GOD IS MARSHALING HIS ARMY

Many a heart has been stirred by the song which begins with the above words. Our most militant peace advocates fall in line, catch the step and march on as we continue: "—for the rescue of his truth." Everybody can join the words as we proceed: "He is calling now to battle, both the aged and the youth." There is an onward movement in the tune and the words that inspires our courage in the "conflict with the world."

At this season, when the new calendars are in their places, new diaries have been started, and liberal resolutions resolved, we may be permitted to take a little inventory of our standing and the possibilities before us.

Last year is history, written large and indelibly. History is valuable; it is our safeguard; it is our incentive. What has been done, what has been written, what has been promised, make up our observation tower from which to view the world.

Yet, like the seaman in his "crow's nest," our eyes are constantly strained toward the horizon of the future. The past clears our vision and quickens our perception. We see on every side most astounding spectacles: Millions of men in bloody conflict, famine and disease, storm and earthquake, fuel famine, high prices, and threatened industrial turmoil. Truly men's hearts are beginning to fail them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth.

Could any one of us of his own ability unravel the tangled skeins of human events? Would the combined power of any half-dozen of us do it?

We won't need to. A greater power will see to that. Then, when they are disentangled, the threads of all hues be given us to weave into a beautiful fabric. It is not for us to worry about the culmination of these bewildering conditions about us, but it remains our duty to prepare for our part in the establishment of the Lord's forces so they will come out victorious.

The new "forward movement" which has now gained sufficient momentum to make itself felt throughout the church is evidently a God-inspired move in that direction. We think so because men's hearts are in it.

It's a common sight at our great university centers to see thousands gathered together for intellectual training. To excel in business or ethical pursuits one must study, and organized, well-directed study is the kind that produces the most uniformly good results.

To look around us, then, and see our people gathering in classes of from ten to several hundred, that they may become more efficient soldiers in the army of the Lord is not surprising to us. But there is more than the surface might indicate. No selfish ambitions incite this. It is not for an increase in salary nor for social advantage that these gather regularly and study faithfully. Those who instruct do so at a sacrifice of time and energy with no pecuniary recompense.

There is nothing spectacular in seeing these things; neither is there anything spectacular in the laborious training of the raw recruits for the armies of the world. Yet the training and preparation are essential.

This movement is not confined to the larger centers but is noticeable everywhere. Many a missionary is pursuing courses of study by correspondence that will polish and shape him to be a more efficient servant in God's work. And they are succeeding. Many an unobtrusive worker isolated and away from God's people is studying and preparing for better and more effectual service. Thousands of church books and other literature are going out to unpretentious libraries in the homes of humble Saints.

Truly an army is being raised up—an army of consecrated workers, wherein the humblest and most obscure touch shoulders with these in most responsible positions. We admit that it is a small army while God desires his forces to become very great—

Let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us be subject unto her laws.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9.

—yet our ideas of greatness may not be God's. Gideon assembled thirty-two thousand soldiers to defend Israel, yet the Lord cut the number down to three hundred. Mere numbers mean nothing, as mere size expresses but little.

Of course this "forward movement" is only incidental. The rising of the pointer on the steam gauge on the boiler is only incidental, but it indicates what is going on inside.

The prophecies indicate in no uncertain manner that God's people will be gathered to central regions. We have in mind especially Doctrine and Covenants 46: 12-15, which should be read in connection with this thought. To what shall they gather?

Is it enough for those who desire to come, to prepare the way before them? We are pleased—and we know God is—when those who gather into the "regions round about" make proper financial and spiritual preparation beforehand. But it is a mutual affair—they have as much right to expect a similar preparation of us.

It is but a natural result that those who are centrally and conveniently located should have certain distinctive advantages. It is also natural that those so situated should have greater responsibilities. We cannot have the privileges without the consequent responsibilities.

It is folly for us to expect our leaders to carry all the load. While their successes and their failures assume greater magnitude than ours, by our own works we stand or fall.

Our leaders need help—they must have it, else they will not be leaders. To direct or correlate the efforts of one or two in addition to our own may require little additional effort or time, but to counsel and advise, cheer and assist from a hundred to a thousand makes a man a Moses in the wilderness, and others must be called to his assistance to hold up his hands and sustain lest the enemy prevail and we all perish.

Dear reader, when the God-appointed men in charge of the interests of the flock strain their eyes looking for suitable ones to do this or that, whether it be easy or difficult, how often must they turn away in sorrow as they check our names as unavailable?

It is not sufficient that we have abilities—they must be available. Our assets must be available, else they are like the hidden talent.

Soil experts tell us there are thousands of tons of potash in the soils of the western prairies which the growing vegetation needs, but it is unavailable because the soil is sour. Wrong methods of crop rotation have made the soil acid and locked up these available elements to a large extent. They tell us to apply lime to sweeten and humus to lighten and the stores of potash will become available and be assimilated by the growing crops.

We are confident that a liberal application of God's Holy Spirit to our unavailable abilities will unlock sufficient stores of energies to rejuvenate our branches and communities and families. A whole army of God's people moving forward as a working unit will indeed be "very great" and its banners "terrible" to the enemies of righteousness.

Possibly we may be willing but unqualified; or we may, as suggested above, have ability but lack the disposition. Either condition may be corrected if we will.

To hope and pray for strong leaders to point out the way and help us all work together is commendable, but the greatest executive must have liberal support. The engines on our automobiles are in front and furnish power, but the gasoline is behind them and the body must carry the load. We want great power in our engines but there must be relative strength throughout the machine or the power will only be destructive.

The need was never greater for the marshaling of God's army than it is now. Opportunity not only knocks at our door but has its foot through the opening. It will enter, either to succor and save or accusingly condemn.

The conflicts of this army are with the world—peaceable and bloodless, yet none the less real. There is no age limit, but both the aged and the young, as well as the middle aged, have their place in its ranks.

The warring nations of Europe are urging and even compelling certain economies on the plea that to indulge in extravagances is aiding the enemy. No doubt they are right.

God has plead with us and warned us that yielding to unnatural appetites, and habits and passions destroys our usefulness and aids our common enemy—the Devil. We know he is right.

We have the resources for our present needs were they but conserved and utilized. When we use what we have we will be given more.

There is no better time than now for us to take a personal survey of ourselves, and then when the bugle call to duty sounds again, respond as we never have before.

Pleasure's siren call is more seductive; once in its clutches it is difficult to escape, yet it can be done—it must be.

Personal ease and comfort are insidious influences that hamper thousands—yet a soldier must enter the trenches and their filth regardless of his personal preferences.

When millions of men are willing to sacrifice comforts of life—even life itself—for preservation of an earthly government, should not we do as much or more if need be to aid in the marshaling of God's army that his kingdom may triumph? The New Year has great possibilities for us.

NOTICE TO THE SAINTS

We greatly regret to announce to the Saints at large that Brother Elbert A. Smith has been compelled, because of ill health, to leave Lamoni for rest and recuperation. His advisers have directed that he cease all church and editorial work as the first essential toward securing the necessary rest.

Brother Elbert's ceaseless literary activity and his work as a church officer have overtaxed his supply of strength; and we therefore request the cooperation of the Saints in furnishing that rest by refraining from addressing letters to him. All matters pertaining to HERALD or Autumn Leaves editorial affairs please direct care of Herald Publishing House, and address all Presidency matters to President Frederick M. Smith, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

There is no need for alarm over Brother Elbert's condition, but the deleterious effects of overwork require care and time to remove. Let us give our brother full opportunity to recover his strength.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

A. CARMICHAEL,
Manager Herald Publishing House.

THE NEW "ENSIGN"

The current number of the Ensign shows some decided changes in style and make-up. It is now in journal size and has sixteen pages instead of eight as before. The paper is much more attractive in appearance as well as being more convenient to read and to keep on file.

This is the first issue in the New Year and the Ensign publishes greetings from the leading officials of the church. Sentiments of faith and optimism are reflected from the pens of men who are in vital touch with church progress, and words of commendation and advice are heard from the officers who have the active direction of church affairs. It will be a very interesting number to read and to preserve.

The Ensign for the year will be aggressively missionary. The Ensign conceives that as its particular mission, and it has enlisted the aid of men who are acquainted with missionary needs. Only an affirmative gospel will be preached and there is enough material on hand now to assure the readers that the Ensign for 1917 will be crowded full of good things.

"A sermon a week" will be the policy of the Ensign, and next week it will begin by publishing a sermon of Bishop James Keir; that to be followed in succession by sermons from Doctor Joseph Luff, Elders S. S. Smith, Warren E. Peak, Wardell Christy, and others who are men well known to the church.

Another interesting feature of the Ensign for 1917 will be its news columns. The Ensign has correspondents in all of the stakes and large branches, and will specialize on local news. There will be no better way to keep in touch with the progress of the church than by reading the Ensign news.

Despite soaring paper prices, the subscription rate for the Ensign remains the same: one dollar a year. Order either from the Herald or Ensign publishing houses.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The General Church Directory

We call special attention to the directory printed on page 23. This has been and will be printed occasionally that no one may fail to reach the proper ones in any department of church work.

Yuletide at Philadelphia

The editors are in receipt of a pretty announcement in which a program of their Christmas festivities is listed. We note that "The Messiah" was rendered by the North Philadelphia Choral Society, with some talented assistants. Three travelogues of the Old World by Mr. Augustine Dwyer, M. A., are features on various evenings, one before and two after Christmas. A series of meetings is announced to begin January 7, and continue a week. Elder Ward L. Christy "in a series of important addresses on the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ," is the way they say it.

To Exclude Liquor Ads from Mails

The board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church are carrying on a campaign to exclude all liquor advertising from the mails except when addressed to licensed liquor dealers. The bill before Congress to that effect should be supported. This method is extensively employed to extend the sale of their wares; telephone directories are copied, and one whisky house even tried to sell its lists to the Keeley Company, saying, "Our customers are your future patients." By this method the foul breath of the saloon penetrates to the inmost vitals of the home.

The Church of England Challenged

We are in receipt of a booklet by Elder P. M. Hanson from Sydney, New South Wales. In it he mentions especially an attack made by the Church of England representatives upon our organization, outlining some of their methods and denying some of their charges. He presents our epitome of faith, gives a brief statement concerning the true origin of the Church of England, and closes with a set of propositions for public debate. They are the usual church propositions, and "hold good until accepted, or public apology is offered for the misrepresentation of Latter Day Saints and their religion; and is intended to apply not only to the Church of England, but to any other religious denomination whose representatives attack the Church of Jesus Christ."

Like Some People's Religion

There is a painter of the impressionist" school now confined in a lunatic asylum. To all persons who visit his studio he says: "Look here, this is the latest masterpiece of my composition."

They look, and see nothing but an expanse of bare canvas. They ask: "What does that represent?"

"Why, that represents the passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea."

"Beg pardon, but where is the sea?"

"It has been driven back."

"And where are the Israelites?"

"They have crossed over."

"And the Egyptians?"

"Will be here directly. That's the sort of painting I like—simple, suggestive, and unpretentious."

From Independence

Sister Horton's letter from Independence Stake arrived too late for use entire, but we note her statement that no services are being held for a period of two weeks, and longer if necessary, on account of the smallpox epidemic. The Battery C Boys arrived at their homes in Independence on December 23, in good health. She says the Saints feel keenly the lack of devotional gathering, but they appreciate the opportunities for uplift in the excellent messages contained in the HERALD and Ensign and other publications. She concludes: "May we treasure well all the good that comes to us through the varied experiences of life, and be thankful for the little blessings of every day." The latest development of the situation is that meetings may be held by fumigating before and after meetings.

Satisfaction in Printing

We have in times past known dissatisfaction expressed by customers of this publishing house from the fact that certain work done here has been submitted to local printers who have given estimates below the original charge. We wish to point out for the benefit of our readers that this method is a most unfair one. Trade journals are constantly giving concrete examples of the unfairness of this method and we have had personal occasion to know that it is decidedly to the disadvantage of our own or any other publishing house to judge them upon estimates of this character. It is a mistake which not only applies to our church publishing interests, but to the commercial world everywhere. There come to this office numerous letterheads and samples of various kinds of printing, and among them we note extremely poor work. Some should never have been accepted from the printer, containing as they did some of the most glaring errors. In job printing of any character quality is a prime consideration and should never be overlooked. There are many important phases to be considered. An intelligent conception of your ideas is required. There must be a clean, well-arranged page. There should be skillful attention to the presswork. The cost of the work is indeed a feature, but is not the only one and should be considered only in relation to the finished product and its effect. The work put out from this office is carefully done and the price as low as it is possible to do such work. In making comparisons, be sure you are not unfair.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Only a Grain of Sand

Only a grain of sand on the ocean's myriad strand;
 Only a pebble amid the countless grains of sand;
 Only a shrub on the mountain high and wide;
 Only a leaf from the giant oak—the forest's pride,
 Only a drop in the ocean, one drop in the briny deep;
 Only a moment of time in the space of eternity's sleep:
 The like as you and I.

Only a star in the trackless waste of space;
 Only a sunbeam in the sun's perpetual race;
 Only a mite of oxygen in the great ethereal dome;
 Only a chip of rock from the earth's quarry stone;
 Only a thought amid the wandering meteors above;
 Only a memory on blurred pages of childhood love;
 The like as you and I.

Only a man among the billions of men to-day;
 Only a copper in the mint from which we pay;
 Only a breath in the moments and years of life;
 Only a wink in the panoramic view of the strife;
 Only a wish on motor wings of fleeting time;
 Only a bullet's hiss on the banks of the Rhine;
 The like as you and I. —The Medical World.

DISSATISFIED COMMUNICANTS WITHDRAW

Acting on the convictions expressed in the foregoing utterances, a number of dissatisfied communicants have withdrawn from the several churches and, avoiding "controversial methods," are endeavoring to "interpret the mind of Christ." The following will give the reader a general idea of the scope and design of this movement:

The movement which has taken shape in the formation of The Fellowship of Reconciliation, originating in the coming together of men and women belonging to various Christian communions who are profoundly dissatisfied with the confused utterances of the Christian churches concerning the present war and war generally. To them it appears that there has been a general failure to interpret the mind of Christ at this time, and that this failure entails a very serious menace to the future of the kingdom of God, both in this country and throughout the world. They are persuaded that no war, however justifiable on prevailing standards, can ever be justified from the Christian standpoint.

Though they find themselves at variance with many of their fellow Christians, they desire to proclaim their conviction in a spirit of humility, honor and love, to exercise forbearance in argument, to guard against the danger of controversial methods, believing that they are but few out of many, both in this land and others, who are seeking to know and act upon the truth at this time.

A group of about one hundred and thirty persons who share this conviction and who are prepared to devote some time and energy towards making an effective witness to it at the present time met at Cambridge during the last four days of 1914. Without wishing to bind themselves to any exact form of words, they recorded their general agreement on the following points:

(1) That love, as revealed and interpreted in the life and death of Jesus Christ, involves more than we have yet seen, that it is the only power by which evil can be overcome, and the only sufficient basis of human society.

(2) That, in order to establish a world-order based on love, it is incumbent upon those who believe in this principle to accept it fully, both for themselves and in their relation with others, and to take the risks involved in doing so in a world which does not as yet accept it.

(3) That, therefore, as Christians, we are forbidden to wage war; and that our loyalty to our country, to humanity, to the church universal and to Jesus Christ our Lord and Master, calls us instead to a life-service for the enthronement of love in personal, social, commercial and national life.

(4) That the power, wisdom and love of God stretch far beyond the limits of our present experience, and that he is ever waiting to break into human life in new and larger ways.

(5) That since God manifests himself in the world through men and women, we offer ourselves to him for his redemptive purpose, to be used by him in whatever way he may reveal to us.

While the above principles fairly represent the views of those who met at Cambridge, and may be taken as indicating the ideals which animate the members of the fellowship, it should be clearly stated that they are not put forward as a full and final statement, nor is it expected that only those who can accept every word in them are to be included in the fellowship. What is desired is not a common creed but one spirit animating a living body. Christ and Peace, pp. 104-106. (Italics mine.—E. E. L.)

A careful reading of the foregoing "principles" reminds one of a similar movement nearly two centuries ago when "a company of men having the form and seeking the power of godliness," met at Oxford, and Methodism was born. They, too, were "profoundly dissatisfied" with the "confused utterances" of church leaders, and then, as now, they sought to "interpret the mind of Christ" without the help of a "supernatural revelation." They read the same "apocalyptic utterances" concerning the coming kingdom, and saw "an extraordinary divine work" attending the glorious consummation, and Charles Wesley wrote:

Set up the attracting sign,
And summons whom thou dost approve
For messengers divine.
From favored Abram's seed
The new apostles choose,
In isles and continents to spread
The soul-reviving news.

But when that "supernatural revelation" was given and the "extraordinary divine work" was begun it was promptly rejected by that "company of men," and the "power" attending it was declared to be "of the Devil." They continued in their own "narrow way," giving expression to the "confused utterances" against which men now find it necessary to protest, until to-day, in the whirlpool of destruction, they are paying the price of their folly. Will this latter company learn the lesson? We are informed that the "Fellowship" movement already has more than four thousand adherents, and that it is rapidly spreading over America.

Has it ever occurred to the minds of these good and well-meaning people that the "coming of the kingdom" was to be preceded by a "supernatural revelation"? "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh," was to be proclaimed in advance of his appearing, and the message was to be accompanied by "great upheavals in the natural order." We are not left to the uncertainty of "apocalyptic utterances" with regards to the matter, valuable though they are in assisting us to "interpret the mind of Christ." Some of those apocalyptic utterances, by the way, have become conspicuously plain since the outbreak of the war, as we shall see farther along.

Since the churches are being shot to pieces, and the creeds blown to atoms, and since the "false philosophy," held responsible for the catastrophe which has overtaken humanity, is being consumed in the fiery furnace; and since it is being recognized on every hand that a terrible mistake has been made somewhere along the line, would it not be the part of sincere judgment for the scourged Christians to halt long enough to inquire; "Can it be true that the message delivered to the world by Joseph Smith was of God after all?" Is it possible that a mistake was made by hastily denouncing the only proclamation of modern times that claimed to be a "supernatural revelation" from God? Is it drawing too heavily on their weakened faith to suggest that possibly the "Pearl of Great Price" may be found where they least expect it?

But instantly we mention the name, Joseph Smith, the popular mind reverts to Utah and the vision is dimmed by that dark apostasy, and no good thing can be seen in "Mormonism." In the spirit of brotherly good will we plead for a reasonable share of attention without prejudice that we may declare ourselves in the light of modern events.

THE SECOND COMING

Before we undertake to sustain our position by direct testimony, we wish to offer some collateral evidence from the Scriptures which has apparently been overlooked by Christians generally.

The early Christians understood the second coming of the Lord to be a grand, glorious, and personal reality. Nor did the Savior ever disabuse their mind of such a hope. He did, however, seek to impress them with the fact that it was a long way off. He said: "A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." (Luke 19: 11-13.) This parable was given especially to correct the idea that the kingdom was to "immediately appear." The expression, "into a far country," indicates a long journey which would require time to go and come. Later, when asked by the disciples regarding the matter, he simply replied: "It is not for you to know." (Acts 1: 7.) It was enough for them to know that, "If I go away I will come again." Their immediate concern was to be, not with reference to his return so much as it was with a faithful prosecution of the work assigned them. "But," he added, "ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," which, he said, would guide them into "all truth." Once the Comforter was received they began to understand the nature of his far-off journey. So we read:

But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child and they shall not escape.—1 Thessalonians 5: 1-3.

We have been hearing a good deal about "Peace and safety" of late but the "sudden destruction" came so unexpected that they had to adjourn a "peace conference," and flee for their lives, and the only hope of escape now is the echo of their despairing cry. Reverend C. E. Jefferson so pathetically describes the situation that I cannot resist the temptation to digress and insert it here. He says:

When the word came that war was at last inevitable, some of us who have studied recent European history most carefully, and who knew best what such a war as this would involve, felt our strength going from us. We sat down horrified, stunned and dazed. Some of us could scarcely sleep. It was all so needless, so foolish, so inexcusable, so crazy, that the soul cried out, "It cannot be, it must not be!" This feeling of horror was then swallowed up by the sense of helplessness, sheer, absolute, agonizing helplessness. There was no deliverance to be found in any quarter. We turned to the right and there was no deliverer there; to the left and he was not there. We went forward in search of some one strong enough to stay the plague, but we could not find him; we went backward and he was not there. There was no tribunal on the earth with authority that was adequate. There was no potentate in church or state strong enough to lay on the wild-dashing nations a restraining hand. There at The Hague stood the beautiful palace of peace, its gates closed and its oracles dumb. Beautiful white blossom of the world's hope, all shriveled in the hot breath of the coming storm! We turned to the heavens and there was no help there. God's arm seemed to be shortened so that he could not save, his ear seemed to be dull so that he could not hear. It is an awful experience to stand face to face with a world-wide calamity and feel that man cannot save and that God himself is impotent.—The Cause of the War, pp. 55-58.

Had this man and his fellow ministers who now bewail the burning of Babylon studied the prophecies in connection with recent European history, they might have seen the handwriting on the wall: "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape." Our hearts bleed in sympathy with hapless victims of the terrible holocaust, but of Babylon herself it is written: "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her." (Revelation 18: 20.)

Continuing his instructions relative to the Lord's return, the Apostle Paul says:

Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by Spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition.—2 Thessalonians 2: 1-3.

The foregoing clearly indicates that considerable time would be necessary for the consummation of the divine purpose, while John, beholding the events of unborn time for generations to come, portrays the fact that the church of God, by amalgamation with the world, would become a mighty power, proud, arrogant and wicked, saying in her heart, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow" (Revelation 18:7), but it is written:

Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning. Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.—Revelation 18:8-10.

Who, but the ones blinded by the false philosophy and "confused utterances of the Christian Churches," can fail to see in the numerous and heartrending lamentations of those who write, the literal application of the prophecy to the present situation? There can be no question now as to the identity of the modern church with "that great city Babylon." "And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." (Revelation 17:18.) And that is not all. In chapter sixteen of Revelation we read of seven angels, all having "vials of the wrath of God" which they were commanded to pour out on the earth. Six of them emptied the contents of their vials on various objects of a local character, while the last one poured out his vial into the air, indicating a universal application, after which it is said:

And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.—Revelations 16:18, 19.

It is generally accepted that earthquakes in prophecy have reference to upheavals in the natural order. Such is the position assumed by one of the writers aforementioned. See Christ and Peace, page 64. The earthquake referred to above was to be without precedent, and of the same event Daniel wrote:

And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book.—Daniel 12:1.

THE SIGNS OF HIS COMING

But we are not left to apocalyptic ambiguity. The Lord has spoken with a positiveness, so clear and definite, that no one need mistake his meaning. When asked by the disciples what would be the sign of his coming, and the end of the world, he answered, in part:

Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows. Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24:4-14.

DECEIVERS WILL ABOUND

The first sentence of this remarkable forecast is a warning—deceivers will abound. And that, too, among those who profess to teach his gospel. "Many," he said, "shall come in my name." Those deceivers were to be professed Christians who would teach a false philosophy and blind the people by their confused utterances. The multiplicity of conflicting dogmas of Christendom that contradict the doctrine of Christ, the numerous charges and countercharges of false teaching in pulpits and schools, the voluntary confessions, "we have been blinded," the fact that the wrath of God in unprecedented fury is scourging the great city, these all bear testimony to the fact that the Lord's prediction has now come to pass. Men and women everywhere are declaring, "we have been deceived," while iniquity has multiplied in a thousand forms, and, "they shall hate one another," is attested by the "illimitable, unspeakable hatred and bitterness this war is engendering," (The Last War, p. 14.), while twenty million starving non-combatants in Poland, Serbia, Belgium, and Armenia describe the "distress on earth with perplexity." (Luke 21:27.)

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world." "This gospel," remember, does not mean that system of false philosophy which has dominated the world and led to the present calamity. That many would be deceived indicates a popular philosophy by which they would be led astray. On the other hand, "this gospel," it seems, would be decidedly unpopular from the fact that "you shall be hated." "You," of the prophecy, beyond all question, has reference to those who would preach "this gospel of the kingdom." Why should God's people be hated in this Christian age? For the very simple reason that when they were about the Father's business, preaching "this gospel," they would condemn the popular false philosophy taught by the Christian churches. As a natural consequence, the enmity of the false teachers would be aroused and they, to protect themselves, would prejudice the minds of the masses against the servants of God. This is an important truth that the modern world has overlooked. Why, the preaching of "this gospel" was to be one of the signs of the times, and did not John describe the same scene when he wrote:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Revelation 14: 6-8.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Does this angel with the gospel earthly bound mean a supernatural revelation? If not, what does it mean? Who can tell? The circumstances of his coming is so closely allied to the preaching of "this gospel" as stated by the Savior that the two references must be one and the same event. The angel, of course, would not take the gospel to the nations in person, but according to past precedent, he would commit it to some one of God's selection among men through whom it would be committed to others. It will not do to say that it signified some spontaneous movement of human origin. Under such conditions one man could lay claim to as much authority as another, and precisely the condition that exists now would obtain—confusion and disorder.

Modern Christianity has steadfastly denied and repudiated supernatural revelation, and that of itself would preclude the heavenly visitor coming to any of them. If, for instance, he should come to the English Church, would the others accept it? If he came to the Church of Rome, would Protestantism receive it? To recognize Rome would be a denial of Protestantism, and to commit the heavenly oracles to the Church of England would be a repudiation of all others, etc., and since it is being so frankly and universally admitted that a false philosophy has dominated and led the whole modern institution to destruction, is it too much to suggest the probability of the heavenly courier passing them all by and committing the oracles to some one in no way connected with the modern church? And if he did would they not despise the one so favored? And is not this idea clearly suggested in the teaching of the Christ when he said, "you shall be hated of all nations?" It was so then, and it may be so now. Jesus told the leaders of the Jewish church that they had made the word of God "of none effect through your traditions" (Mark 7: 13), and it is declared that the modern church, by a "false philosophy and numerous confused utterances," has blinded the people to the truth. The fate of sectarian Judaism may be the destiny of apostate Christianity. In this connection, the following language is significant:

And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire—Matthew 3: 10.

Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.—Matthew 15: 13, 14.

It was the fire of a terrible war that uprooted and consumed the sectarian "plants" of Judaism. The fire of a terrible war is playing havoc with sectarian Christianity, and the "great city" is doomed.

CHARACTER OF APOSTATE CHRISTIANITY

Elder Daniel Macgregor has so graphically portrayed the character of the modern church that I take the liberty to present it here. He says:

The times of the reformation were utterly unripe for a restoration. It was an age of universal struggle, intermingled with the decrees of murder and assassination. Burning and branding was the religion of the masses. Everybody had religion! aye, oozing out at every pore! What would they not do for "our church"! The sword and the saber were the foremost evangelists; and the minister, to be qualified, must needs make a study of the arts of execution and explosion. They preached the blood of Jesus, and they shed the blood of man. They proclaimed a hell hereafter, and kindled its fires here. With fagot and fork, thumbscrew and rack, altars were erected and painted with the blood of their victims. Darkened by dismal doctrine, they illuminated their intelligence with the fire of human sacrifice. It was war to the knife, and knife to the hilt. When weary of slaughtering each other they turned and fought among themselves. The Lutherans persecuted the Zwinglians, and the Church of England raged against the Nonconformists. The Covenanters of Scotland were hunted to death by their southern neighbors, and Calvin cremated Servetus. Of the treatment accorded to Baptists, the Puritans, and the Quakers at the hands of their Protestant brethren, the pen is powerless to picture; and the Jews suffered of them all. Who, then, would presume that out of the impoverished soil of this barren, rockbound, volcanic Christianity, the seed of the restoration would grow? Impossible! It could not germinate in such an uncongenial climate. Rome and the reformation were too aged in the vices of bloodcurdling exploits to give birth to a kingdom of peace.—Marvelous Work and a Wonder, pp. 81, 82.

It is also written: "And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth."—Revelation 18: 24.

OBJECTIONS TO THE BOOK OF MORMON ANSWERED BY ITS OWN EVIDENCE--Part 2

BY T. J. SMITH

Our task in this article will be to answer this objection, "Where is the reason or necessity of Mormon, the great Nephite general, shifting his army all the way from Central America up to the State of New York, when all the fighting, hitherto, had been in the former country and vicinity?" And further, to show where his bold and well-planned strategy failed.

NORTH AMERICA THICKLY SETTLED

But before entering upon this task, we wish to establish in the mind of the reader the fact that the part of North America known as the United States was quite thickly inhabited by the Nephite people. The Book of Mormon contains many evidences to sustain that fact, and we will, briefly, note a few of the most prominent ones.

The whole of the continent of North America was known to the Nephites as the "Land Northward," and the reader should bear this fact in mind.

In Alma 30: 5 it is stated that a company of fifty-four hundred men with their wives and children departed out of the land of Zarahemla, into the land northward; following this statement is another, (6: 12) that several shiploads of emigrants departed from the western coast and sailed northward; and in the thirty-eighth year (of the judges) many people went into the land northward. Helaman informs us (2: 3, 4) an exceedingly great many went forth and did travel into the land northward.

Note the fact "an exceeding great distance," in such a vast country would reach far beyond Central America or southern Mexico. This colony "spread into all parts of the land," except those parts which had been left desolate by the Jaredites.

And they did multiply and spread and did go forth from the land southward to the land northward, and did spread, insomuch that they began to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south to the sea north and from the sea west to the sea east.

From the present location of the land and seas, here described, it is believed and asserted by many, that this description can alone apply to Central America or southern Mexico. But it should be noted that this account was written some years before that great and terrible upheaval of the earth, at the time of Christ's crucifixion, when the "whole face of the land was changed" and "deformed." When "lands were engulfed, mountains fell, cities were sunk, waters came up over the land and earthquakes convulsed the earth." So it seems to the writer, like extreme folly to apply the account here given, by Helaman, to the present lay of the land and seas, for no one can tell just what changes took place at that terrible event. He tells us, however, in 4: 24, that they began to multiply and spread until they did cover the whole face of the land, both north and south, from the sea west to the sea east, so no changes which might have occurred could affect the fact that all the land northward was occupied.

There could not be a better description of the great treeless plains of the Mississippi Valley than is given by Helaman in 2: 1-12.

We could readily refer to many other statements in the book to the fact that many of the Nephites, and also Lamanites, went into the land northward, but those given, we trust, will suffice.

EVIDENCES OF NEPHITE OCCUPATION

We wish now to give some of the evidences that they did occupy here in the United States to a great extent.

Professor Baldwin in his Ancient America, in describing the great ruins of cities in our southwestern States, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, says of some of them that they were built upon foundations of an older and more substantial civilization. This is identically the same method pursued by the Nephites in Central America and Mexico, that is, building upon foundations left by the Jaredites.

That they were scattered, to a certain extent, all over the length and breadth of the land is evident from the fact that Hebrew relics have been found in all parts of the land.

We will mention several of these, not giving any more than what they were and the place of their finding.

Near Pittsfield, Massachusetts, two pieces of raw-hide sewed and glued firmly together, containing parchment on which were quotations from the Old Testament Scriptures in Hebrew. A stone slab with the Ten Commandments, in Hebrew, upon it, near Newark, Ohio. Four more stones with Hebrew writing upon them, near the same place. Embalmed bodies, after the Egyptian custom, found in a cave in Kentucky. Six brass plates fastened together with rings, similar to those of the Book of Mormon, found in Illinois. Brass rings, with Hebrew writing upon them, at Marietta, Ohio. Twenty-five bodies entombed in same manner as those of the Egyptians, Manchester, Ohio. Plates found by Reverend S. D. Peet, with similar characters to those of the Book of Mormon, in Illinois. Coin found in Tennessee with "shekel of Israel" on one side and "Jerusalem the holy," on the other.

These evidences could be readily multiplied indefinitely by visiting our institutes and museums scattered over the country; but those given will suffice to show that this country had been occupied to quite a large extent by the Nephite people.

MORMON'S ARMY

We will now turn to the case of General Mormon and his army.

After the great and destructive battle at the city Jordan, where the Nephites were almost completely annihilated in A. D. 380, he moved northward, gathering up the remnant of his fleeing people, followed closely by the victorious Lamanites.

While thus engaged he writes an epistle to the Lamanite king asking a cessation of hostilities until he had time to gather his people to a hill in the land of Cumorah and there he would give him battle. This request was granted and the Nephites marched forth to the land of Cumorah, followed, no doubt, by the Lamanites. The very language used here would indicate that it was a long way off, for it has such a far-away sound. It could not have been a land lying contiguous to that of Central America, or southern Mexico, for had that been the case it would, undoubtedly, have been mentioned before, at some time or other; but this was the first time it had been mentioned. In the vicissitudes of the war in Central America and surrounding country many other lands were mentioned; the land Bountiful, the land Desolation, the land of Joshen, the land of Shem, the land Antum, David and Joshua; all these, but no mention of the land of Cumorah.

Mormon asked the armistice of the Lamanite king that he might have advantage over them in that land.

In starting out on this long march there were two very important propositions confronted him at this juncture. If the hill he desired to gather to was in Central America or southern Mexico, he would be under the necessity of sending gathering agents all over the northern part of Mexico and the vast regions of the United States to collect the people together (which any normal man can see would be the next thing to an impossibility), march them two thousand and three thousand miles south to be slaughtered by their enemies.

The objection may be raised here that these northern countries were not so heavily populated as supposed, and that it would be no great undertaking to collect them together and march them south. Well, be that as it may, the Jaredites were under identically the same condition, and they were swarming in untold thousands all over these countries mentioned. So, what about the task of gathering them up to a single man and marching them all the way down into Central America?

If the hill to be reached was in New York State, this would be the other proposition: To march forward (the Lamanites following up behind), gather in all the people with all they possessed, as had been their custom for years, until they reached their destination. There could not possibly have been a more effectual method of gathering the people together, than the above.

Mormon asked the armistice that he might get advantage over the Lamanites in that land. The important question will arise here, What could be the advantage to him in shifting his army to that far-off land? We have already seen what an advantage it was to him in gathering his people together, and we can plainly see two more, one very important.

1. They could have the advantage of those formidable fortifications abandoned by the Jaredites, as they, undoubtedly, were acquainted with the nature of the country in that region, having had the history of that people translated from the twenty-four plates of Ether by King Mosiah II.

2. The greatest and most important advantage it would be to Mormon, consisted in throwing the Lamanites so far away from any means of subsistence. By moving northward through the country and gleaning it of everything of an edible nature, as the Nephites had done in the case of the Gadianon robbers (Nephi 2: 40-58), the Lamanites would be compelled to get their provisions from the far south or squeeze it out of the country after the Nephites had thoroughly gleaned it; and, no doubt, Mormon calculated they could not successfully do either. Now, right here we believe is where he "missed his reckoning," right here his bold and well planned strategy failed. The four years armistice expired, the fatal day of slaughter dawned, and behold! the Lamanites were on hand in untold thousands; and ere the setting sun touched the crown of the western hills, and his departing rays had lifted from over the fog and foam of the great Niagara Falls, two hundred and thirty thousand Nephite warriors with their women and little ones had "bitten the dust."

The vital question now comes up; how did the Lamanites support themselves the four years the Nephites were gathering together. You can never give a better or more reasonable explanation of the origin of those immense, strange and wonderful shell heaps, so abundantly scattered over the southern part of the United States.

Historians tell us they are, undoubtedly of human origin, consisting of oyster and mussel shells, mixed with the bones of deer, antelope, elk, and those of many wild fowls. That these shell banks were made by the Indians, is proven by the fact that there are Indians to-day who gather on the Gulf Coast and live for a season upon oysters and mussels.

So the origin of those vast and wonderful shell heaps, which have for centuries puzzled the heads and ingenuity of our wisest men, is here revealed by the simple history given in the Book of Mormon; and we believe, should be sufficient to lift all doubt of its divine inspiration from the minds of all fair and unprejudiced people; and not only this, but it should be sufficient to locate definitely that noted hill, where both the Nephite and Jaredite nations met their final end; that hill, where two of the bloodiest and most destructive battles known in the annals of the human family were fought, that hill upon whose summit and surrounding country molder the ashes of millions of men, women and children, that hill, in whose silent bosom, guarded, no doubt by angelic vigilance, repose the sacred records of these fallen nations; which records are yet to come forth in the due time of the Lord, when the true history and long shrouded mysteries which have so long hung over those stupendous ruins so abundantly scattered throughout our land will be revealed and proclaimed from the housetops.

So we say, in conclusion, all hail to the Book of Mormon and its divine inspiration, and honor and praise to the one who gave it.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE REFLEX INFLUENCE OF KINDNESS TO ANIMALS UPON INDIANS

One half of the town in which my father labored as a missionary was burned by Indians. From these "bronzed stoics of the woods" on the warpath, I have heard the bloodcurdling "wa-hoo," the voice rising through an octave from the beginning of the first syllable to the ending of the last. It is awakening, electrifying, hair lifting. Repeatedly have I been startled on looking up from the table to see an Indian brave staring in at the window. Such terror was struck into my soul, that, as I sit here, I can close my eyes and still see the wearer of the eagle's feathers. When deep and just opprobrium is cast upon Indian traders I have to remember that I have been one of them. Officers of the court have committed Indians to me to be in my care. Only last winter I traveled throughout the day, alone in their company. I recite this, as an indication that I know Indians. They have lacked for generations the qualities that are developed through the care of animals. They have always made war against them.

When the buffalo failed, and the Government prevented starvation by issuing rations of beef, the wild Indian preferred to have the creatures turned loose that he might run them over a precipice or shoot them when in rapid motion. The business of raising cattle and horses and sheep develops the element most needed in the Indian's composition. Besides stimulating his love of property, the work interests the whole family. The squaws, accustomed to work, render efficient aid in many ways, and the papooses cannot help developing a fondness for the young of the herd. On approaching an Indian tepee or shack, if one finds any young animal that stands in the relation of a pet to any member of an Indian family, a person has the right to assume that the work of civilization has begun. When the Indian becomes a stock raiser he puts himself into personal relations with the law, and I hail with joy and with new hope a business which enables the Indian to sever tribal relations and stand as an independent citizen before the law. The statute respecting identification of cattle protects the interests of the Indian and adds to the value of his creatures and to his security.

Isolation on a reservation is no longer desirable for the Indian, who has been neither a citizen nor a foreigner. Individual ownership is to him both an incentive and a restraint. We are done with Indians, our problem is with citizens. On the occasion of one of my visits to an Indian school, a rabbit darted out of the bushes and was espied by the Indian youngsters and the schoolroom was vacated instantly except by the teacher. The school was afoot in track of the rabbit. A motion to adjourn seemed always in order. In a common school, with children of both white and copper-colored parents present, the young Indians seemed to learn most from the conduct of their associates.

A visit to such a school by Mary's far-famed little lamb, and the relation which is said to have existed between Mary and the lamb, would be to papooses a kindergarten lesson, looking towards civilization, which either education or religion would find it difficult to surpass.—Our Dumb Animals, October, 1916.

A CURIOUS CONTRAST

But little attention has been paid to the news dispatches announcing the safe arrival of Congressman O. D. Bleakly in Washington by aeroplane. He left Philadelphia last Monday at 2 o'clock and at 5.15 he landed safely at the National Capital.

What could be more suggestive of the tremendous change marked by this event than that Congressman Bleakly will collect mileage for this journey on the basis figured for horseback riding, in days hardly beyond the memory of men now living?

How many of those who read this news dispatch will stop to consider that members of the house elected a few weeks ago will not take their seats until March next, and that the president elected a few weeks ago will not begin his new term until March next, because in those early days the horseback rider, leaving home immediately upon election must have several months for travel.

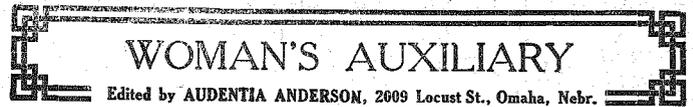

The most serious objection offered to the Louisiana Purchase and to the admission of States beyond the Mississippi was that members of Congress setting out from the Pacific Slope could not arrive in Washington during the term for which they had been elected.

There is a hint in the horseback mileage Congressman Bleakly will draw for his aeroplane journey how slowly we change our forms, no matter how swiftly we may change in all the material relations of life.

It is surprising what sanctity we attach to so many of the old rules of conduct and to the old ways of doing things, when we are changing the actual conditions they govern every hour. We are almost as slow to change in one way as we are ready to change in the other. We hold back with unaccountable tenacity, just as we are rushing ahead with almost foolhardy daring.

The chances are that every member of Congress will be traveling to and from Washington in aeroplanes before there will be any change in the horseback mileage of the old days. In fact, we may never see any change in the mileage rate allowed to members of Congress. And we may never bring our elections any nearer to the time of taking office than they were when men rode for many weeks through the unbroken wilderness to reach the seat of government.—Des Moines Register.

I was going home one winter's evening with my little maiden at my side, when she looked up into the sky and said: "Father, I am going to count the stars." "Very well," said I, "do." And soon I heard her whispering to herself: "Two hundred and twenty-one, two hundred and twenty-two, two hundred and twenty-three"; and then she stopped and sighed: "Oh dear! I had no idea there were so many!" Like that little maiden, I have often tried to count my mercies; but right soon have I had to say: "I had no idea they were so many!"—Reverend Mark Guy Pearse.

The Glad New Year of Opportunity

The door of the good New Year has swung open for us. On its threshold we pause a moment with bated breaths, as our minds leap forward and try to penetrate the uncertainty and mystery ahead, and picture what we may encounter as we pass in and through the unknown territory.

Of this, however, we may feel no uncertainty, viz, that the year will be filled with opportunities for loving service. On every hand, and during every one of the three hundred and sixty-five days, we will be presented with golden opportunity which we should seize and make our own, and rechristen "Privilege."

We should so joy in the performance of loving and consecrated duty, that it becomes glorified to us and changed as by magic into a thing of beauty and great preciousness.

Whatever of grief or disappointment 1917 may have in store for us, be sure that it has blessings in trust, also—so rich and varied and abundant that we can but accept them with a sense of unworthiness. They are blessings, too, which are best in life—most worth while—the things that are eternal in their nature—truth, affection, faith, peace and the joy of loving service.

Notice to Woman's Auxiliary Locals

The relief and service work of the Woman's Auxiliary and affiliated societies is or should be so closely allied to the work of the church officers that close harmony and cooperation is desired and essential to our final success, as is so clearly stated in our Year Book. The executive committee of the Woman's Auxiliary, with Sister Cochran of Saint Joseph, Missouri, our general relief and service superintendent, and other sisters who have had long experience as relief and service workers, have been trying to work out to present in due time with the approval of the general church authorities some detailed suggestions as to the formulation of a program for work along the lines of such activities, which will enable the various locals to effect the necessary changes in their activities where such changes might be necessary.

We therefore suggest that the various locals refrain for the present from attempting any radical changes in their work in this department, but go ahead along the old lines of activity and await the formulation of a program which will meet the approval of all concerned. We encourage careful study of the problems of relief and service work as outlined in the Year Book with a view to better preparation for enlarging activities when the general plan is decided upon. Locals should, therefore, await instructions from the general executive before making radical changes. All of these matters: an address from our Presiding Bishop to the women, suggestions from the President of the church, and a document formulated by the above-mentioned committee though as yet in purely suggestive form, are in the hands of the president of the auxiliary, but official routine details prevent the presentation of this matter for the present. We expect, however, to have something definite for publication in the immediate future.

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Croswell, Michigan

The Woman's Auxiliary was organized here in the month of June, with about twenty-four enrolled on the book.

Each sister pays a tax of ten cents a month and by so doing they always have a little money on hand. And as the little band of Saints here are building a basement under the church the sisters have been a great help. They have made a payment of one hundred dollars and are still raising money.

The ladies pay their monthly tax, and piece quilts, quilt and tie comforters, whenever work comes their way.

MRS. LEWIS E. GRICE,
Press Chairman.

Independence, Missouri

At a recent meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Independence, Bishop McGuire addressed the women on the need of coordinating with the bishopric in our relief and service work. This work comes under the immediate direction of the Bishop and we can attain success only by working under his direction in a systematic manner.

These Sunday meetings are held the first Lord's Day in the month and under the direction of the general president, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, and have taken the form of lectures, by specialists on the subjects they cover in their efforts.

Doctor F. M. Smith has given us some splendid talks on Zion conditions. Miss Anne Gilday of Kansas City, who is an instructor in the manual training high school, and a member of the welfare board gave us a lecture on "Women's work."

Among the many good things she said, she told how she had lived much and traveled much and so had more chance to see the problems of women. Here are some of the extracts from her lecture:

"In the dawn of life God created man to do the highest work, but the intellectual power of man was incomplete, and a spark in human life came into being: Woman. Her influence begins from the time when all we know is to cry, and continues through life. The dawn of intelligence came to Greece when the individual was recognized. Some meaning other than that of servitude. The spirit of freedom prevailed and the need of woman's work was recognized. Man realizes that the woman he wants and needs is one who can stand beside him. Aspasia said to Pericles, 'Build that which will live when the conquests of Alexander will be forgotten.' And as a result great temples and statues came into existence.

"Man has built continents and continents has he bridged, but when woman created a son there was a better and grander constructive force with the babe. Out of the maternal body that housed that soul comes that which molds the state: Men.

"The best you owe to your mother, who picks up the tangled threads and marches on. She has self-abnegation because God made her so and if she has not that she is not a woman. Keeper of the fire on the hearthstone, a light in the window.

"A message came to the world, 'Peace on earth.' In His coming he dignified woman. He put motherhood above all other masterpieces.

"Raphael's Sistine Madonna breathes, I am the mother of God. It was to Raphael, to dream that he was inspired to put on canvas a new message of motherhood and womankind, who has a wonderful, supernatural power of adaptation to service. It is the atmosphere that adjusts.

"Menial servitude? She has done it all, and nobly through the struggle she gives that beautiful spirituality.

"Time changes, and woe be to the one who does not keep up. The traditions must be preserved that mother is the one supreme head of the home. Train the children up in sympathy to one another. Home is the unifying force. Education is not simply going to school. Woman can conserve and understand.

"Laws of men are all in regard to property rights, so women must work, for human life must be protected as supreme. Her vote would go to the man who stood for the child labor law. Interest aside from selfish spirit of the hour will be the spirit of the nation.

"Life is his who sinks himself in the greatest service. Laws for sanitation, pure food, etc., were made because of the selfishness of man."

Miss Della Braidwood, the superintendent of the young woman's department has plans for a day nursery in the dining hall, Sunday mornings to take care of the babies so the burdened mothers can be able to attend the preaching services free from care.

A call was made for all girls from fifteen to thirty-five years of age. Fifty responded, and among them were five trained nurses. Arrangements were made to have two of the older girls, and two of the younger girls and one trained nurse each Sunday to take care of the babies and more will help if there be need for them.

Thursday and Friday, December 7, 8, the Laurel Club, who are noted for their ingenuity in arranging pleasant surprises, gave a "Bazaar of Nations" at the dining hall. Each nation was housed in a booth, and the national ideals were represented in the decorations. The west side was devoted to Italy, Holland, Hawaii, Ireland and Japan. On the east side was Uncle Sam's dominion, occupying as much space as the other five nations. Here were to be found a big stock of merchandise, produce, staple articles of food, pastries, bread, cake and delicious homemade candies. Flags were much in evidence and the decorations were of course, red, white and blue. Each nation showed its loyalty by its national flag.

The Italian section was presided over by four of Rome's daughters, and southern fruits were displayed to the best advantage. One of the Neopolitan beauties sang the songs of Italy and in fancy we could hear the gondoliers singing as they floated down the streets of Venice.

Next we viewed Holland, and the aprons and caps for sale. The center of attraction was a Dutch Christmas tree one of our brothers made thirty years ago for his children. At the top was a canopy that opened out like a fan and at the end of each stick hung a silver star. The lining underneath was in gold to represent the rays of the sun. When the candles were lighted the air produced by the heat stirred the top and kept the stars moving around the tree. On the ground were sheep with the shepherds attending them; all significant of the birth of Christ. Quite a wonderful creation.

Hawaii greeted one with her "Alohae" of welcome. Here were shells from the Pacific Ocean, beads of various kinds, coconuts and palms.

The shamrock was much in evidence in Ireland and "The harp that hung in Tara's hall" was to be seen on the pennants that were placed on the background. Here were the embroidered linens, aprons, and laces that are so dear to the feminine heart. The chatelaines who presided showed their loyalty by the wearin' o' the green.

An excellent idea of the perfection of the art of embroidery was to be seen in the dress of the Japanese maidens. Here were ceramics, hand-painted china, pictures and those things that delight an artist's eye.

Two pretty maidens gave Hawaiian airs on the ukelele.

The strains from "Kathleen Mavourneen" and "Where the River Shannon Flows" were wafted on the air coming from Ireland.

Each country contributed music, even Uncle Sam. A big Rhode Island cockerel lifted up his voice and said "Hoo, ho, hoo-oo, here's the goods for you-o-o." An Oyster supper was served with all the fixin's, especially ice cream.

These capable women who are bearing a large part in assuming financial burdens for various activities seem to have as an inspiration the "I Will" spirit which assures them of success in all of their work.

The Patronesses of the Sanitarium are looking after its needs and have been making doctor's robes, ether gowns, sheets, etc.

The Mutual Helpers have been working under the direction of the stake bishopric, and provided many families with clothing.

The work of our aid society has taken the prize at the Independence fair every year for some time, and they have done much work that has been sent them from other places because their work was of the best.

The annual election of officers of the Independence local of the Women's Auxiliary was held December 14, 1916. The result was as follows: Mrs. Florence McNichols, president; Mrs. Madge Knowlton, vice president; Mrs. Altha Deam, secretary; Mrs. Madge Siegfried, treasurer; Mrs. B. C. Smith, historian.

In this general movement of the women toward Zion conditions, what is the attitude of our women? Are any doing picket duty?

One sister said to another; "How does Mrs. Brown stand on the suffrage question?"

"She is doing picket duty."

"Doing picket duty, what for, suffrage?"

"Oh, no! She's on the fence."

NEWS FROM BRANCHES

Third Saint Joseph

Our Religio is doing good work. Increase in attendance is noticeable. Our Sunday school session December 10 was well attended. The election of officers was a special feature of the morning. An increase in attendance is noticeable and very encouraging.

There has been a Sunday school organized in Elwood, Kansas, of late, under the supervision of W. O. Webb.

Brother Ford, our district president, was with us December 17 for the day, and we enjoyed his sermons, morning and evening. Prayer service in the evening was much enjoyed by all present, a goodly portion of the Holy Spirit being made manifest.

We are nearing the close of the Old Year, and we look back on our lives and see many failures and things that "might have been." But we can also see many battles to be won, and feel the spirit of inspiration urging us on to higher ground, and greater victories in the coming New Year.

MRS. A. N. BROWN.

Perry, Iowa

It having been quite a little season since the Perry Branch has been represented through your columns, we are moved to chronicle our progress for the benefit of those of your readers, who may be interested in this part of the moral vineyard.

Since our last communication, we have welcomed twelve new members by baptism, ten within the last few weeks, and the outlook is encouraging for others to follow in the near future. Several are earnestly investigating, and we are encouraged to look ever "Upward and Onward."

An Oriole circle has lately been organized and much interest among the young girls is resulting. Special services for the younger members of the church are being held of late, and plans are being worked out for an organization for the boys, with a view to guiding the energies and activities of the youth of the branch into wise and profitable channels.

We have a goodly number of boys and girls just approaching the adolescent period and the need of supervised entertainment is felt. It is time we gave some serious thought to this phase of our duty in the church. Heretofore, the young people among us, with a few exceptions, were but children, but we are forced to admit that our little ones are fast growing into young men and women. We cannot ignore the fact that youth naturally craves and should have some diversion. Whether they shall be encouraged to find an outlet for the natural tendency of youth to seek companionship and pleasure within the quiet harbor of the church's supervision or be left to "drift out on the rocks" of worldly pleasures is a matter for our prayerful consideration. We are open to suggestions for a solution to this question in small branches, to the end that all may go onward and upward and be useful instruments in his hands.

Our Sunday school is wide-awake and doing good work, likewise the Religio. Good programs add much to the interest.

The auxiliary has two active departments, the aid and the home and child welfare, but with the new year's work, we hope to organize the departments in accordance with the Year Book.

Brother J. L. Parker conducted a series of tent meetings during the later part of September, and while the results were not all that we hoped for, no blame could be attached to Brother Parker's efforts. The weather conditions were very unfavorable, being cold and rainy. A number of new faces were seen each evening and we hope for a good interest when next a tent meeting is thought advisable.

We have besides Brother Parker, such valiant soldiers as Brother C. E. Harpe, O. Salisbury, E. E. Long, J. C. Crabb, Charles Nirk, Brother Bye and Brother Sedden with us to edify and instruct. An especial treat was the visit of Brother A. Carmichael. The Saints certainly received much needed instruction along his line of work, from the three discourses he gave on Sunday, September 3.

We are hopefully and prayerfully biding the complete organization of our branch officers, and trust that in his own due time, we will be blessed with a full quorum of officers. Too much work is now devolving on those in charge and we hope and pray that soon the burden will be divided by the Lord calling others to occupy in the capacity of teacher and deacon.

Yours in the one faith,

ESTELLE F. TAYLOR,

Branch Correspondent.

Independence Stake

In the midst of war they talk of peace, and some one has truly said the patriotism of peace is the most inviting and satisfying patriotism for mankind. The angel pronounced that message ages ago, "Peace on earth, good will to man." Blessed message! May we as Saints in the midst of the vexations and afflictions of life, cherish the message, and keep and forever preserve our place among the peaceful peoples of the earth.

To one whose thoughts are drawn towards better conditions in Zion there is something appealing in what is presented as a "new business ideal" urged by some of the radical business leaders of the world, that ideal is concerning Kansas City. They say "growing as it is as an industrial and financial center, it should also become the center of spiritual ideals." Brother Walter Smith in a late sermon said, "This church needs the soul of love." "The world is longing to help the man who will put soul into his work."

Many subjects for thought crowd upon the mind. We think of what Brother Fry stated in his sermon last Sunday morning, and while he quoted many passages from the Doctrine and Covenants in his instructions to the Saints, and referred to the new cultural movement going on, he said, "These means are being employed by the church that we may attain to greater heights, that these attainments thus far have brought to our souls an increase of joy, and we are coming to a better discernment of things that are, that we may not be led away from the faith we have espoused."

The world, too, seems to be appealing for help in many directions, and in right ways. For instance, the prison reform, and nation-wide prohibition. And now comes trooping along, universal military training, according to the adage "in time of peace, prepare for war." And last, though not least, the peace league.

There is plenty of reading matter all around us, and we hear of excellent sermons going on both at home and abroad. Last Sunday night Brother Walter instructed the Saints at the Stone Church, Brother Jenkins and A. H. Mills those who met at Walnut Park, W. D. Bullard and Brother Christie at Enoch Hill, and Brother H. W. Gould in the morning at the Second Branch.

The sisters are assisting in the work of this last-mentioned branch, and at their late fair and dinner realized one hundred dollars, which goes to their church fund.

A few of the brethren are home to spend the holidays and we note with pleasure that when our missionaries return on such visits, they are always conspicuous by their presence in some of the adult classes of the Sunday school. Our attendance last Sunday was only 774; and, as the board of health has issued an order and request for all persons to refrain from attending public gatherings of any nature, on account of the smallpox epidemic here, there will be no meetings of any kind at the church until we are further notified. There are at present twenty-five cases.

On last Sunday morning, December 17, J. J. Vickrey passed away. He was a pioneer in the work here, having been connected with the branch since 1878, and also Sister T. N. Smith's funeral was held here, and her remains were laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery, December 20. She was the mother of nine children.

The prayer meeting of Sunday afternoon, Brother F. M. presiding, will not soon be forgotten. It was an occasion when the Spirit flowed from heart to heart, and the Saints rejoiced as the prayers and testimonies were given in praise and gratitude for his abundant blessings, in whom our souls trust with an abiding confidence. ABBIE A. HORTON.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

Southern Ohio District

The work of the Southern Ohio District is progressing. The laborer of the vineyard feels encouraged, and we feel like "going forward."

After spending a very pleasant time at the reunion at Creola, Ohio, in August, the writer, with Brother Harnish went to Vales Mills and after laboring together for about ten days the writer left Brother Harnish there to continue the work, and went to Wellston, where he labored for about ten days, enjoying the work very much. This was about the most spiritual series of meetings the writer held this year. All seemed to enjoy it very much. Brother H. E. Moler had just preceded the writer with a series of meetings and baptized four, and we came along and watered the plants. The writer then went to Wilkesville and held a ten-day meeting, occupying in the Presbyterian church four nights. Was treated very kindly and had a good hearing, but as some objected to our using it any longer we got the use of a hall. Two were baptized. Both are splendid young men. One, a Brother K. C. Harder, is now attending Athens College, and he is quite a bright young man. His grandfather is a missionary in the church. The pastor of the Presbyterian church gave us the best compliment I ever heard any of their ministers give our people. He told the people the difference between us and the Utah people and said he had some very good friends in the Latter Day Saint Church.

The writer again returned to Wellston and together with Brother W. H. Kelley held a week's meeting and one was baptized. I enjoyed my work with Brother Kelley very much, and enjoyed hearing him tell of his experiences in Utah.

I then spent a few weeks at Ironton, but was not able to do much, as the Saints are scattered, and men are working at night. I also preached a few nights at the Pine church, where Brother Harnish held about a three weeks meeting. From there I went to Limerick and preached there for one month in the Saints' church with splendid interest and good attention. While there Brother Kelley also stopped off and preached a few nights for us. One was baptized and others are quite interested. After stopping a few nights at Pine, Piketon, Omega and Wellston, I came to Middletown on the 24th of November, and W. H. Kelley and I began a series of meetings on the 26th, continuing for two weeks, and enjoyed our work together very much. The attendance was fair and the interest quite good. Brother Kelley has been devoting most of his time to this branch since entering the district in May, and he has done a good work here. They have a fine Sunday school and Religio here. Brother Francis May is in charge of the Sunday school, and Sister A. C. Skeen of the Religio, and both are earnest workers.

Sunday, December 10, was a great day with the Middletown Saints, as Brother Griffiths was with us and dedicated the church. After enjoying a splendid session of the Sunday school, the dedicatory service was held at 11 a. m. The writer was in charge. Brother Griffiths preached the dedicatory sermon and also offered the dedicatory prayer. The service was a very spiritual one, and all seemed to enjoy it. Brother Griffiths brought out many beautiful thoughts and showed the need, while dedicating the church, for each one to dedicate himself and showed that "to him that worketh is the reward."

Quite a number of the Saints from Dayton and Amanda spent the day with us, and as the Saints brought their baskets well filled with good things to eat, they all retired to the basement after they had enjoyed the spiritual feast, and also partook of the splendid dinner that was prepared.

At 2.30 p. m., L. F. P. Curry, of Dayton, Ohio, was the speaker. The sermon was enjoyed very much by all, and the Saints are anxious for Brother Curry to return and talk to them again.

I spoke at 7.30 p. m., with good liberty, my subject being, "Is water baptism essential to salvation?" using a chart to illustrate. Brother Kelley and the writer closed their meetings on the night of December 12.

Brother E. D. Finken, of Oak Harbor, Ohio, and the writer then held a few meetings at Amanda. Sunday, December 17, Brother Kelley preached morning and night at Middletown, and his sermons were very good. Brother Kelley left for Independence, Missouri, to-day to spend the holidays. The Saints here hated to see him leave.

Brother Finken and I will leave for Marshall, Ohio, in the morning. Have enjoyed my work very much during the past year and have been blessed with good health for which I feel thankful to God. May we all so occupy that we may please the Father in heaven.

Wishing all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year,
I am, as ever,

In gospel bonds,

J. G. HALB.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Conditions Bad in Palestine

A letter reached me to-day from a friend in Palestine, some items of which I feel very sure would be of interest to the Saints. The letter was dated November 8, 1916.

She begins by saying, "I have hesitated about writing to you until I could assure you of Mr. Jenkins' convalescence, and am glad to say that I can do so now, as he is making satisfactory progress towards regaining his health and strength. It has been an exceedingly anxious time for Mrs. Jenkins, as you can understand, but she has spared nothing, certainly not her own strength for his benefit.

"We are all well, I am glad to say, and have much to be thankful for on this account, for many, many, people are ill in this city, and there are sad blanks in many homes.

"The rain is late this year, too, and this is another reason for the alarming increase of sickness and fevers of various kinds. To-day we have had a good shower, and this afternoon and this evening quite a hurricane, and so very cold.

"But the poor people now! It is really terrible to see the suffering in the streets and bazaars, and all around. My husband is quite right in saying that people are falling off like leaves from the trees, and now we have very few doctors indeed and very, very few medicines.

"I remember when our paraffin (kerosene) was finished. How I dreaded what would happen, and how I should possibly manage with charcoal for cooking. (They haven't stoves like ours, but use small clay stoves resembling flower pots.) But here I am managing to keep a small fire in for several days without using much charcoal either, and I am also writing to you by two little sessamide oil lights. Matches are nearly five cents a box now.

"To-day after a good deal of difficulty and calling several times at the shop, I managed to get a kind of molasses made out of locust beans. We use a little instead of sugar, which is now an impossible luxury. Of course one can live very well without sugar, and we are only too thankful to be able to get bread at such times as these."

She also made mention of the fact that Doctor Glazebrook, the American consul at Jerusalem, had gone to Jaffa to meet a ship that had just arrived with money supplies.

There certainly can be no doubt of the intense suffering in Palestine, to-day. When conditions are normal the suffering of the poor is appalling in the city of Jerusalem, and seems to be the first thing to meet the eyes of the visitor.

Your sister in Christ,

EDNA HOWLAND KOEHLER.

A News Letter from London

We so seldom see a letter in your columns from London, the great metropolis of the world, and thinking so many of the Saints and friends I know on the other side of the ocean would like to know of how church work is going on and how things are moving in this busy part of the world, I will write a few items of what is transpiring.

Our church work is going on slowly but surely, and we feel glad to report that a better condition is obtaining among the saints. A desire to be more active and improve the time is very noticeable, both spiritually and temporally. The longer I remain in England and become acquainted with the Saints in the surrounding branches I feel that God has a people here in the spirit of the work who are longing and praying to see the work revive and rekindle in the hearts of those who once were active but have become dormant and discouraged, yet I believe the awakening time is at hand when the Saints will hasten to redeem the time that remains, for surely there are some more honest-hearted people to be gathered out of this vast multitude of God's creatures. The primitive gospel is being thought of and sought after, a desire to get back to original apostolic faith, as taught by Christ and the apostles seems to be moving upon the minds of some. They are discovering and awakening to the fact that there has been a wandering away spoken of in Malachi 3:7, a going away from God's ordinances, setting aside the principles taught in the former days. I believe the message we have to bear would be listened to with much interest, if it had only come through and was proclaimed by some noted theologian of the day who had graduated through the universities of education, with a title to his name, the message might have been hailed with delight and received joyfully, but claiming to be sent as Joseph Smith was, called to be a prophet of God sent by divine revelation, with a warning to the world, is more than they are prepared to receive, but the condition of the world to-day is evident that such a message is necessary, and this restored gospel is just what fills the demand, to regenerate the world. The prophetic statement made in Malachi 1:1: "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he will prepare the way before me," is now in fulfillment. What a glorious message of peace to the world, sent to prepare a people to meet their God. Surely if the ministry of Christ's church will press forward with faith and courage, a rich harvest of souls is awaiting them.

This great worldwide war, is causing people to think, as they never thought before, and empty forms of godliness will cease to satisfy, as we sometimes sing, "Brother, all things round are calling, with united voice be strong, though the wrongs of earth be galling, they must lose their strength ere long." May all respond to the call, not only the ministry, but may the membership make the task easier for the ministry, by their faithful cooperation, and with Christ the king of glory in the lead, what a wave of gospel light may spread over this grief-stricken world.

I am thankful to say the brethren and sisters at a distance don't forget to call on us when business brings them to the city. Among those who have been to stay over Sunday, are Brother and Sister Meredith, Brother W. Armstrong, who preached for us. Brother and Sister Meredith made an effort to secure a suitable place for a meetinghouse, but the building they had in view at that time was taken. We hope they will come again and have better luck next time. Brother Schofield and Brother Jones have also been here, and Brother and Sister Judd from Enfield have refreshed us by their presence, Brother Judd reviving the Saints by his stirring sermons, and last but not least Brother U. W. Greene came with his smiling face and congenial company. It seemed like a refreshing breeze from America had blown our way, and for about two weeks he sojourned with us, preaching at 58 Ickburgh Road, and at Enfield where the district conference was held on November 18 and 19. There we received some good, inspiring sermons and sound counsel that will be a lasting benefit to all, but alas, as is always the case the wind changed and he drifted away from us, and how we wished our missionaries could stay with us for a few months, at least, but we quite believe that Brother Greene will return to the English Mission again when on his return to Jerusalem. When we realized he was going again to our American shores we could hardly but wish we were going along, as the visitation of Zeppelins is not a very pleasant experience to look forward to, however we must abide our time.

Now we are alone again, yet not alone, as we have our faithful Brother Worth who was left in charge and he is always at his post and also Brother Goullee and Brother Newton as coworkers. By their assistance the work seems to be brightening and interest on the increase. Sad to say some of our ministry have been called to arms and other lines of service for their country. A few of the presiding officials have been exempted. Sometimes we grow weary for the return of Brother May from Independence, he having been requested to remain there in church interests since the April Conference. We look for him each week. However we have nothing to complain of as our real wants are supplied, for which we are thankful, and also that we are spiritually comforted as well as temporally and the promise has been given that we will be protected through the great tribulations that follow in the path of war.

I am also blessed in having my daughter, Pearl, with her two little boys, with me during Brother May's absence, and she is trying to fill her place in a musical way among the few that take interest in the music.

Unless we can procure a hall or a public meeting place by the coming summer, I shall feel inclined to return to our own land for no great amount of good can be accomplished with only a private room to meet in. My prayer is that the church may see the necessity of assisting in this matter. The public must be shown that we are the antipolygamist Latter Day Saints that always remained true to the original tenets, and are a separate organization, never having followed the Utah body. When this is fully and publicly shown we may hope for greater success. Trusting the time may speedily come that our church may come from under this shadow that has been hovering over us so long and praying that the principles of this latter-day work may yet be lifted and the righteousness of God revealed in this gospel, and its prophetic warning to the world be sounded to the farthest corners of the earth is the prayer of your sister in Christ,

MRS. R. MAY.

The "Herald" a Source of Comfort and Joy

I hasten to inclose herewith my check in the amount of $3.50 with which kindly renew my subscription to the HERALD for another year and also my subscription to the Autumn Leaves, and for the remaining dollar please mail me The Journal of American History, volume X, No. 3, in which is contained the excellent article written in defense of the Latter-day work by Brother Heman C. Smith, mentioned in the HERALD of December 6.

I find my HERALD an invaluable source of comfort and joy, and as a brother expressed himself in a recent article, it certainly in a "white-winged messenger of peace" to our home, and since it finds us somewhat isolated from church privileges, it has become our weekly recruiting station—preaching service, Sunday school, prayer meeting, and Religio, the absence of which are quite nicely made up for with the SAINTS' HERALD as a weekly caller. I certainly am heartily in accord with the thought that the SAINTS' HERALD should be in the home of every Latter Day Saint family, and pray the time may speedily come when its circulation may be widely increased.

While it is not our ambition to throw any bouquets, we certainly do wish to commend the editors of the HERALD for the clear, concise way in which the Current Events department is conducted, which enables us as Saints to very easily dispense with such weekly papers as we subscribe to for information on current affairs, thus enabling us the more easily to obey the injunction "Behold, now it is called to-day. (until the coming of the Son of Man) and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned."

I am trusting very much that my order will not be too late to get one of the Journals, for I feel this is an addition to our library which we need very much, for while a very large percentage of our citizens of this Northwest are generally indifferent to religion, nevertheless we occasionally find an individual who gets rather "obstreperous" in his efforts to expose the so-called fallacies of this latter-day work, and just such an article as Brother Smith has written for us will come in quite conveniently.

Ever praying for Zion's redemption, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

OKANOGAN, WASHINGTON.

Concerning the Return of the Jews

I have a clipping from the Ensign of April 10, 1916, giving the interpretation of a tongue by Elder J. W. Wight, the last part of which reads as follows:

"Out of the midst of war, of the awful carnage, now taking place, there will result that condition that will prepare the way for the return of the remnant of my people, Israel, to the land of their possession, long since given unto their father, Abraham; so that—all in all—the power manifested by my Spirit will be made manifest in the world, especially among my people to a greater extent than ever before. So, I say unto you, my people, be faithful: Thus saith the Spirit. Amen."

Independence, Missouri, April 7, 1916.

From The Rural Weekly, April 13, 1916, volume 12, number 16, published at Saint Paul, Minnesota, I copy the following:

"YEARN FOR PALESTINE

London, April 12.—Palestine's restoration as an independent Jewish state is considered a possibility by leading Hebrews in England. The European Jewish organization is affiliated with the Jewish congress in America.

"The war's end, they point out, must bring enormous transfers of territory and it is of this shake-up that the Jews intend to take advantage. At the meeting of the powers' representatives to arrange peace terms, the Jews must see that they are consulted, as Lucien Wolf, the author puts it, and he urges them to 'work together with eventually a Jewish state in Palestine.'

"From The American-Jewish Year Book, recently published, we take the following interesting statistics. Hebrew population of our large cities, New York, 990,000, Chicago, 215,000; Philadelphia, 160,000; Boston, 65,000, and so on down to San Francisco, with 28,000. The estimated number of Jews in the United States is 2,500,000, and throughout the world, 13,500,000. No other center in the world contains so many Jews as New York.

"The three general organizations of Jews in respect to religion are the Reformed, Orthodox and Conservatives, and they have respectively 46, 120 and 207 rabbis of organized congregations. It will be seen that the Conservatives have as many rabbis as the Reformed and the Orthodox both together have. It is estimated that 121 rabbis do not belong to any of the three conferences. From the above, it appears therefor, that the whole American population of Jews have but 494 rabbis. Many provisional congregations hold services on holidays only, and are served by educated Jews who are not ordained, and who, during the rest of the year, are business and professional laymen.

"The year book shows a great increase in the growth of the Zionist movement. In the last six months thirty new general organizations have been formed, and because of the war the whole number has doubled. Less than two years ago the shekel payers numbered 14,000. Last June there were 36,000, and it is estimated that by next June there will be 120,000."

From the Chicago Herald of April 19, 1916:

"JEWISH NATIONAL AIR TO BE SUNG AT THIS MEETING

"The Jewish national air will be sung at the annual spring meeting of the Chicago Jewish committee for Palestine welfare, to be held in Fullerton Hall of the Art Institute on April 27.

"This song is said to be known to the majority of the Americans and even to many Jews, these being unaware that there is a Jewish national air corresponding to 'The Star-Spangled Banner' and 'Hail, Columbia.' . . . The words of the Hebrew national air are as follows:

'HATIKVA

(The Hope)

'As long as a spark of Judaism
Glow within the heart's inmost depth,
As long as the eye turns Eastward its yearning glance
So long is our hope not a forlorn one.
That old, old hope of returning
To the home of our Fathers,
To the city where David dwelt,
There to be a free nation in our own land,
The land of Zion and Jerusalem.'

Are We Ready for Strong Meat?

Dear brothers and sisters in the true faith, the thoughts I wish to express here have been in my mind so often of late that I feel impressed to try to give them to others. I do not intend making long arguments to prove what I may say, but will give a few quotations from the Scriptures, and leave the reader to judge as to whether the thoughts given are in harmony with the word.

Let me call attention to the exact wording of a law of the church which, in substance, is familiar to the majority, if not all the Saints. It reads:

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—James 5: 14, 15.

Notice the great promise contained in the last clause of the above quotation, that, while in the first place we are seeking healing of the body, in sending for the elders, God at the same time graciously forgives our sins, should we have committed any.

In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 2 we read:

"And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me. . . . And it shall come to pass that those that die in me shall not taste of death for it shall be sweet unto them."

In the following verse we find that if we have faith in God to be healed, and are not appointed unto death, we shall be healed, but if we lack that faith, but believe, we shall have power to become God's sons.

How great and far-reaching are these promises! Words fail to half express their wonderful scope! Healing of the body from sickness; or if that be denied to one who believes, then still he is promised power to become a child of God; forgiveness of sins that may have been committed since baptism; the sting and fear of death removed, so that death shall be sweet. Oh, this beautiful ordinance of the gospel. Why should we resort to physicians for that which our Father offers "without money and without price." If our time has come to pass to the beyond there is no physician who can heal.

Sometimes the all-wise Father has some purpose to be accomplished for us by our own suffering. Would any Saint really desire to be healed if he could know that his heavenly Father saw best to withhold that blessing from him for a time, in order that a greater blessing might be given? We cannot doubt God's power to heal, or to see that our needs are looked after while we are unable to provide for ourselves. What can be the reason then that it is a common thing for the Saints to call for the physician when sickness comes?

Oh, sisters, brothers, do we give ourselves time to think what a restful privilege this is to leave ourselves entirely in the divine hands where no mistake can possibly be made in our treatment? Can we treat lightly such a privilege, and turn to the human hand for help because Father sees best not to yield to our wishes, and heal us or our loved ones immediately? Have we such fear of suffering, of death even, that we grow frantic at the thought, and, forgetting the fact that if we love God, all our experiences shall work for our good, we turn away from the One who stands with hand outstretched to lift us nearer to him, and reach for the blessing that pertains to the physical part of our being?

Health unquestionably is a great boon, but often the loss of it for a time brings a greater one. This is hard for us to understand because God's ways are not like our ways; we are so prone to seek present ease and pleasure. We cannot accurately see the result of things. God can, and as he looks away into the future he knows exactly what sort of treatment will be necessary to purge away the dross that cumpers the pure gold in all of us, and without the removal of which, we cannot be fitted to enter the home where our Father dwells.

If even our Savior who was without sin, was made perfect through suffering (Hebrews 2:10; 5:8), can we reach perfection in some other way?

I do not mean to give the impression that when we are overtaken with sickness we should just let ourselves go without making an effort to help ourselves. No, indeed! We are to do the best we can; look to diet, ventilation, cleanliness (it is good to keep a watchful eye to these points before sickness comes). Don't rush the elders there for every slight ailment which nature will make right if given a chance, but if the ailment take a serious turn, then it is our right to call upon God for help in his own good and perfect way. Send for the elders, and when they have done their part, leave the rest in the hands of Him who doeth all things well, calm in the assurance that he will not forget that we are suffering, or permit more to come upon us than we are able to bear—that is, if we really do leave ourselves in his care. If there is the feeling in us that if the symptoms get alarming, or the pain too great to be borne, we will be obliged to send for the doctor, I truly believe we forfeit our right to the divine intervention. God can work only according to his own laws; if we go contrary to them we "have no promise."

Does this seem hard, dear Saints? Yes, it does seem so, because we cannot understand now, as we surely shall some time. Paul says in Hebrews 12:11, "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." Ah, yes, "afterward"; hard and "grievous" to be borne now, but afterward we surely shall reap the benefit of what we have endured patiently here. As one of our elders once said in a sermon: "When we reach the beyond, and can look back over our lives here and see the purposes of God fulfilled in the experiences we have passed through, we shall bless his name for things that made our very hearts bleed while we were passing through them."

Oh, dear friends, let us not forget that oftentimes the hour of pain or grief is as it were, a time of "sitting in heavenly places," when a loving Father speaks to the ear of our spirits, and we are truly "taught from on high," thus being drawn nearer to the divine than we could have been without such time of trial.

Your sister in the struggle for submission,

CLARA M. FRICK.

From Here and There

An observing missionary makes this comment: If your "Word to Contributors" in the HERALD of December 13 had added a caution against ordinary letters and other commonplace matters being sent to both HERALD and Ensign you would have done well. Some special matter should be in both, but not ordinary contributions which crowd out something better.

We agree with the statement, and pass it along with the suggestion that so far as possible we do seek to avoid these duplications. If our contributors would kindly observe this we believe it would be helpful to all concerned.

MALLARD, IOWA, December 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: You will perhaps pardon me for writing a few lines for the benefit of the HERALD readers, as I am interested in their welfare, and the development and triumph of the work of God, and the salvation of souls. I have found much that is good and glorious in the religion of Jesus Christ, and his church is the only true and authorized standard bearer of that religion which Jesus Christ taught by the authority of the Father, and it is that truth which Jesus died to establish, and it is sufficient to save every creature in all the world.

There are some things in the church which are peculiarly beneficial to all who will hear and obey, but especially is this true of the Saints. Some years ago the writer was in attendance at a social service held at the home of Brother Nathan Hayes, Cherokee, Iowa, when about twenty members, young and old and middle-aged were present, and this was about all the members that then belonged to that branch. This was one of the meetings which is long remembered by those who were in attendance. The good Spirit was present, and seemed to be enjoyed by all. All took part in the singing, every member present prayed, and all testified to the goodness of God to them, and they spoke of the evidences which had been given to them of the truthfulness and power of the work of God, in which they were engaged. The Lord spoke encouragingly to them through the manifestations of the Spirit. Thus all members received a goodly portion of spiritual meat and drink, which strengthened their faith, brightened their hope, and enabled them to see the path of duty more clearly than ever before, or so it seemed to the writer.

It seems wise that the Lord should have placed in his church a class of officers whose duty requires them to "see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty." When this work is carefully and wisely done, it keeps the members alive and spiritual, and under such conditions the church thrives and grows, and when the members meet to worship God, there activity and efficacy is manifest, and a spiritual feast is enjoyed, confidence is begotten and continues because of that true fellowship manifest among the disciples of Christ.

Paul's long experience as a minister of the church of Jesus Christ enabled him to understand the importance of such meetings, and for that purpose he wrote to advise and encourage the Hebrew Saints, as follows: "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." The longer one absents himself from the regular services of the church the more unfruitful he becomes, the mind becomes darkened, or is apt to, he loses interest in the church and its work, and if such a course is continued long enough the Spirit becomes grieved, is withdrawn, and the individual is left to himself. "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

When one is sick for weeks and months, and the digestion is so impaired that the individual cannot take the necessary nourishment, the body shrinks and weakens so that he can neither stand, walk, work, or even sit up. Should an attempt be made to do either, the head is dizzy and the one making such an attempt falls to the floor like a helpless infant. Who knows better than one who has had such an experience? Under such conditions much love and kindness and much patience are necessary; and the patient "should be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy," if they have not faith to be healed.

"Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; and make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but rather let it be healed. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Hebrews 12: 12-14.

The inward man, or soul, is very much like the outward man so much so at least that if it does not receive a proper amount of spiritual food and drink it, too, weakens and shrinks, becomes inactive, unfruitful, cannot work because the Spirit does not help, "And if you have not faith, hope and charity, you can do nothing." Indeed, such a one is spiritually sick, and needs the physician and a good, faithful nurse, the proper restoratives, and the necessary amount of mild, spiritual food. The ministers of the church are the authorized physicians, including the teacher; and every Saint should be willing to serve as a nurse, whenever an opportunity affords, or when requested to do so by proper authority.

"Blessed are the peacemakers," says the blessed Master. And in such cases the true Saint has the "Balm of Gilead," which if properly administered will effect a cure, and all will be well. How could any other condition obtain when professedly at least every Saint is a peacemaker?

Is it not true that a people who have in their possession the light and truth and authority of the restored gospel ought to be up and doing? Of all lights that shine on the spiritual horizon, theirs should be the brightest. And they should be the most industrious and persevering people under the shining sun. No opportunity for doing good should be permitted to pass by without being improved. Some things should be done for the work's sake, because it is of God, and contains the conditions of salvation sufficient to save the entire world, if it is but believed and obeyed by every creature.

Our religious neighbors are busy, watchful, and persevering, and they turn every stone that it is possible for them to move. They are converting and leading men and women into their churches who would make good members of the true church of Jesus Christ, and worthy Christians, if we could but lead them in the way of salvation. Shall we fail to do so because of the inactivity and negligence of some of our membership? We ought not to permit such a thing to occur, and it would not so happen, if every Saint who has been warned would warn his neighbor. Surely, Saints cannot afford to go to sleep without oil in their vessels, and their lamps trimmed and burning, when the bridegroom is so near. Awake and sing, and shout hosanna, all ye Saints of his!

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, sayeth the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my Jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."—Malachi 3: 16, 17.

"Sweet bonds, that unite all the children of peace,
And thrice precious Jesus, whose love cannot cease;
Though oft from thy teachings in folly I roam,
I hope to behold thee in glory at home."

"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. . . . The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if it so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Romans 8: 14-17.

Waiting, watching, and laboring for the victory, I remain,
Yours in bonds,
CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

PERRY, IOWA, December 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: Elder W. A. McDowell, one of our patri-archs, has just left us after a ten-day series of discourses. There are no words in our language to express the gratitude of the Saints in listening to what he had to tell them. Several outsiders came every night. One very new sister gave him a home indeed, and it was a warm and comfortable one. This is so essential; if the stoves won't reach the sleeping room of an elder, some good warm flatirons and blankets are fine. The children wanted to keep him, and some of them put up a lunch for his midnight ride, and wrote him a letter of appreciation. The lunch consisted of frosted cookies and fruit, just what they would buy were they going to do the eating, but Brother McDowell accepted it with all the kindness possible.

One stranger said, "I am tired of all churches, none preach the Bible. I will go to the Saints' church, but even then I wouldn't hear much. I want prophecy and war." But as we stepped in the door who was sitting on the rostrum with Elder McDowell and Brother Hand but E. E. Long. He did the preaching that evening, and one would think he was rained down for the occasion. He took for his text "The last shall be first and the first shall be last," and it took him no time to launch into the sea of prophecy and war, and the stranger was delighted, so he expressed himself on his way home.

Brother McDowell evidenced the fact that his position is an important one. That isn't all—he fits his position and his position fits him. We all want him to return.

Our people were much strengthened by the meetings. We have had several good preachers with us in the last two years. We are now getting ready for a two-week series in January with O. Salisbury in charge. He will prove a boon to Perry when he comes, despite the fact that he has been taken for a baseball manager and a football coach. We have taken no offense at his titles, for we know him for what he is.
NELLIE MARTIN.

GORDON, WASHINGTON, December 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: There are not very many Saints in our community and we have met with a good deal of opposition here, but still with God's help we are striving to carry the good work on.

We have not been in this country long and are trying to make a home here, and we would like to establish the work here, also. We have not been able to procure much literature to help us out yet. I was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood November 19, and am trying to take charge of the work in this place. Would you please write me exactly what the duties of a priest are, as I am not very well posted?
Your brother in gospel bonds,
S. A. DOBSON.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 18, 1916.

Editors Herald: In connection with the obituaries of Sister Almira Morse and Brother A. S. Cochran, I send account of a notable incident in her life before she and her son Asa and family united with the church in 1867.

Among her friends were Brother and Sister Horace Church, and they had heard and believed the latter-day message some years prior to 1867. Also they talked it to their friends, including Sister Almira Cochran (as she was then). But she would not accept the message nor the doctrines of baptism for the remission of sins, and laying on of hands. When defeated in argument she would leave the room and go away. I remember their telling us about it when Brethren E. C. Briggs, David H. Smith and myself were preaching in Michigan in 1868.

But finally she questioned herself if possibly there was truth in it, seeing that good people like Brother and Sister Church believed it. So she prayed over it and wanted to know the truth. And one night a vivid dream was given to her. She saw in a bright light what seemed a blackboard, only the board was not a board, but appeared as beautiful ebony. And on it in shining letters of gold she read these sentences: "Faith. Repentance. Baptism for the remission of sins. Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Resurrection of the dead. Eternal judgment." And immediately as she had read it a voice spoke clearly, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it." Paul says he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Neither was she, but when Brother Briggs came she and the Churches and Brother Asa were baptized.

Yours for truth,

H. A. STEBBINS.

BYRON, OKLAHOMA, December 18, 1916.

Editors Herald: A light covering of snow this morning reminds me that winter is here, and also that the year 1916 is nearly gone. Whether we are aware of it or not it is nevertheless a fact that we are just one year nearer the end of our days than we were twelve months ago; and the thing that should here concern us, is, what use have we made of this year just ending? If we have been unwise enough to squander the precious moments of the past year, if we have failed to achieve that which should have been achieved by us in the past, we should here pause a moment and ask ourselves the question: What use am I going to make of the time that day by day is opening to me? The past is gone forever, only as it may linger in our memory, and thus be a guide to us. But past opportunities cannot be recalled. They have passed us by. What the future may have in store we are unable to say, but the present is ours; the opportunities of to-day belong to us; let us be wise and utilize the things at hand so that each succeeding day may find us better fitted for life; better qualified to meet its demands than we have ever been before.

As we approach the coming Yuletide, let us enter into the real spirit of the season, and remember that the greatest Christmas gift the world has ever received was the gift of Christ to the world. Then as we plan for the giving of gifts to our friends, let us once for all time remember that the best and noblest gift we can bestow upon anyone is the gift of a Christlike life and service. Arriving at this conclusion, let us resolve that this Yuletide shall mark an epoch in our lives that tends to prepare us more fully for the Master's service, that through the grace that he supplies we may be able to better serve the race, and hasten the redemption of Zion.

To me the year just closing has been the most pleasant year I have ever experienced. I have been busy all the time, and in a small measure have succeeded in making the lives of others brighter and better. My hope and prayer is that the year 1917 which is near at hand will find us all willing to do our respective part of the work that will make Zion a reality.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

WEST BRANCH, MICHIGAN, December 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written to the HERALD. My field is Northern Michigan. I labored there until fall, when I was called to Bay City to preach a funeral sermon; on my way back I stopped at West Branch, where I formerly resided. I was shown by the Spirit that I was to preach at this place and gave out notice for meetings. The people became interested and urged me to stay, which I did, and have baptized eighteen, all grown people. Some others are interested and are investigating the work. I must return now to Alpena.

A. E. BURR.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, December 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: Brother and Sister Pitt just finished a series of meetings which were very successful, as far as they were concerned, the Spirit of God being very much in evidence in the effort they put forth. The Saints and a few outsiders were present each night of preaching service. The bazaar was well attended, as also the lecture, and the stereopticon views, which were very much enjoyed. The meetings closed Sunday last, with fair attendance. Brother Pitt is surely a kind and fatherly man to the Saints, patient, kind, gentle and enduring to the last. Both are proving themselves true Saints indeed.

This makes me remember a dream I had some time ago. I feel impressed to write it. I thought I went to the church at Independence and then I seemed to be here in our little church again, and saw Brother Goodrich giving blessings. I said, "Oh, I did not know Brother Goodrich was a patriarch," and some one said, "Why, yes, he was ordained to that office the last conference."

I thought, Why shouldn't he? He is so patient, kind, gentle and forbearing, and enduring under such trying circumstances, and I awakened.

To me the patriarchs all truly show forth the Christ Spirit. I can see the calling to that office of a number of the ministers who have been sent out here to us to preach and teach God's work. May God continue to bless and keep this arm of his church is my prayer, in Jesus' name.

Dear Saints, come and serve your Savior in his way; put away from you all malice, envy, jealousy, unkindness, anger, and strife; learn to love and help each other in the spread of the gospel. Arise above the petty things of this life, be honest and sincere, refuse not to be a helper, be ye not a leaner. Do not only sing "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," but go where God wants you to go. Do not let the little petty things keep you from doing your duty. Remember it is God to whom you owe your life, and not to mortal man. But to him who gave his only Son that you might be saved. Will you heed the message, or will you go on in your own way, doing things that you know are displeasing to your heavenly Father, and that grieve the Spirit, till like of old, the writing will be seen on the wall: "Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting." God forbid that this should ever be, is my prayer.

You know God has said he can and will raise up a people who will do his will, if those whom he has already raised up fail. Arise, Saints, arise, and shine, for the coming of the Lord is nearer at hand than many of you think.

May God help us all to sense the importance of the message which will be given shortly, is my prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

Your sister,
MINNIE ROCKHOLD.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric

The Saints of the Eastern Michigan District will please take notice that Brother W. A. Blair, of Detroit, Michigan, has been appointed agent for the Eastern Michigan District to succeed Brother W. F. Smith, resigned. We feel to commend Brother Blair to the Saints of the district, feeling assured that in this department of the work he will as ably magnify his calling as did his father, Brother W. W. Blair, in his ministry to the church.

We feel that we should take this opportunity to acknowledge the work of Brother Smith and wish him success in his work as pastor of the Second Detroit Branch.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Pastoral

To the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District: We call your attention to the date of our district conference and conventions, February 5 to 7. At the winter conference is held the election of officers and delegates to General Conference. I shall not be eligible for reelection as president of the district, as I am going to leave the district. You are aware that I have occupied this position since the organization of the district. It is with feelings of regret that I sever my association with the Saints of the district, and can say, generally speaking, I have the highest regard for each member, and wish to express my feelings to all by saying I have been treated with every respect due to any man in the office of president of a district. I hope my successor will meet with the same cheerful response to promote the work assigned to each. I ask that you will continue to feel that you have my interest at heart, and give me your moral support wherever I may be.

It will be necessary that I resign as the bishop's agent of the district. I have given this matter a careful consideration. There should be some one who is able and willing to keep the Saints informed of their duties in the law of temporalities. In viewing the matter from various angles I have decided that Brother John Hartnell should be your next bishop's agent, however, you all understand that this is only my opinion; you have a right to whom you will, but I have recommended the brother to the Presiding Bishop, which I think is my prerogative, but will require your ratification as a district.

Please remember that Brother Anderson, missionary in charge, will be present. We meet with the Seattle Branch in their beautiful church, corner First Avenue Northwest, and Kilbourne Street. Take cars No. 23 or 19 going north.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON, Box 448.

Conference Notices

Quorum Notices

Lamoni Stake quorum of priests will receive blanks for year's report. If any fail to receive, please notify undersigned. We meet with next stake conference in February. James J. Johnson, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa, R. F. D. 3.

Correction

In the first line of the third paragraph of the letter by H. A. Stebbins on "the Lord's prayer," appearing last week, the word three should read these.

Request for Prayers

Prayers are requested for a devoted and interested woman who has had cancerous growth removed from her breast and which threatens to return. She has faith in the church and desires the prayers of the Saints.

Our Departed Ones

MORSE.—At Lamoni, Iowa, December 11, 1916, Sister Almira Cochran Morse, aged 95 years, 1 month and 11 days. Married George Cochran, in Ohio in 1840. He died in 1863. She married Justus Morse in Michigan in 1873 and came to Decatur County, Iowa, the same year. He died in 1887. She was baptized in Michigan in 1867 by E. C. Briggs. Of 4 children, 3 grew to maturity. Two daughters died before she did and the son died a few hours after her going. Her last years were times of feebleness, but she was a worthy woman and a faithful Saint.

COCHRAN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, December 11, 1916, Asa S. Cochran, aged 73 years, 10 months and 17 days. His health seemed about as usual and he helped care for his mother until she breathed her last at 9.45 a. m. At 12.30 (noon) he had an apoplectic stroke, became unconscious, and at 6.30 p. m. his life went out. Thus mother and son passed to the beyond the same day, a remarkable circumstance, and both so old.

Brother Asa was well known to the church, he having been a member of the general high council for twenty-six years; also was bookkeeper and cashier in the Herald Office for many years. He served as presiding priest of Lamoni Branch from 1876 to 1885, and after his ordination as an elder he was branch president some years. E. C. Briggs baptized him in Michigan in 1867, and he and family moved to Iowa in 1875. He married in 1866 Sister Mabel E. Church, who survives him. Of 9 children born, 4 are living, Frank E. and Wilbur, and Sisters Elbert A. Smith and Ralph Grenawalt. The sudden stroke of death was a severe blow to all. Funeral service of mother and son was held on December 14, R. M. Elvin in charge, John Smith assisting, and sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

BARNHART.—Gladdis Olive Barnhart, born at Boonville, Missouri, January 28, 1898. Moved with her parents to Holden, Missouri, 1906. She was baptized when quite young and lived a faithful life as a child of God. She was highly respected and loved by all who knew her. This fact was well attested by the large audience in attendance at the funeral service. J. W. Layton was in charge of funeral, F. C. Scarcliff made a short talk, and J. W. Paxton delivered the sermon. She leaves mother, brother, sister, and many other relatives and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

ROBERTSON.—Saloma Ann Wood, born December 10, 1830, at Norton, Ohio, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Warner, Allendale, Missouri, December 18, 1916. Married Othniel B. Robertson, December 25, 1853. To them were born 9 children, 6 of whom survive. She was baptized November 14, 1870, at Allendale, by James Thomas, and remained faithful until death. She was loved by all who knew her. Funeral at Saints' church, Allendale, in charge of John Neal, assisted by William Birk. Interment in Allendale Cemetery.

WHITE.—Richard Donald White, born at Atkinson, Missouri, June 27, 1900; died at his home in Joy, Illinois, December 20, 1916, aged 16 years, 6 months, 8 days. He leaves to mourn his departure mother and father, 1 brother Everette, 1 sister, Helen, and four stepsisters. Funeral held at Latter Day Saint church, Joy, Illinois, December 21, 1916, in charge of J. W. Bean; sermon by E. A. Curtis.

CAMPBELL.—Joseph N. Campbell born in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, March 19, 1868, died at his home in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, December 21, 1916. Brother Campbell was baptized when young, his parents and grandparents being Latter Day Saints before him. He held office of priest of the North Star Branch, and was district superintendent of Sunday school association of Pottawattamie District. He had been ill only a few days, and on the morning of the day he died was feeling better and able to go out to do the chores, but on returning he told his companion of a peculiar pain in his arms that seemed to go through his body, and a few minutes later it was observed that he was sinking in death in the chair where he was sitting. Heart failure was the supposed cause. He was honored and respected in his neighborhood. A faithful member of the church. He is survived by wife, 3 children, 3 brothers and 2 sisters. Funeral service in Mount Hope Methodist church, largely attended by sympathizing neighbors and Saints. Sermon by H. N. Hansen, assisted by Joshua Carlile and J. A. Hansen.

WILKINSON.—James Wilkinson, born in England, June 12, 1845, died December 26, 1916. Came to America in 1874, and married Mrs. Louie Kearns, October 1, 1892. To them were born 1 son, 1 daughter. He leaves to mourn, wife, children, and many friends. Services at the home December 27; sermon by D. R. Chambers. Interment in Calhoun Cemetery.

SMITH.—Amanda M. Smith, wife of Elder Thomas N. Smith, born August 4, 1861, at Tunnel Hill, Illinois; died at her home in Independence, Missouri, December 18, 1916. They were married February 21, 1878, and she was baptized into the church at Tunnel Hill, about this time. She was the mother of 12 children, 9 living at her death. She was a good mother, a good wife, and a good Latter Day Saint. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, Yea, sayeth the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Funeral was held at the Stone Church, Independence, December 20, W. A. Smith in charge, sermon by W. M. Aylor.

JOHN SMITH

THE FALL OF BABYLON.—The Australian, W. J. Haworth, has written into this doctrinal book many original ideas and elaborated upon carefully garnered evidences of the truth of Christ's gospel. The charts in the book are nuclei of well-worked-out arguments. Altogether it is an elaborate defense of the truth as a very earnest disciple understands it. The proceeds of the sale of this book go to help the financial interests of the Standard Publishing House in Australia. No. 197, cloth$1.25

LAMONI STAKE BISHOPRIC

JOSEPH SMITH AND HIS PROGENITORS.—The Martyr's mother, Lucy Smith, wrote this biography. For this reason alone, if for no other, the book must always be intensely interesting. But there are many other elements entering into its value: its condemnation of polygamy; its true perspective on early history; its sweet maternal intimacy. The church gives it out to the world "for what it is worth," and obviously it is worth a great deal. No. 287, cloth$1.00

HE THAT ENDURES TO THE END---Part 1

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, Sunday evening, August 20, 1916, at Lamoni Stake Reunion. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

I desire to read a part of the fifteenth chapter of the second book of Nephi:

And now I, Nephi, cannot write all the things which were taught among my people; neither am I mighty in writing, like unto speaking: for when a man speaketh by the power of the Holy Ghost, the power of the Holy Ghost carrieth it unto the hearts of the children of men. But behold, there are many that harden their hearts against the Holy Spirit, that it hath no place in them; wherefore, they cast many things away which are written, and esteem them as things of naught. But I, Nephi, have written what I have written; and I esteem it as of great worth, and especially unto my people. For I pray continually for them by day, and mine eyes water my pillow by night, because of them; and I cry unto my God in faith, and I know that he will hear my cry; and I know that the Lord God will consecrate my prayers, for the gain of my people. And the words which I have written in weakness, will he make strong unto them; for it persuadeth them to do good; it maketh known unto them of their fathers; and it speaketh to Jesus, and persuadeth them to believe in him, and to endure to the end, which is life eternal.—Verses 1-5.

You will note this statement from Nephi, that to endure to the end is life eternal.

And it speaketh harsh against sin, according to the plainness of the truth; wherefore, no man will be angry at the words which I have written, save he be of the spirit of the Devil. I glory in plainness; I glory in truth; I glory in my Jesus, for he hath redeemed my soul from hell. I have charity for my people, and great faith in Christ, that I shall meet many souls spotless at his judgment seat. I have charity for the Jew: I say Jew, because I mean them from whence I came. I also have charity for the Gentiles.—Verses 6-9.

I want to impress on your minds the thought that this is a real man writing these words—one who lived on this western continent centuries before Joseph Smith lived, and who sealed up his testimony, and it comes to us to-night as a warning.

He says:

I glory in plainness; I glory in truth; I glory in my Jesus, for he hath redeemed my soul from hell. . . . But behold, for none of these can I hope, except they shall be reconciled unto Christ, and enter into the narrow gate, and walk in the straight path, which leads to life, and continue in the path until the end of the day of probation. . . . And if ye shall believe in Christ, ye will believe in these words; for they are the words of Christ, and he hath given them unto me; and they teach all men that they should do good. And if they are not the words of Christ, judge ye: for Christ will shew unto you, with power and great glory, that they are his words, at the last day; and you and I shall stand face to face before his bar; and ye shall know that I have been commanded of him to write these things, notwithstanding my weakness: and I pray the Father in the name of Christ, that many of us, if not all, may be saved in his kingdom, at that great and last day. And now, my beloved brethren, all those who are of the house of Israel, and all ye ends of the earth, I speak unto you, as the voice of one crying from the dust.

This record comes to us as it was hidden for ages in the hill we call Cumorah, and we hear the language of this man as one who cries from the dust:

And you that will not partake of the goodness of God, and respect the words of the Jews, and also my words, and the words which shall proceed forth out of the mouth of the Lamb of God, behold, I bid you an everlasting farewell, for these words shall condemn you at the last day; for what I seal on earth, shall be brought against you at the judgment bar; for thus hath the Lord commanded me, and I must obey. Amen.

In connection with the statement that Nephi makes that to endure unto the end is life eternal, I call your attention to the statement that the Master makes in Matthew 24: 13, "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

Something over fifty years ago when Abraham Lincoln was calling for volunteers to fight for the salvation of this Nation, there were thousands of men all over the country who gladly responded to his call. There was a great deal of enthusiasm; there were bands playing and flags were flying; speeches were made, and there was a great deal of patriotism in the air. There were thousands of individuals who responded to the call, and they marched away down South with a great deal of enthusiasm, thinking that in a very short time they would be victorious.

What a different scene years later when Abraham Lincoln reviewed the Grand Army of the Republic in the city of Washington, and the soldiers who had survived that great conflict came marching through the streets to be inspected by him. That was an army of veterans who did not need to boast about the things that they had done, because they had been victorious; but there were thousands and thousands who had started out with such enthusiasm who were not in that army. Many of them had been killed during the war. Many had been wounded. Many had been taken prisoners; and worst of all, there were many who had grown tired of the conflict and had deserted.

We sometimes borrow the figures of speech that are applied to war, and apply them to the work in which we are engaged. We take our figures of speech from the battle field, we speak about the warfare in which we are engaged, and we have sanction for this in the word of God, because Jesus himself says in one place, "I came not to bring peace on the earth, but the sword." And the Apostle Paul says, "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith, I have finished my course." And so we frequently borrow these expressions from the field of actual warfare and apply them to the cause in which we are engaged.

I heard it said that when a good brother was appointed to a certain field that his wife said, "We feel like we can afford to take five years and see whether or not we can make it a success." But I call your attention to the fact that God has not called us for one year or two years, or for five years. We have all for life enlisted, as we sing in the hymn, and there must be no furlough granted.

But we are reminded that just as there are dangers in actual warfare, so are there dangers in the conflict in which we are engaged. We start out with a great deal of enthusiasm. We get chockful of it at these meetings annually. When Brother Garver got up here this morning and talked he had us all ready to plunge into this warfare with all our strength. But how will it be when finally the army of the Lord, the army of King Emmanuel shall pass through the streets of the new Jerusalem and be inspected by Christ, or to change the figure of speech, in the language of Nephi, when we meet him face to face before the bar of God? Will it not then be discovered that many have been killed in this conflict, that many have been wounded by the adversary, that many have been taken prisoners, and alas, that some have grown tired of the conflict and have laid down their arms and have absconded from the army of the Lord? I am afraid that that will be the case, but Jesus says: "He that endures to the end, the same shall be saved."

When we speak of being destroyed in this conflict, or taken captive, I realize of course that the language is wholly figurative. But I do not want you to get the idea that it is not very real and very forceful because it is figurative. I believe that those wounds that are received in the army of the Lord sometimes in our conflict with the Devil, are very serious, more so than anything in the shape of wounds that may be received on the battle field in Flanders, though the slaughter of men there may be terrible. And by the way, in actual warfare the wounds are not all inflicted by carnal weapons; but sometimes the defeat is moral. A great many of the British soldiers landed, or disembarked at a certain port in France. All of these soldiers before they left England had been inspected and had been pronounced sound from a medical standpoint, but inside of two weeks from the time when they landed, ten per cent of them were disabled and incapacitated because of diseases that they had received in their persons due to indulgences in vice while in camp in that port. That is, they were down and out before they had ever fired a gun. And one of the generals said that he felt worse over those men than he did over the ones who went into the field and were killed in honorable conflict.

I mention these things simply that I may impress it on your mind that this language, though figurative, has a very literal meaning. And as we look around us and keep our eyes open, we are reminded of the fact that from time to time our brothers and our sisters are falling away.

I remember when I was a little boy, how one of the aged elders of the church used to come and visit us in our home in northern Iowa, and we thought a great deal of the elders in those days, possibly because we did not have so many of them as you have now. And I had formed a very high opinion in my heart of this aged brother. He went away, and a little later the SAINTS' HERALD came to our home bearing the tidings that he had been silenced and taken out of the field because of transgression. And I shall never forget the wound that my heart received on that occasion. It was a new experience to me. I was learning the lesson that we must not trust too much in the arm of flesh. God grant that no man in this assembly shall ever betray the confidence of any other young man as that man betrayed my confidence, and God help me that I may never betray the confidence of any who have confidence in me, as he did to me on that occasion.

WE MUST FINISH OUR WORK

The Master realized the danger that there was that humanity might be overcome, and he took occasion several times to warn us very carefully, that having begun the work we must continue in it. For instance in Luke 14, beginning with the 28th verse:

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him, saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish.

If there is anything ridiculous it is to see a house standing by the side of the road half done and abandoned by the man who started to build it. Everyone who passes by sees in it an object of ridicule. Now we know if we stop to think of it, that it is a sort of a tragedy, because it means that the man has either met with misfortune, or else there was something wrong in his mental make-up that led him to start a work that he was never able to accomplish, and who put all his resources into the foundation and into the first story perhaps.

PRESIDENT SMITH TO CALIFORNIA

President Elbert A. Smith, concerning whose illness notice was given in the HERALD of January 3, accompanied by his wife and little son, Lynn Elbert, has gone to California, where in the quiet of seclusion and amid scenes he has known and loved in former years, it is hoped he may realize a speedy recovery. President Frederick M. Smith accompanied the party, and with his able direction Brother Smith will be located under the best environment possible.

Letter from Sister Smith, en route, conveys to us the information that our beloved Brother Elbert already shows signs of improvement. That he may continue to regain his strength, and be soon restored to health and to the church, will be the prayer of all.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Enormous Loss by Earthquake

On the 6th dispatches from Tokio, Japan, reported an earthquake on the island of Formosa which resulted in a loss of three hundred lives, and a thousand houses were wrecked.

Disagree Over Negro Problem

The joint committee on unification of the Methodist Episcopal Churches and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, recently adjourned till June 27, after failing to agree on the disposition of the Negro Methodists.

Great Battle in Mexico

Villa and his bandits have again attacked Chihuahua and been defeated with a loss of 1,500 dead. One of his chief generals, Martin Lopez, is among the slain, and Villa is in flight, pursued by Carranza troops.

Send in Your Offering

In this number the Presiding Bishop suggests prompt remittance of all Christmas offerings to insure publication. Every year some are too late to have their contribution listed with the others. It seems this might easily be avoided.

To Prevent Gambling on Elections

If a proposed bill formulated by a senate committee is favored by the Washington lawmakers it will be a felony to place election bets and no individual will be allowed to contribute more than five thousand dollars to campaign funds.

A Revival of Spiritualism in England

Sir Oliver Lodge has written a book which tells of the communications from his son who was killed in battle over a year ago. The English press gives considerable attention to it and chronicles an unusual revival of the belief in communication of departed spirits with the living.

Military Training in Chicago Schools

It has been decided to adopt the Wyoming plan of military training, previously mentioned in these columns, for the pupils of Chicago schools. An army officer has been placed in charge, and the system will soon be in operation. Those having objections to the plan may prevent their children from participation.

Allies Reject German Peace Proposal

The entente allies have formally refused to negotiate peace terms until Germany makes definite proposals upon which they may act. They argue that the proposal in its present form appears to be a war maneuver. The reply was signed by the ten Governments who are opposed to the four central powers in Europe.

European War

The Teuton troops have cleared Dobrudja of Rumanian and Russian defenders, while Braila, the most important commercial city in Rumania has fallen into their hands. The Russians seem to have begun a big drive in central Rumania, on a fifteen mile front. Navigation on the Danube River as far as this place from the heart of Germany is in German control, while Rumanian and Russian shipping is excluded. Little of general interest is reported from other parts of the war area.

$4,000,000 Raised for Pensions

The late Protestant Episcopal convention decided to raise $5,000,000 for a church pension fund for clergymen and their dependent families. It is now reported that all but a million of this has been raised, and the other will likely be subscribed by March 1. It is intended to provide a minimum pension of $600 to the clergyman who voluntarily retires at the age of sixty-eight, with a maximum of half his former salary.

Argentine Military System a Pattern

It is announced that the system in use by this progressive South American sister Republic is to be a model for the universal service bill being drafted by a committee of the Army staff. If this is made law, it will keep half a million men under training, with two and a half million trained reservists subject to call. The Argentine plan is compulsory for all citizens from their twentieth to their fortieth year. With the "preparedness" sentiment prevailing, there seems to be no doubt that this bill will be indorsed by Congress in some form.

The "Unspeakable" Book of Mormon

A writer in the Presbyterian Banner classifies the Book of Mormon as "unspeakable," which is conclusive evidence that he hasn't read it or been in touch with anyone who has.

We have on our shelves as complete a set of anti-"Mormon" books as is ordinarily found, and the authors of them fail to find any traces of immorality or anything to make it "unspeakable."

Possibly this person had in mind Paul's definition of the word. In 2 Corinthians 12: 4 he says he was "caught up into paradise and heard unspeakable words."

A Chinese Viewpoint

In the neighborhood of Shanghai, we are told by the San Francisco Argonaut, an English sailor on his way to the foreigner's burial ground to lay a wreath on the grave of a former comrade, met an intelligent looking native carrying a pot of rice. "Hello, John!" he hailed, "where are you going with that 'ere?" "I takee put on glave—glave of my flien," said the Chinaman. "Ho! ho!" laughed the sailor, "and when do you expect your friend to come up and eat it?" "All time samee your flien' come up and smellee your flowers," replied John.—Current Opinion.

The "Messiah" at Kansas City

An audience of twelve thousand assembled at Convention Hall in Kansas City on the evening of December 29 to hear Handel's "Messiah," the great oratorio which has stirred so many hearts.

The Independence choir, composed of about one hundred and sixty of our members, under the direction of Mrs. George H. Hulmes, assisted the Kansas City Symphony Chorus in the rendition, and were given special mention by all the newspaper accounts. One paper asserted that it was the greatest musical concert ever given in Kansas City.

The musical critic of one of the Kansas City papers gives Sister Wallace N. Robinson credit for "the outstanding feature of the evening" in the great soprano solo part.

The admission was free, and the event advertised as a Christmas gift to the people.

It is indeed gratifying to record this signal success of our singers as representatives of a people who in this community years ago were cruelly persecuted and driven from their homes. Our singers deserve especial commendation for their part in this and other excellent features.

The Journal of History

The January Journal of History contains an article entitled "Mormons" by Alexander Majors who, when a young man, participated with the Independence mob in driving the Saints from Jackson County, Missouri.

Though his prejudice is evidently against the Saints, he speaks highly of them as citizens. It is a valuable article to be in the hands of church defenders.

Other articles are: Letters from George Miller, once presiding bishop of the church, containing matter not generally known to our readers.

"Pioneer trails across Iowa" by the Editor, which contains some items not generally known about the migrations of the Latter Day Saints and connecting some other events not clearly understood.

The series of Presidents of Seventy contains the biography of Francis M. Sheehy by James F. Mintun and the autobiography of Hyrum O. Smith revealing some of the activities of these well-known representatives.

Elder Duncan Campbell, local historian of the Lamoni Stake, continues his interesting relation of early events in the territory covered by the stake then known as Decatur District.

It is contemplated to introduce many subjects in the near future of thrilling interest which have been brought to light by much research, and which will not be found elsewhere, but the board will need stronger financial support than has been given for the resources are not equaling the cost of production.

It is important that the Journal should continue, for through it we get before historical societies and in historical circles as we can in no other way. We also get the benefit of the research of the best scholars of the age through our exchanges with other historical periodicals.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

OUR 1917 CHRISTMAS OFFERING

At the time of writing this article we do not know the amount of the 1916 Christmas offering, but one thing we do know and that is, that it could be $90,000.00 with just a little effort on the part of every Sunday school scholar.

The Herald Office prints 45,000 Quarterlies, which indicates that there are that number actively interested in Sunday school study. Now if each one of those pupils will resolve that during 1917 he or she will earn, save or contribute not less than $2, and as much more as possible, the Bishopric will be able to pay the total church debt in about three years, and thus save the $12,000 a year that we are now paying for interest.

We want all parents to present this matter to their children and let them see that the children of the church have the power and can pay the church debt. Help them plan how they can earn their part, and during the year we will give suggestions each month to assist them. Write to me and give me your ideas, so that I can pass them on to others.

Spring will soon be here. Children on farms can be given a few hens to set, and let them have the increase to help the Lord's work. Impress upon their little minds for whom they are working. Onions pay a good return—from a small piece of ground a quarter of an acre will yield from $40 to $75. Pop corn pays well. Give them a small strawberry patch to look after. Do not wait until the year is gone, but begin now and work with the children.

One sister suggests that we "gather up the fragments." Make up your mind to save every copper penny that falls into your hands to go toward this 1917 Christmas offering. You will never miss it and you will be surprised at the amount saved at the end of the year.

We trust that Sunday school officers and teachers will actively cooperate with the Bishopric in keeping this before every member of the Sunday school and church, that by a united effort we shall accomplish results that will surprise ourselves and please the Lord.

The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debts have accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.—Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.

Watch for a letter in the Stepping Stones for January 16 from Louise Haas, twelve years old. She and her younger brother and sisters earned $25.39 as their 1916 Christmas offering.

Yours in gospel service,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

MARRIAGE AND THE RELATIONSHIP OF THE SEXES

The relation of the sexes has been one of the questions about which there has been much of error represented, and a great amount of wickedness has grown out of the unwillingness of mankind to be subject to the order of the divine.

The relation of the sexes was appointed by the Creator as it should have been had there not been any sin; and as it should be after that sin entered into the world; then as it should be in the church during the time of mortality. Marriage is the civil order established by governments, and approved by the God of nations, and like the Almighty was from the time it was instituted the same, and was always to remain the same. The principle upon which the relation of the sexes and the rite of marriage was established is clearly set forth in the history of the spiritual creation before man appeared in the earth; "And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them." Divinity has in this act set his seal upon the relationship of the sexes as that of one male and one female. The object of this relationship was, to "be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it."

When man was placed upon the earth to tabernacle in flesh, this same principle was carried out by the creative act, the history of which I give. After man was a living soul and placed in the garden to dress and keep it, and had been given instruction in regard to the trees in the garden, of what he should eat and what he should not eat, then the Lord said, "It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make an helpmeet for him." Then after Adam had given names "to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field. . . there was found no helpmeet for him."

And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; and the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: and she shall be called woman, because she was taken out of man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.—Genesis 2: 15-24.

This last verse is by the Son of God ascribed to having been said by the one "who made man at the beginning," as evidence is given in Matthew 19:4-6. Christ concludes from this that "they are no more twain, but one flesh."

It should be remembered that this was the relationship affixed by the Creator and acknowledged by Adam before that sin entered into the world. This relationship fixes the two as one in everything that pertains to the flesh, and their relationship therein, so that in all social, civil and religious associations they should be as one, but all that relates strictly to the flesh in the conditions through which the earth should be replenished and the race should be multiplied, as well as subdued, they should be one, for as Christ says they are "no more twain, but one flesh."

A change occurred after sin entered. A curse was placed upon the woman that still remains and will remain till the curse is taken away.

And unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.—Genesis 3: 16.

I think that all will be free to admit that the curse is yet upon the race, and that the woman as well as the man is subject and should be subject to the conditions here announced by the God of heaven, "and he shall rule over thee." It must be remembered that this is a curse, yet while it is, it was in the wisdom of God the best relationship that it was possible for him to give to the husband and the wife while under the curse that they might fulfill duties while thus associated. To rule over the woman the man has the greater responsibility, yet should assume it in the spirit in which God intended that he should rule, in the spirit of love, and for the full purpose of protection to the woman while she was fulfilling her duties and enduring the added sorrow and conception, and at the same time the woman should accept of the decision of the loving Father as that to which she should humbly submit, and patiently endure, not assuming the responsibility that God had placed upon the man, but remaining one flesh, should act as his helpmeet, with the ruling over in the hands of the man in a further sense than it would have been had it not been for the transgression, from which she shall be delivered in a certain way as stated by Paul in Timothy 2: 15.

Because man has not fulfilled his part in ruling over the woman in righteousness, this condition pronounced by the Father has become galling and means have been sought by which the woman shall assume some part of the ruling, and in many instances to the neglect of the more important duties assigned by which she shall be redeemed from the transgression. But to those in the church, having a belief that "all things work together for good to them that love God," there will be no desire to assume a position outside of that in which God in his love has placed them, and thus make the mistake that many outside of Christ, who know not the love of God have assumed, that is, that man has no rights that do not belong to woman in ruling, in social or governmental affairs. God having placed this duty upon man, he should seek from the One who placed that responsibility there how to rule in righteousness, and not try to shirk that responsibility by placing it upon the woman already burdened with that which will redeem her from the transgression. Trying to assume conditions that are not appointed of God only adds to the complications, and never has and never will give relief, for God's ways that he has ordained are the best.

Some of the human race have assumed that God's appointments have not been equal, so they have instituted that one man to fulfill his full obligations should have more than one wife, that the earth might be replenished with the creature man, and the proper multiplication should occur. It might be thought unrighteous by some for me to assume that such have as much right to that position as that others have to assume that woman should enter into the realm of the husband and bear^d the responsibility of ruling that the earth might be subdued, or brought subject with all her children to the highest will of heaven in the mortal state. But to transgress one part of the ways of the Lord is no nearer right than to transgress any other part, for to transgress the least command will bring its legitimate loss. It is only when we do what the Lord has said that he is bound to bless, but if we do not in accord to what he has said, we have no promise.

The relationship of the husband and wife in the church is by inspiration fixed in the Scriptures, "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church." (Ephesians 5: 23.) The relationship of Christ with the church has not changed, neither has the relationship of the husband with the wife changed with those who are members of the church. Since this is the relationship to be borne, the instruction following, that is; "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it," and "so ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself" should be observed. They are one flesh, and while the husband should occupy his position in faithfulness, so the wife should humbly assume her position, "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord."

"Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything."—Ephesians 5: 22-28.

To-day this is one of the things that is perplexing the religious and political world, and has affected some who are in the church. These positions are not willingly assumed by either the husband or the wife. I am quite well assured that had the man fully assumed his responsibilities that there would have been no thought, save it would have been by the more wicked part of humanity, on the part of the woman to want to rule, but she would have felt quite content in her own duties and felt that they were quite enough. Man has not even been willing for the woman to occupy her position unmolested. The church has the freedom to say whether she shall be governed by the Christ, for when He gives instruction the church can say whether she will be governed by it or not, but if she is not she must take the consequences, and if man does not rule as the head as Christ would rule the church he must take the consequences and all that relates to him, wife and children are subject to the consequences, because they are his. The family is a unit in the mind of God, "one flesh." Growing out of this unit higher or a more enlarged governments grow, and the effectiveness of such larger governments among men is predicated upon how the unit is governed, and how submissive to the God of nations the unit is.

Conditions to be enjoyed in the redeemed state cannot be assumed with safety and propriety in the state now existing under the curse, and this has been the mistake of many in a political sense; they have assumed that there was need of no divine directions being given to which the governed should be subject but that the governed should be the governing power. The heart of man is not right in the carnal state, and not until the nature has been changed from the conditions under the curse to that when the curse is taken away can we assume the right of kings and priests with propriety.

Marriage is a civil right, but is and should be subject to the divine principle, one woman and one man, through which the earth should be peopled. The home is a divine institution, and it, too, must be subject to the divine principle, and the relations appointed by divinity must be observed to bring about his purposes. So governments when following the divine principles, and the hearts of the people being moved towards those principles by righteousness will bring to the people governed the highest possibilities of governments under the curse, and assist in the establishment of that government of which the King of kings shall be the ruler.

Our duties are that man, woman, family and church should occupy the proper relationship as appointed of God under the conditions while earthly governments exist, or while the curse remains, so that we may the sooner be relieved in God's own way from the curse, and as a church should teach others both by example as well as precept what these relationships are, and our willingness to be submissive thereto, and the wisdom and patience exhibited is enduring subject thereto. In this we can demonstrate the virtue of God's appointments, though they may not always appear to our carnal nature just and right.

THE BURNING OF BABYLON--No. 3

BY E. E. LONG

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE RECEIVED

It will be appropriate at this juncture to consider the direct question, Did Joseph Smith receive a revelation from God? If he did, the "condemnation" of the modern church is greater than they anticipate.

During the progress of a union revival meeting held by the Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians in the spring of 1820, Joseph Smith, then a young man in his teens, was exercised as to his spiritual condition. There being considerable strife and tumult, he was puzzled as to which church to join, so he went to the Methodist minister for advice. He was told to read his Bible and pray. No more wholesome advice could have been given at the time. But why read the Bible unless he was prepared to believe its teachings? And why pray if no answer from God was to be expected? Acting on the advice given, and while reading the Bible, he came across this: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." (James 1: 5.) In the simplicity of his soul he believed it meant just what it said, and he betook himself to the solitude of a near-by forest and engaged in prayer.

While thus calling upon the Lord he says two heavenly personages appeared to him. He was told to join none of those churches for they were all wrong, and their creeds were an abomination in the sight of God. Of course he was alone, and his testimony is not supported by eyewitnesses. So was Zacharias alone in the temple when Gabriel appeared to him. Mary was alone when the same angel conversed with her, and Moses was alone when the angel appeared to him in the burning bush. So of Daniel, John, and many others of Bible fame whose testimony is not supported by eyewitnesses. Yet Christians accept all these without question. But instantly Joseph Smith announced a similar visit to himself it was denounced as "all of the Devil." It is so easy to say, "all of the Devil." The Pharisees said the same thing to Jesus. In fact it is an old stereotyped phrase of those who oppose the truth. But, it is argued, Joseph had a dream in which Mary's testimony was confirmed. Angels appeared to the shepherds, and others were moved on by the Spirit to testify, etc. So of this latter message. Men and women of undisputed character and veracity gave confirmatory testimony, besides, there were a number of public manifestations of a supernatural power.

But Joseph Smith did have eyewitnesses. On May 15, 1829, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery together affirm that an angel of God appeared to them and, confirming former communications, laid his hands on them and ordained them to the Aaronic priesthood. Of this event Joseph Smith wrote:

We still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized. I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded.

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, and we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 34, 35.

EYEWITNESSES TESTIFY

Of the same circumstances Oliver Cowdery wrote to his friend, W. W. Phelps, from Norton, Medina

County, Ohio, September 7, 1834, in part as follows:

The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the redeemer spoke peace to us, while the vail was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance. What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world were racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men, were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard, as in the blaze of day; yea, more, above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature. Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired. 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory; 'twas a message from the Most High. And as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were wrapped in the vision of the Almighty. Where was room for doubt? Nowhere; uncertainty had fled; doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever.

But, dear brother, think, for a moment, what joy filled our hearts, and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said: "Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."

I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory which surrounded us on this occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, can begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No; nor has this earth power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit. Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it forever from the mind. The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that we heard the voice of Jesus, and the truth unsullied as it flowed from a pure personage, dictated by the will of God, is to me past description, and I shall ever look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanksgiving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which shall never cease.—Cowdery Letters, pp. 3, 4.

Do the foregoing testimonies read like deliberate fabrications? Does either of them bear the earmarks of a premeditated fraud? If so, when can we ever depend on human testimony? The witnesses died with their testimony on their lips, and they have never been impeached. No more solemn, straightforward testimony can be found anywhere. It requires less credulity to accept it than it does blind stupidity to reject it.

In addition to the foregoing we have the testimony of David Whitmer and Martin Harris that on another occasion they saw and conversed with an holy angel in company with Mr. Smith. Oliver Cowdery was present also. Cowdery, Whitmer, and Harris died reaffirming that testimony. And that is not all. Scores of persons whose word would not be questioned on any other matter, assure us that they received knowledge by dream, vision, and angelic visitation that the message presented by Joseph Smith was true. What shall be done with this cloud of witnesses? Shall their testimony be cast aside as unworthy of consideration? If so, what does human testimony amount to?

REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS

Joseph Smith left on record some startling predictions which must be taken into account. If the rule found in Deuteronomy 18:22 may be followed with safety, then the fact that Mr. Smith's prophecies are having a literal fulfillment is a point in his favor that cannot be set aside with a sneer. They are either true or false.

As a religious reformer he stood alone. His message was not only a protest against the sins of the church of Rome, but a repudiation of modern Christianity as a whole. According to his numerous prophetic utterances, the long period of Gentile misrule was nearing an end in a bloody catastrophe and Europe's gory baptism is a striking confirmation of his prophetic foresight. In 1830 he predicted that "great destructions await the wicked," and "desolations upon Babylon." (Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2; 34: 3; 36: 12, 13.)

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, containing Mr. Smith's revelations, was first published in 1835, several copies of which are still in existence. It is divided into sections and paragraphs. From section sixty-three the following excerpt is taken:

Hearken, O ye people, and open your hearts, and give ear from afar; and listen, you that call yourselves the people of the Lord, and hear the word of the Lord, and his will concerning you; yea, verily, I say, Hear the word of him whose anger is kindled against the wicked and rebellious, who willet to take even them whom he will take, and preserveth in life them whom he will preserve; who buildeth up at his own will and pleasure; and destroyeth when he pleases, and is able to cast the soul down to hell. Behold, I, the Lord, utter my voice, and it shall be obeyed. Wherefore, verily I say, Let the wicked take heed, and let the rebellious fear and tremble; and let the unbelieving hold their lips, for the day of wrath shall come upon them as a whirlwind, and all flesh shall know that I am God. And he that seeketh signs shall see signs, but not unto salvation.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 1, 2.

That the present war came on the nations as a whirlwind has already been stated by many who have written on the subject. The war clouds had been gathering with increasing blackness for some time. But while the nations were consoling themselves that peace was at last assured, the storm burst forth in all its tragic fury. It was the calm before the storm.

More remarkable still is the following:

And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

THE ASSOCIATES OF THE YOUNG—No. 2

[This article is one of a series by various writers on this subject. Other numbers will appear occasionally. —EDITORS.]

That any normal person is going to live in any community without forming association with some one, is not to be expected. To shut oneself from the social atmosphere in which one lives, is not the natural way of living. On the contrary, all of us make friends, more or less, among whatever people circumstances throw us. This is especially true of the young. And we would not have it otherwise; for just as soon as a person shuts himself up from the rest of the world, just that soon his road begins to narrow and he eventually finds himself in a rut over the edges of which he views the rest of mankind with suspicion and jealousy. He has made himself a social hermit—and God did not intend that man should be a hermit.

If a person is going to be of any service in the world, he must mingle with his fellow creatures; learn to give and take, and, most of all, find the place where he can do the greatest good, and then fit himself into that position instead of expecting the place to be made entirely to fit him.

In forming friendships and associations, the parties concerned must have some mutual interests between them; they must have something that will allow them to meet upon common ground. The scope of this common interest determines how strong the friendship may become. Many of the young people of the church will appreciate what it means when we speak of the association of the Latter Day Saints young men and women among the young people who are not believers in our beautiful gospel of these latter days. Our young people are often thrown into places where their associates are all, or nearly all nonmembers. The writer happens to be one of these young people.

Among these associates, the Latter Day Saint young man or woman makes many friends because there is, oftentimes, much of common interest between them. He or she enters into their social affairs to a greater or less degree, and really enjoys the pleasant associations. Yet who is there, under similar conditions, that has not, at times, felt a great barrier between him and his most intimate associates? Who is there that, at times, has not had things arise that seemed to throw a damper upon his friendly associations for a while? and when the damper was lifted, who is there that has not, at times, found some of his friendships crippled or severed?

It is natural for us all to wish to be frank and open to those associates whom we choose to call friends; but what young member has not seen the time when he would love to converse upon the themes of the gospel, with his outsider friend, as one friend should be able to talk to another? and who has not had the experience of having to be continually on the defensive, whenever the gospel theme was mentioned to his associates, merely because there was not that mutual ground of understanding and love for the gospel between them? Of course, this is all well and good at times, for it certainly strengthens the young person by teaching him to be able to take care of himself under any and all circumstances. But where this sort of thing is experienced all the while, the individual is very apt to develop a one-sided growth, or to give up the fight entirely.

How vast a difference is experienced, however, when this young person has the privilege of associating with other young people who believe in the same everlasting gospel; who have the same hopes and fears; the same belief and faith in the God who made heaven and earth and all the firmament, yet who is not so unapproachable but that the most lowly of earth's human creatures may approach him and call him Father! The associates of the young do have a great influence upon the young. I will be a different person because of having met Brother B— than I would have been if I had never known him. You will be a different person by your having come into contact with that certain friend of yours than you would if you had never met him. Your friend will be a different sort of an individual in his daily life than he would have been had he never known you. Whether your friend will be better or worse by having met you, will depend upon the standard of character you maintain in your associating with him, and vice versa. The individual not only exerts an influence upon society, but society, in turn, wields an influence upon the individual. This is largely determined by the kind of society in which the individual finds himself. The action and reaction is greater with the young, as everyone knows, because their lives and characters are yet in the making.

If a young person is thrown among wicked, indifferent, or worldly associates, it is bound to leave its mark in some way or other. It is not necessarily true that the young person will become polluted, but his moral and spiritual advancement will be retarded just as sure as can be, and he will thus not be able to grow and develop as he otherwise should have been able to do.

On the other hand, where the young people of the church are able to associate together—those who are interested in the gospel, some are not, we are sorry to find—and help one another by the right kind of influence, there is going to be a greater moral and spiritual development.

In conclusion I wish to add, as a matter of personal interest, that at the last General Conference the writer had the privilege of associating with the young people of the church in a way that he had never had before. It was a wonderful inspiration to see the vast spiritual superiority of the young people of the church over the young people outside the church.

Then let us be alert, young Saints, whether we chance to be upon the frontier or live among other Latter Day Saints, and let our light and influence so shine among men that when the final reckoning shall come we shall be proud to say, each of us, "I have done my best." We are taught by the Master that we should be able to be in the world but not of the world. It is hard, sometimes, for us who have to come in contact with the world every day, to live up to this teaching in the fullest extent; for even though we strive as we might, there is sure to be felt that reaction, at times.

It then becomes necessary, lest we fall, to call upon our Father in humble prayer, not necessarily that he might remove the obstacles from our way, but that he will give us strength to overcome. To him that overcometh a crown of everlasting life is promised.

AMOS YATES.

The method, the quality, and the results of preaching, together with the endurance (by the people), the action for time, and reaction for eternity, all hinge largely upon the preacher's aim.

The Holy Spirit speaking through crude illiteracy may be vital unto salvation, but scholarly embellishments applied with divine unction double the distance. Salvation may run with you in search of souls.—James E. Yates.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

INCAS AS IDEAL RULERS

Writing in the National Geographic Magazine, O. F. Cook, botanist of the National Geographic Society-Yale University Expedition to Peru in 1915, and of the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture, pays a high tribute to the wonderful civilization of the Incas whose amazing irrigation projects and "staircase" farms on the mountain slopes enabled them to develop such food plants as the potato.

In substantiation of his claim that the Inca agricultural system was not only the most complete form of social organization of which we have any record, but that it also gave the most adequate adjustment of the human relations that lead to continual conflict and confusion in other forms of society, Mr. Cook quotes the following from the will of the Spanish conqueror Marcio Serra, who died in Cuzco, Peru, in 1589:

The said Yncas governed in such a way that in all the land neither a thief nor a vicious man, nor a bad, dishonest woman was known. The men all had honest and profitable employment. The woods and mines and all kinds of property were so divided that each man knew what belonged to him, and there were no lawsuits. The Yncas were feared, obeyed, and respected by their subjects, as a race very capable of governing; but we took away their land, and placed it under the crown of Spain, and made them subjects.

We have destroyed this people by our bad examples. Crimes were once so little known among them that an Indian with one hundred thousand pieces of gold and silver in his house, left it open, only placing a little stick across the door as the sign that the master was out, and nobody went in. But when they saw that we placed locks and keys on our doors, they understood that it was from fear of thieves, and when they saw we had thieves amongst us they despised us.

PROHIBITION IN 1920

"A saloonless nation in 1920" was a year or so ago the slogan of only a small number of consecrated prohibition workers of the country, then admired for their "faith" in their cause, but not for their political discernment. So-called temperance people said "It is a pretty sentiment, but it can't be done." The liquor interests laughed at the "poor fanatics" as merely dreamers of dreams.

On November 8, 9 and 10, a nation read in the news and editorial columns of the daily press that prohibition had won a remarkable victory, and that "A saloonless nation in 1920" has become a certainty. This time it was not the brave assertion of the "poor fanatics," but the positive prediction of seasoned political observers and the admission of erstwhile liquor-favoring editors who could not misinterpret the ballots of the nation on November 7.

Meanwhile, the Prohibition Party, the Anti-Saloon League, the W. C. T. U., and the other agencies for the abolition of the saloon are going cheerfully forward with their plans, not even letting up from their consecrated endeavors to say "I told you so!" —Prohibition Press Bureau.

LURE OF "SPIRIT" MANIFESTATIONS

It is strange that there can be such a wide variance of belief on the subject of "spirits." Matters within the realm of the physical are comparatively easy to prove or disprove, but when we take up the "spirit" phenomena, we get into deep water at once.

Science has scoffed at spirit rappings, slate writing and other well-known manifestations, but in recent years many hard-headed scientists have investigated this field and have been forced to admit that there were powers in evidence there which could not be explained on any rational or materialistic basis. British scientists have advanced in these investigations further than ours have, and when such eminent men as Sir Oliver Lodge, Sir William Crookes and Professor A. R. Wallace testify their acceptance of these things, it will not do to ignore them entirely. In Italy we find Lombroso and in France Flammarion giving us the same verdict—and these too are men of world-wide fame as scientific investigators.

Several years ago we received a book by Doctor I. K. Funk, of the well-known publishing firm of Funk & Wagnalls. After a long investigation he confirmed what other skeptical observers had reported—namely that there is certainly something occult and abnormal in what are popularly known as "spirit" doings, and that they cannot be accounted for by any theory of subconscious intelligence, telepathy or trickery. Of course everyone knows that in popular "spiritualistic" exhibitions, such as seances conducted for pay, etc., there is more or less fakery mixed up with perhaps some genuine powers, but after all this fakery is admitted, there are still many startling facts which baffle a "common-sense" explanation.

Persons who have developed mediumistic powers are usually of a highly sensitive and abnormal type. It appears that the "spirits"—as we call them for the want of a more definite term—gradually get control or possession of the medium, who thus becomes the “open door” by which these “spirits” enter into communication with the physical world. The medium goes into a passive state during which his will remains in abeyance, and the controlling “spirit” uses him as an agent. Often thus the medium will tell things which he has no possible way of knowing by his own physical powers, and even speaks languages of which in his normal mind he is totally ignorant.

The scientific investigators beforementioned, and many others, have reached the same conclusion—namely, that the “spirit” phenomena are the result of intelligences which are outside and independent of the medium. But as to the nature of these agencies, none of them ventures an opinion.

They do not believe that they are actually the spirits of the dead. Flammarion tells us that forty years of investigation has convinced him that they are not. He admits that “no satisfactory identification of them has been made”; all he does is to conclude that they exist.

Here we have a parallel to the force we call electricity. This force has always existed, and under proper control it can perform wonders; we have to admit its existence, but the greatest scientist in the world doesn't know what it is. Until it was got under control and the laws governing it were learned, it was a malignant force—manifesting itself in the form of lightning, and anyway it is something which cannot be safely fooled with.

People who are ardent believers in spiritism and who are in frequent communication with the “spirit world” do not seem to get any very satisfactory information from these intelligences, whatever they are. The communications are usually of a trivial and useless nature, and they are often totally misleading and untrue.

The “spirits” seem to be unconscionable liars, for they state one thing as true in France and a diametrically opposite thing as true in the United States. In Turkey they tell the inquirer that polygamy is right and in England they denounce it as diabolical. In Germany they assert that the Teutons are to win in the war and in Italy they say the allies are to win. And so it goes.

Even the Bible recognizes the existence of spirits, and it warns people not to be deceived by the lying ones. Doctor Funk came to this sober conclusion: “It is a terribly dangerous mistake to think that there are no evil spirits. There are hosts of them.” And he admits that they often control the medium to his injury and the injury of others.

Some of the investigators think that these spirits are a distinct race of beings, normally invisible to our sight, existing on a lower plane than man, lacking man's moral sense but excelling him in craftiness. These “spirits,” or whatever they are, seem to possess a fiendish desire to mislead and mystify those whose confidence they can worm their way into. This view of the case brings to mind the “demons” of earlier days. In Bible times it was the universal belief that there were evil spirits or lesser devils which sought to gain possession of human beings, and we find Jesus “casting out devils.”

A valuable pamphlet on the subject of “Spiritualistic phenomena” by J. G. Raupert of Buffalo has just appeared. The author, who is not a spiritist but who took part in the investigations of the British Psychological Research Society says it is time for the world to admit that these “spirit” forces do exist, and that everybody ought to be warned against them.

No relations can be had with them, he says, without great physical, mental and moral injury. These “spirits,” he says, which are not human but which have a way of mimicking human traits, use every cunning deceit in order to gain the ascendancy over a human being. At first they proclaim lofty sentiments, in order to make a good impression and win confidence, but later they do their best to demoralize and corrupt their victims who do not realize the danger until it is too late.

All this sounds more like the superstition of the Dark Ages than twentieth century hard sense, but the subject is worth serious thought. Most people pooh-pooh the idea of “spirits,” but if these forces exist, as so many worthy witnesses testify, it is foolish and dangerous to try to ignore them. A much better course would be for more of our leading minds to investigate the doings of these “spirits” so that mankind in general might have more definite knowledge about them and learn to avoid their influence if it is baneful, and profit by it if it is benignant.—The Pathfinder, November 11, 1916.

CLEAN STORIES

The Rotary Club of Louisville, Kentucky, recently adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That no story, stunt or joke is proper or fit to be placed before any Rotarian or any gathering of Rotarians which would not be perfectly fit and proper before such Rotarians if each one were accompanied by his mother, wife or daughter.

Good. The Rotarians are to be congratulated. There are plenty of clean stories to illustrate every truth worth illustrating. It is time to abolish the vulgar story. It is increasingly offensive and never safe. Even if there are no ladies within hearing, there may be gentlemen present.—The Commoner, November, 1916.

"As a City Set on a Hill"

News has reached our desk of many scenes of successful endeavors during the holiday season among the musicians of our church. Many wide-awake branches have had their cantatas, their musical programs, and their fine services of song, in commemoration of the birth and mission of the Christ among men. This is as it should be, and is a very encouraging sign that the spirituality we recognize in the gospel of music is making its impress felt upon the minds and the hearts of our people. We often rejoice that we as a church have received such especial sanction from on high, in the enjoyment of this form of art; not only have we been permitted to use and enjoy it, but we have been urged, commanded, admonished, times repeatedly, to cultivate and esteem this heaven-given blessing. The far-reaching reasons for this command to us, we are too finite to comprehend, but that we, as obedient hearers and doers of this same word, are beginning to sense in some measure its benefit to ourselves and its efficacy in attracting others to us, may be deduced from the ever increasing stream of endeavor in musical activity which is engaging the attention of our people.

In Philadelphia, our church chorister, despite an accident to his foot which might have seriously handicapped a less enthusiastic leader, conducted a rendition of the "Messiah" at the Christmas season, which, with the introduction of the orchestral feature new to the work there, proved to be a most inspirational affair, if we are to judge by the reports which reach us.

Our Independence choir has been winning considerable notice of a very flattering and conspicuous kind, through its assisting the Kansas City Symphony Chorus to sing the "Messiah" in Convention Hall of that city. This chorus is under the direction of Mr. Earl Rosenberg, who has been very lavish in his praise of the work of our Independence choir in this instance, and in appreciation of the fine work in drilling and interpretation which has been done by its director, Sister George H. Hulmes. None knows better than "ye editor" what effort and sacrifice and consecration has marked the work of the sister just mentioned, who, with a family of young children to care for, might most easily have been discouraged and given up the work of conducting and training a large choir in such difficult work as this oratorio, in addition to the constant effort required for the regular anthem work of the Sabbath services. Therefore it is with joy and gratification we learn of the well-merited praise and appreciation which has come to Sister Hulmes, from this man of music who is most competent to judge. The Independence choir, to the number of one hundred and sixty members, helped very materially in swelling the fine chorus of praise which, assisted by the soloists (among whom was our talented Sister W. N. Robinson) and forty players from the Kansas City Symphony Orchestra, went up to the Lord of Hosts on the evening of December 29. In connection with this, it is very interesting to us to know that on the evening before, in the Stone Church, under direction of its own leader, our choir gave the oratorio by itself, with Brother Paul Craig as one of the soloists.

Speaking of Brother Craig, it is with pleasure we note his splendid efforts at Lamoni since the opening of the college year. He has a large class of vocal pupils, a male quartet to train, and one or two classes in musical history, but besides these duties, he has managed to stir up a very general interest in music in the town. Combining the forces of the church choir, the college chorus, and community singers from Lamoni and vicinity, he has one of the most enthusiastic choruses imaginable, and through his steady efforts, the rendition of the "Messiah" again for our next General Conference is made possible and assured.

Equally gratifying it is to note the steady growth of the orchestral work in Lamoni, under the consecrated service of Brother J. H. Anthony. Taking the boys and girls of different ages and in the study of different instruments at differing times, and working with one or another of the sections daily, with general and combined work at intervals, he is building up a really efficient band of "players upon instruments of brass and wood and string" which must be heard next April, to be fully appreciated.

*"Angel Voices Ever Singing"	W. H. Neidlinger
*"O, Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem"	Jas. C. Knox
*"Hear my Cry, O God"	Geo. Francis Morse
"Fight the Good Fight"	R. M. Stults

Anthems with the indication (*) are not difficult and are suitable for the average chorus choir.

The above is the music selected for rendition at General Conference by the combined choirs. The bulletins outlining the most direct way of securing same at the lowest possible cost are in the hands of your district or stake choristers, who have same ready for distribution, or can be procured from the national director, A. N. Hoxie, 173 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Owing to the short space of time, we urge that you get into immediate touch with these series and properly study and learn them, in order that acceptable service can be given at the General Conference.

The choir movement is finding new inspiration and greater possibilities than ever before. The term "service" is being better understood. Many, feeling that our success is based upon individual consecration, are bending every effort to enlarge this work by study and application. Large community efforts are being realized and many souls are being reached through the medium of good music. Our orchestral department is awakening a new interest and it looks now as if the band movement will soon take its proper place in our endeavor.

The culmination of this year's efforts at the General Conference, Lamoni, Iowa, marks our fifth anniversary of combined work. They have been five years of steady awakening. To-day we feel the magnificent power that accompanies the coordinating of our working forces. The spirit of helpfulness is pervading the entire church and ere long we shall detect the note of triumph that will resound and intermingle with the songs of joyfulness.

Singers of Israel and they who play upon the instrument, listen again to our great call and bend with unflagging interest to our work of consecration.

A good way to begin is to immediately investigate the possibilities of the conference series in your local and district.

Sincerely,
ALBERT N. HOXIE.

The Combined Choir

(Read by Mrs. May Skinner, at musical institute held in Independence, Missouri, last April.)

Is the district choir a practical and beneficial thing?

When I was asked to write this paper I suggested to Sister Anderson that she ask some one who had been successful along this line, as in my stake work I had not as yet reached that point.

In looking over the program I notice you have a paper from one of the districts that has been very successful in obtaining a combined district choir, so have thought perhaps I might mention some of the difficulties I have met and also how we are preparing for the combined choir, which is our goal; so I might better head my paper thus—

PREPAREDNESS

In our stake we have only two choirs that are located in cities or towns, and that have been able to do any anthem work. The others are all of rural branches and very inconvenient to visit. These rural choirs have been organized within the last year, and only a very few of the members have made music a study along any line.

In all lines of work we believe it better to begin at the bottom and climb up step by step, and to prepare ourselves for greater things than to try to do the work seniors are doing when we are only beginners.

Our effort has been along this line:

First: To visit each branch and try to inspire in our young people the desire to prepare themselves for better service and to heed the advice given to us in the Doctrine and Covenants to cultivate the gift of music and song, and also let not the old forget the gladness of their youth.

Second: That an organized choir is the first step to preparedness. Regular rehearsals and more unity among the singers.

We have found it necessary to explain why we can do better work by having an organized choir, and first learn to be able to sing the hymns than to try anthems, etc. We have noticed in many of our branches that this has been their greatest need, to learn to sing the hymns and be more efficient in leading the congregational singing. Until they can do this they are not ready to do anthem work.

It has been necessary to give especial instructions to choristers and organists how to lead and play the hymns, and I might say they have shown a willingness to accept advice and suggestions along this line. I have met with these branches many times and assisted along this line and have felt the Spirit of the Lord in confirming my work.

At present our greatest difficulty is the vast difference in efficiency among our different choirs. While we have two or three that are able to do anthem work, yet, as I have said, the others are only learning to sing the hymns and have not been able to take up anthem work.

In order to prepare for and make the combined choir a success, we feel that each choir needs the personal help of the district chorister and it is necessary to meet with each choir in the district and give instructions on the music to be used in their united musical effort—the combined choir.

This has demanded more time and means than we have been able to devote the past year. And here is another difficulty: Before the district chorister can do what his work demands, there should be some way provided to meet his expenses, so that when his presence is needed at any of the branches, he may not be hindered for lack of funds or conveyance.

Many times in the past year I have been needed at different points, yet I have not been able to go on account of no conveyance. I believe as has been suggested by some of our missionaries that the work of district choristers is a missionary work and very important, and that the district should provide some way to meet their expenses, that their work may not be hindered.

The musical work of the district is far-reaching. It not only means better choir work but better service in every line of work, the Sunday school, Religio, and social meetings, all demand much of the chorister's time.

The district or combined choir is and will be a beneficial thing. It gives us an incentive to work and as I have said before a goal. And from our experience at our reunions when the singers from over the district have met together in song service, we know the effect is uplifting and stirs within us a desire to climb higher and become more efficient.

We are hoping to overcome these difficulties this year and that we may by study and work soon be able to have a combined choir in our stake.

We have thought for a long time we should have in every district an organization of the musical workers, to meet at each reunion or conference and have regular institute work, so that all would feel a more personal interest in building up the music work in every line in the district and prepare ourselves for more efficient service to the church.

A Vision of Service

There is, among the poems of Longfellow, the story of "Robert of Sicily," built upon the legend of a medieval king who learned that his power depended on its use in serving his people. There is, in the New Testament, the story of a King of kings, who taught by his own acts that no life can be as great and noble as that spent in the service of the Lord.

Service has been the ideal of the choir movement—service to the Lord and to his people. Almost five years have passed since the movement was launched and for almost five years it has been held steadily in this course, to utilize most effectively the God-given talent of song in his service and in aiding the music lovers of the church to a greater usefulness to him. You who have kept in touch with the movement can best judge what has been accomplished—what left undone—but we who have been intrusted with the supervision of the musical work, realize and realize keenly the task that still remains to be accomplished.

For the choir movement will not have achieved its aim until every singer in the church has awakened to a realization of its possibilities, of its opportunities—until every district, every branch, every member feels its stimulus and its inspiration—until working in concert and in unison, the singers raise their voices to spread the glad message of joy and salvation. We are planning for the time when every branch shall have its loyal band of earnest and faithful singers, eager to enroll as servants of the Lord and improve themselves for his service; for the time when all the choirs in the district will cooperate, aiding and encouraging each other; when all the singers throughout the church will work together as a mighty army in the warfare for the Lord.

For the choir movement would serve in every branch, with every member. It would send its inspiration with every missionary who bears forth the message of Christ, it would gladden every heart that loves the word of God.

For service has been the ideal of the choir movement—service to the Lord and to his people. Already the Presidency of the church and the general chorister have appointed an assistant in each district to aid the workers and supervise the work. We offer the local choirs an opportunity to increase their usefulness; we offer the members an opportunity to improve themselves. We would instill in them a deeper love for music; we would deepen their spiritual desires. We would keep in constant touch with each loyal band, we would keep informed of its progress and of its needs, so that we might aid it in its difficulties and inspire it in its task.

And this is our hope and our aim—to coordinate all the musical forces in the church, to instill in the hearts of the singers a deeper desire to serve the Lord and to inspire many with joy and gladness and the truth of the gospel of Christ.

HERMAN N. SCHWARTZ.

Important Announcement

It has been decided to again render "The Messiah" at the General Conference this year and a cordial and urgent invitation is extended to all those who are capable of performing this work to be in attendance at the conference and assist us in rendering this great tribute of praise to the King of kings.

We hope to be able to announce definitely the dates of these performances in the next issue of The Staff. A. N. H.

Tell It O'er and O'er Again

(New Words to Old Music.)

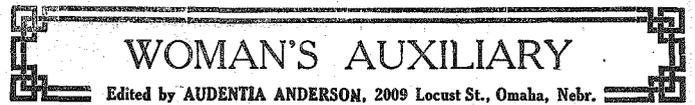

Tell it o'er and o'er again
God's divine, appointed plan.
That brings salvation free to man;
Tell it o'er and o'er again.

Faith in God you must obtain,
Repent; from evil deeds refrain;
Be baptized in Jesus' name,
Beneath the wave, to rise again.

By one and all it may be read,
Through the laying of hands upon your head,
For the Holy Ghost, you may be led,
Into all truth, the Savior said.

His power will raise you from the dead,
All earthly cares and worries fled;
Rich glories then you'll find instead
If "well done" of you may be said.

"Whatsoever Ye Do, Do All to the Glory of God"

With the prospect of a building devoted to the needs of our organized women at Independence, and the indications of corresponding activity among our women all through the church, our new year starts out with much enthusiasm and promise of even greater advancement during its progress than we made in its predecessor. At that, 1916 will long serve as a landmark upon the plain of our development both as a church and as an organized auxiliary; we have not only outlined, but we have accomplished, and that is one very encouraging feature about our work. More has been done in the way of opening the eyes of our women to the very great possibilities for real service which are lying at their very feet than perhaps many may realize. Those locals which have not already taken up many of the new lines of study and development, are beginning to sense the desirability of such action, and they will not long lag behind.

Too, along with this awakening, we think has gone hand in hand, a broader perception of the spiritual meaning there is to it—the sense that nothing is trivial in its ultimate results, and that even the most humble of our efforts, the smallest of our services as wives, mothers, sisters, Saints, has a value eternal in its nature. The kiss of love which we bestow however lightly upon the brow of a child we are learning is but typical in its nature—typical of a feeling which is patterned after that wonderful power which causes the Creator of a universe to yearn over the creatures he has made; and as we perceive this, does it not make us desire all the more rightly to interpret the feelings we have towards our children, and endeavor to exercise our love in the manner that God reveals his towards us? The humble tasks of the household, looked at with large and intelligent vision, become but expressions of the greatest impulses the human race knows, that of homemaking. True it has great variety of form, but essentially it is the same, whether it finds expression in the slovenly throwing of a carelessly prepared meal upon a plain deal table, or is served with daintiness and precision by some thoughtful "high priestess" of the culinary rites of man, who has deemed her work worthy of intelligent study, nicety of planning, and care in execution. Can any woman fail to feel, as she becomes aware of the real responsibility of these things, that she, too, must get in the rapidly growing army of Saints who recognize that every day and every hour their work is a work unto God, and therefore should be performed in a manner worthy of him to whom it is offered? Study, thought, preparation, are the watchwords of the hour, and well may we all follow the splendid example being set for us at the center places of the church.

The Woman's building at Independence should externalize to us many things we have consciously or unconsciously felt this past year. It stands for the forward movement of our women, for their desire the more fully to enter upon their rightful inheritance as helpers, in certain well-defined fields, to those whom God has called to oversee the upbuilding of Zion. It stands for the broadening viewpoints of our women, who are learning to reach out and grasp and assimilate much food that is offered them, to which they were blind before. It will stand for lectures, for classes, for service, for the helping hand extended with ready warmth to lonely girls and worthy women. It will spell "opportunity," and "privilege," and "development" for our sisters at the center place, and we should all feel a keen personal interest in it, to the extent of passing on encouragement, both in the form of the needed money and the favorable word and comment.

It is a mistake to pick out any particular kind of work and call it drudgery. Any work in which one does not delight is drudgery. It is not the nature of the work, but the attitude of the worker, that makes a drudge.—Ambition.

May God aid, prosper and bless his handmaidens in every worthy undertaking and may the results fully demonstrate that they are living up very fully to the opportunity he is giving them!

How May We Improve the Spiritual Condition in the Home?

This subject is one of vital importance to us as a people, touching as it does the lives of individuals and through them the life of the church. It seems a topic worthy the careful consideration of the priesthood, those who have been specially called and ordained to teach us spiritual things. However, when we reflect that woman makes the home, and that instruction or knowledge pertaining to the home—whatever its nature or source—rests with her to make it practical and to apply it, it may not seem unfit for the women to take into consideration the spiritual uplift of the home.

In these days of stress and strain of varied activities and diversions, when there is more love for pleasure than for righteousness, it behooves us to look carefully at our home life and make an effort to tone it up and inject into it that which will give a renewal of spiritual life, thus making it as the Lord intended it should be, symbolic of the great family of God.

There are different phases of home life such as sanitation, nutrition, temperament, economic conditions, etc., all of which together make the atmosphere of home. Physical growth is more perfect under favorable conditions. It is equally true that the spiritual condition of the home is influenced immeasurably by the environments of home. Love of God with all that it implies is the foundation of spiritual growth. God will not dwell in unholy temples. Those who would teach spiritual things must have sat at the Master's feet. We cannot teach what we have not learned, we cannot impart to others what we ourselves do not know. We cannot inspire in others what we have not felt. There is a possibility of cultivating what Thoreau calls "Our upland fields." We all no doubt are impressed from time to time that we could come up higher and there comes to us the desire to so order our homes that God's Spirit may dwell with us. How shall we do this? Perhaps the first step for us as mothers might be to refresh our pure minds by reading what the books, particularly the Doctrine and Covenants, say about child training. It is not necessary, I am sure, to give quotations, we all remember some of those pertaining to this subject. "Bring up the child in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." "Spare the rod and spoil the child," "So teach the child that he become a fit subject for baptism at eight years of age," "Teach the child to walk uprightly before the Lord." As we read we may notice incidentally, some of the penalties attached for nonperformance of duty.

Having become fully imbued with the idea that as home makers a responsibility rests upon us and remembering that Nephi says God gives no commandment unto man that he does not help him fulfill, we may then fortify ourselves for the task. Daily secret prayer alone with God, contemplation of his wonderful love and power as shown in his creation, from the tiniest forms of animal and plant life to the wonders of the heavens above, a knowledge of God's dealings with people of different ages. The mother to be a true teacher must grow in spirituality and a knowledge of the truth. That which she has so freely received, she may freely give. She needs a book on nature study, or a knowledge of nature, a plot of ground where things grow, a mother's magazine, not The New Woman, Needlecraft, Good Housekeeping, Latest Fashions, or The Suffragette, but a mother's magazine such as, American Motherhood, (Cooperstown, New York), or David C. Cook's (Chicago) Mother's Magazine in which mother's problems are discussed. She needs a book on child nature (A Study of Child Nature, by Elizabeth Harrison, Book Supply Company, Chicago, is very good) that she may understand more fully the greatest of all God's creations, a little child, thus enabling her to unfold to a life of beauty and usefulness instead of cramping and warping the souls given into her care. With the insight which comes from such study there will be less misunderstanding and fewer what Elizabeth Harrison calls "great and painful gaps" between parent and child.

It would be a fruitless effort to say to the child, "Love God" and would bring about no communion of soul with the "Great Spirit." Children learn reverence through seeing the love and power of God demonstrated in the growing plant, the blooming flower in fruit and grain, in the possibility in both plant and animal life to reproduce its kind, in the wise provision made for the sustenance of the creatures of his care. To get this they must go to the source, to mother nature herself. Children should be acquainted with field and forest if possible, a plot of ground where things grow, at least a tin can in which seeds can be planted and attention be called to the wonderful ways of God. Thus may we prepare the soil for the seeds of spirituality. In fact I am not sure but they have already been planted, and are unfolding into leaf and flower and now need proper nourishment and care.

There are other testimonies of infinite love and power than those visible to the natural eye. The child has seen but now he needs to feel God's power through the spiritual senses. Spirituality is communion of soul with the Infinite. Can we train him to feel the breath of the Spirit, to hear the still, small voice, to see the height above to which with longing hearts we hope to climb?

The Lord has commanded that we meet together often; he has promised to meet with us and in compliance with this we receive food for the soul. He has also admonished us to meet together often in the family, to erect the family altar and to remember at all times to return thanks to our heavenly Father. The time given to family worship may be made interesting and enjoyable. It is well to impress upon the mind the need of regularity in this service, that God is pleased with us when we do this, that he has promised blessings to those who do the things that please him and that when the world is in turmoil and unrest, we may be at peace with God's watchcare over us, if we abide in him and trust him. It is not best to make the time wearisome by reading the Bible from Genesis to Revelation without comment and then start over again. Use a copy of Charles Foster's Bible storybook (The Story of the Bible, Book Supply Company, Chicago), in which the old Bible stories are told in an interesting way that will appeal to children. We need a Book of Mormon storybook to be used in the same way. The testimonies of the past may be connected with those of the present by reading books published by the church, such as, The Two-Story Book, Juvenile History, Joseph Luff's Autobiography, Peter Bosten, Joe Pine, and others; also letters from the HERALD and Ensign, and extracts from the Doctrine and Covenants.

It is more interesting and profitable if parents and children talk together about what is read. Children should be taught in early childhood to pray. Irregularity in family worship and in returning thanks to God will soon effect the spirituality of the home.

Duty is a word children do not like to hear. Let us say sometimes, instead, Come children it is time for prayer and we must not neglect it. God has been good to us and we still need his blessings.

The mother should arrange to give herself for a half hour or more each evening to her children. Definite plans should be made which all understand for each evening when the mother works, reads, or plays with the children, one evening each week being given to reading such books as mentioned above. Mother and child thus come in close touch and in sympathy with each other. It is impossible to measure the influence for good of hours thus passed. An influence that may prove an anchorage through young manhood and womanhood.

We should not leave all the good we get from the church services inside the walls of the church. Have a way at home of talking about the sermon, the testimonies, the music—and about the preacher, too. We need to be on the watch for opportunities to develop spirituality. Take occasion to read from Doctrine and Covenants the duties of priest and teacher. When they call up to know if it will be convenient for them to visit at your home, make it convenient, express your pleasure in having them come, have all members of the family present, and if you have been in line of duty, the Spirit's presence will be felt and it will be a season of peace and spiritual enjoyment. Young people are very busy with school work and other things and may show a sort of indifference to spiritual things but if they have been properly trained they know their duty, they expect us to see that they do it, and, more important still, they know we have failed in our duty if we do not look after the spirituality of the home. Let us not fail them in this their hour of greatest need. Oh, mothers and fathers, I appeal to you now after you have kept your boy and girl near to you until this trying period do not lose your hold and leave them alone during this time of stress and uncertainty, but go with them, help them to an understanding of life, hold them for themselves and for God.

It may take careful, prayerful, cheerful, persistent effort and often insistence.

It is a mother's business to train to citizenship in the kingdom of God and like any business man to make a success she must "stay on the job." The law of the land gives parents twenty-one years to make citizens of the United States. Shall we take any less time to train for service in the Father's kingdom?

Let us as mothers in the home sense the need of constant watchfulness. Let us put forth every effort possible to create an atmosphere in the home conducive to spirituality and encourage ourselves with the thought that the Lord is with us when we are feeding the lambs of the fold. Perfection in any line comes through patient, persistent effort. Let me say again, we grow in spirituality. Paul says "until we come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." We will not, daily, see the fruits of our efforts but if we train aright, the results are sure and as the years come and go the fruits of the Spirit are manifest. Is it not worth all the sacrifice of those things that are drawing us away from the home? It seems to me there can no greater joy come to the mother's soul than that feeling of peace with God which comes when she sees the fruits of her efforts in the lives of her children. No matter how great the sacrifice that must be made, the fads, and fancies, and fashions of this world are as naught compared to the joy that comes to her soul. This is our mission as mothers. Let us qualify as best we can and with the aid of the Holy Spirit, do our best. We need trained mothers. God speed the day when our young people are trained for parenthood.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME

Children's Home Items

The holidays have brought blessing and good cheer to our department. The Saints and friends have remembered us loyally and liberally, so we have met current expenses, paid a small deficit and commence the new year with a small balance, not enough to last us very long, but enough to make us feel hopeful and very grateful.

We think the supporters of this important institution have done nobly for the year, to meet all expenses, when we consider the large extra expense occasioned by the sickness and contagion which visited us.

This result has not been attained however, without special effort and sacrifice upon the part of many. Our correspondence has been very comforting and full of hopeful cheer. Permit us here to present two instances from among the many.

The following is from Moorhead, Iowa, and speaks for itself:

"Seeing an appeal in the Children's Home column for assistance toward providing a musical instrument for the use of the children, it appealed to me, and being teacher of a class of girls from ten to thirteen years of age, I suggested to them that we hold a candy and tag day, the proceeds to go to the home towards the piano fund. We appointed Saturday, December 2, and asked the Lord to prosper us, and though failure was prophesied for us we did well I think, for a small place, so are able to send you a draft for $12.75, the amount we cleared, will also send one of the tags used. The girls of the winners' class of the Religio are as follows: Pearl Wilson, 13; Dorothy Cohrt, 13; Helen McDonald, 12; Halycon Cohrt, 11; Elma Kestersen, 11; Fern Wilson, 11; Hazel Moore, 11; Ennice Pratt, 10; Alta Bell, 10. We all join in hoping that the fund will grow and it will not be long until they can have music in the home.

"As ever, your sister,

"CORA B. COHRT."

This piano fund is still limited and hence we must await our time to purchase, for our rules will not permit us to go in debt. With such loyal efforts as indicated in the above we must soon have our end accomplished. One firm offers to sell any piano we want at cost.

The following letter to which we invite especial attention is from Brooklyn, New York. The sacrifice indicated can only come from devoted, sincere and consecrated minds of pure childhood which older people could profitably emulate.

"As treasurer of the Brooklyn Sunday school, I am authorized to send you this check amounting to $17.25, as a Christmas gift to the children of the home.

"The greater portion of this fund represents a sacrifice, inasmuch as the children have voted to do without candy in order to share Christmas with their friends at Lamoni.

"They believe this is the right way to commemorate the truest kind of Christmas spirit, and wish it to be used in a way that will best meet the children's needs.

"With Christmas greetings to you all, we are all as children in Christ.

"THE BROOKLYN SUNDAY SCHOOL,
"by Pearl K. Hartshorn."

No further offers have been received regarding the proposition made by some brethren at the Logan reunion to have one hundred persons, each guarantee twenty-five dollars annually to the support of the home. This would supply the demands of the home and save the necessity of constantly soliciting aid, and these parties could either pay the amount themselves or get help from friends.

Brother and Sister Goode are faithfully doing their part in the home, while our merchants and others are contributing liberally to supplying demands and furnishing Christmas cheer. This applies not only to Lamoni but many other places as the above letters indicate.

It is now three days since Christmas and we have been enjoying delightful weather. The holiday spirit of giving is still alive, and as we go along, we find this world with all its evils has much good in it, after all. The great thinkers and broad-minded men and women are furnishing means of mental enjoyment, and the Saints, also, are holding out inducements for an increase of true happiness while reaching out to newer fields of high endeavor.

The kind of work they will soon engage in will do away with the idea of monotonous drudgery, because soul is put into it, and there will be at hand divine aid, and power given to perform. The short-hour day is working out good in every way, and more time is given to promote efficiency, and creative labor. They say the great problems of our day and time are sound economic thinking, sound views on business affairs, and better understanding generally.

This wonderful educational movement the Saints are so deeply interested in is interesting everybody in the neighborhood. A cops' college, with a chief of police as instructor, is to be established they tell us, in Berkeley, California, and provision is made for lectures, and a curriculum embracing chemistry, biology, criminal psychology, sanitation and hygiene.

Brother Walter addressed the Sunday school December 31, and he is just as good a teacher in school as a pastor in the church. He instructed us to get our lesson in the head, and our work in the heart, and not depend altogether on the Quarterly. The school is an evangelizing agency, and we must have lots of normal teachers, and have a training school. "Specialization" is the watchword.

We have quite a number of specialists already, preparing for work in the culture hall of the Saints. Sister J. W. Peterson, who last year proved to be efficient as a teacher for nurse-training, has graduated in civil service work; and on January 5 will receive a diploma from the school of hygiene, food, and sanitation, as a competent sanitary city inspector. Another sister, our courageous and energetic Mrs. A. L. Yingling, at a better babies' contest here, December 28, was one of the judges. Scores of right-minded, noble, consecrated, business women of our sewing department of the auxiliary are toiling for the benefit of this glorious work.

The Laurel Club cleared at their bazaar held in the church hall December 8, about three hundred dollars; and they have raised about seven hundred the past year. By way of helping the missionary work, one class in the Sunday school, Mrs. Pender's, has already collected over sixty dollars for the Christmas Offering, this year. The Sunday school work is progressing throughout the stake. Our officers here are Brethren C. F. Davis and Albert Knowlton, Sister Mary Steele, and Brethren M. H. Siegfried and Earl F. Audet, with Mrs. W. Madison as normal superintendent. Brother E. C. Harrington is conductor of the children's eleven o'clock Sunday morning services, and Sisters W. W. Smith and E. S. McNichols are doing fine work in developing talent of storytelling and vocal music for the program in this junior work of the church.

The speakers for December 31, in the Walnut Park, East Independence, Enoch Hill, and the Second Branch churches were Elders Harry Smith, J. J. Boswell, E. T. Atwell, W. O. Skinner, W. D. Bullard, J. E. Vanderwood, and Joseph Smith and William Aylor, morning and evening respectively. Brother J. F. Curtis preached an excellent sermon Sunday morning at the Stone Church.

