other branches of the stake have choirs, in most cases, that are productive of real good, and there are two orchestras, one at Knobnoster, the other at Postoak, that are in training for future work. Altogether, Holden Stake offers ample opportunities for work and development, and we predict that if her people arise to these opportunities the stake will have much renown, musically, in the near future.

The Sunday school orchestra of the Fanning, Kansas, Branch are to be commended for real musical thrift. Realizing the need of advancement in their musical work, and of creating a more extended musical atmosphere in general musical appreciation, they gave a concert on the evening of June 21, assisted by the writer and Brother Orland Nace, violin, of Independence, together with local talent. This concert was greeted with a most unusual attendance, people coming in droves. The Saints' chapel was literally packed and a large number patiently stood about the windows and doors to listen. The program was keenly enjoyed and it is believed that credit has been done the church work there because of it.

A pleasant evening was spent with the orchestra of the Second Saint Joseph Branch in their practice at the residence of Brother John L. Bear, Friday evening, June 22, and the writer was privileged to witness the work of this interesting group of young musical enthusiasts (this is the proper word) who have been serving the Sunday school of this branch with credit for several years. We trust their splendid enthusiasm will never abate and they will always see the need of continued effort, service and development.

The combined choirs of Independence Stake have already taken up the work of the oratorio "Elijah," the piece de resistance selected for rendition at next conference. The hot weather is not to deter them from their proper scheme of work and development.

One of the important recent musical events of Independence was the conclusion of the contest for the Marcus H. Cook prize violin. This excellent instrument is a handmade violin of Brother Cook's workmanship, and was offered to the violin student playing in the Independence orchestra who should make the greatest degree of improvement in the six months ending June 24. Nine contestants were present to take the final test before the three judges, and the one scoring the greatest number of points was Adelbert Withee, twelve years of age, playing in the ranks of the second violins of the orchestra.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Unless one has facilities for storing in a manner at least nearly approaching a scientific way, it is not wisdom to buy potatoes, apples, turnips, or many other vegetables or fruit in large quantities. Indeed, in the cities to-day, there is little economy in making heavy preserves, jellies, jams, etc. in the home, for city prices on fruit, the prices of sugar, gas, and other essentials, are conducive to the high cost of living even on canned goods.

The children in the larger cities of Canada have been indirectly benefited by the conditions and fact of war, according to the chief commissioner of health of Montreal. Because the men have been sent to the front, their families have in very many instances, returned to the country, and the children have gained by the transfer. In spite of the unusual heat of the past summer, statistics in the fall showed a decrease of mortality among the children of Canada.

There are two kinds of courage—the one displayed a mile from danger and the other that is exhibited at the scene of action.

The Constitution and By-Laws of the Woman's Auxiliary

AS AMENDED BY THE CONVENTION HELD AT LAMONI, IOWA, APRIL, 1917

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

FOR THE

GOVERNMENT OF THE GENERAL ASSOCIATION OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

OF THE

REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST

LATTER DAY SAINTS

ARTICLE I.—NAME

The name of the organization shall be, "The Woman's Auxiliary of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

ARTICLE II.—OBJECT

The object of the organization shall be to study and promote the welfare of the home, child, community, school and church; to encourage the organization of women into classes, etc., that they may better prepare themselves to cooperate in all work tending toward the building up of Zion.

ARTICLE III.—ORGANIZATION

The officers of this organization shall be: President, first and second vice president, secretary, treasurer, and historian, to be elected at the regular meeting of this association at such time and place as shall be decided upon. The manner of the election shall be determined by the vote of the general assembly.

In case of death or resignation the vacancy shall be filled by appointment agreed upon by a majority of the executive committee.

ARTICLE IV.—FINANCE

There shall be an annual assessment of ten cents per member, due and payable to the general treasurer at the first of each year.

ARTICLE V.—PARLIAMENTARY

The church Book of Rules shall be authority on all questions of parliamentary usage in the association.

This constitution may be amended by a two thirds vote at any General Convention, provided not less than three months' notice of the proposed changes shall have been published in the press columns of the association.

BY-LAWS OF THE GENERAL ASSOCIATION

Section 1, Bureaus and Supervisors.—In order to carry out the object of this association the following bureaus shall be established: educational, home and child welfare, relief and service and young woman's. Supervisors and the editor in chief shall be appointed by the president after consulting with the elective members of the executive committee and such general church officers as are interested in the particular phase of work under consideration.

Section 2, District and Stake Organizers.—The president shall appoint a district or stake organizer to take charge of the work in each organized district or stake within the church, such appointment to be made after consulting with the other members of the executive committee and the presidency in charge of the district or stake in question.

Section 3, Duties of Officers.—The president, in addition to the duties generally pertaining to this office, shall have general supervision over all bureaus. She shall send such report to the First Presidency of the church as shall be required.

The vice presidents shall be the associates of the president in her work, and shall, in their order, in the absence of the president, perform the duties of that office.

The secretary shall keep the minutes of the general meetings and of any action taken by the executive committee. She shall keep a directory of all clubs, classes, circles, etc., with their officers, which are affiliated with the general association, sending out such notices as shall be required by the general officers.

The treasurer shall collect all dues annually, notifying district or stake organizers the first of December of each year, and if not collected by February 1, another notice shall be sent. If payment is delayed, she shall report to the executive committee. She shall be custodian of all funds, which shall be paid out only upon warrants signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary. She shall keep an itemized account of all receipts and expenditures, present a report at stated meetings, and make a written report at general convention after her accounts have been audited.

The historian shall keep an interesting history of all the activities of the general association, which history shall be the permanent record of the association. She shall require from the general officers, supervisors, and organizers such reports as shall be necessary to make her history complete.

The executive committee shall consist of the general elective officers, supervisors of bureaus, and editor in chief. In addition to the matters as are usually presided over by such a committee, it shall appoint the Year Book committee. It shall consider the general outlines of programs for reunions, conventions, institutes, etc., making such suggestions to the district organizers as they deem wise.

Section 4, Duties of Appointive Officers.—The supervisors shall have charge of the work of their bureaus, keeping vitally in touch with such phases of woman's work as will be of particular value to their bureaus. They shall make a general outline of their plans for the year's work and submit same to the president, and through her, to such general church officers as are interested in that particular phase of the work. They shall suggest ways of working to the organizers who have been appointed over each church district or stake, and through each organizer, reach each club, society, etc., interested in their phase of woman's work.

The organizers shall have general charge over all phases of auxiliary work in such districts or stakes over which they are appointed, keeping a directory of each club, etc., with their officers, within the district or stake, and presenting to them such outlines of work as shall be sent them by the supervisors of bureaus as are adapted to the locality in which the classes or clubs are found. They shall encourage the organization of women for the purpose outlined in article 2, and render assistance in such organizations when called upon. They shall have power to choose a program committee, to prepare programs for woman's meetings to be held at reunions, conventions, etc., within their districts. They shall send to each club, circle, etc., within their districts or stakes, such notices as come to them from the general officers, and shall instruct each club, circle, etc., to remit the dues provided for in article 4 to the general treasurer. They shall keep a history of their work and the work of clubs, circles, etc., within their districts, and should report to the general historian such matters as are called for by her. They shall send to the editor in chief all items of interest for publication. They shall keep in touch with the missionary in charge of that particular field, that a closer cooperation between the auxiliary and the church may be fostered.

The editor in chief shall edit and arrange all matters for publication in connection with the press columns of the general association, and through the medium of the press extend systematically a knowledge of its aims and activities.

Section 5, Records.—The officers, supervisors and organizers shall keep records of the work of their departments, which shall be given to the historian, who shall incorporate them in the general history of the association.

Section 6, Year Book.—The Year Book shall be a guide-book for clubs, circles, classes, or societies. It shall contain the aims, purposes, and reasons for the work; a general review of the activity and work accomplished; suggestions for future work; a list of books, literature, prices, and where they may be purchased; the qualifications of those composing committees, etc.

Section 7, Year Book Committee.—The executive committee shall appoint the Year Book committee. This committee shall consist of three members; of which the president shall be chairman, one member to be appointed each year. This committee shall confer with the president of the church, with heads of departments and institutions of the church who foster such lines of work as are outlined in the general by-laws, and with executive committee of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Section 8, Representation.—All women who are interested in woman's work, are entitled to voice, but only members are entitled to voice and vote in the general conventions.

Section 9, Amendments.—The by-laws may be amended at any annual meeting of the general association without previous majority vote.

Section 10, Suggestions for Organizing of Local Club, Classes, etc. Any group of women meeting together for social betterment purposes of any character, may belong to this association, by adopting Articles 2 and 4. They are then entitled to voice and vote in any district or stake or general assembly on all questions being considered.

It is their privilege to elect whatever officers they find advisable, choose their own line of work, pass such by-laws as meet the local conditions. It is their privilege to receive suggestions from the district or stake organizer, and the supervisors of the various phases of the work covered in the general constitution.

In places where there are two or more clubs, circles, etc., they may meet together and organize a council of women to better conserve the object of the association, so that there may be no wasted energy due to overlapping of activities, so that philanthropic work may be better directed, etc., and the needs of the community as a whole considered.

Each club, society, etc., meeting together for the sake of study, should have a leader whose duty it should be to direct the study of the class, either conducting the work of the class herself or appointing a teacher, to solicit members for the class, and to try to arouse interest in the subject being studied. These leaders should keep in touch with the supervisors of the bureau under which her class is enrolled, receiving advice and counsel whenever necessary.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

Explanatory Letter

To Stake, District and Local Organizations: You will observe that in the amended constitution and by-laws, all constitutions and by-laws for stakes, districts and locals are eliminated.

We suggest that you continue your present organizations (stake, district and local) until your next regular business meeting, at which time you may decide whether you wish to continue your organization as it is, or modify it to better suit your needs. In this connection please refer to by-laws, section 10, paragraph 2, "It is their privilege to elect whatever officers they find advisable, etc." The purpose of this amendment is to relieve classes, circles, clubs, etc., of unnecessary organization. In other words, we feel that we should leave you free as to how you shall organize or what officers you shall have. You will doubtless find it necessary, in order to carry out your course or work successfully, to have at least a simple organization; and in some cases, especially as you grow and develop, you may need a more complete organization. Let your needs govern your organization.

Your connection with the general auxiliary will be through your district organizer, who will transmit to you all communications, suggestions, and helps, issued by the general auxiliary. You will note the special duties of organizers set forth under by-laws section 4, paragraph 2. One officer in a district, having the responsibility of gathering data and reports for the general auxiliary; and only one official with whom it is necessary for you to consult for help and information from the general executive officers, will greatly simplify our work.

The district organizer appointed by the general executive is our official representative in your district. You may see it to your advantage to use the organizer in whatever district organization you may choose to have.

The sisters are urgently invited to correspond with any of the officers whose addresses are given herein for any further information desired.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A Message From Our Secretary

TO THE LOCAL WOMEN AND GIRLS

In the effort to make our secretarial work of the greatest value and assistance to the president, supervisors of bureaus, and other officers it will be necessary for us to have a complete directory of all women's and girl's clubs, circles, classes or societies in the church. Our officers are earnest, consecrated workers and willing to give whatever they have that can be given to help their sisters. They have asked repeatedly for a list of names of women and girls with whom they may correspond to introduce their work.

There is a large number of societies, classes, etc., actively engaged in some work in the church, such as aid society work or young women's clubs, which are not affiliated with the auxiliary. In order to make our directory complete we need the names of the officers of these societies whether they are members of the auxiliary or not. You may or may not have paid your annual assessment of ten cents per capita as required by our constitution and by-laws but we urge you to write to us, giving the information desired.

We need every woman in the church and, since the object of the auxiliary is to inspire and assist women to "better prepare themselves to cooperate in all work tending toward the building up of Zion" with special emphasis laid upon the development of the home, surely every woman needs the auxiliary.

Will you help us by answering the inquires below? It will take only a few minutes of your time and a two-cent stamp but will assist us greatly in our effort to get in touch with the active societies and workers. We want to count you as workers, interested in giving practical service to the church or community, or in preparation for future work. Please answer the following and mail to the secretary.

Have you an organized club, circle, class or society of girls or women in your branch? If so, how many and for what purpose are they organized?

Are you affiliated with the general auxiliary, that is, have you paid the required annual assessment of ten cents per capita?

If not, do you not wish to join the one big movement organized for the women of the church and under the supervision of the general church?

MRS. J. A. GARDNER, General Secretary.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Christmas Offering--Roll of Honor

At the time we report this, there are 28 schools and a district home department who have reported as already raising as much or more than they gave for Christmas offering last year. We wish we might print the interesting things they say, but space forbids—anyway, actions speak with emphasis, and the amounts indicated here mean much activity.

The Chicago First Branch gave $18.86 last year. They evidently think that wasn't very much, for they already have $60 raised and state their aim here so you can all remember it, as $200. The superintendent says: "We realize this means work but we are on the job and expect to stay on till the goal is reached." Good.

Considerable interest is reported in the Little Sioux District. The Moorhead, Iowa, school says: "1916—$44.50; 1917, to June 17—$146. They have more than trebled their offering of last year. Logan, in the same district, has four times as much as last year. To June 17 they had $104.86, and expect to make it $200 by rally day, July 1.

Cherokee, Iowa, has $30.28, which is fine, compared to $10.95. They are expecting to raise $60.

Fisher, Arkansas, gave $4, and now have $5.17.

Escatawpa, Mississippi, has $5.49, compared to $4.25 of last year.

Sandwich, Illinois, is doing things. They have an enrollment of 29 and on June 17 had gathered $48.15 and expect to raise $100.

From Saint Joseph, Missouri, a wire comes that they have $34, which is more than they gave last year. This was the Zion's Star school.

Nevada, Missouri, have a nest egg equal to last year's offering. Five times the total of last year's is the mark they have set.

Valley Center, Michigan, have $12, had $10.05 last year and intend to raise the $2 apiece for the 25 membership they have.

At New Liskeard, Ontario, they have a small school that reported $12 last year, have $26 now, and still going.

Chilliwack, British Columbia, Tulare, California; and Vale, Oregon, have more than doubled last year's offerings.

The Orion, Michigan, Sunday school have $16.83, compared to $12.87 of last year.

Breaking the bank will be a feature of the Christmas entertainment at Fresno, California. The boy or girl who holds the best record for attendance will have the honor of wielding the hammer.

We know the schools everywhere are working hard, and some of the best payers last year are going to surpass their record of last year. Naturally we do not expect that everyone will double his offering of last year, for some have done so exceptionally well that it could hardly be expected, but know they will not fall behind.

The Spokane District home department turned in $30 last year for Christmas offering. This year they have set their mark at $200. What do you think of that? and a home department, too, who are ordinarily scattered here and there. Here is a field of opportunity for home departments to cooperate with the main schools in the interest of the Christmas offering. The bishop says he hopes many will take up this movement in an effort to reach the scattered members of the districts.

Another suggestion he makes is that in each school where exceptional results are being recorded, that in the spirit of helpfulness, the officers correspond with the other superintendents and assistants, as to how it was done. You may have discovered some simple little things that would be most helpful to others. Try it.

We surely appreciate the wonderful enthusiasm you are manifesting.

Waiting for your report, which will be appreciated even if not answered.

A. W. SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

From Here and There

The Listowel, Ontario, Branch held an interesting annual meeting on June 17. Some of the Saints and nonmembers came as far as twenty miles. There were some of the latter present who had never heard a Latter Day Saint sermon. Several sermonets at the afternoon meeting were highly appreciated.

The letter from Elder Joseph Arber at Morrison, Oklahoma, tells us of a successful series of meetings at that place, having baptized one, with others near, and many friends made for the cause. Some opposition was manifested but this was largely overcome by the liberality of the editor of the Morrison Transcript. Brother Arber furnished a comprehensive explanation of our position.

In view of the record of the past week, of war activities on land and sea and in the air, race riots, labor strikes, famines and food restrictions, suicide pacts, accidents and plots, in our own land as well as in foreign lands, the celebration of the Fourth of July by all the Saints in Independence Stake at Enoch Hill in a union picnic will stand for much, says Sister Abbie A. Horton. The attendance at the Sunday school on the 1st was 871 and the amount collected for Christmas offering $724.45. The storehouse was the theme at the 3.30 meeting, at which M. H. Siegfried addressed the Saints. The vesper service on the temple lot was the first of a series of meetings to continue during the summer. Elder Clarence Wheaton of the Church of Christ spoke at length (his sermon appearing in the Ensign of July 3) on consecration, tithing, and the erection of the temple. The Red Cross fund has reached the sum of $21,250, and the Saints are willing and ready to do their share in the time of giving a helping hand.

Disposing of Liberty Bonds

In the Y. M. C. A. to-day I picked up an idea which we might use to advantage. It is this: If any of the Saints bought Liberty Bonds, why not turn them over to the Children's Home, Order of Enoch, the Saints' Home or the bishop for use of the church? Such bonds clearly represent a surplus and as such they should be used.

I have not found any of our people here. They evidently do not use the privilege of church announcements in the press if they have a branch.

Your brother,

DALLAS, TEXAS.

J. E. NICOLL.

A Good Plan to Raise Money

I have been a member of the church for a number of years but have never undertaken to write to our church papers before, but feeling like talking to my brothers and sisters in regards to the church debt as I do not think it is to our credit to have this debt hanging on us so long, and having so much money wasted in the way of interest. Just to think, twelve thousand dollars a year interest that the church is paying! Do you think, my dear brothers, that the Lord is pleased with us as a church to allow this to go on? I think the bishop's plan is very good, that is, to have the children of Sunday school pay the debt. He thinks they can pay it in three years. Perhaps they can, but are we older Saints going to stand back and let the children do what we should have done? Now, dear brothers, if we want to share the blessings of our Father's house let us go to and be helpers with him and pay this debt.

I have thought of a plan that I think would work to that end. Let each branch president set a day for the Saints to bring their offering to the Lord for the church debt. Let each one of the Saints try to give a little. Then let it be sent to the bishop. Let it be little or much but let us do it now, and after that is done let all the Saints that love the Lord expect to enjoy the blessings of our Father's house. That is, those that are able to work covenant with God to give him one day's earnings in the next six months. Now, dear brothers and sisters, that isn't much, is it? Just think, only one day's work out of one hundred and fifty-six days. Of course, some would give more than others, but it would only amount to one day's work, that is all. Then we might repeat it the next six months. No one of us would miss it. Just think, two day's work out of three hundred and thirteen working days. This little offering to the Lord added to what the children will give, I believe when the church will be called together in conference in the next year the debt will be a thing of the past. And it will bring down the smile of heaven upon us as a church, my dear brethren. I do not believe any of us will have to sacrifice to do as I have tried in my weak way to pen before you, believing as I do that it will only be the giver that will reap the benefit.

Now, Saints, I would love to see this plan carried out and let us try to have our first offering not later than the first Sunday in May. Love to all the Saints.

NEWARK, DELAWARE.

D. C. CARTER.

Lamoni, Iowa

Much interest is manifested in the newly established storehouse in Lamoni. The Supply Store, the most popular grocery in town, will change hands on the 9th and be run under the management of Bishops McGuire, Keir and Carmichael, with C. E. Blair as local manager. The matter was fully explained to a large and interested audience on the evening of the 1st by Bishop Carmichael. It certainly should have the support of all the Saints. We believe it will have.

In common with other communities, Lamoni has been visited recently by a capable demonstrator from the State college, showing us how to can fruits and vegetables by the cold pack method. One man watched the operation, and his wife being away, canned a quart of asparagus. The next day he went back to the demonstration with it, and the lady in charge said she would guarantee it to keep for ten years. If a mere man can do it, what may we expect from the women? Even the dandelions are being canned for the winter appetites.

In a meeting with the high priests and elders on last Sunday an impetus was given the extension of missionary work by our local men. There are nine regular appointments kept up now from here and several more contemplated. Any man who seeks to qualify in the public presentation of the gospel will find ample opportunity. The demand is great and the cooperation of all will be required.

Sunday was moving day for many of the classes in Sunday school, promotions being in order, which includes a rearrangement of the seating of all classes under senior age.

Copious rains and pleasant weather are nicely sandwiched in for us now, though the season is several weeks behind schedule time.

July 5 was the sixtieth wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister A. K. Anderson, long residents of this community. A family reunion was held. Among the visitors were Brother and Sister B. M. Anderson and family from Omaha, and Brother and Sister David Anderson came over from Urbana, Illinois, where they are teaching during the summer.

The tragic death of Brother Charles F. Graham on the 3d fell like a pall over the community. He met his death in an auto accident. Apparently losing control of the car, he smashed, head on, into a freight engine on a crossing, was thrown under its wheels, being killed instantly and fearfully mangled. There were three others with him, Arthur H. Smith, a prominent citizen of the place, and two small boys, Doris Rogers and Robert Lewis. The man was seriously injured as was the Rogers lad, but the Lewis boy escaped practically unhurt. The funeral of Brother Graham was attended by a large audience, while the business houses closed and flags were flown at half mast. He was beloved by all who love righteousness, and possibly hated by devotees of sin, they having come to recognize in him a man who sought to establish civic righteousness by an enforcement of law, he being the mayor of the town the past few months. The stake high council has lost a valuable member, the community mourns.

DELBERT.

Boston News Items

Brother O. R. Miller, who is to conduct the missionary work in and about Boston, has been with us for some few weeks. He has been actively engaged in our new mission at Lynn where regular services are held every Sunday morning. We look forward to a branch and Sunday school organized in this city in the near future. Sunday evenings Brother Miller holds forth in the Somerville chapel to interested audiences.

We have made a departure from our custom in the Massachusetts District of holding the Religio session on Sunday evening. A number of our prominent workers have felt that the object of the Religio would be more fully accomplished if held on a week-day evening. The time of meeting is now Friday at 7.30 p. m.

In the last Boston items you were told to listen for the wedding bells. They rang out at 4 p. m. May 19, when Calvin Sears and Laura Pierson were married by U. W. Greene. Unfortunately for us our brother has been transferred to New Haven, at which place they will make their home.

Our hearts were saddened recently by the death of Margaret Moon, who had been a patient sufferer for over a year.

The branch gave over the entire day to the usual services for the young on Children's Day. Seven children were baptized. All were made to realize how pleasing to the Master it is that little children at the age of accountability should enter into the waters of baptism.

The annual Sunday school picnic was held on June 18, about one hundred and twenty-five going about thirty miles to Asbury Grove. It was a pleasant event.

Herbert York, husband of Sister Jessie, one of our prominent Sunday school workers, was recently baptized.

ANOTHER VOLUNTEER.

WINLOCK, OREGON, June 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: I concluded a series of services at Condon, Sunday, May 13. Average attendance and interest good. Total number of sermons forty-three. Preached eleven times at Mayville. Good crowds, considering the busy season. Began here, that is, in this part of the country, Saturday, May 26. Up to date have delivered forty-one sermons and lectures, and baptized three. Others are near the kingdom. When they will obey we cannot say.

We have nineteen members in this locality and are contemplating the organization of a new branch. We have splendid material for officers. There is a larger percentage of men than we usually find among modern church people. We are also considering the erection of a new church, of which you will hear more ere long. It is a great pity that no missionary was assigned to this portion of Oregon. It would not take long, with vigorous, progressive work, for a district to be organized in this part of the State. It is necessary, too, since the Saints are so far from the main portion of Portland District.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

SCOTTVILLE, MICHIGAN, June 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription for the HERALD I will drop a few lines and let you know how we are in this part of God's vineyard.

I am a member of the Freesoil Branch, and live about eight miles out and do not have the privilege of regular attendance at Sunday school. Four of my children belong to the church. My oldest son and husband have not united with the church yet, but I am looking forward with faith in God that the time will not be long before they do take the step.

I have been a member of the church for seventeen years, and I must say that my heavenly Father has certainly blessed me in a great many ways, especially in the gift of healing; a great many times my children have been healed when the doctor said there was no hope for them. I have much to be thankful for and am trying in my weak way to serve my heavenly father, that I may be worthy of his blessings in the future.

We have had the pleasure of having Brother William Davis with us in and around Freesoil, and all enjoyed his sermons very much. He held meetings in our schoolhouse in the Lincoln River District for a week or more, and also Brother J. E. Bennett, of Freesoil. They were blessed with a fairly good crowd most of the time and good interest.

Brother J. E. Bennett preached from his gospel chart and a fine interest prevailed and I feel sure that some good will be done. Brother Davis will be with us again next Sunday night. He has been holding meetings at Ludington for the past week and at present is holding meetings at Elem Flats Branch, three miles from here. We enjoyed having him with us, and while here we had some talks along the gospel line.

Dear Saints, I do try to be faithful, and when I hear of those that are dear to me going to Europe, I cannot help but think and pray. And one thing I always have asked my heavenly Father for is to give me wisdom and knowledge of things in the future that would be for my good and the good of others to whom I should tell it.

I do earnestly pray that our heavenly Father will see fit to inspire the minds of our men at the head of the Government with wisdom and knowledge in the future, that they will be able to see what is for the good and safety of the Nation and the people in general.

I feel that it is the duty of everyone to aid the officers by their faith and prayers from the highest offices to the lowest, that Satan will not lead them into wrongdoings and that they may be able by the power of God's Spirit to do right at all times.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be faithful and come up higher, that I may be worthy of God's blessings at all times. My youngest daughter has a breaking out on her face, and I ask to have the prayers of faith in her behalf that she may be healed.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. JANNETT KEITH.

LANSDOWNE DEDICATION

The move that brought about the erection of this building which we are about to dedicate, was at first considered an act of prejudice, but later viewed in the light of a blessing in disguise. In the late fall of 1908 the school board in charge of the Hawthorne school notified us we would have to vacate in thirty days, as the building would then be closed to religious services. We were obliged to act quickly. This site was selected, purchased and construction work started. We cannot bring to mind all of those who helped to make this building possible, but will mention those we remember; Mr. Fred Harding sold us the lot at a much reduced price; Brother Barraclough contributed money, Brethren W. C. and brethren, together with Brethren Charles Smith, Clarence W. F. Carl and W. R. Weidman giving material. These Hays, Arthur Sheets and others, donated labor. In about six weeks the church was completed—in time for the Christmas entertainment. So much had been contributed to meeting the expense of the building that it was necessary to borrow only seven hundred and fifty dollars, which debt has been liquidated and the building now stands ready for dedication.

The services were very successful both the dedicatory prayer and service being by Bishop McGuire. A basket dinner on the lawn was followed by a good prayer service. Bishop Keir spoke at night. The usual floral decorations and choral program were presented.

The Saint Louis church where Bishop Keir spoke in the morning and Bishop McGuire in the evening, was also beautifully decorated. Large American and French flags were draped to both sides of red ones on white background and heavy silk drapings were used along the choir and pulpit railings. It was a happy event on both sides of the river and a hearty welcome was given the bishopric.

THE REASONS WHY You Should Go to Graceland

V—LOW EXPENSE

Whether we wish to do so or not, we must consider the matter of expense in obtaining an education. In this, as in other features, Graceland will bear investigation.

By a careful comparison with scores of other schools over the country it has been found that expenses at Graceland are far below the average; in many instances amounting to only one third of the amount required by other schools.

And when we remember that Graceland offers the best of instruction in spite of the low cost, the opportunity becomes doubly attractive.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Charles F. Graham Killed

On the afternoon of July 3, while out on a bridge inspection tour as a part of his official duties as mayor of the town of Lamoni, Brother Charles F. Graham struck a freight engine and was killed instantly, being mangled and torn. The auto was wrecked and some of the other occupants seriously injured. He being a very careful man, it is generally supposed that some part of the mechanism of the car failed to work, for it is unbelievable that he would take unnecessary chances. He was born in 1872, spent his youthful days in Lamoni, later moving to North Dakota, and during the past year or more has resided with wife and child in this place. He was ordained a high priest and member of the Lamoni Stake high council on February 4 of this year. As a citizen and mayor of the town, as well as a devoted church member he was universally esteemed. The funeral was held at the church in Lamoni, July 5, Elder J. F. Garver preaching the sermon. The church as well as the community has lost a noble man.

July "Autumn Leaves"

The first article in this number is "From somewhere in France," an interesting letter from one of our own members who tells of his part in the taking of Vimy Ridge. You'll be interested in this and all that follows, clear through to the advertisement from Graceland, asking: "Are you going to fight?" The Periscope is a new department that has just come to the surface, conducted monthly by "Delbert." It is liable to bob up most anywhere and see things. The "Vineyard story" grows more interesting with each number. "The Red Cross movement," is explained by Marcella Schenck so any of us can comprehend its working basis. The new associate editor, E. D. Moore, takes the readers into his confidence and tells them what they may expect of him when they write for publication. He disclaims the use of a wastebasket, but admits having access to a fire-proof vault wherein repose some too-good-to-publish manuscripts. The prize story contest announced to close on August 1 should bring out some of our latent talent. We are confident there are many among us who could write if they would. If you are not a subscriber, send for this number and get started on the contest. Elbert A. Smith has an editorial on "The ears of corn that stood up and preached." Alice M. Burgess introduces herself as the new editor of the young woman's department of the Woman's Auxiliary. She is associated with S. A. Burgess in editing the Religio's Arena, and from that department, we extract the following from a letter written by a conference visitor:

And this Brother Benjamin McGuire, the new bishop. Did you think of him as a rather stern man, who never does a thing but meditate on stocks and bonds? Now you know you did, if you ever thought about the subject at all. But he is a sweet, kind, rosy, fatherly sort of man, with a way of casting his eyes down and then looking up almost shyly when he speaks in public. In talking to the women that morning, he disapproved the giving of bazaars or plays, as we, alas, are prone to do. But he says everything in such a nice way that you just couldn't get provoked or hurt if you tried.

Then there is the first half of the address of President G. S. Trowbridge at the Religio General Convention last April. Among other things in the Sunday school department, edited by G. R. Wells, is a statement of the benefits of organized class work, by Louise Evans, and an address on "Unsuspected values in auxiliary work," by Mrs. E. S. McNichols. The price of Autumn Leaves is only one dollar a year, in advance, and has an indispensable place in our church literature.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Pastoral

To the New York District: We request the officers, Saints and friends, living in this district to advise the undersigned of the opportunities to reach the people wherever there is or may be created an interest in our work.

There is a district tent that may be used wherever the demand would justify.

For convenience, those in west end of district write to James Pycoc, 1555 Willow Avenue, Niagara Falls, and those in east end and eastern Connecticut write to George W. Robley, Thornton, Rhode Island.

We solicit your cooperation and will endeavor to meet every request.

Sincerely,

JAMES PYCOCK.
GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

1917. He received the gospel under the Brighamite ministry in 1858 and in 1865 came to the United States, where he accepted the Reorganization, being ordained an elder in 1894 in which office he labored diligently. In 1877 he married Miss Martha James, who survives, as also one son and 3 daughters. Funeral at the home, sermon by F. L. English.

LOCKE.—Anna N. Forhan was born July 12, 1837, in New Castle, Ireland. Came to America when 14 years of age. About fifty years ago married John Whitaker. Three children blessed this reunion. Later she was left a widow. She came to Michigan in 1871 and was baptized, May 5, 1878. In 1882 married Dudley Locke, who died October 14, 1906. Died June 13, 1917. Three children, six grandchildren and many friends survive.

CAMERON.—John M. Cameron was born June 25, 1848, in North Carolina. Died at Dighton, Oklahoma, June 20, 1917. Funeral at the home of Sister L. L. Goldsmith, his daughter, at Nevada, Missouri. Services in charge of F. M. Burch, sermon by H. E. Moler. Burial in Antioch Cemetery. Not a member of any church. His second wife, deceased, was a member of the church, also two daughters, Sister Goldsmith and Walker.

VAUGHAN.—Sarah A. Vaughan was born at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 21, 1844. Married Charles R. Vaughan February, 1865, to whom were born 4 sons and 2 daughters: Tromble, Jess, James, Joseph, Nettie and Mary, all of whom live in Iowa, except James, who lives near Dazey. She lived the greater part of her life in Iowa and until 1912 when she came to North Dakota, her husband dying while in Iowa in 1900. Baptized in 1873, and remained an earnest and consistent member to the end, deriving much comfort from her faith in God. Died at the home of her sister, Mrs. George Hartwell, May 23, 1917. Interment in the Dazey Cemetery. Sermon by J. E. Wildermuth, of Fargo, North Dakota.

HENRY.—Samuel W. Henry, of Wellsburg, West Virginia, was born in Scioto County, Ohio, baptized at Crabtree, Ohio, by E. E. Long on December 16, 1908. Ordained a priest February 5, 1909, and an elder August 22, 1909. Gomer T. Griffiths and E. E. Long officiated at both ordinations. A faithful and earnest worker in the church and greatly beloved for his sterling worth. Died June 24, 1917. His companion, 5 daughters, 2 sons and one grandchild remain to mourn. He was faithful to his duties. Funeral sermon by L. A. Serig.

Book Reviews

CHURCH ADVERTISING.—This book from J. P. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, at $1 net surely meets a long-felt want with us. There is no question as to whether the church needs to make a stronger appeal to the people, and the why and how are well answered in this new book. Prominent men from all over the country met in the twelfth annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and we have as a result twenty addresses on twenty phases of publicity. These are not dry-as-dust addresses, but are teeming with vital interest, the result of experiences that have proven worth while. Every pastor among us should have access to this book, for it covers the ground from raising the money to preparing the copy and then making good what you have advertised. Our copy will be used frequently and we are confident yours will be. Order of this office if more convenient.

THE OUTLOOK FOR RELIGION.—A new and important book by W. E. Orchard, D. D., published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York City, $1.50, net, sold by this office on the same terms. We took great pleasure in reviewing this book, reading it carefully and studiously. With a commendable courage this man goes into the subject with his sleeves rolled up and says things. If they be complimentary, very well, if not, he says them anyway. Recognizing the churches are in the crucible on account of the world turmoil, he proceeds to analyze the probable effect on religion. As he says: "Everything is being tested by fire, and not everything will stand the test; the most ancient institutions are going into the melting pot; they will not come out as they went in. What will happen to the various church embodiments with which we are familiar in this land? Which of the denominations will survive?" Whether you agree with his deductions or not, you will have been taken through some most interesting thought processes concerning the outlook for religion. It is a valuable contribution to modern religious literature, by a man who professes an optimistic faith in the outcome, and whose research has been most extensive.

THE WAR

Many questions concerning the war have come to the Presidency's desk since April 6, touching various phases of the subject from registration to conscription. Some of the questions are:

"Should I register?"

"Should I volunteer?"

"Does the church believe in war?"

"Are church members exempt from military service because of disbelief in war and bloodshed?"

"Are all our church officers, local and general exempt from military duty under the exemption clause of the military act?"

In many instances we have answered these questions in personal letters, expecting, too, to issue some notice or article touching the issues; but for various reasons which appeared good to us have refrained from doing so. This has in some quarters subjected us to severe adverse criticism. It is well, however, that we at least briefly touch upon the various aspects of the question now.

As to registration, the only course seemed so obvious that public notice from us was unnecessary. To no male citizen of the United States between the age limits specified was any course open other than to register. We sincerely hope none of our people were so misguided as to refuse to register. If so, such should take advantage of the first possible opportunity to rectify the mistake.

As for volunteering, that is quite an individual matter. Freedom of religious belief reaches even here. The church has not declared on it, and it is well it has not. Patriotism or loyalty to our country, has something to say on this, and its voice is an individual appeal. In the German ranks as well as in those of the allies, are Latter Day Saints whose loyalty to their own country sanctifies and hallows their warlike attitude.

In the case of the United States loyalty or patriotism becomes intensified to Latter Day Saints because of our belief that this great liberty-loving Republic was founded by divine forces for the execution of divine purposes. This belief cannot but stir warm active patriotism whenever our national existence or welfare are threatened, or as a nation we enter the lists in behalf of the liberties of humanity. Can we, then, either look askance at, or discourage those whose stirred-up patriotism takes them to the colors? Our firm belief is that in the ranks, as well as out, the guiding overruling power of the Deity goes with the devout member of the church.

The church believes in peace. It has so declared itself on various occasions. Nowhere and at no time has it declared that its members shall not participate in war. While it has not so declared, yet the consensus of opinion is that for the bloodshed of a war, not individuals but nations are held accountable. In times past even the chosen people of God have been compelled to take up the sword, and the power of God has been manifest in their martial activities. Since the organization of the church in 1830 the United States has engaged in no less than four wars; and while we can well believe that in those times these questions were up for discussion, yet the church has put on record no refusal to its members to participate in war. The peace we believe in and which we preach is the peace resultant from Christian principles. This peace we believe inevitable, and will come with the universal establishment of the Christian philosophy in the hearts of the people. Until that time comes war, with other evils, must be borne as best it can.

According to the foregoing, our church members are not exempt from conscription because of their religious belief. The church has not so declared, and should not, in our opinion.

Our members are also citizens, and their duty as citizens, in whatever country they be, should be discharged faithfully, even though their duty as citizens of countries at war may result in Latter Day Saints fighting in opposing ranks.

There remains one other aspect to touch briefly; viz, ministerial exemption. A section of the military act exempts from military duty any regular or ordained minister of religion. While in the East recently we spent some days in Washington trying to get an official interpretation of this clause so that we could know where to draw the line so far as our own corps of officers is concerned. The final interpretation of this lies with the Judge Advocate General, who is now General Crowder. We tried to secure an interview with him, but because of the congestion of work in his department, could not. We had an interview with one of his assistants, Mr. Warren, an attorney from Detroit, who was working on the details of the exemptions. We discussed the situation with him, and learned that the bearings of the ministerial exemptions had not been worked out. Whether or not one is entitled to exemption under this clause will in each case be determined by the local board. To say that all church officers who have been ordained are or should be exempt would scarcely be to comprehend the spirit of the law. It is not at all unlikely that the local boards of registration and conscription will decide the cases entitled to exemption about as follows: General church officers who are devoting all their time to church work; missionaries under General Conference appointment; local men (district and branch presidents) under General Conference appointment; local men (district and branch) who are devoting all their time to church work; pastors and assistant pastors who, though not devoting all their time to church work, are so situated that their services are quite indispensable, and on whom the members depend for spiritual ministrations, marriage ceremonies, funeral sermons, the sacrament, and other important ministrations. Those of our ministers who care to do so may plead exemption, letting the local boards pass upon the merits of each case.

As above stated when in Washington, we tried to secure some statement from the proper authority interpreting the exemption clause so far as we are concerned. We were unsuccessful, and a letter addressed to the Judge Advocate General's department again asking for some authoritative statement remains to date unanswered. In the absence thereof we are compelled to act on our own judgment, and it is hoped that the foregoing will be of assistance to our men in determining their courses.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

There is nothing in the world so much admired as a man who knows how to bear unhappiness with courage.—Seneca.

MEETINGS ON THE TEMPLE LOT

We were privileged to meet with the Saints in Independence on Sunday, July 8. A splendid spirit was manifested in the young people's prayer meeting at eight a. m. There was a good attendance at the Sunday school and at the morning service at eleven o'clock a. m. The latter included an excellent sermon by Elder Walter W. Smith. In the course of his discourse he emphasized very strongly that it is not alone what a man does, but what he longs and yearns for, that counts. If our whole ambition is getting, God pity us and the church. But if our only ambition is how can we serve? and how much can we give? "then I think I can see Zion with her waving fields of grain, and her busy shops not run for gain, but to give happiness to men, no poor, no soul hunger."

As the sermon will doubtless be published in full in the Ensign, we need not give further comment. An earnest spirit is with the people in the establishment of Zion.

Another indication is the nearer association and better understanding with the Church of Christ, sometimes called Hedrickites. Early in the summer, tent meetings were held on the Temple Lot, under their auspices, and the meetings were well attended by members of the Reorganized Church, and some of our elders were requested to speak, including Elder Walter W. Smith and Elder Mark Siegfried, president and bishop of the Independence Stake.

Last year vesper meetings were held on the lawn near the Stone Church. This year joint vesper services are being held on the Temple Lot. We were privileged on Sunday evening to attend the service there and we felt a thrill in standing on that sacred spot. Elder Wheaton, president of the Church of Christ, delivered the evening discourse, which was well attended by an attentive audience. There were occasional sprinkles of rain, but very few left, umbrellas offering sufficient protection. Some, we suspect, would have been glad to have had a thorough wetting for the sake of the numerous gardens in that part of the State.

This closer association has caused discussion in some quarters concerning the Temple Lot and its possession. We are much interested, therefore, in the statement made by one of the officials who is himself a member of the committee for conferring with the Church of Christ, that they had no ulterior motives, but were only working for the mutual good and better understanding.

We are very glad to hear this statement, for we are convinced—

The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1.

When the time comes for the erection of the temple, that will be done by people prepared to do it. The material for it will be but a lesser part of the requirement; its foundations must be righteousness, truth, humility and love.

The possession of the Temple Lot means a great responsibility; the building of the temple may mean giving until it hurts. The giving not only of property but the giving up of wants and likes in the real spirit of sacrifice. When the Kirtland Temple was built, time was allowed for its construction, as was the case with the Nauvoo Temple.

Concerning the Kirtland Temple, we read:

At this time the brethren were laboring night and day building the house of the Lord. Our women were engaged in spinning and knitting in order to clothe those who were laboring at the building, and the Lord only knows the scenes of poverty, tribulation, and distress which we passed through in order to accomplish this thing. My wife toiled all summer in lending her aid towards its accomplishment. She had a hundred pounds of wool, which, with the assistance of a girl, she spun in order to furnish clothing for those engaged in the building of the Temple; and although she had the privilege of keeping half the quantity of wool for herself, as a recompense for her labor, she did not reserve even so much as would make her a pair of stockings, but gave it for those who were laboring at the house of the Lord. She spun and wove, and got the cloth dressed and cut and made up into garments, and gave them to those men who labored on the Temple. Almost all the sisters in Kirtland labored in knitting, sewing, spinning, etc., for the purpose of forwarding the work of the Lord, while we went up to Missouri to endeavor to reinstate our brethren on their lands, from which they had been driven. Elder Rigdon when addressing the brethren upon the importance of building this house, spake to this effect: that we should use every effort to accomplish this building by the time appointed; and if we did, the Lord would accept it at our hands; and on it depends the salvation of the church and also of the world. Looking at the sufferings and poverty of the church, he frequently used to go upon the walls of the building both by night and day and frequently wetting the walls with his tears, crying aloud to the Almighty to send means whereby we might accomplish the building. After we returned from our journey to the West, the whole church united in this undertaking, and every man lent a helping hand. Those who had no teams went to work in the stone quarry and prepared the stones for drawing to the house. President Joseph Smith, jr., being our foreman in the quarry; the Presidency, high priests, and elders all alike assisting. Those who had teams assisted in drawing the stone to the house. These all laboring one day in the week; brought as many stones to the house as supplied the masons through the whole week. We continued in this manner until the walls of the house were reared. The committee who were appointed by revelation to superintend the building of the house were, Hyrum Smith, Reynolds Cahoon, and Jared Carter. These men used every exertion in their power to forward the work.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 518, 519.

That self-denial will be required for this temple is clear when we consider that one million dollars were required for the Nauvoo Temple, that both material and labor greatly increased in price, and that this is to be the temple at the central place. When the time comes it will require real giving, yet if we are faithful the same result may be found as at Kirtland, and it may well be that many now unknown to us will be privileged to assist.

Great exertions were made to expedite the work of the Lord's house; and notwithstanding it was commenced, as it were, with nothing, as to means, yet the way opened as we proceeded, and the Saints rejoiced.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 523, 524.

The work that is now being done at Independence must arouse the interest of the whole church. It has and does appeal to us because it should mean better understanding with our brethren of the Church of Christ. We trust it is a beginning of a work which shall be continued until the temple is erected and that work of preparation completed which shall follow its dedication.

MANDAMUS GRANTED IN THE LYNN CASE

The Saints in the East are greatly rejoicing over the outcome of the Blanchard case. Early in March Frederick W. Blanchard, a lifelong resident of Lynn, Massachusetts, and a priest in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was called upon to perform a marriage ceremony, which he did to the satisfaction of the parties concerned. The city clerk of Lynn (which adjoins Boston), however, refused to accept the return on the marriage, and warned him that he would not recognize any marriages by him or by his church. He forced the parties concerned to go through another ceremony, which he, the clerk, performed.

The clerk refused to listen to any explanations or to give any, but he proceeded to make the whole matter public in the newspapers in a way to injure both Brother Blanchard and the church. This made legal proceedings necessary, and an able attorney was retained there and associated with Israel A. Smith in the presentation of the case.

The case came to a hearing on June 29. After a small part of the evidence was in, the respondent stated that they had no defense to make, and a decree of mandamus was issued to the city clerk, commanding him to record the original return by Brother Banchard.

The church has had organized branches in eastern Massachusetts for over fifty years. There are eleven branches in that part of the State and Rhode Island, and hundreds of marriages have been performed by representatives of our church there. This is the first time objection has been made.

Boston newspapers have printed favorable statements of the decision. It may be that other papers in the East and elsewhere have taken note of the original action of the clerk. If so, they should now be requested to print a correction. Anyone knowing of a publication which printed a reference to the original refusal of the clerk, will confer a favor by securing statement of the court action and seeing that it is properly printed.

Doubtless there existed a right for damages, but the matter is not being handled in that spirit. We want simple justice and the truth, which are secured by this action and recognition.

It will be remembered that a similar case arose in the Toronto District several years ago and under the direction of Bishop R. C. Evans a writ of mandamus in our favor was secured, as well as a decision of the appellate court, fully recognizing our right to perform marriages. S. A. B.

PSYCHOLOGY OF GERMAN SOLDIERS

In our General Interest department this week we publish a short article on the psychology of the German soldiers. We trust it will prove of interest to all of our readers. So far as we are concerned, there is no bitterness toward the Germans, but only a determination against wrong conditions.

We have received some protests on war and may publish one or two later. Undoubtedly the church stands primarily and always for peace, and for the establishment of righteousness. It is pointed out in the article referred to above that the German people, many of them, at least, still believe and accept the statements made by their military authorities at the opening of the war. They have been educated to do that. S. A. B.

UTAH TEACHING ON MARRIAGE

In the issue of July 4 there occurs an extract from the Young Woman's Journal. This was not intended for publication and had not been verified. We note an error in the transcription, as this extract appears in the Young Woman's Journal of June, 1917, volume 28, number 6, page 328, for the first two paragraphs, and the last paragraph is on page 329. An elision should have been indicated between the second and third paragraphs. S. A. B.

GRACELAND COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIPS

The recent General Conference adopted a resolution making so much of the College Day collection as is necessary a special scholarship fund. This means that so much as may be needed will be available "to pay for scholarships at Graceland College, for worthy and needy young men and women."

Herewith appears a notice from the president of the college, George N. Briggs, urging prompt application by those unable to pay their way but desirous of securing a better education. This action of the conference means that the money advanced by the church shall be used by and for the college, but it shall also be made available for scholarship uses by our young people, and so the good of Graceland may be increased. We have urged before that the college wants to help our young people and that it can take care of nearly as many more with practically no additional expense to the church. Here is the opportunity we have long desired, so we hope for a liberal response from our worthy young people. We hope to see the usefulness of Graceland greatly increased by this action and that without additional expense to the church. S. A. B.

At the last General Conference the church made it possible for every young man and woman who desire to take advantage of the various courses at Graceland College to do so. A sufficient number of scholarships to take care of all deserving students was provided so that no one who really desires a college education need be deprived of it.

The scholarships for the coming year are now being awarded and anyone who desires to become a candidate for one should write to the president of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, at once so that full provision for all can be made. Prompt action is essential, as the college year opens September 6, 1917.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

San Bernardino is Dry

A card from President Elbert A. Smith reminds us that San Bernardino banished Old King Booze on July 1. This election was held during the mayoralty of Elder George Wixom, and under his leadership. Saturday night, June 30, a certain element proceeded in the effort to consume the liquor supply before midnight and gave a final decisive argument that the law should have been passed.

Marvelous Work and a Wonder

On another page of this issue the office is advertising that a new edition of Elder Macgregor's Marvelous Work and a Wonder is ready for distribution. The sales of this book have been very gratifying and the result satisfactory. It is a book for the studious, deep-thinking Saint who realizes the value of well-collated matter and consistent argument. The price is very low, in fact we hardly see how it can be anything but a losing proposition, but Brother Macgregor is not distributing it for profit.

Locating the Saints

The Lamoni Stake Bishopric are carrying out their part in the provisions of the law whereby there shall be settlements of the Saints in Zion and her stakes and the regions round about. Just recently

BIENNIAL CONFERENCES

The late General Conference took action favorable toward holding biennial conferences, but did not express any time when they should begin. It now becomes a question of public discussion and the writer will try to express a few thoughts for the consideration of the HERALD readers. We are entering into a new epoch of church work. The period during the lifetime of the late President Joseph Smith was one of interpreting and advocating the law; it was necessary to emphasize to the church and the world at large that the law of God was supreme and by it we must stand, regardless of the consequences.

It took more courage to be a Latter Day Saint forty or fifty years ago than it does now. We were few in number and without influence in the social and business world and insults and social ostracism were more common then than now.

The Jews of the dispersion felt their loneliness where they were scattered in the nations to which they had been taken captive, and many thousands of them journeyed each year to Jerusalem to attend the feast of Pentecost. On that special day when the disciples were there, an account of which we find recorded in the second chapter of Acts, the Jews were there from sixteen nations, some of them having come seven hundred miles.

They felt that they were outcasts in the world and it was a time of rejoicing for them to meet those of like faith from the different nations. In latter-day Israel we felt we were outcasts in society and we longed for the companionship of each other, and so it was not an unusual thing for our people to travel two or three days by team to get to the fall conference in western Iowa and camp at night by the roadside or in the yard of some Latter Day Saint. Rain and mud did not discourage them—they were going to conference, were going to see the prophet, and little things did not hinder them. They stood around the camp fires at night and sang the songs of Zion. When morning came they trudged on until they saw the white city made up of tents and covered wagons. Then all their emotions gave vent to expressions of joy. The writer was among such a happy crowd in September, 1879, on their way to Gallands Grove. What took us there? Nearly two weeks in camp in the companionship of those of like precious faith, in social enjoyment and hearing the prophet and others of the prominent men expound the law was food for another year. We returned to our homes strong for another year of conflict.

Conditions in the world and church have changed, our work is different because new problems confront us. It is the same old gospel, but we are farther down on the program. They have done their work; we must now do ours as faithfully and well as they have done theirs. In the social, business, and professional world we are given recognition, by many men of liberal minds we are looked upon as one of the great churches seeking to fill our place of usefulness in the world. In the public press, current magazines, school histories and encyclopedias they are trying to tell the truth about the church.

The great problem before us as a church is to demonstrate the altruism of Jesus, that his philosophy will eliminate selfishness, covetousness and poverty, and in its place give happy homes, healthy children, and remove fear of want from the widow, orphan, helpless, and aged, and help bring an answer to the prayer of Jesus: "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." We must deliver the "goods," we must prove to the world that the "pearl of great price" is in our possession and that we are making the world better because of it.

We failed as a church in the early days and we were cast out of the land of Zion, and if we fail now we will suffer the same fate, for it is the "pure in heart" that shall abide in Zion.

Who will the Lord hold responsible as leaders in the great work intrusted to all? It most certainly will be the ministry! How shall we be taught so that we can come to a unity of understanding and act together as builders of the great spiritual house? Surely not by keeping the ministry away from each other and depriving them of the good that comes from association and collective teaching. I have been absent from only one conference since 1902, and my personal experience and observation teaches me that the meetings of the priesthood at the last conference did more to bring us into a unity of understanding of our duties and responsibilities and make us useful men than all the others combined. It is in the priesthood meetings, and not on the conference floor, where we receive the greater light and become prepared for greater usefulness.

It has been suggested that the reunions be substituted for the conference as a means of education and the dissemination of knowledge. Who are the ones that need to be taught? Is it not the ministry? How can they teach to others what they do not know? How can they be taught at the reunions, the ministry, when there is only a very few there and no teacher to teach them? The ministry must be taught first and then they can teach in the branches, conferences and reunions. Where is there a better place and a more convenient time than at the General Conference? The matter of expense is urged as another argument, that seems to the writer to be the most unreasonable of any excuse that could be offered, for the following reasons: The amount of money received now per capita is greater than at some times in the past and the indications are that it will continue to increase from now on. The cost of living will be nearly as great to stay at home as to live at the conference. It cost the writer $5.60 for two weeks board, and I had only one free meal. Then there was $2 for room rent. How much less would it have been at home? or do we want to be cheap men and live from our family's meager allowance while we are at home?

Do we want a pauperized ministry, physically and intellectually?

The other item is railroad fare. A large part of that expense will be incurred if we do not have conference, because the ministry will go home. It is the poorest time of the year to do missionary work in any part of the country, and the time when we are most needed at home. A very large percentage of the ministry live in the places where the conferences are held, and in the territory contiguous thereto. In the Independence Stake the missionaries who have their homes there, and the First Presidency, the Presiding bishopric, the stake bishopric and stake presidency make a total of about fifty-two. By adding the same class of men of the other four stakes there is a total of nearly one hundred, and when we add the number in the several districts that join onto the stakes we have nearly all the ministry within about two hundred miles of the places where we usually hold the General Conferences.

If the time ever comes that the membership of our church become so stingy, covetous and selfish that they will not willingly contribute toward the expense of the missionaries to attend the General Conference they will be so low spiritually that they will not be able to build up Zion. Instead of trying to cut down expense by not holding conferences annually, we should eliminate those things that our heavenly Father disapproves of. If we would make a reasonable effort to observe the "Word of Wisdom" we would save enough each year to run a half dozen conferences "and we would run and not be weary," and would have less sickness, better health, less doctor bills to pay and stronger bodies to perform our daily labors. In a recent revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7) the Lord said, "and both in private and public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants." If we make an honest effort to pay heed to what the Lord has said and not waste our money in extravagant living and foolish expenditures that the world who know not God would not be guilty of, we would not hear the hue and cry about the expense attached to the running of the General Conferences.

The writer is in favor of the strictest kind of economy in the expenditure of public and private money, but let us commence our economy by eliminating what God condemns. The ministry should devote two weeks, or more, each year at the General Conference to the consideration of the vital and important problems that affect the welfare of the church. We cannot evade them, we cannot run away from them. They must be met and solved.

Some of the great problems before us as a church that we must solve, or confess failure, are the social, economic, industrial, and agricultural. They are a part of the building up of Zion. Every minister should be a student of sociology; it will help us solve our great problems. Jesus was the greatest sociologist that ever lived; he gave us in a concrete form the principles that should govern society, and that is the gist of sociology. The hope of our church for progress will be found in an intelligent, humble, faithful and loyal ministry, and we can attain to that condition only by cooperation in such a way that we can develop our spiritual and mental powers, and for that purpose the law makes provision for the school of the prophets, "that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and of the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles as many as will believe." (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3.)

During the late conference the child of progress and hope was born in our priesthood meetings, and we must not strangle it to death while it is yet in its infancy, by our selfishness and anxiety to save a few dollars at one end of the road and lose hundreds at the other end. A miser is just as much of a burden on society as a spendthrift and both are a dead weight in the Lord's work. The church is a religious democracy and all democracies depend on the intelligence of their members to carry out its purposes and we cannot succeed in our great work with a few intelligent men at the head and an army of ignorant Muzhiks as followers. The intelligence of all people must be increased and the beginning must be made with the ministry and our present priesthood meetings are leading us up to the school of the prophets, God's appointed plan to qualify us for the important work we have to do. When we have more suitable buildings to accommodate the people at our General Conferences the opportunities to do good will constantly increase and not only will our own be greatly benefited but many of the good and intelligent men and women of the world will come to Zion to learn of the ways of the Lord and help to spread the glad tidings and good news to all the world.

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE SPIRITUALISTS

Spiritualism is a system of religion claiming for the basis of its existence the possibility and probability of the spirits of the departed returning to earth as the only messengers of heaven; and can, by what is called by them media, make themselves manifest to those still living, and communicate information in regard to the unseen world of spirits, the mysteries of the past and present, and to forecast the future. As defined by leading Spiritualists it—underlies and enzones all that relates to the spiritual nature of man in its organization and dual relation—in its capacities, purposes, duty and final destiny. It further embraces all that is known, or may be discovered of God, the infinite Spirit, of the world of spirits, and its inhabitants; of psychological and spiritual influences, of whatever kind, and of all the occult forces and relations that pertain to the realm of spirit and matter.

Spiritualism is, without question a demonstrated fact. There are too many unquestionable proofs of spirit manifestations to deny that marvelous and wonderful things have been performed in many different places, before thousands of the most intelligent and truthful, to doubt or question the correctness of these manifestations, but this does not determine the source of this spirit power—the spiritualist claiming it to be of the infinite God, while others claim it to be from the opposite source.

These spirit manifestations are by raps on tables, by messages through mediums, by moving material objects, by prophecies, by writing and speaking in languages not known to the one by whom written or spoken, by spiritual shocks, and by the visible appearance of spirits.

There are different kinds of media, the speaking media, the seeing media, the discerning media, and the normal media. Some are public and some are only private, and they possess different degrees of intelligence, and are either true or false as governed by the character of the medium, and the spirit communicating.

Many spiritualists, while denying the inspiration of the Bible, accept it as a truthful history in the main, and cite to angelic ministrations as evidence of spirit communications, claiming that these angels are only the spirits of the departed. But their views in regard to the Bible are of such a character as to make it quite inconsistent for them to use it as proof, as will be seen later on.

It will be seen from the above that their claim of authority is in the fact of spirit communication, without proof relative to the source of these spirit communications, or of what character the spirits are.

Modern spiritualism claims its origin in 1848, in the western part of New York, with the Fox family, first beginning with audible sounds and mysterious rappings; these manifestations increasing in variety rapidly. They came at first without solicitation, and those to whom they came were compelled to admit of their existence, and those who doubted their testimony were, by investigation compelled to admit that their testimony was true, and many without investigating the source or nature of these manifestations became avowed believers in this form of religion.

Upon some of the principal subjects their faith is, as presented by some of their representatives, whose views are in print, as follows:

GOD

Edwin D. Babbitt says,

Knowing as we do, that all power is exerted in harmony with a greater system of laws, in which spiritual and material forces must ever work in correlation, we are driven to the conclusion that the vivifying spirit of this all-embracing central power is God.—Religion, p. 10.

Spiritualism, which being intuitional has naturally a quick perception of the finer laws of being, and building upon a large array of phenomena, both objective and subjective, is led to a knowledge of spirits who have once been human beings, and hence very logically infer that there must be an Infinite Spirit as the source and parent principle of the boundless spiritual life of the universe.—Ibid., p. 15.

Teach a human being that there is a God all-loving and perfect, whose quickening presence thrills through all being, who smiles upon him in every noble work and aspiration, who had kindled an immortal nature in him which shall enable him to mount forever upward and onward in a divine life in proportion as it seeks the good and the true here and elsewhere, and you fill his soul with joy, with inspiration and aspiration.—Ibid., p. 20.

Is God a personal being? In other words, is he a kind of a vast person? This supposition would involve us in more or less difficulty; first. Because it would seem to make him a being of limited parts. If so, in what constellation would we find his feet, in what his head, or in what portion of him should we find the solar system?

Secondly. While we, being finite, cannot absolutely say that he is not a person, still if he has a definitely outlined form like a person, how could his being interpenetrate every minute portion of the universe and become the life of the whole.—Ibid., pp. 42, 43.

The spirits utterly disclaim all truth in the imagination of individuals who believe in the doctrine of evil spirits, and would have it distinctly understood that the divine Being has no power to create that which is evil, and that the spirits which he has created have been formed in his own likeness and impressed with his divine image.—The Spiritual Teacher, p. 116.

Ah! there is no God, there can be none. . . . What is the use of telling them of a God when there is none? . . . What a horrible phantom, what a soul-crushing superstition is this idea of an overruling, omnipresent, all-powerful God. . . . Belief in God is degrading, whatever the character ascribed to him.—Age of Freedom, Berlin Heights, Ohio.

JESUS CHRIST

Far back in the death of humanity's history, there lived individuals who were morally and spiritually advanced beyond the medium development of the age in which they lived. These individuals, residing upon an elevated plane of thought, were enabled to hold communion with the spiritual beings which in all past time have been hovering in profound sympathy around the dwellers of this darkened planet. . . . By the individuals who are here named, the spirits have reference to the persons who are mentioned in the writings of the Old and New Testaments, such for example as Isaiah, Jeremiah, Christ, Paul, John. These persons were seers and prophets.—The Spiritual Teacher, p. 45.

What are the doctrines of the church which form a prominent part of its religion? They are the doctrines of woe and terror, which represent the race as being under the wrath and condemnation of God—the doctrine of the vicarious atonement, which is the sentiment that God commissioned an agent, which agent was a part of himself, to interpose between the displeasure by which he was moved, and the race which he had previously decided to punish. . . . the doctrine of the torments of hell and the salvation of the redeemed, the doctrine of a personal Devil, and the divinity of Christ. In all these doctrines there is presented to the view of spirits the most lamentable ignorance, and the evidence of contracted thought.—Ibid., pp. 90, 91.

Jesus was truly the divine, the God incarnate, because every human soul is a part of the Deity incarnated, only humanity in general have far less of the divine than had Jesus, the Christ. From childhood he was inspired, and though at times tempted by undeveloped spirits which in his age were called devils, yet he was generally under the control of holy influences which filled his soul with such a divine afflatus and kindled his magnetic power to such an extent that he felt that he was under the divine guidance of God himself, that God was indeed his Father, who had filled his being with love to man, wisdom to teach, power to heal and clairvoyance to perceive, thus clothing him with an almost unequaled share of the divine life until he felt his unity of aim and spirit with God and remarked, "I and my Father are one."—Religion, p. 266.

Spiritualists generally speak lovingly of the character of Jesus, "the divine medium," and feel that he belongs to their ranks far more properly than to the church.—Ibid., p. 270.

HOLY AND UNHOLY SPIRITS

There are some minds who wish counsel of spirits, but when that counsel is given, we see them neglecting it. . . . The person who desires a communication from spirits, not unfrequently supposes that he is at liberty to consult us on subjects which are beyond our means of information. Though we are spirits—spirits who have once inhabited bodies on earth—yet we are not infinite in knowledge and wisdom.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 190.

SIN AGAINST SPIRITS

The sin against spirits is a sin against the good of man. It is a sin unto death. It is a sin for which mind should not pray. It is a sin which reveals the hate of the soul—a hate of things holy and divine.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 195.

BIBLE

The reverence for the Bible which has been the ruling sentiment of human hearts—which has cramped and restricted all the free and noble faculties of the soul, has had its sway upon the earth for ages past, and it is now time that this should be removed for the introduction of a principle which is more worthy of the dignity of man, and more consonant with the design of God. It has been seen by the inhabitants of the spirit world, that the authority of the Bible has been the chief and prominent source of all bigotry and superstition.—The Spiritual Teacher, p. 42.

The influence and effect which have flowed from the authority of the Bible have been of the most deleterious character, tending to degrade rather than elevate, to confine rather than to expand, and to crush rather than to ennoble and save.—Ibid., p. 44.

They do not go earnestly to nature, which is the infinite volume that God himself has written, but content themselves with books that men have made, for even the Bible, however high some of its inspirations may be, has had to come through imperfect human brains and be penned by human hands in various languages, and these languages, like all other works of man, are full of imperfections, so that thousands of different readings have occurred in the original manuscript of the sacred writings themselves, thus taking infallibility out of the question.—Religion, p. 65.

AUTHORITY TO SAVE

He that is wise, let him take heed. He who is unwise, let him get wisdom. And let him get it where it is to be found. Let him not seek for it in the folly of fools, but in men of understanding, in spirits commissioned by God to give light to those who grope in darkness. . . . This is our mission. This is our commission. This is our will, and the will of God. Hence, we are messengers of God to work a work which will ever rebound to the glory of God.—Light from the Spirit World, pp. 35, 36.

The spirits hesitate not to affirm that the world is now so far beneath their power, that it must inevitably obey the decrees of angelic wisdom, and that the course which it takes in the future must inevitably correspond with the primary authority of a higher and diviner world. . . . There is no fear now in the bosom of angels with regard to the welfare of the world. They have now the authority and the power vested in their own hands. They have the commission which is their native right and most precious privilege.—The Spiritual Teacher, pp. 104, 105.

SPIRITUALISM

1. Spirituality must be developed through spirit communion.
2. Spirituality is ennobling.
3. Spirit communion is the basis of all religion.
4. Spiritualism is founded upon facts, other religions more upon traditions.
5. Spiritualism is the only religion which demonstrates immortality.
6. Spirit communion robs death of its terror.
7. Spiritualism is the most joy-inspiring of all religions.
8. Spirit communion promotes civil and religious freedom.
9. Spiritualism leads off in human reforms.
10. Spiritualism perfects the physical system.
11. Spirit communion prevents insanity.
12. Enlightened spirit communion prevents superstition.
13. Spiritualism reveals a grander universe.
14. Spiritualism leads to nobler living.

MEDIUMS

Mediums of writing with the aid of spirits are wise or unwise. Mediums who write with the aid of circles, incompetent to instruct them, are unwise. Spirits differ in their degree of wisdom, as minds in the body differ. All are not equally advanced in the wisdom of God.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 242.

It should always be kept in mind that although spirits can often foresee the future and weigh difficult subjects with much more skill than a mortal, yet even they are not infallible, and cramped by imperfect conditions of mediumship must occasionally err, while some full of merrymaking, will delight in playing of a joke on credulous earthly investigators, pretending to be Peter the Great, Washington, or other famous name, and then, when their pretensions have been swallowed whole, will relate their exploits to their spirit associates in high glee, for spirits are translated mortals.—Religion, p. 346.

ORGANIZATION

Whatever disturbs the health of one member, disturbs the enjoyment of the whole body. So intimate is the relation, that all the members must unite in one harmonious work, or disease will prostrate the system. When disease attacks one member, the other members suffer by it, or when one member is benefited, all of the other members are rewarded. Spirits are all members of one body. They all form one body. When sin and sorrow overcome a weak member, all of the other members must suffer. What, then, is the duty of each member? Is it the duty of each member to lacerate, bruise, and cast off the diseased member? . . . Who will cut off the member of wretchedness, because they are less honorable than the higher—the head? And what is the head but the servant of the body?—Light from the Spirit World, p. 150.

The great purpose of the spirit world then, is of a much broader nature, and a more thoroughly practical spirit. It aims, in short, at the establishment of a new social order in the earth, through whose mediatorial harmony alone, the divine truth and its good can descend only upon and into a waiting and responsive race. Another purpose of the movement is the establishment of a new system of government . . . It has already matured its plans to quite an extent. All these grow out of a new church—a church of principles—not dogmas. This church is to be both interior and exterior, or individual and organic. It is to reconcile both the Catholic and the Protestant phases of the religious ideas, not overlooking the three great religions, which dogmatic Christianity does not recognize, viz, Hinduism, Mohammedanism, and Judaism.—Spiritual Telegraph.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

During the latter half of the nineteenth century, a wave of spirituality and knowledge has commenced spreading over the world, and the second coming of Christ, or rather of the Christ principle, is taking place to such an extent that the old formality, sourness, fear, proclaiming God's wrath, interminable prayers and inhumanity to both man and beast is being greatly modified, human faces are becoming sweeter and human lives more joyous.—Religion, p. 70.

INSPIRATION AND REVELATION

Looking down from the serene heights of their sublime abode, the spirits of the sixth circle desire to present to the inhabitants of the earth a revelation of truth and principles which are adapted to the present state of human development. . . .

In the darkness and depravity of the human mind it has not properly appreciated the reality of a future existence; it has not conceived or realized the sublimity of an intercourse with spirits, and it has not been suitably informed with relation to the truths which are beheld and known in the celestial world. . . . But in the present era the dawn is rapidly approaching. It is the mission of spirits to bring life and immortality to light.—The Spiritual Teacher, pp. 1, 2.

But there is a revelation of the divine mind. . . . The revelation to which the spirits here refer is the creation which has been introduced into being through the action of the supreme intelligence—it is the universe which is the natural and untranslated expression of the infinite mind.—Ibid., p. 5.

The spirits have designed to show that the world has been in a state of darkness and materialism. . . . What they would now state is, that the world is more immediately under the period—that it is more directly and authoritatively inspired, than even in the time of Christ and the apostles—that it is more deeply and powerfully impressed with the presence and influence of the spiritual realms, than when the gift of the Holy Ghost was given to the Christian believers on the day of Pentecost.—Ibid., p. 104.

Inspiration is, therefore, the work of a spirit acting through a medium or upon a medium, to attain a desirable result. In former ages, men spake and wrote as they were moved by a Holy Spirit.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 15.

Inspiration is limited more or less by the capacity and character of the brain into which it comes, an imperfectly developed brain being able to receive only a small portion of truth and that best which is in harmony with its own special bias.—Religion, p. 23.

The spirits of the second circle will not profess to furnish instruction with regard to the more elevated truths of the celestial world when seriously questioned, and only do this from a blind impulse of love which seeks the gratification of those with whom they converse. . . .

The third circle are still the same in prejudices which were fastened upon their minds as upon the earth. . . . From this cause it has occurred that numerous inconsistencies have been witnessed by investigating minds, inasmuch as contradictory communications have been received from spirits in this circle with relation to certain points of religious faith and doctrine. . . .

In the fourth circle there is not a complete unfolding of the heavenly germ, there is not a complete deliverance from the profound impressions which were produced by early education. . . .

The members of the fifth circle are unfolded in wisdom, that they have cultivated and cherished the immortal germ that gives life and being to the spirit . . . they are prepared, authorized and commissioned to act as teachers and reformers of the human race.

The spirits of the sixth circle, which now write, are moved by a higher principle than that which is found in a sickly delicacy and hence they have presented their claims to be heard by the inhabitants of the earth with a bold unhesitating confidence.—The Spiritual Teacher, pp. 80-84.

In all this, one is left without any rule or standard by which to determine from which circle the spirits come, from whom communications are received. We only have their own claim, and since some of them do not tell the truth, but pretend to those with whom they are conversing that they are what they are not, all is uncertainty as to the truth or falsity of what is communicated, granting all that is claimed for spirit communication, by spiritualists themselves. This leaves the question of inspiration very unsatisfactory to minds who are in search for truth.

MAN

Man is degraded by the perversion of his mental powers—that he is turned aside from the course of justice and purity

by the imperfections of his interior perception, and by the absence of that wisdom which is divine and eternal.—The Spiritual Teacher, pp. 16, 17.

The germ of the spirit is in its own nature pure, and that it cannot be corrupted by any foreign influence or perverting circumstances. . . . Man can never, in any circumstance or by any possibility, become totally depraved, but that the soul remains pure and uncorrupted.—Ibid., pp. 35, 36.

The truth, as demonstrated by a mountain load of facts is, that man is immortal.—Religion, p. 21.

Man, then, is not a lost being, is not innately wicked, and should not be called so unless we wish to slander the infinite Father who made him, and whose works are all perfect.—Ibid., p. 60.

SOUL

The nature of the soul is light, and purity, and bliss. It is the light, and purity, and bliss of the Great Spirit, in a limited and finite degree, for it is this, and this only, in all the wide creation which bears the reflection of the Divinity—it is this, and this only, among all other beings which presents a likeness and image of the Creator.—The Spiritual Teacher, p. 30.

SALVATION

Why should he [man] need a Savior aside from God himself who lifts all things upward toward perfection through divine law and his own blessed and all-pervading Spirit?—Religion, p. 60.

Therefore, will it be apparent to those minds that can appreciate the beauty and reality of this initiation, that the spirits have discovered a means by which the world may be truly and completely saved. . . . The spirits have taken the work of human redemption into their own hands.—The Spiritual Teacher, p. 132.

If, therefore, the world will trust in the power, wisdom, and goodness of the celestial beings who ever hover lovingly around it; . . . it will be delivered from the evils which have weighed down the soul to dust, and it will be released from all the entanglements of flesh and sense by which it has been bound and fettered; so that in the coming era which is beheld in the dim future, the race shall stand as the redeemed and sanctified production of the Supreme Mind, and shall be illuminated with the light that streams from the lofty heights and deeper depths of the spiritual universe.—Ibid., pp. 134, 135.

Jesus may be his [man's] Savior so far as a beautiful example and precepts can help, and a loving magnetist may bear his transgressions in part, just as Jesus did those of the suffering and erring men of his day, by taking their diseased magnetism upon himself and infusing a purer life-power, and yet the salvation must be brought about through his own forces of soul and body, which in themselves are deific in nature when fully developed.—Ibid., p. 136.

ATONEMENT

Christendom directs us to a man who lived eighteen hundred years ago, as having in himself a power to heal all the wounds inflicted on the human soul by violation of the laws under which it exists. . . . Nature points to God in our own souls. The Bible says: Look to Jesus on the cross. Nature says: Look to your own soul. The Bible says, Seek and find eternal life in the blood of Christ. Nature says: Seek and find it in obedience to the laws of your own soul, that primeval revelation of which every human being has a copy. Every substance endowed with life is endowed with an inherent power of healing—a Savior, a Lamb of God to take away the sin of the world.—H. C. Wright, Spiritualism, pp. 12, 13.

All nature gives this doctrine [atonement] in the face, the lie. The sins of the whole race forgiven—blotted out in the blood of a murdered reformer! It is awful! Faith in a lying and suicidal God! Who but a demon can have faith in such an insane and demon God? What natural relation has the blood of righteousness of Jesus to a man's sins actually committed? Can that blood wash out those sins? No!—S. J. Finney, Spiritualism, p. 13.

The demoralizing nature of the doctrine of a vicarious atonement is well illustrated by the example of Constantine.—Religion, p. 137.

REPENTANCE

Repentance is reform. Reform is progress. Progress is advancement in wisdom. Wisdom is from God.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 206.

Such reformers as are quarreling with each other, need a reform. They need a repentance which will save them from their sins. They need a repentance that will destroy their unholy warfare against mind and the good of mind. They need a repentance which will teach them a lesson of wisdom. They need a repentance not to be repented of. When they learn that lesson, their names will be written in the Lamb's book of life.—Ibid., p. 207.

There is a will of wrong expressed, and where a will of wrong exists, repentance is necessary. Neglect repentance and the wrong will continue. Repent or cast the wrong away, and it will deceive no more. Repentance must prepare the medium for the reception of truth.—Ibid., p. 225.

DEATH

But the freed and immortalized spirit which is disenthralled from the clogs of the earthly nature, has not the faintness and weariness of the earthly mind. . . . The spirit feels its freedom when released from the body, it feels the power and energy which exists inherently in its nature; it feels the sweetness of its inward life.—The Spiritual Teacher, p. 23.

Death, therefore, which has been the cause of sorrow and mourning to the inhabitants of the earthly world, is not an entire extinction of being as has been supposed, and as this term indicates; but it is the glorious birth of the spirit, a process of change by which it is released from the fading tabernacle of clay, and is enabled to exercise its own exalted powers in the light of a more expanded sphere.—Ibid., p. 148.

Death wills no wisdom—it wills nothing. It is a transition from one sphere to another.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 103.

Spiritualism takes away the fear of death by proving that it is only the birth into a better life—a transition frequently from pain, disease and darkness into peace and marvelous light.—Religion, p. 227.

RESURRECTION

Change is perpetual. Change is not confined to things temporal. The spirit world is full of change. All things change but God and his perfections. . . . But there is a change and that change is glorious, that change is good, that change is progress—and that progress is the resurrection. It is a resurrection into victory—a victory subduing to selfishness, subduing to ignorance of spirits, subduing to pain and death, subduing to worldly fame and honor, subduing to passion and revenge, subduing to all the evils which disgrace and degrade the minds of men and the rudimental sphere. It is a resurrection, so called, because it elevates the mind from death and works of darkness. . . . It is a resurrection because the same spirit which inhabited the body, inhabits a body not of earth. It is a resurrection because the spiritual body is an exact miniature or identical likeness of the human body. It is a resurrection because this change is so called. . . .

But it is not instantaneous. It is not the work of a moment, an hour, a day, a year, or an age—it is the work of eternity. The resurrection is the progress of the immortal mind in the knowledge of the truth. It can never end because eternal progress has no end.—Light from the Spirit World, pp. 81, 82.

HEAVEN

The heaven of the spirit is the abode of the immortal being which is enshrined within the human frame.—The Spiritual Teacher, p. 54.

Heaven, so far as regards the enjoyment which is received by the spirit, is no place, and hence it can never be enjoyed by rising a certain distance above the plane on which the earthly being gropes and grovels.—Ibid., p. 56.

It should be known that there is both a material and a spiritual atmosphere, which flows off constantly from the surface of the earth; that the material atmosphere rises to the distance of fifty miles, at which point it ceases to ascend, . . . but that the spiritual atmosphere still continues to ascend from the force of the affinity which it has for the more refined regions of space—this, therefore, constituting the basis of the spirit-world, which extends above the common atmosphere about fifty miles, or about one hundred miles above the earth. In this locality is presented the home of the spirit when it is released from the tenement of clay. . . . This is the real heaven of the spirit; this is the world of light, and joy, and rest; this is the home of the weary, the refuge of the wandering, and the haven of the storm-tossed mariner of life. . . . The inhabitants of the earth may be assured that the heaven of this spirit is the fulfilled prophecy of all the illuminated minds, whose thoughts and perceptions have been turned to the brightness and beauty of the celestial abode.—Ibid., p. 58.

It is the desire of the spirits to announce at the commencement that there are in the spiritual world seven general spheres of refinement, and that these spheres contain separately twelve circles, which circles are simply the gathering of those spirits which feel an affinity for each other, being situated upon nearly the same plane of development.—Ibid., p. 67.

When the spirit becomes fully individualized, it has a perception of the beauties and glories which abound in the sphere of the soul, and which are the shadows of the divine presence which expands through all the courts of heaven. But though the interior vision is unfolded, though the immortalized being is enabled to perceive the external glories which exist around him in all surrounding space, yet the appreciation which he has of what he may be able to perceive, will be always in precise accordance with the state of interior development to which he has arrived, and he will not be able to enjoy any more of these glories than he can receive into the bosom of his inmost soul.—Ibid., p. 71.

HELL

Being in a universe where, as we have seen, all things progress upward, how unphilosophical to talk of a hell where men are supposed to move forever downward into greater and greater ruin. Such a hell would be innately bad, and a perfect God would not have made it. . . . In the future life, as in this, violated law is the only hell, and this hell should not be termed punishment, but rather remedial suffering.—Religion, pp. 60, 61.

DEVILS

The spirits utterly disclaim all truth in the imaginations of individuals who believe in the doctrine of evil spirits, and would have it distinctly understood that the divine Being has no power to create that which is evil, and that the spirits which he has created have been formed in his own likeness and impressed with his divine image. . . . If mortals could conceive of the unutterable sympathy with which the spirits look down upon all their sufferings, and could they appreciate the regret which is ever felt when there exists a necessity for producing pain, they would discard the unworthy sentiment which attributes this result to evil spirits, and would bless the saving power by which they are exalted and redeemed. . . . It is not pleasure for any spirit to produce pain, it is not joy for them to inflict suffering; it is not a gratification for them to cause deception, but all these effects are produced as the essential means by which alone these evils may be effectually eradicated—as the legitimate and appointed method through which the gracious and benevolent ends of divine wisdom may be attained.—The Spiritual Teacher, pp. 116, 117.

Our theologians admit the absolute perfection of God, and then declare that this perfect being created a series of abominable imperfections such as a devil, or a spirit who was so imperfect that he fell and became a devil, and that vast numbers of other devils came in the same way from the divine hand.—Religion, pp. 55, 56.

Men are not innately depraved in the theological sense, but rather unripe or undeveloped, and a malicious being called Satan, or the Devil, cannot possibly have any existence under the reign of divine perfection.—Ibid., p. 62.

Devils, as defined by our theologians, must be absolutely bad, having an aim only to curse and destroy, and the existence of such beings in God's divine universe is an absolute impossibility. It is high time that our churches had laid aside the superstitious ideas of devils and hobgoblins to frighten men with, for such thoughts are treason to God.—Ibid., p. 61.

PRAYER

It is rash to say that an infinitely tender Father may not at times send a direct pulse of his loving power to one of his earnestly pleading children, however much his usual method may differ from this.—Religion, p. 73.

The recently discussed question of the efficacy of prayer receives its perfect solution by spiritualism. Prayer may be often answered, though not directly by the Deity—nor does the answer depend wholly on the morality or the religion of the petitioner; but as men who are both moral and religious, and are firm believers in a divine response to prayer, will pray more frequently, more earnestly and more disinterestedly, they will attract towards them a number of spiritual beings who sympathize with them, and who, when the necessary mediumistic power is present, will be able, as they are often willing to answer prayer.—From Defense of Modern Spiritualism, by Professor A. R. Wallace.—Ibid., p. 76.

Does prayer influence God? . . . To this I would answer God himself must work according to law, and when we lift up our souls in earnest aspiration toward him we thereby open up a channel through which all celestial influence can flow into our being with greater freedom. Beside this the reactive effect of prayer upon ourselves will have an exalting tendency.—Ibid., p. 72.

FORGIVENESS

Nothing can contribute so much to restore harmony of minds as the forgiveness of offenders. . . . Who forgives his brother, as he asks to be forgiven of God? Is not God more willing to forgive him than he is to forgive his brother? Is it not mockery to ask God to forgive them their sins when they are unwilling to forgive the offenses of their brethren? Can God forgive a sin while the sinner continues in his sin? Can he forgive a wrong while the doer harbors and practices the wrong? Spirits will answer. No sin or wrong can be forgiven of God while the sin and wrong are practiced by the doer.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 236.

MARRIAGE

Condition of minds united by affinities is what we mean by marriage. Marriage is an abused custom. . . . Marriage is honorable. Marriage is dishonorable. It is honorable when affinities wed minds, or minds are united by affinities which never oppose each other. It is dishonorable when parties wed upon any other principle.—Light from the Spirit World, p. 181.

MIRACLES AND HEALINGS

Miracles are of two kinds. Miracles are wonders. Miracles are signs. Miracles are work. Miracles were wrought in many places by Christ and his apostles. Miracles will be wrought by the apostles of a spiritual philosophy. Miracles, wonders, signs, and works will be wrought to confound the wisdom of the caviling world, to establish the truth of communications made by spirits in the second sphere, and deliver men and women from the yoke of ignorance, in less than one year. Miracles will be wrought to deliver men and women from the power of intolerance, priestly rule, infidel skepticism, wrong and error of every form, as it now exists in all classes, and among all societies and churches . . . No one can withhold his convictions of a truth, established by miracles. Consequently, when miracles are wrought the truth will be established. . . .

Miracles are what we want. Miracles are what you and men in the body require to confirm the truth. Miracles will do what argument, reason and science cannot do. We know what is wanted, what is needed; and knowing, we shall adapt our miracles to the consummation of our great object, the good of man, individually and collectively. We shall touch the sick, and wither disease; . . . nor shall we do this with a medium whose will is not entirely passive, whose mind is in harmony with our desires, both to the intent and the means; so that the ratio of miracles, by different mediums, will always correspond with the conditions that are indispensably requisite.—Light from the Spirit World, pp. 9-12.

From among thousands of cases of healing by spiritual and magnetic power, it may be well to state that as Jesus often healed without touching the patient, and sometimes at a distance, so in many cases have the magnetists of to-day, working under the spirit power, accomplished more remarkable cures.—Religion, p. 115.

RELIGION OF JESUS

The religion which has been introduced in the name of Jesus, is a religion which is founded upon the laws and institutions of Moses; it is a religion which has reference to those ancient forms and time-honored customs which move the elements of the outward man, but have no effect with the immortal soul. . . . It is a religion which has the good of the world in its professions, but which has the perversions of thought and feelings in its tendency. It is a religion which has the most flattering voice, but the most corrupt heart; which is like the whited sepulcher, fair as to its external appearance, but within the home and sanctuary of death itself.—The Spiritual Teacher, pp. 86, 87.

.By the foregoing we see that spiritualists have by their own representation of their faith repudiated the religion of Jesus Christ, yet claim him to be of the highest order of mediums; have repudiated the Bible as containing that standard by which to determine true communications, yet have given in its stead mediumistic communications which are as liable to be wrong as right; have set aside the work of the Holy Ghost as the medium of communication between God and man, and have given in its stead spirits to communicate with man whose utterances are confessed to be as liable to be false as true; have given us the free-love system instead of the sacred ordinance of marriage; advocate that miracles are given to make believers, and are more powerful in this work than reasoning upon the word of God, instead of that which assures one who already believes, that what is believed is of God; have denied the personality of God; the necessity of an atonement; the existence of devils and hell; and have advocated that death, or the separation of the body and spirit is the resurrection, instead of the body and spirit being again united and both immortalized, or the being that once was mortal becoming immortal, at the resurrection of the dead which is yet to occur.

[The next installment will deal with Unitarianism.]

COGNITION OF THE DIVINE

Oh! may my understanding ever read
This glorious volume which thy wisdom made!
May sea and land, and earth and heaven be joined
To bring the eternal Author to my mind!
When oceans roar, or awful thunders roll,
May thoughts of thy dread vengeance shake my soul!
When earth's in bloom, or planets proudly shine,
Adore, my heart, the majesty divine.
Grant I may ever, at the morning ray,
Open with prayer the consecrated day;
Tune thy great praise, and bid my soul arise
And with the mounting sun ascend the skies:
As that advances, let my zeal improve,
And glow with ardor of consummate love;
Nor cease at eve, but with the setting sun
My endless worship shall be still begun.

—Address to the Deity.

That which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse.—Romans 1: 19, 20.

He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself.—1 John 5: 10.

CAN MERE MAN DISCERN RIGHT FROM WRONG?

Certain philosophers have concluded that man cannot know what is true and right. It is argued that man as a sentient being is wholly incapable of forming a mental concept not based upon sense experience; that because all our knowledge comes by way of perception and ideas we know only our own feelings and thoughts. Each one knowing merely his own perceptions is therefore limited to the appearance of things when, and as, those things arise. But those whose correspondences are limited to the world of physical sensation are not warranted in making their own knowledge and observation the exclusive standard of probability.

Referring to this type of philosophy which lays its chief emphasis on the biological and physiological basis of man's mental processes, Professor Hugo Munsterberg says:

Philosophically the outcome is a discouraging skepticism. We find a world of passing individuals with fugitive interests and desires and satisfactions, but there is no eternally valuable ideal good, no absolute truth or morality. It is a relativism which seems to be indorsed by the anthropological and ethnological studies, which of course show that that which has been called knowledge and beauty, law and morality and religion at any one time among any people have always been contradicted by other periods in other parts of the world. The truth of one age is the error of the next, the moral prescription of one part of the globe is antipodal to the ethical ideas of other countries. That there is no truth then appears to be the only certain dogma; and yet if we think consistently, even that dogma cannot be true, as it would proclaim for itself at least that absolute character of truth which it denies by its own proclamation. But what else does this skepticism which is skeptical of itself express, if not that it is contradictory in itself? No skepticism and no relativism can really be carried to a consistent end without demonstrating their own contradictoriness.

MORE THAN SENSE PERCEPTION

While it is no doubt true that all our knowledge of physical or finite things is obtained directly or indirectly through the sense organs: that we recognize and identify the multitudinous things with which we constantly come in contact by their properties as revealed to us through the medium of our senses; still, as Epicurus says:

We must indeed accept the testimony of our senses; but we must also believe much which is not directly testified by sensation, if only it does not contravene our sensations, and serves to explain phenomena.

There is no doubt that the things with which we constantly come in contact possess many properties wholly unknown to us because our sense organs are incapable of appreciating them. The world is doubtless full of sounds which escape our attention because the sound waves fail to impress the auditory apparatus. There may also be many light waves that have never been seen by the human eye, many odors that have never been sensed by the olfactory nerves and numerous substances which the tactile sense has never appreciated.

We know positively that large numbers of human beings have passed through this world deprived wholly of some one or other of the senses which attend all normal beings. Some, for instance, are born blind; others completely devoid of hearing. No light wave ever penetrates the stygian darkness of the unfortunate blind man and no sound wave ever impresses the sealed ears of the hardly less unfortunate deaf man. But no individual possessing his normal senses would be at all disturbed by the blind man's denial to others of the appreciation of light or the deaf man's denial to others of the awareness of sound solely on the ground that these things were wholly without the range of their respective sense activities. Thus we see how untenable is the position taken by the individual who denies to others a knowledge of anything which is incomprehensible to himself.

And to say that things beyond the reach of sense appreciation are beyond the range of the knowable should not necessarily imply that sense appreciation is delimited by the stimuli of the finite world. If we were in possession of additional sense organs, or if those we possess were more highly developed our knowledge would be proportionately more complete and comprehensive. In support of this thought the statement of Jesus is significant: "Except a man be born, again he cannot see the kingdom of God." It is also significant that the astute Paul when he encountered the Athenian philosophers with their negative conception of the Absolute and viewed the altar that they had dedicated to the "Unknown God," was able to meet their skepticism with the bold assertion: "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." And he supplemented this declaration by extending unto them the divine invitation to "Seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us."

DEFINITION OF INTELLIGENCE

Latter-day revelation informs us that the glory of God is intelligence. Referring to the dictionary we find intelligence defined as intellectual skill or knowledge; capacity for the higher functions of the intellect; and information communicated. As applied to the Deity it is not something intangible and transcendental but something infinitely real and infinitely exalted, yet so far as its value to man is concerned, it must be infinitely near and infinitely communicable. Hence the peculiar relevancy of that form of its definition: "information communicated." Assuming that the senses are the only media of communication we must bear in mind that sensation requires an appropriate stimulus, a responsive sense organ and a center of cognition. In the instance of the blind man, there is the appropriate stimulus of light and the cognizant brain center but no responsive sense organ. The responsive sense organ is also lacking in the case of a deaf person. This is precisely what Christ said of certain men regarding spiritual things. They had eyes but no vision and ears but no appreciation of sound. The important fact, in reference to spiritual things upon which we should fasten our attention is that there runs the same principle through natural and spiritual things: through the book of nature and the pages of Scripture; so that the laws obeyed by this earth and its phenomena may be traced as pervading the appointments of revelation.

DECAY OF FACULTY FROM DISUSE OF FUNCTION

Henry Drummond in his famous book Natural Law in the Spiritual World draws an interesting lesson from the analogy of the little crustacea which inhabit the lakes of the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky. He points out that these strange little creatures which dwell in the eternal night of the cave are apparently endowed with perfect eyes; but examination discloses the fact that these eyes are only a mockery. Externally they represent well-defined organs of vision, but behind there is only a shrunken, atrophied and insensate thread. The optic nerve has completely perished. These creatures having chosen to abide in darkness have become fitted for it. By refusing to see they have waived the right to see. This is an illustration of the law that decay of faculty inevitably follows disuse of function; a law that is just as effectual and infallible in its operation in spiritual things as it is in natural things.

The first epistle of John furnishes us with the following striking illustration of the potency of this law in its spiritual aspect: "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." Thus we discover that the history of the blind crayfish of the cave has its complete parallel in the spiritual experiences of mankind. We might go still farther and examine the following quotation from the Apostle Paul's Ephesian letter:

This I say, therefore, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them because of the blindness of their heart; who being past feeling have given themselves over to lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness.

ALIENATION FROM GOD

The principle cause of the deplorable condition of these people was alienation from the life of God: which meant that they had elected to live away from the light of God, seeking an environment of darkness, which in due course produced blindness.

Plato likened this earth to a dark cave and its inhabitants to cave-dwellers. With their backs to the light and their faces toward the wall they live in a world of shadows and as a result mistake the mere shadow for the substance. In Plato's cave-men we find an answer to those agnostics and atheists who refuse to believe anything that they themselves have not seen or heard; and deny the existence of an all-wise God who exercises a benevolent rule over the universe. The writings of Hæckel, one of the most famous living scientists, furnish a prominent example of this type of skepticism. He says:

According to monism, the human spirit, or mind, is the same as the human soul. Or, to be more precise, it is regarded as an especial, highly developed part of the psychom's activity. As such it is a function of the human brain and must therefore suffer extinction at the moment of death.

No scientific proof has ever been offered for the belief in immortality. From the cradle to the grave every human being is a toy of chance, for chance is everything and everywhere. In using this term it is necessary to briefly explain just what meaning science means to convey in employing it. According to the universal law of causation everything in life is due to some mechanical cause. But if two or more things having individual causes and in no way interdependent or related to each other cross each other's path, a new result is achieved, and this result is chance.

The pretty phraseology of the advocates of the idealistic beliefs concerning the "higher guidance" of our destinies through an all-wise Providence are charming and exquisite, but they are not in harmony with the teachings of science. The entire process of evolution is purely mechanical, without any "sagacious plan" or "universal goal."

This is the way in which evolutionary materialism scoffs at the faith of the Christian, which it regards as nothing more than pitiable superstition. But science seems to forget that the student of natural phenomena is required to give as much credence to what the textbooks of his scientific themes set forth as the theologian does to the statements of Holy Writ.

TURNING TO THE LIGHT

But to return to Plato's allegory we find what happens if the cave dwellers are liberated and disabused of their error. As they walk toward the light its glare at first dazzles their eyes; but they gradually grow accustomed to the light and then the real things are clearly revealed to their vision. But this process of turning from shadows to realities is a slow one and requires patience and dilligent effort. Nevertheless, the only avenue of escape from the dark cavern of spiritual ignorance and error is toward the light of truth, and this fact is clearly indicated by the eminent apostle in his Colossian letter as follows:

Giving thanks to the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light: who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son.

It is a deliverance accomplished by the miraculous influence of a changed environment. And with this new environment there comes also the development of sense organs adapted for correspondence with the stimuli of the same, and also a center of cognition.

POSSIBILITIES IN CHANGED ENVIRONMENT

What a changed environment may mean is strikingly illustrated in the instance of the Monterey pine tree. This tree, which is indigenous to California, grows in very restricted regions, and the comparatively few individual trees that are now in existence are supposed to be the survivors of a remote prehistoric flora. Its peculiar features hitherto have been its extreme rarity and the restricted area of its growth. In its native habitat it has no economic value whatever; being considered more ornamental than useful. Some years ago, however, some one transplanted the Monterey pine in New Zealand and this change of environment has apparently had a remarkable effect upon it and has proven it to have very extraordinary qualities. In its new home as a producer of wood it is a veritable phenomenon and for this reason it has received the title of "The Wonderful Tree." In its rapidity of growth and lumber yielding propensities it surpasses all other trees in New Zealand and has no equal even among the great pine tree family of America.

To what then must we attribute the wonderful improvement in the qualities of this tree, if not to a changed environment? There is no doubt that its capacities for growth and timber production must have existed as potential qualities in the seed that was taken there from California.

In the spiritual world we find an analogy for this in the word of God, the incorruptible seed, which is the vital factor in the process of regeneration, and which contains potentially all the qualities of a Son of God. Hence we find statements like these: "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

"To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God."

RESPONSE TO CHANGED ENVIRONMENT

What happened in the case of the transplantation of the pine tree was that new soil and different climatic conditions—elements of the new environment—played an important part in the development of the hidden hereditary tendencies: the tree responding to these influences. So also in the case of the translation of an individual into the kingdom of light: the nurturing forces will develop an output of goodness in the life of one who is responsive to their stimulating powers. Only those things grow in our nature which are fed. To cut off their nourishment or stimulus is the quickest and surest way to kill them. Hence it is a good thing for those who have just entered the realm of the spiritual causation to desire the sincere milk of the word that they may grow thereby. Its use will stimulate the sense organs to functional activity during the experiences of the kindergarten period, which is characterized by unskillful use of the word of righteousness; and when that period has passed they should be able to partake of the strong meat which belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. For as in the natural world so also in the spiritual world do we find that development and training of the senses is of great importance and greatly modifies our knowledge of things; so that if these are imperfectly developed or in any way abnormal, our information regarding things is proportionately incomplete and defective; for decay of spiritual faculty is bound to follow disuse of spiritual function. While the way has been opened for us to enter the larger spiritual life of the universe—the realm of spiritual knowledge—and the promise has been made to us that the day shall come when we shall comprehend even God—being quickened in him and by him—we must not forget that our successful attainment will depend upon whether or not we, with all diligence, add to our faith those Christ-like qualities, the abundant possession of which will make us prolific in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; but the lack of which will certify to the fact that we are blind, and cannot see afar off. The most positive way in which to cognize the divine is by having it resident within ourselves. We are told that when he (Jesus Christ) comes we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; but conversely, we shall not see him as he is, if we are not like him.

SELF-EXAMINATION ESSENTIAL

We should readily understand then why we are exhorted to self-examination in the following words of the apostle: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates." This is the supreme test of an empirical philosophy characterized by psychological positivism, such as we find couched in these clear statements of the Master: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." "Blessed art thou! for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my father, which is in heaven." "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself."

AN AGENCY ESSENTIAL

Men blindly strive after some transcendent thing and seek to promote life by means as unnatural as they are unsuccessful; forgetting that when God acts he moves upon and through that which is here, alive, existent. All power is resident, concrete, and all changes occur in that which already exists. The Spirit always acts through some agency; and God's majesty and power are displayed amidst natural laws and forces. We should therefore regard the world of nature as a manifestation of God. This does not mean, however, that God is the same as the world of his manifestation. It is not the creed of pantheism (which mistakes the mere shadow for the substance), but it is the doctrine of divine immanence which recognizes God as the great Reality back of all phenomena. One eminent writer thus describes what is implied by divine immanence:

Sometimes one seems to look far into the eyes of a friend and to see the soul gazing from unseen depths in return; and as the face softens into a smile, one draws still nearer to that elusive somewhat called "the human spirit," as it lends life and beauty to the features, itself invisible, yet so plainly revealed that one can almost locate its vanishing touch. There are days in the country in summer—noticeably in June and September—when a divine stillness seems to rest over all the world. We feel an unwonted and indescribable peace which lifts us above our petty selves to the larger self of eternal restfulness which nature's calm suggests. We almost worship nature at such a time, so near it brings us to the spirit which imbues the very vibrations of the atmosphere. Again when standing near some grand mountain or when looking far into the clouds at sunset, we seem to perceive the strength and the vanishing glory of Him who is almost revealed to our longing eyes, yet forever remains beyond our keenest physical vision.

RECOGNITION IN MANIFESTATION

If we push our analysis still farther we discover that all that is best and dearest in human life; all that is most useful in nature, is like this retreating beauty of a soft landscape: the mechanism is visible, the beauty is of the mind. "I saw my friend," you say. Yet you saw only his face, not his soul, as you see the world, but not the life which animates it. You feel love, you use wisdom, you reap the inner benefits of goodness: but all is intangible. No one ever saw force: we see and make use of its effects. Yet no one doubts its existence. We know it through its manifestation. If the "ipse dixit" of revelation is demanded in substantiation of this doctrine of divine immanence it can be found in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

Whoever with devout mind searches most diligently into the beauties and mysteries of the visible universe will be constantly met with those exhibitions which seem to him the pages of scripture written in the stars and in the planets; and in the mountains and forests and waters of this creation: thus indicating the same authorship to both and proving that the God of creation is also the God of revelation. When we gaze upon the vault of heaven with its glorious inlay of stars, it is unto us as the breastplate of the Great High Priest, studded with oracular gems, from which, as from the Urim and Thummim on the ephod, come messages full of divinity.

LIFE A CONTINUOUS COMMUNICATION

Life, then, as Professor Dresser says:

Is a continuous, divine communication. There is no real separation between our souls and the Father in whom, in the most literal sense, "we live and move and have our being."

But not only do we live with God, by virtue of his immanent presence, but God also lives in us; and he is completing us, moving upon us through all that constitutes human experience to produce in us his perfect image.

Sometimes, when we ascend a high mountain and gaze forth upon the world or look into the starry heavens and try to conceive of the limitless forces of the universe, we seem to be lifted above self as our souls sweep spotless realms beyond the touch of grosser things. At such times, a return to the realities of ordinary life is almost painful to contemplate. But when we consider that the sphere of God's influence embraces the things that are present as well as the things that are to come: that there is a divine order in mean things, in little things, in prosaic things; that the drudgery of daily toil has something to do with the interests of divine government; then we must acknowledge that the little happenings of our daily lives are as much the agencies of God as the ecstatic visions of the mount of beatitudes. For the true Father is the God of experience, the God of the concrete; and the common things of everyday life need only his divine touch to transfigure them. We find this thought most beautifully expressed in the poem by Horatius Bonar, entitled, "The Master's touch."

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty hides unseen,
To make the music and the beauty needs
The Master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.

Great Master, touch us with thy skillful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die!
Great sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let,
Hidden and lost, thy form within us lie!

Spare not the stroke! do with us as thou wilt!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, thou our God and Lord!

The learned apostle informs us that "the invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead"; nevertheless, it is strange yet true that the logical ideas of God as contained in his revealed word have failed to commend themselves to the wisdom and confidence of some of the highest intellects that have ever lived. What a magical thing, after all, is the "Master's touch," which causes the scales of darkness to fall from our eyes and enables us to see and understand, with wondrous clarity of spiritual vision, the things that are true and right. What greater boon could man ask than the positive knowledge that God is; the creator, the lawgiver, the life and force of all things? That he has attributes that are surpassingly pure and attractive; and that as a Father he is always mindful of his children; caring for them and leading them ever onward by a great love unto a great redemption.

OUR REFUGE

The Buddhist cries: "I take refuge in Buddha!" But, compassed about as we are by so great a cloud of witnesses, we may safely trust ourselves in the hands of Him who speaks to us at every point and by every splendor of this visible universe—whose voice is uttered in the marchings of the planets, and the rushing of whose melodies is in the wings of the daylight. There is no real separation between us and the God, in whom, in a very literal sense, “we live and move and have our being.” All the mysteries will be cleared away and solved when we have finally been brought into complete oneness with the Infinite; when we have finally reached the goal of omniscience and freedom, towards which all men are striving.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

ADVENTISTS AID IN CONSERVATION OF FOODS

A movement, nation-wide in its scope, has just been inaugurated at the convention of Seventh-day Adventist physicians and food experts, which is in session at the College of Medical Evangelists at Loma Linda, California, which will cooperate with the food conservation plans of the United States Government.

The medical superintendents and business managers of the sanitariums at Saint Helena, Glendale, National City and Loma Linda; the managers of the food factories at Saint Helena and Loma Linda; a large number of physicians and surgeons, nurses and officials of the conference organizations, and other delegates to the number of about two hundred were in attendance.

The utmost seriousness and enthusiasm characterized the sessions of the convention. It is not too much to say that definite and far-reaching results will follow the educational campaign which will begin immediately. The following resolutions were unanimously passed and referred to the various conferences interested for further consideration and action:

Whereas, There is at the present time such a tremendous agitation in the United States relative to food reform and food conservation, and whereas this movement is in direct line with the teaching and practice considered fundamental in our denomination during the period of its existence, and one in which we can most consistently and enthusiastically cooperate; therefore,

RECOMMENDATIONS

• We recommend that the Pacific and North Pacific Union conference committees appoint thoroughly competent persons to devote their time to the study of the great problem of food conservation, with the view of bringing before our people the necessity of definite cooperation in this nation-wide movement as follows:

(a) We recommend that all our sisters immediately sign the pledge sent out by Mr. Hoover, relative to food conservation.

(b) We favor our people organizing societies or joining local societies organized to promote the interests of the food conservation movement.

(c) We urge our people to become food producers by planting and harvesting and preserving as large crops as possible.

(d) That we study the problem of getting many of our people out of the cities, into the country, that they may become producers.

(e) That we plan for operating our various schools in such a manner as will enable students to assist in planting and harvesting crops.

(f) That our physicians be asked to prepare material for giving popular lectures on the subject of foods and food conservation, and that they collaborate on these lectures with a view to producing the best possible material and results.

(g) That competent women in our churches be asked to secure approved, simple recipes for publication in local newspapers.

(h) That sufficient time be given at our various camp meetings for the presentation of these important subjects.

(i) That our people everywhere be urged to practice economy in the matter of clothing.

(j) That we increase our efforts in behalf of the nation-wide temperance campaign as an important element in the food conservation movement.

(k) We recommend that this body suggest to the North American division conference the organization of a department for promoting the interests of this movement in the North American division field.—San Bernardino Daily Sun, July 4, 1917.

PSYCHOLOGY OF THE GERMAN SOLDIER

Stanley Washburn, the war correspondent who is at the present time serving on the staff of the American Commission to Russia, headed by Elihu Root, analyzes the attitude of mind of the German soldier and his idea of what he is fighting for, in a communication to the National Geographic Society, a part of which the society issues as the following bulletin of its war geography series:

“It is difficult for Americans to realize the discipline and lack of intellectual initiative which exists in the German Army and among the German people.

Ever since he became emperor, Wilhelm has been instilling his extraordinary beliefs into his army and into his people, until to-day we have a psychology in the Teuton empire which will probably make it possible for the military autocracy to continue the war to a far greater length than would be conceivable in any other country of the world.

"In the early nineties the Kaiser sounded the keynote of his own character and point of view in a speech he made to a regiment in northern Germany, when he said to them: 'I would rather see my forty-five million Prussians dead on the field of battle than see one foot of the soil taken in 1870 given back to France.'

"And several years later, in addressing a body of recruits in Potsdam, the Kaiser is reported to have said: 'Now that you have donned my uniform it must be your pleasure and your duty to follow my wishes, realizing that I rule Germany by the direct will of God, and you must willingly obey my commands, even though I require you to shoot down your own fathers and brothers in response to my dictates.'

"With such ideas as these being instilled into the German Army and German people year by year, we must not believe that at the first sign of reverse they will forget the teachings of forty years and demand consummation of immediate peace; and we must likewise realize that a revolution in Germany at this time has far less opportunity for success, for there is every probability that the German soldiers would fire upon their own people with the same subservience to their officers that they show in all their military operations.

"While the military operations in the west are of vast importance to the situation and must unquestionably demoralize the Germans to a certain extent, I see no reason to believe that recent events in France have created a condition from which we may expect any immediate results looking towards peace.

"When we read that the French and English took 33,000 prisoners and 330 guns in the month of April, we must, of course, rejoice; but we must at the same time guard against an optimism which leads to the belief that our only duty in this war is financial and economic.

"These losses of the Germans, while encouraging, are in reality but a drop in the bucket. It might be well to remember that Brusilloff, in a little over two months' operation on the southwestern front of Russia during the summer of 1916, took 450,000 prisoners and 496 guns; and yet this far greater loss to the enemy, as one now realizes, has exerted but transitory influence on the world situation.

"In order fully to appreciate the Teuton strength, it is necessary to give the Germans the credit which is their due. One must, I think, consider broadly their whole point of view and realize that the power of the Central Empire, and no one at this time will question its strength, is due to the German virtues and not to the German vices.

"Now that the bitterness against the Germans is so intense, it is difficult to wipe away the prejudices one feels and give them the benefit of the extraordinary values which they have as a people; but if we underestimate these virtues, we fail to understand the causes which have made it possible for the Germans to do what they have done.

"Much as I disapprove of the German point of view and of the spirit which has been manifested by the Germans of nearly all classes in this war, I still remain of the opinion that, taken from the internal point of view, our enemies possess almost every virtue which makes for military strength.

"In the first place, no one who has seen and talked with the German troops can question the sincerity of their belief in the righteousness of the German cause. I have talked with prisoners from the Baltic to the Bukovina, and I have never yet met one who did not believe implicitly in the statement of the Kaiser, made at the beginning of the war, to the effect that 'in the midst of perfect peace we have been treacherously surprised by a ring of enemies jealous of our genius and intent on our destruction.'

Practical Ideas About Our Boys' Organization

I believe some such system of credits and promotions as the Oriole Girls have should be provided for the boys. The various kinds of work should be arranged into groups, and a certain number of credits from each group in each grade should be required for promotion. A certain leeway should be given, i. e., suppose there are five groups of work and fifty credits are required for promotion; instead of having exactly ten credits from each group, make it, say, five credits from each one, and enough extra, or over five, from some, to make up the fifty.

In arranging the various classes of work (when I say work, I mean the activities, or things to be done, whether it may be commonly known as work or play) care should be exercised to make differing provisions for the boys of the large city, the small town, the farm, the well-to-do, and the poorer ones, so that all may have as nearly equal chances as possible, to make the required points, as well as to secure the desired pleasure and training. One provision I consider quite important is that after a boy has accomplished a certain work, and secured his promotion, he may continue to get points by continuing to do the work. For example: If I am not mistaken, in the Oriole work, if a girl makes her own bed every morning for a month, she obtains one or more points. After the month, she does not receive any more credit for it and in some instances, the particular incentive being missing, she does not make her bed any more! Thus one of the important objects sought is not obtained.

If you desire, I will fix up a list of some particular or individual tasks which should be arranged for. I would suggest that there should be a liberal provision for real work, and not run it too much to athletics and sports. Provide plenty of sport and recreation, but intersperse such tasks as cutting wood for the widow, spading or plowing the garden for the widow, the old, feeble, cripple or sick, making useful articles, etc. Provide a chaperon for all outings, particularly of mixed groups.

Wishing the movement unqualified success.

From the Isles of the Sea

As previously noted in the columns of the HERALD, the annual conference of this mission was held in the island of Tikahau in the month of April. The latter part of March the Tahiti Saints left for the above island and after the usual troubles, we landed in Tikahau safe and sound. I will not dwell upon the details of the events which transpired there, as it has been reported; it is, however, concerning the sisters' meetings that I wish to write.

After the dedication of the new church, conference business began. Each morning before ten o'clock was devoted to quorum meetings for the priesthood, so we took advantage of this hour and conducted meetings for the sisters. Four meetings were held and although the majority of the women did not attend, yet we believe that some were benefited. There were probably close to five hundred natives present at the conference. Estimating that half this number were women, we felt rather discouraged when our first meeting only drew about fifty. At the three succeeding meetings we never had more than thirty. We felt disheartened at the time, but in considering it since, we feel that perhaps we could not expect more, as this work is new among them and when we read recently in the auxiliary columns that many of our American sisters did not feel the necessity of becoming better informed upon the all-important subject of parenthood through attendance at the auxiliary meetings at the late General Conference, we cast away our discouraging thoughts and resolved to put forth greater efforts. However, our native sisters did not even have the excuse of an archæology lecture, as some were detained at the house, making new dresses for the evening sessions or conference, while others were busy trying out lard from the pigs remaining from the big dedication feast. We could not refrain from reading to them from Luke 10, concerning Mary and Martha.

Our first meeting was in the nature of a "greeting meeting." At this time an inspiring and encouraging letter from Sister Audentia Anderson to the sisters of the South Seas, was read. It was well received. At the second meeting, "Responsibility of parents in teaching their children to read Tahitian" was discussed. This subject was particularly applicable to the mothers from the low islands, as in many of those islands there are no schools and unless the parent interests himself sufficiently in his child to teach him to read, the child grows up without being able to read even the Tahitian language. Many mothers, however, neglect to impart even this little knowledge. So an effort was made to arouse their interest along that line.

The subject of the third meeting was, "Where are your children when night comes and what can we do to interest the children in the home that they will not go on the streets at night?" Many good and practical thoughts were brought out on this important subject, and I think some awoke to the fact that the parents had a responsibility in the matter, and simply saying, "He's a bad, evil child, there is no way for him," the parent lying down to sleep in peace while the child goes goodness knows where, will not serve longer as a legitimate excuse.

At the fourth meeting, the subject of "Young girls and their health" was under consideration, bringing in the old native tradition, which consigns all pure and virtuous girls to early death. Although the sisters are never overjoyed to discuss this subject, yet when it is under consideration, every sister sits in attention as if she didn't wish to lose what is being said upon it. We dwelt much upon what a mother should teach her daughter concerning the care of her body as she grows into womanhood. We had a fine letter to read to them from the sisters in Honolulu. Sometime ago the sisters of the auxiliary in Honolulu read in the HERALD concerning this tradition which is still extant among the natives of these islands. True to the ideals expressed in the constitution of the Woman's Auxiliary, they responded, feeling that as they were of the same race as these people, they might be able to reach them in a way no one else could. Hence, they wrote a beautiful letter, full of love and good counsel to the sisters of this mission. The letter was translated and read at this meeting. We feel very grateful to the sisters of the Honolulu local for thus showing their interest in these people. The letter was well received and I think will reach the hearts of some.

This closed our meetings and as we review the situation we are surely glad we made the effort and trust that fruit will be borne in due time from the seed sown.

CLARA KELLOG ELLIS.

At the General Convention

REPORT OF HOME DEPARTMENT

First, in any report I could make as home department superintendent must say that the benefit that has come to myself in coming in touch with the General Auxiliary work, and catching a vision of the opportunities that lie open to the women of the church to be of real service in the church in a united way, has been perhaps the chief good that has been accomplished by my efforts this year.

I have sought to study my department, and learn what I could as to what its possibilities are. I have responded to the best of my ability to the calls of the general officers in the efforts that have been made to increase interest in the work and make it of real benefit to the women of the church, and through them of benefit to all the members of the home, which finally benefits all members of society.

I have written occasional articles for the HERALD columns, seeking to outline and explain the home department work, and have sent a circular letter to all district officers whose addresses we have, in response to the request of the general officers. Have received replies from those interested in the work from many small locals, and one sister from England writes of their interest and of their desire to respond to all forward movements. I have replied to these inquiries as best I could.

I feel that one of the most efficient ways we have of reaching the women with this home department work is by means of library work, or the getting of the books and pamphlets into the homes, and fostering an interest in the reading and study of same in the homes. The greatest good it seems to me can be accomplished through individual study, if we can recommend books and assist the women to get them. The library work as referred to is being carried out with quite a bit of interest in Lamoni, where a library has been collected by borrowing books from individual members of the auxiliary who are willing that the books be loaned, also borrowing the books from the state circulating library. If the textbooks recommended in the Year Book, or any one of those recommended on the given subjects could but be had and read and studied by every woman of the church, great advancement could be made and much real educational work accomplished. This is impossible through the means of the circulating libraries, and even if the general auxiliary could arrange to have a circulating library of its own of the textbooks recommended, and be able to send them throughout the church to the different locals to be loaned to those members who find it impossible to purchase, it would be I feel sure, the means of interesting many in individual study, where class work is not practicable and an assistance to the class work as well.

The home and child welfare departments are so closely related that it seems to me they should be included under one department in the outline of the work.

While progress seems slow, there is much to encourage us, and we feel that the way is open and the opportunity ours to advance to a higher plane of living. It is desired that the home department may cooperate with every other department for the general advancement of the cause of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Sincerely,

MRS. GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

Northeastern Illinois

There are a few things taking place in this district that we feel that others may like to know about. Several have made inquiry as to the reunion for 1917, which was provided for by the action of the district, in reunion assembled, at Plano in 1916. We answer that the June conference that met at Mission, Illinois, on June 2 and 3, passed a resolution to have no reunion in 1917. The chief reason was the high cost of living, scarcity of tents, and high prices of the same. Then by a canvass of the district we found that but few, comparatively, would be able to attend. To some, at least, we think the first duty we owe is to maintain the family circle, second, the local church, and third, the missionary arm of the work. And not knowing what we would have to meet the coming year, we decided that the part of wisdom, would direct as we have done.

The district is making a noble effort to make the Christmas offering such that the church debt may soon be paid, thus obey the voice of the Lord thus to do, and then many are looking to the time, that is not far away when the temple should be built and we want to be ready for that day!

As district officers, together with the patriarchs, we have arranged to hold six-day meetings in all the branches. In some of the branches where desired, this may be repeated, and even a longer series held. The missionaries of the district are planning their work in new places also, and thus we hope to see a year of growth that will be pleasing to our heavenly Father.

Yesterday was a big day here in the city, as the First Chicago and the Central Chicago Branches held the dedications of their respective churches. It has been a long and hard fight here in the city to reach this time when these buildings would be out of debt, and so the district at large was caused to rejoice with them. Bishop J. F. Keir was the speaker at eleven a. m. on the west side, Elder Harry Passman, branch president in charge, prayer by District President J. O. Dutton. A history of the branch was given by Sister Grace Johnson, long years secretary of the branch. Dedicatory prayer by Bishop McGuire, special music was furnished by the local choir. Benediction by J. O. Dutton.

At three p. m. at the south side Bishop McGuire was the speaker, Elder H. P. W. Keir, branch president, in charge, prayer by J. O. Dutton, a history of the branch was read by Elder D. E. Dowker. Dedicatory prayer by Bishop Keir, special music by the local choir, benediction by Patriarch W. A. McDowell. Bishop McGuire was the speaker at the west side at eight p. m. and Bishop Keir at the south side at the same hour. The day was all that could be expected and thus ended a day that will long be remembered by the Saints of Chicago as well as the district.

The attendance at both dedications was large, filling the churches to overflowing. We look upon these dedications as placing these branches in a better condition for service, to the great sea of mankind found in this great city. The West Pullman Branch, where the writer occupied at eight p. m., is presided over by Elder R. N. Burwell, and they are talking of building a church there that has been so long needed. The Deselm Branch, near Manteno, is also expecting to build if all goes well. So we think that the work is onward, in most respects, and we hope to see this a year of blessing, notwithstanding the country is racked with war.

Your servant in Christ,

J. O. DUTTON.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From Here and There

Sister Audentia Anderson has gone west for a few weeks to visit friends in various States and attend the Southern California reunion. She has made arrangements so the auxiliary column will appear with its usual regularity.

If you have many back numbers of church papers and other literature you can spare, send it to Brother J. L. Winter, 1927 North Twenty-eighth Street, Kansas City, Kansas. He makes a specialty of this kind of work and has an unlimited field for work.

One of our members, Brother Paul Sandidge, whose parents reside at Glasgow, Montana, was shot while on patrol duty along the Great Northern Railway. It is not known who the assailant was, but it was supposed to be the result of I. W. W. troubles in that region. He had expected to return home for a short visit before being assigned to duty in France.

The Saints at Springfield, Missouri, are making plans for tent services the same as they have been doing for a number of years. They are united in their desires for the progress of the work. On the morning of July 1, they witnessed the baptism of Mrs. Lula Palmer, Mrs. Mayme Shuler and Miss Lena Rowley, Brethren Henry Sparling and Luke Bishop performing the ordinance. They will be numbered with the Springfield Saints.

It is with pleasure that we notice an extensive review in the Columbus Sunday Dispatch of the contribution of our Brother C. W. Clark appearing recently in the Ohio Archaeological and Historical Quarterly. Without the too frequent asperity common to those who write of us, the article is given courteous and intelligent consideration and a good cut of Brother Clark appears. The date of the issue is July 1. We appreciate it, Mr. Hooper.

SAVE THE FUEL.—Coal comes from a distance and our railroads are over-burdened hauling war material. Help relieve them by burning fewer fires. Use wood when you can get it.

Detroit, Michigan

The orchestral spirit of the branch is again renewing its interest and diligence, and under its leader, Lewis Bender, bids favorable for great success.

The Religio-benefit social held at the home of Sister Hill was considered a complete success, in spite of the inclemency of the weather. Thirty-eight dollars were netted and donated to the Pontiac Saints who are contemplating the construction of a new church.

Many strangers are observed among us. Some are asking for Quarterlies, Book of Mormon and other literature. We are giving them all they ask for.

The regular semiannual branch business meeting resulted in the election of the following officers: Elder J. Grant, president; Ray Bennett, priest; Frank Shippy, teacher; Paul Knapp, deacon.

Sacrament Sunday was a day long to be remembered by Saints of this place, gifts of prophecy and words of admonition were given along the line of keeping the Word of Wisdom. New diseases which would baffle medical skill, would arise. Comfort and cheer was given to those who might be called to the front in battle, and protection to those who were faithful. One young brother discerned an angelic messenger standing near the brother while he was delivering the message. Angelic voices singing, was heard by a sister. Two were called to the priesthood. Six candidates offered themselves for baptism and one was ordained.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA, June 28, 1917.

Editors Herald: During the recent district conference the weather was ideal and Saints and nonmembers were in attendance from various points.

An interesting patriotic program was rendered Friday evening.

The usual business was done and interesting sermons delivered. The bishop's agent's receipts since November 1 were $1,029.57.

An interesting priesthood meeting was held, those present expressing themselves as being in accord with President F. M. Smith's instructions to the priesthood as outlined in Unity. We feel a profitable time was spent and much good was accomplished in a spiritual way.

B. D. STRATTON.

BARBERTON, OHIO, June 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: I read the HERALD each week, and when I read the letters from other branches it makes me rejoice to know that the work of the Lord is still going on. Especially do we like to read letters from Canada and to hear of the work that has been done in Amherstburg, Ontario, and hope they will soon have an organized branch there.

When I look back to nine years ago there were a few scattered Saints in Windsor, Ontario, who had no place to meet only when the Saints would open their doors to the elders as they came along.

One day the sisters were invited to meet at my home. They all met on the day appointed and the suggestion was made to organize a ladies' aid, that we might raise funds to have a place to worship. My sister said, "Whatever can we do to have a church?" I said if we had nothing else to start on we could sew carpet rags. She laughed at the idea of sewing carpet rags to get a church.

Anyhow a ladies' aid was organized and the first work we did was to sew carpet rags. And the children became so anxious they would save all the bottles and old iron they could find. This was our start and we soon got in a better class of work. Now they have a church, a branch, and a large congregation and the Lord blessed them.

Then came the time that I left them and moved to Akron with my companion. In seven years I have been home twice to meet with them in their new church. Anything that is done with a good will is pleasing to the Lord.

SISTER L. H. HAYES.

CALHOUN, LOUISIANA, July 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am living in the only branch of the church in this State. We are striving to keep the banner of Christ flying in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

We have a good Sunday school here, which is doing splendid work. We have about sixty in membership. The church work here has been in almost a dormant state until this year Brother J. J. Hawkins, recently migrated from Alabama and my brother J. A. Phillips came of late from Missouri Valley, Iowa. They have done much to get the work in the right condition here.

The people in this place are very much worried over the continued drought. We haven't had any rain for so long that our crops are almost burned up. But, however, we are putting our trust in the Lord to come to our rescue before it is too late.

I am a subscriber to the HERALD and I read and enjoy each issue of it. I am hoping and praying that we can escape the war and famines of these the latter days.

Your brother in the cause of Christ, J. E. PHILLIPS.

they have effected the sale of several pieces of property in Lamoni and vicinity and are continually adding to their list of available homes to be had. Those of the Saints who accept the advice and counsel of these men who are on the ground and have no interest except to be of service in the building up of Zion have a distinct advantage over those who do not. We understand the bishopric of the other stakes are working into this special line of work as fast as possible.

Far from Church Unity

The Christian Union Quarterly, edited by Peter Ainslee, devotes its energies to bringing about a unity of the churches. The magazine is entering upon its seventh year, with a noticeable enlargement and pleasing improvements. From the ordinary standpoint the various writers on the subject who contribute to the publication present plausible solutions, but so long as the sectarian world persists in rejecting essential doctrines of Christ as he left them in his church on earth, just so long will there be schisms and isms. We agree with Mr. Ainslee on many points, but as to the point at which unity may be effected, we are still at variance.

Demand for School Activity

Urging that there is a greater demand than ever for well-trained teachers, Doctor P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education says that parents should be encouraged to make every possible effort to keep their children in school. He urges an increased attendance at high schools, and even for adults believes there should be maintained evening classes. In the general demoralization of national and individual plans for the future, it may well be assumed that there will be a greater demand for trained men and women in every line. The world needs them; the church needs them. Let no one lower for a moment his educational ideals.

Conference Minutes

NEW YORK.—Niagara Falls, June 9 and 10. A. E. Stone presiding, assisted by William Landes and Frank C. Mesle. Statistical reports from Niagara Falls, Sherrill and Buffalo, also reports from the priesthood of the district, treasurer and bishop's agent. Election of officers: A. E. Stone, president; F. C. Mesle, vice president; William Landes, vice president; Anna Brothers, secretary; Frank Updyke, treasurer; Ethel Hageman, chorister; F. C. Mesle, member of library board. Frank Updyke sustained as bishop's agent. William Landes chosen as two-year member standing auditing committee, this committee, consisting of William Landes and P. L. Weegar. Adjourned to meet at Greenwood, New York, in October, as per resolution. Anna Brothers, secretary, Buffalo, 36 Tremont Avenue.

HOLDEN STAKE.—At Warrensburg, Missouri, June 16 and 17. Stake presidency chosen to preside. Frances Moler and I. M. Ross, secretaries. Reports from Stake President D. J. Krahl, Bishop C. J. Hunt, stake high council, First Quorum of Elders, First Quorum of Teachers, four presiding deacons, member library board and Woman's Auxiliary. Bishop's report shows collections of $1,379.51, expenditures $1,208.52. The presidency were instructed to appoint a member of the gospel literature board from Holden Stake. Organization of branches at Marshall, Grandview and East Independence was authorized. The conference adopted recommendation of H. E. Moler for stake high councilor. The arranging for a series of two-day meetings within the stake was referred to the presidency and the branch president where each meeting is to be held. Conference adopted the Harvard plan for entertaining conference visitors hereafter in this stake. Time and place for next conference referred to stake presidency. Mrs. A. M. Fender, secretary.

KEWANEE.—At Dahinda, Illinois, June 9, 10. W. E. Peak and J. F. Curtis in charge. M. E. Gillin and Florence Holmes, secretaries. Branch reports: Kewanee 140, Joy 111, Dahinda 85, Twin City 78, Buffalo Prairie 71, Peoria 65, Matherville 58, Canton 54, Rock Island 45. Total in district, 786. Net gain in past eight months, 10. Seventy 1, elders 18, priests 17, teachers, 15, deacons 12. Absent from branches 292. H. C. Ziegenhorn, bishop's agent reported for past eight months, total receipts $1,668.04; balance May 31, $231.63. District funds: Receipts $39.55, balance $10.65. Resolution from Buffalo conference asking that John Constance be ordained to the office of elder was referred to Apostle J. F. Curtis and W. E. Peak. They reported favorably and conference authorized the ordination to be provided for. Resolution from same branch asked what to do with three people who had been members of the church but whose names had been stricken from the books in 1864 at their own request (without trial). Referred to a committee of which J. F. Curtis was one and they reported that these parties could only reenter church by baptism. Report approved by the body. Election of officers: President, W. E. Peak; vice president, Charles L. Holmes; secretary, Mary E. Gillin; treasurer, H. C. Ziegenhorn; librarian, Carrie B. Holmes. By unanimous vote H. C. Ziegenhorn was sustained as bishop's agent; Mary E. Gillin as local historian; Joseph G. Cole as chorister. It was voted that the secretary should be the chairman of the credential committee with power to choose an assistant. Two members of the standing auditing committee were chosen: Clifford Dillon for 3 years; W. V. Holmes for 2 years. These, with J. L. Terry, make the auditing board. The next conference will be held at Millersburg this fall at the date selected by the district presidency, and J. F. Curtis. Meetings were 2 prayer meetings, business 2, preaching 4 and priesthood 1. All were good. Evangelist F. G. Pitt and Sister Pitt were in attendance and busy in the line of their work. They assisted much to make the conference a success, as well as Apostle J. F. Curtis who in counsel and instruction encouraged and helped. Attending were, apostles 1; high priests 1; patriarch 1; seventy 1; elders 9; priests 3; teachers 4; deacons 2, and a number of delegates from the various branches. The preaching was unusually good, we thought, the singing and music inspiring. Two were baptized and confirmed. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, Peoria, Illinois, 115 Clarke Avenue.

New Edition

MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER

The third edition of this booklet by Elder Daniel Macgregor is just off the press. It is bigger and better than ever. Many chapters have been absolutely rewritten and enriched by evidence hitherto unpublished.

Presents in a logical and absorbing manner an array of facts and figures garnered from the world's greatest and rarest publications of all ages and nations.

A convincing solution of the far-famed prophetic periods solved with the dawning of that illustrious year, 1830.

An arsenal of facts and figures which no up-to-date Latter Day Saint can be without. Just the thing for your neighbor.

Sets forth in a captivating manner all of the prominent features of the latter-day work and unlocks the treasury of Daniel and the Revelation as no other book does. Just the thing to meet Adventism in its distortion of the 1260, the 2300, and the 2520 days.

One of our antagonists has said: "It will deceive the very elect," while one of our missionaries avers that it has brought into the church in his district between fifty and sixty people.

The price is 35 cents each; 4 for $1, postpaid.

mittee, Virginia Budd; home department superintendent, Ruby Allen; normal superintendent, Mrs. Gertie Bailey; gospel literature superintendent, Dollie Brunson. A regular session of Religio given at 8 p. m. After the lesson study a program was rendered. Total attendance 120. Mable Braden, president; Adrain Lowe, secretary.

Conference Notices

Central Texas will convene with the Texas Central Branch, near Hearne, Texas, July 28 and 29; first session 10 a. m. Sunday school and Religio conventions on the 27th at 8 p. m. B. F. Spicer, president and superintendent.

Convention Notices

Far West Religio July 21 and 22, at Oakdale Branch, near Hamilton, Missouri. All trains on Friday evening and Saturday morning only will be met. Notify J. A. Dawson, Route 5, box 30d, if you want the committee to meet you. Mary Wells Peters, secretary, Stewartville, Missouri.

Central Michigan will hold an eight-day session of Sunday school and Religio institute work at Sand Lake, Iosco County, July 28 to August 4. Bring tents, those who have them, to make sure of sleeping quarters, though several large tents are being provided. Take Detroit and Mackinac Railroad to McIvor, where there will be a means of transportation to the lake. It is an ideal spot for spiritual and physical up-building. Bring tents and blankets and enjoy the best time in your life. Best of bathing, good fishing, berry picking, and above all, association with the people of God. Edith A. Smith, secretary, 1706 North Linn, Bay City, Michigan.

Reunion Notices

On account of the high cost of provisions of every character, and also the impossibility of securing tents and other necessary equipment, the Fremont, Pottawattamie, Eastern Nebraska, and Southern Nebraska reunion is cancelled for 1917. T. A. Hougas, president; H. A. Higgins, secretary; J. A. Hansen, C. T. Self, committee.

Lamoni Stake, Lamoni, Iowa, August 8 to 19 inclusive. Tents may be ordered of R. J. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa, and to insure best service should be ordered now: Low-wall, 10 by 12, $3.50; 12 by 14, $4.50; high-wall, compartment, 12 by 12, $6.50; 14 by 14, $8.50. Meals on grounds with good service: Twenty-one-meal ticket, $4; ten-meal ticket, $2.50; single meal, 30 cents. Excellent grounds and well equipped. Recreation, auxiliary work, good speakers, spiritual prayer services. First meeting a prayer service at 9 a. m. the 8th. All are encouraged to be on the grounds and located for this opening session. Let each family endeavor to comply with this request, so as to benefit by the entire reunion, and so as not to disturb the camp by the confusion of late coming. For further information write J. F. Garver.

Southern California at Hermosa Beach, August 3, continuing 10 days. Business of conventions and conference on 3d and 4th. Religio convention 10 a. m. on the 3d, Sunday school 2.30 p. m. on same day. Conference 10 a. m. on Saturday. Branch and priesthood report should be in the hands of the district secretary and president before conference convenes. The following are expected: John W. Rushton, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, Mrs. Dora Glines. President Elbert A. Smith may be in attendance. The church ideals and accomplishments in the recent past will be treated by J. W. Rushton. Music and Woman's Auxiliary by Audentia Anderson. Method in education by Dora Glines. Local workers present some phases of church work. For further information on tents, etc., write T. W. Williams, 1307 West Forty-fifth Street, Los Angeles, California.

Gospel Literature Commission

Brother Harvey Sandy, 527 Denver Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, one of the committeemen having general charge of the gospel literature work, has agreed to take general oversight of the work in the five stakes of the church. Letters of inquiry from members of the stakes, concerning the Gospel Literature Commission, should be sent direct to Brother Sandy; also forward all reports to him of literature work done in the stakes. This year, with all the rich experience of the past behind it, should be, and I trust will be, a banner year. Literature workers as a body of enthusiasts should not be satisfied with the distribution of less than a million pieces this year. Organize local commission at once. Raise money. Collect church literature. Distribute every piece collected. Keep accurate report. R. W. Farrell, chairman of commission.

DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON PROVEN BY ARCHÆOLOGY.—Student, here is a mass of startling data for your consideration. Nothing "sentimental" about this work. It adheres to reality, and yet it is full of the romance which clusters about the ruins of a departed civilization. Louise Palfrey Sheldon accomplished a notable work in writing this book. It is a bulwark against the guesswork of uninformed antagonists to Latter Day Saintism. No. 176, cloth$1.60

THE TRUTH DEFENDED.—In this answer to Davis H. Bays' "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," Heman C. Smith provides the reader with something more than intellectual entertainment—he not only excites but inspires the faculties. "The Truth" is so "defended" that the impartial critic is roused to unavoidable participation in the discussion greatly to his enlightenment. No. 304, paper, 50c; No. 305, cloth$.75

A new book that glows with human interest.

JOE PINE

By Elbert A. Smith

The first part is an interesting study of child life on the western prairies, filled with the keenest of humor and naturally seasoned with the pathos that comes in the fight with adversity.

Illustrated

By Paul N. Craig

It includes the sequel to "Joe Pine" entitled, "Called to be an apostle," which portrays the experiences of the young man and his lifelong girl friend both of whom you will feel you have grown up with.

A strong story, well written.

E D I T O R I A L

ARE THERE THREE PRIESTHOODS?

Several times within the past year has this question been raised in some form or another, either in oral discussion or in articles submitted for publication. The argument for a greater than the Melchisedec priesthood seems to be almost entirely based upon the statement in regard to Enoch.

It should be noted, however, that Christ himself is referred to as a priest after the order of Melchisedec (Hebrews 5: 6, 10). It may be noted that this is an order and not simply an individual. An order would reasonably be expected to include more than one person.

We are told elsewhere (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1) that this order was called after the name of Melchisedec to prevent the too frequent repetition of the name of God, as the correct name is, the priesthood after the order of the Son of God. This, however, alone should be sufficient to intimate that the priesthood of Enoch could not be greater, as Enoch would not hold a priesthood higher than that of the Son of God. It is true there are passages referring to the priesthood of Enoch, but we are told distinctly that the priesthood of the Son of God was that of Melchisedec (Alma 10: 1-12). There is also reference to the priesthood of God, but this is covered as it is shown clearly that the priesthood of God and the priesthood of the Son of God is the Melchisedec priesthood (Alma 9: 63, 69, 70; 10: 12).

But it does not, therefore, necessarily follow that we are individually holding to-day all of the powers that belong to that priesthood; however, it is our right to progress until we do so. Not only do the books of the church (Genesis 7: 15-21; 14: 30-32, Inspired Translation) set forth the power held by Enoch, but tradition also repeats a similar story, and Jesus, when on earth, made similar declaration, concerning the power of those who follow him (Matthew 17: 20; Mark 11: 25; Luke 17: 6; John 11: 44; John 14: 12).

It is significant that the blessings of the priesthood belong to the people. The minister is blessed in being able to serve God and work with him. But the blessing is given to others. This is the case with baptism. It is not always a pleasant thing to go out in the cold and in some instances cut the ice for water to baptize. The candidate may have such an experience once, but some of the ministry have had to put on their frozen clothes before they were dry again to enter the waters of baptism.

The laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit is for the blessing of the individual. The master at the table asked, "For whether is he greater, who sitteth at meat, or he who serveth? I am not as he who sitteth at meat, but I am among you as he who serveth." (Luke 22: 27.)

It is so of all the ordinances of the church. The purpose of the priest or teacher in visiting the family is that the membership may be blessed, that wrong may be corrected, that the Spirit of God may abide with one and all.

The elder in being called to administer may be called out in the middle of the night or in a storm for his Master's service. It is always for the benefit of others. So we believe that these other powers, when the need arises and the people are ready, will be given for the blessing of others, but especially those of the household of faith.

But these privileges, these obligations and duties, belong to the Melchisedec priesthood. Wonderful, indeed, is the high calling of our ministry, and greater things yet lie in store if we are faithful; in that we shall be blessed to the fulfillment of the promises of God, and that we shall be blessed in service to others, and shall be able to do more, or a greater work, and feel our reward in working with our heavenly Father.

It is the duty of the Melchisedec priesthood to administer; so is it in like manner the duty and privilege of the Aaronic to work with God in service to mankind, and especially to assist the family of God to right living here.

Our duty and advancement lies not in the securing of some other priesthood, nor in the attaining of other office or position, but rather lies in the magnifying of that office and calling to which our Father has appointed us and chosen us. So for the church the answer lies not in the securing of another priesthood, but in sustaining and magnifying that priesthood already committed to us. The means are within our reach, the priesthood and the divinely chosen men, it behooves us to move forward and use them.

But since the issue has been sometimes raised of a third and higher priesthood, we submit the following, which should show clearly, so far as the church is concerned, the priesthood of God, the priesthood of the Son of God, the priesthood of Enoch and priesthood of Melchisedec are the same, and there is no higher priesthood.

Now Melchisedec was a man of faith, who wrought righteousness . . . having been approved of God, he was ordained a high priest after the order of the covenant which God made with Enoch, it being after the order of the Son of God; which order came, not by man, nor the will of man; neither by father nor mother; neither by beginning of days nor end of years; but of God.—Genesis 14: 26-28, Inspired Translation.

The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. . . . The Lord hath sworn and will not repent, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec.—Psalm 110: 1, 4.

So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec.—Hebrews 5: 5, 6.

Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec.—Hebrews 6: 20. (See also all of chapters 5, 6, and 7 of Hebrews.)

I would that ye should remember that the Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son to teach these things unto the people.—Alma 9: 63.

Thus being called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest, this high priesthood being after the order of his Son.—Alma 9: 69, 70.

Melchisedec having exercised mighty faith, and received the office of the high priesthood, according to the holy order of God, did preach repentance unto his people.—Alma 10: 12.

Why the first is called the Melchisedec priesthood, is because Melchisedec was such a great high priest: before his day it was called the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God; but out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days, called that priesthood after Melchisedec, or the Melchisedec priesthood.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1.

They are they who are the church of the Firstborn . . . They are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fullness, and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedec, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the only begotten Son.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

CHURCH TRIALS

Many of our ministry are evidently not aware of the following action taken by General Conference, April 19, 1913.

Special attention should be given to three points:

1. Confession may be taken and witnessed and filed with the Presidency, without being made public, and should be done quietly, when possible.

2. All records of church trials and all confessions should be filed with the First Presidency for safe-keeping.

3. In case of a serious charge or confession of serious wrongdoing, before trial or acceptance of confession as settling the charge by repentance, the First Presidency should be first advised, so they may inform the local officers, whether it is a first offense or not.

We might urge also the duty of officers to see that a proper record is kept. Our great purpose is salvation, to help mankind to better living. It is not necessary to make these matters public, but it is equally important that they be not ignored. The parties should be labored with and helped, and if a wrong is established the record quietly filed with the Presidency.

But in too many cases no record is made at all. In some cases officers of the branch have claimed the offense before the court to be the second, third, or even fifth or sixth offense, and yet there was no evidence whatever, oral or written produced or that could be produced of guilt in any previous instance; no record of any labor, no confession. If their statement is true, the officers are guilty of serious neglect of duty to the church and the individual. They have talked about it, but have not made any effort to help the man get right.

In some branches one officer alone knows the facts, others in large number know of rumors. This one has a full record of delinquencies, but in memory alone. The church records are clear. He raises his objection to letters of removal, but opposes a trial or record. Some day he will die and then the records of the branch will be clear.

That in cases of adultery where the guilty member has repented, and the matter is not publicly known, a written confession duly signed and witnessed by one or two officers of the church shall be sufficient to establish the fact of the first offense; said confession, and associated statements by the officer or officers, to be forwarded to the First Presidency's office to be filed in the archives, which are not open to any other officers than the Presidency. The offense should not be made a matter of record in the home branch or district and should not be published by these officers receiving the confession.

If, however, the person should later fall into delinquency, then there should be some way to protect the interest of the church in the operation of the law which requires that the second offense of adultery shall not be forgiven, but there would be no way for the first offense to be known unless there was provision made whereby the officers could be acquainted with the first offense. This can be reached in the instance above cited if the request recently made by the First Presidency will be compiled with by local officers; namely, that whenever charges of a serious character are preferred against a member, the Presidency shall be immediately notified of the charges. This would enable the Presidency to notify the officers in the case they had record of a previous offense unknown to the officers who had formulated the later charges. We think the filing of the confessions with the Presidency would be safer than having them filed with either branch or district presidents, as there is less likelihood of them becoming public property if lodged there than if lodged with a local authority.—General Conference Resolution No. 713.

CHILD LABOR

One thing that should cause a serious pause at this time of stress is the relaxing of the laws of certain States concerning child labor and hours for women. Similar action was taken in England at the opening of the war, but it was soon found unwise and short-sighted. We may sacrifice, but there are some prices too great to pay, and especially when they bring neither now nor hereafter a commensurate return. It has been clearly demonstrated that men give better and more service with short and reasonable hours than when continually overworked, and the resulting product is of a higher grade. The same is true of women's labor, but in addition to that with women and children the health of the race is involved.

GRACELAND COLLEGE CATALOGUE

The Graceland College Bulletin with announcements for the coming year is before us and is ready for mailing to prospective students and those interested, on request.

Miss Mabel Knipschild who has spent the past year in study at Columbia University, where she received the degree of Master of Arts, will teach German and home economics the coming year. The latter represents the opening of a new but very important department at Graceland. The course includes the selection, preparation and serving of food; clothing problems and ordinary household care.

Floyd M. McDowell and Charles E. Irwin are spending the summer at the State University of Iowa in study for better preparation for the college work.

Paul N. Craig is at Chicago Musical College taking work this summer with Oscar Saenger, one of the best vocal teachers in the United States. J. H. Anthony is at the State Teacher's College taking work in the department of orchestra and band music, which he will conduct at the Graceland conservatory the coming year. This is another new department.

We note that nearly all of the regular faculty is continued this coming year. The new members are Charles E. Irwin, B. A., University of Kansas, in history; Waldemar Noll, B. A., State University of Iowa, for science and mathematics; Alice M. Burgess, B. A., Cornell University, New York, M. A., Clark University, Massachusetts, English and Education.

A new feature will be special lecturers, who will be expected to deliver a series of five lectures at the college, and two or three in town for the general public. Each of the lecturers is expected to spend at least a week at the college. It is to be hoped that this becomes a permanent feature. Those announced for the coming year are Frederick M. Smith, B. S., M. A., Ph. D., on the relation of the church to society; Walter W. Smith, Ph. B., B. D., on psychology and education; Benjamin R. McGuire, LL. B., LL. M., on the law of property; Augustine Dwyer, B. A., M. A., on travel and literature; and Samuel A. Burgess, B. A., LL. B., on philosophy. Mrs. Lydia Thomas Wight is also announced for the correspondence department.

Graceland is now fully accredited. Her college graduates receive the degree of Associate in Arts from the junior college, which admits to the third or junior year of any college or university belonging to the American Association of Colleges and Universities; it also gives the necessary preparation now required of two years' college work for admission to professional schools. The graduates who have had fifteen hours' work in education are granted a state teacher's certificate without examination, possible renewals without examination make this in practice a life State certificate, for those who continue in the teaching profession. These certificates will be accepted in most of the States, so that Graceland graduates, we are advised, will be recognized to teach, practically wherever they may desire within the United States.

The special scholarships by action of the late General Conference are not unlimited. It is estimated that their number will be between thirty and forty, so early application should be made.

Copies of the bulletin may be secured by addressing the president of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Faith never worries.—Selected.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

"Mormon Troubles in Missouri"

The Missouri State Historical Society has recently begun circulating in booklet form a reprint of an article which appeared in the Missouri Historical Review under the heading: "Mormon troubles in Missouri." This was written at their request by Elder Heman C. Smith, historian of the church and editor of the Journal of History. It is sold for fifty cents and may be obtained of the State Historical Society at Columbia, Missouri. It should be the means of removing much prejudice, put out under the auspices of such a society.

Tracts in the Maori Language

A request from Elder H. W. Savage was presented to the late General Sunday School Convention asking that one hundred dollars be appropriated to the purpose of publishing church tracts in the Maori language for the natives of New Zealand. This was indorsed, provided the joint council thought advisable. This body have since reported that Brother P. M. Hanson, now in Australia, has the matter well in hand and that the tracts should be issued. On this recommendation the Sunday school part of the expense has been advanced.

"The Messenger"

This is a little four-page publication that Brother R. W. Farrell puts out on a small hand press at Providence, Rhode Island. It is supposed to be a monthly, but it is delayed considerably because of the press of other work. Since last year he has gotten out over ten thousand pieces of church advertising on this press, at the rate of about $2.50 for 1,500 pieces. He says the same work there would cost at least $10 for 1,500 pieces. He distributes many of them at his street meetings. Others with a "bit" of printing experience might profit by his experiences. In addition to this and other work, Brother Farrell is preaching three times on Sunday and three times during the week.

The Stress on the Intellectual

In the HERALD of July 11, there appears an editorial on the above topic. At the end of page 650 there appears a sentence which should read, "May it not have been partly for this reason that the Apostle Paul was carried to the third heaven and there saw things he could not repeat?" The reference is to 2 Corinthians 12: 1-4. An error occurs in the use of the word "believe" for "repeat." We would emphasize again the thought of that editorial, that the spiritual is primary and essential. No man can rightly assist in this work, unless he possesses the Spirit of God working with him. A man may be learned or he may be unlearned, but he must be humble and full of love. Yet being so and possessing the Spirit of God for a guide, his learning should conduce to the glory of God and his work.

"Unity"

The July issue of Unity is now before us, and gives additional reason why this publication should be in the hands of every member of the priesthood, missionary or local. It is a means of communication between President Frederick M. Smith and the priesthood of the church. Later, no doubt, it will also be utilized by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire. In the July issue an important distinction is drawn between "dismembership" or cutting off from membership in the church and "excommunication," which is confined in this article to withholding the right to commune, or partake of the sacrament and participate in the rites of the church. Formerly the Catholic Church attempted to draw this distinction between major and minor excommunication. Concerning dismembership, President Smith says; "In its effect it is so extreme and severe that we are beginning to question the propriety of its imposition except in rare cases. . . . We should in our opinion exercise the penalty of dismembership only on rare occasions, but use the penalty of excommunication more frequently as a means of hastening repentance. The extreme penalty of dismembership should be resorted to only when the violation of law is so flagrant that the extreme penalty naturally applies, or when hopes for repentance are gone—which is rare." This emphasizes anew the purpose of our work of redemption. Even an elders' court's first purpose is reconciliation and salvation. Expulsion or dismembership is the last resort. This same spirit should rule in dealing with indifferent members of the priesthood, according to this issue of Unity:

What action should be taken against those of the priesthood, who, after being notified, fail to attend priesthood meetings, or to send in reports to either branch or district president?

They should be aroused to activity, and when active they will want to report. The priesthood meetings should be made so attractive that all will want to come. Inactive members of the priesthood should be sought out by branch and district officers in an effort to encourage and to reawaken an interest in the church and its work. The penalty of unfrocking should only be applied as a last resort. But those who can work and will not should make way for those who will.

It is significant that the headquarters of the Turkish Army is in Syria, the valley of Armageddon, and that it is possible that one of the decisive battles, if not the decisive battle of the war may be fought there.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

MORE ABOUT ADAM IN CELESTIAL GLORY

[The following article was prepared in pursuance of one printed June, 1916. A reply was made and printed to that article and the editor, Elbert A. Smith, offered Sister Macgregor an opportunity to answer not only the reply but also questions which had been sent to her. Sister Macgregor prepared the article and sent it in sometime in November, but owing to the illness of the editor, and then in January to the associate editor, the matter was not taken up. In fact, the associate editor was not aware until very recently of the circumstances. This would account for the delay in its publication. It must be remembered that the HERALD is, to a considerable extent, an open forum, and the articles and arguments presented are by no means to be taken as representing the teachings and position of the church; but in many cases it presents only the ideas of the writer, which may be very different, indeed, from that of the editorial staff.—EDITORS.]

Since the appearance of the article, "Did Adam fall from celestial glory?" in HERALD for June 14, I have received a number of queries, comments and friendly criticisms from different parties; and while I have endeavored to answer these privately, I have thought it might be wise to write them for the HERALD also, as the same questions may have arisen in the minds of others who did not take the trouble to write.

NO JOY IN EDEN

Question: How do you harmonize your position with 2 Nephi 1:111-114, where in speaking of the condition of man before the fall it shows they had no joy and were doing no good?

Answer: Adam was created innocent and pure, and was placed in surroundings which were not only good, but very good. He was an intelligent person, capable of taking charge of a world and controlling it. "He was to the manor born." He seems to have had no difficulty in performing the great work given him to do, which proves that he was neither an ignoramus nor a learned incapable; and so long as he submitted to the laws governing the kingdom in which he was placed he had all the necessary control, intelligence, and ability.

No one will deny that it takes a great amount of these qualities to hold dominion over the varied brutal, winged and finny tribes, no matter how docile they may be.

The caring for and pruning of Eden was in itself a task for an intelligent, active man, for it must have been quite an extensive garden.

Adam had plenty of experience with good things, but never having come in contact with anything else, he had no way of intelligently setting a value upon them.

We know the value of things only by comparing them with things of a different value, but Adam had nothing of an opposite character with which to compare things; everything around him was of the very highest order. We designate things as good, better, and best; bad, worse, and worst. Adam could not do this, for he had only the best. He could not rejoice over what he had because he knew of nothing inferior to it: it was the common thing with him.

He was in celestial glory; was possessed of eternal life; conversed freely face to face with his Maker without fear, and he was perfectly at home and at ease in his grand surroundings. But he did not properly estimate the value, the riches and grandeur of his condition, because he had never known any other. It was just as Lehi said, they were "having no joy for they knew no misery." It was not the place they were in that was at fault, but their own lack of experience with its opposites; as the prophet further says, "For it must needs be, that there is an opposition in all things." (2 Nephi 1:81.)

HOW JOY WAS OBTAINED

Our first parents fell and lost all this magnificent glory. Misery and suffering, deprivation and darkness followed. But memory remained true to her trust: they remembered their former glory, and they could now estimate its value because they, by transgression, had become acquainted with its opposite.

The strange part of the argument that they were not in celestial glory because they did not have a knowledge of good and evil, is the fact that sin was the thing that brought them that knowledge. They did not have to be put out of Eden to get it, but immediately after they sinned their eyes were opened and they knew good from evil, for they had experienced both. This would make sin a necessity to obtaining celestial glory, which cannot be true.

I believe that we who have enjoyed the good Spirit and have offended it so that it was withdrawn from us for a time, leaving us to be harrassed by evil spirits and the condemnation of our own consciences, can understand to an extent how Adam and Eve felt when they first obtained a knowledge of good and evil.

Remember, they died spiritually when they transgressed. Before that they had been alive spiritually from the day of their creation, and had never known any other sensation than the glory of the full and free possession of the Spirit of God. They could not have abode in the presence of God without this. But when they partook of the forbidden fruit spiritual death ensued. Instantly the Spirit of God was withdrawn and they were left alone with satanic forces in control.

Then they knew the difference between good and evil. They suddenly realized how good was the Spirit they had formerly possessed. Hurling from the heights of heaven to the depths of hell, so far as condition was concerned, they knew good from evil, for they had tested the extremes of both.

The experience of Martin Harris when he lost the manuscript of the book of Lehi, seems to have been a taste of spiritual death. God's words are, "of which in the smallest, yea, even the least degree, you have tasted at the time I withdrew my Spirit." (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2.)

The forepart of this paragraph describes the awful agony that our Savior endured when he passed through spiritual death for all men in the Garden of Gethsemane.

From these scriptures we learn what a close acquaintanceship our first parents formed with misery and suffering after falling from their glorious habitation. Nor was the plan of the redemption proclaimed to them until many of their family had grown to be men and women and had established homes of their own. (Genesis 4: 1-4, 12, I. T.)

Then the glad tidings of gospel truth was committed to them, through obedience to which they again received the Spirit of the Lord. And oh, what joy it imparted to their souls. They now saw the opportunity of regaining their lost position and place, and they knew that this time they would fully realize how good it is. Listen to their expressions of joy and thanksgiving: Adam said, "Blessed be the name of God, for, because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again, in the flesh I shall see God." (Genesis 4: 10, I. T.) The joy came because of the opening of his eyes. He was now able to appreciate good things, because he was acquainted with poor ones.

Notice that Adam did not expect anything more in the future than the regaining of what he had lost—"again in the flesh I shall see God"—but he rejoiced that his eyes were opened; he could now enjoy the goodness of God here and hereafter, which he was not able to do before.

Eve rejoiced also, saying, "were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient." (Genesis 4: 11, I. T.)

In both cases their rejoicing hinges on the fact that their eyes were opened. They possessed the good before but could not enjoy it because they knew of no other condition, but now their transgression had opened their eyes to sin and misery and they could understand how good the presence of God is.

THE PRODIGAL SON

"Prodigal: one who throws away from him: a waster: a spendthrift."—American Dictionary.

Adam and Eve were certainly prodigals. The Father gave them a splendid inheritance. Eve threw hers away for some nice looking fruit, and Adam forfeited his for association with his wife. Let us apply the parable of the prodigal son, found in Luke 15, to Adam.

As a son in his Father's house he had all the privileges and liberties of his Father's home. But knowing nothing of any other home he underestimated his good surroundings and left the place. A few years of wandering in sin and folly did their work. He was brought so low that he envied the beasts of the sty. In this plight far away from his former habitation, he awoke to the true value of his early home.

What did it? Did an angel come and reveal the grandeur of it to him? Was it the Spirit of God that overwhelmed him, sweeping away all the filth and dross and giving him a glimpse of what he had lost? Not at all. He learned by the things that he suffered.

The prodigal comes back, being met afar off by his father. The home is thrown open to him. The father receives him with open arms and acknowledges him to be his son (though he said this son had been dead but was now alive, had been lost but now found).

The son is restored to his former place. He is not exalted above what he was before, neither is he degraded to the position of a servant. He is simply welcomed back and restored to his former glory as a son in his Father's home.

But there is a great change. This time he rejoices to be there. He enjoys all his surroundings as never before. He is glad and thankful for every little favor and attention. Indeed, on first returning he did not feel worthy to be there at all, as a son, and is now ever anxious to show his Father how grateful he is by endeavoring to do what will please him in all things. He is now in a condition to enjoy his home and to do good. What wrought this great change? The home is not different: it is exactly as it was when he left it. The father has not changed. He was just as kind before as now, though the son did not notice it so much. It can scarcely be said the prodigal was building a better character in that far country. In fact he spent all that he had and returned to his father in poverty. What, then, produced this great change?

The only difference is that he lived long enough in a bad place to teach him to appreciate a good one. He had been out in the cold until he longed for the warmth of his father's love. He returned with a proper estimate of his father's goodness as he learned it from experience with its opposite, and is now able to enjoy everything about his father's home. His eyes had been opened.

OUR JOY IS MEASURED BY OUR SUFFERING

We enjoy the light of day because we have experienced the darkness of night; we appreciate health more after having been afflicted and in pain. This seems to be the reason that suffering of various kinds has so large a place in the lives of the Saints: we are capable of enjoying glory only to the degree that we develop the power to suffer and endure. When Zebedee's wife asked for a place at either hand of the Lord for her sons in the celestial kingdom, Jesus immediately asked the young men if they were able to drink of the cup that he should drink of and be baptized with the baptism that he would be baptized with, referring to his suffering and death.

Peter says, "But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." (1 Peter 4:13.) Here again our joy in the future is measured by our suffering here.

Paul says, "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ: if so be that we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." (Romans 8:17-18.)

From these texts we see how necessary it is to have the bitter that we may be able to enjoy the sweet. We might, like Adam, possess the sweet without the bitter, but we must know its opposite in order to enjoy it.

A knowledge of the bitter was what Adam lacked in his former estate. He knew no joy because he knew no misery. He did no good because he knew nothing about sin and hence had no incentive to work against it.

TERMS UPON WHICH CELESTIAL GLORY ARE GIVEN

The terms upon which that superlative degree is given do not necessarily include a knowledge of good and evil; nor do they always require joy in the goodness of God nor the accomplishment of good works. If they did, infants and those who have no knowledge would be excluded. Yet Jesus placed the highest estimate on infantile innocence and purity, declaring that "of such is the kingdom of heaven;"

and "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

Innocence, purity, and righteousness are the terms upon which admittance to eternal glory shall be granted. Adam and Eve possessed these without a knowledge of their opposites in the beginning. Infants now possess them without a knowledge of either them or their opposites, and if dying in infancy are welcomed into celestial regions.

Mormon assures us that the salvation accorded infants is the same as that given to those who, through obedience to the gospel, win eternal life.

Behold I say unto you, that this thing shall ye teach, repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children, and they shall all be saved with their little children.—Moroni 8:11.

What has produced this condition in little children? Listen:

Wherefore little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin; wherefore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me, that it hath no power over them.—Moroni 8:10.

The curse of Adam being removed from little children makes them heirs of celestial glory. What does this teach us? Simply this, that the curse that came upon Adam took celestial glory from man, and the blood of Christ paying that debt restores those who have no sins of their own back to that condition. The work of the atonement is complete in the little child, and unconditional.

They are truly restored to the primitive condition of innocence, and "are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world," (Moroni 8:13) and that which they lost in Adam is restored to them in Christ. What was it they lost? The same that they regained—celestial glory.

WERE ADAM AND EVE HUSBAND AND WIFE BEFORE THE FALL?

Yes; we are told distinctly in Genesis 2:25 that she was his wife. It was while Adam was in his Edenic paradise that God said, "It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an helpmeet for him." (Genesis 2:18.) The fall however, changed their relationship towards each other to some extent, as it did everything else on earth.

Referring to their first earthly condition Eve said, "Were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed." (Genesis 4:11, I. T.) Lehi, also, said, "they would have had no children." (2 Nephi 1:113.) I accept these statements at full value; I believe them just as they are written.

Reproduction is for time, not for eternity. Before the fall and after the resurrection it is unknown. Birth and death are conditions that reign together.

When one is banished, the other will be. They commenced with the fall of man, they will end with his redemption.

"Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it remaineth alone," said the Savior of men. (John 12:24.) Paul corroborates this, "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." (1 Corinthians 15:36.)

True, they used this to prove the resurrection, but what of the natural law to which they referred? It is while in the process of dying that the grain reproduces its kind.

We read a poem some few years ago regarding the origin of the mummy wheat. It appears that a few grains of wheat had been found closely locked in the hand of a mummy two thousand years old. The wheat was taken out and placed in the ground and produced a crop. It had to fall in the ground and die before it could multiply, just as the Savior said.

So in the animal kingdom, until death began to have effect upon the body, generation was impossible. In the preexistent world the Lord spoke to the spirits whom he had created, commanding them to "be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." This was a command for a future time and state, for at the time it was given they were untabernacled spirits. But God, looking forward to the time when these spirits should dwell in bodies of flesh, gave the command. Now, in what kind of bodies were the spirits thus addressed destined to inhabit? The answer is clear, All except two of them would be born into decaying bodies. These two, the Almighty foreknew, would bring their bodies into a condition of death. Therefore he could say to the whole host of spirits created to take tabernacle in earthly bodies, "Be faithful and multiply," for he knew that in earth life they would be in the condition necessary to carry out the command.

THEY NEITHER MARRY NOR ARE GIVEN IN MARRIAGE
BUT ARE AS THE ANGELS OF GOD IN HEAVEN

This was the answer given by Christ to the Sadducees when they asked him whose wife a certain woman would be in the resurrection who in this life had been married to seven different husbands successively.

To understand this answer fully we would have to know how the angels of heaven live with regard to the social life.

OTHER OBJECTIONS ANSWERED

Was Adam immortal? Yes. Immortal means "exempt from death," (American Dictionary). Adam was exempt from death so long as he abode the law under which he was placed.

"In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."—Genesis 2:17. Until then he was exempt from death, whether it was one year or a million years, and it may have been either so far as the record of time in Eden indicates.

DID ADAM ENJOY THE CONTINUAL PRESENCE OF GOD AND CHRIST?

Yes. One does not need to be on the same planet that God is on in order to be in his presence. He is present everywhere, and the only reason that we do not sense his presence is because the veil that is before our eyes shuts out his presence from us.

Prepare for the revelation which is to come when the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:5.

Before man was driven out of the presence of God that veil did not exist. Since the presence of God was taken from man many of the children of earth have pierced the veil by their faith, and again conversed with their maker face to face. They did not have to leave the earth to do so; neither was it necessary for God to come to earth in order to show himself to man. Stephen "looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God." (Acts 7:55.)

Enoch and his people walked with God for three hundred and sixty-five years before their translation, which certainly was more than merely serving him; they must have reached that higher development which enabled them to endure his presence.

Joseph the Seer said in one of his last sermons:

There are two Comforters spoken of. The first Comforter is the Holy Ghost. . . . Now what is this other Comforter? It is the Lord Jesus Christ himself. When man obtains this last Comforter he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him, or appear unto him from time to time, and even he will manifest the Father unto him. They will take up their abode with him, and the visions of the heavens will be opened unto him, and the Lord will teach him face to face, and he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of God; and this is the state and place the ancient Saints arrived at when they had such glorious visions: Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, Saint Paul in the three heavens, and all the saints who held communion with the general assembly of the church of the first born.—Life of Joseph the Prophet, by Tullidge, p. 492.

From these quotations we see that man even in his fallen estate is capable of regaining the presence of God during his earth life. There was nothing to hinder man in his unfallen condition possessing it, though dwelling on the earth. Place counts for little, condition for much. Jesus declared that he was in heaven while on the earth. (John 3:13.)

Was Adam endowed with all the fullness of God, perfect intelligence, power, dominion, light, truth, etc.? No. That was not man's first condition; neither will it be his last. If so we would all be gods and as such have the right to be worshiped as God.

Adam did partake of the fullness of God, he did have intelligence, power, dominion, light and truth, but not to the extent that God possesses them. Of our redeemed condition we read:

All dominions shall serve and obey him.—Daniel 8: 27.

And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.—1 Corinthians 15: 28.

The Saints shall have dominion, but not as God possesses it. They shall have power, but not the fullness of the power exercised by God. He is the Creator, we the creatures, worlds without end.

CAN CELESTIAL BEINGS DIE?

Yes, if they forfeit their right to that glory. Lucifer was in celestial glory. He was "an angel of God, who was in authority in the presence of God." (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.) Yet he died the worst of all deaths—spiritual death. Agency has been vouchsafed to men and angels from the beginning. It will never be taken from them. The time will never come that they who desire to do wrong will be unable to do it. "The wages of sin is death." Created man fell because he was unable to appreciate the good he possessed. Redeemed man will not fall because he knows the value of what he has regained.

CAN EVIL ENTER CELESTIAL GLORY?

It did enter into the very presence of God and presented its claims to him, and it remained there until cast out by the righteousness of the inhabitants. The agency of angels had to be tested as well as the agency of man, and only two thirds of them stood the test.

Next came the trial of man's agency. He did not stand the test and therefore Satan and evil remained, and will remain until cast out, as they were out of heaven, by the righteousness of the inhabitants.

WOULD ADAM HAVE ADVANCED AND DEVELOPED IN EDEN

We will let Lehi answer:

And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed, he would not have fallen; but he would have remained in the Garden of Eden. And all things which were created must have remained in the same state which they were, after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end. And they would have had no children; wherefore, they would have remained in a state of innocence, having no joy, for they knew no misery; doing no good for they knew no sin.—2 Nephi 1: 111-113.

WILL THE MILLENNIUM RESTORE THE EDENIC CONDITION?

No; the created condition of the earth was an enduring one. As Lehi said, "All things which were created must have remained in the same state which they were, after they were created; and they must have remained forever." The millennium is not a lasting condition but is only a glorious sunset to the life of the earth.

Mother Earth passes through about the same process of redemption as does man: she was cursed through his sin; she was baptized to cleanse her from sin, and in doing so she passed through as great a change as man does. (2 Peter 3: 5, 6.)

When Christ comes she shall receive her baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, which will bring her into closer touch with her Creator. But this does not disannul the sentence of death under which she labors. She will wax old as a garment, and, so far as her present condition is concerned, she will fall and not rise again. But like man her redemption rests in her resurrection from the dead. She who has partaken of a portion of celestial glory during the millennial reign, which was but the earnest of what was in store for her, shall, at her resurrection, receive a fullness of the same. Death or its equivalent reigns during the millennium, but in the Edenic state there was no death.

If the millennium were the Edenic condition we would read of the curse being removed and the tree of life being planted. But no; there is not a hint of the curse being taken away until after the thousand years is closed and the new earth appears. Then we read of there being no more curse, and of the tree of life blossoming beside the waters of the river of life. (Revelation 22: 1-3.)

The millennium at best is terrestrial glory, having the presence of the Son only, but in its first and last condition the earth enjoys the presence of God the Father.

WAS ADAM MADE LOWER THAN THE ANGELS?

We think not. What are angels? Some of them are spirits of men who have not yet taken tabernacle. The addition of a body in an unfallen state could not lower the spirit.

The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy. The elements are the tabernacle of God, even temples.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5.

When Paul said that man was made a little lower than the angels he referred to man in his present condition. This is made plain by the language he uses referring to Christ:

For we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren.—Hebrews 2: 9, 17.

If it were by reason of the suffering of death that Jesus was made a little lower than the angels, and he was in all things made like unto his brethren, then man became lower than the angels when he became subject to death, but not before.

REDEMPTION AND RECONCILIATION

The argument is made that redemption and reconciliation do not place man in celestial glory, but only place his feet on the road that leads to it. But what do we read?

And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. . . . Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4, 6.

Redemption is not completed until the body is raised from the dead, and those who here are of a celestial spirit shall, in the resurrection, receive a fullness of that glory.

Redemption means, "To buy back," hence, if redeemed man is in celestial glory, he was there before, for he is simply brought back to his former glory.

The gospel is called "the word of reconciliation," and a part of that word deals with the resurrection from the dead and eternal judgment, therefore no man has become fully reconciled to God until he has complied with that part of the word as well as with the other principles.

We are, therefore, forced to conclude that reconciliation, restoration, and redemption are not only the first steps to celestial glory but the last steps also. A man is never fully reconciled, restored nor redeemed until he is in celestial glory. All else are but stepping-stones to that exalted condition.

BY J. F. MINTUN

UNITARIANISM

While this religious theory claims to come under the head of Christian, yet a part of it, and one of the fundamental parts, is the denial that Jesus is the Son of God, or has any claim to more than a human parentage. It very emphatically advocates that there is but one God, and that Jesus Christ and the Holy Ghost are no part of the Godhead. It makes claim to no aid from the divine principle of the Holy Ghost, but that reason and right hold the only authoritative influence over man's actions here, and that there are no religious dogmas that are binding upon the consciences of men.

Punishment is considered only in the light of a means of reformation, and that as soon as holiness in one's life begins, blessedness follows as a legitimate reward, and it increases as holiness increases.

It is claimed by the advocates of this theory that it had its origin and began to be authoritatively advocated about one hundred years ago, although some, it is claimed, have been partial believers in the theory for centuries. It is not claimed that it is a church, but simply a class of believers, who become associated by a covenant, which may not always be the same.

