character of the individual, a higher type of civilization may be reached, the members of which may escape the ravages of the disease that so destructively reigns to-day. The family life must serve to fortify its members against the danger, prevent crime, and free humanity from its carnal lust. A knowledge of self, physically and spiritually, will do much to safeguard our children from falling into error. The cerebro spinal nervous system may be regarded as the father of the bodily household, while the sympathetic is the mother; it is through these systems being under complete control of the will, that one is able to make success or failure within oneself.

Crime is violation of law, and crimes against the laws of the body form the greatest problems of pathology to-day. Physical and mental irregularities are traceable to irregular or unlawful physical and social conditions or environments. Demoralized homes contribute a large proportion of our criminals, and a still greater percentage of delinquent children come from disrupted and dishonored homes. Illegitimate children are most frequently victims of the social diseases, and they drift quite surely into the criminal classes.

Parents, then, together with pulpit, school, government, and law, have before them the task of reorganizing society, and making the world a safe place for their children. Without education from the early and tender years, little can be accomplished: the individual must be prepared to rightfully view and carry on social life, before he wrongly participates in it. Human nature will exercise its social activities, but the viewpoint should be safe and wholesome before those steps be taken.

Thus, the social service worker may do much to meet the imperative demand for a higher socialized education. Such a worker may teach individuals to be good fathers, mothers, neighbors, and members of society, and to recognize the debt we all owe to humanity in living life wisely.

History, government, economics, ethics, sociology, should be diligently studied, that knowledge of the true social conditions about us may help us to correctly solve the problems presented. We need educated and qualified leaders in this tremendous movement towards freeing our people from this curse of evil, upon which "neither the sword nor the fear of punishment, here or hereafter, has ever had the slightest influence. Education and refinement have produced the only results."

As a new life comes into the world, its parents should prepare for it an environment of truth and purity, and, through knowledge, insure its happiest preservation. "Forewarned is forearmed."

"To education, then, we must look for the prevention of syphilis: not education simply by knowledge of the horrors of the disease, but by building decent, moral standards, that will prevent the chain of infection that includes many who are helpless and innocent."

"How it comes to us, in the silent hours, that truth is our only armor in all passages of life and death."

H. B. RUSSELL.

The Story of Life

A prominent merchant in one of our enterprising cities of the Middle West, when asked what, in his estimation, was the chief business of any man or woman, replied that, "From an economical standpoint, no business can be more productive than the business of making respectable citizens of boys and girls." The acquisition of stocks and bonds, the collection of rare pieces of art, the possession of lands and the achievement of social superiority all pale into insignificance when compared to the satisfaction of having a boy or girl properly qualified for citizenship. This man spoke in terms of economics but he also implied the proper requisites for citizenship in the great kingdom which is not of this world.

Desirable citizens are those who are qualified by training to live fully and completely. Aside from the fact that the two most important blocks in the foundation of the boy or girl are courtesy and obedience, both of which must be well laid and cemented together, it is imperative that there shall be intelligent recognition of the presence of mental and physical propensities and possibilities. The full development of these latent powers is dependent upon the conservational energies arising concomitantly with sex nature. The strenuous life of the twentieth century emphasizes this fact as it has never been emphasized before. Never has the world seen such poignant misery nor experienced such intense and wholesale suffering as at this time. This is largely true because of the false conception of what constitutes the foundation for physical and mental vigor.

The child at birth exhibits certain fundamental instincts the most common of which are the instincts to nurse and to emit cries of pain and anger. Following these the child reacts upon pleasant stimuli, responds to the sublime and the beautiful, exhibits his volition and choice, fear, love, industry, kindness and courage. The foregoing types of human experience are characteristic though not confined to the preadolescent period. With the opening of the adolescent period, however, there is considerable change in the attitude of the boy or girl toward life and toward his individual relation to society. During this period he is distinctly a social being; he craves companionship and this he will have. It is at the close of the period of adolescence that questionable pleasures are especially alluring, hence the explanation as to why so many fall before the onslaught of temptation.

The normal development of all of these instincts and emotions is the goal in training. In conjunction with normal sex development they inevitably have normal expression and reaction; but in case of sex perversity or of sex abrogation they are curtailed and the individual is stripped of individuality and is automatically excluded from legitimate social intercourse and becomes a creature despised of men and women of principle and ideal.

This sex perversity of which we have just spoken, frequently is not carried far enough to affect, noticeably, the vigor of the individual, but instead is responsible for existence of the class which frequent our large cities and become expert traffickers in shame. From this class is recruited those bearing the stamp of vicious disease. The public has been sufficiently informed with reference to this matter so it is needless to attempt further explanation.

The cause for this long list of social ailments may be summed up, for the most part, in the one word ignorance. It seems that one would of necessity, require an unusual amount of credulity to believe that the child is inherently bad. Christ seemed to be of the same opinion else he would not have said, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven." This being our promise, then, the valid conclusion, therefore, is, solve by education. This particular type of education cannot be delegated to the church, nor the school, nor the press, and certainly not to the maladjusted environment of the streets and alleys. This is one of the many functions which can only be performed successfully in the homes. Parents, of course, have many and varied problems, all of which call for special training of a particular kind. The kind of training required for the instruction in matters of sex must be such as to enable the parent to recognize and to deal sympathetically with the many sides of the child.

Professor William McKeever suggests that in teaching the story of life, two methods should be used; one for the pre-adolescent and one for the adolescent. These two methods are briefly outlined as follows:

THE STORY FOR PREADOLESCENTS

1. It will be remembered that the boys and girls of this period have almost no native interest in sex matters. The seed is sown upon virgin soil. This fact at once suggests that the work may be entirely constructive since no erroneous conceptions need to be removed.

2. At this point the question naturally arises as to the use of the fairy story. It has long been the custom to resort to the stork story, to provide the child with fundamental explanations. It is not our intention to attempt to justify the use of these stories. Neither may we say that they should be entirely discarded. We would, however, sound this word of warning; do not expect the story of this type to do duty overtime. There are but few of us who do not remember the time in our childhood experience, when we came to the realization that the story about Santa Claus was all a farce. Yet there were those who, even in spite of our awakening, persisted in their demands that we accept this falsehood as truth and that we be permanently satisfied with it. Do not expect that your child will be permanently satisfied, therefore, with this flimsy explanation of life's mystery.

3. The next step in the story logically utilizes nature as the great source of information. Use the examples of the development of plant and animal life to lead the child to sane conception of the sex matters. This is the point at which parent training should be concentrated. It is imperative that the fundamentals of nature study be mastered. Perhaps one of the most important sources of information is found in the little book written by Doctor Winfield S. Hall, of Northwestern University. This book is published by the Association Press, New York.

4. The physical life of the child should be carefully supervised and guarded. Much attention should be given to the personal hygienic conditions. Insist upon regularity of habits of living.

5. Play upon the romantic spirit of the age to instill in the mind a wholesome respect for womanhood. It will be observed that the two foundation stones previously laid, now become the chief support of the superstructure, character. If courtesy and obedience have been made a part of the child life the remaining part will be comparatively simple.

THE STORY FOR ADOLESCENTS

1. Be sure to take a new inventory of the dominant characteristics of the child. The stock will be found to have been greatly augmented. The problem becomes more complex. There is an ever increasing number of mental and physical experiences which must be understood by the parents.

2. Rapid sex changes are now in evidence. The mistake is commonly made in entering upon an era of repression both on the part of the parents and on the part of the child. On the contrary it is wise to provide healthy sex stimuli in the form of proper social intercourse. This intercourse should be, by all means, subjected to supervision by an intelligent authority. The child demands this socialization and it should be provided for. It is unwise to allow the adolescent to participate too frequently in social gatherings, even though they may be properly supervised, lest they constitute too much of a strain upon the child, physically speaking.

Some of the common means of socialization are, the school, the little club party, the attendance at church services, and the gang meetings. We are not slow to realize the advisability of superstition of gangs and clubs, but we seldom realize the danger of allowing children to go to church unaccompanied by parents. Many a child has acquired filthy habits within the beneficent shadow of the church spire, while unsuspecting parents within listened to the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ and wondered at the generous provision for the salvation of man. There is one feature of the old-time religion, which modern ideals could well indorse and that is the custom of having the family sit together in the family pew.

3. Full confidence should exist between parent and child. If this confidence exists there is little chance for the child becoming polluted by the advice of coarse-minded people.

4. Toward the end of the adolescent period there are numberless whirlpools of temptation. This is the time to enter upon a more or less technical explanation of the social diseases. Explain how they originate, how they may be transmitted and the terrible consequences of their having been contracted. If there has been no omission of the preceding steps in the story the young man or young woman will recoil in horror from taking fatal steps which inevitably mean destruction of both body and mind.

5. Finally hold up before the mind of the boy and girl the ideal family. Impress upon them the fact that the fundamental institution of the race is the family. Magnify the calling of parenthood.

We can hardly fail to appreciate the tremendous consequences of the proper solution of this problem. It is veritably a problem of life or death; life of the most brilliant prospects and possibilities, or death of the most ignominious character. "The glory of God is intelligence," and his salvation is full and complete. CHARLES E. IRWIN.

Kirtland District

The sisters of the Kirtland District held their annual business meeting at our district conference, March 17, at Cleveland, and the following officers were sustained: Sister W. C. George, president, Sister E. M. Green, vice president, Sister Alma O. Curry, secretary-treasury.

From reports we have received from our different locals, we indeed feel encouraged in the good work. One relief and service department which has just been organized a very short time, and with just twelve sisters, has raised $114.72 and $92.49, of this was turned over for local branch expenses to help pay for a new church. So see what the sisters can do in helping to carry on this grand work, if they will work faithfully together. Other reports as well were very encouraging.

The Oriole girls are making a wonderful stride forward, and we find every mother who thoroughly understands this grand work for our girls, are very anxious for their girls to be Orioles. We are glad to report that a circle of Orioles is now in every branch in our district, with the exception of one—and they want it there now, we understand. These are some of the many good reports we hear from the mothers whose daughters are Orioles: "Why, I never have any more trouble seeing that our girls beds are made, for they are winning points by doing so," and "Isn't this a grand work for our girls?" etc.

We are glad also to report other departments are doing splendidly as well. ALMA O. CURRY, Secretary.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Bootman-Borden Debate

The first of April closed the first debate ever held by our people in Western Montana District. A year ago last March, E. M. Borden (member of the nonprogressive wing of the Christian Church), from Little Rock, Arkansas, came to Woodside, Montana, and began a series of meetings in the club house. Brother Johnson and some other Saints attended and towards the close he attacked the Book of Mormon. The Saints would not stand for that, so Brother Johnson asked him if he would debate with our people. He said he would.

Brother Peter Anderson (our missionary in charge) soon got in correspondence with him. After an exchange of a few letters he turned our part over to Brother W. P. Bootman. In process of time they agreed to debate what is commonly known as church propositions. The debate to continue for ten nights, five nights on each proposition.

Proposition No. 1 read as follows: Resolved that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which I, W. P. Bootman, am a member, is in harmony in faith, doctrine, practice, organization, and teaching, with the church of the New Testament organized by Christ about nineteen hundred years ago. W. P. Bootman to affirm, E. M. Borden to deny.

Proposition No. 2: Resolved that the Church of Christ, of which I, E. M. Borden, am a member, is scriptural in faith, doctrine, practice, organization, and teaching, and is the church of the New Testament organized by Christ about nineteen hundred years ago. E. M. Borden to affirm, W. P. Bootman to deny.

You will recognize the two propositions are not worded alike. His argument was that Bootman's proposition did not claim that the church he was representing was the church organized by Christ, but one like it. But his proposition states that the church he is representing is the church of the New Testament.

He tried to make quite a play on the wording of the two propositions. He said in order for Bootman (he would not call him Mr. Bootman or W. P. Bootman or Brother Bootman, just bawled out "Bootman"—our man called him "worthy opponent" or "Brother Borden") to maintain his proposition he must prove that the church Christ organized died as dead as a doornail.

On the apostasy Brother Bootman made a good, strong argument, using many scriptural references in connection with history, proving a complete falling away after Christ's time. To offset the argument Borden's main scriptures were Daniel 3: 44, Matthew 16: 18, also Revelation 12: 6, 14. He claimed this last text proved the church did not die for it was "fed" and "nourished." Our man showed that the authority or the right to represent God among men was taken from the earth. The prophets and apostles were killed, hence the church was disorganized. No gifts, no revelations, stripped of all her beauty and power, and had become defiled with the "Kings of the earth," (Revelation 17: 2).

On Matthew 16: 18 Mr. Borden took the position that the word church was the antecedent of the pronoun it and the pronoun correctly translated is feminine gender, therefore the rock or revelation cannot be the antecedent of the pronoun it. Brother Bootman took the position that the word rock (which meant the revealed Christ) was the antecedent of the pronoun it and that in the translation of the Bible forty-seven of the best scholars were employed and they translated it neuter gender, not feminine. Also, the gates of hell or powers of earth prevailed against the church (Matthew 11: 12), but the gates of hell never prevailed against the rock (the revealed Christ). Proof: Psalm 24: 7, 8; Ephesians 4: 9, 10; 1 Peter 3: 18; Revelation 1: 18.

On Daniel 2: 44 Mr. Borden said that was the kingdom set up in Christ's time. Brother Bootman showed it could not be, for the image was not developed. These "kings" were not in existence; the Romans had full power (Luke 2: 1) and the full image did not appear all at one time till 1830, when the kingdom that was never to be given to another people, but stand forever, was set up by command of God.

Brother Bootman affirmed his proposition the first five nights under trying conditions. The power and goodness of God was the only thing that kept him up. The first night he and I preferred to walk to the club house, about two miles. When we got there we were very warm. From that Brother Bootman took cold; the next day he was burning up with a fever and in bed nearly all day. We were very much alarmed about his condition, but just before time to go to the debate we all gathered in the room and had prayer and I administered to him. The good Spirit was given to the healing of our brother and the comforting of our drooping souls. The third night just as we were about to start meeting a dispatch was handed Brother Bootman, bringing the sad news that his brother Charles, of Springfield, Missouri, was killed that morning.

Brother Bootman, in summing up, clearly showed that the church which was organized in eighteen hundred and thirty by command of God was in every respect in harmony with the church that Christ organized about nineteen hundred years ago.

Mr. Borden, in opening up his affirmation, said the issue was between our church and the one he represented. He concluded to talk about our church instead of affirming his proposition. Some of his pet phrases were "Old Joe," "Rot-ten Book of Mormon," "Mormon dope." He did not use one of our church books in the debate; his Book of Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and Pearl of Great Price he got from Utah. Next came Shook, Bays, and R. B. Neal. Every book Brother Bootman used, but one, were their own publications, and this point was made plain to the people: That if a man had a desire to be fair he would not use the enemy's books but would be willing to use our own publications.

Mr. Borden in regard to church organization, gifts and blessings, took the old beaten course: death does not destroy the apostles—apostles never had any succession, no gifts, no Holy Ghost, no revelation. Brother Bootman used very effectually against his argument Amos 3: 7; 1 Thessalonians 1: 5; 1 Corinthians 12: 3; Hebrews 5: 4. The agreement was that each man was to come indorsed by his church as sound in the faith and a Christian gentleman. When I asked Mr. Borden for his indorsement he said he did not have any but he was always indorsed. Brother Bootman pressed him so hard for an indorsement and to tell the people where he got the authority to act in the name of Christ, about the second night on his proposition he had his moderator, Reverend James (a minister of the progressive faction), read an indorsement Borden got in 1902 while he was in Texas, nearly fifteen years ago.

In answer to where he got his call he read 2 Timothy 2: 2, "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." He classed himself as among the "faithful men," so it applied to him.

Mr. Borden said if Alexander Campbell organized a church he never joined it. He said all there was to it was one day he heard a whistle blow—it sounded good to him; he heard a bell ring—it had the right jingle; then he saw a train come along and he got on and he found Campbellism on the same train. Of course he tried to establish Pentecost as the starting point for that train, but every time he tried it he ran the train, crew and all square into the Babylonian station, so by and by Brother Bootman located its starting point for him away down in the State of Ohio, A. D. 1837, and Alexander Campbell the spiritual head of the whole concern. Pentecost is surely a treasured spot with those fellows. He tramped around there so much until, as brother Simons says, "he tramped all the grass down."

Mr. Borden took the position that the gathering of Israel is spiritual and Christ is reigning now as king on the throne of David. Brother Bootman showed that as Israel's scattering was literal, so shall the gathering be. Ezekiel 37 and Jeremiah 31 were two of his strong texts. He showed that Christ was not crowned king yet but is a prince (Acts 5: 31)—the son of a king. God was "King of the Saints" (Revelation 15: 3). Jesus was not reigning now but a mediator between God and man (Timothy 2: 5)—an advocate with the Father (1 John 2: 2). For him to reign on his own throne was yet future (Revelation 3: 31; Matthew 25: 31).

We had a good hearing throughout all the debate—the last night between three and four hundred. Brother Bootman made a good impression on the minds of the people in his closing speech. Every one parted feeling good. As a whole we were well satisfied with our first debate in the Western Montana District. May God bless these good seed sowers, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

RACE TRACK, MONTANA, April 19, 1917.

"Just a Little Cloud"

For several days before Easter I had been discouraged—almost sick and nervous—and with losing sleep on Saturday night I was not in a very good condition spiritually on Sunday morning. I did not want to go to Sunday school and as my baby was not well I thought I surely had a good excuse for remaining home.

At the dinner table in an unguarded moment I remarked to my husband that I had heard him say so many times there was nothing to religion that I had almost come to the conclusion there wasn't. He said, "Yes, but you have told me many times you knew there was." In another moment I was sorry for what I had said, but still I did not want to go to Sunday school, and said so, stating my reason that the baby wasn't well. My husband told me he did not think it would hurt the baby, and I had better go. So I decided I would go, although I didn't feel like it would benefit me any.

All the way of one and one half miles I felt bad and said I wished I had stayed home. We were late, which did not improve matters, and all through Sunday school I felt as if there were nothing in it—just a form. But it being the Sunday General Conference opened, one of the sisters, seeing the poem in the Stepping Stones "The lad in overalls blue," and thinking it an appropriate time to read it, did so, making the request that the Sunday school join in at the close and sing, "We thank thee, O, God, for a prophet."

With the reading of the poem such an influence of the Spirit came over me that I had not known for many a day, and when the singing commenced I could not stay the tears, for it was made so plain to me that there was something in our religion and we did indeed have a true prophet to guide us in these latter days.

Sincerely,
EFFIE J. DENTON.

Independence Stake

Class studies which had been postponed during General Conference are again being taken up at First Branch, also at the Second Branch and Walnut Park. Enoch Hill has a flourishing Religio under Brother Gard's supervision, and the Sunday school, with Brother L. B. Winslow, is doing excellent work.

Now that the Quorum of the Twelve are still in council work here, and several of the missionary force still linger at home, being busy with their spring duties at gardening, etc., the Saints have their help also in spiritual ways, and hear many testimonies that give light and comfort. The midweek prayer meetings are always well attended and interesting. On April 18 two sisters and a brother were confirmed. On April 20 at the Religio Brother L. E. Hills, with the aid of a Book of Mormon map, explained to an audience of fifty eager listeners, the migrations and events of Jaredite and Nephite history, and from a viewpoint not altogether generally taken by the Saints.

The present greatest war in history, with its hazards and horrors, is awakening the minds of some to the predictions of the ancient prophets, and is spoken of by noted men of our time as "a great uprising of the conscience of mankind to put an end to the rule of Satan on earth."

Mr. Hutchinson, a coal merchant here, has offered his three hundred and twenty acres of land to help along greater food production at this crisis. A meeting will be held in the woman's building April 26, to discuss with President Frederick M. and President Walter W. subjects pertaining to the attitude of Latter Day Saint women in the war. Also it is announced that Governor F. D. Gardner will speak at the flag raising to be held April 28 on the courthouse lawn.

Around Des Moines, Iowa

At the quarterly business meeting on April 2 twenty-two letters of removal were received and twelve granted, bringing the branch membership up to about five hundred and twenty-five. Also Brother Orman Salisbury was appointed as campaign manager for a series of big meetings planned for next fall. We hope to turn the city upside down.

Our church building which was dedicated little more than a year ago, is already frequently taxed to its full capacity, especially at Sunday school. Continued growth will force the consideration of means to fill the demand for more room, possibly by the erection of a new building of larger dimensions or the organization of a new branch on the west of the Des Moines River, where there is already a membership of over one hundred.

The branch membership covers a rather extensive territory. Though the majority of the members are located in the city's area of sixty-six square miles, yet we have members in fourteen different localities, ranging from rural communities to large towns, within ten miles of Des Moines; and further, Des Moines Branch is represented in twenty-two other Iowa towns. This condition affords an excellent opportunity for the local officers to build up the work in the regions round about if they will but move out and occupy. The Saints at Clive and Valley Junction meet quite regularly for prayer meetings under the leadership of some of the branch officers.

We feel that Des Moines has been specially favored in that the recent Conference has approved the call and ordination of three of our number to the office of high priest; namely: D. T. Williams, J. F. Mintun, and E. O. Clark, the latter also to be ordained a bishop.

Death claimed the child of Sister Everett and the funeral sermon was preached by Elder J. F. Mintun on Monday, April 16.

Returning from General Conference, Elder J. J. Cornish preached in the church on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon and evening. Elder H. O. Smith was the speaker Sunday morning and continues for a series of services for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

Insignificant

It was Lincoln who said, "God must love common folks, since he made so many of them." To what observer of life has not the same thought come? We note that the smallest fraction of our race attains to distinction. The great remainder is made up of humble, unknown folks expecting no "heraldry and pomp and power" and looking for no praise of anything they are to do. One time in midocean the engines of the ship stopped for only a few minutes their steady pounding. There was a brief service on deck and then a heavy shotted hammock shroud dropped into its vast and wandering grave. Inquiry as to this death on shipboard elicited the information that the man was "only a stoker," and as the great ship plowed on, his fellow passengers could not even learn his name.

Of what a host is this poor workman, unwept, unhonored and unsung, the representative! Think of the forgotten millions who do the work of the world and make our civilization possible. Think of the thousands forgotten who make our church life possible. Like the sands of the seashore for multitude, they receive no praise of men nor stand for a minute's time under the calcium ray of fame. They are the sons of Martha laboring all the days of their lives that others may eat the fruit of their labors.

The sense of insignificance that settles down on all of us at times has its peril. It may become a fruitful source of discontent. Anyone with a spark of ambition longs for some light of his own in the hall of fame, yearning for some performance a little better than that of the common. He resigns himself at last to silence only with a pang. The sense of personal insignificance, moreover, may be a source of temptation, for one may try to hide behind it. The man with one talent, or with half a talent, decides that since nothing much is expected of him, he refuses to make his humble contribution to life.

The truth is that insignificant people are of more importance than they have dared to believe. When the final record is written it may appear that hewers of wood and drawers of water are on a par with kings and poets. Some time, somewhere, the recognition due to common, faithful lives will be accorded them.

A biography of the famous Earl of Shaftesbury would be sadly incomplete without the story of a faithful old servant at Blenheim, Maria Millis. This good woman awakened the first music of the noble man's spiritual life. In her will she left her watch to her young master and to the day of his death he never wore another, declaring, as he displayed it, "This was given me by the best friend I ever had."

Though one is bound down day after day to a commonplace task, it is plain that he needs not to live a commonplace life.

He may be a workman needing not to be ashamed. The life is not insignificant but gloriously significant that cares less for the reputation than for worth and is willing to do chores for God.

"Take No Thought for the Morrow"

In reading the HERALD of March 28, I note one of our western brethren says the sermon writers all fail to interpret Doctrine and Covenants 83:14. I have a file of the Religio Quarterlies bound in book form and copy from lesson 5, April 26-May 2, 1914, some comments on 83:16-20: "Take no thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat," etc. Infidelity is hard pressed when it uses this text to show that Christianity is not practical. Psychology (one of the deepest sciences) must admit that this teaching of Jesus is one of the most important credited to him. It teaches the conservation of energy in the man of the world, and the retention of faith in the minister of spiritual things. Of course we must give the word thought its proper meaning; namely, worry, anxiety, overcarefulness. It was so understood in the days of King James, when the Bible was translated, for we read of a queen who 'died of too much thought,' meaning worry. A modern translation is 'Be not therefore anxious for the morrow.' (A. V.) However, the language was directed to the ministry, or disciples, whose each day is a complete circle of time, beginning and ending with prayer."

From Here and There

In S. W. Tomlinson's letter of April 4 there seems to have been an omission on page 333, the 35th line. It should read: "Let all those that read this article and wish to comply with the plan, notify their bishop."

Mrs. Jennie Crabb, home department superintendent of the Spokane District Sunday school, suggests that home department pupils should not forget the effort to raise the amount of our Christmas offering this year. She admonishes not only those in her district but all isolated members everywhere to work with the schools in this commendable effort.

We have the following from Mrs. J. H. Amend, of Wichita: Saints at Hugoton, Kansas, are hoping for the return of A. C. Martin to that place. During a four-week meeting he baptized seventeen and organized a Sunday school with an attendance of approximately forty. No branch organization has been made yet, but all are hoping and praying that in due time a branch may be organized. Eight persons have taken up Religio home department work, thus helping to make "Every Saint a home student." Good interest is reported at Rolla and Moscaro, near Hugoton, where Brother Martin has also been preaching. The Saints at Hutchinson, Kansas, where, as yet, there is no branch, have organized a Sunday school with good attendance. They are able to have preaching nearly every Sunday, and meet for prayer meeting every Sunday at 2.30 p. m. Elder T. C. Turpen, who lives at Wherry, is in charge.

Like so many other brilliant Russians, the late savant, Elie Metchnikoff, was the child of an orthodox aristocrat and an intellectual Jewess. The "peculiar people" are a valuable asset wherever they are encouraged to settle and develop mentally.—The Medical World.

Remarkable Result from Paying Tithes

[In pursuance to a request published in the HERALD of the 18th the following extract from Zion's Ensign has been sent to us for publication. We would especially call attention to the fifth paragraph, that they were urged to pay their tithing not with the expectation of the Lord's blessing them, but for duty's sake. We should do right because of our love of God and of the work, not because we hope for an immediate reward, even though blessings do and will follow right doing.—EDITORS.]

A very small insect, almost invisible, was imported from France [to the Society Islands] a few years ago in house plants. In this warm climate they have multiplied so abundantly, because of no winter, that they have threatened the destruction of every coconut tree on the islands. This means more, perhaps, than many at first will imagine, but when it is considered that the coconut is really the tree of life here, furnishing food, water and houses, and being the only food grown on the islands, it will be seen what a great loss they are about to realize. Some islands are not yet affected, but where the Saints dwell the insects are especially bad.

This year they began to make their appearance on this island, Arutua. The Saints, becoming alarmed, thought it time to repent and if possible obtain from the Lord the reason for the plague, so the officers of the branch appointed three days of fasting and prayer. In the evening of the third day all gathered in the church for prayer. During this meeting ten open visions were given and two prophecies.

The first vision seen was a man in midair with a fan in his hand, fanning as if driving something away. This vision they failed to understand perfectly, but the president informed them it indicated favor from the Lord and for them to persevere.

The next vision was a trunk, such as is here used for money. It was filled, and more, with money. After reasoning and praying, a second box was seen without a dollar in it which they were told was the Bishop's box, which at this time at this mission did not have a dollar in it. This explained what the other box was, namely, their own, and though filled with money they had not paid one dollar tithing.

They speedily and very faithfully repented—everyone, children and all, prayed for forgiveness, covenanting with the Lord to pay their tithing in the future. Every soul in the house old enough to talk prayed for forgiveness, even Catholics and outsiders doing the same. The president urged them to pay their tithing, not with the expectation of the Lord blessing them but for duty's sake.

Other visions were seen, and one brother in prophecy told them the cause of the plague, or insects, was that they had not given the Lord his tenth, but if they would do their duty as they had promised God would cause a strong wind to blow and drive the insects into the sea, and that was the meaning of the man with a fan seen in the vision.

That day many of the Saints paid their tithing, and up to the present about five hundred dollars has been paid into the hands of the bishop's agent in less than three months by the membership of fifty-nine.

Shortly after the prophecy above referred to by one of the natives, Moe by name, a very strong wind, and quite cold, blew for nearly a week, nearly putting an end to the insects, so much so that when we came here I remarked to the Saints: "How green the trees look," and they told me the reason.—J. W. Peterson, in Zion's Ensign, February, 1901.

Concerning the Sacrament

Editors Herald: By request I submit the following letter written to a brother in reply to questions touching the sacrament.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 26, 1917.

Elder _____,

Dear Brother: In your communication of March 17 you say that you "have taken the position that a branch officer has no right to refuse the sacrament to a member sitting in the meeting, when there has been no visiting or labor performed or in any way the member been advised that such treatment would be accorded," and that you "interpret the statement 'to see that none partake unworthily' to mean to do so by putting the law in operation—the proper officers at work, and not to 'sit as judge and jury' and curtail a member's rights without warning."

You wish to know if you are in accord with me in this matter. I read your letter to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric, and the consensus of opinion seemed to be that it was scarcely proper for a church officer to arbitrarily (and especially publicly) refuse to administer the sacrament to an individual. It is generally understood that a member is in "good standing" until charges have been formulated and entertained by the proper official calling in question the member's standing. So generally the question of partaking of the sacrament is one to be left to the member. But when it is known to an officer that a member is in transgression, it is quite within his rights for the branch president or a subordinate officer by instruction or with the knowledge of the branch president to quietly and privately visit the said member and advise him to refrain from partaking until proper procedure has removed the objection; and when such advice is given a member he should cheerfully comply, knowing that the right of appeal to the tribunals of the church will protect his interests.

With these modifications I think the attitude expressed in your letter quite agrees with the general opinion held by the members of the Joint Council mentioned. . . .

Fraternally yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

MUSCATINE, IOWA, March 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have just closed quite a successful series of meetings here, and feel encouraged over the outlook. Most of the members of the branch have been aroused to a sense of duty, and a marked interest has been shown among a few outsiders inasmuch that we expect four or five baptisms as soon as Brother Dykes, the branch president, returns from General Conference.

One man who has been searching for the truth for the last ten years, and not being able to find among the different religious bodies of the world that which would agree with his understanding of the word of God, feels now fully convinced that he has found the people he has been looking for all these years in his search for the truth. He has walked all around Latter Day Saintism, thinking it not worth while to consider their teachings until he happened to drop into our meeting one evening last week, and now he is rejoicing that he has found the truth at last and we expect he and his wife, along with others, to be baptized at the first opportunity.

On the whole I feel that our feeble efforts here are not in vain, and will result in good to the work.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and the spread of the gospel I remain as ever,

E. R. DAVIS.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, April 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have to be tried in all things, so we are finding out what it is to be isolated. Time will prove whether we are to be overcome by reason of that condition or not.

The church publications are doubly dear to us now, when we can get them. We live twenty-five miles north (thirty by winter road) from Glasgow, Montana, on my youngest son's homestead. He is Robert E. Anderson. Ernest and daughter Thelma, and Omar Le Nunn (my son-in-law) and family are with us at present. Our nearest neighbors are three and one half miles away—Brother W. J. Hovey and family. We have been talking of organizing a Sunday school, but some parties tell us we have no authority to organize one. How is that Mr. Editor? I supposed everyone, or any number of people, had authority to pray, or to organize a Sunday school, if they desired to, though the school might not belong to the General Sunday School Association until they were adopted by vote.

This is April 1, and we tried to comply with the request in the HERALD to fast and pray for God's Spirit to be with his people all over the world, and especially at our coming General Conference.

We were glad to read the testimony of God's power to save, in "The perils of the sea," in our March Autumn Leaves. People will surely need our heavenly Father's protection in many perils on the sea nowadays. How vividly it brings to our minds the prophetic statements of the seer of latter days, one of which is: "Mine indignation is soon to be poured out without measure upon all nations, and this will I do when the cup of their iniquity is full."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4. Also in section 61: 3: "Wherefore the days will come that no flesh shall be safe upon the waters, and it shall be said in days to come, that none is able to go up to the land of Zion, upon the waters, but he that is upright in heart." Surely this is being fulfilled in our day. I pray that we may all become upright in heart. Many will desire to come to this land, "Joseph's land," wherein Zion is situated. Some appear to think there will only be one place for the gathering of his people, Independence. But does not section 98 intimate that there will be more than one place appointed? and they shall be called stakes, and surely other stakes are now established. Section 91 shows that Kirtland was to be a stake; another revelation says, "The Lord will build up Kirtland in its time."

[Anyone can organize a Sunday school. It is better to do so with the concurrence of the superintendent of the district Sunday School Association. It may become a member of the district association (or general, if out of organized territory) by adopting the constitution and by-laws and reporting the organization, with list of officers and their addresses.—EDITORS.]

STANDISH, MICHIGAN, April 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: Myself and companion are the only Saints living in Standish, but we are trying each day to get nearer the blessed Savior. When we stop to think how much he has done for us, it seems that we will never be able to pay the debt of love we owe him.

We have our little home Sunday school, our own family—four in number—but God said where two or three have met together I will be one in their midst, to own and to bless. I truly felt that he was with us Sunday, April 1, and I felt the influence of his Holy Spirit resting upon us in great power, and I thank God that I am a Latter Day Saint and we are serving a true and living God, trying to come up higher.

My companion underwent an operation in January. People said she would never come home alive, but I was shown that she would. What joy and comfort I derived from that revelation, words cannot express.

We love to read the letters from our brothers and sisters, as we are isolated from church privileges. The letters cheer us up and we hope the time will speedily come when we can mingle our voices in prayer and thanksgiving with the Saints of God. Pray for us, and our prayers will always be for the upbuilding of this great and glorious cause we love so well.

Your brother in the faith,
Box 94. WILLIAM GILLILAND.

FORTRESS MONROE, VIRGINIA, April 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I last wrote to you through the HERALD. I hope you will be pleased to hear from me once more. I want to thank the Saints who were so kind to write me, for they have cheered me up and made life worth while. I am always pleased to hear from them.

I love to read the HERALD and pass it on to some one else who will read it also. I noticed while looking over the annual report of the church recorder for 1915-1916, that this State, Virginia, had thirty-four members in 1915 and no increase for 1916, that there are two ministers appointed us. I would love very much to know who and where these two ministers are located. I have a few folks who are willing to read the Book of Mormon and the Church History, volume 1. I ask an interest in your prayers, dear Saints, that I may not fall by the way. The more I am absent from you, the more I feel you my friends, or brothers and sisters, and I am made to see that I must strive and put forth an effort to serve my Lord.

Your brother in Christ,
Fourth Company C. A. C. CHARLES L. GORE.

MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA, April 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: If some of the elders can arrange to stop in Muskogee over Sunday on their way from conference to their mission field, they will find an open door and welcome at the home of a family by the name of Kline, 618 South Twentieth Street. Take Elgin Avenue car; get off at Fifteenth and Fremont, walk one block south to Mr. Kline's, or one block east to where I live.

I have been with my sister and family since last June. My brother-in-law is county judge of Muskogee County, and the Mr. Kline whom I speak of is an attorney-at-law. He and his wife were formerly members of the Baptist Church here. They are fine people and, I believe, looking for the true church of Christ. I have given them some of our church literature and told them of the latter-day work. I hope some of the elders can stop here, and that good may be accomplished. I have found no Saints since coming here, and feel deeply the loss of church privileges, but have felt the peaceful influence of God's Spirit when trying to do my duty.

In gospel Love,
SISTER M. D. HIMMELGARN.

1403 Fremont Avenue.

GUELPH, ONTARIO, April 11, 1917.

Editors Herald: Inclosed find postal order for $1.50 for renewal of my subscription to your paper. I fail to see any improvement in the paper. As it is a church paper I cannot understand why so much space is allotted to temporal affairs, for we can read all about the war and its hideousness in the daily papers which have correspondents on the field.

I am aware that we are admonished to read good books. I noticed in one issue an advertisement for a book of short stories that would be very handy for missionaries and preachers. (This written by a minister of another church.) It seems strange that this appears, for I have heard it stated that the ministers of other churches get their sensational stories from books in many instances and it behooves us as a church to look to our God for instruction and not parrot other churches.

Yours truly,
C. W. SHARPE.

SIBELY, MISSOURI, April 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: On last Friday afternoon C. J. Hunt called the writer by phone, asking him to come to Sibley for Sunday and look after the interests of the church here. He advised me that a man by the name of McCormick was to lecture against the Book of Mormon. This man McCormick is filling the pulpit of the Christian (commonly called Campbellite church in this place. On Saturday Brother Hunt again called me, saying that information had reached him that the aforesaid McCormick was to lecture on Saturday night also, and that it would be advisable for me to go that evening, which I did.

Reaching Sibley just a few moments before the lecture began, I called Mr. McCormick aside and told him I was representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and handed him a written request as follows:

"Mr. McCormick—Dear Sir: I have come down from the city of Independence to hear your lectures and take notes for reply, if such is necessary. Will you please be kind enough to give volume and page or chapter and verse, also state what work you are reading from and who is the publisher? I will do this in my reply, and am asking you to be kind enough to extend to me the favor I am ready to give to all. Yours respectfully," and signed it. The reply he made to it was, "Yes, yes."

His first lecture worried him considerably. He turned pale several times and seemed to chafe under the fact that I was present. I challenged him to produce proof of some of his assertions, which, of course, he failed to give. His stock in trade was the works of Mr. Shook. He, however, carefully avoided telling what he read from, and if I secured a reference I had to force it out of him by persistent request. By Sunday evening he had gained a little more courage by reason of the fact that the elders of his church denied me the privilege to ask him a question. He spread himself considerably on Sunday evening, and made himself very conspicuous by reason of the crudeness and vulgarity of his speech. He seeks to imitate R. B. Neal or Mr. Shook.

On Saturday evening I asked him if he would bring a recommendation from the mayor of his home town, indorsing him as a Christian gentleman. He said he would, but the next morning he had repented of that and told his people he wouldn't bother about anything like that. However, their curiosity is aroused by reason of my candor, and I have been informed from a very credible source that the Christian people are now writing to Holden, his home town, to ascertain his standing.

On Sunday evening I spoke on the street corner and made a strong appeal to the people, touching the ethics of Jesus. The next morning I made arrangements for the skating rink, and then had three hundred handbills printed, a sample of which I am enclosing. Two of the lectures therein announced have already been delivered, and the attendance and interest has been good. I have entirely ignored his "filth" and have confined myself to a constructive message, but as one person remarked on yesterday, that I had by my kindness and Christlike manner "taken the hide off of Mr.

McCormick." [The subjects listed are: "The true Christian spirit," "The ethics of Latter Day Saints," "The purpose and place of the Book of Mormon," "Was Joseph a prophet of God."]

The people are very much displeased with his method and many have said they will neither go to that church nor assist with funds while he is here. They are quite favorably impressed with our message, and especially so because I have dealt so mildly with a man who has made himself so contemptible.

We can't afford to retaliate and throw out harsh statements; we should enable people to see that we are Christlike in spirit and in meekness, and this contrast will do far more to bring them to the truth than a harsh denunciation of false methods will.

I am hopeful in the final triumph of right over wrong.

Yours truly,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Springtide

Daydawn, sunrise, balmy breeze,
And a robin song;
Murmuring brooks and whispering leaves;
And the wild bees' hum.
Tinkling bells in meadows green;
Smell of flowers and forest sheen;
So the mornings come.

Sunlight, noontide—quiet o'er all;
The far, deep blue
Of May-day skies, with white cloud-ships
Slow drifting through.
Chatter of wrens and a swallow's cry—
Swift whirring of wings as passing by;
A catbird's mew.

Shadows which lengthen, and lowing herds;
A sunset sky;
Answering notes of parting birds
As they westward fly;
Twilight 'steals o'er the forest dim;
Earth sinks to rest with a slumber hymn;
Nighttime is nigh.

Spring

A long last look at winter—
And then comes thoughts of spring:
Our hearts rejoice together
To hear the robins sing.

Oh, joyful, joyful spring
With skies of deepest blue
The blessings of Mother Nature
Are all bestowed on you.

The green grass of the meadows,
The wild flower sweet and fair,
The running streams and brooklets,
Make our spring days most rare.

And now, most pleasant springtime,
We welcome you anew;
For we are optimistic
And expect the best of you.

STEPHEN ROBINSON.

God's Great Love

O, the height of God's great love,
Higher than the sky above,
Higher than the stars that shine—
Shine in my soul, O love divine.

High and deep, so broad and wide,
Flows God's love from Jesus' side.
Send its fullness from above,
Give unto us thy saving love.

Deep in God's great love to me,
Deeper than the deepest sea;
Drop the line still more and more,
Such love was never known before.

Long is God's great love, so vast,
Reaching far back in the past,
Mine to-day, to-morrow sure,
God's love forever will endure.

Broad is God's great love, so wide,
See, if flows a mighty tide.
O, the joy, so great, so sweet,
I seek it now at his dear feet.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

To the Saints of Far West and Nodaway Districts: The move having been authorized by General Conference, the Presidency has decided to call a conference of the proposed Far West Stake organization for June 2 and 3 at the Saint Joseph First Church. The conference will assemble at ten o'clock on the morning of June 2. Let the various branches of Far West District and Nodaway District send delegates to this conference.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

Conference Minutes

LONDON, ENGLAND.—At 58 Ickburg Road, Upper Clapton, London, November 18, 1916 (instead of December 2), at the request of U. W. Greene, president of the British Isles Mission. U. W. Greene elected president of conference in association with district president, and usual conference appointments made. The president explained that he wished to meet with the members of the London District, hence the necessity for calling same a little earlier, as he expected to leave immediately for another part of the mission. The reports included the ordination of Priest Dover E. Judd to the office of elder, and Deacon Richard Nash to that of teacher; both of the Enfield Branch. The election of district officers for the coming year was proceeded with. Elder Greene stated that for some time the district president had been Bishop R. May. Since his absence (in America) Elder John A. Judd had had charge of the work of the London District. He regretted Bishop May's absence which was due to the work of his office, and he had been unavoidably delayed. The bishop's duties was the looking after the temporalities of the church—his duties were not within any branch or district—and unless emergencies arose, the bishop should be free to attend to his particular duties. He, the speaker, was quite satisfied that there were those in the district who were quite competent to act as president and counselors, and he recommended the release of the bishop forthwith (his term of office did not otherwise officially expire until December 2, the usual date of conference appointments) and the placing of Elder John A. Judd in the office of the presidency. The recommendation of the mission president carried unanimously, viz, that Bishop May be forthwith released from district appointment and that John A. Judd elected to the office of president of the district. The following were elected: John W. Worth, first counselor; Dover E. Judd, second counselor; Dover E. Judd, secretary; S. Dennis, district recorder and treasurer; D. A. Oakman and James Worth, standing auditing committee; Pearl Crick recommended to general church chorister for appointment to the office of chorister; Florence Wright, historian. Adjourned to meet June 2 and 3 next, according to rule or at the call of the presidency. Dover E. Judd, secretary, 22 Canonbury Road, Enfield, Middlesex, England.

Our Departed Ones

MOORE.—W. I. Moore was born April 13, 1853, at Bellefontaine, Choctaw County, Mississippi. Baptized September 13, 1894, at Ingleside, Arkansas, by J. D. Erwin, and was faithful until death. Died February 10, 1917. Leaves to mourn, his wife and daughter, 3 brothers, and a host of friends. Funeral sermon by E. A. Erwin, to a large gathering of relatives and friends. Interment in the Fanshawe cemetery.

SANDAGE.—Sister Harriet Sandage, in the Lone Rock Branch, Harrison County, Missouri, April 15, 1917, aged 62 years, 3 months and 15 days. Married Jacob Sandage in 1871, in Indiana, who died May 9, 1893. They were baptized in 1875 by Columbus Scott. Moved to Missouri in 1882. Of 10 children, 5 sons and 2 daughters survive their mother, and all but one were present at her funeral, two having come from Montana. Services were held in the Lone Rock Chapel, April 20, in charge of Columbus Scott, sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

STRATTON.—Sister Margaret M. Stratton, wife of James H. Stratton, was born May 18, 1861, Toronto, Canada, and baptized October 7, 1876, in London, Canada, by J. J. Cornish. Died March 29, 1917, at their home in Kansas City, Kansas. There are left to mourn, her husband, 2 sons and 2 daughters, many relatives and a host of sympathizing friends. She was a true wife, a loving mother and faithful Saint. Her life was a worthy example of goodness and faith, and she endured with wonderful patience. Funeral at the Armstrong Church, sermon by R. May, assisted by J. J. Emmett. Burial in Mount Hope Cemetery.

FREE ADVERTISING SERVICE

On the staffs of the Herald Publishing House and the Ensign Publishing House are advertising experts whose experience and training has been such that they can very efficiently serve the church.

Through them the best that has been brought out in the experience of men in the church and in the business world is freely and comprehensively laid before those in need of such service.

If you feel that the money you spend for securing publicity is not getting the maximum results, write them. If you expect to advertise a series of services and want to get a good attendance, let them tell you how others have solved the problem.

One missionary has written in regarding help of this kind: "Your ideas on publicity are not only good—they are grand." Others have as kindly commended our workers in this department.

Why not use the training of these men, so freely offered?

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION
A. Carmichael, Manager

KNAPP.—Hattie Clarice Knapp was born in Columbus, Ohio, March 7, 1839, and died in Lamoni, Iowa, March 27, 1917. Her husband and two children preceded her to the other side. Four children remain: Philip of Caldwell, Idaho, Richard of Baird, Nebraska, Mrs. Mary Reed of Sheridan, Wyoming, and Mrs. Margaret Kline of Lamoni, Iowa. There are also 28 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren as well as many friends to whom she has made herself dear by her many acts of kindness. Baptized in 1860, remaining faithful to the end. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery, sermon by F. A. Smith.

CLARK.—At Omaha, Nebraska, March 22, 1917, Mr. William H. Clark, aged 75 years, 5 months and 17 days. His father, John Clark and his brother James and himself were among the founders and promoters of Davis City, Iowa, from 1871 forward, building the mill in 1875, and the union church in 1878, free for all denominations. They were kind to the Saints before Lamoni had its beginning, and always manifested good will toward us. James loaned the Graceland College fund six thousand dollars at the start. Mrs. Clark and two sons came with the body to Davis City, and, according to her husband's request two years ago, H. A. Stebbins was called to preach the sermon in the church that John Clark built. There was a large congregation, and an attentive hearing. Some came from Leon, Lamoni, and other places, in honor of Mr. Clark.

TUTTY.—Sister Elizabeth Tutty of Outlook, Montana, wife of Brother Walter Tutty, was born at Woolrich, England, January 22, 1886. Married at Rumford, Saskatchewan, March 27, 1905, and moved to Outlook, Montana in 1910. Died April 11, 1917. Leaves to mourn, husband and 5 children. She was one of our faithful workers in the church; her sacrifice was exceptional, and she was always ready and willing to offer her valuable assistance for the onward press of the glorious gospel. She taught in the Sunday school, and had the confidence and the true love of the little ones; for, even yet young, their sympathizing tears were shed from the true, innocent little heart, which proves their true appreciation of their capable teacher. Her parting is deeply felt among the Saints of this district, and also her kind and numerous friends. The community of Outlook surely acknowledged their appreciation by the grand assistance, contributing their very best of care and conveniences to our departed sister unto the last of opportunities. May the Lord bring more pillars of her capability unto this great work. Funeral from the Methodist church, Reverend Dutton of Redstone in charge.

ELVIN.—Robert M., born January 6, 1846, in Glasgow, Scotland. He was blessed at the same place April 22, 1849, by William M. Koachie, D. Drummond and John Gray. Baptized April 15, 1866, at Nebraska City, Nebraska, by George M. Rush. Ordained elder October 21, 1866, at the same place by William A. Litz. In 1887 he removed to Lamoni and has been a member of that branch since February 11, 1888. He went on his first mission in 1868 and continued as appointed until 1914, at which time he was honorably released on account of increasing bodily infirmity. Ordained a high priest April 15, 1890, by John H. Lake and Charles Derry. At the same time he was made a member of the standing high council under the hands of W. W. Blair, which latter position he held until April, 1916, when he was released on account of failing physical powers. He married Miss Emaline A. Hartwell, February 13, 1870. Of their 6 children 3 were taken away in childhood. Sister Elvin was taken July 26, 1898, since which time he has lived with his daughter, Sister Vida Morgan. Three children survive him: Reuben C., of Lamoni, Iowa; Sister Mamie Luff, of Independence, Missouri; and Sister Vida Morgan, of Lamoni, Iowa. There were also 7 grandchildren living, and a brother, John Elvin, of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Brother Elvin was secretary of his quorum from April 7, 1903, to the present year. For a number of years he was secretary of the high council and for several terms a trustee of Graceland College. He was also active as mayor and justice of the peace in his home town. He died at Independence, Missouri, April 20, 1917, aged 71 years, 3 months, and 14 days.

Fewer Eggs are required with ROYAL BAKING POWDER

In many recipes the number of eggs may be reduced with excellent results by using an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, for each egg omitted. The following recipe is a practical example:

Chocolate Sponge Roll

1 1/4 cups flour	2 tablespoons melted shortening
1/2 teaspoon salt	1/4 cup hot water
1 cup sugar	1 teaspoon vanilla
2 eggs	2 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
2 squares melted chocolate

The old method called for 4 eggs and no baking powder

DIRECTIONS—Sift flour, baking powder and salt together three times. Beat whole eggs. Add slowly sugar, then boiling water slowly; add next vanilla, melted chocolate and melted shortening, without beating. Sift in dry ingredients, and fold in as lightly as possible. Pour into large baking pan lined with oiled paper, and bake in slow oven twenty minutes. When done, turn out on a damp, hot cloth, spread with white icing and roll.

Booklet of recipes which economize in eggs and other expensive ingredients mailed free.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

A POSTCONFERENCE RESUME

Some men have been released by the recent conference, or rather they have not been appointed to a mission. We are not, therefore justified in laying these men on the shelf unless they have been tried and found guilty or officially silenced. There are a variety of reasons why certain men have been omitted from the conference appointments. Some have been appointed to other work, as is the case with the presidents of the stakes. Some have been released because of advanced years, which makes it inadvisable that they should continue to travel, and some for other work.

But that does not mean that the man cannot labor locally. To the contrary, he is released from the missionary service in most of these instances so that he may assist in the work locally as his strength permits. In every case it becomes the duty of the local officers to find a place for these men and try to utilize their services; in fact, try to utilize the services of every man in the priesthood. In many instances the older men could assist greatly in caring for the local services, while the younger men push out to hold outside meetings, though the older men may also assist here with advice, with service and example. There are many people who not only would like, but who even prefer to hear these older men speak. Of course there are others who prefer the younger men. All should be provided for.

Then comes the element of progressiveness and education. In the broad definition given by President Smith, every man is educated in some way; i. e., real education is not so much schooling as the "fullest and richest response to the stimuli of our environment."

Over the door of the college at Hampton Roads there occurs these words: "The purpose of education is preparation for life; the test of life is capacity for service." These two may be connected by Herbert Spencer's definition of life as a response to environment.

It may be urged that much of the so-called education has been of the dilettante sort. Some of the work, it is true, has been so superficial and ama-teurish as to be almost soul trying. But that does not mean that we should not seek proper preparation.

It is ridiculous to assume that one can secure from a grammar school education and a year of weekly lectures a profound knowledge of psychology, sociology and economics, or that one with very little schooling can in three months secure a thorough knowledge of English grammar and rhetoric. We need to adapt our educational work to hundreds of our people. There are very many who need grammar, rhetoric, the art of public speaking and homiletics (or how to prepare a sermon). But these things should be taken and used as tools with which we may work, not as dogmas which are setting forth the final results of truth.

It has been urged that there are many who stand in need of such work as this. If so, they should write to the Extension Institute, of which George N. Briggs is assistant director and is now handling much of the work, and C. B. Woodstock is registrar. Both of these men are residents of Lamoni. We might run a series of articles in the HERALD, but only a limited number of our subscribers would be directly interested in such a course.

The work of the Extension Institute is individual. It is not a matter of attending a certain set of lectures such as are offered in various places, but each one receives just those suggestions and work, of which he stands most in need.

We recognize the fact clearly that a young man, let alone one with many years of experience, should be able to take up this early work much more rapidly than a school child, because his added years and experience should give him a broadened viewpoint of life. Also it is significant that children who start late will yet achieve the same amount of school work before reaching their majority.

The first eight years of school work represents a very limited amount of matter, less than the four years of high school. The college work for those still older in years represents double the four years of high school. While in some postgraduate work, an able student may in one year do as much work as in any previous three or four years of school life. In part this may be due, and doubtless is, to trained habits of thought. So those who are older in years should be able to make much more rapid progress than a school child under our present regime.

But there is no royal road to learning. One cannot expect in two or three years of amateur work to gain the same intellectual grasp through schooling that has been secured by such men as President Frederick M. Smith. So do not let this occasional dilettantism too greatly discourage, and at the same time let us not think that a little superficial learning has made us wondrous wise over those who by experience of many years have learned much in a practical way.

But above all, let us not lose sight of the spiritual needs, the vital things of life. Education should be only a means to an end, better living in home and society, better service in church and elsewhere.

HOW MUCH DO WE WASTE?

In this issue appears the second weekly letter sent by Elder Edward Rannie to President F. M. Smith. It contains many matters of marked interest.

We have seen various estimates of the amount wasted in the United States. In the nations of Europe even before the war, economies were practiced which would seem strange in America. We have seen these estimates of wastes run as high as one third, or around ten billion dollars, the annual income being estimated at thirty billion; but we have seen no attempt at verification of such high figures.

Possibly the amount stated in the lecture, $700,000,000, referred principally to food waste, as is indicated in the Saturday Evening Post of May 5. But even at this rate, since the membership of the church in the United States last January was over 70,000, it would mean close to half a million dollars a year wasted by members of the church in this way alone. But, as Brother Rannie points out, we are able to save in other ways; notably our consumption of alcoholic beverages and tobacco should be none.

We have sometimes thought what it would mean if every member of the church, including our business men and farmers, as well as the missionary force from the First Presidency down, were to be placed on a strictly ministerial allowance—the minimum on which we could live. What would it mean, and especially if the amounts saved were turned in to the bishop?

In one year the church debt would be paid, including that of all its institutions. The running expenses of the church would be met, and there would be a truly astonishing surplus on hand.

It has been estimated that the average income per person in the United States is three hundred dollars per year. The missionary allowance is twenty-five dollars a month for the wife, fifteen dollars additional for the husband, if his work requires him to be at home, and from six to nine dollars per child, according to age.

It was estimated two or three years ago that the minimum living wage for a family of five is fifteen dollars a week. It will be noted that this minimum amount is almost exactly the amount allowed for a minister's family. Yet this represents only about fifty per cent of the average income per family of five estimated above. Assume that the average for the members of the church is only two thirds as much as for the United States as a whole, yet if the excess were turned in, it would amount to forty-four dollars per person. In other words, it would appear to be about three million dollars for the whole church. Yet that is a low average. If it equals the average for the United States of three hundred dollars per person it would go over ten million dollars in one year.

That means, if each one of us for one year would deny himself everything except the necessities of life, and turn all of his net income into the church, the church income for that year would be in the millions. We have few very wealthy men, but we also have few of the submerged tenth.

We do not contend that everything we have should be turned over to the bishop. It is merely a question of sacrifice for one year.

With some this would hardly be possible to the full extent, because to do so would mean so much lessened efficiency, that their income would decrease more than in proportion. But it would seem evident, that real care and sacrifice for one year would mean an income of several millions, after making allowance for such cases as the above and after making further allowance for the present increased cost of living.

Our missionaries' families do sacrifice and put up with privations many times, which are painful to them. But if a whole people were making it for one year, how differently the inconvenience would be felt.

THE GOSPEL LITERATURE COMMISSION

One of the actions taken by the recent conventions and conference is indicative of the coordination that may be effected between the church and her children.

From the beginning the church has been a great proselytizing agency. A typical member of this church rejoices so much in the acquisition of the gospel's enlightening influence that he wants to tell everyone who will listen. It is the reputation of the Latter Day Saints that they are all missionaries, in one way or another.

Thousands of tracts as well as books and papers, have been distributed by our people in all walks of life, but it remained for the Religio Society to appoint certain members whose duty it was not only to distribute, but follow up and keep records of the work done along this line. At first this was done in connection with the library workers, but later was separated, and each local society appointed a chairman of a good literature committee, who chose other members and they looked after this special work. The districts elected superintendents to have charge of the work of the local committees, and the General Society elected a superintendent to care for the interests of the entire organization along this special line. Each year he has reported thousands of pieces distributed, but no report could contain the complete record of the good done. Ofttimes one plants what may seem to be but a trifling seed, but it comes back an hundredfold in the harvest. Some who feel that they can do no other worthy service can actively serve in this capacity, though there is opportunity for the utmost wisdom and discretion if one would secure the maximum results.

Brother Harvey Sandy, who has had charge of the work for the Religio for a number of years, came to believe that the church and Sunday school should have an active part in the organized effort toward distribution of church and other good literature. Enlisting the efforts of a few others, the request was made to these organizations last year, and resulted in the election of a commission of three, one each from the three organizations, to unify and extend the work.

It is the hope of the commission to have a similar organization effected in each district, similar in plan to the library commission, and also in each local church community. Where there are all three organizations represented: Church, Sunday school, and Religio, each should elect at the first opportunity, one member, and the three work unitedly to carry out the work of literature distribution. Where there are only two, let them work together—if only one, let it be active. Brother R. W. Farrell, of 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island, will act as superintendent of the commission, and hopes to reach every district and as many of the locals through them as possible, in an effort to place the work on a sound and workable basis. He will be glad to answer inquiries, either by personal letter or by sending circulars covering the points raised.

During the year a leaflet of instructions will be issued, and sent to all interested. In the meantime the procedure is simple and the need for active service imperative. Let every officer who has to do with elections in his district or local see that at the first opportunity some one is elected to represent the organization. These officers should report to Brother Farrell and begin work early. They should have the support of the entire church membership.

THINKERS

In The Outlook for January 3, 1917, J. Madison Gathany, A. M., of the history department of the Providence, Rhode Island, high school, quotes the surprise of a teacher of the eighth grade who found out for the first time that her boys and girls could think for themselves. To this he adds the statement of a high-school teacher of years' experience:

"High school pupils are not able to think for themselves. I am satisfied if they give back to me what the textbook says. That is all I expect."

And finally he quotes a college professor:

"It is not right to expect or to ask students, even in college, to give their own opinions. It is dangerous. Their knowledge is not adequate enough to warrant asking their opinions."

Rightly he criticizes this tendency of education in some quarters to become pol parrot. And as he intimates, while thinking may be dangerous to a monarchy or despotism, it is only so because it is dangerous to the despot, not to the people. In a democracy and we are democrats—using the term in its broader sense and not simply as a member of the democratic party—the larger the number of thinking men and women, the greater is our safety.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Graceland President Receives Medal

President G. N. Briggs has been awarded a silver medal by the international jury of awards of the Panama-Pacific Exposition held at San Francisco. The award was for excellence as collaborator in the United States Bureau of Education.

A French Tract

There has come to our desk a copy of Ce Que Nous Croyons, published by Elder Philemon Pement. It is a French translation of What We Believe, for use in his mission field in Canada. Some of the idioms are of peculiar interest. We are glad to note this extension of our services.

A Request Not Granted

We often get letters with an accompanying request that they be published in the Ensign also. We cannot do this, and do not have time to write all who make this request. Items for publication should be sent direct to the address of the publishers, and unless it is very important, don't send duplicate copies to each. If it is desired to reach the readers of both publications, send your letters or articles at different times and treat your subjects or news items in a different manner.

Opportunities for Two Men

In this issue of the HERALD, the Lamoni Order of Enoch and the stake bishopric both advertise for help. The former has purchased a nicely located roller mill at this place and desire to overhaul the plant and make it of use to the community and church. It is hoped to make this but the beginning of similar enterprises. The stake bishopric also wants a good man to put in charge of acreage belonging to the church around Lamoni. This is a day of preparation for the church—have we not a goodly number ready for these calls?

Deaf Children

The following notice has come to our desk and we publish it for the benefit of those who may be interested. We are informed that the Volta Bureau is headed by Alexander Graham Bell.

Dear Children: Anyone interested in a little deaf child can obtain free literature explaining approved methods of training deaf children from infancy to school age by writing to The Volta Bureau for the Increase and Diffusion of Knowledge Relating to the Deaf, 1601 Thirty-fifth Street, N. W., Washington, District of Columbia. This literature relates only to the training of little deaf children; not to medical treatment nor to be the deafness that comes in later life. Age of child and other details are welcomed.

Suspend Payments on Account of Liquor

The following is from an interview in the Sioux City Journal with Cato Sells, Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

For many years and in many localities there was a reign of debauchery when payments were made. To remedy this condition we sought and found a never before enforced Federal statute empowering the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to suspend payment when it appeared to him that liquor was within the ready reach of Indians receiving the payments. Perhaps the greatest abuse in this respect existed among the Osage Indians in Oklahoma. Nearly two years ago, when about to make a payment there, we notified the county and city officers, the head men of the tribe, and the business men of the community that not a dollar would be paid until we had satisfactory assurance of the strict enforcement of this statute. The immediate effect was pandemonium, but when it was discovered by all concerned that there would be no relenting or compromise every country and city officer, the head men of the tribe, and fifteen hundred citizens, including nearly every business man in Pawhuska, the county seat of Osage County, gave us their written promise and obligation to enforce the law aggressively if we would proceed with the payment. With this assurance, the payment was made, and Osage County has since been one of the driest localities in the United States, with exceedingly gratifying results not only to the Indians but to the business men and taxpayers of that vicinity. We have since carried out this procedure everywhere throughout the Indian country. . . . There is no legitimate place in the world for whisky. Its sale and use is indefensible. Among Indians it is vicious. Liquor is the archenemy of mankind. It might be interesting to know that the drink habit among Indian Service employees is now regarded as cause for removal.

The War

The world conflict has been extended so far and so widely that its effects are becoming felt in practically every home. The zone of activities in France has witnessed sharp and decisive advances on the part of the entente allies, with parts of the Hindenburg line reported as captured and held. The German losses are evidently great, not only in prisoners but in dead and wounded, while not so much is known of the losses by the allies. German ships in our ports are being overhauled and rapidly put into commission by our Government, following Senate action confiscating them. An American ship, the Vacuum, has been sunk by submarine and some of the officers and crew missing. Every effort is being made to replace the shipping being lost by submarines and mines, fifty-nine British vessels being sunk in one week by this means. It seems to be the consensus of opinion that American troops will be sent to French soil as soon as possible. The French party who came over for a war council with our country are now in a tour in the Middlewest. Japan is to send a commission to the United States in an effort to effect a closer cooperation between the two nations. Belgium will receive a liberal portion of the war loan being raised by this Nation. Some disorder prevailed in Petrograd on May 1, and a prominent general was assassinated. Cuban rebels have attacked American lives and property not far from Santiago, and it is reported that the desire of the attackers is for United States intervention, hoping by this method to enforce it. The Senate and House have included in the army appropriation bill a provision which raises the pay of enlisted men from fifteen to thirty dollars a month.

Lamoni Sacrament Service

At the sacrament service of May 6 there was an unusual outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Three spoke in prophecy and two in tongues and gave the interpretations. Especial emphasis was laid upon the revelation given in 1913 to deny all unnecessary wants. Since some have not done so, trouble will come upon them. Not that the Lord had sent it but he will suffer it so that we may learn obedience. The necessity of obedience to the revelation of God was emphasized, but in a surprisingly mild tone, as of a Father pleading gently with his children, that they suffer not at all, but be faithful. Truly in the present time it becomes us to stand in holy places. Truly the outpouring of the Holy Spirit is noteworthy in the reports from many fields, but such pleading brings condemnation unless accompanied by obedience.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

(Sermon by Frederick A. Smith, Thursday evening, August 24, 1916, at Lamoni Stake reunion. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

I do not expect to get you out on anything new to-night, possibly I had better keep back on old ground a little while longer.

In the fourteenth chapter of John and the sixteenth and seventeenth verses we have the starting point of what I wish to talk about to-night:

And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you.

PROMISE TO DISCIPLES ONLY

We have here one of the promises of the Master. I shall take the ground to-night, right on the start, that this promise has not been made to all the world, but to his disciples, those who have obeyed his commandments, become citizens of his kingdom. I presume one of the most difficult things we have to do in our experience as missionaries is to convince some people that they have not received the gift of the Holy Ghost. You may think that is strange, possibly, nevertheless it is true. They have received something, there is no question about that. They are conscious of the power that has moved and has operated upon them, that they have been pleased to term the Holy Ghost.

SAME PROMISE MADE OF OLD

Now this promise is not a new one, it was not a new one when Jesus made it to his disciples at this time, for we discover right in the first chapter of this epistle of John, that John the Baptist manifested the fact that there would be one come after him who would baptize them with the Holy Spirit and with fire. So you discover he understood that principle before this time of its introduction.

We go back into the Old Testament Scriptures and if you will read your Inspired Translation you will discover that it was a part of the gospel of Jesus Christ away back in the beginning. Turn back to Genesis, the first few chapters, and read, and you will find it there.

You will discover in Paul's declaration in one or two places that he manifested the thought that this was the medium, or the power, the means by and through which the holy prophets of old had spoken. So according to these thoughts, we discover it is an old principle, and is just as old as the gospel itself. But while that may be true, we discover it is just as new to some people as this gospel is, and to some this gospel is a startling new thing.

I am not introducing then something different from what we have, but I shall dwell upon this, and its office work somewhat to-night not only with the idea of its application to those who may not have understood it at all, but I shall hope to reach a point and teach some few of the things that present themselves to us, with a view to a better understanding of its ministration, if we can.

THE WORLD CANNOT RECEIVE IT

Now in the first place I call your attention to the thought expressed in this text. He says he is going to send you another Comforter, even the spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive. And why? Because it cannot see it.

I am not going to confine the thought of seeing in this case entirely to the vision of the eye, but I shall apply it to the thought that that sight may cover also the power of comprehension, the mental faculties of an individual that shall be able to grasp and comprehend, for sometimes that is the keenest sight we have.

I shall contemplate for a little while the thought of the eye, at least along the idea that because we cannot see it with the natural eye, with the physical eye, that it is not practical for us to-day. In my experiences in the past I have met several, but one especially who took me to task very strongly because I advocated the idea of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. He ridiculed the idea, and one of the peculiar arguments that he insisted upon making was the fact that we could not tell when an individual was baptized by the Spirit, and it was impossible for us to attain to anything of that kind, because we could not see the Spirit, and as a consequence we could not grasp the principle, and could not tell that an individual had been baptized by the Spirit.

Now I tried several arguments to meet his position, and finally I called his attention to some practical things, and I shall follow out that line a little bit to-night.

I discovered that the vision of the eye is a very uncertain thing. We could not always tell just how a thing is done, because we are looking at it. You may look sometimes a long time before you may be able to grasp the real principle of a thing and how it is accomplished.

LOOKING BUT NOT SEEING

I am going to illustrate this thought by a little incident that happened out in Nebraska. One of the brethren of the missionary force and myself were holding tent meetings in a little village out in that country, and a fast train of the Union Pacific Railroad came through there, a fast mail. They had a peculiar arrangement there at that time by which they not only took the mail sack off the post, but they hung another one on the post. The operation of course was almost simultaneous, it was done so quickly that you could not see how it was done.

One of the brethren, a good, honest man, too, took us to task, and became disturbed upon that question. He said he was sure he could see how it was done. So not long afterwards he was over there, and the train was coming, the mail sack was hung on the post. We told him to get out there now and see and then tell us just how it was done. He got out where he thought he had a good square view of the thing; the train came roaring down. A flash and the train was gone, and the mail sack was hanging on the post, and he was still looking, his eyes big and his mouth partly open. And finally I asked: "Brother Brown, did you see it?" His answer was a peculiar one. It astonished me, and he answered me in a way that possibly you would laugh if I were to tell you. After he got over his astonishment a little bit he looked around rather foolishly and said, "Well, I guess the ice cream is on me."

"Oh," I said, "I thought you were going to tell us how it was done."

"Well," he said, "I stood there and looked with all the might I had, but I haven't the faintest idea yet how it was done. It was gone so quickly I could not see."

There are a good many things in the world of this character, but there are a good many things, my friends, that we cannot see that are real, tangible. There are things that exist, and I want to use an illustration along that line to-night.

THE THIRD CHAPTER OF JOHN

In order to get the point and show you from the Scriptures, I want to ask you to turn back to the third chapter of John. "Well," some one says, "there is the third chapter of John. A Latter Day Saint minister would not be happy if he could not use that." I do not know that he would. I will concede that we love it. It is fine, and it is a hard one to get around, too.

The Master in this declaration uses the expression, "Except ye are born again ye cannot see the kingdom of God."

I ask you people, did he refer to the sight of the eye, the vision of the eye here, or did he reach out in this declaration until he reached a point where it meant the comprehension, the mental, spiritual vision that understood and comprehended the great law of God? You answer, "He did not mean just simply looking at something. He means more than that."

He then proceeds with his argument, and in talking of the baptism of the water and of the Spirit he goes on with this statement, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

Now I want to use this illustration, for the Master has given us a very nice one. In the picture that he has drawn for us he has indicated clearly the situation, and has given to us something to think about along this line.

"THE WIND BLOWETH WHERE IT LISTETH"

"So is everyone that is born of the Spirit." The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth.

Now friends, what is the wind? Why, you say, it is the air, the atmosphere, set in motion. Yes, that is all right, but did any of you ever see it? Now do not jump at the thought, and say yes, but stop and think—did you ever see it? What color is it? What is the shape of it? Can you describe it? And you at once find yourself at sea. You cannot tell, you do not know, you have never seen it in that sense of "having looked at it with your natural eye, but you did see something, you know you did. You have heard the expression time and again, "See how the wind blows!" "Why, sure," some one will say, "see the wind blow," and yet you cannot see the wind, but you do see something; there is no mistake about that.

Now what did you see? Well, you say, we saw the trees blowing, we saw the dust blowing down the street, we saw the water dashing, if you happen to be near it; and all of these things are what? The manifestation unto our vision that the wind is blowing. And hence we use the expression, "See how the wind blows."

Now let me ask you to stop. If you were blind absolutely, and could not see a thing, and the wind was blowing a nice gale, and your ears were real good and you could hear nicely, I wonder if you would not say: "Hear the wind blow." Why, yes, you say, certainly you could hear the wind, just as the Master said. Do you know where it comes from? You say, No, that is something we have not been able to control yet. Where does it go? Well, you do not know that exactly; it apparently runs around in a circle somewhere and stops for a while, but you cannot tell exactly. Nevertheless you know it is there. You can see these evidences that pile up, you can hear that peculiar roar and rush of the air that demonstrates to you that it is there, and then if you were perfectly deaf, your eyes were blind, and they took you out when it was about twenty below zero and rush you around the corner of the house where it struck you full in the face, when you could get your breath I am satisfied you would say, "The wind is blowing," and you would know it and would answer truly. Why? Because you feel it. Certainly, and you would not have to stay out long when it was down that low to find it out, either.

Now you have the sense of sight, the sense of hearing, and the sense of feeling, and all three of them are able to demonstrate to your understanding that the wind is blowing, but you may never be able to tell what color it is nor whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth, but there is a force there in operation that is being manifest that you may witness. And yet so far as the vision of the eye is concerned there is not anything you could add to the description of the wind.

THE MYSTERY OF ELECTRICITY

There is another thing that teaches us along this line sometimes. We have before us to-night the electric light. There is a power there that gives us that light. Do you know what it is? "Oh, yes," says some one, "it is electricity." "Well, what is electricity?" Ask the brother here who works with it nearly every day, and I wonder if he could tell us. They could tell you possibly that by a combination of metals and by friction under certain conditions, and observing certain rules and laws, that they have learned they are able to gather that electricity, or make it, or create it, or whatever you wish to term it. By observing these laws they get it.

Now it is there, it will turn the machinery, it will give you light, it will cook your food, it will heat your rooms, it will do all of these things. Let me ask you friends, have you ever seen it? what is it like? "Well," says one, "they call it juice." Yes, they call it juice at the power house, and the boys all along the line talk about the juice being turned on, but have you seen electricity? Does it go over the wire, through the wire, under the wire, or how? When you look at the wires you cannot see anything there that would induce light, but if you touch those wires just in the right way, if it did not everlastingly finish you, you would be able to tell the people it was there, and if it finished you they would know there was something there that had finished you. There is a power there. We can feel it, and one of the peculiar features is that whether we can see it or not, we can become intensely conscious of its presence.

They used to run a dynamo down at the mill where I worked, and it was quite a common experience in those days for people to come in and look at the thing. We used to form a circle, the electrician on one end, myself at the other, and we had a little chain I led up by until it struck the dynamo, then the electrician would touch a wire, barely a touch with his finger, and those people! Well sometimes the funny squeals that they got out were so interesting that we did not get over them for a long time afterwards. It went right through them every one, and yet my friends, so quick they could not see it. It was over, and they would bear witness the power was there, but they did not see anything.

THE SPIRIT AS INEXPLICABLE, YET AS REAL

But we have things that are very evident in this world, ministering to mankind and doing the required work, that we know is there, and yet we cannot see it. Shall we deny that it exists because we cannot see it? No, you say, certainly not. And immediately we wonder upon the question, What is the peculiar office work of this Spirit? If it is to be of intense value and benefit to the human family, we ought to understand it, have some comprehension of the laws regulating and governing it, just as we do with electricity, and as we have learned to do to a large extent with the wind. We drive windmills, and machinery with it, we drive vessels on the ocean with it, and we have learned to utilize this power in various ways. You would not want anybody to undertake to use electricity without some study of that work. To do so would be foolish in the extreme. Then why not if we recognize law under conditions of that kind, recognize the righteous principles of God, and in recognizing them seek to make the application of them to our lives, and so consciously understand the workings of these things that we may intelligently use them. We may intelligently profit by that use, and accomplish what God designed it should do, and what we should do under its peculiar influence.

I shall look briefly along the line as to what we may term the office work of this Spirit, and in doing that I want you people to follow briefly, for I am going to make the application of this a little later on, we will be as brief as we can.

AS A TEACHER AND A PROMPTER

Turning back to this fourteenth chapter of John we have a statement made in the twenty-sixth verse: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he will teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." As we gather the import of this thought we discover that this Comforter is calculated to be a teacher, to teach us all things. He is to be a prompter, to bring to our memory and enlighten our minds upon the things that God has given unto us. And some of us who have stood in the sacred desk and have labored under the influence of that power, can bear witness not only to the fact that it teaches, but to the fact that it brings to our memory in the very hour when you need it, some things that God has said, some statements that he has made, some commandment that he has delivered, that you probably have not thought of for months, or possibly never have seen its application nor understood its relationship to the subject in hand until that moment. And then it has come with such clearness, such force, and has made itself so practical and so apparent, that everyone has been willing to recognize it. It has been the work of that Spirit operating with the individual, and he can bear witness to you that under its peculiar influence he has been able to accomplish work that he could not, and would not have done without it.

It has been a teacher, it has been a prompter to those that have gone out as ministers for Christ, to those who have been members of the kingdom of God, that have been blessed with its influence as individuals until others have stood by and looked on in amazement, and been astonished at what they have seen, and what they have heard. It has accomplished that work, it does accomplish that work, and sometimes when people have listened to men who have been sent out in this great gospel administration that has come to us, and the people have listened to them, they have asked the question, "Where did they get their wonderful understanding of these things? What school have they gone to?" And the answer comes back, "What school? Some of them had little opportunity to have anything to do with a school." What is it then? The Spirit.

A few years ago they ordained two young men to the office of elder and sent them on a mission to the islands, without any experience of any kind as missionaries. They accomplished a work there, and when they came back from the islands after years of separation from the main body of the church, and when they began to move around among the people, and to talk to the people, they discovered they were in perfect line with those who had remained here. Where had they received their instruction while they were away? Where did they get instruction of that nature? The answer comes back, "That wonderful teacher, that prompter, had accomplished its work and brought them a knowledge of the truth, an understanding of the word of God that had kept them in perfect line, and they, without the experience or assistance of the main body of the church, were able to maintain its doctrines, to hold aloft its truths, to present its work, under the influence of that Spirit equal to those here."

We could point out other instances along this line. We can point you to members who have come into this church with little or no experience whatever so far as the reading of the Scriptures is concerned, and yet after being inducted into the church, and receiving the ordinance for the gift of the Holy Ghost, they have gone out into the world, and when met by those who were opposed to them, they have been able to stand up and defend themselves so consistently and so thoroughly as to astonish the people that they were with, and they have asked the question, "Where did you find out anything about the Bible." Some of these individuals may, after an experience of this kind, have gone home and got their Bibles and got right down to work to find out whether it was there or not.

BRINGING TO MIND ESSENTIAL KNOWLEDGE

I had a little experience of that kind of my own, away back when I first began to preach. I was only a young man. I had lived in a missionary's family all my life, nearly. I had associated with them. I had heard them talk. I had read some things—not as much as I ought to have done perhaps—but one day shortly after my ordination I suddenly found that I had to meet a question that I had never thought about, never had studied about, and never had heard much about; and I was in what you might call a corner. What was I going to do? I knew that I did not have the power to meet the issue. I asked God to come to the rescue, and suddenly I felt the illumination of that Spirit, my mind felt absolutely free, and when they came at me with one of their questions I began to quote, and to my astonishment I quoted a section from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. I did not know where it was, but I quoted it just the same.

Well, after we got through and our argument was over and I got outside, I began to get anxious to get home. I wondered if there was anything of the kind in the Doctrine and Covenants. I never remembered having read it or seeing it, but I had quoted it, it must be somewhere, and I told them it was in the Doctrine and Covenants. Well, I got home just as quickly as I could, and I got my Doctrine and Covenants as soon as possible. It was there, and no mistake about it.

This is one of the places in which the Holy Ghost comes to the rescue of the child of God.

Now let me ask you, friends, you could not see the Holy Spirit you say, but I wonder if we could not discover and feel the Holy Spirit in an occasion of that kind. I wonder if there must not be a peculiar contact with God and Christ which lightens the mind and understanding, and quickens the intellect, for we know that God said if we are faithful and in line of our duty, God would not leave us alone; that he would send his Spirit; he would bless his children, his disciples, and they would receive of that wonderful power that should minister in the interests of humanity.

TO TESTIFY OF CHRIST

Now the next thought that comes to us is found in the fifteenth chapter of John, twenty-sixth verse. In this paragraph he says: "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."

"Well," says one, "we believe that Jesus was the Christ already." Yes, but my friends, there is a different position here. It is one thing to say, "I believe that Jesus lives." It is another thing to receive the witness and testimony to such a degree that you will be able to say, "I know." You grasp the situation and you see the difference.

One of the things that has struck some of our religious friends as being exceedingly peculiar, when they have come into one of our congregations and listened to the testimonies in the testimony meetings, has been what they term as a presumption on the part of the people of God, to get up and say, "I know that this is the work of God." Why; they thought it was presumptuous. And why? Because they were not able to say that, they have said, "I believe." But here was a class of people that were able to get up and make that declaration "I know." How? By the witness and testimony of this peculiar working of the Spirit, one of the functions of that peculiar gift of the Holy Ghost that came to humanity here to bear witness of the Christ, and of his work. And this is the thing that presents to us one of the evidences, just as that light indicates to us that the power is working, that the dynamo in the engine room is in operation, that the connection between us and them has been complete, and that that current is operating and manifesting to us that the power is there. We know it is there, don't we? If that light suddenly went out we would be conscious of the fact that there had been something happen to that dynamo in the engine room, or else the line had broken somewhere.

And one of the difficulties between us and the religious world is that they never had any communication, they never got their line finished, and for some reason they are not connected with the dynamo, and there are not the evidences and manifestations of power and of light and of understanding that should exist. They have never had the administrations of the Holy Ghost.

(Concluded next week.)

FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST--KEEP THE FAITH!

"Darkness covereth the earth"!

"Gross darkness the minds of the people"!

"Peace taken from the earth"!

The forces of reaction fighting against humanity—equity—justice!

Prophecy fulfilled! God vindicated! Man condemned!

The call to Latter Day Saints: Be true. Keep the faith. Hold the vision.

Never a greater opportunity for service—never the call more urgent than now.

So-called orthodoxy has lost its opportunity. It has been weighed in the balance.

Reform movements have proven impotent in the face of the world's greatest tragedy.

Socialistic and communistic institutions have shown inefficiency and inability to cope with the tremendous world problems.

This is the hour for action—mighty deeds for truth—glorious privileges to spread the gospel message—to exemplify its teachings—to make prophecy—history.

The call is to service—not service for reward—not service for self—not service for individual immunity. Service for others—service for Zion's weal and the glory of God.

The gospel of Jesus is the only world solvent—the angel's message our only panacea for human ill.

We will not be cowards in the face of the world's great need. We will not be laggards in this the mightiest crusade the world has ever known. We will keep the faith! We will hold the vision! We will be true!

God has called us to be leaders of men. We have treated our commission lightly. We have overestimated the powers of evil. We have hid our light under a bushel.

We may command the respect of men. We must do so. The spirit which animates us is of God. It cannot know defeat.

Let those who would enlist eschew all selfish interests.

Herewith the divine program.

"Be very faithful, and prayerful, and humble before me."

"Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works."

"Carefully gather together as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people."

"Sue for peace, not only the people that have smitten you but also to all people."

"Lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth."

Lift up your head and be glad my brother, my sister, wherever you are that God hath called you to service. Put away the transitory fleeting pleasures—the narrow ambitions—the struggle for pelf, for place, for power. Divorce yourself from every entangling alliance. Reenlist. Rededicate. Re-consecrate your life, your all to God's service.

God would have volunteers in his service. Do not wait for conscription. Enlist in the army of peace.

Be an optimist. Talk confidence. Think success. Pray for victory. To doubt is to be lost.

This is no time for mutiny. It is no place for sedition. It is no occasion for negative action. Ours is a constructive service. We are workers together with God. Get in line! Close up the ranks! Keep step! Trust the General in command! Obey orders! Unfurl the banner! Keep the faith! Hold the vision!

OF GENERAL INTEREST

OVERDOING WAR-TIME RELIGION

The religious emotionalism produced by war conditions in England has its dark side, says a writer in The Christian Commonwealth (London). All sorts of fads and fancies find adherents, while mediums, healers, and inventors of new faiths are reaping a rich harvest. We read:

"Young officers dash round to know what is the proper answer to Mrs. Besant. Bewildered mothers phone for tracts, and startled clerics dive into dictionaries of heretical sects. Over us all there is this pressure of diseased beliefs, tainting, and unbalancing, and turning aside silly souls. There are sinister and evil agents at large doing their devilish work.

"We are still moving in the same incredibly silly atmosphere as that which the apostle describes to his young disciples; there are the same stupid patches of opinions as those against which Paul utters his warning. Not a word need go. The dislike of sound doctrine; itching ears, and teachers after the desires of our own hearts: fables, and babblings, and tattlings: those who creep into mansions and take captive silly women ever learning and never arriving at the truth. All this is amazingly true and up to date; it all stands. So, too, the apostle's remarks on the vain talkers and frauds overthrowing whole families and teaching evil things for the sake of filthy lucre. Now, as then, the mouths of such need to be stopped—for we are back in the same ugly underworld of unhealthy influences. Anything odd, preposterous, novel, gains its audience. Each one has a seance, a sophy, and an ism of his own. The medium never had such a harvest before. Black your face and dub yourself 'Messiah' and the crowds come in; paint an atheism and it gets believed."—The Literary Digest for May 5, 1917.

Does Music Attract The Nonmember?

The answer to the above question is so obvious that it would seem that it needed no discussion. That the answer should be "yes," I believe none will deny. But, however, the discussion of this subject will encourage the building up of that which is, and always has been, the means of attracting the "outsider." I presume that is the object in assigning this topic.

Music has come to be recognized as an essential to the enjoyment of any social gathering, as well as all religious assemblies, and is often extended to political meetings. Music having character, language and influence, therefore that kind is sought that will be in keeping with the object and promote the spirit of meeting or assembly.

Next to the authoritative preaching of the Word, there is no more effective way of impressing the mind of the nonmember with the gospel message, than by the expression of that message in song. The Spirit of God is so often made manifest in our singing as to be felt and recognized by nonmembers—often visibly affecting them—and so acknowledged by them.

Everywhere, almost, where the gospel has gone, outsiders are attracted by our songs and singing, and beg to hear certain favorite songs over and over again. And often we hear remarks or such expressions as these: "Why, they sing just like they preach, don't they?" "They both preach it, and sing it." And, "The Latter Day Saints surely can sing."

Even when songs particularly doctrinal, and especially Latter Day Saint in character are sung, the outsider loves to hear them. There is something in singing that which the singer really understands and believes, that carries weight and conviction to the heart of the hearer. It is something that takes hold of the mind and fastens on to the recollection. The impression thus made is hard to shake off.

I remember in the years long past, long before we had the printed notes to our songs, people sometimes came long distances to hear the singing.

There has always been an attraction in such songs as "We come with joy the truth to teach you," "What was witnessed in the heavens," "In the light," "Redeemer of Israel," "Israel awake," etc.

The fact that our music attracts the nonmember, even though our message is an unpopular one, is worthy of more than passing comment. It should encourage us to put forth our best efforts to make this means of reaching the people even more effective than it has been. The gospel of Jesus Christ is worthy of the very best we have to give in its defense and support.

Music has a wonderful influence upon the feelings of humanity. Often very bitter enemies to our cause become softened in feelings towards us through the influence of some song they have heard the Saints sing. It sometimes touches a responsive chord in the heart of the unbeliever, or even of an opposer, when a sermon would fail to do so.

Our singing is recognized as being different from the singing of other religious denominations; they discover it is not the wild, emotional or hilarious singing heard in the revivals of other churches. They hear the earnest, joyous expression of the gospel in song, that is so distinctively characteristic of the Saints, and they recognize it as being something different.

What has been said of vocal music is measurably true of instrumental music; although the song has the advantage of expressing the word of truth in words to the hearer, we, as a rule, understand this far better than they can interpret the instrumental production.

I feel that we as a church have made splendid advancement in music, and in ability to render it before the world, but there is room for improvement, I believe. It seems to me that we have rather fallen behind our record in composing songs for our services, comparing the present with past years, and taking into consideration the increase in our membership, and development in various other departments of the work.

I have a desire to live to see the day when we can use our own productions, both in word and music, exclusively. If we could do this, I believe that our music would breathe more of the spirit of the gospel than it does now—especially when we sing songs composed by those who do not know the gospel in its purity.

Personally I have no desire to make a hobby of any one thing; but being so positive of the power of attraction that our music has to the nonmember, I feel we will be justified in putting forth any effort to make it more of an attraction—more of a speciality than we have even hitherto done.

May the time soon come when all our music will be more distinctively representative of the gospel message we are endeavoring to bring to the people.

In our effort to obtain songs for use in our Sunday schools we have drifted away from the good old Latter Day Saint songs of the "Harp" and Harmony," out onto the sea of sectarian production. And many of these songs that are now found in Zion's Praises are used in our preaching and prayer services in many places, and are actually taking the place of the Hymnal. Beautiful songs they are, too, yet do not breathe of the gospel and latter-day spirit, as do so many of our own production. True, there are a number of good Latter Day Saint songs in the "Praises," but not enough for the use of all our services when the book takes the place of the Hymnal. When the outsider is present and hears these sectarian songs sung in our services, they convey no message to him of the beautiful gospel we love so much—nothing more than would impress him when hearing the same song sung in the sectarian congregation. Is it not possible then, that we are misrepresenting our work to the nonmember, leaving the impression on his mind, by singing the songs which he hears everywhere in other churches, that we are very similar to the others?

Yes, music does attract the nonmember. Shall we not, therefore, endeavor to make it more attractive, and more representative of the truth that has been revealed in these last days?

A Difference in Consecration?

"Should the individual consecration of the choir member equal that of the director?" To consecrate, in this case, means "to give oneself unreservedly." Reasonable service is required. Every organization must have a head or a leader. At drill as well as at the front the director is expected to be there and in tune, while the individual member may crave the liberty to say, "I can stay away and may hardly be missed." That idea creates the double standard—which is erroneous. Every member of the body is needed. Individually—you serve yourself in serving any responsibility. Collectively—if one member of the choir suffers itself to stay away—all suffer because of it. Excuses are as numerous as the sands on the seashore! As the "Biblical oxen excuse" is out of date, why—one has bought a Ford, and begs to be excused, in order to go and "prove" a joy ride! It is true—the humdrum in practice becomes nauseating at times, but "success wears thorns and therefore is not for cowards." We can learn to love our work. The poet has said "Life is just one long vacation to the man who loves his work." "If you are not satisfied, you are not satisfying." Too many of us like the gain—but despise the getting. Shun the cross, but sigh for the crown! Choir practice is so tame that some cannot endure—but behold when the day dawns and the time comes for exhibition—we are all there in full dress! Well, I'll take that back—for some are usually about half dressed.

"Without practice, proficiency and will finally disappear." The spirit of the gospel prompts us to lose sight of self and selfishness and "seek to build up the Kingdom of God and establish righteousness"—and the proper amount of glory and satisfaction will come spontaneously. "The habit of half-heartedness not only reduces the power of the whole body, but also the prospects of the shirker." "Stifed faculties eventually become unresponsive."

Now, as it is so easy to find excuses—but very difficult to discover a reasonable one—there should be some way of judging. The house of God is a house of order. Everything heavenly is governed by law. There should be a standing committee to examine into the excuses. Reason alone, should excuse without a fine. We are not working for the director or any other human agent, but for God; yet God uses men and women in the execution of his laws. All are called of God to different positions—and all alike are needed. Where more is given—more is required. The director carries responsibilities not required of the individual member, but that does not lessen the latter's work! No one ever heaped the measure of performance with his eye critically on another! When we begin to measure ourselves by the standard of another we usually begin to decrease in worth.

If slothfulness and other wrongs only injured the doer, it might not be so serious, but we do not live to ourselves. Our slothfulness may impede the progress of all. Sins of omission as well as commission are injurious to more than the actor.

Cooperation is the life of everything. "Am I my brother's keeper" is worth considering. "Help, thou, thy brother's boat across, and lo! thine own has touched the shore" is a wise saying. Faith begets faith. Activity inspires activity. If you are not at your post, others will feel unobligated.

I was once speaking to large, attentive crowds. The choir had been doing splendid work. Arriving one evening a few minutes before time to begin services I soon discovered there was trouble brewing among the "sweet singers of Israel." The house was packed—excepting the choir loft. It was empty. Some one had spoken lightly of another's warbling. The warbler balked, and then another said "I will not sing unless she does." Before an offering could be made, thirteen and one were affected by the plague! We had no choir that evening. The singing was not uttered "by the spirit." Consequently the sermon was not the best. The audience took notice, and a series of prospective meetings were "nipped in the bud"—and all on the account of a magnified nothing. "Whatever the cause of justification, a sullen and balky attitude of mind reacts on character and capability." If we were as contrary and careless in our employer's business—and some are in God's work—we would be "canned" so often that the manufacturing of Fords would be stopped because of the shortage of tin.

If you are a member of the choir, and it is to meet on a given night—your first business should be with the choir. Every member of the choir during a series of meetings and at practice, should feel it not only an obligation to be on the "job," but should learn to realize that it is a pleasurable privilege.

You!—you individual member—the director needs your presence—every other member needs your presence, the whole body of Christ values your presence, and God needs you, therefore rally to the front! and be of service, and when the time comes that you need a blessing from your heavenly Father it will be forthcoming and the whole body will rejoice with you.

Fenlon has said, "Whoever will labor to get rid of self, to deny himself, according to the instructions of Christ, strikes at once at the root of every evil, and finds the germ of every good." Therefore, crucify selfishness. Become efficient in service, and magnify your calling—"For we are all called according to God's gift unto us."

A Glimpse of Gounod

On March 27, we, the Saint Louis choir, gathered at the charming home of Sister Anna de Jong Smith for our second monthly musicale. This time the subject was the comparatively modern composer, Charles Francis Gounod, born about a century ago, I believe, on June 17, 1818. It was our hostess, Sister Anna herself, who introduced us to him. Shall I call it a biography? No, you would imagine a series of announcements that on such a date he produced so-and-so, and on another date he produced something else. Instead, it was an intensely interesting story, first of a musical mother and grandmother, an artist father, and two boys, ten years apart, Charles being the younger; then the story, from the beginning, of the unfolding of a soul touched with the divine spark of musical genius. Much of it was gleaned from his own letters. It was so interesting to hear of his visiting Mendelssohn, especially as this was to be our next composer, and of his friendship with Mendelssohn's sister. It seems she was very musical, is even said to have composed some of the music attributed to her brother. Naturally one's fancy leaped to the thought that the hero of the story might marry her, but it didn't happen that way.

After we had followed the composer to a goodly age, and there had to leave him, Brother S. R. Burgess dealt in an excellent way with the opera "Faust," giving not only the story contained in the opera, but the history of the opera itself, and passing around a portrait of Madame Melba as the heroine and one of Gounod himself. This prepared the way for the appearance of "Marguerite," Miss Adell Peters, in the "Jewel song." Those who heard this dramatic and beautiful rendition ought to have realized something of the strong appeal which the casket of jewels would have for the beautiful young Marguerite. Sister Mary Bourgeret, in her paper, told us something of his musical version of "Romeo and Juliet." Also "Philemon and Bancis," from being mere names, became in her hands, the musical story of a contented old couple, rejuvenated, but finally glad to return to their former condition.

One thing that marred the evening was the absence of our leader, Brother E. C. Bell, who had suddenly been called out of town. But Sister Maude Parrish, his former assistant, now director of the new Southhampton choir, led out with noble enthusiasm as we made the ceilings ring with "Unfold, Ye portals!" from Gounod's "Redemption." That was the climax and the close of the program, then came refreshments, and still we lingered, as if loath to leave the scene of such pleasant association. At last we parted, carrying away a better idea of what the name "Gounod" stands for.

Some Musical Activities

SECOND PHILADELPHIA

A group of young women of this branch under the name of "Laurel Club," and in charge of Sister Hale W. Smith, gave a concert at their church, E and Clearfield Streets, on the evening of March 30, which exceeded even their fondest hopes of success. A reading, a piano solo, a cornet solo, several vocal solos, duets, and choruses made up a most charming and varied program, and the silver offering amounting to almost twelve dollars, completed the payment of the debt on the church piano, leaving a balance in the treasury. This is a very creditable showing for the small band of loyal Saints of this branch, which is doubtless handicapped somewhat in a musical way, by the close proximity of the large and flourishing choir at First Branch.

MARIE RIGGS CONCERT

At the Hotel Baltimore, assisted by Mrs. Allen Taylor, soprano, Mr. Heinrich Rittmeister, violinist, and the Rittmeister String Quintette on the evening of April 17, Sister Marie Riggs of Kansas City gave a piano recital. The young artist pleased everyone of the five hundred listeners, with the clearness and spirituality of her interpretations, and does great credit not only to her own high standards of musical taste and perception but to the instruction received from her teachers, Mrs. Carl Busch of Kansas City, and the German master, Josef L'Hvinne with whom Sister Marie studied in Berlin. The proceeds of the recital on the 17th, went to the establishment of a Red Cross Hospital unit, the use of the large audience room in the Hotel Baltimore being donated by its proprietor, Brother Wallace N. Robinson.

When the Lord Returns in Glory

When the Lord returns in glory
 We shall see him face to face.
 And we'll praise his name forever
 For his wondrous saving grace.
 With the ransomed of all ages
 In his sanctified domain,
 We will honor and adore him.
 As we sing the glad refrain:

Hallelujah, hallelujah,
 Sound his fame from shore to shore!
 Christ, our Lord, is king of kings and Sits to reign forever more.
 Praise him, praise him, all ye nations;
 Praise him all ye hosts above.
 Sound aloud the proclamation:
 Jesus reigns, and rules with love.

Oh, how great will be our rapture
 When in grand reunion there,
 Where there'll be no separation
 Fraught with pain and anxious care,
 We may sing in loud hosannas
 To our everlasting king,
 As we crown him Lord of lords
 And in triumph we shall sing—

See, the glorious day approaches,
 Day of rest from sin and shame,
 When we'll join the happy throng—
 Praise and magnify his name.
 Then the poor will be remembered,
 God will wipe away their tears,
 When he dwells among his people
 On the earth a thousand years.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our President's Salutory

To All the Girls and Women of This Great Church; Greeting: The stress of conference work safely over, we enter upon the work of the coming year with a spirit of humility and love for all mankind such as we have never known before. How far we may be able to extend our influence we may never know, but we would that we could reach every girl and woman, and help her find her particular place in this church, or if she has already found it, cooperate with her, for the good of all. And we pray that this spirit may remain with us all through the year's work, lending to us its aid and inspiration, that all the work undertaken may be well done.

And so to-day we are sending you a friendly greeting, no matter where you are, or how far you may be away from me. Your lot may be an humble one, your burden heavy, your life seem to you useless and wasted, or you may be situated among the more fortunate of our sisters, with fortune smiling kindly upon you, with educational advantages yours for the asking. No matter where you are, or what your station in life, our message is to you to-day. We need your help in Woman's Auxiliary, we need your courage, your strength, your training, your efficiency. We need your cooperation, your support, your prayers, that we may carry on this work aright, and guide the women of this church along the path that will keep them safe in the gospel fold. And when we say to you that we need you, we mean that we want you to become one with us in this work, giving to us your best effort, and the inspiration that comes from such fellowship.

We are wondering, this year, how far we may go in developing specialization among our women. We have many among us whose gift is music, many who are born organizers, some few who are true artists, some splendid teachers of English, of Bible research, psychology, child welfare, and other subjects—to say nothing of those trained in home economics, dressmaking, and the true art of home making. With the educational work that is well started by this time, we should be able to develop specialists in all of these and other lines, and at the close of the year be able to meet in separate conferences for consultation in each particular line of work. What a wonderful thing it would be to be able to consult all the child welfare workers of the church and discover the plans by which they are having success. How our teachers would love to meet in conference and discuss their problems, and tell how they hold their classes together and make progress. And if our English teachers could perfect a plan for teaching grammar and literature so as to get a spoken language, instead of a written one, it would be worth years of training to the mothers who have but little time for study.

Our church president made it clear to us in his message this year, that we need higher standards, a consecration of our talents, and that progress is promoted by specialization of effort and talent, under a well-recognized directional force. And what he plans for his men, he expects of the women. So we are hoping that we will have no trouble in falling in line and developing specialists in all lines of our work. And the time may come that we will have organizations in every field of activity, just as the musicians, the architects, and the traveling men of the church are forming themselves into groups. When we have found our particular place in the work it will not be difficult to find the group in which we belong.

Another thing we would like to see brought about in our large cities, and stakes, is a uniting of effort or cooperation of branches in their class work. In cities where there are two, three, or more branches, cooperative class work can be done, and we shall be glad to give suggestions to the organizer where this is wanted.

Our supervisors of departments will be glad to render any assistance in their power, in their particular line of work. Write to them freely and state your need. The educational bureau is under the direction of Sister R. S. Salyards, Lamoni, Iowa; the home and child welfare bureau is under Sister Lydia Wight, Lamoni, Iowa; the relief and service bureau under Sister Helen Silsbee Smith of 1111 East Eleventh Street, Kansas City, Missouri, and the young woman's bureau under Sister Alice Mae Burgess of Lamoni, Iowa.

Something whispers to-night that there are many mothers who need the help that our work can give them, and that, as we send out this message of love to you, it is going to reach into the furthest corners of this globe, and touch the hearts of those who need us most, adding many workers to our ranks because of the happiness we can bring into their lives, and the good we may do together. Let us then be workers together for God, and our part in the redeeming of Zion will be sure.

Your sister in Christ,

LULU M. SANDY.

What Complete Parenthood Means

The functions of fatherhood and motherhood may differ, the supreme influence of the mother being felt in the early formative years; the special potency of the father, during the period of adolescence—although neither should work alone at any time—yet there are certain fundamentals necessary to the complete functioning of both fathers and mothers. Forbush says, "Complete parenthood involves three things, preparation, responsibility and joys."

PREPARATION

Preparation means many things, for parenthood should be the most skilled of all professions. It means physical fitness. Every child has the right to be well born, born with all the capacities of a normal child, with a healthy body which is always the basis for a well-rounded intellectual and spiritual life. Every child has a right to be born to parents who are full of vigor, who have that poise which results from a long practiced self-control—that poise which insures the child the minimum of friction in his home. In other words every child has a right to have parents that are not nervous and irritable! Young girls and young men who are dissipating their nervous energy in any way whatsoever, in late hours, in cigarette smoking, in the pellmell of modern life, are making themselves physically unfit for their future responsibility of parenthood. We do not urge that young people have no recreation but we do urge this, they and their offspring must pay for any excesses. Mothers who indulge in that habit of fretful worry must do something to gain self-control. "Overworked" is a term that should apply to neither father or mother. In fact that wholesome, broad-minded outlook upon life which should permeate the atmosphere of every home is hardly secured where physical fitness does not exist.

Preparation means intellectual fitness. Parents to be complete must have a knowledge of child life and child training. It means untiring study of the best authorities on child life, and not this alone, but technique as well, for theories without practice in adapting them can never make complete parents. When will we provide such training? Some schools do now. Why not all? Young women are no longer ashamed to enroll for the home economics courses in our universities and, as one lecturer said to a class of university girls a few weeks ago, the day must come when they will not be ashamed to enroll for a course in mothercraft. Parents equipped with the training such a course could afford plus a fund of general knowledge make intellectually fit fathers and mothers.

Preparation means spiritual fitness. What, if not preparation for a babe, can touch the spiritual nature of men and women? Who can refrain from reverent feeling, from supplication to God for help, from a sacred tenderness and joy, from spiritual uplift when he becomes a parent? If any, he is spiritually unfit. Forbush puts it well when he says, "Somehow into our religious education there must be brought the viewpoint that shall communicate to young people the sweet and chaste anticipation of parenthood." They must be "ready reverently and joyfully to accept their task."

RESPONSIBILITY

Since the home is the greatest factor in shaping the ideals and habits of our children, how great is the responsibility of parents that they make the home all it ought to be. Forbush urges that parents have particular and reciprocal duties or responsibilities. God holds parents responsible or he would not have spoken as he did. Let us quote it once more "Power is not given Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hands of their fathers." (Doctrine and Covenants 28:13). Are we making the most of that period? Do we sense our responsibility?

JOYS

What gives a man or woman more joy than to watch the development of the child from the helpless, innocent babe to the helpful, righteous young man or woman? Complete parenthood reaps its rich reward in the joy that comes from the fulfillment of its purpose—a life well established, well controlled, capable of efficient service. Forbush puts the joy the child brings in these assuring words. "The loveliness of children themselves, even more than the miracle of their unfoldment is a parental joy." Also, "Children give parents more than they take from them. Only in some sort of parenthood, natural or spiritual does man attain his highest social and spiritual experience." It is this experience and the joy of it that the child gives the parent!

SAN FRANCISCO

Sometime ago we conceived the idea of having a "men's night" at our auxiliary society, and thus let our husbands know something of the work we are doing. A committee was appointed who arranged a dinner menu, program, etc. The expense was divided evenly among the members who could attend. We invited our pastor, Brother G. J. Waller, and his daughter Christiana, who is our very efficient branch organist; also our ex-pastor, Brother G. S. Lincoln and wife.

The sisters came soon after lunch, that all might be in readiness by six-thirty, the hour announced for the dinner. Sister G. L. Sykes had charge of the afternoon cooking, and well she understands how that work should be done! Two large tables were spread in the spacious dining room, a welcome sight to the hungry men who arrived to do justice to the good things provided.

After the repast we listened to a program, in charge of our vice president, Sister John Cunningham.

"Our society," by Sister C. A. Parkin.

"The Children's Home," Sister H. D. Simpson.

"The ladies," G. S. Lincoln.

"The mother-in-law," H. F. Ewing.

"Island experiences," G. J. Waller.

Song, "Dear old dad," by Lillian Ewing with guitar accompaniment. As encore she sang "The automobile."

Brother Parkin sang a song his mother taught him when he was but nine years old.

A vote of appreciation was given by the visitors for the very pleasant evening, and upon the suggestion of A. R. Lawn, the auxiliary treasury was enriched by a neat little sum from each of the brothers. When the closing prayer was offered, all present felt that they had enjoyed an evening long to be remembered.

WINDSOR, ONTARIO

Auxiliary work is new to everyone in Windsor, but in spite of this fact, we have made considerable progress. Officers were elected on February 5: Sister Gray, president; Sister Curtis, vice president; Sister Annie Dunlop, secretary; Sister D. Gray, treasurer.

At the present time we are taking up three different departments with Sister Gray in charge of the relief and service work, which group meets every week with an enrollment of twenty-three members, and an average attendance of nine. Sister E. Depew is superintendent of the educational department which has an enrollment of fifteen, and has held one meeting this quarter. Sister H. C. Bennett is in charge of the home and child welfare department which also has held one meeting but which has not yet enrolled members. The auxiliary as a whole met one evening in prayer service, and the Lord spoke to us in prophecy through Elder Brown, our branch president, and said that he was pleased with the efforts we had put forth, and if we would continue in faithfulness he would abundantly bless us. So you see we have a bright future before us. Ever hoping for the advancement of the work.

An Inland Local

OMAHA

Our local numbers about fifty who meet the fourth Wednesday afternoon of each month, at the home of some hospitable member. The program is varied, our last one consisting of a detailed account of the late General Convention at Lamoni, a song by Sister Kelley, a reading by Sister Kirkpatrick, and a report by Sister Wallace of Sister Eunice Smith's "Story-telling" as a convention program. Our business usually precedes the program, and is ably conducted by our president, Sister Holdsworth. Refreshments and social chat follow, and the treasury is enriched by a ten-cent donation from each one present.

Our relief and service department is under the supervision of Sister Winnifred Scott, wife of our branch president. The sewing department numbers nine, and they meet every Thursday afternoon, for the quilting, piecing, and sewing of various kinds. All members of the local are considered members of the relief and service department inasmuch as all unite for the success of our annual bazaar, and in other avenues of service. An apparatus for heating the water in the baptismal font in the church was recently installed and money has been raised in the hands of the branch officers for new seats in the main auditorium. Monthly "showers" by auxiliary members are now in order, the one for May being aprons, each one bringing her gift of an apron for the bazaar.

The young women's department is in charge of Sister Zadie Stearns, and has two Oriole circles, one with six members with Sister Winnifred Scott as Monitor, and one of older girls, fourteen in number with Sister Anderson as Monitor.

The educational department is under the supervision of Sister Anderson and has at present four classes, viz, sociology, seven members, who meet every Wednesday except the one devoted to the auxiliary, and who are studying Devine's book, Misery, and its Causes; the story-telling class, with ten members, who are pursuing their study under the direction of an Omaha instructor in the art, and meet two Friday afternoons a month; child psychology, with eight charter members, who meet the third Sunday afternoon in the month, in connection with the fourth study class, with nine charter members which is studying the child of the Adolescent Age. These two classes meet for a short address or paper of interest to both sections, and then divide for the study of their special topics.

We consider this plan of conducting the work of women in a branch is a very good one. It unifies their interests, makes a close bond between them, identifies them with each other and the branch, and yet gives them, individually, an opportunity to take up and pursue just those particular lines of work and study which appeal most to them, and none need feel either overworked or neglected, so far as opportunity is concerned. There is no overlapping of interests; no hard feelings of being "shoved out," or that one is "not needed," for all recognize that there is a place for each, that if every woman does not join and cooperate, there is something lacking that no one else can supply. The work of our women in every branch needs the special interest of every woman there; there is distinct loss to the auxiliary and to the church if any withholds her full consecration and her hearty support of what the women of the branch are trying to do. The spiritual atmosphere of the church and the branch is determined by the spiritual atmosphere of the homes, and the attitudes of the women in those homes. There is room in the plan for all; there is need for all; the woman's organization needs every woman, and every woman needs the auxiliary and what it embodies.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Lamoni, Iowa

The community has almost resumed its normal attitude since the closing of the recent General Conference here. The services are well attended and a close observer can ascertain from the little sidelights that appear that there is a firm determination to succeed. We are not a demonstrative aggregation, but we like to believe that there is always running under the calm exterior an accumulating power that presages good results.

The aeroplane prices on the necessities of life greatly affect a place like ours, for the wages and salaries (if any-one here receives the latter) are the same as they were ten years ago, when prices were a hundred per cent less. However, most everyone is carrying around a goodly supply of callouses on the palms of their hands and sometimes the smell of battle (with the soil) on their clothes, so we'll do our part in the production of food the coming season—if it ever stops raining.

Steadily the gathering proceeds, sometimes almost imperceptibly but nevertheless persistently, and we welcome those who come with the intention of doing their utmost to make the community what it should be. Occasionally some leave, for one reason and another, but we are glad to note that nearly all of them express their intention of returning some day when they have bettered their circumstances.

We have our usual quota of local news: The old are dying, the youth are marrying, and homes are being brightened by the arrival of promising babies. Local affairs assume problematical proportions at times and either are solved or allowed to bring about their own solution.

The church and its activities are dominant themes with us, for the church is largely in the majority. The sacramental meetings on the first Sunday of the month are a tax on the capacity of the church building. A fast from the morning meal is universally observed and the usual increased spirituality from such observance is noted.

The meetings for the children at 11 a. m. on each alternate Sunday are counted a success. There are over a hundred children in attendance and subjects are discussed in sermons, stories, and blackboard talks that bring to them information they would otherwise fail to get. Our problems of teaching the young are different from the average branch, for we lack the religious opposition from the world that naturally keeps us on our guard and compels us to be well-informed. The incident related by President Frederick M. Smith at the priesthood lectures during the recent conference presents our case very nicely. The dean of the University of Iowa told him that the young people of our church usually excelled, for they believed that everyone was against them, and consequently were prepared to meet opposition. He further suggested that when that condition was removed, we would have to substitute something else in the line of opposition to arouse our young people and enlist their energies.

We learn that Walter W. Smith is to deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of Graceland College here on the 27th, while President F. M. Smith is to deliver the commencement address on June 1.

DELBERT.

Independence Stake

The meetings throughout the stake enjoy added interest from time to time by the cooperation of the missionaries and visitors from abroad. On April 29 the ministerial force active in the stake were: Brethren U. W. Greene, J. Arber, J. J. Boswell, Bishop Keir, William Anderson, F. C. Warnky, J. C. May, T. C. Kelley; and our Brother E. T. Atwell aided in the song service at the Church of Christ, with Apostle U. W. Greene as the preacher in the evening. The music was selected from the Saints' Hymnal.

The midweek prayer meeting was attended by several of the visiting brethren who took part and bore convincing testimonies of divine direction; also the visions and dreams of several, especially of Brethren Griffiths and Russell, were prominent and imparted zest to the service. The following afternoon was the occasion of the opening of the Woman's building, with President Fred M. in charge, and Pastor Walter W. assisting in the speech making. Bishop B. R. McGuire offered the dedicatory prayer. Interesting talks were given on the subject of Latter Day Saint women's attitude toward the war.

On Friday night the Laurels gave to the Twelve and missionaries a reception. Closely connected with this is the food question, which is intensely interesting to all of us; and the parent-teacher association has arranged for a course of instruction in canning as soon as garden vegetables begin to come in season. Sister Ada Koehler is the chairman of the committee appointed to attend to preliminary work, and Miss E. Brown, of the Missouri Agricultural College, has been appointed instructor.

The spectacular side of the war is being presented to us, just now, and we hear about flag raising, with the presence of boy scouts, Camp Fire girls, the salutes of Battery C's cannon firing twenty-one guns, and last though not least, the reception and entertainment in Kansas City by a committee (one of which is our Brother W. N. Robinson) of envoys from France.

Judges and reverends and mayors witnessed and superintended the flag raising on April 28, down on the courthouse lawn; but the chief personages at the reception spoken of are no less than Premier Viviani, General Joffre, naval officers, and Chambrun, the descendant of Lafayette.

One more war item is the meeting to be in the interests of the conservation of food, on May 3 in the woman's building. Sister T. J. Sheldon is the chairman of the committee.

On last Sunday, April 29, Brethren Aylor and Rushton preached at the Stone Church. At the afternoon social service, with Brother Greene in charge, Brother May gave a farewell talk previous to starting on an oversea trip for London, England, where beloved wife and children and dear brethren and sisters of the faith are anxiously awaiting his return. May his confidence in our heavenly Father to give him safe passage increase, and, as was promised through the Spirit that day, "if faithful and humble" may God protect him and his family to "return again to their home in safety." Brother May solicited the prayers of the Saints that the work in England may prosper, and many of the honest in heart be brought into the Master's fold.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

What Shall the Harvest Be?

To the Saints of the Lamoni Stake: For the fourth conference year we are appointed to the stake to labor therein as a missionary. Inasmuch as the men who labor in secular affairs are divinely called to labor together with the ministry to accomplish the work of God intrusted to all, the work is mutual, and we must seek to have our heavenly Father aid us. (See Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.)

Can you aid us by information as to where new openings can be effected, and where labor can be bestowed to advantage? Try to help us along these lines. Labor was never more urgently needed by a united effort than at this, the world's most momentous era since the days of Adam. (See Jeremiah 30: 1-7.) Unfathomed perplexity never reigned so universally on earth as at present. Shall we "endure to the end?" (Matthew 24: 15). Let us labor together in harmony as hitherto; cultivate unity in incentive and achievement—even the salvation of priceless human souls.

The annual General Conference of 1917 has come, done its work, and now gone, leaving its labors to follow. It was as near the apostolic ideal (1 Corinthians 1: 10) in movement and purpose and execution as has been attained by any General Conferences we have attended since 1878.

"Awake to union and be one; or saith the Lord, ye are not mine. Yea, like the Father and the Son, let all the Saints in union join."

Pray for and help us for the salvation of souls' sakes.

Yours for the Lord's work,

LAMONI, IOWA, April 27, 1917.

C. SCOTT.

From Here and There

Prayers are requested by Mrs. Bertha Crook for her four-year-old son Gerald who is sorely afflicted. They are isolated and do not have church privileges, residing at Bonesteel, South Dakota.

A. E. Warr, district president, reports good meetings at Mobile, Alabama. Baptized 11 on the 22d and others were to follow. Good prospects for a year's work.

The name of R. J. Farthing should have appeared with the Des Moines items last week. It was missed when we clipped the last part of his letter and put it in the Miscellaneous Department.

A letter came into the office recently, asking how the resolution read that was passed by the recent conference to the effect that Sunday schools should not have program features, for they interfered with the Religio. Does anyone recall anything in the conventions that even hinted at this? We don't.

A letter from Joseph Thorpe at Andover, Missouri, says the Saints are receiving a goodly share of God's blessings and striving to carry on the good work. He believes that the young and old should strive to counteract the influences of evil in the world and fight a good fight. He desires the prayers of the Saints that he may do his part.

We hope Brother Curry will get them. From a personal letter we quote this: "I want to end this convention year with five thousand students enrolled in all normal courses, the majority in the standard. It is not impossible. Our campaign for one thousand during the winter and spring netted us about nine hundred and twenty-five in the final count." With an army of well-trained, spiritual teachers, what could we not do?

We have several letters from various localities, which contain a number of news items of local interest only, for which we are sorry we cannot give room. We are always glad to receive items which seem to be of general interest, but cannot feel justified in giving space to anything else. A good way to determine this is to ask yourself if you would be interested in similar items from a branch a thousand miles away, not knowing the people nor the circumstances.

EDGETTS, MICHIGAN, April 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I have been reader of the HERALD since last December and have read in its valuable columns testimonies and reports of this blessed gospel from all over the world, I feel led to send in our little mite.

Last December we were organized as a branch and I am glad to say that our Lord and Savior has bestowed upon us many blessings. We have strong opposition to the work here. There have been ministers and Sunday school missionaries around here very often and it seems as though they try to see how much they can misrepresent the work which we most sincerely represent. We are eighteen babes in Christ and our old pioneer brother, H. W. Heath. But thank the Lord we are united in this great gospel as an individual. Our opposition seems somewhat like the old serpent—just present unto him the true weapon and he will bite himself.

We are very poor financially and can only trust in the one who said, "Blessed are they who love and keep my commandments." We have bought two village lots and the hall which was recently used for union Sunday school, and when I came to this country five years ago it was being used for dance hall. Dance is something we never hear of any more, and there are about one hundred little children enjoying Sunday school, who, up to the last two years, hardly knew what Sunday school was. Our school is going along nicely: average attendance for the first quarter, 20; Easter Sunday, 52 present; yesterday we had 38. We expect to move our hall up to the street this fall and make other improvements.

Brother Archie Whitehead of Cadillac, Michigan, has been very faithful to us in proclaiming the gospel,—was with us Easter, preached four sermons. On Monday evening after Easter his last sermon was the most forceful, and, in fact, the best sermon I ever heard delivered, after which we had prayer meeting and Brother Whitehead was blessed with the gift of tongue, and the officers of this branch received a most promising prophecy. I, as an individual, had investigated this work before I accepted, and knew of its truthfulness, but this was more evidence. And I now stand as Paul of old, only he said he had fought a good fight, and I stand ready to fight mine and do what the Lord has for me to do.

Pray for us, dear Saints.

Yours in bonds,

SAMUEL LONG.

DALLAS, TEXAS, April 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I scan your many pages and find so many interesting letters, I concluded to visit you once more, as it has been some time since I have written to your pages.

It seems like the Saints are alive in the work and trying to do something for our Lord and Savior. It is always a grand pleasure to me to see so many edifying letters. Sometimes I feel as though the Lord had forgotten me, but he comes to me in my dreams at night, showing me I am still one of his children.

Since I wrote to your pages I have had to witness what so many others had to, and that was to give up my dear, sweet mother who was so dear to us all, and one who always was faithful and ever looking to the Lord. She was a devoted mother and Saint. I wish I might exercise the faith she did.

There has been so many changes since I last wrote to you. We have a small branch here but it continues to grow, and what few Saints there are seem to be alive in the work. We have Sunday school at 10 o'clock a. m., preaching at 11 o'clock, Religio at 6.30 p. m., preaching that night at 8 o'clock. I look forward to the time when we will have a large branch. Some of the members have moved away to different branches and we hated to part with them very much, as they were a stay to the rest of us.

We can see the prophecies being fulfilled fast here in the last few years. It is like the song goes, Our times are in thy hand. It seems like Satan tempts me more each day of my life, and I want all the Saints to pray for me that I may win victorious, that I may be permitted to hold out faithful and reign with Christ here on earth again. And then we won't have the fear of wars and all these things that torment us now. It appeals to me the times of the Gentiles are near at hand. I hope to see the day when we will all be united where we can be with Christ always.

Brother B. F. Spicer was up a short time ago to visit the Saints; and also Brother Glaude Kuykendall. We certainly have some fine sermons by the missionaries. Wish they would visit us more often.

I suppose I had better make my letter short for fear of the wastebasket. Asking all the Saints to pray for me that the light may shine more brightly, that I will prove faithful to the end, I am still,

Your sister in Christ,

2017 Cedar Springs Street.

LILLIE MCALISTER.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, April 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: Having a little leisure time just now I send a few lines from the Queen City of the Ozarks to let the world know we are still on the map. Our branch is still doing business at the old stand, with war clouds hovering over our beautiful city, and many of our bright young men off to the training camp. It brings to our minds the words of him who spake as never man spake: "Think not I am come to send peace on the earth; I come not to send peace but a sword, for I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law, and a man's foes will be they of his own household."

This might seem strange language to some after reading the wonderful message brought to the lonely shepherds while keeping watch over their flocks by night. The angel said, "Fear not, for behold I bring good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Then there came a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace and good will to men."

We feel sure that all true Saints of the latter days have a true conception of the two statements made by the divine Master while the teachings of the Savior are broad, comprehensive and full of love. He knew also that they would bring division, bloodshed and utter ruin to men and nations. So I believe we as a people have a grander conception of the prevailing conditions than the Christian world in general, but after all this I don't believe we realize the full import of the awful carnage and bloodshed of the warring nations. And to think that our peace-loving Nation has been drawn into the conflict! Present-day revelation tells us that God chose wise men to frame a constitution and to form a declaration of principles that doesn't have an equal in the annals of history.

The declaration made by the Savior, "As you would that men do unto you do ye even so unto them," is the only principle that will save men and nations. While the Lord knew present conditions would prevail in our day, he did not decree that it should be, but as we witness the closing scenes of the world's history we can look back over past history and see why the Savior made the statement, "I come not to send peace on the earth, but a sword." While our bins and warehouses are almost bursting with plenty, strong armed men and women and their God-given offspring are walking the earth and going to bed hungry. May the time speedily come when universal peace will hover over all the earth and man will be his brother's keeper.