The Christmas entertainment at the church December 31, with the vocal and instrumental numbers by the children attracted a large congregation from all parts of the stake; but the great concert of the oratorio "Messiah," rendered by the choir both at the church on the 28th, and at Convention Hall December 29, were the great events of the season, and elicited comments of praise from all quarters.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Lamoni, Iowa

One of the recent developments at this place is a change of the sacrament hour from 2.30 p. m. to 10.45 a. m. on the first Sunday of each month. This will immediately follow the Sunday school, and the children and young people will be especially urged to stay for the service.

At 2.30 on this day hereafter all the priesthood will assemble as a body to consider any subjects or suggestions of joint interest, after which they will separate for definite quorum work. There will be no afternoon prayer meetings on this day.

It is urged that the Saints adopt the custom of fasting from the morning meal on the sacrament Sunday, that the Spirit of God may be unhampered in its operations.

The Sunday school attendance is averaging about five hundred, though the whooping cough has made an appreciable falling off in the beginner and primary departments. It was because of this that the Christmas program was given by the older people, as was mentioned in the HERALD. The Christmas Offering has been increased to $560.19.

The stake presidency, composed of J. F. Garver, E. J. Giles, and Paul N. Craig, have been reelected as the presidency of the branch for the coming year. The branch membership is now 1,763, about 500 of these being on the scattered list.

A committee on beautifying the church building and grounds has been authorized and the carrying out of some of the ideas proposed will greatly add to the beauty of the Lord's house.

The stake bishopric, associated with the branch deacons, will have charge of the arrangements for General Conference delegates and visitors.

DELBERT.

The Saints of Toledo have moved into their new church on Waverly, just off Dorr Street. Time of meeting has been changed as follows: Sunday—Sunday school, 9.45 a. m.; Religio, 6 p. m.; preaching 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.; prayer service 7.30 Wednesday evening. President, Willard Hettrick, 1709 Detroit Street.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From the Far-Off Southland

Notwithstanding the upheaving effect of the war upon society, politics, and industry, encouraging reports come from various parts of this mission concerning church work. Being so far from the seat of war the effects accompanying the conflict of arms are not so noticeably in evidence here as in many of the belligerent countries, yet there is much that we see and know that brings home the meaning of war.

The European conflict has grown to dimensions that almost threaten the collapse of civilization. The world is in agony. Latter Day Saints gathering from the parable of the fig tree confidence to interpret the signs of the times, should be able to see that we are living in the generation when the signs of the coming of Christ and the end of the world (destruction of the wicked) are being fulfilled. The idea of a world crisis developing before the second coming of Christ is set forth in the Holy Scriptures by nearly all of the prophets.

Daniel, in interpreting Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the image, spoke of nations coming to naught, and of the kingdom of God extending over the earth. (Daniel 2: 35-44.) Jeremiah prophetically declares, "The Lord hath a controversy with the nations," and "will give them that are wicked to the sword." (Jeremiah 25: 31-33.) Isaiah says he "heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth," and he also declared: "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible. I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir." (Isaiah 28: 22; 13: 9-12.)

Christ mentions as signs of his coming that "nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places," and "there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; mens' hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." (Matthew 24: 7; Luke 21: 25-27.)

These references associated with the prophecies contained in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, relating to the same events, provide a light of such clearness that no one need walk in darkness.

Among the important crises of the past are those affecting the antediluvians, Jews, and pre-Columbian peoples of America. All felt the displeasure of God for the same thing: God has not changed—his march through the centuries is straight. The true worship of God, moral purity, happiness, and well-being go hand in hand.

Can the Gentiles go on proudly announcing that they have not heard directly from God for nineteen centuries, rejecting Christ and the fullness of his truth, selecting their own forms of religion until churches exist in multitudinous numbers, indulging in unbelief of the powers of heaven, loving pleasures more than God, crowding out the sacred meaning of life with lightness of character—can they do this and not involve themselves in controversy with God?

Perhaps lying at the bottom of the cause of the European war is the influence of Babylon which was to affect all nations: "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." (Revelation 14: 8.)

The mainsprings of life are affected by religious belief.

It is interesting to note that more than 300,000,000 members of the "Holy Catholic Church," which consists of the Roman Catholic, Greco-Russian, and Anglican branches, are represented in the nations involved in the world's awful war. Catholic countries are overrunning and destroying other Catholic countries. Millions of men are marching to the strains of martial music. The loss is not confined to the dead on the battlefield, but extends to those who return with broken constitutions, the result of exposure, inhaling noxious gases, etc., to the widows, and to the orphans. With the daily expenditure of scores of millions in money, the debt has reached a magnitude that bewilders the mind.

The redemptive force of civilization is not within itself; besides education, the drama, good theories of municipal government, culture, science, and philosophy, Christ, the Savior of the world, is needed in enthronement in the hearts of men. Salvation is from above. Men's redemptive forces have failed, and will fail to the extent that Jesus Christ, the representative of the true life for humanity, is not accepted.

As to the results of the war; it is to be hoped that governments will change, and absolutism pass away, thus opening the way for the fulfillment of our Lord's words: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matthew 24: 14.)

Since the restoration of the gospel in these latter days, Latter Day Saints have been looking forward to the gathering of the Jews to the land of their forefathers. It should not be a surprise if before long the land of Palestine goes to the Jews; at least liberty therein be enjoyed by the Jews to work out their ideals, under the protectorate of a liberty-loving nation.

The following passages from the Bible are enlightening:

"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 24.

"The remnant of them shall return: the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness."—Isaiah 10: 22.

"And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and I will build them, as at the first."—Jeremiah 33: 7.

The past month I have been in different parts of the Northern New South Wales District, answering attacks publicly launched against the church by a minister of the Church of England—in nearly every town is a school of arts which can be secured for public meetings, and in these places—after tracts have been generally distributed through the towns by some of our young missionaries, my replies have been made. Good is resulting from the opposition, as the public mind has been stirred to activity and prepared for a word of defense from our side.

On October 27 after a severe sickness of about three weeks, Sister Catherine Wright, of Tuncurry, New South Wales, well known to many in this mission, and by all the missionaries in America who have labored in Australia, departed from this life. Interment was in the Tuncurry Cemetery where she was laid to rest at the side of her beloved husband who preceded her in death about six years ago. The door of their home was ever open wide to all of the ministry. The large number present at the funeral attested the high esteem in which she was held by the community. She died in full hope of glorious resurrection. The funeral sermon was by the writer, assisted by Elder Robert Taylor.

A mission conference will be held in Sydney, the latter part of next month, immediately following the conference of the Southern New South Wales District. There will probably be a large attendance, and a good time is expected.

With the passing of time the church and its work remain as precious to me as when in youth there came to me a knowledge of God in the church; my desire is to work while it is day, and trust that in rendering an account of my stewardship finally I may do so unfalteringly.

My mission address is 65 Nelson Street, Rozelle, New South Wales.

Best wishes to all,

PAUL M. HANSON.

Effects of the War on Australia

Since last writing Australia has been in the throes of a national crisis deciding by referenda of the people whether compulsory military service overseas should or should not become law. It already is law for home service, and under the provisions of the latter act men of military age were compulsorily enrolled and encamped in anticipation of a "yes" majority at the polls.

Their anticipations were not realized, for the people turned the proposition down and now the proclamation has been withdrawn, the men released, and a new start is to be made with the voluntary system.

The voting was as follows: No, 1,146,198; Yes, 1,084,918. No, majority 61,280, out of a total on the roll of 2,782,709.

Our young men of military age, many of them serving as officers of branches of the church all over the country, have been quite agitated in facing the prospect of having to leave their divine service and being forced to go to the European "shambles" to do that against which their souls revolt.

We are now relieved of that tension, and those who were forced into camp are being released after one month's training which has already cost this small community one million pounds sterling. Those who voted "no" have been stigmatized by the prime minister and his supporters as "Pro-Germans," "Disloyalists," "I. W. W.," and other opprobrious epithets too numerous and unsavory to mention here. The position now in Australia is a unique one, and one hardly knows what may come next.

Among the ones who voted no were cabinet ministers and members of both state and federal parliaments, especially senators, mostly labor representatives. The prime minister was in a minority in his own constituency, West Sydney, by about four to one. It is a question now who is to govern, the "no" side or the "yes" side; in the meantime recruiting is dead and the Old Country is calling for reinforcements. Judging by the vote, there must be a large party in Australia in favor of peace, and personally I think it will help allay that bitterness which keeps the conflict raging.

In the early stages of the great world war it seemed as though the work of the church would be adversely affected, but as the excitement has worn off and the awfulness of the world's confusion wherein such is even possible, has entered the minds of the people they have turned more to serious thinking concerning the fulfillment of prophecy. In Melbourne, at least, we can say that this is so, and this is perhaps the best year of our history for baptisms, about seventeen having joined during the last eight months. Those churches which have preached war and recruiting have either driven their men out of the church or into the trenches. The position of neutrality taken by the Catholic pulpit is practically the same as maintained by ourselves. We leave it entirely to the individual, as a citizen; if he decides to go we say "God speed you," if he stays at home we like it better.

One spirit which this war is fostering is the gathering spirit. We are all beginning to visualize the need of Zion as a refuge from the perils and trials of the world. It is causing a longing for her redemption to enter every breast in which the hope has been planted. Seemingly the world is facing conditions of danger of which it has hitherto known little. In Australia we have lived as it were in luxury, but the future looks bad. Debt is piling up apace and domestic discord politically and industrially is rampant and increasing. We are now in the midst of a coal miners' strike and shipping is being held up, train service curtailed, unemployed increasing, and industry paralyzed. Were Australia to suffer one of her periodical droughts in connection with the war aftermath it would be a good place to say good-by to. My mind has never dwelt so much on the gathering to Zion as now, and though I know haste in such matters should not be manifest, yet I pray that the time may speedily come when the Saints may be permitted to dwell together in a condition of love and equality to which holy men of all ages have looked.

Faithfully yours,

J. H. N. JONES.

RICHMOND, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, November 14, 1916.

From Here and There

Sister Ruby Scogin, of Carney, Alabama, assures us of her appreciation of the church publications and testifies of God's goodness to her and her relatives and friends.

In a recent letter Brother E. Glenn Sager, of Fint, Michigan, fears that he gave the impression that the good work being done in the east side of that city was by himself. He wishes to correct that impression by saying that it was his intention to indicate that Elder E. M. Orton is the man, and that through his efforts good interest and attendance are resulting.

Brother Charles A. Morton, president of the Kingston, Missouri, Branch, tells us that Kingston is still on the map and trying to keep the camp fire burning. There have been several baptisms during the year and others have a better understanding of the church and its work. Brother Roberts of the missionary force, has been holding a series of meetings there for about two weeks, greatly encouraging the Saints.

Brother William Cummings says he recently visited New York and Boston and enjoyed the association of the Saints very much. He says it is very hard to find our church meeting places, especially in Boston, and suggests that the addresses of each meeting place in the larger cities should be printed in the church papers. This has been done to some extent in the past, but it takes a great deal of space in the aggregate. Brother S. A. Burgess, the pastor at Boston, very carefully explained not long ago how to reach the Boston church.

Writing from Richmond, Missouri, Brother Thomas Graham says the letters and testimonies in the HERALD are very much enjoyed by himself. They have a small Sunday school, with prayer meetings and praying services well attended at that place, and the Saints are coming up higher under the leadership of a worthy branch president.

Mrs. Jennie Adams, of Central Lake, Michigan, states that she went to Kalamazoo recently to see her husband, who is very low. There is no branch at that place and she hopes an elder may be able to visit her. She desires the prayers of the Saints.

From Salt Lake City, Brother A. V. Closson writes under date of December 26: "We are having real winter here with snow from two to six feet deep. We had a nice Christmas program and tree in the church the night of the 22d, with a good attendance. In fact, all the seats were full. One party remarked that we must have had a resurrection of the work here. We organized a Religio society a short time ago, with twenty-three members and others say they will join. We are also having a pretty good attendance at the other meetings, so we ought to feel encouraged. Brother J. W. Rushton was here the first part of this month and gave us a number of good sermons. Brethren Booker and McKim were with us at the Christmas entertainment. Brother John Hall has gone to Chicago on a visit, and we all miss him at the services."

Sermon by Doctor Joseph Luff

Next week's Ensign will contain a sermon preached by Doctor Joseph Luff at the Stone Church in Independence on December 3. Attention is called to this sermon because for many years Doctor Luff has been a powerful preacher of the gospel and thousands have enjoyed reading his sermons and articles.

This sermon will be of particular interest to the Saints. It is intense, deep, and is searching in its analysis of spirituality. The story of Peter in the crucial period of his life is told with dramatic power; it develops a new conception of his character. The vision or apprehension of Christ is the subject, and a reading of the sermon cannot but establish the reader more firmly on the rock of truth. A copy of the Ensign containing this sermon will be mailed to anyone free upon request.

Correction

The notice of appointment of Wesley Alldread, in the HERALD of December 20 should have been signed by Alvin R. Ellis, instead of Arthur R. Ellis as it was printed.

Requests for Prayers

A sister whose hearing is nearly gone requests the Saints to pray for her, that her hearing may be regained. She has been administered to many times, and knows that her hearing can be restored only through prayer.

Mrs. Effie M. Smith, of Bennett, Nebraska, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may regain her health and strength and be enabled to properly care for her children. She desires that those who feel so inclined will fast and pray for her recovery at the next sacrament meeting.

Our Departed Ones

Wife, 1 son, 5 daughters survive him, Mrs. Rosa Cook, of Independence, Missouri, Mrs. Daisy Coulter, Lees Summit, Missouri, Mrs. Jennie Garret, of Kansas City, Mrs. Josie Louderback, of Oklahoma, Mrs. Mary Essig, of Hickman Mills, Missouri, and Hubert Simmons, Lees Summit, Missouri. Funeral by George Jenkins, interment in Lees Summit cemetery.

HOLLANDSWORTH.—Benjamin F. Hollandsworth born January 22, 1876, in Gasconade County, Missouri; died December 20, 1916, at a hospital in Saint Louis, Missouri, from the effects of an operation performed on a lower limb for cancer of the bone. He never regained consciousness. He was baptized in 1905 by A. M. Baker, and was an honest, upright man, respected by all who knew him. His body was brought to his late home near Eldridge, Missouri, and laid to rest December 23. He leaves to mourn, wife, 5 children, also parents, Brother and Sister Marion Hollandsworth, of Lebanon, Missouri, 5 brothers and 2 sisters.

TROTTER.—Leroy Trotter was born near Cameron, Missouri, July 31, 1859 and died December 29, 1916. He married Miss Lillie M. Adams, May 15, 1888. To this union were born 8 children; one of whom died in infancy. The others are Olien L., William C., Carl, Clara, Lillie, Bonnie and Leroy, all of Cameron. The wife departed this life in 1908 and he was afterward married to Mrs. Emma Haywood, who survives him. He also leaves two sisters, Mrs. Emma Drown, of Holden, and Mrs. Angie Dwyer, of Cameron, to mourn their loss. He united with the church on July 13, 1890, in which he remained until his death. He was a kind and loving father and husband, and his departure is deeply felt by his family and a host of friends. Services at Cameron in charge of I. McCord, sermon by William Lewis to a large audience; was laid to rest in the Cameron Cemetery.

NORRIS.—Alice Norris, born August 18, 1848, in Tyldrley, Lancashire, England; died at the home of her son James Norris, in Kewanee, Illinois, December 28, 1916, aged 68 years, 4 months, 10 days. She came to Kewanee in 1865 where she has since made her home except for one year and six months she lived in Sandwich, Illinois. Married Henry Norris November 4, 1869. To them were born 5 sons, 1 daughter. The daughter died on December 24, 1882. She was baptized November 17, 1867, at Kewanee, by Thomas France, confirmed by J. D. Jones. She lived a pure, Christian life, a very devoted member of the church, always attending services when able to do so. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves to mourn their loss, a faithful husband, 5 sons, 6 grandchildren, 1 brother and 1 sister, also other relatives and many friends. Funeral at the church where there was a large gathering. Sermon by W. A. McDowell.

How to Read

"Words are only push buttons calling up a whole set of associations and contexts which vary in each individual," says Mr. J. B. Kerfoot, the literary editor of Life, in his book, How to Read, which has been published recently by Houghton Mifflin Company. We wonder what assistance the following picturesque words, written to Mr. Kerfoot about his book, called up. They are so undeniably part and parcel of the moving picture world, that it is not surprising to learn that they were penned by one of the foremost producers of the silent drama in this country. He says in part:

"Thank you for How to Read. Saturated with the literature of the subject I want to put myself on record as saying that your book is wonderful. It is the first new thing said in centuries. I wish every student in the land would read it, and thereby make books familiar companions and friends whose magical words would open life's treasuries as did the 'Sesame' of Ali Baba. I think Macaulay himself would have read more wisely and with more fascination had he had the Kerfoot idea. Perhaps he did have it, for he loved books passionately and they made him happy all his days. Thank you, Mr. Kerfoot."

Book Reviews

GOD'S MINUTE.—A book of 365 daily prayers—60 seconds long—arranged in calendar form—a prayer to a page, with a verse of scripture at the top of the page on encouragement to worship. The prayers were written expressly for this book by 365 of the most eminent evangelical clergymen and laymen in the English-speaking world. Cloth, 384 pages, price, 35 cents net. The Vir Publishing Company, 200 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The idea of the book was suggested by the thought that so many Christian people offer as an excuse for not having family devotions, that they haven't time. This spiritual contribution to the Christian world's literature proves that only a minute daily devoted to the worship of God can be made an inspiring one to begin the duties of the day.

Among the contributors to the book are Wilfred T. Grenfell, Professor W. H. Griffith Thomas, Reverends John Clifford, F. B. Meyer, Washington Gladden, Hugh Black, Timothy Stone, Bishop Quayle, Russell H. Conwell, David J. A. L. Burrell, Hoyt M. Dobbs, Ira Landrith, Floyd W. Tomkins, Bishop Woodcock, Maud Ballington Booth, President E. Y. Mullins and many others eminent in the evangelical religious world. The first edition of 21,000 copies was sold in advance of publication. The publishers have made the book possible of the widest circulation by the modest price at which it can be purchased.

Faced by a paper famine and with rising prices on everything used in the business, the publishers of the HERALD should have your support. By keeping up your subscription and encouraging your friends in the gospel to do likewise you can help stem the tide.

HE THAT ENDURES TO THE END--Part 2

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, Sunday evening, August 20, 1916, at the Lamoni Stake reunion. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

COUNTING THE COST

This sermon is intended to fit onto those we had in the morning and the evening. We heard about the foundation this afternoon, and the building, and now the Master tells us that before we begin to build we ought to count the cost. Now we as a people, have started to build up Zion. I wonder if we have counted the cost, or will we be the laughing stock of the world? We have started to build a stake of Zion here at Lamoni. As the brother said here this morning that where we have a strong assembly of Saints organized in the right form it is called a stake of Zion, because it is designed to support Zion just as these stakes and cords out here support this tabernacle, and as Zion is the tabernacle of God here, the stakes of Zion will support Zion.

We have driven four stakes, one at Lamoni, and one at Independence, and one at Kansas City, and one at Holden, and the day will come probably when we will have stake territory from Saint Louis to Des Moines, and so these will support Zion. But have we counted the cost when we have started out to build here in Lamoni, and are we willing to go ahead and finish the work that we have begun? Now there can be but one answer to that question, that is, from a sane standpoint.

LOOKING BACK FORBIDDEN

On another occasion the Master said, "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

Now that may seem harsh to say that the man who starts out in this work and then looks back is not fit for the kingdom of God, but it simply means that the man who begins a job and then grows tired of it and turns his back on it is not fit to do that job, and you know that without being told it. But we have forgotten it sometimes, and so the Master finds it necessary to remind us of that fact.

In this connection, too, I want to call your attention to something that appears in the sixth chapter of John. Jesus on that occasion had been teaching the people, and some of them were offended at the doctrine that he taught, just as the people are when we go out and preach the doctrine as we understand it. They go with us pretty well until we begin to unfold to them the doctrine of the church, and then they will not follow us any further. And so the statement is made, "From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked with him no more. And he turned and said unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." Why, where could they go but to him? He had the words of eternal life right there with him. "Thou hast the words of eternal life."

I call your attention to two thoughts that appear in this little incident; the statement is made that many of them turned back and followed him no more. Can you tell me the name of an individual who turned back and ceased to follow Jesus? Why, there was not a single one of them that is known, they simply went down into obscurity. But those who remained with him we have their names on record. They wrought a work that transformed the world in many places. Their names are inscribed in imperishable records that will await them to their glory in the day of judgment. But those others simply went down and out, and that is all there was to it.

It has been my experience to note that when individuals have turned their backs on this great latter-day work that they have simply gone down and out. There may be a twofold reason for that; the first that the individual as a rule who turns back over a trivial matter has not very much force, anyway, and he will never make his mark either in the church or out of it. And the other reason is that some individuals of considerable force in the church, under the influence of the Spirit of God, when they have turned and gone out of the church and have lost the Spirit of God, they have lost their power, and they have simply fallen away.

There are a great many people in the world who are trying to make converts from our people. They think we have the people deluded, and that they can work a wonderful work if they can take some one away from us. But I never knew a man who left this church and went up to higher grounds morally. I challenge anyone to name a single individual who ever left this people and was lifted to higher grounds morally by those who took him away. But on the other hand, there are many who have gone down.

Peter spoke very wisely when he said, "Lord, to whom shall we go, thou hast the words of eternal life." No man can afford to leave this church and turn his back on it, because as sure as he does he will go down morally, and he will lose spiritual power, but he who goes ahead and endures to the end, the promise is, the same shall be saved.

IS IT POSSIBLE TO FALL AWAY?

I might perhaps have asked the question right on the start: "Is it possible for a man to fall away?" Under the old Calvinistic doctrine it was not considered that a man could fall away. It was that men from the beginning were foreordained or predestined to be saved or lost, either to go to hell or heaven and nothing that he could ever do would make any difference. The distressing feature of it was that a man would never know until he was gone whether or not he was going to hell or heaven. He might waste a great deal of good hard work. He might give heed to the ordinance to take care of the poor, to visit the orphan and the widow, and at the last moment find out that he was foreordained to hell and it did not make any difference at all what he might do.

I heard of a man who said that after he embraced the Calvinistic creed that he never smiled again, but I presume that a great many people get some comfort out of it, because the good, pious people all believe that they are foreordained to be saved, and that the majority of humanity are foreordained to be lost. I read not long ago where a theological library was sold in one of the eastern cities, and it is said that there were five shelves filled with fat volumes on hell, and five little thin, emaciated volumes on heaven. Now think of the joy that the people used to get reading those five shelves of books on hell and thinking about what was going to happen to some of their neighbors who were not foreordained to be saved!

But humanity has repudiated that creed, repudiated it by the way since the day when the angel told Joseph Smith that the creeds of the day were wrong, and that was one of the creeds. Possibly you and I have sometimes made a mistake along that line; we have gone to the other extreme, not believing in foreordination, and have thought that when we are baptized that was the end of the matter. Why, did not Jesus say, "Ye who believe and are baptized shall be saved"? Why, get baptized, and that is all there is to do; it is all fixed up, and if you are baptized you shall be saved,—and some people actually go on that theory. As soon as their names are on the church record their concern seems to be ended.

WHO SHALL BE SAVED?

But it is impossible for God himself to encompass all truth in a single sentence, and when Jesus Christ said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he made that statement with the understanding that it had previously been qualified in the statement, "He that endures to the end shall be saved." So we put the two together, "He that believeth and is baptized and endures to the end, the same shall be saved." And that is right in harmony with the doctrine that Nephi lays down for our consideration.

Paul himself expressed a little fear lest he having been saved, others would be shipwrecked. He exhorted them to work out their salvation with fear and trembling, and in the Hebrew letter he says that if an individual who has received the Holy Ghost and has tasted of heavenly things shall then fall away, it is impossible to renew him in repentance. Well, then, an individual may receive the Holy Ghost and taste of heavenly things, and then fall away so that he cannot be renewed again to repentance.

Well we may ask ourselves, Why is it that God permits an individual to fall away? Why doesn't he arrange it so that they cannot fall? And our answer is that Jesus Christ when he was here said to his followers, "I am not going to call you servants any longer, I am going to call you friends." I might compel a servant to walk with me along the road, but I could not compel a friend to go with me. My friend goes with me because he wants to go with me. And God doesn't want anybody to go with him who has to, but rather those who want to go. And so we have no confidence in the idea that some people have, that they have reached a stage where they cannot commit sin, but we have the utmost respect for the individual who reaches a plane where he will not commit sin.

That is the kind of men that God wants to serve him in the services that he assigns to us here below.

How then shall we endure to the end? We can endure only by careful study, and consideration, and preparation. We can endure only by constant prayer; the Master said, "Pray always," and we should not only pray for ourselves, but we should pray for one another. "Let us pray for one another," as we sing, "for the day is fading fast." Sometimes we get our greatest strength when we are down on our knees forgetting all about ourselves and praying for some one else.

When I was down in Kansas City in Central Church at the organization of the stake, a good brother came to me and said, "Brother Smith, I pray for the men of the church every night." He said, "I mention your name among others, every night in the year." Well, it came over me with a great deal of force to think that there was some one in Kansas City praying for me every night in the year that I might stand, but I am persuaded that whatever blessing I received from that prayer, that brother got a greater blessing than I will ever get, or anyone else for whom he prays.

I believe that if God is with us that we can prevail, for in Romans 8 the statement is made:

I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The apostle is speaking of those who have the love of God, and he says there is nothing conceivable that can separate them from that love. If anything ever separates you and me from the love of God it will be ourselves voluntarily permitting it to have power over us that it could not otherwise have. We cannot place the blame on some one else. We cannot place the blame on the Devil, or on our environment, or on circumstances, but on ourselves. And when we stand before the judgment bar of God, as Nephi says, we must give our answer.

May the blessing of God be with us that we may endure to the end, and meet Nephi on that occasion with a clear conscience and a clean record, is my prayer.

(Concluded.)

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Elbert A. Smith Located in West

The latest word from Brother Elbert is that he is comfortably located with his wife and family and that his condition is somewhat improved. President Frederick M. Smith was to leave for his home in Independence about the 10th.

When the German peace note recently appeared prices on foodstuffs took a tumble, but since then they have recovered and are able to break records right and left. Wheat has been selling for over $2 a bushel and corn over $1. Provisions have advanced sharply. We may get accustomed to it after a while, like the horse that learned to live on shavings—by the time he got to doing well he died.

Lamoni News

The change of the sacrament hour to 10.45 on the first Sunday resulted in an unusually large attendance and a good meeting was enjoyed. The Sunday school is buying a piano for the lower room. Nine old people have died in the past month, all members but one. Charles Graham was recently chosen by the town council to fill out the unexpired term of J. F. Jones who resigned.

Senate Favors Prohibition in District of Columbia

The Sheppard bill, which prohibits the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia, was passed by the Senate on the 9th, by a vote of 55 to 32. An amendment to submit the matter to a referendum vote in the district had been defeated by a tie vote. It is expected it will pass in the House if it can be brought to vote. Party lines were disregarded. On the 11th the Senate passed a bill prohibiting liquor advertising from going through the mails when in violation of the laws of the State.

Liquor Law Upheld by Supreme Court

The Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision on the 8th which makes constitutional the Webb-Kenyon law which provides that dry States may now prohibit the possession, receipt, sale and use of intoxicating liquor, unhampered by the agencies of inter-state commerce.

The following from the majority opinion of the court is of special interest:

That the West Virginia law, beside prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all intoxicants except as to that which is permitted for medical, sacramental and manufacturing purposes, also forbids all transportation of liquor and all receipt and possession of liquor transported in the State whether originating in or outside of the State, and, although it does not prohibit personal use, puts serious restrictions upon the power to obtain for such use.

The European War

The big guns have been active all along the line in the west, and minor attacks here and there seem to have given the allies an occasional trench. The Balkan situation still seems to favor the Teutons. Some activity is reported in Mesopotamia with little definite results. The entente allies have replied to the peace proposals of Germany, outlining in detail their terms. Briefly stated, they desire: 1. Restoration of Belgium, Serbia, and Montenegro, with indemnities. 2. Evacuation of all invaded territory, with repara-

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY

This is an age of education and, there is none who feels so keenly the need of it so much as the unfortunate, uneducated person! I speak from experience. I have heard of some who maintain that all the minister has to do is to live a good, Christian life, take no thought of what he will say, that the Spirit will bring all that is necessary to be spoken to his mind. While it is true that the Spirit can bring to the speaker food for those who are seeking for truth, it is also true that "God helps those who try to help themselves"—minister as well as the farmer or historian. It is just as consistent for the historian to say, "Lord, I am now ready to make a record of all thou shalt bring to my mind," and make no effort to obtain the needed material, as it is for the minister to enter the stand, wholly depending upon the Lord to furnish all that is to be spoken, without any effort on his part.

I have observed that the minister who is educated, humble, studious and prayerful, has inspiration, is more proficient in presenting the gospel than the one lacking in education, though he may have inspiration. It stands to reason that the better equipped the minister is, intellectually, and educationally the more efficient he is in his ministerial work, if in the Spirit of his calling.

It makes little difference what the trade, business, or branch of learning, in mechanical labor, or intellectual effort, the educated man is always superior to the common laborer. One who is in the habit of applying his powers in the right way will carry system into any occupation, and it will help him as much to handle a rope as to write a poem.—F. M. Crawford.

THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE MINISTRY

What are they? Let the Lord answer:

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, [educated or uneducated] except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

ONE DANGER THAT CONFRONTS THE MINISTRY is that a greater effort is put forth to obtain education than inspiration and depend too much upon the former. It is a common thing for the minister to have his notes, while some have the entire manuscript of the sermon and depend upon the same in presenting the subject.

THE COMMAND TO THE MINISTRY

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them; and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; [not manuscripts] and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

Verily I say unto you, He that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the spirit of truth, or some other way? and if it be by some other way, it be not of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 5.

From the above we learn that the ministry of Christ is sent out to preach the truth by the spirit of truth, which is promised by the prayer of faith; and, if preached by some other way, it is not of God. "But," says one, "I believe it is advisable to arrange the subject under various heads; have some order in the presentation of the matter in hand, by having notes to refer to, and in that way the matter is kept before the mind." Yes, it is wise to have order in presenting the truth and to do what we can to help the memory, but, if we have not the Spirit we are commanded not to teach, notes or no notes. The mistake made is that the minister enters the pulpit, depends mostly upon his manuscript or notes; if he receives the Spirit he will not need to be confined to the notes, but if he does not, he can still keep the subject matter before the audience and feed them with the dead letter, but it is the Spirit that maketh alive and evidently that is why the command was given, not to teach if we do not have the Spirit. Twenty minutes of spiritual talk is better than one hour from notes, manuscript or charts, minus the Holy Spirit. "Billy" Sunday said, "We need to depend more upon the Holy Spirit and less upon our libraries, if we would preach so that those who hear us will also hear the voice of God in our message."

The late William Dean Howells, in commenting on the greatest needs of Wales, says, "There never was so much preaching, but what about the effect? The preaching they say is able, masterly, interesting and instructive, but with little unction accompanying it." The world and the church do not lack for education, but in my judgment, the most essential part, inspiration, is not as earnestly sought for among the ministry as it should be.

There ought not to be objections to the person called to the ministry because of his lack of education; the lack of education in those who are not responsible for their misfortune is not a barrier to the reception of the Holy Spirit, while the lack of humility and faith in God and his word by the college graduate and also the uneducated, is a barrier. While education is necessary and of much value, that which is most essential, I fear, is lost sight of, viz, the Holy Spirit. If the minister depends upon his own ability in preaching the gospel, a serious mistake will be made, educated or uneducated; but upon the other hand if he comes, like Paul, meek and humble, trusting in God, good will be done. Paul says:

And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.—1 Corinthians 2: 1-5.

Paul knew there was danger in trusting too much in his own wisdom, notwithstanding he was highly educated. Everyone who has enjoyed the Holy Spirit sees his insignificance as he never has before, and this creates within him a hunger for knowledge and ability "to be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." If he is deficient in grammar, limited in education, the love he has for the truth prompts him to do all that is in his power to obtain the necessary knowledge that will qualify him to be a worthy and efficient minister for Christ. This is one reason why the Lord has called so many from the humble walks in life to be his ministers.

Brother Charles Derry expressed the condition of many called to the ministry, who became able representatives; in his hymn found in the Saints' Harp, page 615, third and fourth verses, he says,

We come from bench and anvil,
From merchant's desk and plow,
Yet not with learning trameled,
Our help alone art Thou;
We seek not for vainglory,
Nor yet for sordid gold;
Thy love shall be our story
Which angels' tongues have told.

Clothe us with thy pure wisdom
And gird us with thy truth,
To labor in thy kingdom,
May none despise our youth;
Thy Spirit we rely on,
Else, would our work be vain;
To bring back bleeding Zion,
Or gather in thy grain.

There are some who favor the idea of not ordaining any to the ministry unless they have obtained a certain amount of education. I am aware that in the various churches of Christendom, no one shall be ordained unless he has passed favorably the examinations in their respective institutions of learning, and with all of their education, they have not yet come to the "unity of the faith," but in fulfillment of the words of the apostle, "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," (2 Timothy 3-7.) which is strong evidence that education alone is not sufficient to carry on the Lord's work nor to make the minister proficient in his calling.

are those who are meek, humble, rich in faith, prayerful, clothed with charity, anxious to magnify his calling for the good of the work and to the honor and glory of God. Such a minister will be spiritual and will, as Paul says, "Understand the things of God by the Spirit of God," and if limited in education, he will grow in knowledge, wisdom, become a power for good and shall speak as one having authority. Upon the other hand, the minister who depends upon human wisdom and education will not understand the things of God; he will not be a safe leader to follow; he may be highly educated, speak excellent grammar, versed in Hebrew, Greek, Latin and a polished speaker in all as well as in the English language. All of the educated do not feel the need of inspiration nor seek for it, but all inspired men reach out for education, try to store the mind with knowledge, strive to become efficient in the service of the Master.

No person can effectually preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, be he ever so talented and educated, without the help of the Holy Spirit. I have read with interest the excellent article in the HERALD, August 16, 1916, under the head of "Education and inspiration" by Laura Harrington, also in the HERALD of January 19, 1916, from the pen of our educated and talented sister Louise Palfrey Sheldon (and we can add, spiritual), under the head of "Personality in music." We have some rich, valuable thoughts based upon her personal experience and observations; the contrast is brought out so clearly in the singing, reading and preaching with and without the Spirit. Truly, we need education, but more especially, inspiration, for how true the experience of Sister Louise, that with the Spirit she enjoyed writing and listening to spiritual songs and sermons, but in the absence of the Spirit all was flat, tame and only ordinary. The Lord said, long ago:

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord, for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—Isaiah 55: 8, 9.

If Jesus had consulted man when he was about to organize his church, he would have been advised to choose as his ministers men of national fame, highly educated, the priests, rabbis, doctors and lawyers; but he chose men from the humble walks in life, the majority of whom were unlearned and inexperienced in the ministry. He said to some of them, "Come, follow me; I will make you fishers of men." Notice the term, "I will make you fishers of men"; they might have said, "Lord, we are ignorant, unlearned; the scribes and doctors will make light of our efforts; we have not the ability to preach to the learned"; but, Jesus said, "I will make you fishers of men," for, (he might have added) "As you have made a success as fishers, competent to bring from the water fish, (food) for man, you shall become able to feed man with the bread of life. I will help and qualify you." They went forth in the power of the Holy Spirit, confounding the wisdom of the wise, healing the sick, casting out evil spirits, commanding the lame to walk.

We read in Acts 4:13; "Now when they, [high priests] saw the boldness of Peter and John and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled, and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." No better teacher or instructor can we find! The same Jesus lives to-day and is calling men to labor in his vineyard, the learned and the unlearned, and what he did for others of his ministry, under similar conditions and circumstances he will do and is doing for them to-day.

In the restoration of the gospel, the Lord chose one inexperienced, not a member of any church, limited in education. Through this uneducated young man, the Book of Mormon was translated, the church was organized in harmony with the New Testament, in organization, doctrines, gifts and blessings; gave the revelations as found in the Book of Covenants, and gave to the church the Inspired Version of the Bible. All have the approval of God, the stamp of inspiration upon the same. All of the above was brought forth in a period of six years, 1829 to 1835; the young man, Joseph Smith, was only twenty-four years of age when he finished translating the Book of Mormon; twenty-five when the Church was organized in 1830, and twenty-eight years of age when he finished the manuscript to the Inspired Version in June, 1833. Truly a marvelous work and a wonder was done in a few years, which will stand as a strong testimony against all who will reject it. Had all the above been done by a man who was highly educated, versed in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, it might appear that God had nothing to do in the matter.

One fact worthy of mention is, that during the time the above work was done, Joseph had not obtained the benefits of school education, though he did some years later, for at the time of his death in 1844 he was a Hebrew scholar. The bringing forth of the work mentioned under the circumstances is strong evidence that the Lord does not have to depend on men of learning to bring about his purpose or to carry on his work.

Some have wondered why the Lord did not choose Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon or other men of learning to carry on his work. Jesus said, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." (Luke 10:21.) All along the ages, when the Lord has undertaken to do a work, poor, unwise man has wondered why the Lord did not do differently. One writer has said, that one reason God created man last, instead of first was so he would not dictate how the work of creation should be done. In Isaiah 24:5, we read: "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant." Some men are natural dictators and critics, guilty of taking exceptions to what the Lord has done and taught, and some are guilty of what Isaiah said, and the only reason why the sun, moon and stars have not been changed is because they are beyond man's reach and power.

Not many years ago, a brother was ordained to the office of seventy. A certain elder found fault. I asked why he objected. He answered: "He cannot preach; it is a mistake to place him in that quorum." I reminded him that all were not able speakers when first entering the active ministry. Some who were babes in education and experience have been called and ordained and have become able ministers, some of whom are holding prominent positions in the church now; and, at one time, he and two other elders said all they could say in less than thirty minutes. Later, one of those three was ordained to the quorum of the Twelve, the second to the Order of Evangelists and the other became a faithful, proficient minister, a member of a quorum of seventy.

While beginners in the ministry make grammatical errors and mispronounce words that grind hard on the ears of the college students and graduates, who may not be as interested in the gospel message as they are in grammar and oratorical abilities, yet the abundance of the harvest does not depend as much upon the eloquence of the speaker as upon the honesty of the hearers; the most eloquent minister of the church may preach, but if the people are not hungering for spiritual food, there will be no harvest. On the other hand, the minister with trembling knees, and stammering tongue and mispronounced words sows the seed in good soil, the harvest is satisfactory. A brother remarked that he always liked to hear a certain brother preach, notwithstanding his broken language and imperfect grammar, for he brought out good points. It was the kernel of the nut this brother wanted, not the shell; others were satisfied with the shell; oratory and thunder.

In conclusion let me say, seek for education, but fast and pray much for inspiration and preach the gospel in plainness and simplicity, with an eye single to the honor and glory of God and to the salvation of honest souls, and if you have not the Spirit, do not wear out the patience of the audience with your notes, manuscript, charts and repetition.

THE USE OF ART IN THE CHURCH—No. 2

[The following is one of a series of brief articles on this subject, written by some of our members who are especially interested in this phase of our work. Other articles will appear from time to time.—EDITORS.]

I have your request for an article on some phase of the subject, "A better use of art in the church," but in my endeavor to respond I shall disregard the word better in the title, because that implies a knowledge on my part of the extent to which art is now being made use of in the church, a knowledge which, owing to twenty-two years isolation from the church, I possess to a very limited extent indeed, except as it has been manifested through illustration of the church publications.

You have opened for consideration a very broad subject, and one which I am glad to see seems to be attracting more interest on the part of the church membership than formerly.

I hold that in a sense we are all of us artists, for to some is given the power to produce beautiful effects in architecture, in painting, in sculpture, in poetry, in music, and the various other lines of endeavor, and to others is given the power to appreciate what has been produced; and while the appreciator may not be able to produce the object of his appreciation, yet if upon beholding, or reading, or hearing, his heart thrills with the same emotions that inspired the producer, then there is established a bond of sympathy that makes them, in a sense, one.

I cannot refrain from quoting here from an essay on the subject of fine arts written by George William Eggers, professor of graphic arts in the Chicago Teachers' College. He says in defining the difference between fine arts and useful arts:

Man shudders with the cold and rain, or suffers from the sun's heat, and builds a roof and four walls within which to live. He has produced a work of useful art—the useful art of architecture. His house expresses the need of protection from the elements by tacitly meeting that need. But suppose he makes his roof project, so that a deep shadow will fall upon the walls when the sun shines, and that he makes the chimneys large, so that the house will not only be, but seem to be a place of shelter and warmth; and suppose that his columns be made broad at the base and lightened with decorations at their tops so that they seem to prefer to stand on end, as they do, and support the roof that is above them; then the house does more than simply withstand the elements, it goes so far as to celebrate its triumph over them. This is the fine art of architecture as a form of emotional expression—a language of the feelings. This theme of triumph, it may be observed, has been sung, not in this art alone, but in every form of fine art. From the first aboriginal song and dance down to the days of the Sousa March, triumph has found expression in the fine art of music. In the days of the Romans and before and since, it has been celebrated in the fine art of sculpture. In the days of the Egyptians, as in our own, the theme has been voiced through the fine art of painting; and in all times the fine art of poetry has made it the burden of its lay. So the common ground of the fine arts is the expression of the emotions.

Then it seems to me that the use of art in the church, whether in architecture, music, poetry or pictures, should be such as would express the religious or spiritual emotions of the people thereof; should be uplifting and broadening in its tendency. The church has been admonished to "come up higher," which to my mind means to dwell upon a higher plane than the world; to come out from and be better than the world.

In order that the church as a body may do this, it is imperative that each individual member of the church should live continually from day to day with this thought in mind, so that there may be a perceptible difference for the better between the members of the church and the people of the world. It follows, then, that their art work, as well as all other work, should be of a higher order, more ennobling and uplifting in its character, than such work in the world.

Is it not possible that in time there might be developed within the church a school of art in all its important branches as enumerated by Professor Eggers, whose tendency shall be ever upward, ever ennobling and refining; not only to the artists engaged in it, but to the appreciators both in and out of the church as well, so that all who come in contact with it might be the better for that contact? I do not mean by school, a place where all such branches shall be taught, necessarily, but rather that all engaged in any form of art might labor with the thought that they were engaged not only in making a reputation for themselves, but also for the church of which they are members. And what grander theme for inspiration could they have than the church militant here on earth, striving against the powers of darkness, never surrendering, ever strug-

After all, the chief value of anything in this line lies in the appeal which it makes to one's æsthetic taste; or in other words, to the train of thoughts which it sets up in one's mind. Take, for instance, a landscape wherein the artist has depicted a cluster of houses in the foreground nestling snugly in a little valley surrounded by high mountains. We admire the manner in which he has handled his subject; we note the hazy atmosphere which surrounds the lofty peaks in the distant background; the reflection of the trees and houses in the little stretch of water that flows by the town; the admirable treatment of the foliage, etc.

Some of us after doing all this will probably pass on and think we have rendered due and sufficient homage at the shrine of art. But it seems to me if we go no further we have missed the chief value of all such works, for as I stated before they are chiefly valuable for the train of thoughts which they inspire. So after having admired all the fine points in the picture, if instead of passing on we remain a while longer and just think, we are liable to get more good out of it, for it must be conceded there is more in a good picture or in a good book than just what the eyes see. And the thought which comes to me in viewing such a composition is the fine art of King David long ago when he sat in his palace and beheld the landscape, and lifted up his song in these words:

They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever.

Quoting again from Professor Eggers:

Fine art may well be defined as a species of universal language. The joy, pain, devotion, scorn, patriotism, defeat or triumph which the poet felt who wrote the sonnet is felt again by the person who reads the sonnet. Fine art in other words, means a doing or acting, not on the part of the artist alone, but on the part of the appreciator as well. . . . Arthur B. Davies says: "When I paint a wave I am that wave." True. And it is quite as true that when you look at his painting of the wave you are that wave. When he sweeps his brush up over the canvas, he feels himself doing just what the wave is doing—he becomes as he says a sort of conscious wave; when you sweep your eye over the lines where his brush has led, you, too, become a sort of acting, conscious wave.

This gives us an idea of the power for good or evil which we may wield by our art, for the real success of our endeavors, taken in connection with the purpose of the existence of the church, must be measured by the extent to which we may help our appreciators in their struggle, rather than by the mere technique of our rendition.

chology to think about—the extent to which the general public may be influenced by the various forms of fine art with which they may be surrounded. It is a fact that is generally recognized that the personal characteristics of individuals and even of whole nations may be affected by the trend of philosophy, of art and literature extant among them. How imperatively necessary it is, therefore, that all our efforts in whatever line of fine art we undertake shall be for the development of the true Christian character, with its gentleness and refinement; with its regard for the rights of others; with its doctrine of "whatsoever ye would that men should do for you."

Professor Eggers says:

Fine art, it is true, does not appear to minister to any of the primal needs of food, raiment or shelter. We cannot here discuss the question as to whether or not man has any real needs other than these three, which, to be sure, he shares with all the higher animals. True it is, however, that the oldest relics of man's handiwork that have come down to us are examples of his fine art, and true it is that he has never ceased to paint and sing nor to admire and listen even to this day.

And we might carry this thought a little further and say that the theme that has given him his grandest inspirations has been religion.

May the church militant move on and its members never cease to paint and sing to the glory of Christ the leader, or to admire and listen for the prompting of the still small voice of the Spirit until the great Critic shall pass judgment upon our endeavors.

BY E. E. LONG

THE TESTIMONY CONFIRMED

John Haynes Holms, writing in The Christian Work for September 23, says:

The vast armaments of our time are evidences not of security but of fear. Ship is added to ship, fortress to fortress, army corps to army corps—and still the fear grows, until at last in a very madness of mutual apprehension, the great war bursts upon the world.

Since the foregoing revelation was given, earthquakes and tidal waves have been frequent and appalling, and disastrous in results. During the past half century there have been 130,000 earthquake shocks recorded, distributed as follows: Italy 27,672, Japan 27,502, Greece and adjacent islands 10,306, South America 8,080, Mexico 5,586, Asia Minor, Sicily and the Pacific coasts of the United States about 4,400 each. The Chicago Blade for January 19, 1907, published a list of "historic catastrophes," too lengthy for insertion here, which shows that more than 200,000 people have been killed by earthquakes since 1851, while thousands more have perished from the same cause since that list was published. Disastrous storms and floods have likewise exacted a heavy toll since 1835; more than 28,000 people having lost their lives and over $500,000,000 in property destroyed.

In 1837 Mr. Smith gave another revelation to the world in which he said in part:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Darkness covereth the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people, and all flesh has become corrupt before my face. Behold, vengeance cometh speedily upon the inhabitants of the earth,—a day of wrath, a day of burning, a day of desolation, of weeping, of mourning, and of lamentation—and as a whirlwind it shall come upon all the face of the earth, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 105:9.

Say what we may about Joseph Smith as a prophet of God, the predicted scourge is on the world in the full measure of its awful results, and everywhere one goes the voice of "lamentation, mourning, and weeping," is heard. He said it would come because the people would reject the message God commanded him to deliver. Strange as it may appear, men today, in the face of the stern, cold facts, will sneer at the mention of "Joseph Smith." "Ye shall be hated of all men," has a strange meaning to those of us who realize its import.

The cause of the war may be attributed to militarism, but it and other surface evils are merely the results of a primary cause. Mr. Peter Ainslie touched the keynote when he said: "Our ignoration of the fundamentals in the religion of Christ has kept the church unspiritual, weak and impotent." (Christ or Napoleon, p. 61.) The fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ as found recorded in Hebrews 6:1, 2, Joseph Smith taught in full, while the church Mr. Ainslie represents, along with others, has continued to ignore them, and now, that disaster has overtaken them, they make confession without repentance. They continue the "ignoration" of those same "fundamental principles" knowing full well that they are "all under condemnation." It was just such "ignoration" of the fundamentals that made a supernatural restoration necessary, and Joseph Smith was fundamentally right.

CHRISTIANS SHUT THEIR EYES TO THE TRUTH

In an editorial in The Christian Work for July 29, 1916, Doctor Frederick Lynch says: "It was only the other day that a clergyman deliberately remarked to us that the teachings of Jesus were not meant for our age. Certainly a great many so-called Christians in our age shut their eyes to them." Now, in all candor, why should Doctor Lynch criticize a fellow minister for shutting his eyes to the teachings of Jesus when he himself is particeps criminis?

John 3:5, Mark 16:16, Acts 2:38; 22:16, Romans 6:3-5, and numerous other scriptures show clearly that Jesus and his apostles taught baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, but Doctor Lynch does not believe that doctrine was meant for our age. Jesus taught, by precept and example, the laying on of hands for blessing little children (Matthew 19:13-15; Mark 10:13-16), but Doctor Lynch and his associates shut their eyes to such plain teaching of the Master and add insult to injury by sprinkling the sinless babe and calling it baptism. Evidently they think the blessing of children as exemplified by the Savior was not meant for our age. The liberty that allows Doctor Lynch et al., to ignore baptism for the remission of sins gives license to another to shut his eyes to the Sermon on the Mount. And when one man can set aside the laying on of hands as a fundamental principle of the doctrine of Christ another man may with equal liberty relegate the "brotherhood of man" to a past age. Who among all the clergy of the churches, who are giving expression to the varied "confused utterances," can consistently throw the first stone?

Mr. Ainslie says the church has become "unspiritual, weak, and impotent" by ignoring the fundamentals in the religion of Christ. With him and his "brotherhood," baptism by immersion for the remission of sins is one of the fundamentals, and indispensable, while Doctor Lynch shuts his eyes to it, and both ignore the laying on of hands. These men are leaders among leaders, and molders of modern thought. The church can get no nearer to Christ than her leaders.

Acting under the impulse of the inspiration which he possessed, whatever may be said as to its source, Joseph Smith wrote the following as the word of the Lord:

Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear; prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come; for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people; for they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:3.

When the leaders of the church charge one another with ignoring the fundamentals and shutting their eyes to the teaching of Jesus, they tacitly admit that Joseph Smith told the truth when he said they had "strayed from mine ordinances." That they are in the dark is fully attested by current events, and frankly admitted by those who write. The Protestants who for centuries have branded the church of Rome as the "Mother of harlots" are now looking to her for assistance in the hour of peril, while she, herself, is burning to the water's edge with no one seeking her relief. Reverend C. F. Aked, writing in The Christian Work for October 14, 1916, under the heading, "Wanted—A Revival," says in part:

The churches have not obeyed Christ because they have not sufficiently believed in Christ. They have been sure of the big battalions, but doubtful of the Lord who promised to be with them even to the end of the ages. They have ranged themselves on the side of a rampant militarism, blessed the war flags of the nations, and urged the mad war millions of the earth to "fight to a finish." In England the official representative of the national church comes to a meeting and says that he is there to justify the war with Germany "in the name of my Master, the Prince of Peace"—he uses those very words. In Germany the greatest of all living theologians, from whom every preacher in the world, capable of learning has learned something, denounces England as a traitor to civilization, and the clergy call upon the god of battles to aid in her destruction. In this country the pulpit has been scarcely less militarist than the daily newspaper, and one can, with difficulty, distinguish the preacher of the gospel from the apostle of the big stick. And yet we believe in the church! We must believe in the church! It must stand as the pillar and ground of the truth. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. It is made up of men and women just like us—it is made up of us! We bring our imperfections and failures into it. But all the same the church remains the most convenient instrument to our hands, the best yet devised, for establishing the kingdom of heaven upon earth. Only the church has missed her way. And our country has missed her way. (Italics mine.)

Precisely so. And because the pilot shut his eyes to the teaching of the chart. Engaged with their numerous and varied plans of conquest, they failed to observe that the ship was gradually drifting from her course until, in the midst of a sudden storm, they find themselves on the rocks with a broken rudder. The heavens are overcast with blackness and in the darkness of the night they cannot see to read chart or compass, while the deafening roar of the deadly breakers grows louder as the proud and mighty vessel approaches her doom. "We must believe in the church," we hear the officers say, and with a hope akin to fanaticism, the unfortunate and bewildered sailors cling to the ill-fated ship, save for here and there a few maddened by fear who plunge overboard and cling to pieces of wreckage. A striking illustration of the thought in mind comes from Louisville, Kentucky. The following is from The Courier-Journal for October 2, 1916:

With a sermon teeming with bitter denunciation of modern churches, the Reverend Doctor W. W. Horner, who recently resigned the pastorate of the Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist congregation, launched a movement for the establishment of a pure church and the unity of all believers in Jesus Christ" at the Masonic Theater at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The sermon was the first of four weekly addresses which, according to Doctor Horner, will culminate in the organization of a "pure" congregation. The words, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Christian and the like were not Bible names for churches, Doctor Horner said. Some churches, he asserted, brazenly retain multitudes of dead beats, libertines and other human leeches in their membership, and some religious cults, insofar as Christianity is concerned, "have been dead so long that they have quit smelling bad.

Many of the one hundred and eighty-six denominations Doctor Horner denounces started in like manner. Of course he disavows any intention of founding a "new church." So did the others. Thomas and Alexander Campbell left the Presbyterians for precisely the same reasons that Doctor Horner assigns for his action, and repeatedly declared they would not be the founders of a new sect. But they have two thriving ones to their credit to-day. Roger Williams left the Church of England for similar reasons, but, like all the others, the work he begun has "gone astray from the cross." And this "pure" church that is now being formed by Doctor Horner will travel the same route, and come to the same end.

Another "pastor," Reverend W. K. Guthrie of the First Presbyterian Church of San Francisco, addressing the Traveler's Aid Society September 27, said that the "whole organized Christian church has failed in its mission." Joseph Smith was right when he declared "the churches are all wrong, and their creeds an abomination in the sight of God." He was right when he pronounced the word of the Lord, "they have strayed from mine ordinances," and these men who to-day are decrying the modern church and "burning her with fire" will not accept the message Joseph Smith gave to the world, though their every action confirms his testimony. That the world needs just such a message is fittingly declared by Doctor Horner in these words:

When the Christian world is broken up into one hundred and eighty-six different sects, every one of which claims to be the only true church; when these same so-called churches spring up out of hair-splitting and hair pulling discussions over such momentous questions as to whether or not the church shall have an organ, or fiddle or any other devilish (?) musical instrument, as if a violin, the master of all musical expression, which caught an echo from the heavenly music, and gave it out to a weary, broken-hearted world, could do any harm; when a modern religious sect is built around the ridiculous tenet that all the men shall wear long whiskers and the women long faces; when for the sake of sentiment Christian people will cling to such names as Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Christian, none of which are Bible names, the world needs something.—Louisville Courier-Journal, October 2, 1916.

WAR RESTRICTIONS IN ENGLAND

War with its burdens has brought in its train in all the affected nations many restrictions upon individual liberties and personal taste; nowhere more so than England, that land of individualism. Here is an interesting summary of the prohibitions which war has compelled:

One must not

Talk about naval or military operations in a restaurant railway carriage or any other place.

Repeat any official report of battle incidents and projects you may hear.

Say anything to make any person believe you are connected with any government department.

Say anything which might cast aspersions upon the forces of the allies or prejudice their good relations with neutral powers.

Spread any report of a Zeppelin scare.

Ask either soldiers or sailors anything about the disposition of units or ships.

Ask, especially if you are a woman, any officer to tell you something about the war "which the public does not know."

Write to people living in special military areas asking questions about military or naval matters, or send information from such areas about them.

Use a cipher code in sending letters to a neutral country.

Possess any cipher code which could be so used.

Send a letter abroad containing any matter written in invisible ink.

Receive letters and telegrams for a fee, unless you acquaint the police.

Attempt to give letters to members of the crew of a vessel about to sail for a neutral country, or to any country.

Receive any letter from outside the United Kingdom without notifying the authorities.

Write to anyone, either in this or in a neutral country, giving information about enemy submarines or airships.

Post any newspaper to a neutral country except through an authorized agent.

Walk about camps, defensive works, controlled factory, ship or office used for the service of the country.

Enter a special military area without the permission of the commandant. Sheerness, Dover, Newhaven and Scotland, north of the Caledonian Canal, are examples of special military areas.

Trespass on railways or loiter near railway arches.

Collect any information as to the condition of any of the ships.

Enter any government works without a permit.

Walk over or in trenches constructed by the military.

Wear a war work badge when not authorized to do so by official permit, or wear it after it has been recalled.

Wear any naval or military uniform when not entitled to do so.

Purchase any clothing or equipment from any soldier or sailor.

Show films, still pictures, or produce stage plays prejudicing discipline in any army.

Photograph, draw or paint any picture of the coast or within so many miles of it as specified locally.

Buy any drawings, photographs or silhouettes of ships of the navy.

Send any post card upon which are pictures of the ships.

Buy prismatic binoculars, portable terrestrial telescopes and prismatic compasses, unless you obtain an official permit.

Use a flashlight as a signal.

Fly a kite which is capable of being used as a means of signalling.

Give a display of fireworks except by permission of the naval or military authorities.

Allow a bonfire, even of garden refuse, after five p. m.

Ride on or drive any vehicle after dark that has not a rear red light, as well as a front white light. Perambulators are vehicles.

Raise blinds or remove shades from lights.

Allow any ray of light to escape from any window of your house after five p. m.

Shop after 8 p. m. on all days except Saturday, when the hour limit is 9.

Buy refreshments at a railway station buffet after 8 p. m. unless you consume them then and there.

If selling sugar make it a condition that the purchaser shall buy tea.

Act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or the defense of the realm.

Shoot or capture any carrier or homing pigeon.

Neglect to report the finding of a bomb dropped from enemy aircraft.

Sell firearms of any kind without a proper permit to do so.

Sell, buy or give cocaine or opium.

Melt down bronzed, silver or gold coin.

Refuse to show your registration card to any person authorized to look at it.

Ring bells or allow outside clocks to strike after 5 o'clock at night.

Have possession of any document the publication of which would be forbidden.

RULES FOR INTOXICANTS

Procure intoxicants other than between 12 and 2.30 and 6.30 and 9.30 on week days, or from 1 to 3 and from 6 to 9 on Sundays.

Buy intoxicants to take away after 8.30 p. m. on week days, and 8 p. m. on Sundays.

Buy spirits on Saturdays or Sundays for home drinking. On other days only from 12 to 12.30.

Buy less than a bottle of any spirits.

Buy a flask of spirits at any railway refreshment rooms.

Give or offer any soldier or sailor in or going to a port of embarkation any intoxicant.

Sell or give alcoholic liquors to soldiers and sailors in hospital garb.

Pay for any intoxicating liquor for another person on licensed premises.—Montreal Weekly Witness.

TWO PSYCHOLOGISTS

The announcement of a Boston psychic that the spirit of Hugo Muensterberg has communicated with her from the other world and assured her that spirits can converse with their friends on earth makes it evident that things go by contraries in the hereafter, just as they do in this existence.

Hugo Muensterberg and William James were contemporary psychologists, both connected with Harvard University. Muensterberg was a thorough materialist, while James went so far beyond mere faith in immortality as to believe in the ability of a spirit to communicate with the people alive in the flesh.

When James died, he left behind him a solemn promise to send a message from the spirit world within three years. The three years have passed and a couple more have gone by, but no one has heard a word from him.

It is strange that Professor Muensterberg, disbeliever in spirits, should get into communication with the earth less than a week after his funeral. The message he sends, furthermore, is something of a disappointment, for he merely says that he has proof of his ability to talk to his friends. Professor Muensterberg was so strongly given to imparting solid and detailed information about concrete matters, in terms understandable to the laity, that it is strange he said not a word about the world in which he now lives.—Des Moines Register, January 3, 1917.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

"Martha, Martha, Thou Art Careful and Troubled About Many Things"

In these days when the prices of the necessities of life are soaring beyond that which we have known for many years, the questions which confront us as housekeepers and caretakers are not few nor lightly to be solved. If Martha, from the days of olden simplicity, could be transferred to the modern home, methinks she might indeed have cause to be "careful and troubled about many things!" To meet the problems which are before the wage earner and the wage spender conjointly, in a manner which shall prove wise and satisfactory to both, would trouble anyone. In homes where there is "plenty and to spare" the pinch may not be felt so severely; but we all know that the mass of our church people, as the mass of our country's people, cannot be counted in this list; and in the majority of homes, strict observance of the principles of economy and wise decisions regarding food, home, dress, or adornment should be considered necessary.

In the light of these facts, our women cannot do better than to study carefully, as they may never have felt so keenly obliged to do in the past, the real science of the household. To view it as a science, as a work worthy of the very best brains and talents and efforts of any wife and mother, is surely commendable, and is the only course showing an intelligent appreciation of the situation as it exists to-day. Let us thoughtfully begin our questions right at home. Do we have upon our tables food that has only value which corresponds to that of the adornments of our person? Do we have knickknacks, choice fruits out of season, tasting (as used to be facetiously remarked about the first imported strawberries of the season) more of the money they represent than the sunshine and showers they have imbibed? Do we order carelessly and indiscriminately from our grocer or butcher without first taking a thoughtful inventory of our larder and its possibilities? Do we "run bills" and neglect to examine accounts or check up errors? Do we have a set of authorized scales in our kitchen by which we may determine whether or not we get what we pay for? Have we dropped into the habit of ordering over the phone, trusting to some uninterested party to make our selection of food for us?

And concerning the matter of dress, have we confounded clothing with adornment? Do we pay $2.50 for a school dress for our little girl, which we could make at home for 75 cents worth of material and a few hours loving work? Do we pay $3 for goods for a dress and then put $10 worth of "trimming" upon it? Do we feel, because Mrs. So-and-So's little girl has beautiful and expensive trimming upon her clothes, that our own little daughter cannot be sweetly and sensibly clothed without similar expense? Do we buy sheer and flimsy materials, because it is the style, and then find we must replace the garment after two or three times wearing?

In the matter of our homes, do we buy bric-a-brac, delicate vases, "ornamentals" gilt articles, gaudy pictures, expensive sofa pillows, or any of these so-called "furnishings" which become in our homes but burdens,—things to dust, clean, and care for daily?

Do we think we must have the expensive, modern apartments where the work is mostly done for us, and for which we must pay out a goodly sum of money every month? Have we forgotten the blessings of the out-of-doors, the sunshine, and contact with the soil, which can never come with stuffy

ORGANIZATION FOR WORK

Adults.—Select a leader or chairman, assign topics and readings to later be reported orally or in written form. Hold open discussions involving home experiences, have talks and papers by recognized outside authority (a teacher, a successful restaurant manager, etc.)

Children.—Organize small classes for practice in private kitchens, or talk over the principles of food and the application of heat to each class, and then practice at home, make reports of home work, hold contests and exhibits, invite neighbor children to join, secure outsiders as judges in contests, invite suggestions.

SOURCES OF HELPS

Public libraries, Government bulletins, current papers and magazines.

Under style consider economy as well as fads, color combinations, quality, texture, and garments of the proper kind for the occasion.

Silk hose and silk dresses with "flower" hats belong to the social costume and should never be used for school purposes, etc. Avoid fads, choose what is becoming and continue to do so, though your choice may not be the popular style.

SOURCES OF HELP

Books in public libraries, pictures, magazines, etc.

Organize classes as for cooking, particularly to discuss the questions presented, ask outsiders in your communities to give talks.

The text by Dorothy Quigley as indicated in the auxiliary Year Book is a most excellent suggestive text to use as a reference—one copy to a local is enough.

NEWS FROM BRANCHES

Independence Stake

January 3 was set apart by the aid society for the day of their annual dinner, and it was a very pleasant occasion. There were about fifty present. The sisters have done some very excellent quilting the last year and have been enabled to pay sixteen dollars tithing, also reserved twenty-five dollars for their savings fund and with over two hundred dollars as the proceeds of the year's work, besides much relief work.

Last Sunday was sacrament day and there was a large congregation present in both rooms. The usually interesting young people's prayer meeting was held in the early morning, and in the afternoon there were three meetings held: the old folks' prayer service, the Woman's Auxiliary and the research scripture class, the time of which was occupied by Bishop McGuire very profitably in an address mostly concerning the woman's building shortly to be opened in the interest of woman's work in the church. Brother McGuire also spoke at length on improved conditions in the homes of the Saints and of the object and aims of the organization. He also referred to the financial affairs of the church, and of the debt he spoke most impressively and urged a movement among the young people with a view to relieve the situation.

Bishop Keir presented some very practical ideas in regard to the home, and a number of others occupied with speeches, which, taken altogether, made a very profitable and interesting service.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

Oregon

It has been some time since I have contributed anything to your pages, so I have decided to write. I was busy in the vicinity of Bandon and Myrtle Point during the time of the late General Conference. I continued in that part of my field until the Myrtle Point reunion which was in the early part of July. Just before the convening of the reunion Elder R. F. Slye came up from southern California to join me in missionary labor. We had a good time together at Bridge, Brewster Valley, and Pleasant Hill before the reunion. During the latter we had the genial presence of Elder J. W. Rushton. This was much enjoyed, as were also his counsel and sermons. His labors were also very agreeable to the non-members. All we have to do at Myrtle Point is to say "Rushton" and everybody sits up and takes notice. The reunion was fairly good, but not quite up to the standard of last year.

After reunion Elder Slye and I took the district tent out to Roseburg to do mission work. We stopped for a few days at Camas Valley where we held some very interesting meetings and met with some opposition. We found Brethren Solomon Culver and Sheridan Croy and their families doing all they could to hold the fort.

We held meetings in the tent at Roseburg the whole of August and the most of September. The attendance was small and the interest ordinary but we believe the work was put on a better basis than before. The town was entirely new, there having been no preaching done there except a few sermons preached by Elders Holt and Chase nearly twenty years ago. We had two families of Saints, those of Brethren O. A. Currie and B. H. Laird who did all they could for the work. Not long after our meetings Brother and Sister Currie and their children moved to Lamoni, which was his boyhood home. Sister Slye and Brother Slye's little girls were also present. Sister Slye did good service in the musical line, for which we were thankful. The writer knew her as a little girl when a missionary in California sixteen years ago. She has grown up to be such a woman as she promised to be when very young.

Brother and Sister Slye returned to Myrtle Point while I remained in Roseburg and held services in the Eagle Hall on Sundays until the end of November. During the weeks I preached in outlying country districts. My meetings at the hall were attended by about the same number of people that came to the tent meetings. We attracted some new hearers after going to the hall and lost some of those who had attended our tent services. Roseburg is, on the average, a hard town to work. Only about twenty-five per cent of the people go to church. Myrtle Creek, which is about seventeen miles south, appeared even worse. The population professes religion, for the most part, and yet takes no real interest. One Sunday I was there when I was off duty. I meant to do some preaching but did not succeed in getting a place. I went to the Christian church for Sunday school and Christian Endeavor, to the Methodist for the morning sermon and to the Presbyterian for the night sermon. It so happened that Reverend G. Bettes, the "cowboy preacher," was the speaker at the last-named place. I met him in Indiana over twenty years ago. He was glad to see me and was very courteous. After hearing him I listened to the latter part of the Baptist minister's discourse. The Methodist preacher had an audience of twenty-five, Bettes eighteen, and the Baptist fifteen, and yet the town has a population of seven hundred. The Christian church had no preaching service. The audience was about the same as the Methodist attendance.

Recently the ministers and professors of Eugene initiated a church census of Lane County—of which Eugene is county seat—and found that only thirteen per cent of the country people are church members. Eugene is the university town and is noted for its respectability and Christianity. The papers published the report and asked the ministers, "What are you going to do about it?" When I took notice that our church had shrunk in its missionary operations on the Pacific Slope, especially in California, I took it for granted that the other churches had been going ahead. I soon discovered that I was mistaken. Although they have more preachers than we, yet the number is not out of proportion to the number of their churches. The result is the cities and larger towns have absorbed practically all of their preachers. The rural regions have to put up with very poor preachers, or have none. Sometimes there is none for them, good, bad, or indifferent. The church which can solve this country church question will reap a great harvest. The Adventists appear to be doing better than others.

The sphere of our influence out west has decreased instead of increased. It looks as if there would have to be a change in methods in order to do effective country work. Either because of decreasing interest among the people or neglect by the churches they appear to have lost the disposition to entertain ministers as they did in the olden days. In consequence a well-equipped tent or a gospel wagon appears to be the best way of reaching them with our work or any other religious or reform message. Very large efforts may be made by means of large, substantial buildings, but for any ordinary effort in cities or towns the tent is preferable. Having the wagon for use for a home, in the country districts, it will be comparatively easy to get schoolhouses, etc., to preach in. We are past the time when it was wise to send out "tramp preachers." At least two should go together now, and one or both of them should be musical, which will greatly add to the popularity and effectiveness of the work. It is still better if the wives of the two missionaries are along. They can, especially if they are musical or conversational, or both, add greatly to the prospects of success, and besides, their presence decreases the suspicion as to "Mormonism" and "polygamy."

After my visit to Myrtle Creek I went out into the country and held meetings in the Dyer Schoolhouse. Held forth for two weeks. Had good attendance and interest. The audience ranged from twenty-five to a hundred. It is needless to say I had my best audience when I used the stereopticon. I use it some everywhere. The people there are mixed, some Methodists, some Presbyterians, and some Advent Christians, and more members of the Christian Church. I made application for the use of the Myrtle Creek Christian church but up to the time I left there had received no decision. I am sure my preaching at Dyer will help me in relation to this application, for several members of the Christian Church heard me. One, a Mr. Newton, is a prominent man among them. He said he could, to use his own words, "put it over" for me. I made my home with Mr. John B. Bowman and his most excellent family. They are Methodists. I visited with members of the Christian and Advent Christian Churches. We have but one member in that locality, Miss Prudence Hauser. She was baptized by Elder M. H. Cook in eastern Oregon. She and her parents were absent in that part of the State when I was in their neighborhood.

From the Myrtle Creek country I came to Portland for the holidays. The Quorum of Twelve will please take notice that I am out of my field, but I am going back soon as Brother Rushton says so. In the meantime I am holding a series of meetings at this place. The new year is beginning with a heavy snowstorm.

We have suffered a great deal by our neglect of the places opened up and worked years ago. Myrtle Creek is one of these places. Elder J. C. Clapp did some good work there as much as thirty years ago. A Mr. Hall, the richest man in the town, reputed to be worth near a hundred thousand dollars, is nominally a member of the church. He told me, however, that he does not now consider himself a member. This is not surprising when we consider how long the work there has been neglected. He has a good reputation but is generally known as a worshiper of the "almighty dollar." "There are others," both in and out of the church.

With prayers for the success of the work everywhere, I am
Your brother in gospel bonds,
ALMA C. BARMORE.

Up in the "Thumb"

The fading tints in memory's picture of the past is revived, and every touch of time's pencil seems to augment their power and heighten their import.

The bell of time has pealed several chimes in our ears since we contributed a "wee dotty dimple" to your columns. This epistolary retirement was not because a strong and ruling faculty for continuance had strangely departed, neither for the emptiness of the life's experiences in the great school of this thrilling age; but, for the fact that we are prone to depreciate our own efforts—minimize the oasis in the desert of our own lives—and increase, unto magnification, the bright spots in other gardens, we all could appear to better advantage. Some of us qualify to the above.

Since my associations began with the Saints of the Eastern Michigan District I have been deeply impressed with their standard of action, the operation of which is productive of excellence, and so winsome to society. But it must be remembered, if our idea of saintly obligation is right, every exertion for distinction not clearly within the pale of righteousness, must fail in securing the permanent benefit.

No compromise of principle to popular customs, or isms, can be discerned in this standard. From our viewpoint, this is a pleasant and creditable reflection on the strong priesthood of the district. From some cause, activity is in the air, the spirit of "move along" is in the ranks; the centripetal of right, seems to be determined to pierce the armor plate of the centrifugal of wrong, and prosperity and strength stream out like banners from the emporiums of commerce. The "Thumb" is not distinct from the hand, but it is very much mobilized, and to us, facile princeps. Hence, the index finger points the earnest seeker to the New Testament gates—love, peace, “good will to men.”

The two-day meetings of the Eastern District were anniversaries of joy, and large assemblage. Some experiences graven by the gentle spirit were monitors pointing to the golden dome of possibility, and more enduring than those impressed by the sculptor's art, bidding us to climb the heights—away from bondage to freedom's cloudless sky. At Marlette a superb gathering presided over by the district presidency were merged into one spirit which infused thoughts deeper, vaster, more impetuous than hitherto experienced. A new passion arose, a new love, more individualized, more concentrated, and it occupied the heart. Things were looked on with a scrutiny that would fain penetrate the mysteries of their cause, and consequences. Every hour was a devoted and busy one—even the dinner and supper hours.

We moved on to Caseville alone, where we met our genial and able young brother, Elder Carr, whose vocation from a business standpoint takes him to Flint, amid the industrial hum of automobile machinery. We spent an enjoyable ten days at Caseville, occupying the new church, and were greeted by very fair attendance. Moving along in company with Elder McIntosh, president of Caseville Branch, we attended the church opening at Uby. A beautiful season of clear weather was on. Here was a mammoth crowd, and if the “autos” were never made to serve the cause before they did here. Rank after rank were parked in profusion, and, I thought, sometimes in confusion. Here were “Uncle John”—Patriarch Bailey—Elders Grice and Davis, district presidents, with Elders Hawn, Smith, et al. Three tables extending across the lower auditorium groaned with the supply of more than epicurean dainties.

The Sunday morning social service was blessed with divine recognition. Light was flung down, as in showers from on high, upon an earnest people as assembled from near and from far. The gifts of tongues and interpretation and prophecy were present, and the longing prayer for the heavenly presence was realized, and the brother who had been so sacrificing, and zealous in the construction of the church building was called to the office of teacher. The attendance was so great the townspeople, not of the church, assisted in the care of visitors. I was assigned to the home of a Presbyterian—Scotch, by the way, with no discount on the nationality, nor the man—with whom we conversed freely, on the topic of religion. Their goodness would not allow them to take a cent of money for our care.

We preached Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon at four o'clock. Elder Hawn occupied the two o'clock hour. Baptism was administered after Elder Hawn's sermon. At five-thirty p. m. we boarded an auto owned by Brother Brooks and sped away to Brown City, a distance of thirty miles. Here we began a series of services Monday evening, continuing over the following Sunday. Fine audiences attending. The branch has for its presiding officer Elder John O. Weaver, brother to missionary Richard D. Weaver, and “Ted” and “Jim.” Somehow the preaching strain runs through this family, as well as a large current of hospitality. They are certainly “weaving” out good fabric for the community, with strong warp and woof.

From Brown City we attended Coldwater conference, with no audible articulation. Could not speak aloud, no time for music, or preaching. Could be abused all others chose to give, but could not defend myself—with my voice. When able, November found me at Port Huron, where Brother Otto Fetting, the redoubtable little warrior for the cause, scattered hand bills announcing a temperance effort at the church for us, the night of the 5th, subject, “The social plague; the home against the saloon; State-wide prohibition; the people's duty.” The house was packed. The walls were decorated with significant charts. Special music under the direction of Elder W. J. Smith. I was satisfied. Guess the audience was.

Following this, Brother Fetting scattered another series of posters announcing special gospel lectures. The people did indeed manifest an interest. Elder W. J. Smith baptized three the first Sunday. Elder Fetting baptized two the last Sunday, when a message reached me in the afternoon announcing the death of my wife's father, D. V. Kelley, a Civil War veteran. Leaving Port Huron Monday morning, I soon joined my family at noon, and shared the shadow and sorrow: Grandpa Kelley was a good, clean man, honest as the blue vault studded with stars, and has gone to a good reward.

Hastily making preparation I came to this city of 80,000 people with its clang and din, its breakneck speed, and began a series of “Bible lectures.” An announcement card, through the Flint Journal for two days' run, cost eight dollars, but Flint Saints believe in sacrificing a little money for the Lord's work, and could you have seen the packed building nightly, and on the Sunday evening as many turned away as were inside (as we were informed), Mr. Editor, the price fades into nothingness.

The Flint Branch numbers more than three hundred members, and two missions are in prosperous condition. Brother Ralph A. Harder is presiding. He is only twenty-four years old. To see him, is to know him, to know him is to love him. The banner borne to the breeze by the Flint Branch is clean and bright.

Thanksgiving Day was enjoyably spent. Prayer service in the morning was well attended, and a fine spirit prevailed. In the evening another large audience crowded the church. Baptism was administered in the lower auditorium at about six forty-five, and at the opening service confirmation was administered in the upper room preceded by entrancing music. One rendition was a violin solo entitled “The angels' serenade,” by Brother Everheart, accompanied by piano. A sweet stillness pervaded. One could almost believe the messenger was near. The subject for the evening was: “The model republic, the strongest ground for a thanksgiving American people.” Light came with the investigation, and it is intended to publish the same in the Flint Journal, as a stenographer was present every evening.

Good, earnest workers are at Flint. The church is a busy center just now. Preparations going on for Christmas entertainment. A cantata “The crowning of Christmas” will be rendered by a band of children, supported by orchestra. It is planned to give a series of archæological lectures in connection with the Book of Mormon after the holidays. The usual persecution abetted by the popular clergy and public lecturers has been waged against the Saints of this district as that of others, but herein is the strength of the adopted standard made manifest. The words: “Resist not evil” should be understood in the light of those which follow. There is all the difference in the world between taking a blow upon one cheek and turning the other also. Christ nor the apostles taught a spineless doctrine. To turn the other cheek is to turn the tables on the smiter, and vanquish him by revealing him to himself. Turning the other cheek is both a strategy and victory. Submitting is negative and turning the other cheek is positive as to attitude. It declares both principle and policy. To do so, disarms an assailant, knocks the weapon from his hand by paralyzing it, so to speak. It lets him know that you know just what a fool he is making of himself. This conduct is the coolest courage as well as masterful courtesy. Turning the other cheek virtually says, "Yes, I am willing to fight, but I will chose my own weapons, and my own field, and they shall be moral; with them I shall overcome both myself and you. Jesus carried out this principle straight and clean." "Overcome evil" with the more active and powerful principle of "good." It lead him to Calvary where he seemed to suffer defeat, but where he won such victory as has made the cross the accepted symbol of moral triumph in all succeeding centuries. The spirit of victory through the invincible might of love and good will—divested of selfishness—can be caught from the Christ. The words, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," is not tame, inert, inaction, but resistance of evil by means of the greater power of good. To me, here lies the secret of that amazing conquest in history—the triumph of Christianity over imperial Rome for a brief period. It will give the latter-day cause triumph over the combinations of wrong in our day. So might it be.

Sees Only Good in Chair of Religious Education

I wish to acknowledge my change of heart after the first shock of that "electric"—or I believe they call it a chair of theology—whatever it may be I frankly admit the shock of that chair has really done me some good by stimulating the gray matter into dynamic thought.

The first thought of that chair brought gloomy visions of the old hobgoblin of heresy hunting and theological hair-splitting, but as the current of unbiased reflection began to flow I began to see visions of helpfulness. As I now understand it, this chair is nothing more than a systematic study, in the hands of competent tutors, of the standard books of the church together with comparative theology, calculated to unify or solidify the best opinions of the church upon the vital questions pertaining to the divine economy. Am I right, Mr. Editor, or am I still suffering from the shock of that chair?

Are not the ministry of this church very much indebted to the studious efforts of others for much of the information they now possess? I know that had it not been for the books written by such brethren as G. T. Griffiths, Etzenhouser, Luff, Evans and I. M. Smith and others, some of the younger ministry would be a great deal more handicapped than we are. To their efforts we owe much of our education. And yet General Conference, by a small majority had the hardihood to forbid the ministry to write books by which any profit came to them, thus greatly lessening the incentive to write such books as might be helpful to the oncoming ministry. Why could not a chair in Graceland perform this important function?

Are we not, in a meager degree at least, doing the same thing as this chair in Graceland proposes to do, when we meet in our Sunday schools and Religio to study the word of God? Do we not look to those better informed to impart their knowledge to those of lesser advantages? Is it more harm to do such work through a chair in Graceland than the above-named auxiliaries?

When we speak of an educated ministry does it not chiefly mean that education we secure by the study of all "good books" which God himself has recommended? Education has a broader meaning than that wrapped up in the textbooks of our public institutions of learning. That being true, then why should I have been shocked by that "chair" whose whole duty is to help me in a systematic study of those "good books" and to impart to me in concrete form some of the accumulated wisdom of trained minds? The only reason I can now assign is that good intention of this "chair" was short-circuited by prejudice and lack of confidence.

I am one of the uneducated ministry and for twenty-two years have been butting my head against obstacles by reason of this ever since. I hope some way will be worked out to prepare the young for their work and not have such great handicaps as I have had. While I have been reasonably successful in my work, notwithstanding this, how much more good I might have done did I not have to spend so much energy in meeting the exigencies surcharged by reason of lack of education. Eternity alone can tell.

News From New Zealand

[The following is a combination of a personal letter to the Editor and one to the HERALD. Both are interesting, so we eliminate the repetitions and present them in this form.—EDITORS.]

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND, November 22, 1916.

The above address will stand for some time, we hope, and if you would mention it in the HERALD it might help me get my mail in the future. Have been getting mail addressed to several places in New Zealand and think I have missed some of it altogether. I came down to Dunedin September 28, and preached my first sermon here Sunday evening, September 29. Since then I have preached eighteen sermons, in the streets, in the Clubhouse Hall in Morey Place, Dunedin and in the homes of the Saints. We hold a meeting at the house of one of the Saints each Wednesday evening, in the hall on Sunday evenings and preach in the streets when and where we feel led to do so. . . .

Most of our preaching is done on the streets. People get very excited at times, then they quarrel among themselves. Some want to interrupt us and not give us a hearing, while others take up our side and insist on "British fair play." One or two fellows tried to raise the crowd against us (they were "United Brethren"); they told the people we were Mormons and that we were not teaching all we believed and practiced. This was a hint and suggestion for the people to call out "Mormon" and "polygamy." But we answered them and the men who accused us walked quickly away, not stopping to hear our reply. I could have thanked them for their visit to the fountain that night, for it gave us a good opportunity to explain the difference between ourselves and the Utah Mormons.

There are three Mormon elders, new arrivals, here in the city now. They are two young men who do not know much about their own church, but that their grandmother said thus and so, etc. The third one is a little older and has heard more than the others, but he is not so careful about the use of the truth as the others. As R. C. Evans says, he "perambulates about the suburbs of veracity and economizes with the truth." He quotes history readily to suit himself when there is no place to find the reference.

I had a "go" with them, as the New Zealander calls it, the other day. We spent three hours here at my place and reviewed differences and I succeeded in drawing the young men over on our side against his brother several times, but I fear it will do no good, for the older one will only pull the wool over his eyes again when they are alone. I shall have to meet them here constantly all along the line. They are determined that we shall not get a footing here, and I am determined that we shall tell their people the difference when the opportunity affords, though they bring all the demons in hades to fight against me. But I am not going to make a specialty of fighting them all the time, that would simply divert my attention from preaching our side of it.

There were a couple of the United Brethren there and they demanded the stand to reply to Brother Hall's argument on baptism. We gave way to them and they each took a shot at baptism, and Brother Hall replied. They had evaded the question entirely and served the old trick of reading just far enough to suit themselves and stopping there, only to be exposed when replied to. They never stopped to hear the reply, for they knew their trick would be exposed and did not want to be there to stand the brunt of it. . . .

We are paying war prices for everything we get out here. Old potatoes are $1.80 a bushel, and very poor at that, and the new potatoes are $4.80 a bushel. Kerosene is 30 cents a gallon when bought by the 10-gallon case. Apples, onions, various fruits are 12 cents a pound. Beef sausages are 10 cents a pound. Hamburger steak, which is called mincemeat here, is 15 cents a pound, which is reasonable in these times. Head lettuce is 4 cents a head. Other garden truck is accordingly. Shoes are about twice the price they are in America. Ripe tomatoes are 16 cents a pound. We pass them up. Milk is 10 cents a quart, and bread 8 cents a 2-pound loaf. Reasonable.

Dunedin is a Scotch settlement, 50,000, population. The weather does not get warm enough here to ripen tomatoes outside. They really do not have much real good growing weather. No extremely cold weather in winter, but no really warm growing weather in summer. No corn here except in the inland towns where it warms up a little in summer.

Cabbage and potatoes, wheat, oats, and rye, etc., do well. Sheep are numerous, cattle also. New Zealand puts out great quantities of wool, frozen meat, butter, game and poultry, also coal. They have a rich deposit of iron here, but have not done anything with it up to the present.

We have rented a small house, three rooms, lavatory and washroom. It is rather old but we have made it quite comfortable and have promise of improvements soon. We got it at a reasonable rate and hope to be able to keep it while I am away to other towns so the wife will have a home by herself. This is the first time we have kept house since we have been married. Always lived in with others or lived a camp life. Our rent comes to 24 cents a day. This is the very lowest we can get.

Everybody talks war and everyone asks you "Why don't you go to the front?" But few people ask the banker why he does not give all his money to the cause.

From Here and There

Joseph H. Wagar of Outlook, Montana, says he would like to have the elders call on Alex Skaggs, of Mount Sherman, Kentucky. The family is interested in the gospel.

Brother W. E. Peak has been transferred from the Kewanee District to the Northeastern Kansas District for the balance of the conference year and mail addressed to Atchison, general delivery, will reach him.

Elder O. Salisbury, president of Des Moines District, is out on a tour of several weeks, holding a series of meetings at the various branches in the district. He is accompanied by Brother Gerrit Juergens, who conducts the singing and makes it a special feature of the services. Excellent results are reported so far.

In Omaha the personal visit to the homes of the people by the pastor and others brings an excellent attendance and interest. Omaha isn't telling us much about it, but be assured they are alive to their opportunities.

J. F. Gunsolley of Lamoni, sends in some objections to statements in the series of articles recently concluded by T. J. Smith, on the Book of Mormon. He says he will write an article on the subject, so we hold his contribution till it arrives.

Brother A. G. Miller who has been working at Greenville, South Carolina, says the work at that place is in real need of at least one hundred men. He has been informed that about twenty of the Mormons in that community have quit their faith since our work was introduced last summer. A number are especially interested in our work, and as has been previously reported, some have been baptized.

A branch has been organized at Long Beach, California, where a mission has been conducted for the past four years under the pastorate of Elder R. T. Cooper, of Los Angeles. The meeting was held December 31, 1916, with J. W. Rush-ton and G. E. Harrington in charge. Forty-one members signified their desire to become affiliated with the new branch, which will be known as the Long Beach Branch. The officers elected were, in part, as follows: W. H. Garrett, president; Claude C. Smith, priest; Miss Nora E. Smith, secretary. The order of services will be: Sunday, preaching at 11 and 7.30, except the first Sunday of the month, which will be communion service. Wednesday evening prayer meetings at 7.30 except the first Wednesday, which will be branch business meeting. Arthur L. D. Steggee was ordained a deacon and elected to serve for the branch. To reach chapel, take East Tenth Street jitney at Pine and Ocean Avenue, get off at Orange Avenue, and walk four blocks north.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA, December 18, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am ever thankful that God showeth me the truth, the true and everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I was quite young when I first heard it in 1861, in my old country, Denmark, and was rebaptized in 1866, soon after we came to this new country, by Brother R. C. Elvin. So I have most all my life been a member of this church, and know it is God's holy truth, in which I delight more and more each day. I have received many good blessings, and many manifestations all along the way, of its eternal foundation, to have no doubt or fear, nor look for any other, as I know there is none other but one gospel, and one God. It has always been my sunlight, my hope and consolation through the darkness and trials, that I have passed through, and they have been many.

Then the HERALD has been my faithful stand-by and true helper. I have always had it, all these many years, since 1869. I have not been able to do without it, and I know how lost I would feel if I could not get it. The contents of it are good and satisfying food for the soul. All is so true and wholesome.

I take account of a letter of one of my sisters, stating how we could save some money to help the church by doing without certain things that we do not need, and I have thus been able to save some, which I shall gladly give. God knows all things, and I know his promises are true and faithful, and his blessings are sure to follow every effort put forth by any one of his faithful children, to help spread the glorious light of salvation.

My son brought me the December number of the Ladies' Home Journal, and in it I found a wonderful picture, "The head of Christ," in colors. It is very lovely and sweet, though sad. I go and look at it often, and think I see my Savior's face. I think many of my sisters would get that paper for the sake of the picture. It is grand.

Yours in gospel bonds,

KEARNEY HILL.

Editors Herald: Many of us come to the HERALD when our hearts are too full for words. I read Sister Vida Smith's letter with tears streaming down my cheeks. She speaks of her daughter giving up her life, and then she wasn't permitted to keep the child. Our daughter gave up her life too, and she was our only daughter, as was Jephthah's daughter. I have no one to look to in my declining years. It is over four years since Hazel left us. Yes, it was in cold December. She came to us in December, and it was in December that her life went out for another. There are times when the shadows fall on me as dense as the day she was taken away from us. I have grown older and need her more. I expect Sister Smith will remember Hazel Gill Knisley, as she attended Graceland a short time.

MRS. E. A. GILL.

Editors Herald: It may be surprising to some of the Saints that in a city so extremely "wet" as Milwaukee that Saints could be found, but this is nevertheless a fact.

Your writer came to Milwaukee about ten years ago at which time Latter Day Saints of the Reorganized Church were unheard of, at least to your writer's knowledge. Soon after, we succeeded in inducing others to come here because of better laboring possibilities. Steps were immediately taken to organize a Sunday school, which was accomplished by the able assistance of Elder J. O. Dutton, then in our district.

Time went on, bringing its fond anticipations and gloomy disappointments incidental to all organizations of this nature. Others were located in the due process of time (sometimes after months) but as a rule successful. Later, a regular weekly prayer meeting was organized, but nothing further was done, owing to the scattered condition of the Saints here. As time went on and the interest increased, our spiritual wants increased also, and realizing that we should have more of the branch privileges, we took steps to secure the services of an elder or priest to administer sacrament to us at least once each month, as no one here had authority to do so. Chicago being but eight-five miles distant, we secured the services of Elder P. G. Fairbanks, who for a time came once a month and administered sacrament to us.

Thus it will be seen that by a little persistent effort we would overcome quite difficult obstacles. Should this letter come under the observation of anyone similarly situated as we were, remember that not only do "all things come to him who waits," but all privileges come to those who put forth the proper effort, and the personal blessings more than repay such effort.

In the course of time your writer was ordained to the office of priest, and entered at once upon the duties of that office. Our numbers had now grown to the extent that the ordinary room in the average house would not accommodate us, so again a difficult problem confronted us, to secure a place centrally located at a moderate price. This required some time, and was accomplished about a year ago, when we found a suitable place centrally located for all, reached by a good car line and in a good neighborhood. During the period of ten months that we have occupied our hall we have nearly doubled our membership, and thus far have met all of our obligations and have a nice working balance left each month. Of necessity we have had to make sacrifices to maintain our hall, but our efforts have been amply repaid in the spiritual blessings we have received.

We now hold our Sunday school at 10 a. m., and Religion at 11 a. m. Sundays, and preaching at 8 p. m., Sundays. Prayer meeting is held at 8 p. m., Thursday evening. Owing to our scattered condition no more meetings are held during the week. There are now about thirty active members in the branch, with a fair outside interest. We are allotted a space each week (free of charge) in our local paper to announce the hour of our meetings, and such other notices as we may have. Many have been drawn by the notice in the local paper, both members and nonmembers. We have found that advertising in our local paper pays, as the members and people friendly to our cause have been reached just in that way.

Our Christmas program was held in our hall Saturday evening, December 23, at 8 p. m. Several outside talent volunteered their services in the program, which added greatly to making it a success and one long to be remembered by the Saints and friends in attendance. Christmas bell souvenirs were given to each individual entering the hall. After the entertainment candy in appropriate boxes was distributed to each in attendance, together with a large western apple with the seasons greetings attached. Thus passed into history one of the events that will live brightly in the minds of every child and adult in attendance, and will prove to be the best method of bringing our cause to the attentions of some who could not be otherwise reached.

While all our plans as a whole have not always materialized, we have always been sufficiently rewarded to give us enough incentive for the next attempt. Thus has the work in Milwaukee progressed in the past ten years. Our only object in writing this letter is with the possibility of helping some one laboring under similar conditions, as we are, and inspiring others to a greater activity.

Should anyone reading this letter have friends or relatives in this city, members or not, that you wish called upon, please communicate with the undersigned as soon as possible.

Ever praying and laboring for the welfare of the cause,
I remain,

786 National Avenue.

Your humble servant,

FRED O. DREYER.

MONTEREY, CALIFORNIA, December 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year! How I long to meet with the Saints this morning in worship. Just any place would be good, but there are of course certain places where I would be especially glad to go among—"The Brick Church on the hill" in Lamoni, the church in Stewartsville, Missouri, the church in Huntsville, the church in Higbee, in Bevier, in fact, in several different places, for I am sure I would see familiar faces in any one of those churches, faces of Saints who have been my friends in bygone years and whom I will never forget.

Being as I am, alone in a big house, my employers having been away for more than two months, and being compelled to stay here until they return, to prevent thieves from breaking through and taking the things of value which this house contains, I seem to be doomed to spend another Christmas away from my baby boy, this being the third Christmas I have been away from him. Naturally it is unpleasant for me, but I am trying to make the best of the situation. In the words of an old-time friend, I am trying "to live in the present and hope for a better future." Of course I know that there will be a tree and plenty of toys and candy and nuts and all good things in abundance for my baby, and I am sure his heart will be filled with gladness and joy, for he is surrounded by "his own" people, who have his interest at heart. But even that doesn't prevent his mother from having a selfish desire to be there and see him in his happiness. But as the song says, "God will take care of you," so I trust him for all things, and will wait for his mercy and hope that I may be given the privilege of caring for the little one myself, that I may have the pleasure of teaching him the gospel, for in his blessing the promise was given that he will be an influence for good in the church. And now he is among Methodists, and while he will no doubt be taught to be honest and honorable, yet he cannot receive the true gospel from them, for they have not received it in its fullness.

I went to the piano this morning with the Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises and entertained myself awhile, and it was while playing the hymns that I was carried back in memory to other days when I have so enjoyed God's spirit—in the different meetings and in the prayer meetings particularly. I do hope that I may yet have the privilege of living among the Saints for I have never found another people who can compare with them, and it is because they have received the Spirit of God and are guided in their daily living by that spirit. It becomes a part of their being.

Ever praying for the welfare of the church, and for the final redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. MARY WALKER LABRANT.

DEWAR, OKLAHOMA, December 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write to let you know how I miss the regular visit of the HERALD. I have received only one copy in nearly three weeks. I have been a constant subscriber since 1901. Part of the time I could only send one dollar. I do not possess any of this world's goods, and am not able to work for wages, as I am seventy-two years old. I am the only Latter Day Saint in this town. I will send the remainder of my subscription as soon as I am able.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. N. MCNELLIS.

TOLEDO, OHIO, December 29, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are all well and strong in the faith trying to keep our lamps trimmed and burning.

Our church building is completed for the winter. The brethren finished the painting, before our Christmas entertainment. Last Thanksgiving we met in the basement of the new church and had our Thanksgiving dinner. Had a prayer meeting and were blessed with a gift of prophecy, telling us our sacrifice and work were pleasing, and that the Toledo Branch would go on to victory, if not by the Saints here now, by others who would move in.

Your sister in Christ,
1408 Collingwood. MRS. D. C. MORGAN.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA,

January 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: For nearly thirty years the writer has been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has been a reader and subscriber of the HERALD most of that time. This is my second letter to the HERALD during all that time, although I have made many attempts to write, but my letters have generally found their way into my own waste paper basket, instead of the editor's. In February 1912, I wrote a letter intended for publication, but have kept it until now, and will send it along without revision:

"Appreciation of the SAINTS' HERALD—Here you are again you dear old HERALD. You are a welcome visitor every week. How could we get along without you? Who can tell your worth? Your columns are full of light and intelligence, and you carry joy, faith, hope and comfort to thousands of Saints scattered throughout the world. How eagerly we watch for you every week! What a great mission you are filling! How many happy hours we spend in scanning your pages. Oh ye Saints who are nonsubscribers, how much good you are missing. Wherefore do you spend your money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Harken diligently unto me: subscribe at once: only one dollar and fifty cents a year. Be an up-to-date Latter Day Saint. Every family in the church ought to have the official organ of the church—THE SAINTS' HERALD."

The writer was baptized at London, Ontario, and was for over twenty years a member of that branch; also an officer, having been called and ordained to the office of teacher November 24, 1895. At that call I was told I should yet minister before the Lord in places I had not yet seen. October 21, 1900, I was called and ordained to the office of an elder. In the fall of 1909 I came to this place and found a few families of Saints who had been organized into a branch a few years before.

New Westminster has a population of about fifteen to twenty thousand and is located about twelve miles from Vancouver, which has a population of over one hundred thousand. There were a few families residing there also, and Elder McMullen was one of them. He was the only one holding the priesthood, and was doing his best to keep the work going in both places.

Upon our arrival we brought four more members to the branch, and I was able to relieve Elder McMullen somewhat here, and he was free to look after the work in Vancouver. For years we have had a union meeting each month in Vancouver and New Westminster, alternately, which has been a means of much strength to the Saints. For many years the meetings were held in the homes of the Saints, but now we have halls in both places, and have four elders, one priest, and one deacon, all doing what they can to advance the work.

The writer recently baptized two. The gifts of the Spirit are manifest in our meetings.

Prejudice is very strong against the church here. We have distributed a good many "Church in Court" tracts. We have a good advertising agent here in the person of W. C. Reed, priest of our branch, who never loses an opportunity to explain the gospel. Brother Reed works in the retail store of Brother H. Butterfield and comes in contact with a good many people. He and Elder Robbins also go from house to house with literature on Sundays.

During the past year we have had short visits from Apostle Peter Anderson, Elders William Johnson, Swen Swensen and John Hartnell. Their visits were an uplift to the Saints. At time of writing we learn that Elder R. D. Davis has arrived at Vancouver.

LANCASTER, WISCONSIN, January 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: Oh, how I enjoy reading the good letters that come in the HERALD. My heart is made to rejoice and praise God. When I read the letter of Effie J. Denton, I remembered what I thought last week when the neighbors were speaking harsh and unkind things of one another. I thought, "I'll stay at home, and then I'll be sure I can't speak unkind of anyone," and then there came a thought over my mind, "I'd like to be a hermit, away off in some lone and deserted spot." And then came another thought, "No, that wouldn't be right, for Jesus wants no deserting soldiers in his army. He didn't desert his master's colors, but bore them bravely until death, and then he gave his life for us, a ransom for sinners."

May God help us to be awake to our duties and help us to bear another's burdens. Oh, that I may be all the Lord would have me be. We are looking for some of our good brothers soon.

Yours in the one faith,

ISABELL ROUNDS.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA,

January 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: Seven years a member of the church and never a letter of appreciation in all that time! I think I'll start 1917 right by writing. Saints, I love to read your letters that are published in the church papers; they do me good. Missionaries and elders, it gives me strength and increases my faith and spurs me on to greater activity to read of your experiences while out telling of our work and its mission. To those in authority, accept my thanks for sending such men as J. W. Rushton, James E. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, Paul M. Hanson, James E. Yates, T. W. Williams and many others whose preaching and kindly consideration and humility have encouraged me to keep to the straight and narrow way and to help me keep a firm grip onto that "rod of iron" as Brother Sheehy expresses it.

I cannot forget my new birth that took place in the city of Toronto, Canada, after my attention was called to my duty by the beautiful presentation of the angel's message by Brother Evans in the Majestic Theater. It used to be Saturday night melodrama of the blood and thunder type, then Sunday night in the same place. The latter-day glory—what a contrast. And I soon saw it, and then it was only Sunday night and the seeking after truth. Keep it up, Brother Evans.

Way down here in southern California, where the mighty snow-clad Sierras and San Bernardino mountains whisper to me of God's greatness, lives one who is trying to reward you and all those who are giving their time and talent to open people's eyes to the possibility of the more abundant life by obedience to the gospel by living a true Latter-Day Saint life and doing his part to keep the work moving down here. Brothers, does it not strengthen you and cheer you along life's rugged path to know that your work is not in vain? Does it not spur you on? Does it not lighten your load? I seem to think it does. It's the only pay you get, but to me it seems that the tokens of appreciation that can be given by those that have been made happy to those that have done their part to make them so is about as priceless a gift as one can give. Saints, the best show of appreciation that you can give to those who have invested their all in this work and who are sacrificing in a hundred and one ways, is to show them that you are busy doing something for the work's sake—that you are full of enthusiasm and love for the work. Show them by your efforts and your work that their labor has not been in vain, and they will be able to do a mighty lot more work than is now being done.

But now, Saints, remember that you don't expect young married couples to exist on love only, so neither can missionaries exist only on your words of appreciation. Don't forget the missionary when he comes to your branch. Be the first one to invite him home, and if some one gets ahead of you, thank God that they did. In my own limited experience since being in the church I have been forced to think of that portion of history which says that the Son of Man had not where to lay his head, and I can safely say that missionaries can tell about the same story. And don't forget his wife and babies if they are in your midst or near by. Remember they like nice things to eat and wear the same as we do and they deserve to have them.

Let me tell you of a little incident that came to my notice. Encamped at our last reunion was a missionary's family and one little tot was having lunch in one of the brothers' tents and tomatoes were put upon the table. The San Bernardino children liberally covered their portion of tomatoes with sugar and the other little tots made the exclamation that mother would not let them put sugar on theirs because sugar was high and she couldn't afford to buy it. Just fancy, here is a brother giving up his time and giving his talent to educate us and his dear little children had to be conscious of the fact that they could not have the things the ordinary church members enjoyed. Let us help to make their sacrifices less. Don't let them be forgotten.

Seven years in the church! I wonder if I have benefited by being a member. Has the church benefited by having my name enrolled on the records? You ask yourself this question and meditate over it. If you are a worker and a doer of the word there is a surplus to the credit of both. If you are just a member only, you had better get busy. Sifting time's coming, maybe it's here. Better watch your step. Remember, we are marching to Zion. It's a long way and will take a long time. Don't get the idea that you are just going to flop in. You are going to march in and marching takes some effort and practice. Better get busy if you are not in line or in step. And you are not in line if you are not busy doing something. How I appreciate the sermons of Brother Rushton and T. W. Williams! How they have opened my eyes to the fact that I must be a worker. Saints, the fact remains that by believing the work is true and obeying the letter of the law is not the ticket of admission to the city of refuge. That entitles us to the possibility of getting there, but we have got to work for that "ticket" to get in. Let's all be workers. Let's all be 1917 boosters.

Now, being assistant superintendent of Sunday school and president of the Religio here, I feel the need of bright ideas to make those departments alive and interesting, and if anyone is the proprietor of such ideas that will help me in my work, I would be glad to hear of them. And if any branch treasurer has any good method which enables him to keep the branch treasury in good shape, I can assure him he would help to make my work lighter by letting me know of it. I sure believe in cooperation, whether we live in Maine or California.

FRED HOGGEN.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND, January 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: The work of the Elk Mills Branch is still progressing. The laborers feel encouraged and we feel like going on and on until we can feel we have earned the blessed words, "well done." Our missionary and wife, Brother and Sister Norris, are doing good work and we feel the Lord's work here shall increase. While there is some prejudice here, yet we know there are some honest ones who will see the light and accept the truth. It requires the Saints to live a careful and prayerful life that we may not be a stumblingblock to any, but that we may be helpers in the Lord's work.

On Sunday evening, December 31, the choir of about twenty-two voices under the leadership of Brother G. Morris, rendered the cantata "The Great Light" to a large audience. We feel our people here are making progress in choir work.

On January 1 and 4 we were indeed blessed in having to lecture for us Brother A. Dwyer, on Palestine. Surely we can say the Lord was with us. We have been blessed many times in having with us such grand and noble men. Thus the great and glorious work moves on and on.

We love the HERALD and the letters from so many who are striving to serve our heavenly Father. May the Lord bless us in this new year that we may keep our lamps bright and clear that others may see our good works and many be gathered in.

In bonds,

E. M. CARTER.

tion. 3. Reorganization of Europe on a stable plan to insure against further disturbances such as the present war. 4. Restitution of all provinces and territories wrested from the allies and liberation of Italians, Slavs, Rumanians and Tchecho Slovaques from foreign domination. 5. Enfranchisement of population "subject to the tyranny of the Turk." 6. Expulsion from Europe of the Ottoman Empire.

Phoenix Papers Report Yates' Sermons

We are pleased to note the liberal space—four to five hundred words each week—given to the sermons of Brother James E. Yates in his home city, Phoenix, Arizona. Extracts are given, and since the brother has an epigrammatic style, it makes a most efficacious method of getting our beliefs before the public.

Disaster on Land and Sea

An Italian vessel was recently submarined off the Albanian coast with a loss of 600 lives. An explosion in a munitions factor at Haskell, New Jersey, destroyed $16,000,000 worth of property. The Milwaukee, a $4,000,000 United States cruiser, went aground on the northern California coast on the 13th, and it is thought it cannot be floated. So far, it seems no lives were lost. The Japanese cruiser, Tsukuba was destroyed by an internal explosion in the harbor of Yokosuka, on the 14th, with a loss of 100 dead or hurt. These in addition to the usual toll of the war in Europe.

Babies May Enter With Dogs

The Master likened a little child to the kingdom of heaven and indicated his pleasure in their association.

In common with the very prevalent custom, the managers of a certain apartment house in the East excluded children but not dogs and other pets. The latter might enter the front door, but should it be necessary for employees' children to enter, they must use the back entrance where the laundry and garbage were carried in and out.

In an injunction suit, the father of a four-months-old child won out, the court deciding that babies were people, and consequently should have the same privileges as the dogs.

Street Shrines in London

One of the results of the war has been the establishment of street shrines here and there throughout the great city. In these tiny shelters, decorated with a crucifix and bunting, with flowers in vases and pots, the passer-by stops a moment and offers a prayer for the success of the British arms.

In each is a "Roll of Honor," which contains the names of the soldiers and sailors who have entered the service from that particular street, with a special mark for the fallen or wounded and those who have won distinction.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric

To Saints of Saskatchewan District; Greetings: Another year has passed into history, and with it the thoughts come, Have I done my duty? Have I done all I could toward the onward march of this great latter-day work? If we can conscientiously say we have, then surely the peace of God should rest over us, but on the other hand if we feel somewhat guilty, then we should with the incoming year resolve to try to make amends for past by doing better in the future.

The Saints of this district have done well the past year along the financial lines—that is, some of them. We have between four and five hundred Saints in the district. About one quarter of that number have paid tithing. What about the other three quarters? Have we all done our duty? We all know the old passage so well about robbing God in withholding our tithes and offerings, yet we pay very little heed to it.

We sometimes hear Saints say they do not see or hear of the gifts being made manifest as they were in the past. And why? One reason as given in Doctrine and Covenants 70 is that we are not doing our duty in temporal things, therefore there is inequality and the abundance of the manifestation of the Spirit is withheld.

The promise of God is sure, and he has said if we do our part he will open the windows of heaven. What does it mean? Surely not simply to bless us in temporal things. No, but revealing himself to us from heaven, the thing that brings more joy to the heart than all the wealth of earth.

Do we want to be blessed with the Spirit? Yes. Well, then, let us do our part.

We are trying to locate a solicitor in every branch in the district, and we want the Saints to recognize them as their servants for Christ's sake and remember that when we pay our tithes we are the ones who are benefited and not the one who hands out the receipt. Let us be workers together in building up this great latter-day work in this part of the Lord's great vineyard. I want to visit every branch of the district this year if possible, and I believe the way is opening up so that I can move out and do something in the interest of this work. To this end I hope to have the cooperation of all.

I have just sent my annual report to the presiding bishop and I want anyone who sees a mistake in any way to write to me. This report covers eight months, from May 1 to December 31. It will probably be some three or four months before it will appear in the HERALD. Will all presidents of branches take notice that we want a solicitor from each branch and let me know so that they can be furnished with receipt pads and form for reporting.

Church Secretary

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to secretaries of districts, stakes, and branches not in districts, addressed to secretaries when possible to obtain addresses. Such officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organizations at the General Conference of 1917 to the church secretary, as soon as practicable, that the report of the committee on credentials may be made up and printed before the opening of the conference, as required by conference action. Credentials of delegates appointed by conferences held in the fall or winter should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in stake, district, or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the body appointing, with name of such organization, place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are unnecessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; scattered and absent members may be included in the number; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division and the full delegation not present.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned. Credentials should be made upon the official blank, for proper filing and ready reference.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" will be found in chapter 17 of the Rules of Order, with the exception that such rules have been amended to provide that the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every one hundred members.

Districts should take notice that fractional numbers—less than one hundred—do not entitle them to another delegate.

Branches having a membership of less than one hundred, when not included in districts, are entitled to one delegate.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

COURT PROCEDURE.—The General Conference of 1908 adopted this manual of court procedure. It greatly simplifies the task of settling church difficulties according to law, and makes such procedure "safe." The blank forms for the guidance of all parties having to do with church courts. They seem to say: "Be legal, be regular." If anywhere the "safety first" motto is applicable to gospel work, it is in the settling of internal difficulties. No. 167, paper$0.15

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

NEW ASSOCIATE EDITOR

The executive members of the Board of Publication in conference with First Presidency have thought it advisable to place Brother S. A. Burgess as associate editor of the SAINTS' HERALD for the time being, Brother Elbert A. Smith's illness requiring him to drop the editorial pen for awhile. Brother Elbert will still remain as Editor of the HERALD, associated with Brother S. A. Burgess who comes to us direct from his pastorate at Boston, Massachusetts. Our readers may be assured that Brother Burgess will keep the HERALD up to its usual standard of efficiency. He comes to us well qualified intellectually, and what is of more importance, spiritually, for this important work.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

A. CARMICHAEL, Business Manager.

It is with regret that we are leaving the field at this time to take up temporarily the editorial work. But we are more than glad to be able to relieve the senior editor, Brother Elbert, for a little season of rest, with very strong hope that the course of a few months will find him fully recovered.

Our effort shall be to continue as closely as possible the policy laid down by him.

GETTING RESULTS

For we are laborers together with God.—1 Corinthians 3: 9. We then, as workers together with Christ, beseech you also.—2 Corinthians 6: 1.

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

The work of the church is so broad that it includes the work of all of us. It is not a question of more important work or less important work, as the work of each one is a necessity. In one sense the work of the church is the missionary work, proselyting for new members, strengthening through the pastoral work those already in the church.

In a sense the institutional work is incidental and for the purpose of assisting in the carrying out of this great purpose, the teaching and preaching of righteousness, and also its practice. In this preaching and teaching we would include not only the discussion of doctrine and theology, but also practical morality.

There comes then the work of seeing that each member does his duty, visiting the house of each member, instructing each one in person, seeing that there is no iniquity in the church, and more than that, seeing that there is also righteousness or right living. The negative is not sufficient.

But however earnestly a teacher may labor to see that each member is present, however earnestly a priest may visit, however able the presiding elder may be, however brilliant the speaker, however excellent may be the service of the choir, yet if the deacon fails in his work and the place of service is not properly prepared, the building suitably warmed, much of the effort of these other men will go for naught.

We know of one man who was acting as janitor of one of our churches. A very cold spell came on. We are quite satisfied that he would have been willing, if he had been an elder, to have gone out to administer to the sick, despite the cold, but here was a crying need that he go and lay hands on the furnace, which he failed to do. The result was the water froze in the furnace and in the pipes. The furnace burst with a few large holes in addition to numerous cracks. Much of the pipe was also destroyed. The church had to use open stoves for the rest of the winter and be under heavy expense, all because he failed to do that very important work of laying hands on the furnace in time.

Again, we have heard men complain: "I was the man who interested these people and then Elder So-and-So came in here and baptized them. It isn't right, I am the man who should have the credit." Now we know of instances, where a minister in charge of a field or part of a field hearing of a good opening has rushed in and done all the baptizing after the other man had worked there for a month or more and had created a good interest.

Was it wrong? Who can say so? We are vitally concerned with the salvation of souls, the accomplishment of the work by the church. Some men can arouse interest and can explain, but cannot close the contract. The Lord knows what work each man has done. The missionary in charge will often have a much better idea than we may realize. At least he should be able to go back of the formal reports and appreciate the work done by each man. But the vital thing is, Has the work been done? It is of trivial importance who seems to get the credit.

Some men who are splendid hands at baptizing, are unable then to carry the convert further, but drop him as a newborn babe just inside the door of the church. There are men who baptize very few in a year, yet work hard and perform equally important service for the church in the pastoral work and in the branches, feeding the Saints. It would seem to be of possible significance, the statement of Saint Paul that God has set some in the church "for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." (Ephesians 4: 12.) The perfecting of the Saints, the edifying of the body of Christ, is one of the great tasks before the church to-day.

But the church is also concerned with temporal salvation, with the establishment of Zion, with securing justice here as well as hereafter, with the care of the children of the church, with the care of the aged, with the preparation of our young people for better service, for the preparation also of the written word, to supplement the work of the missionary and of the pastor, to the end that Zion may be redeemed and the pure in heart manifested.

And for these works to be carried on, it requires also the assistance of the man of business and of labor. It requires his energy, it requires his means, it requires the devotion and consecration of himself.

We are workers together with God. Our work may be and often is quite different, our talents are different, but the work is of God. Even this tautology may have its significance in that we must not only work with God, but we must also work together one with another as well as with God. Until we can do so, until we can be one, Zion will never be imposed upon us. It cannot be imposed from without.

Let every man then regard his brother's labor, and let us consider how best we may work together to accomplish the work intrusted to all, so that we as a church may produce the largest possible results in service, in righteousness and in quantity.

TWO VETERANS GONE TO REST

On December 11 last, Elder Asa Cochran, who was a member of the High Council for twenty-six years until honorably released at the last conference, who was president of the Lamoni Branch for some years and bookkeeper and cashier in the Herald Office for many years, died at his home in Lamoni. Elder Cochran was also a missionary for several years and a faithful member for nearly fifty years.

On the morning of January 9, 1917, Bishop James Anderson died. Bishop Anderson held the distinction of being the first local bishop appointed in the Reorganized Church, as he was set apart and ordained at the conference of October, 1864, as bishop of the Saint Louis District. The Saint Louis District at that time included all of Missouri and half of Illinois. He continued in that office until 1875, at which time he removed to Decatur County and since that date he has labored in various parts of Decatur County and Kansas City, Kansas, at which place he was president of a branch for a number of years. Bishop Anderson was born in Scotland in 1834. In 1855 he removed with his parents to Utah, but the evils there cut short his stay. So he returned to Saint Louis, where he joined the Reorganized Church and became in February, 1864, a member of the branch just organized at that place. Many members were accepted as members of the Reorganized Church upon their original baptism, thus showing the continuity of the church from 1830 to the present day. Some objection having been raised in regard to the rebaptism of Bishop Anderson, he was accepted as a member of the Reorganized Church on his original baptism by action of General Conference. One by one the stalwarts of the past are being removed from earthly service.

DEBATE AT BLOOMSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA

An attack by Reverend C. B. Huffer of the Christian Church at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, led to a debate held the first week of the new year between Elder A. B. Phillips and Doctor J. J. Taylor of Lexington, Kentucky. We had the privilege of a long talk with Elder Phillips before the debate, and know that he went into it with the idea of manifesting truth rather than seeking victory. He stated that he enjoyed a point made by his opponent in a debate almost as much as a point scored by himself. But he was very anxious that the truth be manifested, not only as a whole, but in every detail as far as is humanly possible. We learn from him and from the Democratic Sentinel that Doctor Taylor conducted himself with the utmost courtesy, and that good will prevailed between the debaters. This is as it should be, and should lead to the best results when two men canvass an issue with a desire not for an unearned victory but that between them the truth of the matter may be made plain to each other and to the audience.

Elder J. A. Koehler acted as one of the moderators. His account of the debate appears in this issue.

THE SILENT TREATMENT

Staid old Boston sought the aid of the hurricane revivalist, William Sunday, in combating the liquor forces in that city.

Records were broken in the numbers who "hit the sawdust trail" but the battle brigade marched on. They had only a small majority to begin with, but they knew they must retain that or go out of business. So besides sending out over a million pieces of literature and canvassing every voter in the city, they sent word to every liquor dealer in the city to stay away from Sunday's meetings. That wasn't all; his wife must not go, neither his employee nor his wife. Then the bartenders were to see to it that Sunday's name was not mentioned in the saloons.

The wets won, by an increased majority.

How many of us would not rather meet open opposition a dozen times than the "silent treatment" once? Yet we've all had acquaintance with it. The only solution seems to be for us to be sufficiently studious and receptively alert to the inspirational suggestions that we may intelligently meet the icy-cold blasts of this method. The fiery darts of God's Spirit will sometime relieve the tensivity of the silence; but in the meantime he will use human instruments so far as they will be used. The "silent treatment" is a powerful weapon, but God and his methods are supreme and will finally prevail.

A CATHOLIC MOVE TOWARD CHURCH UNITY

The head of the Roman Catholic Church, Pope Benedict XV, has decided to appoint a commission of four cardinals, who will devote their time and energies toward the uniting of the hundreds of Christian sects in the world.

The yearnings of the various factions among the sects will be carefully considered, as well as the desire expressed by some of the popular churches for a coordination of interests.

This inquiry will even go further, and investigate the continuity of the ordinations in the Anglican churches as they were received originally from the church of Rome.

One of the basic incentives for this new move seems to be that it is considered that the great world war now in progress is really caused by indifferences in nationality and religion. It is proposed by this method to largely obliterate these differences by instituting a league of nations.

We who stand at a distance and observe will not be surprised if the mother church effects a workable agreement between her offspring and herself. There are certainly many fundamentals upon which they should agree, and blood is thicker than water.

Courageous leaders among the Protestants are shouting from the housetops that the church has failed, meaning, of course, the church as they are acquainted with it. Having the word failure so insistently hurled at them, members of the Protestant churches may naturally decide that the protest and consequent Reformation has been in vain and find after all that the organizations that grew out of that movement are too faulty to succeed. The empty husks of human creeds fail to supply the spiritual food demanded by thousands of honest-hearted believers in God, and in their desperation they may possibly grasp at this straw which the pope is offering.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Healing by Prayer Exempt

The California supreme court recently upheld the constitutionality of the State law which rigidly requires licenses for all practitioners and eliminates drugless healers who are not registered physicians. The court specifically exempted believers in Christian Science and evidently included others in "those who heal by faith or prayer as a part of their religion."

German Raider on Rampage

Allied shipping on the Atlantic is demoralized, and practically no ships are leaving port on account of the damage done by a German war vessel off the northeastern coast of South America. The damage has been estimated as high as $20,000,000. The British admit the loss of twenty-three vessels—ten sunk and thirteen captured.

The President Urged to Act on Prohibition

The Anti-Saloon League of New York is urging President Wilson to handle the prohibition question as he did the eight-hour situation, by demanding of Congress immediate action which could secure national prohibition by taxation. They suggest a federal commission to study the effects of such procedure and report on its results.

Munition Explosion Severe

During the week an explosion in a munitions laboratory at Spandau, Prussia, killed ten and injured twenty. On the 19th London was shaken by a severe explosion and this was followed by disastrous fires. The number of dead is not known but an official report says thirty or forty bodies have been removed from the ruins and about a hundred persons seriously injured.

A Deluge of Satan's Missives

The New Republic, a Prohibition weekly, reports that 2,000,000 circular letters were sent out of Minneapolis and Saint Paul by wholesale liquor dealers soliciting Christmas trade. On one day 150,000 such letters went into the prohibition districts of the Northwest.

We may be sure that this proceeding is duplicated in many large cities. No more eloquent argument could be produced in favor of the pending legislation to prevent this method of advertising.

From a Follow-Up Standpoint

A very dignified gentleman, one Mr. Paul, was on his homeward way one night when he stopped by a man who had plainly dined not wisely, but too well.

"Whash your name?" said the inebriated one.

"My name is Paul, sir," replied the gentleman.

The other balanced unsteadily a moment and then questioned thoughtfully:

"Paul? Well, say, Paul, 'jever get an ansher to that Epistle you sent to the Ephesians?"

Son of Sidney Pitt, Senior, Honored

We note with pleasure the choosing on the first ballot by the Iowa Legislature, now in session, of Brother M. P. Pitt as Speaker of the House. It is said that this is the first time in the history of the State any speaker has been chosen on the first ballot, and the recent contest was a strenuous one. On the 11th his father, Elder Sidney Pitt, sr., well known to the church and residing at Logan, Iowa, offered the opening prayer at the morning session, at the invitation of his son.

Why Use the Word "Xmas"

The senseless abbreviating of the word Christ by the letter X is resented by many thoughtful people. Only recently we noticed an announcement from a business men's organization that they would not tolerate the word Xmas for Christmas, it appearing to them as sacrilegious.

We have among our manuscripts, one on the significance of the Bible by a Jew, and throughout he used the word Xtian for Christian. Why not the one as well as the other? If either of these are proper, why not X for Christ, uniformly.

It is a little thing, perhaps, but worth consideration. The utmost dignity and respect should be given our Savior's name.

Lamoni News Brevities

At the close of the Sunday morning preaching service by Bishop A. Carmichael, Elder J. F. Garver, the branch president, who had been participating in the children's meeting in the lower room was sent for and presented with a valuable set of Bible study and religious research books—sixteen volumes. This was a present from the branch, paid for by popular subscription and in part expresses the respect had for him as pastor of the flock.

Elder J. W. Wight has recently closed a series of sermons, one each Sunday evening, on the Restoration. Elder Heman C. Smith began a similar series on Sunday evening, on the Book of Mormon.

The first of the monthly meetings for children at the morning preaching hour, in the lower room, was a decided success. The attendance was good and the interest excellent. The outlook is bright for the future meetings of this character.

From San Bernardino

As a result of several public addresses the last two years by Elder John W. Rushton on temperance and other topics of public interest, at the request of the mayor of San Bernardino, California, Elder George H. Wixom, an invitation was extended to Elder Rushton by the Business Men's Brotherhood of the Baptist church in that place to address them. Also Brother F. G. Pitt addressed this class on the subject, "The fulfillment of prophecy."

Arrangements were then made for a series of five lectures by Elder Rushton on "Christianity in economics and in its social aspect," which were delivered January 3d to 8th at the technical school. These lectures were under the auspices of the business men of the city. Music was furnished by the choirs of the Baptist, Christian, Catholic and our own church. Splendid interest was manifested throughout, and the expenses met by those who attended.

Elder Rushton also addressed the high school body of over 600 students on January 8. This was his third address to them.

Elder Rushton has also been invited to address the student body of the University of California at Berkeley, and has been privileged to meet the representative men at that institution in a social way. In a personal letter he reports a very interesting and much enjoyed conversation with Doctor William Frederick Bade, who is at present at Harvard University engaged in research work on the Old Testament, along the lines of his recent book, "The Old Testament in the light of to-day."

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

"IN THE BEGINNING GOD"—Part 1

BY H. A. STEBBINS

[It would seem that Elder Stebbins after his many years of faithful service should not need an introduction to any member of the church, as he was assistant editor of the HERALD for four years and a half, general church recorder for thirty-two years, church secretary for twenty-one years, secretary of the quorum of high priests for twenty-one years, for eleven years bookkeeper and secretary for Bishop Rogers, secretary and bookkeeper for five years of the first Order of Enoch, member of the Lamoni Stake council for six years, a member of the Board of Location for the church headquarters and Herald Publishing House, and president of the Decatur County District for eight years, as well as engaged in missionary work for many years and presiding over different branches. But some of his friends have reminded the editor that January 28 is his seventy-third birthday, so we have decided to celebrate by starting this series of four articles from his able pen, and including this brief reminder of his long and faithful service. This series should prove of unusual interest as a discussion of the doctrine of evolution.—EDITORS.]

"In the beginning God." These first four words in the King James Translation of the Holy Scriptures are of great worth. They are indeed of the largest value and importance as a statement of fact about the preexistence and eternity of the Almighty Being who has been known from Adam's time as the God of the patriarchs, prophets, and saints. It is a statement of fact, revealed and given of God to Moses, as I suppose is fully accepted by the great body of Bible believers. And it is fully believed by the people called Latter Day Saints, because to them the fact has been fully substantiated and made plain through a corrected translation of the Scriptures, given by inspiration.

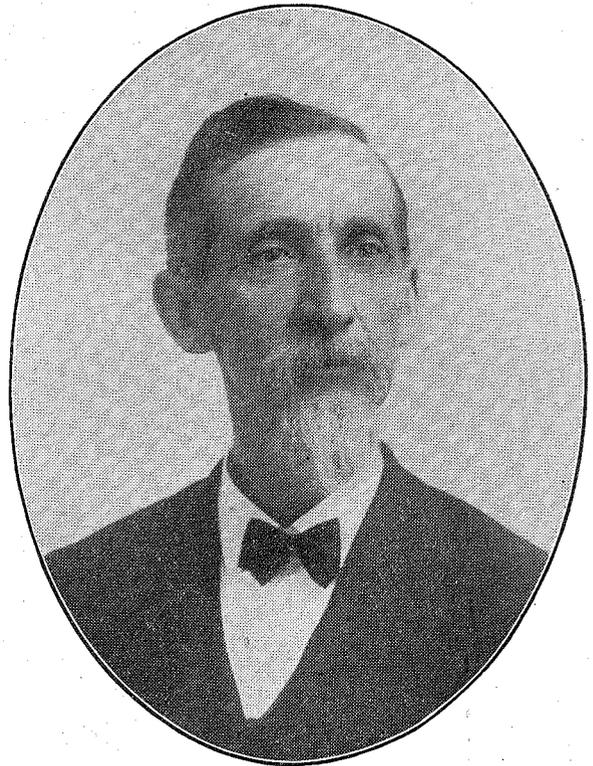

The four words form an assertion as to the existence of an allwise, allpowerful, and omnipresent person, who is thus announced at the beginning of the record as God, even in that mysterious period in eternity before the small globe that we call the earth was brought into form in its course of preparation for men to dwell upon it. The distance and depths back of that period called "the beginning" we do not know, though the common view now is that it must have been unfathomed millions of years ago when the process of the creation of the earth began. The statement in Genesis 1:1 has no reference to any other world (so far as we are aware) of the vast multitude of those seen night after night in the expanse of heaven, which expanse is so wonderfully spread before our vision. The Lord said to Moses, "Worlds without number have I created . . . but only an account of this earth give I unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 22:7.

This idea of God, the allwise and almighty One, is attested and confirmed by the Psalmist in one of his highest and noblest flights of inspiration, when he wrote these words, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork; day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."

"ESSENTIAL UNITY OF AUTHORSHIP"

As to the historical statements from the beginning of Genesis we are informed in the Inspired

ELDER HENRY A. STEBBINS.

Version of the Scriptures, that God gave directly to Moses the account of the creation, as therein corrected and perfected, even to the giving of the exact language that he used when he instructed Moses in person about twenty-five hundred years after Adam and Eve were created. The account of the creation is therefore the first thing written by Moses in the five books which are ascribed to him as the author.

In replying to critics who regard the book of Genesis as being a mixed compilation made up from various documents, Professor J. P. Thompson says that though Moses may have had access to, and may have used existing materials, such as oral traditions and written documents which were had before his time, yet that such "a law of unity pervades the whole book, in its leading idea and its evident purpose," that this points "to an essential unity of authorship." He also says:

The great thought of the book is to exhibit God in connection with the religious and providential history of mankind; and the evident purpose of the early portion is to lay a foundation in history for that theocracy which was finally developed in Israel.—Man in Genesis and in Geology, p. 12.

A PERSONAL CREATOR

As already stated, the first chapter of Genesis is an assertion of the existence at "the beginning" of a personal Creator, a great First Cause, and what follows makes plain that he, by a succession of acts, wrought marvelous changes in the earth, and that he advanced his work of creation through six periods, the crowning work of which was the placing of man upon the earth to govern its affairs (as intended), and to have dominion over its lesser creatures. The Psalmist wrote that man was made "a little lower than the angels," and was given honor and glory by his creator (Psalm 8: 5), even at the beginning of the race, and so intended for all who were to receive bodies after the form and likeness of God, as stated in Genesis 1: 29 (Inspired Version). Even Christ, the Redeemer, is likewise said by Paul to have been made "a little lower than the angels," that he might work for a time on this lowly plane to save "his brethren" and to take them with him to the higher station which he is preparing for himself and for them, when the earth shall be redeemed and glorified.

Although some scientists deny the existence of a personal God, a living Creator, who by successive acts brought order out of chaos in forming the earth, and then placed the various orders of life thereon, yet it is impossible for unprejudiced minds to see how anyone can reject the evidences that some Master Mind must have planned and must have wrought, under prevailing law, the great works that were accomplished. Otherwise there certainly is "no method in their madness." Their claims are directly contrary to their own realization of common sense, reason, and logic.

CREATION BY EVOLUTION

For instance, I well remember a lecture given in Chicago in 1875 by Mr. B. F. Underwood, who at that time was spoken of as the "Boston iconoclast" (idol smasher). I lived at Plano then, and was president over that district. The lecture was under atheistic auspices and was published in the Chicago Times. Mr. Underwood claimed that all forms of life on earth had come by and through evolution from a very low order at the beginning, and all this without any controlling mind or intelligence. In fact he said plainly that "matter was eternal, force was eternal, and law was eternal," but that there was no Creator, no God from whom came life or force, or law.

He thus ignored the very first demands of reason and common sense, which upon any other topic he and his colleagues would tenaciously stand for, and would hold in contempt any speaker or writer who ignored such plain demands of reason and logic. For life has never been known to spring from, anything but life. No matter how small, or seemingly unimportant the form of life, it must have had an ancestor, something which had life in itself. Men may make of wax or of other substance such exact imitations of the genuine seed, or of birds and animals, that the eye cannot tell the difference, especially as to seeds of plant life, yet no skill or learning has ever been able to make one imitation grow or propagate. There has been at times much talk and discussion in the hope that science will yet learn how to create life by chemical action but all have failed, and all will continue to fail. God, the living and all-powerful Creator, was the originator of life. And evidently the first life of the low order of beings, long before man was created, had a life-giver. Even the original microbe or protoplasm did not come into being without a father.

A LAWGIVER ESSENTIAL

The more striking if not the more remarkable claim by Mr. Underwood was not only that matter, and force, and law are all eternal and self-existent, but that no lawgiver was needed to create the law by which force was set in motion and matter was moved upon; that there was no eternal mind, no controlling will that brought into being any of creation. This was a most absurd and unreasonable claim to be made by an intelligent man. For from childhood to old age every experience of human life has proven and made plain, to Mr. Underwood and to all other people, that all law that has provided for and governed, that has created and set anything in motion, has always originated in the minds of intelligent beings, those having a high order of mental power and of ability to see the necessity for the law, and to provide one; also they had the authority to put it into effect. Shakespeare wrote of the human mind, "There reason sits enthroned, sole monarch of the universal earth." And this is not only true as to the limited fields of man's work but also in the great plan, and the purpose, and the progress of the universe. It is true of God, whose mind, wisdom, and power are unlimited, but who accomplishes through law and order all that he does. As Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Their work continues, and is not yet finished.

Before his great audience of so-called philosophical people, and skeptics, atheists, and freethinkers, Mr. Underwood made many other equally unreasonable claims, and his audience cheered him. But I need not rehearse his assertions. However, I made a reply through the columns of the Times that same week. Though Mr. Wilbur F. Storey, the editor, was a freethinker, and was counted as among the ungodly, yet he had a very liberal mind and was always willing to publish all sides of a question. Therefore my article was given in full, in its defense of the proposition that the Bible account of the creation is the truth, that all law and all life came from the great Creator and Lawmaker; that he brought into being all things and made and set the laws in motion by and through which the glorious harmony exists that we see around us; both on earth and in the heavens, so far as the eye of man can see, or the most powerful telescope can reveal.

From whence came the one whom we call God we do not know, or whether the law by which he wrought was coexistent with him we are also uninformed; and we do not need to waste our energy of mind or body in trying to find out, or in speculating upon the subject. It will be entirely in vain to do so. As well try to fathom the depths and the extent of the universe with the telescopes of men. All the stargazers have failed and have dropped back to their own standpoint filled with astonishment and wonder at the greatness they have seen; and yet there was no end to the field of vision, no boundary to be even guessed at.

AS SEEN BY A PROPHET

But of himself and his power and his eternity our Creator spoke by the prophets in olden times as follows:

Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and besides me there is no God.—Isaiah 44: 6.

I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God besides me. . . . I have made the earth, and created man upon it: I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded. . . . For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain; he formed it to be inhabited: I am the Lord, and there is none else. . . . Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.—Isaiah 45:5, 12, 18, 22.

All that men have to do is to believe in him and to abide by his commandments and it will be well with them, both in time and in eternity. There are sufficient proofs that those who have done so have entered into rest beyond, and have received great reward.

"NATURAL SELECTION"

After the coming of the evolution theory, beginning especially in 1859, when Charles Darwin published his Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, followed by volumes from Thomas H. Huxley in 1862, Herbert Spencer in 1864-67, and Alfred R. Wallace in 1889; there was quite a large effort by some to get away from God and to teach everywhere that by "natural selection" came all the species of life upon the earth, without any creative intelligence to plan, to direct, and to control their several existences. In order to deny God, and their accountability to him for their lives and their deeds, many thousands, perhaps millions, have accepted the Darwinian theory so far as they comprehend it, even as multitudes accepted and cheered R. G. Ingersoll for his witty speeches before great assemblies, and yet they knew not that while he had some truths as a basis, yet the most of his arguments and assertions were made to win applause and to captivate the people by his eloquent sophistry.

FAIL TO FIND "MISSING LINK"

One great argument for the ascent of man from the lower orders, as from the monkey tribes, has been that the physical construction of the body of man is so much like the higher specimens of the ape family. The only trouble was that the "missing link" had not been found by these scientists or by any others. Darwin spent five years in travels over the globe, beginning with South America, studying geology and all animal and plant life. Also in making similar scientific research, Huxley spent four years, and Wallace over twelve years abroad from England, all in tropical countries, with great zeal seeking for knowledge about all kinds of living creatures, of plants, insects, birds, and beasts, their origin, habits, and continuance of species. But no one has found the "missing link" that is claimed to have at some time connected the simian ancestors and the man.

AN IRRECONCILABLE DIFFERENCE

I have read that Mr. Huxley claimed that the brain of the chimpanzee is so nearly like the brain of man that it proves a remarkable relationship between the two. But it is strange that wise men do not see or admit that the form of the structure does not always decide as to the person, or the intelligence of the person, that dwells therein. Mr. Huxley knew and all others know that there is and always has been an irreconcilable difference between the tenant in the body of a chimpanzee and the tenant mind in the body of the thinking, active, creative, wonderful creature called man.

We may see two houses that are remarkably alike, very little difference in their form of construction, yet one may be dwelt in by a statesman, a sage, a farseeing, powerful man, and the other house may have as its occupant a burglar, or a murderer, or a witless being who has to be cared for continually. A stranger might say that both the dwellers in those fine houses must be noble and great, but he who knows says there is neither relationship nor similarity in the minds, powers and abilities of the two persons. Therefore whoso is faced by the argument of agreement in structure may well answer that this does not tell the story: the question is, Who lives in the house? If the spirit of man, as God created him in the glory of his (man's) intelligence, dwells in the house, or body, then all the works and powers of that sample of God's creation, after his own likeness, bear witness that he never was related to nor descended from a chimpanzee, or from any other branch or variation of the monkey race. And no matter what tabernacle the spirit of the beast dwells in he can never write letters, publish books, edit newspapers, run railways, construct machinery, invent telegraphs and telephones, erect palaces and temples, or sit as a lawmaker, judge, and ruler over states and nations. He can never occupy as man does, nor grow into the place for which God created man alone to fill, even to be the head over the affairs of earth and to have dominion over the works of God upon the earth. No similarity of bones or of the framing of the body is any prophecy or guide for us to believe that an ape, a monkey or a chimpanzee can possibly attain to the lofty estate unto which man was born and unto which he will yet rise when he casts off his disobedience, his darkness and his fallen condition. But the beast will ever remain a beast, though he will become docile and live in harmony with mankind as declared by the prophets. And probably the beasts will become more intelligent and perhaps more useful to man.

The atheist believer in the evolution of the human race from the lowest forms of prehistoric life claims the grandest and most mighty physical and mental achievements in mortal man, as exceeding everything else. He says that man can plan and invent, also set in motion the most wonderful creations, and that there is no limit to the possibility of his accomplishment; that he can send his voice by the lightning's flame across seas and continents, can even speak around the earth and be heard, that he passes like a divine being (if there were any) whithersoever he will, over the oceans, or on the seas, or under the mighty waters. Yet this same wise man claims that this wonderful brain power and skill, this wisdom and might, all came by descent, or ascent, from an insensate protoplasm or a witless ape, instead of from a supremely intelligent, allwise and allpowerful Creator, who speaks of himself as seeing "the end from the beginning and from ancient times the things that are not yet done." (Isaiah 46: 10.)

A FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY

It makes one think of the Lord speaking to Job about what we now call the telephone where he asked Job as follows:

"Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we are?"—Job 38: 35.

In Job's day there was no such thing done, because the Lord's time had not been reached three thousand years ago to reveal the great secrets of earth and air, or how to speak by use of the lightning. But now God's day has come to send forth knowledge, because the great millennium is at hand, and he has begun to reveal the abundance of peace and truth. There is a box on the wall, and, if the lightning is doing its work we hear the bell ring when some one calls. Then we go and say, "Here I am; what do you wish?" The Lord spoke many words to Job that were plain to him, but which Job could not comprehend. In our time Job 38: 34, 35 is made plain. A continued loud noise, like that of cannon in battle, is believed by many to have produced rain at times, and since 1876 business is transacted and conversations had by lightning over the telephone, as a world-wide convenience and blessing.

THE COOPERATIVE PLANK OF THE GOSPEL PLATFORM

It seems necessary in order to get a clearer view of the cooperative methods of the early church, and the wonderful advancement of the first three centuries, to read anew the history of Rome. Not, however, as written by popular historians whose contempt for the working classes kept them from mentioning the underworld only when absolutely necessary. But the fragmentary history of the workers, that escaped the wicked hands of vandalism, connected with burial inscriptions, and the epithets, slight remarks, or slurs of popular historians.

Read such history for instance as collected by C. Osborn Ward, translator and librarian, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia, who has drawn from two hundred authors. I suggest also that students of Christian sociology forget for a time their respect for the "civilization" of that pagan empire, and substitute the prophetic titles of "great red dragon" and blasphemous "beast" for Rome.

We cannot in the space allowed go into details, but will give the briefest possible history of the relationship sustained between the church and paganism.

The working people of Rome were not Roman citizens. No one who stooped so low as to soil his hands, or occupy his time with work could be a citizen of the empire. It was the business of Rome to place the world under heavy tribute; and either to crucify or enslave all who took up arms against Roman invasion. No citizen was expected to live by the sweat of his brow.

No worker could have voice, or vote, or in any way be represented in the senate, and at times were not numbered in census reports.

The workers in practically every country subjected by Rome were by force of circumstances organized into various industrial unions as early as 700 B. C. These labor unions were practically undisturbed for about six hundred years. They were confronted by cheap slave labor, for it is claimed that at times as many as two thirds of Rome's population were abject slaves.

Conspiracy laws to suppress these unions were secured during the reign of Cæsar. From this time these unions were conducted in secret under the cloak of charitable, religious, and burial organizations which were allowed to exist.

It would seem from all the facts to be obtained that the church in a large degree brought about a federation of these industrial organizations. "The common people heard him gladly." The three thousand added to the church on Pentecost, and the "five thousand men" (and we know not how many women and children) converted by one of Peter's sermons were from the hordes of common working people. "The four thousand men besides women and children" who were fed by the sea after three days fast, and the "five thousand men besides women and children," healed and fed in the desert were common, industrious people, traveling on foot, sheep without a shepherd. In fact the nation of Israel was very largely composed of working people.

Of some of these unions in Rome we read: "The poor fellows, having no religion of their own, denied that honor by the privileged classes who lived upon their labor, . . . were in the habit of borrowing. . . some tutelary deity in whose name to worship. . . when Christianity came, with its new and absolutely democratic religion, and its mutual cooperation more nearly fitted to their case they embraced it in great numbers."

Their borrowed, homemade deities were gladly exchanged for the resurrected Savior whose gospel instead of merely promising relief after death actually furnished it in this life.

Be this as it may. The church soon became a great cooperative industrial organization, holding all things in common. All things being done by common consent.

We have no known history giving a clear account of the industrial workings of the church, or of any other industrial body or class under the political control of paganism. First, because the haughty historians in those days considered industry too despicable to be noticed. Second, because the Vandals of the fifth century destroyed all such history within their reach.

This much, however, is clearly set forth by the church books. The resurrected Savior, his gospel of democracy, cooperation, and equality were the salient points of the early church.

Competition (the foundation stone of paganism) was reduced to its minimum in the church. Slave labor under the dragon system could not have enough enterprise to compete seriously with the church in the arts and sciences of production. Slaves were largely used to indulge and pamper their high-toned owners, and to amuse the public as gladiators in the theaters, where they butchered each other in great numbers.

The church had little to do with the empire, other than to sell her products. She patronized paganism as little as possible. She practically boycotted pagan courts and theaters. Holding but little if any personal property outside of their homes (Barnabas 14: 16; Acts 4: 34) the members could not be heavily taxed. Producing all the necessities of life, they were in large degree independent of the empire.

God with his army of workers on one side, Satan and his army of persecuting parasites on the other, these words of Jesus were being literally fulfilled: "There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers and children, and lands, with persecution; and in the world to come eternal life," or "who shall not receive manifold more in this present time," etc. For it is written "neither was there any among them that lacked."

Such, dear readers, were the results of gospel cooperation along industrial lines, results that competition never has and never can produce.

Rome's arrogant citizens, too haughty to engage in any kind of industry, producing practically nothing, were the world's greatest parasites. They would have starved to death on the paltry pole tax of their population. It was simply "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," which had to be multiplied and handed back to the church again for her products.

Things were made by hand in those days. There were no million-dollar plants run by steam or electricity. The individual tools were few, simple, and not expensive.

Probably the church tannery "by the seaside" operated by "one Simon a tanner" more nearly resembled a modern plant than any other.

Paganism was entirely dependent upon industrial classes, and as the church rapidly absorbed and consolidated these classes, easily arranging her affairs from time to time to minimize friction with the dragon, soon became mistress of the situation.

Thus was the bull ring put into the nose of the great red dragon, who was cinched down to the snubbing post in no uncertain way. Pagan Rome got down on his knees to the church. The emperor embraced Christianity, and by force of arms compelled all paganism to do likewise.

In this great amalgamation of the gospel with paganism, the church absorbed more of paganism than paganism did of the gospel. Therefore the priesthood "was caught up unto God, and to his throne," and the whole matter given over into the power of the second beast (papal Rome) and the Dark Ages ensued.

From the dawn of time there have been two ideas in the minds of men: One has been democratic cooperation and equality, resulting in "good will among men." The other has been competition, resulting in strife, tyranny, brute force, war.

Competition was the foundation stone of paganism, while the gospel was firmly rooted and grounded in cooperation.

All there is to be found in modern Christianity that in any way savors of competition has been borrowed from the "abomination of desolation," known in history as paganism. Is it any wonder that the Son of God declared in the restoration that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight?

We have history of other periods when cooperative government has successfully held this robber incentive in check. First the Zion of Enoch's day "and all the days of Zion in the days of Enoch were three hundred and sixty and five years." "And there was no poor among them."

In America about 100 B. C. speculation was barred from the means of life by an inflexible price having been legally fixed on the same.

The clearest account we have of the success of gospel cooperation is found in the Book of Nephi, the son of Nephi. It is a history of two hundred years in a nutshell; when two great nations became one under the power of the gospel as established by Jesus in person—a mighty industrial commonwealth where righteousness reigned supreme. Here was Zion in the broadest, fullest sense, not confined to one city as in Enoch's day but covering two populous continents. A few extracts read like this:

The people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land . . . and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them, therefore they were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift . . . they did heal the sick, and raise the dead, and cause the lame to walk, and the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear . . . in the name of Jesus. . . . And the Lord did prosper them exceedingly, in the land. . . . The people of Nephi did wax strong, and did multiply exceeding fast, and became an exceeding fair and delightful people. . . . And there were no envyings, nor strifes, nor tumults. . . . And surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created. . . . They were blessed and prospered.

We may here catch a glimpse of the work to be done when we talk about the redemption of Zion: An industrial commonwealth to be established reaching from sea to sea and from the Arctic to the Antarctic without one parasite. Are we equal to the task?

Is it not time we ceased our opposition to any movement that is pulling in that direction?

Cooperative industry is as much a part of the gospel as faith, repentance, or baptism. If faith and repentance could exist separately from cooperative industry, without a doubt God would give first prize to industry. But faith without cooperative industry is as much a corpse as faith without charity.

"Wilt thou know oh vain man that faith without works is dead?" And will some one tell us how to repent without renouncing our allegiance to paganism?

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness [of cooperative equality] and all these [good things of both heaven and earth] shall be added unto you."

Coming down to our own day, and viewing the revelations that accompanied and brought forth the restoration, if we discover that more time has been used, more space occupied, and more pains taken to instruct the church how to establish industrial equality than given to any other one lesson, will it change our course a degree or two? Will it awaken us from our unnatural sleep?

The gospel provides for all of a man's needs. Not until we master the faculty of successfully using wind for food, and raiment, and warmth and shelter, will spiritual theoretical Zion suffice. Zion as "the pure in heart," or Zion as a locality never has and never can exist without industrial cooperation.

If the Order of Enoch is properly represented by our late Bishop George H. Hilliard in his article in the bishops' magazine number of HERALD for October 25, 1911, page 1011, then what stands in the way of Zion actually existing in our day?

Gospel cooperation has never been known to fail. It succeeded for three hundred and sixty-five years in the days of Enoch, and quit this wicked earth only when God triumphantly translated the city.

It succeeded for a long time beneath the heaviest pressure this earth has ever known, under the great red dragon, and failed only when paganism was allowed to soak in.

It succeeded for two hundred years from the coming of Christ beneath the full-spread wings of the great American eagle, from the Arctic Ocean to Cape Horn, a third of the circumference of the globe, and failed only when men wanted to experiment with Satan's scheme of competition.

For over eighty years God has urged his people to repent of heathen doctrines and adopt the co-operative plank of his gospel platform. He assures us that its adoption will make the church "independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world." And that the only force on earth or under the earth powerful enough to prevent its grand success is the unbelief and retarded action of his people.

Yes, the world needs something, and that "something" is before them now, but they have gone so far "astray from the cross," and have become so blinded by the "confused utterances" of the many conflicting creeds and doctrines of men that they cannot see it. Disregarding the admonition of God, "be ye not mockers" (Isaiah 28: 22), they sneer at the angel's message and make a man an "offender for a word [Mormon] and turn aside the just for a thing of naught" (Isaiah 28: 21), and have fallen a prey to the "sorceries" of Babylon. (Revelation 18: 23.) The hydra-headed "Christianity" of modern times is not the Christianity of Christ. It is Babylon "the great," the mother of abominations, the "whore of all the earth."

In Revelation 18: 3, 9, 23 we are informed that "Babylon" had "committed fornication with the kings of the earth," and deceived the nations by her "sorceries," for which cause her destruction was decreed. Now, on every hand, it is said the "church" has become worldly, militaristic, so that "one can, with difficulty, distinguish the preacher of the gospel from the apostle of the big stick." No better description of the present situation can be found anywhere than in the book of Revelation, chapter eighteen. Simply substitute the term, "The church," for "Babylon," the "great city," and the vision becomes a reality.

ANOTHER WITNESS TESTIFIES

Another witness, whose testimony has long been rejected, must now be heard. The culmination of events foretold has established the credibility of the witness and the court rules that his testimony must be admitted. Being duly sworn, the witness takes the stand.

Question by counsel. What is your full name?

Answer. Book of Mormon.

Q. Are you acquainted with the prisoner at the bar, Miss Church?

A. I am.

Q. How long have you known her?

A. Ever since she was born.

Q. What do you know relative to her parentage?

A. The Devil is her father. She was conceived in sin and born in iniquity.

Q. What do you know about her personal character?

A. She is guilty of fornication and murder, and known generally as the "whore of all the earth."

Q. Will you please relate to the court how you know these things to be true?

A. I will:

And it came to pass that he [an angel] said unto me, Look and behold that great and abominable church, which is the mother of abominations, whose founder is the Devil. And he said unto me, Behold, there are save two churches only: the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the Devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth. And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the whore of all the earth, and she sat upon many waters; and she had dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues and people. And it came to pass that I beheld the church of the Lamb of God, and its numbers were few, because of the wickedness and abominations of the whore who sat upon many waters.—1 Nephi, 3: 219-226.

Q. When did you first bear testimony to these things?

A. In 1830, A. D.

Q. What else do you know about this woman?

A. The same angel told me this:

And the blood of that great and abominable church, which is the whore of all the earth, shall turn upon their own heads; for they shall war among themselves, and the sword of their own hands shall fall upon their own heads, and they shall be drunken with their own blood. And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord. And all that fight against Zion, shall be destroyed. And that great whore, who hath perverted the right ways of the Lord; yea, that great and abominable church, shall tumble to the dust, and great shall be the fall of it.—1 Nephi 7: 26-31.

I have tried since my first appearance to get this testimony before the nations that they might escape the pending calamity, but this woman has continually prejudiced the people against me so that my word has been discredited. Now that disaster has overtaken the nations, and this woman, who is responsible for their distress, is at last brought to trial, I am being vindicated. But there is little hope for the misguided people who have trusted to the integrity of this archdeceiver.

Q. Have you any other information bearing on the conduct of this woman?

A. I have:

For it shall come to pass in that day, that the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, when the one shall say to the other, Behold, I, I am the Lord's; and the other shall say, I, I am the Lord's. And thus shall everyone say, that hath built up churches, and not unto the Lord; and they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another; and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance. And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people, Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold, there is no God to-day, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men. . . . Yea, and there shall be many which shall teach after this manner, false, and vain, and foolish doctrines, and shall be pulled up in their hearts, and shall seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord; and their work shall be in the dark; and the blood of the saints shall cry from the ground against them. Yea, they have all gone out of the way; they have become corrupted. Because of pride, and because of false teachers, and false doctrine, their churches have become corrupted; and their churches are lifted up; because of pride, they are puffed up. They rob the poor, because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor, because of their fine clothing; and they persecute the meek, and the poor in heart; because in their pride, they are puffed up. They wear stiff necks and high heads; yea, and because of pride, and wickedness, and abominations, and whoredoms, they have all gone astray, save it to be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men. O the wise, and the learned, and the rich, that are puffed up in the pride of their hearts, and all those who preach false doctrines, and all those who commit whoredoms, and pervert the right way of the Lord; woe, woe, woe be unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to Hell.—2 Nephi 12: 3-18.

Because they have rejected my testimony, and because of the conditions described above which now exist, it has occurred as I declared in the beginning:

And it came to pass that I beheld the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth. And as there began to be wars, wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spoke unto me, saying, Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots.

And further the deponent sayeth not at present.

In the name of consistency, how can men now reject the Book of Mormon testimony which, more than three quarters of a century ago, so minutely and unerringly set out the facts relative to the failure of the "church" as we see it manifest to-day?

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE WHAT WE BELIEVE

Of course, Reverend Aked, Doctor Lynch and associates are directing the whole force of their terrific drive at "militarism," which is made a convenient scapegoat for the sins of the church. There is no question but what militarism is responsible in large measure for the fall of Babylon, but the church had to desert her "fundamentals" before she could adopt a military policy. Once they found a reason for ignoring baptism as a saving ordinance, and the laying on of hands as a gospel principle, an excuse was at hand for buckling on the sword for defense. Then the old sectarian argument, as false and deceptive as it is charming and alluring: "It makes no difference what a man believes so long as he is sincere," was heralded far and wide to offset the declaration, "your creeds are all wrong," as announced by Mr. Smith. But that cherished crumb of comfort has, like many other sectarian inventions, been shot to pieces and is now denounced as a delusion. On this point Doctor Lynch in a stirring editorial, "Doctrine and deed," says:

If there is one thing that the outbreak of the present war taught the world it was that it made all the difference in the world what a man believed. Gone forever all that shallow talk to the effect that it mattered not what doctrines a man held, what creed he avowed, what theology he assented to, that action, life, deed, was all that counted and that the deeds were rarely logical consequences of any doctrine behind them. As a matter of fact the one thing this war has revealed, in its outbreak and in its long and awful course is that deeds, actions, in every case, when a great, great test came, were the immediate fruits of a widely held, thoroughly elaborated, tenaciously clung to, system of theology or philosophy or article of faith. The one thing written in outstanding letters against the whole background of the conflict is "as a man's faith, so his actions; as a man's doctrine, so his deeds." Consciously or unconsciously a man or a nation acts out a creed when the crisis comes. Deeds spring out of doctrine.—The Christian Work, July 29, 1916.

CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS A BARRIER TO UNITY

There is another feature of this "dark apostasy" that is partly to blame for the present crisis, having its origin long before the church adopted a military policy. Theology is not the only bone of contention. Early in the history of the church, and to this day "church organization" was and still is a barrier to unity and progress. For some time there has been considerable said and written about "church unity" in which the Church of England, Christians, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, and others have participated. Considerable progress was thought to have been made toward a final union of all the churches when Nolan R. Best, editor of The Continent (Presbyterian), threw a bomb and the vibrations of the explosion are still felt. In a trenchant editorial, "Jesus not tied to bishops," for April 6, 1916, he says:

The reason why the Episcopalian Church and the other churches cannot get together is simply because they don't agree on what a church is. This is a cleavage that laymen hardly ever see. Differences in doctrine that used to be the subject of vehement argument have almost dropped out of people's interest in these days, and with the disappearance of such disputes folks wonder what in the world it is that still holds the denominations apart. They do not realize that all the while there has existed, quite outside the realm of doctrine, a contradiction of views about church organization very much more difficult to reconcile than any dispute over theology. And that difference has not grown less.

The opinion of the churches episcopally organized is that a church cannot be a church of Jesus Christ unless it has bishops to govern it and ordain its ministers—that God is not satisfied with any administration of sacraments in his church unless the man administering them was ordained to his ministerial office by a bishop.

WHO REPRESENTS GOD?

This raises the question of authority, the thing that strikes at the very vitals of sectarianism. Do the bishops of the Episcopal Church hold transmitted authority from the apostles to ordain other ministers? Do the nonconformist churches have "grace" from God to ordain ministers and administer the sacraments? In the very nature of the case, one position or the other is wrong. Both cannot be right, and we think they are all wrong as announced by the angel to Joseph Smith. The Presbyterian says the Episcopalian is wrong and he in turn says the other is wrong. It was just this controversy of who is right and who is wrong that sent Joseph Smith to the forest to ask of God. His answer was sweeping in its effect, setting them all aside as unauthorized of God. The churches are no nearer a solution of the question to-day than when Joseph Smith asked it, and this revival of the controversy by Mr. Best only emphasizes the declaration of Doctor Horner of Louisville that "the world needs something."

As shown elsewhere in this article, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery claimed to have been ordained by an angel from God, giving specific date and circumstances, by which they were authorized to organize the Church of Jesus Christ, not with an "official ministry in three orders of bishops, elders, and deacons," but after the apostolic pattern as found in the New Testament. And, whatever may be said as to their inspiration, it simply has to be acknowledged that they followed the divine model more closely than others, before or since 1830.

DID JESUS ORGANIZE A CHURCH?

Mr. Best says again:

Back of all unwavering Episcopalian minds lies the belief that Jesus Christ, when on earth, deliberately organized a visible church with an unalterable form of official ministry—a ministry in three orders, bishops, elders, and deacons—and in substance, if not in terms, made it known that he would never sanction any association of men professing to be a church if they departed from the structure of this model society.

That Jesus organized a visible church with an unalterable form of official ministry is a fact, but that it consisted of three orders of bishops, elders, and deacons, is a fallacy. There is nothing plainer in all the New Testament than the fact that he set apostles in the church. Their names are given, with the circumstance of their call and ordination. (Matthew 10:1-5; Luke 6:12-16.) And it is emphatically declared that God "set" them there (1 Corinthians 12:28), while in Ephesians 4:11-14 it is clearly stated just why they were placed there and how long they were to continue. It was by ignoring the plain statements of scripture in this regard that churchmen have gotten themselves in the absurd predicament in which they find themselves at this time, and from which they seem absolutely powerless to extricate themselves. Again it is said, "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers." (Acts 13:1.) And Paul says God "set" them there. The word set has a variety of meanings, and among others it means to "fix," "render motionless," "established," "immovable," "firm," etc. The numerous conflicting opinions of modern churchmen as to what the church of Christ is demonstrates the fact over and over that "the world needs something," and that something is revelation from God. There will never be any unity of opinion and concert of action until it is received and men show a willingness to abide in the wisdom of God. "Back to Christ" is a cry we hear on every hand to-day, but they steadfastly block the way with their cherished opinions which has caused all the confusion and led to the present disaster. Will men never learn the lesson that they must first abandon the cause of division before they can come to a unity? Jesus said that the "Comforter" would guide his people into all truth, and the fact that men to-day are being guided in a thousand ways is proof positive that they are not being led by the Spirit of God.

Among other marvels our fossil beds reveal the fact that both camels and horses originated in North America. The remains of many widely different species of both animals have been found in numerous localities extending from coast to coast in the United States. Camels and horses, with many species of antelope closely related to still existing forms in Africa, abounded over a large part of this country up to the end of the geological age immediately preceding the present era.—Doctor George Bird Grinnell, in a bulletin issued by the National Geographic Society, January 5, 1917.

ANTI-SALOON FIGURES

In Pennsylvania, a "wet" State, with about seven and a half million population, there are confined in asylums for the insane over fifteen thousand persons. In New York, another "wet" State, with about nine million inhabitants, over thirty-one thousand persons are confined in asylums. In the nine "dry" States—Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and West Virginia—with a combined population of about fourteen and a half millions, there are only 17,466 insane people.

These and other figures were recently made public by the Anti-Saloon League of Pennsylvania, which claims that the figures prove that the liquor traffic in Pennsylvania is responsible for a large percentage of insanity and poverty in that State. It is to be noted, however, that New York and Pennsylvania have large urban populations, while the nine "dry" States probably have a much larger proportion of country dwellers. Whether or not these figures actually prove what is claimed, other figures from the same compilation—by Mr. E. H. Cherrington, editor of the "Anti-Saloon Year Book"—are fully as striking.

Mr. Cherrington has divided the States into four groups: the nine "dry" States; the "near-prohibition" States, in each of which more than fifty per cent of the population was under prohibition prior to 1915; the "partially licensed" States, where more than twenty-five but less than fifty per cent of the population were under prohibition; and the "license" States, where less than twenty-five per cent of the people were under prohibition. Since Mr. Cherrington's tables were compiled several States have been added to the "dry" column.

Figured on the basis of population, the number of insane people per 100,000 was as follows: in the dry States, 118.9; in the near-prohibition States, 150; in the partly licensed States, 234; in the wet States, 275.3. The figures alluded to above for Pennsylvania give that State 196.4 per 100,000, while New York has 343.2 per 100,000 population.

Turning to pauperism, Mr. Cherrington finds (all his figures are based on authoritative Government reports) that the number of people in almshouses per 100,000 of population is as follows: in the dry States, 46.5; in the near-prohibition States, 54.4; in the partly licensed States, 123.1; in the wet States, 127. Pennsylvania has 125.3 paupers and New York 132 per 100,000.

The percentage of children of school age enrolled as pupils is 75.6 in the dry States, 69.1 in the near-prohibition States, 72.2 in the partly licensed States, and 68.8 in the wet States. The percentage of children between the ages of fifteen and twenty enrolled in school is as follows: in the dry States, 38.4 per cent; near-prohibition States, 35.5; partly licensed States, 32; licensed States, 26.6 per cent.

With regard to property holding, Mr. Cherrington's report shows the number of homes owned in the various States and the percentage that are owned free and clear. In the dry States the average of free homes is 73.6; in the near-prohibition States, 71.4; in the partly licensed States, 62; in the wet States, 57.9.

Perhaps the almost exact correspondence of these various sets of figures "proves" nothing. But at least it puts the burden of proof on alcohol.—The Outlook for October 25, 1916.

READING AND STUDYING THE BIBLE

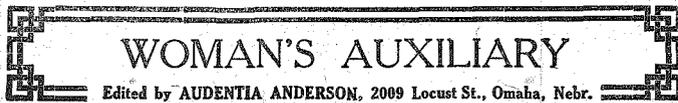

The session of Bible students at Haverford accentuates the fact that the most widely distributed of books is not so wisely and deeply known as—even from the coldly literary point of view—it deserves to be.

A sound and clear style of writing or of speech is more certainly founded upon the intimate perusal of the Bible than upon the study of the secular classics in the Greek or the Roman tongue. Yet pity is bestowed upon Ruskin, for example, because his mother read the whole of the Bible with him, not sparing him the numbering of the tribes, or the laws of the chosen people, or the lengthy genealogies. It is thought an infliction if a few verses are read in the family circle in the morning or the evening.

The daily paper gets a hundred times the attention the sacred text receives. Those who insist that the Bible is ancient history, and therefore of no concern to our day, beg the question. The same principles of human conduct under changed conditions are still operative. The face of the modern man looks out of pages describing Adam or Noah, Samson or Solomon, David or Judas or Paul. One can read of his own gnarled heathen heart in many a chapter.

The test of the Bible is its influence on life. It has been the solace and the stay of the exalted and of the lowly, and there is no ordeal that it does not recognize. If the Bible described the perfect actions of ideal people it would be revered, perhaps, but it would not be generally read. It has taken hold of mortal consciousness not because of ecclesiastical authority, but because it bears witness to the truth in language of exceeding beauty and poetic imagination.—The Philadelphia Ledger.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Power of Right Thinking

A number of years ago I read an article in one of the periodicals I was taking at that time, which made a deep impression upon me. It had finally faded from my memory, to some extent, but when I read Brother Walter W. Smith's sermon in the Ensign of December 21, entitled, "As a man thinketh," this little story was again brought to my mind, and I send it on to this column with the hope that it will prove as helpful to others as it has to me.

The story ran something like this: A woman, on a visit to some friends, met a lady who was very enthusiastic over the power of concentrated thought, and was explaining its application: This woman smiled bitterly to herself as she thought how useless it would be to try to apply the idea in her own home. Nevertheless, she concluded to make the attempt when she returned home, with the following result. Though many times she had to bite her tongue to keep back the bitter and scathing words, and many times she had to go to the woodshed to fight with herself to gain control, she managed to put her resolve to speak gently, into execution, and it was not long before she began to see a change in her home atmosphere; the children bickered and quarreled less, were more thoughtful of her, and more anxious to help her in the home duties.

The climax came one evening, when her husband came in, in a hurry, and impatiently asked why supper was not ready. Instead of answering him in the same tone, she said, pleasantly, "I am sorry it is late, but I will hurry and get it ready." He caught her by the hand and said, "Martha, you have something which I have not! Will you tell me all about it?" With tears, she told him of her effort to improve the conditions of their home, and of her struggles with herself to overcome her hastiness of speech and temper; and the husband listened with sympathetic appreciation. No one seemed to notice that the supper was still later, and it was a very happy family which finally sat down to that meal amid the softened atmosphere of love, sympathy, and mutual desires to live more in accord with Christian principles.

This little story has helped me at times, and I believe that as our influence goes out into the world around us for good or evil, it would pay us as Saints to set our houses in order—every one of us! Order is heaven's first law, it is said, and it is an order of love. Let us keep our special smiles and good manners for the loved ones that gather nightly around our own firesides, and then they will go from that place with thoughts, feelings and impulses which will bless humanity. A poet has reminded us, that "We have careful thought for the stranger,

And a smile for the sometime guest;
But oft for our own, the bitter tone!
Yet we love our own the best!"

I have received much help and encouragement from our woman's column, and feel like sending in a helpful thought when I can. If these few lines will help any discouraged one, they will not have been written in vain. A good thing to remember is

"If you have a kindness shown,
Pass it on;
It was not meant for you alone,
Pass it on!
As we travel down the years,
We can dry another's tears,
'Til in heaven the act appears;
Pass it on!"

Art in the Home

(Compiled and read by Mrs. B. Loevy at Saint Louis reunion.)

What can I do to make my home more comfortable, more cheerful, and more beautiful? This is the question that is being constantly asked by intelligent men and women in every walk of life, whether that home be a mansion or a single room. The desire for attractively arranged surroundings is growing stronger every year, and because of this increasing interest the problem of interior decoration and furnishing is becoming a matter of more and more importance to everyone.