Morality is advocated as the means of salvation, and not the atonement or the special gospel theory advocated by Jesus Christ, neither is it necessary to become a member of any particular church. With this system death was ordained of God, and immortality begins at death, there being no resurrection of the body. The principle of love, as understood by them, is the only incentive to worship, which worship is not comprehended in any particular doctrine or creed. In this class of believers there are no ordinances or sacraments accepted as having their origin with God.

The highest hope of God's Fatherhood comes from the creative act and not from an obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ by which men and women become adopted children of God.

The clearer representation of what this system is may be found in what is contained in the following extracts taken from books whose authors were Unitarians, which extracts we herewith append:

Unitarians in America use as the basis of their churches a covenant, the declaration of a spiritual purpose, or a life promise. Their bond of union is not a creed—a set of beliefs—but a statement of religious motives. In this they follow the early Congregational polity, or method of church organization which was formulated by Robert Brown, in England . . . adopted by the English Independents, brought over to this country by the Pilgrims, and used by the original church in New England. . . .

In after years dogmatic and reactionary leaders in many New England churches overlaid these covenants with elaborate creeds, but on the rise of Unitarianism nearly a century ago those creeds were abandoned by these liberal churches and emphasis was laid once more upon the original covenant.—The Unitarian Church, by Crooker, D. D., pp. 15, 16, 1894.

The Unitarian gospel began with the discovery that we live in a universe. Its original affirmation was the unity of God.—Ibid., p. 5.

During the eighteenth century, there was a broadening of religious thought among certain Presbyterian churches in England . . . and by the middle of the century some of them had come to be Unitarians in belief. . . . In 1774, Reverend Théophilus Lindsey (formerly an Episcopal clergyman) established a Unitarian chapel in London (where the Unitarian headquarters are now located—Essex Hall). . . .

The movement now had a center and a name. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association was organized in 1825. . . .

The seeds of Unitarianism were brought over to America in the Mayflower. They were planted wherever a church was organized in New England with a covenant instead of a creed.—Ibid., pp. 9, 10.

Soon after the close of the Revolution many ministers of the old first parishes (Congregational churches) in eastern Massachusetts had come by quiet growth to occupy Unitarian ground. . . . Unitarianism was now in the air, partly as a result of the liberal thought imported from England and France, partly as the product of the culture of Harvard College, but chiefly as the natural outcome of the principle inherent in New England Puritanism.

The first overt act was, however, the ordination of James Freeman, a decided Unitarian, as the rector of King's Chapel, Boston, (1787), the First Episcopal Church established in New England.—Ibid., p. 11.

During these years a great teacher came forth, Reverend William Ellery Channing (1780-1842), minister of the Federal Street Church (now Arlington Street), Boston; and his sermon at Baltimore in 1819, at the ordination of Jared Sparks, became the Unitarian Declaration of Independence. In 1825, followed at Boston the organization of the American Unitarian Association.—Ibid., p. 12.

AUTHORITY

Reason and right as revealed in man's mental and moral constitution is man's ultimate authority.—Reverend G. H. Batchelor, in World's Congress of Religions, p. 1,100.

Their [Unitarians'] fundamental principle may be stated to be the trustworthiness of the human faculties, and their competency, when duly trained and freed from prejudice, to receive moral and religious, no less than scientific truths.—Religious Denominations of the World, p. 168.

Reason has been the discoverer and revealer from the beginning, as love has been the master motive power; and these are progressive elements of an ever-unfolding human nature. . . . Unitarians demand the right to reason freely in religion, and they grant all others the same privilege. . . . They use reason and conscience as the supreme authorities in religious matters.

The authority of tradition and text of apostle and council is simply the authority of some other man. . . . The assumption that the apostles exercised final authority respecting belief and ceremonies is neither historically true nor spiritually helpful.—The Unitarian Church, pp. 28, 29.

Moreover, we are sure that God made our reason and our hearts. We cannot be so sure that he is the author of the Bible. So that, if we can find insoluble discord between the two, there can be little question which must and ought to yield.—Eternal Punishment, by T. S. King, p. 11.

GOD

The Unitarian gospel began with the discovery that we live in a universe. Its original affirmation was the unity of God.—Unitarian Church, p. 5.

JESUS CHRIST

Jesus was undoubtedly born at Nazareth, the child of lawful wedlock, Joseph being his real father, as Mary herself declared—Luke 2: 48.—The Unitarian Church, p. 38.

We believe so fully in human nature that we assert it was capable of producing Jesus of Nazareth.—Ibid., p. 21.

There is something infinitely more important than the acceptance of God in Christ; it is to honor, love, obey, and serve the divine life everywhere present in human nature.—Ibid., p. 30.

But with all our love and reverence for Jesus, we would not assert that he alone is our teacher, or that he represents the only type of life worthy of honor and emulation.—Ibid., p. 31.

We are not Unitarians because we deny the deity of Jesus; we are Unitarians because we believe in the unity of history and the divinity of human nature.—Ibid., p. 22.

Unitarians have long contended that the deification of Jesus has no warrant in Scripture or in fact, but was due to his association with the logos philosophy of Alexandria.—Ibid., p. 35.

No father of the church for three centuries after Christ, lost sight of the subordination of Christ to God, or claimed him to be otherwise than a representative of the Father.—Reverend T. R. Slicer, World's Congress of Religions, p. 1,098.

HOLY GHOST

The Holy Ghost was not given a place as the third person of God until the eighth century.—Reverend T. R. Slicer, World's Congress of Religions, p. 1,098.

Never reason from the imagery of Jesus mechanically, but from the principles of Jesus. These principles plainly are that God is an Infinite Spirit; etc.—Eternal Punishment, p. 7.

BIBLE

We do not appeal to the New Testament as a document of final and infallible authority, and we do not claim that the Unitarian gospel is merely an echo of apostolic Christianity. But we do claim to represent its spirit and ideal.—The Unitarian Church, pp. 5, 6.

We accept and honor the Bible as the best of many similar Scriptures, but all were produced by the same causes and under the same laws. . . .

The Bible contains some errors and many noble truths; numerous legends and much inspiring history. No statement is true simply because it is in the Bible, while all its teachings must be tested by experience and subjected to the authority of reason and conscience.—Ibid., p. 27.

REVELATION

All discovery of truth is a revelation of God, and all progress of mankind is incarnation of God. And while some writings become Scripture because of the precious truths which they contain, they are neither supernatural nor infallible.—Ibid., p. 27.

MAN

We affirm that man is a spiritual being, the outcome of nature's highest creative impulse. A being, imperfect but progressive, with native capacity for the discovery of truth, for moral development, for religious feeling, and for the outgrowth of sin.

Man has been very imperfect, but he has stumbled on through ignorance and waywardness, sorrow and superstition, to higher civilization and nobler character. There is in him more good than evil—otherwise his creation would be a horrible blunder, impeaching the wisdom and goodness of Providence.—The Unitarian Church, p. 23.

The distinctive faith of Unitarianism has never been its thought of God, although that gives us name: it has been our thought of man. It is our faith in the dignity of human nature. When this faith in the dignity of human nature comes full circle, it is faith in the intellectual and moral unity of God and man. It thus rounds us again into a thought of God, and gives us back the incarnation doctrine in nobler form than ever—God incarnate in humanity, not merely in the one man Jesus.—Incarnation, p. 16.

FALL OF MAN

If man is what history declares him to be, there was no fall of Adam, and all the redemptive scheme rooted in that fiction becomes unreal and needless.—The Unitarian Church, p. 43.

DEATH

Why should God shed tears over the death of any one of his children when he has ordained death as the experience of them all?—Messiah's Pulpit, vol. 5, No. 12, p. 13.

IMMORTALITY

He [Jesus] clung to his conviction of the truth, to his faithfulness as a man, to his crown as a supreme martyr—clung to it, and swooned through death into life, the life immortal, on the other side and here equally.

This if he were a man. If he were a God, the suffering could not have been real. He knew that he was simply passing through the preordained gateway, leaving aside his body, for the throne of the universe.—Messiah's Pulpit, vol. 5, No. 12, p. 13.

RESURRECTION

There are insuperable obstacles in the way of believing in the bodily resurrection of Jesus. The first form of this belief was simply that Jesus was risen from the dead (not the grave) and alive at God's right hand (Acts 2:22, 33; 3:15; 4:10). The sepulcher legends grew up later.—The Unitarian Church, p. 39.

A friend tells me that awhile ago he dropped into a Liberal Orthodox church, where the pastor was preaching a sermon on the nature of the resurrection. It gave the whole of the old idea of a bodily rising, and was as broad, philosophical, and spiritual as the most advanced thinker could wish, a credit alike to the preacher's heart and head. My friend listened to it with the utmost delight, and said to himself, "What now is the need of Unitarianism, when orthodoxy is preaching such sermons as this?" Just then he happened to glance from the preacher's lips to the church's creed written out on the wall in the background, and there his eye fell at once on the words, "I believe in the resurrection of the body." . . . The gentleman came away more impressed than ever with the importance of a church where there is no danger of such resurrections.—Need of Liberal Christianity, pp. 6, 7.

ATONEMENT

We cannot for a moment admit that the blood of Jesus made God propitious, or that faith in it releases us instantly from the punishment of our sins. This seems to us an immoral and irrational materialism. We protest against the sacrificial interpretation of Jesus' death.

The cross is not the scene of a payment for our sins, but the evidence of what the soul can achieve, not a screen to hide our sins from God, but a source of inspiration helping us to outgrow sins. . . .

The cross did not purchase God's love for us. That is a hateful and immoral doctrine.—The Unitarian Church, p. 39.

SALVATION

His [Professor David Swing's] own words were just what are preached from every Unitarian pulpit: "From such a dark estimate of God and Christ as this old notion (of Calvinism) involves, it is sweet to return to the thought that the law of salvation by morality is not a lottery, but, like the law of industry, it lies open for all.—The Unitarian Church, p. 13.

If man's needs are what our daily experiences illustrate, his way of salvation lies through culture, character, repentance and sacrifice.—Ibid., p. 43.

To assert that we can enter heaven only on his merits, is to dethrone the doctrine of the divine Fatherhood which he preached. . . .

We affirm that Jesus helps to save us only as he inspires us to fulfill the royal law of love in our daily lives.—Ibid., p. 32.

The way to heaven is always open before the sinner. But it opens through repentance and righteousness. It runs not through the blood shed on Calvary, but through the spirit of love which Jesus sublimely illustrated on the cross. . . . The way of salvation in the real universe is the way of spiritual growth and beneficent service. Jesus is divine helpfulness to any soul and so far and only so far as he moves that soul to live as he lived.—Ibid., p. 42.

CREED

Unitarians ask no one to sign a creed, because they affirm that dogmas are neither central in religion nor essential to salvation; and also because it is wrong to tie the mind to finalities when progress is the true law of life. . . . Unitarians oppose creeds, not alone because they are wholly or largely false, but because the method is inadequate and injurious.—The Unitarian Church, pp. 16, 17.

Jesus never set up any standard of doctrine for the guidance or government of his disciples, whether organized or unorganized: and he never made any particular intellectual beliefs the condition of entering any society, even the divine kingdom of heaven.—Messiah's Pulpit, vol. 5, No. 24, p. 7.

Count Tolstoi has said, "It is true I deny an incomprehensible Trinity and the fable regarding the fall of man, which is absurd in our day. It is true I deny the sacrilegious story of a God born of a virgin to redeem the race. But God-spirit, God-love, God the sole principle of all things, I do not deny. I believe in eternal life, and I believe that man is rewarded according to his deeds here and everywhere, now and forever. I believe that the will of God was never so clearly, so precisely explained as in the doctrine of the man Christ. But one cannot regard Christ as God, and offer prayers to him, without committing the greatest sacrilege." This is really a summary of the Unitarian faith.—The Unitarian Church, pp. 14, 15.

No particular belief about baptism or communion, the Bible, or even the rank of Jesus, by itself makes any one Unitarian.—Ibid., p. 18.

James Freeman Clark briefly stated in the following words the five principles of the Unitarian religion commended by Doctor Channing: 1. The fatherhood of God. 2. The brotherhood of man. 3. The leadership of Jesus. 4. Salvation by character. 5. Progress upward and onward forever.—Ibid., p. 46.

The gospel in its subtlest essence, is not a doctrine, nor a set of rules or forms, not a church organization, but a unifying life-giving spirit, ready to permeate all doctrines, all rites, all churches, just as a human spirit does the human body.—Need of Liberal Christianity, pp. 12, 13.

REPENTANCE

But so long as the principles of Christ's religion are to be trusted, God will be our best friend, and will desire nothing so much, throughout eternity as the penitence, return, consecration, and joy of the most abandoned nature.—Eternal Punishment, p. 8.

We contend, indeed, that, if the doctrine of no repentance, no possibility of spiritual improvement, among the degraded hereafter be true, Christ was not the incarnation or manifestation here of God's eternal love. The infinite is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever. If he can forgive your sin to-day, he can forgive it ten thousand years from now.—Ibid., p. 13.

CHURCH

We find that Jesus never organized or established any church at all; and there is not a single authentic word of his ever uttered concerning the founding or the organizing or arranging of any church whatever.

And again let me emphasize, and over and over, that the church is the only institution on the face of the earth the one definite aim and object of which is to make men and women better, better, always better. . . . So, then, as this church goes on in the future, is it very important what kind of government it has, what kind of organization? I think that of very little importance. . . . Organize in any way you please, so you use the power of that organization to produce the Christ-life in the world.—Messiah's Pulpit, vol. 5, No. 24, pp. 6, 16, 17.

No modern church exactly reproduces the original Christian faith, polity or ritual (it is not necessary that they should be reproduced); but what we claim is, (1). That many of the dogmas made prominent in the creeds of Christendom have no warrant in the teachings of Jesus. (2). That the spiritual and eternal elements of primitive Christianity are affirmed by Unitarians.—The Unitarian Church, p. 7.

In joining the church (increasing emphasis is rightly laid upon the ceremony) the new member signs the bond of union, or covenant, and receives from the minister the right hand of fellowship. By the attendance of sympathizing witnesses and by appropriate remarks, this ceremony is made an impressive and helpful event in the life of the individual and the church. The young people of the parish are prepared for it by a confirmation class, in which (commonly during Lent) they are taught the principles and trained in the sentiments that constitute our religious movement.—Ibid., pp. 45, 46.

The Unitarian strives to represent and embody in personal character and civic institution, the New Christianity which is rising all about us, which is the simple but mighty gospel of Jesus, enriched by science and democracy, enforced by the philanthropic impulse, and operated through the educational method.—Ibid., p. 59.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION

In the first place there is not one single particle of proof on the face of the earth that is worth any honest and earnest man's attention, that any such thing has ever happened, that there is any such thing as apostolic succession, to start with. And in the second place there is no proof that, if there were, it would carry any validity or spiritual power or divine authority with it.—Messiah's Pulpit, vol. 5, No. 24, p. 4.

HEAVEN

We are in heaven so far as we live the heavenly life. Our spirituality is our salvation.—The Unitarian Church, p. 43.

HELL

An eternal hell is impossible in a universe that all belongs to God. To believe in it is so far to deny the Eternal Goodness. The Unitarian Church, p. 45.

LORD'S SUPPER

Unitarians do not consider church ordinances as sacraments with supernatural saving power. . . . In many Unitarian churches communion is observed, but always as a purely memorial service, free from sacrificial reference or symbolism. The Unitarian Church, p. 45.

BAPTISM

Adult baptism is practically unknown, but the christening of children felt by many to be both beautiful and helpful, emphasizing in an impressive manner parental joys and responsibility.—The Unitarian Church, p. 45.

PRAYER

It is clear, then, that prayer is conscious approach to God. It is an attitude of the soul in the presence of One with whom there is the certainty of communion, and it is an approach with a purpose.—Logic of Prayer, p. 4.

Prayer has lifted many a veil and lightened many a burden, healed many a wound, and comforted many a grief, which human sympathy could not touch.—Ibid., pp. 6, 7.

It is true that we cannot by our prayer turn the Allwise from his wisdom or the Allgood from his goodness, but we can and do lift ourselves into closer harmony with his wisdom and goodness, and feel all through our wills the thrill of his presence and the rapture of his love. . . . We do not pray to bring down God, or to turn him round to our present fancies and desires, but to find uplifting and turning round ourselves in the direction of his nature.—Ibid., p. 11.

REVELATION

In the conviction that God now abounds, and that his oracles are still open, we reverently watch the present heavens and earnestly listen to living voices for the revelation of a still more glorious gospel.—The Unitarian Church, p. 20.

MIRACLES

There is no need of God working a miracle, or in anywise interfering with the operation of his own laws; but we must enlarge our conception of what law includes and remember that there are great moral and spiritual methods by which God answers prayer; and by subordinating one law to another or combining his laws he can and does meet the necessities of mankind and control the current of human affairs.—Logic of Prayer, pp. 8, 9.

REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS

The object of punishment is not vindictive, but disciplinary, not retribution but education.—The Unitarian Church, p. 45.

We still insist that sorrow will last as long as sin lasts; and though the door of heaven shall forever remain open, no one can go in without love and purity.—Ibid., p. 44.

This doctrine of eternal punishment for the sins of this life desecrates all sanctities, and sucks us down into an atmosphere thick with inspirations of sacrilege. It is a hideous dream. It was born in heathenism.—Eternal Punishment, p. 14.

It would be advisable for all who profess to be Unitarians to study carefully the above extracts, and the works from which they are taken, and ascertain whether they are believers in the theory thus advocated, or whether they are associated with this class because there are some principles to which they are favorable, while to many of the principles they are not favorable.

To such there is one happy principle advocated by this class of religionists, and that is that "we watch the present heavens and earnestly listen to living voices for the revelation of a still more glorious gospel." There is no need for such a despair, or to become agnostics in the more complete sense, but to look to Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.

[The following article is one of a short series on this subject, by members who have had occasion to make practical observations along this line.—EDITORS.]

Our success in gospel work is not dependent alone on our knowledge of the divine law and obedience thereto. As Paul states it, we must work out our salvation. Jesus gave expression to the fact that his followers must of necessity do this in the world. This implies worldly environment, the association in business and everyday life with all classes of disbelievers in and opposers to the message we bear to the world.

Christ requires us to be witnesses for him. To testify of our love for him and the gospel in the assembly of his people is good, but it alone falls short of meeting the test of a true witness.

If we have taken hold of the gospel as we should, the regenerating force accompanying it will so operate in our lives that though we must be thrown continually with people who regard us as deluded, deceived and fanatical, yet they will behold in our attitude and deportment the reflection of the Christ ideal, that they will get in no other way.

It often occurs with the young in starting in some business enterprise, some professional work or public position, that they are made to feel that their religion is a handicap, and Satan adroitly tries to convince them that it will be best to leave their religion in the background. Under such conditions the Saint may soliloquize thus: "My daily companions care nothing for my religion, and it will be useless for me to let them know of it. I will get along better by keeping them ignorant of my church affiliation, and by honesty and integrity I will win and retain their good will and assistance." Satan always presents to us that which on the face of it appears plausible.

Be assured that this is one of his cunningly devised snares in which he hopes to entangle you, and destroy your usefulness as a witness for Christ. Now is the time for decisive action before he gets you in his power. Since your situation may not be exactly like any other one, no definite rule can be given to meet the Tempter successfully, except in this way: Jesus was given for our leader, and as he always retired in secret to commune with the Father before undertaking any important work, so may we, no matter how peculiar our environments appear, follow the example our leader has set, and thus receive divine guidance that will, if followed, thwart the purpose of Satan and bring victory to the child of Christ.

We must let our light shine. This applies just as much to the Saint in business or professional life as it does to the ministry. The work of the former is different from the latter, but the results are the same, as the success of the ministry depends in a great measure on the assistance of the membership who should always be as a sentinel on duty. A business or profession that would require us to darken our gospel light in order to succeed, can never bring success in the end. To take a firm stand for the right, may seem to lessen our chance of success at the start, but by so doing a firm foundation is laid, and the life work built on it later on is in no danger of being lost.

Wisdom is one qualification to be earnestly sought, and that with the spirit of humble submission to the divine will. A boastful, arrogant or aggressive attitude must be studiously avoided. Attend strictly to duty, and oftentimes it may be necessary to curb the natural inclination to resent unkind statements or ridicule directed against our faith, but patience along this line will do much more to break down opposition, than any outbreak of temper or repartee, which does not reflect the light of the gospel. The average business man, though professedly religious, has taken his place with those who consider the Christ ideal obsolete and impractical in modern business.

By reason of this, a great opportunity as well as responsibility comes to those who have received the light of the latter-day restoration. In order to prove to the indifferent and disbeliever that the true gospel is different from the creeds of men, it is absolutely necessary for those making that claim to prove it in the higher ideals that can and must find expression in dealing with our follower.

By adhering to this course, their interest and attention may later be obtained. If they are never won to gospel obedience, the Saint who has so lived and let his light shine before them, has assisted materially in building up the Master's cause. Friendship has been made that will often be far-reaching in its effects for good and the prestige that may accrue to the church.

In any business, profession or occupation, the true Saint has no occasion to put the cause of Christ in the background, but should hold it forth as the one thing worthy of notice to the gospel, and always put self in second place, merely the instrument in God's hand. By so doing we can build wisely, attain the success that in the end will be of greatest value, and prove ourselves true witnesses for Christ in all that the term implies.

Medical authorities assert that one out of every one hundred people in the United States habitually use opiates of some kind. Upon this basis they urge more and better narcotic legislation in the various States.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

JOHN W. RUSHTON AT SAN BERNARDINO

Copies of the Morning and Evening Index, of San Bernardino, California, of July 8 and 9 have reached us. We note in both of them very favorable notices of Elder Rushton's sermons; first, the announcement of the services and second, the news items of the two addresses. Both are made a matter of news of especial interest. In the Sunday morning Index is a synopsis of one of the sermons, as follows:

"Give and it shall be given unto you."—Luke 6: 38. Jesus Christ is not only a teacher, but he is the revealer of life. Christianity is not only philosophy, but in its best and richest activity it is the life of God interpreted in human terms. Christ himself is the humanized expression of God. "How great the mystery of godliness," exclaimed Paul.

In Christ and Christianity, to be sure there are the "secret things," and the ineffable "mysteries," apparently defying all attempts to visualize and make concrete in our terminologies and vocabularies. But it is equally true that in spite of the amazing mystery and the bewildering secret, a vast province of accessible simplicity is within the grasp of any and all whose only qualification may be the innocence and trustfulness of "a little child."

In all sorts of unexpected ways our Lord reveals the point of contact between man, lost and weak as he may be, and his God whose holiness and glory no man has or can approach. The sublimities may awe and even threaten us, but the simplicities are inviting and benign.

The text, "Give and it shall be given unto you" (Luke 6: 38), taken from the very heart of the Master's Sermon on the Mount, is one of the transfigurations of the commonplace in which we may see and understand the foundational principle of the Christian truth. It is Luke's phrasing of what we call the "Golden Rule."

Whether we are concerned about the saving of the soul or securing the favor of God here and now, or in heaven by and by, or in the realization of the kingdom of God as the great and splendid task to which the Christian stands committed—this injunction of Christ makes it clear that the future of myself, my fellows and God rests upon my initiative. These are all within my reach, at my hand. God and the future wait for me and not I for them.

Give! not get!

And it, whatever I give, that, shall be given unto me. If you give suspicion, can you expect confidence? Give sarcasm, can you expect good will? Give hate and get back love?

Can God answer my prayer in terms of love, sympathy and generous forgiveness if I am "willing" my activities with mercenary, callous and self-centered intent? Nay, the very prayer which our Lord gave as the example insists, "Forgive me my debts as I forgive my debtors," clearly shows my claim upon God's ability to bless is measured by my willingness to do to, and for, others what I would have God do for me. The divine influence of grace is limited by the outflow of that which is mine to others.

So also in realizing the ideal of Christ—the kingdom of God; this is the result of socializing the inward grace, power and love which must be the Christian's own possession. Society governs itself according to those principles which are crystalized into custom and law, meeting the approval of the greatest number. "Sociology as a whole rests primarily upon psychology," says Professor Lester Ward. Society has as its foundation—mind; hence, whatever the individual makes the dominant factor of his real and inward life, consciousness will inevitably work outwardly and react in others.

To make the rule of God universal will realize the kingdom. Each one must express his life and its concomitant activities in terms of the divine will and inevitably the reaction will follow. Persistent and constant "willing" of good will develop an appreciation of, and consequent desire for, that same goodness in those to whom that goodness is revealed.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Baby Week in Lamoni

The national baby week was observed in Lamoni in June instead of the appointed time in May, because that week was filled with other meetings. Under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, with the assistance of a committee of citizens, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 14-16, were devoted to the interests of child welfare, the health of the babies, as underlying all other development, being made the prime object. The high school building was the scene of these activities and here a program highly interesting and instructive was carried out.

Lectures were given in the auditorium on two afternoons and evenings and baby health conferences were held in the forenoons, when fifty babies were examined and scored, the score cards being presented to the mothers at the close of the meetings. Doctor O. H. Peterson of Lamoni conducted these health conferences with the assistance of Doctors Horner and Greer and attending nurses.

Doctor F. E. Sampson of Creston gave a lecture with slides on "Young live stock and its conservation," in which he made it apparent that more intelligent care is given the live stock of the barnyard than to the precious live stock of the home.

Two lectures by Doctor W. A. McKeever, of the University of Kansas, and the conferences with him which followed were most helpful and inspiring. Doctor McKeever is in charge of the child welfare work throughout his State and is so well known as writer, lecturer and practical worker in the child training field that it is needless to say we felt highly favored in receiving his counsel. Doctor McKeever commended the plan followed by our committee in the scoring of babies, in that no prize was offered. In this way, he said, there were no hurt feelings, and indeed it should not be a matter of rivalry, but of help to all, even to the weakest. He approved also of the method of conducting our mothers' meetings, concerning which he had inquired. He thought it better for us to confer together over our own problems, our own members taking part in the programs rather than that we should bring others in to address us frequently.

Large and impressive posters lined the lower hall of the high school building and from these alone many a lesson in health preservation could be learned. They were secured, some from the Child Welfare Bureau at Washington and some from Des Moines.

Booths were fitted up in the kindergarten room where talks were given in regard to proper care and feeding of the baby, and demonstrations were made. Samples of foods, classified for the different ages were on display and a pleasing array of comfortable clothing, loaned by the merchants of the town, was to be seen. Many helpful ideas were gleaned by observing mothers. Reading matter covering a wide range of subjects pertaining to baby welfare was furnished free to all.

One of the most striking object lessons was a booth, divided to represent two kitchens. In each was a table and an oil stove with two burners, a kettle over one burner and an oven over the other. Over one room a card bore the inscription "Mrs. Don't Care," while the other read "Mrs. Do Care."

In one the oven door stood open and a dish of moldy food could be seen within. The kettle was black with smoke and flour had been spilled on the stove and on the floor. A pair of old shoes stood carelessly near the table. On a line across the room soiled garments were hung, in company with doubtful looking dishcloth and tea towels. On the grimy table was another dish of moldy food and a bottle of sour milk.

With what relief one turned to the other kitchen—with no better furniture, but it was tidy and clean. The stove and its oven and kettle were shining. The floor was clean and the table spotless. On the table, with a doily under it stood a small blooming plant. And where was the baby's milk? In a small, homemade ice box. This was so simple that anyone could make it and I am sure you would all like to get the idea. One box is set inside of another which is large enough to allow two or three inches on all sides of the smaller box. First fill the extra space in the bottom with sawdust. Set in the smaller box and fill in around the sides with the sawdust. Cover the smaller box, then place the cover on the outside box. A double cover with sawdust between would be better, or one could lay newspapers over the inside cover. If one could not get the sawdust, newspapers might be substituted for all the filling. In one end of the box set a square pan for the ice. Of course this must be lifted out to drain off the water as the ice melts. Three cents worth of ice lasted during the three days of the baby program.

We are especially grateful to the doctors and nurses who so kindly donated their services for the work of the week and by whom the success of the undertaking was assured. Miss Gela Cook in nurse's uniform presided at the food booth and assisted throughout, coming from Independence for this purpose. Her demonstration under the announcement "Watch me wash and dress the baby" was a very taking feature of the program. With her were associated Miss Ethel Kelley, Miss Estella Roberts and Mrs. Amy Hall.

A baby parade on Saturday afternoon preceded the closing session which was devoted to story-telling. Misses Ethel Banta and Zilpha Monroe entertained the large audience of children with their mothers and friends with stories suited first to little children and then to older ones.

Doctor McKeever says it is a good thing to line up your children in a parade, look them over, see what you have, be proud of them and more ready than ever to work for their highest good. In harmony with this sentiment we had our baby parade. Mothers and babies rode in autos with colors flying—blue and white for baby week, mingled with the national colors. Other cars were similarly decorated, one of them, in which the nurses rode, bearing also the Red Cross decoration. The Lamoni band headed the parade and next came the boy scouts. Following the babies was a large auto truck packed with small children standing—a happy and inspiring sight.

Doctor McKeever's advice is good. Get all your children in a parade. Stir the community spirit of appreciation of its chief asset and then go to work, each and all, for the good of your own children and everybody else's. No man liveth unto himself and we cannot have the best for a few children until we have the best for all.

Reunion Suggestions

1. If possible have a tent for the women's use where all your meetings may be held and where all will feel welcome to rest and investigate the auxiliary work. The workers should relieve one another in having charge.

2. Hold two general meetings in the reunion meeting place, one at the beginning, to start the interest and one near the close of the reunion to be sure that all carry away an enthusiastic interest of our work.

3. Organize your Oriole girls at once that they may be ready to care for the small children while the mothers and fathers hold their morning meetings; to assist in caring for strangers, to do their share in keeping the camp in order, etc. Give them some definite part to do and see how wonderfully they respond and justify your confidence.

4. Organize your boys; give them a camp mother and camp father who will see that their hands, hearts, and minds are kept busy in a happy helpful way; fire builders, water carriers, messenger boys, ushers, etc.

5. Provide an early morning prayer meeting (with fasting) for divine help during your reunion and do not fail to interest the young women in this.

6. While the priesthood hold their meetings the mothers can hold meetings for discussion of the different phases of home and church work, children's imagination (what some call lying), the life story, the necessity of teaching our small boys the pure and sacred use of their bodies, adolescence, at what age should a child decide its own questions of conduct, how to connect the young girl's interests with those of her mother, how understand the boy from fifteen to twenty-two years, how our children can be taught to tithe their money, their time, and their ability, and many other questions that will readily come to mind. This can be the story hour for the small children out under some shady tree under the care of the Orioles.

Hold a meeting every day. There are so many questions for discussion you will not then have time to accomplish all the sisters will desire. I have papers from the different departments of the Woman's Auxiliary work that I will be glad to send to you if you will but write me.

MRS. WILLIAM MADISON,
In Charge of Reunion Work for the Woman's Auxiliary.

Canadian Interest in "Our Boys"

I am glad that the church authorities started something definite in the boy movement. My earnest prayer is that wisdom and understanding may be given the committee, with lots of "stick-to-it-iveness," as well, until the desired end shall have been accomplished. I have looked up some of the by-laws and rules governing some of the associations in this town, including the "Boy Scouts of Canada," and the "Life Saving Scouts" of the Salvation Army. I think the latter has a very good set of rules. They have, of course, the military aspect, which appears in everything connected with their work, but I think the military plan is a good foundation upon which to build an organization for boys. Of course we must avoid too much militarism, so as not to create a desire for war or bloodshed, but we should have enough for discipline.

I feel incompetent to outline what we need in dealing with boys; they have such varied dispositions, likes, dislikes, temperaments, and environments, but I am keenly interested, and if anything is decided upon before October 1, I should like to have it to give to our district convention of that date. Wishing you great success and enlightenment in your work.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Christmas Offering--Roll of Honor

Dear Coworkers: "Rally day" and "nest egg" Sunday have passed, and the results that were obtained by those schools reporting are most interesting and encouraging indeed. We are very thankful for your cooperation, for the splendid manner in which you have conducted your campaign, that we have not words to express our feelings. We feel that God has indeed worked with those who have shown a willingness and a desire to help in this splendid cause. We take this means of expressing our gratitude and appreciation for your cooperation and we most sincerely pray that God in his infinite wisdom will continue to guide and direct us in this work, for we know if he is with us that we will succeed far more than we can possibly expect without his directing hand.

Now that you have a "nest egg" we hope that you will continue to place more eggs in the nest and that you will be able to more than double it before the close of the year. Let us not discontinue our efforts for a single moment, but keep constantly at work in our efforts to clear the church of debt. There is much to do, so let us "be up and doing."

Watch these columns for notices and suggestions and please follow the following suggestion in prayerful spirit: Will each of the schools who are being successful in your efforts please write to all the other locals in your district, telling them of your offering endeavors and ask the cooperation of the other schools in this movement? Please do this, for we feel it will do a very great amount of good. Do not stop with your own effort but try to entuse other schools.

Sincerely yours for a greater offering.

A. W. SMITH.

Saint LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

"Our offering on July 1 reached $74.14, a little over three times the amount for 1916. All are trying for the $2 each, if we reach it, our offering will more than double the amount we now have. We made a calendar like the face of a clock, with one hand pointing to the 1916 offering and the other to the one for this year.—J. A. McGinnis, superintendent, Che-tek, Wisconsin."

Scammon, Kansas, has over four times the amount of last year—$53.67. The school has two lots planted to navy beans, the proceeds to go to the school offering. All help. Some of the children are picking and destroying potato bugs. Some of the young ladies are selling part of their crochet work, while others are selling sour milk. It is expected $100 will be raised.

At Loxley, Alabama, they have an enrollment of 27, 12 of these in the home department. Last year they gave 60 cents but have now raised $2.47. They hope to add to this.

Lamar, Colorado, is the address of the superintendent of the Wiley school. They had on July 1 $7.53 more than last year—a total of $62.53. They are working hard.

From Honeywood, Ontario, we have a report of their selling ice cream on Saturday evenings, which has increased their offering more than they had dared hope.

The school at Philadelphia First Branch have exceeded last year's offering by a comfortable margin and very energetically set their goal at $500. They now have $70.

Fort Scott, Kansas, increased from $15 last year to $30 now. Two dollars each, more if possible, they say. Some individual offerings have not been turned in.

At the Convention

SUPERINTENDENT OF CHILD WELFARE DEPARTMENT

Throughout the year I have had about twenty inquiries from all over the United States as to child welfare work; have answered them all, giving all the help and instruction possible.

Have written in all about one hundred letters about the work.

Have written articles for publication on the following themes:

1. The church and the state together for the home.
2. The power of the mother in the home.
3. Medical inspection in the school.
4. Preparing the school lunch.
5. My message as child welfare superintendent.
6. Building the home library.
7. The art of making home attractive.
8. The value of the story to the child.
9. Parent-teacher associations.

Contributed articles on child welfare outline, which was sent to each reunion to be read at our Woman's Auxiliary program.

Have prepared a letter on same subject to be sent out to all locals and districts of the Woman's Auxiliary throughout the world.

I have introduced the work in Greater Kansas City of twelve branches, Holden, Missouri, and Independence, Missouri. Have met with the general executive committee eleven or twelve times. Have worked on committee for arrangement of General Conference program.

By invitation of our general president, Sister F. M. Smith, have given two talks on the following subjects, "Child welfare work," and "Woman's building," at the monthly meetings presided over by the general officers of auxiliary at Independence, Missouri. Also filled appointment at Holden conference, talking child welfare work, and special work to Oriole girls. Have organized two child welfare circles, and had two others reported to me as organized.

Reports show interest awakening along lines of home and of child welfare work. Besides the work as child welfare superintendent, have acted as president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the new Kansas City Stake, in which a great deal of work has been done, and a splendid interest roused.

In closing I wish to recommend to the Convention that the child welfare department be united with the home department and so release me from office, as I am finding it difficult to carry on so many lines of work and do them well.

Praying that the Spirit of peace and unity may be with you in your convention, I am your coworker,

LULA M. SANDY.

Our wheat harvest is far below normal. If each person weekly saves one pound of wheat flour that means 150,000-000 more bushels of wheat for the allies to mix in their bread. This will help them to save democracy.

Inman, Nebraska; 1916—$6.25. This year, to rally day—$22.95.

Thurman, Iowa, gave $8.12 last year. Now they have $70.22.

Perry, Iowa, has more than doubled their offering of last year. In fact they intend to send in four times as much.

Bemidji, Minnesota, has six times as much as last year and intend to make it $100. They have an enrollment of 34.

Pleasant Hope school at Maitland, Missouri: 1916—$13 collected to date—$54.18.

Rich Hill, Missouri: 1916—$11.35. They have turned into the Bishop's hand already $48.65.

Long Beach, California, has sent in more than double that of last year.

Stockton, California, report $14.94, compared to $14.54 of last year.

Mondamin, Iowa, reports more than four times last year's offering. They ask if it is better to send it in now or wait. We would say that the bishopric will be glad to receive it and issue a receipt; they can make good use of it. Be careful to state each time the school it is from. Send in only considerable amounts to save bookkeeping. Many are banking the funds, getting interest. Put all together and you can usually get at least three per cent.

Bay Minette, Alabama, has almost doubled last year's offering.

Brockton, Massachusetts, has $45.50 now and sent in $36 last year. With an enrollment of 65 including the home department, they are trying to raise $130.

Valley, Idaho, school: 1916—$8; now—$50.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, have now $30.50; last year it was $17.70.

Pontiac, Michigan, says: "This is our first attempt to gather Christmas offering; our school is very young and small," but they send $26 to the Presiding Bishopric.

Vinal Haven, Maine: 1916—$5, now have $15.

Denver, Colorado: 1916—$35.70, now have $72.50.

Winnipeg, Manitoba: 1916—$26.30, now have $72.02.

Seattle, Washington: 1916—$40, now have $90.

The Zion Star Sunday school tells us we have quite an error concerning the amount their school raised. We don't know how it happened, but we printed it as $34 when it should have read $134. The exact amount now is $134.57, compared with $105 last year. Glad to hear it.

Carson, Iowa, and a number of others, say that they are working hard on the offering and have considerably raised, but since many are working on farms and gardens, it will mean that the most of the offering will be turned in next fall. Carson folks say they have $1.64 per capita now, which is excellent.

Tulsa, Oklahoma

Elder Joseph Arber began a series of meetings at the Hickory Coal Mines, three and one half miles from here, two weeks ago, with splendid interest, resulting in four baptisms, and others near. One other would have been baptized if sickness had not interfered.

The city papers gave our brother very favorable notice of the services. Sunday he was with the Saints of Tulsa, and preached twice for us. At the morning service Brethren James, Arber and Etheridge sang a lovely trio.

Sister Belle James and daughter Pauline are in Chicago to remain for the summer. Sister Pauline will spend the next two months studying with Oscar Saenger, the celebrated voice tutor of New York. Their willing and efficient services are greatly missed.

Brethren O. L. James, A. L. Rudd and Sister Fry have been appointed a committee to raise money to enlarge the church.

The city of Tulsa held their fourth of July celebration at Owen's Park, but the Saints met at Central Park and spent the day together. This park is an ideal place because of the shade and the amusements for the children. We were fortunate in having Brother Joseph Arber with us, and his presence was greatly appreciated by the Saints. In the afternoon he gave a splendid talk.

Company C, First Oklahoma, came from Fort Sill to spend the Fourth. Among them was Sergeant W. E. Erter, who before going into his country's service was an active member of our Sunday school. All were much pleased to see him.

A Surrender to God

Noting the request that the Saints give their experiences in becoming associated with the church, I felt inclined to write of mine, and feel it so strongly I believe it a duty.

I went to Boone, Iowa, last August, more from a spirit of curiosity to know what the doctrine of the church really is, and what was the interest for so many of its members, for I had seen enough of its effect to know there seemed to be some great power which held and guided its followers. I felt the sincerity and earnestness of every meeting influencing me, and at last a doctrinal sermon by J. A. Gillen took away all doubt of anything but that which represented the gospel in its fullness and power. Still I could not yield. I thought of what my family and friends would say and feel at such a step as my uniting with this work, but the Spirit gave me no rest.

At two o'clock one night I wandered away from the tent into the woods and prayed for God to show me what I should do—still the way was not clear—something seemed to force me back.

The next night I lay in my tent alone. I had been awake hours in tears and anguish. The reunion had closed that night; tents were to be taken down and removed on the morrow. Could it be I should leave and not acknowledge my faith in the work? Suddenly it seemed a cross came before my eyes on which hung our crucified Savior, and the words came to me: "Christ is not dead but risen." I felt it was meant for me. "But," I argued, "you are already a member of a church, and think what will be said if you take this step, even though it seems so much more potent than your past experience." But immediately came words: "Blessed art thou when men shall revile you and curse you," etc.

With that I cried out: "Oh, God, I surrender. Give me thy blessing," and it came with such a flood it seemed the whole tent glowed with it, and I could hardly wait for the morning, when I was baptized. My prayer is that I may never "lose the vision."

CHARLOTTE DRYDEN.

AMES, IOWA.

COLONY, KANSAS, July 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: It is very warm and dry in Kansas. No rain for three weeks.

I am writing you concerning some church literature. I was greatly surprised when one of my neighbors, a Catholic lady, called me and asked for some of our literature, as they wished every denomination to be represented in their public library in Colony. I had previously handed her some Ensigns to read. There were some Utah elders passing through here and stayed overnight with them. They had their Book of Mormon with them and said some things about our book, which I thought they misrepresented; so gave her the Ensigns to read. I was sure they could explain it better than I.

There are from two to five churches in every little town of from one hundred and twenty-five to five hundred and thirty inhabitants. They are still greatly in need of hearing the word of God preached. One lady told me she had never heard of the Latter Day Saints. I often think how much good might be done if some of our elders could come and preach for these poor people here. I had only a few Ensigns and Ayllum Leaves to present to the library.

If there is other literature that would be better for them to read I would be glad to know about it. I am looking forward to the time when there may be a branch established here, as these people are greatly in need of hearing the gospel in all its fullness. Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. ROSE A. WILEY.

THAMESVILLE, ONTARIO, July 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I love to read the HERALD and am sending for some books, I thought I would write a few lines to let the Saints know I am still in the gospel and trying to do my duty. We find that when we do our duty the Lord is sure to bless us. We also note that almost every time the Lord speaks to his people nowadays he admonishes the young to perform the work that is before us. He tells us to study, and at many times speaks to different ones, telling them of the work that is before them. Sometimes it makes us feel as if we were too weak to do the work the Lord expects us to perform.

I wish I could say something that would bring God's Holy Spirit to the ones that may read this. I love to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of this work; it brings much strength to me. Many times in the past the Evil One has tried to take away my life but the kind Father in heaven has spared it to me and I desire to do all that he would have me to.

It will surely be a joy when Christ comes and restores peace to the earth. What a grand place will it be when the angels and the prophets and all the martyrs for Christ are there and we need think of sin no more. I hope we each will be privileged to reach that happy place. Pray for me.

Yours in Christ,

JOHN A. TAYLOR.

SAVE THE WHEAT.—One wheatless meal a day. Use corn, oatmeal, rye or barley bread, and nonwheat breakfast foods. Order bread 24 hours in advance so your baker will not bake beyond his needs. Cut the loaf on the table and only as required. Use stale bread for cooking, toast, etc. Eat less cake and pastry.

BEMIDJI, MINNESOTA, July 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: As we seldom see anything in your valuable pages from Minnesota, thought a line regarding our reunion just closed would not be amiss. The reunion convened at Frazee, Friday June 15, with the largest attendance right from the start we have ever had in this district.

Friday was convention day and excellent work was done. Saturday was district conference, all enjoying the good spirit which prevailed. Those who did the preaching were J. A. Gillen, W. M. Aylor, W. E. Shakespeare, Birch Whiting, Horace Darby and J. E. Wildermuth. The preaching was of the highest order we have ever heard here. Never did apostles stand forth with greater liberty in presenting the gospel than did Brethren Gillen and Aylor.

Their preaching was different in its character. Brother Aylor preached the doctrinal sermons, establishing his points, clinching them, and then hammering down the clinches until it carried conviction to the souls of those who heard him. And we would think surely there can be nothing more said on that point; when Brother Gillen would come back at us from a scientific standpoint, (not the science falsely so called) but the genuine, coupled with the Spirit of God, drawing out the beauty and grandeur of the gospel; until as some expressed it, they seemed to be lifted right out of their seats.

The outside attendance was very good and kept increasing until the last night, June 24, there was two hundred outsiders present. Six were baptized and many more were convinced of the truthfulness of this great latter-day work. We looked for them to follow soon. The Saints were built up and strengthened and the effect of the prayer services will be felt throughout the year.

The auxiliary work was from three p. m. to five each day, in charge of Sister Graham from North Dakota, and was pronounced the best ever held here. While all rejoiced and felt they were well repaid for the time spent I feel that we can have a better reunion next year if all will put their shoulder to the wheel. It will be held in the same place and I find some even now are making plans to be there; will you?

D. A. WHITING.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, July 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: Three years ago last March when I said good-by to the Saints here at the railroad station prior to leaving for General Conference and the East, I little dreamed of returning to California, much less of presiding over the Stockton Branch again. But again the unexpected got in it, so work and business is being done at the old stand.

It seemed good to meet the former standbys and their hearty welcome is appreciated. Some, however, have moved to lands far distant and some have crossed the great divide. Others, it is sad to say, have lost out a measure in church work, all of whom we miss.

We need, oh so much, two individuals to come in our midst and live and labor. A young woman, married or single, of refined mind, quiet spirit, full of earnest devotion and living personality, adapted and qualified to organize an "Oriole" society, and maintain the leadership of eight or ten girls with a tendency churchward rather than from the church.

I think I speak advisedly upon this point, for it is possible to develop a disregard of the real and primary object and intent of the church in providing the society. I say it is possible to make the society of the girls larger and more important than the church itself in its appointments and service; to educate them into a sufficiency of fraternalism, to the detriment of church requirement, which works death rather than life.

The second need and none the less important is that of a young man, similiarly qualified for a similiar work among about the same number of young men. These to work not in opposition to each other, but with a coordination, especially adapted to the general social and spiritual uplift of all the young people.

Should there be either or both of such Saints, somewhere, looking for an opportunity for such service, I can tell them there is a splendid opening for it right here in this busy and wide-awake city of Stockton. I would be glad to hear from such. Surely here is a chance for a grand work. I say grand work, for it is just as great a work to make conversions and save people who are in the church as it is to save those who are out of it. It is just as important to keep people from being gathered out of the net by and by as it is to get them into it in the first place.

This is not the season for storms in California, either rain, hail, or snow. But California is becoming notorious for doing unusual things along that line, right here in this city a few days ago there was quite a heavy local shower. It did not cover much ground, in fact not over the size of one house. The day was hot, there was no thunder nor lightning, not even a cloud to be seen, but the drops were large and heavy, some of them measuring eight inches in diameter. This sounds like a little hyperbolic flexibility but the writer ought to know, for he carried them all home in his grip sack and had to make more than one trip.

So we are thanking the Lord and some of his people for sunshine and showers. They are both to be appreciated in an Eveless paradise, i. e., bachelor parlors.

H. J. DAVISON.

PAONIA, COLORADO, July 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been over a year since I have written anything for your pages. I indeed enjoy reading the HERALD, especially the letters of other isolated Saints.

We have had until lately, only twelve that have attended Sunday school, but now we have an increase of seven more, of which three are Latter Day Saints, and the husband an elder. Brother and Sister DuBois and children with us are trying to work together that there might be more numbered with us. How thankful we are that Brother DuBois has been sent to us to be our shepherd and leader.

As superintendent of the Sunday school I have decided to do all I can for the building up of the cause in this place and redemption of Zion. We have more than doubled our last year's Christmas offering.

We had the pleasure of meeting our missionary again, Brother Hidgon, and listening to some of those interesting sermons he has to deliver wherever he goes. As my husband is not a member of the Latter Day Saint Church I feel my weakness and get discouraged sometimes when things are said to keep me from doing those things I know are right.

Dear Saints, pray for me that I may be given strength to endure to the end and to bring my children up in the way they should go, and some day rejoice to see my husband in the true gospel which he fights so much against, is my prayer.

Your sister in the true faith,

MRS. STELLA SCHONEMAN.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, July 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: It might not be amiss to send a few words to our most valuable paper, the HERALD, from Salt Lake City. I cannot call to mind ever seeing a line from our branch here. Even if we are not in the habit of making noise, we are still alive, and will say, not entirely forgotten by our heavenly Father. This was proven to us at our last sacrament service when our missionary, Brother Holloway, spoke words of comfort to us by the Spirit, and it was indeed a time of rejoicing to those who were there. We were told to prepare for a shaking up, after which the Lord would bless us greatly and help us in our peculiar condition here, for surely it requires all the patience and unity we can produce to even hold the banner waving, as a good many of our people know who have been here.

The writer surely feels thankful for now having completed three years as a member in this church, and can truly say the Lord has blessed me with a portion of his Holy Spirit, so that I truly have enjoyed many of the peculiar blessings belonging to us as a people. And my only desire is to do my little share while in this life, and do it in the right way.

I would also like to state my appreciation of our church papers and I cannot see how the Saints can possibly get along without them. I believe if we could get every member started to read them they might feel the necessity of subscribing for them, at least some of them.

Your brother,

SOREN S. HOLM.

SYLVANIA, OHIO, July 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a line from this part of the Lord's vineyard would be of some interest to your many readers. We have not seen anything from this part through the church papers as yet, although the work started here about two years ago. My family formed a part of the class of twenty-two members at Blissfield some seven years ago. These members were brought into the church largely through the efforts of Elder S. W. L. Scott. In 1911 seventeen of these Saints moved away into various parts of the country. My family located in Mecosta County, Michigan, with Brother and Sister Tong, and my sister and her husband, Brother and Sister Fox. Remaining in Mecosta County for four years, and doing what we could for this glorious latter-day work, we seem to have been led by the hand of the Lord to this town in the edge of Ohio. The gospel had never been proclaimed here.

We opened our home for services and Brethren Ulrich, Liston, and Hetrick from Toledo preached for us. Soon after, my husband, now Elder George Yeager, and Brother Ulrich secured a hall in the central part of town. The attendance was not so large, but baptisms followed; and at present we number twenty-four. We were organized into the Sylvania Branch on September 20, 1915, with nineteen members by Elder U. W. Greene. Elder George Yeager was elected president; Enos Ritter, teacher; Albert Reed, deacon. Have been occupying a rented hall, but a kind-hearted nonmember donated us a fine lot on which to erect a church building, several tons of crushed stone, and twenty-five dollars in cash.

The auxiliary is working earnestly. We anticipate a church in which to worship at no distant day. We certainly desire this town to hear the restored gospel, but prejudice seems to have gone to seed here. Yet we keep battling away. The orthodox element through the service of the Methodist Episcopalians, secured a lady lecturer to air the question of "Mormonism" here a little while ago but by the privilege of asking questions the distinction between the Reorganized Church, and the Utah faction was partially drawn, yet it was plain to be seen that she was careless, and was not overly anxious to make the difference manifest.

We are endeavoring to move forward in line of duty with our Sunday school work and church services. Our aid society is earnestly engaged, having about eighty dollars in its treasury. Brother S. W. L. Scott has been preaching for us here of late, making the second series he has conducted for us. He organized a choir and it moves onward nicely. We are all young in the work, and appreciate the instruction in all these services, and desire to grow in the gospel cause of the latter days. My family are all members of the church, and my husband has baptized a number of his people at this place. We wish to see the work grow, and ask interest in the prayers of the Saints. Trusting for the redemption of Zion.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. ALMA YEAGER.

From Here and There

A sister who is losing her hearing desires the prayers of the Saints. Her trouble is of years' standing.

The Port Huron Times-Herald recently ran a cut of Elder Otto Fetting, with the announcement that he would preach at the Saints' church on prophecy and universal peace.

A few places are having to postpone their reunions, but we are glad there are many which can get tents and other equipment to hold the usual annual gathering. Lamoni had to change their date to August 8 to 19 in order to get tents, but by so doing will have plenty for all at an advance of about a dollar each. In the West we note the prices are about as last year. The reunion is an important feature of our social life.

From Sister Horton we learn that there are to be sunrise meetings on the Temple Lot at six o'clock a. m. each Sabbath. These promise to be delightfully spiritual gatherings. One was held on the morning of July 14, under the leadership of W. W. Smith and was full of life and interest. About one hundred and fifty were in attendance. The eight o'clock prayer meeting on Sunday mornings at the church are set apart for the young, yet because the older members take so much part there were only four little ones who took part in a recent meeting. However, the Spirit was present and the meeting characterized by many testimonies of God's healings. The Sunday school attendance was nine hundred and four. W. W. Smith assisted Elder Wheaton in the Temple Lot Services Sunday evening, the 15th, the latter speaking on repentance. The attendance at all the meetings was large.

Conference Minutes

WHEELING.—Special conference of the six counties composing the western end of the Pittsburgh District, including the Stubenville, Ohio; Wheeling, Wellsburg, and Glen Easton, West Virginia, branches was held at Wheeling District June 9 and 10 for the organization of the Wheeling District as per action of the last General Conference. G. T. Griffiths in charge, assisted by J. E. Bishop, president of the Pittsburgh District. All the branches were represented, also the majority of the branches in the other end of the district. The following officers were elected: president, O. J. Tary; vice presidents, O. L. Martin and William Richards; secretary, Jasper N. Dobbs; treasurer, L. A. Serig; member library board, Willard Allen; member gospel literature board, John D. Carlisle; the following were chosen for recommendation to the proper general officials for appointment: bishop's agent, William Richards; chorister, John F. Martin; historian, O. J. Tary. A complete set of rules for the government of the new district as adopted and a resolution passed, asking membership in the Kirtland reunion association. At the request of Brother Griffiths, the 10th was observed with fasting and prayer for the new district and the sick. John F. Martin was ordained to the office of elder. Adjourned to meet early next spring. Samuel A. Martin, secretary, 3526 Woods Street, Wheeling, West Virginia.

Convention Minutes

WHEELING.—Sunday school workers of the new Wheeling District assembled at Wheeling, West Virginia, on June 9, 7:30 p. m. in charge of J. A. Jaques, superintendent of the Pittsburgh District, for the purpose of organizing the district association. The following officers were elected: O. L. Martin, superintendent; James S. Stock, assistant superintendent; Hyrum Bishop, secretary-treasurer; Jasper N. Dobbs, member library board; Mae B. Martin, home department superintendent; Mrs. Lily Bishop, cradle roll superintendent; William A. Schoenian, member gospel literature board; and the appointment of James S. Stock as normal superintendent was approved. A plan for raising funds for the work of the district officers was adopted. Adjourned to meet at the call of the superintendency. Samuel A. Martin, acting secretary.

Conference Notices

Central Nebraska with Clearwater Branch, August 25 and 26. Send all reports to Mary Sodersten, Clearwater, Nebraska. W. M. Self, president.

At Clarksburg, West Virginia, September 8 and 9. R. C. Russell and J. F. Curtis are to be in attendance. All invited. Sunday school convention on the 7th.

Northeastern Kansas, at Fanning, Kansas, August 4 and 5. Members of the priesthood should remember requirements of the district to report at each conference. William Twombly, secretary; Samuel Twombly, president.

Convention Notices

Northern California Sunday school on August 23 at 10 a. m., at Irvington, at the reunion. Mrs. L. Day, secretary.

THE REASONS WHY You Should Go to Graceland

VII—EQUIPMENT

There was a time when Graceland's equipment was not adequate for her needs. That time has passed. Little by little new equipment has been added in the various departments until it is now ample for every requirement. Effective laboratory work may be carried on in chemistry, physics, biology, etc.

A library of over 9,000 volumes offers abundant opportunity for supplementary study and research. The fact that the laboratory equipment and the library have met the rigid requirements of the examining boards from the universities of Iowa and Missouri, should be sufficient evidence of their completeness.

THE PRESIDENT, GRACELAND COLLEGE, LAMONI, IOWA

The above is the seventh of a series of reasons why you should attend Graceland College. They include the questions of: Credit, Teacher Training, Junior College, Spiritual Environment, Low Expense, Special Departments, Equipment, Literary Work and Faculty.

Northern California Religio, Irvington, in connection with the reunion on August 22, at 10 a. m. Mrs. L. Day, secretary.

Central Nebraska, Clearwater, August 24. Phebe Out-house, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Southern Illinois, reunion has been called off on account of the scarcity of tents, continued drought and the high cost of living. W. E. Presnell, secretary.

Southwestern Oregon, at Dixons Grove, Myrtle Point, August 24 to September 2. Sunday school convention on the 28th and conference on the 29th. Would like to see every member in the district present. Expect J. W. Rushton, M. H. Cook, Roy F. Slye and others of the missionary force. R. Maude McCracken, district secretary.

Nauvoo, Illinois, at Montrose, Iowa, just opposite Nauvoo, August 24 to September 2. Tents, 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $3.50; 10 by 14, 6-foot wall, $5. Camp furniture at regular price. Meals served on grounds at dining hall. Auxiliary work and recreation will be provided. Order tents early, cash accompanying order. Charles J. Smith, 210 North Graves Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Quite a number of our correspondents ask us to insert their notices under this head twice or until the reunion is held. We do not have time to write to each one, but will say here that it is out of the question to do this for all and consequently cannot for a few. In a few instances we have allowed a notice to appear twice on the payment of a dollar for not over one hundred words and fifty cents for any fraction over that amount.

The Southern Kansas District reunion advertised for August 10 to 23, has been postponed one year on account of the drought and anxiety caused by the war draft. Elder and Sister J. H. Amend, sr., will visit the branches and missions in the district during the summer and fall, as circumstances permit, in the interests of the church and Sunday school and Religio home class work. Mrs. J. H. Amend, secretary.

Seattle and British Columbia, in Bellingham, Washington, August 3 to 11 on beautiful grounds with running stream suitable for baptism. Tents: 10 by 12 $2.50; 12 by 14, $3. Each tent furnished with new spring and mattress. Able exponents of the gospel are expected to be present. Auxiliary work will be represented. We have just traveled over the country adjacent and found an anxious desire with the Saints to attend. Those wishing tents please notify G. R. Brundage, 1252 Elk Street, Bellingham, at once. Conference and conventions as per notice. Sacrifice a little in temporal and receive abundantly in spiritual. J. M. Terry, chairman committee.

First reunion of Holden Stake, Holden, Missouri, August 10 to 20, is an assured success. Tents 8 by 10, $2.75; 10 by 12, $3.50; 12 by 14, $4.50. Cots 60 cents each. Please write the undersigned at Holden, Missouri as to your wants. Send remittance with order if possible. A limited number of cots and double coil bed springs will be rented for 10 cents a night. Bring your bedding, including bed ticks; straw for bedding free. The reunion will be held on the beautiful academy grounds (eight blocks from depots) purchased by the stake for a home for the aged. A number of the rooms in this large building will be rented during the meeting for 15 cents to 25 cents a night. Free transportation to and from camp grounds, including baggage. Free pasture for horses. Good water, meals at cost. Come. C. J. Hunt, Holden, Missouri.

New Cradle Roll Certificate

The Stepping Stones for July 17 contains a reproduction of the new cradle roll certificates, illustrated with some pictures of children of our church members. See if you recognize any of them. They cost five cents each and should be issued to each member of the cradle roll. Order of this office.

Married

CHASE-WALKER.—Two happy hearts were made to beat as one on July 14 when Doctor Charles S. Chase of Laurel, Montana, son of our well-known Brother A. M. Chase, and Miss Lillian M. Walker, daughter of George W. and Lillian Walker of Billings, Montana, were quietly united in the holy bonds of matrimony at the parsonage of the Saints' church in Bozeman, Montana. Elder W. J. Brewer officiating. The bride and groom were accompanied on their trip to Bozeman by Sister S. A. Burgess, sister of the groom. The happy couple will live at Laurel, Montana.

THRAUS-SPAULDING.—On July 8, 1917, John A. Stowell performed the ceremony which united in marriage Elmer H. Thraus and Miss Adaline Spaulding, both of Nashua, Montana. The bride is a daughter of Brother and Sister C. J. Spaulding, of Dunseith, North Dakota, and a niece of Brother Stowell. They autoed to Nashua, where they are employed and will make that their future home. Friends and relatives wish them a happy life's journey.

What Of Our Missionaries Who Fight Without Weapons?

We have a splendid force of missionaries, but they work under a tremendous handicap. They have little money or literature and the public press is practically closed to them. The only publicity they get is from neighbor to neighbor. Work as he will, a man's voice will reach only so far, and his strength is closely limited. It is like soldiers fighting without weapons,---heroic but disheartening. Every preacher's effort ought to be supplemented by Printer's Ink. This is the opportunity as well as the duty of the local saints. When a missionary is coming to town, write the Herald or Ensign and they will print you attractive posters. The cost will not be much, and if you will display them, you will get great results. Have some bills printed too, and distribute them all over your neighborhood. Just give us the facts and we will write them up so that they will pull. At the same time order a good supply of tracts and have them on hand when the meetings open. Let the preacher drive the wedge from the pulpit and then you clinch it with your tracts. You say this is the greatest work on earth.

Prove it!

WAR AS A TEST OF CHARACTER

(Synopsis of the commencement address of Graceland College, June 1, 1917, by S. A. Burgess.)

The horrors of war do not need emphasis and repetition. They are well known to all of us, in good part at least. War is barbarous. It is a reversion to savagery and has been so in every case in the history of the world; though it is a shock when we see German culture, which is admired and honored by all careful students, degenerated into kultur, which is a thing to be feared; if not despised.

But the plea is made that war is an advantage for the development of character. We all honor the soldiers; we honor the man who steps forth to do his bit, over the one who shirks and remains at home. We honor the courage demonstrated by the man who is willing to risk his life to defend his home, his family and his country, and we inherently despise cowardice.

WAR A COOPERATION

War means a unifying influence to a people. So much is this so that nations and governments have been known to provoke a foreign war in order to prevent an insurrection at home. Seward is reported to have so advised before the Civil War. It means a community of interest, which means a bringing to bear of all that the nation possesses and hopes for. Though anger is individualistic, war as national anger unites a people as one and makes for international cooperation.

War taxes are the only ones that are always willingly paid. It is so now; the history of the world shows that it has been so in all ages. A people will refuse to tax themselves four or five dollars apiece for a community center, yet accept without murmur an immediate tax of twenty dollars per individual for war purposes, and a secondary indebtedness or tax of fifty dollars, even though they realize that it is but the beginning and not the end.

The debt of the church would require an extra sacrifice or payment of two or three dollars per member, in addition to the three or four dollars already paid in for general church purposes. Yet it drags on year after year. We say we cannot pay this debt; it is too much. We consider it a burden, yet we will pay our share without hesitancy of twenty to seventy dollars per individual for war. This latter is as it should be, but why cannot this spirit of cooperation, of unity of purpose, of consecration and devotion be applied after the war and now, in other fields than the field of blood?

It is probable, if the question were put to vote to strike from our history all record of the Civil War, scarcely a single affirmative vote would be cast. We consider this part of our heritage to be handed down to our children. The wars of recent years have made for democracy. The war of 1870 meant the establishment of the present French Republic, although that was not considered during the actual fighting or terms of peace. This present war has meant already a recognition of women's rights; it has meant a recognition of the status of the laboring man; it has meant a spread of democracy in England and France; and it has meant the establishment of a democracy or republican form of government in Russia, and already are some rumors to be heard of a similar tendency in Germany.

War has been urged in the past as a means of developing and proving personal courage and moral fiber, the doing away with the soft virtues of civil life by testing man through hardship and sacrifice on the battle line. The necessity of a social cooperative movement is made very apparent in war. It develops the hard virtues, not necessarily heartlessness nor bloodthirstiness, but strength of moral fiber as opposed to flabbiness of character.

THE MORAL SANCTION

War also has meant religious revival. It is so in this case, for no man can fight to his utmost unless he feels that he is fighting for the right, to defend his home and country, for the principles of truth, and unless he feels, in a sense at least, that in his hand is placed the sword of the Lord God Jehovah, the God of battle, to uphold righteousness; he may go through the motion, but there is not that final push, that deep stamina that makes for victory unless or until he feels that he is a part of a great divine plan and is fighting for the sake of justice.

In ancient times it may have been different. Today the moral sanction is demanded. As William James points out, the very horrors of war make its fascination. So it is claimed that war is the strong life in extremis. The poetries and histories of the past are full of blood; war redeems life from degeneration, it is said.

Steinmetz asserts that war "is an ordeal instituted by God, to weigh the nations in its balance. . . . No victory is possible save as the resultant of a totality of virtues, . . . fidelity, cohesiveness, tenacity, heroism, conscience, education, inventiveness, economy, wealth, physical health and vigor." Every moral and intellectual point of superiority is cast in the balance and counts in the final result.

While we do not agree fully with his assertion, it nevertheless is true that we tend to admire the man who meets danger and meets his problems half-way, and treat with disgust the man who shrinks from and avoids the test of life, avoids the hard things and contents himself with satisfying physical desires. It is true that we have little use for flabby mentality and flabby morals.

This war has probably shown more of tenacious courage and heroism than any other war. Part of this is explained on the basis that men are studied for the work for which they are best fitted. Panics are caused because one man, or perhaps a horse, takes fright and runs; then another runs, and another, and another, until, without knowing why, a whole mob is in retreat. By discovering and eliminating the man who will run, panic possibilities are greatly reduced, if not prevented.

TYPES OF MAN

It is suggested that some of the basic lines of division are founded upon the scientific analysis of the four types of man: First the digestive, who show a predominance in the abdominal section of the body, and a predominance in the lower third of the face. This type are slow, sure, intense lovers of home. They are not strong on aggressive work, but they are mighty in defense, as they are most tenacious against attack.

The second class is the somatological or respiratory. They have a broad head in the region of the nose and ears. Their head is shaped like a hexagon, broader in the middle. They have great lung capacity and so are erethic. They make splendid airmen, cavalymen, and generally do well on outpost duty. They are not as easily led as the next class, but are courageous and independent, as they soon gain their second breath.

The third class is the athletic, with cubical shaped head. They are numerous, have large limb development, and make excellent private soldiers. They are the athletic type.

The fourth is the cerebral type, with the head somewhat of the type of an inverted pear, larger at the top. They are nervous and can work until they are all in. They will tire out everybody else, but when once they go under they go all to pieces. They need brain work, are splendid on long marches and for exigencies, and make good officers. This analysis has been carried even farther than is here indicated, to the end of adapting the man to the job.

EFFICIENCY

Another peculiar feature is that in times of peace the military organization is the most peaceful of our industries. A man may come from the busy turmoil of commercial life, but when he steps on the barracks grounds all is peaceful and quiet. The men in the barracks are not in danger of being thrown out of employment because their services are no longer needed, but they are trained for more efficient service. Many of us live in the same houses as were inhabited a hundred years ago, but a battleship or rifle of ten years ago is obsolete. Experts are working on them and making needed improvements, and when they are discovered they are carried out, regardless of what instruments must be carried to the scrap heap. Only a few of the largest concerns attempt to carry such scientific departments, and very few indeed will scrap old machines for new and more efficient, as readily as is done in this department.

These we must concede as advantages. But why should their use be confined to war and the military departments? Why should not this cooperative principle be continued into civil life and somewhere near a similar amount be expended for what will make better living conditions? The Civil War freed those who were in a certain slavery, but a like amount spent to free the children and women from excessive service in mill and mine would have brought even a larger amount of freedom and strength to the race.

SUBLIMATION

Now as a basic principle we discover that while some treat man as if he were a machine, most scientific discussion divides his nature into, first, physico-chemical, which includes metabolism of all kinds, of nerve and somatic cells. It includes nourishment and it may also include the passing on of the germ cell, since this is included in cell division. This plane includes all life, even plant life. Second, there are the motor functions or the motor plane, which includes the animal creation. Third the psychic functions which are peculiar to humanity.

Now it has been discovered that what is suppressed upon one plane is almost bound to appear upon some other. There are many instincts which arise and may be placed or function ordinarily on a low plane, but if they are repressed they become sublimated or forced upward to a higher plane.

Thus nutrition, one of the fundamental functions of life, as life is impossible without it, may be abused into drunkenness and overeating. It may thus appear as a purely physical element, mere vegetation or worse, in a moral sense. Should it therefore be entirely suppressed because in some instances it has led to crime? Or should it be rather controlled—utilized so far as is justifiable on its own plane, restrained and sublimated for the rest, since it may thus function on the psychic plane as hungering and thirsting after righteousness?

In fact, we may be justified in adding a fourth and spiritual plane and placing this highest function thereon, though many scientists do not discriminate and include all these higher manifestations under psychic.

Again, there is that other fundamental function of affection between man and woman. It has led to stealing, to murder, to disease and many evils. Therefore we find many men who have urged its complete suppression and who would present woman as an unmitigated evil, an instrument of the Devil. Is this justifiable, or should we not rather regulate, restrain and direct that function, recognizing that suppression on a lower plane, continence and self-control mean sublimation into religion, art, poetry, music and into the highest type of human affection—love and affection in its purest and most ideal form. Experience has shown that it may be so elevated.

On reflection, the just man then, as Aristotle explains, follows the natural rule of the golden mean and denounces polygamy in every form and under every name and title, whether within or without the marriage relationship, and recognizes the function as one God-given, when rightly utilized and sublimated.

So there is the question of money, the accumulation of property. This has led to violent crimes against society in general and individuals in particular. So shall we then, as some urge, accumulate no property but live and work to gain barely sufficient for daily need?

Should we take the vow of poverty and reduce ourselves to that basis? Or should not this function rather be utilized and sublimated, so that we accumulate wisely, and use rightly for the benefit of society as well as ourselves? It is the selfish abuse that should be condemned. Energy should be exercised for the accumulation of all possible property, and then this property rightly used. This raises the question of what is most worth while and what really profits a man.

ANGER SUBLIMATED

Likewise we discover that anger may be violent and an attribute of nervous disease or even insanity, causing the paranoiac to harbor secret grievances of oppression and then suddenly burst out and kill the most convenient person at the moment of outbreak. In a national sense it shows itself in the cruel forms of war. Yet anger is not necessarily bad. We speak of godly anger, and the wrath of the Most High. Jesus drove the money changers from the temple.

The Bible speaks of the armor of righteousness, the armor of light, and Timothy is advised to war a good warfare. The sins of the Nicolaitans and all iniquity are both hated. (Hebrews 1:9; Revelation 2:15.) But this cannot mean anger, hate or wrath in any ordinary human sense.

Anger is a high expression of the will to live. It is resistant to oppression, and sublimated, is directed against wrong and injustice. There would be no justice had there been no anger, if all things were patiently endured.

It has been a question for discussion, if there are any men not subject to anger. Some say there are. But if there are any such, so phlegmatic that nothing can stir them, we are assured that they can feel no second breath, and none of the higher powers of man can find in them expression.

Anger in its very term is erethic. It brings all of his force and power, and seemingly more power than a man has, to bear on the question before him. Sublimated, it calls out the highest and best there is in the man. We are told that when a weight of stone has fallen over a miner his companion has been known, in erethism, to lift the stone and permit him to escape, though afterwards it was found that it was all that two men could do to budge it.

Schopenhauer declares that "energy is sublimated anger." It is the moving power to action, causing us to move out and meet the evils which confront us. We have heard it stated in a semihumorous way that a man is like a fine steel tool, he is no good unless he has a temper and he is no good if he loses it.

In the olden times warriors would break out in a berserker rage and at sight of an enemy force would throw away their arms and rush forth and take their enemies in their bare hands and crush them. That is a low crass instance. We have no appeal to make for anger on such a plane, but we do believe that this anger against autocracy, this anger against wrong should be continued after this war to right existent evils at home.

Some would offer as a vicariate for war the fight against poverty. But the difficulty remains that while many must labor without vacation day after day and year after year, a few are not required to do anything, but take an unmanly ease. It has been suggested that if every man were drafted and required to labor in the fields, in the mills and in the mines, to perform his regular duty for humanity, the distaste would be removed and it could become a real vicariate and be as highly honored as the draft of warfare. Then man would go forth to fight against nature, against handicap, against the problems confronting him and his fellows.

POVERTY NOT A BLESSING

Some have urged that poverty is a blessing. Others are almost ready to froth at the mouth at the suggestion. Poverty is a curse, and much strong language may be used by some against it.

The first man compares the poor boy who, fighting for food, fighting against the evils of his surroundings, continues to fight until he fights his way to the top and becomes a second Abraham Lincoln. Against such a one is placed the millionaire's son—we will not call him a man—smoking, drinking, running a racing car around and doing other things that mean only the lowest kind of physical gratification. And so it is said that poverty has been a blessing and riches a curse. But it isn't the hole that he was in that is the blessing, though we sometimes truly have our afflictions referred to as blessings in disguise.

At the last General Conference President Frederick M. Smith cited a remark of Dean Wilcox of the State University of Iowa that our church had been persecuted so much that our young men had the fighting attitude. Fighting against oppression they fight their studies and so force their way to the top. When this incentive is removed, it was said, they will drop back into the common ranks, and do no better. President Smith urged that if this time ever came that we fight indifference and continue to fight to maintain the right.

At the same conference Brother Dwyer offered the suggestion that we had been persecuted and so were inclined to be backward, but that it was an evil, that we did not sufficiently push forward our claims, stand out frankly for the right. Humility is a splendid virtue, but we should stand forth for Christ and for his gospel and defend that which we believe.

This presents the two sides of the problem. When a difficulty confronts us, how should we meet it? One man goes out to meet his trials and problems, seeks for and enjoys the personal contact and clash. He loves to place his personality in opposition to that of others. If he has a problem to be solved, he leaps forward to meet it. Every difficulty is but an incentive. He lives upon that high erethic plane, which is an energetic form of anger in a way.

On the other hand there are men, who shrink from personal contact, who will cross the street to avoid the conflict of personality, who will retreat and feel a sense of shrinking from a great problem; who, in other words, suffer from fear of life and its environment and circumstance in a way that seems to be an evil. Yet fear is not an unmitigated evil, for fear represents the conservative side. Fear protects us from rashly running into danger. It has saved the race, and has led to the development of medicine, hygiene and sanitation. The fear of nature has led to the study of science. Fear is the basis of rightful caution, of conservation, and of scholarship.

Now poverty is not a good thing in itself. It is an evil. Where there is one Abraham Lincoln there are many men who meet that problem in fear and shrink back. Persecution is also an evil. But a greater evil is that namby-pambyism, that softness of moral fiber, which has sometimes been compared to a tub of butter in July. It will stand up against nothing, but run at the first chance. No evil is good, but the overcoming of evil in ourselves or in the social nature is good.

We need, then, the hard virtues, which will stand up to a problem and meet it halfway. We need the courage of continuity for our school problems, that we shall move forward and stick it out until successful, and not sink back and let things slide. Therefore the need for a large part of organized school work arises, to get us to our duty of preparation, as many will not study, many will not continue serious reading, unless in some way compelled to do so.

We need trained specialists for civil life as well as for church work. We need cooperation and strength of purpose. We need consecration of all our powers and knowledge to meet our civic problems.

Courage is needed for life, but it is demonstrated by the mother who goes down into the very valley and trench of death for the one she loves. Courage is exemplified by the nurse, and especially in the care of contagious diseases. Courage and self-sacrifice is shown by the young doctors who have permitted themselves to be inoculated with the germs of yellow fever or white plague in order that its progress may be studied. Many have died in the course of voluntary tests in order that others, men and women and little children, may live.

There are many problems yet to be solved in medicine and surgery. In sociology there are problems of women's rights, of justice and proper training for little children, that they shall not be compelled or permitted to become stunted in growth in mill, in factory, in mine or elsewhere.

FOR WHAT WILL YOU DIE?

Hegel suggested as the test of freedom or slavery, whether a man is willing to die for something or not. And the more things he has for which he would die the greater he is and the more free he is. With a little thought we can see that this is so. The more things there are that are greater to him than life itself, the more he has for which he will not only live, but will stand, work, endure, and, if necessary, die, the more fully does that man live. The worst of all deaths is the fear of death. "The coward dies a thousand deaths, the brave man dies but once."

How fundamental this is may be seen in one common event of life, though probably not one in a hundred realizes its significance. It has been made the subject of story and of jest, yet occurs frequently in ordinary life. A young man in love tells a girl that he would die for her. If she tells him, "Please don't die, I would sooner you would live for me," it is well. But if she says, "All right, go ahead and die," then it is all wrong.

However, do not lose sight of the fact that he has arisen to greater heights than ever before. Whether his sacrifice becomes real, whether he has been appreciated or not, he has found something that is worth more to him than life itself, whether he recognizes that in the thought presented or not. So at least, he is greater than ordinary, and is more truly a man.

A few weeks ago a request was made for men who were willing to die for their wives to stand up. One man afterwards suggested that he would like to qualify it by, How many men will get up in the cold winter mornings and light the fire, put on the boiler, get in the tubs, carry water and help with the washing on wash day? If it is a boy and other boys are hanging around, it certainly would take a decided degree of courage and would be of greater service than dying.

OUR SPIRITUAL WAR

Some have suggested that our missionaries should come in from the field and go to work on the farms. Some of them would be glad of an opportunity, but we should not permit it, for they are called for a greater, a higher warfare. Not only is the Old Testament full of physical warfare, but we find in many instances the New Testament uses the figurative language of conquest. As Saint Paul writes Timothy, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course." Again in the sixth chapter of Ephesians he gives us a splendid instance of our spiritual life as a warfare. The Doctrine and Covenants speaks of us as "the warriors of the Lord," and we are told to be cheerful in our warfare, that we may be joyous in our triumph. He should fight against sin and injustice. After the war we shall need a thousand men, if we have them, for the war-tormented people of Europe, to say nothing of home work, and they should be ready and trained.

War makes for religious revival. We should be prepared to meet this need and opportunity, abroad and at home. We shall need trained men, prepared for that work, and we need these men now on the battle line of God for righteousness against iniquity.

We have no eulogy to offer for warfare, nor for any other instinct on its lower or baser plane. War is all that Sherman has called it. It seems an unmitigated evil. But we would urge that these instincts, hurtful when below, on the earthly plane, may be, if we will, restrained on this lower plane, and thus come up into the sunlight of God and bring forth the rose and lily of virtue and of purity. Anger which is evil on the baser plane, may be sublimated against injustice and wrongdoing, especially wrong to others, against the evils that are in ourselves, ("greater is he who ruleth his own spirit than he that taketh a city") against that which threatens the life of society and of individuals, against autocracy everywhere, and stand strong on behalf of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and for the principles of righteousness, human liberty and democracy.

CHRISTIANITY IS AFFIRMATIVE

We would present to you no new Christianity, but would revivify the basic principles of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Some may reply that in the Sermon on the Mount he said, "Resist not evil, yet we find the very next clause to be "but overcome evil with good." This shows the surrogate for which we contend. This is also illustrated in Revelation 2: 11, 17, 26, 27; 3: 5, 12, 21. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

He himself, because he hated iniquity, was thought worthy to be called the Son of God. He himself, if we read carefully his life, did not exemplify a passive nonresistance, so much as he typifies super-resistance.

To use or not to use carnal weapons is alike to place us, as it were, on a materialistic basis. And as he typifies in himself the highest moral freedom to die for humanity, so he typifies in the fullest sense that high spiritual resistance against wrong. Our time now does not permit a full discussion of this theme. His superresistance might be illustrated in part by "International Conciliation," by Harold C. Goddard, which we cite in part:

"Does anyone need to be told, for instance, that if the United States really were the democracy, the refuge for the oppressed, the land of equal opportunity, which in popular cant it is supposed to be, and which in actual fact it feebly tries to be—does anyone need to be told that such a United States could stand in absolute safety among the nations of the world, utterly unarmed? Does anyone need to be told, either, that such a United States could be armed to the teeth quite without danger to herself or to her neighbors?"

Thus is conciliation placed deeper than a question of resistance or nonresistance. Peace is placed along with beauty and with happiness, so that, "It is written that he only shall attain beauty who loves life more than he loves art. It is written that he only shall obtain happiness who loves labor more than he loves pleasure. It is written that that nation only shall gain peace that loves humanity more than it loves the absence of strife and bloodshed."

So to the class of 1917 we would deliver this message. Strive for the sturdy virtues, strive to direct and sublimate your fundamental instincts. Poverty is not good, yet it is better, if we fight our way out, than is mere physical ease. Our very trials and hardships may prove stepping-stones to better things. A surrender means lessened being and power, a conquest means greater energy and accomplishment. The will to live is the great anæsthesia of death and failure. Do not sit back and drift, but move forward energetically to meet your problems. Cultivate a surrogate in erethic energy against wrong, against injustice, against indifference and strengthen that which makes for peace, for righteousness and for justice.

"Whence Camest Thou, Indian?"

Joseph Goode has handed us copy of the Tabor (Iowa) Beacon, for July 12, 1917, in which appears an article under the above title. The article calls attention to the offer of ten thousand Navaho Indians to enlist, and similar offers from other "reservations." Reference is made to the evidence that they came from Asia to this country long before the time of Christ, and to their wonderful cities, the chief stress is laid on the Book of Mormon story as a solution of the mystery of whence they came.

"Boston Transcript" on Jewish Congress

Much is being written concerning the Jews and the Holy Land throughout the press of late. Certainly their rights as citizens in Europe and in the Holy Land are being given consideration as never before. Yet the people of that land are suffering greatly, and will apparently until the British Army takes possession. The Boston Transcript of July 14 gives an interesting item concerning a Jewish congress to consider the Jewish needs and interest in the war and the subsequent peace. It also has much to say concerning mysticism, as meaning the inner life of man, and the need of a deeper spiritual sense among Christian workers.

The Conscientious Objector

"When the State compels men to military service, it raises the ancient religious question of freedom of conscience. Churches who have furnished martyrs for this principle are under particular obligation to see that the conscientious objector is allowed such noncombatant service as does not violate his conscience. We, therefore, request the Administrative Committee carefully to consider what practical steps can be taken to secure this end."—The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Report of Special Meeting, Washington, District of Columbia, May 7, 8, 9, 1917.

Comparative Cost of "Quarterlies"

The superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, G. R. Wells, includes some pertinent information in a recent circular letter sent out to district superintendents. From his letter we quote. We know that it is a source of much annoyance to find the prices on everything constantly rising, but since it cannot be prevented, we must accept as cheerfully as possible. The paragraphs mentioned are:

It may interest you to read comparisons in price between our Gospel Quarterlies and those of one or two other denominations. Taking one each of the five grades of the Baptist graded lessons, they cost (for the five) for one quarter, thirty-six cents; while our own come at thirty-nine cents—three cents dearer. But they do not make any concession to the yearly subscriber, and here is where we beat them. Their five grades for one year cost their people $1.44, while ours are furnished for $1.15. Most of our schools are finding it more economical to order by the year. Please call their attention to it.

The Presbyterians publish only beginner, primary, junior and intermediate grades, which cost their schools (one each) for a quarter, thirty-four and one half cents; for the year, $1.38. The same grades of our quarterlies sell by the quarter for twenty-nine cents; by the year, eighty-five cents; which is cheaper both ways, notwithstanding we are a small association. The larger the edition, the cheaper the cost of printing per piece. We have only one Quarterly (Senior) printed in fairly large edition; but the profits on that go to make up for the smaller editions of other grades. On some of them we do not make a fair profit.

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

The claims for the Roman Catholic Church by its representatives are somewhat peculiar to itself. It is claimed to be, 1. The successor of the church founded by Jesus Christ; 2. The only church which advocates the true Christian religion, and that all protestant churches are wrong, having had their origin too late in the history of the world, and through some one who apostatized from the truth as they represent it, and by so doing lost all authority to represent God, or else by some one who has been associated with one of these unauthorized churches, and becoming satisfied that they did not correctly represent the truth made a further protest and thus originated a church of their own; and 3. The church that to-day represents all truth, while all other churches represent a belief which consists mainly of remnants of the Catholic faith, and that the protests of the present time are made against that which has no real existence, but is founded principally upon "prejudice, or misunderstanding."

It is advocated by this church that the religion of Jesus Christ is an evolution, it growing out of the previous religions advocated in the world previous to his day by patriarchs and prophets, none of whom advocated a perfect religion, but it was left for Jesus Christ to introduce for the first time into the world that form of religion which "satisfies the demands of the intellect, as well as the needs of the soul."

Reverend George M. Searle, a Paulist, in his work entitled, "Plain Facts for Fair Minds, from which I shall quote quite extensively in this article, admits that "there had to be some secrecy to our meetings then [in the beginning]; but now there is very little; everyone is welcome to every religious meeting of the Catholics, except to that between priest and penitent in the confessional." He advocated that it is a delusion to consider that "religion is a matter of emotion or excitement" only, neither is it "simply a set of mathematical formulas," but that "the emotion of true religion must rest on a solid basis of truth, fact and reason."

THE TRUE FAITH UNCORRUPTED

In a work entitled, The Grounds of the Catholic Doctrine Contained in the Profession of Faith, published by Pope Pius IV, p. u., this claim is made in behalf of the Roman Catholic Church:

1. That Jesus Christ has always a true church upon earth;
2. That this church is always one, by the union of all her members in one faith and communion;
3. That she is always pure and holy in her doctrine and communion, and consequently always free from pernicious error;

Upon the question of what the church is, Jesuit Gretser says, "When we speak of the church, we mean the pope;" and from the Civiltà, in an article entitled, "The pope, the father of the faithful," we extract the following:

It is not enough for the people only to know that the pope is the head of the church and the bishops; they must also understand that their own faith and religious life flow from him; that in him is the bond which unites Catholics to one another, and the power which strengthens and the light which guides them; that he is the dispenser of spiritual graces, the giver of the benefits of religion, the upholder of justice and the protector of the oppressed.—The Pope and His Council, pp. 31, 32.

From other Catholic authorities we quote that which seems to represent somewhat of an opposite view, and we present this also that the reader will have possession of these differing views, as they seem to be. Reverend George M. Searle says of the church:

Of course this great body, this parent stock of Christianity, may have corrupted or changed the faith which Christ gave it in the beginning; may have introduced something false or immoral, or at any rate merely human into that faith; may have usurped powers which do not belong to it; may have done something, in short, which it was right to protest against, and have acted in such a way that the only effectual protest was to abandon it, and start in a manner afresh.—Plain Facts, p. 10.

The possibility of such a change being introduced in the church as would make it necessary to "start in a manner afresh is supported by a further admission that this same writer makes in this language, "the pope himself" confesses "fully as often as, if not oftener than the average of the clergy." And that "he chooses his confessor, as anyone else would do," to whom his confessions are made, and then concludes this subject by saying, "You see then clearly that the pope himself does not believe that he is sinless." (Ibid., p. 41.)

In another part of the work by Reverend Searle I find this claim: "Catholics do believe the pope to be able to make infallible decisions with regard to morals as well as faith," and yet says, "we do not hold that even at these times he is, properly speaking, inspired." (Ibid., pp. 42, 43.)

Somewhat in contrast with the idea of the infallibility of the pope in regard to "morals as well as faith" is the statement made by this same writer in regard to the work of the Council of Trent as follows:

The Council of Trent was called on account of the Protestant Reformation; it defined the dogmas of faith which were impugned by the Protestants, and effected various reforms in the matter of church discipline; there were corruptions and evil practices which had crept in, and really needed reformation.—Ibid., p. 187.

This statement of fact places the council superior to the pope, and in contradiction to what we have quoted from the Civiltà that "the pope is the head of the church and the bishops," for here is the council of bishops called to reform some of the corruptions that popes had admitted to be practiced, and thus undeniably admits that some of the popes and the church with them had entered into some "corruptions and evil practices" which had to be corrected. This also presents to the reader that which appears to be a contradiction of the claim made that the church continued as it was in the beginning "in faith and morals" as well as in "its organization and outward form," as claimed by this same writer in another part of his work.

The council of Trent did not convene till 1545-1563, and the Council of the Vatican which assembled December 8, 1869, was the first to declare the infallibility of the pope. Up to that time the question of the infallibility of the pope was a mooted one among the bishops, and the popes themselves were not agreed to it, as the following quotation from the pen of a Catholic writer will show:

Innocent I, and Gelasius I, the former writing to the Council of Milevis, the latter in his epistle to the Bishops of Picenum, declared it to be so indispensable for infants to receive communion that those who go without it go straight to hell. (See S. Aug. Opp. II, 640; and Concil. Coll. IV, 1178.) A thousand years later the Council of Trent anathematized this doctrine.—The Pope and his Council, p. 42.

Popes and synods decided in glaring contradiction to one another, now for, now against, the validity of the ordinations [of Pope Formosus], and it was self-evident that in Rome all sure knowledge on the doctrine of ordination was lost. At the end of his second work, Auxilius, speaking in the name of those numerous priests and bishops whose ecclesiastical status was called in question by the decisions of Stephen VII, and Sergius III, demanded the strict investigation of a General Council, as the only authority capable of solving the complication introduced by the Popes. See Mabellion, Analecta (Paris, 1723), p. 39.—Ibid., pp. 43, 44.

Stephen II [III] allowed marriage with a slave girl to be dissolved, and a new one contracted, whereas all previous popes had pronounced such marriages indissoluble.—Ibid., p. 45.

Nicolas III and Clement V, in decretals, assigned, "the property of Franciscans to the Roman Church, but John XXII, in a bull, declared this ordinance of Nicholas III and Clement V to be salutary, and of force.—Ibid., p. 47.

The Spiritualists in union with Louis of Bavaria declared the distinction between use and possession impossible, neither serviceable for the church nor for Christian perfection, and finally rejected the doctrine of his predecessor as heretical, and hostile to the Catholic faith.—Ibid., p. 48.

THE PROFESSION OF FAITH

The profession or declaration of faith to be made by converts to the Catholic Church when they are received into it is:

I [the name is here given] having before my eyes the holy gospels, which I touch with my hand, and knowing that no one can be saved without that which the Holy Catholic Apostolic Roman Church holds, believes and teaches, against which I grieve that I have greatly erred, inasmuch as I have and believed doctrines opposed to her teaching:

I now, with grief and contrition for my past errors, profess that I believe the Holy Catholic Apostolic Roman Church to be the only and true church established on earth by Jesus Christ, to which I submit myself with my whole heart. I believe all the articles that she proposes to my belief, and I reject and condemn, all that she rejects and condemns, and I am ready to observe all that she commands me. And especially, I profess that I believe:

"One only God in three divine persons, distinct from, and equal each other—that is to say, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost;

"The Catholic doctrines of the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the personal union of the two natures, the divine and the human; the divine maternity of the most holy Mary, together with her most spotless Virginity.

"The true, real, and substantial presence of the body and blood together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in the most holy sacrament of the eucharist.

"The seven sacraments instituted by Jesus Christ for the salvation of mankind; that is to say, baptism, confirmation, eucharist, penance, extreme unction, order, matrimony;

"Purgatory, the resurrection of the dead, everlasting life;

"The primacy, not only of honor, but also of jurisdiction, of the Roman Pontiff, successor of Saint Peter, prince of the apostles, vicar of Jesus Christ;

"The veneration of the saints, and their images;

"The authority of the apostolic and ecclesiastical traditions, and of the Holy Scriptures, which we must interpret and understand only in the sense which our holy mother the Catholic Church has held, and does hold;

"And everything else that has been defined, and declared by the sacred canons, and by the general councils, and particularly by the holy Council of the Vatican, especially concerning the primacy of the Roman pontiff, and his infallible teaching authority;

"With a sincere heart, therefore, and with unfeigned faith, I detest and abjure every error, heresy, and sect opposed to the said Holy Catholic and Apostolic Roman Church. So help me God, and these his holy gospels, which I touch with my hand."

The profession of faith as published by Pope Pius IV is:

I,, with a firm faith, believe and profess all and every one of those things which are continued in the creed which the Holy Roman Church maketh use of; to-wit, I believe in one God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, of all things visible and invisible; and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, and born of the Father before all ages; God of gods; Light of light; true God of true God; begotten, not made; consubstantial to the Father, by whom all things were made; who for us men, and for our salvation, came down from heaven, and was in-came by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, and was made man; was crucified also for us under Pontius Pilate; he suffered and was buried, and the third day he rose again according to the scriptures; he ascended into heaven; sits at the right hand of the Father, and is to come again with glory to judge the living and the dead; of whose kingdoms there shall be no end; and in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Life-giver, who proceeds from the Father and the Son, is adored and glorified; who spoke by the prophets; and (I believe) One, Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church; I confess one baptism for the remission of sins, and I look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come.

I most steadfastly admit and embrace apostolical and ecclesiastical traditions, and all other observances and constitutions of the same church.

I also admit the Holy Scripture according to that sense which our Holy Mother, the church, has held, and does hold, to which it belongs to judge of the true sense and interpretation of the Scriptures; neither will I ever take and interpret them otherwise than according to the unanimous consent of the fathers.

I also profess, that there are truly and properly seven sacraments of the new law, instituted by Jesus Christ, our Lord, and necessary for the salvation of mankind; though not all for every one; to-wit, baptism, confirmation, eucharist, penance, extreme unction, orders, and matrimony, and that they confer grace; and that of these, baptism, confirmation and orders, cannot be reiterated without sacrilege. And I also receive and admit the received and approved ceremonies of the Catholic Church, used in the most solemn administration of all the aforesaid sacraments.

I embrace and receive all and every one of these things, which have been defined and declared in the Holy Council of Trent, concerning original sin and justification.

I profess, likewise, that in the mass there is offered to God a true, proper, and propitiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead. And that in the most holy sacrament of the eucharist there are truly, really, and substantially, the body and blood, together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ; and that there is made a conversion of the whole substance of the bread into the body, and of the whole substance of the wine into the blood, which conversion the Catholic Church calls transubstantiation. I also confess that under either kind alone Christ is received whole and entire, and a true sacrament.

I constantly hold that there is a purgatory, and that the souls therein detained are helped by the suffrages of the faithful.

Likewise, that the saints reigning together with Christ are to be honored and invoked, and that they offer prayers to God for us, and that their relics are to be held in veneration.

I most firmly assert that the images of Christ, of the Mother of God, ever virgin, and also of the other saints, may be had and retained, and that due honor and veneration are to be given them.

I also affirm that the power of indulgences was left by Christ in the church, and that the use of them is most wholesome to Christian people.

I acknowledge the Holy Catholic Apostolic Roman Church for the mother and mistress of all churches; and I promise true obedience to the Bishop of Rome, successor to Saint Peter, prince of the apostles, and vicar of Jesus Christ.

I likewise undoubtedly receive and profess all other things delivered, defined and declared by the sacred canons and general councils, and particularly by the Holy Council of Trent, and I condemn, reject, and anathematize all things contrary thereto, and all heresies which the church has condemned, rejected, and anathematized.

I,, do at this present freely profess and sincerely hold this true Catholic Faith, without which no one can be saved; and I promise most constantly to retain and confess the same entire and inviolate, with God's assistance, to the end of my life.—A Profession of the Catholic Faith, 1847, pp. 3-6.

Some of the principles of the Catholic faith as contained in the above I will notice in the light of other facts. It is advocated that "Baptism, confirmation, and orders cannot be reiterated without sacrilege;" yet it is an historical fact that Leo X annulled a number of ordinations of a Roman synod, and ordered reordination, and that many ordinations had been declared null at Rome, and reordinations performed during the eighth and ninth centuries.

It is advocated that there is "one baptism for the remission of sins;" yet the baptism of babes is taught and practiced, claiming that it had its origin with the apostles, but say of it, "Infant baptism, and several other necessary articles, are either not at all contained in the scriptures or at least, are not plain in Scripture, without the help of tradition." (Plain Facts, p. 34.)

Infants are without sin, as is clearly evidenced by the Christ when taking them in his arms and blessing them. He said, "for of such is the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 19: 15.) When he was giving instruction to the disciples in answer to their question, "Who is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" he used this very forceful language, "Verily, I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 18: 1-3.) From these we are assured that infants have no sins to be remitted.

Converts must confess that "I believe in the Holy Scriptures according to that sense which our holy mother, the church, has held, and does hold, to which it belongs to judge the true sense and interpretation of the Scriptures;" yet it is claimed by the same work in which the profession of faith is published, and in supporting it that, "It is to be received by the Christian as the infallible word of God." (P. 24.) How an infallible thing can be interpreted by fallible man without the aid of inspiration, and through this means only the true sense is to be obtained, is a query, especially when it is admitted that the church or pope changed the "sabbath day," of the ten commandment covenant to the Lord's day of the gospel covenant, or in other words, changed the "seventh day" of the infallible word of God, to the "first day" without inspiration; and the sacrament of baptism to that of sprinkling; and the sacrament of confirmation by adding to what the word of God says, this, "and imposition of the bishop's hands, with unction of the holy chrism." (See Confession of Faith, p. 26.)

A convert must also confess his belief in purgatory, yet say, "the word purgatory is not found in the Bible, . . . the strongest argument for the existence of purgatory and the practice for praying for the dead is the universal and constant witness of divine tradition as voiced in the writings of the Fathers."—The Question Box, pp. 562, 563.

The Profession of Faith of Pius IV requires this confession to be made: "I, . . . , do at this present freely profess and sincerely hold this true Catholic faith, without which no one can be saved;" yet in Plain Facts, pp. 101, 102, we are instructed that Being necessary to salvation really has nothing to do with the essence of the sacrament. It is possible to be saved without any sacrament at all; otherwise no one could have been saved before the sacraments were instituted by Christ. And even now it is possible to be saved without any of the sacraments; even baptism itself is not absolutely necessary; for one who knows nothing about it, or has no one to baptize him, can be saved if he has perfect sorrow for sin, and turns to God with his whole heart, desiring and performing to do all things which he has commanded.

Besides the above statements of faith and arguments, some of which seem, at least, to be contradictory, there are other items in the history and faith of this church of interest and information, which we present.

CANON OF SCRIPTURES

The first Christian synod which we find as sanctioning a special canon, or collection of books as properly belonging to the Bible, was that of Hippo, in Africa, in the year 393.—Plain Facts, p. 53.

NO NEW REVELATIONS

We do not hold that the pope or any other authority in the church receives from time to time new revelations, and proposes them to the faithful, to be received implicitly by them.—Ibid., p. 59.

BIBLE INSPIRED, BUT POPE NOT

In point of faith the Bible for us, as well as for Protestants, the higher authority of the two; for its teaching is inspired by the Holy Ghost, whereas that of the pope or of the church is merely preserved from error by him.—Ibid., p. 60.

Now a few remarks, more explicit than those previously made, with regard to the way in which we suppose the infallibility to attach to the pope's solemn teaching of the church with regard to faith and morals. In the first place, it is clear, from what has been said, that he is not habitually raised to any higher plane in these matters than other Christians; for it is only at the time of his formal decisions that he needs to be, and we do not suppose his prerogative to extend any farther than is needed for the good of the church. Secondly, we do not hold that even at these times he is, properly speaking, inspired.—Ibid., p. 43.

MOTHER OF GOD

The blessed virgin was the one who brought God into the world; and that is all we mean by calling her the mother of God.—Ibid., p. 76.

THE SUCCESSORS TO THE APOSTLES

The Catholic faith holds that those who have succeeded in this respect to the office of the apostles are the bishops and priests of the church.—Ibid., p. 92.

To perform this rite has been always regarded as the principal essential office of the priest. He performs it in what is manifestly the principal service of the Catholic Church; what we call the mass.—Ibid., p. 93.

BREAD AND WINE ADORED

The consecrated elements are elevated for a moment for the adoration of the people.—Ibid., p. 93.

But as the form does always remain unchanged for a considerable time, unless the elements are received in communion, it is clear that we cannot do otherwise than recognize the real presence of Christ in them by the same signs of adoration which we should give to Christ if he were visibly present.—Ibid., p. 95.

A DAY OF JUDGMENT

With regard to this day of judgment it is a matter of faith that there will be such a day, in which all mankind will be judged together, and the place or state of every human being definitely assigned for all eternity.—Ibid., p. 132.

The soul, then, is believed to pass to what is called the particular judgment (that is, the judgment for each one in particular), immediately after death, and its eternal state is then determined, according as it has left this world in union with, or separation from God. Most of those on whom a favorable sentence is pronounced, we have reason to believe, remain a while in purgatory before they are fit to enter on the joys of heaven; and they themselves recognizing their unfitness, would desire nothing else. The rest go immediately to their permanent state, only to be changed at the last day by the resurrection and resumption of the body, which shares in the punishment of sin, as it has shared in the sin itself.—Ibid., p. 142.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE

I have said above that the desire and effort of the church is, and always has been, that Catholics should read the Bible. But she desires that they should read it reverently, not twisting it to support their own fancies, but understanding its more difficult passages as they have been understood by learned and enlightened Christian commentators.—Ibid., p. 153.

RELIGION TO BE FREE

We do not force our religion on others, we do not want others to force theirs on us.—Ibid., p. 155.

IMAGES USED, AND WHY

If, when, one does this, is it best to look at a blank wall, or at some other object? It seems naturally best to look at something which in some way suggests pious thoughts and keeps the mind from wandering. If the mind has no picture presented to it, it will make one of its own, probably. So if we are praying to our Lord Jesus Christ, which the immense majority of Christians believing in his divinity, consider perfectly lawful to do, is there any harm in having a representation of him before our eyes; a picture of him such as even Protestants often have, as he appeared at some time during his life here, or as we may imagine him to appear now in heaven?—Ibid., p. 167.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE, AND WHY

We observe Sunday as the day for worship and for rest, not Saturday as in the old law. Evidently, also, the sacrifices enjoined by the old law are no longer offered. It is clear, then, that unless some great and horrible mistake has been made, which can be hardly regarded as possible, these changes have been made in accordance with the will of God, and by competent authority. This authority Catholics believe to have been that of the church of Christ, and as nothing is recorded in the Scriptures having been distinctly arranged by our Lord himself, we are really obliged to rest our present observance practically on the word of the church, as contained either in distinct documents or in ecclesiastical traditions.—Ibid., p. 203. (See Christian Sabbath, p. 96.)

What is commanded by the third commandment?

The third commandment commands us to sanctify Sunday which is the Lord's Day.

Why must we sanctify Sunday instead of the Jewish sabbath?

We may sanctify Sunday instead of the Jewish sabbath because the apostles ordered it so, as Christ rose from the dead on Sunday, and sent down the Holy Ghost on Sunday.—From Catechism of the Christian Doctrine, arranged for the use of Catholic schools by priest of the diocese of Dubuque. Published with the approval of the Right Reverend Bishop C. Smith, D. D., Milwaukee, p. 40. Chapter III. The Third Commandment. Remember to sanctify the Sabbath Day. 1. This precept imposes two obligations: the first is, to abstain from servile works on Sundays and holidays, the second is, to hear mass on these days. In the old law the festival day was Saturday; but the apostles changed it to Sunday, a day sanctified by God over and over again; as Saint Leo has remarked. For it was on Sunday that the world was created; that Jesus Christ rose from the dead; and that the Holy Ghost descended on the apostles.—Extract from Instructions on the Commandments of God, and the Holy Sacraments, translated from the Italian of Saint Alphonsus Loguori by the late Reverend Nicholas Callan, D. D., Roman Catholic College, Maynooth.

ABSTINENCE

By "abstinence" is meant abstaining from flesh meat. All the world knows that the regular practice of good Catholics is to abstain from meat on every Friday. . . . This Friday abstinence is of course, in commemoration of the death of Christ, which occurred on that day.—Plain Facts, p. 208, 209.

PENALTIES AND INDULGENCES

In the early days of the Christian Church severe penalties were appointed for those who fell into grievous sins,

1. If any shall do any servile work on a Sunday or holiday, he shall do penance three days on bread and water.

2. He who breaks the fast in Lent, for each day shall do penance for seven days.

3. He who curses his parents, shall be penitent forty days on bread and water.

4. An usurer, three years, one on bread and water.

5. An adulterer, five to twelve years, according to circumstances.

6. A mother guilty of infanticide, twelve years.

7. If anyone shall swear falsely through avarice, he shall sell all his goods and give the price to the poor; and entering a monastery, do penance all his life.

Of course, these were different in different parts of the church, and at different times.

As time went on, and the fervor of the faithful became somewhat relaxed with the greater prosperity of the church, it was found impossible to get these severe penances performed, and it became evident that if they were still insisted on, the effect would be to prevent repentance rather than to insure its being thorough and sincere; so, naturally, a true zeal for the salvation of souls required a reduction of the rigor, and that for them some easier works of penance be substituted. This substitution of the easier for the more difficult was known by the name of an indulgence.—Ibid., pp. 222-224.

Tetzel had authority to collect money for Saint Peter's, as one might have nowadays for any church, the building of the church and the contributing to it being regarded, undoubtedly as a good work; and that to this good work the Holy See attached an indulgence—that is, it substituted the good work for the canonical penances, in the way that has been described.—Ibid., pp. 227; 228.

DISPENSATIONS

What is a dispensation? It is a relaxation of a law made by the church, for some reason not sufficient in itself to excuse one from it. . . . Dispensations are never given by the church in matters of morality; but only those things which of themselves are indifferent, like that of abstinence on Friday, as mentioned above.—Ibid., p. 229.

ABSOLUTION

The Catholic belief about this matter is, that all who committed mortal sins, after baptism are bound by the law of God to confess these sins to a priest; and that this confession, or rather the absolution which is usually given by the priest after it is the ordinary way in which sins committed after baptism are forgiven.—Ibid., p. 233.

In the texts above quoted (John 20: 22, 23; Matthew 18: 18), Christ has made the pastors of his church his judges in the court of conscience, with commission and authority to bind or to loose, to forgive or to retain sins, according to the merits of the cause and the dispensation of the penitents. Now, as no judge can pass sentence without having a full knowledge of the cause, which cannot be had in this kind of causes, which regard men's consciences, but by their own confession, it clearly follows, that he who has made the pastors of his church the judges of men's consciences, has also laid an obligation upon the faithful to lay open the state of their consciences to them, if they hope to have their sins remitted.—Grounds of the Catholic Doctrine, p. 29.

CONFESSION NOT A HUMAN INVENTION

Hearing confessions is on natural grounds a burden to the priest, and often quite a grievous one. This of itself would suffice to show that it is not a human invention, for there could be no possible inducement to the priesthood to institute a practice so full of labor, and putting such a strain as this does on patience, except the conviction that it was required by the law of God.—Ibid., p. 236.

CELIBACY OF THE CLERGY

In the beginning I have represented the celibacy of the clergy as if it were principally instituted for the sake of greater efficiency and exterior application to the work of the ministry. But really its principal reason is that the priest by giving up special human relations of love, however good in themselves, may love God more ardently, and be united more closely with him.—Ibid., p. 250.

MIRACLES

We believe there is an Omnipotent God, and it necessarily follows from this, that he can change the laws of nature if he chooses. What is truly called a miracle is not necessarily a suspension or change of the laws of nature at all.—Ibid., p. 256.

HOLY WATER, BLESSED CANDLES, AND SCAPULARS

I do not deny that there are such things as holy water blessed candles, and scapulars, nor that the church approves of them, and wishes us to use them. . . . These means are what we call the sacramentals.—Ibid., pp. 268-270.

And they are believed to have a special efficacy, that by being set apart and blessed by the church for holy uses exclusively, they become especially helpful to all of us, as the sacraments themselves are, though in a less degree.—Ibid., p. 272.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION

But in point of fact, most of the religious persecutions which have been instituted, at least by Catholic states has been for the open utterance of heretical opinions, generally accompanied by the endeavor to persuade others also to embrace them.—Ibid., p. 310.

But the principle holds good that a religious doctrine may necessarily and obviously lead to results not only immoral, but such as shake the whole framework of society.

In some cases its effects may be immediate, being directly aimed at the social order itself. Such, for instance, is one of the propositions of Wickliffe to the effect that no man can have legitimate authority, either in the state or the church, while he is in the state of mortal sin. . . .

Now, can any one say that a Catholic state, or any state whatever for the matter of that, can calmly tolerate the dissemination of propositions of this kind? If it cannot, the persecutions of history are not without some just warrant.—Ibid., pp. 315, 316.

We probably all admit that indignation excited against the persecutions of former times on account of what certainly seems to us, their needlessly cruel and barbarous character. But we must remember that they did not seem so to the people of those times. What would be in our judgment most cruel and atrocious punishments were constantly used then for all grave crimes; and false belief was then considered by both Catholics and Protestants to be the greatest and most dangerous of all crimes.—Ibid., p. 319.

USE OF ALCOHOL

The Catholic church, then, does not condemn the drinking of wine or other alcoholic liquors as bad or sinful in itself. . . . But the church has always condemned the excessive or intemperate use of such drinks, and always regarded drunkenness as a mortal sin.—Ibid., pp. 352, 353.

GAMBLING

With regard to gambling, the state of the question is, as has been said, very similar. To risk money on events determined by what we call chance, is not itself clearly condemned either by reason or the law of God. There is no reason in the nature of things why a contract should not be made with conditions determined by chance, as well as one with fixed conditions, if the chances are fair all around, and the stake not so large that some one or more of the parties cannot properly afford to take the risk.—Ibid., pp. 353, 354.

In answer to the question, "What do you mean by extreme unction?" the following answer is given:

You have both the full description and proof of it, James 5: 14, 15: "Is any man sick among you? Let him bring in the priests of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick man, and the Lord shall raise him up, and, if he be in sins, they shall be forgiven him."—The Grounds of the Catholic Doctrine, p. 31.

Advice to District and Stake Presidents

Many inquiries have come to me of late about organization of districts, stakes and locals. I am hoping to reach all my district presidents, stake presidents and organizers with this message, that each may understand without my writing a personal letter.

By this time you have all seen the HERALD of July 12, and our own column, in which is printed the new constitution and by-laws, and the explanatory letter that accompanies it. Be sure to read it carefully. In addition to this I want to add some practical help gleaned from my own experience as a stake president.

All stakes and districts are not alike—the members of some are very much scattered; some are compact; some are in educational centers; while some are in very rural districts. The same organization will not fit them all—some need more, some need less; hence the change in the old constitution at the last convention. If you prefer to elect district officers, or stake officers, well and good; if you prefer to have your work entirely in charge of the organizer appointed by the general executive committee, she to choose her own assistants, well and good. A motion on the floor of your district convention will settle that question. In most instances the organizer and district president will be the same person. Now suppose you have your district officers elected, whichever way you have decided to do it, you have a head to your work, and she should arrange for the appointing of supervisors of all four bureaus, unless the body wishes to do that itself. When these are appointed they should be the chief helpers of the district president, or organizer. It will be the president's duty to introduce the work of the auxiliary all over her district or stake, find out the needs of each branch, what departments of the work are needed or wanted, seek out leaders, train them for their work, link her work and her workers together like a chain, make her ideas clear and interesting, recognize ambition among her workers and gather around her specialists of all kinds to help her with her work. She should plan, plan all the time for her workers and then be able to give them her ideas in an intelligent way.

It is the duty of the supervisors of bureaus to follow up the president's work, under her direction, and organize, build up, and train those who wish to take up work in her particular department, thus relieving the president of much work, and keeping the work of each department under the control of the supervisor of that bureau. When I hear a president say that she wishes she had some one in her district to help her with the work; then I know that she has not put her supervisors of bureaus to work under her direction as she should have done. It is an easy matter when you come in from visiting a branch to call the supervisor needed there and instruct her to go and organize a circle or class at a certain place, or write her, as the case may be, telling her at the same time who is the best one to put in charge of the work and something of the conditions to be found there.

Each branch should have some educational class as a part of its Woman's Auxiliary work, and many branches should have more than one. The home and child welfare work may be combined with the educational class or be in separate neighborhood circles. The relief and service, or "aid" department, is also necessary in our work, and each branch can support one or two Oriole circles. Each of these should have its own officers, plan its own work and pay its own bills; and all should be under the general direction of the organizer, or the district or stake president. This officer should be able to work directly with the leader of each of these classes, societies, or circles and should feel free to call these leaders together for consultation at any time, thus forming a council for the coordinating of their work.

If you wish to avoid complications in your work, do not have a local woman's auxiliary over the other departments.

Also do not appoint local supervisors of bureaus.

These two unnecessary things are causing all of our trouble.

For all large cities, or large branches we are planning cooperative class work under the educational bureau, and hope to see our leaders in these places study this plan of work and be ready to put it into practice by the first of next September all over the church. If you will read our educational supervisor's outline of her plans that will be published shortly in our column you will get a good idea of the plan for cooperative class work, and I will be glad to give help along this line in a personal letter to all who wish it.

Come; let us work together, all who are interested in the development of our women and girls! Let us fit ourselves for the tasks before us, that we may do our work well and be of service at this time.

Notice About Our Dues

All Woman's Auxiliary dues should be sent direct to the assistant treasurer until further notice—Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri.

By order of the president of General Auxiliary,

LULA M. SANDY.

"On This Ground We Stand"

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the general auxiliary the following resolutions were adopted, after consideration of the recent appeal made by Herbert Hoover in the interests of food conservation.

"Be it resolved that we, as an executive body, look with favor upon Mr. Hoover's plan for food conservation, and, inasmuch as we believe this Government established by divine intervention, be it further resolved that we ask our church women of this Nation, to strive to comply with Mr. Hoover's suggestions for the support of this Government.

"Resolved, That we as an executive body, regret the attitude our Government has taken in permitting the use of grains and fruit in the manufacture of beer and wine, which use we consider to be extravagant and wasteful in this crisis."

OF HELP TO PARENTS

Parents who desire to impart knowledge concerning the mysteries of life and sex to their children in order to protect them from the pitfalls lying all about, and into which they stumble through ignorance of their own beings and their responsibility to their creator, will be glad to be reminded that from the Herald office may be obtained two very helpful books along this line. They are Fireside Talks with Girls, price 35 cents, and Our Boys, price 55 cents. Do not sleep, or procrastinate, while the "enemy of souls" steals your children from you.

An Iowa Lover of Boys

I am very much pleased to note the movement looking to the organization of our church boys. In your investigation of the various clubs I certainly hope you will find something better than I have been able to devise myself, for my effort among the boys has been far from satisfactory to myself, at least.

The problem of awakening in our boys an interest in the church seems to be one of vital importance just now, since there are so many worldly organizations and clubs, the nature of which is to detract rather than stimulate a spiritual development among them.

My work among the boys consisted chiefly in organizing a ball team for Saturday afternoons. After the game I would give them a little talk along lines that I felt would be interesting and helpful to them. We had a few rules, but no constitution. I trust you will remember me when your committee has formulated a satisfactory set of rules.

Another matter that has occupied much of my thought is that of the young people. We formed here a Sunday school class club, consisting of the classes of young people between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five, including both boys and girls. The object of this class club is to promote the interest of the Sabbath school and church, assist both in a moral and financial way, and to devise entertainment of a character that will hold the interest of the young people, keep them together, and away from the evil association of the world. Our success has been very much appreciated by those connected with the club and affords a wide field for work and the improvement of general conditions of the Sunday school.

This of course is not what you want, as your object is to deal especially with boys. I regret I cannot offer you anything more helpful, but feel confident that you will be enabled to rise to the occasion, and soon set on foot a movement in the church which will reach every good honest boy in it and cause him to feel that there is a place for him there, a work for him to do, the success of which depends upon his cooperation and assistance. Wishing your complete success and trusting I may learn more of the work.

Something for Mother

O, mother, so weary, discouraged,
Worn out with the cares of the day!
You often grow cross and impatient,
Complain of the noise of the play.
O, the day brings full many vexations,
So many things going amiss,
But, mothers, whatever may vex you,
Send your children to bed with a kiss!

The dear little feet wander often,
Perhaps, from the pathways of right,
The dear little hands find new mischief
To try you from morning to night;
But think of the desolate mother
Who'd give all the world for your bliss!
And, as thanks for your infinite blessings,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

For some day their noise will not vex you,
The silence will hurt you far more;
You will long for their clear, happy voices,

And their welcoming smiles at the door!
 And, to press a child's face to your bosom,
 You'd give all the world for just this!
 'So, for comfort 'twill bring you in sorrow,
 Send the children to bed with a kiss!

HESTER A. TAYLOR.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

"The God of H. G. Wells"

In the issue of the illustrated Sunday Herald of November 5, 1916, appeared an article by the Reverend R. J. Campbell on the above subject, quoting Mr. Bernard Shaw's belief as the possible idea of the new conviction of H. G. Wells, and adding to it his own views; and in all three we fail to find anything but a frantic effort to create a God to suit their own fancy.

Surely, if we accept and believe the Bible to be a record of God's relationship to man, we have not a little God, but the greatest ever possible for the mind of man to conceive. He is big enough to fit the facts of human experience, seeing that he is author and creator of humanity; for which reason he has indeed a purpose far beyond the grasp of most men, but revealed to John on the Isle of Patmos, to wit: "His tabernacle is to be with men, and he will dwell with them, and he will be their God, and they shall be his people, and there shall be no more crying, no more sorrow and no more pain, and God shall wipe away tears from their eyes." So that it seems by this he not only matches but excels us in sympathy and kindness, and we read that for nearly six thousand years he has been patient and long-suffering, showing that he has been more than willing to suffer and endure untold wrongs for what is right and true. And to prove that he is not indifferent to the cry of human agony, we should remember his marvelous answer to the cry of the children of Israel and their release from the bondage of Egypt.

Why not tell the people these things instead of dwelling on abstract theories and principles which they can neither understand nor appreciate? Instead of guardedly and partially agreeing with the views of the two authors in question, why not tell the people honestly and straightforwardly what the Scriptures clearly indicate God to be?

Do we not read, "And God said let us make man in our image?" We understand us and our to be personal pronouns. Was he not speaking to the second person of the Godhead, to whom he had given power to create all things? Who also is recorded as saying, "I and my Father are one [in power]. I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." Therefore we conclude God is a personal being. Christ certainly was one, and the very reason he was crucified was because he being man made himself out to be God. We read in his dealings with Moses, Enoch, etc., that he walked, talked and spake face to face with them. With his hand he put Moses into a cleft of the rock so that he should not see his face as he passed by; afterwards he saw his back parts, however.

All this gives us the idea that he is a person, or else these records are merely myths. If they are, we have been led astray and the Bible would be better burnt than in our hands. Fancy comparing the author and source of all life with something designated as it. To our mind it is an inert substance and cannot possibly of itself seek to push, urge, or drive, in order to utter or express itself.

To talk of the complexities of creation is as much as to say that as it left God's hands it was not perfect or harmonious, and that is to deny that he had the power to create all things; and we read that everything he made was very good, which to our mind means perfect.

No, God has not been experimenting thus far, for we read, "I am the Lord. I change not," and "Whatsoever the Lord doeth, he doeth it forever." He has not blundered and failed, each failure meaning that he must start afresh. If this were not so, God would not be true. We read again, "Yea, let God be true, though every man a liar." Again, "Who art thou, O man, that speakest against God? For can the thing formed say of him who formed it? Why makest thou me thus? Hath not the potter power over the same lump of clay, to make one vessel unto honor and another to dishonor?"

It appears that two thousand years ago man experienced the same difficulties as the writers in question. The same conditions prevail now as then, viz: "No man knoweth the things of God, except by the Spirit of God, for the natural man is at enmity with God."

We must agree that man is his best work, for man was the last of his creations, so far as this world is concerned, his masterpiece, for he is the God of the spirits of all flesh, and assuredly man is the grand finale of all his works. "What is man that thou art mindful of him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels," says the Psalmist. "I am fearfully and wonderfully made; in thy book are all my members written." We read that at the beginning man was pure and innocent, and to him God gave dominion over all the beasts of the field, fowls of the air, and fishes of the sea." From these quotations we gather the idea that man was more superman than he ever is likely to be in this dispensation.

What, then, is the matter? Surely it is the fault of man and not God, that the disharmonies and maladjustments of nature exist to-day. Are they not the direct expression and result of the curse placed upon the earth and mankind, by reason of the fall? Not until then did enmity exist between man and beast, and the whole of creation begin to groan and travail together in pain, as it has done until now.

It is quite true that we can cooperate with God in bringing back to man his former greatness, but we cannot help him to express himself, to produce something greater and better than has yet seen the light of this world. That savors too much of the powers of a dictatorship; and also for the obvious reason that he has already produced the greatest and best thing possible, even his own prototype.

Our conception, therefore, of the present inequalities and distress and suffering, which we come in contact with, is not that the life force has apparently taken a wrong turn and run itself into a tangle (that is repugnant to one's idea of a perfect creator, an almighty and omnipotent God and loving Father of us all), but rather because his inexorable word had been issued, his word had gone forth and cannot return unto him void. Hence, we believe the reason why these things are as we see them to-day; also the welter of anguish and bloodshed through which we are passing are necessarily the signs presaging a more glorious condition of things upon earth, such as those revealed to John and the Old Testament prophets.

There is no room for doubt on this point, for the Messiah distinctly said, when describing these latter-day events: "These things must come to pass before the end." (See Matthew 24 and 25; Luke 21.)

Surely we can show why it is that we have an impulse to find and serve a higher than our own immediate self-interest.

At least to those who are willing to be led by the Spirit of God. The reason is because man is of a dual nature, composed of body and spirit, and the spirit is a portion of the divine life itself. So we can see why we have the craving called appetite for those things of the earth to satisfy the needs of the body, and the elements that constitute the body contain the same things that are produced from the earth. Likewise the spirit, soul or inner man craves for those things that are spiritual, the things of God, even God who is the greatest, highest and best of all. In agreement with the reverend gentleman we should say that God is not a mystery.

The attainment of the foregoing ideals is only possible to those who observe the conditions entailed, i. e., absolute obedience to the whole law of God. The doctrine of Christ and his apostles. In this lies the only way of becoming workers together with him. We cannot dictate or lay down our own rule of life as a means of bringing about God's eternal purpose. If we do this, we shall fail utterly. We think this the reason why the churches have failed to reach and influence the masses for good. The religion, doctrine or gospel of Christ has not failed. The conflicting creeds and diverse opinions of men have failed; and so long as these prevail, so long will we have chaos and confusion.

Not only can we find the God we want at the cross of Calvary, but we can also find the man we want in the triumphal resurrection and ascension of Christ. He is our elder brother and the ideal superman, who, by reason of the same redeemed and made possible this ultimate condition of man. Christ rose from the dead with exactly the same body that hung on the cross, but minus the corruptible matter of the blood. That was drained from his body, the same in which he appeared to his disciples, the one that was transfigured before them, they likewise receiving at the time a portion of his glory to enable them to withstand his presence. It was the same body, now glorified, immortal and spiritual with which he ascended into heaven. It was spiritual because it was animated only by the Spirit; the natural elements were absent.

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye here gazing into heaven? This same Jesus which ye see ascend, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go," said the angel. Among many other mighty expressions used by the apostle, is this, "For we know not what we shall be, but when he comes, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

That refers to those who are obedient. Are these statements true or false? If false, then away goes faith, hope, love and everything worth living and dying for. If only in this life we have hope, we are of all men most miserable. But thanks be to God, we have this sure and certain hope of future perfection, happiness and peace, through the stupendous and mighty fact of the resurrection of the just, on whom the second death will have no power. They shall reign with Christ as kings and priests for a thousand years and the rest of the dead (disobedient) will not live again until the thousand years are ended. Therefore, thrice blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.

This is why we worship and love a personal God, one who is a jealous, just, almighty, merciful and loving God. He is one who loved the world, etc. The first and second commandments show us why he is jealous and merciful, his creation is wonderful, and his laws unchangeable. And if it is worth while writing at all about things pertaining to God, why not write and tell the people all about these things, and tell them honestly, plainly and simply? Why try to captivate the ear and enthral the heart and mind with high-flown language and eloquent theological discourses? or with the oppositions of science falsely so called which Paul warns Timothy against? All science must be false unless it is in full agreement with God.

How soul sickening it is to read in the papers of the prodigious efforts to bring about the so-called National Mission of Repentance and Hope, and of some of the ways suggested to give expression to the same. One divine, for instance, recommends earlier and more frequent celebrations of the mass, another suggesting the erection of wayside shrines. It reminds one of God's statement through the mouth of his prophet: "Forasmuch as this people draw nigh unto me with their mouths but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear towards me is taught by the precepts of men; therefore I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder."

Who will dare say, in face of all the foregoing, that he is not even now bringing to pass his act, his strange act? Who will say that his unalterable purpose, even his marvelous work and a wonder, is not now being consummated? Who will dare say that power has not been given to the beast, so that they (mankind) shall kill one another with the sword and lay desolate the waste places of the earth? Who will deny his very existence in the face of all the evidence around us? Who will dare to warn the people and say unto them, "Fear God! and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come? Who hath made heaven and earth and the fountains of waters? Who will do this and help to comfort the people, instead of making them infidels by the creeds and ceremonies of men? Who?"

A Word from Providence

I see no reason why we should not rejoice as we see the signs of Christ's second coming. To the world suddenly and unexpectedly, but to the children of light he comes with deliverance. There are some of his creatures in this city who are waiting and watching for their King. And the branch is certainly trying to warn its neighbors by preaching to them the word of God. The outdoor services are renewed for the season. Not satisfied with simply preaching on evenings, we opened a Wednesday noon service on the street in front of Brown and Sharpe's machine manufactory, the largest plant of its kind in the world. The interest at these services is good. From one to three hundred men listen attentively. At the Onleyville Square Friday night service a mixed audience gathers. I notice some who attended last year. At the corner of Broad and Weybosset streets, in the heart of the city, a crowd passes every few minutes. Here one reaches mostly young men, well dressed and intelligent, but apparently not interested in religion of any kind. The branch has to its credit two experiments—the noonday service on Wednesdays and a park service held on Sundays at 3.30 which is out of the way so far as passing is concerned. All these efforts are big with possibilities and we know that God is pleased with them. For anyone to oppose or speak disparagingly of street work is to reveal ignorance of God's plan. He has commanded the church to preach the gospel to every creature, and there are only two vital things which really concern the missionary arm of the church, they are, to search out "every creature" and preach to them "the gospel."

Of the distinctly standing work of the church here much could be said, many names could be mentioned, but little need be said at this time. Our attendance at prayer services is phenomenal when compared with the total number of members residing within a five-cent car fare of the chapel. One hundred out of one hundred twenty-five attend prayer service. The preaching services are holding their own against the pull of warm summer days. Strangers or nonchurch members attend, and from time to time baptisms take place. On last Sunday a soldier came up from the State armory, only a few minutes walk from the church, and was baptized into the church. It was the wisest step he ever took.

At the July business meeting the officers were sustained by vote of the body. They were willing to renew activities and continue working in the kingdom of God. There are faithful members of the priesthood in the Providence Branch. It cannot be said by members in the branch that they have not been visited by the priests for periods covering five, ten, fifteen years, as is often heard stated. Taking out the lost, dead, and scattered members of the branch, I find that over two hundred members have been visited from one to ten times in the past two years, and the good work is moving right along. We have added to the list two more faithful men.

The Sunday school is performing its mission faithfully. The Religio is struggling to find its mission. Brother William Calvert is now at the helm and we trust that he will either do wonders or else prove to himself that confidence in one's self and enthusiasm and "pep" and feeling that one knows how things ought to be done are not sufficient always to bring about those remarkable things desired. Leading people is a big job and inexperienced men, who underestimate the task and criticize unceasingly and feel that they could do so much better, are fortunate indeed if they are brought face to face with the bitterness of life's lessons, if such experience would be of profit to them.

All in all we are much encouraged. You will hear from me again.

R. W. FARRELL.

The Boys at the Reunions

[The following letter was written by D. T. Williams, of Des Moines, Iowa, to the presidents of the branches in that district. Since the subject is of vital interest and Brother Williams is a member of the church committee on the boy movement, we reproduce the letter entire that others may consider the suggestions.—EDITORS.]

No doubt, you are vitally interested in your greatest asset—your boys. They are full of vitality and "pep" which should be used for the good of the boy himself and the world in general. He has energy and enthusiasm oozing out at every pore which can and should be utilized to the good of God's work. We need only find the way. We want you to give us your help and influence in this work.

Every boy wants to do something, if he does wrong it will count against him here and hereafter; if he does right it will count in his favor. You can help him do right. Will you? He does not know how to apply this wonderful power. Men of God! he needs your help, you will help him, I am sure. Remember that the boy of to-day may be the preacher of to-morrow, and then think of the great responsibility which rests upon you and me. We must help keep him clean. How? Listen! Be the boys' friend, and not only in word but in deed. Make him feel that you have a deep and abiding interest in him. He will be loyal, true, helpful, and brave, he will be for you. Take him and his pals out for a hike. Be a boy with the boys.

"Oh, be a boy with the boy that is yours;
Play with him, stay with him, show him the way,
Walk with him, talk with him, take him outdoors;
Be his best friend, as you ought to to-day."

The only way we can accomplish our purpose at present is by organizing boy's clubs in the branches of the church to stir up an interest in this work among the boys.

What we need just now is to interest them at the Reunions. Where we expect to make our first general introduction of the boy movement, have as many of our boys go as possible. Let us show them and you how this may be used for the good of the church in general and the boys in particular.

We would like to have you get in touch with the boys that are coming to reunion, and those who have croquet sets, balls, gloves and other things for pleasure. Report to me the names and addresses of those who have these, so that the committee can direct this part of the work, otherwise there may be unnecessary material brought. Be sure to see to this.

Suggest to the committee some one in your branch who will be good at this kind of work to place at the head of the boy movement. We want some one that is alive. Send me his name and address. We want some one that will be a boy with the boys.

Very sincerely,

D. T. WILLIAMS.

Houston Welcomes Illinois National Guard

We wish to take advantage of your columns to get in touch with the boys of the church that belong to the Illinois National Guard, which we understand has been appointed to spend the next few months in training in Houston.

We expect, among the thirty thousand boys comprising the Illinois Guard, to find quite a number belonging to the church; and we want to get in touch with them and to welcome them to Houston and extend to them the privileges of the Houston Branch. The people of this city expect to do all they can for the boys in the way of providing entertainment, etc.; but we know that our lads do not want to get entirely away from the association of our people. Our church is located at 516 East Tenth Street, Houston Heights, and we will be glad to welcome all the boys and their friends at all times. We want them to make themselves known when they come to Houston.

Address me at the city hall, engineering department, Houston, Texas. Residence phone, Taylor 1836.

Yours for service,

A. J. BANTA,

President Houston Branch.

Arizona

Accepting the kind invitation of Brother John W. Rushton, June 15 found us on the way to Bisbee, Arizona.

Brother Rushton felt at home right away, stating that the abrupt hills, winding streets and mines reminded him of Wales, in fact the majority of the members there are Welshmen from Brother Rushton's native land, and if the hospitality showered on us is a sample of the article across the water the Englishmen cannot be criticized for their loyalty. Among other things we had some genuine "Cornish pasties" a la Sister Dingle.

The majority of members at Bisbee are new in the work and all seem anxious to learn and progress and "do their bit" and good desires were manifested by all in their mutual endeavors at composing differences and putting the church on a good foundation for progressive, constructive work which it is hoped will continue unabated.

By courtesy of Brother John Lamb and his auto, Douglas was visited the first Sunday but meetings were prevented by quarantine for smallpox. At the morning session the writer occupied, Brother Rushton in the evening.

The following Sunday Brother Rushton spoke at the Sulphur Springs Valley Mission at the home of Brother Farley. Here we learned that a minister of the Baptist Church was to speak on "Mormonism" at the Lee Schoolhouse about nine miles northeast of Douglas and the people were desirous that reply might be made if possible. On our arrival the preacher had not showed up and the time having more than elapsed for his expose, and the people all being on the ground Brother Rushton delivered a suitable and pleasing discourse. Little or no prejudice exists against our church in Bisbee and it seems a remarkably promising field for active work as soon as the miners' strike is settled. Brother James E. Yates was chosen as president of the branch for the remainder of the year.

Through the kindness of D. W. Davis and D. W., his son, we visited the Calumet and Arizona copper mine. We saw the 1,840-foot level, 1,400 and 1,000-foot levels, were led through the drifts, and new workings, saw the engines lifting 3,600 gallons of water a minute to the surface, and the new 1,000-horsepower electric engine now being installed. We were told that it costs $4,000 per day for the operation of the pumps alone in this mine, it is claimed that ore enough is blocked out to keep the mine running twenty years without finding any new ore bodies. The water is all used for irrigating. Rents and living costs are high but wages are good; it is claimed that the wages paid and conditions of labor are better than in any other mines in the United States, nevertheless the morning following our visit a strike was called by the I. W. W. leaders, as has been generally published. Comparatively few of the men knew what the strike was for and to the credit of the steady men, who have families and homes at stake, he it said that they stood by their homes and families and braved the censure they might encounter.

Under the leadership of T. R. Davis, we wish J. E. and Amos Yates scaled the cliffs and dared the best the sun could do in a tramp for the hieroglyphic mountains. These were finally found, but after some hours search for the right trail we agreed that discretion was the better part of valor and headed for town; the others persevered and saw the Indian writings, at least they said they did, and took some pictures.

Leaving Bisbee, we called at Naco and saw the United States Army post, bullet-perforated building, the house where Brother J. E. Kelley had made his home in Naco and enjoyed the home of Sister Fike where Brother Kelley and wife had stayed and from where Brother Kelley made his last trip on church duties. A trail of love is bright through that country for Brother Kelley for his universal good nature, cheery disposition and loyalty to his service.

On the way home we visited Tucson and spent Sunday with the Saints in Phoenix, a fertile country "in a dreary land," attending Sunday school and filling the morning appointment.

Brother Rushton lost nine pounds, although we drank at least nineteen pounds of water each per day. We did not measure, but am sure it was that much anyway.

In addition to the entertainment of many of the Saints in Bisbee and Phoenix we were loyally treated by the Young Men's Christian Association, they supplying a private room and typewriter for all our work, and the complimentary use of their plunges in Bisbee, Tucson, and San Bernardino.

Would it not pay our traveling ministry to belong to this society?

At San Bernardino found Brother Elbert much improved, stronger, healthier, and recovered much of his old-time vivacity and quite an elastic step, good firm grip, and his feet do not look so much too large for him as they did some months ago. Sister Smith evidences her strain by an attack of fever diagnosed as typhoid, but Brother Elbert thinks it partly a recurrence of former trouble in which pleurisy plays a prominent part. She is improved somewhat and hopes are entertained she will yet be able to attend reunion.

Sister Audentia Anderson is expected to be at the reunion which convenes at Hermosa Beach August 3 to 13; orders for tents, cots and mattresses should be sent to Peter Kaufman, Montebelo, immediately. R. T. COOPER.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, July 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: A fair representation of Burlington people attended the convention and conference sessions Friday and Saturday, June 15 and 16, at Fort Madison, and about thirty were in attendance Sunday from here.

The convention and conference sessions were encouraging and interesting throughout. The reunion committee reorganized with Brother C. J. Smith, our new missionary, occupying the place of Brother L. G. Holloway. Date for the reunion was set for August 24 to September 4, Montrose, Iowa, directly across the river from Nauvoo.

The conference prayer meetings were especially good, particularly the young people's meeting at 8.30 Sunday morning, and the social and sacrament service in the afternoon. At the latter meeting, two prophecies were given, giving personal encouragement and assurance to two of our number, and words of assurance and recognition to the body, with the promise that there were yet many young men and maidens whom the Lord would call to service in building up the work in this territory. One hundred and twenty were in attendance at Sunday school, the younger classes being held out of doors, from which vantage point a number listened to the sermons also. Brother G. S. Trowbridge occupied the morning hour Sunday in the interests of the Religio, spoke to local and district workers Saturday evening after the sermon hour, and attended a joint meeting of Sunday school and Religio executive committees and District Presidency, Sunday at 1 p. m.

Sunday, June 24, was Children's Day and Sacrifice Day in Burlington. The children used the morning service hour to good advantage, and the belated flowers came quite opportunely. The sacrifice day had been provided for prior to the general announcement of July 1 for Christmas Offering Rally Day, and the response was little short of astonishing—$167.58 that day with $6 since, in all $173.58. The classes had already collected a little over $20, giving us a total to date of over $190, as compared with a little over $47 for last year.

The Fourth of July was marked by a picnic given by the two aids who invited the Sunday school members and parents. It is reported as the "best ever."

Sister Melva Ortleb was baptized Thursday evening, July 5, by Brother D. J. Williams.

Our recent sacrament services have been especially enjoyable. At the June service one brother related a vision had during the service, and was closely followed by a tongue and interpretation confirming the vision and encouraging and admonishing the body. At the July service two prophecies were given in encouragement and admonition to two of our number and to the body. Especially worthy of note was the assurance to Brother D. J. Williams that in his new work in the district he should be an instrument in building up the waste places of Zion. This, coupled with the word given at the conference, gives us reason to believe that brighter times are ahead for the district.

Locally Sunday school and Religio work continues in good condition, most of the departments in both being active and showing results. The boy movement has been launched and gives promise of progress, and some of our girls are talking of Oriole work.

CORRESPONDENT.

SARANAC LAKE, NEW YORK, July 11, 1917.

Editors Herald: It is a long time since I have written you, but perhaps you have not missed much. I know, however, that I have a number of friends in different parts of the country who would like to know where I am and what I am doing.

For eighteen months I was pastor of the church in Attleboro, Massachusetts, and enjoyed the work there, although I could not do so much as I felt like doing, because of lack of time. When one labors at secular employment six days he is not as a rule in the best of condition to labor for the church on the seventh. The priesthood and people of Attleboro stood by me nobly, and they are a faithful loving band of Saints. They are indeed fortunate in having such an able man as Brother John D. Suttill to lead them.

I left home on June 1 for my field of labor, making the first stop at New London, Connecticut. Brother Thomas Whipple and family live in Waterford, a suburb of New London. I held a number of services while there and hope to make a more extended effort in New London, and surrounding country during the year.

There seemed to be quite an urgent call from Malone, New York, where Brother Arthur Phillips had done considerable work during the past year or two, so I left for Malone.

Do you know when I write for the HERALD I always wish I knew how much alike we were, I mean the editors, the people and myself. I always feel if I write anything but dry statistics and religion that the wrath of some, and the blue pencil of the editors are hanging over me. And yet there are so many things I see and feel that show me the majesty and love of God, that it is hard not to tell of them. The mountains, the vales, the quiet beautiful villages; forming a picture of rest, shut out from the turmoil of the large cities—it is glorious. Man made the city but God made the country.

Mr. Fred McDonald met the writer at the station and took me to his home, where I was made welcome by his good wife. We held services in a hall while there. We have just a few members of the church at Malone, but they are struggling to keep the banner of Christ unfurled, and while there is much prejudice in the minds of the religious people in Malone against us, we trust that time will wear it away.

On July 9 I came to this place, Saranac Lake, where Brother and Sister Hoxie (Polly Kelly of Cape Cod) have lived for two years. Sister Hoxie got acquainted with some people and started a Sunday school class and later a Religio. The result has been two baptisms, Brother Hoxie officiating. Monday night I had the honor of preaching the first sermon ever preached by our people in the Adirondack Mountains. There are a number interested here and we trust good results will follow our efforts.

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

MUSCATINE, IOWA, July 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: I very much enjoy the reading of the letters in the HERALD. I have belonged to the church for over ten years and every day that passes brings a greater determination to push forward and upward till the end shall come, when I hope to hear those glad and glorious words: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

We have a very pleasing branch here and I hope it will continue to grow as the time goes so swiftly by. The conference just held here was an enjoyable event. We had a fairly good attendance, when we consider the condition the world is in and that the late spring kept the farmers at their work.

I am superintendent of the Sunday school here and appreciate the help the Saints give. Though I am only eighteen years old, I know the Lord is willing to bless and ask the prayers of the Saints to that end.

May the work prosper.

WILLIAM HARTER.

MOUNT JOY, OHIO, July 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: Our branch was organized February 5, 1908, and since that time has had many trials. On June 24 we lost Elder S. W. Henry. We are left without an elder and feel like we are as sheep without a shepherd. Brother Arthur Allen, our district president, has been with us, he was a present help in time of need. He baptized two noble souls into the kingdom, and there are others near.

The writer has been president of the branch the past year in the absence of the elder who moved to Wellsburg, West Virginia, whom the Lord called to his reward.

My mind goes back to 1904, to Elder F. J. Beaty the first elder that preached the restored gospel in this country. Brother Beaty baptized the writer—the first baptism performed in this country—and since that time many have followed. So the good work moves on. Our branch has numbered more than one hundred, some have been called away to their reward.

Dear Saints, stand firm in the work, as we are living in the perilous times that the apostle spoke of that would be in the last days. As it was in the days of Noah so will it be when Christ will come to claim his chosen few. May God help us to be ready when the time comes. Dear Saints pray for me that I may live so that the Lord can use me.

J. F. MITCHELL.

MERLIN, ONTARIO, July 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: On May 27 the Ridgetown Saints held their anniversary services, a pleasant time was had; tongues, interpretation, prophecy and the Spirit's presence were enjoyed through the prayer meeting.

Sunday, June 24, was observed by the Saints of Blenheim, in memory of their fortieth anniversary since their church was dedicated. Brethren W. W. Blair, J. J. Cornish, and Joseph Luff conducted the services on that date, it being fifty-five years last February since the branch was organized in the days of Brethren John and Joseph Shippy and George Cleveland, they being the early pioneers of the church. This was the first branch in Canada, known as the Buckhorn Branch at that time.

Brother J. R. Tyrell and Sisters Hacklin and Coburn were the only ones remaining of those present at the time of the church dedication, and the only ones left to-day that I first met with thirty-four years ago.

There was a goodly degree of the Spirit present, bearing witness to the testimonies given, also offering encouragement to the younger ones to press on and do all the good they can for the upbuilding of the church and uplift for humanity. The day's services were all enjoyed.

Sunday, July 1, was rally day with the Saints of Wabash. By request I was present for the occasion. A goodly number were present from Chatham, Bothwell and other branches, despite the rain and bad roads. The means of conveyance of to-day is somewhat different from what it was about thirty years ago, when I first blew the gospel trumpet in Wabash. At that time there were few Saints in that place. The branch had been organized some years before that, but had become disorganized and the only place available for preaching was at Brother Anthony Sharrows's house, and, in the summer, his orchard. I failed not to let my voice be heard proclaiming the gospel of peace to the people of that place, sometimes in the woods on Sundays a basket dinner and sometimes supper being arranged, and very large crowds came to hear. By this means some were baptized, we got the work started again, that being the commencement of what it is to-day. And while sitting on the platform of the brick edifice during the prayer service when old Sister Sharrows and Sister Kelley entered the door my mind ran back to thirty years ago. I could not refrain shedding tears of the vast change that had taken place in that time. Sister Sharrows is the only one left of all these that were in the church at that time, and her time is drawing to a close.

The prayer service was good. The number of young people present was very encouraging. Brother J. W. Badder presides over the branch. Thinking over the work of thirty years ago, little did I think such a work would be brought about. It surely is like the bread cast upon the waters, after many days it shall return. It pays well to be diligent in the Master's cause when in after years we see the fruits of our labors. It is encouragement for us to press on to do all we can for the Master though we are getting nearer the end of the race.

I often think of the saying of Joseph to the brethren as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 110: 22: "Brethren, shall we not go on in so great a cause? Go forward and not backward. Courage, brethren; and on, to the victory!" etc. And as the hastening time has come it behooves every one of us to be up and do all we can for the advancement of this great latter-day work. I trust I may spend the balance of my days in proclaiming the gospel, for there is no time that I enjoy life more than to be engaged in the Master's work.

I am your brother and colaborer in the gospel bonds.

SAMUEL BROWN.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, July 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: The work here is making noticeable progress under the earnest efforts of our pastor, Brother S. S. Smith. The Saints greatly appreciate Brother Smith, and his splendid gospel sermons are an incentive to all.

District conference and reunion were at Palouse, Washington, June 29 to July 8. Although not so well attended as formerly, yet the meetings were uplifting, and the Saints greatly strengthened.

Two marriages took place at the reunion. Brother Vernon Gunter and Sister Laura Taylor were married Sunday at noon, July 1; Brother Will H. Taylor and Sister Maud Olney, July 5.

Brother S. S. Smith was elected president of Spokane District with Brother Lew F. Summers vice president.

Brother Daniel Macgregor was in attendance at the reunion, and stopped off and occupied our pulpit morning and evening of July 8, on his way home. The Saints greatly enjoyed Brother Macgregor's short visit and they are looking forward to a longer visit this winter.

The epidemic of whooping cough has crippled our Sunday school quite materially. However, the quarantine, restricting all the small children from meetings, has been raised and we are looking for many of our little ones back. Several children have been baptized recently. CHLOE K. SHAW.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, July 6, 1917.

Editors Herald: The conference of the district held at Port Huron on June 23 and 24 was the best ever. Reports showed marked advancement in numbers and tithing receipts. There is no reason why we cannot excel, because we have the material. A little more consecration and we will reach the goal.

The failure of the local priesthood to report is deplorable. Perhaps a part of it is due to lack of knowledge on the part of some with regard to the resolutions on the books concerning reporting. Wake up, ye ministers of Christ and perform your work.

The slogan of the Sunday school workers throughout the district is "Pay the church debt by Christmas, 1918." We hope to see them succeed.

All the meetings were of a high order and the Spirit of God was present in a marked degree, both in the prayer and preaching meetings. We were pleased to note that the Saints did their "bit" in the Red Cross offering.

MARSLAND, NEBRASKA, July 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am writing a few lines to ask if there are any Saints living in or around Belmont or Marsland, Nebraska. If so will you please write to me? We have been here only a short time and I feel very lonely at times and wish so much to be with some of the Saints.

My husband is not a member of the church. I have three little children that I am trying to teach that they may be true followers of our Lord and Master. I have not had them blessed yet but I hope to as soon as possible.

Words cannot tell how our paper, the HERALD, has helped me.

I am your sister in the one true faith and ever praying for the church and its leaders. MRS. CLAUDE FLEMING.

DALLAS, TEXAS, July 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: I had the pleasure of meeting with the Dallas Branch yesterday. Attended Sunday school, preaching and Religio. The branch is small but what they lack in number is offset by the earnestness and sociability. The Religians are wide-awake and progressive. They have apparently imbued the "onward and upward" move and make strangers feel they are welcome. Your brother,

J. E. NICOLL.

MANTENO, ILLINOIS, July 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: Our branch at Deselm numbers seventy-eight, but only about half that number are residing with us. Two were baptized in June. Elder E. D. Rogers is president of the branch, and with Victor Eklof as priest, William D. Bell teacher, and Abraham L. Rogers deacon, they try to magnify their calling and thus keep the work of the branch in good shape.

We meet in a very good hall at Deselm Corners, but there is quite a desire on the part of the Saints to build a little church building. We hope the Lord will direct in the matter.

The past week we have enjoyed a series of meetings extending over six days, with District President J. O. Dutton and Patriarch W. A. McDowell as speakers. The Saints feel encouraged to press on. As in many other places, there are those who oppose the faith, but on the other hand, there are those whom we sometimes call "leaners"—that is, they lean in our direction. These people are sometimes found fighting our battles for us and we ask God's blessings on them. We hope the time will come when they will desire to obey the call and unite with us.

The Sunday school, Religio and Woman's Auxiliary are doing what they can to help the church. We are all trying to continue in the faith.

MILDRED ROGERS.

TRYON, NEBRASKA, July 17, 1917.

Editors Herald: After reading the editorial in the HERALD for July 11 on "The stress on the intellectual" I feel prompted to write. We cannot place too much stress upon the intellectual. We are often mortified when nonmembers attend our preaching services, by having one of our elders use poor language.

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5 to study and learn and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues and people.

When I first came into the church, one of our elders who has now passed to his reward would preach good sermons, but used very poor language. One day after several were baptized we met at a private house for confirmation and prayer and testimony. This elder arose to bear his testimony. After saying a few words the Spirit of prophecy came upon him. His countenance changed and the words that passed through his lips were uttered in a perfect language. I noticed the contrast.

In trying to represent our Savior, the very best is none too good.

LILLIE M. RENEAU.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, July 18, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have a membership of about one hundred and thirty, including two elders, four priests, three teachers, and one deacon. I am glad to report that there is at last being some missionary work done here, however I do not wish the readers of the HERALD to think that we have been shirking all these years for we haven't, but have merely been handicapped, not having a sufficient number of the priesthood to carry out this part of the work. There are at the present time four of the brethren here working from house to house with church literature and in that way spreading the gospel, not merely leaving a tract or paper at the door, but actually visiting the homes of outsiders and explaining the angel message to them. The results are surprising. The brethren say that a great many of the homes are freely opened to them and really there is more work to do than we have men to do. I believe if this were tried out in more places we would be surprised at the good we could do. If we only had sufficient faith and confidence in God and his promises what a great work we would be able to accomplish.

We also have a fully organized Sunday school and Religio, as well as the Woman's Auxiliary, all of which are essential to the making of a good live branch. We are working so that some day we can say our auxiliaries and branch are filling their mission and accomplishing what God has designed.

Brother Augustine Dwyer was here and gave us some fine lectures, each of which were very educational and instructive.

Brother Leslie Delapp, one of our promising young men who attended General Conference this last year, has enlisted and joined the hospital corps. He says all is well and his faith and confidence in God and his promises as strong as ever. We are glad to hear this and hope the Saints will remember him, together with all the rest of our young men that have been and will be summoned to the colors, that they may ever be true to their God and their country.

Brother Charles Lundeen continues to improve rapidly, the result of the faith and prayers of the Saints. He is a regular attendant at church and able to attend to his duties as branch president.

On Sunday, July 1, Brethren B. R. McGuire and Keir of the bishopric visited us and preached in the afternoon and evening.

The writer was privileged to visit Lamoni for the first time recently and my impressions were of the best. I have heard a number of people say they did not like Lamoni. Perhaps not, neither would I if I were going there to make money, but I honestly believe that all who go there and are willing to do as the Master said, consecrate their all for the service of the Master, and do their part to redeem Zion, will be able to say that Zion truly is the joy of the whole earth.

Brother Horace Darby, our Minnesota missionary, was married recently. We wish him and his Godspeed, prosperity and health.

Sister Ruth Serrell of Minneapolis has also taken to herself a companion, Mr. Robert Lundeen, a son of our branch president. They are residing in the city. We hope they may ever find favor with the Master.

R. J. WILDEY.

LANSFORD, NORTH DAKOTA, July 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: The North Dakota reunion is now history and a very profitable one it was; those who made the effort to attend were well repaid. The gathering was the largest we ever had and most of the campers were on the grounds at the beginning and remained until the close, which added much to the meetings.

The burden of the preaching was done by J. A. Gillen, W. M. Aylor and J. W. Peterson and was of a very high order. Such remarks by outsiders as, "If anybody is right you are right," and "We cannot doubt your position," were heard. Sixteen in all were baptized and many more near the door.

Our camp was saddened on the evening of July 3, by the news of the tragic death of our esteemed brother, Charles Graham of Lamoni. This of course took away his brother, Morgan Graham, and his wife, Sister Bertha, who was conducting the institute work. We cannot see through all things now—no wonder the Apostle Paul said "Now we see through a glass darkly." Our departed brother was one of the early pioneers here and of the very best of men. May the good Lord succor and sustain the bereaved.

The district conference convened on the 3d. The bishop's agent, J. E. Wildermuth, reported receipts for the past six months the largest for that amount of time. Why shouldn't the "hastening time" be an awakening one to our every sense of duty?

The Fargo Ladies Aid had charge of the commissary, and I understand did nicely, as the expense was very heavy this time. The profits were very small but this they gave to the reunion and Christmas offering funds.

The music was in charge of our district chorister, Fred Mollison, assisted by William Shakespeare, which added to the services.

The writer with Thomas Leitch and C. A. Smith constituted the district presidency; Thomas Leitch and Ferd Hammel head the Sunday school and Sister Bertha Graham the Religio for the coming year. Let's one and all try to make this the best year. If we do less do you think we will heed the oft-repeated admonition to "come up higher"?

We expect to hold a reunion in 1918. So begin to plan attending now. Fall in line. Get the habit. The beginners this year say they are coming back next. May the good Lord bless the workers everywhere—and all should be workers—that his kingdom may spread triumphant “in all the world”—then peace our heritage, if faithful.

Your brother,

WARREN MCELWAIN.

MANITOWANING, MANITOULIN ISLAND, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: The appointing powers saw fit to send me to Owen Sound District, Manitoulin Island, as my field of labor, so on May 8, I left Flint, Michigan, and loved ones there for Owen Sound.

I passed through the tunnel at Port Huron and as usual met our busy friend, the customs officer, whom I passed without any trouble. At Owen Sound I found Elder Benson Belrose and Saints, all earnest workers for the Master.

At Hepworth we met with and talked to the Saints, meeting there Elder John Shields whose words of encouragement gave strength to us all and gave us greater courage to press our way onward. Then we went to Clavering, meeting Brother D. Perkins, president of Owen Sound District. On to Allensford, where Brother Powell with his auto took us to his home, then to Southampton where meetings were held for two nights.

Port Elgin was next for two nights and by request of Saints returned to Southampton again for eight days.

While there met Elder Grant St. John, enjoying his association while there. And while striving in our weakness to tell the gospel story our laborers were blessed by being permitted to lead two more precious souls into the waters of baptism. On the 25th we had to leave in company with Elder St. John for Owen Sound, where we stayed until the morning of the 30th, then left for the island, arriving there on June 1 to greet Saints. There stayed the first night with Brother and Sister Thomas Charlton, she being the first Latter Day Saint baptized on the island. Then on out to meet with Elder W. R. Smith who was the first elder to be ordained on the island, where we stayed for a week, talking each night in the church. Then out to Sandfield preaching each night for a week, there finding a good live branch of Saints, Elder Arthur Gordon in charge. Then we went back to Manitowaning to meet wife and baby. Went out to The Slash for an all-day grove meeting, meeting Elder R. T. Brown and wife. Stayed there and held meeting each night for a week and baptized five more honest souls, and left others interested.

The time of writing finds us at Sandfield. We find the Saints whole hearted and very kind to us. They have purchased us a horse and buggy to better enable us to reach the different parts of the island. So the good work goes on and God is blessing us in our efforts for good. Ever praying for the advancement of this great work. E. M. ORTON.

From Here and There

Sister Jessie Wells requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed and live to raise her children.

Sixty-nine tents have been ordered from the Lamoni reunion committee two weeks before the opening date. Many are privately owned in the community and no doubt a goodly number will be ordered later. A record-breaking attendance is looked for in spite of the higher prices for tents. A number of permanent improvements have been made on the grounds, south of town.

Brother Wallace N. Robinson, owner of Hotel Tulsa, Tulsa, Oklahoma, and of Hotel Baltimore in Kansas City, has been chosen by Herbert C. Hoover as one of the five members of the national hotel men's conservation commission. Details of the work will require his presence in many cities of the Nation to urge economy and conservation in handling hotel food requirements. He was lately elected president of the American Hotel Protective Association.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT, MINNESOTA DISTRICT

Brother L. A. Gould having indicated to the district conference his desire to be relieved of this work, upon their recommendation we hereby appoint Brother Lester Whiting, of Battle Lake, Minnesota, to act as bishop's agent. This district is large and Brother Whiting may not be able to visit the branches very frequently but we trust that the scattered Saints and those in branches will be faithful in observing the Lord's financial law and will forward their tithes and offerings as the Lord doth bless and prosper. We appreciate the labors of our retiring agent.

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Conference Notices

Far West at Guilford, Missouri, October 13 and 14. It will not be necessary for the branches to appoint delegates; the people will meet en masse. A large attendance is desired. R. S. Salyards, president.

Reunion Notices

Western Nebraska at North Platte, September 15 to 24. All invited. C. W. Prettyman, president committee.

Religio Graceland Scholarship Fund

By action of its General Convention the Religio society has a Graceland scholarship fund from which loans may be made to worthy students to help defray the expense of their education at Graceland. These loans are made in sums of not to exceed $60 per year on the student's note, on recommendation of the president of Graceland College. The notes do not bear interest and are payable as soon as possible according to arrangements made at the time the loan is secured.

The Religio now has available for such loans approximately $1,000 which they would be very glad to have worthy students make use of. Applications for loans should be addressed to Brother George N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, and either he or Brother G. S. Trowbridge, President of the Religio, 5032A Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, will be glad to furnish any additional information regarding the matter.

JAMES W. STOBAUGH,
General Secretary.

Our Departed Ones

Through an oversight, the name of Sister Henry Kemp appeared in this department last week after her maiden name—Study. If our correspondents would put the notices up in the form they appear here it would help us much and prevent such mistakes.

PORTER.—Samuel D. Porter was born May 15, 1866, at Claiborne, Alabama. Baptized June 18, 1911, by A. E. Vancleave. Died May 13, 1917, at his home in Whistler, Alabama. Interment in Wolf Ridge Cemetery. Sermon by A. E. Warr.

CROWLEY.—Octava Crowley was born at Jonesport, Maine, June 2, 1854; baptized June 30, 1897, by Joseph Lakeman. Leaves 3 daughters and five sons, her husband departing this life but a few years ago. She lived a consistent Christian life. Died June 16, 1917. Services from the Saints' church, conducted by E. J. Ebeling. Interment in Greenwood Cemetery.

HATCHER.—Margaret C. O'Neil was born December 3, 1842. Married John Hatcher April 18, 1858. Eleven children were born, 5 sons and 6 daughters, 7 of whom survive. Her husband passed away in 1914. Died at Des Moines, Iowa, March 24, 1917. The body was brought to Lamoni, where she was buried from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. J. P. Haas. Funeral sermon by Heman C. Smith, assisted by E. E. Long.

WILLETS.—Margaret Ann Willets was born February 25, 1867, at Bath, California. Baptized August 14, 1881, at Lucas, Iowa. Married William Willets October 16, 1884. Eight children were born to this union, one girl and 7 boys, all remaining to mourn, in addition to 6 grandchildren and a host of friends. Died July 16, at Moline, Illinois, following an operation. Was an active church worker and will be greatly missed. Services at the home in Rock Island, 1835 Thirty-second Street, in charge of F. G. Pitt, assisted by E. A. Curtis. Interment in Chippianock Cemetery.

Resided in LaSalle County, Illinois, the remainder of his life except three years at Lamoni, Iowa. Married Miss Ann Thompson July 5, 1856. She bore him 9 children, all whom, with their mother, survive. Was ordained a teacher March, 1867, by Z. H. Gurley, sr. Died at Sheridan, Illinois, March 25, 1917. Funeral service from Saints' church, Lamoni. Sermon by Heman C. Smith, assisted by John Smith.

American Explains Germans' Methods of Bagging 'Planes

The Germans have arranged their guns in batteries; and when an enemy plane came within range, the first gun would throw three shells into the air in rapid succession. These were so devised that they would explode at different elevations, liberating different colors in a smoke cloud. Usually one of these would be somewhere near the plane. Thus the Germans had three fixed altitudes in the air and from their smoke test they could instantly determine the altitude of the plane.

A second gun of the battery fires a big high explosive shell, aimed as close to the aeroplane as possible. If it explodes close enough, it will wreck the machine; but the Germans do not really expect to get one even with the second shell. The effect of this explosion is to "dud" the air. It creates air conditions which for a time make it impossible to move in that vicinity.

It is a third gun which gets h'm. Having ascertained the range with the first, and killed the air with the second, a big sharpnel shell is directed from the third gun. If the machine has been fairly caught by the high explosive shell, the six hundred shrapnel balls released by the next generally finish it.—Lieutenant G. T. Cummings in The American Boy.

THE REASONS WHY You Should Go to Graceland

VIII—LITERARY WORK

To be able to make a creditable appearance in public is an ambition that should be encouraged in everyone. The practice of reading, singing or speaking in public develops an individual tremendously.

In order to provide an opportunity for work of this character, the Athenian Literary Society was formed in the early years of Graceland's existence. From the beginning, the first object of this society has been to develop its members, the excellence of the programs being a secondary consideration. Yet both of these objects have been attained.

The literary work offered at Graceland is not excelled anywhere.

Helpful Books

HIS FIRST VENTURE AND THE SEQUEL.—A story by Estella Wight, editor of Stepping Stones and the "Religio's Arena." It tells about a country boy who was led astray by the lure of the city, but came back at last to loved ones—and the realization that "homely goodness" is the best thing after all. No. 369, cloth$1.60

JOSEPH SMITH AND HIS PROGENITORS.—The Martyr's mother, Lucy Smith, wrote this biography. For this reason alone, if for no other, the book must always be intensely interesting. But there are many other elements entering into its value: its condemnation of polygamy; its true perspective on early history; its sweet maternal intimacy. The church gives it out to the world "for what it is worth," and obviously it is worth a great deal. No. 287, cloth$1.00

THE MORMON GIRL.—Paula Brown Dykes, a member of the Reorganized Church, who has lived in Utah for years, writes a telling indictment of Brighamist spiritual and carnal methods in this novel. No one can resist the realism of the story. It is so entirely different from the usual anti-"Mormon" work; so sincere and straightforward in its style, and natural in its plot. Founded on facts. No. 371, cloth$1.00

FRUIT IN ITS SEASON

[Considerable anxiety is expressed from several widely separated localities as to the interpretation of the Word of Wisdom on the use of fruit in its season. We have been giving the matter serious consideration and may give the views of a number of our church people at an early date. However, the following from the pen of our late President Joseph Smith should meet with approval and settle the question. It is from the SAINTS' HERALD for May 23, 1894.—EDITORS.]

We have sometimes been quite amused at being questioned in regard to the lawfulness of eating preserved fruits and vegetables, the questioners contending that according to the Word of Wisdom, no one was justified in eating of either fruit or vegetables that have been dried, preserved in either salt, vinegar, or sugar, as such preserved food would be out of the season.

On this topic we offer:

1. The Word of Wisdom is not given by way of commandment or constraint, and hence any man who may not keep it in accord with the strict letter of it is not for that reason alone adjudged to be a sinner, and guilty of breaking a command "thou shalt" or "thou shalt not."

2. All wholesome herbs were designed of God for the use of man; and every fruit.

Under this rule every plant, the leaves, bark, or root of which may be found beneficial to man, either in health or in sickness, may be used by man lawfully. And those the qualities of which are preserved by drying are in their season while their quality is not impaired by being kept too long. Also under this rule, every fruit may be eaten in its ripened condition from the vine, shrub, plant, or tree, and so long after it is plucked as it may be kept in sound condition, whether the process of keeping may be by saving the fruit in a suitable place until it mildews or molds or rots; or drying, preserving in syrups, boiling in sugar, canning, or in any other way preserving its original flavor and consistency.

The fig of ancient commerce, the date, and other biblical fruits were saved and used after drying. The olive as a fruit, and the oil pressed from it were articles of food and used the year round; and it is perhaps significant that as a rule it is quite difficult to keep fruits in good condition longer than from crop to crop; but it ought to be a settled matter with all Saints that divine economy has so ordered the ways of man that he may learn from the provident bee, ant, bird, and beast all of them that live in the quarters of the earth where there is a succession of seed time and harvest, a season of blooming and a season of ripening, and provide for the time when the earth rests and sleeps by storing up what has been grown in their season of labor.

3. All grain, and all that the vine above, or in the ground bears, has God given to man for food for himself and his beasts of burden and use. This grain may be grown and stored for an indefinite period; and it is just as logical to refuse to eat bread made from grain more than one year old because it is out of season, as it is to refuse to eat the pear, peach, plum, apricot, apple, strawberry, blackberry, currant, gooseberry, or grape after the fruit drops from the tree and is preserved, or canned, upon the plea that it is out of its season.

The germ of life has been preserved in wheat garnered on Egypt's plains nearly two thousand years ago, and placed where it was kept from dampness and the weevil; and who shall say that so long as that wheat retained its qualities it should not be eaten by man if his necessities required.

Meat has been dried and salted to preserve it since man lived on the earth, and corned beef and pickled pork are as much out of season as preserved or canned fruit, or kept grain. But all accept the idea that the bean, the pea, the onion, the potato, the carrot, the parsnip, and all other succulent vegetables, roots, or berries must be gathered, dried, and housed to be eaten in the winter; the fruits both of the vine, shrub, or tree are as much the subjects of the provident care that provides for the season of cold, snow, and ice as are vegetables, or the grains, and we see no good reason why Saints should not be as sensible in the one as in the other; avoiding either extreme.

We believe in the Word of Wisdom, and in the conclusions of common sense as well.

COSTS IN CHURCH TRIAL

The following extract from a letter raises a point of much interest. It should be noted that in the suggestion it is left to the court to say who shall pay the costs, so that the person who is unable to pay may have, as he should, the full protection of the court. On the other hand, one ought not to be protected in continued wrongdoing, and in forcing the church to a considerable expense, when he is able to bear a share or all of said expenses himself. It is a point worthy of our consideration, and may be taken up by the special committee on the church part of the Rules of Order and Debate.

There is a point of general procedure which is involved in the above matter, and which I have frequently considered during the past year or longer. It is regarding the expense of church trials. In some cases the expense is small and can be easily borne by the branch; in others it is heavy and may work an injustice to the branch or even district, if either has to pay it. I am of the opinion that the difficulty involved in meeting the expense has prevented many a trial which ought to have been held. Ought not some provision be made by the General Conference to meet this defect? For instance, give to the court the power to determine how the expenses shall be met, and by whom.

In cases where members are proven transgressors and are able to pay the costs they should by all that is just and right be required to do so as an essential part of their repentance. It is enough that transgressors should injure the church in its reputation and not that their transgressions should cost the church financial loss in addition, and then by confession be forgiven forthwith. Of course where parties do not repent but go out of the church there is no recourse, and some who do repent are unable to pay and those must be forgiven. But I urge that our court procedure should be revised to give the courts power to place the costs and the branches power to make their payment one of the evidences of repentance of those against whom the costs are charged.

DON'T PLAGIARIZE

A letter from Elder O. R. Miller raises the above point. He says, "Some of our men 'almost' plagiarize in order to get something real attractive over their signatures." He gives an instance in a recent HERALD and then adds: "The part underscored is copied word for word—and the fore part is changed to suit. This is not serious of course, and in fact we are all inclined at times to draw thoughts from the writings of another, but I have a large scrapbook of pointed paragraphs, taken from current writers and numerous quoted paragraphs appearing in church papers are copied."

He gives several instances. It is unfortunate that we have to watch poetry and prose to catch quoted lines and may often fail even then. Even whole poems have been sent in without proper credit. The HERALD has made a rule of putting in quotation marks all extracts when we do not know the author. When we do know the author, we give credit. We have known some speakers to deliver an address of which scarcely any part was original, and at the most only a few connecting words. Yet it was given and insisted upon as original.

On the other hand, we have learned from experience some ideas have been worked out independently. They may not be entirely new, though some may be new to us, and not copied or quoted. Many times it happens that two or more people have the same ideas about the same time. We have a number of editorials that we have written upon special topics, and then before they could be published, we have found them in some recent magazine or newspaper which has come to our hand after the writing of the editorial. There is nothing remarkable in this, as many students may come to same conclusions from existing conditions. But certainly every writer should be careful to give due credit for quotations made, whether it is only a line of poetry or a part of a sentence.

Quotations should be exact. Too many of our contributors are careless about them. It would seem self-evident that they should be exactly followed, yet articles have been received with ten or more pages of quotations and not one correct. Many times we have not the originals for verification, and in any case it makes much extra and unnecessary work.