Now let us look at the bright side of the future, for surely the sun shines just as brightly behind the darker cloud as at the brighter noontide, but looking through a glass darkly we don't see it. Let me say to all the hastening time is on and if we are ready we will soon hear the glad message on earth—peace, good will to men.

As God did raise up a prophet in our generation and told him to herald to the world that the time had come that he would set his hand for the last time to gather his people Israel, and told him to preach repentance to fallen man and to build up his church and kingdom on earth again, when the honest-hearted began to rally around the standard of revealed truth, the church was so in order and the little stone that was cut out of the mountain began to roll, then the prophet was told to go to the land of Missouri and to the place called Independence, in the land bordering between Jew and Gentile, and there he was told to purchase and dedicate a certain spot of ground west of the courthouse, and it was to be used to build a temple on, which temple should be built in this generation. And the Lord further said his people should purchase the land and redeem Zion. If latter-day Israel had heeded the admonition what might have been the result? But we need not look backward now, our hope is in the future.

The Lord told us his people would return and build up the waste places. They have returned and so surely as Joseph Smith was a prophet of God Zion will be redeemed, the temple will be built, and the Lord will overshadow it with a cloud and his elders will be endowed with great power, and many demonstrations of God's power will be displayed. If we should be living then will we be able to rejoice, or will we be sifted out and be gathered with the tares? The first prophet came and did his work under the most trying ordeal that could fall to the lot of man; he, under all these trials, ushered in the great restoration, established the church with all of its ancient gifts and blessings.

"When earth in bondage long had lain, and darkness o'er the nations reigned, and all man's precepts proved in vain a perfect system to obtain," God as in former ages sent an angel to his prophet and the priesthood long since lost was restored. That prophet sealed his testimony with his life's blood and is not, for God took him. The second prophet rallied the scattered forces, and, according to promise, returned to build up Zion. He began to build on the foundation that his father had laid, did a great and grand work, and is not, for God took him. And now we have the third prophet at the helm, and, no doubt, we will see a great awakening under his rule, and knowing what we do and believing what we do, it would be wise in us to lay aside useless pleasures and be true to the covenant we have made and put forth a great effort to perfect our lives, that God may fill our vessels with oil so when the midnight cry goes forth, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," we will be ready to enter in before the door is shut.

I will give some of my personal experience. My lot has been in a good measure a hard one. I was forty-eight years old before I heard the angel's message. After a time I accepted it, and was soon called and ordained, and for seventeen years have been trying to warn the world and labor for a living. Most of my time has been spent in the little city where I first heard the message, have never met personally many of the representative men of the church, have heard complaints pro and con about the conditions that exist in Zion, but all this has not shaken my faith in the gospel, but in some men. I have a knowledge that men nor angels nor the archfiend of darkness can shake, but many times I have felt grieved over what I heard, but that is all cleared away.

Recently I had to make a hurried trip to Kansas City, and while there I was permitted to visit Independence. With my limited time I think I saw as much as the average man would. On account of General Conference I failed to see many of the officials that I have wanted to see. I visited the bishop's office and the Ensign Office and then the beautiful temple lot and had a good view of it and the surroundings. While there I was made to feel the solemnity of the occasion and my mind went back to the time when the latter-day prophet stood there and dedicated that beautiful spot for its future use. Night coming on, I took shelter under the friendly roof of the Order of Enoch house. Not yet having met one that I had ever seen before, I was made to feel that I was at home and among God's people. War and politics had no place there—the gospel was the theme. After supper we attended prayer meeting in the basement of the Stone Church, and, to my surprise I met the largest body of people I had ever seen in a prayer service. A good spiritual prayer meeting was the result. After a good night's rest we had breakfast and all gathered in the office and the good young sister with coat and apron on was called in and was requested to read part of a chapter, after which the writer was called to offer prayer. At my age and in all my travels I have never seen this in a public house before. In the language of one of old, "Surely the Lord was there." The sister in charge is surely the right one in the right place. We paid our bill and went to the Sanitarium and was shown through it by a polite young sister and was glad to know of the work being done. Finally we were permitted to inspect the Saints' home and found everything the very best, and the sister in charge is surely a patient, faithful Saint. We were called on to administer to one good old sister, and hope and pray that she was blessed.

I feel to say like the queen of old, "Lo! the half has not been told." May the blessings of heaven rest and abide with the church institutions and those in charge. I have seen for myself and am satisfied the best is being done that can be under the prevailing conditions. If we had kept the laws as given, what a different state of affairs would prevail. The redemption of Zion should be a burden on the mind of every one of God's people. Former Israel lost by failing to do. Will we do likewise?

In conclusion, my testimony is that this gospel is true. It is with our best efforts to live it and build up a character that will stand the test. Our branch aims to put forth a greater effort to evangelize the city this year than ever before, at least, that is the sentiment now. The sisters' aid is doing a good work and by their good work the branch is not in debt. They have paid for our street paving and have installed electric lights in the church house. We have a beautiful city and a good all-round healthy county and are glad to welcome good live Saints to join us in our effort to build up the work here in regions round about Zion. We are handicapped with the high cost of living, but look for better times.

Still in the conflict,
306½ East Commercial Street. J. W. QUINLY.

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: From the holiday time till February 21 I was at home. My wife contracted a severe cold while caring for the fires previous to my return, and this resulted in her illness. I was not idle while caring for her, but did local work as called upon, some reading and wrote several articles. A young brother remained at my home while I was away and relieved my wife of some of the heavier work.

Till March 4 I labored with Brother John Ely at Higbee, where I found improvement in a spiritual way, and left the Saints encouraged.

Held my first week of services at Bevier from March 6 to 11. Much blessed in ministering. Began a week's meetings in the Menefee Schoolhouse the 13th, continuing till the 19th. Closed with a crowded house, but felt that my work there was concluded. Many requests for my return at each place where I ministered.

Returned home the 20th to prepare for the work of the presidents of the seventy. The first session of their meetings preparing their work for the conference, was held on the 27th, and from that time till the close of conference I attended from two to six meetings a day. This was one of the busiest sessions of the council and of conference that I ever attended, and was indicative of a hastening time. Several items were referred to committees and some that had been deferred from former conferences were not considered.

On the 13th I was ordained to the office of high priest, it being thought by the conference and the Lord that my work was from hence to be in the local instead of the missionary department. After occupying as a seventy since 1879 and never in all that time have I accepted the position of either branch or district presidency, but have assisted in a local way when called upon, even to doing the work of janitor.

For the last seventeen years the work that I have done in a clerical way for the quorums and conventions and councils has been very heavy, and became more so as time advanced, so that I felt a degree of relief to occupy more in a local way than hitherto, in fact it had become almost a necessity, as the Lord well knew. I do not expect to cease my activities, which are well known to those who know me best, till I have finished my course, and the welcome is accorded me to accept the crown of life.

Previous to my going to the Menefee Branch there had been some opposition by the Christian Church membership, of which I was not well informed. I write this history of the opposition by request.

While holding services at the Menefee Schoolhouse and lodging with Elder C. W. Miller, the president of the branch in that part, Mr. C. E. White, one of the church board of the Christian Church came to have a talk on religious subjects with me. In the course of the conversation he expressed an earnest desire, and as I thought an honest desire, that the difference between the two churches in that neighborhood might be settled. I told him I did not know of any other way to settle these differences than that each church would secure a qualified representative to defend the church which he represented. That was agreed to, and I wrote out the usual church propositions. These were submitted to Elder T. R. Glidwell, the pastor, and the decision was that these church propositions would not be considered by them till it was determined what would be done with those they had presented to our people some time previous, of which neither I nor the president of the branch knew anything. On December 14 Mr. White gave to Brother Miller a copy of what he said Elder Glidwell had presented some weeks previous from the pulpit, which were neither signed nor dated when sent to me. I immediately wrote underneath them:

"December 14, 1916. No signature to the above. No one stands responsible for them. This is the first time it has been known that such propositions existed by either of us. C. W. Miller, J. F. Mintun."

I then returned them to Mr. White.

These propositions were:

Proposition 1. Was Joseph Smith, jr. a prophet of God?

Proposition 2. Do the Holy Scriptures teach that the Book of Mormon is wholly of human origin?

Proposition 3. Is the church of which I am a member in harmony with the church described in the New Testament in respect to doctrine, organization, faith and practice?

Proposition 4. Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of which _____ is a member in harmony with the New Testament in respect to doctrine, organization, faith and practice?

I then wrote out propositions covering all the principles contained in the above and sent a copy to the church board and to the pastor, Elder Glidwell, properly signed, and giving reasons why we could not consider undated and unsigned propositions. Some one of the church board reported that they had done all they could to get me to debate, but that I would not. I then wrote to the church board and Elder Glidwell, urging a favorable consideration of the propositions sent, so that on January 20 I received the same propositions they had previously sent, as quoted above, signed by the president and secretary of the church board, not even designating which of them they would affirm and which deny. I wrote a lengthy reply to their letter and the reason that such was not a proper signature to propositions, and sent another copy of propositions properly signed, urging them that if they wished the differences between the two churches settled to sign one of the copies and retain the other and notify me when complete arrangements could be made.

The propositions that I then sent covered the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith and the divine origin of the Book of Mormon in the one proposition, they to affirm as the second proposition—

"Does the Bible, consisting of the sixty-six books of the Old and New Testaments, contain all that God has ever revealed or ever will reveal to man essential to his salvation," the third proposition being the affirmation of the church they claimed to represent, and the fourth their church proposition so worded as to explain what church they represented.

Nothing was heard further from them till after Brother C. W. Miller notified them on March 9 that I would be in the neighborhood March 13, and would be at his house ready to sign up propositions and rules to govern the debate they seemed desirous should be held.

On the 12th, the same propositions they had previously sent, and in the same order were signed by the president and secretary of the church board "of the Church of Christ at Lagonda," designating which they would affirm and which deny, which they had not previously done, but requesting them to be signed by "the board of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at the Menefee."

I then signed propositions 1 and 2 as sent by the board previously, a copy of which I have already given, then changed the order or proposition 3 and 4 so that our church proposition would appear as proposition 3, and their church proposition 4. I also inserted in its proper place the name of their church as "the Church of Christ at Lagonda," which they in their last letter said they were the board of in signing the propositions.

On the back of one of the leaves of my letter to them was written, and the entire letter with propositions returned to me, the following:

"Dear Sirs and Brethren: Not authorized to call a board meeting except on receipt of the signed propositions sent you as stated in letter of the Board of the 12th. H. S. Corey." (Mr. H. S. Corey is president of the board.)

They claimed, so one of the board said, that because I inserted the name of the church, "the Church of Christ at Lagonda," they having previously refused to insert the name of the church they were to affirm, but which church the board claimed to represent when they signed the propositions the last time, and because I changed the order of the third and fourth propositions, the ones I signed and sent to them were not the same propositions. But I insert them here just as I signed them so the reader will see whether their claim is a correct one or not:

Proposition 1. Was Joseph Smith, jr. a prophet of God? J. F. Mintun affirms.

Proposition 2. Do the Holy Scriptures teach that the Book of Mormon is wholly of human origin? J. F. Mintun denies.

Proposition 3. Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which I am a member, in harmony with the church described in the New Testament in respect to doctrine, organization, faith, and practice? J. F. Mintun affirms.

Proposition 4. Is the Church of Christ at Lagonda, of which I am a member, in harmony with the church described in the New Testament in respect to doctrine, organization, faith, and practice? J. F. Mintun denies.

I then sent to each of the board a letter notifying him that on the 19th I would publicly present at the Menefee Schoolhouse the status of the debate, and show who was not willing to debate. These copies were delivered so that all were received on Saturday, the 17th. On the 19th the schoolhouse was filled, but only one of the board present, Mr. White. I had indicated in my letter that anyone whom they might designate would be permitted to ask questions at the close of my service.

At the close of the service I presented the following:

LAGONDA, MISSOURI, March 19, 1917.

To Whom it May Concern: For the reasons herein presented, I present the attached propositions:

1. There has been much agitation of the differences in belief between the two churches represented by local organizations in the vicinity of Lagonda, Missouri, and several attacks have been made against the Latter Day Saints by literature and lectures, with replies thereto.

2. Every time a person, by reason of his choice, makes a request to become a member with the Latter Day Saints that agitation makes itself apparent.

3. There is an honest desire expressed by a few to have the differences between the two churches, above referred to settled, which cannot be done except by a thorough examination of the evidences on both sides, which is best done by a public debate conducted by thoroughly qualified representatives of each church.

4. That it cannot be said truthfully that the Latter Day Saints will not defend their faith by a debate upon fair propositions.

5. Believing that to prove many churches wrong does not prove any right, we believe that each church should be willing to defend some item of their belief.

6. That the people may be given the opportunity to make a fair examination of what the Bible teaches in regard to doctrine, organization, faith, and practice.

Propositions informally presented:

Proposition 1. Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God? Latter Day Saints affirm or—Proposition 1. Is the Book of Mormon of divine origin and worthy the belief of the followers of Christ? Latter Day Saints affirm.

Proposition 2. Does the Bible, consisting of the sixty-six books of the Old and New Testaments, contain all that God has ever revealed or ever will reveal to man essential to his salvation? Christian Church affirms.

Proposition 3. Is the church of which I am a member, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in harmony with the Bible in respect to doctrine, organization, faith, and practice? Latter Day Saints affirm.

Proposition 4. Is the church of which I am a member, known as the Church of Christ or Christian Church, in harmony with the church described in the New Testament in respect to doctrine, organization, faith, and practice? Christians affirm.

Conditions: 1. Each disputant to have satisfactory indorsement from his respective churches.

2. At least six sessions of two hours each, consisting of two half-hour speeches by each disputant on each proposition.

Respectfully,

J. F. MINTUN.

General Representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I am in hearty accord with all the above.

C. W. MILLER,

President of the Branch of Latter Day Saints in the vicinity of Lagonda, Missouri.

On the 8th instant the Christian Church tried to set themselves aright in the estimation of their neighbors, but in this they largely failed. They tried to represent that we were the aggressors, when the facts were then presented that the first private challenge was made by one of the members of the Christian Church to one of our members, and the first public challenge was made by Elder T. R. Glidwell from his pulpit.

From expressions made this will be the last effort the Christians of that place will make to secure a debate.

With a love for the truth, and a desire to be at peace with all men, I am

Yours in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

[Propositions for a debate should be fair. Each side should defend a like number of propositions, otherwise the effect on the audience is not equitable, and arguments are sometimes used which are not tenable, as they prove too much. As to the propositions signed above, there appears no reason why the insertion of the name of the church and the changing of the order should prove objectionable. Nevertheless, the propositions are objectionable because the second proposition is not clearly stated. If it is intended to affirm the proposition that the Bible contains all of the Word of God, that should be clearly stated. But if this means that the real point at issue will be, Is the Book of Mormon of divine origin? then it is unfairly stated, for that proposition, and is again not fair since it would place on Elder Mintun the obligation to defend three out of four propositions, giving him an unequal share of the burden, and on one proposition—the second—placing him at a disadvantage by stating the proposition inversely. We are willing to defend any doctrine or teachings of the church; it is only fair that those taking the opposite side in the debate should assume an equal burden of affirmative argument.—EDITORS.]

FANSHAW, OKLAHOMA, April 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wish to communicate through your columns as to the work of the church at this place. We have struggled long here against much discouragement, but the work is taking on new life which makes us all rejoice.

Brother E. A. Erwin has been with us two Sundays in succession, baptizing nine. The house was crowded to overflowing with each service. Many souls stood up to reality of the great latter-day work. Several to be baptized next Sunday, the 29th. Look for a great ingathering. This branch is presided over by B. E. Goss, a faithful servant of the Lord. I hope he will continue faithful until a final victory is had over Satan and his powers.

I will say in conclusion, I love this latter-day work for I know that it is the work of God. I ask the prayers of all the brethren and sisters throughout the church for us that we may be able to meet the condition that is surely coming on the world with exception of the Lord, and be prepared to gather home to Zion.

May the blessing of God rest upon all his servants everywhere, is my prayer.

W. O. BRANNON.

MUNSON, FLORIDA, April 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: We were pleased to receive the DAILY HERALD during conference, and we thereby got the appointments and closing sessions about one week sooner than by the weekly HERALD.

We were pleased, in the main, excepting, of course, that the conference sent us only two missionaries, and the strangers, and sent our old and tried missionaries to other fields. However, what is our loss is others' gain, and we hope our two new men will do us good.

I am inclosing a clipping from the Pensacola Journal of recent date, showing the itinerary of a Catholic priest of that place, and showing unmistakable signs that the wounds inflicted upon the Catholic Church in Europe are healed in free America.

In Revelation 13: 16 we are told: "And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." This must refer to the time when Pepin and Charlemagne gave such prestige and power to the papacy. Meyers, the great historian, tells us of the birth of Mohammed in A. D. 570, and of the conquest of Italy by the Lombards the same year. Brother Macgregor's Marvelous Work and a Wonder gives this as the true date of the beginning of the papacy, or the beast of Revelation. Revelation 13: 12 speaks of "another beast which exerciseth all the power of the first beast." Revelation 15: 13 speaks of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet.

Now it seems we have four powers to deceive and do harm, to-wit: Satan, the papacy, the false prophet, and Protestantism, the daughters of Babylon, the second beast. Revelation 13: 3 tells us of the beast receiving a wound, and it was healed. The wounds and knocks the Catholics received from the time Wycliffe translated the Bible into the English language, and through the shifting scenes of the Reformation down to 1871 when Victor Emmanuel despoiled the popes of the last vestige of temporal power, must constitute the wounding of the beast.

Now, for the time of the healing. When it was written in the Constitution of the United States that all men could worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, then it was that Catholicism got a new and broader field of enterprise and growth, and to-day she is waxing great, with no chance of any ruler's placing a ban on her or hindering in any way.

Now we see the dragon, which is the Devil, with his three colleagues, the beast, Catholicism, the second beast, Protestantism, and Mohammedism, the false prophet, all arrayed and firmly pitted against the work of Christ, the true church, for the final conflict in this the last dispensation of God's providence to mankind.

Oh, how sore is the conflict. What odds for the truth to battle against! With the true faith besmirched by the Brighamite apostasy wherein many are caused to feel a disgust for anything pertaining to the Latter Day Saint Church and its faith, the truth being "evilly spoken of" by reason of some "privily bringing in damnable heresies," the work of the missionary force is against awful odds and we should all feel a desire to sustain them, the missionaries, not only with our prayers but with our tithes and offerings, that their families may be fed and clothed in their absence, and that we all may be laborers together for the promulgation of the gospel in this the last and greatest battle for God's truth.

Let me summarize: We have Satan as the dragon with power to counterfeit the spiritual gifts as witness the claims of many of the churches, and Mohammedanism in the east with its millions of followers, and the beast in the west, Catholicism, with its millions of followers, with the daughters of Babylon, the Protestants, the second beast with its millions of followers, interspersed and woven in, each and all at peace with each other, having agreed to not discuss doctrine and claiming that all is right, anyway, and that it is not necessary even to belong to any church or to be baptized at all if your heart is right—this and these all combine to make a solid phalanx or bulwark of opposition to the truth. Oh! may we all see eye to eye and strive while it is yet day when man can work, consoling ourselves with the thought that the straight and narrow way is to be found by the few while the many go in the broad way. May God help us.

Your colaborer,

SPEARFISH, SOUTH DAKOTA, April, 26, 1917.

Editors Herald: Spearfish is one of the last, and perhaps least, of the many secluded spots into which you wend your way to carry the message of truth, but you are no less appreciated because of that fact. While we would enjoy sitting at one of the central tables and partaking of the spiritual food as it comes direct from the heavenly provider, yet we are happy in receiving the fragments that fall to us through the medium of your pages.

While we are beset by human weaknesses and plenty of them, and while there are discouraging features that frequently enter into our work and seem to scatter our forces, there are other occasions when a spirit of unity and good fellowship takes possession of us and we are happy. It is one of these occasions of which I especially wish to write.

On Saturday, April 21, while sitting in our office mentally figuring the weeks profit and loss, we were interrupted by a gentleman coming in who had every appearance of having been well kept, and our mental conclusion was that he was a newspaper solicitor, as he was carrying a daily issue, but who proved to be Brother J. B. Jordan of Watertown, South Dakota, traveling representative for a cutlery company of Kansas City, Missouri.

In the course of our conversation we learned that Brother Jordan would be with us over Sunday, that he carried a violin with him as well as a good voice and that he was willing to assist us in our Sunday evening literary program, after the Religio service. Sunday afternoon was spent at the home of the writer where most of the Saints and some friends assembled, and a pleasant and profitable afternoon was spent. In the evening at the little church we were greeted by a congregation not large but appreciative, with a goodly number of nonmembers, and the program was nicely complimented by those who were present. Full advantage was taken of Brother Jordan's willingness to be used and he was worked in a male quartet, a violin solo, duet, and obligato, all of which were duly appreciated.

As Brother Jordan could gain no time by leaving Monday evening, he decided to stay over until Tuesday morning. As soon as this was known Brother D. D. Plumb got busy and arranged for another musical evening at his home. The Saints were invited as well as a number of friends, and a most enjoyable evening was spent together, which we believe will result in good as the spirit of unity seemed complete.

As "variety is the spice of life" we got ours on the way home. About nine o'clock a heavy rain set in which caused us to anticipate fun ahead, as four of "Henry's Ramblers" stood out in front of Brother Plumb's with only three chains to supply the four cars. About eleven o'clock the rain had somewhat abated and we decided to take to the mud. We had some pretty stiff grades to make on the way home, and as we were the last car to leave we were not surprised when we reached the worst grade to find the other three cars securely anchored while most of the lady passengers were backed up against a wire fence absorbing the rain. It was up to the men folks to put their shoulders to the wheels and push. While the process was rather slow it was effective and in due time we were all at the top, wet and muddy, but good natured. Brother Jordan jumped into the mud and pushed with the same degree of enthusiasm that had characterized his "fiddling." With the exception of this little "dampener" it was an evening well spent, and we feel that much benefit was received from our association together during Brother Jordan's stay; not only were the members stimulated to greater activity along these lines, but a very friendly feeling was created among our friends not of the faith that we believe will develop into a closer relationship.

Our best wishes are for you and the message you carry, and we trust that in the final summing up when the blessings are being awarded there may be enough for all, and something left for Spearfish.

Yours in the faith,

GEORGE W. NEWTON.

[The following letter is one submitted as a second weekly letter by Elder Rannie. It contains points of such marked interest that President Smith has sent it to us with the privilege of publication.—EDITORS.]

LAWRENCE, KANSAS, April 27, 1917.

Elder F. M. Smith: On Sunday night I attended a mass meeting on "the hill" in the Robinson Gymnasium in the interest of food production and its conservation. The city churches were all closed. The principal speaker was the president of the Kansas Agricultural College; the others were prominent men of the city of Lawrence.

Some of the things said enter into the building up of Zion, which is now the chief concern of the Nation on account of the war. It was stated that $700,000,000 was wasted every year by the American people, and that of that amount $20,000,000 was for chewing gum.

Allowing our membership to be 70,000 in the United States, our share of the $700,000,000 would be $490,000, which is quite an item, and as the standard set by our heavenly Father is higher than that of the world, it is quite likely that if we could add the cost of what the Lord advises against, it would greatly increase that amount.

About one hundred and fifty of the university students have quit to enter the army. The Daily Kansan said a great percentage of them were "slackers" in their studies and they were glad of an opportunity to hide their deficiency. The president of the college advised against hasty enlistment, saying that the service of educated and trained men would be needed when the war was over. And through the Daily Kansan the information was given out that they did not want the medical students to enlist, that their service would be in great demand during and after the war.

I have been spending my time at home and in the public library reading the current magazines and good books. I have found a special interest in one book, Home Life in Colonial Days. It removes from my mind some of the traditions that have been handed down. I find that while they had many commendable virtues worthy of our imitation, that the shortcomings common to humanity were found among them; such as vanity, pride, selfishness, extravagance, and oppression, and drunkenness. I perceive that the best are better than they were one hundred years ago and the bad are worse.

Your brother,

EDWARD RANNIE.

DENVER, COLORADO, April 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: 'Tis said "Silence makes the best noise" but not so with the members of the Second Denver Branch, for we are all awake to the fact that God is calling us to come up higher, and while we remain silent it may place us in such a dormant condition that we may forget our duty, so we are all up and doing. Our members are all rejoicing in this blessed work and with God's divine help we are all striving.

God is the pilot of our ship, the captain of our crew, our aim in life the port. If we make a mistake, forget it, but let us profit by it; if some one unjustly hurts us, forget it by remembering to return a kindness. The Spirit moves us and we want to press onward.

We want to throw off the present daily routine that become monotonous. We want to be up and doing the Master's work.

If men would cease to worry
And women cease to sigh,
And all be glad to bury Whatever has to die;
If neighbor spoke to neighbor
As love demands of all,
The rust would eat the saber—
The spear stay on the wall.
Then every day would glisten
And every eye would shine,
And God would pause to listen
And life would be divine.

OLIVE L. BULLARD.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

To the Saints of the Southern Ohio District; Greeting: Brother H. E. Moler having been appointed to the Clinton District, has tendered to the Presidency his resignation as president of the Southern Ohio District. Brother Arthur Allen having been appointed to the Southern Ohio District, we have asked him to assume the responsibility of the presidency of the district until the convening of the district conference.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, president.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Southern Ohio District; Greetings: Having been appointed to take Brother H. E. Moler's place as district president, and in consultation with Apostle G. T. Griffiths, we have set the time for the reunion from August 3 to 11, to be held in Wellston (the location in Wellston will be given later). Conference will convene at 10 a. m. on the 10th. We hope that all who can will make preparation to attend and make this reunion a success. Arthur Allen, district president as per appointment of First Presidency, 1432 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri.

To the Saints and Friends of the Owen Sound and Toronto Districts; Greeting: It is decreed by the appointing powers that I shall return again to the above-named mission, and, also, that I have charge of the missionary arm of the work. I do hereby invite the hearty cooperation of all those that love the work of God.

I trust, as servants of the good Master, that we can labor together in unity and love, and thus be a power for good, teaching both by precept and example.

We will be pleased to hear from those who desire preaching in their respective vicinities, especially where new openings can be effected.

I will be in the mission between May 15 and June 1.

My home address is South Boardman, Michigan, box 45; mission address, Clavering, Ontario. I would be pleased to hear from the brethren of the missionary force at least once a month.

Trusting that the Lord will bless us with a goodly degree of his Holy Spirit in our labors for him the ensuing year, I remain,

Your colaborer for Christ,
W. D. ELLIS.

Our Departed Ones

ONEY.—Lyle Coney, son of Brother Frank and Minnie Coney, was born May 19, 1906. Baptized last July by Warren McElwain. Died April 18, 1917, at Poplar, Montana, of croupous diphtheria. On account of the nature of the disease no services could be held. He was sick only a very short time without any suffering, and peacefully fell asleep in his mother's arms.

LAW.—Brother Samuel Law, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, Branch, was born at Lodmorden, England, February 26, 1852. Baptized at New Bedford by John Smith, June 29, 1899. Died April 11, 1917. Always loyal, he lived in the one hope; was highly esteemed and respected. Funeral services by John E. Rogerson to a large attendance of relatives and friends.

HATFIELD.—Juliel Clark was born June 8, 1837, in Ross County, Ohio. Married Benjamin Clark in 1854. Married Charles Hatfield in 1913. She became a member of the Christian Church in her youth; for a number of years she has been favorable to the latter-day work, and two of her sons have been baptized. Died April 22, 1917. Funeral services conducted by D. T. Williams from the home.

SHOTTON.—William Henry Shotton was born July 31, 1903. Baptized by J. W. Paxton, July 21, 1912. He was a faithful member of the church; considerate of others, patient in suffering, and his faith was always centered in God. Died April 12, 1917. Survived by his parents, 4 sisters and 1 brother. Funeral sermon by Frank Izatt; interment in Oak Hill Cemetery at Taylorville, Illinois.

MCCORMACK.—Miss Jennie McCormack was born at Goreville, Illinois, August 11, 1901. Died April 24, 1917, at her home in Independence, Missouri, after a severe and lingering cold and fever of ten months. Leaves to mourn, father and mother, Brother John H. and Mary J. McCormack, also 5 sisters. Funeral from the Saints' church, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. E. L. Kelley and J. Metcalf conducting services at the church, and James J. Teeter at cemetery.

KENNEL.—Mary Jane Pearson was born August 23, 1851, at Hill, New Hampshire. Married Edward Woodman, December 31, 1870. To this union were born two children. Baptized May 19, 1879. Mr. Woodman having died, she later married Valentine Kennel, December 4, 1882, and they always made the missionary welcome. She died April 22, 1917, at her home. The funeral was conducted by D. T. Williams, from the Methodist church in Montour, Iowa. She was loved and appreciated by many friends.

SCHWEERS.—Little Kenneth Edward Schweers, son of G. E. and Sena Schweers, born July 29, 1911, at Burlington, Iowa. Though a child, he had faith in the promises of God through the ordinances of the gospel, upon one occasion taking the oil to the pastor, asking for administration and receiving a blessing. On April 6, 1917, typhoid fever laid its grasp upon him, later pneumonia set in, and after being unconscious for several days, died April 27. Services at the home. Sermon by D. J. Williams to a crowded house of relatives and friends.

HERRICK.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 25, 1917, Sister Catherine Herrick, aged 91 years, 11 months and 3 days. Born May 22, 1825, in Manchester, England. She and her parents were baptized there in 1839; came to America in 1842 and located at Keokuk, Iowa. She united with the Reorganized Church in 1866, baptized by J. W. Lake, and remained steadfast all the seventy-eight years of gospel faith. In January 1850, her mother and one sister were drowned while crossing the Mississippi on the ice. Funeral service by H. A. Stebbins and H. N. Snively. Body taken to Centerville for burial by the side of her daughter.

Book Reviews

SAINT PAUL THE HERO.—By Rufus M. Jones, New York, Macmillan Company, 1917, 172 pages. This book is one written primarily for boys. Many volumes have been prepared concerning Saint Paul, more, probably, than concerning any other New Testament character, with the exception of Jesus. But these texts have been mostly for adult students. This book is to make its appeal to the boy and girl. The form is a semifictional narrative, but still attempts to portray accurately his life and time. This is a book worthy of careful attention by our library boards.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

INNOCENT OR GUILTY

In the criminal law the principle is emphasized that every man is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty. Sometimes we have thought a few may be a little too much inclined to take the opposite view and assume that a man is guilty until proven innocent.

As a possible instance there may be cited, that in the past three months the editors have run some personal notices affecting men who are still living. It should be unnecessary to add, that in no instance was the party affected informed of our intentions, and in no instance did he supply any data therefor. Yet in each instance this question has been raised by some one.

The associate editor alone is responsible, though with the best of intentions, as he was and still is of the opinion that we ought not to wait until a man is dead to recognize that he has done or is doing good work, and is at least trying to uphold the cause of truth. There should be no inference involved that those who have not been named, as yet, are placed in any subordinate class, or that those who have been named are to be unduly exalted.

We are reminded of what was once said by the wife of Joseph Smith the Martyr. It was to the effect that when he was moved upon by the Spirit of God he was a prophet of God; at other times he was a man, though a good man.

This thought of guilt or innocence has often been brought to mind in branch and district work, as well as at times on the floor of General Conference, by the trend of some of the arguments, which seemed to go upon the assumption that some man or quorum were to be assumed to have a wrong intention, until the contrary was shown.

This would seem to be scarcely good logic, and certainly is not Christianity. It is different when we have discovered action of such a character as rightly to lead us to believe that our brother possesses such bad qualities.

But as a rule after considering the possible constructions which may be placed upon a motion, as is proper; considering it in its various aspects and possibilities, as is proper; an assumption is made and an argument based upon that assumption of apparently the worst possible construction. This is wrong.

If men are to do the best work of which they are capable, they must have sufficient responsibility placed upon them. This means an opportunity to do wrong. But this is necessary, if they are to be given sufficient opportunity to do what is right.

It is right that we should watch carefully lest our democracy be impaired. It is right that we should scrutinize carefully every proposition presented to the body. It is right that we all study and pray, that we watch closely what is given by way of revelation to the church. We have the duty of giving individual consideration to our problems.

But we do not want to lean so far that way that we become unduly skeptical of the good motives of our brethren, or become so extremely critical that, unless we are shown plainly by some personal evidence, we will act adversely. But again we should respect the reasonable doubt of our brethren, appreciate their sincerity and earnestness, and the great amount of good they do and are doing.

We know in the early church there were many who took the position of too great skepticism, as will be seen by the Fishing River revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 102:3). It seems that they held back from the redemption of Zion, and Zion was not redeemed, because so many held back, and waited to see that it was redeemed, before they would help.

An illustration of a horticulturist was used by Elder Walter W. Smith before the priesthood meeting at the recent conference. When we have an horticulturist to direct our tree planting, we ought not to say we will set out just one tree and wait and see how it develops, and after it is grown to a good height we will set out another. If we have a good man, who knows his business, we ought to set out sufficient for the purpose in hand.

Some criticism was made that we ought to be sure that he is an horticulturist: that is true, though we should also take reasonable steps to satisfy ourselves in this regard, looking up his credentials and considering earnestly his qualifications. We may be too easy and acquiescent. But there is also the serious possible loss, if we should do what they did eighty-three years ago—hold back so hard that we stop altogether.

Now this is no plea for blind obedience. The Lord has never asked from his people blind obedience, but intelligent service. Nor is it a plea for one man or set of men. Men of God under his direction and inspiration will always prefer intelligent support rather than ignorant obedience. A man who thinks and then acts is worth much more even though occasionally mistaken, than one who always votes "right," but does not think. The vote is only the beginning of right support, not the end. Right support is only possible when guided by intelligence and understanding, spiritual and mental.

But it is a plea for the church that individually and collectively we give to one another that spiritual and moral support which is right. S. A. B.

THE LIBRARY COMMISSION

There apparently has been much misunderstanding of the work of the library commission. Its first purpose was a closer working arrangement of the Sunday school and Religio with the church. This work has shown much progress.

Its second great purpose is a better organization of our reading. We have tried many times to avoid stereotyped instructions, because we realize that conditions are different in each field. Yet, in all too many instances the member of the library board is elected the last of all, and some one put on the board who knows next to nothing about books—what to read and how to read them. Clearly it were far better to have one efficient worker than three or five inefficient.

The need of the library board and commission is, that with all of our reading the amount of really good reading actually done is small. Children, young people, and even those older in years need advice and suggestions on what to read and how to read. The library board member should arrange at reasonable intervals for talks upon good literature and do everything possible to encourage the reading of good literature, including the church books, and especially the three standard books of the church.

Organization is secondary to this great purpose; a building is secondary. What is important is to increase the reading of good books. Even the buying of books is secondary to this purpose.

In some places there is an excellent public library. If so, it should be utilized so far as possible. In some places a local branch of the public library may be established in the church reading room. There is a marked tendency, especially in some of the large cities, to give special attention to children's reading, providing a separate room and separate persons in charge of this department. In some instances lectures are given to parents and Sunday school teachers on reading matter for the young. Every facility should be utilized.

In most of the States there is now a traveling library, which may be used to advantage in the rural districts; but in some cases the district board may prefer to buy their own books, and, as the branches are close together, circulation is readily provided for. The whole field should be studied and those placed upon the board who are most fit in a practical, rational way to assist and improve the quality of our reading.

Results are what count, more than merely forming another board or organization. But experience has shown that organization—some one or more persons placed in charge of the practical work—is the most efficient way of carrying it on; for what is everyone's business too often is no one's business, and so is neglected. These principles have been emphasized time and time again in addresses at the General Convention, in round table discussion for librarians, in letters, and in certain of the church publications. But it was made plain at the recent conference that many still do not understand that we prefer results to form.

The members of the library commission are more than glad to assist with suggestions and advice. But the purpose of the district library board, regardless of the number of its members, is to encourage throughout the district the reading of good literature and to try to systematize the work in the various localities, encouraging each one to use every available facility, but at the same time giving consideration to the small, scattered branch which is unable, without help, to secure necessary reading.

Consideration should be given, also, to the needs of the branch and the general church. The spending of money is a very third-rate consideration. Real counsel and help and the establishment of such local library as the condition of the branch, Sunday school and Religio warrant, is essential. In very many instances the local library of the branch, Sunday school and Religio may be used to advantage. Especially is this true so far as it affects church publications and books for young children. But the value of the book is not to be measured by the length of time it lasts and the amount of dust it gathers on the shelf. So we say that buying a book, even church books, is not of the greatest importance, but rather the reading of good literature.

The library commission respectfully submits that there exists in every locality of which they have any information a need for such encouragement and help. If any one knows of a locality where it is not needed, we shall be pleased to receive the information direct, and give it consideration.

BROTHER ELBERT AT CHURCH

The very pleasing news comes from Los Angeles that President Elbert A. Smith and wife attended the sacrament service there on May 6. It is something of a trip as Brother Elbert is stopping about twenty-five miles from the city of Los Angeles. It was indeed a joyful occasion for those who were permitted to meet him, as it is the first time he has been able to attend church since the middle of last December, when he attended the funeral of his father-in-law, Elder Asa S. Cochran. As the evening shadows fell Brother Elbert was heard to remark, "This has been a happy day"; and is indeed such not only for him and his family, but for the whole church.

We have heard many regrets over the loss of his very able pen in the editorial columns of the HERALD. Our present hopes are that he will be able to return in the fall and at least occasionally honor the HERALD by appearing on its editorial page.

LAMONI ORDER OF ENOCH

The trustees of the Lamoni Order of Enoch met again on May 5. The regular meetings are held monthly and of late they have had a full attendance, or very nearly so, at each meeting. Of late, however, there have been many called meetings, as they are undertaking more aggressive work. It is of interest to note, for the benefit of those who believe that the order should be entirely in the hands of the bishopric, that Bishop Carmichael is chairman; Richard Lambert, his counselor, secretary; and A. J. Yarrington, also his counselor, is treasurer. These three constitute the executive committee and all administrative matters are referred to them with power to act. They have purchased recently a mill property in Lamoni with the intention of improving it and putting it in firstclass shape for local work. J. W. Barr has been employed to take hold of the proposition on a stewardship basis. The matter is of much local importance, for which reason they intend to call upon the business men of the town to assist. But it is also of general interest. It is but one of many instances of the establishment of stewardships recently, and it is of interest that the Order of Enoch is doing aggressive work, as well as thinking and praying. Another feature that they will take up is the pickle works, which has been found to be of local benefit in recent years. The order has not great tracts of property, but still owns considerable property which they have received by donation. They are trying conscientiously to put into effect the law of stewardships under the immediate direction of the stake bishopric.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Enlistments

We hear of many of our boys enlisting as privates or at the officers' camps. The State University of Iowa calls attention to the fact that many of their students have been called to the colors in the officers' camps, and this includes from Lamoni, Carl Judson, H. M. Dancer, and David Dancer.

Jews Threatened With Massacre

A recent news dispatch credits the Jewish Chronicle with the statement that the Turkish governor of Palestine has publicly proclaimed the intention of the authorities mercilessly to destroy the Jewish population, applying the same policy adopted in Armenia. The same publication states that many thousands of Jews in Palestine are starving and homeless.

Religio President Honored

We are very much pleased to note by announcement recently received that Brother Granville S. Trowbridge, general president of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, has been appointed Assistant General Freight Agent by the St. Louis Southwestern Railway (Cotton Belt). This is a recognition of able and faithful services long performed. We are pleased to set it forth as distinctly a reward of merit.

From Attleboro

We are in receipt of an extract from the Attleboro Sun, May 5, 1917. It includes a good summary of a sermon by Elder George Wellington Robley as a Saturday sermonet. A good cut of Elder Robley is also published. His work is being well received there and the ministers of the leading churches have been very cordial in their recognition. Elder Robley has been appointed to the New York District and expects to be in his field by the 20th. We are pleased to note his return to active work in the mission field, though he has been active for recent years locally, as is indicated above.

University Meetings

It is of interest to know that our young people at Iowa City have been held together the past winter by the efforts of Richard C. Kelley and his wife, formerly Miss Anna Zimmerman of Philadelphia. They feel the need there of a resident pastor to look after the interests of the young people, answer questions and do other pastoral work. There are some twenty to thirty young people of our church at the State University of Iowa, and there are a dozen or so at Ames. These latter are holding regular Sunday school meetings with all whom they can find in the college and town belonging to our church. They have been blessed in their efforts to meet and study the word of God.

"Light" Makes a Distinction

We are pleased to note in Light for April 16, 1917, an article covering nearly two pages pointing out the differences between the Utah Mormons and the Reorganized Church. This article was prepared by Elder Heman C. Smith at their request. Light is an organ of the Masonic Fraternity, published at Louisville, Kentucky. The editorial note reads: "Light requested President Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Mormon church to answer specifically the charge that his branch of the Mormon church practiced polygamy. He had his church historian prepare the following article, which will come as a surprise to many who do not know there are two Mormon communities in existence." No opportunity to point out the difference should be permitted to go by.

Good Prayer Meetings

The following from a personal letter should prove of general interest as showing that the spirit of consecration and blessing is by no means local.

"Have you heard of the wonderful meetings at Providence? Of the branch turnout to Wednesday evening prayer service? Some have been two and three hours long with all the time occupied. The Spirit has been there in power, resting upon the children so they spoke under its influence. Isn't that beautiful? Long ago those blessings were promised that branch, yet it went down, down until its dissolution seemed probable; yet, under the faithful fostering of a consecrated man, it has come up. Each Wednesday noon the Saints offer a prayer for that evening service and they all (majority) go to church fasting. That has been going on many months. Is it any wonder the Lord blesses them?"

An Appreciation

It is interesting to note from unexpected quarters a recognition of the fact that better organization will mean more efficient work. The following letter was received from a remote part of the country, with a request that the name be omitted. It is certainly a cause of joy to note the increased confidence in many quarters; and it is more pleasing that such confidence is fully justified.

"I am pleased to note the change in the reporting of the men under appointment. It is a move in the right direction. I feel sure there will be much more labor done than under the old custom. I have said many times in the past two years that no business house would send out agents to do their business for them and be satisfied with a quarterly report from them. And so it has seemed to me that if we are to be successful we must proceed along business lines on business principles.

"I feel more encouraged to pay tithing when I feel that my money is going to be made better use of than possibly it has been in the past. And I am not alone in this. I don't want to find fault; I only want to see things done in a way that will bring success."

Thrilling Story of Belgium's Heroic Women

The following is printed by request. It is of interest and also offers an opportunity to do good.

The only American woman member of the commission for relief in Belgium has written a book that should be read everywhere in this country. It is entitled "Women of Belgium Turning Tragedy to Triumph," and was written out of Mrs. Charlotte Kellogg's own personal observations and experience in that smitten country. The introduction is by Herbert Hoover that great American through whose tireless efforts as chairman of the relief commission, the deplorable condition of the Belgian people is being alleviated. Mrs. Kellogg's husband had charge of Belgian relief at the Brussels headquarters of the commission, and her opportunities for eight months were such as no other woman has known. She has given to the world, therefore, a most intimate view of women's work, and courage, and sacrifice, made necessary by the desolation of war.

This unique volume is not a "war-book" in the sense that it details horrors of battle, but rather it covers a period, a tragic history, a marvelous philanthropy, never before known. It recites the splendid courage and the noble service of true human brotherhood and sisterhood. To read it is an inspiration and a delight, even if many of its pages are brimming with pathos. You can help the hungry and homeless Belgians by ordering a copy, for not a cent of the profits from its publication goes to author or publisher or any one else except the commission for relief in Belgium. It has 230 pages, is well printed and illustrated, is bound in cloth, and will be sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of $1.10, by Funk and Wagnalls Company, 354-360 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

The hypocrite likes to hear praise for the way he prays.—Christian Herald.

UTAH AND HER MONARCHY

(Synopsis of an address delivered before the High Priests' Quorum April 10, 1917, and before the joint quorums of seventy, April 12, 1917, at Lamoni, Iowa, by Heman C. Smith.)

I apprehend that a mistake has been made which may result in some disappointment. Some time ago Graceland College secured a set of slides on this subject and invited me to address the college on the subject, which I attempted to do. It got into print that I had spoken upon the subject which, doubtless, resulted in this invitation; probably under the impression that I had a set lecture on the subject. I have not, nor are the slides I used available. I hardly know therefore, what is expected of me.

In speaking of the Utah hierarchy, dynasty, or monarchy, or any name by which you may call it, I apprehend that to arraign that people for their mistakes, errors, or criminality, would not profit us. We might make some points that would be damaging to them along these lines but our interests would not be served thereby. If the results of their policy has in any way been undesirable and we can, by exposing such policies, avoid evil results, it will be profitable to give the subject consideration. That such conditions exist will need no proof, we may then properly ask, How, or why, do they exist? The questions of how did men who enjoyed the favor of God descend to the plane which they occupy? and how designing or erring men could lead a once enlightened and God-favored people from their steadfastness, have long been questions of serious thought. One point I have not fully satisfied myself upon.

It is this: Did these leaders calmly and with evil intent plan the leading of the people into paths of error and doubtful morality, or were they blindly led by a power not their own, without seeing the end from the beginning?

The foundation for the evil practices of that people was laid in their recognizing a one-man power and clothing one man, or a few men, with absolute power to control by dictation. This is always a mistake and always dangerous. This power in the hands of a bad or ambitious man must end in disaster. If placed in the hands of a good man the results may not be so bad to morals, but it is nevertheless dangerous, for you are thus committed to the results of his mistakes though honestly made, and when you resign into his hands the prerogative to think for you, your development stops. It is the meeting of responsibility and the solving of your own problems that causes you to develop, and it is upon this theory that the correctness of the judgment that provides that every man shall be judged according to his own works, is based.

Of course there are certain prerogatives belonging to those in authority which should be recognized, but the true leader is not he who orders or demands, but he who has power and ability to lead others to see and understand the right. This work the true leader under God will have divine assistance in accomplishing. Gabriel was not instructed to make this man obey the vision, but "make this man to understand the vision." (Daniel 8:16.) This is always the work of God and those whom he sends. The act of obedience is left optional with the individual. The man who has not the power to work this way has not secured the cooperation of God, and should exercise himself in getting nearer to God instead of making the fatal mistake of trying to govern by dictation. This is the principle involved in the ministration of the Master as disclosed in the statement: "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures."

A kingdom is the ideal government when we have a king like this who will not only teach true policies but can and will enable men to understand. Then there will be no blind obedience, but men will act with intelligence and understanding, and by developing the individual develop the organization. This may not be fully practical or possible under present conditions, hence the nearer we can keep to a democracy the safer we are, and the quicker will the elements necessary to the inauguration of a kingdom be prepared.

The people under Brigham Young made, if not the first, an important step along the line of monarchal government when, on August 8, 1844, Brigham Young, either by his own ability and mimicry or by some powerful control not his own, assumed to be what he was not. The meeting was called by Sidney Rigdon with the advice and consent of William Marks, president of Nauvoo Stake, but Brigham Young and his associates not only attended but assumed control. Then a very peculiar phenomenon occurred, according to eye and ear witnesses. Mr. B. H. Roberts in his Succession in the Presidency of the Church introduces these witnesses as follows on pages 5 to 7:

George Q. Cannon, who was present on that occasion, says: "If Joseph had risen from the dead and again spoken in their hearing, the effect could not have been more startling than it was to many present at that meeting; it was the voice of Joseph himself; and not only was it the voice of Joseph which was heard, but it seemed in the eyes of the people as if it were the very person of Joseph which stood before them. A more wonderful and miraculous event than was wrought that day in the presence of that congregation we never heard of.

In the journal of Elder William C. Staines, of that date, the following statement is recorded:

Brigham Young said—"I will tell you who your leaders or guardians will be. The Twelve—I at their head!" This was with a voice like the voice of the prophet Joseph. I thought it was he, and so did thousands who heard it. This was very satisfactory to the people, and a vote was taken to sustain the Twelve in their office, which, with a few dissenting voices, passed.

President Wilford Woodruff, describing the event, says:

When Brigham Young arose and commenced speaking, as has been said, if I had not seen him with my own eyes, there is no one that could have convinced me that it was not Joseph Smith; and anyone can testify to this who was acquainted with these two men.

We will not say anything about the discrepancy disclosed in the fact that Cannon says Young looked like Joseph, but Woodruff detected by his looks that it was not Joseph. The power that controlled in this peculiar manifestation took advantage of the confidence the people had in Joseph Smith to impose Young upon them as a leader and they readily adopted the idea that the mantle of Joseph had fallen upon him. He was then in a position to make such changes and inaugurate such policies as he chose, but the source of this movement was not detected. There is no evidence on record that God ever assumed or directed such deception. Satan has, however, played that game on several occasions. In a revelation given in June, 1830, published in connection with the Inspired Translation, Satan is represented as trying that trick on Moses:

And now, when Moses had said these words, Satan cried with a loud voice, and went upon the earth, and commanded, saying, I am the Only Begotten, worship me.

Paul says:

For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.—2 Corinthians 11: 13-15.

Changes were made frequently from this very time in the organization, and it is very peculiar that those who did not sympathize with the prevailing policies were invited to vacate to those who were more subordinate. These are some of the changes:

First, Sidney Rigdon, of the first presidency, was disposed of; then William Smith, John E. Page, and Lyman Wight, of the twelve, were either expelled or placed under censure to destroy their influence.

To supply their places Amasa Lyman was presented, together with Sidney Rigdon, as a counsellor in the presidency, and offered the same position to the twelve. (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 638.) Lyman accepted; Rigdon objected. Rigdon was expelled; Lyman was received as one of the twelve. (Ibid., p. 692.)

Later (July 6, 1846), Ezra T. Benson was received into the twelve, but just how he was designated for the position we have not learned.

George Miller, who was called of God to succeed Edward Partridge as presiding bishop (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 8), was relegated to second place and N. K. Whitney placed over him. (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 693.)

The only charge we have heard against Bishop Miller was that he was "hard to control." This may have been true, but this charge would not lie against Whitney.

Other changes were as follows:

William Marks was removed from his position as president of the Stake of Nauvoo, and John Smith installed in his place. (Ibid., p. 692.) Elder Marks was also removed as president of the high council, and succeeded by Samuel Bent. (Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 870.)

Josiah Butterfield, of the presidents of seventy, was cut off the church (no reason stated for the act) and Jedediah M. Grant chosen to succeed him. (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 693.)

Lyman Wight and John Snider were removed from the Nauvoo House building committee, and Amasa Lyman and George A. Smith put in their places. (Millennial Star, vol. 6, p. 91.)

Several changes were made in the high council.

Nine extra quorums of seventy were created; a part of them at least were the nominees of Brigham Young.

Several were expelled from the church without trial, and without a statement of the cause being given. (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 587.) Some were suspended without labor or trial for voting for Elder Rigdon, and some even suspended on anticipated acts of displeasure. (Ibid., p. 686.)

These and other changes too numerous to mention reveal that the tendency was to place men in positions of trust who could be relied upon to obey counsel, regardless of the teaching of the law.

Thus were the affairs of the church manipulated, until a subservient body was the product of the seed sown on that memorable eighth day of August, 1844. Such a policy will always repel strong, independent men who would be a strength and support, and supplant them by hypocrites and sycophants.

It is interesting to consider the gradual steps by which this Utah movement approached the desired condition of supreme authority as though conscious that too long a step at one time would meet with rebellion.

At the meeting of August 8, 1844, the record shows that a vote was taken to support the "Twelve in their calling." This according to the published minutes in Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 638, yet on page 632 of the same publication this action is represented as follows:

Great excitement prevails throughout the world to know "who shall be the successor of Joseph Smith?"

In reply, we say, be patient, be patient a little, till the proper time comes, and we will tell you all. "Great wheels move slow." At present, we can say that a special conference of the church was held in Nauvoo on the 9th ult., and it was carried without a dissenting voice, that the "Twelve" should preside over the whole church, and when any alteration in the presidency shall be required, seasonable notice will be given; and the elders abroad, will best exhibit their wisdom to all men, by remaining silent on those things they are ignorant of. Bishops Whitney and Miller have been appointed trustees, to manage the financial concerns of the church, and will soon enter on the duties of their calling.

In the October conference of the same year they made the point of the twelve presiding stronger than before. They sustained the twelve individually and in the case of Brigham Young he was sustained as the president of the Quorum of Twelve, as one of the twelve and first presidency of the church." (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 692.) At the April conference of 1845 the twelve were sustained as the first presidency and leaders of the church. (Ibid., vol. 6, p. 869.) At the October conference of 1845 the twelve were sustained as the presidents of the whole church. Thus step by step they strengthened their position until their government of the church by arbitrary means was consummated.

After the body led by these men had reached Winter Quarters on the Missouri River, the pioneer company, including most of the twelve, went on to Salt Lake Valley. Here, in August, 1847, they re-baptized each other and confirmed or sealed the apostleship upon each other, thus throwing discredit upon former baptisms and ordinations, and virtually making a new organization unto which their affiliation was pledged.

Returning to Winter Quarters they consummated this organization by elevating three of their number, viz: Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards, to the presidency. As William Smith, John E. Page and Lyman Wight had previously refused to act with the twelve, the removal of these three left the Quorum of Twelve without a majority and hence, disqualified, under the law, to render decisions. To meet this they claimed that Amasa Lyman had been ordained an apostle in 1842. Of this no satisfactory proof has been presented.

Thus the thin edge of the wedge was entered on August 8, 1844, when Young and his associates assumed dictatorial power, and the people made a fatal mistake by accepting the theory. Out of this grew the theory of "Obey counsel and follow your file leaders," and resulted in what is known as the Utah monarchy. Our greatest safety lies in a pure democracy, until He reigns whose right it is to reign.

THE PROMISED COMFORTER--PART 2

(Sermon by Frederick A. Smith, Thursday evening, August 24, 1916, at the Lamoni Stake reunion. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

TO PREPARE THE MIND FOR DEEPER MATTERS.

The next thought we find in the sixteenth chapter of John, and here we have one I want you to think about, for it conveys a couple of interesting thoughts to us. He is talking to his disciples, beginning with the twelfth verse, and he presents a thought well worth looking at a little bit.

"I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

I want you to get the import of that, for it is Christ that is talking, and he is talking to his disciples. They had been with him for three years. They had wandered up and down the length of the land. They had seen his wonderful power, they had witnessed his wonderful miracles, they had understood his wonderful teachings and he had explained and explained to them. They had sat at his feet and listened to the wonderful words that fell from his lips, and yet he says to them, Ye cannot bear all that I have to give you yet." If after three years of experience, in company with the Master himself, those individuals were not able to grasp, to comprehend, to see, to bear all that God had to say to them, I wonder if it is not true that we ought to have a teacher that shall instruct us and lead us gradually higher and higher until we reach a position of strength, until our errors of carelessness have been reduced to such an extent that we can comprehend the wonderful things of God. I believe with all my soul it is possible for us to turn the flood of light on, to the hundreds of individuals who have not been accustomed to anything of the kind, until it will blind them, and they cannot grasp it. It is too great for them. It is true with us. There could be turned upon us such a flood of things that come from God, that it would have its peculiar influence to blind us, to hinder us. We would not be able to grasp it all. In fact we have not done it yet, friends.

I look back to the old church, as we call it, and I discover that one of the features that seem to be most prominent in that, is the fact that there was so much of new light turned on, so many things given to them, that they did not grasp all of it, and in some cases I believe they had a distorted idea, even of many of the things that God gave, and that was one of the things that contributed to their downfall when that leader, who had been appointed of God and held under his power, was taken from them.

I am satisfied I make no mistake to-night when I make the declaration that one of the greatest constructive works that was ever done was accomplished by the late President Joseph Smith, and the fact that stands out most strikingly as the years go by and we look back over his work has been the fact that he has educated his people little by little, step by step, higher and higher, to that point where they could grasp the higher things. He has sought to make plain and simple those things that God has given, that they may grasp them, and grasping them, reach out for more and more, as they grow stronger, that that church which he was then the president of, should not get into the same position as it was when he stepped into it as president. And as the work lives on, and we get a little further and further away from him, and look back at it with a clearer vision we may see clearer and clearer the wonderful work that he accomplished, and the education that he gave to this people, that will stand out in the strength of this body as nothing else could have done.

Now Jesus explains this thought, while these men had had three years under the Master's training and yet he says they were not able to bear all those things, but when the Spirit of truth has come whom he will send from the Father, he shall guide you into all truth. "He shall guide you into all truth." "He will show you things to come, he will take the things of the Father and show it unto you."

I believe if we stopped for a few moments and thought over this it will unfold to us the development and peculiar work of that great power of God that shall illuminate the human mind, illuminate his very soul until he will be able to reach out after these things, and that guiding influence of the Spirit will bring to him the peculiar recognition of the truth, and the truth will stand out, and he will be able to reject the error and comprehend the truth.

ADDING THE POWER OF DISCRIMINATION

I will bring a little illustration to bear on this case. We had a brother come into the church out in western Iowa a few years ago. Some of you know him very well, and he was from one of the other denominations, a Methodist minister, had been for twenty-five or thirty years. He made a thorough investigation of this work for a number of years before he came into it. After he came in, I had considerable to do with him. I read with him a great deal, and one day he met me on the street, and he said, "Brother Smith, if you have a little time I wish you would come up with me. I want to show you a book in the Y. M. C. A. library." I told him all right, and we went up. He handed me a book and pointed out the feature he wanted me to read. I sat there and read it through two or three times carefully, then I turned over the leaves and read some other places in it, two or three of them, and after a while I marked a place, and then I turned over and read again and discovered three flat contradictions. It was impossible to harmonize them. After a little I turned back to the front of the book and looked for the author's name and the picture of the author was there in the front, and I sat looking at it. The gentleman came around and discovered me looking at the picture, and he says, "Tut, tut, I do not care anything about the picture. I want you to read the statement. What do you think of it?"

I opened the book to one of the other places and read, and when I had finished, he said, "Well, well."

I opened the book to another place, and read that. "Now," I said, "brother, harmonize them with the statement you asked me to read." He looked at me; he read them over, folded up the book, got up and stuck it on the shelf, and said, "Let us go." He did not answer me again. After we got outside he said, "Say, tell me how it is you fellows just as soon as you get a hold of anything, and I ask you to read it, if there is anything of that description in it you seem to find it." I laughed and said, "Well, I suppose, brother, because we have always been accustomed to look for some comparison somewhere, for some error, and see whether it harmonizes, if it would agree with truth. If it does not agree with itself it would not agree with truth."

"Well," he says, "I cannot understand it altogether. There is just one thing that lets me out. You people believe the Holy Ghost is a gift and think it is going to guide you into truth, and if it does that it is going to show you error."

I said, "Brother, you have struck the keynote. That is exactly the case, and it is because of that wonderful intuition, as we sometimes hear it called, or rather the working of that illuminating influence of God, that he has given to this people, this power that enables them to see the peculiar conditions which the world cannot see."

"SHOW YOU THINGS TO COME"

Now if it is going to guide us into all truth, if it is going to manifest itself in a way of that kind, right there we have another distinction from the world. They cannot see, they cannot recognize the wonderful working of something which is right there. It is in the baptism of the Spirit but they cannot receive it; it is in repentance, in faith, in laying on of hands, but they cannot receive it. Why? Because they deny the office work of that Spirit. The Lord says very positively, "It will show you things to come," and the minute you present that proposition to the religious world around you, you are met with the objection, "Why, that would be prophecy. We do not believe in it. We cannot expect it." Answer you people. Stop and think. If you were to answer that statement with a denial of the wonderful power of God that shall show you things to come, how can you expect to have the Holy Ghost? It could not accomplish its purpose, you would not let it accomplish its purpose, you would shut it out, hence you cannot lay claim to the gift of the Holy Ghost. But if you believe you will not only allow it to accomplish its work, but there shall be the evidences and manifestations of the working of that power, showing itself in the various ways that God has said.

Turn to the first Corinthian letter and the second chapter, ninth verse. What is the Apostle Paul talking about? Talking along this line he presents us the thought that man by wisdom of man is unable to find out God, and that has been proven over and over again. It is manifested to you every day of the world. All you have to do is to take up the writings of those that are deeply read and study them, and you will discover that does not reveal God to you. You must get that some other way. It cannot come that way. It does not come that way. If it had been that way my friends, there would not be the peculiar conditions that are abounding in our ministrations in the religious world today. There would not be the skepticism and the infidelity that presents itself among those that are educators in our great institutions of learning. It would have had the effect to have led them closer to God.

There must be some existing power. There must be some working force, some communication between God and man, some means of coming in close touch with the great Redeemer of mankind in order that that revelation and knowledge of God may come to us. It must be there.

But the Apostle Paul goes on and says, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, and keep his commandments."

Now look at that and discover at once that the statement of the Master was probably correct, for he makes the statement that you cannot see it, and because the world cannot see it, reject it. You discover at once in this declaration that he carries the idea clearly outlined, that not only do we have to recognize the thought that there is more than the seeing of the eye, and hearing of the ear, and the entering of the heart of man. There must come that direct communication with God from some source that will enable us to see, to understand, to hear, to comprehend in the true sense of the terms.

What does he say shall do it? He makes the declaration that the Spirit of God searcheth the deep things of God, and revealeth them unto us. Here is the communication; here is the source of light, the source of information. It presents to us the thought that this power, this current, this peculiar influence within you which is to work wonders, is the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost, which becomes the medium through which God comes in contact with man, and is the current of information, of light, of knowledge, of comprehension, and as we begin to wake up with a newness that we had not known before, a comprehension that never had been ours before, and we say we see, we feel, we hear, we know. It is the means of communication between us and God that quickens our powers and enlightens our understanding.

CONCERNING SPIRITUAL GIFTS

And now I turn to the twelfth chapter. I will have to be brief with this, but I want to touch it just a little. Here he tells us something of the manifestations, and says, "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant." Why not be ignorant? Why, because he wanted us to be able to comprehend intelligently. And here, my friends, we have the manifestations. You have no doubt heard this so often I shall not read it, but I want to call your attention to the statement commencing with the seventh verse, "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." What is the idea? That we may profit by it. That is the idea. These manifestations are not given for the gratification of our curiosity; they are not given to satisfy our desire, to have something sensational; they are not given just simply to satisfy God in the manifestation of his power alone. He has another object there. What is it? That we may profit by them. Unless we shall be able to comprehend intelligently, how can we profit by them? Unless we shall use them in wisdom and with consideration, how can we accomplish the purpose designed of God? Now I ask you to notice some of them.

GIFTS GIVEN FOR OUR PROFIT

"For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom." The word of wisdom. Now this may come to certain ones, and some have said, "Why that individual has no very great amount of spirituality about him." Well, what is the matter? He never speaks in tongues, he never prophesies, and so of course he has not been possessed of the Holy Ghost, and there is not much spirituality there; and yet he may be able to give you the finest manifestation of wisdom in the world. He may understand this great gospel of God so correctly as to conduct his life in such a form that you can point to no great error or mistake in it. He may be able to give words of counsel and advice and encouragement to those around him, that are wise, and will be for your good. And yet people say he has no spirituality.

Is it not possible, my friends, that we are making mistakes, that we are failing in our judgment, our comprehension of the work of God? failing to grasp this thing, to see it, to understand it, and comprehend the peculiar working of the Spirit of God, known as the gift of the Holy Ghost which may work in some individuals through the gift of wisdom, and then they say he has not the Spirit.

I may state that if you people can ever wake up to this fact and become conscious that it may be robbed of its mystery, it may be brought down to the simple, practical, ordinary features of everyday life, we may reach a point where we can grasp that thing which is one of the greatest manifestations of the Spirit of God that the individual can hope for. It is not a gift that makes its presence glaring, or anything of that kind, it is one that brings that individual into a position where consistency and carefulness make themselves manifest. It is one of the evidences, my friends, that come to us of the workings of the Spirit of God, that indicate that he has come under the divine influence, and been visited of the Spirit.

The next one is the gift of knowledge. And this one was represented to you, my friends, in the thought of those ministers that went out without an education, and by virtue of the operation of that Spirit, they have been taught until they have become acquainted with the things of God, thoroughly conversant with them, and through this means they have become aroused, and come to that condition where it is surprising the amount of knowledge they have accumulated. So we may say from these wonderful evidences that they have been visited by the Holy Spirit.

You may wonder why it presents itself quite clearly to some and not to others, but if we are looking for it we will discover it, and in that discovery there may come to us one of the peculiar realizations that we have neglected or failed to account for some of the manifestations of God to his people, that we have failed to appreciate, simply because we have not understood the workings of that great power, that great gift, that God said he would give to his disciples.

Let us look at the rest of them now. "To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gift of healing by the same Spirit." When we touch this question of faith, it is one of the peculiar features that I want you to see. "Why," you say, "I did not know that was a manifestation of the gift of the Holy Ghost." In that is the difficulty. We are not always looking, and yet I have found in my travels, and in my experiences some individuals in this church whose peculiar gift of faith has borne witness more than once that they are children of God; that they are endowed with that wonderful gift from on high. It is a gift that we might all have a desire to have. It is a splendid thing. It is an anchor to the soul under every circumstance, that would carry us through. It is a gift to have faith in such a degree, and under such peculiar circumstances that no matter what comes still we can cling to that rod of iron and recognize that God is with us. But yet how often do we neglect to discover that?

Probably you will see the wind blowing and the trees waving, but yet would never think about the connection with the wind. You would see the water dashing, but you would never think of its connection with the wind, that it ever had anything to do with it. You see your electric light, your street cars, but how often do you stop and think of the connection with the power house down yonder where the engines are in operation to bring about your light and your power?

That is the situation, and it is the thing that we want to wake up within you, that we must see these things.

The gift of healing. Why, we can recognize that, for it is an outward manifestation. We are not all blessed with the gift of healing, either. There is that peculiar feature of it that sometimes makes itself manifest by which a minister may be endowed with that peculiar gift. I know of some instances along this line in my experiences and life, and I know some of them, where possibly the elder could not get up and deliver a sermon that would suit you people at all, and yet when we called on him to administer the ordinance of his holy calling, we discovered that a power was working, and the essential features were there. We have witnessed that.

Again let me ask you to notice this thought—the power to be healed. I can give you the names of a few people that have that peculiar gift, and I have seen them under the most trying circumstances, and yet it has not failed them. They have obtained a blessing, and much consolation has come to them without great difficulty, either. It seems to be one of the outward evidences of the working of the Holy Ghost, making itself manifest in that way.

Then there is the discerning of spirits; there is the gift of tongues; and the interpretation of tongues and prophecy; all of them witnessing to us the outward manifestation, and I have thought in the last morning or two when I had attended a portion of these meetings, that you have been so wonderfully blessed, there has been such an abundant outpouring of the Spirit, while it borders on the mysterious, still it seems to come to you as some of the features that you have looked forward to, and yet how many of you have stopped to think seriously, how many of you have thought of the many evidences bearing witness to the fact that the Spirit of God was in our midst?

I want to say to you to-night, that in listening to those peculiar manifestations of the Spirit, one of them the spirit of encouragement, the other of encouragement with a little of the gentle exhortation, and yet we had also the spirit of rebuke, I wondered how many failed to see and recognize the entire feature. There comes to you time after time the spirit of rebuke; while the spirit of prophecy contains promises, yet it is a manifestation given of God through the Spirit and we have not always thought of that feature. We have recognized the fact that it was a gift of the wonderful power of God come to us, and we have enjoyed that without making any effort to profit and benefit by these things.

You think of it now, to-night, and as you think of these things to-morrow morning when you come into the prayer service, come with the spirit of prayer, and come asking for the power of God that you may not only see these outward manifestations, may not only rejoice in the ministrations of the marvelous power, but that you may be able to have the Spirit of God given to you until you shall be able to grasp the connection between the gift and you, between you and God, between the influence of it and your application to your life.

When we look at these things we become conscious that there is a working force, a working power that touches our hearts, while it opens our understanding, quickens our thought until if we let it have its full influence it has accomplished its purposes, and borne witness of God, lead us in the ways of truth, developed us along the lines of virtue and mortality, increased our powers for good in this world, increased our ability to increase in every way, until in the accomplishment of its work it does just what God said it would do. It teaches us all things, it prompts us, it helps us, it qualifies us for the work here and the eternal life to come.

IMMERSED IN THE SPIRIT

Now I know something of what it means to be immersed in the Spirit. I relate this little circumstance because it so effectually covers the ground, and then I am going to leave it with you.

A few years ago I was laboring in the city of Omaha. We had a little brother out there who was a French-Italian. He could not talk the English language so we could understand—unless we watched him very closely. He was an exceedingly humble man, a clean living man. That man had the gift of healing, the power of healing, and he was such a friend of all the people that they called him Uncle John. We used to call on him often, and even the little children of the branch would call for him, so universally were his ministrations successful.

Now I had three appointments, two in the city, one six miles out. I had to walk the distance of six miles from the street car alone. These three appointments had to be met on Sunday. On Saturday evening I found myself unable to go. The doctor told me I had pneumonia. I was in terrible distress. I could not lay down or sit up in any comfort, and so I finally sent for Uncle John. He came into the room and looked at me. I was sitting in a chair when he came in, I told him my condition as best I could. He simply knelt down beside me on the floor and began to pray. Now I have heard little children pray, and pray with all the earnestness of their souls, and have expected to get what they asked for. And when that brother began to pray it was like the prayer of a little child, and he prayed just exactly as though he was talking to God face to face. I could not help but feel that, sick as I was, there was that peculiar sense of feeling and realization that that man was talking right to God. He arose from his knees, anointed my head with the oil, and then laid his hands upon my head and began to pray. In the midst of that prayer I could feel the Spirit move down over me, and just as perceptibly as ever I went into the water and felt that water come up and envelop me, I felt that Spirit, as it moved down over my body until every vestige of pain began to move before it, and every distressing feature, until I was completely enveloped in it.

I know what it means; I can comprehend the situation, understand how it feels. And when that old gentleman said "Amen" he turned to me with tears streaming down his face, and said, "Brother Fred, you fill all your appointments to-morrow without any difficulty. Go to bed," and he went out.

I sat there for some time, almost afraid to move, feeling so pleasant, so comfortable, that I dreaded to disturb it. But after a little I arose and went to bed. In the morning I got up as well as I ever was. I preached my three sermons, walked my six miles without any difficulty, and had no more trouble.

I know that the Holy Spirit of God does abide with us. I know that the manifestation of that Spirit is for our profit if we let it do its work.

May God give you wisdom, may he bless you with carefulness, may you enjoy the wonderful blessing of his Spirit that you have enjoyed here. May God give you wisdom to appreciate what it means, that you may go from this reunion and profit by these experiences, as you have never done, that you may awake to the thought that there is communication between this wonderful sympathizer and you, and that connection brings you into touch with divinity and opens an avenue between you and God.

May his Spirit bless you in abundance, that you may grow in grace and a knowledge of God, and finally accomplish the work of the Master and enter into his glorious power and kingdom, is my prayer.

(Concluded.)

A BETTER USE OF ART IN THE CHURCH--No. 4

[The following is one of a series of brief articles on this subject, written by some of our members who are especially interested in this phase of our work. Other articles will appear from time to time.—EDITORS.]

Very few people realize just what we owe to art for our faith, or what our Christian religion owes to art, because perhaps very few people comparatively are interested in art for art's sake or in religion for religion's sake! Yet the two are more closely identified than would appear to the casual thinker.

I am strongly of the opinion that art in its truest sense is the outcome of man's earnest desire to record his most spiritual impressions, to give them some material form for remembrance in future times, just as Job yearned for the "iron pen" of the engraver to inscribe the knowledge he felt would flow out with his life's passing. Hence we have man through all ages, all nations, giving vent to their conceptions of deity, or beautifying and embellishing the place of their devotions, to exalt their ideals of spiritual atmosphere, to create a different environment, a meeting threshold with the higher forces intuitively recognized by almost all races of men.

As this practice has been developed so we see advancement in art; it is indeed difficult to see just where the spirit of man's self-pride and vanity comes in and heaps riches and pomp about his own history rather than offering such to his especial deity, or where the law of contrast finds operation in the tendency to record the things that make for awe and fear, to play upon the timidity and superstition of people and bind them in terror's chains. Such systems are still extant in our modern life, only in a more refined degree. All religion is ruled by fear or governed by love.

So when we examine into art we see the same inherent influences—whether it be in pictures, in music, in architecture, in poesy, or letters, there is that which draws us out and cheers us or inspires us to good and exalted aspirations, and there is that which lures our minds into channels of unrest, of depression, of irritability and puts fear and distrust into our hearts, or awakens desires that are not easily satisfied because they crave not that which is pure, peaceful and of good report because it is not "from above."

Here is the principal objection to the popular "movie" habit. People of respectability who would feel ashamed to have a yellow-backed novel in their home will sit by the hour absorbing the pictured "lie" which portrays "impossible moral lessons." The only saving grace is the picture composition and action, and while there are those that are really good from any point of view these are not the most popular. The producer plays to the weakest tendencies in his clients.

The "movie" is to-day the greatest competition of the church; it has done a good work undeniably in forming a cheap form of entertainment for the common family circle, the head of which was wont to spend his times and dimes in the corner cafe. Now as likely as not, he takes his family to the brilliant little movie theater on the busy main street and to the music of a player piano they exercise their jaws on peanuts and gum while the film runs on through all the thrills imaginable—till you see those the next night!

Many of these folks would just as soon sit in your Sunday school room and see any of the really educational films that are provided by good makers and advocated by responsible societies. A little social meeting after would make friends, for all the world is looking for kindness, not cold "religion." This is where our churchgoing fails often and in that there is so much stiff formality doing service for reverence and decorum! Did you ever note how accessible a saloon is made to the thirsty? Almost a mere breath upon the door will cause it to swing open and the crowd is there to welcome the pilgrim with open arms. It is the same inviting entrance that draws the movie devotees!

-But what of the church? Set it away back, make it tower solemnly and mightily from a distance as if it were holding you off at arm's length, make the pilgrim climb a flight or so of stony steps and pass on behind the studded and wicketed doors into unknown, yawning recesses from which some one selected from the worshipers within as the most undertakerlike of their body will issue forth, take the victim in custody and march him down the aisles and right under the waving, threatening arms of the officiating minister! Does he come again? Ask of the empty benches!

What is the relation of art to the church? what is its proper use? These things come only as a process of education, and from the crude, homemade charts of the minister or lecturer with a "hobby," to the reproductions of truly great artists there is an immense gradation of "values." I have been repelled, on going into our beautiful Temple at Kirtland to see a great barrier spread across its classic columns and windows portraying the joints of a human body spread around like the choice cuts of a slaughtered animal in a butcher shop. There was a symbolical lesson that went with it free, but the question is, Who is to pass on these displays without giving offense to the well intentioned?

The answer is that we must learn to discern what is good, bad, or only indifferent, and how shall we learn unless there is a recognized sanction from our spiritual heads to encourage good forms of art in association with our services and to enliven and beautify our places of meeting; learning that not much decoration but simplicity should govern both as to subject and setting. Do you ask whether this applies to interior treatment of a meeting place, or the paraphernalia a speaker may attempt to charm his audience with? I will say this will apply anywhere that the church would enlist art.

There is a saying, "the height of art is to hide art," that is in the naturalness of it we are lost to the proficiency of it? How often have you heard some one play; it seemed you could sit down and play so yourself! or watch an artist painting, so that it looked "easy"—that is true art, not the kind that makes you feel displeased with your own abilities and ashamed to use them—that flaunts its cleverness into your discouraged face!

I once saw a magician at work who admitted his whole repertoire was illusion of the spectator, hence he could not hope to deceive but would explain just exactly how every trick was done. He did! but strange to say none of his audience was ever graduated, although he impressed everyone as the most obliging, painstaking, and considerate tutor we could have wished for! You see that was true art of its kind, he said it was deception and it was.

Now, if "art is to hide art" it means our artistic desires are not to be dominant in our use of it. Our embellishments of wall, of window, of furniture will be of subdued type. Our eyes will follow lines of simplicity. The subjects we choose for decoration will suggest single, fervent, deep thoughts, rather than race our imagination through a tangled web of action. How appropriate in a room of prayer would be a photo enlargement of the great Rock of Ages, of Niagara, a sheep pasture, the head of the boy Jesus, or a sweet Madonna and child. So one can select from good authorities pictures illustrating many scenes in the Christ life, a goodly few at least can be found beyond our criticism.

Our carpeting, benches and pulpit furniture should be minus ornateness—the carpet pattern quiet, the wall paper soothing, the benches comfortable, and the pulpit and rostrum without "gingerbread" effects.

And then a word as to the exterior, when we are building. Why do building committees allow construction of towers and turrets on the roof and cut out rest rooms and conveniences inside? No one knows, any more than why deacons wear squeaky shoes! In looking over pictures of even Saints' churches one is reminded that we have a lot of money tied up in utterly useless church "towers" some of which of themselves represent a value that would construct a comfortable mission hall in another part of their city!

I would recommend a cheerful, welcoming doorway, easy of access to every meeting place of the Saints. Comfortable seating for all, and the rear seats reserved for visitors who may prefer them (dear Saints, do move up front when the minister has the nice pictures to show). Then every building should have a room where the visiting elder may take his baggage and have a few minutes to himself before service, a "vestry room" if you please, and your class or social rooms having a few good pictures in preference to the old discarded "gifts" from former members.

A few comfortable chairs and bright rugs in a quiet corner kept private for the mothers and babes and an occasional treat of pictured views of the great world's doings and the wonderful workings of nature, or domestic science demonstrations, all of these are legitimate uses of art in the church. I have drunk from communal cups of massive metal that slopped the wine to one's lips and back, where a thin chaste glass would have been far better, and I have thought well of the immaculate linen and beautiful work of the altar set. Then I have seen a whole service at a standstill while several brethren ran around hunting up the oil for administration, usually a greasy, cheap-looking affair of rancid matter! Why not, brethren, do things right—a simple, wholesome vessel kept clean and renewed and always at hand in the pulpit or administration room? The housewife takes pride in her home china, glass, silver and linen—should we not be as comfortable, as clean, as artistic in "the house of the Lord?"

THE MAN OF SCIENCE

An educated man must be struck by the ignorance which apparently exists regarding the very nature of science, observes the Scientific American. The practical utility of science is admitted, but the facts that utility is not the aim of scientific investigation, and that scientific men have not lived laborious days in order to increase the dividends of the stockholders in certain manufacturing enterprises do not seem to be generally recognized. Yet, our contemporary says, the history of any science makes these facts sufficiently obvious. On any theory but one the scientific man is a mystery. If his aim is to make money he has shown the oddest way of going about it. If his object is contemporary renown, he has been on the whole unsuccessful. Renown which consists in a few members of a scientific society thanking Professor So-and-So for his paper, and in footnote references in a few treatises which not one in half a million has ever heard of, cannot satisfy any but an anemic longing for fame.

The objective of the man of science, protests the organ from which we extract this protest, will show us what he really is, and in doing so will get rid of much controversy.

His aim is to obtain a widening and deepening vision of the universe; that is, he is an artist, and science is an art. The scientific man differs from the politician, lawyer, or business man in just the same way a musical or literary artist does. His medium is different, but his aim is the same. And his incentive is the same. The governing passion in the life of a man of science is his passion for beauty. The soul of science, for the extension and embellishment of which scientific men live their lives, is the scientific theory. They do not live to invent aeroplanes, to discover wireless telegraphy, to build Zeppelins and concoct poison gases, but to see the universe as a more comprehensive and more harmonious whole, and their reward is the acute æsthetic pleasure which the discovery of such harmony entails.

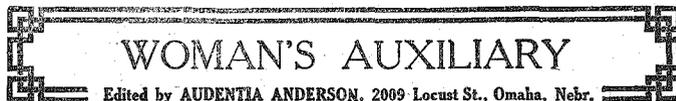

It is impossible to read the history of any great scientific theory without seeing that we are here concerned with an artistic achievement; but apart from this, the very way in which scientific men refer to their work shows that their point of view is that of the artist. They are forever talking about "this beautiful theorem," "this elegant proof"—it is always obvious that their emotions are strongly concerned. . . .

A scientific theory is distinguished from a law of nature by the fact that there is purely imaginative element in it, a conception that cannot be expressed in terms of sense perceptions. The Newtonian theory of gravitation, for instance, often improperly called a law, supposes ultimate attracting particles which are not objects of sense perception. The whole vast theory of the ether, too, is purely imaginative—none of our senses can give us any impression of it.

Theories to correlate known phenomena may be evolved by the dozen, but the true theory, the theory which will predict, is of an altogether different order of imagination, and is as personal as the music of a great composer. There is no attempt to be paradoxical here. Insight, imagination, and even style are as apparent in scientific as in literary work. It is even possible for those sufficiently familiar with the subject to "spot" the scientific man by his style.

Our Honorary President

So reluctant were the members of the auxiliary convention to lose the active interest and service of Sister Frederick M. Smith, to whose broad vision of the work of the women in the church much of the progress of the past year has been due, that she was prevailed upon to accept a position as honorary president of the general auxiliary. This will give the executive committee the great benefit of her wise counsel, helpful suggestion and progressive attitude in general.

Sister Smith's years of study and research along the lines of woman's development, and the place she is gradually assuming and is destined to occupy in the world's arena of activity, have peculiarly fitted her for the position of leader of our organized women's forces; it is deeply to be regretted that her health is not such as to make the heavy responsibility which must attach to such a position possible for her to bear, at the present time. However, we rejoice that she will be with us in counsel, and trust she may find ready support in those measures which she may propose which will tend to a steady advancement of our efforts towards helpful cooperation with Zionic movements. She will, we trust, continue to improve in health and strength, and find joy in the service the year brings.

We omitted, in the pressure under which some of our work is done, to make this mention of our honorary president, in connection with the paragraph about our newly elected officers which appeared a couple of weeks ago—the proper time and place for it. We desire to apologize for the omission, and trust that we may generously be forgiven for it.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

The President's Report to Convention

To the Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary; Greeting: There is no excuse for the existence of an auxiliary which has not a distinct mission. I believe that the particular aim of the Woman's Auxiliary to the church is, as set forth in my foreword to the Year Book: "We recognize that actual service is demanded of every woman in her home, in her church, and in the community of which she is a member, but we believe also that the preparation for more efficient service is always an essential of our work. An auxiliary to fill its mission to the church must, besides contributing its quota of actual work, faithfully carry on its propaganda of better qualification of its members for their respective positions in life." Realizing as we do that the training for efficient service for church and community life is largely effected in the home, our attempt has been to emphasize, this year as always, first intelligent parenthood. We have urged through the Year Book the study of the subjects which would help directly to raise the standard of the home,—Parents' and teachers' problems, home economics, sex hygiene, etc. At the same time we have suggested such work, recreation and study as will tend to broaden the vision of all the women of the church and prepare them for greater usefulness in whatever capacity they may desire to occupy or in which they may be called upon to serve.

Besides organizing new locals and districts and helping those societies already organized to adapt themselves to the Year Book and its use, we have made an especial effort to create an interest among all of the women by personal contact, by correspondence, through the church publications, and by the distribution of the Year Book.

YEAR BOOK

The Year Book committee for which you made provision last convention, consisting of your president, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser and Sister J. A. Gardner, after much labor, consultation and correspondence succeeded in bringing out the Year Book in June. We were determined that our policies be in harmony with those of the church, and we are therefore indebted to President Frederick M. Smith, Bishop R. McGuire, and others for counsel and encouragement. These brethren and many other friends assisted us in introducing the Year Book, which has been welcomed and accepted by the locals and throughout the church to a far greater extent than we had anticipated. Certain amendments have been published for your action, and in time the book will become of even greater assistance to the auxiliary movement.

CHURCH PUBLICATIONS

At the close of last conference, a committee, consisting of your president, Sister Audentia Anderson and Sister J. A. Gardner, was appointed to meet with Albert Carmichael, F. B. Blair and E. Blakeslee for the Board of Publication to consider press space for the Woman's Auxiliary. At the suggestion of those who represented the Board of Publication, the column in the Ensign was discontinued, and two pages in every HERALD devoted to our use. The department in the Autumn Leaves has remained as before.

EXECUTIVE MEETINGS

The meetings of the executive committee have been held every month during the year with the exception of December. Most of the members have been present at the greater number of these sessions. Your president has presided over the majority of the executive meetings, but when illness has made this impossible, the vice president has taken charge of the meetings. I have personally urged many Saints throughout the country whom I have believed to be interested and competent, to express themselves in the way of criticism and suggestion in regard to the work of the auxiliary. These, and the suggestions received through the correspondence of other executive members, have been carefully considered in our meetings. Many hours have been spent in executive sessions and special committee work. Each member has taken a keen interest and has given conscientious service.

CORRESPONDENCE

My correspondence this year has been very heavy, due partially to the many inquiries which came concerning the work. The majority of these letters were not only of a personal nature, but did not pertain sufficiently to any particular department to be referred to a superintendent, while they often required consultation and careful consideration. The society, as well as myself, is indebted to my young daughter, Alice, who has contributed much time in assisting me with auxiliary work, particularly the correspondence, taking dictation and making copies by hand, since both she and I were sufficiently interested in the young woman's department to prefer that the typewriter belonging to the general organization be left with Sister J. A. Gardner. We are intensely gratified that Sister Gardner has succeeded in enlisting the services of so many of our young girls and women.

For a few weeks after the first of the year, I was unable to attend to my correspondence on account of an attack of la grippe and complications. The correspondence of a purely official nature was referred to Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, our vice president, and was given her usual prompt and conscientious attention. From copies of the answers to those of a more personal nature, I found that my daughter had answered both tactfully and graciously, having consulted with the general officers when necessary.

I have contributed letters to the HERALD column, and have responded to such requests as have come to me for papers to be read at the reunion programs, and messages for special occasions when desired; the last request coming from Sister Clyde Ellis for a message to the sisters in Papeete, for use in Te Orometua.

PERSONAL FIELD WORK

I have spent much time in conversation with the Saints of Independence and elsewhere, endeavoring to help them to grasp the broad and progressive policies of our Woman's Auxiliary, and to impress upon them the relation of our work to Zion's conditions. I have addressed mixed audiences in Holden, Kansas City and Independence Stakes, at Logan, Iowa, and Calumet, Oklahoma. In these talks and before gatherings of the sisters, I have urged an intelligent study of the Year Book, and organization.

I had the pleasure of meeting with the Lamanite Saints, and of attending their Christmas tree at Kingfisher, Oklahoma, where my talk on the program was interpreted by Brother Philip Cook. We were pleased to bring to the bishop their first Christmas offering, which was contributed by a woman's lodge and other Lamanite friends.

By correspondence and in conversation on a number of visits and at various times with the sisters who represented the several women's societies of Lamoni, I trust that I was instrumental in helping them to recognize the value to themselves and to the Auxiliary of an affiliation with our general organization. Previous to the reunion in August, I wrote Brother Garver, the Stake President, urging him to lend his influence toward local and stake organization among the women. Special efforts were, therefore, put forth, and both the Lamoni local and the Lamoni Stake were organized at the reunion.

Some of the most essential as well as progressive work has been carried on in the Lamoni Stake. Our sisters are alert and conscientious, and the officers of the church in that place are in full sympathy with their efforts.

SPECIAL SUNDAY MEETINGS

The president of the church and the president of the Independence Stake offered one Sunday afternoon of each month for the purposes of the women under the direction of your president. These hours have been devoted to addresses by the general church officers and out-of-town men and women who have spoken on subjects of interest and value to women. There are always specialists to be secured for the asking, who are pleased to address interested audiences. Our sisters should not forget this. In rural districts the school teachers are often available for addresses or talks on most helpful subjects.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

The women of Independence and other locals have not confined themselves to study alone, but have formed classes in millinery, dressmaking, sewing, kindergarten work, etc. Efforts have been made to beautify or garden vacant ground under a competent supervisor where possible. Standardized dress, particularly for school girls, has been emphasized and many other phases of woman's work as outlined in the Year Book have been taken up by the sisters. The Independence Stake has been districted and local visits are being made. Larger social activities are to follow. We hear from the majority of places where women are at work that they are pleased to cooperate with the officers of the branch. Tact, courtesy and wisdom would indicate such cooperation.

SARCOPHAGUS

Much credit is due the Laurel Club of the Independence local for the splendid work they did in connection with raising the money for the sarcophagus of our late President Joseph Smith. The monument is of special design, artistic in appearance, of finest Vermont Granite, and of the best workmanship. Besides generously contributing over seven hundred dollars, the Laurel Club has raised the balance of the little over two thousand dollars which it cost. We mention this one society because its activity for the year is of general interest to the auxiliary and the church.

WOMAN'S BUILDING

More than a year ago a local committee of women, of whom your president was chairman, was appointed to receive contributions for a woman's building—one much needed in Independence, although many now fail to appreciate the advantages of such a building. Last fall the committee approached the presidency and bishopric of the general church on the subject; and as a consequence the church has generously turned over to the auxiliary the building on the corner of Walnut Street and River Boulevard, near the temple lot. Although this committee was locally appointed, we attach much significance to this movement, because of the widespread general influence which is bound to accompany the activities centering in a woman's building at the center place. We hope that it may be, in addition to its local use, kept open for the entertainment of the visiting sisters during the year and at all conferences.

FIELD WORK

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, the vice president, has fulfilled the usual duties of that office, and has acted as the general field worker. Although she was also representing the Sunday school and Religio and her expenses were being paid by those auxiliaries instead of ours, she has succeeded in doing excellently in bringing our woman's work to the attention of the people at the reunions which she attended. Besides Sister Etzenhouser's activities as general field worker, Sister J. A. Gardner, Sister Helen Silsbee Smith, Sister Lula Sandy and Sister Frederick M. Smith of the general executive committee have done field work. Practically every woman's association in the country which has been successful in organization, has sent efficient women throughout the country to especially represent their work and effect organization. This is frequently done by the appointment and use of a number of vice presidents. We have women who are competent, and some who have railroad passes, which would save expense to the auxiliary, who would take up this special field work gladly if the general convention or the executive committee would so arrange and authorize. The society has reached such proportions and importance as would justify the appointment of a corps of field workers who could, besides doing such work as the officials have done this year, make an especial effort to organize locals. I respectfully recommend, therefore, that the matter of general field workers be considered either by this convention or by the next general executive committee. The constitution provides for but one vice president, but this could be revised if so desired.

SECRETARIAL

Sister Walter W. Smith was appointed general secretary at the last convention, but previous to her taking up the work after moving to Independence, Sister J. A. Gardner, the former secretary, acted. On account of other pressing duties, Sister Smith was obliged to resign on February 1, and Sister Gardner was appointed to act as secretary until the end of the year.

Due to the changes in the constitution and by-laws, whereby two or more departments of the work are necessary for the organization of a local, this year's statistics can hardly be compared with previous figures. There have been, however, thirty-three new locals and seven new district and stake organizations effected during the past year.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

A letter to your president from Sister Clyde Ellis in the South Sea Islands asked for authority to organize a local at Papeete, which is no doubt established by now. She says that she and Sister Christianson are conducting meetings for mothers and the sisters throughout the Islands. She states that our Year Book has given her many ideas, and has recommended to her one book in particular which she has found very valuable. They have continued the "sister's column" in the mission paper, Te Orometua, and feel that good comes from all their work with the sisters in that difficult mission.

Correspondence with Brother Paul Hanson, the missionary in charge of Australia, and with some of the sisters in charge of local societies there, seems to indicate their anxiety to join the Woman's Auxiliary. One of the proposed amendments to our constitution and by-laws, if passed, will admit them as members, and still allow them to continue their work as now conducted. One of the Australian sisters sent in quite a large order for books from the Herald Office as suggested in the Year Book. An order from another sister is in my hands at present. At the last combined program of the New South Wales District and Australian Mission conference in Sydney, Sister F. M. Shea spoke at one of the evening programs on "The Woman's Auxiliary."

FINANCIAL

Whatever traveling expenses I have incurred in the interest of the auxiliary during the year have not been paid from the auxiliary treasury. The president of the church has considered my work with the women of sufficient importance that my expenses be met by the general church. My expenses, however, at the Logan Reunion were paid by the ladies' aid of that place. Owing to the fact that I have not paid for secretarial work, and because I have been happy to make some personal sacrifices to further the cause, I present a bill of only five dollars, as the treasurer reports. I am indebted to Brother and Sister O. W. Newton for typewriter work for publication gratuitously done.

Sister J. A. Gardner reports as treasurer the contribution through the auxiliary of over six hundred dollars to the Children's Home, six dollars to the Sanitarium and thirty-one dollars to the Old Folk's Home. The publication of fifteen hundred Year Books in June necessitated our giving our note for one hundred and twenty dollars. By February 1, a sufficient number of Year Books had been sold to cancel the debt, with nineteen dollars to our credit. There are still two hundred copies on hand, which we hope to dispose of during General Conference. Having recently paid the last of the leaflet debt to the Herald Office, the Woman's Auxiliary is entirely free from debt with one hundred and eighty-five dollars on hand in general treasury.

EDITORIAL

We are fortunate in having our publicity department in the hands of such an efficient editor as Sister Audentia Anderson. There is no doubt that the HERALD column under Sister Anderson has assisted materially in giving impetus to our cause. Our department for young women in the Autumn Leaves has appeared regularly, chiefly owing to the valued services of the contributing editor, Sister Anna de Jong Smith.

HISTORICAL

The convention will be pleased to note the progress of our historian whose devoted service to the women of the church is so well known.

DEPARTMENTAL

Since the report of the superintendents of departments are to be printed in full it is unnecessary for me to comment upon them except to ask your careful consideration of the various recommendations contained therein. Through their consecrated efforts we have kept our work before our women, which we believe has resulted in a better understanding of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary.

CHILDREN'S HOME

The report of the Children's Home committee will be read with interest by all. A recent letter from California, where a young mother has left five little children, stated that the Woman's Auxiliary in that place would do all it could to keep the children from the influence of the other churches; and as I referred this letter to the Children's Home, I was grateful that we have our own institution for these and other bereaved children. I trust that the women of the auxiliary will not forget this institution in their donations.

SOCIAL PURITY BOARD

I wish to call your attention to the recommendation, in my report to the presidency and conference, which is no doubt in your hands, that the Social Purity Board of the church, which is at present composed of men, be enlarged to include a member appointed by the Woman's Auxiliary. If this should be favorably acted upon, I trust that the Woman's Auxiliary will select a woman who is in sympathy with and capable of promoting our ideas concerning sex hygiene, or social purity, as expressed in the Year Book.

"IN FINE"

I can report from my personal knowledge that many friends have been made to the cause during this year. Numbers of the missionaries and other brethren in correspondence or reporting to President F. M. Smith have sent through him personal messages of congratulation and encouragement in regard to our work. This, besides my own correspondence and that of the other auxiliary officers and heads of departments, shows a really remarkable increase in interest. Our growth in numbers, too, has been as great, or greater than we had expected during this year of readjustment.

As your president, I have made an effort to keep in close touch with all phases of the auxiliary work, and I feel that our earnest prayers have been answered, and that the sacrifices and labors of the loyal workers have been rewarded.

I wish to ask that I be not nominated for your next president. I have many pressing duties to my family and to the church which render it impracticable for me to attend to the details of the office of president, and I should not wish to serve even if so desired. The fact that I have for years made a study of women's problems, associated with women's clubs, with the motive to assist in adapting the best part of the progress of the world to the women of our church, and that I have served on the advisory board of our auxiliary for a term of years, may assure you of my interest and of my constant prayers for your success.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

Our Convention Business Meetings

From the secretary's minutes we glean a few items which may interest our readers, in addition to the program features which have been mentioned in a recent issue of our column.

Sister Frederick M. Smith was unable to be present at many of the program meetings, but attended most of the business sessions. The first one was taken up with reports from officers (attention being called to the recommendations contained in them), and the work of revising the constitution and by-laws, Sister Helen Silsbee Smith, upon request, giving a brief statement of the reasons why such revision was deemed necessary. These reasons were founded upon the difficulty which many local and district organizations had encountered in attempting to follow the rules laid down for them in the constitution adopted a year ago, and the effort of the present revision was towards simplifying the regulations, and make them more flexible and adaptable to local conditions.

The second business meeting was taken up with continuing the consideration of the changes in the constitution, and the choosing as the auxiliary member of the social purity board Sister Jennie M. Studley; as member of the coordinating committee, Sister Frederick M. Smith; and as member of the Children's Home board, Sister L. L. Ressigie.

Below, we give the items of the next day's business, as published in the DAILY HERALD, over the signature of the secretary.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

The Woman's Auxiliary met in business session as per printed program on Wednesday morning. Mrs. Frederick M. Smith opened the meeting, Sister D. J. Krahl of Holden, Missouri, offering prayer.

A demonstration of kindergarten work was given by Miss Jarvis, kindergarten teacher in Lamoni schools.

The election of officers was then taken up as advertised in the outline of business. Mrs. Frederick M. Smith was nominated for president, but declined. By urgent request of the convention, Sister Smith consented to be elected as honorary president. The election resulted as follows: Mrs. Lula M. Sandy, of Kansas City, Missouri, president; Mrs. W. W. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. William Madison, also of Independence, as first and second vice president; Mrs. J. A. Gardner, of Independence, secretary; Mrs. F. M. Sheehy of Independence, treasurer; Mrs. B. C. Smith, of Independence, historian.

The morning meeting adjourned until after the afternoon business session. Dismissed by Mrs. B. M. Anderson.

At 3.45 the auxiliary met, with Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser in charge, Mrs. Amy Wells offering prayer.

Further consideration of the proposed amendments was the order of business. These will be published in leaflet form in a short time.

The report of the notification committee was read, and the communication from the president of the church read and ordered spread upon the minutes. It was moved and carried to refer the matter of our library interests to the executive committee, looking to the placing in local church libraries, of books of special interest to our women.

The gavel belonging to the association was formally presented to the incoming president, Mrs. Lula M. Sandy, by Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER, Secretary.

A Course in Mothercraft for Our Girls

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Woman's Auxiliary the following resolution was adopted:

"Moved that as the executive committee of the Woman's Auxiliary we look with favor upon the installing of a course in mothercraft, as well as domestic science, in Graceland College this year."

MRS. LULA SANDY, President.
MRS. J. A. GARDNER, Secretary.

Reunion Work for the Auxiliary

All who are interested in securing auxiliary work for the reunions this year should write at once to Mrs. William Madison, 1313 Van Horn Road, Independence, Missouri.

Mrs. Madison has been appointed by the executive committee to have charge of this work and is very anxious to communicate with anyone who wishes suggestions as to reunion work.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER, Secretary.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Independence Stake

On Sunday May 6, all the branches of the stake observed the sacrament at the morning hour and at night the following brethren held forth: Stone Church, H. O. Smith; Second Branch, their new pastor, E. Davis, with a musicale in the afternoon under the auspices of the good literature committee; Walnut Park, Bishop E. L. Kelley; Enoch Hill, W. D. Bullard, who through the Spirit gave a most encouraging message to a full house; at the North Liberty Mission, Joseph Smith, who is a missionary, preached before a large number of Saints.

At the temple lot church, E. T. Atwell occasionally lends excellent aid to the choir, and there is being a joint effort set on foot for tent meetings to be held during the summer, which no doubt will prove to be a work beneficial to all concerned.

A program dedicated to Mother's Day will be given on next Sunday, May 13, both at Walnut Park and at the first church, and it will also be a sacrifice day for the benefit of the Christmas fund in our Sunday schools.

The singers, under the direction of Sister G. H. Hulmes, have for some time been busy preparing for the Convention Hall concerts of May 2, 3 and 4, and on Sunday morning all arose early in order to attend the one great event in Kansas City, when midst waving of flags of two republics, a great and wonderful alliance was effected. It was an alliance between the two democracies: America and France, and tears of gratefulness to God welled up from many a loving heart at the sight of the representatives of two nations at one time estranged, embracing each other in filial affection; and may we hope that after the cruel cannon's roar shall cease to be heard, that there will be the promised peace over land and sea, with victory glorious and permanent.

Some very important meetings besides those connected with church services have been held of late. Baby lectures have been given to large audiences with their slogan sounding forth: "Give the baby his rights—not a pacifier." Then, on the afternoon of May 3 there was an audience of over two hundred gathered in the basement to hear about "Conservation of foods" and the speakers were Mr. E. A. Ikenberry, Brother J. J. Teeters, and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser. Sister T. J. Sheldon presided and made an excellent talk, giving an outline of work to be done.

Mr. Ikenberry is the Jackson County agricultural agent and he explained how to plant crops that can be kept with little trouble, those that can be canned easily, the drying of vegetables and fruits, how corn fields and fence corners can be utilized, rotation of crops and when to plant. Also he spoke of the varieties of crops, of encouraging the boys and girls to go to gardening, and very courteously offered his assistance in this line of work.

On Sunday afternoon, May 6, at the same hour of the prayer meeting in the basement, there were exercises going on in the upper room under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary and President F. M. was invited to address the sisters on the subject of their special line of work; also Sisters Sheldon and Gardner spoke, the latter giving an idea of the progress of the Oriole and young women's work. Sister F. M. Smith, honorary president, also gave an informal talk. Mrs. William Madison, president, was in charge and addressed the sisters on the subject of efficiency and the necessity of educational pursuits.

The Power of the Spirit

I have been made to rejoice time and again when I have read the spiritual sermons and spiritual letters in the HERALD. It has prompted me to write, thinking that I might benefit some one by my letter.

In the first Corinthian letter, chapter 12, it says, "For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." (Verses 8-13.)

In 2 Timothy 1: 7, it says, "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

Oh, when the Spirit of Christ inspires our hearts, how it fills our souls with unspeakable joy! His Spirit casts out all fear, and we glorify God, which is our reasonable service. What a comfort it is to have the Spirit of Christ ever abiding within us from day to day, inspiring our hearts through all the trials of life, inspiring us to get nearer to Christ, so that he can say to those who endure to the end, Enter into the joys of thy Lord; and as thou hast been faithful over a few things, enter thou into the home of the blessed.

Again we read in the Inspired Translation, Genesis 6: 67, "And it came to pass, when the Lord had spoken with Adam our Father, that Adam cried unto the Lord, and he was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the water, and was laid under the water, and was brought forth out of the water; and thus he was baptized. And the Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit, and became quickened in the inner man. And he heard a voice out of heaven, saying, Thou art baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost."

We see how Adam was made a child of God, how he became a spiritual man, how he received eternal life, the abiding Comforter to enlighten the inner man by the Spirit, to guide into all truth, which is needed to inspire our spirits so that we can speak with the tongues of angels and praise our great Redeemer in the spirit of holiness. They that worship the Lord must worship him in spirit and in truth, for the Lord has chosen such to worship him. Let us put on the whole armor of God, and the breastplate of righteousness and the sword of the Spirit, and stand as bold soldiers of Christ for the faith of Christ, and never allow the word of Christ to be evilly spoken of. As he laid down his life for us, we ought to be willing to lay down our lives for Christ and the gospel. Let nothing keep us from standing for the truth. Let us grow in grace, that we become more spiritual every day, and get nearer the faith of Christ, that it may take a deeper root, and that we may become more spiritual every day, that we may drink deeper out of the fountain of Christ. Let us set our hearts upon the work of Christ, that our spiritual understanding may be more enlightened to the glory of God.

Taking Thought for the Morrow

In examining Christ's words about not taking thought for the temporal things of to-morrow, we find that they are addressed particularly to the ministry of the church, whose business is to minister in spiritual things. I have often thought that this fact should be emphasized more than it is by writers on this subject. In Doctrine and Covenants we read as follows:

"Behold, I send you out to prove the world, and the laborer is worthy of his hire. And any man that shall go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb or joint; and an hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry, neither athirst. Therefore, take no thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed; for consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they toil not, neither do they spin; and the kingdoms of the world, in all their glory, are not arrayed like one of these; for your Father who art in heaven knoweth that you have need of all these things. Therefore, let the morrow take thought for the things of itself. . . . Therefore, let no man among you (for this commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God in the church, unto the ministry, from this hour, take purse or scrip, that goeth forth to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 13, 14, 15.

All this is addressed to the ministry. It is the business and duty of those in the church who are not in the ministry, to labor to provide for the present and future maintenance of themselves and their wives and children, and also by their tithing to provide the bishop with means for the maintenance of the families of the active ministry. To the common laboring man, or to the farmer who must plow and sow and plant his fields, that by the crop he hopes to raise he may be provided with bread for the morrow, and the coming winter—to these, I say, it would not do to apply the words about "the lilies of the field," that "toil not, neither do they spin." Such will not be provided for, if through shiftlessness they "let the morrow take thought for the things of itself." If able, they must labor for the necessaries of life. For "an idle soul shall suffer hunger." (Proverbs 19: 15.) And Paul says: "This we commanded you, if any would not work, neither should he eat." (2 Thessalonians 3: 10.)

And the Book of Mormon is very plain, showing that Christ is addressing the ministry—the twelve whom he had chosen, when, in preaching to the people of Nephi on this land, he speaks of not taking thought for the morrow:

"And now it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words [to the multitude—C. W. L.], he looked upon the twelve whom he had chosen, and said unto them, Remember the words which I have spoken. For behold, ye are they whom I have chosen to minister unto this people. Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? consider the lilies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, even so will he clothe you, if ye are not of little faith. Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient is the day unto the evil thereof. And now it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words, he turned again to the multitude, and did open his mouth unto them again."—Book of Nephi 6: 1-13. All these words were addressed to "the twelve whom he had chosen," or to the ministry, as in the Book of Covenants.

Boston Items

At our recent business meeting held April 27 it was voted, upon recommendation of the former missionary in charge and our district president, to ordain Brother E. L. Traver to the office of elder, after which he was elected to serve as pastor for the succeeding term.

Brother George Sinclair was elected as priest with his associates, Brother Calvin Sears as teacher with his associates, and Brother W. R. Carter as deacon with his associates.

We learned from the report that we have been improving in financial matters though, considerably behind a satisfactory condition yet.

Action was taken (somewhat tardily) to purchase American flags to adorn our church, and make more obvious our patriotism.

Two splendid sermons were enjoyed Sunday from our good warrior and brother, Isaac M. Smith. Though many, many, years in the service he preached with all his old-time vigor and his sermons were much appreciated.

Brother Rich preached afternoon and evening at Lynn, to good audiences. This mission is keeping bravely alive, and great things are expected when our new missionary, Brother O. R. Miller, arrives.

Brother William Frost is largely instrumental in keeping alive two openings each week. One at North Saugus Friday evenings, and at Cambridge on Monday evenings.

Our Sunday school is thriving under the able care of Brother A. L. Sanford. The new departure of meeting at 9.30 Sunday morning is working well and bids fair to be a permanent feature.

The Religio, under the wise and capable leadership of Sister Alberta Lake, shows animation. We regretted to hear of the opinion expressed by the president of the church this spring that the condition of the Religio was decidedly unsatisfactory. However, our local is splendidly alive and doing good work.

Sister Steele, one of our faithful members, is very ill at Cranberry Isle, Maine, and desires the prayers of the Saints.

Listen for the wedding bells May 19. Brother Calvin Sears and Sister Laura Pierson are the happy ones.

We forbear to use more space this time, but, Mr. Editor, there are many interesting things happening in the world's Hub.

VOLUNTEER.

As Others See Us

[The following is an extract of a letter from a man who, it is evident, does not belong to our church. He was once a minister in a Protestant church. It has been mailed to us with the privilege of publishing if we desire. It contains so many good points that we have decided to publish it. It is true that we do not ordinarily make our argument by attack upon others, but rather in presenting the truth as we see it. That necessarily is opposed to error. The history of this church verifies his assertion of the attack of the clergy on the prophet. Certainly nature is not agnostic, but to the seeing, eye presents God. If the writer wants a church that believes in free speech, free discussion, and independent thought, barring out nothing that can be proven to be true, he should, following his own advice, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good," which would involve a critical examination of our claims. Naturally we are surprised to learn that we are ignorant, especially as we have for many years pursued most earnestly the study of science, religion, including, of course, the Bible and its literature in an earnest effort to learn the truth. But, upon the whole, it is very refreshing.—EDITORS.]

The SAINTS' HERALD I read with great interest. The men who write for it are not only sincere and have a high purpose, but it is, to me, so pitiful to see how ignorant they are—"Zeal without knowledge." Their great need, and it's common to all sects, and the real cause why there are sects, why there's "Babylon" and confusion, disunion, instead of unity in Protestantism, is that they don't understand, comprehend, appreciate or sympathize with the words of Jesus, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." They hedge themselves around with creeds, fortify themselves with close communion church organizations, tie themselves up in a man-made theology, and if any one of their number goes out of their index expurgatorium and discovers that they are clinging to some idol that "the great whore" the Roman Catholic Church has set up during the Dark Ages, or some half pagan and Constantine-made doctrine of 300-325 A. D., they either dare not tell the truth, or, if they have the courage to tell it, the rest "stop their ears and run upon him with one accord and cast him out." They can't stone him nowadays—thank God, we've got beyond that—or crucify him, or burn him at the stake, or thumbscrew as the Romans did in Mexico in 1896 to eight men, women, and little children; but they are slicker and more adroit now, so they ostracize him, invent lies about him, and boycott him.

I speak from experience. They are now more spiteful and hypocritical than the Pharisees, for, like Richard III who said, "I can smile, and murder while I smile." But one thing sure, they will raise heaven and earth, and even hell, to stop his mouth and prevent him from being heard. The HERALD people, I'll admit, are further out of the woods of Rome than any sect I know, and that's why I like the Latter Day Saints—they are on the way out of the "sorceries" (i. e., lying arts, is the meaning of the Greek word) of Romanism, and they really want to understand the man of Nazareth; but old tradition still holds them strongly, only they haven't yet learned what it really is, but we have the sure promise of the angel of God to John on Patmos that Babylon is to be cast down and out. God grant I may live to see it. To put it in another way, the great and outstanding fact taught in the Bible is that the priest and theology ever fought the prophets of God. When they see and appreciate that, they will come farther out of the woods.

Abraham Lincoln was asked by a friend, "Mr. Lincoln, I know you to be a man of deep religious nature. Why have you never joined any church?" "Well," replied Lincoln, "I cannot understand or believe their complicated systems of theology, but when I find a church, whose only creed is the words of Christ, 'Ye shall love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself,' then that church I will join with all my heart." He never found that church, and so never joined any. So much for that.

When I find that church, I'll join it. When I find a church that believes in free speech, free discussion, the barring of nothing that can be proved to be true, that is a church imbued with "The Spirit of truth" that is not afraid to say, "Give us the truth, though the heavens fall," has such a faith in the God of truth that they do not fear to know all the truth, will "examine all things and hold fast to that which is good," recognize that God is truth and there is no need to fear the truth, that church will be mine.

There is more faith in theology, church, creed, and idols—the work of men's hands—than there is in the living God that is smiling and beckoning to them from the flowers of the field, and all the facts of nature. There is more fear of science, simply because materialists have controlled it (and it's the fault of the church and of the priests and theology that the materialists have controlled science), for science is a study of the visible acts of God, and to doubt, distrust and antagonize true science is to do that same to God himself.

The time is drawing close when the blind will cease to lead the blind, and when the veil that priests have woven for the minds and souls of men will be rent in twain from top to bottom, and then they will begin to understand God just a little.

Well, you see I got back on the same subject again, for I can't help it. What made the prophets the men they were? It was that God revealed himself to them; his light shone into their souls and mind, and they had the courage to face stoning and death from the hands of the people, rather than to be untrue to the charge that God put upon them. Remember Isaiah's words of the charge God gave him. (See Isaiah 53:1.) "Cry aloud. Spare not. Lift up thy voice as a trumpet, and tell my people their sins, and the house of Jacob their transgressions." People never like to be told that. What stamped John Wesley as a man whom God had commissioned, was, among other incidents, when told a certain man was a great preacher, Wesley asked, "Do they mob him? Does his preaching make them mad? Do they get angry at him?" He was told, "Oh, no, nothing like that, for he's very popular." "Then he is not much of a preacher," replied Wesley. "No thief e'er felt the halter draw, with good opinion of the law," and no transgressor, man in error and darkness, but is angered to be told that he is in darkness and is a transgressor, etc.

I hope to make myself plain. Jesus told Nicodemus, "And this is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light." Light in the Greek and in the Bible is synonymous with truth. "I am come into the world to give light." When Jesus was before Pilate, he said, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Everyone that is of the truth heareth my voice."

The face of the earth is dotted with churches, so they claim, on the philisophy and teachings of a man who held that material possessions were a curse and that total self-abnegation is the only firm step toward eternal life. On Sundays the bells ring and the people throng the streets going to worship the man whose best advice they tread under foot. He asked them, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say? Ye cannot serve God and Mammon."

NELIGH, NEBRASKA, May 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: We wish to have a confidential talk with the members of the Central Nebraska District. We would like to hear from all the members that feel the need of an elder in their vicinity, and would like to know the opportunities for preaching, and the time most favorable; then we could make arrangements to meet the same.

We would admonish the presidents of branches to concentrate their efforts around the branch, and its vicinity, to make the branch the center of attraction, by visiting and giving out cordial invitations and preaching, to keep your branch up to as high a standard of spirituality as possible. The Lord requires this at our hands. Let the priest visit the houses of all members, to give counsel and cheer, calling them to duty as becometh Saints of the Most High.

The teacher should visit and pour the oil of peace on the troubled waters, and try to smooth out the rough places and trials of life, of the members of his branch, inviting them to all the meetings.

The deacon should be a business man, looking after the comforts of the members, protecting the properties of the church, and in a kind business way look after the poor of his branch.

The Sunday school officers should inject new life into their schools and try to bring them up to the standard of excellence.

Religio members should remember that it is required of them to raise to a high standard of music, song, elocution and oratory. The attainments would prove a great help to the work of the Lord in all the meetings of the Saints.

The last, but not least, the Woman's Auxiliary. Their work is very needful in a social and moral way. The moral standing of the future church depends upon their present efforts. They also throw an arm of protection around the branch in a financial way, which they might well be proud of. May God speed their good work.

Now, dear Saints, let us all respond to the call to come up higher. The order of the day is work, work, work, with a long pull and a strong pull all together, then the work of the Lord will move as never before.

Your brother in the conflict,

W. M. SELF, District President.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, 227 McGee Avenue.

TRYON, NEBRASKA, May 6, 1917.

Editors Herald: Our branch has grown in number and spirituality. To-day we held an all-day meeting, with sixty-five present, eight of the number being nonmembers. Reading the letter, "Just a little cloud," in the HERALD for May 2, from Sister Effie J. Denton, I felt sad in the beginning, but the closing words cheered me somewhat. If we are not continually on our guard, Satan will rule our minds and then how dark and gloomy everything appears. I have read all the letters Sister Denton has written to the HERALD. She is my sister and was baptized here some years ago by Brother Grimes. She would be surprised to return and note the growth of the little branch.

From Here and There

"I am a lonely, isolated Saint, sick and in need of the help of the Lord. I request the Saints to pray for me, for I am suffering with nervous prostration and have little control of my mind. Pray that the Lord may remove the terrible darkness that has come over me and that I may be spared to my children; also that I may be forgiven for any wrong I may have done to bring this upon me."—Mrs. Cora Webb, Lakeview, Texas.

Elder J. W. Metcalf writes from Fanning, Kansas, to say that his field address for the coming year will be that place and for those who wish his service anywhere in the Northeastern Kansas District to write him.

At the sacrament meeting of the Belvidere, Illinois, Branch, held recently, Sister David Brand, of Marengo, Illinois, was present, and gave a dollar to the temple fund. She is ninety-six years of age. The Spirit indicated through the district president, J. O. Dutton, several changes in the priesthood personnel of the branch: William Darmon to be ordained elder, Ernest Vowels priest, Edward Darmon teacher, Jesse M. Jacobs deacon. The first mentioned has been referred to the district conference for approval, while the others have been ordained. These brethren have the love, confidence, and respect of the members and the branch has a good outlook. C. Bell McElroy is branch clerk and reports the items.

We have word from Brother E. R. Davis, 1237 South Fourth Street, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, as follows: "To the Saints of the Eastern Iowa District: I have just arrived in this field to which the late General Conference has appointed me to labor, and I earnestly invite the cooperation of all the Saints throughout the district as to the opportunities for missionary work in their localities, and the assistance they are willing to render in getting the gospel before the people. Home address, 312 South Fuller Avenue, Independence Missouri."

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

To the Saints of the Clinton District: Elder W. S. Macrae having tendered to the First Presidency his resignation as president of the Clinton District, the presidency has appointed Elder H. E. Moler to act as president protem until the convening of the next district conference.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 9, 1917.

Pastoral

To the Members of the Northeastern Illinois District; Greeting: It was with feelings of satisfaction and gratitude that I heard my name read as one to labor in your district for another year. I certainly hope this may be a season of prosperity for the church, and in order that this may be, I know that there must be a united effort on our part. This ever has been the case, but with the conditions ripening so fast all about us, we must be alert to think and to improve every opportunity that we can see for the advancement of the cause of Christ. This brings to mind the saying of Christ viz, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." We need more laborers, and as the missionary force is not increased this year, the only way this can be brought about is for each local man in the district not actually elected to branch responsibility, to be anxious to move out into the "harvest" and thrust in his sickle and reap. Again in the branches where there is a full set of officers, it is possible by proper understanding, for one or two of them to move out and occupy in new places that are in reach and thus by a united effort keep well kindled the missionary fire, which ever has and ever must be the active principle of the church of Christ. I wish to call the attention of the Saints to a subject which has been on my mind for some time, and which I want every branch and every Saint to be thinking about prior to the district conference, which will meet at Mission Branch June 2 and 3, so that we may be able to act unitedly—reunion! This word has become very dear to Latter Day Saints and we are all glad that it has; but what about the one for 1917? We voted at the last one that we would meet August 24 to September 2, but since then great changes have taken place and it now becomes a question to many of us what we had better do. One thing sure that we will have to change the price of meals, from fifteen cents by the ticket, to twenty-five cents and then there may be a question as to how we would come out. Now to me it would be a sacrifice for us not to have the reunion, but this is a day of sacrifice, we have been told so many times; and the question is, should this sacrifice be made? How many are willing to make it, and still keep just as interested in the work throughout the year? How many of our young will feel just a little discouraged? Or are our young people made of just that sort of material, that they will gladly make the sacrifice and never falter? I believe they will fall in line with whatever the majority decide, and so we can bank on them for whatever is best. I have always been in favor of reunions, as you know, but admit that there is a great question when I am made to feel the true conditions that many of our people are in right now! To run a reunion successfully these times we must have a good turnout and not the last five days but from the start. But many are saying that they see little show of going as they are having all they can do now to live and keep the local church going. On the other hand I have been watching, and wondering if we got down to the full spirit of sacrifice as we might, if we could not have the largest reunion that the district has ever had and the richest blessings? What think you? I hope that you will all be thinking, ask yourselves the questions: Could I not get along without one of those dresses that I planned to have? Could I not get along without that new suit that I planned to have? And then, now and then the candy, gum, peanuts, ice cream, etc., And some people once in a while a show, a movie or a circus? I hope that every representative of the branch attending the June conference will come ready to act, and then do with our might whatever is best. I am pleased to say that since the General Conference that I find the Saints alive and active where I have gone, and the short conference and the missionaries getting back so early has had a good effect on the Saints. Hope we can do it again. In Rockford last week flour was $4.40 and potatoes $4.00, and everything going up! Do you wonder that we begin to think? And especially the missionary's family even with the slight increase that the church was able to grant will have to figure some. But I know that the Lord is able to provide for his people, if we do our part and do not try to follow the world.

Your servant and brother,
BELVIDERE, ILLINOIS, May 10. JASPER O. DUTTON.

To the Saints and Friends of the Eastern Oklahoma District; Greeting: Having again been appointed to labor with and among you another year, I crave the hearty cooperation of the Saints throughout the field, and chiefly the branch officers. Local elders and priests, who are able to give all or part of their time outside or near their respective branches without neglecting their local duty, will please do so. If help is needed, I will respond or send some one, if at all possible. In looking over the conference appointments I am saddened to notice that but one lone missionary besides myself has been sent into this large field, namely, Elder Sidney N. Gray. I trust that the scattered membership will keep in close touch with him, that the work may be opened up in new places, as my labors will be among and with the branches principally. All differences and difficulties that local officers may not be able to cope with or settle should be reported to me. From the branch presidents I shall expect quarterly reports promptly, as follows: June 25, September 25, December 25, and March 25, so as to enable me to make out my reports on the first of the month of each quarter. Acting as agent for the bishop, I hope that every tithe-paying member of the district (scattered ones included) will send me his tithes and freewill offerings by draft or express money order, and I will forthwith forward receipt for same. We have been called into the service of God, and by him; we are workers together in his kingdom and must put forth our very best efforts. So let us move along hand in hand and be very careful as to our deportment among the Saints and the world. Our example should be worthy of imitation. We must be clean in body, mind, and conversation; kind, loving, and affectionate to one and all. Let our watchword be success. My home address will be Independence, Missouri, Corner Maple and South Park Avenues. All communications and reports should be sent to my field address, Haileyville, Oklahoma.