An inexperienced person might think it an easy thing to make a beautiful home, because the world is so full of beautiful art and manufactures, and if there is money to pay for them it would seem as easy to furnish a house with everything beautiful as to go out in the garden and gather beautiful flowers. But we must remember that the world is also full of ugly things—things false in art, in truth and in beauty—things made to sell—made with only this idea behind them, manufactured on the principle that an artificial fly is made to look something like a true one in order to catch the inexpert and the unwary. It is a curious fact that these false things—made without honesty, without knowledge, without art—have a property of demoralizing the spirit of the home, and that to make it truly beautiful everything in it must be genuine as well as appropriate, and must also fit into some previously considered scheme of use and beauty.

The principles of truth and harmony, which underlie all beauty, may be secured in the most inexpensive cottage as well as in the broadest and most imposing residence.

A home should not be a museum, where one grows exhausted looking at wonderful things. Rather should it have as many beautiful things in it as can be done full justice to, where the feeling of simplicity and restfulness and charm adds to their beauty, and the whole is convincingly right. The fussy house is, luckily, a thing of the past, or fast getting to be so, but we should all help the good cause of true simplicity. It does not debar one from the most beautiful things in the world, but adds dignity and worth to them.

It is not the money that is spent on the rooms that brings about the tasteful arrangements so much to be desired; it is the application of a few simple and well-defined laws, which, when coupled with the good common sense of the average American woman, is the real secret of this complicated and many-sided business.

These laws refer to the color scheme, wall covering, floor covering, lighting, draperies and furnishings.

In deciding on the combination of colors to be used in any room, consider the size of the room, the number of windows, their size, and the point of the compass upon which they open. Think of the purpose for which the room is to be used, and what mood or atmosphere you wish to create, and think of its relation to the adjoining room. Do not decide upon something that only half-pleases you; the chances are you will have to live with the color you choose for a long time, and there is nothing you can do to a room that will be so hard to overcome if you do not get what you really want.

On the other hand, a really good color scheme will many times save a room that is not pleasing in its arrangement or lighting, and that is not well furnished.

A charming plan is to have different tones of one color used—a scheme running from cream or old ivory through soft yellow and tan to a russet brown would be lovely, especially if the house did not have an oversupply of light. A cool and attractive scheme is from white to soft blue through gray. If different colors are to be used in the different rooms the number of combinations is almost unlimited.

But there must always be the restraining influence of a good color sense in forming the scheme or the result will be disappointing. Dreary rooms can be made cheerful, and too bright and dazzling rooms can be softened by the skillful use of color.

In furnishing the home the matter of appropriateness must not be overlooked, and the whole house should express the spirit of the owner. It should be in absolute keeping with his circumstances. The trouble with many homes is that their furnishings are copied from too grand models and the effect in an average moderate home is unsuitable in every way.

Consideration must be given in the selection of pictures and ornaments so that complete harmony may prevail. Potted plants and cut flowers are a means of decoration that can be both inexpensive and effective.

It is by no means an unimportant thing to create a beautiful and picturesque interior. There is no influence so potent upon life as harmonious surroundings, and to create and possess a home which is harmonious in a simple and inexpensive way is the privilege of all but the wretchedly poor.

In proportion also as these surroundings become more perfect in their art and meaning there is a corresponding elevation in the dweller among them since the best decorations must include many spiritual lessons. It may indeed be used to further vulgar ambitions or pamper bodily weaknesses but truth and beauty are its essentials, and these will have their utterance. A good plan is: Have nothing in your home that you do not know to be useful or believe to be beautiful.

Medical Inspection in the School

(The following is the fifth article in the series Sister Sandy is writing on the welfare of the child. The public is beginning to realize how much depends upon the prevention of illness, and the prevention of contagion, and it strikes at a well-grounded root of the matter when it institutes and exercises constant and intelligent surveillance of the children in the schools of the country.—A. A.)

The term medical inspection is not a correct one, for our physicians do not inspect anything medical. The term physical inspection is nearer correct for it is the physical body that is under inspection in order that we may have health in the schoolrooms, instead of disease or contagion.

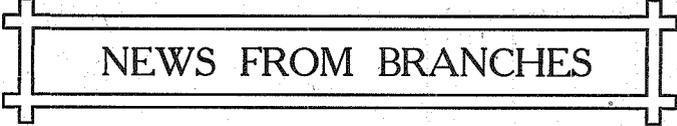

There are some who object to physical inspection, yet they do not object to mental inspection or mental comparison between their child and their neighbor's child. We should be as anxious to know the physical condition of our children as we are to know the mental or spiritual condition. Through physical inspection in the school, children's contagious diseases can be checked. We have come to know that it is no longer necessary for whooping cough, measles, or chicken pox to infect the whole school. The detection of the disease in its early stage, protects not only the children in the school but those in the home.

The health of the child is very important. Without a sound body there cannot be a sound mind, and our children should have both. When we remedy the physical ills, laziness, idleness and inattention vanish, and we not only help our own child but we better the conditions of those about them. Physical inspection combined with, the lessons on hygiene, that are being taught now in our schools, will mean less uncleanness, better ventilation, purer water and better food.

The results of physical inspection are far-reaching and should not be condemned, but rather we should all work together to bring about ideal conditions for our children.

Chairman Child Welfare Department.

NEWS FROM BRANCHES

Independence Stake

On Sunday, January 14, Apostle J. F. Curtis preached a sermon on the different dispensations, and a large congregation listened attentively to his interesting account of the ministry of Noah, Moses, Christ, of the wanderings in the wilderness, the restoration, our times, and the reign of Christ a thousand years. The description by aid of a fine chart, was made very interesting.

There was the usually interesting young people's service in the basement, and Brother A. Dwyer gave an account of his travels in Palestine which proved to be a profitable and instructive lesson afforded the young people present. Our brother, who has but recently become a member of the church, is an excellent speaker, and is filled with zeal and enthusiasm for the latter-day work. He spoke before a fairly good audience at night and will also entertain the Religians at their regular meeting January 19.

The afternoon prayer meeting was well attended and several prayers were offered in behalf of Brother Elbert A. Smith and others who are severely afflicted. Elder W. H. Kelley, who aided in presiding, spoke very impressively of his labors in the ministry, and of his experiences while connected with many of the first elders of the church.

At the close of this service was the usual Bible class under Brother W. W. Smith, and there appears to be a growing interest felt by all who attend. The kindergarten has closed for a season, but the study classes are still being fairly well attended. We hear of this educational work going on in many places, and by many different people not of our faith. The work among the Jews presents some very attractive features.

The principal of the Hebrew gymnasium at Jaffa, the chief institution of learning in Palestine, says the Zionist movement there has resulted in the establishment of forty-four colonies, numbering 15,000 persons. We are looking forward with pleasure to the time when that people will be greatly blessed under the ministry of those whom the Lord will send to gather out the honest in heart and bring them into his kingdom.

Here in Zion the work is progressing and quite a number of late have been moved upon by the Spirit to come and help in the work here. On January 15, Brother W. H. Kelley held forth to a large audience at Enoch Hill, and at the other branches of the stake the work continues as usual. At the Second Branch, Brethren Parsons and Curtis preached last Sunday to excellent crowds. We are still progressing in interest.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Milestones by the Way

In my "Milestones" published November 29, you make me say, "The corned stone (of the Bothwell church) was laid some time in July." Now I have heard of corned beef, etc., but I know nothing about "a corned stone." Geologists may be acquainted with that specimen but not I. Corner stone, dear editor, is what I wrote.

In the same letter it says "we have never missed a conference in said district (Eastern Michigan) since we obeyed the gospel in June, 1911." This should be June, 1907. However we believe that we made that mistake so do not blame anyone else; I just wish to correct it.

Said letter was written from the home of Brother Theodore Wismer, near Amherstburg, Ontario, where I was holding forth at that time. We had some grand experiences there. Began preaching Sunday, November 29 and continued for about six weeks. Preached in all thirty-seven sermons and we were surely rewarded for our efforts. We never posted a bill or made a great show in the advertising line but Brother Cecil Wismer took the Ford and went to some of the neighbors and told them about the meetings and asked them to come. The first night we had a fine crowd and the writer retired to his room and asked God to give him a message for the people and wisdom to deliver it in a way that would draw them to Christ. We enjoyed excellent liberty and the people gave us the best of attention. We invited them to come again and bring their friends. The news spread that we were there and the people said one to another, "Come, hear a man that preaches without notes; who only has a common school education, but tells the gospel story with the old-time inspiration back of it and proves every point he makes by the Bible." That was all the advertisement we needed. They come and come again. Rain fell and mud appeared, and oh, such mud! Later on it turned cold, snow came aplenty, then Jack Frost got his brush and pincers out and went to work with a will, but the people came just the same. Some drove six miles.

The Spirit continued with us in power and people were heard to remark that they had never heard anything so beautiful and plain. One lady who had been a Baptist for years remarked: "It makes me sad to think how I have been deceived all these years." I baptized her into the true church.

One young man and his wife who live close by, would not come at first as they were sure that we were "right from Utah" so we announced about a week ahead that we would lecture on the latter-day apostasy and show the difference between us and the Utah people. We had a full house; the young man with the rest. He got interested, kept coming and I baptized both him and his wife.

Just here I want to say that Elder J. H. Tyrrell's one thousand-dollar-reward bill came in for its share of the work and did a great deal to disabuse the people of the erroneous idea that we are affiliated with the Mormons of Utah.

To make a long story short, I baptized fourteen fine people in that neighborhood; ten of them being heads of families.

Others told me they were not just ready but if I would return in the spring they would obey. I hope to go.

In my former letter I spoke of a Mr. Henry Jones whose father was my first candidate for baptism, when I first started out as a "boy" preacher in 1911. Well, I baptized Mr. Henry Jones, his wife, four sons, one daughter, one son-in-law, and 2 daughters-in-law so there are three generations that we have brought into the church.

The Wismer family did all in their power to make the services a success and were kindness personified to the missionary. May God bless them.

We spent each Saturday and part of Sunday in Windsor and Walkerville and thus we could attend the services in the Windsor church on Sunday mornings. On November 19 we attended the anniversary services of the Windsor Branch and we all had a splendid time. A good crowd was there but not as many as would have been had it not been for the opening of the London church the same date.

The Spirit of the Lord was with us to a marked degree and was made manifest in a beautiful gift of prophecy through Elder Samuel Brown. The Windsor Saints were highly commended for their diligence and sacrifice in building the church and were told that if faithful they would have to enlarge it in time so as to accommodate those who would be gathered in. The president of the branch was spoken to and told the Lord had been with him in his labors and would be with him still. It was a beautiful gift and we all rejoiced.

The preaching by Joseph Yager and Samuel Brown was good and enjoyed by all. The writer preached at 11 a. m., the eternal judgment being the theme.

The Windsor Branch, under the leadership of Leslie Brown and his colleagues, Albert Bennett, priest; George Daikens, teacher and H. E. Bennett and L. D. Campbell, deacons, is surely advancing rapidly. The branch is in the best condition we have ever seen it and the Saints all seem eager to do their part. Some of the best Saints we have ever met live there and God is blessing them.

They put a beautiful font in the basement of their church this fall and it was there we baptized the fourteen people from Amherstburg.

The Windsor Saints have been very kind to me in every way. Brother Brown is one branch president who never forgets the needs of the missionary. On November 26 (our birthday) he told the Saints they would take up a collection for us and they raised $10.30 and at Christmas time they gave us over fifteen dollars in all and we feel to deeply appreciate their acts of kindness.

We always make our home there with Brother H. E. Bennett and his lovely family, and truer friends no one could find. We have been there for weeks at a time and have never yet felt that our welcome had run out. They know just how to make one feel at home and the best they have is always at the disposal of their guests. It is a good place to go.

Saturday, December 30, we went to Port Huron on business and met with the Saints there in their beautiful new church on Sunday. Preached at night to a full house, taking for my subject "Jesus: from the manger to the mount." Enjoyed good liberty and trust some good was done.

The Port Huron Saints have made a herculean effort of late to remove the debt from the church and they have been greatly blessed in their work and have accomplished much. Some time last May, Elder Otto Fetting, the branch president, who holds the mortgage, told the Saints that if they would raise him one thousand dollars by the first of the new year, he would give them a twenty-five dollar oyster supper. The branch divided into two bands with Doctor Robert Brown as captain of the "Diggers" and Elder Joseph Muir captain of the "Hustlers" and the fight was on. There were some valiant workers on each side and they set to with a will. The diggers dug and the hustlers hustled. They did everything that could be done to raise money; they were up and at work early and late and when the smoke of battle cleared away at the close of the old year, it was discovered that each side had raised over $550. To be exact, they turned in $1,161.50 and Brother Fetting had a smile on his face as wide as a Quaker's hat brim! All of the workers are deserving of great praise and they can well feel proud of the feat accomplished.

You have heard of "Jones: he pays the freight," well, this was a case of "Fetting: he buys the oysters." New Year's night we all gathered in the basement of the church and from six to eight supper was served to all who came. No one was turned away and about three hundred people ate oysters and had a fine time. Brother Fetting and his helpers made everyone feel welcome and a smile was on every face.

When everyone had done ample justice to the sumptuous feast, we repaired to the main auditorium where, with Doctor Brown in the chair, a splendid program was rendered. At about ten o'clock a lot of happy hearts wended their way homeward, feeling that they had been well repaid for the strenuous efforts they had put forth during 1916.

While in Port Huron we stayed with Elder and Mrs. Fetting in their beautiful home at 1116 Howard Street. It is our home whenever we are there, and a right royal welcome is always given to the weary missionary who goes that way. Sister Fetting is one of the most self-sacrificing Saints we have ever known and seems to always be happy when she is doing something for some one else. Brother Fetting is kindness personified and if there is any reward for altruism, they will surely come in for a large share.

At this juncture we are holding a series of meetings in the Wabash church. Began here Sunday night, January 7 and had a full house. Will continue as long as interest demands.

Am domiciled at the hospitable home of Brother and Sister W. L. Ross and have every comfort but one; the presence of Sister Weaver. She is at her parental home in Traverse City, Michigan, where she went to spend the holidays.

We are very glad to note the advancement that is being made in every department of church work. This bespeaks, in language eloquent, that the work is onward and God has raised up noble men who will carry the banner of our King to altitudes that have never yet been attained. This is not meant to cast a shadow over the work of noble men who have labored in the past; far from it! Their glory is inviolable, their efforts were commendable and praiseworthy; may the light of eternity shine upon them and may they enjoy their well-earned rest. However, the set time to favor Zion has come! The greater endowment of divine power is being given. The star of hope proclaims the dawning of a brighter day for the church. The work is onward! Let all do their share. Roll on, oh time, roll on, and usher in the glorious reign of peace and rest.

When I read of the classes for study that are being carried on in Independence under the direction of President F. M. Smith, Walter W. Smith and other noble men, my heart yearns to be able to be there and take part that I might become better equipped for the work God has for me to do, but we who are out on the battle front are denied that grand privilege. However there is one school that is open to us all, the school of divine inspiration. The supply of wisdom and knowledge is unlimited and inexhaustible. May the Great Teacher help us to be worthy to enter and learn.

The Taylor-Phillips Debate

A unique debate was held in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, January 1 to 6, 1917, between Reverend J. J. Taylor of Lexington, Kentucky, representing "The Church of Christ," commonly known as the Christian Church, and Elder A. B. Phillips of Boston, representing "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." The proposition affirmed by each in turn was that "The church I represent is in harmony with the New Testament in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice." Reverend C. V. Huffer of Bloomsburg, and Elder J. A. Koehler of Philadelphia acted as moderators.

Each disputant devoted himself to the legitimate task set before him. This debate was, therefore, entirely free from those features which so often give rise to ill feeling between the parties represented. 'Twas a pleasure to listen to a debate in which satire, waggery, banter, puns, witty poems, and so on, were not employed by the speakers to gain an undue advantage or to impress the audience with their "smartness." No attack was made upon the character of any religious leader or body of people; neither was the name of Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon mentioned during the whole debate. Principles, not personalities, were discussed.

Perhaps there are people with forensic tendencies or ambitions who can well afford to take home the lesson taught in this debate. At the close of the debate, the members of the Christian Church were very profuse in their expressions of appreciation of our work and people. The conditions maintained throughout the entire debate were very advantageous; the emotions were not excited, but the intellect was appealed to; and we feel sure that in this six-day debate "The Saints' Church" in Bloomsburg made an "impression" that ordinarily would have taken years to have made. Between three and four hundred people were in attendance nightly.

Here are a few of the positions taken. Mr. Taylor affirmed that the church was not in existence until Pentecost; that "the church" and "the kingdom" are the same thing; that the Christian Church is in harmony with the New Testament because it has elders and deacons, and because it observes the ordinances of "baptism" and the "Lord's supper"; that the name of the church is properly "The Church of Christ"; that repentance and faith are doctrines taught by both his church and the New Testament. He further said that the history of his church was to be found only in the New Testament; that it was immaterial what certain individuals did a hundred years ago; that he was defending the Christian Church of to-day; that the only way to prove that his church (the history of which is in the New Testament) is not in harmony with the New Testament is by reference to the New Testament.

Mr. Phillips replied that Mr. Taylor had not connected his church with the pentecost church; that the Christian Church is a modern institution, and therefore, its history must be found in modern records. The circumstances of the rise of the Christian Church was then read from such books as The Christian System and Hayden's Life of Alexander Campbell. This was designed to show that the Christian Church had its origin in about the year 1809 to 1812. Therefore, its harmony or inharmony with the New Testament can be ascertained only by comparing the modern account of its rise and development with the things written in the New Testament. But the authenticity of these histories was denied by Mr. Taylor.

Mr. Phillips further said that a counterfeit coin is not detected in its points of agreement, but in its points of disagreement. The following differences were then set forth:

(a) The New Testament teaches that the laying on of hands is an ordinance of the gospel (Hebrews 6:1, 2; Acts 8:17; 9:17; 19:6), but the Christian Church repudiates this rite. (b) The Christian Church has elders and deacons only, whereas the New Testament organization had apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, bishops, seventies, elders, and deacons (1 Corinthians 12:28; Ephesians 4:11; 1 Timothy 3:1; et. al.). (c) The New Testament ministry was called of God and set apart by the laying on of hands (Hebrews 5:4; John 15:16; Acts 13:1-4); but God has nothing to do with pointing out the ministry of the Christian Church; and besides Mr. Taylor freely admitted that his ministry had no right to set men apart to the ministry by the laying on of hands. (d) The gifts of the Holy Spirit were realized by the New Testament church in fulfillment of the promises of God (Acts 1:2-8; Mark 16:18; Acts 2:38, 39; 1 Corinthians 12:7-11), but Mr. Taylor contends that there are no present-day abstract manifestations of the Holy Spirit. He has therefore admitted that he is not in harmony with the New Testament and "has really conceded all that I claim."

Mr. Taylor replied that the necessity for the gifts had ceased; that the apostolic office was not continuous; that there was no use to lay on hands for the gifts of the Holy Spirit because it is not given to-day, and no man has power to confer these gifts; that he was willing that any man should demonstrate that miracles could be performed to-day. Mr. Taylor had repeatedly said that "where the Bible speaks we speak, and where the Bible is silent we are silent."

Mr. Phillips replied that man never had the power to perform miracles; that God always attended to that, and that he had the same power to-day; and more than that, he has promised to accompany the preaching of the gospel with all the powers that originally attached to it. The usual scriptures were quoted in support of this. Mr. Phillips then asked Mr. Taylor to read from the Bible where God ever said that these things were to be done away; whereupon Mr. Taylor quoted 1 Corinthians 13:8, and added that Jesus, who was perfect, and the gospel, which was perfect, had already come, therefore these things must have been done away.

In reply, Mr. Phillips added verses 9 to 12 to those quoted by Mr. Taylor, in which it is affirmed that "we prophesy in part" (present tense), and quoted Acts 13:1 and 21:9, 10 to prove that there were prophets in the church after Jesus and the gospel had come. He added that "the prophecies of the book of Revelation were all given at a later date." Mr. Phillips then quoted from Eusebius and Justin Myrtyr, and others, to show that there were prophets and prophecies and the gifts of the gospel in the church after the first century; also that the original twelve apostles were succeeded by others.

The usual discussion concerning the qualifications of an apostle ensued. Mr. Taylor affirmed that one must see Jesus to be an apostle; while Mr. Phillips denied that this was a qualification simply because the first apostles were eyewitnesses of his power. He asked for the Bible proof that this was a necessary qualification, and having named other apostles than the first ones named, asked Mr. Taylor to show where they had seen Jesus.

Considerable time was spent in discussing "The canon of the Scriptures." As usual, Paul was quoted as saying that "from a child thou hast known the Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." Mr. Phillips asserting that when this was spoken the New Testament was not in existence as such; neither was a large portion of it written; so that Paul's language must have referred to other books than the New Testament. Documentary proof was furnished to show that the canon had never been authoritatively closed, and scriptural proof that God ever intended to limit himself was asked for.

Mr. Taylor used only about half of his time on the second proposition. Mr. Phillips was asked to go on as he finished his first affirmative speech, Mr. Taylor stating that he had nothing to say. At this juncture we were careful to ascertain what the intentions of the negative were. They wanted to let the first half hour go by default; to this we agreed. On the second negative speech of the first night, Mr. Taylor stated that Mr. Phillips had made a very nice speech, and that he agreed to many things Mr. Phillips had said, but the trouble was that things did not work out as was claimed. Mr. Taylor then asked Mr. Phillips to furnish him with the names and addresses of living men who were witnesses to miracles or who had performed miracles. This was done on the next evening; whereupon Mr. Taylor told one story about the woman who died, and to whose husband the doctor said, "go right on with the funeral, the woman is dead." But the wife spoke up and said: "I ain't either dead." But the husband said: "Shh! keep quiet Lizzie, the doctor knows." Mr. Phillips reminded Mr. Taylor that his story furnished additional proof of the necessity for divine power in relieving the sick, since the doctors were oftentimes such poor judges that they could not even tell when a person was dead. This was about the only joke told during the whole debate; and it was told in a very nice way, and passed off good-naturedly. Mr. Taylor said he would be glad if God would do things the way he did anciently, but he had failed to discover the evidences of such intentions on God's part thus far.

It goes without saying that this is not the title of what was said; but these are the main points as I see them: A more fraternal feeling in a debate I never witnessed. It seemed clear to some of the Saints that the outcome of the discussion was a disappointment to the Christian peoples; but of course we must allow them the privilege of speaking for themselves on this point. At any rate the Saints were highly pleased with the manner in which Brother Phillips presented the claims of the Reorganized Church. Whether others are pleased or not with the outcome, we cannot say.

From Here and There

Brother J. M. McAninch of Niagara Falls, New York, says the annual business meeting of the branch was the best attended in years and was a very harmonious meeting. Elder William Place was reelected president of the branch. An effort will be made to open the work at the south end of the city and at Chippewa, a near-by town.

Georgia Crocker, Nevada, Missouri, suggests that personal troubles and similar items should be eliminated from the HERALD on account of the work of the good literature committees in distributing the papers to nonmembers. She fears that sometimes the contributors forget that these people may get wrong impressions from some things that are written for the church papers. She would like to get in touch with those who have good suggestions on distribution of church literature.

Anyone near Bellefontaine, Ohio, should get in touch with H. P. Kelley, who has recently moved there. He has moved there for his health. Address general delivery.

EXETER, CALIFORNIA, January 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are once more enjoying the privileges of country life in Tulare and Exeter, being at the latter place at the time of writing and where again we feel the inspiration of the beautiful Sierra Nevadas with their snow capped peaks. One who has never seen the mountains cannot picture the beauty of the scene at this place—the sun reflecting upon the mountain top and the beautiful snow sparkling so clean and white, and just underneath on the mountain side the orange trees heavily laden with their luscious fruit.

When last here it was spring, when all were busy caring for the fig trees and the grapevines, but now we are enjoying the result of the season's yielding in having all the delicious figs and raisins we care for. It is the first time I have really cared for figs. Brother Dailey had a successful year, while many lost thousands of dollars worth of raisins in his vicinity, owing to the heavy rains and not being prepared for the emergency in the way of wooden trays. The success of our brother was due to more than one reason. First, the Lord blessed them bountifully, but they all worked and did their part faithfully and promptly and thus received the blessing.

We have been enjoying a rest in this part of the country during the holidays, accepting the invitation extended to come again when we left last spring. This we have looked forward to all year, for the country seems to draw me. It is there I long to be, where one can go out and breathe in the free air and take a few gymnastic exercises as one walks up the road, without the constant fear of many looking on (as in the city) and where one can commune with nature, as it were, and really feel that nearness to the Master we so enjoy. As I write I am in the yard and the oranges, grapefruit and pomegranates are in evidence, and the birds are seemingly as happy as when we were last here, the one hundred and seventy-five Rhode Island Reds and two faithful cows are providing us with luxuries unknown to many in the cities at this time of high prices. All these good things continue to make our holiday a pleasant one.

We spent Christmas with Brother and Sister Damron with whom we enjoyed a genuine Christmas dinner. The little church at Tulare gave a very entertaining program and entertainment in the way of a huge, brilliantly lighted Christmas tree, from which Old Santa himself addressed the little ones.

We have not spent much time in recreation since coming into the California mission, but have kept busy. We attended the Irvington reunion which was a time of rejoicing, the weather being ideal until the closing night when the rain descended with a vengeance, it seemed. Brother Rushton, Elder Pitt and myself left before the service for Los Angeles, where we were to visit the Southern California District reunion at Hermosa Beach. We arrived next day about 9 a. m. and were met at the train by that faithful brother, R. T. Cooper, who is always on hand with his car to wait upon the missionaries. He soon provided us with lunch and we were off to Hermosa, a distance of twenty miles, which proved a delightful ride over some beautiful drives—palms and flowers of various kinds bordering the thoroughfare. We had a very busy but pleasant time at Hermosa and after the close of the reunion and all had departed, Elder Pitt and I remained and took up camp life in the little cottage on the grounds, where we were busy for a week or more at our typewriter finishing up our work. While at Hermosa we had the pleasure of entertaining our cousin, Mary Parks of Kansas, for a few days, and who greatly enjoyed the many dips in the Pacific with us. Must confess however, my fear even yet for the "sharks." You see I cannot forget how numerous they were along the Australian and South Sea Island coasts, and for that reason cannot say that I enjoy the surf. Finishing our work there, we left for Los Angeles, where we remained a couple of days, preparing for San Diego, where a branch was to be organized by Brother Rushton, and where we remained a week, holding revival services each evening. While there we visited the exposition one day. We stopped with Brother and Sister Harrington while in their city and found them pleasantly located and doing a good work which we trust will bear fruit for their labors.

We next arrived in Santa Ana about September 30, where we commenced meetings and which continued until about October 15. We reached Garden Grove, which is located a short distance from Santa Ana, and commenced meetings at once, continuing ten days with fairly good results. We greatly enjoyed the time spent there for more than one reason—not only the air, but the soil had such an attraction for me that I cultivated a part of Brother Carmichael's field and he assures me he expects good results next year. Before leaving, Brother and Sister Parks drove with us to a beet factory where we were initiated into the process of the converting of the beet, from the time it is shoveled into the chutes and enters the factory, to the time it is converted into brown, granulated, and powdered sugar—which is done in a short space of time, and certainly is a marvelous process.

Our next visit was to Newport Beach, where we spent a few pleasant days, also visiting the members of that place. October 29, Mr. McMillian took us by auto to Long Beach, where meetings were announced to continue a week or more. Meetings closed with good results, and we continued on our way to San Bernardino, which we reached November 12. A series of meetings had been arranged for there, so for a couple of weeks they continued with encouraging results. Brother Wixom, president of the branch and mayor of the city secured a hearing for Elder Pitt before the high school and also the men's bible class of the Baptist Church, with fine interest. Brother Wixom also secured a fine lantern and we gave about thirty or forty of our Palestine views at the close of each service, thus trying to entertain as well as instruct the strangers who came out to hear. While in San Bernardino we did light housekeeping, and were well cared for, many of the Saints and friends showing us every kindness.

We arrived in Los Angeles December 3 and commenced meetings the same evening, continuing over two weeks. A number of the Saints sustained the meetings faithfully and we trust some good was accomplished. While in that city we had two pleasant afternoons with Sister Wallace at her home. This sister is the daughter of the late Bishop I. L. Rogers. We are glad to say she seems to be revived in the work. Thus ended our labors in the southern district, and we are now on our way north to visit the several branches once more before returning east in the spring, as we hope to be present at the General Conference this year—having been absent two years.

We are feeling well and enjoying our work as usual and are very hopeful for the future, for we are glad to say that the work is improving all along the line. The little branch in Tulare seems to be in a prosperous condition under the leadership of Brother Damron and while the heavy rains recently have interfered with the attendance somewhat, yet a goodly number of the membership are in evidence at each service. Brother W. A. Brooner is assisting here at the present time.

Yours in the gospel,

ROSA PARKS PITT.

The great thing is to try to fashion the life after the pattern shown us in the moment of our highest inspiration; to make our highest moment permanent. They are blessed who dream—and do.—Orison Swett Marden, in Ambition.

LOVELAND, IOWA, January 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: When I read the lovely letters and testimonies of the sisters it makes me feel that I, too, ought to have a testimony for the Lord. I have taken the HERALD for twenty-eight years. I could not do without it. I have sent for "Joe Pine," the new book by Elder Elbert A. Smith. I love very much to read the church books and papers.

I have been a member of this church for fifty-six years. I was baptized at Mondamin, Harrison County, Iowa, December 20, 1860, by Elders E. C. Briggs and W. W. Blair. Mondamin was then my childhood home. I was a girl of fifteen years. I have never regretted the step I took that day for I know this work is true. I have had many evidences of the truthfulness of the work. Many years ago I was very sick and given up to die, by my physician and friends. But I did not lose faith in God. I told my husband I felt that if I was administered to the lord would heal me. He immediately sent for an elder, I was administered to and I began to get better right along and was soon able to do my work and take care of my family. I could relate many such instances during my life, of the blessings of my heavenly Father and his kind watchcare over me when I have had sickness and deaths in my home, and I have felt if I didn't have help from on high I could not live through my sorrow. I have gone to God in faith and asked him as humbly as I knew how, to help me bear up under my burdens, and I know that without his assistance I could not have lived through all my sorrow. Many years ago when my children were young they had that, then, dread disease, diphtheria. We had six lovely children, two boys and four girls. The oldest boy was fourteen years old. We lost four within two weeks. The two oldest girls were spared; later we buried one of them with typhoid fever. It is needless to say the sorrow and heart pangs we went through over the loss of our darling ones. We had other children in after years, but God called on us to give them up with the exception of one, so that I have two daughters left. I know the Lord is taking good care of my darlings for me. I feel that I am unworthy of God's blessings when I read in the HERALD of how much good the sisters are doing for the church, but I have tried to do the best I could under the circumstances.

I am seventy-one years old. I have been a widow fifteen years. My husband was a faithful member. I have two daughters left, both in the church.

I can sympathize with Sister Vida Smith in her contribution "From the ashes." That's all we mothers have left, the ashes of sweet, sad memories of the dear ones past and gone. After all my sorrow I feel wonderfully blessed, for I have two of the ten children left and near me. It is my desire to live so as to please my heavenly Father and to do right in his sight, so that when I am called I may go to those that have gone before. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Yours in the one faith,

LUCINDA WILDING.

SAINT MARIES, IDAHO, January 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: When we came here there never had been a Latter Day Saint sermon preached in Saint Maries, and it was some time before we could find some one we could talk to. But I am glad to say we have found people now that are very eager to hear the true gospel. Most of the people here are Catholics and are very wicked, but are honest at heart.

Elder Newby came and preached for us and baptized five adults who are fine people and will be a great help to the work, if faithful. Two other Catholics were baptized and there are others near the kingdom if only Elder Newby can come back soon.

I have been a member of the church for eighteen years and never have I seen people more anxious to hear the truth. I think we as Saints should live so as to let our light shine that those to whom we are neighbors will see we are trying to walk in the light of our Savior. I have never written to the paper before but it is not because I have nothing to be thankful for, but I thought that there were so many more that were more able writers I would not take up the space, for the Lord knows the comfort we have received from the dear old HERALD. For some time we have been in Saint Maries and no Saints here but my family, and no one to talk the gospel with, and the HERALD was all we had. But I am praying the Lord will watch over us and that Elder Newby will be sent back here, for I think he will do better here than some one else, for he understands the people. He is just the right man for such a place. This is a mill town—three mills and two box factories here, and lots of people to hear the gospel. We are looking for a time when we will have a branch here. Brother Newby organized a Sunday school while here, and we will try to let our light shine in this little place.

Yours for the advance of the gospel,

STELLA PHILLIPS.

XENIA, OHIO, January 11, 1917.

Editors Herald: There is no church here but we read the HERALD and other church papers and receive much help from them. I am trying to live right and pray for God's help to that end. Perhaps some will remember of seeing a letter from Eklie Miller in the paper sometime ago saying she was severely afflicted. She has been operated upon and is left an invalid; she can't walk and one arm is paralyzed. She has no relatives in the United States, and no home, neither anyone to care for her. She stays next door to me with a widow who has three children to support. She helps care for the two younger children while the mother is working. I am sure some of the Saints would be glad to remember this girl with a card or letter on her birthday, January 26. She reads the HERALD over and over and enjoys everything in it. Address her at Xenia, Ohio, R. F. D. 8.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. T. L. BETTY.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric

All elders who have received blank financial reports for 1916 and have not forwarded the same to this office, will kindly do so by return mail, in order that they might appear in the bishop's 1916 financial report.

If there are any who have not received the blank form upon which to make their report, they will kindly advise this office and the same will be sent immediately.

Your cooperation in this matter is essential to the proper discharge of our duties.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

To Saints of Winnipeg District: As I have left the city of Winnipeg and am located at Dominion City, Manitoba, this will notify all as to present address. And as I have again been sustained by the district to act as bishop's agent for another year, I will be pleased to receive your tithes and offerings sent me at this address until further notice. Thanking you for and praying God's blessing on your efforts to honor his law in this particular, I remain, your brother,
W. I. ARNOLD.

Also it is the request of the last conference that all branch presidents report in writing the spiritual condition of their respective branches to the district president at the coming conference. This is urged upon the priesthood at this time to help improve the condition of our district. H. E. Moler, president, Creola, Ohio; Charles E. Rebert secretary, Box 422, Dayton, Ohio.

Information Wanted

The following names are recorded on our branch record at Tabor, Iowa, and we desire to learn of their whereabouts. If anyone knows, please write to Roy J. Dunsdon, branch clerk, Tabor, Iowa. The names are: Rachel Collins, Jonathan Collins, Anna Genthry, Joseph Green, Emma Taylor, Sarah Paterson, Samuel Thomas.

Will anyone knowing the address of any of the following scattered members of the Audubon Branch of the Minnesota District please report same to Mrs. Kate M. Martin, Frazee, Minnesota, box 344: Walter Irvin Crane, Edward S. Conway, Sarah E. Masters, Claude Charles Barber, Nancy M. Comstock, Alice Mehan, Sarah Smith, Ina C. Kirkpatrick, Morton Powell, Charles E. Shepherd, Mary E. Shepherd, Leonora J. Morse, Ralph Gobell, Charlotte A. Bartleson, Irenus W. Reed, Gertrude E. Atwater, John C. Honnold, Lillie M. Ballard, Grace L. Lane, Mary Gregory, Lillie M. Lane, Clara Adelina Smith, James S. McDermott, Julia E. McDermott, Joy L. McDermott, Mahlan McDermott, Mary E. Ellsworth, James W. Gregory, Hazel L. McDermott. Most of these names came from the Oak Lake books.

To the Members of the Church Camera Club

Don't forget to send to the secretary, A. H. Knowlton, 701 North Cottage Street, Independence, Missouri, prints from a dozen of your best negatives, to be exhibited at the next General Conference.

To prospective camera purchasers, I would recommend obtaining from any camera supply house, a copy of The Photo Miniature, twenty-five cents. February, 1916, edition, which deals with the pocket camera. The fine modern pocket camera is the coming instrument for photographic purposes. An enlargement from a good negative is superior to an original print from a large negative! Buy the pocket camera with the short focus, large aperture, anastigmat lens, and get pictures when it would be impossible to obtain them by an ordinary lens. But get the copy of The Photo Miniature and learn of the merits of the latest pocket cameras.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

GRAUMLICH.—Emily Caroline Graumligh born near Springfield, Illinois, 1831; died January 4, 1917, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Leaman, San Jose, California. Came to California with her parents in 1850; baptized March 24, 1867, at Petaluma, California, by William Potter. Funeral in charge of C. W. Hawkins; interment in Oak Hill Cemetery, near San Jose.

SPERRY.—Edith B. Sperry, born December 15, 1867, at Tootville, Rock County, Wisconsin; died January 7, 1917, at her home in Evansville, Wisconsin. She was baptized September 20, 1896, at Portor Rock, Wisconsin, by W. A. McDowell. She leaves to mourn, a husband, 1 daughter and many other relatives and friends. Loved and respected by all who knew her. (Sermon by W. A. McDowell, in the Methodist Episcopal church at Evansville, Wisconsin.)

McCoy.—Hiram Allen McCoy, born in Indiana, July 4, 1850; died near Des Moines, Iowa, December 27, 1916, as the result of a paralytic stroke. Baptized about 30 years ago and was active in local church work and missionary work, holding the office of high priest at death. He leaves 2 sons and 1 daughter to mourn his departure; his wife and 2 children preceding him in death. Funeral services at Saints' chapel, Des Moines, Iowa, by J. F. Mintun.

CROW.—Charlotte G. Crow was born September 15, 1844, in Michigan; died in Rockford, Illinois, August 25, 1916. Baptized June 10, 1913, and all that knew her loved her. Her husband, Calvin Crow, died in the service of his country October 3, 1863. She remained a widow from then to her death, and cared for her two children, Willard W., who died at the age of 12 years, and Mary M. Thompson, who faithfully cared for her mother till the last. Interment in Rockford, Illinois, cemetery. Sermon by J. O. Dutton.

SIMMONS.—Mary Emily Mitchell was born in Shelby County, Indiana, March, 1841. Married Achillis Rogers in 1859 or 1860. Two children were born to this union, both dying in infancy. Her husband died in the War of the Rebellion. Married Thomas Limpus in 1868, to which union were born Frank and Maude. Thomas Limpus died in 1888. She married Joseph Simmons in 1903, who died in 1906. She was baptized in 1894. Died at the home of her son Frank, in Denver, Colorado, from lagrippe. Interment at Grant City, Missouri.

ANDERSON.—Elder James Anderson, born in Glasgow, Scotland, February 10, 1834; died at Lamoni, Iowa, January 9, 1917. Came to America with his parents in 1855; went to Utah but finding the evils there, returned to Saint Louis where he engaged in business. Joined the Reorganized Church in 1864; ordained bishop of Saint Louis District. Went to Pleasanton, Iowa, in 1882, later to Kansas City, then to Lamoni. Of ten children, 6 are living. His aged wife yet lives, also 1 brother and 1 sister. Funeral sermon by H. A. Stebins, assisted by R. M. Elvin.

CHRISTENSON.—At the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Baker of Sumas, Washington, Sister Mattie K. Christenson passed out at the age of 75 years, after 5 years of invalid life during which she was tenderly cared for by the household. She passed away January 1, 1917, and was laid to rest on the 3d, after a comforting service. A quartet from the Methodist Episcopal choir did the singing. Sermon by J. M. Terry, from Job 5: 26; Psalm 116: 15. She was born in Denmark, came to Iowa 37 years ago and to Washington 17 years ago. Leaves 2 daughters and a son and 14 grandchildren as chief mourners. Funeral largely attended.

HALL.—Asbury Hall was born in northeastern Missouri, October 17, 1842. Reared in the vicinity of Keokuk, and married Miss Reu Emma Hutton, 1867. Moved to southwestern Iowa in 1869. Mrs. Hall died in 1880, leaving 1 daughter, Belle, now Mrs. John Wolford. He married Miss J. Emma Steck in March, 1882. They have resided in this city for the past sixteen years, and have been identified with the best social and religious interests of our city. He is survived by his wife, daughter, 2 grandchildren, and 3 brothers, David of Des Moines, George of Lamoni, and Owen of Council Bluffs. He was a consistent member of the church and was honored and respected by the entire community. Died January 8, 1917. Funeral sermon by R. E. Pratt, assisted by F. W. Simpson of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

KEMP.—George Kemp was born in Devizes, Wiltshire County, England, August 29, 1832. Baptized in his youth and about 1849 emigrated to Utah, thence to California and later, about 1865 to Iowa, and has resided ever since, with the exception of three years in Lamoni, in or near Tabor. Baptized at Sacramento, California, December 8, 1863, by George P. Dykes and ordained an elder the same year. For a time he officiated as counselor to president of third quorum of elders. He was twice married, first to Miss Mary Ann Dunsden by whom seven children were born to him. She died in 1878. In 1886 he was married to Miss Anna Pearl Erikson, who bore him one child. Died December 24, 1916, leaving a widow, 5 children, 12 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Funeral from Saints' church at Tabor, Heman C. Smith preaching the sermon.

Brinkhoff.—Frederick William Brinkhoff, born March 14, 1845, at Mendan, Germany; died at his home at Cottage Grove, Wisconsin, January 9, 1917. Married Louise Wellner May 10, 1866. Came to the United States in 1867, remaining with relatives in New York until 1869, when they located on the homestead near Cottage Grove, where they lived until a few years ago, when they located in the village of Cottage Grove. There were born to this union 9 children, 5 of whom preceded the father, leaving his devoted wife, Henry G. of Madison, Wisconsin, Mrs. Carrie W. Poggemiller of Madison, Wisconsin; Mrs. Clara G. Boutwell of Newark, Delaware, and Milton E. of Cottage Grove, Wisconsin. Baptized by J. O. Dutton, April 26, 1911. He did much for the cause he loved so well. Sermon by J. O. Dutton, assisted by J. W. McKnight. Interment in Hope Cemetery, near Cottage Grove.

WEIR.—John Patrick Weir, born March 15, 1860, at Elkhorn, Wisconsin, died January 4, 1917, at Lamoni, Iowa. He was a son of Patrick and Bridget Weir who came from Ireland in their early married life. When eighteen years old his father died, leaving a large family of children. Young John assumed a large share of the burden, assisting his mother to operate the farm and care for the family with patience and fidelity. When twenty-five years old he came to Iowa, settling at Center Junction where he met, and on October 16, 1890, married Miss Cora E. Thomas. To them was born one child, Amelia B. Reared a Roman Catholic, he united with the Methodist Church after coming to Iowa. With his wife, he was baptized by O. B. Thomas May 23, 1893, remaining faithful to his covenant to the end and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. He was active in Sunday school work, being assistant superintendent of the eastern Iowa Sunday school association for several years. He moved with his family to Lamoni, Iowa, October 26, 1913, since which time he has been in poor health. He leaves a wife, one daughter, one brother, three sisters and a host of admiring friends to mourn his departure. Funeral services in charge of L. G. Holloway, sermon by E. E. Long. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

HOLCOMB.—Chauncey S. Holcomb, youngest son of O. E. and Sally Holcomb, was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, August 10, 1844; died at the home of his son, D. A. Holcomb, Gallands Grove, Iowa, January 9, 1917. United in marriage to Sister Mary Menimento Wight, September 17, 1867. To this union 7 children were born. Wife died about 1896, and three children preceded their parents to the paradise of God. Came to Iowa with his parents in 1854, and located at Gallands Grove, where he resided until he came to Dow City, about 1890, where he resided with his sister and her husband, Brother and Sister R. Wight, until a short time before his death, when he made his home with his son, Drayton, at Gallands Grove. Baptized October 14, 1860, and held membership at Gallands Grove until May 23, 1900, when he united with the Dow City Branch, where he held membership until death. Ordained teacher in 1864, and was for some years an active officer of the church. He leaves to mourn: 2 sons, D. A. and Romannan, 2 daughters, Sister John Durkee, Upton, Wyoming, and Sister William Jenkins, Woodbine, Iowa, his eldest brother Zechariah Holcomb, Clay Center, Nebraska, Sister Gideon Hawley, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sister Alfred Jackson and Sister R. Wight of Dow City, and many other relatives and friends. Funeral at Saints' church, Gallands Grove, by Charles E. Butterworth; interment in the Holcomb Cemetery.

Your Last Chance

Recently we published in these columns an offer of The Youth's Companion and McCall's Magazine, both for a full year, for only $2.10, including a McCall Dress Pattern. The high price of paper and ink has obliged McCall's Magazine to raise their subscription price February 1 to ten cents a copy and 75 cents a year—so that the offer at the above price must be withdrawn.

Until March 31 our readers have the privilege of ordering both publications for a full year, including the choice of any 15-cent McCall Dress Pattern, for only $2.10.

The amount of reading, information and entertainment contained in the fifty-two issues of The Youth's Companion and the value of twelve monthly fashion numbers of McCall's at $2.10 offer a real bargain to every reader of this paper.

This two-at-one price offer includes:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues.
2. The Companion Home Calendar for 1917.
3. McCall's Magazine—12 fashion numbers.
4. One 15-cent McCall Dress Pattern—your choice from your first copy of McCall's—if you send a two-cent stamp with your selection.

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

EFFICIENT COOPERATION

Under the old strictly individualist regime a man claimed the right to run his business as he pleased, and it was thought the cheaper the labor he could hire, the better would be his profits and results. Men, women and children were hired, worked long hours and the last ounce of strength practically taken from them. And if these die, more can be secured. "Business is business." But experience has proven, that a man will actually produce more and better, working eight hours a day rather than twelve and fourteen. There is less waste. The cost per unit of product is less.

The man, who has good home surroundings, sanitary conditions in which to work, who has been trained for his work, actually produces more and better results. So the large corporations have come to establish corporation schools, reading rooms, gymnasiums, have beautified their surroundings and are giving voluntarily in many instances the shorter day. Playgrounds are provided for children and sanitary buildings in which to work.

It is true, that some reactionaries still oppose. It is true that some employers are so poor, that they cannot afford economy. Just as a poor man must pay from fifty to one hundred per cent more for his coal by the bucket, his potatoes by the pound than is paid by the man with sufficient means to buy his coal by the ton, his potatoes by the tens of bushels or the carload. In manufacturing it has been proven, that it does not pay to take the last ounce of strength.

But in the church, we still note this tendency to work a good man to death. Oh! well, the Lord will raise up somebody to take his place. We submit, that this is both bad economy and rather doubtful religion. It is bad economy to work a man to the very last we can get out of him.

We hear frequent comment and question from all over the country, as to what is the matter with President Elbert A. Smith. It may be simply stated.

The trouble is one of environment and some of our methods of work. He was handling his fair share of the work of the Presidency, was editor of the HERALD and Autumn Leaves and wrote two books and a number of tracts in little over a year. In addition to this he was attempting to do his chores. With the heavy mental work he was carrying, this extra work meant a real burden.

About Thanksgiving time he, together with his son, tried to move a sidewalk and suffered a severe physical strain. Pain caused him to lose sleep for several nights and was sufficient to complete the effects of overwork. The result is a nervous breakdown. It is natural that this should be accompanied at times with a feeling of discouragement. It is also natural, that he should require rest and quiet for his recovery. But there appears no reason why a real rest should not work a complete recovery. For this we confidently look.

The SAINTS' HERALD has not published his address, because of the request that he be not troubled with correspondence. He needs rest and change as well as climate for his recovery.

When he has recovered, then what? We well remember ten years ago, two years after having suffered a nervous breakdown, a brother spoke to us by the Spirit to the effect, that we were trying to do too much and in danger thereby of becoming disqualified. We called his attention to the fact, that he himself was a leading cause of excessive work.

Of course we have resolved that we are going to be very careful. We will relieve him of past cares. But in fact, will it not be only a short time, until we are again overloading a willing workman?

This case does not stand alone. Six other men have been named to us in the short period of one week, as in danger of suffering a similar collapse. Why will we work a willing man to death?

Then there arises again the question of efficiency. Here was a man, who was better able than any other man in Lamoni to do a certain work. In fact we may safely say he held a unique position in the church, and is better qualified than anyone else we know to have held the positions he occupied—Counselor to the First Presidency, Editor of the HERALD.

There are probably five hundred men in Lamoni who could lay a sidewalk as well, if not better, than he could. Yet such work as this and his chores proved, according to physicians, the final straw. We lose his valuable services to the church for some months, just because some one else did not do this and other detail work for him.

One of the Twelve recently remarked that Enoch, Abraham and others were able to make wonderful development in the knowledge of God, because they had leisure for study and contemplation. To-day we have extraordinary facilities. Would it not pay to give a few, at least, of these men leisure for contemplation for the benefit of the whole body?

During the past year President Frederick M. Smith has been at least once on the verge of collapse. President Elbert A. Smith has suffered the results of an overstrain. Some members of the quorum of Twelve have suffered from overwork.

Certain of the stake officers are even now in danger of collapse, and one at least has been advised by a physician to attempt no chores or heavy physical labor, for if he does so at present, it will mean collapse. He is about his place of business, he is attending to his work, he is not counted by his neighbors among those who are seriously ill, and he is capable of doing some work better than anyone else. It would seem under such circumstances, that he should be saved for the work that he can do best, while others carry on the work equally important and equally vital, which they can do as well or even better than he.

Usually the physical exercise of chores is beneficial. Outdoor work is near nature, and better for every man. But in cases of extreme mental and nervous strain, such is not the case.

We are for democracy and for the common good. We have no plea to make for an aristocracy. That is one serious difficulty in the way. We want these men free to do the work for which they are especially fitted. We do not want an aristocracy.

The men who handle the large matters of the business world, free themselves from details. They leave as much as possible to lieutenants or others to do. Sometimes their secretaries even attend to all personal appointments, secure all transportation and see that papers are prepared when needed. These men provide the executive ability. At times they work under tremendous strain. But when the strain is over, they take a period, ten days, a month or three months' vacation.

But we are not to the place, that we need to do that. Yet, can we not willingly permit the hands of some of these men to be free for the sake of the common good? It is the work that is accomplished by the church that counts, not what each man may do. It is not a case of "That will be glory for me, glory for me, glory for ME." The church has spent money, individuals have spent money, in making special preparation for service to the body. Many of our men are prepared for a service of a special kind. It means an economic waste, it means an intellectual, yes, a spiritual loss to the church if these men and women are prevented from exercising the talent and preparation given of God.

The work of all is needed. The especial characteristics of each man are needed. In the quorum of Twelve there are men who are splendid proselytizers, men who are extra good at a few things. It is to our interests that they be used there on the firing line. There are men, who are good debaters. There are men who are good organizers, who will baptize few, but who look closely to the perfecting of the Saints. There are men who can meet the learned men of the world on an equal footing, and gain respect for the church. There are men who are prepared to deal with the great problems confronting us—this in the one quorum. Let each man magnify his talents.

We have several men in positions of responsibility in the church and its institutions, who, if they are not worth in a worldly sense over $2,500 a year to the church, are worth nothing. Some of them should be worth at least $10,000. By this we mean, that the difference between efficient and inefficient handling of their office means that amount or more to the church, and that those who are engaged in business for the church, if they are not worth that in the market, have not sufficient capacity for their present position.

Now we are not pleading that they should be paid any such salary, nor are they asking such special consideration. Their sacrifice may be more. But we are not especially urging the sacrifice, that they are making for the church. We do urge, that possessing the service of these men, their willing, devoted service, it is bad economy to use them too much of the time on work, which some other men could do. It is a question of results; how can we achieve the utmost possible?

With the right men this means not only a financial saving, not only intellectual conquest, not only the increase of the membership of the church, nor alone the development of the people of the church in an intellectual sense, but it should mean added spiritual power. To the body worn out, the brain exhausted, great revelations are not easy.

We do not hold for an externally imposed reveal-ment on passivity, as might be made by stamping a design on a piece of wood. The glory of God is intelligence. It should be at the height of our mental and physical power, that there lights upon us, that glory which has shone, not on sea or land, the unspeakable effulgence accompanying communion with eternal God, and in this clear light of intelligence the revelation is tested and approved. Revelation should be to increase our intellectual comprehension of truth.

We are not always ready to recognize individual peculiarities and special abilities. A popular person is often elected in some branch or local to a position, for which neither talent nor training fits him or her. We have seen splendid clerks, with a love for detail, put forward, nominated and elected to executive positions. Then because success is not achieved, we hear criticisms, merely because we have not considered that place for which the man or woman is ideally suited.

To find unfitness is only the lesser part of our problem. Our special task is to answer the question, For what is this man or this woman best qualified, to the end that the body as a whole may produce the best results, both in quantity and in quality?

Several of the sisters have made special preparation for work. They have natural talent, and have studied features for work in the Sunday school, Religion or Woman's Auxiliary. Some are especially prepared to handle courses of study in our study classes, extension institute or in the classes of the Woman's Auxiliary. Some are well qualified to write for the church papers.

But some of them are so situated, because of the family relation to the missionary force, that such help is impossible, unless they can be relieved in part from household duties.

Is it to the best interest of the church that these should be held to manual labor, or would it be real economy if the hands of some of them were freed and they made to feel that their service is so valued that they are free to secure assistance for heavy manual labor, such as washing, ironing, scrubbing floors and the like? It seems to the editor, that it would pay many times, if some of them could be made to feel how their services are and should be valued, and at the same time, means given by which others, who are well fitted for such work, may earn a deserved livelihood.

Again, we are making no plea for an aristocracy. We do not even claim this work as being upon the whole more important. We recognize and appreciate the willingness and the great devotion shown by the wives of our missionaries. We appreciate their willingness to work and their devotion. But we do claim, it is more important that they should do work for which they have had perhaps years of special training, while others perhaps more able for such work do part of the household labor.

"We are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry." How shall we use our inheritance and how employ our talents?

Is it not possible for that spirit to be with us, which is expressed in a poem in the Autumn Leaves last December, so that we shall look for the advancement of the work rather than to our individual credit? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," said the Master, and we should be able to show something of his Spirit. For the work is intrusted to all.

S. A. BURGESS.

ABOUT OUR HERE AND THERE ITEMS

We are finding this department so popular that we would like to extend its scope. As you have no doubt noticed, it is made up of brief items from "here and there" which take up much less room than letters saying the same thing.

While it is not intended to dispense with the letter department, which is so much appreciated, we would like to make it a valuable extension of the personal letter method of telling the news. We hope to receive and expect to publish the usual large number of excellent letters from all over the world, but we realize, as do you, that there are many items of general interest that of themselves are worth while but they are not given to our readers because they are not thought of sufficient interest to justify a letter.

We suggest this: Let every community, or as many in the community as care to, write us often with boiled down items intended to be told in just a paragraph. A postal card message will do—in fact would be preferred for this work.

Try to avoid trifling personalities that would only be of local interest, but if they concern the personal work of some one that many of us know or should know, send it in. We must reserve the right to edit the matter and use our best judgment in cases of duplication, as you would expect us to do. Mention church openings, successful meetings, and anything unusual that pertains to our work.

Let us make the "Here and There" items a mirror to reflect the activities of the church that are of general interest. We do not have the space for long news letters from all the branches but we are confident that we can make this department an unqualified success and especially appropriate for the official publication of the church.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

President Smith Returns

President Frederick M. Smith returned to Independence January 21, and is very busy in his office.

Senior Editor Improving

The latest news from Brother Elbert Smith is that he is making some improvement—more noticeable than at any previous time during his recent illness. The Saints should realize that any improvement other than a miraculous healing will be slow, but under the circumstances it should be sure and steady, which we are confident will be the case.

Stake Officers' Meeting

A meeting of the stake officers is called at Independence for Tuesday morning, January 30. The stake presidents will meet with the First Presidency. President John F. Garver, Bishop A. Carmichael and R. J. Lambert left Monday morning to be in attendance. It is hoped through these series of meetings to secure greatly increased efficiency in stake work.

Apostle Greene Returns from England

Elder U. W. Greene returned from England on December 23, landing in New York City that evening, and reaching his home in Boston the next day. He reports a rough passage. Nearly all the passengers were seasick, and he was without nourishment for nine days, so he feels the need of a short rest at home. While resting, he is actively engaged in the work in the Eastern Massachusetts District.

The Position of the Allies

There has come recently to our desk a speech by the Right Honorable H. H. Asquith on "A free future for the world," "Censorship and trade," an official publication on "The treatment of the Armenians," and "Foi et Vie," which includes a review of the latest utterances of Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg. These documents set forth the position of the allies and a defense of the action taken by them towards their enemies and neutral countries. They are of marked interest though our limited space does not permit such a review as has already been made in the secular magazines.

Armenian Horrors Portrayed

The Treatment of the Armenians, Miscellaneous No. 31, 1916, consists of verified letters and documents from eyewitnesses of the sufferings created there by the expulsion of the Armenians from their homes. It is indeed a picture of horror and shows to what barbarity war will bring men. As it would seem there is no form of cruelty but what has been inflicted upon these unfortunate people. This has been done over the objection not only of neutral representatives but even of individual citizens of the allies of Turkey, though the allied governments have remained silent for politic reason.

Carol Singing by Boston Choir

On Christmas eve, the choir of the Boston church went out carol singing. They visited some fifteen homes including that of U. W. Greene, who had just reached home, singing the old English carols. The occurrence was really picturesque as many other choirs were out and the rule was to place candles burning in the window if they wished the choir singers to call, also to place outside some Christmas decoration. At one place they used red electric globes, and also red fire. Also as the night was cold and no homes were entered before midnight came, the singers were wearing blankets, shawls and other articles of covering which reminded one of the picture of carol singers in old England.

A Commendable Effort

In reporting the work of the year to his quorum, Elder H. H. Hand, president of the branch at Perry, Iowa, says, in part: "I am making a special effort to get the church papers and books into every Latter Day Saint home in the branch." Then, further, he adds: "Working out a plan for systematic distribution of our church literature to nonmembers of the town."

It's wonderful the difference it makes in a branch to have all members thoroughly alive to the progress of the church as it is reflected by the publications. A pastor in the pulpit as well as elsewhere in his efforts, finds in such a situation a most pleasing response to his appeals.

True, it is not the only thing necessary to progress, but it is a big thing. We are glad so many of our branch presidents are alive to the possibilities in this line and hope to see the day when it will be considered as essential to have the church literature as for a schoolboy to have his books.

"Reviving" the Border Troops

Now we have heard from both sides in the little word-war that has been waging on the Mexican border.

The Baptists and some other denominations were indignant because Major General Funston refused to allow the holding of old-fashioned revival meetings at the camps.

General Funston resents the idea that because a man puts on his country's uniform he is worse than

Jesus said unto his disciples, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." (John 6: 12.)

The Lord intended by the above to teach his disciples a very important lesson. If there ever was a time in the world's history that people need to practice economy it is now.

Economy invested in a home is good seed sown. It embraces within itself nearly all of the great virtues in life. Out of it grow confidence, courage, hope, self-respect, true manhood. It implies industry, prudence, forethought, self-denial. It means better homes and better food, better health, more comfort and enjoyment, less waste and less anxiety. Those who are practicing it are laying a secure foundation for a successful life. Economy is a principle that should not be treated lightly.

One writer says, "Many of us have earnings so small, compared with necessary expenses, that savings toward a home seem impossible. But this is all the more reason for saving. It is all the more reason for making the best and the most of the little we have for our comfort, security and true progress."

We should save of our earnings what can reasonably be spared so there would be something to lean upon when needed. It is too late to make hay when it rains. We must work while the sun shines. Too many neglect to gather up the fragments when there is plenty. It is very difficult to realize fully the value of small sums. If the nickels and dimes spent for personal luxuries were put in a savings bank the year around, it would surprise many what it would amount to. There is a saying, "Many a mickle makes a muckle." This is true of nothing more than nickels and dimes. The high cost of living is teaching many a lesson.

The work of God is designed to teach men the art of right living. When we are so situated and to some extent independent it is a great factor in spiritual life. When we are crowded in our temporal affairs it robs us many times out of our spiritual enjoyment. We should strive to make wisdom our handmaid in all our work. Order and method have much to do in rendering labor less toilsome. One has said, "A man's greatest ornament is his work, and he always consults his dignity by doing it."

President Wilson said in one of his speeches, "The supreme human pleasure, it seems to me, is to do something worth doing the way it ought to be done."

There is a thought in that that we might take home and apply to our everyday life.

A young brother said once to one of his neighbors, "My father did not only give me a home and teach me how to work and make money—but he taught me how to use it." We may all more or less come short to use wisely that which is intrusted to our care.

Although it is the main thing in life, there is a great difference in being industrious and being greedy. The Lord was pleased with that servant that had doubled his talent. We cannot waste our time or means and be pleasing in the sight of God. The Lord has reminded his people again and again that he requires their surplus property, and after that a tenth of their increase annually. (Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1.) It is a wrong idea for anyone to wait until he can pay a large amount at once. The Lord means what he says, he wants it annually, whatever we have to pay, little or much. We should be industrious in our affairs in life, like that servant that had doubled his talent. Otherwise we would have no surplus or tithing to pay.

There is a saying, "Worry is a fire which burns and destroys, but produces no heat." Another writer says, "Where there are no worries there is no inspiration and little activity." We can go to the extreme in anything. But there is not much to that individual that has not worry enough about him to be interested in his affairs in life to make it a success.

When we meet our dear brethren who have left all for Christ's sake to bring the glad message of life and salvation to their fellow men, they meet with many discouragements and no doubt at times to some extent worry about their work. They are thankful for a little help and a word of encouragement. It is too late to put flowers on their graves after they are dead; rather give them a bouquet when alive so they can enjoy it. Responsibility is a principle that may not always be considered for what it means, but there is a consciousness attached to it that must at some time be accounted for.

Brother Joseph said, "The man of ordinary perception must necessarily be in a degree conscious of some measure of responsibility attaching to his existence." There are many things in this world that we might desire to have, such things that we do not necessarily need. Before buying we should stop and think, Can we afford it? Things bought before we are able to pay oftentimes bring trouble. No one is to blame but ourselves. There are enough people in misery who cannot help it without anyone placing himself in the same condition. What can be avoided need not be endured.

Pride is one of the greatest evils of the day. The Lord has warned his people to be aware of it. It carries with it other evil habits which lead to destruction. It brings chastisement, sorrow, unbelief, carelessness, slothfulness, uncleanness. We can get along without the price of those who look only upon the outward appearance. Sensible, thinking men and women will think more of the ones who are living within their means than the ones who try to appear different from what they really are.

Our heavenly Father is willing to bless his people so they may enjoy life. If they will only submit to his rules of government which are founded in justice and truth, if we expect to have our bodies and minds invigorated we must use moderation in our work, sleeping and eating. It is not enough to look into the perfect law of liberty, but it is the doer of the law that obtains the blessing.

We have before us light and darkness, truth and error, joy and sorrow, each other exist side by side, and open to the choice to every free agent.

One has said, "He who will not take advice gets knowledge when trouble overtakes him."

"IN THE BEGINNING GOD"—Part 2

BY H. A. STEBBINS

A "COMMON PROGENITOR"

From the books I have read I believe that few real scientists have ignored God as the direct Creator, or altogether left him out of their studies and writings. And evidently these have not ignored him from actual enmity. Their idea has been that the law of evolution is sufficient to account for a steady progress from a common progenitor through generations down to man. Whence came the original protoplasm they do not claim to know. Darwin was the leader in ability in the "Darwinian theory," and Huxley, Wallace, and Spencer added to it by their travels and studies.

Professor Huxley frankly admitted the necessity of a preexisting living protoplasm in order to produce life, and he said that for the "origin of this he did not pretend to account," because he had no idea how or by what power it came into being.

Charles Darwin said that he believed that the varieties of life "are all descendants of one common progenitor," but as to how this common progenitor originated he did not claim any knowledge, nor even speculate upon it. He wrote plainly about "life, with its several powers, having been originally breathed by the Creator into a few forms or into one." Hence he was not an atheist.

Professor J. P. Thompson states in his work as follows:

Mr. Darwin's theory is not that of spontaneous generation, for he maintains that "not only the various domestic races, but the most distinct genera and orders within the same great class, are all descendants of one common progenitor."—Man in Genesis and in Geology, p. 38.

Herbert Spencer wrote as follows:

No form of evolution, organic, or inorganic, can be spontaneous, but in every instance the antecedent forces must be adequate in their qualities.—Man in Genesis and in Geology, p. 81.

Thus we see that these students and authors have been misunderstood to quite a degree. Their chief error was caused by their love for the idea that all life could come from a common progenitor whoever may have created it, instead of accepting the record in Genesis that God was the creator of each order and species by itself.

SCIENTISTS RECOGNIZE GOD IN CREATION

But the worshipping wise men are more numerous than the others, and they testify that proofs are many that God created not only the original that they allow, but also that he made all the species that now exist or have existed. Professor Louis Agassiz wrote very clearly of the great systems of life upon earth and then asked,

How could this system have been called into existence if there does not exist One Supreme Intelligence as the author of all things. (Essays, Section Four.)—Man in Genesis and in Geology, p. 40.

Professor J. D. Dana wrote:

The perpetual presence of Mind, infinite in power, wisdom and love, and ever acting, is manifest in the whole history of the past . . . Man, the offspring, not of Nature but of God. Bibliotheca Sacra, January, 1856.—Man in Genesis and in Geology, pp. 43, 47.

Alexander Winchell, professor of geology, zoology, and botany, author of many books and treatises, states as follows:

We have witnessed the progressive development of the physical world, its successive adaptations to its successive populations, and its completion and special preparation for the occupancy of man, and have learned that the whole creation is the product of one eternal intelligent, Master purpose, the coherent result of one Mind. God worked out his all-embracing plans. . . . The geological doctrine is not to deny the unlimited power of Deity, for nothing has done more than geology to unfold and demonstrate that power. . . . Beyond is only God.—Sketches of Creation, pp. 16, 30, and 40.

Hugh Miller, of Edinburgh, a man beloved for the nobility and faithfulness of his life, and one of the most learned of earth, wrote Testimony of the Rocks, Old Red Sandstone, Footprints of the Creator, and other books. In one he quotes, with approval, certain statements by Professor Louis Agassiz, who, after mentioning the forms of animal life existing before man, as found in the geological strata of the earth, says:

Their connection is to be sought in the view of the Creator himself, whose aim in forming the earth, in allowing it to undergo the successive changes which geology has pointed out, and in creating successively all the different types of animals which have passed away, was to introduce man upon the surface of our globe. Man is the end toward which all the animal creation has tended from the first appearance of the first Paleozoic fishes.—Testimony of the Rocks, p. 229. Taken from Agassiz' principles of Zoology.

Then Hugh Miller himself says:

The character of man as a fellow worker with his Creator in the material province has still to be considered in the light of geology. Man was the first, and is still the only creature of whom we know anything, who has set himself to carry on and improve the work of the world's original framer. . . . Man in this great department of industry, is what none of his predecessors upon the earth ever were,—a "fellow worker" with the Creator.—Testimony of the Rocks, pp. 235, 238.

From Professor Joseph P. Thompson's valuable book I make the following extracts:

If man was produced by evolution from preexisting organisms, where are the transitional forms? No traces have been found of a creature intermediate between the ape and man, nor a simian tribe so far advanced as to fill the gap. . . . In the thousands of years since men and apes have lived side by side, the ape has made no advance toward the form, the habits, or the intelligence of man.—Man in Genesis and in Geology, pp. 43, 44.

It is not the Bible that traces the origin of man back to the monkey or the trilobite;—this makes him the child of God, created in his image, for his companionship and his glory. True, the Bible represents man as fallen and degraded in character, but this by his own act, because God had made him a being of voluntary powers, which powers he perverted to his own degradation. But, by reason of these very powers, he is capable of recovery and restoration to his original place and destiny. . . . As if to represent himself upon the earth God crowned man with glory and honor and set him over all the works of his hand.—Ibid., p. 48.

Is it true as some physicians affirm, that man is just the latest outcome of nature's efforts at improving upon her own experiments in organic life, the treasured selection of some accidental variety of birth in a chimpanzee family? . . . Quite otherwise would I seek the solution of the problem of life. I find in it three factors, God, Man, and Nature.—Ibid., p. 51.

No gorilla ever took out a patent, or made any improvement upon the condition in which he was born; no man-like ape ever developed out of nature anything beyond what his instinct taught him at the first.—Ibid., p. 61.

"THE FIRST FLESH UPON THE EARTH"

I will now speak of a statement in the Inspired Version of the Scriptures which has caused some comment. Formerly it troubled me, but I believe now that the meaning is plain. It reads: "And man became a living soul, the first flesh upon the earth, the first man also."—Genesis 2: 8.

I presume that this is the correct rendering of the original, and if so then the history given in the first and second chapters of Genesis refers to and includes only the era or period in which Adam was introduced. The two chapters only claim to give account of the era of man as the head of creation, when Adam was placed on the earth in the completeness of the manhood which made him actually the representative of God on this globe, to have charge over the earth, and "over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." (Genesis 1: 30, I. V.) In the prehistoric ages, between the periods of great convulsions and upheavals in the earth, there lived not only the monsters of the land and the sea, whose great bones have been found in our time, but also the mollusks (shell creatures) of the Silurian age, the fishes of the Devonian age, and the later forms of life in the periods following. Of the next period, the Devonian age, Professor Winchell states that "few beings basked in the sun or bathed in the waters of the Carboniferous age." The chief characteristics of this period was the unlimited vegetation and vast forests, from which came the formation of the great coal beds of the earth. I quote again from Professor Alexander Winchell as follows:

Though man was not, except in the conceptions of the Almighty, man was regarded in the preparations of this age, the far-seeing Planner of the universe stored the carboniferous fuel in repositories where it could never perish, and where it could await the uses of the coming race of man. Nor was this even the end of the providential purposes. In a subsequent age those barren rocks and those beds of coal became covered, first with the basis of a soil, and then with the soil itself; so that man when he should come upon the stage, might find an inexhaustible mine of fuel, and a foothold for the products of his farm upon the selfsame acres. . . . There was never another period of the world when the supply of carbon was so great. . . . The same general preparatory movements were to be continued, continued till the finished earth had been elaborated for the reception of man.—Sketches of Creation, pp. 160, 161.

It is said that "the empire of fishes was prolonged through the Carboniferous period," but not much other life, the formation of coal seams and layers of stone being the special purpose of that age. But near its end, when the upheavals and convulsions of nature subsided and greater quiet reigned, there are evidences of reptile life. Later the real Reptilian age came in, when the saurian monsters, megatheriums and mammoths, walked the earth, and sported in its waters for long periods.

The point is that the four ages already spoken of, the Silurian, the Devonian, the Carboniferous, and the Reptilian, are all geologically marked in the strata of the earth as distinct and separate from each other, and that all forms of life perished at the end of each age, and with the beginning of the new ages new species of life, or those with great improvements began, and thus new creatures were provided for each age. There were periods of overthrow and destruction of life between the periods of growth and progress. This is especially shown by successive layers of coal being covered by successive layers of rock, and then of earth, with trees and other vegetation mixed in, as all coal miners have experienced. In the coal and stone measures of the earth are seen the fossil forms of trilobites, fishes, etc., and petrified tropical trees. The writer remembers seeing those that came from mines in Illinois in 1870-1875.

If we are to judge from that which is known rather than from that which is conjectured, we are compelled to conclude that the varied forms of animal life did not come into being by a gradual evolution from the Eozoon (beginning) but as so many original utterances of the skilled Artisan of Creation.—Sketches of Creation, p. 76.

That is a grand statement by an able scholar. And another student of the science of the earth, G. J. Douglas, Duke of Argyle, wrote of the distinct forms of life in the Silurian and the Devonian ages, and he said these words about the two ages:

There is no trace of links or of transitional forms between the great class of mollusks (in the one) and the great class of fishes (in the other). There is no reason to suppose that such forms, if they had existed, could have been destroyed.—Primeval Man, p. 45. Published in 1869.

That is, there was no parentage continuing over from one age by which the animal life of the next age had its beginning. The forms beginning in the next age, even of similar species, were radically different in their construction and powers from those that had existed in the previous age. Professor Winchell says:

Successive extinctions, wrought by the lapse of time, or by violent geological revolutions, (were) followed by successive creations of higher and higher forms.—Sketches of Creation, p. 123.

MAN IN THE FIFTH GREAT AGE

Thus came in the fifth great age called the Mammalian age, with man as its head. According to the Inspired Version this age had as its beginning man, and its highest representative, Adam, as the first flesh upon the earth, which was now prepared for his permanent home.

That celebrated geologist, Hugh Miller, quotes from Professor Agassiz, where he speaks of the proofs found showing continual progress in animal life and of the "increasing resemblance to man," yet he says that "this connection is not the consequence of a direct lineage between the animals of different ages," and that "there is nothing like parental descent connecting them. . . . Nor does man descend from the mammals which preceded him in the Tertiary period." Then follows Agassiz' admirable statements, already quoted from Hugh Miller, that the Creator brought into being, "successively all the different types of animals which have passed away," with the purpose "to introduce man upon the surface of our globe," and "man is the end toward which all the animal creation has tended from the first." (Sketches of Creation 229.)

Hugh Miller himself wrote:

At length the responsible Lord of Creation, formed in God's own image, is introduced upon the scene. . . . Man is the great creature—worker of the world, its one created being, that taking up the work of the adorable Creator, carries it on . . . and finds a field for his persevering ingenuity and skill in every occupation which his Maker had moved before him.—Testimony of the Rocks, pp. 210, 239.

Some who read this article will remember to have seen in the solid rock of unknown ages, as opened by mining and mountain excavations, those layers of many kinds that were formed long before air-breathing animals like man could possibly have lived upon the earth. All have seen the fossil remains of trilobites of the Silurian age, of the fishes of Devonian age, the chambered shells and tree petrifications of the Carboniferous age, and the fossil forms of lizards and other reptiles of the Reptilian age. During all these periods of earth's history unnumbered millions of specimens of life were deposited among the strata of rock that for miles extend beneath the surface of the earth. There are hundreds of layers, and one geologist states that these layers are deposited "in as much order as the drawers of a well regulated cabinet."

Still further confirmation of the same important principle is found in the well-established fact that there have been upon the globe, previous to the now existing races, not less than five distinct periods of organized existence, that is, five great groups of animals and plants, so completely independent that no species whatever is found in more than one of them, have lived and successively passed away before the creation of the races that now occupy the surface.—Religion and Geology, p. 22.

He says that there have been found in the rocks thirty-five thousand species of animals and plants.

Professor Winchell states that a fair estimate of the time it would take to change vegetable growth into coal, whether anthracite or bituminous, and then between the coal seams to form layers of solid stone, and thus, one after the other, for nature to build up the great tiers of coal and rock, it would take at least a million years. He mentions seventy-six seams of coal found in Nova Scotia, one thirty-seven feet thick, another twenty-two feet, and other very thin layers. In Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, one called the "Mammoth Vein," twenty-nine feet thick. (Sketches of Creation, pp. 155, 156.)

BY E. E. LONG

THE SECTARIAN CONCEPT

The sectarian concept of Christ is summed up by Mr. Best in the following words:

The nonepiscopal churches say that as they know Christ, he was a soul so completely immersed in spiritual realities that he simply could not have concerned himself with choosing officers for an organization and drafting a constitution and such other formalism. To him Christianity was a life—a vital, self-perpetuating force which must scatter through the world spiritual seed to reproduce after its kind wherever it fell on good ground. How it might grow—under what exterior forms it might flourish—he cared not, only if the life was still the life that truly came from him. Housed in one form of church or another—what could that signify, provided only men were being made new creatures in himself? More unthinkable than all else is that the Lord Jesus would set artificial limits on spiritual forces. He was not creating in the earth a monopoly of grace; he was giving his grace to the whole world as a free gift for all men. For any company of men then to constitute themselves God's exclusive representatives on earth, is a straightout contradiction of Christ's own generosity and democracy.

THE SPIDER'S WEB OF DELUSION

This broad, liberal, erroneous "large view" of Christ is the spider's web of delusion woven on the brambles of private interpretation, in the meshes of which the Christian nations are so hopelessly entangled to-day. It is the viper of "confused utterances" hatched in the cockatrice den of apostasy which leads into the numerous "crooked paths" of "false philosophy." It contradicts the great truth enunciated by Jesus when he said: "And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand." (Mark 3:24.) The terrible plight of fallen Christianity demonstrates the force of the Savior's logic. Through the magnifying lens of this "large view" Calvinists for centuries have seen the sprinkling of babies as an apostolic rite, and at the same time it revealed others not so "baptized" writhing in eternal torments, to the "praise of his vindictive justice." Through the same "large view" telescope other sectarians see Jesus and the apostles baptizing adults only by immersion, some for the remission of sins, some because their sins have already been pardoned, others three times, face forward, etc.

Through the prismatic angles of this remarkable glass, the doors of the various Christian churches can be seen locked and barred to all except those who comply with the hard and fast rules of entrance, while the pearly gates above are beheld standing ajar to all who truly love the Lord, regardless of credal affiliation. Wonderful indeed! It so enormously magnifies the things that appeal to the popular fancy that it completely obliterates the unchangeable character of God and nullifies the fiat of heaven: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." (Isaiah 55:8.)

I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.—John 14:6.

Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3:5.

He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.—John 10:1.

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2:38.

But Jesus did "concern himself about choosing officers for an organization," and he emphasized this fact: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you." (John 15:16.) That the apostle occupied an office is clearly evident from the fact that it was prophesied concerning Judas Iscariot: "Let another take his office" (Psalm 109:8), and from the further fact that Paul, an apostle, says, "I magnify mine office" (Romans 11:13). But with those who have obtained the "large view" set out by Mr. Best, New Testament precedent has little weight, if it happens to conflict with the creed.

Jesus also concerned himself about organization by "appointing other seventy" (Luke 10:1) and sending them out to represent him, their duties and prerogatives being almost identical with those of the twelve. These are scriptural facts that no amount of theological cajolery can set aside. God "set" the various officers in the "body of Christ" with the same fixed unchangeability that he set the various members in the physical body of man. He set the bow in the cloud; he set the sun, moon, and stars in the firmament and they are still there just as the Great Architect placed them in the beginning—for the principal reason that man is unable to remove them. If they were subject to the control of man a "large view" of the "generosity and democracy" of God would suggest many changes from the original plan. But, being beyond the reach of man, they continue to obey the perfect law according to the original design, while the beautiful "body of Christ" has not only been crucified but scarified and mutilated beyond all recognition by the heretical phariseeism of modern times.

Directed of God, as he claimed, Joseph Smith organized a visible church with the various officers mentioned in the apostolic church arranged in regular order with their several duties defined. It stands to his credit as a church builder that after nearly a century of world-wide opposition and criticism no necessity for a change in the organic structure or doctrinal arrangement has ever occurred; while contemporary institutions have repeatedly revised their creeds and altered their church polity. And while apostasy intercepted the progress of the work whereby the church suffered reproach from "false brethren crept in unawares," it survived the terrible ordeal and to-day demands recognition in a way that can no longer be denied.

The angel's message as first announced by Joseph Smith, and as it is perpetuated and promulgated by the Reorganized Church, points with unerring aim to the apostolic landmarks, to the "old paths wherein is the good way," but, bewildered and perplexed, the people, blinded by priestcraft and "confused utterances," say, "we will not walk therein." Overlooking the pearl of great price at their feet, they see nothing but the dark shadow of apostasy in the mountains of the west, from which they turn away with justifiable loathing and disgust.

But why should Christians of our day have such an agony over "Mormonism"? With all the blackness of their criminal record, the Mormons of Utah at their worst never did so much to injure the cause of Christ and dishonor civilization as the Christians of Europe and America are doing now, to say nothing of an inglorious past. I have no inclination to minimize or excuse the evils of Utah Mormonism, and would not say a word about it in this connection were it not for the fact that Joseph Smith is made the scapegoat for the sins of Brigham Young and his successors, and the true Latter Day Saints who represent the original cause are reproached with the crimes of those who apostatized from the faith. It is a common habit for men and women of the so-called Christian churches who lecture on "Mormonism" to associate the name of Joseph Smith with the dark history of Utah and ascribe to him responsibility for all that is found there. With just as much consistency might we lay the blame for the present war at the foot of the cross, and charge all the crimes of medieval and modern Christianity to the philosophy of Christ, as many people are doing. The misdeeds of those who profess to be the friend of Joseph Smith furnishes a convenient pretext for opposing the truth as inaugurated by Mr. Smith and represented by the true Latter Day Saints. It is a rare thing for those who lecture to make a distinction between the true and the false.

It is a matter of reliable history that the popular churches arose from a seething cesspool of iniquity and crime, alive and creeping with the vermin of apostasy. And we don't have to journey far into American history to see Christians boring holes in Quaker tongues with hot irons and beating women on their bare backs as they were driven through the streets tied to an ox cart—and all done in the name of Christianity! They never saw anything like it among Latter Day Saints. For thirty-five years after Joseph Smith organized the church, slavery flourished on American soil, fostered and supported by Christians of the leading sects who bartered and trafficked in the souls of their fellows. From the first slavery was opposed and Joseph Smith expressed the attitude of Latter Day Saints when he said: "Give the poor black man his freedom, for one hour of virtuous liberty is worth a whole eternity of bondage." To-day Christians, with no word of protest from the churches, are filling their coffers with blood money by manufacturing and shipping abroad munitions of war to destroy their fellow Christians. Could "Mormons" do worse? Say, Christians, listen! If Jesus were here now and you should drag "Mormonism" before him for judgment, and he should again stoop and write with his finger on the ground, who among you could consistently cast the first stone? There is no darker page in history than that which records the unspeakable crimes committed by rival theologians in the name of the church. And those who now are the loudest in their "exposures" of Joseph Smith, and the Latter Day Saints generally, are barely one remove from the shadow of the Dark Ages.

Only a few weeks ago the writer, with some other Latter Day Saints, listened to a woman lecturer who said that "Mormonism," without making any distinction, was a moral cancer on the social body of America, and that the only way to treat it was by the "caustic of gun powder and the surgery of the sword." This "lecture" has the indorsement of some of the leading ministers of the country, and when I heard it I was led to believe that the spirit which moved John Calvin to burn Michael Servetus had been transmitted to his spiritual posterity. Referring to Carrie Nation's method of hatchet warfare, she said, "I would like to do a little smashing on my own account, but I'm afraid of the law." Thus by her own infamous confession it is only the restraining influence of the civil law that stays the bloody hand of persecution now. On three different occasions the writer has been at the mercy of a "Christian" mob who thirsted for "Mormon" blood; but, like the aforementioned lady "soldier of the cross," they were afraid of the law. John was right when he said, "And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus" (Revelation 17: 6); "and in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth" (Revelation 18: 24). But the day of her retribution is at hand and the smoke of her "burning" already darkens the eastern horizon with no signs of abatement.

If to do good were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces.—Shakespeare.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

RECREATION IN THE CHURCH

No church alive to its opportunities nowadays neglects the recreational side of human nature, writes Marc N. Goodnow in The Churchman (Protestant Episcopal, New York). Indeed, "the growth of the recreational side of church work, both social and physical, has been more marked within the past two or three years than in the whole quarter century preceding," and the effectiveness of the physical recreation program is being shown, we are told, in "a closer-knit church constituency," and in a higher "spiritual standard and morale." The Young Men's Christian Association, with its 707 gymnasiums, 307 athletic fields, 400 swimming pools, and 4,645 summer camps in North America, is noted as a powerful influence tending to broaden the activities of the church so as to utilize the character values resident in properly administered athletics. Whether or not there is direct religious training, "there are enough of the elements of fair play, good sportsmanship, clean and gentlemanly conduct demanded by the gymnasium game to make it of vital importance." Besides, it is being recognized that "it is rather a difficult thing for an ailing man to maintain his faith at white heat." The writer continues:

In the diocese of Pennsylvania, recently, the social service commission investigated the recreational facilities in the Philadelphia parishes, finding that as many as forty of the eighty-odd churches of the city were equipped with gymnasiums. The following statement is interesting as showing the various activities of the different Philadelphia parishes in the field of recreation.

Twenty-six parishes have basket ball.

Twenty-nine parishes have frequent supervised dances, in some cases with employed teachers.

Sixteen parishes have classes in calisthenics.

Fifteen own stereopticons and have frequent lantern lectures.

Four have motion pictures.

Among the other forms of recreation reported by the commission were these: Dramatic entertainments (reported by all parishes), Boy Scout patrols, military drill, baseball teams, summer camps and outings, shuffleboard, bowling alleys, pool and billiard tables, bathing facilities, reading and game rooms, social gatherings of parishioners and others, kindergartens, outdoor playgrounds, tennis courts.

However, it is interesting to know that it is not only the large cities that have utilized the recreational field for their churches. In the small town of Litchfield, Michigan, with about a thousand souls, a movement was started to install motion pictures for the benefit of the young and old people of the three churches the community supports. The motion picture is now an established institution, giving exhibitions of a popular nature on Saturday afternoons and nights and sacred pieces on Sunday nights.

In Detroit, twenty-two churches have gymnasiums in connection with their regular social work; six churches are renting gymnasiums for their members; eighteen church teams have combined in basket ball leagues; six churches employ athletic directors to supervise all games. In addition to this, Doctor J. B. Modesitt, physical director of the Detroit Young Men's Christian Association, has established a normal class for the training of young men who are expecting to take up gymnasium instruction as a regular part of their church work or for those who are already instructing churchmen and wish to obtain more theory and practice as teachers of athletics. . . .

The gymnasium is by no means the solution of the recreational problem of the church, but it is one of growing importance because it is one of growing popularity. Because of the great variety of activities in this direction and the difference in conditions, every church must, through experimentation, work out its own best program; in no case, nowadays, does the church alive to the opportunities and possibilities among its membership neglect this most important side of human nature—the recreational.

RAISING MONEY FOR THE CHURCH

Possibly not all of you know that Harold Bell Wright, the author of so many "best sellers," including The Shepherd of the Hills, was for some years in the ministry of the Christian Church. His last pastorate was at Lebanon, Missouri, and the writer of this was his immediate successor. When Brother Wright went there he found the usual custom prevailed of raising the finances by suppers, sales and other business enterprises and depending largely on the people outside the congregation for funds. He accepted the call on condition that these methods were all to be "cut out" and all money raised by the old primitive method of volunteer contributions "as the Lord hath prospered." The people had many misgivings at first but the plan worked so well that they have never raised funds in any other way since then and all the other churches in town adopted the same plan.

The church never got along so well in its finances as it did after this and a great burden was taken off the shoulders of the women. During the years that the writer was there he could go to the bank every Monday morning and get his week's salary credited on his book and if the funds were not quite sufficient the church owed it to the bank and not to the preacher.

We are the people who love to hark back to the early days for our example in all religious matters. Let us hope that all our congregations can some day get back to their example in this. I hope no one will take this as a criticism of our splendid women who have worked so loyally and strenuously to assist in raising money for various purposes. Good, loyal Marthas are they and I believe they will join me in looking forward to the day when our methods will be as scriptural as our doctrines.—Doctor Charles S. Medbury in the Christian Call.

THE DANGER OF MATERIALISM

The war has stirred all nations to their profoundest depths, and we are trying and testing every bit of the fabric of modern civilization to see whether it is necessary in our way of living. We shall probably discard many things as a result of this searching national introspection. In the department of education there was probably never a higher degree of thoughtfulness than at this present crisis.

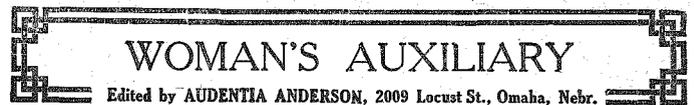

The great danger in this country to be avoided in our school work is the danger of materialism. In Europe the intense suffering which has prevailed will give a background of seriousness and thoughtfulness to all endeavor that we Americans shall not possess except in a faint reflection. Europe will have to think in terms of materialism. Stupendous debts will have to be repaired, shattered homes will have to be restored. It is to be hoped that the schools in the United States will do something to halt the appeal that is being made on every hand to the obvious, the cheap, the popular. The agencies for mental development are all too few, and if the schools fail in their duty the condition will be deplorable.—The Literary Digest, December 23, 1916.

RELICS OF PREHISTORIC RACE IN NEW MEXICO

TUCSON, ARIZONA, January 23.—Relics of huge settlements of a prehistoric race of highly civilized Indians who built great dams and irrigated desert lands in the southwestern corner of New Mexico were found by Ranger Don S. Sullivan of the Peloncillo and Animas district of the Chiricahua forest, who reported his discovery to the forestry headquarters here to-day. His report has been forwarded to the American archaeological association. Picture writing which showed the dinosaur and the four-toed horse was found on a crude paper made of reeds and on walls of caves.

Ranger Sullivan reported he believed the settlements were the original dwellings of the Aztec tribe.—Associated Press.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Of Prime Importance

After all is said and done, the foundations of the reforms we are hoping to see established in the conditions of our modern homes, both individual and civic, must track right back to the doors of the parents of the day. The citizens of to-day are what they are because of the training they have received; the citizens of to-morrow will likewise be expressions of what we parents of the present are doing, or failing to do. There is no exception to this rule. Even the homeless waif is at the mercy of those able to help and care for him, and as those persons fail, or succeed in accomplishing the task of rescuing him from untoward impressions, just so they fail or succeed in raising the standards of at least one unit in to-morrow's activities.

How long would it take the parents of to-day to revolutionize the world? How long would it take them to change the social code—to establish it upon principles of truth and purity? How long would it take even just the parents in the church to make a most decided upheaval of some of the present false and pernicious "standards" of this Nation? At least not longer than one generation! Is it not worth the effort?

Sister Wight, one of our young mothers in Israel, has her ideals for the children of our church fixed high, and she has open eyes to many of the follies of the present-day attitude among women—not only in the "world," but, alas, among our own. Two many are indifferent to the dangers, asleep to the possibilities, and insensible to the responsibilities. How long will we continue thus? Is it not time for every mother and every father in the church to take their children seriously, and to study their mutual spiritual welfare: study to understand the deep mysteries of mind: that their training will be wise, and fertile in longed-for results? Too many parents succeed only in arousing resentment and anger in their children when they attempt to guide; too many are so engrossed with other interests that they do not take the time to even try to grasp the fundamental principles of child training! If we have clothed, ever so richly, the bodies of our children, and failed to implant in the minds of those same children a deep-seated love for right and purity, have we been real parents to them—standing in the place of God to the young souls given to us to guide and fit for the "heavenly calling" unto which Paul says we are all called?

It goes even deeper, farther back. As Sister Wight suggests, the pity is that our young people are not trained for parenthood before that most sacred and serious work is thrust upon them. Would we place a boy in a surveyor's office, to do the most important work intrusted to his company, without one single thought of preparation and qualification for that work? Would we place a young girl upon a piano bench, before a large and critical audience, and expect her to play accurately and with spiritual interpretation, a masterpiece of music, without having first introduced her to the fundamental principles of the art? Nay, as you know, she must have plodded, diligently and with painstaking care and precision, the long, long path of study and preparation, before she could acquit herself intelligently of such a performance. Is the art of motherhood inferior? Is a failure to acquire and perform any less disastrous?

A speaker before one of our women's clubs dwelt with emphasis upon this lack in the curriculum of the education of our young people. She told of lecturing before an audience at one time, at the close of which lecture a fine broad shouldered young man came up and asked if he might walk to her hotel with her, as he wanted to tell her his troubles. This is the tale he unfolded to her sympathetic ears:

"My father was a farmer, and from my earliest recollections it was borne in upon me that I, too, was to be a 'tiller of the soil,' but also that I was to be at the very topnotch of the profession. I was tutored and trained, by means of experiments and observation, and by careful explanations from my devoted father; and, as I got older, I was sent to high school, to college, and then through an exhaustive course at the State agricultural school, all with the same end in view; that of making of me an intelligent farmer and stock raiser, and of qualifying me for that work.

"At the university I met and loved a little girl—well, to show you what I think of Mary, I will tell you, there isn't her equal in the world! She is bright, brainy, well educated, well poised, and cheerful and kindly in disposition. A couple of years after our marriage, our baby came, and from the first he did not seem strong or well. We both tried to do all we could for him, kindly neighbors came to our rather isolated farm home, to make suggestions and give advice. One evening as the child lay, so sick and suffering, upon the lap of his fond and despairing mother, I walked up and down the room in helpless agony of mind. Suddenly I stopped in front of my little wife and burst out with: 'Mary! it isn't fair, or right, or just! You haven't had half a chance to know what to do! Why, just think! If that were a little calf, or a lamb, or a pig, I would know just what to do for it, but because it is a human being, our own little son, neither you nor I know what to do for him! Why, oh, why, were we not given a chance to know about caring for our own?' It wasn't Mary's fault, Mrs. —, nor was it mine; it was simply this false system of education, that teaches a girl to sing and to paint, or to read Greek or speak French but gives her never a hint of how to care for her own offspring!"

Now, this is the deplorable truth! What can we do to help matters? What can we do to help matters? Well, let us as Latter Day Saints, to a man, or to a woman (or both) determine that so far as we are concerned this shall not remain a fact any longer! Let us go in for a study of the highest thing that can be commissioned to us, and learn how to properly care for the unfolding minds and spirits of the little ones, at our knees, to offend one of which would be worse for us than to have a millstone about our necks! Let us, as parents of older boys and girls, talk to them of their prospective duties as parents; let us impress upon them the important fact that their lives, to-day, are determining the good or the ill inheritances of their offspring! Let us patiently teach them to regard marriage and parenthood as God established conditions through which his glory may be more fully expressed!

Give Sister Wight's article a careful reading, and then see if there is not need for study and light on this subject in your midst. Write to her, if you are uncertain how to proceed in organizing yourself and friends into classes to study these problems. Get some of the books she mentions. You will be surprised how the mere reading of some of the most up to date of the many books upon this subject, will, with the aid of the good Spirit which had been promised to us as we "study all good books," open your minds and understandings to the CLEAR DUTY of latter-day parents! Read these books in connection with the many and repeated warnings and counsels we have in the latter-day revelations, and the church will very soon see the effects of this united and consecrated study on the part of her women: "handmaidens of the Lord!"

"As the Twig is Bent so the Tree is Inclined"

A keen realization of the necessity for scientific knowledge of child training is growing in many minds. Nevertheless, it is astonishing how many of us as school patrons, who would not think of letting an untrained teacher instruct our children are yet content to mold and form the most plastic years of the "to-be" school child, with no scientific knowledge of systematic child training. More than this, we forget that the "school child" spends by far more hours at home with the untrained parent than at school with the trained teacher; yet we expect the school to turn out perfect youths!

Where lies the trouble? Would it not be wise for us as parents to get in line, to prepare ourselves so that our home training may augment the school training in so far as that training is good? Then, we may add the two, rather than subtract the one from the other, to determine the child's real standing—his actual progress. The early years give parents the best chance for correct training, for the Lord says, "Power is not given Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hand of their fathers."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 3. Why did God say to Satan: Hands off the child during his early years? That great things may be required of their parents! That's the time to work! Do we know how to make the best use of that short period?

Too many fathers and mothers "just growed;" they have no other reason for doing things than, "That's the way mother did" or "Mrs. Jones does that way and her children are well behaved." This chance method of child training has its dangers. As Hillyer puts it, "Chance may make habits good but chance may just as well make them bad. If left to chance alone, according to the laws of chance, the good and bad are, in the long run, about equally divided." The results of child training are given in terms of habit, and the child that reveals many bad habits shows wrong development. This wrong development is more often due to ignorance than to willful mistraining.

It is very necessary that something definite be done in this day when environment is so complex that it presents a new problem in training the modern child. Just as old ideas of what a child is, have changed, so must many of the methods, (especially the "chance" method) or training be given up. The real difficulty lies in the fact that too many of us have waited until we are parents before we have even cared to enter into the study of child life and the intricate details of its training. The mature with children soon learn to appreciate their need for all the wisdom they can get and, too often, must regret the fact that they made no preparation for the specific problems their children present! Alas, they expected to meet the issue on the moment of its occurrence, untrained, unprepared, and, as a result, often unwisely.

Something definite has been done. Sister Stebbins, who worked so faithfully for years as superintendent of the home and child welfare department studied many standard books on all topics concerning the child. She gathered the best from numerous sources and condensed the information into those splendid articles which appeared regularly in the HERALD. Many mothers, no doubt, have felt a deep gratitude to her for the help they have received from results of her faithful efforts. The Religio-Sunday school normal department stresses child study as fundamental in training their teachers. How large a proportion of the women of the church who need this study have taken advantage of the opportunity given by these departments of the auxiliary work of the church? If they are not all doing specific study as a result of that work, then something more needs to be done,—new impetus must be given. Those who sense the need for trained mothers must use their influence to secure earnest students in this work, and no local can be filling its highest mission where this study is being neglected!

More than this, to make the most permanent progress we must look to the future. How? By training our young girls to be competent mothers as well as efficient housekeepers. You may say,—“Why burden a young girl with such things before she is ready to care for her own? She'll have enough of it then.” Let this incident answer the question: A few days ago a mother who is now grandmother, too, picked up a copy of a cradle roll paper, The Golden Now, at her daughter's, and read a few suggestions of excellent value to the mother. She soon tossed it aside with the exclamation, “How could a mother remember to do all those things?” Remember! That's the word! How can a mother or anyone else remember what has not become a part of her mental content? Mothers cannot remember things they have not learned or experienced! Neither can they easily find time to gain that mental content after they are surrounded with children and home duties. Why not furnish the young woman with a mental content that she may use as a working basis for the highest work she could be called upon to perform, as well as to store her mind with Latin, mathematics, music, and art? They are good but they are not enough.

But, you ask still further, “How are we going to induce the young girl to take up such study?” This burden rests with the mothers of to-day. They must decide what the mothers of to-morrow shall be. Sad indeed is the condition which prevails in many communities where young girls are afraid to give attention to babies for fear of being joked by their elders, many of whom are parents. A few years ago a high school girl read a paper before a mothers' meeting and met with such remarks as, “You pretend to tell mothers how to raise their children.” “Have you joined the mothers' club?” It rests with the mothers' organizations in each town to make some reparation for such unwise jesting. Do something definite to secure junior members for our societies, or see to it that our girls get the work in some way. Many of the city schools are giving such training. We hope that before long every school will place “mothercraft” in its curriculum, but even if it should, the home must not shoulder all the responsibility upon the school.

Mothers, send to the Woman's Auxiliary officers or to the Herald Publishing House for a Woman's Auxiliary Year Book. See the excellent books suggested for study. Organize a class. Select a leader or at least study together. Work and compare notes. The women have it in their power thus to supplement the missionaries' efforts to build for Zion. Nothing can bring about the condition we desire so easily, so quickly, as the establishment of homes where children are healthy, happy and are learning to be of service to humanity. Write us for suggestions if you do not know how to proceed. We are anxious to do what little we can.

The South Heard From

We have heard from one of our energetic missionaries who is working to spread the gospel in the South, that he has read our article in HERALD of November 29, “Who will be next to fall in line?” and is pleased to inform us that he has been in line for six months. This good brother has presented woman's work in three States, three conferences, two reunions and nine branches and sold eighteen Year Books.

We thank you, brother, and extend the hand of fellowship to you, being especially pleased that you realize that woman's work stands right by the side of man's work in the church. We as a church cannot rise higher than our homes. It is going to take “a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together” before we can reach the goal. We would like to hear from other missionaries, many of whom we feel sure have been doing what they could to help us.

MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER.

Port Huron, Michigan

A report from this active local, received from Sister O. Engel, indicates no cessation in their efforts for good. A good-natured contest covering a period of eight months, for the purpose of raising money for the branch, closed with the year, Elder Fetting giving an oyster supper in celebration. Neither side was defeated, as each raised over the amount ($500) in view, the “Diggers” having to their credit, $605.10, the “Hustlers” getting $556.40.

Sister Engel's report of the annual business meeting of their auxiliary is the first to reach our desk, and it speaks of a very encouraging portion of the Spirit having been with them. A full list of officers for the year was elected, with three new members enrolled, which starts them out with bright prospects for active months ahead.

President, Mrs. O. Engel; vice president, Mrs. C. Farmer; secretary, Mrs. O. Fetting, treasurer, Mrs. J. Morgan, organist, Mrs. C. Farmer; chorister, Mrs. J. J. Emlaw; assistant chorister, Mrs. E. Gardner; chairman for sick and needy, Mrs. E. J. Gibson and Mrs. M. Whitford; flower committee, Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. McAuley and Mrs. Emlaw; superintendent relief and service department, Mrs. O. Engel; superintendent educational department, Mrs. Lang; superintendent child welfare and home departments, combined, Mrs. R. Brown; press chairman, Mrs. O. Engel.

Central Illinois

At the close of four years' work as district president of Southeastern Illinois District I take the opportunity through the valuable columns of your paper, of thanking all my co-laborers and associates for their profitable service rendered me. Four years ago at conference held at Springerton, Illinois, I was first elected as district president; Brother Sam Hoover, my assistant. I was ordained an elder May 24 prior to the conference and I found the work quite a task, not being acquainted with the work and the difficulties I had to meet. Brother S. S. Smith being missionary here at that time, instructed me wisely in regard to my duty in office. I traveled over the entire district, visiting all branches, preaching and settling difficulties, bearing my own expenses most of the time.

At the annual conference at Springerton I was reelected with E. W. Sutton of Tunnel Hill, my assistant. He was a wise counselor and rendered good service in all our undertakings. I was at that time laboring as a local minister. But October 1, 1914, was appointed missionary to labor in this field. At the annual conference at Bellair, I was elected again, with F. M. Davis of Thompsonville my first counselor.

S. D. Goostree of Iuka, second, Apostle John W. Rushton was present and the Saints felt strengthened by his wise instructions given from the stand. S. H. Fields was there also, being one of our missionary force and still laboring in our field this year. Brother Thomas Newton at that time had taken the place of S. S. Smith who was taken from this field on account of severe illness of his wife. On December 7, 1914, my wife was taken sick with bronchial catarrh, later, tuberculosis, and on July 13, 1915, passed away, leaving me with seven children, the youngest nine years of age.

During my wife's sickness which was seventeen months, I was deprived of much district labor, and what labor was done was done under trying circumstances. After her death, trials were more severe, my children all being boys but one, a girl fourteen years of age. My two counselors being stalwart men in the gospel work, I depended largely upon them to look after the district work. At Springerton annual conference in December, 1915, I was reelected, with the same assistants. Being a missionary, I went a number of times when I really should have stayed with my children. Realizing the need of a companion to care for my children and to keep my home in order, I was married to (Miss) Cora Ellis of Springerton, Illinois, whom I find faithful to me, my family and the great work in which we are all engaged.

While at Tunnel Hill in June I discovered my tonsils were very sorely afflicted and began to enlarge. At times I could hardly speak above a whisper. I sought advice from a specialist and was told I would have to have them removed. On September 26 I had them taken out by Doctor E. E. Edmonson of Mount Vernon, Illinois, a real good friend to our people. Because of profuse bleeding and the use of hot medicine, my throat was badly burned and it caused me quite a little trouble.

At Bellair annual conference I helped to elect brother F. M. Davis to the office of district president, relieving me of the responsibility and duties of the office. I trust the work will go on and grow till it fills its mission. I have labored as missionary in southeastern Illinois for two and one half years; met all the local brethren as well as the missionary force. In the last thirteen months I have preached at twenty funerals. May we all be ready to go when our time comes.

I am at present holding meetings at a private house, the old home of Brother F. M. Slover. My brother Jeff, and son Chester, are assisting me. I will go Monday next to Hazel Dell Schoolhouse, near Johnsonville, Illinois, to begin services.

May we all labor and be ready when our Lord and Savior appears, is my prayer.

R. H. HENSON.

ORCHARDVILLE, ILLINOIS.

Southern California

The last four months we, wife and I, have been laboring in the Southern District, holding revival services in the several branches and visiting some of the scattered members. At the close of the Irvington reunion in August, we accompanied Elder Rushton to Hermosa Beach, and joined the Saints in their reunion at that point. Here we received a warm welcome, meeting many old friends and where we were kept very busy in our line of work till its close. The meetings were well attended, and as a whole, spiritual and uplifting in their nature. Elder Rushton took special pains to instruct the Saints and especially the ministry along educational and spiritual lines, resulting in a better understanding of the law and a greater degree of unity throughout the entire district.

Elder Rushton has proven himself to be a good organizer, going about his work in that quiet and tactful manner, that difficulties are adjusted, and all parties concerned, generally being satisfied. As a result we see a great improvement in conditions all along the line.

September 22 we visited San Diego and was present over the following Sunday at the organization of the San Diego Branch by Brother Rushton. Brother George E. Harrington was chosen president of the new branch.

I first visited this city in the winter of 1909, hoping to recuperate from my severe illness and relieve myself of the responsibilities of church work until I had regained my health. I knew of only one member here, Sister Pickles, formerly of Chicago. Through this sister I learned of the presence of a few other members; these I visited and we were soon holding meetings and thus I forgot all about my illness and a little mission was the result, which I now rejoice to see has developed into a branch. May the Lord continue to prosper this little body of faithful Saints.

Having been invited by those in charge to conduct revival services in the several branches of the district, we began our work at Santa Ana, where we continued over two weeks with fairly good interest. From there we continued on to Garden Grove, Long Beach, San Bernardino, and Los Angeles, holding over from two to three weeks at each place with good interest. We did not baptize any as a result, but the Saints expressed themselves as having received encouragement and some strangers became interested.

The work of an evangelist I believe is intended to revive and strengthen the Saints rather than to minister to those without the fold, though of course our efforts should be to reach both Saints and sinner. We find that music greatly aids us in our work and we begin our services with fifteen minutes in singing, using Zion's Praises, followed by a special number in the way of a solo or duet. Music, if properly rendered, is calculated to prepare the mind for the gospel message.

Another thing my experience has taught me is that the command "preach the word" is just as applicable to-day as formerly. The people are hungry for the plain, simple truth and such subjects as the plan of salvation, the angel message, the restoration of the gospel, signs of the times, etc., always find attentive listeners, while finessed theories eloquently delivered may please for the moment but leave the soul hungry and unsatisfied. In some localities I find just a little murmuring among the Saints because they do not hear more of the simple gospel truth. My brethren of the ministry, fail not to preach the Word. In the world there are plenty of men of eloquence who preach their own theories, but few who preach Christ. The world is perishing for knowledge of the truth. Let us to whom the truth is revealed be faithful to our calling in preaching it.

We are now at Tulare, on our way to visit the branches in the northern district once more before returning east in the spring. We hope to be present at the General Conference, having been absent nearly two years. It is now the rainy season here and the weather is cold and wet, keeping us indoors much of the time.

We note the change in the form of both HERALD and Ensign thought by some to be an improvement. The Ensign in its present form should be stapled the same as the HERALD. I like the promise made in the Ensign to preach an affirmative gospel. Good! May that ever be kept in mind. The Ensign started in the beginning with that idea in view, also to teach only the living truth, so we are hoping all the unsavory matter concerning Utah Mormonism may be largely eliminated.

We are kept busy, but enjoy our work and feel very hopeful concerning the future. May the new year have much good in store for all.

F. G. PITT.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Is it Wrong?

Is it wrong when we see, or think we see, that which is incorrect (and therefore indefensible) expressed by others, to call attention to it in a friendly manner, that is, if our whole object is the welfare of our brother who is supposed to have made a mistake, little or big, and the great cause of truth which has been committed to our trust? And, further, if we are just as willing to be corrected as we are anxious to correct others who are thought to be in error?

FAITH AND BELIEF

I see occasionally by HERALD and Ensign, that there are a few at least, who still hold onto what seems to be a tradition of the elders, namely, that faith and belief are two distinct principles of the gospel, each one performing its particular and distinct part in the plan of salvation.

In a late number of the SAINTS' HERALD, I find the following statements, made by a brother of good ability and long experience:

"But nevertheless I was encouraged to foster this desire by prayer and serious reflection, and gradually there stole in upon my soul's consciousness the permanency of a 'belief' whose foundations were laid in God, and this belief being encouraged and fostered by serious attempt to purge my life from things worldly or unprofitable, gradually assumed the proportions and stability of a genuine 'faith' or 'assurance,'" etc.

It is barely possible the writer did not intend to make any distinction between faith and belief. If not, the statement is very ambiguous; nevertheless, if not intended, I beg pardon for quoting it.

"Another writer of experience and ability, makes the following statements, found in a late number of the Ensign:

"Jesus plainly taught that there was something more conditional in his doctrine than to simply believe. Belief does not impel action, faith does, and these Ephesians had faith."

It will be noticed that these good brethren make no attempt to sustain their position by a single quotation from any one of the three standard books of the church! And this is the way, and only way, the topic has been treated, so far as I know, since I came into the church in November, 1863.

If these brethren wish to examine the writer's views on faith and belief they will find an article on this topic in the SAINTS' HERALD for February 4, 1914, page 101. This article, written by one of the elders of the church, correctly represents my own views on the subject.

We think it is time, high time, that this doctrine, that faith and belief are two distinct principles, should be renounced, or the scriptural evidence relied upon for proof be adduced. If it has no other support than the tradition of the elders, it should be dropped. If it can be supported by evidence which amounts to proof, let it be shown. Justice and real benefit to all concerned demand this, and nothing less can supply the demand. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—Paul.

An important part of true education is to correct our mistakes as we move along. Will these good brethren please correct their mistake, if they have made one, or, if they have not, furnish us with the opportunity, so we can correct ours?

I am, as ever,

Your old friend and brother in "the truth,"

J. R. LAMBERT.

Independence Stake

On January 23 Pastor Walter Smith as usual on Tuesday nights, took his place as instructor of the economics class, about fifty being present, while Sister Eunice Smith in the north room taught a class of about ten, in story-telling. Brother Dwyer is very popular as a lecturer, and has been of late entertaining our people at Central Church. He will hold forth next Tuesday night at the central high school and is expected here at the Stone Church again very soon. His "Sahara desert" lecture was fine. We are highly favored with lecturers, teachers and preachers, and always with good audiences; and so are other branches of the stake well supplied.

On January 21 Elders G. Jenkins and W. W. Smith preached at Walnut Park, Harold Bullard and E. T. Atwell at the east mission, George Shearer and W. D. Bullard at Enoch Hill, Brethren W. H. and T. C. Kelley at the Second Branch, and T. C. Kelley and W. W. Smith at the Stone Church.

The Saints and also our visitors appreciate the efforts put forth by the choirs throughout the stake; and our inspiring songs of the Sunday schools, church and prayer meetings are a power for good in all the services. Our hearts are filled with gratitude when listening to these gifted musicians, who are making sacrifices by adorning with efficiency their noble profession. Sister E. G. Haberlein sang the title role of the anthem last Sunday morning, "Who shall ascend unto the holy hill?" and her clear, ringing words filled the house.

The temperature has been variable of late, changing from around zero to springlike breezes, which lure the young and old to the services of the early morning, and in fact, our general attendance at meetings is excellent.

Five confirmations took place last Sunday afternoon under the hands of Brethren McGuire and Keir who presided, also Elders R. May, R. O. Self and I. N. White.

Little Sister Stover's obsequies at one o'clock, with Elder T. C. Kelley in charge, were sweet and impressive. On January 19 our Sister Evaline Miller's remains were laid to rest; and perhaps our readers of about ten years ago will remember the remarkable vision of this sister, which the writer had published at her earnest request, in the columns of the HERALD. Let us while in the midst of turmoil and affliction, put our trust in Him who through a glorious victory can and will bring us to a haven of safety, where is peace, lasting and complete.

ABBIE HORTON.

Are We a Wasteful People?

Sometime ago a brother in a letter told of the good qualities of our sisters in Australia as good housekeepers, and that as he was two thousand miles from the mainland and did not intend to return for nearly two years, he felt perfectly safe to write as he did. The writer of this is a missionary, and as I expect to attend the General Conference I do not feel at liberty to give my name because I want to mingle freely with the Saints and enjoy myself, and I am too timid to take the risk of being an outcast for opinion's sake.

When I am absent from home there are two in our family of adult age and in a normal condition of health. I asked my wife for a statement of their living expense for the last quarter of 1916. It was $32.50, or six cents per meal, and the cost of food was higher than at any time during our married life. I wrote to a brother and his wife, both of whom had been raised in families where they were taught not to waste food and live according to very strict rules of economy. He is engaged in industrial labor, and the cost of their living for 1916 was an average of eight and three-fifths cents per meal.

If there are any sisters in the church who can lower those figures, they ought to compare notes and in some way make it possible for all families in the church to get the benefit of their knowledge and experience. It would relieve many fathers and mothers of anxious care and save many thousands of dollars to the church. I have traveled as a missionary in several of the States, and have been in the homes of our people in the country, small town and city, and it is my honest opinion, as the result of my observations, that we are a wasteful people. We eat too much; there is too much thrown away; we teach by example wasteful habits to our children. If Darwin said we descended from a monkey, he made a mistake; we more often imitate another animal that is more common.

Our best friends are often those who will in a kindly way point out our faults. If the Woman's Auxiliary will start a campaign of practical teaching (not theory that has very little value) and make it possible to reach every home in the church, it would mean more healthful people, more time for work and recreation, a more intelligent people, a happier people. A saving of three and one third cents a day for ten thousand families, or forty thousand members, would be $12 a year a family, or $120,000 for one year; save $2 a month a family and it would be $240,000 for a year.

With that amount of money the church could soon accomplish many things that it has under consideration. The savings of the eight hundred families in Independence could erect quite a good building for the Woman's Auxiliary. All our great packing houses and manufacturing establishments are always resorting to new methods to save the fragments, trying to make it possible that nothing shall be wasted. What are we doing? How can we ever be the light of the world if we are in the rear rank? Henry Ford's generosity to his employees may prove a curse instead of a blessing, if it develops extravagance. So may our heavenly Father's blessings prove to us if we are not wise and faithful stewards.

WISE ECONOMY.

From Here and There

Brother James Hon of Bronson, Iowa, has a considerable number of HERALDS and Ensigns which are available for those who desire them.

Brother Charles Holmes of Breckenridge, Missouri, says the Saints seem to move to other towns around there but fail to locate in his vicinity. He reports a recent visit from Brother McCord who held some successful meetings.

Sister Fay Gates of Ravenwood, Missouri, says that if there are any Saints living at Columbia, Missouri, she would like to have them look up her brother who is attending school there. He rooms at the Y. M. C. A. building. Call for Grant J. Gates.

From Higbee, Missouri, R. F. D. 3, Brother William C. Chapman writes: "I have a lot of HERALDS and Ensigns I would be glad to give some one who can use them; some of them are fifteen or twenty years old. I have no use for them."

Elder Lemuel Dyke of Eagle City, Oklahoma, writes that his correspondence class in lettering, composed of missionaries, is getting along finely. He says some of his pupils are as old as sixty-seven but are going to make good. He is carrying supplies for this work for those who wish to procure them.

Writing from Johnson City, New York, 23 Lewis Street, Charles Engle desired to get in touch with any Saints who may reside in Binghamton or Endicott, New York, in Broome County. He and family have recently moved there from Scranton, Pennsylvania, and would like to reach any local members or be visited by district or general church workers.

From Rosedale, British Columbia, Mrs. James Mercer writes, saying that the people there seem to hesitate about coming out to hear our elders. She desires that the Saints may pray that her affliction—a nervous breakdown—may be removed. She mentions Brother Henry Stade as president of the branch, and says they are trying to keep the banner of Christ afloat.

From Dacusville, South Carolina, Brother A. G. Miller writes that during the year he has made 11 new openings. He has preached 285 sermons, made 300 visits and among other things distributed about 2,000 tracts and papers. He has spent all his time in new places with the exception of about twenty days. He still feels the need of many more laborers in that large district, suggesting that there are only four missionaries in six large States.

From Holden, Missouri, Sister Lola Johnson writes that Brother D. J. Krahl and family have recently moved from Independence to that place. She says Brother Krahl and wife are meeting the Saints more than half way and certainly have the respect of the people in that community. She believes the spiritual life of the community is stronger than it ever has been before, and suggests that a greater responsibility rests upon the people with a clarion voice calling, "Help one another."

We have a handbill evidently put out by Doctor J. E. Asay, the secretary-treasurer of the building committee at Rock Island, Illinois. This handbill sets out the progress of the new church at that place by the reproduction of a photograph showing the church partially completed. There are fifty members in the Rock Island branch and they are building a church at a cost of about six thousand dollars. The matter in the handbill has been published in two Rock Island newspapers and one in Davenport, and sets forth briefly but clearly the position of the church in the religious world.

Sister Lillian Howard of Iola, Kansas, thirteen years of age, enjoys reading the letters in the HERALD. She says the whole family belongs to the church and rejoices that her brother has recently been called to the office of priest. She mentions instances where she has been instantly healed through administration, also other cases of healings by prayer. She says that in her school work the teacher takes special delight in urging that the Utah Mormons and this church are the same, during the history period at school. She feels that it is worth while to be well informed on these subjects and refute such statements.

Books to me, that is, those of our best writers, are ever new; the books may be the same, but I am changed. Every seven years gives me a different, often a higher, appreciation of those I like. Every good book is worth reading three times, at least.—Charles Bray.

New Church at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

On Sunday, January 7, the new Saints' church at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, was formally opened. We have here a small branch of Saints who are making a very commendable effort to promote the interests of the latter-day work. This summer it was thought proper to build a church building; and with the consent of the bishop this task was undertaken and accomplished.

At 2.30 in the afternoon services were held, during which the following brethren spoke on the subjects named: Edwin Gleazer, priest—"The origin of the church"; George Morris, elder—"The purpose of the church and its relation to the community"; Archibald D. Angus, patriarch—"The financial policies of the church"; J. August Koehler, high priest—"The government of the church." Elder A. B. Phillips in charge, assisted by the local presiding elder, Brother Cunningham.

At 7.30 in the evening Brother A. B. Phillips preached on "The scope of the mission of Christ as Latter Day Saints view it." Both services were well attended and seemingly very much enjoyed.

The debate which had just closed attracted not a few members of the Christian Church to these services. Brother Edwin Gleazer is the General Conference appointee in this vicinity. It is hoped that the work will now become firmly established in this place.

Brother Phillips is holding a series of special meetings in the new church. It goes without saying that this will help some, too.

Bloomsburg is called a "school" town. The normal school is situated there. But aside from this, the town has a very good class of people, and it is hoped that the increase there will be a real addition to the kingdom of God.

Faternally,

J. AUGUST KOEHLER.

About a Remarkable Eyewitness

Agreeable with your request I am sending you what I have heard of the story of "Joseph Smith walking on the water."

I had read of this story in some literature published by some who were not friends to Joseph Smith nor were they believers in the theology advocated by him. To me the story was so absurd that I did not believe that I ever would have the privilege to see and converse with one claiming to be an eyewitness to the deceptive incident, but, in the summer 1885, I believe it was, in company with Brother John T. Kinnaman, in the city of Saint Joseph, Missouri, I heard a supposed-to-be man tell the story. It came about as follows:

Saint Joseph was flooded with bills and cards advertising the wonderful event of a man who was going to walk across the Missouri River, from Elwood, Kansas, to Saint Joseph, a distance of nearly one mile; he was going to "walk on the water." The starting point was just a little east and south of Elwood, and the landing place was near Francis Street, city depot, in Saint Joseph. The banks of the river were lined with people on the Missouri side and many on the Kansas side who had gathered there to witness the great event, which was guaranteed not to be a fake. The river at this point is very swift, so the performer—to avoid being carried down by the swift current—angled across. He carried out his claim by fastening a bicycle on two pieces of timber, one on each side; he then got on the bicycle and began to walk (paddle); the timber was large enough to hold him and the bicycle on the surface of the water and he reached the Missouri side amid the cheering of the large multitude. The announcement was then made that a certain troupe would be at a certain opera house, so you see the incident was a drawing card.

Leaving the river bank, I made the remark that the performance was more of a success than that undertaken by Joseph Smith. Scarcely had I mentioned the name "Smith," when a person just in front of us turned toward us and said, "Why Joe Smith was not in it; this man made a success, but poor Joe went down in the water." Brother Kinnaman inquired of him, "What do you know about Joseph Smith walking on the water?" He replied that he knew all about it as he was present. "Well," says Brother Kinnaman, "you are the man I have been wanting to see. I have read about Joseph undertaking to walk on the water, but you are the first person that I have seen who was an eyewitness to the incident; tell us what you know about the matter.

"A large number of people listened to the story which has been published and scattered abroad as a truthful incident and some have called the attention of the people to this matter from the pulpit, warning the public against the deceiver, "Joe" Smith.

This pretended witness said that Joseph Smith claimed to be a prophet of God and that he had power to work miracles and in order to convince them that he could do so, he invited them to be present at a certain large pond of water and that he would walk on the water as Christ did. He said, "We surmised that Joe was going to try to deceive us, so we went down to the pond and discovered that Joe and some of his followers had put several planks out into the water just beneath the surface; we removed the last plank, so when Joe came he walked out looking up to heaven, but he soon came to the end, and down he went into the water." Brother Kinnaman asked, "Well, how did he fasten the planks under the water?" "With stakes." "Could not the people see the plank?" "No, the water was dark and muddy." "Well; where was this place?" The man gave the name of the town, but I have forgotten it, but he said it was in the State of Ohio. "You were present?" "Yes, sir." "Well; you are not over forty years of age, are you?" "I am in my fortieth year."

Brother Kinnaman was six feet, eight inches tall; he reached down and took hold of the fellow by the collar, and called the attention of the crowd that had gathered to this "Wonderful, living witness, who saw Joseph Smith trying to carry out such a deception as walking across the water;" and he continued: "The liars are not all dead, for here is one who said that he was an eyewitness and helped to remove the last plank and saw Joseph Smith plunge into the water. Joseph Smith was dead one year before this liar was born, so why willfully misrepresent the dead?" As soon as the fellow could get free from the strong arm that held him, he left.

As I listened to the story that I had heard and read of before, I thought of the guard that had been placed at the sepulcher, or the soldiers, for they said that while they were asleep the disciples came and took the body away. It is said It is said they were paid a large sum of money for their testimony, but this fellow volunteered the information free and I thought that surely this was not the first time he had related the story, for he seemed to have it well memorized. To all who knew not the date of Joseph's death, the witness would impress upon them that what he said was the truth. I wanted to interview the fellow further but he made his escape so quickly that I did not get to. I do not believe, however, that he has ever repeated the story.

Respectfully,

CAMERON, MISSOURI.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

"Cleanliness is Next to Godliness"

In this day of sanitation and hygiene, I often wonder why some of us who profess to be Saints do not observe these rules more closely when we know they are for our benefit, as well as those with whom we come in contact.

How many properly treat themselves and do all that is possible to prevent colds, la grippe, tonsilitis, and possibly more dangerous diseases as consumption, or tubercular troubles? Do they carefully dispose of the wastes or (sputum) that are raised, or does it go upon the sidewalks and sometimes upon the floors of their own dwelling places, where it returns to particles of dust and is then inhaled by other members, who, if not physically strong enough to resist these germs, will suffer the consequences whatever they may be?

It has been the writer's privilege to come in contact with people who do this (Saints), where the contents of both mouth and nose are deposited upon the floor, when they are thus afflicted. Is this sanitation or home hygiene? Are they doing the proper thing to keep others from becoming thus afflicted?

Why not be more careful and conform more closely to the rules that are laid down for the preservation of our health, as well as others?

SENTINEL BUTTE, NORTH DAKOTA, January 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: I enclose you check for two dollars. Apply one dollar on my subscription to Autumn Leaves and one dollar on subscription to HERALD. I like a paper when its utterances are filled with expressions of love and charity one toward another, but when the spirit of acrimony and incivility dominates a part of its utterances and utter disregard to the sincerity of the sentiments of others are parts of its make-up, I do not deem it wisdom to give sanction thereto. Luckily the HERALD, generally speaking is not a paper of that type, so I can give my sanction to its support. Once in awhile an article gets in that does not have the true ring. Every article should be tempered with love. It does not need to sanction what others might say, but it does need to be said in a courteous way. Acrimonious and caustic expressions do not savor of love. God is love, one of the fruits of the Spirit is love, and by their fruits ye shall know them.

I am certainly pleased to read, "The objections to the Book of Mormon answered by itself." I like to read the letter department; it's one way of keeping tab on the old-time Saints, and it is one way of getting acquainted with the new ones. Somehow a thrill of pathos passes over me as each year I note the ranks of the older Saints thinning down; I see fewer of letters from those I knew in former days and more from those I have never met. Isolation makes a person feel that he is alone, and that his friends are gone. All of my life I have been isolated from the church, not from my own choice but from circumstances over which I had no control. I long for that association that would give me cheer at heart and joy in my soul. In the days of our youth we do not feel this loneliness so much, but as we grow older and our ideas become more set as to what the essential things of life are—and with Latter Day Saints it is different from what it is with others—the barrier between us and the world grows wider and we feel our loneliness more, and to-day my heart turns with the exquisite longing so beautifully expressed in the ballad "Old Black Joe" or "Way down upon the Suanee River," to the days of my youth and the association of the Saints therein.

Once more I would like to be in Gallands Grove at the semiannual conference as we called it then, or at Logan or Woodbine or Garners Grove, or at any other of the many meetings that we used to have then. If we had no hope in the future, certainly our hearts would turn in complete despair. But sometime again we will meet and we look for a more permanent thing than earth presents now. This is the hope of a Latter Day Saint, so let us live in such peace now as will merit the joy we will have then.

In gospel bonds,

GEORGE W. LINDSEY.

OAKDALE, MISSOURI, January 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: Our church is located four miles south of Hamilton, Missouri, in the Far West District, about seventy-five miles northeast of Independence and about thirty-two miles southeast of Stewartville. This branch was organized and the church built in the year 1908 with Brother Coleman Snider as president. This brother has faithfully presided over the branch ever since its organization. We now have eighty-seven enrolled.

Our branch officers are alive to a sense of their duties, working together in unity and love; as a result the branch is in a thriving condition. Brother J. T. Ford, our district president, is devoting most of his time visiting the different branches in the district, and we trust much good is being accomplished by his faithful efforts.

We have a live Sunday school. Brother Coleman Snider is superintendent and has a good corps of officers to help him. We have quite a number of young people who are actively engaged in the Religio work with Brother James Dawson as president. He is the right man in the right place.

The sisters have organized into a "Willing Workers" society with Sister James Dawson as president, with a desire to work for the Master. We can see good results from our efforts.

SISTER ALMA HAWLEY.

OYEN, ALBERTA, January 12, 1917.

Editors Herald: During last year orders for Marvelous Work and a Wonder have been coming in from all over, and just recently a brother ordered fifty dollars worth. Just wish to say that the work being all sold out, neither the Herald Office nor myself am able to supply. Am at present engaged in reediting the book with the hope of having it in the hands of Herald Office printers four weeks hence. Might just say that my work of reediting will not make any vital changes in the historical data presented in the last edition—rather an elaboration. We are trying to make all things plain, reinforced by an array of evidence overwhelming and conclusive. We are assured that if the study of prophecy has been interesting in the past, it will become doubly so in the future, as we approach the end of all things towards which the nations of the earth are hastening with unprecedented fury. Am giving special attention to the work elucidating the prophetic periods, in which I have realized the divine help. The work will be somewhat larger than the last edition, and more expensive, owing to increase of prices in material, printing, etc., but we shall assure one and all that the work will go to the public absolutely at cost price.

The work is moving slowly but effectively in this northern zone. Have baptized a number of late. The war, of course, is taking the manhood of the nation to the front with the probability that some form of conscription will be introduced. Several of the Saints have already answered their country's call, one having made the supreme sacrifice.

In a general way our people are prospering financially, owing to the unprecedented prices for grain. Indeed, in this respect, western Canada holds forth splendid opportunities to the tiller of the soil. In the region where we reside, excellent lands can be purchased from fifteen to twenty dollars per acre, land that yielded fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. All American citizens coming to this country are protected against conscription, unless, of course, they wish to homestead and become citizens of Canada.

Sincerely,
DANIEL MACGREGOR.

EGYPT, MAINE, January 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: I love to read the HERALD and hear from other brothers and sisters. I know this is God's work and that he will do his part if we only do ours. I would be pleased to hear from some Saints at Corea, Maine. I hear there are some there and would like to correspond with them as I do not know any of their names.

Your brother in one faith,
G. A. LINSKOTT.

MIAMI, FLORIDA, January 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am trying to advance the work in this part and am making my home with the excellent family of Brother James Armour who moved to the southeast coast of Florida about two years ago from Olathe, Kansas. It is a great pleasure to find in their home our church papers, and that Brother Armour has been trying to inform his neighbors in regard to our work. Yesterday I baptized their two daughters, namely: Marie and Margaret, in the great water of the Atlantic Ocean. I lately organized a branch at Tampa, with J. E. Morley president, and D. B. Barrington was ordained an elder and chosen presiding teacher. I also organized another branch at Saint Cloud, Joseph L. Enge was ordained a priest and chosen to preside, and C. C. Rummel was ordained a teacher. Both of these brethren are young in years but are both alive in the work, and we expect to hear good reports from them if faithful and wise.

Elders N. C. Enge and John Spaulding have been trying to advance the work at Saint Cloud, by having out appointments and preaching the word, which has been a help to the church; and so has Brother Morley at Tampa. Where the local ministry do their part in this way it is a help to the missionary force and it is also a great help where Saints take our church papers and talk to their neighbors about our work, then make an effort to secure a house for the missionaries to hold meetings. If at the first you don't succeed, try, try again. A united effort on the part of all will bring about great results sometimes even in places where you may think it is useless to try.

Nearly all my time has been in new places this year. The most trying part of missionary life is to be away from home all the time. Saints everywhere should give of their substance as God has commanded in order to fully sustain the faithful laborers in the field and their families and every other department of the church work. Yours sincerely,

F. M. SLOVER.

ERSKINE, MINNESOTA, January 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wish to come again and take a little part in this good work. The welcome issues of the HERALD help us scattered members feel that we are not lone individuals set off by ourselves at various places, but that we are members of the one big family of which Christ is head. We find as it were, when we cannot come to dine with the family at the table (church gatherings), the food taken to us in our rooms (homes). So we need not starve or feel forsaken. We need it to enlighten, encourage and entertain us so we grow not forgetful of the good message.

I enjoyed very much reading the message and New Year greetings by President F. M. Smith and other leading officers in the church. There appears to me a happy unity in them all. How could we but enter the work of the year with greater confidence, deeper faith and trust, and with a fuller determination not to let any opportunity for doing good pass by without doing our part. May they not look in vain for us to heed the call ever seeming to grow in importance and ever emphasized—"Come up higher." If we as individuals purify and prepare ourselves, we need not strive to secure such a body, for what else could we then be? Not big, but great.

The contributions sent in from the many places make us feel the mutual interest and effort throughout the church. There truly is so much good written that I'd hesitate to take up space, but I am like most women—when I have been talked to long enough I want to say something, too. Many are doing a noble work in corresponding with isolated members. I am grateful to several and I know many others are. The personal interest and spiritual influence help to counteract the influence of the world. One kind letter from Canada in response to my last letter in the HERALD I failed to acknowledge, as I lost the address.

I enjoyed the evening of December 30 and Sunday the 31st with the North Dakota conference at Fargo. May we treasure up much good that was given. Not expecting to be able to meet with the Saints again or hear a Latter Day Saint sermon for a long time, there is time to "ponder the words in our hearts." The kind hospitality of the Fargo Saints further makes it a pleasure to meet with them.

I hope we shall all be guided with wisdom as to the gathering; that we shall not unduly haste, yet not linger longer when the way is opened and we are called to go. Won't one of the most trying obstacles in the gathering be that we will want this one and that with us? So may we be awake to our privileges to witness so we need not go with a pang of regret for not having warned this or that person. When we have done our part faithfully, may we not be found as pictured in the parable, some with lands, some with property, some with family ties detained from responding to the invitation to come together and partake in the wedding supper of the Lamb. Let us all don the wedding garment of righteousness, our lamps trimmed and filled with oil, "watching always and praying that we be accounted worthy," that we be able to stand and meet our Christ gladly and that he finds us "servants that need not be ashamed."

I think the "Quest of Happiness" play by the Oriole girls shows a good standard. Being "all laborers together with God," we have each of us a part to play, however small. Let us watch and pray that God direct us and that we hear and heed.

Ye stakes and branches, remember the scattered Saints in your prayers. I think the most of us remember you all in our prayers, not forgetting those in whose hands he has intrusted so much.

We will miss Brother Elbert A. Smith until he comes again. Our hearts are lifted to God in prayer in his behalf. We know God will not be forgetful of him.

The work grows ever greater and the testimony stronger. I hope to ever keep in step with the onward march of this the church of Jesus Christ. I want to continue ever a faithful sister in the gospel.

EFFIE DAHL.

other men and spiritually lost. He further suggested that "there were people who had stayed at home who needed revivals worse than soldiers."

The chief objection he urges is that the usual highly emotional meetings, attended by loud exhortation and much singing would drive every disinterested soldier from his only home to seek quiet and peace—and possibly to drift into the very evils so loudly proclaimed against.

He says that the chaplain of each regiment conducts regular services and since they are from many different religious denominations this is sufficient for the soldiers' religious needs. He has the last say.

Lamoni Stake Bishopric

The Lamoni Stake Bishopric has issued a leaflet giving the names of all agents within the stake. They urge the filing of the inventory and the payment of the one tenth. They also urge the necessity of providing for the ministry, the young and inexperienced, as well as the thoroughly competent and experienced missionary. Not only should the railroad expenses be paid, but also the personal expenses. In addition to these, the various homes, and other institutions of the church are presented. One plan is of interest and has been tried elsewhere with success.

A number of Saints in Lamoni Stake are paying their tithing during the year, making their payments weekly or monthly, and at the end of the year they examine their condition and pay what they lack of having paid one tenth of their interest in these short interval installments. We look upon this system with considerable favor and believe it to be in full harmony with the spirit of the law.

They urge also that Lamoni Stake has been chosen as a stake of Zion. And concerning the gathering, they urge:

There are many devoted Saints now living in distant lands, and those not so far distant, who are anxious to come to Lamoni Stake and take part in this work. There are others who desire to come merely to get rid of the opposition to their faith which they find in their present location. Consider carefully which of these two classes you are a member of.

If you belong to the first class, it is to be the studied endeavor of the present bishopric to so locate you that you may work to the best advantage. In order to do so, it will be necessary for those coming to us for help in this line, to file their inventories and present their credentials from those among whom they have labored in the past.

The Lamoni Stake Bishopric, in conjunction with the bishops of the other stakes, are fitting themselves to handle real estate for the accommodation of Saints locating within its boundaries. For this purpose land and homes are being listed, and we are making ourselves acquainted with the possibilities, and desirability of properties offered for sale. Should you want a location in these regions we will be glad to look after you directly from our office.

In pursuance of this, several properties have already been listed with them, and are now being advertised. Any desiring to locate there should first communicate with them.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—At Bevier, November 25, 1916, 10 a. m., William B. Richards, F. A. Smith and Ed. E. Thomas presiding. Bevier, Higbee and Menefee branches reported. Yates, Venus Verhei, V. L. Gunter and P. F. Klaus. Rule 2 amended to read: "District conference shall meet at call of district presidency and minister in charge twice a year." A motion prevailed instructing secretary to request Bishop McGuire to send a statement to our next district conference stating why he failed to comply with our recommendation of last district conference concerning change of bishop's agent. The following was presented: "Whereas the Presiding Bishop did not see fit to change the appointment of bishop's agent for the Spokane District, therefore be it resolved, that this conference approve of the appointment of the bishop and by vote express our confidence in and our appreciation of the labors of W. W. Fordham as bishop's agent and secretary of district." Carried, unanimously. The district was well represented and all enjoyed the gathering. W. W. Fordham, secretary.

[Amendment to General Conference resolution No. 238 declares the agents were created as agents of the bishop and not of the districts nor accountable to them. Resolution No. 81, adopted in 1867, declares that the bishops or bishop's agents of districts are responsible to the bishop of the whole church. Benjamin R. McGuire, presiding bishop.]

Any of said membership that may know of any deaths, change of names by reason of marriage, will please report and send items to said clerks and oblige J. C. Chrestensen, district president.

Our Departed Ones

ABBOTT.—Sister I. A. Abbott, born May 1, 1840; died January 13, 1917. Baptized by Alma Booker, July, 1906. Leaves 1 son, 1 daughter and 7 grandchildren to mourn. All are members of the church but one.

REED.—Ruth, infant daughter of James and Mildred Reed. Born January 18, 1917; died January 21, 1917. Funeral services at home of Fred Baber, sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by George I. Hansen. Laid to rest in Gallands Grove Cemetery.

MCCANN.—Sister Marie McCann, born October 23, 1840, at Warwick, Orange County, New York; died at her home about 6 miles northeast of New Auburn, Wisconsin, January 22, 1917. She came to Wisconsin in 1871 and for many years was known as Sister Burchell, a kind, good woman. She is the last of a large family. Funeral sermon by L. Houghton to a large congregation in the schoolhouse near her home.

LARSON.—Kenneth Dale Larson, son of Brother and Sister H. P. Larson. Born November 28, 1916; blessed by C. C. Nelson and A. Jacobson. Died January 20, 1917. The mortal existence of this little precious bud of promise was of short duration; as a flower it was cut down suddenly by pneumonia. Funeral from the Saints' Church in Guilford, conducted by W. T. Ross. Sermon by O. W. Okerlind to a large audience. Burial in Graves Cemetery.

SMITH.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 19, 1917, Richard W. Smith, aged 77 years, 11 months and 11 days. He was born in Virginia in 1839 and moved to Illinois in 1861. In the same year he enlisted, and he served three years in the Civil War. He had slow consumption the last years of his life. His wife and their 4 children survive him and all were present at the funeral services. These were held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Hague on January 21, H. A. Stebbins officiating. Mr. Smith was a member of the Christian Church.

NELSON.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, January 24, 1917, Vera Adele, beloved daughter of Sister Lulu Nelson, aged 2 years, 2 months and 12 days. The mother and children live with her parents, Brother and Sister Orlando Work. There are three other children, Alta, past 6 years, Floyd, nearly five, and Clara, three years old. Vera had a severe la grippe attack, then pneumonia set in and death resulted. How hard this loss other mothers can tell. Services at the house in charge of J. F. Garver; sermon by H. A. Stebbins. Burial at Rose Hill Cemetery.

BAUGHMAN.—Hezekiah Newton Baughman was born January 12, 1840, in Noble County, Indiana. Came to Iowa when 13 years old. Enlisted in 23d Iowa, served 3 years in the Civil War. Married Irene Miller, August 23, 1866. To them 7 children were born, 1 son and 1 daughter having preceded him to the beyond. Baptized September 12, 1897. Died at his home near Dunlap, Iowa, January 18, 1917. He leaves to mourn, wife, 2 sons, 3 daughters, 4 grandchildren, 1 brother, 1 sister and many other relatives and friends. Funeral at home, sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by S. B. Kibler.

WELD.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 22, 1917, Brother George W. Weld, aged 82 years, 6 months and 29 days. He was born in Cattaraugus County, New York, in 1834; moved to Illinois when a young man. Married Mary Olsen January 7, 1858, at Ottawa, Illinois. Four children are all living, three in Lamoni, Francis M., Oscar L., Proebe (Allen), and the fourth, Sister Carrie Danielson, came from Holden to the funeral. Brother Weld was baptized in 1861 by John Shippy. Death was a happy release. Sister Weld survives him, but is very feeble. Funeral service in charge of J. F. Garver; sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

OUTHOUSE.—George Ryan Outhouse was born August 28, 1831, at Avanton, Illinois. Married Nancy Shaw in 1861 and to this union was born 1 child, Alma. The wife died 4 or 5 years later. In 1866 married Mary Hunter, and to this union were born 6 boys and 2 girls, 2 boys having passed to the beyond. This brother was baptized when 8 years old at Nauvoo, Illinois. On March 1, 1860, he united with the Reorganized Church, being baptized by E. C. Briggs; ordained an elder June 2, 1860, by William Marks, Zenas Gurley and E. C. Briggs. Died December 31, 1916, at the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa. He leaves to mourn, 1 sister, Elizabeth Eveline Cowlinsaw, 2 brothers, John Miller and Francis Marion, 7 children and many relatives and friends. Funeral services in charge of Hubert Case; sermon by Eli Hayer. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Book Reviews

THE DARK TOWER.—A novel by Phyllis Bottome, 378 pp., $1.35 net, The Century Company, 353 Fourth Avenue, New York. The publishers list this new book as "A rich, well-knit, full flavored novel, introducing a set of brilliantly drawn characters."

This novel is quite comparable to other popular novels of the day. A few characters are clearly drawn as some discussion is made on the life of an English country gentleman. There is no special moral teaching but it is written in an easy style.

At the recent conference of the Holden Stake, President D. J. Krahl presented the following as a "photograph of a pastor":

Patient	Prayerful	Prompt
Alert	Active	Attentive
Sympathetic	Strong	Sober
Tactful	Trustful	Truthful
Orderly	Obedient	Optimistic
Resourceful	Respectful	Right

Announcement

Last June through an ad in this paper Lawn & Casey secured nearly 100 of our people as agents for Casey's "Giant Grip" Cement, the 20th century marvel for mending furniture, crockery, glass, stone, tile, leather, etc. Although outside capital has been taken in, Lawn and Casey control the company and will carry out their first plan of placing the agency with as many of our people as may want it. If you cannot devote all your time, take the agency for your own town or community placing the goods in stores and soliciting what you can. When we have sufficient agents we will back them up with advertising as we have the money to do it! Send 25c today for sample bottle and terms to agents. J. R. Wight, our agent at Thurman, Iowa, says, "I spliced a tug the 10th of August last and used it all through good and bad weather. I pulled the tug in two in another place and now I have a splice in two places." Just think of the demand for such a powerful adhesive! When the people try it they will continue to use it as it has no competitor.

Brother Casey has developed a rubber patching cement which is the quickest applied and most powerful on the market. Sample tube 10c. Send to-day!

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

CAN WE EMPHASIZE SERVICE TOO MUCH?

Not long ago several of the younger writers whose work is often seen in the publications of the church, especially in those that are read principally by the young, were comparing notes and discussing the situation in church literature.

At that time several stories and articles were being written by them, and it was discovered that in the work being done and that which had been done, every one of them had, in one way or another, made "service" the predominating theme. One was portraying the possibilities of true service in the humble duties that come to all of us. Another had allowed her characters to seek out the honest in heart in the world and by lives of devoted courage inspire them with the beauty of holiness. Still another had been gathering up the fragments and seeking to call out the dormant powers in the members of the church.

And so it went. Without premeditation, each was stressing activity in good works, with doctrine and history and philosophy a necessary though unmentioned foundation.

It was commented on that this was more or less a general condition, and as an example Elbert A. Smith's new book, Joe Pine, was mentioned as a serious preparation for service in material things. Articles, sermons, and editorials in the columns of the church papers were pleading for more intelligent and devoted service.

The theme at many a prayer and testimony meeting had been: "What can I do?" followed by many a declaration of consecration to the cause we all love.

It was recalled that one of the younger generation had not long since declared from the pulpit that in his opinion the three presidents that had presided over the church since 1830 each had a special mission to the world. Joseph the Martyr, the giver of the law to the church; Joseph his son, the interpreter of the law; and Frederick M., now president, the leader to carry out the provisions of the law as they have been given and largely interpreted. Of course he would not limit the work of any one to that exclusively, but the dominating result had been along the lines indicated.

Perhaps there is nothing remarkable or new in this conclusion nor the discovery of the group, but it may suggest to the reader a situation at which he has possibly wondered a little and about which he may have asked: "Why do we hear so much on all sides about service?"

Let us consider the situation briefly. We recall the statement, a trite one, of another young preacher to the effect that our service to God is measured by our service to his creatures. We are all supposed to believe that nowadays, yet an old brother took the young man to task, saying that he could serve God acceptably at home in prayer and devotion and deep meditation.

Both were right. The youthful herald to the king thought of running swiftly to yonder hamlet with fleetness of foot and stoutness of heart to carry the king's message. The veteran whose temples were silvered with many years of experience thought of serving as counselors to the king and his subjects.

Close students of the history of the church can observe in the publications of years ago that many and many a page has been written to clear up certain doctrinal points and firmly establish interpretations thereof. Our grandfathers and our fathers wrote and preached and talked of the law of the church. It was a common topic of conversation, this marvelous work and a wonder. At the fireside at night it was discussed and considered. On the Sabbath the whole family gathered at the meeting place and a zealous servant of God would preach the restored gospel in sermons often lasting two to two and a half hours to intensely interested audiences. Why hurry? for were they not there for the day to hear the gospel story? They did not hurry and they stayed all day. Those were the days of the establishment of the kingdom in the latter days.

The Sunday school was organized and grew and grew until to-day it reaches almost every individual in some way through the Bible questions and lesson Quarterlies. The Religio followed and taught us the Book of Mormon, much of the Doctrine and Covenants and some church history. It coached us so we could think on our feet and express ourselves intelligently. These and other factors have made a change in the lives of the Saints.

Considering the small army that has been raised up in this way, and that daily it is becoming better equipped, is it to be wondered at that the cry goes up and will be heard: "Let us go to and redeem Zion and strengthen her borders"?

Is it surprising that technical points are not so often raised? Even though this generation is not so studious in matters of primary importance, and may not be so well versed in many features of the law, is it to be wondered at that with the fields all white for the harvest there comes so often before us: Service, service, service?

The insistent demand comes not only from the vigorous and strong, but valiant soldiers who have spent a lifetime in the army of the Lord are taking up the cry and requesting: "Let us serve as well as counsel," and there is work for all. The desire to die in the harness is being granted them, and when they leave it is to go joyfully, knowing that from so much activity the essential devotion and consecration will evolve, and surely God can use the service so freely offered.

Truly, much is said about service, but we believe it is a natural result and will bring about much good. Let us serve well. EDWARD D. MOORE.

EMPLOYEES AT HERALD OFFICE ORGANIZED

Sometime ago the foremen of various departments at the Herald Publishing House met to consider the propriety of organizing for more efficient service.

As a result of this meeting, resolutions were drawn up and presented to the manager, Brother A. Carmichael, who was not only favorable to them, but told his men it was a move he had desired for a long time.

A general meeting was called and an organization effected by electing the usual officers and a program committee of five. Meetings were arranged for at four p. m. every Thursday, the hour from four to five being given over to that purpose. On account of the holiday rush of book and publication orders, as well as job work, some meetings have been missed, for we realize that proper coordination must respect the imperative needs of the institution.

The entire force, from the "printer's devil" to the manager and chief editor, with only one exception, attend the meetings and take an intelligent interest therein. Some interesting subjects have been discussed and others are pending. At one of the earlier meetings, representatives of the various departments—business, editorial, copy and proof, composing, press, and bindery and mailing, told us of the relation of their special work to that of the general church.

Several minor suggestions for change of system have been approved and are being installed. The subject of beautifying the premises, inside and out, has been discussed and indorsed by the appointment of a committee to work out details.

A number of names for the organization have been submitted and a committee will pick the three best ones and the body will choose one from that number. A library committee is assembling and classifying the printer's journals and special books on the trade available and will suggest the purchase of a few others to make a valuable, even though small, technical library.

The subject of safety has been brought up and is to be continued by an explanation of the Iowa employers' compensation law by S. A. Burgess, whose knowledge of law and ability to interpret it is extraordinary.

The subject, "How far should democracy prevail in the Herald Publishing House?" will be discussed by four of the employees at an early meeting. Other subjects of general and special interest are awaiting their turn and as they are considered in this manner can but be beneficial to the individuals, the body, and ultimately to the church through them.

This organization is much different from the ordinary labor union. The meetings open and close with prayer. There is no necessity for strikes and lock-outs, for even though the wage scale is so low it amounts in reality to a ministerial allowance, the sacrifice is in a worthy cause and so considered. There is no social caste and the janitor draws the same salary as the editor. The thirty-four employees at the Herald Publishing House hope to be counted with those who are seeking to magnify their calling and become more efficient laborers in the general forward movement in the church.

E. D. MOORE.

ANOTHER LINK BROKEN

Once more the chain that connects the past with the present has been severed in the passing of Brother Norman W. Smith of Lamoni.

He was one of the pioneers of Lamoni and his name is well known to the church through his musical compositions, found in the Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises. In the early days he was associated with such men as David H. Smith, M. H. Forscutt, Joseph Smith, John A. Scott and others, in selecting and arranging music for the church song books.

His tall and straight figure, crowned with a mantle of snow-white hair has been a regular sight at the meetings of the Saints for years. To the last, just a few days before the illness set in that caused his death, he enjoyed singing the songs of Zion in the house of the Lord.

A brief illness came, and on February 1 his spirit took its flight after a sojourn here of over eighty-three years. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon, February 4, at the Saints' church in Lamoni, R. S. Salyards in charge, J. F. Garver preaching the sermon. The music was all of his composition.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR ILL

This may not be a sequel to the excellent editorial last week by Brother Burgess on "Efficient cooperation," but at least it is an unfortunate coincident that in a day or two thereafter he was stricken with an attack of pneumonia, admittedly brought on by overwork and nervous strain.

He lies critically ill as we go to press, having suffered as those do who are attacked by this disease but all are confident that he will speedily recover and be able to carry on the work he is so well fitted to do. We are sure he will be remembered in the prayers of the Saints.

CONFERENCE DAILY

It has been decided to publish a conference daily again, from the Herald Office. This is no advantage to the publishing house and makes an added burden to the employees, but we are willing to undertake it, with the hope that it will be sufficiently well patronized to guarantee against any loss.

If those who cannot attend the sessions of the General Conventions and General Conference next April will give their liberal support by sending in subscriptions, there is no reason why it should not be a success. Paper and other materials are higher, but we count on an increased number of subscribers to make up for that.

We hope with the experiences of two years ago to help us, to make it this year more nearly a friendly letter from the scene of activity, and give you the story of what is taking place and what people are doing in addition to the routine of the conventions and conferences. Much of this will not appear in the regular columns of the HERALD.

Send twenty-five cents early for the DAILY HERALD, and it will be a profitable investment.

EDITORS HERALD.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Hedrickite President Dead

A. L. Hartley, president of the "Church of Christ," the organization that controls the temple lot at Independence, died January 28 and his funeral was held January 30. It is expected that his successor will be chosen on the 18th. A number of our people attended the funeral.

Immigration Bill Passed Over President's Veto

After being vetoed by Cleveland, Taft and Wilson, the House recently passed the Burnett immigration bill by the necessary two thirds vote over Wilson's veto and there seems no doubt that the Senate will do likewise. The President objected to the literacy test included in the bill.

In Good Company

The following is among the "Some Publications" notices of the January, 1917, number of the Iowa Journal of History and Politics, and refers to the magazine of which copies are for sale at the Herald Office, at the regular price, one dollar each:

"The world's need of international government" is the title of an article by Frank Allaben which occupies the opening pages of The Journal of American History for July. Heman C. Smith is the writer of a short sketch of the "History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Here also may be found addresses by Robert Lansing, John Barrett, and others, delivered before the Second Pan American Scientific Congress.

From the Biographical Dictionary Committee

The preparation of a biographical dictionary was by the General Conference referred to the Board of Publication and Historian. The preparation of a Book of Mormon concordance and other important work has delayed its preparation, but desiring to get the matter under way as soon as possible, each active church worker, whether general or local, is hereby invited and urged to send a brief sketch of his or her life to Historian Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa. We would also like to have your photo, or what would be better, a cut for insertion in said dictionary.

Some Cheap Sermons

A card has come to our desk which may be of interest to some. For $1, twelve books of sermons may be secured containing from 35 to 75 sermons besides religious anecdotes. In addition, ten extra books will be sent, or 22 books will be sent for the same price. As a special offer, for $1.50 they will send not only 22 books as above set forth, but also a large volume labeled "The Best" containing about 450 sermons and 800 religious anecdotes published during the eight years up to 1915. This would appear to give 1,500 sermons for $1.50, to say nothing of an equal number of anecdotes. In other words, ten sermons and ten anecdotes for a cent. The card is sent out to the pastors of a certain denomination, and fell into our hands by accident. This may account for some of the cheap sermons we sometimes hear.

Religious Journals in Danger

If the rider attached to the post office appropriation bill now before Congress is allowed to ride through to the President's signature, it will more than treble the postage rates on religious journals such as the HERALD, Ensign, and our other church papers. The effect would be disastrous, and to say the least, a heavy burden on our own church publications. Since church papers are notoriously unprofitable, especially when they carry little outside advertising it seems hardly just. Instead of a flat rate of one cent a pound, it is proposed to have a sliding scale of from one cent a pound to points within three hundred miles, to six cents a pound for over eighteen hundred miles.

Lamoni Stake Conference

The stake conference met on the 3d and 4th, following the conventions of the auxiliaries. It is to be observed that the word auxiliaries which has for a long time meant the Sunday school and Religio, now includes the Woman's Auxiliary. This is a change which bids fair to become general, and we say—Speed the day. The weather was very cold and Sunday treated us to the fag-end of a blizzard which affected the attendance very much. Little snow fell but trains were not running on Sunday. We thought much of the many conferences held on that date, some of which must have had even more severe weather. The thermometer hung around twenty degrees below zero part of the time, and high winds prevailed. Charles F. Graham, whose name was previously mentioned here as our new mayor, was ordained a high priest and member of the stake high council.

"Autumn Leaves" for February

Mexico is an interesting subject and it is interestingly dealt with in a profusely illustrated article by Arthur W. Smith. He has taken the photographs himself and writes from personal experiences in this strange neighbor country of ours.

"The Vineyard Story" by Estella Wight is continued with its usual interesting developments. The author has received various suggestions as to how the story should "come out," but she says these children of the imagination are like other children, you can't tell what they will do. Anyway, it is interesting and profitable to read the experiences of these church people and the lessons their lives teach.

The series on the American poets by Arthur E. McKim, decorated by Miss Ruby Short, sketches briefly the life of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Other interesting articles are presented, including the Young Woman's Department, the Religio's Arena, and the Sunday school department. The price is still only a dollar a year.

The European Crisis

Like a blinding flash of lightning from the ominous clouds of impending storm was the German note of the 31st announcing a merciless sea war on the allies and laying down definite restrictions for American shipping if they would avoid being sunk without warning. As a result, all the American consuls in Germany have been recalled; Count Bernstorff, the German Ambassador at Washington has been handed his passport, and it is expected that all German consuls in the United States will leave the country. The interests of the United States in Germany have been turned over to Spain, while those of Germany in the United States will be handled by the Swiss ambassador. President Wilson has urged all the neutral nations of the world to join this country in the diplomatic break, but to date it is not known how far this will be complied with. While everyone hopes some way will be found to avoid open declaration of war, all preparations are being made for the worst. Red Cross organizations in two hundred and sixty-five cities of the United States have been ordered to prepare for trouble by supplying themselves with necessary equipment and organizing for service. Similar preparations are being made in all lines. One of the results of the declaration of the extended submarine warfare was a drop in the price of cotton $28.50 a bale in a few hours, while it is predicted that provisions of all kinds will soon be at a normal level on account of the shutting off of exportation.

One of the greatest lessons in life is to learn to take the people at their best, not their worst; to look for the divine, not the human, in them; the beautiful, not the ugly; the bright, not the dark; the straight, not the crooked side.—Anonymous.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE ATTITUDE OF THE SAINT UNDER WORLDLY ENVIRONMENT--No. 1

[The following article is one of a short series on this subject, by members who have had occasion to make practical observations along this line.—EDITORS.]

No man should attempt to evade the decree of God, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."—Genesis 3: 19.

Such as may seem to live in ease, idleness, and its apparent luxury shall have no place, lot, or portion in Zion, for God has avowed the idler shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of him that labors. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.)

Preparing against that day we are found pitted against the world, in the mad onrush of its heaving and surging business tide; some as men of business, and others, those who labor, the employer and the employee. Can we maintain our integrity? Can we stand as men of honor and be true to the gospel principles enjoined upon us as Saints of God, steeped in the business activities of the world that involve so much of the elements that point to dishonesty, hated rivalry, bitter oppression and many other even vicious practices that add to the catalogue of crime, that make us hesitate and question again and again, Can we remain in its environment and continue free from its besmirching and kindred contaminations?

ELIMINATE ALL SEMBLANCE OF TAINT

The man of business who has been involved in sharp and cunning practices, accepting the gospel and coming into the church, necessarily must eliminate from his life all semblance of taint and iniquitous participation. God demands it of him. Honesty, square dealing must be first and foremost. Law must be recognized and its mandates lived up to. The Lord gave a very significant indorsement of this early in the history of the church when he gave command by revelation to Sidney Gilbert to establish a store and sell goods without fraud, and note that there might be no hindrance, he should obtain a license. The wisdom of this can be seen as suggested by him who reads.

You will observe not only that success is pointed at by observing the laws of the land and dealing honestly, but God also promises through this nucleus and channel that the Saints should be provided for to the end that the gospel should be preached to those who sit in darkness and in the region and shadow of death. Surely this blessed feature of section 57, paragraph 4, of the Doctrine and Covenants we should all hope to see carried into execution in the very near future.

EQUAL RESPONSIBILITY

But again the pertinent question arises, Is there any less responsibility devolving on the employee, or the one who labors, than there is on the employer, the man of business? We readily and candidly say we feel sure that there is not.

Suppose a young man in need of employment who secures a position ascertains or becomes aware in time that his employer is conducting a questionable business. We do not say he should leave at once, but should begin to make diligent effort toward securing another position. That far alone we believe he is responsible. When the opportunity affords for a change he should take it and at times perhaps at a sacrifice, too. We have an example in mind of a young brother who accepted a position, and afterwards found he was stenographer in a wholesale liquor house. It was so obnoxious to him that he immediately began negotiating for other positions. He had to work, so he remained while he sought a new place, also asking God's help and direction, and his testimony is that God opened the way for him far beyond his expectations.

SAINTLY METHODS COMMENDED

I know a young man, a member of the church, engaged in soliciting freight for one of the greatest railroad lines in our western country, a business that is rife with competition, and the solicitors employ all known tactics to secure the division of these freight shipments for their different roads. Chief among their offers of course, to those who have the awarding of these contracts, is the dispensing of cigars, tobacco, and drinks, liquors and treats of all kinds. Practically all of this our young brother has refrained from doing, and one day at a time of inspection over his territory the department head being with him, he mentioned this and told his superior if they thought by his not following this custom and treating to drinks and cigars he was hurting their business and lessening the chances of shipments, he was willing to take some other appointment. Whereupon he was highly commended by his superior officer, and told they were more than pleased with his services, and advised to continue along the lines he had been working, as they were very gratifying to him as the head of the department.

One young brother who has advanced himself by conscientious and Christlike deportment (as all Saints should conduct themselves, though young) has been placed in charge of a large office force. He was not afraid to take his Bible along or read his church books at his place of business or on the car. And very much surprised was he, although he knew the man who was immediately over him was not overly friendly toward him, this same man I believe, told him not to arrange to work on Sundays as he had done, and the other men were doing, but to take the time and be free to attend his church and Sunday school work.

Thus it is you see, that character and uprightness are recognized and rewarded.

What should be our attitude, for instance, when we fall in an unfavorable place and have a hardened and austere employer, supervisor, or associate? Will our situation be made more tolerant? Will our character be unfolded and broadened in the Christlike beauty of refinement or stoop to the common level of the one who is hateful and overbearing to his employee, subordinate, or associate in employment? No!

I have in mind a distinct instance where a refusal to retaliate, a consistent attitude of the Christlike spirit of forbearance among the employees of one office, won over a man who was a very hard and overbearing supervisor, until now he is a changed man.

OUR ATTITUDE IN UNWHOLESOME ENVIRONMENT

Again, a man may be unfortunate in finding himself surrounded by the most unwholesome and profane environment. It should not cause him to make himself obnoxious by openly resenting and condemning every act seen or noticed, thereby creating the feeling that he considers himself above others or too good to associate with them. He should quietly turn from them and not condone or approve their evil or coarse language. But at the right time and at given and proper opportunities he should disclaim all improprieties and pronounce for good, always remaining firm in his attitude and stanch in his support of the principles of truth and right. This attitude to my knowledge, has commanded respect, and, I feel sure, ever shall.

The striking mark of approval which God placed upon his Son should follow every Son of God in all their dealings and relation with those of the world, ever evidencing that "my people shall be a peculiar people" in that they are zealous of good work.

"IN THE BEGINNING GOD"—Part 3

BY H. A. STEBBINS

WHENCE MAN'S DEGRADATION?

With some there exists the thought that the degraded state of tribes and races of men during the past six thousand years, and also of many individuals even among civilized nations, that these instances are proof that man's parentage was from the lower orders and therefore that he could not have been very intelligent at his beginning. But the fall, or departure of man from the way of the Lord, brought the noble and exalted race of mankind down from its high place to a very low plane within a few hundred years after the fall, excepting those who listened to the Lord's teachings and were guided by him to come up out of the pit that the race had fallen into. Such men, from Adam down to Noah, completely or very largely retained the original manhood and intelligence; and of Enoch it is especially said that he "walked with God"; also some hundred years after the deluge there lived a man who is said to have been "the friend of God," even Abraham.

But the great race largely fell into idolatry, ignorance, barbarism, and defilement of many kinds. The Inspired Version of the Bible contains the following statement about the fallen condition of man, namely: "And man began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish."—Genesis 4: 13, I. T.

The early account of Cain as a murderer and of Lamech as a polygamist bears witness that the defilement and debasement of the race must have soon become very great. And when some of those who had been obedient to God and especially included in the covenant as his children, and who were separate from the wicked, when these consorted with the daughters of the wicked, then the barriers were down, and the sins of the race were increased. We read as follows in the King James Version: "The sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose."—Genesis 6: 1. See also Inspired Version, Genesis 8: 9, 10.

"THE SONS OF GOD" ON EARTH

That greatly deceived man, "Pastor" C. T. Russell, says that the sons of God here spoken of were angels who came down from heaven and thus mated with the women of earth. He forgot that Paul wrote that "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God," (Romans 8: 14) and that Christ said God gave the obedient of the earth "power to become the sons of God." Paul wrote, "Because ye are sons God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts."—Galatians 4: 6.

The quotations I have given from the writings of educated men certainly show that they had full veneration for God, and that they gave him all honor as the sole Creator of all things. And they published the facts as they found them, about the periods of creation and the successive ages of animal life: also the truth that at the end of each age an overwhelming convulsion by flame and flood, or else by extreme cold, extinguished all life; and when ages of preparation for new and improved beings had elapsed, they were introduced, until man himself, by the will of God and when all was prepared, came into his heritage.

CONDITIONS AT THE AGE OF CREATION

The first chapter of Genesis deals with events and conditions as pertained to that age or period of creation, and from the viewpoint of the earth, as they would appear to one on the earth. The sun, moon and stars are spoken of as not made till the fourth day, whereas they must have been among the created things mentioned in the first verse. God said these words to Job about the earth: "When I made the cloud the garment thereof, and thick darkness a swaddling band for it." (Job 38: 9.)

After the earth cooled enough from its molten state it was covered by water for a long, long period. The contact of heat and water caused steam, and impenetrable clouds, through which the sun could not shine, particularly in the carboniferous age, when gigantic ferns and trees grew and fell and from them were formed the layers of coal as the ages passed. Probably the cosmic or primeval light that shone on the first creative day increased and was sufficient for the growth of the coarse and rank vegetation from which the coal was formed.

I, the Lord God, had not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth, . . . but I, the Lord God, spoke and there went up a mist from the earth and watered the whole face of the ground.—Genesis 2: 5, 7, I. T.

THE RAINBOW

Skeptics have scoffed at the Bible account of the rainbow being a new thing in the days of Noah, and then being given as a sign from God. They have said that certainly the rains before the deluge would have produced the rainbow whenever the sun shone upon the descending showers under the same conditions as after the deluge. Of course the argument is good, because, as often said, the same cause will produce the same effect at all times. And, on reading the above words from Genesis we remember that in our experience we have seen day following day, four or five together, when the fogs and clouds were so thick that we did not see the sun even once during those periods. Yet the moisture was so abundant that the plants and trees and the very ground itself were saturated with water.

And I give it as my personal belief that before the floods of water descended from the heavens at the time spoken of as the Noachan deluge, that before this descent the clouds and fogs still so largely enshrouded the earth that they "watered the whole face of the ground," as stated in Genesis. The periodic rains had not come into action, but after the descent of the great body of water which before that was "above the firmament," then the surface of the earth no longer received such great moisture by mist and fogs, as it did before. Therefore, by the action of the law operating under the new conditions, the rains came and the rainbow was produced, not as a miracle but as the result of the new condition or order, even as seasons and months change, and new phenomena are seen and experienced by us.