CHICAGO DEDICATION

On July 8, Bishops B. R. McGuire and J. F. Keir dedicated the two churches in Chicago, that on the west side in the forenoon, and the church on the south side at three o'clock in the afternoon. We have received only partial reports so far, but learn that there was the usual musical program, presentation of the key and deed, and the return of the key to the deacon. Also a testimonial was presented to one of the neighbors, Mrs. Steers, for her help and interest while the church was being built.

Bishop McGuire offered the dedicatory prayer on the west side, and Bishop Keir, by them well known and much beloved, preached the dedicatory sermon.

As part of the program a brief history of the branch was prepared and read by Sister Grace E. Johnson, of which we present a summary:

Thirty-eight years ago Columbus Scott, H. A. Stebbins and

William H. Kelley came to Chicago and held cottage meetings. Mark H. Forscutt was sent and a branch organized and meetings held, a hall being rented for this purpose. Uncle Mark continued for several years, being succeeded by the services of T. W. Smith and J. R. Lambert. The branch was disorganized for a time, but again reorganized in 1885, but only one of those, who then belonged, is now living, Sister Elizabeth Cox. Meetings were held in various halls and private homes. Elder F. G. Pitt rendered valuable services through the Columbian Exposition and afterward. Under his administration the work grew, and the young became active financially as well as spiritually.

Services were held at first in the heart of the city, later on the west side, then on the north side, and still later on the south and west side, where the two churches are at present established. Brother J. M. Terry and wife, and Elder F. M. Cooper and wife rendered valuable services from time to time. F. M. Sheehy, M. H. Bond, and W. A. McDowell are mentioned as doing valued missionary service.

At last a chapel was located on Holman Street, during the administration of Elder Arthur Allen. This place was later sold and the present edifice erected. It has meant a struggle on the part of the branch, but they rejoice in its completion. J. A. Tanner and David Dowker have administered in late years.

This history, it will be noted, includes also the south side branch in part. We have no special data on the south side, except that the services were in charge of the Presiding Bishopric.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A number of questions are sent in for our consideration, raising some interesting points. Some of them and the answers thereto have been copied and will be published from time to time under the above heading for such value as they may have to our readers.

Question. If a husband or wife becomes insane and is placed in the asylum and there pronounced incurable, and the spouse has been granted a divorce by the State courts, would the church approve of a remarriage to another companion by the spouse, who is sane?

Answer. The church has had no legislation on this question in the General Conference, so far as we are aware. The constitutional law of the church would seem to be quite clear as stated in the Bible, and only recognizes one cause as justifying such a separation and remarriage, and that is marital infidelity. In some ways it might seem hard to forbid a mother with many small children to care for, but we know several who have cared for their children and raised them successfully and after many years the husband was released from the asylum. Some cases thought to be incurable will recover. In some cases it may be justifiable to permit a remarriage. The question must, however, be approached with the utmost care, and a general rule other than the above is, hardly possible.

Question. What is a seer?

Answer. Literally the word is related to "see." The early Hebrew word appears to have had a similar significance. It has sometimes been used in connection with prophet. We use it to-day in the phrase prophet, seer and revelator. The one who is the prophet to the church is also the seer of the church. The Book of Mormon connects it with the use of the Urim and Thummim, but it is not certain that the possession of the Urim and Thummim is prerequisite to a seer. He who possesses and uses this instrument was called a seer in ancient times. (Mosiah 5:74; 12:21.) From the Bible 1 Samuel 9:9 is often quoted to show that a seer is the same as a prophet: "Beforetime in Israel, when a man went to inquire of God, thus he spake, Come, and let us go to the seer: for he that is now called a prophet was beforetime called a seer." However, there may be many prophets as there were in ancient Israel. (1 Samuel 10:10; 19:20; 2 Kings 2:3, 5, 7; Numbers 11:29.) There also were prophets in the Christian church as shown in the New Testament (Ephesians 4:11; 1 Corinthians 12:28; 14:29). While he who is a seer to the church is also the prophet to the church.

The fact appears to be that the actual knowledge of the Urim and Thummim has been lost, so that there are two or three different views in regard to what the Urim and Thummim really is. Some have held that it referred to the three rows of stones on the breastplate and that these were marked with Hebrew letters and the message signified by the shining of certain letters. Others have thought that the message was delivered by an audible voice. Certain passages of the Old Testament would seem to contradict the above view in the minds of some critics. (Leviticus 8:8; Exodus 28:30; 28:17, 21; 39:10.) Hence they take the position that there were two stones that were carried in a pocket of the breastplate. And some have thought that these stones were shaped like little images. The Book of Mormon is quite clear on this point and so is modern revelation, as they declare the Urim and Thummim to be two stones in bows, and the seer looks through them and receives the message. It may be noted here, that one may receive revelation without the Urim and Thummim.

Question. What is the difference between a seer and a prophet?

Answer. 1 Samuel 9:9 has already been quoted. Literally one means a man who sees things. The other one who foretells the future. Perhaps it may be safer for us to limit the first to the use of the Urim and Thummim, though there appears to be no definite statement aside from those we have already given. In Israel only the high priest could use the Urim and Thummim, while there were many prophets. (Mosiah 5:74; 12:21.)

THE LYNN CASE

Question. Which is the higher in authority?

Answer. "And the king said that a seer is greater than a prophet. And Ammon said that a seer is a revelator, and a prophet also; and a gift which is greater can no man have, except he should possess the power of God, which no man can; yet a man may have great power given him from God. But a seer can know of things which have past, and also of things which are to come."—Mosiah 5:76, 77, 78.

Question. Is the seer the only one permitted to use the Urim and Thummim?

Answer. Evidently from the above statements the one who uses the Urim and Thummim is a seer.

Question. Is a seer supposed to know things in general as well as spiritual, or was the instance of Samuel telling Saul in regard to his animals a special occasion?

Answer. A vision may give an answer or a dream may give the answer as well as the use of the Urim and Thummim. A seer or a prophet knows what other men know, through what he may have gained by study. He also knows what the Spirit of God reveals to him and the Spirit of God may reveal matters of general importance, as well as the spiritual. The promise of the Spirit of God goes beyond the man who may be called a prophet, seer and revelator to the church. "Your young men shall see visions and your old men shall dream dreams." The promise of the Spirit of God is general, and ministers of God have at times this definite direction for their work by which the secrets of the present life are revealed. In fact, if we are striving to do our duty, the Spirit of God will inspire and direct, as is needed. But the gift of God is not to be used for personal profit. Neither a seer or prophet makes it his special business to find lost articles.

Question. Is a seer always a prophet, but a prophet not always a seer?

Answer. A prophet is not always a seer in the sense at least of using the Urim and Thummim. A seer is evidently a prophet. (Mosiah 5:78.) Bible commentators would refer to 1 Samuel 9:9 and would emphasize that a seer is a prophet and vice versa. We have attempted to interpret it by the light of all we can bring to bear upon the subject. This means that he who is the prophet of the church is the seer, and those who were previously called seer are now called the prophet. But there may be many prophets who may not be seers. Both are divine and it is indeed not possible that we should limit the working of the Spirit of God if we would, and we would not.

When the city clerk of Lynn, Massachusetts, refused to record the marriage of Ernest M. Norton and Miss Vida Lakeman, performed by Frederick M. Blanchard, of our church, last March, he perhaps little realized the effect his conduct would have. He reported the matter to some of the newspapers, and the news went out to the world that marriages by representatives of our church were not legal.

Legal advice was sought and the case presented to the supreme judicial court, Judge Loring presiding, on June 29. Mr. Robert W. Nason had charge of our case. After a brief hearing, and without argument by the defendants, a writ of mandamus was issued, by which the city clerk was ordered to record the marriage as performed by Brother Blanchard. The newspapers as freely referred to the favorable decision as they did to the initial incident and from a few of the many we reproduce the following extracts:

A grandson of Joseph Smith [Israel A. Smith], founder of the Mormon faith, was in Supreme Court yesterday ready to testify regarding polygamy, for [one of] the apostles of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, [was] present to prove their church was against polygamous marriages.

Mr. Smith was not called because Ulysses W. Greene, of Somerville, one of the twelve apostles of the church, succeeded in convincing the court that marriages performed by clergymen of the faith were bonafide.

The matter came before the court on a petition of the Reverend Fred W. Blanchard of Lynn, that a mandamus issued to compel Joseph W. Attwill, city clerk of Lynn and brother of the attorney general of the Commonwealth to record a certificate of the marriage of Ernest M. Norton and Vida E. Lakeman.

Mr. Attwill after consulting with the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth, refused to receive it on the ground that Mr. Blanchard was not an ordained minister of the gospel.

After hearing Apostle Greene, Judge Loring reached an agreement between the attorneys in favor of the church.—Boston Journal, June 6, 1917.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a recognized religious body in this Commonwealth, and, therefore, marriages performed by its ministers must be recorded when certificates of marriage are presented to city or town clerks for the official records.

This question was determined to-day by Judge Loring of the Supreme Judicial Court.

Reverend Frederick W. Blanchard of East Lynn raised the issue involved in a petition filed by him against Joseph W. Attwill, city clerk of Lynn, for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to record a marriage solemnized by him. Mr. Blanchard declared that the city clerk refused to record the marriage because he was not a minister of the gospel ordained according to the usages of his denomination within the meaning of Section 32, Chapter 151, Revised Laws.—Boston Transcript, June 29, 1917.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a recognized religious body in this Commonwealth, and, therefore, marriages performed by its ministers must

TO LIVE IS CHRIST

(Sermon by John W. Rushton preached at the General Conference, Lamoni, Iowa, Easter Sunday, April 8, 1917.)

The lesson was from Paul's letter to the Romans, chapter 1, verses 1 to 21. The text: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."—Philippians 1: 21.

It is, of course, a very great pleasure to be with you this afternoon, and I should be ungrateful indeed if the privilege was not appreciated and also the honor of this particular position. But I assure you of the sense of inadequacy and unfitness for the task which I assume, that is burdening me; coming up as I do from the regions of what with appropriateness I may call, ecclesiastical machinery, to be for the moment a watchman on the tower. You will believe me, that when I tried to snatch a few minutes of quiet and relaxation to steady my nerves and focus my vision, it seemed as though I looked out upon the wild waste of the Atlantic Ocean; and thoughts, ideas and passions would loom up and sweep in like restless billows. As they surged against the granite limitations of my mind and burst into clouds of spray I selected from out of the inchoate mass both the lesson and the text, as they have more or less impressed me for some time.

In the lesson there is placed before us what we might call the background of our particular religious work, ethics and ideals. The text is suggestive of the conditions as well as the day under which and on which we meet, as well as the occasion of our general gathering: "To me to live is Christ and to die is gain," is distinctively Christian. There have been philosophies and peoples who believed in glorifying death by suicidal processes, and others who have developed heroisms and crusades for the establishment of principles and the exaltation of persons; but in this Pauline phrase so characteristic in its combination of the utmost extremes, there is in a single sentence the union of humanity's worst and most tragic sorrow with the highest and holiest we have ever conceived of in life.

To me, life is Christ—not Paul, not, "me," and therefore death is gain. Probably in Bascom's phrasing of this text the innermost meaning is made concrete: "It cannot be gain to die until it is Christ to live." The obvious deduction is clear, that whatever may be the passion, the ethic, the ideal of a man in life, and his activities, in the nature of things is the actual value of that man to society, and the event of life or death is a mere incident, the value of which is found in the soul's passion, ethic and motivation of the act and the ideal, all of which are the factors in the equation of life. In the light of this we are at once lifted above the noise of ecclesiastical machinery and lose the smell of oil and waste with all the fretfulness consequent thereto in the new atmosphere of soul melody, fragrant with the heroism of love.

GOD IMMANENT AND PRESENT

It is under this feeling we are moving into a new world of thought and achievement as a church, and we see the new avenues of endeavor opening before us and can realize the tapping of fountains of energy within ourselves. This is suggestive that our work is becoming more of grace and less of mechanics. If I am not mistaken, these symptoms are being discovered in the conference activities already. Men and women are not seeking seclusion and isolation as necessary in their quest for God, nor are they depending on the externalities of institutionalism and ritual for holiness, but we are being directed more and more to the unsuspected possibilities which lie within our own hearts and nestle within the secret chambers of our own consciousness. We appreciate the saying of the sage who centuries ago advised us that if we cannot find God within the confines of our own heart it is useless to leave the place where we are in the hope of finding the God who is far away and abroad.

The book of Proverbs has a suggestive though rather rude saying upon which I have been thinking very much in the past. It is this: "A fool's eyes are in the ends of the earth." And I wonder how many Christian people are qualifying for such classification because apparently they are insensible to the provinces of the immediate and present, which are being woefully neglected, and they live in reverie, contemplating the glories of the far-away horizon, looking there for coming deliverance and glory.

"For me to live is Christ and to die is gain."

NO SHORT CUTS TO RIGHT AND TRUTH

We have reached a condition to-day when most of us feel the remarkable crisis which is upon us in the church as well as in the world. The age in which we live characterized by interchange, interrelationships and interdependencies is developing a transmutation of values. We begin to appreciate not only the need of doing things or of being something ourselves, but we must develop the philosophy of being and doing, in which there shall be defined and related causes and purposes, and the thing that is done shall be justified not in the end hoped for alone, but also and indeed much more so, in the reaction of others to our being and doing. In our religion it is necessary that we supply an intellectual foundation to our faith. The time is here when we cannot successfully develop the Christian ideals in the realm of theological devices, and learn that there are no short cuts to desired ends, and the philosophy of Christ is not a sort of legerdemain by which attractive results can be reached without proper work and expense. If religion is real it is a science, and therefore, a reasonable process which correlates effects and causes with all the unerring and even deadly accuracy of chemical phenomena. Therefore the to-morrows are in the womb of to-day, as the to-day is the child of the preceding yesterdays. We must believe that the Bible quotation is not only a copy-book maxim, but a cardinal crystallization of actual experience and history.

"WHATSOEVER A MAN SOWS THAT SHALL HE REAP"

As a church if we shall lift our eyes from the confines of immediacy and indulge in the dreams and visions of the future, hoping for the city which is to come down out of heaven, in which shall reside the glory of God, we still must not forget that there is more than bricks and mortar, stone and wood, and a temple with golden towers and glittering minarets. For the author of the lesson and text in this service insists, "Ye are the temple of God," and the apocalyptic writer closes by announcing the climax: "Behold the tabernacle of God is with man." The future is involved in the present and heaven is in earth as God is in man.

It is interesting to note that the concrete lesson suggested in our Bible which grows more and more as the inspiration of God marches majestically along the highway of human evolution is this—the very foe attacking us constantly, which we deplore as the root of the world's misery—sin—is the result of this very thing—the desire to avail oneself of the fascinating short cut to a desired end. The traditional first sin was in the surrender of that which alone is the key of knowledge and the foundation of the empire of mind, the will to obey constituted law by which only can results be legitimately and therefore beneficially obtained. The long valley of woe, grief and tragedy through which their posterity has been doomed to travel is the result not of the mechanical act of disobedience but rather because we decline the "quest of truth," meaning toil, sacrifice and death in order that we may snatch greedily the inviting offer of the reward.

This is the sin which lies at the root of our devolutions and follies. How we are endangering the manifest purpose of God by seeking to avoid the road along which we must travel to appreciation, grasp and application of the truth. This is the essence of the great economic sins, which warp our commercial, industrial and social life and develop the moral obliquities deforming our modern civilization. This it is which generates the ambitions and passions of rulers, making possible the dreadful wars baptizing the lands with blood and plunging generations into the night of sorrow and debt. This is the same sin which aberates the vision of the modern so-called evangelical school, the offer of theological short cuts to divine grace and the kingdom of heaven. And is it not the same sin which lies lurking in the shadowy places of our own church life, when the anxiety to secure the prophetic Zion is offered on any other than the foundation of life, which in motive, method and purpose is devoted to the glory of God in the highest and noblest service to man of which we are capable?

THE QUEST FOR TRUTH

There is an incident related in Grecian mythology of a certain man who prayed the gods of his race to grant him the truth. Surely a laudable desire. A messenger from Zeus came to him and said, "I am sent to offer you two things and you may take which you please; one is, you may have the truth, the other is you may have the quest for the truth. Which will you choose? The suppliant pleaded for time to think, and at the conclusion of his meditation said, "I will take the quest for the truth."

May I not suggest to you without being charged with heresy or theological delinquency, that making the desire for a revelation at our annual conferences and measuring the success of such gatherings by what we may call spiritual novelties, we are in danger of attempting to secure the desired end, which is the truth, by short cuts and ecclesiastical devices? Is not this also a fault which underlies the many criticisms of the day among us, and unfortunately being multiplied? "What did you think of the sermon to-day?" "What did you think of the prayer service this afternoon?" "Why, I don't know, things do not seem to be right; there was not the old-time Spirit, we had no tongues nor was there any prophecy." Oh Lord, how degenerate we are.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS

Do we pause in our spiritual exercises to inquire what is the purpose and value of these phenomena? Is it not true that unless we do understand the purpose and value of them that they are useless and may be harmful? If a man does not understand what is the value of a dollar bill then a shower of them would be a waste of munificence and generosity. The value of a thing is not altogether in its intrinsic qualities but in the use to which it is put by the possessor. Our trouble in church life to-day is not that the golden highway of divine approach is being closed to the soul of man, but rather in the barren wastes of our own spiritual and mental indifference and apathy. Instead of waiting for God and relying upon the spiritual kindergarten and the mechanistic interpretation of religion, we should recognize that God waits for us to accept the invitation extended through all the holy prophets and apostles to enter into communion with the supreme and controlling intelligence of the universe whose message of love is audible to all who listen with reverent and patient waiting.

What is the Christian gospel? I mean what is its essence and what the sources of its power? What should be the distinctive qualities resulting from an application of the Christian ethic?

The sufficient answer to these questions I think is found in Paul's letter to the Romans, chapter one and verses 16 and 17. The gospel or message of Christ analyzed is this: The power of God can save. That power to save is allied with what is right. Any who will have faith in that right becomes allied with God and is therefore safe.

WHAT IS FAITH?

This faith which is the elementary principle of religion and is the foundation of the dreams, visions, hopes and aspirations from which all progress comes—how should this be interpreted? The letter to the Hebrews gives us a useful answer and as translated by Doctor Weymouth in the Modern Testament it is this: "Faith is the well-grounded assurance of that for which we hope, the conviction of that reality of things as yet unseen."

A closer observation will justify the phrasing of a modern philosopher in the following terminology: "Faith is that which may be reasonably inferred from accepted truth."

No one could be justified in believing a contradiction of what we know is truth. That truth becomes the foundation of his faith. The truth is the result of his own experience for truth is the knowledge of the eternal reality of things, and this knowledge is the result of experience. From this source faith flows and may be reinforced by the majestic powers of the imagination and reason. But no matter how antiquated, imposing the vestments or awe-inspiring the authority which contradicts the truth, it cannot be indorsed by faith. In one of Doctor G. Stanley Hall's volumes on Educational Problems he says: "There can be no moral progress unless we have faith that the eternal powers are on the side of right." Another quotation from the same author extends this principle to the philosophy of history: "History is the great judge and vindicator of the ways of God to man."

To "vindicate" means "to authoritatively declare to be right." As we watch the progressive march of the race from the low-lying plains of ignorance and superstition to the heights of our present possession and look forward into the promised land of immortality in the light of that past and present, it is indisputable that the law of the survival of the fittest has and still is gradually but surely obliterating those things which are untrue, and glorifying with imperial mien those things which in human experience have been proved true, even though once "despised and rejected of men."

ETERNAL POWERS ON THE SIDE OF RIGHT

My dear friends, is it not this faith in the reality of the unseen things, that God is on the side of the right, that sustains us? At times the object of faith is vague, and many times inarticulate, as some of us are in our attempts to express that faith; and to many it is abstract rather than concrete, yet because it is true some leave home and become exiles in its advocacy, others decline the invitation to social repose or the alluring eclat of society's pleasure and prefer the association of the sons of toil, believing in the work everywhere spoken evil of because the righteousness of God is enshrined and therefore God with the eternal powers insures the triumph in the vast to-morrow.

Is not this the reasonable inference from accepted truth? And is not this same principle contained in the exalted language of the Old Testament: "Not by might nor by power but by my Spirit, saith the Lord"? Whether it is the mailed fist of enthroned monarchs or the callous selfishness of the privileged classes taking advantage of their material supremacy or the truculent brutality of ignorance seeking to enforce its stubborn will or acquire its capricious desires, as God lives and as sure as to-morrow's sun will melt the snow of to-day, just so surely will these things fail. Blood and iron cannot be the foundation of the kingdom of God, the dynamic force of which is love and has for its moral principle righteousness. If we shall be true to the logic of history, inasmuch as history has shown us that the ways of God alone are right, then everything which is unlike God is doomed to eternal defeat. In successive waves we have seen the eloquence, art and splendid power of Babylon, Egypt, Greece and Rome come and go; great and glorious as long as they were true to what was right and just, but when the quest for truth was forsaken for the short cuts to ease and pleasure they went down in humiliation and now their names are only memories on the pages of history. So it is with churches, parties and men—none may leave the quest for the right and become the victims of the anæsthesia of pleasure and indulgence without being damned already.

Looking again at the lesson: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; it is the power of God unto salvation"—both the Jew and the Greek. These two nations, the one representative of the highest and most glorious culture which the pre-Christian world had known and the other representative of the best which the monotheistic religion had given in ritual and morality; to these the apostle insists that God—personified goodness—must be the saving power. This is the first principle of Christ's message.

SALVATION NOT IN LOCALITY BUT IN THE WILL

If I am not mistaken in my definition, salvation does not consist in geographical changes, nor environmental conditioning, nor in chronological programs, but rather in the language of a Wesleyan hymn:

Breathe on me, breath of life,
Fill me with life anew.
That I may love what thou dost love
And do as thou wouldst do.

No man, it matters not what his ecclesiastical standing may be, nor how expert in his knowledge of causes and effects, and he may be moral and a strict observer of the laws of etiquette and good breeding; but, unless he loves what God loves and hates what God hates he is unsaved. If a man's acceptance of the gospel does not involve this love of what God loves and hatred of what God hates the gospel process of instruction has not been completed, if it has even begun. How identically Paul and the eminent psychologist of to-day seem to be related in their ideas! The gospel is the power of God to save, which power is allied with divine righteousness and an increasing faith in the right increases that salvation. This is the Pauline analysis. Our progress depends upon our faith in the principle that the eternal powers are always on the side of that which is right, is the conclusion of the other.

As this vision becomes focused and defined, we are led to see that while to religion we owe the unspeakable debt of gratitude for its mighty uplift and strong urge towards better and higher things yet it is also true, paradoxical as it may appear, that what we sometimes call religion has been the most unrelenting opponent to morality, righteousness, and the passions which make for improvement in the history of the race. That is because a study of comparative religion shows that nearly always and exclusively when the emotional has been appealed to in the experience of man, he has been led to surrender to his feelings without using his reason in analysis. Even now it is the common basis of evangelical effort to build up a new order here and hereafter by the play upon emotions rather than the direct appeal to the reason and conscience. Until we shall make religion mean therefore the revelation of the eternal right and devote life to the securing of justice and virtue there will always be the menace of religion itself to the great fulfillment of Christ's work—the realization of the kingdom of God.

As a distinctive sect we have realized the beauty of Paul's graduation which will characterize the judgment of God beginning with the celestial glory and coming down to the different glories typified by the stars, "and as one star differs from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead." This graduation can only be secured by God's regard to the moral worth and the identification of the life with what he declares is right, and simply because he is omnipotent, everything which is not harmonious with himself is doomed to obliteration. The judgment will not be concerned with what a man can believe, because our capacity to believe is limited. We can only believe according to the quantity and quality of the evidence marshaled, and then again this is subject to the individual capacity to evaluate and appreciate such evidence. The salvation for which we long as individuals and as a church has an ethical foundation and the three preliminaries are: first, to have the righteousness, which is of God; secondly to be faithful to that even unto death; and thirdly the power of God is always with the right.

TO LIVE IS CHRIST

As the echoes of the closing song from the adjoining congregation reminds us of the close of the service, let us consider briefly the text in relation to this background. "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." It can only be gain to that one who has made it his business to live Christ. Of course this does not merely mean the historic person called Jesus Christ, but rather the principle for which he stands and of which he is the incarnation. It has been said that a woman's religion is devotion to a person and a man's is devotion to principle. Lecky's brilliant sarcasm in his famous work may possibly be lurking in this reference, but I do not think so. It is generally true that woman loves the concrete rather than the abstract and she has established her devotion to Christ and the church in many remarkable ways. Be that as it may, it is true that Christ is the personification of the divine principle, which includes love and truth.

It is not sufficient to believe in the person of Jesus and be able to say: I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in his Son Jesus Christ, born of the virgin Mary, who suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried and on the third day rose again. No, faith besides being the inference from the accepted truth must be made the program of life. Religion is only a potential value until it becomes kinetic in living activities. To me to live must be identification of my life with all that is involved therein with Christ, the Christ of love and truth. It does not matter whether you believe in the immaculate conception, and that he was heralded into the world by a cohort of angels and all through his wonderful life was demonstrating the power of God in the miraculous, and finally died upon Calvary. It may be hard to believe that on the first Easter Sunday morning he was raised from the dead in power and glory. These are "stage properties" compared with the stupendous and essential facts of which forevermore he is the world's only genuine symbol. Christ the leader of men is the revealer of truth, of the righteousness of God, and in the sacrificial service of love lifted man up to intimacy with the divine and filled all earth with heaven. These are the essential facts of Christ. And while we may be bewildered with the intricacies of Christology we can all appreciate Christ as the humanized expression of God in truth, love and redemption, and as we identify ourselves with these facts and make Christ the center of our lives, "behold the kingdom of God is within you."

Music and the Congregation

In August, 1862, the great armies of the North and of the South lay encamped on opposite banks of the Rappahannock River. It was a Sunday afternoon, and in those days even armies could observe the good Sabbath of rest. The thousands of men were lying around, quiet and glad for a day of peace and repose. And then a regimental band in the southern camp began to play: "Maryland, my Maryland." The music was heard on the other side of the river and a northern band took up the challenge. With the close of the last note they played back, "My country tis of thee" as an answer. Again the southern band began to play: it was the "Bonnie blue flag of the southland." The band of the North echoed again: "The star spangled banner." Thousands of men in blue and in gray were listening. Next came the liveliest and best loved of all southern airs, "Dixie," and the no less typical response of the North in "Battle hymn of the republic." Once more the southern band played, but this time it was not a song of war. It was "Home, sweet home." There was a pause, and then from the northern bank of the Rappahannock came back the echo, "Home, sweet home."

There is a sentiment in the human heart that is dearer than party or race or creed, and music as nothing else can, searches it out and makes the heart right.

Music is the common language of the race. It speaks the human heart, and knows no nationality, no class, no creed. It asks only sympathy and understanding, and it will minister to rich or poor. It is the highest, the truest, the most pleasurable form of all art, and so is best fitted for the service of the church.

Some one has said that "within the path of duty, lie all the good things of life." I like that. I like to believe that the things worth while, the things beautiful, the things pleasurable, are found in one group; and that to be good does not mean to be narrow and ascetic, nor that to enjoy life means an abandonment to sin. I like to believe that within the circle of our church are to be found every true and rich gift, and that to be a Latter Day Saint is to be alive!

That is the first message that is brought to me from the choir loft: That the service of God is not a thing apart from life, but is life itself: that every natural gift with which we are endowed is quickened by the religious impulse, and by the magic touch of faith, common things are made sublime.

Music is the common language of the race. It speaks the human heart and knows no nationality, no class, no creed. It asks only sympathy and understanding, and it will minister to rich and poor. It is the highest, the truest, the most pleasurable form of all art, and so is best fitted for the service of the church.

In olden times men brought gifts of myrrh and incense and fine stones and laid them on the altar. Our ideal of giving has changed now—we bring to the altar a trained voice, a skilled hand, an artistic eye, and our incense is the sweet consciousness of service in making men happy; and our fine gems the deeds of good we do.

That is the message that music brings, indirectly, to a waiting congregation. It links our church and our best endowments together, and teaches us that God is not only all-good, but that he is all-beautiful, and that there is true pleasure in following in his ways. Idealistic? Perhaps, but the results are just the same.

The direct influence of special music on the congregation is very marked. Nothing affects the emotions so profoundly as music. The moods are at its instant command, and to make a man gay or meditative is but the change of key and time.

That is music's direct part in the service of the church. The congregation, a thousand separate individuals, with a thousand varying thoughts, are fused into one expectant body by the music of the organ and the choir. The transition is quiet, but it should be complete, and will be if the members will only allow its magic spell to reach them.

The service is a ritual in itself. First the organ with its deep, full tones—powerful, impressive, dignified, calling all to quit their thoughts of self, and join in worship of their Maker. Then the hymn in which the congregation enters with sober thoughts. It is as a confessional in which they sing to God their faults and their sorrows. It is truly a pouring forth of the heart, an expression of the pent-up emotions of a week of stress and too often of sin.

With the hush of the last words, in the subdued quiet, comes the prayer, as of a high priest who meditates for his people. It is the translating of their emotions into words, words that ascend to God as from one soul intensified one thousand times over! The prayer is heard, the answer is distilled like dew from heaven into every heart.

The hymn that swells forth now is a hymn of praise, of joyfulness, of thanksgiving to a God who is so gracious to receive and so gentle to forgive. It is sung with hearts full to the overflowing, and with thoughts subdued by the sacred Presence.

As the congregation settles back to its place, the choir or soloist, it matters not so much, takes up the service. It is the answer to the prayer and to the praise. Whether it be a gloria to the Father sung with intense emotion or a quiet song of promise and of hope, it comes to the waiting people as a gift and a seal to their blessing.

We have no ritual we say; but this is ritual enough. It is the world-old ritual of penitence, of acceptance, and of praise before the Father. Our music can mean this and more. We can sing into it whatever our hearts are capable of feeling.

Introducing the Chorus

(Address by Elder J. August Koehler, at the convention chorus, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 19.)

This assemblage is one of the evidences that music plays a big part in drawing men together into pleasant relations. There is, perhaps, no factor that plays a larger part, in times of warfare, in giving courage to the faint-hearted and resolution to the weak.

Music is indispensable to human happiness; and whether consciously or otherwise this necessity has led the church everywhere to make music a regular part of its service.

Not only are the functions of the church sweetened by the service of song, but the natural thirst of the soul for music has led us to invent ways of giving the best grades of music a regular place in our homes.

We are here to-night to enjoy the fruits of many hours of persistent toil—of labor sweetened by the anticipation of its natural and inevitable fruits. And we do not doubt that the director of this event, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, who, with these soloists, and the members of this choir and orchestra, are to-night rendering such magnificent and appreciated service, will rejoice with us while we eat the fruit of their efforts.

We are glad that there are in the world men who have high ideals, men who have a vision of what may be accomplished through the instrumentality of song; and I am sure that this massing of talent in no small way tells us that there is some one connected with this function who has a vision, too.

Every real musician takes delight in acquiring a correct technique. And it is necessary that musicians should become skillful in the art of music; but the purpose of the efforts that have been made in developing this chorus and this orchestra were not so much to develop a correct technique as they were to inspire higher ideals in the lives of those who perform and those who hear. The technique is the means; the refined soul is the end. The service of music, like all other service, becomes effective only when it is the message of a soul animated with a desire to do good.

We see then, what refining power there is in music. And this influence manifests itself not only in the actual service of song, but its refining effects are seen in the activities of every-day life.

"Music cheers the darkest day;
It brings the brightest morrow."

"What the dew is to the flower,
To the soul is singing."

All have realized something of this kind. And too, we have heard the confessions of those who have been engaged in the service of song in the house of the Lord; their testimony is that their acquaintance with the masters has very much modified their tastes. Ragtime has lost its charms. They seek now for companions such as Handel, Mendelssohn, Beethoven, and Hayden. Here, too, a person is known by the company he keeps.

Now, whatever some may think of the efforts that are being made in this place; whatever the motive that may be ascribed to this choral and orchestral work, we submit to you that the personal sacrifices that are being made, the sacrifices in time, in money, and in personal ambition and liberty are proof of godly intentions, and must challenge the admiration and call forth the commendation of all who know the character and extent of these sacrifices.

I need not tell you that these efforts are going to succeed: They have already succeeded. We wait only for the greater successes that the future holds in store. And we want the people of this community to have the benefits and the pleasures and the satisfaction that this kind of service offers to them.

It is on such grounds that we have asked and have received the moral support of many who appreciate service. You probably will never know who the individuals are who are giving themselves over in such rich measure for your good.

Only a few weeks have passed by since notices of an intention to organize an orchestra were sent out. Only a few weeks have been devoted to practice, and yet, we see this magnificent result, this vast array of talent.

If this limited effort has been so richly rewarded, what must be the outcome of a persistent and united effort to promote such an enterprise? The people in this part of Philadelphia have before them an opportunity to develop some of the biggest things Philadelphia has seen.

You need not be surprised if you are apprised that in the rendition of "The Elijah" this coming spring we will have an assemblage of talent, compared to which what you see to-night is but a nucleus.

This orchestra has been just born. It is in its infancy. In its manhood it is going to "speak out" in a way that thousands of people in this city are going to know about it. It already has many friends; and under such fostering care as it has been receiving and will receive, it must develop until it attains unto the full vigor of an accomplished organization.

I need not tell you about this choir. You have already become intimately acquainted with its work. All we need to say is that its efforts will not be relaxed; this is an assemblage of enthusiasts, and of consecrated servants; and while some of you may have thought that it has attained the zenith of its power, we are sure that the productions of the near future will greatly modify your conclusions. They are going on to higher altitudes.

One thing only we have to regret on this occasion; that is that the real "Mr. Hoxie" is not in action. Mr. Hoxie sustains a temporary injury due to an accident that occurred in New York a short time ago. But it will be only a little while, we hope and pray, before the real "Hoxie" will be swinging the baton again.

A word about finances. We have been severely criticized because we have refused to pass the hat on occasions of this kind. People have said that it is not right to deny them the privilege of giving financial support to such laudable undertakings. But this refusal on our part has been prompted only by a desire to prevent any selfish motives from creeping into our efforts. We are interested in the good we may do, not in the money we can collect.

However, whoever feels that he wants to express his appreciation of this evening's service by making an offering, may place his contribution in the box on the wall by the door.

We are delighted to welcome you to this performance. This is a church building, as you know, and its use has been freely given to functions of a kind that serve the higher interests of society. Regular church services are held here, and your presence is just as welcome at the regular services of the church as at these special functions. We take this opportunity to extend any visiting friends an invitation to share with us the inestimable benefits that come from church associations.

Flint, Michigan, Choir

Just a few lines to let you know we are alive to our opportunities, and trying to do our "bit" in the general choir and orchestra movement. Our choir of fifty members all working together for the advancement of the work, stand united in every effort along this line. This spirit of unity existing is the reason for our success in rendering the musical numbers selected for our services.

On Sunday evening, July 1, we rendered the sacred cantata "Esther," assisted by the orchestra. The church was too small to hold the appreciative audience and at their request it was repeated the following Sunday.

At 7:45 the choir was in its place. At the request of the writer the audience joined in singing "America."

The exercises were turned over to our able choir director, Mrs. Zella Blasdell Harder, who had the program in charge. The numbers rendered before the cantata were: violin solo, (a) Reverie, by Vienxtemps; (b) Rondino by Kreisler, by Eugene Everhart. Two readings by Beatrice McKinzie, followed by a descriptive reading of the cantata by Mrs. Etta Campbell Youngs.

The soloists were: Mrs. Myrtle Hutchins Holden, Esther; M. Glen Sager, king; Mr. Silas C. Robertson, Haman; Mr. Arthur Du Rose, Mordecai; Mrs. Paul Belleisle, Zeresh; Mrs. Ruth Wilcox, prophetess; Mr. Fred Rauh, Hagai; D. S. McNamara, beggar; Miss Beth Burns, pianist.

A silver offering was asked for at the close, which will be used to buy music. We are planning on getting the music along the line of the general movement, also the cantata "Elijah." This being our first attempt at anything like this, the feeling of timidity and "stage fright" is very well worn off.

We are trying hard to hold high the standards of music in this city. Judging from those not members of the church we are close to the leading choir of the city. At the musicals rendered in the city our people are often asked to assist.

The orchestra leader, Mr. Eugene Everhart, is interesting many, who are taking up the study of different instruments with the object of some day having a concert orchestra to assist in the church services. Already he has the foundation of ten pieces and more coming in from time to time.

SAVE THE FATS.—We are the world's greatest fat wasters. Fat is food. Butter is essential for the growth and health of children. Use butter on the table as usual, but not in cooking. Other fats are as good. Reduce use of fried foods. Soap contains fats. Do not waste it. Make your own washing soap at home out of the saved fats.

Use one-third ounce less per day of animal fat and 375,000 tons will be saved yearly.

SAVE THE SUGAR.—Sugar is scarcer. We use to-day three times as much per person as our allies. So there may be enough for all at reasonable price, use less candy and sweet drinks. Do not stint sugar in putting up fruit and jams. They will save butter.

If everyone in America saves one ounce of sugar daily, it means 1,100,000 tons for the year.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Dress Problem

As a "silent member" of the Woman's Auxiliary I am very much delighted with, and deeply interested in, every movement for development among our women along all the different lines of study or work they are taking up. I have thought, however, that one of the important problems we should take up, and which has been somewhat overlooked, is that of dress reform. I approach this subject, so dear to feminine heart, with fear and trembling, but, after all, why hesitate to turn the microscopic lens of "hygiene" and "sanitation" upon it, and gaze without shrinking, upon the panoramic picture revealed?

From long observation in both day school and Sunday school, we have noticed the superior strut or swagger of the overdressed child, and, as well, the timid approach of the less "favored" one. Who has not seen the former call the attention of the latter to her own fine apparel, with an air of superiority and disdain, and noticed the open admiration and longing in the eyes of the humbler one? In nature, these little traits will develop into false and foolish pride in the one, and resentment and envy in the other.

As a result of such training and such thinking, we have the "hydra-headed" idea so prevalent in the world to-day, that the well-clothed or well-housed person is "it," or, in other words, if the outward appearance suits us, we take it for granted that the good clothes cover everything good and noble and admirable! We appraise him, "truly refined and cultured," no questions asked; he is just marked "approved" and passed on! The poorly-dressed or poorly-housed individual gets an insignificant or indifferent glance, and we pass on!"

How will the Scriptures help us on this point? "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel," "but let it be the hidden man of the heart," etc. Because a man or woman is handsomely dressed or housed is by no means a reason why he or she is in any way superior to his or her less fortunate fellow. It is only an indication of better fortune in the financial world; while true superiority in the human family comes through the blood—breeding, if you please—natural refinement, inherent and fostered carefully. Money can buy appearance and a "following," but it cannot buy that innate refinement and culture which comes through hereditary channels.

As a church, we want and need the real article; not the vulgar resemblance that money can acquire and assume. I once was snubbed by the wife of a circuit judge, just because I was brought up in the country; later on, when she discovered that I was closely related to the Governor of our State, she came and fawned over me! Country or no country, I was all right then! Her viewpoint had twisted, you see!

Now, dear sisters, let us take this dress problem right along with our other problems, and dig to the bottom, as we do in other directions when we undertake to find the truth. How many of us are ready, and willing for investigation? Of late the church papers have been urging the necessity of sacrifice upon the part of our members. How many of the sisters are willing to sacrifice a little worldly pride and vanity in the matter of clothes? Oh, no! I mean a great big chunk of pride! I believe when we, the women of this church, believers of this latter-day gospel, learn to discriminate between true, deserving, honest merit, coming from the inward graces of the heart, and the false, flashy display that money can give, we have made a long, long stride towards the goal—"Zion"! The world draws a sharp line between "riches in money" and "poverty," (meaning without money) but let us think! Are all the people that are rich in money rich also in grace, purity, refinement, culture, honesty, nobility, intelligence? Alas, it does not follow! In many instances we find worldly riches coupled with a pitiful lack in all these true essentials to real riches! They often think their money opens a way for them, without their having to put forth any real manly efforts in life; and often, indeed it does—with some people; but should we, the children of light, mistake here? It gives power and position of a certain kind, but in the sight of God no value attaches to money, power or position of the kind indicated. Some people have become so blinded to real values that they worship money as a god, and have let the things that count the real good go as naught—not worthy of even passing notice and attention. Surely, "the love of money is the root of all evil," as the Bible declares.

Come, then, let us put aside the false estimates of the world and reach out after the "Pearl of great price." "The inward graces of a pure heart" are more to be desired and can be attained by those in humble clothing and plain homes. If all reach eternal life the rich will be compelled to mingle with the poor there, and all will be clothed alike, Christ being in the midst. Why not practice it a bit here and "get the habit"? If we must all "be of one heart and mind," why not try to come to some basis of friendly equality, even on this dress problem, and do away with the false and foolish pride so prevalent concerning it? Who is with us in this move, sisters? Hands up! Let's reform our dress system, and pay the church debt! You know when woman wills, things move! Let us bring the world to see us as we should be—a people worth while, living up to their principles and genuinely superior because of them. Let us not reach out after the world's false display and vanity; let us dress simple and suitable and without extravagance either in expense or style.

We can do it, sisters! Let us "redeem Zion"—at least so far as removing from its midst the pride and shams of dress are concerned.

We must "move up," and not allow the brethren in their whole-hearted consecration and devotion, to get ahead of us. They need us, and the help we can give them. The world needs us and our example. We need ourselves at our very best estimate.

Who will volunteer? Let us have a series of helpful articles on dress reform, artistic dress, healthful and sanitary dress, elegant dress—suitable dress, and how we may accomplish the very desirable aims before us.

Anent Raising Money

I have often wondered if it is right for the women of the church to organize societies for the purpose of raising money with which to carry on church work. After reading Brother Walter Smith's sermon on "How to give" I am more than ever convinced that it is not best, especially for us women who have small children and homes to care for, to spend so much time and effort outside. As the wife is helpmeet to the husband, so should the Woman's Auxiliary be to the church; and as we do not find that the church is authorized to make money, neither should we try to do so, as we have been doing.

Brother Walter Smith, in the sermons in the Ensign, tries to imbue in the minds of the people the idea that the Lord does not require the money so much as he wishes the spirit of sacrifice and consecration in his people. We are told: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

We who devote so much time to sewing and such work in our societies for the purpose of raising money to carry on the church work, would be doing the church, ourselves and our families, and the communities in which we live, far greater service if we would devote more time to study and to efforts to improve ourselves so that we would be more qualified to carry on the real spiritual work of the church. In this day and age of the world we must have education if we wish to keep up with the times.

We are told, too, that none may even assist in this work of the Lord's except he be temperate and full of love. Can we say that we are temperate when we eat more than is necessary for us? On the Wednesdays we meet in our society I abstain from one meal and send the money to the bishop; and I feel that money obtained and sent in that way, is far more acceptable than earned in other ways, as it represents personal sacrifice.

Why not change our methods, and give our lives to the world more as Christ did? Why not educate ourselves and dedicate that education to the church, giving our services free to all who need our help? Why not sacrifice something from our own lives and send the money to help carry on the work? Then will the world see our good works, and be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven.

I am glad to note that the auxiliary women are making changes and improvements, trying to heed the admonition to "come up higher." Why should not the sisters who are good hands at sewing, go into the homes of people who need such help, whether of our own faith or not, and give their services there, instead of taking money for it, and then sending the money to the bishop for the express purpose of helping these same needy ones, or preaching to these same neighbors? Why not, I wonder? Would be pleased to read the ideas of others along these lines.

Children's Play--A Patriotic Call

"Public provision for recreation is not a luxury to be cut off but a necessity to be conserved." Miss Julia C. Lathrop, chief of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, in discussing the report on Facilities for Children's play in the District of Columbia which has just been issued by the bureau, said recently:

"An English authority has lately pointed out the demoralization to boys and girls caused by the breaking down of clubs and the withdrawal to the army of recreation leaders, and he has traced much of the increase in juvenile delinquency in England to the chaos in recreation activities which has prevailed since the war.

"This is a good time to remind ourselves that the continuance and development of all types of innocent and healthful recreation in every community offer a call to patriotic service for many who cannot go to the front. The strain and anxiety which are certain to grow in this country for an indefinite period ahead of us need to be counterbalanced by greater community effort to provide opportunity for wholesome play."

The report on children's play in Washington describes the various sections of the city and the extent of the playgrounds and athletic fields provided by the district government, by the public schools, and in connection with the Federal parks. It includes an analysis of distances and population in relation to play facilities and makes recommendations for the further development of recreation in Washington.

Home and Interior Decoration

(Written for the Woman's Auxiliary, Manteno, Illinois.)

Man supplies the material, but to woman are we indebted for the creation of the home. To woman we are indebted for the kitchen, the dining room, the living room and sleeping room, and for their atmosphere, not only of taste but of spirituality. A home is not necessarily a house; neither is a mere house a home. Many a woman, poor in this world's goods, sits in the shelter of her humble abode, sewing, and singing to her babies, as truly a home maker as she who may have every possible material convenience.

There is a very old saying which declares that no one can live on bread alone. To all of us this is very familiar, but do we sense its full significance? To be sure, it is well to pay the strictest heed to the relative qualities of foodstuffs, and the fitness and durability of clothes, but the practicability of materials out of which homes are built, that they withstand the wear and tear of life, is of fundamental importance if we would live happily. The sorry spectacle of clothes totally unsuited to the individual or the occasion, of foods served in ways too vulgar to bear description, houses used to exhibit personal possessions, would gradually disappear from our vision, if the important relation of beauty to life were better understood and accepted. Sometimes a good way to recognize this fact is to consider its opposite.

For some reason, we seem to have grown to believe that one material or thing, added to another material is a decoration! Whether beautiful or not in itself, we think it will become so, when so placed, even if we pay no attention to the laws of harmony or acknowledged decorative treatment. This accounts for the bad placing and hanging of pictures so commonly seen, when the relation of the object to the things adjacent to it is ignored, and its decorative fitness impaired. A picture of great beauty, or a piece of furniture of pronounced charm, may become almost hideous when placed on an ill conceived background, or in close association with other things entirely out of harmony with it.

In a shop things are arranged for display; in a home things should be arranged for use. The most decorative wall coverings, or curtain hangings, if used out of place, with no consideration as to fitness and use, or if used in unseemly quantities, not only become ugly in themselves, but create a tawdry and undecorative ensemble.

Show, or lavish display, often passes as decorative effect. Because one possesses cut glass, silver plate, or decorated china, should that be a reason for a grotesque display of the same? There is absolutely no reasonable excuse for placing quantities of art glass or china on side board, plate rail, or serving table! Pantries and closed closets are proper places for such things, both from a decorative and hygienic standpoint! Only a few pieces, which have a reason for being there, should be displayed.

There is always fundamentally, the idea of background, and decorative color spot, to be considered in every article in a room. The walls, the ceiling and the floor are the primary background ideas. These should have a distinct relation to each other in value and intensity. Secondly, they should have a distinct relation in both these qualities, to all objects which are to appear against them as furnishings. The ceiling in general, should be a little lighter than the walls, and the walls a little lighter in general effect than the floor. Backgrounds should be less intense in color than are the objects to be shown against them.

The living room should, above all things, be provided with comfortable chairs, in which one can rest and relax. It is the heart of the home, the spot where the family life centers, and it should express an atmosphere of informal hospitality to all who enter. It should be peaceful and calm, a veritable haven from the stress and storms incident to life's voyage.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Helpful to Gospel Literature Workers

THE PLAN

General Organization

Three Members—

- One selected by general church.
- One by General Sunday School Association.
- One by General Religio Society.

Elected annually. The work is to formulate general policies and to carry them out. To aid district organizations and advise locals when necessary. To report annually, March 15, to the three general societies appointing the commission.

Stake and District Organizations

Three Members—

- One selected by district church conference.
- One by district Sunday school convention.
- One by district Religio convention.

Members of this committee are to be elected annually or semiannually and constitute a district gospel literature board. It is the duty of this board to see that every branch in its district has a local literature board, and to advise and encourage such boards whenever necessary, by visits and correspondence. To assist locals in obtaining literature when possible. To report semiannually, September 1 and March 1, to the superintendent of the general commission, R. W. Farrell, 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island.

Local Organization

Three Members—

- One selected by the branch.
- One by the Sunday school.
- One by the Religio.

Appointed at election time, to form a local gospel literature board, having charge of the distribution of church literature in its vicinity, appointing workers, collecting literature and passing out the same, raising money for necessary expenses, etc., reporting to district board quarterly, May 1, August 1, November 1, February 1.

HISTORY

At the General Conference and General Conventions held at Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1917, it was deemed proper and expedient to organize a Gospel Literature Commission, that the work of distributing church literature might be carried on more effectively. Harvey Sandy was selected by the General Religio Society, Ralph W. Farrell by the General Sunday School Association, Edward D. Moore by the General Church Conference to constitute this general commission, which thus has the sanction and confidence of the entire church. R. W. Farrell was chosen by the commission to be its chairman.

OBJECT

It is the object of this commission to take general oversight of literature distribution by encouraging the organization of district and branch gospel literature boards; by contributing pertinent articles to the church papers, directing, suggesting, and in every possible way helping along the circulation of God's printed word.

HOW TO ORGANIZE

The method is partially explained on page 2 under "the plan," preceding this. In branches or districts where there may not be three societies, let two form the committee, giving it power to select a third member. After organization meet immediately and appoint a chairman and secretary. Divide the work, select other assistants if needed, agree on plans, and in other ways perfect the organization.

BOARDS

It is the duty and privilege of district and stake boards to encourage and assist the local boards by writing them letters, advising of methods of furtherance of work, supplying literature when possible, receiving quarterly reports from the several local boards, that reports may be forwarded promptly to the General Commission, and in every other cooperative way giving help. The local boards are really the working units, and being many will be able to accomplish much for the cause. It is their duty and privilege to raise money, appoint workers, collect and distribute church literature.

Bear in mind that every big task is made up of little ones. The gospel literature work is no exception. Inasmuch as every Saint is supposed to warn his neighbor, this obligation calls him into the field of literature work, no member of the church being excused. He is a steward which God will hold accountable. And the members of the commission realize that by this mighty corps of helpers, a marvelous work will be done. For the good of the cause and the encouragement of others, will every person who passes a piece of gospel literature please give in report to their local board.

MONEY

Money has been called the sinews of war, and it is well put this way, for not even the church can be run without material funds. One of the vitally important works of the church is that of sending the printed word to those who walk in darkness, therefore let no one withhold his offering from the appeal which comes to him from the local boards. The commission favors the monthly offering from the several societies of the branch as a means of supplying the gospel literature workers with necessary funds for their mission. However, there are other ways to raise money. Individuals might wish to donate certain sums direct to the board. It is legitimate and advisable under certain conditions to purchase literature at the one hundred piece rate and sell it at the single piece rate. And the commission advises that a more careful effort be made to sell our church literature. Yet, there will be times when we should give it to those not able to buy it, and interested persons should be supplied with all they need. We urge that a considerable sum of money be wisely invested in the literature work. The publishing houses of our church will in time be able to supply every need of gospel literature workers, and every dollar spent in this line will enable the Board of Publication to extend more fully its usefulness to the Saints and the world.

LITERATURE

Church literature, clean literature, and abundant literature. Collect it from the Saints. Purchase it from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, or the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, selecting the nearest in location. Encourage every family in the church to take the SAINTS' HERALD, Zion's Ensign, Journal of History, Autumn Leaves, Stepping Stones, Zion's Hope, and purchase the many books and tracts, which are printed for the salvation of the world. If either secular reading or religious reading must be sacrificed, by all means let it be the secular. Request Saints to preserve their reading matter and keep it clean for the collectors who will call for it once every two weeks and carry it to a common repository where it may be sorted, stamped and allotted for distribution. Purchase standard tracts and be careful in selecting them. The advertising manager of the Board of Publication has carefully selected thirty-four splendid tracts which make up "The dollar library of tracts" which is offered for one dollar. The literature commission heartily recommends this set of tracts and hopes that every gospel literature local board will purchase many of these sets.

DISTRIBUTION

Distributing literature is an art, and the work should be studied as such. Local boards may appoint assistants if needed and instruct them. Every helper should have assigned to him or her a specific task. There are homes to be supplied with literature, streets canvassed, boxes placed in shops, hotels, factories, stations, post offices, etc., and kept filled with papers. Personal workers should call on strangers and interest them in the church literature, leaving literature where it will do the most good, lending church books, taking subscriptions for papers, studying the need of the people and supplying it. Each branch should distribute all its literature in its vicinity, but if there be more than is needed the district board should see that the surplus is sent where it can be used. Make the work intensive. More is accomplished by working a small territory thoroughly than by scattering promiscuously. It is urgently necessary to prevent waste, and the mere throwing of literature about is wasting money and energy. The work must be done in a proper manner if we are to get big results. Make use of the service of boys and girls: they are efficient and willing helpers in certain phases of our work; such as, keeping boxes filled with papers, etc. Use rubber stamps. For a small sum can be obtained a stamp containing the name and address of pastor, time and place of services. In stamping literature make every move tell the story of neatness, business effort and distinction.

Above all else remember that a true Saint is the best living epistle of what the church can do for her sons and daughters. Let gospel literature workers be truly meek and humble. If doors are closed upon us we can fill our mission in no better manner than by turning meekly away with a prayer in our heart for the one who shuts from his life the light of heaven. However, these unpleasant experiences are rare; as a rule if we are courteous to the people they will be courteous to us.

TRACT CASES

Every local should have a tract case. The general commission recommends a valuable case, or compartment wall pocket, which can be purchased from the Herald Publishing House at a reasonable figure or given as a premium with every purchase of a certain amount of literature. Make arrangements with E. D. Moore who has charge of this matter.

REPORTING

If a thing is worth doing it is worth doing well. Let us put our heart and brain in the task before us! It is God's work and no greater honor can come to us in this life nor in the life to come than of working with God. The local boards use blank No. S129, reporting quarterly to the district boards.

The district boards send the totals of these reports to the chairman of the general commission, R. W. Farrell, using blank No. S125. These blanks can be purchased from the Herald Publishing House at fifteen cents for ten. A copy of all reports should be preserved in a ruled book.

CIRCULATING LIBRARIES

In response to demands for church books to lend to investigating nonmembers, the general commission has arranged a cooperative plan with the General Library Commission, whereby a number of sets of books are available. There are persons who enjoy reading religious stories, and such books as With the Church in an Early Day, Two-Story Book, Joe Pine, will catch and hold the interest of investigators when other reading matter might fail.

These sets will be sent, in the order of their call, without charge for a period of three months to any district literature board, to be loaned to nonmembers only. The only cost will be the transportation both ways, to be paid by the board receiving the set. Separate books can be sent to individual readers.

Correspond with E. D. Moore for details of this matter and have your requests in for the books as soon as possible. Further announcement will be made in the church papers. But do not let this offer, which will be very limited in its scope, cause you to neglect the purchase of the dollar library of tracts, which should be in the home of every church member.

We have received some of the most enthusiastic letters imaginable, letters that have caused us to wish that we could visit the writers and talk with them and the schools they represent for the good we could obtain from such a visit. What a wonderful organization we would have if all were as enthusiastic as those we refer to! There would be little to worry about if such was the condition and the church debt would melt away into the past in a very short time.

We have a further favor to ask of all the enthusiastic workers of every district, that is, will you not sit right down and write to all the locals in your district and tell them of your success and how you obtained your good results? Tell these locals in just as enthusiastic letters as you can write, of the way you have looked at this matter, how you have planned, how you have enlisted the assistance of your workers, what plans you have found most successful, and give them a little statement of your results. Will you do this right now while you have the thought fresh in your mind. If you feel that you must state a reason for writing them, tell them it was our request. You need not tell them that you consider they need assistance or suggest anything of this kind, but let them feel that you have a deep interest in the work and because of the success you have obtained and desiring to have others try out the plan, you are telling them of it. Then ask them to write to you and tell you of their plans for you would like to have suggestions and new thoughts. You will be able to create a little enthusiasm and possibly a little competition also, and this is not entirely undesired, for friendly competition is really a good thing—let us have a great deal of it and we will find ourselves advancing at a very rapid rate, we are sure.

Encourage all whom you come in contact with to be boosters for this good work—encourage the various schools to send in the results of their efforts—the boys and girls, both old and young, like to see their school mentioned in these reports. Now, altogether, let us work as we have never worked before—let us lift this debt, make it a thing of the past.

Our next "Roll of Honor" number of the HERALD will be September 19.

Malad, Idaho, raised $17.08 in the first six months of the year, while their total was $13.76 last year.

Ironton, Ohio, have $10.55 as a nest egg.

Postoak, Missouri, have $9.20 and expect to make the two dollars per member.

Springfield, Illinois, have almost double their last year's offering, it totaling $18.83.

Owendale, Michigan, is the post office address of the Pigeon River school and they have doubled last year's offering. They are fortunate in putting out their money at seven per cent interest.

Eldorado Springs, Missouri: Last year's offering $10, this year's so far, $30.

Lees Summit, Missouri, sent in $13.45 last year and report as much now.

Prince of Peace school, at Porcupine, Wisconsin, send in $21.50, while they gave $10.60 last year.

Sandyville, Iowa, has raised $7.15, compared to $3.85 last year.

Fairland, Oklahoma, last year $15.99; this year $33.15.

Denison, Iowa, last year $4.10; this year $18.

Creston, Iowa, last year $6.30; this year $12.38.

Andover, Missouri, last year $24.67; this year $52.42.

The latest from Moorhead, Iowa, is that they have remitted $210 to the bishop, having $44.50 last year.

The superintendent of the Milwaukee school says they are Germans and slow about getting started, but now that they are on the move we may look for real results. In fact they have so many excellent ideas on raising funds that they ask that any who want some of them write him—W. E. Gittins, 647 Madison Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. They have a good start and are not especially proud of their $6 of last year, and have $6.90 now.

From Minidoka, Idaho, word comes that they have $14.22, and had had $10.22 last year. They are all working, old and young.

Phoenix, Arizona, raised comparatively little last year, but have four times as much now.

Knox, Indiana, reports $11.40 on July 8, and $7 last year.

Louisville, Kentucky, say they didn't take much interest last year, but are making up for it now. They have four times as much already.

Dekalb, Illinois, have a large school, but since most of them are children of nonmembers they hesitate to urge the school offering. However, they are going to increase their present fund of $7 very much.

Stratford, Ontario, send in $16.30.

Tulare, California, sent in last year $34.42 while they have now raised $125.97 and are still busy.

Biglers Grove, Iowa, have about $40 in cash and pledges and wonder about disposing of it. See the Herald for July 25.

Paonia, Colorado, say that on July 1 they had $19.49, while their last year's total was $7.25.

The San Francisco, California, school have already turned in to the bishop $85.70, which is not only more than double their offering of $42.31 last year, but more than the $2 per enrolled member. Their enrollment is 37.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, have over $72 now and last year sent in a little over $26. They believe the Bishopric were right when they enlisted the children in the cause in this manner.

Andes, Montana, had $37 on July 1 and sent in $26 last year. See our instructions in the recent HERALD, Brother Hutchinson, about sending it in.

Eldorado Springs, Missouri, sent in $10.40 last year. Though they started late, they now have $35.01. They expect to make it ten times last year's offering. Surely there are no drones there.

Magnolia, Iowa, have 44 enrollment and have at present reached $74.80, compared with $24.55 of last year.

Scammon, Kansas, have $54 and still going, though only a small place.

Joplin, Missouri, is bending every energy toward building a new church, but have almost $50 raised.

A Protest from a German Brother

[We publish herewith a letter of protest against two recent editorials, "The church and war," and "The psychology of the German soldier." The letter probably also includes the article, which we notice is ascribed to the National Geographic Society. We did not verify, but published the article in the hopes of giving a more favorable view of the German position than perhaps many of our people had received.

We have tried to make it very plain that the church is most emphatically for peace and against war. In the second place, that the church is international, and so cannot take sides. Its sympathy is as ready for one side as the other. The opinions expressed were presented as our personal opinion, and only in reply to urgent requests. We do not attempt to answer the questions in this letter because to do so would necessarily involve taking sides, the very thing to which the brother objects. In the midst of such stress it is difficult to avoid all reference to the situation confronting us. The questions involved are individual, but the church stands frankly for peace, as we quoted in the first of the editorial, and also for liberty of conscience, as is shown in the resolution of the assembly held in 1835:

"We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments, and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as in their own judgments are best calculated to secure the public interest, at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience." (Doctrine and Covenants 112: 5).—Editors.]

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI, July 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: In a recent HERALD I find two articles, "The church and war," and "The psychology of the German soldier."

The writer, born and raised to manhood in Germany, came to this country over thirty years ago, became an American citizen, loyal as a man can be to his new country, and accepted the faith of the Latter Day Saint Church.

I want to protest against the above mentioned articles.

Does the church approve of this Government's acts throughout this war towards Germany? Have we as a nation, been neutral towards Germany? When England put the blockade around Germany, did our Government enforce its demand on England? If it had, would we not be in the war with England to-day? Has not this blockade brought the submarines on? Why didn't our Government enforce the rights of international law to England when they put that blockade around Germany? Does the church uphold one wrong and condemn another? When Germany put their submarine warfare in force, they put all international law aside, but how about England? Germany claims she was forced to it. Did England as the mistress of the sea, violate all international law? Wasn't she first to put that blockade there?

If the church stands for righteousness and sits in judgment, see that it renders a righteous judgment. The church is mistaken about the German people, that they could be educated to follow their leaders blindly. The German people as a rule are a God-fearing people that stand for truth and righteousness. They do their own thinking, and act accordingly with a clear conscience.

The writer has no sympathy for the German Kaiser, but it looks as if a man of his standing would not make such a speech as referred to in the HERALD. Does the church get its information from his friends or enemies? The church in the above article justifies our Government to go to war with Germany, and says, "Certainly the American Government has lifted an ensign of peace for the third or fourth time" (Doctrine and Covenants 63: 9). "I the Lord would fight their battles."

It is a question with the writer where the righteousness and the justice lies, for this church to uphold either side, and I think the church has made a sad mistake to uphold either side. It ought to stay neutral. As a Latter Day Saint for over thirty years, loyal to my adopted country as a man can be, I love to see truth and righteousness established here on this earth. I could not see the justice in the course the church is taking.

The writer longs to see the day that all the warring countries would be swept of their kings, England included, and a just government installed. But for the church to take the course it is taking, it must shake a true Latter Day Saint.

Respectfully yours,

J. S. PETERS.

Western Nebraska and Black Hills

Being assigned to my old field, Western Nebraska and Black Hills, I left Lamoni on April 13 direct for the field and arrived in North Platte on the 14th, where I was well received by the Saints. I remained over Sunday and preached a few sermons. Went on to Angola and preached several sermons in that vicinity. There are a few Saints there and they manifested their zeal by their works. I organized a Sunday school while there and baptized a young man.

At Bridgeport I visited and preached as weather and road conditions permitted, baptizing four. Brother Meglimre and family are standing supporters of the work there. The few others also manifested becoming interest.

Made a short stay at Minatare, baptizing another youth from whom I have reason to believe the church will hear in the future. Preached a sermon or two at Gering and attended to the funeral of Brother O. O. McHenry. Met with the Albin Branch and was pleased indeed to find such pleasant conditions there. About three years ago Brother O. B. Thomas and myself were sent there to help Brother McConley who was introducing the work at that place. Four were baptized at that time. The work has grown steadily till they have a flourishing branch now. Elder H. H. Robinson of Kimball is at their head. He is a live wire. Brother J. Albin Anderson is another live wire and solicits for tithes in the branch. Elder Alvin Knisley dropped in while I was there and baptized a convert of his. He was full of cheer and energy as usual.

We were glad to note that the Saints are very much alive and interested in the progress of the work and know how to make a missionary feel at home and enjoy the good Spirit of the Master in presenting the angel message.

On to Spearfish, South Dakota, where I observed another great change. Several years ago I visited the place, preached several sermons and baptized an old man. I suppose he has crossed the river we call death, but there are others there who have accepted the gospel and are surely alive to gospel interests. They are of the kind that wield an influence that is felt in the town. They treat a missionary so that he feels that it is a joy to be a missionary. I enjoyed my visit there very much, baptizing one. I trust the time may soon come when they can be organized into a branch.

From there I went on to Belmont, where there are a few Saints trying to keep "the lower lights burning." I visited and preached a few sermons, ministered to a young man of the Catholic Church who was sorely afflicted.

Went on to Tryon. Here is a branch of the church that I assisted in organizing some years ago and baptized a large percentage of their members. Glad to find them alive spiritually and striving to build up the work. While I notice a little lack of wisdom along spiritual lines, I trust that through prayerful diligence harmony may prevail. I enjoyed preaching the gospel there very much and had the privilege of leading six precious souls into the waters of baptism. In their confirmation the Spirit attended in great power and signified that the Lord was well pleased with them in their obedience to his will. I am satisfied that one or more of their number will be known to the church as of more than ordinary usefulness.

I am glad to note there is so much of the spiritual life among the Saints where I have visited. I have been kindly received and well treated by them all, for which I am indeed thankful. May God bless them with all his children.

Bringing Forth Fruits of a Life in Christ

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."—John 15: 8.

If we do not bear fruit, are we his disciples? Is not that the ground upon which we are his disciples? What think ye?

The railroads say: "Safety first." Christ says: "Purity first." To live a pure life must be followed to gain recognition of Jesus as his disciples. Paul had a clear conception of true conditions of a life in Christ. "Christ in you the hope of glory." Yes, and that by a divine process when you are baptized in water you are born into Christ in part; when you are confirmed you receive the Holy Spirit; the germ of new life enters you. Now you are a citizen of the kingdom of Christ and to be true to your citizenship you must bring forth the fruits of this new life.

If you fail to bear fruit, will you have the "hope of glory"? Think about it. If you have the Holy Spirit will it not be apparent? Has it changed? No, you say God cannot change. All right, then it will show its presence as of old. "The fruits of the spirit are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law."

If you put sugar into anything will it not show its presence? If you have the Holy Spirit will it not also? If you have not the Spirit what does that show? "God is no respecter of persons"—must be something wrong with you. What would you think of a rosebush that never had any roses on it? Or an apple tree that never had any apples on it? What would you do with it? What will God do with us? We are to be governed by law, the law of God.

Christ says: "If you bring forth much fruit, you glorify my Father." Can we do it any other way? If we do not glorify and honor God what are we doing? We will be like the rosebush which never bore roses, or the apple tree without fruit.

God first in all things. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind and soul." What else have you? That shows that all the forces of the being, according to the divine desire, shall be concentrated upon God, to do his will.

What kinds of fruit should we bear? Must they not be the fruits of love to God and love to and for his cause to advance its interests? If you wanted to buy a piano or some other thing, you would make a strenuous effort to do so; make sacrifices to do so. Are you doing that?

Is not the promotion of the greatest thing in the universe of more worth than a piano or anything that will perish? Will we fail in a financial way? The Lord says: "Prove me herewith." How? "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house." What for? To care for the missionaries' families who are giving their all to promote the work of Christ; can you think of any better effort in life? As you make others happy your own happiness will be increased. "Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are his." Let us be wise unto salvation. Is not that what we are aiming at? If not what is your aim? Can you do it your way? The Lord says: "It must be done in mine own way."

Do you believe it? "Heaven and earth may pass away, but my word shall not fail."—Jesus.

What have you? What do you want? How are you going to get it? It must be gotten in some definite way. Jesus says: "I am the way, the truth and the life." Can you get your sins remitted only the way Jesus says? Then can you bear fruit only as he says? Will some other kind do? Will indifference do for effort as he directs?

We are being tested now to prove our fidelity. The just shall live by faith. Faith in what? In yourself? No, in God and his means of salvation. God waits for us; we do not have to wait for him. His plans are perfected.

Let us awaken these who are asleep. Let us bend every effort to advance the gospel work; better to do it now than to wait until we get over on the other side and wish we had. Let us not stand in our own light. If this gospel is worth anything it is worth every possible effort we can make for its advancement. "Ye are the salt of the earth, but if the salt has lost its savor wherewith will ye season it?" Have salt in yourselves and have peace one with another, so that when you are ready to go to your record of life you may have peace, not fear.

From Here and There

The officers of the Alma Branch, at Alma, Michigan, desire information as to the whereabouts of Jason E. Ludy, who left home last February. Send information to L. A. White, 110 North Grover Avenue.

All parents in the Spokane District with children three years of age or under, are asked to correspond with Miss Olive Gunter, with a view to having them enrolled on the cradle roll of the district. Address her at South 717 Ferrall Street, Spokane, Washington.

"An Interested Worker" writes: "Where can telegrams be had at one cent? Sunday school Christmas offering for one half the year was so reported. Surely no school would spend twenty-five cents when a postal would report it as well, saving twenty-four cents. One-cent telegrams will accommodate many of us. Where can they be had? Economy leads to large Christmas and other offerings."

JOHNS RIVER, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA.

Editors Herald: In sending you my yearly subscription, which I am pleased to be able to renew, I ask for a little space in the Letter Department of your valuable paper, in order that I may be able to try to write something concerning the Lord's work in this part of his vineyard, also in return for that which I enjoy and appreciate reading.

It is now a good many years since the "precious angel message" was first proclaimed to the people on this river. The first missionary to arrive here and hold preaching services was Elder J. W. Wight, of America. At that time there were very few Saints on Johns River, the members numbering about four, being of two families only. Later Elders John Kaler and Gomer R. Wells came to the locality, and with Brother Wight they held a number of meetings which were mostly conducted in private homes of the Saints. After a number of years of faithful service by these brethren, another family of Saints came from the Upper Manning, and took up their abode here. Soon after this, a Sunday school was organized by Brother Wight. But it was not until Apostle P. M. Hanson, then a young missionary to Australia and New Zealand, was preaching one night about a mile and a half from our home, that I first remembered hearing this glorious gospel presented, being then scarcely in my teens.

However, together with my parents or some of my brothers or sisters, I enjoyed going to the meetings to hear Brother Hanson, who held many services here, as well as other parts of this neighborhood. But, it happened that we were invited by some of the members to come along to the Sunday school which continued to move along. So some of us decided to attend, and I really believe that this same school had much to do with bringing others of our home as well as the writer, into the true fold, in later years. Before this time, however, Brother Hanson after some years of hard and continuous labor in this mission, in which very few were converted here, left for his home in America, via Palestine and other places. Brother C. Avery, who labored also here, left the field also about that time.

Then some time had passed away without a preacher, when we were glad to hear of Elder A. C. Barmore, who then very soon arrived and held a great many services here as well as round about. Before Brother Barmore had preached many times our mother, who was the first of our home to do so, decided to give her name in for baptism, thus uniting with the church of God. Since giving obedience to the gospel, as a true Latter Day Saint, she has had many experiences in life, one of which I will endeavor to relate here.

About two years ago, she was taken seriously ill, and the doctor, on arriving and seeing her, afterward said to some who were there in the house, that she had consumption and that he couldn't do anything for her. Talking to some after leaving, he said she only had about four days to live. But mother always had great faith in the Lord, and that if it was his will, she would recover. So the instruction given in James, the fifth chapter, was resorted to, the elders being called in, they administered by the anointing of oil in the name of the Lord. This was repeatedly done, and to-day mother, though not real strong, is enjoying her usual health, and rejoices that she has two sons and five daughters in the church.

After many untiring efforts by Elders C. A. Butterworth, J. Jones, E. F. Robertson and others to get the gospel before the people, a branch with forty-nine members was organized by Apostle G. T. Griffiths and Elder John Jones in 1914. The following were the officers appointed: C. H. Ivers, president; Brother G. McLaughlin, secretary; J. T. McLaughlin and W. A. Ivers, priests; C. Bignell, teacher; and the undersigned as deacon. And though the officers are all new in the work, yet the branch has gradually forged ahead, and within many months a very neat little church was erected, which I am pleased to say has been dedicated to the Lord's service, being free from debt.

Our church is very conveniently situated, being only about three and a quarter miles from Johns River railway station, so visiting Saints have no trouble in finding us. Together with other Saints from here as well as from Tuncurry Branch, about a year and ten months ago, I enjoyed the privilege of attending some of the sessions of a debate held in Taree, about twenty-two miles from here, between Evangelist G. E. Burns of the Campbellite Church, and Brother P. M. Hanson, who with Sister Hanson had just returned to Australia. Though this debate is that of history, yet we all rejoice in the manner in which Brother Hanson defended the claims of the Reorganized Church. Much credit is also due to Elder W. J. Burrows and Brother C. A. Loving, for through their earnest toil this discussion was brought about. And though no converts were made for our side, yet we believe much good was done.

At present we have Elder W. Patterson and Brother W. J. Vaughan laboring together in this district. They are both able and earnest workers for the cause, and are very popular with both members and nonmembers. Our Sunday school, of which our worthy Brother C. H. Ivers is superintendent, is superintendent, is still improving. Brother Vaughan who is at present presiding over our little, alive Religio, proves himself to be a tower of strength to that auxiliary. He is also president of the district Religio society. The total membership of the Johns River Branch is now fifty-four, five being added by baptism since its organization. The recent annual district reunion, which convened during Easter, at Laurieton, was attended by a large gathering of the Saints, all branches of the district being represented. A spiritual uplift as well as an enjoyable time together was enjoyed by all. Laurieton is a little town situated on the Camdenhaven River, and in this place is the home of Brother and Sister Will Rodger. Brother Rodger is the nephew of the late Brother Glaud Rodger, who with Brother Charles Wandell were the first missionaries of the Reorganized Church to reach our shores.

Another nephew, Brother John Rodger, together with Sister Rodger and family reside in Wauchope; a few miles farther north in the district among the visitors to reunion were, Evangelist John Jones, Bishop Lewis and daughter Lily. The two latter came from Wallsend, Southern New South Wales district.

One precious soul in the person of Sister Smith, mother of Sister John Rodger, was led into the waters of baptism by Brother Vaughan a few days following the termination of the conventions. Heretofore the Northern New South Wales annual district conferences were held during the Christmas holidays. But, this year it was decided to hold district conference and reunion combined, in 1918, Easter time, at Buladelph on account of the mission conference being again held in Sydney, together with that of the Southern District. This should be a change for the better. The latter-day work in this district under our beloved president, Brother G. H. Parker, seems to now have a firm footing. May it continue to grow.

We were pleased to hear of the result of General Conference, when the HERALD came to hand. Especially did I enjoy reading the president's report. As in other branches, we have been having our share of sickness. Among the afflicted members of the branch are Brother and Sister John Barratt, who are at present in Sydney, both seeking a Specialist's advice. Next Sunday, 24th instant, we are holding special prayer services for the sick and suffering of the district, especially on Brother J. Maybury's behalf. All have been asked, who care to do so to abstain from the midday meal. May they receive God's blessing sufficient to be restored to health and strength.

Dear Saints, as the hastening time is fast approaching may we all be as wise virgins and have our lamps trimmed and burning when the Bridegroom shall come to gather up those, his faithful ones who have endured unto the end.

Your brother and coworker with Christ,
CHARLES H. MADDALENA.

TOLEDO, OHIO, July 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: The change from active missionary work to that of local work has been more than I anticipated, and have as yet not become entirely adjusted to it. I came to Toledo about a month ago and have learned to love the Saints with brotherly love, and while I find that mistakes have been made, I find a humble spirit that assists to correct all mistakes and bring about a reconciliation that is commendable.

This is a city of activities. I have never been in any place where the outlook for labor was as good, especially for mechanics. The Government has let contracts for tents, airplanes, and other army equipments to exceed $25,000,000, and the talk is that about $200,000,000 worth will be manufactured here. Many acres are to be covered with buildings especially for this purpose.

The branch here is numbered only about eighty, and only about half of them are in the city, or if in the city are inactive. The attendance on the part of these in the city is good. We have from twelve to eighteen to every Wednesday evening service, and from thirty to forty at the preaching services. Street preaching has been held each Saturday night since I have been here, and the interest is increasing up till the present. The meetings so far manifest spirituality beyond some of the larger branches, and the spiritual interest seems on the increase. We find some of the Saints have gone far away from God and his righteousness, and the present effort is to seek and to save the lost, but there are some who do not manifest a desire to be saved. This is a very wicked place, open saloons and a red light district, neither of which exists in Des Moines, my home. A strenuous effort is being made to bring Ohio into the dry column this fall, and I am doing my part in this effort.

There is a manifest humility on the part of all, both members and ministers, in this branch, and my stay so far has been very pleasant—the indications are that it will become more so as I get better acquainted with the people and work. The burden of debt on the Saints because of building a place of worship has caused some discouragement, but there is evidence of recovery from that, and all seem more encouraged to try to lift together the burden that rests upon all. This is commendable.

Some mistakes in letting transgressors continue without proper attention, and the church has suffered some from this and is still suffering, but so far as I can ascertain the local brethren have done all they could, being engaged in daily employment, and their time nearly all occupied that way. Some of these difficulties are being adjusted, and others are in course of adjustment, and we hope to save all. When a brother or sister gets in a disposition that he does not want to be subject to law and authority, it is hard to save him. Sometimes the spiritual disease gets so bad that an operation must be performed. This is the sad duty of those intrusted with the pastoral care of the flock.

I am looking forward to the time when I can be located with my family here, so that my mind may not be divided as much as it now is, and I can do more effectual work in the interests of the work to be done. I find much to be done, and but few to do it, but those few seem willing to do so far as they see it is their duty, and as they have time and ability.

To save the members of the church is the crying need of the hour. To get the local churches so that when others are gathered in with faith that this is the work of God, they will find a place of spiritual supply, which has not always been the case heretofore, is most necessary. From what I learn this branch has been in the enjoyment of the Spirit at times, but it did not last; but there seems to be a longing for the former experiences and many are making a consistent effort to secure them.

If any of the Saints have friends in this city please give me their names and addresses, and as soon as possible I will call. If any know of Saints who either may be here, or may come in the future, please to write me, so that we may call. Let such ones know of a branch here, and the location of the church building at 1202 Waverly Avenue.

Trying to patiently labor under temporal conditions not very encouraging, I am.
Your brother in Christ,
J. F. MINTUN.

GENOA, NEVADA, July 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: Possibly some of the experiences of the Sagebrush Parson would again interest the readers of the HERALD. I was summoned from home early in May by telegram to Lovelock, Nevada. Arriving there I found a young man, Harry Presby, suffering from the effects of being run over by a freight train, his right arm off at the elbow and his skull crushed. He was then having periodical spells like epileptic fits. Sister Neelie Valley, his aunt, was there and for a long time tried to interest him in the gospel, but to no avail. He had absolutely had no use for God or religion, so he thought. He had not yet sown enough "wild oats," although he had sown them thick and with a liberal hand for ten years. These spells however, brought him to his senses, and he began to call upon God. Sister Valley telegraphed and wrote to different places for an elder as Harry wanted some one with authority from God to administer and baptize him. A week or so before I came Sister Valley saw in vision a man baptizing Harry. The man had the front finger of his left hand off and combed his hair up from his forehead.

On the morning of my arrival, I was talking to Harry's sister, Mrs. Edna Curry, showing the necessity for church organization. In doing so I raised my left hand and she noticed the absence of my finger. That convinced her that I was a man sent of God, and the next day both of them were baptized. Two days thereafter, through Harry's influence and the Spirit's power, I had the pleasure of baptizing into the fold his father, mother, aunt, and cousin. Whenever the spells came on they were rebuked by the Spirit's power through administration. Brother Presby, sr., also felt the power of the Spirit in administration and testified to it, all in the room feeling the power of God within them.

In the course of a week or so Sister Presby was talking with a neighbor telling how the Lord had blessed them. The women said, "Why, you must be a Latter Day Saint." Receiving an affirmative answer, she said her husband's people were or had been members of that church, and invited the minister to call. I did so and after a good deal of talking and the Spirit's working, the father and six children from eight to nineteen years of age were received into the faith. Others in the place professed belief but procrastinated the time of their deliverance.

Sister Presby had always said she was "sufficient unto herself," and had no need of a Savior. In a letter since, after visiting at a hospital and seeing a man hopelessly dying, yet afraid to die, she said, "I am so glad I found God before it was too late."

From there I went to Hualipi to the home of Brother J. L. Detrick. He lives thirty miles from Gerlach, the nearest railroad point. Brother Detrick has secured one hundred and twenty acres of land there and a water right. To enable him to improve the rest, he wants to sell eight acres at twenty dollars an acre, with a water right. As Government rights cost as a rule twenty-five dollars an acre, this is very low. The soil is fertile and covered with the usual sagebrush. Brother Detrick is very desirous of having a family of Saints there with two or more children as they can have a school. If any of the brethren are interested they will do well to write Brother Detrick.

From there we visited Sister Doyle at Chilcoot, California, whom we baptized last summer. Her husband is thinking of obeying.

Coming on to Carson Valley on the fifth, we felt almost like coming home. Have since baptized Brother Frank Bal-lou, whose wife, daughter and two sons were baptized last year.

Ever praying for the triumph of Zion,

S. M. REISTE.

EDMONTON, ALBERTA, July 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am now traveling through this north country with my congenial companion, J. A. Gillen. This is a wonderful change for me, as my missionary work has always been in the South. While I liked the south field work I am enjoying the change, getting acquainted with new people and conditions which I consider of great value to me.

At this time of year in the South we suffer so much with the heat generally, and here we need a light overcoat nearly every night, especially when we are riding. Some things are so noticeable: the days are so long, scarcely ever need a light in our night services commencing at eight or eight-thirty. We can see to read at the close of the service by the daylight. I like the country and the people fine. While they have a short summer season it produces small grain and potatoes the best of any country I have seen, also great for grass; cattle are now very fat. It also seems to be a good country to produce Latter Day Saints, and I find them generally active workers and believe in keeping the whole law.

They are keeping Brother Gillen and me busy. They believe in working us while they have a chance. We just returned from Millet, thirty miles south of here where we had held a two-day meeting, and dedicated a church yesterday. We have five other points to make in this country, then we go back to the States.

We did some work in Iowa on our way north, helped in a ten-day reunion at Frazee, Minnesota, where we enjoyed special liberty in preaching and administering. Also a reunion at Logan, North Dakota, lasting ten days, where much good was done.

Our camp was thrown into a gloom when Brother Morgan Graham received a telegram, his Brother Charles had been killed by a train at Lamoni, Iowa. He and Sister Graham and sister left immediately for Lamoni. This of course, crippled our work as they were among our main standbys and workers. We left before their return. I consider Sister Graham one of our specialists in church work.

We ordained Brother William Osler of this city a high priest. He is president of this Alberta District. Brother T. J. Jordan is presiding over the Saskatchewan District and is doing a good work. We are so glad to come in contact with these good men and to see the good work they are doing. To know the men you must see them on the ground, and to see them in action. And I am glad to say most of them when tested out are, in my estimation, better than I thought. I think you will find this the case generally with all true men. I am sorry to say we also have some men whose works we cannot feel are profitable, and likely they will not last long as representatives of the church. Of course, we expect some to fall away. I haven't mentioned any names in commendation, but will say I believe most of our representatives are good true men. I hope to see my old field in the South late this fall and winter.

Sincerely yours,

W. M. AYLOR.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, July 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: It is with considerable pleasure that we announce the organization of a branch at Grandview, Jackson County, on Sunday, July 22, with thirty-three charter members and a complete corps of officers. This place is located twenty miles from Independence, in the southwestern part of Jackson County in its most beautiful and productive territory, and is an ideal place for a gathering point for Saints who wish to move in harmony with the direction in the law and assist in the strengthening of Zion.

This district is adapted to agriculture and stock raising and some of the finest stock in the United States is raised in this vicinity. We had the privilege of viewing some of the imported Shorthorn heifers owned by Mr. Forsythe, as well as some of his native stock. They were certainly beautiful animals and one would wonder why anyone in the live stock business would give their time and feed to the inferior stock.

The Saints at Grandview have been looking forward for some time toward this organization. They have been meeting in a stone building which they leased and remodeled, as they are not able at the present time to build a church on the lots which they have purchased.

The following were selected as branch officers: Elder C. V. Hopkins, president; Elder Lewis E. Anderson, presiding priest; George R. Wheeler, teacher; William E. McLaughlin, deacon; Maude P. Dyer, clerk; Dollie F. Taylor, chorister and organist; James R. Dyke, member library board; Sister C. V. Hopkins, correspondent. Bishop C. J. Hunt nominated C. V. Hopkins as bishop's agent, which was approved. The branch starts out with splendid prospects and united interests.

A Religio society was organized with Cornelius Edgerton, president; Lewis F. Anderson, vice president; Iva Edgerton, secretary.

Anyone who desires to settle in Jackson County and engage in the farming or live stock business should certainly investigate the Grandview territory.

Sincerely,
D. J. KRAHL.

ANDES, MONTANA, July 24, 1917.

Editors Herald: We note with interest the zeal of the children and some of the grownups in raising a big Christmas offering, and can say that our school has already doubled their last years' offering. Yet it does not seem to me just the right thing for the older ones to stand idly by and wait two or three years for the children to pay off the church debt, and to help the thing along also ask them not to have their names printed in the Blue Stepping Stones.

Now I think the grownups ought to "do their bit." So I would like to make this suggestion: That every family in the church make a Thanksgiving offering of at least five dollars, and as much more as they can and make it a general movement throughout the church, even if we do have to cut down some on our Thanksgiving dinner.

If this should meet with favor and the bishop should request it through the church papers so that everyone would make a special effort with the idea that we are going to pay off the church debt as the Lord has requested, we can do it this year and not wait three years for the children to do it. Then we won't need to blush when we read Luke 6:46: "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

Hoping that all who favor this will say, "I" on Thanksgiving day, with from five dollars up, I am your brother in hope of a free church in every sense of the word.

J. W. VAIL.

PIPER CITY, ILLINOIS, July 24, 1917.

Editors Herald: The Saints in this branch are still in the faith and trying to live in the light. The branch numbers about thirty-five, but over twenty are absent from the branch, some of them living at quite a distance.

The Sunday school is doing very good work and expects to organize a normal class soon.

Elders J. O. Dutton and W. A. McDowell have recently held a series of meetings here, extending over a period of six days. Brother S. D. Heavener is the only officer in the branch, a priest. Two of the Sunday school girls were baptized not long ago. Later two more gave in their names for baptism, but when the ordinance was to be performed there were four instead of two. The Spirit was present in power at the confirmation meeting and made it a day long to be remembered. The work of Brother Heavener was commended and two young men held in high esteem by the branch were told to prepare themselves for work in the ministry.

Brother McDowell has given several blessings here and his helpful counsel appreciated. We hope several other interested ones will unite with the church soon.

DORA E. HEAVENER.

be recorded when certificates of marriage are presented to city or town clerks.

This important ecclesiastical question was determined today by Judge Loring of the Supreme Judicial Court, and as a result of this decision a cloud of confusion has been lifted, as heretofore it was believed by many that the Reorganized Church was associated with the Utah Mormon Church and its accompanying recognition of polygamous marriages.

Reverend Frederick W. Blanchard of East Lynn raised the issues involved in a petition filed by him against Joseph W. Attwill, city clerk of Lynn, for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to record a marriage solemnized by him.

The case came up for a hearing on its merits before Judge Loring to-day. Much interesting matter involving the origin of the church was gone into and dated from the early 1800's when Joseph Smith founded the Mormon Church.

"We are in no way connected with them and do not believe in polygamous marriages," he said he told Mr. Attwill. —Boston Record, June 29, 1917.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

A Dollar Library of Tracts

The advertising manager, A. E. McKim, has prepared a list of tracts covering the different phases of our work, which it is planned to have made up into a set and sold for one dollar. This should prove an excellent means for missionary work, and we trust that our people will secure several sets for such use, especially should they be recommended to our library boards and gospel literature bureau. This list does not include all of the tracts published, but it does include a representative number.

Historian Visits Historic Places

Elder Heman C. Smith, church historian, and his wife, left Lamoni on July 24 to locate the old Bogard battle ground on Crooked River, Ray County, Missouri. This was satisfactorily located, but the spot where the victims of the cholera plague were buried was not found. The result of this interesting trip will be written of later, for publication in the Journal of History. Brother Smith teaches a class of business men in church history at Lamoni and they are talking of making a trip through that country. If this is done, the account may include this.

Can People Find Your Church?

Not long ago a young brother in training in Chicago looked in the telephone directories and everywhere else he could think of and couldn't locate anything except one that looked suspicious. He went there and found it was the Utah people. Another lad hunted in vain for the address of our church in San Francisco, while we have been hearing of such things from a number of sources of late. If you have done all you can, well and good, but if there are still avenues of publicity open or that may be opened that are not used they should have immediate attention. It may be too late now for present needs, but it's a good time to begin. For the benefit of those who constantly write us about the location of the church meeting places in various cities, we would like to hear from all the city branches, that we may make up a card index. We wish to supply this information promptly to those who ask us, and if you will help it will be appreciated.

August "Autumn Leaves"

The August Autumn Leaves is now before us in a new and very attractive form, with further changes coming. It is printed in two columns, making shorter lines and hence easier to read, as has been proven after hundreds of tests. A rearrangement of the type and a little longer page give fifteen per cent more reading matter to an issue, and this filled with good things. First come two excellent cuts of Kirtland temple with a poem; The Camp Cricket gives reunion notes and suggestions; the Editorial Chat consists of many short paragraphs, instead of one long sermonet; the new department, the Periscope, gives promise of spicy and pointed information, a fair sample of which is served. At last we are told whom Janey will marry in "A vineyard story." The Young Woman's Department, Religio's Arena, and the Sunday School Department remind us that this is the young people's magazine of the church. The increased space permits matter of great interest to be offered.

THE REASONS WHY You Should Go to Graceland

IX—FACULTY

No college can be stronger than its faculty. In investigating any institution for the purpose of allowing credit, a board of examiners will lay special stress on the efficiency of the faculty.

In this respect, Graceland meets the most rigid requirement. The instructors in the Junior College are fully up to the standard required by the American Association of Colleges and Universities. In all other departments, the members of the faculty are well qualified.

The majority of the faculty members are thoroughly interested in the development of the college and the church. This naturally makes for a condition of permanency—an absolute essential for real stability.

SOME PROPHETIC ASPECTS OF THE WAR

We have had several requests for a discussion of prophecies concerning the war, the millenium and the second coming of Christ. It is significant that for the last hundred years nearly every great war has made for greater liberty of the people and has tended towards democracy, even though apparently that was not the result or intention.

Since the establishment of the American Government great strides have been made by revolution, either peaceful or warlike, towards a recognition of the rights of the people. This has been the case in the Far East, in China, where a republic has been established and in Japan where a constitution was granted by the Mikado in the seventies.

England has given greater liberties to all her colonies, including India, and is herself one of the most democratic governments in fact. Siberia has gained in liberty together with the rest of the Russian Empire as one of the greatest outcomes of the present war. So quietly it was difficult to realize autocracy was revoked in Russia and that democracy had arisen. Persia and Turkey have also made progress. In fact, it would be difficult to find a nation which has not in either form or substance drawn nearer a democratic ideal. Even the Franco-Prussian War resulted in the end of the empire of Napoleon III and the establishment of the present republic, which has continued for over forty-five years and has proven the most stable government in France, since the French Revolution.

So many hope that the present war which already has secured additional recognition of women's rights and of the rights and dignity of labor among the entente, may produce a clear and broad recognition of the principle of democracy, a government of the people, for the people and by the people throughout Europe, and so open the way for freedom of speech and the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom.

Much has been written in this line and the present tendency appears to be very decidedly in that direction, provided the entente is victorious. We consider it safe to assert that the people of this country have no antagonism against Germany or the German people, but only against autocracy and militarism.

Much has been written concerning the possible liberation of the Jews in Russia. Many observers of the present day consider it an accomplished fact. We have seen some articles which have urged, pursuant to Daniel 11, that Turkey will be driven out of Europe and will make her stronghold in the Holy Land. This chapter does not appear to us to be sufficiently clear to justify such an interpretation. Certainly we should not attempt it in an official way. The dominant opinions from many sources are intimated in the following extract from a daily paper (citation has been lost) and rather tend towards the emancipation of the Holy Land:

A NEW JERUSALEM

The breaking of diplomatic relations with the United States by Turkey, following the example of Austria according to the wish, if not the express direction, of Germany, increases the probability that over no land will the end of the war and the settlement of peace bring a greater change than over Palestine.

The Holy Land! Ironical and paradoxical that the tide of war should have swept over it so often and that it has been the scene of the bitterest animosities that ever divided men. Once more are its strongholds and the ancient Zion fortified and an army of invasion has moved across its southern border to pitch battle with the Turk, the modern Philistine, at the gates of Gaza.

Even if Turkey should not proceed to become a declared belligerent against the United States, the Ottoman government has gone so far that it may expect no word from us on its behalf in the settlement, and with a victory by the allies and the United States it is certain that Palestine, with all its historic places and sacred associations dear to the Christian heart, will pass definitely into Christian custody or award. The Turk will be banished forever from the shrines he has desecrated and polluted, the worst enemy the Cross has ever had. It will make a great difference. It will seem like a reconquest of the promised land. The dream of the pious and valiant Crusader will have been realized, and the Christian pilgrim may visit the land with his imagination, his recollections and his meditations undisturbed by the consciousness of the contamination of the Moslem Turk.

It would not be inconsistent with Christian sentiment to give over the redeemed land of the patriarchs, the prophets, the apostles and the Christ to the descendants of its former possessors, that nation without a country—the Jews, for Jewish history to the hour of Calvary is Christian history and the Jewish scriptures are a part of the Christian Bible, and Christian hearts would regard with complaisance and gratification the apparent fulfillment of prophecy in the return of the Jews to the land of their fathers.

A sign of the ardent intensity of the hope raised by the war in the minds of the Zionists is the fact that Israel Zangwill has again become an enthusiastic Zionist after having been alienated from the movement for twelve years. He gave up hope that it would be possible to create a Jewish state in Palestine under Turkish rule, and went to looking for some other region—Africa, Australia, Mexico, Central America—to which Jews dwelling in lands of persecution and oppression could flee and establish themselves on an autonomous basis, but was unable to find a suitable location. Now he is satisfied that Palestine is about to be wrested from its tyrants and thinks it possible for the Jews as a nation to regain possession of it under satisfactory conditions. He will therefore do his utmost for this consummation.

It would be strange. The prayer, uninterrupted for two thousand years, at the wailing wall of Jerusalem would be answered.

Others urge the thirtieth chapter of Jeremiah (1-7), and especially the seventh verse, which reads: "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it." Certainly this day is very great, so that none is like it; but the thought of the chapter seems to be the restoration of Israel and this seems to be indicated by the extract above. This passage indeed seems to be near fulfillment, yet there have been other great and terrible days, and if the record is true there will yet be still others to come.

Much has been written at various times concerning the signs of the times. Among others are given the sea and the waves roaring (Luke 21: 25) and the sea heaving itself beyond its bounds, earthquakes and tempests (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25). It is indeed strange that in the past seventy years there have been more instances of the sea beyond its bounds than in all the rest of history combined. The same may be said of the frequency of earthquakes, which is cited as another instance of the times. Disasters by sea is also given as a sign, and in view of the Bible record they seem to point to the approaching of the end. Nebuchadnezzar's vision (Daniel 3) has many times been referred to as already being in process of fulfillment.

But especial attention may be called to the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew (29: 31):

Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

The whole chapter may be read with profit, and also the twenty-fifth chapter. Evidently these chapters are in answer to the third question: When shall these things be which thou hast said concerning the destruction of the temple, and the Jews; and what is the sign of thy coming; of the end of the world? (or the destruction of the wicked, which is the end of the world.) (Matthew 24: 4, I. V.) There are three distinct periods here referred to. Evidently the same period is referred to in Luke 21: 25-27; Inspired Translation.

Evidently the same period is referred to in Luke 21: 25-27, Inspired Translation.

And then his disciples asked him, saying, Master, tell us concerning thy coming? And he answered them, and said, In the generation in which the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, like the sea and the waves roaring. The earth also shall be troubled, and the waters of the great deep; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. For the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh.

Surely if there ever was a day when men's hearts failed them for fear, it is in the midst of the trials by sea, the railroad wrecks and wars of the present time. It may be noted in passing that Luke 12: 40-42 (Inspired Version), in connection with the rest of the chapter, indicate a second and a third coming of the Master. Other scriptures lead us to believe that the second coming is before the millennium; the third coming will be after Satan has been loosed for a little season (Revelation 20: 7), when Gog and Magog come to battle and finally the earth is redeemed and purified by fire.

Sometimes confusion is caused by referring to the second coming passages which concern the third coming. Many passages would seem to indicate that, though Satan is bound, there still will be unrighteousness upon the earth, "the child of the wicked shall be accursed" (Isaiah 65: 20-23; Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13), and the fact that Satan is so soon able to gather together Gog and Magog.

But before that day there remains the great battle of Armageddon. (Revelation 16: 14-16.) Before the coming of the Master it seems plain from these and many other passages of the Bible that peace shall be taken from the earth, and that after the millennium there will still be another great battle against the Holy City and the camp of the Saints.

In modern revelation we find the distinct declaration that peace shall be taken from the earth and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6.

And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth. . . . and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved; but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die. And there shall be earthquakes, also, in divers places, and many desolations; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword one against another, and they will kill one another.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4.

I, the Lord, am angry with the wicked; I am holding my Spirit from the inhabitants of the earth. I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape; nevertheless, I, the Lord, am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father, and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire. And, behold, this is not yet, but by and by.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 9.

It will be noted that the latter part of this paragraph urges a movement, a gathering of Zion, yet the paragraph preceding admonishes that it should not be in haste, lest there be confusion and pestilence. This should be done in justice, recognizing our obligations to the Government and to our neighbors, so that Zion may indeed become a place of safety (Ibid., 45: 13) and a place where there may be peace, for Zion has not yet been established.

Again, in section 108: 4 we are urged that our "flight shall not be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you." When we do and come in humility and righteousness, then shall Zion be redeemed by power. If we will move forward in righteousness to the establishment of Zion, having the things prepared before us, then it will be the New Jerusalem (Ibid., 36: 12) and the abode of our Lord (Ibid., 36: 13), wherein we shall prepare to go forth to meet the bridegroom.

And now, behold, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the city of our God; and surely Zion cannot fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he hath sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower; therefore verily thus saith the Lord, Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, the pure in heart; therefore let Zion rejoice, while all the wicked shall mourn; for, behold, and lo, vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly, as the whirlwind, and who shall escape it; the Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day; and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet, it shall not be stayed until the Lord come; for the indignation of the Lord is kindled against their abominations, and all their wicked works; nevertheless Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her, but if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction, with pestilence, with plague, with sword, with vengeance, with devouring fire; nevertheless, let it be read this once in their ears, that I, the Lord, have accepted of their offering; and if she sin no more, none of these things shall come upon her, and I will bless her with blessings, and multiply a multiplicity of blessings upon her, and upon her generations, forever and ever, saith the Lord your God. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.

This brings the new theme, and that is that Zion will be visited with affliction unless she keeps the commandments of God and that she must be chastened unless she obeys (Ibid., 98: 5). In fact, it is declared that the scourge will go forth from Zion and unless she hearkens, the scourge will go forth upon her and over her (Ibid., 83: 8).

This emphasizes anew the situation in which we find ourselves. The world is beginning to think and talk of the coming of the millennium. Tolstoi wrote concerning it before the war, and many have expressed the hope that this war will lead to the introduction of the millennium when righteousness and justice will be done between man and man. We are not prepared to say when, for the record is clear that no man knows the day nor the hour (Luke 12: 40 seq. I. V.); so it were useless to attempt to interpret the Scriptures, so as to say at the close of this war the millennium will begin.

Nevertheless the Master himself is reported to have declared, "When ye see these things ye may know that his coming is nigh." (Matthew 24: 42; Luke 21: 31, I. V.) It behooves us then to stand in holy places. Many other passages may be brought to bear on prophecies concerning the war, pestilence, scourges and famine that will be poured out upon the earth as a witness to the time of his coming. Yet, as the coming of the leaves betoken that summer is nigh, so we are bid to lift up our heads and to rejoice when we see these things come to pass, for we may know that the coming of the Son of man is near. (Luke 21: 27.) It behooves us, then, to seek earnestly to understand and to keep the commandments of our God.

Reckon the days in which you have not been angry. I used to be angry every other day; then every third or fourth day; and if you miss it so long as thirty days, offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving to God.—Epictetus.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

THE SCAPEGOAT

Question. In the sixteenth chapter of Leviticus the sins of the people were put on the goat and it was turned loose. Why?

Answer. Most Bible critics consider this act as being symbolic. The laying on of hands was for cursing. Some suggest that it was sent to the wilderness, where dwelt the evil power. Many claim that the two goats were to prove the one symbol. The one goat is a sacrifice; by the shedding of blood it signified cleansing; the other, the literal bearing away of the sins of the people. Both have been taken to be a type of Christ. All atonement ceremonies are more or less veiled illusions to that great sacrifice made by Jesus.

We apparently have a parallel instance in the fourteenth chapter of Leviticus where leprosy is to be cleansed from the house. Two turtle doves or pigeons are taken. One is slain and the premises is sprinkled with the blood mixed in water. The other after having been employed as a sprinkler is set free to carry away the evil.

The Jewish Encyclopedia says that one goat was for JHWH and was slain as a public sin offering; the other goat was for Azazel, the leader of the fallen angels, i. e., Satan, and on it the sins of the people were laid by the laying on of hands. Some say it was a bribe to Azazel not to bring accusation against the people and so prevent the atonement. Others say that by it the sins of the people were sent back to the spirit of desolation and ruin, the source of all impurity. The goat was driven forth to the wilderness and down the cliff. When it was down a shout of relief went up.

The Talmud says: "Yearly on the Day of Atonement a red cord was fastened to the temple door, and as soon as the scapegoat reached the wilderness the cord turned white." But the same book says that for forty years before the destruction of the second temple the cord retained its original color.

LOTS

Question. In what manner were lots cast in order to determine the will of God? Did they have prayer and the Spirit designate?

Answer. As far as can be gathered from history and tradition the casting of lots was often employed by the ancient Israelites. Colored stones were used. They were thoroughly shaken up and one drawn forth, which signified the lot. Lots were cast for the dividing of the inheritance of the children of Israel in the land. (Numbers 26: 55.) Lots were cast to determine the scapegoat. (Leviticus 16: 33.) The choice of land (Judges 1: 3; 20: 9) for the division of property. The order of the priests and the daily service were also determined by lot. (1 Chronicles 24: 5.) It was used by Joshua to detect Achan as a criminal. (Joshua 7: 14-16.) It was used also in the times of Matthias. (Acts 1: 26.) Saul and Jonathan employed it to determine who had offended God, and it was likewise used by Jonah. (1 Samuel 41; Jonah 1: 7.)

The exact method employed we do not know. An effort was made to prevent preference. The whole thought underlying is divine direction and divine choice. It is meaningless unless it is so employed. Proverbs 16: 33 makes the direct statement that God does the choosing. In the case of Matthias the distinct declaration is made that prayer was first offered. This was doubtless a general rule, as it was a sacred ceremony in which divine guidance was expected, but we do not recall that a distinct statement was made that prayer was offered except in this one instance of Matthias.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

A Pleasant Vacation

We are informed in some of those mysterious ways that do not need an official notice, that our genial new advertising manager of the Board of Publication, Brother Arthur E. McKim, is to take a little vacation beginning on the 16th. We join with our readers in wishing him a happy honeymoon trip in company with Mrs. Ruby Short McKim, of Independence.

The Lamoni Reunion

The attendance and interest at the Lamoni reunion is most excellent. By changing the date and putting it one week earlier than was planned on, there were plenty of tents, though at a little higher cost than last year. As we write, the meetings have only fairly begun and there are about one hundred and twenty residence tents on the grounds. At the first meeting—a social service—there was an attendance of about three hundred, and the Lord graciously commended the Saints for their preparation and efforts to make the reunion a success. He promised to grant unto the Saints the blessings they desired in proportion to the efforts they were willing to make. The well-arranged programs indicate that much of interest will be had in all departments, continuing the excellent start already made. Since this is a reunion in one of the central places, and one in which all our readers will be vitally interested, we will report more of it in our next issue.

Persons who can only be graceful and ornamental—who can give the world nothing but flowers—should die young.—Anon.

THE HOME OF A SAINT

[Miss Knipschild will teach home economics at Graceland College the coming year. She has been taking advanced work at Columbia University, New York City, to this end. Some of her studies there proved truly inspiring, she writes, and has caused her to write this paper, setting forth some of the great underlying principles of æsthetics or the beauty belonging to a true home.—EDITORS.]

In these momentous times so fraught with human destiny, when nearly every nation is merged in this the greatest and most atrocious war ever known in the history of man, there is not a phase of life that escapes the pressure brought to bear. On all sides the cry is going out to produce, preserve, and conserve. One place where this should most emphatically apply is the home. Not only because the present crisis demands it, but also because we as Saints should heed the admonitions of those in authority and be deeply concerned about the financial condition of the church. It is highly imperative that we conserve our means in order to help decrease the church indebtedness and to promote this great gospel cause, which will assuredly have an unparalleled opportunity as a solace to the masses of humanity while grim war and death spread their desolation and destruction. These will be the mighty levelers, break down the barriers between ranks and classes, and man in his extremity will seek to restore his shattered faith and to fix his hope in a far better life.

This very essential reason would alone suffice that we should not lavish vast expenditures on our homes, thereby displaying our utter selfishness and leaving the church and humanity to want. But there is another reason which I wish particularly to discuss in this paper and that is the conservation of our means so as not to construct a house too large or elaborate, but one that is an expression of our personality.

We have all known people who have spent a portion of their lives in homes with various imperfect fittings and insufficiencies until they have amassed a goodly income and then exhausted every resource in overbuilding and overdecorating. The result may be a good looking mansion, consistent, graceful, and well proportioned. It may be a blameless achievement of architecture and decoration.

It would seem ungracious to find fault with such a perfectly worthy construction, but how often have we come away from our intimate friend's new home chilled and uncomfortable, almost unhappy? We do not feel that it is the same Mary or Ruth who so completely pervaded that old house of hers. Old-fashioned, in some respects, inconvenient, yet it was thoroughly delightful, for where the architect's touches failed or the decorator's draperies faltered Mary's personality somehow stepped in and eked out all deficiencies, corrected all errors. It was hers entirely. Now her new home is too large with no insufficiencies to be eked out. Her personality seems to slip and slide helplessly upon a kind of glacial surface which it cannot penetrate and make its own.

And so, if we consider all the homes, large or small, of our friends we shall see that there are fixed limits to the amount of space in them that is truly and pleasantly habitable. We cannot get that lovable "lived-in look" in rooms where we do not actually live and we cannot live all over a house that is larger than our needs.

Houses are curious things. We take a portion of illimitable space, wall it in and roof it over. Suddenly it ceases to be a part of God's out of doors and becomes an entity with an atmosphere of its own. As we live our way into the house, adapting it to our need, the bricks and mortar, the paint and plaster, cease to be inert matter and become alive. Like the plant, that organism which "slowly turns lifeless into living matter," woman has transformed her place of shelter from the beginning into something living. In her home she thus achieves almost an organic extension of herself. And as Saints, whose lives we feel should be the most exemplary to be found anywhere, we should seriously consider this thought before we build our homes, we should estimate how far our "self" will extend, how large a house we can humanize.

If we applied this thought to our whole life, as we most certainly should, we might have no trouble in applying it to our homes. It is the tendency of our era to want more of everything than we can use. When we get the Too-Much we demand we are crushed by it. Just as the capacity of the human stomach is limited to a certain quantity of food, so also is the capacity of the human spirit limited for appropriating and assimilating property in its different forms. Beyond this limit to what we can effectively make our own possession is a detriment.

This argument may seem to be upholding a moral value of poverty. But I am no convert to asceticism. I am simply emphasizing the æsthetic and vital value of "not too much." We should not be afraid of enough but greatly afraid of too much.

The direct result of helping ourselves to too much of anything is to coarsen and degrade. We know this as regards food. Nature writes it in large letters all over the man or woman of gross appetites. It is as plainly printed, although in smaller type on the faces of those who want too much of other things: houses, notoriety, money, power, etc.

In various respects the past has left us a noble heritage of moderation or not too much. This is especially true with regard to houses. As Americans we are slowly learning to appreciate the charm and delicacy of the old colonial types of homes which in their very simplicity so readily lend to charging them with our personality. Those early colonial homes of New England were always the simplest and most obvious expressions of that wholesome Puritan spirit. Dignity and refinement pervaded the very atmosphere of such simplicity.

This same simplicity and personal touch prevail in our modern cottage. A vitalized spirit, the comforts of living, ease, convenience, are all suggested by it. One writer says that a world full of model cottages might prove the happiest world. To her the state drawing rooms or any rooms only used for guests are a needless luxury and belong to the category of superfluous and pretentious, which should be cut off for the sake of developing a finer and more individual quality in our possessions.

More than one woman if she were honest with herself, would have to admit that she has too many possessions. Sometimes she is veritably ridden to exhaustion by the care of her "things." Besides being too many for her to animate she is deplorably hindered in caring for them from developing her mind in the higher things of life. As Saints of Zion under such conditions where would be our time to "study of all good books"? For this reason if for no other we should have need to remember the "simple life" slogan.

Our home life should be somewhat like scientific farming. The study of the soil as a science has taught us that we must resort to intensive farming which gives greater returns from reduced acreage. The same is true of the returns life makes to our spirits. We need a science of intensive living that we may get the larger crop from the smaller field.

This doctrine of limitation and selection is beautifully brought out in the words of a simple Norwegian maid, who while caring for the rooms of a woman said, "I like dis room. It looks like Norway. Dere iss more moneys in America, but in Norway t'ings iss more pretty. Even the kitchen is good to see. Dere iss shelves an' copper cooking dishes all shiny, all so happy looking. I like dem way best. It is better not so much moneys to haf, but to be more happy wit' one's t'ings."

It is the American woman "who has always had everything" that is at the very center of the tragic tangle of modern living. All the rush speeding-up of business is largely an outgrowth of her demands.

She often falls far short of the richest knowledge a woman can possess, the priceless secret of being "happy wit' one's t'ings." Her home is to other material possessions what a soul is to the body—the center from which life moves outward. If there is no greed in the home there will surely be less in the offices. If woman were to avowedly undertake to give quality to her belongings instead of demanding belongings which she hopes will confer quality upon her there would undoubtedly be both a lessening in the stress of life and an improvement in its texture.

Aside from the points that we cannot vitalize a lot of senseless luxury, that comfort and all the beauty which we can successfully charge with our personality are essentially wholesome, but that there is profanation in having more wonderful things than we are able to give the personal quality, there is one more thought—the ultimate purpose of our homes. A certain writer has so beautifully developed this thought that I shall quote her own words. They seem as if coming from the noble heart of a true mother of Israel. If every home of a Saint could breathe the lofty sentiment of her words Zion would truly be the land of the blessed where happiness and contentment reign supreme.

This ideal home of one so worthy of being called a home-mother was a little cottage set upon a mighty eminence, facing the sunset and the sea. Within it were all the treasures of her eyes, her mind, her heart. It was an abode composed of love, of aspiration, of desire. The ancient love of man for his shelter had gone into it, and the love of woman for the place of her appointed suffering. Desire for beauty and hope of peace were in its making. Its walls had heard the birth cries; her children had played about its door; out from it had been borne her dead. Inconsiderable speck on the vast hill-shoulder that it was, it could defy time and the elements, even as she defied them, for she had given it her own immortality.

I believe that in the humble business of loving the material things that are given to us to own and love, in shaping our homes around them, in making them vital and therefore beautiful, we are not only making the most of our resources in this life, but are doing more than that. Somehow, I cannot tell you how, I know that we are getting them across—into timeless places! In making them vital we are making them enduring.

Christ tells us to lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven. What did that mean to you when you were young? I had no idea that when I loved somebody very much or pitied somebody very much, when I shared my heart or shared my roof eagerly, that I was doing the commanding thing. Still less did I realize, when I worked hard to make my home more comfortable or more beautiful, that I was sending vibration from my everyday world right into the eternal one. But so sure as that our mortal shall put on immortality I now hold it that what we first find in the eternal world will be the things into which we have unstintingly flung our vitality, our feeling, while we are briefly here.

Thus when I am making my house live I am putting something into the eternal world that fire cannot burn, nor floods destroy, nor moth and rust corrupt. No heaven can be holy to me if I have not made this spot holy. I shall not ask, even from the mercy of the Merciful, a heavenly mansion if I have failed to make this earthly dwelling live. Eternity begins beside my hearth, shaped by my will.

These are the facts which I feel are paramount in the consideration of our home building. Surely their simplicity is within the reach of every Saint, rich or poor. A home in keeping with them is my ideal home of a Saint.

MABEL KNIPSCHILD.

CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE NATIONS

IS IT A FAILURE?

Since the great war began August 1, 1914, until now, when it is well along as its third year, there have been many writers and speakers questioning whether this wickedness, all this unparalleled destruction of life and of the life force of the European nations, does not denote that the Christianity of the so-called Christian nations is not only a failure but if it is not also a pretense or a sham, to claim that they are really Christians and followers of Christ.

Quite a variety of views have been set forth by leading men, ministers, educators, authors, scientists, business men and political leaders. At least one prominent man has said that to him there appears to be a "collapse of civilization," and an actual "denial of religion, of the religion of Him whom they professed to have followed," whose life principles they have in the past claimed to honor and abide by.

But, notwithstanding the apparent failure in the past and in the present, to live up to the Lord's teaching and example, yet the same writer claims to have hope that all will come right, and that at the end will come "a just and lasting peace" among and between all nations, by mutual agreement, and probably by mutual concessions. For he seems to have no idea other than that the Christianity professed among the nations is the true doctrine of Christ, except in their flying to arms so quickly against each other.

Another writes that "the hope of the world lies in the teaching of Jesus Christ, and in his spiritual conquest of the nations." Of course he has no knowledge or understanding about Christ's coming material conquest, or of his actual government over the nations, as spoken of by the prophets or by the Lord himself, which is to be a worldwide government and protectorate.

Yet another makes this reply: "You ask me how I square the message of the lowly Nazarene, 'Peace on earth good will to men,' with present facts, Europe a slaughterhouse. I do not attempt it."

One of America's great educators states as follows:

The founder of Christianity taught in conversation and in public speech, gentleness, mercy, righteousness, love, good will, and service. This teaching was cast into the Greek and Roman world, a world full of war and national selfishness.

Then he said about Christ's teaching that it is a marvel that so much of that teaching survived and became "fixed in human memories." But he writes an indictment against a perverted Christianity. He says:

It was inevitable that Christianity, embodied in priesthood, churches and councils, should be soon corrupted by paganism, militarism, and imperialism, and that the original teachings should later be buried under creeds and dogmas. The horrible war which is desolating Europe . . . proves that the Christian churches, Greek, Roman and Protestant, have completely failed, after an existence of over eighteen centuries, to control national passions and the hearts of rulers. . . . The rites, dogmas and creeds which have proved useless must be relegated to history with all their shocking ideas about God and man. . . . That is what the great war teaches concerning the shortcomings of organized Christianity and the long road humanity must travel before the blessed teachings of Jesus can come to govern the relations of man to man and nation to nation.

Certainly by such admissions as the foregoing we can see great proof that the word of the Lord is nearing its fulfillment, wherein Isaiah prophesied that the "covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations" should be removed, or destroyed, as stated in Isaiah 25:7. The light of the great dawning day is more plainly manifest before our eyes, and also we see that the eyes of other people are being opened to the important truth declared at the beginning of the latter-day work, namely that all had gone out of the way and departed from the Lord's way when they created their own "dogmas and creeds," as named by the last writer above quoted. If all these have not yet "proved useless" the time is near when they will be so found, when the people will say, "Surely our fathers inherited lies, vanity and things wherein there is no profit."

A university president writes as follows:

The present time is the most awful time in human history. Never before have the primitive forces of ruin and rapine been loosened on so gigantic a scale. . . . God is not mocked forever.

This makes us think of the word through Daniel the prophet, saying:

There shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book.—Daniel 12: 1.

Yes, the day is near for the deliverance of the Jews and for their restoration to their own land, as spoken by God's prophets.

Another writer declares:

In nineteen centuries the Christian church has failed to preach or even formulate to itself with any clearness a gospel of international Christianity, and it has idly hoped and prayed for universal peace without it.

Thus it is recognized by many thinkers of our times that the nations and their people, both pagan and Christian, have proven themselves unable to practice a noble generosity towards each other, or to have unselfish dealings with or to feel real love for each other and for all men, such as Christ taught and said was necessary in order that people might become the children of God and obtain eternal life. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

All the foregoing extracts are from the columns of Collier's Weekly, and the following is from the Review of Reviews, by Mr. Harold Begbie:

I am inclined to think that the churches as we now know them will cease to exist. I do not think that any form of ritual known at present will satisfy. . . . The day of formalism, of great national churches, with tremendous machinery, is almost over.

The last quoted writer believes that among the warring nations multitudes of people at home are learning the satisfaction there is in self-sacrifice such as they never experienced before, that they are waking up to the joy of doing something of value for others, that they are learning that such "service rendered to humanity is the highest expression" of life and they are thereby "losing their selfishness." He claims that "in all kinds of ways men and women of all classes are working for others, giving up for others, living for the first time lives of real devotion."

Thus even while the war goes on with terrible hatred between rulers and some of the people there are others being moved upon by sympathy, tenderness and love as never before, and I doubt not that such as these will by and by be ready to receive the true gospel and the coming kingdom of Christ and his peaceful and happy government.

The last writer quoted above is said to have "a strong feeling that the world is on the eve of astonishing discoveries." Thus the leaven of God's Spirit is working to prepare the minds of people for the change in the government of the earth, and for a new order of things in general, whereby in the course of time "all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God." (Isaiah 52: 10.)

It was reported from Germany about a year before the great war began that the Emperor Wilhelm made an address to the students at one of the German universities in which he said as follows:

God gave me my crown and I am accountable only to him. . . . The king holds his power by the grace of God, to whom alone he is responsible. He chooses his own path, and only decides his actions from this point of view. . . . As I look upon myself as an instrument of the Lord, I am indifferent to the point of view held by others.

This strongly illustrates the "gross darkness" of the world (Isaiah 60: 2), for all men, no matter what their station, are continually accountable to their fellows for the rightfulness or the wrongfulness of their course in life, as Christ taught so plainly; in brief, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Ruthless, heartless desolation, ruin and bloodshed by him "who chooses his own path" as being divine, must be brought to account along with the unrepented evils by men of less degree.

SALT AND SERVICE

"Ye are the salt of the earth," said the Master to his disciples. "Salt?" Yes, a seasoning power, a preserving force of essential characteristics. Could the world do without us? Why, they scarcely tolerate Latter Day Saints; we go unnoticed and unappreciated by the world at large.

Yet, as the little measure of leaven influences the whole loaf, so has "Latter-Day-Saintism" modified the whole loaf of religious thought and doctrine in the last eighty-five years. Spiritual gifts are being counterfeited; miracles of healing are advertising specialities for several denominations which say "Behold I am Christ's." The sway of pulpit power through fear of evil consequences, has waned before a surprising evangelism of omnipotent grace, and divine impartiality, as applied to good work.

Salt is a synonym for service. It is only as salt loses itself in the processes of usefulness that it has any value. The identity of selfishness must become dissolved in a solution of service before we, as the "salt of the earth," will have a recognized degree of merit.

"Let him deny himself," says Christ of the would-be disciple. "I will gladly spend and be spent," declares the great apostle to the Gentiles.

Seemingly we have this antithesis: behind each Saint there should be a force to elevate him above his fellow men in the world, with a character of indomitable power; yet denying self, apparently unconscious of that strength; refusing the exercise of that function which gives the force for fear that force become the master. It is keeping self under, for having the strength of a giant we must "become the least of all."

If the reader can say from the heart, "Thy will, not mine, be done O Lord, verily, I say, ye are the salt of the earth."

HIDING OUR BROTHER'S FAILINGS

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE WAY

Under the above heading in Christian Science Sentinel, for October 21, 1916, Lucy E. Doe sets forth the manner of hiding a brother's failings before and after her connection with Christian Science, thus:

At one of our Wednesday evening meetings the hymn was sung in which occur these words (Hymnal, p. 60):

"Each can his brother's failings hide,
And show a brother's love!"

A great song of gladness went up from the writer's heart for having been shown the right way to do this. Before knowing of Christian Science she thought that to hide our brother's failings was to keep his errors from others; to shut our own eyes to them; to conceal them through either love or pride, especially if the wrongdoer was some one near and dear to us. The more love we had for anyone, the more excuses we would make for him, and try to keep his failings from the eyes and ears of others, although our own heart was being torn through the belief that the error was real.

But now how different it all is! How gladly we take up the task! We have learned through the teachings of Christian Science that man is God's child, perfect; that evil is unreal, therefore no part of our brother's real being. Then we remember the scriptures, "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us;" also this: "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins." Since we understand that God's child does not sin, it is our work to see our brother as God's child; to blot out of our own consciousness the belief in his failings, and refuse to accept the material sense testimony which would make us believe that he is a sinner. When we have done our part faithfully, the failures are blotted out through love. Furthermore, we always have some proof that a change has been brought about in our brother's thought. [Emphasis mine. K.]

From this it is easy to see that the Christian Science way to hide a brother's failings is to believe that he has none, for we must "understand that God's child does not sin." How is it possible for one who does not sin to have failings to hide, or to uncover? So, while a superficial thought may make it seem an easy way, it is in reality so hard as to be impossible.

We quote: "We have learned through the teachings of Christian Science that man is God's child, perfect; thus evil is unreal, therefore no part of our brother's real being."

Again we ask, How can we hide the failings of the perfect? Why talk about hiding the failings of the man of whose real being sin or evil forms no part at all? Again, we are reminded that it is our duty "to blot out of our own consciousness the belief in his failings, and refuse to accept the material sense testimony which would make us believe that he is a sinner."

That's the Christian Science way of hiding our brother's failings. We must refuse to accept the material sense testimony that would make us believe he is a sinner. In other words, we must believe that he has no failings, no sins, no evil, and must believe he is perfect; that these things are unreal and do not exist, and thus hide them. Well, it would seem that what did not exist would be quite securely hidden, at least from mortal eyes.

"When we have done our part faithfully, the failures are blotted out through love. Furthermore, we always have some proof that a change has been brought about in our brother's thought."

But, sister, if you blot out of your consciousness the belief in his failings, how can you be conscious that said failures are blotted out? Moreover, how can you always have proof that your brother's thoughts that were responsible for his failures (failures that you refuse to believe in, yet were blotted out in spite of your belief that they did not exist) have undergone a change?

Still further: If our brother is perfect, his thoughts must be perfect also, and if so and a change takes place in his thoughts, will not that change be for the worse and not for the better? It would seem so.

I wonder, too, if Christian Scientists ever think how inconsistent it is to contend that sin or evil and error are unreal and existent only in mind, and that their opposites, goodness and truth, do really exist. If by blotting out of our own consciousness the belief that our brother is a sinner, and lo! he becomes righteous, why may we not blot out our belief in his righteousness and he become a sinner?

Summed up, the matter stands about as follows: First, we are to hide our brother's failings. Second, we must refuse to believe that he has any failings, but is perfect already.

Third, when we have done our part faithfully by refusing to believe in his failings, or that he has any, then our brother's failures, which he does not have (according to Christian Science) will be blotted out.

Fourth, we will always have some proof that the evil thoughts of our brother (which he does not have) will undergo a change, and his failings or sins, which are unreal and no part of him are securely hidden.

Fifth, if with our eyes we see drunkenness and bloodshed, even unto murder, and with our ears we hear cursing, profanity, or even blasphemy and falsehood, we must refuse to accept the testimony of the material senses and insist that the brother who did it all is no sinner, and when our duty is thus faithfully performed in behalf of our brother, lo! he is "God's child, perfect," and his "failures are blotted out through love." All very strange, very strange.

I pass the drunkard's door. I see him reeling and staggering and hear him using foul and blasphemous words. Vile oaths and hideous curses flow in a torrent from his mouth and fall heavily and without mercy upon a devoted, unhappy wife and helpless children. Heavy blows fall on their bodies, inflicted by his brutal hand. This, with intense suffering caused by exposure and neglect, cause sickness and premature death.

"Is there real evil here?" I ask. Christian Science replies: "no, the drunkard is a man," "God's child, perfect, that evil is unreal, therefore no part of our brother's real being." But I see bitter tears falling from the wife's eyes, and blood flowing from the bruised bodies of her outraged children.

Christian Science: "Forget it. It is our work . . . to blot out of our own consciousness the belief in his failings who struck the cruel blows that bruised the flesh of helpless ones and poured a volume of abuse on the devoted wife whom he had promised to love and cherish."

"But I cannot forget. My consciousness refuses to give up the memory of the cruel conduct that none but a sinner would be guilty of. My consciousness will not forget; my eyes saw, my ears heard, and memory retains those horrid sights and hideous sounds."

Christian Science: "What your eyes saw and ears heard is 'material sense testimony,' you must 'refuse to accept' such testimony, for it 'would make us believe that he is a sinner.'"

"Well, is he not a sinner?"

Christian Science: "No. Sin is unreal and no part of our brother's real being. God's child does not sin. Let us do our part faithfully and his failures will be blotted out through love."

Well, I must confess I do not understand how all this can be. First you say my brother is perfect, God's child, and that sin or evil forms no part of his being. Then I must hide his failings; that I must refuse to believe he is a sinner, no matter if I hear him blaspheme, or even see him commit murder, I must blot out of my consciousness all belief that he has any failings, and if I do that, I'll have proof that my perfect brother and God's perfect child has had a change of thought or a change of heart, and all his failings which he, being perfect—God's child—cannot have, will be blotted out.

It is all as clear as a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. It reminds us of the story of the building of a new courthouse. The authorities met and after due consideration decided they needed a new courthouse. Then they resolved: First, to build a brand new brick courthouse on the same site where the old one then stood; second, that the bricks in the old house should be used as far as they would go in building the new; and third, that the old courthouse should not be torn down until the new one was finished.

Christian Scientists resolve: First, to make a brand new man out of an old one; second, that they will forget the old man, blot him out of their consciousness; third, that they have the proof that this old man with his deeds of evil and whom they have blotted from their consciousness has faced about and is now a first-class new man.

If Christian Science can really educate and enlighten people till they have a conscious proof that a brother has changed from an evil thought, and at the same time they have blotted out of their consciousness the evil thought from which the brother has turned and in regard to which he has changed, then is Christian Science a wonder of wonders. How could one be conscious of a change in a brother's evil thought if he is unconscious of the thought itself? How can he be conscious of a change in thought if the thought itself is blotted out of his consciousness? Those who can perform such a feat should find little or no difficulty in building a new house of the bricks in an old one, and not tear the old one down until the new is complete.

THE CALL TO SERVICE AND SACRIFICE

[About the middle of June a letter was sent out over the signature of Herbert Hoover, asking all pastors to observe July 1 as a food conservation day, and to preach it on that date from the pulpit. This letter states that at least fifteen dollars a year is wasted in food by every family in America. This is much more conservative than earlier estimates. Still, it is significant. We have already called attention to this letter at the time, as a request was sent out asking various publications of the country to call attention to his special date. Pursuant to this request, a special organization was formed in New York to see that it was carried into effect.

Elder Ward L. Christy delivered a sermon at the Brooklyn church and turned over a copy to the committee in New York, who forwarded it to Mr. Hoover. In acknowledgment of this, Mr. Hoover again emphasizes the dangerous shortage and need of food conservation, expressing his appreciation for the effort, which we print herewith.—EDITORS.]

The Government through its representative, Herbert Hoover, is calling upon the citizens of America to assist in the production and conservation of the food supplies of the Nation. Let every man and woman of our church answer to the call, "Here am I, send me." The church of Jesus Christ should be first to respond with zeal and zest for two reasons:

First, because the Father whom we serve and the Christ whom we love and follow, gave promise of blessing, through frugality, obedience, service, and temperate living. The slothful and the waster have no place in this time of the Nation's greatest crisis, and all such should be rejected in the building of the church of Christ, which should be the embodiment of assiduity directed by the power of divine love.

Second, as a people we have long been governed by the following article stating our belief in regard to earthly governments and laws:

We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments, and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have the right to enact such laws as in their own judgments are but calculated to secure the public interest, at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience. We believe that every man should be honored in his station: rulers and magistrates as such—being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror: human laws being instituted for the express purpose of regulating our interests as individuals and nations, between man and man, and divine laws, given of heaven, prescribing rules on spiritual concerns, for faith and worship, both to be answered by man to his Maker.

Being doubly bound to the service of God by serving our fellow men, let us answer to the call of the men, who under God are directing the affairs of our government and gladly labor and save, that we may do our part to wipe out the existing annual waste of a thousand million dollars, not only eliminating waste, but actually putting into practice the principle of temperance by minimizing the consumption of foods.

It is my candid opinion that at least fifty per cent of the people of the United States consume more food than is conducive to their best physical condition, therefore this call to a more common and temperate living will bring us a double blessing. Let every member of the church adhere strictly to the instructions of the Lord to the church as found in section 86 of our edition of the Doctrine and Covenants which is as follows:

Strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly. And again, verily I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof, all these to be used with prudence and thanksgiving. Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or of famine. All grain is ordained for the use of man and of beast, to be the staff of life, not only for man, but for the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven, and all wild animals that run or creep on the earth; and these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger. All grain is good for the food of man, as also the fruit of the vine, that which yieldeth fruit, whether in the ground or above the ground. Nevertheless, wheat for man, and corn for the ox, and oats for the horse, and rye for the fowls, and for swine, and for all beasts of the field, and barley for all useful animals, and for mild drinks, as also other grain. And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health to their navel, and marrow to their bones and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto you the promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them.

Let every member of the church of Jesus Christ recognize that the Lord has provided and instructed that herbs are to be the principal articles of food, and while he has made these the things most conducive to good health. He has said that he will bless them through the strength of the earth, if men will honor his laws, and return unto him the portion that is his, for his special work, the church, as stated by Malachi in 3: 10-12.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts.

Is this not a time when every man should honor God, that God may honor him? Let the heads of this Government and every subject get on God's side, and victory will come to us, and through us to all our neighboring nations who join us in the great conflict for political and religious liberty. There is only one way to make our prayers available and that is to honor God's laws, for, "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be an abomination." (Proverbs 28: 8.)

Let us honor the law and then we can pray with assurance this beautiful prayer, "America Befriend," by Henry Van Dyke:

O Lord, our God, thy mighty hand
Hath made our country free;
From all her broad and happy land
May worship rise to thee;
Fulfill the promise of her youth,
Her liberty defend;
By law and order, love and truth,
America befriend.

The strength of every state increase
In Union's golden chain;

Her thousand cities fill with peace.

Her million fields with grain:
The virtue of her mingled blood
In one new people blend;
By unity and brotherhood,
America befriend.

O, suffer not her feet to stray;
But guide her untaught might,
That she may walk in peaceful days
And lead the world in light.
Bring down the proud, lift up the poor,
Unequaled ways amend;
By justice, nation-wide and sure
America befriend.

Through all the waiting land proclaim
The gospel of good will;
And may the joy of Jesus' name
In every bosom thrill.
O'er hill and vale, from sea to sea,
Thy holy reign extend;
By faith and hope and charity,
America befriend.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

SAVE FOOD BY PROHIBITION

"The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, officially representing thirty denominations, with a communicant membership of more than eighteen million, in special session assembled, desires to record its conviction that the immediate prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war measure is essential to the conservation of the economic resources and latent power of the Nation.

"Five eminent economists estimate, on the basis of the latest positive figures available, that seven billion pounds of food materials are annually used in the production of fermented liquors and distilled spirits. Two university professors of physiology estimate that, eliminating the amount necessary for the production of denatured alcohol, the fuel value of the remainder would supply the energy requirement of seven million for a year. The Brewers' Year Book declares that it requires the toil of seventy-five thousand farmers for six months to furnish these foodstuffs. If the labor of these men could be used for food instead of liquor it would measurably relieve the situation produced by the present scarcity of food.

"There are employed in the manufacture of liquor 62,920 wage earners. These men are needed in legitimate industry, and they should be transferred to such occupations as will make their labor a blessing to the people, instead of a curse."—The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Report of Special Meeting, Washington, District of Columbia, May 7, 8, 9, 1917.

EXTRACTS ON CONSECRATION

"The country's coming to a place where it will need disinterested men, and whole-hearted men, and clean-hearted men, if it's going to pull through. It's extraordinary how deficient we've been in leaders who had any of these characteristics, to say nothing of all three. . . .

"Moreover, it must find them among the young men. The older men are all steeped and branded and tarred and feathered with the materialism of the nineteenth century. They're perfectly sodden. They see no patriotism except in loyalty to a political machine; and no loyalty to a political machine except for what they can get out of it. From our presidents down most of them will sacrifice any law of right to the good of the party. They don't realize that nine times out of ten the good of a party is the evil of the common weal; and our older men will never learn the fact. If we can't wake the younger men, we're done for. . . .

"No one is ever going to get away with this thing who thinks of leadership. There are times in the history of countries when men are called on to give up everything and be true to an ideal. I believe that time is approaching. It may come to Europe in one way and to America in another; but it's coming to us all. There'll be a call for—for—consecration.

"By consecration I suppose I mean knowing what this country stands for, and being true to it oneself through thick and thin. There'll be thin and there'll be thick—plenty of them both—but it will be a question of the value of the individual. If there had been ten righteous men in Sodom and Gomorrah, they wouldn't have been destroyed. I take that as a kind of figure. A handful of disinterested, whole-hearted, clean-hearted, and perhaps I ought to add stout-hearted, Americans, who know what they believe and live by it, will hold the fort against all efforts, within and without, to pull it down. I've been thinking a good deal during the past few weeks of your law of Right—with a capital. I laughed at it when you first spoke of it—.

"We must stand by it, we younger men, just as the younger men of the late fifties stood by the principles represented by Lincoln. I believe in my heart that the need is going to be greater for us than it was for them, and if we don't respond to it, then may the Lord have mercy on our souls."—Basil King in Saturday Evening Post, June 25, 1917.

Don't put off starting your plans to make this year's Christmas offering average two dollars each for every Quarterly sold—just $90,000. You may need to do a little more than that to make up for those who cannot, but by starting now it will be easy.

"CARRY YOUR OWN"

The Council of National Defense authorizes the following:

Driving home the idea by means of a slogan, "Carry your own," the commercial economy board of the Council of National Defense is working up a strong sentiment among both retail store merchants and the buying public, in favor of the "totting" of small parcels by the purchasers.

By the use of its slogan, flashed upon the screens in thousands of motion-picture houses, and widely published in the periodical press, the board aims to overcome the prejudice of the American man and woman against being seen in company with a parcel of any kind.

If the plans of the board are successful, it is certain that the net savings from a corrected and amended delivery system will run far into the millions of dollars, and that "Carrying your own" will not only become respectable, but actually a point of honor.

PEELINGS OR STEALINGS?

Under the caption, "God bless the household that boils potatoes with the skins on," the American Bankers Association published a half-page advertisement in the New York American on June 14. The advertisement presents this query:

Suppose that a lot of selfish, careless, thoughtless people throughout the Nation so conduct themselves that you cannot get enough food for your family, so that your wife fails and grows weak and shrunken before your eyes, so that your children weaken, sicken and die. Suppose starvation looks at you through the hollow eyes of all you love best in the world. Wouldn't you be filled with loathing and contempt and bitter hatred for the careless, thoughtless people whose fault it was?

This is probably the first time that a group of prominent financiers has publicly admitted prevalence in the United States of undeserved poverty and distress, during a period of so-called prosperity. It is the first time that it has admitted justification for bitter feeling by the victims against those responsible for their condition. It is the first time that it has expressed itself in a way that has brought arrest and prison sentence to many a curbstone orator.

To be sure the American Bankers Association does not agree with the radicals concerning the identity of the persons most responsible for involuntary starvation. It puts the blame on the individuals who peel potatoes before boiling even though they have earnestly earned them, while the radical blames those who, through legal methods, steal the potatoes or their equivalent from those who have earned them. Still the association's position marks an advance from the orthodox stand which puts the blame for poverty on voluntary idleness, shiftlessness, intemperance, or some other failing of the sufferers. It is not strange that having raised a blindfold long upon its eyes it should be confused at first by suddenness of the light and fail to get a proper view of what is clear enough to those who have long kept their eyes open. But if the association will keep on looking and thinking, it will finally get used to the light and get a better idea of the situation.

The advertisement states further:

There is not enough food to go around. Entire nations abroad are starving—men, women and children are dying like flies to-day, in some countries, of plain, sheer starvation. We must send them millions of tons of food, and we will. There will be less for you. Wake up to it. You will have to supply the difference. Stop it! Every time you have potatoes for dinner you waste enough in the peelings to keep a starving ally alive for a day. Stop it! Don't peel new potatoes. Buy a five-cent brush and brush the skin off, saving all the potato.

Further advice is of this nature:

Make bread pudding from your bread crust. It's good. We liked it twenty years ago. . . . Don't run up bills. Pay cash—you get more and you save by it. . . . Eat corn bread half the time. . . . Stop waste.

Instead of paying for publication of that advertisement, the American Bankers Association should have sold it for cash to some humorous periodical. It would have gone well with a cartoon showing a typical plutocrat thus solemnly discoursing to the producers of all the potatoes, bread, and other wealth, of which he tells them they have too much and must get along with less. The humor of the advice to "stop waste" could be made clearer could the illustration show the present manner of living of the bankers who liked bread pudding "twenty years ago," and that of the average man whom he urges to eat it now. It could be made still more ridiculous by showing the advice against waste given by a representative of the class which appropriates without return wealth in the form of ground rents, exorbitant railroad rates and other monopoly charges. And it would be well to construe the advice in a way more rational than the American Bankers Association intended.

It is good advice to stop waste. But it should be stopped at the bung hole before effort is misspent at the spigot. Let there be an end to all the waste in which special privilege compels us to indulge. Let there be no more payments to public utility corporations of rates in excess of fair value of services.—The Public, July 13, 1917.

MOVEMENTS TOWARD PEACE

There are many organizations for peace, but they seem to be taking a united step with America, under the leadership of the People's Council of America.

In that council will be represented various branches of the labor movement farmers' organizations, Socialist bodies, branches of the Socialist Labor Party, single taxers, pacifists, antimilitarists, advocates of the repeal of conscription laws, professional men's organizations—every radical and forward looking force in the nation. A conference of radical unions, the workmen's circle, United Hebrew trades, Socialist and similar organizations, will be held in New York June 30 and July 1 to bring about the affiliation of hundreds of thousands of workers with the new movement, which is to be a clearing house, or congress, and is not in any way to supersede any organization now existing. Arrangements have been made to affiliate various branches of the farmers' movement in the Middle West. Antimilitarists and peace advocates of all shades are becoming affiliated either directly as constituent members, or through the medium of their own organization. Mothers' Anti-High Price Leagues have joined in bodies.

Many of these are undoubtedly honest and sincere in their intent. Particularly does this seem to be so of some of the men having in charge this council, but unfortunately we cannot but notice that some organizations are ulterior in purpose. There are undoubtedly in America many people conscientiously opposed to this war. The principles laid down appear to be generally good.

No forcible annexations.

No punitive indemnities.

Free development for all nationalities.

To urge international organization for the maintenance of world peace.

To induce our Government to state concretely the terms upon which it is willing to make peace.

To work for the repeal of the conscription law.

To safeguard labor standards.

To preserve and extend liberty and democracy in the United States.

"The people who indulge in honeyed phrases seldom have any fear of eating their own words."

For the first time since the white man came to this country to dispossess the Red Man of his land, the 1916 birth rate of the Indians in the United States was greater than the death rate.

The Massachusetts Legislature recently passed an act which sets aside for the duration of the war the laws of the State relative to farming and gardening on Sunday. Under the new provisions one may work in his garden or on his farm on this day and not break the laws of the commonwealth. In spite of some opposition the governor signed the bill. Connecticut did the same except that the governor vetoed the bill.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

"Home, the Greatest University in the World"

I have just been reading "Helps that hinder" and "Our auxiliaries" and heartily agree with both writers. I firmly believe that if parents were doing their full duty there would be no need of clubs to hold the young, no need of Sunday schools or even public schools.

One of the latest organizations of the world is "The National League of Teacher-Mothers," which I believe we would do well to duplicate. It is founded by Ella Frances Lynch of Byrn Mawr, Pennsylvania. At the top of her letterheads is a line which reads "The Home is the Greatest University in the World." At the bottom, "The home is the chief factor in human education. The school, at its best, builds upon the home instruction, supplementing and developing the teaching given by wise parents."

In her letter to mothers she says: "Between the ages of three and seven is a period of human life that usually determines whether or not the child is to become a useful citizen. It is the period in which correct physical and mental habits must be developed.

"The home, and the home only, can properly undertake and carry through this training. For the mother to neglect this responsibility, or to shift it to the school, is, perhaps, the most destructively far-reaching phase of modern civilization. The school never was and never can be the chief factor in human education. As the home is the true kindergarten, so it is also the true preparatory school for the university, for life. Unless the young mind has been carefully prepared, much of the instruction will be futile; the seeds will fall on barren ground. No teacher can repair the damage wrought by mal-education or neglect during the first seven years of life. Undeniably, the home is the proper community for the young child; it is the environment to which he should first learn to conform; it is there that he owes his first and best allegiance. The home, not the community, is the foundation of the State.

"The period between the ages of three and seven is more important than the entire school course. The best school could not teach the child in daily sessions of five hours as many valuable lessons as can the mother in a short period each day. Beginning at the age of three, every child should be given a period of five minutes' instruction daily, to get him in the habit of learning, to teach him the simplest elements of knowledge getting, to open his mind to a liking for good literature, and to give him a vocabulary that creates ideas.

"The very best teaching a little child can have is the teaching given by the busy mother while she is doing her housework. The very best lessons for the child are those dealing with its home surroundings, which may seem commonplace to us, but in the eyes of a little child are new and wonderful, as if newly created especially for his joy and use. The mother who has had only primary schooling herself, may well be a good teacher for her own children. At her work in her home school she becomes clever as she never was clever before. She learns by teaching. Her instinct, her patient and understanding love as she watches his growth and development, guide her to find the right way to take her all-important part in the education of her child. She needs no rigid system. She is not dealing with a theoretical child, but with the child as he really is. No mother who can read is justified in saying that she does not know how to teach her child.

dren. The mother has the main requisite of successful teaching—a knowledge of child nature and a heartfelt interest in the child's welfare. The main thing we need insist upon for the child of two is that it be a healthy little animal trained to obey and be docile. Then comes the home kindergarten period, two or three years in duration, during which the child is learning in every waking moment. There is not one feature of the kindergarten, as planned by Froebel, that is not at hand and ready in every simple, well-ordered home. Along with the training of the senses must be training in obedience, self-control and industry. The very best means of instilling these lessons is through the little tasks about the house, carefully chosen to fit the child's age and strength, regularly and punctually fulfilled. 'Helping mother' is the most profitable kind of primary teaching. Before the age of seven must be instilled reverence, respect for authority, a liking for good books. These things are done, if at all, with great difficulty in the school. At home they may be done simply and naturally."

To the above we can but add our own experience for we have demonstrated the truth of these statements.

Three years ago we moved to the country, and as we could not always get to Sunday school the responsibility of teaching our children fell upon our shoulders for the first time. Our oldest child had been attending Sunday school seven years, but we were shocked to discover how little she knew about the Bible. We had made the mistake of many others in thinking that one hour each week was all the religious training necessary. To remedy this we sent for Huribut's Story of the Bible (which is for sale at the Herald Publishing House) and, gathering the children about us, read one story each evening until we had finished the book. Many times because of weariness of body, or because of some special work of our own we wished to finish, we were tempted to omit the reading but the children would plead so earnestly for their story that we could not resist them and as we read the weariness left us and a peace filled our souls that no pleasures of our own could possibly bring.

Soon after finishing the book a set of Bible cards was published by Brother C. H. Rich which made a splendid means of reviewing our work. Now the children call for the Bible cards and when they fail on a Bible character look him up in the book of Bible stories.

We then took up the Book of Mormon. Not having a book of stories on that we took a chapter at a time and told it to them as simply as possible. We were astonished at the way they took to it and could repeat it after us almost word for word. We are looking forward to the set of Book of Mormon cards that Brother Rich is preparing and are meanwhile taking up the church history the same way. With our children these stories eclipse all fairy tales, legends and folk lore. We are also fortunate possessors of the Book of Knowledge which gives us information on all subjects and makes profitable readings.

The first year we were out here we sent the children to the little country schoolhouse down the road where a bright, energetic young woman handled three grades. Owing to the long walk it was impossible to send them during stormy weather and fearing they would get behind, I undertook their lessons at home. Then came another surprise. They were backward in everything and when their health began to fail we determined to teach them at home altogether. The superintendent and teachers were very kind in lending us books and giving suggestions and the rapid improvement in the children repaid us a thousand fold for the extra responsibility.

We have a boy of five and girls eight and ten and have been made to marvel at what can be accomplished by a busy mother if systematic study is faithfully adhered to. Ella Frances Lynch asks a mother to give a three-year-old child five minutes a day. Five minutes a day has taught our little boy to read. An average of five minutes a day has taught the girls to play the piano. The children are learning by practical experience how to cook, clean and sew and we have really enjoyed brushing up on fractions and reviewing geography and history long since forgotten.

A nervous, delicate child should never be subjected to the rigid discipline of a schoolroom. Five hours a day is too long a time for any child to be herded in a schoolroom. The National League of Teacher-Mothers hopes to revolutionize teaching by educating the mother to the idea of keeping her children under her own care during the most important period of their lives, teaching them how to study, how to work and how to concentrate, so that they will be able to accomplish in half an hour as much of the essentials as are now mastered in the whole day, and the elementary course shortened by the equivalent of several years.

Let us not wait until the people of the world arouse us to our duty concerning our children. Latter Day Saint children should be the brightest and best behaved children in the world, an example to the world of the light that has come to us.

A small boy returning from school one day said to his mother, "Our teacher says every mother should have a children's hour," and she replied, "But how can I when I am always getting ready to go somewhere?" That is the trouble nowadays, mothers are rushing here and rushing there, seeking their own pleasure and development and missing the joy of training their little children to shine with intelligence.

We hear parents with grown sons and daughters regretting that they did not spend more time reading to their children. Let us heed their warning and teach our children now while they are with us, that we may have no regrets in the years to come.

We would that all children might be brought up in the country where parents would sense their responsibilities and where lessons in industry, a love for animals and all God's creation is more easily taught.

We believe in all organizations that are for good inasmuch as they do not interfere with the duties of the home, and until parents arouse themselves, let us have boys' clubs and girls' clubs presided over by some wise person fitted to give them the instruction that has been neglected by their parents.

MABEL A. SANFORD.

"Our Boys"

Herbert Moniger once said "Build a wall of men around your boys and you'll have no boy problem." Recent agitation of the question has led us to ask the question, "Why have we a boy problem"? Is it because we have failed to build the wall? And if so has our failure to build the wall been due to a lack of building material?

The boy problem is really a man problem. It is a question of leadership. We have men, good men, too, but have we leaders? Some one has said a leader "must have the magnetism of Moses, the patience of Job, and the wisdom of Solomon," and, we might add, the love manifested by the Lord Jesus Christ, a love translated into terms of service. Why is it that after eighty-seven years of practical experience in the workings of a religious democracy we have failed to develop adequate abilities of leadership? Is it a lack of vision, interest, or industry?

Talk is cheap, but it takes material and work to solve problems, and in this, one of our greatest problems, our young people, being our greatest asset, will be required to furnish the very best we can muster in the line of material and effort. The formation of an organization is comparatively an easy matter, the writing of a constitution with "ironclad" rules, many of which will have to be made of India rubber, is not so hard, but these will die a natural death without the vitalizing touch of efficient leadership. Personality, not organization, is the solution of the boy problem in the church.

REPORT OF RELIEF AND SERVICE DEPARTMENT FOR 1916

In reporting the work of the relief and service department of the Woman's Auxiliary for the past year, I can say that I believe that it has moved along lines of active advancement. A number of new societies have come into existence and identified themselves with the general movement; some of the old reliable societies hitherto operating independently have wheeled into line, and the regular forces have worked steadily on with continued diligence and faithfulness.

We believe that we may be pardoned when we say that we contemplate with pride the substantial results of the labor performed by this department in the past. It has been the principal factor in the purchase of many a plot of ground, upon which it has been a financial aid in building, furnishing and equipping with modern conveniences churches in which to worship God. It has helped to pay the debts and bear the expense of many a struggling branch. It has contributed liberally to the various worthy institutions of the church. Many of its societies have paid tithing and have helped the missionaries. All these things breathe of the self-sacrificing work of the women of this department, and with it all they have found time to succor the needy, visit and minister to the sick, sympathize with the sorrowing, comfort the afflicted and cheer the declining years of the aged. Some of our societies have committees appointed especially for this purpose, to work in conjunction with the local deacons.

Some have interested themselves in some of the vital problems of the day, such as temperance, social and sanitary conditions, etc. Some have formed clubs for the study of various phases of social life, and work.

Our women are waking up to the realization of the work lying right at our doors and the necessity for being better equipped for service in this direction.

We have been represented at the reunions of the districts and stakes by some of our able workers, also our president contributed one excellent paper in the interest of our department, to be used in reunion work. This was also published in the church papers. As superintendent of the department we contributed one article on our work, to the HERALD columns. We have also sent out numerous circulars and personal letters. Have tried to give advice and help whenever appealed to. Have met twice with the executive board, and have been impressed by the importance of the work being planned for the women of the church, which is yet in its incipiency. The glorious vision of the future is unfolding to them; and they will go forward with brave hearts and willing hands to meet the toil and sacrifice requisite to the splendid accomplishment of its promises. Progression is written upon the pages of the history of to-day, and the women of the relief and service corps will not be found in the rear guard in the onward march.

News Items

Sister Susan L. Hayer writes from Lamoni, Iowa, that a local has been organized at Pleasanton, Iowa, about twelve or fifteen miles from that place. They have a relief and service department, and a young woman's department.

A meeting was held with the Evergreen sisters but so far only a few are interested in this work, but it is expected something can be done later.

Sister L. Lenor Christy, of Brooklyn, New York, says the society there has discontinued meetings till cooler weather. We learn that the East, along with the Central West, has been suffering from an extremely high temperature. Many of the Saints of Brooklyn leave the city for the summer but most of them carried some kind of work with them to do ere their return. Sister Christy hopes they will not forget their study hour, mentioning how greatly they enjoyed the class work, with the approving presence of the Spirit.

Two delightful luncheons are reported, upon which the Lord's blessings seemed to be poured.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From a Personal Letter

[Brother R. W. Farrell wrote a brother concerning the work of the gospel literature commission and we extract some items of general interest.—EDITORS.]

I have mailed to-day to the other members of the general commission matter to be put into print, and when it is out I will send you a copy. It is impossible to do more than write to the brethren who are so far away, but I want them to know that everything they do in the gospel literature campaign is of vital interest to me and a million times more so to the Infinite One.

If you Michigan Saints knew how much interest I take in you and how much I appreciate the fact that you are dead-in-earnest workers, you might be pleased. I have often wondered why the districts in your State are so much alive compared to the many districts in other States. Perhaps you can answer.

The gospel literature work, as you say, is big, the field is white and waiting for you to reap. We can do so no better outside of preaching the word than by sending it abroad in its printed form. God is behind it; he will bless our efforts; and we shall see results that will satisfy and thrill our souls. The gospel literature work is an inspired John the Baptist preparing the way for the coming of God's messengers with the full, spoken words of life. We should sow beside all waters; in the morning and evening we should not withhold our hand, for God will give the increase.

I advise that when literature work is done in a vicinity it be under the charge of the board in that community. If there be an encampment of soldiers near by, by all means try to get such interested in gospel literature. Lowell said that once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide.

The main thing and the really important thing, is to start out with the work—the unfoldment will come as needed.

R. W. FARRELL,

Superintendent Gospel Literature Commission.

The Highest Calling One Can Have

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

Christ left his home in glory, came to earth, suffered and died to redeem the world from sin. While here on earth he established his church and called men to represent it, and go out into the world and preach the gospel. We claim to have the restored gospel the same as Christ taught when he was on earth and send men out the same as in olden times.

I read in a recent HERALD the article: "The missionary list not a charity list," neither should they be objects of pity, for they are honored by the highest calling man could have. Paul of old marveled that he was counted worthy to be called to be an apostle. Our sympathy they should have for it certainly must not be no light thing to leave home and loved ones and go out into the world. But Christ says: "He that taketh not up his cross and followeth after me is not worthy of me," and if they be followers of Christ they must exhibit the same meek and humble spirit Christ did.

In Doctrine and Covenants 83, we read the commandment given to men in latter days that are sent out to preach the gospel: "Therefore, take no thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed; for consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they toil not, neither do they spin; and the kingdoms of the world, in all their glory, are not arrayed like one of these; for your Father who art in heaven, knoweth that you have need of all these things. . . . Therefore, let no man among you (for this commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God in the church, unto the ministry) from this hour, take purse or scrip, that goeth forth to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom. . . . Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money."

When our men sent out in these latter days exhibit the true missionary spirit and go out as they are commanded, the same spirit that prompts them to do so will work on the minds of the people of their necessities and it will no longer be necessary to take up collections or ask for money to defray their expenses. I do not believe I can express myself better than by using the poem, "Life's mission."

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are tried and true,
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you.

Give love and love to your heart will flow
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

For life is the mirror of king and slave
'Tis just what you are and do
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you.

Religio Pins for Illinois Soldiers

The ladies' aid society of Beardstown, Illinois, has decided to give Religio pins to all soldiers in our faith from the State of Illinois who are called to service or have volunteered; not to those that may go, but if you are now in training somewhere, write us and we will see that you get a Religio pin. This pin does not necessarily mean that you belong to Religio, but the purpose of it is that when you are among hundreds of strange soldiers, you could easily see who are Latter Day Saints and pick them out as your companions.

Many of the boys have bad habits, but I trust our boys will be upright and true to their heavenly Father. When you choose a Latter Day Saint for a companion or maybe have five or six in your regiment you can get together and have a prayer meeting or talk over the gospel. Thus God will always watch over you.

I trust some aid society in every State will take the same step so all our boys may have opportunity to wear such a pin and know each other when they meet. If any of them want such a pin and cannot get it from their own State, we will see that they are supplied. Be loyal to your country and to your church for which the pins stand. As secretary of the society, you may write to me.

Your sister,

MRS. W. C. NORMAN.

BEARDSTOWN, ILLINOIS, 1317 Jefferson Street.

From Here and There

An excellent reunion is reported at McKenzie, Alabama. Brother F. M. Slover reports twenty-three baptized.

Elders James C. Page and Jett A. Bronson are laboring at Outlook, Montana, where they are having baptisms about every Sunday. From there they go to Glasgow to hold tent meetings.

The recent ministerial conference of the quorum of elders of the Eastern Mission is reported as one of the most important ever held. Papers were read on the duties of the deacon, teacher, priest, and elder. The contents of these were said to be most excellent and mere comment on them would mean so little it is not indulged in.

Brother J. L. Winter says he has received a large number of papers and tracts in response to his call and is sending and handing them out. He mentions Florida, Illinois, Kentucky, Texas, Colorado, and California, adding: "and possibly a dozen other States, sooner or later." Are there not many more who could devote some time to this work that is so productive of good? Literature distribution is on the increase and we would like to see it doubled this year.

BOWMAN, NORTH DAKOTA, July 22, 1917.

Editors Herald: We seldom see letters in the HERALD from North Dakota and never from this part of the State. We have no branch here nor near here, though I have heard that there are some saints not far from Bowman. If any such read this letter I wish they would communicate with me. Perhaps, working all together, we might be able to get the gospel before the people in this part of the country. Only we who are or have been isolated know what it means to be month after month and finally years without hearing the gospel preached. I know that this work is true and though I think I realize more fully each day how weak I am, yet I am striving to go forward. My husband is not a member of any church, though I have faith that some time in the near future he will accept the true faith. So just now my struggle is a lonely one, though with God's help I shall remain steadfast in the truth. I am ready to do anything in my power to aid in getting the gospel here. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may have more faith and more courage to move onward.

Through this letter I send greetings to the Bemidji Saints and those who have moved away to other branches since we left that place. They are often in my thoughts, many times with smiles—sometimes, I must confess, with tears. This is a great and beautiful country but it lacks that absolute necessity—the true gospel. Your sister in the faith,

MRS. ROBERT LOVE, JR.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, July 26, 1917.

Editors Herald: About one year ago the Second Detroit Branch was organized, with a membership of thirty-five. Now we have about eighty. Our Sunday school is prospering and we are doing well with the Christmas offering. Elder Blair has a good way of appealing to the pocketbook. Much good is being accomplished through street preaching.

We are to have a rally day and expect to have a good time. We hope to continue faithful to the end.

MARY BROWN.

OAK HARBOR, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have just concluded an interesting series of meetings here at Oak Harbor, Ohio, and have led six persons down into the "Loosang River," near its entrance into Lake Erie, and buried them in the waters of baptism—four on Sunday afternoon, and two at the twilight hour Wednesday evening. We also organized a choir, and gave introductory instruction. This is the second we have organized in northwestern Ohio, the first being in Sylvania.

It appears that the District has no chorister as yet, so I seemed to rather have things go my way at present. We are all using "The New Church Choir," put out by the Fillmore House, for amateur choirs.

The country is agitated over the great conflict, and the entrance of our country as the fifteenth nation to "present arms," and the eleventh against Germany. Three years of the ugliest scars that war has made on the face of civilization, make unanswerable and complete argument for the code taught by the Prince of Peace, and the Babel din heralds the glory that is coming by and by. The world is wearied and exhausted with blood and iron, with fire and sword, with deadly explosives, and asphyxiating gases; with agents of death operating in air, on land, on sea and under the sea; with the destruction of the accumulation of its labor, and industry and the choicest treasures of its art; by waste of money and property, grievous burdens of debt and taxes. Its ruin, its squalor, its dead and wounded, its widows and orphans, disaster, and affliction, bow in anguish and in sorrow, and plead for the coming of the King of kings to "rebuke strong nations from afar." Thousands of factories have either been closed or destroyed, and millions of men from these, have been drawn and entered the armies of Europe.

Unhappy Belgium, another "Niobe of nations, childless and almost crownless in her voiceless woe," three years ago a busy scene of happiness, prosperity, and commercial industry, now ruined, blackened, and desolate. In sunny France the rattle of the machine guns, "the busy Berthas," the 75 millimeters, and heavy "Krupps" have replaced the busy hum of countless spindles. Where once rolled the smoke of factories, the air darkened with deadly hail of shot and shell.

Imperial Germany, one of the greatest export countries of all Europe, is an armed camp, her exports shut off by an allied fleet. Austria with millions of men engaged in working night and day to turn out munitions of war, and death dealing missiles of destruction. England, proud mistress of the seas, conscripting her men from factories, and sending them by millions in serried rank to the trenches. Russia with her countless thousands battling against the gray wall of Teutonic steel. Italy concentrating her full force to the prosecution of the war. No time for peaceful commercial pursuits.

Servia dismantled at the feet of her invader. Montenegro is prostrate. Bulgaria is exhausted, Greece is blockaded. Hundreds of merchant vessels have been sent to the bottom with millions of tons of foodstuffs. International commerce has been strangled and throttled, in many ways.

The United States, with the strongest industrial resources of any nation on Earth, must sink her billions in the common vortex. All of this setback to civilization, this drenching of eastern soil with the blood of man, this war-mad condition, indicates the "sharp sickle being thrust to gather the harvest of the earth" which seems "fully ripe." (Revelation 14: 14, 15.) "All things shall be in commotion"—confusion, unrest, unsettled, unstable, the fixed stars fading from the sky. Strange shapes have come. Established ways are lost. Have we any standard for food prices in this dread hour? All "commotion!" "Distress of nations!" "Perplexity" reigns.

With this regime of terror it would be wonderful should selfishness not grow, and Paul's prophecy of "perilous times," not apply. The millions of dollars diverted into the Automobile channel, creating a "swim" into which thousands must plunge if farms and chattels are mortgaged to get there. Even some who "love the great work of the last days" toss their coin into this "common chasm," while at the same time, some of the banner bearers of the Angel's message plaster mortgages on their homes to meet the common obligations of life. How is this? If conditions here in this world are right, why does the Almighty seek to change them? Why teach the coming of the "Just One" to adjust to millennial conditions? Enough.

Ever yours hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

CAPE MAY, NEW JERSEY, July 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am a young Saint in the service of the Government and I thought possibly you would be glad to hear from me. There is one thing I miss more than the separation from all that is near and dear, and that is the church.

I have several times attended services elsewhere but the spirit of peace is lacking. It causes me to look back to the times when we have met in prayer service with the sweet influence of the Spirit present. I would appreciate any word from the Saints.

Everything is very much different, but I hope to return strengthened spiritually as well as physically. I expect to go abroad within a month. Remember me in your prayers.

WILLIAM M. SAUTER.

Fourth Naval District.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, July 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: The Shellbrook reunion has again come and gone, leaving us with pleasant memories. From a worldly point of view it would not be termed a success, for we had very little interest from outsiders until the last Sunday, when a number came.

The Saints were at first greatly disappointed, for Brother T. J. Jordan, also J. A. Gillen, were to have been with us, but were both called home. J. W. Peterson and W. M. Aylor took charge of the reunion and conducted it in a creditable manner. This was Brother Aylor's first visit to this north land and we hope it will not be his last, as we found in him a good loyal defender of the faith. No baptisms were had, but the Saints were strengthened and encouraged to press onward and upward. We feel that great good has been done and that a new era is dawning on the Saints of Shellbrook and vicinity. No doubt the day is not far distant when we will not only be an equipped and organized branch but will also be able to send out from our midst many to represent the cause in other places.

May the Lord speed the day when all in these parts will fearlessly stand for the right and not only in word but in deed be Saints and an example to their friends and neighbors. There was a good Spirit at the meetings and some were heard whose voices are ordinarily silent.

This is one of the most beautiful places and were it not for the long and severe winters and the mosquitoes in summer, with the longing for Zion, it would be an ideal spot to locate. Crops are better this year than in many parts of Saskatchewan. One man from this country went to the coast, then back through Washington and Montana and Alberta. He says he only saw one place besides this where the crops were very good.

There is a great work to be done in this great Northwest, preparing the people for the coming of the Lord. Many, many people are needed for the work.

Ever praying for the advancement of the cause,

EFFIE J. DENTON.

MARLIN, TEXAS, August 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: We had a grand conference at Hearne, recently. A good spirit prevailed. We are suffering from one of the worst droughts that central Texas ever had. Don't know what the Saints are going to do, for all of them are renters. We have no corn or hay. Oh, pray for us, that we may have bread at least.

The writer has baptized fourteen this year and others are near the faith. This is a fine time to extend our work in the district. I met, with many friends at the conference, Brother John Harp, D. S. Palmer, and many of the Houston and Dallas Saints.

We had some grand healings in our Marlin Branch in the recent years, and as a band of Saints are trying to do our duty as best we can. We have another teacher in our branch who will add to our welfare. Our meetings are held at the writer's home some of the time. As many as one hundred and fifty people attend.

With your permission I will relate a little experience in regard to paying tithing. In 1900 my brother-in-law and myself had a crop in the same field. The grasshoppers began to take everything and we put out poison to kill them, but to no avail. I went to the Lord and told him I would pay him what I owed, regardless of the crop, if I could collect a certain note. My cotton crop turned out twenty-two and a half bales on twenty-two acres, while my brother-in-law picked eight bales from the same area, and the same kind of land. I collected the note and paid the Lord what belonged to him, and received the blessing. We will all receive blessings if we live for them.

The Lord has told us to prove him and I have done so in regard to tithing. If you have never tried him, do so and see what he will do.

Your brother,

B. F. SPICER.

WILBER, NEBRASKA, August 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: Being detained at home on account of sickness, I have a little time at least to contribute to your pages. As I look out into the world and note its condition, I am made to exclaim: Surely the inhabitants thereof are ripening for destruction—drinking, dancing, Sabbath breaking, gambling, ball playing, even women doing their washing on Sunday. If we had some of the blue laws of Iowa enforced here it would be a blessing, I believe.

I hope those in southern Ohio who are expecting a letter from me will remember that I appreciate your kindness and sincerely hope you will hold onto the rod of iron. Do not fail to give tithing into his storehouse for the furthering of God's work.

In a dream a few weeks ago I was admonished to study the Fishing River revelation (section 102). It surely contains much important instruction and should be more generally studied.

Your brother,

W. C. Hidy.

SALINA, UTAH, August 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: A few lines from the valleys of Utah may be of interest to your readers, so will make an attempt to tell how the gospel work is succeeding here.

In company with Elder Willard Parks, of Alpena, Michigan, we left Lamoni on June 12 in a little Ford. We stopped en route at Haigler, Nebraska, also at Denver and Colorado Springs for a short time, reaching Salt Lake City on June 23. The entire distance traveled was 1,626 miles and it took six and one half days to make the trip. From Haigler, we had the pleasure of the company of Brother Cotterell and family, who also drove a "tin Lizzie." From Colorado Springs to Salt Lake we were accompanied by F. A. Russell and also Brother Cotterell. Because of snow and high water in the mountains, it became necessary for us to take an extreme southern route. The only accident was a blow-out, caused by stone bruise.

In crossing the Gunnison River we found three cars stuck in the mud. The river was out of its banks and presented an ugly appearance, but our little car was equal to the emergency and went through it without any assistance.

The highest point reached by us was the Poncho Pass, which is 9,995 feet above sea level. The roads were generally good and while at times we could only travel at the rate of six miles an hour, at other times we could speed up to the full limit of thirty-five miles an hour.

For several miles we traveled over a road built by convict labor. This was very fine and runs along the Arkansas River. The scenery was simply grand and no one passing along this route can help seeing the handwriting of the Infinite One.

The most unpleasant part of our journey was in the eastern part of Utah, where we passed through one hundred and twenty-five miles of desert. As we entered this desert the wind was blowing a gale. At times dust and sand were hurled into our faces so we were nearly suffocated. As a result of this wind it became necessary to fold our auto top. For several hours the sun's rays were almost unendurable. As it passed over the mountain tops we surely breathed a sigh of relief. Our faces were almost blistered, our lips were parched, and in fact we were a sorry-looking party. For miles and miles all the eye could see was a barren waste. Occasionally we would find some indications of civilization, as the people would erect along the railroad houses to protect them while laboring on the railroad.

Finally we reached Salt Lake City and were glad to know our journey was at an end. We took a bath in the briny waters of the great dead sea of America and enjoyed it immensely.

We found a few of the faithful Saints trying as best they could to keep the banner afloat, even though under discouraging conditions. Brother C. A. Smurthwaite is president of the branch and tried to make our stay pleasant while in the city. We called on a number of the Saints not only in the city, but also at Midvale and other points, and all seemed glad we were permitted to be with them and did all they could to help us in our work.

We are now on a tour of the southern part of the State, but as our letter is already long, will reserve the rest till later.

In the conflict,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

WARRENSBURG, MISSOURI, August 6, 1917.