Yours in gospel bonds,
J. C. Chrestensen.

The Bishopric

To the Saints in Oklahoma and Spring River, also the Unorganized Territory of Southern Kansas; Greeting: It is with unhesitating confidence in God and his Saints that I appeal to you as we enter upon the threshold of this, the conference year. Past experiences have demonstrated to me your true devotion and genuine loyalty to God and his work. And now as our army of sacrificing ministry go forth from home and loved ones to present to humanity the greatest system of truths known to mankind, I feel to urge affiliation and cooperation.

Never in the history of the church has the need for the paying of tithes and offerings been greater than now. We are living in troublous times, and no man knoweth what may happen on the morrow. What will be the outcome of present conditions we know not. One thing we do know, and that is that the high cost of food and necessities make them almost prohibitive, and if you have a hard time making a living, think of the elders' families who have to live on much less. Let me urge upon you to make a special effort with the tithes and offerings this year, in order that the church may be in a position to meet all incoming demands.

The keeping of the law insures to us blessings of heaven promised to the faithful.

Please remember that there are in all branches, solicitors who will receipt for all tithes and offerings. Also the following named missionaries, viz, J. E. Vanderwood, western Oklahoma, Joseph Arber, central Oklahoma; Elam Erwin, J. T. Riley and J. C. Chrestensen, eastern Oklahoma; John Arthur Davis, southern Kansas, and at large, Apostle William Aylor and counselor, Earl D. Bailey.

Your brother and colaborer,
ELLIS SHORT,

Bishop of above district.

Our Departed Ones

PALMATIER.—Francis Palmatier was born November 26, 1837. Baptized April 13, 1884, by Joseph Shippy. Died at Bay City, Michigan, May 4, 1917. Funeral in charge of O. J. Hawn. Sermon by E. S. White. Interment in Oakridge Cemetery.

HAIN.—Estella, wife of Brother Phillip Hain, born March 26, 1871, at Grant, Calhoun County, Iowa. Baptized April 29, 1889, at Auburn, Iowa, by David M. Rudd. Died February 12, 1917, at Clayton, Union County, New Mexico. Leaves to mourn, a husband and 2 daughters.

BARTON.—Sarah Barton was born April 4, 1832, at Shade River, Ohio. Died March 31, 1917, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Cummings, in Rutledge, Iowa. Married twice, and was the mother of 8 children, all of whom were present at the funeral. She was a member of the Wine-bernian Church. Services from the house in charge of C. E. Willey.

HENDRA.—John Hendra was born at Givinyard, Cornwell, England, December 13, 1853. Came to Lucas, Iowa, 40 years ago, at which place he married Sister Mary Jane Rees. To this union was born 1 daughter, Mrs. S. S. Styre, of Ottumwa, Iowa. Died at his home in Ottumwa, Iowa, April 26, 1917. Leaves to mourn, his wife, 1 daughter, son-in-law, 3 grandchildren, and a host of friends. Funeral services at the home April 29; sermon by E. B. Morgan, to a large congregation. Brother Thomas Hopkins and party did the singing.

TERRY.—James W. Terry, born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1840; died March 24, 1917. Married Nancy R. Boyle January 19, 1860; to this union were born eight children, five preceding him to the other shore. Those left to mourn are his wife and 3 children, Edith Miller and William M. Terry of Nebraska, and James H., Joy, Illinois, 1 brother and 2 sisters, 21 grandchildren and 15 great-grandchildren. He enlisted in the services of his country in 1861, joined the church in 1868. Services held at the Saints' chapel, Joy, Illinois, in charge of J. W. Bean; sermon by E. A. Curtis.

SCARCLIFF.—Frank P. Scarcliff was born at Janesville, Rock County, Wisconsin, August 10, 1852. Baptized when 14 years old by David H. Smith. Ordained elder at Plano, Illinois, April 12, 1870, by W. W. Blair. Zenos H. Gurley, and Josiah Eills. He came south in 1880, and since that time has served the church as a missionary and in a local way. Became a member of the United Order of Enoch in 1911. Died at his home in Mobile, October 26, after a brief illness. He leaves mother, two brothers, one sister, wife, five boys and two girls. At the time of his death he was serving as president of the Mobile Branch and other offices. Interment in Magnolia Cemetery, Mobile. Funeral sermon by A. E. Warr.

COCKROFT.—Sister Martha E. Cockroft was born at Rawtenstall, England, February 2, 1865, baptized June 26, 1886; died March 11, 1917. A devoted husband, 2 daughters and 1 son survive her. The integrity, benevolence and kindness manifested by our sister in daily life won her many friends, she rendered valuable service to the church and auxiliaries. She was a true mother, rearing her family to manhood and womanhood in the fear of the Lord. She loved the beautiful in all the works of divinity and for years during summer sent flowers from her garden to adorn the pulpit and cheer the lives of others. Her kindness was remembered by a rich profusion of exquisite and fragrant floral tributes sent by loved ones and sympathizing friends. Funeral services in charge of pastor E. B. Hull, sermon by Elder H. W. Howlett. The Saints' church was filled to its capacity. Two delegations of women from the Odd Fellows and Saint George Societies occupying the platform. By special request of our sister who made complete arrangements for her funeral services, a quartet sang "The old, old path," "The Lord knows why" and "Sleep on, beloved," interment at Oak Grove Cemetery.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

A LETTER OF INSTRUCTIONS

To Conference Appointees, District and Branch Officers; Greeting: The recent General Conference held at Lamoni, Iowa, was remarkable for some changes which have made new policies regarding field work necessary. Instead of the field of missionary work being split up into segments presided over by individual members of the Quorum of Twelve, the entire field has been consolidated, to be watched over by the Twelve acting more directly as representatives of the Presidency, not as mission presidents, but going where their work is needed in regulating, organizing, and solidifying. Hence, these brethren going as the representatives of the Presidency, it should be understood that they exercise the prerogatives of supervision over the missionary work in particular, and over the organized work in districts and branches in general.

We submit the following suggestions in which is contained the instructions for the general field which heretofore have been presented in the individual pastoral letters of the apostles in charge of the different fields. We suggest that they be carefully read by all concerned. In case of doubt or misunderstanding please address the Presidency's office, so as to insure uniformity of action.

(a) The sharp distinction between the "local" and "missionary" appointments of this year's list of appointees must be observed. It is intended to meet the demand for proselytizing and propaganda work, and making new openings by those who have been designated "missionary." We emphasize the need of systematic tracting, and personal conversations, as well as the usual preaching services; and we would urge that all missionaries send in to the Presidency's office for a series of tracts which can be used, and these will be supplied so far as practicable.

Regarding the men who are listed as "local," it is the understanding that such brethren confine themselves chiefly or primarily to developing and building up our work in the branches or districts to which they are appointed. We should like to see these men work with the local priesthood, educating them in their duties and assisting them to carry out the functions of their offices so as to bring up the branches and districts to a more efficient standard. We suggest also that such men might very easily find points where local missions might be opened under the care of local ministers within branch or district boundaries, either supplementing the work of or preparing for the missionaries, thus developing solidarity in our work.

While we mark the line between the two groups of workers, it must not be interpreted to mean this is a hard and fast line or a mechanical separation. Let it be borne in mind that "missionaries" work in their calling as pioneers and the men to open up and develop new fields; and the local ministers to concentrate upon the work of building up and consolidating. In practice there will be times when the work will overlap and both will need to work together.

(b) We would encourage a close cooperation between the missionaries in their work and the district and branch presidents. If there should be need for special services in any branch, we would like all such matters to be referred by the branch president to the district president, the latter to take it up with the missionary or missionaries assigned to that district, or with the Presidency who may assign a missionary to the work. As much as possible, let all cultivate ministerial courtesies and so conserve each other's interest as church officers.

(c) We are impressed with the world-wide conditions which presently are threatening the peace and prosperity of all nations. Under these conditions we must urge caution in the missionaries traveling from place to place. Let us try rather the intensive methods which were advised during the conference, and so exercise a desirable economy.

(d) In the matter dealing with difficulties arising in branches which may be outside of the usual routine affairs, we request that missionaries keep in touch with the Presidency's office, so as to secure advice which will reduce the danger of misunderstanding in such important work.

(e) Reporting. This matter is one that is not treated as seriously as should be; there is neglect and delay in forwarding reports to the office. We ask all to report as promptly as desired. All General Conference appointees are requested to write a weekly letter to the Presidency, and once each month send in a statistical official report. The district presidents are expected to report to the First Presidency as in the past, and any necessary deviation therefrom will be called for by the Presidency.

The weekly letter is intended to be a personal survey. We invite suggestions and criticisms of conditions, methods, or policies, and shall esteem it highly to have all feel that the work and its success is a personal matter. We hope to cultivate by the weekly letter a personal knowledge of each other and of the conditions of the work in a more than merely official sense. The spirit and genius of our work is friendship and we can only succeed as this friendship is made the basis of our official relations. Please keep in mind that the first of every month the official report to the Presidency's office is due. Failure to report is delinquency.

(f) Regarding invitations for ministers not in the district or local field to attend reunions or conferences, we request all such be forwarded to the Presidency's office for consideration, and arrangements will be made for such being supplied.

(g) The question of the patriarchs and their relationship to local work has been brought up in several ways and we call attention to the following conclusions agreed upon in Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Patriarch:

The special work of such ministers is to conduct revival services in connection with branch and district officers. Patriarchs should not take charge of branch or district work, as their work is exclusively spiritual not executive. Their work is distinctly local and not missionary, thereby obviating itinerant work. If any branch or district where no patriarch has been appointed needs patriarchal services, such needs and requests will be provided by the Presidency's office on application.

(h) We should like each branch to arrange for a priesthood meeting at least once a month, and some systematic program of study should be outlined. To meet this need we call attention to the paper which has been issued in the Independence Stake entitled Unity. This paper will now be published as a general church periodical, and outlines of lessons and studies will be provided in due course. In the meantime we shall be glad to advise as to these meetings with any who may desire. Such requests should be forwarded to the Presidency's office.

This pastoral is not intended to be complete or exhaustive but tentative and suggestive. It may be that the experiences of the year will develop matters in which general principles are involved. We shall therefore issue such instructions as from time to time may be considered advisable.

We earnestly hope that our work together shall produce splendid results and so bring honor to our heavenly Father in the increasing success of the cause.

For the Joint Council of Presidency and Twelve,
FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 15, 1917.

A RUN ON THE BANK

Several years ago in Saint Louis a rumor was suddenly spread, that certain banks were in danger of closing their doors. The result was a run on those banks. Afterwards it developed that one bank had made an unsafe investment, but not such as seriously to impair its credit.

But the vital point is that a run on their banks would produce the very effect of which the people stood in fear. Many came to our law offices at the time to ask what they should do. Some of them were poor and the money meant much to them, as it was their little all of savings.

While some others gave the advice, "You had better get your money out while you can." We held steadfast against withdrawals with the certainty that any other advice would mean ruin. Even if those who acted first were saved, they would be bringing serious loss upon others.

To-day we are threatened by a national run on our wheat bank. We are told that we should purchase flour for three months or a year, as it is going up. Three months ago we were of this opinion, but now the price is already up and there is a threatened run by many laying up sufficient flour for a large part of the year.

It is self-evident that if a number of people begin to buy several sacks of flour, the price will go up even beyond what it is now, for a time at least. But that will also mean that the supply will be exhausted, or the condition will soon arise, where many will be unable to secure flour at all. This will deprive our citizens, and also other peoples who stand in need.

Conservative management would intimate that, while the supply is low, with care and cutting out of waste we should see our way clear for the succeeding year. At least we should not, by our own acts, work the ruin of others and make the shortage greater than it already is. It is a time to keep cool and carefully consider our actions, else we shall bring about the very catastrophe that we fear.

WE ARE GOING TO DOUBLE IT THIS YEAR

Yes, we are going to double it and more. We shall not be satisfied unless we do. What? Why, have you not heard about it? If you have not we will take you into our confidence and tell you all about it, for unless you know about it we can hardly expect your cooperation. What is the use of trying to do something for the general good of the church and our people if these people do not know about it. We want every one of you to talk it, read, it, preach it, eat it if you can. (You know we are generally on hand if there is something to eat.)

We would like to keep from mentioning just what we are writing about until the very last, but if we happen to let you know right here what we are writing about will you promise to read this to the end—then jump right into the collar and give us a pull? All right, that's a go. We will do our part, you see that you do yours—remember you promised.

We have selected the first Sunday of July 1917, for our CHRISTMAS OFFERING RALLY DAY. We shall be very pleased to have every Sunday school post a notice to this effect in a prominent place in your Sunday school room.

Our aim is to have each school, each scholar, each member of our good church start right now—to-day—to save for a contribution to be given on this date to be known as OUR CHRISTMAS OFFERING NEST EGG.

Will each Sunday school superintendent place in a conspicuous position in the Sunday school room, in large, bold type, the following:

TOTAL AMOUNT OF OUR NINETEEN
SIXTEEN CHRISTMAS OFFERING $——
LET US MORE THAN DOUBLE THIS IN NINETEEN SEVENTEEN $——

If you have not already started your Christmas offering account—start right now—TO-DAY—and have a nice large amount to add to the offering on Sunday, July 1. Each class may keep a separate collection account if they desire but let us try to have an amount at least equal to last year's offering to start our "NEST EGG." Yes, you can do this very easily, for you have almost two months to devote to this work, as many schools in the past waited until the last two months of the year before they started their Christmas offering fund.

We want every scholar to enter into the spirit of this movement, and the very date that your school has secured the amount of last year's offering we want the superintendent to advise us so we may make announcement in the church papers.

We want every school to at least double their last year's offering before the close of this year—what school will be the first to announce this? We want you to keep a close record and advise us; we want you to have mention in the church papers.

You wonder what all this is for? Well, we shall tell you. To-day we have a church debt larger than we think it should be. We want to clear up this debt. If every member will give two dollars each year to the Christmas offering fund we can clear up this debt in three years—remember each member must average not less than two dollars to accomplish this. If your school can give more than this average—do it, for you may be helping out some school that cannot average two dollars per member.

What Sunday school will be the first to announce an offering equal to last year's offering? What Sunday school will be the first to announce an amount equal to double last year's offering?

Mr. Superintendent, if you have not the time to give this special attention, appoint a committee to look after this special feature, or give the assistant superintendent charge of it and see that things move.

We want good suggestions that will help the boys and girls earn their offerings. If you have any that you feel will help them let us have your ideas so we can give them to the schools wanting them. If you want suggestions from us let us know and we will assist you all we can.

Now, Mr. or Mrs. Reader—you have read this, take this paper with you to the Sunday school next Sunday morning and if your superintendent does not bring this matter before the school, please see that he does so by calling attention to the article and saying that you feel your school should get right in line.

A. W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

(Brother Smith, our second assistant, has been appointed by the executive council to work with the Presiding Bishopric to make the next Christmas offering the biggest ever. You may expect to hear from him often. Help him boost.—GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.)

Some one asks how to mark manuscripts for printing to indicate italic, SMALL CAPITALS and CAPITALS. One line underscored will indicate italic, two for small capitals, and three for capitals. Be economical with the first two and seldom try to use the latter.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Graceland Play Pleases

The vocal students of Graceland College rendered "H. M. S. Pinafore" as their operetta this year. The first rendition at Lamoni was so popular that it was given the second time. They went to Leon one evening and to Mount Ayr another, receiving very pleasing commendation for the excellent talent displayed.

A Correction

Our many readers will be glad to learn that President Elbert A. Smith has sufficiently recovered to leave Hermosa Beach and is now living in one of the cities of California where there is a good branch of the church. This correction should be noted in connection with the editorial comment last week. He is able to get out and take a walk of several blocks every day.

The Joint Council

In this issue will be found the postconference appointments of the Joint Council. Several changes have been made and additional men appointed to the field. Very careful consideration has been given to this matter as the council remained in session for over two weeks after the adjourning of the General Conference. Other important business was discussed and some of it epoch making. In due course of time the results of their deliberation will, no doubt, be manifest in the conference action.

Graceland College Commencement

An interesting program has been arranged for the closing days of the college year. This has been an unusually successful year as it has shown the largest enrollment in the collegiate department of any year since the college was organized. New departments of work have been undertaken and will be pushed more energetically next year, to the end that the college may be more serviceable to the church in supplying the needs of our young people in particular. Announcement has been made that Walter W. Smith, president of the Independence Stake, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon May 27, and that Frederick M. Smith of the First Presidency, will deliver the commencement address June 1.

Traveling Salesmen Extend Their Work

We are interested in the effort of our brethren whose occupation takes them into many places and among many people. An alert and aggressive Saint working in this line certainly can exert a great moral influence. A usable stock of information, a small supply of literature, a commensurate degree of tact and wisdom—what a combination! It almost makes us envy them the opportunity. Yet we know from experience that it's not easy to withstand the frigidity, the aloofness, that sometimes follows. We suggest that in some instances the bureau of publicity of the church might be valuable with follow-up correspondence and material. We are confident that there are dozens of good literature committees ready to cooperate. We expect to hear some interesting developments from this movement. They have an announcement in this issue.

Keeping Business Normal

Many items have been sent to the editors upon the importance of economy and of keeping business normal. It is clearly recognized that business is a great chain; if one part is injured, the other parts will suffer. It is of interest to note also the inclination to pay much of the cost of the war as we go along, by a tax upon excess profits. It is evidently necessary that economy be practiced and each one will have to contribute, directly or indirectly, his share. This is a reaffirmation of what was given to the church to repress unnecessary wants, but continue normal business.

The War, Here and Abroad

The British and French continue to press forward in spite of fierce opposition by the Germans in France and some important points have been occupied recently. General Petain now commands the French armies, having succeeded General Nivelle. In Macedonia the British have made some notable gains of trenches, while in the sector north of Trieste the Italians have renewed activities which have resulted in important victories for them. Trieste is in imminent danger of capture. Three food ships bound for Sweden were recently sunk by German submarines, causing much resentment in that country. It is announced that the Germans have invented a silent submarine which renders the location of their whereabouts most difficult. Following the signing of the war measure recently passed by Congress by President Wilson, he issued a proclamation setting June 5 as the day for registration of all men between the ages of 21 and 30, inclusive, from which an army of 500,000 will be drawn by the selective method. It is claimed that there are 11,000,000 men in the United States of that age. Major General John J. Pershing has been assigned the command of 28,000 United States troops to embark for France as soon as possible. All volunteer units have been denied the privilege of service at the front in that capacity, which includes the Roosevelt division. Food control is being strenuously urged and will likely be instituted under Herbert C. Hoover, internationally known for his services in Belgium, being in charge of the food commission there.

MACHU PICCHU AND THE MEGALITHIC PEOPLE--PART I

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD

The megalithic people were an unknown race who developed a wonderful civilization in the highlands of Peru, and after a long occupation and development disappeared as a civilized race, but left no known record, modern writers not knowing their proper name, or who they were, or what became of them, so writers now call them "the megalithic people," which means "big-stone people" because this is the unknown people who built the Cuzco fortress in Peru, and other buildings of that same type where many large stones were used, some weighing five, ten, fifteen, and as much as twenty tons! This unknown people were expert stonecutters and fitters, placing them in walls with such perfect fitting joints that they are compared to ground glass stoppers in bottles. And these people had no better tools we are told, than stone hammers and fiber ropes, "and understood no more advanced mechanical principles than the lever and the inclined plane."

Machu Picchu, or the "lost city of the Inca," is the ruins of a Peruvian city. An American expedition under the direction of Professor Bingham of Yale University has done research work in the highlands of Peru in the Cuzco region since 1911. These research reports are published, including work at Machu Picchu.

Machu Picchu is thought to have been an ancient Inca capital built probably two thousand years ago, and was discovered by Professor Bingham and his party in 1911, and uncovered and excavated under his direction in 1912, under the auspices of the National Geographic Society and Yale University, and may prove to be the most important group of ruins discovered in South America since the conquest of Peru. This city is thought by its explorers to have been a university of idolatry. It is situated on a narrow, precipitous ridge in a wild and unexplored country two thousand feet above the river, and seven thousand feet above the sea, in the grand canyon of the Urnbanba, in one of the most inaccessible parts of the Andes, about sixty miles northwest of Cuzco, Peru. It contains about two hundred edifices built of white granite, and including palaces, temples, shrines, baths, fountains, and many stairways, the city does not appear to have been known to the Spaniards, but was known to a few of the natives.

The early discoveries by this expedition at Machu Picchu proved so increasingly valuable that when Doctor Bingham submitted plans for continuing explorations in Peru in 1914 and 1915 the research committee of the National Geographic Society subscribed for this purpose twelve thousand dollars from its research fund of 1914, and twenty thousand from its research fund of 1915 for the Peruvian work.

This research expedition first made its headquarters at Cuzco, the old megalithic capital. In 1915, however, its headquarters were at Ollantaytambo, a bird's-eye view of which was given in some of our leading papers a short time ago. The discoveries, and reports of this expedition are of great value to students of prehistoric America, and especially lovers of the Book of Mormon, part of which refers to the early colonization of this Cuzco region, and thus the reports made by this expedition are in the nature of a cross-examination of its statements, and this research work for three years were in the region of Cuzco, thought to be the "Nephi" of the Book of Mormon. (See Book of Mormon map.)

The reports of this expedition for 1913, 1914, and 1915 are before me, which indicate the location of many ruins in the Machu Picchu region. (See map, page 434, in said report for 1915, in the National Geographic Magazine for May, 1916.)

There is little arable land near Machu Picchu. What was cultivated was terraced, as also it is near many other mountain cities, and for this reason Peruvian farms are sometimes called "staircase farms," because the farms look like steps. Peruvian agriculture in pre-Columbian times, however, reached a stage of reclamation projects long before America was discovered by Europeans that "our undertaking sinks into insignificance in the face of what this 'vanished race' accomplished." (Ibid., p. 476.)

At a time when our ancestors in northern Europe were still utter savages, clothed only in skins, and living by hunting and fishing, settled agricultural communities must have existed in these Peruvian regions, perhaps in the same valleys that contain the marvelous remnants of prehistoric art.—Ibid., p. 474.

In the valleys where the ancient Peruvian agriculture was centered, most of the agricultural land is not natural soil, but has been assembled and put in place artificially. (Ibid., p. 475.)

The entire region that represents the chief center of the Inca empire and its megalithic predecessors affords very little of the level or gently sloping natural soil that we would consider well suited to agriculture.—Ibid., p. 475.

The hanging gardens of Babylon have long been reckoned as one of the wonders of the oriental world; and yet they were a mere transient toy and for three thousand years have been only a tradition. The hanging gardens of Peru, though of unknown antiquity, are still in existence, and doubtless as worthy of our admiration as were those of Babylon in the days of Herodotus and Strabo.—Ibid., p. 476.

The building of terraces was developed into a fine art in Peru. The skilled labor that was lavished in ancient Egypt on the tombs of the sovereigns appears to have been applied in Peru to the construction of gardens of special workmanship for raising the food of the royal family.—Ibid., p. 493.

It was fortunate for the rest of the world that the ancient Peruvians practiced agriculture under so wide a range of natural conditions, since this led to the domestication of a large series of crop plants. More plants appear to have been domesticated in the Peruvian region than in any other part of America. A large proportion of the cultivated species were limited to this part of the world.—Ibid., p. 507.

The construction of the irrigation channels was an enormous undertaking, perhaps not equaled in any other part of the world.—Ibid., p. 498.

Where the soil was loose the channels were paved with stones for many miles. On rocky slopes or precipices channels were cut into the cliffs, and in some cases tunnels of considerable length are said to have been drilled.—Ibid., p. 498.

One channel is four hundred and fifty miles long "across Sierras and over rivers, from south to north." (Ancient America, p. 243.)

The great fortress of Sacsahuamaan near Cuzco, Peru, is the most stupendous example in America of what prehistoric men could accomplish, its builders had no other tools than stone hammers and fiber ropes, and understood no more advanced mechanical principles than the lever and the inclined plane. Many centuries ago, long before the days of the Incas, a primitive people constructed these walls. Like the inhabitants of ancient Greece, they were aware of the strategic value of salients and reentrant angles, a knowledge which had been lost in Europe before the era of the first crusade. The ancient builders constructed three lines of salients extending on terraces, one above another, for a third of a mile across the back of the hill which overshadows the city of Cuzco. The terraces are faced with colossal boulders, some of which weigh over twenty tons and most of which were brought from quarries in the mountains a mile or two away. Several stones in the lower tier, at the points of the salient, are over twenty feet in height. An idea of the enormous size of the units of construction may be formed by noticing the height of those members of the expedition and their mules which may be seen standing in front of the lower wall. Notwithstanding the difficulty of handling and placing in position such enormous and extraordinary irregular blocks, they were fitted together with great precision. No cement was used in the construction, the strength of the walls being due to the very irregularity of the blocks and the method in which they were locked together. It is almost incredible that a primitive people should have had the courage and the patience to carry out such an enormous undertaking. In the words of the Inca Garcilasso de la Vega, "It passes the power of the imagination to conceive how so many and so great stones could be so accurately fitted together as scarcely to admit the insertion of the point of a knife between them." Sacsahuamaan is, indeed, one of the "wonders of the world."—Frontispiece of May, 1916, National Geographic Magazine.

The natives when asked who built this fortress answered that it was never built. When asked how it got there, answered that it was the work of enchantment, or the Devil! And the Peruvian historian, Garcilasso, had no knowledge how it was built, its work and skill were entirely beyond that of the natives, which indicates that its builders were a far superior race in the mechanical arts, and had tools unknown to them, but were forgotten. A gulf of decadence lay between its builders and modern historians which they cannot cross, only in the language of Nadaillac, that "South America presents vestiges of a vanished race, of a culture now lost."

Many of the Indians were armed with lances headed with copper tempered almost to the hardness of steel, and with huge maces and battle-axes of the same metal.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 2, p. 27.

That is said of the Inca troops who engaged the invaders at the battle of Yucay at the time of the conquest. And Father Velasco says they also used copper swords. (Ibid., p. 27, note 4.)

This battle in which tempered copper was used is thirteen hundred years after the destruction of the megalithic civilization, the builders of this fortress. I am aware that this art of tempering copper is in dispute, it cannot be done now, we are told. So we may put it in the same class as the Cuzco fortress. The main argument raised against this tempered copper theory is that others know nothing about the process, but that (to the writer) seems a poor argument to make against the statements of the Spaniards who were there and did the fighting. They ought to know.

But in order to catch some glimpses of the stream of the old megalithic culture, if not at its source which is now impossible for the want of records, "the destruction of which is a calamity to mankind," we should in fairness to them not look at the native tools, and draw conclusions from them, but rather at their works. Their works speak for themselves. All agree that between the Incas of the conquest, and the people who did this fine stonework there were about thirteen hundred years, the first five hundred of which were anarchy and chaos, and then five hundred more of decadence, and then about three hundred years of restoration. During this five hundred years of anarchy, or from about 200 A. D. to 700 A. D., many of the fine arts of that old culture "were lost."

Our fault seems to be that we look at that "vanished race" and what they did, from the native point of view, with regard to tools to work with, and at the same time admit that they excelled the natives in everything else but tools to work with. If the art of making steel and machinery was lost, as we are told some of the fine arts were, and as reason and their works bear witness, the tools of that old race would disappear long before the conquest.

The fact is no one yet has explained how that fine stonework of the megalithic people could be done without steel tools and machinery, but we don't see the steel tools, so the conclusion is: they never had any. However, we see the fine work which cannot be done with a stone hammer and a lever, so reason bears witness to machinery and tempered tools, more than it does to a stone hammer and handspikes.

With some of the finest work, at Ollantaytambo, the joints are in many places too fine to be seen by the naked eye. A lens becomes necessary to make sure that there is really a seam and not merely a superficial groove, or false joint. Professor Bingham compares the fitting of the stones to the grinding of glass stoppers into bottles, which is the best analogy thus far suggested.—National Geographic Magazine, May, 1916, p. 493.

Some writers speak of a cement used in certain buildings "made in part of liquid gold." (See Prescott's Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, p. 18, note 44.)

Professor Humboldt took back to Europe from Peru a metallic chisel, "found in a silver mine opened by the Incas not far from Cuzco. On an analysis, it was found to contain ninety-four per cent of copper, and six per cent of tin." (Ibid., vol. 1, p. 93, note 19.)

Of their stonework we are told "we are filled with astonishment, when we consider, that these enormous masses were hewn from their native bed and fashioned into shape by a people ignorant of iron; that they were brought from quarries, from four to fifteen leagues distant." (Ibid., p. 10.) "The Spaniards, puzzled by the execution of so great a work with such apparently inadequate means, referred it all, in their summary way, to the Devil." (Ibid., vol. 1, p. 11, note 25.)

De Leon says:

It surprised me to see these enormous gateways, made of great masses of stone, some of which were thirty feet long, fifteen high, and six thick.—Atlantis, p. 392.

The gateway to Ingenuity Group at Machu Picchu had lock holes differing from those of other groups. In that they were cut out of single blocks of stone, and had the stone cylinder not set into, but forming part of the whole block.—National Geographic Magazine, April, 1913, p. 470.

The people who did the finest of the ancient work are not only gone and forgotten, but lack even the distinction of a name. . . . Some writers refer to the builders as Megalithic, or Big-Stone people.—National Geographic Magazine, May, 1916, p. 474.

Of Machu Picchu, Professor Bingham says:

Their metal articles were easily preserved, and so we have been able to learn that the people of Machu Picchu were extremely skillful makers of bronze.—Ibid., p. 455.

But the professor wonders why the megalithic people failed to discover the art of making iron, when iron ore lay in abundance all around them.

If the accounts of early Spanish writers are to be accepted, some of their aqueducts were very long. Garcilasso wrote of one of them as fifty-five leagues and another one hundred and twenty leagues, with a depth of twelve feet.—Ibid., p. 498.

Thus we read of the great works of these unknown people, a forgotten race, and Professor Bingham exclaims:

The ruins of the Peruvian highlands from the temples to the terraced mountains proclaim a race, the destruction of whose annals was a calamity to mankind.—Ibid., p. 450.

They had no machinery and did not use iron or steel. They used levers and incline planes. They also made huge fiber ropes, out of which they constructed long suspension bridges. They thought nothing of handling blocks of stone that weighed five tons and upward. Indeed, there are numerous stones that weigh over fifteen tons which were fitted together with a skill that has amazed all beholders.—National Geographic Magazine, May, 1916, pp. 455-459.

They must have had giants in those days with steel fingers, so did not need machinery or tempered tools:

Bear in mind that the ancient builders had no "T" squares nor right lines, and could approach straight lines only by the skill of a trained eye.—National Geographic Magazine, April, 1913, p. 487.

He had neither cranes nor pulleys, but only levers and inclined planes, it must have required a prodigious amount of patient effort.—Ibid., p. 477.

The work of the megalithic successors show them to be much inferior in skill as may be seen in the repair work at Machu Picchu. This city is thought to have been the capital of that region, which was once densely populated. In its ruins some relics were found, viz, bronze knife, silver rings, bronze disks, terra cotta flute, dice, ear plug, bronze mirror, bronze tweezers, bronze earrings, bronze knife and spoons, a bone needle, shawl pins, bronze crowbar, bronze needles, bronze ax, and bells, plumb, silver, plumb bob, one hundred and fifty stone disks, record stones, stone figures, brazer, hundreds of stone hammers, jugs, saucers, water jar, trepanned skulls and other articles, but perhaps the most important find of all was a piece of pure tin. Professor Bingham says:

It has been generally supposed that the ancient people of Peru did not know how to make bronze, but that their bronze were accidental. This picture shows a piece of pure tin, which apparently had been rolled up by the Incas or their predecessors like a sandwich. From it, it is supposed, slices were cut when the artisan to whom it belonged needed tin in the making of bronze. It is a strong indication that the inhabitants of Machu Picchu knew how to make bronze. Most of the bronze utensils found in the city contain from five to nine per cent of tin, and about ninety per cent of copper.—National Geographic Magazine, February, 1915, p. 216.

Squire says, "At Tiagnanco we find the walls kept in position by bronze clamps." (Prehistoric America, p. 410.)

In Machu Picchu

In addition to the evidence of the pottery, we have the evidence of the buildings, which clearly appear to have been built in two distinct periods. Some of the photographs in my previous article (April, 1913) give abundant evidence to even the most casual observer of the fact that the lower portion is of finer construction than the upper.—National Geographic Magazine, February, 1915.

Mr. Squire says, "All modern masonry whether executed in Europe or America, is inferior when compared with the ancient capital of the Inca," (see Prehistoric America, p. 411) which shows again that the expert masons appeared in South America in the first era and were succeeded by a decadent race, as the Book of Mormon says.

"At every turn," says Nadalar, "South America presents vestiges of a vanished race, of a culture now lost; and we are always compelled to one conclusion as to our absolute powerlessness to decide on the origin or cause of the decadence of these races, now represented by a few miserable savages, without a past, as without a future." (Ibid., p. 465.) But at one time no people ever had a more efficient system of industry than the Peruvians, and "some of the Peruvian tongues had names for paper; the people knew that a kind of paper or parchment could be made of plantain leaves, and, according to Montesinos, writing and books were common in the older times, that is to say, in ages long previous to the Incas. He explains how the art was lost." (Ancient America, p. 255.)

"Next came Huainaevi-Pishua, and during his reign was known the use of letters," (Ibid., p. 265) which agrees with the Nephite record again.

According to Montesinos, there were three distinct periods in the history of Peru. First, there was a period which began with the origin of civilization and lasted until the first or second century of the Christian era. Second, there was a period of disintegration, decline, and disorder, introduced by successful invasions from the east and southeast, during which the country was broken up into small states, and many of the arts of civilization were lost; this period lasted more than a thousand years. Third and last, came the period of the Incas, who revived civilization and restored the empire.—Ancient America, p. 264.

It is now agreed that the Peruvian antiquities represent two distinct periods in the ancient history of the country, one being much older than the other. . . . Cuzco of the Incas appears to have occupied the site of a ruined city of the older period.—Ibid., p. 226.

Montesinos supposes the name of Cuzco was derived from Cosca, a Peruvian word signifying to level, or from heaps of earth called coscos, which abounded there. In his account of the previous times there is mention that an old city built there was in ruins. Perhaps the first Inca found on its site nothing but coscos, or heaps of ruins.—Ibid., p. 227.

Manco-Capac III, the sixteenth sovereign of the line, is supposed to have reigned at the beginning of the Christian era, and in his time "Peru had reached her greatest elevation and extension."—Ibid., p. 266.

Montesinos tells us that in the reign of Pachacuti VI, the sixty-second Peruvian Amauta, who reigned about the time of Christ, there came from the Andes, as well as from Brazil and the north, large hordes of fierce people, who waged wars of long duration. During these wars the ancient or "megalithic" civilization that had existed up to that time was destroyed.—National Geographic Magazine, February, 1915, p. 173.

Thus races or nations have arisen like waves and disappeared again, leaving no trace of themselves but ruins and tradition. Those whom we call aborigines are perhaps but the conquerors of former civilized races that preceded them; conquerors and conquered are forgotten in a common oblivion, and the names of both have passed from the memory of man. The megalithic era in Peru then must have passed away in the early centuries of the Christian era and left men to wonder who they were. But—the uniform and constant report of Peruvian tradition places the beginning of this old civilization in the valley of Cuzco, near Lake Titicaca there appeared the first civilizers and the first civilized communities.—Ancient America, p. 236.

Montesinos gives a list of sixty-four sovereigns who reigned in the first period. The first was Puhua Manco, or Ayar-Uchu-Topa, the youngest of the four brothers. . . . Next came Huainaevi-Pishua, and "during his reign was known the use of letters."—Ibid., pp. 264, 265.

Here we see that the old megalithic or first civilized people of Peru, had the use of letters, which is in harmony with the Nephite record again.

Balboa gives the names of the four Peruvian brothers as Manco, Caha, Auca, and Ucha. (Myths of the New World, p. 212.)

Rivero and Tochudi in Peruvian Antiquities tell us Peru was populated about five hundred years after the deluge. Its first inhabitants flowed in abundance toward the valley of Cuzco, conducted by four brothers, Ayar-Manco-Topa, Ayar-Pichu-Topa, Ayar-Ancha-Topa, Ayar-Caha-Topa, who were accompanied by their wives, named Mama-Cora, Hipa-Hancum, Mama-Huacum, and Pilca-Huacum, the younger of the brothers according to tradition, was at the same time skillful and handy.—Ibid., p. 52. (Ayar means chief, and Mama mother.)

In South America we also find accounts which attribute the origin of the people, or at least that of their civilization, to strangers. The Peruvians attribute their progress to Manco-Capac, and to the beautiful Mama Oello, his sister and his wife, who had crossed the sea to their country. (Prehistoric America, p. 527.)

The sun, the great luminary and parent of mankind, taking compassion on their degraded condition, sent two of his children, Manco Capac, and Mama Oello Huaco, to gather the natives into communities, and teach them the arts of civilized life. The celestial pair, brother and sister, husband and wife, advanced along the high plain in the neighborhood of Lake Titicaca to about the sixteenth degree south. They bore with them a golden wedge, and were directed to take up their residence on the spot where the sacred emblem should without effort sink into the ground. They proceeded accordingly but a short distance, as far as the valley of Cuzco, the spot indicated by the performance of the miracle, since there the wedge speedily sank into the earth and disappeared forever. Here the children of the Sun established their residence, and soon entered upon their beneficent mission among the rude inhabitants of the country; Manco Capac teaching the men the arts of agriculture, and Mama Oello initiating her own sex in the mysteries of weaving and spinning. The simple people lent a willing ear to the messengers of heaven, and, gathering together in considerable numbers, laid the foundations of the city of Cuzco.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, p. 31.

Legends relate that when Manco Capac and Mama Oello left the island of Titicaca the sun gave to them a golden branch and instructed them to walk on until the branch should sink into the earth. It was at Cuzco that the miracle took place, and the Incas, full of gratitude to their father, made it the capital of their dominions. (Prehistoric America, p. 410.)

He [Montesinos] discards the wonder stories told of Manco-Capac and Mama Oello, and gives the Peruvian nation a beginning which is, at least, not incredible. It was originated, he says, by a people led by four brothers, who settled in the valley of Cuzco, and developed civilization there in a very human way. The youngest of these brothers assumed supreme authority, and became the first of a long line of sovereigns.—Ancient America, p. 264.

Very ancient ruins showing remains of large and remarkable edifices, were seen near Huamanga and described by Cieca de Leon. The native traditions said this city was built by "bearded white men, who came there long before the time of the Incas, and established a settlement."—Atlantis, p. 393, and Ancient America, p. 243.

And it is said that the great Peruvian roads were built by "white, auburn haired, bearded men." (Atlantis, p. 394.)

Another legend speaks of certain white and bearded men, who, advancing from the shores of Lake Titicaca, established an ascendancy over the natives, and imparted to them the blessings of civilization.—Conquest of Peru, p. 32, vol. 1.

The story of the bearded white men finds its place in most of their legends.—Ibid., p. 5, note 11.

Hardly a nation on the continent but seems to have had some vague tradition of an origin from four brothers, to have at some time been led by four leaders or princes, or in some manner to have connected the appearance and action of four important personages with its earliest traditional history.—Myths of the New World, p. 94.

The ancient Peruvians appear, from numerous examples of hair found in their tombs, to have been an auburn-haired race.—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 187.

The Quichuas [of Peru]—this invading people—were originally a fair-skinned race, with blue eyes and light and even auburn hair.—Atlantis, p. 391.

The megalithic people were the ancestors of the modern Quichuas, or at least of the same stock.—National Geographic Magazine for May, 1916, p. 475.

Originally then, the Peruvians were of the white race. The uniform and constant report of Peruvian tradition places the beginning of the old, or first civilization in the valley of Cuzco, and with this primitive civilization is always connected four brothers, the youngest of which became the first of a long line of kings. Montesinos gives a list of sixty-four kings of the old empire leading back to Manco.

This Manco was the youngest of four brothers, and tradition says his colony crossed the sea, and in their journey going northward they passed lake Titicaca, and were directed by a sacred emblem. They were a white and bearded people advancing from the shores of Titicaca, and became the founders of the first city of Cuzco. The megalithic people we are told were the ancestors of the modern Quichuas (Peruvians), or of the same stock, and both races then must be descendents of this fourth brother, Manco's colony.

Strange too, but the Book of Mormon purports to give an abridged account of a primitive colony called Nephites and Lamanites who before Christ developed a civilization in that southern land, which account covers part of the era and regions outlined in the above concise statements. Can its people be the megalithic people? Are they the people who built the hanging gardens in upper Peru, in comparison of which Babylon's gardens built for, and to please a homesick wife and Babylonian queen, are but a "transient toy?" Did they build that Cuzco fortress which the Inca people credit to Satan, and before which men now take off their hats and exclaim "superhuman?" Were its people the builders of Ollantaytambo, where men now "put on their lens" and "look very carefully, to be sure," that there are joints in its structures, and thus decide whether these buildings grew up in one piece without joints, or were made by human hands? Did its people have a way of grinding those large eight ton blocks of stone so as to make perfect beveled joints like men do now in grinding little stoppers to fit into our bottles? Are they the folks who thought nothing of handling blocks of stone that weigh over fifteen tons without machinery, cranes or pulleys? Did its people drill those tunnels through mountains, miles long, in which they took water to irrigate land at a distance, and if so, what did they drill with, stone hammers, or their finger nails?

Did their masons put together those stones in the temple at Cuzco of which work it is said "all modern masonry whether executed in Europe or America is inferior when compared with the ancient capital of the Inca?" Are they the people who had "no equals" in stonecutting and fitting, though "knowing nothing of right angles, or a square," and without pulleys, or cranes, but did adjust in the walls and make perfect fits using single blocks of stones weighing from five, ten, fifteen, and some as much as twenty tons each, and they did it by that well-trained eye, and a stone hammer? Are they the builders of Machu Picchu? Did they do the fine work there with a "niggerhead" hammer? Or do those stone hammers represent that loose, poor fitting repair work which shows decadence? Did they succeed in doing what is the hardest to do in mechanical science, without tempered tools or machinery to do with? Is that abridgment a foretaste of the annals and doings of that megalithic people? Will it supply in part the desired information and give that race a name?

FAITH AND BELIEF

Some seem to be uneasy about the strong position maintained in HERALD for May 17, 1911, page 462, under subheading: Evolution of Faith, which position is concurred in and frequently voiced by others.

Two writers have recently entered complaint and demand that such "principles be renounced, or the scriptural evidence relied upon for proof be adduced." "If it can be supported by evidence that amounts to proof, let it be shown." Again they say, "It will be noticed that these good brethren make no attempt to sustain their position by a single quotation from any one of the three standard books of the church! And this is the way and only way the topic has been treated, so far as I know, since I came into the church in November, 1863." These good critics assume that we teach "that faith and belief are two distinct principles of the gospel," but so far they have quoted nothing that even infers that faith and belief are two distinct principles. We hold that a belief in the truth is the embryo, or undeveloped beginning of saving faith: simply this and nothing more.

If they will study the extracts they quote more carefully, and read anew the article referred to, without a doubt they will discover this error, and also discover that ample scriptural evidence has been adduced. But in the proper spirit, the spirit of love, they are still asking for "scriptural evidence."

All right. The books abound with proof that belief and faith are not always convertible terms. (James 2: 19, Matthew 8: 29, Mark 1: 24, 5: 7. Luke 4: 34, Acts 16: 17, 19: 15.) All these passages affirm that devils believe the truth, believe in God, believe in the sonship of Christ, believe in the divine commission of the apostles, believe that the gospel was the way of life. But nowhere in the word do we find an intimation of their saving faith.

As ministers of great experience our good critics must know it is no rare thing for people to be convinced against their wills. By force of argument under the power of the Spirit they are compelled to believe the gospel, but like the devils who believe, they have no saving faith. It may be urged that their belief is faith, but a dead faith, "like the body without the spirit." Very well. A dried-up mummy lacks more than half of being a man. Their inert belief lacks as much of being a saving faith as a dried-up fountain does of being a river. Faith is a living, vital, evolving force. Faith must be developed by adding to it all the Christian graces. (2 Peter 1: 5). Faith is composed of belief to which is added the Christian graces. Wicked men and devils may believe the gospel, or have a dead faith, just as you like, but there being no development it is a simple abortion.

Latent belief frequently exists in soil too poor to support Christian graces. Therefore latent belief may exist where faith can never be developed. But faith cannot be developed without the germ of belief to start from.

Virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity—this is the family of Christian graces who reside in the beautiful mansion of belief or faith. This is the home called faith. This is faith. No demon soul was ever big enough to possess such wealth. But wicked men or devils may possess the empty shell of belief where no such saintly occupants reside.

THE GIFT OF FAITH

It is true, modern dictionaries make no distinction between the terms faith and belief. It is probably true, also, that these authors never enjoyed the gift of faith which others have through obedience. To illustrate: Brother William Lewis tells of being called to administer to a child who was at the point of death. On his way he covenanted with God that if the child was healed he would do one certain thing. As he entered the room there rested upon him that assurance by which he knew that God had ratified the covenant, and that the child would be made whole. This was the gift of faith that supersedes belief. This was the added knowledge that made faith the instrument of power by which the child was healed. This was superior to belief. The term belief can give no intelligent expression of this and numerous other experiences of the same sort, because they have passed the limit of belief into "the assurance of things hoped for."

THERE IS A DIFFERENCE

Latter Day Saints prefer Paul's definition of faith rather than Webster's. "Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."—Hebrews 11: 1. We are asked for "scriptural evidence" that belief and faith are not always exchangeable terms. Here you have it again, good and strong. "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for." Hope is a compound word composed of belief to which has been added desire. We believe some things that we do not desire, in which cases belief does not amount to hope.

The following should help make this clear to all:

BELIEF

Wicked men and devils believe the gospel, but do not desire to obey it. They have no hope. They have no faith.

BELIEF-DESIRE: HOPE

Some believe the gospel and desire to obey it. They have hope. Faith is being developed.

FAITH, ASSURANCE, BELIEF-DESIRE: HOPE

Saints obey the gospel and secure the assurance of hope. "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

CITY MISSIONARY WORK

The problems that confront a city missionary are somewhat the same in all cities, except the large ones. I find that the work here is different than in the last place we were, which was a city of about forty thousand population. The city of Chicago is one of great distances. It covers over two hundred square miles of territory and our work takes us outside of that.

I want to tell you of the help that we have had by using a duplicator. Last summer we bought a Shapirigraph Duplicator for ten dollars. This machine was in the care of the missionary with the understanding that it was at the disposal of any of the branches, Sunday schools; Religios, Woman's Auxiliaries or quorum officers. Our purpose was to get our announcements of any special feature in any service or of special services. We were not disappointed in this, for at the first union sacrament service we had eleven out that were there because we had notified them. It took only a short time to run off the notices on the duplicator. We used postcards. For this work to be carried out with the greatest degree of success the most essential thing is to have your mailing list just as complete as possible. This list should be in three parts at least: One that will contain the names of all the members who are in active touch with the branch. One with all the names of those that are not in active touch with the branch; and the other that of the nonmembers. Care should be taken that there is some information on the last list in connection with each name as to who is the personal friend that got them interested in the work or as to how much interest they may have taken.

Some might ask as to the need of having more than one list. It is this: there are many notices that would be for the Saints alone as it would be of special interest to them and of no interest to the outsider.

At the present we are revising our mailing list so that it will be just as complete as it is possible to make it. I might mention that when President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire were to make us a visit that we had only a very short time to notify the Saints. In fact it was only the afternoon before they were to come that we received a message telling us that they would be here for a few hours Thursday evening. On Wednesday evening we mailed out nearly one hundred postcards and the result was very gratifying, as we had a comfortably filled house to greet them. It is true that some did not get them in time, but think of the number that did.

The greatest help, I think, will be in keeping the branch in closer touch with its members. Many of the indifferent ones will feel that the church is interested in them, and by such repeated efforts and the good news that they get through this means they will want to avail themselves of the church benefits.

When the New Year came it was possible for the branch presidents to send a personal greeting to each one, inviting them to come out, and asked if the officers might call and be of service to them. The secretary of the elders' quorum in this district was able to send out a statement to all members, together with a report of the president. As is known it is impossible for all the members of the quorum to be present at all the meetings, so in this way they will get a report as to what is going on.

I believe that if the great business concerns can use a duplicator of some kind with success, that a representative of the church can. We find that it saves time and that it is effective for much good. Many the time we hear some Saint remark, "Oh, I wish that I had known of such and such a special service." Now, this is just the way to keep the whole branch as well as the outsiders in touch with the important doings at the church. It means persistent effort.

We have an organization of all the priesthood in Chicago. They meet once a month. At these meetings we have papers on special subjects. An example of what we are doing will help. At present we are making a study along the line of comparative religion. There is much research work on the part of the one who writes the paper. If this paper was just read, no doubt we would get good out of it but how much of it could we remember? This is our plan. Each member has a cheap loose-leaf binder. Then we make enough copies of the paper on the duplicator so each member has one to keep and study and it is also a guide as to where he can get valuable information on the subject. There may be a number that will become missionaries, and our purpose is that they will go out equipped. We secured a very good binder at a special sale at eighteen cents. This plan we believe would be good for any branch, whether in the city or not. There are many ways that a duplicator can be used. If there are any that want to know more about them we shall be glad to help in any way we can.

PRAYER MEETINGS

Our experiences are varied and distinctive, each from the other, or should be, as no two personalities are alike. Each individual has his own individuality, and who would have it otherwise? In the new birth, or new creation, this individuality is retained, and finally, each overcomer is to receive "a white stone and in the white stone, a new name written, which no one knoweth saving he that receiveth it." (Revelation 2: 17.) It will be applicable no doubt to the individuality and experiences of the one receiving. No one else can fully comprehend these, save he who is our Head and knoweth all his children. We are very likely to want to measure each other's corn in our half bushel, or judge others' lives or experiences from the standpoint of our own, but we do not know all the constituents of even one person's life other than our own. We know in a general way, or may know the physical or spiritual needs of men and the provisions for them, but just what is meat in due season in a spiritual sense to each person, no one but God, who knows not only all pertaining to the environment of each individual, but the exact condition of the heart and mind, of the body and spirit, can tell.

We can be successful as ministers for him only in being directed by him. It matters not what part or office of the ministry we have. In Christ we have a great high priest, and our appeal must sometimes be past every other authority and name that is named, whether in heaven or on earth, direct to him. "Tis high to be a judge," but some are ready to assume it on the least provocation, in season or out of season.

If others' thoughts, experiences, testimonies, etc., written or oral, growing out of individual thought and experience, are not in our groove, we should not think it strange. It would to the mind of the writer be a strangely unnatural, or unspiritual thing if there were no distinctiveness in experiences, expressions, or testimonies of different individuals. There is great variety in the natural world. There is room for it in the spiritual realm, even in our testimonies, prayers, etc. They should fit or express the needs. They should not be stereotyped or imitative. There are a variety of gifts, and in these gifts there is room for the expression of experiences even of mourning ("weep o'er the erring one"); or of rejoicing if we are to rejoice with those who rejoice; of the exact truth if we are to rejoice in the truth. Not that any one should parade or exhibit trial and sorrow, but there is room for an overflow. There is room for a psalm, a hymn, or a spiritual song, i. e., one inspired by the Spirit. There is room for a doctrine. (Ephesians 5: 19; 1 Corinthians 14: 6, 26.)

No one has rejoiced more than the writer when some good point of doctrine in connection with experience has been stated from either the rostrum or the body of the spiritual assembly; the prayer and testimony service. We have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office. So, we being many, are one body in Christ, and all members one of another.

Having then gifts differing according to the favor that is given us (Romans 12: 4-6), let us act accordingly. There is room for exhortation (Romans 12: 8; Hebrews 3: 13); there is not room for an excess of anything. Long prayers or testimonies should not be the rule of anyone. One line of a hymn may contain a sermon to one who is attuned, but a long sermon as such, would be out of place in a Saints' meeting; the more so in a large meeting. A "tongue" by everyone at every meeting would be out of the question, or by the same person or persons weekly or semi-weekly without a break, would be an abnormality. Yet a long unknown tongue or prophecy, or exhortation, or testimony might be admissible at times, and the presiding officer should judge as to whether the one giving expression needs calling down or correction at the time. Others may judge within themselves only. The presiding officer of the meeting should be the judge of the government of the meeting, no matter how many judges or jurors are present in the body.

The Spirit of criticism may easily be too prevalent, and sensitive souls and the meeting be made to suffer. Encouragement to individuality within proper limits, including time limits, should be given. No one should make accusation or personal grievance his theme; it is evident, but the presiding officer knows this, and if he does not have sense or backbone to see it and act accordingly, either publicly at the time, or privately afterward, no one else has any right with the matter. What is everybody's business is nobody's business.

The care of a meeting should not be intrusted to those unable to handle it. If it is, the consequences should be suffered. We need more preventives all along the line, less of cure, or attempt at cure. Suppression of evil or false spirits is necessary at the time. Suppression of an individual in his individual- ity, ought not to be aimed at anywhere. But there are proper and responsible judges, and proper ways of dealing with any who are or may be out of order in God's house, which is a house of order, and no one of the priesthood need get out of order to keep order, or exceed his rights to keep others within their rights.

We have observed those in the body who in a way took it upon themselves to criticize one criticism by another. Then another would rise and perhaps rebuke the rebuker. Now a presiding officer who does not see these things, or allows a debating spirit to operate in a meeting, is not recognizing his responsibility or opportunity. He should attend the rebuking or criticising part himself, and run all the risk necessary for anyone to run along this line. I would much rather have my judges and critics before me than behind me and around me, and I believe others would. And by all means let the rebuking of a wrong Spirit be at the time, as the law provides and necessity would require. The presiding officers of any meeting should be carefully chosen and well sustained. The government of the meeting is in their hands, and should be so conceded, in the interest of all.

Affirmative expressions along doctrinal lines, in connection with, or based upon experience, should be in order. They are not necessarily out of order. Exhortation is not necessarily out of order, whether it is by a "thus saith the Spirit," or otherwise. There is room for it, but not in excess. "Let your moderation be known of all men," is and should be the rule. Experience, office, etc., should count something in the latitude given for expression. Anyone may receive a revelation or prophecy, but the government of officers must be by themselves, or those of higher authority, not those of lesser. It is a delight—or should be—to be subject to law and order. Those who attempt to set others in order should first be sure that they are in order. This is a safe rule to follow. The disciplining of members should as a rule be done under the direction of the presiding officer of the branch, but the government of a meeting belongs to those into whose hands it is given, and they have all authority over the meeting, to rule and regulate it.

The rule of one meeting as to length of testimony, need not be the rule of another. Attendance varies in the same branch. If all who are in attendance at any given meeting, seek earnestly to be led by the Spirit under the direction of the presiding officers, giving heed to them, no one will go far wrong in matter or manner, in time consumed or otherwise. In large branches there is a greater need for carefulness as to the use of time than in small ones. The expressions should be, and savor of, the individuality and experience of the individual, that he may be known as he is for what he is worth, or may be worth by his contributions from out of his depths of experience, in trial or suffering, or whatever it may be; of much prayer, study, etc., that nothing good may be lost by unwise suppression, or ruts and grooves of testimony only. There is room for variety in expression, and it is needed for the welding together of that which would otherwise fail to be incorporated into the life of the body and assimilated by it. If people will get out of the ruts of life, especially natural, worldly, selfish or self-centered life, they will not remain in ruts of expression. There will or should be something distinctive in the expressions even in testimony or Saints' meetings.

Freedom should be encouraged. License should not be. No one should feel bound by unreasonable or unjust restrictions or criticisms. "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

These are thoughts growing out of experience and reflection, and the writer will have to acknowledge to them by signing his name and holding himself accountable. He is aware that every thought that is expressed has to run a gauntlet and be subject to the fire of criticism, kindly or unkindly. The just and properly authorized critic will criticize constructively and kindly and do good, but more often by forewarning than by after rebuking or tearing to pieces. Correction is good in its place and when needful, but not all are qualified or authorized to administer it. Much must be left to God and the individual, in the operation of the perfect law. Those who have the Spirit to teach, may "teach, reprove, rebuke, exhort; be instant in season, who are out of season" (1 Timothy 4: 3, I. T.). To teach or rebuke without the Spirit is to be more anxious about God's work than God is about his own work. Affirmative expression is the main channel in Saints' meetings. The presiding officer should know how to take care of the negative, or attend to it when necessary. The veto power of the meeting is vested in him. This is aimed more at unwise suppression than unwise expression. Suppression of false spirits is called for, and is the right of those governing meetings. The proper ones can hardly be too wise in suppressing individuals and individuality. It is more likely to be those who are not the proper ones, who get out of place in this regard.

WAR-STRICKEN ENGLAND AND THE CHURCH

A journey across the Atlantic is perilous these days. Even the sea is more angry than is usual for the time of year, so the sailors say. American ships are the safest, but even on these there is much anxiety. On the sides of the ship are large-sized American flags painted, and at night great reflectors throw the light upon them. Then, on the mast at the stern is a large flag, and the light thrown upon it at night makes it very beautiful.

In crossing the Atlantic nearly a dozen times before, I hardly saw a life-preserver. But the first thing you now see in the stateroom is a life-preserver all ready for use. Then, the crew is instructed and drilled. Every man knows the boat he is to help lower, the rope he must pull, and all about it. In dangerous areas the lifeboats are kept swung out all ready for use. Besides the submarine dangers are hundreds of floating mines off the coast of England. One almost dreads the place where the Lusitania went down. Most any place in the sea seems safer than that particular spot.

The English Channel has to be swept as a woman sweeps her house. Two trawlers, pulling a net, generally go ahead of a ship, and then torpedo-boats and trawlers accompany on each side. At the mouth of the Thames it is said that a net reaches entirely across from shore to shore, and in the morning a gate is opened which is closed at night as a gate to a field on a farm.

On reaching England one sees many radical changes. No foreigner can land unless he has business that is unobjectionable, and, on landing, he must register at once with the police. No hotel will keep a man overnight without permission, and should one go to another location or town or city, he must get permission from the police. There is also much prohibited territory (where munition factories are located, etc.), and if a man is caught in said territory without an "Identity Book" (this contains his photograph and a fairly good history of his family for two generations, his business, etc.) he is liable to a fine of $125 and six months in prison.

In the cities the streets are darkened at night, and it means a fine for a householder to turn on light at night before curtains are drawn. A friend told me of a house in Liverpool where, in some manner, the light from the window was seen by a man on a boat on the river, and early next morning the police came and covered the window—to remain so until after the war.

Nearly a million women and girls in England are doing the work ordinarily done by the men. It is said that five thousand of the seven thousand motor omnibuses in London have women conductors. I did not ride on a train in England that did not have a woman ticket-taker. Hardly was a journey made that the train was not sidetracked at some place to let a Red Cross train pass. Wounded soldiers are everywhere. Oxford University is almost as silent as a cemetery, and one will see more wounded men on the street in a block than he will see of men in the university itself. Instead of nearly four thousand students, as in 1914, there are but few more than three hundred, and most of these are Rhodes Scholarship men.

In spite of all this pall of gloom that overshadows almost every home, people are hopeful, optimistic and prosperous. Everyone has work at good wages, and many spend their money hilariously. Theaters are crowded, as are various shops and cafes. I never heard a single one express a doubt as to the final outcome of the war. All know that they are in a life and death struggle, and people differ as much there as here in regard to how long the war will last.

But what about the church these days? Many in this country are pointing the finger of scorn at the church, and saying that it has failed in the most critical time of the world's history, and that Christianity has fallen, never to rise again. But is this true? It was to see with my own eyes, and learn from church workers and others the real condition of the church, that I spent the money necessary, and braved the perils of an ocean voyage, at this particular time.

It is not an idle thing to say that it is really worth a journey across the sea in these perilous times just to see and know to what heights the church, and the institutions it fosters, have risen in this time of world calamity and world need. Nearly every institution not fostered by the church is simply powerless in a time like this.

The writer of these lines is no enemy of fraternal organizations. Many of them are doing a world of good in many ways, and it is an honor to belong to some of them, yet the church is doing more in one week than they are doing in a year, if reports are true.

Visiting the magnificent temple of one of these orders, to which I myself belong, I asked the secretary what they are doing for the soldiers at home and at the front. He said: "We are excluding every German, and giving our members an identification card to carry with them." Just how this card will help them he did not say. This is not said to in any way belittle the fraternity, but to give the church the place it really deserves in this critical time.

But what about the church? you ask. What is it doing? Better ask what it is not doing. Like a great rock in a weary land, it is shielding and protecting thousands of stricken homes and ministering to the wants and needs of multiplied thousands of widows and orphans. Then, its work in the hospitals and for thousands of wounded soldiers is sublime. In the tremendous moral problems it, almost alone as yet, is grappling with and rescuing other thousands. Its ministries are legion.

I will take, for an illustration, a congregation whose minister is a personal friend, and to whose congregation it was my privilege to speak on three different occasions while in London. This congregation numbers four hundred fifty resident members, nearly every one of whom is a day laborer. But few even own their own homes. At present sixty of the men are at the front. Twenty-five others from the Bible school, but not members of the church, have gone. In this case eighty-five of the men connected with this congregation, either directly or indirectly, are on the battle fields of France. It is needless to say that this takes practically all of the men from eighteen to forty-one years of age, which is the military service age limit in England at present.

One would think they would almost be compelled to shut up the church and go out of business; but not so. They are supporting a good-sized orphanage at home, and endeavor to take care of their own sick and wounded, and often strangers as well. Then they have provided a "hut" (a temporary, movable, homelike building) at the front, where their own members, and others as well, can lounge and read, and, practically live, when not on duty.

This "hut" serves as a center where the boys can get little delicacies to eat, and where they can smoke, as nearly all men in England smoke. It can be moved from place to place. Here the soldiers have religious services, and such entertainments as can be provided at times. Here letters are received from the home folk and read. This whole thing is supported entirely by the congregation at home, and last year it cost about $100 per month. This is typical of hundreds and thousands of congregations, and some more well-to-do churches are doing even more.

Then, the hundreds of chaplains are as busy as human beings can possibly be. They are almost like ministering angels, and the boys love them. I understand the Church of England alone has more than sixteen hundred of these chaplains. I was talking to a young soldier Jew, and he said: "We all like the chaplains." Many are the messages of the dying poured into their ears, and many times the only word of comfort to the old father and mother at home comes through the chaplain.

But the above is only a glimpse of the many activities of the church, both at home and at the front. Were it not for the church this war would be a hundred times more sad. At the front the boys have a real fellowship, and at home the bereaved mingling to a young soldier Jew, and he said: "We all these days of sadness and woe.

If reports are true, in all the warring countries the church is being reborn. The stiff formalism is giving way to real activity and life. The church seems to realize for the first time—at least for generations—that its purpose is to serve.

Even the very atmosphere of church life has changed from that of a dozen years ago. One notices it on entering the church. There is a warmth of feeling that is noticeable. Fifteen years ago the people of England were as distinctly divided into two classes as it was possible for them to be. It was noticeable in the shops and stores. Now that is nearly all gone. The people are one people. They are being welded together through suffering and serving. Instead of Christianity failing, it is being reborn. The church will never be the same again. This war bids fair to be the salvation of Christianity. Instead of failing, the church is becoming a living reality.

In this land the church is the most powerful institution in existence. It is time this organization were rising up as one man and asserting itself against war. The greatest calamity that can befall a nation is war. It is the most dishonorable and monstrous crime against mankind. It covers the land with the graves of men, it pauperizes and makes homeless and desolate women and children. It feeds the wildest passions, sows the seeds of bitterness and hate, and eats away the very foundation of true civilization. The church is the only institution that can abolish war and enthrone the Prince of peace. America has entered the great world war to help abolish war.—James T. Nichols, in Christian Standard, May 19, 1917.

At the Independence Sanitarium in the treatment of wounds is the same antiseptic solution in use, which has been found to be the best known in the war in Europe. It is called Dakin's Solution and is a mixture of baking soda and chloride of lime.—The Jackson Examiner.

THE CAMPAIGN IN THE HOLY LAND

The great war is not far from Jerusalem. The British expeditionary force which captured El Arish and was reported as advancing in southern Palestine has not recently been mentioned in the announcements of the British war office, but it may safely be assumed that the army is within seventy-five miles of the Palestinian capital. The general direction of the advance leads to the belief that Jerusalem is the prime objective of the undertaking.

The capture of Jerusalem by the soldiers of Great Britain would be one of the most striking and memorable events of the war. It would be a visible indication of the end of the Ottoman empire, scarcely less impressive than the fall of Stamboul itself. It would mean the final restoration to Christendom of the holy city of Christianity.

The Turk has already lost Mecca and Medina, the two holiest cities of Islam. It is just and fitting that these places have passed into the keeping of the Arabs, for Mohammed was an Arab, the first Moslems were Arabs, and the great Mohammedan soldiers, scholars and statesmen of later centuries were mostly Arabs. Though professing Mohammedanism the Turks have been unsympathetic interlopers in Mecca as they have been in Jerusalem.

With the Hedjaz probably permanently freed from Turkish misrule the next step of logic and justice is the redemption of Palestine. In this work Great Britain is the agent of Christendom. The cradle of the Christian faith has too long been the property of a race that has earned the execration of the world.

Under Turkish rule the city of Jerusalem, despite the fact that it is held sacred by Mohammedans, Christians and Jews, has been a place of vileness. Filth, beggary and corruption are the memories retained by visitors from occidental lands.

Yet it is far from likely that sentimental or devotional reasons would move the British Government to undertake a twentieth century crusade. The motives behind the invasion of Palestine are practical. In the first place, a movement against Jerusalem is certain to harass the Ottomans, who would gladly give their entire attention to the ever growing Russo-British menace in Armenia, Persia and Mesopotamia. Certain parts of Palestine produce large food supplies which are of value to Turkey and her allies. Jerusalem is a military headquarters of importance. Lastly, the conquest of Palestine would permanently remove from Egypt the danger of Turkish invasion, and would free the British troops now held in Egypt for service elsewhere.

A battle beneath the gates of Jerusalem is, therefore, one of the possibilities of the not far distant future. And while the world will watch such a combat with an interest measured by its sentimental rather than by its practical value, it may be that the result will go far toward fixing the destiny of the Ottoman.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Word of Greeting from Our Honorary President

Dear Sisters of the Auxiliary: It was with some degree of diffidence that I consented to accept an office which is the outgrowth of an innovation in the customs of the Woman's Auxiliary. I was about to say "assumed the responsibility of the office," and it may be that some consider the office to be without any responsibility. If I had so considered it I should not have accepted it, for it is only because of my keen interest in the welfare of the women of our church that I have ever accepted office.

However, as one connected for years with the society and one who has seen it grow from a very modest position in the church to one of recognized importance, I have quite naturally formed some well-defined ideas of its work and its ideals. As I have said before, if the Woman's Auxiliary has not a distinct mission, there is no reason for its existence as an auxiliary to the church. In my judgment, the ideal which should constantly be held before the women of the church, (and the auxiliary should include all the women) is the elevation of the home—all homes, other homes as well as our own. It has never been my thought that in order to be a most desirable helpmeet to one's husband, or mother to one's family, a woman should limit her activities entirely to those within "the four walls" of her own home, as some have said; and I have always urged the dangers of deviating from the ideal of which I have spoken—the elevation of the home.

What is demanded is thoughtful, intelligent discrimination in a woman's activities. In the case of sisters who engage in work outside the home, let me once more urge that they never lose sight of the central fact that the home is the great unit of society, and fundamental to the social growth and betterment for which our church stands and must work. And we should carefully avoid any movement tending to disrupt the home, whether it be the subtle and dangerous doctrine of free love as advocated by some of the militant feminists, or the fact that women in their attempt to become more efficient home makers enter activities which in reality cause neglect of home and home duties.

Let me assure you, as I have done in the past, of my confidence in the women of the church. May they because of intelligent, prayerful service contribute in large measure toward the upbuilding of Zion. The condition of the world at the present time makes this imperative.

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 9, 1917.

Vice President's Report to Convention

To the General Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary Assembled; Greeting: As your vice president I have tried to fulfill the duties of that office as outlined in the constitution, acting as "associate of the president" and "in the absence of the president, perform the duties of that office" this last was made necessary because of the illness of the president for about two months.

I have attended all executive meetings and presided over two. Have acted on Year Book committee, program committee, and amendment committee. By vote of the executive committee have represented the association at the following reunions: Saint Louis, Missouri; Boone, Iowa; Council Bluffs, Iowa; and Logan, Iowa. In this capacity I represented the General Sunday school and Religio by their appointment. All expenses were met by reunion committees. It was upon the invitation of the different reunion committees that I attended the respective reunions as field worker.

Besides regular Sunday school and Religio work I arranged for work of particular interest to women in their capacity of home makers and mothers. The following is a brief outline of work presented, either in class work or lecture, education as a preparation for life; choosing a vocation; taking advantage of opportunities; home economics; classes for women wherein treatment of children's diseases, caring for fractures, preparing a sick room and the handling of the patient were demonstrated by registered nurses.

Classes were conducted for young girls and subjects of particular interest to them were presented, such as care of clothes; sewing; deportment; respect to parents and selfishness. Classes for parents of adolescent boys and girls were conducted, handling problems of that age and showing how they may be met.

We are indebted to the following brethren and sisters for the success of our reunion work: Bishop Albert Carmichael, Patriarch F. A. Smith, Elders Williams and Parker, Sister Sarah M. Rodger, superintendent of nurses of the Independence Sanitarium, Miss Hunt registered nurse, Miss Charlotte Dryden, teacher of home economics in Ames University, Mrs. Vida E. Smith, Mrs. Esther Kennedy; Mrs. Anna de Jong Smith, Miss Nora Parks, Mrs. Blanche Andrews, and others whose names I cannot recall but whose good work I shall not forget. I wish to publicly express my thanks for their cooperation which resulted in an exceptional interest in their work and an excellent attendance.

We found the women of the church anxious and more than willing to take up the new phases of women's work outlined in our Year Book. The classes presided over by those mentioned who were specialists in the particular line were crowded, many times, showing the vital interest women take in such subjects as effect the home, and how anxious our sisters are to become more efficient home makers and mothers.

By action of the executive committee I was given general charge of field work and was appointed with our general president and secretary in the appointing of district field workers, who were over the following districts: Spring River, Missouri; Minnesota; Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana; Northeastern Kansas; Wisconsin; Moline, Illinois; Nebraska; Alabama; North Western Kansas; Indiana; Florida; Little Sioux, Iowa; London, Canada; Chatham, Canada; Central Oklahoma and Nevada, Missouri. Many of those appointed have done excellent work; a few have not reported. We are pleased to inform you that through the efforts of our district field workers the following districts have been organized. Miss Louise Evans, organized the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Mrs. Letha Tilton organized the Central Oklahoma District; and Mrs. Maggie Badder the Chatham, Canada, District. We feel that this good work is indeed commendable.

The past year has shown a general awakening among our sisters. I feel that this is but a forerunner of the good things to be accomplished by concerted effort on our part.

Your sister in the work,

MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 24, 1917.

Opening of Our First Woman's Building

The formal opening of our woman's building in Independence took place April 26, 1917, and although the "rains fell and the floods descended," they failed to dampen the ardor of about one hundred and fifty men and women, and standing room was a premium. The rooms were decorated, quite appropriately, with flags, for the addresses by President Frederick M. Smith and Walter Wayne Smith, president of the stake, were on "Women's attitude toward the present war." President Smith talked along the line of the "spiritual aspect" and Brother Walter on the "economic aspect."

Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, chairman of the building committee, presided, the grand hymn of thanksgiving—"Praise God from whom all blessings flow"—opened the meeting, followed by prayer by Bishop McGuire. At the close of President Smith's remarks a trio of ladies sang "Forget-me-not," and at the close of the speech by our stake president questions were asked by those in the assembly and answered by the speakers of the day.

The first question was, "Should our young men volunteer or wait to be drafted?" President Smith answered, "It is a question every man must answer for himself. Shall I serve my country, and how best can I do it?"

Question: "Would it not be wise for us to take steps to forward the movement inaugurated by our president's wife, Mrs. Wilson and other foremost women of the country, looking to the conservation of the Nation's time and resources?"

Answer: "By all means; and Mrs. Wilson's list of economies might be improved upon by our women."

Question: "Shall we interest ourselves in the work of the Red Cross chapter in Independence, in making utilities for the war?"

President Smith answered "yes," and said further that the manager of the Sanitarium had come before the Presidency and joint council, asking their opinion on offering the use of the Sanitarium as a post hospital if needed in the war, and the joint council had approved the suggestion.

Question: "Should we be associated with the movement for conservation of food, and in raising and canning garden produce?"

This was answered in the affirmative by both of the brethren. Brother Walter W. Smith suggested that we should plant that which would fill the greatest need, and that without canning as much as possible. Announcement was made that the parent-teacher association would soon have a demonstration on economics of which the women might take advantage.

Question: "Should we join the classes conducted by the parent-teacher association, or take up similar work as an auxiliary?"

President Smith thought we should lead in all such matters, and educate our women on all questions of vital interest at the present time.

A motion was carried by the assembly that the local board of the Woman's Auxiliary be requested to appoint a food conservation committee to take up matters pertaining to economy.

Question: "Should we encourage our young men to enlist in the army when through our religious training we are opposed to the shedding of blood?"

President Smith replied that he knew of no body of people whose training would prevent their taking arms in defense of our country except the Quakers and Mennonites. As a church we have taken no action on the matter and it is a question each must answer for himself. Walter W. Smith made some pertinent remarks about the duty of a good red-blooded young man toward his country, and the loyalty of all to the Nation. The chairman introduced Mrs. Lula Sandy, our new general auxiliary president. Mrs. Sandy responding with a few well-chosen words.

Benediction was given by Bishop Siegfried.

As a result of the appointment of the food conservation committee, at the above meeting a most enthusiastic gathering met in the Stone Church last Thursday. Mrs. Louise Sheldon, chairman of the committee was presiding officer. Mr. E. A. Ikenberry, county agricultural agent, was the principal speaker. He talked on the characteristics of the soil and what the average garden needs as regards fertilizing. He told what vegetables to plant that would keep with little trouble and expense, such as potatoes, navy and lima beans, sweet potatoes, onions, carrots, parsnips, turnips, pumpkins, squash and cabbage, mentioning also the canned food that is most desirable in winter, such as corn, tomatoes, beans, peas, and greens, which have medicinal value. Drying of fruit and vegetables should be remembered. Thorough cultivation of all crops is of great importance.

The committee have arranged for a demonstration of food canning next Thursday at the church, by Miss Brown, who is a member of the high school faculty, and very competent along these lines. The work of the committee certainly shows efficiency. Captains have been appointed over the territory which is districted, and these appoint visitors, who call at every house, asking for cooperation in land, seeds or labor, to the end that every available foot of ground may be used to the best advantage.

Many of our women can take advantage of the offer of the Kansas City Star, which has arranged to give demonstrations on economical cooking, to avoid the high cost of living. These are held in the Star building.

Each local auxiliary in the stake plans to send three representatives, who will take notes and report back to the local everything of importance, so all may be benefited by the lectures.

Following is the substance of the pledge taken by the leading women of the Nation: "Mrs. Wilson, wife of the president, Mrs. Marshall, wife of vice president, and the wives of the members of the cabinet, have agreed to reduce their scale of living to the simplest possible form, in order to set an example to the women of the country to do their part in the movement for the conservation of the Nation's time and resources. The women of the highest official families have decided to omit the usual formal entertainment and calling, and to reduce to the minimum their social activities, so that they will be able to give more time and money to constructive preparedness and relief work. They have agreed to pledge themselves to buy inexpensive clothing, to serve simple food, and to watch and prevent all kinds of waste."

On April 12, 1917, they informally appealed to the women of the country to join them, not only as individuals but by organizing, that possible suffering later on may be prevented.

A Health Conference

The following article sent out by the children's bureau at Washington will be of especial interest to those of our people who are in the rural communities. A health conference! How good that sounds! An expert in child hygiene, a conscientious physician, an educator who knows the subject, all these are usually easily available. Men in such professions are eager to give their services to neighborhoods that are interested in raising the health standard of their children.

Let our women organize. Don't wait until a district superintendent is placed in your district. Organize yourselves into a working body. Tell us what your community is, if you have competent health advisors and let us help you plan a health conference. Do it in connection with the school in your neighborhood. Almost any teacher is glad to cooperate in such work. The rural mother needs especial help. Too often she is overworked. You must begin to create a sentiment against overwork, drudgery, and create a desire for healthy children and healthy mothers.

LYDIA THOMAS WIGHT.

Better Care for Rural Children

Why are there so many deaths among country babies and country mothers? And what should the Federal Government do about it? Miss Julia C. Lathrop in her fourth annual report as chief of the children's bureau describes its new rural studies of child and maternal welfare which combine a scientific inquiry with work of immediately practical value to the children of the neighborhoods visited, and suggests a constructive plan for the future.

The report gives many reasons for extending this rural work. First, the census bureau's figures show average infant mortality rates in the rural districts higher than the mortality rates found by the children's bureau in the more prosperous sections of the cities which it has studied.

Again, the census figures show a markedly high death rate among country women of child-bearing age for which a large number of preventable deaths from maternal causes appears to be responsible. It is estimated that more than 15,000 women die year by year in the United States from conditions incident to maternity, while the extent of unnecessary ill health is at present unknown. "The sickness or death of a mother inevitably lessens the chances of her baby for life and health, and it is plain that the question of maternal care in rural districts is of genuine public interest."

An argument for better care of rural childhood is based on the high percentage of physical defects among children in rural schools given in reports of State boards of health. Miss Lathrop concludes: "These comparisons are a strong indication that there is room for great permanent improvement in maternal and child welfare in rural districts. The day when all children shall be well born and well cared for is far ahead, but surely that day should dawn first for the country."

In connection with the bureau's rural studies a child hygiene expert holds a children's health conference to which parents bring their children for examination and advice about daily care (but not for medical diagnosis or treatment). Parents have shown great eagerness for this kind of help in the counties already visited, bringing their children often long distances, over bad roads, and even sacrificing farm work for their journey.

State and other local officials are urging the bureau to cooperate with them in similar studies and demonstrations in many States, and a number of rural units to extend this work are among the items for which the bureau asks a larger staff and appropriation. Miss Lathrop believes that such Federal studies, making plain the necessity and suggesting a method, are bound to lead toward adequate local provision for maternal and child welfare.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Independence Stake

Active in the pulpits of the stake outside of the center place last Sunday were Elders Evan Davis, F. M. Sheehy, A. H. Parsons, J. D. Shower, W. D. Bullard, E. T. Atwell and Joseph Luff. Brother Atwell and Brother George Adkins held forth at the same date, May 13, before an audience of about fifty eager listeners, in the East Bottoms. In that locality there has been, within the last few weeks, quite an awakening; seven or eight have been baptized lately and others are investigating.

At the Church of Christ the Saints have adopted the Saints' Hymnal. At the Stone Church the usually good interest is kept up in the young people's prayer meeting and the Sunday school, and last Sunday the total attendance was 824. In the beginner department there were 64; assembled in the basement, of primaries and juniors, were 223; seniors and intermediates in the upper room numbered 175; normal students, 45; adults, 157; teachers, 94; officers, 30; and visitors, 91.

The services throughout the day and evening were full of good instruction to both old and young, and the attendance was excellent, as usual.

At night the Saints were glad to hear once again our beloved Brother J. W. Rushton as he expounded the scriptures in his wonted manner of forceful diction and strong, logical argument. His words were based on the text in Hebrews 2:3: "For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

Pastor W. W. Smith's discourse in the morning was full of the spiritually awakening influence and power of the gospel. Besides refraining from evil-speaking, Sabbath-breaking, and criticisms unfavorable and harmful, we should, as Saints, be proficient in learning, devoted in soul, and given to studying all good books.

We notice by reading, the Saints are not the only units advocating study as an aid to efficiency. On May 14, at Fort Riley, in order to make the best soldiers possible, a great war measure was adopted, and three months of training with a study period was enforced. "Am I a soldier of the cross, a follower of the Lamb?"—we will sing to the end.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

A Branch Surprise

[The following are extracts from a personal letter to the associate editor, from W. A. Sinclair, of the Boston Branch. The Saints will be interested in his statements.—EDITORS.]

Last Thursday night we held a surprise party at the church. It was a surprise in the sense that nobody had any idea what was going to happen, except the priesthood, and they remained mum on the question.

There was a good houseful of members and nonmembers. A few items of business were transacted and then Brother Rich made quite a long speech, apparently aiming at nothing in particular and everything in general, but, like an eagle looking for its prey, when the psychological moment arrived he explained that there was a debt on the branch aside from the church debt and it was the desire of the priesthood to have this specified debt cleared up before our new missionary should arrive. Well, to make a long story short, they subscribed sufficient to clear up the debt and give us a little to continue the work on. There were a great many who were absent from the meeting who might like to assist in the movements, so we are sending out a letter to all members who were absent, asking them to assist. I think probably the scheme will give us enough ready money to move out more strenuously in the prosecution of the work.

We held the Sunday school and Religio convention at Attleboro, Massachusetts, Saturday and Sunday. It was a good convention, many good papers were read and enthusiasm engendered. The Attleboro church was taxed to its utmost to accommodate the visitors, and this, too, amid the downpour of rain which would ordinarily chill the ardor of less devoted worshippers. Many excellent papers were presented which should find place in our church papers for the edification of all. Whether this happens or not, we are going to try to get them to file with the library board that they might be preserved for future reference.

Brother Edward L. M. Traver was ordained to the office of elder at the morning meeting under the hands of U. W. Greene, J. D. Suttill, and George W. Robley. We elected him president of the branch and I believe he feels the importance of the position and will enlist his efforts to make his official labor a success. We are all behind him to give him the boost necessary to make him succeed.

Our ministerial conference is fast approaching. I wish you were here to take part. We hope to keep them alive to the issues and make competent workmen of all.

We expect our new missionary next Sunday and then preparation must be made for the summer campaign. This war has somewhat upset the even tenor of things. Many of our young men may be called to arms and this has somewhat upset their minds for the time being. We do not know just who the selective draft will reach, but hope that it will pass them by.

NORTHCOTE, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA,

March 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wrote you early this month when sending for my HERALDS, and do not want to encroach on your valuable space again so soon, but feel like sending you the inclosed cutting from Saturday, March 24, issue of the Argus, Melbourne's leading daily paper. This information evidently portrays the condition of the religious world as it exists at present and undoubtedly has existed for a long time past, and, coming from the pen of our leading commercial men, evidently has a deep meaning.

You can take it for what it is worth, and it may be interesting to many. The italics are mine. To me, it has only made the work we are engaged in shine clearer and more bright than ever, and we can sense to the fullest extent the words of the Master to the woman of Samaria and recorded in John 4:25: "The hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him."

With best wishes for the success of the HERALD, I remain,

Your brother in the gospel,

ALBERT H. FORD.

"CUMORAH," 47 Beaconsfield Parade.

One of the striking features in modern life is the way in which clergymen are coming forward to give voice to oracular utterances on controversial public questions. The ordinary preacher does not pursue this line, but each of the leading denominations has a few men who do so. Audiences hang upon their words; cheers and stamping, laughter and applause, greet their efforts. On every important public question they must give their oracle, and the crowd especially women—flow to hear them, and find inspiration in their words. This new phase of public life is, we believe, quite common in America, and is becoming common in Australia. Yet a clergyman is one of the last men one would expect to hear giving forth oracles of wisdom on vexed questions of the day. He is usually trained in a seminary. His reading on economics, on sociology, on history or politics, is generally meager and one-sided. He knows as little of these things as he knows of science. His reading of history has often a twist in it, because it has been arranged to suit his denominational bias. In fact, nothing more shocks the ordinary secular historian than the way in which High churchmen and Low churchmen manipulate history to suit themselves. It is the same with science or economics. A pastor is not as a rule fitted by his training for dealing with these questions, and he is wise therefore if he leaves them to men who are more conversant than he is with all their difficulties and more at home among all their problems.

A preacher also generally speaks under peculiar limitations. It is very difficult for him to speak "the truth and nothing but the truth"; while it is almost impossible for him to speak "the whole truth" as he himself sees it. He has to be in touch with what his denomination expects, and more especially with what his congregation demands. He must give back to his hearers the echo of their own thoughts; or, if he does not do so, some at least of his audience will try to make it warm for him. This is especially so of a "popular" preacher. His hearers, gathered from the four winds, are there to hear him say a certain kind of thing—and say it he must. Their coming, their pleasure, their applause, their afterglow—all depend upon his responding to their demand. In such circumstances he can hardly be a prophet or servant of truth, because he must please the crowd, who are really his masters. The prophets of Israel were all unpopular men, but the modern pulpit prophet must satisfy the men who "fill his hand." Samuel Taylor Coleridge was once asked about some teaching he was giving forth. His reply was that he was expressing the belief held by the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, of which church he claimed to be the only living member. Few preachers can be so daring as that. They feel that others besides themselves must be taken into account; and so, instinctively and sometimes almost unconsciously, they defer to the people they are supposed to lead. It may be said that all public men must do the same. The member of Parliament is under the thumb of his constituency and his party, just as the pastor is under the thumb of his congregation and his church. But not quite so much so, we imagine. The preacher, because his constituency is much smaller, is probably under a more irritating and a more drastic constraint than is the politician. If that be so—and most preachers will confess that it is so, and will complain that this petty tyranny is hindering the better class of young men from entering the ranks of the Christian ministry—then that is also a reason why it is inappropriate for a pastor to give utterances on public controversial questions. He has not been ordained to do that work, and any attempt to do it is made only the more difficult and the more futile by the peculiar relations involved in his ministerial position.

Another reason why he should leave public questions alone is that meddling in such questions does interfere with his priesthood. He is primarily a priest. His duty is mediatorial. He must approach God on behalf of men, and approach men on behalf of God. In the really serious things of life his help is indispensable. Why should he mar this work, and interfere with his influence, by trying to pose as a kind of politician who has failed to get into parliament? The audiences who hang on his words are not really worshipping God; they are only a crowd, having a crowd-sensation—the pleasure of a packed mass round a popular speaker. And besides pleasing the many, he may inadvertently anger the few. In both cases, whether with the many or the few, his priestly influence with them is gone. He is no longer the wise man whose touch can help or heal or check in the great troubles of the private life. He has ceased to be a priest, and has become a mere "spell-binder." And undoubtedly it is vanity, the microbe of the "caput tumescens" that leads preachers thus astray. Vanity is the besetting sin of some preachers. It is this love of hearing their own voices that makes them feel that no important question can be settled unless they say something. If they were humbler men they would stick more to their own business, and be content to leave others to do other work. In fact, had they a higher sense of dignity of their office, they would feel, like judges of the Supreme Court or other high officials, that they must not leave their great trust in order to wrangle in the forum.

It is hardly fair to blame the preachers only for this aberration from the path of duty. The people also are to blame. Were the preacher to confine himself to spiritual, religious, and ethical questions, trying to convince and convert sinners, trying to show the people God and God's salvation, the crowd would avoid him. For the crowd do not want religion; they want excitement, they want controversy, they want something to make them stamp and cheer and laugh, or to make them indignant and shout out "Shame!" When this kind of thing is coming they pack to hear it; when they know it will be absent they stay away. What is the poor preacher to do? He can get his crowd by selling his spiritual trust for "the mess of pottage"; and if he refuses to do this, he must do without his crowd and his "pottage." If the people were more loyal to their church and their ministry, to their services and their religion, then undoubtedly the preachers would be more loyal to their trust. It is to a great extent the unfaithfulness of the people that leads to the meretricious devices on the part of certain preachers. People and parson are so bound together that they must either progress or decay together. The church can move onward in spiritual things, but it always takes two to do it—people and priest. Or it can move back—and here again it takes two to do it. So-called popular preachers, with their stamping audiences and controversial public utterances, are a part of the decay of religion. But the blame is for the people as much as much as for the priest.

HOPEWELL, VIRGINIA, May 6, 1917.

Editors Herald: If an elder or any one capable of a debate will come here, I will provide a sleeping place and furnish my automobile to carry him or them; as I think in a territory like this there ought to be two go together. There has been a Union tent or two tents here now two or three weeks, and they have been preaching on the signs of the times, but haven't touched on the establishment of the true church as one of the signs of the second coming of Christ. One of their preachers said there was no difference between us and them. I told him if he didn't know any more than that he wasn't fit to preach. I would give a good deal to have a debate here and I believe it's the only way that this place will ever do any good, as I believe it is about as bad as any place can be—they even dance in the church. I don't know what to do as I have lost one half I had a year ago. I am now in my sixty-first year but have quite good health.

In gospel bonds,

WILLIAM C. CUMMINGS.

Des Moines, Iowa

The angel of death has made his call at the homes of a number of the Des Moines Saints during the early days of this month. Brother W. D. Hall died on May 2, the remains being taken to Shenandoah, Iowa, for interment. Brother John Tinker died at Malcolm, Iowa, on May 3. Elder D. T. Williams was called to attend the funeral of his sister in Illinois. Brother R. L. Brand died on May 10, after an illness of about seven months.

On April 18 Brother W. H. Wahl and Sisters Jessie Smith and Glendora Leach were baptized by Elder J. F. Mintun. On May 6 Sisters Glee and Margaret Goreham were baptized by Elder F. T. Mussell.

During the past month thirty letters of removal have reached us, sixteen of these from the Runnells Branch, and are ready for presentation at the next business session.

Two of our members—both sisters—have enlisted in the matrimonial ranks. Sister Mable Lane became Mrs. John Gresdal on Easter Sunday and Sister Orpha Emslie married Brother Ed Thomas of Independence, Missouri, on May 5. We look for the young brethren of Des Moines to even up the score in the near future.

An effort is being made to increase the circulation of the HERALD in this branch. We hope that those who are receiving sample copies will each immediately send in $1.50 for a year's subscription, as the reading of the church papers will increase the interest of the Saints in the work of the church, and incidentally make their attainment of celestial salvation more certain.

R. J. FARTHING, Correspondent.

CHAMPAIGN, ILLINOIS, May 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: A year ago last December my husband, small daughter and I moved to Champaign. There are no Saints here nor within miles of here that we can find, although we have advertised. No one seems to have heard of us except the Dunkard minister near here, and he is certainly making it sufficiently trying since, while he and a visiting evangelist called upon me in regard to some topics I had discussed with several of his members and prospective members.

I think at the time I made it perfectly plain that we were not Brighamites, but since then I have noticed a decided change in the atmosphere when I encounter one of the Dunkards.

We do, indeed, appreciate the value of the church meetings since we have left Flint, Michigan, where the branch has always been blessed so much by the Spirit, where my baby girl was blessed, my husband and myself baptized, and where he was ordained a teacher. We have been sorry so many times that we left there, for, while his position is a much better one, we realize that position and money are so much less than intercourse with the Saints and the privilege of hearing their testimonies and prayers.

The HERALD is a boon, indeed, in our isolation, and so often I am blessed wonderfully by God's Spirit in reading it, especially the letters. No one can know how anxiously we look for word from Flint, nor how disappointed we are to find nothing, unless one is similarly situated.

We have a baby boy to be blessed now, and as soon as he is old enough we are going to Chicago to have him blessed by Brother David Dowker. He baptized me and, of course, holds an especial place in our hearts.

Any time a brother or missionary can reach Champaign he will find a warm welcome waiting him here; and a card a day or two before will find some one waiting at the station.

Wishing you a Godspeed, I am,

118 East Garwood.

MRS. L. E. DOLLINGER.

MARION, ILLINOIS, May 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: The postman has just arrived with this good and long-wished-for paper. After looking through its pages and seeing so many good letters from the dear Latter Day Saints, I feel that I owe a few words to the SAINTS' HERALD.

Sometimes I feel that I am very weak in the faith, and when I pause to think a moment of the many, many blessings that God has bestowed upon me, I quickly resist evil thoughts and earnestly pray that I may never grow weak in the one latter-day faith. I have never regretted the step that I have taken. I realize more and more every day that it is the true and only path that leads to eternal life. I earnestly ask the interest of the prayers of the Saints that I may be blessed and so live to raise my two little girls up in the one faith, to love God and to be a shining light before the world.

Your sister in the faith,

DAISY CASEY.

FLAT TOP, COLORADO, May 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: Through the kindness of Brother and Sister Buschow of Denver, Colorado, who made the trip to General Conference in their auto, my husband and myself were permitted to attend. Brother Ammon White also accompanied them, and to say it was an enjoyable trip states it mildly.

We saw beautiful country in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, and parts of Kansas were very inviting-looking, crops being well advanced and all nature looking beautiful. Surely those are favored regions. Western Kansas had just had wonderful rains which promised much for future crops, but certainly did not improve motoring—a driver nearly needing a pair of oars at times. Had we been blessed only with an ordinary car, or ordinary driver at the wheel, we should certainly have been in western Kansas until now. But the car, an eighty-horse power, seemed to be able to go on almost any kind of roads or through them; and with Brother Buschow's careful driving the car traveled all the time right side up, even though it side-stepped occasionally.

Altogether, the whole trip was a beautiful experience. So seldom does a missionary's wife get to attend General Conference, at least from such a distance, that the kindness of these dear Saints to me seems a wonderful thing, and will never be forgotten.

We were glad to get our old missionary force back this year, but would have been grateful for a few more. The work in all the district, with the exception of one or two places, is in good condition. Brother James Kelley's labors here have been much appreciated and have done much good. We sincerely hope God will bless him with improved health. Many are writing for preaching where the gospel never has been preached—so many more calls than can be filled—calls for activity on the part of all laborers in the district, whether local or general.

Much anxiety on account of war conditions acts as an inducement for all to farm all the land they can. Heavy snows May 4 give us moisture enough for the present.

Ever praying for Zion,

MRS. J. R. SUTTON.

Once upon a time Queen Victoria called a young girl, whose beautiful voice had charmed her, to the queen's box, saying, "I understand that you are half American and half English."

"Thank you for the compliment you pay me," said the girl, "but the truth is I am all American."

That's the stuff!

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT BISHOP'S AGENT, SOUTHWESTERN TEXAS DISTRICT

Owing to the transfer of Brother D. S. Palmer to another field it becomes necessary to appoint another agent to succeed him. Brother H. H. Davenport, of San Antonio, Texas, will act in this capacity. We sincerely trust the Saints of the southwestern Texas District will honor Brother Davenport in his newly appointed labors and as the Lord has blessed them that they will feel to impart of their substance for the onward progress of his work.

We are living in the hastening time, and if there ever was a time when we should give serious consideration to our obligations to God along temporal lines, it is now.

We appreciate the labor which has been performed by Brother Palmer during his term of office and wish him abundant success in his new field of endeavor.

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

The meeting will be in First Church, Saint Joseph, Missouri. It will be a short convention, but an important one, as officers must be chosen to serve a large stake comprising sixteen counties. Please send delegates. G. R. Wells, General Superintendent.

The Sunday schools and Religios of Lamoni Stake together with the Woman's Auxiliary will meet in joint convention at Evergreen, Iowa, Thursday evening June 7 and Friday evening June 8. No day sessions will be held, but all are urged to attend these evening sessions for which interesting programs are being arranged. While this is primarily an institute convention, all locals and schools should be represented by properly elected delegates so that in case any business should need attention we will be prepared to handle it. Send all delegate credentials for both Sunday schools and Religios to the undersigned, who has been appointed chairman of the credential committee. Mrs. Blanche Carpenter, secretary Religio, Lamoni, Iowa.

Reunion Notices

Eastern Reunion Association, July 21 to August 5 inclusive, at their private grounds, Onset, Massachusetts. About four acres have been cleared of timber for the athletic field, and every young person in the district requested to plan his vacation for the above date. Notice for tents, board and other accommodations will be given later. M. C. Fisher, 7 Miner Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.

Minnesota District, June 16 to 24, at Frazee, Minnesota. Those wishing accommodations write P. W. Martin or M. L. Jenson, Frazee, Minnesota.

Addresses

R. D. Weaver, Lock Box 196, Chatham, Ontario, Canada. James A. Gillen, 20 Oak Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa. W. E. Peak, mission address, Matherville, Illinois.

Of Interest to Traveling Salesmen

The Latter Day Saint Traveling Salesmen's Association is a new organization formed at the late General Conference. Our object is to coordinate and unify the church forces engaged as traveling salesmen, and make ourselves more efficient in the commercial world and in the promotion of church interests. We shall be very glad to have every member of the church so engaged to be one with us; for we believe that the possibilities for doing a good work are unlimited. Anyone interested in this movement write Clarence Skinner, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

To the Camera Club

As the amateur photographers of the church have been of real service to the church publications, I think the HERALD is inclined to give us a little space occasionally.

Do you know what action hydroquinone has in the developer? And what does metol do? Why are H. and M. combined? Do you know how to get black or warm tones in your prints and lantern slides? Do you know how to get either detail or contrast? Do you know in what order photographic chemicals should be mixed?

I think we should work intelligently. All the above and many other questions are answered in the Photo Miniature, No. 149, which treats on "photographic chemistry." Sold at supply houses, 25 cents.

If you are not a member of the club, join—doesn't cost anything, there are no dues.

I don't know who will have charge of the club this year but I shall take an interest in it, as I think it has its work to do in the church.

Albert Knowlton, 1419 Kensington Street, Independence, Missouri, is the secretary and he will enroll you. Give make and size of camera, lens, etc. Inclose stamp for reply.

Married

SNIVELY-WRIGHT.—On Sunday afternoon at 2.30, May 13, at Burlington, Iowa, Elder H. N. Snively, of Lamoni, and Sister M. S. Wright, of Burlington, were united in marriage by Elder D. J. Williams. The home was nicely arranged for the occasion and several relatives and friends were present, enjoying a three-course dinner after the ceremony. Brother Snively has been a successful farmer near Lamoni and Sister Wright was a practical nurse at Burlington, where they expect to make their home. Their many friends, no doubt, will be surprised, but wish them success and happiness.

ROOT-ROWE.—At the home of Brother and Sister H. B. Root, of Fallbrook, California, parents of the bridegroom, Brother Ralph W. Root and Miss Henrietta B. Rowe were united in marriage, May 6, 1917, Elder G. E. Harrington officiating. Pretty floral decorations of California's lovely flowers adorned the room in which the marriage took place. The bride looked sweet and becomingly attired; the groom very happy. The young couple took their departure the following day to make their home in Oregon, not a great distance from Myrtle Point.

Our Departed Ones

SIMPSON.—James Simpson was born January 12, 1843, in Maine. Married Miss Lovina Boren in 1867. Baptized in Minnesota in 1901 by A. V. Closson. Died at Fremont, Nebraska, May 4, 1917, leaving his wife, the only relative, to mourn. Funeral sermon by Hubert Case.

BLUM.—John Blum was born at Begingin, Switzerland; baptized in 1903. He lived a faithful, consistent Christian life. Died suddenly at Oakland, California, May 4, 1917, aged 68 years. Leaves to mourn, his wife and quite a large family and many friends. Funeral at East Oakland; sermon by H. J. Davison.

BONINE.—Elizabeth J. Bonine was born March 14, 1846, in Kentucky. Baptized February 27, 1880, at Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, by J. W. Sykes. Died December 22, 1916, the Alma Branch. She was always faithful to her trust, valiant in testimony, and always ready to do her part. Died at the home of her son-in-law, near Richmond, May 6, 1917. Funeral at the Saints' church in charge of W. G. Haman. Sermon by L. F. Ferguson to a large congregation.

LAYLAND.—Susan Emmons was born December 28, 1831, at Coshocton, Coshocton County, Ohio. Married Jordan Layland in 1853. To this union were born 5 sons and 3 daughters, of whom 3 sons are living: Elder A. J. Layland, of Cokeville, Wyoming, C. A. and J. E. Layland, of Independence, Missouri. Baptized April 16, 1882, at Little Blue, Jackson County, Missouri, by J. W. Sykes. Died December 22, 1916, at Independence, Missouri. Funeral sermon by J. T. Curtis, assisted by Hosea Sterrett.

SKINNER.—Mrs. Rosamond J. Skinner was born in Kentucky April 10, 1841. Married John M. Skinner March 19, 1868. They removed to Missouri the same year, and in 1900 located near Lone Rock Branch. She was a member of the Baptist Church from her youth. Died May 5, 1917, at Lamoni, Iowa. Survived by a son and a daughter, the latter being Sister Frank P. Hitchcock, of Kansas City. Funeral sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by R. S. Salyards; prayer at the grave by L. G. Holloway. Burial in cemetery near Lone Rock.

PEARSON.—Nellie A. Pearson was born March 24, 1881, near Joy, Illinois. Married Dale S. Holmes, March 30, 1902, and to this union were born 3 children. Died April 19, 1917. Leaves to mourn her departure, 3 children, husband, father, mother, 3 brothers, and a host of friends, not as those who have no hope, but because of separation. The sacred ties which bind husband and wife, mother and child, and friends, are parted for a season. She was a faithful Christian, active in the service of the Master. Funeral from Buffalo Prairie Branch, of which she was a member, in charge of J. W. Bean. Sermon by C. E. Willey.

LOCKLING.—Cynthia Lockling, daughter of Artemus and Thursa Lockling, was born January 27, 1830, at Lyndon,

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

The General Conference has taken action favoring the use of the individual communion service, and to supply the demands of those branches which desire to install it, the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, has secured the agency for the famous Thomas Individual Communion Service. Over thirty thousand churches are using and indorsing this company's product and we can cheerfully commend it to our people.

Correspond with the Herald Office if in need of anything in equipment for communion service, and illustrated price lists will be promptly supplied.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

COMPULSORY CONSECRATION

A decided effort is being made to secure the Liberty Loan. In most of the advertisements the call is for two billion dollars, though the total authorized was seven billion. An effort is being made to have it subscribed as widely as possible, so as not to upset ordinary business conditions. Governor Harding, of Iowa, has proclaimed the week of May 27 to June 2 as Liberty Loan week. Other agencies are also pushing this matter energetically.

Another sign of the times is indicated by a referendum ballot sent by Equity to the members of the various economic and sociological societies of the United States. This ballot raises directly the question, Should the special taxes for the war be met now or deferred through a bond issue? Second, If met now, should they be paid by special taxes on business or by excess profit and income tax? If the latter, should it be practically to the exclusion of stamp taxes? Also, should the net income be limited in amount so that all above a certain amount, as fifty or one hundred thousand dollars a year, should be appropriated?

The ballot and the discussion of the question recognized that a married man should have a larger exemption than a single man, unless his consort is independent. An allowance should also be made for dependent children. This being considered, should not the exemption be placed comparatively low? Young men are conscripted as most fit and able to bear the physical burdens of the war. Should not large incomes be likewise conscripted and for like reasons?

Congress probably will not now take so radical a step but undoubtedly there is a strong tendency, extending through the last ten or fifteen years, to recognize the responsibility of every man to society to a greater extent than heretofore, so that we become workers together, cooperators rather than competitors. The duty of society is recognized in the many laws, like mothers' pensions, employers' liability, sanitation, industrial commission, public utility commission, bureaus of labor, factory regulations, sick and old age benefits, children's playgrounds, and many other like communal activities, recognizing that the Government, as representing the community, has both an interest and a duty.

Honesty is emphasized not as the best policy, but as the only intelligent business policy. Cooperative organizations have increased, with a frank discussion of business problems and business needs, and there is a growing recognition of the fact that the middleman has a social duty to perform to supply the needs of the community, not simply to run a store, large or small for his personal benefit. This idea is being emphasized to the end that the individual may receive the largest possible development, but that development to be used socially.

There is much more that can be said concerning this general tendency. It is by no means as yet universal or general. But there is a growing recognition of what we have been pleased to call the principles of equality and cooperative service.

The call for registration day is coupled with the request to make it a kind of consecration. One of the leading psychologists of the country emphasizes the necessity of this aspect of the problem. There can be no victory until there comes a deep religious revival, a real devoted purpose for righteousness.

Consecration is essential, if we are to win the victory over wrong, the evils in our social system and in ourselves. Consecration is essential to the accomplishment of any great work, including the important problem now confronting much of the world.

Many years ago the law was laid down governing surplus property or excess profits. The rich were directed to consecrate of their means. This has not been carried out. But in recent years it may be observed more and more in the principle of the income tax in this country and abroad. It is urged, and doubtless with much truth, that the taking of excess profits, the prevention of anyone's making a profit from war, will be a very powerful incentive against and towards peace.

But deeper than that is the recognition that the man of ability should work for the upbuilding of the social life and not simply for personal gain. If this is not done voluntarily, it appears a time is approaching when it will be done by law. Nor is there disclosed in this any desire or ambition to deprive the well-to-do of their property, or to reduce their income to a very small maximum. There is rather a tendency to allow liberal provision.

Experience is showing that in the hour of need these men, many of them at least, willingly give of time and talent. Experience has shown that these men of ability will work for the common cause for much less than they will work for private profit. This has been seen in many cases in the ministry of the church. It is also to be noted in very many instances in the political world, that men will work for less for the common good than for a private corporation or partnership. Though it is not as general as it should be.

Yet it is interesting to note that no minimum yet suggested has been placed so low in this country as to prevent an actual carrying out of the law upon our part. We are part of the Government, we are citizens of the country, and naturally take part in its life. Yet the tax, even the most drastic proposed, leaves a sufficient leeway to do our duty. The maximum income has not been placed so low, either by law or suggestion, to prevent, as yet, a liberal margin for personal activity and personal action in obedience to the law of God, so often declared.

We are placed in a position where economy is becoming compulsory, the cutting out of unnecessary wants. Yet it is still in that stage that many of us can, if we will, meet our necessary expenses, and still, by the practice of the elimination of waste and the spirit of sacrifice and devotion, do much as a body towards the payment of the church debt and expenses.

We have, as citizens, also our duty to the Government. This is one way, at least, in which we may assist, and it is a method to which there can be no possible objection—simple and right living.

What shall be our personal contribution is a personal question, but it is of the deepest significance, how that which has been declared as revelation to the church is, step by step, being carried out in principle by the passage of time.

We have heard of many attempts by various organizations of the Woman's Auxiliary meeting to discuss and consider household economy, which may include not only food, but also clothing, heat and light. We have not yet heard of very many organizations of the men having a like purpose in view.

Though it is evidently an obligation resting upon all of us, and it is an obligation to prepare for what will confront us when the war is over.

The real answer, so far as we are concerned as a church, is, after all, spiritual—our attitude towards our fellow men and society in general. It involves, also, our attitude towards God and our concept of service and of duty. If we move forward and do our duty in this, if we read the books of the church rightly, the promise is sure that in the hour of deeper trouble He will be with us and protect us as a people.

We should be prepared, not only to bear our share of the burden, but also prepared for the more aggressive work that will be possible during the period of reconstruction. While in the meantime we may make every evident progress toward the establishment of Zion.

S. A. B.

THE MISSIONARY LIST--NOT A CHARITY LIST

Those who attended the late General Conference will appreciate at once the emphasis laid upon this feature. Men should not be carried among the General Conference appointees for the sake of charity. If they need care, they should be taken care of otherwise. The men we send out should be prepared to represent the work successfully. This is merely common sense and reason. We have provision rightly made to take care of those in need, who are unable to work.

The releasing of a man from the missionary list may be a means for adjustment. It should prove so. He should try, and those associated with him should try, to help him to find his real work. A man may be a poor missionary, yet a good local officer. He may even be a poor elder. He may be a poor preacher, yet a good business man. He should find his work and do it.

The missionary list is for men who are well qualified to represent the church. We need more capable young men and the means to send them out. We need also the experience which years can bring.

But in another sense it should not be a charity list. The church wants every man on the list to be worth much more than the amount allowed. A man who is not worth more is not worth anything as a missionary. We have suggested once that the allowance made is no fair criterion. The man who gives his best should be respected by all.

It is really a disgrace to the church the way the missionary has been expected at times to beg for means. Some have done it; many, we are glad to say, have not. And there has been another unfortunate aspect of this charity basis. People feel that they are doing charity in helping the missionary, and if it is helping the poor, this is all too often the case.

But many expect something in return for the gift. It has been our duty at times, to sit upon an elders' court with one or more missionaries and to hear the remark made concerning the defendant: "Oh, what do they want to bring him up for? He's all right. Why he gave me $10 last week." The real issues of the case were beclouded by that fact. It is a pity.

We were also present at reunions where the missionaries were expected to beg from children as well as from adults, for a small pittance, and it was made a matter of humor. We do not question but what the intention was good and yet it seemed to the editor to bring an unnecessary reflection upon their work in the minds of the children and others. There should be a dignity in our work which should be maintained at all times.

The missionary list is not charity. These are the effective working men of the firing line. They are expected to be worth much more than they receive, directly and indirectly. Their families receive a minimum. They receive no salary.

When the local pastor asks them to speak, they are made practically dependent upon your gifts, which should not be considered or treated as charity. Many of our local men go out for years and willingly pay their own car fare. Many of our missionaries would willingly do so, but cannot. And it means a strain if the expense is thrown back upon the family exchequer. Sometimes we need to be reminded of this, for while our love goes out to the brethren and we are enjoying so much his discourse, we forget his physical necessity.

We have seen times when our missionaries have been expected to get up and beg for money in a half humorous way, not simply neglect, but that people wanted some fun for their money. We have seen money thrown at a missionary with the evident expectation that he would grab it like a hungry dog would a bone. Yet these men are worthy of honor or should be released.

We should be workers together with God and with each other. The man who contributed of his means is assisting in the onward progress of the work as well as the man engaged in the mission field, in pastoral work, or in the institutional work of the church.

Therefore let every man learn his duty. The work is intrusted to all. Its success depends upon all of us. May then the Father of all give us wisdom to use wisely the means placed in our hands as individuals and as a church, and to employ with discretion the talents and the men who have consecrated and are consecrating their services to the body.

S. A. B.

The easiest thing of all is to deceive one's self; for what a man wishes, he generally believes to be true.—Demosthenes.

FAITH AND BELIEF

In this issue of the HERALD there is a reply by Brother J. R. Lambert to an article upon this topic. We have a few other articles bearing upon this same topic, but unless some good reason arises, the discussion will end with this issue, as both sides have had abundant opportunity to present their views.

It should be quite evident to anyone that no two words are exactly identical. So each of these words may be used in circumstances in which the other would not be a fair substitute. But the immediate question before us is in regard to the principles of the gospel. It is more than merely a verbal discussion.

Words from their derivation, which is often sensory, are but poorly adapted to express exactly all abstract thoughts. So an approximation is attempted so far as language or words can express thought. In the present case it would seem to be clear that there are different degrees of faith or belief, but that there is only the one principle of the gospel to be understood by these terms.

The confusion with some arises from a failure to distinguish between the etymological question involved, and what is quite different, the ideas or principles we are trying to express. S. A. B.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Experience Number of the "Ensign"

The Zion's Ensign is asking for the written experiences of Saints who have come into the church under peculiar circumstances. "One hundred words is better than a thousand," is one of the ways they have of asking for condensed statements. The number is announced for early issue.

Graceland Commencement Address

The commencement address to the Graceland graduating class this year will be delivered by our Associate Editor, S. A. Burgess. His subject will be "War a test of character." President Smith has been advertised to speak, but he is detained in the West.

Mormon Temple in Hawaii

The HERALD is in receipt of a copy of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser containing two cuts of the Mormon temple at Laie. It appears from this to follow the Aztec style of architecture. An attempt has been made to adapt its exterior and interior to the conditions and scenery of the Islands. The decorations should prove of some interest when the public is permitted to inspect the temple just before its dedication. The actual ceremonies, however, so far as indicated, remind one of the Pagan mysteries and the Eleusinian rites.

An Attractive Handbill

Elders R. L. Fulk and P. R. Burton have had a halftone cut made of their "Two Ways" chart and it is featured on handbills which advertise their meetings. It is possible to read most of the inscriptions shown on the chart and the pictures are fairly good. We advise our people to have pictures taken for such work by experts in this business, for they only can bring out the detail so necessary to effectiveness.

A National Disgrace

It is a national disgrace, the way in which our splendid forests have been sacrificed, while Europe has preserved many of its great forests for ages. It is an equal, if not a greater shame to note how many shade trees through the cities have been damaged, deliberately wounded on one side. Small saplings just set out will be cut with a pen knife and bear this wound through life. It is a disgrace to civilization, for paganism took better care of its trees.

"Unity" for the Priesthood

Lest it has been overlooked by some of our readers, we again call attention to this journal for the priesthood under the joint editorship of President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire. All ordained men should have this publication, which will be issued monthly from Independence, Missouri. The price is twenty-five cents a year and remittances should be sent to the Ensign Publishing House or to this office if more convenient.

Registration and Exemption

We note according to the Chicago Herald that every young man of twenty-one to thirty years of age inclusive, must register, except those already in the military or naval service of the United States. No rules have yet been made in regard to exemption, and such will not be announced until after September 1. Even convicts and alien enemies are advised to register. Provision will later be made for boards to pass upon proper exemption. This is stated on the authority of Provost Marshal General E. H. Crowder, for the Secretary of War.

New York Emerges

We are glad to chronicle the recent action of the New York Legislature whereby the people of the State outside of New York City are given the privilege of voting for prohibition. Under the newly enacted law one fourth of the voters of any city in the State may vote on propositions at a special election which will establish real prohibition. It is suggested by those in touch with the situation that as many as twenty-five of the larger cities will more than likely take such action within a year. The principal credit is due the Anti-Saloon League of New York, through its officers and generous supporters.

"A Modern Laodicea"

Under this head we find the following in the Apostolic Review, which we quote entire:

The church at Covington has no fuss on hand, not even a preacher, college or paper fuss.—T. S. Hutson in Christian Leader.

"So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot I will spew thee out of my mouth." (Revelation 3:16.)

From Here and There

We shall be glad to get frequent short items of news from missionaries and any others, telling of special situations, new openings, church dedications, strong opposition, lectures against our faith, debate situations, and dozens of like situations. They should be very brief and to the point, without trimmings. This will not preclude the usual letters which we always welcome. We want to make and keep the HERALD a vast mirror which will reflect the activities of the church, that all may know what is being done.

Branch Oblations

In many places, if not with most branches of the church, an oblation is taken up at each sacrament service and turned over to the bishopric. In accordance with this the following resolution is among those adopted by the Order of Bishops during the late General Conference: "Resolved: That it is the opinion of the Order of Bishops that every branch should comply with the law by receiving oblations at sacrament service as found in Section 59:2, and that the amount so received should be placed with the bishopric in harmony with Section 42:8." In accordance with this section several branches are giving it immediate attention and will now comply with the plan. All should do so.

A Summary of War News

The allies in France have hammered and broken the Hindenburg line in several places during the week, inflicting severe losses on the Teutons. In two days the German losses were fifteen thousand in dead, and wounded. The Italians, aided by the British, are pushing down toward Trieste. The Italian mission to the United States has arrived and will confer with Government officials as to cooperation in carrying on the war. The Chinese president has dismissed the premier and appointed in his stead Wu Ting Fang, former ambassador to the United States, who is empowered to appoint a new cabinet. Brazil has practically accepted the present conditions as a state of war against the central powers. United States destroyers are with the British fleet off the English coast waging war on the submarines. The House has passed the war revenue bill but it will no doubt be changed before concurrence by the Senate.

FAITH AND BELIEF SYNONYMOUS

WHY MAKE A DISTINCTION WHERE THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE?

Under the above caption was printed an article, over my name, in the SAINTS' HERALD for February 4, 1914. Reference is made to this article in my late note published in the HERALD for January 31, 1917. We now have a reply to my note of statement and invitation, to which I am permitted access, in order that my reply may succeed the publication of his, without unnecessary delay.

I am glad the brother has given such full expression to his views, and that he speaks as a representative of the class who believe that there is a clear distinction between faith and belief. I find upon procuring the HERALD and reading it over again, that every position taken by the brother in his late article, is covered, and in my judgment, refuted in the article of 1914.

The brother refers to an article published in the HERALD for May 17, 1911, about which he says, "Some seem to be uneasy," etc. If I ever saw the article I know nothing about it now; that is, I cannot recall it. I made no quotation from it, or any other article, except two brief extracts from articles published in this year's HERALD and Ensign. This disposes of all reference to the brother's former article. When the latter one is published it will be proper to read out all that pertains to the former.

My statement, as quoted by the brother in the first part of his letter, is perfectly correct. "So far as I know," or knew when I wrote the note, no published article or statement attempted to define their position and support it by scriptural evidence. It is true, however, that I have read a number of brief statements which were nothing more than an expression of opinion as to the difference between faith and belief.

It is claimed that we misrepresent their position. "These good critics assume that we teach that faith and belief are two distinct principles of the gospel," etc. I do not know how others may have represented their position, but as for me, I plead guilty. In the light of the brother's statement I did misrepresent their position. I am sorry it occurred, and beg pardon, though I supposed I was representing their actual belief. Here is their faith as now defined: "We hold that belief in the truth is the embryo, or undeveloped beginning of saving faith; simply this and nothing more."

With this important statement we couple another found farther along in the article: "But faith cannot be developed without the germ of belief to start from."

We now understand what is meant by the "embryo, or beginning of saving faith." It is "the germ of belief." Now a germ, though usually small is very important and indispensable in both birth and development. But is it not a fact, that a germ develops a product after its own kind, and of which it really becomes a part? If so, then belief, not faith, will be the product. An acorn will never produce an apple tree, nor will an apple seed produce an oak tree. It is very clear that this belief, which leads up to faith, is very fundamental. It does its work right at the beginning. But if this belief is not faith, just as much as it is belief, what shall we do with the following scriptures?

But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Paul in Hebrews 11: 6.

Here Paul not only uses faith and belief interchangeably, but he positively affirms that without faith or belief, we can neither come unto him, nor please him. What about that period of time, from when we first believe until we receive the assurance of faith? "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Paul in Romans 14: 23.)

Again. Does not the least degree of active belief involve the necessity of the operation of belief as a principle? If belief is not a principle, what is it? The short definition for "embryo" is "first rudiments of animal or plant." (Of course I understand the brother uses this word in a figurative sense, but these definitions will apply just the same.) Here is a short and partial definition of rudiment, "first principle; element." This settles it; even from the brother's own point of view, belief is a principle. This is just what I supposed, when I ignorantly misrepresented what I have since learned to be their own stated position.

The reader will please notice that it is admitted that belief is necessary until we come into the possession of "The assurance of things hoped for." But we will see presently that this statement is in conflict with the statements and promises of Holy Writ. The brother's statements on this point, when taken together, plainly show that, according to their position, belief begins the good work of conversion, but ends its mission when the subject has "passed the limit of belief into the 'assurance of things hoped for.'"

PROPOSITIONS WITH COMMENTS

Before adducing scriptural evidence, we will lay down the following propositions:

Proposition 1: There are different degrees and kinds of BELIEF, just as there are different degrees and kinds of FAITH.

This proposition is too self-evident to need proof. In the investigation of this question it should not be ignored. There is a false belief, just as there is a false faith. There is a true belief, just as there is a true faith. There is a weak and a strong belief, just as there is a weak and strong faith. It is manifestly unfair and unprofitable, in the investigation of this question, to compare a strong and perfect faith with a weak and imperfect belief.

Proposition 2: The only true and proper way, so far as comparison is concerned, is to compare the results or products of a true, active FAITH with the results or products of a true active BELIEF.

PROOF TEXTS CONSIDERED

Right here is a good place to dispose of seven proof texts submitted for our consideration. The first is James 2: 19, which reads as follows:

Thou believest there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe, and tremble.

What does this mean to us, as careful and intelligent readers of the Scriptures? The writer was James, one of the apostles. His letter is addressed to "the twelve tribes of Israel." His very apparent purpose was to show the difference between a false and a true faith. This is what called forth the message. There is not a particle of evidence which goes to show that he even thought of trying to show the difference between faith and belief, and what is true of him in this respect is also true of all the New Testament writers and speakers, likewise those of the Book of Mormon, and the statements of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. We will look in vain for any attempt, or even an admission that there is any difference between faith and belief. Notice what James says:

What doth it profit my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith [without works] save him?—Verse 14.

Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.—Verse 17.

WHY DO DEVILS BELIEVE AND TREMBLE?

"But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?"—Verse 20, the first one following the one referred to in the brother's article.

These quotations clearly show the purpose James had in view, namely, to establish the great difference between a true and false faith; and when he said "devils believe and tremble," it was just the same as if he had said "devils have faith and tremble." Why? Because the devils have a false belief, which is just the same as a false faith. Does anyone believe that these devils, referred to in the six succeeding texts, were in possession of true belief, but are not saved because they are without faith? If not, then their belief was false, and, therefore, constituted no true argument or proof that there is a difference between faith and belief. James places them in precisely the same predicament, so far as their salvation is concerned, as those disciples who claimed to have faith but utterly failed to do the work required by the gospel.

What James says a little farther along, on the same point, when he introduces Abraham as a fitting example of true faith, clinches the point just made:

Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham BELIEVED God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God."—Verses 22, 23. (Did Abraham have the assurance of things hoped for?)

This shows, unmistakably plain, first, that James's whole object was to show the difference between true and false faith; and, second, that what he has been calling faith the greater part of the time, he now calls belief. Did Abraham's belief cause him to tremble? If not, why not? Because his belief was a true, active faith.

This disposes of the supposed fact that devils believe but are not saved, because they have no faith. While this fairly covers the whole point, we will briefly notice the last two passages cited, that is Acts 16: 17; 19: 15. Was this damsel who followed Paul and Silas in possession of true belief? If not, she and the false spirit within her must be relegated to the same region of darkness and despair with all other persons and demons who believe, but will not obey. A short time after Paul had cast out the evil spirit, he and Silas were called upon to answer a very important question, propounded by the jailor: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" What was the answer? "BELIEVE on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and all thy house."—Verses 30, 31.

The last passage cited reads as follows: "And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know: but who are ye?"

It seems from this reply, also the replies of other demons, that they more than believed—they actually knew, and knowledge is greater than faith. But even knowledge will avail us nothing unless rightly used, for it is not the true knowledge of God. But here, again, in this same chapter we have Paul showing the saving efficacy of true belief. Paul came to Ephesus and finding certain good, honest disciples, who had not been properly instructed, he asked them if they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed. They had heard nothing about the Holy Ghost, but thought they had been baptized with "John's baptism." Paul corrects their mistake by saying, "John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on him who should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus." They were "baptized" (not "re-baptized"), Paul laid his hands on them, they received the Holy Ghost (that which gives the best assurance), "spake with tongues and prophesied." All this through belief; faith is not mentioned. So it is very plain indeed, that neither James nor Paul were advocates of a distinction between faith and belief.

Proposition 3: All the rich blessings which come to the children of God, through FAITH, for this world and the world to come, can also be secured through BELIEF.

Under this proposition it is only necessary for us to read, in a simple and common sense way, first the promises of God made to all who truly believe; and second, the fulfillment of these promises to all true believers.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.—John 3: 16-18.

The declared purpose for which God sent his Son into the world is that all people in every land and every age, might secure eternal life. The condition is belief and, like the promise, stretches down over all the ages, and includes within its grasp all the other conditions belonging to the divine plan, just like faith. "Everlasting life" presupposes that we will receive, from God, all other blessings needed while we are securing it. Can faith do more and better than this?

Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.

If any one statement of the great Teacher needs to be confirmed by another, we have it here. If a sound and complete conversion, which will place us in possession of eternal life, is one of the glorious triumphs of the gospel, here we have it, secured through belief, just as Paul says in Romans 1: 16. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Is the gospel more than "the power of God unto salvation" to those who have faith?

He that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst. And this is the will of Him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me hath everlasting life.—John 6: 35, 40, 47.

So every one who has true belief in Christ will secure eternal life and come forth in the resurrection of the just. What more is promised to him who has faith in God?

Jesus said unto her [Martha], I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?—John 11: 25, 26.

Do we believe it?

Read verse forty and you will see that the only condition enjoined upon Martha was that she believe: "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Lazarus was raised, after being dead four days, the name of God was glorified, and yet faith, without which "it is impossible to please" God, is not so much as mentioned. How can we explain this, and at the same time defend the integrity of the word, without conceding that faith and belief are two terms which represent but one principle?

And whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God. And whoso believeth not in me, and is not baptized, be damned. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine; and I bear record of it from the Father; and whoso believeth in me, believeth in the Father also.—Book of Mormon, Nephi 5: 34-36.

These are the words of Christ to the ancient Nephites, and they cover the entire ground. "How readest thou?"

"And it is I that granteth unto him that believeth, in the end, a place at my right hand."—Mosiah 11: 131.

This is the voice of God to Alma in answer to earnest prayer. It plainly shows what will be the final result of a true and living belief. It is, however, precisely the same as the result of a true and living faith.

THE GREAT GOSPEL COMMISSION

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel unto every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 15-18.

This commission was given to the eleven apostles about A. D. 33. Latter Day Saints are familiar with this scripture. How many soul-stirring sermons have been preached from this text, to show that the same believing which secures full salvation, also secures gifts and powers of the gospel for this life, in every age and in every clime. Can faith do more than this? Does it not require the best work that faith can possibly do, to secure all the blessings herein vouchsafed to all true believers?

For behold, thus saith Jesus Christ, the Son of God, unto his disciples who should tarry; yea, and also to all his disciples, in the hearing of the multitude, go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; and he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover; and whosoever shall believe in my name, doubting nothing, unto him will I confirm all my words, even unto the ends of the earth."—Mormon 4: 85-88.

This commission is the same as the one given a little while before to the eleven apostles on the eastern continent. It positively states, in the plainest of terms, in the last verse, what the other just as plainly implies; that is, that all true believers, without regard to their location, are entitled to any and all gospel blessings, as their needs shall require. About two thousand years later, under the authority of the restored gospel, the same message, with the same promises, is committed unto men who had been chosen and ordained by the same authority:

Therefore, go ye into all the world, and whatsoever place ye cannot go into, ye shall send, that the testimony may go from you into all the world, unto every creature. And as I said unto mine apostles, even so I say unto you; for ye are mine apostles, even God's high priests: ye are they whom my Father hath given me; ye are my friends; therefore, as I said unto mine apostles, I say unto you again, that every soul who believeth on my words, and is baptized with water for the remission of sins, shall receive the Holy Ghost; and these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name they shall do many wonderful works: in my name they shall cast out devils: in my name they shall heal the sick: in my name they shall open the eyes of the blind, and unstop the ears of the deaf: and the tongue of the dumb shall speak: and if any man shall administer poison unto them it shall not hurt them: and the poison of a serpent shall not have power to harm them.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 10, 11.

In these three quotations, taken from the standard books of the church, is contained a record of the greatest commission that has ever been delivered to mortal man. The conditions and the promises are coextensive, having no limit by time or location. We might safely rest the whole case here, for it does seem that Latter Day Saints ought not to require evidence that God will fulfill his promises.

PROMISES REALIZED

In Mark 16: 20, we read: "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following."

Before giving sight to the blind men, Jesus said unto them:

Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord. Then touched he their eyes, saying, according to your faith be it unto you." (Read Matthew 9: 27-29.)

First, belief was all Jesus required. Second, he calls this belief faith. How many times will the great Teacher need to repeat this before it becomes true?

And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way; and as thou hast believed so shall it be done unto thee. And his servant was healed the selfsame hour.—Matthew 8: 13.

In verse 10, we have the following statement: "Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."

Here again Jesus first calls it "great faith," and second belief. The reader will notice that I have two purposes in view in calling attention to these texts. First, to prove these gospel blessings, according to promise, are secured through belief. Second, that faith and belief are identical. Those who deny the correctness of our position must face these scriptures, and either change their position or admit that the sick are healed, the blind made to see, the dead raised to life, and so forth, without faith.

EFFICACIOUS IN PRAYER

"And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matthew 21: 22.

In verse 21 this belief is called faith. "Have faith in God" (Mark 11: 22) is a favorite text with me, but it is no better and not quite so explicit as John 14: 1: "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me."

Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.—Mark 11: 24.

These texts are sufficient to prove very plainly that what is indicated by the word believe, is all the qualification needed to make our prayers efficacious. When Jesus raised the daughter of Jairus to life, he said unto her father, "Be not afraid, only believe." (Mark 5: 36.)

On another occasion when a notable miracle was about to be performed on a poor boy who had been sorely vexed by a "dumb and deaf spirit," Jesus said to the father, "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." (Mark 9: 23.) Can faith vouchsafe to us more than this? If so, what is it?

A CORRECTION

Before proceeding further, I wish to correct a strong statement found in the first part of the brother's article. Here it is:

The writers have recently entered a complaint and demand that such "principles" should be renounced, or scriptural evidence relied upon for proof be adduced.

This statement (partly quoted) is so connected with other words as to make me say what I did not say. Here is my statement as it stands in its proper connections.

"We think it is time, high time, that this doctrine, that faith and belief are two distinct principles, should be renounced, or the scriptural evidence relied upon for proof be adduced."

The original statement is a plain but decent expression of opinion; the representation of the original, makes me somewhat of an autocrat, demanding what should be done. Moreover I am represented as "demanding that such principles should be renounced," whereas I only express my opinion that the time has come when the claim that faith and belief are two distinct principles should be renounced, or the scriptural evidence relied upon for proof be adduced. It is right and fair that everyone be held accountable for what he says and does, but this is enough. Hence it is too much to make one accountable for words he did not use, and which have a very different meaning from the words he did use. Demanding, and simply expressing an opinion that a certain thing ought to be done, are quite different. Renouncing "such principles" and renouncing the sole contention that there is a marked and important difference between faith and belief, are two different things. So while I am not in favor of making a distinction where there is no difference, I am in favor of making a distinction where there is a marked difference, plainly stated.

IS THERE A DIFFERENCE?

Under the subheading "There is a difference," our attention is called to Hebrews 11:1, with the remark, "Here you have it again, good and strong." We have nothing to fear from this text, or any other, so far as I know, unless we are compelled to indorse the comparison made by reciting the grand possibilities of faith (all of which we gladly concede), with the stated limitations of belief. All we have to do is to substitute belief for faith, and call attention to the fact that Paul, the author of the text cited, shows, in the same chapter, that he believed the two terms to be identical. Let us try the first:

"Now belief is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."—Hebrews 11:1.

Now the second: "But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Verse 6.

Here is the position that will agree with Webster, and with any and all of the texts found in the three standard books, relating to faith and belief. As a fuller and further expression of Paul's views on belief, the reader is invited to read carefully, Romans 1:16; 4:3; 10:10, 11. When the advocates of a difference can find no support for their contentions in the teaching of Paul, James or Jesus, where will they go?

DOES THIS PROVE IT?

By other parties my attention has been called to Doctrine and Covenants 42:12, 13:

And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed [that is, have not the gift to be healed, Doctrine and Covenants 46:7], but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me.—Part of paragraph 12.

And again, it shall come to pass, that he that hath faith in me to be healed, and is not appointed unto death, shall be healed; he who hath faith to see shall see; he who hath faith to hear shall hear; the lame who hath faith to leap shall leap; and they who have not faith to do these things [that is sufficient faith], but believe in me, have power to become my sons; and inasmuch as they break not my laws, thou shalt bear their infirmities.—Paragraph 13.

Notice, these believers in Christ were not destitute of faith, else they would not have been instructed to trust in the ordinance whose special purpose is for the healing of the sick. Moreover, they are to become the sons of God, if they break not his laws. Evidently the same class of believers is referred to in section 46:5, who, while they are not favored with the gift of knowledge, to know by the Holy Ghost, "that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world," are nevertheless favored with the gift of the Spirit which is akin to it. That is, "To others is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful." Surely none will claim that these believers can become the Sons of God and have eternal life without faith. If they do, then they must (for there is no escape) concede that some—indeed a large proportion of the church—are saved by belief alone, and the balance by belief and faith! This, of course, would establish two distinct principles of the divine plan.

This is evidently the correct position. The class described in paragraph twelve, have not faith or belief sufficient to bring to them the healing power of God, without outside help, hence they are instructed to secure the benefits of the ordinance of administration by two or more elders of the church. In this way they place themselves in the hands of God, with the blessed assurance that if they die, they die unto God, and if they live, they live unto God. But the class described in paragraph thirteen, can, because of their strong faith (the gift of faith), and the gift to be healed, secure the blessings mentioned in this paragraph, with and without the administration of the elders.

If there is any proof for those who claim a distinction, then they must concede that these believers secure sonship with God, and eternal life, through belief alone. Second, what will we do with the historical and doctrinal statements of the New Testament, which show so plainly that all these blessings were promised and enjoyed by true believers. Jesus said, "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." In the face of this shall we say, these believers were not healed because they only believed!

TWO TERMS—ONE PRINCIPLE

It is a characteristic of the English language to frequently employ two or more terms to represent one principle, while the orthography and pronunciation of these two terms are, as a rule, very different. So, it is not at all strange that faith and belief should represent but one principle. Sometimes, speakers and writers (who are left to choose) use one of the words, sometimes a different one. Why is it? Evidently the leading reason is, that on account of the relation of these terms to other words, it is more euphonious (agreeable to the ear) to use one term, and sometimes when the relation is different, another.

Charity and love mean the same thing, but our translators, or part of them, have used the two English words to represent the one Greek word, the liberal meaning of which is love.

In the German language, as I learn from Elder J. S. Roth, who is a German, there is but one word to represent what we have so plainly and fully represented by the words faith and belief, and when this one word is translated into English, it is belief. And as I understand, it is the same in the Danish and Norwegian languages. So with no word for faith in their Bibles in Germany, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, and with some of our zealous advocates of a distinction between the superiority of faith and the inferiority of belief, sent to preach the gospel to them, they would be (as one of the German elders once said when relating some experiences) "in a fix."

The Department of Agriculture at Washington is urging that careful attention be given to our leather goods. One thing they strongly urge is the free use of oil on both shoes and harness. Contrary to the usual idea, they say that wet leather absorbs oil better than the dry. Castor oil is recommended for shoes that are to be polished, while for plainer footgear neat's-foot oil, fish oil or oleine may be substituted. Beef tallow added to any of these makes the leather more waterproof.

MACHU PICCHU AND THE MEGALITHIC PEOPLE—PART 2

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD

The Book of Mormon gives a very short, and not full account of a four-brother colony who migrated from Jerusalem to South America about 600 B. C., which looks very much like the Manco colony, the founders of the wonderful megalithic empire of Peru. In the Book of Mormon colony were nine men, viz, Lehi, Ishmael, Zoram, two sons of Ishmael, and the four sons of Lehi. These four sons' names were, beginning with the eldest, Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi. (See page 1.)

The early history of this colony for nearly half a century clusters around these four brothers, for the reason that the youngest one of the four, whose name was Nephi, became the Moses for the colony, and became its leader in the wilderness, and also its first king in the promised land. Laman and Lemuel, the elder brothers, became contentious about Nephi's leadership, and rebelled against him, claiming the right to lead and rule belonged to the elder brother, and not the youngest, and disputes arose from time to time as to leadership, the elder brothers even threatening the life of Nephi, and finally the colony divided, part following the leadership of Laman, the eldest of the four, and part following the leadership of Nephi, the youngest of the four brothers.

And Laman said unto Lemuel, and also unto the sons of Ishmael, behold, let us slay our father, and also our brother Nephi, who has taken it upon him to be our ruler and our teacher, who are his elder brethren. Now, he says that the Lord has talked with him, and also that angels have ministered unto him! But behold, we know that he lies unto us; and he tells us these things, and he worketh many things by his cunning arts, that he may deceive our eyes, thinking, perhaps, that he may lead us away into some strange wilderness; and after he has led us away, he has thought to make himself a king and a ruler over us, that he may do with us according to his will and pleasure. And after this manner did my brother Laman stir up their hearts to anger.—Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 5: 48-52.

This trouble about leadership took place soon after this colony left Jerusalem, and while they were in the wilderness traveling towards the promised land.

And it came to pass that I did make tools of the ore which I did molten out of rock. And when my brethren saw that I was about to build a ship, they began to murmur against me, saying, our brother is a fool, for he thinketh that he can build a ship; yea, and he also thinketh that he can cross these great waters.—1 Nephi 5: 84-87.

And the Lord did show me from time to time after what manner I should work the timbers of the ship.—1 Nephi 5: 169.

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, said unto them, that they should murmur no more against their father, neither should they withhold their labor from me, for God had commanded me that I should build a ship.—1 Nephi 5: 156.

And I, Nephi, began to fear exceedingly, lest the Lord should be angry with us, and smite us, because of our iniquity, that we should be swallowed up in the depths of the sea; . . . but behold, they were angry with me, saying, we will not that our younger brother shall be a ruler over us.—1 Nephi 5: 185-187.

And I, [Lehi to his sons] exceedingly fear and tremble because of you, lest he [Nephi] shall suffer again; for behold, ye have accused him that he sought power and authority over you; but I know that he hath not sought for power nor authority over you; but he hath sought the glory of God, and your own eternal welfare.—2 Nephi 1: 43-45.

Rebel no more against your brother, whose views have been glorious, and who hath kept the commandments from the time that we left Jerusalem.—2 Nephi 1: 40.

Lehi made this talk to his sons after the colony had landed in the new world.

Behold, it came to pass that I, Nephi, did cry much unto the Lord my God, because of the anger of my brethren. But behold, their anger did increase against me; insomuch that they did seek to take away my life. Yea, they did murmur against me, saying: Our younger brother thinks to rule over us; and we have had much trial because of him, wherefore, now let us slay him, that we may not be afflicted more because of his words. For behold, we will not have him to be our ruler: for it belongs unto us, who are the elder brethren, to rule over this people. Now I do not write upon these plates, all the words which they murmured against me. But it sufficeth me to say, that they did seek to take away my life. And it came to pass that the Lord did warn me, that I, Nephi, should depart from them, and flee into the wilderness, and all those who would go with me. Wherefore, it came to pass that I, Nephi, did take my family, and also Zoram and his family, and Sam, mine elder brother, and his family, and Jacob and Joseph my younger brethren, and also my sisters, and all those who would go with me. . . . were those who believed in the warnings and revelations of God; wherefore, they did hearken unto my words. And we did take our tents and whatsoever things were possible for us, and did journey in the wilderness for the space of many days. And after we had journeyed for the space of many days, we did pitch our tents. And my people would that we should call the name of the place Nephi; wherefore we did call it Nephi. . . . And I, Nephi, had also brought the records which were engraven upon plates of brass; and also the ball, or compass which was prepared for my father, by the hand of the Lord, according to that which is written.—2 Nephi 4: 1-17.

These records engraven upon plates of brass were their copy of the Bible down to Jeremiah. The Book of Mormon was engraven, it is said, on plates of gold, and Mr. Squire relates having seen such gold plates in various houses in Cuzco, sheets of gold preserved as relics which came from the temple of the Sun. These "plaques" he tells us, were scarcely as thick as a sheet of paper. (Prehistoric America, p. 413.) The Hittic treaty of peace made with the Egyptians negotiated after the battle of Kadesh were engraven on a silver plate. (See Hutson's Beginning of Civilization, p. 60.) And the Romans copied Greek laws and "engraved them on plates of brass." (See Ancient History of Bloss, p. 333.) And they also published decrees engraven on brass, placing them in public places defining the legal rights of the Jews in various cities of the empire. At Alexandria, "engraven on pillars of brass." (See Josephus's Antiquities, book 14, chapter 10, paragraph 1.) Also on a "table of brass," placed in the temple at Jerusalem, and also a copy at "Sidon" also at "Tyre" and "Askelon," engraven in Roman and Greek letters, decrees defining Jewish privileges "were engraven" on "tables of brass at Antioch." (See ibid., Book of Wars, book 7, paragraph 2.) And these very historical documents Joseph cites in his reply to Apion. (See book 2, paragraph 4.)

Eusebius says that the imperial decrees of the Romans against the Christians, and "the decrees of the cities against us, and copies of the imperial edicts appended to these, were engraven and erected on brazen tablets, a course never before adopted against us anywhere." (Ibid., p. 367.)

The roads leading to Jerusalem were like finger boards pointing to the city. But the city was sacked by the Romans and laid in ruins for forty-seven years, and they changed its name to Aelia. Later its old name was restored, then later the Mohammedans changed it again, this time to El-Kondes. It has been run over for eighteen centuries by its successive masters, by the Romans, Grecians, Persians, Saracens, Mamelukes, Turks, Christians, and again by the Turks, but all these long years and changes the public roads pointed to the same place—to Jerusalem, Aelia, and later to El-Kondes.

The city of Nephi was the "chief city" of that upper country. It is pointed out in an upland region. Like Jerusalem, it may have been sacked by invaders, laid in waste, and may have been renamed by its conquerors which is the rule to do, but the public roads would still be faithful to the place, and point the same way, to the city of Nephi, or its successor, to the same center of civilization, as the great roads do now to Cuzco. (See Prescott's Conquest of Peru, pp. 52, 66, 71, vol. 1.)

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did cause my people to be industrious, and to labor with their hands. And it came to pass that they would that I should be their king.—2 Nephi 4: 26, 27.

Now Nephi began to be old, and he saw that he must soon die; wherefore, he anointed a man to be a king and a ruler over his people now, according to the reigns of the kings. The people having loved Nephi exceedingly, he having been a great protector for them, having wielded the sword of Laban in their defense, and having labored in all his days for their welfare; wherefore, the people were desirous to retain in remembrance his name. And whoso should reign in his stead, were called by the people, second Nephi, third Nephi, etc., according to the reigns of the kings; and thus they were called by the people, let them be of whatever name they would.—Jacob 1: 9-11.

Thus Nephi's name, with the Nephites, now became a royal or kingly name. "And it came to pass that Nephi died." (Jacob 1: 12.)

Nearly five hundred years after this four-brother colony left Jerusalem their disputes are rehearsed by people from Lamanite country as follows:

Now, the Lamanites knew nothing concerning the Lord, nor the strength of the Lord; therefore they depended upon their own strength. Yet they were a strong people, as to the strength of men; they were a wild, and ferocious, and bloodthirsty people, believing in the tradition of their fathers which is this: believing that they were driven out of the land of Jerusalem, because of the iniquities of their fathers, and that they were wronged in the wilderness by their brethren; and they were also wronged, while crossing the sea. And again: that they were wronged while in the land of their first inheritance, after they had crossed the sea; and all this, because that Nephi was more faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord; therefore he was favored of the Lord, for the Lord heard his prayers and answered them, and he took the lead of their journey in the wilderness. And his brethren were wroth with him, because they understood not the dealings of the Lord; they were also wroth with him upon the waters, because they hardened their hearts against the Lord. And again: they were wroth with him when they had arrived to the promised land, because they said that he had taken the ruling of the people out of their hands; and they sought to kill him. And again: they were wroth with him, because he departed into the wilderness as the Lord had commanded him, and took the records which were engraven on the plates of brass; for they said that he robbed them. And thus they have taught their children, that they should hate them, and that they should murder them, and that they should rob and plunder them, and do all they could to destroy them; therefore, they have an eternal hatred towards the children of Nephi.—Mosiah 6: 44-53.

In the correspondence between Ammoron the Lamanite general and Moroni the Nephite general, we see the spleen of racial hatred as handed down by those people for generations, this racial dispute for leadership, first between the four brothers, and later their descendants became a national dispute, and a part of their national ambition was to conquer them. Ammoron said:

For behold, your fathers [Nephites] did wrong their brethren, [Lamanites] insomuch that they did rob them of their right to the government, when it rightly belonged unto them. And now behold, if ye will lay down your arms, and subject yourselves to be governed by those to whom the government doth rightly belong, then will I cause that my people shall lay down their weapons, and shall be at war no more. . . . We will wage a war which shall be eternal, either to the subjecting the Nephites to our authority, or to their eternal extinction. . . . Behold, this war hath been waged, to avenge their wrongs, and to maintain and to obtain their rights to the government; and I close my epistle to Moroni.—Alma 25: 18-26.

These people are now scattered far from their west coast landing place, and spread over a large part of South America, along the west coast and upland of Peru, Ecuador, Colombia, and the northern part of Chile, along the coast and northward to the Isthmus. The memory of the four brothers and their disputed rights to leadership we see are interwoven into their national life, and this is nearly five hundred years after the actors in that early drama had passed away; and General Zóram now proposes to settle forever this old dispute of leadership by the Nephites becoming subject to Lamanite rule, or a fight to the finish. And the Lamanites and Nephites were the ancestors of the American red races.

And now comes Professor Brinton after long investigations of the red race, and says that hardly any of the Indian nations but what seems to have had some vague tradition of an origin, or having been led by four brothers. (See Brinton's Myths of the New World, p. 94.)

So that the red Indian races of America are nearly unanimous in pointing the finger of tradition to four brothers or four leaders who were connected with their earliest traditional history.

From the Book of Mormon point of view, these personal and national disputes, first among the four brothers, then later by their descendants in their national policy and ambition for leadership, became their paramount issue. The Lamanite children were taught we see, to hate the Nephites, to rob, plunder and murder them, or exterminate them, and as migrations later spread abroad from their centers of civilization, these colonies took with them the memory of four brothers, or four leaders, and notwithstanding their decadence, remnants of their past history are now picked up and published and are found to harmonize with the story of prehistoric America as found in that book, that book stating its case first, then such men as Lund and Brinton came later on, and confirmed it.

The names of the four brothers are variously given by different tribes, and in Brazil their disputes are still referred to. Balboa and Montesinos give their names as Manco, Cacha, Auca, and Uchu, the meaning of Manco is unknown, the others signify in their order, "messenger," "enemy or traitor," and "the little one." (See Myths of the New World, p. 212, note 2.) We see these were second names, because one of the four had become an enemy. But in this widespread and wonderful concurrent tradition among all the American Indian races of their four brothers, we have a remarkable corroboration of the Nephite history, and from its point of view it is but what might be expected, but on no other ground than that indicated in that book can we credibly account for them, because they don't fit into the history of any other nation or race. Evidently they had their origin in one and the same events, and the same men. These races remember the four brothers, or their four leaders, or that in some manner they connected the appearance and action of four important personages with their earliest traditional history.

Manco's colony we are told:

Advanced along the high plains in the neighborhood of Lake Titicaca to about the sixteenth degree south. They bore with them a golden wedge, and were directed to take up their residence on the spot where the sacred emblem should without effort sink into the ground. They proceeded accordingly but a short distance, as far as the valley of Cuzco, the spot indicated by the performance of the miracle, since there the wedge speedily sank into the earth and disappeared forever.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, p. 28.

And Nadallac relates this story:

Legends relate that when Manca-Capac and Mama Oello left the island of Titicaca the sun [or God] gave to them a golden branch and instructed them to walk on until the branch should sink into the earth. It was at Cuzco that the marvel took place.—Prehistoric America, p. 410.

From the foregoing we understand that the Manco colony was under divine guidance, but we may like Montesinos discard the wonder stories about them, and take God out of the legend altogether, but then we still have the four brothers left, the youngest of which he says became the first of a long line of kings, succeeded by sixty-three other kings, before the breaking up of the old Manco, or megalithic empire, which went to pieces he says in the first or second century of the Christian era.

Nephi says:

And it came to pass that the voice of the Lord spake unto my father, by night, and commanded him, that on the morrow, he should take his journey into the wilderness. And it came to pass that as my father arose in the morning, and went forth to the tent door, to his great astonishment he beheld upon the ground a round ball, of curious workmanship; and it was of fine brass. And within the ball were two spindles; and the one pointed the way whither we should go into the wilderness.—1 Nephi 5: 10-12.

This took place not far from Jerusalem.

And it came to pass that we did travel for the space of many days, slaying food by the way, with our bows and our arrows, and our stones and our slings; and we did follow the directions of the ball, which led us in the more fertile parts of the wilderness.—1 Nephi 5: 19, 20.

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did go forth up into the top of the mountain, according to the directions which were given upon the ball.—1 Nephi 5: 37.

Over five hundred years later we read:

And now my son [Alma to his son Helaman] I have somewhat to say concerning the thing which our fathers call a ball, or director: or our fathers call it Liahona which is, being interpreted, a compass; and the Lord prepared it. . . . And behold, it was prepared to show unto our fathers the course which they should travel in the wilderness.—Alma 17: 71-73.

(To be continued.)

A rather pompous-looking deacon was endeavoring to impress upon the young minds of a class of boys the importance of living a Christian life. "Why do people call me a Christian, children?" the worthy dignitary asked, standing very erect and smiling down upon them. A moment's pause; then a shrill little voice was heard to say, "Because they don't know you."—The Ladies' Home Journal.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

ZION AWAKENING

Dreams occasionally come true. One of these may be the Zionist dream of a self-governing Jewish state in Palestine. The work of years against apparently insurmountable obstacles has brought within range of probability realization of the vision. "The cruel rod of war" may once again "blossom into righteous law," bringing democracy to Russia, home rule to Ireland, independence to Poland, and self-government in some form to Palestine.

But it must not be assumed that, should self-government come, the credit will be solely due to the overthrow of the Turk. For many years preparations in Palestine have been going on. Since the early 80's the country has been colonized. Before that time there had been considerable Jewish immigration, but this consisted principally of zealots with no other object than to spend and end their existence in Jerusalem in a religious but nonproductive way. Years of residence failed to make them aught but strangers in the land.

The immigration of the past thirty-five years has been of a different type. Persecution in Russia and Roumania and discontent in Galicia, the Balkan nations and elsewhere, brought in industrious people determined to secure a stake in the country and become a part of its economic life. Many of these had to be assisted, through a fund created by Jewish organizations in western Europe and the United States. Almost destitute and in debt they began resettlement of a land, the condition of which was described forty-eight years ago by Mark Twain in Innocents Abroad, as follows:

"Of all the lands there are for dismal scenery, I think Palestine must be the prince. The hills are barren, they are dull of color, they are unpicturesque in shape. The valleys are unsightly deserts fringed with a feeble vegetation that has an expression about it of being sorrowful and despondent. . . . It is a hopeless, dreary, heart-broken land. . . . Palestine is desolate and unlovely. And why should it be otherwise? Can the curse of the Deity beautify a land?"

To succeed in such a place must require extraordinary energy, enthusiasm, intelligence and faith. And yet the new settlers succeeded. If Mark Twain could have revisited the country at the outbreak of the European war, he would have revised his opinion. He would have found no less than forty-four flourishing agricultural colonies, with a population of 15,000, cultivating more than 94,000 acres. He would have found flourishing city settlements achieving commercial importance. The total Jewish population is 100,000, which, though it may seem small, occupies a dominant position, and enjoys the respect and confidence of other elements. The colonists have developed business for the seaports of Jaffa and Haifa, and have exercised a regenerating influence in Jerusalem, a place which Mark Twain described as abounding in "rags, wretchedness, poverty and dirt." They have had great success in producing for export oranges and other fruits, cereals, cotton and wine. The exports of oranges from Jaffa in 1913 were valued at $1,630,000. The Arab method of cultivation of cereals had yielded a crop valued at about $5 per acre. The Jewish colonists have increased this yield to a point where it varies between $11 and $17 per acre. The Arab production of oranges averaged 350 boxes per acre. The colonists increased this to 757 boxes.

At their own expense the colonists have constructed good roads and introduced badly needed sanitary improvements. With outside help hospitals have been established. Before their coming the country was a breeding place of malaria and trachoma. The colonists planted millions of eucalyptus trees whose unusual power of absorption and evaporation makes them a useful factor in draining the marshes. The Jewish Health Bureau, established in Jerusalem by Nathan Straus, of New York City, has directed the fight against trachoma and other diseases. Formerly sixty per cent of the inhabitants of Jaffa were afflicted with trachoma. Only one per cent are now sufferers from that disease. An adequate school system has been established in all of the villages and a high school maintained in each of the three cities of Jaffa, Haifa and Jerusalem.

The colonies enjoy a measure of self-rule. The Turkish Government concerns itself about them no further than to collect its taxes. So they have developed into a group of little autonomous democracies. Each colony elects through universal suffrage, regardless of sex qualifications, a committee known as the "Va'ad." This exercises both administrative and judicial functions. It keeps a register of land holdings, which is the only record on which individual tenure is based. It has charge of the schools, roads and the water supply. It carries on routine work of administration in accordance with certain fixed rules. When important questions arise it calls a meeting of citizens and the matter is submitted to a referendum. Thus in the midst of Turkish despotism and misrule, an institution has been established similar to the New England town meeting.

Crime among the colonists is practically unknown. None has occurred during the existence of the colonies. But a police force is considered necessary to guard against nightly visits of predatory Arabs, and so the Va'ad maintain one. Another function of the Va'ad is to act as a court in cases of dispute between colonists. Its judgment is usually accepted, though occasionally an appeal is taken to a central body of all the colonists at Tal Aviv near Jaffa. Its decision is final. Authority of central and local bodies rests on voluntary acceptance alone. Philosophic individualists may find here much to uphold their ideas.

The colonists were confronted at the outset with a language difficulty. Coming from different countries, the only common tongue consisted of a smattering of Hebrew acquired from the prayer book. Hebrew has consequently become the intermediary language and, in a form suited to modern conditions, is getting to be the national tongue. It is taught to the children in the schools, who are encouraged to use it in preference to other languages. It has been taken up by non-Jewish elements. Signs in Hebrew are to be found over their business houses. For sentimental reasons this must be pleasing to many. Yet one cannot help but wonder whether it would not have been more practical to have adopted one of the leading European languages or to have aided the growing Esperanto movement by taking up that easily-learned and rapidly spreading lingo.

The inevitable effect which prosperity and good government have on land values is not absent. Palestine, the organ of the British Palestine Committee, reports as follows:

In 1890 an acre of irrigable land in the colony of Petach-Tikwah cost about £3-12s; to-day such land could not be bought for less than £36 per acre. In 1880 the lands which form this colony were uncultivated and brought only a small and insignificant revenue to the State; in 1912 the value of the annual production of the colony was £36,000 from which the Government obtained £3,400 in the form of taxation. In 1880 the value of the colony was less than £1,200; to-day it represents a value of at least £600,000, and its population numbers 3,000 souls.

These figures portend danger. Should private individuals be allowed to appropriate this unearned increment land speculation will be encouraged, land monopoly will exact heavy tolls from labor, willing workers will be denied employment, and there will arise poverty and distress in older civilizations.

The war, however, has ended prosperity. It cut off the export trade at once. Then in 1915 came a plague of locusts which devoured the crops. Great distress resulted, and it was necessary to call upon America for relief. This was granted in generous measure. Peace, whenever it may come, must bring a renewal of ante-bellum prosperity, in spite of the reported attack on the colonies at Jaffa, and outrages committed there.

Zionist organizations to help the country secure political autonomy exist in all leading countries. They number prominent non-Jews as well as Jews among their membership. In Great Britain the movement has taken the form of agitation for the conversion of Palestine into a self-governing member of the British Empire. The advance of General Murray into the country and of General Maude's expedition into Mesopotamia makes this perhaps the most practical suggestion under existing circumstances.

A writer in The New Europe, published at London, dwells on this subject, and after showing the strategical advantage to the British Empire of the country, makes clear one point which may have been evident before to the general reader. He says:

But though Palestine will be the national center of the Jewish people and the seat of its national civilization, it will not be the home of all the Jews. The majority will remain scattered throughout the world. . . . The Russian revolution opens out a prospect that the age of political persecution will soon end. With that the world importance of a Jewish Palestine grows mightily. The Jew outside Palestine will owe no political allegiance to a Jewish Palestine. His political allegiance will be due and will go, as always, to the state of which he is a citizen. But the spiritual center of his race where the Jewish genius will blossom in full freedom will receive from more Jews a voluntary respect and veneration. . . . The British Empire which will have created that home will be assured of the spontaneous affection and gratitude of all conscious Jews throughout the world. What England can gain in that way we may measure by what she has lost through the failure to satisfy Irish national sentiment.

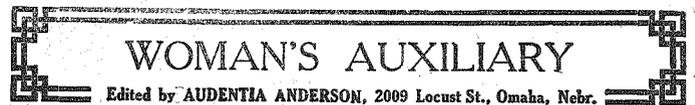

In the United States the Zionist movement is widespread, active and enthusiastic. It is not merely the reestablishment of a Jewish nation which many of these workers have in view. They realize that their labor would be worth little, if it accomplished no more than creation of a state offering no other advantages to its citizens than what may be enjoyed in the United States, Switzerland or other existing democratic nations. They hope to establish a commonwealth where social justice shall prevail, and they know that the first thing needful for that is to insure the land to the people. Thus Justice Louis D. Brandeis, who heads the American movement, said in The Outlook of January 5, 1916:

Notable among the Zionist institutions is the Jewish National Fund, formed to purchase land as the inalienable property of the Jewish people in Palestine. A large part of the settlers own individual property, but the Zionist organization determined that the land, if acquired, should be the property of the Jewish people, remaining national domain and leased to the settlers at a rent which would not allow of unearned increment.

With proper economic knowledge thus displayed the idealism of the Zionists must make of the new state, when born, a model for all civilization, a land in which "they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid."—Samuel Danziger, in The Public, May 18, 1917.

BARBERRY BUSH SPREADS BLACK RUST

In an official bulletin the Iowa Agricultural Experimental Station of Ames, Iowa, warns its readers that the European or common barberry (Berberis vulgaris) is responsible to a very large degree in the spread of black rust which so disastrously affected the wheat crop of 1916. The spores from which the disease spreads find a congenial home in the stalks of this common ornamental shrub and from them spread to fields of grain, to produce almost total loss of the latter. They tell us that North Dakota has passed a law for the eradication of the shrub before July 1 of this year, while similar laws are being agitated in Minnesota and Canada. The bulletin, entitled Circular No. 35, will be sent free to those asking for it.

The Woman Movement—An Interpretation

"You know, I thought the woman movement simply meant that some women wanted to vote. It means much more than that!" exclaimed one sister after listening to a lecture on the woman movement.

It does mean much more than that! The whole question of the unrest of modern woman and her "movement" has suffered the grossest and sometimes the most stupid misunderstanding. Florence Tuttle writes: "It is hardly an exaggeration to say that no other question of modern times has been so much discussed, and so much befogged and obscured in the discussion, as the omnipresent woman question."

The woman movement is in our very midst and it is always difficult to see a big thing close up. It is the old, old, story of the blind men and the elephant. Some think the fight for woman suffrage is the woman movement, others the struggle for higher education of women, others the advent of women into the business world. Each one feels only that part of the enormous, many-sided movement which happens to impinge on his little personal world.

What is the real meaning of the so-called woman movement? In the first place it is a spiritual thing rather than material; it is simply one big fork of the great struggle for democracy, begun centuries ago by our forefathers. In 1787 when the air was ringing with such words as "equality," "human rights," "liberty," "freedom," "equality of man," "inalienable rights," the French Condorcet plead ably for the rights of women in his essay on "Admission of women to citizenship." Five years later Mary Wollenscraft in England wrote her vindication of the Rights of Women. This book came as a thunderclap. Everybody had been talking about human rights, human equality, and freedom of the people, but nobody ever thought of including woman in humanity. These "inherent rights," this "sovereignty of the people," of course meant man; nobody had ever thought of rights for woman; duties were their concern. Rousseau voiced the popular sentiments when he wrote of woman, her natural and God-ordained inferiority, her duties and her sphere.

"For this reason the education of woman should always be relative to man; to please, to be useful to us; to make us love and esteem them; to educate us when young; and take care of us when grown up, to advise, to console us, to render our lives easy and agreeable; these are the duties of women at all times, and what they should be taught in their infancy."

In America the first woman's rights conference was organized by two women who had been refused recognition as delegates to the great world's convention for antislavery held in London. They had been regularly appointed and had traveled across the Atlantic to take part in the convention, but their credentials were not accepted—because they were women! Surely the women of that day had much to contend for. All over America the old common law of England prevailed. Woman had no property rights. If her husband died the mother had no right of guardianship over her own children, the nearest male relative became the guardian, and he could remove them entirely from her, and administer their interest, without consulting her and according to his own sweet will. The law forbade a man to beat his wife with a stick any thicker than his thumb; of course the larger the man, the larger the stick! Woman was not responsible before the law for her misdeeds; she was not recognized as a moral creature, but simply unmoral. When women first tried to speak in public concerning such an issue as slavery they were mobbed and subjected to untold humiliation and ridicule. Not until after the Civil War, did the struggle for equal educational opportunities, which began with the first of the century, gain headway. Many of these rights we consider a matter of course to-day—but they were secured only by the untiring efforts of the pioneers of the woman movement.

These women fought for the right to right wrongs—not only wrongs against their own sex but wrongs against humanity. We find many of these early women beginning as antislavery workers, but in the end compelled to contend for the privilege of speaking publicly on any subject. Susan B. Anthony, the Napoleon of the woman movement, began as a temperance lecturer, but, finding herself handicapped at every turn because she was a woman, she soon became irresistably drawn into the "woman's war." The woman of America had felt the impetus of the great spiritual or intellectual "awakening," or enlightenment, of the early nineteenth century and she started upon the long, weary road to equality and freedom.

To-day, although many victories have been won, in many States she is still contending for the right of equal suffrage. Why should this serious matter of common justice be treated so lightly, talked of as a mere feminine whim, a new toy that women want to play with? Surely woman has proven herself worthy of more consideration than that. The old superstition of man's mental superiority has long ago been demonstrated false. Woman has entered the intellectual fields and has held her own with man; there has been little question of woman's moral equality with man: then why should this great multitude of citizens be denied, for no other reason than sex, the right to vote?

The oft-quoted fear that the vote will take woman from the home is best met by Nellie McClung's humorous picture of the situation:

"Father comes home, tired, weary, footsore, toenails ingrowing, caused by undarned stockings, and finds the fire out, house cold and empty, save for his half dozen children, all crying. 'Where is your mother?' the poor man asks in broken tones. For a moment the sobs are hushed while little Ellie replies: 'Out voting!'

"Father bursts into tears."

On the other hand, the modern woman is finding the ballot necessary for the protection of her home, her children and her fellow women. There are vital problems of social life which she is fitted to understand as man can never understand them: problems of pure food, of civil as well as home cleanliness and sanitation, educational and vocational problems, child labor and conditions of women in labor, as well as the professions. In cities she is peculiarly interested in the great plagues of white slavery and the social evil since she is the innocent and helpless victim of both these evils. These vital problems of modern life lie in woman's natural realm; the home, its wholesomeness, its efficiency, its sanctity, indeed its very life, is dependent upon the right solution of these problems.

We agree that woman's greatest and noblest work is home making and the rearing of children, that—

"As in the beginning the child's first need is a woman's care, so in the end there is no other place for a man to bring the result of all his labor but home, to the sheltering love of a woman's heart."

But we say (and a host of women say with us) we need a voice in the Government and a chance to represent and bring to the fore the great moral issues which involve the safety of our homes and the health and happiness of our children. The woman who uses the water all day long in preparing food for her husband and children, can realize more keenly the necessity of its purity than men; yet where do we find a woman on the water commission?

In a recent survey in Detroit it was found that "The city pays its educators less than a janitor, less than a peanut stand tender, less than a varnish spreader, less than a sewer digger, less than a washwoman, less than a corn husker, less than a horse." We consult highly paid experts concerning the welfare and health of our hogs and cattle; but our children we trust to women to whom we pay less than a living wage. We believe that the mothers of the Nation can understand and appreciate more thoroughly the urgency of these issues than men ever can. It is a fact that, as one writer has said, "where women vote a new element, domestic and educational, appears in the government of the people."

We are not pleading this as the fundamental reason why woman should vote, for that is merely a part of the larger question of human equality and freedom. Woman should have a voice in her own government because she is a citizen and a responsible human being. That is mere fundamental justice. These are some of the immediate problems, however, which impress upon us the necessity of an equal franchise. To the cry, "Keep the woman in the home!" we are responding that in our present complex state of society woman must go outside the four walls of the home in order to protect and preserve the sanctity of those walls.

To supplement our thought we quote:

"... The great functions of social service for which human beings of the mother sex have been held chiefly responsible since society began are: the care of the sick, aged, and inferior; relief of the unfortunate, and protection and care of the defective. . . . These three functions, the modern state has taken over from the home and from the church. These the modern state cannot perform without the direct and varied aid of women."

The interest in government and desire to vote, however, is but one phase of the woman movement; it is merely an expression of the higher and broader ideals of womanly service which are leavening our womanhood. The "new" woman is striving to rise above the superficiality of mind and character that has been so often called feminine. She is reaching up for truer, broader standards of womanhood, yet she is trying to retain and amplify the beauty and charm that have always been hers. She is asking man for that truer, broader companionship of mind and soul, and for a regard such as there exists between men, i. e., based upon power and beauty of character. Our new woman is developing a loyalty to her sex, a sex solidarity, hitherto sadly lacking among women, which has been called the "great new asset of human fellowship." She is trying to meet her fellow women with frankness and honesty, sloughing off the time-honored traditions of "cattishness" and feminine intrigue and deceit.

To quote again from Nellie McClung:

"The woman movement, which has been scoffed and jeered at and misunderstood most of all by the people whom it is destined to help, is a spiritual revival of the best instincts of womanhood—the instinct to serve and save the race.

"Too long have the gentle ladies sat in their boudoirs looking at life in a mirror like the lady of Shallot, while down below, in the street, the fight rages, and other women, and defenseless children are getting the worse of it. But the cry is going up to the boudoir ladies to come down and help us, for the battle goes sorely; and many there are who are throwing aside the mirror and coming out where the real things are. The world needs the work and help of the women, and the women must work if the race is to survive."

Kill Flies and Save Lives

Kill at once every fly you can find and burn his body.

Observers say that there are many reasons to believe there will be more flies this season than for a number of years.

The killing of just one fly now means there will be billions and trillions less next summer.

Clean up your own premises; see and insist that your neighbors do likewise.

Especially clean "out-of-the-way places," and every nook and cranny.

Flies will not go where there is nothing to eat, and their principal diet is too filthy to mention.

THE FLY IS THE TIE THAT BINDS THE UNHEALTHY TO THE HEALTHY!

The fly has no equal as a germ "carrier"; as many as five hundred million germs have been found in and on the body of a single fly.

It is definitely known that the fly is the "carrier" of the germs of typhoid fever; it is widely believed that it is also the "carrier" of other diseases, including possibly infantile paralysis.

The very presence of a fly is a signal and notification that a housekeeper is uncleanly and inefficient.

Do not wait until the insects begin to pester; anticipate the annoyance.

April, May and June are the best months to conduct an anti-fly campaign.

The farming and suburban districts provide ideal breeding places, and the new born flies do not remain at their birth-place but migrate, using railroads and other means of transportation, to towns and cities.

Kill flies and save lives!

RECIPES FOR KILLING FLIES

The United States Government makes the following suggestion for the destruction of house flies: Formaldehyde and sodium salicylate are the two best fly poisons. Both are superior to arsenic. They have their advantages for household use. They are not a poison to children; they are convenient to handle, their dilutions are simple and they attract the flies.

PREPARATION OF SOLUTIONS

A formaldehyde solution of approximately the correct strength may be made by adding 3 teaspoonfuls of the concentrated formaldehyde solution, commercially known as formalin, to a pint of water. Similarly, the proper concentration of sodium salicylate may be obtained by dissolving 3 teaspoonfuls of the pure chemical (a powder) to a pint of water.

A container has been found convenient for automatically keeping the solution always available for flies to drink. An ordinary, thin-walled drinking glass is filled or partially filled with the solution. A saucer, or small plate, in which is placed a piece of white blotting paper cut the size of the dish, is put bottom up over the glass. The whole is then quickly inverted, a match placed under the edge of the glass, and the container is ready for use. As the solution dries out of the saucer the liquid seal at the edge of the glass is broken and more liquid flows into the lower receptacle. Thus the paper is always kept moist.

OTHER SIMPLE PREVENTIVES

Any odor pleasing to man is offensive to the fly and vice versa, and will drive them away.

Take five cents' worth of oil of lavender, mix it with the same quantity of water, put it in a common glass atomizer and spray it around the room where flies are. In the dining room spray it lavishly even on the table linen. The odor is very disagreeable to flies but refreshing to most people.

Geranium, mignonette, heliotrope and white clover are offensive to flies. They especially dislike the odor of honeysuckle and hop blossoms.

According to a French scientist flies have intense hatred for the color blue. Rooms decorated in blue will help to keep out the flies.

Mix together one tablespoonful of cream, one of ground black pepper and one of brown sugar. This mixture is poisonous to flies. Put in a saucer, darken the room except one window and in that set the saucer.

To clear the house of flies, burn pyrethum powder. This stupefies the flies, but they must be swept up and burned.

RECIPES FOR STABLES, BARN AND OUT OF DOORS

Borax is especially valuable around farms and out of doors. One pound of borax to twelve bushels of manure will be found desirable as a poison without injuring its manurial qualities or farm stock. Scatter the borax over the manure and sprinkle with water.

Lye, chloride of lime, or copperas (sulphate of iron) dissolved in water, crude carbolic acid, or any kind of disinfectant may be used in vaults.—The Merchants' Association of New York.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

A Little Kindness, a Little Money, a Few Tracts, and What Came of Them

[It surely pays to be alive to one's opportunities. The following heart-gripping account of a real incident is so typical that we are glad to give it space, believing it ought to be an inspiration to hundreds of others to do as much and more. We have had some correspondence with Sister Nellie Martin, of Perry, Iowa, concerning distribution of tracts, she devoting a great deal of time to this and similar work. Just recently she wrote us a very interesting personal letter about some of her experiences and methods. A few days afterward a letter came in from one she had befriended. We take the liberty of printing a very brief extract from Sister Martin's letter and follow it with one from Mr. Kohl.—EDITORS.]

I feed a tramp, or at least a stranger now and then, and they often ask: "What can I do for you?"

"Where are you going?" I usually ask. It may be to Madrid, Omaha, the Bluffs, or some other place, and I say: "Well, here, brother, I haven't done much for you, and here is a little money to help you on your way, and will you give these tracts to some one on your way? To some one you think would like to do right and know right."

"Yes, indeed, madam, I'll do so," is the usual response.

I know they will read them, too, and read them aloud to a dozen or so of their companions, perhaps making fun of them, but there have been from one to three in such a group that have appreciated the sacred words and have written me to that effect.

MRS. NELLIE MARTIN.

GRAND ISLAND, NEBRASKA, May 1, 1917.

Mr. A. Carmichael, Manager,

THE SAINTS' HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir: Having seen your name and business connection with the SAINTS' HERALD, which was given me by a member of the church in Perry, Iowa, for which you print tracts, and send it, or at least did five years ago, to Mrs. Nellie Martin. I take great pleasure in writing in order to show my appreciation to the church and the good people who belong to it. If Mrs. Martin still takes the HERALD she can see for herself that although it is five years ago, I can use this method in showing her that I have lived to do as I promised her I would. As you will read in the following, I have done a certain amount of good work, in return for the good she did for me at that time. If this is published it will also show that I have not yet finished repaying the debt I owe.

Mrs. Martin was the proprietor of a restaurant and lodging house at Perry when I stopped there July 10, 1912. It was on account of the death of a relative that I left my home in Allentown, Pennsylvania, to attend the funeral in Lincoln, Nebraska. I left there, working my way East as best I could, to continue in the news business. When I arrived in Perry I had no money, having spent the last I had the day before for food. I was hungry and dirty, while my trousers were badly torn, from an accident.

On arrival there I set out to secure some work to earn some money. I found the Martin restaurant and lodging house, stepped inside, and asked for the proprietor. Mrs. Martin said, "I'm the proprietor."

I told her of my situation, and asked for some thread and a needle that I might make necessary repairs. I explained that I wanted to find some work so I might earn enough to proceed on my journey. She needed no help, but said she would do what she could for me. Thereupon she set before me a big warm meal, just as she would before a regular customer. As I ate, she came and talked with me, and asked if I would like to have a lunch to take along. She put up an excellent lunch, handed it to me, with some money saying: "The lunch you can eat if you get hungry before you leave the train, and the money you can use to buy more to eat when you like."

I well remember that day in June, 1912. A member of your church gave with a free heart to one in need, and that one writes now to thank her, desiring that her church may know of it.

With a feeling of deep appreciation I asked her if there was anything I could do to pay her for what she had done for me. I felt that appreciation was not sufficient; I wanted to do something to show it. She told me she would ask me to perform a slight favor, which if I would do, would much more than repay it all. She gave me some tracts, also a copy of the SAINTS' HERALD, and told me to distribute them to those I thought would be most benefited, then to ask those people to kindly pass them on to other friends, continuing the good work as long as possible.

I did as she requested, gladly, but not until I was back at my home in Pennsylvania and again among my newsboys. To them I distributed the tracts until each boy had read them all, and some of them twice.

I have been in the news business since I was a lad seven years of age and am now twenty-three. In 1909 I was given charge of all the newsboys in Allentown, Pennsylvania, and have had exclusive agency for thirty-six dailies and fourteen Sunday publications. Thus you will see my relation to the newsboys. They took a great interest in their work and we got along nicely with each other. When the tracts were handed them, together with the copy of the HERALD, they were glad to read and study them.

Now if anyone were to happen into the library of the Newsboys' Home in Allentown, he would see the same tracts and also others, on one wall of the room, draped with the American colors. The other three walls are decorated with the colors, one carrying a picture of the President, but this one is reserved for the tracts.

Although I am a High Episcopalian, I have done this to show my appreciation toward her, for the kindness she has shown toward me. Perhaps Mrs. Martin will read this, also many others who will learn to do likewise to the stranger, regardless of his belief. The tracts are seen and read daily by not only the newsboys of the city, but also by those who visit the home. The boys have taken such interest in the tracts given me by Mrs. Martin that they are now publishing some themselves; each Wednesday, which are composed by a minister of the Church of the Mediator, set up in type by themselves and printed on a small hand press in tracts of eight pages each. These are not only read by the boys but distributed among their friends at an average of one hundred and fifty a week. We have learned to like your kind people to such an extent that when people ask why those tracts are on the wall, draped with the American flag, we show them a small, framed inscription, reading:

"These tracts are to the memory of one who showed kindness to a stranger, and are here for those to read who will, and to show appreciation for a kindness done to one of our newsboys."

I know and won't forget what it is to be hungry, and to be fed by an entire stranger, and what results may be obtained for such a kind act. "Kindness is to do and say, the kindest thing in the kindest way."

There are too many people whose religion and disposition will allow them to turn a man down, and never give him a kind word. Let us never forget that all mouths must be fed, whether they be criminals, shrinkers, drunkards, or followers of Christ. It is never too late to mend, and we are told, "the most criminal of criminals can or may some day reform and be one of the best citizens."

I have sold out my business and now work for the Union Pacific Railway Company in Grand Island, Nebraska. My mother died and I thought best to come here. If there is anything I can do for you and your church, I will be glad to do it, only for the asking. I desire a copy of your publication if you print this letter.

I shall ever remain, gratefully yours,

ROYAL L. KOHL.

Care Robert A. Kohl, 407 West Ninth Street.

[We have written the brother and sent him some tracts and will try to help him continue the good work. We are also sending a fresh consignment to the Newsboys' Home, at Allentown, Pennsylvania. Some copies of this paper will go to each place and Sister Martin's name is on our list.—

Lamoni Branch

A new bank building and an auto salesroom and garage are in process of erection, together with a number of new residences, all of which we need. May the good work go on.

Almost all of us are affected by the numerous school picnics, high school and college baccalaureate sermons, class days, alumni banquets, commencement addresses, etc., in progress now. The fact that we are a school town is emphasized during these weeks as perhaps at no other time.

Graceland College graduates in sociology and political economy were given a taste of university procedure this year. Each graduate was required to elucidate his thesis before his class and a committee of three local citizens. These latter were given a half hour in which to question the speaker along the lines touched on and together discuss the subject. It gave a very professional aspect to the event.

The Religio contest between the Reds and the Blues is proving very successful in increasing attendance, interest and offerings. The rivalry is intense but pleasant and should result in a much better future for the Religio. We recall one collection that was over eight dollars and the attendance runs up around three and four hundred.

The quorum of the priesthood are giving some very intelligent discussion to the subject of representation at the General Conference, the results of which will be submitted to the stake presidency who were made the nominating committee for next General Conference delegation from this stake. Some most practical and interesting suggestions are made by President Garver in the general priesthood meetings which precede the special quorum sessions each first Sunday afternoon.

The Lamoni Order of Enoch have secured the services of Brother J. W. Barr of this place to manage the local flour mill which they so recently purchased. The building is being renovated and repaired and every effort will be put forth to produce wholesome flour and other cereal products in a manner that will be profitable to both producer and consumer. This initial effort of the order should meet with the heartiest cooperation from the community and church, for in it is an opportunity to make the church independent of the wrong commercial conditions in the world. Zion conditions can be established only through cooperation and we know of no better line upon which to begin than this concerning the staff of life.

It is of more than passing interest to note that the brother who will manage the concern is doing so on a stewardship basis. It is a principle which we have believed for years and for which we have worked and prayed. Now that it has been inaugurated in this manner and in a venture so vital to all our interests, we shall follow it with more than usual interest.

And this is only the beginning. Two of the faculty of Graceland College for next year's work are young brethren whose needs, along with those of their families, will be provided for on the stewardship basis. Gradually the work is extending and we are confident that the servants of God will meet with a loyal support in carrying out these beautiful provisions in the laws of the church that God has given. Zion will shine in her glory when these laws are better understood and more liberally observed.

We beg space to tell of a recent prayer meeting of the young people at the high school, since it portrays conditions of such general interest. This is the parting time of our year. College and school students and teachers, who have come to know and respect not only each other but the community and individuals that compose it, now separate, some of them till the end of time, and it means much. Some go to isolated places, far from church privileges, while others enter the busy marts of trade, to cope with the difficulties presented.

One of the participants was a young brother who has been attending college here the past year. He has not long been a member of the church and after his baptism he was practically ostracized because of the step. From a home of plenty and surrounded by congenial friends, he has been satisfied in his new associations. Yet the going back to meet the strong arguments of opposition brought doubts and fears as to his own ability to meet them. A sister, also new in the work and from a distant State desired the prayers of the Saints that she might have courage to face the problems before her and consistently live the life of a Saint as she now knew it could be lived. Another sister, residing here, must leave for summer school in a distant city. These earnest young people led out in a line of thought which reveals a bond of sympathy which only such a meeting can develop.

The young brother was cheered by a message given through the influence of God's Spirit by one of the brethren. The sisters mentioned shared in a "word of consolation and blessing" given through the instrumentality of another brother, from whose words we quote, they being addressed to those soon to depart: "I [the Lord] have determined in my mind to watch over you and care for you, shall you prove faithful and humble; and in harmony with the humility that you manifest toward me, I will manifest the power of my presence to you, not alone in protecting and caring for you, but imparting unto you understanding, wisdom, knowledge, and as you shall increase in that wisdom, knowledge and understanding, and will lend the power of your intellect, your being entire, more fully and completely unto my service, so shall you be blessed as never before. But remember this: Not alone those thus departing, but all assembled, that it is to require the presence and power of my Spirit to save them in the hour of peril now upon the world, and being visited upon the inhabitants thereof. Many, many of the inhabitants of the earth shall fall before the end shall come of the present scourge and trial. Many, many will be humbled as never before, and under the spirit of that humiliation will come unto me in the spirit of worship, truer, better than they have ever known before."

This is a part of one of the messages and a fleeting glance into a meeting which is perhaps typical of many held throughout the church. We rejoice that the bonds of love unite us in one common brotherhood. The meetings of the young people at the college throughout the school year have been excellent, the gifts being manifest in abundance. We are confident that these young people can but be an influence for righteousness as they become assimilated into their home lives again, many of them as never before.

Church Opening at Mapleton, Kansas

On December 4 the Saints commenced the building of a church edifice at Mapleton and Brother James Faulk, of Independence, was employed to take charge of the building. All worked and some days as many as fifteen hammers and saws could be heard all at the same time. All seemed happy in the thought of having a new church. The building is 30 by 40 feet wide, with an L 22 by 24, with six folding doors and a vestibule 10 by 10. There are circle pews for the main part.

April 29 was set for the opening and Brother Frederick A. Smith came down on the Saturday before. There was bad weather, yet a large crowd attended the services. Brother Smith preached one of his grand sermons and both members and nonmembers were highly pleased. He again preached in the afternoon to the Saints. It rained in the evening and we did not have meeting. All were sorry, too. He had to leave the next morning but promised he would return this fall and hold meetings for us.

The building is complete, at a cost of three thousand dollars. We have it all paid for except six hundred dollars and we hope to pay that off this fall and have President F. M. Smith here for the dedication. The branch is in fine condition under the leadership of H. C. Hughes and the Sunday school attendance averages one hundred and twenty-five. Brother Carl Gamet is the superintendent and we have a noble band of young people.

Independence Stake

Notwithstanding Secretary Vrooman says it will be a gigantic task to conquer the menace of terror that now stalks through the world in the form of a famine, our gardens and fields have a splendid start and Nature is doing her part in the Nation's food drive. He is the man who says "Fight, farm or conserve," and is preaching the war doctrine to the women's organizations in the United States. We have had fine rainfalls lately.

At the "food" gathering in the lower room of the Stone Church on May 17, and also at the Woman's Auxiliary meeting following, there were presented by Sisters Sheldon, Etzenhouser, and those in charge, various matters of much importance. The gardening and conservation propositions were discussed, much valuable information in dietetics and food values were given.

The county has voted to provide free textbooks in the schools.

There have been a few baptisms at the church lately.

We are gratified to learn of the safe arrival of Bishop R. May at his home in London.

The midweek prayer meeting, also Sunday morning and afternoon meetings continue, with fairly good attendance and occasional new arrivals of brethren and sisters. The Saints rejoice in the testimonies of the gift of healing and in the grand messages of instruction that come in the spoken and written word. We of the center place desire the prayers of the Saints abroad in behalf of our sick and afflicted and the beloved brethren and sisters whose names have recently been mentioned.

I am sending The Advertiser containing picture of the Mormon Temple nearing completion. As they are going to permit the unregenerated to inspect the interior before it is dedicated, I shall have the privilege of entering into the "holy of holies" but I doubt if I shall have received any particular endowment on account of the privilege.

RADVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN, May 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I have heard arguments both for and against gathering to Zion, I decided to visit Lamoni and adjoining branches this winter; and must say I did experience a growing interest, a new impetus, a greater spirituality than ever in the past, and I have been somewhat in touch with these branches for the past fourteen years. I thought to find a more Godlike people there than of yore, and can say my hopes were fully realized. Just to behold how they love one another and try to work harmoniously together for Christ will say positively they are his; for is not the Bible proof? The communion and friendship I enjoyed there will be an oasis in my life. I left there several years ago for Canada, and can say I have been busy in the work of the Lord and rejoice in the fruits thereof.

We have many live wires in our district; have enjoyed many great blessings from the Lord's hands—blessings of healing of both self and loved ones, even to beholding an angel setting the broken bone of our beloved son, and many other great manifestations of his great love to his children. I pray the time may soon come that we may be privileged to be numbered among the Saints in Zion and receive of the greater spiritual advantages I perceive to be there for the pure in heart. Yet, God's will be done; if he still has a work for us to do outside Zion to be instrumental in bringing more home with us, I still am content. Some have gathered there from here, and more contemplate going soon. Don't listen to fault finders about Zion; Zion is, and always was, and always will be just what God's people make it. So prepare yourselves to be of Zion and you will find good—much good in Zion. Let this be our slogan. Each one see to it that he goes to make Zion even better by helping and being helped.

Hopefully,

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

WASHINGTON, OKLAHOMA, May 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I have been reading the HERALD for five years and find so much spiritual food in it and never have any way to bear my testimony, I thought a few lines from this part of God's vineyard would not be out of place.

I love the gospel; it brings much comfort to me to know I have been adopted into God's kingdom, and now I know that I should grow in the gospel, but how much we need help! I know we have to work out our own salvation, but cannot we have help? Yes, I believe we can. If our loved ones were in the church with us and we could all work together, I can't help but think the struggle would be lighter. When a home is divided as mine is, I know the one who is trying to live right, has many dark clouds, and when the sunshine comes, you think how nice it would be if all could work together and drive the evil spirit out and never open the door to the Devil.

But no, we must fight. We must be tried. We must go on to perfection if possible. Try to earn life eternal, so when the Devil is bound we can then rejoice. But ah, what about our loved ones? We want to give them a chance.

There are only eight down here in my condition. Sister Etta Wilkerson is my nearest neighbor. We certainly do enjoy each other's company. Like all Latter Day Saints we are as one family and love one another dearly.

Her mother, Sister Mollie Jarvis, Elder E. A. Erwin's sister-in-law, of Dibble, Oklahoma; Sister Maze, of Naples, Oklahoma; Sister Garlin Hucherson, of Blanchard, Oklahoma; Brother G. W. Simmons' daughter, Sister Rosie Lawson, Sister Bulah Marcum, and my sister all belong to the church and are all home makers. Our husbands are nonmembers. Besides this my father and mother, J. S. and Fannie Reed, Brother Bledsoe and family, nearly all live close enough to have prayer meeting. And why don't we? We need some one to lead. We need a shepherd. We want to hear some preaching. No one but isolated Saints can imagine how much life comes to us when we can have one of God's servants come and feed our souls on the bread of life. But I can't sit down and write for an elder to come when I can't pay his way—can't pay my tithing, can't help the church in any way unless it would bring division in the home. And I do love peace and try to be a peacemaker and try to make my home a fit dwelling place for God's Spirit, but when that spirit goes out and the evil spirit comes in, I am sure God's Spirit does not dwell in unholy temples.

But, dear Saints, if you can live the temporal law you ought to live it now if never before. I would if I could, and never will I be satisfied until I can pay the Lord his part. But God knows our heart's desire and maybe some day I can come under the whole law. I said to myself six years ago that if I couldn't pay the Lord his part I would try to spend what I spent in the right way. I don't believe in so much fine dressing. Why don't we make our dress plain and not spend money that ought to help redeem Zion for something to make some poor Saint feel bad because she hasn't as good. What does man's judgment amount to? We should not put so much work on our dress, but work on our heart. Is our heart pure? Remember God judges from the heart. Are we going to be able to stand when we meet our Lord? These are the questions that bother me much. I want to be among the Saints who will not be ashamed to meet their record at the judgment bar of God, and I want my heart to be pure before God so the destroying angel will pass me by.

Now, Saints, I want you to pray for me, and especially my mother. What gets next to my heart are the trials and afflictions that she has to go through when all seems to have turned against her in her awful condition. The Lord still stands by and speaks words of comfort and cheer. Oh, but what a friend we have in Jesus—one that will be with us in life and death.

Now, Saints, let us fight; let all that can, help pay the church debt. I hope I can by fall. Yes, I hope we can have some good meetings this summer that will help us make our homes better. I think about warning our neighbors, but the biggest thing we should think about is setting our own selves in order. I long for the time when I can be with the Saints more, for the world is a cold friend. So let us all come up higher, is the prayer of

Your sister who feels her faults,

MOLLIE CROSS.

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO, May 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: Tell it from Dan to Beersheba that Gomer T. Griffiths is at last a grandfather. His daughter, Martha Lucretia Beck presented her husband Professor Edwin Long Beck a bouncing boy on the 12th, instant. Mother and son are doing finely. Judging from the tone and the emphasis that he gives his voice he will make a first-class preacher. There is great rejoicing on both sides of the house as he is the first grandson.

Our reliable friend, the eminent Doctor Tanner, who so nobly stood by my wife during her severe illness was again in evidence as he had charge of our daughter's case. Doctor Tanner is a cousin to Brother McWethy one of the Holden Stake officers; is very friendly to the church and has proven to be a friend indeed in the time of great need to very many of our church people.

The weather has been very wet and cold for some time, however, it is considerably warmer yesterday and to-day, and consequently the Temple visitors have been turning out like bees out of the bee hives. To-day I had the pleasure of conducting seventy-five young ladies from the Lake Erie Seminary. Most of them were daughters of rich people from all over the country. They were very inquisitive and asked many questions which gave me the grand opportunity to explain to them the difference between the Utah church and ours. I also assembled them in the lower auditorium, and preached them a short sermon on the position we occupied as a religious body in the world. They seemed greatly interested and thanked me for the information that I had imparted unto them. The Saints in general have no idea as to the amount of good that is accomplished by having a minister looking after the Temple during the summer months. Hundreds of people visit the old historic building, yes, people of every religious persuasion, and politicians galore.

We hereby request the Saints who are interested that our coming reunion will start on August 16, and continue over the 26th, to make ample preparation for the same. We are expecting a grand time.

With best wishes to all of the Lord's people, I remain your brother in Christ,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

PONTIAC, MICHIGAN, May 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been a number of years since I contributed to your pages, although at times I have thought I should do so, as I have loved to read letters from other brothers and sisters and have felt encouraged in the gospel work by the testimonies which are given.

Truly the work in which we are engaged is divine, and as the years roll by the gospel only shines brighter before me. As a child I entered the work of the Master and have never regretted the step. Many blessings have come to me in early life, my life being spared on different occasions. And in all I can see the hand of a heavenly Father which has protected me. In my home the blessings of the gospel have been made manifest. My little ones have been raised in sickness, and I thankfully say, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Having been engaged in the district Sunday school and Religio work of Eastern Michigan District, as secretary, before my marriage, some of my friends will remember or recognize me better as Emma H. Whitford. Since our marriage we have resided a great deal of our time at Marlette. At the present we are residing at Pontiac and are members of a branch here. We have no church edifice, but through the kindness of Brother and Sister Edward Schell services have been held at their residence. We are endeavoring to secure a place for our services.

Trusting that the work of the Master may prosper and flourish in every land until we can all meet in that bright and shining Zion promised to those who faithfully endure,

EMMA MEAD.

ALKALI, MONTANA, May 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: This is Mothers' Day, and as a mother I write. We are isolated from church privileges, although we have just organized a small Sunday school. We have but a few, as there are only a handful of Saints here and as yet not many outsiders have found their way in. But we are living in hopes that some may soon be drawn into it.

We had a union Sunday school at our house nearly a year and I was superintendent of the same, but some seemed to think they were getting too much gospel, so they changed it to the schoolhouse and now they have dropped off one at a time until they have been unable to have Sunday school for the past month; which shows, as Gamaliel said, it must have been of man as it could not stand. It must be classed as were the ones he spoke of in Acts 5: 36, 37, which came to naught. And we feel in hopes and are praying that when the disappointment wears off they may gradually come into our Sunday school.

We feel with so many children in this community our Sunday school ought to be large. We have been told that even among the Saints there are many whose children do not attend Sunday school and church, neither do the parents. Now, dear brothers and sisters who have church privileges, if you were only isolated for a while, I'm sure you would enjoy the privilege of communion with Saints, and what blessing it is to gather together. My husband and I have been in the work six years, or I have, and he four, and our little boy was baptized last June. We have been privileged to partake of the sacrament but once since coming into the church, and, oh, I think it is so strengthening. I'm sure if any of you were isolated for two or three years and then placed back where you had the privilege again, you would never miss a meeting when you had the chance.

We all dearly love this work and know it is of God. We have received many blessings since coming into it that we could never have received in the world. And we mothers ought to so live before our children so that when they are grown up, as they stand by our last resting place or wander in the ways of the world, they may say as did Abraham Lincoln: "All I am or ever expect to be I owe to my angel mother." We have but one little boy, but, thank God, I am proud of him. He is in the work heart and soul and can be among worldly children and does not seem to want to partake of worldly ways. He is not afraid to own his Lord or blush to speak his name.

And let us, as mothers, unite our prayers in behalf of the children that they may be and remain pure in their habits and in their play, and above all let us place those books and games before them that may elevate and enlighten their minds insomuch that they may help to raise those who are even older than they and those who are not in the fold. If mothers make companions of their children and gain their confidence, they will come to us and tell us of their little troubles and we may often advise them when fathers are too busy to listen. Mother was made for that reason and was given the greater or a more tender love because God saw she, in rearing her children right, would need it, and a child naturally looks to mother for love and sympathy. Therefore, we should pray the more earnestly for that love that brings us and our children closer together.

We all love our children but lack patience. When we become tired with the toils of the day we often want to get them off to bed and sometimes do not even see that the little prayer is offered, and as mother is not near, the tired little ones—for they are often as tired as we—creep into bed without a prayer or good-night kiss, and are soon fast asleep.

See that the children attend family worship. It is often the means whereby they are brought into the fold with us. Teach them to lead in prayer; though their prayer is sometimes short and poorly worded, God knows the little heart and will strengthen it. Teach them to take their turn at the table. Teach them that they as well as the older ones, are to thank God for the food he has so carefully provided. Then, and in this way, they are made to know they are on an equal with us and God cares for them.

Let us all unite in this prayer for the children. I also ask the Saints to pray for my husband whose health is very poor this spring. Pray that he may be able to perform the work placed in his hands to do, and I'm sure with your united prayers he may be healed.

Your sister in one true faith, and ever praying for the church and its leaders, I am,
CATHERINE BUNDY.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, May 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: Your efforts to fill "Elbert's" place are appreciated. But don't you think that you are rather over-emphasizing the "educated ministry" proposition?

Certainly, we are in sympathy with the idea that every Saint should seek learning by study and by faith, and believe that every representative of the Church of Jesus Christ should seek to qualify, but the something between the lines and in the lines and all through the editorial sections of all the church papers and the Autumn Leaves, especially the DAILY HERALD, leaves us with the feeling that "undue stress" is being laid upon the form, the outward appearance, so to speak, and we miss something.

Some of the best sermons that I have ever heard preached in my life have been by men who were not "learned." One especially was given through Brother C. E. Willey, who does not always speak "correct" English and who would no doubt mortify the sister who is quoted in HERALD of May 2, as he very probably might say, "I had went," but Brother Editor, if those present at that meeting were not edified and built up, then their words, their looks were no indication of what they felt. And the result was, in our mind at least: "Surely God has spoken." This experience has not been the exception; it has more nearly been the rule.

But no need to multiply words. Others are saying better than I can, that it has been so often the plan of God to work in ways that are not after man's wisdom and man's learning, that we only felt to call attention to impression that is left upon us away off here from the center, as we read. And we say in all meekness and with a desire to understand and estimate correctly, that we cannot help feeling that too much stress is being laid upon the mechanical part of the message and there is too much eulogy of men.

The church has many, many able men, some college bred and many learned in life's school and Spirit-taught, and our experience has been that the vital thing is the message, not the men nor the manner.

Working and praying for Zion's weal,

From Here and There

Brethren J. Arthur Davis and Lee Quick are at Plains, Kansas, having gone there on the 18th from Pratt. They expect to begin meetings in the tent as soon as they can get it set up.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, May 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: The work in the Northeastern Nebraska District is taking on new life. Prospects seem good for the year. It always takes adversity in the world to cause people to rely upon God, so the world crisis is causing people to think more. Our local men are waking up to duty as I never saw them before.

Omaha alone is a great field for labor. Our prayer meetings have lately been a feast at the table of the Lord.

Your coworker,
HUBERT CASE.

WEST BROOK, ILLINOIS, May 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are of the isolated ones, Plano being our branch home, fifty miles distant. We have never faltered in the faith and obtain much enjoyment from the church literature.

I would like to hear from some Saints in northern Michigan in a good branch where one can have a climate that will allow relief from hay fever—some one who would be willing to take a boarder for five or six weeks from about August 8. I will be willing to pay a fair price for board and care for only the plainest. I do not care to go to a summer resort and cannot afford it, but in this climate suffer terribly every day and must escape this year if possible. Will some Saint please write, stating price of board and railroad accommodation? I can give good references both in and out of the church and will try not to cause extra work.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. HIEL BRUNSON.

FORT SMITH, ARKANSAS, May 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: A few lines from the land of flowers. I have begun another year's missionary work. I have just had a fine meeting at Fanshawe, Oklahoma; baptized sixteen, blessed eight children. The Saints were built up in the gospel; the sinners were made to see that the judgments of God were on them and if they did not repent they would be destroyed. Our crowds were fine. We turned away many that could not get in the house in which I baptized the first people at this place fourteen years ago. Since that time a branch has been organized and a nice little church built. Brother Ben Goss and Brother Baxter Hooks and Abe and W. O. Brannon are doing all they can to promote the gospel there.

I stopped off a few days in Potena; found Sister Milner there running a nice hotel, and indeed she knows how to take care of the missionary and place the necessary means in his hands to help him on his way. Brother Davis and wife live there. They are fine Saints, indeed, and are doing all they can for the gospel. We administered the sacrament to the few Saints, had a fine prayer meeting. On Sunday evening we met our worthy Brother S. N. Gray. We left him there, hoping to get the people of that town interested in the gospel. Our next stop will be in Johnson County, on Mulberry Mountain, Arkansas.

So may the Lord bless his work this year everywhere an effort is put forth, and may we be able to flash out to the people the light of inspiration amid the dark clouds of war so they can see the silver lining.

Your brother,
E. A. ERWIN.

Gospel Literature Commission

Every live Latter Day Saint is interested in the distribution of gospel literature, but everyone does not know how this work can be done most effectively. We agree that organization is necessary, and organization involves the selection of certain deeply interested men and women to form committees with power to act for the entire bodies such committees represent. The chief gospel literature workers of the past have decided that a very good plan is to have organized in every district and branch a gospel literature commission authorized to handle in a systematic manner the distribution of church literature in the jurisdiction of each commission. To start the good work forward under the new scheme it will be necessary for these commissions to be organized at once.

The general gospel literature commission, which was organized this year by the General Conventions and Conference, does not hope to accomplish its full work by simply inserting this brief communication in the church papers, but the notice may catch some interested eye and start them on the road to victory. To this end it is urgently requested of you, Brother Branch President, Brother Sunday School Superintendent, Brother Religio President, to call a special business meeting of your respective society and elect a member to form a local gospel literature commission, to enter at once upon this important work of distributing all

ORGANIZATION OF FAR WEST STAKE

In answer to call by President Frederick M. Smith, Saints of Far West and Nodaway Districts met in mass conference at the First Saint Joseph church Saturday morning, June 2, to participate in the organization of these districts into a stake, carrying out the order of the late General Conference.

This occasion was one auspicious not only for the people of this territory but also for the church at large, since it marked the coupling up of the territory heretofore included under stake organization, by the addition of a large and fertile field, all to come under the intensive cultivation made possible through the fuller organization of stake work.

The weather had been of a nature to discourage attendance, excessive rains having been the order for some days, culminating in a terrific bombardment the night before. The morning broke bright and fair, however, and at the hour of 9 a. m. the 2d the church was comfortably filled. The ardor of the Saints from Saint Joseph and from various parts of the territory was rewarded by the presence of the good Spirit in abundance and in light. An excellent meeting was enjoyed under the direction of J. A. Gillen.

Following this preparatory service, at 10.15 the assembly was called to order by F. M. Sheehy. Supporting him in the presidency of the conference at his suggestion and after he was by motion chosen to preside, were Peter Anderson, W. M. Aylor and J. A. Gillen, also of the Quorum of Twelve.

The Saints were somewhat disappointed in that President Frederick M. Smith, detained on important work, could not be present. Giving their united support to those directing the conference, however, they moved in as a united band, and on every action had the vote was unanimous.

The chairman having stated the nature and purpose of the meeting, the conference by formal motion concurred in the action of the joint council of First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve and of the General Conference, providing that a stake to be known as the Far West Stake be organized, with Saint Joseph as the nucleus or central place.

The action of the council and conference placing before the assembly Elder R. S. Salyards for president of the new stake, and Elder B. J. Scott for bishop was in each instance unanimously approved by rising vote.

R. S. Salyards not having received light on this important matter, was not prepared to nominate counselors. Following a statement that he had received divine direction so indicating, B. J. Scott presented for counselors in the bishopric of the stake, E. E. McCormick and Austin M. Dobson. These nominations were approved.

To constitute the standing high council of the Stake, to be presided over by the stake presidency, the following men were presented and by separate motion unanimously approved: C. Archibald, H. D. Ennis, G. W. Best, D. C. Wilke, Paul Pugsley, L. A. Keck, T. T. Hinderks, B. R. Constance, C. Snider, Z. J. Lewis, S. E. Job, J. Hovenga.

For secretary and recorder of the stake Minnie E. Scott was chosen on nomination by R. S. Salyards, he having by motion been requested to nominate.

For stake chorister on nomination by A. N. Hoxie, general church chorister, Sister Dana Scott was chosen. For member of the library board, E. J. Armstrong was selected. For stake historian Sister R. E. Fisher was recommended for ratification by Heman C. Smith, general historian.

Recommendations for ordination were referred to the stake president and high council for consideration and report to next conference.

A motion prevailed ordering that when the conference adjourn it do so to meet at the call of stake presidency.

At this juncture J. F. Garver, president of Lamoni Stake, arose and in fitting language on behalf of the Lamoni Stake presented to R. S. Salyards a gavel made from the office chair of John Smith, former president of Lamoni Stake, and with whom Brethren Garver and Salyards had for a number of years been associated as his counselors. It was suggested in the presentation by Elder Garver and in the reply of Elder Salyards that this gavel symbolized the administrative authority that must be exercised by the president of the Far West Stake, and the trust the people must place in him as a man of God if the work was to move forward as it should under its fuller organization. The gavel also symbolized the fellowship and Christian love that had existed between the men who had occupied in the presidency of Lamoni Stake, and which exists between the present presidents of Lamoni and Far West Stakes, and which is to cement the people of these territories and the Saints of all the stakes in the developments before the stakes in their important work in connection with the redemption of Zion.

At 2 p. m. the church was filled for the organization of the auxiliaries of the stake. An excellent interest and feeling were manifest, forecasting the good work before these organizations.

Sister Lulu Sandy of Kansas City, Missouri, representing the general Woman's Auxiliary being present, presided in the Woman's Auxiliary convention. For officers of the Far West Stake Woman's Auxiliary the following were selected, after proper rules and regulations had been adopted to govern the association as part of the general society: president, Sister R. S. Salyards; vice president, Sister E. E. McCormick; secretary, Zaide Salyards; treasurer, Sister Scott Daniels.

R. S. Salyards on motion presided over the assembly of the Sunday school association for the organization of the stake Sunday school. For officers the following were selected: superintendent, John L. Bear; first assistant superintendent, E. J. Armstrong; second assistant superintendent, Alexander Jensen; secretary, Geoffrey Bear; treasurer, Evan Hopkins; normal superintendent, R. P. Ross; home department superintendent, Fay Gates; member library board, Scott Daniels; gospel literature bureau, William Hamen; cradle roll superintendent, Mary Hinderks.

R. S. Salyards also presided over the Religio convention, which organized for work in the stake by selecting the following: John Hovenga, president; F. L. Hinderks, vice president; Mary Wells, secretary; B. J. Scott, treasurer; Mary Dice, superintendent home department; Jeanette Pugsley, member good literature committee; Sister L. M. Wilson, superintendent temperance department.

The conventions adjourned to meet at time and place designated by the stake auxiliary officers.

A large audience greeted Elder J. A. Gillen at the eight o'clock service Saturday evening, to listen to an excellent sermon, and to participate in the closing exercises of a day of far-reaching significance for the Far West and Nodaway territory and the church at large.

The excellent spirit of the opening day of the conference together with the interest and zeal of the people promised well for Sunday, and the Saints came together with faces radiant with expectancy and turned toward God and the altar; nor was their preparation in vain. The building was taxed to the limit at each service, and God met the Saints and blessed abundantly in all the exercises of the day.

Bishop B. R. McGuire was the speaker of the morning. Elder Gillen had on the evening before emphasized the beauty of the organization just effected. Bishop McGuire at this hour brought forth logically and forcefully the importance of the work to be done, and the strength to come to the individual in the performance of the same. Elder J. F. Garver in a twenty-minute address in the evening, preceding the rendition of a cantata, raised the question as put by the Psalmist, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Or who shall stand in his holy place?" Who shall advance in the upward scale of development within Far West Stake, and the church? Who is to have part under this more complete organization and in this important work? And the Psalmist made answer, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart."

It was in the afternoon ordination and prayer service that the Saints realized to the fullest the occasion and Spirit of God. The Lord in this meeting came near to the people in fervent prayer and feeling testimony as well as in the gift of prophecy, accepting of their work of organization, acknowledging their desires under the same, and promising support and development on condition of faithfulness.

The cantata "The light everlasting," beautifully rendered by the combined choir of Far West District, under the able direction of E. C. Bell of Saint Louis, was a fitting climax to the excellent services of a momentous day and conference. And with the benediction the Saints parted in serious mood and pledged to do all in their power to make the work of this new stake a success.

This organization, as already suggested, links up the work of the stakes of the church by joining Holden, Kansas City and Independence Stakes on the south and Lamoni on the north, thus bringing a large block of territory, and that, too, in the very heart of Joseph's land, under this higher organization for intensified cultivation and the further development necessary at this time if the church is to move forward in its work and mission.

May God prosper Zion and her stakes and all his work, and deliver it and the Saints from the trying scenes of these times, which he will do if his people be alert and loyal.

A PARTICIPANT.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Favorable News

Several recent letters have been received from California concerning President Elbert A. Smith. All, we are glad to say, are favorable. He is able to attend services every Sunday now and is located among church people with whom he is well acquainted and who are glad of the opportunity to help him.

Patriotism

It will be noted that this week there appears a number of patriotic items. It seems scarcely avoidable in the present conditions confronting us. As a world organization and as a general publication our sympathy goes out to all the people of the world and very much so to the Central Powers. As individuals we owe an obligation to the country in which we find our home; and above all to stand forth for the principles of righteousness, personal and national righteousness, for freedom and democracy.

The European War

After a lull in aggressive activities, the British have resumed a violent offensive on the Arras front, the entire week being marked by intense aerial activity. The Italians continue to surge forward in the rough country north of Trieste, and report eighty-five thousand prisoners in the past fifteen days. Brazil has voted to ally herself with the United States in resisting the Central Powers and the Spanish situation seems to become more grave each day. The party of nine United States commissioners have safely arrived at a Russian port, and it is expected they will do much to strengthen the hands of the new Russian Government.

President Smith

Since the joint council adjourned, President Frederick M. Smith has spent most of the time in the field. We have no direct advice, but from such information as has been received it appears he left Independence about May 17 to attend to important matters in the Rocky Mountain mission, visiting Elder James E. Kelley at Denver. Returning to Independence he left at once for Chicago and from there has proceeded to the extreme East to attend to vital matters for the church. The editors hope he may be able to attend the National Conference of Charities and Corrections on his return trip, as he is especially interested in this work, and the program this year is of more than usual importance.

Library Workers Notice

Detailed information for getting your library interests on a proper working basis may be secured from the secretary of the general commission, Vernon A. Reese, 3833 West Park Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The commission is now conferring with the new gospel literature commission as to the feasibility of establishing a number of circulating sets of church books and tracts for loaning to nonmembers. This is a matter of vital interest to all of us. Has anyone had experience in this phase of the work which they are willing to tell the HERALD readers?

Much Storm Damage

On the evening of May 26 three tornadoes swept through the southern part of Missouri, Illinois and a part of Tennessee, resulting in the destruction of several hundred lives, many injured and property damage amounting to millions. On the 30th another struck southern Missouri and southern Illinois and killed about twenty-five, injuring scores. Then on June 2 a destructive storm was reported from eastern Kansas, southern Missouri and parts of Oklahoma and Arkansas, with one dead and twenty injured. On the same date a big circus tent in Uniontown, Pennsylvania was blown down and one killed, with a number injured. Heavy rains and destructive floods are reported from a number of quarters.

Food Speculation May Stop

In England food speculation has been prohibited by the ministry of food. In this country considerable agitation has been noted of late which is now assuming tangible form. The Senate has passed a bill making it a felony to hoard food supplies or destroy it for the purpose of raising prices. Federal indictments have been returned of late in Chicago against a number of egg speculators, while some time ago about as many onion dealers were indicted in the East. The inflated prices on coal and other necessities are to be the subject of immediate inquiries. The ultimate consumer, being ground between the upper and lower millstones, hopes there may be an adjustment somewhere.

Change in "Ensign" Management

We note that in accordance with the appointment by the joint council, Brother W. H. Deam who has so long acted as business manager of the Ensign Publishing House, has resigned his position and taken charge of one of the branches in Independence Stake. He has been succeeded by Bishop Mark H. Siegfried who has acted as editor of the Ensign in the past and at present is bishop of the Independence Stake. Brother Deam was employed by the Herald Publishing House for twenty-two years and has been connected with the Ensign for about fourteen years. His name is well-known throughout the church as he has during these years contributed much in a literary way as well as mechanical, and the HERALD joins in wishing him continued success in his new work as a pastor.

Memorial Day in Lamoni

The day's events began with the flag raising ceremonies at the Herald Publishing House. The management have recently had erected on the lot north of the building a large pole that towers above the buildings and trees. On this a large flag was raised—though the new one eight by sixteen feet, had not arrived—while our community-fostered junior band effectively rendered the "Star-Spangled Banner." The address was by Elder Heman C. Smith, who among other things said the publishing house standing near should in the same manner as the flag, stand for the extension of the principles of truth in all the world—both emblems of God-recognized institutions back of them which should be a mighty factor in the maintenance of the rights of man. The usual march to the cemetery was concluded by the services under the auspices of the veterans of the Civil War, of which we have only a very few left, and some of them too feeble to be with their comrades. It seemed that more than usual took part in the exercises of the day, which means too much under the present circumstances.

Graceland Baccalaureate and Commencement

Owing to an injury to Elder Walter W. Smith, president of the Independence Stake, he was not able to be present to deliver the baccalaureate sermon to the Graceland College students as had been announced. Elder John F. Garver substituted in a very able manner, giving a most creditable discussion of our present duty in the world crisis. We have not learned the nature of Brother Walter's injuries, but are pleased to be advised that they are not serious, only such as prevented his attendance. The evening of June 1 was very rainy and disagreeable, so much so that the attendance at the commencement exercises was very small, even some of the graduates residing in town as well as members of the faculty being prevented from coming. Elder S. A. Burgess delivered the address of the evening, and since the stenographer was unable to come, he may be prevailed on to at least incorporate his ideas on the war as a test of character into some of his future productions, that many more may be benefited. A goodly number graduated from the various departments, as follows: Junior college, 7; academy, 8; commercial, 4; shorthand and typewriting, 8; piano, 1; oratory, 2; preparatory, 7.

Flag Raising at Graceland

On May 31 Graceland College observed class day. An extensive program had been arranged for, including a parade of decorated floats, for which the local commercial club had offered prizes, a basket dinner. The weather was so unfavorable these were called off. In the afternoon Elder J. F. Garver was the speaker on the occasion of the raising of a large flag, nine by eighteen feet in size, on the tower that before the declaration of hostilities carried one end of the wireless antennae at the college station. This makes the largest flag in this region and it can be seen for many miles in all directions. The speech by the stake president was fearlessly expressed and favorably received. He urged that this Nation had observed the example the Lord had established for all people, as recorded in the latter part of Doctrine and Covenants 95:6, and therefore was justified in proceeding by force to maintain the principles of democracy not only on this land but as a world condition, that the gospel might go to the nations. Other features of the day were tennis games by the students, and "broncho busting" by one of the western students. He successfully rode the worst outlaw horse and the most dangerous mule the community could bring forth, to the delight of a large crowd.

National Conference of Charities and Corrections

On June 6 to 13 the National Conference of Charities and Corrections will meet at Pittsburgh. The abolition of poverty was expected to be the topic for special consideration, but the intervention of the war has caused a change in the original plan which now will consider the social problems of the war, the special relief needed at home and abroad, the care of families of disabled soldiers, economy of food and the maintenance of standard of living, prohibition, the protection of women and children in industry will be presented by authority on these subjects. After-the-war problems will likewise come up for consideration. Among the speakers announced we note Herbert C. Hoover, William H. Taft, Samuel Gompers, and Miss Helen R. Y. Reid, director and convener of the ladies auxiliary of the Canadian patriotic fund, and Doctor Steward Paton of Princeton University. It is the need of consultation that causes this large gathering to be assembled at this time. Rural problems, public health, food and drug control, mobilization of the brain power of the Nation, are other special round table topics for consideration. Many of these problems will, no doubt, be discussed in department meetings, while the original theme will still be preserved in the presidential address "The conquest of poverty." The great and growing interest in these topics should be of interest to all of our readers.

GRACELAND EXTENSION INSTITUTE

Editorial comment in recent issues of the HERALD called attention to courses of instruction for the priesthood, calculated to improve their efficiency. This has prompted many to write us in a very general way, asking for advice or help. The only purpose of the institute is to serve those who desire to study. The following information may indicate something of the nature and scope of the courses offered.

The institute differs from a regular correspondence school in that no large enrollment fee is charged, and the student is left more on his own responsibility. The courses are designed primarily for self-improvement. The institute serves to bring together those who wish to study and those who are qualified to give helpful outlines and suggestions for study. The great burden of responsibility for the success of the effort must rest with the one desiring the improvement.

WHO SHOULD ENROLL

The courses of the institute are open to all grades of students, everywhere, provided they have had sufficient preliminary study to handle the subject selected in a satisfactory manner. Every young or middle-aged person in the church should be seeking to qualify for most efficient service in his particular field. Neither the church nor the world has place for the careless and indifferent worker. Especially does it seem desirable that young men designated for the priesthood should be studying to prepare for the work before them. We are commanded to seek learning, both by study and by faith.

Those who have been denied an early education must expect to take elementary work until prepared to advance to higher subjects. We should try to concentrate our efforts rather than to scatter them. Settle upon one or two subjects and master them before going on. Choose the subjects most directly in line with your particular calling in life.

OUR INSTRUCTORS

The faculty of the institute numbers forty-five men and women who have had the advantage of exceptional training. They gladly volunteer their services in the interests of the church, realizing that our common good depends upon the preparation of all for better service.

THE COURSES

Courses in English prove most popular. Those who have had only a common school education or less should begin with grammar. Others who have had advanced work may profit by a short review of grammar and then add composition and rhetoric. For the priesthood special emphasis is laid upon organization of material, the proper use of words, the correction of faulty expression, etc.

Men who have had a fair education in English may gain great good from a splendid course offered in expression, or public speaking. As further training in the line of the priesthood, a strong course in homiletics, or the science of sermonizing, may be undertaken.

Prospective students who enjoy profound study in the more abstract sciences may take psychology or logic. But these subjects should not be undertaken by those unused to study.

Courses in law, economics, and sociology are especially profitable to men interested in the work of the bishopric and in the financial and social problems confronting the church.

For Book of Mormon students a splendid course is given in archæology. This offers an exceptional opportunity to study the most recent works under the direction of competent instructors.

Strong courses are offered in history. A variety of other subjects have been provided as there was demand. Still others are in prospect. New courses will be given in any field or subject where both a student and an instructor can be located.

ENROLLMENT

The present active student membership in the institute numbers about one hundred. The fee for any subject is two dollars and fifty cents. Missionaries and others upon an allowance basis may enroll in any subject for one dollar.

A complete catalogue of courses and an enrollment blank may be had for the asking. For full particulars address the registrar, the undersigned.

The universal laws of mind in contact with mind, or communicating therewith, make it as necessary that the Lord's preachers know how to unfold the gospel story, as it is that they know what to unfold; and by the way, it isn't a bad idea to exercise some judgment as to what things to leave folded up.—James E. Yates.

MACHU PICCHU AND THE MEGALITHIC PEOPLE--PART 3

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD

ONE OR TWO SETS OF FOUR BROTHERS

1. Manco was the youngest of four brothers.
1. Nephi was the youngest of four brothers.
2. Manco had a brother enemy or traitor.
2. Nephi had a brother enemy who wanted to kill him.
3. Manco became the first king of his people at Cuzco.
3. Nephi became the first king of his people at Nephi.
4. Manco was most skillful and handy.
4. Nephi was most skillful and handy.
5. Manco was provided with a divine emblem.
5. Nephi was provided with a divine emblem.
6. Manco's divine emblem pointed the way for them to travel.
6. Nephi's spindle pointed the way for them to travel.
7. Manco's divine emblem or compass led them to Cuzco.
7. Nephi's revelations led him to Nephi.
8. Manco's people were given a divine start.
8. Nephi's people were given a divine start.
9. Manco's name became an official Peruvian title.
9. Nephi's name became an official title among the Nephites.
10. Manco taught the megalithic people the arts of agriculture.
10. Nephi taught his people to be industrious and work in metals.
11. Manco's colony were white, bearded men.
11. Nephi's colony were of the white race.
12. Manco's colony crossed the sea.
12. Nephi's colony crossed the sea.
13. Manco's people had books and letters.
13. Nephi's people had books and letters.
14. Manco seems to have been a good all-around man.
14. Nephi seems to have been a good all-purpose man.

The names of the four brothers are variously given by different tribes, so also Noah's name is variously given by primitive races. In China he is Fohi, in India, Mann, and with the Aztecs, Nata.

The writer concludes that there is in these stories but one set of four brothers, that Manco the founder of the megalithic civilization in South America is the Book of Mormon Nephi, the founder of the Nephite-Lamanite civilization in the land of Nephi, and that the Nephites and Lamanites were the primitive people whose annals Professor Bingham says were lost, which loss he thinks is a "calamity to mankind."

Nephi says that they took "seed of every kind with them into the wilderness," (1 Nephi 5) and that in the promised land they "began to till the earth and we began to plant seeds; yea, we did put all our seeds into the earth, which we had brought from the land of Jerusalem, and it came to pass that they did grow exceedingly; wherefore, we were blessed in abundance." (1 Nephi 5:214, 215.)

As they journeyed in the wilderness, they found "beasts in the forests of every kind, both the cow, and the ox, and the ass, and the horse, and the goat, and all manner of wild animals, which were for the use of men, and we did find all manner of ore, both of gold, and of silver, and of copper." (1 Nephi 5:216, 217.)

And the Lord was with us; and we did prosper exceedingly; for we did sow seed, and we did reap again in abundance, and we began to raise flocks, and herds, and animals of every kind. . . . And I did teach my people to build buildings, and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver and of precious ores.—2 Nephi 4:15-21.

And we multiplied exceedingly and spread upon the face of the land, and became exceeding rich in gold, and in silver, and in precious things, and in fine workmanship of wood in buildings, and in machinery, and in iron and copper, and brass and steel, making all manner of tools of every kind to till the ground and weapons of war.—Ibid., p. 137.

And behold, there was all manner of gold in both these lands, and of silver, and of precious ores of every kind; and there were curious workmen, who did work all kinds of ore, and did refine it; and thus they did become rich.—Helaman 2:130.

They [Peruvians] had great skill in the art of working metals, especially gold and silver. Besides these precious metals, they had copper, tin, lead, and quicksilver.—Ancient America, p. 248.

Some of the languages of the country, and perhaps all, had names for iron.—Ibid., p. 248.

Professor Bingham and his colleague, O. F. Cook, no doubt would smile at the Nephite story of steel tools and machinery. But which is the most reasonable story to believe, the lever and stone hammer story, or the steel tools and machinery story? Their work is superior to anything of the kind in Europe or America! Is it not reasonable to believe that they had some kind of machinery to move those large blocks of stone out of their native bed? And also some kind of cranes to handle and place them in the walls? This steel tool story and machinery of the Book of Mormon takes the Devil out of the Spanish tales of "superhuman" work, and makes all look reasonable.

Mr. Cook says, "They thought nothing of handling blocks of stone that weigh over fifteen tons with a skill that has amazed all beholders."

"I, Nephi," tells some big ones, but not quite as big as some writers do in reviewing Peruvian antiquities, their work by these writers is made to appear "superhuman," but quite reasonable when seen with men using tempered tools and machinery. It is said that the Peruvians worked iron mines near Lake Titicaca. (See Atlantis, pp. 140, 451.)

We noticed that Mr. Priest says, "All modern masonry, whether executed in Europe or America is inferior when compared with that of the ancient capital of the Incas." (Prehistoric America, p. 411.)

Professor Bingham of Yale University, and O. F. Cook, his colleague, and others, too, say the ancient Peruvians neither had tempered tools nor machinery, cranes, pulleys, nor squares; that they knew nothing of such mechanical contrivances. That being the case, the Peruvians did better and finer mason work without such tools than Europeans or Americans can do with all their modern contrivances and improvements! Does that sound reasonable? The Book of Mormon comes and says the Nephites of that country (who the writer thinks were the megalithic people) had steel tools and machinery. Which is the most reasonable story of all? This Nephite theory of steel tools and machinery dismisses the Devil story as in the building of the Cuzco fortress, and eliminates that "amazement in all beholders" at the fine work in fitting those fifteen-ton blocks of stone in the buildings of Olantaytambo, because the Nephite theory puts men to work there, not with a stone hammer and a hand spike, but with steel tools and machinery.

But bear in mind that great changes came to these people soon afterwards. That "barbarian invasion" about A. D. 200, when the megalithic king was slain and his army defeated, then several state leaders "rebelled against the young heir," and the old empire was thus divided and destroyed; then followed five hundred years of "anarchy" and "chaos," or about a thousand years of decadence, during which many of the "arts were lost." Then about 1200 A. D., Manco-Capac, a local king of Machu Picchu, and other Incas later on, conquered rival states and revived civilization and made Peru what it was when Pizarro arrived there. (See National Geographic Magazine for February, 1915.)

A CHRISTIAN NATION

And it came to pass in the thirty and sixth year, the people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.—4 Nephi 1: 3, 4.

Jesus had soon after his resurrection established his church among these people, and this was A. D.

36. Before this conversion they had for hundreds of years had racial wars, such as is indicated in the disputes with the four brothers.

And it came to pass that there was no contention in the land, because of the love of God which did dwell in the hearts of the people. And there were no envyings, nor strifes, nor tumults, nor whoredoms, nor lyings, nor murders, nor any manner of lasciviousness; and surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God; there were no robbers, nor murderers, neither were there Lamanites, nor any manner of ites; but they were in one, the children of Christ, and heirs to the kingdom of God; and how blessed were they, for the Lord did bless them in all their doings; yea, even they were blessed and prospered, until an hundred and ten years had passed away; . . . and there was no contention in all the land.—4 Nephi 1: 17-21.

This is the golden age of the Book of Mormon people. "No manner of ites" indicates that by agreement the old racial names were dropped.

And it came to pass that Nephi, he that kept this last record, (and he kept it upon the plates of Nephi) died, and his son Amos kept it in his stead; and he kept it upon the plates of Nephi also; and he kept it eighty and four years, and there was still peace in the land, save it were a small part of the people who had revolted from the church, and took upon them the name of Lamanites; therefore there began to be Lamanites again in the land.—4 Nephi 1: 22, 23.

The old racial name Lamanites appears again among these people, and likely with it that old intense racial hatred. But the new idea of a Christian church in South America with such a high standard of life, without selfish greed at a time when the ancestors of many of our readers were living in tents, clothed not in silks as now, but in the skins of animals, living by the chase and fishing, and were numbered among that "barbarian horde" who were beginning to push in the Roman outposts, and were pouring over its frontiers into the realms of the Cæsars, such a Christian era in South America, at that time pictured as one of the happiest people in the history of the race, with a continued Christian prosperity for about one hundred and sixty years, is certainly taking us into the land of doubt. We look at South America later and see there many aboriginal races, sullen, and worshiping idols, or the sun, but they are without a past, and without a future, and we wonder, was it their ancestors who destroyed that highly civilized race? Our ancestors, those barbarian hordes who sorely troubled Rome, are said to be now the most scientific people in the world, but the South Americans have retrograded.

This converted government we see abolished slavery without bloodshed, and abolished poverty without force, they were not rich and poor, bond and free now. They were before this Christian era. But no strife now, nor tumults, nor lyings, nor whoredoms, nor murders, nor any manner of lasciviousness, nor robbers, nor Lamanites, nor any manner of ites. That old racial hatred, hatched out of the four brother dispute, had not passed through the melting pot of God's love, and they were reborn, and made new creatures in Christ. The church prospered, and the arts of civilized life cultivated, and the art of war done away by the love of man, and the love of God! But about A. D. 190 a cloud appeared in that southern land, the church or state began to have trouble. "A small part of the people had revolted, from the church, and took upon them the name of Lamanites, therefore there began to be Lamanites again in the land."

Those few people who "revolted" from the church seem to have done more than withdraw their fellowship from the church communion. We do not know how close the church and state were allied at the time of this revolt. The act of revolting is "particularly a renunciation of allegiance or fealty to one's sovereign, state or government; insurrection; rebellion; mutiny; sedition; as the revolt of the Netherlands against the Spanish yoke."

And now in this two hundred and first year, there began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of costly apparel, and all manner of fine pearls, and the fine things of the world. And from that time forth they did have their goods and their substance no more common among them, and they began to be divided into classes, and they began to build up churches unto themselves, to get gain, and began to deny the true church of Christ. And it came to pass that when two hundred and ten years had passed away, there were many churches in the land; yea, there were many churches which professed to know the Christ, and yet they did deny the more part of his gospel. . . . And again, there was another church which denied the Christ, and they did persecute the true church of Christ.—4 Nephi 1: 27-31.

And now it came to pass in this year, yea, in the two hundred and thirty-first year, there was a great division among the people. And it came to pass that in this year there arose a people who were called the Nephites, and they were true believers in Christ; and among them there were those who were called by the Lamanites, Jacobites, and Josephites, and Zoramites . . . And it came to pass that they who rejected the gospel, were called Lamanites, and Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites.—4 Nephi 1: 39-42.

THE ASSOCIATES OF THE YOUNG--NO. 3

[This article is one of a series by various writers on this subject. Other numbers will appear occasionally.—EDITORS.]

A COMMON AIM

It is not my purpose to take the ground that the young people of the church should be "clannish" among themselves nor that they should not have many and good friends outside the bounds of church membership. Surely the "stranger within the gates"—the church and any function pertaining to it—should be received with a genuine good-fellowship, for we are all brethren in the broad sense of the word, and there is nothing that will break the ice of that feeling of reserve among strangers, whether of our own faith or another, and no surer way of making one want to come back than a hearty handclasp, one you may "feel" and a few sincere words of interest kindly spoken.

Yet there are reasons why the young people of our church should associate with one another, and perhaps the Lord had this in view as well as that of studying the church books when he inspired the organization of the Sunday school and Religio. Here the meeting is with one common aim—that of the study of God's word with a view to understanding it more thoroughly and thereby becoming better citizens and laborers in his kingdom, both here and hereafter. Here the talents of all may be exercised, especially in the Religio, by music and song, readings, papers, talks, debates and so on, and while the subjects need not always be so, they may be made to bear upon the problems and beliefs of the church in particular, with the assurance that they will be understood and appreciated and if need be, discussed by all alike. Here also is felt the Spirit of the Master, for truly has he said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them."

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PRAYER MEETINGS

The truth of this promise has been proven both with young and with old, more especially with the latter I believe, since the institution of young people's prayer meetings in recent years. I remember attending one reunion where, in order to avoid a clash in time with the other services a six o'clock prayer meeting was announced. It was a frosty morning, as reunion mornings are apt to be, but the earnest faces of the goodly number gathered there, the heartfelt prayers and testimonies given, sometimes with tears and stammering lips but just as acceptable to the One above and perhaps just as strengthening to those listening as the less emotional and more polished phraseology of more mature years, testified that there was a consecration among the future burden-bearers of the church and a desire to bear well those burdens. And the rising sun came up and touched the bowed heads softly as if with the promise of guidance and peace and success in years to come.

THE VALUE OF UNITY

It is generally conceded, I think, that the youth of the church wish to do right, in spite of the slips they sometimes make and the grave headshakings of some of those who have fought wisely and well (and I say it with the greatest of reverence for those pioneers) with their own weapons and who look with some doubt on modern methods of warfare; but the modern methods must be used to cope with the new forms of temptation, which come not only as absolute wrongdoing but in the way of indifference and catering to worldly things. So the gathering of the young should not all be of a religious nature but socially sometimes, for relaxation and a general "good time" within the bounds of legitimate pleasure. And right here let me say that in the gatherings of the young people with whom my lot has been cast the amusements did not include "kissing games," dancing, nor the so-called "party games" which are next-door neighbors to the dance; and in the few cases where they were proposed (by nonmembers in most if not all cases) they died a violent death after a very brief existence or perished naturally from lack of support. "In unity there is strength" and it is much easier to stand for the right with a few compatriots at your back than alone, even though we do admire the one who is able to stand without backing.

I do not mean to say that there are not young people outside the church whose ideals of moral conduct are as high as our own, nor who do not live up to those ideals; but I do know that the other class is everywhere present and that strength is needed always, from human association as well as divine—that in the social gatherings of those of our own faith there is less danger of those pastimes of the world creeping in and a greater possibility of keeping an undertone of reverence running through all our joys and pleasures.

A REVERENTIAL UNDERTONE

I think this was brought more forcibly to my mind than ever before during General Conference last spring. A "hike" was planned (and, by the way, these "hikes" are becoming more and more popular at conferences and reunions, thanks to those wise ones who know how to keep young in heart, remember the exuberance of youthful spirits and help to direct them away from doubtful forms of amusement between services) and those who wished to go, about thirty in number, met early one morning on the lawn of the Stone Church. It was a beautiful morning and everyone was happy—so happy in fact, and with such effervescent ways of showing it, that some of the farmer folk and the automobilists along the country road smiled in sympathy as we passed by. But when the party turned into a secluded by-road and gathered in a little grove on the banks of the Missouri for a prayer meeting, every trace of lightness of speech and manner was laid aside and a spirit of reverence that matched the solemn sweep of the river at our feet and the wide arch of the blue heavens above our heads pervaded the assembly. And although there were young people there from far-away Canada, from the sunny South, from East and West, who had never seen each other's faces before and who perhaps will never meet again until the great reunion, yet almost every one of those present gave expression to that feeling of reverence and gratitude to the Creator and manifested a common interest in the work that each must share. And each returned, I am sure, stronger and better for the experience, with one more pleasant memory in the past and one step upward toward the heights.

THE CHOOSING OF LIFE COMPANIONS

There is another reason, one in which the effects of the association of our young people are more far-reaching than in any other, perhaps—that of the choosing of a companion for life. That is made, in most cases, among those in the society of whom one is most constantly thrown. And while I do not say nor believe that everyone is worthy of that choice whose name is on the church record, nor that there have not been many happy marriages where one of the contracting parties was not a member, yet again "in unity there is strength" and those whose aims are not the same in religious matters lack just that much of reaching unity.

There have been many instances where the one outside the church has eventually joined, heart, hand, and soul in the work, and made a member to be proud of; yet there are many, too, where opposition or indifference on the part of the one has hindered the other spiritually, as well as in the compliance with the temporal law, and the church has suffered both in the loss of consecrated workers and in a financial way, to say nothing of the loss to the individuals themselves. Surely, if help comes from the association of those of our own faith who are but friends it must be needed in the daily living with one with whom the bond is as sacred and enduring as life itself, not only for the spiritual benefit of each, but that both may join hands in helping the work along in a financial way.

The principle of choosing from among those in the faith was set forth by the Lord when he forbade the intermarriage of the Israelites with their heathen neighbors. It was recognized by Abraham when he sent his servant in search of a wife for Isaac among his own people and again by Isaac when he, in compliance with the desire of Rebekah, his wife, charged his son Jacob not to choose a companion from among the Canaanites, but to journey to the home of Laban for his daughter. In section 111 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants instruction is given to latter-day Israel intimating that God's will has not changed, and we are led to believe, by the accounts of his dealings with mankind in the past, that he will guide his children in this most important step the same as in any other.

Let us therefore choose our associates with wisdom, striving to be as a "city set on a hill" to those outside the church and a friend worth having to those who are true and pure within.

GRACE BAUGHMAN.

A PARALLELISM

THE LAWS OF A TWOFOLD LIFE

For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.—Paul.

The soul process whereby the word begets sons and daughters into the kingdom of God is a mystery, but no less a fact.

Who would deny the facts pertaining to the law of physical life merely because those facts abound in mystery?

Silently within the soul and unseen to the eye the wonderful processes of the word of truth are effectuated and a soul is made ready for its new birth.

Mystery of mysteries, but the first birth of man upon the earth is veiled in as much wonderment.

Man's natural life being generated according to the law of life, must also be regenerated by similar law unto everlasting life, by means of the word of God.

The similarity of the spiritual conception and birth with that of the physical demonstrates their close relationship, and furnishes a key to the understanding of both.

The possibilities of the spiritual life, by birth and growth unto a measure of perfection supplies the only reason for there ever having been a physical creation of any kind.

All created things are, that it might be made possible for man in completeness of spiritual and physical life, to attain unto the fullness of joy; which fullness is the complement of a perfect life and of that perfection only.

Pursuing the great plan unto such exaltation, and following step by step the law of life, the word of God being the seed of regeneration, we now come to the next requirement: "Ye must be born again."

But bodies of flesh have been "stillborn" and consequently lifeless. The same is true of the spiritual birth—or at least that which was supposed to have been spiritual birth.

The natural law of cause and effect applies as touching principles governing an entrance into the kingdom of God, as elsewhere; and persons being "born of water" by baptism and not vitalized by the Spirit are of the "stillborn" class. They cannot respond to life-nourishing agencies, nor transmit life to others nor make any growth—they are without life.

"Ye must be born of water and of the spirit" in order to even so much as see the kingdom. The laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, regularly and lawfully done is as necessary as that the unfathomable power of God must touch and vitalize the fleshly body of the infant born into this world if that body, though wonderfully and even perfectly made, is to be endued with life.

The next essential in the law of life is that there be a constant stimulant drawn from the air through the process of breathing. Without this, the birth into life, and the miracle of first vitality is of no avail for death seizes the child.

Corresponding with this, those born into the kingdom need a constant stimulant to sustain their spiritual life, such as has been provided in the "abiding comforter, whom the world cannot receive."

The stimulus of the Holy Spirit may be had by the child of God for as constant use as the free air of heaven, but such a breath is not possible for those still in the chaos of unregenerate carnality, and who are not born into a renewal of life in Christ Jesus.

As the natural breath of air which is taken into the lungs will not cease altogether, and leave man in silent death, so long as all the other functions of life perform their part, even so the wonderfully stimulating power of the Holy Spirit will never abandon unto death so long as all other functions of spiritual existence are in working order.

Next in the law of existence upon the earth, after birth, vitalization, and the stimulating breath of air, comes the requirement for food. If all other things be supplied and the nourishment contained in food properties be withheld, or rejected when food is served, death, we all know, must ensue.

Certain regularity in partaking of meals is also of some consequence relating to life and good health. A meal to-day and nothing for a month will not suffice. Surfeiting to-day and famishing in hunger through a succession of to-morrows is not the best adjustment.

So also in the spiritual law of life, food other than the stimulus of the "still small voice" of the Abiding Comforter is needed; and that regularly.

In addition to the (sometimes) subconscious spirit of man which may be stimulated by Spirit, as compared to the air of the lungs in this parallelism, man also possesses a conscious mind.

This mind requires mental food in order that through mental digestion the spirit of man may receive the essence of intellectual vitality; and this in itself forms a rivulet of life which is no small tributary to the mighty stream of immortality which, singing the song of songs, flows 'twixt the banks of glory and honor and empties into the sea of eternity.

The best food supply for mental digestion is furnished through the preaching of the gospel—the term, gospel, taken in its true and most beautiful sense to mean: all truth, whether pertaining to the highest heaven, the most remote star, the commonest particle of the earth, the smallest protoplasm, or the truth conferring the lowest depths of evil dominions.

These are all proper gospel themes and when treated upon by the kind of preaching which God has designed shall save them that believe, will furnish wholesome and digestible food for the best brain that ever sought sustenance at the table of intellectuality furnished by the Almighty God.

To obtain such food, the children of the kingdom must first possess an appetite for it; and this will be as instinctive to those who are born of water and of the Spirit, as it is for the infant child to refuse to be comforted until supplied by nature's provision at its mother's breast.

For sustenance: "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."—Jesus.

For regularity: "Neglect not to assemble yourselves together, as the manner of some is."—Paul.

For inspiration: "Teach ye diligently the things pertaining to the kingdom, and my grace shall attend you."—The Lord.

EXERCISE

After the necessity of a food supply comes the requirement for exercise. Without activity the body, though cared for in every other respect, could not long survive.

Also in spiritual life, without activity in such service as the commandments of God require, no person's spirituality can long endure. He may have been born well, powerfully vitalized, constantly stimulated by the abiding Comforter for years, fed upon the best spiritual, mental and intellectual food that man by the cooperation of God can supply; and yet if such a well-favored person should persist in idleness and inactivity, doing nothing in the interest of the kingdom of God, failing to transmit of the life which was so graciously given—such a person is drifting toward the cataract of spiritual death.

"Whosoever hath, to him shall be given and he shall have in greater abundance; but whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken even that which he hath."—Jesus.

Two more points remain to complete the outline of this parallelism. Along with the consideration of the need for food and exercise comes the requirement for

LIGHT AND WARMTH

Were it not for the light of the sun no life could exist upon the earth. Sunshine performs a major part in the production of vegetable as well as animal life. Sunshine puts the tints of color upon every blossom, sets the magic bow in the fairy mists of the clouds, draws vapor from the oceans to stream the silver sparkle through the rivers, and awakens the songs of the forest.

Sunshine is indispensable in the sick room, invigorating to every condition of health, and is the source of constant revelation to every creature having eyes to see the world of nature's wonders revealed by the sunlight.

Parallel with these facts runs the truth that the children of the kingdom of God, if their souls are to be enlightened by beholding the glories of that kingdom, are to enjoy the sunlight of direct and recurring revelation from God.

Divine revelation is to the kingdom of God what the sun is to the world. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets." (Paul.) What blind folly for any church to teach and try to believe that the day of revelation is past. What are the eyes in the body for? Answer: To receive knowledge of things revealed in the light of the sun. What are the prophets set in the church for? Answer: As eyes to receive the light of revelation unto the church according to the measure of their several responsibilities. Who set the prophets in the church? Answer: God did. Who took them out? Answer: Men, working in cooperation with the power of evil. What is the condition of any church not having prophets divinely appointed to its ministry, and which denies that prophets may still speak by inspiration in the name of the Lord? Answer: It is a condition of blindness.

What unpleasantness lies unrevealed to such blind, and directly before him? Answer: The ditch. What is in the ditch? Answer: Mud and broken glass, ignorance and spiritual microbes, charged with malignant contagion. What will cleanse the unfortunate ditch pilgrim and purge the ignorant vagabond of all uncleanness? Answer: The washing of regeneration and renewal of life by being born again, of an incorruptible seed, and the drawing from the breasts of truth the "sincere milk of the word which is able to save your souls."

In former days it was not flesh and blood that revealed to Peter that Jesus is the Christ, but it was divine revelation. It was not flesh and blood that called Paul from the ditch as a persecutor, but divine revelation; so also the present-day man needs present-day revelation to keep him from falling in the present-day ditch.

Concluding this comparison of the laws of physical and spiritual life, let it be observed that in addition to all the points named herein, the condition of

is as vital an issue as any other.

Few things will kill quicker than cold and exposure to the merciless elements that are even chill.

In worldliness the chill of indifference to all that is holy, and the freezing cold of hatred for righteousness may be easily observed. But in the kingdom of God, love is the fire which gives out warmth, good will, and blessings, and is in itself the glowing hearthstone of the world, never ceasing to invite the weary traveler away from the cold of worldliness unto the radiant glow of peace and love, light and life, with the fellowship of Saints in a home of undying glory.

Love of man toward his Maker, love of God toward man, and of man for his fellow man forms a mighty triangle the strength of which, not worlds, nor time, nor eternity may ever weaken.

Love is the keystone in the arch of the most magnificent building which God has ever designed; the lode magnet of attraction of every good thing between the poles of eternity; while its glory illuminates the very gates of the kingdom of heaven, and gleams with warm and radiant power to the depths of every soul that is born therein anew.

"Let love be without dissimulation."

LIBERTY LOAN BONDS

[The United States Government is sending out to editors throughout the country, statements on behalf of the liberty loan. We are publishing herewith the latest copy received, as it should be of interest to our readers. This is one way in which those able to do so may help.—EDITORS.]

"There is not a single selfish element in the cause we are fighting for. . . . The supreme test of the Nation has come. We must all speak, act, and serve together."—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

They also serve their country—
Who buy a Liberty Loan Bond.

THE FRENCH BOND BUYERS

The French people are the greatest investors in Government bonds in the world. At the close of the Franco-Prussian War in 1870 Germany demanded and collected from France $1,000,000,000 indemnity. The French people, who were as loyal then in responding to their country's need as their soldiers are to-day, hastened to loan this tremendous sum to their country.

Their patriotism turned a great misfortune into a great benefit. Their thrift in thus saving their money and investing it in Government bonds not only brought great prosperity to France but the bonds rose in value all over the world and made the French national credit good wherever civilization existed. Ten years after the bonds were issued they commanded a premium of 25 per cent.