I do not hold that there was no condensation in the form of rain, but that almost the sole moistening of the earth was by the dense clouds and fogs from the abundance of water held above the earth until the purpose of God by the deluge in Noah's day was accomplished. Certainly the conditions by which the sun and the rain produces the rainbow had not yet come into being.

I do not claim that this idea is original with me. Indeed I believe that I obtained it many years ago from some thinker and writer on geology and the Bible, whose words and argument seemed of value. And to me the words I have quoted from the Inspired Translation appear to substantiate this idea. I believe they do, but this does not include the church or any other in the church as so believing. I am willing to stand alone in it till I am justified later on, if it shall be found that I am correct.

"LET THERE BE LIGHT"

On the first creative day God said, "Let there be light and there was light." Light was needed for the growth of vegetation, and the Lord spoke into being a light that was independent of the sun, probably what now is known as the electric light. The sun was not yet visible from the earth even had there been anyone on the earth to see it. The clouds enveloped the earth in darkness excepting for this cosmic light that made possible the growth of vegetation. In our time it has been proven that continuous light on plants causes them to grow faster than they do by daylight alone. Men find that electric lights through the night cause their shrubs and flowers to grow better and bloom more abundantly than they can without them; not that electricity helps the growth but a continued light is said to.

Atheists have in the past scoffed at the account of the creation because the writer of Genesis told of light existing before there were any sun, moon and stars, whose need the historian seemed to forget to mention till the fourth day. But we now know that God could create light entirely distinct from the sunshine. Poor man himself has had a variety of experiences in creating light. The writer of this article remembers when a lighted rag in a saucer of oil drove away some darkness. Then tallow candles came and dispelled more, and just before the Civil War kerosene appeared as a marvel in decreasing the gloom of the night. But now we say, "Let there be light," and by turning a button a very large building is immediately illuminated, and even whole towns and small cities have their streets lighted from end to end in a second. How mysterious it seems, especially to old people, like a new world with a promise of greater things to come in the line of wonders even in the millennium.

Yet God was as powerful in "the beginning" as he is in our time, but he is now, in our day, just permitting man to learn many great secrets about the elements and their wonderful powers and possibilities, and to do many things that once were impossible for man and undreamed of by him. The marvels now so common as to cause no remark would in our fathers' days have been ascribed to Satan. Witches were burned for small mysteries whereas the wonder in our days are mountains in comparison.

BEINGS BEFORE MAN

There were years when I was much disturbed and unable to account for the proof brought to light by scientists that prior to Adam some beings, very much in the form of man, yet inferior in the shape of the skull and the features and some of the bones of the body, that such lived long before Adam came forth from the hand of God. But Adam was formed and endowed as a perfect man, made in the actual likeness of God's person, endowed with Godlike intelligence, and having many qualities and attributes of the divine Being himself, while clearly these others had not all these, if any. But whenever I used to read about them I desired an explanation as to who were the "cave men" and those who lived in the "Stone Age" and used stone implements and weapons. Were they really men or only progressive apes or chimpanzees? And who dwelt in the submerged "lake dwellings" of Switzerland at some ancient period? In the National Geographic Magazine for February, 1916, is a write-up about Doctor Osborne's "Men of the Old Stone Age," which speaks of the "half-human predecessor of man." A picture is given of the skull of the so-called "ape-man of Java," a "prehuman creature" who is supposed to have lived "500,000 years ago," and also a picture of one of a race which is believed to have dwelt in caves in France "50,000 years ago," and another of a skull found in Sussex, England. This man is believed to have existed, with other of his kind, perhaps 300,000 years ago. Then the skull of the more modern "Heidelberg Man" who also may not have lived beyond 50,000 years ago.

With all their knowledge of geology, nevertheless, the fixing of these great figures, as to time, seems an absurdity, like the wildest conjecture. I do not doubt that such grotesque skulls have been found as are pictured in the aforesaid magazine and book, but the creatures who had these heads were no more the ancestors of Adam and his race than the fierce tiger of our time is the parent of the noble, high-bred horse. I have believed that time will make all things plain. So I believe yet, but also I am now fully satisfied that one or the other of two propositions is correct, either some of those things are not so ancient and they were simply some degenerate posterity of Adam's race, or else they dwelt on the imperfect earth long prior to Adam, and every specimen was wiped out during the cataclysms of fire and flood and earth convulsions which repeatedly overthrew all forms of life on the earth, as very learned students say was the case, and thus no life was left as a parentage to begin a new age. I have already quoted from such careful, cautious investigators as Hugh Miller, Louis Agassiz, Alexander Winchell, Edward Hitchcock, and J. P. Thompson, and I might also cite Sir Charles Lyell, Sir Roderick Marchison, Arnold Guyot, Doctor Buckland, and others, who had similar views after years of study as those already quoted in this article.

NEW CREATIONS WITH EACH NEW AGE

That it was the custom of the Creator to begin each new age with new creations seems well established as a truth; therefore when he placed Adam on the earth he was the first man, and, according to the Inspired rendering, he was also the first flesh on the earth, even the earth that had been made anew by the cleansing and purifying processes set in motion by the Creator. To me this does not seem at all a strange interpretation, but an actual fact.

I note that the Lord spoke to Job saying,

Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the earth? . . . When the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy.—Job 38: 4, 7.

Evidently this gladness was because those sons foresaw the great plan of the Almighty in creating the earth, and especially because the happiness of the "sons of God" was to be greatly increased through their receiving bodies, and because the coming earth was to be fitted and prepared for their enlarged lives and wider activities. If they sang and shouted for joy there is no other conclusion than that they had knowledge that thereby their happiness would become greater by their obtaining bodies and living on the earth.

Of Christ it is stated that when he came into the world he said, "A body hast thou prepared me." (Hebrews 10:5.) Also Paul wrote that "it behooved Christ to be made like unto his brethren," even that his spirit should also be clothed with a body, all of them in bodies after the form of the great Father himself, and all to undergo the testing and the proving so that they might afterward receive reward and glory, because in the body they had each endured and had overcome and won the victory.

As we view it, this purpose of God and its accomplishment entirely precludes the idea that man should be but the product or outgrowth of a mollusk, a trilobite, or a chimpanzee. No, no; man was the immediate and special creation of our heavenly Father, who "in the beginning" formed the earth, as he says, "to be inhabited." Man was at his beginning only "a little lower than the angels," and not the outgrowth and slow expansion of a protoplasm.

NO UNIVERSAL DESTRUCTION

Since then there has been no overthrow and universal destruction on the earth by nature's powers, though the deluge in Noah's time was near to it, and some reject the idea of the Noachian flood and of the ark being the means of saving those who were not drowned, saying that it could not possibly contain so many animals. But not only the Bible gives account of the deluge, but also on all continents and even the islands of the sea, the ancient inhabitants had traditions, and also pictured or written accounts of just such a flood in the days of their fathers, and of a few persons who were saved in some kind of a boat. Nearly all ancient nations, races and tribes throughout the world had traditions of this great event in the earth's history, and about the ark. All ancient races in Europe, Asia, Africa and America, and on the far islands had such traditions.

And then as to the size of the ark, if we take the common cubit as the measure, the boat was 450 feet long, 75 feet broad, and 45 feet deep. Watson's Bible Dictionary says that this would make over forty-two thousand tons as its capacity. But if the Hebrew cubit was the measure used, the ark was 525 feet long, one tenth of a mile, 87 and one half feet broad and 52 and one half feet deep, making the capacity over fifty thousand tons. The Great Eastern steamship, launched in England in January, 1858, was about the same width and depth as the ark, (counting the twenty-one-inch cubit) and 680 feet long, and the cyclopedias say that it would carry five thousand soldiers besides the crew and necessary coal and all equipments. Then certainly we may believe that the ark would hold all the forms of life that needed to be carried. Without a doubt the multitude of variations by crossing and interbreeding were produced later. Every shade and variety was not essential to be preserved in the ark, but the main stock was preserved. Undoubtedly there was plenty of room for all, and for food, and for their care in every way. Doctor Cummings declared that he believed that it was harder to fill it than to find space in it.

NO OTHER GOD

The question may arise in some minds as to why the Lord spoke through Isaiah so particularly and emphatically that there was no other God but himself, as we find in Isaiah 44:6; 45:5, 6, 18, 21, 22, as quoted in the early part of this article. Repeatedly he said, "There is none beside me," and "there is none else." And, until I learned the cause for the repeated assertions, they seemed strange to me. For both the Bible and secular history record that in those times the nations, both the great and the small, but particularly the Assyrians and Babylonians, worshiped many gods, that is they had names of gods, though no such beings really existed. Sennacherib, king of Assyria, was assassinated while he was worshiping the winged image called Nisroch, in the temple erected for its worship. (See 2 Kings 19:37, and Isaiah 37:38.) By Nahum (1:14) the Lord said to Nineveh, "Out of the house of thy gods will I cut off the graven image and the molten image."

It is stated that the Babylonians worshiped thirteen gods. They seemed to seek for some God with real power, though they ascribed great benefits as coming from those they supposed they had. Therefore when Nebuchadnezzar saw how wonderfully the three Hebrews had been protected and delivered by their faith, he exclaimed, "There is no other god who can deliver after this sort," and he said to the three, "Ye servants of the Most High God come forth." No doubt the Assyrians and Babylonians had a traditional idea from their ancestors who were in the ark that a "most high God" did live and that he saved them from the flood. Their account of the deluge on tablets found in 1878 make plain the knowledge they had of that event.

From the Scriptures we know that the Hebrew people were inclined to worship the gods of Egypt, and of the peoples by whom they were surrounded in Palestine; and later on they were tempted and perhaps sometimes compelled to worship the gods of Assyria and Babylon. This we see from the account of the great effort made to force Daniel, also Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego, to bow down to those idols and worship them. Therefore the warnings given through Isaiah and the strong assertions that there was no other God but the God of their fathers, really no such thing as another who could save or deliver or keep the children of man. The others were only in name and not in fact. They were myths of man's creation, as vain as the mythological gods of Greece and Rome. But the people of Israel and Judah needed to be reminded that He who had guided and delivered their fathers from the days of Abraham, twelve hundred years before the days of Isaiah, was still their God, and that there was no other, no living God other than he who "made the earth and created man upon it," and who "stretched out the heavens" and revealed their glory.

DISBELIEF AND SKEPTICISM INCREASING

I have mentioned the course by some scientists, great and noble minds, too, away from God and his word, during the past fifty years. Bible believers have felt that skepticism as to that book was increasing, also disbelief in an allwise, Omnipotent Creator. This disbelief has been increased and multiplied by the course of nearly all the sects of those who are called Christians, through their teachings that God is not a personal being, but only an intangible essence that permeates all space, so that though Christ and "his brethren" are spoken of as being made in the "express image of his person," yet as he has no person therefore it is only his "moral image" that man was made in the likeness of. From the idea of a great intangible nothing it is but a step to reach a total denial of him as having any wisdom, or intelligence, or power of action, if he has no person whom Moses could see "face to face," as stated in the Bible.

However, in the midst of all the inconsistencies and the contradictions by man, it is evident that more thinking people are rising up than ever were before and such are seeking after light; and these are coming nearer to comprehend God and his work and purposes in the creation of the earth and man. And I fully believe that the time is not far off when the promise of God through the Prophet Isaiah will be fulfilled and he will remove "the covering cast over all people and the veil that is spread over all nations." (Isaiah 25:7.) Then will the darkness of this world pass away, and the true God be known and comprehended by all people, even "from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof." When that time is fully come shall be fulfilled the word by both Isaiah and Micah that "many people" shall say, "Come let us go up to the house of the Lord, and he will teach us of his ways." Also the words by Zechariah, "Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the lord of hosts."

BIBLE STATEMENTS STILL STAND

To some degree I am acquainted with the writings and public addresses by scientific men within the past few years, such as Sir Oliver Lodge, Lord Kelvin, Professors George F. Wright, William Flinders Petrie, Melvin G. Kyle, and others. Some of them have spent years in technical work over the inscriptions and tablets found in Egypt, Palestine, Babylon, Nineveh, and in other old-time lands. While they have added a great deal of information in a particular and technical way to what was known in part prior to the year 1900, yet their readings of tablets and inscriptions on monuments, their studies of Bible scenes and traditional history, have not materially added to the fund of information already existing on the main points and facts about God creating the earth and placing man upon it, nor upon the general history of the human race and of the nations of antiquity as given in the Bible and attested more or less by Herodotus, Manetho, Strabo and other ancient writers, and in later times by Rollin and Rawlinson.

The ancient Christian sect named Agnostics held that "God does not know all things and that God cannot be known." To be an agnostic now is not only to say, "I do not know," but is also to "deny the possibility of knowing or affirming anything as to the infinite, the absolute, as to the immortality of the soul, the existence of God, the origin of matter, or of original causes." A great many prominent men in England, as also in America and among other nations, profess to be agnostic in their views. Therefore the astonishment among all such when, in September, 1913, Sir Oliver Lodge of London, a very prominent scientist and the president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, made the following statement before that society at Birmingham, England. He said:

Either we are immortal beings or we are not. We may not know our destiny but we must have a destiny of some sort. Those who make denials are just as likely to be wrong as those who make assertions. . . . Science may not be able to reveal human destiny, but it certainly should not obscure it. Things are as they are whether we find them out or not.

The London Times stated that Sir Oliver's discourse was "a protest against arrogance," and against the idea that nothing "which could not be weighed or measured" was allowed any place whatever. It says that Lodge, "by natural transition passed on from existence in this world to its continuity hereafter," of which he held he had been "convinced by strict evidence and in the broad truth of religion." He said that the ideas of scientific agnosticism account for things up to a certain point, but they do not account for the joy and happiness in our minds and hearts, nor for the manifest beauty throughout nature everywhere, and he asked, "Do not these things suggest something higher and nobler and more joyous, something for which all this struggle for existence goes on? We have to explain this competitive striving toward life. Surely the effort must have some significance, the development of man some aim."

These are great truths, excellent arguments in favor of a life to come, which only can account for this irrepressible desire for perfection and to go forward, ever onward and upward.

But, alas, it is said later, that Sir Oliver Lodge entered in with Spiritualism and accepted its interpretation about a life beyond this world, thus stopping far short of the eternal truth about man and his destiny, and of God's purpose for the everlasting happiness of Adam and his race.

(Concluded next week.)

KEEPING TEN MEN AT WORK

[The following article by one of our successful young missionary pastors was written at our request. While the brother modestly refrains from giving his personal experiences, we assure our readers that he has proven the value of the following suggestions by actual experience.—EDITORS.]

I have often experienced a season of sadness when learning through the HERALD of the death of many brethren who were able defenders of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; men who have received great knowledge through much study and experience and have become qualified to enter into great service beyond. The church, by reason of the death or disability of many is deprived of the benefit of the knowledge they have gained here. I have thought, What a pity their knowledge could not have been transferred to other minds, that the church might still have greater benefit from their struggles and experiences in life, only the account of which we have.

The all-wise Creator has decreed it otherwise; that "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth." It is our mission to help others to a knowledge of the truth, and that knowledge comes only by individual experience through doing. The question arises, How are we going to keep others at work.

Being permitted to attend a part of the 1914 Sunday school and Religio conventions, my attention was attracted to the motto: "It is better to keep ten men at work than to do the work of ten men!" I thought, What a great army of qualified workers the Lord would soon have if this idea were carried out more fully.

In the construction of buildings there are various instruments used and each is necessary for its special work to prepare and shape the material for the structure. So, in our spiritual work certain instruments are necessary. Sometimes mistakes are seen and the builder's excuses are that his square is not exactly true, or that he did not have a level. Sometimes men try to build without either. It is true that the church needs a greater number of efficient workers. Many start but grow tired or discouraged and quit, offering various excuses. It may be that in our hurry to build we have neglected the use of some instrument or thought some unnecessary.

The advice of Peter is to "add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brother kindness charity." (2 Peter 1: 5-7.)

Why should we be found teaching others to build without demonstrating to them the power of these instruments? The Lord has given us to understand that we cannot be successful without them, for he said, "No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care." (Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.)

The Apostle Peter has said that "if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ." He has also said that "he that lacketh these things is blind and cannot see afar off." Then with these we can see instruments or qualities in the lives of others which may be used successfully by giving them the pleasure of doing the work for which they are best fitted. A wise father who desires his sons to make success in life would not select the carpenter trade for his son who loved to work in the orchard or garden. Neither should he expect the son to succeed to any great extent on sixty acres of land who would throw down the hoe to pick up the paint brush. He may argue that because he had made a success on the farm, his son would also, forgetting that his success was the result of the knowledge he had gained through his love and interest in the work he was doing. Why not give his son the same opportunity? We are losing valuable time in expecting one to neglect a talent which he possesses and to cultivate a love for talents which he may not have.

Love, faith and patience are instruments which may be used to develop various arts. The love of art may be developed into consecrated service, resulting in love and knowledge of the work of God, by working with it properly; an increase of the same kind spoken of by the Master of men in the parable of the talents. (Matthew 25: 14-30.)

opportunity trying to see what he could do in those lines, but because of conditions surrounding the parents, was not permitted to develop them. In later years he was found at a trade in which he took little interest and made but little if any success.

Many young men, because of a lack of interest in their work, turn aside from honest labor and seek an easy living by tending bar, working in the pool room, or turn to gambling, because they had not the right start. In the service of the Lord there is room for all to work, and he has said, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.) Then if these gifts are given by him who doeth all things well, why not give the individual something to do in his line of ability? The Sunday school, Religio and reunion work are now presenting many opportunities for developing the young. Too often we do like the child who said, "If you don't play like I want you to you can just go home." The Lord has said that being called according to the gifts were to the intent that all may labor together.

Of greater benefit and more pleasant would be the service where the individual who, because of his love for music was asked to sing that he may improve that talent, instead of asking him who could do some excellent blackboard work or give a reading and had no ability to sing, but did so just because he was asked. The first individual would likely receive commendation where the second may hear criticism, which, however, should not be. The first will continue to work where the other may get discouraged and quit. Commendation is of little cost to the giver and may be of great value to him who has made an effort even though it is not as successful as would have been that of one better qualified.

A brother was telling of an experience in smithing when the man for whom he was working being overcrowded with work, requested that he make a weld which required immediate attention and considerable skill. The employer had confidence that he would do his best. He worked carefully and finally finished the work, and when taking it to the man for examination was told that it was an excellent piece of work, and kindly said, "but there is only one right way to do a thing." Said he, "I have never forgotten that statement." There was a hint with the commendation that had a proper effect.

Often conditions arise in various institutions requiring that important work must be left to others, and their love and interest in whatever line it may be will keep them at work if recognized by our love for them and the work of God.

My observation has been that when one loves the one for whom he is working, his work is much easier, and if he loves his work he will do it without continual persuasion.

Our duty, then, is not to insist that he work in a line in which he is not gifted but to help cultivate the gifts which God has given him. In doing this we will find pleasure in God's service.

THE BURNING OF BABYLON---No. 7

BY E. E. LONG

GOD REMEMBERS HIS COVENANT

Viewing the situation through the unerring field glass of divine inspiration, Nephi declared:

And when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the Devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel.—1 Nephi 3: 236, 237.

Glorious hope! Though in a terrible "strait betwixt two" at the present time by reason of his scattered condition, Jacob's fetters will be jarred loose by the vibrations of the mighty conflict and the way opened whereby he may return to his own country a free man. Of this same time Jeremiah wrote:

Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him: but they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them. Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished. For thus saith the Lord, thy bruise is not incurable, although thy wounds are grievous.—Jeremiah 30: 7-12, I. T.

The present titanic struggle is but the prelude to the "full end" decreed above, for it is also written, "I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth," (Isaiah 28: 22). The "great day of the Lord" is described by Zephaniah as follows:

The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and the alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord: and their blood shall be poured as dust, and their flesh as the dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.—Zephaniah 1: 14-18.

By diplomatic intrigue, "for the peace of Europe," the nations have allowed the Turk to possess the Holy Land because they could not agree among themselves which one should have it. Now that they are engaged in a life-and-death struggle, the Turk along with the rest, the vexatious "eastern question" will likely be settled with the ending of the war, and the disposition of the Jews will be a feature of the final solution. God has declared positively that they shall return to their inheritance; but before Israel can secure his rights, Babylon will have to be overthrown. The Turk is not the only barrier to Jewish occupancy of the Holy Land. Indeed, the Turks have been more friendly to Israel than apostate Christianity ever was.

With reference to the scattered condition of God's covenant people and their final restoration, Ezekiel proclaimed the word of the Lord thus:

My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them. Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord; as I live, saith the Lord God, surely because my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock; therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord; thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them. For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places in the country.—Ezekiel 34: 6-13.

The "cloudy and dark day" may cover a lengthy period but when he says, "my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth" it could not apply until after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans A. D. 70. Never before that date were they so universally scattered, and become a prey to "every beast of the field." Moreover, it is positively declared in verse 28, "And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid." That the prophecy was to have a latter-day application is further attested by the following remarkable declaration:

Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.—Ezekiel 37: 21, 22.

The "house of Israel" was divided into two nations at the death of Solomon and known ever after as the "kingdom of Israel," and the "kingdom of Judah." The "kingdom of Israel" was overthrown by Shalmaneser II, 721 B. C., and known to this day as the "lost tribes." "The kingdom of Judah," except for seventy years captivity in Babylon, occupied the Holy Land until the year 70 A. D., and never since the revolt of the ten tribes when the House of Israel was divided have they been "one nation on the mountains of Israel," or anywhere else. But the prophecy positively declares that they shall be "one nation," and that "one king shall be king to them all." And his name shall be David. (Jeremiah 30: 9; Ezekiel 34: 23.) Amos, the shepherd boy called away from his flock to prophesy to Israel, proclaimed this:

In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old; . . . And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.—Amos 9: 11-15.

That the foregoing prophecies, and numerous others of like import, were to have a latter-day application and a literal fulfillment seems clear from the following New Testament readings:

And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.—Luke 21: 24.

For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.—Romans 11: 25-27.

Both Jesus and Paul limit Gentile rule to some future time designated as "the fullness of the Gentiles." Israel, scattered throughout the world as he is, could never overthrow the Gentile powers, so it must come about by internal dissention and strife.

If anyone gets any lasting good out of the war, Israel will have the lion's share. Jewish financiers are negotiating the monster war credits of the nations and every loan tightens their grip on the throat of their Gentile masters. In this connection the following from Micah is significant, and interesting:

And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down; and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots: and I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds: and I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand; and thou shalt have no more sooth-sayers: thy graven images also will I cut off, and thy standing images out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands. And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee: so will I destroy thy cities. And I will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the heathen, such as they have not heard.—Micah 5: 8-15.

The scattered remnant of Jacob could not tread down and tear in pieces the powerful Gentile nations in a military sense. It would be preposterous to think of such a thing, hence it must have some other application. Yet there is to be a furious "vengeance" executed against the "heathen, such as they have never heard." But when we consider it from a financial point of view we can see the process of fulfillment now. When the war is over the nations will be so terribly in debt to the "remnant of Jacob" that he will "tear them in pieces" financially unless they grant equal civil and religious rights which they do not now enjoy. The Jews are hated by every nation in Europe and it is not unreasonable to suggest that diplomacy will devise some plan whereby the despised Hebrews will be permitted to occupy Palestine as a Jewish state, if not, independent, as an autonomous dependency of some neutral power. Nor are surface indications wanting now pointing to some such arrangement. But, be that as it may, the fact remains that God has promised to remember his covenant with Abraham to a "thousand generations," and world events look as though he was doing it, however wide of the mark we may be as to the precise modus operandi.

An important feature of this "promise" to Israel is the fact that God says he will make "a covenant of peace" with them (Ezekiel 37: 26), a "new covenant" (Jeremiah 31: 31), which can only be done by divine revelation. On this point Ezekiel says, in part:

As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: and I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant.—Ezekiel 20: 33-37.

When God plead face to face with Israel in Egypt he did it through Moses, a prophet divinely sent. In like manner will he plead with them when he brings them into the bond of the covenant in the latter days. The first act of the latter-day drama was staged and the curtain went up A. D. 1830, with the Gentiles in the reserved seats. But, as it happened nineteen hundred years ago, the audience failed to appreciate the honor of first choice and all but hooted the actors from the stage. The curtain is slowly descending on this first scene and the seats will soon be emptied when Israel, who has had a long time to think matters over, will be invited in. Timid at first because of his long exile and ostracism from society, Jacob will gladly accept the invitation and, forgetting the weary years of his degraded captivity, he will humbly bow at the feet of the long rejected Messiah. Then will be brought to a pass the saying of Jesus: "The first shall be last and the last first."

(Concluded.)

THE ONE THING NEEDFUL

For long years we have been praying for the hastening of Zion's redemption, when the only thing that really hindered was a lack of willingness on our part to do as well as to say.

When we learn that the Master wants unity of spirit more than unity of opinion or theory—when we stop asking: "How much does the law require of me?" and ask instead, "How much can I do?" then will the widow's mite be multiplied and the hearts of the more opulent be opened towards Zion's cause, the church will be illumined as never before and the Master will show the way to the completion of his work.

The church as an institution will never save the world or redeem society, nor can the millennial peace be legislated in nor preserved by an armed police, but when men in the church are so developed in character that they do the will of God on earth as in heaven—when such characters predominate in Zion, then will we be recognized as "the salt of the earth," "the light of the world," and then "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

A. M. CHASE.

Let no man who is called of God and officially ordained, fear to speak in the name and by the authority of his King for the word of the Lord, even through his weakest consecrated instruments, shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that whereunto it was sent.—James E. Yates.

ANCIENT CIVILIZATION IN IOWA

Ages ago, tradition tells us, Iowa boasted a culture which had passed away perhaps centuries before the coming of the white man. To-day, on Tomahawk Island near Eddyville and in various localities along the Mississippi and confluent streams one may pause and dream of a past civilization which is still as much of a riddle as that of the Sphinx. One may still find in many localities in the State constant reminders of a paleolithic or neolithic age to which legend is our strongest tie. Lacking a better name we call the people who developed this culture "mound builders." Tradition gives them a fascinating history, but anthropology still speculates as to who they were.

One can but wonder why Iowa's anthropologists journey to far-away Arizona, Yucatan, and Peru, seeking to unravel there the mysteries of the past, when here at home is a romantic past fully as interesting in the possibilities of its revelation, though not so stupendous in its material remains, as can be found elsewhere in the western world.—From The Iowa Journal of History and Politics, published by the State Historical Society of Iowa.

VULGAR STORIES

[The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word and deed. It is therefore not seemly that they indulge in loud and boisterous speech, or in the relating of coarse, vulgar stories, or those in which the names of their God and their Redeemer are blasphemed. Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3, a revelation given to the church in 1887.]

THE SMUTTY STORY

It advertises your own ignorance.

It reveals the depth of defilement you have already reached.

It proves to your friends how greatly they may be disappointed in you.

It stultifies the testimony of those who said you were a good fellow.

It soils the imagination of your hearers.

It hangs vulgar pictures on the inner chamber of the imagination of other men from which they cannot escape.

It disgusts men of finer sensibilities who care for the clean and wholesome things of life.

It nauseates good men who love fun but hate dirt.

It dishonors your parents and your wife and your children, and your friends and your home, and your business and your God.

It proves nothing but your own unworthiness.

It accomplishes nothing but your own undoing.

It convinces others that you are a good man not to do business with.—S. W. McGill, in Iowa Masonic Library Bulletin, January, 1917.

THE FAVORITE TEXT

Doctor W. W. Everts, a Boston Baptist, claims that each of the leading denominations has its favorite text, depending upon the phase of truth or doctrine upon which it lays most stress. In proof of this assertion he gives the following texts:

For Baptists: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Congregationalists: "Give a reason for the hope that is in you." Disciples: "Be baptized and wash away thy sins." Episcopalians: "Obey them that have the rule over you and submit yourselves." Lutherans: "A man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." Methodists: "He perfected them that are sanctified." Presbyterians: "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." It may be that some of the denominations mentioned would prefer other texts, but in general Doctor Everts' assertions were not far from the mark, and these leading texts suggest the very cause of the existence of the various sects or denominations.

Adhering to certain texts of scripture to the exclusion of others has given rise to many of the sects of modern times. Too often, however, these favorite texts have been interpreted to suit the belief of a certain individual or body of people; and such interpretation necessarily excludes some other texts.

We must all confess that it is not easy for humanity to place the proper emphasis upon all texts, but only as men cease to ride their religious hobbies and open their hearts for the reception of all truth can they see the evil of present-day denominationalism. It is too bad that it can be said of any so-called Christian body that they have their favorite text, which forms the hub around which all their doctrines are built.—The Gospel Trumpet.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Speech of Bishop James F. Keir

(Delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, before the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, January 8, 1916.)

As I look out over this congregation, mostly ladies, I realize that there is within their grasp wonderful possibilities in assisting in the development of the Lord's work. I believe that the work of the Woman's Auxiliary is a progressive step.

I remember some years ago in the city of Chicago, in the development of that city, it became very apparent that we must have increased transportation facilities. It was planned to electrify the street car railway system but a great many people seemed to think that to adopt such a plan would endanger the lives of a great number. They were what we might call alarmists. They had a vision of trolley wires breaking from their moorings and dropping upon the heads of the people, causing numerous accidents and death; and so, for a time, that progressive measure was stayed, but finally they permitted the street car system to be reconstructed, as far as the loop district. They thought it would never do in the world to permit electricity to be used in the loop. So for a time our street cars went to the loop, and there hitched on horses, which pulled them around and back. That was a progressive measure; something in the development of the city that was needed and could not be held back. Finally the horses were done away with and through the loop and other parts of our city we had electric street cars.

I read in a history sometime ago about the time when steam cars first came into use, and in England, I am told, they had a man who ran ahead of the engine to notify the people to get out of the road or they might be run over. It was considered a very dangerous thing. So we see sometimes public opinion stands in the way of progress, and I have an idea this afternoon that we could find in the church people thinking that way; that the woman's movement is something of a fad that will be here to-day and gone to-morrow; but in my opinion, the woman's movement is born because there is a demand in the church for just such a movement. Some farseeing women seem to have been able to read through history the conditions that have surrounded the women of the past. They have been able to analyze the problem and see where the difficulties lie, and have thought out how better conditions might come to humanity. This is one of the aims of the Woman's Auxiliary; to bring into existence better conditions among the women; to enlarge their opportunities; to place them where they may have increased happiness and increased utility.

I heard Champ Clark say in a recent political speech that when we planted a home, we strengthened the Nation, and I believe that that is equally true concerning Zion; that when we establish a home we strengthen Zion, but the strengthening power of that home will depend altogether upon its ability to contribute to Zion's conditions, and there are homes in our midst that I am thoroughly satisfied do not contribute to Zion's conditions because there are lacking within that home the elements of development, so that it may be possible for them to thus contribute. As I look at it this afternoon, there are two lines of activity in which this woman's movement might find expression. One is in its group activities, under which our general work may progress, and under which certain phases of educational work might be carried on, and here I might say that we cannot overestimate the value of the education of our women along the lines that will help them to make our homes better: to place within these homes the elements whereby there may be development that will contribute to Zion's conditions.

The other line of activity is the line which reaches into the home, and which I believe is a God ordained plan. When this church was instituted we were given the instruction that a certain class of the ministry were to go into the homes and there present the law. Another arm of the church was to take care of the group activities, and so the Lord says, "Gather yourselves together often." The Lord recognized these two branches in effective service in the church; and so it can be in the work of the Woman's Auxiliary—a branch of service which shall take care of the group activities and another branch which shall reach into the home which is the unit of this great Zion's movement.

I recall just now a home concerning which a person said to us the other day; "in that home there is filth." Can people be happy under such conditions? Can they contribute to Zion's conditions? Can they exert an influence that will be helpful to those around them? Can children develop under these conditions? Can the husband and companion of that woman be happy with these surroundings? Impossible.

In this woman's movement I can see where they can reach that condition, not by going to that individual and saying, "Now, here; you will have to clean up." That's not it, but by studying the situation and placing those in touch with it that can so move and direct their energies that that condition shall be set aside, and a better condition brought in, until finally that family that is now a detriment to our community, a detriment to society, unable to enjoy the happiness that they might otherwise, shall be contributors and a blessing to the society in which we all mingle.

This is an exaggerated case. I do not want to leave the impression that we have many such conditions about here, but where we find conditions in the home like this they must be changed, and I believe it is a woman's problem. That's the idea I want to get before you; to bring into operation these corrective agencies that shall better our conditions.

I see another advantage in this woman's movement, and that is that which enlarges our opportunities to do good. We have within the church a number of young men and young women, and this movement is intended to educate women who are seeking an opportunity to give vent to their pent up powers to do good, and develop others, and here in this woman's movement, organized as it is, these powers can be directed, and they should be given opportunity to work.

So there are benefits to be derived from organization of this kind, and I am satisfied that we can work together. You know sometimes we work at cross-purposes and things don't go very smoothly, but even though sometimes our work may overlap—the sewing circle, that of the Willing Workers and other organizations in the church,—but if they are all moving in parallel lines, there should be no friction. They may overlap, but there's no friction, and they all move along together for the accomplishment of the same purpose.

May God bless us in our efforts to do good and render to humanity a service that will be elevating and beneficial.

From the Superintendent of Our Home Department

On page 20 of the Year Book of the Woman's Auxiliary is a brief outline of the work of the home department, which should be read in connection with the purpose of the department which is set out on page 38.

The ever increasing awakening of women to study and become efficient should be guided as much as possible into the channel of development in the line of women's real work in the world, which is certainly ministering to the family, the child, the home. If she does not fill this mission in a home of her own there are many kinds of work and professions that supply just such satisfying employment to women. Many positions can be well filled by trained women: matrons of children's homes and institutions of all kinds, the management of playground, social centers and recreational centers for adults and children, caring for day nurseries and women's rest rooms, the trained nurse, etc. Woman's natural adaptation coupled with intelligent study and preparation make her ideal for such professional work. The position of wife and mother should be considered in the light of professional work and be carefully prepared for, and in such work is the highest development for women.

The home department seeks to cooperate with this largest of fields for the development of women. All these activities which center around the home and its many interests, with the exception of those with special reference to the training and welfare of children, are within the scope of the home department.

Cooperation of departments is very desirable, and it is often practicable and possible to cover two or more departments in a general way in one organization. A mother's and teacher's class has been formed under the educational department here in Lamoni. It is desired to make the field of study for this class so broad as to include the work of the three classifications under educational department in the Year Book, of mother's and teacher's problems, home economics, and sex hygiene. That is, it is desired in the course of the work covering a long period to give work in the fundamentals of physiology, hygiene, psychology, biology, chemistry, home management, etc.

Then this class, or groups of its members, hopes to take up practical work suggested in the study, along whatever lines there may be an especial interest. Those having children of their own are more vitally interested in the child welfare features, and are to work out improvements along that line for the individual homes, for the community and neighborhood, that have so vital a reaction on the home conditions themselves. Those who have no children but are home makers and are interested in personal and social improvement along the lines of recreation, health and morals, in more attractive homes and yards, etc., will put into effect the suggestions along those lines.

It is within the scope of the home department to uplift and make more profitable and enjoyable the social activities of women, their husbands and families. For this purpose the educational society here holds once a month an evening program at the home of one of its members, and a very delightful social evening was had when the local Woman's Auxiliary entertained all the women's clubs of the town at a program and banquet given in the high school building.

The advancement of the women of the church is the chief aim and purpose of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Lamoni Stake

Since the stake organization we have organized a local at Andover, Missouri, which consists of sixteen good, active members. Have recently organized a circle of the relief and aid department here in the Lamoni local which will be known as the Rosalia Society. This band consists of fourteen charter members whose efforts will be made in the line of sewing for the Children's Home.

Bloomington has a good, lively sewing circle of twenty-two members and I think intends to start a class in "mothercraft" as soon as practicable.

The stake Sunday school and Religio associations have given us a place on the stake convention program. We will be represented on Thursday evening, February 1, when we will make our reports and have the election of stake officers. We will have a talk on the work of the Woman's Auxiliary, followed by a round table discussion in which we would like to have all take part. We desire at this time to get the work before all the branches of the stake, the most of which we have been unable as yet to reach. We take this opportunity to urge the Saints from all these branches to make an effort to be present at this meeting.

Have sent in our annual assessment and all the officers have tried to push the work as rapidly as seemed consistent with permanent growth and development.

Yours for the advancement of the work,
SUSAN L. HAYER, Press Chairman.

Omaha, Nebraska

The Woman's Auxiliary of Omaha, held its annual election of officers January 24, at the home of Sister Lloyd Wallace. Eva Holdsworth was chosen president, with Zaide Stearns as vice president. Lillian Wrenn was unanimously sustained as secretary-treasurer; Winnifred Scott appointed superintendent of the relief and service department; Zaide Stearns will be superintendent of the young woman's department for the coming year, and Audentia Anderson was placed in charge of the educational department, she to act as press chairman also.

The local numbers about sixty members, including nineteen Oriole girls. Appropriations were made for several minor details, and $125 to the fund for reseating the church. The bazaar cleared $122 and the rummage sale about $25.

Any mother can obtain a bulletin which the Government has recently issued, called The Summer Care of Infants. This shows that Uncle Sam is not indifferent to the importance of the proper care of babies, and offers this aid to all mothers who will write for it, to the United States Public Health Service, Washington District of Columbia.

"The Missouri Children's Code Commission, appointed by Governor Major in a recent report to be presented to the legislature, will urge the raising of the age at which a child may go to work, from fourteen to sixteen years, and also that provision be made for pensions for widowed or deserted mothers through country boards of public welfare. Other recommendations are: The abolishment of the legal stigma of illegitimacy, licensing all institutions caring for children, and prohibiting the commitment of destitute children to reform schools. It is planned to give the juvenile courts sole jurisdiction over adults who contribute to the neglect of children."—Child Betterment Magazine.

Kentucky and Tennessee

After having read the HERALD through and assimilated all I can find from this blessed vehicle which conveys knowledge to me from one of our greatest helps, the publishing house, I think of it as a circle enlarging to the coasts of the earth, leaving rays of light everywhere.

I have just arrived here to do some gospel work that demands my attention before our district conference of February 10 and 11. I have labored most of the winter in the western part of Kentucky and Tennessee. While I have not the ability to write as some of our able writers, or can I send in a "wee dotty dimple," that will cause one to exercise his mental power to grasp the full import of the message and see the writer as he really is, as Brother Luff says in article in Ensign. ("Seeing Jesus.") Thanks, Brother Luff, write again.

The heavy snowstorms have incapacitated the missionaries here for awhile so that we cannot hold meetings. But have put in good time encouraging the isolated ones whom we could visit and spend a short time with. Brother J. R. McClain has contracted a light attack of la grippe but will soon be able for duty again. So now the weather bids fair to renew our efforts to dispense the glad news to others who await its arrival.

Brother R. C. Russell has again made his appearance in this district and made the Saints glad, remaining only a few days at Mayfield, Kentucky, where the Saints secured the courthouse to preach in. I was not privileged to associate with him there by reason of arrangements made for me at Terrell, Tennessee, where Brother Fred Law secured the Woodman Hall for me to occupy. I learn, however, that Brother Russell delivered his message to more than anticipated under the conditions. And the angel's message found its way through the gates of the little metropolis city of Mayfield, where it leaves an irresistible challenge to those who one year ago mobilized their headlights and presented their flags of truce to one another to defeat Brother J. R. McClain, which culminated in a debate between Brother J. R. McClain and F. O. Howell of the Disciple faith which resulted in an acknowledgment by the Disciples (?) that they were defeated, as their man threw up the sponge the second night of the debate and took to his den, under a persistent effort to persuade him to remain and continue the debate. But Brother Russell could not get their shepherd to come out to see the light this time, for ground hog day had not arrived.

Well, dear reader, while God was blessing the efforts then he was also blessing my efforts near Union City at Terrell, where I tried in my weak way to present the angel's message in an entirely new place to those who gave ear to the sweet chimes and tones of the irrefutable truth that awakened the honest souls to seek for invaluable gems that have been hidden for ages, but aroused the ire of those who cannot endure sound doctrine. So after preaching to a crowded house for one week, the agencies of the opposing power began to dispatch messages to the incubators and schemes began to hatch. So finding a product of one at Martin, Tennessee, realizing his craft was in danger, came down on the scene. So the two hundred-pounder loaded for bear began to spread that well-known warning, "Keep away. Don't go to hear him. He is teaching false doctrine. Those people are not worthy of notice."

Well, the little five-foot, five and a half-inch David thought to meet the Goliath who was thundering his defiance against the army of Israel's God. He walked in and took a seat with the description of the little stone cut out of the mountain, without hands, in his grip, he felt like a lamb among wolves.

Listening to the anathemas hurled against the people of God, I had to curb the what might have been resentment and after he closed I waded to the front and gave him an opportunity to strike the other cheek, by accepting his proposals and was then on the job.

After all persistent efforts were made to persuade him to meet the issue before the public he realized I had taken his own weapon and caused his destruction. I then announced I would lecture on Mormonism and enlighten the people to the true position of our people that same night. The result was most of his people came to hear it. Being crowned with success I give God the praise.

I contemplate holding forth at Jones Mill next where Brother McClain and I opened up the work in the tent one year ago. We have not been able to reach this point since because of the urgent calls elsewhere. There are only two missionaries in this field at present, and the work is suffering loss. Surely the Master's words are true here: The harvest is ripe, but laborers are few.

One of our landmarks for this work has recently taken his departure to his reward—Brother Messer Johnson, who was nearly ninety-three years old, but the memory of his consistent and noble life is a monument that should be cherished by all.

After our district conference I contemplate holding a few meetings in this field, then start to northern Indiana where I will answer some calls from some where I opened up the work near my home. I have no knowledge of but two members in that county. There are two sisters who heard me preach some two years ago, just before I left there for Kentucky and Tennessee. I baptized them in a pasture at their father's home, where, by his consent, I dug a hole in the ground ten feet long, four feet wide, five feet deep and filled it with water from a tile ditch on the prairie. These persons who heard the shepherd's voice could say as one of old, "See, here is water, what hinders me from being baptized?" Well, I thank the Lord and ways are open before us. And I hope the way shall be opened for me to greater efficiency and qualification to render better service the coming year. Also that the young men of the priesthood in this field will assume greater responsibility to advance the work, because their service is needed.

With best wishes for the HERALD readers and hoping for more live wires for the kingdom of God.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES A. NOLAN.

London District

Having been appointed to the London District at the last General Conference, we made our way here as soon as circumstances would permit, being detained at home more than a month on account of sickness. We landed across the line June 29 and have been busy telling the old, old story, the result of which we have baptized twenty-two, eighteen in London and four in Stratford, Ontario.

We are just closing a six-week series of meetings in Stratford, with several interested. Have had the association of Elder John McKinzie for the past week. He is one of the old war horses and we enjoyed his company and counsel very much. Am going to commence a series of meetings at Rostock after the conventions at London, February 3 and 4.

Things look bright for the future in the London District. New blood is being brought in, new life is being infused and all goes to show an added interest on the part of all the Saints. I wish to speak of the untiring zeal manifested by the Saints of Stratford while there. Truly, God is blessing them.

Expect to go home (London) Monday, the 29th, for a few days with family and also to get the musicians together for the coming conventions. While the nations are crying "preparedness," God's people are realizing the necessity of the same in his work.

We certainly enjoy reading the HERALD and receive food therefrom that we can get in no other way.

B. H. DOTY.

Field address, STRATFORD, ONTARIO, 340 Albert Street.

Colorado

Since January 1 I have preached about 30 sermons to the north and west of Burlington at three different schoolhouses with following results: 10 baptisms, 6 adults, 4 children, with several others deeply interested in our message, 3 children blessed, administered sacrament twice, and organized a Sunday school with 40 in attendance at organization session. When we left the Burlington Saints yesterday it was with great reluctance.

Among the number baptized was an aged woman who had been a Catholic for seventy-four years, a Methodist, a Lutheran, and a young lady from a family of Presbyterians, who has been teaching school at the schoolhouse where the Sunday school was organized yesterday. Her relatives all being Presbyterians, had often tried to persuade her to join their church and her friends of the Christian, Baptist and Methodist churches could not interest her and nothing appealed to her until she heard the restored gospel. One night after she had said, "Brother May, I feel that I must be baptized," she became troubled in mind about her relatives and before going to bed prayed to God that he would direct her in regard to obeying the truth. She had a beautiful vision. A curtain appeared, a brilliant light shone upon it and when the curtain raised she beheld in beautiful letters the following words: Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, and her duty was thus made plain. She was baptized with three others. She is firm in the faith and rejoices in the restored gospel.

Two new openings were effected and we were surprised in these localities where the gospel had never been heard. They seemed to be hungering and thirsting for something. We hope that future results will be obtained, in addition to what has already been done.

The writer has been laboring alone during the whole of this conference year save the local help received when it was available. We have felt greatly blessed in the feeble efforts put forth. God is surely marshaling his army for the rescue of the truth. He is bringing the honest in heart to a unity in the faith. One time during this conference year the writer led two Seventh-day Adventists, two Lutherans and a Methodist and a member of another denomination into the water, all being baptized by the one Spirit into the one-body. Surely this is encouraging. I am now holding forth at Idalia, Colorado.

May we all be blessed in our efforts to push the gospel forth into the new openings before us, is the sincere desire and prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

IDALIA, COLORADO.

Northern Wisconsin

A few lines may be of interest to your readers, to let you know that we appreciate the many interesting articles and news items in the HERALD from week to week, and are glad to see the progress being made by the church in all its different fields of labor. We are trying to do our part here in northern Wisconsin, though it has been difficult the past two months to hold evening meetings on account of the severe cold.

The past has been a rather busy one to the writer so far as conditions for labor would permit. In the early part of the year I was afflicted for several weeks with pneumonia, and later spent some time in assisting to arrange for the reunion and district conference in August. And since then have visited Ashland, Ladysmith, Rock Elm, Porcupine, Valley Junction, Wyeville, Black River Falls, and did some labor here at Chetek while home. We have a wide field and only a few missionaries here in the Northern Wisconsin District, Brethren L. W. Fike, A. L. Whiteaker and myself at the present time.

Quite a number have been baptized the past year and a good prospect for others the coming year if all goes well. We are much in need of active local men to help carry on the work in some localities, to feed the small flocks and help keep the camp fires burning. We are looking forward with interest to the district conference to be held at Porcupine, February 10 and 11, hoping for a good attendance and meetings.

There has been considerable sickness the past few months, but many are improving. Sister Ivy Fisher has just returned from the hospital, where she has been the past few weeks. We are glad to see her back again. Brother S. E. Livingston, well known to the Saints of this district and a faithful man for many years in gospel work, has been quite afflicted the past several months. We hope he may soon fully recover.

Brother L. W. Fike has been in this mission field continuously since the first week in May, and is anxiously looking forward to the time when he may return to his home at Warrensburg, Missouri, feeling satisfied that he has sought to fill well the mission given him the past year by the Lord and the church. Sacrifice of the opportunities and blessings of life is the corner stone on which we all must build if we may be blessed in this or the future world.

A Bit of Rare Gospel Literature

The following extract clipped from the minstrel show column of an Arizona daily, duly presents some of the great work being carried on by the Sunday school of the Brighamite church. Sunday schools conducting dances to raise money for the work of the Lord and for the training up of the youth in the way he should go, so that when he is old he will not depart therefrom may be one way to be actively engaged in serving the Lord, but if so, that is one department of righteousness to which Satan will not be urging any serious objections.

"DANCE TO RAISE FUNDS

"The Mesa Ward Sunday school is a little short of funds just at present and has planned the following pleasant evening for Mesa lovers of a good time. There will be a dance at the opera house Friday night and this will be combined with a basket picnic. The old plan of auctioning off baskets and getting some unfortunate man to bid up several dollars is to be tabooed. All luncheons will be put up in the same kind of cartons and the uniform price of fifty cents will be charged the fortunate purchaser, to claim the lady who prepared the basket as his partner for the evening. The gentlemen will draw for the baskets. The dance tickets will be fifty cents additional.

"CHRISTY MINSTRELS AGAIN TO-NIGHT"

Swing your partners and circle to the left and "be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

JAMES E. YATES.

From Here and There

Brother John F. Weiner, whose address will be Levering, Michigan, says the Boyne City conference was a good one. He speaks highly of the local Sunday school program at Cecil, where he has been acting as superintendent.

A copy of the Tonkawa News of January 18, 1917, has just come to our desk, and we note it includes on the first page nearly a column concerning the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The occasion is a write-up of the visit of Elder Joseph Arber to that place. The article is quite fair and presents many items of general interest.

Fine weather in the Hoosier State is reported by Elder O. R. Miller, from Hibbard, Indiana. He reports the organization of a branch at Hibbard by J. F. Curtis. He concludes with: "Time is flying. Another conference year nearly gone. I long to see more realities as the fruitage of beautiful theories. A service of love or a Utopian dream, which?"

One of our Herald Office employees sent out a nicely arranged assortment of colored post cards and some others, all showing institutions and scenes of special interest to those investigating our church and its work. And from the recipient, a nonmember by the name of Elmer Katter, of the Huntingburg Argus, Huntingburg, Indiana, he received this:

"I had the post cards in the window, and the books and papers I have been reading and find them very interesting and inspiring. I was very favorably impressed with the new make-up of the HERALD and thought it very neat and attractive. . . . I enjoy keeping tab on the latter-day work. I think it is a grand thing. I am especially impressed with the writings of Elbert A. Smith."

A church opening of the new church at Corea, Maine, was held January 14. The weather was very rainy so the attendance was not as had been desired. The building is practically complete with only a debt of two hundred dollars remaining on it. Brother J. F. Sheehy in writing concerning it mentions that they have had a cold winter on the coast with plenty of snow. He went to Prospect Harbor on the 24th to begin a series of meetings to last two weeks.

For the dissatisfied man all life is unsatisfactory, and for one that is contented, the world is full of comforts. For the cheerful man even the easterly wind is musical in the window crevices, and it makes solemn anthems for him in the woods.—William Mountford.

Independence Stake

Abraham L. Hartley, for three years president of the Church of Christ, died January 28. Notice of this was given by Bishop McGuire at the evening lecture, and also of the funeral to be on the following Tuesday. Many of the Saints from the Stone Church were present, and the funeral cortege to Mound Grove told of the respect with which this elder of the church on the temple lot was held by his brethren.

Not in British trenches nor in huts back of the firing line, but in the comfortable, well-lighted Stone Church, our Brother Augustine Dwyer was called last Sunday evening to deliver a historical and evangelistic lecture, which was a vivid, dramatic presentation of Christian life in times of stress and persecution. His subject was "Rome and the early Christians." Much of what one reads of the rise and fall of the Roman empire was brought to view with clearness and effect through the speaker's oratory; but what thrilled the hearts of the Saints was his strong testimony of the divinity of the latter-day work, compared to which all the glories and wonders of the pagan world sank into insignificance.

The Saints are much encouraged in the work. The publications which reach us from week to week containing such letters as come from the brethren and sisters in California and England and all over the States are inspiring and full of cheer and comfort.

Educational advancement among the Saints is apparent, and especially in the classes of the Sunday schools and Religios.

Last Sunday there was an attendance of 854. In the morning about two hundred young people attended the prayer meeting, and the regular morning church service was in charge of J. A. Tanner of Kansas City. He preached an excellent discourse on the subject of charity.

At Walnut Park Brethren John Schwab and A. H. Mills held forth January 28; at Enoch Hill Elders O. K. Fry and J. Smith preached, and the services at the Second Branch were in charge of Brethren Westwood and P. A. Sherman.

Brother Dwyer visited the brick church two weeks ago, delighting the Saints there with his fine lecture on "Palestine." Our brother is certainly doing a good work here, and wherever he lectures, his impassioned and vivid delineations of noble human character not only elicit the deep interest of all who hear him, but by the wonderful opportunities afforded him, of travel, and close study and research, he wields an influence for increased mental and spiritual uplift. His lecture last night, here, was one the Saints will long cherish in memory.

Great characters like Gladstone and Henry W. Longfellow, with our brother's skillful word coloring, were depicted with a depth of emotion that called forth in all his listeners a spirit of love and admiration for all that, in the human nature, is pure and noble and good. May the work of mental and spiritual uplift in Zion and her borders go on and prosper.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

CLAY LANE, CLAY CROSS, DERBYSHIRE, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: I am thankful I took the step in this latter-day work. I was administered to sometime ago and from that hour I began to regain my strength steadily. In about two weeks I was able to get out of bed and have been improving ever since. It brought to my mind one of our hymns wherein it says God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your faith and prayers that I may regain my health and strength so that I may help spread this glorious gospel.

Location of Denver Church

Complaints have been made that visiting Saints could not find the church in Denver, and possibly a reminder to look for the name REORGANIZED in the directory will give the name and address of the church. Some fail because they look under the name "Saints."

The first branch meets at the church on the corner of Speer Boulevard and Logan Avenue and the Second Branch in a store building at Third and Detroit Streets. Regular services are held at both places. All are invited to attend.

One Way to Make Stereopticon Slides

From a recent letter from Elder C. N. Heading, of 1280 Lewis Street, Chehalis, Washington, who is one of our missionaries, we extract the following:

"What kind of ink will print on kodak film? I expect to make lantern slides in this way. I have collected about one hundred slides on church history and Book of Mormon since General Conference and I have several more under preparation at present. I find it very interesting work."

We give this inquiry publication and offer a few suggestions, knowing there are a number of our people making very effective use of the stereopticon and many others who might, while all of us enjoy the results when well planned and carefully done.

Brother Heading has a very desirable combination with a newly acquired printing press and his stereopticon, and many others who do not have this equipment but can get some help from a printer might make use of the following suggestion.

In the first place, set up the type or place the cut from which impression is to be made for slide. Ink with some quick-drying bond ink if available, if not, any other similar printers' ink will do. To ink the type use the ordinary brayer used by the printer for taking galley or page proofs. Now use another perfectly clean brayer—a large roller is best—and run it over the inked type carefully and firmly just once. This will put the impression on the rubber roller or brayer, as the printers call it. Now with a careful stroke run this inked roller over the glass and you will have a clear-cut impression of the type or cut, or both, according to what you use. If the first trial doesn't prove a success, clean the glass with gasoline and try again.

If the standard size slide be used, about eighty words printed in ten-point solid type may be displayed very nicely, while by using the smaller sizes of type this may be almost doubled and can easily be read on the screen.

It makes a more durable plate to lay a piece of glass over the edges to prevent rubbing, though with careful handling this might not be necessary. A mat around the edges will help square the border and even up the margin.

We see no reason why photographic film might not be used, but glass would ordinarily be better for it will not crumple nor crack so easily.

By this method valuable extracts and pictures may be thrown on the screen, separate or combined, and thus appeal to the eye as well as to the ear.

We would appreciate a number of brief suggestions of this character to help those who secure good results from the stereopticon.

Also let us hear from some one who has made good use of post card projectors or machines that project larger pictures by the mirror method.

CALGARY, ALBERTA, January 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: Having been a constant reader of the HERALD for some years, and having received much help from it, I thought I might just express that appreciation which I feel, and which is also shared by my wife. I think we are sometimes too prone to keep our appreciation locked up in our bosoms, when if we would give expression to it we could oftentimes give encouragement to one another, and we never know just how much that encouragement would help at times.

The SAINTS' HERALD is always looked forward to at our home, as it always brings a spiritual meal, and sometimes a feast. We always feel the need of this spiritual food and are thankful for a continuous supply.

May I offer a suggestion? Could a "Question box" be operated to advantage, so that any of your readers could ask for and receive information on any point upon which they may be in doubt?

Praying that Brother Elbert may soon be restored to health and that you may be long spared to continue in your good work, I beg to remain,

Your brother in the faith,

CHARLES H. COLES.

LACHINE, MICHIGAN, January 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are trying to bear our humble part in the work. Six years ago, Latter Day Saints came to Rayburn settlement with the gospel which caused many for curiosity's sake to come out to the meetings and as we always find honest hearts in every community who are willing to accept the truth when brought to them, one by one believed the truth and obeyed it. The work kept spreading till we had a membership of seventy-one and a full quota of officers until of late our teacher went to California, which we deeply regret. But our branch is fortunate in having two priests, so one acts as teacher.

Some of our members have passed away by death recently, but we have just received six new members into our branch. The Saints of our branch live quite far apart which makes it inconvenient for all to get to the same place to worship. But we have a church at Lachine and those who live near attend and others who live too far away to attend hold meetings in the schoolhouse where the gospel was first preached in our settlement. So our branch carries on two Sunday school sessions, two preaching services, one prayer service on Sunday, and two prayer services during the week. On the first Sunday of every month the whole branch meets at Lachine for prayer service. Any of the missionaries who come up our way should not forget to call on us as the prayers and testimonies of the Saints help to encourage us to go on in the great work till we all reach the mark of our high calling.

Yours in gospel bonds,

MARTHA MCDOWELL.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS, January 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: This paper is a welcome guest at our home. I can scarcely wait for its weekly visit. The first thing I do is to read the deaths to see if there are any that I am acquainted with, and then the letters. We take the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Stepping Stones, Hope and Sunday School Quarterly, and I don't know how we could get along without one of them. I often wonder how Saints can get along without the church literature. I enjoy the Spirit of God so often by reading and meditating upon the gospel, and especially do I enjoy the Spirit through prayer when I go in secret prayer where no eye but his can see me, and I receive that peace which cometh alone from him. I have had many blessings and testimonies; have been in the church for many years and have never felt like giving up. I know the work to be of God and that he is a prayer hearing and prayer answering God, and I want to live a life before my neighbors and friends that they can see that there is something in this work, and that some may have a desire to follow in his footsteps.

We oftentimes look back when we first came to this place and think of the good times we had when we met at the little art gallery at Moline; there were only a small band of Saints, but how all loved each other! With Brother Ball as president—how we miss his kind and fatherly advice. How they have gone far away and others have moved away also, and some have gone to the beyond where no more trials and troubles come.

There are a few Saints here at Rock Island and through the help and means of Doctor Asay a new church is being erected at Tenth Street and Eighteenth Avenue. We are always glad to see the missionaries come this way. Our home is always open for them whenever they feel like coming. My patriarchal blessing tells me that our home shall be a place of rest and enjoyment for God's people, and we want the missionaries to feel that they are always welcome. We are waiting anxiously for Brother E. Curtis to come again, and we will be glad when the new church is so we can meet in it. Several have inquired when Brother Curtis is coming back again as they were out to the street meetings last summer. They said it was all Bible.

HATTIE BARNES.

LITTLETON, COLORADO, January 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: We appreciate the weekly visits of the HERALD very much, as we have since the first issue, as we have been a reader since the first.

We are ten miles from the meeting place of the Denver Branch, and the weather has been so cold most of the winter that we have not attended many of the meetings, having to drive over a mile to the street car, or drive with team all the way, but we have secured a swifter and easier means of transportation and hope to meet with the Saints oftener in the future.

I have wondered why some one who attended the conference of the Eastern Colorado District at Wiley has not reported it. The sessions were surely of the best, in fact I think the attendance was the largest of any conference held in the district since its organization.

The Wiley Branch is a new one, and composed of the kind of Saints who do not admit of failure; last spring they began a new church building, and kept at it till when the September conference convened it was complete even to the electric lighting. We might mention some of those who spent their time and money in its construction, but there are so many of them it would take too much space, suffice it to say that all the Saints and many not of the church assisted. The building is about 28 by 50, if I remember correctly, with basement under the whole building, which is used for kitchen and dining room. The conventions met on Thursday the last of August, and with conference lasted till Sunday night. The capacity of the building was taxed at every session. The meetings were just at the time of the threatened railroad strike, and it was thought the attendance might be small on that account, but most of the Saints in Eastern Colorado have "Fords" and we surely think they were all there. Quite a number took the chance of getting home and came by rail. The meetings were excellent. The preaching was done by Elders Said, Kelley, and White. A party of five of us from Denver and Littleton planned to make the trip by auto, and left Denver about five o'clock Thursday morning. Wiley is about two hundred and fifty miles from Denver, and we had some experiences but we got there in time for the closing exercises Thursday evening.

We met with J. D. Curtis, at Colorado Springs, with his car. Ammon White was with him. The Saints of Wiley and vicinity are to be commended for the way they entertained the large attendance.

As an individual I have never been very enthusiastic about "Graceland" because it was not a sectarian school; I have thought from its founding it should have taught the faith of the church, and still think so. Only having the one school, it seems to me we should use every opportunity to teach the Latter Day Saint doctrine, so I am in favor of a "theological chair"; had there been one long ago there would not now be such conditions in certain localities regarding doctrine as there are.

Success to the "theological chair," the sooner the better, as I see it.

E. F. SHUPE.

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, January 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: For the past week we have been enjoying a banquet of good things along mental and spiritual lines. Our esteemed brother apostle and minister in charge of the Pacific Slope Mission, J. W. Rushton, has been delighting a good appreciative audience in a series of lectures in which the Christian faith was discussed in its scientific, philosophic and social aspects; also placed in contrast with the four other great generic religions, also the four generic philosophies of the world, much to the joy and satisfaction.

The Christian faith is no more true than ever it was, neither is salvation any more of a thing to be desired, but it is good to be sustained by the fact that true science and philosophy are on the side of Christianity. The series of lectures was not an effort to proselyte men and women to our particular faith, but was certainly an incentive and stimulus to the initiated to love what God loves and hate what God hates, and strive as one of the individuals who go to make up the sum total of society to be renovated, and will to do what God wills we should do, that society as a whole may be perfected.

Oakland Branch has many workers who will some day swell the number of the perfect society in the sweet by and by.

The Fleeting Years

Life is but an infinitesimal period in the great span of years—brief at its longest. The very brevity furnishes food for serious thought.

Is there a utilization in the proper manner of the time life brings? We should think seriously of how our time is spent and to what end our energies are expended.

Life is too short for sin; it is hardly of sufficient length for meritorious accomplishment. Make each day count with some good deed done, some act of kindness accomplished, some change of habit that will make our lives more nearly approach the ideal.

In 1844 Nauvoo was the only prohibition city in Illinois and also the largest, being about twice as large as Chicago.

Home Department Extension Circle

Expansion should be an aim of every man and woman in this world. It should assuredly be the ambition of all Latter Day Saints. The Extension circle provides one of the means for this broadening out. It is the means by which the Saints who attend church services as well as those who do not enjoy this privilege may have the opportunity to extend and increase the good they may accomplish.

All of us know that there are numbers of the Saints away by themselves not alone from every meeting and outside a branch, but away from every other Saint. They are a single link. It is proper that every link (or Saint) in the church should be connected with every other one and all joined together in one solid chain, strong and irresistible.

The connecting link between you and this isolated link or Saint is the extension circle movement and Uncle Sam's mail.

The object of this movement is to keep every isolated Saint in the world in touch with some live wire, interested Saint. Thus insuring the keeping of that one in the narrow path.

This is accomplished by the live Saint agreeing to spend say fifteen or thirty minutes every week or every other week in writing to this isolated one.

Send in your name for registration as a member now. You will receive instruction and advisory leaflet, your certificate of membership and as many names of isolated Saints as you need. We have a large list here waiting for live wires to come forth to act as writers.

Drop me a card to-day that you will take it up. Now is the time to do your duty.

Assistant Superintendent.

at her home in Baldwin. Funeral services at the Methodist Episcopal church; sermon by E. R. Davis of Independence, Missouri, assisted by John Heide of Fulton, Iowa.

WALTERS.—Tunis M. Walters was born August 1, 1853, at Lancaster, Ohio. Married Miss Elizabeth Webster November 27, 1879, who bore him six children: Claude B., Vera M., Myrta F., Harvey E., J. Macline, and James E., all of whom, except Vera, with their mother survive him. Baptized February 18, 1887, and continued in the faith. Died at Sweeney, South Dakota, January 19, 1917. His body was brought to his former home, Davis City, Iowa, where he was buried from the Saints' church. Columbus Scott in charge of the service; sermon by Heman C. Smith.

GROSS.—Elder Jacob Gross was born March 25, 1855; died at Armourdale, Kansas, January 15, 1917. Baptized several years ago at South Pittsburg, Tennessee, by T. C. Kelley. The church loses a true member and a staunch defender of the right, an uncompromising foe to evil in all its forms. Funeral services in charge of L. C. Snow; sermon by T. C. Kelley at the home in Armourdale. The house was crowded with interested listeners, who by the bestowment of flowers and other tokens manifested their respect for the dead and their sympathy for the bereaved family. BOOK OF MORMON LECTURES.—Are you a student? Here is something for your faculties to wrestle with. The author, H. A. Stebbins, has, with comprehensive outlook, embodied in these lectures a wealth of archaeological facts corroborative of the Book of Mormon narrative, dug from works unknown to the public prior to its publication, and from others published since that time. The statements in these lectures are made in such unaffected plainness and simplicity of language as to carry conviction to any normally unprejudiced mind. No. 51, cloth$.75

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

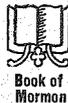

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

ARE WE HONEST?

Believing that most people are honest, Cleveland Moffett, a well-known writer, not long ago sent out a hundred one-dollar bills to as many different people, in an honesty test he had planned, McClure's tells us.

To fifty women, divided into groups of five each who were engaged in similar occupations or were similarly situated, he sent fifty letters, and to fifty men he did likewise. The inside envelope was addressed to a fictitious company and contained the bill, while each plainly carried the name and address of the sender. The intention was to ascertain how many would seek to rectify what must certainly appear as a mistake, by taking the trouble to readdress the envelope, stamp it, and send it back. Mr. Moffett is satisfied with the results, he says, and still believes that honesty is a predominant human trait.

Of the fifty women, thirty-three returned the money, leaving seventeen who did not. Of the fifty men, thirty-one were honest enough to return the money, and nineteen did not.

He mentioned five saloon keepers as one group, but says nothing about preachers. There are five actresses in one group, but we hear nothing of mothers as such. He mailed his letters to five rich men, but says nothing of poor men with poverty staring them in the face while hungry children were crying for bread.

We like to believe that every reader of this publication would have returned the dollar bill promptly. Surely they would.

Of course this was a case where ordinary commercial honesty was involved, but we suppose it may be taken as a general indication of what these same people would do when other temptations assailed them. At least we are apt to form our conclusions from such experiences as these, as we must admit when we give it serious consideration.

Honesty is a quality or trait of many degrees. It ranges from a definite determination to give full value in everything and take only that which is without question ours, to a hazy instinct that one shouldn't steal from his friends or accomplices.

We wish to consider it now especially as it affects our religious profession. It is conceded that to be a true disciple of the highest and best moral and religious teachings we cannot separate our religion from our business. The principles that actuate us in business should also be those which characterize our religious efforts.

We recall the incident when ten lepers were healed by Jesus Christ. Of the ten it is recorded that one returned to thank him for the marvelous gift of healing. Of course those were in other days—we would do differently now!

Then there was a man who was given a talent and straightway went and buried it. He knew his lord was a hard master and he didn't bother to invest the money or make good use of it. He certainly had little comprehension of the joy of service. Give us a two-thousand-dollar talent and let us demonstrate that we could do better than that!

Possibly there are times when on bended knees and actuated by sincere desires we ask God to pour out his blessings on us abundantly—and he does. These may be spiritual blessings, or possibly they may be financial. Then do we ever unwisely proceed to bury that blessing, metaphorically, and boldly ask a generous Father for more?

Whether in the providence of God we receive much or little, the principle is the same. Whether we receive ten thousand dollars to look after or a dollar as increase for tithing that belongs to God, it is the same proposition. Whether we be given the ability to shine as a genius to the whole world, or be like the little Alaskan snowflower that spreads its petals to bloom in obscurity in the forest for only a day, we should honestly use those advantages.

To some of us little is given, yet to that degree do we become responsible. It was only a dollar that these thirty-six people did not return, yet we would be apt to hesitate a little in intrusting them with greater amounts under similar circumstances. Perhaps most of them have seen the account of this experiment and would that they might try again, but they are not apt to be given the opportunity, just in this manner.

The Lord knows our failures to make good use of what he has intrusted to us to pass on, but we don't want him to have any misgivings about what we will do in the future. It is true that he knows the heart and is forgiving and kind, but it is also true that we may so persistently dull the edge of our conscience by failures to discern our responsibility that we can lose sight of little niceties and in reality become dishonest with ourselves, our God, and our friends in the use of what may be given us.

Possibly what has been given to us personally seems of little importance and of no value to anyone else. Instead of wealth we may have debt. Instead of being called out as an apostle of good tidings to the nations we may be a humble and almost unknown member. Yet isn't the relative responsibility to use our ability honestly the same? If we have capacity to learn and do not do it, can we escape the responsibility by failure to try?

The poorest and most insignificant of us certainly have something given us to test our character. It may not be money, for that is only an equivalent of material value anyway. It may be ability to grow in grace and by our humble influence make the lives of others happier and better. It may be a special qualification which by hard work and persistent effort can be very helpful to others. As an example, we may have the qualifications for a priest in the Aaronic order and God may have so indicated. Are we honest with him, ourselves, or our friends when we fail to make the effort to serve well in that capacity?

If nothing else is given us, we still have time as a common heritage. Our day is made up of twenty-four hours and no less, just as is the day of our richest billionaire. If for nothing else, we shall be called to account some day for our use of this time. Yes, much of it must ordinarily be given over to others that we may live and that those who are dependent upon us may live and have the comforts of life. But do we make the best use of even that time? Do we do our work a little better and more efficiently than it has been done before? Whether we work for ourselves or others are we ever guilty of killing time? Not merely doing nothing, but indulging in periods of learning nothing and getting nowhere?

Then with the time we call our own. It is our own, yet it's really a stewardship for which we must account. In checking up the day's activities at its close, can we truthfully say that the blood of that day's time is not on our hands?

Sometimes we feel like urging that there be a closed season on killing time, just as we have now in most places for the killing of quail and prairie chickens and deer. While it is the chief occupation of the rich leisure class of the world, it is a painful sight to see a child of God unable to find profitable occupation for his spare moments. There is so much to be done and so comparatively few to do it that it is soul distressing to count up the hours that are daily unused or wasted. In this last dispensation when the hastening time is now upon us, the use of our possessions, our ability, even our time is a serious matter. If we have any of these to give—and who has not?—let it not be said of us that we were dishonest in withholding them. E. D. MOORE.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Immigration Bill Becomes Law

In spite of the President's veto, the Senate agreed with the House in passing by a vote of 62 to 19 the immigration bill over which there has been so much debate the past few years.

Brother Elbert Improves

We quote from a recent letter sent in by Elder T. W. Williams: "Have just returned from a visit with Elbert. Every time I run out to see him I note a gradual improvement. In each administration the Spirit is in evidence. It is a joy to know that God hears and answers."

S. A. Burgess Recovering

As we go to press Brother Burgess is progressing nicely toward complete recovery, though he is still unable to sit up and is very weak. He is gaining in appetite and consequently in strength, so with the excellent care he receives will no doubt soon be in a condition to carry on his work.

Much Dry Legislation

Indiana and Alaska have joined the dry column, while the Utah Legislature has also indorsed the prohibition idea. Governor Bamberger of that State has returned the bill for rewording to allow the brewers to manufacture malt drinks of low alcoholic grade to avoid discrimination, since other States are allowing them to do this. There seems to be no doubt that he will sign the bill after this change. West Virginia is strengthening her dry law. Oklahoma's senate has passed a "bone-dry" measure, while Arkansas's governor has recently signed a "bone-dry" law for that State. Nine other States are acting or have acted on prohibition laws, either making more effective present statutes or putting new ones on record.

Reports from Conferences and Conventions

From necessity we must crowd together and boil down the many official notices and reports that come in for publication, but this should not detract from their value to our readers. We hope they will be carefully perused and their various items studied, for in them will be found many important matters which will be helpful to individual members as well as district organizations.

New Mormon Temple in Hawaii

A late number of The Pacific Commercial Advertiser shows a picture of a partially completed Mormon temple being built by the Utah church at Laie, Hawaii. Heretofore all the Mormons of the Pacific have been compelled to make the trip to Salt Lake City in order to participate in the temple rites, to which much importance is attached by that organization. This will eliminate that necessity and be a much visited spot by the members of the Utah church in the islands of the sea and Australia. The building is about half completed and is said to cost about $50,000.

What Others Say

The Journal of History, issued by the church board of publication from this house, and edited by Heman C. Smith, is not sufficiently well supported, though the price is only a dollar a year. Possibly this is because it is not well advertised. We have just received the latest number of the conservative Iowa Journal of History and Politics and we'll let them say a few words:

The October number of the Journal of History, published at Lamoni, Iowa, by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is filled with interesting articles. "The late General Conference" is discussed by Heman C. Smith. An entertaining account of "The great handcart train from Iowa City to Salt Lake City," is written by Frederick Hansen. Some "Reminiscences" are presented by Vida E. Smith. "A visit to Nauvoo in 1856" is described by Edmund C. Briggs. There is also a continuation of the "Autobiography of Levi L. Wight," as well as additional installments of other materials begun in previous issues.

The Handwriting on the Wall

In the Daily Nonpareil of January 26, 1917, Elder H. N. Hansen has secured a column on the subject "A prophecy and modern revelation." The article is not a presentation of the church but a discussion of the war, and the inspiration of different men concerning the need of a restoration. It concludes as follows:

I think we may hope that when the everlasting gospel, under the Lord's own direction, shall again be offered to a dying world, the present fearful experience shall, in a measure at least, have prepared the human family for an acceptance of that message of peace.

The handwriting is upon the wall and it means that Babylon is falling. We behold in the events of the day a wonderful fulfillment of prophecy. Who then can doubt that the Lord's promises, in their entirety, shall be fulfilled? With the men of the past we may expect the Almighty shall accomplish his designs, and that his wonderful work shall be done, though possibly, in a way not altogether in keeping with our expectations.

Indians Victims of Deadly Drug

Still the pernicious habit of the southwestern Indians increases with alarming effects: the use of peyote, a powerful narcotic prepared from the roots of Anhalonium Lewinii, a little cactus which flourishes in the Southwest and Mexico.

It is said to be worse than opium or morphine in its effects, especially since its most frequent use is incorporated into a peculiar religious ceremony. It affects both the mind and the body and brings on a stupor that sometimes lasts a week.

One writer tells us that the center of the worship which centralizes around the god Peyote is a little mission church at Randlett, Utah, where the Indians formerly gathered to worship Christ.

Colorado, Utah, and South Dakota are all giving serious consideration to legislation which is aimed at the practice, though from the nature of it, the situation is extremely difficult to handle. We shall follow with interest the outcome of the white man's fight to save the Indian.

War Cloud Still Hangs Low

The impending danger of a war with Germany over her recently proclaimed submarine policy has not appreciably changed. Some overt act of violence is awaited. Two American vessels carrying American citizens are now rushing to the blockaded area without the precaution of repainting in accordance with the instructions of Germany to avoid being sunk by submarines. Since February 1 there have been 82 vessels sunk by the submarines of the Teutons. Of these 1 was an American vessel, 31 belonged to other neutrals, 43 were British, and 7 were owned by other belligerents. The total tonnage amounts to 176,125. Ambassador Gerard is in Switzerland, accompanied by the various American consuls from Germany, all on their way home. Count Bernstorff and the German consuls from this country are to sail for Germany on the Frederick VII if the Danish owners release her for the trip. Enlistments in the United States are breaking all records for peace times.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Dedication

(Written for dedicatory service at Seattle, Washington, December 3, 1916.)

Roll on thou ceaseless, surging sea,
Lift high your heads ye templed hills
And from your snow-capped peaks
Rush forth ye brooks and rivulets and rills;
Sun, moon and stars shine forth your light;
Ye winds and thunders roar and torrents fall;
But high above these elements is heard
God's voice, and at his might,
Sun, moon and stars obey—the restless sea
Is stilled. Bird, beast and e'en their master—man Must needs be silent, for they are his;
And God within his holy temple is.

To-day, this temple fair, we dedicate to thee.
Our creed "all truth," and here in song
Will rise a grand, sweet symphony,
And may, within these hallowed walls,
Transcendent peace and joy reign o'er;
The angel, in his majesty, has come,
The everlasting gospel to restore.

Glad heralds with their trumpets, shout
"Repeat the welcome story o'er and o'er."
The children of the "Lost tribes"
Shall come down from the north;
The peoples from the islands of the sea
Shall hear the clarion call—"Come forth!"
And in that last, great, gathering day
When we shall see his blessed Son,
God's Holy Spirit will be there
Enfolding and embracing every one.

SARAH BARNEY.

The Stream of Time

Down the stream of time we glided,
Merrily speeding on the way;
Never heeding, never fearing,
Thinking naught but of to-day.

Onward we sped, ever onward,
Meeting shoals and treacherous rock,
Ofttimes passing, sometimes striking,
Taking note but heeding not.

Thus into the current swinging,
The heart made light with music's strain
Pleasure seeking, God unheeding,
This the day of Satan's reign.

But look ahead, see before us,
See how dark has grown the space,
Fearful rumblings, awful groanings,
Dreadful ending to our race?

Now we enter, see the lightnings,
The storm in fury breaks at last,

Angels looking, heavens weeping
O'er this earth in Satan's grasp.

See, he brings to war all nations,
With rifle ball and monstrous shell,
Laws defying, brave hearts dying
'Mid this reign of fiery hell.

Waves of sorrow overwhelm us,
Heavy, thick, and wondrous dark,
Bringing terror, striking horror
Even to the stoutest heart.

See! A light on the horizon,
Look again! it brighter grows,
Coming nearer, growing dearer
To the hearts of all who know.

With what hope we look before us
For the dawn of brighter day,
Ever hopeful, nor unthankful
As the light spreads from its ray.

See him coming as he promised
When he left in days of yore,
Jesus reigneth, peace forever,
Joy on God's eternal shore.

CHARLES H. COLES.

My Purpose

I live that life may be increased,
That peace and joy may cheer each heart;
That loving deeds may be the goal
From which we nevermore will part.

I live because my Lord has lived—
To do the best I can in life—
To serve the world as he hath served
To lessen pain, and sin, and strife.

To me there is no other life;
No hope, no joy, no peace nor bliss;
There is no consolation found
In all the world, aside from this.

The greatest joy the soul can find
Is in a life divinely true,
A life that's large, and strong, and good,
But found by very, very few.

My weary, wayward, hopeless friend,
My Christian friend, I speak to you,
In everything that comes your way
Remember, "to thyself be true."

Be true to everything that's good,
Be true to man, though slow you plod,
Forget your love for self and sin
And thou, too, soon shalt dwell with God.

I live that you may courage take,
And rise above the deeds of sin;
That love may rule your daily life;
That joy and peace may dwell within.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

THE 1917 CHRISTMAS OFFERING

No doubt you have often felt that you would like to devote your life to the Lord's work the same as the missionary does. Conditions may have made this impossible. Many, however, could consecrate a day, or a week, or a month, setting aside all they make during that time over and above their just needs, having first paid their tithing upon the increase, to the Lord's work. "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8. Brother Rudolph Etzenhouser writes us that after reading our last article concerning the Christmas offering for 1917 he went out and handled a scraper on an irrigating ditch and earned six dollars, which he turned in as an offering.

The Christmas offering of the Omaha Sunday school last year averaged about two dollars for each member. If Omaha can do this, where they have been paying for a new church, others can.

Owing to the very high cost of paper the Government has issued a bulletin urging the people of this country not to destroy or burn old paper but to save it. Boys and girls in cities can gather the paper from their neighborhoods and dispose of it at a good price.

Do not forget the suggestion which has been made to set aside all of the coppers that come into your possession. "Gather up the fragments" for the 1917 Christmas offering.

The Lord suggested a most excellent way to accumulate funds with which to pay the church debt: "And both in private and public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants."—Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.

Let us ask ourselves the question: "In what way can I make a special sacrifice of self-denial in order to contribute to the purpose before us?"

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."—Jesus.

This special effort which is being made does not preclude any from making other offerings and consecrations in larger amounts, nor must it be understood that this is in any way a levy or tax upon the membership. It is simply an endeavor to stimulate the interest of all to put forth their best efforts.

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE.

THE SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS AND COLLEGE EDUCATION

As also through your administration the keys of the school of the prophets, which I have commanded to be organized, that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and of the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles, as many as will believe.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3.

The first important statement in the above quotation is that the purpose of the school of the prophets is for the perfecting of the ministry, and second, the work of the ministry is the salvation of Zion, of Israel and of the Gentiles. That takes in all the field of gospel work.

In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36, in talking on the same subject the Lord says:

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom, seek learning even by study, and also by faith.

From the above quotations we learn that there is to be a school and in that school we are to seek learning by study and also by faith. In paragraph 39 of the same section we learn that the school is for all the ministry and there is to be a teacher to have charge, indeed it would be a misnomer to speak of a school without a teacher.

The evident intention of the Lord in having the school of the prophets is that we might come to a unity of understanding in the things we are to preach and not present a divided ministry in presenting the gospel to the world. We are to come to a unity of the faith through study. Ignorance never brought any religious body to be of "one heart and one mind." In such a school we would be in a very sacred and holy place and would be justified in believing that the Holy Spirit would be present to "guide us into all truth."

A NEED OF UNITY OF UNDERSTANDING

There are two things in which we are not united, as to what we believe and the method of carrying on the gospel work. We are generally united on the primary ideas of the gospel of Christ, but on some of the vital things that will make our work a complete success or a failure we are divided. The spirit of toleration among the ministry is of a high order, and instead of being united on some of these very important matters we hold in respect our brother's views, and because of the absence of strife we sometimes think we are united.

OUR METHODS A CONTINUOUS EXPERIMENT

Our methods of missionary and pastoral work have more the appearance of a continuous experiment than that of a well-thought-out policy. A few illustrations will be sufficient to explain. "A" resides in a city; is missionary and pastor combined. There is a good church building, a fine choir, intelligent and up-to-date helpers in the various auxiliaries; he preaches twice a week and helps in all the auxiliary work; he has access to a fine city library, has the best magazines that are printed, is a regular reader of the daily papers; in addition to the regular family allowance the branch contributes a monthly allowance, and when the women see that the wife and children are in need of clothing or a few of the special needs that may occur, they are very kindly remembered. The brother comes in contact with the educated and cultured class of the city, his mind expands and he soon has a broader vision of the Lord's great work and by the natural law of selection he becomes a leader in church work.

"B" is another type of a missionary, or pastor, and remains in one district for all or the greater part of his ministerial life. He knows practically every member in the district, is in personal business relations with all the branch officers, knows the condition of every home, knows where the good books are, where he can spend quiet hours in study, and where he can come in contact with the intelligent and progressive people of the various communities he visits. He is never very far from home, can usually get to see his family about once a month, and if he goes home to spend Thanksgiving or Christmas time he does not go without a reminder that friends in the gospel do not often forget each other.

"C" is a missionary, but of a strange type, he is like a wild star broken loose from its orbit and dashing wildly through space, not knowing where it will hit the earth. It might be in the ocean and its fire is soon out, or it may strike a fine forest and set that part of the world ablaze. His family does not see him for from six to nine months, he may be lost in one of the pine forests of Alabama or Florida, or in some of the unnamed canyons of the Rocky Mountains. He meets but few friends, he seldom sees a daily paper, and then it may be a month old. He has no books but the usual three. The people may be too poor or too indifferent to buy good books or church papers, the people have no special interest in anything but what is in their respective communities. He gets bewildered and must consult his calendar to make sure if he is living in the twentieth century or not. He receives a letter from home; one of his children is sick, his wife is not well, she has no sympathetic neighbors, her allowance is two months past due, and some thoughtless one hints that she ought to have her heathen husband come home. When he attends the General Conference he wears a suit of clothes that show their age and that they never did fit the wearer. There is some progressive legislation introduced and our brother is amazed, he is not conscious that his brethren with their excellent opportunities have moved ahead and he is left behind. He arises and makes a speech against the matter under consideration, the members look with amazement and are surprised at the audacity of the speaker in daring to oppose such progressive legislation, and some one in reply says, "Rip Van Winkle has come among us," and in whispered conversations surprise is expressed, and that the church was making a serious mistake in sending out such uncultured and ignorant men to represent it.

The above might be considered an exaggeration; if it is, it is only in detail and not in principle. With our present methods of missionary work we cannot reach the public. We must go without purse or scrip and sometimes we are compelled to sit in a station all night and eat a cold lunch because we cannot pay for lodging or for something to eat. We cannot go in the towns or cities and rent halls to preach in, because there is no money provided for that purpose. Many places we can stay in but for a few days, because the burden is too great for a family of moderate means to bear, and so we must continue to move on.

Because of the above conditions, there is a constant temptation for the missionary to avoid the hard places, go to the branches and seek out the places where the conditions are the most favorable in a social, dietetic and monetary way, and as a result we accomplish but little compared with the time and energy used in the effort.

We need the school of the prophets so that we can come to a greater unity on these important matters, and for that matter we ought to labor and pray. The man who has an opportunity to read and study good books and imbibes the best thoughts of the age will have a different idea of the Bible and Book of Mormon and of the great educational, religious, industrial and social forces of the world than the man who lacks these opportunities. God wants all of us to come to a unity of the faith, and not just a few. He does not want a few intelligent leaders and an army of blind, ignorant followers. To attain to that end all must have an opportunity. Instead of hurrying away from the General Conferences we ought to spend a month in serious, prayerful study of the important things that we have to meet as a church.

What shall we do with Graceland College? Why not use it for the purpose that was intended by its founders, and also as expressed by the church, "a purely educational institution and free from sectarian bias." (Doctrine and Covenants 123:5.)

A chair of religious instruction could not escape the bias of the instructor and the Lord has placed the forming of the ideas of the church with another body of men. One thousand dollars per year is a very modest sum of money to be used for such a purpose, but it would pay the scholarships of twenty young people who would be glad to go and cannot because of a lack of means. The very, and most important, thing for the church to do concerning Graceland is to make it possible for every worthy boy and girl in the church that should, and wants to go, can have the opportunity. We have a great many worthy young people, some of them children of missionaries, if they could have the opportunity for a college education could, and would render a very faithful and efficient service to the church and the communities where they reside. The church will not have done its full duty to the young people until it has made ample provision for their education. If it is right to use church funds to pay the college debt, and part of its running expenses, it is also right to set apart a fund to pay for worthy needy boys and girls to go to that same college.

EDWARD RANNIE.

"IN THE BEGINNING GOD"—Part 4

BY H. A. STEBBINS

"THE HEAVENS DECLARE THE GLORY OF GOD"

I have mentioned another text which is notable and excellent for its testimony for God, his existence, his power and his glory. It is found in the Psalms of David, reading as follows:

The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge.—Psalm 19: 1, 2.

And so it is indeed; and therefore with honor to God, and with feelings of veneration and of joy, we gaze into the great arch above us and understand that the writer of those words told the truth in his fervent exclamation of praise and thanksgiving, as he viewed the wonderful universe of worlds on high. And the more we learn through the discoveries made by wise men in the latter days, by the use of their great telescopes, the more we are satisfied that the Psalmist knew something about astronomy three thousand years ago.

There is reason to believe that the ancients understood far more concerning this earth and its affairs, and of the heavenly bodies, too, than they have been given credit for knowing. Tablet records and inscriptions of the time of Abraham have been discovered which prove that even in his day it was quite an intellectual age, and that nations and peoples had written laws and regulations, and that they were comprehensive and just in their jurisdiction by the hands of capable men. It was not a barbarian age.

Also Job was not ignorant of the works of God, the Creator of "the heavens and the earth," for in chapter 9, verse 9, is recorded his statement about the constellations by the same names we have for them in our time. He spoke of God as the maker of "Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades." Also the Lord spoke to Job as to one familiar with the heavenly bodies when he said to him: "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his season? or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons?" —Job 38: 31, 32.

Honest minds have only to consider the magnitude of the heavens, and to think about the vast distances which have been revealed by the use of the wonderful telescopes which men have invented within the past two centuries, to be convinced that only an all-wise and an allpowerful Being could have created and set in order the millions of worlds that we see, either through the telescope or by the unaided eye, as we look into the heavens and view the beauty and the glory there spread forth.

While he was on earth Christ said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," and we read that God "created all things by Jesus Christ" (Ephesians 3: 9); also that "without him was not anything made that was made." Therefore Christ was the master builder under God the Father. In the Book of Mormon is found the same teaching, even that Christ was the "creator of all things," that he "created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are."

And all the worlds, all these constellations above and around, our earth, all this glorious fullness and completeness of the universe, which stretches out so far and so wide that the greatest telescope cannot fathom the limit, if there is one, and the wise men who gaze through them have not been able to find any end or any boundary, all these creations are known to be in motion, and that they have their orbits in exact conformity with law, even with a perfect law and with a perfect order and harmony in their vast circles. Also it is seen that the wandering comets have their seasons of going and coming, as witnessed by the regularity of time in which they return to our neighborhood in the great field of space, here blooming a while, and then going away and again returning after many years, yet with such regularity that astronomers have calculated their times of appearing. And their anticipations have been realized, as in the case of the comet called Halley's, which was noted in 1456, 1531, 1607, 1682, and 1759, there being seventy-five years and a fraction between its appearances.

Again we can exclaim, "In the beginning God," because the timepiece in the heavens is that by which all the clocks, watches, chronometers and other timekeepers of the whole world are regulated and put in order, and his timepiece is the only one which does not have to be regulated by anything or anybody. It is perfect, unwavering and unchangeable, also eternal in its marking of time. By this great unvarying timekeeper the eclipses of the sun and moon, and the transits of Venus and Mercury across the sun are calculated with exactness many years ahead of their occurrence, even so minutely that men can foretell just where on our little globe an eclipse will appear in totality and where in part only, and to a minute when the eclipse will begin and when it will end. But our watches and clocks must be kept regulated by God's timepiece in order to agree with his eternal system and thus agree with the coming event. The prophecy that the eclipse will surely occur is based upon the eternal law of the eternal lawmaker. Therefore capable men go to the extremes of the earth to take photographs of eclipses and are not disappointed as to the time of the event, either as to the day, the hour, or the minute. Every detail takes place as foreseen through the operation of God's law.

For man has looked through the great telescopes and has found that the earth goes around the sun in three hundred and sixty-five days, six hours, forty-eight minutes and forty-eight seconds, without variation, and all the times and seasons of man and all of his time markers must be governed by that great fact. Hence we may well say, "In the beginning God," for in him and by his laws we exist as individuals and as worlds, and the great procession of the planetary systems and the march of the universe goes onward in working out the purposes of the Almighty.

These things we will sometime grow to a knowledge of, far more than we have now, even in the millennium, where study will not be wearisome, nor labor be a burden or a distress. That will be a glad time of learning, for all who will, especially for those who have loved to improve in this present world and who ever aspire to learn more about God and Christ and their great work in the heavens and on the earth.

WHO WERE THE ARCHITECTS?

When we view a beautiful monument or painting, or look upon a great building, or a perfect piece of machinery, or see some other specimens of art or architecture, we are likely to speak our appreciation of the excellent skill and the remarkable ability of the men who designed and created such beautiful and perfect things. Then we ask: "Who were the architects and the builders of such faultless productions?" And not by any argument can we be made to believe that personal beings with rare intelligence and superior powers did not plan and provide for, and create each one of these and all other notable or lesser structures which we see daily and which we are surrounded by all the time.

Even the lone mark of an ax upon a tree in the dense forest has made known to the next pioneer that a personal being, one having an intelligent will and purpose has preceded him in the wilderness, else even so small a mark as that of an ax would not have been made. How much more true of Him whose works are manifest on every hand, which fact moved upon the Psalmist in his day to exclaim, "In wisdom hast thou made them all," and which fact is so clear in our day as to cause the children of God everywhere to speak in similar language about the great power and wisdom, and the might and dominion, and the goodness and love of our heavenly Father.

THE ANSWER TO THE AGNOSTIC

It is related that two certain men were great friends, though one of them was an agnostic, not a believer in God or in any Creator, while the other was a firm believer in him. The first rejected all evidence, and also every argument that his friend had so far given in behalf of God's existence. But one day the atheist entered his friend's house and there saw a large globe, an exact and perfect display of the surface of the earth, the continents and oceans, with the countries outlined and all the details made plain. In enthusiastic admiration he exclaimed about the beauty and perfection of the globe and asked who had done such remarkably fine work as that. His friend, in a very earnest tone and sincere manner assured him that no one had made it, that it had grown into that form, with all its beauty. Then the other was indignant and declared that he was being trifled with by his friend, in that he was asked to believe what was impossible, because they both knew that such a perfect work of art, such a beautiful work required intelligence; also from the fact that no such thing could grow. All this was evident, he said, and that some wise and skillful man must have designed, and planned, and formed it, else it could not have existed. At this the Christian friend answered:

"Yet you have claimed that this earth that we live upon, with all its system and order, with all its manifold beauties of a thousand kinds, and under all its conformity with fixed and continuous law, as it moves onward in its course in exact time through thousands of years, that all this evidence of a designer, a creator, one who planned and executed, who by his power and wisdom established this system and all this harmony and beauty, that all this is nothing and demands no belief in a divine and all-wise, allpowerful Being to create and set it in order. How can you say so, and yet be vexed with me when I answered that this little image of the earth, this globe, grew of itself and had no designer, no maker, no mind that fashioned it, or outlined the forms of the continents, seas, islands and countries that we see portrayed here in such symmetry and beauty that you admire and wonder, and also ask, Who made it? Surely you ought to see that if an intelligent being was the author of that which is a mere imitation, how much more must the original stupendous work of art, the real earth, have needed a great Designer, an almighty Creator, who is spoken of as the maker of "the heavens and the earth"?

It was stated that this clear argument was so convincing in its logic that the agnostic became a believer in God as the maker and lawgiver of the universe.

THE UNIVERSE CREATED BY AN INTELLIGENT BEING

And as no one would dare to say about the monuments, or of the paintings, or of the palaces and temples, or of the giant machinery, or of the other wonderful creations by the skill of man, that there were no designers, no architects, no work of mind or brain needed, but instead all of these came by natural growth, without any intellect in planning, or any intelligence to guide the hand, in like manner no one should disregard the evident truth and say that this earth and the universe around us had no personal, intelligent Creator, one who planned, and framed, and builded, as stated in Genesis, first chapter, in Isaiah 45: 12, 18, and by Paul in Hebrews 11: 3.

Certainly by the greatness of law, and by a wonderful power and might, the planets of our solar system, and the worlds beyond our system, revolve, and move in such grand processions through the vastness of illimitable space, and in such perfect time and order during the millions of years that science allows and admits that these marvelous revolutions have continued. After a like order the creation took place "in the beginning"; and by God's great power the grass and the grain grow, the flowers bloom, the trees become tall, the mountains are mighty in size and grandeur, the plains are spread abroad, and life in many forms becomes great in tribes and nations. And all by the design and purpose, and through the wisdom and the creative power of an intelligent, a beneficent, and a loving Father and benefactor, even the personage who is called God, the one who is more or less revered among all nations and peoples of the earth.

ARCHÆOLOGY TESTIFIES

Men have traveled thousands of miles to look upon the great pyramids and monuments of Egypt, and they have marveled at their gigantic proportions and have admired their symmetry; also exclaimed at their beauty. Men have dug among the sands of ancient Assyria till they have uncovered the palaces of Shalmaneser, Sennacherib and Ezrahaddon, and have found at the doors the great winged bulls carved from stone. Also since 1851 upon the walls of the palaces has been read the story of the former greatness and splendor of those cities and nations. And among even these ruins, and by their history otherwise, has been discovered much to illustrate the truth of my text, "In the beginning God."

For the founders of those cities and nations were the close descendants of those who were in the ark, and at the start they must have had with them considerable knowledge of the true God, the one whom Noah and his ancestors worshiped. But the Bible and other history make plain that their ideas of him became perverted, and many gods were substituted, as already spoken of here.

According to Genesis 10: 6, 7, and Bible chronology, Babylon and Nineveh had their beginning about twenty-two hundred years before Christ's time, and after many centuries these cities and kingdoms became very wealthy and very powerful, especially before and during the time of the prophets, Isaiah, Daniel and Jeremiah. And my article needs to consider those nations because of the words of the Lord to them through the prophets named. Their pronouncements against Babylon and Nineveh of punishment, and of overthrow and destruction, were most remarkably fulfilled, as also were the prophecies by Ezekiel concerning Egypt and Tyre.

Babylon became a very wicked city. In the first six chapters of Daniel we have a vivid history of the situation within the kingdom in the days of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar and Darius, about the years 600 to 530 B. C. Outside the Bible the historians Borosus, Herodotus, and Diodorus gave minute accounts of the nation. The Babylonian worship is said to have been "of the powers of nature," including the heavenly bodies and certain things of earth. With many of the educated to gain a knowledge of astronomy and astrology was the chief thing sought. Of their lives one writer says that "the Babylonians were notorious for their effeminacy, luxury, and licentiousness."

PROPHECY GIVES ITS TESTIMONY

Herodotus wrote that the city was fifteen miles square, or sixty miles around the four sides, with the Euphrates River running through the middle of it.

The walls were two hundred cubits (three hundred feet) high and seventy-five feet thick. There were twenty-five gates on each side, or one hundred in all, which God spoke of when he declared in Isaiah 45: 1, 2, that Cyrus would be his servant and that he would "open before him the two-leaved gates," and "I will break in pieces the gates of brass and cut asunder the bars of iron." This was spoken B. C. 712, and King Cyrus of Persia did not come to fulfill the prophecy till B. C. 536, when he captured Babylon and fulfilled the prophecy, as also fulfilled the words about his rebuilding Jerusalem, as in Isaiah 44: 28. See also 2 Chronicles 36: 22, 23; Ezra 1: 2, and Isaiah 45: 13. Thus one hundred and seventy-six years passed before the fulfillment of the prophecy by Isaiah. Yet the Lord foretold by Isaiah what Cyrus would do as well as what his name would be.

By the same prophet (13: 19) the Lord spoke of Babylon as being "the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldean excellency," but he declared that its fate should be "as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah." Also in the next verse it is stated:

"It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation; neither shall the Arabian pitch his tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there."—Isaiah 13: 20.

And the Lord instructed another prophet, Jeremiah, to prophesy as follows: "Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the sickle in the time of harvest. . . . How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations. . . . A drought is upon her waters and they shall be dried up."—Jeremiah 50: 16, 23, 38.

The space that I have thought to occupy will not contain one fourth of what I would like to quote from histories and of what I would like to say about the fulfillment of the words of the prophets. Suffice it to state that their words came to pass to the letter. In 536 B. C. Cyrus, king of Persia, captured Babylon and thus Daniel 5: 26-28 was fulfilled to the letter. In 331 B. C. Alexander the Great took the city, and though he is said to have put ten thousand men at work to rebuild the ruined temples and palaces they accomplished very little, and could make no restoration. In 323 B. C. Alexander died at Babylon, hence nothing more was done and the city "went rapidly to decay," as history states.

In relation to the words, "Cut off the sower from Babylon," we learn from ancient accounts that the original fertility of the plains of Mesopotamia was so great that it was no uncommon thing to gather two hundred bushels of grain from the sowing of one bushel, and that the great city "the glory of kingdoms," was abundantly supplied from the rich and prolific soil that surrounded it.

The remarkable changes that have taken place since the days of wealth, power and greatness in Babylon were noted by the English traveler and explorer, Sir Robert K. Porter, who wrote of his visit to Babylon in 1823. One statement by him was as follows:

The abundance of the country has vanished as clean away as if the besom of desolation had swept it from north to south; the whole land from the outskirts of Babylon to the farthest stretch of sight, lying a melancholy waste. Not a habitable spot appears for countless miles.—Porter's Babylonia, vol. 2, p. 285.

Nineveh was also a mighty city, quite similar to Babylon, and it had much the same kind of a fate, being destroyed by the Medes and Babylonians about 625 B. C. In Jonah's time, 862 B. C., it was saved by repentance, but in B. C. 630 Zephaniah (2: 13-15) foretold its complete desolation. And it has remained a waste for twenty-five hundred years. All traces of it were lost, and skeptics are said to have denied that the Nineveh of the Bible ever existed. But from 1842 to 1851 a great work was done in excavating the sands of the desert, under the direction of Austin Henry Layard and M. Botta, and thus, as one writer says, "the proofs of Nineveh's ancient splendor were again brought to light." The palaces of Shalmanezzer, Sennacherib and Ezrahaddon were uncovered, and inscriptions have been read that sustain the Bible account of those kings and their wars, and some details of Hebrew history. Also Colonel Rawlinson and Doctor Hincks have had important part in the discoveries and in publishing important historical facts about Babylon and Nineveh.

SCIENCE CORROBORATIVE

There could also be presented the exact fulfillment of the prophecies of Ezekiel concerning Egypt and Tyre, and other ancient cities and nations; but I had not designed to write as much as I already have done. Some scientific facts might also be cited, but I will mention only one or two in defense of my text, "In the beginning God," namely as follows:

In the year 1490 B. C. the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

For the life of the flesh is in the blood. . . . For it is the life of all flesh. . . . The blood of it is the life thereof. . . . Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh, for the life of all flesh is in the blood.—Leviticus 17: 11, 14.

But the truth and the value of these statements was not known or realized, at least not by the great world, for more than three thousand years after they were spoken by the Lord to Moses. It was not known that the blood had any movement through the body by which life existed and was continued in all animals, by which action the life-giving material is carried to all parts of their bodies, to renew them, while the old and useless matter is carried off and cast out. No one understood that the heart is like a pump to do this work. Not until about 1540 A. D., was the idea of the circulation of the blood advocated, then by Doctor Michael Servetus, the man whom John Calvin caused to be burned at the stake in 1553, for what Calvin considered to be heresy in religious belief and teaching. And the actual discovery that the blood does circulate was made in 1619 by Doctor William Harvey of England, and from that time it was demonstrated by others.

As it took mankind over three thousand years to learn that truth, so it took about the same time for them to learn that they can talk by the use of the lightning, as mentioned in Job 38: 35.

I mention one more thing that the world was slow to learn, namely that the earth is round, and that it revolves around the sun and not the sun around the earth. In Job 26: 7, it reads that the Lord "hangeeth the earth upon nothing." But until Copernicus and Galileo (1540 to 1640 A. D.) it was believed by everybody that the earth is flat and stationary. It is said that Copernicus kept the secret to himself for thirty years that he had proven that the earth and the planets revolve around the sun, and later Galileo for advocating it was compelled twice by a priestly power to abjure and deny it.

MAN IN THE LIKENESS OF A PERSONAL GOD

For many years I have been deeply interested in the visible evidences of God's existence, in the proof of his works of creation, and in the continual advance being made by him for the well-being and happiness of the inhabitants of the earth. In the Book of Mormon it says that "man is that he may have joy," and it is my full belief that all the works of the Lord are based upon the fact that he loves the people whom he has created in his likeness as a personal God, and that he seeks their happiness indeed. His sole desire is that they should do right and keep his commandments, because by so doing they will have still greater happiness, both in this life and in eternity.

The earth will soon be through with wars, and the words of Isaiah 2: 4 and Micah 4: 3 will be completely fulfilled, after the wicked nations with their power and hatred are overthrown. The great war in Europe fulfills the prophecy that the nations shall be dashed "in pieces like a potter's vessel," and probably these fragments will become in the hands of "the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal," the "bands and many people" (Ezekiel 38: 2-5), who will go down against Jerusalem for the final battle of the world, when Christ will astonish the Jews by becoming their champion and destroying the invaders of the Holy Land and those who attack the holy city, as said in Zechariah 14: 2-5. Read the whole chapter.

In conclusion I will say that I believe that the testimonies and evidences which I gave in chapters two and three were good proof that man, the real man, with Adam as the head of the perfected race, was not the outgrowth of some lower form of life, was not the final product derived from a protoplasm, a mollusk, a trilobite, a monkey, or of an ape-man, but that he was the special creation of God, made in God's own perfect likeness, and endowed with qualities all his own, after all lower orders of life had passed off many thousands and probably millions of years before God created Adam to enter upon the scene and begin his course. I have presented the testimonies and arguments of such advanced scientists as Hugh Miller, Winchell, Hitchcock, Agassiz, and other learned students that the species of each age passed off before the species of the next age came on. Thus Adam was a new creation, and was not the descendant of any prior form of life. Therefore I believe there is no cause or occasion for arguing that Adam's race was a gradual product from the chimpanzee, the monkey or the ape. It seems to be folly in the extreme to make the claim. It simply acts as a fog to bewilder the minds of those who honestly seek after truth, those who want truth, yet who may be beguiled or enticed into considering vain and foolish delusions.

To me it is evident that God is over all, and that he has been so from "the beginning."

(Concluded.)

THE PHYSICAL SIDE--Part 1

BY M. F. GOWELL

Experience is a dear teacher and it is said that fools will learn in no other. We should learn, that we may avoid painful experiences. Even these will not profit some, or arouse to proper thought and profitable action. We know that we have bodies, and that they need care from infancy on up, and through life. We should sense it thoroughly. As to appearance, some are careful, others none too much so, but we cannot even appear well when we are not well. Health is attractive, but is appreciated most when lost. We pay much attention to cure. The Lord in his goodness and mercy has provided for physical cure, as he has for spiritual, but shall we "sin because grace abounds," either physically or spiritually? Is the fact of physical cure an invitation to physical transgression or carelessness? The fact of spiritual cure is not or should not be an incentive for ignorance of spiritual law, or transgression thereof.

The body is not all, but it is a very important part of man in this earth life. It is a wonderful machine, needing fuel or food, and a proper setting or environment for its work or activities. It works by law. It is governed by law and preserved by law. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.)

According to its harmony with and adjustment to law, it will serve its purpose and promote its maker's design in its creation. Adam lived to be nine hundred and thirty years old. He died because of sin, as we know: That which separated him from God and the tree of life, of which he might have partaken had he remained in the garden, and prolonged his existence in a sinful condition. This in the wisdom and love of God was not to be. His death was not arbitrary. It was a legitimate effect, or natural consequence of violation of law. The spiritual transgression affected the body. There can be no perfect health without obedience to perfect law. Sin and transgression have multiplied since Adam's day. "They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant."—Isaiah 24: 5. Life gradually shortened, through all spiritual and physical transgression. The gospel holds out the promise of physical redemption; of life abounding and unending, but through the operation of law, not in ignorance or contempt of it.

Obedience to all the commandments: compliance with all the conditions that bear upon life and salvation, will bring, as we believe and teach, full redemption or salvation. Knowledge is essential. "This is eternal life, that they might know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3.

Jesus said to certain ones, "If you continue in my word, you shall be my disciples indeed, and you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 30, 31. We know not what liberty or freedom is, in sin and transgression, ignorantly or otherwise. Foolishness may be expected of those who know not God. Saints should be wise. God has given us a "Word of Wisdom" by revelation. It has its bearing on health and full redemption. Taken in connection with the rest of the law, it holds out the promise of immunity from disease. It is a preventive or is intended to be. It is also a cure. Those who comply with all the conditions, "shall run and not weary, walk and not faint." The whole law needs to be applied to do the whole work or to affect the physical man sufficiently. He may be disaffected from the spiritual side, or the physical direct. The process of cure or restoration may operate through the Spirit, and thus affect the body with health, or it may operate directly on the body. The wise, however, will not desire to rely solely upon cure. The dying sinner would like the cure, when it is too late for it. The wise Saint will rely on all the prevention available, whether through words of wisdom by revelation; out of good books; or the mouths of wise men. Nature furnishes prevention if we understand it. To understand it is to understand God, or to understand God is to understand nature. We are in the natural world, subject to natural law. Christ was subject to it. He fully understood it. Knowledge of nature and of natural law will not harm us. We are to be "instructed more perfectly . . . of things both in heaven and on earth." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.) "Intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence: wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth" (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 10), whether in the spiritual or natural realm, whether pertaining to the body or spirit.

There are those who have studied the body, having not the keys of the kingdom, or the mysteries thereof, who have learned much on their plane, which is also ours. We are "not sent out to be taught" the gospel, yet we may draw from different sources, may "go in and out and find pasture" or truth, whether in mathematics, biology, astronomy, anatomy, physiology, hygiene, sanitation, psychology, or what not. These studies and branches of knowledge are not derived from or limited to the church. They are not barred to the church. "The forces of the Gentiles shall be converted unto thee."—Isaiah 60: 5.

Their inventions, discoveries, etc., not the least of which is the printing press; some by inspiration without doubt, are contributing to the gospel and church. We are not all there is. God is in nature and nature's law, and with all who study it. "The inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32: 8. I would prefer to be an intelligent sinner than an ignorant, sleepy, unprogressive Saint.

There is much of ignorance concerning the body; the physical side, that we have not been redeemed from. How are we to "run and not weary, to walk and not faint," without discovering and applying natural law; physical law? How obtain great treasures of wisdom and knowledge in the physical realm or in this world that is to be "blessed by and by," without seeking them? The Word of Wisdom will help. It points in the right direction. By the way, exercise and breathing is involved in it. "They shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint." Running involves considerable breathing. Diet, breathing, exercise, and mental attitude, as affecting health, must be considered, understood and applied. Some health rules may benefit to some extent. All that have a bearing can scarcely fail, if invoked. There are too many sick; too many operations. We cannot, however, dispense with the doctors and cures until we live more in harmony with all law. We must save ourselves physically as well as spiritually.

(To be concluded next week.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE WAR AS A PRESAGE OF THE WORLD'S END

The carnage in Europe has given many strange turns to religious thought. We find, for instance, a renewal of talk in unexpected quarters regarding the second advent of Christ. A revival of mysticism has laid stress on the interior life as the only matter of importance. And now, in the Yale Review, Vida D. Scudder, professor of English literature in Wellesley College, boldly raises the question: Has religion anything to do with civilization, as at present constituted? She continues:

Perhaps the age is sweeping to catastrophic end—and in that case, the true aim of the Christian is not to transform the social order but to transcend it. So thought the early church; she was largely uninterested in secular affairs, and her disciples, adopting an ad interim policy towards the evil world from which they had been saved, awaited, patient, humble, the coming of the Son of Man. And still the echo of the Lord's own query stings the heart: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

The war gave a terrible shock to trust in progress. But even before that people who thought were whispering that progress was an illusion; and a current in the religious world set towards those apocalyptic hopes always accompanied by other worldly fatalism. Books like Monsignor Benson's Lord of the World, and the Russian Solovyov's brilliant War Progress, and the End of History, expressed the curious idea that the modern humanitarian movement, if not anti-Christ himself, was at least a preparation for anti-Christ.

The mind of Jesus, as Miss Scudder reads it, dwelt on two principles concerning the coming of the kingdom: one was growth, the other was catastrophe. "When his church loses sight of catastrophe," she says, "and devotes herself comfortably and half-heartedly to furthering growth, omens of future judgment are likely to gather as they are gathering now." She adds:

We shall do well if, heeding Christ's indubitable teachings, we live, as Maeterlinck puts it, in the light of great expectation, and join to our steadfast efforts to promote the kingdom on earth, the awestruck readiness for future judgment. Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, but the time is sure. And it is to be remembered that in the New Testament judgment is the goal of hope, the beginning and not the end, for it ushers in that millennium which is no heavenly mirage in the thought of the Master, but the Christian utopia, the destined heritage of fleshly men. To the prayer, Thy kingdom come on earth, which carries with it so sure a promise of fulfilment, must be joined that other last prayer of the scripture canon without which the heart would fail indeed: Even so come, Lord Jesus.

It is the supreme test of faith to live in uncertainty, and to that test in more ways than one our age is called. This means that in peculiar sense, inward and mystic as well as outward and practical, it must embrace the heroic aspects of the cross.

The world has never been so conscious of Christ as in these days of horror. Cartoons show him everywhere. The hand of the dead soldier rests on his wounded feet; the sorrowing wife feels his consoling presence. Kaiser and king turn their backs on him or pierce him with the bayonet. To his gray figure on the cross, touched with dawn in the mists that rise from the profounds of mountain chasms, climb bowed processions of phantom mourners, chanting in all the tongues of the warring nations to him who is their peace. Meantime, those actual Calvaries that stand so grave and still watching the battle fields, bring a message of hope rather than despair. Though the walls of the church seem shattered and though no rest be found for the seeking soul in its ruins, it cannot perish so long as Christ abides. For his presence creates it, and that presence, manifest on its altars, shall never leave the world he died to save.

SMASHING YUCATAN'S SAINTS

Mexico's saints and idols are being shattered, and who will fill those vacant niches with better things if the Christian people of the United States do not supply their places? A missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions writes:

"Last week the great aristocratic church of Merida was swept clean of its idols and turned over to the students' league of Yucatan for its assembly room. A certain Mexican whose hands were still covered with the dust of the idols he had been helping to smash said to a friend of mine, 'We saved a few images which we are going to take to the public schools, and standing them up before the children say, "There you see what a saint looks like, and now you see how he can be destroyed." Then with a hammer the image will be pounded to pieces before the eyes of the children.'"—Sunday School Times.

If we were to sail along under fair winds, each lying at his ease, life would teach us nothing but lazy selfishness. The contrary wind gives us the fellowship of the oars—the need of keeping time with one another, of each helping the others while he pulls away on his own thwart. No finer sound rises to heaven than the comrade song of the rowers. Surely we all know that the best things life has brought us—the things that bring the deepest satisfaction—have been the chances of service.—Archbishop Cosmo Lang.

It is as true now as it was then, that Christ, in the heart and in the home, cannot be hid.—M. M. D.

Mothers

"Blessings on the hand of woman! Angels guard its strength and grace,

In the palace, cottage, hovel, oh no matter where the place!
Would that never storms assailed it, rainbows ever gently curled;

For the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world.

"Woman, how divine your mission here upon our natal sod.
Keep, oh keep the young heart open always, to the breath of God.

All true trophies of the ages are from mother love imperaled,
For the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world.

"Blessings on the hand of woman! fathers, sons and daughters cry,

And the sacred song is mingled with the worship in the sky—

Mingles where no tempest darkens, rainbows evermore are hurled;

For the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world.

In the beginner and primary departments, the lessons one quarter dealt to a large extent with the awakening of life. The children learned how the little seed babies, tiny leaf buds, and dry brown lily bulbs wake up. They learned how Christ came forth from the tomb and how all the dead will awaken at his next coming. So I thought it might be well to continue this theme, only to-day I want the mothers to "wake up"—to what? To a realization of the sacred responsibility and power that is resting in the hand that rocks the cradle.

Mothers, look around you here to-day. What do you see? Ah, baby faces, the very essence of innocence and purity. Then we see girls and boys whose lives are just beginning to unfold like the petals of a rosebud. Yes, little buds of promise—promise of what?

Look again! There are youths and maidens who are midway up the slippery hillside. They have come to the place where they must consider, measure and choose for themselves. Are they prepared to choose wisely?

Always at this juncture the ranks thin and next we find the few who have chosen wisely; young men and young women who are not qualified to take up the burden as their elders lay it down. Is your girl in this class? Is my boy?

Throughout all of God's creations we find that not one was brought into existence without a definite purpose. In the realm of vegetation this purpose varies, from merely pleasing the sight of man, to the producing of food and drugs. Yet dear old Mother Nature sees to it that each of her children fulfills the object of its creation.

Animal life is similar except that we observe a more vivid demonstration of mother love, that instinct to nourish and protect the young.

But this same God in creating man, has crowned him supreme. In place of instinct we have intellect, and because of this we stand accountable to our Creator, not for the mere nourishing and protecting of our young but for their mental and spiritual development. The laws of our country demand a certain amount of secular education but where does the spiritual education come in?

Is it the work of the teacher in the Sunday school? To be sure! But first, last, and always, by the mother, in the home. Why then the need of a school? Consider for yourselves the good accomplished by the Sunday school to the individual, the home, to the community and the world and then, if you can, ask why?

We will notice a few reasons, however. Through the Sunday school many children of non-Christian parentage are brought into contact with the gospel of Christ who otherwise would never know of its beauties.

But more than this, Sunday school is the nucleus of enthusiasm around which the lesson study revolves. It spurs us on to continued action. It serves as an impetus for a thorough investigation so that we may be able to speak intelligently on the topics under consideration. It satisfies that inborn craving for interchange of thought, which if not given the proper outlet, leads to idle gossip. And again, repetition is one of the best means of acquiring knowledge; repetition with variations—and the Sunday school supplies both.

For instance: A little child is taught the lesson at home. By the time he reaches Sunday school he may have forgotten the most of it, but the teacher, taking up the same lesson, with some sort of an object for illustration recalls to the child's mind the main points and this repetition, firmly establishes the thoughts (I believe it is safe to say) forever.

So if the child is not taught at home, the teacher, though doing all she can in such a limited time, fills his little mind with new thoughts which soon die out if not repeated.

Therefore, mothers, do you see the need of the children studying the lesson at home? Nay, more, the need of studying with them?

And now I ask, for whom is the Sunday school? Just for the children and young folks? We have been told to study to show ourselves approved, and to "seek learning even by study and faith," but nowhere do I find it specified that this advice is for the young only. No, the Sunday school is not only for the cradle roll infants but it is for their parents and grandparents as well.

May I ask you, mothers, if you study the lessons at home? May I ask if you attend Sunday school? Do you know that the quickest way to attain old age is to fall into a rut and stay there? Oh, mothers, let us wake up! Let us demonstrate to the world that we recognize the power in the hand that rocks the cradle. But you say you have no time either for study or to attend school? It is true that some mothers are so overburdened that they are simply a drudge, but surely there is some way to throw off the shackles. Are you teaching your children to be helpful? They can save you many a step in a day. How about that dusting and such things? Does cleanliness come before godliness or next to it? How about the ruffles and folderol of little girlie's Sunday school dress that requires so much time to launder each week, or the yards of lace on the bedroom curtains.

Pardon, I pray, a little personality. Once upon a time I made up my mind that I was going to have some hand-made lace like another lady was making. I picked it up every spare moment and was really surprised at the moments there were to spare. But the shame of it was, I became so fascinated I used moments that could not be spared. Many things, before considered essentials, were neglected; and by Saturday, my, what a lot of lace I had made! Then suddenly, my conscience awakened with a tormenting repetition of these verses by Mrs. Alexander Connors:

THE LORD'S WORK FIRST

De Lawd, he had a job for me,
 But I'd so much to do,
 I tole him, "Git somebody else,
 Or wait till I git froo."

I don't know how de Lawd come out,
 But he seemed to git along,
 But I felt kin' o' sneakin' like,
 Kase I knowed I'd done him wrong.

One day I need de Lawd myself—
 An' need him right away;
 He never answered me at all,
 But I could hear him say,

(Way down in my accusin' heart)
 "Ise got too much to do;
 You bettah git somebody else,
 Or waits till I gits froo."

Now, when de Lawd he have a job
 I never tries to shirk;
 I draps whatever I'se on hands,
 An' does de good Lawd's work.

My own affairs kin run along,
 Or wait till I git froo;
Nobody else can do de job
 De Lawd lays out for you.

Needless to say I put aside my fancywork and went after my belated Sunday school lesson and tried to master in a few moments what I usually spend hours on—hours of spare moments—but that lace is still unfinished.

The fathers are a dire necessity in the home. Oh, don't think we have forgotten you, but nevertheless you cannot do a mother's work. But you can make it possible for her to accomplish it, by not crowding unimportant things upon her already burdened shoulders and by encouraging and assisting her at all times.

The Sunday school is a necessity but it cannot substitute for a mother. Yes, truly there is a power in our hands, the magnitude of which God only knows. But, as we grow and develop we may be able to comprehend more and more its breadth and depth.

The Sunday school needs more, it begs and pleads for your support. Don't send the children; bring them. Your boy, when grown will never forget that his mother was a regular Sunday school attendant. The little tot is never happier than when mother comes to school with her.

But aside from all this, there are ways and ways that the mother may help. The teacher, to be successful, should know each child, individually; should understand just how to appeal to his personality to obtain the best results. Yet with only one hour a week it is very hard to do this. Help them out, mothers, invite them to your home; or if they call, treat them not as company but take them into your heart as well as your home. Let them get acquainted with your real life and that of your children. If your boy has peculiar likes or dislikes let the teacher know. If your child has a physical weakness or if it be only sensitive, or perhaps stubborn, tell the teacher about it. In this way you work together for the good of the child.

Then when he reaches that slippery hillside he will be able to choose wisely and when maturity is reached, he will be able to assume the work that God has laid out for him to accomplish.

And let me impress this thought: It isn't only the obligations of the child to itself, it is home or the Sunday school that we as mothers are responsible for, it is his obligations to the world, as a part of the great plan of God, in which all parts must work together, or, in a measure, they retard the progress of this great latter-day work and we mothers must bear at least a portion of the reproach.

Yes, the Sunday school needs the mothers. The mothers need the Sunday school. So let us wake up and prove to the world not only that we recognize but that we utilize the power resting in the hand that rocks the cradle.

Our Boston Sisters

The annual business meeting and election of officers of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Boston, Massachusetts, Branch, met at 166 Pearl Street, Somerville, at the home of Susan Sinclair, on Tuesday evening, January 16, 1917.

A goodly representation from the different departments, including the relief and service department, woman's study club and Oriole girls were present.

The following officers were unanimously elected to serve for the ensuing year: President, Belma Sears; vice president, Florence Fisher; secretary-treasurer, Susan Sinclair.

An interesting program followed the business session: Piano Solo, Blanche Lanman; vocal (Scotch songs), Laura Pierson; readings, Ruth V. Fisher, old-time Methodist hymns, Clara Gerrish.

A very bountiful repast was served by the hostess and enjoyed by all.

A Voice from Across the Seas

Reading for the second time about the epidemic of infantile paralysis, my conscience reproves me seriously because I did not from the first communicate my experience of over twenty-five years of especially prophylactic work which gives the reasons and the means against that dreadful epidemic. The reason is the way of living of the mothers, especially while with child. The infantile paralysis is but a higher degree of rhachitis which comes from the same reason. The mothers must give up drinking of China tea and Arabic coffee and of eating potatoes and tomatoes (belonging to one of the most poisonous plants) poor meat and all sorts of sausages and flour preparations, the last producing too much phlegm in the stomach which by and by hardening (as in the teeth) covers the vessels in the stomach, leaving the juice which has to become blood in the blood vessels and prevents blood formation.

Too, they must not take alcoholic drinks and tobacco, and not boil the milk, but sterilize it, which in the milk is already reached with seventy degrees Celsius. Boiled milk turning in the stomach is nothing but boiled turned milk, an indigestive pack which has brought stomach diseases of all kinds to all ages, and death to millions of infants, as Professor Pasteur in Paris, too, has proven. Most of the new born have the poorest blood imaginable, which in the second generation gives rhachitis, and in the third, infantile paralysis as well as the incurable degrees of tuberculosis. Especially while in child the mothers must cover themselves every evening with oil soap lather without rubbing or drying afterwards, and in the morning rub the whole body with olive oil and often wash the head with soap and in the morning the capilarity leading all disease germs up to the head and hair, and so treat the infant too, daily.

THE STAFF

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

We are in receipt of a telegram from Brother Hoxie, conveying the sad news of the death of his father, and the consequent inability of our general chorister to send the message for the February Staff which he had planned. He requests that we put the matter of the conference music before the singers, and we feel that this cannot be done with greater accuracy than to publish in these columns the "bulletin" recently sent out to all district choristers throughout the church. Please give it a careful reading, and if you are not already supplied with copies of these anthems selected for use at General Conference, send your orders in to Theodore Presser Company, Philadelphia, at the earliest possible moment, that you may be thoroughly qualified and prepared to assist in this annual offering of praise to God, from the hearts of his consecrated people here on earth.

General Choir Movement

Mrs. Audentia Anderson, editor "The Staff," 2009 Locust Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

ANNOUNCEMENT TO CHORISTERS

The General Conference of the church will be held at Lamoni, Iowa, this year, commencing April 6, and lasts approximately two weeks.

The special music for this annual event of the church comes under the auspices of the general choir movement.

An annual selection of music is made specifically for this purpose, which is generally known as the Conference series. This selection is ready for your consideration and is outlined in this announcement.

Those who are coming to conference, and are eligible for service in the chorus, should send at once for this music and study same with diligence—that our combined effort will be one of splendid efficiency.

District and local choristers kindly note that this selection includes many anthems that can be effectively used in your work.

THE "MESSIAH"

By popular request, the same oratorio used at the last General Conference will be given at Lamoni.

Handel's great work was born of inspiration, and we should feel it a great privilege to participate in this rendition.

Those who desire to review this oratorio can secure single copies, postpaid for 45 cents. Twelve copies or more, 40 cents each, transportation charges additional.

To secure rates and uniform edition for the anthem series and the oratorio kindly send your orders to Theodore Presser Company, 1712 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. All orders must be accompanied by money order or check. Kindly carry out these directions specifically in order to facilitate the handling of the order.

*I will Lay Me Down in Peace—Gadsby	4 cents
*We March, We March to Victory—Barnby	4 cents
*Radiant Morn Hath Passed Away—Woodward	4 cents
*Sun Shall Be No More Thy Light—Woodward	4 cents
*Angel Voices Ever Singing—Neidlinger	8 cents
*O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem—Knox	15 cents
*Hear My Cry O God—Morse	8 cents
Fight the Good Fight—Stults	10 cents
Holy Father Hear My Cry—Chaffin	8 cents
I am Alpha and Omega—Stainer	4 cents
Fierce Was the Wild Billow—Noble	4 cents
Deep River . . . an arrangement by Burleigh	12 cents
Be Not Afraid "Elijah"—Mendelssohn	6 cents

Complete set, one each of the above, price 85 cents postpaid; prices above are net amount per copy.

Anthems with the indication * are not difficult and are suited for the average chorus choir.

An extra discount will be allowed on orders for 50 or more copies of any single number of the above named anthems.

Our Boston Singers

We have received information concerning the very successful service of song which our Boston choir gave on Sunday afternoon, January 14. These singers are under the care of Elenora Whiting, one of our very gifted musicians, and one whose devotion to her church keeps pace with the development of her splendid talents. For the rendition of the oratorio, Gaul's "Holy City," she obtained the help of Robert N. Lister, as director. Mr. Lister is a vocal teacher of prominence in the eastern city, and a choral conductor of great ability. The Sewall Street Choir numbers twenty-four voices; the soloists for the occasion were Miss Whiting, soprano; Mrs. S. A. Burgess, contralto; Thomas Fielding, tenor; and Arthur Nichols, bass. The pianist was Robert Ivester, and the organist, Mrs. Sinclair. Altogether this was a season of great enjoyment to the singers who had worked so faithfully, and as well, to those who listened to the splendid results of their efforts.

Providence is not Behind

Brother Johnson of Providence, Rhode Island writes of the very successful concert given by our choir of twenty voices at that place on Christmas Eve. He says they enjoyed a great measure of the Spirit while singing, and they have been encouraged by their success, to take up even more difficult studies for the future. Outsiders who were present felt the power and beauty of the service, and were lavish in their praise of it. The soloists were sopranos, Mrs. Ruth Beckman and Mrs. Charles Brown; contralto, Miss Willa Gates; tenor, H. B. Johnson; bass, W. A. Beckman; violinist, D. Hall; organist, J. A. Leckney; director, Herbert B. Johnson. This fortunate branch also possesses a live orchestra of ten pieces, which is doing good work in helping to spread the gospel of music.

Saint Joseph, Missouri, Also

No word has reached us directly concerning the fine musical event the Saint Joseph people enjoyed on New Year's; but from the items in the church papers we glean that the choir people there gave a Cantata, "The morning star," at that time, under the very able direction of Edward C. Bell, of Saint Louis, our most energetic assistant general chorister. Brother Bell has not been saying much this year through our columns, but we have every reason to believe that he has been busy "sawing wood" just the same. Abundant success be to our enthusiastic musicians everywhere!

From the Chorister of the Des Moines District

I have been trying in my weak efforts to build up the work, and can say that some progress is being made. We now have several branches that have organized choirs, and I can see a great improvement in a good many ways.

In order to have successful choirs, not only in the Des Moines District, but others as well, much depends upon all the membership of the church. We all know that this part of the work has been neglected to a certain extent—the other departments first and music last. I wonder sometimes if the Saints really take as much thought of music as they should, knowing the conditions as they arise from time to time in choir work, and also the different dispositions musicians have. The thought perhaps arises in the minds of those who do not sing but are present at all services and active in all other lines of the work, "What can I do to assist in the choir work?"

One way of assisting is to encourage your chorister and each member of the choir, and do not forget when you are offering up your prayers to the Lord to remember this part of the work.

I want to say in behalf of the choristers in the different branches that everyone who is interested in the church work should give them his support, as the work is new to many of them, and they will appreciate your help and your reward is greater for every good done.

I meet with a good many discouragements, but do not want to complain, and I still do what I can to see the choir work grow. I hope the time is not far off when each branch in our church will have an organized choir, and this will help to unload the burden of the branch officers, and will also help and encourage the missionaries when they visit from time to time.

Wishing the general choir movement a successful year.
PERRY, IOWA. J. O. SALISBURY.

What Holden is Doing

The readers of the Staff would probably like to hear from Holden since she has become one of the center stakes.

We are doing good missionary work with our choir and orchestra, having special a thirty minute music session before each Sunday evening service. Orchestra numbers, congregational singing, solos, both instrumental and vocal, the orchestra furnishing the voluntary. In this way we attract many to our church that would otherwise not hear the gospel message.

We keep before our workers' minds the purpose of our effort and in that way get more of the Spirit of God in the work.

A junior choir with a membership of thirty-five, is one of our proud achievements. They have occupied the choir loft one Sunday morning, doing splendidly. The second Sunday morning in every month will be looked forward to by both parents and children, for that is the junior choir's appointed hour for service.

The choir proper will begin work on the General Conference series soon. Some enthusiasm is evinced and we hope to arouse more.

The stake choirs generally speaking are unable to use many of this series, but we are hoping to educate up to them in a few years.
LOLA A. JOHNSON.

Omaha Choir Gives Concerts

"The morning star" cantata was given by our Omaha singers on Christmas Eve, and a sacred concert given Sunday evening, February 4, the closing session of the district conference. Pastor Hubert Case made a very fine and forcible talk in connection with the musical numbers, pleading that the young people more fully follow the instructions given so frequently in regard to cultivating the gifts of music. Sister J. M. Kelley is the director of the choir at this place, and R. W. Scott is in charge of the newly organized orchestra, an organization which may be heard from most pleasantly in the future, if indications count for anything.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From Here and There

The work is moving along fairly well in the vicinity of Paris, Tennessee, though there is still room for improvement, is the report of Sister Lula Boothe of that place.

On the evening of January 25, a number of the Saints at Saint Thomas, Ontario, surprised Brother Frank Oliver on the occasion of his birthday, and presented him with a small gift with appropriate address by T. L. Sinclair.

Doctor Charles S. Chase, son of Elder A. M. Chase of the missionary force, graduated January 26 from the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville. Doctor Chase expects to start practice immediately in Billings, Montana.

We are informed that Brother G. J. Waller has been elected as pastor of the San Francisco Branch, but is still looking after church interests in Honolulu in connection with J. W. Rushton. He is also acting as bishop's agent for that territory. Those concerned should remember this. His address in San Francisco is 311 California Street.

"I am starving for the association of the true people of God," writes W. H. Bybee from the Soldiers' Home at Quincy, Illinois. He reminds us that about thirty years ago he was an elder and preaching the gospel. He is now seventy-three years old and spends his winters in the Soldiers' Home and the summers visiting his children. He expects to come to General Conference.

Brother Thomas Whitford of Whittmore, Michigan, says he has been engaged in gospel work for thirty-four years and has been president of two branches during that entire time, and is now acting as assistant president. He has seen the work grow from one little church in Sanilac County until now there are many flourishing branches all over the State. He says he was a rough piece of timber when he first came into the church, but he has sought to serve to the best of his ability and is thankful that he may rejoice with others in the progress in the kingdom of God upon earth.

Sending in items from the Oakdale Branch at Hamilton, Missouri, Sister James Dawson mentions that the Willing Workers continue their commendable efforts. The Religio is referred to as being wide-awake. Brother McFee has just closed a successful series of meetings at Bonanza, and other appointments are kept up. She mentions J. E. Winslow as a recent arrival in that community, and speaks of a visit from John Ely.

We are told that the newly organized branch at Ottawa, Ontario, is prospering and one has recently been baptized. The regular meetings are held in the large home where Brother and Sister Philemon Pement reside. The Sunday school now numbers thirty-seven and is on the increase. A handsome contribution was made to President Pement by the Saints of the branch at Christmas time, Charles Dudley of Toronto being present and making the presentation speech. The "Capital Gleaners" is the name of the auxiliary society, and they are already active.

"We are battling away here against heavy odds," writes Elder E. E. Long from Nevada, Iowa, on the 2d, "and the press is so tight the machinery squeaks. They even refused to sell advertising space to us this morning. They repented just a little an hour or so later, when they saw a mistake had been made." With the weather on a rampage, the other preachers warning their followers to stay away, they have opposition enough, but are getting large crowds at the theater where the meetings are held, when the weather permits. He and Elder J. L. Parker have been pushing the publicity features and are convinced that "the best thing in the world" should be advertised more extensively. He would like something attractive which can be used anywhere and be on sale at the publishing houses of the church. Possibly it can be done.

From the Editor of "Sandhedens Banner"

To the Scandinavian readers of the HERALD and all who are interested in the Scandinavian mission paper, Sandhedens Banner, I wish to state that the paper has not been discontinued, but only suspended until it can be published in this country. When I left Scandinavia the last part of September, 1916, the paper was of necessity suspended, having no one there who was in a condition to edit it. It was then my intention to start it over here as soon as I came here. For several reasons this could not be done as soon as it was intended, but I have made arrangements with the manager of the Herald Publishing House to have it printed there, and as soon as some lacking types arrive it will be started and sent to the subscribers.

I am sorry that this suspension was necessary, but ask the pardon of the subscribers for it. I wish to state that it will be published, as formerly, the first of every month; also that we will appreciate the cooperation of all the Saints who are interested in the Scandinavian mission. If the paper is not of sufficient interest to you who have access to our American publications, think of the scattered Saints in the three Scandinavian countries who at present have no other church paper and not a single missionary to encourage, instruct and build them up—no, not even an elder to administer among them.

Subscribe for the paper for yourself and have it sent to your friends outside the church and thus you give them an opportunity of becoming acquainted with this latter-day dispensation. We are all workers together with God for the gathering in of all who desire to serve God. Let us work while it is our day. But we do not desire your subscription alone, we also desire your literary cooperation. Send us short articles or letters; give us your light and your experience in the Master's service, that we may cast the bread upon the waters. Help us to make this little paper as efficient as possible in its mission of love to those who have not the opportunities that you may enjoy, and the gladsome reward of loving service will return to you.

Send all articles and subscriptions addressed: Sandhedens Banner, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Yours in gospel service,

PETER MUCEUS.

Independence Stake

Unprecedented cold weather prevailed, beginning February 3, and was intensified Sunday, February 4, but many of the Saints braved the bleak north wind and went to church, services being held in the basement. The attendance at Sunday school was 531. The sacrament meeting at 11 a. m. was in charge of W. W. Smith, Israel A. Smith, M. H. Siegfried, F. M. Sheehy, L. Hass and H. O. Smith, also Ellis Short, and many impressive and timely talks were given.

At the auxiliary meeting at 2.30 p. m. the lower room was filled with interested Saints, Sister J. A. Gardner presiding, and some very lively speeches were made concerning the work of the societies, embracing the prayer union, Daughters of Zion, sewing and helping and educational—all merging into the present Woman's Auxiliary. The ward evening prayer circles are now taking the place of the prayer union, and they are a source of comfort and uplift to those who patronize them. The little gatherings at the Saints' Home for evening prayer, are never forgotten by the devoted home missionary elders who are ever ready for service.

The addresses of Brethren Keir, McGuire, Sheehy, Siegfried and others, were well spoken of, and so also was the sermon of the evening by Parson Smith, on the theme of service, consecration and faithfulness to duty, according to the law and fundamental principles of the church.

Walnut Park Saints turned out well, considering the blizzard going on outside, and sacrament meeting at which two of the brethren were ordained by Elders Mills and Boswell was held at 11 a. m. The evening hour was very profitably occupied by F. M. Sheehy. East Independence Mission buckled on its overcoat, held a Sunday school and sacrament service in the morning, but was non est at night. Enoch Hill knights of the cross were as usual alert to duty in their little morning gatherings of church and Sunday school, and at night with the help of Pastor Arthur Mills from Walnut Park, held the standard aloft. Their Religio, in charge of Brother B. Rodgers, is doing finely, with an attendance of over 40.

Like the rest of us, here at the center place who braved the elements, the Second Church tried to honor the day. A very few attended the young people's morning prayer service, and an excellent sacrament meeting was held, presided over by Brethren Goold, Sherman and Bullard. The church was well filled at night service which was in charge of W. H. Kelley.

Many of the usual gatherings have been deferred and work was postponed until settled weather, but some of the classes are pursuing their courses, and W. W. Smith, Sister M. Madison, Sister Tessie Smith, Sister E. S. McNichols and others who are teaching biology, history of education, elementary and advanced English, art and normal Bible work, are as busy as ever.

The choir's grand benefit concert on February 1 was not so well attended as anticipated, but the program was an elaborate one, and the efforts of the artists from home and abroad were highly appreciated.

Revival gospel team meetings have closed, with an gathering of sixty converts. A few of the Saints attended. Our people are also much interested in the meetings of the parent-teacher association which are held from time to time in the various schools. To-day they will meet at the McCoy Schoolhouse, and will discuss "Military training" in Independence public schools.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

If Jesus Should Come

If Jesus should come to Nevada some day
To visit his children awhile,
Pray, where would he go when the chiming bells ring?
What shrine would he greet with his smile?
Now if he should go where the cross is on high,
Where candles and wafers abound,
And bow to the virgin, Saint Peter, and Paul,
Pray, where would the Lutherans be found?

Or if he should go to the church of renown,
Where babies are sprinkled, indeed,
Would Campbell's "Disciples" cease dipping converts,
And follow the Methodist creed?
Now if to the Baptists perchance he should go,
And thus to their creed would conform.
Would Catholics forsake holy water, and mass
And kneel at the penitent form?

But what if he went to the popular church
Where Calvin and Knox are afamed?
Would Seventh-day Advents wear the "mark of the beast,"
And meet where the "Sabbath's" defamed?
And where would our friends, Unitarians, come in?
The Scientists, and others galore?
Would he to them all bring the message "God speed"?
Or weep o'er their plight as of yore?

But shades of ye martyrs! and canonized souls!
Suppose he should pass all restraints
And stop at the Chapel on Lincoln Highway
And worship with Latter Day Saints?
And preach from their pulpit the gospel of old,
And plead for the message, so plain,
As taught from the Bible by Latter Day Saints—
Say, friend, would he preach it in vain?

How many would follow the way of his steps,
Forsaking their creeds and their pride,
And down in the river, like Christians of old,
Be buried with Christ in the tide?

Ye people in error, now hear what we say:

We bring the glad message to you
Once taught by the Savior of men in Judea—
The gospel, unchanging and true.

You may have been warned against Latter Day Saints
Because they're unpopular so.
The Jews in their blindness made just that mistake
And lost the "great treasure," you know.
They looked at the man and his message ignored;
No good in his life could they find.
The treasure was there—beneath evil report—
And poor wand'ring Jew is still blind.

So then from their error a lesson now learn:
Don't turn from this message away,
For God has revealed it, the same as at first,
And pleads with all men to obey.
Your creeds and your dogmas can never avail;
They're not of God's choosing dear friend.
But, creatures of men, they will perish at last,
And you will lose out in the end.

Don't fail to hear Parker and Long, Sunday, February 4, at the Majestic. At 3 p. m., "After death—what?" by Parker. At 7.30 p. m., "Who represents God?" by Long. Two vitally important subjects of eternal moment to all.

Christian Life—What Is It?

Any person who is conscious of a new life in Christ is conscious of a new life in every worthy respect. Christianity is the evidence of divine origin; for example, to love our neighbor with an unselfish interest. We are not conscious, by nature, of such a love. We may be jealous of their property, or indifferent to their misfortune, we feel no concern in their welfare. Then, under the influence of a new apprehension of truth we experience a spiritual change described as a new birth. Our whole being goes out to God with a new devotion, and that which we previously treated with indifference becomes inclusive of our neighbors and of all mankind. We are now drawn to them with eager and affectionate desire, irrespective of their attitude of us. We are glad to see our neighbors prosper. We desire above all else their soul's prosperity, their spiritual renewal and redemption. They become in the deepest and truest sense of the word our brethren.

This is the all inclusive miracle of Christianity. It is through this revolutionary inner change that we are brought into a new relationship to all human institutions. Our new-born love for Christ creates in us a new love for our community, our church, our country, we now have a consuming passion to improve conditions about us. Defects and evils to which we were previously indifferent become now our life concern. Through our influence and our effort into civic reform, the name of our community is now jealously guarded and cherished. We are conscious of the birth of a new patriotism, of a new kind of loyalty. The importance of a nation's life has dawned upon us with a renewed and awakened spirit; we see, as never before, its relation to all the higher interests of humanity and to the kingdom of God.

The marvel and miracle of Christian love is this, it includes all other worthy love. It changes our attitude toward God, to mankind, to human interests and institutions. It links us to every good cause, it makes men neighborly, paternal, patriotic, loyal, and evangelistic in purpose and spirit, all of which goes to show the work of the church. Let it do its work well; let it win men to Christ and to an experimental knowledge of his love, and the hard problems that perplex and overwhelm us will be solved.

The Christian life is what should appeal to all kind and well-disposed men, for by and through it there comes only the development that makes life worth while.

JOHN ZAHND.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, 304 Reliance Building.

FORT COLLINS, COLORADO, January 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: At the bustling western city of Fort Collins, Colorado, the banner of King Emmanuel has been hoisted by a band of over thirty Saints who were organized into a branch in October, 1916, by Brethren James E. Kelly and J. R. Sutton, our minister in charge and district president, respectively. Our branch was named the Fort Collins Branch, Wilbur Savage was made president of the branch, William Broliar, priest, William Ackelson, teacher. We also have a Sunday school of about forty-five members. Brother and Sister Jay Saxton will soon move to a ranch twenty or twenty-five miles north or northwest of North Platte, Nebraska, but they hope the missionaries will hunt them up as they are always welcome, and they hope they can be the means of opening up the Lord's work there.

Our afflicted Brother Frank Duncan desires the prayers of the Saints for his recovery from cancer of jaw.

Dear Saints the world over, can we not live plainly and forego pleasures of the world and find our pleasures in our church and Sunday school work and the associations of the Saints, in honor preferring one another? The young of the church could meet at each other's homes to practice singing the sweet songs of Zion, and other innocent ways of pleasantly passing away time that would hang heavily over them. As this is the hastening time, can we not afford to put our all financially in the hands of our good bishop to build factories that would supply us with well-made shoes, cotton and woolen cloth and many, many other necessary articles which we use every day, thereby giving employment to many? May God help us all to see our duty and have the courage of our convictions.

AMENUENSIS.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, January 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a source of joy in my home. I spend many a happy moment reading it. My eyes will not permit me to read very long at a time, but I try to improve what time I can read by reading something that will improve my mind and help me to live better.

I know, dear reader, that if we continually look at the dark side of life we will be sure to feel discouraged, for it is getting darker and darker all the time. But if we get through the darkness with patience, love and faith; the other side will be brighter and brighter every time you get through.

I am still trying to do the best I can. I often get discouraged but the still small voice keeps calling me on. Let us try to forget the past and think of the future. To-day is ours, yesterday the Lord has taken back, and to-morrow is his to give. So let us make the best of to-day so when the Lord takes it back he will find that we have been chopping down weeds in our field. Perhaps he can see the little stalk of corn coming through the ground and will help us on the morrow get down a few more weeds and when we get to the end of the row we can look back and see the corn ourselves, or otherwise a clear conscience that we have done the best we could.

Remember me in your prayers,

MRS. MAE OHLER.

SUVER, OREGON, January 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: I take this opportunity to write a few lines to let my old friends and fellow members of the church know that I am still alive and have not lost interest in the work we all love so much.

I came out to Elkton, Oregon, from West Branch, Michigan, in 1909, and with the exception of one week spent in 1910 with a little community of Saints at Springfield, Oregon, I have not met with another Latter Day Saint since coming here. I have been afflicted with cancer and been treated for the same, taking all my spare money, so that I have not been able to attend a conference or help the church in other ways as I should have liked, but I did succeed in getting Brother J. D. Stead to visit my neighborhood once. But unfortunately I was called to Salem to be with my wife who had to undergo an operation for gallstones; so not being there to introduce him around, he only stayed a couple of days, but preached one sermon in a private house, leaving a fine impression. If I can get cured of cancer, I hope to be able to go where I can once more enjoy the company of Saints.

Hoping you may find room in your valuable paper for these few lines, and asking old friends to write to me,

RICHARD BOSHAW.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, February 6, 1917.

Burlington people have been busy since last report, though much of our work has been more of local than of general interest.

The bazaar and chicken dinner given by the ladies aids late in the fall was a marked success financially, and there is reason to believe it brought the work to the attention of many in a new and favorable light.

Sunday school and Religio work is in good condition. Two of our Religio classes had grown to such proportions as to require division, making us now a total of six classes with an attendance averaging close to forty. A little change was made in the Sunday school executive the first of the year, Sister Jule Ortleb who has served for sometime as assistant superintendent, succeeding to the superintendency. Interest continues good, with an attendance ranging from eighty to ninety. Especially encouraging is the forming of a normal class pledged to enroll in the normal department. The class has been well attended, with a probable enrollment of 10 or 12, and a number more promising to attend when they could. The class has met only two or three times, work having been suspended during a series of meetings held by Brother J. A. Gillen, and the district conference to meet here February 9, 10 and 11.

Brother Gillen, who had endeared himself to Burlington people during a visit here almost two years ago, found a warm welcome when he arrived Sunday morning, January 28. He spoke for us at the church Sunday morning, and from Sunday to Thursday evening inclusive, held a series of meetings in Remy Hall on Third Street, where the attendance of outsiders was better than we have often secured at the church—and for two or three evenings larger, it was thought, than could have been comfortably accommodated at the church. Severe weather reduced the attendance for the last three evenings, and the hall being rented, the Friday evening service was at the church. Sunday, February 4, was reported as one of the coldest days in a number of years, and the attendance at the morning sacrament service was much smaller than anticipated, though good under the circumstances. The meeting was good, and the words of counsel and encouragement from Brother Gillen as food to our souls. The evening meeting, closing the series, was at the hall down town, and while we could but regret that the feast of good things should come to a close, we recognized the relief to Brother Gillen, after having spoken, as he told us, nearly one hundred and twenty-five nights almost consecutively.

On January 24, Leon Bauer was baptized, D. J. Williams officiating.

Conference Daily

Every Latter Day Saint unable to attend the sessions of the coming General Conference, with the preceding sessions of the Religio and Sunday school General Conventions will find the Daily Herald to be issued during that time a necessity. In fact it has been found that many of those who attend the sessions subscribe to learn what the others who are in attendance are doing.

The first issue will be mailed out on Monday evening, April 2, and followed by an edition each day, except Sundays, till the close of the conference.

Many interesting details will be given for which room cannot be made in the regular issues of the Herald.

The price is only 25 cents for the entire time. Subscriptions should be sent in early so the lists may be made up and thus avoid mistakes and delay from a rush at the last moment. Each day's news will be made up in the evening and mailed out at 8.05 p. m., thus reaching subscribers promptly.

received in the mine. Funeral from his home, Scranton, Pennsylvania, J. R. Lentell in charge. Sermon by A. E. Stone; interment in Washburn Street Cemetery. Leaves a widow and 2 sons, Thomas R. and Franklin J., to mourn. He was not a member of the church but a staunch supporter by his means, and his kindness toward the missionaries of the church endeared him to them.

LEWIS.—Lars Lewis was born September 22, 1835. Came with his parents from Norway to America in 1841. Married Ann Olson February 5, 1858; ordained to priesthood 1885. Died January 26, 1917; survived by wife, 5 sons, 4 daughters, 1 brother, 10 grandchildren, 1 son having passed away 16 months before him. Services in charge of T. A. Ivie; sermon by William Lewis. Burial in Stewartville cemetery.

REYNOLDS.—William, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Reynolds of 911 Poplar Street, Muscatine, Iowa; died January 22, 1917, and his twin brother passed away a few hours later. They were in frail condition since birth, December 28. Remains removed to Buffalo, Iowa. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery. They were the great-grandsons of C. E. Reynolds. Funeral at the home of the parents; sermon by Oscar Harter.

THILES.—Laverne Orval, at the home of its parents, Mr. and Sister William Thiles, January 27, 1917, aged 1 year, 1 month and 13 days. Little Laverne was afflicted from birth with valvular trouble of the heart. At times his condition gave hope that he would overcome this trouble, but it seems this was not to be. He leaves besides his parents, 3 brothers and 3 sisters. Interment in the cemetery at Panama, Shelby County, Iowa. Services in charge of Sidney Pitt, sr.

BEEBE.—Emeline Beebe was born January 23, 1836, at Gayland, New York. Married Oscar Beebe July 4, 1853. Two children were born to this union, one who passed on before, and Sister Orching of Meadow Grove who with the husband remains to mourn her loss. Baptized by E. C. Briggs. Died January 24, 1917, at her home in Meadow Grove. Funeral sermon by F. S. Gatenby. The church was crowded to its fullness, all paying a grand tribute to Sister Beebe's life.

JASTER.—Emma B. Blakeslee was born at Montrose, Iowa, May 6, 1869. Baptized March 27, 1884; married George W. Jaster in 1891. To this union were born 7 children, 3 of whom with her husband preceded her in death. Died at Fort Madison, Iowa, December 28, 1916, leaving to mourn her departure, Howard F. and wife, John W., Louis E. and Madeline H. Jaster, also 1 brother, John Blakeslee of Philadelphia. Funeral sermon by D. J. Williams in Saints' church at Montrose, Iowa.

SNETHEN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, February 3, 1917, Sister Christiana Snethen, aged 84 years, 11 months and 12 days. Married twice and was the mother of 11 children, also reared 2 others. Four sons and 3 daughters are living, also 58 grandchildren, 43 great-grandchildren, and 3 great-great-grandchildren. Baptized July 29, 1877, at Davis City, Iowa, by O. B. Thomas, and her life was noble and worthy. Funeral held at her son-in-law's, Mr. Grant Jones's, home, where she lived many years. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

CAMPBELL.—John Campbell, late of Nebish Island, Michigan, born 83 years ago in Glasgow, Scotland. At thirteen, came with parents to Waterloo County, Ontario. Married Miss Charlotte Clegg. To this union 13 children were born; all survive. The latter part of his life was spent on Nebish Island. Died January 21, 1917. Services conducted from home of his daughter, Sister James Ferguson, Soo, Michigan, in charge of Robert T. Brown. Interment in Pine Grove Cemetery. Forty-nine grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren survive.

CLARENCE.—Mrs. Ruth (Ervin) Clarence, born March 31, 1853, Auglaize County, Ohio. Married to William Clarence March 30, 1874. To this union six children were born, Milton, Ravenna, Maggie and William, two dying in infancy. Baptized and confirmed by Robert M. Elvin, June 9, 1872. After a short affliction died in Omaha, January 28, 1917. Funeral services conducted by H. A. Higgins, January 30, 1917, near Union, Nebraska. A large attendance at the funeral expressed the standing of Sister Clarence with her neighbors and friends near and far.

THOMAS.—Sister Jane Morgan Thomas; born in Merthyrtydvil, South Wales, England, May 29, 1844. Married John B. Thomas at Mineral Ridge, Ohio, 1866; 6 children born to this union, husband and 2 children preceding her in death. Those left to mourn are John, Seattle, Washington, William, Los Angeles, California, Edward and Margaret, Bevier, Missouri. Baptized in Ohio in 1865; died at Bevier, Missouri, February 2, 1917. Services at Saints' church, in charge of W. B. Richards; sermon by William Lewis, an old-time friend. She was the aunt of the late John L. Morgan. Bevier has been her home for the last thirty-eight years.

SPARKS.—William Elijah Sparks was born November 24, 1830, at Billingsford, Norfolk, England. Married Mary Anna Clements December 28, 1855. To this union were born 7 children, of whom 2 sons and 1 grandson survive. Moved with his wife from London, England, and located in London, Canada, and later to Decatur County, Iowa, making their home the last 10 years in Lamoni. Baptized in 1871 at London, England, by C. D. Norton; ordained a priest February 18, 1872. Died January 8, 1917. Funeral services at the Saints' Home January 11, in charge of Henry A. Stebbins; sermon by R. M. Elvin. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

COWHICK.—Sister Nancy Boling Cowhick, aged 87 years, 3 months and 11 days. She was born in Clay County, Kentucky; married James Cowhick in 1854. To this union were born 5 children, 3 of whom survive her: John Cowhick of Cresbard, South Dakota, Sister D. A. Hutchings of Little Sioux, Iowa, and James Cowhick of Independence, Iowa. Her husband was killed in battle at Rolling Prairie, January 23, 1864. Joined the church in June, 1892. Died at the home of her son-in-law, Elder Doris A. Hutchings at Little Sioux, Iowa, January 20, 1917. Sermon by Sidney Pitt, sr.; interment in the Little Sioux Cemetery.

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

RECONCILIATION THE WORK OF THE CHURCH

The great and wonderful doctrine of the atonement of Christ involves in an especial sense the idea of divine love expressed in reconciliation of fallen humanity to God. Atonement might also be written at-one-ment. So greatly is the thought of unity with God emphasized by Jesus that we might be at one with him and his Father and our Father, his God and our God.

He came to gather Israel as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing. He came as a prophet of God to offer restoration. He came as the son of God offering himself for the sins of the world, not an high priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but tempted and tried like unto us in all things, yet without sin. (Hebrews 4.)

His great prayer before leaving his disciples, as recorded in John 17, is again and again for that unity of man and God.

And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.—John 17: 11.

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; as we are one: and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me. Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.—John 17: 20-24.

This emphasizes plainly his great purpose and desire of unity or oneness of man with God.

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.—2 Corinthians 5: 18-20.

Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.—Hebrews 2: 17.

And, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.—Colossians 1: 20.

These passages again show the great purpose of reconciliation, a love divine, so great it causes the human heart to bow in silent worship.

As this was his great work, so is it in a special sense the work of the church to reconcile and reunite man with God. In this Jesus the Christ has set us an example that we may follow in his steps. (1 Peter 2: 21.)

It is written that he came to call not the righteous but sinners to repentance. What then should be our attitude towards the offending brother? Is it not still salvation? Is it not still reconciliation, if that be possible? We have sometimes to remind ourselves of this.

For some offenses the law is clear. We are left no other course, having first labored and sought to save. A second offense means expulsion. This is not because we do not forgive, but that the law of God and the love of God may be honored. If possible to separate the sinner from his sin, we should seek to save him. But if, at last, his allegiance to wrong has carried him out, he is to be to us as a heathen man and a publican. But what should be our attitude under the gospel law to the heathen and to the publican? Pass him by on the other side of the street, draw our skirts away from him, or still try to help him to a right life, still try to win him to a better way of living, still try to relieve his infirmities, be they moral, mental or physical?

We know many who think an elder's court has failed if the accused is not cut off from the church. We saw a letter recently which stated that a certain difficulty had been settled and everyone was satisfied except the presiding teacher. He seemed to think that he had to make a case in order to fulfill his duty, secure conviction and see that the order of the court, by way of expulsion, was carried out.

To tell it to the church still means a continuation of the work of visiting, of laboring, of trying to reconcile. We were recently asked if it were too late for the parties to settle the matter after the teacher had been called in. It is never too late to do right. Where there exists a difference it is right it should be adjusted and settled by the parties. It is not too late after it has been disposed of by an elders' court. It is not too late even when it is before the High Council.

We remember a few years ago a member of the standing High Council of the church informed us that when a certain case was before the High Council, he with other members of that body were sent to take depositions. But before doing so they called the parties before them, and after prayer discussed the matter with them without the intervention of witnesses with the result that they became reconciled and the high councilors went back without their depositions. Naturally this procedure received the hearty approval of our late president. There is no point of court procedure at which it is too late for the parties to be reconciled to one another and to the church.

I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, Let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds. And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment, or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your lawgiver. —Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.

This emphasizes again the great purpose of the church, which still remains: reconciliation to God and at-one-ment or unity with God and each other. The position of the church would appear to be always hatred of sin, love and compassion for the sinner. Sin must be cast out from the church. We must be quick at all times to remove it individually and collectively. If it is possible to separate the sin and the sinner, the sinner should be retained and helped. But if it becomes finally clear that he loves evil rather than good, he loves his wrongdoing more than God, the church or his brethren, and this is not decided in the heat of passion or of stress, but calmly, prayerfully, then we cannot let him continue within the church in the course of wrongdoing, and the church and he must part company. That is, to our deep sorrow.

But let us not be overhasty in our action. There are people who cannot be driven our way, yet they are doing nothing that brings serious reflection upon the church. They may not yet understand the law of the church as we do. Members have been expelled, officers have been released, simply because they were not willing to submit to some man's interpretation, and thereby the body and the individual have suffered loss. Time, patience, brotherly love and the Spirit of God should each be allowed to work its part in the healing of the wound, especially when no grave question of personal morality is involved. We have seen men saved to the church by patience and brotherly love, who by quick action and insistence upon the law would have been forced without our doors.

For therein lies the special work of the church, to win men from sin to righteousness, to turn men to Christ, to win men from the world to the truth of God, to reconcile and reunite; and to bring those whom we already call brother nearer to the divine pattern. The salvation of souls, not the expulsion of men, the reconciliation of man to God and his Christ, the at-one-ment, the unity one with another and with our elder brother and our heavenly Father is and should be our aim and great desire.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Villa Bandits in Another Raid

An armed force of bandits raided a farm southwest of Hachita, New Mexico, on the 13th and took several prisoners and some live stock. A rumor is current to the effect that Villa has left Mexico for Japan. In spite of the recent raid, all the United States troops at the border are being sent to their home States.

"Leak" Investigations Practically Completed

The sensational proceedings in which it was charged that by securing advance information concerning the President's peace note certain parties profited to the extent of millions, are now turned over to a subcommittee of three. A great deal of testimony has been taken, some of it of a very spectacular nature, but no convictions have resulted.

Elder Rushton's Work

In the SAINTS' HERALD of January 24, there is an item that Elder Rushton had been invited to address the student body at the University of California. This appears to have been a mistake which Elder Rushton kindly corrects in a recent letter. It was an oversight that we are very glad indeed to correct, appreciating that it cannot effect the excellent work being done by him in the West.

President E. A. Smith

We are pleased to note by letter from Elder T. W. Williams, in this issue, that President Elbert A. Smith continues to improve. Brother Williams's remark that there is nothing wrong with Elbert but overwork agrees with everything we have been able to find out about his condition and we fully agree with him that there is no reason for undue anxiety. We are very glad to learn that his improvement is steady and sure.

Conventions Begin April 1

The president of the Religio and superintendent of the Sunday school are announcing in this issue that the first session of the General Conventions at Lamoni will be on the afternoon of Sunday, April 1. It is the belief of the officers in charge that it is eminently worth the effort of those expecting to attend to start a day earlier than usual and not miss the excellent features available for this day.

Revolution in Cuba

A serious revolution is in progress in Cuba and Secretary Lansing has sent word to the Cuban President that any Government set up by revolution will not be recognized by the United States, and that while intervention by the United States is contemplated with reluctance, such a step will be taken if necessary. An incidental result of the affair is a notable rise in the price of sugar in this country, because of restrictions on importations from Cuba.

Car Shortage Dealt With

The shortage of railroad cars this winter has brought about much inconvenience and some suffering. By a recent agreement between representatives of thirty railroads an "intelligent embargo" will be placed on freight shipments east, while whole trainloads of empty freight cars will be given right of way to the West, over everything except passenger trains. Millions of bushels of grain are held in elevators in Minneapolis and Chicago, while in New England there is an imminent flour shortage. The coal shortage has been relieved somewhat, but many communities are keeping warm by a hand-to-mouth supply of coal.

Constitutional Amendments

The February number of the Autumn Leaves contains official announcement concerning proposed changes in the constitution of the Sunday school and Religio. Others will be published in the March number.

Every worker in these societies should carefully consider these proposals and be ready to discuss and vote at the conventions in April.

In harmony with the action of the General Conventions and Conference of last year, an attempt will be made to put the gospel literature distribution in the care of a joint board of one each from the church, Sunday school and Religio, in the general, district (or stake) and local organizations.

Religious Moving Pictures

The demand of the American public for motion pictures has resulted in a corporation of national scope with headquarters at Los Angeles, California, for the purpose of producing religious, antialcoholic and educational motion pictures. They are including a department in which pictures will be produced for illustrating Sunday school lessons. They call themselves The Inter-Denominational Film Corporation and claim to have a capital stock of three hundred thousand dollars.

Only a Typographical Error

A young man dining in a restaurant one day ordered some noodle soup, and while eating it came across a needle. Immediately upon the discovery he called the waiter over and said: "Look here, waiter I found this here needle in my soup."

The waiter, with a surprised look, glanced at the needle and then picked up the menu card, looked up and down the printed columns a moment, then a broad smile crept over his face and he exclaimed: "You see, sah, dat—dat am jest a typographical error—dat—dat should am bin a noodle."—National Food Magazine.

"Come to Church" Sign Graft

About every county in Iowa has been worked by a smooth promoter who induced the pastors and business men to erect a mammoth illuminated sign with the words "Come to Church" on it. A neighboring town woke up to find that the agreements were promissory notes to the grand total of $658.80 for a period of three years. A reliable sign firm of Chicago say they would erect, repaint once a year, and maintain for three years a similar sign for $216.

This person claimed to be working simply for the good of the cause and all he hoped to get out of it was by selling the space to some national advertiser when the three-year contract expired. Some of our people may meet this proposition elsewhere.

Of Interest About the East

It is difficult for the people of the West to realize how closely populated are the districts around Boston. Lynn and East Lynn, ten or twelve miles from Boston, is a city of over 100,000 inhabitants. One may travel in several directions from Boston for twenty to thirty miles and even forty miles through one town after another. From Worcester to Providence is almost like one continued city, the intervening towns are so close together. There is a splendid field for work here. A new opening has been made in Lynn, a hall hired, songbooks purchased and the work placed under the direction of Elder C. H. Rich.

Some splendid services have been held at Boston, and marked spiritual evidences have been given at the prayer services of the Eastern Massachusetts District.

European War

The German drive in the Champagne region has netted them some important trenches, while the British have made similar gains on the Ancre. It is reported that German casualties for January totaled 77,534, making a total since the war began of 4,087,692, yet they claim to have more soldiers now than at the beginning of war, due to enlistment of young men who have reached military age. Great scarcity of food is reported not only in the belligerent countries but in neutral countries such as Switzerland, Holland as well. Some important gains are reported for the British in Mesopotamia, where by an encircling movement they have bottled up the Turkish garrison at Kut-el-Amara. The ships sunk by submarine in the war area since February 1 now total 121.

Successful Mission Conference in Australia

In a letter to the First Presidency, concerning the mission conference at Sydney, New South Wales, held December 25 and 26, 1916, under the direction of Apostles Hanson and Butterworth, Brother Paul M. Hanson writes: "It has not been uncommon to hear such comments as, 'It is the biggest movement ever started in the Australian Mission,' and 'I cannot conceive how the General Conference can be more educational.' The lectures were spoken of by all as of a high order, and it is evident a long step forward has been taken. Great possibilities lie before the mission conference. The morning sessions provided for in the program were for the ministry only, but other meetings were arranged for the general public. I thought that the getting together of the ministry would be a good thing. A fine body of the ministry is developing over here."

Church Improvement at Independence

Sunday the 11th was a great day in the history of Independence. While the Saints at that place have for a number of years been meeting in a commodious stone church, the building had never been entirely completed nor dedicated. On this day the matter was presented to the people and they were urgently requested to contribute sufficient funds that it might be completed and other desired improvements made. Eight hundred dollars were asked for, but during the day, cash and pledges were received to the amount of $2,150. The branch has adopted plans and specifications for raising the two towers of the church, one to a height equal to the comb of the church while the other will reach to the eaves. More walks will be built and hedges and ornamental shrubbery will be set out as soon as spring comes. We congratulate the Independence people on this spirit of giving so manifestly predominant.

United States Preparing for War

While nothing has as yet occurred to cause an open avowal of war with Germany, strenuous preparations continue to be made for such a break if it should occur. Steel nets are stretched across the harbor mouths of the principal ports in the East from sunset till sunrise each day, to prevent surprise submarine attacks. The main United States fleet has been moved from Cuban waters to a secret place to be ready for an emergency. The navy is making every preparation for action. Recruiting continues very strenuously and even Lamoni, supposed to be off the beaten path, is to have a naval recruiting party visit it before long. Plans for military use of railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines are being perfected. The German ambassador and party sailed for Germany on the 14th, but will be detained for some time at Halifax for examination by British officials. The detention of Americans in Turkey is causing considerable apprehension and may cause a break with that country.