Editors Herald: After so long a time we are once more located; and this time in our own home, at Warrensburg, Missouri, 516 North Holden Street. We hope that we are now located for the remainder of our lives. This is my thirty-first year under General Conference appointment, besides a number of years under district appointment, and I feel that I have had about all the moving from place to place that is necessary for one short life, and that it is now time to settle down and work near my home. Oh, if it were necessary for me to change fields and move again, I should do so; but I am hoping it may not be necessary.

Am preparing to attend the Holden Stake reunion, August 10 to 20, if nothing prevents, and get better acquainted with the Saints in the Holden Stake, and also to add my mite towards making the reunion a success.

Am well pleased with the reception given us by the Saints here; like the town where we live, like the country around it, and like the people whom I have met and with whom I have gotten acquainted. Don't think I ever met a nicer set of business men than those with whom I have had occasion to deal, here in Warrensburg. The Saints, as a rule, are a nice class of people and are living honorable upright lives; but we all understand that it takes something more than that to build up Zion. That is good, so far as it goes, and is absolutely essential; but we read that the Lord called his people "Zion," one time, because they were of one heart and one soul, and dwelt together in righteousness; and there were no poor among them at that time, either; and, if Latter Day Saints ever become worthy of being called "Zion," it will be when they attain to Zion conditions of mind and soul, as referred to above. The work in the stake seems to be in good hands and seems to be progressing, but it is going to take more zeal, more enthusiasm, and more of the spirit of self-sacrifice than is now in sight, to build up Zion.

There is much, very much, to be done, and it is not at all pleasant to see so much that needs to be done, and yet be able to do so little—and that seems to be my condition at the present time. Whether I shall recuperate and be able to do something for the work, or whether I shall go completely under, seems to be very uncertain just now; but I believe the Lord has power to heal and that, if it is his will that I live and labor in the interest of his work, he will enable me to do so; and if it is not his will I am willing to pass over on the other side. But I want to do what little I can while I am here.

With love to all, especially those among whom I have labored in the years gone by, I am as ever,

Yours in gospel bonds,

516 North Holden Street.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

A Certain Man

I knew a man, who young in years
Began to serve the Lord;
And though he tried quite earnestly
He found that service hard.
Illiterate he started out—
But, sought each day to find
The priceless gem of Christian truth,
To illuminate his mind.

This man is poor in this world's goods,
He has no lands nor gold;
But, rich in faith he forward moves
With courage, strong and bold
He trusts in Him whose voice hath called Him to the ministry;
And as the days grow into years
He labors hard to see, the truth
That Jesus brought to earth;
And ever prays, that he might fill
The purpose of his birth.

This man has learned one lesson well,
" 'Twas hard at first," he said,
But then, he learned to work and pray,
And follow on as led.
He saw the sin of selfishness;
The havoc it had wrought;
And so he labors, that he might Dispell it from his thought.

He lives a sacrificial life;
He loves his fellow-men;
He thinks of their most sacred needs,
And tries oft, and again
To lead their minds, to higher truth
Than simply selfish ends.
He seeks by deeds of love and truth
To make all men his friends.

I've seen him go with ragged shoes,
His trousers oft he'll mend;
And with all those who love the truth,
His service he doth blend.
No candies, cream, or summer drinks,
Does this man ever buy,
To satisfy his appetite,
And now, you wonder why—
But listen just a moment, friends,
The truth you all shall hear;
He sacrificed his comforts oft,
That others he might cheer.

'Tis true he'll buy a book or two,
And day by day he'll read—
He seeks each day to find relief
For every human need.
He often walks from town to town,
That he might save the fare
Which, to the Bishop he doth send,
If he has ought to spare.

He often goes without his meals
 Because his funds are low;
 He asks the Lord to give him strength,
 Then on his way he'll go.
 He's slept in depots once or twice—
 Sometimes stayed out all night,
 Because he had no better place,—
 And yet, his heart was light.
 No labor seems too hard for him;
 No journey seems too long;
 He never falters by the way,
 Because his heart is strong.

He speaks in gentle tones to all,
 His spirit strong and pure,
 Is likewise, a means to an end,
 Which helps him to endure.
 Each day he serves with greater ease,
 "A pleasure 'tis," says he,
 "To labor with my blessed Lord
 To set His people free."

So year by year this man advanced,
 In learning he excels;
 And though obstructions fill his path,
 All darkness he dispells.
 He doesn't sigh o'er things that's past,
 Nor long for things afar—
 He knows the Lord will be his strength,
 And truth his guiding star.

To-day, this man is with the church,
 His labors some have known;
 But none have heard him make complaint,
 Nor seek to claim his own.
 To him, 'tis life to bless the race,
 No labor now, seems hard;
 The selfish spirit he has crushed—
 He does not seek reward.

Now and Then

May we love the truth, O Father,
 With that love that comes from Thee;
 Even if we must abandon
 That which now seems dear to me,

May the fear and superstition
 Of the ages passed and gone
 Be abandoned in the valley
 As the higher heights are won.

May we climb the heights of knowledge
 By the power of spiritual growth,
 Till we reach the glorious summit
 That the gospel now holds forth.

With the light of heaven shining
 On our brow in that bright day
 We shall understand each other
 And as clearly see the way.

Then that dark and loathsome valley
 Made by ignorance and sin
 Shall be left so far behind us
 It shall not appear again.

Shall we grope in darkness
 As we often do to-day
 When the battle is against us
 And we cannot find the way.

When we reach the height of glory
 And all knowledge is our own
 We shall walk in doubt no longer
 As we sometimes now have done.

W. E. PEAK.

Three Little Words

Three little words, but full of tenderest meaning;
 Three little words the heart can scarcely hold;
 Three little words but in their import dwelling,
 What wealth of love their syllables unfold!

"For my sake" cheer the suffering, help the needy;
 On earth this was my work; I give it thee,
 If thou wouldst follow in thy Master's footsteps
 Take up thy cross, and come and learn of me.

"For my sake" let the harsh word die unuttered,
 That trembles on the swift impetuous tongue;
 "For my sake" check the quick rebellious feeling
 That rises when thy brother does thee wrong.

"For my sake" press with steadfast patience onward,
 Although the race be hard, the battle long,
 Within my Father's house are many mansions;
 There thou shalt rest and join the victor's song.

And if in coming days the world revile thee,
 If "for my sake" thou suffer pain and loss,
 Bear on, faint heart; thy Master went before thee;
 They only wear his crown who share his cross.

Branches reporting: Grannis, Arkansas; Jacksonville, Arkansas; Manchester, Texas; Shawnee, Texas; Winthrope, Arkansas; Fanshawe, Oklahoma; Wilburton, Oklahoma. Ten of the priesthood reported. J. C. Chrestensen of the tabernacle committee reported that they did not buy a tabernacle because of lack of funds and a scarcity of tents. Following resolution adopted: "Resolved, That no person shall be ordained to any office in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in this the Eastern Oklahoma District, who is addicted to the use of tobacco or strong drinks (liquor) or gross sinful habits; and that no person shall be ordained only as the law of God may direct, as found in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants; and be it further resolved, that we will not honor the calling or official labors of any one holding the priesthood who persists in continuing their sinful, unlawful habits after being properly labored with." Officers elected: J. C. Chrestensen, president; J. E. Kelsey, secretary-treasurer. Wilburton, Oklahoma, was selected as the place for the next conference, to be held some time in February, exact date to be set by district president. J. E. Kelsey, secretary.

Convention Minutes

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—Religio, at Manchester, Texas, July 27. B. F. Pollard elected president pro tem. A motion prevailed that since there is not a live local in the district we declare the district disorganized. The balance in the treasury was given to the district Sunday school. Ora Kelsey, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Northwestern Kansas, changed to August 18 to 26, five miles east and three fourths south of Osborne, Kansas. J. B. Ansley, committee. Conference will convene during reunion and all reports should be sent to J. B. Ansley, secretary, Osborne.

Those coming to the Clinton reunion, August 24, please provide their own meals, as the committee have decided not to maintain a dining tent. A lunch stand will likely be provided.

The reunion of the Portland District has been called off by a majority vote of the committee. The committee regret that our members find themselves so situated that they are unable to patronize either financially or by their presence the proposed meeting. May the Lord abundantly prosper his people so that 1918 may find us amply able to sustain such useful gatherings. Also please note that this in no way affects the usual summer conference, notice of which will be given in due time. C. E. Jones, G. M. Appleman, L. B. Shippy, of committee.

Two-Day Meetings

At Brant, Michigan, August 25 and 26. Those coming by train will be met at Chesaning, Friday afternoon. Also a two-day meeting 5 miles east of West Branch, on Hemlock Road, September 1 and 2. Moved to Kansas, taking up a homestead at or near Abilene, where they lived for 12 years.

NO MORE PAID ADVERTISING

After August 15 neither the "Herald" nor the "Ensign" will accept paid advertising. This action is taken by the Board of Publication because the ideal of the church publishing interests is religious rather than commercial, and besides the space in the church papers is worth more to advertise our own books and periodicals than to sell for other purposes, however all of our existing contracts will be carried out.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION

Our greatest glory consists not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall.—Oliver Goldsmith.

Lost! A precious moment set with golden opportunities. No reward offered, for it is lost forever.

They came to California in January, 1883, landing in Los Angeles and from there went to Downey, where they lived for 24 years. From here they moved to Los Angeles where they have resided for 8 years. She attended the first conference of the Reorganized Church and was present when Joseph Smith was ordained. Together with her husband was baptized in 1864 at Batavia, Illinois. She was the mother of 11 children, 8 of whom are living, 3 boys and 5 girls. She has had an eventful career in the church and has been one of the staunch pillars of the latter-day work in southern California for a third of a century. Funeral sermon by Thomas W. Williams.

MOREY.—George M. Morey was born near Pleasanton, Iowa, to David B. and Deborah Morey, January 8, 1860. Baptized August 1, 1868. Married Sarah J. Rossiter at Beatrice, Nebraska, March 22, 1891, who survives him. Two children were born to them, one dying in infancy. Brother Morey's death came from heart failure, July 28, 1917, and was very sudden. The funeral services were conducted at the church, Pleasanton, Iowa, by R. J. Lambert, who preached the sermon. Interred in the Hamilton Cemetery, July 30. His influence for the church was good and will be missed.

WILL YOU

be one of those who will help win the war by turning farmer and raising something-to-eat to-sell-at-high-prices? Good! Then I have a message for you! You can find no better place to raise grains, forage crops, cereals, sugar beets, potatoes, fruits, live stock or poultry, than in the territory along the Burlington's lines. You can homestead a whole section of Government land (640 acres—think of it) in Wyoming; or purchase improved land in northeastern Colorado or southwestern Nebraska, where the climate, transportation and markets are right, on mighty attractive terms—if you act before it is too late.

There's no time like the present, so let's get started today. Write me about your plans and I'll give you the benefit of my experience. There is no charge for this—it's a part of Burlington Service. The company pays me to help you find what you want.

COGITATIONS OF A CONVALESCENT

It is Sunday. To preach—"it is verboten." And anyway I have no audience excepting trees and a brook, and it is said that they preach their own sermons. But who can forbid meditation? We cannot even avoid it when we would.

Editorials are supposed to be impersonal. Editors are as impersonal as Deity in the opening chapters of Genesis. But cogitations are prone to be personal—and disconnected. So "we" may be pardoned if I become personal. I am out of the way of being an editor.

Lecturers on psychology are fond of telling people that they have vast reservoirs of energy of which they are not aware, and that if they will but tap these reservoirs they can perform prodigious labors.

They do not tell what will happen after the reservoirs of reserve force are exhausted. They should do so, for it is most interesting. One may find out, however, by the simple process of working at mental work each day until mentally exhausted and then at physical work until physically exhausted, and then at night reviewing the day's labor and planning for the next day.

If this is kept up persistently one obtains a free trip over "the road of a thousand wonders" known as nervous prostration. He will come to learn that the most terrible words in the English language are, "Seeking rest and not finding it."

I am just getting back from such a trip and have had what my friends refer to as a "vacation." Watching a broken winged sea gull limping down a lonely strand in the melancholy shades of evening, while his former companions flew gayly out to sea, I soliloquized: "Well, old fellow, you too are having a vacation."

Vacations are fine when desired. Recently I heard a motorman say: "I wish I could take six months off from work twice each year for ten years." He was a volunteer. With conscripts it is different.

The overburdened should take their vacation while they can enjoy it. I have become suspicious of that old song which says: "There must be no furlough granted in the army of the Lord."

After riding about in a wheel chair for a few months I reached this conclusion. Much as I would like to own an automobile or a Ford, anything that I could refer to as "my cah," it is even more desirable to have two perfectly good legs capable of being used for purposes of locomotion at a reasonable rate of speed whenever needed. And on that question of a reasonable rate of speed I am somewhat like the gentleman that I met as he was coming down the lower slopes of Pike's Peak. The climb up had been very strenuous, and it was even worse going downhill, as it usually is. As I passed him he said to me: "If the Lord will forgive me this time and let me keep my legs I will take better care of them in the future."

I am glad to report that I am able to walk again, if not so fast and so far as of old, still it is walking, and I appreciate Adam's motor as never before.

At this writing we are for the time being domiciled in a tent house on the banks of a cold mountain stream in Lytle Creek Canyon, some twenty miles from San Bernardino. A former tenant has named it "Bubbling Brook Camp."

Some one left a horseshoe at our tent. I wonder if it means good luck. The Smiths were said to be superstitious a hundred years ago. That was an awful charge until it was learned by actual inquiry that seventy-five per cent of the professors and students at Harvard are superstitious now. Woodrow Wilson says thirteen is a lucky number for him, and Friday a lucky day. And we suspect that the Kaiser carries a rabbit's foot. What a notable company Joseph Smith and Lucy Mack are come among.

The California Saints have been very kind to us, as usual. But the weather has been most inhospitable.

pitiable. The winter was long and cold. The summer has been the hottest on record—the Government thermometer at San Bernardino registered one hundred and sixteen and one half on one occasion—as hot as one might wish to become in this or any other world. Next year's oranges are burned up on the trees—very nearly a total loss.

Now in conclusion, as the elder says in the middle of his sermon: In many respects the year has been dark and dreary, due to sickness, and the loss by death of friends and relatives, and inability to continue our service in the church.

Yet we realize that it is true, as Longfellow says:

"Into all lives some rain must fall, some days be dark and dreary."

And probably while we pity ourselves, our neighbor to the right or the left is worse off than we. We never know when we are side by side with tragedy. My seatmate in the stage coming up to this camp was a young man in apparent good health. If I thought of him at all it was to envy him, until he confided in me that he had recently lost his wife. She had burned to death. The horror of the tragedy and his consequent loneliness had weighed upon his mind until he had become a nervous wreck and was fleeing to the hills for refuge.

In answer to the prayers of the Saints, my wife, who was very ill with pleura-typhoid for a long time is now recovering rapidly.

And in answer to similar prayers, despite many hindrances, I am progressing toward recovery.

Our hearts turn homeward. Often we sing the refrain:

"Home, home, shineth before us; when, when shall we get there?"

We solicit a further interest in the prayers and faith of the Saints. I want to get back to my work.
July 28, 1917. ELBERT A. SMITH.

PRAYER MEETINGS

Who may take charge of a prayer meeting or of a prayer and testimony meeting? Must one of the priesthood preside, or if none of the priesthood are present may a member be chosen to take charge?

This question was brought up many times with our late President Joseph Smith, and was answered by him through the columns of the HERALD. We give herewith several extracts from these editorials:

A brother writes and asks the following question; the circumstances being that there are a few living somewhat near together, but no officer near them that they know of:

"Have we a right to meet and hold a prayer meeting without an elder present? Please give us some light on this subject in your next issue."

We reply to the above question, that wherever the Saints may be, "two, or three," or more, it is the privilege and right to hold seasons of prayer, as they may agree, whether there is an officer of the church present or not. We know of no reason why Saints may not meet and enjoy the communion of the Spirit in prayer and converse together concerning the kingdom of God, and his mercy to the world and his loving kindness to his people. So we answer the question—Yes.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 39, 1892.

PRAYER MEETINGS

In places where prayer meetings are held among the Saints where a branch organization has not been perfected, the rule regarding who should preside would be, the one present holding the highest office in the priesthood should take charge. In case no officer should be present the one to take charge should be appointed by a motion and vote of those present. If there should be an elder in the locality, he would be privileged to suggest some one of the laity to take charge from time to time, if it was known that neither he nor any other officer would be present; but he would not be authorized to appoint anyone to take charge permanently without the consent of the Saints authoritatively to put anyone in charge. If a branch organization was effected, the presiding officer could name another officer to have temporary charge, he could not properly appoint a lay member; though he could suggest who might be a suitable person to take charge when no officer should be present. The Saints who may at any time be assembled for prayer and find that no officer is present to take charge, may select one of their own number present to lead, so that their assembling may not be lost to them.—THE SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 51, 1904.

This topic has been discussed by President Joseph Smith several times in the HERALD. In volume 48, page 182, he answered that either a brother or sister may open, conduct, or close a prayer meeting concluding as follows: "They should hold their meeting by all means, if they can do it without a controversy, or wrangle over who should take the lead."

Reference might also be made to volume 25, page 97, volume 46, page 81. The discussion is also taken up in regard to prayer union of the sisters which is discussed in a favorable way. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 36, p. 209; 39, pp. 390, 453; 52, p. 1138.) In volume 55, page 507, another aspect is considered still as affecting the prayer union as follows:

Our understanding of the matter is this: there were a great number of inquiries made in the HERALD from time to time, for prayers to be offered for those who were sick, afflicted in body, or distressed in spirit. This attracting the attention of some of the sisters of the church suggested the thought that it would not be improper for some of the sisters in any given locality to meet by agreement on some certain day of the week and at a given hour of the day, for the purpose of entreating in prayer on behalf of these afflicted persons. We were consulted about this contemplated prayer service, and readily gave the matter consideration and approval. . . . Of late, however, we have heard some complaint arising out of the fact that in some places these prayer unions have assumed a character of the ordinary testimony meetings held by the branch, and over which the officers of the church preside; this is a departure from the original intention and must be avoided; as advantage has been taken and will be taken of the conditions, and imposition by improper spirits will result, the sisters being off their guard. We advise at once a return to the original intention and understanding upon which these prayer unions were established. When this is done we see no reason for the intervention of the church authority in regard to them.

We may be wrong, but it seems to us sometimes that the priesthood is a little too jealous of its prerogatives, and a little too restrictive of others.—From an editorial on prayer meetings, after giving a similar answer to the above, SAINTS' HERALD, April 6, 1881.

It seems clear from this that prayer meeting may be held by men or women with or without a member of the priesthood, but such meetings should not be held in a spirit of contention, if there is contention or grave objection we should refrain. But such meetings are not to be conducted as ordinary testimony meeting. It belongs to the eldership to discern unclean spirits, and especially does it belong to the presiding elder; but the priesthood should not be too jealous of its prerogatives, but should work for the good of the cause.

But a prayer and testimony meeting should not be held unless the officers of the branch, the priesthood, are present and in regular charge.

It belongs to the eldership, and especially to the presiding elder in each branch, to perceive and rebuke an evil spirit. (See Doctrine and Covenants 50:7; 46:7—last sentence.) The elders are to direct the meetings as directed by the Spirit. (Doctrine and Covenants 17:9; 46:1.)

Joseph Smith the Martyr is quoted in Millennial Star, volume 17, page 312 (published May 19, 1855), as saying:

Every spirit, or vision, or singing, is not of God. The Devil is an orator; he is powerful; . . . The gift of discerning spirits will be given to the presiding elder. Pray for him that he may have this gift. Speak not in tongues without understanding it, or without interpretation. The Devil can speak in tongues; the Adversary will come with his work; he can tempt all classes; can speak in English or Dutch. Let no one speak in tongues unless he interpret, except by consent of the one who is placed to preside; then he may discern or interpret, or another may.

Our late president is quoted above from SAINTS' HERALD, volume 55, page 507. President Frederick M. Smith, so far as we are aware, has not expressed himself directly on this question, but in the light of the strong position taken by him in the July, 1917, Unity, on the right and duty of the Melchisedec priesthood to preside, there is every reason to presume that his views are in accord with those of his predecessors.

PORK

The Mosaic law forbade the use of pork. The Jewish Encyclopedia, volume 11, page 609, contends that swine are most subject to disease, that their intestines more nearly resemble that of man, so that the consumption of swine has been considered dangerous to mankind. The Encyclopedia Brittan-ica, under "Tapeworm," states that there are three kinds, from beef, pork and fish, of which the second is the more common. In all cases it comes from the eating of food, raw meat, or meat poorly cooked. Much less of it is to be found in the United States than in northern Europe. Careful inspection tends to eliminate the danger, but cooking, thorough cooking, is certain to destroy the lurking germs.

The same authority, under "Trichinosis," states that in 6,329 cases of the disease, 5,456 came from eating raw pork. Swine are the main source of infection, and careful inspection under a microscope is only a partial protection, for thirty-two per cent of the cases examined, were caused from meat which had been passed by the Government. But thorough cooking is an effective preventive, and after the meat is thoroughly cooked it is stated there is no danger of infection.

Pork is listed regularly among the recognized foods in this country, and one which possesses a high nutritive value, and is regularly considered in most courses of dietetics.

In view of the data set forth above there is very good reason offered for the declaration of this law of sanitation. Camping out as they did, and with more or less imperfect methods of cooking (in fact it is still considered the thing in the best restaurants, and in the civilized countries, to serve beef underdone) pork is a serious source of infection.

So far as the divine law may be concerned, the Mosaic law has been done away with in Christ. (Romans 10:4; 8:2; Galatians 3:13; 24:25; 4:1-31; John 17:7, etc.) The Christian nations have not considered themselves bound by this prohibition. In plain fact, we still have reason to believe that there is strongly the natural reasons back of these prohibitions of the Mosaic law. So far as we are concerned, the New Testament lays down no special restriction except to avoid giving offense in the eating of meat. That is, do not eat meat sacrificed to idols, if it would offend. Also we have the emphasis on temperance by the early Christians.

In modern times we have the declaration of the Word of Wisdom:

Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine.—Doctrine and Covenants 86:2.

Yet we are told:

And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin; and woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need.—Ibid., 49: 3.

From this it would appear that meat should be used very sparingly indeed, except in cold weather, or times of famine. In these revelations we must remember that under frontier conditions they were not possessed of a variety of food, such as we have to-day. Yet meat is not denied to us; we are aware that many physicians as well as others, urge a greater change in diet.

And again, verily I say unto you, All wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof. . . . All grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts, to be the staff of life, not only for man, but for the beasts of the field, and earth; and these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger.—Ibid., 86: 2.

On compliance with this we are promised health. As we understand it, the Mosaic law is not binding upon us to-day. So far as the law of God declares, we should eat little or no meat during the summer months of the year, yet we may use it with wisdom in the colder months. This includes the ordinary kinds of flesh used for food. Grains and fruits in their season are all good for food.

Pork is not a meat for hot climates, because of the high percentage of fats. Palestine is semi-tropical, and the desert where they wandered for forty years was to the south and hotter. The mean temperature of Palestine to-day is given as 70 degrees for the plain and 62 degrees for the mountainous region. Snow rarely falls, and then stays only a day or two in the mountainous regions, where they dwelt. The temperature often rises to 100 and 102 degrees in the shade. There are greater changes east of the Jordan, but hardly so extreme as in the United States.

In this country the temperature in winter drops to sixty below in the northwest; and the winter mean of the north interior is below freezing.

In Missouri twenty to thirty below has occurred many winters, while the three winter months average for mean temperature below freezing. In Iowa the temperature has been as low as 43 degrees below zero, with a mean temperature for the year of 47.5.

Massachusetts has a mean summer temperature of 70, the same as for the year in Palestine; but the winter average at Williamstown is 23 degrees. The springs are long and cold.

Thus we could continue through most of the States. The essential point being, that except the few southern States and southern California, which still average lower than Palestine, the mean temperatures are decidedly lower. But in addition to this, there is greater range of change in temperature, as in many places it is as high as 140 degrees and the extremes are even greater. These cold winters require different food and treatment from the mild and more nearly uniform temperatures of Palestine.

So far as investigations have shown, these conclusions appear to be confirmed. Pork is more a source of danger than is beef and other meats, but may be used safely when it is thoroughly cooked, and as safely as other flesh. In fact, pork is given a very high place for its nutritive quality and especially fats. It is a meat for winter, as it is heating, and hence is not a meat for summer when we can keep hot without additional help.

Other meats may prove injurious, too, as we have known men to eat beef in such quantities and so regularly that they could not keep awake in church, but snored regularly through the sermon, regardless of the speaker or how loud he spoke.

That indicates also one possible fault with pork. Many people may be like the bishop who after eating of much pork, awoke in the night in great pain. The family came to his rescue with all the available remedies, but still he groaned, and carried on so that the lady of the house said, "Why, bishop, surely you are not afraid to die!"

"No, sister, not afraid, only ashamed."

THE LAMONI REUNION

The stake reunion progresses with added forcefulness and significance. It seems as though such an abundance of God's Spirit is present in the meetings that it must surely purge the dross from the finer metals. The consecrated workers are renewing their pledges upon occasions so solemn that it is as though they are standing before the judgment bar of God, calling on him to witness their pledge. Tongues and interpretations, communications of the Spirit to the people, testimonies inspired by a Spirit not of man, are frequent and deeply inspirational. The very early prayer meetings of the young are revealing new sources of help not hitherto brought to the light. And in all the meetings one in attune with the spirit of the occasion must recognize the importance of this reunion.

The big camp of nearly five hundred people, over one hundred and twenty tents, involves considerable administrative ability, but with the cooperation of the people everything moves smoothly. Two afternoons and evenings after preaching services are given over entirely to recreation, which has been largely participated in, and the Lord has been pleased to commend the Saints in times past for the manner in which they have taken part in this as well as in other features of the work.

On Sunday morning, the 12th, President Fredrick M. Smith addressed the Saints in a most powerful plea for a recognition of the crisis in both the world and the church, pointing out the relation of the two, and the importance of a wise and immediate solution, to the stake and the church at large. The large audience was deeply moved as he portrayed some of the problems of the church and the part the central places must have in the establishment of Zion conditions. Perhaps more fully than ever before, he plainly pointed out to the people of God that it is a time in which men's souls will be tried as by fire but that those who will prepare for the emergency will pass safely through and be fit instruments in the hands of God for the working out of his plans.

The attendance from abroad is noticeable. Some have driven three and four hundred miles to be in attendance, while a considerable number have come from points within a radius of a hundred miles or more.

The reunion is certainly an important factor in our church work, and it is a matter of sincere regret that so many of our districts were unable to hold their meetings this year. Yet it was only by changing the dates and paying more for tents that Lamoni could secure accommodations this year.

While the meetings have not closed as we write this, yet sufficient has been noted to indicate the nature of meetings and the success being attained. The grounds are the admiration of all who view them, and the improvements, together with the naming of the streets this year after historic church places, lend a delightful permanency to the grounds, which will long stand as a monument to the church and its activities. The report of the committee on naming the streets is of general interest and will appear in the Autumn Leaves as written by Vida E. Smith.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

WAR

Question. If God is all powerful, why does he not stop the war?

Answer. A careful study of the biblical records should convince us that it has not been the plan of our heavenly Father to compel us to be saved. He has given us our free agency to the end that we may develop and become his sons and daughters. According to Genesis 3 (Inspired Version) Lucifer fell because he would have compelled man to be saved.

Our heavenly Father wishes us to learn and grow until we become strong in the truth and prefer righteousness. Yet he does not leave us entirely alone. He intervenes many times for the protection of those who love him and seek to keep his commandments, not by the setting aside of law, but in accordance with law. He has promised to fight our battles and if our faith is sufficient we may look for protection.

Later we may have another article or editorial on this theme, the nature of evil and why it is permitted in the world, so far as we are able to determine with our present limited knowledge.

HOPE OF MESSIAH OLDER THAN BIBLE

The following item may prove of much interest to our readers:

Philadelphia, Monday, May 7.—The doctrine of a Messianic hope of the expectation of deliverance from sin and suffering by a god-man in the shape of a king, goes back at least to 2500 B. C., when the Sumerian theologians and priests evolved a theory which has been the basis of Jewish and Christian religion ever since, according to tablets in the Nippur collection of the University Museum just translated by Doctor Stephen Langdon.

The new tablets are of interest because they show that the Sumerians never lost hope that the restoration to a state of sinlessness and happiness through the agency of the gods would come, and their faith was pinned on earthly kings who were deified and worshiped in the hope that one would be a deliverer.

Elaborate rituals were made for all of them but each failed. Then came the Semite conquest of Sumer and the era of pessimism set in as shown by the famous epic of Gilgamesh, one missing book of which has just been found in the Nippur collection of the University Museum.

The discovery is considered important because it shows that the Sumerians who first gave an account of the creation, flood and fall of man, which were adopted by the Jews also provided the first theme of a god-man who should suffer death and redeem the people from the loss of paradise. All of these documents date from before the time of Abraham and are apparently copies of those much older. The fundamentals of Jewish and Christian religion are shown in tablets at least 4,500 years old.

The Sumerians preceded the Chaldeans, Babylonians and Assyrians in settling the valley of the Euphrates. Their language and characters were used by the latter races very much as Latin has been used in the Catholic Church, in medicine and in law. From non-Symitic and non-Aryan people, Nimrod is now ascribed to them. The discovery of their ruins has done much to oppose the strong Aryan view of civilization upheld in the end of the last century, as their civilization appears to have excelled considerably that of their successors in the valley of the Euphrates. Their culture exceeded that of the historic nations of antiquity.

From a Biblical viewpoint it is not at all surprising that we should find the fundamentals of the Jewish and Christian religion on the tablets written forty-five hundred years ago, for the gospel was preached to Adam, to Moses, to Abraham, and to Noah. We should not be at all surprised to find that their early religion was superior to that of the Jews.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Sacrifices, Their Origin and Significance

A short tract with the above title by B. A. M. Shapiro has come to our desk. It is for use among English-speaking Jews and is pro-Christian. It is of interest as giving the Jewish view of sacrifices of the Mosaic law and their meaning and also on their idea of the atonement under the law of Moses and through Jesus Christ.

Chain Letter Prayers

Chain letter prayers may be effective, but we believe that the same energy put into a personal appeal to God would be far more efficacious. We have seen a number of such prayers, some of which contain objectionable features, and with all of them there is a threat that those who dare to break the chain will meet with some dire misfortune. The sister who sends in the most recent one says "this seems to me to be superstition." We agree that it has that appearance and advise against all kinds of chain letters.

Continue to Prepare for Ministry

"Voted: that the administrative committee be asked to express the conviction of the Federal council that students in our colleges and also students in our theological seminaries and candidates for foreign missionary service continue their preparation for the Christian ministry, at home and abroad, until actually called forth by our government, inasmuch as there will be increasing need of their services during and after war in behalf of the kingdom of God."—The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Report of Special Meeting, Washington, District of Columbia, May 7, 8, 9, 1917.

Stake Officers' Meeting

Elders John Garver and A. Carmichael were called to Independence from the reunion to attend a meeting of the stake presidents and bishops on Thursday, August 9. An unusually good meeting is reported, with a splendid spirit present. President Frederick M. Smith returned from Colorado to attend this meeting, and as he presented these men before the Lord and asked his blessings on their labors for Zion and her stakes, to prepare and care for those who love peace and who shall flee to Zion for refuge from the results of war and suffering in the world, his whole body trembled and the divine approval was manifest. It was a wonderful prayer, in which inspiration was manifest. These two brethren traveled all Wednesday night to get there, and all Thursday night to get back on account of the Lamoni reunion. But they counted their sacrifice in loss of sleep well spent in the light and strength received in that meeting.

Extensive Advertisers

The Utah church believes in advertising. Under the name of Doctor James E. Talmage as author they use whole columns of paid-for newspaper space to tell about the book of Mormon. Their advertisements have appeared recently in a number of the metropolitan dailies and no doubt reach many people. If their edition of the Book of Mormon did not contain a footnote—among many others—referring the reader to section 132 of their Doctrine and Covenants for a further explanation of the marriage question, it might not be so misleading. Perhaps most of our readers know that this section is the one which Brigham Young brought out in 1852, saying it had been received by Joseph Smith in 1843 and containing some most reprehensible teachings which make the Lord to commend polygamy. The book itself condemns polygamy and they themselves claim the Manifesto brought an end to the practices set out in section 132; why confuse the reader in this manner? The suggestion that further information may be received from their mission at Independence, Missouri, is perfectly legitimate but withal liable to confuse many.

Without courage there cannot be truth; and without truth there can be no other virtue.—Walter Scott.

The mental contortionist may attract some attention, but the proclamation of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is not compatible with theological gymnastics.—James E. Yates.

You may think you are going to read your back numbers of the church papers and magazines, but do you? If not, why not see that others who need them have the privilege of reading them also?

A Philadelphia divine was entertaining a couple of clergymen from New York at dinner. The guests spoke in praise of a sermon their host had delivered the Sunday before.

The host's son was at the table and one of the New York clergymen said to him:

"My lad, what did you think of your father's sermon?"

"I guess it was very good," said the boy, "but there were three mighty fine places where he could have stopped."—Chicago Herald.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE ETERNAL JUDGMENT

(Sermon preached by Heman C. Smith, Sunday evening, October 22, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

Sometimes one of the most difficult things for a public speaker is to determine on what subject he will address an audience. I am spared that anxiety to-night, as to whether I shall make a right selection or not, by the fact that the subject has been advertised for me, and I have been requested to speak on a particular subject, the subject as you know who have read the advertisement or heard it announced, is on the eternal judgment.

I presume that this term which has grown to be quite common among us, is derived from the statement made by the Apostle Paul, found in the sixth chapter of Hebrews, where he says,

Therefore leaving the principle of the doctrine of Christ, let us go unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Verses 1 and 2.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT FOR ALL

As I said before, I presume that the name of this subject is derived from that. It has grown to be very common, especially among our people, to speak in connection with other things, of eternal judgment. Nothing that I can say to-night, nothing that you may think in regard to it will change the principle involved in it; it will remain the same thing no matter what we do, what we say, or what our convictions are in regard to it, and I need not say to this audience that it is something that we must meet. None of us expect to avoid it. Other things we may avoid, we may reject, or we may escape, but as for the eternal judgment we are all convinced that we must some time stand before the bar of Christ and be judged.

Notwithstanding we cannot change the principle involved, we may by correct understanding of it get a higher regard for our Lord and greater reverence for his justice and mercy than we can possibly have by a misconception of this subject, and so far as we may become instructed in regard to the truth, we are getting nearer and nearer to the divine life. A great deal of what I believe to be false theology arises from a misconception of the term used here, and other like terms.

ITS MEANING

Eternal judgment. What does it mean? Other like expressions are used in the word of God; eternal punishment, everlasting life. Now there are some in the world, and have been for a long time, that believe that these terms have something to do with a term or length of time that we are to occupy in these different conditions. I do not believe that the words have any reference at all to that. I believe that eternal judgment means the judgment of the Eternal, the judgment of God; everlasting life means the life of God, of which we are to partake; everlasting punishment means the punishment that we are to receive from the Everlasting One, without regard to how long it shall be endured. It is everlasting punishment if administered by the Everlasting One, whether we suffer it for a day or forever and ever. These terms are no indication at all to the length of time that these conditions are to obtain, they simply mean that they are of God. Eternal life means we are to partake of the life of God; eternal misery means that we are to partake of the misery that will be meted out to us for our acts. Everlasting has the same meaning.

I might reason upon that for some time, but I think it not necessary. You will at once grasp the idea. I will simply say if judgment is eternal, meaning that it is the judgment of the Eternal One—it is God's judgment—it necessarily follows that that judgment will be a just one, for God is just. It necessarily follows that it will be administered in love, for God is love. It necessarily follows that it is to be a judgment from which we are to receive exactly what belongs to us. God is no respecter of persons, and he would not defraud us of our rights, nor would he grant to us that which was not our due. It will be absolutely just. It will be eternal judgment. And he being no respecter of persons, it will follow that it does not matter what period of the world a man shall have lived in, whether it is in the days of the patriarchs and prophets, or the days of Christ upon earth, or whether in our own time, that justice meted out to man will be the same, and we are entitled in that judgment to just what men are entitled to who lived before; just what men are entitled to who will live after. It is an eternal judgment, a just judgment, and every man and woman shall share alike.

I have no sympathy, however, with the popular doctrine that there are but two places in the hereafter into which mankind will be received. One is called heaven, and one is called hell; and the popular doctrine is that if you do not reach the heavenly portal you will go into the lake of fire and brimstone that burneth forever and ever, without regard to the grade of morals, the faith and righteousness which you possess.

A JUST JUDGMENT

Now if God's judgment is a just judgment—and it must be that, if it were not God's it would not be just—it will also be true. Our lawmakers know better than to punish men equally for all crimes. If they were to enact a law by which every man who committed a transgression of the law, no matter how small that transgression might be, should share the fate of a murderer, there would not be gallows enough to hang us on, and we would say at once that it was unjust, that men were not deserving of such punishment for small offenses and we would be right.

That is not the doctrine of the Bible. It has been preached because of a misconception of what the Bible teaches, and as I have said before, a misunderstanding of the terms used. I do not blame men for misunderstanding, doubtless we are all guilty of misunderstanding. One cannot believe according to justice, that there is to be just the two places, and that men are to be separated along the line between hell and heaven. Of course I believe in a sense it is hell to be punished. When the big fish swallowed Jonah, he says he cried from the belly of hell. He was suffering a punishment, and that was called hell. It might not be as severe in some instances as in others, but still it is in a sense hell when you are suffering punishment. Upon the other hand, you are partaking of the blessedness of heaven when you are getting a reward, and whether we are all going to be relegated into the two classes, or the two places, is not a question with me.

NOT ALL REWARDED OR PUNISHED ALIKE

I want to call your attention to a few passages, and I have time only for a few, for there are many passages upon every point that I shall introduce to-night, that prove to me that all men who are punished will not be punished alike, and all men who are rewarded will not be rewarded alike.

I invite your attention to the twelfth chapter of Luke, beginning with the 47th verse, which reads as follows:

And that servant, which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes.

They are both to be punished. There cannot be a possibility of its being equal when one gets a few stripes and the other gets many. It appears to me that the fewer the better for our comfort, and the more—the more severe will be the punishment.

And you see the justice in it, too. He that knoweth his Master's will and prepareth himself not, and doeth it not, ought to be beaten with more stripes than the man who does a thing worthy of stripes ignorantly. He that knows not his Master's will and commits things worthy of stripes, he is to be beaten with few stripes. If the Master was right, the principle involved is very plain. I ought not to have said "if the Master is right," it ought to be taken for granted always that he is right.

There are degrees mentioned here, and it illustrates the principle upon which this great question of eternal judgment is founded.

WICKED CITIES

Again, right along the same principle, we have another statement we want to call your attention to. I invite your attention to Matthew 11, commencing with the twenty-first verse, where Jesus Christ looking upon the wicked cities of his time, said:

Woe unto thee, Chorazin! Woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.

Tyre and Sidon were wicked cities, and according to the popular doctrine would go to hell, but it would be more tolerable than for the cities of Christ's time, and I cannot conceive of one having a more tolerable experience in hell than another, according to the popular doctrine that everybody must burn in hell that does not become sufficiently virtuous and righteous to enter into the pearly gates of heaven.

And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

Now here are wicked cities, all wicked, yet Sodom was to have a more tolerable punishment than the others, and the reason is given. It makes the justice of it appear plain. Though Tyre and Sidon were wicked, the Master said that if the things that had been done in the cities of his time had been done there, Tyre and Sidon would have repented in sackcloth and ashes. Sodom would have been there to this day. It would not have taken the course under the same circumstances that Capernaum did. Capernaum knew the word and should have a severer punishment.

That is the doctrine of the Master, that is the principle upon which he founds his judgment, that is eternal judgment. And in that connection I want to invite your attention to a declaration made by the Master in regard to the judgment when he shall come. I am moving slowly to-night because I want you to grasp what I have to say in this regard. I am told these things by an authority that I can in no wise doubt, that these things are to be meted out to men along these lines of justice and of right, and that when a man is arraigned before the bar of God that he will receive just exactly what he deserves, no more, no less.

I invite you now to turn with me to the sixteenth chapter of Matthew and the twenty-seventh verse: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."

Ah, there are so many different types of characters, so much difference in men that they cannot receive according to their works without that punishment and reward differing as men differ. He shall receive according to his works, whether they be good or they be evil, and in proportion to the good, and in proportion to the evil, and I say right here that I cannot conceive of the idea of the great God, the loving Father, who is a character of justice, of love, of mercy, ever saying to men either in this life or in the life to come, "So far shalt thou come and no farther," and as there is nothing in the word of God to my knowledge that says that when once eternal judgment is passed upon him it shall remain fixed I believe he may always progress. Justice says that a man ought to suffer a certain punishment, but if that man changes, justice would no longer consign him to what it consigned him to before, because he is not what he was before. He should have a different judgment passed upon him, or a different degree in his behalf, if he is different. Nothing else could ever satisfy justice but that. He receives according to his work, and if his work shows improvement, his judgment would be the better. If he shall become worse, judgment must be worse.

DEATHBED REPENTANCE

Some one says, "Are you not then a Universalist?" No, not necessarily so. I hope for the salvation of all mankind, but I believe that depends upon their works. It depends upon their worthiness to be saved, whether in time or in eternity. Of course I believe in the doctrine of repentance and forgiveness, but that depends largely upon us, and if we do sincerely repent that is a part of our work, and hence we must receive for that reason according to our work just judgment for that repentance. I do not count so much on deathbed repentance as some people do. I believe that if a man lives a corrupt life all the days of the vigor of his manhood, and death suddenly overtakes him, if he shall sincerely, honestly repent of those sins, as he looks back over them, and asks God for forgiveness, he will get a reward for that act, the same as he does for any other act; but that it would place him upon a level with the man who had lived a righteous, consecrated life in the service of God all his days, I do not believe. I believe he will receive according to justice, and the man who engages in the service of God and continues therein while life lasts, is entitled to more than the man who simply says, "Lord forgive me," in his dying hour. I will not deny to him the reward for that act. He ought to have it. He will get it.

Somebody asks me though if that is not out of harmony with some other things in the Scripture. We will see as we go along. Though we won't examine all the Scripture, we will answer some of those things.

I find this same doctrine of a reward according to works in Paul's epistle to the Romans. I read from Romans 2:5-11:

But, after thy hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God; who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life: but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honor, and peace, to every man that worketh good; to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God.

SHEEP AND GOATS—

That is plain, you will receive according to justice, according to your merit and your diligence in doing that which is right. Sometimes when we talk along this line people say, "Didn't the Lord say he was going to divide the people in the judgment day, and put the sheep upon the right and the goats upon the left?" Let us read that and see what it does say. Sometimes we get a different idea from reading a thing than we have had from our preconceived opinion. Now we find that in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, and read as follows, it tells us just when it shall be, commencing with the thirty-first verse of this chapter:

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: [from that I understand the judgment would not be passed upon nations but upon individuals—it will be an individual judgment] when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father.

I want you to notice what they are getting a reward for. There is not an intimation that they are to get this reward because of their obedience to Jesus Christ. They seem to be the honorable men of the earth who have been doing good. There had been a resurrection before this general judgment in which the righteous were to receive according to the book, and they were to live and reign with Christ a thousand years before this, and in the nineteenth chapter of Acts the Master tells the disciples that when he shall sit upon the throne of his glory they shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. When the eternal judgment shall come they will be divided, the sheep upon the right and the goats upon the left, and

Then shall the King say to them upon his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

Now mark all those were material acts, nothing said about obedience there. Yet these men were to have a reward, and when they ask the question: "When did we do these things," they seemed to be ignorant of it, but from the kindness of their heart they did good, because they were honorable, upright, and good morally, and had regard for their fellow men.

"And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

AND "THESE MY BRETHREN"

There are three parties here. Here are the goats—good moral, generous, sympathetic people. About the same was said to these fellows, only a "not" was put in their way, and they ask the question, "When saw we thee in those conditions and did not minister unto thee?" And he said the same to them that he had to the others, "inasmuch as you have done it not unto one of these, my brethren, you did it not unto me." You notice the third party—my brethren. They are the ones who had been faithful to the gospel of Jesus Christ and been true; they were the ones who had been with the Master before this judgment took place; they were the ones to whom he had promised that they were to sit upon the thrones of his glory; they should be with him.

Now when eternal judgment comes, he says to those upon his right, "Ye did it to these my brethren," to those upon the left, "Ye did it not unto these my brethren." These, my brethren, are the ones who represented Jesus Christ, and the acts of men towards these brethren were considered the same as if it were done unto the Master himself. And there is abundant scripture to that effect outside of what I have quoted. Where the Master told the disciples when they went out into the world that they "who receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." That is the principle involved.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT GOD'S JUDGMENT

Now on the judgment day the men who have treated these servants, the brethren of Christ, with consideration, should get a reward for it, and those who did not were to be punished for it, as though it had been done to the Master himself. It is a principle of the judgment as taught here, it is eternal judgment. It is God's judgment. It is a just judgment, and must be just for it is God's. It is eternal punishment because it is God's punishment. God is just; God is eternal. That punishment is God's punishment if such offenses always remain so that they are everlasting, but when men shall relieve themselves from that situation, their punishment must be relieved too, justice could not demand anything else.

I am sometimes told that if we preach that a man will not go to hell and be in torment and burn in the lake of fire and brimstone, and stay there always, that men will not repent, they will take their chances. They have the privilege of taking their chances, but I think that when you present God as a just Being who will do for you what belongs to you, that you will inspire men to love him, and there will be more repentance and a greater degree of love and consecration to God and his servants than there will if you present him as a tyrant who is going to burn you for ever and ever for an offense that you may have repented of; that there is coming a time as some say, when repentance will no longer be noticed, when a man can cry from the flames of hell throughout all eternity and God will not hear. That is not the way I have learned him. I have believed, and I choose to believe, that his ears will always be opened to the cries of those who desire to serve him and change their conditions from worse to better. I call that eternal judgment, because it is God's judgment, and because it is just judgment.

EVIL BRINGS ITS PUNISHMENT

Let no one suppose that he is going to escape judgment for the evil he does. That would not be just, and the moment God excuses a man and says, "I will not punish you for your transgressions," that moment he makes an exception in the case of one individual over another he becomes a respecter of persons, and I would be ashamed to represent him. I care not whether he respects him to his advantage or disadvantage, it is contrary to the character of God, and he would then cease to be God.

"Oh," some one says, "I do not see where repentance comes in." I do, I see that repentance is a part of the good works we do. We are going to get a reward for it in the ratio of our sincere repentance. I do not believe repentance is going to do for men what some people think it will, though, that a man can with impunity sin and never suffer any loss.

A BLOCK OF MARBLE

I look at that sometimes in this way: Suppose that this book were a block of marble, polished as finely as the art of man can polish it, so fine perhaps that you could not discover a flaw in it with a magnifying glass. Let me take the point of a pin or of a needle and scratch the surface of that marble—it would never be as it was before, worlds without end. You cannot make it what it was before. "Why," you say, "you can repolish it and polish the scratch out." No, you don't. You polish the whole face of the marble down even with the scratch. You take it off all over the whole block of marble so that it is reduced in size, and the repolishing of that marble is at a loss of material—there is no doubt of that.

So we mar these characters of ours. So by evil deeds, and evil desires, and lustful practices you contaminate your fair character, and you may be repolished through the doctrine of repentance and remission of sins that will take them away, that is so far as the outward appearance is concerned, but if you are repolished it is with a loss of material, certainly of lost time, you have more than lost the time in which you are committing the sin, and not only put something upon your record that you want blotted out—and it is to your interest to have blotted out—but you have lost the time you might have spent doing good.

BLOTTING OUT OUR SINS

We pray every night pretty near, if we pray at all, "Oh, Lord, blot out from the book of thy remembrance all things that are against me." Oh, how fondly we hope he will do that. What kind of a looking record are we going to have if it is done? Suppose our record is in this book. When it comes to the bar of God and the books are opened, men are judged out of things written in the books, according to their works, before the great Judge we turn over the pages. What is there? A page of blots. You asked for it, repeatedly asked that there might be blots there. You put something on the face of your record you did not want, and you asked the Lord to blot it out. If, in mercy, he did it, you have got blots when you get there. It is better, of course, to have blots than to have the evil record there. How much better it would be if instead of putting things there that you wanted God to blot out, you put something there that you wanted to remain, to shine through eternity in living letters of life. You have lost time, I tell you, whenever you do an evil act; though you may through your works of repentance have it blotted out you have lost something.

Some people think that they can commit sins all their life, and at the end they may ask the Lord to forgive them, and then fare just as well as the man or woman that has been sacrificing, has been passing through tribulation, through trial, and resisted temptation and made a good record. For my part I do not want a record like that. I do not want to appear before the bar of God and find no blots there—I remember some things I would like to have blotted out. I want to find some blots there, but I do not want that record to be turned over page by page and when we get right back here—all blots until you get to the back—and then have it recorded that I said, "Lord, forgive me." I do not want a record like that. I do not think you do. I think you want when eternal judgment shall come, to find occasionally a bright spot in your record, something done that you wanted to remain, that you want God to see and want to meet when you shall meet at the bar of God and eternal judgment shall sit.

"EVERY MAN IN HIS OWN ORDER"

Turning to the fifteenth chapter of Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians, I read, commencing with the nineteenth verse:

If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order.

That is the point we have been trying to urge here to-night, that when you are made alive in Christ, every man will be in his own order, in the position that belongs to him by right of justice.

"But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."

I will not stop to comment on that, it is too plain to be mistaken. Every man will arise in his own order.

Further on in this chapter, and commencing with the fortieth verse, I read this: "There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another."

There is glory in both cases, but one glory is greater than the other. Justice demanded it, justice would see that it is meted out. Then by way of illustration the Apostle Paul says: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory."

Note that there are three, the glory of the sun, the moon, and the stars, but they differ in glory. That is what the apostle says, I am not responsible for it, and he says, "So also is the resurrection of the dead." You cannot mistake that. As there are so many differences in the glories in the firmament, "so also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power."

The glory typified by the sun no doubt is the glory of the children of light, the glory of those "my brethren" to whom he referred in the judgment time, and if you want the glory of the sun—the greatest glory on earth—the glory that is typified by that greatest of all, the one which rises in the east and courses its way through the heaven, and all others sink into insignificance compared with it—then obey the truth and live it! If that is not sufficient inspiration to cause a man to repent of his sins and serve God, then indeed there is no use trying to reach him.

But you notice what Paul says about the glory of the stars—one star differs from another in glory. Some of them are so bright that even before the light of the sun disappears you can see their position in the heavens and recognize their twinkling light, but others are so dim that it takes the darkest night for them to come into view. "So also is the resurrection of the dead." It says so just as plain as can be, there is no speculation about it, that there is a glory typified by the sun—a glory typified by the moon—a glory typified by the stars, which differ in magnitude. I do not think there is any necessity of making that any plainer, the book makes it plain. These old theories about this burning fire and brimstone and the other place where men play upon harps throughout all eternity, walk on golden streets, and all that sort of thing arises from a misconception of the words we have talked about to-night—eternal judgment—eternal life—and eternal punishment, such words as that.

ABILITY TO ENJOY

These words simply express the source from which judgment comes, or else I am mistaken. Of course we need to be prepared for anything that we might enjoy. Even in this life it takes preparation to enjoy anything. You cannot enjoy anything without preparation for it, without you are schooled along the line of the thing you desire to enjoy. You take a deaf man and perform in his presence the sweetest strains of music that ever saluted mortal ears. Ask him if he enjoyed it. Ask him if it is not grand, if it is not harmonious. He says, "I don't know." What is the matter? It is not the place where he is—it is a good place to enjoy it, it is the man that is wrong. And so in the eternal world, it is not so much the place but the condition you are in.

Take a blind man. Let him stand before the pictures of the masters; let him stand where the beauties of nature are spread out before him. Ask him if it is not beautiful. He says, "I don't know." Why doesn't he know? He is in a good place. The place does not make any difference, it is the man that is wrong. In the first place he lacks the sense of hearing, in the latter the sense of seeing, and being a defective man he cannot fully enjoy himself.

Take a sick man, and lead a table with all that would tempt the appetite of a normal man. Let him take a seat at that table. The chances are he would turn away. It has the opposite effect upon him, and he goes back home. It is a good place. There is something wrong with the system of the man, that is the trouble.

And so with you and I, if we just simply want to get into some place we might be accommodated, and still not be happy. If we could enter into the pearly gates and see God upon his throne with Jesus Christ at his right hand, surrounded with angels and arch-angels, cherubims and seraphims, if we were not prepared we would be miserable. It would not do us any good to be there. It is a good place but we would be wrong.

"He that knoweth his Master's will," said Jesus Christ, "and prepareth not himself, shall be beaten with many stripes." So we need the preparation. To enter into the glory of God and enjoy it without it, we could not enjoy it if we were there. The place won't make us happy.

THE SPIRIT TO TEACH US

I tell you what we need, just in conclusion. The Master promised to his disciples the Spirit that would teach the things of the Father so they could enjoy them. Oh, if we could have the Spirit to partake of the things of the Father, to show them unto us, we then would know something about what is in heaven above. We too could have that influence if that Spirit could have shown to us things to come. Then we would be educated along that line, that when we shall go through the dark valley of death and enter into the portals of eternal rest, we shall be acquainted with the things to be enjoyed there, and we can enjoy ourselves.

Eternal judgment has decreed that without it we must suffer loss. May God in heaven bless us with the disposition and the courage to do right. And let me tell you now that if you have a desire to do right you will be recognized. A man is not always to blame for falling down, but he is to blame if he doesn't try to get up. So a man may be overtaken in sin, he may walk in slippery paths and miss a step, but he is wrong if he justifies himself in it and stays there. He should use all the powers that God has given him, and if he does he will find that God will come to his rescue. Men may err, but if they remain in that error, justifying themselves, they pass over the line that separates the man from the beast, and are lost. But if they make an effort, no matter how futile that effort may be, a sincere, honest effort to overcome themselves, the God of eternal judgment, of eternal life, will not suffer them to be lost. Somehow, somewhere, sometime the hand of God will be placed beneath him, and the struggling soul will be saved. There is no question about it in my mind.

Let us struggle.

ENDING THE WAR

The following clipping from a United States paper concerning the uniting of the Socialists to bring about peace with the nations at war is of interest. I wonder what part they would play to accomplish this all-important matter.

WOULD UNITE THE SOCIALISTS TO PUT END TO THE BIG WAR

Buenos Aires, February 12.—A definite movement was under way in Argentine to-day to solidify Socialists throughout the world, into a movement to restore peace in Europe and to reestablish the nations there as republics.

The plan received enormous impetus yesterday at a meeting under the auspices of the Socialista party, held, despite a downpour of rain, in the Plaza Congresso. Thousands braved the inclement weather and adopted resolutions not only for the peace and the republic move, but also bitterly denouncing any steps by the government which would be calculated to bring the war to Argentine.

One half the adult population of this city favors some one or more of the principles of the socialista.—Charles P. Stewart.

It seems to me that for any class of people or nation to club together to force peace before proper conditions were obtained would be a grave mistake, and doing an injustice to God, and to the world at large. Not that I believe God to be the promoter of this war, but as the people had brought about conditions that could not be rectified only through that means, God will allow it to go on until these conditions are rectified.

First, had the Jews accepted the Christ that came to redeem them, they would not have been driven from their homeland, nor put under Turkish rule. Second, had the world at large, including so-called Christians, followed the simple teachings of the great master builder, the son of God, there would be no war; all would be living above the law of the land; loving God and their fellow man.

Jesus said to Peter: "Put up thy sword for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." (Matthew 26:52.) As a prelude read first and second chapters of Isaiah. I have full confidence in the allies, believing as I do that the divine hand is leading them to bring about the emancipation of his once chosen people, the Jews. Jerusalem, Palestine, will be freed of Moslem power, which is a menace to that country, and the way will be opened for the Jews to gather back to their homeland, and become a nation upon the heights of Israel.

According to ancient prophecy and history, our Lord, speaking of the Jews, said: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." (Luke 21:24.)

See Deuteronomy 28:45, to the end of the chapter. These scriptures need no comment by me, as all Bible students and readers of prophetic history know that the Jews have been scattered among all nations. Thirty-eight years after they had led away our Lord to crucify him, an avenging army led away captive all who had cried against the Son of God. Their houses were desolate, the scepter departed, the daily sacrifice ceased. The day of vengeance came and not one tittle of the prophecy of Moses and the Son of God had failed.

Over a million persons had perished, ninety-seven thousand were led as captives, multitudes were sent to the Egyptian mines, and thousands were reserved for the triumph of Titus at Rome. Since then the Holy City has lain at the mercy of the Gentiles.

Zebulon Bird Vance in his great platform lecture on "The Scattered Nation," said: "I believe that there is a morning to open up yet for the Jews, in Heaven's good time, and if the opening in any way commensurates with the darkness of night through which they have passed it will be the brightest that ever dawned upon a faithful people." We quite agree with Mr. Vance and believe that the time is near at hand, just at our door.

The Prophet Jeremiah speaking of this time said:

I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return and will build them as at the first.—Jeremiah 33:7.

And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them and will bring them to their folds and they shall be fruitful and increase.—Jeremiah 23:3.

God also speaking through his servant Ezekiel said:

And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country.—Ezekiel 34:13.

Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto his place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.—Jeremiah 32:37, 38.

Surely I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast labored: But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the Lord; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.—Isaiah 62: 8, 9.

Shall I venture to say the last two lines have reference to the Jews accepting Christ and commemorating his death by partaking of the bread and wine? "And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends." (Zechariah 13: 6.)

And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn.—Zechariah 12: 10.

Then there shall be great mourning and lamentations in Jerusalem, every Jewish family apart. Then and not until then will they know that their forefathers were partakers in crucifying their long-looked-for Messiah.

Israel, the whole house of Jacob, has prophetic promises of a return to their loved Canaan, their holy land. Through their long age of oppression the promises may have been obscured in the minds of many. A few may be aware of it or be looking for its fulfillment, yet will the fulfillment surely come, for the mouth of the Lord has spoken it. Then shall they sing:

Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean.—Isaiah 52: 1.

Sir Moses Montefar, an elder of the Jews, when questioned as to his hope of a restoration of Israel replied: "I am quite certain of it, it has been my constant dream that Palestine must belong to the Jews and Jerusalem is destined to become the seat of the Jewish empire."

To this end God has been working through a Sir Oliver Cromwell of England, a Napoleon and Mirabeau of France; a Casimir, king of Poland; a Baron Lionel Rothschild; a Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield. The United States as early as 1872 protested against the oppression of the Jews, under the Turkish rule, and its communication to its ambassadors in the different nations in 1902, reconfirmed the Government attitude regarding that oppressed people. It seems to me that no term of peace should be accepted until Palestine is freed of Turkish rule. To this end I believe God is working through the allies. To my mind it seems that anything short of this would be a complete failure.

When this is accomplished and the nations humbled, this war will cease, but we will not have perfect peace until the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. (See Daniel 7: 27; Revelation 11: 15.)

S. W. TOMLINSON.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A PERTINENT QUESTION

That this war and its heritage of burdens will break down the dam is the hope of all democrats. To thwart Prussian military domination of the world is our immediate aim. But a generation in arms for democracy will not stop there. The people are long-suffering and blinded by custom. Not so will be the returning soldiers of democracy. Their long days and nights in the trenches must have stirred them to the wondering and the thinking that end in conviction. Will they not recognize the autocracy and the slackerism of those who eat their bread in the sweat of other men's faces, and demand a new social order as the reward of their sacrifices?—The Public, July 13, 1917.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Home Training for the Oriole Girl

(Address given before the Auxiliary General Convention at Lamoni, Iowa, last April.)

The object of the Oriole work is to associate the love of home with pleasure.

What a wonderful work it is to create within the girl the desire for home work and at the same time make her feel it is a real pleasure.

Some of our young girls have been told in their patriarchal blessings to seek to become skillful and practical housewives. This is what the Oriole work will do for our girls.

The young man who is fortunate enough to win an Oriole girl for his wife will not have to suffer from indigestion and other disagreeable effects of poor housekeeping provided she has taken advantage of the opportunity offered her in the Oriole work.

We who have the opportunity of working with the girls in the church and also outside the church should esteem it a great pleasure, for by our influence we can gently lead them along and create within them the desire for development which is one object of the Oriole work.

The following poem expresses the influence we have on the girls by our constant association with them.

"I took a piece of plastic clay
And idly fashioned it one day;
And as my fingers pressed it still,
It moved and yielded to my will.
I came again, when days were past;
The bit of clay was hard at last.
The form I gave it still it bore.
But I could change it nevermore.

"I met a piece of living clay
And lived with it from day to day.
And sought to mold with gentle art,
The young child's soft and yielding heart.

I came again when years had gone,
It was a man I looked upon.
His life that early impress bore,
But I could change it nevermore."

If we work with the young we are constantly instruments of molding. An example set, a word spoken is taken very readily by them.

This molding goes on little by little as we meet with the girls each week and come in personal contact with them. The opportunity for molding and development has a very broad field in the Oriole work. The girl, eleven, twelve and on up in the teen age will not forget the advice and counsel given her by one who is closely associated with her as every monitor must be who takes a personal interest in the girls of her circle.

I find it a great pleasure to be closely associated with the girls. During the past year most every afternoon several of the girls would come to my home after school and bring their work and spend an hour or so with me. It gave me an opportunity to get very close to the girls and help them in many ways.

The keynote of our success in this wonderful work is love and companionship. Show we have love for the girls, make their interests ours, share their joys, also their sorrows, with them, and we then are sure of success.

It is our duty to try to make them feel they have some home work to do. In doing this work they are helping mother as well as themselves thus creating within them the principle of helpfulness towards others even though it be only in little things.

Some girls scorn the idea of scrubbing, cooking, dusting, ironing and such things that belong to the household duties. This should not be, for every girl should know how to do housework.

The girl who has a dream home in mind with servants and maids may not realize this dream. She may not get such a dream husband. Then her housework will depend on her own hands.

It is a fact that every girl should develop her talents along musical, literary and other lines but with this should come the development of the taste for home work and then we have all-around girls. This is what we are working for in the Oriole work. We want all-around Oriole girls.

Carlyle said: "All true work is sacred in all true work, were it but true hand labor, there is something of divineness in it."

This is as true of home work as any other line of work. The home is indeed a sacred place and when it is conducted as it should be it is a heaven on earth.

The girls of to-day will be the wives and mothers of tomorrow.

We can, as the poem says, look back when years have passed and see the beautiful characters our girls have developed and the home builders they have become and feel a degree of satisfaction that we have had our part in helping them to become what they are.

If the home work seems monotonous and is a drudgery it is because there is a lack of interest in it. This interest is supplied in the Oriole work.

Emerson says, "There is nothing great accomplished without enthusiasm." Create the enthusiasm in the home work and you then have the foundation to a certain extent for success in this line of work.

We must try to impress the girls that they should try to be just as successful in their home work as they try to be in the business world.

I have found the girls do try to do their very best in working for points in the home work. They want their cakes, pies, puddings and vegetable dishes to be just as good as mother makes, in fact they want them just a little better, for they are going to receive a point for their work.

The girl who works in the mill, office or store does not care to burden herself with cooking, baking or sweeping when she returns home in the evening. She thinks she has done her work for the day and mother can do the work at home for that is all she has to do. The Oriole work has inspired the girls to higher ideals than this. It gives them a broader vision of home life.

If a member of the family is sick the Oriole girl has gained some knowledge in her work how to take care of the patient. They know how to prepare the diet and arrange the tray in an attractive way, also how to make the bed for the patient.

This is practical knowledge that everybody should know.

We would not say the home work consists alone in cooking, sweeping, dusting and such things. Every girl should know how to sew and mend her own clothes.

During the past year in Scranton we have had sewing lessons, also cooking lessons for the girls which were enjoyable as well as helpful. The girls all appreciate very much the knowledge they gain of home work.

Two of our young Oriole girls wrote a paper each, for one of our programs on home work. They told of the different ways in which they could help mother and of the different things they had learned to do in the line of home work. They also spoke of the educational value of the Oriole work. It makes us rejoice when we see our girls alive to the opportunities offered them and how anxious some are to take advantage of such opportunities.

One little girl eleven years old in one of our Scranton circles became a very good cake baker through her efforts to gain points of merit. Each week she bakes a cake for her neighbor who pays her for it and the money she earns in this way goes toward her Christmas offering.

The economical side is not forgotten in the Oriole work. The girls gain points for preparing a dinner at a ratio of ten cents per person, also at fifteen and twenty cents per person.

Several of the girls in our circles took the above for points during the past year. Although it took some very careful planning yet the girls seem to enjoy this feature of it. When a girl has won her points of merit she does not let her home work stop there. By this time it has become a pleasure for her to help in the home and mother still has her help.

The Oriole work teaches the girl to be unselfish. They think of others besides themselves. It also teaches them to have love for all mankind.

We indeed feel very grateful that we have such a work for our girls. It is a work we can point to with pride, for it will lead them onward and upward in the great cause we all love so well. I like to associate the following verse on "Perseverance" with our Oriole work.

"The proudest motto for the young
And precious, more than gold,
Within thy heart and on thy mind
This stirring word enfold.
If in misfortune's dreary hour,
Or fortune's prosperous gale,
Just 'go ahead' with all thy power,
There's no such word as fail."

Babies Dying in Poor Homes

Low wages of fathers and the gainful employment of mothers away from home accompany an excessive death rate among babies in Manchester, New Hampshire, according to the report on infant mortality in that city which has recently been issued by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

The study was based primarily on interviews with the babies' mothers. It was absolutely democratic in scope and included all babies whose births were registered during a single year and whose families could be found. Of all the babies studied, one in six—165 per 1,000—had died during the first year of life. There were wide variations in rate between different groups of the population, according to the fathers' earnings, the employment of the mother, the congestion of the home, and the way in which the baby had been fed.

Nearly half of the 1,643 babies had fathers whose earnings were less than $650 a year, and more than one-eighth of the babies had fathers earning less than $450 a year. Only one in sixteen (6.4 per cent) had fathers earning as much as $1,250. The death rate among the babies in the poorest families was more than four times as high as among those in the highest wage group.

Low earnings on the part of the father appear to be the most potent reason for the mother's going to work. Where the fathers earned less than $450 a year almost three-fourths of the mothers were gainfully employed during some part of the year after the baby's birth. As the fathers' earnings rise the proportion of working mothers falls until the group where fathers earned $1,050 or over, less than one-tenth of the mothers worked.

Keeping lodgers was the chief occupation of those who worked at home and working in the textile mills was the chief occupation of those who worked away from home. The mothers of 267 babies went out to work during the first year of the baby's life and these babies had a death rate considerably higher than those whose mothers worked at home, or were not gainfully employed. The rate is especially high—277.3 per 1,000—among the 119 babies whose mothers went out to work before they were four months old.

The babies were grouped also according to the kind of house in which the family lived. The death rate for babies whose homes were in one-family houses was 86.1 per 1,000; in houses containing seven or more families 236.6 per 1,000. Similarly the rate showed a steady increase according to the number of persons per room. It was 123.3 per 1,000 where the family had more rooms than persons; and 245.9 where there were two or more persons per room.

In each economic group the babies who were artificially fed had fewer chances of survival than the babies whose mothers nursed them. But the economic status of the family modifies the influence of feeding, and the difference in the death rates for breast-fed babies and artificially fed babies is least striking in the highest income group.

At the Convention

REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE YOUNG WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT

To the President of the Auxiliary and to the General Convention, Greeting:—As superintendent of the young woman's department I have been very earnestly engaged in carrying on the work of the Oriole girls which is only a phase of the work of this department. The growth of this movement has been so great that there has been no time for the development of other phases of the young woman's department. Although at the beginning of the year we had the work divided and hoped to keep it so, in order that the Oriole work should not engage our entire time and attention and thus prevent us from enlarging the scope of the work of the department. However, for very good reasons those assisting were compelled to relinquish their part of the work and the burden of it rested with the superintendent.

We have contributed two articles to the HERALD representing the work of our department, also a number of reports of the various activities of our members all over the United States. In the summer we sent papers to each of the reunions advertised in the church papers. The above does not represent, however, the great amount of effort that has been necessary in order to explain the work to those who have inquired. In fact it is through our correspondence that we have done the most effectual work. We fully appreciate our opportunity to meet through the means of the mail those women who are acting as monitors and dividing their time and interests with those of the young girls of the church and in many instances with those not members of the church. And it is not only these sisters that we meet but numbers of earnest, sincere younger members.

In addition to the vast amount of correspondence necessary to carry on the work we have visited, by request, six branches in the interest of the general auxiliary work and the Oriole girls, our expenses being paid.

At the close of last year we had reports from 29 organized Oriole circles but we now have 62 with an enrollment of 679. With a membership of this number and constantly increasing it has been difficult to add new features to the work, trying as we do to keep in personal touch with each circle. Our enrollment does not include eight or ten circles that have been organized since February 1, as we have not received reports of their enrollment.

In September, 1916, a new edition of 700 copies of the Oriole Book was printed. This edition contained many new, interesting and helpful suggestions as well as a rearrangement of the contents of the 1915 edition. Sister Della Braidwood assisted in compiling the new edition, but later resigned as assistant superintendent of the young woman's department because of the great amount of work entailed as superintendent of the same work in Independence. The Sanitarium made a valuable contribution by giving us the Practical Helps for Home Nursing, which has been appreciated.

One new feature has been added this year, namely—the forest Oriones of which Sister Irena Stratton of Kansas City is superintendent. This department provides for the enrollment of those girls who are not associated with other churches and owing to conditions may not organize a circle. It represents to the Oriole girls what the home department does to the Sunday school.

In Independence the local superintendent of the young woman's department has instituted a Sunday morning nursery for the babies under seven whose mothers wish to attend services. In this she has the assistance of the young girls of the branch with one trained nurse each Sunday. This has been a very acceptable service to the mothers as well as to the pastor of the branch.

In Holden Stake the girls have recently held an exhibit of cakes, bread, cookies and salads, prizes being awarded to the best.

Lectures and practical lessons have been given to the girls on domestic science, nursing, first aid, dressmaking and public speaking. These have been given by specialists.

In some branches a Sunday morning service has been planned and carried out by the Oriole girls. Monitors have reported that this work has been the means of drawing the young people of the church into closer companionship and association than ever before, as well as attracting nonmembers of the church to our services.

One member of the missionary force has been active in presenting and pushing the Oriole work which has resulted in several new circles.

One branch president sent for six books, speaking very earnestly and appreciatively of the work, hoping to interest the girls of his branch.

The reunions have felt the benefit of the service given by the Oriole girls, rest tents, nurseries, programs, etc., being contributed and supported by them. In city circles the hiking is specially enjoyable, in some circles the physical culture is a feature and in a number the spirit of service seems to have manifested itself in work for the Children's Home, Sanitarium and their own home branches.

As a result of our two years' experience with the Oriole work we recommend that a supervisor of the Oriole girls be appointed who may make its development her special interest, to work under the direction of the young woman's department. We recommend this because of the phases of the work that have been left undeveloped this year which were recommended in our report last year such as bulletins, kodak club, nursing, etc. There is a wide field for the work especially among the younger girls. There is also opportunity for the introduction of other and broader phases of young woman's work which will interest those who may not care to take up the Oriole work and for this reason the superintendent of the young woman's department should be relieved from active work connected with the Oriole movement.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Give

See the rivers flowing
Forward to the sea,
Bearing all their treasures
Bountiful and free;
Yet to help their giving
Hidden springs arise;
Or if need be, showers
Feed them from the skies.

Watch the princely flowers
Their rich fragrance spread,
Load the air with perfumes
From their beauty spread;
Yet their lavish spending
Leaves them not in dearth,
Their fresh life replenished
By their Mother Earth.

Give thy heart's best treasures,
From fair Nature learn;
Give thy life, and ask not,
Wait not a return.
And the more thou spendest
From thy little store,
With a double bounty
God will give thee more.

The Human Heart

The human heart! Ah, who can tell how much within its portals dwell,

How much of good or ill is found within these mortals' bosoms bound?

How far above the earth may soar its thoughts and feelings more and more

Until they scale the heavens bright and fit us for that home of light.

How sweetly pure and purer still grows that warm heart whose only will

Is to increase the store of good and stand where men of honor stood.

What noble aims may fill the breast and grandly rise with strong unrest

To do, to be, to give, to gain whate'er true worth may here obtain.

What strength, what power, what courage grand may rest behind a human hand,

How much of heaven and earth unite within a heart set to do right.

There weakness, sickness, sorrow, pain may in the best a foothold gain;

And deep depression lay her hand to cease its strivings for the grand.

There passions proud may surge and swell, and dark temptation's awful spell

Be cast where holy pure desires are seeking strength to quench their fires.

There battles great are fought and won as ere were fought beneath the sun.

Nay, all great battles there are fought, for thus is all true courage wrought.

The human heart! To it is given the power to draw both earth and heaven

Within its wake, to force its claims and bring to pass its noble aims.

For we can will that we shall be a part of God's great harmony,

And run the race and win the place, the best in all eternity.

And on Earth Peace

Along a lone, secluded way,
There bloomed a flower the livelong day.
It filled the air with a perfume rare,
And all the dark of the dismal place
It lighted with a modest grace.
Its presence there transformed the gloom,
By its simple elegance of bloom;
Its breath appeared a power to fill
With vernal warmth the air so chill.
And the sounds of solitude were broken
By a language mute, sweet, though unspoken.
The birds seemed charmed into its bower,
To share its radiating power;
Their songs appeared to clearer float,
And reach, near it, their sweetest note;
While all the world both far and near,
Its influence seemed to feel and hear.

A swarm of insects took their way,
 Into its nook one sunny day.
 They hovered 'round this priceless treasure,
 To view it with malicious pleasure.
 Then from their mouths they poison drew
 And each a little o'er it threw.
 Then went their way as though content,
 Yet still on furtive mischief bent.
 I saw a change come o'er the place
 And watched the flower's lovely face;
 The petals 'round harder grew,
 Then turned a pale and sickly hue.
 The flower drooped, as though in sorrow,
 And was not found upon the morrow.
 How dark and dreary seemed the day,
 How sad and lonely now the way;
 A dampened chill the warm air smote,
 The bird songs lost their joyous note;
 And all the world, through some mad folly,
 Seemed wrapt in deepest melancholy.
 I looked upon the prospect dreary,
 Still gazing till my eyes were weary,
 While slumber tried to set me free,
 I pondered still the mystery.
 The insects turned and coming back,
 Still wandered from the beaten track,
 Paused where the flower was wont to be
 And seemed to laugh in impish glee;
 And one of them said to me blandly,
 "Where is the flower that bloomed so grandly?"
 I thought perhaps from him to learn
 The truth for which my heart did yearn.
 "The flower," I asked, "what was its name?
 Perchance I may have known the same."
 "The name of the flower, my friend, is Love.
 The name descended from above."
 "And who are you?" I asked again.
 He smiled, a smile both proud and vain.
 "My name is Envy, and these my allies,
 Are Jealousy and Hate and Malice;
 With all our kind attendant train,
 Who wait upon us might and main.
 We scatter the ever fertile seed
 Of Anger, Selfishness and Greed.
 And carry with us, stronger, grander,
 The weapons of Untruth and Slander.
 With these we wage a deadly strife,
 On the vital germ of happy life.
 This flower of Love blooms here and there,
 The power of all our force to dare.
 'Twas planted by a master hand.
 Through it a triumph he has planned.
 When o'er the earth it vanquished lies,
 Men shall stand up with mighty cries
 To hail our Master Lord and King,
 And tribute unto him shall bring."
 They buzzed away out of my sight,
 I beheld the world in an awful plight;
 With gloom and darkness settling down,
 The chill winds sweeping on and on,
 Brought to my ears the din of strife,
 Drowning the sounds of happy life;
 For these were lost in the fearful roar,
 That shook the whole world o'er and o'er.
 Till the nations in confusion thrown,
 Did mourn and weep and wail and groan.
 I lifted my eyes that I might not see

The depths of human misery,
 When a light broke through the leaden skies,
 A benignant beam from the Master's eyes.
 It stole in pity to the spot,
 Where the flower, withered, was blooming not.
 I watched this miracle of power,
 As it nursed the plant through the long, dark hour
 Of human misery and pain,
 With twofold grace to bloom again.
 Then in the magic of its sway,
 The gloom and darkness passed away.
 The warm winds blew through the cold, damp air,
 To carry the fine seed everywhere.
 And as I gazed on this wonder new,
 Another like it sprang up and grew.
 And others yet did spring likewise,
 Till the world became a paradise,
 Wherein the sons of earth now stood
 For a universal brotherhood.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Are We at Peace with Our Neighbors?

In writing on this subject I do not mean one who does good to us, as in the case of the good Samaritan, but I mean those living next-door neighbor in the common acceptation of the term.

Do we get along with them? If not, why not? And who is to blame, myself or they, or both? As Saints we are to live peaceably with all men so far as possible, whether Saints or others. Can we who live in Zion or her stakes bring about her redemption and not be friendly with our neighbor? If my chickens get into their gardens, shall it cause a grudge to exist between us? Or if my children use unbecoming words before my neighbor's children, shall we at once become enemies and make effort to become reconciled to each other?

A preventive is better than a cure. We must in the first place try to set the proper example before others that there be no just cause for trouble. If, however, trouble should arise, we should keep the law, make the proper efforts at reconciliation. To live for weeks, months, or even years, by people to whom we scarcely will speak is simply terrible, especially if we have made no effort at reconciliation.

As Saints we should remember that we are not only our brother's keeper but our neighbor's also. We may make a fine appearance abroad, but how do we act at home among our neighbors—those who know us best? We may try every other method to redeem Zion, but if we fail to "love our neighbor as ourselves" it will not be accomplished. When you sit up late nights drumming on the organ or the piano, did you ever think to ask your neighbors if they were disturbed? Do we speak a kind word daily to our neighbors when we see them or do we think, Oh, it is not worth while? Let me ask if nine tenths of the Saints were as friendly and as helpful to each other and to others both in sickness and in health as they should be, would not Zion's redemption be accomplished? Surely we must "take time to be holy," take time to be friendly, sociable with others, especially with our neighbors; keeping the commandments of course, then will Zion rise and shine. Should we die with a grudge in our hearts against another, then we must go to the prison house as saith the Savior, and remain there till we shall have paid the utmost farthing. We should not, however, treat our neighbor right simply to keep out of prison, but because of our love for them. "Love is the fulfilling of the law."

How I Received the Gospel

I desire to give my testimony of how I received the gospel. When I was thirteen years of age, I was converted to the teachings of the Methodist Church and tried to live the best I knew how. In later years I married a man of the Catholic faith and went to live with his people. They insisted that I join their church.

Two years passed and my companion and myself were taken very sick, then my baby was about four months old, and I was persecuted on every hand and far away from my parents. I plead with the Lord to help me out of my troubles, but my prayers did not seem to reach him. As I was suffering many things one night I lay in bed, with my child and my thoughts. These thoughts came to me: Is there a God? If so, why should I suffer so much when I am trying to serve him, the best friend I know?

That night I had a dream. I was standing in a place all alone with my baby in my arms. Great darkness came over the earth and I looked up in wonder, not knowing what it meant. Then I saw Christ coming to the earth, with the two thieves that were crucified with him. Then the thought came that the time was at hand and I was not ready to meet him. At this I was awakened and it worried me very much.

About a year later I had another dream. There came up a great storm so that the trees were falling all around me. I started to go to my father's house and there seemed to be two great balls of fire going ahead of me, hindering me to such an extent I had to turn back. Then my sister came to me and I told her about it. She laughed and said the Bible tells us that Satan must be loosed for a season, and the time is at hand.

Not understanding the meaning of this at the time it was left as a vivid memory on my mind for some time.

A few more years passed and my parents moved to Chat-ham. I lived there at the same time but was deprived of the privilege of going to church. All at once there arose great excitement. There was a boy preacher came to town, and my father was one of those who went to hear him. In the meantime I had made a study of the Bible and many things seemed incomprehensible to me. My father became interested and in time was baptized into what was then supposed to be the Mormon church. He would come to me and tell me what those people taught. It all appeared to me like a scroll rolled back from one corner, and everything bright and plain.

Time passed on and one Sunday evening some of my relatives came to my home and persuaded me to go and hear what those people had to say. I went, and to my surprise the sermon was given the same subject that after Satan should be bound a thousand years then he would be loosed for a little season. This sermon was preached by Brother Tyrrell. Then my sister who appeared in the dream came into the church. After that she was in the habit of coming to our house and talking of what those people taught. She repeated the same words to me as she did in the dream—that Satan would be bound for a thousand years and then loosed for a season. All this time I never ceased praying for the Lord's direction.

One afternoon in early spring I was alone in the house. I met with an experience that I shall never forget. All the afternoon I could see nothing but beautiful green fields. I prayed the Lord that he would show me if this was his gospel and I would obey it at the first opportunity.

That night I had a strange dream that I was standing on a porch of a strange house. I thought I had never seen the sun shine so beautifully and I was just wondering over the beautiful sight. I saw Christ coming in his glory and the sight was surely most inspiring. I felt so full of joy I awoke singing "Safe in the arms of Jesus."

For over twenty years I have been in the church and have received many blessings, finding all that the Lord has promised to his people if they are faithful and do his will.

The boy preacher that placed the gospel within my reach is known as R. C. Evans, and I thank my heavenly Father for such a messenger. I want always to be found ready to do his will.

An Offer from South Carolina

To all Saints and friends of Tennessee, New York, Virginia and of any other State who have boys or relatives, or know of any church member belonging to the Army or National Guard who are sent to this city or Spartenburg, South Carolina, please send me their names. I am a missionary sent to this State and live in this city. I could be of some service to them.

A. G. MILLER.

GREENVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA, 111 Markley Street.

From Here and There

"I often feel that the contributors to the Herald[®] are inspired to write just that which we most need."—Clare Lily Tatman, Ponders End, Enfield, Middlesex, England.

We note that Brother Eben Miller has located his new rubber tire company at Wellington, Ohio, under very favorable circumstances. About thirty people will be employed. We wish him success.

All going well in Clinton District. Fair wheat crop, excellent oats and splendid prospect for corn that will exceed any for a number of years. Seasonable rains are making all glad. Saints seem encouraged.—H. E. Moler.

The Holden Stake reunion is in progress and a good attendance is reported. Among those present the names of J. A. Gillen, L. E. Hills, J. A. Tanner, A. H. Mills, Lula M. Sandy, and G. S. Trowbridge, the latter representing the musical interests, the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Religio, respectively.

The church storehouse at Independence is reported as doing a flourishing business. Three teams are kept busy with deliveries, and the trade had is very satisfactory. The Lamon Roller Mill is putting out an excellent graham and corn meal above the average in quality. Local wheat has been scarce as yet, but it is hoped to greatly extend the product of our own church mills. Industrial Zion is being established and the slow but permanent growth necessary to success is taking place.

A young brother whose name we need not publish, asks the prayers of the Saints in behalf of his father, who is "an enthusiastic follower of one of the excitable religions of the day, and bears every evidence of being under the influence of an unclean spirit. He is honest in heart and our desire is that his spirit may be rebuked and that he may be permitted to use his reasoning faculties in investigating the church, or, at least, that the Lord may show him the truth of the matter and the error of his ways."

Sister J. H. Amend, the correspondent who keeps Wichita, Kansas, on the map, sends in their church location and adds: "Wichita has a population of eighty thousand, is an educational center, has twenty-eight public school buildings, three colleges, one university, three conservatories of music, and is the oil center of the new oil fields of Kansas. Branch numbers one hundred, advertises in the Eagle and the Beacon, reports regularly to the Ensign and always gives address. Please put us in your card index and we will welcome all you send to us. E. L. Barraclough, 137 South Fern, is our pastor." Sister Amend is certainly loyal to her home city and we don't wonder.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: Wife and I returned from Black Walnut Lake, twenty-five miles northwest of Detroit, Michigan, on Wednesday, the 8th, having been gone thirty-one days, and during this time tried to throw off some of the cares of life in order to strengthen the nerves and invigorate the body to be better prepared to stand the church work that is incumbent upon us.

We were cared for by our son O. C., and his good wife in their lovely summer home, where we were given free access to boats and fishing outfit, and for the first time in life did my wife "scoop" me in drawing out the large wall-eyed pike while I had to content myself that it was real "tact" that my wife possessed in the way of "patience." I note in one trip, she caught six to my nothing; but I had to paddle the boat and bait the hook which gave her time to make the "catch." For the time, our health is much improved, and we both feel to thank our heavenly Father for his loving care, and that once in nearly fifty years of almost incessant church work, we could feel free to take one month's time from church care and yet not endanger our right to the "Well done," when we meet at the bar of God.

Fraternally yours,

I. N. WHITE.

GUILFORD, MISSOURI, August 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor at our home as is also the Ensign. I enjoy everything in the papers concerning church news and church progress.

I am very much interested in the progress of the church, and am desirous of doing my mite to help the good work along. My desires are good and I want to live so that when the Master says, "my work is finished," I will be ready and willing to go.

I enjoyed the article on class, or class distinction. I also think there is too much of that in our church. How much nicer if we could be as one large family, which I think is the way we should be. How about the next world? Saints, are we going to turn the cold shoulder on our brother or sister over there? No, I don't believe we will. I believe we will be one large happy family. Well, why can't we be that way now, instead of turning the cold shoulder to some brother or sister every time they come to church? It's enough to frighten anyone away. And still if you want to know what's wrong between you, they'll say, "Oh, nothing that I know of," and yet at the same time it will occur again and again.

Oh! how I do dislike to see anyone, especially a Latter Day Saint, think himself above anyone else. Let's be sociable. What of it if every person cannot sing, is it a disgrace? No, it is not. If you can't sing, you can pray; that was what I heard one good preacher say. What of it if you don't happen to own an auto? Why, drive a team, if you have one.

We have a beautiful little church building in Guilford, and a nice little band of Saints, mostly all trying to do what they can, but there is much room for improvement. We are doing fine with the Christmas offering. I was so well pleased with Brother W. H. Deam's sermon on "Laborers together with God," which I read in the Ensign, that I could not keep still about it. It is certainly grand. I hope it will do everyone good who reads it, as it did me.

The longer I am in this work the sweeter and grander it is to me. It makes me feel as if I would love to live a thousand years and help, help, help. Let us strive earnestly to let our lights shine so that our neighbors and friends as well as Saints might be benefited by our having associated with them.

As ever your sister,

MRS. PAUL H. SCHMIDT.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, August 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: Am back again in the city of sights and sounds and memories of scenes of former years. The observation which through intervening years has wrought, however, has not by any means obliterated the recollections attached to gospel fellowship and association. And we find here the fires yet burning upon the altar of devotion and sacrifice and abiding love for the latter-day evangel. A fine welcome is given to old-time ministers who years ago labored in their midst.

The welcome of friends, old and new, is but a repetition of our royal treatment while in the city of Saint Louis, and which may furnish the framework and setting for two more pleasant pictures to hang upon memory's wall.

The evening of July 13 found us in Union Station, Saint Louis, when we were met by Brother Walter Barrett and ——— [we cannot read the name.—EDITORS.] to a hospitable reception and welcome at the hands and home of Brother Walter and our old-time friend, Sister Mary Warnky Barrett.

A detailed account of nice things that happened to us while in Saint Louis and vicinity would not interest, nor be as long remembered by HERALD readers as they would or will be by the writer.

We were partakers of the hospitalities offered at the homes of Brethren Barrett, Burgess, Arthur Smith and others of old and new associates in gospel work. The interest and devotion to the cause of Christ manifested by the younger people seemed to us a pleasant and encouraging feature.

We were invited to occupy the pulpit as preacher in Saint Louis, assisting also in the work of their reunion, and by invitation visited and spoke in their new chapel at Landsdowne on the Illinois side of the river, and while here enjoyed the fine welcome and visit at the home of Brother and Sister George Vandel.

Leaving Landsdowne July 26 for Chicago, arriving in evening were met at station by my daughter and granddaughter, Mrs. Lothe and Bessie Putnam now resident in this city, and at whose home this communication is written; having arrived this morning from West Pullman, where we spoke in the hall last evening, occupied by us during our ministry while living in Chicago fifteen years ago.

Since coming to Chicago we have spoken at west and south side churches. Sunday evening last occupied at west side chapel and was pleasantly surprised to find old-time friends, Brother and Sister McGuire. After service was bundled into their car and rustled over a thirty-mile drive to their home at Hammond, Indiana, where hospitality of the Latter Day Saint brand was administered, with visits to the new and wonderful city of Gary and surrounding country for two days. Tuesday evening I was the preacher at their meeting place at the home of Brother and Sister James Smith, formerly of Argentine, Kansas, to a roomful of Saints and strangers who attested to the fact that the original and only gospel has adhesive power that no other religious cult possesses to attract and to hold. The attention and loyal service of honest and intelligent minds under discouraging and to the world, unattractive surroundings, and furnish record for future reference of repetition of history of happenings in the early centuries of the Christian era.

From this place and meeting we were taken to the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Burwell, where nothing but pleasant things and good cheer were dispensed by our royal and faithful worker in gospel service and his companion. We were also pleased to renew old-time acquaintance with Sister Blakely of Plano, who was also guest at their home.

We are now expecting to return to Independence early next week. We believe our visit has been of a profitable nature to us. Have enjoyed a measure of physical strength and comfort we hardly expected when leaving home, but what seems immeasurably larger to us, and more important, has been the presence and aid and enjoyment of the favor and help of God in our attempt to portray the love of God and his condescension in the lifting of the veil and furnishing a knowledge that he not only is, but is able and willing to furnish substantial evidence, that he is sure rewarder of them that diligently seek him in the only way in which he is to be found.

M. H. BOND.

MACON, MISSOURI, August 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are busy here and with a prospect for an ingathering, but whether the reaping occurs now or later, the Master is abundantly blessing us in the ministration of the Word.

Wife and I constitute the "we" of this epistle and we are certainly busy. There is much work for both and work for each that the other could not perform.

Yesterday was a good day with us here. Twenty of the Bevier Saints were with us at the afternoon service and we had one of the best social and sacrament services. All were conscious of the Spirit's presence and nearly all participated.

There were ten more dropped in on us for the evening service and with our Macon friends the tent was full and the Master gave us of his blessing in our labor.

Sincerely yours, A. M. CHASE.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—June 23 and 24 at Higbee, Missouri. Peter Anderson and William B. Richards presided. Bevier, Higbee, and Menefee Branches reported. Bishop's agent's report was read and approved. William B. Richards was elected district president, Frank Lofty, vice president, William C. Chapman, secretary. A. M. Chase was recommended for appointment as district chorister. William C. Chapman, secretary.

Convention Minutes

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—Sunday school, at Manchester, Texas, July 27, in charge of B. F. Pollard, superintendent. Officers elected: B. F. Pollard, superintendent; Sister J. D. White, assistant superintendent; Ora Dollins, secretary; Toka Dollins, treasurer; Sister Erwin, superintendent home department; Sister S. N. Gray, member gospel literature board. It was recommended that the latter be appointed field worker. A collection of five dollars was taken for district fund, and a motion carried that each local school create a sinking fund to be sent in prior to each convention. Ora Dollins, secretary.

Pastoral

To the Saints of the Spokane District: One of the duties of the bishops and agents is to assist members and friends who are interested in the Lord's work to fulfill the law" relating to temporal things, so they may be acceptable stewards.

We especially urge upon everyone the great importance of the work which brings peace and good will to those who fulfill the law which the Lord has given his children in this life.

There has been a generous response by many to the financial needs of the church, all previous records of receipts have been outdone the past six months. Those who are desirous of being among the willing and obedient ones have yet opportunity. Do not seek for excuse to avoid a duty that the Lord makes as binding as the law of baptism, but rather be diligent to find opportunity to make a sacrifice for the good of the cause we all ought to love. The Lord recently said: "Bring in your tithes and offerings, that my work may increase." Let us heed this instruction that we may not be found wanting when he comes. Do not forget the Christmas offering. Every Sunday school in the district is enthusiastic in the effort to pay off the church debt. The home department expects to average up with the schools—two dollars for each member. Isolated Saints are requested to do their part.

Every member of the household of faith should take pleasure and interest in helping the financial work along. The following local solicitors will receipt for tithes and offerings: Peter Klaus, Gifford; H. O. Hower, Coeur d' Alene; Mattie Omans, Sagle; L. E. Holmes, Mansfield; J. E. Turnbow, Palouse; D. S. McDole, Okanogan. British Columbia Saints living east of the 121st meridian please remember this portion of British Columbia has been added to the Spokane District.

Yours for the redemption of Zion,

W. W. FORDHAM, Bishop's Agent.

Home Department

To the Extension Home Department Superintendents: I have a desire to get in touch with all Superintendents appointed in districts and stakes, and would ask them to write me so we may arrange our work to the best advantage.

I would also like to hear from Saints in foreign countries. The extension work is valuable to the local Sunday schools and Religios in keeping the scattered Saints up in church work.

Further still, we many times get nonmembers on our home department list and this may teach them the gospel.

I hope to get word from all soon, so we may do much good.
MRS. J. ARTHUR DAVIES.

An Appeal for Books

The Gospel Literature Commission has been conferring with the members of the General Library Commission concerning certain features of their work, and have decided that a co-ordination of their activities is entirely feasible, in the following project.

It is intended to make up about ten sets of church books for distribution to nonmembers only throughout the church. These will be available for borrowing by application of district gospel literature officers, who may retain them for a period of three months, or by renewal, for four months. They will be numbered and listed for loaning to investigators of our church doctrines, who will return them to the custodians of the library while it is in the district.

While it is expected to purchase some of the books from the funds allotted to the two organizations, they are not financially able to get all of them, the initial cost for the books alone being about seventy dollars.

We desire that the Saints who have any of these books which they are not making good use of, will donate the same to these collections for distribution in the manner indicated.

The sets will be under the care of the undersigned, who is a member of both organizations and centrally located. The only cost to the borrowers will be transportation both ways and an agreement to replace lost books or pay for serious damage.

These sets may be varied a little, but the following list comprises the ones we have in mind, made up with the idea that they have a special appeal to various classes of investigating readers.

It is hoped that the local and district literature and library organizations everywhere will further extend this work, on a similar plan, for untold good can be accomplished by an organized effort toward supplying the needs of inquiring friends. The restrictions that they be loaned to nonmembers only are made with the idea that we are not yet in a position to supply our own members with literature of this class, which they should have in their own libraries where they may be read much and often. The library boards will look after the special needs of the members.

If you have any of the following you will part with, send to me at Lamoni and it will greatly help us in starting the movement, which we believe has undreamed-of possibilities in it.

The books we want now are:

Joe Pine, Voice of Warning, Two-Story Book, In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage, With the Church in an Early Day, Beatrice Witherspoon, Book of Mormon Vindicated, Doctrinal References, Bound set of Angel Message Tracts, Three Bibles Compared. It is not expected that the Saints will supply all these books we need, but we have reason to believe some will be glad to do so. After reading these books there will likely be a demand for tracts on other subjects, but ordinarily these can be supplied by the members on the ground. When this is impossible, let us know and we will try to supply those really needed.

Our Departed Ones

BILLINGS.—Rhoda A. Billings, wife of Elder John J., was born March 11, 1842, at Little Deer Isle, Maine. She was one of the first to accept the restored gospel in these parts, having been baptized 49 years ago by George W. Eaton and confirmed by John Landers. Died July 22, 1917. Leaves husband, one brother, and sister, 10 children, 54 grandchildren, and 8 great-grandchildren, and many friends to mourn. Sermon by George H. Knowlton.

HEITHCOAT.—James M. Heithcoat was born at Fairfield, Tennessee, February 1, 1859; baptized October 1, 1893 by T. C. Kelley, at South Pittsburg, Tennessee. Was a firm believer in the church and spent much of his time reading the church books. Died July 16, 1917, at Chattanooga, Tennessee. Leaves wife, one son, 2 daughters, one sister, 4 grandchildren, besides other relatives. Funeral sermon by L. R. Robinson of the Universalist Church and burial in Forest Hills Cemetery, at Chattanooga.

FLAHERTY.—Alpheus F. Flaherty was born in Richland County, Ohio, March 9, 1835. Married Rebecca Cummings, March 25, 1863. Five sons were born to this union, 2 of them, with his wife, having preceded him across the dark valley. He was baptized at Coldwater, Michigan, in June, 1873, by Henry C. Smith, but later on, through some misunderstanding, was severed from the church. He might possibly some years ago, have been reinstated in his membership if proper action had been taken. He died July 24, 1917, at the home of his son, George. He died firm in the faith. Interment in Keeler Cemetery, at Hartford, Michigan. Sermon by F. J. D. Earl.

Book Reviews

THE BATTLE OF THE SOMME.—By John Buchan, published by George H. Doran Company, New York City, 1917, 264 pages. We are in receipt of a copy of the above work with the compliments of the author, and take this means of expressing appreciation. It appears to be an attempt merely to set forth the history of the battle as it appeared from the British lines, and expresses an appreciation for the effort on both sides.

EDUCATION AND LIVING.—By Randolph Bourne, New York City, Century Company, 1917, 236 pages, $1.25 net. Mr. Bourne as one of the contributing staff, wrote these articles for The New Republic. He considers our present educational problem, and lays special stress on the work of John Dewey and the Gary School. He points out the lost motion in the four years of the grammar school, and in particular to the character of the work which he insists should prepare for life. He also takes up and discusses the feature of government in modern education, of the teachers hired in New York City. He is opposed to the effort towards uniformity and mediocrity in our school work, but is strongly for practical education. This is a recent book, and should prove of interest for those making a study of our educational problems and difficulties.

THOSE WAR ARTICLES

It is a source of regret that a few have evidently not understood the various editorials in the SAINTS' HERALD on the subject of the war, and have read into them something not in the mind of the writer, nor in the text. It is not at all unusual, in fact it is the common experience that one reads not what is written alone, but reads into it his own previous ideas and constructions.

War is evil, barbaric and uneconomic. It destroys, and does not create. Its seeming prosperity is misleading, for enormous wealth is destroyed, hence prices must rise and the world is poorer, much poorer. It tries to take, and often does, the cream of the nation in mankind and womankind, and then destroys much of it. It represents passion on a low plane.

All its assumed gains of heroism, coordination, cooperation and erethism (that is, in an energetic arousal to the accomplishment of work) should be much better achieved by sublimation in peace and peaceful means, and must be if Christianity is ever to be a fact in the world.

That the military caste and makers of munitions have incited wars in the past and present, is undoubtedly true. It is abhorrent that they be permitted to do so and then profit from the flow of blood. Such war profits should be conscripted; even though that is not the reason of the United States entering this war, but rather to prevent the military caste so inciting or forcing a war.

This war has been made so terrible above other wars, that we are informed men cannot enter the battle at once, but must gradually work up and become acclimated to the noise; and in withdrawing must also move back in easy stages to become accustomed to quiet again. It is, and must be wholly abhorrent in its destruction of young manhood, in widowed wives and mothers, in the poverty and distress in the aftermath; in the destruction of art, landscape, homes and all that can be broken.

One shot from a large cannon costs as much as a workingman's wages for three years; a school-teacher for five years; a workingman's dwelling house or four years of college. One half the cost of this war spent for social betterment would have made of this a different world.

Aside from personal opinions, the church of Christ cannot approve of war, except that spiritual, sublimated warfare of righteousness against wrong and sin, of purity against uncleanness, physical and moral. This is not included in our ordinary use of the term "war," and brings only good and peace, and saves life, instead of destroying. The church is not inane, weak and without energy. It stands forth strong and clear for right and peace, mercy and love. The compassion and love of Christ would make war impossible, once humanity will permit it to have sway in heart and soul.

The church is for the salvation of soul and body. It is for international brotherhood and peace.

But the immediate question discussed in previous editorials is not the position of the church towards war, as that position is uncompromisingly against war. But the question was, What shall our young men do? Shall we say to them, The Government has called you to service, but the church says if you go, you are an apostate, we shall expel you or remove you from church fellowship? Or shall it rather be said, You must register. Whether you voluntarily enlist or not is a matter of individual conscience, for each man is a citizen of the country as well as a member of the church. There is a question involved of individual liberty of conscience.

Again it is a question of church and state. How far is the church justified in dictating after the fact to the state? As individuals we have our opinions, but are even the leading officers of the church justified in an attempt, if they should have made such an attempt, to commit the church to a position in opposition to the Government?

In particular, the questions involved were technical on which individual opinions were asked in such number as to make them of general interest. One involved the exemption of ministers of religion. Who is included and who exempt? The other relates to the following exemption clause in the Act of Congress:

Individuals also may claim exemption under the following heads. . . . As a person who was a member of a well-recognized religious sect or organization, organized and existing May 18, 1917, whose then existing creed or principles forbade its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein, in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organization.—Des Moines Register, July 25, 1917.

Is this organization included within that exemption? It is our opinion that it is not. No such creed has been adopted. Reference is not made here to the Sermon on the Mount, nor to the fundamental principles of Christianity. It is not even a question of what action we think the church should have taken. It is not adopting a new position, but simply a refusal to attempt to change now what has been the church position in the past.

The church stands for peace and against war. As members of the church, we hope and work earnestly for the day when peace shall be established in the earth and there shall be no war. As individuals we have stood and still stand for arbitration and conciliation (though it takes two to arbitrate). The church stands for democracy and liberty of conscience, but this liberty of conscience has permitted individuals to serve their country in the past, and not be ostracised.

Whatever be our opinion as to persons having conscientious scruples, that does not excuse, in an effort to justify our scruples, an attack on the Government, and the lending of aid and comfort to its enemies.

Our attention has been called to a certain organization, which has declared strongly against war and any participation therein. This organization prior to 1914 had taken such a position, forbidding its members to participate in war and in the fall of 1914 was about to hold a conference to reaffirm and assure this end. But the war broke out and the conference was called off, and its members were involved and took part and are still engaged in the war. Now it denounces in unmeasured terms the entrance of the United States into the war, and again is trying to hold a conference for peace.

We are willing to concede its difficulties in 1914, and its plea at that time for not holding such a conference, but why, having failed then, should it now make such an attempt?

It should be remembered that in these editorials, while the term the church is frequently used, that these are presented as individual answers of the editors. The church in organized capacity has not attempted an interpretation of these laws.

But the church took no action in 1914 forbidding the German, French and English members taking part in the war. To attempt now to adopt such a resolution would be distinctly unneutral and would look suspiciously like an attempt to hinder one particular government, and that the one which more than any other guarantees religious liberty, the one under which its organization was affected and which offers protection to a very large percentage of its members. This means that if there is any government which it should strive to uphold in preference to others it would be this one.

But the substantial reason does not rest there. For the church is universal and international. The substantial reason is, the church should not so act as to give reasonable suspicion that it is acting against one particular government, and to establish an interference or control of the state by the church or a church.

The editors are individually greatly opposed to war. It is probable that a great majority of the people of this country did not want war and do not want war. But it is a grave mistake to assume that a majority are opposed to this war and so are not with President Wilson. A very small minority, indeed, are or will seek directly or indirectly to hinder, or have any sympathy with those trying to do so.

We all hope for an early termination, and then promptly an international agreement for arbitration, disarmament and peace. And failing that, democracy so far established, that a popular agreement or association may be made against war and for peace; against autocracy, political or economic, and for justice and righteousness. May the church lead for that day.

We want our boys who are called to service to feel that their efforts and sacrifices are appreciated. As citizens we should appreciate the gravity of the situation before us and courageously do our part.

As members of the church and as a church realizing the crisis before the world and before the church we want to move earnestly forward to the establishment of Zion, praying for divine direction and upholding in righteousness those chosen to assume the responsibility. In Zion and her stakes lies safety, if so be the law of God obtains and is fully observed.

TRIUNE IMMERSION

We are in receipt of four copies of The Theocrat for February 3, 10, 17 and 24, published at Zion City, Illinois, in which are printed a sermon on triune immersion. The papers have been sent to us with a request for an answer.

The first one on triune immersion has been a matter of considerable discussion in the past few centuries. An article appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD for October 6, 1915, and we have others in hand.

This sermon in The Theocrat covers a number of other matters and collects several statements in favor of triune immersion. Great stress is laid on the meaning of the word baptizo, since it is frequentive in form. Bapto is said to mean immersion, and baptizo to immerse repeatedly, and so the claims indicate a repeated action of immersion. We find, however, that Liddell and Scott and Pickering give the following meanings:

LIDDELL AND SCOTT

Bapto (trans). To dip, to dip under (Latin—immergere).

To dip in dye, color or steep (to dye the hair), (intrans.)

Baptistis. One that dips, a dyer.

A baptizer.

Baptisis. Dipping, bathing, washing, drawing water, baptism. (Eccl.)

Baptizo. To dip repeatedly; (of ships) to sink (them). Passive, bathe.

Idioms: Overhead and ears in debt; soaked in wine. A boy drowned with question.

To draw water.

To baptize. (N. T.)

JOHN PICKERING

Baptizo. To dip, immerse, submerge, plunge, sink, overwhelm, steep, soak, wet. In the N. T.—to cleanse by washing; to perform ablution. (Mark 7: 4.)

("The verb is a frequentive in form but not in fact.")

—Robinson's Lexicon; N. T.

Baptisma. That which is dipped, steeped, immersed, dipping, plunging. In N. T., the rite of baptism.

Baptismos. A washing, ablution. In N. T., baptism.

Bapto. To dip, to dip under, to plunge, steep, dye or color, wash, draw up, fill by drawing up.

Midd.—To bathe oneself; passive, to sink or be lost (as a ship), to temper (steel by dipping in water).

JOHN GROVES

Bapto. Dip, plunge, immerse, wash, wet, moisten, sprinkle, steep, imbue, dye, stain, color.

Baptizo. Dip, immerse, merge, plunge, wash, cleanse, purify, baptize, depress, humble, overwhelm.

We see from this that baptizo, while frequentive in form, is said by Robinson not to be so in fact. It appears upon the whole to be used, however, with the idea of submersion. Its primary meaning, according to Liddell and Scott, appears to be frequentive. But the main idea is not frequentive. In fact, very few of the meanings are frequentive in form or idiom. Some students carry their discussion so far that radically it would mean a frequentive immersion in the name of the Father, a fre-quentive immersion in the name of the Son, and a frequentive immersion in the name of the Holy Ghost, since they emphasize that the baptizo must be in the name of each one, which would mean nine times instead of three. They also ignore the many passages in which they are baptized in the name of the Lord and baptize into the Lord Jesus.

While we hold strongly for the view of immersion, it will be noted that the majority of the meanings of bapto do not signify a submersion or immersion, but the majority for baptizo do. In fact if we look closely over the definitions, none except the very first given by Liddell and Scott are frequentive in form in English.

The Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics rather clearly sets forth that in the apostolic age baptism was by immersion, and that probably of a single immersion, but that in the second century it was modified, and many changes were made. Not only was triune immersion introduced, but the candidate was sometimes taken out into the water, and standing there had water poured upon him three times. Vicarious baptism also came to be used. The verb, while thus frequentive in form, is stated by this encyclopedia to signify not the frequentive action, but a ritualistic or authoritative cleansing. (Article, Baptism.)

It would seem upon this authority that the ordinary baptism was probably in the name of Jesus Christ with one immersion (Acts 2: 38; 19: 5; 4: 12; 8: 12; 10: 18; 1 Corinthians 5: 14), but that gradually not only triune immersion, but also a ritual including the renunciation of the Devil and all of his works, and an oath to serve God. And many other changes crept in gradually and changed the ordinance so as to include even infant baptism, which is not to be found in the New Testament.

On page 387 we find, "It is still less safe to argue from the meaning of baptizo as a frequentive of bapto, for the meaning of words depends ultimately on the use of them and not on etymologies." The author continues to the effect that baptizo in fact refers to the ceremonial use.

It would seem to be in contrast to this that in the second and third centuries a triune form had crept into the church, and as immersion, affusion, or sprinkling, continued for several centuries, especially in the east, where it is still continued in the Greek church. But there appears to be a total lack of proof, that it was the form used in the apostolic age, or prior to the middle of the second century at the earliest, and the probability or presumption is, that it was not used prior to that time, and especially not in New Testament times.

In the west, after the eighth century the single baptism by sprinkling had been established. The development, or changes from simple immersion in the name of the Lord were a. the triune name (Justinian, Hermans), b. using triune immersion (Justinian), c. the confession of faith (Irenaeus), d. "Unction" and further changes were gradually added, as has already been indicated.

The types used in reference to baptism would appear to preclude the triune form of baptism, as in the likeness of his burial. But Christ was not buried three times, nor did he rise three times; he was buried once and rose once. (Romans 6: 4; Colossians 2: 12.)

Some carry it so far as an illustration that they use three glasses of different color, as red, blue and yellow, and say in the red, and in the blue and in the yellow means three dippings. They then draw a parallel of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. But as already pointed out their argument, baptizo, would mean then a frequentive in each name, which would be at least nine times in all.

Again, the argument is carried so far as to assert a triune God, a triune faith and a triune baptism. For our part we are content to rest with Ephesians 4: 4-6: "There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

Finally Matthew 28: 18 is easily understood by those who have studied ancient languages, as the genitive form would have to be used for each of the three words: of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. (Patri, filii et sancti spiritu.) It does not imply separately of each name, but is the three in one—the one God.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Conscientious Objectors

General Crowder has made the announcement that the desires of conscientious objectors will be considered, but they are not sufficient for exemption. Those required to serve notwithstanding these scruples will be provided non-combatant service, but it is made clear that it will not relieve them from the dangers of war.

Elder Harrington in San Bernardino

The Sunday Morning Index of San Bernardino, California, of July 29 contains over half a column synopsis of a sermon by Elder George E. Harrington. Editorial announcement is also made that he will speak twice that day at the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Fifth and G streets. Elder Harrington was for many years president of the Independence Stake before its division, and is now president of the Southern California District.

Cruel to Separate Them

Separate the brewery and the distillery? No, it would be cruel. They have been partners in crime for a generation—they have been co-conspirators against all that is high and holy. Let them die together and be buried in the same grave.—The Commoner.

Our Stakes Number

We had planned and announced the publication of a special magazine number of the stakes of the church for August, but reunion time came on and we were compelled to put it off till we could secure the material we had expected. We are sorry it happened in this way, but will get the material as soon as possible and then publish the special number.

Worth-While Advice

The Official Bulletin is publishing a series of thirty lessons for the benefit of men selected for service in the national army. They are "informal in tone and do not attempt to give binding rules and regulations." One lesson is printed each day and a careful perusal of each should be of much value to our young men who are to serve the country in this manner.

No More Distilled Spirits

At eleven o'clock p. m. September 8, all manufacture of distilled spirits for beverage purposes in the United States must stop for the period of the war with Germany. The beer interests were much elated over the discrimination in their favor, but now Food Administrator Hoover is reported as threatening to cut the alcoholic content of beer from the three and a half to four per cent it now contains to at least two per cent. This is considered necessary to save the thirty-five million bushels of grain necessary.

Lamoni Reunion on Prohibition

The closing business session of the Lamoni Stake reunion unanimously adopted resolutions that the voters belonging to the church be urged to exercise the elective franchise on October 15 in the Iowa election when the vote will be taken on the question of the State constitutional amendment for prohibition. The church has been uniform in its attitude on the temperance question and we trust that the Saints everywhere will see to it that when opportunity is presented they vote to establish national prohibition.

Bishop McGuire in the East

A card from Bishop B. R. McGuire tells us he spent three days at the Massachusetts reunion and then took a trip with U. W. Greene through eastern and western Maine districts. Spoke at Jones-

THE ELEVENTH CHAPTER OF DANIEL

In view of the fact that some at least are seeking to interpret this chapter in the light of present war conditions, it may be well to examine it in the light of history as well as to seek to harmonize it with the statement of the messenger who appeared unto Daniel whom he likened unto "a certain man clothed in linen" (Daniel 10: 5).

The chapter starts with the statement of the heavenly messenger that "in the first year of Darius the Mede" (9: 1), he "stood to confirm and to strengthen" this king. The second verse opens prophetically, that is he is to show Daniel "the truth" relating to the future. "There shall stand up yet three kings in Persia"—Cambyses, 529-521 B. C., Smerdis-Gaumata, 521 B. C., and Darius, 521-485 B. C. "And the fourth shall be far richer than they all: and by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia." This "fourth" king was Xerxes I, the eldest son of Darius and grandson of Cyrus, by his mother.

As so often happens in prophetic statement, the messenger in the following verse passes over many years of history without even breaking the thread of narration and tells Daniel that "a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will. Thus in few words are the years of Alexander the Great covered, both as to his might, dominion and will, for it was he who was said to have wept because there was naught else to conquer, so great was his "dominion"! But the eternal fiat says, "when he shall stand up," seeming to imply he shall arise in his "might" by doing "according to his will," "his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others beside those," his posterity.

Two of his sons were appointed to succeed him but were such imbeciles as to require a protector, hence the government was "not to his posterity," but divided between four of his generals—Antigonus, Antipater, Leonatus, and Ptolemy, who entered into a combination against the regent of the above sons. But the empire was so divided and subdivided as to fully literalize the figure—"four winds." And thus his kingdom was "plucked up, even for others beside those."

"And the king of the south shall be strong, and one of his princes." The "king of the south" refers to Ptolemy I (surnamed Soter, which meant Preserver), who ruled over Egypt, hence, literally, a king of the south. His son who was surnamed Philadelphus, became his successor two years before his death by his abdicating in his favor, and was truly the "one of his princes" who became "strong above him" and reigned over a "great dominion." "And in the end of years they shall join themselves together; for the king's daughter of the south shall come to the king of the north [Antiochus, king of Assyria] to make an agreement: [this "agreement" she accomplished by marrying him] but she shall not retain the power of the arm: [she was killed at the instigation of Laodice, a former wife of Antiochus]. Neither shall he stand, nor his arm." He was also killed at the same time.

Verses 7-9 were literally fulfilled by Ptolemy III, who, to avenge the death of his sister Berenice, fought against and sufficiently subjugated Assyria as to be able to restore the Egyptian gods which had previously been carried away by Cambyses. For this he received the title of Euergetes, meaning the Benefactor.

Then, in harmony with verse 10, the "sons" of Antiochus, Seleucus and Antiochus, were "stirred up" and assembled "a multitude of great forces," and Seleucus was the "one" who did all that is here depicted.

It should be considered that the terms Antiochus and Ptolemy were but titular and that when the messenger uses these terms, "king of the north" and "king of the south" the statements are to be limited to the rulers only and not to the individuals. And that in the period of history covered by the entire prediction there were various rulers on these thrones. It is also well to remember that to make the analysis complete and the interpretation certain that one must confine "the king of the north" to Assyria and "the king of the south" to Egypt.

Taking up the thread of the narrative, all that is necessary to say is that Ptolemy IV, known as Philopator, was moved to anger and came forth and fought with the "king of the north," Antiochus the Great, and "set forth a great multitude" which was literally "given into his hand" in the sense that though he had been a degenerate the multitude when marshaled and panoplied for war was yet willing to give itself into his hand, that is to be led by him, when he showed the spirit of his predecessors, who had been victorious in war. After taking the multitude into battle his war success in casting "down his many ten thousands," he was yet not "strengthened by it," for turning aside to visit Jerusalem, "After offering sacrifices in the temple, he attempted to enter the sanctuary. A sudden paralysis hindered his design.

Thus Smith in his Dictionary of the Bible, depicts in few words the fulfillment of "he shall not be strengthened by it." After an effort to wreak vengeance on the Alexandrine Jews "for his disappointment" in not being able to thus enter the sanctuary, he died B. C., 205, leaving his son but five years of age to a doubtful regency. The "more sure word of prophecy" here came to the relief of young Ptolemy Epiphanes. For the "king of the north" was not to come against him till "after certain years"—thirteen or fourteen—"with a great army and much riches." The Jews as "the robbers of thy people" aligned themselves with the Assyrians and in every sense made true "the vision" of Daniel.

In the fulfillment of the next five verses, Antiochus the Great plays the leading role, for it was he who as "the king of the north" that "cast up a mount" and took "the most fenced cities" and Ptolemy V could "not withstand" him. He did "according to his own will" and it was also true "none shall stand before him." He stood in the "glorious land," Palestine, "which by his hand" was "consumed." He "set his face," or determined in his mind to take with him "the strength of his whole kingdom" even to the "upright ones," or his competitors. He gave his own daughter Cleopatra in marriage to Ptolemy, "corrupting her" or seeking to do with the dowry of the Phoenician provinces. But she did "not stand on his side" but with her husband. He next turns "his face unto the isles" [Ionian] "but a prince"—Scipio—[see Rollins] caused "the reproach offered by him to cease." He now turned "his face toward the fort of his own land" but did "stumble and fall" and was not "found" because he "attacked the rich temple of Belus in Elymais, and was slain by the people who arose in its defense."

The twentieth verse had its fulfillment in the life and reign of Seleucus IV (Philopator), "king of Asia." He was a "raiser of taxes," and was destroyed "within few days" but "neither in anger, nor in battle." He was murdered by one of his own courtiers, hence was "destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle" but with a desire on the part of his murderer, Heliodorus, to attain the crown.

The entire rest portion of the chapter is but a prophetic recital of what later proved the historical fact of the deeds of Antiochus IV, Epiphanes (the Illustrious), not illustrious for good, but in crime. He obtained "the kingdom by flatteries;" he was a "vile person"; he wrested the kingdom from "the prince of the covenant," his nephew and son of an elder brother. After entering into "the league" he worked "deceitfully;" he entered "peaceably even upon the fattest places of the province;" he "scattered among them the prey, and spoil, and riches." The king of the south arrayed against him a mighty army, but it did not "stand." "And both these kings" told "lies at one table," but that which they told did "not stand!" He returned to his own land with "great riches; and his heart" was "against the holy covenant." He sought to return to Egypt as predicted, but it was neither "as the former, or as the latter," for he was restrained by the "ships of Chittim" (Greece), and he had "indignation against the holy covenant." And he had "intelligence" or an understanding with those who forsook that covenant. And it was he who became so "vile" that he took "away the daily sacrifice" by placing upon the altar erected for temple service an idol altar! (see Mac.) Ten days later an offering was made upon it to Jupiter Olympus! It is possible that it was in this act that he planted the "tabernacle of his palace . . . in the glorious holy mountain," yet this matter is a little too indefinite to state surely, and it does seem more clearly to imply that it was his son and successor who fulfilled the closing verses of this chapter though it is generally attributed to him. Personally, I incline to the thought that his son came in for a portion of the prophetic statement. At any rate, however, there is no part of the chapter that seems to have even the remotest reference to our own times.

As to the twelfth chapter, that is quite another proposition and the more I look at it the more the conclusion is forced upon me that he who undertakes an interpretation of its symbols had best wait until he has at least the degree of inspiration granted unto Daniel when he received the vision, before attempting the interpretation.

J. W. WIGHT.

IS IT NOT TIME TO HALT?

"Unto what were you ordained?" is a question asked by the Lord less than one hundred years ago. And I am wondering if some of the ministers have ever attempted to consider the answer. The writer of this brief criticism does not claim to be exempt from imperfection, but he does claim to be a careful observer and feels, presumptuous as it may seem to some, that he has a word of warning and even instruction to some of his brethren, if they who have ears to hear will hear.

In the first place—and there really seems to be no beginning to what I have to say, so many things crowd in my mind—let me notice a frequently-heard expression made by men while in the pulpit: "Education is all right, but—" And I have wondered if the speaker really understood what he meant and what the word education means. An inspired Book of Mormon writer said: "To be learned [educated] is good if one [who is educated] hearkens unto the counsel of God." Might we not extend this thought by saying: To be strong physically is good if one does not use his strength to injure his fellow men?

To be rich or in possession of a big business enterprise is good if that steward turns his surplus over to the Lord's church. It is really the use we make of things which determines whether or not those things are "good" or bad. This applies to everything the human race possesses, for there is nothing earthly which cannot be perverted. Education is no exception, and if the possessor of such uses it as a means to exalt himself, if he is made proud and overbearing by his "learning," if, in brief, he does not use his powers for the good of humanity, that man's education is vain and he is worse off than the more limited steward, for where much is given much shall be required.

Again, we hear a sarcastic thrust made at homiletics. And I wonder if the brothers who do this really know what the word means. Homiletics, "the art of preaching"; and what does art mean, in brief? "1. The employment of means to accomplish some desired end. 2. A system of principles and rules for attaining a desired end; method of doing well some special work. 3. Systematic application of knowledge or skill in effecting a desired result," etc. And in the face of this, the cry goes up, "Away with it; throw the thing (homiletics) to the uninspired!"

If we look about us everywhere may be seen the workings of system, and especially is this so in nature; and no invention ever has been made that conformed not to law, so strict is nature. Why should a Latter Day Saint minister be a pet exception to the great universal laws? There is no exception. Every sermon worthy the name of sermon was delivered along the lines of logical construction. Consider every one you have read or heard and you will observe that each had a beginning (introduction) and a body (premises, reasonings, conclusions) and an ending (reviews, summings, etc.). Every intelligent preacher will construct his sermon homiletically, consciously or unconsciously, and if he is not intelligent enough to abide by law, observe proper system, follow the rules of clearness, make known the message he is trying to present, he is not worthy to hold the priesthood; if called he has failed to magnify his calling and is classed among the unfit. Admitting the foregoing, why is it not a duty to qualify by studying the art of preaching that we may become workmen of whom God will not be ashamed because we have improved the talents he has given us? If you are a good "natural preacher" become a better instrument or agent by studying to improve your powers of making others see.

There is nothing gained by sneering and scoffing. We might as well face the music and acknowledge past mistakes and begin under the light of experiences. We are facing a crisis; the warning has been sounded; the call is to us all to arise and put on the beautiful garments of Zion that we may not be found naked in the day of God's revelation.

When a man passes the age of learning his power of usefulness is on the wane; he is to be handled gently. It is a glorious experience to meet old people who are interested in the meaning of words, desirous of properly accenting syllables, hungry to learn of current events, history in its making, and able to tell the story of bygone days in a manner that enlightens and fascinates. But sad indeed it is to meet a person who has ceased to learn; the minister who seeks not to bring forth things both new and old, who feels so satisfied with his accumulation of knowledge that to imbibe one more drop from the spring of learning would, in his judgment, burst his capacity. Perhaps it would! But true living means the continual enlargement of mental capacity. He only half lives who half knows; eternal life can see only its smallest beginning here.

And were I not burdened because of a "grosser crime," this paper might not be written; it is the crime of violating one of the most potent instructions given to preachers and those who would be such:

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls to Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 2.

No Latter Day Saint minister will question the authority of the statement quoted above. It harmonizes sublimely with the instruction given by James:

Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. But if you have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not; and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom which is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easily entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.—James 3: 13-18.

To analyze fully the two quotations given, would extend the compass of this article beyond its purpose; however, the reader should consider solemnly and repentantly, if need be, the salient points, a few only being referred to here.

"Lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner." It is your desire to become an artist in your business as a preacher for God? Then obey the instruction of your Master. You will find no great speech or sermon blemished with hilarious punctuations. Not a "light" word is found in the epistles of Paul or the words of Jesus or the writings of the Nephites, and nearer home than ancient writings are the revelations given through the latter-day prophet, not one of which contains a word of lightness. Lightness of speech means studied attempts to provoke laughter; irreverent statements and the introduction of matter which is not in harmony with the purpose of the address which should be characterized with deep seriousness and reverence. There is "a time to weep and a time to laugh," but the time to laugh is not when the weight of life is struggling to weigh down the weight of death. No amount of sophistry can reason away the statement: "Lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word."

"Courtesy in demeanor." What is the meaning of this word courtesy? "Politeness; civility; urbanity; courtliness. An act of civility or respect. Refinement; good breeding." Must I be and express all these when I stand to declare the word of life to the people? Certainly. And more, you must be such at all times for if you are not used to the tools you cannot employ them on the spur of the moment.

Now, is it an act of respect to refer to the place where conscientious beings have bowed in reverence to God, as the "sniveling bench"? Some elders were guilty of incivility, and the word of revelation was given both to correct a present wrong, or evil, and also to furnish important homiletic instruction to the young minister who really thinks his work worth while; for one of the fundamental things to observe before an audience is to incur its good will by treating it with courtesy. You cannot teach an angry man.

Let the young minister, for I am writing to such, bear in mind that he is directing his message to the sheep (the honest in heart, as we call them) who are in his audience; no other will receive his words. The call is to God's people who are in Babylon; they may not be driven out, insulted out, yanked out. Such treatment is what they receive in Babylon. It is truth plus the Spirit of God which moves people. But truth is truth only to us when we assimilate it. Intelligent people move only when they have sufficient reason for making such move. We do not expect or want any person to enter the church unless he does it intelligently. A man should not leave his faith till he feels and believes that it is wrong or that there is something better for him to embrace. A Methodist should be immersed if he feels that sprinkling is not right; a Baptist should join the Catholic church if he thinks it is the true church. Why not? In like manner, when one or more persons believe that the Church of Christ offers more light than any other institution such persons are not loyal to the principle of right, of truth, they are not real men and real women if they do not advance toward or in the light.

Why then insult the very ones who are the prospective members of the church we represent? Every year sees hundreds of men and women leave the sectarian churches and enter the fullness of light reflected by the church of Christ. But these people were honest before they entered our church. There are hundreds of others like them, seekers after light. Young man, show them the light, that is what they want, nothing else will take its place. Your "funny stories" will not feed those hungry souls. Applause and empty laughter do not come from deep-thinking and famishing spirits. The rabble will gnash at Anthony to-day and kill Brutus to-morrow. There is not one left to mark Yorick's grinning, and his flashes of merriment are long since forgotten, but the teachings which concern our eternal destiny will live forever and be pondered by millions of men when the little silly efforts simply to amuse have been lost almost before they were born.

Of course I do not cry out against humor—it is a gift of God; and we should use our gifts. It is against the imitation, the striving after effect, the feigned, fictitious, affected, inconsistent that I argue. And that is inconsistent which detracts from the object of our effort.

Billy Sunday may be a moral reformer, but he is by no means a gospel preacher; like many other enlighteners of the darkened mind, he shuns to declare "all the counsel of God," and his message is tintured with the same delusion which characterizes "other gospels" that are offering full and complete salvation based on incomplete obedience to the full plan of God. But in saying this of the man and his message, I simply base my statement on my belief in what I think is the teaching of the Bible; I may be wrong; it is for every man to satisfy his own conscience and mind; we cannot force belief, it is the result of evidence, and if the evidence is correct then the acceptance of that evidence will beget true belief. "Preach the gospel." "Preach the word."

I ask, in conclusion, Is it not time to halt? Halt is a German word for stop. Is it not time to conform more carefully to the teachings of the word of God? The instruction from heaven comes freighted with the wisdom of God. It is safe to follow it. We may try other methods, follow colored lights for a season, but in the end we will, if honest to our highest ideals, come back only to begin over after the regretful waste of precious time. Be wise to-day lest to-morrow find you foolish. For your first lesson in homiletics take Paul's writings to Timothy and Joseph Smith's teaching in section 119: 2, both writers being instruments in God's hands, it is understood. For your second lesson, take up the study of grammar and words. For your third, learn the art of correct breathing and vocal expression. Then advance step by step along the path which I shall be glad to recommend in the HERALD from time to time, if there be sufficient demand and interest to justify.

REMISSION OF SINS

DEFINITION

From the New Imperial Dictionary we obtain the following: "Remission, (1) The act of remitting, releasing, resigning, relinquishing, or surrendering. (2) Release, discharge, or relinquishment of a claim or right; as, the remission of a tax, duty, debt, etc.; forgiveness; pardon; as, the remission of sins."

Forgiveness is treated as a synonym, and the definition following verifies this fact: Forgiveness. (1) The act of forgiving; the pardon of an offender, by which he is considered and treated as not guilty.

The scriptural use of these terms warrants us in assuming that they are synonymous. Luke 24: 47, "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Also Acts 13: 38, "Be it known unto you therefore men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."

THE RESULT OF BAPTISM IN WATER

Mark 1: 8, "I indeed have baptized you with water." Mark 1: 4, "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Acts 2: 38, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

This ordinance also serves as an act of entrance into the kingdom (church) according to John 3: 5 and 10: 1.

As to the remission of sins, however, the direct result is a "remission of sins that are past." Romans 3: 25, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past."

This is a gift to us through Jesus Christ, and in this sense we are saved by grace. Romans 5: 15,

"For if through the offense of one many be dead, much more the grace of God and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many." Also Ephesians 2: 8, 9, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast." The law of the land offers relief through certain bankruptcy laws; our liabilities exceed our assets, and we are relieved of our burdens, and start business upon a new basis. This is a parallel to the spiritual.

AFTER BAPTISM, WHAT?

Word pictures have been drawn illustrating the effects of sin in certain cases which cannot be adjusted and which must go to the eternal seat of arbitration, carrying with them the fatal result of "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Galatians 6: 7). The case of a son is presented who has through his bad conduct caused the health of his dear mother to fail; the stooped shoulders, gray hair, etc., standing as a testimony against him of that which he has robbed his mother of, which cannot be replaced. It is a very striking picture and challenges our attention. Another picture is presented to us of a young man who has deprived a maiden of her virtue, and in the words of Shakespeare, "He who steals my purse steals trash, but he who filches from me my good name, robs me of that which not enriches him, but makes me poor indeed." Sin has also been illustrated by the driving of a nail into a board, and that even though it has been forgiven or pulled out, yet the hole or scar remains.

Certain object lessons carry with them a lesson to a certain point, but no farther. For example the parables of Jesus with reference to the kingdom of heaven: a grain of mustard seed, a net cast into the sea, a little leaven, a treasure, etc. It will not do, however, for us to use these illustrations too far.

The illustrations of the mother, the maiden, and the board strikingly illustrate sin to a certain point. In the case of the mother and the maiden there may be different angles that exist in no two cases. There may be a very big story behind the scenes. We cannot deny the fact that sin produces just such results as have been pictured, but has this trial been a loss and no gain to the mother or to the maiden; in the light of that which Christ presents when he said that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (Luke 12: 15). An usual degree of long-suffering is evident in the statement of Paul, who admonishes, "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the Devil, who are taken captive at his will" (2 Timothy 2: 25, 26). There is wisdom in the statement that we were to forgive all men, but that the Lord will forgive whom he will forgive. The Lord also says, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." Let the Lord adjust these cases for our bungling, biased hands and minds may not work right. The wisdom, mercy, long-suffering and justice of God will truly do all things well.

So again we ask the question, After baptism, what? What about our sins? "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isaiah 1:18). Also, "All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him" (Ezekiel 18:22). Also, "for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more" (Jeremiah 31:34).

Thus far the scripture surely warrants us in assuming that the sinner has a clear start, so far as the remission of sins that are past is concerned, provided of course that genuine repentance has taken place, which means to adjust so far as it is possible to do so.

However, has anyone ever seen a human being go down into the water an imperfect being and arise a perfect creature? Cite us to any such cases, please.

Back of our remission of sins lies a remarkable history, involving a wonderful plan, and the operation of a peculiar law. Out of the waters of baptism arises a creature with new desires, forgiven of past transgressions. There are in his nature, however, certain tendencies, and impulses, the grooves and paths of heredity or of personal acts, which still remain. A big task confronts him. John says about Jesus, and those who receive him, that he gave them "power to become the sons of God." Are we not safe in assuming, that following baptism, there is also involved the operation of a wonderful plan?

There is no justification now in making others responsible for the weaknesses he may possess, no matter how they got there. "But God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." This means much more than the human mind can really fathom. It undoubtedly involves the careful adjustment to the needs of every being under his care. Finally, the judgment "according to their works."

BAPTISM BY FIRE AND THE HOLY GHOST

From the Book of Mormon we quote the following: "For the gate by which we should enter is repentance and baptism by water: and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire, and by the Holy Ghost."—2 Nephi 13:24.

A first reading of the above will undoubtedly cause some to wonder. This does not mean that there has been no remission of sins at baptism by water. Remember that we are to rightly divide the word of truth. The word clearly establishes the fact that baptism in water is for the remission of sins, and for sins that are past. Remember, too, that the person that went down into the water an imperfect being does not come out of the water a perfect creature. Paul clearly tells us all that we are not perfect in the statement, "Therefore [not] leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection" (Hebrews 6:1). The church organization planned by the Father is designed for the "perfecting of the saints." In addition to this there are measures employed under the direction of God, ministering to the individual needs of every soul embracing the terms of truth.

The aforementioned statement from the Book of Mormon must be interpreted in the light of another quotation following: "Now this is the commandment, Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost, that ye may stand spotless before me at the last day."—Nephi 12:33. No wonder then that Jesus said, "And they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Paul struck the keynote to the matter when he asked, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

What we must do is partially realized in being baptized in water for the remission of sins that are past. It is fully realized in the reception of the Holy Ghost unto a complete remission of sins.

"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 John 1:8). Then the seventh verse reads, "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Let us then interpret the foregoing in the light of the following:

I [John] indeed baptize you with water unto repentance [or, upon your repentance] but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.—Matthew 3:11, 12.

What a splendid thing it is for us to avail ourselves of the privilege of being baptized in water for the remission of sins. This gives us a clean start as far as past sins are concerned. While it is true that we must exert ourselves some in carrying out the principles of faith and repentance, preceding baptism, so as to get the proper result, yet the effort we make is practically nothing. It is really the stretching forth of the hand to receive a gift. It is a gift in the truest sense of the term. In this case we are largely acted upon. In the case of remission of sins following, through the Holy Ghost and by fire, here it is that we are the actors in the drama of life, and as we sow so shall we also reap.

THE WORK OF FIRE

The metaphorical language of the scriptures has been used for a peculiar purpose in some instances. When Jesus said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you" many said "this is an hard saying." It was a shaft of divine light which at once severed the material amongst his followers from those who had a true and a spiritual conception of his work. A metaphor is a figure of speech founded on resemblance. For example, God as a "rock." The tongue, as a "fire."

Peter says: "Beloved [members of the church] think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you" (1 Peter 4: 12). Jesus said: "For they are not well pleased with the Lord's doings, therefore I am come to send fire on the earth; and what is it to you if I will that it be already kindled?" (Luke 12: 49, Inspired Translation).

Is it not quite clear that the fire referred to is a present action, and not a future event.

Associated with these let us consider the following quotations: "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: [the members of the church] and if it begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" (1 Peter 4: 17.) Also, "Some men's sins are open beforehand to judgment; and some men they follow after (1 Timothy 5: 24). A judgment takes place with the saints; their sins going before to judgment: before those of the world. Notice the following: "But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world" (1 Corinthians 11: 32). The judgment consists of the nature of a chastening, and the chastening evidently results in a remission of sins, because these sins are open beforehand to judgment.

Let us now notice more clearly the purpose of this chastening: "And every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit" (John 15: 2).

My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of his correction: for whom the Lord loveth, he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth.—Proverbs 3: 11, 12.

The loving, long-suffering, wise, and just hand of our almighty Father is tenderly leading us on and on, and "nearer my God to thee." The gospel plan is evidently the law designed to accomplish this result. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting [transforming] the soul."

Those administering the law are spoken of as follows: "And his ministers a flame of fire" (Hebrews 1: 7), and Jeremiah says, "Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" (Jeremiah 23: 29), and in the twentieth chapter and ninth verse we read, "But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones," and in Hebrews 12: 29 we read that, "For our God is a consuming fire." Not as a demon, but as a Father of love who delights in the workmanship of his hands, and whom he has created for his pleasure.

Malachi, speaking of the work of the Christ at his second coming says:

But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, [and many others, too.—F. F. W.] and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.—Malachi 3: 2, 3.

Not an offering according to the old law of Moses, consisting of the blood of rams, sheep and goats, but a new offering according to the terms of the new covenant, the gospel, consisting of a living sacrifice in the molding and shaping of the soul to an expression of all that is pure and gentle, and full of love. "Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction" (Isaiah 48: 10).

Through the furnace, through the heat,
There beneath the hammer's beat;
Through temptations manifold,
Comes my soul like burnished gold.

FORGIVENESS

"For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." (1 Timothy 2: 5.)

To explain our thought we must use an illustration. A child of the Father runs well for a season, but relaxes on the reins of restraint, and gradually degenerates in spiritual stature, manifesting selfishness, intolerance, exhibits a bad temper and indulges in such carnal habits entirely unbecoming a child of God. This child awakens to its condition. It appeals to the Father for forgiveness, and in answer to its earnest, humble desire, it enjoys a relief from the awful burden which has distressed its mind. This child soon discovers, however, that past indulgences have worn a deep groove in its nature which make it very susceptible to its former weaknesses. It struggles, and falls many times. It appeals to the Father in the name of Jesus, for forgiveness, and receives relief, and even help to overcome. Personal exertion, accompanied with the power of the gospel soon make a wonderful change in this child.

When we compare the above with our personal experiences, we must admit that the illustration is a fact. The forgiveness of sins is a wonderful privilege, but our appeal to the Father is a type of the obedience we manifested at the time of baptism in water, and this forgiveness of sins, is in reality a remission of sins which are past, and a gift of God, being saved by grace through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. But there is a personal work to be accomplished, a work which is moved by a living faith, accompanied with the refining process of the perfect law of liberty.

Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.—Hebrews 12: 11.

A little bluing is a good thing; it whitens the clothes. A sailor wishes for a side wind as it fills out all of the sails. A wind directly from the back would only fill up the back set of sails. It is the struggles which cause us to exert ourselves to our full capacity which strengthen us. A doctor once said to his patient, "John, do you know why we are sometimes sick?" "No," says John. "Because," said the doctor, "it brings us down on our backs, so we can look upward." Through the power of Christ the mighty healer, the bird with a broken pinion, "higher still shall fly again."

The points to be remembered are as follows:

1. That there is a remission of sins at baptism in water, but it is for the remission of sins that are past.

2. That there is a remission of sins after baptism, by fire and by the Holy Ghost.

3. That the scars and holes left by sin after forgiveness remain there, if the subject fails to utilize the healing and purifying process of the gospel law. But a full, absolute, and complete remission takes place through perfect obedience. This may be a very long process, extending even to the beyond, and it may take a shorter period of time, depending wholly upon the action of the subject.

May it be our aim to be "Nearer, my God, to thee."

The Graceland wireless station will be utilized the coming year in training radio operators to meet the country's great need for skilled operators. In fact it is said that no trained operator need lack immediate employment. It is proposed now by prominent men in the wireless work to organize all the amateur operators in the country to account for every message sent from and received in the United States, thus assisting in the detection of spies. Of course this would mean the restoration of all dismantled stations for receiving purposes. If at all interested, drop a line to Graceland College for further information.

HUMILITY

Humble souls that seek salvation
Through the Lamb's redeeming blood,
Hear the voice of revelation,
Tread the path that Jesus trod.

These lines contain a precious thought. Jesus said unto his disciples: "Learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." (Matthew 11: 29.) Christ is our great and perfect model of all excellence, purity, perfection, truth, honor, justice, mercy, goodness and love. His loving-kindness knows no end. He has bade his people to come up higher. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." (James 4: 10.) We may all assist in this latter-day work. (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.) No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble. (Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.) Our desires should be to live in harmony with what God has revealed to us. The pleasure of doing good is the only one that never wears out.

Humility is the principle which will make the sons and daughters of men children of God. The only way one can be benefited by the instruction he receives is by a proper application of the lesson taught. Wealth and education without humility is poverty with God. Man might attain to great wisdom and understanding, which is commendable. But, when we cast our eyes heavenward and view the starry worlds within its infinite space, we would then stand amazed at our own insignificance. The little we know seems as naught compared with the vastness of the unknown. There is a deep where all our thoughts are drowned. Man can only do a small part of the work that is entrusted to his care. God can send down manna from heaven. Man can only plow and plant. God must give the increase. Man might attain to great wisdom and understanding, but it is like plowing and planting—God must give it life. Jesus said, "Without me you can do nothing." It is written, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding." (Proverbs 3: 5.)

No one can live a true Christian life without others being benefited by it. Religion without humility is like a body without the spirit—dead. Let us measure our lives by the life of Jesus, holding before us the clear glass of gospel truth; seek to know if we have indeed passed from death unto life. The life of Jesus is in our mind a beautiful picture, but let us not forget what it cost to make it so. Though he possessed all wisdom and knowledge, he was meek and lowly. In all his work, his trials and agony, he said: "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." The love he had for doing his father's will made it so. He demonstrated to the world that in human nature all opposition here below can be overcome. Humility is the foundation of true religion, the mainspring of human action, the polar star.

I remember while a young boy in our home one incident. It was customary in the old country for the poor to send their little ones out to beg for bread. The custom was to give them a piece of rye bread and pork. They had a little sack in which they put it. One time two little children came to my father's home to ask for bread. Mother gave them a piece of wheat bread with butter on it. They didn't put that in their sack, but sat down and ate it. Tears came to mother's eyes. I have thought of that many times, and, like mother, not able to keep the tears back.

Jesus said: "The poor always ye have with you." When we in our prayers make mention of the poor and ask God to bless them, do we really appreciate when we sit down to a well-spread table and satisfy ourselves with an abundance of good things? Our heavenly Father has ordained that human beings should bless each other.

The Son of God was born in a manger. He said: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." (Matthew 8: 20.) The poor having the gospel preached to them, many think but very little of the value of simplicity. A humble salutation, how small the cost, but how great the return. The strength of the gospel is its righteousness and purity.

The main reason for the condition that the world is wrapped in to-day is the lack of humility. "Pride goeth before destruction." The lesson that some must learn cannot be learned without using the rod. It is surprising to think what people can get along without when they cannot get it. God is no respecter of persons; he never changes; his love for the world is still the same. War and famine is predicted. It is because of sin.

One writer says the statement is often heard that the great war is proof that Christianity has failed. A more logical view would be that Christianity has never been tried. Had the great nations of Europe given heed to the Golden Rule and applied it nationally in the same spirit that the Christ urged humanity to apply it, "man to man," no such cataclysm would have been possible.

The same cause will produce the same effect. As it was said in days of old, so we might say to-day: "They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth." (Isaiah 24: 5, 6.)

The only means that will bring peace and joy to the world is a compliance with the law of God. As Saints of God may we in humility of heart be like the sun—a light to the world.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE WAR DUTY OF OUR BOYS

"Should I go back to school this fall? Shouldn't I be doing something for my country in the war?" These questions undoubtedly are in the minds of thousands of American boys, was the conclusion of the American Boy magazine. Therefore they conferred with a number of well-known Government officials about it and the answer is: "Do both—go back to school; that will be a service to your country—the greatest you can give."

These questions were put to a goodly number of officials of the Government, of the Army and Navy, as well as to presidents of universities and colleges, and the answers are in perfect agreement. The questions follow:

"1. What would you say to 500,000 boys, if they were before you—or to one individually—about the importance of completing the high school course?"

"2. Would the advice you would give in this year of the war be different from the advice you would give at any other time?"

In the September number are the following answers, and many more:

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

While the President has made no public statement concerning the matter, it is his opinion that men not available for military service should in no way change their life plans. It would be a great mistake, he thinks, to neglect the school and college courses.

(Signed) JOSEPH P. TUMULTY,

Secretary to the President.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR

The most useful thing a high school boy can do is to finish his course, because the Nation in the next years will need all the trained men it can find.

It follows that a boy should be training himself for a productive career, at the same time keeping his body especially fit for military service which he may be called upon to perform when he is old enough.

He should certainly be preparing himself to understand the meaning of this great war and the reasons why America is fighting, and the kind of peace we and our allies mean to establish.

(Signed) NEWTON D. BAKER,

Secretary of War.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

The boys who have a good education have an immeasurable advantage over those who are so unfortunate as to be without it, and any boy who has the opportunity to complete at least a high school course and fails to do so is making the greatest mistake of his life. The present war conditions only emphasize what has been said.

To boys who are entering the senior year of high school this fall, I would say that they are finishing their school days in what will be the most momentous year of the present age, for the United States and for the world. It is a time to think seriously and work earnestly. Boys too young for military service now should be studying and training when practicable so that when they become of age they will be better trained if called upon to serve than their elder brothers were. But let us not forget that boys still need to play, and must not be allowed to mature too fast, and let athletics and social activities be not overlooked this year, if our high school boys are to receive a normal well-rounded development, to fit them for the difficult years before them.

(Signed) JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL

It is of vital importance that there be no "slackers" in education. The completion of the high school and college courses is well-nigh imperative at this juncture of our entry into world affairs. Nothing except the country's call in the defense of liberty should prevent it.

Never before in all the world's history will there have been, nor can we conceive that there ever will be in the future, a period demanding as great scientific knowledge, technical skill and general culture as at the close of this war. The entire viewpoint of man will have been changed. Old ideas, customs, and policies will crumble and new ones spring up from the ruins. New leaders will be chosen for all the activities of that period, and they must be taken from the ranks of the graduates of our high schools and colleges.

The high school boys of to-day will become the reconstructionists of to-morrow. The whole world must be rebuilt physically, commercially, economically, politically, and spiritually. The future welfare of our country in the coming great circle of democracies lies in the hands of our boys and they must prepare for the great tasks before them.

(Signed) A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

A WELL-KNOWN GENERAL

Every boy should finish his school course. We shall secure more men under the draft than we can arm at the present time.

The individual obligation on the part of each and every citizen for service is manifest, but the boys should remember that they are now serving in the best possible way by preparing themselves to serve more efficiently when the time comes. What we want now is for the boy in school or college to finish his education in order that we may have each year a dependable output of well-educated and well-trained young men.

It is a great mistake for partly educated young boys to rush to the colors now. We don't need them. It is very important they should finish their education.

LEONARD WOOD,
Major General.

WEST POINT SUPERINTENDENT

The importance of completing the high school is greater this year than ever before for the great majority of boys; only the most urgent conditions should withdraw any boy from school. In justice to the Government as well as to themselves they should finish their courses.

The public defense when necessary is the paramount duty of every citizen in the country; each should be prepared and ready to do his part and the majority of high school boys can best make this preparation under present circumstances by finishing their courses, while at the same time informing themselves, as fully as possible, of current events, and when possible learning some of the elementary duties of the soldier.

GREAT BRITAIN'S ENORMOUS GRAIN WASTE

The American Issue for August 25 presents the following article and with it two pictures, comparing the amount of grain used by the United Kingdom for distillation of liquor during the war. The first picture shows the great pyramid of Egypt, measuring eighty million cubic feet, while the next shows two larger pyramids of grain totaling one hundred and eighty million cubic feet, which represent the food destroyed in making liquor since the war began.

The article follows:

"Great Britain is face to face with the great liquor traffic problem, the same as America, and earnest publicists there as well as here are urging the extinction of the traffic as a war food conservation measure. An effective illustration of the extent to which food is being sacrificed in the United Kingdom in order that the manufacture of beer, ale and hard liquors may be continued, was put forth in a pamphlet recently by Arthur Mee. The title of the pamphlet was "The Fiddlers," and Mr. Mee's statement concerning the sacrifice of food for drink was as follows:

"THE WAR-WORK OF THE FOOD DESTROYERS

"There are hundreds of great food destructors in the United Kingdom. The man-power at their service, spread over our breweries and distilleries, numbers hundreds of thousands of men; their capital is hundreds of millions. This is a summary of the work they did in the first 1,000 days of the war:

"They sacrificed 4,400,000 tons of grain and 340,000 tons of sugar, enough to ration the whole United Kingdom with bread for 43 weeks and sugar for 33 weeks.

"They took from every kitchen cupboard in the land 600 pounds of bread and 76 pounds of sugar.

"They destroyed bread and sugar to last every child under fifteen for every day of the war.

"They took from the pockets of our people £500,000,000.

"They used up labor and transport for lifting over 50,000,000 tons. By sea they used up 60 ships of 5,000 tons; by rail their raw materials would fill 950,000 wagons, and make a train 3,500 miles long; and their barrels of beer alone would fill 4,500,000 wagons.

"THE FOOD BEING DESTROYED NOW

"The food shortage came in sight at the beginning of 1917; and in the first four months of the year 400,000 tons of grain were destroyed for alcohol.

"There are in bond 156,000,000 gallons of spirits, all of which could be used for munitions, but the government allows it to be hoarded up for 1921, and makes new alcohol by destroying food.

"The government has therefore been destroying food to save distillers' stocks, which it should commandeer.

"The total destruction of food in brewing and distilling is at least 1,800 tons of grain and over 100 tons of sugar a day.

"The total destruction of bread equals 6,000,000 quarter loaves a week.

"Brewers' sugar is good, pure sugar wherever color does not matter, but we do not count distillers' sugar in this book, as it is very inferior. We count barley at 60 per cent of value, and maize at 80 per cent. At that rate this year's food destruction for alcohol will equal seven weeks' bread rations and four weeks' sugar rations for the whole United Kingdom.

"It would feed all London for over 40 weeks.

"We have seven critical weeks in this summer, and this year's destruction of food would carry us through.

"Beer alone is taking 10 pounds of sugar a year from every kitchen cupboard, and an ounce of sugar from every soldier.

"That is what drink is doing at this moment with the shadow of famine creeping on.

"He that withholdeth the corn the people shall curse him.—Proverbs."

Great Britain is calling upon the United States for grain for food. Our Government is urging a stricter economy in the interest of grain conservation. A special appeal to save has been made to the housewives by the president. And in the meantime our own brewers continue to waste the precious grain by the millions of bushels.

We are saving for them. Shall we also save for the English brewer?

How long?

"RYE FOR SWINE"

The wisdom of the Word of Wisdom given by revelation to the church in 1833 is being made more and more apparent as time passes. Among other things the revelation tells to use "rye for the fowls, and for swine, and for all beasts of the field." In The Holden Progress (published at Holden, Missouri), F. A. Gougler, county agricultural agent, contributes this:

"SHALL I FEED MY RYE?"

"The above question was asked the county agent by a man who has considerable rye on hands and was offered only $1.50 per bushel on the local market. Others may be thinking about this same question. Extensive trials at Copenhagen (Denmark) experiment station showed that rye ranks a little below corn and about equal to barley meal as a feed for swine. At the Nebraska station it was found that 8.6 per cent more soaked whole rye than whole soaked wheat was required for 100 pounds gain. Coburn recommends feeding ground rye as a thin slop, as dry rye meal forms a sticky paste in the pig's throat on which he is liable to choke. Unless the price of rye increases there is no question but rye is cheaper than corn at the present price."

While you stand deliberating which book your son shall read first, another boy has read both.—Doctor Johnson.

Be always displeased at what thou art, if thou desire to attain to what thou art not; for where thou hast pleased thyself, there thou abidest.—Quarles.

They that deny a God destroy man's nobility; for certainly man is of kin to the beasts by his body; and, if he be not of kin to God by his spirit, he is a base and ignoble creature.—Bacon.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Price of the Wedding Garment

It is generally conceded that in Bible language the "wedding garment" represents the adornment of character necessary for those who will be allowed a place at the marriage feast of the Son of God. All Christians regard this event as the culmination of a life devoted to the Master's service. Therefore, a consideration of the requisites necessary to acquire this wedding garment—in other words, the price that must be paid for it—is important.

We have another idea of the future bliss of the righteous set forth in the request made to the Master by the two sons of Zebedee, who asked to sit, one on his right and the other on his left when he should come to his throne. The reply of the Lord is significant, and supplies us with material for serious consideration, throwing light on this subject: "Ye know not what ye ask." (Mark 10: 18; Matthew 21: 22.) Stopping a moment here to analyze the reply thus far, may we not recognize that a like situation exists in Christ's would-be followers of to-day, when they pray "and at last, save me in thy kingdom"? Are they aware of what they are asking, or what the request carries with it in the way of personal obligation on their parts? Are they as willing to undertake to pay the price of this "salvation" as they are to accept the desired reward? In commercial relationships no honest man expects to get something for nothing; when the price asked is legitimate and he gets full "value received," can he consistently complain of the transaction? A complaint under such circumstances would indicate on his part an unreasonable resentment of just conditions. Should we not be as honorable in this spiritual transaction?

Considering our Savior's further reply we note he asks: "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" They replied, "We are able." Do not Christians, nowadays, express the same when they sing "Jesus, I my cross have taken, all to leave, and follow thee"? And do they not as often, judging from their murmurings, seem to think they should only suffer for their own personal transgressions? We read of the Savior's "cup," "Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." If He, the sinless one, suffered, and that for the guilty, must not Saints also suffer for their guilty fellow men?

The full significance of the reality of the "cup" and the "baptism" which typify the suffering, the trials, and the regeneration incidental to discipleship, can only come with their actual experience, tragedy resulting only when the "speech-disciple" chafes under, complains of, or openly or inwardly resents thus paying a portion of the price of the wedding garment, or sipping a little at the cup! By this chafing, complaining or resentment, he displays his misconception of this principle of Christianity, arguing, "What have I done to merit sorrow or suffering?" Rather should he learn the lesson which James must have learned before he could write, "Brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers afflictions!"

While it can hardly be expected that we will rejoice as much in tribulation as in bliss, does it not appeal to you as true that to murmur or complain is either an evidence of unwillingness to pay the price of the wedding garment or a very poor conception of the gospel plan? When we make the decision to follow Christ, and covenant to do so, should we not carefully consider the pathway to be trodden? The way he went was an upward path in the development of the principle of love until, since we have no record that he suffered physically, we understand the pain and sorrow he suffered were for the sins of the world, his love being so great that it caused him to weep over Jerusalem, and to sweat drops of blood, his intense grief culminating, as many believe, in his death on the cross.

While suffering like his may not be our "cup," it surely points us to the fact that in no other way but a great heart concern for the welfare of our fellow creatures lies true development, and in no other channel can we claim real discipleship nor expect to work out our salvation. Three of Christ's disciples on this continent reached a high plane of development in this principle of love, so that they "tarry and minister." Is it not possible for us? Can we hope to "pay the price" with only selfishness and self-interest in our hearts? No, we must acquire this love, this interest in our fellow men which makes their trials ours, their suffering ours, their struggles ours; thus it becomes possible for us to share the "cup" with Christ, to tread where he trod, to serve where he ministered. This development begins with our being "baptized with Christ" our regeneration, if you please; but we find the "path" leads upward through deeds befitting good Samaritans, teachers, shepherds, servants and masters, until that plane reached by Enoch and his city is attained, and can, having acquired the wedding garments and paid for it in full, both weep with the heavens and rejoice at the marriage of the Lamb!

A third scene of retribution for our earthly lives is set forth in Matthew 26: 31-46 and we wonder if the goats referred to could possibly be Saints of our day who may have done mighty works and yet lost the true spirit of unselfish service. Remember these were expecting a "well done" but is it possible they always kept this reward before them as an incentive for the lives they had to live to get the power to do these wonderful works of miracles, etc?

Saints, let's hide the future crown from view and establish the welfare of our brother as our real goal.

Feeding the Growing Child During the Second Year

(The first of a series of articles on the care of young children sent out by the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington.)

Much of the illness and suffering among babies commonly attributed to the "second summer" or to teething is actually due to errors in feeding. The baby's delicate digestive mechanism, accustomed to dealing only with milk, cannot all at once undertake the task of adjustment to a varied diet of solid foods, but must be strengthened by the gradual addition of new foods until the organs are trained to more complicated operations. The safe rule for feeding the baby is to add but one new food at a time to his dietary; to watch carefully the effect of each one and to withdraw it and return to the simpler diet at the first sign of trouble. These rules are particularly important in summer, when a baby is more readily upset.

The following list shows the day's meals for a baby in his second year:

- 7 a. m. Milk, zwieback, toast, or dried bread.
 - 9 a. m. Orange juice.
 - 10 a. m. Cereal, cup of milk.
 - 2 p. m. Broth, meat, vegetable, stale bread, baked apple.
 - 6 p. m. Cereal, milk, toast or bread.
 - 10 p. m. Milk (may be omitted).
- Milk.—At this time the baby should be taking about one quart in twenty-four hours; part of this may be poured over the cereal.

Cereals.—Oatmeal should be cooked three hours, with a little salt in the water. It should be served without sugar, or with a very little only. The lighter cereals should be cooked at least an hour.

Breads.—Bread for young children must have been thoroughly baked and should be quite dry when used, that is at least two days old. Tender toast is made by cutting thin slices from such a loaf and allowing them to dry still more, then toasting them to a delicate brown over a quick fire. Toast thus made is crisp all the way through and may be used in many ways. Many children will like to eat it broken into bits in broth or milk. Hot breads and biscuits, griddle-cakes, and muffins are not suitable for young children.

Fruit.—The child may have a small portion of baked apple or prunes once a day in addition to his morning feeding of orange juice. The apple should be baked very tender, and all the skin, seeds, and hard parts should be removed. Prunes should be carefully washed, soaked all night, then cooked until very tender with very little sugar. A small portion of the strained pulp may be given instead of apple, and the juice may be used also.

Meat.—The child may have a tablespoonful of scraped meat, or a soft boiled or coddled egg once a day. Beef, broiled, boiled, or roasted, the tender part of a lamb chop, or the delicate meat of chicken or fish may be used. All meat should be scraped or minced very fine, as no child of this age can be trusted to chew it properly.

Vegetables.—A small portion of some properly cooked green vegetable like spinach or tender string beans may be given. Such vegetables should be fresh. They should be cooked, then drained and mashed or strained through a colander.

soon it will be well filled again by a large number already admitted.

We trust that friends of the home will continue their generous support and many new ones be enlisted in the good work. We acknowledge with gratitude the service of those who have worked for the home in Lamoni and elsewhere, and are glad to note the increasing number of Auxiliary societies, including Oriole circles, who are contributing money and other aid to the home. May the time be not far distant when its chief support shall come from the auxiliary.

REPORT OF MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES FOR CHILDREN'S HOME

We, the members of the board of trustees for the Children's Home, nominated by the Woman's Auxiliary beg leave to report as follows:

We have acted with the other trustees in the transaction of all business coming before the board. In addition we have served upon various committees.

The clothing committee is composed of the three sisters, M. B. Nicholson, chairman, L. L. Resseguie, and C. B. Stebbins. The work of this committee includes the receiving and disinfecting of all clothing sent to the home, the care of goods in the storehouse, the purchase of new clothing when needed, and the preparation of work for societies in Lamoni who sew for the home. A large part of this latter work consists in the making over of clothing donated.

The education committee is composed of F. M. McDowell, Sister Resseguie and Sister Stebbins. The duties of this committee are to look after matters pertaining to the attendance and standing of the children at school, the building up of a library for the home and other matters affecting the intellectual development of the children.

For a time the committee known as the admission and dismission committee was discontinued and the work of admitting and sending out children was attended to by the entire board. Last fall a new committee was appointed for this purpose which is composed of Richard Lambert, Brother McDowell and Sister Stebbins.

Fewer children have been cared for at the home during the past winter than at any time since its opening, homes having been found for the majority of those who had entered. But

LETTER DEPARTMENT

War Views

Please allow me to express my views in regard to patriotism. I do not agree with our president in believing that we should be loyal, or patriotic, to the government in which we reside, regardless of whether that government is right or wrong. If our forefathers had remained loyal to England, had been believers in patriotism as represented to us to-day, we would never have become a free and independent Nation. We should be loyal to the principles of liberty, but not to government arrayed against liberty.

Of course if we were absolutely forced to fight in support of such a government, then I believe the Lord would not hold us responsible, but would hold that government responsible.

Some of our people quote the Doctrine and Covenants where it says: "He that keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the laws of the land," in support of the principles of loyalty to our Government, right or wrong.

Now Daniel broke certain laws as to whom he should worship. Our parents broke the laws of the king of England; both received the sanction of God in so doing. So breaking the laws of the land must evidently mean laws of the people, not laws of kings such as Nebuchadnezzar, the Kaiser, king of England; neither a corrupt Senate, that has passed laws in regard to this draft and sending our State troops to Europe, which are unconstitutional, hence a violation of the laws of our land.

Now if we abide by the Constitution, or law of the land, we cannot sanction some other laws that have been passed from time to time.

So I believe we as a people should heed the word of God in the Doctrine and Covenants, where we are commanded to denounce war, unless that war is in self-defense. We are told in Doctrine and Covenants to hoist the white flag twice, then if our enemies will fight us anyway we are permitted to defend ourselves, but not until we have done all within our power to avoid war. Are we permitted to participate in war? Doing all within our power would mean of course without surrendering our liberty, etc.

One brother writing in the Unity says: "We think we can see by an eye of faith, that our liberties are in danger." He quotes Nephi in the Book of Mormon, where the Nephites were commanded to defend themselves. I ask, have we been commanded by the Lord to defend ourselves against Germany? When we only imagine we are in danger by an eye of faith. Now we may be justified in entering this war. I am frank to admit that I do not know. But one thing I am certain of is, the Lord will not hallow or sanctify our service because we fight through patriotism if we are in the wrong.

Southern California

A very happy lot of young people began gathering at Convention Park, Hermosa Beach, about eighteen miles from Los Angeles, California, Thursday, August 2, in preparation for the district conventions of the Religio and Sunday school, and the conference, which are held semiannually. As early as some of us reached the ground we found others had preceded us, looking after our welfare, in getting the camp in order. Among those who were conspicuous in this direction was Brother J. W. Rushton, whom we first saw with a big ten-pound sledge, driving tent pins; G. E. Harrington, setting up tents, with others whom we do not now recall all working under the direction of Brother Peter Kaufmann, who is always on deck when there is good hard work to be done. His earnest zeal, good nature, and fitness otherwise made him the choice of his fellow workers in the Sunday school for district superintendent when the convention got under way.

On other parts of the ground we found Brother N. Carmichael, Nelson Van Fleet and C. M. Slater getting the seats arranged in the big audience tent, and by night of that day all was ready for the opening session of the Religio, which was held at ten o'clock Friday morning, August 3. Reports were encouraging except on normal work, which needs to be revived. Brother Balchen being unable to serve further as president, Brother Gimlet of Los Angeles was chosen to succeed him.

The Sunday school convention met at 2 p. m. The work of this department has been actively pushed, and reports were satisfactory.

Saturday morning at ten o'clock the conference sessions began. Reports showed progress, and the outlook for the future hopeful. The officials of the district were sustained for the ensuing six months. Another session was held Monday afternoon. At the close of the business session Saturday evening the reunion for 1917 was formally launched, the conference officers being placed in charge. A very enjoyable and profitable time was had in the days that followed to the end of the reunion.

A request was made by the young people for a prayer meeting to be held Sunday morning at six o'clock, which was readily granted and Brother T. W. Williams placed in charge. Twenty-five were present, and there were twenty-five testimonies, the Holy Spirit being present in a very marked degree, making it an inspiring experience which all who were present greatly enjoyed. Family prayer followed this meeting, the Saints gathering there at 6.45. A hymn, scripture reading and prayer by the one in charge of the gathering followed and was the order every morning during the reunion; it was a very consecrating opening for the day's services. At seven o'clock breakfast was served in the cafeteria, at eight the study hour with Brother Rushton teacher, Mark's child training as the textbook, was largely attended, and interesting discussions were held. At nine the prayer meeting, and at 10.45 preaching or auxiliary work, and from two to 3.30 auxiliary work in different departments usually occupied the afternoons. On Sunday morning at eight, prayer services, followed by the Sunday school services. Communion was observed the first Sunday morning.

The presence of Sisters Audentia Anderson, and Dora Glines, field worker for the auxiliary, added much to the pleasure and profit of the reunion, and their work was very helpful, Sister Anderson being "drafted" into service as chorister in addition to her auxiliary work. The "glad hand" was also extended to Sister Ruby Jackson-Hitch, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, especially by the "Missourians" present, of which there were several, and when later Brother and Sister Joseph Mather from Independence, came, we felt that the "Central State" was well represented.

Sunday afternoon Bishop's Agent R. T. Cooper had the hour and a half, and we were reminded of Joshua's spies when they came back from Canaan, when we saw him coming in the tent with his big account book, which required two men to handle it comfortably. A very interesting and instructive discourse followed, at the end of which Brother Cooper opened his question box which had been on the stand all week, and answered the queries propounded by various individuals.

Our Doctor William Gibson, now ninety-six years old, was on the ground for a few days, but he was not well, and went home after three or four days association with old friends. Sister Emma Burton was with us the whole time and is quite active, and in good health, which we were all glad to see. Dips in the ocean began at five in the morning and ended about sundown, Neptune seemed to resent the intrusion quite often and the way he tossed some of us about at times was laughable to those on shore, but the victims thought he might have been a bit more moderate. A very busy fish came in collision with Brother Harrington one morning, and as a consequence he was quite lame for a couple of days; no one knows how the fish felt.

Eight were baptized, one the wife of Brother Oliver C. White, son of Brother D. C. White of Lamoni. There was much rejoicing when she decided to come with us. A cousin of Brother G. H. Wixom, also decided to follow the Lord and was one of those baptized. Brother T. W. Williams was the administrator in all the baptisms. The ordination of Brother R. T. Cooper as high priest was attended to Sunday evening, Brothers Rushton, Harrington and Goodrich officiating.

The cafeteria under the management of Brother Backer of Los Angeles and his able assistants, was a decided success. Meals were well served, and the variety appetizing, at an average price throughout of twenty-two cents each. There were about 1,800 meals served. All together the reunion was a grand success, and we all look forward to the reunion of 1918 at the same place.

Our next conference and conventions will meet with the Santa Ana Saints.

The Saints were all pleased to have President Elbert A. Smith with them for a few days, and to hear his voice in testimony again. He is gaining, but less speedily than we all could wish. He said he would hail the day when he could get into the harness again. Sister Smith was not able to come, but we learn is convalescing favorably, and it is hoped she will soon be active again. The absence of Brother N. T.

Chapman and family was much regretted, he having been called to Iowa on account of the illness and death of his mother. He is a very efficient and much esteemed worker in this district.

W. H. GARRETT.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA, 1061 Esperanza Avenue.

Independence Stake

Our brethren Paul Tower and Eugene Closson who have been appointed to positions in the ambulance corps enjoyed a fine reception at the residence of Brother and Sister Brocaw, on July 31.

The classes engaged in educational studies will resume their studies the latter part of September.

The services are well attended, and the Woman's Auxiliary and problems meetings which have been held were of an unusually instructive character.

The people from here were compelled to reach their places of employment in Kansas City by auto service during the strike, but since the street car company and the men have made an agreement service has been resumed.

At the recent meeting on the temple lot, Brother W. W. Smith, though saddened because of the affliction of his little son, spoke consoling words to the two thousand present on the subject, "I am the resurrection and the life," and in the deep shadows of twilight among the leafy trees and in the fading yet golden glow of the setting sun, our beloved brother expatiated on the glorious career of Christ. It was an impressive sermon and at the close the Saints sang together in thanksgiving.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

From Here and There

Elder Samuel Twombly recently visited Topeka, Kansas, a correspondent there tells us. An added interest is shown in the midweek prayer service in attendance and spirituality.

Elder A. C. Barmore tells us he is having good attendance at his meetings at Richmond, Oregon. It is the first time our faith has been presented there. The people are very friendly.

Any of our lads in the Navy and on shipboard are asked to correspond with Brother Bernard Holland, on the South Carolina. Address him in care of the Postmaster, New York City.