What the American Nation is called upon to do in lending the American Government $5,000,000,000 and taking its bonds therefor is little compared with the loan of $1,000,000,000 to France after the Franco-Prussian War by the French people. Called upon to do much less than their present allies, the French, the American people will demonstrate that they are second to no people in the world in patriotic support of their Government.

THE TERMS OF THE LIBERTY LOAN.

The act authorizing the Liberty Loan Bonds of 1917 was passed April 24, 1917. It provides for the issuance of $5,000,000,000 of 3½ per cent bonds, the interest payable semiannually on December 15 and June 15 of each year. The principal is repayable on or after the 15th day of June, 1932, at the option of the Government, and if this option is not exercised the bonds will run full 30 years and become due June 15, 1947.

The bonds are exempt both as to principal and interest from all taxation, national, State, county, or municipal, except the inheritance tax, which is really not a tax on the property, but on the transfer of property by will or inheritance.

The bonds are to be sold at par; that is, dollar for dollar, no premium and no discount. They are to be sold by the Treasurer of the United States and by all Federal Reserve banks. But all banks, national and State, post offices, and express companies have been designated as agents of the Government to receive applications for these bonds. It is almost as easy to purchase one of these bonds as it is to get a post-office money order.

It is not necessary to pay cash in full for a bond. One can pay down 2 per cent of the purchase price on application—that is, $1 for a $50 bond, $2 for a $100 bond, etc.—18 per cent on July 25, 1917; 20 per cent July 30, 1917; 30 per cent August 15, 1917; and the balance, 30 per cent, August 30, 1917.

WHAT A GOVERNMENT BOND IS

The Government of the United States has two methods of raising money. One is by taxation. The other is by the sale of bonds, which is a method of borrowing money.

The Government bond is the printed promise of the Government to pay back the borrowed sum of money at a certain time, and to pay interest on it at regular intervals until it is repaid.

The Government borrows money in this way only after it has been given the right to do so by act of Congress approved by the President, and the terms of the loan are set out in the act.

Back of the promise of the Government stands the honor of the Government and all its taxing resources. Really the whole wealth of the Nation stands behind this solemn promise of the Government to pay.

This makes a United States Government bond the safest investment in the world. If the bond of the United States Government is not safe, no property in the United States is safe. If the United States cannot pay its bonds, it is hardly probable that it will be able to protect the citizens in their other rights.

The Liberty Loan Bonds of 1917 are especially attractive investments. Not only have they this absolute safety characteristic of all United States bonds but they are tax free not only from all existing taxes but from any war tax that may subsequently be levied. No State, city, nor county may tax them. The inheritance tax of the United States and of some States may affect them, or, rather, affect their transfer after death of the owner by will or by inheritance.

Another advantage these Liberty Loan Bonds possess is that if the Government issues bonds later on during this war at a higher rate of interest the holders of Liberty Loan Bonds will be allowed to exchange at par their bonds for bonds bearing the higher rate of interest.

WAR LOANS

Great Britain's estimated wealth is $85,000,000,000; she has made three great loans since the commencement of the war, aggregating $10,000,000,000. Her last loan was the greatest single loan ever floated in the history of the world. It was taken up in 30 days, 5,289,000 individuals subscribing to the loan. One person in every 11 inhabitants of the United Kingdom subscribed to this loan, and the average subscription was $950, though a great many subscribers took only £1, or about $5. The great number of subscribers to this loan is pointed out as evidence of the patriotism of the British people.

Germany's wealth is estimated at $80,000,000,000. Germany has put out five loans since the commencement of the war, aggregating $11,750,000,000. In Germany's latest loan 1 person in 13 of the population is reported to have subscribed, and the average amount taken by each subscriber was $700.

Taking into consideration these figures, the $5,000,000,000 loan of the United States with an estimated wealth of $220,000,000,000 and a population of over 100,000,000 seems almost small. With a wealth nearly three times as great as that of Great Britain it is trying to borrow less than one-half of what Great Britain has borrowed. With a population one and one-half times as large as that of Germany our loan is much less than half of the amount Germany has borrowed.

America's Liberty Loan is less than one-sixth of the bank deposits in our country. An ordinary borrower does not think he is ruining himself when he borrows 40 per cent of the value of his property.

The United States is borrowing less than 3 per cent of its wealth.

THRIFT AND LIBERTY LOAN BONDS

There is a great campaign for thrift being conducted all over the United States—thrift in production by the farmer and other producers, thrift in economy in use and consumption by all persons, and thrift in saving. This thrift campaign is nation-wide. Not only have business, manufacturing, agricultural, and other associations and individuals taken up this campaign, but it has been carried into universities, colleges, and schools.

In connection with the last aspect of this thrift campaign, that of saving, the Liberty Loan Bonds of 1917 offer an ideal investment of savings for small investors. No other small investment, or large one either for that matter, has quite the advantages that the Liberty Loan Bond has. Savings invested in a Liberty Loan Bond are just as safe as it is possible to make them and will constantly draw interest. While the interest is only 3½ per cent, the bonds being nontaxable makes the investment the equivalent of a 5 or 6 per cent interest-drawing investment in ordinary securities.

Not only is the investment absolutely safe but it is practically as readily converted into money as a United States Treasury note. To dispose of one of these Liberty Loan Bonds may require the owner to go to a bank instead of passing it over a counter. Yet this is an advantage. The trouble and time required to convert the bond into cash will give the owner time for thought and reconsideration, and it is not improbable that in many instances the result will be that the savings invested in a Liberty Loan Bond will be preserved intact where savings in money would be spent, in part if not in whole.

There is one other incident to be considered in regard to the purchase of a Liberty Loan Bond. The investment has a nature which should appeal to every American citizen. It is backing our Government, helping the winning of a victory for America in war. This has no money value, but it has a value not to be measured in dollars and cents.

LIBERTY LOAN BONDS—PATRIOTIC AND SAFE

The patriotic nature of an investment in the Liberty Loan Bonds of 1917 is something that all Americans will consider. The fact that in purchasing such a bond the investor is lending his money to his Government—to his country—to prosecute a great war, gives the investment a dignity that the ordinary investment does not possess. The uses to which the money is to be put, the noble purposes to which it is to be devoted, all are things which appeal more or less to the American heart.

But let no one be led by these considerations to look on buying a Liberty Loan Bond as a piece of benevolence or merely a contribution to a worthy cause. The Liberty Loan Bond is as good an investment as an American citizen can well make. The rate of interest it bears may seem small, but when its absolute safety is considered and the fact that it is non-taxable, and the further fact that it is to be immune from any taxes which later on may be levied by reason of this war, and still another fact that in case the United States Government should later during this war have to borrow more money and pay a higher rate of interest, that the holders of these bonds can secure bonds bearing that higher rate—when all these things are considered, an investment in Liberty Loan Bonds possesses advantages that no other investment in the world possesses.

There is another point which wise and thoughtful people will give due consideration to and that is an investment in Liberty Loan Bonds is an investment in the defense and preservation of all their other property and all they hold dear—the preservation of their liberties. We would be in danger, if all our citizens refused to lend their money to the Government, of losing all that we have—our property, our liberties, and our national honor. It has come to this, that we must fight for these things, and to wage war in this day and time requires not only men and arms but great sums of money.

Subscribers to Liberty Loan Bonds are charter members of a society to maintain American honor and to maintain democracy here and in other parts of the world. Honor and interest, patriotism and business judgment all argue the wisdom of an investment in Liberty Loan Bonds.

There are certain facts which have been noted from time to time, which fit into none of the popular theories concerning the state of the arts of the mound builders. It has been stated, and often repeated, that they had no knowledge of smelting or casting metals, yet the recent discoveries in Wisconsin of implements of copper cast in molds—as well as the molds themselves, of various patterns, and wrought with much skill—prove that the age of metallurgical arts had dawned in that region at least.—Foot-Prints of Vanished Races, p. 108.

DARK HOUR AHEAD FOR AMERICANS

[The following appeared under this heading in The Evening Index, of San Bernardino, California, for May 28.—EDITORS.]

The people are facing the darkest hour in the history of the world, according to the view of Reverend Thomas W. Williams of Los Angeles, who delivered two lectures in San Bernardino, Sunday. Mr. Williams, who is known throughout the United States as the friend and helper of the humbler classes, was the guest of former Mayor George H. Wixom, and spoke at the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"This is the darkest hour in the history of the world," said Mr. Williams. "No other has been fraught with such frightful consequences. Civilization is trembling in the balance. We are at the crest of a seething volcano which, at any moment, may break forth and engulf us all.

"Shall we go forward or backward? Shall we rise to greater heights of civilization and culture, or resort to savagery and barbarism? Are we to permit the baser passions, hate, lust, murder to triumph?"

HORRORS OF WAR FACED

"There can be no standing still. We cannot defer our decision. We must not sidestep. Europe today is a great charnal house. All the imps of hell have been let loose. It is all and more than Sherman said of war.

"As Americans we have been onlookers—disinterested spectators. All this is changed now. War is not knocking at our door. It has ruthlessly broken in, and it threatens our entire structure.

"Millions and millions of our young men—the very flower of our manhood—must go down in battle. Millions will come back home, crippled and maimed for life. This is the price of war. Famine will stalk abroad at midday in the devastated old world countries. The wolf of hunger will do battle in our own beloved land.

"What is the solution? So long as men's interests clash, just so long will we have war. When men's interests are made identical they will no longer fight.

"We are brothers, all of us, whether we be Germans, English, French, Italians, Americans, or what not. Let us not hold the thought of hatred and revenge. The war solvent is love, not hate; service, not greed. We must see the other man's interests as well as our own."

LET THE PEOPLE DECIDE

"We cannot—we must not—climb to glory over the crushed bodies and the blasted hopes of unsuccess-cessful rivals. Let us throw ourselves into the world's service.

"In a republic like ours, the people are the Government. Theirs is the last word. I believe that this question of conscription should go to the people, and if the majority of the people of America place the stamp of approval thereon, all of us should be in accord.

"The young men who shoulder the gun should be taken into the confidence of the Nation. They should know why they fight. We cannot send them forth as dumb oxen to fight for the mere act of fighting."

CONQUEST WAR UNWORTHY

"There is not a man in America but who would give his last drop of blood for democracy and civilization. We should not demand service for less.

"Let the allied powers follow the lead of Russia and disavow conquest and territorial acquisition. Then revolution in Germany will make our American army abroad unnecessary.

"A war for commercial supremacy—a war for conquest—is unworthy our passion and our patriotism.

"May the people of America rise to the demands of the hour and set the pace that other nations may follow!"

THE DOCTRINE OF FATALISM

[The following extracts are taken from a synopsis of a sermon by Elder Samuel Wood printed in the Western World of Bandon, Oregon, May 17, 1917. These children lost their lives because a motor boat collided with a submerged pile about fifty feet from shore. While all may not agree that man is the sole dictator of his own course, yet it is doubtless true that we blame God or the laws of nature for many things for which we or other men are ourselves at fault.—EDITORS.]

We have assembled here this afternoon for the purpose of paying our last feeble tribute to the memory of these little girls, to express our sympathy and offer words of encouragement, consolation and comfort to the bereaved. As your spokesman, I feel deeply the delicacy of the position and trust that what I shall say may at least cheer and encourage all those who have been made to mourn as a result of this fatal accident.

We are aware of the fact that many good people believe in the doctrine of fatalism, and lay this pathetic tragedy to the direct action of the gods of fate. But with all due respect for the religious convictions of others I wish to place especial accent upon the word accident, and say that fate had nothing to do with it. Nay, there is no such thing as fatalism or predestination for the individual.

Man—the race—is the architect of his own destiny. But incidental to our existence (our complicated commercial and industrial pursuits as well as our pleasure-seeking) we are subject to accidents. But no accident ever happened that could not have been prevented. In our mastery over nature we become overconfident in our magnificent achievements—a sense of too great security and even carelessness brings destruction and death that shocks the world. The mighty Titanic, "unsinkable though she were cut in two," encountered an iceberg in the north Atlantic and went to the bottom with her thousand passengers from the "best families" of the earth. In our opinion God had absolutely nothing to do with it, yet God, by his law, is the supreme and absolute ruler of the universe. By his law, mountains of ice were floating in the water through which the Titanic was speeding.

In this particular case piling have been left in the Coquille River, which for years have been a constant menace to navigation during the high water periods. No human being, without the eyes of a seer, could have discerned from the pilot house the neglected piling that sent these innocent children to a premature grave. It were necessary for God to constantly perform miracles unsolicited and unappreciated, in order to prevent disaster in the face of such neglect.

Man, having been created in the likeness of God—a free agent, endowed with intelligence and creative genius—was placed on this beautiful earth which is supplied with an abundance of the raw materials necessary for his life and happiness. But the law is absolutely fixed and he must learn to apply his energies harmoniously. This is Nature's school. Her textbooks are found in the laboratory of the universe. Her methods are hard and rigorous. Her law, which is absolute justice, knows no mercy. The Great Teacher grants no excuses, tolerates no truancy, shows no partiality. The just and the unjust alike must learn this lesson or the lash is not spared. This is the law and however hard it may seem for the imperfect man to keep the perfect law, there is no other law for him! What is true of the material world is equally true of the spiritual—but one right course is open to man and he must walk therein or suffer the consequences.

The fall of an imperfect wall crushes the workmen beneath its ruins. But accidents can, and are being prevented; though it may seem necessary to burn women and children in a Chicago theater in order to arouse public sentiment to the elimination of fire traps in the shape of pleasure resorts, yet such terrible destruction of life and property is uncalled for and inexcusable. But man, aside from being greedy and selfish, is headstrong and stubborn, many times to his own utter destruction. He is slow to profit by the experience of others and only learns wisdom by the things that he suffers. He seeks to excuse his own blunders by the interference of fate or the imperfections of nature. But the gods of fate flee with the enlightenment of the man and the eradication of superstition; and the imperfections of nature when viewed from the proper angle reveal her greatest beauty and finest workmanship.

As a race we have paid a terrible price for what we have achieved. The story of man's private life as well as his glorious annals is written in blood. At the present time thousands are sacrificed annually to our industries and pleasure. Indeed, so great has been the toll that "safety first" is a modern phrase.

To the heartbroken we would say: There is no such thing as fatalism. Your life is just as free as that of any other man in the world. You are the absolute dictator of your own course. There is but one thing that is fixed or predestined, and that is the law of the universe—the law of God—and you are accountable to him only for keeping that law. You have one beautiful little gem left that is fully worth your effort. Remember, that right living and right thoughts are the law of liberty of action, and liberty of conscience, which will bring the reunion of souls in eternity. To all who mourn this sad accident, I would say: Bury deep in the secret recesses of your heart the trials of this day. Although the heavens may be overcast, behold there is a rift in the clouds, and though you "walk in the valley and shadow of death" the sun will shine through, to bright your footsteps in paths of peace and happiness.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Need of Personal Culture in Our Girls

(An address delivered before a meeting of the General Woman's Auxiliary Convention at Lamoni last April. Sister Short is supervisor of art in the manual training high school of Kansas City, Missouri.)

Because a nation rises no higher than its mothers, and because the women of to-morrow are the girls of to-day, it assuredly behooves us to consider the girl as worthy of our best love and consideration. "As the twig is bent, so the bough is inclined," but "old heads do not belong on young shoulders"—then what? Shall we bend them? I say no. They are past the twig age. We are looking at the budding bough of spring, already inclined. I suppose there was never a girl in the world who did not tire of good advice. People are continually telling girls what to do or not to do. I heard a girl impatiently remark that her mother could give advice by the yard, gallon, bushel or acre! It is a joy to be left sometimes to do as we please. But what do we please? I shall always remember my big brother for telling me, after father died, "Little sister, I want you to have whatever you want, but for godness' sake be careful what you make up your mind to want."

Right there came one of the big lessons of life to the girl. She could have what she desired. The things she loved to do could be done, but there was a dignified responsibility back—a trust that was also incentive—and the girl will live up to what is expected of her.

Then let us expect the refined girl, take her as much for granted as we can without being absolutely blind. Almost always she will live up. Why, since the Literary Digest started their last advertising campaign telling what kind of people read the Digest, I felt that my self-respect could not be maintained without reading their paper.

So it seems to me the task is half finished when a girl gets to the realization of her own standing and value. Why, the kind of woman I am going to be when I'm thirty, thirty-five, forty, is being determined right now, by the habits I'm forming to-day. I must always be in the company of myself, never a vacation or afternoon off. Do I want to be an interesting companion, a keen observer, a happy enthusiast for the me of to-day?

What people can dream, they can grow to be; inspiration leads to achievement. If a girl's vision is directed toward a noble, gracious womanhood, the kind that realizes true values in the scale of what is worth while, that woman she may grow to be. If some queen of the movies embodies all she knows of desirable attainment, her bough is inclined toward false standards, and the artifices which attract by an outward instead of an inward loveliness. Hero worship plays a lead part in forming the ideals, hence the finished product, if there be a finished product, of girlhood. How we admire the cultured woman! the woman who has the innate charm of knowing what to do during all circumstances. The woman who says the pleasing thing—who has the mark of birth and breeding shown by the fitness of her every act. Why, take her voice, its quality and appeal. She is charming in that her speech is well modulated in tone, more charming in that the words are correct and well chosen, and most charming in that they bear the stamp of root culture—consideration for others. One of the most glaring rudenesses in which we indulge is the way we let self enter into our conversation. It is a sort of hobby of mine to preach this particular kind of culture expression no matter what else I am supposed to be teaching. I have plead in behalf of the reply that shows interest in another; and against the trade last form of compliment; you know, the kind that says, "if you can tell me a bit of flattery, I shall be pleasant in return." Then there is this common form of conversation:

"Oh, say, I got val lace for three cents a yard at Emery's to-day."

"I paid four for mine."

"I got a whole bushel of potatoes, too, thought I might as well."

"I've been buying mine by the peck, seems about as cheap."

"Ted likes his with the skins on, then meat and gravy."

"Henry must have his mashed and then I make croquettes for breakfast."

"I usually cook oatmeal for breakfast, it's good for the children."

"Well, we must have eggs and ham or bacon."

"I get so sick of eggs, George has to be careful what he eats."

"Henry could thrive on hard-tack," and so on; I, and possibly George; I, and possibly Henry. Two separate monologues with no point of connection.

There is undoubtedly a need for culture right here. I have my five high school classes on the look-out right now for chances to reply with interest to remarks. If one says, "I have a headache this morning," the other is not to reply, "I had one, let's see, Wednesday I reckon it was," but "Oh, that's too bad, do you suppose your eyes are causing it?" or something of that sort.

It seems, too, there is a very definite reason why Latter Day Saint girls should be the sweetest and most cultured of all girls in the world. The reason for these "I and I" conversations is apparent. Each is thinking only of self, and is rude enough not to care who knows it. Our girls are expected to have higher standards. In the Independence high school we have had more to do with forming the town's attitude toward the Saints than any other one factor. There is a grave responsibility on the girl; it is hard to overestimate the chance an attractive, cultured girl has in raising our standards high. Some of the older established teachers in the Independence high school told me that if one of our girls did unwise, undignified things—not just jolly girl pranks of course—but illbred things, the shock was much greater, and their criticisms were apt to be harsh because so much more was expected. We of the church nearly burst with pride when Brother F. M. or John Rushton came up for an assembly talk. Surely it helps to spread the gospel when they can feel sure of our girls, that they know and can do the nice and correct thing. Much harm is done by well-meaning blunderers, as much or more than actually ill-intentioned meddlers do.

There was a little girl who came to school last year, whose father owned a greenhouse. I knew that Marion was fond of me because I could detect it, deep at the roots of certain actions. Never by any direct look or act could I have reached such a conclusion. She brought flowers to me instead of the other teachers, but her crisp sweetpeas of early spring were blighted in the giving. "Do you want these things?" "I'm sick of carting these old flowers around" or "We have so many flowers that I sure get tired of them." How ungracious it is to give, like Marion, the gift without its garnish of joy in giving!

Then there are the little things, the signs and earmarks of culture. Many of them have unselfishness again at root. A girl whose hands and feet seem always out of place is apt to be thinking more about their placing than of other's conversation or ease. A girl who helps herself first, or to the most choice things is thinking to gratify self, and thereby commits rudeness. When we embarrass others, the awkward situation is based on selfishness, or thoughtlessness, which after all is a branch of the same.

I would say, not by much advice and legislation, not by adding rules and regulations, but by precept, by placing responsibility in the girl, place her own value high to her, and the kind of culture which will build Zion will be the outgrowth. I remember one day, after my little nephew had been particularly unfortunate in the turns his mischief had taken, his mother said at the prayer time that evening, "hadn't you better ask the Good Man to make you a better boy to-morrow?" He puckered his little forehead, shook his curly head and said, "No mother, I don't think that would do much good unless I get the ide'—if I get the ide' to not slide down grandmother's terrace, I can do it without bother'n anybody."

Let us then get the "ide'!"

True culture does not come from between the covers of Chesterfield's Letters or Good Manners for All Occasions nor yet by observation, though much of the genteel technique may be studied and learned. It is marked by a certain openness of mind to learn the daily lessons in life's school; a certain willingness of heart, to give and to receive; a certain gentleness of speech and action which puts at ease, both others and ourself.

A New Local

DECATUR, NEBRASKA

We have word of the organizing of a local auxiliary at Decatur, Nebraska. Sister Ira Lewis is president, and we understand they have an active relief and service department, as well as one or two study circles. These sisters should feel greatly encouraged, and determine to go steadily forward, for while oftentimes things occur to dishearten the workers in any line of good endeavor, the results are surely greater than one can estimate, if there is no giving way to the obstacles. The powers of evil are always alert, and seek to overthrow and discourage those who struggle to lift the banner of God higher, but as Saints we should recognize these assaults for what they are, and determine to let "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature," "separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." So these local societies should keep going, keep studying to improve, keep unity in their midst, resist the powers which assail, and thus be able to point to a definite work well performed in that corner of the Lord's vineyard in which they are called to labor.

Slumber Song

Why are you smiling, baby mine,
As you rest in my arms while the shadows creep?
Are the angel children hovering near,
And crooning softly into your ear
Tales of the Land of Sleep?

Why do your trembling eyelids rest,
So fitfully over your eyes so blue?
Do the happy visions of Dreamland bright
Flit before you with coming night,
As softly as falls heaven's dew?

Ah, if only the mother-love
Could guard you ever, my little one;
Could it but keep that baby face
Pure and glad through the passing days,
My mother-task would be done!

Report of Secretary to Late Convention

The total enrollment of the Woman's Auxiliary for the year 1916 in districts and unorganized territory, is 2,955. Number of districts reporting, 11.

Number of locals reporting, including those enrolled in districts, and all clubs, classes, societies, etc., 66.

Departments represented are as follows: Home and child welfare, in 13 locals; educational, in 48 locals; relief and service, in 100 locals; young women's, in 29 locals.

New stake organizations: Independence Stake had been organized in September, 1915, but in July, 1916, was reorganized into three stakes, namely, Independence, Kansas City, and Holden. Lamoni Stake was organized with a full corps of officers in August, 1916. Chatham, Ontario, in February, 1917. Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana in 1916.

New local organizations: There are 33 new organizations reported in branches of the church in the following states: Missouri 15, Kansas 1, Ohio 4, Iowa 2, Ontario 1, Michigan 3, California 1, Pennsylvania 1.

The departments are represented in these new locals as follows: Educational 7, relief and service 23, home and child welfare 9, young woman's 10.

The above statistical report is only an estimate based on reports received this year and reports of 1915 from locals or organizations not reporting in 1916, which we know are active, having been in communication with them during the year.

Field workers: One general field worker and eleven district field workers were appointed following the General Convention of 1916. The general field worker, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, reports in full to the convention and eight of the district field workers report organizations and activities in the auxiliary work.

Tuberculosis in War Time

(Department of tuberculosis warns against forgetfulness. Tuberculosis may increase as a result of war.)

The people of the United States should in no wise relax their vigilance in the campaign against tuberculosis. Because there has been an apparent decrease in the mortality and incidence of this disease is no reason why we citizens should lose interest in the winning fight. There are at present very grave reasons why increased watchfulness should take possession of every man and woman and child throughout the States. The experience with tuberculosis of the nations at war in Europe ought not to be lost on the citizens of Iowa. It is known that tuberculosis among the troops on European battlefields exists to an alarming extent. This is to be expected. As a result of exposure and depressive influences of war, the tubercule bacillus becomes most potential. Recently Doctor Herman Biggs returned from France, having been called there by the French Government to battle against tuberculosis. He found tuberculosis most prevalent in the French hospitals. His experience and observation should inspire the leaders in the antituberculosis campaign to redouble their efforts. A great percentage of soldiers returning from the front to the Canadian hospitals are found to be afflicted with tuberculosis. The mobilization of large bodies of men in our states will increase appreciably, whether these men go to the front or not, the incidence of tuberculosis. When, however, our men are transported to European battle lines, we shall find great need of a most efficient organization to handle the tuberculosis situation. It is important that everywhere should now begin the construction of a line of hospitals especially equipped for the treatment of tuberculosis. The counties with the larger centers of population should at once begin the planning of adequate hospital facilities, not only for tuberculosis but for medical and surgical diseases as well.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

South Sea Island Mission

Another year has rolled around and we are met face to face with the activities of the opening of another conference year. Scarcely had we commenced the work of the year just past when we were brought face to face with this: "Time and tide wait for no man." The writer left Papeete on the afternoon of March 9 on a small schooner for Tikahau, where the mission conference was to be held, by way of the island of Rairoa. We reached our destination on the afternoon of the 11th.

Varied are the experiences of the missionary in these isles, as we have written to you before; but our experiences upon pulling anchor in Papeete on this trip climaxed all for excitement and suspense. We did not have to wait unreasonably long for the departure of this schooner, but shortly before the time for pulling anchor the sailors left for the market place, for the purpose as they stated of purchasing a selection of vegetables, water and muskmelons. The hour arrived and no sailors were to be seen. The captain was seen coming down the street storming at every pace, and upon his approach we learned that he had imbibed one too many. Upon inquiry he stated that the sailors were in the grog shop and refused to come. The police was summoned and sent for the drunken crew. Upon their arrival the storm began in dead earnest, the captain pouring forth a volley of blasphemous chastisement, while the sailors with angered resentment returned the charge.

It was with trouble that we managed with the owner of the vessel who runs a mercantile store in Papeete to get the crew in the scow, by which we were conveyed to the schooner which had been pulled away from the wharf for departure. The anchor was pulled but not through unity of mind and conversation, for the captain and sailors were still villainously charging each other with all manner of deviltry. Upon the pulling of the anchor the pilot boat snatched our rope, and we were off for the grand pass, the crew still raging. As the pilot let loose our rope the captain was holding the wheel. One of the sailors, still enraged, was sitting near the wheel, and after some exchange of wrathful words, the captain ordered the sailor forward to the hatch. The sailor obeyed but slothfully, resenting the orders at every step, which enraged to the highest tension the captain who at once let loose the wheel (another sailor grabbing it quickly) and chased the sailor to the hatch. The drunken sailor reached for the iron handle of the pump as a weapon, but fortunately it was fastened, which prohibited him in getting it raised in time to strike the captain. They clutched and fell, then began to choke each other with angered fierceness.

We realized that something must be done at once or we would meet peril at sea as the darkness had nearly covered us with its canopy. We called to one of the young sailors who was not so drunk, and together with his help we persuaded, pulled at legs, arms and hair until the two enraged men were separated. We influenced the captain to return to the wheel and made the sailor go to sleep on the hatch, thereby sleeping off his stupor. No more was said, but you may rest assured that the writer would have returned to Papeete had it been possible. We continued to trust the Strong for strength, knowing that he had protected us upon former trips, and firmly realizing that he would not forsake us that night at sea with storm clouds hovering around us, and a drunken crew as our ship's temporal protection.

The Mormon elders had previously been to Rairoa and arranged for the building of a small, cheap assembly house, the president of their mission having left there some time before this for Papeete for the purpose of purchasing the lumber. Upon the natives seeing me on the schooner, they at once thought that it was the Mormon president, whereupon we received a cool reception until we had made ourselves known. The Mormons had previously circulated a story that they were about to baptize sixty people on the island. Upon our arrival we learned that up to date they had not baptized a single soul. To the contrary we immersed two beneath the ocean wave prior to our departure from the island on the morning of the 29th.

While we remained in this island we experienced the intervention of divine power in our ministrations. In administering to the sick as well as in the dispensing of the word the power of the One who called us to labor was manifested to the recognition of the Saints and many without. We gathered the Saints and many nonmembers together and on the morning of the 29th six small cutters left for the island of Tikahau. There were one hundred and forty-seven, large and small, on board including many young people in and out of the church. It being very calm at sea we were not able to reach the city of the Saints in Tikahau that evening; we therefore anchored at the pass for the night. We went ashore to sleep (?) as sleeping space was at a premium on the deck of our small cutter. There being no kind of inclosure on shore we took a native mat after drinking a cup of warm tea, and by the side of our native brethren slept on the sandy shores of the great Pacific with no covering but the moonlit heavens. During the night another cutter arrived and upon awaking the morning following we found that it was from the island of Amanu, an island to the extreme eastern end of the mission, also the island where rests the body of beloved Brother C. H. Lake. After grouping the boats and having our morning prayer we again set sail for the city. We were not long, however, in reaching this place, and were soon exchanging handshakes and words of gladness with Brother and Sister A. H. Christensen, who had previously reached the island, and the native Saints from Taenga, Fakarava, those of Tikahau and others who had assembled.

The first part of the first week of April the conventions were held with nothing of an extraordinary nature transpiring, and upon the 5th the long looked for day arrived. The natives of the island had completed a neat little chapel at a cost of a little over two thousand dollars (French dollars). The crowd assembled at the hour of nine and well, you may know that the native was in full costume. The sisters were to be seen with large figured Japanese silk dresses made mother-hubbard fashion; others were adorned with vari-colored and styled silks. The brethren came out in their white starched duck suits, others with the long Prince Albert black, and together with the unaccustomed shoe, and stiff collar ear high, we assure you we had a spectacular crowd. The branch president read a statement on the porch to the effect that the church was clear of indebtedness, at the close of which the key was given into our hands. A rousing and appropriate song was sung by Rairoa and at the appointed phrase we unlocked and opened the door, the crowd following excitedly clamoring for seats. Being seated the bell was rung, and the writer dispensed the word. Scarcely had we commenced the discourse when the governor's bell was rung calling all workers together, for the roasted pigs must be unearthed and carried to a suitable place for their presentation to the assembled Saints. Well, of course, that took part of the audience, but after their leaving, the audience was quieted and we proceeded. We had not talked long when the roasted pork was carried in front of the church and laid on coconut leaves to one side of the building. The sight of roasted pig was too much for the native, the only thing worth noticed to them being their anticipated feast. It was distributed among the branches and all did justice, perhaps better stated, they all did injustice to themselves.

We forgot to mention that on the morning of April 2 the Tahiti Saints, together with our companion, reached the island on a small power boat. They experienced a rough sea, but all lived through.

The morning of the 6th the mission conference was commenced after the following program: 8 a. m. prayer service, 10 a. m. quorum meetings, also children and women's meetings under the direction of Sisters Ellis and Christensen, 2 p. m. conference proper, 7 p. m. programs and some evenings preaching services. This program was followed as closely as possible during the conference.

We endeavored to make this conference a place of instruction and profit to the native Saints and ministry. We believe we succeeded to a small degree, and hope for better conditions to be manifested this coming conference. It is an utter impossibility to transform the primitive mind as quickly as the one in Zion. However, we see a better condition existing. This is not an ignoring of the labor of former missionaries, but rather a recognition, as their labors are now bearing fruit, and we hope that we may be able to assist as they have assisted.

The conference passed a resolution that the church in America be requested to send two new missionaries as an addition to our present force. The Saints want more help, we need more help, and we continue to trust for it. The field is large and broad for active laborers.

Our books are not entirely straightened out, but from what we can get at, we believe we have a membership of about one thousand. We hope to be able to state definitely this coming conference.

The conference continued until the 11th, when we adjourned to meet with the Heberona Branch, in Tahiti, for the conference of 1918.

We returned to Papeete by way of Makatea, reaching Papeete April 19, and are now busily engaged in our work, very anxiously waiting for news from the General Conference.

We hope and pray that all is well in the land of Zion.

Still in the conflict,

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

OLD SPANISH FORT

(Extract from Rangers and Sovereignty, by Captain Dan W. Roberts.)

In the northern portion of Texas are the plain evidences of prehistoric settlement.

About twenty-five miles below Fort McKavett, which is situated at the head springs of San Saba River, stands an old Fort called the Old Spanish Fort. There is no history of it, as to who built or where it was built. It was well constructed for defense, being built immediately on the bank of the San Saba River, and on the east bank, having a large body of water on the west side, probably a mile long, seventy-five to one hundred yards wide, with considerable depth. There was an approach to the Fort under the banks of the river. To the east, through there, there is an open space of land covering probably a half mile, and perfectly level. They have some kind of cannon and two diamonds, well built, at each end of the fort wall, upon which their pieces were mounted. Curiosity led some people to dig down at those diamonds where they found hundreds of round iron balls, something like the size of oranges, that they had used in the field pieces. The wall of the fort was twelve feet high, and the inner buildings were joined to the main wall and facing in front of it. The fort would accommodate two hundred people. It was all built of stone.

The people that occupied the fort were an agricultural people, as the plain marks of ditches were to be seen within a half mile of the fort, which they used for irrigating. We say they were Spaniards, but other evidence doesn't prove it. When the Spaniards occupied Santa Fe, New Mexico, they found seven old towns, extending south from Santa Fe in the direction of Texas. And the history of the people that built them was never heard of and is not known to-day.

The structure of the old forts in New Mexico is almost exactly the same as that in Texas. The people of Texas were accustomed to say and think that the northwestern portion of Texas was a new country, but the facts stand out that it was the oldest settled part of North America. The fact of their having cannons doesn't prove them Spaniards. There were great pirates who superseded General Labitte by centuries. They could have had this island home which was secluded from all nations.

But our imagination has no right to denominate them pirates. If it was our task to find out who they were, we would search Ridpath's History of the World and look for missing people of all nations, when and how they disappeared. There are legends telling of the people, but not a word in authentic history.

Independence Stake

The classes of study at the church will soon be closed for the present term. Some very interesting class work is being made available for our young people in Kansas City, we hear. For instance: one class for children's nurses, under Red Cross auspices, where are taught the principles of baby-tending according to modern hygienic standards; then there are the knitting circles where excellent work is being done for the soldiers; and there is a class in art work which is very useful also.

The ceramic club's twenty-first annual exhibit lately embodied the most recent attainments of a few women, among them being sisters from the Stone Church. In the decorating of pottery, also in painting, Sisters R. G. Smith and K. E. Ward showed proficiency. On June 5 will be the graduating exercises of the nurses from the Sanitarium.

Everybody seems to be busy doing his bit in these critical times. Church work continues and fine reports come from the branches.

On Sunday we had a soaking rain all day which affected the attendance at all the meetings. About one hundred were present at the morning prayer meeting, and at Sunday school only 683.

Bishop Keir, in his usually cheerful manner, gave counsel concerning the keeping the perfect law, and pointed out some of the irregularities of everyday life, questionable methods in business, pride, anger, hatred, covetousness, envy and selfishness. But our brother's good advice was seasoned with good cheer and encouragement to press on in the glorious work.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Lamoni, Iowa

One of our thoughtful Sunday school classes—they call themselves "The Weatherproof Class"—recently secured sufficient subscriptions to purchase a flag and pole to support it, and had it erected on the premises of our pastor, J. F. Garver. He thinks deeply on the subject of patriotism and hesitates not to declare his loyalty and devotion to the principles of right and honor for which our national colors stand.

The community is planning on an elaborate program for the evening of June 5, registration day. Those of our boys who are called on to bear arms for our country will do so with the united support of the community back of them. Three Lamoni lads are at Fort Snelling, training for officers' duties, while four or five have enlisted as privates in the various branches of service.

On the evening of May 31 a local organization was effected to cooperate with the labor and seed bureau of the Burlington Railway. One of the twenty representatives at work in the Middle West was with us and ascertained our local conditions and told us how we might cooperate with the many other places situated as we are. The work is gratis and appears to be on a very comprehensive basis.

One of the items reported to him was that the Lamoni school board has rented three acres of the college plat and has placed it in charge of a competent man for the summer. He has enrolled forty-five boys, who are very industriously planting and tending it, the entire crop to be their property. The usual garden crops are being planted and a little later on navy beans will be included, since the early planting of these is often affected with weevils. On another lot down town—the old Central school grounds—the girls are to garden. About twenty have enrolled to date and it is expected that others will follow. The Order of Enoch are going to put in a sorghum mill this fall and a number of our people are planting cane. Lamoni is naturally a place of home gardens. At the rate we are now proceeding we will do our part to supply the necessary surplus in food supply.

The "junior meetings" as they are called, at which about a hundred children and young people assemble every two weeks, have of late been taking up the first principles of the gospel in short, illustrated sermons. The interest taken in these meetings is very gratifying. The sermon or talk occupies not over twenty-five minutes, usually less, while there are selections of music by the children and similar special features to give them a rest from what might be too prolonged efforts at concentration.

The memorial sermon on the evening of May 27 was by Elder Henry A. Stebbins.

The Book of Mormon classes continue every other Monday evening and are considering the advisability of meeting every week. The Book of Mormon normal book is the basis of the study at present, but when it is finished the Book of Mormon will be taken up from a more special standpoint.

The editors say they intend to give space in this department to news of the flag raising events on Memorial Day and the day following, so we are glad to leave it to their superior pens—or typewriters.

DELBERT.

From Here and There

Omaha reports excellent attendance and interest following the recent series of lectures by Augustine Dwyer. Elder Hubert Case just concluded an interesting series of sermons during the week at Decatur.

Sister Marie Riggs, well known throughout the church as a pianist of unusual ability, was married on May 24 to John Emmert Ehrke and will be at home at the Lucrest Apartments, 1618 Linwood, Kansas City, Missouri, after June 10.

"We assembled in conference on April 6 this year at Geelong, Victoria, and had a very good time. It is good to be lifted out of the things of the world for a while and have one's thoughts solely on the things of God."—Addie Cuthbert, Murrumbena, Victoria, Australia.

Henry Ford, of Detroit Michigan, publishes a booklet of seventy-five pages entitled, The Case Against the Little White Slaver, which can be had free, except the postage which is four cents. Any person interested in knowing the evil of the cigarette habit and wanting to teach others of its terrible effect on mind and body should read the book.

Elder A. C. Barmore addresses the Saints and friends of central and eastern Oregon as follows: "Having been requested by President F. M. Smith to spend the summer months with you, I send this notice requesting you to write me regarding opportunities for missionary labor in your localities. If I should not be able to respond to all calls now, the information will be furnished President Smith for future use."—Condon, Oregon.

We learn that the Mount Washington Sunday School (in Kansas City Stake) had complied with the call recently made to double last year's Christmas offering by reaching that mark on February 11 of this year. Last year's offering was their largest, too. They have now more than doubled last year's toll, though they are a little behind their schedule which is three dollars a week for fifty weeks, and the school only has an enrollment of sixty-eight, not counting the home department. May we hear from others doing as well.

Clippings sent us from the Western World, published at Bandon, Oregon, tell of the tragic death of Mrs. Chauncey Carpenter, not far from Myrtle Point. The launch carrying the party, which also included their two-months-old child, capsized and while the father swam to the shore with the latter the others were all drowned. The bodies of the girls, Clara, aged twelve, and Ruth, aged five, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Carpenter, were recovered, but the mother's was not. The funeral sermon by Elder Samuel Wood created much comment, both favorable and unfavorable, and the attendance at the regular church services of the Saints has been materially increased as a result.

A brief item from O. R. Miller tells us that he is at Winter Hill, Massachusetts, and likes the people well. He sends us a clipping from a Boston Post which tells of the laying of the corner stone for a new "Church of All Nations." We quote: "The church, remarkable in many respects, will be one in which people of any nationality or creed may worship with their own services and ministers. The services may be in English or in their native tongue. Already many denominations, including a group of Mohammedans, have asked the privilege of using the church." Brother Miller is confident that this will include our denomination, and will work to that end.

STOCKPORT, ENGLAND, April 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: The annual conference of the Manchester (England) District was held in Manchester April 7, 8 and 9. The district presidency, High Priests J. W. Taylor and G. W. Legott, and Elder J. Bailey were in charge.

Saturday evening was occupied in reading the reports from the officials of district, the spiritual reports of all the branches, also the reports of the ministry. The associate missionary in charge, W. H. Greenwood, also reported, but he was absent, being in attendance at the Birmingham district conference.

There seems to be a revival in the hearts of brethren who have been standing aside, and they are requesting that they be permitted to take up their labor again. For this we are most thankful.

The Sunday services were inspirational, the speakers for the morning and evening meetings being Elder Abel Hall, of the missionary staff, and High Priest J. W. Taylor, the district president. A baptismal service was conducted at the close of the morning service by Elders Abel Hal and William Worth, when three members of the Stockport Branch and one from the North Branch were inducted into the waters of baptism.

The afternoon testimony meeting was in charge of Patriarch James Baty. We greatly missed the face of Patriarch Henry Greenwood, both he and his wife being very ill. We trust they may still be spared to us to add to their lifelong sphere of usefulness.

Miss Annie Taylor was the soloist at the evening service. The catering committee, under the direction of Elder James Schofield, provided lunch and tea at a most reasonable charge, which greatly added to the success of conference.

At the Monday's sessions, at the suggestion of the associate missionary in charge (Elder W. H. Greenwood) and the hearty approval of all the members, the whole of the officers for the year 1916 were reelected for the coming year. The other business affecting the Manchester District was also attended to.

The secretary reported twenty-two baptisms for the past year, nine deaths, four of which were of young men killed in action in France. Many of our brethren and ministers are serving in their country's cause, and we are looking forward to the time when they will be safely restored to us. We passed a vote of confidence in the general, mission and local authorities.

While in session we were thinking of the General Conference at Lamoni, from which we are eagerly anticipating great events towards the redemption of Zion.

JOHN W. TAYLOR, District President.

WILLIAM WORTH, Secretary.

Conference Minutes

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—At Central Church, Ninth and Lydia Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, May 26 and 27, 2.30 p. m. The stake presidency, J. A. Tanner and S. S. Sandy, were elected presidency of the conference. W. S. Brown, secretary. Bishop James F. Keir tendered his resignation as bishop, which was accepted. Bishop R. Bullard appointed by General Conference as bishop of Kansas City Stake was by motion ratified. George Jenkins, appointed by General Conference as missionary to Kansas City Stake, was concurred in by vote by the conference. Bishop Bullard requested all branch solicitors to report to Bishop Keir for the balance of the current month. The general church chorister appointed Earl Audet as chorister for Kansas City Stake, which was approved. A recommendation that ministry and quorum reports be made twice a year at the August and February conferences and to be in the hands of the secretary the first of each month mentioned was adopted. A recommendation that all calls to the ministry requiring the action of the stake high council before ordination be submitted in writing with such evidence in the case as may be at hand, which may be submitted orally or in writing; if orally, should be represented by branch or branch president, which recommendation was adopted. In the matter of the division of the books of the old Independence Stake library so that the Kansas City, Independence and Holden Stakes could each share in them the investigating committee recommended that the library remain intact at Independence, their present location, which was adopted. Bishop Keir reported in regard to the tent fund that he had received only $99.50 from eight branches and that $150 additional would be necessary before the tent could be purchased, was received and spread upon the minutes and the committee continued. Bishop Keir's financial report was read: Balance on hand January 1, $221.62; tithing and stake collections received, $2,288.20. Paid for aid, $177.50; elders' families, $582.00; stake expenses, $5.60; to B. R. McGuire, $1,700.00; balance, $44.72. Sanitarium account: On hand last report, $3.50; turned over to B. R. McGuire. Order of Enoch; collected: $2.50, turned over to M. H. Siegfried. Report was adopted. Robert Winning was elected stake member of Gospel Literature Board. A recommendation that the stake presidency be empowered to place the first nomination in all branches in the election of branch presidents was adopted. A resolution that all conferences hereafter be mass conferences was adopted. James W. Stobaugh was recommended as counselor to president of First Quorum of Elders and his ordination was provided for and was ordained at the 2.30 p. m. prayer meeting the 27th. As the president of the deacon's quorum has resigned the stake presidency were empowered to provide a president for the deacon's quorum.

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of Central Oklahoma District; Greeting: The appointing powers having returned us to the above-named district for another year, we wish to solicit the hearty cooperation of all the Saints, and the scattered ones in particular, writing us of the prospects for missionary work in your vicinity, and we will do our best in responding to all such calls, as far as time and opportunity will permit.

Also, as bishop's agent, we shall be pleased to continue to receipt for all moneys sent in for tithing, consecration and freewill offerings. Amounts large or small gladly received.

The Saints of the Central Oklahoma District have in the past done remarkably well, and in proportion has the Lord blessed his people. Let us make this a banner year. Should not our slogan be, "Duty first."

Mail sent to my home address, 1517 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri, will always reach me.

Hopefully in the conflict,

JOSEPH ARBER.

A Correction

In last week's HERALD we published a letter from Sister Hiel Brunson with the name of the place misspelled. It should have been West Brooklyn instead of West Brook, Illinois.

Requests for Prayers

John McBain and wife, of 575 Clay Street, Dubuque, Iowa, ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, as they are isolated from the Saints there and feel very lonely.

Brother John Winslow writes from Falkland, British Columbia, saying there is a man there who has been in bed four years with a broken back, and though not a member of the church believes in the restored gospel, and has no doubt the whole family will obey in time. He believes in the laying on of hands and that he can be healed, therefore desires the prayers of the Saints.

Our Departed Ones

LEIGH.—Evelyn Lillie, the nine-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Leigh of Omaha, Nebraska, was born August 15, 1908; died March 15, 1917. The Lord knows why the little ones are called home so young, we know not. His will be done. Funeral sermon by Hubert Case.

EVANS.—Rachel Evans was born in Saint Louis County, Missouri, in 1858. Died March 11, 1917. Since the death of her mother in 1904 she has kept house for her father on a farm in Sullivan, and was his constant companion, even helping him with the work on the farm. She was in poor health when her father passed away, and only survived him by five days. Funeral services conducted by O. R. Miller.

ATTEBERRY.—Sister Martha Robertson Atteberry was born near Waco, Missouri, December 21, 1861. Married William Frank Atteberry in 1880. She was baptized in her youth and lived a noble life, honored and respected by all and dearly beloved by her own family. Died at her home in Webb City, Missouri, May 20, 1917, after several months' illness. Funeral services at the church conducted by Charles Fry, before a large gathering.

CARPENTER.—Clara Evalina Carpenter was born December 1, 1904, the daughter of Brother and Sister D. W. Carpenter, and died from drowning on May 7, 1917, near Myrtle Point, Oregon, following the capsizing of a boat containing her sister and sister-in-law, the three losing their lives. The father saved the baby but the others were drowned before he could return to them. Baptized February 11, 1915. Funeral services in charge of Samuel Wood, assisted by F. J. Chaburn, before a very large audience.

CARPENTER.—Ruth Edwina Carpenter was born April 28, 1912, and died from accidental drowning with her sister and sister-in-law, near Myrtle Point, Oregon, on May 7, 1917. Her body and that of her sister were recovered, but at the

SATISFACTORY LEATHER GOODS

As an outgrowth of our book bindery at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, we have established in a modest way a leather goods department which can supply the demands of the church in this line. We have hopes that when it becomes more generally known that we can supply these articles the work may be extended and employment given to a number of worthy college students.

The quality of the workmanship is good, and the various articles manufactured are sent postpaid at the price listed in our illustrated catalogue.

Send for the catalogue and when you or your friends need anything in this line, order it from your church publishing house and the profit will help extend the gospel work through our publishing department.

Purses, hand bags, music rolls, and similar leather necessities are in stock for immediate shipment, making most useful presents.

TAGERT.—Eliza P. Tagert was born July 31, 1839. Married Samuel C. Lucas May 21, 1860, at Highland, Ohio, and to this union were born 5 children, only one of whom (E. T. Lucas) survives her. Her husband was killed by lightning and she later married Doctor E. C. Tagert, of Lilly Chapel, Ohio, who died some years ago. Baptized in 1908 by Samuel Twombly. She was a loving and kind mother, a worthy Saint, and loved and respected by all who knew her. Died May 20, 1917. Leaves to mourn, 1 son, 1 brother, and a host of friends. Funeral services from her home in Tulsa, Oklahoma, in charge of Peter Adamson, jr.; sermon by Joseph Arber.

ALLDRIDGE.—Sarah E. Williams Alldridge was born March 29, 1855, and died May 17, 1917, at her home near Leon, Iowa, surrounded by her husband and children, and many friends. She was the wife of B. D. Alldridge, and they were united in marriage at Crescent City, Iowa, the place of her birth, in the year 1871. They were the parents of ten children, eight of whom still live, and were present at her funeral, which was held at her home May 18, in charge of John F. Garver. The remains were shipped to her former home near Sloan, Iowa, where her body was interred by the hands of a large number of her friends who met at the depot under the leadership of Elder Amos Berve.

CRUM.—Samuel Crum was born at Harvestaw, Rockland County, New York, December 8, 1844. Served in the Army three and one half years during the Civil War. Afterward married Miss Sarah Willard, and to them 3 children were born. After her death he married Miss Rebecca Jane Curtis, in 1888, and to this union were born 3 children. Has been a member of the church about forty years. Ordained soon after uniting with the church. In 1889 he moved to Oregon, and later to Castle Rock, Washington, then to Centralia, Washington, where he has resided for the past eleven years. Died April 19, 1917. Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

JAMES E. KELLEY

Many throughout the church are made sad by the news of the death of James E. Kelley of the Quorum of Twelve, on Monday, June 4.

Elder Kelley was born June 11, 1879 at Madison, Indiana, and baptized April 13, 1896, at Kirtland, Ohio, by his uncle, Bishop E. L. Kelley, who was also spokesman in confirming him. He was thus the youngest member of his quorum.

He came to attend Graceland College shortly after his baptism, and remained as a student there for two years or over, until the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. At the outbreak of the war, he enlisted in the fifty-first Iowa Volunteers, which saw service in the Philippines. There he suffered from malaria and later pneumonia, which undermined his health.

During his absence in the islands his family moved to Lamoni, where they have resided ever since. Brother Kelley was ordained an elder July 7, 1901 and the following conference volunteered for missionary service and was appointed to labor in Maine. In 1903 he was appointed to Ohio and 1904 to the Rocky Mountain Mission.

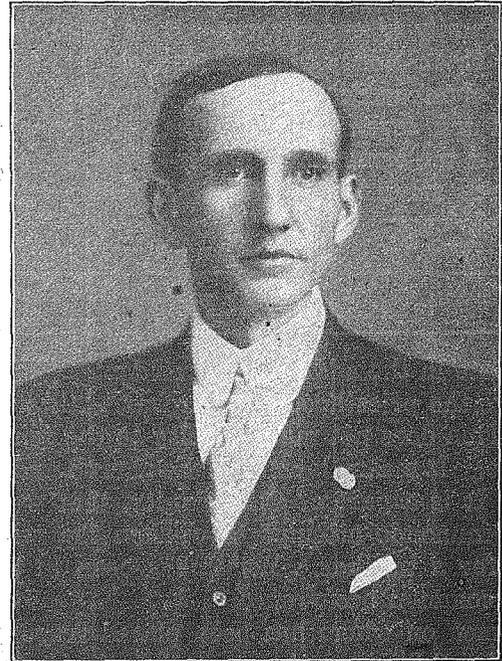

But he was desirous of further education so was released in order to attend the State University of Iowa for about eighteen months, where he studied law. There an illness developed into tuberculosis, so he was compelled to leave and go to Arizona for treatment.

A year or two later he was pronounced cured, and returned to Lamoni where he was married on October 25, 1907, to Audentia M. Hayer and left with her the same day to take up missionary work in western Nebraska and the Black Hills.

The following conference, April 16, 1908, he was ordained a seventy by John W. Rushton and his father, William H. Kelley, and enrolled in the third quorum of seventy. As a seventy he labored in western Nebraska, Manitoba, and in 1912 in Arizona and New Mexico. His appointment to the latter place being on account of declining health.

In April, 1913, he was called to the Quorum of Twelve to take the place of his father, William H. Kelley, who had been a member of that quorum for forty years, and president of the quorum for sixteen years. On April 19 he was ordained to that office under the hands of Gomer T. Griffiths, F. A. Smith, and J. W. Rushton. Since then his work has been in the Rocky Mountain region, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado and Mexico, though in 1913 he was appointed with F. M. Sheehy in charge of the Pacific Slope Mission, in addition to the States cited before.

JAMES E. KELLEY.

Brother Kelley was unable to attend the late conference on account of ill health, still despite this fact he had almost worn himself out trying to meet the demands of his office. While in Colorado President F. M. Smith and F. M. Sheehy and John W. Rushton, of the Quorum of Twelve, made immediate provisions for his removal and treatment and his wife and sister, a trained nurse, Sister Ethel Kelley, were sent for. It was hoped by this method and his removal to New Mexico his life might be prolonged for many weeks and months at least, but the strain of passing over the Continental Divide proved too much for him, so his days of usefulness have been cut short, while his best years of life should still have been before him.

Upon the return from Las Vegas the body lay in state Tuesday evening at Kansas City and a short service was held by relatives and friends. Owing to high water the trip to Lamoni was delayed until Thursday, at which time the train from Saint Joseph backed in with the funeral party.

The service was held at the Saints' church in Lamoni, Friday afternoon. Bishop B. R. McGuire was the spokesman, the services being in charge of Bishop Albert Carmichael, while Apostle Frank M. Sheehy offered prayer. The music for the sad occasion was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Wight, Mrs. Bertha Burgess and Arthur Church, while Miss Amy Vredenburgh presided at the organ. Many of the family attended from out of town, including Bishop E. L. Kelley and a brother, Cassius Kelley. Elder Columbus Scott, for many years senior president of the seventies, offered a few remarks and prayer at the cemetery. Elder Kelley leaves a wife and three small children to mourn, together with the whole church.

LOYALTY

We note in the address of President Frederick M. Smith to the priesthood, the emphasis laid upon loyalty. This does not mean loyalty to the joint council alone. It means loyalty to the church and to each other. It is a part of Christianity, that we should not by innuendo attempt to weaken the respect of others for a brother. Yet it has been in the past a very common occurrence.

The men on whom has been placed responsibility feel under the imperative necessity of carrying that responsibility and trying to do their duty. If we think such a man is failing or going wrong, the fair thing is to take the matter up between you and him alone, either in person or by correspondence, and for the work's sake help him to get right. But in talking to others let us emphasize first and always his good qualities.

When the conference has acted, none should attempt directly to impeach that action, or to treat it unfairly. This does not mean that where the action has been based on insufficient information, the matter may not be discussed and opinion given during the year.

When the joint council acts, members of that council should place their arguments there and not in the field. There are some men who cannot permit some one else to be praised without making a disparaging remark. This should not be. Our work should be made constructive, not destructive.

Unless a man is very careful, he will find that there are some people towards whom our reaction is unfavorable. It may be unconscious. In such cases, unless there is care, there may be not only criticisms, but personal dislike may affect official action.

We have heard this suggestion made several times without an attempt to make it personal. We have heard men give the inference that they have been silenced in fact without any action being taken, by the simple expedient of not appointing them to speak or do other work.

From observation we are inclined to think in many cases that this conclusion is founded on insufficient premises. We have ourselves experienced such a manner from others, as to lead us to believe that the other party thought us beneath his notice, only to find later that his opinion to the contrary was very high. Other matters have intervened, is often the real explanation.

Certainly on the basis of efficiency we want no idle men who are able to work. In this connection we may refer to another point made by President Smith, that the missionary should inspire the local men to service and so arouse them that they will feel the vitality of the missionary. There are too many members of the priesthood who are not active, and therein the cause suffers loss. It is not enough to ask, Have we put forth new men, who are more able and more active? It is not enough to find a man who is inefficient as a missionary or in local capacity. The essential thing is to discover wherein he is efficient, and employ him therein.

We have noticed in many places young men displacing those older in years and bringing marked energy to the work, and therein there has been gain. But if the older men are practically laid on the shelf we are still far below the place we should be. The highest efficiency requires the service of everyone. The highest efficiency requires the ability to put aside personal likes and dislikes, discover the ability of each man and utilize him.

It should also be evident that those in charge of the work in various fields, local, district, branch, stake or missionary, should not receive too readily the statements of the talebearer. If a man is reported to have preached heresy, give him an opportunity to explain himself. Not many months ago we heard a criticism concerning a certain man's preaching, whom many felt had for this reason been silenced, not officially, but by the simple expedient of not asking him to speak. He was alleged to have made certain statements in a public address. After six months we had occasion to see him and we brought the matter up, calling his attention to this report, which he at once denied.

Are some of our young men who are coming forward strong enough for the situation? Utilize the services of those who have had years of experience and utilize the services of the many young men who are coming to the front, so that with wisdom the work may be carried on more energetically to a successful conclusion. We believe with the help of our Father these young men are and will be strong enough; and that we are merely going through a period of transition.

NEARER TO GOD THROUGH WAR'S TRAGEDY

A letter from San Bernardino reports the work moving along in good order. Elder T. W. Williams was expected for May 27. Elder George H. Wixom, for several years mayor of that city, declined election and so is devoting his time more to the work of the church, not only in San Bernardino, but also in other points of southern California. The Evening Index publishes a short sermonet by Elder Wixom, the first of a series which are printed on the same page with the church announcements. The editorial heading reads:

New Feature for our Church Page. A new feature for the church news column is started to-day by the Evening Index. A little sermon will be presented each Sunday by a minister of one of the San Bernardino churches. To-day thoughts on the war tragedy are expressed by Elder George H. Wixom, pastor of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Elder Wixom's article is entitled, "War's tragedy should bring us nearer to God"—Minister," and reads in part as follows:

We are living in a day of great events, and as a people and a nation, we are called upon to take an inventory of our patriotism, and to determine in our own minds, whether we are willing to defend the principles upon which our Nation is founded with the same devotion and love that moved our forefathers to lay their all upon the altar, that their children should enjoy religious and political liberty. The red tragedy of Europe should bring us nearer to God.

As we meditate upon these questions we are reminded that our Pilgrim Fathers were religious men who were prompted to seek this new, undeveloped country, that they might be able to worship God without interference, a privilege never enjoyed by them in their home land.

Under the enlightening influence of liberty and the spirit of freedom, a thing unknown to the older world, the American patriots were given a new vision of God, and the sacred Book, the Bible, became a new book to them; for the first time they realized that God is our Father, and that we are all brothers and that our love for God is measured in terms of human kindness.

Elder Wixom also delivered the address at the exercises in the city of San Bernardino on memorial day. His address is also set forth in the San Bernardino Daily Sun.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION

Bishops B. R. McGuire and James F. Keir were in Lamoni three days the past week on business for the Board of Publication and the general bishopric. Among things that the Board of Publication does which should be taken into consideration in assuming its benefit to the church are: The HERALD and Ensign are sent to any general missionary free upon request; many tracts are sent out free by the Bureau of Publicity. ("Free" means that they are sent at the expense of the Board of Publication.) In addition to this, tracts and other work are furnished the general church at cost for use in the mission field and elsewhere. Several general church offices, as, historian, recorder, secretary, patriarch and general library are cared for and furnished either at bare cost, or without expense to the church.

Much incidental service is also done for the church officers, and stenographers and stationery furnished without charge. The editors are asked to answer a great many questions of general church interest, which are not available for the church publications. Yet no calculation is made of this work. In addition to this, tracts and books are prepared when the interests of the church require it without regard to immediate profit, in the interest of the missionary work. It is one of the strongest missionary instrumentalities in the church, and especially in this age when so much learning is gained through the eye rather than through the ear.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Frederick M. Smith

Favorable reports are reaching us of the work of President F. M. Smith in the field. Two of the brethren ranking high in the councils of the church refer to him as the best preacher in the church. "Others may rely more upon tricks of rhetoric and spectacular presentation, but from the standpoint of analysis, application, logic and diction, but especially because of the influence accompanying his efforts," they place him in the front ranks.

G. J. Waller Returns to Honolulu

The Pacific Commercial Advertiser of recent date tells of the return of Brother Waller to his former home after an absence of about a year. An extensive program was rendered, expressing the heartfelt welcome the local Saints felt over the return of the man who has been chiefly responsible for the progress of the work in that island mission. The Saints at Hilo sent over the floral decorations.

The Boy Movement

Sister Audentia Anderson is making a strong appeal in the Auxiliary Department of this issue concerning the proposed movement to organize our boys in a similar manner to the Oriole circles for the girls. We have the material, we have the need, let us realize that we have also the opportunity and responsibility. Read her appeal, think seriously about it, and do something, quick.

Reunion Tents

Already we are hearing of some of our reunions being called off because the Government needs all tents. Some districts own their tents, but it would be well for other districts before continuing their announcements to be sure themselves, that they will be able to secure the necessary dwelling places. There appears at present a shortage of duck and tents, so the Government in many quarters is purchasing all those that are in the market.

"Unity"

We are very much pleased to note the first issue of Unity under its present editors. The priesthood are urged in the first issue not only to subscribe, but also to keep a file of all numbers, as they will be valuable for future reference. The intention is expressed to take up a course of study in the near future. This publication is issued especially for the instruction of the priesthood by Frederick M. Smith, president of the Melchisedec priesthood and Benjamin R. McGuire, president of the Aaronic priesthood.

The European War

A violent and successful offensive has taken place south of Ypres, in which the British forces made a three-mile gain, took five villages, and captured 6,400 prisoners in addition to inflicting enormous losses on the Germans. Austria claims to have taken 27,000 prisoners from Italian forces since May 12, while the latter have reported the taking of a large number in their advance toward Trieste. The Russian situation is little better. A considerable number are demanding a trial for the Romanoffs who have been in power. The Spanish cabinet, formed on April 19, has resigned. The first contingent of the American war party to arrive in London was a group of officers, headed by General Pershing. They will soon proceed to France. One hundred airmen have arrived at the front and a Red Cross commission has been reported as on the way.

The Draft

The war department has declared its intention to draft from 900,000 to 1,500,000 men from the number registered on June 5. The first plan was to use 500,000 immediately, but this has been raised to 625,000. The Government does not contemplate any class exemptions, but will make them all on a personal basis. Farmers, factory operatives, and other special classes are not to be exempted as such, nor territorially, but all exemptions made individually. It is expected that all drafted men will be in the training camps by September 1.

Lamoni Red Cross

On Monday, June 4, a large number of the women of Lamoni met at the high school building to form a Red Cross unit. Sister Wood who has recently come from Canada, where she was president of a similar unit, was elected president. Sister Nunn, also from Canada where she has had experience in this line of work, was elected vice president, and to represent the local women Sister O. E. Green was elected second vice president. Sister Cyril E. Wight was chosen for secretary and Mrs. O. E. Teale for treasurer. It is their intention to make necessary linen and garments for our soldiers.

A Commendable Economy

Last year it took seventy-three pages in the Blue Stepping Stones to itemize the amounts paid for the Christmas offering. This year it was reduced to forty-nine pages. A request was sent out the latter part of the year by the presiding bishopric, asking that so far as possible the names of individual donors be omitted, and we are glad to see so liberal a response this year. This applies especially to schools, for of course it only takes a line for an individual name outside of schools and it could not be recorded in any less. A number of schools merely give the name of the school and the amount, which surely seems sufficient. The Lamoni school uses only nine lines and reports $568.24, which might easily have extended to a thousand, including the names of the classes. The same applies in like proportion to a number of other schools, the Mount Zion school in Independence cutting it down to five lines. Of course this is a minor matter but the saving this year alone nets a total gain of several hundred dollars, which amount remains in the treasury of the church. Every saving of this kind is as important as the earning of the same amount. By the mere cutting down of the margins of the HERALD this year, just a little, a saving of two hundred dollars was saved to the church.

The Gospel Standard

Recently there have come to hand from Australia three copies of Gospel Standard. The magazine number contains, among other excellent features, two articles of President Elbert A. Smith: one, a brief summary "Do you know?" the other, an article of several pages on "The great religious ideas advocated by Joseph Smith." It contains much other excellent matter from Elder P. N. Hanson, W. J. Haworth and others, making an issue of twenty-eight pages. The regular numbers are issued monthly with eight pages each and contain usual announcements and articles.

Restrictions on Traveling Preachers

The railway fares in Great Britain were raised fifty per cent at the beginning of the year with the avowed object of discouraging unnecessary traveling and enabling the railways to send over to France a large quantity of locomotives and rolling stock for military purposes, says Arthur Page Grubb in The Christian Advocate. Freight rates have also risen considerably and delays are numerous and extended. One of the results noted is that the six or seven hundred Wesleyan ministers who are ordinarily moved every year from one circuit to another remain where they are, except in cases where there is urgent need for change. It is suggested that when the war closes the number of removals will be doubled.

Another Alaskan Exploration Expedition

The National Geographic Society announce that arrangements have been completed to send a second party into the Katmai region in Alaska, for a more complete survey of the effects of the volcanic eruption which occurred in June, 1912. It is said to be among the twelve most violent explosions of the kind in history. It is said that if Vesuvius should ever erupt with the violence of Katmai, Naples would be buried under fifteen feet of ashes, Rome would be covered a foot deep, the sound would be heard in Paris, and ashes would fall in Brussels and Berlin. No imagination can picture the destruction to life and property which would have followed this eruption had it occurred in a thickly populated section of the United States instead of in a remote section of Alaska, twenty-five miles inland. Reports with many photographs will be published in the National Geographic Magazine as have others in the past, concerning the former explorations.

Manuscript Rejected

Chinese editors are polite. An author who had submitted a manuscript received it back, but not with an ordinary "rejected with thanks" note, but with this characteristically polite letter:

"Illustrious Brother of the Sun and of the Moon: We have perused your manuscript with celestial delight. By the bones of our ancestors we swear that we have never met a masterpiece like it. If we publish it his majesty, the emperor, will command us to take it as a criterion and to print nothing that does not equal it. Since that could never be possible in ten thousand years, we return your manuscript, trembling, and asking your mercy seventeen thousand times."

Armenian and Syrian Relief

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is making every effort to raise funds to relieve the terrible suffering in the countries indicated by their title. They have recently received through the United States consular service the following cablegrams: "Relief funds finished. Need unprecedented. Require $100,000 this month" (May). "Request committee to assume responsibility for ten thousand fatherless children at rate of two dollars per month per child." Another report estimates forty thousand orphans. Syria reports: "Poor people dying of starvation at alarming rate." The committee sees that all funds contributed are sent without deduction for expenses. Their address is One Madison Avenue, New York City.

A FINANCIAL NOTE

A letter from Elder Edward Rannie calls attention to the fact that five cents a day from each member of the church in the United States would amount to $1,277,500 a year; yet many of us say Zion cannot be redeemed by purchase. The amount given in the lecture, of $700,000,000 a year waste, was for food alone, while if to this is added the waste of clothing and the amount spent for worldly pleasures which do not enrich the soul, it would be considerably increased.

We note in the countries at war and even in places in this country old clothes too good to throw away and not quite good enough to wear are being repaired and worn.

It is indeed significant that, in the thirties revelations were being given concerning the redemption of Zion. They were even told it could be done then, but it was not done. Now the world is moving forward and much of what was then taught is now coming to be recognized as good business.

Cooperative work for the community is coming to be recognized as the right business criterion rather than cutthroat methods. It may be true that all do not see it this way, but that is the tendency. It has taken over eighty years, but the world is coming to that position without our leadership.

Four years ago a revelation was given to eliminate unnecessary expenses, which naturally would include all waste. Already we are reaching the point in four short years when we shall be compelled to observe that law.

Bishop Carmichael recently suggested that the income tax law and its general tendency of taking all in excess of a certain amount is causing a compulsory observance of the law, that a man should receive his just and reasonable wants and needs and that the surplus should be used for community interest.

A tax on tea, coffee, tobacco and alcoholic beverages has been in force the past few weeks, though not yet adopted by Congress. Keepers of the Word of Wisdom are not affected.

Certainly this is one thing there remains for us to do: cut out unnecessary waste and expenses in our personal expenditures, and to study and prepare to observe the law of consecration. This is now our duty not only as citizens of the kingdom of God, but also as citizens of the United States and of the world. What we can save in food value will help to feed much of the world, and at the conclusion of the war for humanitarian reasons, we should be prepared to help as far as is possible the necessity of all.

There is danger that in the early months after the war, there will exist a greater deficiency than has yet occurred. But he who keepeth the law of God is safe.

LET US MOVE FORWARD

In this time of stress many families feel upset. Young men feel loath to undertake any great business for fear that they will not be able to complete it. The cry of economy is made so strongly that it becomes almost parsimony. Yet it is a time above all when we should with patience seek the law of God to keep his commandments.

It is a time when, as citizens, we should if anything put a little more force in our efforts in order to accomplish the work before us. It is not a time for drawing within our shell. Business must be carried on, not only farm work, but all departments of business. Already we note the criticism that the emphasis laid upon such staples as wheat and potatoes has caused a decided decrease in sweet corn and other crops suitable for canning.

It is planned to call out five hundred thousand men in the fall. This is probably less than five per cent of the registration. Some may be exempted for various reasons, but certainly there appears but little reason why ninety-five per cent should cease aggressive work because of that which will evidently affect five per cent. When these five per cent go, it is even more necessary that the rest of us move forward to fill their places.

Some have suggested that we should call in our missionaries and put them to work on farms. Many of them would be glad of the change. But if there is a time when man finds his heart turned to the powers above, it is in times of national calamity and stress, which includes war times and the times immediately succeeding. There is a need, a deep need, of devoted, consecrated ministers now, men who will work and make every hour count in their work of laboring for the cause of Christ. There is a need for the warning voice to be raised, for the perilous times coming upon the earth. There is a need for trained men ready to go forth to the nations of the earth when there comes a lull at least through peace, declaring far and near the gospel of the kingdom. These men must be made ready.

Our best preparation for present duty, our best preparation for that which will confront us, our best preparation for the life to come is to do our present duty as well as we possibly can. It is time that we should consider carefully the word of God and its prophecies concerning those things which are coming upon the earth. It is a time we should urgently move forward to teach the commandments of God, and a time when we should seek to keep them and build up Zion, the pure in heart. It is a time when from a business standpoint we should do what we are now doing better. It is a time when for the sake of the kingdom of God we should try to do the right thing we have been doing better than ever before.

JEW'S MAY LEAVE JERUSALEM

The following press dispatch coming from Copenhagen via London, May 30, was printed in the Chicago Herald for May 31:

According to information received in Zionist circles from Palestine, the Turks have twice given orders for the evacuation of the Jews from Jerusalem, but the orders each time were suspended owing to representations from the German Government, which feared for the safety of the shrines and other holy places, and still more the effect upon the world's public opinion. The order of expulsion, however, is still hanging over the heads of the residents of Jerusalem.

The expulsion of the Jews from Jaffa, according to the same source of information, was due to the chicanery of the Turkish officials who, when the Jews in Galilee sent horses and carts to aid their coreligionists in their exodus, requisitioned all the horses and then provided for their transportation in vermin-infested railroad coaches, which caused an immediate outbreak of spotted typhus among the wanderers.

THE HASTENING TIME--Part 1

BY ALVIN KNISLEY

Watchman on the walls of Zion,
What, O tell us, of the night?
Is the day-star now arising?
Will the morn-soon greet our sight?
O'er your vision
Shine there now some rays of light?

Watchman, tell me, does the morning
Of fair Zion's glory dawn?
Have the signs that mark its coming
Yet upon thy pathway shone?

Pilgrim, yes! arise, look round thee;
Light is breaking in the skies;
Gird thy bridal robes around thee,
Morning dawns, arise! arise!

Rebellion against God, the secession from his government, from his sovereign right to rule, and the setting up of rival institutions is the rightful father, the logically traceable cause of the social chaos, the physical deterioration, the "distress of nations," the "time of trouble" now so generally diffused. God, as one writer very aptly observes, having made man, had the supreme right to govern him by laws of his own make and by officers of his own appointment. Having also made the earth he had the right not only to decide who should inhabit it, but how it should be inhabited. Man, having lost the Spirit by transgression, rapidly acquired a seared conscience and was soon to usurp the reins of position and authority. He decided that he could make his own laws and rule himself; that he could get along very well without God in the world. One of them in more recent times, in fact in our day, was known to confirm their declaration of independence of God in words after this manner: "I don't say there is no God—I don't know. In that infinite vast there may be one somewhere, and I may get paid for sowing the tares of doubt. Nevertheless I am not going to miss the good time I am having for one I know not of. I believe in marrying the best girl you can find, of decorating your home and of doing every act, every indulgence that will bring comfort, felicity and pleasure to the fireside—and let the gods run heaven to suit themselves."

Very recently an intelligent and evidently well-meaning individual lodged with me the complaint that our people as a church pay too much attention to temporal affairs; that aside from tithing and possibly some freewill offerings we have no business to show concern; that while they bowed to our teaching for the most part, was miraculously healed and so forth, they did not believe that God required us to buy a part of Missouri and then be individually directed as to our obligations.

This is tantamount to denying that God will direct us to-day in our economic and financial relations. For, to grant that he will, is to yield the point. If we have even a reason to expect that the Lord will thus direct us, and, if then he does not, we admit we are in apostasy. Certainly God in Bible times took cognizance of his people physically and temporally as well as spiritually. Before man fell he not only was without sin, but he was without bodily sickness, and he had a home with plenty to eat. If the gospel is a redemptive system in the true sense of the term, we have a reason to look for a panacea therein for the ills and irregularities of man in the said three capacities—that he will not only be pardoned of his sins, but he will be healed of his bodily ailments and that provision will be made for him in regard to his needs as to clothing and food. After man fell, God not only pardoned him upon his repentance, but he made him a suit of clothes. (Genesis 3: 27, I. T.) And no sooner did his bodily disorders begin to assert themselves than the Lord began to take care of them and to recover him as he exercised faith and was in subjection to His commandments.

And therein, we submit, is one of the great mistakes of modern religionists. They have offered us a place in the heavenly mansions, forgiveness in this life, a bit of Holy Ghost and a Merry Christmas hereafter. They have ever been anxious to "swap treasures in heaven for cash down." And their interest in cash has been measured by the extent by which they were getting it. But as to the concern of themselves as to how we were to get it, how we were to surmount the seemingly insuperable obstacles between hunger and plenty, between nakedness and drygoods, between homelessness and the luxuriant landlords—a deathful, sepulchral silence. Else we are told that those benefits God withholds till the next life.

MR. GOMPERS ON THE SITUATION

No wonder Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor answered as he did when a certain clergyman wrote to him and asked him to give his opinion as to why so many intelligent workingmen did not attend church.

In reply Mr. Gompers said that one reason is that the churches are no longer in touch with the hopes and aspirations of workingmen, and are out of sympathy with their miseries and burdens. The pastors either do not know, he said, or have not the courage to declare from their pulpits, the rights and wrongs of the toiling millions. The organizations found most effective in securing improved conditions have been frowned upon by the church. Laborers have had their attention directed to "the sweet by and by," to the utter neglect of the conditions arising from "the bitter now and now." The church and the ministry have been the "apologists and defenders of the wrongs committed against the interests of the people, simply because the perpetrators are the possessors of wealth." Asked as to the means he would suggest for a reconciliation of the church and the masses, Mr. Gompers recommends a "complete reversal of the present attitude." He closes with these words: "He who fails to sympathize with the movement of labor, he who complacently or indifferently contemplates the awful results of present economic and social conditions, is not only the opponent of the best interests of the human family, but is particeps criminis to all wrongs inflicted upon the men and women of our time, the children of to-day, the manhood and womanhood of the future.—The Literary Digest.

THE SOCIAL PROBLEM

The present upheaval, the strife between labor and capital, the strikes and internal insurrections, and the inequality so generally prevalent have led many minds who were not strictly religious to reflect the situation in connection with prophecy.

And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.—Luke 21: 25, 26.

About the time of the end, about the time that Michael the great prince should stand up, and shortly previous to the resurrection of the dead, Daniel says:

And there shall be a time of trouble, such as there never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book.—Chapter 12: 1.

Indeed the nations are distressed, and there is a time of trouble in the widespread disquietude and unrest such as has no parallel in the history of the world. "Thy people," the Saints, will only be delivered by an observance of the laws of righteousness and a flight to Zion for safety. The European war is simply an outburst of pent-up pressure—a Vesuvius in eruption. It is but the prelude to Armageddon.

Fifty years ago there was plenty of work. There were few unemployed. Of to-day I find in the Practical American Encyclopedia, volume 2:

In the period extending from 1881 to 1900 there were 22,793 strikes in the United States, of which 14,457 were ordered by organizations and 8,326 took place by general agreement of the laborers. Fifty-three per cent of those ordered succeeded, while 14 per cent were partly successful, and the remaining 33 per cent failed. On the other hand, of those not ordered, 36 per cent succeeded, 9 per cent partly succeeded, and 55 per cent failed. The experience of the past twenty years has shown uniformly that the success of a strike depends almost entirely upon close organization of the laborers directly interested.

The anthracite coal strike of 1902 cost the country $142,500,000. In 1908 Great Britain and Ireland had 485 industrial disputes, mostly involving shipyards, metal workers and textile factories, whereas Germany in the same year had 3,245 strikes. "Time of trouble," "distress of nations."

Notwithstanding the wonderful advancement in science and art, the increase of civilization in the world throughout, poverty and beggary are stalking through the land. The rich are becoming richer, the poor poorer. And both classes are organized and organizing against each other. In the same cemetery are sarcophagi, huge monoliths, on one hand, and mere "markers" on the other. The paper a couple of days ago said over half a million are now starving in Syria. The San Francisco Examiner said some time ago:

When the country has enough food, clothing, fuel and shelter for everybody, why are times hard? Evidently nature is not to blame. Who, or what, then, is? The problem of the unemployed is one of the most serious that face the United States.

There is only one solution and that is not the one which men are seeking for. Mr. Macaulay, the English historian wrote to an American friend in 1857:

It is clear as daylight that your Government will never be able to hold under control a suffering and angry majority, because in your country the Government is in the hands of the masses, and the rich who are in the minority, are absolutely at their mercy. A day will come in the State of New York when the multitude, between half a breakfast and the hope of half a dinner, will elect your legislature. Is it possible to have any doubt as to the kind of legislators they will elect? You will be obliged to do those things which render prosperity impossible. Then some Cæsar or Napoleon will take the reins of Government in hand. Your Republic will be pillaged and ravaged in the twentieth century, just as the Roman Empire was by the barbarians of the fifth century, with this difference, that the devastators of the Roman Empire, the Huns and Vandals, came from abroad, while your barbarians will be the natives of your own country.

The above is strongly predictive, but absolutely suggestionless, unless he means that we should withhold the ballot. But his country and Germany and others have obtained the ballot on demand since he wrote, which ballot France had taken by force three fourths of a century previous to his writing, and the outbreak which he forecasts has not come yet in any of them as a result, whatever may be on the way. But the learned author knew human nature, and he knew the portent of things and what the selfishness of the human heart was destined to lead to if left to its natural course unobstructed by any causes which the author did not foresee.

Doubtless Mr. Macaulay's prediction would have been fulfilled long ere this save as it has been held back by the many laws that have been wisely enacted in favor of the poor and the laboring classes. Some of said laws enacted in this country within the past fifty years are:

Abolition of imprisonment for debt.

Exemption of homesteads and considerable personal property from execution against debtors.

An eight-hour law lately enacted to protect laborers.

Laws reducing the rate of interest.

Liens have been allowed mechanics and laborers on that on which they bestowed their labor.

Railroads are required to fence their roads or pay double damages.

Passenger and freight charges have been regulated.

Postage has been reduced to the loss of $8,000,000 annually to the Government.

Scores of other laws have been adopted which have served to hold back the onrushing tide, and to restrain the abuse of their power by the trusts and capitalistic classes.

HEAPING OF TREASURES

Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for [in—R. V.] the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter.—James 5: 1-5.

In an article in the Forum Mr. Thomas G. Sherman, the New York statistician, gives the names of seventy Americans whose aggregate wealth is $2,700,000,000, an average of $38,500,000, each; and another list of one hundred persons whose wealth would average $25,000,000 each; and that "the average annual income of the richest hundred Americans cannot be less (each) than $1,200,000, and probably exceeds $1,500,000."—Studies in the Scriptures, vol. 4, p. 281.

I have a clipping which I took from a paper some time ago containing the comment of Reverend Josiah Strong on Mr. Sherman's statement which I present:

On this subject Doctor Josiah Strong, one of our best known students of social problems, is quoted in The Chautauquan for May, 1912 as follows:

"If one hundred workmen could earn $1,000 a year, they would have to work 1,200 or 1,500 years to earn as much as the annual income of these one hundred richest Americans. And if a workman could earn $1,000 a day he would have to work until he was 547 years old, and never take a day off, before he could earn as much as some Americans are worth. . . . The wealth of Croesus was estimated at only $8,000,000 while there are seventy American estates, according to Mr. Sherman, which average $35,000,000 each. The nabobs of the later Roman republic became famous for their immense fortunes, but the entire possessions of the richest were not equal to the annual income of at least one American."—The New Era.

The Lord said in 1831 (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3) that "it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin."

(To be continued.)

MACHU PICCHU AND THE MEGALITHIC PEOPLE—Part 4

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD

Two hundred and sixty years have passed away and we read:

And it came to pass that the wicked part of the people began again to build up the secret oaths and combinations of Gadianton. And also the people who were called the people of Nephi [Christians] began to be proud in their hearts, because of their exceeding riches, and become vain, like unto their brethren, the Lamanites.—4 Nephi 1: 50, 51.

And it came to pass that when three hundred years had passed away, both the people of Nephi and the Lamanites had become exceeding wicked one like unto another. And it came to pass that the robbers of Gadianton did spread over all the faces of the land; and there were none that were righteous, save it were the [three] disciples of Jesus. And gold and silver did they lay up in store in abundance, and did traffic in all manner of traffic.—4 Nephi 1: 53-55.

Now the Lamanites, and the Lemuelites, and the Ishmaelites were the Lamanites, and the two parties were Nephites and Lamanites. And it came to pass that the war began to be among them in the borders of Zarahemla [Colombia] by the waters of Sidon.—Book of Mormon 1: 9, 10.

But behold, the land was filled with robbers and with Lamanites; and notwithstanding the great destruction which hung over my people [the Nephites] they did not repent of their evil doings; therefore there was blood and carnage spread throughout all the face of the land, both on the part of the Nephites, and also on the part of the Lamanites: and it was one complete revolution throughout all the face of the land.—Mormon 1: 29, 30.

And here the curtain drops over South America and there is chaos. The empire of Peru, at the time of the Spanish invasion stretched along the Pacific from the second degree north to the thirty-seventh degree south latitude; a line which describes the western boundaries of the modern republics of Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, and Chile. Professor Bingham and his colleagues give in their reports two very short picture sketches of Peru and its people and some of their deeds which cover about two thousand years, commencing with the origin of the megalithic civilization down to the Spanish invasion.

The Book of Mormon also gives us two very short picture sketches of the land of Nephi (Peru) and the land of Zarahemla (Colombia) and its people for about nine hundred years; in Zarahemla, however, the country for only about five or six hundred years, commencing with the origin of the Nephite-Lamanite civilization in the land of Nephi (Peru).

The pictures of the racial people, civilization, wars, anarchy, and revolutions look very much the same in both the native story and in the Book of Mormon. And like the four-brother story, one seems but the echo of the other.

This golden Christian era of about one hundred and sixty years was out of the ordinary even among Christians; no such high standards of life without greed are seen in the New Testament church, but the Nephite-Lamanite government were converted; church and state may have been closely allied, the "all things common" was a government measure with church approval. It was born two years after the church was established, and was abolished by the government years before the church was entirely overthrown. This converted government closed its doors against slavery and monopoly. "They were not rich and poor," while Rome had its doors open to slavery and poverty. In the New Testament church were slaves, slave owners, and poverty, but in the Book of Mormon church neither slaves nor poverty, the differences were not in the churches of Christ, but in the governments of men under which these churches live. And the Peruvians at the time of the conquest had also, like these Book of Mormon people, abolished poverty. "No man could be rich, no man be poor, in Peru; but all might enjoy and did enjoy, a competence." (See Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, p. 37.) The Peruvian Government owned all the land and sheep, and the government allotted each man his apportionment of land each year, based on the number of dependents, and this model may have been copied from the old government measure of the Christian era.

Another remarkable statement is: "No whoredoms, nor any manner of lasciviousness."

Professor Bingham gives the statement of one of the repentant conquerors, "The said Incas governed in such a way that in all the land neither a thief, nor a vicious man, nor a bad dishonest woman was known. No lawsuits." (Page 521, May number National Geographic Magazine for 1916.)

Quoting from the same document, Mr. Prescott says:

In the preamble to his testament, made, as he states, to relieve his conscience, at the time of his death, he declares that the whole population, under the Incas, was distinguished by sobriety and industry; that such as robbery and theft were unknown; that, far from licentiousness, there was not even a prostitute in that country; and that everything was conducted with the greatest order, and entire submission to authority.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, p. 104.

Thus we see conditions in Peru at the time of the conquest, so far as sobriety, industry and the absence of poverty and crime were concerned, were about as stated of their forefathers during the Christian era, according to the Book of Mormon. (See Nephi

1:4 where we are also told there were no poor, no rich, no prostitutes in the country. Is this accidental agreement?)

After two hundred and ten years had passed away there were many churches in the land, which professed to know the Christ, but denied the greater parts of his gospel, and there are legions of Christians like that now. And again, there was another church which denied the Christ, and they persecuted the true church of Christ, unbelievers did smite the Christian. When three hundred years had passed away the Nephites and Lamanites had become exceeding wicked one like unto another, and there were none that were righteous. Thus the church of Christ passed away into unbelief or rebellion against Christianity. The government, too, at this time of departure from Christianity was having its troubles. Its golden age we see began to depart. The change of policy from "all things common" to personal liberty in acquiring property without legal restraint about 200 A. D. was a political storm, a revolution, the change came, and then every man for himself; but a thousand years later, according to Professor Bingham's reading, a "Manco-Capac" who was born at Machu Picchu, a local king of that region, who began to conquer rival states and to revive the old civilization and empire, which we see controlled all the property in the state, and so fixed it by law that "no man could be rich and no man could be poor in Peru." And Machu Picchu became a deserted city.

And now it came to pass in this year, yea in the two hundred and thirty and first year, there was a great division among the people.—4 Nephi 1:39.

Division, "the act of dividing or separating into parts."

After two hundred and sixty years had passed away, the people began again to build up the secret oaths and combinations of Gadianton. And when 300 A. D. had passed away these organized bands of outlaws had "spread over all the land." And on account of these outlaws the people had to "hide up their treasures in the earth." After 326 A. D. we read, "there was blood and carnage spread throughout the land." Then later we see racial wars and invasions, and so passed away that peaceful government into a complete "revolution throughout the land." The Christian church, and a Christian state in South America both torn to pieces by dissensions, the state by political reformers, invasions, bandits, robbers, anarchy, plunder, revolutions and chaos, "blood and carnage" in racial wars. The golden age of this people, as we noticed before, closed with the second century, leaving us gazing at that once happy land and people who had had a glorious past.

Of the megalithic people, "that vanished race" whom the writer is trying to identify with the southern people of the Book of Mormon, it is said, that—first, there was a period which began with the origin of civilization, and lasted until the first or second century of the Christian era. Second, there was a period of disintegration, decline, and disorder, introduced by successful invasions from the east and southeast, during which the country was broken up into small states, and many of the arts of civilization were lost; this period lasted more than a thousand years. Third and last came the period of the Incas, who revived civilization and restored the empire.—Ancient America, p. 264.

Of its kings we read:

Manco-Capac III, the sixtieth sovereign of this line, is supposed to have reigned at the beginning of the Christian era, and in his time "Peru had reached her greatest elevation and extension." The next three reigns covered thirty-two years, it is said. Then came Titu-Yupanqui-Pachacuti, the sixty-fourth and last sovereign of the old kingdom, who was killed in battle with a horde of invaders who came from the east and southeast across the Andes. His death threw the kingdom into confusion. There was rebellion as well as invasion, by which it was broken up into small states. . . . "Many ambitious ones, taking advantage of the new king's youth, denied him obedience, drew away from him the people, and usurped several provinces. Those who remained faithful to the heir of Titu-Yupanqui conducted him to Tambotoco, whose inhabitants offered him obedience. From this it happened that this monarch took the title of King of Tambotoco."

And so the old empire passed away about A. D. 200.

During the next twenty-six reigns the sway of the old royal house was confined to this little state. These twenty-six successors of the old sovereigns were merely kings of Tambotoco. The country, overrun by rude invaders, torn by civil war, and harried by "many simultaneous tyrants," became semibarbarous; "all was found in great confusion; life and personal safety were endangered, and civil disturbances caused an entire loss of the use of letters. The art of writing seems to have been mixed up with issues of a religious controversy in the time of the old kingdom. It was proscribed now even in the little State of Tambotoco, for we read that the fourteenth of its twenty-six rulers "prohibited, under the amauta who sought to restore the art of writing was put forbade, also, the invention of letters. Quelca was a kind of parchment made from plantain leaves." It is added that the amauta who sought to restore the art of writing was put to death.—Ib'id., pp. 266, 267.

So we see that writing was understood in the olden times and its use was mixed up in a religious controversy and was not outlawed by the death penalty, so that art, also paper making, were lost, and the Peruvians had neither of those arts at the time of the conquest.

Professor Bingham says these racial migrations appear to have continued for some time. Montesinos tells us that in the reign of Pachacuti VI, the sixty-second Peruvian Amanta, there came from the Andes, as well as from Brazil, and the north, large hordes of fierce people, who waged wars of long duration. During these wars the ancient or megalithic civilization was destroyed. . . . The governors of the districts through which they passed were not able to resist them: the king assembled the larger part of his army near La Raya Pass, between the basin of Lake Titicaca and the Urubamba Valley, and awaited the approach of the enemy. As soon as Pachacuti VI received word that they were near, he went out to battle and was carried about on a golden stretcher. Unfortunately he was killed by an arrow and his army was destroyed.

Montesinos quotes his authorities as stating that there were only 500 of the army left; leaving behind many sick, they retired to the mountains, going to Tambotoco (Machu Picchu) which was a healthy place, where they hid the body of their king in a cave. The different provinces of the kingdom, upon learning of the death of Pachacuti VI, rose in rebellion and the people of Tambotoco had many disputes in respect to electing a new king. At this time, says Montesinos, the power of the Peruvian monarchy was destroyed and did not return to its former state for over 500 years. All record of it is lost. In each of the provinces the people chose their own king. Those loyal to the old monarch were very few in number and could not successfully oppose the rest of the people. They made their capital at Tambotoco and elected a king, Titi-Truaman-Quicho. On account of the general anarchy all over the kingdom, no one could live in Cuzco, and little by little men began to come to Tambotoco to live under the protection of the king, where they would be safe from the general chaos and disorder. (National Geographic Magazine, February, 1915.)

Incidentally we are told that "the art of writing seems to have been mixed up with the issues of a religious controversy in the time of the old kingdom." (Ancient America, p. 267.)

The megalithic people could write then, as the Nephite record says, and the Book of Mormon comes to our assistance again. It says, "And again there were another church which denied the Christ, and they did persecute the true church of Christ. . . . And they did smite upon the people of Jesus; but the people of Jesus did not smite again." (Page 494.)

We see here now an impotent government which at A. D. 36 was all powerful, which could and did protect the oppressed, did abolish slavery, did abolish monopoly, could and did abolish greed, and make all things common. So, "they were not rich and poor, bond and free." But now this government is too weak to protect "the people of Jesus," its humble citizens, and the anti-Christians which denied the Christ are persecuting "the believers in Jesus." Religion was the bone of political contention, and the antis were fighting the Christians, and the writings which contained its doctrines and writing were later, as we have seen, outlawed by the death penalty.

Thus passed that "old megalithic empire." And Professor Bingham says, "All record of it is lost." And it, like the Christian government noticed above, was broken up by religio-political rebellion, racial wars, invasions, dissensions, persecutions, anarchy and chaos, a "complete revolution," a turbulent era, as the Nephite record says, and a "great division," into parts, as Professor Bingham says, "divided into several small states." So that the young heir to the old megalithic throne at Cuzco fled to Machu Picchu, an out-of-the-way place on a mountain; while Cuzco the capital was "sacked" by barbarians, the inhabitants of the city fled for safety, except the ministers of the temple. And so it appears from both these stories, that both governments went to pieces at the same time, for the same cause, each people had its golden age, each at the beginning of the Christian era, then immediately followed with each people its darkest or turbulent age.

The Peruvian story says there were five hundred years of chaos. The Book of Mormon leaves the South American people in the dark era of racial wars, invasion, blood, carnage, bandits, robbers, anarchy, chaos, and as it says, a complete "revolution," at about A. D. 330.

And after comparing both stories, and the points of agreement in both of them, I conclude that the Book of Mormon people of South America were the megalithic people, because the story told by either one of them will fit the other one, their pedigrees according to their own words are the same, both colonies crossed the sea, both started from four brothers, both were of the white race, both were given a divine start, both had a golden era, or an era of its greatest elevation, both at the beginning of the Christian era, both had a dark age, both at the same time, both commencing about 200 A. D., and both in the same way, viz, a "general anarchy," over all the land, a "general chaos and disorder." This is the testimony of Peruvian antiquity, and this is also the testimony of the Book of Mormon.

And with the truth all things that exist are in harmony.

The Government is now issuing a news publication each day, which is sent free to public officials, newspapers and agencies of a semipublic character which will aid in the distribution of the information it contains. Those who may desire it, may obtain regular daily copies for less than the price of a daily newspaper. Its news is all of an official character, such as proclamations, official bulletins, etc., all issued under the supervision of the national committee of publicity.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE DUTY OF THE CHURCH

[The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America adopted the following and send it out to be read from the pulpits one or more Sundays. Since it is such a representative document, we publish it in full.—EDITORS.]

I. OUR SPIRIT AND PURPOSE

After long patience, and with a solemn sense of responsibility, the Government of the United States has been forced to recognize that a state of war exists between this country and Germany, and the president has called upon all the people for their loyal support and their whole-hearted allegiance. As American citizens, members of Christian churches gathered in federal council, we are here to pledge both support and allegiance in unstinted measure.

We are Christians as well as citizens. Upon us therefore rests a double responsibility. We owe it to our country to maintain intact and to transmit unimpaired to our descendants our heritage of freedom and democracy. Above and beyond this, we must be loyal to our divine Lord, who gave his life that the world might be redeemed, and whose loving purpose embraces every man and every nation.

As citizens of a peace-loving Nation, we abhor war. We have long striven to secure the judicial settlement of all international disputes. But since, in spite of every effort, war has come, we are grateful that the ends to which we are committed are such as we can approve. To vindicate the principles of righteousness and the inviolability of faith as between nation and nation; to safeguard the right of all the peoples, great and small alike, to live their life in freedom and peace; to resist and overcome the forces that would prevent the union of the nations in a commonwealth of free peoples conscious of unity in the pursuit of ideal ends—these are aims for which every one of us may lay down our all, even life itself.

We enter the war without haste or passion, not for private or national gain, with no hatred nor bitterness against those with whom we contend.

No man can foresee the issue of the struggle. It will call for all the strength and heroism of which the Nation is capable. What now is the mission of the church in this hour of crisis and danger? It is to bring all that is done or planned in the Nation's name to the test of the mind of Christ.

That mind upon one point we do not all interpret alike. With sincere conviction some of us believe that it is forbidden the disciple of Christ to engage in war under any circumstances. Most of us believe that the love of all men which Christ enjoins, demands that we defend with all the power given us the sacred rights of humanity. But we are all at one in loyalty to our country, and in steadfast and whole-hearted devotion to her service.

As members of the church of Christ, the hour lays upon us special duties:

To purge our own hearts clean of arrogance and selfishness;

To steady and inspire the Nation;

To keep ever before the eyes of ourselves and of our allies the ends for which we fight;

To hold our own Nation true to its professed aims of justice, liberty and brotherhood;

To testify to our fellow Christians in every land, most of all to those from whom for the time we are estranged, our consciousness of unbroken unity in Christ;

To unite in the fellowship of service multitudes who love their enemies and are ready to join with them in rebuilding the waste places as soon as peace shall come;

To be diligent in works of relief and mercy, not forgetting those ministries to the spirit to which, as Christians, we are especially committed;

To keep alive the spirit of prayer, that in these times of strain and sorrow men may be sustained by the consciousness of the presence and power of God;

To hearten those who go to the front, and to comfort their loved ones at home;

To care for the welfare of our young men in the Army and Navy, that they may be fortified in character and made strong to resist temptation;

To be vigilant against every attempt to arouse the spirit of vengeance and unjust suspicion toward those of foreign birth or sympathies;

To protect the rights of conscience against every attempt to invade them;

To maintain our Christian institutions and activities unimpaired, the observance of the Lord's Day and the study of the Holy Scriptures, that the soul of our Nation may be nourished and renewed through the worship and service of almighty God;

To guard the aims of education, and of social progress and economic freedom, won at so great a cost, and to make full use of the occasion to set them still further forward, even by and through the war;

To keep the open mind and the forward look, that the lessons learned in war may not be forgotten when comes that just and sacred peace for which we pray;

Above all, to call men everywhere to new obedience to the will of our Father, God, who in Christ has given himself in supreme self-sacrifice for the redemption of the world, and who invites us to share with him his ministry of reconciliation.

To such service we would summon our fellow Christians of every name. In this spirit we would dedicate ourselves and all that we have to the Nation's cause. With this hope we would join hands with all men of good will of every land and race, to rebuild on this war-ridden and desolated earth the commonwealth of mankind, and to make of the kingdoms of the world the kingdom of Christ.

II. OUR PRACTICAL DUTIES

ARMY AND NAVY

For the moral and spiritual welfare of the Army and Navy the churches are in chief measure responsible. They should therefore cultivate a close relationship to the Army and Navy chaplains who are the accredited ministers of the churches and should dignify and strengthen their service. They should cordially sustain and reinforce the work of the Young Men's Christian Association, which is an especially equipped and well-trying arm of the church for ministering to men in the camp. They should also sympathetically support the plans of the American Bible Society to make the Scriptures available for every soldier and sailor of the Army and Navy.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

In this time of crisis the federal council urges the churches to use their utmost endeavors to secure national prohibition as a war measure, demanded alike by economic, moral and religious considerations. The liquor traffic consumed last year foodstuffs sufficient to feed 7,000,000 men for a year, required the toil of 75,000 farmers for six months to furnish these foodstuffs, engaged 62,920 wage earners needed in legitimate industry, and exacted a heavy toll of life. The Nation cannot afford this economic and moral waste.

THE SOCIAL EVIL

War increases lust and its deadly consequences. The efforts of the Government, of the federal council and of the Young Men's Christian Association to prevent its development in mobilization camps will not fully succeed unless the near-by churches and allied organizations see that vice and liquor are repressed in their communities and unless they assist in providing wholesome social and recreational activities for the men. All the churches will need to watch lest the excitement and strain of the hour lower the sex standards of the community.

RELIEF WORK

The increased suffering of war time demands increased gifts and service. The churches should organize themselves to strengthen the American Red Cross by membership and the preparation of supplies, to care in friendship for all the needs of the families of men in national service, to increase their gifts to foreign war relief and to those European religious bodies which the federal council is already assisting.

CHILD WELFARE

To meet the depletion of war the vitality of the rising generation needs to be conserved and developed. It is more important than ever for the churches to aid in removing the community conditions that make for defective lives, and in securing sound measures of health and sanitation, of housing and nourishment, of recreation and education. The mobilization of youth for increased food production affords a starting point for permanent community provision for the recreational and vocational needs of young people.

INCREASED PRODUCTION OF FOOD

The world is short of food. The safety of the Nation and the outcome of the war depend largely upon our ability to increase the crops. This is an urgent national duty. The suburban and rural churches may well call the people together to consider community plans to this end.

PREVENTION OF WASTE

In face of the world need, extravagance and luxury are criminal, but productive business should be maintained at its fullest possible capacity. The simple life, which is a permanent obligation for the followers of Jesus, becomes in this emergency an imperative necessity. The women of the churches may well get together to consider and recommend sound economies in food and clothing.

INDUSTRIAL STANDARDS

The labor power of the Nation must be conserved or the needed increase in production cannot be secured, as England has discovered. The industrial standard set up by the federal council and its constituent bodies must be maintained. All cases of seven-day work, of lengthened working day, of the employment of children and young people under sixteen, or of women in the new hazardous industries, should at once be reported to local authorities or to the national council of defense.

JUSTICE IN DISTRIBUTION

The churches should stimulate the community conscience to demand that all speculation in the necessities of life be eliminated, that all attempts to secure unjust profits be checked and that the hoarding of foodstuffs be prevented. Government action to this end should be heartily supported.

THE COST OF WAR

The burden of war cost must be evenly distributed. The principle of universal service has been applied to life in the raising of troops. It should therefore be applied in the same manner to wealth and ability.

SAFEGUARDING DEMOCRACY

If we are to advance democracy throughout the earth we must first exemplify it in the Nation. It must not be denied, either in industry or in government. Even in the strain of war, the abuse of free speech is not so dangerous as its suppression, and nothing should be permitted to destroy the dearly bought right of freedom of conscience. One of the patriotic duties of the Christian pulpit is continuously to develop in the people the determination that this war shall end in nothing less than such a constructive peace as shall be the beginning of a world democracy.

WHY BOYS GO WRONG

The importance of guarding the period of childhood from impurity of thought and act cannot be overestimated; yet how many parents are taking advantage of their wonderful privilege to lay the foundation for a life of purity and self-control?

Only four parents out of every one hundred.

This is not a guess; it is a statement of fact.

It is one of the many valuable facts gathered by Doctor M. J. Exner, of the Young Men's Christian Association, through a series of questions sent out to nine hundred forty-eight college students. From their answers we now know what formerly we could only surmise.

Of all the residents of a community, the parents who send their boys to college are naturally looked upon as the most enlightened. We would therefore expect that they would be most awake to their son's need of special instruction in matters pertaining to sex. Yet from this study we learn that ninety-six per cent of these wide-awake persons shirked their great responsibility and failed to protect their sons through right instruction given in time.

Not that they were entirely oblivious to their sons' needs in this direction. Twenty-two per cent of them gave their sons some teaching, and the lads also received help from literature and lectures, and in high school and college. All but four per cent of the wholesome teaching, however, came after they had reached the age of puberty.

And what had they been doing all this time? Sitting around in glass cases waiting to be enlightened?

Ah, no! Boys don't grow up in that way, nor will the forces of evil show that consideration of their youth and innocence which has acted as such a check upon the activities of the parents.

Ninety-one per cent of these boys received their first striking impressions about sex from unworthy sources, and in all but four per cent of these cases, before the age of puberty. Sixty-three per cent of them received their first knowledge before their eleventh year, while the average age at which the first permanent impressions were received was nine and a half years.

Think of that, you parents who consider your boys too young and too innocent for you even to answer the questions they ask you! Your false modesty is holding you back and turning your boys over to influences that will mar their thought and life for all time.—From "How can boys go right?" by a former member of the committee of twelve of New York City in June Physical Culture.

THE STAFF

"You are Invited"

These coming summer months afford excellent opportunity to correspond with your general chorister. He is not taking a vacation this year, and is anxious to hear of your experiences the past few months, and also of your plans for the coming fall and winter. Incidentally he has outlined work of great moment for the choir movement, in which every musician of the church should be actively interested and engaged. He does not expect to solve every perplexing problem that comes up in the average chorister's work, but his long and growing experience will enable him to counsel and in many instances help a chorister to a better understanding of his work. He is keenly interested in receiving programs of special events, concerts, cantatas, and oratorios. These are to be inserted in a great big scrapbook, and will serve us in many ways, and especially to keep us in touch with your activities. What choir will be the first to respond? Programs, press notices, and notes of interest—good—thank you.

And by the way it was good to receive a little souvenir of the San Francisco activities and of the chorister's visit to Saint Joseph—both in the form of snapshots. Send along some more my friends. Our job is not nearly so lonely when you are around. Remember the address is 173 Madison Avenue, New York City.

A. N. HOXIE.

Yearly Appointments

Upon the recommendation of the general chorister, the joint council has appointed Brother Arthur Mills to serve in the capacity of an assistant director in the general choir movement. The activities of Brother Mills will for the time being be confined to the Middle West. His duties will be in the nature of an organizer of choir, orchestra and band interests, and in a national way will serve as general secretary of the general choir movement, with headquarters in the church offices at Independence. Brother Mills has long been a devoted servant to the uplifting cause of music and has been quite successful in missionary efforts as well, and we feel he is peculiarly qualified to carry on a good work in the interests of the choir movement. We trust that all choristers of the Middle West will cooperate with him in building up the great interests which the choir movement has awakened.

Brother Mills is planning a summer of activity at reunions and conferences within a reasonable radius of Kansas City. Choristers will find it to their advantage to secure the assistance of Brother Mills in their work.

Brother E. C. Bell of Saint Louis is also sustained as one of the national directors, and we commend him to you as a faithful and efficient servant. His activities will no doubt be confined to Saint Louis and vicinity and the new Far West Stake, owing to the important and serious work in anticipation of the next General Conference.

The editorial department will still be under the direction of Sister Audentia Anderson for the present. Her natural talent for this work is augmented by a long career of earnest musical experience, and many have been the helpful messages appearing in the STAFF.

We have reason to expect even more from our children's chorus department this year. Mrs. E. S. McNichols is planning to spend the greater part of her busy existence in directing this important department. The possibilities of this work are unlimited. If there is any doubt in your mind about this write her. Her address is 806 Electric Street, Independence, Missouri. A full published list of state and district choristers and their addresses will be published in the next issue of the Staff.

Musical News Over the Church

Since close of conference, there are ample signs of increased musical activity and interest. Many choirs, orchestra and organizations are planning for the coming year, determined that it shall be more successful than the last. Evidence is at hand that the people of the church are thinking more seriously regarding the sphere of music in the church than ever before.

The Independence (Stone Church) choir is prospering and is feeling the impetus for a year's advancement and work. Sister Hulmes, who is also chorister of the stake, is planning their work for the year and intends to make it comprehensive as well as progressive. She contemplates getting a co-operation of all the singers of the other choirs of the stake, who desire to take up the work, in a large chorus choir, to take up the serious study and mastery of the oratorio, "Elijah," which is the master work selected for rendition at next session of conference. This, with other work planned, makes for a full year as well as a successful one.

Work in the Kansas City Stake is in process of preparation. Brother Earl Audet, who at the last stake conference was chosen and recommended as stake chorister, is planning the work of the year, part of which will be the study of the oratorio, "Elijah," contemporaneously with the choir at Independence.

Sister Lola Johnson, chorister of the Holden Stake, was in Independence Monday morning, the 21st inst., and had a pleasant interview with the general secretary regarding the coming year's work in her stake.

We hear fine reports from the orchestra of the Saint Joseph, First Branch, Sunday school. Brother Harry W. Tilden, the superintendent of the school, is personally pushing this orchestra, which is steadily advancing in excellence and efficiency. A year ago they did not exist. It now numbers nearly twenty players. They have engaged the services of a professional orchestra man at Saint Joseph to aid them in their work, twice each month. This is the spirit that wins.

Although remote from the advantages of the large musical center, the young people of the Sunday school at Fanning, Kansas, are alert and enterprising in things musical. The work of the choir is progressing, and the orchestra, which was organized not very many months ago, is developing in a very noticeable way. Their work, in conjunction with the services of the choir, is resulting in increased attendance and interest in all the services.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

To the Choristers of the Northern California District

Dear Saints: Now that I have undertaken a new line of music work, I thought it might interest some of you to know what my plans and hopes are for an increase in musical development in this part.

Having been appointed chorister of this district, I feel it is my duty to do all I can to increase the enthusiasm and zeal of those already interested in music to better service by working more devotedly, loyally, and earnestly together. We find that loyalty to plan and purpose becomes one of the great vital principles of efficient living and doing. We need loyalty, to be happy, therefore we need it to do our best work. All that we do must be done with our best effort and enthusiasm.

Most of the branches in this district have responded enthusiastically so this promises success to our undertaking.

We are planning to have several anthems and a cantata rendered at conference which will be held in August at Irvington.

The following selections have already been chosen: "Softly now the light of day," by Schilling. "Praise the Lord," by F. C. Maker. "The light everlasting," by James R. Gillette.

In response to the invitation of Brother Hoxie, the San Francisco choir while realizing the difficulty of the undertaking, have decided to study Mendelssohn's "Elijah." I shall be glad if other choirs of this district will join in the effort. One thing above all else which should be instilled into the minds of those assisting in a musical way is that we must have before our imagination the importance of the work we wish to do, and its end. In rendering a masterpiece we should aim to put the ideal into expression through our rendition, expressed by beauty of tone and feeling.

As the rendition of a masterpiece affords opportunity for our highest service, bringing joy, peace and happiness to the listeners, we should feel it a pleasure to expend our time, thought, and energy for so noble a purpose. And with the Lord's mighty hand to aid us our work must be a success.

Trusting that all in this district will do their very best for the progress of the work in a musical way,

Yours sincerely,

CHRISTIANA WALLER.

Vibrations

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI

At the organization of the Far West Stake, at Saint Joseph, Sunday, June 3, the musical interests were splendidly represented by a chorus of sixty voices, under the direction of assistant general chorister, E. C. Bell, of Saint Louis, giving the cantata, "The light everlasting." The soloists were Miss Nelle Heikes, soprano; Miss Athena Scott, mezzo soprano; Mrs. Alonzo Woodside, contralto; and Mr. Paul H. Pugsley, bass. Miss Edna Christiansen was organist.

The entire event was a grand success, the chorus singing with great spirit and enthusiasm, combined with delicacy of shading and expression. Brother Bell is a director much loved by those with whom he works, and his untiring zeal is the mainspring of his success in this line of truth expression. The new stake undoubtedly feels the inspiration of this musical beginning, and it will open for them encouraging avenues of achievement in the future. All success to the "United Choir" of our Far West Stake!

INDEPENDENCE

Independence singers still remember with warm feeling their experience on May 2, 3, and 4, when they joined forces with the Kansas City Symphony Chorus under the direction of Mr. Earl Rosenberg, in the "Spring Music Festival," as the program gives it. The names of one hundred and sixty of our singers appear, and Mr. Rosenberg has been very kind and enthusiastic in his appreciation of the work of their leader, Sister George H. Hulmes. The programs for the three evenings were varied, soloists of national fame in both vocal and instrumental lines assisting. The closing night Handel's "Messiah" was given, Mr. Carl Busch's Symphony Orchestra accompanying the chorus.

The Sunday following this week of music, was the one on which Kansas City paid respect to the French ambassadors whose late visit to this country was so interesting. Our Independence choir was invited to assist the Kansas City Chorus in the patriotic demonstration at Convention Hall, and a section of seats was reserved for them. It being sacrament Sunday, the pastor of the Independence Branch arranged for a special service for the choir members in the afternoon, that they might not miss either the musical or the spiritual feasts of the day.

Through Mr. Rosenberg's kindness, many complimentary tickets were distributed among music lovers in Independence who might not otherwise have been privileged to attend the feast of harmony of the week.

To the faithful services of the leader and officers of our choir is due much of the credit which has been given the efforts it has put forth. Consecration and devotion to duty and high principles, seeking to sing and to serve, with the lovely spirit of the Master, scattering the good and uplift as widely as we may—these are the keynotes of our successes. May our ideals ever rise higher, become grander and nobler, and may the future witness greater and greater joy in this wonderful gift of music offered to the Most High.

CHANGE IN ORGANIZATION

We learn that by motion, discussion, and vote, the Independence choir has dissolved its former organization, abolished the constitution and by-laws, and decided simply to stand by, support to the best of their ability, and assist in every possible way, the chorister, who is placed, by branch vote and action, in charge of the music. This action, we understand, is in line with the policies of the general chorister, who wishes to stimulate and encourage the interest in music, and extend its privileges to all "who desire to sing." May the experiences of the immediate future show the wisdom of the move, and may we witness a host of consecrated musicians offering with pure purpose, with charity and love, that praise to the Father of Lights which is "sweetest and meekest!"

Saint Louis Echoes

Music has charms and so have the true musicians, for our musical programs are proving it. During April we spent a delightful evening at the home of Sister Adele Peters, devoting it to the study of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy.

Brother C. J. Remington acquainted us with the life history and notable character of this great man who, though having been permitted to live but a comparatively short time, left many works which have caused his name to live after him and which brings great joy to his many admirers. Brother Herman Gillespie followed this introduction with an especially fine solo, "Hear ye Israel," from "Elijah." His rendition denoted much of patient practice and study. As our next appointee was unable to attend, Brother E. C. Bell very kindly substituted by playing two piano selections, one from the oratorio of "Saint Paul" and then a melody from "The song without words."

This served to impress us with the marvelous harmonic power of Mendelssohn. Next Sister B. Loevy read a paper on "The important composition of Mendelssohn." She caused us to understand the better how he so wonderfully combined story and song in his "tone picture." As the paper was so good some one remarked that it was not long enough and we would like to know more, so Brother Loevy then added some valuable remarks. Our next and last number was a beautiful piano solo by Sister Kate Walrond. She gave us the charming selection from the original arrangement of "The midsummer night's dream." It was wonderful indeed and almost breathlessly did we listen as our hearts grew sometimes gay, then more serious as she so skillfully played for us the story. Then came dainty refreshments and in departing to our various homes each voted the evening a success indeed.

At our second regular choir meeting in May the following officers were chosen: Sister B. Loevy, president; Sister Anna de Jong Smith, vice president; Brother C. J. Remington, secretary and treasurer; Brother H. Gillespie, librarian; the correspondent was reelected, and of course our regular chorister, Brother E. C. Bell, was assured by all he was our choice.

On May 22, the doors of the Loevy home opened wide to receive us. Our evening was given over to the study of Gioacchino Rossini. Sister Alice Bourgeret through careful study had gathered many facts concerning him and his works which she presented to us. She told us of how he had been born of a father who was town trumpeter, and a mother who had some operatic skill and naturally his first work was vocal, but at the age of fifteen his power was lost; then of course the music of his soul was poured forth in composition.

We then had some impromptu talks on "The Barber of Seville," "Othello," and "Moses in Egypt." After this Brother Loevy played a selection from The Barber of Seville on his player piano. We were delighted with this as our brother is really an artist in operating the player. He gives sympathetic and expressive renditions because he studies his selections so carefully. Next Sister Nina Lloyd gave a review of "William Tell" and "The lady of the lake."

Between her and Brother Loevy we were all pressed into service and there was no age limit in their conscription. We were called upon to read various cantos from Sir Walter Scott's "Lady of the lake" so as to note the poet's music as well as the composer's.

Once again our host entertained us with "The overture from William Tell" after which he gave us a resume of our past meetings.

If I were to tell you how long we stayed even after the ice cream and cake had been served you might estimate how thoroughly we enjoyed ourselves.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

"Use Them, or Lose Them"

We refer to the slogan Brother Trowbridge is leaving in his wake, concerning the boys of the "teen" ages! We cannot escape the facts; let us look them squarely in the face. Are we keeping the boys in our Sunday schools, in our Religios? Do they attend our preaching services, or the prayer meetings? Is their allegiance secured for the church to any definite and appreciable extent? Is this failure to keep and hold them unavoidable? Does the fault lie with them, or with us? What are we doing to interest them? What are we doing to secure their cooperation along church lines? Are we recognizing the "points of contact"? Are we using the influences which count most effectively with boys? Are we presenting the side of right to them, in the light which most attracts? Are we campaigning or lobbying for the interests of our boys? Are we working for their souls as we do for their bodies? Are we "putting ourselves out" to understand their natures at this critical period? Are we inconveniencing ourselves to provide wholesome outlets for their activities, which will "out"—if not in the right direction, then in wrong? Are we trying to understand conditions, and take advantage of every legitimate avenue to conserve these boys to God and his work on earth? Let us "stop, look and listen," and then proceed wisely and with definite purpose!

The essential quality of a Christlike life is love. It is basic; it is of primal importance. Without it no one succeeds in advancing any appreciable distance on the upward path of spiritual progression. It was the mainspring of Christ's life of service; it is to-day, the supreme test of the life patterned after his. His last counsel, his culminating gift of divine direction, is couched in language so simple we almost fail to grasp its boundless application: "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you," or, as expressed in the closing words of the prayer of agony before his crucifixion: "And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it; that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them!"

How then may we apply this wonderful, most mysterious of principles, to our task of dealing with these careless, care-free, harum-scarum boys, whose inattention, indifference, and apparent lack of religious interest disheartens us so greatly? Let us see if we can, by concrete thoughts, arrive at any solution of the problem confronting all the churches of to-day, seeking to apply the principle of love to our work more definitely, and taking advantage of the same principle, —the love which dwells in every boyish breast, unconscious as he, or we, may have been of its existence.

First of all, we who teach or train should be governed absolutely by love. No policy of impatience, of harshness, of cold criticism, or of ruthless punishment will ever penetrate to those hidden recesses of a boy's heart and quicken him into religious life. An all-embracing, all-enduring, all-comprehensive love for these young souls whose whole beings are in turmoil, should motivate every action, word or thought of ours as we seek to assist these young struggling atoms of humanity to sense the divine in their own natures, and to rightly interpret those impulses and yearnings which to them are so mystifying, and which alas, in so many instances, through ignorance lead them into disaster and utter ruin.

Sympathy with the lad; an ability to view things from the boy's point of view; a willingness to estimate many things according to boy standards; concession where principle is not at stake; disregard of previous rigid convictions, and a facility to reconstruct one's ideas in the light of modern environments; a yearning determination to erect ideals before the young mind, which will appeal directly to his interests; a constructive planting of worthy seed in the fertile soil of a lad's heart—seeds of chivalry, honor, truth, purity and self-respect; an ever-alert, never-sleeping watchfulness and care that his energy is rightly directed; and above all, a close companionship which can only be purchased with many a sacrifice of personal pleasure, personal tastes, and personal comfort—all these are necessary attitudes of mind on the part of one who seeks to lead a boy into all truth!

Forget what others think. The thing that matters is what you think yourself, and what you believe in yourself.—Nicholas Beffel.

One must believe in the boy. He is not perverse by nature; he is an offspring of God the same as other human beings. The good impulses are there, covered deeply perhaps by the neglect of years, by lack of guidance, and by weeds of habit, the growth of which might have been prevented by intelligent observation and wise correction. But it is never too late to mend! The bad boy of every neighborhood has a heart that will respond to the touch of love. He may not know, himself, the strength of his desire to be loved, and to have an object upon which to lavish the rich abundance of his boyish admiration and love. Hero-worship completely possesses the boy at a certain age, and the wise parent or teacher will take advantage of this fact and place before the lad the highest ideals of character, embodied in the persons and achievements of great men.

Be frank with the boys. Understand that their eyes are wide open to hypocrisy. They will see through any superficialities or insincerity with accurate perceptions and their judgments in such a case are not tempered with much mercy! Their scorn for a pretender is quickly aroused; do not make the mistake of posing before them as a model of propriety or conduct, unless you are positive your life can bear the closest scrutiny. On the other hand, it is not well that young lads should have the mistakes or misdeeds of those whom they admire held up to view. Some fathers love to tell of the escapades of their youth—and then wonder why their own boys are so lawless! None are perfect, and often the mistakes of our past qualify us to better counsel and warn our children, but let not their idols be ruthlessly or unnecessarily destroyed, or their standards needlessly lowered. They cannot always discriminate between warning and license!

The boy of the adolescent age is full of love. He loves many things. We do well to utilize these loves in the very best way. First, perhaps, is his love of activity. Instead of trying to repress this love, let us use it. Let us give the boy something to do every minute of his life! If he is not to work, let him play! Surely idleness is most prolific of evil! If the boy is in Sunday school, let the teacher find something for him to do! If it is no more than looking up references, or finding out how many kinds of spiders there are before next Sunday, or engaging him to help dish out the ice cream at the picnic, or helping the pastor distribute tracts next Thursday after school, or hoeing one row of potatoes in the class garden Saturday morning, or in getting the full score of the ball game on the town diamond and reporting it to the class!