Literature for Temperance Committees

Those interested in spreading antinarcotic and antiliquor information among the young men and boys of their neighborhood will find excellent aid in two new pamphlets which are available for free distribution. Statistics show that the use of narcotics is alarmingly increasing, and efforts to thwart those who would increase its use are certainly commendable. In Philadelphia a committee has made a thorough investigation and their findings are available in the pamphlet entitled "The narcotic evil in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania." Edward W. Bok, the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, is chairman of the committee, while Doctor J. H. W. Rhein is secretary. Address the latter as secretary of the committee at 1732 Pine Street, Philadelphia. Another entitled "Federal responsibility in the solution of the habit-forming drug problem," has been written especially for Congress and others concerned in drug legislation. A few of these are available for free distribution and may be obtained from the author, Charles B. Towns, 293 Central Park West, New York City.

WHAT CONSTITUTES CHRIST'S CHURCH?

(Sermon by Elder Hubert Case, Sunday evening, August 29, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

I would invite your attention to the reading found in the sixteenth chapter of Matthew beginning with the eighteenth verse:

And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

Now these are the words of none other than the Carpenter of Nazareth, Jesus the Christ. In the midst of all the confusion and contention that surrounded him in that brief history of his three years of active ministerial work which has wrought more for the blessing of mankind than any part of the world's history, and while men were contending against him and trying in every way to thwart him in his purposes in building the grandest structure I believe the world has ever seen he said to these men, "I will build my church."

Now I hold to-night what might be termed a photograph of that church, a word picture giving us a minute description of what constituted the church of Jesus Christ. It is brief but it certainly is plain. It is not couched in any one verse but we have this description given throughout this brief history, not all during the ministerial activities of Christ in person, but part of that work is after he leaves his earthly career; being in direct communion with those men whom he placed in charge of affairs here in this world, he continued to build until we see that structure standing before the world—the most unique form of government I believe that the world has ever known.

We look upon him to-night as the great teacher of man, but in none of his teachings do you find him teaching in his own wisdom. In all this work that he did he claimed to be directed and commanded by a higher power than himself, and he said that power was his Father in heaven. It was not his own will, it was not his own work, but he stood as a mediator between God and mankind, and he came for this specific purpose, the establishing among men of the divine government, the headquarters of which is in heaven, and not here upon this earth.

A MINIATURE OF GOD'S GOVERNMENT IN HEAVEN

This government that God placed upon this earth, called his church, is simply a miniature form of that great government of God that we see described in Holy Writ, that men had glimpses of in the ages that are past and gone, who are given a view at times, of the grandeur and the beauty and the glory of that heavenly kingdom.

I find statements a little further on by some of the writers of the New Testament, speaking of Christ's work, that I wish to use this evening as a base, enabling us to understand what is said concerning this building.

First, I will invite your attention to 1 Corinthians 12: 18: "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." And we are told, in the Colossian letter by Paul, and also in the Ephesian letter, that the body of Christ is the church, and he set every member in the church as it hath pleased him.

Now my text says that he is going to build his church, and if this guide that I hold in my hand is worth anything to this congregation, or any other, I believe, my friends, we should at least hold it at par value. I believe that this word is true, that it is a true record, and it gives us a description of what he did while upon this earth and after he ascended, and we find these writers coming on the stand and testifying as to the importance and scope, the force and power of that work, as it was committed into their care.

SOME OF THE MATERIAL

A little further over in this chapter I read again these words: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." (Verse 27.) And note the reading of the next verse: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Here is some of the building material.

God set them in there. Another statement that he made is very familiar to my hearers this evening. Jesus says, "No man cometh to me except the Father which sent we draw him." I believe that statement. I believe that no man or woman ever has become a member of the church unless God has drawn that individual by the influence of his Spirit through the preaching of the word. No man can be made a citizen of that kingdom unless God has a hand in drawing that individual and planting him in the kingdom as one of the members of that church.

THE VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS

In the Acts of the Apostles we read the statement that God added to the church daily such as should be saved. This is the material. He takes of this material and begins to form a government, and this government in New Testament history is called his church. If I were to read this verse carefully, I would note several points, "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers." Now there are three specific points mentioned. What is the next point? After that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Here are the various departments and helps as he put them in the church.

Look at the many points in that one verse, points that are describing what God put into his church. Now these are plain, and you people to-night, with this guide in your hand and the untold millions in the world who have this guide in their homes, it looks like we could read that and see the plain points describing that wonderful church, doesn't it?

I know the argument is made that many of these things are done away, but I have no assurance that such is true. To the contrary, we have statements made as plain as anything can possibly be that they are not done away with, that we may call your attention to before we get through this evening, showing that these things, are not to be discarded because he says: "This is the body of Christ, this is the church, and he put them in there." Men cannot put an apostle in the church, neither can they put a member in the church. God must do that.

GOD MUST ACT

Because a person is baptized does not make him a member of the church. Why, you could catch the vilest sinner on the street anywhere and by main force he might be taken to the water and baptized but that would not make him a citizen of the kingdom, neither would it make him a member of the church. You could write his name on the church books, and that would not make him a member of the church. There is order in this building, and God's building is more systematic than any structure ever erected by man. It is because it is of more importance than any institution man has built.

When the Apostle Paul stood before the people on Mars Hill and saw the inscription "To the unknown God," he said, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands." (Acts 17: 22-24.)

A HOLY TEMPLE

What is the temple in which he dwells? Not in a temple made with hands. This temple we are told in the writings of Paul, is the church of the living God, "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." (Ephesians 2: 21, 22.)

You have a plain statement there that this habitation that he dwells in is not made with man's hands, but he dwells in his temple here upon this earth which he tells us is his habitation, and he calls it his church. It is fitly framed together, he says it is built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief prophet.

I was preaching upon this point one time while in Oklahoma, and a certain Judge Houston was in my audience. At the close of my discourse he came and shook hands with me and said, "Brother Case, I never saw that before in my life, and didn't know it was in the Bible, the description of the building of his church. But it is there, and it is plain, too." Now I have wondered lots of times that the many scholars we have in the world, and the many church leaders that have tried for many years to erect structures, why many of them did not come nearer the ideal that we see here.

I have a little statement here I will read. Some of the men in the audience to-night were in the Kirtland Temple when this statement was made. It was made by a man by the name of George H. Gordon, at the close of the conference held there a number of years ago, and he was the correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer. I will read a portion of it:

To President Smith and the Delegates to the Latter Day Saint Conference; Dear Sirs and Brothers: As your conference draws to a close and you depart to your many fields of work very soon, I want to at this time thank you for the uniform courtesy and kindness extended to me during my work in Kirtland. I will ever regard the week just passed as one of the brightest in my life. I am not converted to your faith, but I part from you feeling that my life will be better because of the week's association with noble men and women who are doing an unquestionably good work in uplifting humanity. I have a vastly different opinion of the Latter Day Saints than when I first came among you. Where you then had, because of my ignorance, an indifferent enemy, you now have a warm friend.

And he says a little farther on, as he closes his statement:

I have in my reportorial capacity been closely associated with many denominations and I want to volunteer the testimony that in my judgment you are the nearest to the Carpenter of Nazareth that I have seen.

THE MEANING OF THE CHURCH TO-DAY

Now, what does this church stand for to-day? This church stands for that picture we find in New Testament history being restored in the activities and in godly practices as the church stood two thousand years ago when the Master erected this wonderful structure and started it on its wonderful mission to the world of mankind. Many people are friends if they get to see the position held by the Latter Day Saints, as we go out to give this gospel to the world, but we meet with many people who are prejudiced as this man says he was when he went to that conference; "an indifferent enemy." That is the feeling many have, but when it opens up before their mind, and they see the scope and the power that is in the work, they feel differently. It makes an impression to know we believe that no officer, no member, no person can be really put in the church of Jesus Christ but by the sanction and by the direction and the force that God has exercised through the preaching of this word wherever this gospel has been presented to the world. Further, no man can even be taken from the world and made a citizen of that kingdom unless the sanction of God is upon that work. The divine approval of his Spirit is the stamp of divinity and the seal of that person's adoption, making him a citizen of the kingdom of God, as the Apostle Paul says in his writing.

Now, friends, I wish you to note this fact. Many people have said just as a gentleman who told me one time (he was a minister, and after fighting this work as he did I will use the word fight), he said "I fought this work for fifteen years," but when he came to himself (I suppose I had better put it that way) and got rid of a little of his prejudice, he quit preaching and went out into the country, and settled down on a farm because he could no longer preach, as he found himself out of harmony with the Bible in several points. He came and listened to this preaching, and I baptized that gentleman, and he said a few days after he was in the church, "I used to wonder why you people believe in the apostles and prophets being in the church. I never could see it before." Here is the statement I am telling this story for. He says, "It just seems to me my eyes have been opened, I never saw the kingdom of God before."

That is just what Jesus said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

OFFICERS TO PERPETUATE AND CARRY ON

I believe friends, that that divine organization upon this earth is just as much an organized government as any government that you can see, and that you know of such as the United States Government, the Republic of which we are members to-night, or the Kingdom of Great Britain, or any other country on this earth. I believe this divine organization is God's institution, and he knew what officers he needed to perpetuate and carry on that institution, else he never would have put them in there, and Paul says they are first apostles, etc. Where is it recorded?

We turn over here and read in the tenth chapter of Matthew, beginning with the first verse, where Jesus, after going up on the mount and praying all night, came down from the mount, being in communion with his Father in heaven, and he walked along the shore of the sea of Galilee, and began to call men to follow him. We find that these men were the ones who had been followers of John, who had been converted to the truth, and they gave heed to his call, and he said "Come and follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." He laid his hands upon these men and ordained them, and the ninth chapter of Luke says he gave them power and authority.

Now note this, "And he named them apostles." Then he is placing these men in the church, as Paul says he first put in the church apostles. But did he put them in there? God was directing his son, and Jesus said, "I do always those things which my father hath commanded me." He simply stood as a mediator to perform God's work and bring these people into the church, because he says, "I will build my church," and in the erection of that institution we see him putting other officers in the church.

The next one mentioned in the history as we go along you will find in the tenth chapter of Luke, first verse. There you will find he named the seventy, calling those men and sending them out two by two before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come. And he says in both instances, where he ordained the twelve and where he ordained the seventy, that he gave them power and authority to minister the gospel and direct people into the kingdom of God, making them citizens of that kingdom and church here upon this earth.

I recognize this supreme man, as he stood here upon this earth, the greatest organizer in all the organizations upon the earth. He understood the form of organization in order to carry his work to the utmost bonds of the earth. A man could be a Jew, or he could be a Roman, he could be a Chinaman, he could be a Japanese, he could be anywhere in the world or of any nationality, and be a citizen of this wonderful institution, to fit men to live in the divine organization that is to be established from the rivers to the ends of the earth, when that great government of God in heaven that will finally be established on this earth when his prayer shall be answered that his kingdom shall come and his will be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

HOW GOD DIRECTS HIS CHURCH

I will read one more passage of scripture touching this point. There is one feature of this subject this evening that I will only refer to briefly, as it will be taken up under some other head perhaps during this series of meetings, and that is the matter of God putting these officers in the church, the question of present-day revelation.

In every age of time when God has had a work here upon this earth he has always spoken, he has always directed; that is the reason we need prophets in the church—this entire set of officers that is spoken of here, and that is the reason we feel to-day that prophets must be in the church. It is God's means of manifesting himself and speaking to his people, and putting those officers in the church as it has pleased him.

We are told upon one occasion concerning this matter that the "harvest is great and the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of harvest that he will send laborers into his vineyard." It is his business to send those laborers, and he has a definite way of calling these men, he calls them through the prophets here in his church.

I find a statement in the writings of John where he tells us what Jesus told them concerning the spirit of revelation in the church before he left them. He said that when the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost, has come, he will not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he also speak, and he will show you things to come.

Now that was the thought as the author put it, that it should be an eternal ordinance from that time, not for a day, not for a year, but forever, that was to be in the church, and he was to speak to the church and through the church, for the building, establishing and perpetuating of that institution.

PROPHETS IN THE CHURCH

One time when I was preaching in the western part of Oklahoma, a minister came to me one day and said, "Say, brother, are you the Latter Day Saint minister that lives over here on the hill?"

I replied "Yes, sir."

He said, "I have a question to ask you. Do you believe in prophets?"

I said, "Certainly, we believe in prophets. Don't you?"

"No, sir," he said, "I don't believe in prophets."

And I suggested: "Certainly then, you have not the church of God, because the Bible said God put prophets in his church. We might begin on that point."

"Well, the Bible says John was the last prophet."

"Where does it say so? The Bible says Christ was the greatest prophet that ever lived and he was after John."

"Oh, well, he was an exception to the rule."

"Well, how about the prophets that came from Jerusalem to Antioch? How about the prophets at Antioch through whom the Lord spoke and called Barnabas and Saul and put them in official positions in the church? How about the two prophets spoken of in the 14th chapter of Acts? How about the numerous prophets in the New Testament?"

He could make no answer. All he could say was that he simply did not believe there were to be any prophets in the church after John; that John was the last prophet.

However, this photograph, as we are calling it, shows us that there were apostles, prophets, seventies, bishops, elders, evangelists, priests and teachers, and deacons. There is the organization as we see it established in the New Testament Scriptures, not in one chapter but through a succession of the writings of these men describing what transpired to-day, to-morrow, and continuing through the history of God's dealings with them from the starting out on this definite mission and putting it in working order, we can see this work continuously going on. That is why we have contended for years and years that that church, if it is ever on this earth in an organized form should be after the pattern given us by the God of heaven through the greatest teacher the world has ever had, that we call the Carpenter of Nazareth, who built his church, and there are offices in that church to be filled with living men.

BUILDING ACCORDING TO THE PATTERN

I have a quotation here from the ninth chapter of Hebrews, fifth verse. I wish to say in this connection, to show you my reason for making the statement, we are told that one man stood on this earth and was permitted to see the order of his government in heaven, and that man's name was Moses. And he was told when he came down from the mount that he should build all things according to the pattern shown him. And what did he do? We find a description in the fourth chapter of Exodus and the first chapter of Numbers. He put into the church first two counselors. God told him the burden of the carrying on of this work was too great for him alone, and he told him to select two men, and those men were to stand with him, and they were as the three pillars. But in these two references that I have given you there is also the statement that the twelve were put in the church, and you will find their names just as plain as you will find the names of the twelve given in the tenth chapter of Matthew.

But the important thing about this picture to my mind is the fact that Moses saw the order of God's government in heaven, and he was told that when he built he should build after that pattern, and if you will turn to the third chapter of Hebrews you will find that "Moses was faithful in building his house," and Christ was faithful in building his house" after the pattern of the living God. There we find that Moses built a house, and that Christ built a house, and they are called the Church of God—one the church in the wilderness, one the church in the days when Paul was writing, and we see the three pillars in both; and we see them putting the seventy in the church as well as apostles.

There in Numbers 11: 16, 17, God told Moses:

Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.

He selected seventy of the elders of Israel, and God came down in their midst and poured out his Spirit upon the seventy men that were brought before him, and we see it says that they prophesied, and did not cease even in the church in the wilderness.

I said a while ago that I have a photograph before us to-night of the church Jesus Christ builded, that is, the New Testament church. Go back into the Old Testament and you will find that Moses built after the same pattern because that was the same that Moses saw in the heaven, and we find that church in the wilderness had the twelve, the presidency, the seventy, the elders, and high priests, and these various officers that we find named in the New Testament, because Christ saw that same order, and that same pattern is given, and more particularly presented I believe in the New Testament than in the Old Testament. In the days of Jesus Christ upon earth we see the church begin to rise and flourish. God endowed it with wonderful power from the heavens above, and put in it the power to prepare and call men to the ministry, placing the prophets in the church, and filling all those offices. And when some were killed or dropped out, God spoke through the prophets, and called other men to fill those offices that these other men had filled before they were killed. The first one was Judas, who betrayed the Christ, who went out and killed himself after he had sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver. That left a vacancy in the quorum of twelve. The apostles counseled over the matter and prayed, and here is the prayer; "Thou God, who knowest the hearts of all men, show us whether of these two thou hast chosen" and they set two men there before them, and the lot fell on Matthias, seemingly the Lord directing that this man should be chosen, and he was numbered with the eleven and the quorum was full.

And we find if we go on through the New Testament that others were called, as for instance Barnabas and Saul. We find Appolos later on, which shows to us conclusively that this was the order of his government, and that that is the way he proposed to continue and perpetuate his institution called his church.

HOW JOSEPH SMITH FOLLOWED THE PATTERN

In the nineteenth century this church that we are representing here to-night was established, and to the astonishment of the world, as his instrument for his work he called a mere boy, Joseph Smith. Is it not a strange thing that he fell upon the very same pattern that Moses had in the wilderness, and that Jesus established two thousand years ago? Is it not a strange thing that that young man, claiming to be a prophet of God, claiming that God had spoken to him as he did in ancient times, began the organization of a church? There were many great institutions with many thousands and hundreds of thousands of members around about him in the world, and he begins a church. Why? He had the photograph, and God gave him direction how to follow the pattern, and strange as it may seem to my hearers to-night, that boy that claimed to be directed of God, put in the church, apostles, after the ancient pattern, the prophets, the seventy, then bishops and so these different officers were put in the church under the spirit and influence of the inspiration he claimed to have in his mission work in this dispensation. It has met all the scrutiny, the criticisms, the objections of all the powers that could be arrayed against it, and persecution as in ancient times, since the very inception of this work. Sometimes it has lulled for a little time, but it has been in the world. It is in the world to-day, and as long as the Devil is not bound it will continue to be. We do not expect anything else, but the work is moving on, and next spring you people who are in Lamoni, or in its regions, coming to our General Conference will see the photograph that you have seen many times here. You will see on this platform the Presidency, the Twelve, the evangelical ministers, and you will see the high priests, and the elders, and the bishops, and the seventy, and these different officers, just as this book calls for.

How did that boy ever find this out? There were giant minds who had been building for centuries, but this boy did not claim that he built in his wisdom. He says he built in the wisdom of that Spirit and strength that God gives and that puts the members in the church. He did not claim to even put the members in the church himself. He claimed to be directed of God, and he fell upon the same pattern that the Master followed two thousand years ago when he said, "I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

THE REASON—PERFECTING OF THE SAINTS

I started to read a reference, so I will do it now before I close:

Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things. And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers.—Ephesians 4: 9-11.

It tells what he gave them for: "the perfecting of the saints." Here is the material. Here is every member being put in the church. Here is the means, he says, to bring that material to a state of perfection. Shall we say we are going to throw away the means and reach perfection? That would be folly. Listen to the next verse, it tells how long they are to be in the church: "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Your Sunday school boys here, eight, ten, or twelve years old, many of them can tell you where to find scripture like the one we have just read. God set these officers in the church for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. That is what it says. Don't you suppose God and Christ knew what kind of a ministry they wanted? Don't you suppose he knew what he put them in the church for, what work each department of his church should carry out in order to carry out the proper edification in spiritual things? "For the edifying of the body of Christ, which is set in the church, until we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Look at the next verse, "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."

So there were winds of doctrine blowing then when Christ was on earth and he said "I will build my church." There were churches around him in the world, and they came to him with questions, and tried to tangle him with these, but they were made to say, No man ever spake as this man. We never met anyone like this. They could not meet him with arguments, and they saw a power he possessed away beyond anything human, anything on this earth. There was nothing like it. And he conferred power upon his men and set them in the church to stay there until we should all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

If you take people of the world and develop them to full-grown men and women in a spiritual development of character so that they can stand side by side with that wonderful character of Jesus Christ, you will utilize the means that he put in the church to do that. And this is the picture as we have to present it to you people to-night. I hope I have said sufficient to convince you, to make the point clear, that this is his government, and this is his plan, this is the course of procedure, to carry on his church work here in this world.

I am identified with the people to-night who believe in the ancient order of things being carried out, that God's will may be done, and that people may be educated and developed to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. That when he comes, and his divine kingdom of heaven is established upon the earth, and that kingdom is made one universal kingdom, and Jesus Christ will reign as Lord of lords, and King of kings, and his people be worthy to stand with him and have a place in that kingdom triumphant, is my prayer.

THE PHYSICAL SIDE---Part 2

BY M. F. GOWELL

We are commanded to be cheerful in our warfare. Faith is a healthy mental attitude. Hope is, likewise. We are saved by faith and also by hope. Charity, or love, is constructive. Anger, fear, worry, etc., poison the blood, and are destructive to health. Faith cannot operate effectively and permanently where ignorance and transgression prevail. This delicate and complicated machine cannot be kept in perfect order without thought. Prevention is the need; less of cure, either by doctors or elders. Our pride should not be so much in healing; it should be more in keeping well. Our reliance should not be so much in miracle. It should be in our own intelligence, aided by the inspiration of the Almighty, according to the necessity. We should not create the necessity, by carelessness, ignorance, etc. Our eating and drinking and sleeping; our working and resting, all should be regulated with an eye single to the glory of God. The cure of spiritual sin is largely within ourselves, or is dependent on our attitude toward the gospel. The gospel will save no one independent of the individual's attitude towards it; it must be correct towards the whole law. It is not intended of God that we should be spiritual giants and physical weaklings, or altogether lacking and neglectful along the physical line. The school system is defective as regards physical culture and training for sound, healthy bodies, wherein the mind may have its proper action, and intelligence its best manifestation. We need culture halls in our minds at least, and physical culture may be last and least, but it should, and must come. We have proved some things; we are proving other things. We can write from the standpoint of experience and limited study. We hope to know more and say more along this neglected line, for suffering humanity's sake, in the church. We have been astonished at our own slowness to perceive. We are not proud of prevailing ignorance, sickness, and reliance wholly on cure.

We have the cure within ourselves for all the afflictions of the body by a correct mental attitude toward all the means of prevention and cure. We can and must do more for ourselves. God has done too much, rather than too little for us. We need not more revelation, or more cure. We need a stronger disposition to obey, and the physical side will not be neglected as it has been, but receive its due consideration and attention. It's a long way back to where Adam left the track of perfect health, and the physical side needs to be thought of. Those who sit in the seat of the scornful, or lie on the bed of ignorance, carelessness, thoughtlessness, and disobedience, will not at least set the pace, or be the first to arrive. Fads need not be run after, nor hobbies ridden; but no one need fear to think and act intelligently, if the beaten track, or the broad road of pleasure seekers through appetite and indulgence, is departed from.

Hunger demands all the sixteen elements of which the body is composed, and must have in proper proportion, in proper amount; at proper intervals, according to age, occupation, etc. Science, experience and study, are demonstrating truth, temperance and righteousness, health and happiness, as well as revelation. He that would follow the good Shepherd may "go in and out and find pasture."

Appetite needs to be distinguished from hunger. The demand of the latter should be supplied, the cravings of the former refused. The craving for manufactured sugar, candy, etc., may exist to the harm of child or adult; to the injury of liver, kidneys, etc., but the hunger for natural sweet as honey, dates, raisins, figs, etc., may and should be satisfied. Nature or real hunger, demands a certain amount, but an excess overtaxes the digestive organs and the entire body, as an insufficient amount starves and weakens.

One may experiment for many: the experience of all be profitable to many. It depends not only on the one or the ones along the physical line as well as the spiritual. It depends on the many. Neither God nor man can help those not inclined to help themselves. We can do much more for ourselves than we have thought or known, or realized. God is willing that men should seek and find knowledge and wisdom inside and outside of his church. It is our privilege to give the greater values; the best gifts. But there are good gifts as well as perfect gifts and these come down from above, Christ being the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. If there are dietitians, physical culturists for health, etc., that have sought and found truth in nature, shall we refuse it because not by revelation? Then let us reject and refuse to use the telephone, the steam engine, the gasoline engine, the sewing machine, the mowing machine, the reaper and binder, and all electrical discovery, because the inventors were not Latter Day Saints.

The Lord has said that we are "qualifiedly dependent on our Gentile neighbors." (Doctrine and Covenants 128:8.) We do not know it all. We have much to learn for our profit, mentally and physically, from other sources than the channel and powers of revelation make accessible. They make accessible the otherwise inaccessible. The things that are accessible through Gentile and natural sources are for us to profit by if we will. We do not lead in all things. We may yet lead in music, art, poetry, science or true knowledge in its various branches. We can afford to follow where we cannot lead, or to exchange truth for truth, spiritual knowledge for natural or physical. May God bless his people and prosper his truth in its whole and entire application to life—physical as well as spiritual and we be found neither cranks nor fanatics; neither bigots nor ignoramuses; neither weaklings physically nor spiritually, but with sound minds and renewed or healthy bodies rightly represent, and intelligently and wisely glorify God.

We have a right to learn from every source. We have no right to dissipate our energies in mere amusements for amusement's sake, or pleasure for pleasure's sake along any line of appetite or indulgence, but when we seek the economization or conservation of time and energy and the utilization of means to ends without waste and without lust; without mere pleasure in view, but allow duty to be our pleasure in all ways and respects, Satan and disease and death will lose power, and life and health claim its victory, appreciated because earned. The price has been paid.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE QUICKENING OF RELIGIOUS FEELING AMONG ENGLISH WRITERS AS A RESULT OF THE WAR

One of the by-products of the war in England has been a notable increase in the amount of writing devoted to religious subjects; and the Reverend Doctor Henry Jowett, when asked by a New York Times interviewer to give his impressions of a recent visit to England, laid special stress on this fact. Doctor Jowett confessed that the war is having a depressing effect on religious institutions in England. Church membership has declined, and attendance at church services and at prayer meetings is poor. But he felt encouraged, he said, when he looked outside of the church establishments at the national life as a whole. There was a wonderful spirit of solidarity and of unselfishness, and millions of young men are ready to lay down their lives for their country. He continued:

It is not altogether without suggestion that men and women are resorting to Spiritualism in their groping after assurance. Sir Oliver Lodge has lost his boy Ramond in battle and he has given that boy's name as the title to his latest book, two-thirds of which is given up to the messages that the living father says he has received from his dead son. And he declares himself as sure of those messages as he is of any fact of science. And Conan Doyle has declared his faith in communications between the living and the dead.

Doctor Jowett went on to name other English writers who, he felt, were making real contributions to the literature of religion in its largest sense:

Some of the loftiest articles I have read during the war have been in the leader columns of the secular press. I mean lofty in the sense of being highly spiritual. Articles of the Times, the Daily Press, the Daily Chronicle, the Manchester Guardian, and the Glasgow Herald have been suffused with spirituality.

And besides, there is also a strangely new note in writers who have vast audiences of readers and whose words are read with the regard which is paid to talent and genius and conspicuous endowment. Horatio Bottomley, editor of John Bull, for illustration. There is a paper of enormous circulation of not the most reputable kind. It once publicly charged me with holding shares in saloons at the very time I was parading as a temperance advocate. Of course there was not a vestige of truth in it, but it indicated the character of the paper. But now, during this war, Horatio Bottomley has found his soul. It would be truer to say he has found his God and he is writing articles of an extraordinary character in which there is something of the color and glow of religion.

Herbert G. Wells has not had much to do with religion, but what does he write now? Let me quote a little: "Religion is the first thing and the last thing, and until a man has found God and been found by God, he begins at no beginning, he works to no end. He may have his friendships, his partial loyalties, his scraps of honor. But all these things fall into place, and life falls into place only with God. Only with God. God who fights through men against blind force and night and nonexistence—who is the end, who is the meaning."

And who would have imagined that the calm and radiant presence of the Lord would have been seen in the pages of Bernard Shaw? Amid all the bitter irony and satire of Shaw's thought and spirit, amid all his irreverence, the strange and pathetic figure of the Savior has recently appeared for a moment. "I am ready to admit," says Mr. Shaw, "I am ready to admit that, after contemplating the world of human nature for nearly sixty years, I see no way out of the world's misery but the way which would have been found by Christ's will if he had undertaken the work of a modern, practical statesman."

To these and other signs Doctor Jowett points as evidence that the Christian faith is being questioned and tested in the crucible of a fierce and tremendous experience. The end is not yet. "I believe—with all my heart I believe"—he says, "that the message of the church of God will emerge from the furnace purified and refined as by fire, and with a reality and authority which will more than ever command the reverent attention and homage of the world."—Current Opinion, February, 1917.

POVERTY

The tragic stage of the age long human drama is crowded with the ghosts of multitudes so poor they never hoped. The past is proof: The history of poverty, the history of the poverty of the multitude, proves that poverty is a prohibition on the rapid progress of the individual and of the human race.

Poverty has always been ugly—and it is ugly now.

Poverty has always been cruel—and it is cruel now.

Poverty has always been deadly—and it is deadly now.

Poverty has always been a disaster—and it is a disaster now.

To point to a few exceptions as proof to the contrary, to point to a few exceptions and bunglingly overlook the hundreds of millions whom poverty has strangled, is to be so stupidly (or viciously) illogical, so clumsily ignorant of the logical rules of scientific thinking as to be unworthy of contempt.

Away with this philosophy which Dives recommended to Lazarus.—Kirkpatrick.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

An Interesting Series

In our columns in HERALD issue of December 6, last, appeared the introductory chapter of a series of articles on social service which we had asked Doctor Harrington to prepare for our readers. An unavoidable interruption has occurred in this series, but we are glad to present the second installment in this issue. They are being prepared by Sister Berenice Russell, one of the very well-qualified nurses at the Independence Sanitarium, at Doctor Harrington's request and we understand under the supervision of that very busy physician.

This phase of work possibly to our women must only be undertaken with great tact and delicacy. To help unfortunate people about us in a way which succeeds in the object sought for and in the uplift desired, requires special qualifications in the one who seeks to minister. Much discussion is going on in the papers of to-day concerning the manner in which some society women are taking up this work—as a sort of “fad,” and a thing to boast of before their associates. The true sense of service seems to have been lost sight of in an effort to obtain acclaim for what is done! Is it not a form of good doing with the spirit of the same lacking? Can such deeds have permanent value? We think not.

So we would beseech our women to move carefully in these paths, seeking the help and advice of the officers of our church where it can be of assistance, and following that advice when given. One of the greatest beauties about the plan of our church work as established in the latter days, is its perfection of detail—its adequacy to meet every condition and every emergency. The duties of the men placed in charge of the temporal affairs of the church are plainly marked out, and when coupled with a spirituality of vision, they become the very fiber and essence of this social service to mankind. It is not only a matter of dollars and cents, as some may have thought, but it reaches deeper, into the very homes of our people and seeks to beautify and sweeten the conditions which need changing upward. Our women can do much, as our bishops are pointing out, to help them in reaching and eliminating unfavorable conditions, for God has given to many of his handmaidens a peculiarly valuable sense of delicacy and sympathy which soothes while it heals, encourages while it criticizes, stimulates while it points our errors, and inspires where it accuses.

Many fine books are at hand, the reading of which will prepare our women the more fully and intelligently to enter upon these services of uplift—an uplift which, if it fails to act spiritually as well as temporally, has missed its highest expression. We here call attention to some books of this nature which may be obtained through the Herald Publishing House, for the prices named.

Henderson's Modern Methods of Charity, $3.50.

Devine's Misery and its Causes, 50 cents.

Devine's Principles of Relief, $2.

Spahr's America's Working People, $1.25.

Social Service, Chapter Two

“Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul
May keep the path, but will not reach the goal;
While he who walks in love may wander far,
Yet God will bring him where the blessed are.”

The spirit of service to the sick is not new. Indeed, the care of the sick has been an unflinching expression of human kindness since the dawn of Christianity.

Florence Nightingale's demonstration of the possibilities of nursing, followed by the success of her coworkers and disciples, drew widespread attention to the possibilities as an opening for woman's work, not as a career in the ordinary sense—for of material advantage it had none to offer—but as affording an opportunity for the relief of suffering and the service of humanity.

This appealed very strongly to a group of earnest women of culture and refinement, who from 1870 onward carried on pioneer labors. Victims of sin and suffering were sought in their wretchedness and served with tender, sympathetic devotion. Throughout the history of waiting on the sick the spiritual welfare has claimed the attention of clergy, and no form of care for the sick to-day is without their ministrations. Volunteer committees of women have for many years visited the sick and extended their friendly offices. Busy doctors and nurses have done countless unrecorded acts of kindness not demanded by the requirements of their professional duties.

The sick one's spiritual needs, and his dependence upon sympathy and affectionate interest, have long been recognized, both in theory and practice.

There are, however, some fundamental differences between these attentions and the social service which we are to consider.

It is difficult to measure how much the work of the visiting nurse in all the varied services has contributed to the social service movement. Though trained in a hospital, she found visiting nursing so different from what she had learned in the hospital wards, that she was more and more in need of social knowledge, and she has been forced to add much social knowledge to her medical training.

She attempts now to teach nursing care to improve hygienic conditions, and to aid and encourage the patients by kindness and helpful advice.

Tuberculous patients, children, and others receive hygienic instruction. As a result of her struggle with such problems as tuberculosis and infant mortality, she has also helped to call attention to the common field of the medical and social work.

First, we must understand the patient's life and something of his standards of living; aid the education; learn how the poor man lives, works and thinks; what his problems are; what burdens he must bear. We must learn the intimate relationship between the ills of the physical body and the home environment. The poor man loves his vice as truly as does the rich man, and will not change at the offhand suggestion of a stranger. You must win, first, the confidence; next the love of the poor patient, and then prove to him the sincerity of interest and intention.

The social service worker seeks to rally to the disastrous social condition which disturbs and cripples human lives. Organization for service in the kind of homes to be served is the first step.

We must realize the possibilities of developing workers in the home, under the direction of graduate supervisors before we will make any headway into the problem.

We need women who are big enough to meet the difficulties that arise; who will work with other people whole-heartedly and cheerfully, and who care little who gets the credit, so their community may have the kind of help in sickness that conditions demand.

If we are not open to suggestion, we are told it is a sign that we have outlived our usefulness.

The keynote of good health is cleanliness, while the chief cause of disease is filth. Every woman who receives the knowledge of hygiene should not only practice cleanliness, but should teach it as well. It is not easy, however, always to know what one should do, but the golden rule will help us out of our difficulties more than anything else.

Orioles are Busy

Just think of the rapidly increasing numbers of our Oriole girls, scattered throughout this broad land, and of the unity and comradeship which is being established among them by means of this splendid organization sponsored and supported by the Woman's Auxiliary of our church! What a wonderful bond of union it is, and how perfectly it serves to cement the interests of our young girls to each other, and to our well-loved church organization! When they meet in conferences of district, or stake or general church, it is as if they had always known each other—this sense of fellowship and of identity of purpose and endeavor so keen and powerful.

In a recent talk with a bright thoughtful woman, not of our faith, but one whose whole life is devoted to helping young people to a sense of their responsibility to God, we explained to her our Oriole movement. It seemed to attract her instant attention and admiration and she remarked, "I call that a very, very progressive movement for a church to have adopted, for it serves to keep your young people within your own influence, and provides for their every need. Our young girls go out and join the Camp Fire girls, and our boys become Boy Scouts, but you have provided for them under your own supervision, which I think is a fine showing." We were glad to tell her that steps were being taken to organize a similar movement among our boys but we regretted that we could not tell her that it had become a realization,—a living factor among us. Let us hope it will not be long in materializing, and that soon we may find in our own church circles a place for our boys to develop and exercise that peculiar "gang spirit" they all experience at some time or another, under the careful guidance of men of spiritual mold, who shall, with consecration, consider the work as divinely appointed and as soul satisfying as is that of proselyting. "A penny saved is a penny earned," is one of the "thrift" maxims of the age; is not a boy saved in our midst the equal of a man saved from the outside?

Twitters from the Oriole Nests

From an eastern city where four circles have recently been organized: "At our last business meeting, two weeks ago, after business was over we had a spread which was enjoyed very much. Several who were not Orioles were invited to the meeting and among them were some who are not members of our church. They spoke very highly of the Oriole work for its social as well as its educational value. I am now planning lectures and practical lessons for the girls on domestic science, nursing, dressmaking and public speaking. We are very fortunate in having girls in the circles who know women who have specialized in these lines and some of them, though they do not belong to the church, have expressed their willingness to give us their help along their special lines. The branch officers have asked the Oriole girls to give a program the last Sunday morning of next month, and we expect to do it."

A local superintendent writes: "The older circle celebrated their anniversary by having a banquet. We had a very nice program, followed by the supper. Last night the girls met at my house and the priests of the branch paid us a visit. This gave them a chance to meet some of the girls who are boarding and could not be visited by the priests otherwise."

From another large eastern city: "The Oriole work has a good start in ——— and the girls are very much enthused. To be the first songster is quite an incentive. Last week we had a talk on "The greatness of little things," which was followed by an interesting discussion, in which all participated. Next week Doctor ——— will speak on 'First aid.' We meet once a week, and our meetings are planned six weeks in advance. These city girls surely enjoyed the day which was spent hiking in the country."

From a circle which we are watching with interest: "The Oriole work has done one good thing here and that is, it has drawn our girls closer together than they have ever been before. Two of our girls work in the mills here and do not belong to the church."

An Oriole program: "The girls gave their program in the church two weeks ago and certainly did fine. Some of the members of the branch who were in attendance said they felt the same spirit present which they had felt in prayer meetings. Some girls took part who had never attempted to do anything of the kind before."

The boys are invited: "Last week the girls gave a party to which they invited the boys of the Sunday school. The Woman's Auxiliary gave the Orioles permission to sell a few articles at their bazaar, provided they (the girls) made them by hand. The girls arranged a very pretty booth and made about fifteen dollars."

From a missionary: "Please send me full instructions as to how to organize an Oriole circle. I believe the Oriole movement to be a timely one—an essentiality—for the welfare and protection of our girls in these times when there is so much encountered that is calculated to draw them away from the gospel."

A branch president takes a hand: "We are pleased to receive a letter from a sister in Iowa who says that "our branch president is urging the organization of a circle here and we are writing for instructions." To this we replied: "We are pleased that your branch president has taken up the work and is pushing it. It is an example for others of the priesthood. No doubt he recognizes in the work the element of service to the church which it suggests to the girls. Upon the women depends, largely, the redemption of Zion in that pure, healthy and wholesome atmospheres must be maintained within the homes of Zion and this will depend upon our girls of to-day who will be our women of to-morrow.

"And her work and influence will not be felt in the home alone for there will be a demand and a great need for thoughtful, intelligent women in the church work. There is nothing more discouraging and disheartening than to find that opportunities come to us for service later in life and we have utterly failed to prepare ourselves for intelligent and consecrated service.

"You will readily see that the Oriole work provides for spiritual as well as intellectual preparation, can you not? But along with this we hope to provide for and encourage the love of pure, wholesome pleasure with good companions, and directed by some consecrated woman."

It would have pleased us to have given the names with these items but as they were culled from letters we did not feel at liberty to do so.
MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

Service Versus Vanity

She wished for beauty, and she robed her form
In finest silks. She saw no harm
In stinted gowns, and graceful limbs exposed.
By every charm her vanity proposed
To be the cynosure of many eyes,
And draw admiring men like swarming flies.

They came to worship at her shrine of flesh,
Attracted by the crimsoned lips, and blush
Of cheeks made rosy red; by penciled brows;
By breast more frank than modesty allows;
And some she held enthralled with eyes
In which a sly suggestion, worldly wise,
Found bold expression; something vague, unnamed,
Yet promising too much to lie unclaimed;
Thus dangling men upon a high-charged wire
Which, soon or late, must in its hidden fire
Consume the victims drawn within its mesh,
And sear the temptress in both soul and flesh.

She was an empress, but her empire lay
Upon the sands of selfish vanity.
Assailed by winds of hate, by fires of passion,
And envy's withering blast, in deadly fashion,
It fell, and left her lying prone
Upon the waste of misspent energy, alone.

Then, after men and women of the earth
Had cast her off, God saw the sterling worth
Beneath the ugly surface, and a thought
Heaven-born and with divinest beauty fraught
Took root within her weary self-fagged brain:
The thought of service! Planted not in vain,
It grew and blossomed into firm desire
To pilot others safely past the mire
Awaiting woman's feet; reflecting thus
In other lives that superloveliness
God meant for womankind, that purity
Of thought, and wealth of chastity
That forms a passport to earth's honor roll
And, methinks, a key to heavenly streets of gold.

The years have passed. Behold her, born anew!
Loved by unnumbered souls, scorned by but few;
Bearing in face and figure that supremest beauty
That comes with noble thought, and well-done duty;
Happy in making life both big and broad;
A child of service, and a child of God!

"I am surely pleased to see the progress that the HERALD has made of late. All of our church publications seem to take on a new zeal."—James Baillie.

"I regard the HERALD as a necessity in my religious warfare and work, and pity the Saint who cannot or will not take it. Every department is valuable, and ably edited, and the general workmanship and arrangement is excellent. I only regret that every family in our branch does not take the faithful HERALD."—Leonard S. Seeking the Truth

A "MUTUAL" MARRIAGE SERVICE

BANDON, OREGON, November 11. To the Editor of The Journal—The editorial page of The Journal of November 11 contained an article from the Pittsburg Press relative to the decision of the Episcopal Church to postpone the elimination of the word obey from their marriage service; which furnishes another proof that some of the churches are still lingering in the shadows. I quite agree with the writer that the change is inevitable, from the fact that the very life of the church depends absolutely upon the acceptance of the ethics of a higher civilization. In the earlier days the church domineered by the power of might, and even in the household this was considered the rule of right. But from the beginning it was false—a misconstruction of the eternal law of right—which resulted in a cruel and heartless submission of the weak to the strong.

I should like to call attention to another marriage ceremony which reads as follows:

"You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives."

This marriage ceremony bespeaks present-day ethics, together with the highest conception of the moral law, and no doubt will prove adequate until the end of time. It is hardly necessary to call attention to the principles of equal rights as set forth and that monogamy, in the strictest sense, is the law.

Strange as it may seem to those unacquainted with the facts, this ceremony was given to the church by Joseph Smith, the prophet, and is still used in the marriage services of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church. Quite contrary to the opinion of many, this is the only marriage ceremony ever authorized by Joseph Smith or adopted by the church during his life. Subsequent to his death, however, Brigham Young led a portion of the church membership to Utah, where plural marriage was adopted and this marriage service relegated to oblivion.

SAMUEL WOOD.

The above letter, which found its way into the people's column of the daily Oregon Journal of November 18, 1916, is included herewith to show that another truth of the restored gospel has been recognized by the world and that the world is now calling the attention of a great Christian church to the necessity of doing likewise.

The marriage service of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church, although adopted over eighty years ago and at a time when the general trend of thought was in altogether different channels from that of the great mass of humanity to-day, is up to the very minute in every respect, containing all the solemn dignity of a divine institution yet conforming to the last demand of a fastidious age which is just awakening to the real greatness of woman and to her natural indisputable rights of equal liberty with man.

The principle of democracy which is characteristic of the angel's message and which is everywhere asserting itself at the present time, together with the fact that humanity is seeking fundamental truth as never before in the history of the world, renders a review of some of the lasting truths which are found in the "old, old paths," and after which the world is now seeking, of more than passing interest to those who are seeking the kingdom or endeavoring to establish his righteousness.

NOT A "SUPERFICIAL AGE"

To dub this a "superficial age," as was done by a writer in Collier's which appeared in the HERALD for September 13, 1916, is, in our opinion, the result of a very shallow conception of human activities at the present time. Had the writer taken into consideration what lies behind the moving picture machine—the profound knowledge of the arts and sciences, the deep research and inexhaustible energy necessary to continuously present a picture of the world, with all of its tragedies, its greatness, its pomp and splendor, at the very door of the humblest peasant, or wherein lies the power that makes possible the high speed of the race, he would have told a different story.

Men are more disposed to seek the truth and follow the facts than ever before, and that this generation is outstripping and leaving far behind the accumulated knowledge of many centuries is the result of clearer conception, and a more practical application of the universal law, and of those principles of eternal truth which must inevitably obtain in the world contemporaneously with the kingdom of God, forming as they do the base of a higher civilization which is essential to the complete establishment of a perfect and efficient church government.

The philosophers, sages, and prophets of past ages have diligently sought the truth, but as a result of environment, an atmosphere wherein false philosophy and superstition predominated, they have been regarded with a clouded view. And when we quote them this fact is allowed. Christendom no longer holds seriously to the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, and when the Bible is quoted this fact also is allowed.

This does not detract from the divine purpose nor reflect upon the integrity of the inspired writers of the Bible, but rather shows that while the source of divine knowledge is infallible the medium through which it is transmitted is faulty.

The taint of false philosophy is almost everywhere discernible in the early writings of men, and the world's awakening to the truth is not alone the result of profound research but also that of the natural tendency of mankind to catch and assimilate a ray of divine light which, when flashed, not only penetrates deeper than the myths, traditions, and superstitions, of the fathers, but affords a short cut to truths which otherwise are only, if indeed at all, approached by the weary laborious routes of exclusive mortal effort.

Shall we say that the world would naturally incline towards the truth in the superficial age? No, not in a superficial age.

BEACON LIGHTS

To the extent that our fathers followed the truth we may safely follow them, but when we are given a fuller view of the things they but vaguely saw we are no longer justified in following them, for "upon us is the responsibility of seeking the law."

However, we have not advanced so far that we may not profit by a closer acquaintance with those beacons who have ever lighted the weary footsteps of the wayfarer on the great highway of the race.

Take Moses for instance, his sincere devotion to a noble cause, his whole-hearted patriotism, his profound philosophy and brilliant statesmanship, nay, the spirit of his law is still the schoolmaster of all nations and is far in advance of those among us who have their faces towards the sun.

But why refer to the recent Moses when out of the early dawn comes the story of a country and a city whose builder and maker was God—a people who had applied the law of God's kingdom to God's earth and had received the reward. To-day there are millions of weary toiling creatures who have never heard of Enoch and know nothing of the angel's message, yet they have a vague conception of a perfect state. The glimmer of the taper has entered their benighted lives and in their dark and dank hovels where the moans go up the hope of a millennium springs.

We are not merely living in the present, and that this truth is seriously contemplated by those whose destiny it is to form the mold in which future generations will be cast is the fact that there never was a time in the history of present nations when there were such earnest and conscientious efforts to solve the problems of social injustice, with its accompanying disappointments and pain, and in this move many of the most prominent business men and powerful individuals of our time are united. No philosophical truth shall go unheeded nor an economic stone unturned until the beautiful ideals of these reformers, whose names are legion, shall have been accomplished. "Strong souls and high endeavor, the world needs them now," for the "Prince of light still battles with the powers of darkness," and "Beauty still lies imprisoned and iron wheels go over the good and true and beautiful that might spring from human lives."

This social and moral reformation is destined to sweep the wide world, gaining momentum and power as the millennium year approaches; were it not so the church could never accomplish its purpose, nay, this is the purpose of the church—the salvation of the world. Moreover, the church must draw its recruits from the world and before we can have a Saint of God we must first have a moral man.

HIS WORDS ARE "WRITTEN IN THE HEARTS OF MEN"

At a time centrally located in the annals of men came that individual whose supernal virtue will ever melt the heart of stone. The true friend of all humanity, whose burning denunciation of the Scribes and Pharisees, the unscrupulous grafters of his time, was the principal offense for which he was led back of Jerusalem and crucified. But he still lives among us—ever a guiding star to mortal beings. His words are more widely quoted to-day than ever before. They are quoted, not so much to establish creeds and confessions as to appeal to the good that is in humanity with a view of making the world better.

The philosophy of Christ is an appeal to the higher intelligence. It is also a mighty protest against all wrongs. It teaches that man is the equal of man. It condemns man's inhumanity to man and incorporates the principle of a universal brotherhood. The whole theme of his gospel is based upon those principles of fundamental justice which are intended to regenerate the race. It is not confined to written creeds, it is broader than the world, as high as heaven, and penetrates to the heart and soul of the universe.

The world to-day comprehends more fully the spirit of Christ's teachings than ever before, and so long as mankind seek the truth, so long as individuals remain whose pole star is justice, the words of that just one will ever encourage them to nobler deeds, for his words are true and powerful and they are "written in the hearts of men."

BANDON, OREGON.

SAMUEL WOOD.

The Sunday school delegates from a certain western district are instructed that should the proposition come up again to establish a chair of religious education at Graceland College, they are to vote "yes."

Lamoni, Iowa

On the 27th of this month there will be an election to decide by popular vote whether the town shall issue bonds to raise money to purchase the coliseum. Foreclosure proceedings of the building have been advertised and a number are advocating that it should be controlled by the town through its officials and made into a community center. There are a number of phases to this affair and have been from the erection of the building several years ago.

The stake conference and preceding conventions were quite well attended, but in common with the rest of the country, we were in the midst of a severe cold wave to begin with and shivering from the results of a blizzard on Sunday. There has been almost no rain and little snow at this place during the winter. Autos have been running constantly this winter.

The change in the sacrament hour from 2.30 p. m. to 10.45 a. m. each first Sunday has proven to be an excellent one. The attendance of children is greatly increased.

It was planned to hold a junior meeting in the basement of the church once a month, but the interest was so good and so many good subjects arose for presentation that it has been decided to hold them every second and fourth Sunday at 11 a. m. Topics of special interest to children are handled and the meeting divided into brief periods to avoid weariness. Music by the children and appropriate blackboard and other drawings are appreciated features.

Our pastor has recently addressed the Saints in two inspirational efforts on the text: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" The local services are well attended and also the meetings at the outlying places in the stake.

Health week is to be observed here the 18th, and in a series of four evening programs at the school building, there will be addresses by qualified physicians and teachers with appropriate music and readings.

The Woman's Auxiliary in its various departmental efforts is doing excellent work. Three divisions are sewing and mending for the Children's Home; the "mothers' meeting" is well attended and the problems are discussed with much profit to all. Some are studying Browning's poems in the English class. The Graceland College Patronesses are active in good works and the Mite Society meet as usual in their own building to sew and quilt, while the Booster Ladies handle a number of civic affairs commendably. There are fourteen women's clubs or societies in the community, and about half are organized primarily for community service in some of its branches while the other half are purely social.

The men are perhaps as well organized as the women, and much good work is being done. Quorums and classes of all kinds are well attended.

Everyone seems very busy, just as they are elsewhere. Some legitimate meeting to attend every evening, and sometimes several of them. The committees on General Conference are busy and will soon be making official announcements concerning the care of visitors.

From Here and There

A. M. Chase and wife have moved to Lamoni, from Kirksville, Missouri, and intend to locate here.

Letters from all parts of the North tell of exceptionally bad weather this winter. Very cold, much snow and roads and railroads blocked. In Michigan the coal shortage even affected the railroads in places.

The church building at Lincoln, Nebraska, caught fire on February 4, and a damage totaling five hundred dollars resulted.

A. H. Mills, in charge of the general orchestra work of the church was in Lamoni a few days this week on business connected with his work. He hopes to have several general musical numbers presented by the general orchestra at the coming General Conventions and Conference.

"Summer weather here, last week we had a few days hot weather, but as a rule the weather has been most pleasant," writes Paul M. Hanson, from Australia. He says Sister Alma C. Barmore is in the hospital at Balmain, having undergone a serious operation the previous week.

A. M. Boomer of Marion, Michigan, reports that E. M. Burt and Waldo Kapnick recently baptized two in a series of meetings at that place and much good was done. Several have gone to other parts to seek employment. He reports the death of Sister Andrew Walters who has suffered for some time.

Elder J. Charles May recently closed a successful missionary effort at Burlington, Colorado, baptizing ten, effecting two new openings and organizing a Sunday school, writes F. B. Shumate, who concludes: "His charts, songs (both English and Tahitian) and guitar music are winners. He also does a great amount of studying."

Sometime ago the Religio at Nebraska City sent in the following, signed by its president and vice president, Robert Preston and M. T. Faunce, respectively:

Editors Herald: Accept the congratulations of the Nebraska City Zion's Religio-Literary Society on the form of the new HERALD, which we think a great improvement, and with its advent wish you the greatest possible degree of success. May God bless your efforts.

Have you joined the post card legion? We are pleased with the response to our request for postal contributions to this department. Several have written their commendation of the plan, and we believe the Here and There items will grow in popularity if it is well supported. Some religious publications that come to our desk have extensive telegraph news notes. All we ask is that you send brief mail notices of special news items and they will be promptly printed.

Several weeks ago the Saints graciously remembered Dorothy Eklie Miller of Xenia, Ohio, with a number of cards and letters. Sister Ellen Beatty of that place wishes to express the great appreciation this afflicted girl feels because of the kind remembrance of the Saints. She is poor and unable to reply to correspondence unless stamps are inclosed, in which case her neighbors are willing to write for her. She is still in a serious condition and may be required to pass through another operation.

In a letter about Sunday school work in San Antonio, Texas, Brother G. L. Rentfro says the Saints there have now organized a Sunday school composed of Mexican children and hope with the help of a Sister Menchaca to greatly extend its scope. He inquires if there is any Spanish literature available for their work, including songs. All the publishing house can offer at present is two brief tracts. Possibly some of our readers could help them, and if so, address Brother Rentfro at 649 Leal Street, San Antonio, Texas.

The following is from R. Etzenhouser: "Arthur W. Smith in February Autumn Leaves has scored high on valuable archæological matter—perhaps the most useful article we have had. Those who have seen views by lantern and otherwise can appreciate them as never before with this explanatory article illustrated by views taken by Brother Smith. Many should yet subscribe for Autumn Leaves to get this one. The office should reserve this number for subscribers if having a surplus. It is worth far more than the price of a year's subscription. Do it again, Brother Smith."

Being called a black sheep because he married a Latter Day Saint girl did not affect the faith of Elroy A. Wood, of Detroit, Michigan, who was baptized in 1914 and ordained a priest in September of that year. They moved to Detroit and were instrumental in helping build up the work in the neighborhood of what is now known as the Third Detroit Branch. Elder J. R. Grice has just concluded a four-week series of meetings there. He baptized twelve, leaving a number of others investigating. It is expected a new opening will be made soon in one of the suburbs of Detroit.

The church at Flint, Michigan, is being remodeled and enlarged, reports Mrs. Paul Belleisle, of that place. All services are so well attended this became necessary. The Saints are alive to their duties, and as a natural consequence they are prospering spiritually and financially, and many are being added to the fold. The musical work under the able direction of Zella Blasdell Harder and S. W. L. Scott is doing nicely, an increase in membership of over two hundred and fifty per cent being noted. The orchestra with Eugene Everhart is joining with the choir in fulfilling the Lord's suggestion to cultivate the gifts of music and of song."

Writing from Madison, Oklahoma, on the 10th, J. E. Vanderwood says: "At the present time I am at the home of Brother P. I. Kelley and family; they are consistent Latter Day Saints. The point at which I am preaching is about fifteen miles northwest of the Madison post office. I made a new opening here and have had good attendance and interest. The people are apparently quite interested in our message, and some are deeply impressed. It is my purpose to preach a constructive gospel, to build a house and then invite the people to move in, rather than to tear down the one they have and ask them to move out. I try to cause them to see and understand that we believe the whole gospel, and that Christ is our hero and ideal. I trust there will be fruit born of the seed I am sowing, and that much good will come of it."

Independence Stake

If State health officials, State universities and agricultural colleges can be interested in nation-wide "Baby Week," beginning May 1, with its lectures, exhibits of material, and the giving of personal advice, surely the Saints can afford to be interested in the welfare of the babies of the beginner departments of our Sunday schools throughout the church. And so they are: Doctor G. L. Harrington of the Sanitarium, is enthusiastic over the "Visiting nurses'" plan, by which the babies can be cared for by a trained nurse during the preaching services. On last Sunday a pleasant faced young lady, dressed in nurses' uniform, greeted the mothers present with a smile, and kindly informed them their babies could, at the morning service, be left safely in her charge in their room—the dining hall. At the Sunday school on February 11 there were present in this department fourteen classes, including the cradle roll, which was in charge of our sister, Mrs. Tessie Smith.

This sister is one of many young mothers who are consecrating their time and talent to the furtherance of the child welfare department, and not a few of our young ladies, four of whose names are mentioned below, engaged in choir work, are also preparing for efficient service in the educational course of study, kindergarten and story-telling. It is, no doubt, expected by the leading elders that the young people of the branches and isolated places, by study and reading of all good books, avail themselves of this higher culture movement, so that together with the younger Saints of the larger branches they may be enabled successfully to enter into this important part of church activities more fully than heretofore.

We call to mind the names of some of the workers here, among whom are our young sisters who are thoroughly in earnest, Misses Grace Taylor, Marcine Smith, Grace Koehler and Velma Brocaw, and others. Throughout the stake the Sunday school and Religio work is flourishing. On last Sunday our total attendance was 829; collection $13.58, and birthday offering $1.96. The beginner department with its efficient leaders, Sisters W. W. Smith, R. Etzenhouser and assistant officers, numbered 50, primaries and juniors 218, intermediates 115, seniors 89, normal 44, adults 128, teachers 88, officers 29, visitors 68.

Sister Tessie Weston, former superintendent of the beginner department, was a tactful, efficient officer, full of the loving, patient spirit that little children love and respect. She served about eight years and was ever faithful and true to her sacred trust. Then there is the sunshine band which is an organized body of little folks who meet once a month for musical and literary development, and their generous offerings, especially in the holiday season are well known to the poor and needy. Under the guidance of their president who is liberal minded, and loves children, for she has many of her own—our sister, Mrs. Ada Koehler, they on last Christmas presented to the old folks' home a fine Victrola, and their new "wooden brother" affords them much joy and comfort. So in this time of trouble when bombs and Zeppelins are exploding their direful notes of discord, they need this means of solace and our good Saints at Bonheim need a few records—disks of sacred, soulful music.

On last Sunday at the morning services, in charge of the Presidency and Bishopric, and evening, of Pastor Walter W. Smith, "Donations generous and genuine" were the words that expressed the gist of the sermon, text and theme. To tell it all in a line or two, the Kansas City Times of February 12, has it about right, namely: "At the Stone Church, yesterday morning, the congregation was asked to give $1,000 with which to improve the building. The response was more than $2,319."

At the opening service of the day, Brother Keir led in a fervent prayer, and was followed by earnest appeals for an entering into the accomplishment of a most important work begun long years ago, and which would lead to something of greater worth to the Saints. Stirring words were spoken by President F. M. Smith and Bishops Keir and Siegfried and Elder W. W. Smith. The afternoon meetings were strengthening, and two little ones were blessed by Bishop E. L. Kelley, assisted by those presiding, J. D. Shower and R. O. Self.

The branches of the stake were ministered to by Elders B. J. Scott and Doctor Joseph Luff at the Second Branch, M. H. Bond and A. H. Parsons at Walnut Park, and Brother C. Warren and J. C. Foss at the East Mission, also Elders George Jenkins and W. D. Bullard at Enoch Hill. There was an afternoon prayer service at the Sanitarium, and at Bonheim place, Brother J. D. Shower held forth to edification at night. May God bless all the work of his Saints throughout the church.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

From a British Soldier at Saloniki

There is a peculiar pleasure comes to me in remembering wherever we are that we still belong to the great brotherhood. I am writing with the main object of sincerely thanking my brothers and sisters for their devoted and unflinching prayers for those who have left home for a time to fight in the great war. Personally, I can testify to the great satisfaction that is felt by knowing that my brothers in England and elsewhere are praying to God to protect his people. The prayers of the Saints are as a shield, an extra parapet through which no bullet, however well aimed, can pass.

From England to Ypres, Hooge Street, Jean and Saint Julien and the burning plains and snow clad hills of Saloniki are changes of circumstance enough to call for the greatest spiritual efforts. I am glad to say that through the added strength of God, I am still doing my utmost to attain to that high eminence—a Saint.

War instead of obliterating all tendencies to religious life, has only served to reveal God more plainly than ever. Never before has the feeling of the great brotherhood of man been so deeply felt as now. Men, brought face to face with the horrible carnage of war, its outstanding illustrations of self-sacrifice and devotion, are realizing more forcibly than ever that race and class are not dividing lines between that heaven-born brotherhood. The war is a great crucible, melting away all those petty bickerings which in days of peace caused us so much wrangling, and leaving only the pure gold—the things that really matter.

Wishing with all my heart for the blessings of God to rest with his people,

Yours fraternally, J. WORTH.

SALONIKI FIELD FORCES, A COMPANY, FOURTH BATTALION RIFLE BRIGADE.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA, January 31, 1917.

Editors Herald: It is indeed a blessing to write to the many Saints through the HERALD. We have a nice little Sunday school here now in Pensacola. We feel proud of the work here for we have been like lost sheep for some years. But I hope the time will soon come when we will be organized into a branch. There are quite a number of Saints here now and more moving in. We have preaching sometimes, by Brother Cooper and also Brother Clark, and we feel anxious for the work to go on here.

May the Lord bless us in our undertaking, that we may be as a green bay tree planted by the riverside, though we have been cut down, the buds have sprung up again. I thank the Lord for his goodness, that we have renewed our faith once more in him, and I pray that we will be workers in his vineyard. May the Lord bless all the Saints the world over, is my prayer,

Your sister,

DELITEY KELLY.

WATERTOWN, SOUTH DAKOTA, February 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: This being an age of new experiences, perhaps the penning of a few lines to your columns would not be amiss, as in this way I may reach many old friends who might be interested in our whereabouts. Myself and family are having a new experience in being isolated from the association of the Saints. We are the only members in Watertown or vicinity, having located here in 1916. It was a hard fight to leave the Saints and loved ones at Kansas City, knowing that we would have no such privilege in our new location, but although we are isolated God has blessed us as we were satisfied he would.

We enjoy the HERALD and especially the Letter Department where we see so many letters from old-time friends. We are associated with the Methodist Church of this place and have found many noble souls among them. We have a Bible class made up of business and professional men. It has a membership of about sixty and an attendance of from thirty to seventy. The idea is not to teach any particular creed, but exchange ideas. It would be an excellent opportunity for a well-posted, fluent Latter Day Saint. There are many among us who, according to their talk, are Latter Day Saints and don't know it. I think it too bad that there is not a large congregation of Saints here. I don't think our gospel has ever been represented in this place, but I pray the time will soon come when it will be brought here "in power and much assurance."

J. B. JORDAN.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, February 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: Have just returned from a visit with Elbert. Every time I run out to see him I note a gradual improvement. In each administration the Spirit is in evidence. It is a joy to know that God hears and answers.

I assured Brother Elbert that the church was getting along nicely without him and he, with his characteristic humor, remarked, "Yes, I have noticed this with other men of my acquaintance."

Given time and freedom from responsibility and worry and he will be strong and well again. He needs rest, relief from annoyance—no objectionable intrusion which will draw on his vitality—yet association with those who have the capacity to give out rather than absorb.

Tell the Saints not to worry nor to be unduly concerned. There is nothing wrong with Elbert but overwork. Rest will work a cure. Give him a year's vacation. He should have this even though he were not sick. Our public men should have rest and diversion for at least two months of every year. Your editorial "Efficient cooperation" hits the nail on the head. All work and no play makes any man dull and inefficient.

The attendance at our sacrament service Sunday was the largest in years. It was the best meeting we have had for a long, long time.

With good wishes to all,

1307 West Forty-fifth Street. THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

MADISON, WISCONSIN, February 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are two old people who enjoy reading the HERALD every week, and are rejoicing in our branch moving forward in the work—the younger members trying to lift the work from shoulders weakened with age. Our Sunday school especially has improved very rapidly in the past year. Brethren McKnight, Wildermuth and Lenox have been giving us some splendid sermons, the local brethren doing their part faithfully.

Any Saints passing through the city wishing to stop over a few days can find us at 2128 Dunning Street, by taking a Fair Oaks car, as we are only one and one half blocks from car line.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

Your brother and sister in the gospel,

MR. AND MRS. H. D. STEVENS.

LONDON, ENGLAND, 53 SAINT THOMAS ROAD,
BURDETT ROAD, BOW. E.

Editors Herald: There are still a few faithful Saints in this great city and I am pleased to say that there is a good interest manifested. The meetings of late have been of a high spiritual order. The gifts of the spirit being made manifest. Truly God is good to his children and fortifies them against all circumstances. The war has called away some of our young men from our midst which we miss very much, but through inspiration we have been told that they shall return, which has greatly comforted their parents.

The conditions which now exist nationally have brought home to the Saints in a very practical way the fulfillment of God's word concerning perilous times, for truly we have witnessed signs in the heaven, we have also seen much destruction on the earth beneath, and the end is not yet.

I can assure you that we Saints who are living in the immediate war zone need the prayers of those who are privileged to live in brighter spheres, although I believe there is hardly a country that is not in some way suffering through this terrible war.

Last week-end there was a very bad explosion about three miles from our dwelling (a munition factory). The sight was wonderful. For a second or two it just appeared as if the earth opened and volumes of fire burst forth, illuminating the whole place for many miles around. Many have perished and very many have been injured. I am glad that I do not know of any of the Saints who suffered in any way whatever except a few panes of glass being blown out of their windows.

I am glad to tell you Sister R. May is standing the strain of conditions in a fine way, and may God continue to bless her, for many are the sacrifices she has made for the work of the Lord since coming to this city. Sister Crick seems quite at home in London, trying to do all she can to forward the work in this great city.

I am glad to say the officers of the branch in London and Enfield are trying to do all they can to keep the church work in good order. I believe each one realizes the absolute necessity of striving as a minister of the gospel to do all he can to stand in holy places that he may have the spirit of his office and calling.

Brother John Judd has been elected our district president. He is a faithful and energetic worker, one who is ready to pay any sacrifice for the work's sake. I pray that God may continue to pour out his spirit upon his church. With best wishes from your brother in Christ,
J. W. WORTH.

P. S. I have inclosed a letter from my son [J. Worth] according to his request. He is serving in the Army of King George; he has been in the field of battle in France one whole winter, where he was slightly wounded. He returned home for a while but has again been sent to the battle ground, this time to the east. He has written his letter from Saloniki and sent it home, requesting me to send it on to the HERALD. He has served two years in His Majesty's forces already, but I am glad to say he has not forgotten he is a child of God.
J. W. W.

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI, February 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: I find much comfort in reading the HERALD and Ensign and desire to tell the brothers and sisters that I am still engaged in this latter-day work and have no intention of laying my armor down.

I am a member of Pleasant Grove Branch and at our prayer meeting this morning we had an unusually good meeting. May the good work go on. Saints, pray for Brother Elbert

A. Smith that he may soon be restored to health for he is much needed both as editor of the HERALD and for his work in the First Presidency of the church. Be of good cheer, Brother Smith, God is at the helm and will care for his work. God bless all the readers of the HERALD and Ensign.

Your sister,
MARY HAWKINS.

GLEASON, TENNESSEE, February 12, 1917.

Editors Herald: As I scan the pages of our silent preacher and read so many good cheerful letters testifying to the truthfulness of this glorious work, I think a few lines will not be amiss. We are the only family of Saints in this part of the country; have been here three years. Will say we have some good people, but they will turn a deaf ear to the truth. I pray that their eyes and ears may be opened to this latter-day work before it is too late.

We surely miss the good sermons of Elbert A. Smith, but continue to pray that the Lord will strengthen him that he may return to the work that he loves so well.

Now, dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers in behalf of our boy twelve years old; he has been very delicate all his life—has had a severe attack of whooping cough which we fear has become tuberculosis. Pray for him that he may be healed. Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion, I remain
A true sister in one faith,

MRS. O. P. SANDERS.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

The Central South

Just a few lines to let you know we are still going forward in this part of the field. We have much to feel encouraged over, also run onto many things we regret to see in the church. The troubles in the church are harder to endure than the opposition from without. But I don't expect all to go smoothly in this life—it's to be a fight to the end, "and who will be able to stand" and who will endure to the end? The world is furnishing so many inducements to follow it, it seems sometimes will we ever be able to prepare a people to meet our Master. But I must say we have some of the best, and I believe there will be a few at least, that are willing to keep the old gospel flag unfurled. I believe this is the sifting time and unless we can live so we can keep a good portion of the Spirit, we are likely to be finally among them that have been sifted out.

I attended our district conference at Winthrop, Arkansas, the 3d and 4th of this month, and on Sunday organized a branch at that place and left them in a hopeful condition. I ordained Barney Sharp an elder, a fine, promising young man, and they sustained him as the president of the new branch. We called and ordained Brother G. M. Schult deacon; ordained Brother George Thompson, of Manchester, Texas, elder—another man we have great hopes in. I ordained Brother A. M. Powell of Haileyville, Oklahoma, an elder, another young man that has already been tried and found to be good material. I am glad to say we are finding some extra good material of late to take the oversight of the local work. Some of these men will be heard from in the missionary force some day.

I am now on my way to attend our conference at Terlton, Oklahoma. We are having more calls for preaching from among the scattered Saints than are being filled. We hope to see this part of our work looked after better in the future. We must have new material to make our work interesting and fulfill the law. Let the men of the missionary force leave the branches to the local men and push out to new fields. If they will do this they will be blessed in their work and they will give the local men a chance to develop.

Sincerely yours,

February 13, 1917.

W. M. AYLOR.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

The Bishopric

Seattle and British Columbia District: Elder John Hartnell, of Sumas, Washington, has been recommended to us by the district conference for appointment as bishop's agent of this district, to succeed Brother William Johnson, resigned, because of change of residence. We trust Brother Hartnell may receive the support and confidence of the Saints. The Lord has promised to stay the Destroyer's hand for our sake when we contribute that portion of our earthly means that he directs to the support of his work. May we therefore move out in wisdom's path and reap the rewards promised. Brother Johnson's services in the interests of this department have been appreciated. He has served faithfully and well.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Conference Minutes

FREMONT.—February 3, 1917, Hamburg, Iowa. Branch reports: Shenandoah 111, Hamburg 61, Henderson 83, Glenwood 72, Tabor 72, Riverton 53, Bartlett 46, Thurman 193. Bishop's agent report showed: Balance on hand and received in 1916, $893.72; Balance January 1, 1917, $257.07. Tabor presented petition for next conference. Delegates to General Conference: Sister N. L. Mortimore, Sister T. A. Hougas, Sister H. N. Pierce, Sister James Comstock, Sister W. M. Leeka, Susie Dunsdon, William Leeka. Alternates: J. F. Redfield, Sister J. F. Redfield, Ethel I. Skank, Inez Claiborn, Sister John Barber, Grace Harrington, Virtue Dunsdon. Time and place for holding next conference left with presidency. C. W. Forney, secretary.

NORTHWESTERN KANSAS.—February 9, 10 and 11, Bellyville. Presided over by district president, F. E. Taylor, assisted by Francis M. Sheehy. In addition to above-named ministers present were T. W. Curtis, H. J. Jemison and J. B. Ansley. Ministerial and statistical reports from Homestead and Twin Creek Branches. Bishop's agent's report showed a balance on hand August 1, $200.11, balance now of $211.68. This shows quite an improvement and we see many names on agent's report, but there are many who have not responded, highest amount paid $300, smallest amount five cents. Delegates to General Conference: Ida Bergier, T. W. Curtis, Carl Frank and M. L. Shoemaker; alternates: Sister Carl Frank, E. V. Tuttle, and Sister H. O. Turner. Adjourned subject to call of district president. J. B. Ansley, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN NEBRASKA.—At Saints' church, Twenty-fourth and Ohio Streets, Omaha, February 4 and 5. Carl T. Self, district president, presided, assisted by J. M. Baker. Branches reporting: Blair, Macy, Decatur, South Omaha and Omaha. Clyde Arthur Anson ordained elder. Delegates to General Conference: Audentia Anderson, Hubert Case, H. A. Scott, Carl T. Self, William Shakespeare, James M. Baker. Following district officers were elected: President, Carl T. Self; secretary-treasurer, Odessa Carter Jensen; library board member, W. Hicks; recommended for chorister, R. W. Scott; auditor, W. A. Stoff, James Huff's report for quarter was $1,206.06 tithing collected. Paid out $848. Audited and found correct. Next conference to be held at Decatur. Odessa Carter Jensen, secretary, Blair, Nebraska; Carl T. Self, president, 405 Bee Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—Brooklyn, February 10 and 11, U. W. Greene presided. A number of inspirational and spiritual meetings were held, and the conference unquestionably was one of the very best ever held in the district.

Ephraim Squire, 210 Schenectady Avenue, Brooklyn, was re-elected district president. Quorums of ordained men were organized and the following officers were chosen: President quorum of priests, Walter H. Lewis, 3417 Hope Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; president quorum of teachers, Frank Lester, 186 Utica Avenue, Brooklyn, New York; president quorum of deacons, Lee A. Hartshorn, 30 Emerson Street, Richmond Hill, New York. Ordained men in this district are urged to get in touch immediately with presiding officer of their quorum, so that cooperation for coming year's work might be assured. Herman N. Schwartz, secretary, 1004 Land Title Building, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

AUSTRALASIAN MISSION.—First Mission conference convened December 25 and 26, 1916, at Balmain, Sydney, New South Wales, under the presidency of Apostles P. M. Hanson and C. A. Butterworth. A due proportion of the conference time was devoted to spiritual and educational work; special features being lectures to the priesthood by W. J. Haworth on "Psychology in relation to preaching"; "Homiletics" by Paul M. Hanson; "Church officers and their duties" by J. H. N. Jones; a round table was held at which the following topics were discussed: "The importance of the church press" by G. T. Rawson; "Tracts" by William Burrows; "Education" by G. H. Parker; "Mission library" by W. J. Haworth; "The auxiliaries" by A. W. Ferrett; all of which were followed by a general discussion. On the night of the 25th, a musical and literary program was rendered by the auxiliary organizations. The statistics of districts and isolated branches are as follows: Southern New South Wales District, 577 members; Victoria District, 460; Northern New South Wales District, 422; Southern Queensland District, 157; Perth Branch, Western Australia, 40; Dunedin Branch, New Zealand, 18; Kalgoorlie Branch, Western Australia, 17; total 1,691. General Conference rules governing mission conferences were adopted, with the exception that district representation is to be on the basis of one delegate for every twenty-five of its membership. In harmony with the General Conference resolution of April 7, 1916, the mission recommends, "That the board of publication for the Gospel Standard comprise George Lewis, P. M. Hanson and W. J. Haworth." Reports were received from the general ministry and from all district presidents. The quorums reported as follows: The First Quorum of Elders had preached 588 times, presided 807, administered to the sick 449, baptized 37, confirmed 59, ordained 3, blessed 45 children, attended 1,703 services, 100 priesthood meetings, 803 Sunday school sessions, 458 Religio services and distributed 4,553 pieces of literature. The First Quorum of Priests presented the following summary of labors: Preached 145 sermons, presided 222, assisted 203, baptized 5, made 180 visits and distributed 2,363 pieces of literature. The bishop reported a credit balance of $586, 7s, 7d ($2,855.64) and that financially the year excelled all other years. The conference provided for the establishing of a mission library under a board of five, consisting of W. J. Haworth, the mission historian, J. H. N. Jones, J. W. Barkus, G. H. Parker and A. J. Corbett. The board of publication recommended by the mission conference, together with the ministers in charge was appointed to have charge of the publication and preparation of new tracts. It was decided that the border branch at Lower Bendoc be allowed to affiliate with the Southern New South Wales District. The mission formally assumed the debt on the property occupied by the mission headquarters. It was decided to ask General Conference if priests may be recognized as ex-officio members of the mission conference, and, if so, all priests, or only those who are traveling under General Conference appointment. The mission officers elected are: Presidency, Paul M. Hanson and C. A. Butterworth; treasurer, Bishop G. Lewis; chorister, Winford Chenoweth (recommended to general chorister); secretary, W. H. Gambridge; assistant secretary, Nellie Gambridge. The presidency made two changes in the existing appointments, Elder Herman Peisker being transferred to Southern Queensland District and Elder W. H. Gambridge to the Southern New South Wales District, while Elder William Burrows, who had labored faithfully, was released at his own request. The expectations of all respecting the mission conference seemed to be fully realized. An opportunity was provided for the transaction of business necessary to the welfare of the mission and a basis was laid for work of an important character along educational lines. The outlook for the future is very encouraging. A prayer service was held at 9.30 a. m., Monday, in charge of E. J. Haworth and J. Smith. Another prayer service was held the following morning at 9.30, in charge of James Potter and A. Seaberg. Preaching Tuesday morning, 11 o'clock, by Bishop George Lewis, assisted by J. Holden. The following board of auditors were selected: N. Williams, C. A. Thearle and R. McLaughlin. W. H. Gammidge, mission secretary.

Convention Minutes

NEW YORK.—Sunday school and Religio, at Buffalo, February 3 and 4, was very good considering the weather. The snowstorm on Saturday was the worst Buffalo has known for years, crippling both train and car service, but Sunday meetings were attended by three fourths of the Religians in the district and many other visitors, so we feel that everybody received some good, as there were some excellent talks and papers. Agnes B. Batchelor.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.—Sunday school, at Inman, February 2, 1917. Officers elected: Superintendent, Mrs. J. Butler; assistant superintendent, Mrs. T. S. Rutledge; secretary-treasurer, Miss Phebe Outhouse; superintendent cradle roll, Lena Flowers; superintendent of home department, Miss Mary Sodersten; librarian, Harvey Gold. Next convention at Inman, one day previous to district conference. Phebe Outhouse, secretary.

Alabama Sunday school, at Pleasant Hill, March 2, prayer meeting 10 a. m. business session, 11 a. m., institute work, afternoon, program, at night. Every school requested to send delegates. Everybody urged to come. W. H. Drake, superintendent.

Quorum Notices

There will be a meeting of the Ninth Quorum of Priests of the Eastern Michigan District on February 24 and 25, at Flint. All priests not members of quorum are invited to meet with us. Ray D. Bennett, 78 East Milwaukee Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

Very Important Notice

Are you going to the General Religio-Sunday School Conventions?

If you are not you are going to miss something well worth your while. The church and her auxiliaries are now standing, as it were, on the threshold of a new era of progress and the coming conventions will forecast, to a large extent, the activities of the conference year before us.

You should be there, as one of those interested in the welfare of our young and the societies which have been established for their benefit, to see what you may get in the line of helpful suggestions, ways, means and methods of aiding them. This is going to be a gathering filled with opportunity for improvement and of obtaining a fuller knowledge; and not only that but an exchange where you may give also to others the benefit of your experience.

Important! The conventions will begin on Sunday, April 1, at 2 p. m., and we are going to assure ourselves of your presence at the first session by giving you at that time something which you cannot afford to miss. The church has recently gained in membership a lecturer of national repute, Brother Augustine Dwyer, and we have secured him to give an opening lecture on Sunday afternoon on the topic, "A study of the four evangelists." Those of you who have heard Brother Dwyer lecture will, I am sure, not take any chance of missing this opportunity. To those who have not had an opportunity of hearing him I will say that if you miss this lecture and afterwards listen to the fortunate ones telling of the breathless interest with which they sat enthralled while they were brought into an intimate acquaintanceship with those four disciples of our Lord and Savior, you will always reproach yourselves that you did not make a supreme effort and get there. You know the increased interest and pleasure with which you read letters from those you know. Brother Dwyer has spent much time and effort in making a careful study of the lives of these four evangelists and is prepared to give us the benefit of his research in his own charmingly delightful and entrancing manner. You must get there for the Sunday afternoon session.

Besides this there will be topics of interest to Sunday school and Religio workers handled at the Sunday evening session such as "The uses of music in the auxiliaries," "The social purity questions which confront Latter Day Saints," "The appeal of the home department" and "The opportunities and benefits of the normal department."

On Monday and Tuesday, in addition to the regular business sessions at which important questions will come up, there will be addresses by most of the general officers of the Religio which we are sure will be inspiring and place the work of the Religio before you in an appealing manner. There will also be addresses by Sister M. A. Etzenhouser on field and reunion work, by Sister S. A. Burgess on the educational aim of the Religio, and possibly one or two others of which we are not sure as yet, and on Tuesday night, as a fitting close of what we trust will be an inspiring and beneficial Religio convention, Brother Dwyer will give us another absorbing address on the subject of helps for young platform speakers. You cannot afford to miss any of these, we are sure.

On Monday and Tuesday, April 4 and 5, the convention of the General Sunday School Association will meet. More definite outlines of programs will be published, for both societies, in later issues of church papers.

To the Seventy

The time is near when (D. v.) we shall again assemble with our brethren of other quorums in General Conference.

Hereby every member of the seventy is urgently requested to consider deeply the general church mission work; and especially the duties and responsibilities of seventies in such work.

The seventy are regarded as one of the missionary arms of the church, and to understand how to carry on their work with the greatest measure of success is very important, far more than a knowledge of some incidental theological question which is not essential to salvation.

Every member of the quorums of seventy is urged to consider earnestly the mission work of the church, and the methods that appeal to him as being most successful in carrying it on; and come to conference prepared to give us the product of his best thought along the path of advancement. By telling how you have increased your own efficiency you may help others to increase theirs; and thus your works would "follow" you, even before you "die in the Lord."

There is no limitation as to topics, only let them pertain to the special work of the seventy. The command, "Wherefore let every man learn his duty, and let him labor in the calling wherewith he is called," is worthy of all acceptance by all who hold the office of seventy.

Can there be laid down a special or fixed rule that all may use alike in analyzing conditions in each place of labor? If so, what is it?

Can there be a plan devised and arranged that can be used advantageously by all successive workers in the various fields? If so, what is it? Who will furnish a plan by which one missionary who succeeds another in any field, may commence operations with a minimum loss of time?

Methods of employing all the time while in the field, especially where opportunities for preaching are not found, might be considered with profit.

Any topic that you think is important, or profitable in developing and maintaining efficiency in mission work by the seventy, thereby increasing their usefulness may be selected at your pleasure.

The presidents of seventy will be glad to receive suggestions such as might be helpful in reaching higher grounds and better conditions. Send in what you have, or what may occur to you that in your judgment would in any way advance our work, or that of the church at large. Do not hesitate. The cooperation of all is earnestly desired.

May peace abide with you all.
In gospel bonds,
T. C. KELLEY,
Senior President of Seventy.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 316 South River Boulevard.

Committee on Entertainment for General Conference

Those intending to attend General Conventions and Conference at Lamoni this spring should notify this committee as soon as possible that they may be properly provided for. Rates for rooms will be one dollar per week; room and board, five dollars. Rates for meals at the dining hall will be published later and will be made as low as practicable. Address all communications to A. M. Chase, Lamoni, Iowa, chairman of committee.

Information Wanted

If anyone knows of the location of Clarence Adams, inform Daisy B. Short, clerk of the branch at Myrtle Point, Oregon.

Later, the remains were interred with military honors in the Sunset View Cemetery.

Conference Daily

Every Latter Day Saint unable to attend the sessions of the coming General Conference, with the preceding sessions of the Religio and Sunday school General Conventions will find the Daily Herald to be issued during that time a necessity. In fact it has been found that many of those who attend the sessions subscribe to learn what the others who are in attendance are doing.

The first issue will be mailed out on Monday evening, April 2, and followed by an edition each day, except Sundays, till the close of the conference.

Many interesting details will be given for which room cannot be made in the regular issues of the Herald.

The price is only 25 cents for the entire time. Subscriptions should be sent in early so the lists may be made up and thus avoid mistakes and delay from a rush at the last moment. Each day's news will be made up in the evening and mailed out at 8.05 p. m., thus reaching subscribers promptly.

Book Reviews

BOY WANTED.—By Nixon Waterman, published by Forbes & Company, Chicago, $1. Sold by the Herald Publishing House. This book has our unqualified indorsement and we believe that the boy who will read and carefully consider the cheery, human interest suggestions of Mr. Waterman will always remember to his profit the good he got from this book. A valuable feature is the divided page, about a third of each being given over to carefully selected, short prose quotations from the world's greatest thinkers. It is a book worth while to more than the boy—let us quote from the author's preface: "While the title of this book and the character of its contents make it obvious that it is a volume designed primarily for the guidance of youth, no one should pass it by merely because he has reached the years of maturity, and presumably of discretion. As a matter of fact time cannot remove any of us very far from the fancies and foibles, the dreams and dangers of life's morning hours."

GIRL WANTED.—By Nixon Waterman, published by Forbes & Company, Chicago, $1. For sale at this office. The style is the same as that of Boy Wanted, mentioned above, and we agree with the statement of The Journal of Education which is: "Every young woman should read this book. Every parent should make it a point to have her read it." Some of the chapter headings will suggest the scope, but they cannot begin to tell of the pleasing style: "Choosing the way," "Accomplishments," "The joy of doing," "Some everyday virtues," "The value of sunshine," "A merry heart," "Golden habits," "The purpose of life." Especially appropriate as a birthday gift to a girl.

For Sale

I will sell 10 or 14 acres of good land less than one block from the Temple in Kirtland. There is a new barn 24 by 30 feet, two stories with full stone basement built last fall—never been used, can be finished into dwelling if desired. Also good building lots 80 by 244 feet. For particulars address, L. W. Powell, Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. 2.

BRADEN - KELLEY DEBATE.—Probably the most exhaustive and most exciting debate ever held in the Reorganization. Both sides of the controversy are given in full, the manuscripts being signed by both participants. The Christian Church claims its representative, the late Clark Braden, defeated Bishop E. L. Kelley in this discussion—but we are doing the selling. The attacks upon us in this volume are so numerous and characteristic every preacher and would-be preacher of ours should acquaint himself with them. The book is a mental and spiritual stimulant. No. 152, cloth$2.00

Food Specialist

Dr. Klar's Good Health Flour cures constipation—ends stomach trouble. Stronger than meat, better and cheaper to eat. The life taken from the Minnesota No. 1 spring wheat. The Porridge, Pan Cakes, Muffins, Do-nuts, Cookies, and Bread will help any Saint to live the Word of Wisdom. Dr. A. B. Klar, Food Specialist, Canal Dover, O.

DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON PROVEN BY ARCHÆOLOGY.—Student, here is a mass of startling data for your consideration. Nothing "sentimental" about this work. It adheres to reality, and yet it is full of the romance which clusters about the ruins of a departed civilization. Louise Palfrey Sheldon accomplished a notable work in writing this book. It is a bulwark against the guesswork of un-informed antagonists to Latter Day Saintism. No. 176, cloth$.60

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS.—Six maps covering the whole geographic field of the Book of Mormon history. So arranged that they can be pasted, in any arrangement desired, upon a stationary surface for constant reference. Essential to Religio Quarterly study. As this item was left out of the recent price list, write it in now. No. R15, per set....$.25

ARCHÆOLOGICAL COMMITTEE REPORT.—By the joint efforts of leading minds in the church this work was compiled. It gets down to rock bottom in archæological investigation bearing upon the claims made by the Book of Mormon. Data that will fortify Book of Mormon students against arguments of "science." Interesting reading in itself. No. 142, cloth$.75

SOME NAMES WANTED

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

THE INFIDEL MISSIONS

In this week's issue there appears an extract from The Literary Digest for February 17, 1917, headed "New York's infidel missions." We are not told just what texts are used. But such efforts have been made elsewhere for some time past.

It is a pity that many young men seem to consider it rather smart to break away from the church, principally because some doctrine, as presented by their fathers, does not appeal to them in the light of some smattering of science and some external criticism.

It is a fact that such men as Arthur Drew, Edward Hartmann, Kalthoff and Jensen in Germany and William Smith and Robertson in England, to a lesser extent perhaps, attack the historicity of Jesus. This because of the claim so long made, that Christianity was first revealed in the time of Christ and that the world was left without his doctrine until that time.

This has been the basis of much criticism from infidel sources. That the Supreme Being would leave the world so long without the gospel, to suffer through idolatry and without hope of salvation, has been claimed as a basis of rejecting Christianity and often for denying God.

In the realms of mythology and so-called pagan religions there are to be found many traces of the idea of a dying God, of the cross as a sign of life and resurrection, of baptism as a means of purification and initiation, and even in some instances apparently similar teaching and similar miracles to those set forth in the life of Jesus. This was once answered by claiming that the Devil had created these myths to discredit Christianity. As these pagan stories were generally admitted to be myths, these scholars question the existence of Jesus.

This question of historicity has been directly discussed on the affirmative side by F. C. Conybeare, S. J. Case, Johann Weiss, William Sodan in Germany, and T. J. Thorburn in England. But many others have directly or indirectly taken up the question in defense of the biblical position of his historicity.

Other men of the German school, while admitting the historicity of Jesus, have advanced the theory of a secret organization behind him which stage managed his walking on the water, his ascension, healings of the sick and other miracles. While some, as Storfer and others, go in some ways even further in an effort to discredit the work and life of Jesus of Nazareth. Some parts of these writings occasionally fall into the hands of young men or students who do not pursue their investigations further.

Some of Tom Paine's writings, in the light of some of the teachings of the church of his day, tend, in the minds of those who read them more or less superficially, to a discrediting of Christianity, if not all religion.

Also some scientists like Haeckel attempt to explain all known phenomena in terms of the monad or the electron, and assert that all of nervous force, vital power and intelligence that is manifested in humanity is to be explained by the assembling, interrelation and motion of these unit elements.

It is well that we should know with what we are confronted, and something of the problem. We have read such of this literature as time has permitted during the past ten years, have attempted to trace statements back to original sources where possible, and have been really surprised with the lack of evidence from a legal and logical point of view, as well as by the extreme character of some of these assumptions. They seem as a rule taken for granted rather than proven. An argument is made largely from general results, as indicated in the case of mythology.

Yet this is very readily met from a careful reading of the Bible, which very plainly states that the gospel was preached to Abraham, that the children of Israel were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea and all drank of that spiritual rock which follow them, which rock was Christ. Again, in the third chapter of Hebrews it is declared, that the gospel was preached unto them (Israelites) as well as unto us.

Of course the position of the church we have the honor to represent is very clear. We affirm that the Lord revealed to Adam his great purpose as outlined in the gospel and pointed to Jesus the Christ as the coming Savior of the world; that all of the doctrines, as set forth in the divine plan of the gospel, were preached to Adam, Enoch, Abraham, Moses and their contemporaries. So Enoch and Abraham became the friends of God. This meets the objection, that God left the world so long without this wonderful plan of salvation in the gospel.

This divine plan was lost to the world, only when rejected by mankind. Israel was called to be a nation of kings and of priests unto God, to preach and restore the gospel and to minister to the nations. But they rejected the divine plan, so were given a schoolmaster in the Mosaic law to bring them to Christ. Not willing to receive what they might have received, God did not utterly reject them, but gave them a plan according to their ability to receive.

This appears to confirm also the very frequent tradition of a great primeval revelation, which we run across so often in the study of comparative religion. The claim that the religion presented by these so-called heathens is but an offshoot and a part of that great primeval revelation is found all over the world.

Once it is conceded that there was such a revelation and such teaching, it answers at once the objection of these traditions and stories. It becomes no more remarkable that the so-called pagans of the time of Christ should have such stories and traditions of the Son of God, than it is that such stories and traditions should be had to-day by the so-called Christian world. Chronology makes the time as shorter from Moses to Christ than from the days of the apostles to our own day. Both tradition and fact seem to confirm the idea that corruption and variations were continuously made by the nations of mankind from that first great plan.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that we noted last year that Doctor G. Stanley Hall, approaching the problem from an entirely different angle and with strong convictions of the evolutionary theory of the development of man, after reading hundreds of these books in German and French, as well as the voluminous literature translated or originally written in English, says in effect that this theory of the nonhistoricity of Jesus fails of proof.

Doctor Hall has spent many years making this his special study, and as a result of his research confirms not only the historicity of Jesus, but affirms that he more really lived than any other man. He confirms him as a reality in a sense almost transcending historicity, while still affirming his existence. He has examined critically and, we believe, without bias these numerous stories concerning the life of Jesus, that of a secret society directing his work, that his life was unworthy, and the numerous other stories that are advanced, and finds them without probability and as scarcely deserving, in an evidential way, serious discussion.

It is only fair to add that Doctor Hall does not accept the theory of numerous miracles, rather following in good part the view of Strauss. Still he does affirm that religious experience is a vital part of human life from a pedagogic and a psychologic viewpoint, or, as religious people would say, from a spiritual viewpoint. The young man or young woman who has not been converted has missed something of life. The man or woman who has not passed through an overpowering religious experience will never come to the fullness of his or her powers.

So Jesus of Nazareth is finally presented by him as embodying, in a more complete sense than any other man of whom we have record, the soul of the race, or, as the religious world would prefer to call it, God. And in so doing, in his life he presents the real type of the superman, presenting the man who is to be in the coming race, in contradistinction to those pseudo examples of crass selfishness and brutality presented as supermen by Nietzsche, Bernard Shaw and others.

The great workers of the world have been quick to recognize a power without themselves which has directed their best work. This power Jesus possessed in a larger sense than any other of whom we have record.

Those who present these infidel ideas will usually be found those who think—to a certain extent. They are those, at least, who pride themselves upon their thinking, often students of colleges and of universities. Some idea presented by the church of their fathers does not agree with their personal processes of thought, or something which they have learned. They go far enough to see a weakness in the modern church and its teachings.

But all too often evolution and many of the doctrines of science, instead of being living hypotheses and bases of work, become to them mere devitalized symbols which are accepted in as dogmatic a way as any teaching of the medieval church. Thus these words are placed in the realm of the things that are not thought of, by the law of mental inertia, are accepted without investigation and become in part vicariate for real thought. So it seems somewhat smart to lay aside the teachings of the church and of religion.

As the scientific doctrines are not traced back to original sources, so they do not take the time or the effort to verify these assertions affecting religion as a whole, Christianity in part, the life of Jesus, his work and historicity, and the authenticity of the Bible. Mere assertions are accepted without proof and without verification. It is a sad thing, but all too often seen, that this represents, in fact, a stultification of thought rather than vivid or original research.

All too often this process is helped rather than hindered by those selected to represent the church. Since they meet these criticisms by dogmatic assertions of their personal interpretations of some Bible verse, or in some instances by such assertion in the name of the church, with the demand for the instant rejection of the idea. But since it is the result of thought, even if fragmentary, the demand is ignored.

Sometimes an attack is made on science in general or on some particular hypothesis or theory, without taking the trouble to learn on what the theory is based or what it means. Subconsciously or consciously the conclusion follows, "He knows nothing about science, he probably knows no more about religion." Doubt is thereby confirmed rather than diminished and the cause of truth suffers. Of course this is not a logical conclusion, but it is a quite natural one.

Again, all too often, we find a man who has believed some untenable, some really absurd idea in regard to the Supreme Being or the work of Jesus. But at last he comes to an awakening to see that his conception has been erroneous. Instead of stopping critically to find what is wrong and what is really right and true, and attempting by careful research to discover where the error lies, he rapidly rejects not only the whole doctrine involved, but goes on finally to feel himself superior to such a thing as religion.

Or in another aspect, starting out to correct an error, some men are like a little boy we have heard of, who was left in charge of his baby brother. The mother came home to find the baby screaming, its face all bloody, the scalp badly torn and apparently in serious condition. She sent for the physician, the baby was cleaned, the necessary stitches taken and the baby was put to sleep.

Then she reached for the switch and for the boy left in charge.

"I thought I left you here to take care of the baby."

"Why, mamma, I did."

"Well then, how did this occur? How did he get hurt in this way?"

"Why, mamma, you told me to keep the flies off of him, and a fly came right on his forehead, so I took the coal shovel and killed it."

Many a "brilliant" young man uses similar logic in killing the fly found on the religion of his fathers.

He tries to smash the whole thing—and may even go out to teach others that religion is all wrong.

We hold no brief for the defense of the errors which have been advanced in the name of religion, the mistaken theories advanced by any set of teachers. We do not deny the need of reformation in much of the religious world to-day. There are things that need correction. But that is no basis for the rejection of the great and necessary principles of religion, of conversion, and of those powers which make for the development of the soul of the individual to its highest and best possibilities.

We need men who can see the errors and correct them, not men who will reject all truth that comes under the head of religion because of these matters which need correction.

A surgeon's knife should go just so far. The vital life should not be touched. Yet we like better the simile of the fly or other superficial defect. It is external, something not a part of the real living power of religion and of God. Its proper removal leaves no scar, but rather only makes more apparent the serene beauty of the truth.

Misrepresentation and supposition are no just reasons for attempting to defile the life and character of Jesus the Christ, nor is it a just basis for the rejection of the highest, purest and best which has ever been presented in the name of religion for the blessing of the souls of men, Christianity.

GRACELAND'S GRADUATES GRANTED STATE CERTIFICATES

The following may be of interest to your readers:

State of Iowa
Department of Public Instruction
Des Moines

February 22, 1917.

President George N. Briggs, Graceland College,
Lamoni, Iowa,

Dear Sir: At the meeting of the Educational Board of Examiners held Saturday, February 17, Graceland Junior College was approved for the preliminary third grade State certificate leading to the second grade State certificate. A copy of the blank enclosed.

Very truly yours,

A. M. DEYOE,

President Board of Examiners.

By VIOLA H. SCHELL, Secretary.

The third grade State certificate is the highest certificate that can be granted to a prospective teacher with two years of college work without teaching experience. After two years of successful teaching experience our graduates can secure a second grade State certificate without examination, which can be renewed every five years, so that it means practically a life certificate to our graduates who remain in the teaching service.

Due to the reciprocal relations between Iowa and most of the other States of the Union, because of the high educational standards maintained in this State, Iowa's state certificates will be generally accepted throughout the country. This means that Graceland's graduates will receive official recognition wherever they go in the United States.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

H. S. Salisbury Honored

In the recent organization of the Hancock County (Illinois) Historical Society, Elder Herbert S. Salisbury of Carthage, was elected president. It gives us pleasure to chronicle this fact. It was at this very place that Joseph and Hyrum Smith suffered death at the hands of a mob in 1844. Many of our readers will recall Brother Salisbury was at one time president of Graceland College. His grandmother was a sister of Joseph the Martyr.

The Daily Herald

The subscriptions are already coming in for the daily to be issued from this office during the sessions of Conventions and Conference in April. This matter should have liberal support, for it is but an additional burden—a labor of love—for those who sacrifice time and energy to put it out. No reasonable effort will be spared to make this an interesting news chronicle, with indispensable official reports and comment on the situation more extended than can be printed in the regular issue.

Woman's Auxiliary

Incidentally we learn of a summary of what has appeared in the Woman's Auxiliary department of this publication during the past eight months. There have been 5 announcements, 5 letters, 6 original poems, 14 reprints from other papers, 39 reports of activities of officers, etc., and 73 original articles, the latter being contributed by 29 different sisters. This shows a commendable interest and response which should be very gratifying to the editor of that department. We are confident that our readers greatly appreciate the work of the auxiliary and the privilege of reading the inspiring matter it presents in each number of the HERALD.

The European Situation

So far no "overt act" has been committed by German submarines to cause an open rupture between this country and Germany, further than the severance of diplomatic relations. It is reported that Austria concurs in Germany's stand. Norway, Sweden, and Denmark have entered formal protests against the submarine policy but these have not been accompanied by threats of war or a break in relations. Brazil has again protested and notified Germany that she will be held to strict accountability for the safety of three Brazilian ships that have sailed for the war zone. Premier Lloyd-George has placed England under a most comprehensive war order whereby all importations are prohibited or restricted except of the barest necessities of life. Every effort is being made to have all tillable land brought under cultivation. Submarines continue to take their toll in the war area, one hundred and seventy-two ships having been sunk since February 1. However, this is being largely replaced and the average is little if any above that of a year ago. The British seem to have gained a little along the Ancre on the west, and continue active in Mesopotamia.

Welcomed Their Pastor

From several sources we have learned of the welcome the people at Holden gave Brother D. J. Krahl when he and family moved there recently. While we do not wish to embarrass Brother Krahl nor seem to indicate that other pastors are not just as well received, yet we are pleased when our people so uniformly favorably impress nonmembers. We quote the following from The Holden (Missouri) Progress:

"The Progress is glad to welcome Mr. Krahl to Holden, coming as he does as the permanent pastor of the Holden church as well as the president of the newly organized Holden Stake. We like these square jawed, upstanding men, who scorn the beaten path and blaze trails, and above all, men in the ministry who boast that they are not sectarians but 'workers in the vineyard.' We like Mr. Krahl for one of his many activities—the work among the young people. We shall always remember the excellent program we heard in the church here given by that fine company of Independence young people. The keynote of the program was the church as a social center, and some of their utterances sounded almost heretical. One of them said: 'The church is not so much brick and mortar, boards and nails; it should be an agency in the hands of the Almighty for the development of the whole man.' The Latter Day Saint Church here has a large membership, large property and a people who know how to give. With such a combination in the hands of a man of leadership like Mr. Krahl, something great should be accomplished. The recreation problem has never been touched yet, and the opportunity is here for the Saints to give the community an object lesson which will better young folk's conditions in the whole community."

PREDESTINATION AND FOREORDINATION

(Quotations in this article from the Inspired Translation of the Bible.)

The Lord said unto Enoch, Behold, these thy brethren, they are the workmanship of mine own hands, and I gave unto them their knowledge in the day that I created them. And in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency.—Genesis 7: 39, 40.

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to his own image, that he might be the first born among many brethren. Moreover, him whom he did predestinate, him he also called; him whom he called, him he also sanctified; and him whom he sanctified, him he also glorified.—Romans 8:28-30.

Because of the second text from Romans used at the heading of this article as given in the King James version of the Bible, Paul has been accused by some of being unsound in the faith, while others have been led to indorse—at least in a measure—the teaching of John Calvin, concluding that the matter of our salvation is very largely predetermined by something which we have done, some choice we have made in some other sphere and which we know nothing of here.

To my mind the only defense that Paul and the Bible needs “as to the soundness of Paul’s statements of God’s plan of dealing with the human family,” may be found in the corrected version of the Bible, known as the Inspired Translation. This is equally true in regard to statements credited to other writers, in the Sacred Word. As examples see Exodus 21: 20, 21:

KING JAMES VERSION

And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely punished. Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for he is his money.

Deuteronomy 14: 21

Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates that he may eat it: or thou mayest sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God.

INSPIRED TRANSLATION

And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand, he shall be put to death. Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, and recover he shall not be put to death, for he is his servant.

Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt not give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest not sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God.

No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day.

No man can come unto me, except he doeth the will of my Father who hath sent me. And this is the will of him who hath sent me that ye receive the Son; for the Father beareth record of him; and he who receiveth the testimony, and doeth the will of him who sent me, I will raise up in the resurrection of the just.

Acts 13: 48

And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord; and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.

And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord; and as many as believed were ordained unto eternal life.

Of this Inspired Translation the Lord said unto Sidney Rigdon: “Thou shalt ask and the scriptures shall be given even as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect, for they will hear my voice,” etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5.)

Then, whenever or however our election shall have taken place, we cannot afford to ignore this voice—rather are we under the command to “teach them to all men.” (Ibid., 42: 15.)

It is not my intention here to enter into an examination of the subject of “Preexistence.” There is no disagreement—so far as I know—among the elders upon the fact of our preexistence, though there is in our theories of the manner of that state. Nor do we wish to present a pet hobby; for while riding a hobby may be a pleasant exercise, yet the one so engaged often cuts but a sorry figure to the onlooker. What we do wish to do is to take a look at the subject of predestination and foreordination.

According to my understanding there could be no election of the Saints without an exercise of their intelligent choice, and the text used from the revelation to Enoch certainly fixes the earliest possible limit of this election, both in point of time (when man was in the Garden of Eden), and also in the number then elected. (Those who were there.)

There could be no bestowal of agency until there was a conferring of knowledge, and Enoch is told that knowledge was given to man “in the day that I created them.”

Whether this scripture refers to the spiritual or natural creation of man (see Genesis 2: 5), is immaterial here, for the definite statement is made that the agency was given “in the Garden of Eden,” and the scripture gives us a glimpse of this garden with only Adam and Eve for tenants.

There was an election, a predestination, even, which antedates this, having taken place "before the foundation of the world."

According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will.—Ephesians 1: 4, 5.

The Inspired Translation will assist us to get the true concept of this election or predestination, and I will first cite you to Genesis 3: 1-3:

And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning; and he came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever.

With this scripture in view one is ready for a better comprehension of Romans 8: 29, 30:

For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to his own image, that he might be the first born among many brethren. Moreover, him whom he did predestinate, him he also called; and him whom he called, him he also sanctified; and him whom he sanctified him he also glorified.

Surely this was Christ.

A careful reading of this reference in the King James Version will reveal the fact that this is the only logical rendition of this scripture, for paragraph twenty-nine speaks of this foreknowing—this predestination as applicable only in the singular number. "For whom he did foreknow he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he [whom he did foreknow and predestinate.—A. M. C.] might be the firstborn among many brethren"; and the Inspired Translation makes it plain that Paul was declaring the same fact that other writers have stated in different language, viz, that the Son "was in the beginning with God," and that "the works [plan of salvation] were finished from the foundation of the world." (See John 1: 2 and Hebrews 4: 3.) Or, as another writer puts it, that whosoever is "called out of darkness into his marvelous light," was chosen "in him, before the foundation of the world."

In the light of the foregoing is it strange that Paul should exclaim:

What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can prevail against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?—Romans 8: 31-35.

The "way of salvation" is foreordained, but if we are chosen—elected—we must exercise our agency here. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." That there are or have been, heathen nations who have not had the opportunity to hear the call is not the fault of the plan or its author, but of their fathers who departed from the faith and bequeathed to them a heritage of sin and unbelief; hence the Master tells Enoch, "Their sins shall be upon the heads of their fathers." (Genesis 7: 43.)

Paul tells us that while

In a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor. If a man therefore purge himself from these, [dishonorable things—A. M. C.] he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work. (2 Timothy 2: 20, 21.)

Peter also admonishes us to "make our calling and election sure," (2 Peter 1: 10) so we conclude that the exercise of our agency in the now is the determining factor in our "election of grace," and that when this apostle said unto the multitude on the day of Pentecost, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," that the promise was certainly as broad or general as the command to "Every one of you."

To this, Paul on Mars hill bears witness when he says, "And the times of this ignorance God winked at," (before this they had no opportunity to hear,) "but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17: 20.) Was not this the "As many as the Lord our God shall call"?

A "desire to believe," certainly is the first determining factor in our election, for, "If any man having an opportunity to know what the design and will of God is, elects 'to do his will, he shall know of the doctrine';" hence, "No man can come unto me except he will do the will of my Father who hath sent me," and here we see exercised the agency of man, cleansing himself, that he may "Be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work."

It is true that we usually interpret life through our individual experiences, yet in that interpretation, as elders for Christ, we cannot afford to ignore or go contrary to what he has given us to assist us in our knowledge, lest we become "Wise in our own conceit."

"I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me," was the declaration of Jesus, and herein lies both our predestination and foreordination.

A. M. CHASE.

HONOR THROUGH CHRIST

But in a great house there are only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor and some to dishonor.—2 Timothy 2:20.

There is nothing more detestable than disgrace, nothing more shameful than slavery. We have been born to glory and liberty; let us either preserve them or die with dignity.

Honor, greatness, glory and liberty, is the heritage of all men through Christ; if I am a slave, was it a decree of God? If I am a vessel "to dishonor" is it because "the potter hath power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor," and therefore I am, and have my existence, in the mold of dishonor? Not so; for, "If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work.

Shall we not "go to" with our might? "If a man therefore purge himself from these," (verse 21) the fight is on. Shall it be disgrace? No; disgrace is detestable, and failure is disgrace, and by the way, the only thing that shall prevent us from being "a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use," is that we do not "purge ourselves from these" for the apostle says if we do we shall. We have in the final analysis simply, do and shall.

If we do purge ourselves from these, we shall be vessels to honor, but I almost hear some one ask, What are "these"? I do not know. I can only answer for the "these" in myself, as everyone is to purge himself. The "these" that exists in me possibly does not exist in you. However, I do not hesitate to suggest that possibly the "these" which is most universal is the tendency and disposition to disregard the commandments of God, especially where they ask us to dispense with habits and practices that are very pleasurable to us, and to let go of worldly practices and customs that are almost universal. It may include the disposition we manifest in failing to acknowledge that we are really slaves, because slavery is shameful, and the slave is the one most sure to resent the efforts that may be made to assist in the breaking of the chains that bind him.

Look up, slave; thou art great with the greatness of God's image! That is the philosophy of Jesus, and it exalts human life beyond the dignity of an archangel. Not like the hideous doctrines of the Orient portion humanity according to the accident of birth, into higher and lower functions, trampling some into the dirt with the vilest refuse, and lifting others into divine companionship.

Plato parceled man into beings of gold, of silver, of brass, of clay, and said that the lower orders exist for the benefit of the higher. Aristotle maintained that the lower orders were slaves by nature, with offices akin to those of the tame animals. To Cicero it seemed better that nine innocent slaves should suffer than that a single guilty one should escape.

The noblest pagan culture stands far away from the position of Jesus respecting the dignity of man. Jesus tells us to lift ourselves into divine companionship, "purge yourselves from 'these' and a vessel to honor you are, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work."

Jesus Christ pushes his work of reconstructing the social order through the men who have frankly adopted his gospel as the program of their lives, whether clerical or working members, in establishing the kingdom of God on earth. The process may be slow and the course pursued may often seem to be tortuous, but it will surely attain the purpose of the Master.

In the meanwhile Jesus has given to the toiler, the slave, and the poor a philosophy of life which makes any experience tolerable which is separate from sin. It declares that, stripped of all his accumulations, any man is in himself, though but a naked savage, the most valuable thing in the universe. This was God's estimate of you and me when he sent his Son into the world to become the life of the world, the light of the world, the hope of the world, and said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

If we are not vessels to honor, it is because we have followed the "inventions" of man. The wise man said, "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions."

Yes, and still the good work goes on. Man is still seeking out inventions. Possibly you have been the inventor of a few, and "these" may be standing in the way of "honor." Begin the purging process and this is the only way out; man has furnished inventions as substitutes for some of the richest products of nature, the very elements in which life exists, giving us narcotics and stimulants for pure water and wholesome grains, dishonest methods for business relations until the saying of Micah is verily true: "The good man is perished out of the earth; and there is none upright among men: they all lie in wait for blood; they hunt every man his brother with a net."

But there are a thousand "these," reference to which would only be assumption so far as you are concerned, for the central thought is, "If a man therefore will purge himself from these." So no matter the station, the environment, the age, or color, let us hie ourselves to the light, open God's great revelation to mankind and learn that Jesus came to teach men that life is more than meat and raiment; that it does not consist in the abundance of the things which a man may possess, but in the development of character in godliness. It is not the house a man lives in, but the man himself that shall survive the ravages of time and the oppressions of tyrants.

A man may be divine in life though he live in a hut, and be compelled every day to smart under the lash of a cruel taskmaster. In "Guesses of Truth" we have this: "Purity is the feminine, truth the masculine, of honor," so we turn our faces to the Christ in whom alone there is the only perfect example of purity and truth, and humbly pray, Lord Jesus, help me to "purge myself from these" that I may be a vessel to honor. WARD L. CHRISTY.

USE OF ART IN THE CHURCH.—No. 3

[The following is one of a series of brief articles on this subject, written by some of our members who are especially interested in this phase of our work. Other articles will appear from time to time.—EDITORS.]

True art is made noble by the mind producing it. For those who feel it, nothing makes the soul so religious and pure as the endeavor to create something perfect; for God is perfection, and whoever strives after it is striving after something divine.—Michaelangelo.

When we think or speak of art we must not confine ourselves to painting and sculpturing; but should consider architecture, music and poetry as completing the group of five subjects, forming what are called the fine arts.

A better use of art in the church must include its appliance to every department, namely the Sunday school, Religio, the church publications, the ministry and the home.

To begin with, it is necessary to give a few statements as to the efficacy of art in every age of the world and its value in the education of mankind. In profane history it is found that the first record of man's thoughts was recorded through the medium of picture writing. As this mode of recording was used more the people gradually formed an alphabet, then a language; which proves the close relationship between literature and art. The one, art, expresses itself where literature fails, the same way literature expresses itself on a subject where art fails.

To get the most out of any people or subject we must combine art and literature. As an example, the American Indians in representing their battles and lives, outlined crude pictures on their tents and totem poles. In trading with the white man they would mark their bags, which contained furs, so they could tell by noting the markings and outlines, how many furs, their quality, kind and value, they contained.

If a Pharaoh desired to record the number of ducks consumed at one of his banquets, he would have an artist draw on the wall or tomb so many hundred ducks, with a few complementary figures, and in this way could tell more concerning the banquet than by any other means. No matter where we go or what we study we will find how closely related and associated is drawing, or art, with everyday life.

One of our elders, Brother C. Edward Miller, on his return from Honolulu, told how much he valued his stereopticon and what good work he had accomplished with it in his work as a missionary. Others are as enthusiastic as he.

It is a scientific fact that teaching in the universities public schools and all other educational institutions by motion pictures is the best and most efficient method of instruction yet used. Nothing is more interesting to a child than a picture book. When a child or a grown person looks through a book, newspaper or a magazine and sees a picture, immediately his curiosity is aroused and he looks for its explanation in the writing concerning it.

Now, we must try to associate what has just been said, with the subject, a better use of art in the church.

In the Sunday school every effort must be put forth to the development of the young. Here is where they receive their first instruction, which develops them in the everlasting principles of our belief.

Religion, one of the most profound subjects, is difficult enough for grown people to fathom, to say nothing of children; hence our need for a way of making it clear for them. In the cities especially a large percentage of the children that first start coming to our Sunday school, have never heard of God or Christ and his plan of salvation; so when the teacher starts to explain, he finds how big an undertaking he has.

Children as well as grown people cannot understand fully the dealings of God with the Hebrews before Christ, unless they have some ideas of their customs, dress, modes of travel and the country in which they lived. Nothing can give all of these details as clearly and nicely as good pictures and maps of the same.

Taking the intermediate department of the Sunday school as an example, the following will be applied to it. If the teachers only could have a book, that would contain pictures or illustrations for every lesson in the Quarterly throughout the entire year, the Quarterlies would need no illustrations. The teacher could hold this book before the class and show the illustration concerning the lesson; he could get the attention of the class and they would have a foundation before them to build the lesson on. In this way they could understand more the points brought out; at the same time retaining the image of the illustration. When the quarterly review came the teacher need only hold the book before the class, and as the picture concerning the lessons would be shown them they would recall that lesson, which otherwise would have been forgotten.

Duplicate this method in every Quarterly and in every department of the Sunday school and I believe we will have an advancement, which we could not have in any other method of teaching. In this case the lessons would bring a mutual understanding throughout the entire Sunday school, which we do not have now. This plan should be used in the younger classes especially.

It would take a great deal of work to make such a book; but if all the artists in the church could be gotten together, it would be very easy to accomplish as much. They could work under the instruction of the one or ones who selected the lessons, and in this way could make a success of it.

In the primary grades or departments constructive art could be used to the greatest possible advantage. The teachers could prepare cards and could make little models of the different things that the Hebrews were associated with and used, such as the tents they lived in, horses and cattle, ark of the covenant, etc. This is the system the public schools use in the primary grades and has been found to be the most efficient method yet practiced.

In the public schools of to-day the study of art is conceded to be one of the necessary elements of an education and is continually rising in prominence as an educational factor.

Cheap copies of the great masterpieces are used also in the schools, along with the explanation of the teacher in the beauty of such art. This method has been studied and tried and is found to be a success. So why should not we as a church adopt this method and gain its benefits? It develops the child's powers of observation, imagination, appreciation of the beautiful, and he gains skill in explaining his thoughts and feelings.

In our branch here in Independence, there has been started classes in psychology, methods of kindergarten teaching, economics and a class of drawing. These different classes are all a means to the end we are seeking.

When our elders go out into their fields they would have all of this training; so with a blackboard, they could easily express their ideas and thoughts to the world. Chalk talks are very efficient wherever they are used, no matter how crudely they are executed. Any chart, no matter how simple or crude, explains with the least possible effort and more clearly and to the point than so many words in the same length of time.

In the study of art we study architecture and the harmonies of proper dress and of flower combinations. This all helps to create a home worthy of its name. Our home is a department of the church, and to make it a place of beauty, not of fine materials, but of character and happiness, should be the aim of every Latter Day Saint.

In our branch we have an organization called the "Laurel Club," and every winter they give a bazaar. Here they sell all kinds of handicraft, beautiful fancywork, painted china, pictures, etc., the receipts of which go to the church and its debts. This is making use of art and is far-reaching in its effect for it is felt in the homes of those who acquire it.

In our study of the Book of Mormon, if we could appreciate the beauty of architecture, which is continually being unearthed by archæologists, these people and the high civilization they had would seem to us as being more of a reality.

In the history of every nation we find they eventually have what is called a Golden Age and we find this age is only attained after they have perfected as far as their powers would permit their religious belief, architecture, painting, sculpturing and poetry.

We as a people are already known as an intelligent class; because we have a religion that makes us what we are. Our music is of a superior order and with these classes mentioned above we will be a shining light to the world and to God if we take advantage of all we are offered.

It is a means to the end of making ourselves upright and perfect before God in every way that we ought to take more seriously the study of art.

GEORGE A. BARTHOLOMEW.

Infidelity and faith look both through the same perspective glass, but at contrary ends. Infidelity looks through the wrong end of the glass, and therefore sees those objects which are afar off, and makes great things little. Faith looks at the right end, and brings the blessings that are far off in time, close to our eyes, and multiplies God's blessings, which, in the distance, lose their greatness.—Bishop Hall.

Cultivate the thankful spirit! It will be to thee a perpetual feast. There is, or ought to be, with us no such thing as small mercies; all are great, because the least are undeserved. Indeed, a really thankful heart will extract motive for gratitude from everything, making the most even of scanty blessings.—J. R. MacDuff.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

COST KEEPING IN THE WAR

[The National Geographic Society, with headquarters in Washington, District of Columbia, has recently made an economic summary of the geography of the great munitions trade of the European war. Never before in the history of the world has there been such an unprecedented demand for materials of every kind as Europe is compelled to employ in this great, epochal struggle. Discussing the vastness of munition consumption, the society, in a statement issued monthly, considers it from three viewpoints: The cost of equipping a single soldier, the cost of a single battle, and the immense quantities of material required to maintain armies in the field. The society's bulletin says]:

When it is remembered that there are to-day under arms more than twenty-four million soldiers in the European war, the immensity of the task of keeping these men in the field, and keeping them supplied with the munitions with which they wage war will appear. It has been estimated that it costs approximately $100 to outfit a soldier. Of this $25 goes for his gun and $35 for his one thousand rounds of cartridges. The average life of a uniform under modern service conditions is very short; that of the ordinary rifle is six months. In all of the history of war there has never been such a rapid exhaustion of all the materials with which it is made.

An idea can be gained of the immensity of the outlay required in the prosecution of a great battle by reference to some of the figures from Verdun. A 75-centimeter gun can fire about 400 projectiles a day. Each of these projectiles costs approximately six dollars. Counting this and the depreciation of the gun, which is particularly rapid, the daily outlay for its operation amounts to $2,700. It is estimated that the 120 75-centimeter cannon in an army corps, fired all day, cost in munitions and depreciation $320,000. In addition to this each army corps has about 40 pieces of heavy artillery. Explosives and depreciation for a single day's work for them totals $500,000, making the total artillery expense of an army corps $820,000 a day.

The fighting of one hundred days around Verdun cost an amount which is represented by a column of gold one yard square and 312 feet high, or approximately as high as the statue of liberty on the capital dome at Washington.

If the outlay in gun metal and powder is heavy, it is no more so than the outlay for materials demanded by the present necessities of trench warfare. An officer who has studied this phase of the present war carefully, says that to put a trench in a state fit for occupation in winter requires a million and a quarter running feet of three by three timber, thirty-six thousand running feet of corrugated iron, six and a quarter million sand bags weighing one thousand tons, and twenty-four thousand standards and pickets, to the mile. In addition to this, nine hundred miles of barbed wire has to be used, weighing 110 tons. When one stops to recall the hundreds of miles of trenches which stretch across Europe in different directions, and how often sections of these trenches have to be rebuilt, he can gain some idea of the tremendous amount of material required in their outfitting.

Another picture of the vastness of the munitioning trade and the immensity of the task of keeping the armies in the field and in fighting condition may be had from the statement that there are now more than four thousand controlled munition plants in Great Britain alone. Of these nineteen out of twenty never produced war materials before the war broke out. They employ nearly three million men and nearly three quarters of a million women. The vastness of the industry in England is not out of proportion to that in France. Although Germany holds seventy per cent of France's coal and some eighty per cent of her iron, France has been able, by the opening up of new furnaces, and by immense importations of ore and pig metal largely to overcome this handicap.

While it is very difficult to present authentic figures upon the proportions of the munitions used by the allies furnished by the United States, the figures of the Department of Commerce do show something of the growth of the munition trade. Authorities widely disagree as to the percentage of America's contribution to munitions. One authority puts it as low as two per cent, while another says that it does not exceed five per cent. Whatever the percentage may be, the figures of the Department of Commerce show that during the first eight months of 1914, our exports of horses, mules, brass and manufactures of brass, autos, copper and manufactures of copper, explosives, india rubber products, iron and steel manufactures, lead, leather and manufactures of leather, nickel, mineral oils, sugar, surgical apparatus, tin, zinc and manufactures of zinc amounted to $433,000,000. During the first eight months of 1916, our exports of those same materials amounted to $1,986,000,000. From these figures it would appear that our contribution to the munitions trade of Europe during the year 1916 would approximate more than $2,000,000,000. Our exportation of explosives alone for the calendar year will reach upward of $700,000,000. During the first nine months of 1916 American exports to the allied nations amounted to three billion and a quarter dollars as against three quarters of a billion dollars for all of the other nations of the earth, belligerent and neutral alike.

The labor demands of the munition industry in the United States have reached unprecedented heights. Recently one big manufacturer of munitions requested the United States Army authorities to give him the names of the rejected recruits between the ages of twenty-one and thirty, these men being offered a wage of from three and a half to five dollars a day, with lodging at fifty cents a week.

NEW YORK'S "INFIDEL MISSIONS"

A campaign for the destruction of Christianity is not only under way in New York, but its intrenchments are thrown out in a number of secularizing organizations. Christians have been "settling back with a sense of security in their Christianity, content to have pastors and a few other leaders take the entire responsibility of extending the gospel," says The Missionary Review of the World (New York). While some at least have been contented with such a course, the "Freethinkers" have been banding themselves together and pledging each other support, until this journal sees "confronting the Christian church a strong, energetic, and persistently busy organized force of infidelity whose members are actively engaged in denying the deity and authority of Jesus Christ and attempting to overthrow the Christian church." The Review bases its observations on facts furnished it by Mr. John N. Wolf, superintendent of the Beacon Light Gospel Hall, which are these:

Several infidel organizations in New York City are known by various titles that do not indicate their real character. Their favorite methods of attack are: first, aggressive outdoor meetings; holding meetings at Madison Square and in all the principal thoroughfares at noon and at night whenever the weather permits. At these meetings Jesus Christ and the Bible are held up to ridicule, and many blasphemies are uttered.

Distribution of infidel literature is a second method of attack. Books and pamphlets written by Tom Paine, Robert G. Ingersoll, Voltaire, and others are widely distributed to the young men who make up most of the audiences, and who eagerly buy almost anything that is offered in that line. A monthly magazine is also published for the purpose of "educating the public and freeing them from the bondage of religion."

A third form of this Satanic activity is the debate, held sometimes at the public squares and sometimes in halls. The favorite themes at these meetings are: "The resurrection," "The virgin birth," "The trinity," "The deity of Christ," and "The authenticity of the Bible." These debates are often carried on by educated and able men, who display considerable familiarity with the subjects. The enemy of God has able generals.

Another method employed to spread infidelity is the establishment of "Sunday schools." At least four of these in New York City have come to our attention recently. Boys and girls of the neighborhood are brought together and are taught that the Bible is not true and that Jesus Christ was either a mere man or is the mere creation of somebody's distorted imagination. Not long ago a seemingly prosperous man boasted that his two boys, ten and twelve years of age, could and did "argue Christianity out of their schoolmates whenever the opportunity afforded." What harvest must we expect from such seed sowing?

This aggressive infidelity and agnosticism are a challenge to the Christian church to proclaim the gospel by word and deed to the unchurched and unsaved multitudes of men, women and children in our cities. Many pastors and laymen are recognizing the opportunity offered by the street meeting to reach the masses, and year after year, during the spring, summer and fall months, they have gone out into the highways and byways preaching the word of Life. If the average Christian layman were only half as energetic and enthusiastic in witnessing to his faith as the average "Freethinker" is in voicing his unbelief, the activities of organized infidelity in New York City would be met with such a wave of aggressive evangelism as has not been known since the apostolic days. Men and women, boys and girls, would then be brought from under the blighting, damning influence of infidelity into the light and liberty of the Son of God.

LOST PREHISTORIC CITY FOUND IN PARAGUAY

Excavating for the foundations of a new prison near Asuncion, Paraguay, workmen uncovered the remains of a prehistoric city which archaeologists pronounce a kind of Paraguayan Pompeii.

The town was laid out in rectangular squares, with diagonal avenues and buildings of considerable size and architectural pretensions. Local experts figure the city disappeared long before Columbus sailed.—Milwaukee Leader, February 11, 1917.

[There is considerable interest in the above brief news dispatch, for it will be remembered that most of the civilization of South America was confined to the western part of the continent.—EDITORS.]

The realization of God's presence is the one sovereign remedy against temptation.—Fenelon.

The Christian faith is like a grand cathedral with divinely pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory, nor can possibly imagine any; standing within, every ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakable splendor.—Hawthorne.

Table Etiquette and Table Service---Excerpts

The underlying principle of all rules of etiquette is consideration for others. "Table manner and table service are an excellent test of the refinement of a family and of a people."

Remember:

To stand back of your chair at the table until the hostess gives the signal to be seated.

In sitting, one should do so from the left. He should arise from the same side.

Not to lift the napkin in air while folding.

The fork alone should be used for most "made dishes." Either the fork or the spoon, may be used with ice cream.

Never to leave the spoon standing in the cup.

Not to use bread to obtain the last bit of gravy or sauce.

In offering to serve anyone at the table, to use one of these forms: "May I help you?" "May I offer you?" "Let me give you," etc.

Table Etiquette and Service, issued by the domestic science department of the Kansas State Agricultural College about 1909 or 1910 forms the basis for the excerpts preceding.

I realize that mothers frequently have a trying as well as an import duty in teaching the little family some of the first essentials of table etiquette. I said trying, because I know from living in so many different homes, as a roomer and boarder, that frequently the husband and father is not only indifferent to such details of courtesy but may even assume an attitude of ridicule toward them.

But don't give up. Remember there is no time like childhood for forming habits that are worth while. And any habit that shows refinement should be cultivated, I know you will agree. It may have even a mercenary value as was related to me not long ago: A young college graduate of excellent personality and brilliant mind was to be chosen to fill a very important position, but after dining with the men who were considering him, failed to receive the appointment simply because his table manners were so objectionable.

Courtesy in the Home

Home, one of the most sacred places on earth, is the place above all others to use courtesy. Who needs the most attention and care, the one you meet but occasionally, or the one who shares your daily burdens and trials? Little deeds of kindness and acts of love are as pleasing to your companion now as they were in youth. Why be careless or thoughtless about bestowing them?

The ties between husband and wife have been taken to typify the relation between Christ and the church. Both have been commanded to become "one"—husband and wife, no less than Christ and his church. If ever divine guidance is needed, it is when contemplating the matrimonial step, for if it guides and rules then, and God's approval is upon the choice made, the marriage will be happy and the home become as was intended by our maker.

Sometimes parents in a home deny themselves all for their children. Is this good and well for these same children? I fear it is only selfishness or indolence, after all! Children who are granted every whim, will make selfish, unkind men and women. No, better let the children sacrifice with the parents! This will work for their best future good. It may seem hard to parental "love"; but does not the eternal and allwise Father let his children suffer present trials for their future good? Many a heartache and many a pain he permits us to bear, and perhaps many a tear his tenderness sheds over us because it must be so; but he does not humor us and give us everything we want, to our own undoing! He does not let sympathy rob justice. Should we not follow his example in this? It may seem hard, indeed, but is it not really the only genuine love after all?

It is pleasing in the family to hear the ready words, "Thank you," after a service has been rendered—no matter how small. It encourages each one to perform more acts of kindness. Encouragement does more to help one onward than cross words and faultfinding.

Manners should begin at home; then one will feel at ease among others, and will not easily forget the small things which mark the courteous and the thoughtful. The place we daily occupy is the place in which to give out our best. Little courtesies shown make home so happy!

Husbands, if you constantly show your love and respect for your wives, your children will also show theirs, and there will be fewer unruly ones. Teach them by your example to esteem and treasure the one who gave them being at the cost of pain and sacrifice. A home wherein a parent is scolded and complained of continually, breeds disrespect and ill humor in the children which will make them less fitted for useful and helpful lives. Help to make home ties the strongest and best on earth, and home the best and most enjoyable place on earth; then we will have better church members, better prayer services, better behavior in children away from home, and more God-fearing and God loving men, women, and children everywhere.

Husband, a bucket of water or coal lifted or carried for your wife is but a small deed of kindness, perhaps, but it is highly appreciated by her, not because she may not be physically able to do this for herself, but the deed is glorified by your thoughtfulness and loving care for her. Such things always win—always touch her heart, and she responds happily with her part of service in the home. A man who rises and builds the fires commands respect where a lazy one would not. She does not want you to be a servant to her, but she feels proud of one who is willing to cheerfully bear his part of the burden, and home is made oh, so happy by just these small deeds of kindness!

The Bible says "give honor unto the wife as the weaker vessel"; so do not expect her to use masculine strength. She was not made for that. She has her own sphere to occupy, her own burdens to bear, which you cannot help her with, except by your sympathy and love. In these she should be shielded and guarded as something precious and sacred, that she may happily discharge life's larger duties. Thus she may be kept young, her heart light with love and joy, and be a more pleasant companion for you, and the center of the home interests.

Wives, you must realize, however, that the burden of courtesy and kindness in the home is not to be borne by the man alone! There are just as many times and ways in which you must show your regard and thoughtfulness for the man who stands between you and the world! They may be little things—trivial in themselves—but altogether they make or mar the happiness of a home. His clothes should always be kept clean and in order. There should be a place for everything, and everything in its place. Otherwise, a man, coming home to find disorder and uncleanness, becomes discouraged. Should he need something in a hurry, which has been misplaced by a careless wife, can he be blamed for giving hasty expression to his irritation? The unkind word slips out unawares, and who is most to blame if you neglected the little things upon which hinge the larger?

Be with your husband as much as possible; plan for him; be cheerful, and laugh with him, or weep with him, as the moment requires. Let his joys and sorrows be your joys and sorrows, his triumphs and disappointments yours also. Be his helpmate in every respect. Counsel with him; be "one," in every sense of the word. If at times you see things from different angles, try to reach the happy medium; each give in a little, if need be, and do not fret if all isn't exactly as you desire. If it is impossible to reach that happy compromise, just let the matter rest—seek divine help and guidance together, and all things will work out for the best, sometime in the future. Let nothing draw you apart, but cleave unto each other, though all the world forsake you.

And wives, use your heads! Don't leave all the thinking to your companion. Help him. Two heads are better than one! True, the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ is head of the church, but remember that Christ permits the church to have a head, too. So, wives, use the intelligence the Lord has given you, and do not depend upon the man to do his thinking and yours, too.

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loves you; then our homes will be as God intended them—places of refuge and peace—heavens on earth, and places in which to rear our children in the love and admonition of the Lord.

SISTER JAMES DAWSON.

Social Service, Chapter Three

"Work then for pleasure; paint or sing or carve
The thing thou lovest, though the body starve.
Who works for Glory misses off the goal;
Who works for money coins his very soul.
Work for the work's sake, then, and it may be
That these things shall be added unto thee."

We realize that the present progressive era and all its modern movements continually open new avenues of activity. To be successful as individuals as well as organizations we must have the right perspective of existing conditions of the present time. Efficiency is indeed indispensable in every phase of our work, and in its train follows with equal importance economy, adaptability, tact, patience, perseverance.

In order to find our work crowned with success it must be conscientiously and well done, even to every minute detail. In our daily efforts we must constantly seek opportunities to perfect ourselves, always bearing in mind that life is a training school for all mankind, in which we learn wisdom and gain knowledge day by day, making the most of the great Master's blessings, to his glory and honor.

As we enter a home, no matter whether it happens to be a mansion or a hut, it is to our advantage to observe the conditions, the circumstances, the atmosphere and attitude of the people of the home. It is just as important to ascertain the patient's state of mind as the needs and comforts of the body. In coming into the midst of a household, use much tact and discretion so as to avoid giving the impression of a stranger with strange ways. Make the family feel that they have a friend that has come to comfort, to help, to cheer.

The home of the needy, where it is often impossible to procure necessary supplies and comforts, needs an exercise of ingenuity along the lines entitled to inventors. In various instances it is necessary to scrub floors and furniture, usually the first thing after giving the patient the most necessary treatment and attention, to wash bedclothes and towels, and when there is no bed linen, to procure and use as suitable rags as can be found. Then, further, for protection, improvise all kinds of sanitary measures and save the community.

There are so many homes where unsanitary, filthy conditions, poverty and destitution exist, largely due to ignorance and mismanagement. Here should be used influence to stimulate in the people the desire and ambition to practice system and economy, as well as cleanliness and sanitation in their daily lives and surroundings. A good influence will work wonders if tactfully and judiciously exerted.

First we will talk about the tuberculosis patient—which presents a problem not merely individual, but distinctly social; for tuberculosis affects the patient in all his social relations. He is often a member of a family group where infection of others is threatened. He may be living in a crowded tenement, where darkness and dirt foster the life of the bacilli. He may be a workman in a dusty factory or handling food which is sold to an unsuspecting public. It is almost impossible to treat the physical symptoms of the tuberculosis patient without considering and treating his social conditions.

The principle of cooperation is applied more often in the solution of the tuberculosis problem than in almost any other problem of social work; for here we must have not alone the cooperation of the patient himself, but also of his family, of local boards of health, tenement house and factory inspector, and often the employer and the church if we hope for any measure of success.

The social workers who have had experience with tuberculosis problems realize that what can be done for each individual patient seems to depend less on the state of the disease than on the character and temperament of the patient, his possibilities of education, and the community resources for proper treatment.

Because the plan of treatment for a tuberculosis patient depends so largely upon the home conditions and home facilities for treatment, on the temperament of the patient and his financial status, the social worker as we have seen, becomes an important element in the development of the plan by which the patient can secure the desired rest, fresh air and good food.

Prevention through education in laws of hygiene is a slow measure, but it must be taught by every social worker if she hopes to do her part.

The opportunity for spreading the gospel of fresh air, food and rest is offered every day. What we expect of our social workers is better means of health education for future generations.

The Lamoni Local

The Lamoni local now includes four classes in the educational department, two circles of Orioles and three societies in the aid and service department, the latest member being the Rosalia Society of Willing Workers. The purpose of this society is to sew for the Children's Home, and its name was chosen in honor of Sister Rosalia Dancer. Many hearts will warm at this tribute, remembering the kindly ministrations of this dear sister, who so quietly went about doing good in all the early years of Lamoni history. What changes there have been and what gladness it would have brought to this faithful one to see the many who are now in position to help where then there were so few.

Of the call of our local officers a "get together" meeting was held in the high school building on the evening of December 5. All of the women's organizations in town and one country club,—thirteen societies in all—were represented, nine of them not being members of the auxiliary. The object of the meeting was to promote friendliness and interest in the work of one another, to see ourselves in the light of what others are doing and to learn where we may cooperate.

A program including music, a reading, and addresses by the presidents of the various organizations was given in the assembly room, after which light refreshments were served in the domestic science room. The Lamoni orchestra kindly furnished music during the hour of serving and of social converse.

A business meeting of the local held on January 29 provided for quarterly meetings, the election of officers to take place at the meeting of the third quarter.

A committee was appointed to put in operation some plan for assisting in the support of the Children's Home. Orioles and others of the auxiliary in various places have given inspiration by their generous contributions and we feel that we must be doing our part. We should like to see fulfilled the suggestion of the home treasurer, that before long the home may be entirely supported by the auxiliary. This would indeed be fitting, since it was started by the women of the church and is an avowed object of benefit by the auxiliary.

An interesting item of business at this meeting was the provision for an informal reception by the Lamoni local to be held during the time of the General Conference for visiting members of the auxiliary. We hope to greet a large number from our sister societies on that occasion.

Since our last report to these columns two social evenings have been enjoyed by educational department members and their friends. At one the theme for the program was "The work of the auxiliary." At the other a Bible program was given, the theme being "The shepherd." "Li'l brack sheep," "The ninety and nine" in song, and selections from "Our Syrian Guest" added to the beauty of material drawn directly from the Bible, all together producing a delightful entertainment.

One of the women's classes taught by Professor McDowell having finished a course in the history of education has now taken up the study of medieval and modern history. Brother McDowell's method of instruction leads the class to look for the meanings of history in its effect upon the civilization of the world, rather than to burden the mind with details of date and incident, and is thus unusually helpful.

The class in mothers' and teachers' problems has made the beginning of a library from which books and magazines may be borrowed. These books are such as deal with the child development and the interests of the home and are free not only to attending members but to others unable to attend. A number of them have been secured from the State library commission, some have been donated and some placed temporarily, to be withdrawn at the desire of the owners. A few have been purchased. We hope to make this library a very helpful adjunct to our work.

The Graceland Patronesses have been giving attention to their chosen work, their chief activity during the winter months having been the expenditure of money previously accumulated. As a result the dormitories have new lavatories, and added comforts in the sleeping apartments while the treasurer shows a good balance still in hand.

Our Oriole girls have a new superintendent. Mrs. W. H. Blair having resigned because of poor health, Mrs. Hubert Case has been chosen to succeed her.

CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
Press Chairman Lamoni Local.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

Montana

[The following are extracts from a newsy personal letter to the associate editor. We are confident that our readers will be as interested as we were in the incidents related.—EDITORS.]

Your editorial for January 31 in HERALD is fine, and what you say about your item column strikes me as splendid.

One of the best meetings ever held in the district just closed at Nashua, Montana, January 2 to 21. Elder William Sparling and myself held forth there for three weeks, with a splendid attendance and interest, one baptism, and subscriptions and books sold amounting to about twenty-five dollars, a new place for the gospel to be heard. Brother C. W. Humphrey stood the expense, which amounted to nearly one hundred dollars.

I was called here, Harlem, to administer to Brother and Sister T. Gordon's little girl who has typhoid fever—she is doing nicely. There is an epidemic of it here—about seventy-five cases reported. While here we have the use of the Presbyterian church, but few are coming out to hear, but a Jew attends and expresses a deep interest in the work—has heard it before. I recently lectured several nights in the courthouse at Glasgow; a couple of nights when I advertised special subjects I secured good crowds, but other nights only a few. Severe cold weather hindered some from coming.

I wish you every success in your work, and the blessing of God upon the whole church in its forward movement to accomplish Zion's redemption.

Your brother in Christ,

HARLEM, MONTANA.

JAMES C. PAGE.

Northeastern Illinois

We are pleased to be able to report some progress in this district both spiritually and temporally, but I assure you that as a district we are not satisfied; we can see many things that we desire to see accomplished in their time and place.

The district conference that met January 27, 28 with the Central Chicago Branch was blessed with a goodly degree of the Spirit of peace and was the largest gathering of Saints that the writer has ever seen in the district. In one way it was a pleasant surprise, for some had thought the attendance would be light, seeing the times are very stringent in many ways. Of one thing I am convinced; that the greater the sacrifice, the greater the blessing, in God's work. And I believe that if the Saints knew that in just one year hence the Savior would come we would accomplish more in one year than we have been doing in five, individually and collectively. I also feel that there are many friends not yet of us, that could they see a more practical demonstration of what we believe and the three books teach, they would soon be of us. They are just waiting to see if we really mean what we say!

However, as I compare our present conditions with those that confronted the church in 1860, great progress can be noted. We can see that then the law of tithing was little understood, while to-day we see that quite a percentage of the Saints are tithepayers and more are learning their duty each year, so we should not be discouraged, but continue in the good work.

To me, two things are necessary: loyalty to Christ and his church, and loyalty to our country. And if our Saints only realized the power of a united effort, the needs of every member could soon be supplied and no widow's or orphan's cry, ever go unheeded. But in many instances members and branches are paying twice as much to secret orders and insurance companies as to the coffers of the church.

In Doctrine and Covenants 1:4, we read: "Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spoke unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets; the weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh [italics mine] but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.

From this and other scriptures we learn that our heavenly Father does not want us to trust in the arm of flesh, but in the living God. His ways are best in the long or the short experience. So we are trying to teach the young that we should make the church the place of our trust, where we have godly men, attending to the finances of the church, and so we can trust in God's way, no matter what the world may say.

Should my life be brought to a close shortly, all that I ask is that my wife receive the necessary things of life, and sufficient to care for, and educate the children, allowing them the proper claim on the church, as provided in the law revealed in these last days.

Now if we were all willing to trust to God, that which he has promised to do, how different the financial conditions of the church would soon be. I believe that the younger men and women of the church are thus beginning to view this matter. I find many in this district who are willing to make the interests of the church the first thing of their lives. We want every one in this state of mind all over the world, wherever the restored gospel is planted. We are glad to note that the Saints of this district are remembering Elder R. N. Burwell, bishop's agent, and he ever stands ready to write you your receipts. His address is Dalton, Illinois. Say if the Saints could see the smile that lights up his face as the tithes and offerings come in you would do it again! Your servant in Christ,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

Love

The spirit of love comes down from above
To quicken our souls with life,
Oh, who would remove
That blessing from God,
By envy or malice or strife?

The Spirit of love helps us to improve,
And strengthens our souls with life;
May those who misjudge
Come out from the grudge
And remove them from malice and strife.

The spirit of love, pure light from above,
Which marks out our course in life—
Lord may we pursue
The work we should do.
With love—not envy or strife. IDA M. BROWN.

Purity

(Tune: "Old Oaken Bucket")

How dear to my heart are the sweet gospel blessings,
When our loving Father presents them to view.
The gifts and the blessings enjoyed by our fathers,
Again are enjoyed by the faithful and true.

Chorus:

The old gospel story, the sweet angel message,
'Twas preached by our Savior, the prophets and seers,
And sweeter it grows, as we older grow in it.
And gives us to know that our Father is near.

How sweet was that day we went forth to receive it,
And promised our Father his love to obey,
And as we obey we enjoy his sweet Spirit,
And feel we have come to our Father to stay.

Then let us be pure as the day is approaching,
When Jesus is coming with all of his Saints,
And then we'll rejoice in the city of Zion,
And have no more trials or earthly complaints.

ORVAL L. THOMPSON.

Resignation

There are thoughts in my heart that I cannot express,
A song that I cannot well sing;
There's a prayer on my lips that can never be heard,
Except by my Savior and King.

There's a calm I maintain as the dark passions rise
In those who delight in ill strife;
There's a hope in my soul that sustains full my faith,
Amid all the doubts of this life.

There's a joy I can claim in a righteous intent,
Surpassing the thrill of the throng;
There's a solace and balm for my heart when I know
My efforts have thwarted the wrong.

There awaits a reward for the man who endures
All ills which beset him so sore,
There's a harp and a crown and a mansion of gold
Across on the evergreen shore.

—William Henry Basham.

A Prayer

(Tune: Woodworth—Saints' Hymnal, No. 138.)

Oh my Lord! if I could do
Something for thee, for my Savior too,
Something great or something small
Something to help us,
One and all.

Day by day I pray to thee
 More of thy Spirit give to me;
 More for thy Saints lest we fall
 I pray for help, for
 One and all.

Father in heaven, I'll do or be,
 All that my Savior asks of me;
 Helping others to hear thy call
 And helping, helping,
 One and all.

CATHERINE THOMAS BOOHER.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From Here and There

If there are any Saints in or near Sulphur Springs, Texas, kindly write to Lulu Boothe, Paris, Tennessee, route 5, a sister with relatives who own property near there.

Elder J. R. Grice writes from Allenton, Michigan, on the 21st that he is attending the Scott-Turney debate at that place. The latter attacked our faith and the result is a sixteen-session debate with S. W. L. Scott. J. F. Curtis is moderating.

From Plano, Illinois, F. F. Wipper writes that he is just closing a series of illustrated lectures. He says Elders F. M. Cooper and C. H. Burr are on the sick list, while Eli M. Wildermuth seldom ventures out except when the weather is very favorable.

The president of the Deselm Branch, twelve miles from Kankakee, Illinois, would like to know if there are any Saints or friends of the work in the latter city. If there are, he would like to have them communicate with him. Address Earl D. Rogers, Manteno, Illinois.

As one of the isolated ones, Sister Mary Chapman writes from Grant Park, Illinois, that she is almost eighty-three years old and enjoying good health. She appreciates the church papers very highly and relates that she was healed very remarkably by faith and prayers during the past year.

Being isolated, the HERALD and Ensign are the only preachers who ordinarily reach Sister G. M. Routh of Salem, Missouri. However, she is expecting a visit from Brethren T. C. Kelley and William Sparling later on. She has two little ones who have not been blessed.

We often hear from Detroit, Michigan. Brother Howard Carpenter of 1460 Saint Aubin Avenue, writes as a result of printing their address some have called on them with mutually good results. He speaks highly of the month's series of services at the Third Branch, as a result of which twelve were baptized through the efforts of Elder J. R. Grice.

The Oak Dale Branch at Hamilton, Missouri, was recently visited by William Lewis and later by Bishop Richard Bullard. A sentiment is evidently increasing in that district toward the purchase of an automobile for the bishop of the Far West District. It is argued that the extra places which this will allow him to visit, with the time saved, will pay for the car in a short time.

Elder Charles J. Smith writes from Southern Nebraska District that he is favorably impressed with our items in this department and hopes many will fall in line. He thinks the boiling down process may be helpful. He says: "From Nebraska City on the east to Eustis on the west, Platte River on the north, Kansas on the south, work is prospering and the prospects getting brighter all the time."

There is a little band of six Saints at Erickson, British Columbia, and Sister H. Young writes from that place saying that Elder R. Newby is very favorably thought of by our people and nonmembers as well. She writes of a remarkable manifestation of God's power in healing, which is very convincing to all. In the weekly prayer meetings, the manifestations of the Spirit through the gifts of prophecy are much appreciated.

The recent conference in Des Moines, Iowa, is reported by R. J. Farthing of that place as perhaps the best attended conference ever held in the district. Bishop McGuire was present and conducted a round table discussion on Sunday afternoon, preaching in the evening. Meals were served on Sunday in the church basement by the young ladies of the Sunday school Bible class. Other interesting details will be found in the minutes of the conference.

A branch of 29 members was organized at Sedalia, Missouri, on the 11th, adding another branch to the Holden Stake. The stake presidency presided and a number of the stake and general officers were present. A Sunday school has been maintained at Sedalia for several years with occasional preaching services, and we rejoice with them that they have grown sufficiently to justify a branch organization. Elder C. L. House was elected president.

Brother Gerritt Juergens of Glidden, Iowa, was invited by the high school pupils of Perry to sing a solo, and sang three. He is much appreciated by all who heard him, and he is placed alongside the noted Theo Karl, a Perry product. Their voices have the same range. Brother Juergens not only sings high tones with delicacy and sweetness but his deep tones are rich and beautiful; there are no imperfect tones in the range. This is unusual, and we are glad that he is so favored, and possesses a willingness to use his talents for good.

Nearly every branch in the Central Oklahoma District was represented at the well-attended conference on the 17th and 18th at Terilton. Sessions harmonious, business done with dispatch, and preaching and social services edifying and uplifting, says Brother Joseph Arber. At the Sunday afternoon service the Lord blessed those present with the gift of prophecy to comfort and strengthen. Of the active ministry present were: W. M. Aylor, James M. Smith, Joseph Arber, with Bishop Ellis Short and wife representing the auxiliary, and Sister O. L. James directing the music.

"One of the most encouraging features of our work at the present time is that the Saints quite generally are awakening to the need of their support financially. All along the line we see they are beginning to get a better understanding of the law, and are filing their inventories with the bishop and arranging so far as they are able to do so to pay their tithing," writes J. E. Vanderwood from Madison, Oklahoma. "If all will do what the law requires, it will be but a short time until Zion will become a reality, the poor will be relieved, and the families of the missionaries will be properly provided for. Quite generally there seems to be a determination and a willingness on the part of the Saints to achieve higher ground.

Let us all labor and pray that the final victory may be hastened."

The trend of affairs in the Detroit, Michigan, Branch are reported as having been upward for many months. The appeal to the youth of the church has been heeded and the young generation are stepping forward to fill the positions their elders are laying down. The young people's early morning prayer meeting is proving a powerful force in the lives of the Saints. Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths entertained large audiences two evenings recently with experiences in the Holy Land, illustrated with views of the country and its people. The death of the child of Brother and Sister Walter Bennet is reported, they having recently removed to Pontiac.

Bringing Forth Fruits of a Life in Christ

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."—John 15: 8. If we do not bear fruit are we his disciples? Is not that the ground upon which we are his disciples? What think ye?

The railroads say, safety first; Christ says, purity first. To live a pure life must be followed to gain the recognition of Jesus as his disciples. Paul had a clear conception of true conditions of a life in Christ. "Christ in you the hope of glory." "Yes, and that by a divine process. When you are baptized in water you are born into Christ in part, when you are confirmed you receive the Holy Spirit, the germ of a new life enters you. Now you are a citizen of the kingdom of Christ, and to be true to your citizenship you must bring forth the fruits of this new life. If you fail to bear fruit, will you have the "hope of glory"? Think about it.

If you have the Holy Spirit will it not be apparent? Has it changed? No, you say God cannot change. Very well, then it will show its presence as of old. The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." If you put sugar into anything will it not show its presence? If you have the Holy Spirit will it not also? If you have not the Spirit what does that show? "God is no respecter of persons," so there must be something wrong with you. What would you think of a rosebush that never had any roses on it? or an apple tree that never had any apples on it? What would you do with it? What will God do with us? We are governed by law—the law of God. Christ says, "if you bring forth much fruit, you glorify my Father." Can we do it any other way? If we do not glorify—honor God, what are we doing? We will be like the rosebush which had no roses on, or the apple tree that never had apples on.

God first in all things, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind and soul." What else have you? That shows that all the forces of the being, according to the divine desire, shall be concentrated upon God, to do his direction—will.

What kind of fruits should we bear? must they not be the fruits to love of God and to and for his cause? to advance its interests? If you wanted to buy a piano or some other thing, you would make a strenuous effort to do so—make sacrifices to do so—are you doing that? Is not the promotion of the greatest thing in the universe, of more worth than a piano or anything that will perish? Will we fail in a financial way? The Lord says "Prove me herewith." With what? Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house. What for? To care for the missionaries' families who are giving their all to promote the work of Christ, to care for the needy in the church.

Can you think of any better effort in life? As you make others happy, your own happiness will be increased. "Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are his." Let us be wise unto salvation. Is not that what we are aiming at, trying to get? If not, what is your aim? Can you do it your way?

The Lord says: "It must be done in mine own way." Do you believe it? "Heaven and earth may pass away, but my word shall not fail."—Jesus. What have you? What do you want? How are you going to get it? It must be gotten in some definite way. Jesus says; "I am the way the truth and the life—the light of the world." Can you get your sins remitted only the way Jesus says? Then can you bear fruit only as he says? Will some other kind do? Will indifference do for effort as he directs? We are being tested now to prove our fidelity. The just shall live by faith. Faith in what? In yourself? No, in God and his means of salvation. God waits for us, we don't have to wait for him. His plans are perfected.

Let us awaken, those who are asleep. Let us bend every effort to advance the gospel work. Better to do it now than to wait till we get over on the other side and wish we had. Let us not stand in our own light. If this gospel is worth anything it is worth every possible effort we can make for its advancement. "Ye are the salt of the earth," but if the salt has lost its saltiness wherewith will ye season it? Have salt in yourselves and have peace one with another, so that when you are ready to go to your record of life you may have peace, not fear.

Independence Stake

On February 18, those who occupied at the Second Branch, Walnut Park, Enoch Hill and the East Mission were W. W. Smith, A. Dwyer, M. H. Siegfried, George Jenkins, George Shearer, J. C. Foss and F. G. Christie. In the evening Brother Dwyer lectured on "Travels in Palestine" at the Brick Church and at the morning hour he gave a very interesting account of his conversion to the true doctrine as taught by the Reorganization.

The upper room of the Stone Church was well filled at the morning service, when Brother F. M. Sheehy held forth in a sermon, the cue of which was taken from the words of the anthem, as found in Isaiah 55: 7, "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Sung in a rich baritone, like that of our Doctor Frank Criley, and in phrases of response by a choir of sixty voices, these words had an effect of sublimity on the minds of both the preacher and the people. Quoting from the Doctrine and Covenants, sections sixty-four and forty-three, our brother's admonitions and instructions were sharp, yet mild and suggestive, and some of his closing words were: "We are on the road of success; but the justification of our evil deeds must be regulated by the law as it is expounded ex cathedra and not by any particular individual.

"We are governed by the supreme law of the gospel, the strong evidence of the divinity of this latter-day work."

At the Children's service, at the close of devotional exercises,—a simple prayer and a few songs from Zion's Praises, Sister Eunice Smith told, in a quiet and effective manner, the gospel story of the resurrection and the journey to Emmaus. This was about all and there was good order at the dismissal. Brother E. C. Harrington was in charge; and as usual, in the line of directing the little folks, in singing and in matters of deportment, his duties were well in hand.

The evening prayer was offered by Brother H. H. Robinson; the usually large audience settled down in an attitude of good attention to the offertory of the organist, hymn 114 was sung, and Brother Walter Smith began a vigorous discourse by reading selections of Paul's letter to the Hebrews, and also to the Corinthians. It was a telling sermon of efficiency. Being prayerful and clean and holy, he said, will not solve the problem before us: they only free the man for the race set before him. These are some of the words he read: "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." "This text," he said, "means to run for the glory of God. So run that ye may obtain the prize. Opportunities are rich. Having secured the running garment, and having endured the hardships, the time is ripe to enter in."

The midweek meetings have also been very interesting. The Prayer meeting on February 14, presided over by Bishop E. L. Kelley and Elder W. H. Deam, was as usual well attended and full of interest. On the 15th, while the sisters of the "Aid" were quilting, the class in story-telling, sitting in a half circle, just twelve in number, got busy, and after a few opening remarks by Sister W. W. Smith, the real work began, and it was found to be very profitable and instructive. Story-telling may be introduced in Sunday school, kindergarten and Religio work, junior church services and singing classes.

The attendance at Sunday school on February 18 was 836. The juniors and primaries are thriving in the lower room with twenty classes in each department. Good work was done by the junior orchestra under the leadership of Sister Cora Tonnahill, twelve members being present.

The first lecture of the teacher training class was given last Sunday, by W. W. Smith, and the second lecture will be given during the time of the stake Sunday school and Religio conventions, which will be held here February 24 and 25.

A noted gathering of educators and literary people, the National Education Association, will convene in Kansas City next week.

Let the good work go on.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Walking on the Water

As I noticed in a recent HERALD a desire to collect the different stories of Joseph Smith's attempt to walk upon the water, my memory harked back to the year 1856 or '57 as I heard it related by an old lady who came from Palmyra, New York. She was a devout Episcopalian.

Mother said, "We are Latter Day Saints—expect you call us Mormons." Yes, she knew all about Mormons from the very start, and the Mormon Bible Joe said he found in a hill a few miles from Palmyra. He pretended to work miracles, the chief one being to walk on the water. So the boys and fun loving class got him to set a date to exhibit his power. Old Mr. Knight was our near neighbor, back of his house was a pond and there the crowd gathered. Joe took the precaution to lay some planks just under the water and very confidently started to walk in, only to take a few steps and fall headlong into the water. Some boys had discovered the boards and carried them away. So the crowd had their fun and poor old Joe, as she called him, received a good wetting.

However, the old lady got so excited in relating the story

she declared it was true, for she saw it. Mother exclaimed, "Oh, Mrs. M——, you never saw it. It was at Buffalo, New York, that he attempted to walk on the water—the only place I ever heard of his being charged with such a foolish undertaking."

"Well," she said, "I saw the place they said he fell into the water. Old Mr. Knight was a very good man but like so many others in that community he went and joined the Mormons, too, and moved to Nauvoo. Yes, they were terrible deceivers and it was not safe for even the elect to investigate their pernicious doctrines."

Suffice to say we heard the old lady relate the same story several times but never again heard her say, "I saw it."

MRS. E. S. MASON.

The Evils of the Tongue

"But the tongue no man can tame, it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison."—James 3: 87.

Well might the Apostle James say this, for with it we can blast the brightest hopes, spot the purest character, ruin the best reputation, dissolve friendship, destroy peace, drive from the heart all love from those we have before loved and cherished, and turn the closest attachment to extreme hatred. The ties of friendship, the love of the family circle, the bonds of Christian societies, all can be injured, ruined by the tongue. It can drive away from the heart every ray of sunshine, and place therein sorrow and gloom.

With one unguarded word it can destroy the confidence of our brethren and sisters, and with those whom we are associated, who are watching us in every word, and to whom "we should be a light." By repeating things which we have heard we can bring reproach on the cause of Christ, cause doubts to arise in the minds of our brethren and sisters, and what is still worse, be a stumblingblock in the way of others, and turn aside those who are near the kingdom.

Dear Saints, let us think of the glorious liberties and blessings which we enjoy, that we may not hinder others from entering the fold of Christ, when we are led to speak any unkind word, or to repeating vain and idle conversation. Let us bridle the tongue when we are tempted to tell some story in circulation, calculated to injure the character or feelings of our brethren and sisters, or even anyone. Let us remember to do as we would be done by, and bridle the tongue. Yes, think, stop and bridle the tongue. Let us pray together for the Holy Spirit to enable us to control this unruly member, for oh, how much evil it can do. Yes, how often have I seen a brother and sister turn away from another, with a tear in the eye because of an unkind word that has been spoken. How often have I heard that fall from the lips of even Saints which has caused my heart to ache.

Let us then be watchful, careful, thoughtful and prayerful, that we may overcome. When we speak, let it be with sobriety and truth. When we see those around us bowed beneath the weight of the trials, sorrows and temptations which attend their path on every hand, let us hasten there and with words of cheerful hope and love, encourage them to press on. When we see those that are perishing without the gospel let us go there, and with words of light and wisdom teach them the way by the Holy Spirit's power, the way to eternal bliss. When we see our brothers or sisters do a wrong, let us go to them in a spirit of meekness and love and tell them their error. Do not fear, lest you will offend them, if you go in that spirit. But remember, if not at that time, they will see their wrong, and if true Latter Day Saints will confess it; let us not treat those that are sinning with neglect or coldness, but to the contrary let our heart's desire be for their welfare, and the salvation of their precious souls. Let us pray for them, and while we pray let it be from the heart, and not the "prayer of the lips only."

Let it be far from any Saint to be found telling the fault of any brother or sister to anyone else, and when others come to us to retail faults, let us tell them frankly, "We do not wish to hear you on that subject." Let us ever be heard to say, "If our brothers or sisters are overcome in some of their trials and do a wrong, there was no need of that. If I had been in their place I would not have done so." Unless we have been similarly tried let us wait until we pass through similar trials, and then we can say what we have done and so encourage them to try to overcome.

Brethren and sisters, I do not say that I have done all that is herein written, but it is my desire so to do, and knowing some of the weaknesses of the flesh I have written this, hoping some might be benefited.

Your sister in the gospel of love and peace,

MARY JANE RALLINGS.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD, Fern Street, Stoneyford Lane.

How I Became a Latter Day Saint

I opposed the latter-day work for several years, being a deacon in the Holiness Church. One day when my wife had taken sick, a Latter Day Saint sister who lived across the street asked if I cared if she called the elders of her church to administer to my wife. I told her that if my wife desired it I had no objections. The doctors had given her up and said they could do nothing for her. As soon as she was administered to she began to get better. We later moved from Joplin, where we then lived, to Neck, Missouri, and from there to Purcell. But this Latter Day Saint sister kept sending us word that she wanted us to go to the Latter Day Saint meetings. Finally, to please her, we did this, and heard the true doctrine of Christ, though I was still very stubborn. Still, I felt I was not satisfied with the doctrine I had, and I asked the Lord if he had the true church on earth that he would show it to me, and I would accept.

When I went home that night I went to a secret place to pray, where the Spirit had been enjoyed many times by myself, and asked the Lord that if the Latter Day Saint Church were the true one, and accepted by him, that he prove it to me by preventing the elder from going home until he came back to Purcell where we lived. He intended to go away the next morning to Kansas, and from there to Oklahoma, but after he had left Kansas, where he was preaching, while on the train he found a brother that was very ill, and that brother asked him to administer to him. It was discovered that no oil was available, and the conductor told the elder he had better go back to Joplin with him and take care of the man, for he was real sick. The elder finally decided to do this, and accompanied him to Joplin, where he found a temporary home for him. He procured some oil and administered to the man, and in a few minutes he was normal and free from his sickness.

Soon the elder went to the station to start for home, and when he arrived at the depot the train was late. Something told him to go to Purcell, so he started to the street car line, and when he reached there the car was just leaving, so he picked up his grips and went back to the depot and asked the agent about the train. The agent told him the train was one and a half hours late, so the elder concluded again that he would go to Purcell, but when he got back to the street car line the next car had just left. Much disturbed over these disappointments, the elder concluded that this time he would go back to the railroad station and stay there until he could get the train. This time he was informed that the train was wrecked, so once more the disappointed man started to the street car, determined to go to Purcell, which he did.

Arriving there he gave out announcements for preaching that night, and everyone was surprised that he had come back so soon, for I had told no one of my prayers. Upon entering the stand that evening he made the statement "I don't know just why I am here," but I knew, and after the sermon was over I was ready for baptism and told him so.

Thus I feel the Lord works in many ways to accomplish his will.

Your brother in Christ,

COMMERCE, OKLAHOMA.

SAWYER, IDAHO, February 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: I will let the Saints know we are still in the straight and narrow way with our faces toward the goal. We are willing workers, doing all we can for the weak Saints and trying to show the world that we are right.

Many changes have taken place in this locality since we united with the church. The gospel has been spread until there are not many here but what have either heard or had a chance to hear the angel's message, and I feel the time drawing down on the people. We would like to see Brother J. A. Bronson give one more series in Laclede. There are some good people waiting for him there. The call is urgent for more preaching, and it seems too bad to take our best elders to keep the Saints together. Is the time here when the Adversary is to get among and scatter us?

Saints, let us be humble and willing to forgive, also to ask forgiveness. Let us not be stiff-necked with our own—"God's household." Let us stand forth as we have never done in the past. Let us live the gospel every hour, that nothing will be permitted to enter our minds to think evil of our brethren and sisters. What are you going to do with these feelings when the Savior comes? I am sure they must be put away before then, for we are to be one. Then why be divided? Let us be up and throw away all malice and hard feelings, forgive and forget, even if we feel that "I am right and my brother wrong." He may feel the same, so then be willing to confess all to God with an open heart, that all will be well, and his work go on in peace.

Let us stand strong upon the "Rock of Ages," fearing nothing, for once we put ourselves in this position, directed by the Spirit, there is nothing to fear. God is with us and who can be against us? 'Tis the Spirit of truth and will show us things to come. This is the stand I take to-day. I am young in the work, but I have never doubted anything. The simplicity Brother Bronson used in preaching the eye or heart opener to us on the Book of Mormon gave me such an insight of the work, that I threw all away and boldly walked out for the Latter Day Saint, and since then I have talked the gospel wherever I go. I write of it to my friends. Many times I am led to do things that seem to me will do no good, but still I must try to feel at ease with the voice of the Spirit.

Saints, let us put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil, for the days are here, which Jesus told us of in Matthew 24: 24. Great signs and wonders are being done to-day, and their followers are many. We find good people among them, but also find it hard to convince them of the truth. Nevertheless we must keep on and not be discouraged, else we be deceived. Meekness and humility do not mean weakness. If all who complain of weakness will study this over, I believe it will be as plain to them as to me.

I am home department superintendent of the Spokane District, and I must admit that I have faced the wall of discouragement several times. Some seem to be so far from the straight and narrow way that they do not care to study or be one with us. Many of the local superintendents do not report even after I write and send them report blanks, but the Spirit has said "peace" to me, when I have done my duty. We are not to judge, but do all we can, with our eyes watching, our ears hearing, our hearts full of love for all. I love to labor for him; never think of tiring, for where we find so much pleasure we cannot find pain. Let us all resolve to stand firmer than ever and we will give God the honor, the glory.