Anonymous letters are surely most exasperating. We blame the people for sending them in and they blame us for not printing what is sent nor writing about the matter, but we refuse to print letters which are not signed, or at least an indication given as to whom they are from.

The youngest son of Brother and Sister Walter W. Smith of Independence fell ill on the 8th and is still in bed. Physicians have pronounced it infantile paralysis and they are now in quarantine. He is not suffering a great deal and although one leg cannot be moved, it is believed its action may be restored. Administrations have been comforting. They have much faith, yet ask the prayers of the Saints in their behalf.

Brother J. L. Winter, of Kansas City, Kansas, said he could dispose of considerable church literature, and we put in a request in these columns to get him some. He now writes he will have to hire a storeroom to take care of what he has already received. He has over fifteen hundred papers, pamphlets, and tracts. He has sent out over two hundred and will dispose of the rest, but he says please don't send any more.

The Sunday school at Burlington, North Dakota, recently held a pleasant and profitable open-air meeting in the grove on the farm of Brother and Sister M. D. Graham. About two hundred were in attendance. The North Prairie school at this place has an enrollment of fifty-six, only nine of them being Latter Day Saints. The speakers were Elders William Sparling and Warren McElwain. Elder William Shakespeare was in charge of the singing. The very fine program reflected much credit on the teachers who had charge of the preparation. Three were baptized. The usual picnic dinner was a much appreciated feature. Lansford, Logan, and Minot were represented.

AMHERST, NOVA SCOTIA, August 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: Nearly two years have elapsed since I have contributed to your columns, and not wanting to play the parasite any longer, will make a contribution. Have been hoping others may report our work at Jonesport, but like other places, the good Saints there are of the extremely willing kind—willing to have the preacher toot his own horn and then tell about it. However, we love the Jonesporters just the same, and my four years association with them has been fraught with many rich and profitable experiences.

Going back to the opening of our new church in June, 1916, will say it was a grand affair. With remarkable energy and willing service they completed one of the finest churches we have in the East, most beautifully decorated by an expert along his line. The building will accommodate about five hundred, and many times since we have had it filled to its capacity. It is seated with beautiful hardwood pews, costing full value twelve hundred dollars, but through C. M. Rogers, leading merchant of Bangor, great friend of the church, got them at considerable less. He also saved us several hundred dollars on the heating system. And with such handy men as Brother Louis Hinkley, W. C. Smith, Newman Wilson and Sherman Woodward the installing of them did not cost much.

The town band furnished some good music, also the choir under the energetic leadership of our leader, Herbert Rogers. The writer had the privilege of preaching the first sermon. Brother I. M. Smith offered the consecration prayer, which will never be forgotten by those who heard. The building and furnishings at prevailing prices would cost ten thousand dollars, and we owe less than one thousand dollars, most of it met by the sisters who take advantage of every opportunity. We celebrated the Fourth of July, and served dinner and supper in the commodious basement. The last two Fourths cleared about four hundred dollars. The men's Bible class have contributed substantially. At a supper and can opening we cleared two hundred dollars. The children, not the least among us, by sales of candy, etc., purchased a most handsome pulpit set costing two hundred and forty dollars. They are now raising money for a fine piano placed in the vestry last fall. Sister Sophia Dobbins has them in charge and they love to work for her. So by coordinating all the forces of a branch, wonders can be worked. Not least among our busy workers is Sister Eliza Walker, who has seen the branch raise from a few struggling sisters to a branch of about three hundred members. She is well known to the old elders. Her earnest testimony is an inspiration to all of us.

Jonesport opened a beautiful library in the center of town. An ornament it is indeed. I made the opening and closing prayer and delivered an address. We have eleven volumes of our church books gracing its shelves. I also made the dedicatory prayer.

Our preachers are in demand in this place and vicinity on all public occasions. It fell to my lot to deliver a memorial address Decoration Day; also to make the address at the flag raising the Fourth of July. A beautiful ceremony indeed. It was in charge of the Congregational minister, Reverend Ward. About two thousand attended.

For the first time the baccalaureate services were held in our church building by vote of the graduating class. A special musical program was arranged and from all accounts the preacher made a "hit." The most prominent people of the place were in attendance.

I have been vice president of the parent-teacher association, an organization which every community should have. It has done much good for us. I believe it has been the principal element in getting Jonesport a new high school building. By my connection with this association it has placed me next to the best people of the place. We had the last meeting in our church and a very pleasant time was had.

Brother U. W. Greene was with us in March for two weeks. He gave us three or four lectures from his slides. Good interest was manifested all through. The big church was filled to its capacity. Eight were baptized, among them my eldest son. Brother Greene was with us again in June a few days and baptized one.

According to the postconference appointment I came to Nova Scotia on July 14. I attended their conference at River Phillip. Held a few meetings and from there went to Williamsdale. Preached ten times there. About all that remains of the branch there is Brother and Sister Leander Johnson. We have a beautiful little chapel there, but not used very much. It is sad to see a Latter Day Saint church where once a happy group of Saints met, and where God's Spirit once loved to linger, now still and silent.

From there I went to South Rawdon and held ten preaching services and one sacrament meeting. Only six Saints there, but they are true and faithful. When an elder leaves them they do more than give you a glad but empty hand and say success to you. They have something there to help make the work a success. I truly appreciate their generosity. It proved their appreciation of our work as well as the relief it gave the preacher. While there I baptized Mr. Walter Hawley, a fine man, who studied this work for a long time. It was this house, then his father's, where Brother Burton opened up the work in Nova Scotia nearly thirty-five years ago. Seed sown then is still bearing fruit. Walter has a great support in Mattie, his devoted wife. I made me a home with Brother William Wood and wife, who treated me very kindly.

This is a hard field to interest people in the gospel. They seem to be thoroughly asleep in spiritual things. The Devil has surely lulled them to sleep in carnal security. I recommend the sending of Brother E. E. Long back here again. I presume he has recovered from his homesickness by this time.

I am here holding tent meetings to small but interested congregations. A heavy windstorm just before meeting Friday evening blew the tent down. The power of the prince of the air seems to be against us. Brother Boyd Johnson is standing by us nobly. He with his good wife are surely doing their part in trying to get the message before their neighbors. A few more like them in old Nova Scotia would be a great thing for the work.

We expect to close here next week and return to Jonesport. Back up and return the family westward. Wife has been unable to stand the heavy fogs along the coast of Maine.

During my absence Brother J. F. Sheehy has been holding down the pulpit and from all reports will soon be able to take care of a man's job.

I intended to close tent meetings last night, but interest seemed so good we will hold a few nights longer.

I am encouraged over the industrial advancement Zion is making. Long years of theory have at last turned to lines of practice. Surely we are nearing the time indicated in the Doctrine and Covenants: "He who will not take up his sword against his neighbor must flee to Zion for safety." Better to go prepared than by flight.

Yours in the conflict,

F. J. EBELING.

SALEM, MISSOURI, August 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: I want to write a few lines to let your readers know of the good services of Brother Henry Sparling. He came here last month and his were the first true gospel sermons the people here ever heard. A great many seemed interested and want to hear more.

There has been some talk that we were just Utah people, but that we denied it merely to deceive the people. Brother Sparling preached eighteen sermons, with a good audience each time, considering that it rained several times. There are some I think will be ready for baptism when they hear a little more.

When I read last week's HERALD I was glad to see that some of the sisters think as Saints we should dress plainer and sacrifice a great deal of pride for the good of the work. I have been told that in some of the large branches the Saints were almost like the people of the world in pride and indifference to the poorer Saints. As individuals we should guard against such and consecrate our surplus to the church. Not all we can spare over the millions, but all over our just needs. If we could all do this we would not need to worry about the church debt; it would take care of itself.

I so often think of Brother Hubert Case and family and A. M. Chase and family, in fact all of the Saints that I have known. I would love to see them again. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may have strength to do the things that are pleasing to our heavenly Father.

Your sister,

MRS. G. M. ROUTH.

MUNSON, FLORIDA, August 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: The HERALD comes regularly and is too good to do without. For instance in the issue of August 8, Sister Effie J. Denton seems to favor the moral and purity side to the detriment of the temporal side, and Brother Charles A. Parkin so beautifully sets forth both the idea of being pure, and paying tithes also. How broad and grand are the opportunities for the Saints to exemplify their faith by living pure and clean lives, being good, and kind to all, assisting the poor, and then not forgetting to do all they can to clear the church debt, pay tithing, make consecrations over and above these tithes, and stand ready to give all when the proper times arrive.

We are isolated from our church here at Munson, and have ample opportunity to see many of the mistakes of our Protestant friends. In their preaching they carry us back to the old scenes at Jerusalem, and rehearse the crucifixion. They tell us that any church will do if we are pure and good at heart. They claim no especial merit for any of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, not even baptism. They teach that the world is going on in its present state for thousands of years, and never dwell upon the second coming of Christ. The fact is they have crucified Christ, and resurrected him, but they are not willing for him to come back. They claim to have the Holy Ghost while they do not claim to have any of the signs that were to follow.

There is an enthusiasm born of a conviction of right that is too often taken for the Holy Ghost. To illustrate: Two laborers are paid off at the same counter. One receives a genuine bill, the other a counterfeit. They trudge on toward their homes, each thinking of the good things his money will buy for his family. Both are happy, both are enthusiastic. When they arrive at the store, buy their goods and produce their bills to pay for them, the counterfeit bill is detected and condemned. Thus will all counterfeit religions be condemned at the judgment bar of God in the last and great day.

Brethren, the last scenes are being played. Each actor is doing his part. Let us, as the citizens of the kingdom of God, cease to love our money so well that we can't pay the Lord his part.

On the night of the first visit the angel made to Joseph Smith, he told him that in this generation peace would be taken from the earth, or words to that effect, and in the first revelation in Doctrine and Covenants we are told the same thing.

In section one, we are told the Lord is angry with the people, and that his sword would soon fall upon the inhabitants of the world.

In section four, we are told again the Lord is angry with the people, and he would send forth a desolating scourge among them. This might be the scourge of war. Remember faith and works are what is required of us. Who among the world believe? None. Who among the Latter Day Saints believe strong enough to do their whole duty and be saved? Let us see.

Your colaborer,

FREMONT, NEBRASKA, August 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have lived in Fremont since I became a member of the church, baptized November 2, 1909, and have been isolated until last February, when we found a few Saints located here and after getting a few more members interested, organized a Sunday school. On April 29, Brother W. E. Stoff, district superintendent, came up from Omaha and instructed us in the work, but on account of the death of Brother James Simpson, who was buried on May 6 we did not hold Sunday school until the 13th and had twenty-seven in attendance, but have increased in number to fifty-four since that time.

Our meetings are held in Hub Hall, 332 North Main Street, at 2.30 p. m., preaching at 3.30 p. m., and have had Brother Hubert Case, J. M. Baker, Roy Parker, Carl T. Self, W. E. Stoff, M. A. Peterson and J. S. McDonald preach for us while others from Omaha have assisted and Brother Roland Scott, Sister Kelley and others have assisted us with splendid solo and quartet singing.

On July 7, Sister James C. Johnson, who has been a co-worker with us from the beginning, called us by phone, stating that Jennie Dvorak, her niece from Herrick, South Dakota, who was visiting with her at that time wanted to be baptized. So we on the following day arranged after preaching services to go to the Platte River, one and a half miles from town and baptize. When all was in readiness we found there were six that were ready for baptism.

We had arranged earlier in the day with Brother Carl Self, district president of our Northeastern Nebraska District, to come up from Omaha to confirm (as we hold only the lesser priesthood), and through a misunderstanding he came to the hall and waited how patiently you will have to ask Carl himself, until 6.30 p. m., when we got back from the river and got in touch with him, informing him where he could find the candidates as it was time for us to take up our daily vocation and he confirmed and left on the 8.20 p. m. train for Omaha.

On August 1 we held a Sunday school picnic at Riverside Park and there were fifty-six of us boys and girls there and we had some picnic too, and at the conclusion we led four more precious souls into the waters of baptism. Brethren Carl T. Self and W. E. Stoff came up from Omaha and confirmed. Since then we have baptized four. So the work goes on here, and there are others to follow. We ask that the Saints breathe a prayer that God may continue to bless with his Spirit till all of our one hundred and six chairs in the excellent hall we have are filled. Yours in gospel bonds, 251 Platte Avenue. OTIS GARDNER.

DELAVAN LAKE, WISCONSIN, August 18, 1917.

Editors Herald: Please accept of my heartfelt thanks for the articles that are being published in the church papers, by I. N. White, in Unity, and by Brother Burgess in the HERALD, and now, not least but last, in the Ensign by Brother McKim, in the issue for August 16. We need more of them on this war question.

If our people don't know where this church stands on this war question, let them learn, not single out our noble President F. M. Smith and say he believes in war. It has made my heart ache to hear it. It is bad enough to find fault with the president of our country. But when those that should be children of the light, woefully misrepresent the president of our church they surely must be in the dark.

It was a grand article a few weeks back by Brother Koehler, in the Ensign on "Loyalty." May we as Saints show it in our lives, and to our country. We feel to praise God for such a man as we have at the head of the church. And when this frightful war is over, maybe some of the critics in reading the history of the barbarous things committed by the German autocracy, backed by Prussianism, will get their eyes opened and praise the president of our Nation, and repent and apologize to the president of the church. God speed the day.

Sincerely your brother for justice, rights and freedom,

F. M. BALL.

GULLIVER, MICHIGAN, August 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are the only branch in northern Michigan, and have a membership of seventy. Of these, twenty-seven are living close enough to attend the meetings, while the others are isolated in different places in this north country.

Our branch president is Elder Matthew Brearley. We hold Sunday school, Sunday prayer service, preaching Sunday evenings, and Religio on Friday evenings. We meet in a little hall as we have not felt able to build a church building.

Sister Brearley was the first Saint here, but in twenty years the work has been built up. Her husband, Brother Matthew Brearley, followed through her sincerity and the efforts of some of the elders, and some others joined also at that time. A union Sunday school was organized and later when Brother Byrne S. Lambkin was here with his family the branch was organized and the Sunday school put under our own officers.

J. J. Cornish and others have visited us and we have seen the work advance steadily, giving us hope for the future. We are seeking to spread the gospel among our neighbors and desire that we may have God's help. Our branch is isolated from others but we send one or more delegates each year to the district conference and so keep in touch with the rest. Some of our district missionaries visit us each year. Our love is for the good of this work.

Your brother in bonds,

HARVEY VAN DUSEN.

Decision is the dash that makes Jack master of one trade.

port, Corea, Little Deer Isle, Mountainville, and Stonington. He has been well received and is much encouraged with the outlook. He will visit Wheeling, West Virginia, and Fayette City, Pennsylvania, where he may dedicate church edifices. It is expected he will return to Independence about September 11.

On Their Way to the Islands

Brother Robert T. Brown and wife, of Merlin, Ontario, stopped a few days at the Lamoni Stake reunion, on their way to Papeete, Tahiti, headquarters of the South Sea Island Mission, in which mission they will labor. We are sure the American missionaries and their wives will heartily welcome them and that the native Saints will be well pleased with these young soldiers in the cause of Christ. It is an important mission and those laboring in it have been highly blessed of the Lord, yet it takes considerable sacrifice to accept a mission to a foreign land for three or four years, possibly longer. May God bless them as he has others who have thus gone.

September "Autumn Leaves"

Every young person should read the Autumn Leaves. In addition to the Young Women's and Sunday School Departments and the Religio's Arena, an excellent article on "the violin," with a brief history of the great violin makers appears in the September Leaves. This is probably the beginning of articles of special interest to our musicians. In this issue appears the first prize story, "A test of mettle"; a short life story—"Defending the cause"; "How editors write," as a feature of the Periscope, but it is only one feature of that vital department. The "Sailing of the *Mau*i" gives a brief word picture of the great steamer leaving Hawaii, while many other good things are scattered through its forty-eight closely printed pages, including an editorial by Elbert A. Smith.

Chief Three Fingers Passes

On August 12 a highly respected brother passed to his reward, Chief Three Fingers, of the Cheyenne tribe, who resided near Kingfisher, Oklahoma. He was baptized by Elder Hubert Case at the same time as Leonard Tyler. Both have now passed away. He was ordained an elder and was a noble man, characterized by Brother Case as "of the mild, kind, loving type, a rare specimen of the older men of the blanket Indians." He, with Philip Cook, Leah Cook, and Lulu Bear Shield, were in attendance at the General Conference at Lamoni in 1913. The Oklahoma City Times speaks of him very highly, saying that he always figured in the affairs of government between the United States and his tribe, always trying to lead his people in the way of peace and business pursuits. They say he was reputed to be one of the wealthiest Indians of the tribe. The funeral sermon was preached by Philip Cook, one of his tribesmen, and he asks the prayers of the Saints for the wife of the departed brother.

PROPHECY AND LEARNING

If Joseph Smith the Martyr accomplished any great work in his illiteracy, how did he educate himself, and to what extent? If what he did for the Lord was done wholly by the Lord's direction, compare his ability and education to the education of his grandson, Frederick M. Smith. "Our position as a church on education has been criticized by a minister of the so-called Church of Christ (non-progressive wing) because he says that we claim Joseph Smith received the visitation of angels, organized the church, and then appears an article in the HERALD by William Lewis in favor of education."

The answer to this should not be difficult to those who want to see. Joseph Smith was an unlearned boy when first the angel appeared to him. It has been declared, as we understand it, that he should be unlearned (Isaiah 29: 22).

The Lord has in the past used many educated or learned men; Moses, Joseph and Paul among others. Enoch is reported in some traditions to have been a great teacher of his day. Abraham has a similar reputation, even outside the biblical record. He had the means and time for research and thought. Yet the Lord has also called at times the unlearned and weak things of the earth.

Whether a man is learned or unlearned, what he does for the Lord must be done wholly at the Lord's direction. This does not mean that he goes into a trance and knows not what happens. It does mean that holy men of God speak as they are moved upon by the Spirit of God. (2 Peter 1: 21.) The Spirit of God inspires a man to do the work. It does not destroy or remove his understanding. The workings of the Spirit of God make for better preparation through study and also through prayer.

Even the fishermen called of Jesus became sufficiently learned, not only to preach and teach, but also to write and hand down to us such works as the gospel and epistle of John, the epistles of Peter, James and Jude. The Spirit of God enlightens the mind and encourages a man to study and to seek to understand the things of God with the intelligence God has given, and also by His Holy Spirit.

So as with others, with Joseph Smith the effect was that it caused him to study. We know that very early in the history of the church he established schools; among others, the school of the elders, and that he himself studied Hebrew including grammar and rhetoric, and doubtless such other studies as time would permit.

We do not claim ignorance as a prerequisite to divine inspiration. We do claim that a man must be humble, full of love and willing to assist.

We are not advised fully how far the education of Joseph Smith proceeded. From his writings we have every reason to believe that he became not only versed in the common branches, including rhetoric, but that he also studied Hebrew and all other subjects so far as time and strength permitted. He was thirty-eight years and five months old at the time of his decease. He had been for fourteen years at the head of the church. He had opportunity, and doubtless had utilized it for careful reading.

As we have indicated in the above, college work is not a prerequisite for service in the kingdom of God. A man may be learned in the knowledge of humanity, or he may be unlearned and still assist. President Frederick M. Smith has taken three college degrees. That fact alone does not mean that he is a prophet of God, or especially qualified for that office. The inspiration of God must determine that question. Unless the Spirit of God directs him he will fail in that work.

But the fact remains that he is not trusting in the arm of flesh, nor in his own wisdom, but is earnestly seeking divine direction. Many, especially of the young men of the priesthood, are coming to realize this keenly. A recent instance was in the meeting of the stake presidents and bishops at Independence on August 16.

On the other hand, his education does not prevent him, nor is it in any sense a detriment, but rather an advantage in his special work, conceding that he has and will have the inspiration of our heavenly Father. Since the Spirit teaches all men to study and to seek learning by faith and by study, as well as by prayer, a man should not be discredited because he has made an effort to develop the talents that our heavenly Father has given him for service. The fact that he has sought to develop his natural ability should be an advantage, when he is willing to consecrate that preparation to the service of God.

We do not claim that his grandfather, Joseph Smith, was continually inspired in all that he did and said. When the Spirit of God directed him he was a prophet of God. At other times, he was a man, though we believe a good moral man at all times. The Spirit of God does not direct a prophet in everything that he says and does, for a man may do much good of himself, and the purpose of the gospel is to develop humanity, that he may become like Him, our divine Master, Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

The article by William Lewis in the SAINTS' HERALD of January 17, 1917, accords with the above thought. He urges that our main reliance should not be placed upon education but upon inspiration, but yet appreciates the value of education. He states: "Paul knew there was danger in trusting too much in his own wisdom, notwithstanding he was highly educated." This is to repeat what has already been said. . . .

"All of the educated do not feel the need of inspiration nor seek for it, but all inspired men reach out for education, try to store the mind with knowledge, strive to become efficient in the service of the Master." S. A. B.

Christianity professes to hold the clew to all other religions, because it sets forth, not as symbol, but as the ultimate personal reality, one who is the Desire of all nations.—W. E. Orchard, D. D., in the Outlook for Religion.

Everybody ought to own books. A house without books has been well called a literary Sahara; and how many of them there are! We are a "reading people"; but nothing is easier to find than homes in which the furniture, the pictures, the ornaments—everything, is an object of greater care and expense than the library. Is it any wonder that their inmates, whatever their so-called wealth or comfort, are intellectual starvelings?—The Choice of Books.

SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS

We have received a letter or two and have heard some comment to the effect that spiritual manifestations are not acceptable by the church publications. Some are even frank enough to infer that education and the mental aspect are in danger of being exalted over the spiritual. This is indeed unfortunate, for the inspiration of the Spirit of God must be primary in our work.

As we have already suggested, a man may have much schooling, he may have little schooling, but he must be inspired of God if he is to work successfully for God. A man may possess little in means, or much in means, he may have received honors as men esteem honor, or may be unknown to fame; but he must be humble and full of love, else he cannot assist in this work. If fame, success, schooling, or preparation in any form cause him to lose the common touch, sympathy with humanity, or cause him to think more of himself than he ought, or to depend on education or training and not on God, then the loss is his, and it may be also the loss is a serious one to the church.

We must recognize clearly the workings of the Spirit of God, the spiritual gifts which are so plainly set forth in the law. The gift of wisdom, of knowledge, faith, the gift of healing, miracles, prophecies, tongues and the interpretation of tongues, and the discernment of spirits have been set in the church for a purpose. We do not question a manifestation on the basis of grammar, punctuation or spelling, nor on the basis of how well or poorly a man may be known to the church, except that we must recognize that those who are well known and occupy positions of importance in the priesthood of God not only carry more influence, but are of more interest to our readers.

Also, we must clearly recognize that there is a definite channel through which revelations to govern the church must come. And when these revelations come through the one whom God has appointed, it must pass, one by one, the quorums of the church, be tested by the word of God in humble prayer, and not having struck a snag in any quorum, is then presented to the whole church for our acceptance in General Conference. Other men may have the inspiration of our heavenly Father. Other minds may be enlightened according to their several offices and callings, concerning the work resting upon them before the church. But this is not a revelation to the church nor should it be placed with the other revelations which have been accepted by the church.

In directing the work in branch or district the word of the Lord should come through the recognized presiding officer. (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14.) The branch and district should keep this fact in mind. Prophecies may come through others. The call and direction of the work of the church in that locality rests with those who have been appointed in stake, district or branch. When it is presented by them we have the right to accept or reject, to test it by the word of God as we have in revelations given to the whole church.

The consideration of history, as well as the word of God, shows plainly that there are fictitious gifts. For this reason it belongs to the presiding elder, those whom God has chosen, to have the discerning of spirits. (Doctrine and Covenants 50: 7; 41: 7.) So-called prophecies have been given time and time again, often by some member, which plainly contradicted the word of God, and hence can hardly be considered to be inspired by the Spirit of God.

Manifestations have been given, as we recall in one instance, where a sister was speaking in prayer meeting and said how much she loved this work, more than her children, more than her husband, more than life itself, and continued in that strain for ten minutes. The meeting was adjourned immediately, the teacher approached her very gently and asked when it would be convenient for her to meet with him and a certain sister, and at once she flared up: "You can cut me off from the church. I won't speak to her. Cut me off from the church if you want to, but I won't have anything to do with her."

She actually proceeded to prefer charges before the president of the branch against the teacher because he had dared to ask her to speak to Sister _____. The president of the branch very kindly inquired as to the manner of the request, and when he had cleared it down to the fact that she had no objection to the teacher except the mere fact that she was asked to see and talk to the sister, he informed her that it was done at his request. It is a little difficult to think that she was speaking by the Spirit just ten minutes before she so contrarily refused. As to the message she submitted, it must stand or fall for itself.

We have known of speaking in tongues which were plainly fictitious, though of this we are glad to say we cannot recall any instance at present where this has been done by a member of our church. The Spirit of God works for enlightenment and future understanding. When a man writes that the Spirit is upon him and delivers a high-sounding message to the church which contradicts the Bible, the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and common sense, he may be possessed of some spirit, but it can hardly be the Spirit of God.

Mistakes have been made in the administration to the sick, in unwarranted prophecy over them. (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 15.) Mistakes have been made by elders talking afterwards in a way to increase rather than decrease the complaint. For instance, we once went to administer with an elder. The Spirit of God was there in power. The man was very seriously ill, but the elder sat down and for nearly an hour told him of other people who were sick just like he was, and practically every one ended up with, "He died," or "she died."

Dreams are sometimes sent in with the request for interpretation. All too often dreams are merely the expression of individual experiences, and may be explained by the ambitions, hopes and actions of the dreamer. Some students claim "tell me what a man dreams and what he laughs at and I will tell you what he is." Many dreams as given fall within the above class, and so clearly have a purely human interpretation.

We know that some of our men have received so many letters of such dreams that they have a distaste for all dreams. We do not, however, take that position. There are dreams and visions which come from our heavenly Father, and we would not shut out anyone from any means of communication. But W. W. Blair called attention to advice ascribed to Joseph Smith the Martyr, "When you see a vision, pray for the interpretation; if you get not this, shut it up. There must be certainty in this matter."

It is, it is true, necessary that the editors possess some degree at least of the Spirit of discernment, and we believe they do. As a general rule we are open to present personal experiences as such, unless they are palpably incorrect. When we present a prophecy it must be remembered that it has not passed the test required of revelations to the church. This is one reason why comparatively few have been printed, lest there be misunderstanding. We firmly believe that the Spirit of God has spoken through other men than the prophet and in general matters, but they cannot be considered equally binding on the church.

The time is coming for a great endowment of the Spirit, when the sons and daughters shall prophecy, the old men dream dreams, and the young men see visions. It is right that this should be so. It is right that we should have the benefit of one another's experiences by way of testimony. It is right that we should also have regard for the way of the Lord, and recognize the channels that he has appointed for his law to govern this church. The Lord has provided that revelations to the church shall be protected from error. We do not want to be unduly upset concerning every voice that speaks. The way of the law is clear. We should have respect for the experiences one of another, and right experiences confirm us.

We have been permitted from time to time to examine various documents presented as a direction to the church from members within and without the church, but with certain exceptions these documents have shown on their face clearly that their source is not from above. Were it otherwise, they would have been printed in several instances. One instance occurring many years ago comes to my mind.

A document was presented and read to some of the leading men of the church for the benefit and direction of the church. As near as we can remember it now (it was repeated to us at second hand) it ran something like this: "Son of man, what seest thou? Wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Round wheels, square wheels, flat wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Son of man, what seeest thou? Wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Straight wheels, crooked wheels, wagon wheels, buggy wheels, watch wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Son of man, what seeest thou? Wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Red wheels, blue wheels, pink wheels, yellow wheels, white wheels, black wheels, green wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Son of Man, what seeest thou? Wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Wheels under wheels, wheels over wheels, wheels around wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels. Son of man, what seeest thou? Wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels within wheels, wheels within wheels, within wheels, wheels within wheels within wheels within wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels, wheels."

And so it continued, but it was never completed, as there were too many wheels for him to manage. But what does it mean?

The splendid experiences that the church is enjoying, has enjoyed and will enjoy, is of interest to many. We rejoice exceedingly that from east and west, from north and south, as well as in the central stakes, we hear continued reports of the outpouring of the Spirit of God, and of the manifestations of the gifts of the Spirit in prophecy, in tongue, in vision, in dreams, and in the healing of the sick. We rejoice greatly in this, and are pleased not only to hear of others, but to make it known to our brethren, the readers of the HERALD. We can assure you of careful consideration.

But there are certain fundamental principles which everyone of us may apply. Does it edify? Have I the interpretation? Is it of general interest? Is it consistent with the word of God in the Bible and the other books that we have, written under divine direction? Is it within the realm of my jurisdiction? There is considerable overlap in our work. An apostle, a seventy, a high priest has a right for divine direction in his special work. If it be a warning to the church, or part of it, we should see that it reaches the proper place before printing. Warnings given in Maine for the church at Lamoni need not to be published in either the HERALD or Ensign. If at all, they belong to that branch. If it is a criticism on either the general church or of a part of the church we should be very sure our facts are correct.

But let us move forward earnestly, faithfully and humbly, seeking divine direction, and when we receive it, so far as wise, communicate to our brethren,
S. A. B.

THE BOONE REUNION

The Associate Editor was invited to accompany his wife to the reunion of the Des Moines District at Boone, Iowa. Under the energetic leadership of Elder O. Salisbury, district president, a very successful gathering was held, including some fifty-five tents on the grounds.

The district had the use of the large, new steel pavilion with a seating capacity of close to fifteen hundred. The mornings from seven a. m. to noon were given to services, the afternoon was devoted to recreation, except on Sundays.

The features of special interest were the lectures on philosophy, logic, ethics, sociology and chiropractic at seven a. m. The auxiliary hour, given to the Sunday school and Religio did not consider the usual topics of that work, but devoted their time to lectures on "public speaking" by Sister Charlotte Dryden of the State College at Ames; "nursing," by Sister Rodgers, head nurse at the Independence Sanitarium; "child study and training, and adolescence," by Sister Alice M. Burgess, instructor this year at Graceland College and supervisor of the young woman's department of the Woman's Auxiliary, and "music problems," by Arthur H. Mills, assistant national director.

The young women held a meeting each day at 1.30 to 2 p. m. Then at seven p. m. each evening street meetings were held simultaneously in East Boone and West Boone, the attendance running as high as one and two hundred.

But the best single service of the reunion was the young people's prayer service at 6.45 one morning some five miles from camp. The service lasted till 8.30 a. m., but even then was short and not a minute dragged. There was a spirit of unity, consecration and devotion which was especially encouraging. Every one was apparently united by the one Spirit.

The voice of the Spirit was given to several, not only for the assembly but also to individuals. And

MENTAL POWERS AND THEIR LIMITATIONS

[Read before the Pacific Coast Quorum of Elders, at San Francisco, California, by Elder Edward Ingham.]

Paul was scientific when he said: "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds"; for the body follows the mind and is a reflection of habitual thought. What we think and what we have thought make us, to a large extent, what we are. By forming the mental habit of continually aspiring for something higher and better we are bringing an influence to bear upon our lives that is potent for good and will enable us in time to reach sublimer heights and to get rid of the lower tendencies of our natures. Hence we can appreciate the force of the injunction in one of the Pauline epistles:

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

TALENT IN SOLITUDE—CHARACTER IN STREAM OF LIFE

But the mere act of thinking will not serve to bring about that perfect symmetry and poise of character that is contemplated in the divine plan. If we do nothing but think we shall become abnormal instead of attaining the perfection or completeness that comes as a result of walking in Christ Jesus, the Lord, and being rooted and built up in him. Goethe strikes at the root of the matter when he says: "Talent is developed in solitude, character in the stream of life."

We might, like the student in the far east, enter solitude and do nothing but sit upon our haunches day after day and think, until perhaps, like him, we might finally achieve the condition termed "Nirvana." But if in its achievement we have lost our touch with the great mass of humanity, we have become abnormal creatures, fitted only for the kind of existence that "Nirvana" represents. "Nirvana" may be a sublime term, but translated into terms of our common occidental parlance it merely means "stagnation."

It is not sufficient that we should think of high and noble things: our thoughts must be supplemented by acts harmonious with them; and those acts can only be executed where there are other beings besides ourselves. Just imagine a recluse exercising justice, honesty, love, and mercy in the solitude of his cell. If history tells the truth the chief virtue possible to exercise in that condition, viz, cleanliness, was disregarded, at least in its physical application, for we are told that there emanated from such personages of old what became known as the "odor of sanctity."

"SENT THEM INTO THE WORLD"

How different was this strange notion of sanctification through stagnation from the Christ idea expressed in his memorable prayer in behalf of his disciples:

I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth. As thou has sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth.

It is not, therefore, surprising to find the Apostle Paul adding as a sort of corollary to the injunction: "Think on these things," the following: "Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you." What we need is not merely the religion of the abstract, but the religion of the concrete also, for the former without the latter is nugatory. No more striking illustration of this is given than that by James:

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

This idea of simply wishing things on people does not find much of a welcome in the gospel economy, for it is not a system of baseless metaphysics.

A PECULIAR PHILOSOPHY

One of the most prominent latter-day cults advocates too extremely the supremacy of mind. So extreme, indeed, are the views held by them on this subject that in order to accept them it becomes necessary for a person to disbelieve the testimony of his own senses. According to their peculiar philosophy all the ills and ailments of humanity are the result of mental error—in reality they do not exist.

IDEALISM ONLY A STARTING POINT

It can be readily seen what an endless number of fallacies follow this line of reasoning. Horatio W. Dresser, in his book entitled The Power of Silence points out in his masterly style the many inconsistencies of the doctrines of "mental science" or "Christian Science" as it is more popularly termed. He says:

All through the idealistic ages too much stress has been put upon thought. Hence idealism has led to fine-spun theory, rather than to conduct. Hence the misunderstandings that have arisen when idealism has been mentioned. But ordinary idealism is only a starting point. It clears away a certain misconception in regard to substance and power. The way once clear, the question arises, What is power, and to what end? What am I, the thinker in essence? To affirm that "I think, therefore I am," is to say very little. To declare that the world is understood through thought is not to explain the world. The world is also misunderstood through thought. Whether or not the thought be true is a question which thought cannot answer without the aid of experience.

Let us put the statement, "All is mind," to the test by asking if this proposition is exhaustive. Is the term "mind" comprehensive enough to include all that modern science tells us about matter? What is matter, as nearly as we can distinguish it from mind? In simple terms it is describable as tangible, hard or soft, liquid or gaseous. It possesses certain exact chemical qualities, such as that two parts of hydrogen, for example, unite with one part of oxygen to produce water. By placing the water in a certain atmospheric condition it may be frozen; by applying heat the congealed water may be turned into a fluid again. This fluid may again be reduced to hydrogen and oxygen by means of an electric current, and both of these gases may be ignited. In all these various forms—solid, liquid, gaseous, combustible—the same particles exist in different relations. What meaning have any of these terms if applied to mind? Mind is describable as intelligence, awareness of sensation, volition. You cannot saw or chop an idea, nor can you weigh an inspiration. Mind does not occupy space; in a word, its characteristics are in many respects decidedly different from the qualities of water. You may, for example, stand before a burning building, wishing that you could stop the work of destruction. You have a vivid consciousness of what is taking place before you, but the mental state is very different from the chemical change popularly known as fire. To stop the fire you must apply certain liquids in large quantities. If you do not discriminate you may increase the work of destruction; for example, by throwing a keg of powder on the flames. "But this is a very absurd case," the advocate of the "all is mind" theory exclaims. Of course powder will cause an explosion. But what a person puts into the body produces an effect in accordance with his thought about it, or at least the subconscious thought of the race about it. No, I reply, the case is not extreme. If "All is mind" as the advocate of the therapeutic suggestion uses the term, powder is as mental as food. If, however, powder possesses qualities of its own, we may with equal truth declare that substances put into the body contain powers which act independently of human thought. The fact that bread pills, for example, when given to a hypnotized subject with the suggestion that they are a powerful drug, produce the effects of a drug, is another affair. That the mind influences the body is unquestionable, but that neither proves that matter is without inherent qualities, nor that matter is mind; it simply proves the greater power of mind. Even if a man could put out fire by "holding a thought," that would be no evidence that fire is mental. To prove that one thing is more powerful than another is not to prove that they are identical. That the world of matter is known to man only through mind does not imply that this world is merely an "apocalypse" within the human mind. Obviously, matter did not come into existence with the first human being; the data of natural science are too exact to permit of such a belief. Evidently this earth existed many millions of years prior to the existence of man. Its qualities are therefore prehuman. In other words, they exist independently of the mind of man.

"But they exist in the mind of God," our opponent declares. In what way? As thoughts in our minds exist for us? That would hardly account for the persistent substantiality of the earth, the spatial grandeur of the starry heavens, the vivid reality of the great cosmic fire, the benefit of whose heat we daily enjoy. Evidently God's universe is more real than the mental hypothesis implies. Moreover, if we assume that mind and matter are identical in the mind of God, we surrender all the distinctions which we have found essential to a correct understanding of either mind or matter.

Both mind and matter may be grounded in the activities of spirit, but that is very different from the statement "All is mind; for if we regard matter as a mode of manifestation of spirit, we find the basis of it in the larger spiritual life of the universe, the basis both of nature and of human consciousness. Its law is then divine, spiritual, not mental; I must adjust myself to its law; I ought to study the great world of nature as the embodiment of God; a very different attitude from that suggested by the statement "All is mind."

This is admirable philosophy, and no person of sane intellect can fail to see the sophistry of the "All is mind" theory, so lucidly exposed by this eminent writer; but of deeper interest and greater moment to us as a body of Christian worshipers, holding a belief in the stability of the revelations delivered to us through those who have been recognized as the prophetic heads of our institution, are the conclusions he has reached relative to the basic power of the universe. This he terms "the larger spiritual life of the universe"; and of it he says: "Its law is then divine, spiritual, not mental."

THE BASIC POWER OF THE UNIVERSE

Viewing these statements in the light of revelation we should certainly find much for which to congratulate ourselves; remembering that the Seer of Palmyra, as long ago as 1832, gave a revelation to the church which embodied these identical teachings. The following is a quotation from that revelation:

And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3.

Mr. Dresser also says: "I ought to study the great world of nature as the embodiment of God." Joseph Smith in the revelation already quoted from, taught the immanence of God in the following language:

The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also give their light as they roll upon their wings in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these hath seen God moving in his majesty and power.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

Mr. Dresser further discusses the subject as follows:

For centuries the discovery that all our knowledge comes by way of perception and ideas has led certain philosophers to conclude that therefore human knowledge is hopelessly limited. It is but one step further to the conclusion that man knows only his own feelings and thoughts. Hence the famous and oft-quoted saying of Pythagoras, "Man is the measure of all things." That is, each man knows his own perceptions simply, he is limited to the appearance of things when, and as, those appearances arise. Man cannot then know what is true and right. He is shut into the world of his own relativities. . . . When the last word has been said in regard to human thought and the neat, cozy little worlds it can build for itself, the only consideration of much consequence is the nature of things, the real system whose magnitude utterly dwarfs man with his puerile schemes. It is well to ascend a mountain and look forth upon the world, or gaze into the starry heavens and try to conceive of the extent of the solar system. Then, by contrast, one may look back upon the subjective idealist, imprisoned in a little world of his own making and be thankful that one has escaped. Retrospectively, one sees that the relativity of consciousness is simply one among many facts which characterize the nature of things. The nature of things viewed as universally as possible is the great consideration. Nature is not intelligible alone. Human consciousness is not intelligible by itself. There are no "things-in-themselves." There are no minds by themselves. We must break away from the notion that a "thing" can be handled or known apart from the handling and knowing of it. We must lift ourselves out of the subjective slough and stand upon the heights of universality. The universe in this larger sense is intelligible only from the point of view of its ultimate ground. The divine Order is the real nature of things. In that order nature is but one of the domains. In that order all souls are grounded."

Now let us listen further to the language of the revelation given through Joseph Smith:

The light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him and by him. Then shall ye know that ye have seen me, that I am, and that I am the true light that is in you, and that you are in me, otherwise you could not abound.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

DO NOT REJECT ON GROUNDS OF IMPROBABILITY

While it is true that our mental powers are limited and we do not know things in the absolute sense of the word, there is no reason why we should make our knowledge and observation the exclusive standard of probability. In other words, we should not reject the claims which others may make to a knowledge of facts that have not come within the range of our experience, solely on the ground of their improbability. We cannot draw any definite line between the knowable and the unknowable. For while we realize that the infinite is that which gives thought its pause, we should also bear in mind that this larger spiritual life of the universe is accessible through laws which are divine—spiritual, not mental.

Professor Tyndall in a lecture delivered at Manchester, England, after speaking of the wonders and mysteries surrounding us, said:

Can it be there is no being or thing in nature that knows more about these matters than I do? Do I, in my ignorance represent the highest knowledge of these things existing in the universe? Ladies and gentlemen, the man who puts that question to himself; if he be not a shallow man, if he be a man capable of being penetrated by a profound thought will never answer the question by professing the creed of atheism which has been so lightly attributed to me.

Those who set down theology as the unknowable and therefore the negligible, should stand rebuked on considering such an acknowledgment as this from so eminent a personage as Professor Tyndall, regarded as one of the foremost apostles of agnosticism. Theology cannot satisfy the demands of those who require a demonstration as clear as geometry for all it sets up as truth; for there are some things which flesh and blood cannot reveal, but if our understandings are quickened by the light which proceedeth forth from the presence of God, we shall be able to comprehend them. And what more can we ask than this? For it is written: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself"; and this witness I conceive to be the true light that is within us—the resident power that shall so transform us by the renewing and quickening of our minds that eventually we shall comprehend even God. The method of reception and mode of operation of this enlightening influence has been clearly indicated by revelation through the first prophet of this dispensation, as follows:

Verily, I say unto you, he that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the comforter, in the spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the spirit of truth, or some other way? And if it be by some other way it be not of God. And again he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the spirit of truth, or some other way? If it be some other way, it be not of God: therefore, why is it ye cannot understand and know that he that receiveth the word by the spirit of truth, receiveth it as it is preached by the spirit of truth? Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify is not of God and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light and that light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 5, 6.

MIND HAS ITS LIMITATIONS

The human mind is a marvelous thing to consider in all its varied phenomena, its reaches are nothing short of sublime; and in some instances philosophy has been able to reach conclusions that are in agreement with the ipse dixit of revelation. But the natural powers of the human mind have their limitations. A divine decree has said, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther," hence the Athenian altar with its inscription: "To the unknown God"; hence the admission of Tyndall, previously quoted, and the following admissions of Herbert Spencer:

The power which the universe manifests to us is utterly inscrutable. To say that we cannot know the absolute is by implication, to affirm that there is an absolute.

Mr. Spencer and his fellow skeptics, like the Athenian philosophers, have committed the folly of making their own knowledge and observation the exclusive standard of probability: that which was inscrutable to them they declared no one else could understand. Tyndall, however, was a commendable exception in this respect. While admitting his own ignorance he does not conclude everybody else by himself; evidently realizing the possibility of a Paul stepping into the breach with the declaration: "whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

THE MIND MUST BE REGENERATED

The true philosopher is the one who has discovered that the mystery of the inner life is unapproachable by ordinary thought. Yet the dim consciousness that there is hidden in the bosom of eternity the light which can illuminate the obscure chapters of both the future and the past, haunts the eager souls of men, and makes them yearn for a vision of the unseen and a knowledge of the unknown. But this yearning no mode of thought or mental effort can appease, for it lies beyond all hope until the inner eyes are opened. The teachings of the great Master along these lines have never been successfully controverted: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." . . . "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again."

Truly what a marvelous thing to contemplate is the statement that only through the power and mystery of regeneration can mortal man comprehend the hidden things of God: those finer qualities of spiritual truth, which lie beyond the reaches of ordinary thought and can only be spiritually discerned. All our knowledge of the natural world comes to us through the medium of our physical sense. Our natural life is a succession of sensations; therefore, to take away sensation, as we receive it through the physical body, is to take away all that is conducive to natural existence. Hence, those who claim to be able to blot out the sense of pain by therapeutical suggestion and to render man impervious to suffering and disagreeable sensation are undertaking to destroy that which is essential to man's physical existence; for they propose to take away his sense of feeling—the heritage of his physical insensate consciousness.

Mr. Dresser sums up the matter as follows:

The wise man neither forgets that he is living a life of mind, with laws of its own, nor that he is living a fleshly life, with laws that are no less stringent. He strives to live above physical sensation, so far as matter is burdensome, and to conquer the temptations of the flesh by the power of mind. But he does not try to use thought when he ought to use food and sunlight. Thus he recognizes the beauty of all things in their place, and regards both matter and mind as revelations of the love and wisdom of God.

USE OF ART IN THE CHURCH--No. 5

I believe this is a question which has had very little consideration in our church work in the past. But conditions change. It is a vital question to-day.

In all our human achievements we have passed from the ordinary to the wonderful, and art is no longer a dream but a reality, a force to be harnessed and used. Surely there never was a time when it was more necessary to use every God-given means in preaching the gospel of peace and salvation, than in this period of Satan's great wrath. The objection is made that there is power enough in the gospel; and to do this would mean to partake of the world. If adjusting ourselves to meet the conditions of the day is partaking of the world, then let us pray for more of this kind of worldliness.

We should not have a narrow conception of a broad gospel. The secret of our gospel perfection lies in the fact that without change it can be adjusted to meet the conditions of every age. It is the plan of salvation yesterday, to-day and forever. If we would assist it to do its perfect work we must adjust ourselves to the circumstances in which we live. Put ourselves in our brother's place and get hold of the motives that would be most effective in creating an interest in the gospel.

In trying to soften the hearts of mankind and win them to the gospel, we ought to exercise as much common sense and inventive genius as we do in carrying on the temporal affairs by which we get our livelihood.

In these days art is no longer confined to painting and sculpturing. In this commercial age it is applied to all the affairs of men. Applied art is an important factor in bringing the interest of any business to success. Frank Alvah Parsons, president of the New York School of Fine and Applied Art says, "I believe that harmony is the law of life and is fundamental in the divine economy; that man expresses this law of harmony which is beauty, in proportion to its possession of his consciousness, and his response to it in his daily living. I believe that the quality of harmonious relationship existing between colors and forms, or between the parts and the whole, or between the worker and his material in any field of labor constitutes art." It is the application of art in this broad sense that we need in sowing the gospel seed.

The aim of the gospel is to save; and our aim is to find those that need salvation. The story is told of a half-witted boy who found a horse that every-one else failed to find, though there had been a constant and diligent search made for the animal. When asked how he found the horse he said, "I just went and sot down on that 'ar log, and I thought, if I wuz a horse, where would I go, and what would I do? And I went right off and found him."

That is applied art in the form of consecrated horse sense and we need much of it in pushing forward the work of the church, and bringing the claims of the gospel in an attractive way home to the heart of humanity. We need to ascertain the mental attitude of those to whom we wish to teach the gospel. Once that mental attitude is reached, then we are in a position to present the gospel to his attention in an attractive way.

The preacher has need of art in many forms, most important of all, oratory, both in public speaking and conversation. Of course the objection is urged, "we have an inspired ministry." We should be proud of that, but we should not expect to live on easy street while God does for us that which he has given us the ability to do for ourselves. God does not want lazy workmen. We should not expect him to do our thinking, and polish our speech. He has given us minds; he expects us to use them. God wants sharp tools to work with. He has given us speech. He wants trumpets that do not give forth uncertain sounds. God can and will inspire the one who puts forth some effort along these lines as readily as one who does not.

A certain missionary objected to being sent to a certain field; his plea was, "I don't like this continual fight." The answer was, "We want mixers, not fighters." Nothing is more evident. If we would interest people we should not offend them. We should enter into their life and be in harmony with them as much as possible. Make yourself agreeable. To do this requires the art of conversation. It will help you interest people, hold their attention, attract them to you naturally, make good impressions, and maintain them. It will open effectual doors to the gospel and soften the hearts of your bitterest enemies.

The art of conversation should not be left alone to the ministry. The church would be greatly benefited by the cultivation of this art on the part of the membership. Good conversation does not mean mere chattering or gossiping without any regard to what is said, or how. Conversation should be seasoned with thought. We should know what to say and how to say it, and be able to explain ourselves with clearness, and conciseness. The quality of conversation is everything. The light, frivolous conversation so much indulged in is only a waste of time and has no part in the gospel. We should remember our conversation as well as our actions reflect what we really are. As a man thinketh so doth he express himself.

The Saint who has cultivated the art of conversation and seeks the Spirit of God in the application of that art is a worthy and effectual laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. The church will be benefited by his efforts.

The effectiveness of many a sermon can be given a lasting quality by the application of art in the form of good charts (emphasis on the good.) The effect of a good sermon might be destroyed by the use of a poorly-arranged and badly-painted chart. A chart does not mean merely a canvas, smeared with paint in such a fashion as to resemble the hieroglyphics of some forgotten age, which it will take an hour to explain before an audience understands what it is supposed to illustrate. It should contain that quality of harmonious relationship in colors and subject material that will make it pleasing to look upon, and easy to understand. A chart that does not possess these qualities should never be used. It should be so simple that even children can understand, and of such a nature as to impress the mind with what is being said. Remember, with the chart you reach the mind through the sense of sight as the spoken word reaches the mind through the sense of hearing. The mind is much more susceptible to that which comes to it by the sense of sight. Anything of importance which is seen is rarely forgotten. The sermons which I heard when a small boy, that memory reveals to me now, are those that were preached from charts. In harmony with the law of association, when the chart recurs to memory it instantly recalls that which was illustrated.

The stereopticon fills another important place in this connection, in many ways it may be considered more important than the chart. It is one of the ways in which the wonderful art of photography may be used for the benefit of the church. Photography is said to be the mirror of nature, and in nature more than anywhere else, do we see the God we love and serve.

By arranging a series of pictures illustrating any part of God's work, we may impress the great importance of his ways. Here again the elements of art must be considered. Art in its quality has two elements, fitness and quality. We cannot ignore either. The illustration must bear a strong association to the subject. In other words, it must fit. It should not need to be explained. The idea of an illustration is to impress, and make the subject more easily comprehended.

As the messengers of Jesus Christ, we bear the greatest message of all time, a message of untold worth to humanity. In the hustle and noise of this age of wonders, when there are so many things to attract the attention, we wonder how to bring our message to the attention or notice of the people in such a way that they will realize its importance to them. This can be supplied in one word, advertise. Good advertising is second to nothing in its importance to us just now in our work of spreading the gospel.

There are many ways of advertising that we may use. We can discover the best methods in the school of advertising that we study every day. It would be impossible to give a fixed rule for all to follow. The time, place, and means must be considered. However time and money are both wasted on poor methods. When I say good advertising I mean advertising that is effective. To be effective it must command the attention of the people. Ofttimes the simplest thing is best. We should not always appeal to the curiosity, we may stimulate public imagination to our hurt. Remember that the elements of art are fitness, and beauty. We are advertising the gospel of Christ, not a circus. A piece of brown wrapping paper with a few words written on it with crayon may interest a child that is learning to write. We have printing plants. Why not use them?

I do not need to use space in speaking of the art of printing. It has reached a high standard in the church. But what use are we as a people making of that art? Stop and consider, how many tracts have you distributed the past year, or the past month? Do you take the church paper? Don't make excuses—you have none to make.

In one city branch of seventy-five members there are only seven subscribers to the HERALD. This is no exception to the rule, it is the same throughout the church. Go where you will and you will find the tracts and literature of the Latter-day Saints of Utah (Brigamites), Adventist and other distinctive missionary denominations. But we seldom find our literature even among the most intimate friends of the Saints. Why? Are we lacking the missionary spirit? If the missionary work is the most important part of all, our literature should go to every niche and corner of the land. Let us try to make a better use of this art through the coming year. It may require a sacrifice and we may have to struggle in the ditch of life, but service is the chief factor in the scheme of the gospel. The men and women who enrich the lives of others with beauty and sweeten them with faith and inspiration will not be left to struggle, but shall be lifted up until they reach the high places of eternal life, and taste the beauties prepared by the master of all art.

Doctor Forsythe says, "The principle of art is God's eternal beauty; the principle of religion is the incarnation of God's eternal human heart, neither can do the other's work, yet their work is complimentary, and I wish the divorce between them was more nearly healed—I wish the religious felt more of the need that art alone can fill." The need surely exists.

By bringing about closer relationship between art and our work, we can widen our influence to the elevating of spiritual and moral ideals.

BIBLE HELPS

It is sometimes a matter of slight controversy as to what extent a student and a preacher should use notes as helps in his work, and, as is usual in matters where persons disagree, go to both extremes, one having notes so elaborate that it overshadows the original text and the other objecting to the simplest marginal reference by a line or character. The writer will try to avoid both extremes, and perhaps we can get some real help.

The original language in which the Bible was written had it like this "andwhenhehadthusspoken-heshewedthemhishandsandhisfeet" (Luke 24:4). Let the reader imagine himself reading the sixty-sixth chapter of Isaiah, and then broaden his vision to the whole Bible and he would be crying for help. So the first was to separate the letters and so form words and punctuate them, that made it easy to read. It was then like this: "And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet."

The next in the way of a "help" was in the middle of the thirteenth century when Cardinal Hugo divided it into chapters and then followed the division into verses, this was done by Rabbi Nathan and first used by Robert Stevens in an edition of the Vulgate published in France in 1555. The printers of the Authorized Version in 1611 used the same division of chapters and verses. The reader can better realize than the writer describe, what a difficult task he would have in trying to read the entire Bible without such divisions having been made.

In 1737 Alexander Cruden came to the help of the student by giving us his very elaborate work called "Cruden's Complete Concordance of the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments." All students know how difficult it is to pronounce the proper names correctly and what measure of embarrassment he feels before an intelligent audience when he must pronounce them. In this dilemma comes another "help." It is the dictionary and self-pronouncing Bible.

Another "help" is the reference column where sometimes another translation of a word is given and reference made to another passage of similar import in another part of the Bible. In Genesis 49:22 we have—"whose branches run over the wall," in the marginal reference it reads "whose daughters run over the wall." The student of prophecy knows that the latter translation is a great help in making the prophecy of Joseph's descendants' migration much plainer. In Luke 4:18 Christ reads a prophecy that has reference to himself, and the marginal reference refers to Isaiah 61:1, where the original prophecy is found.

In the chronological tables we find "helps" that every student of the Scriptures greatly appreciates. The tables of weights and measures, of the measurement of time, and how the days and nights were divided, also the months and years, and about birds and animals. To these we add accounts of the customs and manners of the people of Bible lands and we have many helps to help us save time and give us a better understanding of the Bible and of the people who were the principal characters in those ancient times. Why should it be thought strange or improper if every student of the Bible should make notes on slips of paper and on the margin of his Bible to help him save time by finding something in a few minutes that otherwise it would take hours and sometimes days? This is a busy world and there is a great deal of work to be done; those who are doing it cannot afford to waste much time in mastering details by memorizing chapter and verse and charging their minds with a great mass of details. A visit to a large public library will help us to understand how extensively we can use help without burdening our minds with a lot of details. Tell the librarian you would like to see a history of France. She turns to her card index—"History," and the subdivision "French" and it is found in section —. There are a number of French histories and if you want any special one it is picked out and given to you. In this way hundreds of persons are served each day. They could not afford to burden their minds with a mass of details. They are on the card and she knows where to find them.

A shepherd watching his flocks by night can find time to commit to memory the names of many of the stars, and an Indian can get down on the ground and examine a footprint to determine whether it was made by a white man or an Indian because he has nothing else to do, but a busy man cannot afford to waste time in that way.

Without helps—whether our own or some one else's—in using the Bible, we would be in a similar condition to the traveler who asked a countryman how far it was to a certain town and he answered: "Two whoops and a holler." Let us hope that some day for the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants we will have as good helps as we have for the common version of the Bible.

EDWARD RANNIE.

CHEERFUL SERVICE

The voice of inspiration to the church in these last days is that "Saints should be cheerful in their warfare, that they might be joyous in their triumph." This admonition is worthy of more than a passing notice. Have you given this thought proper consideration? Have you carefully analyzed it and drawn from it the real spirit and ethics it really conveys? The adjectives cheerful and joyous are the words of paramount importance in the foregoing text. Suppose we consider their significance.

First of all, let us observe the nature of the noun warfare, for it suggests to us the idea of struggle, conflict, exertion, effort, and determination. If we were to act upon the suggestion of the noun in its abstract sense we might be quite wide of the mark set for us therein. But the adjective cheerful limits and modifies for us the noun warfare, so that we are better enabled to understand what kind of warfare we are expected to engage in and how we are to prepare ourselves for the conflict. It is very readily observed that a cheerful warfare carries more with it than the mere idea of doing conquest. It was Saint Paul who said that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." Ethically speaking, he is simply saying that carnal methods and carnal desires can never bring to us the desired results. That is to say, a mere strife for the sake of personal gratification of personal reward is not sufficient, but we should cheerfully go about our work—the task set before us—for the sake of mastering it, and at the same time bringing ourselves into subjection to the principle of divine justice because we take a delight in it.

This idea of a cheerful warfare at once does away with the belief some people have about religion being a sort of long-faced, sorrowing ceremonial formality. We should look upon our religious privileges as a pleasure, a blessing to us, and not a burden. We should also remember that religion at best is only a means to an end—the end is a fully developed life and character. True religion is the science of forces by which the faculties of mankind are developed to their highest possible state of efficiency. If it fails to reach this end it is religion in name only. He who says, "It is hard to live my religion" is yet destitute of the religion of Christ in its fullest sense. Such a one has not yet associated the idea of cheerful with the term warfare. It is a cheerful service that Christ would have us render. He has no pleasure in a forced service, for what honor it is for me to do only that which I am compelled to do? A forced service is never a true service, and the thing we consider hard or difficult will quite generally be neglected or avoided by us. The thing we do willingly is the thing we do well. That which we do cheerfully is the thing we take a delight in. If, therefore, we enter upon the warfare of self-conquest because we delight in subduing the baser and lower elements of our life, and developing and perfecting the higher and nobler traits of character, are we achieving the thing that is required of us in the precepts of the Lord Jesus?

A saint is a person who has become a partaker of the Christ nature, one who has developed the graces that surrounded the life of the Master. Such a one should be cheerful and of good courage. Such a one should always meet the problems of life cheerfully, and with a determination for the right, i. e., that the principle of right should be maintained even though it should seem to be to the disadvantage of the one maintaining it. If I cheerfully go about my duty it will cease to be laborious and hard for me. If I follow Christ cheerfully, it will not be a difficult matter for me to live my religion; but if I follow simply because I think it a duty that is imposed upon me, it will be very laborious.

"Saints should be cheerful in their warfare, that they might be joyous in their triumph." There is a true joy in true service, and when a true victory has been achieved, a spirit of joyousness accompanies that victory. Above all, a Saint should be joyous in the fact that he has waged a warfare of right against wrong, until he has fully subdued and conquered himself. Ethically speaking we are not triumphant until we have subjected our own carnal, selfish, stubborn will to the will of God, and have, therefore, become one with the stainless Christ in thought and purpose.

We ought to learn, as followers of Jesus, to go about the world doing good. We should cheerfully and willingly minister to the needs and comforts of others, not for the sake of some selfish, personal end, but for the sake of making life less difficult for each other, and for the purpose of making the world a fitter place in which to live. He who fully and truly enters upon this kind of service must of necessity partake of the spirit of cheerfulness and true joyousness. Let it therefore be remembered that the joy comes as the result of true service rendered, and not as the result of some personal favor bestowed upon us. He who delights in doing good must of necessity enjoy perpetual and abiding peace. Are you ready for this achievement?

OF GENERAL INTEREST

BEER'S EFFECT ON THE GERMANS

(As printed in a newspaper friend of the brewers.)

One of the three aggressive newspaper enemies of prohibition in this city long has been the New York Times. It has made pretense of fairness, and has occasionally printed a minor editorial or an outside contribution which read as if sympathetic, but the burden of its talk about drink has been unfriendly towards total abstinence and hostile to prohibition. During the recent war-time prohibition campaign in Congress it grew bitter to the extreme against Prohibitionists, declaring them traitors, and using language of which it should have been forever ashamed. In its Sunday issue of July 1, however, perhaps because of the day, in its magazine section, it gave an article by Reginald Aldworth Daly, Professor of Geology in Harvard University, which went far to justify the radicals whom it had so bitterly condemned. In that article Professor Daly put upon beer the blame for German outrages; and while The Advocate cannot spare space for its entire reproduction, we are moved to quote some of its positive utterances. Charging bad temper to German officials and naming some of their acts since the war began, Professor Daly suggested "that mild, eternal intoxication is a partial but very real explanation of those unforgettable crimes."

"The researches of Kræpelin," he said, "perhaps the greatest authority on the effects of German beer, and of others have shown that there is no qualitative difference in the physiological effect of beer and spirits, so far as the alcohol contents are concerned. Persistent use of beer, a 4 per cent solution of alcohol, like whisky, a 50 per cent solution, produces 'release of inhibitions,' a loss of self-control." And he went on to declare, what Advocate readers generally know but what the Times editor and some other editors never seem to have learned, "that a man who drinks beer even quite moderately, every day is never quite sober."

"This mildly alcoholic state," said Professor Daly, "is usually not conspicuous by a very decided lack of efficiency or of social decorum in the poisoned man. Hence the effects of steady beer drinking are not as striking as in the case of persons poisoned with whisky, rum, or absinthe. Yet I venture the hypothesis that lifelong drinking of mild beer has been one of the more potent causes for the amazing brutalities of official Germany. Those crimes have been ordered by men who for decades have been poisoned by beer. In times of peace and quiet the poisoning causes derangement of brain tissue, often expressed merely in some form of sentimentality, plain or maudlin. If, however, the victim is put under stress, his nervous disorder is likely to lead to bad temper and bad judgment, with endless possibilities in the way of loss of dignity, poise, and the sense of human fellowship. The final result here considered is the development of true savagery."

Replying to the suggestion that "as much alcohol per capita is drunk in England and France" as in Germany, he noted important contrasts between the drinking of Germany and that of France or England, in these words:

"The Germanic peoples are the only group who feed alcohol to the babies or very young children of middle and upper classes. Just at the time of life when the nervous system should be especially protected against all poisons, vast numbers of German children are kept mildly charged with alcohol. If the baby has not already been prenatally damaged because of the beer drunk by his mother, he still runs the risk of poisoning from the alcohol-bearing milk of a drinking mother or wet nurse. The child grows to manhood, drinking alcohol and continually handicapped in his development of cerebral, and therefore moral, control. On the other hand, nearly all the alcohol drunk in France and England is consumed after the formative years of childhood are past, distinctly lessening the danger of permanent cerebral degeneration.

"The drunkards of France and the British Isles are, as elsewhere, brutal and mean when crossed or provoked; but, fortunately for the good name of the Governments of these two countries, many men of the ruling classes, the men who issue orders, are not addicted to the daily use of alcohol, either in youth or maturity. Neither were their mothers, who bequeathed to them their steady nerves. The restraint and sporting fairness of the sober Englishman or Scot contrast with the selfishness and unrestrained violence of the ale-poisoned Englishman of East London or the whisky-poisoned Scot of Glasgow. The war policy of France or England is being controlled by men who have not been at all poisoned by alcohol, or at least have been less poisoned than many prominent German officials, who, day in and day out, are kept irritable by the national drink."

Admitting that other factors than beer enter into the fearful problem "as to why the German high command orders murder, rape and slavery as essentials in the making of war," Professor Daly urged that "some part of its solution may be found in the relations of chronic alcoholism to the human soul," and closed his remarkable article by asking: "Was the great von Moltke right when he said: 'Beer is a far more dangerous enemy to Germany than all the armies of France?'"

And yet the Times and other journals day after day pleaded for the recognition of beer as a necessity in this country's war with Germany, and held up to public scorn and contempt the men and women who were daring to oppose all drink that breeds alcoholism.—The National Advocate.

The Social Needs of Our Boys and Girls

(Written for and read before a mother's meeting in Lamoni, Iowa.)

Many anxious parents ask what can be done to provide wholesome social activities for their boys and girls. In general the answer is this: arrange for plain, simple gatherings of the group, large or small, as conditions may warrant, not allowing the boys to get into a "gang," or the girls into a "clique" more than necessary; avoid as long as possible the idea of a "brilliant social career" for either boy or girl; keep out of their minds any idea of their being especially attractive; discourage their adorning themselves in striking or conspicuous fashion, that they may be envied by the less "fortunate," and be careful to encourage every pleasing trait, showing them how each one has some strong points or qualities which will make him appreciated by those with whom he associates. If we can keep the minds of our young people pure, their actions unselfish, and their dress and appearance modest and unostentatious, the wholesomeness of future "society" will be assured. Informal gatherings, properly chaperoned, with impromptu or prepared programs, singing, performance upon various musical instruments, making fudge, toasting marshmallows, popping corn, pulling taffy, playing well supervised games, light-hearted, but kindly, jesting and raillery,—such an occasion is indicative of a social life well-grounded in morality and kindness—a most wholesome one.

In attempting to choose social companions for the young, we must keep in mind the need of emphasizing and preserving our ideals of democracy. Most young persons are much interested in rank, or title, and greatly impressed by wealth or fame. They are apt to be attracted to such people through these impressions, rather than by perceptions of real worth or character. Fine apparel and plenty of money to spend for youthful fancies are very apt to influence the fifteen-year-old boy or girl unduly, who often make up their standards of social fitness and popularity after these patterns. They should be taught early to regard these things as merely superficial, and not be compared with real worth and character. Many promising young people have been spoiled, and the lives of not a few are wrecked, because they have foolishly or ignorantly attempted to follow in the footsteps of the children of the wealthy, trying to keep up with the fast pace set by some seemingly brilliant member of the social "smart set." Let us teach our children to weigh values much more carefully.

There should be some kind of a social justice which should call to account the overindulgent parents who permit their children to parade their wealth, set foolish and extravagant examples of conduct to their companions, and thus perpetrate a real wrong upon the social democracy of this country. Too often they are living too fast for the good of their own characters, and moral ruin is frequently the coin with which such parents are paid for not giving to their children the counsel and training so sorely needed. It would be far better for all to insist upon simpler and more wholesome pleasures for their children—little gatherings without display of money or adornments, where all could meet on equal planes and carry on a reasonable and kindly exchange of courtesy and social intercourse.

Let us teach our children true values, and early instill into their minds the fact that they must not expect to take more out of the world than they are prepared and willing to put into it; in other words, that they must give full value for what they receive, socially as well as commercially. The young person who basks and disports himself in the finery and the wealth another has earned is a sort of social cheat, after all. The parents who seek to get their children into a "select circle," through fair means or foul, in order that they may create an impression of wealth and worldly prestige, are trying to get something for nothing—a very poor policy in the end, especially for Latter Day Saints. Let us get our interests above such foolish and selfish ideas, and seek with more zeal and earnestness to purify and ennoble our ideals, and those of our children. We need a new vision of social worth in this country, one more compatible with our assertions of democracy.

I can think of few efforts more productive of good than those made by the parents of a community getting together occasionally in a sort of neighborhood club, and talking over the conditions around them, with a view of finding ways and means to furnish (not to the select few, but to all their worthy young members) wholesome amusement and entertainment that will interest, instruct and direct. So long as parents put on little affairs of a social nature solely for their own private interests and advantage, ignoring the needs of the young boy or girl next door—letting the outside world look out for itself so long as "me and mine" are safe, just so long will dens of vice exist and allure, and enslave the innocent and unwary, and such parents go on, cheating society at large out of the help and cooperation they might give, and themselves of many rare opportunities of life. Such may seek justification and comfort in the selfish idea that they have saved their own flesh and blood from evil contamination; but what about their brothers and sisters? Have they no responsibility there?

As mothers let us get together and help each other. There are so many questions along these lines which we could discuss with profit to ourselves and benefit to the children about us. Here are a few of them: How often should our young people go away from home in the evening, and where? What kind of social affairs are good for them, and what kind harmful? How can we make them respect plain work and industry? How can we help them to be satisfied with ordinary clothes for everyday wear, and reasonably good ones for special occasions? How can we improve their taste in clothes and adornments? How can we prevent their forming habits of gambling, drinking, smoking, and kindred evils, including the taste for cheap picture shows and vaudeville? How can we cultivate a taste for the best in art, music and literature? How can we counteract the vulgar, counterfeit love-making sometimes encouraged by thoughtless parents in those of tender years? How can we best help them to form correct estimates of life and its meanings?

Scores of similar problems confront every conscientious parent, and a group of neighborhood parents, considering these vital things with a view to improving conditions around them, could do a vast amount of good in that direction, by "reasoning together."

In this paper I am trying to keep in mind the social problems of both the boy and the girl, although I must say that my experience has been mostly with the boy, as I have three sons grown to manhood and only one little daughter, but seven years of age. I have much to learn about the girl and her social life, and I am still anxious to learn more about the boy and his. I will say that it has been a great joy and privilege for me to be companion and chum to my boys, to meet their friends, and to enter into their social plans. It is not an easy task that confronts us parents—that of letting out the reins of government over a growing boy so gradually that he will never realize just when he becomes free from parental restraint, suggestion and authority, and a free agent unto himself and God! There is grave danger of transferring the reins of government too soon or too completely into his hands, and a youth thus suddenly becoming a law unto himself, before his power of correct judgment is well developed, or his character well grounded in right principles, is very apt to make many social mistakes of a very serious nature.

We know young people who were held too long in restraint at home, without opportunity to develop their own mental and moral strength, and who jumped headlong into social excesses when they finally got away from those environments.

Some parents seem anxious that their young people should not appear "green" when first they enter society! Better far that your boy or girl appear somewhat green, than to appear too bold and forward! He or she may not, at fifteen, be always free and easy in social manners, but children taught to respect the real, and despise the false, cannot go far wrong, even in manners and conventionalities, and they thus escape the charge of an overripe or immature development. Bashfulness and timidity are but outward expressions of inward disturbance natural to youth, which is best overcome by wise counsel and right guidance from parents. Little need, then, for the large amount of effort seen in some places where parents try to push their children into "high society," where they fondly hope they can acquire grace and social improvement. True culture is from within, founded in thoughts for the good of others; good breeding follows naturally when attention is focused on others, and away from self.

Young people are sensitive and will go a long way to avoid the disapproval of their mates, or the risk of being laughed at. Many young people quit school because of thoughtless and unfriendly criticism; some are seldom seen at the parties of young folks, simply because they have been the target for thoughtless jokes, indulged in for the purpose of creating laughter. These conditions could not occur if all our young people were taught by their parents to think and act kindly under all circumstances. The extreme sensitiveness from which young people suffer at a certain age perhaps has its value; it emphasizes humility and has a certain work to perform. The wise parent will recognize this and use it to illustrate a lesson on charity towards others who may appear awkward.

Help the young boy or girl to improve in every possible way; to make the most of good points, and to overcome what defects may be eradicated. Explain the customs and usages of polite society, and their foundation, in every case, in principles of consideration for others—an effort to make others comfortable and happy. Help them to be properly dressed, that they may not be objects of aversion or ridicule on that account; teach the boy to be neat and clean about his person and dress, and the girl to be modest and unenvious; gently point out social errors, and encourage the use of correct English and the wide reading of good books; show them the vanity of much that the world calls good, and the real worth of much that the world despises; teach them to be genuine, to scorn the false and base, and to be charitable to all.

If you can do all this, and more, for your children, or for the young people about you, you have proven yourself a good friend, a wise counselor, a blessing not only to them but to society at large and, above all; a power for eternal righteousness.

It is worth working for, studying for, and praying for!

A Woman's Auxiliary Council

The stake organization of the Independence Stake of the Woman's Auxiliary has been discontinued as a result of an action taken at the last meeting. A motion as follows carried:

"Moved that we no longer have a stake organization of the Woman's Auxiliary in Independence, Missouri, but that we have a Woman's Auxiliary Council, composed of the presidents of all woman's organizations within the stake, the organizer to be president, and council to choose other officers and work along lines similar to that of the Woman's Council of Clubs in Kansas City and elsewhere. This council to take over the unfinished work of the old organization and supervise standing committees, etc. It being understood that any woman's club, circle, orioles, or society may appoint those whom they desire to represent them at open meetings of the council as well as their officers. Details to be worked out by the council."

Feeding the Child of Three

(The second of a series of articles on the care of young children sent out by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.)

At the beginning of the third year the child's diet may be increased by adding more solid food, especially meats and vegetables. According to the United States Department of Agriculture every healthy child of three should have at least one food a day from each of the following five groups:

1. Milk and dishes made chiefly of milk (most important of this group in children's diet), meat, fish, poultry, and eggs.
2. Bread and other cereal foods.
3. Butter and other wholesome fats.
4. Vegetables and fruits.
5. Simple sweets.

The meats should be beef, boiled, broiled, or roasted; lamb chops; the white meat of chicken; or delicate fish. All meat should be free from fat, gristle, or bone and finely minced when given to the child.

Eggs should be very soft boiled, coddled, or poached, or soft scrambled. Fried eggs should never be given to a child; but the grated or mashed yoke of a very hard boiled egg may sometimes be used.

Meat broths made from mutton, beef, or chicken have little nutriment, but if these are thickened with arrowroot or corn starch, and especially if milk is added, they become a valuable food. Well-cooked vegetables, strained and added to warm milk, are not only good foods but serve to teach the child to like vegetables.

Cereals should be thoroughly cooked and served with milk or thin cream and a very small amount of sugar or none.

Bread for a child should be at least two days old. Toast, zwieback, or hard crackers may be given once or twice a day.

Baked potatoes moistened with a little butter, thin cream, beef juice, or platter gravy may be given.

Asparagus tips, spinach, stewed celery, squash, string beans, carrots, young peas, well cooked and mashed, or put through a puree sieve, are all good for a child. A small portion of one of these vegetables may be a part of the child's dinner each day.

Fruits should be continually used. At this age sweet oranges, baked apples, or stewed prunes are most useful. The juice or mashed pulp of fresh ripe pears or peaches may be given in the third year, but there is much danger in using overripe or green fruit, as well as in giving too much. It is especially necessary to be careful in hot weather when fresh fruit decays rapidly. Bananas should never be given to a young child.

A child under four years of age should never have dried or salted meats, sausage, pork, game, liver, kidney, goose, or duck. Fried and raw vegetables, hot fresh breads, cakes and pastries, salads, candy, sirups, tea, coffee, beer, cider, and soda water are all unsuitable foods for a child.

Milk as an Economy

A quart of milk costing 10 cents contains two and one-third times as many units of nourishment as there are in a pound of chicken broiler, at 45 cents; three times as many as in a pound of fresh cod, at 18 cents; nearly as many again as in a pound of lean beef shoulder and clod, costing 25 cents; a third as many again as there are in a pound of beef liver or of beef neck lean, each at 18 cents; more than is contained in a pound of beef ribs lean, costing 34 cents, or of beef round lean, costing 30 cents.

It contains as many food units as there are in eight or nine eggs of medium size, costing from 30 to 35 cents.

It contains nearly seven times as many units of nourishment as there are in a pound of fresh asparagus, costing 15 to 25 cents; nearly five times as many as in a pound of carrots, costing 15 cents, or of cauliflower costing the same; and more than in a pound of cottage cheese, costing 20 cents.

Milk is, therefore, one of the most economical foods at the present time.

It is not only economical to the pocketbook, but economical to the body processes.

The body building element in milk, protein, is the most perfect protein obtainable; it is more wholly digestible than the protein of meat or of eggs or of peas and beans or of wheat. Furthermore, the protein of milk does not contain substances which yield uric acid, as do the protein in some other foods, nor is the protein of milk so readily subject to putrefaction as is that of meat or fish or fowl. The protein is also particularly adapted for the use of young, growing children, and milk should therefore form a substantial part of their diet. For the adult milk alone is not sufficient and should be taken with other foods, such as bread, butter, potatoes, fruit, etc. The milk itself is more readily digested when mixed with these other foods.

The heat and energy forming materials in milk (fat and carbohydrates—that is, starch and sugar) are also in highly available form for human digestion. The fat is more easily digested than the fat of any of the other common foods with the exception of that in the yolk of eggs. The carbohydrate is also more easily assimilable than that in other foods. It is also not so susceptible to fermentation as some other carbohydrates and is not, therefore, so irritating to the stomach.

Milk is also rich in mineral elements needed by the body, and they are in a form readily available for digestion.

Milk when cooked loses some of its best chemical character, and therefore should be taken raw when it is known to be produced under circumstances of cleanliness. When there is doubt about this it should be pasteurized or heated to 60 to 63 degrees centigrade (140 to 145 degrees Fahrenheit) and held at this temperature for twenty to thirty minutes.

Raw milk and whole-wheat bread combined furnish nearly every food requirement of the body.—Chicago Herald, in "How to be Healthy" Department.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

No More Paid Advertisements After August 15 in the "Herald" and "Ensign"

The above notice appeared in the HERALD of August 8. I wonder what motive prompted such action. Have we arrived at a point in which we think it a sin to receive money from people who are not of our faith? The above notice also states that the space is worth more to us to advertise our own books and periodicals than to sell it for other purposes. That seems a very poor excuse, for any publishing house could find plenty of space to advertise their own productions if they could afford to add sufficient pages to their magazine. This they can always afford to do if they have plenty of paid advertisements. Remove this avenue of revenue and they must fall back on their paid subscriptions to run their paper. Few papers and magazines can live merely on the amount of money received through subscriptions. It is like running a college on the tuition fees received—Graceland would die if she had to depend on this for her existence.

Our church papers do a great missionary work, much more than many of us realize, they do a particular kind of work that the missionary cannot do. Why retard this department of work by taking from them a source of revenue that is needed to help meet the necessary running expenses?

We boast "that we are in the front line of advancement," instituting new systems for the educating and developing of our people, even adopting some of the world's methods. This is legitimate, if they have a system of doing things that is better than anything we have learned. We claim to accept "truth" wherever we find it, on Christian or heathen ground; but, this last act of the Board of Publication seems most peculiar.

Peter said "the Lord was to have a peculiar people," I guess we are living in that age now.

Our most successful magazines are made so by their many pages of advertisements. If this was not possible they could not produce the article at the small selling price they do. If we would like to place our papers in the hands of more people it would pay us to add a few pages of legitimate advertising in our papers, the returns would enable the church to increase the size of our papers and probably in time reduce the price of subscription, also they could then give away hundreds of copies to strangers, thus helping to extend our work in other fields.

We are often asked the question, "Why do we not have more illustrations in our papers?" the answer comes, "We cannot afford it." Why not make it possible so we can afford it? We certainly could afford it if more money were available. Is it a crime to advertise other people's business in religious papers? Do we not advertise our church in the newspapers of the day, and sometimes beg for a column or two of free advertising? If people are in a legitimate business, why not advertise it in our religious papers, and why not advertise it to our own people in our own church papers, especially when we can derive some benefit from the same?

Look at the many beautiful magazines printed by other churches, beautiful in appearance, attractive, because of good printing, made possible by the use of good materials. We can do the same if we had the money to spend, then why cut off one of the sources of supply? Many daily newspapers are giving away a thirty-six page paper for five cents, how do they do it? By the advertisements.

The Lord said, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Probably the Board of Publication will say "they are doing the best they can under the circumstances, and that there is always some one that thinks he can run things better than those that are in the business." We do not desire to "run things," although we speak from actual knowledge, having had over twenty-five years of experience along this particular line of work—but we were only wondering why it was considered more to the church's interest to refuse money from outsiders, especially that which might come into the coffers of the church through legitimate advertising in our church publications.

How much more good we might be able to do to the people of the world if we were not "so peculiar."

Prophets and Seers

After reading in a late issue of the SAINTS' HERALD the question, What is a seer? and the answer that you give it occurred to me to contribute a little "bit" upon the subject as to how prophets and seers were constituted, or made. The above seems to be of paramount importance to those who are interested. I will be very brief.

According to the Holy Scriptures all true prophets were and are constituted direct by the Lord God. It is a gift from God. No man was ever ordained by man or an angel to constitute him a prophet. As you have said, "There have been many prophets that were not seers"; while seers have the prophetic gift, yet all prophets are not seers. I will say, by the way, that the prophetic gift does not of itself confer official authority, or in other words, a man may be a prophet and at the same time not possess any priestly authority, as it was in the case of Joseph Smith the seer before he was baptized and ordained.

We next notice how seers were constituted. We read of seers in the Bible and in the Book of Mormon especially, and what great things they could know of the past, present and future, yet we do not find by what means they were constituted. It seems it was left for Joseph Smith to explain the matter for us. Here is what he said an angel told him: "Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constitute what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 13.

I believe the testimony of Joseph Smith as to what he said the angel told him about the matter. Here we have a plain, straightforward explanation as to how seers were anciently constituted or made. I believe it is the only way that they were or can be constituted according to the Bible and Book of Mormon. I have been a close reader of said books for many years, and I have not been able to this good day to find a single instance where a seer was constituted or made by the ordination of angels or men.

In point I will now refer to Joseph Smith, he was a prophet, seer, revelator, and translator before he was ordained. Oliver Cowdery ordained him on April 6, 1830, as prophet, seer, revelator, and translator to the church.

In this connection I will say that the Urim and Thummim was not only to be used to translate languages with, but to receive revelations from God and greater revelations than could be received without them. Hence a seer is greater than a prophet, because he could receive greater revelations than any prophet could who was not a seer.

Fargo Church Dedicated

According to announcement on July 21 and 22, near-by and local Saints gathered at the Bungalow Church for rally and dedication services. Elders D. A. Whiting of Minnesota, William Sparling from Eastern Iowa Mission, Thomas Leitch and J. E. Wildermuth were in attendance as speakers.

Saturday was occupied with the usual prayer meeting, preaching and auxiliary services.

Sunday at 9.30, sacrament services, with Sunday school and Children's Day exercises following. Dedicatory service at 2.30, prayer by D. A. Whiting and scripture reading by William Shackow. Sermon by William Sparling, pioneer missionary and president of North Dakota District.

Financial statement of treasurer of building committee, J. E. Wildermuth, showed the building was erected on cash down plan, all money being raised before being expended. The building had been used a year and a half before being entirely completed. Some interesting data was noted in a brief history read by Sister Wildermuth. Special music was rendered by presiding elder, E. E. Weddle, and wife. Benediction offered by Thomas Leitch.

Baptismal services followed in the font in the church.

Evening sermon by William Sparling and confirmation service closed a day which had long been looked forward to by Saints of the State and of Minnesota, as well as those of the local congregation. Saints of North Dakota and near-by parts of Minnesota had contributed to the erection of the building, believing it to be of general benefit to the work to have a house of worship in this the largest city of the State, as a natural headquarters of the State.

Writing Attractively

Taking note of a recently published sketch wherein the thought is expressed that some contributors to the church papers use too many borrowed thoughts in order to "get something real attractive over their signatures," may we make the following observations?

If there are any contributors to our church papers whose ambition is merely to see something attractive over their signatures, rather than a real desire to present wholesome and worth-while thought for those who read, the editors will no doubt soon detect their selfish and unworthy ambition and give place in the columns to matter having a better purpose and having therefore a better quality.

We regard any tendency in a writer toward plagiarism as being a disreputable and vicious trait and believe that such should be discouraged and condemned; but in view of the fact that minds having no direct connection by intercourse or literature, may think similar thoughts, and possibly at times express the same in very similar language, it would evidently be an easy matter for us to wrongfully accuse some of our brethren of deliberately borrowing thought without giving proper credit to the real author.

We have no knowledge as to what particular writers in the church publications may have been in mind when the point as to some having an inordinate desire to see attractive things published over their signatures was raised, but as pointed paragraphing is mentioned, and it is true that the undersigned has submitted some little paragraphing to our editors, and also that they, upon their own initiative have culled many such from the body of our articles and published the same separately, it may be reasonably inferred that some of these, along with others have been measured with a critical yardstick and thought to have been copied. If so, we plead (with all kindness and respect to the critical temperament) that even though some circumstantial evidence may be thought to have been discovered, yet an erroneous judgment has been made.

And as to making an effort to be attractive, of course all will agree that the truth whether written or spoken should be put in sufficiently attractive form that it may have just claim upon the attention of the readers or the hearers. Neither will any reasonable person dispute the fact that when a speaker or a writer's ambition to be attractive centers more in making self prominent than it does in emphasizing the truth, that person becomes a very inferior expositor of the truth; and the consistency which gives agreement to these points must also agree that it is just and right that everyone should have due credit for his own work; and that it is eminently proper for every preacher, writer, or teacher in the kingdom of God to try to make his or her work compellingly attractive in the interest of the unveiling of so splendid a vision as the citadel of truth.

Northwestern Missouri Reunion

This reunion is now in session, August 17 to 26, and being held at Stewartsville, Missouri. Brethren R. S. Salyards, J. W. Roberts and B. J. Dice are presiding. Of the missionaries we have present A. E. McCord, D. E. Tucker, Bishops B. J. Scott, Mark H. Siegfried and Richard Bullard. J. A. Gunsolley is here to represent the Religio and Graceland College. The Woman's Auxiliary is represented by Sisters Lula Sandy and Christiana Salyards. There are nearly fifty tents on the grounds. The preaching is inspiring, the prayer meetings, both for the young people and the others, are very spiritual. These meetings are held in two tents, at eight and nine a. m., then we have a musical institute with three sisters from Saint Joseph in charge.

The weather, with the exception of an afternoon, has been splendid. The large tent is filled each evening with attentive listeners. We feel the reunion will be a success throughout. Children's Day Thursday, when the Sunday school rendered appropriate exercises. The program was enjoyed by eager listeners. J. A. Gillen is expected. CHARLES P. FAUL.

The Alabama Reunion

Alabama district reunion was held at the usual place, Pleasant Hill, near McKenzie, Alabama, July 27-August 5. F. M. Slover was chosen to preside, F. A. Rowe and the district presidency to be associated with him. A. E. Warr was chosen secretary, and recognized as representing the auxiliary interests of the church as field worker.

Daily program consisted of prayer service at nine o'clock a. m., round table at eleven, auxiliary work at two-thirty, and preaching at seven forty-five. On Sundays the children were ably cared for by Sister Evie Sellers. On August 3 we had as visitors Mr. P. B. Pepper, county superintendent of education and Miss Luther, principal of the Castleberry high school. Both spoke in the interests of education.

The various meetings were profitable to all. The Saints were more active in the prayer services than in any reunion in the past several years, and as a result, a spirit of uplift was felt. There are many evidences of intellectual and spiritual awakenings among the Saints, for which we feel grateful and pray it may be permanent.

The 1917 committee reported thirty-one dollars on hand. Committee for 1918 consists of the president of the district, with his associate and the president of the Pleasant Hill Branch.

The Faith and Origin of Churches

[We very much regret that so many errors have crept into the articles under the above title. They were returned for the purpose of verification, as we had not the books here by which to make verification. It is only fair to the proof readers to add that we have made a careful examination of the original manuscript and find over eighty per cent of the errors cited below occur in the manuscript, while a number of errors in it were caught and corrected by them and ourselves. We regret that these inaccuracies have occurred, especially in quotations, so give Elder Mintun's letters in full, though some of the references are not correct.—EDITORS.]

TOLEDO, OHIO, July 26, 1917.

ELDER S. A. BURGESS,
Editor SAINTS' HERALD.

Dear Brother: Either the proof readers are overtaxed, or are not efficient, because the work of copying [the proof readers do not copy, and the original manuscript sent us was used.—EDITORS] my manuscript has not been very efficiently done. I did not get the copy of the manuscript that I have till this week, and have reviewed all the articles that have appeared, and find the following mistakes:

On page 629 in the third line of the second paragraph the word "writer" is spelled with two "t's." In second column in the thirteenth line of the paragraph beginning "All religions," etc., the word "the" is omitted between the words "yet" and "uncertainty." Such errors do not effect the reading to any great extent. But on page 656 in the second line of the second paragraph it should read "is it" instead of "it is," and a question mark should be placed at the end of the paragraph, instead of a period. In the second column in the second paragraph and in the last line of that paragraph the word should read "efforts" instead of "effort."

On page 657 in the paragraph referring to "Communication with God" after the third line should be inserted "as truly and" so that it would read "his will to mankind as truly and as really as." In the second column in the third line from the top of the page the word should be "caused" instead of "cause." In the same column the last line of the paragraph introduced by "Love all things," the word "religion" should read "religions."

On page 679 in the first column and in the first line of the fourth paragraph the words "the writing media" should be inserted after the introductory statement, "There are different kinds of media, the writing media, the speaking media, etc."

In the second column in the third paragraph of the quotation under the heading "God," and in the fourth line the word "had" should be "has." On page eighty [680.—Editors] and in the paragraph under the heading "Holy and Unholy Spirits" and in the sixth line the word "bodies" should read "a body," to be as in the quotation, whether it is grammatical or not, on the same page and in the second column and in the second paragraph the words "and destroy" should be inserted in the fourth line after the word "crush," and before the word "rather." In the last line of the next paragraph the word "taking" should be "making." In the same column after the last line of next to the last paragraph should be inserted the place where found. These 14 expressions of Spiritualisms, are so many subheadings as found in the place cited.—Religion, pp. 213-256.

On page 681 in the sixth line of the second paragraph the word "of" should be "off," and in the last line of the same paragraph the word "but" should be inserted between the words "are" and "translated." In the same column and the first paragraph under the heading "Organization" the word "overcome" in the eighth line should be "overcomes," to be as in the original. In the same paragraph in the fourth and fifth line the word "member" should be "members." In the same column and in the next to the last paragraph the word "truth" in the third line should be "truths." In the last line of that column there should be commas after "but," and after "era," to be as in the book from which quoted. On the same page, but in the second column and the fourth line from the top of the page the words "Supreme" and "Intelligence" should begin with capital letters to be as in the original. In the third paragraph in the same column there is a line omitted beginning after the words "under the" in the third line of this paragraph, and should read, "under the direction and control of spiritual beings than at any previous period." In the next paragraph there should be a comma after the word "medium" in the second line, and none after the same word as it appears the second time in the same line. In the sixth paragraph in the same column the word "a" in the fourth line should be "the." In the ninth paragraph in the same column there should be a semicolon after the first line, and after the word "spirit" in the third line, and a comma after the word "authorized" in the fourth line.

On page 683 in the fourth paragraph in the first column and the sixteenth line from the top of the paragraph the word "the" should be "this" and the word "this" should be "the."

On page 684 in the first column and in the fourth paragraph the word "to" in the ninth line should be "in." In the next paragraph in fifth line the word "the" should be omitted, and the word "still" inserted between the words "accomplished" and "more" in the same line.

I hope that there will be less mistakes creep in especially in the quotations. It will not matter so much if a few do occur in what I may have to say about what is contained in the quotations or about the church being treated.

Very respectfully,

J. F. MINTUN.

TOLEDO, OHIO, August 4, 1917.

ELDER S. A. BURGESS,
Editor SAINTS' HERALD.

Dear Brother: I have just compared the two last articles, one on Unitarianism and the other on The Roman Catholic Church, and find a few mistakes in printing them, which I call your attention to, not by way of criticism, but for the purpose of correction, should you deem any of them worthy of correction, and I think a few of them are.

On page 707 in the first column, and in the fourth line of the fourth paragraph under "Authority," the word should be "beliefs" instead of "belief."

On page 708 and in the second column, the word "human" is omitted in the fourth line of the third paragraph under the heading "Creed," between the words "the" and "race." In the next paragraph the word "a" is omitted after the word "one" at the end of the second line. In the next paragraph and in the first line the word after the word "doctrine," should be "not" instead of "nor."

On page 709, in the first column and in the fourth line of the second paragraph the word "better" should appear three times, thus "better, better, better, always better."

I also notice a few changes in punctuation, but none of them changes the meaning.

On page 727 and in the first column, and in the next to the last line the letter "u" appears where the figure "7" should, that is "Pope Pius IV, p. 7."

On page 728 and in the first column the word "clear" is omitted in the last line in the next to the last paragraph between the word "salutary," and the word "and."

In the same column and the first line of the last paragraph the word "Spiritualists" should be "spirituals." On the same page and in the second paragraph the word "to" is omitted in the second line of the third paragraph under the heading "The Profession of Faith," between the words "equal" and "each." In the last line of the sixth paragraph the word "eucharist" is misspelled, it being spelled "echaurist." In the eleventh paragraph the following is omitted between the words "of" and "the" in the third line of that paragraph: "Trent, and delivered, defined and declared by the General Council of." In the last paragraph in that column and in the seventh line the word "gods" should be "God," so that it would read "God of God."

On page 730 in the first column and in the fourth paragraph, the word "the" should be "a," so that it would read, "has nothing to do with a sacrament."

On page 731 and in the first column and first paragraph the words "in the matter" has been omitted between the word "himself" and the ",".

I have noticed that in many places where the quotation from the Catholic production they use a capital to begin words, that a small letter is used, but possibly if they were printing it now they would capitalize some of them, for they think of those words in a different light than we do.

With respect,

J. F. MINTUN.

The Erie Beach Reunion for 1917 is history, and I may add, "sacred history." The blessings enjoyed there will never be forgotten, and those who attended will look forward to 1918 with fond hopes of being able to meet once more and have another feast of heavenly blessings from off the table of our God.

Erie Beach is a beautiful summer resort on the shore of Lake Erie, twelve miles south of Chatham, Ontario. There is an electric railway which will take you over from Chatham in about an hour. 'Tis a lovely ride and the scenery along the line will interest you. When you arrive at your journey's end you will find an ideal spot for camping and here the Saints of the Chatham District have held at least six reunions and each one has been better than the last till this year all felt that they had indeed tasted of the divine.

Said reunion was held July 27 to August 6, and the Father in his great love for his people favored us with most beautiful weather. Every night while there the moon shone in all its beauty and its soft mellow light caused us all to rejoice. Its silvery beams shining upon the placid waters of Lake Erie formed a pathway of light which was indeed beautiful to behold. The days were bright with sunlight, and while it was hot in the city, the gentle breeze from the lake made it very comfortable in the camp.

The reunion committee consisting of Elder Stewart Lamont of Chatham, president; Elder J. C. Dent of Bothwell, secretary-treasurer; David Snobelin, J. A. Hildreth and Vernard Pritchard, executive committee, is to be commended for their earnest efforts to make the reunion a success. They have worked hard, not only this year but every year, and those who have attended the reunion have been made to realize what men can do when they are humble and full of love and zeal. God has blessed them greatly in their work and the fame of Erie Beach reunion has spread far and wide until this year we had people from many parts of Canada, from Missouri, Illinois and Michigan.

The prayer meetings were very spiritual; the Lord speaking many times to his people in commendation and imparting cheer and comfort.

The preaching by Elders J. F. Curtis, Robert Brown, J. R. Grice, B. H. Doty, David Dowker, John Shields, Arthur Leverton, Joseph Yager, G. C. Tomlinson, J. L. Burger, and Bishop Keir was splendid and enjoyed by the many who attended.

On Friday morning August 3, the young people met in the large tent at seven o'clock. We formed into four lines with Elders J. R. Grice, Robert Brown, B. H. Doty and the writer in the lead. We marched around the camp ground singing "God is marshaling his army," and then down the lake shore about three fourths of a mile, formed into a circle and all sat down on the sand and there we had the most wonderful prayer meeting we have ever seen or attended. There were one hundred and thirty of us there and we stayed all the morning. Many of the young people who had never bore testimony before took part and the Spirit of God came in power and all rejoiced. Ere we left, the Lord spoke to us in ten gifts of prophecy and truly they were wonderful. Twenty-six were administered to and the power of God was made manifest in healing. Oh! it was a glorious time! The very heavens were opened. God grant we may have many such services in the future.

Elders J. F. Curtis and R. C. Russell of the Twelve were much in evidence at the reunion, and their presence was deeply appreciated. Brother Russell did not feel strong enough to preach, but his counsel in the prayer and priesthood meetings was splendid and well worthy of being observed. Brother Curtis gave us some splendid data on how to meet the Utah people on polygamy and other points wherein we differ from them. He is well posted in this matter as he has spent several years in Utah and has the facts well in hand. We all enjoyed his talks.

Time was granted the different auxiliaries for their work, which was enjoyed by all. Splendid programs were arranged and many good ideas were presented.

Elder J. H. Tyrrell was in charge of the musical part of the program each day and did much to make this part of the reunion a success.

And now why say more? Words fail me when I try to describe the wonderful time which was had. Suffice to say that it was a foretaste of heaven.

All were made glad to have Bishop Keir of Independence and David Dowker of Chicago with us the last few days. Bishop Keir gave us some splendid sermons while David preached once as only David can preach. Both of these men were very conspicuous in the dining tent, for after eating enough to satisfy the appetite of any common ostrich, they donned aprons and washed dishes and sang till the tent rang (if a ten can ring) with their voices.

Monday, August 6, we broke up camp. It made us sad when we thought of parting, but just before we said "Good-by" we had a little prayer service right out in the open air in the shade of a wagon loaded with lumber, etc., from the grounds. The Spirit came in power and the Lord spoke to us in prophecy commending the committee for their efforts and promising to be with us next year and ever send the angels to meet with us if we will meet in a pleasing way before him.

May God grant that we may all be there.

In bonds,

CHATHAM, ONTARIO.

RICHARD D. WEAVER.

MINDEN CITY, MICHIGAN, August 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: Words cannot express how thankful I am to my heavenly Father for all he has done for me since I came into the fold. I am now forty years of age, came in the church when but eleven years old, and I truly have received many blessings. I have seen many wonderful manifestations of his Holy Spirit poured out upon his people since I embraced it, even to the present time. I have never seen the time I regretted the step, but sorry to say that I have many things to regret in my life, where I left things undone that I should have done. And in all those years of striving in my weak ways always to do the Master's will, under very trying conditions at times I'll assure you, I have never yet come to the condition in life I want to in spiritual things. My whole aim and desire is to go on to perfection, though I never expect to reach perfection in this life. I want to go on trying to get nearer that point.

I have never been blessed with riches or temporal blessings beyond food and raiment. But this does not discourage me in the least with the Lord or the gospel. My longing desires are to lay up the treasures that will stand to my credit when going to my reward. Many times in my experience, I am sorry to say, I have seen that riches have hardened the hearts of God's children to that extent that they oppressed the poor to get more of them. This truly is not what God intends. He says they should use it to feed and clothe the poor, as it tells us in the Doctrine and Covenants: "Woe unto you rich men that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls, and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation and of judgment." So, dear Saints, if we are blessed with riches and do not use them properly they are a curse to us instead of a blessing.

I desire to live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God and to apply all his teachings to my life, and ever be a willing worker for the cause of Christ and to put on the whole gospel armor and not only a part of it. Some of his children, I fear, are only willing to put on a part of the armor, and dear Saints it truly is time for us to arouse out of our sleeping condition, to realize more and more the duties that are enjoined upon us as his children. My experience in the gospel has been, the deeper I get grounded and rooted in the gospel, the more duties are made plain to me. And I can assure you it will be the experience of all who are anxious and earnest workers in his good cause. And we truly need to be watchful and prayerful at all times, and humble and full of love for one another, to become as one family in Christ.

We must live near to God in these trying times or we'll never be able to stand, but must be cut off with the wicked. I truly realize many will be cut off with the wicked. Oh, dear Saints, how many of us are living in that way before God each day in life, in word, deed or works so we have the assurance within us to know we can claim God's protection at all times, whether in storm, earthquake, famine or on the battle front, or wherever it may be? Are we keeping our feet as it were, or standing on holy ground, as he says we must if we are his.

Dear brothers and sisters, let us examine ourselves, or take inventory of ourselves, as was explained in one article in the HERALD, to which I could say amen, as it was good, and it is a safe plan to apply to our lives. See how we stand in spiritual things, yet too many are more anxious to take inventory of their temporal things to see whether or not they are getting rich fast enough. Let us take the inventory of our spiritual standing and see whether or not we have enough good works to our credit, or our spiritual standings be such, that we are ready and waiting for Jesus to come. If the request were made, All those who feel and know they are ready and waiting for Jesus to come, hold up your hands; could we do it truthfully with all our weaknesses staring us in the face, and shortcomings? I fear not. At least I would not want to hold my hand up in answer to it, as I feel my own weakness too much and realize I fall far too short of being in that condition and have too much to learn and to overcome yet in life before I would feel safe in holding my hand up to such a question, if it was put to me.

MRS. A. GREUNISER.

OAK HARBOR, OHIO, August 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are trying to come up higher, marching steadily onward toward the perfect day. Many times we feel discouraged when we know how some of the people feel here, but then we stop and think if the Lord is for us who can be against us.

Oh, Saints, we truly are engaged in a wonderful work. If the Saints would only realize there is a work for each one. No one can do your work for you. Then let us strive to do what we can for our Master—not sit down and let some one else carry the load, but all help. We are colaborers together with God.

It seems sometimes we do not realize the duty and responsibility that rest upon us. Faith without works is dead. Let us be earnest workers for the Master. Can we expect a big reward if we fail to do our duty? Saints, it means something to be a true Saint. We cannot stop and rest, but we must press onward if we want to dwell with Christ. Everyone has a corner to fill; let us fill ours as best we can.

Brother S. W. L. Scott was with us the last two weeks, holding services and giving sweet words of comfort to downcast ones. We enjoyed his stay among us. Although interest was poor, six were buried beneath the wave: four Sunday morning, July 22, and two Tuesday evening following. It made our hearts rejoice to see these precious souls brought into the kingdom.

Brother Scott gave a musical lecture Monday evening, July 16, after which a "choral society" was organized.

We feel our weakness yet feel the necessity of striving onward and upward. The Lord has promised to help us and his promise never faileth.

My desire is to do the work the Lord has for me to the best of my ability.

Your sister in Christ,

MYRTLE FLORO.

WASHINGTON, OKLAHOMA, August 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: After being permitted to attend the reunion at Calumet, Oklahoma, which was a feast to my soul to meet so many Saints and learn to love them, and enjoy the sweet influence of God's holy Spirit; and then come home and find Brother J. M. Smith here holding meetings, it certainly did me much good. He preached two weeks, baptized seven, which was in answer to our prayers. We were all made to rejoice when three of our homes were made happy by our loved ones joining us in this latter-day work.

The Lord has truly heard our prayers and the dark clouds have drifted back for a while. Brother Smith is certainly a fine man, we would have been glad if the crowds had been larger, but we feel that he has done a grand work here as it is. We have some friends here and feel glad because of them.

Brother S. W. Simmons also made us a short visit. We were glad to hear him tell about the angel message. We will ever remember these times, and look forward for the return of them, when we can have some more good preaching.

MOLLIE CROSS.

BARBERTON, OHIO.

Editors Herald: In 1912 I moved from Akron, Ohio, to Barberton. There were poor church privileges, as it is about seven miles from Akron and the carfare made it very expensive to attend church. My companion was not a member of the church and that made it much harder for me to meet with the Saints. It was very trying not to be able to meet with God's people. Many a night I lay in my bed and shed tears and prayed that the Lord would open the way that I might be able to meet with the Saints to worship my heavenly Father.

I invited the Saints of Akron to come to my home and hold services, which they did. Brother John McCoy, of Akron, preached one Sunday and one outsider came in to hear the gospel. The next Sunday was devoted to gospel talks by Brother James McConnaughy. As there were no nonmembers came to the meetings that ended the trying for some time, but I did not cease praying for the people of Barberton. At this time there was only one sister that I knew of that belonged to the church. I prayed the Lord to direct me what to do, and that his Spirit might move upon my companion that he might be persuaded to move to Akron; that my desire to worship with the Saints might be accomplished.

One night I had a dream that my next-door neighbor had gone away and requested me to take care of her garden. I thought I went out into the garden and was digging around two trees that stood very close together. It seemed I arose and was pondering as to the need of bothering with those trees, for they seemed to be dead and at this I heard some one talking behind me. I turned around to see who was there and saw two men. They were strangers to me and were holding the Bible between them. When I turned around again to look at the trees, they were both in blossom, with beautiful white flowers, from the tops to the very ground.

I thought and prayed upon this experience very much that the God of Israel might reveal the meaning of the dream. One Saturday morning about the latter part of May I was led by the Spirit to go out and locate this sister who had the garden and not knowing where she lived, it seemed that the Spirit led me to her home. I told her what I had come for, that my desire was to work for the Lord. She told me she had an uncle and aunt in Barberton that belonged to the church—Brother and Sister Whitehouse.

I will never forget the appearance of that sister's face when I called upon her. I expressed to her the desires of my heart and she told me she would be very glad if something could be done. She told me to come again when the brother would be at home.

Well, on Sunday afternoon I went over again and had a talk with them. The brother said he was willing to help out, but where could we get a place? In the meantime one of my neighbors had moved out of the neighborhood. One day I was led to call on her in her new home. When I came to her door I discovered on the opposite side of the street a vacant schoolhouse that was advertised for sale. While I stood looking at it a voice said to me: "The Lord's people shall worship in this place."

Well, I made my call very short and in the evening I went to Brother and Sister Whitehouse and told them what I had found. He said he would go to the school board and see what they could get it for. It was secured, without cost by taking care of the building. We opened our meetings there and had very little encouragement. We would meet with four or five Saints and one outsider. Finally we got the Sunday school started. Elders John McCoy, James McConnaughy and Herbert Rhodes, along with some others had charge of the meetings, and for a time there was little to encourage. But the Lord blessed us and we held the schoolhouse for three years, then came the time when they had to open the building for school use. Then we went into a tent for a time. Now we have a little church and a branch of over sixty, with a large Sunday school and Religio.

While we were laboring together some of the Saints seemed to think the work was a failure. I was almost discouraged myself. One night I had a dream. I was in a beautiful green field and all around this green field was a wheat field with a fence around it. I was trying to get into this wheat field to cut it, but I went around and around and could not find a place to get in. I met a man with a team of horses and I asked him if he were going to cut the wheat.

"Not yet," he replied, "it is not ripe enough."

We can thank our heavenly Father that since then the grain has ripened and the sheaves are being gathered in. We can see the fruits of our labors in Barberton and rejoice that the Lord has been with us. I may be better known to many of the HERALD readers by the name of Sister Ebert, as that was my name when I first accepted the gospel in Canada, being baptized by Elder George Shippy.

Yours in bonds,

MRS. L. H. HAYES.

CAPE MAY, NEW JERSEY, August 24, 1917.

Editors Herald: It was a very short time ago that I wrote to you and expressed my desires through the HERALD and today an incident occurred which brought the thought of life's uncertainty very close.

Here at camp there has been adopted a system of "setting up" exercises followed by a plunge in the surf. While we were out to-day, one of our number was seized with cramps and soon sank. After grappling for a great while we were unable to find him, and now he is lost. Everyone put up a noble effort to save him, but to no avail.

The thought that impressed me was this: Everyone was anxious for his temporal salvation, but no one here seems to be very much interested in spiritual salvation. Now we are all here with bowed heads and heavy hearts wondering.

He is gone, but no one seems to think of the vast number who are spiritually being lost in the floods of humanity. I am happy in the thought that I am safely moored in the faith that holds through all storm and tempest.

While in this faith, I need all the prayers of the Saints to hold me fast. I am now looking forward to next Sunday, when I shall have liberty (shore leave) to be able to partake of the sacrament, and my heart is made to rejoice at the thought that I shall be able to praise Him to whom all praise is due.

I need the prayers of the Saints from day to day and I will implore the throne of grace from time to time that my faith may not be weakened and that I may live my religion from day to day and do the will of the Lord.

I would appreciate any word from the Saints and would answer it.

With love to all the Saints from,

Your brother in Christ,

Naval Base.

W. M. SAUTER.

it was found afterwards that some of these had been praying for a word of encouragement, though no one on earth suspected their anxiety and difficulties. In one instance the prayer had been that the answer be given through a certain person, and it was so given.

We are glad to report that the same story of the excellent spirit at the special prayer meetings of the young people comes from several reunions.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Chicago Dedication

An error occurred in the items about the dedication of the First Chicago Branch. It should have stated that Sister Elizabeth Cox is the only charter member now living in Chicago.

Aid for American Prisoners in Germany

The American Red Cross has perfected plans whereby the Americans held as prisoners in Germany are to be provided with food. Provisions for the one hundred prisoners now held are to be sent via Switzerland. Tinned goods cannot be sent, for the Germans use the tins as hand grenades.

The Presiding Patriarch

Elder F. A. Smith, presiding patriarch of the church, spent the first five days at the Lamoni reunion. He then planned to spend one week each at the Boone, Logan and Montrose, Iowa, reunions. In each place he has been kept busy with the special work of his office, in addition to doing his share of the preaching.

One of the Twelve

Elder William Aylor of the Twelve has been busy, since the adjournment of the joint council, in the northern States and in Canada. This is a new experience for him, as heretofore his work has been in the South and especially in Texas. He reports in the great Northwest places where there is ice all year in the wells. In summer all that is needed is a ladder to secure ice for ice cream. We have not his itinerary, but learn that after the Boone and Logan, Iowa, reunions, he expected to return to Independence, and go south to his old fields for probably the greater part of the balance of the conference year.

Graceland Opens September 6

The prospects for an excellent attendance and a profitable year for Graceland are good. We congratulate the college on the standing it has attained in the educational world and the host of loyal supporters it has throughout the church. If her advantages could be presented to every member of the church as they really exist, we are sure she would be a much greater force for good. The opening address on the morning of the 7th will be Professor S. A. Burgess, formerly president of the college. The subject will be: "War, education, and the church." It is desired that all registrations be made on the 6th.

Have All Complied?

The General Conference and General Conventions agreed last spring to operate the gospel literature distribution jointly, the church and Sunday school as organizations to unite their efforts with the Religion and in local, district and general organizations seek to extend this important work. If your branch or Sunday school have not done this, please see that it is given attention at the first opportunity. Do not wait for the annual elections, but do it right away. The district conferences and conventions should also attend to the election of members. Then begin activities. Free leaflets of instruction may be had of R. W. Farrell, 14 Kenwood Street, Providence, Rhode Island, or from the Herald Office.

Press Committees

It is the custom of some of the districts to appoint a press committee whenever a conference is held, and these committees usually send in a joint report of the conference proceedings for publication in the HERALD. We are always glad to hear of any special developments in the conferences of the districts and stakes, but we caution these committees against duplicating the reports that should be sent in for publication in the Miscellaneous Department. There is a chance for a difference, if it is observed. For instance, we do not believe a press committee would need to give the details of organization, the branches that reported, and other items that logically come under the heading "Conference Minutes." We have often been at a loss to know what to do with reports of press committees who had done their work in such a manner as to obviate the necessity of printing an official report of the secretary of the district. If it be necessary to have press committees, they should report new items only and not the material that should come to us from the secretaries. See that an understanding is had.

From Here and There

Brother C. I. McConnell, of Halfway, Oregon, expects to take a trip to the highlands district of Beauregard and Vernon Parishes, Louisiana, and would like to hear from anyone who happens to know of any Saints there.

great-grandchildren. He joined the church in early life and followed Lyman Wight to Texas; removed to Cherokee County, Kansas, in 1866, having united with the Reorganized Church in which he remained steadfast. Died March 26, 1916, at Pittsburg, Kansas. Funeral sermon by Jasper Richards.

MANEE.—Samantha Manee was born August 6, 1833, in Randolph County, New York. Married Henry Manee at Hillsdale, Michigan, in 1852. Died at her late home July 30, 1917, at which place the funeral was held, sermon by Francis J. D. Earl. She was baptized May 19, 1878, at Lawrence, Van Buren County, Michigan, by Columbus Scott. She lived a good life and passed away firm in the gospel faith. We will miss her in our meetings, but our loss is her gain.

Book Reviews

HOW TO STUDY EFFECTIVELY.—In thirty-eight simple rules G. M. Whipple tells us how our efforts to study may produce results. We only recently listened attentively with a hundred or more interested people of all ages while Professor Floyd M. McDowell told us of the value of an outline. He expects to use it considerably in his class work at Graceland this year. Interesting to read, profitable to follow, and costs only 50 cents. Published by the Public School Publishing Company, Bloomington, Illinois, and may be ordered through this office. The many study clubs throughout the church would do well to investigate this. For your benefit and ours, when ordering mention where you read the review.

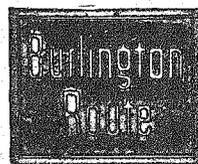

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.—Containing all the important resolutions passed in the church since 1852. This makes not only educational but highly interesting reading. Many of the elders are in doubt about matters that have been settled and are recorded in this collection of conference enactments. No. 206, paper, 40c; No. 207, cloth$.60

COURT PROCEDURE.—The General Conference of 1908 adopted this manual of court procedure. It greatly simplifies the task of settling church difficulties according to law, and makes such procedure "safe." The blank forms for the guidance of all parties having to do with church courts. They seem to say: "Be legal, be regular." If anywhere the "safety first" motto is applicable to gospel work, it is in the settling of internal difficulties. No. 167, paper$.15

BRADEN-KELLEY DEBATE.—Probably the most exhaustive and most exciting debate ever held in the Reorganization. Both sides of the controversy are given in full, the manuscripts being signed by both participants. The Christian Church claims its representative, the late Clark Braden, defeated Bishop E. L. Kelley in this discussion—but we are doing the selling. The attacks upon us in this volume are so numerous and characteristic every preacher and would-be preacher of ours should acquaint himself with them. The book is a mental and spiritual stimulant. WILL YOU be one of those who will help win the war by turning farmer and raising something-to-eat to-sell-at-high-prices? Good! Then I have a message for you! You can find no better place to raise grains, forage crops, cereals, sugar beets, potatoes, fruits, live stock or poultry, than in the territory along the Burlington's lines. You can homestead a whole section of Government land (640 acres—think of it) in Wyoming; or purchase improved land in northeastern Colorado or southwestern Nebraska, where the climate, transportation and markets are right, on mighty attractive terms—if you act before it is too late. There's no time like the present, so let's get started today. Write me about your plans and I'll give you the benefit of my experience. There is no charge for this—it's a part of Burlington Service. SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS AT LAMONI REUNION

At the recent reunion at Lamoni, Saints were in attendance from all over the country. It was the largest ever held in the stake, and for regular attendance of those who camp on the grounds and attend throughout the sessions, one of the largest, if not the largest, ever held by the church. As reports have gone forth concerning the splendid spirit manifest, we submit herewith some of the special communications and extracts from others, which may prove of general interest. They were reported by Sister C. I. Carpenter and Brother R. C. Scott. Much of what was presented is of local interest and direction to the Saints in that stake in their work. This spirit of devotion was also shown in the sermons, study hours, and numerous prayers and testimonies, and in the unity shown by the young people in their special services.

The prayer services and sermons since have also been of a very high character. The progress of the young people has been steady the past five or six years. They form a splendid band of devoted workers, who work and live with the consciousness of the watchcare of our Father, and who are trying therefore to keep his commandments.

GIVEN THROUGH J. F. GARVER, AUGUST 11, 1917

I have admonished thee, I have entreated thee, I have besought thee, to lift up and establish thine altars, and yet many have failed in this important piece of work. My name is not heard in prayer in the homes of some of my Saints, and even when they seat themselves to partake of the bounties of this world, which are mine, they are not grateful unto me. Then again, some have forgotten to wait upon my house on that sacred day which is called after my name. Some have thought to find pleasure in the highways and the byways and the cool places beside the streams of the earth which were meant for the ministrations and comfort of the people, but not to be sought after on the Lord's Day. Some have even been rebellious and have not been inclined to hearken to those whom I the Lord have appointed to teach, and some have been unwilling to yield themselves under the provisions of the gospel and have reserved to their own comfort not only their means but their time, and have closed up the door of their opportunity.

Yet, I the Lord, even as I have said, I chide not these this morning. I only remind them that if they had remembered mine admonitions and sought to keep my law they might have been more fully prepared for this troublous hour; and they might have sent their sons forth more fully prepared. Be ye, however, comforted, saith the Spirit, for there is always opportunity extended for those who will come unto me, and I the Lord will yet receive such and of their faithful devotion and their faithful service and of the fervency of their desires in righteousness, if they will but return unto me.

I desire that all shall be redeemed; I cannot promise that all shall escape from the conditions of distress that shall fall upon the earth; and even already many of my servants in foreign parts have fallen, and the hearts of my children are stricken and sad. Yet I promise deliverance through those spiritual forces which are extended unto thee and to all of my people.

My servants, from time to time, have admonished that the Saints of God should prepare in their hearts and in their homes and in their services and in their communities against the day when my people shall flee up to Zion, and my Spirit saith this morning, that they shall have need to flee, even as hath been foretold. Be ye charged, therefore, holding in thy remembrance this thing, that for each the time is short. Make therefore thy preparation and remember thy devotion before me. Gird up thy loins and stand each man and each woman in his own or her own place, and be found of me. Set about that work necessary on the part of each for the preparation of Zion to receive her own covenant children, even those who may escape and yet endure.

GIVEN THROUGH HUBERT CASE, AUGUST 14, 1917

The Spirit of the Lord calls unto my people to come closer. Break down the barriers which you have erected yourselves, and make way for the presence of my Spirit to lift you. You are drawing closer, you are gaining ground, but thus saith the Spirit unto you this morning, there is great advancement to be made if you will but put away those things that are now hindering the progress and development of my work that Zion may arise. The time has come for my people to put away those things and more freely enter into the execution of putting into practice the temporalities of my law, that I may move among my people and that all may find residence there, that these manifestations of my Spirit that have so long been withheld from my people may be poured out in great abundance, but the barriers that have been reared have kept me from being with you as I have desired.

GIVEN THROUGH M. M. TURPEN, AUGUST 14, 1917

Yea, thus saith the Spirit unto you, my people, you have listened to my voice many times. You have received encouragement, you have received benefit. Some of you, too many of you, have been receiving and have not been willing to impart as you should to help others in this great work. You have sought too much after selfish attainments and selfish interests to the injury of your spiritual development and growth. You have not always listened as you ought to my servant when he has prayed earnestly and when he has sought from time to time and has lost many hours of sleep in meditation and prayer that I might help him to do his work as your servant and my servant. Some of you have said harsh and uncouth things about him; you have not helped him by your prayers as you ought. May you be more careful in your conduct and your speech, and when you see that my servants are not as strong as you would like to see them, remember they are God's servants; pray for them instead of seeking to drag them down.

Remember, oh, remember; my people, that you can never obtain eternal life in my celestial kingdom unless you come out of selfishness and seek to live to my glory. Labor not for self and for selfish interests, but for the good of humanity, and be willing to die, if necessary, for sinners as your Savior who came to this world to save those who were lost. Do not think yourselves better than others but seek to build up my work, seek to save the erring ones and bring them into my kingdom, and sustain them by your faith and prayers, and God with his Holy Spirit will bless you, and Zion will be redeemed and you will become the pure in heart. Then there is nothing that will stand in the way of your spiritual advancements and attainments, but you will become as bright and glorious and terrible as an army with banners, not in the way that men look at terror but in this, that you will be able to overcome sin in all its environments, saith the Spirit.

INTERPRETATION OF AN UNKNOWN TONGUE GIVEN THROUGH
J. W. WIGHT, AUGUST 16, 1917

Oh, ye my people, in song at the commencement of this service you plead with me to send unto you a message that might joy and peace afford, but the song and prayer that should be uttered by my people when they plead with me should be to send such message as might be in harmony with my will, whether it be one of blessing or rebuke, and when my people shall thus come to me in prayer, manifesting a contriteness of spirit and a desire that my will, not theirs, shall be done, I will ever hearken to the pleadings of my people.

But I know your hearts this morning, I know your desires. Many of you are in the spirit of mourning because of conditions now existing, the great strife of war and carnage; but did I not long since in the centuries long ago speak through my servants, the prophets, and promise that these things should come to pass, that by war, pestilence, sword, famine and earthquakes, I would bring to pass my will with reference to the great fact of the redemption of my people? And now is the time for my people to stand still and see the manifestations of my power, that is to say, that they shall neither murmur nor complain, but undertake to undergo the sacrifices incident thereto and ever to look to me as their God and their Father.

This much I have to say to all who are called upon to part with loved ones to go into the midst of this awful strife, that I will be their God and their Father, shall they look to me in faith, and I will protect so far as seemeth good in my sight, and whether in the midst of the awful carnage they shall be slain or be returned unto you without harm, I shall still have watchcare over and care for, and such as have gone to the awful strife and are slain as a result, I will take unto myself, receiving them unto myself in peace. Such as shall be returned unto your keeping I will ever watch over and care for.

Let my people remember that now is the time to exercise humility as they have never done before, to exercise the spirit of brotherly love, of charity one for the other, holding none either in high or low esteem beyond that which is demanded in the law, and so occupying I will be in your midst and that to bless and comfort, by the presence of my Spirit, the wounded heart and soul, and be unto you a Father and a friend. Thus saith the Spirit. Amen.

GIVEN THROUGH J. F. GARVER, AUGUST 16, 1917

The voice of my Spirit, saith the Lord, hath been heard in the congregations of my Saints in invitation and in pleading, coming to those who have hesitated and to those who have already purposed to do my will according to that which I have set forth in my law. My Spirit hath before stated in these meetings that further instruction was in reserve for my Saints, and this morning they are prepared to receive the same. Let thy confidence therefore extend towards me, let thy hearts be inclined to hear and thy wills be inclined to do, that the Spirit of God may have liberty to present that which it pleaseth thy heavenly Father to do at this time.

My Saints have for years been taught by my servants with reference to the law of consecration. They have erred in many instances in presuming that this referred only to those things that were temporal. They have overlooked the suggestions in my word which recite that I require those who are willing. The promise ever hath been that he who is willing and obedient shall eat of the good things of the land of Zion in these the last days. To be consecrated to the service of Christ means first to be willing, to yield not only thy means, but all that thou hast and all that thou art to the end that, receiving these in my hands of power, I may be able to establish the Zion of promise, that ye might have indeed safety here, that many of my righteous people might be permitted to gather to receive of my goodness and take that deliverance which is promised in the gospel economy. Be ye charged, therefore, and remember that I require not only thy means, I require first thy willingness to bestow, I require thy readiness to give, and this is why—and there are even some here who have withheld—this is why they have withheld, not because they are not willing to part with their means, but because they have not been willing to yield themselves an offering upon the altar of God,

Remember, therefore, that until ye shall be willing to come to me in full purpose of heart and without reservation, seeking first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness upon the earth, thy money will not avail for thee in the salvation of thy souls; for if ye give all, as was spoken by my servant, and are yet found before me without charity, ye are naked, and ashamed, and hungry, and without power and without hope and without deliverance. But when thou yieldest thyself, whether thou hast money or whether thou hast none, thou art entirely accepted of me, and I will bless and prosper thee and thou wilt be able to produce and bring to my storehouse that which is needful, and thou shalt receive rewards in abundance.

I invite those who have means to come unto me; I hold before them the solemn promises of the gospel and the witness in their hearts of the presence of the good Spirit. I would entice all such to come unto me and to lay themselves on the altar. If they have it within their hearts to withhold, let them not conclude that I, the Lord, cannot prosper my work. My Son when among men upon one occasion said that if certain ones held their peace the very rocks would cry out for joy; and if from the stones of the earth, which are crude and undeveloped, I, the Lord God, am able to bring forth peons of praise to my name, am I not able to bring from the hands of a feeble few, if need be, to the good of my cause?

Oh, ye of little faith! Ye have wondered from whence cometh the means for this mission. Be comforted, therefore, be admonished, cease to complain and to distress thyself with reference to whence cometh the means. I, the Lord, will provide, I am even now providing in various parts of this land a mighty people whose hearts are contrite, whose spirits are full of purpose before me, and who shall come marching to Zion with banners of strength and energy and power, and they shall lay what they possess with that which thou shalt possess upon mine altar, and therewith shall my cause be established.

It grieveth my Spirit to say that some who first had opportunity, unto whom now opportunity is afforded, who have occupied for a time on this sacred soil, and who have gathered therefrom and from other activities that have characterized them as they have exercised themselves under their opportunities, even some of these, I say, and it grieveth me to say, have been unwilling to yield. They have said, oh, I would bestow it upon the poor, but those who have been placed in responsibility in the church are not bestowing it upon the poor, but rather upon those who have power and from whom it should be withheld. Who appointed thee to minister my law? And in what portion of the Scriptures hast thou read that thou art excused from thine offering, when according to thy judgment the means of the church are not wisely administered? I hold these men to account in time, and I shall hold them to account in eternity. They shall render unto me, each who has been placed in so sacred a position, that account which shall determine his welfare in the eternal world. Am I not the author of this faith? Am I not able to deliver thee out of the hands of that man who would despoil thee? Let therefore thy service come up unto me and I the Lord promise thee to-day that therewith shall my cause be prospered.

If ye will not hearken, the time is now at hand, the moment is here when ye shall be found outside the ministrations of the spirit of grace, because there cometh a time which is the last time in the hearts of men, not because I, the Lord, will not strive, but because men reach a time when they will not hear. Be charged, therefore, and hearken to the voice of the Spirit in this regard.

Let the spirits of those who are willing be comforted. Let them know that I, the Lord, am going on before to prepare the way. Let all be careful in their associations together lest they cast a suggestion of suspicion or distrust upon those who have been charged with sacred responsibility. . . .

Thou art not asked to yield thy intelligence, as has been spoken by my servant; but thou art asked and charged from this time forward to exercise care in what thou shalt say: let thy conversation be yea and amen; let thy purpose be the redemption of Zion. Put from thee that which is not from me; restrain thyself from this hour. Give not thyself over to idle gossip and to speculation and to meditation on tales carried to thee which are not of truth. As the children of light thou oughtest long ago to have delivered thyself, even without my ministrations, out of this condition. If thou wilt take to thyself from this hour the instruction which my Spirit breatheth in thy midst to-day, thou wilt be counseled to heed, to hearken, to follow after the instruction in my law which persuadeth my people to be full of charity and love and courage and hope, and I, the Lord, will establish and redeem thee, and thou shalt have not only peace upon thine own part, but be able to minister peace to those who come unto thee.

Thus saith my Spirit unto thee in persuasion this morning. Thou art invited to come forward and occupy each in his own place for my glory, for thine own joy and for the establishment of my cause. Be ye faithful, faint not, and as I live, saith the Spirit, ye shall be established, Zion shall be redeemed and in peace shalt thou occupy therein as the covenant children of God.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

The editorial blue pencil is supposed to be an iconoclast—considered by some the hopeless modern repository of total depravity and original sin. But we propose to redeem this incorrigible and set him to work from time to time drafting random notes, some wise, some otherwise,—this being the first installment.

It seems now that the woman who saves crusts, mends her dress, and carries a market basket is a patriot. The man who raises potatoes and has his shoes half-soled is suddenly become a gentleman. It is as when "Adam delved and Eve span." Come to think of it, were not these people always patriots and gentlemen?

Food faddists who claim that most people eat too much are likely soon to see their own theories tested at their own tables—a most disagreeable thing to contemplate.

Will our children presently join the sad ranks of those denaturalized European children who would rather eat than play?

The human trinity is now complete. The man with wings, among the stars, dropping bombs on sleeping children; the man in the mire throwing liquid flame on human ants that scorch and squirm; the man in the submarine, down among the fishes, biding his chance to strew old ocean's field with a ghastly planting—these three are one.

The greatest present menace to constitutional liberty in the United States is the spirit of anarchy abroad in the land.

The folly, anarchy, and violence of the I. W. W. are equaled only by the anarchy and insane folly of those who seek to suppress the I. W. W. propaganda by illegal methods. Every man's life depends upon the right of trial, with defense and appeal.

Jesus said that in the last days it should be as in the days of Noah. And the record says that in the days of Noah the earth was filled with violence.

It took man many centuries to find his wings—and now how quickly he has become a bird of prey, with thunderbolts in his talons to drop on sleeping cities. Evidently the mere sprouting of wings does not change human nature.

Death issued liberal invitations, and setting many butchers to work, spread a feast in the fair valleys of France and Flanders. But after three years he looked up from his feeding with a frown and cried: "Where is America? Why does she refuse my invitations? The board nears depletion! The program grows stale! Send for America!" Whereupon he sent such a summons by the unter-see-boten (submarine messengers) that America ceased feeding the children of crucified Belgium and came herself to the feast. And now our fathers and mothers watch with dilated eyes and contracted hearts, for they must furnish the costly viands from the flesh of children born in their own beds, rocked in their own cradles, nursed at their own breasts—their flesh, the bread; their blood, the wine of this latest covenant.

We have the utmost confidence that out of the chaos of this world God will presently bring the order of heaven.

CONCERNING CHURCH BUILDINGS

Numerous inquiries relative to building, improving, purchasing, mortgaging, and sale of church buildings or houses of worship reach the offices of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. To avoid misunderstandings, to guard against legal complications, and to provide a uniform rule of procedure, we submit the following:

Whenever the purchase of real estate and the erection of a house of worship, or purchase, sale, or mortgage of a church building is contemplated it should be fully considered at a regular or special business meeting by the members of the branch where the building is to be, or is situated—due notice of such meeting having been previously given, and the president and the bishop of the district or stake should be notified and be present if possible. Where there is no branch organization the matter should be treated in the same way by a district or stake conference.

The action of such business meeting should be filed with the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric for their approval, and no contract for the purchase or sale of church property should be entered into without such approval having been first obtained, especially where such house of worship to be sold has been dedicated. The proposed deed to be accepted should be submitted to the Presiding Bishop for examination and approval before final payment is made upon the contract of purchase, and in no case should such deed be recorded before being examined by him.

In the light of section 130, paragraph 7, of the Doctrine and Covenants, any enterprise undertaken by the members of the church for the prosecution of the work which involves the purchase of real estate, as the establishment of reunion grounds, etc., should be governed by the foregoing rule.

Needless and more or less vexatious and expensive complications can be avoided by the membership observing these suggestions and our unity of purpose will find expression in unity of action and reflect glory to Him whom we seek to serve.

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Railroads Urge Farmers to Save Feed

Recognizing the imminent meat shortage and that feed is going to be very scarce this winter, the Burlington Railroad is urging that every farmer save every available bit of corn fodder and save all straw. They advocate the sowing of at least ten acres of winter wheat. The latter will materially help in solving the labor problem, which threatens to be serious next spring.

Brother Elbert Returns Soon

Our latest advice is that Brother Elbert Smith is expected about the middle of this month. He has been gaining slowly and should not be overburdened. We shall be more than glad to see his pleasing countenance once more. We know the church will be glad to know that he is able to return to Lamoni. We will give further items upon his return.

Increased Interest in Church Literature

We are indeed pleased to note the increased interest manifest among the young men in the service of the Government in the reading and distribution of church literature. These are days that try men's souls and it is but natural that members of our church should devote some of their spare time to the perusal of the comprehensive literature the church has provided for those who would study her doctrines. It should not be limited to the men in the military service.

COLLEGE DAY, OCTOBER 7

For several years the first Sunday in October has been observed by the church throughout the world as College Day.

Last year we were pleased with the manner in which the Saints contributed toward the running expense of the college, but the amount did not cover the requirements and it was necessary for us to meet the deficit from the general funds.

It is a well-recognized fact that the usefulness of Graceland has greatly increased in the last few years because of her growing efficiency.

It has been the constant aim of board and staff to make it a college of merit.

The present world's conflict will call for the sacrifice of thousands of the leaders of business, politics and religion, and this should emphasize to all the need of preparing the rising generation to serve society and by proper equipment place their services in demand.

When any member of the church occupies a position of responsibility or trust, it increases his influence in getting the gospel message before his fellow man.

By action of General Conference a portion of the College Day collection is to be used in such a way that young men or women who have the ambition to obtain a college training, but who at the present time are unable to pay for their tuition can now arrange for a scholarship and pay for the same after they have completed their course and have secured a position.

For these and numerous other reasons every member of the church should rally to the support of Graceland, and arrange to contribute to the college offering October 7.

There are members who do not take the church papers; tell them regarding College Day, that they may have the privilege of assisting.

Those who are isolated from branches can send their offerings direct to the undersigned.

Yours sincerely,

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

CONSECRATED CRUDITIES OF THE "CHURCH OF CHRIST"

The purpose of this article is to set forth a few of the peculiarities of the "Church of Christ," sometimes known as the "Disciples of Christ," or "Christian Church," which was founded by Alexander Campbell and his coadjutors.

Frequently this sect inflicts upon the public leaflets, pamphlets, and books caricaturing and attacking the faith of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It seems to think it can dispose of the claims and doctrine of the Reorganized Church simply by vociferating in the ears of the public that Joseph Smith was a polygamist. The truth or falsity of a principle cannot be determined by an assault on character—why cannot the "Church of Christ" learn this elementary lesson?

The Man of Galilee was charged with being in league with "Beelzebub," and it was said that he "deceived the people," was a "gluttonous man," a "winebibber," and "born of fornication." Those of darkened mind resorted to an attack on character.

Well-informed persons do not charge Joseph Smith, or the church over which he presided, with the evil doctrines of polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-god worship, etc., but properly associate them with the polygamous regime founded by Brigham Young many years later in Utah.

We possess the right of self-defense. If Latter Day Saints admitted that Joseph Smith, just before his death, secretly or openly violated the constitutional law of the church of which he was a member, what would be gained by our opponents? No church should be held responsible for what is done in violation of its teachings. Besides, such an infraction of law would not invalidate any work that had been previously accomplished. Because Noah drank wine and was drunken (Genesis 9), after he and his family were saved in the ark, did he therefore have no prior communication with God, and was the work wrought through him a delusion? Because Lot was guilty of one of the lowest of crimes, after being delivered by an angel from one of the cities of the plains (Genesis 19), did he, therefore, have no visit from an angel? Because David, in his later years, fell into awful sin, was he therefore never inspired, and should the Psalms be excluded from the Bible? The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints does not claim its origin in man, but with God; man is but the instrument. All men are imperfect. But we do not admit the calumnious

"The man with a definite object in view has got it all over the fellow who has none."

"Don't believe all you see. The tallest shaft in the cemetery doesn't reach the nearest to heaven."

charges sometimes made against the Prophet of Palmyra.

If the "Disciples' Church" is sincere in its effort to dispose of principles by an assault on character, if it believes the Bible, and is "no respecter of persons," why does it single out Joseph Smith—why does it not go on and attack the character of Noah, Lot, David, Calvin, John Wesley, Alexander Campbell and others?

Not a single sentence can be produced from the pen of Joseph Smith sanctioning polygamy. Monogamy was the law of the church founded under his instrumentality, until and after his death. Decisions have been arrived at impartially in courts of law, altogether in favor of this position. Men who have thoroughly investigated the subject, have declared their belief that polygamy was first promulgated and taught by Brigham Young.

One who attacks another should not object to his own work being examined. We will now engage in a brief review of the origin, organization, faith, and doctrines of the "Church of Christ," "Disciples of Christ," or Christian Church. The disparities and deficiencies of this institution will be disclosed by a contrast with the New Testament church. We shall not attack character—we shall deal with principles. Let it be kept in mind that, in this article, we shall quote from their own books, listed in their catalogues of publications. Herewith we submit twenty-six crudities of this religious denomination:

1. Thomas Campbell arrived in America from Scotland in 1807, followed by his son Alexander in 1809. Claiming Presbyterian membership they were at once received into that church. Trouble soon arose through the father attempting to foist his peculiar views on the people. The invasion was resisted. Both Campbells denounced the church, and called a meeting to which all were invited who were friendly to their viewpoint. At this meeting an organization was formed, which was named, "The Christian Association of Washington."—(Sketches of Our Pioneers, pp. 24-26.)

This association published a "Declaration and address" to the world in 1809, in which it is stated its members had resolved:

I. That we form ourselves into a religious association under the denomination of the Christian Association of Washington.

IV. That this society, by no means considers itself a church, nor does at all assume to itself the powers peculiar to such a society.—Page 4, articles 1, 4.

This "Christian Association of Washington," which formally announced to the world it did not consider itself a church, was what evolved into the "Church of Christ"! Note what follows.

2. Concerning their origin we read from their history:

The Campbells were still connected with the Presbyterian Church, but the Christian Association was exciting hostility on all sides. In May, 1811, Brush Run Church was organized with twenty-nine members. It was called "The First Church of the Christian Association of Washington County, Pennsylvania."

The principles taught by the Campbells were now widespread, especially among the Baptists, and in 1827 the Baptist Associations began to declare now—fellowship with the brethren of "The Reformation." From this time we may date the rise of the people known as "Disciples of Christ."

"The Christian Association of Washington" was formed August 17, 1809, and the "Declaration and address" issued September 8, 1809. These marked the beginning of the movement which to-day enrolls a following of millions.

"Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." The formal and actual commencement of the reformation plead by the Campbells began with the declaration of this sentiment.—Sketches of Our Pioneers, pp. 25, 26, 31, 37, 43.

3. The following excerpt from a letter of introduction given by Henry Clay at Washington to Alexander Campbell before his departure for Great Britain, points out definitely the "head" and "founder" of the movement:

Doctor Campbell is among the most eminent citizens of the United States . . . head and founder of one of the most important and respectable religious communities in the United States.—Memoirs of A. Campbell, vol. 2, p. 548.

In carrying this document abroad, representing himself as the "head" and "founder" of the church, we are assured as to the real time and place of the origin of the section under examination.

4. The "movement" was inaugurated without a claim of any command or revelation from God, Christ or the Holy Spirit. Alexander Campbell taught:

We want no new message from the skies—no ambassadors from Christ. In short, there is no need to have men among us professing to be called and sent by God.—Christian Baptist, p. 21.

5. It will be seen from what follows that Alexander Campbell first preached, then was ordained, after which he was baptized:

July 15, 1810, he [Alexander Campbell] preached his first sermon. Afterwards he spoke constantly in churches, at the crossroads, in private houses wherever opportunities offered. He was ordained to the ministry January 1, 1812, and was baptized by Mathias Luce, June 14, 1812.—Sketches of Our Pioneers, pp. 37, 38.

It is not strange that an institution conceived by such a mind should entertain novel views and teach eccentric doctrines.

6. The "movement" is in the fog—does not know whether its work is one of restoration, of succession, or of reformation in its effort to bless mankind. Elder B. B. Tyler says:

I am compelled to say that I do not know whether the Christian Church, as a church, claims to be successors, reformers, or restorers.—Discipleism, p. 8.

It is still true that "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

7. The organization of the "Disciples' Church," "Church of Christ," "Christian Church," etc., comprises only the offices of evangelist, elder, and deacon. There is no record in the Holy Scriptures of a church having only three offices.

8. The ministry of the church of Jesus Christ of New Testament times were inspired. All of the ministry of the "Church of Christ," founded in the latter days by Alexander Campbell, are uninspired.

9. Apostles personally directed the Church of Jesus Christ, 1900 years ago. The "Church of Christ" does not even believe in living apostles—yet it sometimes claims it has restored the apostolic church!

10. If dead apostles and dead prophets fully meet the requirements of the "Church of Christ" to-day, why is there not also reliance placed upon dead elders, dead deacons, and dead evangelists? Why believe in living elders, living deacons, and living evangelists, and in dead prophets and dead apostles? What right has the "Church of Christ" to say certain offices in the church of Jesus Christ should have no living occupants? At no time in the whole history of the New Testament church was the superstition believed that certain offices in the church should be occupied by dead men. There was a succession of apostles in the church (Read 1 Corinthians 12:28; Ephesians 4:11-16; Acts 1:20-26; 2:14; 14:14; Romans 11:13).

11. The church founded by Alexander Campbell repudiates present revelation from God—what a striking contrast to the New Testament church!

12. The "movement" maintained by the followers of Alexander Campbell renders a valuable service in warning the world against "false prophets"; but, mark the fact there is no one in the "Church of Christ" who can be referred to as a true prophet! It believes in the existence of living false prophets, but not in living true prophets! This institution canonizes dead prophets, and cannonades living ones! This has not been the attitude of the church of God in any age.

13. In the absence of revelation from God, how do the clergy of the "Church of Christ" know their calling is to represent God and officiate in his holy ordinances? And how do they know whether they should act in the office of an evangelist, elder, or deacon? Is a gigantic guess by uninspired men likely to set in order the affairs of the kingdom of God?

14. The world is asked to believe that this "association" which receives no revelation from God, and possesses but three offices occupied by uninspired men chosen by men, is in fact the church of Jesus Christ, the glorious pathway of which, according to the Scriptures, was illumined by revelation from God, and whose officers were apostles, prophets, evangelists, bishops, etc., all of whom were appointed of God and inspired—this is more than inspired men would ask the world to believe.

15. Christ said to his ministry who were divinely appointed:

He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.—Matthew 10:40.

Whoever receives the clergy of the "Church of Christ" receives merely the congregation that sent them. In selecting its ministry this sect ignores God—claims no revelation. No proof can be produced of one of the ministry of the New Testament church who did not possess delegated authority from God. And yet the "Church of Christ" thinks at times it is a restoration of the New Testament church!

16. The teaching of the "Church of Christ" is in the past tense. It says God did reveal himself; the spiritual gifts of prophecy, inspired visions, etc. (1 Corinthians 12), were enjoyed in the first century by the people of God; the sick were healed; apostles and prophets were in the church; men did receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit; the laying on of hands was observed for the reception of the Holy Spirit, etc. This negative teaching comes in formidable conflict with the Scriptures wherein it is stated that God "changes not," is "no respecter of persons," and that Jesus Christ is the "same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

17. The Lord said:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16:15-18.

The sect founded by Alexander Campbell says the signs were to follow the apostles only. But Jesus in addressing his apostles, in making known whom the signs would follow, uses the personal pronoun "them," which is of the third person, and undoubtedly includes all who would believe and obey the gospel. The history of the New Testament church bears out this interpretation—the "signs" were not confined to the apostles.

18. The administration of baptism by women, in the "Church of Christ," is a historical fact and by them indorsed. (Sketches of Our Pioneers, p. 94.)

19. The "Church of Christ" worships a speechless God—one who spoke 1900 years ago, but is not accessible by revelation to his church to-day. This institution, in so worshiping, surreptitiously attacks the holy doctrine of God's unchangeability.

20. The "Church of Christ" claims to believe in the "Bible and Bible alone;" yet has in addition to the Bible a Discipline (found in the Christian System) to govern the people and an uninspired Christian Ministers' Manual to guide the ministrations of its ministers. A casual contrast with the Bible reveals serious shortcomings in the books. Which shall we accept: the Bible, or the Discipline and Manual?

21. The "Church of Christ" in receiving members into its fold has substituted handshaking for the ordinance of the laying on of hands as practiced by the ministry of the church of Jesus Christ (Acts 8: 12, 14-20; 9: 17; 19: 4-6; Hebrews 6: 1, 2). The laying on of hands was also practiced by the New Testament church for ordination (Acts 13: 1-3; 6: 5, 6; 1 Timothy 4: 14); for blessing of children (Mark 10: 13-16); and healing of the sick (Luke 4: 40; Mark 6: 5; Acts 28: 8; 9: 17; James 5: 14, 15). The "Church of Christ" practices laying on of hands only for ordination. This institution should revise its slogan to read: "We speak where the Bible is silent, and are silent where the Bible speaks."

22. The church founded by Alexander Campbell represents a mere fragmentary part of the New Testament church as the whole church of God! Without the parts there cannot be the whole.

23. It teaches that baptism is for the remission of sins, yet it receives into full fellowship members from other churches not baptized for the remission of sins. For instance, Baptists do not baptize for the "remission of sins," yet they are received into full fellowship.

24. According to the theology of Alexander Campbell, which is the teaching of the "Church of Christ," the New Testament church is made more perfect by the elimination of the greater portion of its organization, doctrine, gifts, etc. Such a claim, it is scarcely necessary to say, attacks the divinity of Jesus Christ, whose work is perfect. This institution should learn that what is of God cannot be improved upon by man, neither by addition nor by subtraction.

25. Nowhere in the Bible can a record be found of an institution like the "Church of Christ." Surely it is not sound to argue that because the "Church of Christ" worships a speechless God; receives no revelation; has no living apostles or prophets; no inspired ministry; no ministry called by revelation; a ministry who are appointed by men, and preach for so much a sermon, or by the week, month or year; no angelic ministrations; no gifts of the Holy Spirit; no healing of the sick; etc., therefore, it is the Church of Jesus Christ whole and complete!

It may be seen from the foregoing that the "Church of Christ" is immeasurably farther from the New Testament order of the church than the Southern Cross is from the Polar Star!

26. It is the policy of the "Church of Christ" when weak, numerically or otherwise, to adopt a conciliatory attitude towards all religious bodies and one that will bring popularity; but when it grows strong it attempts to demolish everything in sight. The following from their "head" and "founder" is offered as proof:

The present popular exhibition of the Christian religion is a compound of Judaism, heathen philosophy, and Christianity.—Christian Baptist, p. 9.

The worshiping establishments now in operation throughout Christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the Church of Rome.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 3, p. 362.

Surely the "Church of Christ" in its own books does not misrepresent its attitude towards other churches!

There is no need to extend the investigation. "Mene, Mene, Tekal," has been found written on the forehead of the sect launched under the uninspired leadership of Alexander Campbell. The title "Church of Christ" is a misnomer.

This institution has learned in debate with our representatives that the claims of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints cannot be set aside by an appeal to the Scriptures and sound reasoning. Possibly this explains the frequent assaults on character, instead of dealing with principles.

It is the policy of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to preach the gospel of Christ as understood by the church, believing the same privilege should be enjoyed by all other churches. But when attacked we are ready to defend ourselves—this accounts for this brief analysis of the claims of the "Church of Christ," founded by Alexander Campbell.

PAUL M. HANSON.

Our modern churches have become the most irritating institutions on earth, and they are doing nothing but breeding coteries of most undesirable people, all of them narrow, especially those who boast of their broad-mindedness, trained in partiality, drilled to defend a parochial area of religion, with a fixed and fanatical adherence to one element of Christianity, and a bundle of prejudices concerning all the others. Surely the madness of it all is now visible and the hunger of man's religious nature has grown too fierce to be contented with the unwholesome dietaries the rival churches provide.—W. E. Orchard, D. D., in The Outlook for Religion.

DREAMS

The Scriptures and profane history teach that in all ages and among all people men have dreamed; some of these dreams were prophetic and were understood by those who received them. We shall not attempt to explain the philosophy of dreams, but we accept them as manifestations of the power of God, as we accept the fact that the grass grows and the flowers bloom.

Centuries ago, when the Jaredite kingdom was flourishing on this continent, Omer was the reigning king. His son, Jared, plotted to dethrone his father and become king himself. He succeeded by his cunning maneuvers to so manipulate affairs that it was necessary for Omer, the king, to leave the throne and flee for his life. That he might know what was best for him to do "the Lord warned Omer in a dream that he should depart out of the land." (Book of Mormon, p. 735.)

Omer followed the instructions he had received in the dream and escaped the evil designs of his unnatural son.

About six hundred years before Christ the Jews in Jerusalem were very wicked. The prophets called upon them to repent and warned them of the coming judgments of Jehovah, unless they would change their manner of living.

Among them were a few righteous souls. The Lord selected from among these, two families and directed them to come to America and make their homes upon this choice land. The leader of these two families was named Lehi and he was instructed at first as the following describes: "And it came to pass that the Lord commanded my father, even in a dream, that he should take his family and depart into the wilderness." (Book of Mormon, p. 4.)

The Lord has not confined this blessing to his church, but even the Gentiles have received dreams of prophetic significance. In Genesis 40: 5-19 we find the record of two men who occupied responsible positions in the household "of the king of Egypt." They offended the king and were cast into prison. While in this unfortunate condition "they dreamed a dream both of them, each man his dream in one night." These dreams were interpreted by Joseph, the favored son of Jacob, and both dreams were fulfilled according to the interpretation. Both of these men were heathens and idolators.

Some time after this, Pharaoh, the king of Egypt, had prophetic dreams that were interpreted by Joseph also, and they were literally fulfilled. (Genesis 41: 1-37.)

The dreams were given to those men by the Lord, although they had no connection whatever with the church. They did not understand them and perhaps these dreams would have been of no particular benefit to them if they had not been interpreted by Joseph. The Lord gave the dreams to these men and the interpretation to Joseph to bring about the conditions he had designed.

Years after this, when the descendants of Jacob had become very numerous and were living in the promised land of Canaan, they "did evil in the sight of the Lord and the Lord delivered them into the hands of Midian seven years." (Judges 6: 1.)

The afflictions that were brought upon the Israelites by the Midianites caused them to remember the Lord and to repent of their sins; and "when the children of Israel cried unto the Lord because of the Midianites" the Lord sent a prophet to instruct them so they would know the course that was best for them to pursue. (Judges 6: 6-11.)

Then an angel appeared to Gideon and gave him instructions how to proceed to deliver the Israelites from the Midianite bondage. He collected and equipped an army for battle. The soldiers were few in number but they were men prepared for such a task. Gideon led this little army near the camp of the Midianites where they had an army of vast numbers collected. Gideon slipped away from his own men and came into the camp of the enemy. As he drew near a tent he heard a man talking. He was relating a dream and his companion gave the interpretation of it.

He said, "Behold, I dreamed a dream and lo, a cask of barley bread tumbled into the host of Midian, and came unto a tent and smote it that it fell, and overturned it that it lay along. And his fellow said, 'This is nothing else than the sword of Gideon.'" (Judges 7: 13, 14.) This dream was not only given to one out of the church, but the interpretation was given also.

The history of the Turkish nation was outlined to quite an extent from the time it was ruled by a petty chief to the present by a dream to Ottoman, about 1290 A. D., who is regarded as the founder of the Ottoman Empire.

Many noted men of the past have been guided and encouraged by dreams, and the Lord has promised that in the last days of the world's history "your young men shall see visions and your old men shall dream dreams." (Acts 2: 17.)

This promise is being realized and many of the Saints have been instructed and encouraged by them. I, too, have been blessed with a few dreams that have been encouraging and instructive to me, although they may be of little value to anyone else. I shall relate one that changed my opinion on a mooted question and settled my mind on the future work of the church.

I received this dream shortly after the death of our late president, Joseph Smith. In the dream I went to Brother Joseph's home. He was in the yard caring for some plants. I was received cordially, but not intimately—just about as we had met and talked during his lifetime. In the dream I was somewhat anxious to know about the work of Brother Fred M., and the conditions that would prevail during his administration. It is usual for us to expect the unnatural and the marvelous, and I wondered how much of it we would see in the near future. I asked Joseph if Brother Fred M. was the "one mighty and strong" referred to by his father in his letter to W. W. Phelps. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 259.)

His answer was short and direct. I asked a few other questions that grew out of the answer he gave to the first one. They were all clear and concise. I remember the scene distinctly, also his appearance and the substance of his answers, but cannot repeat them word for word.

But he gave me to understand that the "one mighty and strong" spoken of by his father, referred to the president of the church as such, instead of any particular person. That every president of the church was "mighty and strong," in the sense that the term was used by the seer as a result of his official position; it was also his duty and calling "to set in order the house of God," and do the work outlined in this letter when such work was necessary. And he said his father understood this but as he was then occupying the position which made him the "one mighty and strong" of his generation, he failed to make this thought clear through diffidence.

He told me Brother Fred M. would do his work as the president of the church successfully as his father and grandfather had done their work. He gave me to understand that the church would meet difficulties and overcome them under Fred M.'s administration as the church had done in the past. That there would be no wonderful display of miraculous power, such as some were expecting; the Lord would enable the Saints to redeem Zion but it would not be an easy victory. God would carry his work on to success by aiding and assisting according to natural law, about as in the past.

The problems of life and those of the church must be met and solved as our forefathers met and solved them in their days. There was no promise of "sailing on flowery beds of ease," but success will continue to come to those who work and pray for it, about as it has come in the past.

A few have expected something wonderful to happen, like the feeding of the Israelites on manna or the dividing of the Red Sea, to bring about the redemption of Zion and the final triumph of the church. Nothing of this nature has happened in this dispensation and there are no indications at the present that it will happen in the future.

Conditions to-day are very similar as they were when I entered the ministry thirty years ago. We had to preach and explain the principles of the gospel then to make a convert, and we must do the same now. We had to purchase every foot of land at the selling price in the land of Zion then, to obtain possession of it, and we must do the same now. Our differences on church policies were fought out in quorums and councils and on the floor of the General Conferences then, and so they are now. Our sick were sometimes healed by the power of God then and sometimes they were not, just as they are now.

It was necessary for the elders and others to study in order to learn then just as it is now. Men were aided by the Spirit of the Lord but those who failed to study then never learned very much, neither do they now. They said "have went" then as they do now.

And Joseph presented the thought that similar conditions would continue to prevail during Brother Fred M.'s administration. I for one am willing to continue the fight even if no spectacular display of miracles are seen, and the odds continue to be against us as they have been in the past.

I feel sure of final victory for the faithful and that our present president will do his work as well as either his father or grandfather.

Our interest in the church, our desire for its success, and the importance of the office makes the president of special interest to us, as an official, as well as a member of the body of Christ. We desire to see him succeed for the good of the church and also for his own glory and salvation. This is one reason why we feel at liberty to refer to our president in public as well as private.

I am satisfied he will have the support and confidence of the church as much as his father or grandfather had, and that his policies will be dictated by the Spirit as much as theirs were, and be as well received by the church.

There is a great deal too much reading at random of this book to-day, and of that to-morrow, with no careful method governing the selection, and no high purpose gathering up the results into a definite good. One cannot read all the books that are published; one cannot even know by name the books that have been written; the only possible achievement is to adopt some eclectic system and abide by it rigorously; to do a little reading upon a few choice topics and do it thoroughly and well.—Boston Literary World.

SHALL WE CALL A CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY As Provided by the United States Constitution?

BY BOUCK WHITE IN "THE OUTLOOK"

Social revolution may, without too great a stretch of words, be called Mr. White's religion. His book, "The Call of the Carpenter," presents Jesus as a leader of workingmen in a social revolution. It was the Church of the Social Revolution of which Mr. White was pastor when he was first sent to prison, because he had disturbed the peace of a service in a church on Fifth Avenue, New York City. It was because he participated in a ceremonial burning of the American flag, with those of other nations, in protest against what he believed to be social wrongs tolerated under capitalistic governments and in symbolic representation of the welding of all nations in internationalism, that he was sent to prison for a third time in three years. Beside his doctrines the views of many Americans who call themselves radicals are palely conservative. Whatever may be said of his opinions, it cannot be said of him that he is overcautious. His methods have at times been inconsistent with public order and have no sanction in the right of free speech; but they have provided him with an opportunity to be heard by a public that would otherwise not have listened to him, and for that opportunity he has paid the price of imprisonment. What some regard as his escapades and others as his sufferings for righteousness' sake have not only afforded publicity for his views, but have attested his right to be classed as a radical. At this time, when many social revolutionaries assuming to speak on behalf of the working people of the world have shown a tendency to compromise with the most powerful of military autocracies, the words which this radical social revolutionist addresses to his "fellow-malcontents" are worth a wide hearing.—The Editors of The Outlook.

In asking my fellow-malcontents to support the war I shall not be accused of jingoism or faint-heartedness. The war has been going three years, and during it I have served three prison sentences. Now, however, on release from my last imprisonment, I find that America has entered the conflict. To anyone trained to think in the thought forms of organized civilization this fact puts new and different face to affairs.

Whatever can be said of the rights of a minority in time of peace cannot be affirmed with equal truth for times of foreign war. It matters not by whose fault the accident happened; when the ship is off a lee shore with the anchors dragging and the officers are laboring to inch her away into an offing, mutiny by the crew is illogical, unsagacious, indefensible. My readings in the book of history show me not one instance of pacifist success after the howitzers had begun their bellowings. When the herd has once stampeded, there is nothing to do but ride along with them and let them run it off; defiance would be uselessly dangerous; and to withdraw in a fit of the sulks—'twould stamp one king of quitters. In time of war the word of the constituted authorities must be law. Nice distinctions are lost in moments of blood and thunder. How ideal soever be the motives of those Russians who have been giving way on the German front, not all the explainings through historic ages will rehabilitate them and their families in the estimation of the normal-minded.

But it's for a deeper reason I decry the pin-prick policy that American radicalism is going off into. 'Tis the most wonderful moment, probably, since time began for remaking the social map. To fritter away an hour such as this in a campaign of splutter and nagging would be a crime against the human race. Washington is going to make—is making—abundant mistakes. Our form of Government is not adapted to military operations. Inexperienced and unadjusted, we find ourselves headforemost in titantic warrior business. History teaches that the privations attendant upon a state of war are never borne cheerfully except the people are kept in a groggy frame of mind by the careering march of their conquering banners or else are terrorized by an enemy hammering at the gates. Both of these stimuli Americans will lack. We are going to have the miseries of war without its compensating excitements.

A richer seed-plot for malcontentment to sprout in could scarcely be imagined. When the war taxes crush downwards and the war prices mount upwards, a fertile crop of complainings is sure to germinate. To mobilize these murmurings into demotionist bands harassing the Government would be the easiest thing in the world. And already the radical forces are yielding to it; fomenting strikes, sabotage, flippant insurrections, food riots, race antagonisms. These tactics are eminently adapted to cut furrows in the face of our President and put bags under his eyes. But it will not stay his hand. 'Twill but add needlessly to the distracted counsels, the darkness, the confused noise, the garments rolled in blood. In time of war the Government holds all the trump cards—and ought to. Anyone who clogs the motion of the military arm invites terrible discomfiture. The mighty here in America have staked high in this war against Germany, and the industrial plant at their back is equipping them with an armament beyond describing for powerfulness and swift metallic onset. The foe is likewise multipotent, and is building a colossal rampart. The impact is like to be that of an irresistible force colliding with an immovable obstruction. Whoso gets in between these two while they are in their present mood will resemble Alpine daffodils in the path of an avalanche.

But 'tis the pettiness of the attempt spurs my remonstrance. Radicalism, by its baptismal name, means getting at the root of the poison-upas tree. It pooh-poohs the reformer's notion that a snipping off of a leaf here or a twig there will avail; it insists—New Testamentwise—in laying the ax at the root. God knows, the world needs root work to-day if it ever did. Never was a moment when vaster multitudes were ripe to take up a program of Thorough in new-modeling our social edifice, provided the designers of that program see life steadily and see it whole; beholding man to be a human being instead of merely a food-pipe. But if radicalism fails to rise to the bigness of the hour and proves herself naught but an aggregation of irresponsibles firing on American troops from behind, bushwhacker fashion, there will not be enough left of her when the war is finished to hold a wake over.

I am not unmindful of the rejoinder that will probably be made: "War prices require that the working class strike, in order to protect their standard of living." I say, the present standard of living of the working class is not worth protecting. And to barter away the present opportunity of social alteration in return for a mutton stew, would purchase a mess of pottage at an appalling price. Poor tacticians are they who haggle over pennies when bank notes are theirs for the asking. Hunger, I know, is a sharp lash. But there have been hungry men before now who refused to eat the calf while it was yet inside the cow. If it be objected that the workers cannot rise to this broader skyline because they have been suckled in a short and trivial view of life, I answer that it is precisely in order to widen their visual angle that we must begin to talk in terms of fundamental reconstruction. Could destiny play us a more terrific April-fool than to bring us out of this cataclysmic era with nothing but our "standard of living protected"? In war time strikes have a treasonable squint. It may be the most justifiable strike ever pulled off. But 'twill be cartooned as a paid-for move to give aid and comfort to the enemy. America needs law-abiding desperadoes; men and women who are haggard at the stark materialism of the time and give their days and nights to a reshaping of Christendom's program; but who, just because of the gravity of the situation, yield their loyalty to any government now in existence until a better one can be set up.

The United States Constitution permits such a course. It foresaw a convulsive era like the present and provided for it. Along with the ordinary patchwork method of amending the Constitution it devised machinery for calling a constituent assembly when the tides of change should sweep in with a current too massive to be taken care of by the customary channel. A good many people are unaware that this second device is provided for in that instrument. At a dinner party the other night where were a college professor in sociology and the former editor of a New York daily I broached the matter. Both of them affirmed that this second method of amendment did not exist. Indeed, the professor of sociology—inclined like not a few of his clan, to draw historical facts from his theories rather than his theories from historical facts—explained how such a provision could not possibly be in the instrument, because no Constitution could be expected to provide for its own hari-kiri.

But it's there. Article V, after giving the ordinary formula of amendment, follows with a unanimous Or: "Congress, on application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which shall be valid when ratified by three-fourths of the several States." That is to say, we have two legal and detailed methods of altering the social scheme of things: one, the reform method; the other, the revolution method. The first is applicable to patch up weather-beaten places in the edifice. The other was intended to come into play when, because of some far-going change in the environment, an alteration from turret to foundation is requisite, changing not this detail or that, but the ground plan itself and the very uses to which the building shall be put.

This second method has never yet been employed; has remained a dead letter during all the years since 1787 because we have never before been in the swirl of a convulsion. But the framers—able-headed men—knew that such periods arrive. Literate in historic lore, they knew that there are epochs when the new wine comes so foamingly from the press of events that it's unsafe to pour it into the old bottle. Therefore, to the end that the new dispensation might be inaugurated soundly, in the majesty of a deliberative assembly—the people supporting the provisional government until the new can be established—they inserted the machinery I have quoted.

If we are to improve this moment in history—a dear-purchased moment, bought with an infinite price—to get our constituent assembly, we have no time to lose to get the thing under way, so that mere guerrilla assaults on this method or that in the conduct of the war are a waste of golden moments. In order to get our constituent assembly we have to persuade the Legislatures in two-thirds of the States to demand it. Then Congress has got to call it. Then the members of the constituent assembly have got to be chosen. Then they must meet and decide upon the new form of government. Then their proposal must go to the several States and be ratified by three-fourths of them. Here is a job big enough to occupy all the energies of all of our social idealists.

To talk constituent assembly will be in every way wholesome. Each malcontent converted to it will be that much fire drawn from under the boilers of sabotage, strikes, disloyalty of every species. Negation is ever a graceless employment. An affirmative note is what the times call for with groanings which cannot be uttered. At present we have only tearers-down or preservers of the status quo. The waging of the war will not of itself change anything; nor will a mere policy of snarl and grouch. If alteration is to come, there must organize itself a constructive band of idealists who will stop criticising what is and begin to put forward what ought to be. Merely to acquaint the people that "constituent assembly" is to be found in the United States Constitution would of itself be a work of wide-extending import. At this moment ultra-radicals are contesting the "constitutionality" of the Draft Law. To win on such an issue, while a tactical victory, would be strategically a defeat, leaving the social regeneration gold-bricked and sand-bagged. Some very good sleuth-hounds have been known, under the stress of an unusual distraction, to lose the scent and deviate on a comparatively unimportant side trail. The framers of the Constitution were more radical than we. With liberal wisdom they inserted political machinery whereby we can call in question the constitutionality of the Constitution.

To gospelize the city and the countryside with this good news would acclimate the minds of the people to the zone and temperature of fundamental change. The mere noise that a constituent assembly was in process of being called would start thousands of thousands of people dreaming out a nobler scheme of things. Further, it would weld the radicals together. In order to control the constituent assembly they would have to present a unified program. In the constructing of such all schools from reddest red to palest pink would need to collaborate. That discipline, that habitude of union, would work in radicalism a poise of spirit. Brought forth from its minings and underground routes into the sunlit day, it would take on a tone and complexion of healthfulness. It would face the world square-shouldered, its countenance winsome by reason of responsible sobriety, instead of the haphazard, higgledy-piggledy spectacle it now presents.

There is a prodigious amount of unrest in this country. And among the great middle class even more than the artisan workers. Within four years ninety-nine amendments to the Constitution have been proposed on the floor of Congress. Those ninety-nine proposals of change, bunched in so short a time and with so weighty a sponsorship, are of themselves enough to justify the calling of a constituent assembly. But this was before our entrance into the war—one of the greatest events in the history of the world. The cyclonic calamity that has burst is jostling multitudes out of their dormancy. People are in a teachable mood as seldom they have been before; and they will stand in, if a program is unfurled to them concretely and intelligently. Erstwhile standpatters not a few are losing their bourbon hideboundness; they are commencing to hang their harps on the willows, as they see the Pandora box of devilment that has been unsealed to plague the world. People are heart-broken over this war that is dismembering Christendom. They are spiritually in a migratory mood; are willing to have their understandings lit up. "Constituent assembly" marshals these many and fine disquietudes which the day is engendering. In thus legalizing revolution, the framers of the Constitution were statesmen. For therein they dug a mill-race for sluicing off the flood waters, lest with the piled-up rebelliousness the dam burst, letting many torments loose upon mankind.

The discontent of American radicalism is at present doing much to demoralize the situation in Russia. The connections between thousands of radicals here with that country is sending across to friends there a perpetual stream of disloyal incitements; hampering those who are seeking in Petrograd a sound procedure of social alteration. For American radicalism to adopt the twofold program here outlined, "constituent assembly" and loyalty to the Government while the new is being engineered, would set a beneficent example to the reconstructors in Russia. In truth, by focusing the discontent in all of the allied countries into this safe and sane channel, permitting fealty to the establishment with at the same time a dogged resolve to alter the establishment, it might become the determining factor in the war.

UTAH AND PLURAL MARRIAGE

We have had several questions of late in regard to the present position of the church in Utah on the subject of plural marriage. A recent letter, under date of August 25, 1917, from a young man who evidently belongs to that church reads as follows:

Those who went and suffered are now old and gray, living in ease, for Utah is built up by the Saints and many are wealthy and enjoying the fruits of the gospel. You say the prophet had only one wife, even though we were to know that President Young introduced polygamy, how wise it was at that time and age when the West was new and in order to people it, such a commandment was given. The day will yet come when our great Nation will practice this teaching again. Let it be understood that our brethren who were in polygamy was like a godhead, for he prayed for all in his care and out of such families have I seen manhood unequaled come. While I myself would be unable to live such a life, I am only twenty, but it is because I have not the testimony as they had nor do I have such faith, for one must have faith and be ideal before he can live this life, which is also agreeable to the Lord as of old.

This, however, might not be considered authoritative, but in the Deseret Evening News for August 20, 1917, page 8, we find the following extract from a sermon by Colonel Willard Young. This extract would seem to set forth clearly their present position, since such doctrine is only to be found in the so-called revelation on polygamy.

MARRIAGE FOR ETERNITY

The Latter Day Saints believe in marriage for the life to come, celestial marriage as it is called. Such a marriage can be performed only by one who holds divine authority. Unless married by this authority men and women will appear in the next world in an unmarried state. Exaltation in the celestial kingdom means that a man will rule over a kingdom, and the subjects of this kingdom will be his own posterity. If a man has no posterity how can he have a kingdom? This church teaches that marriages should be performed in a temple, for time and all eternity; and that such a marriage is a foundation for a kingdom and an exaltation in a future state. A marriage by a civil magistrate ends with the death of either party, and is not recognized in the future state.

THE RED CROSS CALL

A call for help has come from the battle front in France on behalf of American soldiers, the soldiers of their Allies, and of the destitute civilians of devastated Belgium and Northern France. Six million warm, knitted woolen articles are needed to help them get through the winter. The appeal has come to the American Red Cross at Washington, and it specifies 1,500,000 each of sweaters, mufflers, wristlets and socks.