He loves sociability. Feed that love constantly. Let the weeks or months record many little gatherings of your boys. Let them bring their friends into your home after school, and you just slip into the kitchen and see that some hot chocolate, or cold lemonade is ready for them! Bother? Yes, but isn't your boy worth it? And if you let him and his gang whittle in your house, or dig a cave in your back yard, or build a wonderful automobile in your woodshed, or fix up their butterfly cabinet in your attic, or convert one of your closets into a dark room for kodak developing aren't you helping to tide that precious bundle of activity over some dangerous spots in life, as well as helping to purify the influences around him? Do not feel that your boy should be isolated in order to be kept pure; rather put the wholesome leaven into the whole bunch, or "gang" as he likes to call it! Be one of them, in the character of some one or other of the heroes they admire; do not be bossy or dictatorial, but manage by "hook or crook," by invitation or scheming, by ingeniously planned surprises or unexpected pleasure, to get a firm hold upon the hearts and allegiance of those boys. They are quick to appreciate kindness, and the trouble has been in the past, that mothers have shoved the boys out of doors, because of their litter and noise, and fathers have been so busy working for bread and butter, they have removed their minds far from the memories of their own past hunger of soul, and they make no attempt to feed that same hunger in the hearts of their sons. The body fed and clothed, and the heart and soul starving for "food convenient for them," is the pathetic record of most of our boys at the trying period of their lives!

Boys love the out of doors! Better and more impressive and influential a lesson of purity, kindness, or reverence taught under the shade of a tree, the blue sky of heaven, by falling water, or amidst the grandeur of hill and rock, than one attempted in a close or stuffy room, hampered by numbers, and noise, and rendered futile by the wandering and inattention of the boy's mind, whose whole nature is calling him out of doors! Take your class out to the woods occasionally and teach there, in God's first temples, the mysteries of his love and providence! Take your boys on frequent hikes, or camping trips, teaching him to reverence nature and, through it learn to look up to, and adore, Nature's God! Parents, make occasion and opportunity to be out of doors with your children. Haven't time? Let the embroidery go, or the reading of the latest details of the scandal case! Pack your basket—plain bread and butter is glorified out under the trees!—and stick in a copy of Tennyson, or Longfellow, or Treasure Island! A bit of wholesome thought of that kind, will do much to rest you, and raise your own ideals of life, and afford a rare chance to stimulate the "vision" of your children, without which "vision" they will surely "perish."

The boy loves "eats." The mother who remembers this, has always before her one common ground of approach to any boy's heart. "Isn't Jimmy's mother a brick?" is an encomium the sincerity of which can never be doubted, and the heartiness of which can never be even imitated by the empty flatteries of the society fop who utters his vapid praises over the plate of ice or cup of tea! A handful of fresh cookies or doughnuts, a few apples or nuts win the boy as nothing else can. Plan little occasions to please the lads in this way. If the "gang" is meeting in your back yard, go out and visit the "fort" with sandwiches and cocoa, an offensive ammunition, and the garrison will capitulate—to the last soldier!

And boys love play! Perhaps we older ones would retain the wonderful spirit of youth much longer did we know how to play better. We get so absorbed in the serious problems of life, that we forget the joy that is also there! Could we relax, could we visit the mystic realm of the fanciful and the imaginative more frequently, wandering at will and without haste or rush or turmoil through its beautiful streets, listening to its music, its bubbling fountains, see its wonderful lights and colors, taste its magic fruits, touch hands with kindred beings, and sense the atmosphere of hope and joy and peace and achievement, would we not return with increased power, enlarged patience, clearer vision, and more purposeful determination to the sterner paths of reality? This power of dwelling, momentarily, in the land of the unseen, in the world of imagination, is strong in youth. Witness the throngs of young people who nightly crowd the picture shows, where for a brief hour or two, they may exchange the disappointments of life, for its pleasures; where the harsh realities of work, or poverty, or quenched desires, give place to beauty, light, color, elegance, ease, or culture! When the hour is over, the youth passes, with a sigh, from the palace of dreams to the barrenness of loneliness.

We say "loneliness" purposely; how many of us who mingle daily with the boy of ten, fourteen, or eighteen, take the pains to find the key to his heart, knock respectfully—reverently—at the door, and enter, with shoes removed, into that sacred domain, to share in the joys and the griefs which have found lodgment there? Do we not rather say, "Now, John Jones! Haven't I told you a thousand times not to come into this house with dirty shoes! Go out this instant! I am busy this morning, and can't be bothered!" Or, from the father, "Fifty cents for the ball game? No, indeed, sir! I work too hard for my money to see it squandered on a fool game of ball! Go out into the yard, and tackle that wood-pile, young man!" Or from big sister, "Now, John, I am going to have company to-night, and I don't want you to come near the parlor—do you hear?" And the boy turns moodily and sulkily away from those who should understand him best, and around the corner pours out his grievances into the ears of sympathetic, if not wise counselors, and with their aid, plans all sorts of things "to get even with the folks!"

Play with the lad, parents! The book under the evening lamp may be inviting, but it cannot give you half the warmth about the heart when bedtime comes as will the "Dad, I surely have had a glorious time to-night with you! You're just the best kind of a father a boy can have! When can we go to the gym again?" or the "Mother, that little picnic lunch out under the old tree was scrumptious! And all the boys think you're a jolly sort to stay and watch our ball game! Didn't old Skinny's home run just make your hair stand on end!"

The boy loves sport and athletics. We hope to see the time when all our branches will have facilities for encouraging proper attention to these things. Why should not every church lot have its tennis court? Surely God would approve of the effort to provide healthful and legitimate outlets for the muscular activity which is so prominent in the boys of this sorely trying and sorely tried age! (For the trials are not all on the side of the adult, be sure!) Where no building is available for the purpose elsewhere, could not the Sunday school rooms have some light gymnasium apparatus placed where the boys could use it freely? The tennis court, or croquet ground, might afford hours of wholesome pleasure which hours without such opportunity, might be spent in far less innocent or profitable directions. And what is to hinder having the moving pictures for our young people? What a wonderful vehicle it is for conveying impressions! Ideals of the highest kind can be presented through this medium, which might never otherwise be brought into a boy's life. Through his imagination, in this world of fancy, he may be impressed with visions of a noble and spiritual character which the workaday world is powerless to present. Longings for high attainments, striving after better standards, clearness of preception, well-marked lines between right and wrong, the futility of folly, the power of love, the value of purity, of conscientiousness, of integrity and honor—many, many are the lessons possible through the pictured life into which the youth enters so whole-heartedly. We older ones have alas, too many of us, largely lost our power to imagine;

we cannot altogether forget that it is a drama we are beholding; but the youth is not seeing a play, an imitation of life, for him it is life itself! He is living and moving in the world before his eyes! Oh, would that every child in this country were privileged to thus enter and dwell in worthy places! Would that we could, in pity for these innocent ones with their plastic minds, see that every picture upon which they gazed was one which would not lower their standards of right living, and right thinking! If we had the moving picture facilities in our own hands, placed in the charge of consecrated and clear-sighted men or women, could we not utilize them as choice means for education, of correct values, of right adjustment with the world about us, and thus set the feet of our young upon paths which lead directly to the summit?

Let us organize our boys in to little clubs under the leadership of competent men, who will at all times have the best spiritual welfare of their charges at heart. Let us, in their activity, their "gang" impulses, their athletics, their sports and amusements, find God for them, leading them to his feet by patient sympathy, loving counsel, kindly effort, and direct purpose, feeling that nothing is too hard, nothing is too bothersome, nothing is too good for these young souls! They, are, indeed, at the parting of the ways, where their lives are, by only slight impetus, set drifting towards safe havens or into stormy waters! At this age boys receive their spiritual awakening—witness Joseph Smith—or they receive their criminal bent; witness the procession before the juvenile courts of the land! Can we do too much? Can we work too hard? Can we sacrifice too greatly? Are our boys worth while? Are they of value to the church? Are they among our assets? Are we responsible? Are we remiss? Are we indifferent?

The season of reunions is just ahead of us. Soon all over the land will there be various gatherings of the Saints. They will have their priesthood meetings, their auxiliary meetings, their Sunday school sessions, their Religio exercises, their study classes, their (thank God!) Oriole circles, but where do the boys come in? Let us arouse to this great lack! Let us see to this need at once! Let us appoint the very best man available for this important commission: "Feed my lambs!" Let us get the man who sees in it his life's opportunity; who understands that he is on holy ground when he gets a group of young boys about him, looking up to him for guidance; who realizes that when they say, "What shall we do next?" he needs to send up to God a prayer for direction and inspiration as truly needed as when he stands in the pulpit! a man who can look about him upon these young souls and see Christ there; a man who can feel the warmth of their young hearts and understands that the crust of indifference is only protective armor, needed to insure a tender heart against suffering from neglect, from aversion, from misunderstanding and injustice,—all of which the average young boy encounters in his everyday existence! God—send such men to the rescue of our boys! God inspire such men to plant the seeds of a good living in the fertile soil of a boy's heart, instead of seeking only the conversion of the outsider, the worldly adult! To-day is a day of conservation; why not save our own?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

"Come Over into Macedonia, and Help Us!"

The committee which is striving to outline a plan under which to organize the boys of our church, has "opened up shop," so to speak, and is ready for suggestions. The members would gladly welcome any ideas which seem to any worker with boys, to be rich in possibilities for good. They invite such opinions, and desire to get into communication with all those in the church who have had experience with boys, collectively or individually, which has given them an insight into what policies they deem most essential and desirable in club plans for boys. Especially do they desire opinions concerning some of the already existent and well-known boys' organizations, chiefly, perhaps, the Boy Scout movement. Has anyone found it lacking? Wherein? Is it adequate to our needs? Is it advisable? Are there points against it, as an organization with which our boys should identify themselves? What has been your experience with it, or other boys' clubs? What is your ideal for our boys? How largely should the material enter into such work, and how largely the ideal or spiritual, in order to interest and best influence our boys? Does the organized class—either of Religio or Sunday school—meet fully the demands? Could it, if an outline were prepared for the leaders or teachers of such classes? If so, what should such an outline embrace or cover? What could you suggest for reunion activities for the boys?

Please address your replies to anyone of the committee, or send your ideas in the form of a short, pithy article to the editor of this column.

The committee is Ralph W. Farrell, 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island; Daniel T. Williams, 719 East Twelfth Street, Des Moines, Iowa; Audentia Anderson, 2009 Locust Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Oakland, California

Thursday, May 24, was quite a memorable day with the church at Oakland, California. A session of the Woman's Auxiliary with the sister society of San Francisco as guests, took place at the home of Sister Eva Young, over forty being present. Our friend, or enemy H. C. L., seemed to have been in a measure forgotten in the ample spread about noon, where physical satisfaction and sociability reigned supreme. In the enjoyable exercises of the afternoon the question of the church debt incidentally came up. It was decided, however, that some other method of economy should be adopted rather than eliminating those interchanges of fraternal visits which conduce so much toward the life and development of the society and church in general.

Quite a number remained to the evening meal, after which others joined, swelling the number to about sixty who spent the evening in an enjoyable manner. In the program was a presentation to the retiring pastor, H. J. Davison, of a token of good will and appreciation, with the usual speech and response. Good cheer and encouragement for the future, in spite of war conditions in the world, seemed to be the order of the day.

The presiding care of the branch will be in the hands of Elder J. W. Presley who is acting priest of the branch for the present. ONE PRESENT.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK, May 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: The Buffalo Saints are now meeting in the church they have talked of for so long, at Midway and Hutchinson Avenues. For about ten years they have met in rented halls and under trying circumstances, and it seems good to meet in a building they can call their own and can look to with more respect and reverence than formerly. We do not have the pews in the church yet but expect to have them in a few weeks, after which we will announce our formal opening.

We have already had a pretty wedding in it: that of Brother Alma Booker and Sister Isabel McLean. Brother U. W. Greene visited us and gave us a very interesting talk. We were sorry his visit was so short. We wish to thank the branches who have so kindly helped us in building this little church and we can assure a hearty welcome to any who may come and meet with us. We hope now to be more able to spread the work and build up the kingdom of God. We have about seven or eight who will be baptized on Sunday May 27.

Your brother in Christ,

1395 East Delavan Avenue.

ALBERT WOUTERS.

ARDMORE, SOUTH DAKOTA, May 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: Will some of the elders who were sent to eastern Oklahoma go to Quinton, Oklahoma, and preach, as my mother wants our gospel to come there. There are several families there that want to hear our people preach. My mother is not a member of the church. Her name is Mrs. Leona Smedley, better known as the Widow Thompson. She lives on the south side of the railroad. Anyone can tell you where "Widow Thompson" lives.

Your sister in the faith,

LAURA PLUMB.

WATERFORD, ONTARIO, May 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I wrote a letter to the HERALD, and as I love to hear from others perhaps there are some who are wondering where I am and what I am doing. The appointing powers saw fit to change our mission field this year and so we write from London District, Ontario.

Through the kindness of the Saints of Chatham District we were able to attend General Conference, a trip that we enjoyed very much, and of course were enthused with a stronger determination to do our share as we met with those of the leading men of the church; and were made to know the Lord was placing competent men at its head. It seems that efficiency is the watchword among the priesthood, and we can see room in ourselves for great advancement.

Back from conference we came as fast as steam could bring us to our home (Coleman, Michigan) to see our parents and other friends and relatives. A few days' wait at home and then we boarded the train for Flint, Michigan, where we spent many happy days before taking a mission, and there we met many friends and received the glad handshake which is usually found among the Flint Saints. Now we leave Flint and the powerful electric car hurries us over to the Detroit River and soon we say good-bye to U. S. A. and are met at Windsor by our ever alert friend, the immigration officer, who questioned us quite closely and then said (after we had shown our license): "All right; go ahead." All right, we proceeded to board a city car which let us off at Brother Robert Parker's home where we usually stopped while in Windsor, and thanks to them for their cordiality. After a short visit over Sunday in Windsor we go to Blenheim and are received by Elder G. P. Coburn who has always made us feel at home; and after a short visit there we hurried on to London, where we preached our first sermon in our new district and met a good many of the London Saints. We were domiciled at the home of Brother John Vashinder while in London.

Brother B. H. Doty and I are now laboring together and I find him a very good colaborer, with his saxophone and his talent for vocal music.

I hope the peace that God can give may be with the Saints in Chatham District, and that we may be successful in making friends in our new district.

Your colaborer,
JOSEPH H. YAGER.

Christmas Offering--Roll of Honor

Read over this list—is your Sunday school listed? If not, are we to believe that you are not with us in our effort for a greater Christmas offering? No, we are sure such is not the case—we know you are all with us and working hard. Before the next issue see that your school is listed among those who have as much or more right now than you had in your entire offering last year. We want all schools to have at least an amount equal to last year's offering by the first Sunday in July—we want all who can to have double their last year's offering, for the larger your "nest egg," the greater incentive you will have to add to it.

Every school should keep their offering in the bank where it will draw interest; for every dollar will help. If you have not your offering in the bank now see that it is put there right away. There is a bank in almost every city and town that will pay at least three per cent on deposits; why not get it?

Read the following extracts from our many enthusiastic workers, see what they are doing, get in line with them, entuse your schools. Keep after your superintendent—that is if he needs it. If not, offer your help; he will need you; he needs every enthusiastic worker.

Word has been received from schools in the following order. Extracts from these enthusiastic workers' letters are given to show you what splendid records are being made: Moorhead, Iowa; Logan, Iowa; Mount Washington, Missouri; Saint Thomas, Ontario, Canada; Phoenix, Arizona; Spokane, Washington; Detroit No. 2, Michigan; Plymouth, Massachusetts; Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario.

Moorhead.—"Here is our announcement: Offering for 1916, $44.50; offering up to May 20, 1917, $117.63. Yours, hoping that the whole church debt might be paid this year, Mrs. T. O. Strand."

Logan.—"Our Christmas offering up to now, May 27, not only exceeds last year's, but we have more than doubled the amount; $56 on hand. Your mark is not set high enough—let's pay all the debt this year; it can be done. We're boosters. Rose Adams, superintendent."

Mount Washington.—"On February 14, we had more than equaled last year's offering. At present, May 25, last year's offering is more than doubled; but we are disappointed that we have not kept up to our schedule, which is $3 per week for 50 weeks. We want $150 by December 15. Enrollment is 85. J. W. Stobaugh, secretary."

Saint Thomas.—"Yes, we are going to double it, and more. A booster committee is busy and so are the children. Last year's was $18.95, and we more than equaled it on May 27. By July 1, our nest egg will hatch out double the amount or more. Offerings of each class go on blackboard every Sunday. Mrs. Albert Else, chairman committee."

Phoenix.—"We have a little school, but have now, May 27, double last year's offering and $1.80 over. Some time ago we began method of placing on blackboard general Sunday school totals for last six years, together with our ever-increasing sum. Amos Yates, superintendent."

Spokane.—"Would like to tell you we have more than doubled last year's offering, which was a few cents over $40. We have collected to date, May 28, $92.21 from average attendance of 70. Our aim is $140, but if we do as well as in the past, that will be more than realized. Our money is deposited and drawing 3 per cent. Our ten classes are enthusiastic and would like suggestions as to ways for the little ones to earn their offering. Dana H. Crum, for committee."

Detroit.—"Detroit No. 2 school gave $52.68 last year. Have collected to date, June 3, $56. Hope we are first. W. A. Blair, superintendent."

We cannot all be first, can we? We can all be enthusiastic workers, and that's what really counts. Had you been first, you might suppose your school was the only one working. Inspiration comes from knowing that so many are working hard and showing such splendid results, and that you are among the first.

Plymouth.—"We have 39 scholars and have set our mark at $80. Last year it was $14.08; it is now, June 4, $28.37. A committee is at work. We have put up our Christmas offering thermometer, which shows on left hand a degree for each Sunday during twelve months; on the right of this another register showing degrees by dollars from 0 to $80, by December 23, 1917. Thermometer says we ought to have $40 by July 1."

Sault Sainte Marie.—"In harmony with your letter we report that we have now, June 4, doubled the amount of our offering for last year. Mrs. H. E. Campbell, secretary."

We shall publish the roll of honor from time to time, as space shall permit.

A. W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue,

From Here and There

Thirty thousand soldiers are to be quartered at Greenville, South Carolina, a city of seventy-five thousand where Brethren F. M. Slover and A. G. Miller opened the work last year. Brother E. C. Shelley reports that it is his intention to use a tent and if possible open a hall in the central part of the town. The Utah Mormons have quite a stronghold there.

Our Sunday school at New Bedford, Massachusetts is not large, but they have sent one lad, their secretary, to the country's service, and another will likely go soon. The Evening Standard of that place contains a favorable and detailed account of a patriotic rally held by the school recently. A number of representative men of the locality spoke, and Elder E. B. Hull, of Fall River, represented our church and the duty of its individuals to the country in its hour of need.

A letter from W. E. Shakespeare says he left home in Independence, Missouri on the 25th for Frazee, Minnesota, where he preached for the Saints twice and renewed acquaintances. The North Dakota reunion is to be held at Logan, beginning June 29 and they expect a big crowd. Two of the Twelve expect to be in attendance. No new tents are to be obtained, so those having them should come prepared. Brother Shakespeare is ready to answer as many calls for preaching as he can arrange for. His field address is 12 Fourteenth Street South, Fargo, North Dakota.

The memorial service at Independence was postponed on account of a bad storm which did considerable damage, forty feet of the wall of the new high school building being wrecked. At the children's prayer meeting Israel A. Smith presided and told of his recent visit to Nauvoo and Carthage, Illinois. The residents in that territory spoke in most respectful terms of his grandfather, Joseph the Martyr. War measures receive their due consideration and patriotic mass meetings are the order, while the Liberty Loan is urged and supported. A new battery plan is being effected by the young men and a patriotic meeting was planned for the evening of June 5.

It is interesting to note that in awarding the honor scholarship in the college department this year at Graceland, there was a tie and the faculty awarded it to two brothers, Ralph W. and Lee E. Travis, of Champion, Nebraska. The academy scholarship was awarded to Elbert W. Lambert, of Ferris, Illinois, son of George P. Lambert. The annual oratorical scholarship went to Charles R. Hield, of Lamoni, his oration at the annual contest appearing in the June Autumn Leaves. State teachers certificates were awarded for the first time this year to Miss Iva J. Knipschild, of Norborne, Missouri and the Travis brothers. These are good in any State that accepts Iowa certificates.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Pastoral

To the Saints of the Northern California District; Greeting: The General Conference of 1917 is past; and I once more desire to thank the dear Saints of the district, for their liberal donations, that made it possible for me to attend the conference. It was an experience for me that was truly enjoyable and appreciated. It was very educative and instructive; and the instructions that I received there were so impressed upon my mind that I believe that under normal conditions, they will never be obliterated.

I can say without hesitation, that it was the best General Conference that I ever attended; (it was the first one) and I come back to you a stronger man; better equipped for the work that lies before me, in the cause of the Master; better able to meet the obstacles, and the hindering causes that lie along the path of life; better able to cope with the problems that are continually presenting themselves as we go forward in the work the Master has called us to do; better able to give instruction as one called to represent the Master and his church, and to feed the flock over which I have been made overseer. And I hope that as I go forth among the branches, that I may be able to impart unto you some of the knowledge and instruction, that I myself have received; that you may be benefited as far as possible by my experience, and as we begin another conference year, let each one, from the least unto the greatest; from those of tender age, to those whose locks have grown gray in the service of the Master: from those who have gathered together in branches to those who are scattered abroad to the uttermost parts of the district; put forth every ounce of energy that he can muster, and thrust in his sickle and reap as he may: and do all that he can, spiritually, mentally, physically, and last but not least of all, temporally, to make this work of the Lord, a success. Especially do I ask of the priesthood: You who have been called of the Master, to this high and holy calling of working with God, for the salvation of mankind: from the deacon to the presiding elder of the branch; be ye diligent in your service: let there be no idlers among you; but let everyone go to with all his might, and work while the day lasts. The harvest is white and the laborers are few. We have only two missionaries in our district this year, and two local appointees; therefore we ask that every elder that is not presiding over a branch, do all the local work that he can. Get openings wherever you can: lift up your voices and cry aloud and spare not; the hastening time is upon us: the day is far spent: the night is fast approaching; shall we have sheaves for the harvest?

Anyone that has an opening for preaching, please let me know, and I will see that every want is supplied, just as fast as I possibly can.

I would like to hear from every scattered Saint in the district; if you are discouraged, or disheartened, let us hear from you; may be we can help you! we will try.

And now, dear Saints, let me say in conclusion; this is a "day of sacrifice, a day of consecration, a day for the tithing of my people, and he that is tithed shall not be burned at his coming." (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.) As solicitor for the bishop of the district I will carry a receipt book with me, and will receipt for any amount of tithing, freewill offering, or consecration that you may have to give.

Sincerely yours, for service,

E. W. HAWKINS, District President.

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Statistical reports were: DeKalb 54, Plano 172, Mission 120, Rockford 13, First Chicago 197, Central Chicago 225, Deselm 76, Belvidere 41, Sandwich 69, no reports from Piper City or West Pullman. Eighty-four men in the priesthood, reports from 36 of these. Bishop's agent reports total collected $2,007.51, paid out $155.79, cash on hand $451.72. $800 sent to Bishop McGuire. District treasurer reports cash on hand $8.35. Graceland College student fund has $55 collected, amount to be collected $100. This fund is in the hands of R. N. Burwell, F. F. Wipper and H. P. W. Keir. Election of officers, present officers were sustained in their office together with bishop's agent, excepting David Dowker who is recommended as district chorister. Motion prevailed that we rescind motion ordering a reunion this year. There will be no reunion this year. Communication from deacon's quorum read, also from Young Men's League, as well as library and good literature commission. Fred Baldwin was chosen as head of good literature commission and Fred Johnson head of library commission. Our district president urges that all branches keep a record of the total attendance of members and nonmembers. Next conference at First Chicago Branch December 1 and 2, 1917. William Darmon ordained to office of elder and provision made to ordain Fred H. Johnson to the same office.

Provision made to hold special meetings in all the branches this summer, the missionaries will have tent meetings at the missions also. Frederick E. Bone, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—At Mission Branch, Marseilles, Illinois, June 1 and 2. J. O. Dutton chosen chairman, assisted by R. N. Burwell. F. E. Bone acted as secretary. Statistical reports showed a loss locally in some branches through removal, but a gain in membership generally. Officers' report show that all things are moving smoothly in the wheels of progress. This is promising of good results in the future. Letters from H. P. W. Keir and F. F. Wipper on conditions in the Sandwich and Central Chicago Branches were read. A lengthy discussion was carried on relative to names of scattered members which are carried on branch books, while the members were practically lost to them, as far as their whereabouts are concerned. This finally resulted in a resolution being made to be presented at next General Conference that an organization be fostered for the handling of these names to work conjointly with the local authorities in an endeavor to locate these members. The bishop's treasurer's and general college fund reports were read, reflecting conditions encouraging to the officers. The report of the Young Men's Progressive Association was read. This is a club that has been organized in the Central Chicago Branch among the young men for the studying of the standard books and other good books thereby preparing them for future services in the Lord's work. F. B. Baldwin was chosen as chairman of gospel literature commission for this district, which is promising good results. F. Johnson's and William Darmon's names were acted on that they be ordained elders. Officers elected: J. O. Dutton, president; J. L. Cooper, vice president; F. E. Bone, secretary; R. N. Burwell, treasurer. The Saints in this district have decided not to hold a reunion this year. The reunion preaching tent will be used to hold week meetings in some of the outlying towns. Preaching at 8 p. m. by F. G. Pitt. Prayer meeting Sunday at 8.30 a. m. followed by preaching by R. N. Burwell. Preaching at 2.30 p. m. by F. F. Wipper, and at 8 p. m. by W. A. McDowell.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—With Foundry Hill Branch, June 2, 1917. Business session opened at 2.30 p. m. with district president in chair. Owing to heavy rains and severe windstorms throughout the district, attendance was not as large as had been anticipated. Principal business was election of district officers. J. R. McClain reelected district president. Bishop's agent's report shows a great increase in amount of tithing paid. We are pleased to note that the Saints are getting awake to their duty in this regard. All business sessions passed off nicely without any disputations. The spirit of oneness seemed to prevail. We were pleased to have our missionary, L. M. McFadden, with us. He delivered some splendid discourses. Conference adjourned to meet with Eagle Creek Branch at call of district president. The Saints of this district are looking forward with anxiety to the time when our reunion shall convene, which will be July 21, 1917, because we are expecting the best one we have ever had. S. E. Dickson, L. M. McFadden, D. L. Ross, press committee.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—At Indianapolis, May 19 and 20, J. E. Warne, C. A. Noland and James B. Welch presiding. Statistical reports: Louisville 158, Derby 123, Indianapolis 84, Byrneville 103, district membership 514. Priesthood reporting 19. Bishop's agent reported receipts $690.53; disbursements $464.68. W. N. Hanner appointed president of Wirt Branch. Officers elected J. E. Warne, president; James B. Welch, vice president; Pearl F. Newton, secretary-treasurer; Goldie V. Brook, member library board; Ada Mast, member gospel literature bureau; James B. Welch sustained as bishop's agent, and Goldie V. Brook as chorister; Bernice Krishbaum, member auditing board for third-year term. Motion adopted for each member of district to pay five cents a month for district expenses. Meet at Derby, Indiana, September 8, 1917. Pearl F. Newton, secretary, 1506 West Twenty-First Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

FREMONT.—At Thurman, Iowa, June 2, 1917, with district presidency in charge. W. A. Hougas was chosen secretary pro tem. Branch reports as follows: Bartlett 46, Glenwood 71, Shenandoah 111, Thurman 192, Hamburg 61, Tabor 71, Henderson 78. Ministerial reports were read. Report on tent matter, $199 collected. Purchase of district tent left in hands of district presidency and W. E. Haden, with power to act. Petitions for October conference received from Tabor and Henderson. Vote resulted in favor of Henderson, time left to district presidency. Recommendation from Henderson Branch that Ward A. Hougas be ordained a priest was approved and ordination ordered provided for. Also a recommendation from Tabor Branch that Wayne R. Richardson be ordained to the office of priest was approved and ordination ordered provided for. T. A. Hougas was unanimously elected as district president, and selected N. L. Mortimore as his associate. C. W. Forney elected secretary, and also sustained as bishop's agent. A. G. Hougas reelected librarian. A motion that the committee have power to solicit subscriptions to tent fund carried. Preaching at 8 p. m. by J. B. Wildermuth. Ordination of Ward A. Hougas and Wayne R. Richardson to office of priest on Sunday, and two children blessed. Thus closed one of the best conferences held at Thurman Branch for many years. Ward A. Hougas, secretary pro tem.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

EDITORIAL

THE FIRST TWO CHAPTERS OF GENESIS

We have been privileged to read some interesting discussions of the first chapter of Genesis, showing how closely it corresponds with geology. Of course this can only be the case providing this chapter is discussing the physical creation.

On the other hand, we have received several articles, some of which deny geology, biology and practically every other science upon the assumption that the first chapter is concerned with the spiritual creation, and only the latter part of the second chapter is concerned with the physical creation.

Still others assume that the first chapter, being concerned with the spiritual creation, man is therefore spiritually male and female. There are those from whom we differ radically, who would assert that spiritually men and women go on in the marriage relationship similar to the way on earth.

Some twelve years ago we heard this passage in Genesis used and argument made that man is spiritually male and female. The inference was then made that, having a function, it should be exercised and would be. We raised the question of Matthew 22: 30, that there would neither be marriage nor giving in marriage; only to be met with the doctrine of "free love," "perfect (?) love"—a most disgusting proposition.

Prior to that we had noted how the doctrine of spiritual creation had led on in the history of the world to the doctrine of celestial marriage. Then there followed that here many are mismated, they do not secure the divinely appointed companion. So the unhappily married look around for their affinity. (That beautiful word which has been so greatly contaminated as to become almost useless for practical purposes.) Then there has followed in some instances the sealing for eternity; then, "Why wait for eternity? time is part of eternity." So adultery and polygamy raise their slimy heads.

But there is also John 3: 2: "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him." Therefore he shall be like us, so where is his wife? Then even for the eternal Father they have selected a companion, a queen of heaven, a divine mother. But for such a doctrine as this, repugnance is too great for it to be tolerable. Still intellectually it is a problem to be considered as such. What does the word of God teach?

According to the twenty-second chapter of Matthew the Sadducees came to Jesus and proposed a case of seven brothers who, according to the law of Moses, had the same wife and each died in turn, "Therefore in the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her." (Verse 28.) Likewise, Mark 12: 18, 25 relates the same incident. Luke 20: 27, 36 also repeats the incident, adding a little to the explanation, as verses 34 and 35 of the twentieth chapter of Luke read: "And Jesus answering said unto them, the children of this world marry, and are given in marriage: but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage."

There are numerous other passages emphasizing the idea that a change will take place when we enter the other world. Returning to the story; it appears to have been presented as a suppositional case. His answer is sweeping and decisive: "They neither marry nor are given in marriage." To state that there will be no marriage ceremony performed is to beg the question, for this woman had already been married to each one, whose companion, whose wife, shall she be? None. We have here three witnesses to this declaration of the Master. It would seem that if the English language can make anything plain that this is plain. She should not be a wife to the eldest brother, nor to the youngest, nor to any of them.

Now, turning to Genesis 1 and 2: We note that chapter one and verses one to three of chapter two, set forth in a logical manner what normally appears to be the physical creation of the world. It is set forth in seven great periods, which as it happens correspond very closely to what modern science, in both geology and biology, affirm. It is a remarkably clear statement for its brevity, of the great geological times, down to and including the creation of man on the earth, male and female.

Chapter two, while containing especially in the latter part the discussion of the physical creation, contains many verses which set forth plainly the fact that all these were spiritually created before they were physically on the earth. Probably no one will deny this, that the Lord planned the creation and created all things spiritually before they were on earth; especially that man was created spiritually while there was not as yet a man to till the ground. It is true that these verses may be read in such a way as to make all that goes before to concern the spiritual creation, and some carry it so far, as already indicated, to attempt to ridicule everything that humanity has been able to discover concerning this earth and its inhabitants. But they do not necessarily set forth events in chronological order. Often is matter earlier in time inserted in a description.

This occurs frequently in the Bible and a plain instance is given in the third chapter of Genesis, which evidently goes much further back than either chapter one or two, in discussing the fall of Satan after the rejection of his offer.

It is well known that the division of the Bible into chapters and paragraphs was made in comparatively recent times. It is worthy of note that in the King James Version verse four is marked with a paragraph sign, and we respectfully submit that the marking in the King James Version is correct. It is a new paragraph. Verse four starts a new discussion. "These are the generations" refers to that which follows in the paragraph. So also the first verse of the third chapter starts a new paragraph so as to bring in the character of Satan.

That will leave only one thing to discuss. There remains the latter part of verse eight, chapter two.

It is possible with the tautology of the east that this is a repetition of the word flesh is used in the sense of human flesh, as the word has been so used. It emphasizes man is first and will so remain.

Second it may refer to this order and preeminence.

Third, Elder Stebbins suggested in a recent article that he is first of a new order or age.

Fourth, there are some schools of religious worshippers who assert that spiritual man was on the earth for long ages before death entered. As long as no man died there would be no bones; although it would seem that there would be tools, unless he lived as they represent him, above the needs of fleshly foods.

The verse in any event should be interpreted in harmony with other scriptures and with all the facts we can bring to bear. Truth must be consistent with itself. We gain nothing by rejecting modern research.

Nor should the divine truth contained in the Bible be brought in question, because of the fact that the Bible does not claim to be verbally inspired. Every word is not inspired, but, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Peter 1: 21.)

DEPENDABLE PEOPLE

In the Gospel Hymns there is a song that we can remember quite well from younger days, "Surely the captain may depend on me, though but an armor-bearer I may be." The song is based upon an incident set forth in 1 Kings 14. Jonathan and his armor-bearer went out and disclosed themselves to the Philistines. They had agreed that if the Philistines said, "Come up hither," that it would be a sign that the Lord had delivered the Philistines into their hands. So, upon this agreed signal, they went up and started to battle. Soon there was the utmost confusion, the Philistines fighting among themselves, which resulted in their utter rout.

Think of the courage and faith it took for two men to go against an army, and one of them was "only an armor-bearer." Not a prince of royal blood, not a captain of the host, not a warrior of the ranks, but only an armor-bearer. Yet if the armor-bearer is not in his place at the prince's right hand, to assist when need be, by handing him a new weapon, how fatal might be the result.

All too often we are inclined to think our work unimportant—only a teacher, only a priest. But because our duty is not well done, the whole church suffers. If the church is not warm and properly ventilated (but alas how few deacons know as much as they might about proper ventilation) the speaker may present the word of God in vain, or nearly so. If the building is not clean some visitor will notice this fact more than the words which are uttered.

But because iniquity, backbiting and evil-speaking abound without check, some are offended at the way of life and righteousness. Or it may be that some are driven from the faith by zeal without wisdom, earnestness without humility and prayer, the law without the Spirit of God.

The basis of spiritual development should be in the home, at the family altar and with the family prayer. Personal instruction by a properly authorized officer will often remove some obstacle which is hindering development. This is the great privilege of the priest: to visit the home and each member and encourage him, in compliance with the divine law.

But this principle extends outside the church work, dependable people whose word is as good as their bond and better than some men's deed. "A message to Garcia," by Elbert Hubbard, illustrates one phase of this. But we can find it in any department of business life. The man who is self-reliant, whose word once given can always be relied upon regardless of consequence or difficulties. These are the men who go to the fore.

We recently heard the description applied to a man of considerable force and power, if you want a thing left undone, refer it to ————. That is hardly a reputation we should care to earn. It is a standing joke that he cannot be depended upon to come home to supper. Even his wife cannot depend upon him. But this brings out the fact that the issue of dependable people is by no means confined to rank and file of workers.

We have heard recently of a branch president who very frequently would go away, making no arrangements for the Sunday services, not even letting one know he would not be there. The time for services would arrive and the priest of the branch was left in doubt what to do. This happened not once but many times. But unfortunately he is not alone in this.

Men of the missionary force have walked ten or twenty-five miles or more to fill an appointment. Men meeting an appointment in the church have felt so keenly their responsibility that they would not permit the weather or inconvenience to prevent them filling the appointment. But we have heard of others who have allowed even trivial matters to turn them aside.

A very prominent minister had accepted an appointment to deliver a series of sermons, continuing for several weeks, in a certain city. He was met forty miles away by the minister in charge who urged upon him that there would be held in that city a very interesting entertainment and urged him to stay over.

"But, I have this appointment at ———."

"Oh, well, they will get some one to take care of that. This will give you a splendid chance to meet the people, not only of this branch but of this vicinity."

"Yes, but I have this appointment. I have agreed to be there."

"Oh, well, that will be all right." But the first man insisted upon filling his appointment. And the minister in charge went away offended.

Again, on such an occasion, after a week or two of services had been completed, a very urgent request came for two sermons or lectures on Sunday at another city. The lecturer was loath to leave until the minister in charge agreed that he would personally fill the original appointment if the lecturer would accept this other invitation. It was finally so arranged and the lecturer departed per agreement. But the party of the second part failed to carry out his agreement or to send any word whatever. When questioned about it he said, "Oh, well, they will get somebody." The place was packed, the people waiting, and finally a local man, without preparation, had to fill the appointment. We would not mention this were it not that real injury has been done, and not a few times. We have seen so very much of it in varying degrees. It has happened more than once that men of prominence have sent for young men, and have kept them waiting more than a week for an appointment, and a missionary may be kept waiting three weeks.

Dependable people. Truly their worth is above silver, yea even above fine gold. The man who gives his word, and then stands by it, the man who has too much self-respect to violate his appointment with even the most humble. "Surely the captain may depend on me." Can he? S. A. B.

OUR AUXILIARIES

In this issue will be found a continuation of an article printed on April 4 on "Helps that hinder." It deserves a very careful reading. Certainly the auxiliaries should not be permitted to hinder the work of the church, but they should be brought into closer cooperation and should be utilized so far and only so far as they may be a real aid and help to the carrying on of the work of the church.

The Sunday school and other organizations are to help the parents in performing their family duties in giving proper instructions to the children. As all are not equally capable, this joint effort is made. The Woman's Auxiliary is for the purpose of preparing our sisters to be better mothers, to the end that right instruction may be given by the parents.

We should note the emphasis given to the responsibility of parents and observe it. Most deep students of pedagogy agree that there is no better teaching than that of the home—where the parent is prepared to give it.

From our own observation, however, we have found the Spirit of God working in these auxiliaries, the spirit of wisdom, the spirit of prophecy, the spirit of knowledge and of faith. They do not attempt to do the work belonging peculiarly to the priesthood, yet they are indeed personal helps. Doctrine and Covenants 117, to which we previously referred, appears to give a sanction to these organizations for good. Section 128 provides for various organizations by the bishopric. The whole genius of our work is cooperation and one of mutual helpfulness.

But this social aspect should not cause us to lose sight of the individual needs. That system is best which develops each individual to the highest possible efficiency and then these individuals unite to render a joint service for each other, the church and society.

We have seen these auxiliaries run at times in a way to hinder and overlap. This, of course, is a mistake. But that does not mean that proper assembly and proper study is not beneficial.

It is well that we should consider that which is good, and how best we may coordinate our work. Distinctively it should be carried on as part of the work of the church with that impetus to help and not to hinder, and seeking divine instruction rather than to rely alone upon human wisdom. We think it is well that careful consideration be given to these matters, and so commend the article to your earnest thought and study.

BLUE "STEPPING STONES"

At this writing probably every Sunday school pupil has the blue Stepping Stones in hand. It is a good record for the year that is past but we want to do better, very much better, this year. And while we are talking of doubling we ought to notice that two schools had more than one dollar per member last year: Henderson, Iowa, and Saint Louis, Missouri. Omaha is reported to have averaged two dollars. Several schools had close to a dollar per member and over seventy-five cents, at least as near as we can determine, namely: Oakland, California, Lansdowne, Illinois; Lamoni, Iowa; Detroit and Gaylord, Michigan, and Independence, Missouri. There may be others, and if they will send us their names on postcards we shall be pleased to take note of them.

On the other hand it would seem that two hundred Sunday schools failed to send in Christmas offering at all. Do not let this occur the coming year, for we want to hear from every school. If each one does the best he can, we should secure the results we are after. Some may not be able to average two dollars per member, so those who can want to do better than that.

In reading the blue Stepping Stones the question of cost of publication arose. Inquiry at the business office disclosed that this issue of fifty pages will cost the church about eight hundred dollars, or sixteen dollars a page. This includes all of the printing work and the cost of paper and ink. But it means four dollars a column, or between five and six cents a line. But this does not include the expense at the Bishop's office of receiving and checking up the Christmas offering, the bookkeeping, the preparing of a complete copy and sending it up for publication, the final proof reading necessary by that office. When this is added it looks as if the cost is over six cents, if not nearly seven cents a line. Some names run over a line and so cost twice as much, but any item of six cents or less on a line does not pay for the cost of printing. That means that Bishop McGuire not only receives nothing for the church but has to pay from the church funds or from the other Christmas offering for its publication.

There are some schools for which the cost of printing the list of names runs as high as forty per cent of the Christmas offering, which means that the church only gets sixty per cent to help the missionary work. Is this what we want, to see our name in print, or is it really to make every penny count in helping the church? If it is the latter, why not have our Christmas offering sent in in the name of the school and not give each individual name?

The effort is being made to place the schools on the roll of honor. It is readily possible to check up the individual names at home. Then everyone knows what is the school's Christmas offering, and you can look in the blue Stepping Stones and see the name of your school and your offering.

But we do not want to lose the incentive of this feature of personal publicity. Why not have in each Sunday school a personal roll of honor showing the departments, classes and individual names and keep it before the school or department so that we can see how well we are doing individually and collectively?

Nearly forty per cent of the schools (225) this year omitted the names of individuals, and the greater part (180) omitted the items of departments and classes and simply gave the name of the school and amount. This is an excellent start. Why not make every penny count this year and resolve now that we will sacrifice a little personal advertisement for the benefit of the church, and so make our own Sunday school Christmas offering count as much as possible? We can keep a personal record at home where everyone knows us and is interested.

We do not want to lose sight, however, of the personal element and the value of making each child feel that he or she is indeed making a gift to the Son of Man. So we urge again that this intensive work be done in our local school.

Side Lights on Scriptures

The HERALD editors are in receipt of the book with the above title written by Brother William McLaughlin of Australia. He attempts to open some new ground with this text and assumes an independent position on many of the points which he sets forth.

A Pastor's Letter

We are in receipt of an excellent presentation of a pastor's appeal to his flock, written and sent out by Brother E. L. Traver, of Boston, Massachusetts. Each member of the branch receives a copy which is mimeographed and includes an entire page of typewriting. It is a very attractive message and should be productive of good. We like to hear of progressive methods of this kind being used by our pastors everywhere.

"Quarterly" Prices Advanced

Not long ago the general superintendent of the Sunday school association announced in the church papers that the prices of the Sunday school Quarterlies would be advanced with the beginning of the next quarter. In other words, your next Quarterlies will cost the new price. Lest some have missed the announcements, we quote the list again, as it is important that all be informed:

- Senior grade, 10 cents a quarter; 30 cents a year.
- Intermediate grade, 7 cents a quarter; 20 cents a year.
- Junior grade, 7 cents a quarter; 20 cents a year.
- Primary grade, 7 cents a quarter; 20 cents a year.
- Beginner grade, 8 cents a quarter; 25 cents a year.

The Mound Builder and the Indian

An excellent article under this caption is contained in the April number of the Ohio Archaeological and Historical Quarterly, published at Columbus, Ohio. If anyone desires to obtain a copy of the publication, the price is seventy-five cents. The author of the article is Brother C. W. Clark and the introduction names him as an official of our church, saying that the article is a treatise on the subject according to the teachings of the Book of Mormon. Several cuts, including two maps are used with the whole occupying twenty-six pages. We sincerely appreciate the open-mindedness of the editors in publishing such an article in spite of the criticism our opponent may raise and commend the efforts of the brother for the masterful manner in which the subject is handled.

To Our Army and Navy Men

The editors of the Autumn Leaves hand us the following communication to our readers, which opens up an interesting proposition:

Editors Herald: Wouldn't it be an interesting collection if we could have a number of letters from our men who will soon be assigned to training camps throughout the country and who may later enter active service to maintain our country's rights?

Perhaps you wouldn't have room for all of them, and neither will we, but if we get too many we can easily edit and arrange to the satisfaction of the writers and our readers.

No doubt many of our "boys" will have remarkable experiences and will see many strange sights as well as hear some strange things in this experience. We would like to get many letters from them, for then the interesting things they say will reach thousands, instead of just the folks at home.

We are not particular about style. A sharp pencil—and a piece of wrapping paper, will do if there is nothing handier. We will observe the necessary precaution to avoid printing anything that might be of use to our enemies, but let us not forget the desires of our friends. Don't you think this should be a popular feature?

EDITORS OF AUTUMN LEAVES.

We surely do. It would be interesting if our men would respond as they should. We almost envy you the opportunity.

LAMONI HIGH PRIESTS

On Sunday, June 3, the high priests of the Lamoni Stake met for reorganization. The question was raised by what authority the organization was to be made, who had suggested it. This was finally answered by the reading from the minutes of April 16, 1910, of the following communication from the First Presidency:

To the Quorum of High Priests: In regard to the matter of organizing divisions of the quorum, which seems to have been under discussion before you as a result of some suggestions which I have made in regard to this question, I will say the suggestion came to me when I was considering the fact that in our large districts, particularly the stakes, there were a large number of high priests who have the benefit of quorum work only at conference time, or once a year, when, if some proper arrangements were had, they could meet at least four times a year, if not much oftener.

I have observed that there are organizations such as the bankers' associations and it occurred to me that by forming divisions of the quorum of high priests the members who live in the stakes and large districts might meet often.

It would, of course, not be proper for the divisions to have the power to bind the quorum by their actions, until such actions had been approved by the quorum, hence the divisions should have no legislative power except as regards themselves. I am further of the opinion that the officers of these divisions should be appointed by the quorum and not be elective, so far as the divisions are concerned. A chairman and a secretary would, perhaps, be all the officers needed for a division, the secretary being authorized to act in case of the disability of the chairman.

Respectfully yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.
ELBERT A. SMITH.
JOSEPH SMITH.

Preceding this communication a committee had reported to the quorum of high priests on April 12, 1910, as follows:

To the Quorum of High Priests: In a short conversation with President F. M. Smith relative to the recommendation regarding the organization of high priests in large branches, we learned that he conceived it advisable to organize divisions within the quorum proper, such divisions to be under the jurisdiction of this quorum.

The object of such organization is to meet from time to time for personal improvement, a better understanding of the duties and privileges of high priests, and giving an opportunity to those who have not the privilege of meeting with the body proper at General Conference some of the benefits of quorum work.

We understand these divisions would not have legislative authority but would be advisory and educational in their character and beneficial to the parent quorum.

In accordance with this John Smith was chosen by the high priests quorum as chairman, and Albert Carmichael as secretary in 1910. The minutes show that occasional meetings were held during the succeeding six years, however none appear to have been held since March, 1916. It will be noted that the purpose of the organization is practical, to meet for consultation and discussion of their work and problems for the sake of mutual improvement. This includes all high priests, regardless of their special work as patriarchs, bishopric, high council, stake presidency, historian and others. There is no legislative authority for organizing a new quorum, nor is there any claim of legislative action for the meeting of these divisions. It is a matter of convenience that we may be better prepared in our work, and especially in those localities where a sufficient number of high priests reside to make this advisable.

When these selections were made by the high priests quorum in 1910 the quorum voted that further organization be left to their presidency. In pursuance of this Elder Frederick B. Blair was nominated by the presidency of the high priests quorum for chairman, and Elder Roy V. Hopkins for secretary. Elder Blair was accordingly elected, but Elder Hopkins declining, Elder R. J. Lambert of the stake bishopric was chosen subject to the approval of the presidency of the high priests quorum.

These men intend to meet the first Sunday of each month at the same time and place as the rest of the priesthood for the general priesthood meeting, adjourning with the others for separate session. We sincerely trust that this will result in a better understanding in carrying out of the work before us.

"THE CHOSEN PEOPLE"

[The editors have been much interested to receive, the past few months, copies of the above publication. It is issued on behalf of a mission to the Jews in an effort to convert them to Christianity. The extracts below present a few points of interest]:

The Jewish Passover celebration which began this year on April 6, was the most joyous one since the second temple was destroyed nearly two thousand years ago, because of the downfall of the Romanoff dynasty, which put a full stop to the proscription and religious persecution of many millions of Jews. All during the Dispersion, through medieval times, to the present year, the Passover holidays which naturally should be the brightest occasion, in memory of the liberation from Egypt, have been the darkest of all the holidays. Why? Simply because somewhere Jewish men and women would be slaughtered on the charge that they had used Christian blood for the Passover. But now that Russia has set the Jews free, that there are no more edicts against them, the long nightmare of the Jews has passed into oblivion. Therefore, the joy of celebrating the deliverance from Egypt was now full and complete.

Sir Archibald Murray, commander of the British Army which has invaded Palestine, has issued the following statement: "The Palestine plateau, once we have occupied it, will be easy to defend. What should we do with Palestine, thus liberated from the century-old Turkish grip? There can be little doubt that we should revive the Jewish Palestine of old, and allow the Jews to realize their dreams of Zion in their homeland."

Aim at the edification and spiritual uplift of the people, and God is with you; aim at nothing and you'll hit the mark.—James E. Yates.

Two pastors' wives were visiting together. One said: "I don't know what we will do—my husband is so discouraged. Somehow his people do not care to hear him preach, and our salary is far behind. My husband feels so blue that he does not like to visit the people and pray with them. And so he sits around at home nearly all the time." The other sister said: "We are getting along fine. My husband spends much of his time visiting, and the people like to have him kneel and pray with them in their homes. Our congregations are always good, and our salary is paid up promptly." While the two sisters were talking they were mending trousers. One was mending her husband's trousers at the seat, the other was mending her husband's trousers at the knees!—Western Christian Union.

MINIMUM COST OF LIVING

As a rule the grand total of our expense account in providing for the needs of the family is determined by our own wants and desires, and not by our just wants and needs. The man who purchases an automobile because neighbor Brown has one will find his expense account correspondingly higher.

To fix the amount that we will spend for clothing, for food, or for recreation according to our income is a fallacy. A safer plan is to so regulate our desires that there may always be a surplus from our earnings for savings or investment. God has made every man a steward over his own property (Doctrine and Covenants 42:9) and he will hold him accountable for the manner in which these material blessings are used or abused just the same as for our moral acts.

The control of appetite or desire for the things of this world which appeal to the eye will develop strength in other directions. To satisfy every fleshly demand is to invite weakness; to repress it brings strength.

The present world-wide economic conditions demand that nothing that can be made to serve a human need should be wasted. What we waste takes from our ability to assist in the Lord's work or give to the poor. Every unnecessary want that we supply lessens the surplus that the Lord has directed should be turned into his storehouse.

Happiness and extravagance do not go hand in hand. That man only is happy who is master of himself, who can cheerfully deny himself. An increase in the pay envelope does not bring lasting benefits unless used wisely. If we use the occasion only as an opportunity to put our expenditures a notch higher, soon we shall find ourselves as discontented as before, and we shall be lusting after other things, the possession of which can only be had by another salary increase, and hence many times our desires are made the basis of a request for an increase in wages instead of the fact that we have become so proficient in our work and are so faithful and devoted in the performance thereof as to merit it.

Every family should be properly housed under sanitary conditions, receive a plenteous supply of nourishing food, be clothed in a clean and tidy manner. To thus be provided does not necessarily call for a lavish outlay of money.

Last fall a survey was made in seventy-five families in New York City, which discloses the amount expended by them in properly caring for the family. Before beginning the survey a certain standard was decided upon. The amount of food that each person in the family should receive in order to be properly nourished was determined. The amount and variety was indicated by a food expert.

The object of the investigators was not to lower the standard of living but by a well-defined plan to get the best possible results from the money spent by each family. We have tabulated their figures and indicated the amount that a missionary family of the same size and ages would receive: Seventeen families out of the seventy-three we have listed lived on less than the amount that the investigators allowed in the budget, and with rent ranging from eight to twelve dollars per month; fifteen on less than the allowance granted missionaries, and the others exceeded this amount very little; thirteen of the budgets are less than church allowance.

For years the missionary's wife has proven that she can support the family upon this standard erected by these food experts and economists.

There will come, of course, extra demands such as sickness, accident or death that call for additional outlay, but for the ordinary everyday demands and necessities we might profit by endeavoring to keep ourselves on a missionary basis for the Lord hath said (Doctrine and Covenants 119:8): "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. . . . Be frugal."

In times like these we owe it to ourselves, our Nation and our church to practice economy and the repression of unnecessary wants. (Doctrine and Covenants 130:7.)

BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT

(Sermon by R. M. Elvin, Sunday evening, October 15, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

With pleasure I appear before you to-night to answer a request that has been made, and that is to present our faith and belief in the Spirit baptism, or baptism of the Holy Spirit.

I invite your attention to a consideration, without reading, of the first few verses of the third chapter of John. There we have a man by the name of Nicodemus coming to the Savior one evening and asking questions answered by the Lord.

It is well when we take up a conversation between two individuals to consider their standing, their opportunity, and their qualifications upon the subject matter that they are talking about. And this man, when he came into the presence of the Savior, made the statement: "We know thou art a teacher sent from God." And he assigned as the reason of that knowledge, that no man could do the works that Christ was doing except God be with him. And on the presentation of this thought the Master answered that unless a man be born again he could not see the kingdom of God.

Now let us stop long enough to think of the individual who had started this conversation. He was one of the three presidents of the Jewish Sanhedrin; that was the highest court in the Jewish nation. And a man to reach that position had to be versed in the first five books of the Old Testament, to which they had definitions, that they had to be prepared to answer to the number of six thousand, so we are told in history. In addition to the five books and these definitions, they had six thousand Rabbinical traditions, and these also took part in the administration of the government of the Jewish people.

Now if you will stop to think you will realize that this man had to be acquainted with the application of this large accumulation of Jewish regulations; he was supposed, therefore, to be one of the most intellectual men in the Jewish nation. On the other hand, the man whom he was talking to we recognize to be the greatest teacher that God ever sent to the children of men. His equal has never been upon the face of the earth, no man has had the hardihood to say that any other philosopher, scientist, or theologian has ever equaled the Son of Mary as a teacher of divine truth.

And when he had given that answer, that a man must be born again before he could see the kingdom of God, this wise man was so honest and fair that he commenced to ask in a very natural way concerning what was meant, for he did not understand. He clearly showed by his talk that he did not understand what Christ was talking about.

Now the Savior makes it plain, and that will form my text of the subject of the evening. In the fifth verse of this third chapter we read: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

In the series of meetings that have been held, the water baptism has been carefully elucidated, and abundant evidence to prove that baptism in water is essential to salvation. Assigned to me is the duty of presenting to you then, the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and this verse furnishes the ground work or the base upon which to build my talk to you tonight upon that topic.

You will note in Christ's answer to Nicodemus that he defines this birth, and he tells us the elements that constitute that new birth, that it is water and the Spirit. Of the earth the individual is buried in the water. That is just as far as man can go. Man can immerse his fellow man in water, for that immersion is acceptable to God, and the men who perform the act must have divine authority.

Then comes in the work of God himself, and he alone can give to men the baptism of the Holy Spirit. And when these two are received, the individual is a new creature in Christ Jesus, ready for a gospel life, and this is but the enlistment in the great army of the Lord. We thus have what I consider a sure foundation. For Jesus himself, and no one that I have ever read of, or any statement that I have ever read is equal to this language defining that which will constitute this new birth, that of water and the Spirit.

And when an individual, in faith believing before God, submits himself to that action, then he is entitled, continuing in the faith, not being a forgetful hearer of what he has heard, to reap his reward of a faithful follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, keeping the commandments of God. Be true to the church as well as true to this one principle.

HOLY SPIRIT PROMISED

I turn to Luke 24: 49, reading as follows, (it is Christ that is speaking): "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."

There is the promise. Not only the promise, but it tells the nature of the promise, the endowment that will come from God. He tells these men where to wait, and that was at the city of Jerusalem, and they were not to go from hence until they receive the sign-manual of the eternal God affixed to their commission to go out and preach the resurrection of Christ.

We turn to the Book of Mormon, Nephi 5: 46, for be it understood that Christ not only preached the gospel in Palestine, but he visited America after his resurrection, and there authorized the organization of his church, and in so organizing he gave to them a promise like unto that which we have just read by Luke. "And unto them I have given power, that they may baptize you with water, and after that ye are baptized with water, behold I will baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost."

We present this for the double purpose of presenting to those who may not be of the faith the evidence that these two books agree, and in the discernment of the Book of Mormon, and that they teach alike, and in that teaching that the gospel is identical, and what was taught to one people on one continent was taught to another people on another continent, and the teaching is identical for their salvation; that is the object of this presentation.

I turn to Acts 1:1-4:

The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen: to whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God: and, being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which saith he, ye have heard of me.

There is the statement of the introduction of this the promise that was made, and in the second chapter we read:

And when the Day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

That is just what the Savior promised, and the result. And this man introducing his treatise to one of the leading men of the world recites what took place on the day of Pentecost. They were of one accord in one room, tarrying at Jerusalem, agreeable to the instruction of Christ, praying for the fulfillment of the promise of endowment from on high, and as they prayed, as it were a rushing of the mighty wind and a power filled the whole room, they were surrounded, everyone that was in it. The whole room was filled, and there were as tongues of fire sitting upon the heads of those that were present, and they were filled with the Holy Ghost. That is the Holy Spirit.

Here then we have a literal fulfillment by the testimony that Luke bears, as we have just read, and we have a like fulfillment to this other church as you will find it in Nephi 9:14: "And it came to pass when they were all baptized, and had come up out of the water, the Holy Ghost did fall upon them, and they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and with fire."

No person can understand or comprehend the full meaning of this statement if he has never been filled with the Holy Ghost and with fire, for when that power rests upon an individual he feels an effusion and a heat that fills his entire being, and as I heard one patriarch in Israel say, "I feel the Spirit of the Lord God like fire in my bones." It is a consuming of the evil that is within, the purging out of that which is wrong, and an illumination, and an enlightenment, and the edification of the individual to comprehend the things of God.

This then is a confirmation of that which we find by Luke in the Acts of the Apostles.

THE MISSION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

The Spirit has a work to do. We turn to John 16:13, where the Master is speaking:

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.

There is the mission of this Holy Spirit that comes to the baptized believer. The world has no promise of it, they are not entitled to it. This is the inheritance of those who have faith, repent of their sins, and are baptized for the remission of their sins, and you discover in the statement that the Savior made, that this Holy Spirit was not of himself, but he shall speak that which he hears, and that which he hears shall be that which he shall bring from on high, and that which he brings from on high he will place in the minds of those who are entitled to receive the Holy Spirit, and not only will it thus give to them that blessing and that light, and that gift of understanding, but it will show them things to come. It will go before and bring to light the things that will transpire hereafter. There is sufficient in that one thought for an hour's conversation.

But I turn to this book again, and in 1 Nephi 3:30-32, I read as follows:

And the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto them by the power of the Holy Ghost, as well in this time as in times of old: and as well in times of old as in times to come; wherefore, the course of the Lord is one eternal round.

Thus you have a clear statement of an intelligible God, an intelligible manner of administering his power upon his children. Those of the past, those of the present, and those of the future are all entitled to the same light, the same gift of the Holy Spirit, and the same hope of eternal life. Thus we have a unity between these two books given.

I have a book here, and in that we have a like promise. In Doctrine and Covenants 10:7 we have: "Verily, verily I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy."

I appeal to those of this congregation who were permitted to attend the late reunion south of town; as the Holy Spirit thrilled through that congregation did it not produce joy in your souls that the God of heaven, by the power of his Holy Spirit, looked down in mercy and compassion and spoke to the congregation, and filled them with joy and gladness that God was the same intelligible, immutable one that did for one people as he did for another? I appeal to those of this congregation that were present at our prayer meeting yesterday morning and this afternoon, as the power of God's Holy Spirit by the presence of the angels that administer in power and great glory and joy, that you felt the comfort and gladness of your soul, that you are worshipping a God that did, by the power of his Holy Spirit, fulfill the promises that he had made.

Thus the mission of the Holy Spirit is made plain by a threefold cord that cannot easily be broken.

A WITNESS FOR CHRIST

We need this witness. Men to-day may be able to speak and work for Christ, but there is only one way in which God has provided that a man can be a witness for Christ.

I turn to John 15: 26 for this proof: "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."

That is a part of the work of this Holy Spirit, to testify that Jesus is the Christ. And outside of the regular text that I have selected, are you not aware that in John 17: 3 it is made positive that the Holy Spirit is the means by which you are to have a knowledge that God is God and Jesus Christ is Christ, and that the knowledge that they are just what we have presented, God being God, and Christ being our Redeemer, that will bring to us eternal life, keeping the commandments?

Are you not aware that Paul in his testimony to the Corinthian church, in the 12th chapter and third verse, of 1 Corinthians makes it positive that no man can say that Jesus is the Christ, but by the Holy Ghost?

Thus you discover that in the Bible testimony there can be no doubt of the necessity of the Holy Spirit being a witness of Christ to humanity, and without that testimony we have no promise of eternal life.

I turn to Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5, and read there: "The Holy Ghost, which beareth record of the Father, and of the Son, which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end."

A WITNESS OF OUR ADOPTION

You have here a knowledge of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost bearing witness to mankind through the ministration of this Holy Spirit, that brings a baptism of that knowledge and that assurance that you have a right to eternal life. It is the witness of our adoption.

I stood by the bedside of a man in Plattsmouth, Nebraska, many years ago. I was preaching in a school house not very far from this sick man, and his folks were attending the meeting and telling him of what they heard. He said, "Oh, if I could only hear that man preach! How happy I would be." They came and told me and I visited him and made arrangements to preach in his house. I preached upon this promise, the seal of our adoption, the knowledge that we are accepted of him; and he lay there on his bed—on his dying bed—and wept like a child. After the meeting I went and sat down by him and took his hand, and talked to him and he said, "Brother Elvin, for thirty-four years I have served in a church, and I am dying. I have no knowledge that I have ever found acceptance with my God. I do not know whether my membership in the church to which I have belonged has ever done me any good or not, and now," he said, "it is eternally too late." It was. The man passed away a day or too later, but oh, how my heart ached for that man on his deathbed who seemed so sincere, so earnest, and yet down to his dying hour he had been denied the knowledge of the gospel that would give to him the knowledge to know that God was God, Christ was his Redeemer, and that he had found acceptance with them.

The Holy Spirit, therefore, is given to us to give that knowledge.

I turn to Romans 8: 14, 15 and read:

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

You see how clear, how positive that makes it. That by reason of this baptism of the Holy Spirit that we receive after we have been immersed in water, that as many as are thus coming into Christ, they are the sons of God, because they are led by the Holy Spirit, and being led by that Holy Spirit, the Spirit does not speak of itself, but that which it hears; that Spirit speaking as it is authorized to speak, it bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. What a comfort! What a peaceful satisfaction!

I tell you, and I tell it to you without fear, there is nothing that equals this power of the Holy Spirit to rest upon an individual when he faces that change that for want of a better name we call death. To know that through obedience to the gospel and that baptism of the Holy Spirit you are a child of God, and the transfer from this world of trial and tears and sorrows, that you are transplanted into that kingdom and that condition where you shall enjoy in the Elysian fields of eternal joy that he has provided for the redeemed ones, the companionship of the blood-washed throng of all ages of time.

THE LIFE LINK

My last is the life link, that which unites us with heaven, that which will answer that yearning, aching void in the heart, to know that there is a sweet by and by in which we may rest from our trials and have acceptance with our God.

There is one thing that is harder than another for me to comprehend, and that is wireless telegraphy. To me it is a grand science, a grand achievement of science. And next to that is wireless telephony. This I have studied a little; not very much. I studied carefully for a short time auto-telegraphy. That is, I am in Lamoni. I have a bank account in Chariton. I want to pay a check to a man in Chariton, or Chicago. I sit down at my desk with this auto-telegraph. I write out the check, and at the other end, whether it be Chariton or Chicago, there the check is written right out facsimile, exactly as I wrote it here. Now if somebody had told me about that before I practiced it I would not have dared say it to you, but when I sat down at the machine and took the pencil in my hand and wrote out the statement, then I took that statement in my hand and went to the other end of the line and asked the man to show me the copy, and when he showed me the copy, had I been put upon the witness stand in court and taken my oath I would have sworn that the copy he handed to me was my writing. It was my writing. I compared the two and they were exact. I have that copy yet.

Men have wondered at the Latter Day Saints, the amount of faith that they have exercised as to this thought of God being so powerful as to give to the human family a knowledge while they were still in this life. So I turn now to 1 John 5 and read there, in the 7th and 8th verses:

For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one.

If I had a blackboard here to-night I would draw two straight marks down there, and the first mark I would call God, and the second one I would call Christ, for the Word here is Christ, that you find the proof of in the first chapter of John, 14th verse, where the Word took upon him flesh and dwelt among us.

Then in the 8th verse of 1 John 5, again, "And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one."

Now I would draw two straight marks here, one for the water, and one for the blood. I have read of six, but I have only marked four. Ah, have you discovered that in these two verses we have read, that one plays a part in both verses, the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, they three bear record in heaven; the three on earth that agree in one, the Spirit, the water and the blood. So I draw a line across here, and in it these four were one, and we have the Holy Spirit not only working in heaven, but on earth.

So when an individual becomes a believer, and goes down into the waters of baptism, if he will keep his commandments and walk in the footsteps of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit is present, and he takes that man's name and he carries it to heaven, and he there has it placed upon the record. And that man, in days to come, stands up in the congregations of the Saints, and he bears witness that his sins are forgiven, that he is an adopted son of God, and that Jesus Christ is his Redeemer, and the Holy Spirit has given him light, and he breaks out in tongues and prophecy, and he sees heaven and earth together by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Is it not the life link that unites earth with heaven, and the revelations come to earth by the Holy Spirit, and the works of men are carried to heaven by the Holy Spirit? Do you discover then that the work of the baptism of the Holy Spirit is the most essential factor in our faith, and as Latter Day Saints, as these three books agree, that we are entitled to the work of the Holy Spirit by obedience?

THE HASTENING TIME--PART 2

BY ALVIN KNISLEY

Oh! sad is my heart for the storm that is coming;
Like eagles the scud sweepeth in from the sea;
The gull seeketh shelter, the pine trees are sighing,
And all giveth note of the tempest to be.

A spell hath been whispered from cave or from ocean,
The shepherds are sleeping, the sentinels dumb,
The flocks are all scattered on moorland and mountain,
And few who believe that the Master will come.

He will come, but whom will he find their watch keeping
Oh! where—in his absence—is faith the world o'er?
The rich, every sense in soft luxury steeping;
The poor scarce repelling the wolf from the door.

O man, and O maiden, drop trifling and pleasure!
O hark! while I tell of the sorrows to be.

As well might I plead in the path of yon glacier,
Or cry out a warning to wave of the sea!

There is much room to amplify on the concentration of wealth into the hands of such as the Astors, Goulds, Rockefellers, Vanderbilts, Rothschilds, and Flagler, Blair, Russell Sage, Huntington, Sheppard, Sloan, Webb, Brewster, Rogers, Payne, Warden, Pratt estate, Stanford, Mrs. Green, Armour, Searles, J. Pierpont Morgan, Crocker estate, Mills, Carnegie, Higgins estate, the coach man Pullman, John D. Archbold (recently deceased), most of whom are Americans, to say nothing of the magnates in other countries. The fortunes of these different men or estates range from ten million to hundreds of millions. So that when they take a notion it is not hard for them to corner the wheat, the potatoes, the eggs, and the impoverished purchaser can pay the price they dictate, however exorbitant, or do without. In the West where the writer is at present—as everywhere else for that matter—eggs are such a price that we as missionary people only know them by memory, the hens at this time of the year (January) having gone largely out of business. A few years ago I was at Creston, Iowa, where they had been about three cents a dozen—too cheap to lay—and one hardly cared for them because they were so cheap. Flour and other common necessities are correspondingly high to-day, but of course some of them go farther and are not as easily dispensable as eggs and some other things, and therefore we face the demand with less reluctance. But our people all ought to economize, because the Lord has commanded it so frequently in former and latter times. You have no more right to waste your own than another's—what you produce than what you buy. It is wrong to be extravagant with a thing because you have lots of it. “Be frugal,” “learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires,” is the Lord's mind on the subject in our time. A man whom William E. Gladstone pronounced to be of “rare and enviable brilliancy” wrote in the Twentieth Century some years ago:

In the days of cannibalism the strong devoured the weak—acutally ate their flesh. In spite of all the laws that man has made, in spite of all advances in science, the strong, the heartless, still live on the weak, the unfortunate, and the foolish. When I take into consideration the agony of civilized life—the failures, the anxieties, the tears, the withered hopes, the bitter realities, the hunger, the crime, the humiliation, the shame—I am almost forced to say that cannibalism, after all, is the most merciful form in which man has ever lived upon his fellow man.

It is impossible for a man with a good heart to be satisfied with the world as it is. No man can truly enjoy even what he earns—what he knows to be his own—knowing that millions of his fellow men are in misery and want. When we think of the famished, we think that it is almost heartless to eat. To meet the ragged and shivering makes one almost ashamed to be well dressed and warm—one feels as though his heart were as cold as their bodies.

The above is not only good composition, but good sense. Henry Drummond in his Natural Law in the Spiritual World says we are inclined to purchase relief of obligation too easily sometimes by tossing a mere penny to the needy.

The Prophet Ezekiel says:

They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed: their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels: because it is the stumblingblock of their iniquity.—7:19 (italics mine).

The dreadful torpedo, the cannon's missile, the seismic crash, the unmerciful tornado, the frightful tidal wave, the assassin's dagger, the consuming flames—have been alike unsparing of the rich as of the poor. In case of famine they can, it is true, buy their fare from want to plenty. In the ocean of high prices they can touch bottom while others must swim or perish. But when the Titanic or Lusitania goes down Mr. Astor has to go with the rest.

EXTRAVAGANCE AND WASTE

Think of a lady expending $5,000 in burying her poodle dog, of the millionaires of New York paying $800,000 for a single yacht, of an English duke paying $350,000 for a horse, of a Boston woman burying her husband in a $50,000 coffin, of a Parisian lady who wore $1,600,000 worth of diamonds, of an American lady arrayed in $1,000,000 worth of jewels and diamonds, of palaces for the rich costing from $50,000 to $1,500,000, of $10,000 paid for desert service, of dog socials where the brutes are fed on very expensive dainties with nurses to attend them, of $50,000 paid for two vases and $6,000 for two flower jars. And when you have thought, then think of Ezekiel 16: 49, 50:

Behold, this was the iniquity of . . . Sodom—pride, fullness of bread and abundance of idleness was in her; . . . neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

Also think of Matthew 24: 37, 38:

“But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For . . . they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered the ark.” Indeed they “have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton.” (James 5: 5.)

I read of a Syracuse millionaire building a $700,000 stable for his horses, and again of where—

One hundred and forty-four social autocrats, headed by an aristocrat, held a great ball. Royalty never eclipsed it. It was intensely exclusive. Wine flowed like water. Beauty lent her charms. Neither Mark Antony nor Cleopatra ever rolled in such gorgeoussness. It was a collection of millionaires. The wealth of the world was drained for pearls and diamonds. Necklaces of gems costing $200,000 and downward emblazoned scores of necks. The dance went on amid Aladdin splendors. Joy was unconfined. While it was going on, says a journal, 100,000 starving miners in Pennsylvania were scouring the roads like cattle in search of forage, some of them living on cats, and not a few committing suicide in order to avoid seeing their children starve. Yet one necklace from the metropolitan ball would have rescued all these from hunger. It was one of the “great social events” of a nation called Christian; but what a contrast! And there is no remedy for it. Thus it will be “till He come.”

The Lord says (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12) “he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer.”

To add to the vexatiousness of the social problem and the strife between capital and labor at the present time is the introduction of—

MACHINERY AND FEMALE LABOR

which, especially the former, have thrown millions of men out of employment. The writer was a printing employee about the time that inventive genius was placing on the market one of the devices which was destined to say to vast numbers of men: "We have no longer any use for you in the printing business; go and make the best of it. I have come to take your place." One writer says:

One man and two boys can do the work which it required 1,100 spinners to do but a few years ago.

One man now does the work of fifty weavers at the time of his grandfather.

Cotton printing machines have displaced fifteen hundred laborers to each one retained.

One machine with one man as attendant manufactures as many horseshoes in one day as it would take 500 men to make in the same time.

Out of 500 men formerly employed at the log sawing business, 499 have lost their jobs through the introduction of modern machinery.

One nail machine takes the place of 1,100 men.

In the manufacture of paper 95 per cent of hand labor has been replaced.

One man can now make as much pottery ware in the same time as 1,000 could do before machinery was applied.

By the use of machinery in loading and unloading ships one man can perform the labor of 2,000 men.

An expert watchmaker can turn out from 250 to 300 watches each year with the aid of machinery, 85 per cent of former hand labor being thus displaced.

It is estimated that 615,000 men can take care of the various departments of industry to supply 22,000,000 people. Which means that one man can supply 35. And how plainly this depicts before us the utter absurdity and disadvantage to which we are subject in that we have such a majority of our population who live in the cities. Some years ago the majority of Americans occupied the rural districts; were husbandmen, ranchers, tillers of the soil. But a few years have revolutionized the social order of things and there was a stampede to the cities. Men wanted to get where they could wear fine clothes all the time and do anything but be actual producers. They wanted to be doctors, lawyers, bankers, merchants and even preachers—anything but to fill the place that nature had cut out for them. The result has been that the cities and towns, therefore, have a large majority where they should be far in the minority. The consequences were not so dire until the tidal wave of invention dashed them from their moorings, and usurped their places, left them in the perplexity and distress of—"What shall we do? where shall we go?" This pitiful wail has ascended from multitudinous voices far and near, and sometimes when employers and capitalists and their fellows whom they knew to have means were heedless of their plight, the laborers demanded imperatively: "Give us work or give us bread."

Manufacturers meet and determine prices, even in spite of the great law of supply and demand. Have the laborers the same right to consult and combine? The rich meet in the bank, clubhouse or parlor. Workingmen, when they combine, gather in the street. All the organized forces of society are against them. Capital has the Army and the Navy, the legislature, the judicial and executive departments. When the rich combine it is for the purpose of "exchanging ideas." When the poor combine, it is a "conspiracy." If they act in concert, if they really do something, it is a "mob." If they defend themselves, it is "treason."

The modern city is a crime—an incubator of criminals. Look at the repletion of the daily press with accounts of murders, stealings, embezzlements, and other horrors only generically mentionable—nearly all in the city, where one might expect that in their close proximity to religious discourse and institutional learning it ought to improve them.

The Lord knew the end from the beginning, and if there ever was a time when he is needed to come to the rescue of his people socially, economically, financially and temporally it is too evidently in this age of degeneracy when his own true regime and system has been thrown down and buried under the debris of ages, and when his own people in consequence if left unaided are subject to the liabilities of the sinful and rebellious. But how can he do it without giving specific directions to us as to where and how we shall live in temporal matters in relation to each other is unthinkable. We ought to both welcome and expect it.

Under the proper condition of things machinery would not be the enemy of labor; nor would the employment of women in their legitimate sphere militate against the interests of men. If Henry George ever said anything that was worth bottling it was when he said that "poverty ought to be a disgrace, because in a condition of social justice, it would, where unimposed by unavoidable misfortune, imply recklessness of laziness."

Well, the cry went up from Mr. George and others: "Back to the land." Some went. Others determined to tough it out in the sweatshop. Free land has been offered by the American Government and it was but the other day that President Wilson signed the act which entitles homeseekers to one section of the nonirrigable land remaining in the West. This has been an incentive to disurbanization, which has been going on to some perceptible extent, but not with the concert of response that ought to be in evidence. Thousands will beg in the city ere they will accept plenty away from it. They will yelp

"hard times" when they have power to flee from it. Yet you could not pull them out to where there is more of an "equality of natural opportunity," and where they might employ themselves instead of demanding employment of others—no, not with blocks and pulleys. The Lord, prescient of the mischief to be entailed by our people too generally unloading at Independence forewarned them many years ago. And, lest they might still overconcentrate on account of his having advised them to occupy the regions round about, he came out and informed them furthermore that even the regions round about "must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 128:5.) He advises in the same paragraph that they shall group themselves, but he says it does not need to be done within the immediate environs of Independence. In the next number it is our purpose to consider the attempts that great minds have made to solve the problem and the remedies they have offered.

HELPS THAT HINDER--CONCLUDED

Being invited of the Lord, as recorded somewhere in Doctrine and Covenants to take the position in our publications to which our convictions impel, it seems that we should be permitted to defend that position for one round, at least, and not required to retire the first time we are shot at.

Wherefore we crave the indulgence of the Editors and readers of the HERALD to make a brief examination of the editorial appearing in the issue of April 4, criticizing the original article appearing in the same issue under above caption.

It might not be wholly amiss to say, at the outset, that we do not feel at all badly by reason of having argued by analogy in the original article, weak as that form of argument is; for we understand that Jesus used the same form, or practically the same, quite a bit. "He taught them many things by parables," (Matthew 13:3) and it feels rather good to be a little weak and be found in his class, even though it be only with respect to the form of one's utterances.

But as "the law regards substance rather than form" we proceed to the examination of the substance of what was said, feeling that the form, though not unimportant, will be of minor importance if we are found to agree with Him in the substance of what we advocate.

The learned editor takes the position that a great load can, and usually should be divided. Perhaps a closer consideration will convince him that when it is divided it remains a great load no longer, but that a number of little loads stand in its place.

The press gave account of a hospital building being moved whole, with the patients in their beds—and I think something was said of coffee boiling in the kitchen that was not spilled.

Of course this building could have been torn to pieces and loaded in "small lots" on little wagons that make little tracks in the earth. But this would be hauling lumber, merely, and not moving a building.

What a difference in the appliances and the class of labor the two operations would employ!

We do have a church organization, and all agree to this. But what is it for? What is the purpose of it?

Certainly the primary object and purpose of any organization is the unifying of the forces composing it. And why should we unify these forces? It is certainly because they have some undertaking in view which is too big for little forces, and not wishing to tear it in bits to the measure of their powers, they unify their powers to the measure of the load and take it entire.

As before intimated, the church organization is a perfect means to the unity of all our powers, and works so that whatever effort is made by the missionary brings the undertaking to bear in equal degree on the man of business, the bishop, the patriarch, and all, so that all may occupy according to their gifts. And the objection of the original article is that after the powers and gifts of all are unified in one endeavor by the church organization, we formulate additional organizations for double unity, and triple unity, and on ad infinitum pretending that when we make more units we are helping unify.

Does the editorial justify this kind of help, therefore?

If the illustration the brother gives of the farmer who employs help be examined it will disclose that an able-bodied man will not seek help, nor need any to do one man's work; but by some improper limitation or restriction of "the right to be employed" that farmer has cornered ten men's work, and seeks assistance, not to perform his own proper labor, but to do that which is not his own.

So with the church. As long as it confines its operations to the work for which it was created, it will need no help. But if it is to dip in every movement that finds current in the earth it will need parts additional to those God gave it.

Again the brother seeks to justify help with a quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 11:4, saying: "None can assist in this work unless he be humble and full of love."

He wishes us to infer that they who are humble and full of love may assist, and this assistance is help, and help is, therefore, right, and justified by the word.

That seems like a long way round, and hard trudging, to find authority for help, and the course is so devious he misses the issue. It will be remembered that the original article does not object to the help of "individual forces accumulated in one by means of proper organization." To accomplish the work intrusted to all, God asks all to work together in one body, under one head. And our objection goes to the pouring out of our energies through numerous man-made bodies, different from what he gave us, under different heads from the one he has ordained and authorized.

If it is asserted that by reason of reports and recommendations passing between the auxiliaries and the First Presidency the authorized head of the church is virtually the head of all the auxiliaries, too, then we reply that one head with six bodies is as monstrous as one body with six heads, and some one is very apt to be overworked.

It cannot be said that branches and districts are bodies in the sense of the objection made to the maintenance of more than one body in the original article, nor would it be needful to the reasons it gives to meet in "one large town service" and do away with these branches and districts. For branches and districts, stakes, etc., are, all of them, proper divisions, subordinate parts of the one body, the church. They are composed of the same "flesh and bones," we may say, kept alive by the same Spirit which manifests itself in the nine different forms mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12: 7, 11.

But the auxiliaries are of different composition, and kept alive by some other spirit, which never manifests itself in them in any of the ways above mentioned.

Wherefore they are not parts of the body of Christ, and the objection is to yoking the church equally with baser organizations. As it is written, "Ye shall not plow with an ox and an ass together." (Deuteronomy 22: 10.) Better read the ninth verse, too. Same chapter.

Again, when the members of the Presidency, etc., were rebuked in 1833 "for neglecting the instruction of their children," as the brother says, the Lord did not complain of a failure to send them to the care of auxiliaries, but to F. G. Williams he said: "You shall set in order your house." To Rigdon he said: "Set in order thy house." Then of Whitney he says: "He hath need to be chastened and set in order his family and see that they are more diligent and concerned at home." (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6, 7, 9.)

In every case the command was for the parent to teach his own children, at home, it would seem to imply, as parents who have any home life and frame their activities with reference to that institution we call "home" may do; but as they who fill their program from week's end to week's end with preparing for and gadding to some community engagement may never find time to do.

Just this is the pity of it. We organize, and organize, and organize. We organize for work, and we organize for play, and organize to walk over the fields and to wade streams. Our whole life is consumed in clusters here, clusters there, crowds, herds, groups, gangs. There are no individuals any more: there is no individuality.

If we would assume the responsibility of their creation and not try to palm them off as being instituted of God, it would be allowable to form such organizations as reason justifies and we see to be needed. But we greatly fear that many of these organizations sprang, not from a deep realization of their need, but from a pronounced tendency to copy the world.

The world has ladies' aid societies, and the papers record that they met on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Jones on Pike Street, and refreshments were served.

Well, we must have something like it.

The world has Boy Scouts, and our boys have the "gang spirit"—we must duplicate them. The world has Camp Fire Girls, and though the name seems tolerably rowdy we must get our girls in uniform that smacks of the military, so we organize like the Camp Fire Girls, but we choose a softer name.

You'd think these organizations were about enough, but at once some one becomes sensible of a great need and points out that the world has numerous organizations for boys, and "we must do something to hold our young."

So we appoint a commission of those who are the light of the world to study the plan the world uses in this matter, so "the children of light" may learn how to formulate and regulate an organization for "our boys."

In answer to what seemed to us the strongest point in the editorial we would say that we suppose that all those engaged in auxiliary work will be rewarded for whatever good they do, as seems to be indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 117: 12, which the brother quoted. We understand that whoever gives a cup of cold water to one of the household of faith shall have his reward. But the fact that God promises rewards for this service does not justify us in using all our time, or most of it, in passing around the water where there's need for shelter, and raiment, and bread.

In conclusion the writer feels no ill at all towards any that have been engaged in any of the auxiliaries. It has been a pleasure and a benefit to him, away here in the backwoods where elders seldom come, to teach a class of six children in the home department of the Sunday school. Neither do we have any great stress of desire for sudden radical action, though it would seem to be a good policy to take what is used to maintain auxiliaries and pay off the church debt.

But for one thing we do insist, and that is that the auxiliaries may cease to be advertised as the helps and governments of 1 Corinthians 12: 28, or any other part of the government of God.

I would not omit to acknowledge myself sincerely grateful for the consideration of the Editors which afforded me the opportunity to make a more particular reply to the editorial than might otherwise have been offered. And though we may differ, even sharply in our views, we differ very respectfully.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Some Things We Had in the Auxiliary

(Paper written by Mrs. J. E. Flowers, of Clearwater, Nebraska, and read at the district convention of the Central Nebraska District, at Inman, Nebraska, February 4, 1917.)

I think you will all agree with me when I say that the first thing we need is an interest in the work. No one will work for a cause in which he is not interested. I think that it is a conceded fact that the lack of interest is the most discouraging thing we have to meet in any line of church work. When we arouse an interest the battle is half won. We are always ready to labor for that in which we are really interested. Jesus said, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," and it seems to me that where our hearts are there will we labor. If we show by our labor that our treasure is elsewhere than in the Lord's work, who is the loser? Not the Lord; he is able to accomplish all that he desires without our help. But he has intrusted much to our hands that we may share the reward that he has laid up for the faithful, those who have proven themselves wise stewards, when the Master comes.

The spirit of sacrifice is also greatly needed. I think we cannot have a true love or interest in any person or cause and not be willing to sacrifice for that person or that cause. In my mind the words love and sacrifice go together. We have been told so often that this is a day of sacrifice. I sometimes wonder, when I realized how little we sacrifice, what our reward will be if we are judged according to our sacrifices. Most of us cannot offer any great sacrifice; most of us are not called to; but there are many little ways in which we can, and must, sacrifice for the good of the auxiliary work. We cannot afford to let the cares of life crowd out the duties that we owe to the Father and his work. When we sacrifice for an earthly cause, we gain an earthly reward; and it perishes with earthly things. Jesus told Martha that she was careful and troubled over many things but that Mary had chosen the better part,—that which should not be taken from her. I do not mean that we should neglect the home for the church work. We all have our work in the home and no others can do it for us, but I fear we are careful and troubled about many things that are not of vital importance. The Father did not intend that the cares of life should keep us from the better things that He has given us.

Last, but not least, we need unity. The Father has told us that unless we are one we are not his. All worldly organizations and institutions recognize the fact that in unity there is strength, and they work accordingly. If the children of the world are able to accomplish so much by uniting their worldly wisdom, how much more, then, ought the children of God be able to do, when they have not only His wisdom to lean upon but also His promise that with him all things are possible. We must put away timidity and fear of failure, and take God at his word when he says that all things work together for good to them that fear and serve him. How can we verify his word to us if we never put him to the test! Nephi left this testimony, that he knew that the Lord never commanded his children to do anything save he would prepare a way for them to accomplish it. Surely he is as ready to fulfill his promise unto us as unto his children in other ages.

Finally let us heed the admonition given in a late HERALD to the auxiliary workers, that whatever thing ye do, do it all to the glory of God.

Concerning Our Boys

Am with you heart and soul in the movement to organize our boys. Yes, by all means, organize their latent and often misspent energy into something that will give them something to do. That's it, to do! My humble opinion is that this can be best wrought through the general organization of the Sunday school. Why not create a special department under the name "Our Boys," giving them their own special superintendent, or "General," if you prefer it? Thus it will be incumbent on every Sunday school to have an "Our Boys" army. Think this would be better than to create another auxiliary. We might turn it over to one of the present auxiliaries to care for while it is yet in its swaddling clothes. In this way it will grow to become one of the family, and every local school will feel under obligation to help and support and foster the movement. . . .

The merits of an organization for our boys should be constantly brought to the attention of our people through the use of press and platform. We will be glad to have all our general field workers present to the various reunions the "boy question," especially those who have felt the "fire" of the subject. In conclusion, I assure you of my heartiest support, and anything I can do to help will be cheerfully performed.

OYEN, ALBERTA.

Sincerely,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Report of Historian

To the Woman's Auxiliary Assembled in Convention; Greeting: Perhaps the society has a right to expect more of me, as historian, than I have accomplished in the past year, since I have been relieved of almost all other work connected with the society; but my circumstances have been very unfavorable for my work. However I have done what I could. I have spent much time on this history, and have brought some parts of it up almost to present date, while others are not nearly completed.

The work seems to expand before me as I get more deeply into it, and I see more and more that must be considered in it. I am quite sure it is well that the work has been delayed.

Last summer I sent out notices two different times, asking the locals to appoint historians in their societies, who would keep a record of all important features of their work, which they would report to the historian from time to time, that we might have a knowledge of the work as a whole. A few responded to the call, but when I learned that new regulations for the work of the historian were to be presented for this convention to act upon, I thought best to await the result, before making further effort in order that future work might be in harmony with the action of the convention.

Praying that the Spirit of God may direct in all the work of the convention, I am,

MRS. B. C. SMITH, Historian.

Report of Editor-in-Chief

To the General Executive Officers of the Woman's Auxiliary: As your editor-in-chief, appointed last April, we submit the following report for the year:

From May 24, 1916, the Auxiliary column has appeared regularly in the SAINTS' HERALD, with the exception of two issues of a special magazine nature, when all departments were omitted.

In the 35 issues of the column, between the date mentioned and the issue of January 31, 1917, there have been published five announcements, 5 letters, 14 reprints from other papers, 6 original poems, 36 reports from officers and of activities among various locals, and 73 original articles. These original contributions represent the thought and effort of 29 different sisters which showing we consider very fine, indeed. The department being new, naturally requires a little time to become established and its possibilities understood by the sisters, and we feel that the response the past year is promise of still wider fields and extended opportunities for the future.

Our department in the Autumn Leaves has appeared regularly, owing chiefly to the valued services and management of the contributing editor, Sister Anna de Jong Smith, of Saint Louis. This young woman has the interests of the girls of the church very much at heart, and is ever on the alert for things of value to present to them, through the column in the Leaves, which, by counsel and consent, has been devoted to the interests of the young woman's department of our auxiliary work. Because of this latter fact, we would recommend that this department in the Autumn Leaves be placed under the direct charge and editorship of the superintendent of the young woman's department, to avoid much of the complexity and delay experienced the past year.

We are of the opinion, too, that a very active and interesting department could be maintained in the Stepping Stones and Zion's Hope by the superintendent of the child welfare department, partaking of the nature of suggestions for activities among the children—home work for the small ones, neighborhood plans for the older ones, etc. These, of course, should be of a nature to directly interest the children and not be of a study, or didactical nature, since the latter interests should be cared for through the channels of the educational department.

We hope to see in the future a steady growth in the breadth and scope of our publication interests. We hope to see in our columns many, many messages of uplift and encouragement, of suggestion and inspiration, of comradeship and unity of purpose, which are characterizing the awakening activities of our women. We hope to see well-planned and carefully executed series of articles suitable for reading and discussion in the locals of our society, whence may come mental and spiritual development to our members. The superintendents of our various departments have done nobly this year in presenting their work through our columns, but we feel it is only a beginning, and that the coming year will witness still greater work, more definite outlines, clearer vision, and more consecrated services.

We feel that great progress has been made the past year. Our church women are feeling out after their sisters, seeking guidance where they feel its need, and offering help where desired. They are finding their places in the great and mutual work of redeeming Zion, which can never be accomplished by our ministry or our men alone. They are learning that upon them is resting an equal, if not, indeed a greater responsibility, since unto them are left the guiding and the molding of the character of the coming workers. And, the gratifying part of all this, is the fact that the sisters not only begin to see more clearly the advantages to be gained by "reasoning together" concerning the things which are vital to them, but they are at the same time evincing a great, a burning desire to take these opportunities to their breasts, to qualify and perform, and to develop to efficiency in their part of the work. Better women and better mothers, will mean better men and better children; better children to-day will mean better servants of God to-morrow, thereby bringing the emancipation of humanity from evil nearer by so much, and the redemption of Zion hastened.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From Here and There

A new branch has recently been organized near Oyen, Alberta, Canada. W. H. Chandler has been chosen secretary, while we do not have further details at present.

Thomas Whitford writes from Whittemore, Michigan, as follows: "The old branch at Whittemore had a visit from Brother Pendleton, of Beaverton. Eleven were baptized, so the good work still goes on."

Elders L. G. Holloway of Lamoni and Willard J. Parks, of Alpena, Michigan, left Lamoni in a new Ford auto on the 12th, for their field in Utah. It will be used as a mission car. Many districts are using this most efficient method of transportation for the missionaries.

A suggestion comes from J. A. Upton, of Estacada, Oregon. His daughter, one of our members, resides at Lisbon, New Hampshire, and may be addressed at that place, box 291. Her location can be ascertained from some grocery store. She would appreciate a visit from some of our church members. The name is Mrs. Oscar Hornby.

We have a favorable report from the Second Antonio Branch contained in a letter from W. H. Davenport of that place. Elder T. J. Jett, jr., is president of the branch but has been among the sick for about two weeks but the other officers and members have not been idle, but have kept the work going quite well, all things considered. Preaching, prayer meetings, Sunday school and sacrament attendance is not large, but more or less attentive.

A card from Oscar W. Okerlind, who was at Fortescue, Missouri, on the 11th, says there are a few Saints at that place who are trying to show their faith by their works. They built a neat little church last fall and their friends donated liberally. He concludes: "Yesterday I baptized a young man and his wife, who, if faithful, will be a good help to the work in this place. I intend to go and open up a new place north of here in a few days. Ever hopeful for the triumph of Zion's cause."

Inclosing a clipping from the local paper at Tonkawa, Oklahoma, and a sample of his advertising handbills, Brother Joseph Arber says he has been conducting successful services in the city park at that place. While the crowds have not been large, he has succeeded in reaching a number of fine people and making a number of friends. A professor of the college at that place leads the singing, which is greatly appreciated, as the only Saints residing there are a Brother and Sister Redfield. The wheat harvest is on, which militates somewhat against them. The editor has treated them with the utmost kindness, which is much appreciated.

The women of Independence, including the Saints, are energetically taking up the work of the Red Cross. Stenographic service, knitting, sewing, etc., are included. A series of food-canning demonstrations begins this week at the high school under the auspices of the parent-teacher association. A concert will be given on June 12 for the benefit of the choir at the church. At the Polytechnic Institute, Kansas City, a course in teacher training, mechanic art and business training is given without charge and offers ample opportunity to women to qualify in these lines. The course lasts six weeks. Diplomas were granted to three nurses in the commencement exercises of the Sanitarium at the church on June 5. Misses Thorpe, Wells, and Giles were the honored young ladies. Elders R. Etzenhouser and L. E. Hills have recently been giving lectures in the church hall on Book of Mormon map.

Lamoni, Iowa

In a recent session of the local Religio, ten dollars was voted for the Army Y. M. C. A. and it is likely a similar amount will be voted for the Red Cross.

Brethren Floyd M. McDowell and Charles E. Irwin are leaving to take up work at the University of Iowa during the summer, and Brother Charles B. Woodstock goes to the University of Wisconsin.

The Sunday school officials have been urging that those desiring baptism arrange for it when ready and not wait till Children's Day, as has been the custom in the past. This has been largely observed this year and since the first of the year there have been more than thirty baptisms in our local font. Some of these were adults, but the most of them were near the age of eight.

Lamoni largely attended the stake conference and conventions held at the Evergreen chapel, about five miles southwest. Both the church and the schoolhouse near were filled, and yet all could not find seats. The presentation of a gavel by John Garver the president of the stake, to John Smith, the former president, was a touching feature. It was made from the chair occupied by Brother Smith at his office desk and typified the seat of the stake presidency. One from the same source was given R. S. Salyards at the organization of the Far West Stake, he being in the Lamoni Stake presidency for a number of years. Most impressive spiritual manifestations characterized the prayer meetings.

Charles E. Irwin was ordained an elder. Estella Wight was chosen a member of the stake good literature board, the Sunday school having chosen Leon Judson, and the two to be associated with A. L. Keen from the Religio in the new stake organization in this work.

The editors have chronicled the items concerning the passing of Apostle James E. Kelley, and in the passing of Elder David D. Young another valiant and respected man of God has gone to his reward.

The recent oblation at the Lamoni sacrament meeting totaled almost fifty dollars. With all the branches doing as well throughout the church this will materially augment the church resources.

LONDON, ENGLAND, May 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: Bishop R. May arrived safely in London on May 15, after his long trip to America. It took only eight days from New York to Liverpool. He reports the weather was fine but it was an anxious passage.

Preaching service Sunday evening; Bishop May occupied in London, Elder John Judd at Enfield.

London is astir over the arrival of Doctor J. Ford Newton an American minister who is to take charge of the City Temple (Congregational) in place of the Reverend R. J. Campbell who has united with the Church of England, was ordained a deacon and is now an assistant in the cathedral in Birmingham.

According to official report, food prices here advanced from July 1, 1914 to May 1, 1917, on eggs 83 per cent, cheese 121 per cent, butter 70 per cent, milk 63 per cent, potatoes 162 per cent, and meat in proportion. No white bread or flour to be found on sale. Ice cream is a prohibitory article. Railroad fares have increased 50 per cent and there are no excursions or special rates and many trains have been taken off. A stranger is prohibited under penalty to travel from town to town unless he has his identity pass signed by the inspector of police.

It is expected that six to eight will be baptized into the church at our June 3 district conference.

Brother May goes to Gloucester this week end to attend the Eastern Wales district conference.

The American colors were given a place of honor here on Empire Day and saluted by all the scout boys, along with the English flag.

PEARL MAY CRICK.

HONOLULU, HAWAII, May 29, 1917.

Editors Herald: I love to read the Saints' letters in the church papers, as from their perusal I receive much encouragement. So I thought they would like to hear from these islands in the mid-Pacific Ocean. Slowly but surely the heaven of gospel truth is working on the hearts and lives of this people for their spiritual uplift, also for their temporal welfare. The meetings are much better attended, both the church services, Sabbath school and Religio. The midweek prayer meeting also is much better attended.

On Tuesday morning, May 22, 7.30 a. m., Brother Gilbert J. Waller arrived here from San Francisco, and some of our people, the writer included, went down to the wharf to meet him. As the ship drew near the wharf and they spied him leaning on the rail of the ship between the starboard fore rigging and the bridge, a cry went up from them, "Oh, there's Brother Waller; there's Brother Waller, don't you see him? Brother Clancy, don't you see him?" Well, brethren, my eyes are not as young as they were some years back and I did not see him quite as soon as they did, but when I did see him I was glad in my heart, for he looked much better than when he went away. When the gangway was put aboard and he stepped onto the wharf, they were there to meet him with the glad light of love shining in their eyes, and, "O, Brother Waller, we are so glad you have come back." "O, Brother Waller, how are you?" "O, Brother Waller, we are so glad to see you." "Aloha, Aloha, Aloha, Mii," the Hawaiian salutation of love to those whom they really love. And as I witnessed this scene, dear Saints, my heart was touched by divine love. And why should they not love him? He is their spiritual father, counselor, and friend. He has brought them out of darkness into light, into the church of the living God, having baptized them and laid his hands on them for the gift of the Holy Spirit. He has married them and held their children in his arms and blessed them; has gone to their homes in sickness, day or night, administering to them, praying for their healing and comfort, yes, for them, their children and children's children, and what he has done for them no one will ever know but himself and God.

On Wednesday evening, the 23d, the midweek prayer meeting was held with a good attendance, Brother Waller presiding. Had a good prayer, praise and testimony meeting, many telling of the goodness of God to them. On Friday evening we held a reception at the church for Brother Waller, the church being tastefully decorated with greenery and flowers, and over the platform a frame of green ferns with the word welcome in yellow flowers, which told of the glad welcome in their hearts for the one whom they were honoring.

Love is of God, for God so loved the world that he gave his only Begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life. (John 3:16.)

Your brother in the faith,

THOMAS CLANCY.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 28, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written anything to your pages. I don't know how we would get along without the dear old HERALD, for its pages are brimful of good spiritual food, and the letters are very encouraging to me.

In these awful days of war and bloodshed I fully realize the great need of our being more prayerful and obedient to our blessed Master. How we should strive to do our duty and be more humble, and remove pride far from us, that we as God's people might go hand in hand, working with all our strength to help carry the gospel to the ends of the earth. In these last days nearing the end of the world, when we are looking for Christ to come and reign on the earth we should put forth every effort to prepare ourselves, also to keep ourselves unspotted from the world, that we may be found worthy to live with Christ a thousand years, and gain a crown of eternal life.

I feel my weakness and unworthiness now, more than I have done in the past. It seems I have done so little compared with many of my brothers and sisters, but I am trying to do all the good I can. As I have little ones to care for I cannot do as much work for the church as other sisters whose children are grown up. We always look over the letters first to see if there is a letter from Elder J. W. Peterson, also Elder J. L. Mortimore. My husband would like to write to Brother Mortimore if he knew his address.

We attend the Andover Branch in Missouri, as my parents live there. Andover Branch is certainly growing and the people seem to be taking a greater interest than ever before. Our prayer meetings are very spiritual and comforting. Sundays when the weather is fine our little church is filled. We always have good speakers from Lamoni, as Lamoni is only six miles from Andover. I must say a word of appreciation for our Brother Johnson who is so nobly trying to carry on meetings at the Downey Schoolhouse, which is among the Campbellites. Some of the Saints go to help with the singing, but not very many, so it must be discouraging to Brother Johnson. Brother Bierline is also helping all he can, as he uses his car to take a load of Saints to the meetings. Both brothers are doing all they can to make the meetings a success, and we know they will gain their reward. Sister Jane Stanley is acting as organist and is always at her post, so we hope and pray that some good may be done.

I remain, Your sister in gospel bonds,

VIOLET THOMAS.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, May 28, 1917.

Editors Herald: My address is now 1038 West Fourth Street. Please publish and have HERALD mailed thereto.

While we are not turning the world upside down in converting the heathen round about in this part of the Lord's vineyard, it is true that some are added to our number by baptism occasionally.

We feel safe in saying that there is an awaking and a manifest desire showing on the part of many to be the Lord's children in very deed among our membership.

My mind and effort seemed especially directed for the past several months in pointing out the rapid fulfillment of prophecy, perils, unrest, fear, perplexities, and frightful calamities pending on the wicked and disobedient.

Also the need of full consecration of heart and soul to the service of God; that the Saints might be the light of the world in very deed, and not a "hiss and byword" in the mouth of the heathen.

May God hasten the day when kings and queens with the noble of the earth will be compelled to confess that the God of truth is among us, and ask to become citizens of Zion and partakers of her laws, which is God's revealed will and intent that such shall be the case.

What a glorious opportunity and work God has given his Saints to accomplish! When will we do it?

Your brother in gospel labor.

V. M. GOODRICH.

SELFRIDGE, NORTH DAKOTA, May 28, 1917.

Editors Herald: Some days ago in a dream I found myself in the presence of two ladies in costly attire. I admired very much some ornaments that one lady possessed. One remarked to me: "Why do you not purchase like it for yourself?" I meditated for a moment then answered I could not wear it. Being pressed for an answer why, I said: "I am a Latter Day Saint." The other lady had what seemed to be a large gold pin or ornament of some kind in her hair, which looked very attractive. I remarked if all these treasures or the means of their purchase were put in the storehouse of the Lord the Savior was ready to come and would make his appearance.

From there I then found myself among an assembly of people, my attire being very plain. Sitting across the aisle opposite a lady kept watching me very closely, noticing the plain attire and saintly appearance. She then removed the gold ornament from her hair as if to conceal it from sight.

Instead of those or costly attire I hope I may soon be able to pay some offering to the Lord. Some time ago I paid a little sum on the church debt, quite an amount for me I thought (five dollars), at the same time my little home depending on my own earnings. Since then I have made sacrifice to pay a little tithing; in so doing I know I have been greatly blessed. I am not saying this boastfully or for any praise; far from it. I do not want to give alms to be seen of men, but I do hope to encourage some sisters that we may lay aside unnecessary attire and worldly affairs, that we may be able to help fill the storehouse of the Lord. Well did the sister see the storehouse empty, the purse strings drawn and the elders' hands tied.

I care not for costly attire but to be clean and neat, and I do want to be clothed in a white robe when my Savior appears. If this means pure in heart, I hope to be found so. Let us lay aside every weight that doth beset us and run with patience the race. What a blessed hope to be in the presence of our dear Savior and peace on earth.

Praying for the redemption of Zion,

A sister in faith,

MRS. L. C. YOUNG.

HAILEYVILLE, OKLAHOMA, May 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: Just a bit of news, and I am off. On the above date, the fiftieth wedding anniversary of Brother Joseph P. and Sister Lucinda Bowers, a number of the Saints and friends met at the home of their son-in-law and daughter, Brother and Sister Frank Johnson, about 8.30 p. m., after which the old couple were called over (after having gone to bed) on some pretense, and given a real genuine surprise. The writer made a short talk, and in the name of the Haileyville Branch aid society presented Brother Bowers with a pair of gold cuff buttons with engraved initial B, and to Sister Bowers, a gold breastpin, on it the word Aid and 1917 was engraved, so honored by reason of having served as president of the aid society a number of years. The Hartshorn bakery presented them with a fine cake with this inscription: 1867-1917-May 23-50. After appropriate remarks in return by bridegroom and bride, and the singing of spiritual hymns, ice cream and cake was served. It was indeed a joyful celebration long to be remembered. The pair have each a full head of hair which would denote fifty years of peace and loving companionship. They returned to their home happy to spend their second honeymoon.

May God bless the tie that binds.

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, May 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: I desire this morning to record my appreciation of the good spiritual food found in the HERALD, Ensign and other church publications. Especially are the sermons enjoyed by the isolated ones such as we are.

There was food for thought in a sermon by Brother Bass in the Ensign. And I think the advice given the Saints along the lines of economy is good and timely. And in view of the present distress of nations, and cries of the poor offered up to the Lord, I hope no one will be offended if I call attention to one item which might, through our very love for each other, in time become an added burden to church members. It is right that we should love each other and show due respect for each other, both in this life and after we be called away. I have a few friends and relatives in the church and though they may not have reasons to hold a very high regard for me, yet I am persuaded they think just as much of me as I deserve; and for fear their regard might lead them to wish to perpetuate my memory (or rather their memories) by a bronze cast, or a monument, or a mausoleum, or sarcophagus, I wish to utter my protest while I am still alive, and to give my reasons for it.

Now I can imagine how quick some of you will be to say, "O, Sister Anderson! such a course is entirely unnecessary. There isn't as much danger of anything like that happening to a mere mother in Israel as to one of 'the lords of creation'." That is no doubt true. But the principle remains the same, that God's people are to be one, and one of God's faithful servants is as dear to the Creator as another, be he president or member, high priest or deacon; are all to be rewarded hereafter according to their works, and if it is right and necessary to honor one after death in this way, it is just as right and just as necessary to honor another in the same way. And in view of the crying need for help in every direction—the poor, the hungry, the orphans, the aged, the work of the ministry, etc.—with church indebtedness, is it right for Saints to use means for such purposes? Where in Holy Writ do we find anything to uphold such an idea?

Is it in Matthew 23 where Jesus said: "Woe unto you . . . because you build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchers of the righteous"? Is it in 2 Nephi 12, speaking of people in our day: "Yea, and because of pride, and wickedness, and abominations, and whoredoms, they have all gone astray, save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; Nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men"?

How can we tell what are the precepts of men? In book of Moroni 7: 14, 15, we read: "For everything inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; Wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge, it is of God." Mormon said the pride of the Nephites had proven their destruction.

In Doctrine and Covenants 130, we read: "The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church . . . may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants."

Is the idea of using our private means for the purpose of decorating the graves of our friends in accordance with the above advice of the Spirit? Now I believe that I have respect and reverence enough for the martyrs Joseph and Hyrum Smith to wish to make a sacrifice of means to help perpetuate their memory by a monument of some kind, if I could feel that it was right. But is it necessary? We are admonished to avoid unnecessary expenditure. Is it anything to invite or intice any to believe in Christ? Would it be in accord with the dying request of our late beloved president, Joseph Smith, that even no costly flowers be bought to decorate his bier? I heard one aged elder say that the greatest monument we could raise to the memory of Joseph and Hyrum Smith would be to live in accord with the gospel precepts and be worthy of God's protection and Holy Spirit in our hearts.

Is it the Holy Spirit, or is it pride that leads us to cater to the world's opinions in unnecessary display or adornment? If it is the Holy Spirit, then God is no respecter of persons. Many a good brother has died who has given his life for the spread of the gospel. Is it not fitting that we garnish their sepulchers in like manner?

Again, if the coming of the Lord is so nigh, of what avail are the bronze casts of us in our old age, or monuments to show where our bodies may have rested for a while, after we have been resurrected? If we are worthy of the first resurrection, won't the Lord know where to find us, whether on land or in the bottom of the ocean? Is there not necessary work waiting us at every hand, and calls upon our time, talents and means? Now I am reminded of words of a hymn that I love:

"The pathway of the living is our ever present care,

Let us do our best to smooth it and to make it bright and fair;

Let us travel it with kindness and be careful as we tread;
Let us give unto the living what we'd offer to the dead.

"The pathway of the living all our strength and courage needs:

There we ought to shower favors, there we ought to sow our deeds.

There our smiles should be the brightest and our kindest words be said,

For the angels have the keeping of the pathway of the dead."

Now if I am mistaken in my views I hope some one may not be afraid to show the mistakes.

A certain sister in the church was shown in a dream several years ago that a goodly number of the sisters were gathered together in some kind of work. They were anxious and zealous, but their light was very dim. They hardly realized what they were at work at. Finally light was turned on, and she saw that they had been making numerous collection boxes. Then the laborers began to gather home, tired and worn with hard labor. As each one came a collection box was held out towards her by one and another till such a look of discouragement and despair began to be depicted on their countenances, they seemed ready to give up in despair, because that no matter how hard they worked there was a collection box ready for every cent they could earn. And the sisters began to think, Are we doing just what God would have us do, or is our zeal greater than our knowledge?

And when we come to think of all the bazaars, auction sales, amusements and unnecessary expenditures we are called upon to uphold by our time, talents, and means, we are led to wonder if the Lord really does require it. Truly, here we see as through a glass darkly. I think everyone has meant to do that which is right; so do I in writing this letter.

May God bless his work everywhere.

MRS. EMMA L. ANDERSON.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, May 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: Words can express but a dim portrayal of the splendor of the effect and of the interest exhibited at our "Mother's Day" celebration, held here on May 12, wherein the highest tribute and honor was conferred upon mothers, and fitting descriptive papers were read and speeches made, defining and outlining the joys, cares and responsibilities resultant therefrom.

Beautiful flowers, presented by the Woman's Auxiliary, together with the Stars and Stripes, adorned the room for the occasion. On the platform sat little Miss Dorothy Potts, the picture of innocence, representing ideal childhood; Sister Ethel Jack, representing ideal girlhood, with its joys, grace, and virtue; Sister L. Christy, representing ideal wifehood, in all its strength; and "Grandma" Nichols, representing motherhood, with its glorious mission. This setting, consisting of the most important classes of human life, presented a most beautiful spectacle to look upon.

A duet, "Praying mother," by Brother and Sister Christy, opened the program. During the rendition, the words of a preacher came to me, that many a boy is saved from the wrath of God by the earnest prayers of a devoted old mother. Sister Ethel Jack's paper followed, portraying the period of girlhood, when care, anxiety and worry are banished. Sister Christy's speech on "Ideal wifehood," should be an inspiration to all present, who had been summoned to this high calling, to build for themselves an ideal, just as beautiful as the one she so vividly pictured. She emphasized the magnitude of the responsibility; the necessity for earnest study, watchfulness and prayer; the true meaning of the word helpmate; the necessity for constant activity, working with the thought ever in mind of being a blessing, not only to the loved ones of her own household, but to all humanity. The following lines, written in the early hours of the morning, might well be an incentive to all who have accepted the title of wife, to study the Book of books, so as to more fully appreciate the opportunities afforded:

A beautiful picture of wifehood true,
I find in the Bible for all to view;
And, to be a pattern throughout the life,
Of those who have taken the name of wife.

It is needful, too, ere you close the book,
That you give it more than a passing look;
For the purpose is shown, likewise the plan,
Of how she may honor and help the man.

And the Master artist, who dwells on high,
Designed this our study, to labor by;
Some day our work will be placed by its side,
Shall it be judged worthless or found to abide?

L. LENOR CHRISTY.

Sister Nichols, invariably called "Grandma," and dearly loved by the whole branch, presented the noble mission of ideal motherhood, with all its joys and sorrows, and the gravity of its responsibilities. Then Brother Christy, our pastor, launched forth on the glory of womanhood. He paid a wonderful tribute to his wife, by frankly acknowledging that all credit for his life's work was due to his wife, on account of her loving devotion, self-sacrifice and encouragement in crucial times. The following quotation by William Jennings Bryan, very aptly concluded his remarks: "For years the child is the object of the mother's constant care. She invests in it her nervous force and energy, and endows it with the wealth of her love; and she dreams of what the child is to be and do, and if a mother's dream only came true, what a different world this would be! The most pathetic struggle that this earth knows is the struggle of the mother to save a child, when wicked men lay snares for it and set traps for it, and as long as you give the ballot to the man who conspires to rob a home of a child, it isn't fair, and you know it isn't fair, to tie a mother's hand while she is fighting to protect the home and her children."

A solo, "'Tis Mother's Day," rendered beautifully by Sister Dorothy, in all her childlike simplicity and innocence, after which every mother in the congregation stepped forward to receive a white flower, as an emblem of her exalted position, ended the service, which is probably indelibly impressed on the minds of all present.

MABEL HARRIS, Branch Correspondent.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, May 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have resumed work for the conference year with renewed assurance and determination, and are especially glad to have our pastor, Brother David J. Williams, returned to us, for his services have done much to strengthen and enliven the branch.

We have had with us for some time past, Brother Truman Ziegenhorn, from Joy, Illinois, whose services in the office of deacon have augmented those of the local priesthood.

Brother D. T. Williams, at present pastor in Des Moines, spent a day or two with us recently, speaking at the church Wednesday evening, May 16. Brother Williams always finds a welcome in Burlington, and our chief regret was that he could not be with us longer.

Elder Nephi Snively of Lamoni, has taken up his abode in Burlington, having been married May 13, to Sister M. S. Wright of this place.

Both Sunday school and Religio are active and progressing. The Sunday school has reached a point where, for want of room, it can scarcely make extended effort toward increase for the present, and the Religio, with good attendance and interest, is proving a vital factor in developing the young people and adding to the life of the branch.

place in Palestine. He says the Jews were compelled to leave Jaffa, but will be allowed to return, and that the colonies in Palestine will not be evacuated.

Graceland College

In last week's HERALD will be found the first of a series of advertisements for Graceland College. We would call the especial attention of those desiring further educational work to these advertisements. Graceland is well prepared to meet our needs and in going there we help her and the church as well as ourselves. Her students are accepted anywhere, and make good.

The Christmas Offering Roll of Honor

Last week a new department was opened up which we will run occasionally this year, in the Christmas offering roll of honor. This will be published from time to time to show which schools are doubling or trebling the last year's offering and which ones are first in reaching the one dollar or two dollars per member offering. We are in it to make good and we are pleased to notice that so many are concerned, not alone with being first but in winning the race and helping the church by united effort.

Returns From the East

The Jackson Examiner tells us that President F. M. Smith returned from his trip to Washington, District of Columbia on Monday, June 11. According to their version, "he is still wondering how the officials at Washington get anything done. At least their most definite knowledge imparted to an inquiry is extremely vague, and if they know as little as they claim not to know the mystery of the Government deepens." In addition to his visit at the Capital, he ran over to Boston and also stopped off at Philadelphia.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Pastoral

To the Officers and Members of the European Mission; Greeting: Owing to the terrible conditions which prevail throughout the world, resulting from the war, it was not thought advisable by the joint council—Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric—to appoint missionaries to foreign countries, other than those residing therein.

We regret that these conditions prevail abroad, but have been lead to expect times of trial and perplexity, with destruction of nations, because of the prophetic word of the Lord. All that can be done this year will be to maintain our branch and district organizations if we can, under the existing circumstances, and improve every opportunity to aid the injured, comfort the mourning, and point out to them the path which will lead to eternal life and peace.

The joint council has made all appointments this year, either local or missionary, and we trust that the brethren will seek to assist each other, and labor together in the spirit of love, for the good of the cause.

SCANDINAVIA

No missionaries will be sent from America this year.

GERMANY AND PALESTINE

No missionaries appointed.

BRITISH ISLES

We have decided to largely reduce the number of self-sustaining appointees, and trust that those who have so labored in the past, will continue to do all they can to advance the Master's work.

BISHOPRIC

We are thankful that Bishop May has reached England in safety, ready to actively engage in the duties of his calling. So far as possible we desire that the members of the bishopric be free from local presiding responsibility. We, therefore, recommend that Brother W. R. Armstrong, counselor to the Bishop, resign branch official work, that he may labor in any part of the country, in harmony with his calling. For the present, we advise that Elder J. W. Taylor be sustained as president of the Manchester District.

APPOINTMENTS

Bishop Roderick May, British Isles.
Counselor W. R. Armstrong, British Isles.

DISTRICT PRESIDENTS

Elder John W. Taylor, Manchester District.
Elder John Holmes, Sheffield District.
Elder John Schofield, Birmingham District.
Elder John Judd, London District.
Elder Thomas Jones, Western Wales District.

MISSIONARY APPOINTMENTS

In the absence of members of the twelve, Elder W. H. Greenwood will act as associate minister in charge, directing missionary work. The following brethren have been appointed as missionaries:

Elder W. H. Greenwood, Manchester District.
Elder James Schofield, Manchester District.
Albert Hall, Manchester District.
Abel Hall (Leeds and Bradford objective), Manchester District.
Elder W. H. Chandler, Western England.
Elder J. E. Meredith, Birmingham District.

PATRIARCHS

Owing to the increased age and physical infirmity, Brother Henry Greenwood has been superannuated. The church appreciates the many years of faithful, consecrated labor on the part of this brother, and trusts that his declining years, may be made happy by the consciousness of work well done. Brother Baty, is appointed as patriarch, and we trust he will soon be provided with all things necessary to the successful prosecution of his calling.

REPORTING

President F. M. Smith, has already published instructions to church appointees, requesting a letter each week, setting forth the condition of the work in their field of labor. The ministers in charge will expect to hear from the missionary appointees at least once each month.

MISSION CONFERENCE

By consultation with various officers before leaving England, it was thought advisable to hold the mission conference in Birmingham. We therefore so recommend, and advise that so far as possible it be an educational conference.

We will endeavor to render assistance wherever needed, and trust that God will bless each one under the difficult circumstances confronting.

Your collaborators,
U. W. GREENE.
PETER ANDERSON.

To Whom It May Concern: Brethren Greene and Anderson have been asked by the Presidency to direct the affairs of the European Mission, and the above pastoral has our approval.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
For the Presidency.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Toronto, Chatham, London, and Owen Sound Districts; Greeting: Request of Bishop R. C. Evans to be relieved as bishop of the oversight of the territory comprised within the boundaries of the Chatham, London, and Owen Sound Districts has been granted by the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. He will, however, continue to act as Bishop of the Toronto District. The following-named brethren, heretofore acting as agents of and reporting to Bishop Evans, have been selected by the Presiding Bishop, viz: J. H. Tyrrell as agent for Chatham District; J. L. Burger as agent for London District; James L. Morrison as agent for Owen Sound District. From June 1, 1917, these brethren will report direct to the Presiding Bishop. These brethren have been faithful and zealous in the performance of duty, and are commended to, and should receive the support of all the Saints in their respective fields of labor.

Respectfully,
F. M. SMITH, President.
B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

THE REASONS WHY You Should Go to Graceland

II—TEACHER TRAINING

For those who desire to fit themselves for work as teachers, Graceland offers a most excellent opportunity.

Because of the high standard of the work done in the teacher training department, Graceland has been fully accredited by the State Board of Educational examiners. This means that State teacher's certificates are granted to those completing the course. These certificates may be converted into life certificates by fulfilling the necessary requirements for renewal.

In the above, Graceland is on a par with any other teacher training school in the State. It will pay you to investigate further. For more complete information and catalogue address

THE PRESIDENT, GRACELAND COLLEGE, LAMONI, IOWA

The above is the second of a series of reasons why you should attend Graceland College. They include the questions of: Credit, Teacher Training, Junior College, Spiritual Environment, Low Expense, Special Departments, Equipment, Literary Work and Faculty.

MCKEOWN.—Annie Jane McKeokn, was born May 1, 1860, at Saint Antonos, Quebec, Canada. Baptized February 12, 1886, by Samuel Brown, at Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. She had weak health for about 25 years, but despite such she sought to maintain a cheerful faith in the gospel and remain firm in faith and hope. Died May 26, 1917, at Millet, Alberta, after a severe attack of peritonitis. Five sisters and two brothers survive her. Funeral service by William Osler, interment at Millet cemetery.

HALL.—William David Hall was born in Lee County, Iowa, December 27, 1846, and has made Iowa his home, living at Shenandoah and Creston before removing to Des Moines. It is claimed that he was the first white child born in Iowa after it became a State. Baptized in 1851 by John H. Lake, and continued his membership to the end, but becoming more interested in church activities the last few years of his life. Died at his home in Des Moines, at the age of 70 years, 4 months, and 5 days, after a brief illness of but a few hours. Leaves devoted wife and 7 children, 3 children having preceded him in death. Funeral services at Des Moines and Shenandoah, sermon at both places by J. F. Mintun who accompanied the family to his last resting place at Shenandoah by request.