Your humble sister,

MRS. JENNIE CRABB.

CARRINGTON, NORTH DAKOTA, February 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: The HERALD comes to our house as a very welcome and highly appreciated weekly visitor.

When we read letters from those who are isolated and see the zeal and faithfulness they express, it makes us feel as though we were not doing as much as we ought. To read lines written by those who are new in the church and feel the fellowship toward them that we do, we cannot help but recognize the fact that Almighty God is working among his people. It especially did me good to read the letter written by Sister Effie Dahl from the Minnesota District in the last issue of the HERALD. Perhaps more especially so because I have labored to some extent in Minnesota in the auxiliary work. To read a letter like that expressing a desire to work more for the Master, surely makes me feel as though we as members should awake to our duty and be willing to sacrifice more for the Master. The Master has said, speaking of the gathering, "Gather my people together unto me, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." How, then, can we as his Saints expect to be gathered to Zion unless we have sacrificed? Surely if our covenant with him has never called for sacrifice, or if we have not been willing to make the sacrifice, we cannot expect to be gathered.

Since September last we have been isolated. Previous to this time we were located in the Minneapolis Branch and enjoyed our labors with the Saints very much. Leaving a branch where one has the privilege of attending Sunday school, Religio and other church services is like taking a fish out of water. However, since coming here we have been privileged to hold a few meetings. Brother J. W. Peterson very ably presented the gospel message to those who came out. Brother Peterson and I had the opportunity of holding a conversation with two protestant ministers. One a Congregational; the other a Methodist. The Methodist minister gave me a dollar with which to buy him a Book of Mormon. I feel that the seed sown here by Brother Peterson will some day bring forth fruit. He surely has a kind and affirmative way of presenting the gospel. I believe if more of our missionaries would show the same spirit of regard for other people and their belief, their work would be much more effective. I also believe that if we as isolated members and also those who are living in locals would associate with members of other denominations more, and gain their good will by doing what we can to assist them, it would be far easier for our missionaries to get a hearing when they come around. On the other hand if we keep ourselves aloof and be narrow-minded enough not to associate with those who are not of our belief, they would naturally look down on us and would not consider giving our men a hearing. Remember we are in the world but need not be of the world.

Let those who are in locals and stakes remember the isolated ones in their prayers. We are with you in the conflict.

ROBERT J. WILDEY.

GREAT FALLS, MONTANA, February 11, 1917.

Editors Herald: The little band of Saints here have been strengthened by a recent visit from our estimable brother, Elder W. P. Bootman. An effort was made at cottage meetings in Boston Heights, and while we meet with very little success in regard to numbers, yet encouragement and new zeal were imparted to the Saints, and we sincerely hope that good may be the final result to others. Brother Bootman is an eloquent speaker and many times during our little series of meetings we experienced feelings of sadness that all the honest-hearted in the city were not privileged to hear the gracious words that fell from his lips with such power and force.

Elder Bootman was accompanied by his stepson, R. C. Davey, a noble young man but recently ordained to the Aaronic priesthood. He preached his first sermon for us and it is inspiring indeed to see a young man for the first time standing so bravely in defense of the glorious gospel of the Son of God. We were pleased to see the result of careful systematic study in his discourse.

The Great Falls Saints have regular meetings, Sunday school, Religio, preaching, prayer and sacrament, led by our genial Brother Price, but find ourselves handicapped for lack of a public place in which to meet. We are hoping some more new Saints may move in to help the work along.

In gospel bonds,

LAURA L. FREIE.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, February 13, 1917.

Editors Herald: It is some time since we have written to your columns and though we are almost snowbound here and with a coal famine threatened, yet church work as far as the branch is concerned is flourishing nicely. Elder James Pycock has been with us for some weeks and has aroused an excellent interest, supplemented recently by the ever welcome and smiling face of our patriarch, A. D. Angus. The attendance at the services, especially Sunday nights, has been a full house, and of the many strangers who have attended no one appeared to take issue with us, but all seemed to be satisfied and many are very much interested. Several have seen fit also to obey the gospel covenant and we hope to fill the font again in the near future.

We have recently organized an orchestra under the leadership of George Landes and consisting of nine instruments and the piano adds greatly to our musical talents. Our Sunday school is making excellent strides and the Religio is also doing nicely with Eugene Dixon again as president. We are planning to hold special services about March 10 and 11, to dedicate our church building and burn the mortgage. Elder Pycock is leading a campaign not only to wipe off the church debt but also to pay for a lot we purchased at the rear of the church and also to put in more suitable conveniences in the church building. We are hoping to have Brother U. W. Greene and several missionaries with us for the occasion.

We held our district Religio and Sunday school convention at Buffalo on the 3d and 4th, and despite the terrible cold weather at the time, a profitable convention was the result. The special features consisted of model school work and we trust greater efforts along teacher training and cooperation of the different schools may follow.

The city newspapers dealt with us very fair this winter.

The leading paper allowed us usually every Monday a nice write-up of our Sunday services, and we feel we have been before the public more and at less cost this year than ever in the past as a result. In fact, the entire city appears to know of Elder Pycoc, as many have been reading the sermon synopsis in the paper each week.

Yours in bonds,

1553 Willow Avenue.

Conference Daily

Every Latter Day Saint unable to attend the sessions of the coming General Conference, with the preceding sessions of the Religio and Sunday school General Conventions will find the Daily Herald to be issued during that time a necessity. In fact it has been found that many of those who attend the sessions subscribe to learn what the others who are in attendance are doing.

The first issue will be mailed out on Monday evening, April 2, and followed by an edition each day, except Sundays, till the close of the conference.

Many interesting details will be given for which room cannot be made in the regular issues of the Herald.

The price is only 25 cents for the entire time. Subscriptions should be sent in early so the lists may be made up and thus avoid mistakes and delay from a rush at the last moment. Each day's news will be made up in the evening and mailed out at 8.05 p. m., thus reaching subscribers promptly.

Burlington
Route

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

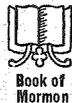

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

EDITORIAL

THE AUTHENTICITY OF THE BIBLE

In an article from the Literary Digest, "New York 'infidel missions'" in last week's HERALD, it will be noticed that the authenticity of the Bible is also attacked. Much of what was said in last week's editorial will also apply to this special topic, that is the lack of careful investigation by many young men, who accept a brief statement derogatory to the Bible as being true without any attempt to verify.

It is true that infidels of the past, attacking particular doctrines of the churches of their time, also attacked the Bible. It is true that some of the German critics are very severe in their statements, and have given some grounds for the caustic assertion "that the German critics can go down deeper into a question, can stay down longer and can come up muddier than anybody else." While this possesses some elements of truth concerning the extreme position of some German critics, it is not fair to many other able students of that country.

We have heard much at times of a statement to the effect that the bishops of the early church could not decide which books were canonical, so they agreed to place them all under the altar, and all that were found on the altar in the morning should be considered as canonical, and those found under the altar should be considered as uncanonical.

For a long time we were at a loss to trace any such story, as most of the English critics, and many of the German, present both the Old and the New Testament in a light entirely inconsistent with the correctness of such a story. But this past year it has been found in a book by Haeckel, The Riddle of the Universe (Welt Ratsel).

It appears that in the first few years after the appearance of this book, two hundred and fifty thousand copies were distributed in England by the Rationalists or Free thinkers of that country. How many have been distributed in recent years we are not informed, or how many have been distributed in this country.

The statements as they are printed in the English translation, second edition, 1901, are as follows:

As to the four canonical Gospels, we now know that they were selected from a host of contradictory and forged manuscripts of the first three centuries by the three hundred and eighteen bishops who assembled at the Council of Nicæa in 327. The entire list of gospels numbered forty; the canonical list contains four. As the contending and mutually abusive bishops could not agree about the choice, they determined to leave the selection to a miracle. They put all the books (according to the "Synodican" of Pappus) together underneath the altar and prayed that the apocryphal books of human origin might remain there, and the genuine inspired books might be miraculously placed on the table of the Lord. And that says tradition actually occurred!

This work no sooner appeared than it aroused a considerable storm of criticism in Germany. An English book which sets forth a part of this discussion is Criticisms of Life, by Horace J. Bridges. Mr. Bridges is himself a Free Thinker, but he rather resents the use of such works as rationalistic. After an extensive quotation, including the above, Mr. Bridges continues:

It is scarcely necessary to say that this farrago of ignorant nonsense was not allowed to pass unchallenged in Germany. Professor Friedrich Loofs of Halle promptly challenged Haeckel, and in doing so deliberately chose language as would make it possible for Haeckel, if he so desired, to prosecute his critic for libel. This Haeckel never thought fit to do; but the controversy disclosed the interesting fact that the whole of his information about early Christianity and the development of the church had been derived from a tenth rate "free thought" book by an obscure English journalist, of which the German translation was even worse than the original. No such crushing exposure of presumptuous ignorance was ever made before in the case of a man of academic training and career, who had won for himself deserved honors in his own field.

This is of interest as illustrating our criticism, that much of this attack upon the Bible is not based upon careful thought and investigation, but that even an obscure statement is taken and accepted without that critical examination, which we should expect a scientist to require in any research in his own special field.

Yet because some doctrine does not happen to agree with a student's ideas, he is often only too willing to accept and to use almost any weapon against religion in part or as a whole.

We cite this story and its correction in case others have been confronted with it. For this book, Welt Ratsel, we are informed, has been translated into twenty-four different languages including Sanskrit. So it may be doubted if the correction has as yet caught up with the original misstatement.

So far as the authenticity of the Bible is concerned and the history of its development, it is generally agreed by most English critics and many in Germany, that the real test of canon both in the Old and New Testaments is well expressed in 2 Peter 1: 20, 21.

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation, for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.—King James Version.

Or as a better translation has it:

Knowing this first that no prophecy of the scripture is given of any private will of man, for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.—Inspired Version.

In other words the test of canon for the Old Testament was inspiration. While some students are inclined to think that one or two books in the Old Testament do not show superior inspiration to some of the apochryphal books or other books, which have been omitted, still they admit there is nothing omitted to compare with the other thirty-seven or thirty-eight books which have been included. Keeping this test of inspiration in mind, they rather suggest that not only was this the criterion or canon of the Jewish church, but that these books were evidently so accepted by the people as containing the revelations of God. By this same test they stand approved by modern criticism, as showing forth the moving power of God, while at the same time showing often the mind and will of the prophet.

As for the New Testament, while the latest manuscripts (in Greek) which are reasonably complete, do not reach further back than the early part of the fourth century, and the versions now in existence (the New Testament in other languages than Greek) probably do not date much further back; still from all authority that can be brought to bear there appears to be a preponderance of agreement that these books were originally produced in the first century after Christ. In fact there is no other ancient book which possesses so much direct proof of its authenticity as does the Bible.

It is true that there were many Gospels, but no other to compare in inspirational value with the four that are included, nor do any of the others appear to date back so near to the time of Christ. There were several apocalypses, but none others compare with that of John.

There were many of the church fathers, who continued to write through all these early centuries, but as early as the first century most of the local congregations had quietly agreed upon the New Testament with very much the books it contains to-day.

They did not regard the canon as closed, but as time went by it was agreed by the successive churches that nothing else had appeared or was appearing to compare in inspirational value with that which was presented in the time of the apostles. The books were not always arranged in the same order. The Revelation of John was not as now at the end of the roll. But both in the eastern and western churches the books included were almost identical with those of to-day.

Finally in the fourth century, (we have usually seen it referred to as the council at Carthage, 399) the church confirmed the books of the present New Testament as being canonical. Of all the books received so far, these alone showed that exceptionally high degree of inspiration which insured inclusion in the canon.

Modern critics agree that, with the exception of two or three books included in the New Testament which they do not think show an especially high degree of inspiration, there is nothing omitted to compare with those books which are included in the New Testament, using as always as a test the moving power of God, or inspiration.

It seems significant that neither the Jewish church nor the early Christian church considered the canon closed, until they no longer received revelations, and this condition had continued for some time.

Perhaps we can bring it home by an incident which occurred in 1903, when we visited Utah on legal business. We there met an aunt of ours, who had belonged to the church in Nauvoo. Naturally we talked of many things. But one day as we were sitting out under the trees she talked as follows:

"Strange, strange how the church needed so many revelations for fourteen years and now has not needed any for more than sixty years."

"What, Auntie, with sixteen prophets, seers and revelators have you not been able to get one revelation?" (We attended a conference where each of the first presidency, the twelve and presiding patriarch, were sustained in their particular offices and as "prophet, seer and revelator" to the church.)

"Oh! what a pity! what a pity! that young Joseph did not follow in the footsteps of his father and become prophet, seer and revelator to the church."

"But, Auntie, he did. The only trouble is that you people out here will not receive the word of God through him."

We can see here apparently this same process in progress of development. It is now nearly seventy-three years, and except for the Manifesto there has been nothing published as received by them as a revelation during that period. Even the Manifesto was presented in a more or less doubtful way, scarcely as a revelation.

Joseph F. Smith, when on the stand in the Smoot investigation, declared that he had received no revelations for the church, nor had any been presented to that church by him. He even went further on the question of personal revelations to him, when he answered:

Well, I can say this; that if I live as I should in the line of my duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, just as any good Methodist or any other good church member might be. And so far as that is concerned, I say yes; I have had impressions of the Spirit upon my mind very frequently, but they are not in the sense revelations.—Smoot Investigation, vol. I, pp. 483, 484.

It is easy to see if this process continues for a century or two longer the canon of the scripture, so far as they are concerned, must be considered closed; if such is not already the case.

God has not withdrawn from humanity, but humanity has withdrawn from God. The Israelites refused the divine plan, so received a schoolmaster. After repeated warnings, that nation withdrew so far that it received no more prophets. That marked the end of the canon of the Old Testament.

The Christian church as prophesied by the Apostle Paul and also by the Master, and as shown by John in Revelation, soon departed from the truth as presented by the Master, and mingled their worship with some of the corruptions taken from the heathen nations around them. The result was the end of the canon of the New Testament. For they received nothing more of equal merit.

As the Nicolaitans, according to tradition, went into iniquity and immorality, so did a few of those who received the gospel in this age.

Polygamy, blood atonement and other doctrines marked the departure from God and hence the end of revelation.

Modern critics do not accept plenary or verbal inspiration for the Bible. It has been upon this question of plenary inspiration that much of the criticism has arisen. We have heard repeated attacks on the higher critics without an investigation of their claims. Yet much of the issue could be based upon this question: "Is the Bible verbally inspired?"

Many finding that the church would tolerate nothing else than immediate acceptance of verbal inspiration, and finding some parts that they could not believe verbally inspired, have gone on to the rejection of the whole book. This is unfortunate, for the book itself makes no such claim.

As early as the thirties the church we represent took the position that we cannot claim plenary inspiration for the Bible. There appears then no reason to claim it for any version of the Bible nor for any other book. But we do claim, and reason and fact support that claim, that men wrote as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. The truth is of God, the prophet clothes it in his own language, acting under divine inspiration.

To those who study the book carefully for themselves that divine power manifests itself. It is those who give it scant consideration, do not deeply read it, who form the greater part of its critics. Even that brilliant and caustic atheist, Heinrich Heine, expresses beautifully his deep admiration for this book of books, the Bible.

We remember we were asked by a young college graduate, "How is it that you and my grandmother claim to have had experiences of a remarkable nature, while I have not? Is it a sixth sense that some people have and others have not, or is it in every man?"

"We believe it is in every man."

"Then how is it that I with all my studies have not found it, while my grandmother has? She has not even been through the grammar school."

"Would you advise me, if I wanted a Thanksgiving dinner, to have it prepared by you or your grandmother?"

He laughed.

"She can make better pumpkin pies than you can, she can cook a turkey better than you can and can make better bread. It is true that you know more about mathematics and foreign languages and some departments of scientific learning. But your grandmother has spent seventy years not only in studying the way to cook and bake, but also in studying her Bible. She has prayed over it and she has secured results. You have investigated many things, but have not tried to find this one thing. When you apply yourself with the same energy to this that you have to mathematics, and the same continuance of effort, you will get results."

The Bible is a wonderful book. It is quite in a class by itself. There are other sacred books of antiquity but they do not compare with the Bible. Its authenticity is better established than that of any other book of antiquity. It is written, it is true, by man, and shows the marks of humanity. But they were men moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and the truth within it is of God. This divine truth may be found again to-day by him who reverently seeks to learn of God.

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHER

Last night Brother Augustine Dwyer addressed a great audience in the Lamoni church, telling them of the incidents connected with his conversion to our faith.

The audience, as audiences are in the habit of doing, listened with intense interest to his unaffected and sincere story and clung to his words as though afraid to let them go. No one can portray Brother Dwyer's lectures. That he had a full house, that his lectures are well received, that he is fully qualified to present some wonderfully moving experiences is the universal comment.

Moving as he has among recognized circles of culture, as the world recognizes culture; traveling into many interesting nooks and corners of the earth, under the most favorable circumstances, the fact that he became willing to accept the stigma which is bound to come in affiliating with us, means much to his hearers.

There is one outstanding feature in his story of his life: Mother.

With a mother who taught him the Bible so thoroughly that he could read it in Greek as well as English and could locate without hesitation any passage in the New Testament, he asks if it is any wonder that he was religiously inclined. With simple eloquence he appeals to the mothers in Israel to recognize their responsibilities in the personal training of their sons and daughters. He deplores the tendency to leave these all-important duties to the school or the church.

He tells of the part a certain young lad of the church played in his conversion, and thanks God that back of that boy's life there was motherhood of a most commendable type. Seek out great men in the various activities of life and in the immediate background will be found a noble mother, is the summary he presents.

"Brother" Dwyer as he prefers being called, even though he has two university degrees, will be in attendance at the General Conventions and Conference. He has coming to Saint Louis a collection of what the New York Sun commends as being the finest set of Holy Land pictures for stereopticon use in the United States. These may be used in later lectures. The announcements are that he will give a lecture on "The four evangelists" on the afternoon of April 1 in Lamoni. In the meantime he continues a lecture tour which includes Des Moines, Omaha, and other intermediate points.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

No Funds for Food Inquiry

The Senate struck from the civil sundry bill the provision which gave $400,000 to the federal trade commission to carry on an investigation of the causes for the extraordinary conditions in the food market.

Chinese Cabinet Resigns

The Chinese cabinet decided on the 4th that China would join the United States in severing diplomatic relations with Germany. The president refused to indorse their action, claiming that such power rested entirely with him. The premier and some of the cabinet immediately resigned and it is expected that the rest of the cabinet will resign. It is said that the Chinese parliament is almost unanimously in favor of the stand of the cabinet.

The European War

On the sea the submarines continue to destroy and sink in accordance with the proclaimed policy of Germany. On the land there has been what is designated as "the greatest retreat" on the western front since the battle of the Marne. The British have driven back German troops as much as two miles on an eleven-mile front and are said to seriously menace Bapaume. Kut-el-Amara in Mesopotamia is in the hands of the British, 1,730 prisoners having been taken, and British troops are making a considerable advance toward Bagdad.

Senate Refuses President's Request

The House of Representatives voted to allow the President the power to arm United States merchant ships in his effort to establish an armed neutrality, but the Senate, after a twenty-six-hour filibuster, ended the session without the matter coming to a vote, even though a large majority favored its passage. The measure would provide a fund of $100,000,000, to be raised by sale of bonds, for carrying out this protection to American shipping. President Wilson asserts that he has not the power to meet the situation and will call an extra session immediately, expecting it "to supply the means of action and save the country from disaster." The sinking of the Cunard liner, Laconia, without warning and resulting in the death of several American citizens made a profound impression, but evidently is not considered an "overt act" of sufficient importance to change the present policy. The press of the country announced during the week that Germany has sought, even before we broke off relations, to induce Mexico to join Japan in a war against the United States if this country should openly declare war on Germany following the submarine proclamation. This was confirmed by President Wilson and later by Foreign Secretary Zimmermann.

A SIMPLE SPANISH PARABLE AND ITS MORAL

THE BURRO FLUTE PLAYER

This little fable,
Whether good or bad,
Has occurred to me now
By chance.

Near some meadows
Which are where I live,
There passed a burro
By chance.

A flute in them
He found, which a shepherd
Had forgotten
By chance.

He approached near it,
(The said animal)
And gave a snort
By chance.

In the flute the air
Began to pass
And the flute sounded
By chance.

"Oh!" said the burro,
"How well I can play,
And who can say donkey music
Is bad!"

Without the rules of art
There are little fools
Who can succeed once
By chance.

—Thomas of Ercarta (Spanish).

Things done by chance are disorderly, irregular and unreliable.

Whatever is done by the rules of art, and of the science governing the doing of that thing, will show merit upon the face of it, and reflect credit upon the doer.

This law will apply to religion, and to the preaching of the gospel as well as to playing upon a flute or anything else.

All things are governed by law. By the rules of art or science, the operation of law may be made to yield certain definite, and desirable results.

Reason, observation, and the word of the Lord, all testify that being in accord and working with right laws is beneficial even unto the salvation of body and spirit, and that nonobservance of law may be disastrous to the bodily and eternal welfare. As an example of the word of the Lord upon the subject of law, note the following texts:

Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed.—James.

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5.

Even the chance sounding of the flute by the donkey as described by the Spanish parable, is governed by the law which demands that the passage of air through the reed, causes the verberation which produces sound.

But it must be by the science of music, and by the art of executing it that any melody of sound worthy the name of music is produced.

To everything that ever has been done by God, men or angels, or that ever will be done, may be applied the rules of art and of science governing each particular thing, and for man to refuse to do so is to perpetuate hopeless imperfection in his work.

The chance fixing of a mountain bowlder in a great upheaval of the earth in such a manner as to form a cavity to be used for the habitation of savages, is determined by the law of force which lifted the mountain, and the law of resistance which checked the descending mass of rock; but by the rules of art and science operating in harmony with law, that same mass of rock may be converted into a palace fit for the dwelling of a king.

The laws of art and of science are essential to the rendition of music, to the painting of a picture, to the building of a house, or a railroad; why not then, in the all-important matter of being saved in the kingdom of God, or in the preaching of a gospel sermon?

But there are many religionists who seem to think that salvation may be obtained in most any kind of a way; and that it is a matter of indifference with the Lord whether people observe any definite law in this matter or not, and there are donkey flute players innumerable, who seem to think when they have posed as a preacher, and made some solemn tone, that they are preaching the everlasting gospel.

The preacher who does not realize that the process for the salvation of a soul in the kingdom of God must be an alignment of the individual life with specific and unchangeable law, is not a qualified representative of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

So also the false notion that art and science should have no place in the preaching of the gospel, is an impediment to every preacher who entertains the thought.

It may be urged as an objection to the study of the scientific art of sacred oratory, that we are to depend upon the Holy Ghost entirely.

True, the man of God must depend upon the Holy Spirit entirely for all dependable inspiration, but he himself must give expression to the same, and it rests wholly with the man whether his part of the work shall be done in a clumsy and bungling fashion, or with the masterly finish and effective power of a most splendid art.

Of course natural limitations forbid that all preachers become perfect masters of their profession immediately, but there is no good reason why "each to-morrow" should not "find us farther than to-day."

Certainly it is true that the inspiration from God which is to vitalize the work of the preacher must come through the Holy Spirit, but the preacher himself as the instrument of utterance bears the responsibility of form and coherency of delivery.

The work of the Holy Ghost is made effective upon the mind through the operation of spiritual law, and the man himself may be rendered efficient or inefficient in proportion to his observances or neglect of the law of scientific labor which applies alike to things pertaining to both mind and matter.

It is a very imperfect conception of the work of salvation to think that all that is needful is just to believe in the Lord and approach him in just any one of the many contradictory methods preached by man.

It is also a very imperfect conception of the work of preaching to think that all the preacher has to do is to open his mouth and let the Lord fill it.

Something else is needed, and that is the proper use and training of the mind and body as instruments of efficiency in the art of preaching that gospel which God, through the Holy Ghost, delivers to the ministry whom he calls.

We are informed by the word of the Lord that "many are called but few are chosen." Why is this? The spiritual call and invitation of the Lord is to all mankind, but the call to preach the gospel is to such as the Lord may select for this department of his great work, and many of those called are not made eligible to be chosen because they do not "study to show themselves approved as workmen that needeth not to be ashamed rightly dividing the word of truth."

A proper study for a preacher to be an "approved workman"—approved unto God and unto the people whom he serves—should include a study, and a practical working out of the law, art, and science of his profession. What is science? Science is systematized knowledge of any one department of mind or matter.

So, since men are to be saved by the preaching of the gospel, do we not need to understand the systematized laws of preaching? Certainly. Then scientific preaching is as necessary as systematized knowledge in any line of endeavor, for thorough and orderly knowledge is identical with science. Webster amplifies the definition of the word science in the following language: "Acknowledged truths and laws, especially as demonstrated by induction, experiment, or observation." The induction is already made herein, that art, science, and efficiency are inseparable, and the reader himself is now called to witness upon the points of experience, and observation.

Where is the preacher, called of God, who has not at times felt the burning power of the Holy Spirit's presence while delivering the message, and has not seen in the light of its illuminating power, his own weakness and inability to do justice to the great subject of salvation?

Where is the minister who at times, when the sermon is over, has not felt sorely dissatisfied with the effort? Why? Was it because the Lord failed in any point of his part of the work? No, it must be conceded to have been an imperfect work because of the imperfection of the man, as the instrument of delivery.

God stands ready to cooperate with all mankind in assisting them to overcome imperfection and to establish them in the most to be desired of all things conceivable: perfection. But this is not to be a one-sided affair. God will do his part, and man must do his in agreement with God's law.

Jesus said, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father, which is in heaven is perfect," and he proceeded to reveal the law of God by precept and example, whereby such an altogether glorious state as perfection may be attained.

The one great, outstanding purpose of life is that imperfection may evolutionize toward and unto perfection, according to the orderly process of law, hence preaching, as well as all other professions or activities may proceed toward perfection only through a study and application of the natural scientific laws governing the same.

Knowledge of any certain work, impulse to exercise it, and skill in using it—these are elements of perfection.

Human resources separated from the divine are not sufficient for the work.

But it is equally true that God will not make a worth while preacher out of a man who idly waits for the divine to fill him, and sits in a "Jesus-paid-it-all" posture, waiting for the Lord to do it all.

The Lord makes the best use of those who qualify themselves as instruments for his service, and goodness is not the only requisite for success in the pulpit.

A burro may sound a flute by chance, and possibly make a great noise, but it takes a master of art to produce heavenly melodies, and a preacher may make a great deal of noise but it takes divinity and skill to preach the gospel.

And within the exalted and all-essential sphere of direct inspiration and revelation to man, associated with the effective dynamic of skillful training, an ideal may be formed whereby "the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

But if the perfect achievement seems slow in arriving, the while we need have patience with ourselves, let us keep in the forefront view so splendid an ideal.

JAMES E. YATES.

LOVE

(Paper read by Elder R. T. Cooper before the elders quorum at Hermosa Beach, Convention Park, August 31, 1916. The closing paragraphs were inspired by the discourse of John W. Rushton, August 30, 1916.)

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son"—a well-worn text, but a phase seldom illumined is the conditions under which the giving was done.

At the time the gift was consummated the whole world was lying in darkness and superstition; even his own covenant people had so far gone astray and become estranged from God that according to the Book of Mormon, they were the only people on the earth wicked enough to crucify Jesus the Christ.

In the morn of their national life God had to withdraw the high priesthood at Moses' death and leave them only the "law of carnal commandments" much similar to the regulations of our penal institutions. Still under this "light of the moon" they were a glorious nation, surpassing all other peoples of the world in material power, in battles, forensic skill, and development of their artisans as manifested in the temple of Solomon outshining all architectural achievements of its age, a direct result of the wisdom God gave to men skillful in the working of brass, gold, silver, etc.

Possessed of the finest land of the then known world as a direct result of God's promises to Abraham, and all because Abraham and his people gave God a chance to express some of his love, by virtue of their obedience, faithfulness and integrity, in coming out as the only man in the whole world who advocated a belief in one God, not composed of wood, stone, iron, gold, silver, plaster, stucco, nor extracted from the animal kingdom and as a nation maintaining that position throughout its existence.

All civilized nations to-day, through their highest legal jurisprudence, render tribute to the eternal wisdom of the Mosaic code, by having incorporated its underlying principles as the basic structure of modern systems of civil government.

Yet to such depths had this great nation fallen that in order to have the initiatory rite of baptism administered to his Son, a special edict emanated from the great throne and "there was a man sent from God whose name was John." (John 1: 6.)

Whom God raised up, being filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb: for he was baptized while he was yet in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God at the time he was eight days old unto this power: to overthrow the kingdom of the Jews, and to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of his people; to prepare them for the coming of the Lord, in whose hand is given all power.—Doctrine and Covenants 88: 4.

Yet in spite of all this, God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son even in the time of its unruly, disobedient and wicked condition.

A quotation of, I think, the late Robert G. Ingersoll says, "Love is not love that alters when it alteration finds." God loved the world before and at a time when practically no one in the world loved him

These phases of love might be numbered: 1. First loved or loved first. 2. Loved even in degeneracy and may be illustrated in a more apparent manner by the parental relation.

a. Fathers and mothers love their babies when the babies not only are insensible of its existence but absolutely unable to reciprocate by loving either parent in the smallest degree. Later, the love may be sensed and even returned in satisfying though lesser degree and of different quality.

b. The child may go astray and become an interned outcast, yet that mother love rarely fails or dies and even though compelled to live in dreams of the childhood while gazing upon the besotted, diseased, corrupted ashes of lustful fires fed by alcohol, banked by narcotics, fanned against lascivious carnality, ignited by subterranean forces instituted, designed, and perpetuated by the "Prince of the power of the air."

OTHER QUALITIES OF LOVE

Husband and wife: Husbands work long days, in privations deny themselves luxuries, carry the load when the wife is disabled, children sick and almost overwhelmed with debt and troubles, puts forth still greater effort; then when the load lifts a little, out in the field early whistling at his work because—he loves his family.

Likewise, when death or disability strikes down the father, and her protector, the provider, and leaves her facing the problems of life alone, the wife goes forward, enduring sufferings and strugglings that God only knows because—she loves her children.

Still, as a groundwork of these phases of devotion, it is the general order in contracting these alliances of wedlock, that while the awakening of conjugal affection is more or less contemporaneous, yet the initiative is largely by the would-be husband who so responds to his own, and endeavors to develop the latent heart powers of his selected that she may say "He first loved me."

Elephants become so attached to their kind trainers that on change of a trainer they never again possess their full, sweet temper. The trainer first was good to the elephant.

Cavalry horses develop an affection for their riders that overcomes the horse nature, so it sometimes remains on a desolate battle field trying in his muteness to carry the helpless master back to the ranks. The rider first loved the horse.

The hunter's dog, which will stay with him when men desert him, and immolate himself on the fangs of a ferocious beast of the forest for the sake of a man possibly unfit to associate with other men, yet the hunter first exhibited regard akin to love for the dog.

Birds. A short time since an account appeared in the Los Angeles Times of a lady living in a foothill home with her baby daughter, being attracted by an unusual excitement and fluttering of the birds found her baby girl playing, heedless of the terrible-ness of a large rattlesnake coiling near her. The woman seized a club and destroyed the snake and the birds resumed their normal composure and singing. The little girl had been feeding the birds with crumbs each morning from the table.

ANIMAL KINGDOM

Although the affection of animals for their young may be deemed ephemeral on account of its early extinction, yet the regal combats that sometimes wreck the minor trees of the primeval forest are waged by the pachyderm which wants to be first in the affections of the herd.

The king of the African jungle whose roar strikes terror to all other denizens, including mankind, is tender to its whelps, because it loves them in their helplessness.

The Bengal tiger, with all its fierceness manifests a tenderness and solicitude for its young similar in its effects to what in human beings we call love.

Even the gentle domesticated tabby cat forsakes her natural refuge from Towser in a tree, and at bay for the protection of her brood becomes such an unmitigated fury with teeth and claws that she routs the average dog, yet those kittens, so far from loving their mother, cannot even yet perceive the light of day, but the mother first loves the kittens.

Such a universal exhibition of this trait evidences a common source of the quality so manifested and justifies a conclusion that that characteristic was so component a part of him to whom the creation of the various organisms developing the fruits of the principle involved is ascribed, that we are constrained to accept the declaration in the New Testament, "God is love."

And when we witness the poor, little robin, stoned to death while trying to protect her nestlings; the household pet torn and bleeding by a too vicious mastiff, trying to screen her blind little bodies of helplessness; the faithful dog a victim of a fierce wolf or wild boar that his master might escape, we can comprehend this principle of love that enabled God to even permit his Son to be transfixed on the tree of the forest, knowing that the world and mankind could thereby be saved and prepare our minds for statements that in bringing forth and establishing this work so instituted at such a cost, no man can assist unless he be humble and full of love.

AWAKENING OF FILIAL LOVE

It would seem the responding of men to the call of God in the various offices of the priesthood marks the awakening of the filial love of the child to the parent and this love expanded by the combined effect of God's leading and development through the ministration of the Holy Ghost manifests itself in real love for his fellow men and their welfare, and intensified by a quickened realization of the possibilities of their eternal welfare or failure, grows until its gratification finds expression only in the exercising of the powers to lead men into the paths of the gospel, swallows up all other ambitions, sanctifies privation, weariness and bodily suffering; recompenses lack, or loss of material wealth; and without mitigating the yearnings and pangs of the heart for the home ties, of hearts temporarily sundered, so fills them with the grace that God says is sufficient for us that the tender, frail, dependent wife becomes an helpmeet after God's own fashioning, voluntarily saying "Go" even at the expense of all she otherwise would cherish most.

It supplants with real spiritual friendship the loss of monetary or professional associates and in the wonderful expressions of Paul so vividly portrayed in his love for the Philippians, welds all together in a fellowship of suffering, akin to the agonies of the Savior.

For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake.—Philippians 1: 29.

So the whole matter is summed up in the words of that John whose soul was so filled until it became the complement of the Savior's love as to find expression and fellowship in reclining upon his breast as no other ever did.

He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. . . . Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us. . . .

We love Him because he first loved us.—1 John 4: 8, 10, 19.

THE LOCATION OF CUMORAH AND RAMAH

[With the presentation of this article seeking to establish the location of the hill called by the Jaredites, Ramah, and the Nephites, Cumorah, the two principal theories on this point will be before our readers. The other has been presented in the recent series by T. J. Smith. We respectfully suggest that since this point is not vital even though it is interesting, that unless some has some additional matter that has not been touched on, that the question be left for the present, that other articles on important subjects may be given space.—EDITORS.]

All references are from the Authorized Edition of the Book of Mormon. To begin with I quote:

Therefore I made this record out of the plates of Nephi, and hid up in the hill Cumorah, all the records which had been intrusted to me by the hand of the Lord, save it were these few plates which I gave unto my son Moroni.—Book of Mormon 3:8.

This establishes the fact that Mormon deposited records in the hill Cumorah all save the few given to Moroni. These that Moroni had were not deposited in Cumorah at this time. All that I have been able to find, up to date, concerning Moroni hiding plates is:

Therefore I will write and hide up the records in the earth, and whither I go it mattereth not.—Mormon 4:4.

Behold, four hundred years have passed since the coming of our Lord and Savior.—Ibid., 4:7.

And I am the same who hideth up this record unto the Lord.—Ibid., 4:17.

Now I, Moroni, write somewhat as seemeth me good; and I write unto my brethren and Lamanites, and I would that they should know that more than four hundred and twenty years have passed away, since the sign was given of the coming of Christ, and I seal up these records.—Moroni 10:1, 2.

And when three hundred and eighty and four years had passed away, we had gathered in all the remainder of our people unto the land Cumorah.—Mormon 3:6.

So that from the battle at Cumorah, 385 A. D., to the time Moroni writes to the Lamanites, 420A. D., is 35 years. Mormon hides all records in Cumorah, 384 or 385 A. D. except the few he gives to Moroni. Moroni makes his last entry at more than 420 A. D. So there is at least thirty-five years between the time of Mormon hiding records and the time when Moroni hides those intrusted to him. Mormon deposits records in Cumorah, but where is there any statement as to where Moroni deposited his?

Lest there be a doubt as to Ramah and Cumorah being the same I quote:

And it came to pass that the army of Coriantumr did pitch their tents by the hill Ramah; and it was the same hill where my father Mormon did hide up the records.—Ether 6:83.

So far these citations show a separation of the records, a part deposited in a stated location and the other not so definitely stated, and that Ramah and Cumorah are the same hill.

LOCATION

The location cannot be definitely proven. Of course we know, now, where Moroni hid up the plates intrusted to him but the book does not tell us. I shall confess here that I don't know where Ramah-Cumorah is, but I believe that if there was anyone on earth believed they knew where all those records were deposited, there would be some digging to find them. But to proceed with the book and what it has to say:

Yea, even all my people . . . and also a few who had escaped into the south countries.—Mormon 3:16.

The Nephites who had escaped into the country southward.—Mormon 4:2.

Here we have a statement from Mormon and Moroni that some of the Nephites were not slain at Cumorah but escaped into the south country. These statements were made soon after the battle and Mormon and Moroni were sufficiently near the south country to know that some escaped thither. Moroni writes it upon his plates after the battle and gives the plates to Moroni and he repeats the statement; tells of his father being killed by the Lamanites and in chapter 4, paragraph 7, says four-hundred years had passed, anno domini:

Nevertheless the Nephites had taken possession of all the northern parts of the land, bordering on the wilderness, at the head of the river Sidon, from the east to the west, round about on the wilderness side; on the north, even until they came to the land which they called Bountiful, and it bordered upon the land which they called Desolation; it being so far northward, that it came into the land which had been peopled, and been destroyed, of whose bones we have spoken, which was discovered by the people of Zarahemla; it being the place of their first landing. . . . Thus the land on the northward was called Desolation, and the land on the southward was called Bountiful; . . . And now it was only the distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite, on the line Bountiful, and the land Desolation, from the east to the west sea. . . . there being a small neck of land between the land northward and the land southward.—Alma 13:73-77.

And he also sent orders unto him, that he should fortify the land Bountiful, and secure the narrow pass which led into the land northward, lest the Lamanites should obtain that point, and should have power to harass them on every side.—Alma 24:10.

Hagoth built a ship on the borders of land Bountiful by the land Desolation, by the narrow neck which led into the land northward. (Alma 30:6.)

And the Lamanites did give unto us the land northward; yea, even to the narrow passage which led into the land southward, and we did give unto the Lamanites all the land southward.—Mormon 1:61, 62.

By reading preceding verses we learn that the time was 350 A. D. when the land was thus divided between the Nephites and Lamanites, the narrow neck being the dividing line or the day and half journey for a Nephite from sea to sea.

And they built a great city by the narrow neck of land, by the place where the sea divides the land.—Ether 4: 68.

These quotations show that the Jaredites, Nephites and Lamanites all agreed on the narrow neck. I suppose there are none now who do not believe that the narrow neck is the Isthmus of Panama. This gives us a definite starting point and the first stop on our journey will be in the land of Moron and city of Moron where the Jaredite king dwelt.

And when he had gathered together an army, he came up into the land of Moron, where the king dwelt. . . . Now the land of Moron where the king dwelt, was near the land which is called Desolation by the Nephites.—Ether 3: 42, 43.

And the land called Desolation by the Nephites bordered on the narrow neck up to the line of a day and half journey for a Nephite from sea to sea, as has already been quoted.

Passing on to Ether 4: 3, 4, 14 we learn that King Omer being warned in a dream, departed out of the land (of Moron where the king dwelt), passed by the hill Shim, and came over by the place where the Nephites were destroyed (Cumorah) and thence to Ablom by the seashore, where he dwells for a time, and "Omer was restored to the land of his inheritance" and was king again in the land of Moron. Lib succeeded to the throne and "Coriantumr came up to the land of Moron, and gave battle unto Lib." (Ether 6: 39, 40, 45.) And by reading the balance of the book of Ether we discover that the fighting was in and round about the land Moron, where the king dwelt, and the land Moron where the king dwelt was near the land Desolation of the Nephites and the land Desolation bordered on the narrow neck even to the line of a day and half journey for a Nephite from sea to sea.

TWO KINGDOMS

After locating the land and city Moron we find the following:

And the country was divided; and there were two kingdoms, the kingdom of Shule and the kingdom of Cohr.—Ether 3: 58.

When I listened to the lecture on archæology by Edgar L. Hewett, field worker of the Society of Archæology, under the auspices of the United States Government, and heard him say that Copan and Quirigua in Central America were the two oldest ruins yet unearthed and explored, and that they could not tell which was the capital city as they both had kingly palaces, I then thought of the two kingdoms of Copan and Quirigua as described by Stephenson and Catherwood are the ancient capital cities of the Jaredites, then I wonder where the Jaredites were when they had their last battle at Ramah.

Then when we go into archæology and find down in southern Mexico, Yucatan and Central America such ruins as Mitla, Copan, Chichen-Itza, Quirigua, Palenque, and many others named and yet unexplored I wonder where else would a people war only in their own country. They could not war among themselves as there were none others, and all the magnificent ruins show that the first people on this land had their first and center civilization in the land where they left their ruins.

It has already been shown and admitted by all Book of Mormon students, that Ramah and Cumorah are the same. Also, the waters of Cumorah being near the hill, is also the same as that called Ripliancum near Ramah.

And it came to pass that he [Coriantumr] came to the waters of Ripliancum, which by interpretation is large, or to exceed all.—Ether 6: 80.

According to this reading, wherever we locate Ramah-Cumorah there will be found waters, "which by intpretation, is large or to exceed all." It is true that the plates of Mormon were found in a hill in New York. It is also true that there are some lakes in that region, but they are not "large to exceed all," for only a few miles to the north is Lake Ontario, which is not "large to exceed all," for farther west is Lake Superior which is the largest body of water between the oceans. Does anyone locate Cumorah near Lake Superior?

Beginning with Mormon 1: 1, is the history of Mormon, and reading along we find him carried into the land southward, and that war between Nephites and Lamanites began about 321 A. D. (Mormon 1: 8), "in the borders of Zarahemla, by the waters of Sidon." (Mormon 1: 10.) Intermittent war followed, until in chapter 2: 8-21, in the year 375 A. D., the city of Desolation was taken by the Lamanites. Desolation was on the "narrow neck." Notice they were moving northward, and in verse 32 the city of Jordan was taken by Lamanites, 380 A. D., and still they are down in Central America five years fighting from Desolation to Jordan. In chapter 3 is the account of gathering to Cumorah for the final conflict in the year 385 A. D., five years from Desolation to Jordan and five years more to Cumorah. Desolation is located, approximately, by the Book of Mormon, but Jordan and Cumorah are not. The book, however, does locate the place of the home of the leaders and the principal cities and the countries near the "narrow neck." And it is very strange indeed for two armies to march out of their own land to have a fight. It is true that one army may leave its homeland to make war on some other people, but it is a matter of history that one army or the other remains and fights in its own land. Why should the Nephites and Lamanites be an exception? If they are in this case it is the only one in the book.

Moroni says, "I do finish the record of my father, Mormon. . . . and . . . after the battle at Cumorah, the Nephites who had escaped into the country southward, were hunted by the Lamanites, until they were all destroyed, and my father also was killed by them; and I, even remain to write the sad tale of the destruction of my people," and he says "400 years have passed." (Mormon 4: 1, 2, 7.) Here, Moroni within fifteen years after the battle at Cumorah is telling of what has happened, and I wonder how he got his information unless he was on the ground and saw.

How did he know as to who escaped into the south country, and how did Mormon know the same, soon after the battle, as found in chapter 3: 16, if they were not near the land southward? I have not yet read in the book as to how they got their information.

Again, Moroni writes: "I wander whithersoever I can, for the safety of mine own life." (Moroni 1: 3.) I always did wonder if a man would stay in his enemies' country for the safety of his life. No! Moroni wandered for the space of thirty-five years for the safety of his life and then hid up the plates, etc., but does not say where.

Moroni says, "More than four hundred and twenty years have passed away since the sign was given of the coming of Christ." (Moroni 10: 1.) 385 A. D. for the battle at Cumorah and more than 420 A. D. make at least 35 years for Moroni wandering around carrying the plates, giving him ample time to travel from the seat of war in the south to the place where he deposited the records outside of his enemy's country.

WHEN?

The word of the Lord came to Ether, that he should go and prophesy unto Coriantumr, that if he would repent, and all his household, the Lord would give unto him his kingdom, and spare the people, otherwise, they should be destroyed, and all his household, save it were himself, and he should only live to see the fulfilling of the prophecies which had been spoken concerning another people receiving the land for their inheritance; and Coriantumr should receive a burial by them.—Ether 6: 21-23.

And Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla; and he dwelt with them for the space of nine moons.—Omni 1: 37.

Before proceeding further I quote from Ether to show about how old the average Jaredite lived to be. It may be above the average but it is the only statement of the kind in the book of Ether.

And it came to pass that his wife died being an hundred and two years old, and it came to pass that Coriantum took a wife in his old age, a young maid, and begat sons and daughters; wherefore he lived until he was an hundred and forty and two years old.—Ether 4: 27, 28.

Turning to Omni we learn that Mosiah departed from the land Nephi and found the land of Zarahemla. The people of the land were ruled by a king called Zarahemla who was alive when Mosiah found them. A careful study of chronology places the time about 200 B. C. for the uniting of the people under Mosiah with the people of Zarahemla. Now don't forget this date: about 200 B. C.

And it came to pass that after they were taught in the language of Mosiah, Zarahemla gave a genealogy of his fathers according to his memory. . . . In the days of Mosiah, there was a large stone brought unto him, with engravings on it, and he did interpret the engravings, by the gift and power of God, and they gave an account of one Coriantumr, and the slain of his people, and Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla; and he dwelt with them for the space of nine moons.—Omni 1: 33-37.

Please note carefully that after Mosiah was made king, about 200 B. C., there was a stone brought to him. The engravings were interpreted by the power of God, presumably by use of the Urim and Thummim. (See Mosiah 13: 1, 2.) Also Coriantumr dwelt with the people of Zarahemla during the time of Mosiah and Zarahemla, or after the people were called the people of Zarahemla in honor of their good king by that name, who was alive at the time Mosiah discovered and united with them about 200 B. C. Following Mosiah is his son, Benjamin, possibly 160 B. C., followed by his son Mosiah II, who was made king, 124 B. C. See Mosiah 4: 6 where Mosiah begins to reign instead of Benjamin, 476 years since Lehi left Jerusalem.

Amaleki was born in the days of Mosiah and he saw the days of King Benjamin (Omni 1: 40) and in Amaleki's days there were some people went from Zarahemla to the land of Nephi (Omni 1: 48-52), which account will be found in the "Record of Zeniff" (Alma 6), and the people under Limhi will be considered later. Don't forget that these events happened about 200 B. C. when Mosiah united with Zarahemla.

BONES

Amaleki says concerning Coriantumr and the slain of his people, "And their bones lay scattered in the land northward." (Omni 39.) Notice the word lay, present tense. In the days of Amaleki, the bones of the Jaredites "lay scattered in the land northward" between 124 B. C. and 200 B. C.

In the third or fourth year of Mosiah II, or 121 B. C. (see Mosiah 5), some men started out to find those people who left Zarahemla, of whom Amaleki spoke in Omni 1: 48-52. These men were taken captive by the guards of King Limhi. Previous to this time (Mosiah 9: 166) King Limhi had sent out some men in search of the land of Zarahemla. These men returned to the land of Nephi a few days before those men from Zarahemla were taken captive by the king's guards. In their searching for Zarahemla, this is what they found.

Having discovered a land which was covered with bones of men, and of beasts, etc., and was also covered with ruins of buildings of every kind. Having discovered a land which had been peopled with a people who were as numerous as the hosts of Israel. [About 3,000,000 when they came out of Egypt.—J. F. G.] And for a testimony that the things that they have said are true, they have brought twenty-four plates which are filled with engravings; and they are of pure gold: . . . and again, they have brought swords the hilts thereof have perished, and the blades thereof are cankered with rust; and there is no one in the land that is able to interpret the language or the engravings that are on the plates.—Mosiah 5: 62-67.

The time of the finding the twenty-four gold plates is fixed by associating the return of Limhi's men at the time of Mosiah's men being taken captive by Limhi's guards. Mosiah's men started out after Mosiah had had three years of peaceful reign. He began to reign 476 years from the time Lehi left Jerusalem (Mosiah 4: 6) or 124 B. C., and three years peaceful reign (5: 1) would make 121 B. C. for the time his men started in search of Limhi's people in the land of Nephi. This fixes 121 B. C. for the finding of the twenty-four gold plates, the first mention of them in the Book of Mormon. How could King Benjamin have had the plates when they were not heard of in Zarahemla until Limhi's people with Ammon and his brethren returned with them about the same year Benjamin died? "Therefore, I said unto thee, canst thou translate?"—Mosiah 5: 68.

Ammon proceeds to inform Limhi that the king of Zarahemla, Mosiah II, has that wherewith he can translate and it is a gift from God. "And the things are called interpreters"—the Urim and Thummim, if you please—in possession of Mosiah II, also in possession of Mosiah I (Omni 1: 35), possibly eighty years before the twenty-four plates were known of by the people of Zarahemla. (See Mosiah 13: 1, 2.)

This last quotation concerning bones, swords cankered with rust, etc., places the time as late as 121 B. C. and still the bones of the Jaredites are bleaching on the ground. Before I forget, I call your attention to the fact that Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla sometime later than about 200 B. C. The quotation from Ether concerning the age of the Jaredites was 102 for the wife and 142 for the husband and admitting that Coriantumr lived so old, and that he was past middle age at the battle of Ramah would bring the time of the battle of Ramah near 200 B. C. Further mention of bones is made in Mosiah 9: 167; also Alma 13: 74 and Ether 4: 96.

An article in the HERALD has the following:

Again, these dry bones had lain bleaching in the arid mountains of Central America for four hundred and eighty years. . . . hence this land of bones could not have extended farther north than Central America or at farthest, southern Mexico. December 20, 1916, p. 1242. [Quotations omitted.—J. F. G.]

The first quotation above refers to Coriantumr just after he had smote off the head of Shiz, his last enemy, at the great and final battle at the Hill Ramah, which hill we claim was in the western part of New York State.—Ibid., December 27, 1916, p. 1264.

If the bones were in Central America or southern Mexico, and if Hill Ramah is in New York, where the last great and final battle was fought, how did those bones get so far south? If the final battle was fought 600 B. C. and the bones were on the ground 121 B. C. when found by the forty-three men of Limhi, then Coriantumr and Ether being the two remaining, must have carried them there. Admission is made that they did make the journey carrying the plates and depositing them where the men of Limhi found them.

They had ample time, and a big job, if these statements be true. If 600 B. C. is correct for the final battle, and Coriantumr being discovered by the people of Zarahemla, which the reading of Omni would indicate the time to be about 200 B. C. or later, then Coriantumr and Ether had at least 400 years in which to transport those bones from Ramah in New York to Central America where the men of Limhi found them. Did they do it?

If not, and those were Jaredite bones, and the battle was round about Ramah, and this land of bones not extending beyond southern Mexico, then Ramah must be somewhere in the land of bones.

If the battle at Ramah was 600 B. C. and Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla as late as 200 B. C. then Coriantumr was more than 400 years old. He did not live to a greater age than any other men of his time. The Jaredites came from Babylon at the confusion of tongues—time about 2200 B. C. The days of Peleg were from about 2212 to 1973 B. C. or 239 years. Reu 2182 to 1943 or 239 years. Serug 230 years. Nahor 148 years. Terah 205 years. Abraham 175 years. Isaac 180 years. Jacob 147 years. And so on down to Moses at 120, a shortening of the age of man, so that at 600 B. C. man's average age of life could not be placed at more than 100 years.

Coriantumr, the seventh from the time of the confusion at Babel, was only 142 years old. These figures are on record so the 600 date must be changed in order to make harmony out of the books.

About the strongest point against Ramah being in New York is the case of Ether. A recent article on the subject, in the HERALD, admitted that the fighting began in the south and finished in New York. If this be true, then Ether was the most remarkable man that ever lived. How he could dwell in the cavity of a rock by day, and go with the army from Central America to New York is a feat, to be sure. How did he transport the cavity of the Rock that long distance and not be discovered by anyone is a mystery. Some one please explain. But see Ether 6: 14, 15, 19 which I quote:

And I was about to write more, but am forbidden; but great and marvelous were the prophecies of Ether, but they esteemed him as naught, and cast him out, and he hid himself in the cavity of a rock by day, and by night he went forth viewing the things which should come upon the people. And as he dwelt in the cavity of a rock, he made the remainder of this record, viewing the destructions which came upon the people by night. . . . Wherefore it came to pass that in the first year that Ether dwelt in the cavity of a rock, there was many people who were slain by the sword of those secret combinations fighting against Coriantumr, that they might obtain the kingdom.

Again I quote concerning the land Moron where the king dwelt: "And he came forth to the land of Moron, and placed himself upon the throne of Coriantumr." (Ether 6: 40.)

These quotations with many not quoted show that in the land of Moron where the king dwelt, was the seat of war. Coriantumr was on the throne. Ether was in the land hiding in "a cavity of a rock," all the time the war was waging.

And it came to pass that Coriantumr fell to the earth, and became as if he had no life. And the Lord spake unto Ether, and said unto him, Go forth, and he went forth, and beheld that the words of the Lord had all been fulfilled and he finished his record; . . . and he hid them in a manner that the people of Limhi did find them.—Ether 6: 106-108.

Moroni says he did not write a hundredth part, but what he did write does not intimate that the Jaredites left their own cities, but on the contrary they fought around the throne of the king in the land of Moron. During this last war Ether dwelt in the cavity of a rock and by day and by night viewed the destruction that had been done in the day, but when all had been slain but Coriantumr, the Lord told Ether to "go forth." He did not now need to wait till night but went forth from the cavity of the rock and beheld that the word of the Lord spoken by him to the people had all been fulfilled.

Other references can be cited. The book itself shows that the warring began not far from the "narrow neck." Archæology proves that the center and power of all the ancient people was not far either way north or south of the "narrow neck." All history, sacred or profane, proves that war is always at home for one side or the other.

Moroni in writing the brief history of the Jaredites says that near by the hill Ramah is the waters of Ripliancum which by interpretation means large to exceed all. In writing about Cumorah, Mormon says "by the waters of Cumorah." So at least 600 years after the battle of Ramah we find there is no change in the hill or the water, as Moroni says they are the same. So it matters not where you find Ramah-Cumorah, you will find near by a body of water which is "large, to exceed all."

One brother said the Lord indicated to him that the hill Cumorah where Mormon hid the records was southern Mexico. Another brother went on a trip to Mexico in the study of archæology. Some say he went to find Cumorah, but he did not find it. No one on earth, that we know of, knew the plates were in New York until the time came, and then it was revealed in God's way and time to whom he chose? Why not the same in regard to those records hidden by Mormon? When the time comes, God will reveal to whom he will. Then, and not until then, will we know the exact location. We can only consider what is revealed and so long as there is a difference of opinion, it only shows that some one does not know. One does not know, possibly neither party knows, both cannot be right so long as there is a difference, and both may be wrong and still differ. Let us not be in a hurry to drive stakes because we may have to pull them up, and when the time comes and the records come forth then opinions will be set aside.

In regard to Copan and Quirigua I quote from Stevenson and Catherwood:

"All these circumstances lead to a belief that there must have been some intercourse between the inhabitants of the old and new world at very remote period."

"Two immense Ceiba trees over six feet in diameter with roots spreading from fifty to one hundred feet, are found on the summit of the lofty pyramid."

Stone carving "equal to the finest Egyptian sculpture."

"Copan is, however, generally considered the oldest of American cities."

Quirigua, fifty miles northeast from Copan, "Indeed it seems altogether probable that they owe their existence to the same era and same people."

Much more might be said, but lest this is too much already, I refrain. J. F. GUNSOLLEY.

The preacher who substitutes the authority of antiquity for a divine call, may preach something or other, but not the acceptable word of the Lord.

Stereotyped sermons are like stale butter or limburger cheese; they may sustain life, but are hard to take.

Three ounces of simplicity in a plain, honest man is of more real value in the pulpit, than a hundred and thirty pounds of conceived profundity parading in clerical cloth.

Success in preaching is not correctly measured by the number of converts, nor by the applause of man; Paul failed to convert Felix, but the sermon was the effectual word of God, and in the great judgment day will stand as such.—James E. Yates.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

AHEAD OF BILLY SUNDAY

Newspaper writers are fond of comparing the organization of the Reverend William A. Sunday's "campaigns against Satan" to a military or political campaign.

When Billy Sunday (the name under which everyone knows him) begins to consider making war in a certain city against "the intrenched forces of sin" (he likes martial phrases), he first sends to that city his scouts. It is the duty of these followers to "feel out" the strength of the enemy, to learn what support and what natural allies can be found among the natives of the chosen theater of war. The report is then laid before Commander in Chief Billy Sunday and his general staff.

It is hard to say who deserves to be called the chief of this general staff; but it is either Mrs. Sunday, better known as "Ma" Sunday, or George Sunday, the twenty-five-year-old son of the commander. "Ma" Sunday is an all-around executive officer of much ability. But George Sunday comes nearer to filling the technical position of a chief of staff. He is the treasurer and business head of the central Sunday party—that is, the general staff. There are about twenty members of this general staff, including Bible class directors, church workers, press agents, and musicians; but Homer A. Rodheaver, the musical director, deserves mention by name.

When the report of the scouts has been deemed to warrant an attack on a city, the scouts are sent back to that town accompanied by more experienced and more heavily armed organizers. Then the battle begins in earnest, for much of the fighting against "General Satan" in the cities which Sunday attacks is done before the commander in chief gets into action at all. He is the smashing, tearing attack of the infantry which drives the enemy from his stronghold after the enemy's courage and strength have been reduced by a preliminary bombardment of unintermitting prayers accompanied by a withering fire from artillery posted in local pulpits.

As an example of how the Sunday army works, consider what is doing now. Billy Sunday is now on the firing line in Buffalo, and is not scheduled to open his personal assault on New York City until April 1; but for several weeks already his scouts, sappers, engineers, artillerymen, and sharpshooters have been hard at work in the metropolis. The ranks of these classes are largely filled from local allies.

Of course the first important thing to do in any campaign is to get together the sinews of war. This is being done in New York by a committee of New Yorkers under the chairmanship of Mr. Arthur M. Harris. This committee has estimated that the Sunday campaign in New York will cost $150,000. From this sum $25,000 will be reserved for the work of conservation after Billy Sunday has left New York—that is, the work of holding whatever ground he may gain. The cost of building the tabernacle for Mr. Sunday, renting a site for it, caring for the grounds, etc., will be $65,000. "The remaining $60,000," says the finance committee "will cover the cost of the preparatory work of the campaign, the running expenses of the tabernacle itself, the living expenses while in New York of Mr. Sunday and his staff of some twenty assistants, also two thirds of the salaries of these assistants during their stay in New York (the other third of these salaries as usual being borne by Mr. Sunday).

The estimated expenditure of $150,000 will be met first by a preliminary contribution of about $75,000 by persons interested in the evangelization of New York City. Second, by collections taken at the tabernacle meetings. After the required amount for current and conservation expenses has been thus raised, no further collections will be taken at the services unless for some special charitable or benevolent purpose duly authorized by the finance committee.

"No financial guarantee or promise whatsoever has been made to Mr. Sunday himself; the matter of compensation for his services will be taken care of through offerings at the close of the campaign in such manner as the finance committee may determine when the time comes."

One important item of the campaign is the securing of a headquarters for the commander in chief and his staff. The entire Sunday household, including staff and servants who travel with the evangelist are usually housed together, so that the members of the Sunday team may be kept in the best of condition and their wounds well cared for.

The tabernacle which Billy Sunday will use in New York, and which will hold about twenty thousand persons, is being specially built for him under the direction of Mr. Joe Spiece, who builds all of Mr. Sunday's tabernacles. A force of five hundred trained ushers and two thousand trained singers for the choir, with four thousand more in reserve, will be ready when the commander comes to New York.

The means through which the Sunday workers get into touch with the masses of the people is the local cooperating church. All of Greater New York has been divided into twenty districts, these being subdivided into sections, and the section in turn being divided into "blocks" or groups of sixty families. Through the city some three hundred families are cooperating with the Sunday campaign.

It is hardly an exaggeration to say that when Billy Sunday faces his first New York audience on April 1 he will find half of his work already done.—The Outlook, February 28, 1917.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

"I Was Sick, and Ye Visited Me"

Because of the lesson of mercy and love which Jesus sought to impress upon his followers by use of the above thought picture, many have misconstrued our duty to the sick. We have heard zealous church members—those who practiced, too, what they preach in this regard—assert strongly that this is one of the strict requirements of our Christian duty, to visit the sick often. They even go further, some of them, and imply that those who fail to do this have not the true religion of Christ in their hearts.

Let us consider a moment. Christ's ministry was ever an unselfish one. He always had at heart the best good and the best interests of others. When he ministered to any, it was with the intent of service and assistance to that one. Did he go with the thought of duty? Did he go just because he thought by so going he would be fulfilling law and religious obligation totally regardless of the effect of his visit upon the object? But do we not see evidences of this about us? Do we not see people who visit the sick as a perfunctory duty, who sit about and condone with the afflicted ones, with long face and mournful mein, as if life were just too great a burden to be put up with much longer? After the visit of such an one a nervous patient is apt to be almost frantic with the distributing influence which has been "visited" upon him! Is this what Christ meant? We think not.

In many, many instances, when nerves or nature are very much exhausted, the truest love, the truest sympathy will be expressed in other ways than visiting the afflicted one. Many a person, suffering from nervous breakdown, has been kept in that condition much longer by this mistaken "kindness" of friends, who would better have sent a book, a poem, a nosegay, or song, of a nature to cheer and uplift, that could be enjoyed and appreciated at such moments as strength permitted. When a patient has a nervous chill as a result of a visit from some well-meaning friend, who has chatted too long or unwisely, who annoys by repeated visits of unmeaning character, who leaves no impression, uplift, or strength behind him, we are prone to exclaim, "How long, oh, Lord, how long? will it be, before we succeed in striking off from us, the manacles of tradition, and learn to interpret thee with spiritual intent, and see thy meaning in every utterance?"

The nurse in the home often has, as her most uncomfortable duty, that of standing between her patient and the misdirected efforts of well-meaning friends. One told us, not long ago, of having in charge an unruly child of only two or three years, which she could have managed very well indeed, if it had not been for the "sympathy" of the grandmother, who, whenever the child objected to taking his medicine or to submitting to some treatment, would say, "Oh, the dear little fellow! Don't bother him! He will be all right!" and in other ways hindered the work of both the nurse and the mother.

The nurse often has to intercept, too, the many, many unwise dishes of food which are sent through mistaken kindness to convalescents. Rich, pastry "effects," desserts, which would often tax by their complications the digestion of a healthy man in active physical labor, are sent to "tempt" the appetite of a weakened mortal whose normal functions can be restored only by wise and careful means. If these same friends could see how often the fluffy, elaborate concoction sent to the sick finds its way to the garbage pail, or into the stomach of some convenient and ever hungry boy whose digestion rivals that of the proverbial goat or ostrich, that friend would be dismayed, and let us hope, shocked into a bit of real sensible thought upon the subject. A bit of intelligently made beef broth with all fat extracted, a simple cup custard, some arrowroot jelly, or some dainty fruit—all of which is to be used at the discretion of the nurse—might be sent to an invalid to express one's interest without danger of retarding his recovery. In the case of illness, coupled with poverty or privation, one could consult with the nurse or doctor, and show one's sympathy by supplying the food and nourishment needed—a much more practical and Christ-like form of service than haphazard visiting.

Let us learn to do the sensible thing. In a branch of two or three hundred people, should each consider he was not fulfilling the Christian law unless he visited the sick, what would be the state of the sick, providing each one of the several hundred did his "duty"? Verily, there would soon be no sick among us—they would all be dead!

Social Service--Chapter 4

CONVALESCENCE

Human beings have more points of likeness than of difference. Our instincts and our passions, our impelling desire for self-preservation, our love of family and friends, our reverence of God or for an ideal, form a heritage which human beings the world over hold in common. It is profoundly modified, to be sure, by varying inherited traits, traditions and standards of living, ranging from those of the beggar to those of the multimillionaire. We may, by occasional periods of rest, be able to patch up the victims of unwholesome living, but we must not deceive ourselves by thinking that we have been striking at the deeper causes, some of which are beyond the control of the individual patient.

Recuperation of the debilitated body is dependent upon several factors, among which are rest, nourishing food, fresh air and a contented mind. In communities where there are no resorts for convalescents, social workers have, in several instances, arranged to board patients in private families in the country, or, with others, who are especially fitted to help debilitated patients regain their strength.

We are beginning to see the possibilities and the problems of proper convalescence. Social workers daily facing the needs of debilitated patients, should, in time, contribute much to the solution of the questions involved in suitable recuperation for weakened human bodies, as well as to an understanding of the mental and physical handicap of fatigue.

MENTAL HYGIENE

There are a great many variations of mental conditions. I ask your most earnest attention, and your most sympathetic interest in this great problem, because it is a crying need.

The opportunities for betterment, indeed for the highest order of development, are ours if we but look about us and grasp. The necessity for good social service workers needs no emphasis here, and that getting a sufficient number of well-qualified women is merely a matter of proper supervision and training.

Among patients with mental and nervous disorders, are many who are confronted with difficulties of getting along with other people, which they, unaided, cannot overcome; also many whose presence in the community is dangerous, not alone for the community but for the persons themselves.

A psychoneurotic person may be very like a normal person except that he is a little more self-centered, more sensitive, more fearful, and more swayed by emotions. Yet, the sum of these little differences may make that person a life long sufferer from physical and mental pain, a burden to himself and to the world. We think much can be done to reeducate them through sympathetic interest, by explanation of the mental causes of their trouble, by encouraging them to believe in the possibilities of cure and to act upon this belief.

We think that social workers, acting under constant direction of the doctor, can aid in such reeducation, and can supplement his efforts to find out the cause of the breakdown. Visits to the home and to acquaintances of the patient are valuable, in understanding environment to which he so sensitively reacts, and also makes possible the verification of the patient's statements. Patients haunted by phobias can be treated intelligently when it is determined by the doctor that their fears are not "real."

One who is ignorant of mental processes and who is lacking in sympathy and insight and almost limitless patience, may undo all the doctor is striving to accomplish. The steps by which men and women reach the pitiable state of attempting to and taking their lives, are the accumulative agonies of human souls. The extent to which this morbid condition finds expression is shocking indeed. Shall we not be open to save the life that seeks its own death?

The successful treatment of the mind depends largely upon three factors—discipline, utilization of physical measures that are known to influence constructive metabolism, and the point of view, or learning to see straight. Some one cares for each patient, and sorrows for his pain.

Our problems are many, but I know they are surmountable. The future is pregnant with possibilities great enough to brighten many discouraging aspects.

Important Notice

As superintendent for mothers' and teachers' problems we are anxious to get before all the women of the church the material sent us by the Children's Bureau at Washington, urging communities to take up the national movement for a 1917 baby week. The article explains itself. We urge that all classes in mothers' and teachers' problems arrange for a baby week in their community. District superintendents can make a week of this kind so interesting to mothers that they would be able readily to organize permanent classes for the Women's Auxiliary. Often it takes something of this kind to arouse mothers to their need for help and gives them enthusiasm enough to effect an organization. Write to the United States Department of Labor, Children's Bureau, Washington, District of Columbia, and get the bulletins they send free of charge. These will help you plan your educational programs for baby week. Note that the movement is extended to take in all children at home with their parents. We will be glad to help you. Let us be up and doing. It is not too early to plan it now and get your committees to work.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU

Washington

Press Service released for Morning Papers, January 1, 1917. 1916 was "baby year." That was settled once for all by the two thousand and more communities scattered over every State in the Union which observed the first nationwide baby week. Forty-seven of the 50 cities with more than 100,000 population, and 700 villages and rural communities with less than 2,500 population had baby weeks.

The 1917 baby week bids fair to be an even bigger, more worth while celebrating than last year's, but 1916 will keep the distinction of being the year when each community's provision for the welfare of its babies was generally recognized as a serious civic responsibility.

The Children's Bureau at Washington has already received numerous inquiries concerning the 1917 baby week, and the bureau is making the following suggestions:

Have your baby week from the 1st to the 6th of May, if possible. This date has been agreed upon by the bureau and the general federation of women's clubs as the time best adapted to the varying conditions of different States.

Remember the older babies. As one woman stated it:

"It requires only twelve months for a baby to become one year old and no longer subject to the hazards of infant mortality, but there are still many risks for him to encounter; he is still absolutely helpless, although increasingly charming, and his parents are as eager to keep him well and happy, as desirous of sound advice, as they were last year. Open out the 1917 baby week to include all children still at home with their mothers."

Remember the mothers. Well-cared for, healthy mothers are necessary for the health and happiness of their babies. Find out what your community is doing to insure to every mother skilled advice and adequate care before her baby is born and during her confinement, and give the importance of protecting the mother a prominent place in the educational work of the campaign.

And one word to communities where infantile paralysis has been epidemic: Mothers should be urged to leave the baby at home during baby week. Any feature of the campaign involving the bringing together of numbers of babies must of course be omitted, but such features are not essential to the interest and success of a campaign. And baby week will afford an excellent opportunity for giving information as to the proper physical training of children with paralyzed muscles.

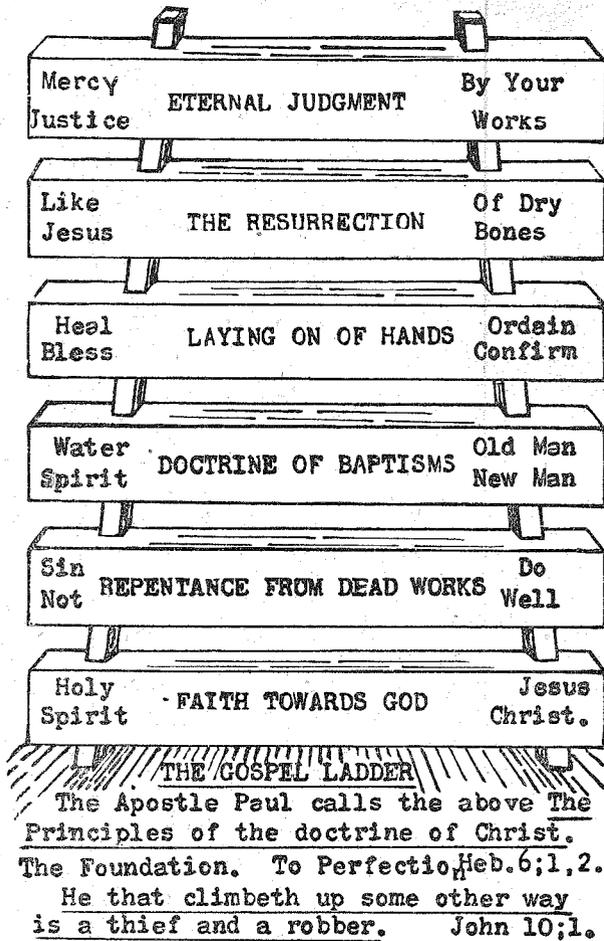

The Children's Bureau has a bulletin of suggestions for baby week campaigns which may be had upon request, and is now preparing a revised edition describing the interesting new features reported from the 1916 campaign.

If one will use good judgment in buying and preparing food, both as to quantity and quality, one need not have leftovers to dispose of. Many cooks in an attempt to use some trifling leftover will put with it expensive articles, such as eggs, butter, mushrooms, dainties out of season, etc., which make the dish not only dear, but after all not palatable.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Gospel Ladder

The following cut is made from a drawing by Elder W. D. McKnight of 255 North Main Street, Wichita, Kansas. He has had a number of them printed on post card size at this office, and on the back of the card briefly sets out some of the scriptural reasons for our belief in the six principles of the gospel mentioned on the ladder. He also plans to use this cut as one page in a six-page folder for distribution among those who are investigating.

He suggests that some plan like this makes a very effective chart and he uses one made on the back of a slated cloth blackboard 4 by 6 feet in size, and by using black mimeograph ink and one and one half inch rubber type it makes a very presentable chart. It is his belief that by using the chart and then following it up by handing out the cards with the explanation on it, it will be of permanent value in explaining our beliefs.

From Here and There

The Saints of the Niagara Falls, New York, Branch are announcing the dedication of their church on Sunday, March 18, and invite the attendance of any Saints who can come. The church is located at the corner of Willow Avenue and Seventeenth Street.

James H. Yager has just finished a series at Courtright, Ontario. Much prejudice exists there at the present time; looking for good results in the future.

"Your Here and There column is the most sensible feature I ever saw anywhere. It is newsy, to the point, and it doesn't take long to read the items."—Nellie Martin, Perry, Iowa.

We learn from L. G. Holloway that the Nauvoo District has raised the necessary amount for the purchase of an auto and the machine has been purchased. They are already planning the advertising for their reunion at Montrose.

The proposition to purchase the Coliseum in Lamoni for a community building was voted down at the election on the 27th. There were 439 votes cast and 4 thrown out, leaving 378 votes against the proposition, and 57 for. On the 2d Bishop Carmichael and J. F. Garver, accompanied by Bishop E. L. Kelley, the latter having been in Lamoni a few days on business, went to Independence, to attend a conference of stake officials. Heman C. Smith is to conclude his series of Sunday evening sermons on the 4th with a stereopticon lecture on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, showing historic church scenes and some archaeological features. Everyone thinking of and planning for the General Conference.

Elder W. E. Haden concluded a series of meetings at Neola, Iowa, on the 24th, resulting in the baptism of eight men and boys, four being heads of families. A splendid feeling was present at the confirmation and the light and liberty of the Spirit was enjoyed. Brother H. H. Gold in charge of school work in Neola, preached to a good sized congregation at Underwood Sunday morning. His effort was much appreciated and enjoyed by all. Brethren H. N. and J. A. Hansen were in attendance and furnished us the above items.

We are pleased to note that the Eastern Michigan District Sunday school convention held at Flint on the 24th and 25th voted to have all printed matter done at the church publishing houses when possible. A "sacrifice day" was appointed, and the funds raised thereby will be sent to the bishop or his agent. They are going to deal drastically with the district officer who will not report quarterly. The district normal superintendent is offering prizes for examinations and graduations next year. It was the largest convention ever held in the district.

Baker-Black Debate

This debate at Dell, Arkansas, is a matter of history in the minds of all those that heard it, and evidently will be on the minds of honest-hearted men and women as long as they live. I have moderated for a few debates, and heard several on different subjects, but I believe this was as good a debate as I ever heard. The church propositions were on trial, ours first.

Elder Black did not abuse the church by confusing us with the Brighamite church, but claimed that they were two churches, and he made a plain distinction between them. He denied the call of the ministry by revelation, saying it was by the gospel. (Colossians 2:14.) He said that many claim to be called, and yet preach different doctrines. Some claim to be called in different ways, as for instance one man went out to pray and said, "O Lord, if thou hast called me to preach, give this tree a mighty shaking up," and it was so. He told the congregation, but one of the brethren asked him what it sounded like. He said it sounded like a woman making brown gravy. They gave him license to preach on his call, and he preached for fifty-nine years thinking he was called of the Lord. Brother Baker said that Elder Black did not even have so much as a brown gravy call.

Brother A. M. Baker very beautifully presented the doctrine of the church in origin, organization, faith, doctrine, and practice from a Bible standpoint. I think most of the people who attended the debate could see that the church he was a representative of was the church of the Bible. There were many other interesting things that could be given, but I think this is enough for this time.

Independence Stake

Services throughout the stake on Sunday the 25th conducted with wonted interest. Brethren H. O. Smith and B. Whiting at the Second Branch, Brethren Jenkins and Wood at Walnut Park, the two brothers, Frank Shirk and Daniel Shirk at Enoch Hill, and the North Liberty Saints held Sunday school and attended the services at the Stone Church in the evening.

Brother Walter W. Smith was in charge at the evening service and introduced as the speaker Doctor R. M. Stewart, who has been giving his whole attention to the service of education, being connected with the State University of Iowa, was president of Graceland College for a time.

He spoke on the development of man's higher nature from babyhood up, and quoted many texts from the Scriptures. Excellent attention was given, and there were numbers by the men's chorus and Brother Turner's band of musicians.

The main features of the joint Sunday school and Religio conventions held there on the 24th and 25th were a discourse at the morning service by Bishop Keir on the duties and responsibilities of parents, and the lecture in the afternoon on teacher training by Brother Walter W. Smith. Both arms of the service showed strength and efficiency.

Brother George N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, was in attendance at the National Education Association in Kansas City. There were 2,700 members enrolled, and 3,300 educators were among the 4,000 in attendance.

"Reconciliation the work of the church," the editorial in last week's issue of the HERALD bears to the Saints a message of peace. May the Spirit that illumines the page be the Spirit we pray for, and in this time of trouble and affliction be the "single, solitary power," upon which the Saints rely, and which has thus far been their staff and stay, be their safeguard and defense to the end.

"However, I Keep Plodding"

[The following extracts from a personal letter express sentiments that are typical of our people when they are imbued with a yearning for advancement in all proper lines. We are glad to note these expressions of introspection, for they will surely be productive of good. While we are not permitted to publish it, the name of the writer of this letter is prominent as a most energetic worker in district and other work through which it is well known to the church.—EDITORS]

We had a delightful convention last week and the glow of it is still with me. When one hears so much of the ideal to be attained, it has also a depressing side. Realizing how far from the standard I am has brought a feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction that I have not been able to do some one thing well. Instead, I dab at this and that because necessity forces me. Ghosts of youthful ambitions confront me and look askance at the mediocrity they see. However, I keep plodding.

Workers in the branch are few and need encouragement, and that means attendance at all church and auxiliary meetings. If I stay away it certainly isn't counted unto me for righteousness.

I certainly ought not to unload my grievances against fate upon you. The trouble is my days and nights (ah, there's the rub) are crowded so full that I haven't time to do anything I want to. There are some courses offered this winter: College English, Spanish, domestic science and one in public speaking, but with four nights a week out, a steady job on Saturday and trying to get shorthand into my brain and finger tips, "culture" has to go by the board.

MOBILE, ALABAMA, February 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: Acting under what I interpreted as the promptings of the Spirit, I located my family in this city June last. During the summer months I was in other parts of the district and mission, but since November I have made this my objective by force of circumstances. Our veteran laborer, Brother F. P. Scarciff being called to the beyond in October, the work here was without an elder to look after church interests.

The Mobile Branch is about one year old, being organized last winter by Brethren R. C. Russell and F. M. Slover. We have a live Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary. We have purchased a lot and erected a small church building in which we held our first service Sunday, January 28. Several families have settled here from other parts of the district and now that we have a nucleus we hope to make more effective efforts here. Some excellent people are interested in our message, and I believe I see an "open door." Two men should be located in this city to answer the demands of the work.

We have recently become acquainted with Charles Mason who was an elder of the Brighamite church for six years. Two years ago he learned of the Reorganization and, being honest and desiring truth, he began an investigation which resulted in his baptism at our hands on the 8th inst. He is satisfied now as to where the authority is lodged. I expect to baptize two more to-day, making in all forty I have been privileged to baptize this conference year.

Altogether we believe the work is onward. We feel the thrill of added spiritual power incident to the especial work of the "hastening time," and hope with added strength from time to time that we shall be able to keep pace with the great forward movement everywhere discernible in the church. No doubt the Saints will be tried, probably severely, a "time of trouble" must come, but "joy cometh in the morning."

God speed the right,

A. E. WARR.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, February 17, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wonder how many Saints are reading the serial "Why stand ye idle?" that is running now in the Stepping Stones, and applying it to their own lives. It so vividly portrays the state of mind I was in less than a year ago that I will draw a brief sketch for the benefit of those who may see it.

I often wondered if the Lord did have anything to do with the people in these parts where there seemed to be so much confusion, backbiting, envying, strife and jealousy among the Saints, and outsiders so indifferent. It seemed my life was being wasted. There seemed nothing to do and I often thought how nice it would be to go to Zion or the regions round about and live in a nice branch of the church where everything moved along harmoniously, where there were men and women of talent and education to carry on the work where I could go to church and live in a good atmosphere with my hands idly folded and enjoy it all.

Ah! how nice these dreams of ours are, but how rude the awakening. I awakened from my dreams with a revulsion of feeling and began to wonder if in this obscure corner of the world the Lord did have a people if there wasn't work here to do. With such thoughts the animosity began to die and in its place came better feelings and a strong desire to stay here and show the people I could be somebody and help carry on his work. How well I have succeeded time alone will tell.

The desire to go to Zion is still uppermost in my mind, but I am content to await the proper time when all things are accomplished and I feel He no longer needs my services here. It is with different feelings I look upon the people here and the desire is to serve and willingly do whatever is my duty and I can truthfully say I have nothing but love for all, either in the church or out of it.

How many have read in the Ensign of January 25, in Brother W. W. Smith's sermon "The search for the Holy Grail" how a young knight started out to find the Holy Grail? The first person he met was a beggar, crippled, sick and poor, who asked the knight to bring him a drink of water. The knight could not stop for so little a thing as that, so he told the beggar he would have to ask some one else, for he was in search of the Holy Grail. From one country to another he traveled, always searching never finding, until old and ready to die he returned home. At his gates he met the same beggar who again asked him for a cup of water. He had plenty of time now, so he got a cup of water and when he turned the beggar had disappeared, but in his place stood the Savior with a look of pity and love, and the poor knight looked at what he had in his hand, and lo! it was the Holy Grail. "If ye do it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." How many Saints are in search of the Holy Grail? You will find it at your doors if you look for it.

Sincerely,

EFFIE J. DENTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since Uncle John wrote to you. But I do enjoy reading the glorious news you bear. There is so much fighting going on nowadays, you're not read so much as you ought to be.

War is a terrible brake to our world. I served two terms in the Civil War. I know what it means: death and destruction to life and property. It brings on hard times for the poor and turns out to be a rich man's war. While in the service I united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, but I had little time to bother with religion, yet I kept my promise in mind. After I came out of the service, I commenced to study for the ministry. The more I read from the old family Bible that lay on the stand, the more I was convinced that Methodism could not take Uncle John through the golden gate. But who was right I did not know until the spring of 1869, on the Isle of Grandmanan, New Brunswick. I listened to but three sermons preached by Elder T. W. Smith. He gave me to understand that I could get through the golden gate only on the old Jerusalem gospel, and we read of no change in order from heaven's King. March 11, 1869, I was conducted into the kingdom of heaven by T. W. Smith; the 14th day I was ordained a priest. At Little Kennebec, Maine, September 3, 1869, I was ordained an elder; at Jonesport, Maine, September 13, 1873, I was ordained a seventy. Each ordination by Elder T. W. Smith. April 14, 1888, I was ordained one of the presidents of seventy by Elders Alexander H. Smith and Duncan Campbell. In April, 1905, I with eleven others was put on the superannuated list, very much against my feelings—in fact, I did not know that my name was in the pot until I heard it read to General Conference. Yet, I've kept up my old-time vim, trying to enlist some poor soul on the Lord's side. God has blessed me beyond my expectation.

For the forty-eight years that I have presented the claims of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints I have traveled over a goodly portion of the United States and Canada. I have baptized 583—I hope to meet the major part of them safe in the fold on the other side; have ordained 69 to help spread the gospel news to others; blessed 308 children; preached 149 funeral sermons; organized 14 branches, administered to thousands, and I, as a living witness, testify to the blessed power of God to man, in this day and age of the world, as much so as you read in the good old Bible. I am on the Lord's side.

J. O. FOSS.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA, February 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: Our aged sister, Mrs. Mary Dorothy relates the following story concerning the famous falsehood about Joseph Smith attempting to walk upon the water. I am reminded to send in this account by the request that a collection of the various yarns which have been told about those things be gathered for comparison of their absurdities. I have been out in the Salt River Valley near Phoenix to visit Sister Dorothy, and it was interesting to hear her relate her early experiences in the church, as she remembers so much of the trouble and persecution of those early days.

Some may be interested to know that Aunt Katherine Salisbury's son, Alvin, married this Sister Dorothy's sister. Her narrative follows:

"Fifty-eight years ago, one David Alton, a neighbor of ours, said that when he was a young man he lived eighteen miles from Nauvoo, and was visiting friends near the town, when one Saturday, he and some other boys went out to fish and hunt.

"They concluded to take a plunge in the river, and in swimming around they came against a bench made of slabs with legs fastened in the bottom of the river, and that the walk extended quite a distance out into the river.

"The boys told him what was to be done the next day (Sunday), and that it was advertised that Joseph Smith was to walk on the water of the Mississippi. For fun, they took one plank out and hid it below there in the brush.

"Sunday morning came. A large crowd assembled on the banks to see the great miracle. "Joseph walked out with his head up till he came to the missing plank, and down he went. His friends had hard work to save him, as he could not swim."

The foregoing is Sister Mary Dorothy's narrative. She is eighty-three years of age and has been a member of this church for fifty years, and says she could doubt her existence as easily as to doubt this latter-day work.

I will add, that a few years ago in the State of Oklahoma, a man told Elder D. S. Crawley, my husband, that he was an eyewitness of Joseph Smith trying to walk a wire fastened to posts under the water in the river just below Nauvoo. Joseph walked about halfway across the river and the wire broke. I think he said that Joseph swam this time. How wonderful, that such notorious things should happen and none of his friends ever hear of the feat till many years after his death.

It is no wonder that we are admonished to hold fast to the truth, for its price is above the most precious jewels.

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, February 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: The recent articles appearing in the HERALD called "In the beginning God," by H. A. Stebbins, are the best and most comprehensive on that subject I have ever seen. I have often wished some one would write on these topics who was not either antagonistic or indifferent to the Bible, but rather its able champion. Brother Stebbins seems to be the man. This idea that there were several creative periods was entirely new to me, but seems to answer many puzzling questions. This explanation of the flood and the rainbow is satisfactory and reasonable.

For one I would be pleased to see Brother Stebbins's articles published in tract form, or better still, have him write for publication a small book on the subject like some of our Book of Mormon archæological works.

Yours fraternally,

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, February 20, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wish to ask for a little space in the HERALD for a few lines, as I've been a reader of both the HERALD and the Ensign for the last few months and feel thankful to say that they are the only papers that I ever enjoyed reading. The sermons in the HERALD bring me light and joy, proving to me that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is the true church founded on the rock that cannot fail.

Dear Saints, haven't we something to be thankful for that we may know this gospel to be true? I've been a member of this church only since July, 1916, when I was baptized by Elder Thomas J. Jordan, and since that day till this "I've found a friend in Jesus" whom I was seeking in the years gone by.

I might write a few lines of my early experience in regard to this church. A number of years ago I was told of a church by the name of Latter Day Saints, and their gospel. I was told that they did not teach what was found in the Bible but had a new Bible of their own which they would not show if anyone was around who did not belong to that church, and many other serious things. I made up my mind if I was going to find out what they were teaching I had to hear them for myself, for one man told me one thing and another another thing.

So away I went for the first time up to a dwelling house out on a farm where the meetings were held. No meeting was held this time but I spent the evening with those who were there. I can never forget this first time I came in conversation with this people. They were so willing to show me what their teaching was, and it was told in earnest, that I felt sorry for them (and no doubt they did the same for me). But I could not agree with them; it seemed so strange to me. They told me to pray and ask the Lord to show me what was right. This I was willing to do and did. I got home again, but soon went again.

I noticed this people had something among them that I was not accustomed to, and that was love—love for each other—and I knew love was of God. I became interested in the gospel but it took me three years or more before they could make me understand what their idea was. But they were faithful in their teachings and surely they will not lose their reward.

Elder Davis preached the first sermon that I took much interest in. It almost converted me. You Saints up here in Marchants Grove, I think you remember my coming up to fight with you on the Scriptures. I thank you all for your patience. It did me a lot of good.

About two or three years ago a three-day meeting was held in charge of Elders Jordan and Davis, and let me say if I ever felt the Lord had a people on earth it was right there. Quite a crowd was present and one sermon was carried on three hours. Time passed away so fast the people still wanted more. Meetings continued on the next morning. This drew me nearer to the church than ever. So it passed along until last summer when I finally had found what I was seeking for, and I accepted the gospel with a willing heart. So I can now freely sing that old song:

"Oh happy day that fixed my choice,
On thee my Savior and my God."

Never before did I feel that I could sing this song—it appealed to me, it belonged to some one else. But now I am thankful I feel it belongs to me too, and I know the Lord has heard and answered my prayers.

May we now all as Latter Day Saints be workers for the Lord; if we cannot do much let us do what we can and the Lord will surely bless us. Let us try our best to help each other in this great work. You know the Lord has said, "The night cometh when no man can work," so let us do our duty while it is called to-day. Let us not say to-morrow we will begin, begin to-day; tomorrow might be too late, and it will surely be too late if we do not begin to-day.

We may not all be able to do much, but let us be willing to do all we can—meet together at Sunday school when possible. Let us show we are willing; it will keep the Sunday school in better order and it makes us feel happy together. Let us do something for the Lord who has done so much for us, who has promised us a home in heaven if we only would obey his commandments.

He has said, "He that cometh unto me him will I in no wise cast out." His promises are true. If we only do our duty he will be with us all the way even unto the end of the world.

"May we, who know the joyful sound, still practice what we know—not hearers of the word alone, but doers of it, too."

Let us step forward and fight the battle with a willing heart. Remember me in your prayers. A. J. FILBY.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

The Burlington Route—Burlington lines only—will make a rate of two cents per mile to Lamoni, Iowa, and return, General Conference and Conventions, Lamoni, Iowa, March 31—April 21, 1917. Take notice that the rate refers to interstate traffic, that is, from one State into another, and is good only from the States and stations named: Missouri: Saint Joseph, Kansas City, Saint Louis; Illinois: Chicago, Peoria, Quincy, East Saint Louis; Nebraska: Alliance, Oxford, Grand Island, Lincoln, Omaha. The State rate in Iowa is two cents per mile. To obtain the two-cent rate in the three States named it may be necessary either to buy round trip tickets, or to secure certificate with going ticket to entitle to return ticket at two cents. Will advise as to this later.

Eastern and Canadian ministers and laymen.—The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, the Erie Railroad, Philadelphia & Reading, Lehigh Valley, Grand Trunk and connections, Baltimore and Ohio, and Pennsylvania lines will make a clergy rate of one half fare between New York and Chicago, or $9.55 one way, $19.10 round trip, also a proportionate rate from Philadelphia and other eastern points. Present credentials on application. Lay delegates will pay regular fare, except that parties of ten or more may secure reduction each way. The half fare to ministers is good on the lines named from all points east of Buffalo and Pittsburgh, except with some local regulations on the Philadelphia & Reading, to be learned on inquiry. Those preferring may secure the clergy rate to Saint Louis. No ministerial rate west of Chicago.

All coming from New England should consult Brother M. C. Fisher, 7 Miner Street, Winter Hill, Boston, Massachusetts; from New York and contiguous territory consult Brother W. L. Christy, 1312 Park Place, Brooklyn, New York; from Philadelphia and vicinity, J. A. Koehler, 112 West Ontario Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; from Cleveland, Ohio, and adjacent territory, including Canada, and that portion of the Middle West, J. A. Becker, Route 2, Willoughby, Ohio; those from Chicago and adjacent territory consult David E. Dowker, 6549 South Lincoln Street, Chicago.

It ought to be possible to gather large parties at the points named; Canadian Saints are asked to cooperate in their own territory in arranging parties and with the brethren named. Special train, car, chair car, tourist sleeper, Pullman, and other service, with checking of baggage through to destination, and other advantages may be secured by acting through those named, who are in touch with various lines. It is impossible to gather people together from this distant point. By acting with the brethren named and by traveling together we obtain greater benefits and increasing recognition.

Brother D. E. Dowker, Chicago, will take charge of a party that is expected to leave Chicago on Sunday, April 1, on train No. 5 at 6.15 p. m., Burlington Route. Said train will make stops on notice. Should enough be secured to charter a special train the leaving time may be changed to about 9.30 p. m. For twenty people standard Pullman will be provided, lower berth $2.50, upper $2.00; tourist sleeper for same number, lower $1.25, upper $1.00; for fifty people special chair car; forty, day coach for party; for one hundred, special train. He suggests that those in charge of parties from the east consult him and arrange to have their special cars attached to this Burlington train; that those who need to repurchase tickets at Chicago, in case of delay, make up their joint fares and have one buy at Chicago for the party. Individual travelers, consult the brethren at points named; those in charge of parties from the east will advise with Brother Dowker.

In figuring connections at Chicago and at Chariton, Iowa, bear in mind that trains No. 111 and No. 112 running between Chariton and Kansas City will run direct to Lamoni from Monday, April 2 to, and including, Saturday, April 7; also that said trains will run to Lamoni on days to be designated on closing conference days. Sunday and other regular trains to Lamoni will be provided with extra car service.

Pacific coast rates.—Regular rates may not be proclaimed in time for this meeting. However, the regular nine-months' excursion rates approximating two cents per mile in each direction are in effect from Pacific coast common points to Kansas City, Saint Joseph, Omaha, and other eastern gateways. These nine-months' excursion tickets are sold only from the States of California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and the Province of British Columbia.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

Woman's Auxiliary

The proposed constitution and by-laws for the government of the general organization of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Article 1, name.—The name of the organization shall be, "The Woman's Auxiliary of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints."

Article 2, object.—Its object shall be to study the welfare of the home, child, community, school, and church; to encourage the organization of women into classes, etc., that they may better prepare themselves to cooperate in all work tending toward the building up of Zion.

Article 3, membership.—Any club, circle, class, etc., organized with the above object in view, or any woman so in-

This advertising talk by the manager of the Board of Publication is one of a series appearing simultaneously in the SAINTS' HERALD and "Zion's Ensign," written with the hope of reaching as many as possible of the church membership. This is the first of eight "talks" that will appear.

THE CHILDREN OF THIS GENERATION

Surely the members of this church should be as wise as the "children of this generation." We quote from the catalogue of one of the large church publishing houses of the United States:

BUY FROM YOUR OWN HOUSE

This catalogue will come into many hands. . . . Most of these will be ——— hands, hence the above caption. Our business is not conducted for personal profit. We have two great aims: First, to make the best possible Sunday school helps and lesson periodicals; and second, to be able to transfer to the missionary department of the ——— Publication Society a large donation of net profits each year. Thus, every purchase you make becomes a feeder to the great ——— enterprise.

The Board of Publication of this church offers the Saints a splendid opportunity to engage in fraternal cooperation. The publishing houses of the church are: The Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa; the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri; and the Standard Publishing House, Rozelle, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia. At all of these places the church books and supplies may be had. Not only in supplying these things are we seeking to serve the church, but we suggest in the series of advertising talks to follow this one, some of the ways in which the publishing interests of the church may serve the church.

With the organization and equipment available, we are in a position to greatly extend our work, with intelligent cooperation, which should be profitable to the entire church.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION

terested, may become members by paying the sum hereinafter provided.

Article 4, organization.—The officers of this organization shall be: President, vice president, secretary, treasurer, and historian, to be elected annually at a meeting of this association at such time and place as shall be decided upon. The manner of election shall be determined by vote of the general assembly.

In case of death or resignation the vacancy shall be filled by appointment agreed upon by a majority of the executive committee.

Article 5, finance.—There shall be an annual assessment of ten cents per member, due and payable to the general treasurer at the first of each year.

Article 6, amendments.—The constitution may be amended by two thirds vote at any general convention, provided that not less than three months' notice of the proposed changes shall have been published in the press columns of the association.

BY-LAWS OF GENERAL ASSOCIATION

Section 1, Bureaus and supervisors.—In order to carry out the object of this association, the following bureaus shall be established: Educational, home and child welfare, relief and service, and young woman's. Supervisors shall be appointed by the president after consulting with the other members of the executive committee, and such general church officers as are interested in the particular phase of work under consideration.

Section 2, District and stake organizers.—The president shall appoint a district or stake organizer to take charge of the work in each organized district or stake within the church, such appointment to be made after consulting with the other members of the executive committee, and the missionary in charge of the district or stake in question.

Section 3, duties of officers.—The president, in addition to the duties generally pertaining to this office, shall have general supervision over all bureaus. She shall send such report to the First Presidency of the church as shall be required.

The vice president shall be the associate of the president in her work, and shall in the absence of the president, perform the duties of that office.

The secretary shall keep the minutes of the general meetings, and of any action taken by the executive committee. She shall keep a directory of all clubs, classes, circles, etc., with their officers, which are affiliated with the general association, sending out such notices as shall be required by the general officers.

The treasurer shall collect all dues annually, notifying districts or stakes the first of December of each year, and if not collected by February 1, another notice shall be sent; if payment is delayed, she shall report to the executive committee. She shall be custodian of all funds, which shall be payed out only upon warrants signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary. She shall keep an itemized account of all receipts and expenditures, and present a report at stated meetings, and make a written report at general convention after her reports have been audited.

The Historian shall keep an interesting history of all activities of the general association, which history shall be the permanent record of the association. She shall require from the general officers, supervisors, and organizers such reports as shall be necessary to make her history complete.

The executive committee shall consist of the general elective officers, and supervisors of bureaus. In addition to the matters as are usually presided over by such a committee, it shall appoint the editor in chief of the press columns of the association and the Year Book committee. It shall consider the general outlines of programs for reunions, conventions, institutes, etc., making such suggestions to the district organizers as they deem wise.

Section 4, duties of appointive officers.—The supervisors shall have charge of the work of their bureaus, keeping vitally in touch with such phases of woman's work as will be of particular value to her bureau. She shall make a general outline of her plans for the year's work and submit same to the president, and through her, such general church officers as are interested in that particular phase of the work. She shall suggest ways of working to the organizers who have been appointed over each church district or stake, and through each organizer, reach each club, society, etc., interested in her phase of woman's work.

The organizers shall have general charge over all phases of auxiliary work in such districts or stakes over which they are appointed, keeping a directory of each club, etc., with their officers, within the district or stake, and presenting to them such outlines of work as shall be sent her by the supervisors of bureaus as are adapted to the locality in which the classes or clubs are found. She shall encourage the organization of women for the purposes outlined in Article 2, and render assistance in such organizations when called upon. She shall have power to choose a program committee, of which she shall be chairman, to prepare programs for woman's meetings to be held at reunions, conventions, etc., within her district. She shall send to each club, circle, etc., within her district or stake, such notices as come to her from the general officers, and collect from each club, circle, etc., the dues provided for in Article 5, submitting same to general treasurer. She shall keep a history of her work and the work of clubs, circles, etc., within her district, and should report to general historian such matters as are called for by them. She shall send to the editor in chief all items of interest for publication. She shall keep in touch with the missionary in charge of her particular field, that a closer cooperation between the auxiliary and the church may be fostered.

The editor in chief shall edit and arrange all matters for publication in connection with the press column of the general association, and through the medium of the press extend systematically a knowledge of its aim and activities.

Section 5, records.—The officers, supervisors, and organizers shall keep records of the work of their departments, which shall be given to the historian, who shall incorporate them in the general history of the association.

Section 6, Year Book.—The Year Book shall be a guidebook for clubs, circles, classes, or societies. It shall contain the aims, purposes, and reasons for the work; a general review of the activity and work accomplished; suggestions for future work; a list of books, literature, prices, and where they may be purchased; the qualifications of those composing committees, etc.

Section 7, Year Book committee.—The executive committee shall appoint the Year Book committee. This committee shall consist of three members, of which the president shall be chairman, one member to be appointed each year. This committee shall confer with the president of the church and heads of departments and institutions of the church who foster such lines of work as outlined in the general by-laws, and with the executive committee of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Section 8, representation.—All women who are interested in woman's work, are entitled to voice and vote in the general convention.

Section 9, amendments.—The by-laws may be amended at any annual meeting of the general association without previous majority vote.

Section 10, suggestions for organization of local clubs, classes, etc.—Any group of women meeting together for social betterment purposes of any character, may belong to this association, by adopting Articles 2 and 7. They are then entitled to vote and voice in any district or stake or general assembly on all questions being considered.

It is their privilege to elect whatever officers they find advisable, choose their own line of work, pass such by-laws as meet the local conditions. It is their privilege to receive suggestions from the district or stake organizer, and the supervisors of the various phases of the work covered in the general constitution.

In places where there are two or more clubs, circles, etc., they may meet together and organize a council of women, to better conserve the object of the association, so that there may be no wasted energy due to overlapping of activities; and philanthropic work may be better directed, etc., and the needs of the community as a whole considered.

Each club, society, etc., meeting together for the sake of study, should have a leader whose duty it should be to direct the study of the class, either conducting the work of the class herself or appointing a teacher; to solicit members for the class, and try to arouse interest in the subject being studied. These leaders should keep in touch with the supervisors of the bureau under which her class is enrolled, receiving advice and council whenever necessary.

Married

ROTH-HARGER.—On the evening of March 1, Elder J. S. Roth was united in marriage to Sister Mary Harger of Lamoni. Elder J. F. Garver performed the ceremony. Brother and Sister Roth will reside in Lamoni and have the best wishes of a host of admiring friends.

Orchestra Work at Coming General Conference

The orchestral department of the general choir movement desires to have some orchestral work at the coming annual conference. All who play upon orchestral instruments with a fair degree of skill are therefore urged to attend this conference, if possible, bringing their instruments and prepared to serve on the conference, when same is formed.

All brass or wind instruments must be of international, or low, pitch. Should a greater number of brass or wind instruments present themselves, in excess of the number required to proportion with the strings, it may be found practicable to use them in some conference band, or other work.

The Lamoni orchestra, under the leadership of Brother Joseph Anthony, will doubtless form the nucleus of the proposed conference orchestra, and visiting players will sit with them on the occasions when the work of the combined orchestra is being presented.

The undersigned is desirous of having those who expect to be present write him, stating instrument played. As the possibilities of this orchestra is not yet known, it is not definitely decided regarding the selections to be used. Visiting players will be accommodated with the various parts after arrival. These selections will be of such easily mastered by the combined orchestra in its rehearsals. ARTHUR H. MILLS, General Director, Orchestral Department, General Choir Movement. BRADEN - KELLEY DEBATE.—Probably the most exhaustive and most exciting debate ever held in the Reorganization. Both sides of the controversy are given in full, the manuscripts being signed by both participants. The Christian Church claims its representative, the late Clark Braden, defeated Bishop E. L. Kelley in this discussion—but we are doing the selling. The attacks upon us in this volume are so numerous and characteristic every preacher and would-be preacher of ours should acquaint himself with them. The book is a mental and spiritual stimulant. DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON PROVEN BY ARCHÆOLOGY.—Student, here is a mass of startling data for your consideration. Nothing "sentimental" about this work. It adheres to reality, and yet it is full of the romance which clusters about the ruins of a departed civilization. Louise Palfrey Sheldon accomplished a notable work in writing this book. THE TRUTH DEFENDED.—In this answer to Davis H. Bays' "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," Heman C. Smith provides the reader with something more than intellectual entertainment—he not only excites but inspires the faculties. "The Truth" is so "defended" that the impartial critic is roused to unavoidable participation in the discussion greatly to his enlightenment. No. 304, paper, 50c; No. 305, cloth$.75

TRUE SUCCESSION IN CHURCH PRESIDENCY.—The church historian, Heman C. Smith, took full advantage of the splendid opportunity his special calling afforded him for obtaining material with which to answer Brigham H. Roberts, the Utah champion of Brighamism; and this answer is not only convincing, but complete. It deposes Young forever from the high position he assumed. No. 306, paper, 50c; No. 307, cloth$.75

VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH THE SEER.—A businesslike little work, scientifically written, showing forth the truth of the Book of Mormon and establishing the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission. WHAT IS MAN?—J. R. Lambert at his best. This is saying a good deal. Brother Lambert knows where to go for evidence and how to clinch it when he gets it. This book forever disproves the dogmas of soul sleeping and kindred illusions. A powerful work. No. 316 cloth.....$.75

Route

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

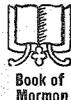

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

E D I T O R I A L

SHALL I OFFER MY SERVICES?

Probably most young men of the church ask themselves this question at one time or another. It is a matter that requires deep and prayerful consideration.

In this issue we publish an interesting article, which was originally sent in as a letter last fall, from a man who entered the missionary field last conference. He relates his experiences for the first few months in a very interesting way.

In a week the Quorum of the Twelve will meet. It is a time for decision. The church needs more missionaries in practically every field to meet the calls we are receiving for service. Our experience and observation this past year has made us feel keenly the needs of the missionary department of work. The problem and sacrifices of those who are going forth, striving to fulfill this need and by personal denial to carry this gospel of the kingdom to the honest in heart must appeal to all of us.

Boston is but the center of a number of cities, each of which would be considered a metropolis in the West. There are several cities, within a few miles of that city, with a population of around a hundred thousand, and within fifty miles there are three cities decidedly over that figure. In one of these cities there is already a mission open, but it needs an active man on the ground. In another large city readily reached from Boston, there was an urgent call, which it was not possible to fill. There are in fact many places throughout New England where a missionary could be used to great advantage, and some in which there is a real need.

In New York and Brooklyn Elder Ward L. Christy would like twelve young men to work under his direction.

Saint Louis had no missionary the past year. A sister from the great Northwest writes that they have not heard a sermon since August last, and do not know when they will have another opportunity.

But why multiply instances? The harvest is ripe and the laborers few.

Also there is a growing need for presiding officers, experienced men to take care of the branches already organized and the present membership, and more men to take care of the honest in heart who shall be brought into the kingdom.

Experienced men are needed both for the mission field and for pastoral work; but experience must first be gained. Hence the call is for young men, especially for those who can go out self-supporting or with a minimum expense to the church. And there is a present need for the services of those young men, as well as a need for more experienced men. All are needed.

For those men who are not free to devote all their time to the ministry and preach, men who are engaged in the affairs of business and who are assisting greatly in that way; especially those who have been called to the priesthood and placed in charge of local work, they, too, have a great work to do. To them we would say: Examine yourselves. Are you doing what lies in your power to fulfill your office and calling, that there may be a place prepared and a people prepared to welcome the honest in heart when they are brought into the kingdom, to feed them with the pure milk of the word, then the meat, that they may grow towards the stature of a man in Christ Jesus?

There is plenty of work for all to do. The fact that there are one or two missionaries near you, does not mean that you should take a vacation. There must be an earnest, consecrated and concentrated effort all along the line.

The work may not always be pleasant, for you are called to minister and be the servant of all. The ministry is not a bed of roses, but on the other hand, there is a sustaining power of the Spirit of God to give us the peace that passes all understanding and make the hard places easy.

"Shall I offer my services?" That depends upon the call of God and the ordination to an office in the priesthood. This should precede. Also there should be a personal call to the man; or if he is married, it should be a matter of family conference, as her sacrifice will often be as great or greater than his. It is not a work to be conveniently selected. It can only be based upon a divine call.

But some young men have been called to office, and know that they are called, yet they try to put it off or avoid it. Like Jonah, they go astray, trying to evade the divine call, and some of them find themselves, in the end, in as bad a fix as him, in a moral and spiritual way.

WHAT SHALL I OFFER?

We have heard of young men who when asked to take up a course of serious reading have demurred; when the matter was pressed to find out their particular interest, they still demurred. Finally they expressed the thought "I don't think I need take up any of that study, because you see I expect to become an elder," evidently meaning by this a missionary.

Such an idea is evidently a mistake. If we understand the word of God aright, the Bible, we are not justified, neither in baptism nor in preparation, in leaving it all to the Master to perform. Efficient service requires careful and prayerful study on our part. Doctrine and Covenants 85:21 specifically designates that this study is so we may be prepared to fulfill our mission and calling.

After a man has made the utmost possible preparation within his power, even if he has secured all the degrees that the universities of this world can give him, before the great problems confronting us, he will still feel his weakness and need of divine help. To stand as the representative of our heavenly Father, to minister in the sacred desk and in the home of the people, is not a light thing.

Still by education we do not mean of necessity attendance at any particular university, or in fact attendance at any college or university. Education means literally to lead out; it means to develop our natural capacity as a man, so that we may offer the best that we have. Personally we do not think that any one method applies to all. We should individually make what preparation we can, and then rest assured that our effort in righteousness will be respected both by God and by God-fearing men.

Polish is well, vocabulary is a good thing to possess, training in public address is excellent, but the great question is, Have you a message to deliver? If you have, then you will feel courage, power and also the need of presenting that message in a way to be acceptable, to achieve results, to win others to that, which is to you the way of righteousness and of truth.

But after all our preparation, there still rests that deep necessity of humble prayer for divine inspiration and direction. After we have done our best, still must we seek the sacred throne for that power which comes from above. And it is this that makes it possible to endure the slights, the trials and the sacrifices of missionary life. Because with that experience there comes such peace that no other course is possible, but to obey the divine call and with our might thrust in our sickles and reap. Or in other words, seek how we may serve and save others—the spirit of the missionary—to help others to better things.

To-day is the accepted time. To-day the question confronts you, young men of the church. To-day should you retire to your secret closets with earnest petition for divine guidance, that you may answer aright this question, Shall I offer my services now?

THE FACTS ABOUT BROTHER ELBERT

Occasionally there appear indications that in some quarters there is grave concern as to the condition of Brother Elbert. His illness seems to have given rise to many rumors, some of which are calculated to arouse the anxiety mentioned.

We appreciate the deep sympathy and interest of the Saints exercised in his behalf, but feel that some positive statements are needed to set at rest these ungrounded rumors.

We have made a most careful investigation of the facts, have gathered the expressions of the physicians concerned, and there does not appear to be one iota of evidence that Brother Elbert has at any time suffered from anything else than a serious physical and nervous strain.

There is absolutely nothing about his condition but what should be corrected by a reasonable rest and freedom from responsibility. This we have presented several times. We look confidently, hopefully and certainly for his early restoration to health, provided he is not overburdened with letters and communications that disturb him. If this should occur the effect would naturally be to delay somewhat his recovery, but not to prevent it. This latter we think is provided against.

This statement is made with the concurrence and approval of President Frederick M. Smith, and we trust it will have the effect, throughout the church and elsewhere, of settling once for all these mysterious rumors, suspicions and surmises by a clear statement of the facts and the truth of the case. The trouble has never been anything more than the results of overwork, which means a nervous strain.

The further facts are as set forth in the letter of T. W. Williams, that Brother Elbert is making steady improvement and is showing a return to health. The latest word is under date of March 2 from Sister E. A. Smith, and reports that Brother Elbert is gaining decidedly in strength and is feeling much more comfortable and encouraged. While this is expected, yet it is a just cause for thanksgiving.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES--AND OTHERS

The editors of the HERALD request that all those who keep quorum or other records of meetings during the coming sessions of the General Conference will plan to give us a copy of all reports to conference and other matter that might be used in reporting for the DAILY HERALD and the regular issues.

We are sure all the organizations, including the Woman's Auxiliary, choir, orchestra, etc., will be glad to have their activities reported and we are sure our readers will appreciate it.

To make it more convenient, we will furnish the paper and carbon paper when requested, so we may get a copy of each official report submitted to the conventions or conference. Get in touch with the HERALD Editors early and let us all work together. The church wants to know what is going on, and your help will be appreciated.

HERALD EDITORS.

BISHOP EVANS IS COMING

Those who expect to attend General Conference will be pleased to learn that Bishop R. C. Evans of Canada will be present, and will speak each night at the Coliseum.

Bishop Evans will close his services at the Majestic Theater, in Toronto, Canada, just in time to meet his appointment here. For thirteen years he has successfully held forth each winter in this and other large theaters in Toronto. He is a speaker of unusual effectiveness. Under these circumstances few men can equal him; but he has the advantage of presenting the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as restored in these latter days.

Those who heard him two years ago will be glad to renew their acquaintance and will remember with pleasure the very successful effort made at that time. Those who have not heard him for several years will be pleased with the opportunity to renew his acquaintance.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Bishop McGuire is Back

By wireless we are informed that Bishop McGuire, who was unexpectedly called east by a death in his wife's family, returned last Friday. Sister McGuire remains in the East, but the pressure of work in the Bishop's office required the return of Bishop McGuire at the earliest possible moment. John A. McGuire, a brother of the Bishop, returned with him. He is a business man and farmer and is president of the board of education.

Merchant Ships Will Be Armed

President Wilson has given the Navy Department orders to arm American merchant ships and will ask Congress in its extra session to begin April 16 to vote the necessary hundred million dollars to provide for this. It is expected that ships so armed will fire upon any submarine that appears and in turn will expect to be sunk without warning. Government officials believe that this step will lead to war conditions at least, if not an open declaration.

British Take Bagdad

Following the surrender by the Turks of Kut-el-Amara the British expedition pressed northward and have captured this famous city of Mesopotamia. Details are lacking at this writing as to amount of material taken. Hamadan, two hundred and forty miles to the northwest, has been captured by the Russians. Bad weather has prevented important operations in other war theaters. A British transport was sunk in a collision and six hundred and twenty-five persons lost their lives.

Gain in Christmas Offering

The total reported for printing in the Blue Stepping Stones is $12,997.02. This is a gain of $2,092.78 over last year, the total then being $10,904.24. The previous report was $10,072.78, and the year before that it was $9,060.55. This is a very gratifying increase and we are confident that the total next year will be far beyond all these added together. With forty-five thousand people all working to raise the sum of two dollars each, we are sure the result will be surprising.

Report from Germany

Brother Alexander Kippe reports to the church recorder that there has been a total increase of membership in Germany by baptism of about twenty persons. Others have been reported as ready for baptism but were not reached on account of the disorganized condition of the ministerial work. Nearly all the brethren are at the front, and at the time of reporting about five of them had been killed. At the time of writing, Brother Kippe was working for eighty cents a day, which he says is hardly enough to defray expenses on account of the dearth of provisions and necessities of life.

"Te Orometua"

We are sure the Saints throughout the Society Islands Mission must be pleased with the November-December number, a copy of which recently reached us. Brother Clyde F. Ellis is the "imprimeur," or editor printer and it is a very presentable little paper, all in Tahitian. Brother Hubert Case tells us something of its contents in a letter in this number. Under the picture of our president we read: "Te peretitini ra o Frederika M. Semita," for President Frederick M. Smith. Brother McGuire is designated as "Te Episekopo Rahi ra o Beniamina R. McGuire," their way of saying that he is the presiding bishop of the church. Brother Ellis says they plan to have another illustrated number sometime the coming year.

Elder John R. Evans Passes

We chronicle the death of another veteran of the cause. Brother Evans was for a number of years a general missionary. He was a member of the church in Wales before the "dark and cloudy day," came to America in 1863, locating in Idaho. He was ordained an elder the same year. Disappointed in finding conditions as they were in the West, he went out and energetically sought to reclaim the people there from the errors of their ways. He was a member of the Lamoni Stake high council from the organization of the stake till his resignation on account of age and infirmity less than a year ago. He died on the 8th, and on account of the large attendance, services were held in two churches simultaneously in Lucas, Iowa, Elders F. M. Weld and J. F. Garver preaching the sermons. Other details will appear in his obituary later.

The March "Autumn Leaves"

An experience in missionary life under the title "Perils at sea," is contributed by Frederick A. Smith, showing how God was with him and preserved him from harm. The first of three articles by Henry A. Stebbins on "Abraham Lincoln and his work," appears, being the result of much serious study by Brother Stebbins. Many books have been consulted in the writing of these articles and they should be very valuable to the youth of the church. "A vineyard story," by Estella Wight, continues with unabated interest. There is some interesting poetry by our church writers, and an article by H. N. Hansen on "The young people in Scandinavia." In addition to these are several other worth while articles and the usual valuable departments. The Religio's Arena has some proposed amendments to the constitution to be acted on at the coming convention. The Sunday school department under the editorship of G. R. Wells, the general superintendent, is the official organ of the Sunday school association.

From the Church Recorder's Report

Brother C. I. Carpenter has completed his report of the past year's numerical changes and from his complete statement we extract the following: At the first of the year we had a membership of 78,326, while during the year we have made a net gain of 4,638, making the membership at the close of the year 1916 a total of 82,964. There have been 426 ordinations, 640 marriages, and 1,703 children blessed. There were 4,631 baptisms during the year; of this number 1,667 or 36 per cent, were under fifteen years of age. The net gain of 4,638 means an increase of 5.92 per cent. Michigan leads with the largest number of baptisms, reporting 745, representing 10 per cent of their membership at the beginning of the year. Canada is second, with 648, also ten per cent of their membership; in their order follow Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and Nebraska. Thirty-five new branches have been added to the records, while others have been organized but not reported. The report will be published in full for presentation to the conference and will appear in later issues of the HERALD.

Magazine Number of "Gospel Standard"

"In view of the recent attacks upon the church, and with the view to affording the public a better opportunity of becoming acquainted with our teaching, we have decided to publish a special magazine number. As this will be something altogether outside of ordinary subscription arrangements, copies will not be sent to subscribers unless arrangements are made to have them sent. The price of a single copy will be three pence [about 6 cents, with postage extra to the United States] and we especially request all readers of the ordinary Standard to subscribe for this special number so that all may receive the benefit of this publication, and that it may be made a financial success." Thus reads the beginning of an announcement in the January number of the Gospel Standard, printed by our church publishing house at 65 Nelson Street, Rozelle, Sidney, New South Wales. We have noted in the last two numbers of the Standard that a number of attacks have been made upon the Latter Day Saints, and particularly upon Joseph Smith by the Cooperbrook and Camden Haven Parish Notes, and while these have been replied to at length in the Standard, we suppose it is intended to use longer and more complete articles to refute the false claims set forth by the enemies of the latter-day work.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

SHALL I OFFER MY SERVICES?

[The following from a young missionary should be especially encouraging to those of our readers, young or old, who are oftentimes required to answer this question.—EDITORS.]

This is a question that arises in the mind of every true Latter Day Saint when he comes to manhood or womanhood, as the case may be, and is a question that must be decided between God and the individual. This question came to the mind of the writer and had to be solved only a short time ago, as this happens to be my first year of missionary life.

My mind goes back to just a year ago when my wife and I were on a ranch in Colorado, and there was a district conference at Wray. We were located twenty miles from there and decided to attend. We had a warm reception and met many of the Saints in that part of God's vineyard. The following Sunday was sacrament and Brother Ammon White was in charge, and we all had a spiritual feast and what is considered a pleasure and a joy to isolated Saints. While this meeting was under way, Brother White had the spirit of prophecy, but did not deliver all of the prophecy. The Spirit rested on me in greater power than I had ever experienced up to this time, and I was also given the spirit of discernment and felt that Brother White had some evidence concerning me, but as he did not mention any names, and the meeting closed, I made up my mind that I was mistaken, and had the wrong impression.

I again felt free to entangle myself with the affairs of this world, as to making a livelihood, when Brother White called me off to one side and told me the Lord had a great work for me to do, and if I proved faithful he would bless my weak efforts, and I should be a minuteman in his service and in defending this gospel that we all love so much. I have seen this fulfilled.

Brother Charles May and J. R. Sutton were in attendance and had the evidence also of my calling. This is a day long to be remembered by the writer.

I had promised God to follow him wherever he called and to whatever line of work he chose, if he would make it clear unto me. But no one knew my thoughts; God had made it plain unto me and I could not doubt.

There was one statement Brother White made to me that seemed to impress my mind more than any other, and that was that God never asked an impossibility of any of his children. Believing this to be true, there was left small hopes for me.

We at last found ourselves back on the ranch, taking up the toils of this life that devolve upon all mankind.

As time rolled on, my mind began to ponder on the possibilities of God and his work in these latter days, and the possibilities of man if we live the gospel and offer ourselves living sacrifices to the cause.

My mind went back to the time when I attended college in Des Moines, Iowa. While there I attended the Latter Day Saint church, that being the first privilege to attend our church I had ever had. One morning in a prayer service Brother Salisbury spoke under the influence of the Spirit, but did not mention any names. Again I was given the spirit of discernment to know it was to me, and as soon as the meeting closed, I made up my mind to escape without talking to Brother Salisbury, but when I got to the door he was the first man I met, and he told me that the Lord had a work for me to do if I were faithful. Also my patriarchal blessing told me my duty I owed to God and man, and whether isolated or among the gathered, the Lord knew his wheat and would gather it out in his own due time.

I also thought of the good times I had with the Saints at Omaha, more especially the young people's prayer meetings where they met together once a week, and all seemed to take part—and we know that always makes a good live meeting. There I met Brother Paul N. Craig, and during my stay in that place my spiritual zeal was roused and from that time on I began to think of the great future of this latter-day work, and of the building up of Zion and establishing a place of peace and safety, if both old and young would labor together. I knew that the Lord had made the statement long ago that he was ready to redeem Zion, but we as a people had lacked on our part. I have often wondered if the Lord will have the same to say about us, or will we be permitted to bring about his work. I am sure if we can all be united and of one heart and mind the task will be easy and the victory won. The Lord wants obedience, humbleness, and self-denial to accomplish the work that he has outlined in these latter days.

I have often heard the statement made by my young associates that we have to sow our wild oats, but I believe they have lost sight of the harvest, for the Lord has said that whatsoever a man sows that must he also reap, and I am sure that this is a sad mistake that so many boys and girls make and many never find their way back to the path of righteousness. The Lord also has said to seek him in the days of our youth.

We often hear the statement made that the young boys and girls are the men and women of to-morrow. Certainly this holds good in the church, for we have seen so many who have had to take up the work of their fathers, who have been faithful to the cause, and have passed over to the other side to reap the reward of the faithful. As the Apostle Paul tells us, that he had fought a good fight, and had finished his course, and had kept the faith. Henceforth there was laid up for him a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, would give him at that day and not only him, but all those who love his appearing.

I have known young men to stay away from prayer meeting because of fear that the Lord might call them to do a special work in the church. But this is a sad mistake, for I do not believe the Lord wants this kind of workers, but that he wants willing workers, those who are willing to make the sacrifice and offer their services unto him, or in other words, he wants a consecrated life to the cause. We have been made to realize this, and the world knows that a man or woman that consecrates his or her life to a work will do far more than the paid life, for the last have their eyes set on their income and not on their work.

Brother White made the statement that nothing was impossible with God, and about four months found wife, son, and myself at Independence ready for a mission that spring, if God saw fit to choose, for he has said he will never forsake his children if they will obey his will.

Up until this time I had not been ordained, but had moved out in faith, for God has said that all that come unto him must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of all those who diligently seek him.

At times there would be something say to me, "Put it off for two or three years, and then you can go," but when I would be thinking of putting it off something would say, "Is that what you promised God? that you would go in a year or so, or did you promise him to obey and follow his instructions?" And still there would come that assurance that if I would do my part that I need not fear, and on the first of March I was ordained a priest and preached my first sermon the following Sunday. No doubt I had the same trial that many have had when making their first effort, and I do not intend to say much about that, only about all I could think of was the coming Sunday. The Evil One would whisper in my ear and tell me I could not preach, and all I could do was to answer I didn't know, but I was going to try, but at times he had me nearly persuaded to not even as much as try, and then I thought of the many promises our Master has made to those who would try.

The following Sunday I appeared on the scene and all the while I had been trying to fix my mind on a certain subject, but there seemed to be too many subjects presented, each staying only a short time, giving way to a new one. At last I made up my mind not to take a text, as I might not be able to do it justice, so I jotted a few thoughts down on a card. But when I arose to speak I thought of a few things I wished to say before touching upon that which I had jotted down, and I talked for over an hour and never got near them.

I have learned since that time that God blessed me with a wonderful outpouring of his Holy Spirit, for I have seen the time since when I didn't do nearly so well, but I also realize if we were to receive all blessings we would forget from what source they come. Such blessings come only by faith and prayer.

The next Sunday Brother C. E. Guinand asked me to speak at a little mission not far from the Stone Church at Independence. All I wish to say about this is the lesson I learned which should be remembered by all the young of the church. About eighteen months prior to this time I had sat in this same mission and heard my father preach, who has now also passed to the other side, but at that time if I had been told that in that short space of time I would occupy behind that same desk and warn this generation of things that must come to pass, it would have seemed impossible to me. But all things are possible with God. During this time General Conference was drawing near.

During the conference I had another remarkable evidence. I had not been feeling well for a few days and while attending one of the nine o'clock prayer meetings, which was a spiritual meeting, I began to feel that I should be administered to, so I asked Brother Shower to attend to the ordinance, and we retired to the administration room where we knelt in prayer. God heard our prayers and I was told that my voice would be heard among many people and I should speak the words with boldness. Of course this was a comfort to me, although at times I must confess I would doubt.

I waited for the appointments to be read, and wondered if my name would appear among those who were chosen. My name appeared and I was sent to the Kewanee District, or northwestern Illinois. I soon made my arrangements in accord, and on May 14 I landed in my district with Brother J. F. Curtis, leaving my wife and babe to follow later, where I have been laboring ever since.

I have baptized ten, and others are interested. I baptized one brother who is ninety-two years old, he being my first to baptize in the Father of Waters, but he is rejoicing in the gospel and I was made to rejoice to think that God had permitted me to assist one to find eternal life so many years older than myself. He was born in Ireland, 1824, was six years old when our church was organized. He came to Rock Island, Illinois, 1845 one year after the death of Joseph Smith the Martyr.

I wish to relate an instance when I was called upon to baptize my first three, who were little Sunday school girls. As the time drew near for baptizing them, something seemed to say, Why do they need baptism? I knew the Lord had said in latter-day revelation the child should be baptized at eight years old, and if not, the sin would be upon the head of the parents, but still came the thought that baptism was for the remission of sins, and they were as pure as the lilies. I had not mentioned my thoughts to a living soul but plead with the Master that I might have some assurance, and when we sang the song just before going into the water, the Spirit rested upon me and I was given the assurance and evidence sought for. God is true to his promises when he said, "Knock and it shall be opened unto you."

The Saints have been good to us here and I have found them zealous in good works and striving to achieve the victory that awaits us at the end.

Since coming here I have been ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood, but it has been my only desire to work wherever my heavenly Master would have me, and where I can accomplish the most good. I have written these few lines, not to bring any honor whatever to myself, but I feel that my experience has been similar to many others, and many have failed to offer their services because of the lack of confidence in self, and not in God.

I just feel to drop a word here to those who are older in years. They should encourage the young, as they need it, and give them the support of their prayers.

I was pleased to read the article of Brother Elbert Smith's in the HERALD some time back, as to the support of the young by those who were willing to push, if they could not pull. We should all be willing to push and do our part in the upbuilding of Zion in these latter days, and to do faithfully whatever falls to our lot, for we are told that Zion is the pure in heart.

My desire is that we may all be more united and be ready to help the good work along, and that the young may realize the importance of the work we are engaged in and be willing to offer their services, that when Christ shall come we shall be in the world, but not of the world. We should remember the statement made by the Apostle Paul "that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God which is your reasonable service."

Ever praying for the work we are engaged in, I am,

Your humble servant,

E. A. CURTIS.

ELECTING OFFICERS--WHO'S TO BLAME?

The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end thereof?—Jeremiah 5: 31.

There seems to be something of agitation or a fear concerning the possibility of mistakes upon the part of leaders in the church, and which might endanger its interests manifesting itself; perhaps more than formerly, and that while necessity for readjustment of conditions may be conceded, it may be true that the changes themselves may be also fraught with danger to the body.

In Jeremiah's day the cause of trouble seems not to have been laid at the door of leaders alone by any means, and it would seem that it has been one of the cardinal weaknesses of human nature to place the responsibility for our misfortunes upon the shoulders or at the door of our neighbors.

Unwillingness to assume responsibility, and squarely face the result of our own action—the legitimate offspring of our own ignorance; perversity or fear to meet the legitimate fruit of our own lives, and the results of our free agency, will in a large measure at least, in the light of history, account for the war and strife between individuals, the family, the neighborhood, the society, the church or the State, the Nation or group of nations.

If "nothing is settled, until it is settled right," then the question of "who's to blame?" is a tremendously fundamental one, and if not settled by us here after a righteous manner, will have to be finally met at the judgment seat of God, or when "He shall come whose right it is to reign" and "to give to every man, according as his work shall be."

This then being "the end to which the whole creation moves," it forms the solemn procession in which we are all moving toward a just conclusion and sentence from which none may hope to escape.

These thoughts were impelled by the memory of a late business meeting of the first church at Independence, and in reflection upon the discussion and action of the membership upon the proposition or motion to annul former procedure in election of branch officers other than the president by substitution of election by open nomination and acclamation rather than by the secret ballot.

Quite a strong opposition also to the motion that the presiding officer or president of the branch should have equal privilege with any, or all of the members to nominate as to who should be his associate officers, was developed in the discussion which followed, the basis of which seemed to be the fear that if he be allowed his inherent right and interest as an individual in common with the rest of us, that the exercise of such right, because of his position as president of the branch, that the influence of a false education and mistaken idea of prerogative, or power, or "the divinity that doth hedge a king" would place him at such a tremendous advantage over others as to make it a foregone conclusion that any nomination made by him would be equivalent to an election, and thus, (by some strange process of reasoning) the rights of the people might become subverted or destroyed.

The folly of such reasoning and its injustice we shall try to demonstrate in a brief examination of the law of causation, or of "Who's to blame?"

In the first place; Who made him president? Did he elect himself? Of course not! but we did; or the majority, by the rule of the law of God governing, as God himself is thus committed to that rule.

God wanted the privilege of nominating in the days of Samuel the prophet; but the people nominated and elected Saul. Did God interfere? No! He only reserved the privilege of telling them what would happen; but he never did then, and never has, or will, seek to destroy the agency of man, or his privilege with obligation to assume the responsibility for its use.

When thus the people by voice or vote, or silence!—let us emphasize that—elect a branch presiding officer, did they do it with the understanding that he was to be a "boss," or dictator? or did they elect him to be their servant? In giving him the privilege of nomination as a member of the body, what rights do we surrender, or what dangers need we invoke?

Our answer to this would be self-evident, in my opinion. The only possible dangers are those for which we ourselves are responsible.

We are not living under the rule of an absolute monarchy or without recourse in the rights of self-protection, but under a government "of the people, by the people, for the people."

If we say its form is theocratic, it is only in the sense that God, who alone is perfect, is to be the final and complete judge and where alone, all appeals have a final ending; but in our relation to men it is a democracy of rule that we should attain, and maintain.

It is true that there may be found a great many people who are neither intelligently nor morally fit to govern themselves, as we may look at matters, and there are also almost, if not quite, an equal number of us who believe that we could well regulate their affairs and conduct and not a few who would be willing to assume the task of regulating the lives of our neighbors; yet what really sensible man wants the job especially if it is understood that he will have to be dead a long time before he gets his pay? But the gospel idea is, self-government in the individual, and in the beginning of things, choice was necessary to man's self-development toward a capacity for self-government and that should prove his intelligent willingness to cooperate in the establishment of a perfect order of government whenever its outlines were made sufficiently clear to him.

Exercise of "freedom of the will" may bring trial and disaster, may develop strife and hatred and provoke war, but attempts at its suppression will never permanently succeed, for the simple reason that the forces of men, and not of God are as yet back of them all; and God was not unaware of the possible results when he committed to man the use of this terrible engine of power, with concomitant result, for good or evil as seen in the titanic wars and strife that have deluged the earth with blood, and wasted energies, and where vice and virtue contend for supremacy and turn out their finished product so clearly and unmistakably exposed in character as to tend to make the lesson permanent and lasting.

We say, then, that "the kingdom of God" is with us, or among us as a people; citizens of the commonwealth of the Most High. Do we sense our privileges and our obligations we again inquire? We are again met by the repetition that the people are afraid of the consequences of opposition to "superior officers," of encountering the forces of a majority, the dangers that attach to a courageous action of a minority, and the failure that may follow, or that we may be misunderstood, and personal animosities be engendered, etc., and so, a large amount of time and labor is consumed in constructing a bulwark and a fortress behind which we may be able to shield our personality or identity, and fire our bullet (ballot) into the man we do not want to serve us or occupy, and thus the man who was killed, or defeated will never know who hit him.

It is true, without any doubt, that nearly always a freer expression of choice, and of consequence a much larger vote, through a concealed expression of opinion is had by the use of the secret ballot, and the will of the people in this way is obtained, and it is also true, that upon occasion, in times past, the writer, in order to avoid postponement or delay of needed reforms that were only possible through a change of officers, has voiced no protest against such an arrangement; but with his present view, it is of doubtful ethical or spiritual value, and a custom—"more honored in the breach, than in the observance."

The secret ballot, in the church of God, will never develop, but will always tend on the contrary to suppress a safe leadership who might invite a courageous following. A man may make mistakes; but mistakes, if made honestly and openly are less dangerous than those of concealment.

In this "our country," "the land of the brave and the home of the free," a man has the glorious privilege under the "Stars and Stripes" to make a donkey of himself every day in the week. Should he be prevented, or hindered? No! and why? Well, in the first place, there is a chance that time may prove that his critic, and not himself was the "donkey." Or suppose the critic to have been right. Who shall destroy his agency so long as he does not intrude upon another's rights?

Again we believe that if the presiding officer of a branch, for instance, does not logically possess an advantage of intelligence or capability or fitness for the position because of his knowledge of the requirements or needs of the branch or church, over that of the single common voter, he is by every kind of reasoning, unfit to preside or to hold the office, and we only are to blame for putting him there, or of giving consent by either vote or silence to his occupancy. So we repeat he is placed there as our servant and not as our master, and if we find chains around our necks, let us no more place the blame upon one, or a few, but upon our own ignorance or cowardice, or both, for, "he who would himself be free himself must strike the blow," and to "get right with God" is the only lasting and permanent way out of difficulty.

"The glory of God, is intelligence," and the greatest "intelligence" is the acquirement of knowledge of him, and this "knowledge of God" constitutes, or insures us "life" in its highest terms of expression.

A study of "the word," obedience to the law and rule of the "spirit of life in Christ Jesus" will tend to render us immune from dangers which ignorance and indifference to spiritual duties always provoke.

Our agency, then, the greatest gift of God to any of his creatures, and without which life in intellectual or moral terms is undefinable. Shall we, for fear of consequences to ourselves refuse or neglect the use of our heavenly right of franchise, or for fear we may make some mistake, or for the dread of political, social, or ecclesiastical "superiors" and their power to punish or withhold favors cheaply disposed, destroy or transfer our "agency" to another for his use?

Anyone is likely to be mistaken at times, but nobody has a monopoly of right or privilege to be foolish, wrong, or wicked. Brave men, they say, die but once; a coward may die a thousand deaths through fear, and anything less than "the fear of God" may prove in the end, largely imaginary.

The man who substitutes for "the fight of faith," the fear of loss of a local character or temporal advantage, can never hope for final association and communion with those who "endured as seeing him who is invisible," or who have "walked by faith and not by sight" for the vision limited by the horizon of carnal desire and earthly hopes.

If then, things go wrong, who's to blame? Leaders may mislead—if we let them, but let us remember that a leader without followers is a misnomer or an impossibility.

ENDOWMENT OF THE CHURCH

Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready and the Lord will send thee flax.—Old Maxim.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that they may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

And faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.—Ibid., 4: 1.

And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.—Ibid., 11: 4.

NEED OF THIS ENDOWMENT

I know of nothing that the church has more keenly felt the need of nor for which there has been more earnest prayers offered—in private and in public—than this spiritual equipment for our work.

If it has not been given (and I think all will agree that there is much to be desired and sought after in this line) it is certainly not for lack of verbal petitions. Since it is written, "Ask and ye shall receive," may it not be a good thing for us, like the rich young ruler to inquire, "What lack I yet?"

FAILURE TO BALANCE

In a revelation to the church in 1832, the Lord declares, "I the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."

Since the failure is not altogether in prayer, it must be in our labor, for we are to be "laborers together with God," in every perfect organization (and we read that Christ also loved the church and gave his life for it "that he might present it unto himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."—Ephesians 5: 27), there must be a balance of every part; a failure in this line spoils the operation of the body; a failure to so balance makes for an erratic or ill-developed work, lacking the symmetry of a perfect whole.

THE BODY OF CHRIST

The church as the body of Christ, is engaged in a work that has been intrusted to all—not simply to the ministry, but to all, and logically calls for the aid of the divine Spirit equally in the case of the man or woman who “toileth in the affairs of the men of business and work,” with those who “labor-eth in the ministry.”

HINDERING CAUSES

In our search for the hindering causes it may be well to take a glance at the requirement for those who would “assist in this work,” for surely the promise of the Holy Ghost is just as vital and as sure of fulfillment for those whose call may be for manual, professional, or business labors as for “him that laboreth in the ministry.”

One of the texts used at the beginning of this article declares that “no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care,” and while we have all recognized the application of this scripture to the ministry, have we realized the fact that it is equally applicable to the “body”—to the nonofficial members of this church, and until these conditions are met by the body at large, we can never hope for the Lord to take up his abode in this habitation. (See Ephesians 2: 19, 22.)

THE DIGNITY OF OUR CALLING

Have we not failed to sense the wonderful condescension of God who has called us into this “marvelous work”? Have we not failed to realize that when the Master says “the elders and men of the church” that he speaks to all, even as he told his disciples of old, “I give unto you to be the light of the world”? Have we thought that the requirement to “be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourses with the world, yet without blame in word and deed,” is equally binding upon all? Are our “men of the church” as careful of their conversation, repressing all “loud and boisterous speech,” and refraining from the “relating of coarse and vulgar stories, or those in which the names of their God and Redeemer are blasphemed,” as they expect the elders to be?

BEARING THE VESSELS OF THE LORD

If Paul was not mistaken when he declared that “your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost” (1 Corinthians 6:19), that we are the temple of God (Ibid., 3: 16), then the closing part of this paragraph, addressed to the “men of God, who bear the vessels of your Lord,” should come to all with equal force and all must, if they would enjoy the communion of the Holy Ghost and assist in bringing the endowment to the church, “be clean in your bodies and in your clothing,” and avoid “excess of ornamentation and avoid the use of tobacco and of strong drink in any form,” that the counsel of the church may be effective.

THE HOLY GHOST IS KNOCKING

The Master has said, “Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.” (Revelations 3:20.) And the call to “Come up higher” is to the church and only as the church makes answer may she hope for the fulfillment of the promise.

WILL WE HAVE THE BLESSING

In 1841 the Lord declared that “the set time to favor Zion has come,” and in 1834 we were told that, “Were it not for the transgressions of my people . . . they might have been redeemed even now.”

Will we come to him that we may have light? Surely the time for Zion to arise and put on her beautiful garments has come. The Master waits, angels are waiting. Shall we not hear? Can we afford to turn a deaf ear to the call?

THE ONLY WAY

The communion of the Spirit is enjoyed by the ministry, usually in proportion to their diligence and singleness of purpose, and we are persuaded that the same blessing will come to everyone who will “labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.”

Do we pray over our business and labor even as we expect the ministry to pray over their work? If not, why not?

Are the fruits of our labor consecrated to the “building up of Zion” and comparatively as small a proportion of our time and talents and the returns therefrom appropriated to our own use for the gratification of our desire for pleasure as we expect the ministry to do with their labors? If not, can we hope to be made the recipient of that blessing which we are seeking for the body?

I am persuaded, and I feel by the Spirit that we may all equally enjoy this divine unction if we will prepare ourselves by recognition of our call.

Have a care lest the wrinkles of the face extend to the heart.—Marguerite de Lavois.

“The knowledge that a man can use is the only real knowledge; the only knowledge that has life and growth in it and converts itself into practical power. The rest hangs like dust about his brain, or dries like raindrops off the stones.”—Froude.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A CLERGYMAN CHALLENGES THE CHURCH

It is only forty years since the great Bishop of Natal was tried and excommunicated by his church for saying publicly that he did not believe that the count of the Israelites and their cattle as given in the book of Exodus was true.

For many generations the church had been living within a ring fence of dogma. One of its panels was the doctrine of the inspiration and infallibility of the Bible. It believed that if a single rail of the fence should be loosened the whole interior would be exposed and threatened. Dean Burgon and Canon Lid-don, the two foremost ecclesiastics in England, declared that "if the Bible is not infallible in every chapter, verse and syllable, then is our faith vain and Christ died in vain." The presiding bishop of the American church agreed with them and urged the prosecution, and so did the pope, and the general assembly, and all the rest. And this was only forty years ago.

Since then that particular panel of the ring fence has been removed bodily. The matter now concerns the central dogmas which the fence inclosed. Can the churches insist upon these, and at the same time win and retain the allegiance of intelligent men? It is noteworthy that there is now an almost complete absence of open antagonism to religious dogma or church order. No Huxley is to-day firing hot shot into the theological camp; and no Gladstone is discharging heavy and ill-directed artillery in its defense. We who are not old can remember when the issue of the latter's book, The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture, was regarded as an international event. Who cares about such things now? Apologists and the religious press accept the situation with much satisfaction. The warfare of science and religion is over, they say; thank God for the victory!

They are mistaken. Religious dogmas were in infinitely less danger while men cared enough about them to attack them than when they have ceased to regard them at all. That is the situation to-day. A great and increasing multitude of the best and most intelligent men silently turn away from the churches and go their own way. They are not irreligious. On the contrary, judged by any fair test of life, they include the best among us. We can count them by the dozen among our acquaintances. They used to go to church; they do not now. They are silent upon the subject. If pressed they are likely to adopt Disraeli's answer. When asked what his religion was he answered, "That of all sensible men." When asked farther what that was, he replied, "Sensible men never say."

For many centuries the church has been organized around dogmas. Let us admit in passing that it was not so at the beginning. During the first and second generation of Christians few of the dogmas since held to be vital had been formulated. But it is so now, and has been so for many centuries. It is often asserted by those who solicit good men to join their churches that subscription to doctrines is not essential. This is not true. In most cases a declaration of belief is either positively required, or it is so plainly implied that an honorable man must feel himself so bound. Probably the minimum demand is that for membership in the Episcopal Church—"Do you believe all the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the apostles' creed?" If he becomes a member he must either join with the congregation in reciting that creed, or become conspicuous by his silence. If he join another Protestant church he must listen with tacit assent to hymns, prayers and sermons, the very stuff of which he does not believe to be true. If he goes to Rome he must assent in advance and in bulk to whatever the church has in the past or may in the future declare to be true.

Let us ask plainly, What are these beliefs? and what attitude toward them the churches can take in order to secure the allegiance of the class of men we are considering?

The beliefs of the church arrange themselves within concentric circles. Occupying the center is the "Incarnation," i. e., the belief that on a certain date A. U. C., in a remote district of Asia, God took upon himself the form of a man, that that man lived as a man for thirty years or more, was put to death as a malefactor, rose again from the dead three days later, and returned to heaven.

But this belief cannot stand alone. It is meaningless until its purpose and intention are interpreted. Thus we pass into the second and wider circle, when we learn, in rough outlines, something like this: All mankind are descended from a common ancestor generally known by the name Adam; this man sinned; all his posterity are sinners either by inheritance of his nature or transmission of his guilt; without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. Thereupon the "Second Adam" offered himself and was accepted by God as a "Sacrifice" sufficiently valuable to placate the anger of God, and to make possible the "safety" of any who will make the proper terms with the Redeemer. As to just what these terms are there is much difference of opinion among the various confessions, but in substance, all mean that, apart from a belief in the things stated above, there is no forgiveness or eternal safety for any human soul.

These are the fundamental tenets officially announced, held, and defended by ninety-nine hundredths of the churches, in confessions, articles and creeds, and promulgated in hymns, prayers, sermons and press.

We are not unappreciative of the solicitude of the churches toward us. It would be a pleasure for us to join with them in their good works. Nor are we indifferent to the obligations of religion. We face the deep mysteries of existence and destiny seriously. We endeavor to conform our lives to duty. We do what we can to help our fellow men. We believe in God. And in this connection, we bow with unfeigned reverence before the incomparable person of Jesus Christ. But we cannot join any church.—Reverend S. D. McConnell, D. D., in The North American Review.

THE STAFF

"Enthusiasm"

It was only yesterday my attention was attracted by a team of two energetic newsboys who moved down the street on either side. They were creating more excitement than a subway cave-in. X—tree!—Ah—President Wilson—all about the 'sation—ship sunk! Just a junk heap of carefully arranged monosyllables which portended dire disaster. Our office boy joined the eager buyers and dashed into my office with a precious sheet. We unfolded the paper prepared for the very worst—and the usual news greeted our eyes, no more startling than the customary headlines of every daily. What did I do about it? Mad? Well, hardly, even though that paper cost me five cents. It was worth the price just to observe two boys make over 500 per cent on their investment, which only goes to show the far-reaching effects of enthusiasm. I noticed another thing, too, that day. These boys enjoyed their work. So does Thomas Edison—sometimes to the extent of thirty-six hours at a stretch. Right now in this critical period of our Nation's welfare, Edison is striving, almost to the breaking point, to produce something for this Nation's defense, the nature of which we do not know, but it is of sufficient importance that his new workshop on Eagle Rock is surrounded by an armed guard to prevent intrusion upon his concentration.

No individual can enter his private sanctum except the chosen few who are working just as enthusiastically as he is to accomplish certain purposes.

Have you an occupation that you can enthuse over thirty-six hours at a stretch or do you belong to that body of weary plodders who find nothing whatsoever to enthuse about? If you belong by force of circumstance to this latter unfortunate class, then rest not until you have found something to interest you. If you cannot change your daily occupation, find a hobby, and ride it so hard that at least one third of your existence is stimulated to the firing stage. I venture to say that your ceaseless grind will be less irksome and you will become more valuable to the world in general and your employer in particular.

The message of the restoration of the gospel in 1830 could never have been so securely planted had it not been for the intense enthusiasm of those early exponents. The work of organization, translation and proselyting is indeed a wonderful history of achievement. I rejoice to-day over the spirit of optimism that is pervading the church. Heaven knows we have needed it. We are but beginning to learn the wonderful power that lies in the smiling, radiant countenance, the warm, friendly handclasp, the care free, hearty laugh. While the religious world of to-day is groaning under its tremendous burden, the Saints are beginning to smile, and learning to sing, for our propoganda is now being more faithfully studied—we are gaining in momentum, we are getting the recognition we richly deserve. Our faith is strengthened by the fulfillment of Bible and latter-day revelation—we are keeping in tune with the Infinite. Our countenances, however, are not radiant because of the downfall of the nations, but because of the nearness of Zion's redemption and of Christ's coming to claim his own.

Music plays her part in this great gathering and in his blessed return, and as the General Chorister of the church I urge a closer walk with God, with complete consecration of all your talents. Bend with unflagging zeal to the cultivation of your gift of song and enter into your work enthusiastically. Be glad that you are not only alive, but make others glad also. Mr. Chorister, singers of Israel, put a little warmth into your smile—a ton of enthusiasm behind your work. Hear and study good music; enthuse about the good points, and "soft pedal" the adverse criticism! If you are coming to Conference, come to boost, participate in our gatherings, bring a message of good cheer! You will have a miserable experience if you just look in and don't get in! And after all is said and done, we find that the happy ones—the enthusiastic—are those who come prepared, ready for service. And so it will be in that great day when we go out to meet the Bridegroom. Music will play an important part, and that is the reason so many of us love this sacred cause and keep enthusiastically at it.

Yours faithfully,
ALBERT N. HOXIE.

Well Begun

It has been said, "Well begun is half done," but it is just the first few words we wish to borrow from this maxim for "it was well begun" and I just must tell you all about it.

Like all good, live organizations, our Saint Louis choir wants to grow, and we have begun something which we feel sure will supply us with the necessary food especially adapted to just such nourishment as we need.

On the evening of February 27 our members met at the home of our chorister, Brother E. C. Bell. It was with enthusiasm we gathered as we realized it was an epoch in the life of our choir.

Shortly after eight, when all but a few had arrived, the work began.

The evening was to be devoted to a study of the life and works of Handel the composer. He was chosen because of our recent interest in "The Messiah" which has immortalized him. The first number on our program which was a biographical sketch of Georg Friedrich Handel, by Brother E. C. Bell, introduced us through his graphic description to the large Saxon possessed of such wonderful musical ability. He gave accounts of his various compositions, of the great rapidity with which he wrote and incidentally mentioned his eccentricities and uncontrollable temper. Oft have we wondered why so many men of genius who enjoy the beautiful talent of music, that which is quoted as "having power to soothe the savage," allow themselves to be almost savages, just because some one may not see as they do or because their own pet ideas are crossed by some one. All of the unhappy part in the composer's makeup was overlooked, however, when Sister Florence Burgess played in her especially lovely way the "Aria from Rinaldo" and the "Dead March" from Saul of which she told us some very interesting items. Following this the very difficult solo from Joshua, "Oh, had I Jubal's lyre," was well rendered by Sister E. C. Bell.

Mr. B. Loevy next gave us a reading on the "Immortal Messiah." Much of benefit was gathered from it. It caused us to understand better why the cello, viola, or other instruments should be heard with this section and hushed with that. We also learned how Mozart's rearrangement effected the original.

This was followed by the touchingly beautiful solo from the "Messiah," "He was despised," sung by Sister Maude Parrish. Brother Bell played on his violin with muted strings the sweet soothing selection, "Come unto me."

Then all standing we sang the hallelujah chorus from the "Messiah."

Refreshments were then served, after which we all sang hymn number 187 in our hymnal which is a composition of Handel's.

After this profitable evening we decided to meet one month from that night to take up the study of Gunod in a like manner.

ANNA DE JONG SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

Important Announcements

The tentative dates of the "Messiah" performances are Sunday, April 15, and Monday, April 16, subject to the approval of the Presidency. Soloists to be announced later.

It is customary for the ladies of the chorus to wear white on special occasions; gentleman dark suits and white ties.

Music to be used—1917 conference series, as announced in the last two issues of The Staff; and Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah."

The first rehearsal of the combined choirs on the conference series is generally held April 5, the night before conference convenes. First rehearsal of the oratorio Sunday afternoon, April 8—time and place to be announced later.

Visiting singers, district and local choir leaders kindly register with the General Chorister as soon as possible after arriving at the conference. Let us remember that prayer is a part of our preparation. We will stick to our original slogan "All in Favor—Hurry Up!"

A. N. HOXIE.

Lamoni "On the Job"

Just because Lamoni very seldom appears in the Staff is no sign that we are not active and doing our share to help along the good work of the general choir movement. We are believers in the idea that "actions speak louder than words" and if you will come to General Conference next month we will endeavor to show you that we are very much alive and up to the minute.

Brother Craig is of course more than busy working with the singers on the "Messiah" choruses and also the regular conference anthems, having two practices a week, and needless to say, all are quite enthusiastic and working hard to have things in shape. And we mustn't forget the orchestra. They are going to have something interesting, too.

In addition to the regular conference music the college glee clubs are working up a very pleasing musical comedy ("Pinafore") to be given at the Coliseum. But this is not all, either, there being more good things in store for you, so we would suggest and urge that you all come to conference and join us, for it is easier to show you than tell you.

H. C. BURGESS, Reporter, Lamoni Choir.

Sacrifice

(Tune 199, Saint's Hymnal.)

Jesus Christ our help and shield
Unto you our will we yield,
Bowing at the sacred cross,
Counting all the world as dross,
Lifting up our hearts to thee,
Humbly here on bended knee.

Honors cheap and worldly pride,
Vanity we cast aside;
All that earthly minds hold dear—
Would we feel thy presence near—
Fully lay we at thy feet,
Make the sacrifice complete.

Poor, forsaken, yet how great
Is the wealth of our estate.
Stripped of all that earth can give.
Richer far, in thee we live,
Hear us then on bended knee,
Take us, Lord, we come to thee.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Social Service Series—Chapter 5

NO ONE HAD TOLD HER

She was just in the bloom of life's morning;
She was happy and free and fair,
And a glance in her bright eyes would tell you
Of nothing but innocence there.

She was waiting for some one to tell her,
As she stood with reluctant feet
On the banks of the wonderful river
Where childhood and womanhood meet.

She waited, but still no one told her
The secret of life so sublime;
And she held not the safeguard of knowledge
In life's beautiful morning time.

The flower so sweetly unfolding
Was crushed by a rough hand one day;
And the jewel, so sacred, so precious,
Was stolen and taken away.

—Selected.

THE UNMARRIED MOTHER

One of the most appealing problems of the social worker is the pathetic plight of young, unmarried girls facing maternity, and the utter need of the girl makes the problem dependent upon a big, human understanding, in order to recognize before us the shrinking and frightened, or defiant and hardened, or spiritless and unresisting girl.

Whatever theories one may evolve as to the justice or injustice of the present organization of society, one must grant that the unmarried mother of to-day must and does suffer piteously for breaking its laws. Any joy the experience may bring will be the gift of nature to whose laws she has submitted. Since nature's laws are much more fundamental than society's laws, it is to the action of nature's laws that the social worker must look for constructive efforts with the illegitimate mother. If we can arouse in the young mother those unselfish elements, which motherhood at its best so marvelously reveals, then we may some time interpret to the girl the laws of society which she has broken, by showing her what obligation to fellow citizens involves.

In undertaking the oversight of the unmarried mothers, one must face the necessity not merely of carrying them through the period of confinement, but often of keeping in close touch with them for many years. The physical pain that these mothers must endure is trifling in comparison with the mental suffering the world metes out to them, no matter how bravely they may face their responsibilities. A sympathetic and helpful friendship must last out a lifetime in order adequately to share the mother's tragedy.

There are several advantages to the worker who undertakes the task of befriending pregnant girls in its initial stages. First of all she has opportunity to talk with the patient at the psychological moment, when the diagnosis she has feared through many anxious weeks has been confirmed. The serious loneliness of the girl makes her peculiarly responsive to a friendly interest. While not much may be accomplished during the first interview, it offers an opportunity for establishing the relationship on which any future plan must rest.

Another advantage which the social worker may have, is the detection of those patients who are not mentally normal. An early recognition of the irresponsibility of an illegitimate mother may save years of painstaking efforts toward building a character that can never stand alone. Complete protection from moral danger is the only safe plan for such girls, for if attractive, they are easy prey of unscrupulous men.

Constructive effort for the unmarried mother must be based on characteristics in the girl's nature, that will help her to withstand the emotional appeal of the temptations she will surely meet. We know too little of the nature of the emotional life, whether it be that of sex or religion, to be sure that the religious appeal will always call forth religious strength to help through the hours of trial.

Much more difficult is the process of dealing with the girl according to her individual needs. Her nature and her background must be studied to find out what there is to build upon; the helpful cooperation of her family, her church or her friends must be obtained. She must be made to feel the responsibility of motherhood, either through the personal care of her baby in some place where she can herself support her child, or by arranging to board the baby where she can see it often. The human ties of motherhood, of family, of church, must be strengthened through a long period of understanding and friendship, so that she will be led to see what a life of service to others may mean.

The social worker must recognize that the marriage ceremony is no magic by which evil is corrected, or moral characters constructed. A marriage, unless it is founded on a love that will give some promise of happiness, is hard to justify.

Nevertheless, the social worker must feel the obligation that fatherhood should carry, and make an effort to bring a sense of obligation to the illegitimate father, as well as to the illegitimate mother.

There is conviction in the minds of many social workers, that this problem of the unmarried mother is not so much the problem of the mother, as it is the problem of the illegitimate child. Coming into the world without the safeguard of a home, without the protection of a father, and sometimes without that of a mother, the infant is sorely handicapped.

"And in like manner, what the woman is to be within her gates, the center of order, the balm of distress, and the mirror of beauty, that she is also to be without her gates, where order is more difficult, distress more imminent, and loveliness more rare." Within the human heart there is always set an instinct for all its real duties—an instinct which cannot be quenched, but is only warped and corrupted if it is withdrawn from its true purpose.

Deep-rooted in the immanent life of the heart of women is always the instinct of motherhood, which, rightly directed maintains all the majesty of law and life; and, misdirected, wrecks them. "God set it there, and God keeps it there."

Parent-Teacher Associations

Most mothers know something about parent-teacher associations or have read about them in the magazines by this time. Many of our mothers are affiliated with their nearest parent-teacher association and have found much that has been helpful to them by attending the meetings of this organization. We want to urge all mothers to take up this work, attend the meetings, take part in the discussions because it is an excellent way to let your light shine and to put our work and our gospel before the people, a little at a time.

If there is no organization in your neighboring school, make yourself a committee of one to visit the principal and teachers of your school and urge them to call the mothers of your district together and organize an association. If a district organizer can be invited to the meeting, she will explain the aims and objects of the association and a better understanding will be had of the work. If not, organize yourselves, keeping in mind that such an association is a child welfare body, with its chief aim the bettering of conditions for the child. Its object first is to give to the fathers and mothers the opportunity to educate themselves for the best home making and child nurture.

Second, learn what the school is doing and by the knowledge to cooperate with the teacher, thus greatly helping both the teacher and the child.

Third, learn the conditions affecting the welfare of the children outside of the home and by united effort to arouse the community to a sense of its responsibility for the children.

If you have a parent-teacher association in your neighborhood its power for good will increase by uniting with the State and national congress of mothers and parent-teacher associations, the greatest child welfare organization in the world and the mother of the parent-teacher association movement.

This child welfare work and instruction is very much needed at this time, for you not only need this organization for character building in your community, but you need to cooperate with your teachers for good discipline, to work together in the community for better conditions, you need to get the spirit of helpfulness among your neighbors, in order to have your community a good one in which to live.

If you are a successful mother you owe it to the community to attend the parent-teacher association, join in the discussions and tell the mothers who are not so successful how you get results. The schoolhouse is the place to meet on common grounds. It is your school, and your cooperation is essential for the good of all.

In the beginning, it is best to have an objective basis for the first meetings, that is, something for the mothers to see, to hear, or to handle as soon as they enter the room, thus avoiding an awkward silence. There may be an exhibition of children's work, or singing by the school glee club. There may be a social cup of tea presented as each guest arrives after the manner of other afternoon gatherings. The scenes drawn on the wall, or possibly the plants may later be the objective basis of conversation.

Helpful programs should be arranged each month, with the best speakers the neighborhood affords. Papers or talks by the mothers themselves on such topics as these: "The food needs of school children and how to supply them," "Dress and its relations to school," "How the home fails from the viewpoint of the teacher" (by a teacher), "How the school fails from the viewpoint of the home" (by a mother), "Regular habits as an aid to school work," etc.

Open discussions on "The story hour," "The holidays of the year and how to spend them with the children," "How to do an errand well," "Home occupations," "Obedience," "Methods of teaching self-control," "Effective methods of home and school discipline," "Outside amusements," and "The daily school nickel in its effect on honesty, health, and thrift, etc." should be had occasionally where all mothers may feel free to express themselves.

Music by the young people of the community. Class work by some one room of the school is very effective and helps to bring the mothers out. A roll call to which all may respond is also beneficial. "Your favorite quotation," "A proverb," "Some helpful book you have read," "A good lunch dish for children," "Some regular duty a small child may have in the home," "A good house game for children," etc.

Any other suggestions as to organizing, plans, programs, that I am able to offer you I do so gladly, and will be glad to answer all inquiries along these lines.

Let me hear from you if you need help and together we will work for the good of our children.

Among Our Auxiliaries

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN

It is with pleasure I write this letter to tell of the organization of a Woman's Auxiliary in our city. On February 15 the Ladies' Aid met at the home of Sister O. J. Hawn to disband, and reorganize under the auxiliary of the church. Sister Plato of Port Huron was with us, and helped to do this. Officers elected were as follows: Sister E. S. White, president; Sister O. J. Hawn, vice president; Sister Jennie Mamerow, secretary; Sister Charles Bellenger, treasurer; and Sister Mamerow, press chairman. It was decided to take up three departments, and superintendents were chosen as follows: Educational, Fannie Roese; home and child welfare, Sister Charles Bellenger; relief and service, Sister E. S. White. We then adopted the "prayer hour," and decided to hold our auxiliary meetings regularly, the first Thursday in each month. The relief and service department, however, is to meet every week. We have thirteen charter members, which some say is unlucky, but we hope to prove the opposite in our case. We are very eager in the work, and want to be of great service, doing all we can for the upbuilding of Zion.

JENNIE MAMEROW, Press Chairman.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN

Perhaps some would like to hear from a "mite society" in this far-away north land, where Jack Frost reigns supreme six months of the year, and rain, mud, and mosquitoes the other six!

Three years ago we organized a "mite society," which did not prove a very great success. It was conducted in a haphazard sort of way; we had meetings, more or less regularly, or sometimes not at all. We usually met about three o'clock, hurried through our business part, did a little fancywork, gossiped a great deal, ate a lunch, and went home to relate more or less accurately to our husbands and neighbors what we had seen and heard, good or bad (especially the bad), airing our virtues and others' faults! Then we wondered why we could not get more people interested in our church affairs, our Sunday school, etc.! Even the missionaries that were sent among us came in for their share of our criticism and discussion, until they almost ceased to come to us at all! One elder, while here last summer, referred to us as "guinea hens" and said we "scared the hawks all away"! Whether he intended it so or not, this remark has had a beneficial effect upon some of us, and we determined to reconstruct our methods, and show the brother and others, what the Shellbrook sisters really are at heart, and what we can do when we set about it right. So with the "coming to life," and the arrival of the new year we decided to make a change. We met, and united with the main "Woman's Auxiliary" of the church, and we feel strengthened and encouraged very much by that action. We have new ideals, and see new opportunities for better service. We meet from house to house, taking our members alphabetically, thus giving all a chance to entertain. We decided that none of us needed to "piece between meals," and so we cut out the lunch idea, which has helped materially to keep our minds on spiritual things and we have noted an increasing desire for serious study because of this, an interest in the spiritual rather than the temporal. Besides, this plan gives the hostess a chance to really enjoy our visit rather than feeling it a burden. We read worth while articles, and are thereby gaining much useful knowledge. We have twelve members, and we voted to heed Bishop McGuire's appeal, and will send two dollars for each member, to be applied on the church debt. We have interested some outsiders already, and hope by the beginning of another year, to have doubled our enrollment. So, sisters all over the land, get busy, and help pay off the church debt, or any other task you set yourselves to do. Do it willingly and cheerfully. A little poem I learned at school has helped me:

"Whenever a task is set for you,
Don't idly sit and view it;
Nor be content to wish it done—
Begin at once, and do it!"

In this hastening time none of us can afford to be idle, for if we are, some one else is sure to wear our crown—and, besides, none of us want to be called "guinea hens"!

EFFIE J. DENTON.

Do not stop dreaming. Encourage your visions and believe in them. Cherish your dreams and try to make them real. This thing in us that aspires, that bids us to look up, that beckons us higher, is God given. Aspiration is the hand that points us to the road that runs heavenward. As your vision is, so will your life be. Your better dream is the prophecy of what your life may be, ought to be.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

From Here and There

Brother Mark J. Chapman tells us we misread his signature in a recent item in these columns and made it that of his daughter Mary. We are sorry it happened. Try again, Brother Chapman.

Brother Hubert Case reports ten baptisms at Omaha on Sunday, February 18, among the number being four fine young men. Elder J. A. Gillen was there over Sunday and his sermons were much appreciated.

A brother in Indiana wrote E. E. Long for a thousand copies of his poem recently printed in the Herald, to be used for missionary purposes. Brother Long intends to add a verse and have a number printed for general distribution in his work.

Mrs. Etta Miller, of Clyde, Colorado, would like to have the minister in charge of Eastern Colorado write her, for there are a few families of Saints there and she believes some good could be done. She desires that her afflicted mother may be administered to and desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She says they are in a newly settled country.

We learn that Brother H. W. Savage has recently baptized two in Dunedin, New Zealand, "both good as gold," he says. He says they continue to have great times at the fountain, the place where the people gather to hear street preaching. It is a great place for drunkenness, and many of their services are interrupted by those in such condition. The police let them alone so long as passers-by are not molested.

Old and almost blind, seventy-two years of age and isolated, Sister Martha Jane Miller, of New Cambria, Missouri, is compelled to let her HERALD lapse, even thought she would do without sufficient clothing and food to have it. It makes us wish we were able to supply every such person in the church with a free subscription, but because so many do not subscribe who could and should, it is impossible.

We have a few lines from Brother Andrew Jensen, of Conception Junction, Missouri: "The conference of the Nodaway District is over and we had a very spiritual time. We were favored with having our apostle, F. M. Sheehy, with us. His brotherly advice and counsel were excellent. I never listened to a deeper reasoner. Our missionary, Brother O. W. Okerlind, was also with us—a man whom we have learned to love."

The train that was carrying eight Saints to the district conference at Davenport, Iowa, was wrecked and a number of freight cars (it being an accommodation train) badly demolished. The coach that carried them left the rails and tipped somewhat, but no one was hurt. They feel to thank God for sparing their lives. Brother John Heide tells us the Spirit that prevailed at the conference was excellent, with preaching by Brethren Turner, Davis and Sparling.