The call is official. Major Grayson M. P. Murphy of General Pershing's staff, the Red Cross Commissioner for Europe, who knows better perhaps than any other man just how badly these things are needed, has cabled for them. Here is part of his message:

"Last winter broke the record for cold and misery among the people here. We inexpressibly dread the coming winter finding us without supplies to meet the situation. We urge you, on behalf of our soldiers and those of our Allies, who will suffer in their frozen trenches, and also thousands of French and Belgian refugees, to begin shipping at once 1,500,000 each of the warm, knitted, woolen articles named. They must come before cold weather."

The entire people of the land are called upon to render this service to the men in khaki and those struggling with them. The hearts of the people will be in the task because their own are among those who need the service. Every county, every village, every voting precinct, is sending of its best to fight for the country, and the woman who knits one of these garments feels, with every stitch, that it may be her own son, her own brother, or one of her dearest friends, who may be kept more comfortable by her work.

From Director John J. O'Connor of the Central Division of the Red Cross, with headquarters at Chicago, the call went forth to 1,081 chapters in the Central States, urging the members to answer the cry. The chapters called on the Red Cross Supply Service for yarn, knitting needles, and full instructions for the knitting. In the meantime, knitting committees were formed in the chapters, and volunteers called for.

The Supply Service was forced to ask some chapters to buy their yarn and needles in the local markets, or from whatever source they could most quickly get them. The Supply Service had not on hand enough goods to fill such an unprecedented demand on such short notice. Washington could not even supply, as rapidly as they were needed, the printed instructions for the knitting, and the newspapers were called on to print the directions so that every knitter might have a copy.

But the work must be hurried. "They must come before cold weather," cabled Major Murphy. That means that the entire 6,000,000 articles must be completed in the shortest possible time, and sent to France. The chapters were urged to use every possible minute, and to call on every woman and girl who can knit, whether or not she is a Red Cross member, and ask her to help in the work.

We in America, who as yet can scarcely realize that our country is at war, have no conception of the terrible need of the millions of people in France and Belgium whose lands are overrun by the Germans. Utterly penniless, with no possessions save the ragged clothes on their backs, they suffered incredibly by tens of thousands last winter. Now they face another winter, weakened by the trials they have already undergone, and it is "up to the Red Cross" to keep them from dying of cold. They are enduring what military experts have pointed out Americans will be called on to endure if the Germans ever beat the Allied armies and navies, and attack America on her own shores.

This call for knitted articles is but one phase of the work of relief which the American Red Cross must carry on. Washington has repeatedly warned the chapters that the knitting must not be permitted to stop or delay the making of surgical supplies—wound dressings, splints, bandages, operating garments and the thousands of other things which surgeons and nurses must have when they wait on the wounded. These must be kept flowing in a never-ending stream, increasing in volume as our own men near the front. The knitting is merely an "extra rush order" in addition to everything else the Red Cross has undertaken to do.

The American soldiers are furnished with uniforms and overcoats and shoes and everything that the army regulations call for. The knitted articles are for their extra comfort—and in the case of the refugee civilians, are absolute necessities.

Every reader of this article is urged to get a supply of yarn and needles, and knit—or have some one else knit—as many of these articles as possible and as quickly as possible. The knitted goods should be sent by the knitters of the Central Division to the nearest Red Cross chapter, which will send them with all speed to the Red Cross Supply Service, Wakem & McLaughlin Warehouse, 225 East Illinois Street, Chicago. In case the knitter cannot get in touch with a Red Cross chapter, she may send the goods direct to the warehouse.

SUPPRESSION OF THE I. W. W.

It is hard to see why, if federalized troops can be properly used to arrest I. W. W. leaders in Spokane in advance of the commission of any offense and to hold them as military prisoners, the War Department cannot also arrest the mine owners and managers and their agents who have trampled on law and order and the sacred rights of hundreds of citizens in Bisbee, Arizona. Detailed accounts of what happened in Bisbee when 1,200 striking miners were deported are beginning to come in, and it is clear to the most skeptical and cautious reader that the action of the Citizens Committee exceeded anything that could have been remotely justified on the ground of excitement or apprehension. The miners had previously offered to work the mines if the Federal Government would take charge of operations. Four hundred and thirty-two of the deported men are married. As many more had registered for the draft, 468 were citizens, 205 had bought Liberty Bonds, 235 were property owners, and 520 were contributors to the Red Cross. To-day their families are being supported by public charity while they remain in a detention camp at Columbus, New Mexico, and the mine managers and their flunkies bar entrance to Bisbee to all whose appearance and testimony do not promise acquiescence in their arbitrary rule. Secretary Baker and the other high officials of the War Department are to-day the most overworked men in America, with problems of infinite intricacy and importance to solve. But it would require a brief half hour for the giving of an order that would return the deported men to Bisbee and keep them there under federal protection so long as they act in a law-abiding manner.—Editorial in The Public, August 31, 1917.

PLAIN TALK ABOUT DEBT

To keep dirt, debt, and the Devil out of the home is one of the biggest tasks of life. I am not going to say here that all three have never been seen around my premises, but I am going to say that I hate the trio as David said he hated the wicked—"with perfect hatred." If everybody hated debts as I do, the money-lenders would be obliged to hunt a new job.

If you want to have bushels of anxiety and wagon-loads of trouble, go in debt. If you want to know care and have wrinkles furrowing your brow sooner than nature intended, go in debt. Speculate a little; ride in another's automobile; wear other men's clothes; run on the other fellow's money; and you will see trouble enough.

Beware of running accounts. Oh, how fast they increase when once they are started! Fleshly desires and cravings are a sharp whip that keeps the bills running higher. At the end is bankruptcy; if you do not want to see the end, you had better not start any running account.

Beware of the man who wants you to go his security to get him out of a tight place. He may be getting into a tighter place than ever; and if he doesn't, you may. Help a man when he needs it, but keep your eyes open. Never sign for more than you are willing to lose. It is of no use to lock the door after the horse is stolen. To be safe is better than to be sorry. Faith is all right, but it takes cash to pay bills.

Greeley's advice to boys is, "Never run into debt. Avoid pecuniary obligations as you would pestilence and famine. If you have but fifty cents, and can get no more for a week, buy a peck of corn, parch it, and live on it, rather than owe any man a dollar." Now and then some one goes in debt and pays easily. This emboldens others, and they are caught. John Randolph one time said, "I have found the philosopher's stone; it is, Pay as you go." Good advice this. Poverty is hard, but poverty with debt is harder. Many a man has gone deeper into debt to get out of debt, but it was like jumping out of a frying-pan into the fire.

A spirit of speculation pervades the times. High finance takes the place of honest thrift. A man will spend three days loafing around searching for a chance to make an advantageous trade; but maybe he makes the trade and maybe he doesn't. He could have made twice as much had he been working.

John and Mary got along fine on the old homestead that Mary's father gave them until they coveted that land across the fence. So they bought it, and covered the whole place with debts. Times became hard, crops were poor, and then John and Mary had trouble a plenty. They had to sell to get out, and now are looking for a cheap place. Truly, godliness with contentment is great gain. Better be a success on a small place than a failure on a large one.

A fable says that a toad tried to swell to the size of an elephant—and burst. Do not be so foolish. Go only to your capacity. Quit expanding when you get to a reasonable limit. Small engines must pull small loads or break down. Be what you are, and be content. If some people had their debts paid, they would have nothing; and yet they "fly high" among their fellows now.

Going in debt is a bad habit. It grows; to borrow becomes easier and easier. I once knew a man who did not fear debts, hence he had lots of them. They gave him trouble even down to his grave, and his bereaved ones were also troubled by them. Going into debt without a reasonable certainty of being able to pay, is one species of dishonesty.

Now that times are hard in some places, it will be difficult to keep out of debt, but do so if you can. It is not sin to borrow, but it will pay to go very slow with this trouble-maker. Be just as economical as possible; toil and labor, but do not go in debt if possible to keep out. In other places times are good, and there, some will have to be careful lest they give way to "inflation" and speculation. Be safe and sure.

There are honest men in debt; do not be discouraged. Pay as soon as possible, and then stay out.

I have heard of those who have plenty, but who buy more on time, and when a call comes for means to help along God's cause, they excuse themselves by saying they are in debt. Beware of deceiving yourself! God is not mocked. Do not let such debts cause you to act covetous. Sin lies in such subterfuges.

Let us live honestly in the sight of all men, avoiding debt as much as possible; let us meet our present obligation like men, live contented, building by economy and thrift and industry. Let others speculate. Let us live for God, souls, and heaven, and have time to pray, to go to meeting, to worship God our Savior, and to do good to all men.—R. L. B. in The Gospel Trumpet, June 28, 1917.

The number of members of the Red Cross on August 1, 1916, was 206,077. On July 27, 1917, there were 2,547,412 members. Over 3,000 pieces of mail come into Red Cross headquarters each day, and each must receive attention.—Official Bulletin.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

In Retrospect

Back at our desk again, after a most pleasant vacation in the West! Refreshed, with spirit renewed and encouraged, we feel grateful for the experiences of the summer, and desirous of coining them into that which shall be of value to others, also.

Of one thing we feel assured, and that is that the Spirit of God in the latter days is at work among his people in all parts of the land. We found the Saints on the western coast imbued with the same thoughts of service, of sacrifice, of love towards each other and all men, as those which have animated our brethren and sisters in this and other more central places. Everywhere we found the same open doors, the same welcoming hands, and the same faith and confidence. Among the sisters, especially, we found the same awakening desires to more fully qualify for efficient service in the work of the church, and we must say that this has all been very encouraging to us, as well as filling us with a sense of personal responsibility and inadequacy.

We met with the sisters of the Oakland Branch on Thursday afternoon, July 19, many also being present from San Francisco. This was at the home of Sister Jones, whose mother is quite well known in Lamoni and Independence as "Sister Betty Smith." We tried to explain the work of the Auxiliary in general, and that of the various departments in particular. We found they have a "sewing and aid" department which meets quite regularly, though supported by a small percentage of the women in the branch. They also have an Oriole circle, though they feel that as yet their work is hardly well under way. There has also been one study class, conducted in the past by former pastor, Brother Holmes J. Davison, in which there has been much interest and from which the members feel they have derived great benefit. The sisters seemed enthused and animated by a desire to more fully identify themselves with the general forward movement of the church women.

In Los Angeles the auxiliary work is represented only by a sewing department, so far. From comments heard at the reunion, we feel quite sure the sisters will branch out, and become active in other lines of the work, as soon as they are able to do so. Like in other cities, the distances the Saints live from one another and from the church is a great handicap. The Saints in Lamoni, and in Independence do not realize this; but we felt much impressed by this obstacle when talking over conditions with the sisters of the large cities. However, they feel that there will be ways of overcoming some of these difficulties, and we may safely "leave it to" the California people to "find a way, or make one."

The presence of Sister Dora Glines, appointed to represent the general executive at the Southern California reunion, was a source of strength and stimulation to all attending. She, fresh from her summer studies in Los Angeles, passed on to us many very inspirational and suggestive ideas, more valuable because of their modern, "up-to-the-minute" educational character. Her plans for carrying on the educational department of our auxiliary work are very complete, and no group of women, anywhere in the church, which is intending to take up any line of study whatever, should waste one moment before communicating with her, getting her help, and profiting by her splendid experience and preparation for just such work.

At the reunion in question, Thursday was the day upon which the women's work was emphasized. In honor of the occasion, the Oriole girls had decorated the tent in their well-known and beautiful colors, thereby expressing at the same time their own enthusiasm, and their identification with the auxiliary work in general. They also furnished some special singing for one of the services.

We occupied in the forenoon hour, attempting to trace the beginnings and development of organized women's work in the church, and explaining as best we could the present very complete organization. Inviting discussion, we were pleased to note the very active and intelligent interest displayed by the women of the district. Upon the grounds of common interest in our homes, common loyalty to our church and our Government, and a common desire to understand and discharge acceptably our whole duty to God, our women may meet, study, discuss, counsel, and help each other.

Sister Glines was in charge of the afternoon session, at which many definite and vital plans were discussed and explained. She plainly showed the need for study, for improvement, for intelligent understanding of difficulties, and knowledge of proper and efficient ways in which these can be met and overcome. In a later session, the district was organized, Sister Lois Mitchell, of Santa Ana, being chosen for president, an account of which organization will probably come in greater detail from the organizer, herself. Sister Glines also, by distributing various questions of a nature of interest to all women and mothers of the church, brought out some very animated discussions, and some short pithy papers, which may be presented in the column sometime. These answers and discussions were of vast interest to us, as they disclosed, as little else could have done, the spiritual status of the women of the district, and we were filled with admiration for what was disclosed.

Our gratitude is very deep and genuine for the kindly way in which our poor efforts were received, and we can only wish that we were more fully qualified to give what is needed in many directions in the way of encouragement and suggestion. We think that the time is not far distant, judging from the way all straws are blowing, when there will be at hand some one competent, ready, qualified, consecrated and willing, whenever a call comes from any quarter, for help of any kind! "Specialists," is the slogan; and the young will do well if they shall decide, even now, just what line of service to the church they wish to render, and, with that goal held ever in view, begin to direct all their study, all their efforts, and all their talents, towards becoming efficient and expert in that line of work. Girls, you of the Oriole circles! we will need you in a very short time, to go out as organizers, as encouragers, as expounders of what life shall mean to many; we need you qualified to give lectures in nursing, in domestic economy, in decorative art, in care for children, in hygiene, in the science of health, of purity, of culture! Are you getting ready for work of this kind? God grant that you may each and all see the beautiful vision of service from loving hearts, offered in the free abandon and love with which Christ offered his service, and then, seeing this vision, bend every effort to bring it about,—to make the beautiful dream come true!

We pray for the good of the cause of Zion, and are truly grateful for what the immediate past has brought to us!

From Our Island Sisters

PAPEETE, TAHITI

For some time we have felt that a local of the Auxiliary could be organized in the Papeete Branch with much profit. Our hopes were realized the 7th of May, when the sisters met for such organization. It has really come as an outgrowth of the mothers' classes which have been conducted for some time. When the name of our organization is translated in Tahitian, it becomes "Te Sotaiete Tauturu no te mau Vahine." The word "Sotaiete" or society was a stumblingblock for a few minutes, because the native sisters had known that word in connection with money corporations and cooperative labor companies. After assuring them that our "Sotaiete" was neither to be a money-making scheme nor a cooperative plan by which we would go from house to house, washing each others' dishes, as some had imagined, our organization progressed and the following officers were elected:

Anne Bennett, president; Roo Vahine, vice president; Tevaite Petis, secretary; Tekahu, treasurer; Tevaite Petis, organist; Tekahu, chorister.

Our president is a beautiful, young matron, five-eighths white. Inasmuch as she was one of the very, very few girls in this mission who have grown to maturity in purity and virtue, it seems peculiarly fitting that she should become the first officer of a society, which has for one of its objects, the promoting of social purity. Our secretary is also a young sister in whom we all rejoice. There were twenty charter members.

We have organized with two departments only, child welfare and educational. Sister A. H. Christensen has charge of the latter department, when she is in Papeete, and the writer has charge of the work in the child welfare department.

The sisters from the Hebrona Branch, three miles out from Papeete, have attended regularly the auxiliary meetings from the second meeting. This had added zest to the sessions. The work has started with a great deal of vigor and enthusiasm upon the part of the sisters and we trust that their interest and desires to learn more, will continue and grow, until they shall really become a fair and delightful people, physically, morally, and intellectually.

Reunion Echoes

LAMONI STAKE

Sister Hayer, the live correspondent of this stake reports very interesting meetings of the women during their reunion. "A message to the women of to-day," by Sister Leslie Wight, portrayed clearly the responsibilities of all women, especially mothers, at the present national crisis. She called attention to the "I-know-how" mother, and made a distinction between important and unimportant duties, emphasizing the value of simplicity and the things really worth while. Sister G. N. Briggs exhorted all mothers to take up some study, even though simple, in order to keep mentally apace with growing and developing children. Sister Hayer called attention to the fact that our church books—all of them—put an emphasis on study, and that all members of the church are included in the command "to study all good books and to make yourselves workers approved in the sight of God." It is possible for all of us to do this, else the command would never have been given. The officers of the district feel encouraged by the approval expressed by the listeners when these topics were under consideration, and by the fact that, since the program, invitations have come from different sources to put this part of our work before the people in different places. Their latest accession is a nice lively circle of Orioles, organized by Sister Emma Steckel, and having their home in the Evergreen Branch.

Feeding the Child of Four

(The third of a series of articles on the care of young children, sent out by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.)

During the fourth year, milk still remains an important part of the child's food, but much of it may now be given in the form of bread and milk, milk soups, or milk puddings, or it may be poured over the cereal. Some children object to drinking milk, and in such cases it is wise to offer it under some such disguise. The cereal need no longer be strained but must be very thoroughly cooked.

The diet at this time should include all the articles advised for the two earlier years, with the addition of more meats, vegetables, and fruits. Baked potatoes, with a little butter, are a staple food at this period. Bread and butter or toast and butter, and plenty of hard crusts or zwieback are important. Eggs or meat, such as roasted, boiled, or broiled beef, mutton, chicken or fish, should be given at least once a day.

The child of four will probably thrive on three or four meals a day, the heaviest being taken in the middle of the day. If he appears to be hungry, a light lunch such as milk, may be given, in the interval between breakfast and dinner or between dinner and supper, but no nibbling should be permitted between meals. A child should be taught to come to the table with that vigorous appetite for his food which leads to good digestion and assimilation.

Food should be carefully prepared to fit it to a child's powers and should be served in an appetizing fashion at proper intervals. Young children should not be offered "tastes" of the family meals, as this habit tends to destroy the appetite for the simple, rather restricted diet adapted to their need.

Children should have an abundance of pure, cool drinking water. This is especially important in summer when they are perspiring freely. If there is any doubt about the purity of the water it should be filtered or boiled, or both.

Since it is always difficult for children to chew their food properly it should be finely minced, mashed, or softened for them throughout these early years.

Never under any circumstances should children be given coffee, tea, or strong cocoa. They should have no highly seasoned or spiced foods, rich pastries, raw vegetables, onions, corn or cabbage. Bananas and all partly ripened fruit are apt to make trouble.

If children are inclined to be constipated they should have plenty of laxative foods. These are cereals, particularly oatmeal; the coarser breads, such as graham and whole wheat; fruit or fruit juice, particularly oranges and prunes; and vegetables like string beans, asparagus, and spinach.

Many children suffer from malnutrition, that is, they fail to secure the food materials they need for development and growth, and consequently they are undersized, pale, often slow and listless, and do not show the eager, alert habits of healthy children. Malnutrition may be due to lack of sufficient food of any kind, to improper food, bad cooking, or to some fault of digestion, or to illness which makes it impossible for the child properly to utilize the food he eats.

It is a wise precaution, therefore, if children are out of sorts, have decayed teeth, bad breath, or seem tired and disinclined to play, to have them examined by a good doctor, and to take all the trouble necessary to get them into the sound eating habits. The neglect of these early symptoms may mean a lifetime of only partial health and efficiency.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Central Nebraska District

Being requested by our district assistant president to write something for publication as to condition in this district, I now make the effort.

First, I think I may safely say there is an upward trend apparent in all the branches of the district, due at least in part to the efforts of our district president, Walter M. Self, who has since assuming the duties of his office adhered to the policy of building up the branches. Others have assisted him in these efforts and there is a visible improvement in all the branches of the district.

Baptisms have occurred in all of them except Inman and we expect to baptize some here to-morrow. So in all the district, in the branches and points outside, there have up to now been some thirty-six people baptized since the beginning of the conference year.

In addition to this there have been calls for preaching at a number of places outside the branches. Our district conference and Sunday school convention held at Clearwater, August 24, 25, and 26, was a success in every way. Sister Blanche I. Andrews, of Lincoln, the Nebraska State Sunday school worker, was present and aided the Sunday school work; also the Religio and Woman's Auxiliary.

The business features of the conference passed harmoniously and the devotional exercises were of a high order. Elder Joshua Carlile, of Underwood, Iowa, J. L. Parker, of Omaha, Nebraska, Walter M. Self, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Levi Gamet, of Inman, Nebraska, were present, though the latter was rather too feeble in health to take a large part in the work of the conference. Among the business features of general interest was the calling and ordaining to the office of elder, Fred S. Gatenby and Thomas S. Rutledge. These men have been doing good work as priests. There was an urgent need for more elders in the district, and the calling of these men was unanimous. They enter upon their work with the confidence and support of the entire district, or at least so far as could be seen by what was done in the conference.

Another measure discussed was the procuring of a suitable car for the use of the district officers and missionaries in the district. There was quite a strong sentiment in favor of such a move and it took definite form by the appointment of a committee to solicit means and make a report. Of course if the measure succeeds it will be a Ford.

The prayer and testimony service Sunday afternoon, at which the ordinations took place was one of the very best, some said the very best they ever experienced. We sat in session from 2.15 till 5 p. m. and there was no dragging of the time. Sweet peace pervaded the assembly and several spoke by the direct impulse of the Spirit.

The Sunday morning sermon was by Brother Carlile, the evening occupied by J. L. Parker. At this service some of the seats of the church were placed out in front of the church and the people drove their cars up close and sat in them, thus we escaped the oppressive heat and had abundant room. There were in attendance at the conference Saints and friends from Norfolk, Meadow Grove, Elgin, Neligh, Royal, Clearwater, Albion, Inman, Venus, Creighton, Stuart, and one sister from away out in Keyapaha County, Sister Lena Parlet, who was a timely assistant to Brother Carlile in his patriarchal work.

I trust the spiritual uplift felt at the conference will continue to radiate until it shall be felt to the remotest corners of the district.

Texas

It has been some time since I have troubled you with a letter, so thought you might be able to tolerate a few words from me. For the last two months I have been in the State of Texas, and have tried to keep busy. In some respects, Texas is a good field in which to work, but like every other place, it has some disadvantages. One of the most disagreeable things about it for me is the fleas; for those pestiferous little fellows sometimes disturb me night and day. I have not found them so bad this summer as I have heretofore, for which I feel grateful.

The first month I was in this State this summer it was very dry, but the last month we have had quite a goodly supply of rain. It is reported, however, that farther south and east it is still dry.

On the 22d instant I had the pleasure of baptizing Brother H. A. Moriarty, his wife and two children; also Sister C. I. Wiggins of Canyon, who is sister Moriarty's mother. The Moriarty family live here at Amarillo. Let Brother S. W. Simmons take notice.

Last month I made a new opening for our work at Aspermont, Brother and Sister G. W. Mears reside there. I found them very good people and more than that, they are wide-awake Latter Day Saints.

At Olton, I preached two weeks, with a fair hearing, excepting the evenings when the rain hindered. Brother and Sister Fred Schreier and family, their son Fred M. and wife, Brother and Sister William Graef, and Brother and Sister Daugherty, are trying to keep alive religiously by helping all with whom they come in contact to see that religion is a thing to be lived rather than to be talked about. Brother Daugherty hasn't gotten to where he has concluded to enter the waters of regeneration, but we have hopes he will presently see his way clear to follow the worthy example of his good wife. One thing commendable with the Olton Saints is that they not only read the church papers themselves, but they pass them along so that others may get the good of them also.

A suitable man located somewhere in this Panhandle country could do an excellent work along gospel lines. There is a great need for missionary work in this field. The little time that I am permitted to devote to this part of my field is not sufficient to accomplish what there is to be done in this part of the country.

To-morrow I go to Jericho, Texas,—not Jericho, Palestine,—to make a new opening. A family there to whom Sister Daugherty of Olton has sent the Ensign for years desires that our message be preached there.

I am encouraged in the work and trust the day will be hastened when the nations will reach a standard of peace.

The Northern California Reunion

The reunion of this district, at Irvington, closed August 26. The proverbial "everybody" says it was an exceptionally fine reunion. Some say that it was the best they had ever attended. And yet there is room for improvements, some of which are being provided for against the reunion next year, which was almost unanimously voted to be at the same time. A very few votes were taken in any of the business meetings, including the district conference and the Sunday school and the Religio, with the other auxiliaries, that were not nearly or quite unanimous. The whole reunion was remarkable for the spirit of unanimity. Some fine sermons and speeches, also papers, were presented, and a whole lot of generous self-denying energy was manifested and utilized.

So many did so many good things that it would take too much time and space to enumerate all and publish names, yet I feel that none will object to special mention of our untiring president of the district and "head pusher," C. W. Hawkins. Also of our visitor, J. W. Rushton. Sister Dora Glines, of the Woman's Auxiliary work; also Sister Ruby Jackson Hitch of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Sister Dorothy Rushton, of Los Angeles, all of whom contributed to the interest and pleasure of the gathering. The concert arranged by the Sunday school and Religio was spoken of as very fine. Six were baptized during the reunion, and one ordained.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Eastern Iowa

The encouraging news from other districts cheers us in our efforts to keep abreast of the times, and I wish we could say more for the encouragement of others. As it is, however, we will not withhold a feeble effort of appreciation.

This is my second year in this old historic field of missionary effort, and I have been long enough in the church to know that my predecessors were noble and talented men, but for some reason the Eastern Iowa District does not come up to my expectations. Whether I expected too much or fail to give due credit for what is being accomplished, will perhaps have to remain unanswered, but such are my convictions after a somewhat extended, careful observation. I am asked for the underlying causes? Lethargy, pride, worldliness, and above all, lack of church books and literature, including the two principal church papers. I am amazed to go into so many Saints' homes and find stacks of cheap novels, Sunday cartoon and picture papers, but neither the HERALD nor Ensign.

As an offset to the above, let me say I find an odd home here and there reflecting the true light, and a little bunch of earnest workers in each branch, trying to keep up the different organizations, but the average attendance is only from one fourth to one third of the total membership. If there are isolated ones that would like to have us come and make new openings, Brother Davis or I, both of us if necessary, we would be pleased to respond.

At this place there was once a branch; now about twenty members are left. Sunday school is kept up. Brother Duncan Campbell administers sacrament the first Sunday of each month. Brother Ed Loper, of Cedar Falls, a teacher, will assist when convalescent, having undergone a severe operation.

I baptized three Sunday school pupils yesterday, one being a quarter-blood Indian, Blackhawk Allen, whose father descended from a Canadian tribe and his mother's name was

Some people who learned to crawl when they were babies seem to have never gotten over it.

"Raven Wing." She is an educated woman, is religiously disposed, has offered her name for baptism, but we deem it prudent for her to receive more enlightenment, as opportunity offers. Another family are much interested. The father said, "In a little while we shall be with you." Much depends on the conduct and example of the Saints. Let us strive for a more perfect exemplification of Christian character.

The Kirtland Reunion

The following was printed on the church page of the Cleveland Plain Dealer of August 25:

MORMONS MEET AT CITY'S GATES; ONE WIFE EACH

"Cleveland is proving a mecca these days for some thousand Latter Day Saints from northern Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Canada.

"Out at historic Kirtland they are encamped; many quaint little cottages being supplemented by tents and pavilions in the groves that surround the old church built long before Brigham Young moved to Utah and caused the break that has never been healed between the orthodox Saints and those who followed the polygamous teachings of the Utah church. Those who repudiated Young's leadership organized the church that was recognized as the legal branch in 1852.

"Each year the leaders of the Reorganized church gather in Chagrin Valley for a conference, with lectures, literary and welfare work, led by the chief apostles and those of lesser rank.

"This year Gomer T. Griffiths, president of the church's 'twelve apostles,' and 150 minor apostles, are giving addresses.

"To-morrow the convention, will close with a reunion of all the members of the sect."

This was the most successful reunion ever held at Kirtland—a thoroughly good spirit prevailing through the entire session—early assembly and larger initial meetings foretelling the temper of the crowd, resulting in a harmonious and enthusiastic gathering, a minimum of complaints (if any) and a maximum of expressions of satisfaction.

Visitors other than of our faith were impressed with the ring of genuinity of our work and services. Preparations are being made already for even a better time next year, and the many good-bys were amended with a hearty expression to that effect.

E. A. WEBBE,

For Press Committee.

The Logan Reunion

Representing the publishing interests of the church we attended the reunion of the Little Sioux District, held this year at Logan, Iowa.

Owing to very favorable weather conditions the reunion was the largest held in this district since the days of the "world reunions." On the last Sunday the crowd was estimated at six thousand people.

District President Amos Berve had the reunion forces well organized and the large crowds were nicely cared for. An abundance of water, electric light and a board kitchen with a screen door were some of our camp comforts.

Our preaching services were of a very high order, our brethren enjoying good liberty and the splendid attention of very large audiences, a great number being outsiders.

It is very encouraging to notice that prejudice is giving away and that the majority of people are willing to "strike hands" with us for a fair investigation of our claims.

Among those participating in the preaching services were, Patriarch F. A. Smith, Apostles Gillen and Aylor and Brethren Bishop Kelley, B. S. Lambkin, Hubert Case, H. N. Hansen and Sidney Pitt, sr.

The auxiliary work was in charge of Sister Lula Sandy of Kansas City, and the children's tent was presided over by Sister G. J. Hansen, of Council Bluffs.

The demands of the "younger generation" of the camp and district received respectful consideration by those in charge. Proper recreation such as hikes, bonfires, baseball and other games and, not least, early morning prayer services, were provided. We attended the last early morning prayer service that was held and counted sixty-two young people who had assembled. It was a beautiful service, so much so as to be the talk of the camp all day. The young people were active in the meeting, earnest in their testimonies, joyful in their songs of praise and enjoyed the gifts of the gospel in that hour in a way that will help to bring them to the reunion another year. The gift of prophecy was exercised by Brother Berve, calling one of our young brothers, Chester Butterworth, to the priesthood, also speaking comfort and promising aid to two young girls, each having mentioned in their testimonies the lack that was felt in their homes because their fathers were out of the church.

It was probably the most representative district reunion ever held in the church owing to the people utilizing the combined good roads and automobile to the fullest extent, many driving thirty miles each morning and back home again in the evening.

The older men regarded the reunion very much of a success and we know that the people were enjoying themselves every day by the hearty greetings and warm handshakes exchanged.

Old Brother Charles Derry was unable to be on the grounds this year—probably the only reunion ever held in the district that he did not attend when at home, so several auto loads of the brethren of the priesthood went to his home at Woodbine where they held a prayer meeting, in which Brother Derry was able to take part.

We anticipate a bright future for this district and hope to renew acquaintances there year by year.

In bonds,

Independence Stake

The east tower of the Stone Church has through the labors of the workmen acquired a finished appearance with its added layers of stone and pointed corners, and to-day they are finishing the tower on the west. Improvements are going on also in church building at Walnut Park by way of erecting a chapel in that beautiful suburb. The preaching services of late throughout the stake have been of a highly instructive character and the attendance at the churches and Sunday schools has been fairly good.

There has been much sickness, but through the prayers of the Saints many are now convalescent.

A very significant dream concerning conditions at the central place was related by a brother in a meeting recently and Bishop Bullard, while speaking of its interpretation instructed the Saints to come up higher and through prayer strive more diligently to keep God's commandments in all things.

The frame house near the church is vacated and will be used as a library building and reading room in the place of the tower rooms of the church.

The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences will be opened on September 24. The class work will embrace kindergarten, religious education, social welfare, commercial and other studies.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

From Here and There

On the evening of August 31, the big general store owned and run by Brethren Arthur and John Lane, of Pisgah, Iowa, was burned to the ground, supposedly by I. W. W. agitators. There was but little insurance on the stock, which was unusually heavy.

Sister Mary Lankow, 349 South River Street, Aurora, Illinois, wants old HERALDS and Ensigns for missionary work. It has usually been the case that such calls result in a deluge of such material—too much to make good use of. We suggest that those having such material mail a card to the sister and tell her about what she can have. She can then reply to those nearest at hand and regulate somewhat the amount she receives. We are glad to note these calls and hope they will continue and that the Saints will willingly aid.

The Central Oklahoma conference passed into history as one of the very best ever held. The business sessions were harmonious and peaceful. Joseph Arber, Edward Rannie, and F. W. Kueffer presided. In the sacrament and prayer service Sunday afternoon the gift of prophecy was given, to the comfort of all the Saints. Preaching by Elders Edward Rannie, James M. Smith, and Joseph Arber was of a high order. Elder Rannie was chosen district president. The Sunday school convention, too, was a success, in charge of District Superintendent F. W. Kueffer, a live wire. Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Sperry, Yale, Ripley, were represented.

To Our Men in Camp Dodge

Our pastor in Des Moines, Iowa, would like to have all those of our men in the military camp at the city notify him concerning their location, that the branch there may get in touch with them. Friends of the lads should have them write, or do so themselves. The address is Elder D. T. Williams, 719 East Twelfth Street, Des Moines, Iowa. Church location: 717 East Twelfth Street.

San Bernardino

We are pleased to note in the Sunday Morning Index of August 26, a column with the heading, "A sermon by Elder T. W. Williams." It is a good review and includes a discussion of the question of God's interest in the world, a prayer for his children and includes reference to American archæology, and the fact that there were white people on this continent. This is a matter of particular interest as it receives wide publicity in that city.

Motion Pictures

It may be remembered that at the late Religio Convention, its president, G. S. Trowbridge, recommended the use of moving pictures as an entertainment feature in the Religio. Mr. A. W. Smith has now been appointed as superintendent of that department and has an interesting article in the September Autumn Leaves (out August 25). This article has a special application to the Religio, which should prove of interest to all. Prices of machines and supplies are quoted, and other technical suggestions given.

Married

JOWETT-MCCOLLUM.—The marriage of Miss Mildred M. McCollum, daughter of Doctor George D. and Nettie A. K. McCollum, to Harry Jowett, son of William Jowett and Hannah E. Jowett, took place Sunday evening, August 19, at 8.30, in the Saints' church. Miss Eva Hill acted as bridesmaid, with Albert Jowett, brother of Harry, best man. Ceremony performed by Elder John Grice, prayer by the pastor, Elder John Grant. A small reception of the immediate relatives was held at the home of the bride. The bridal pair left for the Kirtland reunion for their honeymoon. On their return they will take up their abode in Detroit and continue church work, where both have been active church workers. A long, happy and prosperous life is the wish of their many friends.

Our Departed Ones

SMITH.—Emma Smith was born in 1832, at London, England; baptized October 30, 1893, by Samuel Brown. Died May 2, at Merlin, Ontario. Funeral services by Elder Brown. Interment in Stewart Cemetery.

SIGLER.—Mary E. Sigler, was born July 23, 1845, at West Fork, Indiana. Leaves husband and one sister, also a host of friends and relatives. Baptized June 30, 1912. Married Jacob Sigler September 5, 1867. Died March 16, 1917. Funeral sermon by L. C. Moore.

KEEN.—Marjorie Louise, infant daughter of Brother and Sister A. L. Keen, near Lamoni, Iowa, was born August 31, 1916; died August 28, 1917, after an illness of five weeks from whooping cough. Funeral sermon was preached at the residence by Gomer R. Wells; interment at Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni.

SMITH.—Thomas Smith was born March 7, 1830, at Urchvant, Wilkshire, England. Baptized October 30, 1893, at Lake Erie, Tilbury East, Kent County, Ontario, by Samuel Brown. Died August 26, 1917, at Blenheim, Ontario. Services at home of his son Isaac, by Samuel Brown. Interment in Stewart Cemetery.

HASKELL.—Colly Adelaide, wife of Benjamin Haskell, was born October 7, 1882, at Wheatley, Essex County, Ontario; married January 10, 1900, at Merlin, Ontario. Died August

ROBINSON.—At the hospital at Tacoma, Washington, on June 8, 1917, Mrs. Minnie A. Robinson, daughter of Brother and Sister William Scott, all formerly of Blue Rapids, Kansas. Her age was 47 years, 2 months and 13 days. Death followed an operation. She is survived by her husband, George Robinson, and 3 children, the latter all married. The body was taken to Morton, Washington, for burial, where her parents live.

CANNIFF.—Mary Jane Canniff was born November 26, 1857, at Chatham, Ontario; baptized August 28, 1895, by Samuel Brown, at Lake Erie, Tilbury East, Kent County, Ontario, and died July 29, 1917, at Chatham, Ontario, from paralytic stroke. Services at residence by Samuel Brown, assisted by his son Robert and G. O. Coburn. These were largely attended. Interment in Louisville Cemetery, on the banks of the Thames River. Leaves a husband, two boys and one daughter.

ABBOTT.—William N. Abbott was born at Lancaster, New Hampshire, September 19, 1832. Married Ala P. Billings at Bethel, Vermont, July 24, 1853. To this union 5 children were born, two of whom died in infancy. He served nearly 3 years in the War of the Rebellion, was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness and discharged for disability May 17, 1865. Baptized February 14, 1865. Died August 14, 1917. Funeral at late residence in Lamoni, Iowa, sermon by John Smith, assisted by H. C. Smith.

CLARK.—Alice Nancy, wife of George Clark, was born October 19, 1850, at Alabumma, Genesee County, New York. Baptized September 9, 1894, at Bloomer, Wisconsin, by E. M. Wildermuth. Died August 20, 1917, at Chetek, Wisconsin. Funeral in the large auditorium at the Chetek reunion grounds. Leaves husband, one son and 2 daughters, with many friends, to mourn. Sermon by W. A. McDowell, assisted by A. L. Whiteaker.

BURNETT.—Henry Franklin Burnett, was born at Perry, Michigan, April 7, 1857. Married Miss Martha A. Lee, August 7, 1878. Three boys and 3 girls were born, the youngest son, Harold, is now doing service on the battlefields of France. Family located in Kansas, about 1885, where Brother Burnett obeyed the gospel. Ordained deacon later. After twelve years returned to Michigan. Died August 25, from an accident. Funeral from late residence at Howell, Michigan, by S. W. L. Scott.

SHERMAN.—Mrs. Amy Isabelle Sherman was born in Hancock County, Illinois, March 26, 1884. Married September 16, 1903, to Robert A. Sherman. Five children were born to this union, of whom 2 are dead and one daughter and two sons remain. Three brothers, 2 sisters, husband and children remain to mourn. Baptized July 1, 1917, at Denver, Colorado. Was sick but a short time and passed away September 2, 1917. Funeral from parlors of Olinger Mortuary, and interment in Crown Hill. Sermon by Ammon White.

KINDIG.—Delila Elvira Kindig was born October 9, 1855, at Metamora, Illinois. Moved to Iowa, about 1874, spending the most of her life near Henderson, Montgomery County. Baptized June 16, 1912. Moved to Lamoni, Iowa, in 1913, where she has resided since. Died at Lamoni, August 31, 1917. Leaves to mourn, daughter, Ella Stewart, of Lamoni, and one sister, Mrs. Robert Stewart, of Henderson, Iowa. Funeral services from Saints' church, Lamoni, sermon by John Smith, assisted by F. M. McDowell; interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

FETTERS.—Catherine, daughter of Jacob and Catherine Allen, born near Sabina, Clinton County, Ohio, November 3, 1830, died June 13, 1917. Married Henry Fetters about 1850. To them were born eight children. Moved to Warren County, Iowa, in the early sixties. Husband and two children preceded her death. Baptized by W. H. Kephart, near Milo, Iowa, May 1, 1900. Funeral services near Milo, by C. Scott. Leaves 6 children, 24 grandchildren, 26 great-grandchildren, 2 great-great-grandchildren, and many friends to mourn. Interment in old Hammondsburg Cemetery.

GRAHAM.—Charles F. Graham, born in Ludlow Township, Washington County, Ohio, May 6, 1872; departed this life July 3, 1917, as a result of an automobile and train collision

LOCATION OF ZION AND THE GATHERING

"What is the position of the church as to what is Zion? I know Independence is the center, but does it include the whole of the Western Hemisphere?" we are asked.

We should like to quote in full the many excellent things that have been written on this topic, but space forbids. The term Zion has been sometimes applied to the city of Jerusalem, the city of David, or some parts of it. It referred to the city of Enoch. We find it also used by some as a general term for a place of refuge. The present question is the interpretations given by us as a church, and especially what the revelations state as given to the old church.

While it is a possibility that the Western Hemisphere might in some instance be referred to in a general way as the land of Zion, there appears to be a lack of definite evidence to that end. The land of Jerusalem includes more than that city. In the Western Hemisphere perhaps even more latitude might have been used. But the positive evidence goes to the pointing out of a certain location for Zion, her stakes and the regions round about.

Late in 1830 certain of the brethren proceeded to the land of Missouri. In January, 1831, they apparently located in western Missouri in Kaw Township, Zion. Apparently as early as December, 1830, the following was given, setting forth the land of Zion, or the idea of such a place:

And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days—in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you, concerning the children of Noah: and the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth; and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men, and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12.

As early as July, 1831, we find the location of Zion definitely set forth as is shown by the following:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints; wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

And I give unto my servant Sidney Rigdon a commandment that he shall write a description of the land of Zion, and a statement of the will of God, as it shall be made known by the Spirit, unto him.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 11.

Behold, blessed, saith the Lord, are they who have come up unto this land with an eye single to my glory, according to my commandments; for them that live shall inherit the earth, and them that die shall rest from all their labors, and their works shall follow them, and they shall receive a crown in the mansions of my Father, which I have prepared for them; yea, blessed are they whose feet stand upon the land of Zion, who have obeyed my gospel, for they shall receive for their reward the good things of the earth; and it shall bring forth in its strength; and they shall also be crowned with blessings from above; yea, and with commandments not a few, and with revelations in their time; they that are faithful and diligent before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 1.

Pursuant to this direction in section 58, we find in Church History, volume 1, pages 207 and 208, that Joseph Smith described Zion as being in Missouri, in the 39th degree of latitude, and between the 10th and 17th degrees of west longitude (from Washington). It is quoted from Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 450. It is noteworthy that in no case is Kirtland referred to as Zion. But time and again the bishop of Zion and the bishop of Kirtland are mentioned as distinct. This is indicated in the revelation as follows:

And let all those who have not families, who receive moneys, send it up unto the bishop in Zion, or unto the bishop in Ohio, that it may be consecrated for the bringing forth of the revelations and the printing thereof, and for establishing Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 18.

Again we find Missouri referred to as Zion.

And now continue your journey. Assemble yourselves upon the land of Zion, and hold a meeting and rejoice together, and offer a sacrament unto the Most High; and then you may return to bear record; yea, even all together, or two by two, as seemeth you good; it mattereth not unto me, only be faithful, and declare glad tidings unto the inhabitants of the earth, or among the congregations of the wicked. Behold, I, the Lord, have brought you together that the promise might be fulfilled, that the faithful among you should be preserved and rejoice together in the land of Missouri. I, the Lord, promised the faithful and cannot lie.—Doctrine and Covenants 62: 2.

Lest there be any mistakes, twice was it declared that Zion shall not be moved out of her place.

But verily I say unto you, that I, the Lord, will contend with Zion and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her, until she overcomes and is clean before me; for she shall not be removed out of her place. I, the Lord, have spoken it. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 8.

Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.—Ibid., 98: 4.

And let the name of that house be called the Nauvoo House; and let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate for glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone thereof; that he may receive also the counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls.

This makes Nauvoo a corner of Zion. If Independence is the center and Nauvoo one of the corner stones, it should not be difficult to locate it in its extreme extent, so far as we are justified in naming Zion and the regions round about.

In regard to the regions round about it is noteworthy that the western part of Missouri was divided into large tracts in the early thirties and there were less than thirty counties in Missouri in the early days.

These various passages from the Doctrine and Covenants appear to be entirely in accord with the position taken by our late President Joseph Smith, which is also confirmed by the following:

It is well to understand that the term regions round about must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot, and that the necessities of the great majority of the church in gathering together can only be provided for by settling carefully together as many in one region as may be practicable and profitable and in accordance with the feelings of the people under the laws existing in the places where such settlements are to be made.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 5.

Again an effort was made to locate in the regions round about, as set forth in the SAINTS' HERALD for January 21, 1893, at some considerable length. The whole matter is discussed, quotations are given from previous editorials, showing the development of the location in Lamoni, Iowa, and incidentally defining the regions round about.

We may also quote Millennial Star, volume 14, page 327, and Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 707: "The people of the Lord have already started gathering together to Zion which is in the land of Missouri." Let us also consider a statement from the pen of Orson Pratt, as found in "A Series of Pamphlets," page 18, published after the death of Joseph the Martyr, which reads as follows:

But where is the spot where the city of Zion or the New Jerusalem shall stand? We answer, in Jackson County, Missouri, on the western frontier of the United States. It is there that the city of Zion shall be built. All the other cities that have been built by the gathering of the Saints are called, not Zion, but stakes of Zion.

Various speeches of our late President Joseph Smith might be quoted to the same general effect, but it would seem from this that it should be very plain that Zion is in Jackson County, Kaw Township, as it was previously described, that the early church considered it there and nowhere else. Stakes of Zion have been established elsewhere, but Zion itself is strictly limited and this includes the regions round about Jackson County, as then laid out, and not more remote than Nauvoo.

Some argument may be made in regard to Kansas, but if Independence is the central place there would seem reason for extending it at least a short distance into Kansas. At the time these revelations were given it was a wild land entirely inhabited by Indians. But certainly eastern Kansas is the regions round about Jackson County, Missouri.

So far as locating is concerned, the advice of those in authority should always be taken as to when and where we shall locate.

But the location of Zion would seem from this to be very plain and definite, and those who would locate it in remote parts of the continent have indeed a heavy burden of proof. S. A. B.

LONG SERVICES

As we look back over the past HERALDS we find that this topic has been taken up many times. President Joseph Smith urged that those in charge of a meeting make their remarks very brief or omit them altogether. Yet, we have attended social services where the man in charge has taken forty-five minutes of time with opening prayer, opening remarks, testimony, closing remarks and closing prayer. And others have made a near approach to this record.

We are also inclined to question seriously the advisability of letting a meeting die out, with first one here, then two or three there having to get up and leave. Yet we have attended meetings this summer two hours and a half long, and on one occasion, at least, under such conditions of temperature as to make one hour a matter of endurance and patience. The hours for service should be clearly understood and clearly observed.

At the opening hour, a meeting should be called to order promptly. If anything, the officers should be in place a few minutes in advance. The size of the attendance will determine how long, as it should be long enough ahead of time, that the assembly is in order before the opening hour. Then the meeting should be promptly dismissed. It is true that this may seem hard for a good meeting, yet if it is not adhered to the result will probably be that many who are present will not come back to the next, or the second, or the third meeting thereafter. It means a decreased average attendance. The elders should conduct a meeting as led by the Holy Spirit, but the Holy Spirit directs in order.

We have attended meetings at which those in charge not only took up considerable time, but at the end of an hour and a half and again at the end of two hours, would sit and wait and urge, "Now if there is some one else, we still have some time left." "Now isn't there some one else who wishes to speak?" Waiting, waiting, waiting. And then after two and one half hours, after the closing remarks had been given, "Now I guess we will have to close the meeting . . . unless some one has something special to say, in which case we shall give opportunity." And this under physical conditions that were trying.

We have met in church assembly where the temperature must have been at least one hundred. We have also met in prayer service with the temperature at fifteen or twenty degrees. Personally, we are inclined to believe that if the conditions cannot be made better before opening of the service, that time should be conserved, and the meeting be cut short in righteousness.

The purpose of church services is not conserved by meeting at a time when but few will brave the heat and inconveniences, nor by conditions which make it a matter of physical endurance if not punishment. We will have enough to endure without creating additional trials.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Q. 1. What office did Philip hold when he baptized the people at Samaria, when John and Peter had to come down and lay hands on them that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, after Philip had baptized them?

2. When Philip baptized the eunuch, is there any record to show that he ever had the imposition of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost?

3. If baptism is for the remission of sins and we do not hold a child responsible until eight years of age, why are some children baptized on their eighth birthday.

A. 1. As referred to in Acts 6:5, some have considered him to be a deacon. But since he could baptize (see the 8th chapter of Acts), others think he may have been a bishop, yet Acts 21:8 calls him an evangelist. It is possible he may have had one position after the other. It is generally considered that he is the one who is called in the 21st chapter, the evangelist. The fact that the apostles came down to confirm them is not necessarily proof that he did not possess that authority. Having a general supervision of the work in all the world required that they many times go to points where there appeared to be a more than usual interest. And being there they could very properly be called upon to confirm. The only position he could have held that might permit him to baptize and not confirm would be priest, and this office does not of course have the right of administration ordinarily in finances.

2. There is no definite record of the imposition of hands upon the eunuch. Nor is there any record of the baptism of Peter, his confirmation or ordination. The law having been laid down, the presumption is that it is followed unless the contrary is shown. Many suppositions may be made, but there is nothing we know of decisive on this question, when and where he was confirmed.

3. Baptism is for the remission of sins, it is not essential to salvation, for Jesus when baptized was not a sinner. We are reminded of the story of the little boy who when asked the question, What must we do first before we can have our sins forgiven? made answer, "Sin." This appeared logical, but of course was not the answer desired. Sin is never a prerequisite to salvation, so it is not at all necessary that a child should have committed sin. The vital feature is adoption into the family of God. The most vital is the spiritual reformation, the other is incidental. If they have been guilty of sin, the sin should be remitted. But further than this, it is still true that it is for the remission of sins. For if after we have taken upon us the responsibility, thereafter we sin in some degree, as is the lot of mankind, we have an advocate with the Father and we can properly proceed to set ourselves right. So in this even to a child eight years old, who has not been guilty of sin, there yet is this one sense at least for that purpose, remission of sins. However the special feature is that sin is not a prerequisite to baptism and salvation.

Q. 4. I would love to hand out the tracts to my neighbors if it is my duty to do it. But I have been told by one, that I was not called to preach the gospel and I was interfering where I had no right. That it was the minister's duty to give the tracts. I have a desire to do my whole duty but do not wish to go beyond my rights.

A. 4. This question has been answered in many forms in the HERALD. There is nothing distinctly limiting the right of a lay member to assist. Especially may they assist in any service at the request of the proper presiding officer, those having the work in charge. We are commanded to warn our neighbors, Doctrine and Covenants 85:22. This is not limited in the interpretation of the church to members of the priesthood. In fact a commission has been formed for the distribution of gospel literature by the church, Sunday school and Religio.

This good literature committee should not be permitted to interfere with the work of the missionaries, in fact they should make every endeavor to work in harmony with them and so as to assist or build up the work. Further than this they should not act against the advice of the officers in charge. But the officers in charge of the priesthood ought not to be unduly critical but should be willing to accept the help of others. It is an open question, but after all, the direction of the work rests with the presiding elder, and his counsel should be taken. This may include the advice of the district president or the missionary in charge, although it is the duty and work of the presiding elder of the branch to direct in these matters primarily. Circumstances must affect the decision. We should all be anxious to help in this work to warn our neighbors; to let our light shine before the world.

We note herewith an editorial by Brother Joseph. Nothing should be done to interfere with the work of proper authority, everything should be done to assist in the onward progress of the work. Certainly in the absence of special circumstances one does not do wrong in letting his light shine before his neighbors. Circumstances, may affect in special cases, our final answer.

"It is said in our law that it is a day of warning, and that those who are called and sent out are sent out 'to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor;' that all may be warned and be 'left without excuse,' that their sins may be 'upon their own heads.'"—Doctrine and Covenants 85:22.

"From this it might readily be inferred that those who had been warned would not be in condition to be excused if they failed to warn others. The Word reads: 'Let him that heareth say, Come.' Therefore, let every man be ready to respond when the elders who are to 'conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost,' invite, or request him to exercise the talent that is in him to sing, to pray, to exhort, or to teach as the occasion may require. The right to speak and to be heard when required to, seems to be inherent in every man."—THE SAINTS' HERALD, April 9, 1902. S. A. B.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Presiding Bishopric in Lamoni

Bishop B. R. McGuire and wife, James F. Keir and wife, and Earl F. Audet arrived by auto in Lamoni from Independence, Sunday evening, the 16th, just in time for Brother McGuire to fill the evening preaching appointment. The audience was large and attentive and the bishop in good form. They are here to confer with the Lamoni Stake bishopric on some special business matters.

"Timbers for the Temple"

The October number of the Autumn Leaves announces that in the November number will appear the first chapter of a new serial by Elbert A. Smith, written before he began his recent "vacation" of which he recently told us. It concerns the momentous days at Nauvoo when the temple was being built. Those were stirring times and the author has brought together some most excellent story material from the naturally interesting historical events of the times. New subscribers should begin not later than with the November number. One dollar a year, at this office.

President Smith and Family Return

Brother Elbert A. Smith and wife and son arrived in Lamoni, Saturday, the 15th, coming direct from their place of residence at San Bernardino, California. He stood the trip well considering his weak condition and they all greatly appreciate the privilege of returning home in spite of the noble efforts of the California Saints to make their sojourn as pleasant as possible. "There's no place like home," and we

THE PLAN OF SALVATION

The New Testament teaches that Christ has provided a definite plan of salvation. It is called by the Apostle Paul, "the gospel of Christ." He says: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (See Romans 1: 16.) As to what the gospel consists of we are not left in darkness. The same writer, Saint Paul, tells us in the sixth chapter of Hebrews that the principles of the doctrine of Christ, which of course is the same as the gospel of Christ, are faith, repentance, baptisms (of water and of the Spirit), the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. No one, therefore, is a genuine believer in Jesus Christ unless he accepts all these principles.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT

I remember reading once a sermon from a popular minister in which he said that we do not need to believe in eternal judgment in order to be saved. That depends upon what we mean by eternal judgment. If we mean the old-fashioned belief in hell which originated in the Dark Ages the position is correct. We do not have to believe in that in order to be saved. But eternal judgment as taught in the Bible does not mean that. It means simply and only the meeting out of justice to all the human race. If we do not need to believe in eternal judgment, we do not need to believe we will be rewarded for the good we do or be punished for our evil actions. Such a thought as that would be contradictory to the character of God. God could not be himself and yet fail to notice either good or evil.

RESURRECTION

Again there are people who deny the resurrection of the dead and yet pretend to believe in the Bible. This is inconsistent for if there is anything taught clearly in the Bible it is the resurrection of Christ, and upon his resurrection depends the resurrection of the entire human race. Saint Paul puts it thus: "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." (1 Corinthians 15: 13-17.)

LAYING ON OF HANDS

Some also find fault with the laying on of hands. They say it has been done away, yet they would be offended if they were accused of being unbelievers in the New Testament. As a matter of fact no part of the New Testament has been done away. Such an expression as "done away" applies only to the Mosaic law. That law has been done away and has been supplanted by the gospel of Christ. The gospel is sometimes referred to as a law. For instance we read: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." The New Testament emphatically affirms the unchangeability of Christ. Saint Paul says: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." (Hebrews 13: 8.) And when Christ was on earth he said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away but my words shall not pass away." How foolish it is to place the words of Jesus Christ or any portion of the New Testament on the same plane as the temporary law given through Moses.

BLESSING OF CHILDREN

The laying on of hands was practiced in New Testament times, for four specific purposes: They were the blessing of children, the reception of the Holy Spirit, the healing of the sick and for ordination to the ministry. When Christ was here we are told the people brought their children to him that he might "put his hands upon them and pray." The disciples at once reprov'd or forbade those who brought them. When Jesus saw them do this he was "much displeas'd" and said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And the record further says: "And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them and blessed them."

This Scripture has been used as authority for infant baptism, but it does not support such a practice, for there is no mention of water being employed, and besides, baptism is always referred to as applying to persons old enough to select it for themselves. Hence we read: "He that believeth and is baptized," and "Repent and be baptized." These and similar expressions, in which the New Testament abounds, indicate that only those who were old enough to believe or had committed sin were required to be baptized.

The old-time notion, now passing away with the belief in a hell of literal fire, was that infants had to be baptized in order to cleanse them from the original sin committed by Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. In those days mothers grieved over the fate of unbaptized infants. It is said that some died or lost their reason because of their grief. This seems ridiculous to us in this enlightened age yet we have not entirely overcome similar superstitions. Anyway it is profitable to consider as illustrating the weakness of the human mind when under the influence of false teaching.

This weakness also affected the higher class for it was not limited to the common people, as some might suppose. Doctor Isaac Watts, a companion of John Wesley, and the author of "Alas and did my Savior bleed," and "Am I a soldier of the cross?" entertained the same idea. In one of his hymns he says:

There is a never ending hell
And never dying pains
Where infants must with demons dwell
In darkness, fire, and chains.
Have faith, the same with endless shame
For all the human race
For hell is crammed with infants damned
Without a day of grace.

We rejoice over the fact that the day of such theology is past, but it is not so very long past for this hymn was sung in the churches, that is some of them, not more than fifty years ago. The wonder is that professing Christians could ever have had such ideas, when they are so clearly in conflict with the teachings and practices of Christ.

Let it be remembered, too, that Jesus did not bless little children in order to make fit for the kingdom of heaven but in recognition of the fact that they were already worthy. A child that was blessed was not better prepared for heaven than one that was not, for the child was not responsible for the fact that it had or had not been blessed. Children cannot now be brought to Christ in person to be blessed, so we believe they should be brought to his ministers, who are acting in his stead. The same is true of adults who desire to come to Christ. They cannot in these days come to him direct as they did when he was on earth, so they come through the church and receive the gospel from his preachers who represent him in his absence from the earth.

RECEPTION OF HOLY GHOST

We now come to the laying on of hands for the receiving of the Holy Ghost. It followed immediately after baptism, as is apparent from the New Testament. We take, for instance, the case of the Samaritan converts whom Philip baptized. Subsequent to the mention of their baptism we are told:

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God they sent unto them Peter and John: who when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (For as yet he had fallen upon none of them, only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 14-17.

In Acts 19: 16, we are told of some men Paul baptized at Ephesus. The verses cited read as follows: "And it came to pass, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus: and finding certain disciples, he said unto them:

"Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard that there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

This instance admits of no doubt. First of all, these people had been baptized by some one who had no authority to officiate. Apollos of whom we read in the previous chapter was one of this kind. Although sincere and a man of great ability, he did not know anything about the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The word plainly states that he knew "only the baptism of John," which was water baptism. Therefore, anyone he baptized would be without knowledge of the Holy Ghost, for he could not teach them what he did not know himself.

It is evident that either he or some one like him had baptized the men whom Paul met. They had not been truly baptized with John's baptism. If they had been they would have known about the Holy Ghost, for John emphatically mentioned it to the people he baptized. And besides, Paul would have accepted their baptism, but knowing as he did, that they had been baptized by some one God did not send, for God never sends a man out to preach a part or piece of the gospel, Paul baptized them again, and when he had laid his hands on them the Holy Spirit came on them in miraculous power. Without the rebaptizing and the laying on of hands this great power would not have come. Please observe that when he baptized them "in the name of Jesus Christ" it means by the authority of Jesus Christ. The man who had baptized them before lacked such authority, for God would not have sent him out in a state of ignorance regarding the plan of salvation. He does not do that kind of work.

Another case of the laying on of hands is that of the young man Timothy. He was evidently converted to the gospel through the instrumentality of the Apostle Paul for the latter calls him "my own son in the faith." Elsewhere he says: "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." (2 Timothy 1: 6.) Timothy had a legal right to the Holy Ghost in having been baptized by Saint Paul, and also confirmed a member of the church by the laying on of hands under the ministry of the same apostle. The "legal right," however, would not by itself be sufficient, hence the apostle exhorts him to "stir up the gift of God," that is, by a life of prayerfulness and righteousness.

ORDINATION

The "putting on of hands" does not, in this case, mean ordination, as some assume for Timothy's ordination is elsewhere referred to in these words: "Neglect not the gift which is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." (1 Timothy 1: 14.) "By prophecy" means that Timothy was called to the ministry by the gift of prophecy which was one of the miraculous gifts enjoyed by the primitive Christian Church. "The presbytery," who ordained Timothy, signifies a body of elders.

It is sometimes argued that only the apostles had the right or power to lay on hands. This is a sad mistake. We are told in Acts 9 that Ananias laid his hands on Saul that he might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost. (See verse 17.) This means that he laid his hands on both for healing and for the reception of the Holy Ghost, and it is absolutely certain that Ananias was not an apostle. He is referred to as "a certain disciple." (See verse 10.) Judging, however, from other parts of the New Testament, we conclude that he must have been an elder.

When Jesus gave the great commission to the apostles he said:

Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 15-18.

While this commission as such was given to the apostles and did not authorize anyone but them to preach, baptize, etc., yet the principles involved are of universal application.

It is still right to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and for those who hear to believe and be baptized. The same principle, too, applies to the miraculous signs which Jesus promised. If it is right to preach the gospel in our day it is also right to believe and be baptized, and if it is right to do these things it is also right to expect the signs in question. The believers under consideration by Jesus are such as have demonstrated their faith by being baptized, and in the promise made regarding the "signs" all these are considered, in one view, as a class. The commission, taken as a whole, contains the word shall as a special feature. It is used nine times and is equally emphatic in each instance. It should not be considered, however, that every believer would receive all these gifts. They are promised to believers as a class. Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 12 that one member receives one gift and some other member a different one. He illustrates by showing that the human body does not consist of one member and that the different parts are intended for the performance of separate functions, all, however, combining in doing the work of one body.

ELDERS LAY ON HANDS

The right to lay on hands belonged to the eldership. "They shall lay hands on the sick" was a command which they were required to obey. This included the apostles, but it was not confined to them as some assert. As proof that the apostles were elders we read: "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder."—1 Peter 5: 1. We also read: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray for him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him."—James 5: 14, 15.

The sense of this text is, and in this all commentators are in agreement, "the elders who are among you." Elders had been ordained in every church for just such emergencies. (See Acts 14: 23 and Titus 1: 5.) These elders acted because it was not possible for the apostles to be present on all such occasions. Their work was too widespread in its character. In their absence these elders baptized, confirmed, administered the Lord's supper, blessed children, and healed the sick. They were not only not apostles but were not regular ministers in the sense of giving their whole time to sacred work. They were, on the contrary, business men or horny handed sons of toil. When anyone fell sick these men were sent for, and in response the farmer came from his plow, the carpenter from his bench, the blacksmith from his anvil, and the business man from his counter or his books. They anointed with oil and prayed for the person who was ill and he was healed.

As other cases showing that others besides the apostles wrought miracles I refer to Philip and Stephen. Of the former we are told:

And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies and that were lame, were healed.—Acts 8: 6, 7.

Of the latter we read: "And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people."—Acts 6: 8. These men were not apostles but were among the seven selected, as we are informed in Acts 7 to look after the temporal affairs of the church. The churches of to-day are not agreed as to the office held by these men. Some claim they were deacons, while others hold they occupied in the office of bishop. Still others maintain they were evangelists. All, however, are agreed in considering they were not apostles.

We have already affirmed that men were ordained by the laying on of hands. As proof of this we offer the following texts: "Whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them."—Acts 6: 6. (This refers to the ordination of the seven men before mentioned.) Please read also Acts 13: 2, 3: "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Paul and Barnabas, for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away."

BAPTISM, IS IT ESSENTIAL

While some level their attacks against the laying on of hands and miraculous blessings, others direct their criticisms at baptism. First of all they say it is not essential and yet they admit it is one of the commandments of God. The question, therefore, arises, Are the commandments essential to salvation? We maintain they are, and will proceed to prove it.

Jesus says: "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5: 19. Note, the Savior does not say four nor six of the least nor yet one of the greatest nor five of the greatest but he brings disobedience down to the finest possible point. He says "one of the least." Please observe, however, that such disobedience does not lead to eternal damnation as some might suppose. Jesus simply says, "he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven," while, on the other hand, he says of the fully obedient person, "He shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

Some have asserted that "he shall be called least" signifies the esteem in which he shall be held in the heavenly kingdom, and that, as a matter of fact, he is not there at all for his single, trivial offense has lead to his eternal damnation. This cannot be, for the word called is also used regarding the person who has rendered complete obedience and surely he would be admitted into the kingdom. The sense of the text is that both persons are in the kingdom, but they occupy different positions because one has received a greater reward than the other.

Hence, when we say baptism is essential to salvation we do not mean the person who is not baptized will, for that reason, be roasted in the fires of hell. The reason some understand us in that light is because they read their theology into ours, for the hell-fire doctrine is a part of their stock in trade. We mean the person who is not baptized or is otherwise disobedient will not receive full salvation, or, in other words, a complete reward.

As another text which advocates the entire gospel I refer you to 1 Timothy 5: 21 where Paul says: "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality." How many observe this advice? Very few. In fact the various creeds have been started by taking some one truth or principle and exaggerating it into a special doctrine, and basing upon it a particular sect. That one feature is made the only thing needful and is magnified to such an extent that it hides all the rest of the commandments. Such a course is doing what Paul condemns, that is, "preferring one thing before another."

That one's failure to be baptized or to obey any other command will make a difference in his future state is apparent from numerous texts of scripture. Christ's statement that the seed which fell on good ground brought forth thirty, sixty and a hundred fold is to the point. The difference must have been in the conduct of the individual for the seed was the same. Again we are told concerning John's baptism and of the manner in which it was regarded by different people: "And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." (Luke 7: 29, 30.) How could their rejection of the counsel of God in refusing to be baptized be "against themselves" if baptism makes no difference?

The mode of baptism is indicated as immersion which one can easily see by referring to the baptism of Christ and that of the eunuch. (See Matthew 3: 16 and Acts 8: 38, 39.) Paul makes this still clearer by saying twice that we are "buried with Christ in baptism." (See Romans 6: 4 and Colossians 2: 12.) The meaning of this is that both "we," as Christians, and Christ were buried in being baptized. To illustrate: If I should say, "I walked with John to town," I cannot mean that I walked and he rode, nor vice versa. I must mean that we traveled in the same way.

REPENTANCE

We now come to repentance. That it is essential to salvation is apparent from numerous texts. For instance Jesus says: "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish," and this statement he repeats. (See Luke 13: 3, 5.) "Likewise" alludes to certain persons mentioned in the context. On the day of Pentecost Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) Repentance, in his case, is essential to salvation, for without it baptism would not be valid and the Holy Ghost would not be received. John the Baptist evidently realized this, for he said to the people who came to his baptism: "Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance." (Matthew 3: 8.) Luke says, "worthy of repentance." (3: 8.) Both Matthew and Luke indicate the necessity of the professing penitent showing his sorrow for sin by his actions. The former gives as the marginal rendering, "answerable to amendment of life." See note on the words "meet for."

John the Baptist also says: "And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: and every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire." In this those who profess repentance are compared to trees. The fruitful are recognized and preserved, while the unfruitful are condemned and destroyed as rubbish. The thought is this, an apple tree is a tree that bears apples, a peach tree is a tree that bears peaches. If the tree bears not the intended fruit the question arises, Why cumberest it the ground? The same point is made in Acts 26: 19, 20 where Paul says: "Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision: but showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." This, too, as the apostle's language indicates was his message to the whole world. All people who accept the gospel must repent and turn to God, and do works, etc.

Paul again defines repentance in 2 Corinthians 7: 9, 10 where he says: "I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, . . . for godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of." From this it appears that "sorrow" is not necessarily repentance. It works repentance if it is of the right kind. In other words, true repentance is an actual change in conduct. What this change brought about is given in 7: 11. Such a change as repentance involves is pointed out in the following verse or stanza:

But drops of grief can ne'er repay
The debt of love I owe:
Here, Lord, I give myself away
'Tis all that I can do.

CONSECRATION

This fact of entire consecration is proven by Christ in what he called the greatest commandment of all which, in substance, is: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, heart, mind, might, and strength," which means, of course, with all our spiritual, moral, intellectual, and physical powers. (See Matthew 22 and parallel passages.) Paul refers to the same thing in Romans 12: 1: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." "A living sacrifice" is equal to Peter's "lively stones" which he says "are built up a spiritual house." Or, to use the words of Paul again, "yield yourselves to God, as those who are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness." (Romans 6: 13.)

The doctrine of salvation by faith only is erroneous in that among other things it ignores the value and necessity of practical repentance. The sinner is encouraged to believe that he can go to the mourner's bench and by faith alone receive the forgiveness of his sins. He is not told to make any effort to make his wrongs right. He is not required to make reparation or restitution of any kind. For instance: He may have come from a gambling den or a dishonest business deal, and may have one hundred dollars of some other man's money in his pocket. He may indeed give the money to the church or to the minister and hear the latter bless it as a sacred offering. He is not taught to restore this money before he professes Christianity and joins the church, and yet this is exactly what the Bible teaches all the way through.

The church, the pastor, and the evangelist may urge repentance in the sense of "drops of grief," that is tears, but this is not repentance. It can "never repay" our "debt of love." Isaiah states the case thus: "Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well." What will be the result? "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." He further explains by saying: "If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land." (See chapter 1, verses 16 to 19.) This shows conclusively that pardon was dependent on change of conduct, or in other words, on the disposition to be "willing and obedient." Otherwise: "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Micah 6: 8.) Daniel bears the same message to Nebuchadnezzar in these words: "Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor." (Daniel 4: 27.) Not only would humility be fore God and the practice of general righteousness be held out to the king but he was also counseled by the prophet to practice acts of charity or benevolence toward the poor. All of these things were necessary parts of his repentance. Without them it was not fruitful, and, therefore, not valid.

If faith alone saves, repentance is not required. Hence those who advocate faith only repudiate repentance, and by the latter term we mean the kind taught in the Bible, which we have just defined. By stressing one point we neglect or ignore others. This applies to the subject of baptism as we shall show. Some claim there is but one baptism and that, they say, is water baptism. Others make the same claim but insist upon the baptism of the Holy Spirit as the one and only. Both of these positions are extreme and show alike the creed-making disposition. As a matter of fact John the Baptist (Matthew 3: 11; Mark 1: 8; Luke 3: 16), Christ (John 3: 5) and Paul (Hebrews 6: 2) teach these two baptisms, and they were demonstrated in the life of Christ, our great exemplar. (See Matthew 3: 16, 17; Mark 1: 9-11; Luke 3: 21, 22.) The "one baptism" of Ephesians 4 means the two combined by which "a man (soul and body) is born again."

FAITH

We have considered the principles in the reverse order, if it may be called such, so we now take up the principle of faith. We have left it until last in order to show how professing Christians reject the principles of the religion they claim to believe. Commencing with the last we have come back, until we have arrived at the first principle and the only one on which all churches agree. All Christians admit that faith is essential to salvation. Some claim it is the only thing necessary, but those who do not admit that are in serious error.

This thought is well confirmed by numerous texts of scripture. We read: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." This also: "Without faith it is impossible to please him for he that cometh to God must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Jesus says, as before quoted, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Here faith is made absolutely essential to baptism. If a person should be baptized through business policy, social ambition or for any other unworthy reason his baptism would be in vain. The absence of faith spoils the whole action, hence the statement, "he that believeth not shall be damned" for baptism, confirmation, communion, Sabbath observance, prayer, or any other gospel requirement is performed without effect in the absence of faith. This thought is clearly expressed in Acts 8, where we are told the eunuch said to Philip: "See here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Philip answered: "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest." This excludes infants, idiotic or insane persons, the heathen (prior to instruction), and any and all persons who may for social, commercial, professional or political reasons seek union with the church. This of course leads to the conclusion that we get out of baptism and every other gospel principle what we bring to it. If there is nothing in us there will be nothing in it.

Just here this question arises, Since people professing to believe in the Bible deny so many things which it teaches, why do they blame the infidel for his unbelief? If those who profess Christianity, and therefore pretend to believe the whole Bible, deny so much of it, why blame the skeptic who does not make any profession of religion, because he questions it all?

We have found that some who believe, or rather profess to believe the Bible, question certain parts of it until among the whole number of professing Christians we find enough unbelievers to eliminate the whole of the book until there is nothing but the covers left. Since the principles of the gospel one by one, are rejected by the various churches, need we be surprised that the infidel repudiates the only remaining principle, that is faith?

Listen to what some of the skeptics have said. Hume remarks: "Where faith begins reason ends." Ingersoll says: "Think of that unhappy mixture of insanity and ignorance called faith." These men of course are mistaken in their estimate of faith, that is, gospel faith, but their definition fits the kind of faith on which sectarianism rests, which properly speaking is superstition or credulity.

That kind of faith prompted the people in what are sometimes called "the good old times" to believe all the parson said, but it was not true faith. The latter involves thought. Once when a minister reproved Colonel Ingersoll for desiring to investigate the subject of religion the latter replied: "That system of religion which is too sacred to investigate is too ridiculous to believe." The colonel was right and his contention is in harmony with the Bible, too. Saint Paul says: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

Referring to the "good old times" again. That is an expression which I do not like. It commonly is used in reference to the times of the Pilgrim Fathers, Puritans and others of the same type. I call those "the bad old times," for they were times of bigotry and persecution. In those times the parsons were judges, jurors, witnesses and executioners, and in consequence of the position they occupied the people believed implicitly all they said. They said and did, as all men intrusted with unlimited power will, many absurd, unjust and cruel things. In those days baby hid itself in its mother's dress and the rest of the children scuttled away under the bed, because "the preacher has come."

We are rid of some of that disposition but it is not entirely gone yet. May God speed the day when it will be, for we can do without it. For my part I am rather pleased than displeased when some one calls in question a thing I have said, for it proves my hearers have been thinking. Investigation, which necessarily involves doubt and question, leads to the true faith. In other words, the better we understand, the firmer we believe.

As a matter of fact faith enables us to run the whole gamut of the divine commandments and this is essential to the Christian's race. Why then should anyone profess to believe and yet deny any of the principles of the gospel? "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—James 4: 17. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 John 5: 4.

FOUNDATIONS

(Dedication sermon of Lansdowne, Illinois, church by Bishop B. R. McGuire, June 23, 1917. Reported by Nena N. Young.)

Text: Matthew 16: 13-16:

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Phillippi, he asked his disciples saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some Elias; and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

I am happy to meet with the Saints of the Lansdowne Branch this morning and to participate in this service of dedicating to God the result of service as expressed in the erection of this building. While your speaker takes a degree of satisfaction in having the opportunity of thus participating with you in this service, he realizes that his joy is not so complete as the joy of those who have denied themselves, those who have contributed of their talents and of their means and service and made possible the dedication of this building. As a text this morning, we shall use the words of the Apostle Paul: "For other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

In the erection of this building, those who have contributed to make it possible, have had in mind, no doubt, a place where the word of God might be preached, a place where his people might assemble from time to time and enjoy a service of prayer and testify of the goodness of God and of the blessings which they have received, and that by so doing, they might edify and strengthen one another and receive the blessings that God by his Spirit on such occasions desires to bestow upon his children. It has been erected for the purpose that here might congregate from time to time the children of the Sabbath school to be taught the principles of life, which we as their parents know by experience make us better men and women, better qualified to assume the duties and responsibilities of life, and which if applied to our lives by faith, we know will fit and qualify us for a better inheritance hereafter.

Here meet the auxiliary societies of the church, here while engaged in service of song, possibly the strain of some familiar hymn will reach the ear of the passing stranger and here he will come and renew his covenant with his God. Or if he has not yet found him, it will arouse and awaken in him the desire to do so.

Our friends and our neighbors about here, when the building was erected may have thought that it would be the means of increasing property values, giving a more wholesome tone to the community; we gain a certain degree of satisfaction and realize a certain degree of joy, and if there were no other benefits derived than those to which I have already referred, the effort would be worth while. I am very sure that the erection of this building is not the consequence of any personal vanity, it is not the result alone of a desire to produce a more wholesome tone in the community (not that we should not have a place where from time to time we might meet in service of song and see our children engage in the activities of the church) but it was not these things which brought about the erection of this building. While it would be well if it was erected for no other purpose than referred to, it would be worth the effort, still the erection of this building was founded upon a desire more far-reaching and of far more consequence than is generally realized and discerned in the construction of a church building. What I mean to present by that, is clothed in the language of the Apostle Paul which I have read. "For other foundation can no man lay than is laid which is Jesus Christ," and if the effort that has been made here is not founded, is not based upon the foundation to which the Apostle Paul refers, then those who have contributed of their effort and of their service here from time to time to make possible the dedication of this building to-day, have come far short of discerning and realizing the real forces and power of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

"For other foundation can no man lay." Since the days of our Savior there have been builded churches, and their spires have pointed heavenward, but as I understand the gospel of Jesus Christ, its purpose is not accomplished in the erection of buildings or rearing of spires, and we know by experience that efforts that have been made primarily with the end in view of having a building nicely appointed, one for which the architect would be commended by virtue of its design and because of its convenience and adequacy to meet the demands of the public meetings, efforts put forth to accomplish are those that are based and founded upon other foundations.

The bringing into prominence of my son or my daughter, or myself advances and builds up individual and social endeavors that are resting upon foundations other than the foundation of Jesus Christ. There comes to my mind this morning a conversation held between a young man that was about to engage as a member of the legal profession in the affairs of life, and another young man who had been acquainted with him from the days of their youth when they attended high school. This friend said to him, "Now that you have finished your course of law and have been admitted to the bar, I think it would be a fine thing and would contribute to your success if you would affiliate with some church. Now there is this church and that church, and you know they are very liberal in their views and there are those who attend these churches who are prominent in the business, financial and political world. If you will associate yourself with one of these churches, you will be brought into association with these men and it will make possible more quickly your rise in prominence as a member of the bar. The reply of the young man was to this effect: "If after years of study, years of work, one should do as you have suggested, he would be starting out as a hypocrite and develop a quality which would eternally damn his career." His friend replied: "Well, if you look at it in that way, you may." The foundation suggested to this young man is one of those other foundations.

We cannot afford to associate ourselves in this work for other than whole-hearted pure unalloyed service prompted, actuated and motivated by the love of God and the love of our fellow man, and service prompted by any other motive, is one based upon a foundation other than Jesus Christ. We may believe that Jesus Christ lived, we may believe that he was a wise man, we may believe he is the author of the words which we find in this book which are attributed to him, but this belief only is not the foundation that the Apostle Paul is speaking of. We may believe that he said, "My Father gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should teach, and I know his commandment is life everlasting." We may believe that he was endowed with special power from on high and that he administered to the children of men, that the blind were made to see, the deaf to hear and even the dead were raised to life, but this belief alone is not the foundation that the Apostle Paul is speaking about. We may go farther; we may believe that he gave his disciples a commandment what they should say and what they should teach. We may believe in the commission he gave to his disciples which we find in the gospel of Matthew, with which most of you are familiar:

All power is given to me in heaven and in earth, Go ye therefore, and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching whatsoever I have commanded you and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

We may believe all the doctrine of Jesus Christ that is in the sense, and our minds may consent or give assent to the truth of the doctrine as taught by Jesus Christ, and if that is all there is to our belief, it is one of the other foundations to which the Apostle Paul alludes. If I understand the language of the apostle when he says: "Other foundation can no man lay," you and I cannot lay any other foundation than is laid which is Jesus Christ, I believe that it comprises all these things which I have mentioned and more. Belief in the gospel of Christ, belief that it is the power of God unto salvation will not save us unless it is applied to our life, and our God does not intend to impress upon us or enforce that which we do not consent to. In other words, he will not rob us of our volition, or our agency, but when we have heard the word of God, when our hearts have been touched by the word of God and there springs up within us spontaneously a willingness to give our life to God in harmony with his word as taught by Jesus Christ; then, and then only, are we building upon the foundation which is laid.

The statement was made, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus for he shall save his people from their sins." We must not only realize that Jesus lived, that he taught and that he worked mighty miracles, but we must believe that Jesus is the Christ and we must believe it in the way that the Apostle Peter believed it when he was commended by the Savior, when he made the statement, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

One that has based his faith upon the foundation of Jesus Christ, has received the divine touch which has quickened his understanding, enriched his soul and has vitalized him to that extent that it can be said of him as was said of the Apostle Peter, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Revealed what? The question was, "Whom do men say I the Son of Man, am?" The answer made by Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Do we as brethren and sisters, do we understand, do we discern the foundation principles upon which the Church of Jesus Christ is founded? Upon no other foundation can the Church of Jesus Christ be founded and carried forth, or establish the Zion condition and bring heaven to earth. The same Jesus who enunciated these principles complied with the principles of the gospel, so also if we carry forward the work which he established and erect a building of men and women as a habitation of God through the Spirit, we must build upon the foundation that Jesus Christ built upon, that Jesus Christ expressed in his life. If we place upon it any other materials, what will be the consequence? Let us read:

Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

What do these words mean? They mean, if we build upon the foundation of Jesus Christ not for the purpose of receiving that which we should receive, but that which is represented by gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay or stubble, every man's work shall be made manifest, shall be tried as by fire. If any man's work should be burned, he shall suffer the loss.

There has been established here a work which I believe has been built upon a solid foundation, and to the present time the efforts to so build have been crowned by the erection and dedication of this building, but we cannot stop here. We must consider that our work should be more far-reaching now, we should consider that our services should be more powerful to the accomplishment of God's purposes, what we desire to accomplish by our service. I trust and I believe that when the members of this branch will come into this building hereafter, they will realize that what before you considered in this structure as a means to an end, has now been dedicated and set apart to holy uses and if we come into this building with an attitude of mind and heart reverently desiring to worship God in spirit and truth, I believe that our services will be fruitful of a broader and clearer vision. Our souls will be enriched by the divine touch and our joy in the gospel service will be intensified. If the older members come here in that spirit in the children's services and the Sunday school, it will have the effect of implanting in their young minds and souls that influence which will be the means of developing them more and better for the responsibilities which will later rest upon them. With the enlarging of the work they will be equipped to meet the conditions that shall confront them from time to time.

This branch was organized with fifteen members. You have now over two hundred. With fifteen members getting together in their homes, meeting possibly at their places of business, the little nucleus started then could be carried forward with much less effort than this widening field of opportunities that now lies before the members of the Lansdowne Branch demands. In this larger field that is opening before us there of necessity must come a finer and keener sense of our responsibility to God, to our fellow men and our relationship to God and to one another as members of the kingdom of God, each filling his place in the work and in the way God requires of us. Build upon this foundation that which will be of effect and of consequence will bring us reward, and honor and glory to our heavenly Father. We know as men and women that as years are added to our life, there comes a deeper sense, a clearer understanding of our relationship to the members of our family and of the responsibility which rests upon us, and as we have grown here as a branch from the few members to the present membership, there should come a clearer understanding of our relationship as members of the branch. Our work should be carried on judiciously and wisely.

Because of the more complicated conditions that obtain in society and the more varied relationship in the church to-day, there will of necessity have to be put forth by us a greater effort to carry on the work to a successful culmination. It is essential that those who have been willing to consecrate of their time and service to make possible the dedication of this building to-day, and their children shall be willing to make what sacrifices are required, not only sacrifices of those things that do not attribute to life to the more abundant life which our Savior spoke about. Willing to sacrifice as God has said, that in future years future generations will look upon the effort that has been made here with a degree of joy and satisfaction as we are to-day looking back on the effort that has been made here for the past ten or twelve years from the inception of this work.

In conclusion, as I said in the beginning, you that have taken part in the effort that has resulted in the building and dedication of this house of worship, feel a greater joy and satisfaction in the result of those labors, than those that came in among you from time to time. The achievement of what you may set out to do in the future, will be wrought out by those that are most earnestly engaged in this gospel work and will give a keener delight and joy and greater happiness in the work to those who do their part. I am confident that our heavenly Father is pleased with the work which you have done here and I am sure that the work which you have done you will carry forward and that we may expect to continue to hear from this quarter of God's vineyard that you are truly as the Apostle Paul says, "Laborers together with God and that you are God's husbandry," that you are working not as those who are accountable to one another but as individuals unto God and measuring your service by the standard that has been set before you by the life of our Master. If so, you will go forward each in his time, his place and in his employment as a child of God to the successful completion of the work which God may intrust in your care.

May his peace abide with you.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

MAKING A LIVING

There are few people unfortunate enough not to have to make a living. This should be understood literally, not as a figure of speech. Making a living does not necessarily imply manual labor or office drudgery, but it implies systematic effort of some kind. And it is this concentrated, prolonged, and diligent exertion in order to make a living which develops us, and which we call a vocation. With a vocation go, however, a number of other things.

There is, first of all, a fairly clear distinction between an occupation and a vocation. By occupation is meant merely the making of a living, and this is the principal point in an occupation. The making of a living is of secondary importance in an occupation; its predominant feature is the expression of oneself, or realizing oneself, as the philosophers say. There is a very great difference between the man who is occupied, and the man who has a vocation. Both make a living with their work, but to the one it is a means to an end, to the other it is the end. The one watches the clock and lays down his tools at the stroke of six; the other keeps at it as long as he can, because he enjoys it. The parable of the "good shepherd" brings this difference home to us under the terms of the good shepherd and the hirelings. The former will do anything in the pursuit of his work and consider it a privilege to make even sacrifices; the latter, if faithful, will go just as far as his duty demands, and no farther.

There is, furthermore, a difference in satisfaction derived from an occupation and a vocation, just because a man follows an occupation merely with an eye to a living, he must seek satisfaction elsewhere. The job will be more or less of an annoyance, a necessary evil with which one "must put up." The attention is usually somewhere else, except in so far as the pay envelope demands its concentration on the work. There may be a stimulus in increased pay, and greater exertion may be sustained in the hope of promotion; but just the same there will not be wholehearted service with a single eye. The man who follows a vocation derives a keen satisfaction directly from his work. It may pay well—so much the better; it may pay poorly—never mind. The principal thing is attained, nevertheless; the man expresses himself in his activity; he is creative to a certain extent at least, and that always means satisfaction.

Finally there is a difference in success. So many men claim that they are not successful because opportunity never came to them. They may well be asked whether they were willing to make some kind of sacrifice for opportunity. When a young man insists on having a good time, marrying very young, and spending all that he earns, while another studies at night, saves his money, and is willing to go through college with few luxuries—it is foolish to talk of opportunities. The former never saw his; the latter made one for himself. There is no trick about the matter at all; no fate interferes with the one and favors the other—it is simply a result of the law of cause and effect, or, as the Scripture puts it, of reaping what one has sown. It stands to reason that the man whose heart is in his work will succeed where another man fails. Keeping office hours is good enough for routine work and ordinary duties, but its faithful performance will not, as a rule, bring more than a good living. The man who is everlastingly thinking about changes and improvements in his work, and who is not afraid to take risks, is likely to succeed because he has measured the possibilities of the different chances and selected the one with greatest promise.

The influence of work extends, however, not only over the individual but over the whole family. Formerly the family bonds were much stronger than today because occupational and vocational bonds were stronger and more numerous. In the vast majority of cases the different members of the family worked together. While this furnished frequent occasions for friction, it provided at the same time many opportunities for helpfulness and the expression of kindness and affection. At any rate, the financial status of the members depended on this cooperation. It was inevitable that they should regard each other, if not with greater affection, at least with more consideration, since they were dependent on each other.

It is different to-day. The son no longer follows the father's trade; the daughter no longer assists the mother at housework; each follows a separate path. Economic independence means greater independence in the family circle. As the little boy said who was reprimanded for his waywardness: "Pa can't say nothin'; I pays the rent!" One hundred years ago such a statement would have been impossible, because whatever work the boy might have done would be performed in the shop of his father, and he would never have known just how much he contributed to the family earnings.

From whatever point we look, then, at our work, it has a most important bearing on our whole personal welfare. It enters into our happiness, companionship, and our family life. Hence the importance of a proper choice of work so that it should be a vocation, not merely an occupation. The two chief considerations in choosing one's life-work should be fitness and opportunity for development.

Many, if not most young persons, look at the remuneration of their work. They ask themselves: Will this pay well? Are the hours long or short? Is the work heavy? Is much study required to get ahead? They rarely ask: Is this the work which I really want to do? Am I specially fitted for it? The latter questions are the only pertinent ones.

It may be said, however, that comparatively few young people know decisively what they are fitted for, granting now the willingness to choose with that end in view. So-called vocational guidance has come into existence to meet that particular need. By means of various physical and psychological tests, an attempt is made to find out the particular talent of each applicant. This branch of study is still in its beginnings, but improvement is very rapid, and it will not be many years before the vocational guide may ascertain with a fair amount of accuracy for what work a particular boy is best fitted. One should say in all truthfulness that the revelation will not always be pleasant. There will be many boys with great ambitions but without proper gifts, who will be told to choose a more humble vocation. There will be no disgrace involved in this in times to come, since a false social standard is very generally applied at present to different vocations. There is absolutely no good reason why a fifth rate lawyer or physician should be more highly esteemed than a first-class mason or carpenter. This is simply an inheritance from past ages. In the future, occupations will be esteemed according to their social usefulness. And surely a good cook who provides wholesome and toothsome food for a whole family is more useful than a lawyer who seeks to provoke trouble between two parties in order to get a job.

Opportunity for development is the other criterion which should be applied in the choice of a vocation. This is partly an individual and partly a social affair. The boy who wants merely a job, even though it never gets him any further, has our pity. But the boy who for lack of means is unable to satisfy his ambition to develop his talent, should receive our help. Vocational guidance will in the future become a social agency. It will not only try to find out what a boy is fit for, but attempt to provide an opportunity for the boy with the talent but without means.

Society sustains a great loss at present owing to the fact that many talented boys are kept at work without the possibility to develop their gift. One of the chief duties of society in the future will be to rescue these boys from the drudgery into which they have been thrust owing to poverty. At present such boys are only occasionally and by chance saved from a life of misery. Vocational guidance will do it regularly for the benefit of society.—Rudolph M. Binder, Ph. D., New York University, in Studies in Social Progress.

THE STAFF

Edited by ARTHUR H. MILLS, 1514 W. Short St., Independence, Mo.

In Parting

Having been privileged to perform the duties of editor of the musical columns of the HERALD for a period covering over four years, and having reached "the parting of the ways," we feel it graceful for us, at least to wave a parting hand. Our very best good will goes with this farewell, for we feel that there are few things in life which are of greater importance than an effort to raise high standards for our people along every phase of latter-day command. We cannot see and know all the good which comes in the exercise and development of the art of music among us, but we do know God never gives idle or profitless counsel.

We rejoice that music is coming "into its own," in the way it is! Think of the advantage to be gained by having a conference appointee devoting his whole time to the encouragement and upbuilding of this work among our people! And how happily was this appointment made, a man who by taste and training is well-qualified to accomplish much in this line. Brother Arthur Mills, who since last conference has been working incessantly in the cause of music in our church, has come to his efficiency through conscientious and earnest work—occupying on many rounds of the ladder! In teaching the young aspirant after musical fame to plod through technical exercises; or the young investigator into the "whys and wherefores," expounding the rules of the game of music; or attempting to coax wheezy instruments manipulated by unskilled fingers into something approaching harmony, or guiding the semiprofessionals in orchestra or choir, through successful public performances—in all these lines our brother has had thorough drilling, and is able to speak in counsel with no uncertain voice!

Thus it is that very appropriately and to the distinct advantage of the musical work, Brother Mills, our appointed "apostle of music," is to edit The Staff hereafter, and we feel that time will fully justify the change. We bespeak for him the hearty support of all who have so faithfully stood by the work in the past, as well as that of hosts of new converts to the cause. It is a cause well-worth the very best we have, and we hope to some day see more of our beautiful visions realized. Thankful for what has been done, hopeful for the greater future, and with faith unshaken in the people of God doing their full duty, we subscribe ourselves—not in good-by, but the more cheerful "au revoir."

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

It is faith in something and enthusiasm for something that makes a life worth looking at.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Salutatory

It has fallen to the lot of the writer, due to the retirement of Sister Audentia Anderson, to assume the editorship of The Staff. We personally regret Sister Anderson's relinquishing this work, and were not at heart disposed to accept and add its duties to our already fairly large quota, but it was deemed that we were the logical successor, being so closely in touch with the various musical interests, and we have not felt justified in declining.

In assuming the editorship of The Staff it is our prayer that we may preserve its columns of real value to the music work of the church; a medium that will materially aid in the upbuilding of that portion of God's work. And we therefore earnestly urge that all interested will heartily assist us in accomplishing this greatly desired end.

The HERALD space kindly allotted to The Staff is necessarily limited, but we are earnestly hoping that ere long additional space in some of the church periodicals may be secured, that the needs of our rapidly growing music interests may find adequate expression. Until that time we must perforce restrict the nature and length of articles sent us for publication.

In the meantime we respectfully request that choristers of branches and districts, orchestra and band leaders and all interested in the church's music work send us items of general interest as well as articles upon musical subjects.

We earnestly pray that the music work of the church may develop into that which shall truly serve the church in the greater way which God so evidently designed it should.

Yours for service,

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Some Reunion Experiences

As the reunion season approached the writer felt within him the conviction that the musical work of the church should be represented at these gatherings of the Saints. We therefore wrote Brother Albert N. Hoxie, the general chorister of the church, and received his reply that such had also been the conviction of his heart, and that he heartily approved of the project which he felt would be to the advancement of the music work in general. So we arranged a schedule of reunions, "packed our grip," and started. The first reunion to be visited was that of the Spring River District, at Joplin, Missouri. The large number of intelligent young people and their interested response were very promising to the future musical development of this district. It is particularly a district where music may develop into a real force in carrying along the church work. Let the Spring River officials fail not to be mindful of their possibilities in that line.

From Joplin we proceeded to Holden, Missouri, where the first annual reunion of the new Holden Stake was just starting. Owing to the illness of Sister Johnson, the district chorister, plans that had been under way for the musical work of this reunion had not reached their best state of development. We had to personally step into the breach due to Sister Johnson's absence. But we found two good nuclei at hand around which we could build some effective forces—the Holden choir, which Sister Johnson herself had ably developed, and the Holden Sunday school orchestra, which had been made an effective body under Brother Alma Moler, the district orchestra leader, and Sister Kate Doty, the leader of the orchestra in its work in the Sunday school. With these at hand we soon got into the service of the reunion, in rendering its music both enjoyable and spiritual.

"Music Day" held on Monday, August 13, was successful in every way, from the "musical prayer meeting," through the special address and "round table," culminating in the special concert at night, which was noted not only for the excellence of the numbers rendered, but from the often heard comment that it "quit too soon." (It consumed only an hour and a half of time that was being found so enjoyable by all.)

Boone, Iowa, next engaged our attention, where the Des Moines District was holding its reunion. Under the big steel canopy of the pavilion at Herman Park, placed at the Saints' disposal for the reunion, were held some exceedingly interesting experiences. In our address we enjoyed "liberty" in presenting our chosen theme and our numerous course of auditors gave most encouraging attention to our presentation of the "gospel of good music." Our round table in the afternoon was another interesting session, full of enthusiasm, and the questions asked evidenced the fact that the people of this district are really interested in musical development. Even the rubicund face of the district president, Brother O. Salisbury, glowed with interest and the questions he propounded make us feel that he will be a real supporter of such work in his district.

Logan, Iowa, long famed as the home of the church's "world reunion," was the fourth gathering to receive our attention. Here we found a hearty welcome and many able supporters. We were asked to help conduct the music work of this reunion, which we consented to do, and soon found ourselves in a most pleasant task, as the hearty response to our efforts made it a guarantee of success. The visiting instrumentalists were soon organized into an orchestra that gave effectual assistance in the song services. These song services were held during the thirty minutes preceding the evening preaching services, and consisted of a general congregational singing of the songs of the church. Hymns and songs the Saints love, and which breathe most fervently the spirit of the church, were sought after and used, and how the people would sing them! This feature is one of the most commendable, in the writer's opinion, of all our church music work. The singing of the grand, spiritual songs that have sprung from the throbbing heart of the church, by the concourses of the Saints, is a factor of greater importance in our spiritual church life than we have hitherto understood. The spirit of community music expression should be encouraged in every direction and at every opportunity. The expression of this spirit can only lead to a better and a closer amalgamation of the people.

We enjoyed all the "liberty" mortal man can reasonably demand when we addressed the people on the work of music and the big audience sustained us in our task by their appreciative attention. The "round table" in the afternoon was equally enjoyable, full of "ginger" and interest from the word go. We parted from the Saints of the Logan reunion with feelings of real regret.

In the hallowed walls of the church's sacred temple at Kirtland we presented the work of the church's music. Within the very walls where the revelation was presented to the church, giving instruction and admonition as to the use of music in the church and urging its wide cultivation, we tried to tell the people of the wondrously divine wisdom of that revelation, and the great purposes of God in so graciously giving it to his people. We felt awed by a realization of the auspiciousness of the hour and that the hallowed walls themselves could render a better account of the divine intentions than we were capable of doing.

At Kirtland we met representative Saints from a number of eastern districts and were made to realize that the true spirit of the church is had in all its regions where the gospel has penetrated.

My experiences in visiting all these reunions will never be forgotten. I do not know how much good I may have done for the church in my labors at these reunions. I shall probably never know until in the final accounting of things its amount shall be determined; but I earnestly hope the church shall reap a real harvest therefrom. One conviction has been firmly implanted within my mind as a result of these experiences—the cause of music is growing in the church and the minds of the Saints are awakening to its value and its sacred importance.

Help Us Compile a "Scrap Book" of Things Musical in the Church

We believe we have hit upon an excellent project whereby the condition of the church musically, together with its progress in musical development, may be graphically illustrated. It is, to compile a "scrap book" in which may be inserted anything that will evidence this development.

Therefore we earnestly urge that district and branch presidents, secretaries and choristers; Sunday school superintendents, secretaries and choristers; Religio presidents, secretaries and choristers; in fact everybody who is interested in the musical development of the church, to send us programs (both collective and individual) newspaper clippings and comments, special articles, etc., in fact everything that will show in printed form the work that is being done over the church in music.

Send these things in, and we will utilize them to the best advantage. If you are in doubt as to suitability, send them anyway, and we will decide.

ARTHUR H. MILLS,

General Secretary and Assistant National Director.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1514 West Short Street.

From the Supervisor of Our Educational Bureau

The educational department of the Woman's Auxiliary is broad and comprehensive, having as its aim or purpose the training of women to be more efficient mothers, wives, women of business—in fact the aim is to help every woman, no matter what her sphere of life, to live more completely, and to be able to meet the problems which confront us to-day.

There are two courses or programs which might be adopted by any organization, government or group, the legislative and the nonlegislative. As a church, believing in the agency of men and women, we are desirous of working along a non-legislative program, giving the people the opportunity of using their own agency and initiative in deciding upon a course of action which will be harmonious, developing the spiritual, physical and mental sides of one's life. It is not the aim of this department to attempt to present a theoretical side of study and drag one into its meshes simply to sharpen one's intelligence, but it is our aim to present to you a program which if followed will have a tendency to give one a broader viewpoint and a more wholesome attitude toward the spirit and mission of the work.

The program which will bring about a working condition may be summed up in:

Creating sound public opinion and moral standards among the capable by the idea,

(1) That leisure, both mental and physical, is disgraceful.

(2) That the productive life (the life of giving something to the world instead of the life of taking out of or from the world) is the religious and the moral life.

(3) That wealth is a tool rather than a means of gratification (we should understand its purpose and not waste the best of life in its quest).

(4) That the possession of wealth confers no license for luxury and leisure (we should dress simply, live plainly and use our energy in obtaining that which will be more lasting).

The vicious and demoralizing developments of public opinion which we are seeking to discourage are

(1) The cult of incompetence and self-pity.

(2) The gospel of covetousness or the jealousy of success.

(3) The emphasizing of rights rather than obligations.

(4) The worship of the almighty dollar.

(5) The idea that a college education should aim to give one a "gentlemanly appreciation" of the ornamental things of life; such as literature, art, music, golf, etc., rather than to strengthen one for the serious work of life.

Society should learn to want kinds of things which give happiness and not crude gratification. People often need most that which they want least. Not only happiness of life, but its progress, its unfolding of new capacities and interests, is determined largely by the direction of the consumption of a family. Woman is here the influential factor. If there were no other reason for the better and wider education of women than the desirability of more intelligent consumption, society would have ample ground to demand it. The economic waste involved in the production of that which satisfies no permanent or real want is a serious indictment of our present civilization.

There is being sought everywhere the true relation of women to the life around them. What we need above all things to-day is a concrete expression of the sense of duty. We must focus our attention upon the women and children; girls must get ready to be women. It is only through training the minds of women that they may be broken away from an outgrown past. Times have changed to what they were twenty-five years ago. The process of evolution is at work, only those who adapt themselves to the conditions are able to survive—we must be of use or make use of our capacities and possibilities else we will not be able to survive the test of existence. Nature is in harmony with God, there is no conflict. The apparent conflicts are only the results of our imperfect intelligence to recognize that harmony. It is our duty to study so as to understand the laws of God and see the right relationship and harmony which exists between God and science. Every science which has been carried far enough brings to man's intelligence the existence of the power of God.

We as a people should be more anxious and willing to study the sciences and apply the laws in our lives, ever striving to make our horizon broader, brighter and nobler than those who have made no attempt to be in direct touch with God. There is a great responsibility resting upon the women of the church. Who can estimate a woman's value in giving a child a good heritage? The chief asset of the church is its people. The destiny of the church or a nation or a group bound together for perpetuation and progress, lies far more in the hands of the women—the mothers—than in the hands of those who possess power, or those who are innovators who seldom understand themselves. Society generally is now being made conscious of the fact that we must cultivate women, who are the educators of the human race, else a new generation cannot accomplish its task.

Our educational system leaves the teaching of fine ideals of actual womanhood and manhood largely to the home. At present we are educating over twenty million boys and girls in state schools of America. These are spending from eight to twelve years sharpening their intelligence. Their most important work in life, the making of homes, they are supposed to master by imitating the homes in which they grow up, and many of these homes are unworthy of imitation. This complex civilization which calls children out into the world very early in life to learn the various trades, and occupations, and seek vocations, calls for very adept teaching and training on the part of the mother if she is to be able to give to her girl or boy such foundation for character as will enable him to live a life of usefulness. Parents have received little or no preparation or previous training for the most important and delicate task (the duty of caring for their children) that society has placed upon them. Parents need advice and instruction. They need to know the elements of American citizenship, the requisites of ordinary law, the dangers of the city and its temptations. They need a better knowledge of child nature and correct methods of discipline, the origin, developments and workings of society. We can educate to a certain extent, the children for the next generation, but can do little for the parents of this generation unless they will organize for study and be determined to accomplish the task, never being willing to give up because of discouragements or the necessity of work.

The educational department of the Woman's Auxiliary offers to the women of the church study along various lines. These courses are in the hands of those who are willing and anxious to give their time and talent toward opening up the way for greater efficiency among our women. Shall we as an auxiliary of the church be found wanting when the call is made asking for trained American women to help in the constructive program for new life?

It is the aim of this department to carry on extension work in the several lines of study indicated. The time for beginning the study classes has been set for September 15, or as near that date as it is possible to begin, and end June 15.

The list of subjects and instructors who will outline the course of study is as follows:

Mothers and teachers problems: Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Superintendent, Holden, Missouri.

Home economics: Mrs. Bertha Mader, Superintendent, Bertha, Wyoming.

The Care of the Growing Child's Teeth

(The fourth of a series of articles on the care of young children. Sent out by the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.)

By the end of the second year the baby should have his milk teeth complete and until the sixth or seventh year, when the permanent set will begin to appear, these teeth must serve all the purposes that the final set will serve later. Since this is the time the child is learning to chew his food, a process necessary not only for proper digestion but for the strengthening and developing of his jaws and for the proper growth of the permanent teeth, it is important to keep the first teeth in the best possible working order. The condition of the teeth is a fair index to the general health of the child.

Until the child is old enough to use a toothbrush himself, the mother should wash his teeth every day; but as early as possible the child should learn to care for his own teeth. If the teeth cannot conveniently be cleaned after each meal, the mouth may at least be rinsed. Children should be taught that it is of special importance to wash the teeth and mouth after eating nuts, or any sweet, sticky, or pasty food. The teeth should be carefully cleansed at bedtime since the fermentation of food particles left in the mouth, which leads to the decay of the teeth, proceeds more rapidly at night, when the mouth is still.

The child should be taught to brush the teeth from the gum downward or upward toward the cutting edge. When the teeth are brushed crosswise, the tendency is to push whatever is on them into the cracks and crevices of the teeth or under the edges of the gums. The inner surfaces of the teeth should also be brushed up and down, and the grinding surfaces should be scrubbed in all directions; after the scrubbing is finished the mouth should be thoroughly rinsed with warm water.

Some hard food like a stalk of celery or part of a ripe juicy apple eaten at the end of a meal scours the surface of the teeth and leaves a fresh, clean taste in the mouth.

Children should be taken regularly to a good dentist once or twice a year after the first set of teeth is complete. If cavities appear they should be filled with soft fillings, and each tooth should be saved as long as possible. If the temporary molars are extracted before the sixth year molars come in, the latter will be apt to crowd forward into the space left vacant, and when the later teeth come they will be pushed out of their regular places, destroying the natural line of the mouth. The first molars furnish the grinding surfaces necessary to proper chewing of the food. If they fall out too soon the child is hardly able to chew hard or tough food, and is likely to swallow such food in chunks.

The care of the child's first teeth is important also because the health of the permanent set is largely dependent upon that of the first set. The second teeth are much larger than the first and consequently need more room in the gum. For necessary development the jaws must be given plenty of exercise. Consequently the child should have a mixed diet, including some hard food which he cannot swallow without chewing. Toast, crusts, hard crackers, certain fruits like apples, salad, vegetables, and meats should provide the food elements needed for healthy teeth if the child is thriving.

COLLEGE DAY, OCTOBER 7

To leave undone those things which we ought to do, to leave unspoken the word of recognition or appreciation that we should have said, is perhaps as positive a wrong as it is to do the thing we should not have done.—Lillian Whiting.

The humblest subscriber to a mechanics' institute has easier access to sound learning than had either Solomon or Aristotle, yet both Solomon and Aristotle lived the intellectual life.—Hammerton.

Women of To-morrow

The work is suffering to-day for the lack of trained women, leaders to organize and to teach. The time is soon coming when more workers will be needed and the women of the church will be called upon to do their part in the upbuilding of Zion. Have you ever thought, mothers in Israel, that these trained workers of the future, these women of to-morrow, will come from the ranks of the girls of to-day?

We ask the cooperation of every mother and every Woman's Auxiliary worker, in the work of the young woman's bureau. See that your branch not only has a circle of Orioles, but that your older girls get started at once in the new organization. The aims, ideals, purposes and plans of this new movement are explained in the October number of Autumn Leaves. Don't let your girls miss the delightful stories, articles and poems which are appearing in the Young Woman's Department of the Leaves.

ALICE MAE BURGESS.

Asked at a Recent Reunion Auxiliary Institute Meeting

Query: "In your opinion, are the studies and the spirit of the present high school system those best adapted for the highest development of the children of that age?"

Answer, by Sister J. W. Rushton: "No; as I have observed it, the ideals are not high enough to meet all the requirements. Too much emphasis is being placed upon the social side, as evidenced by the formation of so many clubs and cliques. Too little care is given to the guidance of morals, and, in an educational way, too little stress is placed upon the industrial interests, that which fits them for real service in life, both phases being, in my estimation, the chief need of the pupils at the high school age. The prime condition of citizenship is the power of self-support; to be truly educated we must acquire that power and be industrious in using it. The ideal of education must be to fit a child to produce his very best work happily and easily, for the benefit of society. Work is a blessed privilege, and a youth is only fitted for life when he can realize this and joys to be of service. Ruskin said that great nations write their names in these manuscripts, words, deeds, and art, art being the greatest; and art is only the doing of a noble thing gracefully.

"Further, the curriculum of the high school or the academy, is a failure whenever and wherever it does not produce nobility of character. Channing expressed the ideal we should hold before our children when he said, "The greatest man is he who chooses right with invincible resolution; resists the fiercest temptations within and without; bears the heaviest burden cheerfully, who is calmest in storm, and most fearless under menace, and whose reliance on truth, virtue and God, is unfaltering."

Among our Workers

NORTHWESTERN OHIO DISTRICT

The president of this district, Sister D. C. Morgan, writes of the work of her three locals, composed of earnest and active women desirous of making further progress as they understand their opportunities better. The Toledo local have superintendents over the various departments, but as yet have only the sewing department and a child welfare study class. Sylvania and Oak Harbor locals have each the sewing or (as we now term it) relief and service department. She thinks the time is ripe for some good work being done in the home economic study, and wishes Sister Mader, whose address she has not, would give them some points on this line of work. They are planning to cooperate with the Red Cross work of their neighborhood, which is very commendable. Nobody should be more active in rallying to the support of the Government at this time than Latter Day Saints, and there is very much to be done by the women of the country.

(Sister Mader's address is published elsewhere in this issue, in the article from our educational supervisor, Sister Glines.)

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Christmas Offering--Roll of Honor

The publication of the items in this column has been deferred for a time, to allow sufficient time to accumulate a goodly number of them. We are glad to present the following in a very brief manner, which indicates to a large degree the character of the efforts that are being made to roll up a big total.

A. W. SMITH.

Fort Scott, Kansas: 1916, $15; 1917 to July 29, $37.39.

Bay Port, Michigan, had $62.26 on July 29, and in addition raised $20 one day in June as sacrifice day fund.

Boyer City, Michigan, raised $15.09 last year but by July 1 had $55. They expect to make it $100.

Edward Rannie, of the Independence home class says he has his $2. He enjoys being a child again this cause.

Tabor, Iowa, had $28.62 last year but report on July 1 $42.20.

Here is a bunch the Presiding Bishop reports:

The Plains, Ohio, 1916, $19.25; so far $40.

Blenheim, Ontario, 1916, $2; so far, $100.

Windsor, Ontario, 1916, $13.80; so far, $60.

Longwood, Ontario, 1916, nothing; so far, $41.70.

Olive Branch, of Kimball, Ontario, 1916, $34.70; so far, $100.

Vancouver, British Columbia, 1916, $12.10; so far, $25.

Fairfield, Illinois, 1916, $2.80; so far, $8.

Pisgah, Iowa, 1916, $44.74; so far, $153.85.

Santa Ana, California, 1916, $18.19; so far, $39.80.

"What do you think of Blenheim?" asks the secretary of the bishop's office. We think she is doing wonderfully well.

Stevenson, Ontario, 1916 offering $10.86; to July 7, $27.50.

Sharon, Pennsylvania, aims to raise $100. Two years ago they made a special effort and raised $60.50. Previous to that it was about $25 or less each year. Last year it was $45.30. To the 1st of August this year they had $52.75. Good, Sharon, and we note you only have about 35 members, mostly children. They promise their report in the blue Stepping Stones will be on one line, as it was last year, this by unanimous vote of the school.

Second Kansas City is a small school. They had $19.73 in 1916, and to August 12 had $24. The superintendent is giving a dollar extra for every $5 the school raises.

Bennington Heights, Kansas City, Missouri, raised $4.25 last year, while on August 19, they had $42.

Taylorville, Illinois, set their mark for $100, but were so successful they raised it to $200. Last year they sent in $54.94, but by August 20 this year they had $111. An organized class of girls raised $32 with a social, and some others are going to try similar plans. They are all at work.

COLLEGE DAY, OCTOBER 7

Chatham, Ontario, sent in $22.17 last year but by July 15 of this year had raised $71.01.

Butler, Missouri, sends in $15, which is more than double last year's offering.

Bisbee, Arizona, say they had on July 1 25 cents more than they sent in last year—$19.50.

At Gaylord, Michigan, Brother Dirk Schreur made the school a proposition that he would duplicate any amount the school would raise by a certain date. They raised $52.75 and he doubled it. The school remitted the $105.50 to the Bishop. They have 22 members. Good for Brother Schreur!

With many of their members aiming at one cent a day, Humberstone, Ontario, school reports $17.32 on hand July 31. Their 1916 offering was $2.75.

Olive Leaf school, at Indianapolis, Indiana, sent in $91.75, while last year it was $25.20. Membership 40.

First Philadelphia school aim for $500, and have raised $109.74. "Mighty efforts are being put forth to surpass anything ever before attempted along this line," is the way the superintendent puts it. They put in fifteen minutes each month reviewing the work done and write the results on a large blackboard for all to see.

East Saint Louis expect to raise $250. They now have $132.59 of this amount. Their 1916 offering was $65.74. Ten minutes are allowed each Sunday morning for the little ones to tell what they have done. The enrollment is about 75.

Lamoni, Iowa

The beginning of the new year in Lamoni Stake might very properly be said to be the days immediately following the annual stake reunion held at this place. It seems to be a summing up of our spiritual gains, and as a result of the introspection, there have been registered numerous resolutions that promise much and really count. There is a strong spirit of consecration manifest in the lives of the Saints which may be observed in their home life, in their social gatherings, and everywhere one comes into touch with them.

There have been some very brotherly exchanges of views between the stake officers and the priesthood in their meetings recently, and as a result we believe much good will come. A better understanding of the work is being arrived at and the responsibility being spread over a larger territory and placed upon a greater number. Most of the local appointments outside of the town are now in charge of men of the ministry outside the stake presidency. It is the duty of these men to see that the appointments are kept up and it is optional whether they do all the preaching or not. Of course these are with the general concurrence of stake officials. With the excellently organized transportation system, in charge of A. J. Yarrington of the stake bishopric, it is possible to secure a way to go for every man who will accept an appointment for a service. Of course this is possible only through the splendid cooperation of those of our members owning autos and teams. At present there are thirteen appointments where speakers are furnished from Lamoni, outside the town.

Our local work is in good condition. J. F. Garver, stake president, is preaching each Sunday evening in a series on "The gospel principles—their significance." The attendance is good, and the response excellent, the sermons of a high order.

The Sunday school and Religio are largely augmented by the influx of college students. We saw one class of thirty-two college girls, and of course that didn't include all of them. There were a goodly number of new faces among the lot. And there are a fine lot of young men in the big class under the tutorship of F. M. McDowell. It is customary to use a number of these students as teachers in both the Sunday school and Religio, while those holding the priesthood are given every opportunity to serve.

The morning service on Sunday, the 9th, was occupied by Sister Mabel Knipschild, teacher of home economics and other subjects at Graceland. She was representing the Woman's Auxiliary interests at their request. She was introduced in an excellent little talk by Brother F. M. McDowell. The efforts were both well liked and will be productive of much good without doubt.

In the lower room at the same hour the juniors and children were observing "Educational Sunday," in two addresses and appropriate musical features. Brother G. N. Briggs told of his experiences in the schools of the Philippine Islands, demonstrating with a number of articles, the work done by the children of those schools. Brother McDowell came from the upper room later and told of the possibilities and need of educational work before the group present. If one has never looked into their faces and addressed an audience of a hundred eager children, he has missed something. The previous meeting was a prayer service, and the response was very satisfactory.

The college opening on Friday the 7th was quite auspicious. In his characteristic manner Brother S. A. Burgess told us of "War, education, and the church." He emphasized the need of preparation in schooling as well as in every walk of life. We understand he is to give the HERALD readers a synopsis of the address. We wish it could have been taken verbatim. The enrollment is better than ever, especially in the college department. The addition of an orchestral department, wherein one may learn to play any band or orchestra instrument will no doubt prove popular.

We learn that the Chariton Saints are occupying their new church, erected this summer. DELBERT.

From Here and There

Sister Mary Gline, of Xenia, Illinois, hopes the Saints will write to the little orphan about whom she has written before, at that place, Miss Eklie Miller. She is in a very serious condition and enjoys letters and cards sent her.

The Fort Towson Enterprise of Oklahoma reports that the Saints' meetings held recently at that place closed with five baptisms. It also states that the meetings were very well attended, and the weather fine. J. C. Chrestensen was the speaker.

Brother Stanley J. Fout, who is with the medical department of the United States Army at Deming, New Mexico, desires to know the addresses of any of the Saints in that region, and if possible, that any of them will call on him. Any of the missionaries passing through that region should stop and make his acquaintance, as he desires to keep in touch with the church work in this manner.

Subscribers of the Zion's Ensign published at Independence, will get their paper a day later than usual this week. This is an unusual proceeding and one which all papers try to avoid, but the trouble was such that it could not be avoided this time.

Wednesday morning the last form of four pages was placed on the elevator to be sent to the press room when the rope broke and the heavy forms fell to the first floor. They did not stop there but went right through the boards at the bottom of the elevator and into the basement. Two of the pages were beautifully "pied."

The entire force went to work resetting the paper and got on the press to-day a little more than a day late.—The Jackson Examiner.

Northeastern Illinois

As some may have noticed, the reunion of this district that was to meet August 24 to September 2 was called off for several reasons that seemed sufficient. It might be of interest to some of the district to know that at the above date the farmers' had two weeks threshing on hand in the northern part of the district. This was the latest threshing in years, due to the lateness of the season and to the great growth of straw, thus taking much more time than usual per acre. This would have prevented the greater part of the farmers from attending. Conditions in the cities did not change much from June to August. The greater part of the members having to figure very close to make ends meet with the high cost of so many things. At the conference in June it was agreed that the district president and the patriarchs should hold special series of meetings in all the branches, and instead of the old-style two-day meetings we thought better to have seven or eight days, and now find that in many of the branches they desire two weeks instead of one. When the week's meetings have been held in all the branches we will try to return so far as time will permit and repeat the efforts. Patriarch F. G. Pitt, whom we assisted at Plano two weeks ago, has answered a call to labor in Colorado, from President F. M. Smith. Sorry to have you go, Brother Pitt, but may you be blessed in your labors there. Patriarch W. A. McDowell is still in this field and ready as ever to assist, and we will soon begin in the Chicago branches. Following the week at Plano the writer held forth at Sandwich Branch, and three were baptized. This caused great rejoicing, and prayers of thankfulness ascended to God for the souls thus obedient to the gospel. The Christmas offering of the Sandwich Branch has now reached beyond the one hundred dollar mark. I hope all the branches are working as hard as Sandwich. This is a day when all the Saints should be making sacrifice that the work of preparation for the coming of Christ be not hindered. We are glad to note from time to time the development being attained in the stakes, and trust that we of the outlying districts, may be able to do our best to be ready for the greater degree of gathering that seems to be not far ahead of the church in general. How many times we wish that the Saints of Germany, England, France and all other nations might have been gathered before this condition of war overtook them!

We still believe that this is ahead of us (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13, 14): "And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand. And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy."

Should we take the view of some religious bodies, that this is the great last war, we might say that the Saints have failed to do what the Lord has designed, but such we believe is not the case, and before the great last day all things regarding the gathering will be accomplished as the Lord has designed. To any of the Saints of this district living in isolated conditions, and who can make possible a place to hold meetings, please write to F. F. Wipper of Plano, Illinois, or to D. E. Dowker, of 6549 South Lincoln Street, Chicago, as these brethren are anxious to make all the new openings possible. Let one and all make holy the place (home) where they abide. Every home should have its family altar and remember the instruction of Alma 16: 218, 219, 221:

"Yea cry unto him for mercy; for he is mighty to save; yea humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him; cry unto him when you are in your fields; cry unto him when you are in your houses, yea over all your household, both morning, midday and evening."

"But this is not all: ye must pour out your soul in your closets, and in your secret places, and in your wilderness, yea and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are round about you." Please read to the 237th verse also. How good the Lord has been to tell us of our daily duties, that it may be well with us. May we give heed to all the Lord has given, that it may be well with us all.

Your servant for Christ,

BELVIDERE, ILLINOIS,

J. O. DUTTON.

San Francisco Advertisers

Noticing a request in a late HERALD for the addresses of branches of the church and a statement that some one could not find our church, I would state that ours may be a little hard for a stranger to find. We are located at the corner of Danvers and Caselle Avenue. Any of the Saints visiting us must take an Eighteenth Street car and get off at Danvers and walk one short block. The church can be seen from the car. We advertise our services among the "church notices" every Sunday, in the San Francisco Examiner. We are also advertised in the San Francisco directory, but not in the telephone directory, as we have no phone in the church. The home address of our president, Elder G. J. Waller, is given in our church notices.

We are doing all we can to keep our cause and the church before the public. Our literature committee is always at work, and tracts are being distributed. Most of our public libraries have the Book of Mormon and some of our literature. Strangers are most always at our meetings and we always make them feel at home and welcome. Our preachers are in the enjoyment of the Spirit in presenting the word. Sunday school and Religio are doing good work. Our choir is excellent. We expect our president, G. J. Waller, home from Honolulu by the first of September.

720 SECOND AVENUE.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

LONDON, ONTARIO, August 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: I very seldom see any news in the HERALD from our lovely little city, so I decided to send along a little contribution. I am sure the Saints who have moved away from here are always glad to see how we are progressing. The latest movement on foot here is the Woman's Auxiliary. We organized last February, but made little progress. After writing the president of the general society asking for help, Sister Louise Evans, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, was sent to us and I must say she has been a wonderful help. I don't know how many such good women there are in the church, but the church need be proud of our sister. Her talks have been of a high order, and so much counsel and comfort has she impressed on our minds we shall not soon forget. How great the need of mothers studying and being real helpers.

After putting our local in good shape, Sister Evans, together with the writer, visited Saint Marys, Stratford, and Saint Thomas, organizing a local of the auxiliary in each place. Then we proceeded to the Erie Beach reunion. There Sister Evans made a splendid talk on the work, which was well received as she was at all the places. It is understood she will work in the Chatham District ere leaving Canada. She has had to stop work on account of sickness. She developed quinsy and septic poison of the throat. Her condition became so serious we wired for her father to come. He and Sister Evans arrived the next morning, staying over two Sundays, till our sister was out of danger.

Brother Evans preached both Sunday evenings, to a large audience. Many were the remarks on his splendid ability as a preacher.

On the last evening the choir and the people sang, "God be with you, till we meet again." With eyes dim with tears and amid many "Godspeeds" and "good-bys" to him and Sister Evans, they left us. It is one of the bright spots in life to meet such people.

Sunday is our rally day. The committee is busy preparing the children and decorating the church for one grand day. We are busy every night and all day Sunday there will be something going on. We realize it is better to wear out than to rust out.

For eternal life,

427 Ridout Street.

ROSA TEIR.

know the Saints everywhere will be glad to learn that it has been possible for him and family to return. We urge that his many friends refrain even yet from writing him unnecessarily. He is assured that all are interested in his welfare and it will be better to spare him the mental strain necessary in going over extensive correspondence until he fully regains his strength.

Graceland College Opens Auspicious Year

The good attendance at the opening exercises of Graceland on the 7th attested the great interest Lamoni has in the church college. As is customary, the various interests of the town had representatives present who made brief welcoming speeches following the address of S. A. Burgess on "The present crisis, education and the war." The enrollment is twenty-five per cent more than that of last year, the ladies as usual being in the majority. It is to be noted that a considerable number are here because of the action of General Conference which turns over the College Day collection to a fund to provide scholarships. With the training the college gives, they can soon increase their earning power very materially and repay the money loaned them from this fund. We hope the Bishop's appeal in last week's number of the HERALD will be heeded. The College Day collection on October 7 should be very large. Whether these and others who come may receive the training the times demand depends largely on the response given. The wireless course is training young men in four and a half months so they may accept a lucrative position or if required to serve in the Army may join the signal corps. The excellent home economics course will help many a girl to handle the problems presented in these times of high prices. The general courses fit one for his chosen vocation.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.—At Clearwater, August 25 and 26. W. M. Self and F. S. Gatenby presided. Statistical reports of Inman, Clearwater, Round Park, Bonesteel and Meadow Grove branches read. Ministry reporting: Joshua Carlile, J. L. Gatenby, H. E. Gold, and H. Outhouse, Thomas Patras. Spiritual condition of Clearwater, Meadow Grove and Inman branches was reported by branch presidents. All reported spiritual improvement. Mary Sodersten, clerk.

WESTERN COLORADO.—Bayfield, August 25 and 26, presidency presiding. All officers reported. District treasurer reported a balance of $39.95, closing with $51.85. Bishop's agent had on last report $133.63, received $270.11 since, on hand now $124.24. All branches reported. Total membership of 219, gain of 2, with a scattered membership of 24 not enrolled in the district. All branches made spiritual reports, and one reported by district president with encouraging remarks showing healthy conditions, no serious trouble, but a spirit of unity throughout district. Ministerial reports from 1 seventy, 4 elders, 4 priests, 4 teachers, 1 deacon. The seventy and one elder of the missionary force, the balance local officers in the district. Resolution obtained for closing all branch statistical and ministerial reports February 1, and August 1 of each year. John Scannell, of Durango, was elected member of district gospel literature board. Next conference will be held with Delta Branch, at Delta, Colorado; time was left with district president and president of church to determine. The services of the conference were determined as announced by district president. Besides business session there were 2 priesthood meetings, 1 prayer meeting, 1 sacrament meeting and 3 preaching services. A collection was taken for church debt, amounting to $14.59. Conference was held in the Union Church, with some 36 visiting Saints, and good attendance throughout the service. Although Bayfield Branch has only 19 members, and not a resident family in the town, all were well cared for by cooperative plan in charge of the committee, who made assignment for quarters for the members. Much credit is due our district president, T. A. Higdon, for his efforts in organizing and directing temporal affairs of the gathering. M. L. Schmidt, president.

Our Departed Ones

DIEM.—Fred Alfred, son of Brother Fred Diem, was born

May 17, 1903, at Boone, Iowa. Baptized when 8 years of age at Stewartville, Missouri. Was loved by all who knew him. Died September 1, 1917, at Kivon, Iowa. Leaves to mourn, father, stepmother, 4 sisters, and grandmother, Sister Amelia Hines, of Stewartville, and other relatives. His mother preceded him some nine years ago. Funeral at Saints' Church, in charge of T. T. Hinderks, sermon by T. A. Ivie. Burial at Red Grove Cemetery.

DAVIS.—Roy E. Davis was born at Montrose, Iowa, September 20, 1872, removed in boyhood to Decatur County, Iowa, and spent the remainder of his life in that and Mercer County, Missouri. He was married January 1, 1895, to Miss Effie Willis, who has borne him four children, two of whom died in infancy. The other two, Raymond and Lloyd, with their mother, survive him. Died September 6, 1917, at Pleasanton, Iowa. Funeral services held at the residence, September 8, before a large concourse of people. The sermon was by Heman C. Smith, Frederick A. Smith and Martin M. Turpen assisting.

TRUE SUCCESSION IN CHURCH PRESIDENCY.—The church historian, Heman C. Smith, took full advantage of the splendid opportunity his special calling afforded him for obtaining material with which to answer Brigham H. Roberts, the Utah champion of Brighamism; and this answer is not only convincing, but complete. It deposes Young forever from the high position he assumed. No.

In the Rockies Tomorrow!

Don't think of the Rocky Mountains as "way-off there." They're as near as to-morrow.

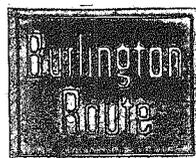

Don't deprive yourself of that promised and needed vacation, even though your time is short. Let the Burlington take you right into the Rockies—Nature's own Vacationland—quickly.

Enjoy Denver, Rocky Mountain National Park, Colorado Springs, the Pikes Peak region, Garden of the Gods. Fish—golf—climb—breathe the mountain ozone. And why not take the family along?

Your Fall Vacation

For genuine enjoyment, there is scarcely anything that will beat camping out in the Rockies—especially when Indian Summer comes and the foliage begins to turn from the conventional green to the varied and vivid fall colorings.

You ought to go! 'Twill do you no end of good. Think it over! Then drop in and let me help you make your plans.

MORE COGITATIONS

When my "Cogitations of a convalescent" appeared, some were so kind as to write and suggest that they be continued. Possibly the next man to write will suggest that they be "concluded."

The little tent house among the mountains from which I then wrote seems a long way off now, for instead of mountains we are surrounded by the gently rolling and beautifully wooded hills of Lamoni. Absence for a season but serves to enhance our appreciation of the beauty of this city of the Saints.

A modern poet or near-poet says: "I've traveled east, I've traveled west; but the homeward way is always best."

To which we say "Amen," from our corner, and add that whereas ten miles an hour is fast time going away from home, the homeward bound heart knows no speed limit.

We came from San Bernardino, California, via the Salt Lake, Denver and Rio Grande, and Burlington Routes, securing a tourist car without change to Osceola, then via Lamoni Stake Bishopric car, driven by Brother R. J. Lambert to Lamoni.

I observed that travelers in the tourist car occupy a happy medium ground between the upper and lower crusts. They feel a gentle superiority to the denizens of the day coach or chair car and when one such ventures among them regard him with glassy-eyed suspicion. At the same time when they intrude upon the sacred realms of the "real Pullman" they return thanking God that they are not as other men. They feel themselves the custodians of democracy—half way between the aristocrats and the mob.

Joel says something about the heathen being awakened in the last days. An example of this came to my attention as I was the intermediary in the introduction to each other of two interesting occupants of our car. The one was a young Chinaman, two years from China, a former student of Berkeley, then en route to New York to enter Columbia University; the other a Japanese, seven years from Japan, a graduate of the University of California, bound for Ohio to enter Oberlin College.

The traveler from the land of the cherry blossom devoted much time to reading the New Testament in Japanese, printed in Chinese characters. He assured me that it was easy to read—easy for him. The man from the Celestial Empire spent his time studying a volume of American History.

They were but two of a great many keen, observing young men from the Orient come to appropriate the best we have in philosophy, religion, politics, economics, education, and invention.

I was amused to note that these two were served by an African porter who was a Methodist preacher before his promotion. I learned this in a curious way. He sprinkled the little strip of carpet in the aisle so frequently that I charged him with being a Methodist parson, and he confessed that he had preached for three years, but affirmed that he believed in baptism by immersion and intended to be immersed the first time he had an opportunity. It seems, however, that all the preachers in his church are very busy whenever he comes along with a request for baptism by immersion.

The fact that a Methodist colored preacher has come to believe in baptism by immersion is not mentioned as a proof that the heathen are awakening—this case is probably sporadic, not epidemic.

In this connection I note that the Des Moines Register for September 18, prints side by side pictures of the Japanese "mission" to the United States in 1860 and the recent mission of 1917, with the comment, "What isn't simian about the Japanese princes of 1860 is sleepy." But there is nothing either simian or sleepy about the keen-eyed men who visit us to-day.

Yet I noticed that in appearance these men conformed pretty closely to hereditary types—age-old types not to be concealed by modern dress.

America has not yet developed a type. Our people run the gamut in facial expression from the aristocratic "countenance" to the plebeian "map" or "mug."

The great American type has not yet emerged from the "melting pot" into which God cast all races. Will it come out with British jaw, Irish eyes, Norwegian hair, and Father Abraham's nose? Will it be a masterpiece or a mess? Who can tell?

One thing to give the traveler pause and food for reflection to-day is the omnipresence of the soldier. I have traveled far and wide in days gone by in this land and seldom saw a soldier; but now they are everywhere. Soldiers in mass and singly. Soldiers in uniform and soldiers in embryo. Tall, haughty, domineering officers, and stooping, blushing rookies, still conscious of their khaki.

We were reminded that our recruits face worse dangers than bullets when we met two young marines invalidated home after seven months in the hospital. Certain items indicated the nature of their malady; and we are sure that they had better died honorably in the trenches or on the high seas.

An article in the Literary Digest for September 15 says: "The ravages of prostitution in our army during the Spanish American war present the blackest page of its history. . . . In the Philippines the venereal rate rose to more than 301 per thousand."

The same article adds that when our troops were on the Mexican border "vice districts were virtually the playground of the army"; and that during the first year of the present war one great nation "had more men incapacitated for service by venereal disease than in the fighting at the front." In the same country last year at one time 17,000 such cases were concentrated in a single hospital camp.

We hear a great deal about the benefits of military experience, most of which is pure moonshine and super-heated air. Those of our boys who keep clean under great temptation and do their duty with stern self-discipline will return, if they live, with great gains in moral character—all of which might have been better obtained in civil life. But statistics and a fair knowledge of human nature lead us to fear that the war will give back not only many cripples and corpses but also many moral wrecks.

We plead with our young Latter Day Saint recruits to set their faces against such evils, to do their duty and fear the God who is seen only by the pure in heart. By so doing they will not only save themselves but others also.

Some sneered when Bryan volunteered his help to safeguard the morals of the men in camp. But whatever our opinion may be of Bryan the statesman, for Bryan the preacher of righteousness we have the most profound respect. May America rise in her greatness and defend her young men against a worse foe than the Kaiser.

Out of the helter-skelter of assembly will presently emerge a vast army—can we make it a great army? Only the good and true and clean are great.

One of our last sights in San Bernardino was a troop train. And one of our first experiences in Lamoni was to attend a public demonstration in farewell to twelve young men drafted for the army—nine of them former students of Graceland.

We could not agree at all with one speaker who declared it a day of rejoicing. When we have conceded it to be a day of necessity, of stern preparation for duty, we have done all that patriotism can demand. And every heart must mourn that the necessity should ever arise for such a day to dawn.

There is no earthly authority that has any astringent to check the bleeding of hearts—and to-day all hearts bleed in all lands. But may there be found a balm in Gilead for the multitudinous sorrows of those who mourn! May God comfort the sad hearts of fathers, mothers, wives, and sweethearts.

And Saints, while you pray for your war widows and war orphans, remember the matchless dissertation of James on the divine unity of faith and works.

"Faith without works is dead," he assures us. Make not your heart a charnal house. Remember also his great definition of pure religion. Read it again.

American Latter Day Saints should also remember to pray often for the President of the United States and for our constitutional representatives in the Senate and House of Representatives, that they may be divinely directed in this the greatest crisis in our national history.

The President is president of all the people. Party lines mean nothing to us—especially at such a time. Parties are not mentioned in the Book of Covenants. But constitutional laws and duly elected officers are mentioned and must be upheld in righteousness.

This Nation is mentioned in Holy Writ as enjoying the "good will of Him that dwelt in the bush." And we are told that God inspired its founders and established its constitution.

If he continues with us as with great Washington and greater Lincoln we shall endure. If he withdraws his favor from us, we shall fail and fall and all the navies we can build and all the armies we can draft will be powerless to save us.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

What is a gentleman? I'll tell you: a gentleman is one who keeps his promises made to those who cannot enforce them.—Hubbard.

LIFE INSURANCE

Our people have often raised the question in regard to life insurance. Should we insure? Why does not the church start such a department? It has long been recognized that if the law of the church is carried out that life insurance is not necessary.

The purposes of life insurance are to provide for the care of our families, in case of our decease; our old age; serious sickness; or disability, sometimes called accident insurance, though strictly speaking life insurance is only the first.

Under the gospel law of stewardship, all four of these purposes are cared for by the church. We save and we should save just as we save to pay premiums, and then turn our surplus into the church. Unless we do this, of course there can be no surplus to care for us as a people. If we do, and work directly on the stewardship plan, and also practice economy, as we would do in case of life insurance, we can receive from the church this protection. We are very glad, therefore, to be permitted to publish the following letter and answer kindly sent us by Bishop James F. Keir. We would call especial attention to the large percentage of our money which is used to meet office expenses and the like under the life insurance plan. Under the divine plan all of this goes to the beneficiaries.

Bishop James F. Kier, Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: If I may indulge a few moments of your time, I should like some advice on a matter that not alone concerns me, but others as well.

This spring I took out a life insurance policy with a successful company in the east, but before doing so I made inquiry to ascertain if the Church was making provisions to maintain an insurance department. I found no provisions had been made, but since there seems to be a need for something of this nature I am making a final appeal to you before starting my premium payments.

I dislike to be paying money to a worldly institution when it seems as though the Church could be deriving the benefit, yet, what am I to do since there is need for this or a similar protection?

Sincerely, your friend and brother,
(Signed) _____

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 7, 1917.

Dear Brother: I have your letter of September 3d touching the matter of life insurance.

There has been some agitation by some who thought that the church should conduct an insurance department. Nothing, however, has been done in this line.

The main objection that I see to it is that it would not be in keeping with the spirit of the law that the Lord has given us as a church. However, I am open to conversion if it can be shown that it would not do violence to our equality scheme as outlined in the revelations.

In Section 101, paragraph 2, the Lord said, "It is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way." Life insurance is a human scheme and is only a substitute for the better and divine plan. The Lord purposes to bring about among his people a condition of equality. This is to be accomplished, by every member of the church working upon a stewardship basis. It is stated in section 70:3 that "none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God." Those who work as stewards are to receive their just wants and needs, and if, by industry and good management, they are able to gather more than this, after having paid their tithing the residue or surplus is to be turned into the Lord's storehouse. See Section 42:14, 70:2, 101:12, and Section 51:4. In the fifth paragraph of the last citation Bishop Partridge was instructed that this was to be an example in other places and in all churches. I am prepared to believe that if our people will step forward with faith, believing in the promises of God, and carry out these instructions, that we shall find no need of life insurance.

We are told that only 30 per cent of the premiums paid by policy holders ever reach the beneficiaries, the balance being consumed in paying expenses, commissions, and dividends. With the Almighty's plan every dollar would reach the individuals for whom the benefit was intended.

I am not a crank on the life insurance question and believe that the people of the world are wise in taking advantage of its benefits as they have no other alternative; but to my mind the Lord's plan of equality stands out in bold relief and challenges our admiration.

Trusting that the Lord may guide you in wisdom's ways, I remain

Your brother in Christ,
JAMES F. KEIR.

BOOK OF MORMON PLATES

Question. Where are the plates that the Book of Mormon were taken from now and can anyone see them?

Answer. The Church History states plainly that after the Book of Mormon was copied the plates were returned by Joseph Smith to the angel and no one knows now where they are, hence they cannot be seen.

A little thought will show that the seeing of the plates would not prove the spiritual question involved of divine revelation. The plates being of gold were too valuable to be kept, there was continual danger while they were being translated. Their weight in gold from the size given, would have made them worth several thousand dollars. Further, if they were held, it is a question if they would be visible, if we are to follow the example given of the tables of stone received by Moses; even the children of Israel were not allowed to see them, they were kept in the holy of holies, where the priests were not able to see them, but only the high priest. Evidently this has one purpose to prevent the worship of the material object, because the true religion is a spiritual one.

In the HERALD for January 1, 1913, volume 60, page 1, President Elbert A. Smith answers this question, laying a special stress upon the value of testimony, referring to 1 Timothy, chapter 13, verse 1; Judges 18: 16; Isaiah 8: 2.

The existence of the plates was established by twelve witnesses. This would constitute a full jury. The manuscript of the Old and New Testament is not to be found, nor is the Urim and Thummim and many other things to which attention might be called.

The existence of the plates giving such a record is shown by the numerous kinds of writing that have been found in Mexico and elsewhere.

In volume 35, SAINTS' HERALD, page 147, there is a description including a quotation on "Mormonism" by John Hyde. This says very clearly: "Unless Smith had got something, he could never have originated the idea of the book; could not have copied the characters sent to Professor Anthon by Martin Harris; still more, those characters could not have happened to resemble engravings subsequently found; and as these eight do not pretend, as do the three, to have seen them with all ridiculous concomitants of the eye of faith and coming of angels, it is reasonable to believe that Smith really possessed some plates. If their testimony be credible, it proves that he not only had them, but that he kept them, and not delivered them 'up to the angel,' as he elsewhere pretends. To possess the plates is one thing, to have received them from God is quite another. To admit that he had them does not admit the truth of the Book of Mormon.

"How did he get them?"

There is, in other words, sufficient evidence to substantiate their existence, even to those evidently opposed. So far as the divinity of the Book of Mormon is concerned, that would have to rest upon the Spirit of revelation to the individual. On this the Book of Mormon reads as follows:

Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, if it be wisdom in God that ye should read them, that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men, from the creation of Adam, even down until the time that ye shall receive these things, and ponder it in your hearts. And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost, ye may know the truth of all things.—Moroni 10: 3-6.

Many have made this test and have secured the promised evidence.

Too many readers allow their moments of leisure to be wasted in a kind of "busy idleness"; they look over a great variety of books, but for want of settled diligence, their unsteady wanderings in prose or poetry are attended with no satisfactory result.—J. B. Braithwaite, quoted in Choice of Books.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Baptism

On page 891 of the HERALD for September 19, in the last paragraph, an error appears. The word it should be but sin, so that the line would be, "Baptism is for the remission of sins, but sin is not essential to salvation, for Jesus when baptized was not a sinner." This is consistent with the rest of the paragraph. But as it appears it is liable to be misunderstood.

Niagara Falls

The work is moving well in Niagara Falls, Ontario. A fine addition to the church building having just been completed, they are planning an early rally to be held at that point according to letter from Brother J. McAninch. The same letter informs us that Elder Ralph Lindley, who went over the sea with the One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Regiment, has now been transferred to Red Cross work. This may give him an opportunity to help some other brethren there.

The "Ensign" at Half Price

The Zion's Ensign sells for a dollar a year and is worth it. It has been a great missionary factor in the church and in order to extend its field, the publishers are offering it to nonmembers only at fifty cents a year. Anyone can surely think of some who are not members but who would read the Ensign. Send in fifty cents for each subscription before January 1, 1918, and they will receive the Ensign a year.

THE USE OF MEAT

The editors are in receipt of the following anonymous letter, which we quote entire:

GOD'S WORDS

"And it is pleasing unto me that they be used only in times of cold, winter or famine."

SAM'S WORDS

From this it would appear that meat should be used very sparingly indeed (during the summer time or the forbidden period) except in cold weather or times of famine.

God says don't use it, but you say should be used.

I want to ask you if this is perverting the scripture? You surely should be ashamed of yourself.

There is several objections to this. First, he does not quote completely the statement from section 86, as is given in the HERALD for August 22, page 795.

Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

Joseph Smith, the Martyr, said in an address to the church some time before his death, written on September 1 and continued on September 6, 1842, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 110:17: "This most glorious of all subjects belonging to the everlasting gospel, viz: the baptism for the dead."

If it is indeed a glorious subject and a part of the great gospel plan for the salvation of the human race, we ought to be at least interested enough in the doctrine to know what part, if any, we as a people and as individuals have to do in the matter. Joseph Smith states at the end of the above section: "Brethren, I have many things to say to you on the subject; but shall now close for the present, and continue the subject another time." What hindered him from continuing the subject we do not know, but before anything more was written, the prophet was killed.

Very little is said in the Scripture regarding this subject. Paul, however, in 1 Corinthians 15:29 makes a rather startling announcement in the form of a question: "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

This quotation put in the form it is, would lead us to believe that baptism for the dead was not only believed in by the church in Paul's day, but was practiced by the church. The theory so far as we understand it is as follows: Man is essentially a spiritual being; he was created spiritually before he had a physical body. (Genesis 1:27; 2:5, 6, 7.) The spiritual entity is the real man and was the real man or ego before he inhabited the body of flesh and bones given him by God and mother earth; nevertheless the body thus given him is his and becomes a part of him to be closely associated with the development and education of the spirit within this body. Again the body and the spirit are to be made one or united at the last day or when the resurrection takes place. Whatever laws then God may make or has made, for man to obey, affects both the spirit and the body or the complete man. It seems that man cannot be completely happy or fully developed in the divine way without a body as well as having an intelligent spirit. Now there are several laws or ordinances known as fundamentals that man must obey in order to reap the benefits of communion with God. Law is arbitrary; the law of God cannot be changed, so God as a wise Creator must make it possible for man to obey the law that he has created for man's salvation. If the accident of birth and environments exclude men from hearing the law of God, could God being just condemn man for disobeying that which he had not heard and had no opportunity of obeying? and how could he receive the benefits of a law that he could not appreciate or understand? Joy or sorrow is a state of the mind and we cannot have joy in the presence of God unless we are in harmony with him, and have been spiritually educated to enjoy the environments we will find near him.

"Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face." (Psalm 89:14.) God to be just, then, must give all of his children the same opportunities for advancement in spiritual things somewhere along the cycle of eternity. As far as the earth life is concerned at least there are not and have not been equal opportunities of becoming acquainted with God. "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5.

As before mentioned, law is authority. All law is arbitrary. We may not understand it or comprehend it, it may not be compatible with our philosophical reasoning as to why it should be so, but that will not change it. Electricity is set in motion by taking two bits of metal in the mouth and separating them by the lips or tongue and then bringing them together. You can not only see it but taste it, at least something you did not taste before. How it is done you do not know, but the effect is sure. We do not know how baptism in water takes away sin, but we know the effect is sure, and that sins are cancelled through this ordinance, and in fact none can enter the kingdom of God without obeying it. Our reasoning that it might be done in some other way does not change it anymore than our trying to change nature to suit our ideas of what nature ought to be, alters the great forces in nature that are stronger than theories, or wishes, or men.

Jesus Christ gave himself a sacrifice for men, all men: from the beginning to the end. How could Christ offer himself for me without my consent? He may have had my consent; I do not know. Let us say then that we had no way of giving our consent for Christ to act our agent in paying that part of the debt we owed to God, that we could not pay. I do not know why Jesus should have to go through the agony of the cross to save my soul—but I know the effect that act had, and still has on the lives and characters of men; that as soon as I put myself in harmony with his law he becomes my fully accredited agent and is authorized by me to plead my case before the divine throne.

We may not see why it was necessary for the Savior to die on the cross, but that does not make the necessity any less. I could not be blessed with Christ as an advocate with the Father until I heard the gospel and accepted it. "My little children, these things I write unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." (1 John 2: 1.) I therefore come to the conclusion that all men created by God must hear the gospel law taught, and have ample opportunity to obey or reject the teachings of Jesus Christ. Now all men do not have the opportunity on this earth to hear the gospel. Millions of men in the past have not heard it; millions now do not hear it, and they are passing over the dark river of death, great armies of them, day by day. What shall be done, then, to enable them to say, "Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne? The gospel must be preached to them.

That the gospel was preached to certain spirits in prison we have evidence:

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which some time were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was a preparing wherein few, that is eight souls, were saved by water.—1 Peter 3: 18-20.

Here evidently were spirits in prison, some of whom at least had lived in a time when the gospel was preached, and were disobedient. They had been in hell a long time and had evidently profited by their experiences there, as they were willing to hear Christ and were led captive by him. (Ephesians 4: 8-10.) If Jesus was so solicitous for the spiritual welfare of those who had at some time heard and were disobedient what shall we say of those who had never heard?

For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.—1 Peter 4: 6.

Then the gospel was to be preached to those who had lived here on the earth and died without hearing it?

You may think this order of things to be very particular, but let me tell you that they are only to answer the will of God, by conforming to the ordinance and preparation that the Lord ordained and prepared before the foundation of the world, for the salvation of the dead who should die without a knowledge of the gospel.—Doctrine and Covenants 110: 5.

Whatever may be thought or said of those who have once heard the gospel here in this life regarding a chance to hear it again on the other side, one thing is certain, that those who have not heard the gospel here must hear it there.

Now we come to another part of this subject that may not be as clear in the minds of some of us, as the fact of the necessity of preaching the gospel to the spirits in the prison house. Jesus Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison, but he did not stay there and continue to preach to them and others that came to the prison house from time to time. Who then would be authorized to preach to them? It would certainly be logical to suppose that men would be sent to preach to these spirits that had received the priesthood here upon earth, and knew something of their needs and could sympathize with them in their difficulties. But the objector says that preaching the gospel to the spirits in prison would require a certain amount of work, and we are told that the servants of God shall go into the paradise of God and rest from all their labors.

And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.—Revelation 14: 13.

What labors were they to rest from? Why, from the labors they may have performed in their lives here in the flesh. Some of you men know that the labors performed here are rather tiresome because of the fleshly body, but the spiritual labors would be a delight if we were not cumbered by this body of flesh. Again what is rest? Does rest mean to you that you are to sit down in paradise beside some beautiful fountain where the aroma of spiritual flowers are wafted to you by wings of angel messengers, who are going and returning on errands of mercy and love to the inhabitants of the earth? Why, some of you are so nervous that you can't sit still five minutes without wanting to do something. Rest the way some men put it would mean stagnation. When we rest from our vocations here and have a vacation, what do we do? We usually work harder at play than we do at our regular work, because it is something we like to do. Well, we have an account of a few men who lived on this earth who held the priesthood here, and no doubt went to paradise when they died, that did not rest continually from all labor. Moses and Elias talked with Jesus on the mount; we do not know what they said or what they did, but they certainly were not in paradise while they were talking with Christ on the earth. Neither was Moroni in paradise when he talked with Joseph Smith on different occasions.

And again, the voice of God in the chamber of old Father Whitmer, in Fayette, Seneca County, and at sundry times, and in divers places, through all the travels and tribulations of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. And the voice of Michael, the archangel; the voice of Gabriel, and of Raphael, and of divers angels, from Michael or Adam, down to the present time.—Doctrine and Covenants 110: 21.

The point that we urge is this: Rest in the paradise of God does not mean that those who are there will never be sent out of paradise to help those who shall be heirs of salvation. We know if the books are true that God has sent messengers from some place, heaven or paradise or wherever it may be, to the earth. Alma says in the Book of Mormon:

Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; Yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care and sorrow.—Alma 19: 43, 44.

In this passage we learn that the righteous are to rest from their troubles, care and sorrow. Again:

Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked: Yea in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection.—Alma 19: 47.

Joy or misery is a state of the mind, and it is plain that this is what is meant here—a state of the mind rather than a locality or place. These people mentioned by the angel to Alma had had ample opportunity to serve God, but had rejected the light.

And then it shall come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea who are evil; for behold they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord: for behold they choose evil works, rather than good: therefore the spirit of the Devil did enter into them and take possession of their house.—Alma 19: 45.

People who willfully reject the gospel when it is presented to them here in this life, because they love evil, would in all probability reject it if it were presented to them anywhere, so they remain in this state until the resurrection.

We must, however, keep in mind those who have never heard the gospel. Would it be right to put them in the same state with those who had heard and chosen the wicked way?

Again, would it be right and would they feel at home if they were in a state of rest in paradise?

For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains.—Deuteronomy 32: 22.

The Lord is the one speaking here. If there is a "lowest" hell, there must be a low and lower before there can be a "lowest." We are led to believe then, that there are degrees in the conditions of the inhabitants of the spiritual world. Is it compatible with reason to believe that God would send messengers from paradise or heaven or any state or condition where his servants may be, to teach those who have not heard the gospel of Jesus Christ? But, says one, the spirits in paradise cannot leave there; there is a great gulf between the righteous and wicked.

There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day: and there was a certain beggar named Lazarus which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dog's came and licked his sores. And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died, and was buried: and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom and he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me and send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst my good things and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.—Luke 16: 20-27.

I have been careful to quote thus fully so that the whole matter might be placed before us and the conditions noticed. The rich man had had his chance on the earth and rejected light. He must therefore suffer at least until he paid the penalty of wrongdoing. None could pass from Abraham to him. Why? Because he was not entitled to be ministered to. He had been instructed here on the earth and refused to listen. Now, he must suffer punishment. It was God's law. Abraham, Lazarus, or any other servant of God could not cross the gulf against the law of God.

Let us take up the case, then, of the men in the spirit world who have not heard, but when they hear are willing to obey, they have faith, repent of their sins, and wish to be baptized; but baptism in water is an outward ordinance, an ordinance that belongs to the fleshly body, but it is part of the divine law and they wish to obey that law. They would do then just as we do when anything is impossible for us to attend to ourselves, we select an agent to act for us, and the acts of the agent becomes binding on us, and we reap the benefits of his acts. We reap the benefits of the Savior's life and death just as soon as we are ready to obey the law that makes his sacrifice efficacious in our behalf. So then we can understand how the spirits of men "might be judged according to men in the flesh."

In the great work of human redemption or divine education, there seems to be a logical principle involved; that of the lesser being instructed, cared for, and helped to see the light, by being ministered to by those of superior spiritual knowledge. It is God's way, so we read in the vision given to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon that the greater shall minister unto the lesser. Read the 5th, 6th and 7th paragraphs of the "vision" in Doctrine and Covenants 76. A portion of the seventh paragraph reads as follows:

These are they who receive not of his fullness in the eternal world, but of the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the terrestrial; and the terrestrial through the ministration of the celestial: and also the celestial receive it of the administering of angels, who are appointed to minister for them, or who are appointed to be ministering spirits for them, for they shall be heirs of salvation.

The objector may say that the above statement refers to resurrected beings only. Granted; but what is the difference between a spirit in the body or out of the body? It is the same spirit. The body is material substance and has no intelligence. It is the house in which we live. The object in ministering to another is to help, instruct, and encourage. If God does this after the spirit enters a new body—a body of flesh and bones—why should he not do it before? If it is a divine principle it must be an eternal principle. If all men are to be saved except the sons of perdition," the sooner their spiritual education begins the better for the individual.

It is true that the church is not commanded to observe this ordinance of baptism for the dead at the present time, for reasons best known to the Lord, but we are thankful for the wonderful scope of his creative and expansive gospel laws that began before the world was created, that continue during its travail, and reach across time's vista to that place where time shall be no more.

IS INFANT BAPTISM OF DIVINE ORIGIN?

The reader is invited to examine this question with the Scriptures as our standard for decision.

We readily grant that parents have their little babes sprinkled in all good faith, and if such action commands the approval of God, it is a splendid example. On the other hand, if infant baptism (as it is now called) has no foundation in God's word, the practice stands condemned; as it has, and does yet, stand responsible for much cavil about the justice of God.

Advocates of the infant baptism idea think that a refuge secure for it can be unfolded from history.

Let us agree that it has hundreds of years of history. The age of Hinduism or Mohammedanism does not make them Christian religions. There is, generally speaking, this to be observed: That the churches who provide for the sprinkling of the infant do not at all advance a "Believer's baptism," and are well represented by James Cardinal Gibbons in his work entitled, The Faith of Our Fathers, wherein he says:

For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity, baptism was usually conferred by immersion; but since the twelfth century, the practice of baptizing by infusion has prevailed in the Catholic Church, as this manner is attended with less inconvenience than baptism by immersion.—Page 317.

The new mode of baptism is for the child instead of those capable of belief and has in it two radical changes as indicated by Mr. Gibbons which are changes "attended with less inconvenience."

The inference is clear that those inconveniences entailed for the believer in the teachings of our Lord, are to be saddled off upon the infant in the most convenient manner possible, that is to say: A little drop of water on babies' foreheads instead of a burial of the body in water of those capable of belief and responsible as the Scriptures indicate.

If the religion that Jesus taught was a system to be applied only according to its convenience, there would be precious little left of the whole plan of Christian principles. What infidelity!

More history, from that reliable historian, Mosheim:

The sacrament of baptism was administered in this century [the first] without the public assemblies in places appointed and prepared for that purpose, and was performed by an immersion of the whole body in the baptismal font.—First Century, 4-8.

Again, M. De la Roque says:

The primitive church did not baptize infants; and the learned Grotius proves it in his annotations on the gospel.—Scripture Baptism, p. 224.

Please notice the instructions of the Lord to his chosen ministry, in Matthew 28: 19, 20:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

Teaching precedes baptism, afterwards the observance of all that Jesus had authorized to be taught, is enjoined. Not upon the little babe; impossible!

An observer is one who takes notice. A spectator, one who keeps any law or custom. See Nuttall's Dictionary.

To make the meaning doubly clear, let me emphasize the same by further reference to words of the Master, viz:

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 16.

Belief and obedience imply a saving process.

Refusal to believe in, and obey the aforesaid teaching implies damnation or condemnation.

I submit that infants cannot believe or disbelieve, neither can they obey or disobey the terms of any command that require the exercise of the will or intelligence; hence they are not, and cannot become candidates for the baptism taught by Jesus Christ and the apostles. Does it yet seem clearer in the light of the Scriptures or history, that infant baptism in any form has the sanction of Christ and the apostles? I have met parents who seem to think that if they neglected to carry their children to the priests or minister to so-called baptism, that on them (the parents) rested the wrath of God, and that they were wronging their offspring of salvation; and what wonder! They have been taught that the little lambs are born under the guilt of Adam's sin. Salt has been applied in past years to the nostrils of the babe to rid it of the Devil by so-called representatives of Jesus Christ.

These questions occur to me: Am I, are you responsible for Adam's transgression? Shall a just God, who upon conditions forgives us of our own sins, impute to an innocent child the sins of another? What does Jesus say?

And they brought young children to him that he should touch them; and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.—Mark 10: 13, 16.

These mothers, when they desired Christ to touch their young children were in accord with the divine will. Jacob likewise blessed his sons and grandsons. See Genesis 48th and 49th chapters. Simeon too, blessed the child Jesus in the temple. (Luke 2: 28.)

That system of blessing little children by the laying on of hands is the only one that would be found pleasing to the Lord and be acceptable in his sight, as the expression in a definite form of parents desiring to dedicate their children unto God and to his service.

The following passage proves beyond doubt the fitness for heaven and God's presence of the child that dies in the infantile state.

Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.—Matthew 18: 10, 11.

Read the confession of some of those whose churches still teach and practice the worthless dogma of infant baptism.

In the Roman Catholic Manual on "Controversy" we have the following question and answer:

But why should not the Scriptures alone be the rule of our faith, without having recourse to apostolical tradition?

Because: Infant baptism and several other necessary articles, are either not at all contained in Scripture, or at least are not plain in Scripture without the help of tradition.—Scriptural Baptism, pp. 223-224.

Martin Luther says:

It cannot be proved by the sacred Scriptures, that infant baptism was instituted by Christ, or begun by the first Christians after the apostles.—Vanity of Infant Baptism, part 2, p. 8.

In the light of human reason, a child should not become a victim of eternal wrath, owing to the supposed neglect of its parents at a period when it could not think, act, or believe for itself.

SUMMARY

The teachings of Jesus Christ, the apostles and ecclesiastical history, says decisively that infant baptism is not of divine origin. Many representatives of the Catholic, Anglican, Methodist, Wesleyan, and other churches, agree with the above decision.

The principle remains once and for all, that the subjects of baptism must be capable of belief and in a measure able to discriminate between right and wrong; taking God's word as the standard upon, or by which their conscience must be governed.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, believes that man is responsible for his own sins and not for Adam's transgression.

THOMAS JONES.

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS

(Sermon by J. W. Wight, Sunday evening, October 1, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

I want to call your attention to the third chapter of Habakkuk, the third and fourth verses:

God came from Teman, and the Holy One from Mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power.

I shall not attempt to-night to go into a definite explanation as to why God used this method of the laying on of hands in his church and kingdom, but shall rather undertake to prove from Biblical statements that he did so do, and base the argument upon this thought, that using it in his church and kingdom whether it was eighteen hundred years ago, or in whatever period of the world's history it might have been, if that church and kingdom is to be found upon the earth now, this will be one of the fundamental principles of the gospel.

A FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLE

That is to say, that it having been one of the fundamental principles of the gospel, or a principle of the doctrine of Christ, that doctrine, or that gospel cannot be preached now in its completeness unless the laying on of hands shall be taught as well. I want to call your attention to the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, eleventh verse:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

My purpose in referring to this statement is this: that in some day or time in the world's history, God is to set his hand to recover the remnant of his people.

Now I understand that the word set is used here to mean to establish, and since the hiding of God's power is in his hand, it literally means that he is to establish his power in the time when he shall set his hand to gather the remnant of his people which shall be left, from the various places here and there.

The conclusion, as it appeals to me, is this, that Israel, becoming a hiss and a byword, were to be scattered into all the world, until under the great persecutions, there should be but a remnant left, and in the time when that remnant should be left, God was to establish his power in the gathering of that remnant back. And mark you, the definite thought here is, that he was to establish that power, or set his hand the second time.

Now that people were finally dispersed from the land of Judea about 588 B. C., commencing something like 606 B. C., and went over into Babylon. God set his hand 536 B. C., or established his power in their return from the seventy years captivity, back to their own land. Just as God did on that occasion, so will he do when he sets his hand the second time. What he did on that occasion so will he do the second time. He chose four men, called prophets, unto whom, and through whom he revealed his will unto his people.

Now he could not set his hand the second time to recover his people until that people had been dispersed the second time. The second dispersion was in 70 A. D., when they became scattered in all the world, becoming just as Moses had prophesied concerning them, a hiss and a byword among the nations of the world. And some time after 70 A. D., God would establish his power in gathering the remnant of his people back again. And as in the establishment of that power more than two thousand years ago, he chose four men as prophets, or chose prophets, that is the thought I want to emphasize, so will he choose prophets in this second time when he shall establish his power among the children of men. The setting of the hand, in which was the hiding of his power, the establishment of that power among the children of men.

I think then, that we have it sufficiently definite to show us conclusively that it is to be some time after 70 A. D., and search the records of history as you will, take up the history of all the reformers, the entire reformation, and you cannot find a single claim in that reformation anywhere that an angel came from heaven to reestablish the gospel among the children of men, using anyone or all of these reformers as prophets through whom God could reveal his will to the children of men.

In 1830 Israel was still scattered, and in that year a young man stood upon the world's rostrum claiming that an angel had come from the courts of glory, bringing with him the everlasting gospel, and authorizing him as a servant of God, as a prophet chosen of God to bring the gospel back again among the children of men, and the most important fact in connection with his claim in this; that he left out nothing so far as that gospel was concerned. He preached, so far as the gospel was concerned, faith, repentance, baptism, and the bestowal of the Holy Spirit.

Now our brother last Sunday night, so I am informed, represented unto you the thought of the bestowal of the Holy Spirit, and by the way, let me emphasize that in this way would the church, if it be reestablished among the sons of men, if the kingdom of God in its militant form be upon the earth, that church, that kingdom cannot be a vitalized fact without the Holy Spirit's presence, for it lost its vitality when Jesus Christ ascended on high, to the degree that he commanded even his apostles that they should tarry in the city of Jerusalem until they were endowed with power from on high, and every Bible student the world over fully believes that that endowment came with the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. And under that divine plan, these men had the right and did go forth to present the church and kingdom of God under the power and inspiration of the promised Comforter that was to show them things to come. I maintain that it could not show them things to come without making every man, or every woman for that matter, to whom it did thus show, a prophet. Even Philip in those times, had four daughters that prophesied.

OBTAINING THE HOLY SPIRIT

Now the question that confronts us to-night, if I understand the situation, is this: How did they get the Holy Spirit? That is, what was the means that God used, from the standpoint of human instrumentality, for the bestowal of the Holy Spirit? What did they have to do? Was there anything required of them? Let me emphasize the thought, that the very thing required of them then must necessarily be required of them now, for God does not change; in him there is no variableness, neither the shadow of turning. They did practice the laying on of hands eighteen hundred years ago. Nobody questions that, I care not whether an individual may stand behind the sacred desk and proclaim in all the eloquence of a Demosthenes that he does not believe in the laying on of hands to-day upon men and women to impart a bestowal of the Holy Spirit's presence, that man will yet stand and be willing to say that the laying on of hands was practiced in the times when apostles were upon the earth, when the church and kingdom of God was among men.

I want to emphasize the thought just a little further. The gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, was a perfect law. No one can question that, for had it not been perfect it could never have brought the obeyer thereof into the condition of perfection. To obey an imperfect law can never produce perfection. James in speaking of it in the first chapter, 25th verse, calls it the perfect law of liberty, declaring:

But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.

IMPOSSIBLE TO DISPENSE WITH FUNDAMENTALS

Now let me present you this thought: If I were standing before you to-night as a school-teacher, and you were representing the scholars or pupils, and I were teaching you the principles of mathematics, and I were to say to you, that after these centuries of practicing these principles in vogue, that we have reached that stage in our mathematical career that we could take any one of them away, if I did so—and if I were a teacher in your public schools—the board would ask me to vacate. I would not dare to do it.

I do not know of a fundamental in the science that can be removed. Each is required in its place, whether it shall be the knowing how to read and write figures, whether it shall be addition, subtraction, multiplication, or division. You cannot go high enough in the science, you may reach its very apex, you may become a mathematician in the truest sense of the term, and you will find no place where you have the right to remove one of these fundamentals or necessities from the inception to the final teaching of this science.

Now, my friends, shall I take up the perfect law of liberty, the gospel of the Son of God, and say that though the laying on of hands eighteen hundred years ago was one of the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ, that it is no longer a necessity? Dare I remove from the perfect law one of the fundamentals?

PRACTICED FOR FOUR REASONS

You turn to Hebrews 6: 1, 2, and you will find it there enunciated as one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ. Is Christ's doctrine preached to-day? If so, can you take away the laying on of hands and leave the doctrine intact? I undertake to say that you cannot. Eighteen hundred years ago the laying on of hands was practiced under four heads, for the blessing of children, the healing of the sick, the ordination to the ministry, and the confirmation of those who had been baptized in the name of Jesus Christ.

Since it was practiced under these four heads, it appeals to your speaker to-night that it should be practiced under these four heads now, if the church or kingdom of God is established among the children of men. When you come to think of it, what a beautiful ordinance it is to take the little babe in the arms, and to lay hands upon it and present it to God for a blessing.

BLESSING CHILDREN

Matthew 19, Mark 10, and Luke 18, all testify that Jesus took the little ones in his arms and put his hands upon them and blessed them. Luke, however, presents it in this way, that they brought the infants to him, that he might touch them with his hands. Mark says he put his hands upon them and blessed them. He commanded his disciples that they should do what they had seen him do. What a clear, positive inference from a thought of that kind, that they too, would be required to do the same thing, and he said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Thus the parents bring them to those who have the right to officiate, and are willing to consecrate them to the service of God. And what more beautiful ordinance than taking these little ones, "of such is the kingdom of God," and consecrating, setting them apart unto God's blessing and reception and watchcare and protection? It is one of the most beautiful ordinances in the church.

HEALING THE SICK AND AFFLICTED

Now turn to Luke 4: 40, and you will find there a history of the fact of their bringing the lame, the halt, the blind, and various sick to Jesus when the sun was setting, and the historian declares that he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

Our church believes the scripture along this line, the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick. The last statement made by the Master ere he took his final ascension into heaven, down there at that little village of Bethany where he had taken the eleven faithful disciples there he raised his hands and blessed them, and departed from them, going up into the cloud. Prior to that he said unto them, These signs shall follow them that believe. In my name they shall take up serpents; if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them. They shall cast out Devils, lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

Now, my friends, it would seem idle to me to-night to undertake to argue that that thought was confined to that particular time, or the people living in that day.

Then comes the question of laying hands upon men to ordain them to the ministry, and here I am re-mindful of an incident that took place in Melbourne, Australia. I was talking with a learned man, a man who had two large D's attached to his name. We were having a friendly discussion, and he said to me, "Elder Wight, do you know that I wouldn't dare to be so presumptuous as to lay my hands upon a man or a woman for the gift of the Holy Ghost?"

I said, "Pardon me, but is it not a fact that in the church of which you are a minister, you practice the laying on of hands to ordain men to the ministry?"

"Yes sir," said he, "We most assuredly do."

"Very well. Will you tell me the difference in the presumption? You presume, unless God has commanded you to do it, you presume to lay your hands upon men, to set them aside unto the holy service as a minister for God. Is it any more presumptuous, if you are going to argue it from a standpoint of presumption, for me to lay my hands upon men and women for the confirmation into the church, and unto the reception of the Holy Spirit?"

He said, "Elder, I never thought of it in that light before, and I see there is something to it."

FOR RECEPTION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

Now you can readily see that one is just as much a presumption as the other, from the standpoint of presumption. But the whole question should be, "Does God require it? Did God ordain it? Did God determine in his mind that in his church and kingdom his ministry should lay their hands upon other men to ordain them as his ministers, to set them apart unto the holy service of preaching the gospel and administering the ordinances pertaining thereto?" If he did this, it should exist now, if his church and kingdom are upon the earth. If he did, did he determine in his mind that men should lay their hands upon men and women to confirm them as members of the church, set them apart unto the reception of the Holy Spirit?

Now mark the distinction here, no one, so far as I know, has ever claimed, and I hope none ever will, that man has the authority to give the Holy Spirit. John said in Matthew 3:11: "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh out after me who is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire."

And I may say to you to-night, that I believe that Jesus Christ is the only one authorized to so baptize, or to give the Holy Spirit in baptismal power. But he has authorized men to set an individual aside by the laying on of their hands, that they might be in a condition to receive this baptism when he should impart it.