RODGERS.—Eliza L. West, daughter of Francis R. and Sarah A. West, was born at East Portage, Jackson County, Michigan. Married Leamon Rodgers April 2, 1883. Baptized by E. K. Evans at Grand Rapids, Michigan, September 29, 1898, and remained faithful. Died May 30, 1917. Leaves to mourn, her husband, 1 brother and 2 sisters and other relatives. Funeral sermon by Samuel Stroh at the home, at Lowell, Michigan.

BAYSORFER.—Miss Anna Amelia Peterson was born December 13, 1887, at Omaha, Nebraska. Married Gus Baysdorfer in 1904, and to this union was born one son. Died May 8, 1917, in South Omaha. Leaves to mourn, her husband, 1 eleven-year-old son, father, mother, 1 sister, 1 brother, and other relatives and a host of friends. Funeral sermon by Hubert Case, who had baptized her only two months previous to her death. The singing was by Sister Kelley, Brother and Sister H. A. Scott and Brother Hill. The funeral was so largely attended that the home could not nearly shelter the crowd.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

THE PRO AND CON OF PSYCHOLOGY

Recently the question was asked in regard to psychology, "Does it explain spiritual gifts?" We are informed the answer has been made, "Yes, perfectly." This we can accept only in a qualified manner. We question if any course now offered in high school or college attempts to discuss this question or directly throws light upon it. It is true that men who have made a study of psychology, the laws of human thought, how the mind works, and also those who have made a study of philosophy, approaching the problem in a slightly different way have attempted to explain inspiration and the spiritual gifts.

One very common explanation is along the line of the use of mescal by the Indians. A variant of this is the use of alcoholic beverages by the western Europeans and Americans. Thus, some have strongly urged that the genius of some poets, their inspiration, rested on their getting slightly drunk.

Others have urged that in the ghost dance, and certain folk dances, which are continued for hours and sometimes for a day or more, the savage participants work themselves up to a point where they can see red devils, or anything else. Still others would explain all these phases, including inspiration, as metabolism of the neuron. A variant of this may be found in the mechanistic theory of existence. And others explain it from the viewpoint of behaviorism.

Still others emphasize the distinction between vivid imagination and imageless thought. Children have more imagination than adults, Oriental races than have the Occidentals, so they present Jesus as an extremely imaginal type. Those who have too many images and who cannot distinguish them from the world around them are put in an asylum. Others not quite so badly affected become poets and so write by inspiration. Still others become seers, see visions and dream dreams and found religious organizations. So we find a variant of this, in those who consider all religious experience a form of epilepsy.

Still others, while accepting religion as based upon the imaginal type of thought, still deny emphatically its correlation in any way with epilepsy, psychosis and neurosis, and consider that that child who has had no religious training has received an incomplete education. And that man and woman who has not gone through a great conversion has not risen to the heights that he or she should rise to and will not be capable of doing the work he or she should do. Great writers, great workers, have come in contact with God (or the volk soul). And through and by this means they have risen to a plane of greater effectiveness and greater service. It were better for a child to belong then to any church on earth than to no church. Conviction and deep conversion go to the making of a rounded character and such men as Jesus Christ really came in contact with a reality above us and greater than the individual, whether we prefer to call it volk soul or God. These are a few of the variant theories of psychologists.

Again we are asked, "Is not psychology really mechanical and connected with the evolutionary theory that man is descended from a monkey?" Certainly not. Psychology is a study of the human mind and human soul. Of course the man who approaches it from the standpoint of evolution will read evolution into it as part of his apperceptive mass. What we have thought, what we are thinking and doing, affects our attitude towards any new theory or fact. A man who approaches it from a biblical standpoint would not draw such a conclusion. So we find the same phenomena explained in a variety of ways according to preceding ideas or apperception.

For a thorough knowledge of psychology, one should have a knowledge of physics, chemistry, biology, (and possibly also zoology and botany). A knowledge of religion and of mathematics will not hurt.

It is true, that much of scientific thought of to-day is related in some way to some aspect of the evolutionary theory. But we should remember that this is a theory, not a dogma, some high school students to the contrary notwithstanding. From a scientific viewpoint it is used merely as a basis for further investigation not as a finished and completed truth. If we keep this point in mind we may still follow the observations without necessarily accepting all of the deductions.

It is unfortunate that too much is sometimes claimed for some particular department of science. Yet this is doubtless fully matched and equaled by the almost blind objection to a scientific aspect. Psychology is to many almost a fetish, to others a bugaboo. The very name excites an extreme and ridiculous complex or reaction against it. Why can we not frankly recognize that science is merely a human approximation to truth? It is the result of human investigation but a theory is by no means accepted by intelligent people as a demonstrated truth or dogma nor is it to be lightly set aside as evil or folly. For it does represent an approximation to truth, and as such is not to be shunned.

Psychology, like every other science, is largely what we make it. The affirmative argument rests on the fact that it is better in child training to have studied the nature of the child than to go at it in a hit-and-miss fashion. Mothers have tried the hit-and-miss in a physical way for years with the result of twenty-five per cent loss of infants, and sometimes more. Yet the attitudes of some students and their theories for handling the intellectual development of the child have been just as foolish.

In correcting the evil there have arisen fads of feeding. There have also arisen fads of teaching. But neither mean that a real knowledge of our problem will not prove beneficial. Is it better when dealing with the despondent, the nervous person or those who have become insane to ignore their condition, or to give studious attention to their care and cure? Would it be better to put a man in any position, hit or miss, or try to ascertain that work for which he is fitted?

Psychology reaches into these and other realms of thought and of practical experience. In its practical aspect it is concerned with salesmanship. It may enter into any and every relationship of life. For in what way should an understanding of the human mechanism prevent the reception of the gifts of the Spirit?

It is indeed a pity that some students appear to place the whole stress upon intellectual training or upon some aspect of science. But it is equally unfortunate that some react so strongly against all knowledge, especially if the word science is used, and then attempt to discuss scientific problems without an adequate appreciation of what they really mean.

We recognize in the religious plane, that we should know what we are talking about. We ought not to attack another's position without first learning what that position is. Why should we be any more ready to attack in regard to science? We have articles here on file that if we attached the author's name thereto and published, as they are, it would seem to be one of the unkindest acts we could possibly perform.

There is a boast of a lack of schooling, in articles having serious errors of grammar and spelling on every page, and an attempt is made to answer some involved theories of science in a way that indicates almost abysmal ignorance of what the writer is talking about.

It is almost as ridiculous to discuss scientific theories of twenty-five and fifty years ago as if they were the prevalent theories of to-day, as it would be to preach against the inquisition of the Middle Ages. Do we then violate or lose the directions of the Spirit by first informing ourselves of the accuracy of our concepts?

The church needs men prepared to carry on energetically its work. It needs men who can go into the highways and byways and present the light of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. It needs men to care for these newborn babes. It needs men to prepare the meat for those older in years. It needs men for constructive work, for the carrying on of its institutional work, and it needs men to direct, uphold and prepare Zion. It is not criticism that a man cannot do all of this. It is not to be expected. But it is vital that the eye should not say to the foot, "I have no need of thee," or vice versa; and it is essential that, having the body of Christ in the church, with its varied members that it should be inspired by the Spirit of God and so be a living entity.

S. A. B.

TITHING, SURPLUS AND CONSECRATION

Frequently we hear reference made to the early years of the Reorganized church upon this question. We know in 1867 the Quorum of Twelve passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That we regard the law of consecration and tithing as a means of fully establishing equality among the Saints in the building up of Zion, as the kingdom of God, to which we look for the coming of the Lord Jesus to reign a thousand years upon the earth. But the scattered condition of the church precludes the carrying out of the law in its fullness. Yet the present necessities of the work do require a portion of tithing and consecrations, and we believe that the tithing now required is one tenth of the properties of all who possess a surplus; afterward, one tenth of their annual interest annually. Others not having more than supplies their necessities, are expected to bring their freewill offerings, as the widow brought her mite.—Church History, vol. 3, p. 374.

Prior to that the presidency together with some of the general officers of the church on April 16, 1866, adopted the following:

Resolved, That to carry out the principles of the law of tithing, it is the opinion of this council, that the law should be carried out in the scattered condition of the church, and that as far as we can approximate to that law, is upon the principle of freewill offering, for the practical purposes indicated by that law. . . .

Resolved, That we do most earnestly entreat all the Saints to remember, that all their surplus property is the Lord's, and that it is needed for the support of the poor of his people, and the families of the elders whose time is engaged in the ministry.

This was reaffirmed by the conference of April 6, 1875. There has since that day been much discussion among individuals as to the real meaning of the law. Usually some one passage of the Doctrine and Covenants is taken and emphasized at the expense of the rest. It would seem, however, to be fundamental, that if the bishop is requested to take into consideration all that is written on the subject (Doctrine and Covenants 126:10) certainly a like responsibility rests upon all those who attempt to discuss that law. One passage is not conclusive.

The second point to be observed is that it is the duty of the bishopric to interpret the law and this interpretation should be upheld, unless the liberties of the people are brought in jeopardy. In the consideration of the law there are several points of interest. It may be questioned if the word surplus is always used with exactly the same significance.

In 1867, Church History volume 3, page 473, tithing is referred to as a freewill offering. Certainly it is such, in that, like baptism, it is the result of the free will of the individual. There is no compulsion. Of course, if one knows that the gospel is true and does not accept and is not baptized, the consequences will be upon his own head. So when anyone knows that the law of tithing is true, he is at liberty to obey or not to obey. If he does not do so, the consequences will be upon his own head when he stands before the great white throne. If he desires to obey the law the path is made plain so that he may have the assistance of the bishopric and of the Presiding Bishop, and if need be, of the high council.

Again, some will urge that they do not think the law is being carried out and the Order of Enoch established as it should be when Zion is fully redeemed. It is quite possible that many are of this opinion. It is quite possible, and even probable, that the Presiding Bishopric hold a like opinion. It will be noted that in 1867 the Twelve distinctly declared that they are not carrying out the law in full as they did not believe the time and conditions to be ripe for so doing. They do believe that the principles of the law still apply and should be carried out as near as circumstances permit.

We individually may at times differ in regard to their discretion, how much of the law should now be put into effect? But certainly it is clear that the decision of this important point is placed with them, the Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric, and it certainly should be clear that they have acted conservatively, as they believed the best interest of the church and its membership required.

In the meantime it behooves us to study carefully the law in all of its parts so that we may be prepared to obey when the time does come for Zion to be more fully established. It is well that we should think over and discuss the law but it is not well that that discussion should be carried so far as to involve a reflection upon the officers whose duty it is to interpret and carry out the law, and thus directly or indirectly hinder in its administration.

We are in a condition of progress, how rapid that progress may be depends upon each one of us and upon the church as a whole as made up of its individual members. Our heavenly Father has been merciful to us, so should we be merciful with one another. He has not demanded an advance beyond our means of compliance, but at the same time he has laid down his law as it will be when fully conserved. We are working towards an end. Study should test and prove all things, that we may each of us be ready when the time comes for further advance. But our study should be constructive, not destructive. It should assist in the carrying out of the law as at present interpreted, that we may the sooner be ready to move on to a more nearly complete compliance.

S. A. B.

NAMES OR SCHOOLS?

In this issue there will be found a letter signed Paul Parker. This is a nom de plume assumed by one of our general missionaries. It will be noted that he raises a new question in regard to the cost of publishing the blue Stepping Stones, and that is, first, that the money goes to people employed by the publishing house; second, that our children are entitled to have their names set forth in blue and white.

The latter objection appeals to us in many ways. It is not a saving if we go so far that our children lose interest. It may even pay in a business way to print their names at a loss to the end that they may be interested in assisting with the work and be better able to do so. But we raise the question, Will the children not voluntarily give up this publication of personal names for the sake of helping the church and cannot this end be achieved by the publication of the name of their Sunday school and so gain the social idea of putting their school in the front rank of efficiency? Cannot the personal element be met by lists published in the local schools, rolls of honor given public display? There are questions on which there may be a diversity of opinion.

So far as the first objection is concerned it is a different proposition. The money is in the bishop's hands. A possible return, or part, for tithing when all of it is taken from the Christmas offering to pay this added expense, is no gain. It is not paid by the publishing house, but by the Presiding Bishop and the request for economy is his. Part of the expense, it is true is represented by wages. Part is simply represented by harder work and longer hours. But a large part is represented by paper, ink and postage, which does not help any one of us but rather helps to make the price of paper and ink higher.

Again, we have here the fallacy that people should spend money simply to keep some one else working, hence it has been argued that dinners costing a hundred dollars a plate should be given by the rich and they deserve credit for doing so, because somebody benefits thereby in wages or profit. It may be true that to a certain extent this argument is justified so far as normal business is concerned. But waste is not justified. From a democratic, a social viewpoint, work for which there is no equal return of product is waste, and these people could and should be employed at other productive work. In other words, by such an arrangement Zion will be less poor, for there is plenty of work.

The further criticism is quite justified. It is one of our great problems, what to do about the very prolix letters that are sometimes sent in without a corresponding amount of substance. The assistant editor recently called our attention to how much would be saved by cutting out the line or two of "yours in bonds," etc., at the end of a personal letter in the HERALD. On one letter the amount is small, for many in a year it counts up.

The point is well taken, that we want general news and that which is of interest to the church at large. But we also like a few personal items, especially on behalf of our missionaries. The whole question resolves itself into this, Is the publication of my name in the blue Stepping Stones a need or an unnecessary want?

A STOREHOUSE ESTABLISHED

In accordance with the provisions in the law of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 42:14; 58:7; 70:2, 3; 77:1; 81:4; 87:6; 122:6) the Presiding Bishopric have begun the establishment of storehouses. No doubt detailed explanations of the plans for working out the various features of this new department will be given later but we are sure the Saints everywhere will be vitally interested in the news that a start has been made.

A coal and feed business in Independence has been purchased and for the present will constitute the location of the storehouse in that place. Another building and premises once occupied as a planing mill will be fitted out for use later it being easily accessible for switching cars from the railway.

Brethren Bert Peterson and Lester Haas will conduct the business on a stewardship basis and for the present will sell fuel, feed, flour, and building material and later include other lines.

In Lamoni a storehouse on similar lines will soon be established, and already the stake bishopric is getting ready for the running of a flour mill which will be operated. Other necessary lines will be added later. As has been previously announced in these columns the manager of this is working on a stewardship basis.

With stewardships likely to be assigned to some of the employees of the Herald Publishing House, already to some of the college faculty and further extended as the people are ready for it, the dawning of a brighter day appears.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Reunions Being Postponed

In this issue, under the reunion notices and also under the conference minutes heading, are announcements that reunions are being called off. We are sorry to note this for the reunions of the church are a great source of spiritual strength, but it is a condition over which we have no control, and we must make the best of it.

Liberty Loan Oversubscribed

The Government asked for two billion dollars as a three and half per cent loan. In response to this call, known as the Liberty Loan, a total of $1,035,226,850 were subscribed, 93 per cent of the subscriptions being for small amounts. Those asking for $10,000 or less will receive the full amount of bonds, while those above that amount will be prorated. Judging from the Lamoni list, the Saints did their full "bit" in common with other patriotic citizens.

Food Saving Day

A letter from Herbert Hoover in regard to food conservation states that he is requesting the pastors all over the country to speak on Food Conservation on Sunday, July 1, the day to be known as Food Saving Day so that it may be made the purpose and motto of every household in America to save waste

A GREAT MANUFACTURING PLANT

BONDS, STOCKS AND DIVIDENDS

Can I at this particular time select a more interesting subject? Come, let me draw a large pen-picture of something really big—the greatest of all manufacturing establishments. It is not a dream. It is an actual, substantial fact.

The architect who stands at the head of the highest order drafted the framework of the great building in sections. The section on the one side consists of "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers." On another side stands a section composed of faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. These with various other sections are all roofed over with a framework of ethical glory; made water tight and storm proof with angelic ministrations.

The great skylights, the dormer windows, in fact the entire lighting arrangement for both day and night is an intricate but perfect system of direct revelation from God.

The whole structure is strongly dovetailed into the wonderful foundation of eternal truth.

Each and every worker in this great celestial establishment holds individual shares of capital stock, and are entitled to liberal dividends consisting of the finished product, as much more valuable than gold and diamonds, as diamonds and gold are more precious than blue mud.

Oh, come back and let me tell you about it. Don't get impatient and turn away, saying it's all a wild, ethereal dream. Come back and see the wheels go around, and let me tell you about the product. That is the most interesting part of the story, and the beauty of it all is that it's true. Not a bit of fiction about this product. Not an atom of exaggeration relative to its value. Come back and hear the case. You shall be your own witnesses, you shall be the court, the judge, and the jurors. Take the witness stand now and you shall prove the value of this product for yourselves.

Here are some passages of scripture. I present them to you as separate pieces of polished machinery. Watch now and see for yourselves how nicely they fit together, and that they were designed specially for this great plant.

"I come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly."

"In him was life and the life was the light of the world."

"Partake of the waters of life freely."

He that drinketh of this water shall never thirst. You see now that the product of this celestial machinery is more abundant life.

My first question to these witnesses is, Would you take all the diamonds and all the gold in exchange for the little flickering, uncertain life you now have in your bodies? Would you? Certainly not. Well, that proves my contention, that the finished product is more valuable than all the minerals, and all the metals of earth.

You ask what this more abundant life is? If you will take the time to consider it closely you will see that it is something that is to apply in a marked degree in this life. It is to be enjoyed here and now, in this probationary period, a lamp, a light to our feet in this dark world. It is to give us a knowledge of God, is to broaden and perfect our love for our fellows. The light of life growing brighter and brighter as the days pass along, an earnest or evidence of our inheritance in the eternal world.

Of what does this more abundant life consist? Can it be analyzed? In what respect does it differ from the dimly flickering life that now quickens our mortal bodies?

Look at this busy, buzzing little wheel here in the corner. Can you interpret the song it sings? Here it is. God says, "I have created him [man] for my glory." And the language of that great fan over yonder in the center is: "The glory of God is intelligence." The intelligence of man is the glory of God. There we have it. And during the process of this machinery the more abundant life is so interwoven with intelligence that in the finished product the two are one.

As stockholders and workers in this beautiful celestial plant, we are each one entitled to a liberal share of the finished product. Life so abundant, so polished, and so glistening with intelligence, life so filled with the knowledge of God, knowledge of things as they are, as they have been, and as they are to be, that neither wicked men nor devils, neither death, hell, nor the grave, nor all combined, will be able to hold us back from the first resurrection.

Let us examine some of the raw material that enters into the warp and woof of this finished product, and learn a little about this wonderful industry, the business of the workers, etc.

Listen to the heavy bass voice of that great transmission gear in front. "Study all good books." "Study all good books." What a marvelous scope. It covers all space. It sweeps the star-studded heavens. It plunges to the geological centers of earth, dissolves, analyzes, compounds, reaches unnumbered branches of nature, art, science, philosophy, music, history, politics, governments, laws, cohesion, attraction, electricity, and more wonderful still, the science of mind, memory, instinct, thought, perception or inspiration, called psychology.

The vibrations of the busy buzz, the purr and hum of the wheels as they go around in our center stakes reach clear up here into the backwoods of the Dominion. It speaks clearly of a lively appreciation of abundant life above the dead line.

The Spirit whispers of more abundant dividends in the form of the finished product for the workers. Nothing in raw material can be found around the plant more precious than the auxiliary work. "As ye do it unto the least of these."

PART TWO

On retiring last night the last words of my prayer were:

Backward, turn backward,
O time in thy flight,
And make me a child again,
Just for to-night.

It is strange, what fanciful figures of truth a few moments of forgetfulness may create. But here we are again in all of the rollicking joviality of boisterous, buoyant childhood, mingling freely with school children who are well mothered, well muffled, well-clad in flannels, having a softer, fluffier appearance than the homespun of yesterday.

The familiar bell again calls us to the old, scarred desks. And again my mind refuses to be applied to books, but ramifies into a thousand mischievous channels. Again we race, wrestle, jump, and vie in various ways. Armed with stout clubs in one hand, a willow bush in the other we run the gauntlet, savagely jarring the old hollow stump as we pass, each receiving his quota of stings from the vicious army of yellow jackets from within.

I chase an old pheasant with crippled wing and broken leg as she flutters along just out of my reach until a safe distance from her new hatch, when she chuckles: "Block-headed blunderbus," and is gone.

I steal up to a group of girls and play a rude prank, when I am pinioned, my face washed with snow, a liberal quantity crammed into my neck, and the waistband of my pants, and I am left with the only satisfaction of having stolen a few kisses during the squabble.

We jump from a high bridge burrowing in a snow drift, and squirm out as best we may. Coast the hill, jumping the stone wall from a drift, and light in the middle of the road with broken sleds and bruised bones.

We have our chums, our sweethearts, sleigh rides, moonlight strolls, confidential chats, etc. But it is all too brief.

Forgetfulness tides apace, and I am in another world. Children rush out of ramshackle houses to meet me, while I stand aghast. Then I mingle with them thoughtfully. Their bluish complexion, emaciated bodies, language, tear-stained faces, dirty hands, cheap, shoddy, ragged, cotton garments, bare feet, wan, wistful expression, showed them to be undernourished, undereducated, children of the underworld. Bright and witty, but not one chance in a thousand for them to ever climb above the dead line.

Their pensive, melancholy, longing look at me as I was wafted away riveted to my soul the fact that in the broadest sense we are our brother's keeper.

Turning to our last census report I find that we have in round numbers two million children working for the means of life, who should be in school. An actual increase in both numbers and per cent over previous report.

In several States over half of the boys from ten to fifteen years of age, on account of economic pressure, are robbed of schooling.

Mr. Draper, State Commissioner of Education in New York, showed that there were in 1907-8 twice as many elementary pupils registered in cities and villages at the age of seven and eight as there were at the age of twelve and thirteen. One half compelled to leave school before they were thirteen. That means that less than half of the children ever enter high school, and only one in three who do, finish the third year.

The average daily attendance of the schools of our country are only a trifle over half the school population. We have over five millions over the age of ten without a knowledge of letters. Over three millions of them native born.

The state board of charities of New York on examining over ten thousand school children found eighty-two per cent under fed, slowly starving, hundreds of them having no breakfast at all. In explaining the cause of these frightful conditions, our Industrial Relations Report of August 23, showed that we have given sixty per cent of our Nation's wealth into the hands of two per cent of the population.

Anyone who will study these matters may easily see that one half of this two per cent by their absolute control of our government, practically manipulate and control the entire wealth of the same.

The hearts of the entire church reach out in sympathy toward these millions of innocent, suffering children. Oh, how we wish to administer relief! We would not like the priest and Levite "pass by on the other side." Oh, how we wish to act the part of the good Samaritan. We visit the sick, minister relief to the widows, feed the tramps, but when we close our eyes and see millions of helpless innocents starving for more abundant life above the deadline, we yearn to act upon a larger scale, make our influence felt on a broader plane.

Is our great celestial plant turning out much of a surplus? Is it paying dividends to all the stockholders? Is it running as smoothly as we might wish? Or is there a hitch in the machinery here and there that perplexes the very souls of the managers? Let us look carefully through the warehouses, maybe some bit of machinery has been left out.

I have found something over in the house, Doctrine and Covenants, marked number ninety-five, part two. There is too much of it to bring in here to-night, but I will describe it as best I can, and I want each one of you to go over there at your first opportunity and examine it closely and see how it compares with my description. It has six very prominent points and maybe other small ones. The first point I notice is that we must uphold and befriend the constitution wherein it maintains the principle of freedom, the rights and privileges belonging to all mankind.

The second point is that we must take time to study political matters "diligently."

Point number three, we must go to the polls and vote for good men, wise men, honorable men, who will defend and maintain the rights and privileges of all mankind.

Fourth, if we do this and do it diligently, God will justify us, so that the machinery will run smoothly and do good work.

Fifth. If we go farther than this, if we uphold the two per cent of the people who are grinding the face of the poor and starving our babies, God will not justify us, for "whatsoever is more than this cometh of evil."

Sixth. If for any cause we fail to inform ourselves diligently, and cast our votes for wise men who know how to maintain the rights of the masses, and how to curb the greed of the few, God will not justify us, for whatsoever is less than this cometh of evil. And the machinery will keep on slipping cogs.

Ah, here we have found the thing we are praying for, an opportunity to befriend the babies: an opportunity big with results. An opportunity that God commands us to make use of, and to do it with diligence.

THE MINISTERS OF CHRIST AND OTHER CHURCHES

Behold, and lo, I have much people in this place, in the regions round about, and an effectual door shall be opened in the regions round about in this eastern land.—Doctrine and Covenants 97: 1.

Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were in Perrysburgh, New York, in October, 1833, when this revelation was given. They were preaching the gospel and trying to show the inhabitants of that country the plan of salvation in its fullness. They were meeting with some success.

That they might understand the situation better the Lord spoke to them and encouraged them by saying that "an effectual door shall be opened in this place." The reason that was assigned for this "effectual door" being opened, was "I [the Lord] have much people in this place." This is quite similar to Paul's experience as recorded in Acts 18: 9-11.

These men and women that the Lord calls his "people" were not members of the church that God had so recently directed to be organized by Joseph and his associates, yet they were the Lord's "people." They belonged to the different sectarian churches in that community, and perhaps some did not belong to any church organization, but all these belonged to "the church of the Lamb of God" (1 Nephi 3: 22) in its unorganized form. These men and women that the Lord calls his "people," were making an effort to live according to the understanding they had of God. They were trying to live righteously according to the knowledge they had of righteousness. This enabled them to be recognized by the Lord, and they were his people, and he had a special interest in them and watchcare over them.

They were his during life and they will be his after death. They are the class that the Lord told Joseph in a vision would be saved in the celestial kingdom, although they had never been baptized for the remission of sins. This vision is as follows:

The heavens were opened upon us, and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God, and the glory thereof, whether in the body or out I cannot tell. I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son. I saw the beautiful streets of that kingdom, which had the appearance of being paved with gold. I saw Fathers Adam and Abraham, and my father and mother, my brother Alvin, that has long since slept, and marveled how it was that he had obtained an inheritance in that kingdom, seeing that he had departed this life before the Lord had set his hand to gather Israel the second time, and had not been baptized for the remission of sins.

Thus came the voice of the Lord unto me, saying:

"All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desire of their hearts."

Before throwing off a bad habit begin a good one.

And I also beheld that all children who die before they arrive at the years of accountability, are saved in the celestial kingdom of heaven.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 16.

These are the "sheep" that "hear the voice" of the "good shepherd," (John 10:1-27). "And I will give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." (Verse 28.) These are the true Israel, "and so all Israel shall be saved." (Romans 10:26.) Storms may howl, difficulties may arise, but "all mine Israel shall be saved." (Doctrine and Covenants 98:4.) They "are the humble followers of Christ," and are so recognized by the Almighty, although, "in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men." (2 Nephi 12:17.)

They are the "elect," and have become such by accepting and living according to the light they have received, and are the ones that will be gathered to Zion when the Lord causes "righteousness and truth to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth into a place which I shall prepare; a holy city . . . and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusaem."—Doctrine and Covenants 36:12.

They are "the good fish," (Matthew 13:47). They are now scattered "among the nations," both Christian and heathen. The wicked men and women in the Christian and heathen nations are the ones that compose "Babylon," and constitute "the church of the Devil." (1 Nephi 3:219-223.) This church exists also in an unorganized form.

The Lord's "people," that are now associating with those that constitute Babylon (Revelation 18:4) will be called upon by the servants of God to "Go ye out from among the nations, even Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon." (Doctrine and Covenants 188:4.) In this statement the Lord enables us to understand exactly what is meant by Babylon. It is "wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon." "Spiritual Babylon" and "the church of the Devil" are the same. The terms are used synonymously. They simply mean wickedness. The doctrine of "Babylon" or "the church of the Devil," is wickedness in any form. And those who do wickedly are members of "Babylon," or "the church of the Devil," and it makes no difference where their names are recorded or with what people or church organization they may associate. A wicked man is a child of the Devil and belongs to his church, though his name is on the church record. They become the children of the Devil (John 8:44, Acts 13:10) by willingly choosing evil, whether they have heard the gospel or not.

When we find a community where there are many wicked men, the Devil can say, "I have much people there." In a community where many men and women are living righteously as in Perrysburgh, New York, the Lord can say, "I have much people in this place." They become the Lord's people in this sense, by willingly choosing the good as they understand it. There is a time in the life of every man when he must choose, deciding his fate for eternity, even if he has never heard of the restored gospel.

These "humble followers of Christ" "that err" in doctrine as a result of wrong teaching, have decided to serve God by following the light of the spirit in them, according to John 1:9, Doctrine and Covenants 90:5. How should they be treated?

The ministers and members of the church in its organized form should be patient and kind with them. They should show by their talk and conduct that they have truly received additional light; that the revelations given to us have made known the fullness of the gospel and brought the church in its organized form into existence as it was in the days of Christ and the apostles, and it has also produced a better effect on our lives than a partial understanding of the religion of Christ could do.

To talk harshly to them or ridicule some things that they believe, even if they were wrong, is not doing to others as we would like to have others do to us. It is not manifesting the proper feeling for them and it will always have a bad effect.

The Lord frequently works with certain ones that are his (Doctrine and Covenants 34:2) and prepares them to come into his church and do a good work, but by the unwise acts and extreme views of his elders, they are driven away. This is quite evident from the following: "The Spirit says 'come'; let not the ministers for Christ prevent their coming."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:4. And some of these that the Spirit was thus inviting to "come" were "chosen vessels to do good."

This revelation was given thirty years ago next April. It referred especially to those in the Utah church. Have "the ministers for Christ" prevented their coming? If not, it is about time for some of them to come. If so, is it time for us to change our tactics? The principle that applies to the Utah church holds good for all churches and people.

We are not benefited by sarcastic arguments that dumbfound our opponents. Such arguments seldom have more than a temporary effect for good. But a display of the Christlike spirit to teach the principles of truth "in meekness," by recognizing the good that is found everywhere among the "sheep," "the Israel," "the humble followers of Christ," that are not in the church, with the fact before our eyes that they are the Lord's "people" also, as well as we; our object is to teach them the way of the Lord more perfectly, and bring them into the church in its organized form. This will produce better results. No one can advance in spirituality and morality out of the church as he may in it.

An elder may be mistaken on some question to which he has given but little attention, and should he be ridiculed by another elder that has a correct understanding, he would feel that he had been unjustly and uncharitably treated. So will the honest among other churches, when treated in a similar manner. Many men will love and admire a kind, patient teacher, but they will despise a bigoted or sarcastic one.

When we comply with the instructions given by the Lord, we shall succeed in winning "souls unto Christ." To do this we must be—not only kind of heart and of a lowly spirit . . . but we shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people in candor and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 2.

An elder may harshly criticize the teaching of other churches and by so doing create an excitement and have a large congregation for a while, but the results are invariably injurious to the church. The seeming success is only temporary. The "baser sort" are pleased to hear the prevailing churches ridiculed, because they have no love for the righteousness that these churches advocate. They were not moved to repentance, but in their own minds have more reasons to justify themselves in their evil ways because of the defects, or supposed defects, in the theology of the churches.

The better class is frequently disgusted, not by the gospel the elders preach, for it is not uncommon to hear them say, "The Saints preach the Bible," but by the narrow view so often presented, claiming that the converts in these churches "are twofold more the children of hell than before." Many of these converts have tried to serve the Lord and they know by experience that they have been benefited by so doing in these churches. When we compare their lives with those who make no effort to serve God we see they have been greatly helped. We must admit it. The religion of heaven is to improve the moral and spiritual condition of man. Every effort that does this is commendable and a part of the work of God.

It is a mistake to think that people cannot appreciate the excellency of our church without unjustly condemning others. There is much good in all churches. When we refuse to acknowledge the good in them, we give our enemies an advantage over us and they are not slow in accepting the opportunity thus offered to injure us.

It is a mistake to think that every person must believe just as we do in all things before he is prepared to be baptized and to become a child of God. This is illustrated by the following:

That the work of restoration to which the people of my church are looking forward may be hastened in its time, the elders must cease to be overcareful concerning the return of those who were once of the faith but were overcome in the dark and cloudy day, fearing lest they should bring in hidden heresies to the overthrowing of the work; for verily, there are some who are chosen vessels to do good, who have been estranged by the hindering snares which are in the world and who will in due time return unto the Lord if they be not hindered by the men of the church. The Spirit says "come"; let not the ministers for Christ prevent their coming.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 4.

It is true the churches of the world have not succeeded in developing to that degree of moral and spiritual purity in their devotees, that Christ designed that his people should have. Neither have we yet succeeded. And if we have nothing better to establish our cause than their failure, we need a better record than we have for comparison. Even in the great devastating war in Europe we have members on both sides, the same as many other churches, and can we say our members do not have the war spirit equal to the average Christian thus engaged? I hope so.

We must condemn evil and extol the good wherever found. "All good comes from God," and evil comes from Satan. May we all be able to assist any man or set of men in our church or out of it that are doing that which will result in good, and condemn evil wherever found in our church or out of it and assist any man or set of men that are working to prevent its success upon the earth.

THE HASTENING TIME---Part 3

BY ALVIN KNISLEY

ATTEMPTS TO SOLVE

Great minds such as William J. Bryan, Lyman Abbott, Senator Ingalls, Chauncey M. Depew, Bishop Worthington, Bishop J. P. Newman, Justice Henry B. Brown, Honorable J. L. Thomas, Edward Bellamy, and others have expressed themselves on the industrial and labor commotion. Some of them have been successful in locating some of the direct causes of what they all allow to be an appalling condition, but they display marked feebleness when they come to approach the remedy. The cause is not the remedy, nor is a knowledge of the cause always a knowledge of the remedy. It is true as Wendell Phillips said:

No reform, moral or intellectual, ever came from the upper class of society. Each and all came from the protest of the martyr and victim. The emancipation of the working people must be achieved by the working people themselves.

Chauncey M. Depew said, "That the problems are difficult and the situation acute, we all admit. But it is the province of education to solve problems and remove acute conditions. Our period is the paradox of civilization." Furthermore he says:

The farmers of Europe and America are justly complaining of their condition. The rural populations are rushing to the cities and infinitely increasing the difficulties of municipal government. Capitalists are striving to form combinations which shall float with the tide or stem it, and labor organizations, with limited success, are endeavoring to create a situation which they believe will be best for themselves. The tremendous progress of the last fifty years, the revolutions which have been worked by steam, electricity and invention, the correlation of forces working on one side of the globe and producing instantaneous effects on the other, have so changed the relations of peoples and industries that the world has not yet adjusted itself to them. The reliance of the present and future must be upon education.

Mr. Depew was lecturing to a graduating class of one of our four hundred or more universities in the United States and of course it was appropriate for him to put great stress on education. Yet he allows that the educated son "feels a discontent" which his father, some years ago, "never knew." He taught the students to believe and hope for the better even though "precept and prophecy are of disaster," but he allowed that the young man going out into the world would be called upon to face "revolutionary conditions in the political, the financial and the industrial world which threaten the stability of the State, the position of the church, the foundations of society and the safety of property." He gives a striking example of that bewilderment that will ensnare and envelope every man who risks the turbulent sea of national distress without the only reliable Director that ever was or ever will be. Mr. Depew says that this discontent "all comes of education," and yet he says that "our only remaining enemy is ignorance." He says:

The aspiration of all the centuries has been for liberty, and more liberty. The expectation has been that when liberty was gained there would be universal happiness and peace. The English speaking people have secured liberty in its largest and fullest sense; that liberty where the people are their own governors, legislators and masters. The paradox of it all is that with the liberty which we all hold as our greatest blessing has come a discontent greater than the world has ever known. (My italics.—A. K.)

The learned gentlemen by implication admits his incapacity to solve the problem, but he has faith that some one else will, "in some way or other" "by destructive or constructive methods."

Bishop Worthington said that in the case of the farmers the trouble was referable largely to their overeducation. Mr. Bryan denied the bishop's statement and said that it was "one of the most cruel things a man ever said."

From an English source comes this wail of confusion:

Throughout the world seething unrest, conflicting interests and cross currents keep civilized mankind in a perpetual state of excitement. The tension of nerve and mind becomes more intense week by week almost; at short intervals some startling event shakes the political and commercial world with seismic force, and men realize what accumulated elements of disaster lurk beneath the surface of society. Politicians, while they strive to modify the course of these forces, frankly admit they cannot thoroughly control them or foretell their results. (My italics.—A. K.)

Another learned jurist has this to say:

The dream of the centuries has at last been realized. From the brutal and bloody tumult of history, man has at last emerged as lord of himself; but the perplexing enigmas of faith remain. Men are equal, but there is no equality. Suffrage is universal, but political power is exerted by few; poverty has not been abolished. The burdens and privileges of society are unequally borne. Some have wealth beyond the capacity of extravagance to squander, and others pray in vain for daily bread.

The same gentleman says that "the muttered thunder of sullen discontent grows nearer hour by hour"; that man will yet not only demand "equality of rights and with equality of opportunity, but that he will demand equality of conditions as the law of the ideal state"; that notwithstanding the plenty of money, food, fabrics, etc., "the paradox of civilization remains." Not even the suggestion of a remedy.

Reverend Lyman Abbott speaks of the distressful situation as "a blind struggle toward a democracy of wealth, in which the tool users will be the tool owners, in which labor will hire capital, not capital labor; in which men, not money, will control in industry, as they now control in government." Indeed, the learned ecclesiastic can talk in endless continuation on the causes and effects of the blind struggle, but let him propound a remedy. For what good does it do for this one and that one to come out every now and then and merely add his name to the numberless list who little more than acknowledge the existence of that which every one knows and no one disputes.

Ever since man departed from his guideboard in the early beginning he has been at sea. Even without and in the utter absence of any repentance toward God—the natural way of returning—it would entail a superior industrial and economic relation to observe God's system. The same if a sinner observed the laws of health—he will have better health. Not to the same extent, however, as if he at the same time that he observes the laws of health also yields to the commandments bearing upon his spiritual wellbeing. But he will be better off than were he heedless of both.

Justice H. B. Brown of the United States Supreme Court is on record as declaring in regard to Capital and Labor:

The conflict between them has been going on and increasing in bitterness for thousands of years, and a settlement seems farther off than ever. Compulsory arbitration is a misnomer—a contradiction in terms. One might as well speak of an amicable murder or a friendly war. It is possible that a friendly compromise may be effected finally upon the basis of cooperation or profit-sharing, under which every laborer shall become, to a certain extent, a capitalist. Perhaps, with superior education, wider experience and larger intelligence, the laboring man of the twentieth century may attain the summit of his ambition in his ability to command the entire profits of his toil. (My italics.)

And so we might go on in endless multiplication of the guesses and speculations of the able theorists, statesmen and parliamentarians of our time. No doubt they have been successful in locating many causes of the trying times and the general disquietude, and it is equally undoubted that they have recommended some changes which would very likely act as palliatives to relax the tension of the situation, but where is the remedy, where is the cure?

has had its apologists and defenders as the one and only remedy for all industrial and economic ills. It believes in community of goods, the abolition of all private property "and the transfer of everything possessed by individuals to the state."

Experience proves the failure of communistic methods in the present time. There have been several such communities; and the result has always been failure. The Oneida community of New York is one whose failure has long been recognized. Another, the Harmony Society of Pennsylvania, soon disappointed the hopes of its founders, for so much discord prevailed that it divided. The branch known as Economists located near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, withered; and possession of its property is now being disputed in the society and in the courts of the law.

Robert Owen of Great Britain who wrote and lectured extensively on the subject in the fore part of last century unsuccessfully attempted to found a society after his plan on the banks of the Wabash in 1825, but success never greeted the endeavors of this enthusiast.

The Brook Farm was established, as another community, in Massachusetts in 1841, one of its members being the author Nathaniel Hawthorne. In 1847 the enterprise was abandoned. In order that such a scheme may be attended with success two things must necessarily be in evidence without an exception: First, its participants must be converts from selfishness, absolutely; must be regenerated, born again, must be of that class who actually at heart regard their brother's welfare as their own. Second, the scheme in detail, as to every solitary wheel in its vast mechanism must be there and not missing. And such a system is not Communism.

FEMALE SUFFRAGE AND PROHIBITION might, like many other agencies devised by finite mind, lessen the sumtotal of crime and debauchery in the country; it might help to make better times, but who will suggest it as the ultimate, complete and utopian remedy for the evils arising from the present social conditions. First, last and all time are we for prohibition, and as an individual I am too much of a gentleman to say a woman shall not vote if she wants to. Some five or ten millions of her sex are employers in this country, occupying places in former times exclusively controlled by men. Shall she then be excluded from any say as to the laws by which she is to be governed? "But," some one says, "if she is to be equal with us men in her right of franchise, let her train as a soldier and occupy beside us in the army." Replying with equal grace his lady opponent might say, "Very well, and let him take care of the baby, do the cooking, wash the dishes, do the laundry work and make the beds." For, if it follows that she should join him in the work and service for which he is peculiarly adapted by his physical constitution, then it would follow that he should likewise join her or assume those responsibilities which physical adaptation and custom has placed upon her.

NATIONALISM

Nationalism has been suggested as another remedy. "It claims that all industries should be conducted by the nation, on the basis of common obligation to work and a general guarantee of livelihood—all workers to do the same amount of work, and to get the same wages." A number of colonies which have been launched to carry out the nationalist idea have signally failed and fallen flat. One notable instance is that known as the Altruria Colony, of California, which shared the fate of its predecessors who started out without the necessary fundamental preparation. Many sacred monuments have been lost to this world, economically as well as pertaining to church government. Honesty without revelation would never in this world have rebuilt Christ's church, and it is not farfetched to say that God's financial and economic plan has been left so far behind, buried so deeply, that revelation is most indispensable in its disinterment and recovery.

THE SINGLE TAX SYSTEM

In my library is contained the close and elaborate reasonings of the giant apostle of this system, Henry George. His remedy was free land, the restoration of all the land, as the property of the human race, along with air and water. Under his order of things each person would be a tenant or renter and pay taxes in proportion to the value of the land he occupied; that taxes would not apply to improvements such as buildings or any form of wealth independent of the land. Taxes thus raised by the equitable levy upon the land should be applied to schools, streets, roads and other improvements for the common good.

In a number of respects Mr. George's system was the opposite of Socialism. Very truly Mr. George says that when Christ chose his disciples "he did not go to the land owners or other monopolists who live on the labor of others, but to common laboring men." His works are simply replete with such utterances into which we can assent with a hearty amen. Drawing the line between himself and Socialists he says:

We differ from the Socialists in our diagnosis of the evil, and we differ from them as to remedies. We have no fear of capital, regarding it as the natural handmaiden of labor; we look on interest of itself as natural and just; we would set no limit to accumulation, nor impose on the rich any burden that is not equally placed on the poor; we see no evil in competition, but deem unrestricted competition to be as necessary to the health of the industrial and social organism as the free circulation of the blood is to the health of the bodily organism—to be the agency whereby the fullest co-operation is to be secured. We would simply take for the community what belongs to the community; the value that attaches to the land by the growth of the community; leave sacredly to the individual all that belongs to the individual; and treating necessary monopolies as functions of the state, abolish all restrictions and prohibitions save those required for public health, safety, morals and convenience.

But the fundamental difference—the difference I ask your Holiness specially to note is this: Socialism in all its phases looks on the evils of our civilization as springing from the inadequacy or inharmony of natural relations, which must be artificially organized or improved. In its idea there devolves on the state the necessity of intelligently organizing the industrial relations of men; the construction, as it were, of a great machine whose complicated parts shall work together under the direction of human intelligence. This is the reason why socialism tends toward atheism. Failing to see the order and symmetry of natural law, it fails to recognize God.

The above is an extract from Mr. George's letter to the pope. Granting that his system puts everything else in the shade, would it supply new hearts and would it work such a change upon the masses effected by its inauguration as to wipe out all the iniquities running parallel with our present system? Of course it would not, and creation would still groan under its sin-acquired burden. Capital would still form trusts, combines and syndicates and control prices and supplies. Yet we cannot dispute the contention so well and maturely thought out by Mr. George that we have not the right to the earth to the exclusion of others simply because we happened to be born into the world first. The Lord took this into consideration and made provision against that supreme danger into which man is wont to degenerate long ago when he placed Israel in Canaan by the creation of the year of jubilee and the reversion of land property.

SOCIALISM AS A REMEDY

Socialism neither advocates a community of goods and property as does communism, nor does it propose to reward all individuals alike as does nationalism. It stands for "public collective ownership of land and capital and the management of all industries by the public collectively." Notwithstanding Herbert Spencer said: "I believe the advent of Socialism to be the greatest disaster the world has ever known," it cannot be disputed that socialism has on its side minds as philosophic as Mr. Spencer's, and furthermore that it stands out to-day as the unfaltering foe of capitalism and monarchism. It is true that they do not all talk alike who advocate socialism, but the same is true of all political parties. If we take the ground that we shall reject it because of a manifest nonuniformity of theory and sentiment among its exponents, then, I suggest, we would be at a loss to find anything acceptable and we would be obliged by our own rule to turn down republicanism and democracy in our mere start on this journey. In my library repose the writings of Karl Marx who sat on the banks of the Rhine and pointed the finger of rebuke at every covetous capitalist, every selfish and greedy tyrant in Europe. The one hundred and fifty or more periodicals in United States supporting socialism besides those in other countries, the millions of pamphlets in distribution, have contributed materially to the molding of modern political and economic thought. Politicians have and do find it convenient to steal of their planks to put in their own platforms. A remarkable instance was Roosevelt's case in the 1912 election. Socialism claims that as slavery gave way to feudalism, and feudalism to capitalism, so capitalism will yet give way to socialism.

We cannot deny that since the advent and clamors of socialism about seventy governments are the owners of their telegraph lines, and over fifty governments own their railroads wholly or in part; that in Germany under government ownership telegrams of ten words "are sent to all parts of the country for five cents," whereas under the private ownership of the United States the average cost was stated some time ago to be thirty-two and one half cents. Of course the country here is much larger, but that is no excuse for such a difference.

I have read of a couple exclusively socialistic communities which were tried out, one in Paraguay, South America; the other at Monthieux, Europe. The former was agricultural, the latter a mining camp. Each was a success financially or industrially, but it is true that each, after it demonstrated a fair degree of prosperity, forsook and apostatized from the principles they had espoused and returned to methods which rendered them scarcely different from their neighbors. And why did they thus return? Simply because, as we have said time and again, they were seeking to create a condition which must be preceded by faith, repentance and baptism, and the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The germs of selfishness remained in the hearts of those men and when the trial came, when the winds blew and the floods beat, their superstructure fell for it was not founded upon the Rock of Christ. Will take a glance at anarchy and the Independent Workers of the World in our next.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

CANNING AMERICA'S SURPLUS VEGETABLES

The gigantic possibilities of the home canning industry in the United States this summer, when it is so eagerly hoped that the production of the vegetable gardens everywhere will be vastly increased over the normal output are set forth in a bulletin issued by the National Geographical Society from its Washington headquarters. The bulletin is a part of a communication to the society from William Showalter.

"One fourth of our country's diet consists of vegetables—products of the truck garden, and yet, next to Australians, Americans are the world's greatest meat eaters. Our census returns show that we produce, exclusive of potatoes and sweet potatoes, vegetables to a value of $216,000,000.

"The tomato takes first rank, with a $14,000,000 production to its credit; the onion contributes exactly half as much to the total as the tomato, while corn makes a successful bid for third place; watermelons get fourth place, with a production valued at $5,000,000, and cantaloupes add $4,000,000 more to the total. Green beans and green peas are $3,000,000 crops. These figures deal almost entirely with the production that gets to the city market and not with the vegetables raised for consumption on the farm.

"There is probably no farmhouse in all the land so poor as to be without its vegetable garden and its truck patch, and between the dried beans, corn, peas, etc., and the canned cucumbers, beets, tomatoes, ketchup and what not, the thrifty rural housewife takes her family into the winter with the assurance that there will be no dearth of vegetables.

"The food administration of the Government is now pleading with the women everywhere to increase their output of canned goods so that the amount of vegetables which ordinarily goes to waste may, this year as never before, be decreased to a positively 'irreducible minimum.'

"If the products of the vegetable garden figure extensively in the world's diet, they play no greater role than the products of the orchard, the vineyard and the berry patch. The total yield of these, according to the last census, is worth $222,000,000 a year.

"Orchard fruits are produced in America to an annual value of $140,000,000. We produce a bushel of apples per capita, a third of a bushel of peaches, two quarts and a half of strawberries, and other things in proportion. Grapevines and citrus trees yield $22,000,000 worth of fruit a year, while our berry crop is valued at $29,000,000.

"While most of our fruits and vegetables come to us in their natural state or canned, the country annually produces millions of dollars worth of dried fruits—a production which figures more largely in other parts of the world than in our own.

"It is only a little more than a century since the fruit jar came into use. Before that the only way of keeping the fruits and vegetables that are now canned was to dry them or put them away in sugar or salt. The invention of the modern process of canning is credited to Nicholas Appert, a Frenchman. His method was to put the food to be preserved in glass jars, set them in boiling water, and when the contents were thoroughly heated, seal the jar.

"Although Napoleon gave Appert twelve thousand francs for his work, he simply had built on foundations well laid by Spallanzi nearly half a century before. The apparatus used by Appert in his canning processes was very crude, but his discoveries laid the foundation for one of the most important industries of modern times, one which has proved a boon to the urban population of the earth, and one which in the present emergency is being depended upon, to a large extent, to prevent the world from starving.

"While Napoleon Bonaparte paid for the discovery of the canning process, England was quick to take up the discovery and to utilize it for her own purposes. About 1815 Ezra Daggert brought to the United States a process for canning salmon and oysters. This process was gradually extended to pickles, jellies, and sauces.

"Only the first centennial has passed of William Underwood's invention of a process of canning tomatoes, and it is only seventy-eight years since Isaac Winslow learned how to can corn at Portland, Maine. To-day the glass pars of Appert have been succeeded, except in the household canning art, by the tin can, and many wonderful machines have been devised to save labor in the canning industry.

"There are hulling machines which will take green peas out of the pods at the rate of 1,000 bushels a day; there are separators which will grade the peas according to size; there are corn cutters which remove the grain from the cob at the rate of 4,000 ears an hour, and silking machines which will work at equal speed; and there are automatic machines which will fill 12,000 cans a day."

A Voice From the East--Concerning Our Boys

A request for advice in organizing a boys' club comes today from California. Holden Stake has performed its first task along this line. I have arranged to take care of the boys at our eastern reunion this year, and, if I can get away, will also attend a few conferences. I feel that now is the time to start boys' organizations in the branches. Vacation time is here, and the little fellows from eight to twelve will not know what to do with themselves. Proper leaders should interest themselves in this work. Branch presidents should take the matter more at heart. Often there is a young man who could attend to this work in the branch, perhaps through Sunday school class organization, extending it to take in all the boys obtainable. Many older boys will have to work this year, but they need direction and guidance in spending their evenings, or the afternoon they are off duty. "Big Brothers" can look out for the younger ones. Sports, early rising, abstinence from tea, coffee, strong drink and tobacco, and a "clean mouth" and heart are habits which should early become fixed in the lives of our boys. I feel we should make big the powerful and wholly scientific instruction given in the Word of Wisdom. Thus, beginning with the boys we shall insure the character of the future men.

In our general organization, our boys should not be asked to be satisfied with anything less important and extensive in its scope than that possessed by other boy organizations. This subject of "boy-ology" has been studied carefully by the men who have organized the various boy societies, and their conclusions may be fairly safe guides in many directions. All boys love to get in groups, to talk and plan; they delight in twilight dreams, hikes through the woods, in stories and gymnastics. In fact, there is a time in the life of a boy when he seems to care little for anything else than the development and use of his muscles! We must reach the boys through a conception of the law of their beings, as well as bring to their attention the laws of the church.

Reunion work might be conducted after some such order as this: Have a leader chosen for the boys. Allow him to choose assistants. Divide the boys into groups, leaving the smaller ones with the women and girls. Let there be lectures for the adolescent boys which also may be divided into groups, say, from thirteen to sixteen in one, and seventeen to twenty-odd in another. The leaders should study the boys, and their needs, and seek to meet them at all points. Temporary organizations may be formed, rules discussed, parliamentary practices arranged for, etc. They should be told helpful stories, taught to swim, be taken on early morning walks, engage in sunrise prayer meetings, given instructions in personal hygiene, be taught necessary forms of etiquette, participate in athletic drills, competitive sports, encouraged in studies, quickened in manliness and chivalry, etc. Confidence should be established in which the leader may learn the special needs of the individual boy, and the parents of such be advised with in regard to the same. There is no end to the line of activities of a helpful nature which will be suggested to the mind of the earnest leader of boys, one who has their spiritual welfare at heart.

I admit the danger of having too much organization in this movement but we must recognize the value of group leadership; and in one sense group leadership is made possible only through organization. If we have but one leader with no petty or subofficers, for each group of boys, we shall avoid the common jealousy or envy which arises when one boy is elected to "boss" others. I favor the simple organization, at the same time preserving all the necessary "trappings" which are dear to the heart of the boy.

Sincerely,

R. W. FARRELL.

The Value of Music in the Home

The following is an extract from a letter from Sister Burgess of Saint Louis, which may help some mother to see more clearly the help she can derive from a liberal use of the art of music in the home. A recent writer of note made the very strong statement that of all the influences which can be brought into the life of the young boy, he regarded that of music as being the most valuable, because of its refinement, its idealism, its inspirational effect, and its closeness to that which is truest and best in life's experiences.

Perhaps because of its very simplicity we sometimes seem negligent of its value in the education of the child and the efforts we are making to "bend" the "twig" in the right direction. The value of a few songbooks in the home, from which the members of the family may sing with hearts aflame with divine influences, is one within reach of almost every parent in the church to-day. Get a few copies of Zion's Praises—get enough so that each child may have one to itself—and then use them! Let the service of happy song become a part of your daily life, starting out the day with thoughts lifted on high, and closing it with the prayer unto God, which he has declared the song of the righteous to be!

Here are Sr. Burgess's ideas upon this subject:

"We need more incentive to music in the auxiliary, which means in the home. Our two little grandchildren were very cross one day, soon after coming here, and Florence began playing on the piano a selection from one of the operas. I was surprised at the quiet that at once prevailed, and looked in to ascertain the cause. In each rocking chair sat a child, looking supremely happy, one even trying to sing! A change almost magical! Often a tune on the piano, or the phonograph, will quiet little squalls! Try it! It always succeeds! Every mother knows the wonderful effect of singing to the children! There is no one thing that cheers so much, uplifts (physically, as well as spiritually) and gives the peaceful, joyous sensation as does music!

"Good books, good lectures, good athletics—all are fine in their times and places, but from the cradle to the grave, before even the child can read or understand, music is at hand to reach and impress the inner consciousness! Operas, and so-called 'classical' music, are not at all necessary, but have the best music you can get, a music-box, harmonica, grandmother's ditties, or anything in the line of music of a worthy nature should be encouraged in every home! Mr. Ingersoll once said, 'Every home should have pictures, good ones if you can afford them, but pictures, if only cheap prints!' The same is true of music, only more so."

A Bright Spot in Sacramento History

Our local was organized in February, and with nineteen members now, we have good interest and hope to enroll others. We decided to have an open evening meeting, once every four months, invite the brethren and families, and serve refreshments after the program. Our first such meeting was held at the church May 10, and was so successful we want others to know about it. As we do not serve refreshments at our regular meetings we appointed a special committee for this feature, which followed a program consisting of speeches, anthems by choir, readings of an educational nature from the HERALD and elsewhere, vocal solos and duets and piano music—all of which were greatly enjoyed.

The committee had kept their arrangements secret, and we were all surprised and delighted when we were ushered into the yard back of the church, to find bright lanterns strung gaily about and an abundance of seats conveniently placed. Assisted by a group of prospective Oriole Girls, the committee served ice cream, homemade cakes and fruit punch, to the fifty people present, who enjoyed the evening most heartily.

Our branch is moving forward; the weekly prayer meetings are well attended, the last sacrament meeting seeing sixty present who enjoyed a goodly degree of the Spirit. Activity is stimulated in all meetings and we are feeling very happy and hopeful.

HAZEL BLOHM, Secretary Woman's Auxiliary.

A Cup of Good Cheer

The Saints of Omaha, and especially the members of the auxiliary and their friends, had an inspirational and uplifting experience in the recent visit of Brother Floyd McDowell to their City. Arriving on the afternoon of Saturday, June 16, he addressed an assembly of the priesthood that evening, trying to emphasize the importance of working wholeheartedly at the "Father's business." If men would put as much effort, thought, time, and dependability into their church work as they give to their commercial interests, would that work not feel a great and irresistible impetus forward?

Sunday morning Brother McDowell held out, indeed, a "cup of cheer," for he brought plainly to view many, many ways in which modern science and the stands taken by men of thought and achievement in the world to-day, are coming back to acceptance of the ideas for which religion has stood all these years, and notably, the ideas and beliefs of our own church. Religion has never yet come into its own in the history of the world, but a new day is dawning for it, and with a creed of "all truth," we should rejoice in the good that is being wrought, almost before our very eyes.

In the afternoon, Brother McDowell talked to the members of the child welfare study classes, with the addition of all parents, ministers, Sunday school and Religion teachers and officers who cared to attend—a goodly number indeed, including some "live wires" from the Bluffs. The subjects considered were those of vital interest to those whose duties as parents or teachers bring them in contact with the child mind—especially that of the adolescent age—the mind misunderstood and uncomprehended by almost every one, except its Creator! Many lively questions were asked and discussed, and all felt that a rare privilege had been theirs, in listening to the helpful ideas advanced. All agree that more should be done to interest the young people, to provide for them what their natures demand in the way of recreation and social intercourse, and yet just who is to step forward and do these things, seems to be the cause of the tardiness with which plans are being formulated and carried out! Is it the duty of the Religion? Is it the duty of the Sunday school? Should the branch president or other branch officers see that such provisions are made? Is it for the Woman's Auxiliary to step forward and attend to this? What is being done in our church centers? Is there, in Independence, a systematic effort or plan being worked out, to provide constant, healthful, innocent, interesting entertainment and recreation for the young? Is there in Lamoni? Saint Joseph? Saint Louis? Are we just saying, "Don't do this," and never saying "Come, this do!" Are we stifling, repressing, in the way Brother McDowell pointed out as being so dangerous to our influence with youth? Or are we carefully and thoughtfully thinking out these problems, and wisely guiding and directing the forces of youthful nature into channels which will not only conserve the physical, mental, moral and spiritual health of our children but will also insure an expression of those forces and activities which will be of inestimable value to the church and the community? Expression, instead of repression; educating, a "drawing out," instead of a pouring in; training the child to do, instead of simply to be; "overcoming evil with good"—substituting things they can do, for the things we wish they would not do; these are some of the things that are "up to us," to do for our children! Are we doing them?

In the evening Professor McDowell, following the train of thought brought out in the afternoon discussion, gave us ideas of the proper standards by which we could discriminate between the good and the evil in matters of recreation and pastime. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," is not a challenge applicable only to our decision in regard to baptism, but it is one of daily and hourly recurrence! Every day, every one of us must decide, in many ways, which master we will serve; we cannot indulge in wrong things, and at the same time be serving him who needs our whole energy enlisted on the side of right things. If the results of any deed or thought are harmful physically, mentally or morally, either to ourselves or those about us, we would do well to refrain from that thought or that deed.

Thank you, Brother McDowell.

A. A.

An authority on home economics points out the folly of getting cheap cuts of meat which require long cooking, stating that the cost of the gas or other fuel used often raises the food in question from the ranks of the cheap and economical to the realm of the extravagant and luxurious.

Our Woman's Building

Our Woman's building is becoming of practical benefit to us. Classes are held in it from the various activities. Physical culture classes are given every hour on Thursday afternoons from 1.30 to 5.30.

Efforts are being made to establish a school in elocution. All classes are free to those who wish to take advantage of them. The Laurels gave a shower at the building Friday afternoon to furnish the kitchen and dining room. Donations were received of dishes, all sorts of kitchen utensils, curtains, table linen, and some furniture and pictures.

The Young Mother's Club gave eight pairs of lace trimmed curtains, the Laurel club forty-eight chairs, others a bed, springs and pillows and rug. Through the kindness of a brother we have the use of his piano, dining room set and also a bedroom set. We still have the two receiving rooms to furnish further and are hopefully waiting to hear from some real philanthropist to remember us.

Monday night, in response to the invitation of Miss Alice Smith in behalf of the Independence girls, who wished to meet with the girls who were living here but whose homes were at a distance, a social was held at the Woman's Building and some thirty-five were in attendance and entertained about fifteen visitors.

This was so successful that it was decided to make these meetings permanent. In the addresses which were made the visiting girls were impressed with the thought that the home girls were willing to share their home comforts even to their mothers with them. A mutual bond of sympathy was established that will encircle all the girls and draw them closer together.

Our numerous classes are taking a vacation, and in appreciation of the arduous work of our instructors, Brother Walter Smith and wife, the student body met at the home of W. H. Deam on Thursday evening and spent a most enjoyable time with our beloved teachers. The Oriole Girls are planning new activities for the summer vacation.

Supplemental Report of the Treasurer

General Fund.—The receipts in the general fund for 1916 have been over $100 more than for the previous year, the actual receipts for last year being $260.88 and the receipts for the previous year $154. The above amount represents the per capita tax only. Other donations were made for general church purposes (see financial report.)

Our president, realizing the demands that would be made upon the Treasury as our work grew and developed, and was properly represented at the various reunions and in districts, etc., made a special call for donations early in the year. In December I sent a letter to each local asking for the per capita tax. The locals have responded quite liberally, but we still urge that every club, class, or society affiliate themselves with the Auxiliary and send in their assessments annually. The general association has completed the payments on a typewriter, which is now used by the general superintendent of the young woman's department.

Children's Home Fund.—It has been very gratifying to have the receipts for the Children's Home fund amount to over $500 this year though no special call has been made through the auxiliary. This with the balance on hand January 20, 1916, has enabled us to contribute $600 to the support of that institution. Since making out our financial report we have received a check for $50 from Oklahoma and an additional donation of $75 has been sent to the Home.

Year Book Fund.—When the Year Books were issued a check for $40 was given in part payment for the expenses of publishing and a note for $80 at 8 per cent for the balance, the entire charge being $120. A statement issued by the Herald Publishing House on February 10 shows the receipts for the Year Books sold by them to be $19.65 above the $80 note and interest with about 200 books on hand. There is a balance due the auxiliary from the Herald Publishing House of $19.65. When the entire lot of books is sold there will be a small balance left with which to begin work on the new Year Book.

Leaflet Fund.—After the report of the general treasurer to the convention concerning the debt at the Herald Publishing House for the issuing of the home and child welfare leaflets, the treasurer was authorized to make a special effort to collect funds to cover this debt, from the subscribers of the leaflets. Accordingly a letter was sent to each subscriber and as a result $36 was received including some subscriptions which were overdue. There still remains an indebtedness at the Herald Publishing House of $29 for leaflets.

As general treasurer I have written, personally, two circular letters to the locals, one on the leaflet fund, and one for assessment. In June, 1916, I was appointed by the executive committee to arrange for the publishing of the Year Book, and was sent to Lamoni for that purpose. Have also acted as secretary of the board until the general secretary was located in Independence, and ready to take up the work, which was in July, 1916.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From Here and There

A letter from Tampico says the farmers there are very much worried over continued dry weather. Fifty miles east, a terrible cyclone killed and destroyed many people recently. "We are certainly having perilous times," says Sister Lily B. Stearns.

From the Sarnia (Ontario) Canadian, we learn that Elder G. C. Tomlinson of Saint Marys was to hold services at that place on June 17. Elder J. W. Phillips has recently located at Sarnia and will be in charge of the work. The meetings are held at the home of A. Burley, at 206 Queen Street.

Elder D. E. Tucker is laboring in the Far West Stake and desires the cooperation of the Saints that he may become acquainted with the needs of the field. Information as to where new openings can be made will be thankfully received. The Saints can be of much help along this line. Address him for the present at Henrietta, Ray County, Missouri, in care of W. G. Hamann.

Anyone having HERALDS, Ensigns, Autumn Leaves or tracts which they are willing to give away, should write a postal card to Brother Glenn H. McVicker, of Eagle Grove, Iowa. From those offered Brother McVicker can indicate to those nearest to him which ones to send and he will not be deluged with material from all sources, which happens so many times. We hesitate to insert a general request for literature, for our people are so liberal that few ordinary people can dispose of all that is sent. We suggest this method for disposing of the many papers which should be distributed. Are there any others desiring such material? We ask that the number of pieces of each be reported at the end of the year to the district gospel literature board or R. W. Farrell, 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island. The person making final distribution should do the reporting.

In his address to the Saints at the recent stake conference at Independence, Bishop B. R. McGuire spoke of the proposed establishment of a storehouse for the benefit of the poor and in this way carrying into effect a principle advanced in the interest of all concerned. "If the effort succeeds," said the brother, "it will mean work, and will multiply our responsibilities. I hope and pray we will all feel to support the movement, and that it will be a blessing to the community." The children's eight o'clock prayer meeting was full of uplifting thought, writes Sister Horton, and the Spirit spoke through Brother R. Bullard, cheering and instructing the young. "Therefore bear your testimonies," said the Spirit, "the day will come when these seats will be occupied to the full, the light of truth shall shine forth from your influence in heavenly rays. Be true and loyal to my cause and you shall be blessed with the power of my Spirit." The message of Brother Walter W. Smith to the Saints at the evening hour was important and fully appreciated.

Is It False Economy?

In a recent issue of the HERALD I notice you refer to a lesson of economy by omitting the publishing of the children's names in the blue Stepping Stones. I am glad that you are not the Pope or the Kaiser. You might object to some one's expressing a different opinion to what you hold. If there were several hundred dollars saved, who was the loser? Was it not the persons to whom it would have been paid in wages? Was not that the principal item of expense? That saving of expense took from some one the opportunity to buy some of the needed comforts of life; they would have less to help the church in tithes and offerings, in Sunday school and branch expenses.

There are many ways that we might economize, but it would kill the goose that laid the golden egg. The Ensign could be printed in Lamoni and save the cost of the building and printing presses. A big newspaper office in Topeka, Kansas, in addition to its own paper, published a paper for a firm in Nebraska and one in Oklahoma. They have their editorial offices in their respective States. We could put plain pine boards in our churches for seats and send the money saved to the church. We could advise our people to manage so that one could take the HERALD and the other the Ensign and then exchange with each other. They could save several thousand dollars that way each year. We could get along without sidewalk and walk in the mud and give that amount for a Christmas offering. So you see we could go on with a long list of ways in which we could save money, but who would be the loser? The wage earner, the man that makes his living by daily toil. All wages go back to the public in the various channels of trade, and so the busy world keeps moving.

If a missionary can use the church papers to tell what he is doing in his field of labor, and in addition thereto what fine eating he has had and what a fine home he has been entertained in, what a fine musician one of the daughters is and what a great help she is to the church, and a large amount of social chat that is of no interest to the general reader, why should a little boy or girl who has done his "bit" be denied the privilege once each year to have recorded what he has done in the Lord's work, and a missionary have a whole column to tell what could be told in three or four lines? The children scan with eagerness the blue Stepping Stones to see what their division of the Lord's army has done to help on the great cause of righteousness on the earth.

It is false economy to deny that small privilege each year to our children. If we want to economize, we should not practice it on the innocent and confiding children, but commence where our heavenly Father has commanded us to do so to "carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants." Let us not ask our children to make up for our selfishness. PAUL PARKER.

WHITTEMORE, MICHIGAN, May 24, 1917.

Editors Herald: Just a word from Central Michigan District. We have an active branch of about seventy members, and at present all seem to be working in harmony and always will, if we continue to do our duty to God and our fellow men. He that rules the heavens and earth has promised his blessings to all who will live in obedience to his holy will.

Our Sabbath school is progressing nicely under the supervision of Brother Steven Barr. The Ladies' Mite Society, through their united efforts, have succeeded in getting the church lighted up with gas lamps, which adds greatly to the appearance of the church. We are greatly in need of a shed to accommodate those who have teams. The Good Book tells us that a righteous man is merciful to his beast, and if the brethren, including the writer, had the same energy and hearts as that of our sisters, there would soon be one erected. Of course this, like all other branches, is just what its members make it.

Elder Samuel Pendleton, of Beaverton, Michigan, has been holding meetings here for five weeks and preached some able sermons which resulted in leading eleven precious souls into the waters of baptism: three young people and eight adults. Others seem quite interested in the gospel. Brother Pendleton has the goods and delivers them in a manner that not only makes converts but leaves him many friends in this community. The latchstring will always hang on the outside for him. Truly our branch has grown both in number and spirituality.

Trusting and looking to Him who is the author and finisher of our faith, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

ADOLPH CATALINE.

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, May 29, 1917.

Dear Herald: Elder Waller, so many years pastor of this branch, but now president of San Francisco Branch, returned after an absence of nearly a year. He was given a hearty welcome at the church, which had been elaborately decorated for the occasion.

A program was rendered which would have done credit to any branch. The musical part of the work here is being well looked after. We have two choirs, the older choir singing in the morning and the young people in the evening.

This branch has about two hundred and seventy-five of a membership, but they are scattered to the other islands and even to the mainland, so the attendance is around 50.

We have a short sermon by one of the Hawaiian brethren, in the morning service, followed by an English sermon. The evening service is in English.

Nearly all our members can understand English very well, but they prefer to hear the sermon in their own tongue, when it is possible to have it.

I baptized a Hawaiian-Japanese sister the other Sunday. I have not a very large number of baptisms to my credit since entering the ministry, but have immersed Tahitians, Australians, English, Tasmanians, citizens of India, Hawaiians, Japanese, Portuguese, and expect possibly to baptize Chinese and Philipinos before leaving this island.

The Lord said there would be danger upon the waters in these latter days, and prospective tourists believe such is the case, and many have canceled their bookings on the steamships, consequently there are few tourists here compared to previous years.

To-day the guns were practicing at the big forts. Shall we hear the 14-inch monsters sending destruction out on the peaceful Pacific before the war is over? There are over 9,000 soldiers permanently stationed here, and it is expected the number will be increased to about 20,000 before long.

As developments are taking place on earth, we see more and more a real demand for Zion. May the Saints so live that it may be speedily redeemed. C. EDWARD MILLER.

RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA, May 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have found the most wonderful, soul-cheering poem, and as all the Saints may not have such a blessed opportunity to read and gain the help and cheer that it contains, I thought it would probably be well to send it in for publication as it might give comfort to some in this distressing time. It is written by William Newell and is as follows:

SERVE GOD AND BE CHEERFUL

"Serve God and be cheerful." The motto
Shall be mine, as the bishop's of old;
On my soul's coat-of-arms I will write it
In letters of azure and gold.

"Serve God and be cheerful," self-balanced,
Whether Fortune smiles sweetly or frowns.
Christ stood king before Pilate. Within me
I carry the scepter and crown.

"Serve God and be cheerful." Make brighter
The brightness that falls to your lot;
The rare or the daily-sent blessing,
Profane not with gloom and with doubt.

"Serve God and be cheerful." Each sorrow
Is—with your will in God's—for the best,
O'er the cloud hangs the rainbow. To-morrow
Will see the blue sky in the west.

"Serve God and be cheerful." The darkness
Only masks the surprises of dawn;
And the deeper and grimmer the midnight,
The brighter and sweeter the morn.

"Serve God and be cheerful." The winter
Rolls round into the beautiful spring,
And in the green grave of the snowdrift
The nest-building robins will sing.

"Serve God and be cheerful." Look upward!
God's countenance scatters the gloom;
And the soft summer light of his heaven
Shines over the cross and the tomb.

"Serve God and be cheerful." The wrinkles
Of age we may wear with a smile;
But the wrinkles of faithless foreboding
Are the crow's feet of Beelzebub's guile.

"Serve God and be cheerful." Religion
Looks all the more lovely in white;
And God is best served by his servant
When, smiling, he serves in the light.

And live out the glad tidings of Jesus
In sunshine he came to impart,
For the fruit of his word and his Spirit
Is "love, joy and peace" in the heart.

"Serve God and be cheerful." Live nobly,
Do right and do good. Make the best
Of the gifts and the works put before thee,
And to God, without fear, leave the rest.

Praying that the work may prosper as never before, and many precious souls be gathered into the harvest fold, and that the Saints may be found faithful and loyal to their king, the Prince of peace,
INA MAYE WARREN.

AMHERSTBURG, ONTARIO, June 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wish to let all know what we are doing in this part of the Lord's vineyard. We, the Wismer family, moved into this locality two years ago last December and settled on a farm in Anderton Township. My husband and myself left here and went to Windsor for the winter the following year and when spring came we engaged a house and decided to stay.

When one night as I lay awake I saw a great anchor dropped slowly from the clouds in this direction and I said to my husband, "Cecil, you are wanted at home; you are needed." Then Brother Brown, president of Windsor Branch, spoke to Cecil later and told him the Lord had a work for him to do out here. He said he would have discouragements but the Lord had a great work to be done. We returned here on April 22, 1916, and had discouragements indeed many times. We have talked it over together and wondered what the Lord wanted us out here for, as everything on the farm was almost a failure.

Well, at the reunion Cecil asked Brother Weaver to come to our place, and my father-in-law, Brother T. A. Wismer, opened his house to our worthy missionary last November. Brother Weaver stayed here six weeks and baptized fourteen into the fold and kingdom of God. He returned this spring and baptized seven more and now we have twenty-eight members in the vicinity and an enrollment of thirty-three in our Sunday school, two on the home class and eight on the cradle roll; two ordained teachers. And we have a grand time out here now and hope in the near future to have a church and branch. I am anxious to have the Woman's Auxiliary, the normal and Religio started here, but this is a busy time of year for farmers.

We would be very glad to have any of the Saints come and visit us and help us along in our great work here. We have a phone and any one coming to Amherstburg can call us up and we will meet them.

Praying that God will bless our efforts and advance the work in this place as well as elsewhere, I remain,
Your sister in bonds,
MINNIE WISMER.

HOPEWELL, VIRGINIA, June 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: I will give the reasons for joining the church. I was investigating this work about a year before I joined. When I joined the Baptist Church I expected to receive some evidence of its divinity, but I lived about five years in that church without any evidence that it was of God or that there was a God. The reason I joined the church of Christ was I see the gifts of tongues, prophecy and healing following the believer. Prophecies were given and I see them fulfilled. I saw a tornado lift over the town where I was and tear down the country and towns with great destruction of life and property. I received the gift of the Spirit by the laying on of the elders' hands and was healed of catarrh and lung trouble when I went into the water of baptism, and they have not bothered me since.

I could almost write a book with what I have seen since. Few men have suffered the persecutions and trials I have since I have joined this church, and if I hadn't received the blessing and evidence I had, I surely wouldn't still be identified therewith.

Yours for the truth,

WILLIAM C. CUMMINGS.

WATERTOWN, SOUTH DAKOTA, June 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has often been said that absence makes the heart grow fonder, and since our absence from the church associations we believe this may be true in more ways than the one in which it is usually applied. And, although we may be isolated, there is pleasure in the remembrances of past associations and joy in the hope of the future.

The writer happens to be a commercial traveler, thus being permitted to enjoy some pleasant experiences in which the rest of the family are not privileged to participate. Have you ever heard of Spearfish? Well, that is a little college town out in the Black Hills of South Dakota, one of the beauty spots of God's creation. I recently enjoyed the grand privilege of meeting the Saints in that place, and I wish to say they are a "royal bunch" and are alive to the latter-day work, and as social entertainers they are par excellence.

The musical entertainment at the home of Brother Donald Plumb, which was mentioned in a recent issue of the HERALD, surely was a demonstration that does not have to visit the music halls of the large cities to hear good music. There is music and culture right out in the mountains of South Dakota, and it is surely playing a great part in the upbuilding of God's work in that place. It is truly an inspiration to meet such live wires as these, and it does one good to see such noble souls being gathered into the family and fold of God.

I will soon spend a Sunday with the Saints at Fargo, North Dakota, with whom I have spent several Sundays, and which privilege I always appreciate.

Yours in the faith,

J. B. JORDAN.

SOUTH SIDE STATION,
OMAHA, NEBRASKA, June 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: We want to let you know we are awake.

Our Sunday school is betting along fine, although since moving from the old quarters we lost a few and some have dropped out on account of hard times. We still have about twenty-eight and the promise of more soon. Preaching services are not very well attended, although we are looking forward to better attendance. Brother Hubert Case is going to start a series of meetings in a short while and it will give us a little start.

The hastening time is certainly here, and very few here seem to realize it. We cannot see that we have done any good here, but many have been warned. Brother Steele has a large tea and coffee route and has a chance of seeing and conversing with a great many more than can be reached in the pulpit, and they seem to all agree with him, still don't come out to church. Brother Eden of Omaha brought his class down. They are a fine bunch of young men. It makes one more enthused to see the young folks take such active part in church work. Dear Saints, let us pray for the young of the church everywhere. They need our prayers more now than ever before. There is so much to entice them away—more than there was for us, and we don't know what is before them, so let us remember them and encourage them. We don't see very many of the missionaries as it is a little out of their way over here. If Brother T. H. Outhouse sees this, I would like to hear from him.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. GEORGE W. STEELE.

4733 South Fourteenth Street.

WHITETAIL, MONTANA, June 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: The result of a little effort is recently shown in the branch at Andes, Montana. Everyone that could was requested to come to the church on Saturday afternoon, April 28, for the purpose of sending them in every direction from the church within a radius of six miles and extend a personal invitation to every family to attend our services. Elder J. A. Bronson had arranged to preach some special sermons during the Sundays of the month of May. The people responded very well. Where the average attendance of the Sunday school had always been fifty or less, the attendance May 6 was eighty-two; the 13th, eighty-nine; the 20th, ninety-nine; and on May 27, one hundred and ten, and this is a new country, twenty miles from the railroad. The evening service had always been poorly attended on account of the distance most everyone lived from the church. And, too, the habit we had gotten into of excusing ourselves from making the trip twice, or being out after night on the road. But now at the evening services the church is packed, and even larger crowds have been out at night than at the morning services. It has brought an awakening to the members and much better feeling between all of us.

Fraternally,

JAMES C. PAGE.

KUTCH, COLORADO, June 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have much enjoyed the letters published in the HERALD, although I do not see it very often. I have been a member of the church hardly a year, having been a Methodist prior to August, 1916. I was much prejudiced against Latter Day Saints and it was only after much reading, talking and careful thought that I became convinced of the truth. I am glad it was made clear to me, and hope I may be the means of bringing others to the faith.

My people consider me almost a disgrace to the family; first, because I married a "Mormon preacher" as they call him, and especially as I became a "Mormon" myself. They will not read the literature I send them and do not believe what I tell them about our church. They are sorry I am so deluded and mistaken, and my mother wrote to my sister that I had broken her heart. All this is quite a cross for me to bear, and I feel as though my faith and sincerity are tested in this way.

There are no churches of any kind near here, and only two families of Saints besides ourselves. We miss the church privileges, and the opportunities to help the cause are few.

I read with interest, the article in the HERALD of January 17, 1917, on "An educated ministry." I think all ministers should be educated. Not that education is all that is necessary, but all public speakers should use correct language. Those who are in the ministry should constantly strive to improve themselves. An elder who has been preaching for more than twenty-five years, used very poor grammar, and this, in a measure turned me against the church, and delayed my conversion. I tried to be honest and not think of that, but it naturally grates on educated ears, to hear a minister of the gospel make so many mistakes. You know a school-teacher is inclined to notice such things. Since joining the church, a worthy elder lessened the effect of a remarkably good sermon, by several times reiterating, "Ye must be BORNED again!" To me, such an error seems inexcusable in a man of middle age. I do not contend that lack of education should debar a man, (young or old) from preaching, if God calls him to preach. I only say that if he remains ignorant and uneducated, he is not worthy the honor conferred upon him. As F. J. Ebeling writes, an illiterate man may accomplish much, but how much more might he accomplish with a good education?

Your sister in the faith,

DELPHINE BOZARTH.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, June 11, 1917.

Editors Herald: There has been no word from Bay City for some time, but we are at our post, having heard the call to active service, if not for our country in a special way, at least in the war of right against wrong.

Brother O. J. Hawn has been returned to us and we realize more than ever the necessity of being represented at the General Conference and conventions. So much of good counsel and helpful suggestion is to be obtained that we are sure the Saints in any branch will feel amply repaid for having borne their part of any expense attached.

We are expecting to begin work at once on the repairing of our church, which will include painting the basement, Sunday school room, etc. Having the best thing in the world, we wish to make our meeting place as attractive as possible.

Our meetings are all good. Among the best are the monthly meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary, held the first Sunday in each month at six p. m. These are enjoyed not only by us as women but find hearty support of the brethren, especially of the priesthood.

Services are held each night except Monday and Saturday. The second in each month Brother Hawn addresses the G. A. R. members in their hall, the result of these services being several real live men and women uniting with the church.

Though we realize that these are indeed perilous times, yet we feel encouraged to go on and are glad we are living in the church now and may, if faithful, help to prepare men and women for Christ's return.

Altogether the work is advancing and we are hopeful for better things to come.

Your coworker,

706 North Linn.

E. A. SMITH.

TOLEDO, OHIO, June 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are still on the map and trying to do our duty. Brother J. F. Mintun, having been sent here from Des Moines, Iowa, arrived on June 11. We are certainly glad to have him in our midst, and know he will be of much help to our branch. It has been rather discouraging to us, as so many of the Saints have been moving away. Yet we have much to be thankful for. It is good to have health and plenty to do with, and most of all to have God's Holy Spirit to be with us and direct in this time of need. We feel as though complaining is wrong, when we look around and see the condition the world is in to-day. We are promised never to be left alone, so long as we do our part.

The Saints here at Toledo are awake to the fact now more than ever that it is necessary for each one of us to put his shoulders to the wheel and push. As we do not want to leave anything undone that the Lord has for us to do, we must keep at work.

Dear Saints, let us pray more for one another, that we may live more faithfully and be found at all times doing the Lord's will.

Your sister,

MEDA OWEN.

The Christmas Offering--Roll of Honor

As we send this in, three more report their names for the roll of honor: Elk Mills, Maryland; First Chicago, Illinois; Martinsburg, Nebraska; Coal Hill, Missouri. How many more may we hear from who have doubled their offering of last year? This makes thirteen.

Elk Mills. "We are not going to stop at $2, a member, but shall continue on giving so as to make up any shortage that may occur in any other schools. Up to date we have not only doubled last year's offering, but have three times as much. Many of the children in the Sunday school are working at various things, doing garden work, cutting grass, feeding chickens, running errands, etc. They have become enthused with the work. Our plan of keeping the offering constantly before the children and others is that each month the name of the child, in each department that has paid the most for that month, is placed on the blackboard.—O. P. Humes."

First Chicago. "We have now raised more than three times our last year's offering and are planning on making at least $200 by the end of the year.—Mrs. H. H. Vanderflute."

Martinsburg. "We now have more than double the amount we had last year. The entire school is very much enthused and each one is trying to help. We have decided to raise at least $50. This is not very much, but we have only a total enrollment of seventeen—five of these in the beginner class.—Esther Butterworth."

Coal Hill. "On June 3 our Sunday school gave to our bishop $9.75 to send to Brother McGuire. Our last year's offering amounted to but $8.25. We hope to send in more by the first of July. We hope our efforts will cause our Sunday school to be among the first published in the church papers.—Gertie Budd, superintendent."

Dear Saints: We are asking the Sunday schools to do a very great work this year—greater than ever before in this particular respect. You may not be a Sunday school worker, you may not take an active part in the Sunday school Christmas offering. If you do not you are missing one of the greatest opportunities of your life to further the work of our Master. Have you been an enthusiastic worker in the Lord's cause? If not you possibly have missed much, and it is not alone what you have missed personally, but what have you kept from others by not being enthusiastic? Have you ever watched the enthusiastic worker, how he has drawn others to him, how he has succeeded where you have thought "there was no use?"

The little folks need your support—your enthusiasm—be interested in them, encourage them in their efforts to make this Christmas offering one great big success, and above all do your part—if you do not we will not succeed. You do not want to be one who would assist in the failure of a good cause? We are sure you do not—now, let us all work together—you and I.

A letter has been sent to every superintendent whose address we have. When you hear him making an appeal to you and the Sunday school for cooperation in this offering movement, be the first to respond—do not wait a moment—do not procrastinate. If you do not hear from your superintendent regarding this letter ask him about it, ask others about it, talk it, and let us see what we can do this year, by starting right now.

CHRIST WANTS THE BEST

Christ wants the best. He, in the far-off ages Once claimed the firstling of the flock, the finest of the wheat,
And still he asks his own in gentlest pleading,
To lay their highest hopes and brightest talents at his feet.
He'll not forget the feeblest service, humblest love;
He only asks that of our store, we give to him
The Best We Have.

Christ gives the best, he takes the hearts we offer
And fills them with his glorious joy and peace,
And in his service as we're growing stronger
The calls to grand achievements still increase.
The richest gifts for us on earth or in the heaven above,
Are hid in Christ. In Jesus we receive
The Best We Have.

And is our best too much? Our loving service
For his sake? Oh, friend, let us remember
How once our Lord poured out his soul for us,
And in the prime of his mysterious manhood
Gave up his precious life upon the cross!
The Lord of lords, by whom the world was made,
Through bitter grief and tears, gave us
The Best He Had.

—Author Unknown.

He gave us "The best He had," how wonderful the thought!
Here we have a beautiful example of "Service for others."

We now have the privilege of giving for him. Our Christmas offerings will assist in keeping his beautiful gospel before the people that they may learn of him—here we have again "Service for others."

Our desire is to more than double last year's Christmas offering—this means work for every Sunday school, every member of our great church.

You who failed to give your portion in last year's offering, will you not give to him who gave so much to you? And you who gave last year will you not double your efforts this year?

If you are not a member of a Sunday school your offerings will be gladly received and accounted for—send them to the bishop—now—to-day. Do not wait—you may forget.

ARTHUR W. SMITH,

Second Assistant Sunday School Superintendent.
SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

and win the war. Mr. Hoover states the letter is being sent to pastors throughout the country. We have no doubt that the day will be observed by our people everywhere. It is not only a question of winning the war but provision will also need to be made for feeding this country and the world after the war, at least until the succeeding harvest can be gathered.

The Board of Publication

In their second meeting of the conference year, held this time at Independence, the board have been considering some important reorganization plans affecting the publishing interests of the church. Some appointments have been made but the list is incomplete and they prefer that we do not publish them until they may be made in full. Recognizing the fact of the increased cost of living and the increased allowance to missionaries' families, together with the fact that some of the employees are receiving less than just wants and needs, as well as that some are receiving less than the missionary allowance, they have provided for an increase in some cases where needed, but not to exceed ten per cent. The manager has presented the matter of stewardship both at the Herald Publishing House and the Ensign Publishing House and some who had not done so have now filed inventories and expressed a full willingness to work on a stewardship basis, under the direction of the bishopric. This fact was laid before the board prior to the above action on wages. All books and tracts are to be published at the Herald Publishing House.

President Smith in Colorado

We are advised that President F. M. Smith expected to leave with his family Saturday, June 23, for Colorado where he has secured a cottage for the summer. This step is made necessary on account of his wife's health. She was seriously ill shortly before General Conference. It is to be strongly hoped that this will give her a full opportunity to recuperate for her important duties in the church, her home and the Woman's Auxiliary. President Smith will take his office work with him and have mail forwarded to him regularly. Doubtless he will prefer that his mail as usual be directed to Independence, as thus routine matters can receive immediate attention under his general directions. But he makes a point of reading and answering all letters personally, letters requiring such answer, and keeping in close touch with the weekly reports, most of which he reads personally. Upon his return from the East he found five hundred letters requiring attention.

Woman Suffrage

As one of the democratic effects of war, woman suffrage is making more rapid progress in all English speaking countries. The Associate Editor has for many years considered woman suffrage as a logical outcome of democracy. The chief objection twenty years ago was the lack of interest on the part of women. But they are now awakening to the splendid work lying before them, work for which they are peculiarly adapted, and to a recognition of the fact that woman is and should be a citizen as much as man and bear the duties of citizenship without neglect of the home and family. It is curious to note that in the greater part of Canada and western United States where frontier conditions exist and woman has done her "bit" and is doing it, full suffrage is the result. The extreme east and south, Quebec and Mexico, are still black, so far as woman suffrage is concerned. Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois have presidential suffrage, Arkansas primary suffrage, but Iowa and Missouri are still unconverted.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Presidency

BRITISH MISSION

In addition to those named in the appointments for British Mission in last week's HERALD, the name of John Bailey should be listed, Local, Stockport objective, Manchester District.
FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

FLORIDA DISTRICT

Elder D. M. Rudd has handed to the First Presidency his resignation, as president of the Florida District, which resignation has been accepted. The Presidency has asked Brother J. W. McKnight to act as president pro tem of the district until the convening of the next district conference. We thoroughly recommend Brother J. W. McKnight to the Saints of the Florida District and bespeak for him your hearty cooperation.
FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

MICHIGAN DISTRICT

Elder Thomas Hartnell has presented his resignation as president of the Western Michigan District, and the Presidency has accepted it. Acting upon his suggestion we appointed Brother John Schreur, now vice president, president pro tem until the convening of the next district conference. We cheerfully commend Brother Schreur to the Saints of the Western Michigan District, and ask for him your hearty support.
Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

NOTICE TO THE MINISTRY

The presidency has received a large number of requests from missionaries for tracts. Many have applied without specifying what particular tracts they desired or the number of each. When applying to the Presidency for literature for distribution it will be necessary for the requisition to be specific. We are pleased to note the interest taken in the matter, and advise that the ministry study the methods of tract distribution. They should not be distributed promiscuously for this would entail much waste. In many instances it will be even better to charge a nominal amount for the literature handed out.
FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

Conference Minutes

Reunion Notices

Prices of wall tents for the Clinton District reunion at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 24 to September 2: 8 by 10, $2.75; 10 by 12, $3.50; 10 by 14, $4.50; cots 60 cents each. Please write the undersigned at Holden, Missouri, as to your wants. Send remittance with order if possible. H. E. Moler.

The central Texas conference and reunion are called off owing to the fact that the entire State of Texas is undergoing one of the most severe drouths ever known in the State. This was done after careful thought and due consideration. The district officers will remain as at present until the February conference and conventions. The place and date of these will be announced later. B. F. Spicer, district president.

To the Saints of the Southern Ohio District: Being unable to secure a suitable place to hold our reunion in Wellston, and in consultation with Apostle G. T. Griffiths we have decided to call off the reunion for this year and have a four-day meeting at Wellston, from September 20 to 23. Conference will convene at 10 a. m. on the 22d. We hope to see large gatherings at these meetings. Arthur Allen, district president, Wellston, Ohio, box 922.

A circular letter was written that there would be two reunions in the Western Oklahoma District this year, but owing to crop shortage, we have decided to have but one, which will be held at the home of Elder A. W. Saunders, Calumet, Oklahoma, July 27 to August 5. Sunday school convention will be held August 2, and conference the 3d. All Saints that will need tents should write their needs to A. W. Saunders at once, as tents are going to be hard to obtain this year. Those coming from a distance will be met at trains, and other accommodations as usual will be had. Lemuel Dyke, district secretary, Eagle City, Oklahoma.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

REPENTANCE

(Synopsis of sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, September 10, 1916.)

Scripture reading: Acts 2: 22-42.

My theme to-night is one that might be considered rather unpleasant or unpopular. It is naturally associated with sackcloth and ashes. Jesus said on a certain occasion, "If the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes." (Matthew 11: 21.)

In those days people were more emotional and perhaps more demonstrative than they are to-day. They sometimes felt their guilt and sorrow so keenly that they clothed themselves in sackcloth and sprinkled ashes on their heads. We do not do that now. It does not follow, however, that many people do not feel just as keenly the sins of guilt. If you could see some of the letters of confession that come to the office of the First Presidency from time to time you would admit this to be the fact. These confessions come unsolicited from men and women who feel the keenest anguish because of their lost integrity or purity.

HEART-WRUNG CONFESSION

Why do they make such confessions? It is because they are wrung from them by anguish of heart that does not allow them any rest either by day or by night, until they have made confession to some one whom they believe to be in authority.

It is my purpose to tell you how this sorrow may be used as a means of salvation. We might be asked why we present this principle when it is of such a painful nature. We answer that we do so because it is one of the principles of the gospel.

I call your attention to the first three verses of the sixth chapter of Hebrews:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God.

Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And this will we do, if God permit.

THE FOUNDATION

You will notice that Paul here names the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ, which he terms the foundation. These passages are frequently quoted from our pulpits, but they have lost none of their force and fidelity because of this frequent use, and in order that you may apprehend their true significance, I want to present you something about this man Paul, who is the author of this declaration.

PAUL'S MESSAGE

It is said of him in Acts 9: 15: "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel."

We may not be kings, but one thing is sure, we are either Jews or Gentiles, so Paul is a special messenger to us.

It is said further concerning him, in Acts 22: 14: "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth."

Paul, then, is a special messenger to us, and one who knows the will of God. I have sometimes wondered how it happened that all the reformers and creed makers passed by this system of faith so concisely set forth by the Apostle Paul, a confession of faith that we might term the Pauline Creed. I cannot understand why they did so unless it is in harmony with the statement made by Isaiah, that the wisdom of their wise men shall perish. That imminent convocation of learned divines that met at Westminster to draft the Westminster Confession of Faith, might very well have adopted this confession of faith at their first session and adjourned. All of their labor and pains might thus have been spared, and have thus been more nearly in harmony with the word of God.

OUR EPITOME OF FAITH

It remained for Joseph Smith and his associates to adopt this confession of faith practically as it stands, coming to us as it does from one who has a special message for us, and one who knows the will of God. In our Epitome of Faith, published as early as 1842, and still issued by the church, we find the following statement:

We believe these ordinances [the ordinances of the gospel] are: Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ. Repentance. Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. We believe in the resurrection of the body; that the dead in Christ will rise first, and the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired. We believe in the doctrine of eternal judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded, or punished, according to the degree of good, or evil, they shall have done.

This is the only attempt that I call to mind that the church has ever made to formulate in a single document a statement of faith that might be called a creed, and you notice that it is exactly in harmony in every particular with this statement made by Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. This statement of faith is complete and all inclusive. It takes a man from the first dawning of faith as it comes to him at his mother's knee, or under the instruction of the preacher, carries him through the necessary repentance, the waters of regeneration and baptism, the reception of the Holy Spirit, as a guide through this life and through the resurrection into the very presence of God in the eternal judgment. It is complete and adequate. Nothing need be added to it, and we should owe an apology if we take anything from it.

We must remember, however, that it should be accompanied by the further statement of Paul, that having yielded obedience to the principles of the gospel so far as we can, we should go on to perfection.

An aged sister was lamenting the conduct of her husband, during a prayer service at one of our reunions. She said she wished he would obey the gospel. He rather resented her statement, and said, "I don't see why she should say that she wished I would obey the gospel when I have been baptized three times." His idea of the gospel seemed to be that he should be baptized repeatedly.

Paul seems to have been addressing that class of people, and he exhorted them, that having been baptized and yielded obedience to these principles, they should go on to perfection.

A DOCTRINE OF CHRIST

We present the doctrine of repentance then because it is one of the principles of the gospel, or doctrine of Christ, and Paul says, in Romans 1:16:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

Also Timothy 4:16:

Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

It is written in 2 John 9:

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

It is the principle that Jesus himself preached.

Mark 1:14 says:

Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God.

PENTECOST

Let us go back now to the situation set forth in our scriptural lesson in the second chapter of Acts. It was the day of Pentecost, and the disciples assembled in harmony with the instruction of the Master that they should tarry at Jerusalem until they were endowed with power from on high, received a wonderful baptism of the Holy Spirit. They had spoken in tongues, and prophesied until the attention of the multitude had been attracted. Peter said of these manifestations, that they were in fulfillment of the statement of Joel,

The day shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy.

Peter did not say that this was the fulfillment of the prediction of Joel as to what should occur in the last days, but that is the same thing that should come in the last days. We have seen some of these manifestations at our recent reunion. Many of the people on that occasion, however, alleged that the disciples were drunken, just as they did when these wonderful gifts were given to our people at the dedication of the Kirtland Temple. Lieutenant Gunnison, in his work, says that the Saints had spent the day drinking, and that these gifts were the result. The charge was just as true in one instance as in the other.

When Peter stood up to preach he knew that he was facing the men who had been parties to the murder of Christ. He knew that they would not hesitate to murder him if he should incur their enmity by any accusation. Yet he did not hesitate to declare to them the whole gospel of God, and charge them with having crucified the Lord of glory. After he had done so, the record states that they were pricked in their hearts and cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Evidently the Spirit of God began to work in their hearts. This was not the baptism of the Spirit that came to them later as a Comforter, but on this occasion the Spirit was with them as an accuser, and it acts in these two functions of the Holy Ghost. The preaching of Peter alone was not adequate to bring this change.

We frequently observe that we may talk to people, and preach to them, and argue with them until we are discouraged and almost black in the face, as the saying is, and we cannot seem to effect any change in them. But then the Spirit of God comes into their hearts as it did in the hearts of some during our recent reunion, and they are given hearts of flesh to take the place of hearts of stone that they have previously had. When we argue with men they set up arguments to meet our arguments that seem, at least, to be adequate and even—

If convinced against their will,
They are men of the same opinion still.

The Holy Spirit is spoken of in the Book of Covenants as being sharper than a two-edged sword, even to the dividing of the joints and marrow. It is the still small voice that arouses the inner man to activity. We must remember, however, that the experiences of these men came after Peter had declared the word to them. And so in our experience. We are required to denounce wrong and proclaim in favor of right, and after that is done in order that it may be available, we may expect the Spirit of God to come in and convey the message to the hearts of the people. The preaching must be done, because Paul says that it pleases God to save the world by the foolishness of preaching. But reason and logic, however, in preaching, are not sufficient, but must be accompanied and followed by the Spirit of God, that was able to touch the hearts of the people on the day of Pentecost. We notice a statement made on that occasion: "Then they that gladly received his words were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." Their example certainly is worthy of emulation.

Note the answer that Peter gave to an inquiry on that occasion:

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

These people already believed; they had taken one step. They were told to repent, which was the second step, and to be baptized, which was the third. So in this brief statement Peter included three of the principles of the gospel, and so far as he went, it was exactly in harmony with Paul's statement of the principles of the doctrine of Christ.

THE CHURCH AND THE WAR

Many requests are coming in for a definition of the position of the church in regard to war. It must be clear to anyone who reads the church literature that as a church and as Christians we are very strongly opposed to war. In addition to the teachings of Jesus against violent resistance and in favor of peace we find in the Doctrine and Covenants Zion is referred to as the New Jerusalem, a city of peace, of refuge and of safety. (45: 12, 13.)

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13.

Therefore, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of their children to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3.

In pursuance of this, on April 10, 1911, the General Conference passed the following resolution:

Whereas, We look with favor upon the growing sentiment throughout the civilized world in favor of peace and against war, and a resort to arbitration in both international and national disputes, and

Whereas, the Lord has commanded the church to "renounce war and proclaim peace," also to "lift up an ensign of peace and make a proclamation of peace unto the ends of the earth," therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the ministry and delegates of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in conference assembled at Lamoni, Iowa, this 11th day of April, 1911, unreservedly commit ourselves to the conservation of world peace.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, also the Senate and House of Representatives.—Conference Resolution No. 663.

FOR PEACE

The church as such is an advocate of peace and peaceful settlement of wrongs, whether of individuals or of nations. The leading officials are likewise advocates of peace, of conciliation and of judicial settlement of difficulties, of individuals or of nations or races. No other position could well be taken by the church as a representative of the lowly Nazarene.

Further than this, the church is not a national church, but international. Its heart bleeds for the suffering of all people. It must stand for peace with righteousness. In the present great war it is represented by members upon both sides.

GERMANY

But as individuals and as a Nation we may fairly, justly and truly urge that America has no war against the German people. The splendid research which has found its home in German universities, the critical analysis of many problems, the work in philosophy and in science, the German land as a home of poetry and of music is well recognized and appreciated. The steps that have been taken for efficient city governments, for the protection of the workingmen for old age and sickness and the splendid qualities which are shown and appreciated in its citizens who have settled in America, are all recognized.

There is no desire to take from them one particle of land or drop of blood. But there is a war against autocracy and that military despotism which has threatened and still threatens the peace of the whole world and which has now involved it in war. The fight is on behalf of personal liberty and democracy in Germany as well as elsewhere, and to insure the future peace of the world. For this military domination has for many years, even before the outbreak of the present war, threatened not only Europe but also America. As a nation the question is not of war or of peace, but it has come to the point where it is war at home in our own land or to end it quickly in this war abroad.

The church by its organization is opposed to autocracy and favors human rights and human liberty. The church, in fact, if we analyze it correctly, is the very quintessence of democracy, aristocracy and monarchy, in that it becomes the kingdom of God yet possesses in the purest sense the principles of democracy.

As a world church we cannot take a further position except for peace against war, for democracy against autocracy, and for righteousness against evil.

The question becomes an individual one. Those who are citizens of the United States owe to her the right of liberty of conscience and personal freedom. The fact that we are in the world and are a part of it is recognized at once by the Bible (John 17) and also by latter-day revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8).

THE LAW OF WAR

As individuals we recognize that holy writ is full of prophecy of the evil and wars which are to be poured out upon the nations of the earth when peace shall be taken from the earth (1: 6). "The wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 9.

As the law governing, we have the 95th section, the fifth and sixth paragraphs. From the latter we quote as follows:

Behold, this is the law I gave unto my servant, Nephi; and thy father, Joseph, and Jacob, and Isaac, and Abraham, and all my ancient prophets and apostles. And again, this is the law that I gave unto mine ancients, that they should not go out unto battle against any nation, kindred, tongue, or people, save I, the Lord, commanded them. And if any nation, tongue, or people should proclaim war against them, they should first lift a standard of peace unto that people, nation or tongue, and if that people did not accept the offering of peace, neither the second nor the third time, they should bring these testimonies before the Lord; then, I, the Lord, would give unto them a commandment, and justify them in going out to battle against that nation, tongue or people, and I, the Lord, would fight their battles, and their children's battles and their children's children until they had avenged themselves on all their enemies, to the third and fourth generation; behold, this is an ensample unto all people, saith the Lord, your God, for justification before me.

This appears to justify war in some circumstances at least. Certainly the American Government has lifted an ensign of peace for the third and fourth time, if not more, before decreeing that peace was no longer possible. Now there are some of these passages which state the Lord will fight our battles. That is our hope, yet it appears that in times past, at least part of the burden has rested upon the people. Zion has not yet been established as the Lord has directed. The question is asked of the necessity of the work of the ministry, Should we ask for exemption simply to avoid this conscription, or will it be with a deep determination to make a personal sacrifice and a devoted effort to establish Zion?

As has already been pointed out in these columns, the economic plan for the establishment of Zion was given over eighty years ago. We were told that Zion might have been redeemed even now (in 1834), but we would not. But now the world is coming to that point, and the Government through income taxes is reaching out after surplus property. Four years ago a law was given in regard to unnecessary wants, also to pay the church debts. (Already we see the time is coming for its compulsory fulfillment. While it is yet day what should we do? Should we obey God or continue as in the past? That is the especial problem of the church.

SUPERRESISTANCE

Effective nonresistance is not a negative matter, but rather the superlative power of spirit over matter. It requires a change in the individual as is pointed out by our extracts from "Superresistance," which will appear next week. Yet it seems plain, as citizens of the country, our young men are subject to draft the same as any others. And if they go, they should go with courage and with strength, not with fear and shrinking. Surely our Father can protect them one place as well as another. It is not a matter of choice. Perhaps as has been indicated some will claim exemption while not really entitled thereto. Yet should we stand for democracy. A real conscientious objector deserves serious consideration and treatment.

We note that the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America stand ready to try to protect their

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 1

BY J. F. MINTUN

[This begins a series of articles under the above title by Elder J. F. Mintun. He assures us that he has verified and reverified most carefully the quotations used. The series should prove of interest to many of our readers, enabling them to better appreciate the religious views of others. The extracts are by no means exhaustive, but they should at least help us to value the religious efforts and beliefs of others. It is with this purpose in view that they are printed.—EDITORS.]

INTRODUCTION

Many exposes have been written by those who have pretended to be fair in the representation of the faith of others, which are now in existence, nearly all of which have been written with the especial object of financially profiting the author; a few being written because of a personal antipathy to the faith or church about which they have written, and fewer still with the better object of correctly presenting the facts to the minds of the readers in a way that would be helpful to them in determining the truth, gathered from the friends and acknowledged representatives of the faith or church written about.

The latter object is the only one the author of this work has in view. That this object may be fully realized the writer has made copious extracts from various authors who have written as friends of the various faiths represented with a desire to see how many points of agreement exist between the so-called Christian and the heathen religions, and between the different so-called Christians; besides, to determine, so far as possible in a work so brief as this of necessity must be, all the good in each and all of the various phases of religion, and trace the origin of all this good to the one common source: God. Then leaving the differences that may exist in any of these religious bodies to be expressed by those who claim to be friends to that form of religion; and the differences between any one of these religions and the religion of Jesus Christ to be largely determined by the reader, he to conclude which of all these is the one most to be desired.

It should be the aim of every person to seek the good, and to acknowledge it when found. Many lose a large part of the enjoyment of this life, and largely destroy their influence for the bettering of the human race by being too narrow in their estimation of where good is to be found, thinking there is no good, nothing of a Godlike character only with them. A beautiful thought is expressed, upon and in harmony with this subject, by John H. Barrows D. D., president of the religious congress, held at Chicago, Illinois in 1876, when in his opening remarks he said:

It is perfectly evident to all illuminated minds that we should cherish loving thoughts of all people, and humane views of all the great and lasting religions, and whoever would advance the cause of his own faith must first discover and gratefully acknowledge the truths contained in all other faiths.

The writer has also another object in mind, and that is to prove himself a true friend to those in error, by placing in their hands a means—I do not claim for it the ablest nor the most perfect means—that the ones in error may discover at least some of their errors and to take advantage of such discovery by making an exchange of their mistakes for that which is correct and of God, or at least start the readers on the road of investigation and in pursuit of truth, for which in time they will be willing to exchange all their errors as fast as discovered.

All religions, both so-called heathen and Christian, which do not correctly represent the truth of Him they all claim as the author, and they all claim to spring from the revealments of God to the race at some time in the history of the world cannot be what they claim to be. These all had for their beginning some gospel dispensation, the truths of which became changed and modified to suit the dispositions of the peoples of different nations without any instruction from the Lord, hence arose these contradictory faiths. No religion claims to go back previous to man's contemplated existence. Different peoples ascribe the beginning of man's existence on earth to different periods of time, and yet uncertainty as to the exact time, and the number of years that are past of his existence is about the only certainty that exists, and no people seem to have possession of unmistakable evidence upon this point. Nearly all religions claim to have had their beginnings with man's existence, whether that be thousands or tens of thousands of years in the past. The heathen religionist claims to teach the same truths taught by Jesus Christ centuries before the babe of Bethlehem was born, but none claim to have had an existence before he claims to have had an existence, for he was in the beginning with God, and "without him was nothing made that was made." (John 1:3.)

All religions had for their earthly author some great and good personage, who at the time of his existence on the earth was not received by the majority, but suffered opposition and persecution, which finally resulted in his death. Scriptural history reveals the fact that nearly all the great and good of all ages, and especially those prominent in the representation of God, have been severely persecuted, many of whom have been put to death, from righteous Abel to the last one prominent as a religious representative.

Besides all this history, it is a prominent truth taught in all ages that one would come who should give his life for the good of the race, and whenever the gospel has been advocated, the atonement has been the prominent theme. Hence the consistent source from whence has sprung the agreement in all religions relative to one good person being the author of truth who was or should be crucified, and an agreement or similarity in many of the doctrines advocated and principles indorsed.

Because of this similarity, and the claim made by many of the larger religious organizations that claim to be Christian, that the gospel was not taught previous to the birth of Jesus the Christ, the skeptic has concluded that the Christian religion was largely borrowed from the religions called heathen, for they existed previous to the birth of Jesus of Nazareth, and they taught many of the same truths he taught, of which it is claimed he was the author. But it will have been noticed that the Bible presents the fact that the gospel was from the beginning, and that as soon as man fell a subject to sin, and thus needed salvation, there was revealed to him the atonement and the principles that should govern him in securing complete redemption from sin and all its consequences. This should be borne in mind all the way through the examination of these differing faiths, in which are some of these similarities that indicate as the author the same intelligence.

SO-CALLED HEATHEN RELIGIONS

It will be noticed by the most casual observer that there are many theories that form a part of the so-called heathen religions that are in harmony with or very similar to the theories of the so-called Christian religions, but this condition should not be wondered at when it is known that from one blood all the nations of the earth originated; that the one creator is God to them all, and has from the very beginning revealed to his creature, man, the way of life and salvation; and that all that relates to man's salvation has come through the Christ. For "there is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby man shall be saved," was taught by one of his earthly representatives. He taught that "no man can come to the Father but by me." (John 14: 6.) He is the "author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him," as another of his representatives declares. (Hebrews 5: 9.) Especially should there be no surprise at this by those who profess to believe that in the Bible is a correct representation of the work of the Christ as relates to the salvation of mankind. Some have concluded that Jesus Christ copied from the religions which existed before he was manifested in the flesh, this being the legitimate outcome of an erroneous opinion that the religion of Jesus Christ, or the gospel of Jesus Christ was the result of the birth, life and death of Jesus, who was born of the virgin Mary, and that this system of religious principles never had been propagated previously upon the earth.

But much evidence is contained in the Bible of the most positive character that the gospel work of Jesus Christ, including the atonement, was from the beginning of time.

In 1 Peter 1: 19, 20, we have this:

But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot; who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world.

In Revelation 13: 8 we are informed that Christ was a "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

From these evidences we can understand why Abel's gift was accepted of God and Cain's was not, and how it can be consistently said that "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain." (Hebrews 11: 4.)

It is evident that since "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," (Romans 10: 17) that God had instructed both Cain and Abel in regard to their duty in offering sacrifices, and the object of such offerings, and Abel was moved by faith in what the Lord had said.

Enoch walked with God (Genesis 5: 24), which could not be unless God had instructed him how to walk.

Noah was a preacher of righteousness (2 Peter 2: 5), which righteousness was revealed in the gospel of Christ. (Romans 1: 16, 17.)

Melchisedec was priest of the most high God, and after the order of the Son of God (Genesis 14: 18; Hebrews 5: 6, 10), and "brought forth bread and wine," and blessed Abraham, the father of the faithful, to whom was the gospel preached (Galatians 3: 8).

Then Moses preached the gospel; so says the writer of the letter to the Hebrews (4: 1, 2).

When it is understood that the religion of Jesus Christ was revealed in the beginning to the first sinner, and when obeyed brought the light of life to the obedient one, and that when through the carnal ways of sinners this system was corrupted, there always remain some of the prominent features of the original. In every dispensation in which the gospel has been restored and represented, and then corrupted, there have remained features of the system in common. So one can plainly see that these systems have had a common origin, a true revelation, and then have been corrupted by sinners. Then when the true system is again revealed the conclusion is advocated that the author of it is but a copyist, instead of a restorer of that which was lost, as was Jesus in the meridian of time.

I can only present features of these so-called heathen religions, but, by the help of God, will present those most prominent, and will show the true nature of the religion being represented.

EGYPTIAN RELIGION

Of the Egyptian religion, J. A. S. Grant, a Bey of Cairo, Egypt, says, of the human body:

The ancient Egyptians believed that the living human body consisted of three parts: First, Sahoo, the fleshy substantial body; Second, Ka, the double. It was the exact counterpart of the substantial body, only it was spiritual, and could not be seen. It was an intelligence that permeated all through the body and guided its different physical functions, such as digestion, etc.; . . . Third, Ba. The Ba corresponds to our soul, or rather, spirit.—Religious Congress, p. 148.

Of the worship of God:

The ancient Egyptians, however, although accused of animal worship, saw in these animals attributes of their one nameless God, and originally, their apparent adoration of an animal was in reality adoration of their God for one or other of his beneficent attributes. . . . The ancient Egyptians figured the attributes of their one God, and in due time each of these figures was worshipped as a separate deity.—Ibid., 149.

Of the conditions in the beginning:

God dwelt with man till man rebelled against him. A God-man (Osiris) had to come to the earth to deliver and do good to man. He, however, was sacrificed, having been killed by the evil principles, but only in as far as his human body was concerned, for he afterwards appeared in the next world as the judge of the dead, and his son, Horus, who came from his father's dead body, manifested himself on the earth as the sun at sunrise to dispel darkness, and destroy the works of the wicked one.—Ibid., pp. 150, 151.

These statements of Mr. Grant sustain that which has previously been stated in reference to the similarity of the corrupted religions with the true religion of Jesus Christ as restored by him in the meridian of time.

HINDUISM

The religion of the Hindu, or Hinduism, had its origin with Brahma, but is somewhat modified to what it originally existed. The Brahmins of to-day are the first of four castes of the Hindus. Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva were the three persons of the trinity—Brahma being the first person—of the gods of the Hindus. He is considered as the author of the Vedas, the sacred works of Hinduism. From the representatives of Hinduism we quote that which will give an idea of the faith of Hinduism in general.

Of the Gods Believed In. Manilal N. Dvivedi says:

Agni, and Vishni, and Indra, and Rudra are indeed so many names of different gods, but each of them had really a threefold aspect. . . . In the spiritual aspect all gods are one.

God, in the sense of a personal creator of the universe is not known in the Veda, and the highest effort of rationalistic thought in India has been to see God in the totality of all that is.

Upon this same subject of gods believed in, Swami Abhedananda says:

In no other scripture than the Vedas, in no other religion than that of Vedanta, is the personal God described as the father and the mother, the efficient and material cause of the universe. Nowadays liberal-minded Christians are trying to introduce the idea that God is both father and mother of the universe, but they do not realize that by so doing they are entirely upsetting the Christian conception of God, who dwells outside of nature and of the universe. He describes the motherly aspect as follows:

She is the father and protector of us all; she is the son and the creator; by her grace she saves from sin the souls of those who worship her. She gives to her children everything that is worth giving. She dwells in the forms of all devas, or bright spirits; she is all that is born and all that will be born. She is all in all.

A Hindu woman thinks that she is a part of the divine mother, nay, one with her. She looks upon all men and women of the world as her own children. She thinks of herself as the blessed mother of the world.

Views of an Idol. Dvivedi says:

It may be said without the least fear of contradiction that no Indian idolater as such believes the piece of stone, metal, or wood before his eyes to be his god in any sense of the word. He takes it only as a symbol of the all-pervading, and uses it as a convenient object for purposes of concentration, which being accomplished he does not hesitate to throw it away.

Vivekananda says:

Superstition is the enemy of man, but bigotry is worse. Why does a Christian go to church? Why is the cross holy? Why is the face turned toward the sky in prayer? Why are there so many images in the Catholic Church? Why are there so many images in the minds of Protestants when they pray? My brethren, we can no more think about anything without a material image than we can live without breathing.

The Vedas. Swami Vivekananda says:

The Hindus have received their religion through the revelation of the Vedas. They hold that the Vedas are without beginning and without end.

By the Vedas no books are meant. They mean the accumulated treasury of spiritual laws discovered by different persons in different times.

The Creation. Dvivedi says:

So, then, physically the two nyayas advocate the atomic theory of the universe. Ontologically they believe that these atoms move in accordance with the will of an extra-cosmic personal creature, called Isvara.

The Real Being, Man. Vivekananda says:

The Vedas declare, "No. I am a spirit living in a body. I am not the body. The body will die, but I will not die." So then the Hindu believes that he is a spirit. . . . In its very essence it is free, unbound, holy and pure and perfect. But somehow or other it has got itself bound down by matter, and thinks of itself as matter.

Dvivedi says:

Every being has a soul called Jiva, whose attributes are desire, intelligence, pleasure, pain, merit, demerit, etc.

Worship and Belief. Dvivedi says:

The Puranas have distinctively taught the unity of the All, and satisfactorily demonstrated that every creed and worship is but one of the many ways to the realization of the All. A Hindu would not condemn any man for his religion, for he has well laid to heart the celebrated couplet of the Bhagavati: "Worship, in whatever form, rendered to whatever god, reaches the Supreme, as rivers rising from whatever source all flow into the ocean."

I would submit the following simple principles for your consideration:

"First, Belief in the existence of an ultramaterial principle in nature and in the unity of the All.

"Second, Belief in reincarnation and salvation by action."

Rites and Their Relation. Dvivedi says:

I can, however, not pass over the well-known subject of the Samskaras, certain rites which under the Sutra every Hindu is bound to perform if he professes to be a Hindu. . . . The incumbent rites are such as every household is bound to observe for securing immunity from sin. . . . The optional rites refer to certain ceremonies in connection with the dead, whose souls are supposed to rest with the lunar Pitris for about a thousand years or more, before reincarnation. . . . By far the most important are the sixteen incidental Samskaras.

Man's Final State. Vivekananda says:

The Vedas teach that the soul is divine, only held under bondage of matter, and perfection will be reached when the bond shall burst. . . .

And they teach that this bondage can only fall off through the mercy of God, and this mercy comes to the pure.

And what becomes of man when he becomes perfect? He lives a life of bliss, infinite. He enjoys infinite and perfect bliss, having obtained the only thing in which man ought to have pleasure—God—and enjoys the bliss with God.

Unity Comes from Contradictions.

Unity and variety is the plan of nature, and the Hindu has recognized it. Every other religion lays down certain fixed dogmas, and tries to force society to adopt them. . . . The Hindus have discovered that the absolute can only be realized or thought of or stated through the relative, and the images, cross or crescent are simply so many centers, so many pegs to hang the spiritual ideas on. . . .

Why, then, are there so many contradictions? They are only apparent, says the Hindu. The contradictions come from the same truth adapting itself to the different circumstances of different natures.

[The next number of this series will take up Buddhism and some of its subdivisions, also Jainism.—EDITORS.]

In looking over an old letter from one L. N. B. Carpenter, we were interested in these statements: "On the earth at the present time there are 1,500,000,000 of the human family. I find by calculation, allowing two square feet to each individual that they could all stand on a territory equal to less than one half of one of the counties of Nebraska. There would be room for all who have existed from the days of Adam within the boundaries of the State of Nebraska."

STUDENTS! ALUMNI! PARENTS!

It is generally reported that some colleges and universities in this country will not reopen in September on account of the war. This rumor is baseless. Graceland College, along with the other colleges and universities of the country, will open at the usual time and continue its regular work. To announce this is enough to dispose of the rumor.

But a fallacious notion seems to lurk behind the rumor, and a further word is needed to repudiate it.

That fallacy is that college and university work is not so important, and that its continuance becomes less imperative during war time.

This is a dangerous notion and should be disowned. The very contrary is the truth.

One of the greatest and saddest calamities already obvious as a lamentable result of the war, for European nations, is that the intellectual flower of their population is being destroyed. A great swath of destruction has been cut through the ranks of educated young men who were to form the intellectual leaders of the coming generation. They are gone. The world has lost them. And those nations in the coming years will be by so much the weaker and less progressive, less able to master the future's problems.

It is for us to take warning from this lamentable example. We cannot afford to incur the same risk. We must keep the ranks of our educated men well filled.

We do not know how deeply the fate of war will ultimately spread death in our army. But we do know that the cessation of one year's full quota of educated men at our colleges and universities would be simply one whole year lost in the onward march of progress during the next generation.

We cannot afford to contemplate this. The ranks of the colleges and universities must be kept filled. Science must receive its full annual share of nourishment, and must continue to contribute its full annual share of results. Professors and students alike must not cease to assist in keeping alive the body politic, for science is the breath of life to the community. This war itself is a scientific war, and before it ends we shall need, as the other nations have already found, to continue unremittingly at the task of research and preparation.

That task, though not so sensationally obvious, is as indispensable and as honorable as the task of agriculture and manufactures.

Let us, therefore, fully understand that the ranks of the colleges and universities must be kept filled. And let us carry this message to others. Let each student who has decided to devote himself to military service make every effort that his vacant place in the army of science and learning shall be filled during the coming year by at least one other enlistment in college or professional school. There are enough and to spare among the ambitious men of this country to do this and more, without in the least detracting from the imperative needs of military service.