Faye Wood, aged ten, writes from Waverly, Ohio, of her experiences, wherein some relatives sought to prevent herself and sister, two years older, from joining the church. One of them who was the most prominent in her opposition repented on her deathbed of her stand and desired that others might seek to undo what she had done. Faye and her sister hope to be baptized when they have learned the requirements of a Saint of God. They ask the prayers of the Saints that they may not be unduly hindered from their resolution.

From the Niagara Falls, Canada, correspondent, J. M. McAninch, we learn that Patriarch A. D. Angus has recently paid them a much appreciated visit. His sermon on divine authority was very timely under the circumstances, with "Billy" Sunday not far away and the work of the Saints in tracting the city so fresh in their minds. Elder W. Place was called to Port Dalhousie to preach, there being three families of Saints at that place and the outlook good.

All secretaries of Sunday schools especially district secretaries are requested by E. D. Moore to bring their record books along with them for comparison at the conference of secretaries during the coming General Conventions. Some who cannot come could send in their suggestions of various items they have found worth while in their work. Other secretaries might find it worth while to come prepared to have a part in the meeting, as many general phases will be considered.

When the Saints at Denver built their church they thought it was large enough for all time, but the recent district conference filled it to overflowing. The weather was fine during the conference but has been cold and stormy since. Brother E. F. Shupe reports that it has been the coldest winter he has known in Colorado, being there twenty-eight years. The bishop's agent reported over $2,400 paid in during the past six months. It is reported that a brother who was baptized during the conference gave his check for $1,000 during the sessions as a beginning of tithing.

Writing us that the Nauvoo District has arranged to purchase an auto for missionary purposes, W. H. Gunn, district secretary, of Fort Madison, says: "This will enable the missionary to reach numbers of places otherwise impossible. He will be able to use the organized branches as bases to work from, and also utilize local talent to a great extent. We believe this will increase the efficiency of our missionary greatly. The cost is being defrayed by subscriptions. We are very anxious to see our same missionary (L. G. Holloway) returned to this district, as the above is his plan for spreading the gospel in this district."

Brother Benjamin Bean tells us that the Northern California District conference was marked by unity of spirit and confidence. He feels that the church is coming to realize that it is indeed the body of Christ. The representation from the branches was good, and he names the following as present: J. W. Rushton and C. J. Cady of the missionary force, F. G. Pitt of the evangelical order; Holmes J. Davison, G. J. Waller and C. W. Hawkins of the located ministry. Branch and district records are being straightened up, and a resolution was adopted approving a suggestion of the district recorder that all branch clerks come to the next reunion and bring the records with them for the purpose of comparing with the district records. A number of ordinations were provided for after due investigation.

From Ohio

Since last writing I have held meetings in Cleveland, Kirtland, and Akron, working out from the last-named place in a schoolhouse some miles out, where we had good attendance and interest. Our stay at Kirtland was especially enjoyed as we never had hoped for such a privilege. The Saints responded well by attendance, and we had a very fine series there, directed entirely to them.

We were pleased to have the opportunity to visit and converse, as well as give a few talks to the old folks in the home there. We felt thankful that such provision had been made for the aged of the church where they could have the association of those of like precious faith. We will ever remember with pleasure our visit to Kirtland.

In Akron we had good attendance in the main. The last few nights were very cold and the people were afraid to get out, so our attendance was small. We were well pleased with the treatment received, and as we looked into the faces of the young of that branch we thought it had a bright future ahead of it if all were faithful. Several young men not of the faith were regular attendants at the services and we hope to hear of them obeying the gospel ere long.

From Akron we came to this place (Alliance) where we have been holding forth to small audiences. This is a new place for our work. I understand that there never have been any of our preachers here. We find that his Satanic majesty is at work and the old, old cry has been raised—"Mormon," and some have stopped coming for fear they would get "roped in," as they expressed it.

Sunday afternoon we went to the Presbyterian church, where we listened to an expose of Mormonism by Miss Frances Bates Patterson of Chicago. She was very plain in her denunciations of the dominant church in Utah. We were waiting for her to say something of the Reorganization and just before she closed we were privileged to hear her opinion of us. She said the Reorganization did not believe in polygamy, and that they took no oath against the Nation, and that they were good citizens. The worst she could say was that we believed that our gospel, as she expressed it, was lost for eighteen centuries. Resolutions were read that they wished to be signed and sent to the officials at Washington. A president and a secretary were elected. A motion was asked for that the president and secretary be authorized to sign the resolutions. I made the motion, and when the meeting was dismissed I wended my way to the front and the "reverend" who was in charge, shook hands and asked my name. He then introduced me to Miss Patterson. I told her I was an elder in the Reorganized Church, and you should have seen that preacher's face; it surely was a study. I asked the speaker if it was not a fact that the Reorganized Church had taken a prominent part in the opposition to the seating of Smoot, and she said it was true. Some other questions were asked and answered to our satisfaction, and there were a number that heard the conversation. I am sure our work did not suffer, but rather profited by the talk of Miss Patterson.

There seems to be prospects for doing something here. We have the offer of a lot on which to set a tent this coming summer, and think it would be worth a try. I expect to leave for home the first of next week, after an absence of nine months.

Yours in the conflict,

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

"Te Orometua"

This is the name of the little paper published in the Society Islands by Brother Clyde F. Ellis. It was started by Brother J. F. Burton, while the writer of this article was in that far distant and difficult mission.

The little paper has assumed a more attractive appearance, the present edition giving some splendid pictures of Brethren Frederick M. Smith, Bishop McGuire, and some of the church institutions, the Saint's Home, the Stone Church at Independence, Missouri, the Sanitarium, and the college. The write-up on each of these subjects is very clearly given, setting forth from the Doctrine and Covenants the calling of the men, also the conference resolutions and inspirational direction regarding the institutions, all of which I am sure will be highly appreciated by the natives of the South Seas.

The writer has watched for everything that has ever appeared in print regarding the island mission, and read it with interest. Those childlike, earnest people have been nurtured by the church, and we are glad to note in a personal letter from Brother Ellis, also from Brother A. H. Christensen, that they are making progress.

Translating a few thoughts from the article on the college, I glean the following from the little island paper:

"On the 11th of April, 1890, there was a committee appointed to find a location for a house of learning for the church. The matter was carefully considered, and the work begun during said conference, and the bishop was authorized to proceed with the work.

This church school has been a great help to the young people of the church in general and especially to many who reside in that vicinity. There being a large branch at Lamoni, its influence has been a great help to the college; the prayer meetings, as well as the other services have been a strong arm of protection to the young people of the church while obtaining an education. So they have been educated in spiritual things, as well as in worldly wisdom. This institution has been under the supervision of high priests of the church, and is now—good men. The college is now being well sustained and controlled for the good of the whole church, and the young people of the church have been kept from the errors and dangerous things taught, to lead the young away from the true teachings in spiritual things.

"This year the State of Iowa schools, the university and others, are recognizing the work done in Graceland and giving due credits for said work, so that when our young go from our school to the State or other schools they are recognized with the good work done in our school, so this house of learning is keeping the young with clean hearts and minds in right teachings."

HUBERT CASE.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, February 26, 1917.

Editors Herald: The Southern California District conference held in Los Angeles, February 23, 24, and 25 is certainly a milestone in the history of church work in the great Southwest. It excelled any conference held in this district in point of attendance, intense interest, harmony, spirituality and general good will.

There was not a jarring word, not one discordant note, each vied with the other in an endeavor to convey good will and fellowship. Among the ministry the attitude of preferring one another was so apparent that one could not help but ask, "Are they all Frenchmen?" With one acclaim members and visitors exclaimed, "This is the best ever."

The Sunday school association held forth Friday morning; the Religio Friday afternoon. In the evening an impromptu program was rendered at which time Brethren Rushton, Harrington, Garrett and Williams gave short addresses.

Saturday morning at eight o'clock a priesthood meeting was held attended by all members of the Melchisedec priesthood in attendance at the conference.

The conference opened at ten-thirty with John W. Rushton, George Harrington and Thomas W. Williams chosen to preside.

There was one matter outside of the ordinary which elicited keen interest and animated discussion. It was a motion to petition the General Conference to consider the proposition of amending the name of the church by dropping the prefix

"Reorganized" and the affix "of Latter Day Saints" making the name "The Church of Jesus Christ." The resolution carried, and the delegates to the General Conference were instructed to bring this before that body.

The preaching was by George H. Wixom, who addressed the assembly Saturday night. Thomas W. Williams was the speaker Sunday morning and John W. Rushton, Sunday evening. Each sermon dovetailed into the other, making a symmetrical whole. On Sunday afternoon the service was varied, taking the form of a symposium, Brethren Goodrich, Leach, Carmichael, Wixom, Garrett, Williams, Cooper, Harrington and Rushton being the speakers.

The church was crowded to overflowing at every meeting. There were delegations from all parts of the district, Beaumont, Redlands, San Bernardino, Ontario, Pomona, Altadena, Long Beach, Garden Grove, Santa Ana, San Diego, Sunland, Ramona, and other points.

During the noon hour on Saturday Brethren Rushton, Garrett, Harrington, Williams, Wixom, Backer and Badham took a run out to see Brother Elbert. The weather for a couple of weeks has been very disagreeable, necessitating one keeping indoors much of the time, which is not conducive to convalescence but, in spite of this, we found our brother much improved. Brother Rushton and Wixom administered with beneficial results.

In parting with Elbert this time I said to him, "Don't be discouraged, Elbert. Remember the old adage, 'The good die young.'" He came back quickly. "Yes, you and I will live to a good old age, won't we Tommie?" I hadn't any answer which seemed to fit in at that time. He scored as usual.

Southern California is coming into its own. A number of years ago several prophecies were given through prominent men in the church that we would pass through severe and testing conditions, but that the work would emerge and move forward to heights never attained hitherto. The Lord is making prophecy history now.

Ten delegates were elected to represent the district at General Conference.

Your brother in Christ,
THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO, February 17, 1917.

Editors Herald: I wish to let the Saints know that I am still serving my Redeemer and always will, for I have for life enlisted in this great latter-day work. There are five Saints in our city. We do not know of any others nearer than three hundred miles, but I believe there will be before long. We did not complete our Sunday school that Brother Samuel Tomlinson organized, because when I was going to send for supplies the sisters said they could not attend in the winter months with their babies in the terrible cold weather we have here. I am told that the ice is four feet thick. It may have been wisdom to wait until warm weather. We expect to reorganize our school in the spring, and to have other members by that time.

I wish to thank my brothers and sisters in the East for their kindness and willingness to help us start this Sunday school. I am thankful to Brother Curtis for sending Brother Tomlinson here last fall and the same thanks to him in making sacrifice in coming here. The amount of good will be seen in the future.

I have been busy talking this work ever since my ordination. I have a good helper in Mr. Ray Banstell, who travels with me in my visiting from house to house. He has made a covenant to be baptized and Mr. McLain and his wife are ready to be baptized as soon as the weather permits. There are others very favorable towards us, and I expect to continue my labor from house to house until I can get out on the street to do some talking there.

If any of the elders are passing through our city we would be pleased to have them call on us. I live on the hill and can look over our city and the city of Fort William. In the two cities there is said to be sixty thousand people; surely there is room for us to grow and become a large branch of the true vine. May we have the prayers of the Saints to assist us in our isolated mission.

Your brother,
19 Olive Road. ABRAHAM MILLER.

PERRY, IOWA, February 21, 1917.

Editors Herald: Perry Branch has rejoiced lately in having had Brother W. A. McDowell with us for ten days. Aside from the giving of blessings, the office of patriarch was rather vague to many of us, but Brother McDowell's fatherly advice and counsel was truly edifying and inspiring. The round table meetings were especially instructive and the Saints here will cherish for many a day the memories of Brother McDowell's visits with them in their homes, as well as the grand good sermons they heard each evening during his stay. To the encouragement and admonition we received from his visit we attribute much of the renewed energy that we are enjoying at this time.

Another treat was a series of meetings held in January. Brother Henry Castings, of Runnels, and Brother Roy Cheville, of Rhodes, were with us two days, and both left much spiritual food. Directly following these services, Brother O. Salisbury, of Des Moines, assisted by Brother Gerrit Juergens, of Glidden, Iowa, soloist, began a week's series of meetings. Brother Salisbury was truly filled with the Spirit throughout the meeting, and his sermons were forceful and convincing, but the outside interest was poor. Nevertheless, the Saints felt the power of the Spirit at each service and will endeavor to heed the admonition to "Go forward." Brother Juergens's splendid help with the choir, and his beautiful solos were certainly thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated.

The different departments of the work here are progressing favorably, those in charge seeming to sense the responsibility of this latter-day work, as they never have before.

Sunday, March 4, will be the anniversary of the organization of the Perry Branch, as well as the anniversary of Brother H. H. Hand's ordination, and preparations are being made for appropriate observance of the day. A special program will be rendered at the Religio, in the evening, in commemoration of the event.

Those who have just returned from the district conference at Des Moines, bring us the pleasing news that Perry is to entertain the June conference. We feel to congratulate ourselves and hope for a big crowd.

Altogether we feel and know that the Lord is working with us, and the burden of our prayers is that we may be faithful and humble, with an eye single to his glory, so that we may be useful instruments in his hands for the upbuilding of his kingdom on earth.

ESTELLE F. TAYLOR.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, February 25, 1917.

Editors Herald: Dear Saints, as I have just finished reading in the HERALD and cannot attend prayer meeting this evening; I was wondering what to do next when the thought came to me to write a few lines to the HERALD, as I have never tried to before. I always feel like there are so many good writers and that I could not say anything that would be of any interest and would just keep silent.

We have a good branch here at Sperry; some good faithful Saints. We have a good Sunday school and have just begun our Religio which we all intend to make a success by the help of our heavenly Father. We had a grand prayer meeting last Sunday evening, with only a few present. What a grand thing to know our Father will recognize a few just the same as he will a large number.

Many of the Saints will be made sad to know our dear brother James H. Bussell has gone on to a better home. Yes, we are made sad and our home seems so vacant, yet we rejoice to know he is out of his suffering. As many of you know, he has suffered untold misery for years, sometimes would feel weak and discouraged to see him suffer as he did, yet when he would express himself he always had a bright hope, and his last words were a grand testimony to me. When he looked up and said "Some one up there is playing the band, the band of the gospel, great day, great day," Saints, this was a grand testimony to me. I only hope and pray that I may live so when the death angel comes I can say "Great day." Your sister in the faith,

MYRTLE BUSSELL.

RIDGETOWN, ONTARIO, February 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: I always look forward for this paper, because of its splendid spiritual food, and the many grand letters of the Saints which are always very encouraging. Also the paper is of great educational value. We get much enlightenment upon the many doctrinal points. I always scan the Letter Department the first thing to see if there is any news from some one I know. Ofttimes there is, and how I do enjoy reading it. So I thought there might be others like myself, who would be glad to hear from these parts.

As each day passes away I realize the great need of our being more obedient and keeping ourselves prepared for the last day, for the day is fast approaching when this work must be accomplished. Shall we be found unprepared? I feel my unworthiness and my weakness because of the little I have done for Christ, who has done so much for me.

Our branch is progressing quite favorably. Always enjoying the Spirit in our Sunday morning prayer meeting. Our leaders are more united and are trying to keep the work moving along. So far this year we have been greatly blessed. Our branch president, Elder Alex Ellis, although residing nine miles away, is ever at his post and never lets many opportunities pass without being here as a shepherd to lead his flock, especially on sacrament services. Brother Philip Green is presiding priest and Brother Abner St. John is presiding deacon. Both are earnest workers in their calling. We greatly miss our absent teacher, Brother John Schrader, who is now in Pontiac, Michigan, but trusting his absence from our midst will be the means of putting the gospel before others' eyes. Brother Vickers is our branch secretary and I am branch solicitor and assistant superintendent of the Sunday school.

My testimony to you and the world is that I know this work is true and am ever thankful to God for his watchful care over us as a family and branch. I trust this letter will be comforting to some lonely and weak Saint.

I remain your brother in gospel bonds, NOAH SHAW.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA, February 28, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am an old old man, ninety years old the 18th of last February, and have been long afflicted with a crippled body. I was born in Sweden and in 1852 I first heard the preaching of the angel's message. Following this I began a study of the Bible and soon became convinced that the Lord had indeed sent an angel to the earth to restore the everlasting gospel after so many years. I was baptized

February 19, 1857, and Brother Magnus A. Fyrando preached that evening, though he was but a boy.

This same month orders came from Salt Lake City that all were to be rebaptized and acknowledge Brigham Young as a prophet of the Lord.

Now, I was a missionary for Brigham Young for eleven years, and in 1860 a missionary came from the Utah "Zion" by the name of P. Beckstrom, and gave us word that Zion's redemption was near at hand; he even set the time as inside of five years. So I began to prepare. I talked with the president of the Scandinavian Mission and it was arranged that I should be in Malmo on June 10, 1868, from where eighty-four Swedish, six hundred Danish and two hundred English emigrants sailed for the West. In ten weeks we were in Omaha. At this place I noticed my old friend Magnus Fyrando, who had returned from the Rocky Mountain Zion, now an apostate from the teachings of Brigham Young.

As a result of this, I stopped in Omaha and on September 17, 1871, we went to hear preaching by Joseph Smith the president of the Reorganized Church. It made us rejoice to see and hear the chosen seed of the Martyr and I was baptized October 24 of that year and my wife on April 22, the following spring. I was ordained an elder in May, 1872.

I have known such men of the church as Avondet, Broadbent, Ballinger, Hart, Medlock, Rumel, Edwards, Meller, also R. C. Elvin and his son Robert M., and M. H. Forscutt.

I received a spiritual manifestation in 1875 that Joseph Smith would soon go to Utah and let Brigham Young know that he was not the man to lead the Saints to Zion. This was fulfilled about nine months later. Brother Joseph and Brother James Caffall came to Omaha and stayed with us and preached. On the 25th of July Brother Joseph left for California and on his return visited Brigham Young.

To God I give thanks for the wonderful way he has preserved my life and that he has allowed me to be acquainted with the everlasting gospel and associate with God's servants: Joseph, Alexander and David and their sons and daughters, and Elbert A. Smith. I have known William W. Blair and his son Frederick and many more of the Saints of the church in the past sixty years.

May God speed the work of the church and allow us to meet on the other side.

Your brother,

ANDREW JOHNSON.

DECATUR, NEBRASKA, February 27, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have contributed anything to your fair pages. I have spent most of my time during the past two years laboring among the Lamanites of the Omaha tribe. At times it is rather discouraging but at other times I have greatly enjoyed my work among them. Since October 1 when a branch was organized among them at Macy with a membership of a little over fifty, I have acted as president of the branch. We have had our meetings in a private house and our work has gone along as well as could be expected under such circumstances. We hope to have a new church building there before another season passes.

During the past two weeks I have been looking up and visiting with many scattered members of the north part of the district. I find a great many scattered over the district who have isolated themselves from church privileges, and many of them not taking the church papers, and as a consequence are falling behind in the work.

We need fellowship, we need association, if we are to develop. If we cannot have it by personal contact we can to an extent, by taking the church papers. I enjoy, so much, reading the pages of the church papers and I have urged the members to take them and keep in touch with the work, some have done so, others say they are going to do so.

Without fellowship or association we are very apt to shrivel and die. Truly did Jesus say "I am the vine." We are as a great vine, and we are dependent, to an extent, upon each other but especially upon the "true vine."

I rejoice to see the upward trend that this work seems to be taking; the desire that there seems to be manifest for greater knowledge and greater efficiency. Knowledge is power, hence the greater the knowledge the greater the power.

I have enjoyed studying and reading more during the past year than ever before in my life, and I feel that it is but a touch of the same spirit that is pervading the whole church. Shall we not call it an endowment?

Jesus at one time said, "If ye continue in my word ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Truth, we are told in Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4, is a knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come. If truth is knowledge, and knowledge is power and by it we shall be made free; that we may arise, awake, from our long silent slumbers, shake off the fetters that have bound us so long, who shall forbid that we shall lay hold of that which shall make us free? Chains of oppression we will break asunder, and join with the ransomed in victory's song. Who then shall say that we shall not seek to bring into our possession that which will enable us to arise in the name of Israel's God and say to the world, "We have that which you are looking for"; that we may show to them that we have what we have claimed, lo these many years, to have been in possession of, "light and truth"? God has asked us to do it. The world is demanding it of us.

But in our search for knowledge (truth) let us not forget the fountain head, the source of all truth; he, around whom clusters all truth and by whom were all things made that are made; he who said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." If we will but remember this we shall be made free indeed, for he hath said, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

"A little philosophy" says Francis Bacon, "inclineth man's mind to atheism, but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion." Let us, therefore, who are the children of the light proceed along the lines of true philosophy seek, first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and we shall need have no fear. God's law is perfect and if we follow it closely we shall need have no fear. God's law is perfect and if we follow it closely we shall not go far astray, but will come steadily and surely towards perfection. We shall indeed know the truth and be made free. Our latent powers will unfold and we shall have strength and power to accomplish the work set before us—the redemption of Zion. Israel shall be free.

Ever praying for the success of the work,

W. E. SHAKESPEARE.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, February 28, 1917.

Editors Herald: There are a few Saints in this part of the field, isolated from church privileges, but striving to do the Master's bidding. Brother E. A. Erwin paid us a visit and held a week's meetings, with good attendance. He closed on the 25th, with an excellent interest and some near the kingdom. The Saints are built up and the prospects for the advancement of the work in this part are very good. We hope the elders will not forget us when passing through. We are located seven miles west of Hot Springs.

We pray for the redemption of Zion and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

T. A. DONATHAN.

DES MOINES, IOWA, March 1, 1917.

Editors Herald: I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. I have had many trials, including the loss of my dear companion, who was the best friend I ever had. Many times when on the downward path, her words of comfort would cheer and strengthen me. We held memorial service in the church on February 25 for her, with preaching by Elder E. B. Morgan, of Lucas, Iowa. She died a year ago, and is greatly missed.

I want to press onward so I may be worthy to meet her in the world to come. Our late conference was surely a success. The Spirit was made manifest and we had a time of rejoicing. Our afternoon meeting was a spiritual feast.

Knowing this work is of God, I want to do all I can for it. I have received many testimonies, including the healing of my children and companion.

Though I am not much of a reader, I take the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves to help the church as well as myself. I read them and then pass them along to others.

I hope to continue on in this work to the end.

Your brother in the one faith,

JOSEPH LILLY.

DENVER, COLORADO, March 3, 1917.

Editors Herald: A season of beautiful weather and excellent roads enabled about a hundred Saints from all parts of the Eastern District of Colorado to attend the late conference in Denver, February 24 and 25, 1917. Nearly all came in autos, some as far as two hundred and twenty-five miles.

Apostle J. E. Kelley arrived from Arizona in time to take part and to preside with J. R. Sutton and A. E. Tabor over the conference.

The reports were encouraging, showing in the main a good condition and an increase in membership and in funds collected. The Falcon Branch was disorganized, there being but two families left in that vicinity. Fort Collins branch had been organized with Elder Wilber Savage in charge. Two were baptized during the conference. Two ordained to the eldership, two to priest, one to teacher, one, recommended from Second Denver Branch to office of teacher, referred to missionary in charge and the district presidency for consideration and action.

The preaching was by Elders Sutton, Tabor, May and Saide, the first two occupying in one service on the subject of tithing, following which a generous offering by a new member enriched the treasury considerably.

The social service with sacrament was a busy one and full of spiritual food. The conference was marked with a spirit of earnestness, zeal and peace.

The Religio and Sunday school conventions which preceded the conference, were very well attended, and under the leadership of Brother Coral Willis and Sister L. Fishburn were conducted in such a manner as to give much instruction and entertainment, profitable to all.

The Saints and friends of Denver were complimented for their hospitality and the efficient manner in feeding and housing the many welcome visitors which really taxed the capacity of the local branch and church.

Four hundred and sixty meals were served in the church dining room under the management of Sisters Adkins, Branan and Lewis. If there were any who did not enjoy themselves we did not meet them. Between services many used their autos in seeing this beautiful city of the West.

The testimony of the Spirit was that after darkness, there would be light. Truly our hearts have been tried and made to mourn over conditions in some places, but the volume of good in other places came in like a flood to drown for a time our sorrows. We trust that the adjustments now in process will set in order the work and those who truly love the work of God above self will be found supporting the church standards and its legal representatives in honor before God and the world.

Many obstacles have been brushed aside in our year's work, till we can say the light is slowly winning the fight, and scattered through the ranks there are a number who are studying intelligently the present needs of the church, and trying to solve for themselves the questions which must be answered before all Saints can be gathered into places of safety and enjoy the cooperation of each other, thus freeing them from the disintegrating fear and worry which now binds itself on all our minds, caused by the strenuous condition under which we live.

I remain yours in faith,

445 Clarkson Street.

AMMON WHITE.

Conference Minutes

IDAHO.—At Minidoka, February 24 and 25, District President George Winegar chosen chairman, with power to choose assistants. He chose Peter Anderson and William Glauner. Reports from five of the ministry read. Branch reports: Hagerman 102, Filer, 21, Boise 84, Weiser 66, Teton 48. Delegates to General Conference: Peter Anderson and Brother Odie. Peter Anderson authorized to select any others that he may find in attendance from southern Idaho. George Winegar presented his resignation as bishop's agent and asked the conference to provide his successor. J. L. Benson was recommended by vote to the Presiding Bishop for appointment as bishop's agent of the district. Missionary in charge authorized to organize a branch at this place to be known as the Minidoka Branch. This was done, and Robert Chambers elected president, J. L. Benson acting priest, B. F. Benson teacher. J. L. Benson was ordained elder. Adjourned to meet at call of district president and minister in charge. J. L. Benson, secretary.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—February 3, 1917, in Saints' church on Dale Street, Springfield, Missouri, with Henry Sparling, district president, presiding. Following petition was adopted: We petition the leading quorums of the church or General Conference to define what action shall be taken with inactive members of the priesthood. District president reported that the branches at West Plains, Cooter, Macomb and Grove Spring were in an unorganized condition, and on separate motions the three first named were declared disorganized, action on Grove Spring deferred until next conference. Officers elected: Henry Sparling, president; J. F. Cunningham, vice president; Benjamin Pearson, secretary-treasurer; delegates to General Conference: L. M. McFadden, Henry Sparling, A. T. Gray and wife, C. E. Bootman, R. J. Mendall, Francis Bishop and Luke Bishop. Next conference at Springfield, June 2 and 3, unless advisable to change date to have minister in charge present. Decided to hold reunion in Springfield this year, date to be published later. G. A. Davis, bishop's agent, reported: Receipts: $319.82; balance $2.92. Francis Bishop ordained teacher. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—At Atchison, February 3. District president Samuel Twombly in charge, and by motion district presidency chosen to preside. Mass conference formed. Reports from Atchison, Fanning, Blue Rapids, Topeka and Scranton Branches. Those failing to report were: Centralia, Idylewild, and Netawaka. Reports from 7 elders, 6 priests, 4 teachers, 1 deacon. Tent committee reported receipts of $192.50, balance, $7.15. John Cairns, bishop's agent, reported receipts of $1,169.90, balance, $139.90. Requests from Fanning and Atchison Branches for ordination of Roy L. Tilden, William E. Twombly, and Cecil E. Schmid to office of priest approved. Report of reunion committee received and vacancies filled by W. E. Peak and Charles Etheridge. Delegates to General Conference: Samuel Twombly, F. G. Hedrick, B. F. Jackson, Sarah Blouser, Sister E. S. McNichols, Ethel Dittmore, Emma Hedrick. Alternates: William Twombly, W. E. Peak, A. C. Ingles, John Cairns, James Bailey, Sister Pitzenberger, Gilbert Hedrick. Fanning chosen as next place for conference: August 4 and 5, 1917. Officers elected: Samuel Twombly, president; F. G. Hedrick, vice president; William Twombly, secretary-treasurer; William Bolinger member library board. Brethren Twombly, Tilden, and Schmid ordained priests. A profitable conference. William E. Twombly, secretary.

WESTERN COLORADO.—With Durango Branch, Durango, Colorado, February 17 and 18. Missionary in charge, J. E. Kelley, was too ill to make the journey to be with us. District President Amos T. Higdon, with William B. Farley, vice president, presided over the conference sessions. There were present of the ministry 1 seventy, 3 elders, 2 priests. There were 14 ministerial reports read by the clerk, 4 branch reports (being all in the district) also spiritual reports by all branch presidents. Harmony prevailed through all the sessions and at the prayer service after sacrament Sunday afternoon the Spirit was present and the Saints were commended for their efforts and a promise if faithful that many would be gathered into the fold. The Saints rejoiced that they were permitted to assist in the latter-day work, this being the first conference for many present. Our district president, vice president and clerk and treasurer were elected to succeed themselves for the ensuing year. The next conference will be held with the Bayfield Branch, Bayfield, Colorado. The conference and Sunday School Association raised $20.10 on the church debt. Good attendance considering the scattered condition, the mountainous country and wintertime, some having to cross the Continental Divide over as many as three passes taking two days to make the journey, consuming one whole week's time in order to attend the Sunday school conventions and conference. The work is in a good healthy condition but requires constant work of all the ministerial force to hold our own. We are gaining slowly in numbers but our percentage is up to or better than the general average of the church. Delegates to General Conference: Amos T. Higdon, J. F. Petre. Bishop's agent's report audited found correct, balance on hand $133.63. M. L. Schmid, secretary, 326 Main Street, Delta, Colorado.

Convention Minutes

CLINTON.—Religio, at Nevada, Missouri, February 16, 2.30 p. m. Talks were given by representatives of the different locals. All district officers reported in writing. Eight locals reported. Delegates to General Convention: R. T. Walters, W. S. Macrae, Orval Andes, Lee Quick, Emma Keck, A. C. Silvers, J. A. Marsteller, Hazel Noyes, T. C. Kelley, John Davis, Lucy Silvers, Gertie Bailey, Zora Lowe, Bertha Walters, Mabel Braden, Dollie Brunson, Ollie Keck. The last part of the session was spent in Institute work. Subjects presented, normal work, home class work, and library work. A well-rendered program was given. Adrian Lowe, secretary; Mabel Braden, president.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—At Atchison, February 3, with District Superintendent Florence McNichols in charge. Officers elected: R. L. Tilden, superintendent; Frank G. Hedrick, assistant; Emma Hedrick, secretary-treasurer; Betty Twombly, superintendent of home department; Ethel Sprague, cradle roll superintendent; member library board, Mrs. A. E. Sprague. Delegates to General Convention: Roy L. Tilden, Samuel Twombly, Frank G. Hedrick, Emma Hedrick, William Twombly, William Bollinger, Gilbert Hedrick, Florence Lentz, Florence McNichols, Betty Twombly, Ethel Dittmore, Sarah Blouser, A. C. Ingalls, Brother Jackson. Adjourned to meet in Fanning in August. Emma Hedrick, Fanning Kansas.

The Bishopric

Northern Idaho District.—Upon the recommendation of the district conference, owing to the resignation of Brother G. W. Winegar as bishop's agent, we have appointed Brother J. L. Benson of Minidoka, Idaho, to serve in this capacity.

During the past year the work of this department in this district under the care of Brother Winegar has shown good results and I trust the Saints will give Brother Benson the same support that has been accorded Brother Winegar.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

Additional information; take special notice: To get the benefit of the two-cent rate granted by the Burlington system buy round trip tickets—to Lamoni and return. It is not necessary to secure certificates with ticket. This rate refers only to interstate traffic. Notice also that going tickets may be purchased March 31, good to return leaving Lamoni April 20, and not April 21 as formerly stated.

"Fares herein apply only via same route in both directions. Routes below are referred to in fare paragraph:

"Route 1, via Bethany; route 2, via Grant City; route 3, via Osceola; route 4, via Burlington and Chariton; route 5, via Keokuk and Van Wert; route 6, via Saint Joseph and Bethany; route 7, via Saint Joseph and Grant City; route 8, via Saint Louis, thence route 4; route 9, via Saint Louis, thence route 5; route 10, via Saint Louis, thence route 6.

"Fares from points of origin not shown in this tariff will be made by adding the fares shown in this tariff to double the one way fares shown in other tariffs as lawfully on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, provided that if the fare so made exceeds the fare from a point beyond on the same through line as shown in this tariff, the latter fare will apply. Fares so made will apply via all routes authorized under this tariff from contiguous points of origin.

"The following fares will apply from stations named to Lamoni, Iowa, and return:

"Alliance, Nebraska, route 3, $24.50; 6, $25.25; 7, $25.80.
"East Saint Louis, Illinois, route 8, $18.15; 9, $14.85; 10, $17.50.

"Chicago, Illinois, route 4, $15.50.

"Galesburg, Illinois, route 4, $9.

"Grand Island, Nebraska, route 3, $13.65; 6, $14.50; 7, $15.05.

"Kansas City, Missouri, route 1, $6.50; 2, $7.15.

"Lincoln, Nebraska, route 3, $9.85; 6, $10.65; 7, $11.20.

"Omaha, Nebraska, route 3, $7.65.

"Oxford, Nebraska, route 3, $16.85; 6, $16.70; 7, $17.30.

"Peoria, Illinois, route 4, $11.10.

"Quincy, Illinois, route 4, $10.85; 5, $9.10.

"Saint Joseph, Missouri, route 1, $3.95; 2, $4.60.

"Saint Louis, Missouri, route 4, $17.65; 5, $14.35; 6, $17.

From the foregoing it will be understood that the two-cent rate applies only from stations above-named on the Burlington system; also that those coming from points beyond the specific points named will receive the benefit of this Burlington reduction in computation of their through fares. Read previous notice, last week's issue.

Eastern delegates take special notice: Further advices from Brother D. E. Dowker, Chicago, advise that the Chicago special party will leave Chicago on Saturday, March 31, instead of April 1 as formerly announced, and on train No. 5, at 6.15 p. m., Burlington Route. This is done to reach Lamoni for the Religio session of the 1st. We suggest that eastern travelers connect with this train if possible.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 12, 1917.

This advertising talk by the manager of the Board of Publication is one of a series appearing simultaneously in the SAINTS' HERALD and "Zion's Ensign," written with the hope of reaching as many as possible of the church membership. This is the second of eight "talks" that will appear.

FREE CATALOGUES

Selling principally by mail as we do, it is necessary for our customers to make most of their selections from catalogues. We mention the following as available and from the list the reader of this advertisement should select the ones in which he is most interested and have them sent for future reference.

On account of the rising prices in paper and other printing materials, our plans for printing a complete descriptive catalogue of all supplies which we had ready, was deferred, with the hope that the prices might lower and allow a permanent list to be issued. For the present, we issue a temporary price list of all church books, tracts, requisites, such as blanks, cards, etc. This includes prices on all Sunday school and Religio supplies.

Bible catalogues, illustrating a complete line from which your personal preference may be supplied.

Descriptive lists of books on sociology, nature, for the traveler, and for boys and girls, are also gladly sent.

Send to the Herald Publishing House for an illustrated price list of leather goods, made here and sold reasonably.

Branches interested in installing the individual communion service should send to the Herald Publishing House for illustrated price lists of the Thomas service, which has proven itself a very satisfactory equipment.

woman, loved and respected by those who knew her. She died strong in the faith, looking forward with hope to the resurrection of the just. Died at Blair, Wisconsin, February 21, 1917. Sermon by W. A. McDowell at Blair, Wisconsin.

SCARCLIFF.—Elizabeth Woodstock, was born February 22, 1830, at Bolton, New York. Lived successively at Kirtland, Ohio, Nauvoo, Illinois, and Janesville, Wisconsin. On February 18, 1850, married Henry Scarcliff. To them 9 children were born, 6 of whom preceded her in death. Her husband died in 1892. She died February 3, 1917 at the home of her son, C. F. Scarcliff. Thus closes an earthly career of one whose entire life was touched by the latter-day work, her parents being among the first to unite with the church. In her childhood days while living at Kirtland, she with other children lent her aid in the erection of the Lord's temple by gathering glass and crockery to be broken and used with mortar which formed the outside finish of the building. At the age of twenty she united with the church. Located at Holden, Missouri, in 1870, where she in connection with her husband was untiring in the effort to establish the work, giving of their time and means. Much credit is due to these early efforts for the present prosperity of the work there. She had a large acquaintance of friends, and was held in high esteem in the community. She leaves 2 sons and 1 daughter, William B., of Monrovia, Kansas, C. F., of Holden, Missouri, and Mrs. Mary E. Goldwater of Saint Louis, Missouri. Services at Saints' church at Holden, Frederick A. McWethy in charge, J. W. Layton assisting, sermon by D. J. Krahl.

Saves Eggs

Royal Baking Powder makes it possible to produce appetizing and wholesome cakes, muffins, cornbread, etc., with fewer eggs than are usually required.

In many recipes the number of eggs may be reduced and excellent results obtained by adding an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, for each egg omitted. The following tested recipe is a practical illustration:

SPONGE CAKE

1 cup sugar
 ½ cup water
 3 eggs
 2 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
 1 cup flour
 1 teaspoon salt
 ½ cup cold water
 1 teaspoon flavoring

DIRECTIONS:—Boil sugar and water until syrup spins a thread and add to the stiffly beaten whites of eggs, beating until the mixture is cold. Sit together three times the flour, salt and baking powder; beat yolks of eggs until thick; add a little at a time flour mixture and egg yolks alternately to white of egg mixture, stirring after each addition. Add ½ cup cold water and flavoring. Mix lightly and bake in moderate oven one hour.

The old method called for 6 eggs and no baking powder

BOOK OF MORMON TALKS. H. O. Smith, "Orion," understands the minds of boys and girls. In this interesting book he has told the whole Book of Mormon story, briefly and simply, around the family circle; making the father of two inquisitive, thoughtful boys and girls the chief conversationalist. There is a delightful simplicity about these talks, and a homeliness that will perpetuate their popularity among Latter Day Saints. No. 365, cloth60c

DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON PROVEN BY ARCHÆOLOGY.—Student, here is a mass of startling data for your consideration. Nothing "sentimental" about this work. It adheres to reality, and yet it is full of the romance which clusters about the ruins of a departed civilization. Louise Palfrey Sheldon accomplished a notable work in writing this book. It is a bulwark against the guesswork of un-informed antagonists to Latter Day Saintism. No. 176, cloth$.60

THE INDIAN MAIDEN. (Object lessons on Temperance.) By Frances. Unique as a story and as a temperance propaganda. Indian life, the old story, and the evils of civilization, furnish the author with material of which she takes full advantage. Quaintly appealing; anti-barbaric and anti-alcoholic. No. 363, cloth60c

WHAT IS MAN?—J. R. Lambert at his best. This is saying a good deal. Brother Lambert knows where to go for evidence and how to clinch it when he gets it. This book forever disproves the dogmas of soul sleeping and kindred illusions. A powerful work. No. 316 cloth...$.75

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

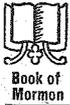

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

GENERAL CONFERENCE

The officers and delegates of the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will assemble on April 6, next, at Lamoni, Iowa, in the Brick Church, at ten o'clock a. m. The order of seating usually observed will obtain at the first session. This order is as it was in 1915: The Presidency of the conference, the Quorum of Twelve, the Order of Evangelists, the bishops, and the secretaries on the rostrum. To the left of the rostrum, the general high council and the quorum of high priests; the quorums of seventy in the center section of seats. The elders in the rear of the high priests in the north section. The delegates in the south section of seats. Remaining seats on the main floor and those in the gallery are to be occupied by visitors.

Table space on the platform will be reserved for representatives of the church publications and other church interests, while legitimate representatives of the press will be provided space other than the rostrum.

At eight o'clock a. m., April 6, the priesthood of the conference, including those entitled to ex officio rights, will assemble in the lower auditorium of the church to listen to a lecture to the priesthood. Each morning of the conference it is expected that the priesthood will thus assemble for the same purpose. The lectures will be given by Brethren W. W. Smith, M. H. Siegfried, the undersigned, and perhaps one or two others of the brethren. It is desired that the brethren of the ministry will make special effort to attend these meetings. As has been the case in recent years, many of the reports to conference will be printed and bound in pamphlet form, and the conference members are expected to carefully read these reports as a preparation for the expeditious handling of the conference business.

Requests have reached the Presidency that a general fast day be observed Sunday, April 1, and that special petitions be offered that divine guidance be tendered the conference and the church that the work of the Lord may be facilitated and strengthened. It is well that all Saints who desire so to do observe that day in fasting and special prayer.

We urge the various quorums to make careful effort to expedite their work so that the business of the conference may be reached early and time and money saved by shortening the time of conference, not failing, however, to give ample time to the consideration of important matters demanding attention.

Let the Saints and conference members assemble devoutly and consecrated to the Lord's work.

Your servant,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 17, 1917.

PREPARATION FOR GENERAL CONFERENCE

In a few days the conventions of the general auxiliaries will have assembled. In two weeks the sixty-fourth General Conference of the Reorganized Church will be called to order.

The year has been one of notable advancement. The new stakes have proven a success, and the stake officers, by repeated conferences with each other and the First Presidency are trying to perfect themselves in their arduous and particular duties. There has been a new outpouring of the Spirit throughout the church.

From east and from west and from the central places there comes report of the blessings and gifts of God, in prophecy, the gift of tongues, healing of the sick and an awakening of a new interest. There is a feeling that we are preparing for a great advance move and an effort is being made in many places to get ready. While some few fear lest we move too rapidly and a few are out of touch with the great movements, there appears throughout the church a general renewal of confidence both in the work of the church and in the men who have been called to occupy in positions of great responsibility.

Now, we, in person or by our representatives, are about to assemble for the General Conference. What preparation have we made; what preparation are we making?

In Lamoni the town has announced a clean-up day just before conference, so that all the winter rubbish may be removed. Some are wanting the house or store painted, inside or outside, or both. Some are trying to secure new furniture for the entertainment of the coming guests. A few years ago beds on the floor were arranged for conference visitors, often the length of the room, one room for men and one for women, and they were glad to secure this accommodation. But to-day this is not considered sufficient, and many a Martha is busy with extra preparation for those expected.

In the past every housewife was confined at home to prepare the meals for the hungry hosts in attendance. The hardship of this has been perceived, so that it has now become customary to provide meals at a common dining hall. But the committee having this in charge find their hands so full that there is little time for other things. The people of Lamoni are making due preparation for the bodily comfort of the expected visitors.

Those from far and near who expect to attend are much concerned with business affairs, to leave matters in such shape as to permit two or three weeks' absence. With some it is an exceptionally busy time of the year, and it means a hope long deferred, now about to be realized. Then soon there will be packing of suit cases, securing of tickets and the hurry of departure.

Is this to be all of our preparation? We are reminded of the Sunday school superintendent, who at the close of a session announced, "I was going to ask you to sing 'Take time to be holy,' but we haven't got time." How is it with us? Have we the time to be holy, to go down in earnest, humble prayer to our heavenly Father, that he will prepare our heart and mind for the work before the conference? that he will bless with his Holy Spirit and direct the quorums on whom rest the most arduous duties of the conference?

Already the First Presidency and the Twelve are busy with the necessary work of preparation, and have assembled to do that which belongs to the conference. These men are men and may make mistakes if left to their human wisdom. Is there going up from the church a great prayer that divine wisdom and divine direction may be theirs in the work of preparation, in the work of the conference, and in the appointing of the fields of labor for our devoted force of missionaries?

From many quarters we learn that this great need is keenly felt. Some have written during the months that are past, asking that we urge upon the church a season of prayer that divine direction may be with the church, and especially with those on whom rests the duty of being spokesmen, that the leading quorums of the church may be completed and fully organized for the great work lying before them. We have hesitated to present this because we have felt sure that these men on whom rests the duty have already, for a long time past, been in earnest prayer for such divine direction, and that they appreciate the needs of the work in their care as keenly and more keenly than anyone else.

Yet it is proper that we should join them in humble prayer, that if it is the divine will—and the time is now opportune—our heavenly Father will indicate those whom he has chosen, not of man but of his divine will and wisdom; so that we as a church may be fully organized and prepared, and may do all that lies in our power for the carrying out of the great work intrusted to all.

To-night, March 21, the Saints of Lamoni meet, fasting in a union prayer meeting for the coming conference. No general call has been issued. But it is proper, individually and collectively, that we should assemble at the house of prayer to offer our oblations to God, so that our hearts may be prepared, our intelligence quickened for the work before us.

Nor does this mean alone those who attend the conference. The blessing of what is there accomplished will be felt by all. The mistakes, if any should be made, will be felt eventually by all. We are one body and those who cannot attend should still offer up sincere prayers that those who are present at the conference may have the Spirit of God in quorum sessions and on the floor of the conference. But above all, that our hearts may be prepared and our intelligence quickened, so that we may be ready not only for the conference, but for the future work for which the conference itself is the preparation.

Are you ready, not only with physical preparation, but ready heart, mind and soul for the work before us? If not, now is the time to ask for divine help to get ready.

THE AUTHENTICITY OF THE BIBLE

A CORRECTION

In the editorial on March 7 there occurs the statement: "It is now nearly seventy-three years, and except for the Manifesto there has been nothing published by them as a revelation during that period."

This is an error. Our worthy Brother John A. Teeters has called our attention to section 136 in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants which is headed: "The Word and Will of the Lord, given through President Brigham Young . . . January 14, 1847."

We take pleasure in making this correction. It was an oversight, as the sentence should have read: "It is now seventy years, and except for the Manifesto there has been nothing published by them as a revelation during that period."

S. A. BURGESS.

THE CONFERENCE DAILY

The editors are laying plans to include not only the usual items in the CONFERENCE DAILY, the various reports to the conference, the motions and business of the afternoon sessions, and special editorials concerning different departments of our work, but in addition to this, we plan to secure a resume of the principal discussions. Instead of giving merely a list of names of speakers, the principal arguments made will be outlined, so that the readers of the daily should be as fully in touch with what is going on as those who attend the conference, and more completely so than is possible by personal letter.

The principal arguments, pro and con, will also be set forth concerning the matters before the Religion and Sunday school conventions, and, if we can secure it, those of the Woman's Auxiliary.

In addition to this, some years ago each man reported his individual labors to the conference. Now it is summarized in the report of the missionary in charge. Of course it would be impossible to publish more than a small part of such reports, but we want from the missionaries interesting and significant figures of their labors, together with incidents which may be of more than local interest.

Reports will also be made of the morning and evening services, and of the R. C. Evans sermons. We expect to make a special effort to secure interesting anecdotes of ministerial experiences, and would like the cooperation and help of those in attendance. We want to make the DAILY HERALD as newsy and interesting as possible, and to do so will require your help, and especially that of the secretaries of the quorums.

Only about half of this material can be put in the weekly edition. In addition to this the DAILY will be mailed with the news of the afternoon session each evening, while the forms for the weekly will be closed the Saturday preceding publication on the following Wednesday. Only under unusual circumstances would anything be inserted as late as Monday in the weekly HERALD.

APPEALS FOR MONEY

We are confident that if the originators of a certain chain letter which is being circulated among the Saints to raise money for enlarging a local church building had known some of the following facts it would never have been started.

All such general appeals should have the indorsement of the Presiding Bishopric. Many such letters to the Saints are sent us for publication, and we invariably send them back with an explanation that the brethren having charge of the financial work of the church should give their indorsement to such matters before they are sent to the Saints in general. Possibly they might suggest better methods.

If such appeals come to us with that indorsement, we have no objections to giving them space, but since we are not in a position to pass upon such matters and our financial officers are, we are glad to observe the rule, believing it a satisfactory one.

Of course this does not affect bishops or bishop's agents or even district officers making proper calls to their respective constituents. We simply wish to avoid the confusion that would result from printing promiscuous calls for money.

Upon the above basis, we are confident that the chain letter referred to, a copy of which has come into our hands, should not be circulated. The cause is no doubt a worthy one, but the method is wrong.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Russian Czar Abdicates

A new Government prevails in Russia, following a popular revolution of three days, during which there was comparatively little bloodshed. A brother of the deposed Nicholas, Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, is made regent and the Government is in the hands of a self-appointed committee of the Duma. Army officials together with the rank and file, and the Navy as well as some of the great fortresses have joined the movement, which seems practically unanimous.

Many War Activities

British and French have advanced as much as ten miles at various points in northern France and have taken sixty villages, including the important positions at Bapaume and Perrone. The British continue to pursue the fleeing Turkish army to the north of Bagdad, while Russians are pushing down through Persia. The Russians report a continued advance over a considerable portion of the Caucasian front. London was recently raided by Zeppelins but details are withheld except a report from Paris that French gunners had brought down one of the craft at Compeigne. Reports are at hand that three American vessels have been sunk by submarines, with many of the crews unaccounted for. China has severed diplomatic relations with Germany and seized German shipping in the harbors. British statistics show loss of ships by submarine to be two per cent of the total.

Concerning Our Obituary Notices

We realize that there is a valuable element of interest in the items concerning those of our number who pass beyond, but since our membership has increased there is a relatively increasing number of deaths reported for insertion in our columns. We have printed each one sent in as promptly as possible, but from the nature of things we are occasionally compelled to hold some over for later issues. While the announcement appears above the contents in each number, we fear that many of our contributors do not know that we print one hundred words free, but over that number a charge is made of fifty cents for each hundred words or fraction. Ordinarily we must abbreviate many notices that are sent in, but this can be done much better by those who write them. Remittances should accompany the items when over one hundred words in length.

Railroad Strike Threatened

The national organization of trainmen served notice that at seven o'clock Saturday evening, the 17th, a progressive strike would begin with some of the railroads in the East and continue till every railroad in the United States would be crippled. A truce was arranged three hours before the expiration of the time limit, and as we write this the mediation board of three appointed by the President, are to confer with the representatives of the trainmen and railroad officials in an effort to effect a compromise. It is thought the Supreme Court may render its decision as to the constitutionality of the Adamson Law before the negotiations are concluded. If declared constitutional, the railroads have agreed to put the provisions into immediate effect, but if not, the mediators will seek to bring about some agreement that will avert a national strike. The compromise so far effected allows the eight-hour day with pro rata for overtime in freight and yard service.

Many Fail to Cast Ballot

It is asserted by Jonathan Bourne, jr., president of the Republican Publicity Association, that of the 25,000,000 voters in the United States, only 15,000,000 are sufficiently interested to go to the polls and vote. It seems strange indeed that forty per cent of our voters value the privilege of citizenship so lightly that they refuse to exercise their right. More than a right; it is a responsibility not to be easily escaped.

That the Saints might have due respect for this phase of their duties the Lord spoke as early as 1833 to the church, saying that "honest men and wise men" should be upheld. It is worth while to reproduce the paragraph:

And now, verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, It is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justifieth you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these, cometh of evil. I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of evil.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2.

Catholic Prayers

[The following is an advertisement sent to us by a Catholic publishing house and we print it for the information it contains and not that we suppose our readers will have use for the books mentioned.—EDITORS.]

Have you ever used a real mass book, one that contains the prayers of the mass just as the priest reads them at the altar, and one that you can easily follow?

Do you know what it is to feel the inspiration of praying in the words that have been repeated for century after century by countless millions of souls, united in praise and petition?

Just try the prayers of the mass in the latest mass books, either The Mass, Every Day in the Year, or The Mass, Sundays and Holy Days, described in the inclosed circular.

It is fast becoming the rule, instead of the exception, for Catholics to use these prayers in preference to all others, not only at mass, but on other occasions also.

The reason it has not been the rule hitherto is that in no book were these prayers so arranged that all could follow them with the priest. In these books they are so arranged, and with The Mass, Every Day in the Year there is a calendar specifying the very pages for every part of the mass of each day in the year.

You will find these mass books at every Catholic bookseller's. You may examine them conveniently at our own salesroom.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE JEWS

The Jew is an important character in history, and this is true whether we are looking at him in ancient or modern times. In this article it will be our purpose to consider him in the light of prophecy in relation to his past and future.

[We learn by reading Matthew 23: 37 that it had often been our Lord's purpose to gather his people, at that time the Jews, but they were not willing, so it was reserved for some future time when they would be willing to believe on him.

In Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2 it represents Christ as answering the disciples who had asked concerning his coming. In paragraph three he informs them that the Jews would be scattered and gathered again before his coming.

But verily I say unto you that desolation shall come upon this generation as a thief in the night, and this people shall be destroyed and scattered among all nations.

As indicating their gathering we have as follows in the latter part of the paragraph:

And this I have told you concerning Jerusalem, and when that day shall come, shall a remnant be scattered among all nations, but they shall be gathered again; but they shall remain until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

In Jeremiah 16: 14-16 and Ezekiel 37: 21-23, assurance is given that Israel will be gathered again back to their own land. Both of these prophecies were given at a time when the last of the two Israelitish kingdoms was disappearing, from B. C. 600 to 587; the northern kingdom had ceased to exist B. C. 721, and now Judah had gone into Babylonish captivity.

FROM THE BOOK OF MORMON

The Book of Mormon contains some very plain and interesting prophecies on this very interesting question, and in my quotations from it I will use the authorized version. In its preface we are informed of one of its purposes, which is as follows, "And also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ," also Book of Mormon 2: 41, 42. Where italics and emphasis is found, the writer has placed them there to call the reader's attention in a special manner to some important point.

But behold, thus saith the Lord God: when the day cometh that they shall believe on me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance.—2 Nephi 7:12.

Their gathering depends on their belief in Christ.

They were scattered because they would not believe in him.

And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land.—2 Nephi 12:85.

It is plainly stated here by Nephi that those that are scattered shall believe in Christ, and so there need not be a mistake made. He says it is the "Jews." The "also" in the quotation connects the events with the restoration of the Lamanites to a knowledge of Jesus Christ. They are not only going to believe on Christ, but as many as shall, "shall become a delightful people," indicating that they would make great development along lines that make for what is pure, good and lovely.

Jesus when among the Nephites talked very extensively about the restoration of Israel, and said:

And it shall come to pass that the time cometh, when the fullness of my gospel shall be preached unto them and they shall believe in me, that I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and shall pray unto the Father in my name. Then shall their watchmen lift up their voice; and with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye. Then will the Father gather them together again and give unto them Jerusalem for the land of their inheritance.—3 Nephi 9: 69, 70, 71.

HOW THE WORK IS TO BE DONE

In the Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5 we are told the fullness of the gospel is found in the Bible and Book of Mormon, so it will be presented to the Jews from those two books, and Paul says their deliverer is to come out of Zion. (Romans 11: 26.) Their going into bondage was because they rejected the gospel. Their deliverance will come because of their acceptance of it. In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we are informed how the work will be done. (87: 3.) First will be the organization of the school of the prophets, for the preparation of the ministry. Second. The gospel to be preached to the Gentiles first; that is going on now. Third. To the Jews, "and then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in power in convincing the nations, the heathen nations, the house of Joseph, of the gospel of their salvation." That is a program that takes in the whole field of missionary work, when that is done the gospel will have been preached "in all the world for a witness," and we will be ready for the end of the world and the coming of our Lord.

TIME OF THE GENTILES FULFILLED

The time of the expiration of the Gentiles to be specially favored with the gospel is marked in prophecy so exact that it is difficult for a student of scripture and history to make a mistake. Jesus said "and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." (Luke 21:24.) Paul said, "Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." (Romans 11:25.) And then the deliverer would come out of Zion.

From the time Jesus made that statement until now Jerusalem has been trodden down of the Gentiles. At present it is under the rule of one of the most despotic governments of the world, that of Turkey.

The present great war in Europe is a very important event in the unfolding of prophecy in relation to the Jews, and to it we will turn for some light.

And it came to pass that I beheld the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth. And as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me saying, Behold the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the Devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel.—1 Nephi 3:232-236.

RELIGION OF WARRING NATIONS

The nations are grouped as follows, religiously, who are now engaged in the great war. I may be in error in regard to some of the smaller nations, as I am writing from memory, not having access to my own or any other library while I write.

Catholic: Italy, Austria-Hungary, France, Belgium, Portugal, and Rumania.

Greek Catholic: Russia, Serbia, Bulgaria, Greece and Montenegro.

Protestant and Catholic: England, and Germany.

Mohammedanism: Turkey.

All nations engaged in the great war now going on, except Turkey, are Catholic or were at one time. They are children of the great church that at one time held sway in all Europe. There is such an exact agreement between the prophecy and the present war that it does not seem it is possible to be a mistake to apply it to that great event.

ONLY BEGINNING OF RESTORATION OF ISRAEL

A very important thought in connection with its fulfillment is that at that time the work of the Father would commence in restoring Israel to their promised land. Why some writers and preachers interpret these momentous events as the climax of God's great work, when he says it is the time for the greatest events in the world's history to commence, is beyond my comprehension.

When the time of the Gentiles is fulfilled, then the time for Israel will commence, and she must work out her destiny, which cannot be done in a few years, it is to exceed in power and glory her coming out of Egypt. (Jeremiah 16:14-16.)

Before the coming of our Lord, Israel is to become very great, as we learn from what follows:

"But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness."—Doctrine and Covenants 49:5.

Jacob here means Israel, as we can learn by reading Genesis 32:28, and the Jews are the people who are to be important in the restoration of Israel in the latter days.

The term wilderness means the world at large, it is to be in spiritual darkness, that is its present condition, and while in that condition Israel is to be scattered among the people and "flourish," they will be prosperous and successful in all the walks of life. The long night of gloom because of the many years of bitter persecution will have largely passed away and her day of glory will be coming in.

Within the past year I have read several very interesting books about the Jews, their past and present conditions, and for the benefit of the reader I will quote or give summary of the information contained in one, the title is The Conquering Jew, by John Foster Fraser, and published by Funk and Wagnalls Company of New York, price one dollar and fifty cents. It is new, having been published in 1915. It can be obtained through the Herald Publishing House at the same price.

The special cause given as Mr. Fraser's reason for writing the book is given in the first chapter. He is a literary man, and has traveled extensively in foreign lands, seeking information in regard to the economic conditions in the countries traveled in, and in doing so he said, "I began to make casual inquiry how far the Jew was really getting hold of everything. I soon found I was delving in a field of startling facts. And when I accumulated my facts I was led, very naturally, into an inquiry of the why." To the student interested in the Jewish people they will find this book a very interesting and valuable one.

THE JEW'S FAULTS

The Jew is a gambler, he loves the excitement of chance, and in business his shrewdness makes him successful on the stock markets. He prefers sure small gains to uncertain big risks. He will oppress his poor brethren to gain wealth and the oppressed will bear it patiently, waiting for his time to repeat what has been heaped on him. He is not a Christian, so does not observe the Golden Rule. He is seldom found in a labor union. He would not have a chance to underbid his brother. He will resort to many dishonest tricks to cheat his customers and he is just as hard on his friends as others. The oppression that they have been under for many centuries has greatly developed this trait of character.

HIS MORALS AND RELIGION

There is no drunkenness among the Jews. Mothers are well cared for during their childbearing period. There are not nearly as many Jewish women in proportion to Christian women that work. "They are virtuous, frugal, temperate; they love their homes and are the best of parents."

"The Jew is frugal and temperate. The American Jew sells whisky to the Gentile, but he does not drink it himself."

"Wherever the Jews are admitted to the freedom of nations the inclination is to break from the faith."

"The secession of the modern Jew from the traditions and pious habits and customs of his forefathers is deplored by his coreligionists of more spiritual temperament."

HIS PERSECUTIONS

It is not necessary to go into any detailed account of his persecutions, the numerous books that record those sad events tell tales of horror that sicken the reader. All the nations of Europe have at some time been guilty of the most abominable crimes against them. Of late years Russia has been the most cruel in her treatment of them. In Austria, Rumania and Spain they are not openly persecuted, but the laws against them are very severe. In all nations there is in some measure social ostracism, depending on the degree of enlightenment among the people, and because of this they often change their names to endeavor to hide from the public the race to which they belong. They are found in practically all nations, the greatest number being in Russia, six million, and the United States, two million, and of the latter number one million are in New York, most of them in the city of that name.

MARRIAGE

Mixed marriages are on the increase both in this country and Europe, as he breaks away from the religion of his fathers it is more common to marry Christians. It is more common for Christian men to marry Jewish women than for Jewish men to marry Christian women. In Europe the mixed marriage will vary in the different countries from one third to one half.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

In music and the drama the Jew is the leader. Sarah Bernhardt is a Jewess. "Three of the best known English playwrights—Sir Arthur Pinero, Israel Zangwill, and Alfred Sutro—are Jews.

"It is almost inconceivable the debt which the world owes the Jews in music."

LITERATURE

In America and Europe many of the great newspapers are owned by Jews, or have them on the editorial staff, the Jewish Encyclopedia was projected by Doctor Isadore Singer, a Jew, and is considered the greatest work of reference in any language.

CHARITIES

In America the benevolent work of the Jew is great. It is seldom that the poor among them receive outside help. There are six hundred institutions in the United States to care for their unfortunate and needy ones. A great amount of money is given to aid the Jewish people of Jerusalem, although he is a poor farmer, much is being done to try to make him a good one.

IN PUBLIC LIFE

He is prominent in public life everywhere in the world, especially in England and America. Benjamin Disraeli rose to the dignity of prime minister in England. The present lord chief justice of England is a Jew. There are Jews in the House of Lords and in the House of Commons. There have been five Jews who held the office of lord mayor of London. In the British possessions of South Africa, Canada and Australia, many of the important civil offices are held by Jews. One half of the percentage of the population of Great Britain are Jews, and of the men who achieve distinction six per cent are Jews. Two of the greatest Socialists of continental Europe are Jews, Karl Marx and Ferdinand Lassalle. In France three Jews have held the important office of minister in the cabinet of the President, and many of the generals, colonels, and majors are Jews. The office of medical director in the Austrian army has been held by a Jew. Columbus was part Jew from his mother's side. Louis de Santangel who advanced the money to fit out Columbus's expedition was a Jew, the story of Queen Isabelle selling her jewels was a later invention. "And there is good ground for believing it was a Jew, Louis de Torres, who was the first European to set foot on American soil."

In the several States and the National Government there are many of the important offices held by Jews. There are twenty-four who are members of Congress, and one an associate justice in the Supreme Court of the United States, Louis Brandeis. Under both Democratic and Republican administrations Jews are in the diplomatic and consular service.

BUSINESS

"Remember that all modern commercial enterprise, represented by joint stock banks, trusts, syndicates, stock speculation, even the great department stores, were originated by Jews." "It may be news, but investigation provides the truth, that the astounding rise of the United States is largely due to the Jews."

"I know of no country—and I have roamed the world much—where the unfettered Jew, with his wits in contest with the wits of other people, does not get ahead."

I read some time ago an example of Jewish shrewdness in business and will give it in substance:

Nathan Rothschild was a banker in London at the time Great Britain was engaged in war with Napoleon and while the battle of Waterloo was being fought, Mr. Rothschild was in a stone building safe from harm, and his horse with him, where he could see the battle going on, and in the evening when he saw Napoleon was defeated he mounted his horse and rode to the English Channel and on arriving there he paid a good sum of money to the boatmen to take him over, and then he hastened to London. He found the people in a gloomy condition, fearing that Napoleon might win, and all business was in a deplorable condition. Stock on the exchange had gone very low. He said nothing about the battle, but proceeded to buy all the stock that was for sale and when the courier from Wellington arrived on the 21st or 22d with the news of victory, stock went back to its normal condition, and Mr. Rothschild had made ten million dollars.

"Indeed, I could make a grand tour of the United States, and it is doubtful if there would be a single place where the Jews were not making good." The clothing business of the United States for the male population is in the hands of the Jews and it amounts to six hundred million dollars per year. The wheat trade of Argentina, South America, is controlled by four Jews. Among the men who control the beef markets we have the following names who are Jews, Sulzberger, Nelson Morris, and Schwarzchild. And what is true of the United States is largely so of Europe, where he does not control he is a prominent factor.

BANKING

The precious metals, silver and gold, are controlled by the Jews. They are the great bankers of the world, business men, the great railroad companies, the nations of all the world must go to him if they want money. The great banking company of New York, Kuhn, Loeb and Company, are Jews, and Paul Warburg, of that firm, was selected to head the committee of five appointed by President Wilson to put in operation our present system of banking.

EDUCATION

The following paragraphs are taken verbatim from the book:

The Jewish workman will starve himself so that his children will be well-fed, be well-clad, and have a superior education, and in my investigation in schools I have never ceased to be surprised at the quickness of Jewish compared with their Gentile companions.

Joseph Wertheimer, who devised the kindergarten as a definite system of education, was a Jew. It was a Russian Jew, Doctor Zamenhof, who invented Esperanto. The Jews have endowed universities, and left vast sums for the advance of education.

A Jewish woman, Miss Lillian Wald, started one of the most important developments of the modern educational system—the work done by nurses in the public schools. In 1902 she obtained the consent of the boards of health to begin the experiment with one of her settlement nurses. Today there are one hundred and forty school nurses in New York, in what is called the department of child hygiene, and the movement has spread to many American cities.

Remember always that the young Jew is ravenous for knowledge. The proportionate attendance of Jewish children at school is far ahead of that of their Gentile little friends.

One half of the students in Columbia University and three quarters of the under-graduates in the College of the City of New York are Jews.

The Jews in Germany form only one per cent of the total population, though they furnish more than six per cent of the professors and private teachers, both in the faculties of law and philosophy, and ten per cent of those in the faculty of medicine.

MEDICINE

In America, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia many of the most eminent physicians, anatomists, pathologists and bacteriologists are Jews.

LAW

"In the whole range of the arts, as well as in law and literature, the number of Jews is out of proportion to their number in the general population."

"Many of the King's counsel in England are Jews. The greatest international lawyers of modern times—Jellinck in Germany, Lyon-Caen in France, and Asser in Holland—are Jews."

In America we have Leventritt and Hirschberg, of the Supreme Court of New York, and Sulzberger, of Philadelphia, and Louis Brandeis of the Supreme Court of the United States.

IN EVERYTHING

"Everywhere the Jew wins." Thus wherever the Jew goes though the contest be long; he wins.

"In all the history of his race the Jew never occupied so commanding a position in the world as he does to-day."

IN CONCLUSION

The above are only a few of the many interesting things contained in the book about God's dispersed but chosen people. Standing alone they may seem to have but little value, but associated with the Lord's promises to them it reveals a wonderful future for them, and perhaps some of the events are very near. When we associate what the above reveals him to be, while he is a disbeliever in Jesus Christ, what will he be when he believes in him, and becomes "a delightful people." (2 Nephi 12: 86.)

In receiving the gospel he will become pure in heart, covetousness, and selfishness will be eliminated from his life, and being filled with love for his Redeemer and his brethren, and with the wealth of the world in his possession; and being at the head in all the learned professions, the future is a glorious one for him after the long night of darkness. Being a child of God, through obedience to the gospel he will not only build up Jerusalem, but will be among the faithful ones that will help build up Zion.

EDWARD RANNIE.

AFTER GRACELAND, WHAT?

Why do not more of the young people of our church take advantage of the opportunity offered by their State for a higher education and attend a State university, State college, or normal school after completing their junior college work at Graceland? From childhood the value of an education has been impressed upon their minds by their parents. The precept and example of our leaders strongly encourage higher education. The church is proud to have many intellectual and college bred men and women among its members.

The securing of an education requires sacrifice and labor on the part of the parents and particularly on the part of the students themselves. Yet it is no exaggeration to say that a university education is within the reach of every boy and girl of our church. More than that, it is urged upon them as a valuable preparation for efficient service on broad lines and as one of the greatest means of strengthening the influence and work of the church. The matter of education lies with the young people themselves. It is simply a question of whether they are willing to devote enough of their youth to work and study to prepare themselves to fully appreciate and meet the problems of later life. The demands are ever and increasingly for the best and the fittest. The education of the last generation will not do for to-day. It is a serious mistake when a young person decides that he will be content to face the world without the best education possible for him.

Bulletin No. 6 of the United States Bureau of Education, 1916, shows the amount that the various States are expending in order that their young men and women may have the best of training. The various States of the Middle West pay each year for the cost of instruction per student at state educational institutions from $350 to $524. With all of the bulletins and advertisements and letters sent out, can you not be made to feel that your State wants to do for you what it is doing for thousands of others? Why not take advantage of its generous offer?

Why do we have the idea that the university is so far beyond the reach of most of us, or that it is an institution only for the young of well-to-do families, or that it requires a different social life from what we would lead at home? The college town is a center for intellectual broadening and affords many valuable lectures and concerts which would not be accessible to most of us at any other place. It also offers a wider acquaintanceship in the world of people. In these respects the social life is different. But university circles are open to all people, without regard to wealth, who are earnest enough in their desire for an education to work for it. You will be surprised to know that sixty-six per cent of the men at the State University of Iowa this year are furnishing part or all of their support. It is for this type of student that Iowa and other States are spending so many dollars. The claim is often made that the school work of the self-supporting students is better than that of students who rely upon the support of their parents. An enthusiastic, energetic student finds it possible to earn enough money during the summers and winters to enable him to carry through a four-year course. If he does encounter difficulty in the attempt, there is available the scholarship fund for deserving students. At least four boys of our church have already earned these scholarships to help them out.

As a church are we going to be able to meet the conditions and problems of a progressive world, if we do not progress with it? The advantages of the educated man and the extent of his influence beyond that of an uneducated man are recognized by all. And it is not only because we have to cope with an intelligent wide-awake world that we advocate education, but because we need this education for our own advancement. We are not efficient stewards if we do not make use of the opportunities to fit ourselves for the broadest influence and greatest service.

What does this higher education offer to the church directly? The colleges with their thousands of young enthusiasts are the best places in the world for religious organization and study. The other churches are recognizing this, and each year brings added efforts for religious work among the students of the various denominations. In many of the colleges this work is organized under the leadership of a "student pastor." This pastor is appointed and supported by the synod or conference of his church to look after the social and religious life of the students of that particular denomination at the university. The value to the students and to the church of having such a live young leader to keep in touch with them during the critical years when they are getting their information and forming their opinions on so many of the important problems of life cannot be overestimated. Where among all the educational institutions of our country is there a Latter Day Saint student pastor? With a group of the young people of the church to support him, the right sort of a student pastor might find a very profitable field for missionary work. At the same time he could be doing an invaluable service to the young people of church families, and be securing for himself the benefits of advanced study. The need for the leadership of such a student pastor is felt this year at the University of Iowa where there is a group of twenty-six members of the church. The university is trying to meet the needs of religious workers, and offers many courses for students wishing this line of work. It is only right that in such a community the gospel as our church teaches it should be made accessible to the groups of questioning young people in the right way.

In conclusion then, why can we not unite in doubling our efforts for our own Graceland College in the good work it is doing for our young people, and why cannot every student now attending Graceland continue until he earns the university education due him? The final results would certainly be broader and better educated young people, more efficient workers for our church, the spreading of our influence, and progress individually and as an organization.

THE DEATH OF THE APOSTLES

The thought in the mind of the writer is not to show the conclusiveness of the caption but the rather to call attention to the danger of making statements not borne out by the facts of history. For instance: If we have no other evidence than "It is said," it is, to say the least, very inconclusive and should never be used as a statement of fact. Having made some research relating to the death of the apostles it is here presented for what it is worth, both in the way of public discussion and personal benefit.

Taking these apostles in the order named by Matthew, we learn as follows:

PETER

Kitto in his Illustrated History of the Bible, pages 618, 619, says with reference to both Peter and Paul:

When the two apostles had been in confinement several months, the cruel Nero returned from Greece, and entered his palace at Rome in great triumph. Soon after his return it was ultimately resolved that the two apostles should be put to death. Peter, as a Jew and foreigner, was sentenced to be crucified; and Paul, as a Roman citizen, to be beheaded. On the 29th of June (as it is generally supposed) these sentences were put in execution. Peter, after being first who came down from heaven to ransom mankind from the prison, and led to the top of the Vatican mount, near the Tiber, where he was sentenced to surrender up his life on the cross. On his arrival at the place of execution, he begged the favor of the officers that he might not be crucified in the common manner, but with his head downward, thinking himself unworthy to suffer in the same posture in which his Lord and Master had suffered before him. This request was accordingly complied with; and in this manner did the great Apostle Peter resign his soul into the hands of him who came down from heaven to ransom mankind from destruction, and open for them the gates of the heavenly Canaan.

Though Doctor Kitto is thus positive that Peter was at Rome and there suffered martyrdom, Faussett in his Bible Cyclopaedia, page 562, says: "All the authority of Acts and epistle to the Romans and 1 and 2 Peter is against Peter having been at Rome previous to Paul's first imprisonment, or during the two years' duration." After citing other epistles of Paul to disprove such thought, he cites 2 Timothy to show that Peter was not in Rome during Paul's second imprisonment, hence the statement of Eusebius, (Chronicon, iii.) "that Peter went to Rome A. D. 42 and stayed twenty years is impossible, as those scriptures never mention him." Faussett then quotes from Jerome (Script. Eccl., i.,) who claims that Peter went to Rome and resided there for twenty-five years as bishop and was finally crucified with his head downward. "He may have been at the very end of his life," says Faussett, "at Rome after Paul's death, and been imprisoned in the Mamertine dungeon, crucified on the Janiculum on the height of Saint Pietro in Montorio, and buried where the altar of Saint Peter's now is. But all is conjecture." "The whole tradition" he says, "of Peter's and Paul's association in death is probably due to their connection in life as the main founders of the Christian church." So it would seem from this author that at best we have but tradition!

In his Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 732, Sanford says of Peter:

He figures conspicuously, indeed, in ecclesiastical tradition and legend, but from this source little that is trustworthy can be gathered beyond the fact, perhaps, that he finished his career by martyrdom in the city of Rome.

Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible, page 728, has this to say:

The time and manner of the apostle's martyrdom are less certain. The early writers imply, or distinctly state, that he suffered at or about the same time with Paul, and in the Neronian persecution. All agree that he was crucified. Origen says that at his own request he was crucified with his head downwards. Thus closes the apostle's life.

The United Editors' Encyclopedia and Dictionary, volume 28, calls to notice the fact that the last incident of Peter's life as shown by the Scriptures (Acts 15) was his presence in the Jerusalem council, and then says: "Of his subsequent career, our only knowledge is derived from tradition." Then after citing numerous authors, both Protestant and Catholic, says, "The evidence on both sides seems nearly evenly balanced," and concludes with this: "His martyrdom is fixed, with much probability, in 66, and is supposed to have been at the same time and place with that of the Apostle Paul." The tradition as "(preserved by Eusebius from Origen)" is then cited as to the manner of Peter's death—with the head downward.

The New Standard Dictionary says, "According to tradition he was bishop first at Antioch and then at Rome, where he was crucified about A. D. 46." It is thus clearly established that there is a striking divergence of conclusion. If the New Standard is right as to the time of his death then it is positively certain that he could not have been in Rome long, if at all, for the "Council of Jerusalem" was in 46 A. D., and the New Testament is clear in statement that he was present and made a talk in his own defense in that council.

ANDREW

As to the death of this apostle we are again face to face with tradition. But the above authorities seem quite agreed that such tradition fixes his death as having occurred at a date unknown, with the exception of the Editors' Encyclopedia, volume 2, which places it A. D. 62 or 70. This apostle is the patron saint of Scotland and his day in the calendar is November 30, supposed to be the day of his death. All seem to be agreed that he died on an X-shaped cross, and tradition has it that he rejoiced in the opportunity of dying on the cross, made sacred to him by his Master having been thus martyred.

JAMES, THE BROTHER OF JOHN

Of this apostle, Smith, in his Bible Dictionary, says: "This is the only one of the apostles of whose life and death we can write with certainty." All Bible students are well aware that his death was by the sword as commanded by Herod (Acts 12: 1, 2). Smith says it occurred in 44 A. D. It is related by Kitto that the officer who guarded him becoming converted by him was beheaded with him. The authorities already quoted agree as to the time of his death, the statement of the encyclopedia being worthy of note:

As this was the first of the apostles to suffer martyrdom, so is he the only one of them the manner of whose death is historically certain. All that is commonly believed concerning the others rests on tradition—some of it trustworthy, but much of it uncertain and vague.

JOHN "THE BELOVED"

Of the death of this apostle the Editors' Encyclopedia says:

The dates assigned to this event range from A. D. 89 to 120, and in any case he must have long survived his brother apostles. It is believed that he was the only one of the Lord's apostles who died a natural death.

Faussett's Bible Cyclopedia, page 385; "Tertullian's story of his being cast into boiling oil at Rome and coming forth unhurt is improbable; none else records it; the punishment was one unheard of at Rome."

Sanford's Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 485, says that he occupied as bishop of Ephesus "till his death, which is vaguely conjectured to have taken place somewhere between 89 and 120 A. D."

Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible, page 423, says; "The very time of his death lies within the region of conjecture rather than of history," and that "the result of all this accumulation of apocryphal material is, from one point of view, disappointing enough."

Kitto's History of the Bible, page 627, is more definite as to his death: "His remains were deposited in the city of Ephesus." "Being nearly a hundred years of age at the time of his death."

PHILIP

Of his death Kitto's History of the Bible, page 629, says:

They accordingly ordered him to be seized, and thrown into prison, whence, after being severely scourged, and put to death, the manner of which, according to some, was by being hanged against a pillar, and, according to others, by crucifixion. . . . The martyrdom of Saint Philip happened about eight years after that of Saint James the Great.

In Smith's Dictionary of the Bible there is no account of his death, while Sanford's Cyclopaedia of Religious Knowledge, page 735, merely says: "According to tradition he preached in Phrygia, and died at Hierapolis." Faussett is silent as to his death. The Editors' Encyclopedia says: "The traditions of the after life of the apostle at Hierapolis in Phrygia and his burial there, remain unconfirmed."

BARTHOLOMEW

The authors quoted from thus far seem to agree that this man was also called Nathaniel, but only Kitto and Smith have anything to say with reference to his death. The former, page 630, says: "The magistrates were so incensed against him, that they prevailed on the governor to order him to be put to death, which was accordingly done with the most distinguished cruelty." Smith, page 99, says: "Some allot Armenia to him as his mission field, and report him to have been there flayed alive and then crucified with his head downwards.."

THOMAS, CALLED DIDYMUS

According to Kitto's Illustrated History of the Bible, page 631, this apostle did a great work in the city of Malipur, near the mouth of the Ganges, arousing the ire of the Brahmans to the extent that as "he was at prayer, they first threw at him a shower of darts, after which one of the priests ran him through the body with a lance. His corpse was taken up by his disciples, and buried in the church he had caused to be erected."

Faussett makes no mention of his death, while Smith in his Dictionary of the Bible, page 947, tells us:

The earlier traditions, as believed in the fourth century, represent him as preaching in Parthia or Persia, and as finally buried at Edessa. The later traditions carry him farther east. His martyrdom (whether in Persia or India) is said to have been occasioned by a lance, and is commemorated by the Latin church on December 21, by the Greek Church on October 6, and by the Indians on July 1.

Sanford's Cyclopaedia of Religious Knowledge, page 907, says:

"Gregory Nazianzen speaks of his preaching in India where, according to a later tradition, he suffered death at the king's command, by being pierced with lances." If the statement in Smith's Dictionary is true, that he converted the prince of Malipur, his death might have been the result of the king's command. The Editors' Encyclopedia says that tradition has it that he suffered martyrdom in India.

MATTHEW

Sanford's Cyclopaedia of Religious Knowledge, page 580, says that tradition has it that he preached finally in Ethiopia, India and Parthia, "In which last country he is said to have suffered martyrdom for the faith." Kitto in his Illustrated History of the Bible says: "He suffered martyrdom in a city called Nadabar in Ethiopia; but the particular manner of his death is not certainly known, though it is the generally conceived opinion that he was slain with a halberd. His martyrdom is commemorated by the church on the 21st of September." Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible, page 531, in speaking of his missionary work has it about right when he says, "Nothing whatever is really known." Of his death he says, "Heracleon; the disciple of Valentinus, which Clement, Origen, and Tertullian seem to accept: the tradition that he died a martyr, be it true or false, came in afterwards." Faussett is silent in the matter.

JAMES THE SON OF ALPHEUS

Historically known as "James the Less." But whether he and "James the brother of the Lord" are one is the question not likely to be settled. The New Standard Dictionary says there were three James's but on this point neither Smith, Faussett, Kitto nor Sanford agree with the New Standard, but rather hold the opinion that there was but the one James, though the two designations, and all these agree that his death was ordered by the Sanhedrin to be thrown headlong from the battlements of the temple. This not killing him, he was stoned to death while in the act of praying for their forgiveness. This occurred about 69 A. D.

JUDAS OR JUDE, LEBBAEUS OR THADDAEUS

Though called Thaddaeus by Matthew he seems to have been fortunate or unfortunate, as the case may be, enough to have had all these names, but of either his life or death but little seems to be known. Sanford in his Cyclopaedia of Religious Knowledge, page 495, says: "Tradition is contradictory. According to Abdias he preached in Persia, and was martyred there, while Nicephorus says he died a natural death at Edessa." Faussett makes no mention of his death, while Kitto agrees with Sanford, using these significant words; "He died in peace." Smith says nothing of his death.

SIMON THE CANAANITE

Smith is silent as to his death, while Faussett in his Bible Cyclopaedia, page 653, says "He was martyred in his one hundred and twentieth year, under Trajan, A. D. 107." According to Kitto the word Canaanite is derived from the "Syriac word Kanaan, by which the Jewish sect or faction of 'the Zealots' was designated. . . . The Greek equivalent is Zelotes, and this 6: 15; Acts 1: 13 has correctly preserved." This author, after telling of Simon converting great multitudes in Britain, where he sustained "the greatest hardships and persecutions," says: he was at last crucified, and buried in some part of the island, but the exact place where is unknown."

Sanford makes no mention of his death, neither does the encyclopedia already quoted.

JUDAS ISCARIOT

For an account of the manner of his death we do not need to go beyond the New Testament. Sanford in his Cyclopaedia of Religious Knowledge, page 495, contents himself by quoting from Encyclopedia Britannica, the closing part of which is here quoted: "In ecclesiastical legends and in sacred art Judas Iscariot has taken a prominent place, being generally treated as the very incarnation of treachery, ingratitude, and impiety."

MATTHIAS

Kitto's Illustrated History of the Bible, page 633, has this to say:

From Judea he traveled into other countries, and, proceeding eastward, came at length to Ethiopia. Here he likewise made many converts; but the inhabitants in general being of a fierce and untractable temper, resolved to take away his life, which they effected by stoning him, and then severing his head from his body.

Neither Faussett, Sanford nor Smith mentions either the time or manner of his death.

PAUL

This narrative would hardly be complete without mentioning this apostle. And shall there be desire on the part of any to learn from these authors as to the other apostles, such as Barnabas, Timothy, etc., I will be but pleased to furnish such for HERALD readers. Kitto, page 619, says:

Paul was conducted to a place on the road to Ostia, about three miles from Rome, in order to undergo the punishment pronounced against him by the cruel Nero. In his way he converted three of the soldiers who were sent to guard him to his execution, and who, within a few days after, died martyrs themselves. As soon as Paul arrived at the place of execution, he knelt down, and after praying for some time with great fervency, cheerfully gave up his neck to the fatal stroke; quitting this vale of misery in hopes of passing into the blissful regions of immortality, to the kingdom of his beloved Master, the great Redeemer of the human race.

Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible says, page 713, "Eusebius himself entirely adopts the tradition that Paul was beheaded under Nero at Rome." Sanford does not mention his death. Faussett merely says "His death was in 67 (Eusebius) or 68 (Jerome)."

Shall these accounts be of any value to the ministry or others the writer will be well repaid for the effort made in the research. J. W. WIGHT.

Read the Proposed Amendments

We desire to call the attention of the sisters to the proposed revision of the constitution and by-laws of the auxiliary. It is rather to be regretted that it was considered necessary to revise so soon after adopting the one of last year, but its inadequacies have been forced upon the attention of the executive officers this year, and it was thought best to correct, as soon as possible, that which has been found faulty or lacking. Please examine it very, very carefully, comparing it with the one found in the Year Book, and be prepared to vote intelligently upon it, when it shall come up for action at the General Convention in April.

It will be seen that the whole thing has been simplified, and the constitutions and by-laws for district (or stake) and local societies done away with. This leaves more freedom for locals to act in accordance with the peculiar needs of their own communities, although none who have lately re-organized under the rules adopted last spring as found in the Year Book, will find it at all necessary to organize again, if they have found those rules adequate, and adaptable to their needs. Please see if it meets your idea of the needs of the association.

Social Service Series--Chapter 6

WHAT INTOXICATING LIQUORS DO FOR A COMMUNITY

The Two Glasses

There sat two glasses filled to the brim,
On a rich man's table, rim to rim;
One was ruddy, and red as blood,
And one as clear as the crystal flood.
Said the glass of wine to his paler brother,
"Let us tell tales of the past to each other;
I can tell of banquet, and revel, and mirth,
Where I was king or I ruled in might,
And the proudest and grandest souls on earth
Fell under my touch as though struck with blight!
From the heads of kings I have torn the crown;
From the heights of fame I have hurled men down.
I have blasted many an honored name;
I have taken virtue and given shame;
I have tempted the youth with a taste,
That has made his future a barren waste,
Far greater than any king am I,
Or, than any army beneath the sky.
I have made the arms of the ruler flee,
And the shrieks of the lost were sweet to me.
Fame, strength, wealth, genius before me fall,
And my height and power are over all!
Ho, ho—pale brother," said the wine,
"Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?"

Said the water glass, "I cannot boast
Of a king dethroned, or a murdered host;
But I can tell of hearts that were sad,
By my crystal drops made bright and glad;
Of hands I have cooled and souls I have saved;
Of thirst I have quenched and brows I have laved;
I have leaped through the valley; dashed down the mountain,
Slept in the sunshine and dripped from the fountain;

I have burst my cloud fetters and dropped from the sky,
And everywhere gladdened the prospect and eye.
I have eased the hot forehead of fever and pain,
I have made the parched meadows grow fertile with grain;

I can tell of the powerful wheel of the mill
That ground out the flour, and turned at my will.
I can tell of manhood debased by you
That I have uplifted and crowned anew.
I cheer, I help, I strengthen and aid:
I gladden the heart of man and of maid;
I set the wine-chained and captive free,
And all are better for knowing me."

These are the tales they told each other—
The glass of wine and its paler brother—
As they sat together, filled to the brim,
On a rich man's table, rim to rim.

Whereas, the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is productive of pauperism, degradation, crime and disease, it is the duty of the social service worker to discourage it, producing as it does, more evil than good.

It has been proven that the sober soldier is the efficient soldier. Further it has been found, through investigation, that intoxicating liquor does the following for the community:

"It fills men's stomachs with poison;
"It fills jails with drunkards;
"It fills penitentiaries with criminals;
"It fills poorhouses with paupers;
"It fills hospitals with sick and injured;
"It fills the asylums with insane;
"It fills our streets with loafers;
"It fills homes with sorrow;
"It fills husbands, wives, and children with want;
"It fills court calendars with cases;
"It fills property records with mortgages;
"It fills politicians with fear;
"It fills graves with the dead."

Yes, it is quite true that intoxicating drink will do all of these things and the pitiful condition of disease can often be traced back to the first drink, from which the mind became highly stimulated, resulting in immoral acts, the seat of infection.

It is my personal experience, that the medical profession does not call for liquor to any amount or great advantage. Alcohol has some use as a drug, but like many other drugs, is so powerful in its action as to render its use extremely dangerous. It has, therefore, no appreciable place in the armamentarium of the modern physician.

"His last cent being spent for a drink of liquor, a laborer fell into the river as he was looking for a warm place to sleep. He was fished out of the icy waters, and sent to the county hospital." Not an uncommon news item!

In regard to the suffering due to intoxicants, we have three degrees, all more or less preventable: "That which is due to the individual, solely and directly caused by his own acts; that which is caused by the wrongdoing of other individuals; and that which is caused by the wrongdoings of society."

Thousands of innocent victims of this drink folly of humanity's, are massed into pitiful conditions of poverty, sickness, woe and want. The social worker cannot stop the sale of intoxicants, but it is her duty and her privilege to do what she can to educate the individual against their use.

H. BERENICE RUSSELL.

A Very Active Department

A report reaches us of the educational work undertaken in the Council Bluffs auxiliary, together with a poem by Sister Dempsey, read at one of their successful meetings, the reading of which may arouse others to a sense of the importance of this branch of the work. Shortly after reunion last fall, they organized two study classes, one for Bible study, and the other a class in mothers' and teachers' problems. The former has been well attended, and is led by Sister Rachel Self, in a very thorough and efficient manner. The latter class has had harder pulling, but several new members have now come in, and more interest is aroused. They are using as a textbook, Child Study and Child Training, by William B. Forbush, as recommended in the Year Book, which is a text considered among the best on the subject.

Recently they were favored with a lecture by Doctor Rose Rice, a practicing physician of their city, who talked on "Heredity and environment." They advertised this lecture in the city papers, and quite a number of strangers attended, who commented very favorably on the good program and the grand work they are trying to do. They had musical numbers and readings, and an explanation of the work and aims of the class by the leader, Sister Grace Prouty, who brought out in a pleasing and convincing manner many reasons why all should be interested in child study. The poem by Sister Dempsey was also read, and served to impress the importance of this work. There are several mothers' clubs in the city, but they are more in the nature of activity clubs, and do not take up the fundamental and systematic study of child life and its guidance. Our workers hope to combine the two lines some day. The reporter, Sister Olive McLean, superintendent educational department, closes with a poem from which she has received much strength and encouragement.

"Nothing at all is easy in life,
Nothing worth while can be done with ease;
A stern, brave battle is that of strife,
On the hills of blue, or the conquering seas!

"Nothing is easy to do that's great
With lofty purpose and art supreme,
Toil and struggle, and grief and care—
Nothing in life is a moment's dream!

"Nothing one does, if he does it well,
Is easy and simple and quick and light;
The task of life is a difficult task
To do it well, and to do it right!

"Nothing comes easy; the strife is hard,
But the thing worth doing—ah! that repays
For the ache and grief, the dust and the grime,
And the infinite pain of toiling days!"

Notice of the Proposed Amendments to the Constitution and By-Laws of the Woman's Auxiliary

To be considered at the convention in Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1917.

According to constitutional provision the required notice has been given in the HERALD of March 7, 1917.

The proposed amendments to the present constitution and by-laws for the government of the general organization of the Woman's Auxiliary are as follows:

To amend by striking out article 2 and inserting in lieu thereof, the following—

ARTICLE 2—OBJECT

Its object shall be to study the welfare of the home, child, community, school and church; to encourage the organization of women into classes, etc., that they may better prepare themselves to cooperate in all work tending toward the building up of Zion.

To amend by striking out article 3 and inserting in lieu thereof the following—

ARTICLE 3—MEMBERSHIP

Any club, circle, class, etc., organized with the above object in view, or any woman so interested, may become members by paying the sum hereinafter provided.

To amend by striking out article 4 and inserting in lieu thereof, the following—

ARTICLE 4—ORGANIZATION

The officers of this organization shall be: president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and historian, to be elected annually at a meeting of this association at such time and place as shall be decided upon. The manner of election shall be determined by the vote of the general assembly.

In case of death or resignation the vacancy shall be filled by appointment agreed upon by a majority of the executive committee.

To amend by striking out article 5 and inserting in lieu thereof, the following—

ARTICLE 5—FINANCE

There shall be an annual assessment of ten cents per member, due and payable to the general treasurer at the first of each year.

To amend article 6, section 1, by striking out the words "General" and "districts or stakes and locals," making the section read as follows:

The church book of rules shall be authority on all questions of parliamentary usage in the association.

To further amend article 6 by striking out of section 2 the word "one" and inserting the word "three" making the section read as follows—

This constitution may be amended by a two thirds vote at any general convention, provided not less than three months' notice of the proposed changes shall have been published in the press columns of the association.

To further amend the constitution by striking out and eliminating the entire provision for constitution and by-laws governing districts, or stakes, and locals as contained in the present constitution and by-laws as printed in the Year Book.

The proposed amendments to the by-laws of the general association have been printed in the HERALD of March 7, 1917. The by-laws may be amended at any annual meeting of the general association without previous notice, by two thirds majority vote.

A little patience, and the fog is past,
After the sorrow of the ebbing tide,
The singing floods return in joy at last.
For darkness passes; storms shall not abide.

The night is long and the pain weighs heavily,
But God will hold his world above despair.
Look to the east, where up the lurid sky
The morning climbs! The day shall yet be fair.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Experiences With the Mormons in the Society Islands

I must write you of my experiences with the Mormons at this place. I left Papeete, Tahiti, July 6, bound for the island of Hikueru, which is a pearl diving island, the season set apart for that work being from August 1, to December 1. This being one of the best diving islands, a big attendance was expected. About eight hundred came. It is also a Mormon stronghold, if it may be said that they have any stronghold. It is my experience that their hold may easily be broken, or at least considerably weakened in any respectable community. About two hundred native Mormons and nine foreign missionaries put in their appearance, as against about forty of our people and one foreign missionary. It was evident to me that their policy and the manner of their campaign was previously mapped out and from it they did not intend to deviate. It is evident they have profited by observance of the Catholic policy. They had built a number of missionary houses conveniently situated among the people. Their own people's houses were in clusters with a missionary house in the midst, which missionary was a constant guard; also if there was a likely spot among any other class of people there was he also to be found.

With all their missionaries they did not make much effort to reach the people through preaching, preferring rather to depend on the house to house canvass. The natives often asked me what was the work of so many missionaries; they said they could scarcely look out on the street but they could see a Mormon missionary. Neither are those missionaries slow to misrepresent us, saying that the Reorganization is leaving Independence: that all our houses are going to rack and ruin: that there are more Mormons in Independence than Josephites, etc. Thus they debase us and exalt themselves; immortalizing Brigham Young, etc., and at last leaving the native with the impression that if he wants salvation he should climb into the Mormon band wagon. They do not hesitate to slander Joseph Smith the martyr, saying that he practiced polygamy, celestial marriage, etc. Christ the master as Joseph the servant is similarly charged by them. Their president of the mission is said to speak by the Holy Ghost. The natives say he trembles when he does so.

He called me into his house one day and plied me with questions so fast that I had no chance to answer. As we were on the subject of plurality of gods, I told him that he should beware how he taught contrary to that which was written, for God is no respecter of persons and that under similar conditions God would answer him as he did Zeezrom; whereupon he delivered a prophecy, stating that the Reorganization was soon to go to pieces, and that the greater portion of the members would go to the Mormons, and that meant in the whole world. He also said that of all the people in the world we, the Reorganization, were the meanest, the Catholics being far ahead of us.

As a land force I was no match for them, as it was impossible for me to visit all the houses in a day that they had, to straighten up their misrepresentations, so I proposed to drag them out before the people. This I found quite difficult. I began, not with attack, but with diplomacy, inviting them out to our meetings, when topics were placed on the blackboard and all were invited to talk to the question. This is an old custom and met with the approval of the native Mormons but not the foreign missionaries. The natives were soon stopped from attending or taking part in our meetings.

Thus those missionaries would neither enter nor permit those that were entering to enter. Thus every chance to preach the gospel to them was closed. I then concluded to carry the war into Africa, as it were, and accordingly typed a number of copies of the proposition below and carried it among them and distributed them.

"THE PLURALITY OF GODS AND THE PLURALITY OF WOMEN

"My Mormon friends, I write these propositions to you because your books and your missionaries teach the propositions written above: and it is not only three gods that they teach, but they teach that there are many true gods. You apply the propositions below to the propositions above.

"Proposition 1. 2 Nephi 29: 8, 9. (Lamoni Edition 2 Nephi 12: 60.) Verse 8 says, 'Wherefore I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another.' Verse 9 says, 'And I do this that I may prove that I am the same yesterday, today, and forever.' You apply this to Jacob 2: 27. (Lamoni Edition 2: 36.)

"Proposition 2. 1 Nephi 15: 14. (Lamoni Edition 1 Nephi 4: 19.) Question on the verse: What gospel should show them how to come to him and be saved? The answer is in the verse, (18): 'The gospel that was ministered to their fathers by him.' What was that gospel? It is found in Jacob 2: 27. (Lamoni Edition, verse 36.)

"Proposition 3. 2 Nephi 3: 12. (Lamoni Edition 2 Nephi 2: 21.) You teach polygamy; I teach monogamy: whose is the mistake? Can he who is mistaken permit the writing of the seed of Joseph (of Egypt) to correct him? Here is that correction: Jacob 2: 27. (Lamoni Edition, verse 36.)

"Proposition 4. Nephi 3: 19. (Lamoni Edition 2: 38.) The verse says: 'And the words which he shall write, shall be the words which are expedient in my wisdom should go forth unto the fruit of thy loins.' Now I ask: Are the words of Jacob 2: 27 expedient for you?

"Proposition 5. Alma 11: 26-29. (Lamoni Edition 8: 79-82.) I ask: Was Amulek's answer correct? Also read, Alma 13: 20. (Lamoni Edition 10: 17.)

"These things are written that you do not always look upon man but that you look to the stone from whence ye are hewn.

"ALAVINA."

I took copies of this bill to the city of the Mormons, and to the house of one of their leaders who is favorable to us, and with whom I had had many pleasant chats. I there distributed them. Some evenings later I was again there to distribute some on another topic, and as I was talking to a crowd in front of a native's house, I was discovered by the Mormon president. Whereupon the following in substance occurred (in Tahitian tongue): "Alva, what is the reason you come into our city telling lies about us?"

"I was not aware I had lied about you."

"Yes, you did."

"In what?"

"Why, in those papers you have been distributing."

"In what point?"

"In regard to plurality of gods. You say we worship a plurality of gods."

"To whom did I say that?"

"Why in those papers you have been distributing."

"It is not so stated in the paper, but it says that you teach there are a great many true gods, and if you deny it I will read it from your own books."

"Read it!"

"All right, here it is:" (reading from Chase's little book).

"Oh, you don't need to read from that, that is some more lies that you people have printed."

"All right (putting it back in my pocket). Please give me that little red book that you let me read the other day, called 'The teachings of Joseph Smith, and near the back I will read those teachings, and they are printed by yourselves. You also made other misrepresentations. . . . Oh, don't change the subject, come on, hand it to me," etc.

He then commanded me not to come again to their village teaching those lies, whereupon I replied that God sent me and that when I wanted to come I would not ask him. He then turned on his heel and fled. I then turned to the audience and said: "My dear friends, God made you and gave you an intellect and freedom; and if you want some more reading matter, I have some here on another topic, and you may have it; if you don't want it I will return with the Word of God." A chorus called out: "Give me one." I did not have a tenth enough.

At this writing the diving season has closed; many native Mormons have denounced their president of the mission for his effrontery, and one of their leaders, an elder, asked for baptism, but wants to return to his island and bring his wife in also. I think there are others to follow. I have found this method successful, for every typewritten article is immediately carried to their missionaries, and he being unable to give satisfactory answer, a bad impression is left which reacts in our favor. I believe the day is not far distant when we will make great inroads upon them here. We cannot be too plain with them as long as it is evident that love is our ruling spirit; but mocking, unjust criticism and persecution will only defeat our own purpose. I am re-joicing in the work.

Your brother,

ALVA H. CHRISTENSEN.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, February 1, 1917.

In Dixie Land

I have been in "Dixie Land" for nearly nine months and I will try to tell your many readers what I think of the country, and people, and of religious conditions. It has been the busiest year of my life in missionary work. I have preached more sermons, and had more calls than I have had in any previous field of labor.

I have labored in three States—Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida. The country is very poor compared with the great prairies of the Middle West. It will cost about ten dollars an acre for commercial fertilizer to put on the ground to produce a fair crop. Cotton and corn are the principal crops. I have not seen any timothy, clover or alfalfa hay.

The farmers are the poor people and work hard and long hours and get small returns for their labor, and this year has been an extremely bad one on account of the great tropical storm on July 5 when many millions worth of property was destroyed. The wealth of this country has been in its great pine forests, which are rapidly disappearing.

The people in some things are different from northern and western people; I find more to commend and praise than to condemn. Whatever deficiency may exist on account of education, or of progressive ideas in farming, or of business, is not from desire but because of conditions over which they have had only partial control. Before the Civil War the old English system of education prevailed to a very large extent; the children of the wealthy went to private schools and the poor people went to the public schools, and to attend the latter was looked on as such a disgrace and a sure badge of poverty that many grew up in ignorance rather than to acknowledge their poverty in a public way. When the war was over the country was in a condition of desolation, the soldiers of both armies had traveled over practically all the country and destroyed most of the property, then followed carpet bag and negro rule with all of its train of evils, and during that period there was practically no school system and the boys and girls of that time had but very little opportunity for an education, and to-day the whole South feels the results of those dark and cloudy days, and as a church we are feeling its burdens now.

An era of good feeling set in during the presidency of William McKinley and in all conditions of public and private life things took on a more hopeful feeling, and it still continues. In every condition of life the South is moving up, and in a very few years it will stand among the most progressive communities of our now reunited country. And in our church work will we measure up to the new conditions and get a firm foothold among the intelligent and progressive people that will be the leaders of the new South in all human endeavor that makes for the betterment of mankind?

The common people of the South are more willing to accept the gospel than the same people in the North. It is easier to get them to listen to our message. In the midst of their poverty I have been sometimes amazed at their generosity to the missionary, because I know it is just as easy for a farmer in the North to give five dollars as it is for one here to give a dollar, and most of our people in this country are farmers. If our missionaries lack for anything it is because of an empty pocketbook and not a hard-hearted people to deal with.

Wherever I have been among the people, by conversation and reading of the best literature I have tried to find out the past and the present of the southern people, and I had unusually favorable opportunities in the public libraries at Mobile, Alabama, and Gulfport, Mississippi. I read with keen interest all that I could find time to. The South in the Making of the Nation, a work of twelve volumes, was of unusual interest. It is the product of the best minds of the South. As a result of my observations and reading of their best literature I am well convinced that the average man from the North has but a meager knowledge of the true conditions of the past and present of this country and its people, and as a church we will be losers in the great struggle for a place in the front ranks, unless we can get the proper vision of the great field of gospel work that lies before us in this virgin field of gospel opportunities. The task in this field is a very difficult one because the men who come down are not acquainted with conditions, and in many ways are at a disadvantage. The best men and women for work will be those who have their homes here and are in touch with the people and the conditions that surround them. The great cry, the pressing need, is for consecrated men and women, efficient in their chosen field of service, full of love, faith and patience, to feed the sheep and lambs whom the missionaries have brought into the fold, who are spiritually dying every day within sight of their own home, their father's house, the church of God.

Whatever difficulties the people in the North have they are found in an aggravated form in the South in missionary work. The care of the branches, the Sunday school and Religion, and woman's work—there are many difficulties to meet. The high cost of living means more to the South than in the North because whatever the prices may be for the common necessities of life they are still higher down here, and in most classes of labor the wages are lower.

I will tell of a few things that are strange to people from the North and some that are only different—and in doing so it is not with any intention of reflecting on the people, but because we are interested in knowing how people in different parts of the world live and do things and we will often find the ways, customs and manners are better adapted to conditions where they live than ours would be. Everyone who comes from north of the Mason and Dixon's line is a "Yankee," so if the Southern people form a poor opinion of what a real "Yankee" from New England is by taking us from the West as a sample, do not be harsh with us because we have done our best to get such an idea out of their heads.

The white people look on it as a mark of ill manners and ignorance to address a negro as mister, and it is not looked on as a compliment by the colored people.

There are separate schools for white and colored children, also separate waiting rooms in the railroad stations. There is always a car for colored people on every railroad train. A lady may take a colored servant with her in the white waiting room or in the passenger car.

It is quite common to have a general merchandise store in the country where the farmers do their trading. The women are more reserved than women in the North. They usually sit on one side of the church, during services, and the men on the other. Girls usually marry much younger here than in the North, education and other conditions are having a tendency to make it later in life than it has been in the past.

Southern people's feelings are more intense, if they like you it is like the little boy said, "they just like you all over," if they do not like you, you can feel their resentment. There is no hypocritical soft soap about them.

In their home, financial and educational conditions the gulf is wider between the country people and city people than it is in the North. They are generous hearted and given to hospitality and it often causes them to be imposed on by selfish neighbors. The story is told of Robert Toombs of Georgia that when some of the citizens of his town talked about building a hotel he opposed it, saying that all decent people coming to town could stay with him; any other kind should not be allowed in the town.

Because of education, closer business relations and social intercourse the feeling engendered by the war is rapidly dying out. It is only kept up, if done at all, by politicians to help them get into office. In talking with the probate judge of Baldwin County, Alabama, he remarked that if the railroads had run north and south instead of east and west there would not have been any war. The isolation of the two sections had much to do with bringing on the war. The business at that time was almost entirely carried on with England. The two sections were in a large sense strangers to each other. Some of the States were ready to abolish slavery but how to do it without causing a catastrophe in the social structure of society was the important and dangerous thing. If the extremists in both sections could have been held in check for a few years the good sense of the intelligent people would have found a way to solve it without war. The saloon has been a greater menace than slavery, because it has been national, and yet without war we are gradually accomplishing its elimination from the entire country. The greatest regret I have in leaving is that I did not possess more ability so that I could have served them better.

"Au revoir."

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA.

EDWARD RANNIE.

If anyone knows the address of Theodore Grabsky, who formerly lived in Kansas City, Missouri, please write Brother E. Dickey, Vale, South Dakota. The latter includes with his request this commendation: "I have been a reader of the HERALD for many years and love it more and more as the years roll by."

Spring River District

The cause of Christ is moving onward in the Spring River District. Our late conference at Joplin was an inspiration and uplift to all who attended, being also the largest ever held here. The business was disposed of with good feeling, and the preaching and prayer meetings were good. The elders and priests quorums held sessions which were of benefit to the members and to the general work.

Brother Henry Smart is doing a good work as president of the elders, as also is Brother Albert V. Karlstrom as president of the priests. The district appointees were all present—Brethren Lee Quick and A. C. Silvers who have labored for some years in this field. Brother Roy Budd who has been but two years here but who with the others has the confidence and support of the Saints. Brother William Bath also who is one of our own boys, who took up the missionary work during the year, is making good. Nor do we forget our vice president, Brother O. P. Sutherland, who has long been a pillar in the church and whose life has been of great influence for good far and wide, also the long list of local brethren who have wrought faithfully and well in the work, with all the Saints. A gathering of such souls could not be otherwise than joyous, inviting the presence of the divine Spirit, bringing peace to all.

One of the important events of the conference period was the effecting of a district organization of the Woman's Auxiliary with Sister Mollie Davis, president. She has associated with her a strong corps of assistants. There is certainly an open field for service by this department and the opportunities are great and important.

The membership of our district is over two thousand two hundred, having had a gain of about four hundred during the last five years. The growth has been steady. The Sunday school with Sister Mollie Davis as superintendent and the Religio with Brother Emmet Lancaster as president have also had a steady growth.

Brother Lee Quick has been preaching at his home town, Mapleton, while assisting in building a new church. After the conference he visited Purcell where he held two meetings and baptized six—the fruitage of past sowing at that place and at Webb City. He made his way to Cherryvale and into Oklahoma where he will labor till he leaves for General Conference. Elder Silvers has recently visited various points in Oklahoma, and held a profitable meeting at Coffeyville, Kansas, where the work was established in more permanent form. He spent a week after the conference at Joplin, expecting to visit also Weir and Chanute.

Elders Roy Budd and William Bath held an extended meeting at Gross where a deep interest was aroused and thirty-three were baptized and left rejoicing in the knowledge of the true gospel. This is a new point, though an opening was made here many years ago by J. A. Davis and R. T. Walters. Brother J. A. Brown and family are the faithful Saints who made it possible for these brethren to accomplish what they have here. The district president with Elder Bath spent a week here building up the new Saints, the latter remaining to continue the work.

The Saints at Carthage, Missouri, have secured a lot and are planning the erection of a bungalow chapel to meet their needs for a meeting place. The Joplin Branch has its new church in process of erection and the basement will soon be ready for occupancy. The building is of concrete and will have kitchen, furnace room, baptismal font, class rooms, etc. The old church has become altogether inadequate for Sunday school and other services. Pittsburg and Arma each have a lot and are looking toward the erection of a building as soon as the way is clear.

The district president has visited the branches and scattered Saints, giving instruction and encouragement in the work so far as possible. The time for General Conference is approaching, marking the end of another year's work. We are still hopeful in the work and see much in the church and in the progress of world events to encourage us and to strengthen faith. The way is clearing for the gospel work to move faster than ever before.

CHARLES FRY.

Independence Stake

Spring is here and the Saints will take a new departure this year in a more expansive cultivation of nature's bounties and they have already begun the work of planning and plowing on the east lawn of the church lot. Hereafter they will be more self-reliant. As was said of Brother T. J. Sheldon after his discourse on the evening of March 4, they are having a "grasp of the situation." The text was in Revelation 18:4: "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." His theme embraced the serious conditions throughout the world, of covetousness, overproduction and inequality. "The lesson of thrift," our brother said, "will not be entirely on money saving. The Saints should be able to solve the problems that confront them by carrying out the law of surplus and consecration, and there is a real and important work to do after being born again."

As usual, there are many meetings going on. The stake conference convened March 10, the business was well done and delegates to General Conference elected. On the afternoon of March 10, two important sessions were held, the Woman's Auxiliary of the stake in convention and Professor George Melcher delivered a very interesting lecture. There were also some excellent musical numbers. There were well-received short talks by our garden superintendent, Brother J. J. Teeters and by Sister A. L. Yingling on vegetable and flower culture and the management of the work.

Mr. Melcher's lecture on "Thrift and good management in the home a remedy for the high cost of living" was full of broad and convincing suggestions on the uses and fertility of the soil, on the coal, gas and other resources of this choice land, and also our enormous water power, all of which are in the hands of monopolies instead of the people.

The sermons on March 11 were by Brethren Edward Rannie and J. F. Curtis.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

(The following held over from last week.)

At the convention of the Woman's Auxiliary Bishop James Keir referred to woman's work already entered upon and highly commended the efforts already put forth, mentioning the names of Sisters Sturges and Esgar of the Mutual Helpers, who have for some time been aiding those who desired to be more efficient in the arts of millinery and dressmaking. He pointed out in detail the unnecessary expenditure for costly articles of clothing and gave advice concerning cutting down of electric light, gas and grocery bills. He suggested that the Saints call in the aid of their supervisor Brother J. J. Teeters to counsel in reference to raising vegetables and beautifying premises.

The National Education Association convention school gardeners gave some excellent reports of their work. The school gardens of some of our island possessions, especially the Philippines, were said to be of a superior grade. Brother Keir's effort was well received.

The meeting was supplemented by a lecture on the Book of Mormon by Elder F. M. Sheehy. Among other things he called our attention to an extensive advertisement in a Kansas City daily, put there by Doctor James Talmage, one of the Utah twelve apostles. It is a very comprehensive description of the Book of Mormon and one cannot fail to get a clear idea of the book from reading it. It says: "The Book of Mormon is before the world. It has been distributed by the millions of copies in English and other modern tongues. The claims made as to its genuineness at the time of the first publication have never been altered in the least particular."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

From Here and There

The Saints at Levering, Michigan have recently enjoyed a visit from Brother Starks and the work is moving along nicely.

C. M. Foulks writes from San Antonio, Texas that he is working hard at tract distribution. Weather very dry but indications of rain.

Brother S. M. Plumb, of Ardmore, South Dakota, wants to know the name of the nearest branch and if any Saints live near Ardmore. If so, please write him.

Does anyone know Mrs. John Story, of Chalk River, Ontario? A nonmember friend of hers writes from that place to say that her husband has died and she believes he belonged to this church but is not sure.

"I wish some one would preach a sermon on 'authority' and have it reported in the HERALD," writes Mrs. Ella Baird, of Bangor, Michigan. All right, sister, Brother E. E. Long is to preach a sermon on that subject in Lamoni before long, and if we can do so, we will have it reported for the HERALD.

Alliance, Ohio, is a new opening, with nine members, R. A. Smith being a priest. Elder William Anderson was recently at that place and held meetings for a week. Three have been baptized and others are interested. There is said to be a splendid opportunity for tent work there. The Sunday school organized in December is growing and they hope to have a branch soon.

A brother at Ames, Iowa, sent to the Bureau of Publicity for some information on a special line of our work and was so pleased with the tracts and the letter that he sent in five dollars to help others likewise situated. Numerous intelligent inquiries come to the Herald Office that are turned over to the Bureau of Publicity who carefully answer them and usually follow them up with encouraging letters.

Writing from Liberty, South Carolina, Brother A. G. Miller says he has just closed a very good meeting at Greenville. Some are to be baptized. In distributing literature he visited the Salvation Army Home for Fallen Girls. There were twenty-eight young girls not over fifteen years of age residing there and twenty babies. He says: "It made me feel sad to see the sight, but it was good to know that there are those in the world who will give these unfortunate girls an opportunity to reform their lives."

The press committee report a joint convention of Sunday school and Religio work at Flint, Michigan, February 24 and 25, which was of a very high order. Efficiency seems to be the watchword and the district secretary reports a banner year for the Sunday school. Reports came in better than ever, and there is more money in the treasury. The various features of the program are recorded as excellent, including the musical. We like to hear of such conventions and wish there were many more as good.

Writing about some details concerning his meetings to be held at Lamoni during the conference, Bishop R. C. Evans tells us the large church building in Toronto is now too small to seat the people if they all come out to the meetings and that they think of building another building. Great crowds attend all the meetings in the theater, and he had baptized ten the past week and more ready. At present there is a published letter debate in progress between himself and a Presbyterian preacher who lectured against our church. The conference sermons are to begin the evening of April 6 and continue till the close of the sessions.

Lamoni church is being papered and painted, new toilets put in, and other improvements made, in preparation for the coming General Conference. Indications are that a large attendance will be had. The children's meetings are proving a great success and the interest grows. A business meeting of the Sunday school recently developed considerable enthusiasm over the raising of the two dollars each for the Christmas offering. A number of plans were suggested and you can count on Lamoni for doing her part—she always does. A goodly sum has already been gathered, but every energy will be put forth toward the earning of the balance.

A sister in the East says that we who are inland do not realize the pressure of the times as they on the coast do. They scan the bulletin boards, hear of industrial plants being guarded, the harbor patrolled to prevent suspects from getting views of the forts, etc., as they have been found doing. They are constantly reminded that something is pending and forced to realize that troublous times are here. Yet she says that in spite of the food riots, there are more "help wanted" advertisements than ever before and fewer calls for charitable aid. She says they in the East regretted very much the loss of Brother Burgess and wife, but are glad their loss is the gain of others.

Another Stereopticon Slide Stunt

That was a very ingenious method suggested by Brother Moore to Brother Headding for making lantern slides, as published in HERALD of February 7. It is the most simple method I have ever heard of for making text slides, but I imagine it would be very difficult to get them straight and free from pin holes, which would be greatly exaggerated on the screen. But it certainly is a simple method and I shall try it.

Here is the way I have been making text slides for years. Clean off the kodak film so it is perfectly clear, or better yet, pay twenty-five cents a dozen for celluloid thin plates two and one half by four inches. But if the film is used, cut to lantern plate size. Set up the type, lock in press in usual way, have a good book paper on tympan. Now print on tympan, set guides so printing will be in center of film, then feed in film same as in regular printing, and take an impression. Now you have the printing on both sides of the film. Dust both sides with gold or silver bronze, and you have a perfectly opaque slide which shows up black on the screen. I prefer white letters, surrounded with a black background, so I use the printed film as a negative and make a positive in the usual way by exposing on the lantern slide plate as is done with any negative, and then developing. If the black letters are preferred, after the superfluous bronze has been carefully dusted off, place the film between two thin cover glasses and bind in usual way. Dry before dusting.

When any word or line is to be emphasized, buy a twenty-five cent book of Velox water colors, and in the white letter slide brush over the word with red or any color preferred and you have the emphasis in beautiful contrast. For writing on glass use "David's Announcing Glass Slide Ink."

When photographing a map or type from books, the regular plates or films will not do. Use "process plates" or the regular thin lantern plates make perfectly clear negatives and can be used as the slide.

Hope the camera club will have some good exhibitions at the conference. Don't know whether I shall have any prints there or not, but hope there will be many who do send samples of their skill.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

BURLINGTON JUNCTION, MISSOURI, March 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: While I am sending twenty-five cents for the DAILY HERALD, I will say that I take the HERALD and think it is a fine paper. We could not do without it. I get much good from it. I also take the Ensign and the Stepping Stones and the Autumn Leaves. We enjoy reading all of them. We are isolated Saints and have joined the home department in the Sunday school work. We get a great deal of good from it, and think it is a fine thing for isolated Saints.

Brother Oscar Okerlind was with us over Sunday, February 18. He helped us study our Sunday school lesson and gave us a nice talk after Sunday school. We enjoyed the visit very much.

I think every Saint who can do so should pay tithing; if he will the Lord will bless. I know from experience, for since I began paying tithing the Lord has blessed us in many ways. He has blessed us so much that we will have more to pay this year.

Wife and I and our oldest daughter belong to the church and we hope to see the other children join us. I am glad we can say that this is the true church of Christ. It has only been about four years last fall since we joined the church. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may be faithful.

Your brother in Christ,
BERT HOYT.

RUTLAND, SASKATCHEWAN, March 4, 1917.

Editors Herald: Saskatchewan may be a cold country but it's not cold enough to prevent an honest soul that seeks salvation from being immersed out in the open in midwinter even though we get it sixty below zero at times. Just closed a stirring campaign of three weeks nightly pounding at this place, with the result of nine dead, buried, and resurrected, while many are wounded as to their former faith. Never struck a place where the folks demanded as much preaching. Unsatisfied with an hour, they called for more, and so they kept us at it night after night in sermons ranging from ninety to one hundred twenty minutes.

Our work hitherto at this place was but feebly represented by two families, the Ambroses from Maine, and the Newcombes from Boston, and for three years they have hung on, scattering gospel seed by the way until after many days their efforts have been rewarded. We leave them rejoicing in the restored gospel while we carry with us many reminiscences of God's power marvelously wrought among the devoted band we leave behind. Nearly all of those baptized are heads of families and among them are two school teachers and two music teachers. Surely there is sufficient in this gospel of the kingdom to satisfy the most exacting.

Duties at Lamoni compel us to depart and we have just this to observe: Western Canada is a splendid field of opportunities—all we need is to take advantage of the golden opportunities all around us. Conservativeness is not so staid nor strong as in eastern Canada or other parts of long established settlements. The people, owing to the general good fellowship, ever a feature of a new settlement, are open to the molding influence of truth. It would be well to push an aggressive campaign while such conditions prevail. More calls for preaching than I can fill.

Happy and hopeful,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

SOUTH SIDE STATION, OMAHA, NEBRASKA,

March 5, 1917.

Editors Herald: We are getting along as well as any new branch. It is uphill work though, as the weather has been very severe, and a number of members ill. But we are looking forward to better interest among members as soon as the weather is more settled. We have ceased cottage prayer meetings and will try having our prayer service in the church.

We are not discouraged, as the church of Christ was never meant to be popular.

We have a large Sunday school and usually well attended.

Brother James Huff, our president and "knowledge box" is still chaplain of the Nebraska State Senate and we miss him at our prayer meetings.

I think Saints should, wherever there are a few, whether a branch or not, unite in prayer meetings, as there is where much strength is gained even when they cannot attend the Sunday preaching service. Make a special effort to go to prayer meeting.

Your duty to your God and Maker is many times of more importance than some household duties which can sometimes be left undone, at least once a week or even once a month.

Dear Saints everywhere, make the effort. You will be rewarded tenfold. Come and be humble before God. We are living in precarious times and we must come up higher so we can escape. Look in Doctrine and Covenants 63:9.

We are starting a building fund.

McCord presented a bill to pay for the balance of the debt on a district tent which was purchased by him in 1916, to be the property of the district. A. E. McCord and R. Bullard appointed a committee to solicit funds to pay balance of debt. District officers were requested to look after the matter of the Sixteenth Quorum of Priests, which was organized but now defunct. Petition presented asking for a branch to be organized which shall be known as the South Part Branch of Saint Joseph, Missouri, referred to missionary in charge and district president, with power to act. Officers elected: J. F. Ford, president; B. J. Dice and Thomas A. Ivie, vice presidents; Charles P. Faul, secretary; D. C. Wilk, treasurer; C. P. Faul, recorder. Next conference with Cameron Branch, October 13 and 14. Following brethren recommended for ordination: John Nixon priest; W. O. Webb, elder, Guy Hawley and Brother Oskar, teachers; Alber Nelson and John Bullard, deacons.

The Presidency

To the Saints of Southwestern Texas District: The Presidency and missionary in charge of Texas have issued instructions to the district president of the Southwestern Texas District to formally declare the Medina Branch disorganized and to issue letters of removal to those now on record of the old Medina Branch. Those concerned please take notice.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 14, 1917.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Northern California: In 1913 this district was assigned the obligation of paying our portion of the church debt, which was twenty-two hundred dollars. That was in 1913. That year $494.50 was paid. In 1914 $53.50 was paid; in 1915 $12 was paid, while in 1916 it was $7.30, making in all $567.30 and leaving a balance of $1,632.70. What are we going to do about it? If all the members would pay two dollars each and those who have children who are members of the church would also pay two dollars for each child for three years, the debt would be paid. Shall we do it? Don't you think we should?

This is one thing the church needs—money. Are you not willing to do your part? Let us rally to the need! "Be not weary in well-doing," Paul says. Is this not doing well, to help lift the load? Are we good Saints if we fail to do our part? What thinkest thou? Oh, yes, we will have obligations while we are in this world, and in the other, too. "Unless ye are one, ye are not mine," says Jesus. Let us get right to work—all together. "We want no cowards in our ranks." What can the Presiding Bishop do without our help? We are expected to make sacrifices. "Gather together my Saints unto me, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50: 5. A word to the wise is sufficient.

CHARLES A. PARKIN,

Bishop of Northern California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, 579 Fifth Avenue.

TRAIN SERVICE TO LAMONI

Take notice that because of holding the first convention on Sunday, April 1, trains numbers 111 and 112 running between Chariton, Iowa, and Kansas City will run direct to Lamoni from Saturday, March 31, to and including Saturday, April 7. Other trains running into Lamoni, will be equipped with facilities to handle the extra traffic.

R. S. SALLYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 17, 1917.

Quorum Notices

The Second Seventy will meet at 7.30 p. m. April 5, at Lamoni, Iowa. H. E. Moler, secretary.

The Conference Daily

If you haven't already sent in your subscription for the daily, it should be done immediately, so there will be ample time to have the list made up. We are hardly equipped for such fast work as daily newspapers are, but by bending every energy we can mail the editions promptly. If your 25 cents gets in early enough you will receive your numbers promptly. The office cannot guarantee to supply back numbers. The first issue will be April 2.

This advertising talk by the manager of the Board of Publication is one of a series appearing simultaneously in the SAINTS' HERALD and "Zion's Ensign," written with the hope of reaching as many as possible of the church membership. This is the third of eight "talks" that will appear.

Subscription Department

At both the Herald Office at Lamoni and the Ensign Office at Independence, we have established subscription agencies that should be a constant source of profit to the church and a real service to our church members.

For the same price that you pay anywhere else you can secure your magazines and periodicals, and just as promptly. When sending in remittances to either house just include in your order the amount necessary to pay for the magazines you want, either new or renewal, singly or in clubs, and it will all be attended to for you without any more trouble.

The money thus saved for the church is as valuable as though it were saved by other methods, and if this department were patronized as it might be, the amount in a year would be considerable.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION

BENEDICT.—Brother Andrew Benedict was born in Canada, January 21, 1832, came to Michigan in 1852; married Miss Phoebe J. Blakely of Kent County, Ontario, in 1858, lived on a farm near Applegate Michigan, from 1859 until September, 1914, then moved to Applegate, where he died February 24, 1917, through injuries received by falling on the ice. Was a member of the Methodist Church 40 years. In March, 1890, united with the Latter Day Saint church. Leaves a sorrowing wife, 5 sons and four daughters to mourn their loss. He was respected by all. Funeral services conducted by A. Leverton, to a large congregation of sympathizing friends.

FENN.—Ann Fountain was born April 16, 1831, in Bedfordshire, England. Married Charles Fenn in 1847. Later came to America, living in Saint Louis several years. To this union were born 10 children; 5 having preceded her to the beyond; 3 in infancy, Mrs. Katherine Hathaway, January 18, 1900, and Sarah Hotze, December 2, 1907. Three sons and 2 daughters mourn the loss of an ever loving mother; 32 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren and many friends also mourn her departure. She united with the church in 1866 at Wheelers Grove, Iowa. Died January 24, 1917. Funeral services in the Saints' chapel at Carson, sermon by D. R. Chambers.

MUSSER.—At Davis City, Iowa, March 7, 1917; Sister Barbara Musser. She was born October 20, 1843; her maiden name being Dayton. Married Henry H. Musser August 24, 1865, in Caldwell County, Missouri, and removed to Harrison County. In 1895 removed to Davis City. Baptized in May, 1894. Services at the residence in Davis City and at Lone Rock, Missouri, in charge of L. G. Holloway, Heman C. Smith preaching the sermon. She was buried at Lone Rock. She leaves one son, and one daughter; husband and two children preceded her. Eleven grandchildren and one great-grandchild also survive her.

No Eggs, Milk or Butter

The following recipe shows how an appetizing, wholesome cake can be made without expensive ingredients.

In many other recipes the number of eggs may be reduced one-half or more by using an additional quantity of ROYAL Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, in place of each egg omitted.

EGGLESS, MILKLESS, BUTTERLESS CAKE

- | | |
|----------------------|---------------------------------|
| 1 cup brown sugar | 1 teaspoon nutmeg |
| 1 1/4 cups water | 1 teaspoon cinnamon |
| 1 cup seeded raisins | 1/2 teaspoon salt |
| 2 ounces citron | 2 cups flour |
| 3/4 cup shortening | 5 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder |

The old method (fruit cake) called for 2 eggs

DIRECTIONS—Put the first eight ingredients into saucepan and boil three minutes. When cool, add the flour and baking powder which have been sifted together; mix well. Bake in moderate oven in loaf pan (round tin with hole in center is best) for 35 or 40 minutes. Ice with white icing.

Booklet of recipes which economize in eggs and other expensive ingredients, mailed free. Address Royal Baking Powder Co., 135 William Street, New York.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Made from Cream of Tartar, derived from grapes, adds none but healthful qualities to the food.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF BISHOP R. C. EVANS.—A volume showing what the gospel, when applied, will do for a man. Bishop Evans has had a remarkable career. In this story of his life, written by himself, he relates incidents and events of a thrilling nature, draws conclusions and enunciates truths that will appeal to the hearts of most readers. No. 143, cloth$1.00

THE FALL OF BABYLON.—The Australian, W. J. Haworth, has written into this doctrinal book many original ideas and elaborated upon carefully garnered evidences of the truth of Christ's gospel. The charts in the book are nuclei of well-worked-out arguments. Altogether it is an elaborate defense of the truth as a very earnest disciple understands it. The proceeds of the sale of this book go to help the financial interests of the Standard Publishing House in Australia. No. 197, cloth$1.25

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

A DAY OF REST AND WORSHIP

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates.—Exodus 20: 8-10.

Thus saith the Lord; Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem; Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath day, as I commanded your fathers.—Jeremiah 17: 21, 22.

And he said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath: therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.—Mark 2: 27, 28.

One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks.—Romans 14: 5, 6.

In the early Christian church we note that the disciples were called together on the resurrection day, which apparently was the first day of the week; that they were likewise assembled a week later when Thomas was with them; that they were assembled on pentecost which was the first day of the week; that Paul preached to the saints on the first day of the week (Acts 20); and that from the first century, the day of resurrection, the first day of the week, was referred to as the Lord's day, and appears to have been observed as a day of worship and of rest.

But the purpose of this editorial is not a controversy over the day of the week. This will be found sufficiently discussed in other publications of the Herald Publishing House. The emphasis we wish to lay is that both the Jews and the early Christian church observed one day of rest and worship. We find this observance practically universal among the followers of the various religions, though different days were so selected.

We have appreciated for a long time the importance of this day as a day of worship, a day in which we should pay our oblations and services to the Lord. But we note in the Jewish law it was made very strictly also a day of rest. So much, so, that not only the preparation of meals, but even ordinary travel was limited.

The Master declared, however, that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. So we find in the Doctrine and Covenants a continuation of this thought that it should also be a day of rest, and that our food should be prepared with singleness of heart:

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2, 3.

The great importance of this day as a day of rest was brought home to us. In the lecture on psychiatry at Clark University a chart was hung up showing a man Monday morning at 100 per cent. By evening he was down to 95 per cent. Tuesday morning he was back to 99 per cent. Tuesday night was down to 94 per cent, and so on through the week, until Saturday night found him at 90 per cent and Sunday morning at 94 per cent. But Sunday being a day of rest, by Monday morning he has returned to 100 per cent. Other men show a wider variation under a greater stress, so that Monday night finds them nearer 90 per cent. The recuperation is only 97 or 98 per cent by Tuesday morning, still Sunday as a day of rest marks the return to 100 per cent.

Then it was shown with Sunday not a day of rest, and the curve of decline continued. Instead of returning to 100 per cent, the end of the second week found him still lower in the scale of efficiency.

Now when, from lack of rest on the seventh day or when from overstrain in the six days of the week, a man declines in energy to 80 per cent, he becomes nervous, and the more he drops below 80 per cent the more neurasthenic does he become. If he so lives that much of his time he is below 80 per cent, he becomes chronically or acutely affected with nervous disorder, and we may soon find him touching occasionally 60 per cent. These occasional dips to 60 per cent are marked by melancholia, by despondency, by a feeling of unworthiness and sometimes by strange fears. Partially it may be expressed in the word Minderwertigkeit (a favorite of Doctor G. Stanley Hall), which means that a man feels his littleness, his unimportance, and he feels himself shrinking down to less and less.

There is nothing of grave fear in this condition unless it is permitted to continue. But a continued decline is serious. The discussion might be continued down to zero, but with proper rest and care, recuperation is practically a certainty.

The problem is presented in another way in that a man is sometimes forced to labor extra hours in time of stress, when grave issues must be met within a limited time under our modern conditions of work. But when this time of stress is over and he returns to the office, the sight of the desk, or the chairs, or of papers arranged in their regular order, the consideration of like problems or the appearance of the same words, causes a conditional reflex, and creates at once a condition of worry and of strain. The abuse for a time of this necessity for rest should be at once met and relaxation and complete relief from the usual strain secured for a brief season.

If this is not done and the strain is permitted to continue into a neurasthenic condition, then it becomes a necessity that the mind and nerves should be relieved from the usual problems for a time.

But it comes back again to the law given of old and renewed to-day, a day of rest, a day of worship. It is and should be a day devoted to the worship of God and to his service.

For most of us it is a day of rest and even for the man who labors throughout the week at some other employment and preaches on Sunday, it still is a change of vocation and so a rest. But for the man whose time is given entirely to ministerial services of preaching and writing, we have sometimes wondered if there should not be provision for some other day as a day of rest.

Billy Sunday is an athlete, keeps himself in the pink of condition, carries a man with him to look after his physical health, yet he takes one day in the week, Monday, as a day of rest. He also takes one or two weeks between his campaigns as well as his summer vacations.

As we have studied the various provisions of the gospel we have been surprised at times to note how reasonable and how rational they are, man being what he is. Whether these ordinances are a necessity to our heavenly Father, we are not prepared to say. But we are prepared to affirm that they are remarkably adapted to man and are for his betterment.

The promise for the healing of the sick is not only a divine promise but a declaration of a divine law. The commandment of baptism, we are now led to believe, is given not so much as a necessity of the divine nature, as it is a need of the human nature.

So we find the Sabbath Day a day for worship, a day for the assembling of ourselves together, splendidly adapted to assist in the spiritual revival and spiritual growth of humanity. For religion is essential to the complete man.

But we also find this day wonderfully prepared for the physical man, as a day of rest. It is not that God needs it so far as we know; but it is a need of man, for his greater efficiency and happiness. Truly "the Sabbath was made for man."

S. A. BURGESS.

TO THE "APOSTOLIC REVIEW"

In your issue of January 23, 1917, you publish an attack and challenge. The party signing the article, some years ago published an article filled with a number of incorrect statements. Some of these were pointed out and he issued a threat demanding a retraction under penalty of a lawsuit. Of course the truth could not be retracted. But no suit followed. Now he makes a demand for a republication with a new threat of suit with some very vituperative terms if we do not accommodate him.

A man and gentleman may and will defend virtue and right against unjust attack. But after the defense is completed, if the other party picks up a chip and says, "Knock it off my shoulder again, I dare you and double dare you," a gentleman simply walks off and lets him rant. This is neither cowardice nor the baby act. A reprinting would be a personal matter, not vital to the defense of truth.

In the issue of February 6, 1917, on page three, you have another insertion, which is as follows:

When God sets up a system of salvation, he sets up a SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT. When I speak of a government I mean what I say—I mean a government that shall rule OVER TEMPORAL and SPIRITUAL AFFAIRS.

Every man is a government of himself, and infringes on no government. A man is not an honorable man if he is not ABOVE ALL LAW AND ABOVE GOVERNMENT.

THE LAWS OF GOD ARE FAR ABOVE THE LAWS OF MAN

There it is, readers, pimples and all, as it fell from the lips of its REAL FOUNDER, Sidney Rigdon, at Nauvoo, April 6, 1844, before the largest audience ever assembled, before or since, to hear the teachings of the Latter-Day-Saints church. This statement was not challenged by Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith or any of the "apostles" present on that great and notable day.

The whole system, from start to finish, is TREASON to the U. S!

If you have any evidence of treason or even facts that justify a suspicion affecting any living man or men, it is your duty to lay it before the proper authorities of the United States Government.

To assume that those who hear an assertion delivered in a lecture or sermon are bound by it is an evident error. Men do not ordinarily get up in a public assembly and voice their protest. The speaker is supposed to speak for himself.

But further than this, this item, not only by capitals, perverts the use of the words used, but the extracts are taken in such a way as to constitute actual misrepresentation. In Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 529 we find these words offered by Sidney Rigdon on the date cited, and are probably what is referred to:

When God sets up a system of salvation, he sets up a system of government; when I speak of a government I mean what I say; I mean a government that shall rule over temporal and spiritual affairs. Every man is a government of himself, and infringes upon no government. A man is not an honorable man if he is not above all law, and above government. I see in our town we have need of government, some study law, only for the purpose of seeing how many feuds, how many broils they can kick up, how much they can disturb the peace of the public, without breaking the law, and then say: "I know my rights and will have them"; "I did not know it was the marshal, or I would not have done it." He is no gentleman, gentlemen would not insult a poor man in the street, but would bow to him, as much as those who appear more respectable. No marshal, or anyone else should pull me up; we ought to live a great way within the circle of the laws of the land. I would live far above all law. The law of God is far more righteous than the laws of the land; the laws of God are far above the laws of the land. The kingdom of God does not interfere with the laws of the land, but keeps itself by its own laws.

Read it for yourself. Call upon the man who furnished you this item for proof. Do you know a single book on earth or a single man living or dead, against whom you could not make a case, if such methods are permissible?

The above statement you will note is merely urging that a man should live so clean a life as not to come anywhere near infringing the law of the land.

The "temporal law," as everyone knows who is at all familiar with the teachings of this church, refers to the paying of tithing, which is voluntary, the giving of voluntary offerings for the help of the poor. It means a cooperative effort of mutual helpfulness. It interferes in no way with the law of the land.

Even were this sermon otherwise than it is, it still would be but a sermon, not doctrine, or approved by the vote of the people nor binding upon them. The law governing the church and adopted by the church is very plain:

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.

"He whose right it is to reign" is Christ, as is readily established. Do you really wish to affirm that the law of God is not more righteous than the laws of the land and far above the laws of the land? If so it would evidently involve a denial of the word of God.

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—Isaiah 55: 8, 9.

However, the whole passage shows that it involves in no possible or reasonable construction, a denial of or attack on the laws of the land.

Now in the issues dated February 27, and since there are a number of other assertions, which as applied to the church that has its headquarters in Lamoni and its membership, are utterly without foundation, as you may satisfy yourself if you desire.

That is the real question now,—Does the Apostolic Review want the truth? or does it prefer to try to make a case? Is it to be fair play and justice or sensationalism?
S. A. BURGESS.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Churches Favor Universal Military Service

On March 11, the New York Federation of Churches indorsed universal military service and declared President Wilson justified in recommending the most extreme measures to Congress. The vote was 158 for and 52 against, with eighteen church organizations represented.

Railroad Difficulty Adjusted

A few hours before the Adamson eight-hour law was declared constitutional on the 19th, an agreement had been reached by the representatives of the brotherhoods of trainmen and the railroad officials. This agreement concedes the eight-hour day and pro rata pay for overtime as does the Adamson statute. The increase goes back to January 1.

Of Interest to Reunion Committees

We learn that during the Religio convention, soon to meet, there will be a "conference" on reunion work, in charge of Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, who has done much field work at reunions. This will be for auxiliary officers and field workers, but will be of special interest to reunion committees. It will be held on Tuesday, April 3, at 4 p. m.

To Aid Russian Jews

Saying that the Russian revolution affords the Jews an opportunity for which they have waited for centuries, Mr. Julius Rosenwald of Chicago has pledged a million dollars for the relief of Jewish war sufferers. The gift will take the form of one-hundred-thousand-dollar donations for each million contributed by others to the American Jewish relief committee which is seeking to raise a fund of ten million dollars for this purpose. The indications are that the amount will be raised.

The European Conflict

The German retreat in northern France continues and is claimed as a victory by the entente allies, while the Teutons explain it as a strategical movement. A new closed zone has been announced by Germany, which includes that part of the Arctic Ocean used to reach northern Russia. German troops are massing on the Russian front, menacing the Russian capital. The British are pushing on north of Bagdad and the Russians in the Caucasus are advancing into Mesopotamia.

Joint Council in Session

By wireless from President Frederick M. Smith, we learn that all of the Twelve, except James E. Kelley, Paul M. Hanson and C. E. Butterworth, were in session the morning of the 20th, together with the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. The joint council expects to meet each forenoon, and the Quorum of Twelve each afternoon. They expect to continue in session at Independence until April 4, and then come to Lamoni. Those having business with them or desiring to present names for appointment, please take notice.

Conference Conveniences

A bureau of information will be conducted in connection with a Graceland College booth and Herald Office bookstand in a temporary building on the church grounds during the conventions and conference at Lamoni. A telephone will be installed having direct communication with the wireless station at Graceland College a mile away. A representative each of the reception committee and the credentials committee will be on hand between sessions, and no doubt arrangements will be made to have all city mail delivered at this place by carrier at about 9 a. m. and 3 p. m. The committee is announcing elsewhere a quick jitney service.

Meeting Places for Quorums

The following tentative arrangement for meeting places of quorums during the General Conference sessions at Lamoni has been made by the First Presidency in consultation with the proper local authorities: First Presidency, editorial rooms, Herald Building; Quorum of Twelve, Recorder's office, Herald Building; Presiding Bishopric, Business Manager's office, Herald Building; Patriarchs, First Presidency's room, Herald Building; High Priests, Methodist Church; Order of Bishops, Mite Society Building; First Seventy, Coliseum; Second Seventy, northwest room basement of church; Third Seventy, Barrows' Parlors; Presidents of Seventy, northwest room basement of church; Elders, Odd Fellows Hall.

A National Emergency

An extraordinary session of Congress has been called to meet April 2 instead of on the 16th as had been planned for. Congress will consider a message from President Wilson proposing steps to cope with the state of war now existing following the sinking of American ships and consequent loss of American lives. Seven American ships have been sunk, and thirty-six lives lost. Our ambassador to Belgium has been ordered to France, and our relief workers are to be replaced by Dutch officials. The President has authorized the expenditure of $115,000,000 in construction of warships, and purchase of war craft. Numerous other war preparations, extending to all parts of the country, are chronicled each day. Truly there are "wars and rumors of war."

Russia Extending Freedom to Jews

The new Russian Government has removed all educational restrictions as to schools and colleges, which is looked upon by officials in Washington as the first step toward complete freedom for the Jews. We quote an editorial paragraph from The American Hebrew:

Freedom for the Russian people must lead to the emancipation of the Jews. The Jewish question is intimately interwoven with all phases of the political, social, and industrial life of the Russian people, and without the emancipation of the Jews the rejuvenation of Russia is inconceivable.

Many American Jews are seeking passage to Russia now that the old regime has passed. Prisons are being emptied of political prisoners, and Siberia is a region of rejoicing rather than poignant grief. Women are to have place on the council of Petrograd. The nations are giving official recognition to the new Government, ruled by a committee from the Duma, the Czar's brother having abdicated after reigning twenty-four hours.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE PRIVILEGE OF HELPING

We should count it a great privilege indeed to be permitted to help in the work which God and the angels are doing: a work of greater importance than any of the undertakings of man.

We count it an honor, and it surely is, to be permitted to hold the holy priesthood which authorizes a man to officiate for and in the name of God and his Christ, but is it not just as important to have the other departments of the Lord's work properly carried on? And is it not just as honorable?

The Lord loves a cheerful giver, the great apostle said, and Moses told only those who could "give with a willing heart" to assist in furnishing the material for the tabernacle.

"WHOSOEVER WILL

may come," is the broad-as-eternity offer. They may partake of the waters of life freely, but there is no suggestion of compulsion, it is left entirely to those who are willing to do the coming in the Lord's way, those who count it a privilege to do his commandments that they may "have a right to the tree of life."

We are given power to think and reason, and the true use of these powers will bring us to see what a great blessing it is to be permitted to do some of the same kind of work that God and the angels are doing. And if those reasoning powers are properly used they will bring us to the knowledge of the great fact that it will not only be a blessing to others, and make the angels rejoice, when we are willing to do the little we can as members of God's kingdom, but it will bring us more joy and satisfaction than that we spend on what we term ourselves.

OUR TIME, OUR TALENTS, AND OUR MEANS

should all be dedicated to the service of God and his church, to be used whenever and wherever opportunity may be offered. The minister is expected to have only time to wait on his ministering, those who have special talents in music or any other line should use them first of all where they will be a help to the church, but all are privileged to give of their means, and sometimes like the widow who cast her mite into the treasury, those who have the least will give the most, because they are willing to make the greater sacrifice.

WILLINGNESS TO SACRIFICE

is the factor that makes up the real value of what we give of our means. Those who have abundance may give an amount greater than another had altogether and do so without sacrificing a single want, so we are really expected to give in proportion to ability; him to whom much is given from him much is expected is the rule we should apply, that those who labor in spiritual things and those who labor in temporal things may be equal.

IT IS NECESSARY THAT MEANS SHALL BE GIVEN

but that does not mean that it is necessary for the church to have our help for the work to be accomplished, for if we do not desire to do our part the Lord is able to raise up some one else who will. We cannot really hinder the advancement of God's great work, but if somebody else does our work they will surely receive the glory that could have been ours. In reality, then, we are the losers and not the Lord or his work, if we fail to give of our time, talents—and our means.

JEROME E. WILDERMUTH.

EXPERIENCES OF THE REFORMERS

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 90:6, "The glory of God is intelligence." True, and where it is not there can be no progress. It requires that intelligence come from our heavenly Father before we can make even a start to progress. When we look back into the Dark Ages we find in the thirteenth century little or no advancement or progress had been reached in many fields of knowledge. They barred their minds by an exclusive habit of thought, and when that powerful free thinking man, Roger Bacon, did break the scholastic fetters and found his way to the school of nature for study in her own books with his eyes opened, then it was silenced and sealed up in the prison of the church.

At that time professors and disciples had to be satisfied with their empty dialectics. Then men discovered that they had given their time for the promise of wisdom but had been cheated in their bargain. Then John of Salisbury observed that they had not advanced or progressed one step for three or four hundred years.

But when the Reformation began there was a great sacrifice to be made. In the fifteenth century in Spain there were eighteen hundred went to the scaffold in less than three months, and William of Orange, far-seeing in wisdom, warned his friends of the danger and implored them to save themselves. But they were blinded and lured with flatteries, and King Philip of Spain entered into a contract to assassinate William of Orange, and signed the contract with his own blood. He failed at that time, but afterwards it was accomplished.

Then in England, when Charles II came into rule, he ordered Cromwell's body, with many of the reformers, to be lifted from their graves after their bodies had been at rest and their spirits returned to the God who gave them. Cromwell's body was hanged on the scaffold. The others were cast into pits that were prepared for them. All this to get revenge on those that loved religious liberty! Yes, everyone who would not consent to every word of the prayer book in the established church of England was put to death if they said they did not believe it. In China there were over three hundred churches destroyed in 1775.

In Scotland there was a leader named John Howie, and a band of Scotch worthies, who were subjected twelve different times to loss of property, and their cattle were driven to the market cross of Kilmarnock, Scotland, and exposed for sale because they were declared rebels to the Government. Their names were inserted in the fugitives' roll, and many of them were compelled to conceal themselves in the mountains and valleys of Ayrshire.

The great struggle for religious freedom was on, to worship as they wished to in God's own way, with the martyrdom of Patrick Hamilton in 1528. He brought the first Bible to Scotland from Germany, and said it was the right and duty of every man for himself to hear the Lord's own voice in answer to prayer, and every inquiry as to what man is to believe concerning God and the duty God requires of him. For his testimony he died a martyr at twenty-four years of age.

Then we have a man of God, George Wishart. When preaching at Dundee a priest named Sir John Wightman sat at the foot of his pulpit with a dagger concealed in his loose gown to plunge into Wishart's breast as he came down, but Mr. Wishart knew something was wrong and looked steadfastly on him and approached him demanding what he intended to do, and then seized his hand which grasped the murderous weapon.

Again, when at Montrose dispensing the sacrament, he received a letter to come with all diligence to administer to the sick, but as he started to go, and a party was going with him just as we go sometimes when an elder is called to administer to the sick, just as he got started on his way he said to his brother, "I am forbidden by the Lord to go on this journey. Will some of you go yonder, as I apprehend there is a plot against my life." Then he returned to Montrose, but his brethren went on to the place directed by Mr. Wishart, and there were found sixty men on horseback waiting for him to come so they could take his life. Was that not a revelation from our heavenly Father? Surely it was.

In 1551 Adam Wallace said it was every man's duty to examine for himself the standard and doctrines of every Christian society, and to unite himself to that which conceives the most spiritual and purest doctrine. But it is not his duty to remain in a society which can be proved to have departed from its original practice. He died a martyr for this testimony.

Walter Smith said, "Dear friends, I desire while in the body to sympathize with you, lamenting your various causes and the cause of the church whereof we are sons and daughters. So I must leave this request with you all, that you take some of your time and set it apart particularly to blessing and magnifying your God and my God. And now I set a seal to all his truths revealed to us, yet we are under the obligation of the whole law, which is the perfect rule of righteousness." He died a martyr July 27, 1681.

James Guthrie should be held dear to all the Scottish progressives. He went through many trials and was a faithful watchman upon Zion's walls, showing Israel their iniquities. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh castle and afterwards hanged at the cross of Edinburgh. His last sermon was preached in Stirling, entitled "A cry from the dead." He said on the scaffold, "Let my death grieve none of you, as I forgive all men of their guilt. Pray for your enemies. Pray for them that persecute you. Bless them that curse you." His last words were "Remember me, oh Lord, with thy favored children."

John Knox said, "The day now approaches and is at the door for which I have frequently thirsted, when I shall be released from my great labors and innumerable sorrows, and I shall be with Christ. And now God is my witness whom I have served in spirit in the gospel of his son. I have taught nothing but the true and solid doctrine of the gospel of the Son of God. I have had it for my only object, to instruct the ignorant, to comfort the weak, the fearful, and the distressed, by the promise of God our father to his children. My desire to remain here is not great, knowing so long as I am in this house of clay I am absent from the Lord. Why should I think it strange to be removed from this place to that wherein is my hope, my joy, my crown, my elder Brother and my Father, and all the glorified saints singing the songs of Moses and the Lamb forever."

It is said of Robert Bruce that he did preach as one having great power, for he knocketh down the Spirit upon us all. There was none in his time who preached with such power of the Spirit of God. His prayers were short when in public, but every word or sentence he spoke was like a bolt or shot from heaven. He spent much of his time in private prayer. But his sermons seemed to be like a bolt shot down from heaven. He died in August, 1631, telling his daughter, "My Master calls me."

Robert Baillie, of Jerviswood, is justly entitled to remembrance of his posterity on account of his distinguished talents and virtues. He was born of an ancient and honorable family, long known as the supporters of civil and religious liberty. The testimony of his most illustrious contemporaries proves him to have been one of the best and greatest statesmen of his time. He suffered great persecution and afterwards was condemned to be hanged on December 24, 1684, at the market cross of Edinburgh, Scotland. His body was to be quartered and one of the quarters to be put on the tolbooth of Jetburgh, another at Lanark, a third at Ayr, and a fourth in Glasgow. When sentenced to death he said, "My lords, the time is short. The sentence is sharp. But I thank God who hath made me as fit to die as you are fit to live." So he was another of the martyrs.

Alexander Penden, known as the Scotch prophet, met with a remarkable deliverance when the enemy was close upon him at the Shotts Hills. He called his followers to stand still and pray, and in that prayer he said, "Lord it is the enemy's day, hour and power. Give us strength to flee for our strength is gone. Twine them around yonder hill, Lord, and cast a cloak around Old Sandy, and save us this one time." At the end of his prayer there was a thick mist arose like a very heavy cloud between them, so that their enemy lost sight of them and truly went around the other side of the hill which was a small mountain. I have looked upon the spot myself. He said on one occasion, "Bury me where you like, I will be lifted again." But he said the man that put hands on his corpse four things would befall him. First he would get a great fall from a house. Second, he would fall into adultery. Third, he would get into theft, and for that he would have to leave the land. Fourth, he would make a melancholy end for murder. All of which came to pass. This man's name was Murdock, a mason by trade. But he was then in the military service. He was banished to West Virginia for theft, then afterwards was hanged for murder.

In this last sermon he said that a stone would be cut out of the mountains without hands, and God would be avenged on the great ones of this earth and the inhabitants of the land for their wickedness. But that the church would come forth in beauty and in glory as a bride adorned for her husband.

Now brethren, this is written with a prayer to God that you may have learned to know some more of the cost that was paid for liberty—for religious liberty. And we might more and more thank God for such men as God did call from the condition of the Dark Ages to be reformers and become martyrs for the Christ's sake, that the fetters of bondage might be broken and did prepare a way for the everlasting gospel in its fullness to be established for the last time.

May we all be more faithful and appreciate more fully the great sacrifice that has been made by those many martyrs that gave their all and their lives for the sake of truth.

May God bless his people in Jesus' name.

JAMES BAILLIE.

LAUGHTER

* "There is heaven in a laugh" is a saying not without its truthful significance, for it certainly does many times what we hope heaven and its anticipation will do for mankind. It brings happy results. A hearty, spontaneous laugh is a blessing to man.

It relaxes the nerve tension, it assists digestion, it expands the lungs, it quickens sluggish blood circulation, it brightens the eye, and gives the lines of the face the upward curve of beauty.

It softens our griefs, dispels despair, drives away imagining calamities, mollifies our hatred, soothes our fiery tempers, heals broken hearts, minimizes our actual pains, cements friendship, and prevents crime.

Laugh, brother, laugh! and thank the Lord that you can; for there are times and places when one cannot, and these are not heavenly places: at a drunkard's grave, at the hanging of a murderer, at the bedside of our suffering dear ones, at the commission of a crime, in hell.

And there are other times that it is not only bad form, but actually sinful, because contrary to God's expressed will. The same can be said of prayer, that great wellspring of life.

What! is there a time when prayer can be displeasing to God? I think so—many times. One I might mention is when the elders are leading a large prayer and testimony meeting according to the direction of the Spirit and admonish the members to be brief and not intrude upon their brothers' rights. Then, after giving a long testimony, engage in a long-drawn-out prayer. What does it do? Tires the audience, discourages those who perhaps have been waiting weeks for an opportunity. It wounds the leaders and drives away the Spirit, and perhaps all unconsciously by the prayer.

The Scriptures say there is a time for all things. "There is a time to laugh." Modern revelation says also that there is a time to refrain from it. (Doctrine and Covenants 59:3, 4.) Upon the Lord's day, when offering up your prayers and sacraments and confessing your sin. Much laughter is called a sin. (See also 85:19.) In calling a solemn assembly excess of laughter is forbidden, and in paragraphs 36 and 37, in organizing the solemn assembly into a school of the prophets in the house prepared for it, we are commanded to put away all laughter.

The Lord is not unreasonable in his demands upon us, simply wants us to be reasonable. I no more think that God would take laughter out of life than he would take the songs from the birds, or the playfulness from the lambs in the field.

The perpetual giggle, the forced he! he! and the metallic rattle of the fool and the half-fool do not belong to what we are writing about. And I presume the Lord thinks there is no need of a revelation on these things.

Beware of the person who does not or will not laugh, in the proper time. And pity the poor, unfortunate one who cannot laugh at all.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

IF GREAT BRITAIN HOLDS JERUSALEM

Since the year 637 A. D. the Turks have been overlords in Palestine, masters of Jerusalem, Bethlehem and Nazareth. Moslem misrule and oppression have been able to stamp this stigma on the noblest of world religions, not through lack of strength but through lack of union among the Christian nations. Will the stigma be removed? Will this one bright light shine forth from the darkness of the present storm?

Already the British troops are firmly entrenched in the ancient city of Bagdad. Already the British guns are within twenty miles of Jerusalem. How the map of the Near East will be redrawn we do not know. But one result we can confidently count upon. Mesopotamia, the Garden of Eden, Bagdad and all the rich country that cradled our present civilization will never be allowed to lapse to the misrule that turned those once bounteous plains into stony deserts. The Turk will be swept away from the sacred soil of Palestine.

And what then?

Two benefits will follow. Palestine will be civilized. Jerusalem will become a Christian city. These two blessings have so intimate an appeal for the hearts of all Christian worshipers that national sympathies or antipathies sink into nothingness beside them. Probably the British will administer the civil affairs of Palestine and Syria as they now control the destinies of Egypt—to the undoubted good of that country. Or the future of the Holy Land may be guaranteed by the joint action of all Christian people. The details are unimportant. The glorious fact is this—Jerusalem after nearly two thousand years of Moslem domination, will at last become a Christian city.

Previous to the year 1914 a visit to the Holy Land was an adventure. Jerusalem was as inaccessible to the ordinary tourist as Senegambia. Thousands of Americans have visited Rome and Athens and Cairo and Calcutta and Capetown to every one who has set eyes on Jerusalem, Bethlehem or Nazareth, cities whose names are so closely woven into the religion of his own country. The misrule of the Turk, the dirt, disease and difficulty attending travel in the Holy Land, have sealed it up to the rank and file of Christendom.

The victory of the British, through that rapid and silent advance from Suez to Jerusalem, may bring our children a chance to enter more completely into their Christian heritage. Jerusalem to the body of Christian worshipers may no longer be a picture in a book or a name on the atlas, but a real experience; a place no more off the beaten track than Los Angeles is to the present globe trotter.

For if the British retain possession of Palestine, its development is assured. Nathan Straus, the New York Philanthropist, talking to friends in Pasadena at the time Turkey had just entered the war, expressed the hope that one outcome of the struggle would be the passing of the Turk forever from the land of Palestine. In that case, he said, under British rule—which he even then anticipated—he saw great chances for American investments. He would like to build two tourists' emporiums, a "Hotel Virginia" at Joppa and a "Huntington" in the suburbs of Jerusalem, a commercial venture though prompted by religious sentiment. He believed that Jew and Christian working together under a decent government could restore to Canaan its ancient renown, "a land flowing with milk and honey."

Lloyd George, speaking at the same time to a very different audience in London and in a very different tone, said, "The hour has struck on the great clock of destiny for settling accounts with the Turk. He comes to plenteous lands and the tread of his blood-stained sandal scorches and withers life and fertility. His downfall will bring gladness, security and peace to a land long oppressed by his grim presence."

When we hear two men from two such opposite reasons predict the resurrection of the Holy Land to the place it has long occupied in our imaginations, and ought to occupy in law and fact, we can understand how much this news item—"the British troops are within twenty miles of Jerusalem"—portends for the adherents to all and every Christian creed and ideal.

It portends something more vital than a brave vaunt that the cross has at last dislodged the crescent from the sacred hills about Jerusalem. It portends peace and security for all who wish to visit the old historical scenes of the Bible, to tread the same soil trodden by the Redeemer of mankind. It means safe investment of American capital in the rich valleys of Mesopotamia and opening new avenues for American commerce in a region that once supported cities as populous as Chicago, the granary of the ancient world.

If it may bring this good to Asia Minor generally, what may it not effect for Jerusalem itself? Perhaps the founding there of a great modern international university, or the erection of a universal temple of worship to recall the glories of Solomon where Christians can be called from all parts of the world as easily as convocations are arranged to-day in New York or Saint Louis or Los Angeles. Under a stable government the possibilities of Palestine for travel, for commerce, for agricultural development will be a leading feature in our after-the-war period.

So in the twentieth century is repeated the riddle of Samson, "Out of the eater came forth meat and out of the strong came forth sweetness," and the nations may find the answer in the long delayed restoration of the beautiful city of Zion.

It matters not what the motives were that sent out that expeditionary force from Suez to Jerusalem. What matters to all true Christians is the probable results to follow the military operations. And if those results establish a Christian government in the land hallowed to us in church service and Sunday school, in hymn and sermon and ritual, endeared to us by a hundred Bible stories, cherished as the home of the King and servant of humanity, one lasting good unsuspected by any of the makers of the great world war, will have risen from the ashes of its destruction.

The approach of that expeditionary force to the gates of Jerusalem may in the years to come lift up the Holy City of Zion to be the religious center of a united Christendom.—An editorial in the Los Angeles Times, March 4, 1917.

Instead of letting the children clog their stomachs with cheap candy, keep in the pantry a supply of dried fruits—prunes, figs, dates, raisins, peaches, pears; and keep them soft and eatable.—The Medical World.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

Child Training

(Read at an open meeting of Mother's Problems Class of the Council Bluffs Auxiliary.)

How great, how wonderful the power
Of a helpless baby small!
That like a fragrant, folded flower
Within a bud of sweetest dower;
Right from heaven seems to fall.

Its first weak cry has wondrous power
To at once dispel the fears
Of many a waiting, anxious hour,
And gratitude and love to shower
Where had been distress and tears.

Its form, so helpless, can awaken
Woman's purest, truest love,
That from her heart can ne'er be taken,
So strong it never can be shaken—
God-implanted mother love.

A babe, God given power possessing,
With its pure presence sweet,
Can claim protection and caressing
To father, mother, prove a blessing,
Making joys of home complete.

By turning ancient history's pages,
Love for children, we will see
Was strongly felt by wives and sages;
And Christ's words come from bygone ages,
"Let the children come to me."

A child has rights—the first of many
Is the right to be well born;
To start earth life with few, if any,
Inherited drawbacks, and many
Noble traits and gifts inborn.

And parents should make an endeavor
In themselves to cultivate,
As from selfishness they sever,
Desired traits in offspring, never
Putting off until too late.

A right environment and training
May do more for little ones,
Their inborn evil traits restraining,
Their good desires all retaining,
Than heredity has done.

Did some one say no preparation
Need be made for this great work?
And yet they made great preparation,
O'ercoming many a sore vexation,
Having not one wish to shirk,

When unto honor they aspired,
Or a salary would obtain,
Well knowing if they'd be admired,
Or if distinction they desired,
Their efficiency must gain.

What work to mortals has been given
 Needing more efficiency
 Than that important—yea, God given
 Child training work? Yet who has striven
 To attain efficiency?

One argues, "Laws for children's training
 In a book we'll never find,"
 Wise ones have lived—there are some remaining,
 Who learned and still are knowledge gaining,
 Of child nature and the mind.

We can recall when retrospecting,
 Incidents of long ago,
 Which prove to us as now reflecting,
 We oft forget, or are neglecting
 Childhood's inmost thoughts to know.

A knowledge of child mind and training,
 And a wish to justice see,
 Create desire for an obtaining
 Of thoughts and motives—they explaining,
 Acts which wrong might seem to be.

We learn from study on child training,
 Not alone of traits and mind,
 But food and clothing and all pertaining
 To health and comfort, or restraining
 From the harmful we will find.

It tells of games and habit forming,
 Work and reading for the child;
 And warns against temptations swarming
 About their pathway, oft transforming Form the moral to the wild.

"No time" says one, "for this children training,"
 Yet they spend much time and thought
 In less important knowledge gaining
 And precious eyesight often straining
 That adornment might be wrought.

"No time," and yet they spend the hours
 In befrilling dainty clothes;
 Use physical and mental powers
 In needless work, and waste long hours
 In social life and shows.

Oh, mothers, teachers, all endeavor
 To prepare for this great work.
 The most important work that ever
 Was placed in mortal care, and never Any duty must we shirk.

'Twill be a work for our whole being—
 For the hands, the mind, the heart;
 For we must be alert, and seeing
 The many needs of their dual being
 If performing well our part.

Reward will come when strong, efficient
 Youths and maidens we will see
 In arts and sciences proficient,
 To fellow men and God omniscient
 Giving service cheerfully.

SISTER A. E. DEMPSEY.

The High Cost of Living

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves; covetous, etc."—2 Timothy 3.

I think that we can all agree that perilous times are at hand. The reason is that men love their own selves and are so covetous that they disregard the burdens that by their acts and attitude are being placed upon their fellow men. This condition of heart and mind leads to oppression of the poor, and poverty follows in its wake.

We who are fairly well supplied with the necessities of life can scarcely realize the extent to which poverty prevails in our own land of inexhaustible natural resources and wonderful mechanical achievements.

In the statistics compiled by the Industrial Relations Commission in their report to Congress we learn that in the city of New York one out of every twelve who die is buried at the expense of the city.

It has been found that in order for a family of five to be housed under sanitary conditions, receive proper food, raiment, and education, that an income of seven hundred dollars is necessary, and yet 64 per cent of the wage earners live below this standard; 31 per cent receive less than $500 a year, while only 5 per cent live above the poverty line. These conditions affect almost every phase of our existence and are very noticeable in the effect upon the health, for where poverty exists there is lacking proper nourishment and medical attention.

In the survey at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, made by the Federal Children's Bureau, it was found that the death rate of children under one year of age greatly increased as the wages decreased. In families where the wages were $10 a week or less there were 256 deaths out of every 1,000 babies born, while in families where the wage was $25 a week, the rate was only 84 per 1,000.

A contributing factor to our present economic condition is the concentration of the wealth of the Nation, which places the power to control our necessities in the hands of a few. This statement can be better appreciated by the following figures: 2 per cent of the people control 60 per cent of the wealth; 33 per cent of the people control 35 per cent; 65 per cent (the poor) control only 5 per cent.

Philanthropy has done much to hold things in better balance, and when asked before the Industrial Relations Commission concerning the effect of philanthropic work, Mr. Guggenheim said that had it not been for this kind of work that there would have been a revolt.

I have outlined briefly some of the causes leading to poverty and which has its bearing upon the present high cost of living. I have been asked to suggest ways to lessen the cost of living. This can be accomplished in some homes by proper management. I have known of homes where the children, although working, contributed nothing to the operation of the home. This is false education and will prove detrimental in after years to the child. Just recently a young married lady told me that a fatal mistake had been made in her training. She said, "When I worked I was permitted to spend all I earned, was never taught economy, developed extravagant habits which were hard for me to overcome and control when I became a housewife."

Every wage earner should contribute toward the expenses of the home and be taught to repress unnecessary wants and to always save some, no matter what their wage might be.

A very practical way that women may economize is to make their own clothes and trim their hats. Each week there is a class in dressmaking, conducted by Sister Sturges, and in millinery by Sister Esгар; these sisters are consecrating their services that you may have opportunity to develop your talents which now lie dormant and which will prove helpful in overcoming the high cost of living. Why pay five, six or seven dollars for a new hat when by a little thrift and ingenuity you can work over an old one for two or three dollars? Mothers with growing families can make many garments that are seldom seen, from flour sacks or sugar sacks. These can also be used for towels. Many doubtless do this, but some may not.

The supplies for the table represent one of our largest sources of outlay, and the buyer will save much by keeping away from package goods as far as possible. The same pound of crackers which in bulk cost ten cents a pound will cost eighteen cents in packages. I know that there is an argument in favor of sanitary condition of package goods, but most things which are put up in packages can be found just as clean and sanitary in bulk—clothespins, for example. There is always an advantage in buying in quantities. Have your neighbors join you and buy in large quantities instead of five-cent purchases.

The credit business and the telephone is a curse to the common people. Learn to run your house on a cash basis. Set your stakes and drive to them. If you cannot afford to spend more than five dollars a week for food, live on that amount, even if you have to eat bread and milk at the end of the week. You won't starve and you may have better health by reason of your self-denial, and you'll feel more like a man when you meet your grocer; it won't be necessary for you to cross the street to avoid meeting their creditors.