In fact, Nicodemus coming to him by night, a ruler of the people, and doubtless having no time to come in the daytime, but he came by night and said unto him, "Thou must be sent of God, for no man can do the work thou doest except God be with him."

And Jesus said unto him, "Verily, verily I say unto thee: except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Utterly impossible.

Nicodemus, mistaking him, inquired, could a man, after he had grown old, pass once again through the conditions incident to a physical birth. Ah, no; that was not the thought. "Verily, verily I say unto thee: except a man be born of water," not of the water, I have heard it quoted so many times that way, "born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Now we are coming to the point of the birth of the Spirit. I take you to the occasion on Pentecost. Those men were endowed with power from on high. And in after time when Philip went to Samaria and began to preach there, and they saw the miracles he did, and marveled at them, and finally were baptized, both men and women. (I am quoting from the eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.) And in the fourteenth verse the declaration is made:

When the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.—Verses 14-19.

But what did Peter say? "Thy money perish with thee because thou hast thought the gift of God might be purchased with money." ●

Now mark you, Jesus had told Peter and John and the rest of the disciples when the Holy Spirit was come he would teach them the things of the Father. He came on the day of Pentecost and endowed them. These disciples were gathered at Jerusalem when Philip was at Samaria, some time after Pentecost, and when they heard that Samaria had received the word of God they sent these two men down there. What for? That these men and women of Samaria that had been baptized with the water baptism might receive the Holy Ghost baptism, for the declaration was, "verily, verily I say unto thee: except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

IS IT ARBITRARY?

That may seem arbitrary, but what law of truth is not arbitrary when it comes to that—to entering into the kingdom of God! And how are you going to do it? By being born of water and of the Spirit, that is the way; that is what Christ said, and I have no apology whatever for what Christ said, and I am willing to stand behind his declaration, and if the time shall come when on the shores of eternity I am permitted to stand in the presence of God, and I shall be asked why I believe in the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, I will present this record, and I will say to my Father in heaven, "When your Son was upon earth he positively declared to the ruler of the people that men should be born of water and of the Spirit in order to enter into the kingdom of God."

Then I wish to understand how it was that men could be thus born, and I turn to the eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles and there read of the birth of water.

These Samaritan men and women were born of the water, and I am satisfied that they had entered into the kingdom of God so far as water baptism is concerned, but I continue to peruse the history, and learn that in order to get entirely into the kingdom of God it became necessary for two of the apostles to go to Samaria, and there lay their hands upon those men and women, that had received the word of God. And when they had laid their hands on them and Simon saw that through the laying on of the hands of the apostles the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money.

What did Peter say? "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money."

THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT

These apostles did the work, and let me tell you to-night, that one ounce of practice is worth pounds of precept. Here is your practice. These apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom he had promised that when he, the Spirit of truth, is come he will teach you the things of the Father. Did he come? Yes, on the day of Pentecost. Did he come with endowing power? Yes, for it is declared "that cloven tongues like as of fire, sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Then the multitude began to marvel "Whence learned these men these things?" Some of them began to laugh and to scoff, and to scorn, and to say they were drunken.

But Peter, the man that fifty days before had been such a moral coward that three several times he denied his Lord and Master, finally cursing and swearing, when there were only a few of them gathered around those dying embers, and he was absolutely afraid, to the extent that he denied and said he was not one of them, finally undertaking, I presume, to emphasize the fact by cursing and swearing. I presume that he thought: "These people will surely conclude now that I could not have been one of them, or else I could not be cursing and swearing." Then he went aside when he heard that rooster crow, and wept bitterly. No wonder that the pangs of conscience caused the bitter tears to flow.

But now see the difference! Fifty days later, standing before the multitude of people who have congregated from every part of the city. But he is not afraid now. He beckons, as was the custom in those times to command silence, and when he had silenced that vast multitude he began to preach to them Jesus Christ and his crucifixion, and finally telling them right to their very faces, how with wicked hands they had taken and crucified their Savior. When they heard this, what happened? They were pricked to the heart, they were conscience stricken, and they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Repent!

Now the next step following the faith they had, is repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. And you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off. I do not care whether it be distance, or time, to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

Let me ask you, friends, How many has the Lord our God called? "Come unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved." Is the call sufficiently extended? The promise is just as far-reaching. The promise is to you and to your children, and to all even afar off, as many as the Lord our God shall call. Think of it, my friends. The promise is to you and to me to-night, that being baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, after first having obtained faith in him and repented of our sins, that we shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. How shall we receive it? Exactly as they did eighteen hundred years ago. God has not changed; his law cannot be changed.

Paul found some people, some Galatians who were trying to turn aside the gospel of Christ, and what did he say about it? He said:

But though ye, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1: 8, 9.

Suppose then that an angel from glory came down and stood here on the platform and preached some other gospel. Paul said, if he does, let him be accursed, and I am not going to apologize for Paul. No, sir. We are all ready to stand by Brother Paul, aren't we? We will have excellent company in the final day if we can stand shoulder to shoulder with Brother Paul, won't we? It was he who said that, and I have no apology for him. He was right, I believe. I believe he meant just what he said, and said just what he meant. I believe he told the truth when he said that even if an angel should leave the courts of heaven and preach some other gospel to you, that he should be accursed. You know Satan tried the trick and got left; he left the courts of glory and he failed.

If an angel from heaven should come down here and undertake to preach any other gospel, let him be accursed. What did Paul preach? I think I will turn to it and read it.

Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.—2 Timothy 1: 6, 7.

Then again he tells in 1 Timothy 4: 14: "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery."

Now Paul stands here and declares—suppose you were to see Paul coming in at the door, watch him walking up the aisle, and when you see him you know it is Paul walking right up here, and you see him come up the steps here and occupy on the platform, and this preacher went back and sat down. Paul would simply get up here and repeat what he said eighteen hundred years ago. Do you think time would make any difference in his testimony? He laid his hands upon Timothy and he got a gift as the result of it. Then Paul believed in the laying on of hands, and he said, "If an angel from heaven preach any other gospel, let him be accursed."

Turn to the ninth chapter of Acts, seventeenth verse. I haven't time to read to you the history of Paul on his way to Damascus, but a light came down, and Paul fell to the earth, and heard a voice telling him to go to the city, and what he must do.

I remember when I was in Omaha once I had Brother Paul, [Paul Craig] write on the blackboard the word "MUST" in big letters, and what does that mean? Thou mayest do it? Ah, no,—he said "must." Jesus came down from the courts of glory and told Paul to go to the city, and there it would be told "what thou must do."

And so Paul went to the city, to the man Ananias, and Ananias came in and putting his hands on him said:

Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

Then laying on of hands was for the healing of the blind eyes, and for the bestowal of the Holy Ghost. That is what he said. He came in and put his hands on him, and then Paul in after times preached it. He did not preach only, for he practiced as well. For we find in the nineteenth chapter, how he went to a certain city on the eastern side of the Aegean Sea. There Paul went to a place called Ephesus, and he found certain disciples there, and he asked them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

And what did they say? "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." And Paul said unto them, "Unto what then were ye baptized?" And they said, Unto John's baptism.

JOHN'S BAPTISM ACCEPTABLE

Many people have concluded—I have met with them and talked with them—that that means that John's baptism was un-Christian. They realized according to that history that these men had to be baptized over again, and therefore they thought that John's baptism was un-Christian. If any of them ever comes to you and tells you that John's baptism was not a Christian baptism, just ask them one question, How did it happen that Christ submitted to it? An un-Christian baptism, and yet Jesus came to him and demanded baptism at his hands! John shrank from the task, but Jesus said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."

I tell you John's baptism was a Christian one, because God told him to do it. "There was a man sent from God whose name was John. He that sent me told me," etc. God authorized him; it was a Christian baptism. The trouble was that the men that baptized those twelve there had no authority to do it, and not having authority the baptism was without authority. Why, suppose these little boys here would go down to a pool to-morrow, and one of them put the other in the water. Would that be baptism? It would be putting him in the water, it would be covering him, it would be a burial, but it would be lacking in this essential, there would be no authority behind it.

And that was the trouble here. Consequently when Paul explained the matter to them they were baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, and then the record says: "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. And all the men were about twelve." Nineteenth chapter of the Acts. Read the first six verses and you have it.

There are probably indications that the war is leading to a closing up of the ranks on doctrinal matters. There is a swing back to orthodoxy, a feeling after dogmatic assurance concerning fundamentals. Everyone sees that Christianity cannot fight its battles amid these choking theological fogs. But some who are backing to orthodoxy are doing so with a clearer and perhaps revolutionary view of what it entails.—W. E. Orchard, D. D., in the Outlook for Religion.

What Shall We Do with Our Boys?

(Address by Elder T. W. Williams at Southern California reunion, Hermosa Beach, August 10, 1917.)

First of all, let me ask, "What is a boy?" Speak right up anyone, and tell me, what is a boy!

"A man grown up!"

A man grown up! Well, that is a very good answer although we have always believed that a "man is a boy grown up." But getting down to fundamentals, what is a boy? A boy is an animal! We presuppose he has a soul.

Once upon a time there was much speculation as to whether women had souls. The controversy became so intense that a church council in the third century concluded to settle the matter. It was decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of one. What dire calamity would have befallen the race had the vote gone the other way!

To avoid unnecessary controversy we will affirm that boys have souls. Judged by the standard of their elders it is a foregone conclusion they have no religion.

The boy is by nature a rebel—an extreme individualist—an anarchist, if you please. Many mothers lose their religion in an endeavor to force it upon their boys. Thank God for the losing! The ordinary religious concept of the adult has no place in the ethics of childhood.

Boys, in their earlier formative period are self-centered. They live lives disassociated from the rest of the universe. After a time they break through the shell and develop the social instinct. The "gang" is the result. Girls in the same age go in "bunches." It is the same manifestation with a different name.

We have met this "gang" idea with rebuffs. We have assumed a negative attitude. Repression will not go here. Supervision and direction may work wonders. The social instinct should be cultivated and never repressed. The social instinct is divine. It is natural to seek companionship. As with nearly everything in the universe, the boy follows the line of least resistance. The primitive animal knows no artificial law; neither does the boy. He does not go to remote quarters for companionship. He takes what he finds close at hand. His associates are of the neighborhood. His companions reside in the same or adjoining blocks. He will not ordinarily walk across the city to associate with one whose parents hold similar religious views with that of his parents.

The gang is inevitable. It is the potential state. The gang considers every locality outside its own domain as "the enemy's country." It is strictly local in its own territory. It demands that others keep to their locality also.

Every gang has a leader. Leaders are necessary in everything. The world would go to pieces without leaders. The gang is the reflex of the leader. If the leader is bad, the gang will be bad. The term "bad" is a relative term. It does not signify inherent perversity. Badness is, in most instances, a measure of daring and heroism dominated by environment and lack of education. Cruel and vicious tendencies in boys should not be measured by strict moral laws. A boy has his own code of morals. Criminal acts do not imply a criminal character.

Most boys admire Jesse James or a Billy Younger. They do not see the criminal. Such characters are "heroes"—admired for their bravery and courage—the "will to do" and the heroism to carry it out.

In the earlier years the boy is a reflex of his mother. She admires courage—so does he. She scorns a quitter—so does he. If only each mother fully sensed her power and used it to the best advantage! Every boy has within him the potentialities of a God—the possibilities of a devil. Qualities which, if properly directed, make for service and greatness, on the other hand may, through misdirection, eventuate in misery, disappointment and death. Every red-blooded boy is a potential villain; of course it is not necessary to wade through crime in order to be great.

The power to be good is potential. It takes equal strength to be bad. Criminology evidences that the worst characters in history possessed characteristics which, if properly directed, would have placed them in the front ranks of civilization.

We must not ignore or stifle the desire in the boy for original self-expression—rather guide it into safe channels. The boy quickly responds to the social influence and expresses in his own way what he feels or senses from the contact.

When a boy joins a gang he surrenders his individuality to an extent and reflects the dominant spirit of the organization. Naturally, the leader dominates. He would not be a leader if he did not. He is usually foremost in devising means and method of social expression. He suggests something more daring or "devilish." He goes just a little farther than any of the other boys. To fall behind the "worst" means Siberia for him. Every gang sings, "We want no cowards in our ranks."

The new recruit is appalled at the daring suggestions of the leader but finally is filled with admiration and the desire to follow. The boy who suggests a convenient chicken coop or a melon patch sways the gang. If he leads the charge he becomes a hero. But is this instinct not true of us older ones? Do we not admire the man who does things? Do we not applaud the man who dares the most, the one who ventures and achieves? Is not success the crux of morals with adults as well as with boys?

This tendency in our boys only awaits direction. It will not respond to the curbing process. We have tried to dam instead of to harness. The tide of youth brooks no restraint. There is no barrier but what becomes an invitation to surmount. The duty of the church and the Sunday school is direction, not suppression.

I recall an incident of childhood. The principle of a public school recognizing in the early winter the danger for the pupils to venture on the thin-formed ice on an adjoining lake issued this ultimatum: "The first boy who ventures on that lake to-day will be given a thrashing." During the next recess every child in the school was over at the lake. The conspiracy to do the thing which the teacher forbade was contagious. Twenty-five years have passed and this teacher is still wondering who was the first boy to disobey his ruling. If he had said to the older boys, "Boys, the lake is unsafe. If you venture over there some of the smaller children may follow you and be drowned. Will you assist me in protecting their lives?"—every boy would have responded to the responsibility and stood shoulder to shoulder with the teacher in protecting the interests of all. The real teacher heads the gang. He leads. They follow. He must possess all of the potentialities of the outlaw; of the villain.

A man over in Pasadena was continually annoyed by neighboring boys who stole his oranges, broke down his trees and did untold damage. He tried poison, shotguns, and bulldogs all to no purpose. His fruit continued to disappear. He was persuaded to change his tactics. Calling a few of the boys together he recited his difficulty. He asked their assistance, promising that he would give the boys all the fruit they wished but solicited their cooperation in preserving his trees and preventing wanton destruction. He won their confidence and friendship. His troubles disappeared.

Boys have a code of honor. To violate same is a great disgrace! Each gang has its rule of conduct which to break is treason! Boys hate a squealer (wish we were all boys!) The tattler has no place with them. "If we are together, let's stick" is their motto. They hate a liar. They have little scruples about gambling. They inherit this, however. When I was a little fellow I was admonished not to play marbles for "keeps." I generally noticed that when a "fellow" left home with a pocket full of marbles and came back empty he got a licking. If the thing was reversed and he went out with few and came back with a pocket full the whipping was overlooked. Why whip the boy when he loses and overlook the act when he wins? The universal tendency is to condemn and punish when material loss ensues, to condone and laud that which brings material gain. Tell me, is it any more right to play dollars for keeps than to play marbles for keeps? If a boy fudges and wins marbles it is a sin. When men fudge and gain dollars the world smiles on him and he goes to the head of the class! He becomes the ideal business man. The moral standard of this church is that whenever you put anything into the ring and take out more than you put in you are dishonest. A "fair exchange is no robbery." Boys must know that to render an equivalent of value is the universal code.

Three things determine the personnel of the gang—propinquity, age and temperament. Boys living near to each other, of similar ages and tastes will inevitably group together. It is impossible to expect boys from sixteen to eighteen to "run" with those of eight to ten. Boys will not federate with those far removed from them. Boys having different aims and purposes will not group.

In their gang life, boys have no sense of fair play to outsiders. Members of a gang will be loyal to each other but will not allow the same privilege to the boys of other gangs. In this they are intensely selfish. They come by this tendency honestly. Some one has aptly said, "If there are any little devils around the hearthstone, remember they come by it honestly and no one has lost anything."

Do we not witness this spirit of selfish rivalry between towns, and organizations and nations? It is anything to outdo, to get ahead of the other fellow. The way to lead boys to recognize a common interest and to maintain a common privilege is to maintain this position among ourselves.

Why does the boy who is a member of a gang try to smoke? He will tell you it is because the other fellows do and he does not wish to be unlike others. Again the social instinct asserts itself. Why should a boy want to be "different," a thing apart, peculiar? He has been told that it makes a fellow sick to smoke,—but "who's afraid" of being sick? Hasn't he admired courage and bravery all his life! He refuses to take a dare. A blanket denunciation of tobacco using will not deter our boys from the habit.

Again, let us counsel together. We boys have canvassed the matter thoroughly and decided "it isn't any good." Most of the boys know it from experience. Anyhow, God has said that tobacco is not good for man. In forming our boy's club at this reunion it was the unanimous decision of the boys that, while they would not deny membership in the club to any boy who used tobacco or drank strong drink, yet they have established a rigid rule that no one should be permitted to use either when participating in the club activities or on the club grounds. A sensible decision.

Let the parents remember that the incentive to right must come from within the boys. You get nowhere with your "don'ts." The "don'ts" of parents have made more liars of boys than any other one thing. Boys will go swimming. Why make such rigid restrictions that they will take the risk and lie about it afterwards even though their sunburned backs will betray their "cleanliness." Boys will fight despite the fact that some shortsighted parent will lay down a blanket rule against fighting.

Boys, do you ever fight?

"Sometimes."

Why?

"Well, sometimes the other boy starts it and we fight for his good. If we did not lick him he would keep it up and run over everybody!"

Here, my boy, let's shake on that principle!

That's right, boys; sometimes, in the larger affairs of human life, it becomes necessary to thrash the tyrant and the braggart! Mothers, you will crush out much that makes for manhood, if you persist in a foolish, thoughtless, blanket prohibition in this regard! Picking a fight is despicable. So is a cowardly acquiescence when a bully gets after you. A boy that will not fight to protect innocence and helplessness is a coward and untrue to the primitive instincts of humanity! If it was merely a question of my safety or yours, I'd surrender mine, but when it is a question of principle, of the safety and comfort of the community, or the privilege of the bully, well, I'd go after the bully!

Have faith in your boys, parents! Have faith in your boys, you church people! Your mental attitude has much to do with the outcome. If you wish a boy to go to the devil just psychologize him with the thought that you expect him to go wrong and he'll go! But show him that you believe in him, that you expect him to do the right thing, and he will generally ring true! A Great Power trusts us—let us trust our boys, again and again!

I recall one experience in my life that stands out like an oasis in the desert of service. I know a young man. He was "hail fellow, well met"—big-hearted, generous, companionable. He got into bad company. He developed vicious habits. He was going to the dogs. One day I met him when he was worse than usual. He shunned me. I warmed up to him. When he would break away I detained him, threw my arm around his neck and said, "Will, I want you to know that I am your friend. It makes no difference where you are or to what depths you may fall, I still have confidence in you and believe that you will come to yourself and do the right. If the time ever comes that you need a friend come to me." I pressed his hand and he passed out of my life. Years rolled by. I had forgotten the incident. One day a fine specimen of manhood came to my home. He introduced himself but even then I did not recall the youth hell-bent years ago. He said, "Mr. Williams, do you know me?" I had to say "no." He then told me who he was. He recalled the past. He recited how he had allowed the desire for drink to get the better of him; that vicious influences corrupted his morals and he went to the bottom. But he said, "Mr. Williams, I never could get away from your words to me when I was on the down hill. 'I am your friend.' 'No difference how far you fall, I will still have confidence in you!' I could not betray that confidence! It has been the pull which has made a man of me! When you met me that day on the street I did not feel that I had a friend in all the world and I didn't care! I made up my mind, however, that if there was one person in the work who trusted me like that, I would live up to his confidence." Friends, I would not exchange this joy in my soul for heaven, with it effaced. Rather give me a hell of service than a heaven of composure and self-exaltation!

Be a companion to your boy! Too many boys do not have companions in their homes. The average boy mustn't whistle, he mustn't whittle, he mustn't—well, he just mustn't, that's all. The home is kept for chance company. This company will remark, "What a tidy housekeeper Mrs. So and So is," while her boys are out in the back alley or with the gang. Better a thousand times have your home littered with sticks, and half-made kites, and saws, and shavings, and have your boy feel that he has the freedom of the house than to retain some musty-smelling rooms to entertain musty-brained people. The greatest furnishing for the home is red-blooded boys and girls. One boy is of more worth than all the well-kept parlors in the world.

Be considerate in your requests. It is a crime for a parent to break in upon the budding genius of a child absorbed in constructive enterprise and ruthlessly destroy it. The crude tinkering of boyhood is as important in the evolution of character as the master achievement of mature genius. "When you finish what you are doing, will you do this for me?" should be the attitude of every parent. If you are the right kind of a companion for your boy he will not unnecessarily detain you. Nearly every boy in the world will respond if you touch the right chord in him—the divine. God is in every boy; let the fires of love in your heart kindle into flames the latent forces within him that will glow into a passion that will fill and direct his life.

The boys of this reunion met and organized the other day. We named ourselves the "Boosters." Boosters, you know, will boost for every good thing. They will also knock the knockers. We have planned a button for our club which will contain these words, "Are you a booster? I am." We are to be boosters for the church; boosters for our town; boosters for every good thing. We ask your cooperation. We must have your help.

Here are some of the things which we ask the reunion to authorize. We wish the tract of ground west of the cafeteria for a gymnasium. We will undertake to put up a small gymnasium and to supply necessary apparatus such as tennis and basket ball courts, jumping stands, parallel bars, flying rings, Indian clubs, leaping boards, etc. The girls desire some things, too. They will speak for themselves.

I think the time has come for this district to wake up, and respond to the call of the boys and girls for help. What if we do have to relinquish some of our pet illusions! What if we must surrender our set plan of religious service? Our boys and girls are leaving us under the old regime. Let's try the new plan. It cannot possibly be worse than the old.

I just heard of a branch of the church not over a thousand miles away from here which denied the Sunday school boys the privilege of putting up a tennis court on the adjoining lot to the church although the boys offered to keep the grass plot trimmed and the church lot tidy in return. I think we ought to hold a prayer meeting and ask God to convert the members of that branch!

Too many reformed reprobates sanctimoniously cry, "The gospel is good enough for me." Yes, after you have wasted your life in riotous living and the fire of your manhood has been burned out you are content to say prayers and sing hymns; to use your power to squash the mirth of childhood; to put out the fires of youth. A burned out motor is no test for a live one.

Wake up! God never undertakes to make or force his children to obey. He advises, counsels, guides. Should we not be as considerate as he? Let us make our local churches so attractive that our young people will say when comparing with like attractions elsewhere, "Why, we have far the best of it." You will have no trouble then in interesting them in all of the affairs of the church. Let every local church arrange as soon as possible to supply a swimming pool, a tennis court, an up-to-date gymnasium, or a reading room. If your church is not suited for such additions better rehabilitate the church or, better still, dispose of it and reconstruct a new church building which will house the whole family and make it the home for all of the innocent amusements, and more serious activities of all the people of God.

I would be willing to forego everything to save our boys and our girls, everything except the truth. I would subordinate everything to the one impelling duty to meet the young on their own grounds and plan for them, cooperate with them, for the fullest expression of their desires and hopes. Our real asset as a church to-day is our boys and girls. God speed the day when we can meet the young on their own ground, see life from their standpoint, and maintain common and mutual interest.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Northern Wisconsin Reunion

The reunion for the Northern Wisconsin District came to a conclusion Sunday evening, August 26. It has convened ten days prior to that. The weather was ideal. Could not have been better. When the time came to separate there was many a sad face and tears were in many eyes. Why should tears be shed and sadness be in the heart, and a desire to linger. We were sad, and we were happy. Those of the world will not comprehend, but those who have passed from death unto life will understand.

There was a spiritual feast during the entire reunion. The prayer meetings were largely attended and seemed to be our best meetings. They did the writer the most good. A fine spirit was there to dedicate each meeting to the service of God. Several prayer meetings were arranged for the young people. The writer had occasion to visit them; he can report that it was apparent that God is marshaling his army among the youth. And it is a worthy army that is being trained. Many were the testimonies that were given from the heart, and we have many reasons to say those prayers will be answered.

Preaching services were better attended than on previous occasions, and strangers were there to hear the "old story." It was noticeable to all that the elders were directed by the Spirit in the delivery of the word from time to time. And the conclusion in a few words was that there was a feast of good things. Give God the praise.

The elders present were: W. A. McDowell, David E. Dowker, Lyman W. Fike, Leonard Houghton, and A. L. Whiteaker, and the district president, S. E. Livingston. Then the local brethren were there and rendered valuable service in many ways.

Two lectures were given during the reunion. These were given in connection with a lantern and slides. The lantern and slides were furnished by Brother LeRoy Colbert. He has invested considerable money in his outfit but we feel that he will be able to do much good with it.

The first lecture was on church history, Brother Dowker was the speaker. The second was on Book of Mormon archaeology. The speaker was Brother Fike. The slides in each lecture were very plain and beautiful. Before the former lecture the brass band of the city of Chetek gave us a concert. It was a treat.

At the business session all business moved fast; $525 was raised in fifteen minutes. This was to apply on the reunion grounds and buildings. The total indebtedness was prior to the reunion $1,200. We feel that we will be able to handle the most of it this year. We know that we will if all help what they can.

The sick were healed under the blessings of God, the elders were called upon many times, and in each instance there was a blessing from God. A gift of prophecy was given by Brother Dowker to the young people. It was of much encouragement to them. There was a gift of tongues, also the interpretation. This was given in the senior prayer meeting, the young were also there. The following was the message which was taken in shorthand by Brother Lloyd L. Hadley.

"Yea, my friends, my people, I am pleased with you in this assembly, I am pleased with your fasting. It is my will that you fast often, and pray much in secret that your Father will hear you. I have blessed you in this reunion. I have many blessings in store for you yet. This is only a foretaste of what I will give you in the future if you are faithful. And I say unto you my people, Come up higher, come up higher, you know what that means. Zion is on, and it is the pure in heart that will see God, as I have said unto you, I still call upon you to be humble, to be faithful, to be devoted to the service of God. Make these reunions a success by your means, and by your prayers. And by this mine angels shall have charge concerning you, and I will rear you up and help you to overcome the obstacles that are in the way. And I also say unto you, my people, that calamities are in the world. Calamities are coming, but the power of our God will help you to overcome and by this the world will know that you have passed from death unto life, and they will also know that you have learned of God to know that his work is everlasting." Given in tongues and interpreted by Brother A. L. Whiteaker, Sunday, August 26, morning prayer meeting.

It might be proper to inform those who are not aware of it that at Chetek the Saints own a very nice grove bordering Lake Chetek. They also own a large auditorium and a dining hall with all equipment. The dining hall will seat one hundred people. The meals this year were served at seventy-five cents a day. We were fortunate in having such a sensible cook.

There was so much that was donated in the way of vegetables and provisions that there was a profit of $125 in the dining hall. This will be turned into the other fund to help pay the debt.

The committee made such arrangements that there was no rent on beds or tents, and all were supplied. Some went into the homes of the Saints but those desiring tents were supplied. The district tent was divided into eight nice rooms by means of stringers and building paper. By this we were able to save the expense and trouble of renting tents. Quite a number of the Saints were supplied with tents and those they brought and used. The district is well supplied with spring beds and cots.

During the reunion eleven were baptized. We welcomed them. Four of that number were young men, and by the spirit of prophecy which was present in their confirmation we are sure that the Lord has a work for them and if they are humble a bright future awaits them.

The writer was forcibly impressed during the whole reunion that we are living beneath our privileges. But I am glad to say that I can see a wonderful advancement in the past year. Let us come up higher.

I am your companion in the struggle for truth.

Lamoni, Iowa

The entire State is being covered by prohibition workers who are making every effort to get out the full vote on October 15, when Iowa will decide whether it shall have constitutional prohibition. The only question is whether the dry vote can be gotten out. There is altogether too much indifference and we sincerely hope that not a Saint in Iowa will fail to cast his vote in favor of the measure.

G. N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, is the associate chairman of the forces in the county, and heads the township committee. The township will raise $150 to aid in the campaign. At the Lamoni church last Sunday V. R. McGinnis, an attorney from Leon, addressed the audience on temperance topics and will give similar lectures in other towns. Some of our brethren are filling similar appointments.

It is good to see Brother Elbert A. Smith about again. He looks good, has a healthy color and feels well. There is no reason why he should not gradually work back into his old-time vigor and enthusiasm. We hear favorable comments on his recent contributions to the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. Lamoni appreciates Brother Smith as a neighbor and friend, as the church in general does his counsel and advice as one of the presidency and as a most popular church writer. The announcement that his story: "Timbers for the temple" will begin in the Autumn Leaves for November, no doubt will meet with a hearty response.

Twelve more Lamoni lads left us on the 19th in the army draft. Nine of the twelve were Graceland men, eight belonged to the church, five were married, four with children. The exemption board in this part of the country seem more stringent on exemptions for married men than are some similar boards in other places. At a big public reception given for them on the street, A. M. Carmichael, G. N. Briggs, and W. A. Hopkins made speeches on the subject nearest our hearts. The college students gave each nine rahs, and the Red Cross ladies donated each a comfort kit. The Herald Office employees gave each of the two lads leaving them a leather-bound Bible, with names inscribed in gold.

Independence Stake

We regret to record the passing away of our dearly beloved sister, Mrs. Tessie Weston, who died yesterday afternoon at her home two and a half miles south of the Stone Church, after many months of severe but patient suffering. Brother R. J. Parker's funeral on September 9 was a very impressive one, and was largely attended.

Many of our loved ones have been called to pass through periods of intense pain and sickness recently, and we are glad also to report at this time the convalescence and recovery of several. Brother Jacob Hale, Sister W. A. Smith, Sister A. Gillen, and a few others are still requesting our prayers, who have been for many weeks sick at the Sanitarium.

The Saints are looking forward, anticipating a pleasant occasion next Sunday when the Stone Church will be dedicated, and pleasant associations will be renewed with President Frederick M., Bishops McGuire and Keir, and the many brethren and sisters who will be visitors from various points in the stake.

We had a very large gathering on last Sunday evening assembled on the east lawn to hear Brother W. W. Smith, and the morning service in charge of Brother Israel A. Smith was also a most profitable one. The young people's early morning prayer meetings are unusually interesting. Registering for renewed educational work will begin this evening and many are contemplating vigorous efforts on this line, to continue for the winter the studies listed by the Educational Commission, called the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences. There is a general falling in line, both by the priesthood and members, and much good is looked forward to by all concerned, in the prosecution of this special kind of service.

The new library building, on the east side of the church, with its book cases and shelves, and with a fine and commodious reading room, cared for by Brother M. F. Gowell, presents a most inviting retreat for the studious and this is only one of the many improvements that have been made on the church premises the past few weeks. The brethren merit our sincere thanks for the neatness and dispatch with which they have gratuitously labored in the interest of the church here.

The branch as to members, has been added to of late. The Sunday school and Religio present interesting features in the way of increased attendance, the last meetings showing a report of 881 and 300 present in those societies, respectively.

In the line of program and entertainments, both literary and musical, our young people show wonderful advancement, which is certainly a source of appreciative worth to both old and young.

We hope to continue faithful in this all-important work.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Wants Church Literature

[We have sent the undersigned a few HERALDS and some catalogues of church publications. Perhaps others can supply him more extensively.—EDITORS.]

I have been reading over the letters in the HERALD and certainly enjoy them. I have received much benefit from them, also the other church books. In the From Here and There column I see where Brother J. L. Winter, of Kansas City, is flooded with literature. I wish you would place my address in the HERALD. I know I could use considerable here at this place as there is no church here.

Steubenville, Ohio, is the nearest branch I believe, and I would like to get some of my friends and neighbors interested in this work. I have already passed some out—all I could get—so if any of the Saints have any to spare I can put it to very good use, also a few catalogues of church books.

Yours in gospel bonds,

S. M. GIVENS.

WELLSVILLE, OHIO, 412 Nineteenth Street.

From Here and There

Word comes from Brother Henry Ellis of the passing of Brother John Harry, of Wales, at the advanced age of eighty years. He was one of the pioneers of the work in Wales, and many of the old-time servants of God have found a haven of peace and refuge at his home at Pouthenry. It was said of him during his ministrations as an elder that "he talked with God as a man speaking to a friend."

Mrs. H. D. Stevens, R. F. D. 3, Madison, Wisconsin, writes that her son, H. D., is with the First Wisconsin Infantry, Headquarters Company, at present stationed at Camp Douglas, Wisconsin, but expecting to go to Waco, Texas, within a month, desires to get in touch with any Saints in either community. He is not a member of the church but said he would appreciate meeting some of the Saints, in the army or out of it.

BUTMAN, MICHIGAN, August 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since anything has been written from this place, and I thought I would let you know there still is a branch of Saints here, and that it is thriving. I baptized six this summer. As we have two churches in this branch, I hold prayer meetings every two weeks, when possible, in the church seven miles from my home. The Lord has been blessing the Saints abundantly with the gifts and blessings of the gospel, when meeting together to serve him; also in healing the sick from plagues and diseases.

Last fall I administered to a little child that was taken sick with infantile paralysis at night. It could move no part of its body, but in the morning it was entirely well.

A short time ago I was called to Ogemaw County to administer to a sister who was very ill. Her physician visited her twice but was unable to aid her. She was unable to move her body for pain. The Lord revealed to me when I was summoned to go, that through fasting and prayer he would work a miracle. After I administered to the sister, inside of ten hours she was out of pain and able to sit up in bed, and in a few days was up and doing her housework. Thus the Lord shows his mighty power through faith and living as we should in the ministry—clean, pure lives before the world and the church.

At Houghton Lake recently we had a two-day meeting. It was accompanied by the gifts of prophecy and song. Our district president, George W. Burt, was with us. All enjoyed the meetings. Brother Burt is a man truly qualified for the work, and there is none other that could handle his position better.

Hoping to continue in the service of the Lord and live so that my preaching and other work may be effectual, that we all working together may hasten the day of our redemption, is my desire and prayer.

ISRAEL GOHEEN.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA.

Editors Herald: The annual reunion of northern California ended August 26, and has passed into history. Brethren Hawkins, Parkin, Davison, and Rushton were chosen to preside. Sister Ruth Griswold, secretary, Brothers Parkin, Ingham, Bean, Wiles, Sax, Davison, Brooner, and Pickering were the speakers. All of the sermons were of an unusually high order.

One new feature was the selecting of a half dozen or more of the priesthood to give ten-minute talks from the pulpit, among those selected were Brother Cecil Hawley. Their little sermonets were well received, especially Brother Hawley's, a teacher—a young man who is destined to come to the front in the near future. For a better name, Brother Parkin christened it the "Elders' Medley." Sister Dora Glines, from Independence, representing the Woman's Auxiliary, gave a very interesting lecture along the lines pertaining to their work, which was highly appreciated. Sister Glines has a pleasing and winning personality, and will accomplish much good wherever her lot is cast. Sister Christensen read a paper reflecting many good thoughts, and suggestions beneficial to the organization, and should be remembered and carried out.

Economics was the theme next brought forward, but we did not realize what could be accomplished along that line until Sister F. W. McDonald responded to the call from the chair. As she stepped upon the platform to exhibit herself she said, "Now all take a good look at me." She was arrayed in a snow-white dress and waist, all made from common flour sacks. Nothing could be prettier or neater, and only cost twenty-one cents. Sisters take note.

Our worthy brother Thomas McKee was called to the office of priest through the Spirit. An unknown tongue was given through one Brother Dagner.

Many beautiful and affecting testimonies were given. Nothing of a disagreeable nature occurred to mar the peace and harmony which prevailed during the ten days of the reunion. Neatness and cleanliness was seen on every hand, thanks to our district president, C. W. Hawkins.

Sunday, August 26, our reunion came to a close, our district president having the honor of delivering the valedictory sermon after which "God be with you" was sung, all joining in, then good-bys until we meet again in 1918 at Irvington.

EDWARD F. ADAMSON.

MITCHELL, ONTARIO, September 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: On July 21, Levi Judkins and wife and Elder Frank Gray and wife came in their car and opened up a campaign of street preaching in this place. Brother Gray stood in the car and for more than an hour held a large crowd spellbound as he explained the gospel to them.

Elder John L. Burger of Saint Thomas, came later and preached in the town hall twice on Sunday, two powerful and convincing sermons that ought to result in bringing some to understand and obey the gospel.

Then on the 25th Elder William Fligg came and preached on the street, occupying the bandstand. It is an ideal place for street preaching, as it is lit up on each corner with hydro-electric lights, and although the evening was not promising from a weather standpoint, quite a large crowd listened attentively and kept good order.

On Sunday the hearts of the Saints were caused to rejoice and especially Brother Will's, as he looked down the street and saw Brother and Sister Vasbinder and Brother Frank Gray come in their car from London. Surely the Lord is sending forth his swift messengers with the words of eternal truth, for these Saints attended meeting in the morning in London and were in Mitchell to help on this great latter-day work at eight o'clock in the evening.

Preaching by Brother Gray, followed by a sermon by Brother Fligg. The people who heard were making such remarks at this: "That was a good speaker you had," "He is the smartest man in Mitchell," etc.

Some came from quite a distance to these meetings, and the outlook is bright for an ingathering into the church. We are ably assisted by Brethren Amos Smith, of Listowell and Solomon Bell, of McKell Branch. All are working harmoniously together to gather the honest in heart into the fold.

Yours for truth,

WILLIAM H. GRAY.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, TEXAS, September 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am a young Saint trying to live for the cause of my Master. My husband doesn't belong to any church. He often speaks of joining the Christian Church. I am praying that the Lord may give him understanding that he may yet see the way.

I take the HERALD and think it a grand paper. My sister and myself are the only Saints here. My parents moved from this place two years ago. They are members of the church, and I also have some sisters and brothers that belong, and some that do not, but hope they soon will.

I wish some elder would come here and preach. I believe some good could be accomplished. I read the good letters the Saints write about enjoying the reunions and hearing the dear gospel preached. I have never had the sweet privilege of being with the Saints but very little. Once in a while an elder drops in and preaches a few sermons. My prayers are that I may not always be isolated.

I want to ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my little brother who has been operated on for appendicitis. Also for prayers for my husband, for I want him to be saved. My desire is to live and do whatever God requires me to do.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. JESSIE FOX.

SHABBONA, MICHIGAN, September 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have just been the recipients of a spiritual feast at the above-named place, a two-day meeting being held September 1 and 2.

We found the Master true to his promises, in giving divine inspiration to those who seek to please him and desire his richest blessings.

It was pleasing to note the interest taken and the unity which prevailed in the meetings.

The speakers were Elders Myron Carr, F. S. Brackenburg, William Grice, district president, and T. L. Clark. The discourses were interesting and inspiring.

Sister Plato, president of the Woman's Auxiliary and also district chorister, explained the purpose and desired aim of the Woman's Auxiliary to the satisfaction of all concerned. May God bless this department of the work with the others.

Elder Carr is district field worker for the Sunday school and occupied on that department of the work. Elders William Grice and T. L. Clark also took an important part on this program. The singing of a vocal solo by a little four-year-old girl recently adopted from the Children's Home by a Sister Harrison, of Capac, Michigan, was most highly commended.

The usual degree of love and unity was manifest at the Sunday social service. The sacrament was administered and the gifts of the gospel were among us. We felt a greater determination within us to press on in the gospel warfare.

The musical part of the meetings was efficiently handled by Sister Plato, who deserves special commendation. Solos were beautifully rendered by Sister Henrietta Davis, of Detroit, and Brother Charles Scivner, of Cash. A three-piece orchestra assisted the choir.

The Saints at Shabbona deserve congratulations on the way they so kindly took care of the large number of Saints present, making them heartily welcome. Love, unity, and spirituality predominated throughout the services and all felt amply repaid for the sacrifices made, and parted with a keen desire for advancement and greater usefulness.

May God help us to be faithful in assisting to promulgate his work and to reach Zion's conditions.

ORVAL L. THOMPSON,

FRED S. BRACKENBURY,

Press Committee.

DUKE, OHIO, September 6, 1917.

Editors Herald: I came to my field of labor the first part of May and started meetings in the Saints' chapel near Marshall. About a week later Brother George E. Burt from Michigan joined me in this place. We had a fair interest and some talked about being baptized but that was as far as they went. We also held a week's meetings in a schoolhouse near this place, where there was some interest manifested and a school-teacher got after Brother Burt several times, but he would not argue with me. There was no reason to the man. I took him to be possessed with an evil spirit. I then went to Middletown where I continued meetings for two weeks and Brother Griffiths was with us one Sunday and baptized four and the writer also baptized four a few days later. One of them, Sister Day, had been a member of the Utah church for some time. She will be quite a help to the Middletown Branch. Also held a few meetings at Amanda, where I baptized one. I then went to Wellston where Brother Burt and I held about a week's meetings. Some have been baptized there of late and others are interested. From Wellston we went to McArthur where we got the use of the Christian Union church. We continued for two weeks with fair interest. Some are quite interested. This is a new opening.

The writer then went to Amanda and put up the tent and held about a ten days' meeting, but was not able to get up much of an interest. From Amanda I went to the Kirtland reunion where we enjoyed quite a spiritual feast. It was the best reunion the writer has ever attended. Am now at Duke, Ohio, and preaching every night in the Christian church with attendance from five to twenty.

I love this work and I want to be a faithful worker. Some ask me at times, when I think that Zion will be redeemed. I tell them that Zion will be redeemed when we as a church have made the needed preparation and that we all have our part to perform. I want to do my part and let my light so shine that I may be able to help others to prepare themselves to do their part. While at Kirtland a young sister was telling me that there were four in her Sunday school class and they have thirty dollars for their Christmas offering and are going to try to make it one hundred dollars. They are earnest workers for the Master. If we all worked that way how long would it take to redeem Zion?

Wishing all the rich blessings of the kind Father in heaven,
I remain as ever in gospel bonds,
JACOB G. HALB.

AMHERSTBURG, ONTARIO, CANADA, September 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines to let you know how the work is going on in this part of God's vineyard. Our branch was organized July 27, by Brethren Curtis and Weaver. We have a full set of officers. Nearly all took turns at the reunion. There are twenty-nine members, and only nine stayed at home from the reunion. Since coming home from the reunion most all have borne their part bravely, and the Spirit of the Lord was with us, and several have been spoken to. All are true united workers, and the spirit of love abounds here.

Your sister in bonds,
MINNIE WISMER.

TOLEDO, OHIO, September 12, 1917.

Editors Herald: The Saints of Toledo feel much encouraged for the Lord's kindness toward us. We have received many blessings of late, for which we are thankful, both spiritually and temporally. We are especially thankful to our Father for a leader, Brother J. F. Mintun. He has been so much help to us. He is planning on a trip to his home in Des Moines, Iowa, about the middle of this month, to bring Sister Mintun here, to be one with us. Arrangements have already been made for him to locate near the church.

We have been having better interest in our meetings, especially at regular services. Street meetings still continue each Saturday evening; Brother Mintun and Brother Ulrich doing the preaching. At the close of each service, privilege of question is given and fully occupied for a half hour or more. From fifty to over one hundred pieces of literature are distributed each service, and a few books sold.

Interest is also taken in Sunday school and Religio, and an effort to increase attendance is being made. A district organization of the Z. R.-L. S. was organized at a convention held three weeks ago, which now consists of three locals, all of which are small. Brother S. C. Bethel was elected president, with Sister D. C. Morgan, secretary. Both are of Toledo Branch. An effort is being made to open two missions at points in and near the city, and the prospects are good for more work of this kind to be done later on.

The social officials are active in their line of work, resulting in increasing activity and in meeting the demands of the church temporally as well as spiritually. We have organized a choir and are doing fine. Have had two baptisms and received four by letter.

Labor Day ten of the brethren went from here to assist on the Sylvania Church building, had a fine day and a good time doing the Lord's work. None of the brethren have been required to enter army life yet, though several have had to register.

Information is obtained of several members of the church living in the city who have not shown sufficient interest to look up the church and attend the services, but it is hoped this will in time be rectified and all will return to the worship of God, is our prayer.

Second, he does not quote correctly our statements.

From this it would appear that meat should be used very sparingly indeed, except in cold weather, or times of famine. In these revelations we must remember that under frontier conditions they were not possessed of a variety of food, such as we have to-day. Yet meat is not denied to us; we are aware that many physicians as well as others, urge a greater change in diet.

Third, he ignores the fact that the purpose is not the discussion for the use of meat, but of pork, so that we did not enter into a full discussion of that aspect, while the portion of the section quoted gave the law clearly, and the editorial remarks should have been interpreted accordingly. Fourth, the letter is anonymous and so cannot be directly answered.

When section 86 was given more meat was eaten than is now. Hence we have the statement standing as set forth. Perhaps we overemphasize this in saying "very sparingly indeed." We imagine there is still more eaten in other times than those of cold or famine, that is advisable. There is a possible ambiguity in the statement in section 86, and there is also a possible ambiguity in this sentence in the editorial. However this portion of the section was quoted in full, so that our readers could see what it actually said, as well as reading our possible construction of it. If it is in error each one may judge for himself.

This question being asked, it is of interest to note the point called to our attention by Doctor W. A. Sinclair, of Boston, Massachusetts. And that is, that chapter eleven of Leviticus, in which the Israelites were forbidden to eat of the swine, contains also this verse. "Even of these ye may eat; the locust after his kind, as the bald locust after his kind and the beetle after his kind and the grasshopper after his kind." (Verse 22.) According to this, those who prefer to omit pork may substitute the locust, beetle and grasshopper. S. A. B.

Convention Minutes

BRITISH ISLES MISSION.—At Birmingham, England, August 4, 5, and 6. Considering the increased cost of traveling, shortage of trains, and other hindrances, there was quite a large number of visiting Saints. Sunday school held a convention on Saturday afternoon. On Sunday morning Blanche Edwards, of Birmingham, a teacher by profession, gave a lecture on the essentials of successful Sunday school teaching. The service was well attended and the effort of our sister greatly appreciated. Opening session of conference at 6 p. m. Saturday, associate minister in charge, W. H. Greenwood and Bishop Roderick May appointed to preside. The rules governing the constitution of the conference were suspended so each member of the church might have voice and vote. Reports were read from U. W. Greene, W. H. Greenwood, W. R. Armstrong, also missionary reports from John Schofield, Abel Hall, J. A. Judd, J. W. Taylor. The following districts also reported: Birmingham, John Schofield, president; Western Wales, Thomas Jones, president; Eastern Wales, E. J. Trapp, president; London, J. A. Judd, president; Manchester, J. W. Taylor, president. Roderick May reported briefly the income and expenditure of the financial department over which he presides. The high priests quorum report was read. The committee appointed at the 1916 conference to attend to church registration reported progress and requested further time to complete the scheme they had in hand. The committee appointed in 1916 to undertake the repair and painting of the gospel van (the gift of Brother and Sister G. H. Holmes of Clay Cross) reported. Brother May stated that he had been instructed to take over the gospel van as consecration, and was arranging to have it fully equipped by March, 1918. A committee which had been appointed to consider charges for location at conference reported that they considered charges should be made. The business was referred back to them, to discuss and fix charges, and report at 1918 conference. The Sunday services were most excellent. At the close of the afternoon meeting a baptism service was held and 3 baptized. It was resolved that at future conferences every member of the British Isles have voice and vote in conference. It was resolved that we ratify the General Conference appointees to this mission. Election of secretary: High Priest W. R. Armstrong, who for the past twenty years has occupied that office and fulfilled all its duties in a most efficient manner, to the satisfaction of all, desired that we elect some other brother to the work. Elder William Worth, 28 Horace Grove, Stockport, was elected as secretary to the British Isles Mission. Brother Worth nominated Fred J. Lewis, of Stockport, as his assistant. Bishop R. May was reelected as financial secretary and treasurer. The retiring auditor, Elder J. A. Judd, was reelected for the ensuing three years. It was resolved that a committee (appointed by the chair) draw up a letter of appreciation to our Brother W. R. Armstrong for his twenty years service as secretary. Our appreciation was expressed to the catering committee for the generous way they had provided for our needs; to the locating committee for the accommodation they had made for all visiting Saints, and to all other workers who had helped to make the whole conference a real success. It was decided that the secretary send a letter of encouragement to all our brethren who are serving in the nation's forces. With all general church officials please note the change of secretary and the address, 28 Horace Grove, Stockport, England. W. H. Greenwood, associate minister in charge; William Worth, secretary.

OWEN SOUND.—Religio at Owen Sound, Ontario, September 14, in charge of president, Ernest Clark and vice president, Aylmer Powell, assisted by W. D. Ellis and D. B. Perkins. A discussion was entered into regarding methods of advancing the Religio work in the district. The following officers were elected: Ernest Clark, president; Aylmer Powell, vice president; Sarah Shute, secretary; Edward Leeder, treasurer; Amelia Taylor, chorister; Annie Cameron, home department superintendent; Benson Belrose, temperance department superintendent; Kirby Tarzwell, member of library board. A joint program with the Sunday school in the evening was an interesting feature. Next convention Friday previous to district conference, same place. S. M. Shute, secretary.

TORONTO.—Religio, at Lowbanks, Ontario, August 10, 1917. Vice president, C. L. Garrard and honorary president, R. C. Evans, presided. Mrs. Floralice Miller and David Pycok acted as secretaries. All officers' reports showed the district progressing. Membership 517, 8 locals in district all active. They are Davisville, Hamilton, Humber Bay, Humberstone, New Liskeard (organized in February, 1917), Niagara Falls, Toronto, Welland. All branches in district have either a home class or local except two. Toronto has largest enrollment, made largest gain in percentage of membership. New Liskeard, the baby local, had best average attendance and used highest percentage of members on programs. Officers elected: C. L. Garrard, president; Ernest Rowett retiring after four years in the office; Will Mather, vice president; Floralice Miller, secretary; Minnie B. Paulds, treasurer and chorister; E. Life, home class superintendent; M. J. Crowley, member of library board; E. Barringham, member gospel literature board. One business session held and with the Sunday School Association an instructive and entertaining program was given. Floralice Miller, secretary.

SMITH.—Hulbert Smith, son of Gregory L. and Margaret Smith. Born at Theodore, Alabama, May 24, 1909. Died in Mobile, Alabama, September 1, 1917. Interment in Magnolia cemetery near Theodore. Sermon by A. E. Warr.

GOODENOUGH.—Florence J. McKee, daughter of Joshua and Sarah McKee, was born July 10, 1874, at New Albany, Indiana. Married Ellis Goodenough, of Galien, Michigan, January 15, 1896. Departed this life September 17, 1917. Funeral in the Saints' church at Galien, Michigan. Sermon by J. D. Stead.

HARLOW.—Jud Harlow was born in Iowa, October 29, 1858. Came to California with his parents when only seven years old. Lived near Sacramento most of the time until his death. Baptized February 23, 1884, by Thomas Daley at Sacramento. Died at Sacramento, March 28, 1917. Leaves wife and 1 daughter, 2 sisters and 1 brother to mourn. Funeral sermon by C. A. Parkin, of San Francisco.

Tracy.—Jacob F. Tracy, born August 14, 1889, at Drain, Douglas County, Oregon. Baptized and confirmed by Joseph Luff when eight years old. Ordained a priest in March, 1917. Died May 21, 1917, in Salt Lake City, Utah. Leaves to mourn, 5 sisters and 2 brothers, his mother, Mrs. Rosa Tracy Clark. Funeral sermon in the Saints' church in Salt Lake City by A. J. Ables.

Not what seems fair, but what is true;
 Not what we dream, but good we do—
 These are the things that shine like gems,
 Like stars in fortune's diadems.

Not as we take, but as we give:
 Not as we pray, but as we live—
 These are the things that make for peace,
 Both now and after time shall cease.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER.—A plainly told series of sermons by J. S. Roth, followed by a synopsis of his life as a "gospel messenger." This book is very popular; doubtless because of its simple, affirmative manner. It is not a book alone for the "wayfaring man or the fool," but for the earnest seeker after truth. No. 208, cloth$1.00

TRUANTS. A one-act Religio comedy by John Preston. Three men (or boys) and 3 women (or girl) characters. Plot concerns a number of Religians who through some excuse or other have stayed home from meeting. The way it works out is amusing. Adapted to any audience or occasion. 34 pages, attractive cover, No. 38225c

PETER BOSTEN. By John Preston, author of "The Pleasures of the World," etc. The story chiefly concerns the life of an agnostic whose mental and spiritual experiences hold the reader, who is a thinker. A prominent Canadian editor compares this book to Churchill's "The Inside of the Cup." Many Latter Day Saint characters in it. The ending is original, the whole book forceful and entertaining. Cloth, 352 pages, illustrated cover, No. 374$1.00

Before Winter Sets In

Don't you need some vacation?

Your health and work demand it.

No matter how short it is—get a taste of the West—and real vacation joy.

It's just a few hours to the Rockies—to Denver, Colorado Springs, the Pikes Peak Region or Estes—Rocky Mountain National Park via the Burlington—and the fall season is perfectly delightful.

Camp, fish, climb, motor—take the family along.

I know some dandy short trips. I'll fit 'em to your time and purse if you'll come in.

THE GREAT MAN AND THE TIMES

There are many who claim that the times called forth the great man, that they created, that he is a creature of condition. And to a certain extent this is no doubt true. We find several men, who at the same time or nearly at the same time, make a like discovery. What one man does is often dependent both upon the accomplishment of the past and also on the work of his contemporaries.

But there is another sense in which it does not apply. Thomas Carlyle in the first of his essays in Hero and Hero worship expresses this thought in beautiful language:

Show our critics a great man, . . . they begin to what they call "account" for him; not to worship him, but take dimensions of him—and bring him out to be a little kind of man! He was the "creature of the Time," they say; the Time called him forth, the Time did everything, he nothing—but what we the little critics should have done too! This seems to me to be melancholy work. The Time call forth? Alas, we have known times call loudly enough for their great man; but not find him when they called! He was not there: Providence had not sent him; the Time, calling its loudest, had to go down to confusion and wreck because he would not come when called.

For if we will think of it, no Time need have gone to ruin, could it have found a man great enough, a man wise enough and good enough: Wisdom to discern truly what the Time wanted, valor to lead it on the right road thither; these are the salvation of any Time. But I liken common languid Times, with their unbelief, listless, perplexity, with their languid doubting characters and embarrassed circumstances, impotently crumbling down into ever worse distress towards final ruin;—all this I liken to dry dead fuel, waiting for the lightning out of heaven that shall kindle it. The great man, with his free force direct out of God's own hand, is the lightning. His word is the wise healing word which all can believe in. All blazes around him now, when he has once struck on it, into fire like his own. The dry moldering sticks are thought to have called him forth. They did want him greatly; but as to calling him forth!—Those are critics of small vision, I think, who cry; "See, is it not the sticks that made the fire?" No sadder proof can be given by a man of his own littleness than disbelief in great men. There is no sadder symptom of a generation than such general blindness to the spiritual lightening, with faith only in the heap of barren, dead fuel.—Thomas Carlyle, in Heroes and Hero Worship.

Again and again in the history of the world is this fact noted, the man must be sent, he must be inspired to do his work. Socrates and Plato speak of the demon who directed their sayings and inspired them. Mozart declared that he never knew what he wrote until he afterwards heard it played, that it seemed that some external power directed his pen. Harriet Beecher Stowe did not know that Uncle Tom was dead, until she read it in the book.

But often in ancient and in modern times can we find a similar statement. The poet, the painter, with an inspiration that causes him to feel he must paint, he must write while the inspiration is with him. The scientist who labors and studies for days and weeks and months without avail, then suddenly the solution comes to him, it seems from an outside source. There is some extra power that directs his work, directs his thought and so a great discovery is made. A Columbus comes to discover America, claiming inspiration from God. We could fill many pages with quotations from great men and women, telling how they have done their work.

The scientist or psychologist may suggest the volk-soul. Another may call it the soul of the race. Another may call it the Spirit of God. The great man is, in a marvelous sense, one sent.

In the production of the able man, the man who knows, we find two elements much discussed both of which have their value. One is heredity. There exists an added probability that the man with the right father and the right mother will be more able physically and mentally. Yet biology has observed that the excess of the sons of great men who are also great, is only ten per cent above that of the common people. This, despite the advantages of heredity and the added advantage of special training, for the able man is usually in a position to have his sons especially trained and prepared to carry on his work.

The importance of special training can hardly be overestimated. Yet the figures stand, and the greater part of the able men came up from common people. This is indeed well, that to them may be preserved the common touch, while at the same time the children of the great men tend to continue the near great and so a continuity of service. Some of the handicaps affecting the sons of great men are the lack of the necessity of strenuous effort. The dominance of the strength of his will in his own family tends to weaken the will of those associated with him. The advantages are heredity and training.

In the church we note the great importance given to heredity. This is well, for a son continuing the work of his father has, not only heredity, but long association and acquaintance to assist him. There is an encouragement and strength in "I must be about my father's business."

Yet even there, we note it is conditional upon fitness. That should reach further than moral fitness, to include physical, mental and above all spiritual worth. That means not only mental and spiritual fitness but special fitness for the position. Thus we see, many times, sons continuing, as their fathers have, to assist in the work, and yet not in like office and calling. Of course it is evident that only one man can hold the same position at the same time, while there may be many sons. It is essential that these sons should assist in the work, this great work committed as an entirety to us.

But the practice of the church in ages past and in the present age is to choose the fit man, ordained and called of God. We neither want nor need an aristocracy, save as we become kings and priests unto God, and he is indeed the true King who is first the Lord's anointed priest. The Lord's anointed priest is he who ministers to his people, the servant of all.

Nor is this presented as an encouragement to the young man of the church to say whoever your father may have been, you may hold any office of the church. We do not urge it as a matter of individual right to any, but we do urge the right of the church to have the ablest services of which the body collectively and individually is capable. Great men are men sent for their special work, the men inspired by a power outside of themselves, the men needed by their times. These men are most frequently called forth from the common people. So even he, who is the Lord of lords and King of kings was born humbly in a manger in Bethlehem.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Pneumatic sandwiches will be the next suggestion for war time menus.

In "Eve's Diary" Mark Twain makes Eve say of Adam: "He is self-educated, and does really know a multitude of things, but they are not so." Adam, it will be remembered, is the father of all men.

An expeditious way to kill a young people's prayer meeting is to let the old people move in and "improve the time."

Look out for the economist who uses thirty minutes of the prayer meeting because he "hates to see the time go to waste." It is wasted—but he doesn't see it.

A Christian Scientist is the only man who will affirm that he is perfectly comfortable when he has the stomach ache.

You cannot judge of the meat of a sermon by its volume of noise. Auctioneers cry loudest to sell small wares.

A sermon may well give its hearers a heartache, as on Pentecost. Beware that it does not give them a headache instead.

You cannot judge of the meat of a sermon by its length. Some cooks boil a very small egg in a great quantity of water.

It is humiliating to egotism but comforting to hope to observe that when one man drops out temporarily or permanently "the work" goes right on. One ant is scarcely missed from an ant hill.

T. W. Williams is authority for the following: "Pies, cakes, condiments such as pepper, syrups and pancakes should be fed to the dog. You can get a new dog. But you cannot get a new stomach." We may add, first see Hoover.

They sat in the Santa Fe depot. He was a young National Guardsman and had his arm about the shoulders of his sweetheart. They were making the most of the last few minutes before his train came. No one laughed at the open love-making. But some wept. They were little more than children. Her cheeks were flushed and she held her head high, but there was a puzzled, wounded look in her dark eyes. He tried to keep a stiff upper lip, as became a soldier. At the last they said, "So-long," and he went away to France to get his bayonet thrust or shrapnel and she went back to her father's house. The dreams of orange blossoms, wedding vows, children, and the vine covered cottage faded away.

A man ought to bring something out of Gethsemane to pay him for his pains. There Jesus learned to say: "Not my will be done." May it not be with nations as with men. In sorrow they may learn to say, "Thy will be done."

GRACELAND COLLEGE

Next Sunday, October 7, is College Day. It is well, therefore, that we should remind ourselves of the excellent work that the college is doing, and especially at this time, when there is unfortunately so great a loss to our educational institutions on account of the war. Other colleges and universities, report a loss of ten per cent and upward. Some even fear a decrease this year as much as fifty per cent, and this despite the urgent need of trained men, both now and after the war is over. And not only at home, but for service where needed elsewhere in the world.

Graceland reports, however, an increased enrollment for this year over last, and increase in the collegiate department of close to twenty-five per cent. We may repeat that a number are here because of the action of the last General Conference which turns over the College Day Collection to a fund to provide scholarships. The continuance of this effort depends upon the liberality of our offers to this special collection of funds. The wireless plant is fully equipped for giving instruction and there is a good enrollment in this department. This is being established by special request of the Government as there is a great need for trained operators. It also offers a splendid commercial opportunity in times of peace. Graceland is fully accredited, and the work done in this department is at once accepted. Those who are thinking of taking up special work in this line, should take notice.

DEDICATION OF THE INDEPENDENCE CHURCH

On Sunday, September 23, the Stone Church at Independence, Missouri, was dedicated. President F. M. Smith delivered the dedicatory sermon, which appears in the Ensign for September 27 in full. Bishop Keir delivered the dedicatory prayer. The usual presentation of the keys to the Presiding Bishop was made by Bishop Siegfried as chairman of the building committee, and by Bishop McGuire turned over to the presiding deacon.

It was indeed a memorable occasion, and one to which not only the Independence Saints but the church has looked forward for many years. The dedication has in fact been delayed for nearly thirty years in order that the final indebtedness might be cleared off and some details of the building completed. We are sure that the whole church will extend to them congratulations and a Godspeed on this auspicious occasion.

A full account is found in the Ensign for September 27.

A CORRECTION

We are in receipt of the following letter from Professor George N. Briggs, of Graceland College:

PRESIDENT E. A. SMITH,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: I have just picked up a copy of the HERALD for the present week and in your article, "More cogitations," I find the following: "We could not agree at all with one speaker who declared it a day of rejoicing."

Of course, without the context I imagine no one would agree with that, but, as you perhaps remember, I made that statement (and I have no doubt you are referring to my address), in connection with the need for well qualified young men to meet the situation in which our country finds itself involved. I believe you, with the rest of us, would feel very disturbed if we did not have the men to do what needs to be done, and I am confident that you, with the rest of us, rejoice in the fact that we are able to meet the situation. We all regretted very greatly your physical condition a year ago when you found it necessary to go to California, but I am confident that we all rejoiced in the fact that means and friends were at your disposal to meet the situation.

I am writing you so that there may be no misunderstanding with respect to my position, and my statement considered in connection with the other remarks made at the time will, I believe, meet with your approval, as I am sure it meets with the approval of all sane thinking people on this present war.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

We take pleasure in reproducing this letter. And it is only fair that we should do so, as we had no desire to misrepresent Brother Briggs (even though his name was not mentioned), and for the further reason that we are satisfied that numbers of others, like ourselves, failed to understand the statement made, in its true light, as here explained.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

TEACHERS PROHIBITED FROM SOLEMNIZING MARRIAGES

The question has been propounded to the Presidency, "Has the teacher the right to perform the marriage ceremony?"

We have taken this under careful advisement and have decided the question negatively. Those concerned will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly. Teachers and deacons must not attempt to solemnize the marriage ceremony, but leave this duty to those specified in the law, viz, those holding the Melchisedec priesthood and the priests of the Aaronic priesthood.

We trust the ministry of the church will punctiliously observe this instruction and thus avoid difficulty which may otherwise arise.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 15, 1917.

NOTE ON THE LOCATION OF ZION

Some of our readers have noticed that the reference from Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 450, quoted in Church History, volume 1, page 208, locating Zion between the 10th and 17th degrees of west longitude would not include Jackson County. In fact it would appear only to reach the eastern boundary of that county. The editor noticed this in giving the citation, but thought it could be taken into consideration helping us to locate Zion. In fact it is only an extract from a somewhat lengthy description, which in the Church History takes a page and a half.

The location should be taken into consideration with other descriptive matter. In view of the early date the condition of the survey at that time and that the western boundary of Missouri was the limit of civilized settlement, or was in fact the frontier in the early thirties, such an inaccuracy of half a degree of longitude is quite possible. It seems probable that he intended to include everything from the western boundary of Missouri and some seven degrees or four hundred miles east of that. The land to the west was not considered, as being a wilderness.

The latitude we do not consider absolutely restricted. It merely acts as a median line and in fact is now found to run between Independence and Lees Summit. Its prime purpose was a description of the land, not accurate location. This is only one instance out of the many given to help us make an accurate location.

The whole sentence reads:

The season is mild and delightful nearly three quarters of the year, and as the land of Zion, situated at about equal distances from the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, as well as from the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains, in the thirty-ninth degree of north latitude, and between the tenth and seventeenth degrees of west longitude. It bids fair to become one of the most blessed places on the globe, when the curse is taken from the land, if not before.

This shows that the description as to the location is not literally exact, but yet is clear enough to locate it to those of that time as well as to us.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Apostle Hanson on the Way Home

In a letter from Elder C. Ed. Miller, he says Brother Paul Hanson was to arrive at Honolulu on the 20th, from Australia.

Mail Delivery by Airplanes

Congress has been asked to concur in an arrangement whereby all military airplanes not serviceable in the war department may be turned over to the post office department for the establishment of air route mail service.

The Religio Lecture Board

We call attention to the announcement in the Miscellaneous Department, of the Religio Lecture Board which is offered as an outgrowth of the president's suggestions at the late General Conference. By this means lecturers on various topics are available on such circuits as may be arranged, and without cost, except actual expenses for the trip.

Boston Church

The editors are in receipt of a letter from the church at Somerville, Massachusetts, commonly called the Boston Church, announcing a rally day September 16. It certainly possesses matter of interest, in arousing the people of that city and especially the church members for a reconsecration and redevotion after the summer vacation and a getting down to practical work for the fall and winter. We trust that the effort will meet with the utmost success, not for that day alone, but for the whole season's work. The letter is signed by the pastor, E. L. Traver, and missionary, O. R. Miller.

President F. M. Smith Returns from the East

President F. M. Smith was in Lamoni one day, the 21st, on his way to Independence, where he expected to preach the dedication sermon of the Stone Church, and also to hold various meetings, including that of the stake presidents, and the stake bishops. Much serious consideration is being given by the general church officers to the special work of the stakes and the results are becoming apparent. We have not at the time of going to press data as to the special matters considered at this conference held during this week, beginning the 25th. In addition to this, many matters requiring attention are cleared up. President Smith came on the way from Washington, where he went in the interests of the church, both to secure proper presentation of the position of the church by the Census Department and also to secure additional data and rulings affecting the draft and allowable exemptions as well as other matters of importance requiring attention.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES---Part 6

BY J. F. MINTUN

UNIVERSALISTS

The Universalists claim that their religion is a system having for its basal idea the love of God so manifest as to save the race of mankind, claiming that there will be no individual but what will in time desire to be saved, and as it is God's will to save all, all will eventually be saved.

They claim that the principle of universal salvation has been believed in since the days of Christ, but that after the Catholics announced a pope at the head of the church, but few have been willing to publicly assert their belief till after the Reformation, since which time the idea has been rapidly spreading among the people.

Among those who claim to represent the Universalist idea there are at least two classes, one believing that at death all enter into a state of happiness, while the other claims that some will need to repent after this life, and the privilege will be granted to such ones of repentance; both classes believing in eternal progress for man, but that he can never equal God.

Reverend Hosea Ballou, in about the year 1770, embraced the doctrine of universal salvation, as it was being represented by the larger class of those who claimed to be Universalists, and by many he is entitled the founder of the Universalist Church in America.

A personal desire to represent the idea of universal salvation seems to be all that is necessary to entitle a person to be set apart to the ministry, whether they be male or female.

Their organization is largely fashioned after the Congregationalists, they having no general church officers, but sections and states are organized into conventions, they selecting appropriate officers therefor, but each local church is independent in its own local affairs, authorized to select and discharge their own officers and preachers. They are very liberal in their views, so much so that they will permit any other minister to occupy their pulpit when they are not using it, and even permit a member or minister of any other church to unite with them in the Lord's supper.

Relative to their religious ideas as quoted from their own representatives we give the following:

CREED

The Universalists, as a body, have no Creed or Confession of Faith, which members must subscribe to, or profess faith in, before they can be admitted into fellowship of membership.—Universalists Book of Reference, p. 362.

The Bible is the creed of the Universalists. But we have been, at various periods, much misrepresented by our opposers, a Profession of Belief, embracing those important points of doctrine in which all Universalists are agreed, became necessary.—Ibid., p. 362.

The following as adopted by a General Convention of Universalists as declarative of their belief may be accepted "as an official and correct declaration of the faith of our denomination at large wherever it is known to exist:"

"1. We believe that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments contain a revelation of the character of God, and of the duty, interest and final destination of mankind.

"2. We believe there is one God, whose nature is love; revealed in our Lord Jesus Christ, by one Holy Spirit of grace, who will finally restore the whole family of mankind to holiness and happiness.

"3. We believe that holiness and true happiness are inseparably connected; and that believers ought to maintain order, and practice good works, for these things are good and profitable unto men. . . .

"To obtain the fellowship of our denomination it is only necessary that the individual should believe in one God; in Jesus Christ as the sent of God and the Savior of the world; in the authority of the Bible; and that he should possess a good moral character.—Universalists Book of Reference, pp. 363, 364.

GOD

We believe in one, only living and true God; that he is a pure spirit, self-existent, immutable, eternal, infinite in wisdom, power and goodness, and possesses every natural and moral perfection which can render his character amiable, lovely, reverent and adorable; that he is the Creator, . . . that he stands in the relation of Father to all mankind; . . . that he loveth all things that are.—Universalists Book of Reference, p. 364.

The nature of God is love. . . . In character, God is kind, good, benevolent, merciful, and just. . . . God is the primary cause of all things.—Ibid., p. 308.

God cannot create a being equal to himself. If, therefore, he created beings at all, he must create them inferior to himself. Well, just in proportion as they are inferior to himself, just in that proportion they must fall short of perfection; and just in proportion as they fall short of perfection, just in that proportion they must partake of imperfection. Imperfection is an evil; and, as imperfection exists necessarily, hence God could not exclude all evil from the universe.—Ibid., p. 309.

JESUS CHRIST

We believe in one Lord Jesus Christ, that Jesus of Nazareth is the promised Messiah, the one Mediator between God and men, the Son of God and the Savior of the world, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person.—Universalists Book of Reference, p. 364.

From the character, conduct and teachings of Jesus Christ, he was the great founder of the Christian religion.—Ibid., p. 339.

In Revelation 1: 18, we are informed that Christ has "the keys of hell and of death." But has Christ the keys of a place of endless misery, in a future state of existence, called hell? . . . But who can believe this? No one. Jesus has the keys of death and of the grave, he can, therefore, enter the dominion of these powers, and deliver mankind from their cold and iron grasp.—Ibid., p. 30.

SCRIPTURES

We believe in the divine authenticity of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, that they contain a true and faithful record of the revelation of God to men, and are a perfect and infallible rule of faith and practice.—Ibid., p. 365.

MAN

Man is a physical, intellectual and moral being. He respects virtue, whether he practices it or not. He instinctively loves happiness and dreads misery. He is a progressive being, and is susceptible of very great cultivation, refinement and improvement. . . .

Man is a strange compound of good and evil, and who can doubt that God designed his present existence to be a mixed state of good and evil, pleasure and pain, happiness and misery? He who doubts this must doubt the evidence of his own senses.—Ibid., p. 311.

SALVATION

If you ask the Universalist what you must believe in order to be saved, he will tell you to believe the gospel. . . .

What is the nature of the salvation promised to the believer? We have already shown that it is a salvation from ignorance, darkness, unbelief and sin. Well, where is it to be experienced? Answer, in the place where, and at the time when, faith is exercised.—Ibid., p. 295.

Salvation, the Universalist declares, is not confined to this life. . . . Death has no significance whatever so far as the essential processes of salvation are concerned. As we lay down the burdens of earth we take up the obligations of heaven. . . . Salvation is a moral, religious, spiritual process moving men's highest faculties and thus producing character, which will ultimately be attained by all souls.—World's Congress of Religions, p. 1090.

The difference between the believer and unbeliever is simply this: the believer is saved, the unbeliever is to be saved.—Universalists Book of Reference, p. 291.

SIN

Sin in man has its origin in the flesh, or in his animal nature, and this animal nature is destined to be destroyed. Nothing but the spiritual nature of man can survive the tomb. Hence, in a future state of existence he will be free from these passions, appetites and desires, which in this world lead him astray and entice him from the path of virtue. . . . Sin and misery are inseparately connected. Sin is the cause, and misery is the effect. Sin being the act of a finite being, is, therefore, finite and limited.—Ibid., pp. 311, 312.

DEVIL

Until the facts and objections stated in this section, against the existence of a personal devil, are satisfactorily accounted for or removed, we must continue to believe that such a being exists only in the imaginations of the ignorant, the weak, and the credulous; and that the idea of his existence ought to be abandoned by every rational man.—Ibid., pp. 58, 59.

HELL

That we do not believe in an endless hell is very true. But we believe in all the hell taught in the Bible. We also believe that there is no hell taught in the Bible but what is destined to be destroyed.—Ibid., p. 377.

FAITH AND REPENTANCE

We believe, according to the divine doctrine and preaching of Christ and his apostles, that repentance toward God for sin, faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and love to God and our fellow-creatures, are means of grace appointed by God, and essential to our salvation and glory.—Ibid., p. 367.

Repentance is the door of salvation. Repentance, however, is possible on this or the other side of the line of death.—The World's Congress of Religions, p. 1090.

If, in addition to this, you add that the retributions of eternity may be easily escaped by timely repentance, then you have got the old serpent's doctrine in complete perfection. . . . If there is any doctrine on earth which gives a man a complete license to sin, this is the very one. We know of no doctrine which can possibly be worse.—Universalists Book of Reference, p. 87.

BAPTISM

We believe it is the duty of everyone to follow the dictates of his or her conscience, leaving each to judge both of the subject and the mode of baptism, as shall seem most consistent with Scripture and reason.—Ibid., p. 367.

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST

Among all the sins and blasphemies ever perpetrated on earth, or any which may be committed in all coming time, there is but one solitary exception; viz, the sin against the Holy Ghost. Reader, how many suppose you ever committed this sin? When this question is settled, we have data from which to determine how many will eventually suffer endless misery. . . . The Holy Ghost was presented, either for man to receive or reject, until the day of miracles by Christ.—Ibid., p. 305.

RESURRECTION

Natural death is the result of a mortal constitution, which every man has. . . . Well, as in the earthy men all die physically and morally, even so in Christ shall all be made alive physically and morally. Besides the apostle shows that all who are raised from the state of death will be raised from "corruption to incorruption," from "dishonor to glory." This certainly shows that the change to be effected by the resurrection is something more than a mere physical change. Nor does the apostle give the least hint or intimation in the whole chapter, (1 Corinthians 15) that any who are raised will be miserable thereafter; but on the contrary, he speaks of it as a change to be effected upon all mankind, and upon all alike.—Ibid., p. 334.

The apparent and only object of the resurrection is, to immortalize and happyfy the ransomed world of sentient beings, to carry out God's original design, and perfect the work of his own hands. . . .

A belief of anything short of universal holiness and happiness in the resurrection state would not only dishonor God, but it must destroy all happiness and consolation in the creature.—Ibid., pp. 217, 218.

GOD'S JUDGMENT

God's manner of judging his creatures is not arbitrary or revengeful; but that it is in kindness, and its only object the good of the creature.—Ibid., p. 183.

REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS

We will now take the following position. Mankind are rewarded and punished in this life. . . . If the justice of God is an active principle, mankind are as much rewarded and punished here as they ever will be.—Ibid., p. 90.

Universalism revolts from the theory that punishment is to vindicate God, or execute wrath and vengeance upon man. It is inflicted on account neither of the injured innocence nor the anger of God. . . . The aim of punishment is twofold. Is corrective, designed to cause the sinner to halt and turn about in the way he is going. It is also stimulative, seeking to create a new purpose and lead to repentance, so causing the sinner, not only to abandon his sin, but to enter humbly, cheerfully and affectionately into the service of God.—The World's Congress of Religion, p. 1080.

God punishes to reform and make better. His punishments are disciplinary, emendatory, and salutary. He does not, therefore, inflict pain upon the transgressor simply because an evil act has been committed, but in order that the crime may not be repeated.—Universalists Book of Reference, p. 104.

Punishment signifies correction. And correction signifies to reform and make better. It is prospective, and not retrospective. It is not revenge. It is not cruelty. It is not vindictive, but parental; and the fact of its being inflicted is a proof of the goodness of the being who inflicts it, rather than an objection against it.—Ibid, p. 312.

KINGDOM OF GOD

That the phrases, kingdom of God and kingdom of heaven, are perfectly synonymous in their meaning. . . .

It is called the kingdom of God, of heaven, because, in a primary sense, it is God's rule and reign in the earth, by the power and influence of his truth.—Ibid, p. 271.

This kingdom cannot be inherited nor enjoyed by the unrighteous, nor by fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners.—Ibid, p. 275.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

The second coming of Christ was to take place at the destruction of Jerusalem; and at that time the kingdom of God was to come with power; the preachers and professors of Christ's gospel to be rewarded, every man according to his works; and the unbelieving and persecuting Jews to be punished as their crimes and iniquities deserved. He who denies this, must deny the positive and direct testimony of Jesus himself; and if he contends that no such coming of Christ took place at that time, he must also adopt the necessary conclusion, namely, that Jesus was one of the greatest impostors, or foolish fanatics, the world ever saw.—Ibid., p. 133.

DISEASES AND DEMONS

In conclusion, we will only remark, that the whole theory of demoniacal agency is contrary to the general teachings of the Bible; inasmuch as that everywhere represents that all of our diseases and afflictions come from God alone.—Ibid, p. 74.

A large part of the misery of the world results from crime. It does not result from Eve's transgression, nor are there two opposing forces at work striving to rule the earth. Human society is unfinished.—The World's Congress of Religions, p. 1096.

APOSTASY

From the time of the condemnation of Universalism by the Fifth Council, the church sank into ignorance, superstition and moral darkness, until at last spiritual despotism and tyranny reigned triumphant.—Universalists Book of Reference, p. 373.

AUTHORITY

We extend the hand of fellowship to all professing the Christian name who walk worthy of their vocation. When clergymen of other denominations are present at our meetings, they are invited into our pulpits and to take a part in our services. At the administration of the Lord's supper our opposing brethren are always invited to partake with us.—Ibid, pp. 370, 371.

The foregoing will show conclusively to the investigating mind that anyone opposed to the Calvinistic or Arminian ideas of punishment are classed as Universalists, and yet they are willing to acknowledge the authority of even those who favor an endless punishment, and even those who believe and advocate that God created some to be eternally punished, to minister for God in the most sacred of all ordinances, the Lord's supper; thus acknowledging that a belief in universal salvation does not add to one's authority to represent God officially, and yet a belief in that principle seems to be the basis of all the special official authority the Universalists possess.

MORE EFFICIENT TEACHERS

[The following paper was read at the Southern California reunion at Hermosa Beach. It contains many excellent thoughts not only for the auxiliary teacher, but also for the preacher, since the tasks are similar. Right education should be individual to develop natural ability for service. Not only are the metals that come to the teacher or preacher different, but we do not want all fitted to a procrustan bed or poured into one common mold. Excessive standardization is one drawback to the schools of to-day. The vital question is not how many years have you served? but What do you know and what can you do?—EDITORS.]

The Sunday school is only one of the numerous organizations whose aim is more completely to educate. The end to be obtained is to develop the Christ character in those being taught. The great and only great Teacher—Christ—should be our pattern, for as a teacher he never made a mistake. But until we have direction from him upon these questions of methods and ways of teaching we shall have to take as our guide the methods worked out by great thinkers, by men and women who have made these things their life study, and from actual observations of life itself.

The one comprehensive end of education is to prepare man to fulfill the purposes of human existence—to live more completely. These purposes include the perfection of man's nature for his highest well-being and happiness, and his preparation for the right discharge of all the obligations and duties which spring from his relations to his fellows, to society, to the State and to God. It is obvious that this comprehensive end is not met by training a man to be an artisan, a merchant, a soldier, or even a citizen as such. The purposes of a complete life touch all of the relations of man as man, and hence tax all of his powers and activities.

Teaching is an art and as such has its underlying principles which determine its methods. There can be no art, in the true sense of the term, in the absence of guiding principles, and this is especially true of teaching. The laws which govern the activity and growth of its powers must guide in their training. The teacher must be an artist, and the teacher of a child the artist of artists.

Life is a great school in which we are both teachers and pupils. There was a time when the branches taught seemed to be the center and end of education. From this extreme view of the subject there has been a gradual transition toward the opposite view, that the child is the center and end of education. We have been too much inclined to speculate and to work out fine-spun educational theories, to wrinkle the forehead and overtax the mind and strain the eyes in trying to search out a deep, mysterious, semi-mythical something, that will settle things, and we have let the resources at hand and at our disposal go unappropriated. There is one universal law, God's law, the law of unity, which if understood and obeyed would surely lead us out of the wilderness.

Specific rules deaden and enslave a teacher, while a universal law guides and inspires with a consciousness of freedom and power. With teachers conditions are ever changing and no set of rules can just fill the bill. With tact and a universal rule the teacher can move with precision and success. We are all imperfect instrumentalities and may fail through our imperfections. Just as lawyers, doctors, engineers are made over under professional discipline and study, so are the most successful teachers of to-day made, not born. When we accept this truth in our Sunday school teaching, when more of us turn to every possible means of guidance, we shall make advances equal to those in the public schools.

As has been said, there are certain underlying principles which determine the methods used. Neither principles nor methods can apply themselves. There must be a teacher who adjusts law to the given individual, under given circumstances. It is the teacher we are trying to convince of the necessity of greater efficiency.

The teacher, in order to adjust the laws properly, must have a certain equipment. There are four indispensable qualifications of the teacher; First, a knowledge of the subject matter taught; Second, a knowledge of the pupils taught; Third, the ability to teach; Fourth, a worthy character.

First, the teacher must be master of the subject. No vague or partial knowledge will do. In our public schools we should not think of having a teacher who would present a part of arithmetic and at the same time be ignorant of the other part. It is just as important that we have well organized and connected information in Sunday school. A teacher cannot hope to successfully teach a lesson by looking over it a few minutes one time during the week. She should know the whole quarter of lessons, she should know how one is related to another. If no relation exists, something is wrong and a proper course of study should be arranged. The teacher must teach each lesson as a part of the whole truth.

The teacher by knowing her subject matter, is able to fit or dovetail each new thought with those already in the pupil's possession, that is, adjust the new to the old. Real skill is required to do this; hence teaching is not a merely mechanical work that anyone can do. Not everyone can teach; even those who know the subject matter of instruction thoroughly may make an utter failure of it. Let the teacher become inspired with the lesson and then teach, and not until then. Let the teacher approach the class filled and thrilled with the message and the pupils are drawn to her. Nothing spreads more rapidly than a genuine feeling. The class catches the spirit. Enthusiasm and interest follow.

Cold and mechanical teaching is never effective. Whatever the thought to be presented, it must be so wrought in the teacher's being as to glow with life. Before Christ could be a teacher the Father gave him life so that he could give it to others. So the true teacher must get life to give to others. The teacher should always keep in mind this question, "What change for good can I make in the life of the pupil?"

Again, a knowledge of the subject begets a certain degree of self-confidence in the teacher. One who does not know the lesson teaches in a makeshift way, digresses into subjects unrelated to the lesson or practically useless, gets nervous, ill at ease and afraid of the questions of the bright pupils. Pupils soon detect the insincerity of such a teacher and cause a constant disorder in the class. The surest mark of a true teacher is to have his hearers receive what he says in the spirit of independent thinkers. The teacher should offer that which he has found to be good after proper investigation, in the best possible manner. The competent teacher is one who wins the confidence of those whom she teaches.

The second requirement for the true teacher is that she have an insight into what the child is. What a thing is at any stage of its development depends upon two things: what it was when it started—that is, its inheritance; and what it has done to itself and had done since it started—that is, its experience. At birth every individual has a given organism for which he is in no sense personally responsible. In most cases this organism is capable of large development in strength, health and efficiency; in other cases it may fail to realize upon its inheritance.

It is a principle of matter and mind that things tend to act as they have previously acted. It can be seen, therefore, how important it is that these general instincts of the child should be set going in the right way, and not be allowed to shoot off in ways which will prevent his development, and which may result in ruin. The most important thing that can happen to a child is that he shall have the wisest possible guidance during these early years, when he is making his first reactions to this great world of stimuli—physical, personal, social and religious—in which he is practically swamped. New light is thus shed upon the importance and sanctity of parenthood, and new emphasis is placed upon the responsibility, the opportunity, and the dignity of the teaching profession. Nothing will be more conducive to thoughtfulness on the part of the teacher in everything she does than the realization of the fact that she is not teaching for a day only; that the child's behavior, his life of activity, his responses to his environment to-day, are blazing the way in which he will in all probability go to-morrow, and all the days that follow to-morrow. The teacher must understand the activities of the growing soul, that is, have a knowledge of the different stages; childhood, youth, adolescence and adult. She must know the general characteristics of pupils at a certain age and from what point of view they are most successfully approached.

It is not enough to know a class collectively. The teacher must know each individual in the class. We will use a certain educator's illustration to show the necessity. "Suppose you were a worker in metals and could turn out all manner of curious things. Suppose a stranger should bring you some sealed packages and say, 'Here are various kinds of metals, without unsealing them, put them into your furnace, mold them, treat them all alike and produce a set of similar images.' You would say, 'That is impossible, let me know on what I am working. Brass will not melt so readily as lead; steel is not so pliable as gold. Metals differ. That process which may be used advantageously with one metal may be very injurious to another.'"

Just as the worker in metal must know the kind of metal with which he is working in order to use the proper mold, so should the teacher thoroughly understand the pupil before deftness can be shown in the matching process. The teacher must know the contents of her pupil's minds, their emotions, etc. In brief, the teacher must, in order to teach most effectively, know the child's inheritance and its experience.

Third, the teacher must have ability to teach. The teacher must possess certain natural qualifications, but the mere possession of these qualities, however, does not make a teacher. They are fundamental, but in addition to these there must be suitable training. There must first be a sound foundation of general knowledge. The teacher must know many subjects besides those that he is to teach. Education has been defined as the process of canceling the difference in knowledge that exists between two persons, between teacher and taught. Now if the difference is slight, the learner has but little to hope for; while if the difference is great, the possibilities that await the learner are just so much the greater.

It is a great mistake to think that "anyone will do for little children." The fact is, the greatest skill and tact and knowledge and professional fitness are necessary in teaching young children, because of their immaturity and their inability to help themselves. No one should enter lightly upon the work of teaching. Motives should be carefully analyzed, the responsibility weighed, and a decision arrived at only after a full understanding of the importance of the work and belief that the requisite qualities are possessed. While it is a great responsibility, it is also a great opportunity. It is the greatest of all privileges and the most sacred duty that one can undertake.

The final aim of instruction in every important study is a mastery of its general truths. Without this basis no method of instruction has any validity. The method by which this aim can be approached and realized may vary. If the teacher properly understands her pupils she will be able to decide upon the method which will best interest them. With many, interest is made the center of the entire process of education. A pedagogical truth that teachers would do well to remember is that "the child is apt to become permanently interested in whatever he attends to," and that "children attend to those things which have a natural interest for them." These truths bring us to the realization of the greatness and the importance of the psychology of work.

Psychology says at least this much: "One's temporal salvation and one's final fitness for eternal salvation are determined largely by the work one does, the motive behind it, and the spirit carried into it." As teachers we constantly have to avoid the habit of doing for the pupils what they can do for themselves. Teachers direct too much; they explain too much; they, themselves, recite too much; they talk too much. There is far too much of this kind of impression; yet the children do not see, neither do they hear. The consistent, quiet though forceful teacher who has grace enough to keep himself in the background, through his realization that the school is the child's great chance, will find opportunity on every hand to bring the children face to face with real things, to stimulate them to heretofore unthought-of activities.

Teachers of children must have a command of language. Though words have no magic power they are a subordinate instrument in the acquisition of knowledge, being mere symbols by which experiences are called to mind. Even the fact that pupils remember the words of the teacher, or of the book, and repeat them promptly, gives no sufficient proof of knowledge; it gives proof only of a good memory. Very often the ability to reproduce exact words of definitions, etc., is only a cloak behind which ignorance is covered. The mind is not a passive recipient of knowledge, like a vessel for water, or a storehouse for grain. It is active in choosing; it applies the severe test of kinship to all that is presented to it. There is no short cut to learning by merely "handing over" ideas from one person to another. The teacher must be able to give her information in terms that find a foundation in the pupil's experience.

The teacher displays her ability to teach in the way in which she conducts the recitation, hence the significance of the recitation. Every phase of school work should contribute its share to the sum total of training and scholarship which the child is to derive from the school. In this sense one phase of work is just as important as any other. Among a number of things, all of which are necessary to a complete process and a desired result, it is not easy to say that such and such are of first importance, and others of secondary importance. Nevertheless, certain stages in a process are often pivotal.

The recitation is the pivot, or hinge; it is the center of the educational process; it is the educational arena. In the recitation the battle is lost or won. Success here almost invariably means a good school. Failure here means failure all along the line. A good recitation is characterized by the birth of ideas, by consecutive thought, by great tension between the pupil's mind and the subject under consideration.

The teacher's purpose must not be merely to hear the children say over some things they may have gotten from books, but must look upon the recitation as the chance of her life as a teacher, and as the chance of the child's life in its development. The lines must be drawn tight; the electric spark must fly, and the child's life must be quickened. All things must be conducive to this end. Punctuality and regularity must be insisted upon, all material conditions must be favorable to such attention.

The teacher who is thus conscious of the significance of the recitation will endeavor to plan the work to make the most of this opportunity. All assignments for the next lesson should be very carefully made so that every pupil may know what to do for a proper preparation of the lesson. Every pupil should be held responsible for such preparation. With the present arrangement of our Sunday school it is not possible, as in the day school, to hold pupils responsible for the preparation of the lesson. If the pupil does not care to, and the parents do not make proper effort to see that it is done, the teacher is helpless.

The good teacher will see that in the recitation there must be no sidetracking, there must be nothing irrelevant to the subject. All illustrations must reinforce the work in hand. The teacher must be interested in the thing she teaches and able to interest her pupils in it, else she is a failure. The teacher's manner, her attitude toward her pupils and her work, her questions and answers, must all be conducive to consecutive, productive mental work on the part of the class.

If every moment of the recitation time is held by both pupil and teacher in its proper significance there will be no time for idleness or pursuit of mischief. Herein lies the kernel of school management, a thing never to be considered as an end in itself. The discipline in our Sunday school and in our Religion is deplorable. Something is radically wrong. School management and school teaching are dialectical. They go hand in hand. They dovetail into each other. We manage the school while we teach and through our teaching; and at the same time teaching is effective in proportion as the school is wisely organized and judiciously managed. There is no one thing the teacher can do that will make for order, industry and system in the school so much as an insistence upon definite, careful and complete preparation of the work assigned for recitation. The good recitation is the one thing to which, if it is sought and attained, all these other things shall be added.

The fourth qualification of the teacher is that she have a worthy character. Well says Lowell that "the spirit of the teacher is more than her method, and that person is the most valuable in the school-room who fills it with sweet reasonableness." The teacher must be genuine, whole-souled, honest, true, patient, sympathetic,—in fact she should be well-disciplined herself. If the teacher is lacking in the qualities that belong to genuine womanhood or manhood, as the case may be, it will not be long before the many watchful eyes that are constantly fixed upon her or him will discover that fact. Children cannot be deceived in this respect. There may be lack of approved method, there may be dearth of knowledge, there may even be weak discipline, but none of these is so fatal as a lack of honest womanliness or manliness. The fearful effects of a teacher wanting in genuine moral uprightness, who must come into daily contact with young lives, cannot be estimated.

It has been said that "to be a successful teacher needs first of all, a heart yearning for the good of others. Let us consider one of the methods employed by the Great Teacher, the model of everyone who would achieve success." The Word tells us of Him that "he went about doing good." His ministry did not shrink from most menial offices; and his final sacrifice, that of his own life, was sublimely complete—"he gave his life for others." It was the noblest example of altruism in the history of the world.

No person should seek to be a teacher whose motive is selfish. There is nothing in the vocation to invite a person of such a spirit, but there is everything to invite one who seeks the welfare of his fellow men. No profession offers so wide a field for the practice of true benevolence, such an opportunity to be a blessing to mankind, such a scope for the exercise of the spirit of the Divine Master, so broad and fertile a means for doing good, as that of teaching.

These are the qualifications that the teacher must possess, and, possessing them, she will not be lacking in the strong personality that impresses itself forcibly, effectively, and permanently upon the minds and hearts of those whom she teaches. To those imbued with the spirit of humble self-sacrifice, of sincere consecration, of wide-reaching benevolence, of lofty patriotism and disinterested altruism, the field is open and the invitation hearty. Such teachers are wanted everywhere; and to such there is an abundant and satisfying reward. They are indeed to be "the high priests of the future."

TRIUNE IMMERSION

While reading the discussions on this subject, I have often wondered why Peter's comparison is lost sight of (1 Peter 3:21). In speaking of the flood, he says, "A like figure whereunto even baptism doth also save us;" Inspired Version, and King James' Version: "And corresponding to that figure, the water of baptism now saves you."

Weymouth, New Testament in modern speech: "And baptism, which this foreshadowed, now saves you."

Twentieth Century New Testament: "And immersion, a representation of this, now saves you."

Emphatic Diaglott: "Whereunto baptism being of a like form, now saves you also."

Douay Version: "Which also after a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism."

Standard Version: The flood we see then to be "A like figure," "A like form," "A true likeness," "A representation" which "foreshadowed," "and corresponding to that figure the water of baptism now saves you."

And turning back to Genesis 7, we find the earth was submerged but once, with face up, and by one having authority.

ANSWERING THE WORLD'S NEED

"Socialistic and communistic institutions have shown inefficiency and inability to cope with the tremendous world problems."

The above quotation is taken from an article from my pen appearing in SAINTS' HERALD of May 9, 1917.

I have been asked to explain. Permit me to couple this sentence with one other and to complete the quotation as it appeared in the article and no explanation is necessary.

"So-called orthodoxy has lost its opportunity. It has been weighed in the balance.

"Reform movements have proven impotent in the face of the world's greatest tragedy.

"Socialistic and communistic institutions have shown inefficiency and inability to cope with the tremendous world problems.

"The gospel of Jesus Christ is the only world solvent—the angel's message our only panacea for human ill."

I had no intention of reflecting on either the honor or integrity of men engaged in socialistic or communistic work. I simply affirmed that the human mind has never evolved a plan of action which would meet human exigency or solve our social and economic problems.

History is replete with the story of the wrecks of communistic enterprises—not because the purpose was unworthy or that the spirit which actuated most of the people commendable but still they failed.

A socialism which eliminates God from the equation cannot win. The religion of Jesus Christ—the latter-day work—is both socialistic and communistic but it is based on divine revelation. I have no desire to discourage legitimate socialistic and communistic expression. I do know that in the immediate past many earnest people from different points of the country have gone into western co-operative enterprises and have left thoroughly discouraged.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

We have no need whatever to give up hope of Christianity, for there is hope nowhere else; and it is as yet much too soon to give up hope of Europe coming to realize that, when she wakes from her fever and recovers from her present madness.—W. E. Orchard, D. D., in The Outlook for Religion.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

MAKING MONEY BY MISREPRESENTING

[The following is an extract from the experiences of Sister Nellie M. Martin appearing in the October Autumn Leaves under the heading, "Defending the cause." It presents as an actual experience what some have believed for a long time.—EDITORS.]

A broken rail caused a delay of one hour and twenty minutes. Most of the passengers got out of the cars and walked restlessly up and down the track. I sat in my seat to finish up my Doctrine and Covenants lesson before we pulled into the city.

A woman about twenty-eight years old, with one of the most intelligent faces I ever saw, and one who it was plain to be seen was used to travel and meeting people of all classes, sat down in a seat across the aisle. She asked one of the trainmen some very pointed questions and began to write. By the paraphernalia she used it was easy to know she was a reporter for some big paper, magazine or something important.

I kept my eyes fixed on my book, but my ears on what might fall from her lips, as I considered her one I might learn from. Pretty soon the conductor, whom I knew well, said: "Get out and get your fortune told, here is a band of gypsies."

"Not much," I replied, "their information comes from a source I am afraid of."

This remark made her anxious to talk. I knew it. We both looked at each other and smiled. I moved over and she took her seat beside me. We had a most splendid visit.

Finally I remarked: "I note that you are a reporter."

"Yes, for a Chicago paper." I have forgotten which one now.

"Oh, indeed, why then you must know something about that article appearing in last Sunday's paper about the 'Mormons' all uniting under the western head."

"Oh, yes, I should say I do; I didn't do the reporting but have done much just like it."

"Well, what will you take, may I ask, to let one of the real Latter Day Saint ministers write a reply and help to set us right before the world? Will $10 do? That's all I have with me."

"Say, friend," then she began to laugh, "you people haven't money enough to cope with that bunch. Any big paper can get a fabulous sum out of them for just linking the two churches together in a big speal. We well know the difference between the two churches. We know you people are away ahead of them on theory and practice, and the Josephite faction are the shrewdest writers, and speakers, the best posted men on earth. But that does not affect us, we are after the cash. We do not care a cent who is who. It seems cruel, I know, but if you were out for the business you would feel just as I do. But if the time comes that I give up my present position I'll write you folks up correctly, as should be done, and see that you get a lengthy article without pay."

FOOD PRESERVATION

All decomposition of food is due to the development within the food of living organisms. Under conditions under which living organisms cannot enter or develop food keeps undecomposed for an indefinite length of time. The problem of food preservation resolves itself, therefore, into that of keeping out or killing off all living things that might feed upon and thus alter the food, and as these organisms mainly belong to the family of molds, yeasts and bacteria, modern food preservation is strictly a subject for the bacteriologist. . . .

Fungoid organisms may be killed by heat or by chemicals; or their development may be arrested by cold, removal of water, or by the presence of agents inhibiting their growth though not destroying their life. All successful processes of food preservation depend upon one or other of these circumstances. . . .

By repeated cooking all food can be indefinitely preserved. One of the most important functions of cookery is sterilization. . . . All preparation of food for the table, cooking being the most important, tends towards preservation, but is effectual only for a few hours or days at most, unless special means are adopted to prevent reinfection. Tinned iron, so-called tin-plate, is rarely quite unaffected by food materials, but owing to its strength, tenacity, and cheapness, it is used on an ever-increasing scale. . . . Not rarely, therefore, the tin surface is imperfect, perforated or pin-holed. Tin itself is slightly attacked by all acid juices of vegetable or animal substances. With the exception of milk, all human food is slightly acid, and consequently all food that has been preserved in tin canisters contains variable traces of dissolved tin. Happily, salts of tin have but little physiological action. Nevertheless, the employment of tin-plate for very acid materials, like tomatoes, peaches, etc., is very objectionable.

Imperfect sterilization shows itself in many cases by gas development within the tin, which causes the ends to become convex and drummy. More frequently than not the contents of the larger tins, containing meat or other animal products, are not absolutely sterile, but the conditions are mostly such that the organisms which have survived the cooking process cannot develop. When decomposition may be produced without showing themselves to taste or smell. Numerous cases of so-called ptomaine poisoning have thus occurred; these are more frequently associated with preserved fish and lobster than with meats, although no class of preserved animal food is free from liability of ptomaine formation. The formation of poisonous substances has never been traced to preserved fruit or other material poor in nitrogen. The mode of preserving food in china or glass is quite similar, but the losses by breakage are not inconsiderable. Food which has been preserved in tins is sometimes transferred to glass and re-sterilized, the feeling against "tinned" food caused by the "Chicago scandals" not having entirely subsided. Were it not for the facts that sterilization is rarely quite perfect, and that the food attacks the tin the contents of tin cannisters ought to keep for an indefinite length of time. Under existing circumstances however, there is a distinct limit to the age of soundness of food. . . .

The preserving power of salt is but moderate. It has the great advantage that in ordinary doses it is noninjurious, that an excess at once betrays itself in the taste, and that it can be readily removed by soaking in water. When aided by wood-smoke, which depends for its preservative power upon traces of creosote and formaldehyde, it is, however, quite efficient. The addition of saltpeter is principally for the purpose of giving to the meat a bright pink tint. The strongly saline taste of pickled meat or salted butter appears gradually to have become repugnant to a large part of mankind, and other preservatives have come into use, possessing greater bactericidal power and less taste. The serious objection attaching to them is discussed in the article "Adulteration." . . .

A sugar solution containing 30 per cent of water or less does not undergo any biological change; in the presence of organic acids, like those contained in fruit, growth of organisms is inhibited when the percentage of water is somewhat greater. Upon this fact depends the use of sugar in the manufacture of jams, marmalades and jellies. Molds may grow on the surface of such saccharine preparations, but the interior remains unaffected and unaltered.

Food materials in which the percentage of moisture is small (not exceeding about 8 per cent) are but little liable to bacterial growths, at most to the attacks of innocent Penicillium. . . .

Fish such as salmon is washed, thoroughly cleansed, and frozen on trays. Butter should be cooled as rapidly as possible to about 10 degrees Fahrenheit; its composition as regards proportion of volatile fatty-acids, etc., remains absolutely unaltered for years. Particular attention must be paid to the relative humidity of the air in egg stores. Fruit should be quite fresh; grapes may be chilled to 26 degrees Fahrenheit, while lemons cannot safely be kept at a lower temperature than 36 degrees. The time during which soft fruit can be kept in cold-store is limited, and does not exceed about six weeks.

In the early days of the chilled-meat trade considerable prejudice existed against stored meat. While in many cases the flavor of fresh meat is rather superior, the food value is in no way altered by cold storage.—Food Preservation. The Encyclopaedia Britannica, Eleventh Edition, vol. 10.

The employment of chemical preservative matters in articles intended for human consumption threatens to become a grave danger to health or well-being. Each dealer in food contributes but a little; each one claims that his particular article of food cannot be brought into commerce without preservative, and each condemns the use of these substances by others. There is doubtless something to be said for the practice, but infinitely more against it.—Adulteration. The Encyclopedia Britannica, Eleventh Edition, vol. 1.

CHURCH PAPERS URGED TO HELP MAINTAIN SCHOOL STANDARDS

The Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, has sent the following letter to the editors of religious papers:

Dear Sir: It is of the greatest importance that the schools of the United States of all kinds and grades—public, private, and parochial—be maintained during the war without any lowering of their standards or falling off in their attendance.

This is necessary both for the protection of our boys and girls against many unusual temptations to delinquencies of various kinds, and that they may have full opportunity for preparation for the work of life and for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship; all of which will require a higher degree of preparation because of the war.

For many reasons there will be need in this country for higher standards in average of ability, knowledge, and virtue, when the boys and girls now in our schools have reached manhood and womanhood than we or any other people have yet attained to.

In the making of public opinion and popular sentiment necessary for the maintenance of standards of efficiency, to keep children in the schools, and to prevent their exploitation in the mills and shops, the churches may do much. I am therefore appealing to all ministers to urge this from their pulpits, and to all superintendents of Sunday schools and all leaders of young people's societies to have this matter discussed in their meetings.

To do this is a patriotic duty which should be performed gladly, both for the present defense and for the future welfare of the country.

Yours, sincerely,
P. P. CLAXTON,
Commissioner.

WHEN IS A MAN OLD?

Physiologists tell us that in all mammals except man the period of life is five times the period of growth. A dog gets its full growth in two years, and lives ten; a horse in five years, and lives twenty-five. On this basis a man should live from one hundred to one hundred and fifty years.

Why were these three men—Scott, Montaigne, and Johnson—old while they were still comparatively young? The answer is, they felt old and acted old.

William James, the great psychologist, said that most men are "old fogies at twenty-five."

That suggests a question: When is a man old?

In Shakespeare's time a man was old at forty, and often, because of the gay life, invalidated long before that.

Sir Walter Scott at fifty-five bemoaned the fact that he was an old man.

Montaigne retired to his castle at thirty-eight to spend his declining years in peace and study.

Dr. Samuel Johnson once remarked that at thirty-five a man had reached his peak, and after that his course must be downward.

He was right. Most men at twenty-five are satisfied with their jobs. They have accumulated the little stock of prejudices that they call their "principles," and closed their minds to all new ideas: they have ceased to grow.

The minute a man ceases to grow,—no matter what his years,—that minute he begins to be old.

On the other hand, the really great man never grows old.

Bismark, who died at eighty-three, did his greatest work after he was seventy.

Titian, the celebrated painter, lived to be ninety-nine, painting right up to the end.

Goethe died at eighty-three, and finished his "Faust" only a few years earlier; Gladstone took up a new language when he was seventy; Commodore Vanderbilt increased the mileage of his lines from 120 to more than 10,000 between his seventieth birthday and his death at eighty-three.

SEVENTY-EIGHT YEARS YOUNG

Laplace, the astronomer, was still at work when death caught up with him at seventy-eight. He died crying, "What we know is nothing: what we do not know is immense."

And there you have the real answer to the question, When is a man old?

Laplace at seventy-eight died young. He was still unsatisfied, still growing, still sure that he had a lot to learn.

As long as a man can keep himself in that attitude of mind, as long as he can look back on every year and say, "I grew," he is still young.

The minute he ceases to grow, the day he says to himself, "I know all that I need to know"—that day youth stops.

He may be twenty-five or seventy-five, it makes no difference. On that day he begins to be old.—Bruce Barton, in More Power to You (Century Co., $1).

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Boost for New Association Members!

Many letters we receive speak of societies that would like to join the Woman's Auxiliary. On our part, we are anxious to increase our membership—even to doubling it this present year. So why not let us get together on this, and have these groups join us, since they are thinking about it?

For instance, our young girls everywhere we want to become members of our Young Women's Department, either as Oriole Girls, or as members of our new circle for older ones. They thus become members of the general association of our Woman's Auxiliary. Sr. Alice Mae Burgess, Lamoni, Iowa, will be glad to give anyone information regarding this department, of which she is the supervisor. She conducts a department in the Autumn Leaves.

Every educational class, or study circle of women anywhere in the church, should, we urge, just send in dues to the general treasurer, get in touch with Sister Dora Glines, 622 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri, and get the wonderful help and counsel she is so qualified to give. And gladly would your names be enrolled upon our association records.

We want every child-welfare worker in the church to enlist with us, getting, if they desire, an outline for efficient work from our supervisor, Sister Lydia Wight, of Lamoni, Iowa. She is not only a practical mother, but an able educator, and is eminently qualified, and equally willing, to help you work out your problems, and serve you in any way, at any time. Join the Woman's Auxiliary, and get this help.

All over the world we have our sewing and aid societies. These we want with us. We have some new instructions to give—many helpful things ready to suggest to make this branch of our work increasingly efficient. We thus ask you, aid workers, who have already done so much excellent work for the church, to come in with us, unite your efforts with ours, that we may find in cooperation mutual help and encouragement, and thus accomplish even greater things in the future. Sister Helen Silsbee Smith is the supervisor of this bureau, and her address is 150 East Talpehachen Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Now, who will be the first to respond to this appeal? Which society shall be the first to pass a resolution to identify themselves with the other organized women of the church? We wish a constant stream of letters would come in, with the announcements that you are joining with us. All who will write me of this movement, stating that they are new members, and have just sent their dues to the general treasurer, will receive a personal letter from me, designed to help them in their work. The dues are only ten cents per member for each year, and should be sent to the acting treasurer, Sister B. C. Smith, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri. Our Year Book describing our work in greater detail, containing also a bibliography of helpful books, may be obtained post-paid from the Herald Publishing House, for 25 cents per copy, money to be sent in advance.

Yours for more perfect solidarity among our women,

LULA M. SANDY,

President General Association.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, 3431 East Sixtieth Street.

Asked at an Auxiliary Meeting

Query: How may women of the church help to "establish Zion"?

Answer, by Sister Emma Burton: A very vital question, indeed! To my mind, nothing is of greater help in establishing Zion than right living. Though "right living" is spoken in just two words, it is made up of many parts, the leading features of which are: Keep the commandments and the law of God; speak the truth in the heart; and be of cheerful countenance. The latter is far more important and helpful than at first thought may appear. I am of the opinion that whatever countenance one wears encourages that same kind of spirit. One may ask, how can I wear a cheerful countenance if I am in trouble, or feeling badly? I answer, just put on the cheerful countenance anyway, and it will become habitual in spite of feelings. It will drive the bad feeling away, just as a ray of sunlight dispels the clouds. It also does much in the way of really dispelling bodily ailments. Cheerfulness is obligatory upon every Saint, for God has repeatedly enjoined it! Mothers have a God-given responsibility to their own families in many, many directions, and it cannot rightly be shifted to another. Though consecrated men and women are now coming to the aid of mothers, and rendering valuable assistance for the benefit of the children and young people, and though everything is being done and thought and planned, that active and God-fearing minds can devise, yet every mother should, so far as in her power lies, perform faithfully her part, lest, by giving it up to another, she allow another to take her crown!

From Our Locals

OMAHA

Our Child Welfare classes met for the first study of the season, Sunday afternoon, September 16. The topic for general discussion was "What is a woman's whole duty?" This was certainly broad enough for many hours' consideration, but even the brief time given to it, served to awaken thoughts of broader service, and higher conceptions of the ideals to be striven for by Latter Day Saint women.

The group divides afterwards, into the class studying Mary

Reid's "Mothercraft," and those which are interested in the adolescent age. A small volume written by Hanford M. Burr, called "Adolescent Boyhood," is the foundation for the work of the latter group, and is intended to be a forerunner of more detailed study, later. Mr. Burr uses Doctor Stanley Hall as the authority and base of his little book, but has greatly condensed the subject, eliminated much of technicality, and thus made it one thoroughly practicable for the use of those who are just beginning the investigations of this most important and most intensely interesting subject.

Our Relief and Service department will soon close the season, so far as work at quilting is concerned, but will continue to meet and work at the homes of members, endeavoring to turn into the local auxiliary treasury an amount unusually great. In their efforts to make the annual bazaar a success, these faithful sisters are seconded by all the members of the auxiliary, including the various Oriole circles, which are becoming a financial factor not to be overlooked.

Sister Gertrude Kirkpatrick's newly formed Oriole circle, called the "Sunshine" Circle, is really an organized Sunday school class, with the addition of several girls who are not members of the church. They are to give an ice cream social soon, and have so devotedly worked for credits, that though they have been organized but a few weeks, they are all about ready for their Songster's Bands. The "Hiawatha" circle has a new monitor—Sister Grace Marmoy, who comes to them with fresh stimulation and and experiences from Graceland. This group has placed their services at the call of the young mothers who wish to attend the child-welfare study classes, offering to care for all children whose mothers could not provide for them otherwise. The "Fontanelle" circle is planning an outing at Blair on October 14, when the district meets there in convention.

The local auxiliary had a happy meeting on the 19th, at the home of Sister Anderson. In spite of rain and clouds, about thirty came out, and felt well repaid by the addresses made by Mrs. Charles T. Jountz, one of Omaha's most prominent Red Cross workers. She explained the details of that organization, its aims and purposes, and what is expected of it, etc. She counseled with us in regard to our identifying ourselves as a society, with the local Red Cross chapter, with the result that the sisters, greatly enthused, voted to join, becoming a unit which could work together in the good work which is making of all women sisters, just as the present war situation is bringing all classes to a united level. We are given, Wednesday afternoons, a room in the Red Cross headquarters building, where we may work as an auxiliary under proper direction. The sisters have entered into this movement with the spirit which assures success. We want to be known as women upon whom the utmost dependence and confidence can be placed, and who, when weighed in the balance of consecrated industry and faithfulness will not be found wanting. The demand is great; the needs are even greater. Our men and boys are going out from our homes to discomforts unknown, and the most intelligent way in which we can serve them, is to work through and with this authorized and worthy organization. You may hear more of what the Omaha Latter Day Saint Red Cross Auxiliary will be accomplishing this winter!

Cleanliness to Combat Infantile Paralysis

These are the State health commissioner's instructions to mothers to combat infantile paralysis:

Keep your children clean. Bathe them frequently. See that they keep their hands clean. Be sure each child has its own clean handkerchief. Keep your house unusually clean. Don't allow a fly in it. Keep your garbage buckets clean, and tightly covered.

COLLEGE DAY, OCTOBER 7

Have a general housecleaning. Throw away all useless knick-knacks and rubbish. Use soap and water generously, and let nature kill the germs with sunshine and fresh air. Keep your children away from places where disease exists.

Don't let your children play with groups of children. Don't let them attend parties and festivals. Don't take them to movies.

Give them all the fresh air you can, but not on crowded streets or trolley cars. If you have a garden or a farm, keep them out in the open air.

Wash your child's mouth and nose frequently (after each feeding) with boracic acid solution or plain boiled water containing a little salt.

Give your child cold boiled water that has been kept covered whenever he wants a drink.

Be careful of diet. Give light, easily digested food.

Let your child have plenty of rest. Put him to bed early in the evening.

Keep the child's bowels in good order. If you notice symptoms of fever, vomiting, or tiredness, give a dose of castor oil.

Put the child to bed in a room alone, and call a doctor.

Keep all other children away until your child is well.

Cover all food that is to be eaten.—Omaha Bee.

Clothes for the Growing Child

(The fifth of a series of articles on the care of young children, sent out by the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.)

Very much of the comfort of a child depends upon his having the right kind of clothing. This is especially true in summer. One hot day a mother came into an infant-welfare station in a large city bringing a screaming baby who would not be pacified. The trained and sympathetic eye of the nurse in charge saw that the little feet were covered with knitted woolen socks. She asked the mother to take them off. Immediately the screams ceased and the baby stretched his naked feet in delight at being relieved of the intolerable irritation.

During the hot months children should wear just as little clothing as possible. Babies require only a diaper and one other garment, while run-about babies and children up to five will be amply clothed in waist and drawers, with one outer garment, preferably a cotton slip, apron, or rompers, or one of the many similar garments illustrated in the pattern books.

The one-piece dress is a great boon to busy mothers, being easy to make and to wash and iron. If the kimona sleeve is used, the dress will be cooler, but in some garments the set-in sleeve is less clumsy and wears better. Rompers, loose at the knee and low-necked and short-sleeved may be used for little girls and boys alike. Denim overalls are rather cumbersome for the hottest weather but are adapted to cool days.

Starched, frilled, and fussy garments are all alike unsuitable for young children, whose clothing should be such as will make them perfectly comfortable and permit the freest play. No child should have to think of his garments during the play hours; he should of course be subject to reasonable restrictions upon willful or mischievous soiling or destruction of his clothing.

Cotton is the best material for outside garments, since a child of this age should have no clothes that cannot be washed. Mothers disagree as to the comparative merits of white clothing and colored. White garments may be boiled, and thus the amount of rubbing necessary to get them clean is very greatly lessened. On the other hand, white dresses are soiled almost as soon as the child begins to play out of doors. It must be remembered that while white or light colors show the soil sooner, there may be just as much actual dirt on the darker ones. It must also be remembered that light colors like blue, green, lavender, or pink are almost certain to fade unless they are washed with special care. Striped and checked gingham fade less than plain materials, but often shrink badly in washing. Such materials should be shrunk before being made up. Seersucker and cotton crepe materials of many kinds have the great advantage of needing no ironing. These rough materials are not very cool and if used for summer wear should have short sleeves and round neck to avoid chafing of the skin of the arms and neck. Percale, galatea, madras, and the better grades of gingham or dress linen are all good materials for children's clothes. For hot weather almost any of the thin materials may be used.

My Shrine

There's a shrine in my heart, and I've placed therein
An image whose luster there's naught can dim;
And Christ himself would not count it sin—
The image therein is mother!

I kneel at my shrine both at even and morn,
With my brain gone wild and my heart-strings torn,
With anguish of living that must be borne—
And long for my long-lost mother!

And the gentle voice that I seem to hear
Down through the silence of many a year
It softens the anguish and dries the tear—
Oh, the loving voice of mother!

It soothes me as nothing on earth can do,
For I know her love and her life were true;
Through every failing she loved me, too—
Oh, the tender love of mother!

It takes the sting from the poisoned dart,
It cleanses the wound and heals the smart;
Touch not the shrine that is in my heart—
The image therein is mother!

Kirtland Reunion

The recent reunion held at Kirtland was the best and the largest ever held in this mission. Those who were in attendance will not soon forget the grand and glorious time we experienced during our sojourn together in and around the old historic Temple. There were over seventy tents on the ground in the beautiful park surrounding the Lord's house, and I presume that every house in town had roomers. We had a good crowd at the opening session and it grew in size as the reunion progressed. It was estimated that there were between eight and nine hundred people present on the last Sabbath.

The preaching was excellent, and the prayer and social services were very spiritual from first to last, especially the social meeting that we held on the last Sunday. There were nearly one hundred testimonies, a number of prayers, also prophecies delivered, and some had visions, all within about two hours time. The young people, and the little children were wonderfully blessed in their meetings. One third of the crowd were young people, and they surely did enjoy themselves. We were proud of them and the way in which they comported themselves. Truly, the Lord is raising up a great army of workers in his kingdom throughout the church. God bless the young people and protect them by his mighty power from the many evils and temptations that they are exposed to on this sin-cursed earth.

The auxiliaries were all ably represented through the following persons: Sunday school institute in charge of Sister Skeen. Religio, Brother G. S. Trowbridge, and others. The general church choir by Brother A. H. Mills. The Woman's Auxiliary by Sisters Helen Silsbee Smith, and Mary George.

Our reunion was a wonderful success financially. They fed over sixty people free and paid the fare of about twenty-five missionaries, and bought five new tents, also about fifty new cots and paid for them; paid two cooks, dish washers, and two waiters. We had Saints present from Michigan, Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Canada, New York, Pennsylvania, and from all over Ohio, and West Virginia.

They decided to hold the next reunion at Kirtland, and many people wanted to arrange for rooms and tents for next year. The Kirtland reunion has come to be one of the largest and most successful reunions in the whole church, and will continue to grow in size and prestige. God's people love to meet and worship in the only temple on the earth. It is a grand sight to see the pulpits filled and the large room crowded with the Lord's ministry and Saints. I heard very many people say as they were leaving the camp ground that they would be present next year when the first bell sounded, and stay to the end of the reunion. We sincerely hope that some of the Presidency will be present next year. There were over one hundred of the priesthood with us, three apostles, about eight seventies, three evangelical ministers, and a goodly number of high priests, also very many elders, priests, teachers and deacons. The Cleveland and Willoughby newspapers gave us favorable notices. The Wickcliffe brass band furnished beautiful music for us one whole evening gratuitously. Good will and the divine peace of God prevailed from start to finish. To him be all the glory.

Yours in bonds,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

A Newspaper Item

The Wheeling Register, of September 7, contains a report of the two-day meeting held at Navoo, West Virginia, contributed by one of the brethren. Brother Samuel A. Martin, in sending it in, suggests that he believes we would get much similar space if we but go after it. We say amen. The average newspaper editor wants news as badly from our people as from anyone else, and if it is put in good shape, tells its story and then quits, it will be used, nine times out of ten. We would like to look over some of the notices that are sent in and refused, especially if we can have them just as they reached their original destination.

But about the notice. We'll just print it as it appeared, for its value to our readers and as a sample of a good contribution to a newspaper:

LATTER DAY SAINTS HELD 2-DAY MEETING

On Saturday and Sunday, September 1 and 2, the members of the Wheeling District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, held a two-day meeting at Navoo, West Virginia, near Glen Easton, where a neat little church nestles in the beautiful West Virginia hills.

The church is situated in an ideal place for sacred worship, away from the bustle and noise of the city, in a beautiful, quiet spot where mother nature lends enchanting music and scenery to inspire thoughts of praise.

Many, from various parts of the district, were in attendance and were delightfully entertained by their Navoo friends.

The principal speakers for the occasion were Elder Louis A. Serig, pastor of the church at Wheeling; Elder John Martin, one of the missionaries for the church, and Elder Adolphus Edwards, formerly a missionary in Wales, now a resident of Martins Ferry, Ohio.

Among others who figured prominently in the services were Elder Jasper Dobbs, pastor of the Navoo church; Elder Thomas Mills of Wheeling, Elder L. D. Ullom, the bishop's agent and Elder James Craig, who was an active missionary for years and now resides at Glen Easton, West Virginia.

The services were solely of a spiritual character, no business of any kind being transacted, and, with special music leading its inspiring influence, the meeting proved a grand success.

Monument to the Martyrs

Seventy-three years have elapsed since the richest blood of a country and the noblest manhood of the age was sacrificed upon the altar of our religion, and no mark of respect, reverence or monument marks the resting place of these martyred founders of our religion! The foundation was laid upon which eighty-three thousand members have since builded. Ten cents each would build a monument worth $8,300; fifteen cents $12,000; twenty-five cents, one worth over $20,000, and yet no means available. One dollar each from twenty thousand out of the eighty-three would rear a most respectable notice of where our founders were laid away.

I am a very poor man and now eighty-five and a half years old, and I will give ten dollars for such a laudable purpose, and twenty-five dollars if necessary. I look upon it as a most neglectful duty we owe to them—a debt of gratitude so great it ought not to be longer neglected. And one I feel sure will not be if the matter is put before the branches. I do not believe there is a just, true and righteous Saint that will hesitate for a moment to assist liberally in such a worthy cause.

Don't you believe it? Is this not a matter worthy of our most serious thought and consideration? Could there ever be a debt of gratitude greater and more readily be paid, especially after this long lapse of years? Then should come the redemption of Zion. I would like to live to see and know that these two most important duties were consummated, yet can hardly expect to be so fortunate unless the suggestion above referred to is presented. I might then have hopes.

Those War Editorials

Dear Brother Burgess: Your editorial of August 29, entitled, "Those war editorials" is timely. Am in almost complete agreement. It clears up some statements in former editorials which possibly were misunderstood.

That the church is opposed to war in general goes without saying. As representatives of Christ we know the causes which lead up to war and that redress can only come by an elimination of these causes.

We cannot counsel or even countenance a violation of the law. This would be anarchy. The correction of even a vicious or unconstitutional law is not its violation but its strict enforcement.

This church is committed to the divine ultimatum to uphold the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. The time is near when the wisdom of this revelation will be in evidence.

There is a growing disrespect of the Constitution; an increasing desire to abandon the foundation principles of our government. This tendency is in evidence among those who absorb and misappropriate the Nation's strength on the one hand and the discontented victims and misfits in the social fabric on the other. One would abolish free government and extend its power of graft and plunder, the other would foment revolution and the overthrow of the present order by force and violence. Both are wrong.

It behooves the church to stand squarely on the fundamental principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the country.

Only recently a leading United States senator on the floor of Congress advocated the abrogation of the Constitution during the war—an alarming suggestion! He was not alone.

We must uphold the constitutional law of the land. We may seek for the reconsideration of any law which invades our constitutional privileges.

Just about the time the draft law went into effect I presented the following to our local congregation:

"If any member of this church is drafted into service I shall bless him as he responds to his country's call. During the long, weary months of his military apprenticeship he will be uppermost in my thoughts. My confidence and sympathy will go with him as he marches to the front. When he lies in the trenches or watches on the lonely sentinel post, or fights in the charge, I shall follow him with my prayers. If he is brought back dead from ship or battlefield I shall bury him with all the honors, not of war, but of religion. He will have obeyed the mandate of the State."

These are terrible times. It behooves every member of the church to look well to his moorings; to live humbly and prayerfully. Let us hold the thought of love, not of hate; sympathy, not revenge. Let us be true to the light as God may give it to us. Let us heed God's admonition and "lift up an ensign of peace to the nations."

Sincerely,

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

From Here and There

Do not write "A. E. F." on your packages and letters for soldiers on foreign soil, but spell it out—American Expeditionary Forces, for the same letters might stand for Australian expeditionary forces.

Brethren Peter Muceus and G. R. Wells have been the speakers at Blythedale, Missouri, in street meetings of late, with fair hearings. They go from Lamoni by auto and the effort is under the auspices of the Oland Saints.

"I am at present presenting the angel message about eighteen miles south of Wray, Colorado, to attentive and interested audiences. Over twenty have been inducted into the kingdom so far this conference year.—J. Charles May."

Private Andrew F. Flanders, Company B, Third Battalion, One Hundred and Sixtieth Brigade, Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan, is the name and address of one of the brethren who desires to get in touch with the Saints at that place.

Joseph H. Yager is at his home in Michigan, called there to take the physical examination for service in the army. He expects to be called to Midland, Michigan, any day. He says many of the best young men have already gone and more to follow. His address is 746 Queens Avenue, London, Ontario.

Emery Nunley, Second L. T. A., Battery E, Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, asks for church literature, which the library commission is sending. Consideration is being given plans to supply all such calls in some way if possible. When possible district or local boards noting these requests from time to time should try to get in touch with the situation and handle it.

Brother C. F. Ellis, writes from the island of Takume, of the Tuamotuan group, August 10, sending instructions for another illustrated number of the Te Orometua to be published at this office. He says the native Saints are diving for "mother shell" at that island, with little success. On the 5th three souls were buried beneath the Pacific waves, making over thirty baptisms in the mission during the year. He reports that many more are standing at the threshold.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, August 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: I herewith forward to you the minutes of the late British Isles annual conference, which came to hand from the secretary this morning. I am happy to be able to report that the Saints enjoyed quite a good time together at the conference.

Much credit is due to the Saints of Birmingham for the capable manner in which they provided for the needs and comfort of the visiting Saints, and they fully maintain their reputation in this respect.

The disposition of the Saints was most excellent considering the conditions under which we are laboring. I believe that the spiritual intercourse thus enjoyed, will encourage all to make an endeavor to maintain the standard of divine efficiency—revealed by gospel principle, to Saints of latter days.

I am trusting that the influence and power thus demonstrated in this collective gathering of Saints from all parts of our mission may be carried by them to their respective local stations—where there is great necessity for the manifestation of that personal and individual sense of the possession of the divine disposition—to love each other—to pray for each other—to be of service to each other—without which our testimonies to the truth of this work are valueless, and hinder the progress of the work to an extent that may not be revealed, until the fullness of knowledge shall come with the dawn of eternity. The hour will then be too late for lamentation. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of [our] salvation." May the Lord help us to place all selfish ambition upon the altar—and take hold of the selflessness of our Master, in spirit and in fact.

With all good wishes for the welfare of Zion.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

BARTH, FLORIDA, September 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have been reading the HERALD for five years and find much spiritual food in it. I love the gospel, it brings much comfort to me to know I have been adopted into God's kingdom, and now I know that I should grow in the gospel. But how much we need help. I know we have to work out our own salvation, but cannot we have help? I know the one who is trying to live right has many dark clouds, and when the sunshine comes, you think "how nice it is." Just think how good it would be if all could work together and drive the evil spirit out and never open the door to Satan.

We must fight, we must be tried, we must go on to-perfection. Let us try to earn life eternal so when Satan is bound we can then rejoice. I am sure God's Spirit does not dwell in unholy temples. But dear Saints, if you can live the temporal law you ought to live it now, if never before. Now, Saints, I want you all to pray for us, especially for my mother. The things that get next to my heart are the trials and afflictions that she has to go through, when all seem to have turned against her in her awful condition. The Lord still stands by and speaks words of comfort and cheer. Oh, what a friend we have in Jesus, one that will be with us in life and death, and dear Saints, I ask you all to pray for me, that my heart may be pure before God, so the destroying angel will pass me by. I long for the time when I can be with the Saints more, for the world is a cold friend.

Let us all come up higher, is the prayer of
Your sister in the one faith,
I. DELLA BOOKER.

COLD SPRINGS, MONTANA, September 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have been visiting my daughter at this place, but expect to leave soon to visit another daughter, Mrs. A. L. Davis, at Lamoni, Iowa. I knew some of the Saints and elders would like to know where I was and where I had decided to go. We are away from church privileges here and I am anxious to get where I can go to church again. I have enjoyed reading the church papers lately. They have been full of many good things to feast upon and in these times of trouble and heartaches we surely need something to keep us growing spiritually.

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. ROSA A. CLARK.

LAMONI, IOWA, September 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have not written to you for a few years, and some of the scattered Saints wonder why. I always love to write letters, but when I lived too far from church to attend I was more lonely and had time to write. Living here, I meet with many Saints every Sunday. There are seventy-five teachers in our Sunday school and an average attendance of about five hundred and seventy, and I think the writers to the church papers are far more numerous than they were thirty years or so ago.

I love my home here, just the same now as I always have ever since I bought it the tenth of April, 1907. My home is not the best one here, but I am satisfied and contented and suited, and always thankful for it. The Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants that "the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days." In coming to Zion, it is well to remember this, and I have striven to do so. Our beloved Patriarch Alexander H. Smith said in a sermon a few years before he was called to his rest, "The inheritance that we buy is not the inheritance that God will give us, but the inheritance that God will give us is better."

I think the Saints in coming to Zion would do well to remember this, and not be too particular to get the best place, but first correspond with the bishopric, and also take God for your partner, to do his will and not your own.

The Saints here are very busy; there is something for everyone to do, and everyone must follow his or her own calling, improve his own talent, and stand in his own place. The stake here is in good spiritual condition, and I am rejoicing over the spirituality and humility and wise management of our loved stake president, and our bishop and the priests and teachers. I am thankful that I discern on a large part of the membership, a renewed energy and determination to cooperate with those worthy brethren that I have so briefly mentioned, in their efforts to live closer to God and serve him better, and bring this stake of Zion up to that perfect condition that God intends, that is, "Zion, the pure in heart." Jesus said, Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

Ten years ago there was a brother here from the Independence Stake and he said in his testimony in our meeting that we "could redeem Zion by righteousness." One of our missionaries said in our reunion three years ago that "righteousness means right living." True. And it also means "the quality of being righteous. Exactness, rectitude, purity, holiness, comprehending holy principles, and affections of heart and conformity of life to the divine law." It is the state of being right with God, justice, uprightness, holiness, godliness, equity, rightfulness, integrity, honesty, and faithfulness.

May God help us all to improve and serve him better in every way and become worthy to receive all the blessings that God has promised, is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ,
EDWIN T. DAWSON.

MYRTLE POINT, OREGON, September 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: The annual reunion held at this place is again a matter of history. Committee, ministry and membership vied with each other to succeed. Our membership in these parts is limited. As everywhere, all could not attend. A few were camped on the ground, representing and sharing that enjoyable feature. The weather was ideal, the tent in beautiful Dixon Grove. The tent floor was shavings, best I ever saw, clean, noiseless, comfortable. Ladies, Saints and friends furnished flowers liberally. Brother M. H. Cook marshaled the musicians, who served us well. The devotional services graduated from day to day to better conditions and results, and were much enjoyed. Several study hours were directed by Brother Rushton, who surely has a warm place in the hearts of the Saints here.

The preaching was good, very excellent. Brother Rushton's closing effort was truly a masterpiece. Brethren Slye, Baker, and the writer also had a part.

Conference and convention work had its place and passed smoothly. If discouraging conditions warrant the calling off of reunions, this district might well have done so. To their credit they not only rose above the discouragements and made of this reunion a success, but have paved the way for the next, in a very practical way—a good sum is already in hand.

All felt refreshed and able to renew the conflict. Brother M. H. Cook, the new district president, began marshaling the forces. Encouraging features are in evidence and onward to success is the watchword.

In bonds,
R. ETZENHOUSER.

GRACELAND COLLEGE, LAMONI, IOWA,
September 12, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been several months since I wrote to the HERALD before, so at this time I am taking advantage of this great opportunity in writing again. Leaving Graceland the last of April, I thought I would go back home to rest for a little while, and then work so that I could be back in Graceland in the fall; but to my surprise upon arriving at my home in Scranton, Pennsylvania, I was asked to preach the funeral sermon of our beloved Sister Hartley who had passed away at the West Side Hospital of Scranton. Little did I realize then that it was the beginning of my greatest activity since being called to assist the great priesthood of God. For in a month to the day, I was called upon again to pay the last token of respect (as far as this world is concerned) to the daughter of Sister Hartley, who also passed away at the West Side Hospital after an operation.

By the time two months had passed and I was taking an inventory of the labor performed, to my astonishment I had put forth an effort twenty times to present the truth to the world. Several times I occupied on the streets of Scranton, and was wonderfully blessed in so doing.

While I am not at liberty to say or give the results of the efforts put forth, I want to mention this fact, that through the weak the Lord protects his work, as well as through the strong.

In reading the editorial of the HERALD of September 5, 1917, entitled "Prophecy and Learning," I was made to feel glad when it made reference to our beloved President Frederick M. Smith. It seems to me that many of our people are worrying because of the degree of education attained by our President Smith, but I want to go on record as making this statement, that I thank the Lord that we have such a noble man as our leader; a man who has been prepared and qualified by the Lord himself. To my mind the education that our president has attained is absolutely necessary in the responsible position to which he has been called by the Lord.

If I were at liberty to judge, or was endowed with power and authority to command, I would say: Brother F. M. Smith, you seek more education and learning. S. A. Burgess, Floyd M. McDowell, Roy V. Hopkins, Walter W. Smith, G. N. Briggs, J. A. Gunsolley, and others; you seek more learning. Why? Because such noble characters as these men and many others, and also the sisters are in demand. They are wanted by the Lord and his great work. Would to God that we had many more F. M. Smith's.

I wish I had taken advantage of my school when I was a younger boy. When I see the names of F. M. Smith, B. A., M. A., B. S., and F. M. McDowell, B. A., M. A., it makes me feel very glad when I think of the great good these brethren and many others are doing for the church. Oh, how I would long to see the day when the name of John Jenkins would read thus: Professor John Jenkins, B. A., M. A. What! for the sake of the titles? No, no! but for the greater efficient work that I could perform for the dear Lord and his great work.

We have returned to Graceland to put forth an effort to draw a step nearer to that B. A. With the help of the Lord we hope to be better qualified at the end of this school year to help further on this great work.

Let us move onward to the end and we shall receive the crown.

In gospel bonds,

JOHN JENKINS.

EROS, LOUISIANA, September 18, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have a branch of the church here of about seventy-five members, the only one that we know of in this State. We are rather in an isolated condition, not having advantages of an organized district. There is only one missionary in the State and he has so many places to look after, by the time he makes the round the year is up. So the work in the branch is left largely to the local priesthood, who are laboring to keep the camp fires blazing.

Our little branch has been organized only two years, and during this time has made considerable growth. The writer has led seven down into the waters of baptism this summer and there are others that we believe will take the step soon. We are striving to get the gospel before the people. We believe that there are many people here in this country, that when they have had their eyes opened to the beauty of the gospel, will receive it.

The writer preached the first latter-day gospel sermon here in the fall of 1902. There was then one Saint in the audience. I was only a boy then, my efforts were put forth in weakness, but the Lord blessed those efforts. The work was followed up by Brother J. F. Grimes and others of the missionary force. The work kept growing till to-day we have a good-sized branch.

Last winter I moved my family from the Magnolia Branch in western Iowa to this place. The Saints here were anxious for us to come and help them in branch work. They have been very kind toward us and have helped us in a material way, which we appreciate very much. We are working with the president of the branch to bring the branch to a higher standard. The adversary is also at work to hinder our progress. We have many discouraging features to meet, but we do not feel like giving up, in fact we cannot afford to do so.

Our policy in dealing with the erring ones is to do so with kindness, in gentleness, with charity. It is stated in the holy writ that charity prevents a multitude of sins. We find this true in dealing with the straying ones. Let those that are spiritual restore the weak.

Our people here are very faithful in attending the church services. Last Sunday, our Sunday school reported seventy-two present. One Sunday we had ninety. We are hoping we can bring the number up to one hundred, but we cannot hope very soon to have that average attendance. Our little school has given to date ten dollars towards the church debt, and we have the promise of ten dollars more. Our people here are farmers and they do not have very much money until they sell their cotton in the fall. However, the Saints are willing to do their part in a financial way. As they come to understand the law of tithing and consecration, I believe that they will be willing to observe that part of the gospel plan. We feel hopeful in the work, the field is large, the laborers are few. We have a desire to do what little we can for the cause of Christ.

One of our young sisters is at present living at the Portland Hotel, 112 West Pecan Street, San Antonio, Texas. Sister McElroy is living alone with her baby, while her husband is attending the officers' training camp at Leon Springs. She would be glad to have some of the Saints visit her. She would also be glad to find the place of worship of the Saints. Will the Saints in San Antonio remember Bryant McElroy?

With love to all the Saints,

Your brother in Christ,

J. A. PHILLIPS.

DECKERVILLE, MICHIGAN, September 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I have never seen any letters from the Lang Branch, I thought I would try and write a few lines. We have a nice lot of Saints here, but regret to say there are a number who do not come to church, while there are others trying to keep the banner floating. There are a great many discouragements, but God says we are to be a tried people and if we give up now to the little trials we have, how will our faith stand the heavy trials which are to come to his people? For they will surely come, for we read in the Bible of the many things his people will have to withstand. Dear Saints, let us be faithful, no matter how dark the cloud may seem. We have one elder and one priest, also one deacon. Brother Henry Sheffer is our elder and can say that he and his noble wife have done much for the work in this part. We miss their faces when they are not with us on Sunday, but we know God needs him in other places.

We have no church, but hold our Sunday school and Religio in Brother Markey's hall. They are trying to help all they can to spread the gospel and God has blessed them for it. We are also trying hard to help with the Christmas offering, though our number is small, but we are doing nicely. We have more than doubled it, from what it was last, and hope we can do much more yet before Christmas, to help pay the church debt. We as a little branch want to do what we can, so when the time comes to gather, we may be numbered with the faithful. My prayer is for the church, and God's people.

Yours in gospel bonds,

MRS. E. L. DAVIS.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Announcement of Religio Lecture Board

The following is a list of lecturers, lecture subjects, etc., as arranged for by the lecture board. It will be absolutely necessary for the board to be advised definitely as to the approximate time the various districts or locals will want the services of any of the lecturers. We will need this information just as quickly as you can arrange to give it to us if we are to make satisfactory arrangements for lectures to be delivered this fall and winter. Do not write in one day and ask that we send you a lecturer for the next day, no, neither for one week from then, for it will be impossible for us to render good service to all and handle matters in this way. We must have time to arrange the routes, and the lecturers must have time to make necessary preparation to be on hand at the appointed date. All of our lecturers are busy people and we cannot—neither do we—expect them to pick up and make any trips on a moment's notice.

The lectures are not to be sermons or just talks; they are to be real, live lectures by competent speakers. If you want sermons on religious topics, do not send for any of these lecturers; we have ministers for this purpose.

We hope to make this movement a complete success by having the entire cooperation of all the lecturers and those who desire this service. We want all who can to take advantage of this service—it has been arranged for you and your cooperation is necessary if we are to be of any service to you. Let us hear from you promptly.

SPECIAL INFORMATION

We list herewith the names of the speakers, the subjects they will use, the territory they will cover, and the time they are available.

Miss Charlotte Dryden, former teacher at Ames College. 1. "Public speaking and grammatical construction." 2. "Home economics, cooking, sewing and nursing." 3. "Personal hygiene, sanitation, and social purity." Mississippi Valley; not specially limited as to time.

F. G. Pitt. 1. "Palestine; past, present, and future." 2. "Signs of the times." Has illustrated slides but no lantern at present. Mississippi Valley; not specially limited as to time.

A. M. Carmichael, Superintendent High Schools, Lamoni, Iowa. 1. "Civil subjects." 2. "Economic subjects." Adjacent to Lamoni; week ends.

F. M. McDowell, teacher, Graceland College. 1. "History." 2. "Education." 3. "Psychology." Adjacent to Lamoni; week ends.

E. D. Moore, Assistant Editor HERALD. 1. "Fuller use of printing." 2. "Larger Phases of Auxiliary Activity." Mississippi Valley; not specially limited as to time.

L. F. P. Curry, General Superintendent Normal Department. 1. "Four sights of boy life." 2. "Some social problems." Pennsylvania, Ohio, Upper West Virginia; week ends.

S. A. Burgess, Associate Editor HERALD. Various—select subjects desired. Mississippi Valley; not specially limited as to time.

John W. Rushton, Apostle. 1. "Art, literature and painting." 2. "Ethics." 3. "Philosophy." Pacific Coast; not specially limited as to time.

J. F. Garver, President Lamoni Stake. 1. "Social purity." Adjacent to Lamoni; not specially limited as to time.

Walter W. Smith, President Independence Stake. 1. "Psychology." 2. "Economics." 3. "Biology." 4. "History of education." Adjacent to Independence; not specially limited as to time.

Mrs. Walter W. Smith. 1. "Kindergarten work." 2. "Story-telling." Adjacent to Independence; not specially limited as to time.

George N. Briggs, President Graceland College. Industrial education." Adjacent to Lamoni; week ends.

Orman Salisbury. "Organization, its necessity, how and why." Mississippi Valley; not specially limited as to time.

Mrs. F. G. Pitt. "Scenes and incidents in foreign lands." Mississippi Valley; not specially limited as to time.

Ralph W. Farrell. "Hamlet"—"McBeth," or "Shakespeare." Atlantic States; not specially limited as to time.

Doctor Leonard G. Harrington, in charge Independence Sanitarium. 1. "Medical problems in the home." 2. "Social purity." 3. "Sex hygiene." Independence, Kansas City and Holden Stakes, not specially limited as to time.

Albert Carmichael, Bishop Lamoni Stake. 1. "Problems in economics." 2. "Relation of education to the church." 3. "Modern demands on our youth." Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Nebraska, Minnesota; not specially limited as to time.

A. E. Warr, missionary. "Educational topics." Mobile, Alabama, Florida Districts; not specially limited as to time.

Doctor W. A. Sinclair. 1. "General Medical." 2. "Educational." 3. "Food values." Atlantic States; not specially limited.

Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. Illustrated historical subjects—has own slides and projector; not specially limited as to time.

Sarah M. Rogers Superintendent Nurses, Independence Sanitarium. 1. "Better nursing." 2. "Personal hygiene." Mississippi Valley; not specially limited as to time.

Miss Mabel Knipschild, Teacher Graceland College. Illustrated lectures: 1. "Germany." 2. "Canadian Rockies." 3. "Domestic Science." Adjacent to Lamoni; week ends.

A. W. Smith, Second Assistant Superintendent General Sunday School Association. Illustrated Lectures on "Mexico, its people, mode of living," "Cliff Dwellers—Mesa Verde National Park." Not limited as to territory; any time.

Mrs. S. A. Burgess, Teacher at Graceland College. "Woman's work." Week ends.

This completes the list of lectures and lecturers on which we have any reasonably definite date. Others will, we hope, come to the front and offer their services in the very near future. This is a free-will work, only the expenses being paid.

It may be well to offer more definite explanation as to "territory" and "time" of the various lecturers, hence we offer the following: Some of our workers are limited as to territory simply because their field of labor demands their first attention, to such we have assigned "adjacent territory." Where we have stated "not specially limited" as to time, we mean that these people are busy, but by special arrangement will be able to deliver lectures most any time—there being a possibility of their services being required elsewhere just at the time you may ask for them, hence we are compelled to arrange approximate dates until we can communicate with these people. By "week ends" we mean that these people are not at liberty except to fill engagements adjacent to their homes and only on Friday evenings, Saturdays, and Sundays.

We are offering, through these lecturers, opportunities for advancement along educational lines that should be accepted without delay. We sincerely trust that you will see the situation as we see it, that you will readily appreciate that these lecturers are giving you, without cost, except their actual expense, what they have studied and labored hard to obtain.

Again, we solicit your entire support and cooperation in this movement, and trust that all districts and locals will take an active interest in these lecture courses.

Address all communications for Lecture Service to Arthur W. Smith, Federal Reserve Bank Building, Saint Louis, Missouri.

LECTURE BOARD

George N. Briggs, President.

Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, Secretary.

Arthur W. Smith, Business Manager.

Don't Forget the Children's Needs

Who can resist the "Tell me a story" age of young children? The little folks of five and six are interested in everything, comprehend but little, are unable to read much for themselves but like to be read to. The J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia, have recently put out two books especially for this age: The Adventures of the Greyfur Family, and the Greyfur's Neighbors, 50 cents each, net. The stories are told by Vera Nyce, and each book has 24 color illustrations by Helene Nyce, both tasks very well done. These may be ordered of this office if desired. Though these are days of retrenchment, do not let the little folks bear all the burden; their education must be attended to.

Secretary of Navy Calls on Boys for Radio Work

The Secretary of the Navy, in an article in the October number of the American Boy, tells boys that the Navy is still in great need of radio operators for sea duty. He expresses the hope that many boys between the ages of 17 and 21 will volunteer for this important service. Boys under 18 must have the written consent of their parents.

"The principal requirement for enrollment," writes Mr. Daniels, "is that the applicant must be able to receive messages at the rate of ten words per minute in the Continental code. The more advanced training will be given after entering the Radio School at Harvard University."

Our Departed Ones

HAYER.—Sister Sarah Elefson Hayer was born at Telemarken, Norway, January 12, 1831, and came to America in 1842. Married Hans Hayer March 17, 1849, by whom 9 children were born, one son and 8 daughters. The son and four daughters survive. Baptized at Mission, Illinois, in 1861. Removed to Lamoni in 1894, where her husband died in 1905. Died September 19, 1917, funeral from Saints' church. Sermon by Heman C. Smith, assisted by John Smith and Henry A. Stebbins.

SHADDUCK.—Juanita Isabell, daughter of Forest and Sister Cora Shadduck, born August 20, 1913; died at Cameron, Missouri, August 20, 1917, interment at Cameron, Missouri. Services in charge and sermon by William Lewis at the Saints' chapel, Cameron. Little Juanita was a very bright and intelligent child, above the average for her age; she was loved and much thought of by the aged and youth, her pleasant and winning ways are missed in the neighborhood, and especially by the Sunday school class and those of her home.

DANIELSON.—Martin Jacob Danielson was born April 13, 1857, in Earl Township, LaSalle County, Illinois. Baptized at Mission, in the same county, October 13, 1878, by T. A. Hougas. Ordained a priest November 20, 1892. Married Julia M. Hayer, February 17, 1880, to which union 5 children were born, 2 having passed to the beyond. Died at Lamoni, Iowa, September 15, 1917, from tuberculosis. He leaves a widow, one son and two daughters. He was a sincere man of sterling integrity. Funeral services at the Saints' church, with H. A. Stebbins in charge and sermon by John Smith.

HOLDSWORTH.—Evangeline Remington was born in Saint Louis, Missouri, September 12, 1865. Married Thomas Newman Holdsworth on March 6, 1890. To this union there were born 4 children, 2 of whom have preceded her, and two are still living, Pearl and Stafford. Baptized September 25, 1882, by William Anderson. A few years ago Sister Holdsworth came to take charge of some of the work at the Saints' Home, cooking, and part of the work as housekeeper. She died at her post of duty. Service in charge of J. S. Roth, at the home, who delivered the sermon. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

BONNEY.—Catherine M. Hammond was born June 24, 1844, in Middleburg, Tioga County, New York. Removed with parents to Wisconsin in 1850. Married John T. Hardacker in

BOOK OF MORMON.—We sell this book in various bindings, listed in our price list. The most popular editions are, No. 11, cloth, 90c; No. 12, full leather $1.30

IN THE SHELTER OF THE LITTLE BROWN COTTAGE. The popular serial that ran in Stepping Stones during 1915, by the editor, Estella Wight. The leading character is not a Latter Day Saint at first, but eventually becomes so, and in the process a strong gospel story is told. Several characters in the book are shown laboring toward the truth, making this a fine, readable missionary medium. Cloth,

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM.—E. E. Long is one of the most aggressive ministers in the church. He has a "punch" proportionate to his physique, and does not hesitate to "apply" it. In this book he attacks Alexander Campbell's theology and the workings out of the same, with characteristic zest, but fairly withal. Full of tense argument and virile reasoning. No. 196, paper$.25

PARSONS' TEXTBOOK.—An exhaustive compendium of texts and quotations, covering the entire field of gospel doctrine, collated by Alonzo H. Parsons. A ready (and adequate) reference for preachers, and also those who would accurately represent the angel's message in conversion—a maker of efficient. No. 263, cloth$1.00

THE GATHERING

In practically every stage of the history of this church the gathering has been a problem for serious discussion. There is the need of the people to assemble in such a way, as to be able better to worship God and better to carry out his law for the benefit of themselves and humanity.

The Doctrine and Covenants emphasizes the fact that Zion is the pure in heart. It is something more than a city. It is something more than a locality. Unless one is worthy, there is little to be gained in gathering even to the city of God. This thought has been emphasized time and time again, it is emphasized even in regard to the celestial kingdom, the best that is possible in eternity. Fitness and preparation are prerequisites as well as purity of body and mind. To go unworthily is to receive a cursing rather than a blessing.

In 1834 we read in the revelations:

Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil; and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer. I speak not concerning those who are appointed to lead my people, who are the first elders of my church, for they are not all under this condemnation; but I speak concerning my churches abroad; there are many who will say, Where is their God, Behold, he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys. Therefore, in consequence of the transgressions of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 21.

In 1869 our late President Joseph Smith discussed this question in volume 15, page 220 of the SAINTS' HERALD. Our energies should not be postponed until we shall have entered the confines of that city. The whole editorial is worthy of consideration. We quote however, only limited portions in connection with the present theme.

The man who depends upon the continued reiteration of human intentions and evidences, cannot be safely grounded upon the testimony which God gives to those who are to be his at the day of gathering. He that has received the truth of God as he gives it to the seeker, is at no loss to bear in his heart the pain of separation from the elect gathered, and still find ample trust in God. Such never fail; but like the generous flower which sheds its perfume when bruised, they will continue to show the love of God which is in them, though trials, persecutions, and languishing away from Zion may be theirs. They are purifying themselves, and could be trusted with the honor of a community; while the loud aspirant for the honors of the elect would betray the trust of a people, stir up contention, tear down what others would build up, and scatter by their acts what by their precept they would gather.

It requires a more than ordinary amount of faith to look the accumulated difficulties surrounding the word steadily in the face. Nor does it require less to bear up under the despondency which lies lurking in every work where once flourished this truth.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 18, p. 220.

This is of special interest, that the man who requires continued reiteration of human intentions is not yet ready for Zion. There must be a greater and deeper confidence, and that confidence must be founded in a knowledge of the law of God. Our faith must be in our heavenly Father and in his word. In the close of the editorial we note:

For our own part we would by far prefer to be a lonely but faithful sentinel upon the walls, a "vedette" upon a distant outpost of Zion unredeemed, than to be an unredeemed and unregenerate citizen of Zion redeemed; for the one would result in sure and ignominious expulsion, while the other must eventuate in a victorious bidding to come home.

It requires also confidence in our brethren. Of special importance is the spiritual and mental preparation. Without these, Zion is not possible. But Zion has locality. What is its locality has already been pointed out in the article on the "Location of Zion" in a recent HERALD, (September 19). Zion is to be a city of holiness, the new Jerusalem.

Every man who will not take up his sword against his neighbor must flee to Zion for safety. It is the place of refuge for the oppressed of the earth, and our God shall become great and terrible to the offender.

There are many other passages concerning how the oppressed of the earth will flee unto her. It is to be the refuge of the Gentiles. The people of God shall yet be gathered into a certain place appointed, for the sake of peace, righteousness, and protected by the power of God.

The promises are indeed wonderful, but are conditional upon our preparation. Much speculation has been made concerning the redemption of Zion, but it would seem evident from the revelations that the method the Lord has appointed is by purchase. The Lord will do his part, but we must do ours, which is to deal justly with all mankind. Surely we may have faith when we note the wonderful promise given to us, as set forth in section 100:

For after much tribulation, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, cometh the blessing. Behold, this is the blessing which I have promised after your tribulations, and the tribulations of your brethren; even their restoration to the land of Zion, to be established, no more to be thrown down; nevertheless, if they pollute their inheritances, they shall be thrown down; for I will not spare them if they pollute their inheritances. Behold, I say unto you, The redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage by power, and with a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at the first, even so shall the redemption of Zion be. Therefore, let not your hearts faint, for I say not unto you as I said unto your fathers, Mine angel shall go up before you, but not my presence; but I say unto you, Mine angels shall go before you, and also my presence, and in time ye shall possess the goodly land.—Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3.

Surely then Zion shall put on her beautiful garments, in justice, in righteousness and in truth.

The conditions now confronting the world, the great crisis of the world war brings vividly to mind the necessity for the redemption of Zion. The stake presidents and stake bishops under the leadership of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric are carefully considering the questions incidental thereto.

It would seem that the time is very near at hand when the oppressed of the earth will seek refuge in Zion. It becomes us then to make ready. It becomes Zion to put on her beautiful garments. And what are her beautiful garments, but the righteousness of the Saints? (Revelation 19: 8.) These questions are indeed vital throughout the church.

So we see clearly that in faith the people must first be prepared before Zion, or a place of refuge, is possible, either for the people of God or those who will flee there for refuge.

At the time of the first gathering Joseph Smith, jr., wrote:

The city of Zion, spoken of by David, in the one hundred and first Psalm, will be built upon the land of America, "and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to it with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads," and then they will be delivered from the overflowing scourge that shall pass through the land. But Judah shall obtain deliverance at Jerusalem. (See Joel 2: 32; Isaiah 26: 20, 21; Jeremiah 31 and 12; Psalm 50: 5; Ezekiel 34: 11, 12 and 13.) These are testimonies, that the good Shepherd will put forth his own sheep, and lead them out from all nations where they have been scattered in a cloudy and dark day, to Zion, and to Jerusalem; besides many more testimonies which might be brought. . . .

The people of the Lord, those who have complied with the requisitions of the new covenant, have already commended gathering to Zion, which is in the State of Missouri; therefore I declare unto you the warning which the Lord has commanded me to declare unto this generation, remembering that the eyes of my Maker are upon me, and that to him I am accountable for every word I say, wishing nothing worse to my fellow men than their eternal salvation; therefore, "fear God and give glory to him for the hour of his judgment is come"—Repent ye, repent ye, and embrace the everlasting covenant, and flee to Zion before the overflowing scourge overtake you, for these are those now living upon the earth whose eyes shall not be closed in death until they see all things, which I have spoken, fulfilled. Remember these things; call upon the Lord while he is near, and seek him while he may be found, is the exhortation of your unworthy servant.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 707.

To sum up, Zion requires a pure and delightful people, the pure in heart. It is to be a city of the people of God. It can only be built up according to the principles of righteousness. Zion has locality, and only one place has been so designated. Its limits are rather clearly defined, and do not run to the extreme ends of the country.

The conditions in the world would indicate that the time of gathering should be near; the world is oppressed as never before. Men's hearts are failing them for fear of the things coming upon the earth. This crisis is very plainly felt, and the officers of the church are carefully considering the conditions and remedies.

Yet in 1834, in 1869, and again in 1880 and in 1893, as has been set forth and is shown by the following, the efforts of those appointed to lead have been severely handicapped by lack of faith, criticism, and opposition more or less direct, by well-meaning members. In 1893 the following was printed:

From the foregoing the reader may learn why the effort has been made to locate the Saints in "the regions round about," and where the church, through its proper authorities, decided it best to begin such work of location. They may also learn of the persistent opposition met from the first by the authorities to whom the work of locating the Saints and the business center of the church, than those upon whom was placed this duty and responsibility by the word of God and regular appointment by the church through its general conferences. And they may also learn where to lay the blame—if blame there be—for failure in any degree in respect to locating the Saints “in the regions round about” as commanded in the revelations heretofore quoted.—THE SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 37.

Had the authorized efforts of the church since 1870 touching these matters of location been heartily supported, in the spirit of godly unity and gospel wisdom, a strong line of flourishing settlements would have been established in southwestern Iowa and Northwestern Missouri, (where lands up to 1884 were cheap and accessible but are now much higher and more difficult of purchase) and the church would have had a fair chance to present to the world the practical fruits of the restored gospel and Church of Christ, and the Saints would have reaped the benefits of greatly increased values of real estate and especially those benefits arising from religious, social, educational, and business associations. This has been accomplished to some degree in Lamoni and vicinity, but not in nearly so great measure as would have obtained had there been less opposition and intermeddling on the part of would-be wise ones among professed Saints, and had greater unity and concentration of effort on the part of all connected with the church prevailed.

The Saints in 1831-2-3, were commanded to purchase land in Jackson County, Missouri, and notably between Independence and the west line of the State taking in the lands where Kansas City now stands. But there were croakers, doubters, intermeddlers, and men who wrought division and hindrance instead of practical unity, assuming, in effect, to be wiser than God and more prudent than the regularly appointed authorities of the Church of Christ. There was miserable failure in the matter, and the Saints afterwards, up to the present hour, are left to deplore the shortsightedness, the folly, and the unfaithfulness that robbed them of great blessings placed within their reach and to which they were earnestly and urgently invited.

History has, in a measure, repeated itself concerning the efforts of the church to locate “in the regions round about” as commanded of God and as counseled by the elders in the conferences. While doubters and hinderers have worked distrust and division, preventing united and concentrated effort in the matter of locating the Saints and the business center of the church in the regions mentioned, some of them, known to the writer, have demonstrated sadly their want of business capacity or lack of divine favor in respect to locations for either the Saints or themselves; whereas those who faithfully and patiently availed themselves of the opportunities and privileges provided by the authority of the church have been blessed richly in proportion to their diligent compliance with the word of God and the provisions of the church thereunder.

The Lord has said: “My people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be by the things which they suffer.”—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2. But it is regrettable that the diligent and faithful should suffer either loss or hindrance, directly or indirectly, through the unwise, uncalled-for interference of self-appointed censors and self-conceited critics. Some, and nearly all of those most active in their opposition never paid a dollar toward making the location, and yet they had much to say concerning it, notably in an irregular and secret way, thereby throwing discredit upon the movement and arousing suspicions against those placed in charge. This was as unjust and cruel as it was distracting and harmful. If the church by these experiences has learned the need of saying to such persons, “Hands off!” and, “Mind your own affairs!” it will be well.

Shall it be again hindered to-day by our inefficiency, by our disqualification, by our lack of proper and righteous confidence, one in another; or shall we go forward earnestly to the work and problems resting upon us, seeking divine direction and wisdom?

We have also to remember that all things should be prepared before us, it may be that the time is approaching when haste will be necessary, but we ought to avoid that, if possible, and make all reasonable preparation. Counsel with those on whom rests the burden, and especially with the bishopric before making a move, to the end that Zion may be established and built up in righteousness, that our gathering may not be in haste, but that it may be in peace, and in truth, in harmony. Thus Zion may indeed become beautiful, her stakes strengthened and the people given cause to rejoice. S. A. B.

ELDER GRIFFITHS'S ARTICLE

The following should prove of interest to our readers. It is an extract taken from a letter by Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, to the editor, in connection with his article in this issue. He states in introducing it, “While writing them down, the Spirit rested upon me in much power.” It seems an admonition that is needed, by some at least, at the present time. We need to stand firmly for the right and recognize the great honor that is ours in holding the priesthood of God. The time is passing when we may hope simply to hold office, and not magnify our calling. The communication is as follows:

A great and mighty work is to be done within the near future among the sons and daughters of men, provided, my servants are true and faithful to the sacred trust that I have reposed in them. Many of them are slothful in my service and do not appreciate the great honor (priesthoods) that I have conferred upon them in these last days. But woe, woe, be unto such if they fail to magnify their calling to my honor and glory, saith the Lord your God.

It is my will that you hold up the hands of my servants Frederick M. Smith and his counselor, Elbert A. Smith, also the Quorum of the Twelve upon whom I have placed heavy burdens as the leading officers in my church.

Some of them are afflicted in body, and some of their families are ill, and some of them have been passing through severe trials, and have been greatly tempted in ways that are known unto me. Therefore, you should have been fasting and praying for them.

My servants should at all times and under all circumstances love and honor one another as my Father honors and loves me, and as I honor and love my Father.

He that speaketh evil of his fellow servant and disparagingly of his efforts is sinning against the Lord.

You should be considerate of each other, and bear and forbear with one another. All of you have besetting sins, therefore, you should help each other to overcome the same. He that loves his brother is loved of me and my Father, but he that hateth his brother is not worthy of me, and shall not dwell with me when I reign as King of kings. Again, I say unto my ministry, love one another and possess your souls in patience so that you can dwell with me in my everlasting kingdom.

PROHIBITION

October 15 a constitutional amendment is to be voted upon by the citizens of Iowa. On November 6 a similar amendment is to be voted upon in Ohio. We have enough readers in both States to justify an appeal through the column of the HERALD. No one needs to have urged the position of our church on temperance and prohibition. In Nauvoo as well as in earlier settlements ordinances were passed clearly prohibiting all intoxicating liquor. The members of the church have stood steadfast as a body in every fight against the saloon.

The Union Club of Greater Cincinnati has submitted a letter with the following reasons for prohibition:

The Law: That the liquor traffic has "no inherent right" to exist.

The Courts: That drink is largely the cause of crime and pauperism.

Physicians: That drink is the chief cause of disease.

Business: That drink produces incompetency and inefficiency.

The Home: That drink destroys happiness and prosperity.

The School: That drink is the greatest enemy of education.

The Church: That drink is the chief foe to religion.

Motherhood: That drink poisons the very fountains of life.

Economy: That drink wastes food and robs labor.

Conservation: That drink is always destructive, never constructive.

Patriotism: That drink has disqualified a large percentage of the young men called to the colors, and as General Leonard Wood says, "is the soldier's worst enemy."

The case is before you. Review the evidence. The responsibility now is yours.

Shall this evil continue?

On the legal aspect we have the Supreme Court of the United States:

By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community, there are few sources of crime and misery to society equal to the dramshop. The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source. It is a business attended with danger to the community, and there is no inherent right in a citizen of the State or a citizen of the United States to sell intoxicating liquors by retail.—137 United States, page 86—Crowley vs. Christiansen.

On the industrial side, we have the fact that liquor gives employment to fewer persons per hundred thousand dollars invested than any other lines of manufacture, including cotton goods, bread-making, silk goods, shoes and clothing. Also labor receives but two cents on every dollar spent for booze, against sixteen cents for the other purposes named. About ten per cent of liquor receipts is paid back in all forms as taxes or revenue. Ninety per cent is a loss to the Nation.

Also eighty to ninety per cent of crime finds its basis in liquor; and in the present crisis the greatest enemy to success, remains drink. Major General Leonard Wood, highest ranking Major General of the United States Army, in an address in Little Rock, Arkansas, denominated "booze the worst enemy of the army," and advocated war time prohibition. He also said:

I am glad the Twelfth division of the new national army is to be trained in Arkansas, a "bone-dry" State. That will eliminate three fourths of our troubles. Drink is the soldier's worst enemy.

David Lloyd-George, Premier of England, says:

We are fighting Germany, Austria and drink. So far as I can see, the greatest of these deadly foes is drink.

Major General Frederick Dent Grant:

Ninety-five per cent of the desertions and acts of lawlessness in the army is due to liquor. If I could by offering my body as a sacrifice free my country from this fell destroyer, drink, I would thank God for the privilege of doing it.

American Medical Association:

Alcohol is wholly without drug value, either as a tonic or stimulant or in any other therapeutic way.

Even the saloon interests have recognized the abuse that has been made of their licenses.

Tests have been made in Germany and elsewhere which show that even moderate drinking, one drink a day, still lowers efficiency, the promptness of response and the accuracy of response. And if persisted in produces a mild case of drunkenness. The effect is cumulative and is not worn off from day to day. It is found that children born of drinking mothers have much less chance for life and enter life much weaker. This does not refer to drunkenness, but to the mild use of alcohol and beverages.

It is also one of the great causes of insanity. Its use is decreasing rapidly in hospitals as physicians are coming to recognize how little medicinal use it really has.

But our readers do not need conviction along these lines. What they do need, is to be warned that we must vote and not neglect our franchise. There lies the only danger, that the issue may be considered assured. Everyone who can vote, should go to the polls on these respective days

THE MISSION OF THE TWELVE

Is the regime inaugurated by the Presidency and the Twelve, and in operation since last spring, in harmony with the policy that was in vogue in the days of the martyred Joseph Smith, jr., in relation to the appointments of the Twelve, and not having their names placed by the Presidency before the General Conference for its approval?

Judging from the many comments that the writer has heard in his travels, very many of the ministry and members of the church are of the opinion that the President made a great mistake in not assigning the Twelve a mission, and having the General Conference ratify or confirm the same, as has been the custom or practice in the Reorganized Church since its incipency. Some have arrived at the conclusion that the Twelve displayed an awful weakness in submitting to such an inconsistent policy.

As one of the Twelve I deem it to be my bounden duty to defend the position taken by President F. M. Smith and acquiesced in by the Quorum of Twelve last April, as I feel very confident that the present system under which the Twelve are operating is strictly in harmony with the law of God, and in keeping with the custom or regime that obtained during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, jr.

The method of assigning the Twelve a mission and having the conference confirm the same originated with the Reorganization. It is very evident from a careful study of our church history that not one instance can be found on record where the First Presidency during the nine years that Joseph Smith, jr., presided over the church, after the Quorum of Twelve came into existence, placed the names of the Twelve with other missionaries before the General Conference for its ratification.

It is a positive fact, however, that the first Twelve received their first mission from President Joseph Smith, jr., at Kirtland, Ohio, March 12, 1835. Notwithstanding they held a special conference in the month of May following, he did not wait to have the conference approve or confirm their appointments, and history assures us that the course pursued by President Smith on March 12, 1835, was continued by him, and his colleagues in office until his untimely demise in June, 1844.

Moreover, just about fourteen months prior to the death of the Seer, a General Conference convened at Nauvoo, Illinois, April 8, 1843. A long list of missionaries appeared and some of those missionaries were sent to different parts of the world. But we do not find one of the apostles' names in said list, which is conclusive evidence that the method adopted by Joseph Smith, jr., March 12, 1835, when he sent the first Twelve to the eastern states without the approval of the General Conference was the only regime in vogue between the year 1835 and the year 1844.

Question: Why should the Twelve be given a mission and their names appear with other missionaries and be approved by the General Conference any more than the First Presidency, the Presiding Patriarch and the Presiding Bishops?

The Lord states emphatically that the Twelve are the second presidency, and as a quorum they are equal with the First Presidency in point of power and authority, hence both quorums preside jointly over the whole church. Nevertheless, the Twelve labor and perform all ministerial duties, both preaching and regulating the affairs of the church in all the world, under the direction of the First Presidency. I herewith append a few quotations in support of the above assertion.

The parallels are in the presidency, the president and his counselors; in the second presidency, the twelve.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9.

The twelve traveling counselors are called to be the twelve apostles or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world, thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

Not only are the Twelve to direct the preaching of the gospel under the direction of the First Presidency, but are to direct and instruct the standing ministry in their work also in connection with the Presidency.

The high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watch-care of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the presidency and the twelve.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.

Joseph the Seer and the late President Joseph Smith were in perfect accord regarding the authority and prerogatives of the Twelve, and the close relationship that should exist between the two leading quorums, the First Presidency and the Twelve.

Soon after the Quorum of Twelve was organized, Joseph Smith, jr., propounded the following question to the Twelve in their council:

What importance is there attached to the calling of these Twelve Apostles different from other callings of officers in the church? After the question was discussed by counselors

Patten, Young, Smith, and McLellin, President Smith gave the following decision:

They are the Twelve Apostles who are called to the office of Traveling High Council, who are to preside over all the churches of the Saints among the Gentiles where there is a presidency established; and they are to travel and preach among the Gentiles until the Lord shall command them to go to the Jews. They are to hold the keys of this ministry, to unlock the kingdom of heaven unto all nations, to preach the gospel to every creature. This is the power, authority and virtue of their apostleship.