Let us make sure, then, that when the colleges and universities of America open in the fall, the ranks of science will not be depleted.

Unless the young people of the church, their parents and friends fully sense their responsibility in the present world crisis and take full advantage of the opportunity offered by the church college we shall be found far behind the world's procession at the close of the war in place of in the front ranks as we should be if we are to perform in an acceptable manner the task Divine Providence has imposed upon us.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS,

President Graceland College.

THE HASTENING TIME--Part 4

BY ALVIN KNISLEY

INDUSTRIAL WORKERS OF THE WORLD

Many men throughout the country having become dissatisfied with the slower methods and milder forms of dealing with the problem continuing to confront us began, a few years ago, to form themselves into an organization with the above name. As it is unfair to judge or to decide against any society or fraternity because of the misconduct of some of its members it would not by any means follow that the violence with which some of the votaries of this novel organization have sought to propagate their sentiments was the necessary fruitage of the organization itself. The fact that Ingersoll was a Republican is no argument that Republicanism is a system of skepticism. The fact that the clever and not-to-be-fooled Tom Watson inveighs against Catholicism and also the foreign missions of the various churches as they are conducted to-day does not by any means establish that the Populist system is to blame, or that such is a necessary ingredient of Populism.

But, when we go to the founders, leaders, or the representative assemblies of any society or organization and they give us to understand that their avowed purpose is one of force, of destruction, if they fail of success in any other way, then we know right where to land them. Then we are scarcely out of the way in imputing their lawbreaking excesses to central and federal contrivance and design. And that is just what the I. W. W. have avowed, and that is just what they have done. Hence, when in Oregon quite recently there came a company of them on steamer from one point to another to make a demonstration, and they were impeded—rather when the United States officers attempted to impede them—the I. W. W. shot them down seemingly with as little conscience as we slay chickens. In this circumstance it is very evident that we are not out of the way in concluding that their overt wickedness was simply the effect by a few of a cause of the many. We can, therefore, not look to the I. W. W. as a final remedy for the situation complained of, because the Lord says, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord. The Lord told the Latter Day Saints that they were to acquire land in Missouri by purchase, for if by bloodshed "Lo! your enemies are upon you," "as you are forbidden to shed blood," (Doctrine and Covenants 63: 8.) That forcible extermination of the wicked and wickedness, and forcible occupation of the earth will eventually obtain, we cannot in view of the sacred word dispute, but that such forcible extermination and forcible occupation must be resigned to God's omnipotence and not to be assumed by man is equally indisputable.

ANARCHY AS A REMEDY

Anarchy is not constructive, but destructive. It aims at the abolition of government and the removal of all restraints to that extent that each individual might be free to do as he pleases. They have defined their position as follows:

The belief that there must be authority somewhere, and submission to authority, are at the root of all our misery. As a remedy we advise a struggle for life or death against all authority—physical authority, as embodied in the State, or doctrinary authority, the result of centuries of ignorance and superstition, such as religion, patriotism, obedience to laws, belief in the usefulness of government, submission to the wealthy and to those in office—in short, a struggle against all and every humbug designed to stupify and enslave the workingmen. The workingmen must necessarily destroy authority: those who are benefited by it certainly will not. Patriotism and religion are sanctuaries and bulwarks of rascals; religion is the greatest curse of the human race. Yet there are to be found men who prostitute the noble word "labor" by combining it with the nauseating term "church" into "labor-church."

We do not share the views of those who believe that the state may be converted into a beneficent institution. The change would be as difficult as to convert a wolf into a lamb. Nor do we believe in the centralization of all production and consumption, as aimed at by the socialists. That would be nothing but the present state in a new form, with increased authority, a veritable monstrosity of tyranny and slavery.

What the anarchists want is equal liberty for all. The talents and inclination of all men differ from each other. Everyone knows best what he can do and what he wants; laws and regulations only hamper, and forced labor is never pleasant. In the state aimed at by the anarchists, every one will do the work that pleases him best, and will satisfy his wants out of the common store, as pleases him best.

Instead of this offering a remedy it seeks to destroy every remedy proposed. It emanates from a monarchical country where the provocations to that bent of thought are greater than in America. In the first place an anarchist could hardly be anything but an infidel, seeing that the Bible lays so much stress on government and our duty of submission. Said Paul:

Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work.—Titus 3: 1.

And, said Peter:

Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evildoers, and for the praise of them that do well.—1 Peter 2: 13, 14.

The same principle has been enunciated in our times, even in 1831:

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

Furthermore we could not have any object in pointing out the philosophy of government, its advantages, the right of society to organize, enact laws for the well-being of the whole, and to require even by compulsion, if necessary, that the minority shall yield. It is true that earthly governments and the rulership of man by man exclusive of God is an abnormal condition of things, but the counsel of the Lord through primitive apostleship, as well as in modern times through his prophet, has been to yield to this condition of things under existing circumstances; that we should seek out good men for officers; that in his absence a government of ourselves by ourselves is better than no government at all. Think of the world suddenly reduced to social chaos, to absolute individual independence, each to do as he pleases—no school system, no concert in road construction, or the construction of any other public works; and if a concert on the part of a given number who voluntarily ally in some public benefit such as a road, no constraint to be exercised upon those who refuse to assist in that in which they are to be alike benefited. Think of murder suspects either to go free or to be found guilty by a mob, the same person or parties to be judge, jury and executioner. The idea is preposterous and we are thus far unrewarded in our quest of a remedy except that we have discovered that everything thus far projected, which we have examined is not remedial.

Yet we are not to be surprised that some enthusiastic weaklings, in their vision of the governmental corruption to-day so widespread would turn their faces from all governments, all man-rulership, and cast their hopes and ambitions toward the no-government plan. Our people in Nauvoo, when all of the office seekers and politicians refused their just wants, when one of fame advised their removal to the Pacific slope, found it expedient to turn their backs to them and say, We will support none of you. But they did not turn to anarchy. They put up a man of their own whom they could hardly guess would be elected. The nepotisms, the extravagances, the squanderings of hard earned money, the jealousies, grafts, swindles, legalized humbugs, the unnecessary offices created in order to give jobs to political loafers—is enough to set aflame the victims of their impositions. The writer was in a barbershop some time ago where there was a billiard table. The barber complained that he had to pay an extortionate license or levy on account of an inspector who came around from time to time to go through the monkeyshine of seeing that everything was O. K. in regard to that billiard table. Of course that would make a job for some fellow who would rather pull off that stunt than be a hangman. Still that is not as bad as feudalism or slavery, nor is it as bad as when it took a good share of the tithes to collect them in old Ireland.

There can be no question of the existence of respects in which the world is getting better and better, while in other respects it is sinking lower and lower. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." The majority sit astride the white horse of passion and are foundered from yielding to a voluptuous sensualism. Few are they who practice righteous restraint. Greed and avarice have unfurled their selfish flag and are bleeding the unwary and unsuspecting. The arm of generosity is shortened with the wide majority. "When the Son of man cometh shall he find (the) faith on the earth."

And so it is, and so it goes. Seventy per cent of the people of this country don't own their homes—are virtually homeless. One per cent of the people of this country own seventy per cent of the wealth.

Is it not high time that God should have something to say on the subject when a people are preparing for his coming? Has he spoken? Hereafter we will take that up. (To be continued.)

While I would not suggest to any man in this country that wholesome and legitimate criticism of public officials be prevented, I would suggest that we try to offer helpful and constructive criticism. Let us not merely carp and find fault. I would not hold an office for one second if I felt that the gag was put upon the people of the United States so that they could not tell me when I was going wrong. I want them to criticize. I never get a chance to read or hear anything else but criticism. I tell you, my friends, criticism, however unfair—and there isn't a country on earth where criticism is so unfair as in America—is wholesome. I prefer any kind of criticism to none, because it keeps a fellow's feet on the ground, and if he has any tendency to "swell up," it will prevent him from "busting" in short order.—W. G. McAdoo, in an address in Des Moines, Iowa, May 21, 1917.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A JEWISH REPUBLIC

[When one of the brethren at the office here read the following article he began singing the old song which has ascended from many a joyous throat, No. 279 in the Hymnal, which runs like this:

The Spirit of God like a fire is burning;
The latter-day glory begins to come forth;
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
The angels are coming to visit the earth.

The Lord is extending the Saints' understanding—
Restoring their judges and all as at first;
The knowledge and power of God are expanding,
The veil o'er the earth is beginning to burst.

We call in our solemn assemblies, in Spirit,
To spread forth the kingdom of heaven abroad,
That we through our faith may begin to inherit
The visions, and blessings, and glories of God.

Of course it's only a prediction based on the fact that these men are to visit Egypt and Palestine, but John Callan O'Laughlin's article in the Chicago Herald of June 23, quoted as follows, excites much interest in the minds of all Saints who have thought seriously along these lines.—
[Errors.]

President Wilson is giving serious consideration to the Zionist recommendation that one of the war aims of the United States shall be the establishment of a Jewish republic, with Jerusalem as the capital.

Ostensibly the commission, consisting of Henry Morgenthau, former ambassador to Turkey; Major Felix Frankfurter, U. S. A., and E. W. Lewin-Epstein, connected with the Zionist movement, is en route to Egypt and Palestine for the purpose of aiding suffering Jews, and especially those, numbering about one thousand, who are naturalized American citizens.

SMALL PART OF DUTY

This, however, will be only a small part of the duty of Mr. Morgenthau and his associates. As a matter of fact, they have been instructed to make a thorough investigation of the situation of the Jews in Palestine and neighboring sections of Turkey, and to follow carefully the campaign against the Turks and Germans which the British are conducting.

The reports the commission will make will be of the utmost value to the president in guiding him as to the character of terms he will fix as conditions for the settlement of the war.

Every nation is concerned about the Jewish problem and is anxious, once and for all, to free Jerusalem from Turkish misrule.

DRIVE FROM TWO SIDES

A British military expedition now is operating toward the city where Christ suffered, and it is expected that within a comparatively short time it will be rescued from Turkish control.

Two British expeditions are moving against Turkey from the east, one passing through Mesopotamia and the other from Egypt along the eastern shore of the Mediterranean.

Eventually, if they compass it, these expeditions will meet; but that is a long time in the future, in view of the desperate resistance the Turks, aided by the Germans, are making.

It is important, of course, that the military campaign which the British from the south and the Russians from the north are carrying on shall have success, since that would have a tremendous bearing upon the end of the war.

SEEK DESIRES OF JEWS

With this ultimate result, however, the Morgenthau commission will have no concern. It will be their business to aid the Jews in every way they can; to see that those who are suffering shall get supplies which American men-of-war were forced to unload at Alexandria, Egypt, and enjoy the benefit of the $10,000,000 relief fund which has been collected in the United States, and, finally, to ascertain the desires of the Jewish people with reference to their future political condition.

It is apparent to the president and others in Washington that a Jewish state could not stand alone. It will have to possess the moral and perhaps political support of a strong nation or nations if it is to live.

UNITED STATES WOULD GIVE GUARANTEE

It was suggested recently from London that control of Palestine, once it has been wrested from the Turks, shall be turned over to the United States.

This Nation, it was pointed out, is free from any entanglements in the near east, and it could be depended upon to pursue a thoroughly unselfish policy in connection with the administration of the territory.

The president and his cabinet, from all reports, have no intention of taking possession of territory so far from the new world. In view of this determination the plan has been advanced that the Jews be permitted to form a republic, the independence and territorial integrity of which shall be guaranteed by the United States and Great Britain, and if Russia, France, and Italy so desire, by them also.

It is a reflection upon the paucity of human ideas that this guarantee proposal should be advocated; for Belgium enjoyed similar guarantees and they were ruthlessly violated by Germany.

In this case, however, attention is drawn to the fact that the signers of the agreement will be nations who are fighting to uphold the principle of the sanctity of treaties and that there is no likelihood that they would violate their pledged word, however great might be the temptation.

THE JEW AND THE WAR

[The following summary of an address by Rabbi Samuel Koch appeared in The Seattle Daily Times for May 7. It will be noted that he believes that Palestine under English suzerainty will mean the defeat of Zionism.]

Rabbi Samuel Koch spoke on "The Jew and the war" in his sermon delivered Friday evening at the Temple de Hirsh. The war, he said, is indeed a world war as far as the Jew is concerned. His sermon follows in part:

There are more than 600,000 Jews at the front according to Zangwill; 350,000 are in the Russian armies, 170,000 in the Austrian, 50,000 in the German, 20,000 in the English, not counting those in the colonial contingents nor those in other camps such as the Italian, Serbian and Turkish.

And though the Jew is giving his life, countries for whom he gives it, England and Italy excepted, have shown him scant courtesy. Russia with one sixth of the globe in an unbroken section as its territory, has crowded the Jew in a pale smaller than it was a century ago when he was only one fifth as numerous, although the pale could be drained of its population by placing one Jew to the square mile in the Siberian vastness and hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory remain unoccupied. And yet upon the declaration of war thousands of Jews in procession marched forthwith to the palace in Petrograd to offer themselves to mother Russia. And similar incidents occurred in Warsaw and elsewhere. Nor was the Jew eligible to the army before the declaration of war. His was the only group from whom only sons were conscripted.

PROMISE IS REASSURING

The scene of the bitterest conflicts have been in the territory that constitutes the pale. Two of the despoilers of Polish nationality glare across the pale at the third; and whether the German makes for Warsaw or the Russian for Austria, it is the Jew who is trampled under foot. Three million Jews are homeless and literally starving and the remaining 3,000,000 are economically ruined.

The promise of the war seems reassuring for the Jew. How can peoples fight for liberty and win it, and not give the Jew fair play? How can they, that is, unless nations are again shamefacedly to let the parties to the new covenant disregard their pledges as Roumania did in disregarding the conventions of the Berlin congress as they affected the Jew?

Palestine under English suzerainty seems a possibility, and the Jew will be interested in the cultural opportunity afforded. But this does not mean the triumph but the defeat of Zionism. The political commonwealth on which its theory and eloquence have been expended falls into desuetude with the triumph of the cause of the Allies.

UTAH TEACHING ON MARRIAGE

[The following is from one of the journals published by the dominant church in Utah, and clearly sets out some of their present beliefs on the marriage question.—EDITORS.]

All the works of God receive the impression of eternity. We are told in Ecclesiastes, the third chapter and fourteenth verse, that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever, nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it. So marriage must be forever. We believe that the first marriage was not for time alone, but for all eternity. Marriage is spoken of as the "New and Everlasting Covenant." In the other churches the members are married for time only; but in our church the members are married not only for this life, but for the life to come also. The commandments of the Lord are that we should be married by the law for time and by the priesthood for all eternity.

To the Latter Day Saint salvation is not complete without marriage, and that in the temple. The union of man and wife must be sealed by the priesthood in the temple of the Lord. The marriage ceremony must be performed by some one who has authority to act in God's stead. We are filled with joy when we realize that if our marriage has been properly attended to here upon earth, it will be binding in the resurrection. The Lord has told us that whatsoever is bound on earth shall be bound in heaven.

The wife in connection with her husband holds the priesthood. She shares with him the blessings, rights, privileges, and promises of exaltation that are given under the priesthood.—Young Woman's Journal, May, 1917.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND THE WAR

[The following question was submitted to the superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, G. R. Wells, and it was published with the accompanying answer in the Sunday school department of the Autumn Leaves for June.—EDITORS.]

Q. What should be the attitude of our Sunday school toward the conflict now going on between the United States and the Central Powers?

A. As individual citizens our duty is clear—we must be loyal and stand at all times against the countries that are at war with our own. If all Sunday school and church people are loyal, as citizens, it follows that the church members of any country are found standing by their country, whether in Germany, France, England, or America; but their allegiance is not in the capacity of a church, but as citizens. As members of God's church, we make war against no country or church except it be that great common enemy, the kingdom of the Devil, and in this warfare "there can be no furlough granted till the summons home be heard." Ours is not a national church—it is a world-wide church. "God so loved the world"—not this nation or that nation, Germany or America, but the whole world—and loved it so much that he gave his only begotten Son to die that we might have the best plan of life and government the world ever saw. Let us confine our efforts in Sunday school work to teaching and living that divine plan. Ours is not a carnal warfare.

GOD ANSWERS PRAYERS TO-DAY

It should not be our purpose or desire to find fault with any man's religion. It is better to be wrong, and desire the truth, than to have the truth and be untrue to it. God did not call me to take issue with the religion of my fellows. I would not be an iconoclast. If I understand my mission aright, it is to bring a message which is constructive, which leads men into a better life.

If I bring you the truth, and what I say appeals to you, it is easy to see how you will make the comparison between right and wrong, and you are benefited as a consequence. If I make this comparison for you, it will not have the same effect. You may become offended and driven from the truth.

AFFIRMATIVE GOSPEL

Jesus taught an affirmative gospel. His words were inspired by truth and love. Some of the greatest defenders of the Christian religion were big, honest-hearted men who opposed the truth with all their might when they first came into contact with it. Some have gone so far as to encourage mob law, while waging war on the disciples of Christ. They were wrong, but they were honest, and when shown the error of their way, they came over like manly men, and gave their lives as a sacrifice for their ideals.

As representatives of the Christian church we must be true to the teachings of Jesus, and not seek to avoid the responsibility which rightly belongs to us. It is wrong to accept the gospel of Christ and its wonderful promises, and, when asked if we believe in this gospel and its application to the present day, to say that only a part of it can now be applied. Our Master said, "Lo, I am with you always."

Referring to his great commission to his apostles Jesus said: "Go ye into all the world and teach this gospel to every creature, and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned, and these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name they shall cast out devils, they shall speak with new tongues, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them. They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

CONDITIONS IMPOSED

These promises are made upon condition that we obey the teachings of Jesus, and we are forced to the conclusion that God is willing to answer our prayers to-day, and if we do not receive a response as a result of our prayers, it is undoubtedly because we are not keeping his commandments.

To say that these things are not for us is to turn honest men into the ranks of infidelity. If we affirm that God is true, and that he is an unchangeable being, and that if the gospel is obeyed the promises all will be made good, we will hold our own people and will convert the infidel to Christianity.

Study carefully the words and the messages of Jesus. Then determine in your own mind what God requires of you to-day.—T. W. Williams, in Sunday Morning Index, San Bernardino, California, June 17, 1917.

THE USHER'S JOB

[The following from the department on "Church efficiency" by Cecil J. Sharp, in the Christian Standard, is worthy of more than passing notice.—EDITORS.]

The general idea that an usher is merely one to show people to vacant seats, is an idea that sadly needs to be revised. The head usher should be an expert in church work. He comes more personally in contact with each individual in the audience than the preacher. Many times the impression that a newcomer gains of the church, and his attitude toward the church, is determined, not by the preacher, but by the ushers. The head usher should know the people personally. If there are any he does not know, he should immediately come to know them by face and by name. He should be a representative man of the church whose life in the community commands respect. Less harm can be done by one poorly chosen elder than by one poorly chosen head usher. The general populace may not know who the elders are but they know who your head usher is.

Next, the usher must not only usher, but he must know and be entirely in sympathy with the plans and methods of the preacher. He must not only seat the people, but he must seat them wisely.

He must be tactful and pleasant, but a commander who can get the people to do what he wants done. He must be alert to everything that may add to the people's comfort, and show them the church's thought for their comfort. He must be wide-awake to everything small and great that may arise to distract attention. He must know what to do, do it, and do it without making more disturbance than the disturber. Is your head usher instructed to know what to do if a baby cries, if some one faints in the audience, if a fire should break out, if an intoxicated man should show up inclined to talk, or if a fanatic should make himself prominent? Do you have a nook or corner with rocking chairs, to which a mother could be shown with a persistently crying baby? Would your head usher quietly be on the job with a glass of water as first aid for a crying baby in a hot-weather audience?

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Neb.

The Power of the Mother in the Home

Sometimes when a multitude of thoughts press into our minds, some one of them will stand out clearly, demanding recognition and expression; and when we try to express it, words come so fast we can scarcely write them down or keep pace with them—so strong is the power of the thought!

Some time ago, it was my pleasure to attend a parent-teacher convention held in our city, and I carried away from that meeting, one thought that has remained through all the weeks and months that have intervened. Hundreds of our school-teachers were in that audience, and at the opening of the meeting, one of our Kansas City ministers was called to the platform to give the invocation. Woven into that prayer were these words: "We thank thee, O Lord, for our place in the world's work! May we fill it wisely and well!" I left that meeting, stirred to the very soul, not only by the expression in the prayer which I have mentioned, but by the many splendid thoughts presented in the addresses which followed it. There were men and women there who had found their places in the world's work, and who wished to fill those places, wisely and well. As the days went on, and I turned this thought over and over in my mind, I reflected upon the hundreds of people who have lived and died and had no definite place in the world's work, no satisfaction from achievement, no particular task accomplished, and my heart went out in sympathy to those whose talents had never been discovered or used. Then I thought of those who are living now, who are seeking to find their places in life, in the universal scheme, in the work of the world, and are wanting, as you and I are wanting, to fill that place wisely and well.

It is because I am hoping to be of help to some one who may read this—help him to find his place in the world's work, in the line of march of the Lord's army, that I am trying to express my thoughts here and now.

The Master spoke of talents, but left the development of them to us, knowing well, no doubt, that we would not all use the same methods in working out the conditions that govern our lives and the lives of those under our care. He seemed to know, too, if we may judge from the reading of the parable, that there would be some who would hide their talents and fail to use them to better their own condition and that of those around them.

I think we might safely divide the human race into three great divisions when we speak of talents. In the first we would put those who are hiding their talents, have depended upon others to take the initiative in all things, have just stood by and looked on, but taken no definite part in life's work. These are not the burden-bearers, so for convenience we might call them the "leaners."

In the second division we will put those who have grown and developed from the first moment of life, who have not ceased to study when their school days were over, but have continued to acquire, to develop along educational, moral and spiritual lines. These sought their specialty—found their talents. In the business world we find these as the executive heads of great moneyed concerns of the day, the specialists in the medical world, in science, and in our church we find some of them in the pulpits, some as executive heads of various auxiliaries and committees, some in our music department, as masters of the organ, violin or voice. These are our specialists, our big men and women, who are pushing the work on and on, never finding time to rest or look behind, but are always found with eyes to the front, seeking with all their powers to build up Zion. They are the lively stones—the "doers."

The third class is larger than either of the others, if I do not mistake the conditions, and it is about these that I wish particularly to tell you. In it are found those who have been started wrong, whose education has been along false lines, through ignorance on their own part, or in an effort to please their elders. These are the ones who grope about, retrace their steps, and when finally are upon the right path, mount slowly upward, step by step. In this class we find the professional man who really has mechanical genius, and but very little professional ability; we find the woman who spent her girlhood days at the piano to please her mother, when she much preferred a pen in her hand—the girl who should have specialized in English and composition; we find, too, those who have gotten a late start in life because they were misunderstood. These are the "misfits," seen constantly about us, struggling along aimlessly, because they have not found their correct places in the world's work.

I wonder why parents continue to make mistakes of this kind; I wonder why they do not seek to better understand their children, to study them, and determine, if possible, their particular gifts and talents, in order to foster and develop them. I wonder, but I cannot be satisfied. This mistake of starting a child out wrong is being done every day in the homes of the thoughtless, trying to develop talent which is lacking, and shutting eyes to the talents which do exist, crushing, thereby, the God-given right to be happily adjusted to the world and its work. I have been thinking a great deal about these crushed talents, these stifled hopes and ambitions. Can we find a method of reviving them, do you think? Can we locate them, especially when the possessors have grown to manhood and womanhood, and have been educated along other lines—lines for which they have had but little or no natural ability?

Sometimes we find peculiarly well-balanced persons who have learned to do certain things so well that they plod along, thinking they have found their work, just because they can do it well. But is it their work? Do they fit the situations exactly? Do they bring to their tasks, daily, that enthusiasm which marks the performance of work which is dearly loved? Or do they bring mechanical skill, only? If their work is of the mechanical sort only, they are misfits and could wisely retrace their steps, discover just where they left the path of their real bent, return there and begin over again, even if it takes them back to the days of their childhood.

Somewhere I have read that the thing you like best to do, is the thing for which you have natural ability—your talent, if you please, your one line of specialization. Notice, it is the thing you like best to do, not the thing you have learned to do best; it is the thing you would choose above all others, were you given your choice in the world's work. This is the secret of specialization; all of our great specialists are doing the things they like best to do. Our great artists would not make good surgeons, neither would our great musicians make good ministers. Each one for his own specialty; better a good blacksmith than a poor lawyer.

There is an idea altogether too broadcast in the world at this time, that some work is delightful and lovable, and other work not so. A certain great philosopher tells this amusing tale about himself: As he sat in his study working one morning, he looked out of the window and saw a man breaking up stones in the pavement. Hour after hour, as the philosopher set down words on his paper, the man in the street continued to ply his pickax. The philosopher felt so sorry for the man that at last he could stand it no longer and he hastened out to him and said, "What do you think about all day, as you keep on, hour after hour, breaking up those stones?" The man stood up, leaned his pickax against his hip, spat on his hands, rubbed them together, and said, with a grin, "Breakin' stones!" and lifted his pick again! The philosopher withdrew to his study, a happier and wiser man, realizing that each man gravitates naturally to the work he enjoys thinking about. This little story seems to illustrate the point I wish to make, that every human being has a definite place in the scheme of things. It may be a tiny place now, perhaps it is to be a tiny place always, but at least it is a place, one no one else can fill so well, and the individual who fits into it exactly will be as a strong link in the universal chain.

Oh, if all mothers could perceive the importance of the places they fill in the world's work, if all could realize "what a holy charge is theirs, with what a kingly power their love might rule the fountains of the newborn mind." I am sure that there would not be so many pitiful "misfits."

Tennyson tells us that "the bearing and training of a child is woman's wisdom." Billy Sunday puts it like this: "A mother is a partner with God in the creating of a soul." It is when a woman feels the touch of a baby's fingers she most senses her great responsibility, and, in too many cases, must regret the inefficiency of her training and preparation to successfully meet that responsibility of motherhood, of "co-partnership." Then indeed, she understands that she has put childish things behind her and can say with the poet:

"Life lies before me; but shut is the door
On all my childish days! No more, no more
Shut, then, the door, but leave a little crack,
So be it, Lord; I know that all is right;
I would not alter it, nor shirk the fight;
Shut, then, the door, but leave a little crack,
That when I meet a child, I may slip back!"

Could anything be more beautiful than that? For it is our children that keep open the door to our own childhood days; and as those children grow and develop, memory carries us back through strange countries into the years that have gone, and brings home to us again the lessons we learned at our own mother's knee. As mothers, then, let us strive harder to understand our children better; let us try to recognize the talent given to each, and assist in its best development, knowing that the church has need of it, each in his own place in the work of Zion. Instead of training for "misfits," let us get a wider, clearer vision before us and train for specialists. I like to think of the children of this church as a great army, bearing banners of righteousness, with heads up, shoulders back, eyes to the front, every foot keeping time to the music, each one finding his definite place in the line of march, all moving forward to victory! So may they come, marching in the army of the Lord, eschewing all evil, and finally be gathered safely into the fold, without the loss of one soul!

Our Religio President on the Boy Movement

I am indeed glad that something is going to be done about this boy question. I wish I could have remained at conference in order to be present at the meeting called to discuss this proposition. I suggested last year that this matter be looked after by the Religio society of the church, just as the Woman's Auxiliary was looking after the Oriole movement. This did not seem to meet with favor from all sides, but, be that as it may, we want to help the movement along all we can, for we feel the need of looking after our young men. The Religio is going to make a stronger appeal to the boys than heretofore, and to try to be a real training school, where we may teach our young men to be interested and efficient in church work.

I have looked up different books on this subject in other churches, etc., and find that there are many good books, ideas, and organizations already in existence from which we ought to glean much valuable help. John Alexander, and Forbush have splendid books on this subject. We must appeal to the boys by giving them something to do, as well as teaching them what not to do. Action is one of the main-springs of their natures, and we must learn to recognize this and provide the right kind of outlets for this surplus energy. If we do not do this we may expect to lose their interest and eventually the boys themselves.

I am sending a copy of the constitution under which the boys club we had last summer worked. . . . Will certainly be very glad to cooperate with the committee in any way that we may be able, to further the interests of our boys. Shall be glad to know of the progress you make, if it is convenient.

Sincerely,

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

A Pleasant Voice from the South

Bay Minette, Alabama.—Your article in HERALD for June 13, "Use them, or lose them" expresses my ideas on the boy question. I have seen the need for organized effort in this direction for some time; the organized classes or the teacher's one, have failed to fill the bill so far.

There is much in the Boy Scout movement our boys should know, as well as others. Why not take the best of each one, and blend it so as to get an even balance of material and spiritual good, making it a distinct Latter Day Saint organization? The boys might be called "Our Minute Boys," or the "Ever Readys,"—something to appeal to them, as the name "Oriole" appeals to the girls. As the Oriole circles are Latter Day Saint organizations, so I think the boys' organization should be our own. . . . If I can be of any help to you, consider me at your service.

Very sincerely yours,

Report of Superintendent of Educational Department--1916-17

The educational department work, as outlined in the Year Book, has taken a decided step forward during the last few months. The reason for the late development lies in the fact that the method of procedure, entirely new to all locals throughout the church, had to be worked out in a deliberate and systematic way by the superintendents, much time being spent in explaining the aims and purposes of the department.

Twenty copies of a paper giving a general review and explanation of the work of this department were sent to Mrs. Etzenhouser in July, 1916, to be used in presenting the work at various reunions during the summer and fall of 1916.

Articles, at least six in number, have been furnished to Sister Audentia Anderson by Sister Bertha Mader, superintendent of the home economics department, for publication in the auxiliary columns of the HERALD during the year. Sister Lydia Thomas Wight, superintendent of mothers and teachers' problems, has sent four articles, and has four more ready to send for publication also. I have had published three articles of a general nature endeavoring to explain more fully the real scope and breadth of our work, and urging our sisters to become interested in some sort of study.

Sister Wight is at present preparing a form letter, to be mailed to all district superintendents, urging organization of classes, and preparations to observe "baby week," in a profitable way. This letter also contains suggestions for programs, and sources for obtaining information and material. She has sent books into one home, and a year's subscription to one sister who wished to carry on work with nonmembers.

Sister Mader has prepared a form letter, describing in detail her work, and giving suggestions for organizing classes, but owing to a delay in getting it printed she has been unable to send it out.

I have sent two form letters to all presidents of locals of which we have record, one of a general nature, the other giving specific direction in the organization of classes and in taking up some sort of study. Judging from the numerous responses received to these letters, they have been productive of some little good, at least.

Early in the spring of 1916 three classes were organized in the Omaha Branch, under my personal direction, one in sociology, one in literature, and one in child study. Since then the sociology class has begun the study of their second textbook. A new study class has been recently organized there.

The Kansas City Stake has a culture class, in which eight or nine classes taking various subjects are enrolled. The membership numbers about eighty.

The educational work has been enthusiastically carried on in Lamoni, classes under Graceland instructors and others being well attended.

A remarkable interest is being shown in the Independence and Holden Stakes, in our work. Classes studying sex hygiene, psychology, home economics, child study, and storytelling, have been reported.

At least one hundred letters have been received by the various superintendents of this department during the year, asking for information and help. These have all been given careful consideration, and answered to the very best of our ability.

I have made talks on the educational work and its aims in Independence, at the Lamoni reunion, at the Kansas City Stake convention in October, and the Holden Stake convention in February. I have also met with various branches in the Kansas City Stake, urging them to take up some sort of study.

We sincerely hope that this department will make a much more pronounced growth during the coming year, and that at next conference we may hear that at least one class has been organized in every branch of the church for the purpose of study.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Entering That Broader Sphere

(Written in memory of Apostle James E. Kelley.)

So young to go, so richly qualified
To serve the cause for which the Savior died;
So brilliant and so masterful of mind,
So lovable, so dauntless, yet so kind;
Why is it, Lord, that such a one as he
Is called from service, leaving such as me?

So many friends he had who loved him here,
So many reasons why we held him dear,
So many hearts made sad, so many tears,
So much regret, so many un-lived years;
Why it is, Lord, with so much work to do,
That such a man of men is called to you?

Methinks were I but worthy now to hear
Thy gentle voice (for surely thou art near),
I'd understand what seems so strangely sad,
And, understanding, be not grieved, but glad!
I'd understand this friend is not recalled
But only to a greater service called.

I'd see him entering that broader sphere
Unhampered by the ills that hinder here,
Where those rich talents may record their worth
Far more effectively than here on earth.
I'd see him happy in his home on high
And then, dear Lord, no more would ask thee "why?"

GEORGE A. KELLEY.

Shepherd of Tender Youth

(This beautiful hymn is taken from the third book of Clement of Alexandria, and is said to be the earliest known hymn of the Primitive Christian Church. From the Christian Herald of May 1, 1895.)

Shepherd of tender youth,
Guiding in love and truth,
Through devious ways:
Christ our triumphant King,
Join in thy name to sing,
And our dear children bring Shouting thy praise.

Most High and Holy Lord,
Glorious revealing word
Healer of strife:
Thou didst thyself abase;
That from sin's deep disgrace
Thou mightest save our race,
Giving us life.

Thou art our Great High Priest;
 Thou hast prepared the feast
 Of holy love:
 In all our sin and pain
 None call on thee in vain;
 Help thou didst not disdain,
 Help from above.

Ever be near our side
 Allwise and mighty Guide,
 Our staff and song;
 Jesus thou Christ of God,
 Taught by thy living Word,
 Lead us where thou hast trod,
 Make our faith strong.

Thus now and till we die,
 Sound we thy praises high,
 And joyful sing.
 With all thy holy throng
 Who to the church belong,
 Join we to swell the song
 To Christ our King.

Our Flag

Pray what do you see in Old Glory,
 As the banner is flung to the breeze,
 As it waves o'er the homes of your loved ones,
 As it proudly sails over the seas?

As its stars gleam out in the distance,
 And its folds of the Red, White and Blue
 Are waving their greetings of welcome,
 Pray what does it mean to you?

Does it mean a sweet hope for the future,
 A people from bondage set free,
 As when at the dawn of the morning
 Our fathers the banner could see.

Does it mean a sweet symbol of liberty,
 That breathes of the soul of its God,
 That proudly floats over a Nation,
 The best that man's foot ever trod?

Does it give you a thrill at your heartstrings
 Wherever Old Glory's unfurled,
 Do you wish that the banner was waving
 The length and the breadth of the world?

Are you proud of the name of Old Glory,
 Are you proud of the Red, White and Blue,
 Are you proud of its glorious emblem,
 Pray what does it mean to you?

MRS. OLIVER DEAM.

The Creeds of To-day

The creeds of to-day are now drifting away
 From the gospel that Christ taught of yore,
 Tho' unchanging and true, it will no longer do,
 Thus they're drifting from heaven's bright shore.
 When we think of the creeds, and their conflicting deeds,
 As compared with the old gospel way,
 We oft' wonder when they'll return once again
 To that gospel restored in our day.

The creeds of to-day oft' remind us some way
 Of the time when Mary was found
 At dear Jesus' tomb with her heart full of gloom,
 As weeping, she knelt to the ground.
 Angels asked why she cried, then in haste she replied
 "They've taken my dear Lord away";
 Now measure the creeds, as the sacred word reads,
 Pray, where have they laid him to-day?

The disciples of old, in the Bible we're told,
 Turned away from the Lord in his day,
 'Twas a most grievous task for the Savior to ask
 Of the Twelve, "Will ye also go 'way?"
 How happy then! our dear Lord must have been
 With the words, "Lord to whom shall we go?"
 And to-day, praise his name, we should answer the same,
 Lord, thee will we only follow.

"All truth" is the creed that will now safely lead
 To the church where Christ doth abound;
 As the wise men of old, by the star, we are told,
 Were led to where Jesus was found.
 God's word is the star, which will guide from afar,
 Till truly with Jesus we'll be,
 And redeemed we shall stand, yea upon his right hand,
 When we meet in eternity.

J. CHAS. MAY.

The Gospel

(Tune: "America.")

Blest gospel, 'tis of thee—
 Herald of liberty—
 Of thee we sing.
 Like to the heavenly dove
 They message framed in love
 Was sent by God above
 Sweet peace to bring.

Through ages dark and drear
 Thy light did not appear;
 It shone not forth
 Until by God's command
 It burst over Joseph's land,
 Restored by angel hand
 Once more on earth.

Now with its message plain
 Restored to earth again
 God's servants rise;
 Proclaim with liberty,
 Its saving quality,
 Clothed with authority
 Preach and baptize.

Again the holy dove,
 Sent by our God above,
 Descends from heav'n.
 Once more in all the lands,
 By God's direct commands
 Through laying on of hands
 The Spirit's given.

My Bit of Blue

To my snow-white bed, whence I cannot stir,
Comes a glimpse of the great, wide world,
And 'tis mine, all mine, to admire, to love,
Sunny hillsides, or grass, dew-pearled,
And a-top is my bit of blue.

There are wind-tossed trees where the birdies dwell
So secure in their precious homes,
Happy households they, with their fledglings wee,
And their bursts of cheery tone,
And a-top is my bit of blue.

'Cross my bit of blue, skim the chimney swifts;
And a great black crow flaps by;
It is high, so high, sails the light-winged hawk!
Wond'rous airships of my sky;
Peace-plains of my bit of blue.

On my blue sky-sea sail the white cloud boats
Bearing angels, methinks, away,
From this house of love where they minister
To the suffering ones each day,
Ah, I bless my bit of blue.

Find your bit of blue in this wide, wide world,
It is yours; none can say you nay.
Find refreshing vales or the sun-kissed slopes,
That will cheer you along the way,
Find, oh, find your bit of blue.

rium, June 21, 1917.)

LETTER DEPARTMENT

"God Moves in a Mysterious Way"

The announcement of the death of Apostle James E. Kelley in the last issue of the HERALD was not a surprise to the writer as we have anticipated his demise for some months. We were impressed with the thought time and again last spring during our quorum sessions that our beloved brother would never again meet with the brethren of his quorum. He will be greatly missed by his colleagues in their councils. His many spiritual prayers and eloquent speeches will not soon be forgotten by his associates. He was a wise councilor, and had the moral courage to stand for his honest convictions; he also possessed the qualifications that eminently fitted him for the office of an apostle.

We surely admired the wonderful patience that he displayed in suffering, and his willingness to render assistance to others, whether old or young. He has displayed those noble traits of character since I have known him. I carried him in my arms when he was but a few months old, thirty-seven years ago. His parents moved to Kirtland when he was a small child, hence he grew up to manhood here, and was baptized almost under the eaves of the old historic temple. He had very many friends here in the East who mourn his departure. Our loss was his gain, as we feel certain that his spirit is at rest in the paradise of God.

Very many of the Saints think it strange that he was taken away from his family and the church while so young in years. Dear Saints, Brother Kelley is not the first young man that the Lord has taken unto himself. The saying that, "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform" is just as true to-day as it ever was.

Nearly four years ago while located on one of the Society Islands about five hundred miles from Papeete, in company with Brethren C. Edward Miller and Charles May, and surrounded with native Saints who had gathered at this particular island to dive for shells and pearls, I had a dream one morning in which I was shown that the first break in the Quorum of Twelve would be by death, and it was made known unto me that our late Brother James E. Kelley would be the one whom the Lord would take from us. I was given to understand that the Quorum of First Presidency would not be filled until after the death of Brother Kelley. It was also made very clear to my vision that many other changes would take place in the leading quorums of the church.

During our sojourn in Independence last spring, I with others of the brethren prayed earnestly to the Lord to fill the vacancy in the First Presidency; however, the dream that I had on the island of the sea was brought to my mind very forcibly. Hence, I could not drive away the thought that before the First Presidency is filled there must be a break in our quorum by death ere the Lord will fill the vacancy in the First Presidency. Well, the break has come in the Quorum of Twelve, and that by death. I feel to say from my heart, "God's will be done." We should, therefore, bow with holy reverence to the will of him who doeth all things well for those who put their entire trust in him. I can assure you, dear Saints, that many changes will take place in the church under the guiding hand of almighty God, and many of us will be greatly surprised when that time comes. Therefore, let us try and be prepared for the wonderful changes which must take place in the due time of the Lord. Very many trying and fiery trials await us in the near future, and only those who confide in our heavenly Father will receive of his comforting Spirit and his protection while passing through the unpleasant experiences that confront us.

I pray the Lord to comfort the hearts of the loved ones of our late Brother Kelley in their deep sorrow, and all others who are passing through a similar ordeal.

With best wishes for all of God's people, I remain your brother in the great conflict.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, June 20, 1917.

A Word from Honolulu

I am receiving letters from parents whose sons have enlisted and been sent over here. There are thousands of additional soldiers expected, so possibly additional letters.

I will gladly hunt up boys who may come over here if parents will give me the necessary direction. If possible inform me to what fort your son has been sent. If in the naval service, send them my address, so arrangements for pass may be made.

The church is located on King Street, near Thomas Square. There are a number of soldiers coming to our services, and any additional visitors will be warmly welcomed. Preaching service, 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., Sunday school 10.45, Religion at 6.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, Mission House, Miki Lane, Kalakaua Avenue, Telephone 4464.

A letter from Brother George W. Robley, who writes from Malone, New York, says: "I shall be glad to hear from any of the Saints or friends living outside branch limit in the New York District who believe that opportunities for preaching may be possible in their vicinity. Address me at Malone, New York, or Thornton, Rhode Island."

From Here and There

Brother Robert Fuller desires his friends to know that he has come to Lamoni to reside and would be pleased to hear from any of his former friends.

The Eastern Iowa conference at Muscatine on the 23d and 24th is reported as being a good spiritual conference. Meetings are being held each evening during the week following.

Church Recorder C. I. Carpenter went to Magnolia, Iowa, in the Little Sioux District, on the 26th, to help them establish a new loose leaf district record system.

Any of the Saints and friends in central Oklahoma who would like to hear the Word should correspond with James M. Smith, of Holdenville, Oklahoma. He will be glad to hear from them.

A line or two from C. Edward Miller says he is to take a trip (perhaps has by this time) over to Hilo, on the island of Hawaii. He was glad to have the opportunity of seeing the volcano there.

In a communication from James A. Morrison he addresses the Saints of the Owen Sound District as follows: "Owing to certain changes in my work it has been found necessary for me to remove to Kincardine. We trust that the Saints will continue to give heed to the temporal law and thereby receive the blessings God has in store for the faithful. My address will be Kincardine, Ontario, until further advised. James A. Morrison, bishop's agent for Owen Sound District."

A circular letter is being sent out by Daniel Macgregor, the first assistant superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, inquiring of all district superintendents as to material for local field workers. We can only hope there are many with the qualifications which are sought: "1. One whose heart and soul is absorbed in Sunday school work. 2. One who is sympathetically in touch with children and who as per consequence will make a good recruiter. 3. One enlightened as to the working of the school and the association in its various departments. 4. One who can and will find the opportunity to move out into the district, organizing new schools and encouraging the established ones."

The preaching on the Temple Lot at Independence on June 19 was by Walter W. Smith, on the redemption of Zion and by what means attained. The text was: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." "At the same place," writes Sister Abbie A. Horton, "were lectures given by William Clow, from the south side, Clarence Wheaton of the Church of Christ, L. E. Hills and C. E. Guinand, and every evening promoters of the latter-day work are listened to by small but attentive audiences." Sunday school attendance on the 24th was 878. A. W. Smith was present and spoke in a definite manner concerning the Christmas offering fund. The establishment of a storehouse was dwelt upon by J. A. Koehler in the morning address. Red Cross work is gaining ground in Independence as elsewhere, all classes and societies participating.

LLANELLY, WALES, June 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: Our West Wales conference has just passed. Attendance to the business session was small. The services of Sunday, May 27, were of a spiritual character and were enjoyed by all. We missed the presence of our aged brother, John Harvey, of Llanelly, who had passed to the other shore a couple of weeks prior to the convening of conference. He was an elder for many years and had lived to the age of eighty one. Local papers made note of his death and gave a brief history of his career as a man who had been active in the development of the Gwendraeth Valley in the mining circles in his younger days. The funeral was a large one, conducted by Brethren T. J. Picton and Dennis Lewis; several other ministers spoke briefly as to the character, work and worth of the brother. We miss him as he was a constant Saint, the last of the old school in Llanelly. There is no brother left there now to hold up the work.

There are signs of progress at various points. There are signs, too, that we need such a development in our brethren and sisters, that the branches may not overgrow the roots. We are conscious that we have a grand and ennobling cause and that in these days of peril, judgment, commotion and uncertainty much effort and skill is needed, together with the constant companionship of the directing Spirit.

Truly we need energizing; inactivity means death. If we think to do the Master's bidding, we must indeed have a live religious fervor. So many tell that they know the work is true. My brother and sister is that all? That great knowledge brings with it responsibilities that we must study to discharge among ourselves, as well as what it makes us, debtors to the divine command, "He that is warned let him warn his neighbor." There has been one active brother added recently at Aberaman, two at Neath. We need more to help us roll on the "little stone."

The war fiend is still spreading death, murder, pestilence, crimes and vices such as are the common results of war. Yes, it always has carried the same results in its arms in every land which it visits. But the end is not yet. "This gospel of the kingdom must be preached in all nations." I am desirous to spread the truth and build up the kingdom.

We are glad to learn of the return of Bishop May to us. I learn of his presence at the Eastern Wales conference at Gloucester, May 26 and 27. Our annual conferences in these two districts have their meetings at the same time. News travels and we learn that there was a good crowd and an excellent week end spent in the service of the Master there.

Yours in Christ,

THOMAS JONES.

BELGRADE, MONTANA, June 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wish to write a few words for the HERALD columns to express my gratitude to God for his goodness in blessing us in Montana as well as in other States. Our district conference held at Bozeman, Montana, the second and third of June passed off so nicely with a peaceful spirit attending every service. The Sunday school convention and program rendered Friday night was enjoyed by all present. Preaching services were very good. Brother Winegar occupied the stand Saturday night, the writer Sunday at eleven, and Brother Thorburn Sunday night. He must have had on his best suit, as he gave us a good spiritual discourse.

We must say that the prayer meeting Sunday afternoon was fine. The love of God's Spirit was given to all in the house, that peace and joy which God alone can give, the love that casteth out all fear, came to the hearts of the Saints. We have many good Saints in Montana. Our little branches are still alive and the members are hopeful. One sister at our conference gave testimony of the great struggle she had to leave the Catholic Church on finding the gospel. Yes, the Savior says, "My sheep hear my voice." She has heard the voice of the good shepherd.

There is so much to do and the work in Montana has to be done; so many scattered Saints to visit that we cannot attend our district conference. Who will visit them and preach for them? No place to stop. Brother S. A. B. has well said in late HERALD, "Let us move forward." No place to stop; we must endure to the end.

I wish to be remembered by the Saints at Lamoni.

Your brother,

A. J. MOORE.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, June 18, 1917.

Editors Herald: The members of the Chatham Branch have worked hard and contributed liberally this spring in improving the church and erecting a basement, and on the 2d and 3d of June held a two-day meeting. People came in great numbers from various points to participate in the meetings which were very successful. The principal speakers who took part were Elders R. D. Weaver, John Grice and Robert Brown, all giving excellent sermons. The district officers and many visiting priesthood were present. The Detroit quartet, composed of Mrs. A. W. Davis, Mrs. R. D. Bennett and the Misses Mildred McCallum and May Hunter, assisted the choir and also gave a concert on Sunday evening in the Griffen Theater, in aid of the Red Cross Fund. The theater was crowded and the quartet numbers, duets and solos, were excellent and enjoyed, as well as a reading by Elder Weaver.

Monday, June 4, a chicken supper was held in the new basement, provided by the sisters of the church, which was sumptuous, and many citizens were present and enjoyed it as well as the concert which followed, also the Detroit quartet. Elders Grice, Weaver, and local talent took part. Elder Weaver held a two-week mission and his eloquent, masterly and interesting sermons were enjoyed by many people. Dick is a Michigan boy but we are proud of him over here in Canada, for he is zealous in his work and an excellent speaker in expounding the gospel truth.

The Chatham Branch, as a whole, is progressive, and as a body of people we are thankful for this glorious latter-day work, and our hearts' desire is to see its progress. Chatham District will hold the annual reunion from July 27 to August 6, at Erie Beach, a delightful lakeside resort, and all are looking forward to an enjoyable and spiritual time.

Yours truly,

STEWART LAMONT.

ALBIN, WYOMING, June 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am a member of the Albin Branch. I have been a Latter Day Saint only a short time, but am steadfast in the faith and enthusiastic in the work for Christ and the increase and advancement of his kingdom. I believe this kingdom on earth should mean more than what most people generally anticipate, and that only until we strive to make our lives consistent with our ideals of what the kingdom of heaven is and in harmony with God's law, are we worthy of the name of his people.

My past experience, not only with other churches but some Latter Day Saints, has been that they look forward to Christ's kingdom as something different or far off from his institution here: something that can only be attained after this life. I believe the institution here known as the church is a part of God's kingdom and is not a future anticipation but a reality of the present. Now when people believe anything afar off or unattainable they soon cease to strive for it. I believe that as children of God we can enjoy all of the blessings of the kingdom of heaven here on this earth, if we live and strive daily to be in consistent harmony with his will and keep this thought ever in mind; that we are a part of God's kingdom, a light and a testimony in the world which lies in darkness about us.

If every Saint in the church lived from day to day with these thoughts in mind and this object in view, their visible lives must certainly be better testimony, and the world would soon cease to look upon God's people as imposters of the gospel of salvation and would esteem them as the chosen people of the Lord. And the church would then become a unit in the plan of salvation, each doing his part in unselfish and humble submission to God's divine law.

Surely God does not ask too much of his people. His love is extended to us after continued disobedience to his commands, after which he has made possible our salvation with the bloodshed of his only Son. Is it not right and just after such loving sacrifice that we do something for the Master who only asks us to live pure and simple lives in harmony with his will, which, when abided by, will grant us more true pleasures and peace to the soul than all of the world has to offer besides? For the pleasures of sin are false, while the joys of God are eternal.

My prayers are with you for the good work.

LOUELLA C. RUSSELL.

VILONIA, ARKANSAS, June 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: Daniel the prophet said in his twelfth letter, fourth verse, that in the last days knowledge would increase. We are now in the blaze of the fulfillment of that statement. The increase of knowledge in every direction awakens a feeling of self-respect among men and a realization of their natural and inalienable rights which they will not longer permit to be ignored or despised. Rather they will go to an opposite extreme.

Glance back along the centuries and see how the nations have written the history of their discontent in blood. The prophets declare that because of this increase of knowledge a still more general and widespread dissatisfaction will finally express itself in a world-wide revolution; in the overthrow of all law and order that anarchy and distress upon all classes will be the result; but that in the midst of this confusion the God of heaven will take care of his kingdom in a way that will satisfy the desire of all people and nations that desire a King of peace and a righteous government. And thus the kingdom of God in power and great glory will shine out.

Then the revelation given in Doctrine and Covenants 45, March 7, 1831, will have its fulfillment (paragraph 13):

"And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another."

Dear Saints, this condition of things is near at hand. So men, wearied and disheartened with their own failure, and finding their last greatest efforts resulting in anarchy, will come to the light of the truth and righteousness. So, knowing this to be the purpose of God, neither Jesus nor the apostles interfered with earthly rulers in any way. On the contrary, they taught the church to submit to these powers even though they often suffered under their abuse of power. They taught the church to obey the laws and to respect those in authority because of their office, even if they were not personally worthy of esteem; to pay their taxes and to offer no resistance to any established law. (Romans 13: 1-7; Matthew 22: 21.)

The Lord Jesus and his apostles and the early church were all law-abiding, though they were separate from and took no share in the government of this work. So let us not weary over the present conditions of the nations, but pray for right to triumph, which will in the end, and go on steadily preaching the beautiful gospel, inviting the people to obey the same and receive the Comforter Jesus promised to them that obey him, that they may have peace in these troublesome times.

The Lord is soon to build up Zion and if we don't help him, he will call a set of people that will. For the time has come that Zion must shine out in her beauty to offer a city of refuge to God's people. So may the Lord bless us to this end.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

THE CHURCH AND THE WAR

members who are conscientious objectors. It is quite probable that no effort will be made to compel the honest objector to go provided that the exemptions so claimed are not too numerous. It ought not to be used merely as a shield.

The membership of the church has lived and profited much in the world, and as such we necessarily assume the obligation of the world and of society so far as duties are concerned.

Again we are reminded that while the Lord will fight our battles such references as section 102:3 refer to the redemption of the land of Zion, the more immediate personal questions, while section 95:6 seems to provide for definite measures for national war in some circumstances.

The decision of many of these questions must rest with the individual. Some of us have very earnestly considered how best we may help as citizens, and where that service may best be rendered for democracy and righteousness. The men in the mission field are needed for a very great duty to the church and our God; more devoted and prepared men are needed. There is a duty to be performed in the field and in the factory. There is also the obligation of those who can, to assist in the liberty loan, the Red Cross and later loans.

THE AFTERMATH

Some fear the aftermath, lest we become ourselves a military nation. We are quite ready to echo the language of McDonald of the Toronto Globe two years ago, that we want no master on the land, we need no mistress of the sea. It is significant, that the wars of the last hundred years have made for the greater rights and privileges of the people. It has already meant that among the warring nations of Europe. Why should we fear, then, an adverse reaction at home? Certainly if we oppose autocracy abroad we do not wish as a substitute autocracy and oppression at home.

Attention is called to the fact that the young men of drafting age are the young men needed in the church to-day. This is true for the church, it is true for the Nation. Those are called who are considered most fit for that work. But we need not fear that the war of God will be hindered if we are willing to do our duties. The young men who are willing to move forward actively in church work will probably be exempted. We do not want it used for an excuse for those who may or might assist, but do not.

The war is so terrible that it scarcely arouses a thirst for blood. We have read that even private feuds are burned out in that fierce heat and a great hatred of war developed, so much so that it extends to private offenses as well as public.

Many of our able men of recent years have taken part in the armies of the United States. We recall at the moment Elder William H. Kelley for forty years a member of the Quorum of Twelve and for many years president of that quorum, and his son, James Kelley, so recently deceased. John Smith, president for many years of the Lamoni Stake and many others may be named. These men did not become bloodthirsty.

We should do our present duty to the church and as citizens. That duty is a personal question which we should earnestly seek to answer rightly. It is a time to stand in holy places. Even the Saints will hardly escape. (Doctrine and Covenants 63:9.) It is a time to examine ourselves, a time to learn our duty and to do it, a time to draw near to God, that peace and righteousness may soon be established in the earth and the rights of the Son of Man and of humanity recognized.

S. A. B.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Dedication at Lansdowne, Illinois

On Sunday, June 24, the church at Lansdowne was dedicated, Bishops B. R. McGuires and James F. Keir being present and both taking part. We have a historical sketch of the work in that place, going back to the sixties, which we will publish next week, with the details of the dedicatory services.

Stake Number of the "Herald"

We are planning to issue a profusely illustrated magazine number of the HERALD some time during August if all the material can be assembled by that time. It will include pictures of the official staffs of the five stakes, interesting articles about each stake, with some general contributions on such subjects as the stakes in the early days of the church, the difference between a stake organization and a district, with possibly some items of interest about what the stakes are doing now. It should be a valuable contribution to the literature of the church, teeming with historical interest.

New Tract Case

The Gospel Literature Commission has been conferring with the manager of the Board of Publication concerning the feasibility of some plan to put a tract case into every community where there are Saints to maintain them. A new wall case of excellent design has been worked out and as soon as an estimate can be had as to the number that might be taken at a very reasonable price, definite announcements will be made. It is hoped to offer one free with each order for a certain amount of tracts if this can be worked out.

A Program Suggestion

In making up reunion and convention programs the General Library Commission would like to have you arrange to use a paper on library work, written for such purposes by the secretary of the commission. It is their desire to help put library work on a permanent and satisfactory basis, and believe that this method will be profitable to all. Just send in your request to the secretary, Vernon A. Reese, 3833 West Park Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and the paper will be sent. It covers about four pages of typewriting and requires about fifteen minutes in the reading, but its suggestions should take a long time to be forgotten.

A Bungalow Church

There have recently come to our desk some pictures of the church edifice built by the Saints at Fargo, North Dakota. It is known all over the city and referred to in the news columns as "The bungalow church." It has the usual wide cornice but an additional touch of individuality in the Chinese slope on the roof and belfry. It seems to us a pleasing change from the ordinary boxlike structure that is so commonly built. While we are not architects and consequently might overlook some important defects in the general idea, we see no reason why this sort of structure should not find favor with our organization of church architects as well as our church members everywhere. If anyone wants to borrow our pictures, we will send them out for the asking.

A Suggestion for Good Literature Committees

Many of our young men have already enlisted in the country's service and it is likely that many others will yet go. We suggest that our local good literature committees cooperate with relatives and friends in seeing that each of these men is well supplied with church literature. A pocket Bible should be in the equipment of every man, while other literature may be included or sent to the training stations or cantonments at which they are stationed. This is an important matter and should not be neglected. A certain amount of time is at the disposition of each man to employ as he pleases; if the material for reading and study is there, the temptations to waste time—or even worse—will be minimized. If you know of any whose needs in this line cannot be supplied as suggested let us know, and perhaps we can refer their names to committees who will be willing to handle the matter.

THE REASONS WHY You Should Go to Graceland

IV—SPIRITUAL ENVIRONMENT

If there is one thing above all others that has endeared Graceland College to those who have been enrolled as her students, it is the spiritual environment that has surrounded them.

The college prayer meeting on Wednesday evening has become a feature that is regarded as an essential part of student life. Scores of young people who have come to Graceland without realization of the need for spiritual development, have been reached through this prayer meeting.

Regular half-hour chapel services are held daily, consisting of devotional exercises and special programs.

Free Land For Gardens

Why not grow your own foodstuffs in this time of crisis? Cut down living expenses by accepting our offer of land on the railway right of way free of charge. While we give employees the preference, we hope many others will avail themselves of the land they do not use. Begin now and select your spot. Make application to the Station Agent or Section Foreman.

As soon as your tract has been assigned, start preparing the soil at once. Manure the land if possible, and plow or spade deeply. Make the seed beds fine and firm. Plant mostly vegetables that can be kept for winter use, such as potatoes, beans, onions, carrots, parsnips and turnips. Cultivate and hoe thoroughly. Kill the weeds. Keep the surface soil loose.

Assistance and advice regarding growing of gardens will be gladly furnished by J. B. Lamson, Agriculturist, Chicago, or O. H. Liebers, Agricultural Agent, Lines West, Railway Exchange Building, Denver, Colorado.

EDITORIAL

THE STRESS ON THE INTELLECTUAL

The question is sometimes raised by different ones of our readers, if we do not think that too much stress is being placed upon the intellectual to the neglect of the spiritual. Perhaps in some cases this is true. We fear that it may be, just as in many instances too much stress is placed upon the emotional rather than upon the thoughtful. But an emphasis of our very evident needs for trained men and women in special departments of work should be by no means construed as a reflection upon the splendid men who have gone out so earnestly year after year for the declaration of the gospel of the kingdom. We are not surprised to hear that the Spirit of God has been, and still is, with these men. That is as it should be.

Lack of schooling should not be a bar to the Spirit, except as the lack has been clearly avoidable. That is, if we have done the best we could we should be able to rely upon the divine guidance. If we have deliberately avoided our part, our claim for divine help would appear to be much less.

We have the declaration often made, and which we quote with approval, that those who have not the opportunity to hear the gospel but who would have taken advantage of it if they had had that opportunity will be saved in the celestial glory. So men who have not had the opportunity for very much of school work, but have taken advantage of such opportunities as they have had, and would have taken advantage of more if they could have done so, will, no doubt, be recognized and fully blessed as one who has consecrated to the service of God.

But we must remember always that education is not synonymous with schooling, though schooling is one of the most efficient methods yet discovered for gaining a definite amount of knowledge in a definite limited time. But we are in serious need of trained experts in practically every department of service. Such men are needed for the farm to test its quality, to tell us what we should plant to give us the better seed, to assist in its proper propagation. Still we do not fail to recognize the very earnest work that has been done in the phlegmatic work, still is done and must be done by men who have devoted their time to that service, even though in an experimental way. It becomes a part of the divine plan in "prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

In the past we have heard questions concerning the proper feeding of babies. Some will say, "I have noted that most mothers manage to bring up their children without the help of bachelor uncle or university students." But we have also noted a considerable loss of the human life in the hit-and-miss method, the loss of mothers and the loss of children, until one is almost led to suppose that most children grow up, not because of, but in spite of the well-meant but misdirected efforts of their parents. Nor does this mean that the Associate Editor poses as an expert. He does not, neither in practice nor in theory, but we do urge the value of the practical experiences of aunts, mothers and grandmothers, to say nothing of fathers and grandfathers, and also of those experts who have studied the problem in a critical way.

Nor does the Editor assume to be an expert in farming. We would rather agree with a bishop we lately heard speak, who could not tell a lilac from a hyacinth, yet urged the value of trained experts. We need them for factory direction, for shoe factories, for flour mills, for planing mills, for every different kind of mill, many of which are provided for in part at least. We need them, as President Walter Smith suggested at the recent conference, for the upbuilding of Zion.

This preparation should not interfere with spiritual experience. It should rather tend to deepen and increase the spiritual comprehension and appreciation. Unless there is spiritual devotion the effort will evidently fail.

We have talked much of the upbuilding of Zion, but Zion is not possible unless we have for the future men better prepared to meet certain problems than we have had in the past.

But we should not ignore the value of practical experience, for daily contact with a problem should prove of the greatest practical importance. There are in every business many minor details that must be learned by experience, until they become second nature. Practical experience is a recognized part of preparation. It should also be recognized that the test of our preparation should be capacity for a life of service. It is what we can deliver and what we can do that really counts in a pragmatic way.

But we ought not to get into a rut and do things always exactly the same way. Experience should be able to give valuable advice to the young missionary, to the young farmer, to a boy or man city-bred, for the care of live stock and farming. But on the other hand, throughout life we see the need for men who specialize on some small part of the problem.

Unconsciously, the attitude of many of us would be expressed in proportion by one worthy brother, when they were discussing the proper height for a man. He interpolated, "Well, I think that five feet ten and a half is exactly the right height for a man. That is my height."

The frequency with which this question has been raised, not only generally but personally, has caused us to make a very critical self-examination if we do not want to make the mistake of placing undue importance on that which is secondary.

Our position tersely stated is as we have so often repeated: "The purpose of education is preparation for life; the test of life is capacity for service." This means that we should have physical development to carry our intellectual, spiritual and moral load. This should not be neglected.

Then, for the meeting of our problems there should be moral education. There can be no lasting intelligence without morality, nor, we believe, lasting morality without intelligence. Third, a man cannot know too much for righteous service in the church. Our view is exactly as expressed by 2 Nephi 6: 61: "But to be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God." Undoubtedly men have been injured by their own self-conceit, but this has not been because of their great learning, but rather their ignorance of two vital principles. Of these two most important things a man should know: The first is to know God. If a man knows God, there is no danger of his thinking he knows too much or is too smart to assist in this work. The second most important thing he should know is how little he knows and how much he does not know.

Now it is quite true that as men grow in knowledge some things are removed from the realm of faith to that of knowledge. Alma has clearly expressed it in regard to the gospel principles, but it applies also to the whole field of knowledge. Nor should it prove a detriment for a man to know what his fellow men have been able to find out. It is quite true that many scientific hypotheses are speculative—the very term implies that; but they offer a basis from which we may seek truth. Knowledge should rather help him to a right comprehension of that which is divine, utilizing all that humanity has been able to ascertain of truth, which is therefore called scientific.

Experience leads us to believe, as may be inferred from Alma 16: 149, 173, that on our knowledge may be founded a greater and more far-reaching faith. If there is not such a faith, then is our law great indeed.

We have known men who could not read or write when they entered the missionary field. The inspiration of God helps them out. But the inspiration of the Spirit of God leads a man to study his own work and the works of others, so that our opponents are inclined to refer to our men as well posted and learned. We hope they are, for we prefer the truth to the mere condition of ignorance.

When a man knows how to read and write, he will need no inspiration for that. So it goes into other departments of human knowledge. But no man knows enough to preach a sermon without divine direction. No man knows enough to represent God in any capacity without inspiration; and our observation is that those who are reputed to be the best schooled or most learned among us still feel keenly—and very keenly—this need.

It were truly better that a man should have less learning, if by having more he shuts himself out from the inspiration of Almighty God. Divine inspiration is primary. All training is secondary to, that he who stands to represent God should not only have been called by him, but should have daily his commission reaffirmed by the Spirit of God to him personally, without the intervention of any other man.

Marvelous, indeed, do then become the manifestations of the Spirit in taking the reading of years and explaining the meaning to him who has by study prepared himself. May it not have been partly for this cause that it was Moses who was taken up and shown the kingdoms of the world and received his great vision? May it not have been partly for this reason that the Apostle Paul was carried to the third heaven and there saw things he could not believe? And Enoch is also reported to have been one of the most learned men of his time.

Many times we note these criticisms of too great dependence on learning being made of others who have given considerable time to study. But in the light of our own experience we desire to give them the benefit of the doubt in the absence of definite evidence. In several cases we know that this decision is abundantly justified—that the men do not put the chief stress on the intellectual, but make spiritual devotion primary. This is, of course, as it should be. Certainly there have occurred instances in which individuals have become disaffected. We are frank to say we are not yet convinced of the advantage of a thorough college education to everyone, but surely the assumption cannot be made that college training is detrimental, any more than it can be made prerequisite to service.

Of first importance is the call and inspiration of God to us. Scarcely second is brotherly love and helpfulness. But with this should also go a sincere effort as "workers together with God" to prepare by faith and by study, recognizing it is not degrees in schooling that count, but about what can we do and have we done of highest service to God and man.

S. A. B.

THE GREAT AWAKENING

On account of the opportunities before him for missionary work, Elder Knisley is not able to complete this series at this time. He hopes to add to and extend the theme next winter with additional data upon the situation in the world and the economic solution offered. Elder Baldwin's article throws additional light upon this same theme.

The associate editor had the privilege of attending a year ago some thirty or thirty-five lectures upon social reconstruction, presenting the views of the leading sociologists, the conditions confronting the world to-day and the solution offered by socialism and anarchy, as well as that of the leading sociologists.

It is very evident that at the time that the revelations were given to the church in 1831 there was no realization in this country of this great need for economic justice. But that realization is very vivid to-day. In the midst of confusion there stands still the divine plan of social reconstruction, cooperation and equality of opportunity.

This involves a consecration of what a man is and has. It means an organized effort of the individual on behalf of society. No man should be supported in idleness, whether the so-called rich or poor. Every man should be expected to labor to the extent of his ability and receive a just share at least of the fruits of his labors. The surplus and excess above just wants and needs are to be turned into a common fund.

The able business man continues to handle large properties as a stewardship, the title to the property being in his name and that of other individuals. But the excess profits go to society in the caring for the widows and orphans and for help where actually needed. The strength of the plan does not depend upon the health or strength of one man, but upon that of the organization, as each man considers himself his brother's keeper. But the assistance is rendered in an organized way through the bishopric.

Under this plan there would be no excessive indulgence, no debauchery, but every man labors according to his talents for himself and his family and for the social good. And each man owns as he earns it, his home and inheritance and his stewardship. The organization helps a man to help himself. It is becoming more and more evident that the world is proceeding towards such a plan by which the social interest is considered as paramount to that of any one individual or small collection of individuals.

Provision is made to-day for the care of children in playgrounds, nurseries, child labor laws, free schools and school laws; for women, in women labor laws, mothers' pension and many other provisions which may be included as those of the laborer, such as the employer's liability act, provisions for recreation, for corporation schools, insurance against death, sickness, accident and unemployment, provisions by which many of these are carried as social liabilities, sanitary working places and dwelling places and limited hours of labor. More and more is this paternalistic idea of government being carried out. There is much to be said both pro and con to secure the right balance, which may be best for society and the individual, for students are recognizing that the social result is not all, but that we should have with it the incentive and the development of the individual to his utmost capacity and power.

That old question asked in the beginning is about to be answered with a strong affirmative. That question was asked by a murderer in the beginning. It has been asked with like intent all the way down the pathway of history, assuming a negative answer. But as it was implied there, so must it be answered now and men are coming to realize that fact. The question is, Am I my brother's keeper? The answer is and can only be an emphatic yes.

Before this great economic and social problem there appears to be but the one natural answer: I am my brother's keeper. In the difficulties presented by Elder Knisley this answer remains—the divine plan of individual reconstruction, together with social reconstruction on a basis of cooperation, equality and justice.

Doubtless this problem will receive further consideration during the year.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION

Important sessions of the board were held on June 7, 20, and 21, and from the items of business transacted the following are presented as being of general interest:

Bishop Benjamin McGuire was chosen president and J. A. Gunsolley secretary of the board. Bishop Albert Carmichael was chosen treasurer and business manager of the board, which body of men has charge of all the publishing interests of the church. As executive committee, three were chosen: B. R. McGuire, A. Carmichael and F. B. Blair.

The following editors were appointed: SAINTS' HERALD: Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, editors, with S. A. Burgess associate and E. D. Moore assistant editor. Journal of History: Heman C. Smith, editor. Autumn Leaves: Elbert A. Smith, editor; E. D. Moore, associate editor. Stepping Stones: Estella Wight, editor. Zion's Hope: Ethel I. Skank, editor; Estella Wight, managing editor. Zion's Ensign: referred to Bishops McGuire and Keir to make arrangements. Arthur E. McKim has been appointed advertising manager for the Board of Publication.

The business manager was authorized to provide tracts in the Russian language and in such other foreign languages as may be found advisable.

Regarding the publication of tracts and books, the board decided that hereafter all books and tracts, after being properly indorsed, be published by the Herald Publishing House.

The debt of the church to the Herald Publishing House was by vote of the board consecrated to the Presiding Bishop of the church as a surplus.

The business manager was authorized to put into effect the stewardship plan among the employees of the Herald Publishing House and the Ensign Publishing House so far as practicable. He was authorized to increase the present wage scale of the employees of these publishing houses not to exceed ten per cent to any individual in such cases as the management deems advisable.

LANSDOWNE DEDICATION

On Sunday, June 24, the church at Lansdowne, East Saint Louis, Illinois, was dedicated by Bishop B. R. McGuire.

In the sixties an effort was made there and a branch established for a short time, but the effort soon lapsed. The history of the present branch prepared by Elder G. W. Vandel, follows:

The Lansdowne Branch had its beginning in the big-hearted, consecrated service of Brother George F. Barraclough, who, some twenty years ago—at that time the only known member of the church in East Saint Louis—would, when walking the streets of what was then considered one of the most sinful cities in the United States, pray to God to open the way for him to establish the work of Jesus Christ in East Saint Louis. This desire was finally realized.

Along about 1904 Brother Barraclough became associated in a business way with a W. C. Carl of the Christian faith. The subject of religion was frequently discussed between them, Mr. Carl manifesting great interest. Later, when Brother Barraclough went to the home of Mr. Carl to live, he succeeded in converting him and later his brother, W. F. Carl. These brethren from their baptism entered into the spirit of the work. Their homes were always open to the Saints, and were the scenes of many pleasant times for the young folks of the Saint Louis Branch. W. C. Carl was soon called to the eldership and was able to assist Brother Barraclough in his pioneering effort. W. F. Carl opened his home for cottage meetings which were conducted by District President J. A. Tanner.

As the Carl brethren were engaged in a business that employed quite a number of men, they were able to interest some of the young men of the Saint Louis Branch, namely, W. R. Weidman, T. J. Elliott, and George M. Vandel, who, in the spring and summer of 1905, found employment with them, and established themselves on this side of the river.

In the fall of 1906 a Sunday school was organized, meeting in the one finished room of the Hawthorne public school. This move proved a success, and as there was now a representation large enough to justify a branch organization, arrangements were made for this.

On Sunday, October 16, 1906, the organization was effected with 15 members, Apostle I. N. White in charge assisted by District President J. A. Tanner, there was also present George H. Hilliard of the bishopric and Elder H. W. Sparling of the missionary force.

Since the organization numerous missionary efforts have been made by various representatives of the missionary force; all of these efforts served to invigorate the Saints spiritually, and some of them netted numerical strength.

The growth of this branch has been rather remarkable. Brother Barraclough and the Carl brethren began to interest their friends, going into their homes and teaching them the gospel, in many cases converting the entire family. Later Brother Louis L. Joerndt took up the same line of work and brought in a goodly number, until now we have a membership of over two hundred, most of them converted through the efforts of our local force.

Brother I. N. White delivered a prophecy at the organization to the effect that if the Saints of the branch were faithful there would be branches dotted around over the country as the result of the work of her ministry.

The brethren soon began to move out into new fields, opening up missions in Troy, Alton, Sorento, O'Fallon and Sawyersville in Illinois; Brentwood and Maryland Heights in Missouri. Through these openings branches have been organized at Troy, Alton, O'Fallon, Brentwood, and Maryland Heights with the Sawyersville organization pending. During all the time the work was being carried on at these places, not once did the Lansdowne Branch fail to have some one of the priesthood present to conduct its various meetings. Thus we feel that that part of Brother White's prophecy has been fulfilled, and that while the branch is still young.

Since the organization of our branch, with one exception, we have entertained the Saint Louis District during its June conference; also some of our members have held and do hold important offices in the district church work, the Sunday school, Religio and Woman's Auxiliary.

REPENTANCE--Part 2

(Synopsis of sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, September 10, 1916.)

REPENTANCE ALWAYS NECESSARY

Repentance, then, is one of the principles of the gospel instituted by Peter on the day of Pentecost under the power of the Holy Spirit, endowed with power from on high.

It may be asked, however, if there is any place for repentance among those who have been baptized and entered the church. We might assume that the Saints had progressed to a point where such preaching is not necessary. However, in Doctrine and Covenants 56:4, the statement is made, "You have many things to do and to repent of." We must take things as they are, and not close our eyes to realities, and imagine that we are living in a world that does not exist. So long as human nature continues as it is, and the Saints in reality are perversely inclined to do wrong from time to time, it will be necessary to preach repentance to them.

While those who are nonmembers should repent and be baptized, those who are members of the church and do wrong, find an avenue of reconciliation through repentance and confession. If there is something between them and God they should confess to him; if it is an open offense, they should confess openly and receive forgiveness from the church; if it is an offense against some individual they should seek individual reconciliation. It should be remembered, however, that confession alone is not adequate but the language of the law is that they should repent with all their hearts.

GENUINE REPENTANCE

We have recently received two inquiries from different parts of the country concerning cases that are quite similar. An individual is addicted to the habit of drunkenness. He gets drunk; the officers labor with him; he professes repentance and is forgiven. A week or a month later he gets drunk again, and the process is repeated. These officers wish to inquire if they have any recourse, under the law, or if they are bound to forgive the individual every time he makes confession.

The answer is that they are justified in demanding some assurance that the confession has back of it genuine repentance, in other words, that the individual shall have repented with all his heart. These repeated offenses indicate that he is not repentant in that way. He should be cast out, or perhaps be withheld from church fellowship until he gives evidence of genuine repentance by bringing forth that which John terms "fruit meet for repentance."

We believe also that restitution should follow repentance. In the 6th chapter of Leviticus, under the Mosaic law, it was provided that where one had taken from another anything by force, he should return the principal and add thereto one fifth part more. This was under the Mosaic law, certainly under the Christian law we could not do less than return the principal.

Now Zacchæus, who was a righteous man, stated that if he had taken things from any man by deceit, he would return fourfold.

We received an inquiry from a minister in charge of a certain field, to whom a nonmember had sent a confession. He had become interested in our work to the point where he thought of joining the church, and desired to know what would be required of him. It appeared that years ago he had insured his house, and later had burned it down by his own hand, and collected the insurance money. Also he had induced a friend to sign a note with him, and the friend had been obliged to pay the note, and he had never made restitution.

We replied that as an evidence of his repentance he should make restitution so far as possible. He should pay back to his friend the amount due him, or if not able to pay it all he should pay as much as possible. He should search out this insurance company, if still in existence, and return the money taken from them; or if not able to return all of it, he should return as much of it as was possible for him to do. Having done all within his power to make restitution, we should justly then give to him our forgiveness, and he would be a fit candidate for baptism.

Too often people repent, when in fact they are merely sorry that they got caught. Again, that confession which says, "If I have done wrong I am willing to be forgiven," has been too often given.

I wish to give some statements on the subject from men more or less great.

Luther says: "To do so no more is the truest repentance." This is an excellent statement, though not so good perhaps as the one made by Isaiah:

Wash ye, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil: learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.—1: 16, 17.

Taylor says: "True repentance hates the sin, and not merely the penalty." The prodigal son found himself in a very disagreeable position, but evidently he reached a point where he hated the sin more than the consequences, and then he was in a condition to return to his father.

DEATHBED REPENTANCE

Here is a statement from Lorenzo Dow, the eccentric preacher round whom so many anecdotes cluster. This is a statement about deathbed repentance:

"Deathbed repentance is burning the candle of life in the service of the Devil, and blowing the snuff in the face of Heaven."

The old song says:

While the light holds out to burn,
The lost sinner may return.

But according to Lorenzo Dow, it is not very honorable to burn the candle of life in the service of the Devil until it is exhausted, and then blow the snuff in the face of Heaven. We have little confidence in deathbed repentance which is forced on an individual, as in the case of a murderer who is condemned to be hanged, and who has exhausted every possible means of escape by appeal, and finally at the last moment accepts Jesus and is promised by the preacher that he will enter into celestial glory. The preachers may make such promises, but they have no power to fulfill them.

However, we would not entirely disregard deathbed repentance. It is said that it is better late than never, and even in a case where one has postponed repentance until the very last moment, it may possibly be better to repent than never to repent.

THE PRODIGAL SON

The classical style of repentance is that of the prodigal son related by the Master. You remember that this was the story of a father who had two sons. One of them, early in life, demanded of his father his portion of the inheritance, and receiving it, went into a far country and squandered it in riotous living. As a result, when a famine followed, he was numbered as one of the natives of that country, and was set to feeding hogs.

Jesus here works in a little fine point which must have made a strong impression on the Jews. We have a poor opinion of a hog, but nothing compared with the opinion entertained by the Jews, which would not tolerate a hog on the place. To be brought to a level where a man would feed the hogs, would be in the uttermost degradation from the standpoint of a Jew.

Nathaniel Hawthorne went to work on a farm at one time, but did not stay long. He quit work, saying that he positively refused to be chambermaid for a cow; and to become a personal servant of a hog must have been much worse in the eyes of a Jew.

Under these conditions, in the course of time, this young man came to himself, as the statement is, and repented, and went home to his father. His father was rejoiced to see him, and then went out to meet him, and fell on his neck and wept.

Now preceding this parable the Master said: "There is joy among the angels of heaven over one sinner that repenteth." So it must be that he meant this parable to portray the welcome that God would give to the returning sinner. As the prodigal son came to himself, forsook his wickedness and his degradation, and returned to his father with repentance, and love, so should men forsake their sins and their degradation, and return to God. And just as the father received this young man with joy, even going out to meet him, and made him welcome, so will God receive the repentant sinner. He is a God of love then, as this man was a father filled with love and compassion.

The young man had lost his inheritance, and there is no statement that it was returned to him, he could not recover it, but he was willing to make a new start, and accumulate something on his own account with the help of his father.

So though we may have wasted many years, and squandered our energies that we cannot hope to recover, yet we should be willing to make a new start, and do the best we can with that which remains.

QUIT YOURSELVES LIKE MEN

Are you a man? Assert your manhood then.
Break off from evil ways beneath a man.
They do not contribute to make you men.
Shame! Do not say, "I cannot"; say, "I can."
Are you a woman? There is the same need.
Behold the little ones are round your knee,
To all your words and actions they give heed,
And imitate with aptness what they see.
Are you a young man? Oh, then while the light
And dew of life's sweet morn is round your path,
Serve ye its Giver in your fresh young might.
Far lo, his word a thousand beauties hath.
Are you a maiden? Truly serve the Lord
Before your friends and brothers; make them know
The power of purity in his great word:
Your influence is large, for weal or woe.
Do you love wisdom? Who so wise as he?
Or poetry? Come, you will be at home
With all things fair and beautiful and free.
Do you love wickedness? Then do not come.
From Noah down all prophets cried repent;
And I of passages might find a score
To prove the doctrine. But my time is spent;
And all that I might say was said before.

—DAVID H. SMITH.

Positive, definite work in announcing gospel truth overmasters and outranks the spineless variety. Keep out of the realm of speculative uncertainty.

Some men seem not to be aware that whatever of divine commission they may ever have received, expires by limitation when corroded by inactivity, or when they fail to observe the Lord's fixed stipulations of rectitude.

Preaching that flows not from the fountain of heaven's holy and inspirational supply, tends toward one of two great evils: dead formality, or vicious heresy.—James E. Yates.

GRACELAND COLLEGE AND THE WAR

"It is of the utmost importance that there shall be no lowering in the efficiency of our systems of education," says Doctor P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, discussing education and the war.

"Schools and other agencies of education must be maintained at whatever necessary cost and against all hurtful interference with their regular work except as may be necessary for the national defense, which is of course our immediate task and must be kept constantly in mind and have right of way everywhere and at all times. From the beginning of our participation in the war we should avoid the mistakes which some other countries have made to their hurt and which they are now trying to correct.

"If the war should be long and severe there will be great need in its later days for many young men and women of scientific knowledge, training, and skill; and it may then be much more difficult than it is now to support our schools, to spare our children and youth from other service and to permit them to attend school. Therefore, no school should close its doors now or shorten its term unnecessarily. All young men and women in college should remain and use their time to the very best advantage, except such as may find it necessary to leave for immediate profitable employment in some productive occupation or for the acceptance of some position in some branch of the military service, which position cannot be so well filled by anyone else.

"When the war is over, whether within a few months or after many years, there will be such demands upon this country for men and women of scientific knowledge, technical skill, and general culture as have never before come to any country. The world must be rebuilt. This country must play a far more important part than it has in the past in agriculture, manufacturing and commerce, and also in the things of cultural life—art, literature, music, scientific discovery.

"Therefore, a right conception of patriotism should induce all students who cannot render some immediate service of great value to remain in college, concentrate their energies on their college work, and thus be all the more ready and fit when their services may be needed for war or for the important work of reconstruction and development in our own and other countries when the war shall have ended."

Graceland will open her doors on schedule time September 6 to "do her bit" to prepare the hundreds of young men and women whose services will be so greatly needed after the war. It is hoped that the parents and friends of the young people of the church who should be taking advantage of Graceland's opportunities will see to it that every sacrifice necessary is made that they may be fully prepared for the great task before the church in the very near future.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS,
President Graceland College.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES---Part 2

BY J. F. MINTUN

Buddhism is another form of the so-called heathen religion founded by one Buddha, whose teachings in some form or another form the basis of the religions that largely prevail in Japan, China, Thibet and some minor places at the present time, whose devotees number about two hundred ninety-five million.

The basic or fundamental doctrines of Buddhism are self-purification, without which spiritual progress is impossible; and human brotherhood. It had for one of its objects the destroying of the castes among the Brahmins, hence, one of its tenets is the equality of all castes. Another tenet in this religion is the deification of men, who when deified are called Buddhas. In philosophy, they believe the universe to be an illusion, only apparent. It enjoins great tenderness for animal life. It is attended by an extensive development of monasticism. There is some similarity between Buddhism and Catholicism in these respects: Each has a monastery, celibacy, the dress and cap of the priest, the incense, the bells, the rosary of beads, the lighted candles at the altar, the same ideas of purgatory, and praying in a tongue not known to the communicants. It has theories like the Christian Scientists, so much so that it is thought that the latter copied from the former, especially is this true of belief that the universe and all material things are illusions, that we simply believe they exist, but that in fact they do not.

A Supreme God and Evolution. H. Dharmapala says:

In the sense of a supreme Creator, Buddha says there is no such being, accepting the doctrine of evolution as the only true one, with corollary, the law of cause and effect. He condemns the idea of a Creator, but the supreme God of the Brahmins and minor gods are accepted. . . . This supreme God is all love, all merciful, all gentle, and looks upon all beings with equanimity. Buddha teaches men to practice these four supreme virtues.

Why Opposed to Christianity. Kniza Ruige Harai says:

There are two causes why Christianity is not so cordially received; . . . In 1637 the Christian missionaries combined with the converts, . . . and it is understood that those missionaries intended to subjugate Japan to their own mother country. . . . To prevent such another insurrection and to protect our independence we were obliged to prohibit the promulgation of the gospel.

But admitting for the sake of argument that we are idolaters and heathen, it is Christian morality to trample upon the rights and advantages of a non-Christian nation, coloring all their natural happiness with the dark stain of injustice.

The Important Things:

Whether Christ saves us or drives us into hell, whether Guatana Buddha was a real person or there never was such a man, it is not a matter of consideration to us, but the consistency of doctrine and conduct is the point on which we put the greater importance. Though they [the Japanese] approve his logical argument, yet they are very stubborn and will not join Christianity as long as they think it is a western morality to preach one thing and practice another.

One Religion. Zenshori Nogushi says:

Then, is there a hope of decreasing the numbers of religions? Yes. How far? To one. Why? Because the truth is only one.

Man's Purification in Ten Commandments. Harm Take says:

In other words it [Buddhism] teaches us that absolute truth is constantly acting to make a man on the surface of the earth complete his purity and goodness. Therefore, should I speak from the side of goodness, I shall say that Buddhism teaches ten commandments; such as, not to kill; not to steal; not to commit adultery; not to tell a falsehood; not to joke; not to speak evil of others; not to use double tongue; not to be greedy; neither be stingy; not to be cruel.

What Exists in Every Being. H. R. H. Prince Chaudradrat says:

The Dharma presents the three following phenomena, which generally exists in every being:

"1. The accomplishment of eternal evolution. 2. Sorrow and suffering according to human ideas. 3. A separate power uncontrollable by the desire of man, and not belonging to man."

The Dharma is formed of two essences, one known as matter, the other known as spirit. These essences exist for eternity.

We Are Nothing.

The consciousness of self-being is a delusion, so that, until we are convinced that we ourselves and whatever belongs to ourselves is a mere nothingness, until we have lost the idea or impression that we are men, until that idea be completely annihilated and we have become united to Dharma we are unable to reach spiritually the state of Niervana, and that is only obtained when the bodies dissolve both spiritually and physically. So that one should cease all petty longings for personal happiness, and remember that one life is as hollow as the other, that all is transitory and unreal.

Suffering and Its Cause.

The first noble truth is suffering; it arises from birth, old age, illness, sorrow, death, separation from what is loved, association with what is hateful, and in short, the very idea of self in spirit and matter that constitutes Dharma.

The second noble truth is the cause of suffering which results from ignorance, creating lust for objects of perishable nature.

The third noble truth is the extinction of sufferings, which is brought about by the cessation of the three kinds of lust, together with their accompanying evils, which all result directly from ignorance.

The fourth noble truth is the means of paths that lead to the cessation of lusts and other evils. This noble truth is divided into the following eight paths: Right understanding, right resolutions, right speech, right acts, right way of earning a livelihood, right effort, right meditation, right state of mind.

A Savior. Banrieu Yatsubuchi says:

In Buddhism we have Buddha as our Savior, the spirit incarnate of perfect self-sacrifice and divine compassion, and the embodiment of all that is pure and good.

Why Different Sects of Buddhism.

Why are there so many sects and preachings in Buddhism? Simply because of the differences in human character. . . .

There is no room for censure because Buddhism has many sects which were founded on Buddha's teachings, because Buddha considered it best to preach according to the spiritual needs of his hearers, and leave to them the choice of any particular sect. We are not allowed to censure other sects, because the teachings of each guides us all to the same place at last.

Judgment, Reward, and Punishment. H. Dharmapala says:

As no evil remains without punishment and no good deed without reward, it follows that neither priest nor God can prevent each act bearing its own consequences. His [man's] merit or demerit—that is, his character—consists of the sum total of his actions in all previous lives.

By this great law of Karma Buddha explained the inequalities and apparent injustice of men's estate in this world as the consequence of acts in the past, while Christianity compensates these inequalities by rewards in the future.

BRAHMA-SOMAJ RELIGION

Of this religion but little need be said only that it is a reformation of Buddhism and Brahmanism by an acceptance of the Bible as equal with the Hindu scriptures as will be seen by the few extracts quoted, which quite clearly set forth this peculiar reformation.

Its Origin. Protap Chunder Mizoomdar says:

Amid the din and clash of this polytheism and so-called evil, and amid all the darkness of the times, there arose a man, a Brahman, pure-bred and pure-born, whose name was Raja Ram Dohan Roy. . . .

In 1830 this man founded a society known as the Brahma-Somaj. . . . Brahma means the worshiper of God, and Somaj means society, therefore, Brahma-Somaj means the society of the worshipers of the one living God. . . . He cooperated with the British Government to abolish the barbarous customs of Suttee, or the burning of widows with their dead husbands.

It Is Monotheistic.

The Brahma-Somaj founded this monotheism upon the inspiration of the Vedas and the Upanishads.

Accept the Bible as Inspired.

So twenty-one years after the foundation of the Brahma-Somaj the doctrine of the infallibility of the Hindu scriptures was given up. . . .

Recognizing, therefore, on the one hand, the great inspiration of the Hindu scriptures, we could not but on the other hand recognize the inspiration and the authority of the Bible. And in 1861 we published a book in which extracts from all scriptures were given as the book which was to be read in the course of our devotions.

One True God. B. Najarkar says:

The fundamental, spiritual ideal of the Brahma-Somaj is belief in the existence of the one true God.

Unity of Truth.

The second spiritual ideal of the Brahma-Somaj is the unity of truth.

Harmony of Prophets.

The third spiritual ideal of the Brahma-Somaj is the harmony of prophets.

A Dispensation of the Age.

In the fourth place, we believe that the religion of the Brahma-Somaj is a dispensation of this age; it is a message of unity and harmony.

Communication with God.

And can we even for a moment ever imagine that the Spirit of God has ceased to work in our midst? No, we cannot. Even to-day God communicates his will to mankind as really as he did in the days of Christ or Moses, Mohammed or Buddha.

Motherhood of God.

The first ideal of the Brahma-Somaj is the idea of the motherhood of God.

SHINTOISM

This is another sect of Buddhism existing principally in Japan. Concerning it, and in its defense the Right Reverend Reuchi Shibata says:

The word Shinto or Kami-Nomichi comes from the two words, "Shin," or "Kami," each of which means Deity, and "to" or "michi," (way), and designates the way transmitted to us from our divine ancestors, and in which every Japanese is bound to walk.

Pluralities of Creators.

According to our ancient scriptures there were a generation of Kami or deities in the beginning who created the heavens and the earth together with all things, including human beings, and became the ancestors of the Japanese.

Shintoism is divided into several sects of which I make mention of only the most prominent, the first being the

THIKKO SECT

The Thikko [practical] sect, as the name indicates, does not lay so much stress upon mere show and speculation as upon the realization of the teachings. Its doctrines are plain and simple and teach man to do man's proper work.

One Absolute Deity.

They teach us that before heaven and earth came into existence there was one absolute deity called Amenominakamushi-no-kami. He has great virtue, and power to create, to reign over all things; he includes everything within himself, and he will last forever without end.

Male and Female Deities.

In the beginning the one deity, self-originated, took the embodiments of two deities—one with the male nature and the other female. . . . These two deities are nothing but forms of the one substance and unite again in the absolute deity. These three are called the "Three Deities of Creation." They cause a generation of deities to appear.

THE MOUNTAIN FUGI, ANOTHER SECT OF SHINTOISM

According to the teachings of our sect we ought to reverence the famous mountain Fugi, assuming it to be the sacred abode of the divine Lord; and as the brain of the whole globe. And as every child of the heavenly Deity came into the world with a soul separated from the one original soul of deity, he ought to be just as the deity ordered and make Fugi the example and emblem of his thought and action.

Originated in 559 A. D.

The founder of the sect is Hasegawa Kakugyo who was born in Nagasaki, of the Hizen province, in 1541. In the eighteenth year of his age, Hasegawa, full of grief at the gloomy state of things over the country, set out in a pilgrimage to various sanctuaries of famous mountains and lakes, Shintoistic and Buddhistic temples. While he was offering fervent prayers on sacred Fugi, . . . he received inspiration through the miraculous power of the mountain; and becoming convinced that this place is the holy abode of Amenomina-kamu-shi-no-kima, he founded a new sect, and propagated the creed all over the empire.

Love All Things.

As our doctrines teach us, all animate and inanimate things were born from one heavenly Deity, and every one of them has its particular mission, so we ought to love them all, and also to respect the various forms of religion in the world.

All Religion Based on Truth.

They are all based, I believe, on the fundamental truth of religion. The difference between them is only in the outward form, influenced by variety of history, the disposition of the people, and the physical conditions of the places where they originated.

THE JAINS

The Jains are another of the religions of the world called heathen which claims our attention on account of some of its doctrines, there being a similarity between some of its doctrines and some of the doctrines of modern religious thought among those who claim to be Christian. Of the doctrines of this sect, Virchand A. Gandhiji has this to say in defense of their history and ethics:

High Priests:

You will, therefore, look upon me as simply the mouthpiece of Muni Almarimji, the learned high priest of the Jain community in India, who has devoted his whole life to the study of that ancient faith.

Two Theories in One.

First, Jainism has two ways of looking at things—one called Dravyarthekaraya and the other Paryayartheka Noya. . . . According to the Dravyarthekaraya view the universe is without beginning and end, but according to the Paryayartheka view we have creation and destruction at every moment.

The Canon.

The Jain canon may be divided into two parts: First, Shrute Dharma, i. e., philosophy; and second, Chatra Dharma, i. e., ethics.

Soul, the Divine Element.

According to the Jain view, soul is that element which knows, thinks, and feels. It is, in fact, the divine element in the living being. . . . The soul, so long as it is subject to transmigration, is undergoing evolution and involution.

Nonsoul.

The second principle is nonsoul. It is not simply what we understand by matter, but it is more than that. Matter is a term contrary to soul. But nonsoul is its contradictory. Whatever is not soul is nonsoul.

Four States of Man's Existence.

I shall now refer to the four states of existence. . . . That of being a denizen of hell; . . . that of having an earthly body; . . . of being a man; . . . and that of being a denizen of the celestial world. . . . The soul being severed from all connection with matter regains its purest state and becomes divine.

Matter Eternal.

Matter and soul are eternal and cannot be created.

No Personal God.

The doctrine of the transmigration of soul or the reincarnation, is another grand idea of the Jain philosophy. Once the whole civilized world embraced this doctrine. . . . The Bible and sacred literature of the East are full of it, and it is to-day accepted by a majority of the world's inhabitants.

Misery.

The problem of injustice and misery which broods over our world can only be explained by the doctrine of reincarnation and karma.

Karma.

The sanscrit of the word karma means action. "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again," and "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" are but the corollaries of that most intricate law of Karman.

Highest Happiness.

Jainism goes a step farther and says that the highest happiness is to be obtained by knowledge and religious observances.

Moral Laws.

The five Maharatas or great principles for Jain ascetics are,

1. Not to kill, i. e., to protect all life.
2. Not to lie.
3. Not to take that which is not given.
4. To abstain from sexual intercourse.
5. To renounce all interest in worldly things, especially to call nothing one's own.

(To be continued.)

SUCCESS VERSUS WANT

It is written that "Want is the basic principle of the evolution of man." Is this true? No. It is a miserable insult to man's inherent greatness. It is an outrage upon the character of God who made men and pronounced them "very good."

Men do not need to be forced into action. Men need only the inspiration of opportunity to develop the best there is in them. God did not make men so lazy as to need the prod-pole of poverty shoved into their souls to spur them to action. Men have a nobler incentive to work than the compulsion of want.

God implanted within his children the grand stimulus of achievement, a thousand times more potent than the paralysis of poverty.

"NOTHING SUCCEEDS LIKE SUCCESS"

Want starves the stomach and weakens redress,
While he who succeeds is made strong for success.
Want weakens the will that strong men possess,
While naught in this world succeeds like success.

Blackness of darkness, disheartening mess,
Ever grows brighter in light of success.
The poor are all taught their chains to caress,
While the rich all know they succeed by success.

Out upon this insult. Tear off its dress,
Life more abundant all comes with success.
Viewed from all angles we're bound to confess
That naught in this world succeeds like success.

D. R. BALDWIN.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SUPERRESISTANCE

(Harold C. Goddard in International Conciliation Bulletin No. 102, May, 1916.)

The origin of the term nonresistance is the English Bible, and the English Bible is usually infallible in things poetic. But this is the exception. For the word nonresistance is negative while the thing itself is the most positive thing in the world. Fooled by its appearance, friends and foes of the idea it is supposed to embody vie with each other in diluting a mighty reality into an excellent substitute for nothing. They persist, for instance, in setting nonresistance over against force—as if it were not itself the most powerful of forces! They dwell on its passivity—as if it were not activity incarnate! They insist on its submissiveness (its enemies branding it as servility, its friends extolling it as a kind of high patience that stands meekly aside while material forces sweep to their destruction)—as if its one great end were not the reduction of other forces, the bending of other wills, to its own! And so they continue heaping up its negative qualities until we come to conceive it as a cowed, spiritless, anæmic creature, little fitted to inhabit this proud, pulsing, red-blooded world. Indeed we are lucky if we do not come to identify it with its exact opposite: cowardice. . . .

The test of superresistance is its success—not its success in any vulgar sense but its success in turning into its own direction the force which it resists. Passive nonobedience may often thwart the power that commands, but it rarely converts it. Usually it only infuriates and so intensifies it. The person, man or child, who, when you ask him to do something, sits still and says nothing, is vastly more exasperating than the one who says, "I won't," or otherwise hits back. If your request was reasonable, his lack of consideration maddens you. If it was unreasonable, you feel your guilt and are inwardly perturbed. In either case, if you imitate the noble example before you and hold your tongue, the nonresistance on both sides is complete. But the problem is not solved. It is only aggravated. You know, both of you, in your hearts, that you had better have come to blows. . . .

EXAMPLES OF SUPERRESISTANCE

If we could but free them from their midst of inherited associations, the supreme instances of this power would still be found in the life of Christ. Christ, with one glance, sending Peter out to weep bitterly; Christ working in the heart of Judas until, "he repented himself . . . and cast down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed, and went and hanged himself;" Christ disturbing the peace of Pilate so that at last, if we may accept the spirit of tradition, he, too, took his own life; Christ, after death, overturning the Roman empire itself—these are examples, not of a power that did not resist, but of one that resisted miraculously and supremely. . . .

"I can see," says Captain Brassbound to one of the most purely delightful of them, Lady Cicely, "I can see that you have some clue to the world that makes all its difficulties easy to you; but I'm not clever enough to seize it. . . . I'm stupid. . . . Since you saw me for the first time . . . I heard you say nothing that didn't make me laugh, or make me feel friendly, as well as telling me what to think and what to do." There is no secret to Lady Cicely's clue to the world. It is simply her abounding love for everybody. The secret is not what it was but how to get it. I imagine the best first step toward getting it is to come in contact with a few Lady Cicelys.

SPURIOUS VERSUS GENUINE FORMS OF SUPERRESISTANCE

For superresistance, as these examples show, does not consist in the physical act but in the personal relationship between the actors. Slaves and heroes often act in the same way. You can turn the other cheek to all eternity without being a Christian, without being anything but a sniveling coward. Superresistance does not consist in letting the man who took away your coat have your cloak also. It consists in a genuine desire that he may be warm. It does not consist in going two miles with the man who compelled you to go one. It consists in striking up such an intimacy with him that you both forget to mark the milestones.

Now to do these things is exceedingly difficult. But to do things that externally resemble them is relatively easy. It is easy, for instance, to return good for evil for the sake of making your enemy feel mean—if you are a hypocrite. It is easy to return good for evil out of a sense of "duty"—if you are a prig. It is easy to make no return at all for evil—if you are a dead man. (In this last case, all you have to do is to close your eyes and fold your hands as if you were in your coffin, locking the lid on the inside if the strain becomes too great.) To practice any one of these spurious forms of superresistance requires no exceptional endowment. But to practice superresistance itself calls for angelic qualities. The result is that he who attempts to practice it without the power succeeds only in producing a forgery—as, for centuries, ordinary human beings have attempted to be Christians and have succeeded too often only in becoming slaves. Nonresistance, indeed, might be defined as superresistance that fails. Superresistance might be defined as the true coin of which nonresistance is the counterfeit. Superresistance means mastery. Nonresistance means lying down, falling under the Jugernaut, letting the powers that possess the world trample their victim in the mire. Perhaps the most tragic delusion of Christian history has been the belief that nonresistance can regenerate the evildoer. If it could, the slavedrivers of the world would be its most regenerate class: American capitalists would be angels, Prussian junkers and Russian bureaucrats archangels, and Oriental priests and despots gods. It cannot do it. The force that can regenerate the evildoer is superresistance. . . .

SUPERRESISTANCE A FORM OF LIFE AND NOT A CREED

Superresistance is not to be had from any rule or formula. None of the worth while things of life is, though all of them are supposed to be, by little minds. Such open-sesames, indeed, can be made to sound very plausible. A sure formula for learning to swim, for example, is to jump into deep water and feel no fear. A certain rule for walking a narrow path on the edge of a precipice is to walk it just as you would a path of the same width across a pasture. Both prescriptions are absolutely infallible. But the average man will try them at his peril. The fact is, of course, that they are not rules to be followed at all. They are powers, skill, arts, to be achieved. The exceptional individual attains them at a leap; the ordinary man must make them his by determined and laborious practice. . . .

Nations, like men, have open to them three fundamental methods of meeting a force that menaces them from without: resistance—the attempt to overwhelm that force by a greater force acting in the opposite direction; nonresistance—the attempt to frustrate that force by letting it exhaust itself through encountering no obstacles; and superresistance—the attempt to convert that force by turning it into the opposite direction through the attraction of an imaginative substitute. The advocates of the first method, in its pure form, are called militarists. The advocates of the second and third methods are called, indiscriminately, pacifists. But if the first part of our discussion has been of any avail the identity of name will not blind us to the fact that the advocates of national nonresistance and the advocates of national superresistance are diametrically opposed. Indeed, the abyss that divides them is far profounder than that which separates either of them from the militarist.

The average nonresistant pacifist prides himself on the doctrine that national morality should differ in no way from the best individual morality. It is true. But it is precisely this type of pacifist who forgets that truth most grievously in fashioning his own philosophy. As in the sphere of personal morality, he pins his faith to the belief that an end can be put to conflict by certain acts or refusals to act, forgetting that peace with honor and without clash of arms can come to a nation, as the corresponding state can come to an individual, only through a clear ascendancy in superforce over the nations that would attack it.

And even if he escape the first error of the believer in nonresistance, he generally falls into the second. He preaches pacifism as if it were a truth that could be had for the asking, a rule that could be followed, a power that could come from the mere act of subscribing to a creed. He talks about its "acceptance" or "adoption," when, if he talk at all, he should talk about its practice or attainment. He advocates a dogma, when he should be creating a spirit. He attempts to turn into a principle what should remain a form of life. Let him look up his own name in the dictionary and he will discover that it is his part to make, not to preach, peace. Would we could always keep that distinction clear—between the peacemakers and the peace preachers! As of old, it is the peacemakers that shall be called the children of God.

The peace preacher is fond of declaring that it is righteousness that exalteth a nation—which is true and admirable. But he generally manages to imply that if a nation will only scrap its navy, it will thereby be exalted—which does not follow at all. Righteousness is no such negative thing. The mistake is exactly the mistake of supposing that the mere act of throwing away his gun will endow even a coward with a personal magnetism that can look down a wild beast or charm the heart of a highwayman. It is a delusion. These miraculous powers, national or individual, do not come at any such waving of a wand.

We have heard more than once since the outbreak of the war that if the Belgians and the French instead of resisting the invasion of the Germans had offered no obstacles, but had welcomed them hospitably to their cities, all would have been well with Belgium and France. Now such an observation is arrant nonsense or profound wisdom according to the interpretation placed upon it. If the statement is purely hypothetical, if it means that two whole nations meeting a third invading nation in a spirit of complete human understanding and brotherly love would be sufficient to disarm it, the observation is true, though it is no more practically helpful than the observation that if France and Belgium had been inhabited solely by men of the type of Christ, Saint Francis, and Shelley, there would have been no war. If, however, the statement is practical, if it means that it was within the power of the Belgian and French nations of August, 1914, to receive the invaders in this hospitable spirit and that they should have done so, the remark is the merest insanity. You might as well say that France should have had an army of 15,000,000 to meet the invader. The unanswerable retort in both cases, though in different senses, is the same: France didn't have the men.

All this is not to imply for a moment that the pacifist who uses this argument may not himself be a man in this higher sense. I have the honor of knowing more than one Quaker, who, if this country were wholly unarmed, would, I am confident, stand up in the face of a foreign invader and be shot, not like a slave but like a hero, if the alternative were to spill human blood himself. (What he would do if he saw his wife and children lined up to be shot, or worse, I prefer not to ask.) All honor to the man who can live up to such a creed, provided, always, as I believe he would, he could unnerve the soul of his enemy by his act. But surely such power of self-control should constitute for that Quaker no excuse to ask that this country should disarm itself, if he has to confess to himself that, under circumstances like those just imagined, all but a handful of his countrymen would be transformed, not into heroes like himself, but, at worst, into shrinking cowards or clawing beasts, at best into creatures whose hearts and hands would reach out instinctively for the most bloodthirsty revenge. And even if he could conceivably justify casting his own vote toward disarmament, that would not justify his urging his weaker fellow citizens to vote as he does. Not till he has imparted to them the secret of acting as he can!

NONRESISTANCE AND MILITARISM EXTREMES THAT MEET

The pacifist that counts on the fact of disarmament does not perceive that he has gone clear around the circle and clasped hands with the militarist who counts on the fact of armament. But it is so. The militarist puts his faith in guns and powder. The pacifist puts his faith in their absence. They are equally deluded. To rely on the absence of armed force is just as materialistic as to rely on its presence. The things to rely on are national good will, national imagination, national self-control. The things to fear are national greed, national ignorance, and national passion.

Why! it is intellectually paralyzing to hear extremists of either party talk on this subject. "An army is insurance against war." "An army is a standing provocative of war." "A navy is a species of police force." "A navy is a powder magazine awaiting ignition from the first chance spark." "Europe exploded because it was all so over-armed." "Europe exploded because the rest of Europe was not so well armed as Germany." "The lesson of the war is that preparedness will not keep the peace." "The lesson of the war is that the unprepared nation will be crushed." Such talk is nonsense. As if ships sailed and guns went off of themselves! Armaments, like pistols and the police, are dangerous or protections only in reference to the powers behind them, and the same navy might be insurance to one people and a constant menace to another. . . .

NATIONAL SUPERFORCE AND ITS MOBILIZATION

But in what does national superforce consist?

The power of superresistance of a nation cannot be defined any more than can that of the individual. We might say it is the sum of the separate powers of superresistance of its inhabitants in so far as those powers are nationally vocal and effective. We might say it is measured by the degree of dedication of its government to the growth and welfare of every human being within its borders and thus of its dedication to the growth and welfare of humanity as a whole. We might call it simply a nation's international good will. Such generalities would mean little. But that does not alter the fact that national superresistance is a reality as actual as is personal magnetism of a strong and sympathetic individual. Furthermore, it is only the presence of this force in its fullness that can take the place of arms. It is only the presence of this force in some measure that can render arms safe to the nation that bears them.

Does anyone need to be told, for instance, that if the United States really were the democracy, the refuge for the oppressed, the land of equal opportunity, which in popular cant it is supposed to be, and which in actual fact it feebly tries to be—does anyone need to be told that such a United States could stand in absolute safety among the nations of the world, utterly unarmed? Does anyone need to be told, either, that such a United States could be armed to the teeth quite without danger to herself or to her neighbors?

Does anyone suppose that if Belgium had been a little Utopia, a model society for the world, Germany would have dared to trample her into the mire? Not for a moment. Not if Germany were twice the brute that her bitterest enemies would make her out.

Remote as these extreme cases may be from present reality, they point out the only real road to peace. . . . No half measures will suffice at this crisis of world history. The working relation that the political part of that program should bear to the question of military preparedness is this: No increase in armament that is not coupled with some social amelioration, some enhancement of genuine democracy, is entitled to a moment's consideration from the American people. That is the crux of the whole matter. Only as a nation's power of superresistance is increased can that nation with impunity increase the size of the stick that it carries.

It is not enough to say: we will strengthen the nation's right arm first; and afterward we will teach the nation itself not to abuse its strength. The second step rather should be the indispensable condition of the first—for on it depends the tremendous question whether the nation shall dominate or be dominated by the instruments of war. We may well take a lesson here from the recent attitude of English labor. English labor demanded as a condition of its participation in the European war, a fuller recognition of its place and power. English labor was precisely and profoundly right in that demand. (Indeed, the rational sympathy for the allies in this country is grounded on the belief that such things can happen more readily in England and France than in Germany.) Every worker in America, be his work manual, mental, or imaginative, should place himself on a similar platform with regard to the military future of this country. And there are, at the outset, two very concrete openings for such demands—openings that fortunately can be made a test and touchstone of the character of every representative of the people now in public life. In the first place, hand in hand with new armaments must go the taxation that is to pay for them. If it is decided that new armaments are necessary to ward off dangers from without, let it be demanded at the very least that the new taxation make for greater equality and justice within. And a second condition of added armament should be the abolition, or the beginning of the abolition, of private profit in the manufacture of the instruments of war. To win immunity from foreign attack at the price of subjugation to Kruppism would be for the American people a humiliation far profounder than the most crushing defeat at the hands of Germany or Japan that the nightmares of the most panic-stricken militarist ever conjured up.

And so the end of the whole matter is a paradox; the paradox that he who would seek peace must seek something else first. For peace—like those other ultimate things, beauty and happiness—must be wooed indirectly. It is written that he only shall attain beauty who loves life more than he loves art.

It is written that he only shall obtain happiness who loves labor more than he loves pleasure. It is written that that nation only shall gain peace that loves humanity more than it loves the absence of strife and bloodshed.

Some Neglected Musical Instruments

Some time in the life of almost every boy or girl there comes a desire to master some musical instrument. This desire is but the manifestation of innate musical endowments that exist, in a greater or less degree, in nearly every human being. It is both natural and highly desirable that these faculties voice themselves, for as a result we bring the practice of music into our lives.

Our musical aspirant, yielding to these innate impulses, begins to look around him and consider what musical instrument he had better select. The piano is most often chosen because it is the most available, being found in so many homes. The old-fashioned cabinet organ, the favorite of our grandparents, uncles and aunts, comes in for some devotion. But whether either of these instruments or some other is selected, how often is the choice made merely from availability, sentiment or passing fancy. Our boy goes out and hears the village band and notes that the instrument heard most prominently and which seems to be playing most of the pretty melodies is the cornet, and he straightway decides that the cornet is the proper instrument upon which his talents may find their best expression. The result is that when a locality desires to organize a band (an organization that is an asset to any community) plenty of cornetists, good, bad or indifferent (mostly the two latter kinds) may be secured, while players for the other instruments necessary to establish balance, color and quantity, are woefully scarce. Or, our girl, at an evening concert or social gathering, hears the violin and forthwith conceives the determination to become proficient on that instrument, which is one of the most difficult of all to master, and which, on account of its peculiar character, is not adaptable to everyone.

Many of the failures to "arrive" on musical instruments may be correctly ascribed to ill-advised selections. Boys and girls are not equally adapted to every musical instrument any more than they are to every trade or calling. Each instrument has its peculiar characteristics, which can best find expression in the temperament properly adapted to it. Also, the needs of band and orchestra work over the world, and especially over the church, demand that all musical instruments be mastered in a proper proportion. It is with the view of not only assisting in the proper selection of an instrument but of contribution to this necessary balance and proportion, that we now briefly describe some of these too oft-neglected instruments.

In orchestral instruments, the viola, a violin a full third larger than the regular instrument, is seldom seen or heard except in the larger orchestras. Yet it is a most beautiful instrument, singing in a compass and quality not unlike a rich mezzo-soprano voice. It is very useful in an orchestra and can be readily mastered by any who could master the violin. It has a mellow, sonorous quality of tone, and in the hands of one skilled in its use is an excellent solo instrument.

The violoncello, or cello, as it is usually called, is another instrument of the viol family, more frequently found than the viola, but altogether too much neglected. It is a large instrument, although not nearly so large as the contrabass, and is held partly between the knees of the performer and played with a bow of greater size and strength than used in playing the violin. It sings in a compass embracing the richest of high tones of the tenor with the full sonorous ones of the baritone. In tone quality it is altogether one of the most beautiful of the stringed instruments. It is almost indispensable in an orchestra, and its great beauty and quality of tone render it highly prized as a solo instrument.

The big double bass, contrabass, "big fiddle," or as it is sometimes facetiously termed, the "dog house" is the largest instrument of the viol family. Good players on this instrument are in great demand. It is the foundation of the entire string section of the orchestra. It sings in a compass ranging from the ordinary tones of the bass voice to the deepest tones of the orchestra, comparable to the pedal tones of the pipe organ. It is not a solo instrument but its great usefulness in an orchestra makes it in demand.

The clarinet is another orchestral instrument too seldom mastered. If well played it has a rich, mellow, beautiful tone. It is a good instrument to have in the musical circle of the home, combining nicely with the piano, flute, or cornet. A good clarinetist can always be sure of having his services in constant demand for both band and orchestra work. It is one of the most valuable instruments in many ways. It has been called the "dramatic soprano of the orchestra," and furnishes body, color and brilliancy in either band or orchestra. As a solo instrument it is very agreeable if well played and not "overworked."

The soft sweet tones of the flute are too seldom heard. It is an instrument that is very valuable in both ensemble and solo work. The flute has been handed down to us from the classic ages, where it was the principal instrument of the cultured. Its tones are limpid, pure and sweet, and it harmonizes most excellently with almost every other instrument. It is excellent for the family circle, comparatively easy to learn, and much in demand for orchestras and the larger bands. It is very enjoyable as a solo instrument, if not played to excess, and in the orchestra or band it adds color, brightness and sparkle. Allied to it is the piccolo, which is but a small flute, speaking an octave higher.

The tuba is a very valuable instrument in both band and orchestra work. It plays the lowest bass tones and stands in the same position to the brass family that the contrabass does to the strings. A good tuba player is a valuable asset to a band or orchestra. It has very little value as a solo instrument and those who desire that feature in a brass instrument might well consider the euphonium, a distinctly beautiful brass horn, singing in the baritone register, and on account of its great range and possibilities, is of great value in the band.

The oboe is a small double-reeded instrument with a singular nasal quality of tone, weird and quaint in character. It is very useful in orchestras and the larger bands, where it is used to depict quaint, weird, pastoral effects. It is the direct descendant of the shepherd's pipe of classic ages, and in a limited way, where it is employed in its proper uses, it is entrancingly beautiful. As a solo instrument it is not of great value, as its extreme tone color qualities tend to wear upon sensitive ears if heard to excess. But it is a very highly prized instrument in the work of the larger orchestra or band, where it could not very well be dispensed with. It sings in the soprano register, and allied to it is the bassoon, or bass oboe, which sings in a much lower register. Its tones are somber, weird, grotesque and in its higher register frequently comical. It is called the clown of the orchestra," being used frequently to depict the ridiculous in musical effects.

Like the oboe it is very highly prized in both orchestra and band work. Competent oboe and bassoon players are in demand.

The intermediate horns of the band, such as the alto horn, the mellophone, a form of French horn, the tenor horn, and the baritone, are all useful and valuable and of varying demand. They should receive more attention.

In the reed section of band work, an instrument that is coming into more notice is the saxophone. Saxophones are now made in four sizes, and quartets and sextets of saxophones are frequently found in the largest concert bands. It is a reed instrument made of metal (whereas the clarinet is made of wood) with a heavier reed than in the clarinet and having a much more reedy character of tone body. The soprano saxophone sings in about the same register as the oboe, while the alto instrument corresponds to the cello in the strings and can be substituted for it very nicely. It has its own beauty and individuality of tone, with a limited value as a solo instrument. It is chiefly valuable in giving body and tone color to the band. In time it will probably be adopted in a limited way into some of the orchestras that do not adhere too closely to the traditions of the old masters.

Before leaving the realm of band instruments we must not omit mentioning the trombone, although it is not so badly slighted as some others. It is a most useful instrument, giving dignity and force as well as body to either band or orchestra. It has only a fair value as a solo instrument, but is compensated by its great use in other fields. It is readily convertible to demands aside from its particular field. If possible, the aspiring trombone player should seek to master the slide type, as its range, tone quality and flexibility make it to be preferred to the valve type. Modern orchestras are demanding slide trombonists in preference to those who play the valve type.

The harp is a wondrously beautiful instrument, scarcely ever found except in the largest musical centers. It is a direct descendant of the stringed harps of classic ages. It is exquisitely beautiful, both as a solo and an orchestral instrument. It is a very large, expensive instrument, not easily transported, rather difficult to master, and should not be essayed unless the opportunity to obtain good instruction is at hand.

Before leaving the subject we must not forget to mention the family of percussion instruments. It is true that there is not very much music in any one of them, but it is equally true that there is the making of music in their right use. The most generally known are the drums, snare and bass. These are found in all orchestras and bands, and do not present very great difficulties in their mastery. But there is another family of drums, not so widely known but certainly as valuable. The tympani, or kettle drums, are drums made in the form of old-fashioned brass kettles of our grandmother's days, having a head of tanned sheepskin stretched over them. By varying the tension of this skin, variations of tone are obtained. Tympani are always found in pairs and in the larger orchestras in groups of three. By tuning each to a different pitch, the tone given at the stroke of the padded mallet used in beating them can be made to coincide with the key note, or tonic, and the dominant of the piece, thus giving a percussive tone that has a definite pitch. They are very effective in well-conducted orchestras.

It is sincerely hoped that this will aid in many ways and that the young people of the church, upon whom is laid the injunction to acquire proficiency in music, will adopt many of the hitherto neglected instruments, so that in time the church may occupy in the courts of Zion with a full complement of instruments of music.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Hymns We Love

"ROCK OF AGES"

It is said that a religious magazine invited its readers to send in lists of their favorite hymns, and that three thousand five hundred responded. Only two hundred and eighty-five named other than "Rock of Ages" as their first choice.

When its author, Augustus Toplady, at the age of sixteen visited a rural district in Ireland, he attended a small meeting held in a barn, and conducted by James Morris an illiterate man. Of this meeting and its effect upon young Toplady it is said, "This youth who had been carefully reared by a widowed and cultured mother, listened with rapt attention to an impassioned sermon from the text, "But now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."

Toplady writing of this incident in his career says, "Strange that I who had so long sat under the means of grace in England, should be brought nigh unto God in an obscure part of Ireland, amidst a handful of God's people, met together in a barn, and under the ministry of one who could hardly spell his own name. Surely it is the Lord's doing and it is marvelous."

He was later graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, and was made a priest at the age of twenty-two. He became curate of Farleigh, and later was appointed to a parish in Devonshire. During this pastorate he wrote "Rock of Ages."

It is worthy of note that from Devonshire come two other of our world-famous hymns, "Just as I Am," and "Abide With Me."

Toplady died in 1778 at the age of thirty-eight, but he had "lived long enough to give to the world one of its most treasured heart songs."

Many are the stories told—and untold—of the influence of this hymn upon the hearts of humanity in times of stress, for which it is eminently suited. "When the ship London sank in the Bay of Biscay in 1866 the passengers on her deck sang 'Rock of Ages' as the waves swallowed them. When the Christian Armenians were butchered in Turkey they sang 'Rock of Ages' even as the sword fell."

An interesting story is told of a prosperous business man in New York, who failed and drank himself into the gutter. "Becoming utterly discouraged he walked toward the docks one night to throw himself into the harbor. As he went down an alley he passed a mission. His attention was arrested by the singing of what had been his mother's favorite hymn, 'Rock of Ages.' He paused, went in, was converted, and 'beat back' again to his old place in the business world."

It is said that Toplady died with the words of this hymn upon his lips.

"When I rise to worlds unknown,
And behold Thee on Thy throne;
Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee."

Notes Afield

The writer is at present engaged in a tour of the Holden Stake in the interest of the music work of the church. This stake has an abundance of good musical material available for effective development. Holden itself, the central pivot of the stake, has an excellent choral organization under the leadership of Sister Lola Johnson (who is also chorister of the stake) an efficient orchestra in its Sunday school, and a recently organized band, composed of young people. The