Gardening will prove a pleasant diversion and also profitable. If more of our land were put under cultivation, food products would be more plentiful, hence cheaper. At the present time only 18 per cent of all farm lands held in tracts of 1,000 acres or more is under cultivation, with from 60 to 70 per cent of the small farms. Aside from the revenue that will be derived from the garden, our children can be taught to be industrious. No child should grow up in idleness as so many do who are raised in the cities. Work has O. K. in it.

JAMES F. KEIR.

Our Busy Auxiliary Workers

HAILEYVILLE, OKLAHOMA

Sister J. S. White, of Hartshome, Oklahoma, writes of the active work of the relief and service department we have at Haileyville, one mile from her home. While the numbers in this branch are few, they have remodeled their church, the sisters undertaking to furnish the organ and the pews. They have the former paid for, and owe but fifty-five dollars on the pews purchased a year ago, at a cost of three hundred dollars. Besides, they have bought a set of rostrum chairs, which showing we think splendid, for the auxiliary local with a membership of only twenty-four enrolled.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

From Brooklyn, through Sister Ward L. Christy, press chairman, we learn that the Brooklyn local, while not old in organization nor large in numbers, is gradually extending its arms of usefulness through the untiring and faithful work of the members. Until last October, it consisted of only the aid department, but now they have a live Oriole circle, under the able leadership of Miss Mable Harris, and one class under the educational department. The majority of the latter class, feeling that they wished more fully to understand the doctrines of the church, and how best to present it to others, decided to take up that line of study and research, and their pastor, Brother Ward L. Christy, was chosen as instructor. Their first lesson on the subject, "The genesis of the church," proved very interesting, and promises well for the future development of the class. They hope to be able to respond to the call for helpers with many willing and qualified who will say, "Here am I; send me!"

Independence Stake

By invitation of Mrs. McNichols, the stake president, all the officers of stake and local executive committees of the Woman's Auxiliary, met at her home February 23 to get acquainted with one another and discuss matters of importance concerning the work of the auxiliary. A resolution was carried that we have a big "get acquainted" meeting in the near future, and such committees be appointed that a personal invitation be given to every woman in the stake. Plans and arrangements were left to the executive committee.

After the formal work was finished, the hostess introduced a pleasant feature by serving refreshments. In the serving, the colors red, white and blue were used in commemoration of Washington's birthday. A pleasant social hour followed and an adjournment was taken subject to call of the president.

The first convention of the Woman's Auxiliary, under the new regime, was held on March 10, 1917. The feature that was of interest to all was the lecture by Mr. George Melcher, superintendent of bureau of research and efficiency of Kansas City schools. His lecture was on thrift and good management in the home as a remedy for the high cost of living. Here are extracts from his lecture:

"The spirit of thrift and economy is not in the air. The base of expenditure is on what the child's playmate has!

"There is a difference between thrift and stinginess. No one likes the stingy person.

"Get the idea of thrift into our children, but first get it ourselves.

"There must be a saving for the future. In renting a home there is no temptation to save money and when a man is without work, nothing has been saved for that time. Let the children save their pennies.

"In Kansas City the school children have accumulated $500,000 in fifteen years by putting their pennies and small amounts into a savings bank. At present there are about $50,000 or $60,000 there on deposit.

"Get an ideal of purpose for saving. Let the children earn money. Do not wish them to become wage earners, but my boy of ten mows the lawn and we pay him for it. When he was nine years old he mowed the lawn for a neighbor and they gave him twenty-five cents for it. It was a problem to teach him to save that money.

"If one has an income of $250 he should save $25 of it, and that becomes a reserve fund. If the income is larger, save more of it. One ought to organize and so provide for the future. Saving or thrift is fundamental.

"Years ago we were willing to walk, now we ride in automobiles. We would be much better off by taking strenuous hikes and laying up a reserve fund for strength.

"Home makers should make a study of balanced rations. Some years ago I was teaching at a fair salary and a colored man was also a teacher in the same place. We bought supplies at the same store. I avoided eggs at twenty-seven cents a dozen as too high, but the colored man bought them when they were as high as thirty-five cents. Upon inquiry it was found that he spent his entire income before he received his salary.

"Rice and mush are good foods. Cornmeal mush is nutritious. It pays to buy in large quantities. Some people will telephone for ten cents worth of things and have them delivered.

"Farmers' wives are the most extravagant.

"Foods cooked and left over can be cooked over again by the secrets of domestic science. Excess of food should be thrown on the market to reduce prices. The gigantic waste in cost must be paid and levied as a tribute on every individual.

"Boys and girls should learn the divisions of human life, head, heart and hand. The church has been looking after the heart, the public schools the head, but who has been looking after the hands?

"Farmers specialize. At one time the farm produced all things needed and the children were educated. Great men were educated on the farm.

"The garden proposition that you are talking of, for the training of the boy and girl, is of value as an educational force in the life of that boy and girl.

"Many divorce cases may be traced to the fact that the home makers have not been educated properly and are not contributing to happy homes."

The first Sunday in the month is devoted to the Woman's Auxiliary under the auspices of the general officers and this month Bishop Keir gave us a good lecture on the high cost of living that one does not know just where to make extracts from it, and, as it is so practical, we send it entire, believing that it will benefit all the homes of the church.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Scott-Turney Debate

Thinking that the readers of the Herald will be interested in hearing of the public discussion held at Allenton, Michigan, between Elder S. W. L. Scott of our church and Elder D. B. Turney of the Methodist Protestant Church, I offer the following:

The discussion began February 20 and closed March 9, one session a day, Saturday and Sunday nights excepted.

Elder Moore acted as moderator for Elder Turney part of the time, and when not present, Elder S. B. Waite filled his place. I acted as moderator for Elder Scott. Mr. W. H. Bristol of Almont, Michigan, was selected as the third man to act as chairman of the discussion. Two propositions were discussed.

First proposition: Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is at variance with the Scriptures in origin, faith, organization, doctrine, and practice. D. B. Turney affirmed, S. W. L. Scott denied.

Second proposition: Resolved that the Methodist Protestant Church is at variance with the Scriptures in origin, faith, organization, doctrine, and practice. S. W. L. Scott affirmed, D. B. Turney denied.

Seven sessions of two hours each were given to each proposition. The speakers alternating every thirty minutes. The debate was held in the Methodist Protestant Church near Allenton.

Elder Thomas L. Clark a Latter Day Saint missionary had held some meetings at Allenton and some had been baptized into the church. This did not suit the pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church so he sent for Elder D. B. Turney to lecture against the Saints. Elder Turney arrived, and for several nights he abused and slandered the Saints in a shameful manner. Elders R. H. Huston and J. R. Grice were present and finally arrangements were made for the discussion.

The attendance was quite good considering the cold weather. Some came for thirty miles to attend.

Elder Turney's stock in trade was to attack the character of Joseph Smith, and by Utah witnesses he tried to prove that Smith was a polygamist. Brother Scott met this by showing that saints of God in other ages had been slandered and misrepresented, and that the evidence from Utah had failed before the western division of the circuit court at Kansas City, Missouri, when the temple lot suit was had before Judge Philips.

Elder Turney claimed that the Spalding Romance was the foundation for the Book of Mormon. He tried to show that Mr. Spalding had written a different manuscript than the one D. P. Hulbut got from Mrs. Spalding, but when Elder Scott traced the very manuscript that was testified to by Mrs. Spalding as being the one her husband had written, and the one claimed to be the origin of the Book of Mormon, from Mrs. Spalding to Mr. Hulbut and from Hulbut to E. D. Howe and from Howé to L. L. Rice, who purchased the printing press and library of Howe, and from Mr. Rice to Oberlin College where a copy was secured and published by Bishop E. L. Kelley, the Spalding story went down in the eyes of many, but no doubt there will be some who will still hold the Spalding story in preference to the truth of the Book of Mormon. No debater, nor minister has ever yet been found that was able to convince all his hearers. Christ did not accomplish this, but many who heard were made friends to the cause.

Infant baptism was held out as a Bible doctrine by Elder Turney but when Elder Scott showed that Christ's gospel must first be taught, then believers only were fit subjects for baptism, it looked different. Elder Turney asserted that John the Baptist sprinkled water on Christ and that this was the way John baptized Christ, but when Elder Scott demanded the proof for this assertion, it was not furnished by Elder Turney. We do not blame him for not furnishing the proof, as such proof does not exist, but we do think a debater should furnish more to the audience than his assertion of a thing if he expects them to believe what he says.

The Methodist Protestant Church was organized in 1830 at Baltimore, Maryland, by members of the Methodist Episcopal Church who had become dissatisfied in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Elder Turney claimed that these persons held a two-day prayer meeting before they organized the Methodist Protestant Church and then another prayer meeting after they had finished the organization. Elder Scott showed that while they prayed they did not believe that God would speak or give revelation in our day. No revelation was claimed, so that what was done was without direction from God and did not receive his approval. That it was man made, differing in doctrine and practice from the Bible doctrine.

A strong contrast was shown, by Elder Scott between how men were called of God to preach in Bible times, and how some men assume to preach without a divine call now. Elder Turney claimed that as Christ gave a commission to preach, that that commissioned anyone to preach. Elder Scott called attention to the commission and showed that it was to the eleven apostles, and that when Paul and Barnabas were selected to be apostles that they did not depend on the commission given to others but were called by revelation in the thirteenth chapter of Acts. "The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Notwithstanding Elder Turney denied present-day revelation, yet he asserted that he was called by revelation to preach as much as Paul was.

The Saints at Allenton cared for the visiting Saints during the debate. The Methodists stood by Elder Turney and the Saints stood by Elder Scott. We think that much good was done by the discussion. Many heard our position who had not heard it before. Mr. W. H. Bristol proved to be a good chairman. At the close of the discussion the Saints presented him with a copy of the Book of Mormon. In gospel bonds.

Fall River Massachusetts

At the Massachusetts district conference in Providence, Rhode Island, February 4, the Lord spoke to the Saints regarding their sick; he said that some were sick unto death, that they were in his hands and would soon be removed. Fall River Branch has suffered a loss of three of its best since that date, namely, Phoebe Wilkinson, William Wylie and Martha Cockcroft.

These are times of trial. It pays to be prepared for every emergency, we know not the day nor the hour when we may hear the summons, "Come home." The question with us is, "Have we our lamps trimmed and burning?" if not, we may be among the foolish virgins.

Fall River has lost a number of members in the last few years in various ways. This loss has discouraged the Saints somewhat, but there still remain many that are trying to keep the "old ship" afloat, by attending to church duties and studying to make themselves better able to give a reason for the hope they have in Christ Jesus.

This branch is blessed with a splendid Woman's Auxiliary, which at present time comprises a relief and service department, an educational club and two Oriole circles, which are under the care of Sisters J. W. Hull and Ella Gilbert. There is also a class of ladies meeting weekly, who study the Book of Mormon, two normal classes, and a young men's club.

Bishop M. C. Fisher was with us on March 18, and gave us some instruction that was food for the soul. The Lord is using our brother as a mouthpiece to impart some special information to the Saints, that is needed at this very time to help build them up in the faith, and bring us all to a more perfect understanding of our duties and privileges. May we all give heed to the counsel of the Lord, speaking through his authorized representatives. The bishop told us regarding some prophecies that were delivered at three of our late district conferences and conventions; he said he had been praying to the Lord to give this particular information to his people, and his prayers were answered in a most marvelous way on the three different occasions.

How often we keep struggling along single-handed, forgetting that the Lord is a copartner in this work, and that he should have a chance to say something as to how this work should be carried on.

The city of Fall River is constantly undergoing a change—the English-speaking people are gradually moving out and foreigners are moving in. This is caused by a demand for skilled labor in other sections, and they are willing to pay a higher wage scale than the mills of this city. Fall River has a population of 128,000. There are 111 cotton mills, containing approximately 4,000,000 spindles, and employing 37,000 operatives, weaving over 2,000 miles of cotton cloth a day. This represents an investment exceeding $50,000,000 and distributing $305,000 weekly in wages. There are two calico print works, having 43 printing machines with a capacity of 7,000,000 yards per week, besides various other kinds of industries.

Fall River is a great Catholic city, about eighty per cent of the population are of this faith, made up principally of French Canadians, Portuguese and Italians. Our church is in the French Catholic section, making it hard to do much proselyting in this neighborhood. Many discouragements have come to this little band of Saints in time past (both external and internal) but through it all there still remain many noble representatives of the faith; probably this is the result of the refining process that we all have to go through sooner or later. Trials are sometimes the very things that are needed for our spiritual development, if we cannot learn any other way. Robert Browning Hamilton says:

"I walked a mile with pleasure;
She chatted all the way,
But left me none the wiser
For all she had to say.

"I walked a mile with sorrow
And ne'er a word said she;
But oh, the things I learned from her
When sorrow walked with me."

The Signs of the Times

Upon one occasion Jesus asked the Pharisees and Sadducees, Can ye not discern the signs of the times? (Matthew 16:3.) If he were here to-day, he would ask this wicked generation if they could discern the signs of the times. I think they could tell him about the weather as they did in those days, but they could not tell him anything about the signs of the times and what is coming on this generation because they have rejected the counsel of God and killed the prophets. We are living in a great day and that wonderful time spoken of by God's prophets and apostles. The coming of our Savior back to earth to execute righteous judgment is near at hand.

Jesus Christ said just before he returned to the earth there would be distress of nations with perplexity, and the sea and the waves roaring. (Luke 21:25.) I wonder if the nations are distressed to-day. If they are not, I don't care to be here when they are. I wonder if the sea is roaring with German submarines. The Lord gave Joseph Smith a revelation in August, 1831, that there were many dangers and many destructions coming upon the waters. (Doctrine and Covenants 61:1.) In paragraph three the Lord said to Joseph Smith that the day would come that no flesh should be safe upon the waters. Friends, don't you think that time has come? Yes, a thousand times, yes. They are trying to build against those destructions, but it is all in vain, for the Lord told the prophet of this age it would be as it now is. When they built the great Titanic that cost ten million dollars it was but man's latest challenge to the great deep. Mighty and majestic she was, the grandest of all ships that plowed the mighty deep. She was the monarch of all she surveyed, but while sailing along under the silvery veil of a starlit night with her thousands of brilliant lights flashing out on the surrounding air she met a monster in her pathway—a mountain of ice journeying southward, which claimed the right of way and disputed with the gallant ship. The art of man and the power of nature crossed swords. Man's scepter fell and he must bow to God and acknowledge that he holds the balance of power.

The Lord revealed to Joseph Smith in January, 1831, (Doctrine and Covenants 108:6) that he would smite the rocks, the ice would flow down from the north country and ancient Israel would come from the north country to the land that God had given their father, Abraham, for an everlasting possession—to him and his seed. They will come singing songs of everlasting joy. I wonder if the people cannot see that the ice is flowing down, yes, the Atlantic Ocean was full of ice when the Titanic was destroyed.

Another statement our Savior made was that just before he returned to earth men's hearts would fail them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. Luke 21: 26 says the powers of heaven shall be shaken. The present condition of things should convince any thinking person that we are living in the last days of this dispensation. "Wherefore, seeing we also are encompassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight of sin which doth so easily beset us and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Let us live the law of God as it is found in Doctrine and Covenants 42, and if we will do this, Saints, Zion will be built up right now. We must have Zion, a place of safety for the Saints of God.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may do all the Lord requires at my hands. Yours for the building up of Zion. E. A. ERWIN.

NASHVILLE, ARKANSAS, March 7, 1917.

From Here and There

Sister Maggie Horner of Pensboro, West Virginia, has been sick for a long time and also isolated. She desires the prayers of the Saints.

All isolated Saints in the Western Nebraska District should get in touch with the home department superintendent of Sunday school work. She wants to get them all to studying the Quarterlies, feeling sure that much good may be done if all will enlist. Write Mrs. Katie Hale, Ringgold, Nebraska.

The Des Moines Saints are much pleased with the results of Brother Augustine Dwyer's lectures at that place and plan to have him return. He lectured at the church several times and twice before the east side high school where fourteen hundred students were privileged to hear him.

One of our western brethren says he enjoys the articles on preaching that appear in the Herald, but complains that they nearly all fail to interpret Doctrine and Covenants 83: 14, last sentence. He inquires: "Would it not be profitable for some capable writer to include an analysis of that text in their writings on this subject?"

We have from an isolated sister a letter and poem that we cannot use till we learn her name, whether we print the name or not. All contributions must be signed, even though a nom de plume is used. If attacks are made on any custom prevalent in the church, or supposedly existing evils are pointed out, don't be afraid to sign your name to what you want to say.

"I just closed Sunday night a two weeks' meeting here at Joy, Illinois. Had a full house the last night. Just fair attendance the rest of the time in spite of the weather. I had out one Roman Catholic who has lived among our people several years but never has heard any of our preaching. The Saints here in general seem to feel encouraged."—E. A. Curtis.

The Niagara Falls Saints rejoice in the possession of a dedicated church building, 28 by 60 feet, with good basement. The dedication was on the 18th, in charge of Elders A. E. Stone and A. D. Angus, the dedicatory prayer by Elder James Pycock. The newspapers are very liberal with their space and commendations. The secretary of the evangelistic society in Buffalo where "Billy" Sunday is carrying on a campaign twenty miles distant, wrote Elder W. J. Landes, the pastor in Niagara Falls that one of the converts had expressed a preference for our church and that he should see that he was taken care of.

Independence Stake

Elder Stanley Clark passed suddenly away March 17, and his funeral took place here March 20. Brethren Krahl and Hunt were in charge and Apostle Russel delivered a comforting and inspiring discourse. Our brother, formerly of Saskatchewan, had been of late in charge of the branch at Grandview, distant about twenty miles. Since dedicating his life to the ministry he had striven to magnify his calling, and so endeared himself to the Saints by a diligent service for the Master.

Among the many Saints locating here recently are Brethren Haskins and Fisher with their families from Los Angeles and Canada.

The weather begins to be somewhat favorable for spring work and the local ministry continue their labors in the spiritual fields. Last accounts tell us of Brethren Peter Anderson and J. F. Curtis holding good audiences. At Walnut Park at the Second Branch was Patriarch F. A. Smith; at Enoch Hill W. D. Bullard and J. E. Vanderwood preached; and at the North Liberty Mission Brethren Warnky and Shepherd interested the people in good gospel instruction. At the Stone Church the meetings as General Conference approaches, seem to take on added interest, for we hear the testimonies of some of the brethren from abroad, which give to us new courage and faith in the work.

On March 18 the Saints rejoiced to listen to Brethren William Aylor and J. F. Garver; also in prayer services they have heard short talks by Brethren E. Rannie, J. W. Metcalf, M. Arber, and Marcus Cook from Oregon; and others are active here also. In discoursing on the signs of the times last Sunday morning, Brother Aylor referred to Matthew 24: 35. "Verily, I say unto you this generation in which these things shall be shown forth, shall not pass away until all I have told you shall be fulfilled."

Brother Garver preached a very forceful sermon at night, his theme extending far and wide into the realm of personal purity and righteousness. Psalm 24 was his text.

The great events occurring in the world of commotion and turmoil, with the frightful tornadoes and floods and fires, and added to these the ruthless cruelties between warring nations going on in distant lands—all cannot but fill the human heart with awe and pity. Men's hearts surely are looking forward with fear, and only those whose trust is in the Lord can stand.

May the Saints continue to receive the manifestations of our heavenly Father's approval as they have in the past, speaking to them as he did last Sunday by his Holy Spirit, comforting them from time to time through visions and the ministering of angels, and giving to them the blessed assurance that comes to his children by obedience, of his love and watchcare here, and a peaceful entrance hereafter into his celestial kingdom.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Hide and Go Seek

"Hide and go seek"—with emphasis on "go." I once entered a large department store where I saw many mottos which said—"grow or go!" I copied it and followed it up with: "Go and grow." We fail, and go from. We go to, and grow. To which class do you belong?

I think of the talent parable (Matthew 25). Two of them doubled their talent, but the third hid his, which resulted in loss, decay, death. If you have a speculative mind, speculate all you please on this text, but this I get—If you allow the other fellow to do your work he will get the reward resulting, and you will die spiritually!

Refuse to use the arm and it withers away. Bandage the eyes and you become blind. Turn a deaf ear to conscience and your doom is sounded.

Charles Darwin, said, "Up to the age of thirty or beyond it, poetry of many kinds gave me great pleasure; and even as a school boy I took intense delight in Shakespeare, especially in the historical plays. I have also said that pictures formerly gave me considerable, and music very great delight. But now for many years I cannot endure to read a line of poetry. I have tried lately to read Shakespeare, and found it so intolerably dull that it nauseated me. I have also almost lost my taste for pictures or music. . . . My mind seems to have become a kind of machine for grinding general laws out of large collections of facts; but why this should have caused the atrophy of that part of the brain alone, on which the higher tastes depend, I cannot conceive. . . . If I had to live my life again, I would have made a rule to read some poetry and listen to some music at least once every week; for perhaps the parts of my brain now atrophied would thus have been kept alive through use. The loss of these tastes is a loss of happiness, and may possibly be injurious to the intellect, and more probably to the moral character, by enfeebling the emotional part of our nature."—Life and Letters, volume 1, page 101.

You do not need to believe Darwin's "monkey story" in order to get much good from the above prolific field of thought. If you do not enjoy religious services as you once did, your case needs immediate attention. You may be contracting spiritual consumption. The only cure is to get the churchgoing habit. You think you are not "getting" anything? Then go and give, give, give. "Cast your bread upon the waters." "Let your light shine." Use your talent. Magnify your calling. Then your work will become a pleasure. You will begin to enter the "more abundant life, and even though your work should call you to the slums or into the bed of hell, "there his right hand will hold you."

* Our lack of enjoyment, many times, reflects on our incapability. The student read his carefully prepared essay. The professor said, "That did very well, but I again admonish you to be more explicit. Prepare as if you were to deliver it before the very illiterate." The student wittingly replied, "What part did you fail to understand, professor?"

You say he is not friendly? Maybe you have not given him a chance to be friendly with you. No doubt Jesus loved John more because he was more lovable. "Reap as we sow," "Rewards according to works," are well-known scriptural texts. If you love righteousness, you love Jesus. "I love you because you love the things that I love" is the foundation stone of harmony in home, church, State and Nation.

I opine we will enjoy all we are capable of, in this life and the life which is to come. "The glory of God is intelligence." And "we shall be changed from glory to glory." "There is a glory of the sun." Shall we hide or go seek?

A One-Minute Talk

Man is an herbivorous animal. His hands, teeth, stomach, glands, bowels, kidneys and liver all are positive proof that he is not carnivorous. God created wheat for man. Bread should be the staff of life and we are told to pray for our daily bread. Where does it say we are to pray for beefsteak or ham?

Did God command Adam to kill and eat? Did he not tell him to eat of the fruits and herbs? Why try to be a carnivorous being? Why can't you eat first-handed protein instead of second-handed? Why rob the vegetables of the brain and brawn and feed it to the hog and then we eat the filthy scavenger? Meat compels the stomach, liver and kidneys to do fifteen times their normal work. How would you like to do work fifteen times harder to-day than you did yesterday? Seldom do I find any of the following diseases where meat is discarded: Cancer, consumption, tumors, gout, pneumonia, or rheumatism. Hang your grease pot, flesh pot and frying pan on the hook, and place this inscription over the pantry door "Plant Life." Great will be your reward. Great will be your saving. No one will suffer but that unnatural appetite.

Yours for health,

DOCTOR A. B. KLAR.

Where Are the Lost Tribes?

For some time I have thought of requesting that some one well informed on the matter write up an article on Doctrine and Covenants 108:6, setting forth the exact teaching of the church in regard to these people who are to come from the north. I am new in the work myself, having been baptized July 4, 1915, and heard the restored gospel only a few times before baptism. I was soon called to be an elder and have done a little work in the vineyard of the Lord. I have studied all my spare time since I came into the church, and used time for study that I could ill afford to spare; and yet I don't know much.

I have put together the teachings of Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants on this point (the people from the north) the best I could, and I can't prove that these people are to come from a land that has not yet been discovered by the rest of the world. It is true that one might infer from the reading of Doctrine and Covenants 108:6 that the land is now unknown to us, but it does not say so. The Book of Mormon says of the lost tribes, that: "The Lord knoweth whither he hath taken them," and some construe this to mean that they have been taken to a land known only to the Lord and themselves. I don't see that we can prove that, either. They were carried away captive to Babylon and from there they have become mixed with all the world. No man knows now, except it be revealed by Almighty God, whether the prevailing blood in his veins is that of Israel or not. When we are blessed by the patriarchs we are sometimes given our lineage, it is sometimes that of one of the lost tribes. If the blessing is inspired, then we who are of the lost tribes are some of those whom "the Lord knoweth whither he hath taken them." We are not lost, but our lineage is lost.

Doctrine and Covenants 108:5 says in part: "He shall command the great deep and it shall be driven back into the north countries, and the islands shall become one land, and the land of Jerusalem and the land of Zion shall be turned back into their own place, and the earth shall be like as it was in the days before it was divided." This effectually affords the "highway" spoken of in prophecy in various places by which the elect can travel overland to Jerusalem and to Zion. The lands are now all united and the elect may gather from the "four winds." The people from the "north country" may mean people in the north of Europe and Asia as well as any other part of the world, as there will be a highway when the lands are all united again.

Some are offended at me because I do not admit that they have proved the existence of an unknown country which is inhabited by saints. One man (a priest) went so far as to say that our whole church and teaching were a farce and humbug if there is no such unknown land.

Now I don't want to be one of those "who do pervert the gospel," neither do I want to see anyone else pervert it. I have ideas about things and if I am wrong I want to find it out. If the other fellow is wrong and professes to be a Saint and a teacher of the gospel, I want to see him find out the truth. I have had some discussion over this with other elders and I seem to be in the minority in this locality. Would not this be a good subject for some able man of our church to write up for the benefit of some of us lesser lights who seek the truth? Can't you secure the right man and then publish his writing? Of course, we want more than his views on the subject: we want it backed up by scripture.

Hoping to hear from some one through the HERALD on this matter, I remain,

Yours in bonds,

W. S. BEEBE.

[In the SAINTS' HERALD for May 6, 1908, there is a sermon on this subject by W. A. Sinclair. Perhaps some reader can supply the brother with a copy.—EDITORS.]

[The following letter was written by Elder James Kemp some time before his recent demise, and was sent in recently by his daughter, Mrs. Nellie McQueary.—EDITORS.]

CONIFER, COLORADO, February 2, 1917.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written anything to your valuable pages, and as I now live at Conifer where I spent so many years of my life, raised a large family of children, and labored in the Colorado mission, and growing old and unable to go about any more, I want to, through your pages, say farewell to all the dear friends and Saints whom I have labored among, and hope you will all remain faithful to the end of your lives, so that we may meet on the other shore, if no more on this one. And, dear HERALD, I want to say that I have been a subscriber of your paper since the first copy, and how I still love to scan every page as soon as it arrives.

May your work prosper daily, is the prayer of your aged brother in the gospel of Christ.

JAMES KEMP.

STKILDA, DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND, February 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: Brother Moore has reminded us that the Saints are interested in what is going on in church work in New Zealand. There is plenty of room here for work. The census of this town taken this year shows about twenty thousand males and upwards of thirty thousand females. The Utah Mormons have just lately started up here again after an absence of their elders for some years. We are not able to tell why they started up work here again. The new census must be of interest from their point of view, or they may be alarmed over our getting a little foothold here and taking some of their members.

We have talked on the street a good deal since coming here, too much for the good of my throat, which was not built for outdoor work. We are often asked, "Are you a Mormon?" or "What is the difference between you and the Mormons?" We were explaining the difference one evening, in answer to such a question, when the Mormon elders present objected to our statements, that they still believed in polygamy, etc., and that their president still had five wives, while we stood for the one wife system and always had done so. The objections raised lead to a discussion of differences right there on the fountain steps. The first night of it proved bad for me as I had taken a severe cold and my throat was so bad my voice gave out. I wanted to give way and let Brother Hall take it up, but the Mormon, seeing the advantage, objected. I got him to permit Brother Hall to read for me, and soon made him admit that they still believed in polygamy, that it was a command from God, and he even introduced argument in defense of same. He also admitted they still believed in blood atonement when pressure was brought to bear on him, and he introduced arguments in favor of it, confounding the execution of criminals under the Mosaic law with the atonement which Christ made on the cross, also mixing in some argument on the "sin unto death" (1 John 5:16) which is the sin against the Holy Ghost, though the Brighamites try to make that appear to mean that some sins are unto death, i. e., that we should be put to death as an atonement for them. This they do in a vain effort to sustain their "prophet," Brigham, in his teaching the doctrine of salvation to man through the shedding of his blood as an atonement. See Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 220; and Deseret News, vol. 6, p. 397.

"This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation, and it is necessary to spill his blood upon the ground in order that he may be saved, spill it." We read the above quotation on that first night of the discussion so that the people may see for themselves why we mentioned "blood-atonement" as a doctrine of Brighamism in contradistinction to our doctrines. The Brighamites said we had garbled the statement. He took his Bible and read something about a murder in one place and turned over to another place in another book and read, "Go thou and do likewise," and said that was the way we quoted from their books.

My throat was in a very bad condition and so I took the stand and announced that as it was getting late we would adjourn till the next Sunday night when we would give the quotations more fully. I took the opportunity to call attention that we had won the points we started out on, to prove that the Utah Mormon Church was different from ours in that they stood for polygamy, blood atonement, etc., and we opposed those doctrines. The people got the point and many called out, "That's right," "That's true," "That's so." It was agreed that blood atonement should be the topic for the next week and we parted.

That week my condition grew steadily worse and Thursday evening found me confined to my bed. Friday I was the same, and that evening Brother Hall came over and administered to me. I felt better Saturday, and was up all day. But when Sunday night came I was not fit to shout on the street and so withdrew from the discussion and let Brother Hall take it up for me. The Brighamites feeling that they had scored on the previous occasion were on hand. The battle was soon on, but not before I had submitted written propositions for a discussion in a public building where people could be comfortably seated and we would not have to shout loud enough to drown the din of passing cars, which propositions they said they would refer to their presidency.

I stood back of Brother Hall and looked up references for him while he fired the balls. The Mormons began to shout about short quotations spoiling the context, etc., but when J. D. Stead's book with its more lengthy quotations came into play we heard less noise from the Mormons about short and garbled quotations; for the more you read of it the stronger the evidence against them. The argument went from blood atonement to polygamy after the Manifesto, etc., and the battle grew more exciting. We had the advantage of the truth on our side and the books to back us up, while they did not have anything to stand on. So they grew frantic and boisterous but it did no good. While Brother Hall and the Mormons were contending over Joseph F. Smith's testimony before the Senate committee, as to whether he had admitted that he was living in violation of the law of God, Brother Hall contending that he had admitted to violation of both the law of God and the law of the land, Elder Romney declaring that the law of God was not mentioned. This contention was loud and furious, when I opened J. D. Stead's book to the page where the testimony was quoted, put my finger on the words "Law and God" and held it in front of Brother Hall's nose. He took the book and read the question and answer in a loud voice and drove the point home in his characteristic manner and the Brighamite wilted. He gave up entirely. Though he took the stand and said, "This has been all threshed out, in America and everywhere else, and you don't get anywhere by arguing." Though he had invited the discussion to begin with, he was satisfied now to give it up and say, "There is nothing gained in religious discussions." He said he would wait for the decision of the presidency, regarding the further discussion of these points, as he believed they should be discussed in a hall in a properly organized debate. It would be no doubt educational. He had learned something from this experience. Though he did not tell what he had learned, we think he heard a lot of things he did not know were in their books. And he no doubt learned that it is very damaging to their influence with the people to have these things aired in public.

Brother Hall is deserving of the Victoria Cross for his part in the work. We were very glad to have the Mormons come out in public and admit their present belief and practice of polygamy to-day, for they have been and are now distributing tracts in this town wherein they are telling the people that polygamy "has not been preached nor practiced since 1890." We think the only consistent thing they can do now is to go and gather up those tracts again and apologize to the people for trying to mislead them.

We have baptized two since coming here. Some others are interested. Have organized a Sunday school and expect to have a banner school, if we work hard enough. During my first two months here in Dunedin I preached forty-nine sermons. But the outdoor preaching is too much for my throat and I have had to give it up. I devote more time to visiting and boosting for our Sunday school, which I want to see well on its feet before leaving this town.

H. W. SAVAGE.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, March 7, 1917.

Editors Herald: The last time we were permitted to write to your pages we were isolated in Carrington, North Dakota, but we are glad to be able to say that we are located in the Minneapolis Branch again.

When we look about us and see what is transpiring, we are forced to the conclusion that surely the hastening time is near, perhaps more so than many of us suspect. Surely the time has come when we as Saints must begin, if we have not already, to devote more of our time to the advancement of the Master's cause and do the building up of that Zion condition that we hear and read so much about. Often we hear in prayer and testimony meeting, "Oh, how I wish that God would hasten the time when we could gather to Zion and enjoy that peace of mind that we know must be enjoyed by the pure in heart." Saints, let us stop and consider the words, "Zion is the pure in heart." If this be true—as we know it is—then the pure in heart are the ones who will be gathered. Let us remember that the heart cannot be changed in a day, week or month but it takes a constant effort on our part all the time we have to purify our hearts. So if we have not begun, but are just waiting for God to gather us, I am of the opinion that the gathering so far as we are concerned will not be very soon and that our chance to be gathered will be lost.

When we see the attitude of some of our members as regards to service for the Master, we feel that if he were here he would show a different attitude altogether, as he came to do his Father's will and we as his Saints should be willing to do the same, occupying where he desires us to occupy. Unless we are willing to do this, our service to him will not be accepted.

Let us remember that we cannot all occupy in the same place, but as is illustrated in that beautiful building, each stone in its proper place. Should we undertake to put some of the stones from the foundation into the roof we would find that they were of the wrong type and would not serve the purpose as well as the stone that was cut out for that particular place. So in the church let us be satisfied to do the part that is assigned to us and be willing to assist our brother or sister who is making progress, instead of envying him. Remember Jesus said, "As my Father has sent me even so send I you." He came with neither malice, envy, hatred, or strife but came to do his Father's will. Are we doing the same?

Our beloved brother and former branch president, Elder Charles Lundeen, has recently met with an accident in which one of his lower limbs was severed from his body above the knee and also two toes from the other foot. The accident happened while he was at work for a railroad company. He is getting along very nicely, for which we are thankful to the Master. While visiting him the other day he said, "Brethren, I tell you when we are called upon to pass through such trials as this it is a good thing to have a God to lean upon." This is evidence to us that his faith and confidence in God is still unshaken. All who are acquainted with the brother know him to be a servant of God in word and in deed and we feel that surely the Master will care for him in his great affliction. We ask that our brother may have an interest in your prayers that sufficient strength, spiritual and physical may be given him to pass through this trial.

We never know what we shall be called upon to pass through, so let us begin, if we have not already, to prepare for whatever we are called upon to endure. "Perilous times shall be in the last days."

Your brother in Christ,

R. J. WILDEY.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, March 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: If there are any young people of the musical world living in or near Utica, New York, will they please visit Miss Elizabeth Humphry of 1122 Linwood Place of that city.

Miss Humphry is a fine young woman of rare ability. She taught our school here two seasons and there is no one more thought of in these parts than she. She has assisted us in our meetings here, being a fine singer as well as an organist. She is at present in New York, for one year, studying music, and being a stranger there, with the exception of a brother, I am sure she will welcome anyone interested in music. While I cannot say that our church has her especial favor, yet she has no prejudice toward it. She has read With the Church in an Early Day, and pronounced it fine.

My husband has two sisters, nonmembers but both reading our papers, who are quite interested. We wish any Saints who live near them would look them up and also send them some reading matter. I believe if one of our missionaries would visit each of them a good work would be accomplished. They are both living in homestead countries far from any relatives. Their addresses are Mrs. John Krie, East End, Saskatchewan, and Mrs. S. L. Henderson, Natanga, South Dakota.

EFFIE J. DENTON.

TINGLEY, IOWA, March 8, 1917.

Editors Herald: The little band of Saints here are still trying to let their light shine, although things seem very lonely and discouraging so far as church privileges are concerned. There are four families of Saints living here, fourteen members in all. We meet from house to house to hold Sunday school each Sunday, and have sacrament service the first Sunday in each month. When things seem favorable we have an elder come the second Sunday in each month and preach to us, notwithstanding the fact we have an elder, Brother J. J. Christianson, living here whom we appreciate very much. We are always glad to hear him preach to us. We hope the day may soon come when other Saints may move in or the honest ones of this vicinity have courage to come forth and obey, that we might have a branch raised up in this place.

Though a branch be far from here,
We know our God is always near;
He sees and knows our every tear,
He's there to bless when we draw near.

So in his word new courage take,
Our God will never us forsake,
And in our life obedience choose
That our reward we cannot lose.

We as the grass here for a day,
Then to the dust must go the way
To answer to our God on high,
Which shall it be, "Live on or die"?

In gospel bonds,
MARY E. LENT.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, March 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: We so fully appreciate the opportunity afforded by the HERALD, to read of the progression of the work in the various places, that we take pleasure in enlightening the Saints elsewhere as to the advancement of the work in our city.

Brother Wardell Christy's untiring efforts are accomplishing results. The attendance at all the services has increased. The midweek prayer service is gradually increasing in spirituality and attendance. The Religio has increased its attendance fourfold, by changing the hour of meeting from Thursday evening at eight o'clock to Sunday evening at six. The programs are instructive and entertaining. The monthly paper, The Talent Finder, edited by Sister Christy, is not only exceedingly interesting, but has been instrumental in bringing to light some latent talent among our young folks. The ladies of our branch, desirous of becoming more efficient as defenders of the church, and of acquiring the knowledge necessary to convey to others the gospel truths so dear to them, have organized a class, under the inspiring direction of our pastor, to study the history of the church. Those that dread discussion, and therefore avoid it, are those that fear some weakness. Realizing that "knowledge is power," the demand for this class arose.

On February 18, five precious souls rendered obedience to the gospel. The following Sunday, three more were baptized.

Last Sunday, four refugees from the war zone, who were to have been baptized by Brother Greene in Europe, but were prevented by circumstances, obeyed the call of Christ. The mother was born in Belgium, the father in Holland, and the younger boy in Germany. After suffering many hardships and deprivations, they appreciate the privilege of living in the land of peace and freedom.

Brother Christy is in Philadelphia this week, conducting a series of meetings at the Second Philadelphia Branch. Brother Hale Smith is in Brooklyn. To-morrow night Brother Smith will give to the officers and teachers of the Sunday school the benefit of some of his experiences as a normal student.

In the past month, we have passed through two very sad experiences: the death of our young brother, Earl Jack, and the young wife of Brother John Potts. We are all one family, and when one suffers, all suffer. Our hearts go out in sympathy for the bereaved ones. The rapidity with which prophecy is being fulfilled seems to indicate that the separation will not be a long one. Our hope in the gospel gives so much consolation in these hours of trial and bereavement.

MABEL HARRIS, Correspondent.

DEER LODGE, MONTANA, March 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: The papers of the church are certainly welcomed in our home and are sources of instruction. I see many good letters of encouragement that have been written regarding the work of the HERALD and we can plainly see God is with you in your worthy efforts to place his work before his children. I watch the articles that are continued from week to week, studying closely the writer's object in writing, watching inspiration as it comes from educated minds and causes the pen to move that we with fewer privileges might be brought to a higher standard.

What a systematic form of government the Woman's Auxiliary is developing, which will surely accomplish great good if continued.

The army of musicians in their efforts to cultivate with God's household the talent that brings from the hearts of weary souls a new zeal and quickens the spirit, plants there an inspiration of the great celestial kingdom.

Much good is accomplished in each locality where debates are held and many times souls are brought to a knowledge of the truth.

I have been associated with the Reorganized Church for nearly four years. Sometimes my spiritual condition has ebbed low from lack of obedience, but at no time would I have exchanged my new found joy for the pleasure Lucifer has to offer. I ask your prayers in my behalf.

In gospel bonds,
M. G. PERRIN.

SCOTTSDALE, MICHIGAN, March 9, 1917.

Editors Herald: We thought to drop you a few lines of our work in Ludington. This is a historic spot of gospel work of J. J. Cornish, George Washburn, R. E. Grant and others, but which seemed to have almost completely lost out, yet some seed remained, as a Brother Pollard clung on and fitted up a hall over his plumbing shop with about seventy-five or eighty chairs, organ, electric lights, stove and fuel, where we occupied for four weeks with good interest, some attending that had long been discouraged with religion, others that had never read the Bible began to study it for light, even some Catholics. We enjoyed good liberty.

On February 22 the Saints and friends had a surprise party for me at Pollard's Hall, by having a supper in the evening before preaching service. They had arranged for Mrs. Hathaway to keep me at her home that afternoon. Well, she did her best to do so, but I had too much to look after, as we expected to baptize some and were trying to get the Baptist font for it. We got through with it about half past three p. m. and returned to Pollard's shop and some one was sawing boards up in the hall where we held our meetings, so up we went and there stood Adam with handsaw in hand and a broad smile on his face, as much as to say, We are caught. He had a long table almost completed, right where the preacher stood to preach.

Well, to a certain extent their scheme was revealed. They came to the feast from every quarter and the hall was supplied with guests. All seemed to enjoy the fine supper that the good sisters and friends had prepared. They made haste to clear the table, as we were to preach. Brother Charles Barron opened the meeting, and with a few fitting remarks he handed the writer a purse with ten one-dollar bills in it. This was the climax of our surprise. I do not know if we will ever forgive Brother Roy Barron for what he did as he arranged for this in Sunday school in our presence and we did not know it.

We must tell you about the font—how nice it was. Brother Pollard and I saw the committee of the Baptist Church, three in number, they readily gave their consent. I said to Brother Pollard, "things seem to go smoothly here." When their pastor found what was going on there was a veto placed on it, and a phone to us was, "you cannot have it."

We determined to find out why we could not use it, so went and saw the merchant, Frank Nordeen, as he seemed to be the pillar of the committee. He said he did not know anything about the proposition, as he did not have the time to study it, but their minister had and he advised them not to let us have it; and he (the minister) said if we wanted to know why we could not have it to come to him. You can be sure we took the number of his residence and called to see him. We give you a synopsis of our visit. His name is Broome, late of Calumet, Michigan.

He asked us if we were Baptists. We informed him who we were. He gave us to understand he was well posted on Latter Day Saints, as he had been around Nauvoo and Carthage; also that we were virtually the same as the Utah people.

When we turned some such evidence as Governor Ford's message to the legislature, it put a quietus on his knowledge concerning those places.

He said the Baptist Church was the church; we said no, it is a church—from Rome. The church had apostles and prophets in it, yours has none. He said the church was in succession, not the apostles. We said if the church was in succession the apostolic office would remain in it; that because a postmaster died it did not do away with the post office, but simply another would be appointed to fill the vacancy.

Next we got on the subject of baptism, he contended that John 3: 5 meant word and spirit.

On acts 2: 38 he tried to turn Greek on me by saying it did not read that way in the original Greek. We told him we had no objection to his display of ability in Greek, but we had more confidence in the Greek scholars who translated the Bible than any man who posed as such; especially when he was trying to score a point; and further there is no original manuscript in existence. We told him that our experience with most men who posed as Greek scholars was that they did not know any more Greek than we did. Well, suffice it to say we got no Greek rendering on the scripture.

Then he said, "If I believed as you do, that baptism would save people, I would make a good tank and put it on wheels, then get about four good stout men and go through the streets and grab everyone that came along and baptize them." We said, "We do not doubt your word, as it is the nature of man to devise some scheme other than God ordained, but God's way was first to believe, then repent and be baptized, and that willingly, not by force."

We asked him about the laying on of hands. He said he did it. We said, "what for?" Said he, "For ordination; also when I go to pray for the sick." We said, "You people did not used to."—"Well, we do now," said he. We remarked with a smile, "Well, you people keep grabbing a little wool off the sheep and sticking it on yourselves, but you are very spotted yet." We asked, "How about it for confirmation?" He said the Bible did not teach that. We kindly asked him to turn to Acts 8 while we quoted it to him.

He had to O. K. it and said Paul taught it, too. We said, "Why did you people drop it? for you used to practice it; also you had three apostles but never got the other nine." He could not tell, so we gave him the solution to the problem, because they were not the church of Christ.

He said they came all the way down from John the Baptist, we told him we could disprove that with Baptist history alone, and we lifted the curtain of the apostasy a little so he could see we knew of the skeleton in the closet as revealed by history and that we were on the inside of Baptist history as much or more than he was.

This was the straw that broke the camel's back. Finally we landed the real cause why we could not have the font; because we believed in the Book of Mormon. We were glad to have a talk with him, as we understood him better. He said he had to act on his honest convictions, and he would not let anyone use it that preached error; said he would let us have it before he would the Methodist or Congregationalists.

On February 23 we were called to the bedside of Marie Riley who was sick with appendicitis, whom the doctor said should be operated on. She was to be taken to the hospital that day, and they wished me to pray for her, so we did by way of anointing and prayer. Later, they took her to the hospital, but when they came to make an examination they found nothing wrong, they could not even find a sore spot, so sent her home. I saw her a couple of days after running around as smart as a cricket. To God we give thanks.

On the 25th we baptized one; many more seem near the kingdom. We hope to return there some time in June, if the powers that be will allow us to. We came to this place today, so close this, as it is getting so long it will be in danger of the wastebasket. Ever yours in the conflict.

F. S. BRACKENBURY.

PERRY, IOWA, March 14, 1917.

Editors Herald: March 4 was an eventful day with the Perry, Iowa, Branch, it being the fourth anniversary of the organization of the branch, and the calling of our beloved brother, H. H. Hand, to the office of elder and president of the branch.

The sacrament was administered at the morning prayer service, Brother O. Salisbury presiding. In the number partaking of the emblems, it was the largest regular prayer service ever held with us. A number of outsiders were present, also, one being a Salt Lake City lady, who informed us that she was a true "Mormon," and rather boasted that she was a polygamous child.

In further confirmation that the Lord has guided and directed his work at the place from the few scattering Saints who came here twenty-two or twenty-three years ago, down to the present, a prophecy was given admonishing and encouraging the membership, also calling Brother L. W. Maley to the office of teacher. Another prophecy was also given confirming this and calling Brother J. O. Salisbury to the office of priest, and Brother E. C. Kibby to that of deacon. This makes it possible for us to complete the branch organization with the full quorum of officers.

At the Religio hour in the evening a special program in observance of the anniversary was given. Sister Lucy Doss prepared and read an interesting historical sketch, and Sister Nellie Martin composed and read an original poem, depicting the gospel struggle here for the last twenty-three years. These two sisters did much to nourish and keep alive the gospel seed as planted from time to time by the missionaries who came this way during that long time.

Altogether the day was one of thanksgiving and rejoicing for the many privileges that we enjoy and with renewed courage we feel to press on in this glorious work.

Branch Correspondent.

VERNON, COLORADO, March 10, 1917.

Editors Herald: During the past winter I have been laboring mainly near the eastern border of Colorado, between Kit Carson and Wray. Most of the time has been spent effecting new openings. Much prejudice and indifference has been manifest, but amid the storm of prejudice and waves of opposition, the gospel boat has been sailing steadily and successfully onward. "No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm. Kites rise against, not with, the wind." Our antagonists are our helpers in many cases.

Since June of this conference year the writer has led fifty-five souls into the waters of baptism in the eastern part of this district. In our weakness we have been endeavoring to impress upon those tossed to and fro in spiritual Babylon that—

"If we would seek for unity
In this the latter day,
'Our creed all truth,' 's the motto;
'Tis God's appointed way."

The honest in heart are hungering and thirsting for the message we bear, and we have found more openings by far than we have been able to care for. January 1, the writer had fourteen places to hold meetings, and time to care for but three up to the present. I have spent about two years in American fields since returning from the South Sea Island Mission, but I believe firmly that this district is one of the best fields for missionary work and future prospects are bright.

The above is in harmony with the beautiful promises given to the ministry through God's servants at the late Eastern Colorado District conference at Denver. The spirit of unity and peace felt at the Denver conference has been a boon to all and to the attending isolated Saints in particular. The kindness and brotherly love of the Denver Saints in caring for the visitors will ever be remembered by those privileged to enjoy the same.

The district needs more missionaries. May the Lord of the harvest send more laborers into this part of his vineyard.

I am now laboring southwest of Vernon, Colorado, where Elder J. R. Sutton baptized several during the past year. These were valuable additions indeed, and it is a pleasure to be associated with them, also Elder William Kester in our efforts here. I may visit with the Saints of Idalia and Burlington for a few days before leaving for conference. Several were left near the kingdom at the close of our series of meetings at these places. The isolated Saints in particular should remember that "example is more forcible than precept," and that "you can preach a better sermon with your life than with your lips," and in so doing when the missionary comes to your neighborhood you will have assisted him in effecting a new opening. This has been proven so in several localities during the past year.

May we be patient and persevering. God speed the right.
J. CHARLES MAY.

JOHNSON CITY, NEW YORK, March 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: I enjoy the church papers from time to time, in fact before I subscribed for them I could feel myself on the downward path, but I feel to thank my heavenly Father that since I received the Herald I am coming upward and enjoy reading the letters and editorials every week.

I came to Johnson City last June and since being here I have found a family of Saints here and visit them often, although they live four miles from me. We enjoy ourselves and feel the presence of God's Holy Spirit when we meet and sing the hymns and praises and talk of starting the work here. I have corresponded with the home department superintendent of the Scranton Branch and expect Quarterlies from him soon so we can start a Sunday school class.

Since coming here my father and mother and four children have moved here and together with Brother Updyke's family we number nine Saints. I believe that if some elder would come this way he could find some who would be glad to hear the gospel and would accept of it. If you would ask some of the traveling ministry or any elder to stop off and visit us we would be greatly pleased to receive him, and there need be no worry as far as sustaining is concerned, because my heart and soul are in the work and I will do anything to help the cause. If any elder comes this way I will take care of him both lodging and meals.

I hope to hear or see some of the ministry before long, and am as ever in the work and for the work.

Your brother in Christ,
9 Beverly Place. CHARLES ENGLE.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN COLORADO.—With First Denver Branch, February 24. District President J. R. Sutton presided, assisted by James E. Kelley, missionary in charge. Ministerial reports show 462 sermons preached in last six months and 63 baptisms. Reports from 8 branches: Wiley, Wray, First Denver, Second Denver, Trinidad, North La Junta, Fort Collins, Holyoke. Total membership of district, 971. The following ordinations were ordained: George F. Bullard, Freeman E. Bullard and Benton Travis to the office of elder; Frank Cotterell and Coral E. Willis to office of priest; Arthur L. Parsons to office of teacher. Delegates to General Conference: Ammon White, J. Charles May, A. A. Buschow, Mrs. A. A. Buschow, J. R. Sutton, Mrs. J. R. Sutton, A. E. Tabor, Mrs. A. E. Tabor, John Fletcher; alternates: Mrs. Cordelia McCormick, H. B. Coon, Mrs. John Fletcher. The conference was one of the best attended and best enjoyed because of the peace and harmony that prevailed. E. J. Williams, secretary, 1210 South High Street, Denver, Colorado.

The Camera Club

This organization will meet in the office of Brother Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, at the Herald Building, during the sessions of the coming General Conference. The date of the first meeting will be announced during the conference. Brother Smith will preside at the opening session and arrange for other meetings of the club during the conference. Bring your pictures for exhibition. Leave your camera supplies in Brother Smith's office during the conference.

Everyone interested in camera or projector machine work invited to attend. Get interested with a view of becoming a member.

ALBERT KNOWLTON, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1419 Kensington Street.

To the Scattered Members of Holden Stake

At our late conference held March 3 and 4, the matter of issuing transfers for the absent members of our various branches was presented, the object being to remind you of the General Conference Resolutions in this regard. It has been stated that some are unwilling to have their membership placed elsewhere because they expect to, sometime, return to their branch: If you are so located as to be able to attend any branch meetings or the conference of the district in which you reside, please apply at once to your branch president or secretary for transfer to the nearest branch, giving the address of either the president or secretary of that branch. Transfers for our scattered members will be issued as fast as practicable. We trust you will not become offended nor think we are anxious to get rid of you. Should you at any time return for permanent residence you will be gladly received again in accord with the law. Brother D. J. Krahl and F. A. McWethy preside over the Holden Branch. R. E. Burgess at Knobnoster; G. W. Hancock, Warrensburg; James Duffey, Post Oak; C. DePuy, Lees Summit and Charles Gaither, Lexington.

MRS. A. M. FENDER,

Stake Secretary and Recorder.

Addresses

J. R. McClain, Paris, Tennessee, R. F. D. 5.

Auto Service, Conventions and Conference

There will be a five-cent fare automobile service from all trains during these meetings, also from the general services at the church. Those desiring transportation to these services can arrange with O. E. Prall for the same, but special isolated calls will be charged extra. To secure the special rate of five cents these arrangements should be made and passengers ready at time specified. A. M. Chase, chairman entertainment committee.

Architects

The practicing architects, architectural engineers, designers and draughtsmen, and the professionals in all the allied arts who are in attendance at the General Conference will be called together. Profitable meetings are assured for there are a number of things to do when we are well organized. All those who are unable to attend but are willing to enter this field of service are requested to address Henry C. Smith, Y. M. C. A., Somerville, Massachusetts.

Our Departed Ones

CROUCH.—Sarah Crouch was born March 20, 1834, in Lancashire, England. Baptized in 1880 by O. B. Thomas; died February 25, 1917, at Palouse, Washington. Leaves to mourn, 1 son, 2 sisters, 1 brother. Funeral in Eden Valley church, Palouse. Interment in Eden Valley Cemetery; sermon by O. D. Shirk.

RUSSELL.—At Lamoni, Iowa, March 11, 1917, of pneumonia, Vera Maude, daughter of George and Leota Russell, aged 1 year, 10 months, 26 days. She was a sweet child and the parents find it hard to be comforted, even though a baby boy remains with them. Funeral services by H. A. Stebbins and L. G. Holloway.

WYLIE.—William Wylie was born in Quarellon, Scotland, April 25, 1860. He heard the gospel in Fall River, Massachusetts, and was baptized January 5, 1896, by John Smith. On October 13, 1907, he was ordained to the office of teacher, and was serving as the first teacher of the Fall River Branch at the time of his death, which occurred on March 10, 1917. The brother was stricken at the mill where he was employed, and died before medical aid could be summoned. Funeral services were held in the Fall River church, sermon by E. B. Hull.

WILLIAMS.—Catherine Williams, wife of Priest D. T. Williams, was born July 21, 1857, at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, a daughter of D. W. and C. Thomas. Married Brother Williams June 15, 1903. Baptized June 3, 1905, at Fort Madison, Iowa, by James McKiernan. The elders always found a welcome at her home. She will be greatly mourned in the Ottumwa Branch. Died January 20, 1917. Funeral services in Saints' chapel, Ottumwa, Iowa, January 24, in charge of L. G. Holloway, sermon by James McKiernan. Interment in Ottumwa Cemetery.

FRANKLIN.—At Duncan, Oklahoma, March 8, 1917, Brother John A. Franklin, formerly of Davis City, Iowa, died in his eightieth year. He was born August 26, 1836, at Spencer, Owen County, Indiana; came to Davis City in 1855; was baptized by H. A. Stebbins. Married Minerva Caroline White in 1860. Went to Oklahoma two years ago and was brought to his former home for burial by his request. He leaves 2 sons, John A., of Duncan, Oklahoma, and Willard E., of Okaton, South Dakota. Funeral from Saints' church, Davis City, Iowa; sermon by R. S. Salyards.

PATTERSON.—William Patterson born at Norwood, Mercer County, Illinois, September 15, 1853. Died at Lucas, Iowa, March 3, 1917. Married Miss Florence Fellows who preceded him about three years. Baptized October 10, 1895, by E. B. Morgan at Lucas, Iowa. He leaves 3 brothers: John, Chariton, Iowa, Joseph, Chicago, Illinois, and Edie, Hymore, South Dakota, 6 sons: William, John, George, Russell, Leonard and Robert. Three daughters: Lizzie, Lucy and Anna. Also 11 grandchildren. Funeral at Lucas, Iowa, March 5, 1917. Sermon by C. Scott, assisted by Thomas Hopkins.

MCKIERNAN.—Sister Abigail Watson McKiernan was born November 29, 1825, at Elrod, Ripley County, Indiana. Married Patrick McKiernan there August 8, 1844. Located same year at Charleston, Iowa, from here they saw the blaze of the burning temple at Nauvoo. She was the mother of 4 sons and 2 daughters, James McKiernan, the eldest. Baptized by Robert Warnock in 1870. She has been a faithful member. Died at Farmington, Iowa, March 11, 1917. Funeral service held in Saints' church at Farmington, Iowa, March 12, 1917, Reverend Nelson of the Baptist church offering prayer. D. T. Williams of Burlington preached the sermon. Interment in Croton cemetery by the side of her husband.

KEMP.—James Kemp was born in Steepleashton, Wiltshire, England, October 1, 1834. Married Miss Frances Goodsell, September 15, 1858, in England. Accepted of the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints early in life and came to America about 1860 and went with a handcart train across the plains to Utah, but soon tired of them and sought for the Reorganization. Was a resident of Conifer, Colorado for forty years and an elder of the Reorganized Church for many years. Died of apoplexy February 18, 1917. There were 14 children, 10 of whom are still living, 7 were present at the funeral. His wife died 14 months before and on the same day of the month. Funeral held at Conifer and his many friends came for miles around, showing the respect in which he was held. Sermon by Ammon White, prayer by J. E. Williams, interment in conifer cemetery beside his wife.

MORGAN.—Sister Elizabeth Morgan was born August 14, 1846, in Ystalfera, South Wales; married Thomas Morgan in Wales. To this union were born 11 children. She was baptized in 1879, in Wales, by John R. Gibbs. Later came to America and located at Martins Ferry, Ohio, in 1899. Placed her membership in Wheeling Branch. Was afflicted with asthma and bronchitis for many years and endured her suffering patiently, continuing in the faith. Died February 2, 1917; survived by husband and eleven children: Morgan and Mrs. Mary Bodycombe, and William, of South Wales, and Sister Margaret Richards of Steubenville, Ohio; Mrs. Sarah Davies of Martins Ferry, Ohio, and Samuel of Martins Ferry; Walter of Clarksburg, West Virginia; Deborah and David, and Sister Jeanette at home. Funeral services at the home, sermon by Adolphus Edwards, also Reverend Jenkins preached in Welsh.

CONYERS.—Amelia Townly was born April 15, 1858, at Glasgowshire, England. She was the adopted daughter of William Townly, sr., and came with the family to America in 1865 and to Iowa in 1870, uniting with the church that year, and remained true to the faith to the end. Married John J. Conyers at Moorhead, Iowa, in 1880; to this union 4 children were born, two of whom died in infancy. The two surviving are: Mrs. Rasmus Knudsen, of Moorhead; Fred Conyers of Pisgah. Mrs. J. Nelson, of Moorhead, whom she raised, also survives. Died February 25, at her home in Pisgah. Services conducted by Joseph Lane, from Saints' church at Pisgah, and a large number of relatives and friends were present. Buried by the side of her husband in the Preparation Cemetery, he having preceded her on December 22, 1911. Thus passed a true Saint who was highly respected, loved and admired. Her friends were numerous. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints."

NYSWONGER.—Hyrum Nyswonger was born at Jefferson, Ohio, August 6, 1838. Died at Lacona, Iowa, March 8, 1917. Married Miss Elizabeth Pitsenberger in Ohio, September 18, 1862. To them were born 6 sons and 2 daughters. Two of the sons, Clyde E. and Charles N., died in infancy, Alfred C., Hartline, Washington, William H., Hanford Cal., James C., Liberty Center, Iowa, Tyler, Indianola, Iowa, Sarah Frances, wife of William Stemm, near Lacona, and Cara Belle Barger, Denver, Colorado. He removed to Iowa in 1865 where he resided, save one year in Kansas, until his death. He with his wife were baptized at Runnells, Iowa, October 11, 1897, by J. S. Roth. He leaves to mourn his aged wife, 4 sons and wives, 2 daughters and husbands and 25 grandchildren. Funeral at Graceland Church, near Lacona, March 10, 1917. Sermon by C. Scott assisted by E. B. Morgan. Music furnished by the Saints from Lucas, Iowa.

CHASE.—Elisha Wells Chase was born April 21, 1839, in Sparta, Livingston County, New York. Removed to Nauvoo, Illinois, with his parents in 1838 where they resided until the spring of 1846 when they left there and went to Winter Quarters, remaining there and on the Pottawattamie Reservation until the spring of 1848, when they went to Ogden, Utah, remaining eighteen months, then went to California in 1850, returning to Ogden in 1852. Went again to California with a drove of cattle in 1853, sold them and then returned to Ogden, and married Miss Jane McGary in the fall of the same year. To this union were born 16 children, 11 of whom survive. His wife preceded him to the beyond nine years ago. Baptized at Nauvoo in 1843 by his father, Ezra Chase, and was admitted into the Reorganization on his original baptism about 1871, remaining true to the work until his death which occurred March 7, 1917. Funeral from Methodist church, Ogden, Utah, N. L. Booker in charge, J. W. Rushton preaching the sermon.

SMART.—Sister Margaret Smart, whose maiden name was Davis, was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, January 3, 1838. Moved to America in 1856, settling for a short time in Ohio, where she married James Smart, November 4, 1857, moving from there to Utah. She became disgusted with Utah Mormonism, and in the autumn of 1866 became a member of the Reorganization, being baptized by Elder J. W. Gillen. Then went to Montana, where most of her life was spent. Moved with her husband to Independence, Missouri, in 1901, her husband dying the following year on January 2. One child, a daughter, came to bless her married life, but only lived a short time, dying in infancy. Sister Smart died February 7, 1917, leaving one brother and one sister still living, with other more distant relatives. Laid to rest in the Independence city cemetery February 10, the funeral service at the Stone Church being in charge of Elder Earl Corthell, the sermon by Elder Hyrum O. Smith. Sister Smart lived a consistent Christian life. Her home was the home of the elders of the Reorganization in the early days of work in Montana, and doubtless many can testify to her kindness and hospitality.

EVANS.—John R. Evans was born in Wales, December 11, 1836. Married Miss Lucy Williams at Aberdaire, Wales, in 1855. To this union were born 5 sons and 4 daughters. Of these, one son, John, was killed in a mine near Chariton, Iowa, and 2 daughters who died in infancy preceded him to the other side. The 4 sons living are David T., of Lucas, William E., Richard E., and Gomer H., of Chariton. The daughters are Sister Jane Griffiths and Sister Elizabeth, wife of Brother John T. Evans. They both also live in Chariton. There are 50 grandchildren and 34 great-grandchildren, and 1 great-great-grandchild. He brought his family to the United States in 1863, settling at Malad, Idaho. From Malad they located in several places, temporarily, among them Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Des Moines, Iowa. In August, 1876, they located at Lucas, Iowa. He was baptized by William Jones, at Malad, Idaho, September 24, 1866. Ordained elder February, 1867, at Malad, a seventy at Independence, April 14, 1892, a high priest at Keb, Iowa, June 5, 1898. At the organization of the Lamoni Stake High Council he was chosen a member and continued till released at his own request in 1916. Died at Lucas, Iowa, March 5, 1917. He was a kind and loving man of God, a very faithful worker in his Master's service. Funeral service at Saints' church, Lucas, sermon by Frank M. Weld, assisted by Columbus Scott. J. F. Garver preached to an overflow congregation in the Presbyterian church.

STEVENSON.—Thomas Marlow Stevenson was born in Rock Creek Township, Hancock County, Illinois, January 18, 1858, where he was educated in the public school and grew to manhood. Married Agnes H. Lambert of Adrian, Illinois, March 29, 1880. Both raised on a farm, naturally chose this vocation, beginning near the parental home with little of this world's goods and much of those qualities that bring success in any vocation. Through prudence, honesty and industry, he accumulated wealth rapidly and purchased the farm on which he lived, and surrounded himself with the conveniences of a modern farm home. He was the father of three children: Mabel A. and Estella M., now deceased, and Florence J. at home. His wife departed this life May 2, 1904. Married Miss Charlotte Tripp September 30, 1906. Has since made his home in Adrian, Illinois, where he conducted a general store. He departed this life March 1, 1917, meeting his death in an automobile accident. Besides his wife, he leaves an aged mother, 1 daughter, four stepdaughters, 3 stepsons, 1 granddaughter, 2 brothers, and 2 sisters, besides many other relatives and friends. For the past 19 years he has been a member of Camp 3068, Modern Woodman of America, in which he has held the highest offices and at the time of his death was worthy adviser of his camp. He was also a member and officer in the Hancock County Mutual Union No. 7. For a number of years he was director and vice president of the First National Bank of Nauvoo. He has held various township offices and other positions of honor and trust and was always found in the front rank of every enterprise or movement for the uplifting and betterment of his fellow men. And because of his sound judgment and unquestioned integrity his advice and counsel was frequently sought by others, who with one accord proclaim—there was never a truer, kinder, manlier man. The funeral at the Rock Creek church was very largely attended, and in charge of W. T. Lambert, sermon by C. E. Harpe.

You Can Make Excellent Cake with Fewer Eggs

Just use an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, in place of each egg omitted.

This applies equally well to nearly all baked foods. Try the following recipe according to the new way:

CREAM LAYER CAKE

Old Way

1 cup sugar
½ cup milk
2 cups flour
2 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
3 eggs
½ cup shortening
1 teaspoon flavoring

New Way

1 cup sugar
1 cup milk
2 cups flour
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
1 egg
2 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon flavoring

Makes 1 Large 2-Layer Cake

DIRECTIONS—Cream the sugar and shortening together, then mix in the egg. After sifting the flour and Royal Baking Powder together two or three times, add it all to the mixture. Gradually add the milk and beat with spoon until you have a smooth pour batter. Add the flavoring. Pour into greased layer cake tins and bake in a moderately hot oven for twenty minutes. This cake is best baked in two layers. Put together with cream filling and spread with white icing

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.—Containing all the important resolutions passed in the church since 1852. This makes not only educational but highly interesting reading. Many of the elders are in doubt about matters that have been settled and are recorded in this collection of conference enactments. No. 206, paper, 40c; No. 207, cloth ...$.60

VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH THE SEER.—A businesslike little work, scientifically written, showing forth the truth of the Book of Mormon and establishing the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission. Contains pointed and significant statements of Doctor Lederer, converted Jew, and others bearing upon the question. No. 311, paper$.15

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.—A book of the revelations given for the guidance of the church. One of the three standard books of the church which no member can afford to disregard. In four bindings: No. 21, cloth, 65c; No. 22, full leather $1; No. 23, imitation morocco, gilt edges, $2.05; No. 24, morocco, gilt edges, flexible$3.25

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF BISHOP R. C. EVANS.—A volume showing what the gospel, when applied, will do for a man. Bishop Evans has had a remarkable career. In this story of his life, written by himself, he relates incidents and events of a thrilling nature, draws conclusions and enunciates truths that will appeal to the hearts of most readers. No. 143, cloth$1.00

THE FALL OF BABYLON.—The Australian, W. J. Haworth, has written into this doctrinal book many original ideas and elaborated upon carefully garnered evidences of the truth of Christ's gospel. The charts in the book are nuclei of well-worked-out arguments. Altogether it is an elaborate defense of the truth as a very earnest disciple understands it. The proceeds of the sale of this book go to help the financial interests of the Standard Publishing House in Australia. No. 197, cloth$1.25

GET AWAY THIS WINTER!

Pack your grip, tell the folks good-by, go down to the depot, buy a ticket for California—that great Out-o'-doors land, which rests the weary and refreshes the weak—via the Burlington Route (the moving picture way through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake in daylight). Climb aboard, lean back, relax and watch America roll past your window.

Getting away from the cold, bad weather, business and household responsibilities, care and worry, and out into the glorious sunshine and semitropical atmosphere of California where you can rest, change and rejuvenate, will do you a world of good.

You'll be surprised when you compare the cost with the cost of remaining at home. Think what this will mean to you, when you remember that a life which isn't pleasantly spent isn't well spent.

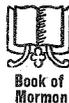

Before completing your plans let me explain how you may join a Burlington Personally Conducted Excursion (costs no more—just a part of Burlington Service) and send you a folder telling all about the trip—worth reading even if you don't go.

"HELPS THAT HINDER"

We believe to a reasonable extent our columns should be open to views both pro and con. An attack, even upon a settled position, may be of value in causing us to examine the reasons for our faith. The article under this title in another department perhaps makes as strong a case as can be made against the Sunday school and other auxiliaries.

Analogy is always a weak form of argument; it is especially so in this case. Piling all the load on one wagon in fact tends to break the axletree or some other part of the wagon or harness. Men can surely move two hundred tons more readily in small lots. A heavy load makes the wheels cut more deeply into the earth, and so it is harder to move than several light ones. When a great load of many tons can be divided conveniently, as a rule this is done. But we do not attempt to apply this simile to church organizations. To handle it in one load would be to do away with branches and districts and meet in one large town service.

But the real vital fallacy is the one based upon the truism: God is perfect, his works are perfect, that which is perfect needs no help. This is true as it stands; but his purpose is so much larger than merely the doing of the work that he has called us to be laborers together with him. The work is intrusted to our hands. We are not infallible or perfect in the complete sense of intelligence and life that God is.

The helps and governments are for us, not for him, who is perfect. They are to aid us in dealing with mankind. Men, women, young people, boys and girls as they are in an effort to bring them to the stature of a man in Christ Jesus.

The second fallacy is based on the theory of force. We are not dealing with dead forces of so many pounds, but with living forces which may assert more or less of a pull and which may increase in power.

On the practical side attention is called to the twenty-four thousand dollars for Sunday school work, the inference being that this money was diverted from the general church use. Such is not the case. Twelve thousand dollars was paid into the church as Christmas offering. Experience and observation have shown that without the Sunday school the church would not only have lost this twelve thousand dollars, but in addition would not have received the twenty-four thousand, and would have lost much more of cash that was actually paid in.

We have had occasion to follow closely the history of a branch for over fifty years. Part of the time they had a Sunday school and part of the time they had not. When they had the Sunday school the meetings were good and well attended and the branch was prospering and growing. When they did not have the Sunday school, this branch went down. This branch for over twenty years was one of the largest in the church, yet being such, on one occasion when they had had no Sunday school for a couple of years, the vote was a tie to disorganize. This was only prevented by the vote of the presiding officer. Now we do not need to affirm that a good Sunday school is a condition precedent to a live branch; but when the branch is alive it has a good Sunday school and these other auxiliaries.

A third fallacy is, the writer claims that help implies imbecility, the weakness of old age, or some other great inefficiency. In fact, many an able-bodied farmer regularly uses hired help. Certainly, he would resent the suggestion that he is a weakling. Business men use help quite liberally though in the fullness of their power. It is true in the case of many a farmer's wife, this argument has been tacitly carried into effect, that she needs no help except in times of sickness or great weakness, with the result of an unnecessary mortality in that position. Though the farmer himself does not live nor act on that assumption for his own work.

It may be said that of all these cases, the one individual is not strong enough to perform all of the work. Without undue reflection, the same might be said in the present case. Even men called to the priesthood are not thereby endowed with every function or every ability but are called according to their several abilities. But in the case of the church we have "helps and governments." Though our heavenly Father does not need our help, he still desires and requires it. "No one can assist in this work except he is humble and full of love." (Doctrine and Covenants 11:4.) This does not infer weakness or incapacity in any particular. We might multiply the instances in which these terms are used in the sacred writing in connection with the work of God. All of which goes to show the logic unsound.

Again, it is assumed, that money taken for other purposes is taken directly from the church, but experience has shown that in many cases where the most is being given for such work and to pay a church debt, the efforts of the people are concentrated in these purposes of church help and more is given in than ever before as tithes and offerings. Of course if everyone were living as cheaply as possible, using only what is absolutely necessary and turning all the rest in to the church, this could not be the case, but in very few instances is this being done, and we are dealing with humanity as we find it.

But even with this question answered, we have to consider the number the Sunday school, Religio and other organizations have saved to the church in an effective way. The number that they have brought into the church. Figure it out for any one year and you will find here the cheapest, easiest converts the church has had. Often this is with the further advantage that they are children of church members, have been brought up in the faith and have a preparation from early childhood for service which has been preserved and helped through the work of the Sunday school and Religio.

It may be said that some of these would have joined the church anyway. But the very heavy loss of such children in the past shows that in general this assumption is not safe except for a small part.

When we turn to the law and the testimony we find that the Jews are reported to have been foremost in antiquity in the education of their children. The teaching was primarily religious. This movement to teach the word of God in organized classes may be considered a forerunner of the Sunday school. We note also that the Apostle Paul praised the work of the women (the ladies' aid society of his time), he did not bring railing accusations against them.

When this work came forth the Sunday school was making steady progress in America. But lest there be any doubt, in June, 1831, we find Oliver Cowdery directed to prepare books for little children, for use in schools. (Doctrine and Covenants 55:2.) The following month William W. Phelps was associated with him. (Doctrine and Covenants 57:5.) In that they failed the church suffered and suffered seriously. The excuse given was that they were busy with more important work. To-day we may reasonably question if there is a more important work for the church than the care of its children and young people. In 1833, each member of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishop was reprovved for neglecting the instruction of his children.

We do not decry the splendid work done by our missionary force and seventies, nor their spirit of sacrifice; but we respectfully submit that here is a work vital to our success, the care of our own children.

In the Reorganized Church a Sunday school was organized in February, 1864, in Saint Louis. But our late president, Joseph Smith, informed us that prior to that they had a regular Sunday school meeting in Nauvoo. This movement has grown with the approval of those whom God has set in the church, as helps and governments to direct the work and preside over the whole church.

As early as 1869, young men were meeting in societies for study and self-improvement, with the idea of future service to the church. Societies of this kind met for short periods from time to time until in 1893 it became strong enough to form a general organization, the Religio, but such organizations were meeting in the early days of the church.

They also had ladies aid societies so that the sisters might aid in paying church debts and the erection of church buildings, in the care of the missionaries and other good works. In many, many cases these organizations did splendid service in providing for the wants of the missionary, when the church or the bishop were not able to do so. They also helped to look after the poor and visit the sick.

Now in 1873 (Doctrine and Covenants 117:12) a revelation was given in which the following occurs:

Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith.

What were these organizations for good? We cannot say the quorums of the church, for there were no handmaidens among the priesthood. It must have been such organizations as we have indicated. And if it is right that these organizations should labor locally, it certainly is not wrong that they should meet in district and in general conventions, in order that they may devise means by which their work may be performed more acceptably. "That which enticeth to do good is of God."

We have been in close touch with the church, but we have never heard of a proposition to spend twenty-one hundred dollars to train teachers in the art of story-telling. But some of the missionary force are of the opinion that for some of our brethren, who try to make story-telling a feature of their sermons, the money might be very well expended with marked profit to the cause.

Finally, we cannot agree with the author of this article in his assumption that the field is oversown. We have seen the auxiliary work conducted in a way to hinder and not to help. We have seen institutes which meant unnecessary duplication and a multiplication of departments.

But we have also seen the work hindered by the action of a missionary or local officer. But we have seen it hindered a great deal more by criticism, which was not based on a knowledge of the exact facts.

In this case, as we stated in the first paragraph, it is well for us to examine our efforts closely at times to be sure that not only as a whole, but individually, we have a sound reason for our faith and action.

S. A. BURGESS.

CHOOSE YOUR PUBLISHER WITH CARE

Very recently we were asked as to the reliability of a publishing company in New York City and were glad we could give definite information which may have been the means of saving the brother from financial loss and much disappointment.

There seem to be several concerns in New York City organized to fleece unsuspecting authors of a great deal of money—and succeeding. If the victims make too much stir about it, a new name is assumed and in some way they seem to continue, possibly because those who are thus victimized dislike to say anything about it and their very silence aids in the perpetuation of the practice.

It was this same company that got hold of the manuscript for a book written by one of our members and because of their attractive offers he consented to have it published on their terms. He was to pay a trifle of fifty dollars for getting out prepublication circulars. He paid the money and actually received some of the circulars, but soon thereafter found they were a fraudulent concern, dropped the matter, and they retained the money. Another scheme of theirs is to ask for a small payment of two or three hundred dollars to pay for the setting up and printing. Something always happens between the time the remittance arrives and the publication of the manuscript, so it is never printed.

If you cannot make satisfactory terms with your church publishing houses, at least be sure you are dealing with reputable concerns and save yourself the humiliation of such an outcome as suggested above.

It is their plan to read the religious and other such journals and write to people whose names appear with important articles, offering attractive terms, mixed with compliments to the writer's skill. The proposition would be good but for one thing—you must pay and they don't deliver the goods. Other periodicals have been sending out similar warnings, indicating that the practice is quite general. We do not claim to know how to discriminate between all the good and the bad, but would suggest that at least satisfactory references be required.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Daylight Saving Beginning Earlier

Great Britain will set all her clocks ahead one hour, beginning April 8 and continuing till September 17. Considerable sentiment in favor of this plan has been created in the United States.

Presidency and Twelve

A number of the Twelve will arrive at Lamoni on Monday the 2d, while some of them will remain in Independence over Tuesday on account of an important city election on that date. President Smith will arrive on Wednesday or Thursday.

The Eastern War

The most interesting items of the week are those concerning the advance of the British from the south toward Jerusalem. A large army of Turkish soldiers have been defeated and it seems as though Jerusalem would fall into British hands. The allies continue to take villages in France, the Germans slowly retreating.

Quakers Opposed to War

The Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) in America have been sending out circulars protesting against war as a method of settling difficulties. They say that "true patriotism at this time calls not for a resort to the futile methods of war, but for the invention and practice on a gigantic scale of new methods of conciliation and altruistic service."

"A Signal from the Pastor"

We are in receipt of an excellent though simple announcement card sent out by Elder Leonard S. Rhodes, of Centralia, Washington. It is printed on the back of a Government postal card and, although it is addressed to the Saints, contains much of interest to others. A special service is planned, including a sermon by the pastor on "The church best fitted to save." The service is to be considered a signal to the Saints to move forward unitedly in spiritual development.

The Conference Dining Hall

Brother Amos Berve is in charge of the dining hall, the meals being served in the basement of the Coliseum. He had charge of it two years ago and for some time managed the purchasing end of the college boarding house. Dinners are served at 30 cents each, suppers at 25 cents and breakfasts on the club plan—order what you want.

J. A. Koehler Replies

The Philadelphia Evening Ledger for March 13 contains a reply to a Mrs. J. H. Scribner, who has been lecturing against the church in that city. It sets out briefly but emphatically the facts connected with our church in contrast with the church in the West with which Mrs. Scribner, in common with many others not well informed, confuses the public mind.

Presidents of Seventy in Session

The council of seven presidents of seventy are meeting daily, beginning with the 28th. Their meeting place is the northwest room in the basement of the church at Lamoni. They have considerable routine work to attend to before the convening of the conference. The members of this council are T. C. Kelley, J. F. Mintun, W. E. Peak, A. B. Phillips, J. A. Davies, J. T. Riley, E. E. Long.

The War Situation

Thirty-five regiments of National Guard troops have been called into Federal service to protect property. The Army and Navy are to be increased very much, the maximum number of marines to be secured. Argentina has declared an embargo on food-stuffs and neutral nations have been asked by our Government as to their stand on receiving armed merchant ships. It is announced that if war is declared, all private wireless stations must be dismantled. A limited censorship of war news now prevails.

National Baby Week

The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor is urging a national baby day or baby week during 1917, suggesting that at least a day may be observed. They state that since approximately one in ten of all the babies born in the United States dies before completing twelve months of life, every effort should be made to remove the conditions which destroy so many of the youngest lives of the community and result in crippling and maiming many others. Lamoni is planning on a baby week some time in May.

Another Chorus at Kansas City

The choir of the Independence Branch have again been invited to participate in the rendition of "The Messiah" at Convention Hall at Kansas City in May. This will be under the auspices of the Kansas City Symphony Chorus directed by Earl Rosenberger. The success of the "Christmas Gift" program at the same place in December was so marked that this perhaps will be even greater. Mrs. George H. Hulmes is in charge of the rehearsals. We hope to see a large number of this choir associated with the general church singers in the rendition of "The Messiah" at the coming General Conference.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

There Shall We Rejoice Together

As I sit in thought and wonder,

My mind goes back to boyhood days,
How my heart oft-times would ponder
As I would kneel to offer praise.

How my boyish heart would tremble

As thoughts would go out o'er the land,
And think of coming trouble;
I would wonder if I could stand.

And while thinking of these disasters

And the war talk all over the land,
I sometimes would find myself thinking
If I really wanted to be a man.

But, day by day, time has gone onward,

And I think how little I've done
To help the work of our Savior—
It seems to me like none.

Now I read of the earth in great commotion,

And wars on land and the sea.
Then our mind goes back to the prophets,
For they have said this time must be.

And while our hearts are filled with sorrow,

And in our eye there is a tear,
We think of the words of our Savior—
That the end of time is near.

He said then to lift up our heads and rejoice,

Not because that strife is here—
But our troubles will soon be over,
And in Zion we will equally share.

And now as we view the cost of living,

And think of the toilers of the day,
We can only look ahead to Zion,
For then there will be a change in the way.

Then let us join hearts together,

And sing Zion's sweetest praise;
For there we shall rejoice together—

Yes, there we will spend our happiest days.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA.

HELPS THAT HINDER

Any great load is a unit. It cannot be divided and taken piecemeal, but must be moved, if at all, as a whole. Otherwise it escapes the need of mention in a consideration of great things and may be disposed of by the rules which govern little things.

As a great load is a unit, incapable of reduction, so the force that moves it must be a great force, and must operate as a unit. To reduce such a force to lesser units for application to features of the load, would be the same grade of folly as for one who pursueth big game to reduce his bullets to birdshot so as to blind the eyes, deafen the ears, and break the legs of the bear as well as to stop his heart.

But although a great load may not be broken in bits to the measure of small forces, yet it may nevertheless, be moved entire, by a great body of these lesser forces accumulated in one by some proper means to unity, which means will vary with the nature of the forces unified. Some, like birdshot, may be melted. But living units, that cannot melt, must be organized.

An organization or instrument for the unifying of living forces has some beautiful and interesting qualities to show which I can think of no illustration so apt as the common three-horse evener.

While it preserves to each his own individuality of endeavor it operates so that whatever pull is made by any one member of the team brings the weight of the burden to bear in equal degree against the shoulders of every other. And however their exertions may vary, it brings the energies of all to a focus where they take effect as one volume of power.

The movement that results from the application of force by such means will not be the kind that registers in features, as by the hoisting of one wheel, nor agitation that merely vexes the burden while it remains at the same point in the way, but an even, balanced, right-side-up advance.

We are commanded to build up the kingdom of God. That is the load assigned us—a great undertaking. And that kingdom, "the body of Christ," cannot live in a divided state, nor be established by features. We shall have to take it as one load, and establish it as a whole or not at all.

Because our forces exist, essentially, in insignificantly small volumes, and living volumes, the church organization, capable of indefinite extension (other seventy), is given us as a means,— not to the unity found in a slug, but to organized and living unity that carefully preserves to each and every one his uncrushed, uncramped individuality of endeavor, and yet brings the energies of all to a focus where they take effect on the work as one volume of power. And force that comes in contact with its load by such means results, not in agitation, but in safe advance.

With attention to these and other qualities essential in an instrument for the unifying of living forces, we have looked upon the church organization as an article of God's own creation, and admired its perfectness. Our attitude to the world has always affirmed that nothing can be taken from it; and our position should also manifest our acceptance of that other principle, "Nothing can be put to it."

For that which is perfect may be spoiled in two ways: by taking something from it and by adding something to it. And though one interference mars as much as the other, and forgetting that our load must be moved as a whole, we have divided our force for attacks on the features by means of the bodies or organizations we have formed and have added.

But some will say, "Wherein have we added to the church organization?"

"In Woman's Auxiliaries, Sunday schools, Religio, Boy Scouts, Orioles—and I know not if there be any other."

These draw off our energies at the rate of twenty-four thousand dollars for one year by the Sunday school—and I do not know the rate of the others, save I heard of a proposition to spend two thousand one hundred dollars per year in this "age of fables" to train teachers in the art of story-telling, etc., to be employed by these auxiliary bodies, these helpers which we have created to help, to prop, to stay the body of Christ.

Then they will answer, "Why these are not new nor added bodies at all, but they are parts of that original, perfect body, the church."

But I ask, "What part?"

And they answer, "Why, these are the helps and governments Paul mentions in 1 Corinthians 12: 28."

But again I ask, "Are you sure?"

And they answer, "Surely. Why, certainly. Why of course. What could the helps and governments be if they are not our auxiliaries?"

"Well, in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 37, the Lord says: "Verily I say unto you I now give unto you the officers belonging to my priesthood." Then in succeeding paragraphs he designates Hyrum for presiding patriarch, Joseph for first president, president of Twelve, the president of high priests, presidents of seventy, presiding bishops, presiding priests, teachers, deacons, and then, immediately after naming all the officers of the priesthood he says:

The above offices I have given unto you and the keys thereof for helps and for governments, for the work of the ministry and the perfecting of my Saints . . . and that ye should prepare rooms for all these offices in my house when ye build it unto my name.—Doctrine and Covenants, 107: 46.

So the helps and governments which Paul mentions, most probably are not our auxiliaries, nor anything like unto them. Our auxiliaries are not parts of the church organization or body of Christ, no part of the kingdom or government of God. And by the reference above we see that no rooms are appointed for these things in his house when it is builded to his name.

"Nevertheless," one will say, "whether the auxiliaries are part of the church organization or not, they do help."

"Of course they do. The trouble with them is they overdo. It's a case where 'the zeal of mine house hath eaten me up.'"

That we may do too much, even in a good cause, may be seen by a parable of a sower who went forth to sow, and scattered the wheat in his field and went his way. Then, wishing to be of some help, and that they might reap an abundant harvest, his wife and daughters sowed the field again; and next day sowed it yet again,—and on. But when the harvest came, the plants were green, confused, and matted, and not a single head of grain matured.

Again a sower went forth and sowed wheat in his field, and went his way. And then, thinking their house should be provided with more than one kind of food, the women sowed tomatoes in the field, and beans and cabbages.

The plants all grew and prospered. But when the harvest came they could not take it all with one machine, nor at one time; and reaping one would tread the others down. So they took the wheat resolved to get these other things from those that cropped such lines.

Help is a work of doubtful virtue in many cases, perhaps in most. In some it is a very detriment.

There may be occasions where help is proper. But the very demand for it presumes incapacity, feebleness, or some imperfection which gives rise to that demand.

A cripple may be helped a bit with crutches; but they would be an awful hindrance to a perfect man.

Help belongs to the defective, the impotent. There is no call to help a perfect man stand up, nor a perfect instrument perform its work, nor a perfect organization accomplish its purpose. And whatever help is imposed upon that which is perfect impedes progress, increases the burden, and hinders success.

And now we conclude that, as the church is a perfect organization, and as its work is all one undertaking; like a perfect harvester that cannot cut without binding nor bind without cutting, the church must do all of its work without help. And our procedure should no longer advance the notion that the kingdom of God, the body of Christ is a defective, crippled, feeble thing that must be propped and stayed at half a dozen points. E. G. HAMMOND.

"FEED MY LAMBS"

That the above words of the Master addressed to Peter were timely and appropriate, perhaps all will agree. The same unity of thought should exist concerning the urgent need of similar work being done at the present time. Upon whom then, does the responsibility rest? The inclination to leave this important work for the Sunday-school teacher, the pastor or branch officers, may suffice in the mind of those who do not give the subject the deep thought that its importance demands. Each of the above may and should render valuable assistance in nurturing the young in helping to give such spiritual food as the young mind is capable of assimilating; also provide as much as possible for the proper environment of the young.

There is yet a more important factor in the proper training of the youth for service in the church, the part to be done by godly parents. The consecrated parents, more especially the mother, will succeed in many cases without other helps. But the indifference of such parents, and failure to teach the children the important truths of the gospel is too often the rock that is responsible for the spiritual shipwreck of the child. Who can estimate the loss to the church of talented young men and women that failed to walk in the work and become consecrated to it, simply because their parents failed to make clear to their minds in youth, the important truths that differentiate the gospel of Christ from the creeds and traditions of men? Perhaps one of the hardest difficulties in this direction is encountered when the child begins to go to school. Here children of various churches, and nonmembers of all churches must become the associates of the Latter Day Saint children who are almost everywhere in the minority. It sometimes happens that parents make the sad mistake of trying to keep the school or community in ignorance of their religion, out of what they vainly suppose is for the good of their children. It cannot be for the benefit of the children, neither is pleasing to the Lord.

He who said, "Feed my lambs" also said, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." To undertake to attract attention to good works and at the same time be ashamed to give credit to Christ and the church established by him is not the part of a true disciple of the Master. Even though the school children may not be old enough to defend themselves against the misrepresentations that they have to meet, it is the only safe way to instill in their young minds such an understanding of the church that their ambition will be to live to defend its truths, and the unpleasant experiences that they may have to pass through in youth, will with the proper help and sympathy of the parents, develop such noble workers for Christ that the parents and church as well will rejoice in the triumph of those who met the opposition and overcame it in righteousness.

It is a mistaken idea to protect the child from having to hear any unkind things said about the church until he is old enough to meet such remarks. This kind of supposed protection usually results in a failure to develop either an understanding of or an interest in the church. The Father's love for Jesus was greater than that of any human parent for the child, yet he did not spare Jesus from the powers of darkness in Gethsemane. It is not possible for us to reach the joys which Jesus is offering through the gospel, if we are ashamed or afraid to combat the forces of sin now in the world. It is impossible to keep the children away from the environments of sin. Do not evade the responsibility of a true follower of Christ; teach the young intrusted to your care a love for the right, and an understanding of the church as fast as the mind develops to comprehend, and then you can claim the promised assistance from the Lord to overcome obstacles when encountered.

A most important factor for the success of the church is, to retain and utilize the talent that develops in the church and her auxiliaries. A fatal mistake sometimes occurs when a fond parent permits a desire to have a child that manifests marked ability in some useful direction, such as music, singing or other attainments, display these where greater attention will be given than in the church. Overtures, mingled with praise from other churches, choirs or societies are made the excuse to turn the one who gives promise of usefulness entirely away from the channel in which the Lord would be pleased and the church benefited. If God has blessed your loved one with marked ability in any line of accomplishment, you owe it to the Lord to direct that one in the service of God so that the world may be made to feel the power in the church for blessing humanity. The young should be so nurtured in the truth of the gospel, that they will subordinate every attainment, or natural talent to the service of God. The Lord has given direction for utilizing the talents of all, and the church needs to augment her forces, but she especially should take care of the lambs within the fold as they grow up, that they do not stray from the path of duty and usefulness. Let everyone be careful not to evade his or her share of the injunction, "Feed my lambs."

O. J. TARY.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE LAST GHETTO

The Russian revolution marks the end of the martyrdom of a race.

The future historian is going to be no more concerned with the downfall of the Romanoff dynasty than with the passing of the Bourbons or the Stuarts. The incident of the great change that will bulk biggest in the books is that early in 1917 the last nation to proscribe a people because of creed fell in step with the march of civilization and humanity and religious persecution faded from the earth. There will be no more pogroms, no more Kichenev massacres, no more Pale and no more ghettos in Russia. The centuries long nightmare of the Jews is over.

The edicts of Pobledonatstsev have faded into history with the Spanish Inquisition, and the law that a Jew without a beard was subject to death at the hands of the first citizen who caught him shaved. The slaughter of men and women on the charge that they used Christian blood in the making of Passover bread—a charge, by the way, that was originated by the Romans as an excuse for killing Christians—will never again be countenanced by a government.

Future historians will record as a curiosity of the twentieth century that a Jew was put on trial for his life on the accusation that he slew a child on the altar, as part of his religious observance, at the very time that Nathan Straus was saving the lives of thousands of babies by his pasteurized milk stations and that Simon Flexner was developing his serum to check the ravages of a disease that used to carry off ninety out of every hundred children that caught it.

Neither Straus nor Flexner would have been permitted to set foot in Russia—before the czar was toppled from his throne. That strange survival among governments let its commercial treaty with this country be abrogated rather than to have the soil of holy Russia profaned by the tread of an American of Jewish descent, and yet no country on the globe stood in such dire need of the business enterprise of the scouts of commerce it barred.

The revolution means much to the Russian Jews, but it means more to Russia than to the people it sets free. The brains and genius that have been penned in the ghettos—locked out of the professions, banned from the farms—will now be loosed to contribute to the progress of the nation. The splendid empire of Siberia, another Mississippi Valley in potential agricultural richness, will not long remain the range of half savage nomadic tribes when the eager, land hungry prisoners of the Pale realize that their bars are down, for the Jew's soul is a pastoral one in its essence. It is only the grim necessity of having his possessions in concealable and portable form, taught him by eighty generations of raids and expulsions, that has made the Jew the shrewdest trader in the world.

What the Jew has done for England, Germany, France and the United States he will do for Russia. It will take time. You cannot expect a people to come from the night of oppression into the day of opportunity without being bewildered for a space. But the enterprise of the Russian Jew will assert itself more and more. Generation after generation his clannishness will melt before the warmth of tolerance, and he will repay free Russia a thousandfold for taking off his chains.—An editorial in the Chicago Herald, March 26, 1917.

HOME GARDENING

That home gardening, directed by the school, is the most effective way for bringing boys and girls into closer relationship with the affairs of life is asserted by C. D. Jarvis in a bulletin on "Gardening in elementary city schools" issued by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior, Washington, District of Columbia, Mr Jarvis declares: "In or about almost any city there may be found an abundance of land that may be used for productive gardening by school children. Within the limits of many cities there is sufficient land, if intensively cultivated, to supply the people with all the vegetables and a large proportion of the fruits and flowers needed. This unused land should be brought under cultivation."

In order that the best use may be made of this land for educational and productive purposes, it is suggested that trained and experienced teachers of gardening should be employed in every city, "Such teachers would instruct the children directly and the parents indirectly," declares Mr. Jarvis, "with the result that in a few years a generation of capable gardeners would be developed. But the development of strong bodied, efficient, and contented citizens is the real purpose and the main result of this work. With a common knowledge of the principles and possibilities of crop production, the wage earner of the future will not need to measure his income solely by the size of his pay envelope. He will consider, also, the productive capabilities of his garden plat and the extent to which it will reduce the cost of living. He will see the advantages of a suburban home, contrasted with the crowded and unwholesome tenement."

The bureau's bulletin points out the possibilities of gardening from the point of view of democracy in education; its usefulness in developing thrift and industry; its value as a substitute for illegal child labor; and its justification in inculcating the joy of living. The bulletin also analyzes the methods of introducing gardening into the schools; describes the different types of gardens; shows the kinds of instruction and supervision that have proved useful; and it goes somewhat into detail in planning garden plots and the disposal of the garden crop.—Deseret Evening News.

READING THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOLS

Glasgow and Edinburgh—The Bible is read daily.

Austria—Two hours per week are devoted to religious instruction.

Belgium—Two hours are given to moral instruction per week.

Germany—Banished the Bible from her schools, but has now restored it.

France—Moral instruction is given for two hours per week.

Cape Colony—The Bible is read daily.

Orange River—Bible history is taught.

Canada—In Ontario the Bible is read daily, the Ten Commandments to be repeated once a week. In Saskatchewan the board may permit religious instruction in schools. In New Brunswick the Bible is read in schools.

New South Wales—The Irish National Board Scripture Lesson books are used.

Tasmania—Instruction in sacred history is imparted.

West Australia—Scripture lessons are given orally to impress the value of the Scriptures as a basis of moral instruction.

South America—Religious instruction is optional.

England—The Bible is read.—Oklahoma Sunday School Worker.

The Babylonian plain, into which the British are making notable advances, is one of the most fertile regions in the world, but irrigation is required. Nearly thirty thousand Jews reside in this region.

According to E. B. Stark, special agent for the Ottawa, Chippewa, and Pottawattomie Indians of Michigan, there are three thousand Indians of these tribes who are plaintiffs in a civil suit in the district court of Chicago which would establish the claims of the Indians to much of the land upon which Chicago is built.

THE OLD AND THE NEW VIEW OF ALCOHOL

At last the doctors are coming to agreement with reference to alcohol, says the American Issue. Several years ago many of them regarded alcohol as a stimulant, with some food value. To-day they practically all agree that it is not a stimulant, but a poison. This change of view is convincingly illustrated by a comparison of "Hare's Practical Therapeutics," a textbook on every physician's book shelves, by Doctor Hobart A. Hare, professor of therapeutics in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia:

EDITION OF 1895

Alcohol first acts as a powerful excitant, and afterwards, when given in very full dose, as a most active depressant and paralyzant of the nervous system.

By the primary stimulation of the brain, it increases the rapidity but not the depth of thought.

In large doses it produces a lack of coordination by depression of the brain. This often makes a drunken man fail to recognize angles and surfaces of obstruction.

When alcohol is ingested, either by man or the lower animals, it stimulates the heart muscles and increases the rapidity as well as the force of its beat.

EDITION OF 1916

Alcohol never acts as a stimulant to the brain, the spinal cord or the nerves. The increased activity of thought and speech is not due to stimulation but to depression of the inhibitory nervous apparatus. The activity is, therefore, that caused by lack of control and is not a real increase of energy.

The effect of moderate doses differs from the effect of large ones in degree and not in kind.

Careful scientific research has proved that alcohol is in no sense a true stimulant to the circulation in healthy persons.

AN ATTEMPT TO REBUILD NAUVOO TEMPLE

[From a series of articles in The Nauvoo Rustler, concerning the Icarians, a French communistic settlement which operated for a time in Nauvoo, we extract the following.—EDITORS.]

Early in spring of 1850 on Cabet's proposition [Cabet was the leader] they decided to rebuild the Mormon Temple. The stonework only was standing, walls sixty feet high. The upper stories and tower were constructed of wood and had been destroyed by fire. They sent an agent north to purchase the necessary timber and in the month of June the masons began to lay the foundation to rest the columns or pilasters to support the floors. The 27th of June eleven men were at work on the interior of the building. I was one of them. At 3 o'clock p. m. a distant report of thunder announced the approach of a storm. At their request I stepped out to ascertain whether it was a severe storm or not. Seeing only an insignificant cloud, I reported no danger. We continued to work. The basement of said temple was divided into small rooms on either side. Two of these rooms had been covered with boards. One on the north side to store green hides. The other on the south side to store tools. Suddenly a furious wind began to blow; four of the masons fearing the nonsolidity of the walls, left to seek shelter elsewhere. Seven of us remained, taking refuge in the tool room on the south side. If there is a Providence it was on our side, for hardly had we taken our position than the tornado began to tear small rocks from the top of the walls and flew in every direction. We became frightened. Some proposed to run away, others opposed it on the ground that it was dangerous as those loose rocks could fall on our heads and kill us. Before we had decided whether we should stay or run, one of us who was watching exclaimed: "Friends, we are lost, the north wall is caving in!" And so it was. A wall sixty feet high was coming on us, having only forty feet to expand. We fled to the southwest corner, deafened with terror. I for one heard nothing. The fall of that wall was heard three miles away in the country. We looked at one another. All alive, but as white as sheets. The wind was terrific, the rain was blinding us. The cloud was touching the ground. The most severe storm I ever witnessed in Nauvoo. We were mostly paralyzed. We expected every minute the other walls to come down. Some of the top rocks had fallen within three feet of us. The east wall was three feet out of plumb. "Forward march!" shouted one and on we ran over the heaped up rocks more dead than alive. When out, it was so dark that we could not find any gates and jumped over fences. I met my father coming to the rescue, all alone. Cabet tried to prevent him but did not succeed. The storm lasted three hours. Several houses had been blown down. They had built their laundry in a creek a half mile north of town; twelve women were at work. Cabet sent a man to find out what had become of them. The man came back saying that the women were drowned and the house carried away. The water was running twelve feet high in the creek. Only the next morning did we receive the good news that the women were all safe, but had hardly time to escape through the windows. So sudden was the rise of the water and in rain and storm ran to a farmhouse, a quarter of a mile away. A Swiss family had just time to leave a brick house that blew down. The loss of crops and property was great but no lives were lost.

The fall of that wall ended the rebuilding of the temple.

Cruel taunts come naturally from coward minds. Surely they might have left the mourner alone. It cut the good man to the bone to have the faithfulness of his God impugned. They had better have thrust needles into his eyes than have darted insinuations against his God.—Spurgeon.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 Locust St., Omaha, Nebr.

What Shall We Study?

(Written for and read before the first meeting of the Zion's Yo-mar-co Class of the Omaha Branch.)

"The proper study of mankind is man." We are not sure whether this quotation is from Shakespeare, or from the Bible, but we will not hesitate to use it at the present time as it is admirably adapted to our question.

We are met to-night, united by the bonds of a similar faith and hope, and more especially by the wonderful bonds created by mutual desires for study and self-improvement, such desires being prompted, let us hope, by equally ardent desires to use that study and that improvement for the benefit and the uplift of those about us. To desire things, even spiritual growth, for the sake of the good or the advantages we imagine they will bring to ourselves, is to use good things in a wrong way, just as when the burglar uses precious gifts, such as physical strength, skill, courage, daring, cleverness, etc., for the wrong and pernicious purpose of outwitting and robbing his fellow men.

We must be careful, then, to eliminate from our thoughts and intentions at all times the elements—alas, too familiar in the modern life—of selfish purpose, self-elevation, honor, or gain. This is not so easy a task as it may seem, but please know that we must do this before we can stand in an altogether clean and wholly acceptable relation to our God, and his purposes in our creation. We must study ourselves in the light of our possible assistance to our fellow men; we must seek to qualify and understand—not for the purpose of self-exaltation, or honor, or to occupy positions considered high in the church or elsewhere, but purely that we may render better and more intelligent service to mankind—service such as Christ rendered, and such as he has said he will recognize as having been performed unto him.

Thus we approach this study with humility, and with yearnings that in the heart of each one present there may be found earnestness of purpose, purity of motive, sincerity of desire, that we may seek advancement for the sake of the good we may do.

Do we recognize the real solemnity of a gathering of this kind? Have we not that word of promise, "where two or three are met together in my name, there I will be also, and that to bless"? A glance backward over history reveals many such gatherings in the days of Joseph the Seer, when the earnest seekers after truth met to study and "search out the mysteries of the kingdom." The Doctrine and Covenants tells us plainly that these things, these "mysteries" are for us, if we truly desire them and will work to obtain them. What is there, then, to hinder us? Nothing, but our own selves—our own attitudes of mind! We can be listless, half-hearted, critical, indifferent—many ways there are by which the Spirit of truth and investigation may be thwarted, its gentle guiding and leading misunderstood and ignored. Or we may be eager, alert, attentive, concentrated—really "hungering and thirsting" after these things of eternal value! This latter we believe, is the attitude of the members of this class; your attendance here to-night may be taken as a token of your yearning, your groping after light!

Now, where shall we begin? That is the great question. For our part we have learned, as the years pass, that all roads worth traveling in this life, lead directly to one place, and that is God. We cannot escape him. He is "in, and through, and round all things" says the Doctrine and Covenants, and the more we study and contemplate life the more we sense the truth of this statement. Even in our sins, one writer insists, God is a present factor, for did not the very power to sin come as a gift from him? In the light of this great fact, then, can we do better in our study than to begin with the great Center of reality, and work outward to its wondrous and manifold expressions? And, since Christ declared, "Ye who have seen me, have seen the father," and also, "as ye do it unto the least of these my brethren, ye do it unto me," do we not find that we ourselves, are inextricably woven into this problem? If we would understand God, we must seek to understand ourselves in our eternal relation to him, the center of our life. This is why we started out with the statement that the greatest study of mankind is man.

How shall we go about to discover who and what we are, and whither we are tending? Does our life here determine our future one? Or is there a future at all? Why were we placed here? What is the goal we are striving to reach? Did the Power that placed us here have any designs concerning us? If so, how may we discover them, and assist towards their successful culmination? Is life, as lived today in the world about us, conducive to an understanding of eternal and vital principles? Does it tend to uplift? Does the plan of life as laid down by Christ seek to accomplish spiritual purposes? Is it practicable, and is it applicable to daily, modern life? Will it correct existing evils, solve existing modern problems, and establish right doing in the world? If so, should we lose one moment of time in acknowledged follies, which might otherwise be spent in trying to grasp these guiding principles of eternal life, and in putting them into immediate practice?

We feel sure that every soul here to-night is reaching out, vaguely perhaps, after those verities. Each one is yearning to understand clearly—to know just what there is for him to do, to help purify the world—his corner of it, at least; in each heart is a great desire to be qualified and, perhaps, to be worthy to be intrusted with some special service or commission in this great task, for which the Christ came and offered his perfected, consecrated life!

Look within; examine yourselves; know that that within you, which is groping upward and stirring with desires almost inexpressible, is a portion of the one divine life which permeates every atom of God's creation! It is striving for recognition and expression, and shall we not then, all of us, united as we are in this sympathy and study and comradeship, decide to give that holy impulse free rein hereafter, to follow where it leads, to drink at its fountains of knowledge and inspiration, to bask in the sunlight of its vitalizing and energizing power, and thus really re-create our own selves, eliminating that which would check, or thwart, or tear down, and yielding only to that which guides upward? We are Masters of our own destiny, shaping and molding our tomorrows by our deeds of to-day—our eternity, by our present!

If ever a church undertook a most stupendous task, it surely is that one to which most of us have expressed our allegiance. Assuming that the word of God to man is unchangeable, and that his methods do not change, and that he expressed his will in the person and activities of Christ, and that that will is applicable to the here and now—not only applicable, but sufficient, wholly adequate, wholly practicable, wholly workable, as a basis for human thought and action, we have come, as a church to the point where assuming, announcing, and asserting, can no longer carry our message with conviction! We must prove it! We must demonstrate the proposition! The chalk is thrust into our hands and we are face to face with the blackboard, and the class is looking on! Can we do it?

Are we sure of our principles? Have we raised our hands in eager confidence and then were unable to "get away with it"? Have the things hammered at us from pulpit and pen been put away, hazily indiscriminatingly, into obscure corners of our brains, haphazard, lacking system, analysis, classification, so that when we are put to the test we are bewildered, confused, unprepared, irritated, and we are compelled to put the chalk down and take our seats in crimson shame for our own inadequacy and lack of knowledge?

Can we "give a reason for the hope that is within us"? Do we know our own religion? Do we have comprehensive ideas about our own church tenets? Can we defend them logically? Can we give intelligent, scientific or even scriptural proofs for our statements? Most of all, can we point to our own lives and say to all the world, "I am living my religion"? Are we, warned, warning our neighbors? Are men, seeing our good works, being brought to praise and glorify God, the Creator and Father of us all?

Let us wake up—shake up! Let us get our books, our "shovels" and dig! "Study it out," says the Good Spirit! The hidden treasures of eternity are there, waiting for our going in, possessing, and occupying!

News from Busy Spots

MACGREGOR, MICHIGAN

The year 1916 has passed into history, and as we look back over the work accomplished, we see that we have not been idle, but have been trying to do what we could to advance the cause here. We see some advancement, and a great seeming desire on the part of all, to "come up higher." Our home and child welfare department has done much to help us make better homes, and that means better wives and better mothers, better qualified for our work in life in every way. We are made to realize that we have an important part to play in molding the character of the coming generation, the teaching and training of our young being so vital in the gathering and redemption of Zion. Every mother should be interested in thus qualifying herself for better service along this line. Our superintendent, Sister Thomas McCullough, did her work well and Sister Farley in charge of the young woman's department, also accomplished much. Elder John Grice, of Detroit, met with us once, last fall, and gave us good suggestions, and a helpful talk along the line of social purity, which education is so much needed in the church to-day, especially among the young and inexperienced. May God speed the right! Sister H. G. Campbell, superintendent of the aid has done much to promote interest in her department. In January we met and elected officers, and had with us a goodly portion of the Spirit which prompts to do good, and we feel like doing all we can the coming year. Six new members were enrolled, making twenty-four in all. May the auxiliary work prosper until it reaches the heights intended for it, an active influence for good in every branch of the church.

MRS. W. J. CAMPBELL, Press Chairman.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA

At the last meeting of our local auxiliary, there was stimulated an active interest in study, several new classes being formed. One will be composed of mothers of young children, and will study the child mind and training, dealing with the earlier years of life. Another was composed of mothers of children in, or approaching, the adolescent period, that period of storm and stress, which is alike trying and critical to both parent and child. A circle for the study of story-telling was also formed, and provision made for enlarging the one in sociology. A relief and service department is also a recent addition to our interests, and the activities in that work are very marked already, enough work in quilting being on hand to occupy the members all summer. A lecture from Doctor Stoft on the care of children's teeth, together with papers on child study, and some music, and refreshments, combined to make the afternoon both pleasant and profitable.

Why I am Happy

(A recitation given by a little six-year-old at the convention of the Des Moines District in February, 1917.)

Why I'm so happy, you never could guess,
My head's just all in a whirl.
You may think it funny, but nevertheless
I'm happy because I'm a girl.

It may seem strange why this simple fact
Should fill my small heart with delight,
But when I have told you the reason for this
I'm quite sure you will say I am right.

We girls after while will be women, you know,
But boys can be nothing but men.
To the Woman's Auxiliary we ladies can go,
Just think how we can help then.

Before I'm so very much larger grown,
It makes me just glad in my soul,
That with beautiful colors of both black and gold,
I can be a bright Oriole.

Then for years I can sing their wonderful song,
As I to a woman shall grow,
And learn many good things as I go along,
That just boys can never know.

The Oriole work is just the first part Of the Woman's Auxiliary, you see.
Big ladies understand it all, you know,
But it's still pretty deep for me.

But as I grow older I'm going to learn
All about this wonderful work
And do my part, as it comes my turn,
For it is not right to shirk.

—Sent in by Sister Williams of Des Moines.

[This little recitation breathes the right idea; the girls of to-day are the women of to-morrow; and faithful Oriole girls are apt to carry their enthusiasm and consecrated service with them into the ranks of the auxiliary workers.—EDITOR.]

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Power of Prayer

Without prayer man cannot be saved, for it is the key to the gate of heaven, and the Holy Spirit is the keeper of the key. Prayer without the Spirit is a dead form, and brings no results, and without the Spirit we will get down on our knees and go through a form of words, get up and go about our business without any strength to combat the temptations of life. Thus we obey the form, like we obey the form of baptism, and yet we have not prayed at all. We have only drawn near to the Lord with our lips, while our hearts are far from him, as shown by the prophet Isaiah.

Such prayers have no power. A great many teach that as God knoweth all things, therefore he knows just what we need, and that prayer is a foolishness and waste of time; that we will get what God sees fit to give us without bothering him about it. Such teachers also do not know what prayer is, or what it is ordained for.

The writer did not realize the value and power of prayer until he read Sister Florence Wright's article, "Pray always," in the HERALD for May 24, 1916. Then, as I cast my mind back over the last twenty years of my life, I saw the force of her appeal, and realized that before Satan led me out of the church, a sister who had never seen the writer before told him he ought to pray more. But not knowing the blessed privilege of prayer, our prayers were few and far between, until they stopped altogether, as we never prayed only when we felt like praying and Satan took good care to see that we seldom felt like it, by getting us to commit sin, and then saying, "Now you are not fit to pray."

Thus the years went by, till he almost destroyed my mind as he did the poor woman's whom Sister Wright wrote about in the article referred to above. But thank God, our Father has delivered me from the tempter's power and helped me to realize that prayer is not a duty we owe him so much as we owe it to ourselves, and has ordained it as the blessed privilege of communing with him through the blessed Holy Spirit which he has sent to his people to comfort their hearts, and assure us of his love and watchcare for us.

Thus I have established the altar of prayer in my room, to observe night and morning, whether I feel like it or not. I will kneel down and stay there till my heart gets in tune with God, and I have made the blessed discovery that the Holy Spirit that searches the hearts and trieth us begins its intercession for us, and soon we feel its blessed loving influence filling our heart and melting us to tears.

Brother, sister, is it hard for you to pray? Are there some you do not like because they do not do as you think they should, or possibly have done you a personal wrong, and when you get on your knees Satan brings it up and obstructs the avenue of prayer for you? If so, just stay on your knees and fight it out of your heart. Just realize that we all have sinned and come short of the glory of God, and that the mission of Jesus Christ through the Holy Spirit is to bring us back into communion with the Father and loving brotherly fellowship with one another. And while the one we do not like has done something that has caused this feeling in us, we may also do things that cause some one not to like us, and thus we have need to cultivate charity one toward another, and forgive one another, or our Father cannot forgive us. (See Matthew 6:7.) He cannot allow enmity among his children, for such is carnal and not divine, and thus we cannot enjoy the blessed communion of the Holy Spirit in prayer until we get all this out of our hearts; and be assured, beloved Saints, that when we get right down to business in cleansing our own house (heart), God will see that we are in earnest, and before we get off of our knees the Holy Spirit will be felt flowing into the wounded feeling we have toward a brother or sister, and the hot sun of the love of God will melt away all our differences and the tears will start, and we will love our brother or sister, weak as they may be, and our heart will go out and reclaim them.

Oh, for the love of God to be shed abroad in our hearts as never before. We want to see Zion redeemed. This love will soon redeem her if we pay heed to these things. How the tears run down my cheeks as I write under this blessed spirit of love.

Beloved Saints, who is there among us but loves our foot or hand so much that we do not want to lose them or part with any one of the members of our body? because the same blood giveth life to all. Oh, that we could sense and fully realize the full meaning of the comparison that Paul has made of the church of Christ to the human body, that we might fully realize our brotherly relationship one toward another, for as the same blood connects every member of the human body with the body, and makes them parts of the body, even so doth the one and selfsame spirit of life flowing through Jesus Christ, the true vine, into the branches, form the body of Christ, connecting every member by the same Spirit, so that as Paul says, we are by one Spirit all baptized into one body.

Let us sense and become conscious of this glorious truth, and then we will love every member of Christ's body as we love Christ, and as we love ourselves, realizing that we are all one, Christ the head, we the body and members in particular, and that we cannot love the one without the other. If we say we love So and So, and we do not like this one or that one, and that we have the love of God in us, we are deceiving ourselves, or rather Satan or the spirit of darkness is deceiving us, and it is time that we should be awakened out of such a deception. For such love is deceptive, and will not stand the close analysis of the pure and undefiled Spirit of God.

What sweet communion is there awaiting those who will open the door in holy prayer as we in our weakness have tried to point out. And again Jesus says, "He that loveth me, and keepeth my commandments, I will love him, and he shall be loved of my Father, and I and my father will come and take up our abode with him." (John 14.) This is through the Holy Spirit that is to dwell in us, Paul says, which is not to come and go, but dwell in us, make their abode with us, so that when we want to commune with them and have to ascend into heaven, to bring Christ down, or descend into the deep to bring Christ up, but by the word of faith which we preach he will abide with us.

And now dear Saints, do not forget to pray.

Preach a Constructive Message

"Preach the word."—2 Timothy 4:2.

Having for years observed certain methods, and what has come of them, I am now prepared to offer a few suggestions that I trust may assist those who read them, to arrive at more correct conclusions, in their search for Christian truth. After years of careful and mature deliberation, I have, with others who have gone before me, concluded that a little learning is sometimes a very dangerous thing, because it has a tendency to narrow the views and contract the judgment of men, so that they permit themselves to think only along certain narrow, conventional, and stereotyped lines, and hence they are disqualified for the best in life. It is quite generally individuals of this type who are constantly proclaiming to the world a negative message, i. e., they persistently negative everything that they do not themselves understand, and make no hesitancy in branding as dangerous or false all that does not agree with their narrow views and peculiar notions. When a man of this kind tries to preach, he invariably begins and ends with a tirade of some kind, upon the faith or belief of some one else. He does not scruple to charge others with all kinds of insincere motives, because they do not see as he does, and he does not see nor understand their basic principle.

Now, what is the matter with this method? Simply this: such a one lacks every essential of true education. I say true education because Christ is the master teacher; he bade his disciples learn of him; and he who has truly learned of Christ, may be said to be truly educated. Such a one will preach a constructive message always. Saint Paul, who was a master in learning, in a dual sense; viz., in the arts and sciences of men, and in the following and learning of Christ, is the author of our text, which admonishes us to "preach the word." Mark you, not to preach the peculiar beliefs and errors of other people. To me it seems that time is too precious, and truth is too sacred for ministers for Christ to indulge in such diversions.

The injunction to preach the word, may not always be understood by mankind, but it occurs to the writer that men who have learned of Christ ought to be able to understand it. We read in the first chapter of the gospel as recorded by Saint John, these words: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."—John 1: 1-14. If I were to paraphrase our text, in the light of the foregoing scripture, it would read: "Preach the Christ." That is to say: go to the world with a message of "glad tidings of great joy," tell them of the life of the appointed One; cause them to see the grandeur and beauty of that life; let them see that all are invited to partake of, and participate in, such a life, and then they will of their own free will part company with their erroneous ideas. You need not storm their castles, you need not assault their heroes; you need not become an iconoclast and destroy their idols; but in meekness and gentleness you may portray to them the beauty and sublimity of that message of the Christ; and every intelligent mind will make its own comparison—and as a result thereof all will come to an understanding of the truth.

Suppose for example, I should come to a man, who is mistaken in his conclusions, and I begin to point out to him his mistakes one by one until at last I convince him he is in error; what have I done? If he is a thinking man he will say to me, "Well, you have proven my position false, but you have given me nothing in place of it." What then is the condition of that man? Quite likely he is left in a worse condition than he was found in by me. What, therefore, is my duty? Simply this, that first, last, and all the time I should endeavor to teach men the truth, in place of simply trying to convince them they are in error. If I teach them the truth they will soon discover their own errors, but if I simply teach them that they are in error they will hardly discover the truth thereby.

Can I, think you, cause men to believe that I have learned of Christ, the meek and lowly One, by throwing stones at them? Theological stones, I mean. Is it possible for me to win their souls for Christ, if I by my actions misrepresent, in place of represent him? Can I make friends of my fellow men by dealing harshly or unkindly with them? I aver not. I must make friends by kindness, and teach them the truth of Christ in meekness. My life, my method, and my demeanor must agree with my precept, if I would succeed in teaching my fellow men the ways of Christ.

"Well," says one, "that man has misrepresented and abused me." What of that? Can his misrepresentation or abuse hurt you, unless you are willing to be hurt by it? That which is false is false, and quite generally we would do much better to ignore it entirely than to give it publicity and life by reason of our passionate resistance. The philosophy of this matter is simply this: when I am so overcareful to refute and answer every charge, I tacitly admit that there is some truth in them. If when I am permitted to speak I retaliate and assail the other man's philosophy, I tacitly admit that I am conscious of defeat. But, if when I am heard in the matter, I ignore entirely his abuse and misrepresentation and meekly and gently present the message of Christ to the people, and at the same time treat my opponent as a brother, all will be able to see that I am "preaching the word," and that he who is venomous in his attacks is an alien to the household of God. In a word, I can much better maintain the cause of Christ by meekly "preaching the word," than I can by loudly decrying the inconsistencies and failures of others. Thinking people will not believe the misrepresentations of my opposers if I adhere always to the Spirit of the Master. What better refutation can we make of the false stories that may be circulated concerning us than by living the Christ life and reflecting the Christ character? The crowning virtue of the Christ consisted in the fact that "when he was reviled he reviled not."

Of course, any person can proclaim a negative message, because anyone can tear down—but it requires a master to build. It might be well to here observe, that Saint Paul warns men to take heed how they build, for every man's work will be tried as by fire, and if his works be burned he will suffer loss. Let me, therefore, build as my Master built; let me go out, and in his Spirit proclaim, This is truth, and not simply say that is error. Let me go forth as one who is capable of leading the way, and then let me unfurl the banner of King Emmanuel, which is the word of truth; let me hold it aloft, that all may see it; and then in gentle words and loving tones, invite all to join the procession, enlarge the army and increase the multitude who are willing and ready to rally under the banner of eternal truth. Thus may the minister for Christ become a master builder, a guide to the erring ones, a strength to those who are weak, and a benediction to all with whom he may come in touch in life.

There is nothing but good can come of good, and nothing but evil can come of evil, therefore, let us do good continually and deal kindly with all men, all ways, and we shall have praise of the same.

Can We Justly Shirk Our Duty?

While pondering over conditions this morning, I was impressed to write, and the following is the result: The importance of everyone taking part in business meeting is greater than many of us realize. Not only branch business meeting but all of the business of the auxiliaries of the church. We often go to the business meeting and sit back and do not vote or take any part in the meeting. Again, we let our minds wander upon some other thought and maybe when it comes time to vote we don't know what the matter is we are voting on but raise our hand whenever such and such a person does. After business meeting is over we wonder why such and such a thing was not done. We are oftentimes afraid of offending some one and rather than do that we won't say anything upon a matter concerning him.

No one ought to become offended because he is put out of an office nor if criticized when not doing his duty, provided it is done in the right spirit. Did you ever stop and think that if a motion is before the house and it is not in accord with your idea, if you expressed your opinion concerning it you might change some one else into your way of thinking? By so doing, that person might change some one else, and so on until you win your side. You never can do it by sitting still and not taking any part. Pay attention to every word that is spoken in a business meeting, because if you don't you may miss the very point you have been thinking on the past two or three months. By so missing it you may lose something you thought would benefit the work.

If after you express your opinion at meeting and then you lose out, what are you going to do? Sit back and sulk because your method was not used? There never should be a motion made that is not made for the progress of the work. Then if you sit back and let your brother and sister do the work the motion calls for, who is the loser? Again, you are working for the Lord and not for those who carried the motion. It does not hurt them by your not doing your duty but only makes them do your share of the work and reap your share of the reward. Better get out and help to fulfill the mission of the motion, and next time try and persuade them to adopt your method of the work.

On the other side of the business meeting is electing officers. When you nominate a person for office, use your judgment and name some one who is capable of fulfilling the office. If you see any good reason why a certain person should not occupy, tell the people why and perhaps they will agree with you. Don't wait until he is elected and then go to this person and tell him you don't think he should be in that office because so and so. He had the least to do with his being elected of anyone. Did you ever stop and think that he was elected by the body? I have seen certain people vote for a person and then tell him they didn't think he ought to hold such an office. Every person who holds an office has a work to do if he does his duty, whether a great office or a lesser one. They have their trials you perhaps know nothing about. Do you want to make his trials heavier by finding fault, or do you want to help him by expressing your opinion at business meeting and keeping still afterward? There is a work for everyone, even in a business meeting, and let us awake and think on the business side of the church work. Here is a poem I believe will fit in here very nicely, by Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

"The Lord had a job for me,
But I had so much to do,
I said, 'You get somebody else—
Or wait till I get through.'
I don't know how the Lord came out,
But he seemed to get along—
But I felt kinda sneaking like,
'Cause I know'd I done him wrong.

"One day I needed the Lord,
Needed him right away—
And he never answered me at all,
But I could hear him say
Down in my accusing heart—
'Nigger, I'se got too much to do,
You get somebody else or wait till I get through.'

"Now when the Lord he have a job for me,
I never tries to shirk;

I drops what I have on hand
And does the good Lord's work;
And my affairs can run along
Or wait till I get through,
Nobody else can do the job
That God's marked out for you."

Let us practice what the negro did in the latter part of the poem.

What is Graceland?

(The following from the pen of a Graceland alumnus fairly represents the spirit which actuates the great body of Graceland's former students and its friends who are uniting their support in a determined effort to let the college come fairly into its own. Graceland, as a junior college, is well prepared to offer the first two years of college or university training, and special training in music, voice, stenography, typewriting, bookkeeping, Bible study, and public speaking as well as regular preparatory or high school work. Through the budget system adopted by General Conference the finances of the college are placed on a safe basis. The College Day collection and other gifts of money or property by will and otherwise add greatly to the regular tuition receipts and reduces the amount necessarily drawn from the church treasury. Graceland's greatest need, however, is more students. The college cannot fulfill its mission in the church until every young person who should leave home for educational training comes to Graceland. Crowd its walls with students and its financial problem will be automatically assured. Our young people need Graceland! Graceland needs our young people. Bring the two together and another important step in making Graceland more efficient will have been taken. We commend the following to the readers of the HERALD.

CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK,

President Greater Graceland Association.

"Graceland is such a terrible expense to the church." "Graceland's mission is as important and as far-reaching as any missionary force." "She is my Alma Mater which I love, and shall always respect." These three answers, or their equivalents, have come from as many distinct classes of people within the church.

The first is from the uneducated and nonprogressive class who know but little of Graceland except through hearsay. The second is from those earnest people who have sacrificed and worked with her and have come to know her value. The last reply comes almost invariably when the question is asked of an alumnus.

Why is there such a difference of opinion? Do some form wrong opinions from hearsay and then place that opinion as final judgment of her value to the church, or is it some unaccounted for prejudice which has not been overcome? We do not know. But we do feel certain that if everyone were in closer touch with the real good accomplished there would be less "knocking" and more loyal "boosting" for Graceland than there is now.

Some think that Graceland should take the place of the home, and in many instances expect her to accomplish what the home has failed to accomplish. This is not her purpose. She is beyond that. Graceland stands as an opportunity for development of character for the young man or young woman who has reached the time in his or her life when he or she must leave the home influence and meet the world. Not only does Graceland offer a place for development but offers the influences which will aid in a proper development.

As an institution of learning Graceland now occupies a leading place among the denominational schools of the Middle West, being fully accredited and standardized in all her departments. This removes that which has been such a tremendous obstacle to so many, for so long, the fact that "Graceland is not accredited."

One of the leading educators of world renown, in a recent lecture remarked very forcibly, "No young man or young woman has any right to enter any university until his or her junior year. These first two years belong to the smaller colleges, especially to each person's own denominational school." Why then has not Graceland the foremost place in the mind of every young man or young woman in the church who is contemplating further education?

If Graceland does not have a definite place in the work of the church, why do so many broad-minded men and women sacrifice, year after year, that her work may go on? Why do the students who have finished and have gone on to larger schools, almost without exception urge the young people of the church to consider their own school before enrolling in any college?

There is an answer to all these questions. There is a reason why all this takes place. It is because of her two outstanding qualities, "proper environment" and "opportunity."

It is not possible for one to realize the full significance of those two qualities unless personally acquainted with her everyday life. No one realizes the full development and the full benefit obtainable as well as the old student or alumnus. The opportunity to become a student is gone forever for many, but very few are so qualified that they may work in personal touch with the institution, yet is the way open to all, and especially to those who hold anything but the best conception of Graceland and her work, to become better acquainted with the real Graceland, the moral Graceland, the spiritual Graceland toward which, when an alumnus turns again, will lift his eyes and say, "My Alma Mater, may God bless her."

WARD A. HOUGAS.

General Conference Pugilism

Some people say "Saints are peculiar," and I am quite ready to agree, a most peculiar experience was once shared by Ben and me.

You see, throughout the conference year we had consumed brain cells and ink, each trying to convince the other he was on the very brink of rank apostasy! that if his views should gain foothold, the church would take a downfall as did Lucifer of old.

General Conference time arrived; I got there in the night. The committee that assigned us rooms were in a disconcerting plight. Said they, "We've not another bed; we don't know where to put you brother, unless," I smiled at their chagrin, "You'll occupy one with another."

Before day had begun to tint the eastern sky with rose I heard my roommate groping in the darkness for his clothes. Thought I, He is surely kind of heart, of thoughtful sympathy, dressing in this darkness lest a light might waken me. But he shall not make the sacrifice, it is too great to think about—going forth to meet our hostess mayhap with clothes on inside out!" Now it was not unselfishness alone that was in my heart unclosing. I was sort of curious to know with whom I had been reposing. So I spoke a plain "Good morning!" It was not time for needless frills, and his hearty greeting gave me a variety of thrills. He might have Jacob's body with Esau's neck and hands—in the darkness I was blind—but the voice I knew was Ben's!

That day in conference I spoke in tones that shook the earth, cocksure that my opinion was the only one of worth.

And when I had finished, Ben would rise and calmly make reply, with firm determination in gesture, voice and eye.

A week went by. There side by side each night we'd lie and snore and the next day we'd "fight" harder than we had the day before.

I wondered how a man of Ben's brain power could be so dense. I suppose he was pondering daily o'er my woeful lack of sense.

The newspaper reporters wore their pencils out in glee. It was surprising how much "copy" could be made from Ben and me. In pugilistic attitudes they caricatured us and wrote columns with such headlines as "Saints wax obstreperous." They never guessed that we who through the day had had such "tilts," at night would calmly lie and snooze beneath the self-same quilts.

Days passed. The conference had achieved a state of mild hostility. Some felt that Ben was in the right, and some agreed with me.

One night Ben's quorum busy sat when all the rest had gone. My mind was filled with thoughts of him as I strolled home alone. In retrospect I lived again the year's experience, our strenuous correspondence and the recent weeks' events. At last my feelings would have vent, in tones Shakespearean, I cried aloud, "Oh, Stubbornness! thy name should have been Ben!"

(It is queer how grossly stubborn and near infidelity, is the brother or the sister who with us cannot agree.)

I think I must have dreamed that night a dream of sweet content, of crowded congregations thrilled with my convincing argument, for I heard Ben's voice call jokingly, though I caught a note of sorrow, "You'd better save your eloquence, you will need it all to-morrow, besides, and this concerns me more, when your triumph is complete, I wish you would preach by deeds a while for you've taken all the sheet!"

"You've lost the sheet? Well take it!" said I, "Your argument's so thin you will need it for to-morrow to wrap yourself up in!"

Ben's voice broke then—his words came next in reverent metaphor, "God grant that neither one of us may lose the Comforter!" I felt a tightening of the throat a trembling of the lips; the quick tears started from my eyes and wet the pillowslip. I somehow knew that while in dreams I had roamed, no one knows where, poor Ben had not once closed his eyes but had spent the hours in prayer.

Then as one man we felt an influence whose sweet power would not be stayed. We got up and side by side we knelt and fervently prayed.

And it seemed next day at conference that God's Spirit filled the room. Doubt, distrust, fears,—all had vanished; light was now where had been gloom. And our President arising—on his dear face a joyous light—gave to us the needed message which in an instant set things right.

Tears of joy stood on the faces of that eager listening throng—and Ben and I had both been right and both been partly wrong.

Oh I thank God for the gospel with its blessings manifold! I'm so thankful that he speaks to-day as he did in days of old! I am thankful for that conference with its final gift of light—and I thank him that dear Ben and I were bedfellows each night!

BROTHER KRIT E. SIZE.

Note: The theme of this effort was suggested by an observation made by one of our missionaries to the effect that often the brethren opposing each other with seeming bitterness in the conference discussions are close friends, perhaps room-mates.

BROTHER K. E. S.

"The Saints' Herald"

The Saints' Herald is to the Saints of God what sunshine and rain is to the earth—life and growth. There are three things valuable in life: labor, love and thought. If we would have strong muscles we must labor; if we would have faithful hearts we must love; if we would have powerful minds we must think. The problem of life is not to make life easier, but to make men stronger.

There are two things essential in order to get the good of what we read. First, we must be in the proper frame of mind; second, we must have our minds on the subject before us. A brother said to me once: "I like to read these short articles in the HERALD." People in our day are very busy and haven't much time to read.

The first spiritual manifestation to this branch when first organized was: Take time to serve the Lord. I have never forgotten that and never want to. If we desire to have growing faith and a proper understanding of the work of God we must read the church literature. Hardly any other habit will stand men or women, young or old, in better stead all through their lives than the reading habit. It is of value not only for what it includes, but for what it excludes. It not only brings to him much that is worth while, but it keeps him away from much that is not worth while. Good reading is the most pleasant, the cheapest, and the most dependable.

Since reading the editorial in the HERALD of October 25, entitled "How we get our Quarterlies," I have thought more of what work it takes to get the material for our church publication and put it together ready for its mission than ever before. The HERALD is the capstone—the paper of papers. It should be in every Latter Day Saint home. Its mission is great. Though its readers are scattered far and wide its food is sweet to all.

As Saints of God having the same object in view we should not forget that we differ in our way of expression and in certain lines of work, and for that reason we may as individuals not find all that is written of the same interest. But I believe when the HERALD has been canvassed by all its readers every line has been of some interest all used up and a hunger for more.

Articles are not interesting because of the men who wrote them or the words they use. They are interesting in proportion as the people who read them believe what they say. He who develops capacity to think correctly and to act for the general good is training himself. Apostle Caffall said: "Those who think the gospel promises something for nothing may find themselves disappointed. God has crowned humanity with faculties to acquire knowledge and understanding." The Prophet Elihu said: "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32: 8.

In the early rise of the church the Lord commanded the elders to study. (Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3; 10: 10; 21: 1.) Walter W. Smith said: "There is no conflict between education and religion; they are handmaidens of the Lord." God has given us the power to think, but we, individually, must do the thinking. Our parents cannot do our thinking, neither can our teachers: they can only direct us.

God cannot help his people as he would until they learn to hearken to his voice. The spirit of truth will guide but we must follow. He will teach but we must study. Brother Joseph said: "Let us study out in our minds the things of the Spirit and ponder them in our hearts." We owe that man a grateful memory.

It is our duty to develop every faculty of our minds. We are not born with our minds well stored with knowledge and wisdom, but we are born with faculties to acquire these things and it is by the exercise of these powers that we become able to understand. In the New Year greetings from our beloved President, he said: "Let true devotion and consecration to God's service characterize your every act and thought, that spirituality may be enhanced, righteous refinement be had, and God's will be done to his glory and praise." We should not fail to grasp the deep significance of this utterance.

Brother J. R. Lambert said: "Our work specially demands carefulness, diligence, faith, with a wise and godly example." Words like these fall upon the listening ear like music from above, when coming from a character like Brother Lambert whose words were every one mated to his deeds.

He who conquers himself is the world's greatest benefactor. Love is the key that unlocks the treasure house of wisdom and virtue. To fill our mission in life with honor depends upon our measure of diligence in study. Jesus said, "Occupy till I come." There is as much harm in wasting our time as our means. The following presents a good thought:

"Did you waste the day or lose it,
Was it well or poorly spent?
Did you leave a trail of kindness
Or a scar of discontent?
As you close your eyes in slumber
Do you think that God would say
You have earned one more to-morrow
By the work you did to-day?"

It takes all we can do to learn the alphabet of life's great problem. Every truth we gain is a key to another. In reading our church literature we get in closer touch with the work of God in general. We are reminded of those who are unfortunate in life in divers ways: it helps us to appreciate more God's dealings with us; helps us to be made partakers of that love our heavenly Father has for his children; helps us to build that spiritual house we are commanded to build. Paul said: "As a wise master builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon."—1 Corinthians 3: 10.

Peter tells us what material it takes to build that kind of a house: Faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity. (2 Peter 1: 5, 8.) These excellencies are the crowning glory of all intelligent beings and are within the reach of all. They are needful in whatever may be our position in life; without them life will be a failure. But money cannot buy them. No power can adorn us with them only as we seek for them as for a hidden treasure and cultivate them in our hearts.

It is said good thoughts are like the stars in the firmament—a light shining in the dark. We are never higher up nor lower down than our thoughts are, for as a man thinketh so he is.

A careful reading of the HERALD will help us to fill our mind with good thoughts. It is a silent teacher; it is a loved and welcome visitor; it comes each week to many homes laden with cheering news to strengthen and encourage us; it is soul-inspiring; it furnishes spiritual food; it is one of the Saints' comforters; it is a boon and a blessing to cheer our drooping hearts. The HERALD has been and is an invaluable source of strength to me, and I hope to many others.

Christmas Cards

In an article which I read recently in one of the magazines of the day, I read as follows: "Christmas cards and their uses have passed into almost as complete oblivion as any knowledge of their origin which had its inception in motives of the kindest philanthropy."

A woman of high social standing, seeing the sorrow and heartaches of those who could not give elaborate or costly presents, announced to her friends she would not receive anything except cards at the coming Christmas, and also persuaded many others to do likewise. I for one am very glad the custom has not been entirely relegated to the past, for at the coming of the beautiful Christmastide not so long passed, how many sweet memories were stirred within my heart by the coming of the Christmas cards. Since the autumn I have left my home but few times, and many days have been spent lying upon the bed. But there comes a certain pleasure which one must feel to describe when each mail brings "just a line to let you know I think of you often," "in memory of the happy days spent at reunion," "I wish you were here to share our Christmas treat." Quite a number came from dear young friends, but several came from the dear old folks at the home. And it certainly was a pleasure to know I was not forgotten, although eight years have intervened since I visited them the last time.

One dear sister writes: "I am boarding at the home. I was so lonely after my husband was gone. I am quite content here." What a blessing to the aged ones that they may spend their declining years in peace and quiet contentment, and when the glad Christmas comes they may say, "I am quite happy." For there are so many aged ones to-day who really have the painful knowledge that they are unwelcome guests in the homes wherein they abide. And the holidays only serve as a sad reminder of days when youth and joy seemed to walk hand in hand with love and duty.

As I look over my cards I find that each has expressed a wish for my happiness, and some have asked me to write again for the church papers. Those who knew me personally some years ago, remember me as a mother with happy, healthy, romping girls and boys about me. But Time, the relentless one, has robbed our home of much of its joyous laughter and song. One by one they went until five had gone from us into homes of their own making. And one had gone over, "safe upon the other side." Yet two remain strong, sturdy, happy school boy and girl, whom had they lived where the others were brought up would no doubt have considered themselves grown-ups. But glad to say, although no offense is meant, that where there is not so much for children to attend each night and many days of their time there is less thought given to the mingling of the sexes. Although I consider the young whom I have known here as a very intelligent lot of young people.

If you will permit me to digress for a moment, I will give you an example. I cannot recall a single girl about us who cannot cook, churn, milk cows, wash, iron, dust, crochet (many are experts at this), harness and drive from two to six horses or mules, as the case may be. It's a very usual sight to see girls or women going eighteen to twenty miles to the railroad, driving four horses, hauling wheat to the elevators. And yet at a birthday party last fall where sixteen young ladies had met, when talking of their plans for the future, it was found that four of the number were studying with a determination to become school-teachers; two were to be nurses; one was taking music, intending thereby to better assist her father in his ministerial work by being both able to sing and play. And not least but last, one bright, rosy-cheeked girl said she expected some day to be admitted to the bar to practice law. Different ones played while others sang, and they agreed to having had a very merry time, although no male person, little or big, was present.

Many thanks to one and all who have made my Christmas for the year an unusually bright and happy one, despite ill health. May choicest blessings be yours.

ARNETT, OKLAHOMA.

ELLEN S. ADAIR.

An Open Vision

It is with considerable trepidation that I attempt to write for publication, as this is the first. I am urged to proceed at once to the subject.

My connection with the church dates from about 1897. My natural bent towards commercialism and a love for business pursuits, with the aid of the Spirit, has caused me to think of, understand and realize the importance of the temporal law. Hence I have at different times had a strong desire to live it. As proof of this statement I will quote later from a short note from me to Brother E. L. Kelley about a year ago.

My husband is not a member of the church, and it seemed hard for me to begin, so the law of tithing was seldom mentioned. In my early connection with the church something seemed to say at various times, "Why do you pray and urge the Lord to do thus and so? Don't you know he understands his business? I think it insolence on your part to do it." I confess it had its influence for many years.

About three years ago it became necessary for my husband and me to deal with, and adjust, if possible, a problem of great delicacy. For two years the struggle was on. We were sorely vexed, and apparently made no progress whatever toward adjustment. I thought on the matter almost continually, and wept often, when suddenly one morning I was impressed to cry unto the Lord for help, which I at once did, and in great humility sought forgiveness, promising faithfully that by the help of God I would do his will at all times, including the law of tithing; and lo, within thirty-six hours the adjustment was made to our entire satisfaction.

Mr. Lewis marveled and when I told him how it had come about, he remarked, "Why, it has come about twice over," which was true. About this time Mr. Lewis had occasion to write to Bishop E. L. Kelley. I inclosed a short note which ran about as follows: "I read in Doctrine and Covenants, 'He that is tithed shall not be burned.' I have a strong desire to live the temporal law, and hope soon to consider it seriously. I think it a good sign. You may publish this if you like. It may do some good." At that time I saw indistinctly an element of publicity. Brother Kelley answered with the usual "God bless you," and referred me to the bishop's agent, Brother Tabor.

Being furnished with a blank Mr. Lewis made an inventory of all our material possessions, and handing it to me said, "Half belongs to you, which I think you should tithe."

I had not a penny, and began to wonder just how I would manage. Within a few days our son gave me a bill which I was to use as I chose. I immediately thought of the promise I had made, and accordingly gave it to the bishop's agent the following Sunday. Soon after, there was an opportunity offered, and I earned fifty dollars, which I turned over to the same fund. A little later I gave ten dollars and would have given ten dollars more by the 15th of this December, but the Lord ruled otherwise.

On the evening of December 1, as we sat chatting, we discussed several items of finance, one of which involved the payment of one hundred dollars on December 15. Mr. Lewis said, "Shall we pay it?" "Certainly," I answered. Whereupon he explained that it could easily go over another month and that I might pay quite a sum on the tithing account, and have money for Christmas. But I said "No. I will give ten dollars and that will be enough for this year." I then left Mr. Lewis reading and retired.

I slept well until two a. m. when I was suddenly awakened, having dreamed that I, with a few members of the branch, were waiting at a fine harbor for a ship which was to take us to a beautiful land. I saw the land very plainly. Fruit was in great abundance. Flowers bloomed the year round. There was continual sunshine, not glaring, but a soft balmy atmosphere where we might develop in a wonderful manner. The whole environment was incomparable.

I was now fully awake and felt the presence of a personality. I was impressed with the term "personality" though it may have been an angel, whose position seemed to be standing on the floor within three or four feet of me. I understood that I was to be directed in temporal and spiritual matters.

Here I recall a portion of my patriarchal blessing. It follows: "The Father, who hath looked over your life hath seen in thee that of which he could make use; and he hath sought thee in thy pathway; and as the revelation of his Spirit outlines to you the steps in which you should go thou art admonished to follow the direction of that Spirit whether it should be given through his servants to thee from public platform or whether it should be given in thy home in thy secret prayers, or in the visitations of the angels in dream or in vision."

I slept no more until the vision ended.

The scene now began to enlarge and the boat, which was a plain, old-fashioned affair, appeared, and quietly drew up in the harbor. I had a good view of the captain, who seemed to be a man of about thirty years of age, and very good and kind. Without knowing just how I got there I was now out in the harbor, about a hundred yards from shore, standing on a tiny island about two feet across and perfectly round. I was very much alarmed, as the water was very deep and my position seemed so dangerous, but I stood erect, looking toward the harbor where the boat was anchored, and again saw the captain whose attitude was one of patient waiting, and who seemed willing and anxious to take all on board who wished to go to the beautiful land which I had seen.

Several groups of good-looking, well-dressed people were standing near the harbor and directly in front of the boat, who had expected to take passage for the beautiful land. But as I watched them from the tiny island on which I stood, and observed their attitude, I saw a few lips curl. Others said, "It is a very plain looking affair," and instantly they all vanished. I thought, "How strange they did not go aboard this boat even if it is plain, for I am sure the captain would have carried them safely to the land of sunshine and flowers."

The scene changed somewhat, but I was still out in the bay surrounded by a few Saints of our branch, most of whom were young. My position, though apparently dangerous, was firm, while those around me were clinging to different objects, such as pieces of flagging, large, tumbling weeds, etc., which had blown into the sea. These young Saints showed a spirit of daring and a tendency to move from their slender means of safety. A boy of about fourteen fairly leaped from that to which he had been clinging toward a post which stood ten or more feet away, but missed his hold, and as he fell I heard him say, "Oh, I am gone," and with a hideous groan, was swallowed up in the sea.

I now spoke to the personality whose presence I was conscious of, addressing him as Lord. I asked him if this was to be the fate of this young Saint. The answer came, "Not necessarily, but it is an example of what may happen if my people leave their places of safety." I then said, "Lord, this is such a dreadful place, the depths of sea no one can survive. The sharks and other dangers are so terrible. Why did you choose this setting for the scene of this instruction?" The answer was, "This and the world are much alike. I chose this setting to show the dangers of the world and how necessary it is for parents and guardians to care for the young, yea, to watch them continually, knowing always where they are and what they are about." The thought came to me: "Are these lambs our victims as a result of neglect?"

I then referred to the small piece of ground on which I stood which seemed to typify firmness. I said, "It is so small, you would not have us to stand still, would you?" The answer came, "You are on holy ground, move about but take this holy ground with you; or rather make the ground on which you stand holy, wherever you may be, so that as my servants go forth to teach my gospel they may not be ashamed to own those who are called to be Saints. Stand on the rock of my salvation."

The subject was now changed to that of the temporal. The personage said: "This phase of my law must be observed to the letter, or who shall abide? The masses are dull. They seek not to understand my law as set forth in my word. Nephi, whose soul delighted in plainness, when speaking to the people of things they did not understand, almost exhausted the realm of explanation. My people as a whole have not seriously considered this department of the work according to law." I said: "Lord, I have made an inventory of all I have, and have paid a goodly sum this year. What more would you have me do?" The answer came: "He that is tithed shall not be burned. What did your companion suggest to you last evening and what was your answer? Verily my house is empty. My servants are discouraged. They are consumed with a desire for greater activity, but for lack of means their hands are tied. The cause suffers, and when they see your purse strings so tightly drawn they weep and mourn." Here I beheld a group of men known as the Bishopric, and a center of activity (undoubtedly Independence).

I next saw myself standing in the congregation of the Saints, saying: "I will refrain from giving the vision in full, as it will appear in print." I related how I had been chastised for refusing to use the money which had been so generously placed at my disposal for the purpose of tithing; how the personage had said: "My house is empty, my servants are discouraged, their hands are tied. They are consumed with a desire for greater activity that they might work with their full strength and might; but your purse strings are tightly drawn and they do weep and mourn. Verily the time is at hand when everyone within the sound of my voice, rich and poor, great and small, shall heed this rebuke or they cannot abide, for know ye not that this is the sifting time? Loosen your purse strings, pour into my house your treasures and you shall rejoice."

I then turned to the personality who seemed to be at my side, saying: "Lord, you have bishops, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons to teach the law in regard to temporalities. Why do you ask me to stand among the Saints and attempt to instruct them?" The answer came: "You are qualified. Did I not withhold from you many blessings, even a desire for a patriarchal blessing until you had humbled yourself and put into operation my laws as you had clearly seen them; and when you were ready for the Father's blessing, did I not through my servant pour it out upon you in great abundance? Many are living the temporal law, but I have chosen you as an example. You have a wonderful testimony, and in this sense you are qualified.

"I have watched over you, warned you of impending danger and led you in pleasant paths. Do as I bid you with a cheerful countenance. Be faithful and you shall be saved in the kingdom of God."

Thus the vision ended and I fell asleep. You discover that I was not tithed, although I had made a good beginning. Being warned in dream and vision of my true condition, I hastened to pay up in full and thus be protected so that in case of death I would be in good standing. Dear Saints, are you in good standing in this regard? If not ask your bishop's agent for an inventory blank. Fill it out properly and the Lord will surely open the way and you will meet the obligations easily. The Lord has said, "Prove me and see." I sometimes wonder if it is within the range of human intelligence to understand the love, mercy, and justice of God toward his children.

Yours in the Master's cause,

EMMA B. LEWIS.

From Here and There

Sister Mary J. Kennell, of Montour, Iowa, is sorely afflicted and desires the prayers of the Saints.

Sister Bessie Hitchings, of Fernwald, Iowa, box 7, writes for her father and mother and self that they enjoy the HERALD and Ensign very much and do not regret the step they took in associating themselves with the church in 1915.

If there are any Saints living in or near Platteville, Wisconsin, they should call on Miss Lillian Alcock and her mother, who live in the north part of the town. They are not members but are reading the Ensign and think it a fine paper.

If there are any Saints in or near Charleston, West Virginia, they are requested to write to or see Mrs. H. E. Curry, a sister residing at 1504½ Washington Street, of that city.

Our stenographers "took" the sermon of Brother E. E. Long, preached at Lamoni on the 25th, to which reference has been made in this column. We shall be glad to give it place in our columns at a later date. The subject was "Authority," and while it is too big a subject to cover thoroughly in one sermon, the phases touched on are very well treated and comprehensively presented.

Independence Stake

The educational classes are pursuing their studies during the week and on Sunday afternoons, as usual, and also the societies and auxiliaries are busily engaged in their important work. On March 23 the Religians with an attendance of 234 met in regular session, the seniors and adults only assembling in the lower auditorium, thus giving the juniors and special classes more room for their work. At the close of the study period they rendered a literary and musical program and enjoyed the treat of listening to speeches made by Brethren Russell, Curtis and Macgregor, whom they seldom hear.

The brethren engaged in work on the walks and retaining wall in front, also in setting out trees on the west lawn of the church lot, have completed their task and greatly improved the premises.

The Twelve are very busy just now, and quite a number of visitors are here, probably on the way to conference. The following named are among the number: Brethren A. G. Miller, Greenville, South Carolina; A. E. Warr, from Bay Minette, Alabama; also Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt are with us. We are glad to meet in church fellowship so many from abroad.

Brethren W. J. Fisher and Lewis Anderson from Saskatchewan, also Brother Haskins of Los Angeles, with their families, are at present making this their home. Some of the Canadian Saints, also others, talk of settling on farms in Missouri and "regions round about."

At a meeting of farmers, held in a city of Missouri, March 23, a good talk was made by the president of the Missouri Agricultural Association, in which he said: "The development of agricultural resources is as important an object in the plan of national defense as the development of an army and navy, for the food supply problems in this crisis are important, and must be solved by us all." The seed merchants of the center place never have known such a large demand for garden seed as at present. The Saints are doing their share of the buying.

The early prayer meeting of March 25 was in charge of Brother Israel Smith, and he was full of enthusiasm while speaking of the big patriotic meeting at Convention Hall the night previous. The speech of James A. Reed was great, but to the mind of our brother, after all "the salvation of souls was greater than that of the Nation."

The eight o'clock meeting was also great, and the testimonies of Brethren Russell, Warr, Miller, and many others, concerning the goodness and long-suffering of our heavenly Father in the cases of marvelous healings cited, and especially in the remarkable message to the Saints, given by the Spirit, all send a thrill of gratitude to every heart in divine presence. The services throughout the day and evening were full of life and interest. An unusual number greeted each other at Sunday school, there having been 971 present. The address to the children by Apostle Russell, the inspiring anthem with the glorious refrain by Sister Corrine Haines, and the excellent instruction that was based on the text, 1 Timothy 3: 16, "Great is the mystery of godliness," as defined by Apostle Peter Anderson, all made the Saints to rejoice at the morning hour.

The other branches of the stake had fine services and good attendance also, with Patriarch F. A. Smith and Elder Adkins at the Second Branch, T. C. Kelley and D. Macgregor at Walnut Park, Amos Higdon and A. E. Warr at Enoch Hill, Elders McFadden and Teeters at Liberty Mission, and Elder E. T. Atwell who ministered to the Saints at the East Independence Mission. At the Stone Church at evening hour a full house greeted Brother Gomer Griffiths with his chart, and a finely illustrated sermon on the text found in Matthew 26, "Watch and pray ye, that ye enter not into temptation," was well appreciated because it appealed to the understanding of both old and young.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, March 16, 1917.

Editors Herald: After our excellent conference Elders William Sparling and E. R. Davis held services for a week, which were greatly appreciated by all who attended, and we feel much good will result from their labors in our district. We are sorry to see them leave, but know the hand of God is directing his work and will do what is for the best interests of his work. We hope to see them in our district again after the coming conference and feel that greater advancement will be made than in this year that is now closing.

How great must be the love for the work, for the servants of God to give up all and go into the field, but their reward will be in proportion to their work and the sacrifices their loved ones are making in staying at home while these men are out in the field.

I have been in the church nearly sixteen years and it grows dearer to me all the time. I want to fill some little place in the Master's vineyard, doing what little I can for him. We can all pray, if nothing more, for the success of this work. We hope and pray for the direction of God in the coming conference at Lamoni and that all who attend may feel the influence of his spirit. My constant prayer is for the success of his work and for the faithfulness of all his people.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. C. B. HART.

LOCK NO. 4, PENNSYLVANIA, March 18, 1917.

Editors Herald: I thought some one might be thinking of us here and at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, and as my subscription was due I would send it to pay my honest debts. I am like all others who say the HERALD is my Friday evening spiritual feast. So I want to tell a few more happenings. You know at our last writing we had baptized fifty. There have been several since and many more seem to be near the kingdom, so we want the world of Saints to know we are trying to be busy and keep in the conflict.

Well, they say where there is union there is strength, but we have been divided for strength as we have on February 21 organized a branch at Lock No. 4, with about fifty members. Expect to have more soon. Before we left Fayette City, we helped our brother pay the debt of our church which leaves him free of debt. Eleven months ago we owed six hundred and eighty dollars and in all we raised seven hundred and fifty dollars, so we will have enough to paint and repair the church. In June we expect to dedicate the church to the Lord's work and the whole church ought to rejoice with us. The angels will rejoice also. Why? Because it looks like progress. The Lord doesn't want any drones, so the writer would like for all who labored through the cloudy days at Fayette City to have a home-coming with us when we dedicate our church.

I believe we have some live wires in our new organization at Lock No. 4, which consists of L. Coven as deacon and A. Bahana, teacher, John Wise, priest, and Samuel Gaskill as elder. We hope to try soon to get another church to build as it doesn't pay to rent.

We have with us Brother McConnaughy and Brother John Carlile, and are given some good spiritual food, both to those outside and inside of the church. It looks as though good will result. We are having a two-day meeting at our branch the 24th and 25th, and we look for a good turnout and much good to be done, because there are quite a few who are much interested in our work. So there is much to be thankful for, which will enlarge us if we are living our religion now.

We have asked Brother G. T. Griffiths to try to arrange to have Brother Frederick M. Smith, our prophet, to be with us when we dedicate our church at Fayette City, as he was present when we opened the church about twelve years ago. So we hope he will see these few lines and arrange to be present. Our church is worth about two thousand five hundred or three thousand dollars, so we feel this is quite an asset to the church. I will close and try some time again to write a few lines.

Ever in the conflict,

SAMUEL GASKILL.

FREDRIC, IOWA, March 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: Though I cannot come to the conference, I am sending my twenty-five cents for the Daily. I appreciate the Herald very much and am sorry I cannot attend the sessions of the coming conference. If nothing prevents, I will attend the reunion.

Though we are alone in this place we are not discouraged. Brethren, Roth and Scott were here in November and preached the true gospel. Good seed was sown and will take root, for it was sown on good soil. Brother George Avery and family reside at Avery, three miles from here and we often visit each other.

We are looking forward to the time when Brother Roth can be with us again. There are some here who have told me they wish to obey the gospel call.

In gospel bonds,

ONAWAY, MICHIGAN, March 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: I just finished reading Sister Audentia Anderson's article in the HERALD of March 7 in her department, the Woman's Auxiliary. It was entitled, "I was sick and ye visited me," and I could not help but pray that all who read might see the wisdom in it and follow her advice.

Then, another thought came to me and I felt prompted to pass it along, I believe that the quotation of Jesus which Sister Audentia uses will apply likewise to the Saint who is spiritually sick. How many, oh, how many, there are who are weak and need a helping hand, and are neglected because our minds are filled with other things and we prefer to occupy what little spare time we have in the company of the "faithful few" or studying alone. Might we not receive greater spiritual blessings if we would visit the spiritually sick and administer to their needs? I can bear this testimony, that when putting this thought into practice I, too, have been blessed and built up spiritually. Try it, dear Saints, and see how good it will make you feel.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's people, I am

Your sister,

CAROLINE J. LAFAYETTE.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, March 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: The West Pullman Branch is still alive and holding meetings at 648 West One hundred and nineteenth Street.

Our missionary, Brother Dowker, was with us last Sunday morning and gave us some good and timely advice.

The Ladies Aid have started a building fund with the end in view of having a church building of our own at West Pullman. We wish them success and hope that plans will mature.

The long and hard winter has told upon some of our members and has been the means of their remaining away from some of the services. Some are also on the sick list. We are hopeful, however, that with the opening of spring new life will be enthused and our regular attendance again maintained.

We find the work very discouraging at times in this great city, owing to amusements and other conditions which all have a tendency to draw the mind of man away from his Creator.

If any of the missionaries on their way to or from General Conference are expecting to stop in Chicago a hearty welcome will be given them at West Pullman.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, March 15, 1917.

Editors Herald: Upon the streets of our city we meet with many strangers, people who have come from many countries to enjoy the beautiful climate of southern California, and seek pleasures to be found in the great southland. The gospel is offering greater pleasure and can be secured without money and without price. The experiences of nearly forty years in the church and thirty years in the priesthood has convinced me that perpetual summer is found only in the true gospel. When the chill of winter brings the frosts that blight and kill, the essence of the gospel extracted from our lives brings the sunshine that bids us live.

With the great pen of life we are writing our destiny, and the years as they come and go are the pages of life's wonderful history. The world is like a great factory, and every man, woman and child that has ever been born into the world has had his place in this factory. The product turned out by the millions of workers is history. What kind of history are we making to-day? What man is there who, if he were called upon to read from the pages of his life, would find no blush of shame or pangs of remorse?

For months I lay at death's door, passed over forty-two days without partaking food, subsisting on one pint of milk a day, suffering from rheumatic conditions which has left me a cripple, one limb becoming stiff at the knee joint. During my days of suffering the Autumn Leaves, HERALD and Ensign all found their way regularly to my bedside, bringing their sheaves of golden grain fresh from the harvest field and the food gathered from the pages and its effect; growth has been the result.

April 1, 1917, will end my first year on crutches, yet what a wonderful year it has been. There has been much time for meditation and study. Great rivers find their sources in the small streams of the lonely hills, so man's greatest work finds its source in silent meditation.

Go into the mountain glens in some of those canyons where the sun never shines, and growing in the shadows are many kinds of vegetable life. They are failures; so is man without the sunlight of God. But when the gospel light shines in upon us, penetrating every dark nook and corner, all mental shadows will become lost in its unclouded splendor.

Such, I believe, is the condition of the work in the San Diego Branch. We are still holding services in the Music Academy, 1156, near B Street on Seventy. It is a beautiful place on the ground floor, reached by street car on B Street. The Saints quite recently welcomed the arrival of Brother Taylor and family from Missouri. Brother Taylor is a priest and very earnest in the work. A movement has been set on foot by the Saints which we hope will soon result in a church building of our own. I regret that I have not been able to do more, but feel that a brighter day is dawning. Already we sense the awakening, and from the lessons learned from the past are looking into the future with greater hope.

I have made a few new openings—am now holding preaching services at Thirty-third and Imperial Avenue every two weeks. I have formed a class of boys from homes where the Bible is not known and am pleased with the result. Good has been accomplished. I give them little jobs around the store and have their confidence. They may never join the church. Who can tell? One of them, sixteen years old, has expressed a desire to become a member on his birthday. While not able to do much, yet even a cripple can accomplish something if he will use the talent that God has given him. I find pleasure in this work and hope to be useful until the end.

Pay the Church Debt

For some time past I have felt to submit a thought or plan whereby we might assist in lifting the debt from the church and college: Paul addressing the Corinthian saints said, "We are laborers together with God." (1 Corinthians 3: 9; see also 2 Corinthians 6: 1.) And our Lord speaking to the church in 1887, said, "All are called according to the gift of God unto them, and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8. The Apostle Paul puts it this way, "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ and hath given us the ministry of reconciliation."—2 Corinthians 5: 18. This includes all. All should work to that end for the redemption of the world, and when we stop and think of being coworkers with God, it should inspire us to activity. The church is in debt and the college is in debt, and the Lord has counseled us to pay the debt, and gave a mild rebuke to all that would discourage the same. (See Doctrine and Covenants 125: 16.) So come, brothers and sisters, let us move forward and put our shoulders to the wheel and see if we cannot lift the debt from both the church and college this year. Will the farmers donate the portion from one acre of 1917 crops? Which would be highly commendable, though the crop from one acre is not a great sacrifice to those who have large farms. And let those having small farms donate in proportion to the land they till, and the merchant give the profit from one day's sales each month, and the employee give one day's pay each month, beginning April 1, making nine months, ending December 31, 1917. This would be a very small thing to do in proportion to the great blessing that would come to the church and the giver. Please read Malachi 3; Proverbs 3: 9, 10; Luke 6: 38; Deuteronomy 16: 17; 2 Corinthians 9: 9, 10.

Let us all read this article and wish to comply with the plan, notify their bishop in their district, and they will arrange with their solicitors to collect from each donor, giving them receipts for all money received, and the solicitors forward the same to their bishop in each and every month. This would save confusion as the bishops and their solicitors would have the names and addresses of all donors.

Trusting my feeble effort will have its desired effect, and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, with blessings of peace to all mankind, but especially to the household of faith,

Yours fraternally,

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO.

THE LONE NEPHITE.

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, March 19, 1917.

Editors Herald: Situated within the golden gateway to the setting sun, in full and easy range of the guns of our ocean dreadnaught, surrounded by the blooming harbingers of a propitious springtime and record-breaking crop, summer is still carving out its destiny according to the combined regulations of divine appointment and supervision with human disappointment and struggle.

We have been favored with a variety of speakers beside our local force since the series of meetings in which Brother Rushton was the speaker. While Brother Pitt and coevangelist were here California indulged in some of her unusual exhibitions of climatic variations—night sweats, etc., nevertheless some good meetings were held and under the auspices of the Oriole girls a very successful, enjoyable, personally conducted trip to the Holy Land was projected (on the canvas). We have also had a visit from the poetic, architectural missionary and pastor, Arthur Allen, who had escaped from Stockton for a day or two—a case of mutual enjoyment: Oakland and Allen, not Stockton.

Later we had a two-course banquet furnished by a robust missionary from Washington, en route to General Conference, all home cooked, of the H. R. brand. He only played one of his violins at the Religio—perhaps because he was not called upon for a duet.

Still later we have had our district president, C. W. Hawkins, who has just left us with a gilt-edged smile all over his genial face, all because the district conference unanimously voted "yes" and subsequent activities proved that they meant it. Ask him about it when he gets there—General Conference, I mean. If you see "San Jose" given as his home town or branch, don't take it literally when you come to pronounce it. Just think of something that sounds the least like it and you will be liable to strike it pretty nearly right. This, of course, is intended for the uninitiated who do not indulge in languages more or less dead.

Among what we term our local force is Brother William Collins of Flint, Michigan. Sounds like a hard place to come from but you cannot judge anything by the name. I once knew a man they called Mr. Black. He had a red face and white hair and acted green. But this is not Brother Collins in any sense.

We have also an elderly elder from the East who is with us this winter. He does not look like such a very big man but when speaking of great fat, mister, he is fuller in the face, fuller in the body, fuller in arms and limbs, in fact fuller all over, I believe they called him Bobbie when he went to school.

We have a nice Sunday school, Religio, Oriole Girls, Ladies' Aid, and Woman's Auxiliary, all trying for higher lines, even now better than some and whole lot better than none at all. The Woman's Auxiliary is taking right hold of psychology and sociology and such terms as Soci-Morms, solidarity, heterogeneity, etc. Yes, and they can prove it, for they have the charts. But don't let everybody think because of all this that Oakland is the apex of culminating excellency. No, not that. We are just an ordinary branch with a very ordinary pastor trying to fill the place of a more efficient and successful man, and like other branches and other people we let our best oranges go east.

We are having our joys and our sorrows—our vigor and our sicknesses—our encouragements and our heartaches, striving for the more excellent way until the daisies shall whisper, "It is all over." Sincerely,

NOSIVAD.

LYLE, WASHINGTON, March 23, 1917.

Editors Herald: Since my last communication I have completed a series of forty-three services at Hood River, Oregon. The attendance and interest for so long a protracted meeting were very good. Some were present at every service. Quite a number of nonmembers took considerable interest which will, we trust, result in gospel obedience in time. From there we went to Portland to attend the district conference, which was remarkably good. Brother Rushton was with us.

After conference we went to Oregon City where thirty-five meetings were held. Very bad weather hindered but good was done. We left the Saints in a state of encouragement while several "outsiders" were near the kingdom. On was baptized. Several of the children of the Saints and some nonmembers desired baptism, but it was thought better to postpone the ordinance until better weather. We also held several services in Portland of late. Arrived here very recently, of which place you will hear later.

In gospel bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.