Oliver Cowdery was clerk of said council wherein the above decision was made. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 549.)

The late President, the son of the Martyred Prophet gave his opinion respecting the same question to the joint council which met at Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1890. Said option was adopted by the Council. (Doctrine and Covenants 123: 23.)

As a traveling presiding council, your quorum has the supervision and presidency, under the First Presidency, over the entire field of ministerial labor and control over districts, branches (no stakes in existence at that time) as a whole, and as church organizations, and not as local presidency where no organization has been perfected, in a similar way as the First Presidency presides over the whole church, differing in this that the First Presidency is necessarily local, while your province is not localized, nor do we mean by this, that the word abroad is to be construed to mean for lands, but in the fields of itinerant gospel labor everywhere, as contradistinguished from branch, district, or other local organizations.

It was made quite apparent to all who attended the priesthood lectures delivered by President F. M. Smith in the basement of the Brick Church last April that he is in harmony with the opinion and decision of his predecessors as to the authority and rights of the Twelve.

The Twelve reserve their mission immediately they are ordained to the apostleship, and their field of labor or mission is specifically defined by God himself, namely, the whole world, "under the direction of the first presidency." Hence, they do not have to wait to have their names placed before a General Conference for its approval.

The Lord says that the Presidency are their Counselors and readers. "For unto you [the Twelve] and those [the First Presidency] who are appointed with you, to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given, for the last days and for the last time." (Doctrine and Covenants 105: 12.)

During the lifetime of President Joseph Smith, jr., the Twelve were sent here and there wherever the First Presidency deemed it necessary for them to go, but there are a few instances on record where the Twelve and the Presidency consulted together as to where the Twelve should go. The Twelve were sent two together as a general thing, and as many as eight were sent to England at one time.

President Frederick M. Smith is moving in the right direction; that is, he is trying to adopt the methods that were established by his grandfather under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. It stands to reason that it will require the exercise of great patience and the display of much wisdom, also close attention to what some people call the new policy or system to work smoothly without some friction. However, we feel very confident that if the ministry will cooperate with the Presidency and the Twelve under the present regime, that great results will be apparent soon.

It is to be hoped that all those upon whom the Lord has conferred the two priesthoods will strive with all diligence to magnify their holy calling in Christ Jesus. We should ever keep in mind the fact that duties and obligations cannot be adequately or efficiently discharged in the service of our heavenly Master, if those upon whom the sacred trust has been imposed remain in ignorance as to the limits and prerogatives attaching to the particular office they are called to fill.

A studious perusal of the scriptures as contained in the three standard books of the church will surely acquaint us with the duties that devolve upon those who are colaborers with our dear Lord.

God is to be praised for the great leader that he has raised up in these last days to carry out his great and wonderful designs. President Frederick M. Smith is the right man in the right place, and through his instrumentality the Lord will in due time "rebuild the waste places," and bring about the redemption of Zion, providing, that all the ministry of Christ hold up his hands, with that of his counselors, and the Twelve upon whom our Father in heaven has placed the responsibility of leadership. There need not be any fears as to the final outcome, as the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob is and will be with our beloved President to guide him by his Holy Spirit and through ministrations of angels. The God that has directed the course of the grand old ship of Zion will continue to pilot her in her proper course, and the men who will suffer themselves under the influence of the Evil One to change her course will go down to destruction.

I sincerely trust that all of God's people will strive to honor the Lawgiver by obedience to the demands of his divine law.

I remain your colaborer in the one faith.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 7

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

The name and doctrine of the Evangelical Lutheran Church came as result of the personality and work of Martin Luther, and the opposition thereto. He was born of peasant parents in Germany, November 10, 1483. His education was somewhat limited, but he was religiously inclined from his childhood. His claim to be called of God to the ministry, or as a monk in the Catholic Church, of which he was a member, is based upon the following circumstance recorded in the History of Martin Luther by Froude, page 3:

Returning to Erfurt, in the summer of 1505, from a visit to his family at Mansfield, he was overtaken by a storm. The lightning struck the ground before his feet; he fell from his horse. "Holy Anne," he cried to the mother of the virgin, "help me, I will become a monk."

While he regretted the next day because he had made this vow, yet, without consultation with his father, he entered an Augustinian monastery. Here he endured voluntarily the severest hardships that he might subdue his temper and carnal disposition. He persevered to quite an extent in this work, and became a monk and priest.

He viewed the Catholic Church to be in startling contrast to what he concluded the Christian church should be. His Bible readings awakened in him a latent fire of religious fervor and devotion that could not be quieted. He visited Rome expecting to see a better condition of spirituality there than in the church in Germany, but this visit only intensified his conclusions that true Christianity was not being correctly represented by the leading officials of the church, and concluded that Paganism was largely represented by the church in Rome, and he found that the morals of the cardinals were a public jest.

The climax of his opposition to the religious conditions of the Catholic Church was reached when Leo the Tenth decided to make prominent his reign by building the grandest church in all the world, and decided upon the sale of indulgences as one of the means of raising the funds for the accomplishment of this object. A Dominican monk by the name of Tetzel was appointed to collect money and sell indulgences in Germany, and Luther determined to force a decision upon the legality and rightfulness of the sale of indulgences, and to bring this about he, on October 31, 1517, nailed ninety-five theses on the door of the church at Wittenberg, and called in question the pope's theory on the question. The only answer that came from the pope's representatives was that the pope was infallible; but this did not satisfy him. He appealed to the pope, but it was treated first as a communication coming from a "drunken German," but afterwards it was looked upon more seriously, and the demand was made by the pope that "the child of iniquity," the term he applied to Luther, should be executed. The pope finally issued a papal bull against him, in which he dominated Luther as "the wild boar who had broken into the Lord's vineyard." To this he replied, and burned the bull condemning him, and declared that "a storm had now burst, which would not end until the day of judgment." The pope finally excommunicated Luther with all his adherents, so that whatever authority he or his followers held as conferred by the Catholic Church was now abrogated.

NAME OF THE CHURCH

The title originated from what Luther was pleased to call the work, Evangelical, and the term Lutheran, as applied to the followers of Luther, by way of ridicule.

ONLY INFALLIBLE AUTHORITY

The Bible was recognized in the very beginning of his work as a reformer, as the only infallible authority. It was translated by Luther into German from the Latin. He ceased to believe in "an apostolically ordained priesthood," and yet that was the only authority he could claim that he ever held, and when he was excommunicated from the Catholic Church he certainly lost that.

ONE CAUSE OF OPPOSITION

By reason of a demand of the people, who were favorable to the reformation begun by Luther, to choose their own pastors, for an equitable adjustment of the tithes, emancipation from serfdom, and liberty to kill game, what is known as a peasant war existed, which brought the reformation into disrepute by many, they charging the war of Luther as the legitimate outcome of the trouble.

MARRIAGE

When he took the vows of a monk and priest he took the vow of celibacy but he concluded that this vow was not in harmony with the work of God, and hence instructed the ministry that it was their right to marry, and they should marry, and in accordance with this instruction took a wife by whom he had five children. He went even further than to advise the ministry that they should marry, for he consented to Phillip, Landgrave of Hesse, to take a second wife while still living with the first. In this writing of consent, as signed by Martin Luther, Melancthon, and others is the following which I extract:

As to what your highness says, that it is not possible for you to abstain from this impure life, we wish you were in a better state before God. . . .

We cannot at present advise to introduce publicly, and establish as a law in the New Testament that of the Old, which permitted to have more wives than one. . . .

But after all, if your highness, is fully resolved to marry a second wife, we judge it ought to be done secretly, . . . that is, that none but the person you shall wed and a few trusty persons know of the matter, and they, too, obliged to secrecy under the seal of confession. . . . So far as we do approve it, and in those circumstances only by us specified, for the gospel hath neither recalled nor forbid what was permitted in the law of Moses with respect to marriages. . . .

Your highness hath, therefore, in this writing, not only the approbation of us all, in case of necessity, concerning what you desire, but also the reflection we have made thereupon.—Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 358-362. (See also Martin Luther, p. 16.)

SYSTEM OF FAITH

The system of faith believed in by the Lutherans was formulated by Martin Luther and Melancthon, and presented to Charles V, in 1530, and was adopted by the diet of Augsburg, and is called the Augsburg Confession. This is divided into two parts, and twenty-eight articles, many of them similar to the articles adopted by the Episcopalians. The first twenty-one represent the religious ideas of the Reformers, and the last seven treat upon and give the main reason for protesting against the Catholic Church. They oppose communion in one kind; the celibacy of the clergy; private masses; auricular confession; legendary tradition; monastic vows; and the excessive powers of the church. They do not believe that good works are in any wise meritorious with regard to salvation. They believe that Christ died for all, but that those only who believe in him and endure in faith to the end will be saved. They believe in the election or predestination of the faithful. They believe that none are converted but by the prevailing efficacy of grace, and deny the power of free will before conversion. They believe in two sacraments, baptism and the Lord's supper, and that the real presence of the humanity of Jesus Christ is in the bread and wine in the communion. (Many, at the present time, do not believe in this latter idea.) They disbelieve in the adoration or invocation of the dead, or that there is any virtue in their relics. They condemn penances, and all works not imposed by the laws of Christianity. While they observe many of the festivals of the Catholic Church, yet they do not observe Lent. They believe that all worship should be conducted in a language to be understood by the worshipers. (See Milner's History of Religious Denominations of the World, pp. 63, 64.)

CALLING OR CHOOSING OF MINISTERS

Those who express a desire to enter the ministry are to be examined by two ministers appointed for that purpose, and if they find upon inquiry that such one or ones are in their estimation worthy, and have the natural qualifications, such as, a proper stature, health and strength, a musical voice, a knowledge of languages, and ability to debate all sides of a question they are recommended to be ordained. However, besides this examination they must prove themselves in agreement with the church in doctrines, and must each preach a sermon before those making the examination before they are ordained. They are then to be ordained at a public service presided over by a superintendent, who lays his hands upon him, followed by the laying on of the hands of six associate ministers, whom the superintendent authorizes to act, and with the laying on of hands they each pronounce the ordination prayer or vow.

Each individual church has the right, as in the Congregationalist Church, to govern itself. They hold synods, divisions of synods, and special conferences. They represent features found in the Catholic, Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregationalist churches in their discipline, and church government. A robe is worn by the minister in the services.

The duty of all parts of the Christian church seems to be to return to the use of shorter doctrinal creeds as tests of ecclesiastical, ministerial, and sacramental communion. This noble course the Lutheran Church has already virtually taken, by requiring assent only to the fundamental doctrines of the Augsburg Confession, together with an approval of our principles of government and worship.—Portraiture, pp. 55, 56.

The following are the leading doctrines of the Lutheran Church, as set forth in the Augsburg Confession, and adopted by the whole body of Lutherans in this country:

THE ONE GOD

1. The trinity of persons in the one God. That there is one divine essence, which is called, and is God, eternal, incorporeal, indivisible, infinite in power, wisdom and goodness; and yet there are three persons who are of the same essence and power, and are coeternal: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

DIVINITY OF JESUS CHRIST

That the Word, that is the Son of God, assumed human nature in the womb of the blessed Virgin Mary, so that two natures, human and divine, inseparately united into one person, constitute one Christ, who is true God and man.

UNIVERSAL DEPRAVITY OF THE RACE

That since the fall of Adam, all men who are naturally engendered, are born with a depraved nature, that is, without the fear of God, or confidence towards him, but with sinful propensities.

THE ATONEMENT

That the Son of God truly suffered, was crucified, died, and was buried, that he might reconcile the Father to us, and be a sacrifice not only for original sin, but also for all the actual sins of men. That he also sanctifies those who believe in him, by sending into their hearts the Holy Spirit, who governs, consoles, quickens, and defends them against the Devil and the power of sin.

JUSTIFICATION

That men cannot be justified before God by their own strength, merits, or works; but that they are justified gratuitously, for Christ's sake through faith; or, justification, more amply defined, is that forensic or judicial act of God, by which a believing sinner, in consideration of the merits of Christ is released from the penalty of the divine law, and is declared to be entitled to heaven.

NECESSITY OF A HOLY LIFE

That this faith must bring forth good fruits; and that it is our duty to perform those good works which God commanded, because he has enjoined them, and not in the expectation of thereby meriting justification before him.

DIVINE APPOINTMENT OF THE HOLY MINISTRY

That in order that we may obtain this faith the ministerial office has been instituted, whose members are to preach the gospel, and administer the sacraments (viz, baptism and the Lord's supper). For through the instrumentality of the word and sacraments as means of grace, the Holy Spirit is given, who in his own time and place, produces faith in those who hear the gospel message, viz, that God for Christ's sake, and not on account of any merit in us, justifies those who believe in Christ.

FINAL JUDGMENT AND REWARDS

That at the end of the world Christ will appear for judgment; that he will raise all the dead; that he will give to the pious and elect eternal life and endless joys, but will condemn wicked men and devils to be punished without end.—History of Denominations of the United States, pp. 337, 338.

THE CHURCH OF THE REFORMATION

She may be emphatically styled the church of the Reformation. She holds the grand doctrines of Christianity with fewer appended peculiarities than most denominations. With the Calvinistic she holds the graciousness of salvation; with the Congregationalist she believes that Christ tasted death for every man; with the Methodist she approves of regularly recurring protracted meetings; with the Episcopalian she occasionally employs a liturgy and forms of prayer; with the German Reformed she agrees in the instructions and confirmation of catechumens; and with all she unites in ascribing all the glory of our privileges on earth and hopes in heaven, to that Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.—Quarterly Register. History of Denominations in the United States, p. 340.

(To be continued.)

"I am among you as he that doth serve."—Jesus.

It is indeed gratifying to see the progress that has been made in the last decade. Applying to everyday life the law and principles of service. The church as a whole seems to be grasping more fully the true spirit underlying the whole philosophy of Christian truth. This fact is truly gratifying and comforting to those who for years have given their lives, with all their talents, for the advancement of the principles of divine justice, and it is without question very pleasing and acceptable to God. For, the man or the woman who fully understands the gospel message, who has partaken of the Spirit of Christ and who in a measure has been anointed with the oil of gladness, realizes that the truest, and most blessed life one can live, consists in serving the greatest number of people in the best possible manner. It is therefore obvious that no one has learned to live as he should until he is able to find true pleasure in the service of his kind. We should live for the purpose of making the world a fitter place in which to live, and hence to make life less difficult for each other.

What a joy comes of true service, and what a consolation there is in being conscious that we are the means of enlarging and purifying the lives of those with whom we mingle! Jesus said: "It is my meat to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." Ethically speaking, Jesus is simply saying: My life is sustained from day to day, it is supplied with the vitalizing forces, by reason of the labors and service my Father has enabled me to render to my less fortunate fellows.

Again we hear him saying: "I delight to do thy will, O my God!" That is simply that he delighted to do for others, that which they were unable to do for themselves. It was to this end that he sought to instruct his disciples when he condescended to the service of a slave for their personal comfort, when he washed their feet. He then sought to impress the lesson upon their minds by saying: "If I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought to wash one another's feet." The ethical philosophy of this statement is simply this: If your Teacher has condescended to the service of a slave for your comfort, you in turn should not shrink from any legitimate service for the comfort and eternal good of mankind.

It was said of Israel that when they went out to gather manna which God sent them daily, that, "he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack." The principle involved in this portion of history is simply this: Opulence is the law of the universe, and if each will perform his part, and render a true service, there will be plenty and to spare. Therefore, let us try to deduct a moral from this, that will enable us to make good in life. To the mind of the writer we have this moral: God has given us all things, and if we will rightly use them and serve wisely, there will be a plenty for all, but if I become selfish and refuse to consider the needs of others, I may lavish upon myself that which rightly belongs to another. Let me, therefore, learn how to serve my fellow men, and I will have learned how to best serve God.

Our chief object in life, our untiring effort, then, should be to serve mankind as Christ served them while on earth. We will then learn the real value, as well as the real pleasure, of life. Service is the the word that should underlie all our religious experiences. It should also be remembered that this word should be rightly understood, for a forced service is of but little or no worth to us. The real, vital and ethical principle of Christ's teaching is that of willing service—I must serve willingly if I am to meet with his divine approval. He left the courts of heaven, that he might come to the earth and here serve the unfortunate and the downtrodden ones. We therefore ought to rise to a higher level than a mere formal service with the hope of receiving a reward for it. We ought to have a sublimer purpose than simply trying to get into the place we call heaven. We should follow the Master and forsake the places of ease and comfort, that, thereby we may teach our fellow men how to live. Let us not therefore say that we serve because we have fears of missing heaven if we do not serve, but let us serve because we delight to do the will of God, and to bless mankind. Because we love to bless and uplift our less fortunate brothers; and because we are willing to make ourselves poor, that, thereby the multitude of mankind may be fed with the bread of life.

When we get the proper understanding of the word service we will begin to utilize our time and means for the glory of God in that all shall be used for the blessing of humanity. We will then consecrate every superfluous thing for the bringing about of that condition which will make possible the ushering in of the reign of peace; that the message that was borne by the angels to the shepherds on the Judean plains, that first Christmas Eve, of: "Peace on earth and good will unto men," might become a living reality.

The hastening time is here, let us therefore arise in the strength of our manhood and womanhood, and first of all consecrate ourselves, and then all that we possess, for the accomplishing of the Lord's work, in the redeeming and building up of Zion, the home of the pure in heart; that a people might be prepared for his coming. God will prosper us in our efforts if we labor in love. Let us therefore move forward with a pure heart, a steady hand, and a noble determination.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Books are embalmed minds,—Bovee.

It is easy in these days to lose courage and hope. It seems but a duty to make a careful analysis like this before losing heart one's self or spreading discouragement and unfaith among others. To those of little faith I submit my itemized count. We look back to our Civil War as the era of our Nation's new birth. We are living in a greater era to-day: a world is in rebirth.—William C. Gaunett, in Unity, (Chicago).

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE LIBERTY LOAN

[The suggestion has been made from various quarters that those Saints who desired to do so could well purchase Liberty Bonds to aid the Government in the prosecution of the war and to help the church at the same time, turn any surplus into the coffers of the church as tithing, surplus or offering. We present a recent appeal of Secretary of the Treasury, W. G. McAdoo, regarding the new Liberty Loan.—EDITORS.]

THE LIBERTY LOAN

For the purpose of

Equipping with arms, clothing and food our gallant soldiers who have been called to the field;

Maintaining our navy and our valiant tars upon the high seas;

Providing the necessary means to pay the wages of our soldiers and sailors and, if the bill now pending in the Congress passes, the monthly allowances for the support of their dependent families and to supply them with life insurance;

Constructing a great fleet of merchant vessels to maintain the line of communication with our brave troops in France, and to keep our commerce afloat upon the high seas in defiance of the German Kaiser and his submarines;

Creating a great fleet of airplanes, which will give complete supremacy in the air to the United States and the brave nations fighting with us against the German military menace; and for other necessary war purposes.

The Congress of the United States has authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to sell to the American people bonds of the United States bearing four per cent interest, with valuable tax exemptions, and convertible under certain conditions into other issues of United States bonds that may be authorized by the Congress. The official circular of the Treasury Department gives full details.

There is now offered to the American people a new issue of $3,000,000,000 of bonds to be known as the Second Liberty Loan. They will be issued in such denominations and upon such terms that every patriotic citizen will have an opportunity to assist the Government by lending his money upon the security of a United States Government bond.

It is essential to the success of the war and to the support of our gallant troops that these loans shall not only be subscribed, but oversubscribed. No one is asked to donate or give his money to the Government; but everyone is asked to lend his money to the Government. The loans will be repaid in full with interest at the rate of four per cent per annum. A Government bond is the safest investment in the world; it is as good as currency and yet better, because the Government bond bears interest and currency does not. No other investment compares with it for safety, ready convertibility into cash, and unquestioned availability as collateral security for loans in any bank in the United States.

People by thousands ask the Treasury constantly how they can help the Government in this war. Through the purchase of Liberty Bonds every one can help. No more patriotic duty can be performed by those who cannot actually fight upon the field of battle than to furnish the Government with the necessary money to enable it to give our brave soldiers and sailors all that they require to make them strong for the fight and capable of winning a swift victory over our enemies.

We fight, first of all, for America's vital rights, the right to the unmolested and unobstructed use of the high seas, so that the surplus products of our farms, our mines and our factories may be carried into the harbors of every friendly nation in the world. Our welfare and prosperity as a people depend upon our rights of peaceful intercourse with all the nations of the earth. To abandon these rights by withdrawing our ships and commerce from the seas upon the order of a military despot in Europe would destroy prosperity and bring disaster and humiliation upon the American people.

We fight to protect our citizens against assassination and murder upon the high seas while in the peaceful exercise of those rights demanded by international law and every instinct and dictate of humanity.

We fight to preserve our democratic institutions and our sovereignty as a nation against the menace of a powerful and ruthless military autocracy headed by the German Kaiser, whose ambition is to dominate the world.

We fight also for the noble idea of universal democracy and liberty, the right of the smallest and weakest nations equally with the most powerful to live and to govern themselves according to the will of their own people.

We fight for peace, for that just and lasting peace which agonized and tortured humanity craves and which not the sword nor the bayonet of a military despot but the supremacy of vindicated right alone can restore to a distracted world.

To secure these ends I appeal to every man and woman who resides upon the soil of free America and enjoys the blessings of her priceless institutions to join the League of Patriots by purchasing a Liberty Bond.

EXTINGUISH THE CIGARETTE

[The following is an editorial from the Deseret Evening News of late date. The News is the official newspaper of the Utah Mormon Church and while there are many doctrines and practices prevailing in that church which we must continue to oppose, we wish to commend them for the stand they are taking on the above subject and especially when so many newspapers are giving space to extension of the movement under discussion.—EDITORS.]

The Deseret News heartily commends the attitude of the Baptist convention now being held in this city in condemning the campaign for furnishing cigarettes to soldiers and in criticizing that portion of the local press which is promoting that campaign. The position of this paper has always been anti-cigarette and antitobacco; and on frequent recent occasions these columns have emphatically protested against the easy but injudicious generosity which contemplated supplying the Nation's defenders with the noxious weed in any form—most of all in the deadly form of the cigarette; and against any agencies, not excluding executive departments or high officials, that were so much as winking at, much less advocating, so manifest an injury to the moral, mental and physical welfare of the men in the Nation's service. As we regard it, it is bad enough for men or boys to have acquired the tobacco habit, without these mischievous efforts to encourage them in it; and it is infinitely worse to exalt the evil habit to such dignity as to cause those who have been hitherto free from it to look upon it as something to be cultivated and adopted. So far as Utah is concerned, we are quite within the truth in saying that one of the chief regrets and sorrows to tear the hearts of parents when their sons have responded to the Nation's call for men, has been the thought of their falling a prey to this miserable, useless and most injurious habit of cigarette smoking. One of the regrettable sights on the streets of this city since the troops have been assembled in considerable numbers at Fort Douglas, is the large proportion of young khaki-clad patriots between whose lips the stinking cigarette is held unashamed, and whose telltale fingers betray their slavery to the disgusting vice. There is much talk about keeping the soldiers clean, and strong, and sound, and efficient; and yet in the same breath the tobacco fund for their "solace" is advocated as a deserving movement to which the public is urged to contribute its spare dimes and dollars!

It is difficult to have patience with such shortsightedness and inconsistency, not to say hypocrisy. A confirmed cigarette smoker can hardly get a responsible position even in civil life; yet here is a program to make every military camp a veritable nicotine volcano and every inmate a nicotine slave.

The cigarette heart, when medically ascertained, and the stained fingers as visible evidence, have caused more young men to be turned down when subjected to the tests now required of applicants for any important place in the competitive business world, than almost any other single defect; and yet it is here proposed by unwise tobacco-fund promoters to provide the picked youth of the Nation so plentifully and freely with this insidious enemy of their souls that resistance to the temptation will almost subject a man to scorn. What will it avail the parents to plead with their boys against yielding to a practice so pernicious, if "public-spirited citizens" and others fill the air with appeals for money with which to fill the knapsacks of the soldiers with the poisonous stuff!

We are glad the Baptist convention has formulated a rebuke, and it is hoped that other organizations will do likewise. This war is not being waged in the interests of the cigarette factories; nor, let us pray, in the interest of the graveyards. Then the sooner the community awakens to the folly of pouring money into the coffers of the tobaccoists, and of hastening their victims to their coffins, the more creditable will be its patriotism and the more conspicuous its common sense.

RATS DESTROY $200,000,000 A YEAR

At a time when every grain of wheat and every pound of meat is expected to play as important a role in the winning of America's war as a grain of gunpowder, or a pound of steel when converted into cannon or shot, Doctor Edward W. Nelson, the noted biologist, points out, in a communication to the National Geographic Society, that rats are destroying more than $200,000,000 worth of foodstuffs and other property in the United States every twelve months, and that it requires the constant labor of 150,000 men to supply the food which these loathsome pests eat. A part of Doctor Nelson's communication is issued by the society as the following war geography bulletin from its Washington headquarters:

"Rats have been pests so long that they have been taken for granted by the public, much as is the weather or the forces of nature. While people are often painfully aware of individual losses, they are unaware of the vast total which these individual sums aggregate and the consequent need of community action against the authors of such far-reaching economic drains.

"Denmark, one half the size of South Carolina, estimated her losses in 1907 at about $3,000,000. The same year the losses in the rural districts of Great Britain and Ireland, not counting those in towns and on ships, were estimated at $73,000,000, and a capital of about $10,000,000 was profitably employed there in the industry of supplying means for their destruction. In 1904 the losses in France were computed at $40,000,000.

"The United States has nine times the combined area of the three countries mentioned, and investigations indicate that the direct annual losses here undoubtedly equal, if they do not exceed, $200,000,000, with a great additional sum in indirect losses, including the effect on the public health and commerce from the diseases carried by the rats, and the necessary expenditures in combatting them. The foregoing figures are based on pre-war prices and are vastly greater under present valuations.

"In Europe, about 1907, after careful investigation, the estimated average annual loss caused by each rat was computed to equal $1.80 in Great Britain, $1.20 in Denmark, and $1 in France. In the United States the average is undoubtedly much larger than in any of the countries named, especially at present high prices of food and other merchandise.

"There is no doubt that a very large number of rats subsist wholly on garbage and waste which is of no value, but the damage caused by rats in numerous places amount to many dollars each year; probably $5 a year would not be an overestimate for the average loss caused by each rat living in a dwelling, hotel, restaurant, or other place having access to food supplies.

"Assuming, roughly speaking, that as estimated the rat population in the United States is 50,000,000 for the cities and 150,000,000 for the rural districts, it will require the destruction of property by each rat of only a little more than one fourth of a cent a day to make the aggregate of the great sum estimated as destroyed by these pests yearly in this country.

"Taking the average yearly returns on a man's labor in agriculture, as shown by the census of 1910, it requires the continuous work of about 150,000 men, with farms, agricultural implements, and other equipment, to supply the foodstuffs destroyed annually by rats in the United States. In addition, rats destroy other property, mainly of agricultural origin, the production of which requires the work of about 50,000 men."

SOLDIER AND SAILOR INSURANCE

The soldiers' and sailors' war insurance bill, the first step in Government insurance, and what is pronounced the most generous effort on the part of any nation to care for the dependents of its fighting men, was passed by the lower House of Congress Thursday night, September 13, by a vote of 319 to nothing.

The bill as passed by the House follows almost exactly the lines laid down in the plan of Army insurance worked out by Secretary McAdoo and his coadjutors and embodied in a draft of a bill approved by President Wilson and presented to Congress for action.

The press of the country seems to think that the unanimous approval given to the bill by the lower House of Congress is thoroughly representative of the feeling of the whole country.

Secretary McAdoo's comment was as follows:

"The unanimous passage by the House of Representatives of the bill for the compensation and insurance of our soldiers and sailors is a distinct triumph for justice and humanity. It is the most conspicuous and advanced step ever taken by any nation for the protection of its soldiers and sailors and their dependents. The prompt passage of this bill by the Senate will satisfy the heart and conscience of uplifted America."

KEEPING COOL HEADS

... We have heard of numerous instances where brethren, even church officers, could not discuss the solution of the most ordinary problems without the development of cranial heat, followed by pedal frigidity. The one usually accompanies the other, especially if there is some real work to do. The symptoms develop in choirs, ladies' aids, Bible-school meetings, church-board meetings, preachers' meetings, and anywhere that the Lord's work demands cool heads, warm and generous hearts and active feet. The fall of ministers in Europe may be frequent, but what of the fall of ministers in the churches of America that can be traced alone to the disease of which this article treats?

James knew well human nature when he warned against the power of the overheated tongue: "So the tongue also is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how much wood [the marginal rendering is 'how great a forest'] is kindled by a small fire! And the tongue is a fire: the world of iniquity among our members is the tongue, which defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the wheel of nature, and is set on fire by hell. For every kind of beasts and birds, of creeping things and things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed by mankind: but the tongue can no man tame; it is a restless evil, it is full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we the Lord and Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made after the likeness of God: out of the same mouth cometh forth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be."

CONSIDER THE ENGINE

Before treating on efficiency in the church, we have taken considerable pains to observe efficiency in its original lair. We have studied the heads and management of large industrial and financial concerns. We have almost universally observed that the men who handle big things are, first of all, men who keep cool. A one-horse engine usually makes more noise and develops more heat from friction than one of the great 1,000-horse-power engines that move so precisely that there is neither rattle nor heat.

Oh, Brother Preacher, learn to keep cool. We know it is hard to do, especially when Sister Sizzle comes, with her eyes snapping like rockets and her tongue performing the ordinary duties of a whip-cracker, and her head the temperature of a hot stove-lid. But, whatever else you do, keep your head cool. Her sudden spasm of heat may kindle in you a fire that will consume the foundations of your ministry. Smile, if you see something about which to smile. If you do not see anything about which to smile, then proceed to see something. Really, Sister Sizzle is quite entertaining, if you can only see it. Anyhow, smile. Just as perspiration cools the body smiles cool the head.

A GOOD FIRE-EXTINGUISHER

A soft, well-controlled voice and an unperturbed countenance are the greatest fire-extinguishers ever invented. You know that word in the Bible about "a soft answer turneth away wrath." We wonder if it was not placed there with a purpose quite as serious as some of the other injunctions which we vociferate so freely. Perhaps it was put there for the special use of preachers when Sister Sizzle comes.

There seems to be only about so much sacred heat in the world. When the heat gets into the head, it seems to leave the heart, where it is so badly needed. So is the converse true: that when heat is kept out of the head, it is much more liable to develop in the heart. Could so desirable a thing as cool heads and warm hearts be developed throughout all our great brotherhood, we believe the remainder of the church-efficiency problem would soon be solved.—Cecil J. Sharp, in The Christian Standard.

Preventable fire is more than a private misfortune. It is a public dereliction. At a time like this of emergency and of manifest necessity for the conservation of national resources, it is more than ever a matter of deep and pressing consequence that every means should be taken to prevent this evil.—Woodrow Wilson. A statement made by President Wilson for the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

"Alcohol ought to explode in the enemies trenches, not in people's stomachs."—Doctor Haven Emerson.

District Presidents and Organizers Take Notice

The general president of the Woman's Auxiliary, is planning a trip through Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, and perhaps Michigan. This will be about October 14 to 31, or later. She would like to get in touch with all who need help in the auxiliary work in their districts, or locals, in these States. The object of the trip is to introduce the work where desired, explain its workings, its departments, build up or stimulate what is already begun, organize districts more fully, train workers, and find leaders.

As the general association has no fund available for traveling purposes, it will be necessary for each district or local where a stop is made to contribute to a fund for expenses, as well as to care for the president while she is there.

We hope the men who are district presidents will take notice of this announcement, and if the Woman's Auxiliary work in their localities needs attention, understand that this is the time to obtain the help you need. All who would like to have their districts organized, or their work planned for them, or a better understanding of the general aims and purposes of the woman's organization of the church, in the States mentioned, will please write at once to the general president, stating the time you prefer to have her with you, whether or not you will be willing to bear your share of the expense necessary, and giving all needed information as to how to reach you, etc.

If this trip proves a success, others along the same line will be planned reaching into other fields, so that our work may be better organized, and better understood by the church at large than it is at the present time.

MRS. LULA M. SANDY,
General President.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, 3431 East Sixtieth Street.

Attention, Organizers

The general officers of the Woman's Auxiliary are attempting to bring about better organization in their department of the church work. In each district of the church we expect to have an organizer, who will be our official representative in that district. Some of these have been appointed according to the new constitution, and others will be appointed as rapidly as we can find the right women recommended by the ministers in charge of the districts.

A letter of instruction will be mailed in a few days to all organizers. This letter is intended to help them understand their work, suggest plans, and be of general help to them. Among other things will be emphasized the following instructions:

Each organizer has her own particular territory, which is the district as laid off and recognized by the church authorities. No organizer should leave her district and assume the work in another's territory. Please do not go out of your district and attempt to do the work assigned to another in another territory. There is plenty to do in your own district.

In addition to the organizers, we have general field workers who are at present, the members of the executive committee of the general association. These field workers work under the direction of the president, and may be sent wherever needed. They are sent out to introduce the work, explain it in all of its departments, build up what is started, organize where needed, and find and train leaders everywhere for our woman's work.

In rare instances a district organizer may be asked to take the place of a general field worker where no field worker is available for a certain and important mission. When a call comes in for help, and no general field worker is near enough to respond, the president may direct some live-wire district organizer to attend to the matter. However, no organizer should take work outside her district upon herself, or even respond to invitation to do so, without being directed by the president of the general auxiliary. Thus we will avoid confusion and overlapping of authority.

Let us all work together in harmony and order, "preferring one another in honor." Let us learn to think, plan, and work more like our church brethren do, respecting each officer in her position, and "giving honor to whom honor is due." Thus we will build up an organization with efficiency and systematic action of which to be proud.

When in doubt as to your duty or privileges, write the president.

With kindest wishes for the success of all good endeavor,
Your fellow worker,

LULA M. SANDY.

The Orioles in Camp at Holden, Missouri

The Holden reunion may have been held without the Oriole girls and it may have been enjoyed in a way, but we are very sure that it could not have been the success that it was if the Oriole girls had not contributed as they did to the comfort and entertainment of the camp.

The girls were called together after an afternoon session, about sixty responding. Mrs. J. A. Sayles (a sister of Brother J. A. Gunsolley) from Knobnoster, was elected Camp Monitor. Chairmen of various committees were appointed and as a result the following program was carried out:

The devotional committee, with Miss Pearl Redfield as chairman, arranged a morning hike and prayer meeting with a camp breakfast, but when the appointed morning came, there came also gray skies and a downpour of rain. A phone call informed us that the hike would have to be abandoned but that the prayer meeting would be held in a large auxiliary tent, just on the edge of the camp. It was inspiring, we assure you, to see as we neared the tent, about thirty Orioles assembled, most of them in uniform. They were seated on bales of straw or loose straw strewn on the ground and were in the attitude of reverent worship, for the opening prayer was being offered. The testimonies were simple and sincere, and breathed of consecration and humility. The rain continued to pour, but after the service, nothing daunted, the girls gathered sticks, cobs, straw and soon had a very satisfactory fire built just on the inside of the big tent. Never was a breakfast better, if hunger and fun score anything. Later in the week the devotional committee requested all Orioles to attend a morning prayer meeting in a body and in uniform.

What proved to be a very necessary feature to the success of the reunion was the large academy building recently bought by the church, which is being repaired and fitted up for a home for the aged. This building was used by the Woman's Auxiliary for children's meetings, kindergarten, and problem meetings. The Oriole girls had been given the use of a large room about 25 by 35 feet. This room was very comfortably and tastefully fitted up with couches, chairs and piano and decorated with the Oriole colors. More than one weary mother, aged or sick sister (for we had a few who succumbed to the effect of the heat and the change of water) gratefully asked, "What would we have done without this room and its comforts?"

From time to time the reunion committee of whom D. J. Krahl was chairman, expressed its appreciation of the service rendered by the girls through the work of the service committee with Miss Alta Beebe, chairman. When the reunion committee counted its expenses, money on hand, etc., it very promptly and gratefully gave credit to those who gave of their services so freely in the work of kitchen and dining room. The Oriole girls, assisted by the young men of the camp, waited on the tables besides paying for all their meals. Other services were freely given by the girls.

The chairman of the social committee, Miss Lourrissa Dillon, and her workers, arranged for a banquet given in the dining hall, by the Holden Orioles to the visiting Orioles. The girls were generous with their invitations and many who were not Orioles were present. A dainty and delicious lunch was served followed by a number of earnest and inspiring speeches with a little humor mixed in for variety and enjoyment. Among the invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Tanner, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, Mrs. J. A. Gardner and Mr. and Mrs. W. S. MacRae.

There were many other Orioles who participated in reunion work in various parts of the country. We would like to have accounts of your activities. Excel this one, if you can!

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

Woman's Auxiliary Year Book

We have a few numbers of the Woman's Auxiliary Year Book on hand and would be pleased to place them in the hands of our workers. The supply at the Herald Office is exhausted but the general secretary will supply the demand as long as the number we have on hand lasts. Price 25 cents.

We have a standing Year Book committee which will be prepared to report on a new edition of the book at the April convention.

What is Your Child Learning?

(The sixth of a series of articles on the care of young children. Sent out by the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.)

Much of a child's earliest education, often the most valuable and most enduring part, is that which is unconsciously acquired at home, not by precept or teaching but by imitation. From the earliest beginnings of learning the child is copying the sights and sounds about him.

Thus he learns to speak his first words, and from this time until he begins his formal education in school, and indeed through his entire childhood, he is imitating the language, manners, and emotions of the older people about him. His behavior and opinions are undoubtedly to some extent the direct result of this copying of his elders. He will repeat the tricks of speech and manner which they constantly employ.

If a child lives among people whose language is correct and agreeable, whose manners are pleasant, who show always a thoughtful consideration for others and whose behavior is gentle and kindly, he unconsciously acquires similar ways. The habit of courtesy comes not alone nor chiefly from direct instruction, but from imitation. If a child sees that his elders are habitually courteous in their association with each other, if kindness and consideration for each other are the habits of the home, these qualities will inevitably stamp themselves upon the child. Good manners are an invaluable asset to every person, but good manners have their root and foundation in fine qualities of mind and heart, and only the constant daily exercise of them will help give the children that charm of manner which is such a delight in persons of every age. The opposite qualities are likewise imitated and help to produce another sort of child.

Clearly, therefore, parents have an enormous responsibility in molding and shaping a child into the kind of man he is to be, for these early lessons in conduct and manners are probably never quite eradicated. Men who as children were accustomed to hearing uncouth language still lapse in manhood into this fault, however well educated they may have become, and the same is true of physical mannerisms and even of the mental attitude. If a child grows up among people who are scolding, faultfinding, complaining, or quarrelsome, he is almost sure to show a tendency to these qualities, however much he may learn to abhor them in later life.

About Our Boys

I am glad that we are to have an organization for our boys. As I travel about in the interests of the Woman's Auxiliary work of the church, I am constantly being questioned upon this subject. The query comes, "What shall we do with our boys?" and I shall be glad to be able to answer it helpfully.

The boys are ready for organization, and while it is not, primarily, a part of our Woman's Auxiliary work, as mothers we are all deeply concerned in the matter. I shall be pleased to be able to help the work along, when the plans are fully enough matured, that we can go about it intelligently.

Yours for every good movement,

LULA M. SANDY.

Asked at a Reunion Auxiliary Meeting

Question: How can wives help with church finances?

Reply, by Sister R. T. Cooper: Most Latter Day Saint wives are home-makers, and their duties and cares prevent them from being money-earners. The husbands are the producers of funds for the family. The question then: "How can such wives help with the church finances?" is a pertinent one, and may be answered, partially, thus: "Principally, by assisting their husbands in the saving and wise application of family resources, and by influencing them to observe the financial law of the church."

This assisting may be done in a variety of ways, according to the different circumstances and characteristics of each home. The doctrine of domestic conservation of resources is just now a very popular one.

Some men are naturally tithe-payers, and freely contribute to the church funds. Unhappily, in some instances, such men have wives that are so naturally the opposite, that what the husbands would do, the wives oppose and prohibit. In those cases, the plain duty of the wives is to cultivate the art and spirit of giving!

Some men are not inclined to give, and even oppose and prohibit giving on the part of the wife. A case of this kind needs prayerful consideration and extreme patience on the part of the wife who longs to do her full duty. The Lord rewards for the good intentions and desires as surely as he punishes the overt evil act; he will give just credit, and in time the husband may be brought to see his duty in its true light.

Some men are unwilling to pay to the church funds, but allow their wives to do as they choose with certain amounts of funds. The wives, in these instances, should do as they see the church laws provide, with all the means at their command which can be spared from real necessity.

Again, some men are indifferent, only. These should receive all the encouragement and patient urging that the wives can consistently offer, in order that the family observance of the law may be by the mutual desire, or at least mutual consent, of both the husband and the wife.

Where a wife is earning money of her own, her duty is clear.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Are We Reaching Zion's Conditions?

As it has been some time since I last contributed to your sacred pages, I thought I would let you know of my whereabouts. Since last writing you, I have had the pleasure of attending General Conference which was certainly a great feast to me. I also took in the future home of the faithful Saints and found things much better than I had expected, but that is a good way to be disappointed. While there I met with many of the dear Saints, and I do not think there are any better Saints to be found. I now have a longing for the time when I shall be able to dwell intimately among that class of people. I made my home at Order of Enoch House, and that is the first time in all my travels that I ever went into a hotel where I did not see a spittoon, a cigar, or a pipe. A chapter was read in the Bible, and a prayer given every morning. Blessing was asked at every meal. I was also informed there were three brothers in Independence that were running grocery stores, and they never handled tea, coffee, or tobacco in any form. That is what I call keeping the Word of Wisdom and it goes to show that if we choose to obey God's word, we can compete with anything. The trouble is, we so often think that God is mistaken. We often hear it said, "I have to handle tobacco, or I would lose my trade." I cannot think that way, for I do not think that the all-wise Father would tell me or any other man or woman to do a thing that they could not do, and would lose by so doing. The Master said to seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness, which means nothing more than to obey his laws and if we do that all the other things will be added.

While I was there I made the statement that if the celestial glory was not any better than there in Independence, I would be willing to give my all to be permitted to live forever under that influence. But when I got home my attention was called to the song given by Brother Joseph Luff. After carefully reading it over and seeing what a strong rebuke the Lord gave to those there, I said within my heart, "God help us poor souls on the outside," for I know full well if those in that place shall hardly escape, there is not much show for those on the outside, unless we get right down in sackcloth and ashes and strive to come up higher which God in his mercy has commanded us so many times to do.

As he told us through that song by Brother Luff: "Be not slow my call to answer, Few the moments that remain." Again, "See ye not the clouds portentous?

Note ye not the world's alarm?
Nations to their ruin hastening,
Self their interest, flesh their arm?"

And we can surely see this on every hand. The good Master over nineteen hundred years ago, told us that this would be one of the signs of his coming. A short time ago I was talking with a man from France. He was describing the conditions over there, and he said it was something terrible to gaze up into the heavens, and see those great Zeppelins and airplanes and the streaks of fire and clouds of smoke which came from them. What could he do that he has not done to warn us to prepare for that great day that Paul describes as sudden destruction? If we are not in darkness, that will not happen to us. Let us, as the people of God, do as the poet has said, Shake off the coals from our garments and arise in the strength of the Lord. We never can do this as long as we follow the ways of the world.

We are told to come out of the world, and not be partakers of their evil deeds. I meet with so many who try to excuse themselves and say that they must compromise a little in order to win them to Christ. I want to say, dear Saints, that is the Evil Spirit, trying to lead astray. Jesus and the apostles never compromised with any man, or set of men.

I went to one place to open up the work and as soon as I got there, they began to tell me what to preach, so I would not offend them. I told them if they did not want me to say anything to offend them, the best thing they could do was not to have me preach at all, because when I got up to preach, I did just as the Lord had said. If I did not receive the Spirit, I was not to preach, but if I did, I also did just as the Doctrine and Covenants told me to do, take no thought of what I should say, that it would be given to me what to say by the Holy Ghost. Whatever is given me, I say, not caring who it hits. I know that there are those in the ministry that do not do this, that seem to think a man must write his sermons down and take notes so as to know what to talk about, but if that time ever comes to me, I shall go home and there I will stay, for I will not want any better evidence that God has forsaken me than that.

I believe those promises the Lord said to the church are in force just as much to-day as they ever were. And his commands also that the elders are to conduct all meetings as they are led by the Spirit, and not as some one tells them to. If we will only live closer to God and obey his commands we will receive more of that Spirit that will bring all things to our remembrance, whatever he has said to us or whatever we have read. I cannot believe as some do, that just because Paul said that God had called the foolish, or as we are told in Doctrine and Covenants 34:4, that he had called the unlearned to thrash the nations by the power of his Spirit, that he, God, intended him to stay that way, because that would be contradictory to the Bible where we are told to study to show ourselves approved. Neither do I believe that just reading will do, because reading is not studying, but studying is reading, and the man that is called to represent God and thinks that all he has to do is read over a chapter and then get up in the pulpit and think God is going to fill his mouth with words, will be sadly left and soon find himself among those the Master speaks of, "Many are called, but few are chosen." Neither do I believe that any man is to tell me what I shall study. The Master has promised to send the Spirit to me or any other minister of his, that will guide me or them into all truth, and whatever that Spirit wants me to study I will be so led, or as Job said, "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." But of course if we mix with the world we need not expect those blessings. That is what is killing many spiritually to-day; the picture shows and other worldly pleasures, and even among the ministry I find those who are going to the picture shows, although we are supposed to be an example to others. Some will say there is no harm in them, but I claim that anything that leads up to harm is a harm, and I know of some places where the priesthood have advised or set the example for the Saints to go by going themselves. And now when an elder goes there, some of the Saints are at the movies instead of the preaching service.

Zion must be redeemed and that by purchase, and the church needs all those nickels. I claim that it is this worldliness that is bringing or helping to bring strife and malice in the church. When I see brothers or sisters that cannot argue on some points in the word of God, without allowing the spirit of malice to take hold of them just because a brother or sister cannot see things just as they see them, it proves to me that the other spirit has got possession of them, for the Spirit of God comes with peace, joy, and long-suffering. In the Psalms we are told to debate our cause with our neighbor. Paul says, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." How are we going to do this unless we can come together and reason with one another and prove by the scriptures which one is in harmony with God's word? Then if the brother shows me where I am wrong, I should feel just as thankful as though I had proved that he was wrong. We are all the one body or all belong to that body of Christ, which is the church, and if we get a sliver in our foot it matters not which hand pulls it out, as long as it is removed. Until we get in this condition we never can come to that standard that Paul speaks of in this Corinthian letter, I wish to God you were beseeching them that—"there be no divisions among you." There is division among us now, and the only way this will ever be overcome will be to come together as brothers and sisters should, and reason together out of God's word.

I pray God will hasten the time when we can have the school of the prophets and all go out and preach the same thing. Let us take the admonition given through the voice of the Spirit last April through Brother Luff:

"Years eternal greet my vision,
Think ye yours outstretch the span?"

No, ours never will outstretch God's plan. So let us get together and all try to teach the same thing.

Again, some places I find those who are most anxious to get into this war. Is that what we have been told to do? It is not so stated in my Doctrine and Covenants. I am told there to lift up the standard of peace, and that the wicked will slay the wicked, but it looks to me as though some of the Saints wanted a hand in helping to slay the wicked. Then again some have gone to the other extreme and say they will not go to war. How unreasonable that is. Does not the Scripture tell us that we must be subject to principalities and powers? When a foreigner comes over here and becomes a citizen of the United States does he not swear that he will take up arms if called upon to defend this country, it matters not whether he be a free-born citizen or naturalized. The laws are just as binding on one as the other and it is our duty to obey the laws of our country. But he has told us to lift up the standard of peace and if we do that who knows but what God will see to it that we are not called upon? If we are anxious to go as Baalam was, then the Lord may do with us as he did with him. He let him go and he suffered loss. Some say they were afraid they would be drafted so they enlisted. They seem to think they can see dangers ahead that the Lord could not see, or as that song says,

"Scent ye dangers I discern not?
Catch ye sounds that 'scape my ears?"

No, indeed; God is watching over us, and the man or woman who obeys his commands will come out victorious. The same God that ruled in the days of Daniel is ruling over this world to-day, and if his people will only go according to his counsel they will come out victorious in the end.

I am at Wauconda, holding forth with good success and am getting more calls than I can possibly fill. Would to God that more laborers could be sent to this great harvest field of the Lord. I was called to Creston, British Columbia, on August 19 to preach the funeral sermon of Brother and Sister Boadway's only son.

Ever praying for the success of the dear old HERALD, I will remain as ever,

Your brother and colaborer for the one faith,
ROBERT NEWBY.

From the Far-Off Southland

A little more than two years ago, accompanied by my wife, I called at New Zealand en route to Australia. Now we are homeward bound. It was in 1902 that Elder D. E. Tucker and myself were appointed by the General Conference to labor in New Zealand; the carrying out of the appointment was associated with hardships, sacrifice, and some suffering. But I have no complaint to make concerning anything that has ever fallen to my lot as a soldier for Christ in connection with the church. It is pleasing to note that since our pioneer efforts, some progress has been made by the church in this colony.

Because of the minds of the people having been poisoned for many decades by the representatives of the Utah church, one who claims to be a Latter Day Saint is regarded as a believer in the obnoxious and soul-destroying doctrines of the American polygamist, Brigham Young. It will require time to correct the evil that has been done. The emissaries of the polygamous church have had a clear field, the future belongs to the Reorganized church.

The little branch in Dunedin has battled for many years against adverse forces, but a number of souls have been won to the fullness of the cause of Christ. Elder Robert Hall, president of the branch, the first fruit of our labors in New Zealand, has stood as a pillar, and through him and the supplemental efforts of others the church in organized form has had representation in this far-off southern city. Dunedin is looked upon as conservative. To me the high hedges surrounding the homes were symbolical of an existing conservative spirit. Here I preached a number of times in Odd Fellows' Hall, the regular meeting place of the branch, and held a few priesthood meetings and round table discussions. The attendance at the hall was graced by the presence of a number of nonmembers. The weather in Dunedin, while we were there was cold and much rain fell, which is not unusual in August. Snow was frequently seen on the hills about the city. But such weather should not be unexpected forty-six degrees south of the equator. One night the aurora australis was most beautiful, for hours the heavens being illuminated by bright and vari-colored lights.

Elder H. W. Savage and I visited Kaitaugata, a coal-mining town that was awakened fifteen years ago by a controversy that developed between the Church of Christ and Elder D. E. Tucker, and myself. I was pleased to visit old friends, a number of invitations to accept of their hospitality being honored. One preaching service was held. All seemed interested in the soul-cheering claims of the church, and we trust good was accomplished.

Elder Savage has labored faithfully and has rendered good service since coming to Maoriland. Many friends have been made, much church literature distributed, and aid given directly and indirectly to the branch. He is desirous of laboring among the Maoris, the majority of whom live in the North Island. It is to be hoped the way may be prepared for them to be blessed through the ministrations of the gospel at his hands. These people are an interesting, and I may say, a charming race; possess a fine physique, and in many respects, if not all, equal the whites when given an equal chance. What an opportunity for the church to send its representatives to these people, and soon to many nations with the wondrous provisions of the divine will! How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of those who bring glad tidings of great joy! May the church give full report to those who have been and those who shall be honored with the calling of extending Zion's work in foreign fields. All the church should rejoice to take part in every possible way in sustaining the church that the light of the gospel may shine in every land. The church in Australia has almost doubled in numerical strength since 1908.

Perhaps no country in the world has more arbitration tribunals, boards for granting awards in cases of industrial disputes, and legislation relating to troubles between employer and employed in Australia, and yet I am doubtful if any country has as many strikes. At present a great strike which started in New South Wales by many of the unions challenging the government's action in introducing the card system among its employees in its railway workshops, has spread to other states and is causing much trouble. Cable news does not reach us in New Zealand because of strict censorship. Train service is affected, foodstuffs are perishing, and many ships are unable to leave port. This is the sixth week of the strike. No government can safely afford to yield its constituted authority to a class, whether lawyers, unions, preachers, capitalists, or farmers.

My soul is made joyful in the thought that I am privileged to have a part in bearing the cross of Christ. The Lord is the strength of my life. By his grace I have been set free to behold his majesty. I do not ask for burdens to be made lighter or easier, but that I may at that time when we shall see him "face to face" feel that my life was not different in suffering, labor, love, and sacrifice from the life of the One with whom I truly hope to be associated. The joy of my life comes from my understanding of God. I will worship him, in the enjoyment of health, or under the hand of affliction; in distress my voice shall ascend to the Lord, my Deliverer, in the midst of prosperity I shall rejoice that more is in my power wherewith to build up the kingdom of God. Never has the Lord forgotten his people. Let trust be fully reposed in God, his counsel honored, his servants upheld, and his law obeyed. With Zion arising on foundations that are dear to us, who can stand back and not join in joyful service in her cause? The Lord has spoken in these latter days and ushered in the latter-day dispensation of the gospel that man may more truly worship God and be collaborators with him.

When in Australia I ordained Ralph Butterworth to the office of elder. Ralph is the eldest son of our beloved Cornelius A. Butterworth, and is a school-teacher by profession. My heart is cheered to see the young men of the church following in the footsteps of their fathers. I am equally impressed by the great work yet to be undertaken by the daughters of the church.

Our steamer is timed to leave Auckland next week, its ports of call being Suva, Fiji, and Honolulu; then by another steamer to San Francisco.

With faith in the final triumph of the church, I am,

PAUL M. HANSON.

Resolve to cultivate a cheerful spirit, a smiling countenance, and a soothing voice. The sweet smile, the subdued speech, the hopeful mind, are earth's most potent conquerors, and he who cultivates them becomes a very master among men.—Hubbard.

From Here and There

Sister Effie J. Denton, of Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, would like to hear from any of the Saints in the vicinity of that place or Prince Albert who do not belong to a Religio home class, or do not have the privilege of attending Religio. She is home class superintendent for the local.

A committee of fifteen are going to attempt to raise the sum of $1,100 to pay off the indebtedness of the branch, incurred on account of installation of improvements the past year. They will seek to have the entire amount paid in by November 1. The resident membership of Lamoni is about twelve hundred.

The catalogue of the Chicago Musical College lists Miss Margaret Wickes and her half sister, Miss Minna Mae Lewis, both of Lamoni, as members of the faculty. Sister Wickes is in both the piano and vocal department, while Sister Lewis is in the school of expression, both being on the Chatauqua circuit in past seasons. Sister Wickes was in charge of the piano department at Graceland at one time.

During the State Fair at Des Moines, Iowa, the Saints conducted a stand on the grounds and netted a total of $520. They had crowds beyond capacity most of the time. One brother tells of people standing ten deep in front of the place, waiting to be served. Next year they expect to have an enlarged place. The extraordinary attendance, occasioned partially by the influx at Camp Dodge, perhaps had a good effect this year.

In his suggestions for Religio programs, Brother J. A. Gunsolley, editor of the Senior Religio Quarterly, suggests for the seventh lesson in the current issue that a Library Program be put on. He adds that material may be had from the secretary of the General Library Commission, Vernon A. Reese, 3833 West Park Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. We have seen the material and believe it should be very helpful. We would enjoy being present when it is given somewhere.

At a recent business meeting of the Lamoni Branch, four young men were recommended for ordination to the office of priest and the recommendation concurred in. The stake conference at Hiteaman on the 20th and 21st will need to take action before ordination. They were: Frank McDonald, Alonzo Jones, R. S. Salyards, jr., and B. J. Stevenson. Brother Salyards is in the army at Camp Dodge and Brethren McDonald and Jones are liable to draft. Brother Stevenson resides five miles west of Lamoni, where the Saints meet in a schoolhouse for Sunday school and preaching services, the speakers being sent from Lamoni.

In a recent personal letter from Elder W. H. Greenwood, from Manchester, England, he says the latest development is forshadowing harder times than ever. There is to be another effort made to gather the man power of the nation, irrespective of position—ministerial or otherwise, to assist in some way the work of the nation. He characteristically expresses himself: "However, we shall continue to do the best we can in the interest of the work, and if under any circumstances we should be called upon to assist in the work of the war, we shall enter upon that work whole-heartedly, in the cause of liberty and justice."

The Junior Religio Quarterly, of which Brother C. B. Woodstock is editor, begins with the present quarter the study of church history. It goes back to the Dark Ages for a few lessons and presents the situation that existed prior to the coming forth of the latter-day glory. The boyhood of Joseph Smith follows, and the quarter's lessons end with the organization of the church in 1830. It should prove of special interest to the younger young people in the Religio, though, as the editor often says, it is impossible to adapt such material to the needs of the small children. May the day soon come when we can have suitable material along this line for the smaller children as well.

Brother G. J. Waller returned from Honolulu on September 25, and has resumed charge of the San Francisco Branch. His personal address is 1436 Taylor Street. The church is located at corner of Danvers Street and Casselle Avenue, where services are held as follows: Sunday—Sunday school at 9.45 a. m.; preaching service at 11, Religio at 6.15 p. m., and preaching at 7.45. Wednesday—prayer service at 7.45 p. m. A number of our sailor lads should avail themselves of the opportunity to attend services there when on shore leave, as well as any others located there. Take Eighteenth Street car and get off at Danvers, walk one block. The church is in sight from the car.

Brother E. F. Shupe says it is two hundred miles from Littleton to Wray, Colorado, but the distance is seemingly short when one has a flivver. He and wife and Ammon White and family left Littleton and Denver on Thursday morning, arriving at Wray in time for the last number of the Religio program. The business sessions were reported as pleasant and harmonious and the other services of the best. The attendance the largest in the history of the district. The church was too small for the Saturday evening service and an overflow meeting was held in the tent owned by the Wray Branch. Sunday the brethren secured the auditorium of the public school building, which seated over three hundred, which was filled at all the Sunday services.

DODSON, MONTANA, September 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: A successful new opening has just been made at Lost Lake, Montana, an inland post office, twenty miles north of Dodson, by Elder Jott Bronson, with four adult baptisms and others near the kingdom. The good will of almost the entire community, splendid interest, everybody thinking, and many earnest appeals for Brother Bronson to return are some items in the results.

Fifteen meetings were held in a tent belonging to a Dunkard minister who is homesteading here. This spring after Brother Freie and I had taken our homestead, Rev. Grabill fitted up the tent with benches and called the settlers together for the purpose of organizing a union Sunday school. We went over, put our shoulder to the wheel and proceeded to push. In the active work that followed we prayed often for divine guidance, not only in teaching but in everything that was said or done. Though I know I have many faults and imperfections, yet the Lord blessed the feeble efforts made to pave the way for the preaching of his word. When Elder Bronson came, the use of the tent was gladly, yes, almost eagerly given. That some of the eagerness evaporated after the first few nights goes without saying, but the reverend gentleman is to be excused, since it was his first experience with our people. His wonder and amazement began the first night and continued to grow in jumps and bounds until his face became such a picture of conflicting emotions, that it was difficult for me to keep from smiling. Then he began staying after church to argue, and when Brother Bronson would get the best of him, it was really amusing to hear him say, as he invariably would, "Yes, yes, all right, we'll just leave it that way then."

Elder Bronson was always very courteous and kind, but he never compromised the truth or failed to knock error and knock it hard. He takes his place among the ranks of God's servants who have studied to show themselves approved, a workman who need not be ashamed, and far from feeling ashamed, husband and I felt proud to have the gospel represented in our community by one so worthy, so well prepared, intelligent, cultured and filled with the Spirit of God. His clean-cut, frank manner and pure mind won many friends to the cause and as an example to all.

The Congregational minister autoed out from Dodson with Brother Freie one evening to attend service. He was our guest, and after a long talk went to bed with Brother Bronson, but he seemed to have some difficulty getting to sleep, at least he would rouse up whenever the notion struck him, to ask another question.

A Presbyterian elder, one of their district Sunday school organizers, came out from Coburg to have supper at his sister's home with Elder Bronson and attend church that evening. Both he and his wife urged Brother Bronson to come and visit them before he left.

We expect to have the district tent out here next spring, and our hopes are bright for the future. Eight of us and possibly a few more, have made plans to attend the Eastern Montana conference at Andes in November. We talk it over every time we get together, and hope we may all be able to go.

LAURA L. FREIE.

OLTON, TEXAS, September 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: On the 7th instant I had the privilege of getting my transportation home with a stock train. I of course accepted the privilege and was soon on my way. I reached home at Independence about midnight the 9th, finding home folks doing the best they were able to do, and enjoying comparatively good health, for which I was truly grateful.

When I was getting my face fixed for the stake conference and the dedication of the Stone Church, I received a telegram from Olton, Texas, asking me to come at once. I accordingly packed my grip, kissed wife and children good-by, and departed on the Santa Fe train Wednesday morning, the 19th. Reaching Plainview the next morning at 9.30 o'clock, I found our Brother William Graef in the hospital there with a very serious case of appendicitis. He had been brought in from Olton the day previous, and had undergone a surgical operation. The appendix had burst before he reached the hospital and his case was a serious one. The operation was made for the purpose of draining the pus from the abdominal cavity. The doctor said the chances in his favor were very small compared with those against him.

When I entered his room his appearance was anything but favorable to his recovery. He was suffering severely with gas pains caused from the effects of the ether; his kidneys too, had refused to function, and he therefore suffered more or less from that cause. His good wife was with him, and as soon as conditions could be made favorable I administered to him, and it seemed that an immediate transition took place in his system; his eyes that previously had looked glassy and sunken assumed a clearness, and his countenance lighted up, his organs began to function, and he began to take natural and normal rest. About thirty minutes after the administration his doctor came in to see him, and he said, "You have taken a wonderful change for the better, there is no reason now why you should not get well."

From that hour he has continued to gain, and when I was in to see him yesterday he was feeling real well, and very much comforted with the blessings he had received. Sister Graef told the doctor the cause of his remarkable change, and he told it in the town, and one man in particular who had heard of his case came to the hospital that he might be able to see the man who had received such wonderful blessings in answer to his faith in God. Sister Graef availed herself of the opportunity to do a little missionary work, and so provided herself with tracts, HERALDS and Ensigns, all of which went rapidly, and yesterday she informed me that people came there asking for "some of that literature." This morning she was provided with another bundle of papers, so will distribute them among those who come inquiring for literature.

Sunday I preached twice at this place and will hold a couple of meetings this week. I will work my way northward from here, so as to reach some points that I have not yet been able to reach.

I am encouraged in the work of the gospel and trust all who have named the name of Christ will do what they can to help push forward the cause of Zion.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, September 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: Noticing a request for addresses of branches by the editors of the HERALD and the difficulty strangers have sometimes in finding the church, the Oakland church is located at Sixteenth and Magnolia Streets. Visiting Saints or friends will always find a welcome. We also advertise in the Oakland Tribune.

Our branch is in good condition both in number and spiritually. Nearly every Sunday, strangers are seen in our meetings and at present a few are investigating. Our last sacrament meeting was the largest in attendance and the most spiritual in the history of the branch. Our former pastors, Brethren Terry and Davison, are not forgotten by the Oakland Saints. We regret to hear of the death of our former pastor, Brother R. J. Parker. He and family were loved by the Saints among whom he labored. A good man has gone to his reward. We pray the Lord will comfort his wife and children in their sorrow and may they be enabled to bear it, knowing God does all things for our good.

We have a number of good preachers; among the number we might mention Brother Ingham, Brother Collins and A. C. Hawley, and our branch priest, Doctor Bush. We also have a splendid choir under the leadership of Sister Minnie Ingham. Our Sunday school and Religio are in good condition. We feel we are advancing in every department.

Yours for advancement,

J. W. PRESLEY.

DOVER, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

Editors Herald: The Dollar Library came to hand and I certainly received my money's worth. I wish I possessed the power to impress every reader to purchase this library of tracts. I am sure there is not a good Saint in this country but what would say it is the best spent dollar of his life. Listen, kind reader, you sacrifice just a little and secure it, and after reading it carefully and prayerfully, if you have the nerve to write to me and say it is not more than your money's worth, I will personally send you a check for two dollars. It is at least twenty-five years of boiled-down brain energy handed to you for practically nothing. If I were out of debt, I would order at least twenty-five and give it to my friends. I believe there is enough in this grand library to convert any honest heart.

Since I have been ordained an elder and also elected to act as president of the New Philadelphia Central Branch, I have been very busy. We are few in number (about thirty) but have had some very fine meetings. The Lord has blessed us wonderfully. Our Sister Anna Thomas was quite sick, but am pleased to say the Lord has again bestowed strength to her body so she can attend services. After administering to her, our next prayer service we all went to the Lord in earnest prayer, and while I was praying I plead with the Lord that he would open the windows of heaven and bless Sister Anna. Immediately I had a vision and it appeared as a circle of fire from heaven down on the sister and I could see her face and almost half of her body in the beautiful light. Evidence was given to me by the Spirit of God, then she was blessed. Shortly after prayer I arose to my feet and bore testimony to this and surely we felt to rejoice. This occurred about 8.15 in the evening. A few days later, I asked Brother William Lewis why he did not come to prayer service and he told me he was late, due to poor car service, so he went to visit Sister Anna. While there he mentioned to me that he administered to Sister Anna and upon investigation it was almost the very moment that I was pleading for our sister. More evidence of the divinity of this great latter-day work.

I am getting up a booster club for Christmas offering and we have set the mark high. We want to surprise the Bishop. I inducted three into the kingdom and according to my dream I must secure three more. My candidates are shown to me in the form of fish. I hope I will never catch a sucker. Brother Elbert remarked one time that we are liable to get a few sardines. Between the two, I don't know which would be the better.

We have wonderful promises for this branch if we only can continue to be faithful and do that which the Lord desires of us. I hope I shall never be a slacker, or be a traitor to my government (of God). I want to be a crack gunner; I want to defeat the enemy; I want to do as Brother Paul did. I want to say I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, and I am sure the dear Lord has a crown of righteousness laid up for me, that will make me happy through all eternity.

With the uppermost desire in my heart to win souls to Christ, I beg to be yours in gospel bonds.

DOCTOR A. G. KLAR.

THE PLAINS, OHIO, September 30, 1917.

Editors Herald: The HERALD and Ensign are welcome visitors at our home, also the Autumn Leaves, and I enjoy the news they bring.

We have had Brother Arthur Allen with us this year a short time, and much good was done here. He baptized two, both heads of families, and delivered some good sermons and instructions to the Saints, which will be remembered by all. He also organized a Religio.

The Saints are most of them interested in the cause we all love so well. We have prayer meeting twice a week, and twice a week have a meeting especially for the young of the branch and believe much good is being done. We also meet once a week to study our Sunday school lesson.

Our school is increasing her numbers as well as the old members becoming more and more interested in the work. We have made a great mark with our Christmas offering this year. I proposed to the school that in addition to giving every Sunday, we set a day to be known as a day of consecration, that we give all we made on that day. The whole school fell in love with the idea.

But as we work in the coal mines here, and it is very uncertain whether we shall be able to have a good day's work on that day, and as some wash on certain days for their neighbors, we were afraid that on the set day we might not all of us make anything. So we set to work and took the day we were able to make the most, all determined to do their best. We are unable to say as yet what the outcome will be, but can say it has swelled the Christmas offering wonderfully here. One brother made nine dollars and sixty-five cents on that day. Others ranged from one dollar to nine dollars and eighteen cents. There are three boys whom I must make mention of. On Monday morning following, they proposed to be first to get their offering. They went fishing and caught a dollar's worth each. They sold them and brought me the money, stating they had sale for more on the next day, and if they could catch a dollar and five cent's worth they would bring me the five cents. I told them they would not catch any more, but they said there were lots of them. But I knew there wasn't, as I had tried to catch some there, and many others had also. The boys tried, at different times, but caught no more.

I have had many evidences of this work, and this is one more to the writer, as marvelous as when the Savior called from the shore of Galilee to the disciples, if they had caught any fish, and were told to try again. Our offering amounts to eighty-five dollars or more at the present time.

I mention this not to boast, but this is about two dollars each to the members of our school and we are a band of Saints that are poor in this world's goods, most of us living in rented property and it keeps us busy to keep the wolf of starvation from our doors at times. But our hearts are in the work, and we pray and work for the redemption of Zion.

Your brother and colaborer, in gospel bonds,

A. C. BARNHOUSE.

BUTMAN, MICHIGAN, September 24, 1917.

Editors Herald: We have not seen any letters from this branch for some time, yet the Butman Branch is growing. I have baptized six this summer, and four last summer. Our prayer and testimony meetings are very spiritual; quite often the gifts of prophecy give comfort and encouragement to discouraged ones. The Lord has blessed my ministrations in healing those outside of the church as well as those in it. We have about thirty members in our branch, also have two churches about seven miles apart in the one branch. I hold fellowship services at the church seven miles from my home every two weeks—a very spiritual body of Saints in that vicinity and of the true heart.

We are looking ahead to our conference at Beaverton, October 13 and 14. Our district president, George W. Burt, is a very hard worker in the gospel and has indeed done wonderful things to advance this Central Michigan District.

Praying for the success of the church and all concerned,
I am,

Your brother in the one faith,

ISRAEL GOHEEN.

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO, September 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: As it has been a long time since I have written to the HERALD, and as my year's mission is nearly at an end at Port Arthur, I thought perhaps some of the Saints would rejoice to know that I am about my Father's business, striving to do his will, I labored all last winter, visiting and holding meetings wherever I could. I have the good will of many honest men and women in this city. On July 28, I went to Webb to see my brother, John Miller. I rejoiced to find him firm in this great latter-day work. I held some meetings in the hall at that place, having many out to hear this great work. I was well blessed and in many eyes tears were seen.

On July 30, I baptized Brother John Miller's wife, near Webb. They are all alone in that place. I wish Brother Jordan would look after them there, as I believe they are the salt of the work in that place. May the dear Lord bless them and may the day soon come when others will follow the example of Mrs. J. Miller.

On my way home, I had the privilege of meeting Brother Jordan of Saskatchewan. I had a nice time on the train with him. He was about the Master's business.

Arriving home, I found all well. I have been holding meetings in my home and some in the army hall, being well blessed. I rejoice to say that Mr. Roy Bonstell of Port Arthur gave a request for baptism, and was baptized by me on the shore of Thunder Bay in Lake Superior. Another man has given in his name for baptism. There are others to follow. Brother Samuel Tomlinson will rejoice in this, as he was the one who opened up the work here. We are wanting an elder here for a while this fall. Some need the laying on of hands, so will Brother Curtis send one here? I am asking Brother Curtis this, in the HERALD, for I do not have his address. We are not following the Sunday school as was expected, because of reasons which will be removed in the Master's own good time.

Brother Roy Bonstell is alive in this work and I believe will do much good for the Master here. His wife has been in the church for years, and we trust that they may be true to their covenant, till death. I would like to hear from those who knew me while in Petrolia Branch. May the dear Lord bless us as his church and help us to come up to the standard of perfection.

Your brother,

19 Olive Road.

FOOD-PLEDGE CAMPAIGN

The matter of food conservation is now taking definite organized shape, as during the present month, October, an effort is being made to have every family in Iowa sign a card. There are some 568,000 families. In fact the effort is Nation-wide to secure a pledge from every family to work for food conservation, nor is it left in doubt what this means, for the cards that are retained read as follows:

AS A MEMBER OF THE UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION

You can directly aid the Food Administration and help win the war by: (1) Eating as little wheat bread or other wheat products as circumstances permit, and, if possible, not more than once daily; (2) eating meat (beef, mutton, or pork) not oftener than once a day; (3) economizing in the use of butter and discouraging the excessive use of other fats; (4) cutting your daily allowance of sugar in tea or coffee, and of sweet drinks, candy, and in other ways helping to lessen the consumption of sugar; (5) eating more corn, rye, vegetables, fruit, fish, and poultry in place of wheat and meat; (6) avoiding waste of all kinds; and (7) urging in your own home or the restaurants you frequent the necessity of economy in food, and requesting the observance of these pledges by other persons.

Our Problem, is to feed our Allies this winter by sending them as much food as we can of the most concentrated nutritive value in the least shipping space. These foods are wheat, beef, pork, dairy products, and sugar.

Our Solution is to eat less of these and more of other foods of which we have an abundance, and to waste less of all foods.

Each family is asked to sign a card, pledging themselves to use practical means to aid the food administration to conserve the food supply of the country. It is noteworthy that it is quite in accordance with the Word of Wisdom to use vegetables and cereals. Also it is in accordance with the law of God to avoid waste of all kinds, and the practice of reasonable economy. Poultry and fish will also receive approval. Wheat possesses it is true, the highest nutritive value, per man, but we are asked to make a special sacrifice for the sake of our boys and the allies of the United States. This procedure should make for better health, economy in living as well as helping the Government, and so should receive our hearty approval.

College girls are being organized to assist in this movement. The women of each county are also organized to assist both in securing pledge cards and seeing that their purpose is carried out. An effort is made to have the school children enter into the contest in writing an essay on why "Every American family should sign the pledge card." Honorable mention is to be made of the winner.

This latter is of interest to our children, but the fundamental purpose is of interest to all of us. October 28 closes the Nation-wide campaign, but it should be but a beginning, if that is needed, of real conservation and a cutting out of unnecessary wants, not only for the sake of the Nation, but also for the sake of the church.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Friendship's Hospitality

We cannot stop the onward flow,

As old, and new friends, come and go—

Nor should we bid a friend to stay,

When duty calls another way;

But in our hearts a fire may be,

Of friendship's hospitality.

Before its warm and ruddy glow,

Will old and new friends come and go,—

Bow-bent, and changed, beneath Fate's wind—

Leaving immortal memory behind,

If in our hearts a fire there be,

Of friendship's hospitality.

Oh, may the ever coursing tide,

Ne'er swamp our heart's own fireside!

But may its cheery warmth remain,

'Till old and new friends meet again;

And taste once more with you and me,

Of friendship's hospitality.

Three Good Books for Children

J. B. Lippincott and Co., Philadelphia, have a Picture and Story Series of books for small children about five or six years of age—the time when stories are a necessity to proper childhood development. Three pretty little volumes in this series have recently come to our notice: Fairies and Goblins from Storyland, Boys and Girls from Storyland, and Tell Me a Story Picture Book. They contain some of the best old stories, simplified by Leila H. Cheney and each book is illustrated with 24 drawings in color by Maria L. Kirk. These make excellent presents for children and sell for fifty cents, net. Order from this office if desired, specifying the titles desired.

Book Reviews

ROMEO AND JULIET.—One of the Macmillan Pocket Classic series, published this year and edited by Jennie F. Chase. The notes are copious and comprehensively done, while the index is something that will be appreciated by the student. Very readable type. Put up in 16mo, cloth, and sells for 25 cents. A convenient form in which to have Shakespeare's works.

FRANKLIN SPENCER SPALDING.—With substitute: Man and Bishop. By John Howard Melish, Macmillan Company, 1917. 297 pages, $2.25. This book should prove of more than usual interest because of the splendid work done by Bishop Spalding in the West. It may be remembered that he labored in Utah for several years, where he compiled many criticisms secured by himself on the plate in the "Pearl of Great Price." It was printed before the Book of Abraham and a translation upon the opposite page. To some his criticisms seemed fairly established. This feature has, however, been carefully discussed in a former issue of the HERALD, and the position of our church thereto made clear. His conclusions do not injure at all our position. Bishop Spalding was a man of unusual power. The book gives a review of his life from his boyhood to his death, including many letters of interest. He gained the personal trust of many who knew him. This book is a last tribute to a man of power and a minister.

Married

SARTWELL-MOSER.—Bertrand E. Sartwell of Savanna, Illinois, and Evanelia M. Moses, of Osterdock, Iowa, were married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. Rudolph and Sister Mary Moser. The contracting parties are both members of the church and having known each other a reasonable length of time, start out in wedded life under auspicious surroundings. The groom is a locomotive engineer; their future home will be at Savanna. Elder William Sparling officiated, giving a few words of kindly counsel. The following day they started on a trip to the Pacific Coast, intending to stop off at several points where there are branches of the church.

COX-PATTON.—At the home of the groom's mother, Sister Cox, of Visalia, California, Mr. Edward R. Cox and Miss Margaret J. Patton, of Winters, California. Elder C. W. Hawkins, of San Jose, officiated. Some of those present had never heard the ceremony before, and said they liked it better than any they had ever heard, it being very pleasing and sensible. The couple will make their home at Visalia.

THE WAR, THE CHURCH AND EDUCATION

(A synopsis of address at the opening of Graceland College, September 7, 1917, by S. A. Burgess.)

The speaker gave a brief sketch of the industrial development of Germany, how she was forging to the front, and justly so because of the excellent service she was giving in the world markets. The crowding of population in Germany and the large number of those who went elsewhere, her ambition and reasons for desiring development, an outlet for her trade; and that Serbia stood in the way to the Orient. Shall we blame Germany because she wished to change some of these conditions, so those who go from Germany might be able to keep under her jurisdiction? Her ambition and the excuses given in the record in the various books issued, which shows how the war arose, and why, were given very brief summary, also Pan-Germanism and that war was a wrong and unjust method to secure her rights, if any.

When war broke out it met with the utmost astonishment. Very few people could believe it possible. The Socialist party was about to hold an international conference for peace. Even in England it was thought that it could not long continue. Germany expected to be in Paris in about three weeks, and to conquer Russia in a few months. So she did not expect a long war, or prepare for it. Then she thought England could be overcome at her leisure; finally the United States.

The war caused the utmost horror and the question arose, Is Christianity then a failure? This was much discussed in those early days. Some said it was, others that it was not. But the conclusion has been reached that this was not Christianity; Christianity was not a failure because it had not been tried. War is not Christianity.

There is the awful loss by battle and in other ways. The noise is so great that men should be taken gradually to the firing line, and in some cases at least when they are wounded, if placed in a hospital at once the shock of silence is too great; they must be taken back gradually to become accustomed to quiet. It is difficult for us to realize what that means.

Even now that the United States is in the war, we appreciate but little as yet what it means, but what we have read should give us at least an inkling. We speak often of the debts of the church. Yet think what a trivial thing it is to each of us compared to what each one must do, even in one year, on account of this war. Three dollars a member would pay the church debt. The first special war credit of seven billion amounts to seventy dollars a member, or on each inhabitant of this country. There is a further amount about to be voted even in excess of this, which, including the amount advanced to the allies, apparently will mean somewhere around seventeen billion must be raised in the first year, or one hundred and seventy dollars a member.

WHY AT WAR?

Some allege that the only reason the United States had for going to war was because the U-boat cut her trade with England. As if England told the United States they could not deal with Germany and she said "All right." But when Germany said, "You shall not sell to England," she said, "Why then I'll fight." This is ridiculous and ignores several fundamental facts.

In the first place it was Germany who first spread mines and warned neutral ships out of a designated zone. England merely retaliated to protect herself. In the second place the United States sold to either country. She sold through the Deutschland and other ships, and left it largely to the other parties to do their own delivering. Yet America carried much in her own bottoms and through other neutral ships and delivered it to neutrals. Millions if not billions of pounds of material thus found their way through different neutral countries to Germany.

England did not sink ships, she did not destroy lives; Germany did sink ships and did destroy the lives of many Americans. She promised to follow certain rules, then when ready rejected her own agreement. In this course many Americans and others lost their lives. It resulted in Germany adopting as a policy that she would kill and destroy all within a certain territory. She attempted to extend her authority hundreds of miles out to sea, and then say that any persons, belligerent or neutral, found within that territory should forfeit his life. That any ship there found should be destroyed. This was a distinct surprise. It was a beginning of war. The mere fact that she did not declare war does not change the fact that this act was an act of war.

Even before diplomatic relations were broken off it seems that a definite propaganda was started in Germany, and American citizens persecuted, if the record given is correct, in order to prepare German citizens for the break with the United States.

We sometimes see it urged, that such brutality as Belgium and Poland belongs to war and not to any one nation; that Sherman described war in a certain significant word, which did not overdraw its real characteristics; in fact it may be underdrawn in that the facts of the place of carnage excels, not the reality, but our present limited ideas of the place of punishment hereafter. They say English and French soldiers have been guilty of wrongful acts, that the same is true of the Civil War.

This may be so, but the difference is that such acts were individual, while the conditions in the present case of Germany show it is not individual acts alone, but it is the result of a definite plan of the Junkers to destroy and weaken in every possible way, physically, morally, and spiritually. It is not simply the action of individuals, but it is an organized plan by those in authority.

Many of the civilians, men, women and young girls are deported or killed; cities, towns and works of art destroyed; the fertility of the soil ruined, orchards and shade trees maliciously cut, and practically every method that can be devised, is carried out in a systematic way to make war hateful and to bring about the conditions of the desert, nor is this of military necessity.

THE THREAT TO THE UNITED STATES

Germany, it is stated, also planned an attack on the United States, and has secretly stirred up trouble in this country. This may have been going on for some time, but the knowledge of it came to those in authority in this country about the same time as the notice of the ruthlessness of the U-boat, and with it the conviction that this country was in danger.

Even eight years ago we were told clearly and confidentially by one of our high militia officers, a German returned from abroad, that within ten years the United States would be at war. We should not have considered it had it not been from a man who is German born; even then we could hardly believe it. There had been some talk of Japan, but that we considered uncertain and ridiculous. But that was at once denied. It was not Japan.

Well then, what power? Germany. This certainly was more than a surprise, because we had no quarrel with Germany and had no reason for believing it. In fact we very much admired her efficiency in science, municipal government, and the progress she had made. With that people we certainly had no cause of complaint. But he replied, that it made no difference whether we wanted war or not, we should have to fight or let Germany have a free hand on this side of the water.

He stated that she would make an attempt through Mexico, that she wanted more room and would attempt to take it here. This seems to be a confirmation to the story told by a Chicago editor to the effect, that before the war a member of the English cabinet was approached by a high German official with the proposition that those two governments take the whole of Mexico, take it out of the hands of the United States and divide it between them; with the assurance there would be no difficulty as to spheres of influence. Of course it was not in the hands of the United States in any such sense; but England refused.

There has since arisen a confirmation of this story, in the Zimmerman note to get Japan and Mexico to attack this government. Gerard in his journal also offers confirmation; and possibly the story of Dewey and the German naval officer at Manila is to like effect.

Much was done in this country itself. These and other features forced the conviction that the United States would be compelled to defend itself.

Finally it was necessary from a human standpoint if the world were to be made safe for democracy.

President Wilson took the position last winter in moving for peace, that it should be not in a spirit of conquest, or to crush the opposite party, nor for the sake of gain or indemnity. As we understand it, the United States are not at war for such a purpose. We do not want indemnity nor land, but we do want the right and safety of democracy.

Some may urge that Germany cannot be compelled to form a democracy. That may be true. It would not be a democracy if they were forced to accept some form of government they did not wish. But the requirement is made, that the action should at least have the voluntary sanction of the people. The problem before the Government is to protect liberty in this country, to protect ourselves. It will also carry these principles into the final settlement; because this Government will now be entitled to representatives at the conference of peace, and may there insist that justice be done to humanity in Germany, as well as elsewhere.

THE CHURCH

As to the position of the church, it is and must always be for peace. Christianity is for peace. It is one of the splendid features that there is so much discussion along this line for peace, against war; even if some of it may be crude and not properly thought out. For it is safe to say that the general disposition of the people is that they do not want war.

But this does not mean, as some may have foolishly said, that the people are without courage or not with the Government. It is true that many have claimed exemption. It is not true that they are not therefore in support of the Government and our president, Woodrow Wilson. They do not want war if it can be avoided rightly. Married men do not want to leave their wives and children. But they are ready and willing, if needed, and will go gladly that the world may be made safe for their children and their children's children.

During the Civil War, there does not appear to have been such a disposition, nor during the Spanish-American war. It is a matter distinctly for encouragement that the people are coming to feel that they are against war in general. This does not apply alone to this country but it affects also many in other countries. For we have been in receipt of letters from men in Australia, England, and even Germany, especially during the first year or two of the war. This is a splendid feature. It is a fact that there can be no lasting peace until people—the people—are determined that they want peace. Nor can there be a lasting peace, except on the basis of righteousness and justice. That is one of the great questions confronting us after the war.

Then some of our people seem to want something, they do not know just what. Perhaps if it were made conscious and clearly expressed, it would be that the president of the church should gather everyone to Independence and then set aside all the governments of earth. If necessary that he should call down fire out of heaven, that he should command that none of our people take part in any way in the war, but should prepare at once a place of refuge where he would protect them in mighty power.

If we concede that, the final results would be the same, our enemies would be destroyed. But if such a method were used, it would involve an approval of the use of one of the material instruments of warfare—fire. We look for nothing of the kind.

ZION

Yet it is true, that Zion is to be a city of refuge for the afflicted of the earth. It is also to be great and terrible. How is that to come about?

We are of the opinion that it does not mean material elements of warfare, but if we are faithful the time shall come when the people of God may be protected, where if they are attacked they may be enabled to set at nought the armies of men, turn rivers out of their courses, and do many other wonderful things, and the city of Zion made safe by the power of God. But that time is not yet, nor are we sure of its method.

The world has not tested Christianity, nor have we yet tested the principles of the gospel of the kingdom. When the commandments are carried out and Zion is established, then we may hope for safety.

But to those who would be adverse to all forms of resistance, we would repeat that while we do not justify in any sense war, hatred or human vengeance, or that in which humanity is directly an instrument, still resistance to wrong is not evil.

We read in the Book of Revelation of there being war in heaven. I do not know what ideas others may have, but I question if many of you hold the idea that all the righteous simply acquiesced, and said, "Peace, peace," when the enemy appeared, and there was war in heaven. We are always inclined to the opinion that there was a power or force there made manifest, and that by virtue of this power those who sinned were placed outside of the celestial glory. The record in fact says, "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon." (Revelation 12: 7.)

It takes two to make peace. It would seem that even in heaven there is not simply an acquiescence, but the exercise of power so far as to remove the offender. But we do not for one moment infer that this means crass physical violence, but rather means a superior spiritual force. Yet the principle of resistance to evil, whether we call it resistance or not, is clearly set forth. Evidently it will be likewise with Zion, if she is great and terrible and will be put down.

Many are anxious for a full discussion of the position of the church and its leaders. We may reaffirm that the church is for peace and always has been; but it is first for justice and personal righteousness, realizing that permanent peace is otherwise impossible. The church requires not only the spiritual and moral sanction, which is essential; but it also means the economic establishment of Zion as a place of refuge. This gives us very important problems to be met now, and probably much more so after the close of the war.

There is a great work to be done, to assure, if possible, that there may be no more war; and to call face to face those who love peace and secure for them a place of safety. Yet we cannot vision Zion as a place of selfish rest and indifferent to the sufferings of humanity. But rather it is a place from which healing and righteousness shall go forth to the nations, and from which we shall go to minister. Sin and disease require a cure. Zion is not an avoidance of responsibility to the church or humanity.

WHERE SHALL WE SERVE?

The exigencies confronting us and confronting this Government move many young men and women to feel, that they would like to give the best they have to protect our liberty, our democracy, our homes and our country. Some, it is true, are called or conscripted to work in the army; others have volunteered for this and other necessary work.

But we would especially emphasize that even if the war is to continue for years; even if we were to take the view that we shall assist and help in the carrying on of the war to the utmost of our ability, we must recognize that we are living in a different age of the world, one of mechanical skill, and that fact enters into every part of our life, but especially on the battle front. We are all aiding in a way, we are all assisting, because the lines of support reach back so far into the life of every individual.

Terrible as it is, horrible as is war, our especial need is for specialization. So even if we thought the war would continue for ten years, the best thing we could do would be to continue our training. Every young man and young woman should make a special effort to continue his education and prepare as carefully as is possible.

Some, it is true, advise this course in order to prepare for war. They suggest the reformation in education in England is and should be to the end that they may be better prepared for another war, or for the next war. That young men be trained for doctors, for practical science, so as to be able more nearly to equal what is now the German efficiency of the past in practical or applied science.

But we believe that that is only a partial and erroneous view. People are coming to see more clearly that we shall need trained men and trained women for the coming work, to the end that peace may be secured and firmly established.

Young men who are not immediately called, can give no better present service to their country than to spend as much time as possible in study and special training.

THE SOCIAL PROBLEMS

But the special appeal we should make is for the solution of problems after the war. We do not want to make the mistake that England as a nation made, and weaken our laws protecting child labor. In setting aside the law restricting the hours for women's labor, in setting aside laws restricting hours of all labor, England now realizes her mistake. The next generation requires strong mothers. The children must be given their opportunity and not forced unduly into trade and labor at or for unreasonable hours. Woman's rights must also be protected.

With the workmen it has been established time and time again that reasonable hours result in better service, fewer mistakes, and a larger net profit. That is the highest efficiency. Long hours and unsanitary conditions are both unmoral and uneconomic.

The nations in Europe have sacrificed, they have given their young men. America does not want to repeat the mistake that was made, when too great a multitude left Oxford and Cambridge; many left the university and have given up their lives on the battle field. These men were needed for reconstruction, as well as special work now.

Hibbert's Journal for July has several articles on this topic of "Reconstruction after the war; the value and necessity of education." We need and must have educated men to restore Belgium and France; to build the necessary buildings; to care for the refugees of other nations, and to take care of our own industrial developments. We do not want the race to go backward, and if it is not to do that, we must have trained men to carry on the advance work of civilization, research work, abstract thinking, and pure science.

In addition to the practical side on which the work of society is founded, we need men trained in letters, art and the languages, and in expression; we need men trained in philosophy, and above all in religion. We should have many trained sociologists, as well as psychologists.

Every great war of the past one hundred years has meant additional liberty for some people. We rejoice that this is so, and we recognize greatly the force of the argument that our warfare is not alone against this one autocracy in politics and militarism, but also that the moneyed kings must be defeated and economic justice done between man and man.

We need men who are trained to lead this economic fight, and who will not indulge in wild theories without regard to facts. There are things to be corrected here, and we are gradually turning in that direction, and have for many years past. It is quite probable the war may mean a still greater and quicker recognition of the social aspect of life. We want justice to all and a recognition of the facts of the case.

We talk much of men like Rockefeller and Carnegie, yet in fact the thirty-five hundred families which receive the highest income in this country receive but one billion per year, according to statistics. That is an enormous amount, but divided among the population of the United States would be just ten dollars per individual, and is less than three per cent of the annual income, or annual profits. It is a large amount and should be justly divided, and wisely through proper taxation.

There is a growing disposition to impose inheritance tax, income tax, excess property tax, to ask a contribution from those who are best able to give it. It is a matter of remarkable interest, that so many teachers of economics in America hold that the war should be largely financed from income, taxes upon excess wealth, war profits and the like.

If we are to have justice we must have men who can critically analyze and do justice. We do not want the risk of anarchy or a period of wild scheming which will secure justice to no one, and will not result in better conditions, but rather risk a further reaction.

One of our popular magazines declared recently that America is like China; she was in danger of degenerating and coming into a condition of inertia and passivity, where she would be at the mercy of anyone; that her redemption lies in only one direction; we must have devoted men, not for war, but for humanity. Men who have a selfish interest first, men who would do injustice to woman or child, cannot lead us to safety. We must have consecration, we must have consecrated men who are ready to prepare themselves; men who are true in heart, in mind and in body. Men who deal so justly that their motives cannot be questioned. Men who gain the confidence of the people rightly, and who deserve that confidence, as they are working for the good of all and not for self.

The men who from anger or passion would wrong another, who for the sake of gain will wrong another, cannot help in the real salvation of this country. These are not our words, though they might readily have been the words of some of our men, but they are the substance of the thought in a story in one of our most popular periodicals.

Then we have from an English writer the statement under the subject, "Towns to live in," discussed as one of the great needs of reconstruction after the war, "interest should be created in every town's story—every town is a Zion and has its prophets." This may be a little overstated, but it is important to note that the world is thinking of consecration; they are thinking of Zion, at least a few here and there are doing so. It is a growing need of the age.

We need consecrated men and women, clean and upright for this work of reconstruction and redemption after the war.

We attended a few years ago a course of lectures at one of our leading universities (Clark University under Dr. Hankins) on the subject of "Social reconstruction." It was very plain to see that the students and teachers to-day tend to emphasize the social aspect of life, seeing that is the coming issue. Much effort has already been made in this direction. In the past we had a spirit of laissez faire and individualism. To-day the trend is socialistic. What it means is this, that we must seek the interest of the individual and of the state, for their best interests are identical.

We do not want individual interests alone. But the individual must be willing to work for the benefit of the state, of society, the church and humanity. And that is the test after all, the common weal.

Yet on the other hand, each man should be developed not simply as in some corporation's schools, so as to make him a better workman, to increase his efficiency as a workman alone, but he should be given an opportunity to develop his own individual interests, to develop to the best that he is capable of being, and then he should give the best of himself to the common cause. There should be a solidarity of the whole, with the individual unfolded, developed and trained to his best capacity, and then that capacity devoted to service. These things are not problems of the church alone, but are the coming issues of the day, upon which men are thinking.

To accomplish that requires also moral and spiritual regeneration.

THE NEED OF EDUCATED MEN AND WOMEN

There never was a time when colleges should be so crowded as they should be this year. The need was never so great for trained, devoted men and women. Europe has sacrificed of her best. She will need assistance. We need men to go there and preach the gospel of Jesus and salvation. We need men here to establish Zion, a place of refuge for the oppressed of the earth. We must have trained men, we must have trained women, if the church is to do its great work.

So we have this to do, for not only will they flee to this country, but they will flee especially to that part which has been set apart in the divine law as Zion. We must have men and women to take care of them; a place made ready, buildings erected and a people ready. The main features of the best thought of the day, are contained in the ideals of the church, for moral regeneration, for economic salvation, for the carrying out of the law of equality and of justice, and the establishment of Zion.

The church needs to train men, both for the work of Zion and the church and for the work as a whole. It needs trained women, and it needs them as never before.

We may rest assured that there is coming greater freedom and democracy, justice and the franchise for woman; enfranchisement for children, that is, not the vote, but that their individuality may be recognized together with proper discipline and restraint; not an age for children to rule, but an age of encouragement and intelligent training of children for their own good and on behalf of society and the church.

Never was there a greater need than to-day for especially trained men and women. Never will the need be so great as at the end of the war, for Europe has sacrificed greatly of her best. If Belgium is to be rebuilt; and the villages of northern France restored; if the fields that have been almost ruined by scientific methods, shall by scientific methods have their fertility restored, we must have trained specialists. Europe will need our help, and it is for this purpose America is in the war, that she may sit at the councils of peace, that she may there hold for democracy and personal righteousness; that there be no great indemnities and annexations, but that the world may be made safe for humanity and for peace.

If Europe is not to go backward she will need the assistance of trained men and women from this country to assist in this time of need, and help in the work of reconstruction.

They will be needed here at home as never before, to carry on the material reconstruction because of the war, to prepare places for the refugees of the nations, and to carry on the work of humanity. Men and women are also needed, who by clean living are so right that their motives cannot be questioned, so that their voice may be heard on behalf of society, and then assist and guide in the social reconstruction. This must be, if the largest possible good is to be secured and the state and country go forward.

This is a time when as never before trained men and women will be needed. Every man, woman and child who can do it should secure some special training. Every young man and young woman, every old man and old woman, though I do not use the term old critically, but if you feel yourselves too old to be included with the young, if you desire to assist in this work of social rebuilding and reconstruction in the establishment of Zion, you ought to get ready.

The universities, the high schools, Graceland College, and our study classes should be crowded as never before, for never before was there so great a need for education, spiritually, morally and physically, as well as intellectually.

We need trained men and women, but we need them actuated by the Spirit of God. We mean in other words, men and women who are made ready, yet are devoted and humble and full of love. No others it would seem can assist in this work, but only those who are directed by the Spirit of God, only those who seek his direction, and who realize this opportunity for preparation and service. It is so for the church. It is becoming apparent for the coming social and national reconstruction.

It is a time of stress as never before, it is a time of proving in the world and in the church. It has been foretold we should be ready to stand in holy places, to stand in a place of safety, and there devote ourselves for the sake of righteousness and peace.

So we would send this word abroad, not only to you here, but to everyone as far as is possible, never has there existed before such a need as to-day that men and women, boys and girls, young men and young women should prepare for service to the church, to the Nation, and to humanity. That is the great duty. Get ready, the Lord and his work needs you.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Mark Twain pictures Adam as brooding over Eve's grave and saying: "Wheresoever she was, there was Eden!"

Don't change your spiritual gear to catch up with every fad that passes you. Some of them run "on high" for a little while and then lie in the ditch a long time. The only true pace-maker is the old gospel car.

Trouble is said to be a very efficient teacher. But most of us are such dull pupils that we must remain a long time under tutelage.

Having been absent from Lamoni for some time we watched a recent sacrament service, under the individual cup system, with something of the interest of a stranger. Everything moved like clock-work, with precision and dispatch, and that order which should characterize the house of God. The meeting was intensely spiritual, with two fine prophecies at the close. The most ardent opponent of the individual cup might well have said to himself: "The Spirit of God is taking part in this communion as freely as under the old method. Can I refuse to do the same?"

The church is a bank. We take out of it what we put into it—with interest. But if we do not make a deposit we cannot take anything out.

The trouble with the indirect sermon is that it does not start from any particular point—it does not lead up to any special place—and it does not pass anything of interest on the way.

Avoid the sermon that like the sectarian God is without body, parts, or passions—"whose center is everywhere and its circumference nowhere."

The difference between Christianity and the world, according to Brother Long, is that Christ says, "Mine is thine and thine is mine," while the world says, "Mine is mine—and thine is mine, if I can get it."

"Camouflage" is a French war term, meaning, in Yankee parlance, to "flim-flam" or "bamboozle" the enemy, or the art of accomplishing that end. It is a new word. But the art is very old. See the case of Gideon with his pitchers and trumpets (Judges 7: 16-22).

We cannot practice camouflage on God. It is useless to robe ourselves in the cheesecloth of pretense and imagine that the angel of judgment will take it to be the white robe of righteousness.

Everything indicates that the forces of evil are preparing for the final "grand drive." Truth everywhere in all forms and persons must become militant or be overwhelmed. But we have the assurance that eventually Jesus Christ will destroy all the works of the Devil.

Sherman's famous definition of war still holds good. But there are degrees of hell, according to Holy Writ. And this war seems to be searching the lowest depths of the lowest hell.

A startling figure stood in the gateway of hell. His clothing was torn and bloody and muddy—such portions of it as were not burned away. His flesh was charred with liquid fire and pierced with bayonets. His face was covered with a grotesque gas mask. But suddenly, to the surprise of all spectators, he threw his mask in the air and shouted, "Hosanna!" "Who is it?" asked His Majesty. And the Private Secretary replied, "It is a common soldier from the trenches of Europe. He thinks this is heaven."

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Sure of Victory

We note with interest in the Tabor (Iowa) Beacon of July 19, an article on the war. It is under the heading "Mormons sure of victory." Its principal reference is to the church of Utah, although quotations are also made, or references made to the books of the church, the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon.

Food Administration Urges Sugar Saving

With the statement that unless the American people curtail their use of sugar except in the preserving of fruit, the French people will be entirely without sugar for over two months, the national food administration plead with the people of this Nation to spare a little from their usual consumption of ninety pounds a person for that purpose. We use about four ounces per day per person, while the French, English and Italian use less than an ounce—a little more than the weight of a silver dollar.

The Outlaw Society

In connection with the recent indictments returned against I. W. W. leaders, Judge William C. Fitts, Assistant Attorney General, made the following statement:

The I. W. W. differs from socialists and from every form of legitimate labor organization. The I. W. W. is a degenerate; its doctrine is treachery built on the teaching of the employment of secret and covert destructive methods intended to wreck the employer and through destruction of production and transportation disable society and the Government itself, the object at this time being to render the enemy stronger and our dear country weak in the resistance of that strength.

Canada Doing Well

A personal letter from Bishop R. C. Evans includes information that he has baptized one hundred and ten in the past eight months and has sent to the Presiding Bishop for the same period, ten thousand dollars. If every district were doing as well, how long would it be before the debt would be paid, and the army of the Lord become great. He also adds that "the work here was never in better condition and the prospects for a grand winter were never brighter than now." This letter was not sent for publication, but surely Bishop Evans will excuse us for passing on the good news.

Lamoni to Have New Steam Laundry

Work has begun on a new laundry at this place, to be under the management of Brethren R. J. Wildey and A. E. Stoft, both experienced laundrymen. They will operate it under the stewardship plan. Brother Wildey comes from Minneapolis, and Brother Stoft has been in charge of the laundry department at Graceland College for some time. The new building is to be on the lot just west of the Herald Publishing House, of tile and brick construction, with full basement, 30 by 50 feet in dimensions. It is expected they will be ready for work within sixty days.

The Liberty Loan Bonds

Chamberlin's gives the whole of the October number of their magazine to the executive committee of the Federal Reserve District, number 7, of which Chicago is the center. Special emphasis is placed on the fact that the new bonds are easily sold as any bank will take them, so that they are very near as negotiable as a bank note, and with an added advantage of drawing four per cent interest from November 15. The subscription closes October 27. A new thought is brought in with the suggestion that the annual income of the country is forty billion dollars and that approximately fifteen billion or more will be required for the first year. It will mean that we have to set aside half or nearly half of our income. This means real saving. Of course two and a half billion are represented by special taxes which make their appearance in the higher cost of living. But it would seem that as a people we should save one third of our income.

The Saloon as a Competitor

While addressing the Chamber of Commerce at Des Moines, Iowa, September 28, W. G. Calderwood, of New York, made the following interesting argument:

Every business man is willing to meet all fair competition but the liquor traffic is unfair competition in three respects, regarded, that is, purely from an economic standpoint.

First, the liquor traffic gets an unfair social grip on its customers who are also the customers of other businesses, a grip that none of the other businesses get. I defy anyone to show me an instance of one man meeting a friend in front of a coal dealer's office and saying, "Come on in and have a ton of coal on me," or of several men going in and buying several rounds of castor oil in a drug store.

In the second place the liquor traffic gets the grip of appetite on its customers. The average man will not starve for clothes nor go naked for food nor do without furniture or other necessities for either, but the customer of the liquor traffic comes to the point where he will do without food, clothes, furniture and all of the other wares of legitimate business for the sake of drink.

The third point in which the liquor traffic is unfair to other business is in that it injures its customers and those of the other businesses and renders them unable to earn money with which to patronize the others. It kills customers and it renders them unable to support themselves and makes them a burden upon legitimate business.

The Appeal of the Y. M. C. A.

We have an appeal from the War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association which we wish we might print entire, but space will not allow. It portrays the intimate way in which this organization serves the needs of the soldier in the camp and at the front; how homesickness is overcome and vice rendered distasteful by the presentation of a wholesome atmosphere. They call for funds, and we can assure our readers that anything given to the organization is well used, whether it be money or good literature of any kind. A brother from France writes most touchingly of what it has done for him and his associates. Our own lads are now and will be affected by its work, and we have an obligation toward anything that helps them retain their manly ideals and make life more pleasant and natural for them.

A Tribute to Our Publishing Interests

Three requests have recently come to this office for printed posters to advertise meetings. One brother told of a few things he did not want, while the others just said in effect: "Go ahead and get us up something you think we ought to have," and one added: "Include a thousand tracts suitable for our work here. You pick them out." It makes extra work but is gladly done for the work's sake. We wouldn't advise leaving it all to the judgment of those at this end, but give all the information possible, and when convenient, allow time to confer by correspondence before the job is gotten out. A letter from one of the elders follows. He had a thousand printed, with blanks for dates and places, and can use right along:

This is to acknowledge the receipt of the posters. I also wish to express my appreciation of the work. Surely you have given them the touch of an artist and the ring of a poet. I have had much work done by job printers in towns where I have done missionary work, but this is the first work I have ever had done by the Herald Publishing House. From now on I shall have all such work done by our own house, by men that have the work at heart and will give it the little extra touches that help so much. May the God that blesses us so much out here on this big, open, wild country on the fring line continue to bless his people there in beautiful Lamoni, the center of one of his stakes.

It may be that this baptism of fire and hammering of awful facts will eventually fuse and fashion our fragmentary Christianity into an instrument more fit for fighting its foes and for getting work accomplished. But all hope of a swift and sudden process must now be abandoned.—W. E. Orchard, D. D., in the Outlook for Religion.

TWO QUESTIONS ANSWERED

[The following question was propounded to Elder R. T. Cooper by John A. Lawn, president of the Pacific Coast Quorum of Elders, for a paper to be read at a meeting of that quorum. Since it is of general interest to our readers, we are pleased to print.—EDITORS.]

1. Why should tithing already paid be added to the net assets in computing tithing due?

To answer this query, three sheets are prepared, numbered 1, 2, and 3. The first shows figures for a new member or first statement by a member who has come to the point of rendering his inventory.

The second shows the statement as usually made, by a member from year to year, in which the Lord's account is systematically although innocently cheated one year after another.

The third shows a true method of making it by adding the tithing already paid to the net assets as printed on the back of our inventory blanks (a few samples are inclosed) in order to get it clearly before a person, pin the three sheets side by side on the blackboard and it is then easily seen. I have found this a very common question and not so easily explained to the satisfaction of the people, as it might seem.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES--Part 8

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE EPISCOPALIAN CHURCH

The Episcopalian Church had its origin in differences arising in that part of the Catholic Church located in England against the pope and his immediate representatives at Rome. These differences grew in magnitude as the years passed, and in the first article of the Magna Charta, the first public recognition of the "Church of England" was made record of, in which it is declared that it "shall be free and its rights and its privileges shall be respected." It is claimed by the Reverend Thomas Richey that the above-mentioned differences began as early as 603 A. D., beginning with a difference with those in authority in the church in England and those in authority in Rome over the time of observing Easter, and these differences finally covered the questions of the mode of baptism, the first steps in receiving clerical orders, and of the method of consecration, which differences continued as matters of discussion till the final division of the church in England from the Roman Catholic Church in 1533.

In 1532 the convocation of the "Church of England" declared that the claims of a foreign potentate "should no longer be acknowledged," and in 1533, the parliament of England declared that "the crown of England is imperial, and that England is constituted a nation in itself to settle all questions both temporal and spiritual, and that it belongs to the spirituality, commonly called the Church of England to declare and determine all questions whatsoever may come before them without appealing to any foreign potentate."

Henry VIII wore the crown of England in 1533 when parliament declared him to be imperial, and that England should "settle all questions both temporal and spiritual." At one time he, in the early part of his life, defended the Catholic Church against the claims of Luther's protests so effectually, that as a recognition from the Pope he received the title, "Great Defender of the Faith." He remained a devoted member of the Catholic faith, even persecuting to the death those who were its opposers, until he became infatuated with one of the maids attending the queen, whom he then sought to marry by first obtaining separation from his legal wife, Catherine, first by requesting this marriage to her be declared illegal, and hence null and void, although he had been living with her as her husband for seventeen years and had five children by this union, all of which he was willing should be illegitimized in order to gratify his passion to marry a younger woman. This request was refused by the pope. He then requested to be divorced from the queen, but this request was refused, because of injustice to the queen and the laws of the church. But the action of the Pope only exasperated the king whereupon he declared himself the head of the church in England, by which he became both king and pope, and then set about to gratify his unholy desires by securing a divorce from Catherine, and marrying Anne Boleyn. But even before getting the divorce he was married to Anne Boleyn privately, but immediately set to work the means that secured for him the desired divorce through Archbishop Cranmer, who was made Archbishop of Canterbury by the king, and through this same personage his marriage with Anne Boleyn was declared legal. He soon tired of her and charged her with treason, adultery and incest, for which she was executed by authority of her husband; but two days before she was executed he, through this same person, the Archbishop of Canterbury, was divorced from her, and in the Book of Common Prayer this is said of the marriage, that it "was, and always had been, null and void." These facts of history give us a true account of one of the causes of the existence of the church which afterwards was called "The Episcopalian Church."

This church claims to be in apostolic succession, and to represent the apostolic faith. Her claims to apostolic succession finds for its basis the fact of having been represented at some of the early councils of the Catholic Church by her bishops, from as early as 314 A. D., and through these bishops who were in attendance at these early councils, and their successors they claim they hold authority to represent Christ, holding that their bishops held exclusive jurisdiction to act in church matters in England without the intrusion of any other bishop of the church, and that no one bishop in the church held more authority than another, citing as a basis of their defense that the Council of Constantinople, held in 381 A. D. and declared that no one bishop shall intrude into the jurisdiction of another. The claim is that they represent the faith as advocated by the apostles and evangelists as it has been perpetuated through the Catholic Church, and that the Catholic Church has made changes not warranted in the Scriptures.

The episcopacy is believed in as a church tenet; that is, that the bishopric, as part of the apostolic office, should continue in the church, and was transmitted by the apostles to their successors, and in the Historic Episcopate this feature of the succession is traced from Jesus Christ down through Saint Paul, Saint John, Clement, Ignatius, Polycarp, etc., to Thomas Cranmer in 1533, and from him to

John Williams of Connecticut in 1887. It is claimed by this church, that it is impossible to break the chain of apostolic succession, even if most of the bishops fell into transgression and apostatized from the faith, but they carry the thought by inference that it would be impossible to think of all the bishops apostatizing, which is thought to be the fact by others of the Protestant churches.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in America is directly a descendant of the Church of England or Episcopal Church, both of which have for the fundamentals of their faith the "Thirty-Nine Articles," of which it is said in the Book of Common Prayer as printed by Eyre and Spottiswood, and certified to by Bishop Horatio Potter of New York, May 18, 1811, as the correct edition as compared with the standard book, and is published accordingly by this authority, "As established by the Bishops, the Clergy and Laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, in Convention, on the 12th day of September, in the year of our Lord, 1801." By this we note that there is no claim made that God authorized the existence of these articles, but that they were products of men.

These articles of faith express the following ideas:

1. There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions. . . . And in unity of this God-head there be three persons, . . . the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

2. The Son, which is the word of the Father, begotten from everlasting of the Father, . . . who truly suffered, was crucified, dead, and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for actual sins of men.

3. As Christ died for us, and was buried, so also is it to be believed, that he went down to hell.

4. Christ did truly rise again from death, and took again his body, with flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature: Wherewith he ascended into heaven, and there sitteth, until he returns to judge all men at the last day.

5. The Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, is of one substance, majesty and glory with the Father and the Son, very and eternal God.

6. Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation; so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation. [They read the apocryphal books, yet do not apply them to prove any doctrine.]

7. The Old Testament is not contrary to the New: for both in the Old and New Testament everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ, who is the only Mediator between God and man, being both God and man. . . . No Christian man whatsoever is free from the obedience of the commandments which are called moral.

8. The Nicene Creed, and that which is commonly called the Apostles' Creed, ought thoroughly to be received and believed: for they may be proved by most certain warrants of Holy Scripture.

9. Original sin standeth, not in the following of Adam, as the Pelagians do vainly talk; but it is in the fault and corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam. . . .

10. The condition of man after the fall of Adam is such, that he cannot turn and prepare himself, by his own natural strength and good works, to faith and calling upon God. . . .

11. We are accounted righteous before God, only for the merit of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, by faith, and not for our own works or deservings. Wherefore, that we are justified by faith only, is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort. . . .

12. Albeit that good works, which are the fruits of faith, and follow after justification, cannot put away sins, and endure the severity of God's judgment. . . .

13. Works done before the grace of Christ, and the inspiration of his Spirit, are not pleasant to God, forasmuch as they spring not of faith in Jesus Christ, neither do they make men meet to receive grace, or deserve grace of congruity. . . .

14. Voluntary works besides, over and above, God's commandments, which they call works of supererogation, cannot be taught without a rogency and impiety. . . .

15. Christ in the truth of our nature was made like unto us in all things, sin only except, from which he was clearly void, both in his flesh and in his Spirit. . . .

16. Not every deadly sin willfully committed after baptism is sin against the Holy Ghost and unpardonable. . . . After we have received the Holy Ghost, we may depart from grace given, and fall into sin, and by the grace of God we may arise again, and amend our lives. And therefore, they are to be condemned, which say, they can no more sin as long as they live here, or deny the place of forgiveness to such as truly repent.

17. Predestination to life is the everlasting purpose of God, whereby (before the foundation of the world were laid) he hath constantly decreed by his counsel secret to us, to deliver from curse and damnation those whom he has chosen in Christ out of mankind, and to bring them by Christ to everlasting salvation as vessels made to honor. . . .

18. Holy Scripture doth set out unto us only the name of Jesus Christ, whereby men can be saved.

19. The visible church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men, in the which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacrament be duly ministered according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same. . . .

The church of Rome hath erred, not only in their living and manner of ceremonies, but also in matters of faith.

20. The church hath power to decree rites or ceremonies, and authority in controversies of faith; and yet it is not lawful for the church to ordain anything that is contrary to God's word written. . . .

21. (Of the authority of general councils.)

22. The Roman doctrine concerning purgatory, pardons, worshiping and adoration, as well of images as of relics, and also invocation of saints, is a fond thing vainly invented, and grounded upon no warranty of Scripture. . . .

23. It is not lawful for any man to take upon him the office of public preaching, or ministering the sacraments in the congregation, before he is lawfully called to this work by men who have public authority given unto them in the congregation to call and send ministers into the Lord's vineyard.

24. It is a thing plainly repugnant to the word of God, and the customs of the primitive church, to have public prayer in the church, or to minister the sacraments in a tongue not understood of the people.

25. Sacraments ordained of Christ . . . be certain sure witnesses, and effectual signs of grace, and God's will towards us, by the which he doth work invisibly in us. . . .

There are two sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the gospel, that is to say, Baptism, and the Supper of the Lord. . . .

26. Although in the visible church the evil be ever mingled with the good, and sometimes the evil hath chief authority in the ministrations of the word and sacraments, yet forasmuch as they do not the same in their own name, but in Christ's, and do minister by his commission and authority, we may use their ministry. . . . Neither is the effect of Christ's ordinance taken away by their wickedness. . . .

Nevertheless, it appertaineth to the discipline of the church that inquiry be made of evil ministers, . . . and finally, being found guilty, by just judgment be deposed.

27. Baptism is not only a sign of profession, and mark of difference, whereby Christian men are discerned from others that be not Christian, but it is also a sign of regeneration or new-birth, whereby, as by an instrument, they that receive baptism rightly are grafted into the church; the promises of the forgiveness of sin, and of our adoption to be the sons of God by the Holy Ghost are visibly signed and sealed; faith is confirmed, and grace increased by virtue of prayer unto God.

The baptism of young children is in anywise to be retained in the church, as most agreeable with the institution of Christ.

28. The supper of the Lord is not only a sign of the love that Christians ought to have among themselves one to another; but rather it is a sacrament of our redemption by Christ's death; insomuch that to such as rightly, worthily, and with faith, receive the same, the bread which we break is a partaking of the body of Christ; and likewise the cup of blessing is a partaking of the blood of Christ. . . .

The body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten, in the supper, only after an heavenly and spiritual manner.

29. The wicked who eat the sacrament partake to their condemnation.

30. The cup of the Lord is not to be denied to the lay-people. . . .

31. The offering of Christ once made is perfect redemption, propitiation and satisfaction for all the sins of the whole world, both original and actual; and there is none other satisfaction for sin but that alone. . . .

32. Bishops, priests, and deacons, are not commanded by God's law, either to vow the estate of single life, or to abstain from marriage; therefore, it is lawful for them, as for all other Christian men, to marry at their own discretion, as they shall judge the same to serve better to godliness.

33. That person which by open denunciation of the church is rightly cut off from the unity of the church and excommunicated, ought to be taken of the whole multitude of the faithful as an heathen and publican until he be openly reconciled by penance, and received into the church by a judge that has authority thereunto.

34. It is not necessary that traditions and ceremonies be in all places one, or utterly alike; for at all times they have been divers, and may be changed according to the diversity of countries, times and men's manners, so that nothing be ordained against God's word. . . .

Every particular or national church hath authority to ordain, change, and abolish ceremonies or rites of the church ordained only by man's authority, so that all things be done to edifying.

35. [On homilies, naming 21, claiming them "to be an explanation of Christian doctrine and instructive in piety and morals."]

36. Consecration of bishops and ministers should be done as "set forth by the General Convention of the church in 1792."

37. . . . We hold it to be the duty of all men who are professors of the gospel to pay respectful obedience to the civil authority regularly and legitimately constituted.

38. The riches and goods of Christians are not common, as touching the right, title, and possession of the same. . . .

Notwithstanding, every man ought, of such things as he possesseth, liberally to give alms to the poor, according to his ability.

39. . . . Christian religion doth not prohibit, but that a man may swear when the magistrate requireth, in the cause of faith and charity, so it be done according to the prophets' teaching, in justice, judgment, and truth.

ORDINATION OF BISHOPS, PRIESTS, AND DEACONS

The priest and deacon is to decide whether he is called, to assert his belief in the Old and New Testament Scriptures as containing all doctrine as essential for salvation, and to obligate himself to obey the bishop and other chief ministers who have charge over him.

The bishop is to be governed by the two first conditions, and must promise to drive away from the church all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's word. After all this with much more of formality they are to be ordained by the imposition of hands.

The prayers to be offered are nearly all printed to be read.

The communion is to be administered by the bishop.

There is a catechism to be learned by every person before being confirmed by the bishop. After the catechism is learned, confirmation is performed by the laying on of hands by the bishop.

There are forms prescribed for solemnizing marriages, visiting the sick, burial of the dead, churching of women, and there are forms of prayer for almost every condition in life.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

"THE ANGELS OF MONS"

[The following is taken from The Daily Record, published at Niagara Falls, Canada, October 1, and is the version of a reporter of that newspaper, of an address by Bishop R. C. Evans, on the evening of September 30. It is said the theater was packed to the doors. The paragraph in parenthesis, near the close, was supplied by the brother sending us the clipping. The incident concerning the appearance of heavenly personages as Mons is so well established that it is now considered as a matter of history. While not all agree on what was seen, there is no lack of confirmation of the fact that such an occurrence took place.—EDITORS.]

The Queen Theater was packed to overflowing last evening when Bishop R. C. Evans of Toronto gave a lecture on "The Angels of Mons," under the auspices of the Great War Veteran's Association.

The Canadian Shredded Wheat Bagpipe Band provided the music for the evening. They met at the city hall and marched to the theater, where they opened the program with their selection, "Midlothian pipe band," which the audience heartily applauded.

Mayor Clendening, who performed the part of chairman, then introduced Elder Place of the Latter Day Saints' Church, who led in prayer, after which the mayor stated the object of the meeting, and that it was in the interests of the Great War Veterans' Association. He commented on the poor attendance last Friday evening at the mass meeting in the city hall, and urged that all turn out to another meeting arranged for Thursday night, to take place also in the city hall, and to make up for last Friday's failure.

Bishop R. C. Evans, the speaker of the evening, was then introduced, and took the platform, stating that the people gathered there were not doing a favor to the returned boys, but were there to pay some slight respect for the courage and valor and sacrifice they have made for us. These soldiers are the custodians of our liberty, safety and salvation, and nothing that we can say or do, individually or collectively, should be considered a hardship on our part, when we think of all they have done and all they are doing for us and ours.

He took his text from the 34th Psalm, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them," and went on to say: "If there was no other promise in the Bible, here is an invulnerable promise; as invulnerable as the God that made it.

"Angels are ministering spirits sent to minister to those who are heirs to salvation. Why should it be thought incredible or strange that angels should appear at the Battle of Mons, or anywhere else that divine intervention was needed in the cause of right? In the momentous hour when the lives of hundreds of our fellows and the very cause of humanity were in danger, and no human help near at hand, why should not the Maker of the universe send divine aid?

"What are angels? Angels are men immortal. Moses and Elias were men and acted their part on the stage of humanity, but when the Master of men went up into the mount and was transfigured, Moses and Elias appeared also with Jesus there and blessed him. An angel appeared to the Apostle John and revealed to him the Revelation, and when John fell on his knees to worship him the angel said, 'Stand on thy feet, for I am one of thy fellow servants. Worship thou thy God.'

"Angels have had a great deal to do with the things of this life and of heaven. Some people think God made the Devil. But he did not. In the 14th of Isaiah we are told of the rebellion in heaven of Lucifer, the bearer of light, and his army of angels, who had grown envious and discontented and wished to be the God of heaven, and how Michael the archangel, with his host, defeated Lucifer, and he fell, as lightning from heaven to hell, to be cast into outer darkness forever.

"All through the Bible are recorded wars of God's chosen people against the unbelievers. The whole Christian life is warfare of the right against the wrong. Some people think war a sin and refuse to fight on account of religious sentiments, but any young man that can think of the invasion of Belgium, the murder of Edith Cavell, the terrible deeds wrought in Flanders, and say that no good man should speak out against this awful encroachment upon the rights of men and civilization, he has no Christianity. It is every man's business to stand in defense of the right and protection of injured innocence and virtue, and this is what the British armies and Allies are doing to-day."

The speaker went on to describe how impossible the story is that people have concocted of angels with great white wings, and pointed out that every time an angel has been recorded as appearing, it has been in human form, and they always appeared in some great crisis where right was battling against wrong. He cited the cases of the angels appearing to Abraham before the birth of his son, to Lot before the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, to Jacob when his name was changed to Israel. Also in the New Testament when an angel appeared to Elizabeth heralding the birth of John the Baptist; to Mary prior to the birth of Christ, to the shepherds of Bethlehem and to Joseph, when misunderstanding he would have done away with Mary, and last of all, when Jesus in his terrible agonizing battle with himself at Gethsemane, calling on God to take the cup of bitterness away, an angel came down and sustained him in his trial till he was able to say, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

A number of years ago, Bishop Evans stated, he was called upon to reply to a professor who was denouncing the theory of angels as preposterous and a fairy tale. Bishop Evans, in proving this wrong, took as an example the 26th of Matthew wherein it says: "And Jesus said, Think ye not that I can pray my Father and he will send me twelve legions of angels." A legion is 6,000, that would make 72,000 angels that Jesus knew if he wished, would come to his aid. Also in Revelations John states he saw ten thousand times ten thousand angels, which prove they are in existence, according to the authenticity of the Bible.

"You have not only been surprised about the angels of Mons," continued the speaker, "but you will continue to hear of angelic ministrations as the people come back nearer and nearer to God. Our prosperity has made us hard and domineering and we have forgotten Christianity and relegated God and his angels to things of the past, the result being that God has been practically set aside. But now he is being brought to the fore more and more each day. Through the British Empire flows the blood of Israel. Britain has been the custodian of the Bible all through the ages, and of civilization and humanity. She will win this war, and after humiliation will come her exaltation."

Bishop Evans then quoted from a little pamphlet the experience of the soldiers at Mons when divine intervention came to their aid, which is testified to by the few survivors of that wonderful battalion.

An officer of the battalion states that on August 28, when the Germans were pursuing them, host upon host, and all seemed lost, they were waiting, hoping against hope, for reinforcements from a French regiment, and with the Germans ready to charge, frustrated in every move by the watchfulness of German airplanes, that when they were ready for the worst and could do nothing but wait for the charge that would wipe them out, a strange radiance appeared, then a bright yellow light. In this light was depicted a man with gleaming golden hair, clad in golden armor, and mounted on a white horse. At that very moment the German cavalry swerved, turned and fled in complete disorder, saving the day for the British.

Others too have testified to the truth of this strange phenomenon, and on their deathbeds have told the tale of the angel of Mons. Nurses and priests can tell of these stories told by the men of that battalion when in the hospitals and at confession.

The Germans, too, cannot deny that there was something strange and wonderful occurred at Mons. "Devilish" they call it. They have been known to relate in Berlin that at the charge just when the word to advance upon the British forces was given their horses came to a complete stop, reared on their haunches as though at the edge of a precipice, or facing some terrible danger, and swerving, tore back with them, and they powerless to stop the terrified animals.

"And why should not God intervene?" went on the Bishop. "If there was ever a nation that has ever stood for civilization, honor, virtue and right, it is Britain."

He told how about twenty-three years ago the King of Abyssinia took a British subject prisoner, and threw him in a dungeon at Magdala, and how when England, after a lapse of six months, found out about the outrage, commanded the King to release him, and getting a refusal, sent 15,000 men to his rescue. They marched 700 miles to the fortress of Magdala, which they tore down to obtain his release, and took him back with them to his home in England. It cost England $25,000,000 to save one man. And if when her honor was involved in the saving of one of her subjects, she spent that vast amount of money in sending these forces so far across ocean and mountains, how much more should she do when again she is called to defend her honor, and the rights of humanity? "This is what England has done. Could the God of heaven refuse to give her aid in her hour of need?"

"I have tried to convey to you a proper conception of the glorious flag under which we live, and our understanding of what England and the British Empire means to us in the light of debauchery and criminality in evidence on the battlefield of Flanders.

"What would have become of our women and children had she refused to don the armor of war? Once Germany had reached England the United States would have been helpless, and Canada would have been the prize of Germany and her people slaves."

The bishop concluded his speech with an appeal to the people to turn out on Thursday night to the mass meeting in aid of the returned soldiers.

(He pleaded with the audience present to fear God, appealing to the men to keep the promises they had made to their wives and sweethearts; to keep themselves clean and healthy and unstained from the curse that has blighted the army, and in the hour of their weakness God would protect them to defend a right against wrong.)

The Kilties then interspersed with a selection, "Glendaruel Highlanders," and being encored, played "The barren rocks of Aden."

Mayor Clendening then called upon Mr. Coates, president of the Niagara Falls branch of the Great War Veterans' Association, to give a few words.

Mr. Coates stated that the men had now to meet in the armories, but were trying to get a suitable club house where they could talk together. Coming back from the front they were different and felt constrained in the presence of others, but wanted a quiet place to meet and talk and get advice. He gave some interesting experiences of his service at the front, and told of the hardships the boys had to endure, and appealed to the public to lighten their condition when they came back. He appealed for financial aid, but said what the boys wanted most of all was sympathy, and begged the citizens to show their interest and sympathy by turning out to the mass meeting on Thursday.

Mayor Clendening then tendered a vote of thanks to Bishop Evans for the splendid talk, and the gathering dispersed after singing the national anthem.

The Kilties formed up once more outside the theater, and to the stirring tune of "Lochiel's farewell to Glasgow," swung up Queen Street and to the Trennick Hotel, where they dispersed.

DOING GOOD WORK IN OHIO CAMPAIGN

The Dry Booster, published at Columbus, Ohio, on behalf of the coming vote for prohibition gives a little over a page and a half to Brother C. W. Clark, including his photograph. It is certainly a record of which to be proud and it will be noted pays tribute not only to himself, but through him to the church. We quote in part:

We owe this man a tribute.

That's why we are exhibiting his "physog" and writing these lines.

Clark has his work—like other men. He also has spare time after working hours.

The difference between Clark and some men is—the manner in which that spare time is spent.

A great many men want to see Ohio go dry—not every man, however, is willing to take time or make the sacrifice to help put it dry.

However, we have always found—we are never too busy to do the things we want to do.

From this we deduct the inference that if men of this organization want to see Ohio go dry badly enough, they'll not be too busy to help make it dry.

Mr. Clark has made Ohio dry first after his own work.

We submit the proof:

Clark, as division commander for his church—The Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints—is held responsible for two precincts.

He might have attempted to secure helpers—failing he might have neglected the job—or probably phoned in and said, "No use; it can't be done"—but this isn't the point.

The work had to be done and he went at it—secured the helpers, if you please—and did it.

He not only made a very thorough poll of his division, but incidentally secured nearly 400 signers to the dry petition in the two precincts.

The next nearest division consisted of five precincts in equally as fertile territory, and they secured 360 signers.

All of which reminds us that Mr. Clark and his captains, having only two precincts, stood first—not only in the largest number of signers to the precinct, but in the total number of signers.

We said he was using his spare time to help make Ohio dry. We have proved it.

But for good measure, Mr. Clark voluntarily spent several evenings and Saturday afternoons last July at the campaign office acting as a notary, and lest we forget, he is now one of the volunteer speakers for the noon-day factory meetings—giving us the assurance that he stands ready to go every noon if needed.

He also finds time to drop in occasionally to see if there is anything he might do.

And by the way, we might add that Mr. Clark also has a daughter whose services he volunteered for office work, and we have had occasion to use her several times.

In conclusion—

We are glad that we have many other men in the organization who are making every sacrifice in helping make Ohio dry. We should like to make mention of them here—they deserve every credit—but for the present at least, it's hats off to C. W. Clark.

AN IOWA GERMAN MOTHER

We hear and read much these days of treasonable acts and speech, but little is said of the spirit of patriotism displayed by a large majority of the German-Americans. The following story was told the writer by Mrs. R. J. Johnston, wife of State Representative Johnston, of Humbolt, while at the State Fair at Des Moines this fall. Mrs. Johnston was going over to the fair grounds on a street car one morning, and on the same car was a German lady, who, because of the bustle and throng of the city, appeared to be a bit confused and appeared to be unable to make the street car conductor understand her questions. Mrs. Johnston finally intervened, saying that if they would permit her to talk to the lady in German, they might be able to get somewhere. This she did and learned that the German mother was on her way to the fair grounds to visit a son who was a member of the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth regiment, about to be moved to Long Island. She said that she had four other sons who had enlisted in the regular army and that her youngest, the sixth son, had been conscripted. Mrs. Johnston assured her that she would have no difficulty in obtaining an exemption for her youngest son as she had already given five boys to the service of the country, and she certainly could get the youngest boy out. To her surprise the mother replied: "I don't want him out. I want him to go."—Belmond (Iowa) Herald.

RIGHT

"The secret of success, as I reason it out, must be something that will protect a weak person against a strong one—and work everything out all right. There I've said the word."

"You've said a number. Which is the one?"

Anxiety not to seem either young or didactic or a prig made my tone apologetic.

"There's such a thing as Right, written with a capital. If I persist in doing Right—still with a capital—then nothing but right can come of it."

"Oh, can't it!"

"I know it sounds like a platitude——"

"No, it doesn't," he interrupted rudely, "because a platitude is something obviously true; and this isn't."

I felt some relief.

"Oh, isn't it? Then I'm glad. I thought it must be."

"You won't go on thinking it. Suppose you do right and somebody else does wrong?"

"Then I should be willing to back my way against his. Don't you see? That's the point. That's the secret I'm telling you about. Right works, wrong doesn't."

"That's all very fine——"

"It's all very fine because it's so. Right is—what's the word William James put into the dictionary?"

He suggested pragmatism.

"That's it. Right is pragmatic, which I suppose is the same thing as practical. Wrong must be impractical; it must be——"

"But I'm going to bank on it. It's where I'm to have him at a disadvantage. If he does wrong while I do right—why, then I'll get him on the hip."

"How do you know he's going to do wrong?"

"I don't. I merely surmise it. If he does right——"

"He'll get you on the hip."

"No, because there can't be a right for him which isn't a right for me. There can't be two rights, each contrary to the other. That's not in common sense. If he does right then I shall be safe—which-ever way I have to take it. Don't you see? That's where the success comes in as well as the secret. It can't be any other way. Please don't think I'm talking in what H. G. Wells calls the tin-pot style—but one must express oneself somehow. I'm not afraid, because I feel as if I'd got something that would hang about me like a magic cloak."—Basil King, in The Saturday Evening Post, June 18, 1917.

THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

"The laws and instructions contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants (we refer to the 1835 edition) if put into practical operation will make of men but little below the nature of angels. So also is it true of that portion of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants which relates to the financial affairs of the people of God. The law of consecration and inheritance as outlined in this book, is calculated to purge every particle of selfishness and greed from the hearts of all who will willingly obey it."—Searchlight, p. 238. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 45, p. 487.)

"Many a man gets a pretty bad fall from being thrown on his own resources."

"Time works wonders, and so would some people if they were as tireless as time."

"Go to it and do it. Beautiful plans will never put sugar on your bread."

A Tooth and Its Care---Part 1

(Delivered by Doctor G. W. Rodgers, of Sedalia, Missouri, at the Holden Stake reunion, August 18, 1917.)

I shall endeavor to give such knowledge as I can that will be of some use and interest, in simple language, leaving out technicalities in order that all may understand.

"A tooth and its care." It is a little subject, but one which many of us have found at times, rather disagreeable to deal with, often wearing out our patience as well as that of everyone in our immediate vicinity! As a rule we can place the responsibility of such a condition upon ourselves, because of neglect of the little "subject." At least that has been my case for a time or two in the past, when in my eagerness to care for the teeth of others, I have neglected my own, until they gave me sharp warning!

We know from their writings that scientific men, especially those engaged in the medical science and its branches, have come to the knowledge that it is through the mouth that about ninety per cent of the ailments of the body come. What said the Great Physician, years ago? Be ye clean in body and thought. This was included in the law, thousands of years ago; it is no less true to-day. We believe this includes the mouth and its organs of mastication. Our mouths, together with our respiratory tracts, are the entrances for all things for the body, and it behooves us to give special care that they are kept clean. We should take nothing within that would injure our bodies or render them unclean, for in doing so, we not only do injustice to our bodies, but likewise retard the growth of a righteous spirit.

A tooth is a small organ, of a bony character, composed of the hardest particles of the body-formation. Collectively, they are the most important organs of mastication, the tongue, cheeks and lips aiding.

At birth, a babe (with few exceptions) has no teeth; yet their development started long before that time, from what we term the tooth follicle, or tooth bud. There is a case on record where a child has its entire set of teeth at birth; also record of several which have grown to manhood without obtaining a single tooth, either temporary or permanent. Normally, during the early part of fetal life—about the seventh week—there appears on the border of the jaw a ridge of tissue epithelium, known as the dental ridge. This tissue is deflected inward at each point where a tooth is likely to be formed, becoming concave in shape, like a cup. This is called the enamel organ, and corresponds in size and shape to the dental organ which is formed and arises from below. This dental organ, or matrix, begins to assume the shape of the tooth about the ninth week, and at the end of the twelfth week, the follicles or buds of the deciduous, or first teeth, are complete and rest in a groove in the jaw. This enamel and dentine organ is nothing more than the matrix or form, to establish the shape of the enamel and dentine of the tooth. It is within these that the hard, or mineral substance is deposited by special cells, which disappear after their work is completed. The crowns of the first teeth are nearly all calcified at birth.

The follicles, or buds, of the permanent teeth are formed from the stems of the buds of the temporary teeth, and are all formed before birth, with the exception of the second and third molars.

Normally, the first temporary tooth is erupted when the babe is from five to seven months old, although this time may vary two or three months either way. What a commotion is set up when that first tooth is discovered! Everybody must examine it, and comment upon it; the telephone is kept busy carrying the discovered news; a post card is hurriedly dispatched to grandma—all to the very great wonderment of the child!

A mother may ask when the hygiene of the teeth should begin. I would answer, "before the teeth are erupted, or immediately after the birth of the babe. Its mouth should be kept in the same hygienic condition as when containing teeth. This may be accomplished by the daily wash of some simple antiseptic solution, such as boric acid in sterilized or boiled water. This may be done by wrapping cotton about a stick of suitable size, or, as some prefer, about the finger. If the baby is fed from the nursing bottle, great care should be exercised to see that the bottles and nipples are kept absolutely sterile, to prevent infantile affections within the mouth or throat. Especially should this care be particular about the time or during the time of the eruption of the teeth, for the reason that as the tooth cuts through the mucous membrane, it gives opening through which infection may very readily enter the tissues.

When the child is two and a half to three years old, it should have all its first teeth—ten above and ten below—twenty in all. The child should be taught the use of the tooth brush, and the object, before this time, or as soon as it can understand. A child likes to imitate and thus it may be given a tooth brush of its own at an early age, and taught to form the habit of brushing its teeth (using a brush adapted in size,) at the same time and in the same way as its mother does. This with the child, as with the grown person, should become a habit—a very necessary part of the daily toilet.

Current Events

(The following from our superintendent of the department of Current Events, will be found most suggestive and helpful to those of our members who will be interested in taking up this subject in a regular way this winter. The superintendent will be glad to advise, or outline work, in response to request! Address Mrs. Gertrude Sessions, Fresno, California.)

The study of current events by our auxiliary women should be considered as necessary and valuable as the perusal of the morning paper. None of us can afford to be ignorant of the social and scientific movements of this momentous age.

Some women's clubs have a current event day each quarter; others devote a few minutes of each session to a review of important events. The latter method will perhaps be found the most practical and satisfactory. More may be accomplished in a short time, if the matter is divided into topics, with a special work assigned to different committees, or to each individual member, if it is wished to have the reports made in response to roll call. Some suggested divisions are: politics, economics, science, war news.

While newspapers assist us in obtaining knowledge of the world's happenings, research should not be confined to them. Editorials often give the meaning and importance of the day's events, but editors vary in kind and quality.

Monthly reviews, such as Review of Reviews, or World's Work, are very good. Articles in such weeklies as The Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, The Independent, and others, by men who are in positions to give the truest insight into conditions, should be read.

Some of the able correspondents who are writing from Europe, China, and Mexico are Samuel Blythe, Will Payne, George Kibbe Turner, Will Irwin, and Carl Ackerman. Special attention may be called to the articles on Russia, by Charles E. Russell. One will be found in Collier's for September 22, entitled "Democracy in Russia." The same issue contains an interesting scientific article entitled "Gordon Edwards, the man who conquered pain."

The Popular Science Monthly will be found very fine and reliable on every topic of scientific research. Another publication well-liked is The National Geographic Magazine.

Let us enter into this year's study with the strong desire to make ourselves more intelligent and efficient for the Master's work.

GERTRUDE SESSIONS.

Asked at a Reunion Auxiliary Meeting

Query: What value would you attach to play as a factor in the development of a child?

Reply: by Sister Dora Howland: This is indeed a broad subject to be answered so briefly, but it is also very interesting.

Educators and parents of to-day have very different ideas upon many subjects than those that were taught fifty or more years ago. Play was then thought to be only for the young child, and not to be indulged in too constantly, or too noisily, even by him! Work was always recognized as work, and so performed—never to be mixed with play.

How much better the modern method, of making work attractive by turning it into play! The child, in the kindergarten, first learns to play and work together. Play is his work, and work is his play. As he grows and develops, he is provided with larger fields for the exercise of his play-spirit. The finely equipped playgrounds provided by our cities where children may play under the watchcare and guidance of trained leaders, are evidences of our fuller realization of the value this tendency has in his life. Wholesome, entertaining play develops the child mentally, physically, and morally. He is taught lessons in play which are of value to him all his life, such as fairness, courtesy, honest dealing, and consideration. Where a child has been taught to play fairly, to be "on the square" with his playmates, to be willing to "give and take" good-naturedly, we will later find a business man who carries the same principles into his activities in the world.

Those who have made such things a study, have thought play of enough importance as an educational factor, to have brought about its emphasis in the preparation for teaching. In the normal schools of the country we find courses of study for those wishing to teach or supervise in the playground department; and most cities have a salaried official whose business is to plan for the play of the young, and to supervise the same.

Play, or pleasure of the right sort, creates cheerfulness; cheerfulness developed in a child, gives him one of the greatest assets in life—both for business and for character. It helps him to get more out of life, and to put more into it,—more of that which is worth while. Good spirits make for good digestion; while melancholy, or overwork, undermine health of body and mind.

Success in business depends upon the art of pleasing. The cheerful executive is taking the place of the old driving force in the business world. The man who has learned how to play, how to relax, how to enjoy, is the one who is most cheerful, most successful. Cheerfulness costs nothing, yet is a gift or accomplishment beyond price. The merry heart goes all the way; the sad one tires in a mile.

"All work and no play, makes Jack a dull boy." Shall we deny our future men and women this prime requisite of happiness,—this talisman of success, by denying to the child his God-given right to play, and the joy of life?

15,000 Mothers Die in the United States

More women 15 to 45 years of age die in the United States from conditions incident to maternity than from any other cause except tuberculosis. And since 1900, while the death rates from tuberculosis, typhoid, diphtheria and croup, and certain other preventable diseases have been greatly reduced, the available figures for the death registration area show no decrease in the proportion of mothers whose lives are sacrificed yearly to ignorance and improper care in childbirth.

These facts and their causes, with a detailed study of maternal death rates in the United States and foreign countries, are set forth in a bulletin on Maternal Mortality by Doctor Grace L. Meigs, which has just been issued by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

Doctor Meigs emphasizes the inseparable connection between the life and health of the mother and the life and health of her baby. She points out that the 15,000 maternal deaths which occur annually in the United States are largely preventable; that these 15,000 deaths are merely a rough index of unmeasured preventable illness among mothers; and that the protection of mothers is essential to the saving of babies' lives.

How can the protection of mothers be accomplished?

Two underlying causes are assigned for the present conditions:

First. The hazards have been either ignored or accepted as unavoidable. "Knowledge of the need for good care at childbirth is essential; the lack of such knowledge and of a demand for this care has been, probably, the chief factor in producing the present indifference to this phase of preventive medicine. Communities are still to a great extent indifferent to or ignorant of the number of lives of women lost yearly from childbirth."

"The second fundamental cause—the difficulty of obtaining adequate care—is seen to depend to a large extent on the first. As women, their husbands, physicians, and communities realize the absolute need of skilled care, methods for providing it will be developed."

The city problem and the rural problem are both discussed.

Even in a city well supplied with clinics and hospitals the number of women served by them is small in comparison with the number who bear their children without receiving adequate care. Certain sections of the population depend on ignorant midwives. But the reader is reminded that women of moderate means who cannot pay large fees and who will not visit a clinic sometimes receive the least benefit from improvements in standards of care.

"In rural districts many women bear their children with no attendant other than the husband, a relative, or a neighbor. The nearest physician may be miles away, the nearest hospital much farther."

Doctor Meigs refers to the work for maternal and child welfare which has been developed in New Zealand and in Canada, and suggests a "unit plan" for a rural county in this country to include:

A rural nursing service, centering at the county seat, with nurses especially trained to recognize dangerous symptoms in prospective mothers.

An accessible county center to which mothers could come for information about personal hygiene.

A cottage hospital or beds in an accessible general hospital, especially for the proper care of abnormal cases.

Skilled attendance obtainable by each mother in the county.—Government Bulletin.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Prussian Views--From a German

[The following letter is of interest because it is from a German and shows the recognition of a philosophy which has puzzled many of our readers. Surprising as it may be, it still would seem from the great preponderance of evidence, that in twenty or thirty years a decided change has been taking place in Germany and a people trained in Prussianism and the idea of war as a good thing. It presents, indeed, a very grave problem. We would not print this, even though well established as it is, were it not that it is sent in by a German, and so we submit it for what it is worth.—EDITORS.]

DELAVAN LAKE, WISCONSIN, September 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: Am sending the following for our valuable paper, believing it will be of great worth to our readers. I am of German descent, my grandfather on my father's side not speaking a word other than the German language until he was thirteen years of age. The sentiments expressed herein have much the same ring as that advocated by Brigham Young and Alexander Dowie wherein it says we are morally and intellectually superior beyond all comparison. I wonder if it was all actuated by the same spirit. Mr. Dowie made a similar statement as the above in the Leaves of Healing, several years ago when comparing himself with our elders.

Perhaps many of our readers do not know what the Prussian creed is. Therefore we will give it here verbatim as given by Owen Wister in the Pentecost of Calamity, published by the Macmillan Company.

Sincerely your brother in the gospel,

F. M. BALL.

"The following is an embodiment, a composite statement, of Prussianism, compiled sentence by sentence from the utterances of Prussians, the Kaiser and his generals, professors, editors, and Nietzsche, part of it said in cold blood, years before this war, and all of it a declaration of faith now being ratified by action:

"We Hohenzollerns take our crown from God alone. On me the Spirit of God has descended. I regard my whole . . . task as appointed by heaven. Who opposes me I shall crush to pieces. Nothing must be settled in this world without the intervention . . . of . . . the German Emperor. He who listens to public opinion runs a danger of inflicting immense harm on . . . the State. When one occupies certain positions in the world one ought to make dupes rather than friends. Christian morality cannot be political. Treaties are only a disguise to conceal other political aims. Remember that the German people are the chosen of God.

"Might is right and . . . is decided by war. Every youth who enters a beer-drinking and dueling club will receive the true direction of his life. War in itself is a good thing. God will see to it that war always recurs. The efforts directed toward the abolition of war must not only be termed foolish, but absolutely immoral. The peace of Europe is only a secondary matter for us. The sight of suffering does one good; the infliction of suffering does one more good. This war must be conducted as ruthlessly as possible.

"The Belgians should not be shot dead. They should be . . . so left as to make impossible all hope of recovery. The troops are to treat the Belgian civil population with unrelenting severity and frightfulness. Weak nations have not the same right to live as powerful . . . nations. The world has no longer need of little nationalities. We Germans have little esteem and less respect . . . for Holland. We need to enlarge our colonial possessions; such territorial acquisitions we can only realize at the cost of other states.

"Russia must no longer be our frontier. The Polish press should be annihilated . . . likewise the French and Danish. . . . The Poles should be allowed . . . three privileges: to pay taxes, serve in the army, and shut their jaws. France must be so completely crushed that she will never again cross our path. You must remember that we have not come to make war on the French people, but to bring them the higher civilization. The French have shown themselves decadent and without respect for the divine law. Against England we fight for booty. Our real enemy is England. We have to . . . crush absolutely perfidious Albion . . . subdue her to such an extent that her influence all over the world is broken forever.

"German should replace English as the world language. English, the bastard tongue . . . must be swept into the remotest corners . . . until it has returned to its original elements of an insignificant pirate dialect. The German language acts as a blessing which, coming direct from the hand of God, sinks into the heart like a precious balm. To us, more than any other nation, is intrusted the true structure of human existence. Our own country, by employing military power, has attained a degree of culture which it could never have reached by peaceful means.

"The civilization of mankind suffers every time a German becomes an American. Let us drop our miserable attempts to excuse Germany's action. We willed it. Our might shall create a new law in Europe. It is Germany that strikes. We are morally and intellectually superior beyond all comparison. . . . We must . . . fight with Russian beasts, English mercenaries and Belgian fanatics. We have nothing to apologize for. It is no consequence whatever if all the monuments ever created, all the pictures ever painted, all the buildings ever erected by the great architects of the world, be destroyed. The ugliest stone placed to mark the burial of a German grenadier is a more glorious monument than all the cathedrals of Europe put together. No respect for the tombs of Shakespeare, Newton and Faraday.

"They call us barbarians. What of it? The German claim must be: . . . Education to hate. . . . Organization of hatred. . . . Education to the desire for hatred. Let us abolish unripe and false shame. . . . To us is given faith, hope and hatred; but hatred is the greatest among them."

Bishop Evans Lectures at Niagara Falls

I told you in my last letter we were going to have a rally here in behalf of celebrating the opening of the addition to our church. Brother Place and I made arrangements to have Bishop R. C. Evans come and give one of those grand lectures on the unchangeability of God. The most interesting subject of present time is the story of the angels at the Battle of Mons. Bishop did justice to this. He quoted scripture to show that angels in the past had encamped around about them and the love and fear of the Lord delivered them. He did not want for scripture to prove that angels are real beings, not all dead or on long journeys as some churches have them, but were heavenly messengers of God, and God was ever ready to send them to defend the right against wrong.

The Queens Theater was packed to the doors and a large crowd was turned away. The Shredded Wheat Kilties Band furnished the music and a collection was taken up in behalf of the returned soldiers. This amounted to eighty-seven dollars and seventy-seven cents. The soldiers declared this was the first that had been done in the way of showing appreciation for the returned soldiers for what they had done for Canada.

The lecture is the talk of the city and will no doubt remove a lot of the prejudice about the angel story of our church, although he did not touch on this. He gave them the milk first. We feel satisfied from the statements of Doctor Musgrove, M. P. P. and Mayor Clendening that Bishop Evans will be requested to return to the Falls for another lecture.

Publishing Names of Enlisted Men

[The question the brother raises is an important one, and has been given due consideration by a number of us. So far we have not arrived at a definite plan by which we can work. To furnish literature to approximately seven hundred men, or keep a standing register of their names and addresses is no small affair as will be recognized. We desire to make the publications serve the best interests of all their readers and are therefore willing to have the matter discussed.—EDITORS.]

It is a great privilege to be able to write you at this time. My former letters brought a number of replies, and for them I feel grateful. Under these very trying conditions it is hard to live as we have been accustomed. While the echoes of war are resounding on our shores, camps are being built, troops are being mobilized, industry taxed to its utmost to feed this grim monster and homes are being stripped of their manhood, while sorrowing mothers are lamenting the departure of loved ones, sacrificing their all for the cause of liberty, we recognize these as perilous times. It all makes us wonder about the future. Now, if ever, we must all shine in our daily life, and show that the gospel of the ages is the gospel tried and found trustworthy. My prayer is that we all may have in our hearts an abundance of this gospel and put it to the test.

While there are many things from time to time that serve to make us discouraged, yet we must all live in faith, looking forward to the time when peace shall abound.

I would suggest that inasmuch as there are so many of our young men in the service that the church, either as individual branches or as the general body, take some action in making a register wherein the names and addresses of all enlisted Saints may be had and those inclined could send a line when they chose. I received several days ago a package of magazines. They were specially marked and all good articles were pointed out. This was a fine suggestion and I hope it is carried further. I am fortunate in having the HERALD sent regularly, but would appreciate any letters containing current events, etc. I will be glad to hear from anyone and I know all our Saints in the service feel the same way.

Yours in gospel service,

WILLIAM M. SAUTER.

From Here and There

We are informed that Brother Harvey Sandy has moved to 511 Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. He is a member of the general Gospel Literature Commission.

The pleasing countenance of Apostle F. M. Sheehy was noted in Lamoni on the 10th, he being in town for a brief visit in the interests of church work.

Brother G. R. Wells is in Independence, Missouri, this week on a trip in the interests of the Sunday school work, especially as it pertains to the Quarterly work.

Brother R. W. Farrell tells us that he will confine his lecture efforts to one subject, and that "Hamlet." There are many calls in for the lectures listed in the recent announcement of the general board, some as far ahead as February.

Brother R. W. Farrell says: "Organized a boy scout troop in the church last night (October 2) with full quota of thirty-two and three assistant scoutmasters. The boys are enthusiastic."

Mr. and Mrs. John Emmert Ehrke are at home in 1304 East Twenty-seventh Street, Kansas City, Missouri, where they will welcome their friends. Mrs. Ehrke was before her marriage Miss Marie Riggs.

"Booster Day—Sunday, October 14," announces the latest circular from the pastor of the Boston Branch and O. R. Miller, the missionary in that territory. By the use of literature of this kind, they are getting favorable results.

Mrs. Lillie Pou, of Faulkner, Kansas, says there has not been any preaching there for years and would be glad if any elders could call on them. She lives three fourths of a mile north of town and is a daughter of Brother W. S. Taylor.

In order that no one should forget his duty on October 15 when the voters of Iowa record their convictions on constitutional prohibition, Lamoni has been divided into districts and each voter visited by a member of a committee chosen for that purpose.

Brother Horace Darby is the only missionary under conference appointment in Minnesota at present, but he desires to do the best he can to cover the field. He would like to hear from any isolated members in the Minnesota District who desire missionary work done in their neighborhood this winter. Address him at Knife River, Minnesota, care Samuel Flores.

Any of our lads at Camp Funston, Kansas, should call on Private Harry Burrows, Fourteenth Company, One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Depot Brigade. Evidently because of a missent call to the colors, he was taken very suddenly from his home at Chetopa, Kansas, and finds the leaving of wife and relatives a great trial.

Brother Oscar Okerlind is at present at Cawood, Missouri, preaching in the Christian church, assisted by W. B. Torrance, whom he speaks of as always willing and ready to help in every good work. Sister Annie Torrance, his daughter, plays the organ, so they have good music. Attendance is fair. The Guilford Saints are preparing for the stake conference, October 12 and 14.

The Saints' reunion at North Platte, Nebraska, is reported in detail by Sister Lillie M. Richards, of that place. We extract the following items: It was the most successful reunion ever held in the district, Saints coming from all directions as far as seventy-five miles. The services were inspirational and much appreciated, special mention being made of the question services at four p. m. each day. The next reunion is to be held at North Platte.

A letter from Brother A. G. Miller, incloses another, from the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Fort Screven, Georgia, in which he points out that the War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association deemed it wise since the association is nonsectarian, that sectarian literature be not placed in the Y. M. C. A. reading rooms. "We can use Bibles and Testaments and religious literature in general that pertains to no special doctrine, and would appreciate anything you can furnish in that line," he says. We sent him some copies of the HERALD and Autumn Leaves.

The Akron (Ohio) Press, of October 5, tells of the unearthing of stone implements and metal tools from a mound in Summit County, Ohio. One was a piece of copper about an inch and a half in length, about as thick as a lead pencil. The other is described as "small lump of iron, which was once evidently a crude model of a human head. But the effect of the damp clay in which the iron was buried has nearly effaced the modeling." It is pointed out as a peculiar and striking feature that none of the relics found were flint, but of a peculiar, rust-colored stone, which a state official had termed iron stone. The whole top of the mound was walled with stone. The relics found are to be placed in the Columbus Museum.

Brother J. F. Mintun desires us to note his change in address as 1504 Dorr Street, Toledo, Ohio. He has recently moved to the new location.

Brother Audre M. Fisher, of Camp McArthur, Waco, Texas, would like to meet any Saints in the army there, or any others. He is in Company L, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Infantry, National Guard.

The Wellington (Ohio) Enterprise publishers print a commendatory article on the new rubber tire factory with which Brother Eben Miller is connected at that place. They state that orders are booked as far ahead as nine months and it is expected that the factory will be in full operation before spring.

The Food Conservation Administration has, on request of President Wilson, postponed the closing of the campaign till the week of October 28 to November 4, on account of the conflict with the closing week of the Liberty Loan Campaign. Every housewife is asked to sign a pledge card, agreeing to do her utmost to conserve the Nation's food resources.

Some districts are still debating whether or not the schools should print the names of the pupils giving Christmas offering or it be represented by a single line, with the name of the school. It is still a matter of personal choice and should be so considered by those contributing. The saving is considerable, as has been pointed out, yet there are many who think the children should not be compelled to do all the saving.

TAYLORVILLE, ILLINOIS, September 18, 1917.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD for some time which I surely love to read. I am glad to learn through the letters of the advancement of the cause. But not seeing any letters from this part of the Lord's vineyard, I decided to write. I am only young in the work, but we have received many blessings, seen the manifestation of God's power in many ways, dreams, visions, healing of the sick, etc. We were baptized in June, 1915, by Elder William Grice as we lived in Eastern Michigan at that time, where we had moved from here (Taylorville) in February, 1913. We never had heard of the gospel until about nine months before we enlisted in the army of the Lord.

We returned home last November and have felt sad many times with the conditions that do exist. There are but few Saints here. None at all in the little country town where we live which is about nine miles from church. We have been unable to get any meetings started here yet. I hope we may in the near future for I feel that the Lord has much people in this place. Elders Baker and Fulk held street meetings for several weeks in Taylorville this summer to a very indifferent people.

The common people here are quite distinctly divided into the union and nonunion laborers and the gospel is represented principally by the former class. That is where Eastern Michigan is far ahead of this. Those acquainted with Michigan know she has done a great work for the church among the farmers, and many of the farmers here are as ignorant of the gospel as I was, not knowing of such a church in existence. They are as fine as the Michigan farmer, but the gospel has never been introduced among them.

I am not farming now, but feel very near them and would be glad for any advice that would bring us all in closer touch with each other. Anything that tends towards unity helps the cause along.

We need the prayers of the Saints for the advancement of the work here and to help us over the rough places of this life. I would like to ask a question. I heard one of our elders say some two years ago, that before this great war a number of nations signed a pledge to try for a year to settle all difficulties by arbitration before declaring war. They broke their pledge and of course brought God's judgment upon them. Did the United States sign that pledge? If so, can we expect anything else than the Lord to place a curse upon this Nation, when she would declare war without trying for a year to settle by arbitration? Can we, as Saints, expect God's blessing on the church if we proclaim war and uphold any government in breaking a pledge? This seems a very serious thing to me. Have I in any way the wrong idea? I want to take a firm stand for the right and stay with it, but I cannot see where we should boost war under such conditions. If united, we stand, and divided we fall, surely we are doomed to fall, for the division in the land is great.

I love the boys of this land. Being only young myself and having many friends in different States, I dislike to see them go to Europe when they will be needed so badly at home, in the near future. It may be that I see farther ahead than some, as I have been shown by the Spirit of God the strife and turmoil that awaits this land, and when that shall have come, how will we feel, with the choicest of our boys, the pride of our Nation, driven from home? On the other hand, if we had spent one year doing all we could trying to settle by arbitration and would have failed notwithstanding, we could have prepared our soldiers in case of need. Then, even the German sympathizers would have turned bitter against the Kaiser.

I truly was pleased with the HERALD of September 12, especially topic under heading, "Spiritual manifestations at Lamoni reunion," beginning at top of page 867, first column. This is one of the things I have been listening for ever since I knew anything of the church, for I am persuaded that while the world calls it nonsense and the scientists pronounce it impossible, the Lord will bring forth some of these things.

I will close by adding my testimony that I know this work is of God, and to my brothers and sisters in Michigan, will say we would be glad to receive a letter from any of you, though I have but little time to write. Address me Route 6, Taylorville, Illinois.

In gospel bonds,

GUY E. MOSES.

[Prior to the war, the United States was instrumental in negotiating several treaties with different of the world nations or powers, requiring that any matters of dispute should be submitted to arbitration and that one year should elapse. Such a treaty was offered to Germany. It was negotiated by Mr. Bryan with several of the leading powers of Europe and elsewhere. Germany refused, however, to sign. This was not a joint act, but was a treaty between the United States and other individual governments. Our recollection is that England and France signed such treaties and that between twenty or thirty such treaties had been signed before the outbreak of this war. In the case of this war, the Teutonic nations had not signed such a treaty, and not only began the war, but also engaged in acts of war against the United States. The United States had entered protest without avail and endeavored to adjust. It had occurred not once, but many times prior to the outbreak of the war. Some had suggested that the United States Government had warned Germany more than four times and had suffered more than four offenses. We submit this for what it may be worth. But this is at least the basis on which the United States is at war, the continued declaration and action against this Government. The United States broke no such terms in entering the war. The church has not proclaimed war, nor are we prepared to say that the war is not the result of wrong conditions in the world, as we think it possible that it is.—EDITORS.]

FLINT, MICHIGAN, September 24, 1917.

Editors Herald: We report the Bay Port, Michigan, and the Blaine, Michigan, two-day meetings held September 8 and 9 and 15 and 16, respectively.

At Bay Port, there were eleven meetings held, including three prayer meetings, one priesthood, six preaching, and one round table. Attendance was good, filling the church at most every meeting. On Monday morning, the third prayer meeting was held. There was a good Spirit present and the gift of tongues was manifested, speaking to four of the brethren and the Saints in the interpretation. Later, three other brethren were spoken to. These meetings were a source of strength to all the Saints attending.

At Blaine, there were nine meetings held including two prayer and seven preaching services. The preaching was of high order and good advice was given to both Saints and non-member. The Sunday morning prayer service was one of the best ever attended. In two hours there were eleven prayers, nineteen songs, sixty-five testimonies, and four gifts of prophecy.

It was big undertaking for the few at Blaine, but each felt repaid for the effort put forth.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, October 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: Since last reporting to your valuable pages, our pastor, Brother S. S. Smith, has baptized four in the font at the church, and two at the Valley Branch in Idaho. His recent trip to Pasco, Washington, resulted in the baptism of one more, Rose M. McClinsey.

Brother R. Newby, our missionary, reports the baptism of one, while in Okanogan County, also the baptism of his little niece, here at Spokane. Another name was added to our record when Brother Howard baptized the daughter of William Ahern at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. So the work is slowly gaining in these parts.

Brother R. Newby reports the ordination of Brother Robert Broadway of British Columbia to the office of elder. He will probably make a valuable helper to the work in his vicinity.

Our children's meeting has not been as enthusiastically received here in the branch, as it should be. Instead of having it every Sunday, as we started, we think it a better plan to have it only twice a month.

Our Christmas offering is coming on fine. It will probably reach the two hundred dollar mark.

Brother Oscar Case and family have moved back to this city from Montana. We are glad to welcome him back as he was our former pastor.

Evangelist Russell of Wisconsin occupied our pulpit September 9 and also on the 11th. He offered many good thoughts.

Brother Smith spoke to us Sunday morning of the Zion of latter days, and in the evening, of the gathering of Israel. Both sermons were a strong appeal to the people and were greatly appreciated. Normal work is now being taken up by the teachers and officers of our Sunday school. We know there is much good derived from this study if the proper amount of time is devoted to it.

Our city is much alive to the conditions of the day and has proved herself, by no means, a slacker in her patriotic duty. Boys in Uncle Sam's uniform are much in evidence and the wild hilarity of the recruit is a familiar sound.

CORRESPONDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: You are no doubt well acquainted with the special activities now being well under way here, on educational lines, so we will mention only a few items. J. A. Koehler is to teach a class in economics; A. E. McKim, journalism; Professor Salisbury, French; Mrs. F. Pender, Spanish. Sister Morgan's class in shorthand, also classes in home nursing, English composition, psychology, elocution, etc., met in their respective places under the various teachers appointed, and on their special days of last week. There is considerable zeal manifested by the young people and the work is advancing in a spirit of loyalty to those who have it in charge.

The lecture given last Sunday evening at the church was both educational and very entertaining, and was listened to by a very large audience. The subject treated was archæology, and the speaker was Doctor Edgar L. Hewett, one of the foremost archæologists of America. The scenes of nature on the journeyings taken by the lecturer, as presented on the screen, were fine, and were vividly explained.

Our soldier lads left on September 26, and many a saddened heart watched their departure. When we read the letter from Brother R. May in the Ensign, regarding the war scenes, we seemed again to hear the drums from afar and were again reminded of the wonderful events of this cruel world-wide war, and felt to cry out to Him who ruleth the nations that he will give success to those that fear him, and whose banners float above in honor to the principles of freedom, justice and humanity.

Our Departed Ones

BARNETT.—William P. Barnett, born in Clarion County,

Pennsylvania, June 25, 1859, died October 1, 1917, at his home 4400 Twelfth Street, Rock Island, Illinois. Baptized June 13, 1886, by E. T. Bryant at Millersburg, Illinois. Ordained deacon, March 15, 1914. Funeral from new church at Rock Island, sermon by E. A. Curtis, assisted by H. J. Archambault.

WORKMAN.—Carrie Eva Workman, born June 27, 1875; died at her home at Weir, Kansas, October 6, 1917. In 1890 she married David Workman, who with 6 daughters and 2 sons survive her. She was united with the church years ago and was esteemed in the community where she lived many years. Services conducted at the home by Charles Fry.

THE MORMON GIRL.—Paula Brown Dykes, a member of the Reorganized Church, who has lived in Utah for years, writes a telling indictment of Brighamist spiritual and carnal methods in this novel. No one can resist the realism of the story. It is so entirely different from the usual anti-"Mormon" work; so sincere and straightforward in its style, and natural in its plot. Founded on facts. No. 371, cloth$1.00

YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE.—The famous, exhaustive Bible reference book, by Robert Young, LL. D., "containing every word in alphabetical order, arranged under the Hebrew or Greek original, with the literal meaning of each, and its pronunciation; exhibiting about 311,000 references, marking 30,000 various readings in the New Testament. With the latest information on Biblical geography and antiquities." Containing also "A sketch of recent explorations in Bible lands," by Reverend Thomas Nicol, B. D. This concordance is calculated for the use of the "simplest reader of the English Bible." No. 321, cloth, net $6.00

JOAN OF ARC.—"Frances" here tells the story of Joan of Arc in a most human way. The French heroine is here brought down to the present and is seen as a living being, rather than a remote historical character. The social revolution she helped bring about, the service she rendered her country, make the story of her life interesting to all generations. Joan is an inspiration. No. 370,

IN GOD'S "MELTING POT"

We have many brethren of German extraction. They do not care to be called German-Americans; but prefer to be known as Americans of German descent. So far as we are aware they are entirely loyal to their adopted land.

Indeed the German people of the country as a whole are deporting themselves in a very commendable manner. The acts of violence and espionage that attract so much attention are few as compared with the sober and loyal deportment of the great mass of people of Teutonic extraction resident in America. And we are reminded that during the Civil War Americans of German descent did much to save the union. They swung at least one great doubtful State into line by their prompt action and sacrifice of self.

America is supposed to be a great melting pot into which all races are plunged, only to emerge Americans. If that fusion and amalgamation be not sufficient, we as Saints have been baptized in a more subtle flame—that which played over the assembly at Pentecost. Paul assures us that those who have been through God's "melting pot" are no longer Greek or Jew, bond or free. If he were here to-day he would draw no line between modern nationalities within the church.

In many communities our brethren of German extraction have for years been pillars in the church; and by their noble lives have won their right to be recognized as an integral part of that body of men and women that Jesus referred to as the "salt of the earth." Having worked for some years among them I know whereof I speak in this connection.

Yet there is danger that as the war goes on, and suffering comes upon America, race consciousness may arise in our hearts and these people be made to suffer undeservedly. Whether birth be by accident or by design or by choice we do not know. But it is clear that these men and women are in no way responsible for the war or the manner of its prosecution.

Yet they would be more than human if they did not still retain some spark of love for their fatherland. So that at this time their loyalty to the stars and stripes may cost them more than your loyalty does you. We have one sister in Lamoni who is of German birth who has a brother in France under Pershing's command preparing to fight her other brothers who are still in Germany. She is loyal. But at a price.

As Saints we now have an opportunity to demonstrate the Golden Rule. We must live with our brethren of German descent during the war—and afterward. Let us live as brethren. It is not necessary to grieve them by relating in their presence instances of alleged German atrocities. God will judge all such matters, and his vengeance will fall heavily upon all transgressors. Justice and judgment are his habitation and he has made of one blood all men everywhere.

We do not need to bait these brethren in argument in any way. The armies of the world are now in joint debate on these matters and we cannot alter the situation if we would. Might does not make right. But surely in this struggle somewhere right must be found allied with armed might, and we believe that right will prevail. We think, moreover, that we perceive where right is found. But let us quietly await that time of the decision.

Before us as a church looms a work of such magnitude that it challenges the united effort of all true Saints. The war may interrupt this work temporarily. But we admonish the Saints in all lands to so live, eschewing the spirit of hate, that when the war is ended we may speedily reconcile our differences and again press forward in the redemption of Zion. And the Saints in this land should be loyal to their flag and their church and with mutual toleration and love dwell together in peace and unity regardless of nationality. ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE RIGHT OF A TEACHER TO SOLEMNIZE MARRIAGES

In the SAINTS' HERALD for October 3, there appears an answer to this question by President Frederick M. Smith. President Smith, however, has suggested that in accordance with the correspondence and discussion of this topic, an editorial might well be written elucidating some of the points involved.

As a general rule, the statutes of each State set forth those who are authorized to perform the marriage ceremony, which ordinarily includes a regularly ordained minister or pastor. Some limit the right to a pastor or to a traveling missionary, that is, one who has the right within his own State is given a like right in the sister State.
